HN9[↑] This court reviews a challenge to the grant or denial of a request for permanent injunction under an abuse of discretion standard. In re Dublin Sec., Inc., 133 F.3d 377, 380 (1997). Applying this deferential standard of review, we are unable to say that the district court abused its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for injunctive relief. Plaintiff's strongest evidence regarding deception involves the ABPS's statements regarding the CPME's relationship with the Department of Education. The CPME directed the ABPS, "In order to avoid the possibility of any confusion in the future . . . the Council requests that the Board discontinue referencing in the ABPS correspondence [26] and other public documents the recognition of the Council on Podiatric Medical Education by the . . . U.S. Department of Education." In addition, as noted previously, plaintiff presented evidence suggesting that members of the California medical licensing board were confused concerning [18] the CPME's relationship with the federal government. Although this is some evidence of deception generally, it does little to prove that hospitals, insurance companies, and health care providers -- the entities plaintiff claims are its Lanham Act consumers -- were deceived by the ABPS's statements. The aforementioned letter of Dr. Coles, while perhaps indicating some confusion, is little evidence that consumers were deceived. With such scant evidence of deception, we are unable to say that the district court abused its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for injunctive relief. Because plaintiff presented insufficient evidence of deception, we do not address the other elements of its Lanham Act claim for injunctive relief.

[*619] C. The grant of summary judgment in favor of defendants.

Plaintiff brought four antitrust claims, alleging violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and their [27] respective Michigan counterparts.⁴ The district court dismissed these claims on defendants' motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appeals. HN10[↑] This court reviews de novo the district court's grant of a motion for summary judgment. Employers Ins. of Wausau v. Petroleum Specialties, Inc., 69 F.3d 98, 101 (6th Cir. 1995). A court ruling on a motion for summary judgment must consider all the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmovant and must give the nonmovant the benefit of every reasonable inference. Allen v. Michigan Dept. of Corrections, 165 F.3d 405, 409 (6th Cir. 1999). A grant of a motion for summary judgment is appropriate only if this court determines that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

[28] [19] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits agreements that result in an unreasonable restraint of trade, while § 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits the willful acquisition of monopoly power. We review the district court's ruling regarding each of these causes of action in turn.

i. Agreement resulting in an unreasonable restraint of trade.

⁴ Because Michigan antitrust law follows federal precedents, our reasoning regarding the federal antitrust claims applies equally to the state antitrust claims. See Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 445.784(2) (1998) ("It is the intent of the legislature that in construing all sections of this act, the courts shall give due deference to interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable antitrust statutes . . .").

185 F.3d 606, *619 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 28 U.S. App. LEXIS 1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 19 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1488

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several [*1489] States, or with foreign nations, is thereby declared to be illegal." HN12 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1994\). HN13 [↑] In order to have a § 1 violation, there must be an agreement, as § 1 does not encompass unilateral conduct, no matter how anticompetitive. See Nurse Midwifery Assocs. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605, 611 (6th Cir. 1990). Section 1 does not prohibit every restraint on trade, but only those agreements which unreasonably restrain trade. See, e.g., Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc., v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985).

Plaintiff urges two violations of § 1. First, [29] it argues that the ABPS and the APMA engaged in anticompetitive behavior in the form of a group boycott and conspiracy to exclude plaintiff from the health care market. Second, plaintiff argues that the ABPS conspired with its member diplomates to get hospitals and insurance companies to require or prefer ABPS certification over the certification of other boards such as plaintiff. The district court ruled that there was no triable issue of material fact concerning the existence of an agreement between either the ABPS and the APMA or the ABPS and its member diplomates.⁵

[20] 1. Evidence of an agreement between the APMA and the ABPS.

Despite the over-4,000 pages in the parties' Joint Appendix, plaintiff points to virtually no [30] evidence of collusion between the APMA and the ABPS. HN14 [↑] The plaintiff in a § 1 case must present evidence excluding the possibility that the defendants acted independently of one another; it is not enough to show actions consistent with either independent or conspiratorial action. Riverview Invs., Inc. v. Ottawa Community Improvement Corp., 899 F.2d 474, 484-85 (6th Cir. 1990). Here, [*620] both the APMA and the ABPS benefit when the ABPS's credibility within the medical community is strengthened. Thus, it is natural that each organization independently would take steps to promote the ABPS.

Plaintiff has failed to carry its burden of presenting evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action. Plaintiff points to evidence in the record tending to establish the following: (1) the APMA determined that it should issue statements warning the public about unrecognized certifying boards; (2) the CPME and the ABPS were on friendly terms; (3) the APMA reviewed some of the ABPS's literature before it was sent out and did not criticize the literature; (4) in a June, 1993, meeting, the APMA agreed to coordinate the text of one of its mass mailings with the ABPS; [31] and (5) in an October, 1993, mailing, the APMA referred negatively to boards not recognized by the APMA. None of this evidence is sufficient to raise a genuine issue of whether the ABPS and the APMA colluded. These facts indicate that the ABPS and APMA had similar goals concerning non-ABPS boards, but the actions of both entities are as consistent with independent action as with collusive action. Even if it is assumed that the October mailing is the [21] result of the June agreement, plaintiff does not indicate in what way the mailing was anticompetitive.⁶

⁵ The district court did not reach the question of whether the alleged agreements, if proved, violated the antitrust laws, as it ruled that there was insufficient evidence of such agreements to generate a genuine issue of material fact. We also do not reach this question.

⁶ Some of plaintiff's allegations are unsupported by the cited evidence in the record.

According to plaintiff, in August, 1987, the ABPS and the APMA met to discuss a joint mass mailing targeting competing certifying boards. At this alleged meeting, the APMA agreed to assist the ABPS by providing a letter reaffirming the monopoly status of the ABPS, a letter which the ABPS could use in its mailings to hospitals and insurance companies. Also, plaintiff alleges that after the October, 1993, mailing, the ABPS complained to the APMA that the October mailing did not demonstrate sufficiently ardent support for the ABPS. After a consultation, the APMA reached an agreement with the ABPS and in December, 1993, sent a second letter. To further satisfy the ABPS, the APMA included in the second mass mailing a new CPME brochure, also coordinated with the ABPS, which highlighted the ABPS and two other APMA-approved non-surgical boards.

Most of these allegations are unsupported by the parts of the record cited by plaintiff. Plaintiff indicates neither evidence of a 1987 meeting where the ABPS and APMA met to discuss a joint mailing nor of a letter confirming the monopoly status of the ABPS. Likewise, plaintiff indicates no evidence of a 1993 complaint by the ABPS, consultation between the ABPS and the

185 F.3d 606, *620 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 31 U.S. Fed. App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 21 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1489

[32] We affirm the district court's ruling that plaintiff presented no triable issue of fact concerning an agreement between the ABPS and the APMA.

2. Evidence of an agreement between the ABPS and its member diplomates. [*1490]

Plaintiff also alleges that the ABPS conspired with its member diplomates to suppress competition. However, the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine prevents the ABPS from conspiring with its members as a matter of law, because the diplomates and the ABPS are not independent legal entities for purposes of this antitrust claim. In Nurse Midwifery [221] Assocs. v. Hibbett, 918 F.2d 605, 614 (6th Cir. 1990), this court wrote, "HN15 ↑ Section 1 of the Sherman Act is concerned only with concerted action among competitors and not the coordinated activities that occur within a single firm." Nurse Midwifery dealt with whether members of a hospital's medical staff could conspire with the hospital itself when making employment decisions regarding persons in competition with members of the medical staff. We held that because the staff members were not competitors of the hospital, they could not conspire with the hospital for antitrust purposes. Id. [33] Here, the ABPS does not compete with its member diplomates, therefore antitrust concerns are not [*621] raised.⁷ While the ABPS members may conspire amongst themselves -- a possibility not alleged by plaintiff -- the diplomates cannot conspire with the ABPS.⁸

[34] [23] The district court ruled that there was no genuine issue of material fact with regard to a conspiracy between the ABPS and its members. Plaintiff claims that many ABPS diplomates saw plaintiff's mailings and complained about them to John Bennett. In 1992, the ABPS distributed information packets which urged its members to inform the appropriate persons about various aspects of the ABPS. Evidence suggested that the ABPS's goal in distributing these materials was to encourage hospitals to require ABPS certification in their by-laws. All this may be true, but it presents insufficient evidence of conspiracy between the ABPS and any of its members.

In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), the Supreme Court considered a resale price maintenance case. In resale price maintenance, a distributor and merchants selling the distributor's product agree that the merchants will not sell the product below a certain price. At issue in Monsanto was whether the plaintiff had presented sufficient evidence of conspiracy between the distributor and the merchants. The Court wrote that where there was only [35] evidence of complaints by merchants to a distributor concerning low-pricing by a maverick merchant, and then a subsequent refusal by the distributor to do business with the maverick, the evidence was insufficient to sustain a finding of agreement between the distributor and the complaining merchants. 465 U.S. at 764. If the rule were otherwise, distributors would be prevented from legally refusing to do business with a particular merchant whenever other merchants had complained about the low-pricing practices of that merchant. Id.

APMA, or efforts to placate the ABPS. Apparently ABPS executive director John Bennet reviewed the brochure, but nothing indicates that Bennet had any control over its final publication. Plaintiff gives this court no reason to think the brochure was not sent on the APMA's own initiative.

⁷ Plaintiff relies upon Federal Trade Comm'n v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 (1986), in which the Supreme Court considered a Federal Trade Commission ruling that the Indiana Federation of Dentists had conspired with its own members in violation of the antitrust laws. The Court did not consider whether the Federation could conspire with its own members, but stated that the conspiracy it examined was one amongst the members of the Federation. 476 U.S. at 455.

⁸ Some courts employ the independent personal stake exception to the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, thereby allowing members of professional organization to conspire with that organization. See Poindexter v. American Bd. of Surgery, Inc., 911 F. Supp. 1510 (N.D. Ga. 1994) (applying the rule that where the organization's agents have a personal stake in the principal's anticompetitive acts, the agents may be considered separate legal entities and may conspire with the organization). This court declined to adopt the independent personal stake exception in Nurse Midwifery. 918 F.2d at 615 ("We are not convinced that an agent acting with anticompetitive motives due to some independent personal stake raises sufficient antitrust concerns to warrant abandoning the traditional rule that a principal cannot conspire with one of its agents."). Because the ABPS is controlled by its members and presumably acts in their interests, there is little reason to recognize the ABPS as a legal entity separate from its members for antitrust purposes.

185 F.3d 606, *621-1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 35-1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 23L51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1490

Here, plaintiff can demonstrate only complaints by ABPS members and action arguably in conformity with those complaints. As in Monsanto, the action taken by the ABPS is as much in its interest as it is in the interest of its members individually, and plaintiff has not introduced evidence tending to exclude the possibility that the ABPS acted independently and not in concert with its members. See id. at 764 (requiring [24] proof tending to exclude the possibility of independent action). Thus, even if the ABPS could conspire with its members, the district court's grant of summary judgment on the section 1 claims [36] must be affirmed because plaintiff has not generated a genuine issue of material fact regarding conspiracy between the ABPS and its member diplomats.

[*622] In sum, we hold that plaintiff has failed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the ABPS conspired with either the APMA or its member diplomats. Also, we [*1491] hold that the ABPS cannot, as a matter of law, conspire with its member diplomats.

ii. Abuse of monopoly power.

HN16 [↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. To establish a § 2 violation, a plaintiff must demonstrate "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). [37] The district court ruled that there was no triable issue of fact as to whether defendant had monopoly power and therefore granted defendant's summary judgment motion, without reaching the question of whether the alleged misstatements violated section 2, if defendant did have monopoly power.

HN17 [↑] The relevant market includes those products or services that are reasonably interchangeable with, as well as identical to, defendant's product. White & White, Inc. v. American Hosp. Supply Corp., 723 F.2d 495, 500 (6th Cir. 1983). The ABPS produces podiatrist certifications, and plaintiff directly [25] competes with the ABPS in this market, as does a third certification board. Thus, the relevant market is that for the sale of podiatrist certification services. The district court, relying upon a report prepared by the ABPS's expert, ruled that the relevant market must take into consideration the ABPS's influence over the health care market as well as the percentage of podiatrists who are certified by the ABPS every year. This is because plaintiff and the ABPS not only compete for exam takers, according to the court, but also for recognition within the health care community. [38] Plaintiff introduced evidence demonstrating that the ABPS may have a monopoly with regard to the number of exam takers (an average of 69% of all candidates taking an exam for certification in podiatric surgery took the ABPS exam from 1987-1995), but according to the district court, plaintiff would have to produce evidence of the ABPS's monopolization of recognition within the health care community as well. Plaintiff introduced no such evidence, and so the district court granted defendant's summary judgment motion.

The district court's reasoning is not persuasive. According to its reasoning, if the ABPS certified 100% of all podiatrists, yet the health care community did not require ABPS certification, the ABPS would not have a sufficient market share to justify a finding of monopoly power. Recognition by the health care community will affect the ABPS's ability to gain monopoly power, as the greater its reputation in that community, the more podiatrists will seek certification by the ABPS. However, recognition within the health care community is not the market within which podiatrist certification boards compete; rather, it is an indicator by which the existing market steers its demand.

[39] HN18 [↑] Monopoly power is the power to control prices and exclude competition. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 393, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956). Because a true determination of whether a firm possesses monopoly power hinges upon an analysis of complicated economic factors, courts often look to market share as a proxy for monopoly power. Tarrant 261 Serv. Agency, Inc. v. American Standard, Inc., 12 F.3d 609, 615 (6th Cir. 1993). Plaintiff produced evidence [*623] demonstrating that the ABPS's share of the number of persons taking podiatrist certification exams ranged from 55.1% in 1987, to a high of 76.7% in 1992, with only a slight decrease to 75.9% in 1994. Monopoly power has been found in cases where defendant firm controlled similar portions of the market. See Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d 1413, 1443 \(6th Cir. 1990\) (when coupled with other evidence of monopoly power, firm with around 60% of the market share can have monopoly power); Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Serv. of Am., Inc., 651 F.2d 122, 129 \(2d Cir. 1981\) (firm with market share [40] between 50% and 70% can sometimes have monopoly power, while a share above 70% is strong evidence of monopoly power).

185 F.3d 606, *623 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 39 U.S. App. FED. App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 26 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1491

Although the ABPS has a sufficient market share to support a finding of monopoly power, HN19[] market share is only a starting point for determining whether monopoly power exists, and the inference of monopoly power does not automatically follow from the possession of a commanding market share. Byars v. Bluff City News Co., 609 F.2d 843, 850-51 \(6th Cir. 1979\). Plaintiff also claims that the ABPS charges substantially more for its exam than does plaintiff. Although the ABPS may provide more services with its exam (for example, the cost of sending notice of certification to hospitals and insurance carriers) than plaintiff, thereby justifying the higher price, the ABPS does not make this argument. The price difference, coupled [1492] with the larger market share, supports plaintiff's claim of monopoly power by ABPS.

The APMA argues that because the barriers to entry into the market for certification are low, the ABPS does not have monopoly power. The difficulty of entry into the market is relevant because if entry is easy, even a firm holding a commanding percentage [41] of the market cannot charge a price above the competitive price, for once it does, competitors will enter the market and undercut the firm's price. See United J27 States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 667 \(9th Cir. 1990\) (where barriers to entry into the market are low, it is unlikely that a firm may attain monopoly power). The APMA points to the report of Dr. McCarthy, an economist hired by defendants, for the proposition that entry into the podiatrist-certification market is fluid. Dr. McCarthy wrote in his report that "entry and success are both possible, if credibility can be established." However, establishing credibility naturally seems to be a significant barrier to entry, particularly for an enterprise that depends heavily upon reputation, such as certification of medical specialists.

Based upon these factors, we reverse the grant of summary judgment on the issue of monopoly power. Although the ABPS may ultimately establish that it does not have monopoly power, considering the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff and drawing all inferences in its favor, dismissal of plaintiff's section 2 claim at the summary judgment stage is inappropriate. [42] The district court did not reach the issue of whether the alleged misstatements by the ABPS could serve as a basis for an illegal monopolization claim, and so we need not reach this question either. The district court also granted defendant's summary judgment motion on plaintiff's claim of attempted monopolization. For the same reasons that the monopolization claim survives summary judgment with respect to the monopoly power element, the attempted monopolization claim should survive as well.

In addition, plaintiff appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment regarding its claim that the ABPS and APMA conspired to monopolize. Plaintiff points to no evidence to substantiate this claim. Assuming that plaintiff intends the previously discussed evidence of conspiracy to restrain trade to serve as evidence of a conspiracy to monopolize, for the reasons set forth in the section concerning the alleged conspiracy to restrain trade, plaintiff's evidence is [28] insufficient. The district [*624] court's grant of summary judgment regarding the conspiracy to monopolize claim is affirmed.⁹

[43] iii. Intentional interference with prospective economic advantage.

The district court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment regarding plaintiff's claim of intentional interference with economic advantage. HN20[] When considering claims based upon state law, a federal court must apply the law of that state. Monette v. Am-7-7 Baking Co., 929 F.2d 276, 280 \(6th Cir. 1991\). HN21[] To establish a claim of interference with prospective economic advantage in Michigan, a plaintiff must show: (1) the existence of a valid business relation (not necessarily evidenced by an enforceable contract) or expectancy; (2) that the defendant knew of the business relationship or expectancy; (3) that the defendant intentionally interfered by improperly inducing or causing a breach or termination of the relationship or expectancy; and (4) that the defendant's improper or unjustified interference resulted in injury to the plaintiff. Id. at 281 (citation omitted). The third component of this tort requires the plaintiff to demonstrate illegal or unethical conduct on the part of the defendant. See, e.g., Hutton v. Roberts, 182 Mich. App. 153, 159, 451 N.W.2d 536, 539 (Mich. Ct. App. 1989); [44] Kerasotes Mich. Theatres, Inc. v. National Amusements, Inc., 658 F. Supp. 1514, 1522 (E.D. Mich. 1987), rev'd on other grounds, 854 F.2d 135 (6th Cir. 1988). An antitrust violation such as illegal monopolization would seem to satisfy this requirement. Kerasotes, 658 F. Supp. at 1522.

⁹ Plaintiff's claims of illegal monopolization and attempted monopolization under the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act must likewise survive summary judgment, while the state conspiracy to monopolize claims must fail.

185 F.3d 606, *624L^A1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 43L^A1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 28L^A51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, 1492

Plaintiff claims that the ABPS interfered in its relationship with podiatrists interested in board certification. The district court ruled that summary judgment was appropriate because, [29] although plaintiff presented evidence of damage to its reputation caused by the ABPS's mailings, plaintiff presented no evidence of an interference with its relationship with podiatrists. However, the evidence discussed in the sections above concerning the Lanham Act claim is sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the ABPS induced hospital administrators and insurance companies not to recognize plaintiff's certification, which in turn decreased the number of podiatrists seeking plaintiff's certification. Although we held [*1493] above that the district court did not err in granting the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter [45] of law on the Lanham Act claims, HN22[↑] the tort of intentional interference with business relations does not require proof of actual deception. It is enough to show that "the [ABPS's] conduct interfered with the plaintiff's business expectancy . . ." Monette, 929 F.2d 276 at 282. Thus, we reverse the district court's grant of summary judgment on this claim because plaintiff presented evidence sufficient to raise an issue of material fact as to whether the ABPS interfered with plaintiff's business relations with podiatrists seeking certification. We do not consider whether plaintiff presented sufficient evidence on the other elements of its claim of intentional interference with business relations.

III.

A. Denial of attorney's fees to ABPS.

After the district court granted the ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law, the ABPS made a motion for an award of attorney's fees pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1117(a). The district court denied this motion. HN23[↑] Under 15 U.S.C. § 1117(a), prevailing Lanham Act defendants are entitled to an award of attorney's fees in "exceptional" cases. We review a district court's [46] grant or denial of attorney's fees under the Lanham Act for [*625] an abuse of discretion. Johnson v. Jones, 149 F.3d 494, 503 (6th Cir. 1998). [30]

The ABPS's primary argument is that plaintiff began this litigation knowing that it could not establish the causation issues of actual deception and injury. However, plaintiff had a colorable argument that the challenged statements were literally false and that plaintiff therefore did not have to prove actual deception. HN24[↑] Where a plaintiff sues under a colorable, yet ultimately losing, argument, an award of attorney's fees is inappropriate. See Stephen W. Boney, Inc. v. Boney Servs., Inc., 127 F.3d 821, 827 (9th Cir. 1997) (where plaintiff raised debatable issues of law and fact, the case was not "exceptional" so as to justify an award of attorney's fees). Accordingly, we are unable to say that the district court abused its discretion in denying the ABPS's motion for attorney's fees.

B. Denial of the APMA's motion for Rule 11 sanctions.

After the APMA was dismissed from the case on summary judgment, it made a motion to impose sanctions against plaintiff pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 11. Rule 11, [47] at the time the complaint was filed, provided for the imposition of sanctions against a party unless the filing before the court "is well grounded in fact." The district court denied the motion. HN25[↑] We review a denial of a motion for imposition of Rule 11 sanctions for an abuse of discretion. Danvers v. Danvers, 959 F.2d 601, 605 (6th Cir. 1992). The APMA argues that plaintiff could bring no claim against it based upon actions that occurred prior to the date the consent decree in the earlier case was entered, April 17, 1992. It contends that all of the allegations against it either concerned events occurring prior to

185 F.3d 606, *625LÁ1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 47LÁ1999 FED App. 0264P (6th Cir.), 30LÁ51 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1481, *1493

April 17, 1992, or lack any evidentiary basis. In either case, the APMA asserts, the allegations are frivolous and an imposition of sanctions is required.

We affirm the district court's denial of Rule 11 sanctions. While plaintiff is precluded by the 1992 consent decree from seeking damages for injuries caused by any Lanham Act violations prior to this date, it may bring suit for any later violations by the APMA. Plaintiff does not seek reversal of [31] the district court's dismissal of the Lanham Act claim against the APMA, thereby indicating the [48] weakness of this claim, but it points to some post-consent-decree statements by the APMA that it claims could support a Lanham Act action. While the statements it points to constitute slim evidence of a Lanham Act violation, we are unable to say that the district court abused its discretion in denying the motion for Rule 11 sanctions.

IV.

For all the reasons stated above, we grant plaintiff's motion to strike portions of the ABPS's brief. We affirm the district court's grant of ABPS's renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law, the district court's denial of plaintiff's motion for injunctive relief, the district court's denial of the ABPS's motion for attorney's fees, and the district court's denial of the APMA's motion for Rule 11 sanctions. We reverse in part and affirm in part the district court's grant of summary judgment.

End of Document

Sheet Metal Div. v. Local Union 38 of the Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n

United States District Court for the Northern District of New York

July 22, 1999, Decided ; July 23, 1999, Filed

98-CV-1023

Reporter

63 F. Supp. 2d 211 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19035 **

SHEET METAL DIVISION OF CAPITOL DISTRICT SHEET METAL, ROOFING & AIR CONDITIONING CONTRACTORS ASSOCIATION, INC.; ASSOCIATED SHEET METAL AND ROOFING CONTRACTORS OF CONNECTICUT; and SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS ASSOCIATION OF NORTHERN NEW JERSEY, Plaintiffs, -against- LOCAL UNION 38 OF THE SHEET METAL WORKERS INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION and SHEET METAL & ROOFING EMPLOYERS ASSOCIATION OF SOUTHEASTERN NEW YORK, INC., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Plaintiffs' motion for attorney's fees pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26 granted.

Core Terms

attorney's fees, plaintiffs', hourly rate, calculation, antitrust, award of attorney's fees, lodestar figure, prevailing, paralegal, lodestar, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 15 makes it clear that an injury is required for an award of attorney fees.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

63 F. Supp. 2d 211, *211 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19035, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN3 Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 26 provides that if a plaintiff substantially prevails in obtaining injunctive relief for threatened violations of the antitrust laws, then the court shall award the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney fee, to such plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

A party may be awarded attorney fees where it has received at least some relief on the merits of its claim by judicial determination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

The process of determining a reasonable fee ordinarily begins with the court's calculation of a so-called lodestar figure, which is arrived at by multiplying the number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation by a reasonable hourly rate. The lodestar figure is to be based upon current, prevailing market rates. The amount figured into the lodestar includes the number of hours claimed by plaintiffs' attorneys that are supported by time records, that are not excessive or duplicative, and that do not reflect work done only in connection with unrelated claims on which plaintiffs did not succeed. There is a strong presumption that this lodestar figure represents a reasonable fee.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Once the lodestar figure is calculated, the court may adjust the lodestar, taking into consideration several factors. If the court excludes claimed hours from the calculation of the lodestar figure or augments or reduces that figure it must state its reasons for doing so as specifically as possible.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Courts are empowered with broad discretion to independently determine the reasonableness of an award for attorney fees.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

An attorney's applicable hourly rate depends on an attorney's professional experience.

Counsel: For Plaintiffs: James J. Barriere, Esq., Leslie F. Couch, Esq., Joel M. Howard, III, Esq., COUCH, WHITE, BRENNER, HOWARD & FIEGENBAUM, LLP, Albany, New York.

Thomas W. Hylands, Esq., Fred N. Knopf, Esq., WILSON, ELSEY, MOSKOWITZ, EDELMAN & DICKER LLP, New York, New York.

For Sheet Metal & Roofing Employers Association of Southeastern New York, Inc., Defendant: Anthony A. Asher, Esq., SULLIVAN, WARD, BONE, TYLER & ASHER, P.C., Southfield, Michigan.

For Local Union 38, Defendant: Jeffrey S. Dubin, Esq., OFFICE OF JEFFREY S. DUBIN, Garden City, NY.

Judges: Hon. Thomas J. McAvoy, Chief U.S. District Judge.

Opinion by: Thomas J. McAvoy

Opinion

[*212] MEMORANDUM-DECISION & ORDER

McAvoy, Chief Judge:

By Memorandum - Decision & Order dated March 24, 1999, familiarity with which is assumed, this Court granted plaintiffs' motion for a declaratory judgment and declared Article II, Section 1 of the defendants' collective bargaining agreement dated May 18, 1998 void and unenforceable.¹ Presently before the Court is plaintiffs' motion for attorney's fees pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 [*2] and 26.

I. Discussion

A. Attorney's Fees Under 15 U.S.C. § 15

HN1 [↑] Section 15 of Title 15 of the United States Code provides, in part, that:

Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws [*213] may sue therefor in any district court of the United States . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

HN2 [↑] This section makes it clear that an injury is required for an award of attorney's fees. See United States Football League v. National Football League, 887 F.2d 408, 411 \(2d Cir. 1989\), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1071, 107 L.Ed. 2d 1022, 110 S. Ct. 1116 \(1990\) [*2] ("USFL"); see also MCA Television Ltd. v. Public Interest Corp., 171 F.3d 1265, 1281 n.21 \(11th Cir. 1999\); Blue Cross and Blue Shield United of Wisconsin v. Marshfield Clinic, 152 F.3d 588, 595 \(7th Cir. 1998\), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1071, 119 S. Ct. 804, 142 L. Ed. 2d 665 \(1999\); Gulfstream III Assocs. Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 414, 418 \(3d Cir. 1993\); Sciambra v. Graham News, 892 F.2d 411, 415-16 \(5th Cir. 1990\).

¹ Specifically, the Court found that the challenged provision violated section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. §§ 158\(b\)\(4\), \(e\), and sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. See Memorandum-Decision & Order at 26, 30.

Here, plaintiffs have not demonstrated any injury to their business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. Indeed, plaintiffs essentially admit that they suffered no injury when they state in their memorandum of law that "plaintiffs seek recovery of attorney fees under [15 U.S.C. § 15] based on the injury they sustained by having to retain attorneys and commence a costly action against defendants to enforce their right to freely conduct business." Pl. Mem. of Law at 3. Although plaintiffs correctly state that an award of attorney's fees is not tied to the amount of damages recovered, see USFL, 887 F.2d at 411, [4] a showing of an injury is, however, required. See id. Moreover, legal fees are not the type of damages contemplated by the antitrust statutes. See In re Multidistrict Vehicle Air Pollution M.D.L. No. 31, 481 F.2d 122, 130 n.12 (9th Cir.) ("In antitrust suits, allowance of attorneys' fees is limited to that proportion of the fee attributable to a successful suit for damages. If only equitable relief is sought or obtained, counsel fees are generally not awarded to a successful plaintiff."), cert. denied sub nom., Morgan v. Automobile Mfrs. Ass'n, Inc., 414 U.S. 1045, 38 L. Ed. 2d 336, 94 S. Ct. 551 (1973); Kane v. Martin Paint Stores, Inc., 439 F. Supp. 1054, 1057 (S.D.N.Y. 1977), aff'd, 578 F.2d 1368 (2d Cir. 1978) ("In calculating an award under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, only work devoted to the successful recovery of treble damages may be compensated."); Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Hughes, 312 F. Supp. 478, 482 (S.D.N.Y. 1970). Because plaintiffs did not successfully obtain an award of damages pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15, they are not entitled to an award of attorney's [5] fees under that same section.

B. Attorney's Fees Under 15 U.S.C. § 26

Plaintiffs next seek attorney's fees pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 26. Specifically, HN3[] 15 U.S.C. § 26 provides that if a plaintiff substantially prevails in obtaining injunctive relief for threatened violations of the antitrust laws, then "the court shall award the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney fee, to such plaintiff." Although this Court did not explicitly grant plaintiffs the requested injunctive relief because the Court declared the challenged provisions of the collective bargaining agreement to be void and unenforceable, plaintiffs substantially prevailed in their action seeking injunctive relief. See City of Chanute, Kan. v. Williams Natural Gas Co., 31 F.3d 1041, 1047 (10th Cir. 1994) HN4[] ("[A] party may be awarded attorneys' fees where it has received 'at least some relief on the merits of [its] claim' by judicial determination.") (quoting Texas State Teachers Ass'n v. Garland Indep. Sch. Dist., 489 U.S. 782, 791, 103 L. Ed. 2d 866, 109 S. Ct. 1486 (1989)), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1191 (1995); [6] Royal Crown Cola Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 887 F.2d 1480, 1485 (11th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 497 U.S. 1011, 111 L. Ed. 2d 767, 110 S. Ct. 3258 (1990). The granting of the declaratory judgment declaring the relevant provision of the collective bargaining agreement to be void and unenforceable had the same [*214] practical effect of restoring competition in the marketplace by permanently enjoining defendants from enforcing that provision.

C. Determining Reasonable Attorney's Fees

The Court must now determine what amount of fees is reasonable under the circumstances of this case. HN5[] "The process of determining a reasonable fee ordinarily begins with the court's calculation of a so-called 'lodestar' figure, which is arrived at by multiplying 'the number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation. . . by a reasonable hourly rate.'" LeBlanc-Sternberg v. Fletcher, 143 F.3d 748, 763-64 (2d Cir. 1998) (quoting Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 433, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40, 103 S. Ct. 1933 (1983)); see also USFL, 887 F.2d at 413. The lodestar figure is to be based upon current, prevailing market rates. See LeBlanc-Sternberg, 143 F.3d at 764. [7] The amount figured into the lodestar includes "the number of hours claimed by plaintiffs' attorneys that are supported by time records, that are not excessive or duplicative, and that do not reflect work done only in connection with unrelated claims on which plaintiffs did not succeed." Id. There is a strong presumption that this lodestar figure represents a reasonable fee. See id.; see also USFL, 887 F.2d at 413.

HN6[] Once the lodestar figure has been calculated, the Court may adjust the lodestar, taking into consideration several factors. See Hensley, 461 U.S. at 434 n.9 (citing Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc., 488 F.2d 714, 717-18 (5th Cir. 1974)). "If the court excludes claimed hours from the calculation of the lodestar figure or augments or reduces that figure it must state its reasons for doing so as specifically as possible." LeBlanc-Sternberg, 143 F.3d at 764 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

HN7 Courts are empowered with broad discretion to independently determine the reasonableness of an award for attorney's fees. See Jones v. Amalgamated Warbasse Houses, Inc., 721 F.2d 881, 884 (2d Cir. 1983), [8] cert. denied, 466 U.S. 944, 80 L. Ed. 2d 474, 104 S. Ct. 1929 (1984); McCann v. Coughlin, 698 F.2d 112, 131 (2d Cir. 1983) ("When a party seeks an award of attorney fees. . . he must provide the court with contemporaneous time sheets or other documentation which will enable it to make an independent evaluation of the fee request.") (emphasis added). Thus, this Court will make an independent assessment of the reasonableness of the hourly rates and the number of hours billed by plaintiffs' counsel.

1. Reasonable Rates

Plaintiffs seek attorney's fees of $ 70,211.75 for a total of 486.15 hours, representing 123.9 hours of partner time, 244.5 hours of experienced associate time, and 117.75 hours of paralegal time.² In their computations, plaintiffs use hourly rates ranging up to $ 225.00 per hour for partners, $ 150.00 for experienced associates, and $ 65.00 for paralegals.

[9] As this Court recently discussed in TM Park Ave. Assocs. v. Pataki, 44 F. Supp. 2d 158, 167 (1999), HN8 the applicable hourly rate depends on an attorney's professional experience. Thus, as a general rule, attorneys with significant experience and numerous years of practice are entitled to reimbursement at the hourly rate of $ 175.00; attorneys with four or more years of experience at the hourly rate of $ 125.00; and newly-admitted attorneys at the rate of $ 100.00 per hour. See TM Park Ave. Assocs., 44 F. Supp. 2d at 167; Carroll v. Debuono, 48 F. Supp. 2d 191, 1999 WL 288593, at *1-*2 (N.D.N.Y. 1999). Although TM Park awarded paralegal time at $ 50.00 per hour based on the fact that plaintiff failed to substantiate that a higher rate was appropriate, [*215] see TM Park Ave. Assocs., 44 F. Supp. 2d at 167, this Court finds that $ 65.00 per hour is the prevailing rate for paralegal work in this district. Accordingly, the Court will apply these rates in calculating plaintiffs' award of attorney's fees.

2. Reasonable Hours

Defendants claim, with little specificity, that the total number of hours billed [10] by plaintiffs' attorneys is excessive. While defendants generally challenge the time incurred by plaintiffs' counsel with respect to legal research and drafting the Complaint and moving papers, the Court will nonetheless independently review the reasonableness of plaintiffs' counsel's time records.

In the area of legal research, the Court estimates that plaintiffs' counsel expended approximately 120 hours for legal research. Based upon the existing precedent in the areas of labor and antitrust law at issue in the case, and plaintiffs' counsel's considerable expertise in these areas, the Court finds that 120 hours of research is excessive and that a reduction of hours billed for research by 20%, or 24 hours, is warranted. This reduction should be spread equally between the total partner and associate time. The Court finds, however, that the remaining time incurred by plaintiffs' counsel, including, but not limited to drafting the Complaint and moving papers, is reasonable under the circumstances. Accordingly, total partner hours are reduced to 111.9 hours, and total associate hours are reduced to 232.5 hours.

3. Lodestar Calculation

Applying the prevailing hourly rates [11] for this district and adjusting for total billable hours as discussed above, the lodestar calculation is as follows:

Partners:	111.9 hours * $ 175.00/hour =	$ 19,582.50
-----------	--------------------------------	--------------

²The Court notes that attorney Barriere was an experienced associate prior to January 1, 1999, at which time he became a partner.

63 F. Supp. 2d 211, *215 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19035, 11

Experienced
Associates:	232.5 hours * $ 125.00/hour =	$ 29,062.50
Paralegals:	117.75 hours * 65.00/hour =	$ 7,653.75
Total Lodestar Amount:		$ 56,298.75

II. Conclusion

In summary, the Court awards plaintiffs attorney's fees in the amount of $ 56,298.75 against defendants Local Union 38 of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association and Sheet Metal & Roofing Employers Association of Southeastern New York, Inc.

IT IS SO ORDERED

July 22, 1999

Watertown, New York

Hon. Thomas J. McAvoy

Chief U.S. District Judge

End of Document

Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

July 26, 1999, Decided ; July 29, 1999, Filed

96 Civ. 7874 (RWS)

Reporter

58 F. Supp. 2d 228 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,604

GRANITE PARTNERS, L.P., GRANITE CORPORATION and QUARTZ HEDGE FUND, by and through the Litigation Advisory Board of Granite Partners, L.P., Granite Corporation and Quartz Hedge Fund, Plaintiffs, - against - BEAR, STEARNS & CO. INC., BEAR, STEARNS CAPITAL MARKETS INC., HOWARD RUBIN, DONALDSON, LUFKIN & JENRETTE SECURITIES CORPORATION, ELIZABETH COMERFORD and MERRILL LYNCH, PIERCE, FENNER & SMITH INCORPORATED, Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Brokers' motion for partial dismissal of Complaint granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

Brokers, Funds, marks, letters, markups, allegations, terms, contracts, pleadings, prices, liquidation, portfolios, holdings, parties, motion to dismiss, obligations, collusive, statute of frauds, Sherman Act, contractual, bidding, relevant market, antitrust, purchases, advisory, revised, shingle, sales, valuations, papers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss, the facts alleged in the complaint are presumed to be true, and all factual inferences must be drawn in the plaintiff's favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN2 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding the merits of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, all material allegations composing the factual predicate of the action are taken as true, for the court's task is to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint, not to assay the weight of the evidence which might be offered in support thereof. Thus, where it is beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his or her claim that would warrant relief, a motion to dismiss must be granted. Additionally, on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, consideration is limited to the factual allegations in the complaint, to documents attached to the complaint as an exhibit or incorporated in it by reference, to matters of which judicial notice may be taken, or to documents either in plaintiff's possession or of which plaintiff had knowledge and relied on in bringing suit.

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN3 Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) requires that in all allegations of fraud, the circumstances constituting the fraud must be stated with particularity. Allegations of fraud must adequately specify the statements made that were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which it is contended that the statements were fraudulent, and state the time and place the statements were made, and the identity of the person who made them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN4 Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1997\), provides that any person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue and may recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1997\), provides in part that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who makes any contract or engages in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal is deemed guilty of a felony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

While the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., by its terms, prohibits any agreement or combination "in restraint of trade or commerce," it has long been recognized that the Act was only intended to outlaw unreasonable restraints. As a result, most antitrust claims are evaluated under a rule of reason, according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its conditions before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

To allege unreasonable restraint of trade, something more than a private dispute must be alleged. The relevant product market must be identified, and the plaintiff must allege how the net economic effect of the alleged violation is to restrain trade in the relevant market and that no reasonable alternate source is available to consumers in that market. The economic impact in the relevant market must be specified, and the plaintiff must show that the alleged restraint on trade tends or is reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Because certain types of restraints have both a predictable and pernicious effect on competition, they are deemed unlawful per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Abbreviated rule-of-reason analysis is only appropriate where the great likelihood of anti-competitive effects can easily be ascertained, and an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics can conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anti-competitive effect on customers and markets

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN10 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To withstand a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff making a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., conspiracy claim must allege a concerted action by two or more persons that unreasonably restrain interstate or foreign trade or commerce. The plaintiff must do more than merely allege that a conspiracy exists, it must provide some factual basis for that allegation. For example, the plaintiff must identify the relevant product market, the co-conspirators, and describe the nature and effects of the alleged conspiracy. While dismissal prior to giving a plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted sparingly in antitrust cases, it is not proper to assume that the plaintiff can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN11 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Establishing an unreasonable restraint of trade under the rule of reason involves three basic steps. Plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. If the plaintiff succeeds, the burden shifts to the defendant to establish the pro-competitive redeeming virtues of the action. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then show that the same pro-competitive effect can be achieved through an alternate means that is less restrictive of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

To meet its initial burden, a plaintiff bringing suit under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., must show more than just that he was harmed by defendants' conduct. Rather, a plaintiff must show that the alleged restraint of trade had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. This is so because the ultimate aim of the Sherman Act is to protect competition, as opposed to competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN13 [] Clayton Act, Claims

A private plaintiff may not recover damages under Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1997\), merely by showing injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Rather, a private plaintiff must demonstrate the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. Even injuries with a causal connection to antitrust violations will not qualify as antitrust injuries unless they are attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN14 [] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

The per se rule is a method of determining whether Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, has been violated, but it does not indicate whether a private plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury and, thus, whether he may recover damages under Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1997\). Per se and rule-of-reason analysis are but two methods of determining whether a restraint is unreasonable, that is, whether its anti-competitive effects outweigh its pro-competitive effects. The purpose of the antitrust injury requirement is different. It ensures that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either damages or equitable relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN15 [] Clayton Act, Claims

An antitrust plaintiff's own injuries must be causally linked to the antitrust violation(s). The statutory requirement of the Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1997\), that treble damage suits be based on injuries which occur "by reason of" antitrust violations expressly restricts the right to sue under this section. There must be a causal connection between an antitrust violation and an injury sufficient for the trier of fact to establish that the violation was a material cause of or a substantial factor in the occurrence of damage. And this connection must also link a specific form of illegal act to a plaintiff engaged in the sort of legitimate activities which the prohibition of this type of violation is clearly intended to protect.

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN16 [] Private Actions, Standing

When a court concludes that no violation has occurred, it has no occasion to consider antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN17 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Antitrust law is not intended to be as available as an over-the-counter cold remedy because were its heavy power brought into play too readily, it would not safeguard competition, but it would destroy it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN18 [] Private Actions, Remedies

The cornerstone of antitrust law is competition. Congress's intent in passing the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., was not to subject all business and commercial torts to the scrutiny of federal antitrust law. The Sherman Act is neither a lowest-responsible-bidder statute nor a panacea for all business affronts which seem to fit nowhere else.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN19 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

New York's antitrust law, the Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 (1996), is modeled on the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. \(1997\), and should be construed in light of federal precedent.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Breach of Contract

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Authority to Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Contracts & Conveyances > Enforcement & Execution

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Contracts & Conveyances > Formation & Negotiation

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > General Overview

HN20 [] Causes of Action & Remedies, Breach of Contract

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

While under New York law only a party to a contract can typically bring suit to recover for its breach, one can certainly enforce a contract entered by an authorized agent. It is elementary that one may sue upon a contract made for him by his agent.

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > Claims & Enforcement

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > Intended Beneficiaries

HN21 [blue icon] Beneficiaries, Claims & Enforcement

Under New York law a third party is allowed to enforce a contract if that party is an intended beneficiary of the contract. The general test for third-party beneficiary status is as follows: unless otherwise agreed between promisor and promisee, a beneficiary of a promise is an intended beneficiary if recognition of a right to performance in the beneficiary is appropriate to effectuate the intention of the parties, and either (a) the performance of the promise will satisfy an obligation of the promisee to pay money to the beneficiary, or (b) the circumstances indicate that the promisee intends to give the beneficiary the benefits of the promised performance.

Commercial Law \(UCC\) > Sales \(Article 2\) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > Claims & Enforcement

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Sales \(Article 2\), Form, Formation & Readjustment

When determining the intentions of the contracting parties, the intention of the promisee is of primary importance. Where the obligation to perform to the third-party beneficiary is not expressly stated in the contract at issue, a court may look to surrounding circumstances to determine whether the contracting parties intended to benefit a third party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN23 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Federal pleading is by statement of claim, not by legal theory.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Acceptance > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Contract Formation, Acceptance

An offeror may, by the terms of its offer, dictate the manner of an offeree's acceptance. This includes requirements that the acceptance be communicated in writing.

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Execution & Delivery

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Securities Law > Blue Sky Laws > Offers & Sales

HN25 [] Contract Formation, Execution & Delivery

Under New York law, neither contracts incapable of being performed within a year nor contracts for the sale of securities entered prior to October 10, 1997, may be entered orally.

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > Requirements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

HN26 [] Statute of Frauds, Requirements

The Statute of Frauds does not mandate delivery, so it does not matter that defendant never returned the signed contract to plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > Requirements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

HN27 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

As to a defendant's argument that the Statute of Frauds bars plaintiff's action, dismissal should not result for that reason unless it can be said that no significant dispute exists as to the sufficiency of the memoranda that satisfies the Statute of Frauds.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Sufficient Consideration

HN28 [] Consideration, Sufficient Consideration

Under New York law, a contract unsupported by consideration is generally invalid. If the promisor loses nothing, and the promisee acquires nothing by an arrangement, then there is no valid consideration. Sufficient consideration, however, may be provided either by a benefit to a promisor or a detriment to the promisee. It is enough that something is promised, done, forborne, or suffered by the party to whom the promise is made as consideration for the promise made to him.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Adequate Consideration

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Sufficient Consideration

HN29 [] Consideration, Adequate Consideration

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

Under traditional principles of contract law, the parties to a contract are entitled to make their own bargain, even if the consideration exchanged is grossly unequal or of dubious value. Far from consideration needing to be coextensive or even proportionate, the value or measurability of the thing forborne or promised is not crucial so long as it is acceptable to the promisee. However, neither a promise to do that which the promisor is already bound to do, nor the performance of an existing legal obligation constitutes valid consideration.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Sufficient Consideration

HN30 [blue icon] Consideration, Sufficient Consideration

Under New York law, a written, signed agreement to discharge or modify an existing obligation is not rendered invalid because of the absence of consideration.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Sufficient Consideration

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Breach of Contract > Employment Contract Formation

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN31 [blue icon] Consideration, Sufficient Consideration

Consideration for a contract may be supplied by actual forbearance from exercising one's rights to unilaterally cancel a contract terminable at will, even though there was no obligation to continue the at-will relationship in the first instance.

Contracts Law > ... > Consideration > Enforcement of Promises > General Overview

HN32 [blue icon] Consideration, Enforcement of Promises

It is consideration that is required to form a contract under New York law, not rigorous reciprocity or mutuality.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Sufficient Consideration

HN33 [blue icon] Consideration, Sufficient Consideration

A promise may be lacking, and yet the whole writing may be instinct with an obligation, imperfectly expressed.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Sufficient Consideration

HN34 [blue icon] Consideration, Sufficient Consideration

As a general rule, even a contract unenforceable at its inception because of lack of consideration or mutuality may nevertheless become valid and binding to the extent that it has been performed.

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > Offers > General Overview

HN35 [blue icon] Contract Formation, Offers

The actions of the parties may show conclusively that they have intended to conclude a binding agreement, even though one or more terms are missing or are left to be agreed upon. Certain terms of a contract may be supplied by the parties' prior course of dealings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN36 [blue icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

There are five basic elements necessary to sustain a claim of fraud under New York law: (1) misrepresentation of a material fact; (2) the falsity of that misrepresentation; (3) scienter, or intent to defraud; (4) reasonable reliance on that representation, and (5) damage caused by such reliance. Additionally, a plaintiff must comply with the heightened pleading standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN37 [blue icon] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Fraud pleadings generally cannot be based on information and belief. The exception to this rule is that fraud allegations may be so pleaded as to facts peculiarly within the opposing party's knowledge; even then, however, the allegations must be accompanied by a statement of facts upon which the belief is founded. This exception to the general rule must not be mistaken for license to base claims of fraud on speculation and conclusory allegations. Where pleading is permitted on information and belief, a complaint must adduce specific facts supporting a strong inference of fraud or it will not satisfy even a relaxed pleading standard.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN38 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under New York law, the asserted reliance must be found to be justifiable under all the circumstances before a complaint can be found to state a cause of action in fraud. Whether a plaintiff has adequately pleaded justifiable reliance can be a proper subject for a motion to dismiss.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Torts > ... > Duty > Affirmative Duty to Act > General Overview

HN39 [blue document icon] Governments, Fiduciaries

In evaluating whether a plaintiff has adequately alleged justifiable reliance, a court may consider, inter alia, the plaintiff's sophistication and expertise in finance, the existence of a fiduciary relationship, and whether the plaintiff initiated the transaction. A party entering into a transaction has a duty to conduct an independent appraisal of the risk it is assuming and a duty to investigate the nature of its business transactions. Reasonable reliance may be found wanting where the plaintiff failed to conduct its own diligent research into the risks or benefits of a particular transaction. Sophisticated parties may well be under a duty to make affirmative efforts to protect themselves from misrepresentations, and cannot be heard to complain when they fail to make diligent inquiries.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN40 [blue document icon] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Because an amended pleading supersedes the original pleading, facts not incorporated in the amended pleading are generally considered functus officio.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN41 [blue document icon] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Where sophisticated businessmen engaged in major transactions enjoy access to critical information but fail to take advantage of that access, New York courts are particularly disinclined to entertain claims of justifiable reliance.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Fraud > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Civil Liability > Fraudulent Interstate Transactions > General Overview

Securities Law > Blue Sky Laws > Offers & Sales

Securities Law > Investment Advisers > Adviser, Broker & Dealer Liability > General Overview

HN42 [blue document icon] Criminal Offenses, Fraud

Under the shingle theory, a broker-dealer who sells a security without disclosing that the price at which he is selling is not reasonably related to the current fair market price of the security violates the anti-fraud provisions of the federal securities laws.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN43 [blue document icon] Governments, Fiduciaries

New York law allows recovery for frauds based upon omissions, conduct, or speech that are tantamount to false representations. New York recognizes a duty by a party to a business transaction to speak in three situations: first, where the party has made a partial or ambiguous statement, on the theory that once a party has undertaken to mention a relevant fact to the other party it cannot give only half of the truth; second, when the parties stand in a fiduciary or confidential relationship with each other, and third, where one party possesses superior knowledge, not readily available to the other, and knows that the other is acting on the basis of mistaken knowledge.

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *228L^A999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 1

Governments > Fiduciaries

Securities Law > ... > Securities Act Actions > Civil Liability > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN44 [] Governments, Fiduciaries

Under ordinary circumstances a broker owes no fiduciary duties to a purchaser of securities, except those duties necessarily attendant to the narrow task of consummating the transaction requested.

Securities Law > ... > Civil Liability > Fraudulent Interstate Transactions > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Securities Law > Blue Sky Laws > Offers & Sales

HN45 [] Civil Liability, Fraudulent Interstate Transactions

The shingle theory has not developed as a generic theory of fraud liability based upon omissions, but rather a specific theory of recovery under the federal securities laws.

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN46 [] Contracts Law, Breach

In order for the plaintiff to have a cause of action for tortious interference of contract, it is axiomatic that there must be a breach of that contract by the other party.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN47 [] Intentional Interference, Elements

To maintain a claim for tortious interference with contracts, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant intended to interfere with a contract.

Counsel: For Plaintiffs: ERIC SEILER, ESQ., ROBERT J. LACK, ESQ., KATHERINE L. PRINGLE, ESQ., LEE D. SOSSEN, ESQ., Of Counsel, FRIEDMAN KAPLAN & SEILER, New York, NY.

For Plaintiffs: STEVEN E. GREENBAUM, ESQ., EDWARD S. WEISFELNER, ESQ., SCOTT M. BERMAN, ESQ., Of Counsel, BERLACK, ISRAELS & LIBERMAN, New York, NY.

For Bear Stearns & Co. Inc., Bear Stearns Capital Markets Inc., Howard Rubin, Defendants: DAVID M. MORRIS, ESQ., ALBERT SHEMMY MISHAAN, ESQ., MICHAEL B. deLEEUW, ESQ., DOUGLAS J. CARDONI, ESQ., Of Counsel, FRIED, FRANK, HARRIS, SHRIVER & JACOBSON, New York, NY.

For Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp., Elizabeth Comerford, Defendants: GARY G. STAAB, ESQ., CATHERINE A. LUDDEN, ESQ., SCOTT S. BALBER, ESQ., Of Counsel, MORGAN, LEWIS & BOCKIUS, New York, NY.

For Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., Defendants: A. ROBERT PIETRZAK, ESQ., ANDREW W. STERN, ESQ., MADELEINE J. DOWLING, ESQ., JONATHAN J. BRENNAN, ESQ., Of Counsel, BROWN & WOOD, New York, NY.

Judges: ROBERT W. SWEET, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: ROBERT W. SWEET

Opinion

[*232] OPINION

Sweet, D.J.

Defendants Donaldson, [*232] Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corporation ("DLJ"), Elizabeth Comerford ("Comerford"), Bear, [*233] Stearns & Co. Inc., Bear, Stearns Capital Markets, Inc. (collectively, "Bear Stearns"), Howard Rubin ("Rubin"), and Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. ("Merrill Lynch") (together with DLJ, Comerford, Bear Stearns, and Rubin, the "Brokers") have moved for partial dismissal of the Second Amended Complaint ("Complaint") in this action pursuant to Rules 12\(b\)\(6\) and 9 \(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and for failure to plead fraud with particularity. Specifically, the Brokers move to dismiss the following claims: (1) breach of contract (Count III); (2) common law fraud (Counts IV and V); (3) violations of the Sherman and Donnelly Acts (Counts VI and VII); and (7) tortious interference with contracts (Counts XI and XII).

The Brokers have also moved to dismiss Counts XIII through XXI of the Second Amended Complaint, which have been reasserted merely for the purposes of plaintiffs' contemplated appeal. Plaintiffs have agreed, both in their papers and in correspondence to the Court, (see Letter from Seiler to Judge [*3] Sweet of 10/16/98, at 2), that these counts are deficient under the logic of Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 17 F. Supp. 2d 275 \(S.D.N.Y. 1998\) ("Granite I"), and that they should therefore be summarily dismissed.

For the reasons set forth below, the Brokers' motions will be granted in part and denied in part.

Parties

Plaintiff Granite Partners, L.P. ("Granite Partners"), a Delaware limited partnership, was established in January 1990 as an investment fund to invest primarily in mortgage-related securities on behalf of individuals and entities subject to United States taxation.

Plaintiff Granite Corporation ("Granite Corp."), a Cayman Islands corporation, was organized in January 1990 to invest primarily in mortgage-related securities on behalf of offshore investors and domestic tax-exempt entities, including foundations and pension funds.

Plaintiff Quartz Hedge Fund ("Quartz") (collectively with Granite Partners and Granite Corp., the "Funds"), a Cayman Islands corporation, was established in January 1994 as a vehicle to invest primarily in mortgage-related securities on behalf of offshore investors and others exempt from United [4] States taxation.

The Funds bring this action by and through the Litigation Advisory Board (the "LAB"), which was given the exclusive authority on behalf of and in the name of the Funds' estates to commence, prosecute, settle, or otherwise resolve all unresolved claims and causes of action of the Funds' estates by order of the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York.

DLJ, Bear Stearns, and Merrill Lynch, all Delaware corporations with their principal places of business in New York City, are broker-dealers that transacted business with the Funds.

Comerford, a resident of New York, was at all relevant times a senior vice president of DLJ.

Rubin, a resident of New Jersey, was at all relevant times a senior managing director and the head CMO trader at Bear Stearns.

Relevant Nonparties

David J. Askin ("Askin") is a resident of New Jersey.

At all times relevant to this action, nonparty Askin Capital Management, L.P. ("ACM"), a Delaware limited partnership, was a registered investment advisor, whose principal place of business was New York City. ACM was formed in January 1993 by Askin. Askin also served as ACM'S president, chief executive officer, [5] and chief financial officer. ACM became the investment advisor to both Granite Corp. and Granite Partners (and Granite Partners' sole general partner) on or about [*234] January 26, 1993. ACM has been the investment advisor to Quartz since its formation.

Prior Proceedings

The facts and prior proceedings in this action are set forth in prior opinions of this Court, familiarity with which is assumed. See Granite II, 17 F. Supp. 2d at 275; Granite Partners v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 184 F.R.D. 49 \(S.D.N.Y. 1999\).

On April 7, 1994, the Funds filed petitions for relief under chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code. The chapter 11 trustee for the Funds (the "Trustee") initially filed this action in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York on September 12, 1996. The case was referred to this Court on October 18, 1996. On consent, this Court withdrew the reference from the Bankruptcy Court on December 3, 1996.

On January 27, 1997, the Trustee submitted a Third Amended Joint Plan of Liquidation for the Funds (the "Plan"). Following the Bankruptcy Court's confirmation of the chapter 11 Plan on March 2, 1997, this [6] action has been pursued by the LAB, appointed pursuant to the Liquidation Plan.

The LAB filed its First Amended Complaint in this action on August 4, 1997, naming, in addition to Bear Stearns, Rubin, DLJ, Comerford, and Merrill Lynch as defendants.

In its First Amended Complaint, the LAB asserted the following claims: breach of contract, inducing and participating in breach of fiduciary duty, tortious interference with contracts, rescission of unauthorized trades, breach of duty, conversion, federal and state antitrust violations, prima facie tort, common law fraud, negligent and innocent misrepresentation, breach of express warranty, unjust enrichment, objection to claims and interest, and equitable subordination.

On August 25, 1998, the lion's share of the LAB's claims were dismissed in Granite II, 17 F. Supp. 2d at 275. That decision granted the LAB leave to replead.

On October 16, 1998, the LAB filed the Complaint that is the subject of the Brokers' current motions to dismiss. Oral argument was heard on the instant motions on April 29, 1999, at which time the motions were deemed fully submitted. Additional materials were received from the parties through [7] June 2, 1999.

Facts

HN1[] In considering a motion to dismiss, the facts alleged in the complaint are presumed to be true and all factual inferences must be drawn in the plaintiff's favor. See Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F.3d 1170, 1174 (2d Cir. 1993); Cosmas v. Hassett, 886 F.2d 8, 11 (2d Cir. 1989); Dwyer v. Regan, 777 F.2d 825, 828-29 (2d Cir. 1985), modified by, 793 F.2d 457 (2d Cir. 1986). Accordingly, the factual allegations considered here and set forth below are taken primarily from the LAB's Complaint and do not constitute findings of fact by the Court. They are presumed to be true only for the purpose of deciding the present motions.

Though the LAB's Complaint differs in significant respects from its First Amended Complaint, the basic facts remain the same. As was explained in more detail in Granite II, this case arises out of the collapse in early 1994 of the Funds that were managed by Askin and ACM. The Funds invested primarily in collateralized mortgage obligations ("CMOs") created by the Brokers and other broker-dealers. As the Complaint states, "CMOs are securities created from and [8] collateralized by mortgage-backed securities formed from pools of residential mortgages or securities backed by such mortgages." Compl. P 26. ACM, through its president, Askin, purchased the securities for the Funds. The advisory and fiduciary relationships between ACM, or its predecessors, and the Funds were governed by investment advisory agreements. Because CMOs of the type purchased by the Funds vary in their sensitivity to interest rate fluctuations, and [*235] the Funds themselves had distinct investment strategies, ACM's selection of the Funds' securities was critical.

Askin and ACM, the Funds' investment advisor, had fiduciary and contractual obligations to the Funds to make investments with due care and in accordance with the Funds' stated investment objectives. Askin and ACM, however, did not fulfil those obligations, and repeatedly breached their fiduciary and contractual duties. As a result, the Funds acquired portfolios that were full of bullish CMOs, esoteric and highly "toxic" CMOs, and otherwise inappropriate securities. When short-term interest rates rose in early 1994, these securities radically eroded in value.

The Complaint alleges that the Brokers took advantage of [9] ACM and Askin's shortcomings by recommending and selling to the Funds inappropriate and, at times, highly toxic CMOs. The Complaint also alleges that the Brokers deliberately supplied ACM and the Funds with erroneous "marks" purportedly representing the Brokers' own valuations of the Funds holdings -- a claim not explicitly made in the First Amended Complaint -- despite contracts between the Funds and the Brokers requiring the provision of accurate and timely Broker marks. In their sales of securities to the Funds, the Brokers recouped significant profits -- in part due to the Brokers' charging of excessive markups. The LAB's claims concerning the Brokers' charging of excessive markups were also not explicitly made in the First Amended Complaint.

The Funds obtained the majority of their CMOs pursuant to "repos," a financing mechanism that allowed the Funds to pay only a fraction of the cost of each CMO in cash, borrowing the balance from the Brokers. After the Funds' value began to erode in early 1994, the Funds' holdings were liquidated pursuant to Public Securities Association Master Repurchase Agreements ("PSA Agreements") between the Funds and the Brokers. Under these agreements, [10] the Brokers were allowed to make margin calls on the Funds if the value of the securities held on "repo" fell below the amount that the Funds had borrowed, plus an agreed-upon "haircut." ¹ Unable to meet margin calls issued by the Brokers, the Funds' portfolios were liquidated.

The Complaint alleges that the Brokers once again took advantage of the Funds during these liquidations. In particular, the Brokers are alleged to have liquidated the Funds' holdings by "deeming" sales of the Funds' securities to themselves at unreasonable, below-market prices. The Brokers allegedly colluded with each other to exchange sham bids, thus facilitating this bad-faith liquidation. Having obtained the Funds' securities at artificially low prices, [11] the Brokers then proceeded to sell those same securities on the open market -- recovering profits far in excess of those they would have obtained had they liquidated the Funds' portfolios in a non-collusive manner.

¹ As the Complaint explains, the "haircut" is a discount that represents "an amount calculated to protect the buyer/lender against adverse market movements should the security have to be liquidated to cover the seller/borrower's obligation to repurchase the security." Compl. P 55.

The Brokers have moved to dismiss several repledged claims that were present in the First Amended Complaint, as well as a few that were not. The Complaint realleges antitrust claims under the Sherman and Donnelly Acts that were dismissed in Granite II (Counts VI and VII). The Complaint also includes claims of common law fraud (Count IV) and breach of contract (Count III), not present in the LAB's First Amended Complaint, based upon the Brokers' provision of erroneous marks, as well as a common law fraud claim premised upon the Brokers' failures to disclose the excessive markups they charged the Funds for securities (Count V). Finally, the Complaint realleges claims for tortious interference with contracts similar to those [*236] that were dismissed in Granite II (Counts XI and XII). The Brokers have moved to dismiss these claims, but not several others that are not the subject of the instant opinion.

Discussion

I. Legal Standards

A. Rule [12] 12(b)(6)

HN2 In deciding the merits of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, all material allegations composing the factual predicate of the action are taken as true, for the court's task is to "assess the legal feasibility of the complaint, not to assay the weight of the evidence which might be offered in support thereof." Ryder Energy Distribution Corp. v. Merrill Lynch Commodities, Inc., 748 F.2d 774, 779 (2d Cir. 1984) (quoting Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639 (2d Cir. 1980)). Thus, where it is beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his or her claim that would warrant relief, a motion to dismiss must be granted. See H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 249-50, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 (1989); Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984); Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957).

Additionally, on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, consideration is limited to the factual allegations in the complaint, "to documents attached to the complaint as an exhibit or incorporated in it by reference, to matters of which judicial notice may be taken, or to documents [13] either in plaintiff[s] possession or of which plaintiff[] had knowledge and relied on in bringing suit." Brass v. American Film Techs., Inc., 987 F.2d 142, 150 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing Cortec Indus., Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 47-48 (2d Cir. 1991)); Bissell v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 937 F. Supp. 237, 239 (S.D.N.Y. 1996), aff'd, 157 F.3d 138 (2d Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 119 S. Ct. 1039 (1999).

The parties have submitted numerous exhibits, including deposition transcripts, that could not appropriately be considered on a motion to dismiss. Despite the voluminous nature of these exhibits, and the alacrity with which the parties have interwoven quarrels based upon these materials with contentions based upon the LAB's actual pleadings, these exhibits have been ignored. However, certain documents not attached to the Complaint or explicitly incorporated by reference have been consulted where appropriate under the above standard.

B. Rule 9(b)

HN3 Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 9(b) requires that in all allegations of fraud, the circumstances constituting the fraud must be stated with [14] particularity. See Shields v. Citytrust Bancorp, Inc., 25 F.3d 1124, 1127 (2d Cir. 1994); In re Time Warner, Inc. Sec. Litig., 9 F.3d 259, 265 (2d Cir. 1993); Shemtob v. Shearson, Hammill & Co., 448 F.2d 442, 445 (2d Cir. 1971). Allegations of fraud must adequately specify the statements made that were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which it is contended that the statements were fraudulent, and state the time and place the statements were made and the identity of the person who made them. See McLaughlin v. Anderson, 962 F.2d 187, 191 (2d Cir. 1992); Cosmas, 886 F.2d at 11.

II. The LAB Has Not Adequately Pleaded Violations of the Sherman and Donnelly Acts (Counts VI and VII)

The LAB has brought suit against Bear Stearns, Rubin, DLJ, and Merrill Lynch pursuant to HN4 [↑] section 4 of the Clayton Act, which provides:

Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue ... and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

[15] [*237] 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) \(1997\). According to the LAB, the Brokers committed underlying violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1997\), by engaging in a conspiracy to exchange "lowball," accommodation bids during the initial liquidation of the Funds' holdings. These bids were then used by the Brokers to justify deeming sales of those holdings to themselves at below-market prices. The LAB alleges that by agreeing to forestall a competitive auction the Brokers engaged in a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act. The LAB also asserts that the Brokers' collusive bidding scheme was illegal under New York's Donnelly Act, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 (McKinney's 1996).

HN5 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Act reads, in relevant part

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony

15 U.S.C. § 1.

HN6 [↑] While the Sherman [16] Act, by its terms, prohibits any agreement or combination "in restraint of trade or commerce," id., it has long been recognized that the Act was only intended to outlaw unreasonable restraints. See Bogan v. Hodgkins, 166 F.3d 509, 513 \(2d Cir. 1999\) ("The Supreme Court has read the Act to forbid only 'unreasonable' restraints, as a literal reading would absurdly bar all contracts. In particular not all cooperative conduct has a deleterious effect on competition; indeed, some cooperative arrangements foster rather than harm competition.") (citations omitted). As a result, most antitrust claims are evaluated under a "rule of reason," according to which "the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its conditions before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect." State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 118 S. Ct. 275, 279, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 \(1997\); see Bogan, 166 F.3d at 513 n.4. HN7 [↑] To allege unreasonable restraint of trade, something more than a private dispute [17] must be alleged. The relevant product market must be identified, and the plaintiff must "allege how the net economic effect of the alleged violation is to restrain trade in the relevant market, and that no reasonable alternate source is available' to consumers in that market." International Television Productions Ltd. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Television, 622 F. Supp. 1532, 1534 \(S.D.N.Y. 1985\) (quoting Gianna Enters. v. Miss World \(Jersey\) Ltd., 551 F. Supp. 1348, 1355 \(S.D.N.Y. 1982\)); see North Jersey Secretarial School, Inc. v. McKiernan, 713 F. Supp. 577, 583 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\). The economic impact in the relevant market must be specified, and the plaintiff must show that "the alleged restraint on trade tends or is reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest." Larry R. George Sales Co. v. Cool Attic Corp., 587 F.2d 266, 273 \(5th Cir. 1979\).

However, HN8 [↑] because certain types of restraints have both a predictable and pernicious effect on competition, they are deemed unlawful per se. In the motions considered in Granite II, the Broker defendants maintained that the LAB had only alleged injury to the [18] Funds themselves, not injury to the relevant market, and that this failure to plead restraint of trade required dismissal of the LAB's antitrust claims. By contrast, the LAB sought to neutralize the inadequacy of its pleadings by urging that the Brokers' alleged bid-rigging conspiracy be considered a per se violation of the antitrust laws. More specifically, the LAB suggested that because a horizontal bid-rigging scheme had been alleged, it was entitled to per se treatment and the LAB need not meet the demands of rule-of-reason analysis. As [*238] was explained in Granite II, however, because of the novel and complex nature of the market and instruments at issue in this case, the collusion alleged by the LAB did not constitute a per se violation of the Sherman Act. See 17 F. Supp. 2d at 297.

In its papers, the LAB has once again attempted to navigate a shortcut around rule-of-reason analysis, pressing that the so-called "quick look" rule of reason should be applied to its antitrust claims. The LAB's entreaties notwithstanding, "quick look" rule-of-reason analysis would not be appropriate in this case. HN9[↑] Abbreviated rule-of-reason analysis, as the Supreme Court [\[*19\]](#) has recently had occasion to observe, is only appropriate where "the great likelihood of anticompetitive effects can easily be ascertained," and "an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets." California Dental Assoc. v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 1612-13 \(1999\). It was emphatically the holding of Granite II that the anticompetitive impact of the Brokers' alleged bidding conspiracy was neither obvious nor easily ascertainable, and that therefore the LAB could not maintain its antitrust claims against the Brokers merely by alleging per se violations of the Sherman Act. As California Dental indicates, "quick look" rule-of-reason analysis is inappropriate for similar reasons. See id. The LAB's request that the Court merely engage in yet another form of truncated antitrust analysis is thus meritless.

HN10[↑] To withstand a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff making a Sherman Act conspiracy claim must allege a concerted action by two or more persons that unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce. See In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 894 F. Supp. 703, 710 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\); [\[*20\] Three Crown Ltd. Partnership v. Caxton Corp., 817 F. Supp. 1033, 1047 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\)](#); Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Hearst/ABC Viacom Entertainment Servs., 746 F. Supp. 320, 325 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\); accord International Distrib. Ctrs., Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 793 \(2d Cir. 1987\). The plaintiff "must do more than merely allege that a conspiracy exists, it must provide some factual basis for that allegation." Fort Wayne Telsat v. Entertainment & Sports Programming Network, 753 F. Supp. 109, 115 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\); see Garshman v. Universal Resources Holding Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230 \(3d Cir. 1987\); Heart Disease Research Found. v. General Motors Corp., 463 F.2d 98, 100 \(2d Cir. 1972\). For example, the plaintiff must identify the relevant product market, the co-conspirators, and describe the nature and effects of the alleged conspiracy. See In re Nasdaq, 894 F. Supp. at 710-11; International Television Productions, 622 F. Supp. at 1537. While dismissal prior to giving a plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted sparingly in antitrust [\[*21\]](#) cases, see Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 \(1976\),² "it is not . . . proper to assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged." George Haug Co. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 139 \(2d Cir. 1998\) (quoting Associated Gen. Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\)).

As the Second Circuit has held, HN11[↑] establishing an unreasonable restraint [\[*22\]](#) of trade under the rule of reason involves three basic steps:

[\[*239\]](#) "Plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. . ." Capital Imaging Assocs. P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assocs., 996 F.2d 537, 543 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 114 S. Ct. 388, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1993). If the plaintiff succeeds, the burden shifts to the defendant to establish the "pro-competitive 'redeeming virtues'" of the action. Id. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then show that the same pro-competitive effect could be achieved through an alternate means. that is less restrictive of competition. Id.; Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1413 (9th-Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 994, 112 S. Ct. 617, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1991).

² It is worth noting that, as of this opinion's issuance, the LAB will already have had access to a significant amount of discovery material in this action and related actions. While discovery may not be complete, and this opportunity to conduct discovery does not change the Court's analysis of the LAB's claims, the LAB has already had access to a vast quantity of information from which it could prepare coherent claims.

K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib., Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 127 \(2d Cir. 1995\). HN12 [↑] To meet its initial burden a plaintiff bringing suit under the Sherman Act must "show more than just that he was harmed by defendants' conduct. [23]" Id. Rather, a plaintiff must show that the alleged restraint of trade had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. See id.; see also Jefferson Parish Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 31, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\) ("Without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition, respondent cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws"). This is so because the ultimate aim of the Sherman Act is to protect competition, as opposed to competitors. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\). As another Second Circuit decision, Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537 \(2d Cir. 1993\), has explained:

Under [the rule of reason test] ... plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Insisting on proof of harm to the whole market fulfills the broad purpose of the antitrust law that was enacted to ensure competition in general, not narrowly focused to protect individual competitors. [24]

Id. at 543.

Additionally, it is well-settled that "[HN13][↑] a private plaintiff may not recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act merely by showing 'injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market.'" [Atlantic Richfield Co. \[ARCO\] v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\)](#) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\)). Rather, a private plaintiff must demonstrate the existence of "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489; see George Haug, 148 F.3d at 139 ("The antitrust injury requirement obligates a plaintiff to demonstrate, as a threshold matter, 'that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice.'") (quoting Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543; Florida Seed Co. v. Monsanto Co., 105 F.3d 1372, 1375 (11th Cir.) ("In many instances, those [25] displaced by a merger suffer an economic loss. However, this loss is not an antitrust injury because it does not flow from that which makes a merger unlawful. Injuries like that suffered by Florida Seed do not 'coincide[] with the public detriment tending to result from the alleged violation.'") (quoting Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1450 \(11th Cir. 1991\)), cert. denied, 118 S. Ct. 693 (1998). Even injuries with a causal connection to antitrust violations will not qualify as "antitrust injuries" unless they are "attributable to an anticompetitive aspect of the practice under [*240] scrutiny." ³ ARCO, 495 U.S. at 334; see generally 2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 362a, at 209-16 (rev. ed. 1995) (discussing antitrust injury requirements). As the ARCO Court noted, this antitrust injury requirement is conceptually distinct from the demands of the rule of reason or per se rule utilized by courts to determine whether a Sherman Act violation has occurred in the first instance:

³ As the Second Circuit recognized some time ago, HN15 [↑] an antitrust plaintiff's own injuries must be causally linked to the antitrust violation(s):

The statutory requirement [of section 4 of the Clayton Act] that treble damage suits be based on injuries which occur "by reason of" antitrust violations expressly restricts the right to sue under this section. There must be a causal connection between an antitrust violation and an injury sufficient for the trier of fact to establish that the violation was a "material cause" of or a "substantial factor" in the occurrence of damage. And this connection must also link a specific form of illegal act to a plaintiff engaged in the sort of legitimate activities which the prohibition of this type of violation was clearly intended to protect.

HN14[] The per se rule is a method of determining whether § 1 of the Sherman Act has been violated, but it does [26] not indicate whether a private plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury and thus whether he may recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Per se and rule-of-reason analysis are but two methods of determining whether a restraint is "unreasonable," i.e., whether its anticompetitive effects outweigh its procompetitive effects.

...

The purpose of the antitrust injury requirement is different. It ensures that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs for either damages or equitable relief.

495 U.S. at 342.

[27] While the Lab's Complaint contains allegations concerning market impact that were conspicuously absent from the First Amended Complaint,⁴ it fails to plead adequately the anti-competitive effect that is a necessary predicate to all antitrust violations. Moreover, even construing its allegations in favor of the LAB, the Complaint fails to allege antitrust, as opposed to individual, injury -- as is required in order to bring suit as a private attorney general under the Clayton Act.⁵

[28] [*241] The gravamen of the LAB's Sherman Act claim is that the Brokers engaged in a collusive scheme to offer each other "lowball" bids, thus affording the Brokers the opportunity to liquidate the Funds' holdings by "deeming" various sales to themselves at artificially low prices. According to the LAB, because these deemed sales

⁴In its First Amended Complaint, the LAB alleged only that "nationwide competition and trade were injured, unreasonably restrained, and eliminated in relevant markets under the Sherman Act," First Amend. Compl. P 214, and that the Brokers' acts "restrained competition within the State of New York." Id. 221.

⁵As the Ninth Circuit has observed, a plaintiff's failure to establish anticompetitive effect constitutes a failure to establish any violation of the antitrust laws whatsoever, and thus renders superfluous any discussion of antitrust standing or injury under section 4 of the Clayton Act:

We need not decide whether appellants have met the requirements for antitrust standing, because they have failed to establish any violation of the antitrust laws.

...

As Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp have observed:

HN16[]

When a court concludes that no violation has occurred, it has no occasion to consider [antitrust] standing . . . An increasing number of courts, unfortunately, deny standing when they really mean that no violation has occurred. In particular, the antitrust injury element of standing demands that the plaintiff's alleged injury result from the threat to competition that underlies the alleged violation. A court seeing no threat to competition in a rule-of-reason case may then deny that the plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury and dismiss the suit for lack of standing. Such a ruling would be erroneous, for the absence of any threat to competition means that no violation has occurred and that even suit by the government -- which enjoys automatic standing -- must be dismissed.

2 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 360f, at 202-03 (rev. ed. 1995) . . . The Sherman Act requires, at a minimum, that appellants prove that the PAC-10's actions had an anticompetitive effect. It is on this showing that appellants' claim fails, and accordingly we decide this case on the merits.

Hairston v. Pacific 10 Conference, 101 F.3d 1315, 1318 (9th Cir. 1996).

While the LAB's failure to adequately plead the anticompetitive effects of the Brokers' bidding conspiracy renders any discussion of antitrust injury under section 4 of the Clayton act unnecessary, the LAB's failure to plead antitrust injury is nevertheless noteworthy as an alternate basis for decision.

were at a price significantly below the actual value of the Funds' liquidated holdings, the Brokers were able to recover significant profits when they later resold those same securities in the secondary market. Had the initial liquidations occurred at market prices, the LAB contends, the Brokers would not have been able to recover those profits.

Manifold market injuries have now been alleged in the Complaint. The LAB asserts that, "having colluded to obtain the Funds' securities at below-market prices, on information and belief, the secondary traders employed by the Brokers were instructed to sell the securities as quickly as possible, so long as they realized, on a hedge adjusted basis, as least as much as they paid for them in the deemed sales." Compl. P 208. The LAB contends that, presented with the task of selling an unusually large volume of securities, DLJ [29] and the other Brokers entered into massive hedging transactions calculated to provide protection against losses due to interest rate movements -- provided that the Brokers sold their positions quickly. See Compl. PP 208, 215. The end result of this massive liquidation, the LAB claims, was damage to the markets for esoteric CMOs -- namely inverse IOs, inverse floaters, and super Pos -- as the flooding of the market crowded out market participants with long positions in those types of instruments, depressed prices below the instruments'" intrinsic recreation value,'" and resulted in the marking down of the securities held by other market participants. Compl. PP 209-11. As a result, so claims the LAB, margin calls were issued on other market participants and increased "haircuts" were demanded with respect to comparable instruments. See Compl. P 212.

According to the Complaint, the increased costs of capital resulting from the massive CMO sell-off also reduced the ability of highly leveraged firms to participate in the markets for inverse IOs, inverse floaters, and super POs. See Compl. P 212. The short-term hedging strategy employed by the Brokers, which involved short sales [30] of large amounts of United States Treasury and other governmental agency securities, also allegedly impacted interest rates and influenced the price of Treasury notes. See Compl. P 217. To illustrate its claims of tangible market impact, the LAB refers periodically in its Complaint to specific funds and market participants that it believes were injured during the market stampede of 1994. See Compl. PP 209, 212-13

The LAB's essential claim of injury derives from the liquidation of the Funds' own holdings through deemed sales. Even assuming that those deemed sales were the result of a rigged bidding process, and that the Funds therefore recovered less in return than was their due, however, the LAB has not satisfactorily alleged that these sales had any impact whatsoever on the relevant market for CMOs. Rather, as the Complaint indicates, it is the later resale of the instruments by the Brokers that is claimed to have caused market damage. It is the subsequent hedging by the Brokers, in order to protect themselves from falling CMO values, and that hedging's attendant impact on the market [242] for Treasury notes, that is claimed to have damaged the market. Indeed, it is the second [31] "liquidation" by the Brokers, not the initial liquidation in which the Funds' holdings were deemed sold to the Brokers, that is alleged to have caused market injury.

There is a critical disjunction, however, between the market injury asserted, the injury allegedly suffered by the Funds, and the Brokers' alleged anticompetitive conspiracy. According to the LAB, the Brokers were able to recoup greater profits by deeming sales to themselves at artificially low prices and then reselling the CMOs on the open market. If true, this would no doubt be of great consternation to the Funds and to their various investors. However, despite the LAB's transparent attempts to conflate the Brokers' deemed sales and subsequent resales, nothing in the Complaint indicates that the subsequent resale by the Brokers was anything other than normal, given the state of the market, or that the collusive bidding arrangement among the Brokers did anything to impact the market in which the securities were resold. Even assuming that the Brokers intended to provide each other with lowball bids for the nefarious purposes stated in the Complaint, the LAB has failed to adequately allege any adverse effect on competition [32] within the relevant market for CMOs. See K.M.B. Warehouse Dist., 61 F.3d at 130 ("Without some evidence of an adverse impact on competition in either the interbrand or intrabrand market, the fact that customers induce a seller to refrain from dealing with another potential customer in order to limit competition does not satisfy a plaintiff's initial burden under § 1. KMB's evidence of defendants' intent, even belief that what they were doing might be unlawful, is unavailing in the absence of evidence of anti-competitive effect.") (citations omitted); Capital Imaging Assocs., 996 F.2d at 547 ("In sum, Capital's position is simply that it has been harmed as an individual competitor. It has not shown that defendants' activities have had any adverse impact on price, quality, or output of medical services offered to consumers in the relevant market.") Sitkin Smelting & Ref. Co. v. FMC Corp., 575 F.2d 440, 448 (3d Cir. 1978) (finding that collusive scheme involving sham bids, even if reprehensible, did not constitute antitrust violation, as plaintiffs failed to maintain "their burden to show that the combination in any substantial way either [33] did or could affect interstate commerce by controlling market prices, imposing undue limitations on competitive conditions, or unreasonably restricting competitive opportunity."); Jarmatt Truck Leasing Co. v. Brooklyn Pie Co., Inc., 525 F. Supp. 749, 750 (E.D.N.Y. 1981) ("No violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act is possible absent proof of anticompetitive effect beyond the injury to plaintiffs, and facts must be pleaded from which effect can be inferred.")⁶

At most, the Complaint [34] establishes that the Brokers were able to post significant gains where they may otherwise have suffered losses when reselling the CMOs. However, the Complaint also indicates that the Brokers had an inherent interest in quickly liquidating the instruments with which they had become saddled.⁷ [36] The [*243] LAB's implicit assumption that the Brokers would have held onto the liquidated instruments for a longer period of time, were they unable to quickly dispose of them at a profit, is unrealistic and unconvincing. After all, according to the LAB's own pleadings the CMOs obtained from the Funds were highly volatile, even "toxic," and the market for those CMOs was declining in the face of interest rate increases.⁸ Consequently, there is nothing in the Complaint that suggests that the resale of the CMOs was anything other than ordinary, given the market into which those CMOs were being dumped and the Brokers' interest in relieving themselves as quickly as possible from the risks inherent in holding large quantities of quickly devaluing securities. While the markets were flooded with mortgage instruments at "fire sale" prices, see Compl. P 210, by no means does this alone indicate that the Brokers' [35] collusive conduct was the cause. Moreover, while the short-term hedging strategy employed by the Brokers may well have been less profitable had the Brokers not initially obtained the Funds' securities at artificially

⁶ Setting aside the absence of any plausibly-asserted causal connection between the deemed sales and the market injuries alleged, the LAB has failed to even allege that the Brokers' resales in the secondary market for CMOs were the driving force behind the general decline of CMO prices. The LAB certainly has not alleged that the Brokers were the only, or even the primary, entities unloading CMOs into the soft market in 1994, or that their secondary market sales even set the prices for other market participants.

⁷ The Complaint makes plain the secondary traders' concerns about taking on a large inventory of esoteric CMOs, which they expected to behave bullish and thus decline under then-existing market conditions. Compl. P 247. The Complaint also makes plain the concerns that the secondary traders could be expected to have about being charged with any losses from resales of those CMOs. Indeed, according to the LAB these very concerns gave the Brokers the motive to engage in a collusive bidding scheme. Compl. P 248. The LAB's opposition papers make this point as well. As the LAB states:

The Brokers argue that the Funds' theory makes no sense -- that even if the Brokers succeeded in obtaining the CMOs at below-market prices, they should have sold them for as much as they could earn. This argument ignores the Brokers' alleged desire to dispose of the CMOs quickly to reduce their exposure, which cut against any desire to hold out for the best resale price. The Complaint explains that the traders were afraid of assuming responsibility for a large volume of liquidated CMOs and that they had confidence in their hedging activity (as a protection against interest rate changes) only if they were able to dispose of the bulk of the acquired securities quickly.

(Pls.' Mem. Law Opp. Mots. Part. Dismiss at 23.) Because the Brokers would have this very same interest in a quick liquidation even had they obtained the CMOs at market prices, the LAB's contention that the flooding of the market for those instruments was a result of the Brokers' collusion is highly questionable.

⁸ To be sure, the LAB does not explicitly make this point as such. However, the Complaint provides all the necessary raw material. First, the Complaint alleges that interest rates rose in February and March of 1994, immediately preceding the liquidations that are the subject of this lawsuit, and that the Funds therefore experienced an erosion of value. Compl. PP 7, 139-40. Second, the Complaint alleges that the Funds were in possession of a large number of high-risk instruments sensitive to interest rate changes, and that Brokers sold the Funds inappropriately "bullish" instruments -- that could be expected to decrease in value when interest rates rise. Compl. PP 31-37, 43-44, 47, 50, 80-84, 112. Assuming the truth of the Complaint's allegations, one could hardly expect anyone -- let alone the Broker defendants -- to be enthused at the market prospects for bullish instruments during the interest rate environment of March 1994. The Complaint indicates that the Brokers were, in fact, concerned about the prospects of holding onto bullish securities that would "decline in value in the then-existing market conditions." Compl. P 247.

low prices, there is no indication that this strategy was used as a result of the Brokers' collusive conduct -- as opposed to the Brokers' desire to unload a large quantity of securities in a short period of time. Given the LAB's own explanation of the benefits of this hedging strategy, such hedging could be expected as short-term protection against interest rate fluctuations even had the Brokers obtained the Funds' instruments at non-collusive prices.

[37] While the Brokers might have recovered an untoward windfall upon resale, even one impossible without improper collusion, the LAB has not alleged that the collusion itself had any impact whatsoever on the secondary market for CMOs, or upon the price at which the Funds' CMOs were resold. Indeed, as with the liquidations of many other types of volatile securities, the massive dumping of CMOs onto the market by the Brokers and others might well have occurred regardless of the price at which the Brokers obtained the Funds' instruments -- if only to minimize what could be anticipated to be considerable losses.⁹ After all, assuming the validity of [*244] the LAB's own allegations, after the deemed sales of the Funds' holdings the Brokers were in possession of a significant number of securities known within industry circles as "nuclear waste."

[38] Furthermore, the injuries ostensibly suffered by the Funds do not "flow" from that which would render the Brokers' collusion illegal under the Sherman Act -- the impact of Broker resales upon the secondary market for CMOs, and of massive hedging upon the market for Treasury notes. See ARCO, 495 U.S. at 337 ("Respondent has not suffered 'antitrust injury,' since its losses do not flow from the aspects of vertical, maximum price fixing that render it illegal."); cf. Legal Economic Evaluations, Inc. v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 39 F.3d 951, 954 \(9th Cir. 1994\) ("The difficulty with Weil's case is that its injury does not match either the mischief about which it complains or the markets in which it occurred."). While the LAB now contends that the Brokers' massive dumping of CMOs onto the open market negatively affected the price of those CMOs, thereby injuring other investors who held those types of obligations, the Funds no longer had any stake whatsoever in the price at which their CMOs were trading once the Brokers conducted their initial liquidation of the Funds' holdings. Indeed, the Complaint does not indicate that the Funds were participants [39] at all in the secondary market for CMOs, once the Brokers had initiated margin calls and deemed sales of the Funds' holdings to themselves. See Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1508 \(9th Cir. 1997\) ("As a corollary to the requirement that 'the alleged injury be related to anti-competitive behavior,' we require that 'the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors.'") (quoting Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 \(9th Cir. 1985\)). The Complaint also does not reveal any injury suffered by the Funds themselves as a result of the alleged disruption of the market for Treasury bonds.

The LAB has characterized the bidding scheme alleged in its Complaint as one of collusive "monopsony," whereby unreasonable restraints on trade result from the obtaining of products at below-market prices.¹⁰ Of course, according to the Complaint the bidding scheme engaged in by the Brokers ultimately restricted the Funds' access to a real market for their own CMOs and, as alleged, caused the Funds harm when the Brokers deemed sales to themselves. It is also true that the Brokers' scheme purportedly constrained a seller's access to [40] potential

⁹ In fact, the Complaint itself notes that "Bear Stearns' secondary market traders, including Rubin, were concerned that if they acquired the Funds' portfolio at fair market value, they would be unable to liquidate such a large portfolio in a short time, without suffering trading losses that would be charged to their trading desk." Compl. P 154.

While the Brokers' desires to recover gains on resales of distressed CMOs may well have motivated them to engage in collusive bidding practices, this allegation of motive alone does not establish any causal link between that bidding and the market's response to the subsequent liquidation.

¹⁰ Monopsony is to the supply side of a market what monopoly is to the demand side. See Roger D. Blair & Jeffrey L. Harrison, Antitrust Policy and Monopsony, 76 Cornell L. Rev. 297, 306 \(1991\). As Professors Blair and Harrison have observed:

Monopsony power involves the ability of buyers to lower input prices below competitive levels, which requires the ability to restrict the quantity demanded of the input. In either case, the quantity that would be exchanged is less than the quantity exchanged under competitive conditions, and the result is allocatively inefficient. Ironically, the reduced input prices the monopsonist enjoys do not lead to reduced output prices. In fact, when the monopsonist has market power in its output market, the reduced input prices cause higher output prices.

purchasers -- thus allowing the colluding parties to set lower prices and recover more profit. However, the LAB cannot survive a motion to dismiss merely by talismanically labeling the Brokers' collusive behavior as "monopsonist." In this case, no plausible connection between that collusion and [*245] market injury has been alleged. Indeed, there is no allegation that the Brokers enjoyed any monopsony power whatsoever with respect to the secondary market for CMOs.

[41] The LAB's reliance upon Three Crown, 817 F. Supp. at 1033, is misplaced. In Three Crown, plaintiffs who had substantial "short" positions in two-year Treasury notes brought suit, alleging inter alia that the defendants in that action conspired in violation of the Sherman Act to "squeeze" the secondary and financing markets for those notes. The defendants in that case held significant "long" positions in two-year Treasury notes, and purportedly manipulated the supply and circulation of those notes to their benefit. See id. at 1037. Even a cursory glance at Three Crown reveals the marked differences between that case and the case at bar. In that case, the injuries allegedly suffered by plaintiffs and those inflicted upon the relevant market were one in the same, in that restrictions on the supply and circulation of Treasury notes forced investors to pay artificially inflated prices for those notes. The injuries suffered by the Three Crown plaintiffs had their genesis in the very same anticompetitive "squeeze" that allegedly injured other "short" investors. See id. at 1048 n.36. As explained above, however, in this case [42] there is a critical disjunction between the injuries suffered by the Funds and the injuries to the relevant market, and there is no satisfactory allegation whatsoever that the Brokers' collusion itself caused injuries to other investors or to the relevant market.¹¹

[43] Reid Brothers Logging Co. v. Ketchikan Pulp Co., 699 F.2d 1292 (9th Cir. 1983), is similarly inapposite. In Reid Brothers Logging, the defendants conspired to dominate all segments of the Alaskan timber industry, in part by refusing to compete as between themselves for timber sales -- thus allowing the defendants to recover a greater profit spread in spite of a chronic shortage of timber -- and by frustrating the efforts of others to enter the Alaskan timber market. See id. at 1297-98. While the anticompetitive scheme engaged in by the defendants in Reid Brothers Logging did involve collusive bidding practices, see id., this is where any similarity to the instant case ends. In that case, plaintiffs asserted, and the court found, direct anticompetitive effects within the relevant market. The bidding conspiracy, as well as the collusive approach to purchasing timber, frustrated competition and resulted in harm to the plaintiff -- a logging company rendered captive to the plaintiffs, and upon which an unlawful flat rate, multi-year logging contract was imposed due to defendants' illegal control of the Alaskan timber industry. See id. at 1300-01. [44] Unlike the instant action, there was no disjunction between the injuries suffered by the plaintiff and the injuries to the relevant market. Indeed, in that case the former flowed directly from the latter.

¹¹ The consent judgment and stipulation between Salomon Brothers and the United States arising out of the same basic set of facts as the Three Crown case, which the LAB has invoked for its own purposes, also reveals the marked differences between the Salomon "squeeze" and the instant case. The consent stipulation indicates that "the alleged conspiracy affected the price of the notes in the secondary market . . . and the interest rate paid by persons, such as Solomon, that lent the notes in exchange for cash." 57 Fed. Reg. 29,743, 29,744 (July 6, 1992). As the consent stipulation further states:

This scheme had the effect of limiting the supply of May two-year notes available in the secondary and financing markets, thereby ensuring that persons who had sold May two-year notes short in the when-issued market could obtain such notes only by purchasing them at artificially high and non-competitive prices in the secondary market or by borrowing them in exchange for cash at artificially low and non-competitive special rates in the financing market. This course of conduct continued for a period of time during which Salomon and its co-conspirators earned supracompetitive rates on transactions in the notes that are the subject of this action.

[*246] As the Honorable Richard J. Cardamone observed in *Capital Imaging Assocs., 996 F.2d at 537, "HN17"*⁴⁵ antitrust law is not intended to be as available as an over-the-counter cold remedy, because were its heavy power brought into play too readily it would not safeguard competition, but destroy it." Id. at 539. Given the relevant market asserted in the Complaint and the absence of any plausibly asserted connection between that market and the Brokers' collusive behavior, the LAB's Complaint appears to suffer from a philosophical infirmity that further amendment could not cure.

In this case, the LAB seeks redress of its private grievances with the Brokers under the aegis of the Sherman Act, despite the absence of any cognizable link between those grievances and the market injuries alleged. As was observed in Granite II, however, such grievances are more appropriately raised in the context of the LAB's contract claims against the Brokers. See 17 F. Supp. 2d at 298.⁴⁶ HN18⁴⁷ 'The cornerstone of [antitrust] law is competition. Congress'[s] intent in passing the Sherman Act was not to subject all business and commercial torts to the scrutiny of federal [antitrust] law.'" Teletronics Proprietary, Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 687 F. Supp. 832, 837 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (quoting Falstaff Brewing Co. v. Stroh Brewery Co., 628 F. Supp. 822, 826 (N.D. Cal. 1986)). Furthermore, "the Sherman Act is neither a lowest-responsible-bidder statute nor a panacea for all business affronts which seem to fit nowhere else." Scranton Constr. Co. v. Litton Indus. Leasing Corp., 494 F.2d 778, 783 (5th Cir. 1974), quoted in Sitkin Smelting & Ref., 575 F.2d at 448. Accordingly, Count VI of the Complaint is dismissed.

HN19⁴⁸ New York's antitrust law, the Donnelly Act, is "modeled on the Sherman Act and should be construed in light of federal precedent," Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Found., 890 F. Supp. 250, 254 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); see X.L.O. Concrete Corp. v. Rivergate Corp., 83 N.Y.2d 513, 518, 611 N.Y.S.2d 786, 789, 634 N.E.2d 158, 161 (1994). The LAB's Donnelly Act claim in Count VII of the [*246] Complaint is therefore dismissed as well.

III. The LAB Has Adequately Pleaded that the Brokers Breached Contracts With the Funds to Provide Accurate Marks (Count III)

The LAB's Complaint contains a claim for breach of contract that was not present in the First Amended Complaint, and therefore not addressed in Granite II. Undergirding this claim, according to the Complaint, are the Brokers' failures to abide by the terms of contracts requiring the provision of accurate marks to the Funds.

The LAB contends that on October 28, 1992, Askin, on behalf of both Granite Corp. and Granite Partners, sent letters (the "October letter(s)") to each of the Brokers asking them to agree that month-end "marks" -- a broker-dealer's statement of the current market value of a security -- would henceforth be timely and accurately provided. According to the Complaint, these marks were requested by ACM or its predecessor, to be indicated on "Month End Pricing" reports, and the Brokers were aware of the importance of those marks to the Funds in "evaluating and reporting on the overall portfolios of the Funds." Compl. P 69. Though the LAB's specific allegations concerning the Brokers' provision [*247] of inaccurate marks differ depending on the specific Brokers involved, the LAB's basic claim is that the Brokers supplied the Funds with marks rather different than the Brokers' actual valuations of the securities.

The Complaint alleges that on or about November 2, 1992, DLJ, through Richard Whiting, accepted the terms of the October letter in writing. As far as the other Brokers are concerned, however, the Complaint is more circumspect. Merrill Lynch and Bear Stearns are only alleged to have "communicated [their] . . . acceptance of its terms." Compl. P 73. Though Quartz was not formed as of October, 1992, the [*247] Complaint alleges that Quartz entered into the same agreement with the Brokers at or about the time of its formation. See Compl. P 74.

While the Complaint does not specifically incorporate by reference the October letters, or attach either copies of those letters or any written acceptance, copies of the letters have been submitted as exhibits to the Brokers' papers. (See de Leeuw Decl. Ex. 6; Balber Aff. Ex. 8; Pietrzak Aff. Ex. B.) Because the Complaint clearly identifies the October letters, and the LAB has obviously relied upon their terms in bringing suit, the [*248] Court will consider these exhibits on a 12(b)(6) motion. See Granite II, 17 F. Supp. 2d at 300.

The letters, which were sent by David Askin on Whitehead/Sterling Advisors, L.P. stationary, request that the Brokers agree to have mark sheets completed and returned by the close of business on the second business day following the month-end. The letters also state that the marks must be both timely and accurate, and that the marks are critical to the reporting of Fund performance. The letters request that the Brokers acknowledge their agreement with their terms by signing in a space provided.

In the event that a Broker does not agree to those terms, Askin writes, then the amount of business done with that firm will be significantly reduced.

The Brokers have raised a panoply of grounds for dismissal of this particular contract claim, asserting inter alia that the LAB does not have standing to raise the claim, that the LAB has not pleaded valid acceptance on the parts of Bear Stearns and Merrill Lynch, and that any contract is invalid for want of consideration. Both Merrill Lynch and Bear Stearns take the position that the October letters' own terms require a written [49] acceptance, and that even if this were not the case New York's statute of frauds would require one. DLJ has not attacked the validity of its acceptance, as the Complaint alleges the letter was signed by a DLJ representative.

A. The LAB's Standing

Since any standing infirmities would render the LAB's efforts to recover for breach of contract fruitless, this issue is addressed first.

The Brokers contend that because the October letter was sent by Askin on behalf of ACM's predecessor in advising the Funds, Whitehead/Sterling, the LAB does not have standing to enforce any binding agreement between the Brokers and the investment advisor. Furthermore, DLJ remonstrates that the existence of specific advisory agreements governing the relationships between the Funds and the advisor make clear that any agreement to provide marks would have been between the advisor and the Brokers alone.

HN20[↑] While under New York law only a party to a contract can typically bring suit to recover for its breach, one can certainly enforce a contract entered by an authorized agent. See Merrick v. New York Subways Adver. Co., 14 Misc. 2d 456, 459, 178 N.Y.S.2d 814, 818 (Sup. Ct. 1958) ("It [50] is elementary that one may sue upon a contract made for him by his agent.") (citing 2 Williston on Contracts 1038 P 352 (rev. ed. 1936)); 2A N.Y. Jur.2d, Agency §§ 103 et seq. (1998).

HN21[↑] Under New York law a third party is also allowed to enforce a contract if that party is an intended beneficiary of the contract. See Flickinger v. Harold C. Brown & Co., 947 F.2d 595, 600 (2d Cir. 1991). The general test for third-party beneficiary status, as adopted by New York from the Restatement (Second) of Contracts is as follows:

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed between promisor and promisee, a beneficiary of a promise is an intended beneficiary if recognition of a right to performance in the beneficiary is appropriate to effectuate the intention of the parties and either (a) the performance of the promise will satisfy an obligation of the promisee [*248] to pay money to the beneficiary; or (b) the circumstances indicate that the promisee intends to give the beneficiary the benefits of the promised performance.

Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 302 (1981); see Fourth Ocean Putnam Corp. v. Interstate Wrecking Co., 66 N.Y.2d 38, 44-45, 495 N.Y.S.2d 1, 5, 485 N.E.2d 208, 212 (1985) [51] (adopting Restatement position). HN22[↑] When determining the intentions of the contracting parties, the intention of the promisee is of primary importance. See Drake v. Drake, 89 A.D.2d 207, 209, 455 N.Y.S.2d 420, 422 (4th Dep't 1982). Where the obligation to perform to the third-party beneficiary is not expressly stated in the contract at issue, a court "may look to surrounding circumstances to determine whether the contracting parties intended to benefit a third party." United Int'l Holdings, Inc. v. The Wharf (Holdings) Ltd., 988 F. Supp. 367, 371 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (citations omitted); see Trans-Orient Marine Corp. v. Star Trading & Marine, Inc., 925 F.2d 566, 573 (2d Cir. 1991); Septembertide Publ'g, B.V. v. Stein & Day, Inc., 884 F.2d 675, 679 (2d Cir. 1989).

While the Complaint does not specifically refer to Whitehead/Sterling by name, it does state that Askin sent the October letters "on behalf of" Granite Corp. and Granite Partners, Compl. P 70, and that the "same contractual arrangement" was entered by Quartz at the time of its formation. The Complaint also states that, "from September 1991 to December 1992, Askin [52] was employed by the former investment advisor for Partners and Corp." Compl. P 18.

At this stage in the litigation, there is little reason to question the LAB's standing to seek enforcement of any contract formed pursuant to Askin's October 28, 1992 letters or any similar letters. The LAB's Complaint, while sparse, characterizes the contract as one between the Brokers and the Funds. The letters specifically indicate that the provision of marks is for the Funds' direct benefit, and their language could support the proposition that Askin was operating as an agent of the Funds -- which is not at all surprising given the Funds' reliance on Askin and the successive investment advisors for the selection and purchase of securities. The letter's language is particularly revealing in this regard:

As the Granite Funds continue to grow, so does our commitment to provide accurate and timely information to our investors. A critical component of this commitment is our ability to report our performance as soon after the end of each month as possible. This is where Bear Stearns comes in.

An important part of the service you provide the Granite Funds is the monthly marks on the bonds [53] in our portfolios. These marks must be timely as well as accurate....

Therefore, effective with the October 1992 month-end, we would like Bear Stearns to have our mark sheets completely filled-out and returned to us by the close of business on the second business day following the month-end

Our business operates in a very competitive marketplace, just as yours does. The failure to provide our clients with the highest quality service costs us customers, just as surely as does poor portfolio performance.... .

(de Leeuw Decl. Ex. 6.)

This language certainly does not obviate any possibility that Askin was writing on behalf of the Funds. The Brokers' protestations notwithstanding, the LAB's failure to explicitly plead its agency or third party beneficiary theories in its Complaint does not merit dismissal. As the Second Circuit observed in Flickinger, 947 F.2d at 595, "HN23" federal pleading is by statement of claim, not by legal theory." Id. at 600 (citations omitted). Since the LAB's breach of contract claims in connection with the provision of inaccurate marks appear to be dependent upon the October letters, and the very terms of those [54] letters [*249] indicate that Askin could have been writing on behalf of the Funds -- or at the very least for their direct benefit -- dismissal would not be appropriate at this juncture.¹² Whether or not Askin was actually acting as an agent for the Funds when he wrote the letter, or whether the Funds were intended third-party beneficiaries, are issues more appropriately decided at a later date.

The Brokers' contentions regarding the capacity in which Askin sent the October letters are rendered all the more suspect when one considers Granite II's holdings regarding the doctrine of in pari delicto. In Granite II it was held [55] that the Funds, acting through Askin and ACM, were active and voluntary participants in the securities purchases of which they now complain. See 17 F. Supp. 2d at 309. In reaching this conclusion favorable to the Broker defendants, the Court relied on ACM's role as agent of the Funds. Id. at 308. While the issues presented in Granite II were not the same as those presented by the LAB's current contract claims, Askin's or the investment advisor's agency to act on behalf of the Funds cannot merely be invoked by the Brokers for their benefit alone. This agency may well turn out to be a double-edged sword -- precluding recovery for certain claims under the doctrine of in pari delicto, even as it gives the Funds standing to assert claims based on contracts allegedly entered by Askin on their behalf.

¹² According to the DLJ defendants, while "Askin may have been the Funds' agent for some purposes," in sending the October letter he "acted not on behalf of the Funds, but to facilitate Whitehead/Sterling's performance of its duties to the Funds under the Investment Advisory Agreements." Resolution of this disputed agency issue, however, would not be appropriate on a motion to dismiss.

That the relationship between the Funds and its advisors were governed by other investment advisory agreements does not, as DLJ suggests in its papers,¹³ alter this result. DLJ's apparent position is that, because ACM or its predecessors were themselves solely responsible for preparing and reporting valuations of the Funds' securities, any agreement [56] concerning the provision of marks as valuations would necessarily be between the advisors and the Brokers alone. This overlooks, however, both the precise role that ACM and its predecessors played as the Funds' advisors and the appropriate level of scrutiny on a motion to dismiss. While the contractual relationship between the Funds and the advisors did give the investment advisor responsibility for valuing the Funds' holdings, and governed the respective rights as between advisor and advisee, this relationship could easily have made the advisor an agent of the Funds for their many other dealings with Brokers and investors. A contractual agreement to provide marks might have been entered into by the advisor on behalf of the Funds, just as the advisor could agree to purchase various securities on behalf of the Funds. Without further inquiry one cannot say. Simply because the subject matter of a contract concerned the domain of issues governed by the investment advisory agreements, however, does not mean that Askin could not also have written the October letters on behalf of the Funds.

[57] B. Alleged Invalidity of Oral Contracts Under Terms of October Letters and New York Statute of Frauds

Merrill Lynch and Bear Stearns have also expended considerable efforts to convince the Court that, either by the explicit terms of the October letters or under New York's statute of frauds, any contracts formed pursuant to those letters must be accepted in writing. The Complaint's [*250] failure to plead written acceptance or the LAB's failure to append a counter-signed copy of the letter, the Brokers press, merits dismissal. Because DLJ concedes that it signed the letter, it has not challenged the manner of its acceptance.

It is well-established that HN24 [↑] an offeror may, by the terms of its offer, dictate the manner of an offeree's acceptance. See Brand v. 15 West 72nd St. Owners Corp., 117 Misc. 2d 652, 655, 458 N.Y.S.2d 1011, 1013 \(Sup. Ct. 1983\); Gram v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 300 N.Y. 375, 382-83, 91 N.E.2d 307, 311 \(1950\). This includes requirements that the acceptance be communicated in writing. See Golden Dipt Co. v. Systems Eng'g & Mfg. Co., 465 F.2d 215, 216-17 \(7th Cir. 1972\); Antonucci v. Stevens Dodge, Inc., 73 Misc. 2d 173, 175-76, 340 N.Y.S.2d 979, 982-83 \(N.Y. Civ. Ct. 1973\). [58]

Furthermore, HN25 [↑] under New York law, the application of which does not appear to be disputed, neither contracts incapable of being performed within a year nor contracts for the sale of securities entered prior to October 10, 1997 may be entered orally. Under N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-701 (McKinney's 1989), which the Brokers have invoked, an agreement, promise, or undertaking must be subscribed in writing by the party to be charged if, "by its terms [it] is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof." For section 5-701 to apply the agreement's terms must truly be incapable of performance in less than one year. The parties' ability to terminate the agreement without breach in less than a year's time takes the agreement outside of the statute of frauds. See Rail Europe, Inc. v. Rail Pass Express, Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4183, No. 94 CIV. 1506(PKL), 1996 WL 157503, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 3, 1996).

Under former N.Y. U.C.C. § 8-319(a) (McKinney's 1990), which the Brokers have also invoked and was repealed effective October 10, 1997, see 1997 N.Y. Laws ch. 566, § 5, "[a] contract for the sale of securities is not enforceable by way of action or defense unless . . . there is [59] some writing signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought or by his authorized agent or broker sufficient to indicate that a contract has been made for sale of a stated quantity of described securities at a defined or stated price." While this writing requirement no longer exists, oral contracts or contract modifications entered into prior to October 10, 1997 are still governed by this provision. See N.Y. U.C.C. § 8-601\(b\); Goshorn v. Bonamie, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5059, No. 95-CIV-188 RSP/DNH, 1998 WL 166832, at *7 (N.D.N.Y. Apr. 8, 1998).

¹³ DLJ claims that "the LAB's claim that the Dealers were contractually obligated to provide valuations to the Funds is obviated by the contract between ACM and the Funds upon which the LAB premised its tortious interference claim in Count XI." (DLJ/Comerford Mem. Law. Supp. Mot. Part. Dismiss at 20-21.)

Because the LAB has alleged that any contracts formed pursuant to the October letters had as their consideration the purchase of securities, the Bear Stearns defendants have claimed that any oral acceptance is void under the U.C.C. provision operative at the time of the contract.

The LAB has demonstrated a certain amount of elasticity in fashioning its Complaint, especially when one compares its specific allegations concerning DLJ's written acceptance to its purposely vague allegations concerning the other Brokers' acceptance of the October letters. However, the LAB's failure to specifically plead written acceptance of the October letters' [60] terms does not currently merit dismissal of its contract claim as against Bear Stearns or Merrill Lynch, and extended discussion of New York law on this matter is better saved for another day.

The Brokers are certainly correct in observing that this Court has previously dismissed, pursuant to the statute of frauds, contract claims challenged under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), Fed. R. Civ. P. However, in those cases the complaint itself or the parties' papers left little question that the plaintiff was claiming the existence of a binding, oral contract. See, e.g., Keough v. Texaco, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1276, No. 97 Civ. 5981 LMM, 1999 WL 61836, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 10, 1999) (granting defendant's motion to dismiss contract claim based on statute of frauds, given that employment contract alleged was oral); [Huntington Dental & Med. Co. \[*251\] v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1526](#), No. 95 Civ. 10959 (JFK), 1998 WL 60954, at 1, 3-4 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 13, 1999) (finding contract claim explicitly premised upon breach of oral contract to be precluded, in part, by New York statute of frauds); Mui v. Union of Needletrades, Indus. & Textile Employees, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12783, No. 97 Civ. 7270(HB), 1998 WL 513052, at 6-7 (S.D. N.Y. Aug. 19, 1998) (finding affirmative defense under New York statute of frauds to be appropriately raised in Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, as plaintiff alleged breach of two oral commitments and no allegation was made that those commitments were reduced to writing); Wallach Marine Corp. v. Donzi Marine Corp., 675 F. Supp. 838, 840-41 \(S.D.N.Y. 1987\) (dismissing contract claim premised upon oral agreement under statute of frauds, despite complaint's ambiguity about contract's oral or written nature, because plaintiff's papers specified that agreement was oral); Paper Corp. v. Schoeller Technical Papers, Inc., 724 F. Supp. 110, 115-16 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\) (holding in part, where plaintiff appended to its complaint those documents it contended contained the contract's essential terms, that statute of frauds partially barred plaintiff's breach of contract claim). Here, the LAB is more circumspect in its pleadings and its papers, leaving it an open question whether or not the acceptance it asserts was written or oral. The LAB hypothesizes in its papers that additional discovery will perhaps reveal a written acceptance that it does not currently have within [62] its possession -- a claim rejected by the Brokers, who point to the extensive amount of discovery already conducted in this and related cases, as well as the LAB's presumed access to all correspondence sent to Askin or the Funds. Because written acceptance such as would satisfy the statute of frauds could exist without ever having been returned by the Brokers, the LAB counters, a signed, enforceable copy of the October letter may yet be found within the defendants' possession. See Rail Europe, 1996 WL 157503, at *4 n.4 ("HN26¹⁴ The Statute of Frauds does not mandate delivery, so it does not matter that defendant never returned the signed contract to plaintiff.") (citing Transit Advertisers, Inc. v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R.R., 194 F.2d 907, 910 \(2d Cir. 1952\)).

Because the Complaint leaves unclear whether Merrill Lynch's or Bear Stearns' acceptance was written or oral, and because the LAB's papers do not commit the LAB to the position that the contract was oral, dismissal would not be appropriate at this juncture. The statute of frauds, though at times cognizable on a motion to dismiss where there is no real dispute as to the manner of acceptance, [63] would not be appropriate grounds for dismissal in the instant case. See In re Marceca, 129 B.R. 371, 374 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1991\) ("If, within the framework of the complaint, evidence may be introduced, such as a written agreement upon which the claim is based, which will sustain a grant of relief to the plaintiff, the complaint is sufficient. . . . In the instant case, it cannot be concluded from the face of the complaint that the agreement upon which plaintiff . . . relies is not in writing, as required by the statute of frauds.") (citing Sams v. United Food & Commercial Workers Int'l Union, 866 F.2d 1380 \(11th Cir. 1989\)); ¹⁴ cf. [Held v. \[*252\] Kaufman, 91 N.Y.2d 425, 433, 671 N.Y.S.2d 429, 433, 694 N.E.2d 430 \(1998\)](#) (holding, despite plaintiff's submission of opposition affidavit clarifying that contract between plaintiff and defendant was in fact oral, that dismissal of contract-based claim for fraud in the inducement would not be appropriate under N.Y.C.P.L.R. 3211; explaining that "although plaintiff ultimately will have the burden to submit evidentiary facts taking the agreement outside the Statute of Frauds . . . we must credit the [64] assertions in plaintiff's surreply papers suggesting certain factual grounds which may defeat the Statute of Frauds defense."); Luckel v. Kolinsky, 160 A.D.2d 1172, 1173, 554 N.Y.S.2d 374, 375 (3d Dep't 1990) ("HN27↑") As to defendant's argument that the Statute of Frauds bars plaintiff's action, dismissal should not result for that reason under [N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3211] unless it can be said that no significant dispute exists as to the sufficiency of the memoranda that satisfies the Statute of Frauds.") (citations omitted).

¹⁴ Merrill Lynch and Bear Stearns have challenged the applicability of In re Marceca, given that a copy of a signed, written agreement was actually supplied in opposition papers by the plaintiff in that case. However, the In re Marceca court specifically

[65] At some juncture -- perhaps in the not-too-distant future -- the LAB may of course need to do much more than simply allege a "communication" of acceptance by Bear Stearns or Merrill Lynch. Even setting aside the Brokers' contentions regarding New York's statute of frauds, the very terms of the October letters appear to demand acceptance in writing.¹⁵ However, for the time being the LAB's contract claims against Merrill Lynch and Bear Stearns withstand this line of attack.

C. Adequacy of Consideration

HN28↑ Under New York law, a contract unsupported by consideration is generally invalid. If the promisor loses nothing, and the promisee acquires [66] nothing by an arrangement, then there is no valid consideration. See Kinley Corp. v. Ancira, 859 F. Supp. 652, 657 \(W.D.N.Y. 1994\) (citing Manufacturers Hanover Overseas Capital Corp. v. Southwire Co., 589 F. Supp. 214, 219 \(S.D.N.Y. 1984\)).

Sufficient consideration, however, may be provided either by a benefit to a promisor or a detriment to the promisee. See Weiner v. McGraw-Hill, Inc., 57 N.Y.2d 458, 464, 457 N.Y.S.2d 193, 196-97, 443 N.E.2d 441, 444 \(1982\). As the New York Court of Appeals explained in Weiner, "it is enough that something is promised, done, forborne, or suffered by the party to whom the promise is made as consideration for the promise made to him." Id. (quoting Hamer v. Sidway, 124 N.Y. 538, 545, 27 N.E. 256, 257 \(1891\)).

HN29↑ Under traditional principles of contract law, the parties to a contract are entitled to make their own bargain, "even if the consideration exchanged is grossly unequal or of dubious value." Apfel v. Prudential-Bache Sec. Inc., 81 N.Y.2d 470, 475, 600 N.Y.S.2d 433, 435, 616 N.E.2d 1095, 1097 \(1993\). "Far from consideration needing to be coextensive [67] or even proportionate, the value or measurability of the thing forborne or promised is not crucial so long as it is acceptable to the promisee." Weiner, 57 N.Y.2d at 464, 457 N.Y.S.2d at 197, 443 N.E.2d at 445. However, "n either a promise to do that which the promisor is already bound to do, nor the performance of an existing legal obligation constitutes valid consideration." Tierney v. Capricorn Investors, L.P., 189 A.D.2d 629, 631, 592 N.Y.S.2d 700, 703 (1st Dep't 1993); see FDIC v. Hyer, 66 A.D.2d 521, 529, 413 N.Y.S.2d 939, 944 (2d Dep't 1979) (same).

The Brokers contend that any agreements premised upon the October letters are void for want of consideration, [*253] as the language of those letters was merely precatory and neither a detriment nor a benefit of legal rejected that plaintiff's attempt to supplement the pleadings with the written agreement. See 129 B.R. at 374 ("Richman . . . proposes to prove that the agreement described in the Second Claim is reflected in a writing and forms the basis for his claim However, this court will not consider matters outside the complaint in the context of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\)."). The court also based its decision not on the written agreement, but on the conclusions that could be drawn from the face of the complaint. See id. ("Accordingly, apart from the fact that plaintiff, Richman, submitted a copy of the written agreement with his answering papers on this motion, the complaint sufficiently asserts a claim against the debtor and affords him an opportunity to present any objections, including the statute of frauds defense.").

¹⁵ The letter to Bear Stearns states: "Please acknowledge your receipt of and agreement with the terms of this letter by signing in the space provided below. You may return it to us either by mail or by fax." (de Leeuw Decl. Ex. 6.) At the bottom of the letter text appears a signature line with the caption "I am in agreement with the terms of this letter." Id.

consequence were ever exchanged. At most, the Brokers contend, the letters were non-binding requests for accurate marks -- and any "acceptances" non-binding statements of future intention.

To be sure, the October letters were not drafted in the clearest terms possible. The Brokers observe that Askin's caution that the amount of business done with the Brokers would be "reduced [68] significantly" if marks were not provided is problematic, because Askin would not necessarily be obligated to continue doing business with the Brokers on the Funds' behalf, agreement on the terms of the October letter notwithstanding. The Brokers also make much out of the letters' statement that Askin would "like" mark sheets to be provided, characterizing the letters merely as "requests" for gratuitous compliance.

There are a number of potential approaches to the complex contractual issues presented in this case, but the Court is unable to say that any contracts formed pursuant to the October letters were necessarily invalid for want of consideration.

One plausible approach towards the October letters, which reads any agreements formed pursuant to the letters in light of the preexisting relationships between the Funds and the Brokers, finds consideration for an agreement in the actual benefits received by the Brokers as a result of later transactions and purchases of securities. Included in these benefits were substantial payments to the Brokers, as well as the benefits flowing from the Funds' purchases of deal-driving tranches of securities. Under this analysis, the actual consideration [69] provided to the Brokers would be the same as that furnished under the pre-letter arrangements between the parties. While the Funds were always free to take their business elsewhere, and the Brokers were entitled to cease doing business with the Funds, transactions were to be governed by the terms of all agreements conditioning those transactions, including any customer or repo agreements.

A second approach to the October letters is to find consideration in the Funds' actual forbearance from reducing their business with the Brokers. While the Funds were of course free to take their business elsewhere, despite the terms of the October letters, their forbearance from doing so would certainly constitute a detriment.

Still another approach to the consideration issues raised by the Brokers -- though one not specifically mentioned by any of the parties to the instant litigation -- would be to find that consideration was not required at all, assuming that the October letters merely effected a modification of preexisting contracts between the Funds and the Brokers, and that the modification was in writing. HN30 Under New York law, a written, signed agreement to discharge or modify an existing [70] obligation is not rendered invalid because of the absence of consideration. See N.Y. Gen. Oblig. Law § 5-1103 (McKinney's 1989); Scientific Holding Co. v. Plessey Inc., 510 F.2d 15, 21 \(2d Cir. 1974\); Mega-Trends Int'l, Inc. v. Beeba's Creations, Inc., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7236, No. 93 CIV. 8227 \(JSM\), 1995 WL 322153, at *3 \(S.D.N.Y. May 26, 1995\); GG Managers, Inc. v. Fidata Trust Co. New York, 215 A.D.2d 241, 241-42, 626 N.Y.S.2d 488, 490 \(1st Dep't 1995\).

In its papers, Bear Stearns has specifically contended that because Bear Stearns' customer agreements with the Funds do not allow for modifications of the business relationship between the parties "absent a written instrument signed by an authorized representative of Bear Stearns," (de Leeuw Decl. Ex. 7), the LAB's failure to allege the existence of a written acceptance of the October letter requires dismissal. If, as Bear Stearns suggests however, the October letter could merely have modified the terms of the extant agreement(s) between Bear Stearns and the Funds, any acceptance in writing would then have brought the modifications within [*254] the ambit of section 5-1103. See Camrex Contractors \(Marine\) Ltd. v. Reliance Marine Applicators, Inc., 579 F. Supp. 1420, 1430 \(E.D.N.Y. 1984\). [71] While the absence of written modification might ultimately merit dismissal given the terms of underlying customer agreement(s), the existence of such a writing would redound to the LAB's benefit and render unnecessary any additional consideration.

The LAB has suggested that any agreements premised upon the October letters are analogous to the generic customer agreements commonly used to govern relations between brokers and their clients. Alternatively, the LAB has analogized any agreement to other forms of binding agreements premised upon relationships that are terminable at-will -- namely, at-will employment relationships where forbearance from either quitting or firing itself supplies the consideration for secondary contracts, such as contracts not to compete. These are useful, if imperfect, analogies.

Under most brokerage customer agreements, neither the customer nor the broker is obligated to transact any specific amount of business with the other. If the client comes to realize that its investment needs are better met by using another broker, client and broker typically part ways without any contractual cause of action arising. If that client happens to purchase a security through [72] that broker, however, there is little question but that the customer agreement is enforceable and that the transaction is governed by the terms of that agreement -- consideration having been provided both by the maintenance of a customer account and by the exchanges of rights, benefits, and obligations flowing from the specific transaction itself. This analogy is quite close to the first approach discussed above. The consideration conferred, given this approach, was emphatically not more purchases or an unreduced amount of purchases, but rather purchases simpliciter and the other exchanges of rights and obligations those purchases entailed.

The LAB'S comparison of the October letters to contracts formed attendant to at-will employment contracts is also a useful analogy, given the second approach to consideration stated above. In a number of cases, both within and without New York, courts have found that HN31[¹⁵] consideration for a contract may be supplied by actual forbearance from exercising one's rights to unilaterally cancel a contract terminable at will; even though there was no obligation to continue the at-will relationship in the first instance. See Taylor v. Blaylock & Partners, L.P., 240 A.D.2d 289, 290, 659 N.Y.S.2d 257, 259 [73] (1st Dep't 1997); Barger v. General Elec. Co., 599 F. Supp. 1154, 1161 \(W.D. Va. 1984\) ("An employee's continued service and his failure to exercise his power to terminate his employment is sufficient consideration for an additional promise by the employer which modifies the terms of the employment contract."). Forbearance, these decisions indicate, can constitute consideration, even where the forbearing party is not contractually obligated to refrain from exercising its rights. See Taylor, 240 A.D.2d at 291, 659 N.Y.S.2d at 259 ("Because plaintiff's employment was terminable at will, defendant can also be said to have given consideration by forgoing its right of termination under the contract (Hamer v. Sidway, 124 N.Y. 538, 27 N.E. 256 [forbearance from exercising a right constitutes consideration])."); Foley v. Pac Am Or Bearing, Inc., 105 A.D.2d 1120, 1120, 482 N.Y.S.2d 605, 605 (4th Dep't 1984) (finding alleged oral modification of contract enforceable "because it was supported by the consideration of defendant's forbearance in promising to employ plaintiff between 1978 and 1981") (citations omitted).

The Brokers have made much [74] of the fact that the October letters did not themselves obligate the Funds to do anything, or set a terminus for the provision of marks. However, the Brokers' emphasis on the absence of any requirement that the [255] Funds actually maintain their business with the Brokers overestimates the consideration actually required to form a valid contract. HN32[¹⁶] It is consideration that is required to form a contract under New York law, not rigorous reciprocity or mutuality. See Weiner, 57 N.Y.2d at 464, 457 N.Y.S.2d at 196, 443 N.E.2d at 444. Though any contracts formed pursuant to the October letters certainly did not demand that the Funds continue to transact business with the Brokers, the Complaint alleges that they did so. If the Funds or their advisor actually forbore reducing their purchases from the Brokers and increasing their business with other brokers as a result of agreements pursuant to the October letters, then consideration was adequate. While Merrill Lynch has made the point that any forbearance on the part of the Funds could not provide consideration for contracts between the Brokers and Whitehead/Sterling, and the DLJ defendants have stressed that the October letter "stands [75] alone, ancillary to no other arrangement," (DLJ Reply Mem. Supp. Mot. Part. Dismiss at 10), as explained earlier regarding standing it is entirely possible that Askin was functioning in his capacity as an agent of the Funds when he sent the October letters. Given this possibility, it would not be proper to view the October letters in a vacuum.

Moreover, the Complaint alleges that the Funds and the Brokers continued to transact business well after the October letters were sent. To the extent that the October letters could be read to merely add terms to the pre-existing relationships between the Funds and the Brokers, the consideration for any agreement would be supplied by post-letter transactions and the real benefits those transactions imparted to the brokers -- benefits that the Funds were not under any preexisting duty to provide. At the very least, one could read the October letters as giving rise to transaction-specific obligations, requiring the Brokers to supply accurate and updated marks for all securities purchased by the Funds subsequent to agreement on the letters' terms. It is worth mentioning at this juncture then-judge Cardozo's observation in Wood v. Lucy, Lady Duff-Gordon, 222 N.Y. 88, 118 N.E. 214 (1917), [76] that "[HN33¹⁶] a promise may be lacking, and yet the whole writing may be 'instinct with an obligation,' imperfectly expressed." Id. at 91, 118 N.E. at 214 (citations omitted).

Liebowitz v. Elsevier Science Ltd., 927 F. Supp. 688 (S.D.N.Y. 1996), upon which the Brokers rely, does not require a different result. In Liebowitz, a case involving several disputes between parties that had contracted to publish scientific journals, the plaintiffs alleged that one plaintiff had requested that the defendant prepare periodic status reports containing information about production schedules, manuscript flow, and page budgets, and that the defendant agreed to do so orally. See id. at 702 & n.24. These reports were not called for by an earlier contract governing the relationship between the parties. See id. at 703. Holding that the defendant's alleged agreement to provide status reports was not supported by any consideration whatsoever, the court observed that the agreement sought to impose a continuing obligation upon the defendant without any corresponding benefit to the plaintiff. See id.

Setting aside the Liebowitz court's failure [77] to explicitly mention that a bargained-for detriment to the promisee could also supply consideration, the facts of that case afford ample grounds for distinguishing that decision. While the fact that the Liebowitz case involved an agreement to provide status reports supplemental to the parties' earlier agreement makes it superficially similar to the case at bar, in which the Brokers are also alleged to have agreed to provide the Funds with supplemental information concerning marks, the case is not analogous. In that case, there was no claim that the plaintiffs engaged in any forbearance whatsoever based upon the defendant's agreement to provide status reports. Indeed, though it concerns a [*256] slightly different point, the Liebowitz court explicitly noted that the plaintiffs had not relied to their detriment upon the defendant's oral agreement to provide status reports.

Moreover, the pre-existing contractual relationship between the parties in Liebowitz was markedly different from that between the Brokers and the Funds in this case. In Liebowitz, the earlier contract between the parties had governed multiple aspects of an ongoing publishing relationship, rather than a series [78] of discrete transactions. This is quite different from the contractual arrangements at issue in the case at bar, where the Funds were at all times free to cease purchasing securities from the Brokers, but those transactions in which they were involved were to be governed by a particular set of contractual agreements.

Consequently, dismissal of this claim would not be appropriate at this time based upon inadequacy of consideration. Refusal to agree to the terms of Askin's October offer may not have eliminated all business relations between the Funds and resisting Brokers. It was within the Brokers' rights to gamble that business would not decline significantly, and to keep their original agreements with the Funds unaltered by any supplemental agreements. However, if the Brokers agreed to supply certain marks as part of their future relationship with the Funds, and the Funds either engaged in forbearance because of that agreement or participated in transactions conditioned by the letters' terms,¹⁶ consideration was supplied. The LAB's contract claims premised upon the October letters neither assert a promise to do that which the LAB was already bound to do, nor are they based [79] upon the performance of any preexisting legal obligation. Finally, to the extent that the Brokers agreed in writing to a modification of the Brokers' customer agreement(s), or to any other contracts governing the Broker-Fund relationships, consideration would not be required at all.

D. Miscellanea

The Brokers' other varied and sundry grounds for dismissal of Count III are rejected as well.

¹⁶ HN34¹⁶ As a general rule, even a contract unenforceable at its inception because of lack of consideration or mutuality "may nevertheless become valid and binding to the extent that it has been performed." Howard v. Mercury Record Corp., 178 F.2d 449, 453 (5th Cir. 1949) (citing Willard, Sutherland & Co. v. United States, 262 U.S. 489, 67 L. Ed. 1086, 43 S. Ct. 592 (1928)).

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *256 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 79

Bear Stearns contends that, even had a contract been formed pursuant to the October letter, Bear Stearns' failure to provide certain information required by that letter manifested Bear Stearns' termination of the contract. However, this line of [80] attack depends almost exclusively on monthly mark sheets, attached as exhibits to Bear Stearns' papers, that cannot be appropriately considered on a 12(b)(6) motion.

The DLJ defendants have alleged that the LAB's continued purchase of securities from DLJ, even though DLJ provided a second set of marks between October of 1992 and February of 1994, constituted a waiver of the Funds' rights to enforce any contract. However, as with the Bear Stearns defendants' contentions regarding termination, this waiver claim cannot be determined within the four corners of the Complaint or exhibits appropriately considered on a motion to dismiss, and would not be appropriate grounds for dismissal.

Additionally, that the October letters do not themselves contain an explicit time-frame for the Brokers' performance - other than a recitation that the letters shall be "effective October 1992" -- does not merit dismissal. The fact that the agreements alleged do not contain a specified time for performance does not constitute a form of indefiniteness that would warrant dismissal at this pleadings stage. See Held, 91 N.Y.2d at 432, 671 N.Y.S.2d at 433. [257] Moreover, the terms of a contract need [81] not be fixed with absolute certainty for a contract to have legal efficacy. See Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 33, cmt. a (1981) ("HN35[↑] The actions of the parties may show conclusively that they have intended to conclude a binding agreement, even though one or more terms are missing or are left to be agreed upon."). Certain terms of a contract may be supplied by the parties' prior course of dealings. See New Moon Shipping Co. v. Man B & W Diesel AG, 121 F.3d 24, 31 (2d Cir. 1997). The time-frame for performance may later be revealed by documents or papers not considered by the Court upon this motion to dismiss, or by interpretation of the October letters' terms in light of prior dealings among the parties. See Lee v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 552 F.2d 447, 453 \(2d Cir. 1977\) ("Professor Corbin has observed that a court should be slow to deny enforcement 'if it is convinced that the parties themselves meant to make a 'contract' Many a gap in terms can be filled, and should be, with a result that is consistent with what the parties said and that is more just to both of them than would be a refusal of enforcement.'") (quoting Corbin [82] on Contracts § 97, at 425-26).

The DLJ defendants' claims that the LAB fails to allege that DLJ actually breached any obligations created by the October letter are also rejected. DLJ has asserted that the LAB has only alleged that the LAB breached the October letter by superseding its initial month-end mark reports with revised reports containing different marks, and that nothing in the Complaint indicates that its initial month-end marks were accurate. Even if the revised marks were somehow inaccurate, DLJ contends, DLJ performed its obligations under the precise terms of the October letter. However, the Complaint alleges that DLJ actually "superseded" the marks provided in its initial month-end price reports with the revised and inaccurate marks, and that the revised marks were also transmitted on month-end price report forms. Compl. PP 125-26. The Complaint also states that DLJ confirmed the accuracy of the revised marks in response to Price Waterhouse's request that DLJ confirm the accuracy of its December 1992 and 1993 month-end marks. Compl. P 127. There is therefore no bright-line distinction to be made, on the face of the Complaint, between the revised marks and the marks [83] DLJ may have been obligated to provide pursuant to the October letter -- insofar as the LAB's contract claim against DLJ is concerned. DLJ strains excessively and unsuccessfully to parse the terms of the October letter, but the Complaint sufficiently alleges a breach on DLJ's part.

Given the above holdings, the Court need not reach the parties' disputes concerning "part performance." The Brokers' motions to dismiss the LAB's claim for breach of contract contained in Count III of the Complaint are denied.

IV. Count IV Against DLJ and Comerford Alleging Common Law Fraud is Dismissed

As was explained in [Granite II, 17 F. Supp. 2d at 286, HN36[↑]](#) there are five basic elements necessary to sustain a claim of fraud under New York law: (1) misrepresentation of a material fact; (2) the falsity of that misrepresentation; (3) scienter, or intent to defraud; (4) reasonable reliance on that representation; and (5) damage caused by such reliance. See May Dep't Stores Co. v. International Leasing Corp., 1 F.3d 138, 141 \(2d Cir. 1993\); Katara v. D.E. Jones Commodities, Inc., 835 F.2d 966, 970-71 \(2d Cir. 1987\); Red Ball Interior Demolition Corp. v.

Palmadessa, 874 F. Supp. 576, 584 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). [84] Additionally, a plaintiff must comply with the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b), Fed. R. Civ. P.

In Count XIII of its First Amended Complaint, the LAB alleged that the Brokers misrepresented certain securities, particularly inverse IOs, as bearish or only [*258] slightly bullish when, in fact, they were strongly bullish or their reaction to interest rate changes was impossible to predict. In reliance on the Brokers' misrepresentations, the LAB contended, the Funds bought securities that they would not otherwise have purchased, and they held onto securities that they would otherwise have sold. In Granite II, these fraud claims were dismissed, in part because the LAB had not adequately pleaded reasonable reliance. 17 F. Supp. 2d at 288-91.

Count V of the LAB's current Complaint specifically alleges that DLJ and Comerford provided erroneous marks to the Funds, "impliedly representing that the marks were accurate when DLJ and Comerford knew that the marks were inaccurate or recklessly disregarded whether they were accurate or inaccurate." Compl. P 232. The motive for this provision of inaccurate marks were DLJ and Comerford's desires that the Funds purchase volatile [85] "deal driving" tranches of DLJ's CMO offerings, Compl. PP 38, 233, the sale of which was a prerequisite to the sale of the remainder of the tranches. See Compl. P 5. According to the Complaint, the "Funds were unaware of the falsity of DLJ's and Comerford's statements [regarding the marks] and justifiably relied upon them in valuing their portfolios, in purchasing certain securities, and in not selling various inverse IOs and other securities." Compl. P 235. Conversely, both DLJ and Comerford are alleged to have been well aware "that the Funds relied on the CMO prices or 'marks' that the Brokers reported, so that the Funds and their investors could assess how the portfolios as a whole and particular CMOs were reacting to, and would react to, changing interest rates, as well as to determine if the Funds were conforming to their stated investment objectives." Compl. P 50.

More specifically, the LAB alleges that:

DLJ provided the Funds with marks that did not accurately reflect DLJ's internal valuation of the securities. In every month between October 1992 and February 1994, DLJ provided the Funds with two sets of marks. DLJ provided an initial month-end price report, but [86] DLJ also superseded that report with a revised report that contained inaccurate revised marks.

Compl. P 125. These revised marks are alleged by the LAB to have been inaccurate, and to have been prepared without any input whatsoever from DLJ's mortgage traders as to the value of the securities held by the Funds. Compl. P 128. In its Complaint, the LAB points to a number of occasions on which the revised marks provided by DLJ differed from DLJ's initial marks. See Compl. PP 129-35. According to the LAB, the inaccurate marks caused a myriad of problems for the Funds -- including "distorting their ability to understand their portfolios and determine whether the portfolios were being maintained in a manner consistent with their stated investment objectives," Compl. P 136, and "leading the Funds to retain [bullish] . . . securities in their portfolios when they otherwise would have sold them." Compl. P 137.

Despite the LAB's catch-all allegation that the Funds relied upon DLJ's statements regarding marks, however, the LAB never ventures to actually plead facts that underlie this reliance. The LAB's essential claim of misrepresentation revolves around DLJ's provision of erroneous [87] "revised" marks. However, the LAB alleges only on information and belief that "the Funds understood that DLJ's revised marks represented DLJ's actual revised valuations of the bonds . . . [and] reasonably and justifiably relied on these revised marks as representing DLJ's actual valuations of the bonds." Compl. P 126.

"HN37[↑] Fraud pleadings generally cannot be based on information and belief." Stern v. Leucadia Nat'l Corp., 844 F.2d 997, 1003 (2d Cir. 1988). The exception to this rule is that "fraud allegations may be so pleaded as to facts peculiarly within the opposing party's knowledge; even then, however, the allegations must be accompanied by [*259] a statement of facts upon which the belief is founded." Id.; see Campaniello Imports Ltd. v. Saporiti Italia S.p.A., 117 F.3d 655, 664 (2d Cir. 1997); see also Wexner v. First Manhattan Co., 902 F.2d 169, 172 (2d Cir. 1990) ("This exception to the general rule must not be mistaken for license to base claims of fraud on speculation and conclusory allegations. Where pleading is permitted on information and belief, a complaint must adduce specific facts supporting a strong inference of fraud [88] or it will not satisfy even a relaxed pleading standard.").")

The LAB's "information and belief" pleadings concerning the Funds' reliance upon DLJ's revised marks are insufficient. The Funds' reliance on the marks is not a matter "peculiarly" within the defendants' knowledge, as it must for a fraud pleading premised on "information and belief." See Campaniello Imports, 117 F.3d at 664. Indeed, the Funds themselves are better positioned than anyone else to know what their actual reliance was. The LAB's common law fraud claim against DLJ and Comerford could therefore be dismissed for failure to meet the specificity required by Rule 9\(b\) alone.

Even were the LAB's pleadings not found wanting under Rule 9\(b\), however, its allegations of reasonable reliance would be insufficient to state a claim under New York law. Though the LAB's claim in Count IV is distinct from Count XIII of the First Amended Complaint, dismissal is appropriate under a similar line of reasoning.

Under New York law, the LAB must establish actual, direct reliance upon the marks supplied by DLJ. See Golden Budha Corp. v. Canadian Land Co., 931 F.2d 196, 202 \(2d Cir. 1991\); [Belin v. Weissler, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10492, No. 97 Civ. 8787, 1998 WL 391114, \[*89\]](#) at *5 (S.D.N.Y. July 14, 1998); Turtur v. Rothschild Registry Int'l, Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11939, No. 92 Civ. 8710 \(RPP\), 1993 WL 338205, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 26, 1993). Once allegations of actual, direct reliance are adequately pleaded, however, the reliance inquiry does not stop. HN38 [↑] Under New York law, "the asserted reliance must be found to be justifiable under all the circumstances before a complaint can be found to state a cause of action in fraud." Danann Realty Corp. v. Harris, 5 N.Y.2d 317, 322, 157 N.E.2d 597, 599-600, 184 N.Y.S.2d 599, 603 \(1959\); see Lazard Freres & Co. v. Protective Life Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 1531, 1541 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 139 L. Ed. 2d 112, 118 S. Ct. 169 (1997); Palmadessa, 874 F. Supp. at 588.

Though the LAB has contended otherwise, whether a plaintiff has adequately pleaded justifiable reliance can be a proper subject for a motion to dismiss. See Brown v. E.F. Hutton Group, Inc., 991 F.2d 1020, 1032-33 \(2d Cir. 1993\); Independent Order of Foresters v. Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Inc., 919 F. Supp. 149, 154-55 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\).

HN39 [↑] In evaluating whether a plaintiff has adequately [90] alleged justifiable reliance, a court may consider, inter alia, the plaintiff's sophistication and expertise in finance, the existence of a fiduciary relationship, and whether the plaintiff initiated the transaction. See Brown, 991 F.2d at 1032. A party entering into a transaction has a duty to conduct an independent appraisal of the risk it is assuming and a duty to investigate the nature of its business transactions. See Abrahami v. UPC Constr. Co., 224 A.D.2d 231, 234, 638 N.Y.S.2d 11, 14 (1st Dep't 1996); see also Belin, 1998 WL 391114, at 5-8. Reasonable reliance may be found wanting where the plaintiff failed to conduct its own diligent research into the risks or benefits of a particular transaction. See Independent Order of Foresters, 919 F. Supp. at 154; McCoy v. Goldberg, 883 F. Supp. 927, 936 \(S.D.N.Y. 1995\). Sophisticated parties may well be under a duty to make affirmative efforts to protect themselves from misrepresentations, see Lazard Freres, 108 F.3d at 1543, and cannot be heard to complain when they fail to make diligent inquiries. See [Qatar Nat'l Navigation, \[*91\] & \[Transp. Co. I\\[*260\\] v. Citibank, N.A., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12852\]\(#\), No. 89 Civ. 464\(CSH\), 1998 WL 516117](#), at 24-25 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 20, 1998), aff'd, No. 98-9322 (2d Cir. June 29, 1999).

Just as Granite II held that no reasonable investor could rely solely on short-hand phrases like "bullish" or "bearish" in selecting complex CMOs and mortgage-backed securities, 17 F. Supp. 2d at 290, no reasonable investor could rely solely on month-end valuations or portfolio analyses made after the purchase without conducting some independent due diligence -- let alone valuations provided solely by DLJ. The LAB's allegation that the Funds' reliance on DLJ's marks was reasonable is insufficient in light of ACM's own obligations to research and evaluate the Funds' holdings. While the LAB now contends that the marks provided by DLJ to the Funds were somehow integral to ACM's own analysis, this would not itself relieve the Funds from their obligations to independently value their portfolios. The very purpose of the investment advisory agreements was for the Funds to have ACM evaluate, select, and monitor the Funds' holdings, in addition to the multiple other services ACM was supposed to provide. The [92] LAB nowhere contends that the Funds' receipt of DLJ's marks somehow satisfied the Funds' duties to conduct their own due diligence.

Even assuming that the marks DLJ provided were deliberately false, justifiable reliance has once again been insufficiently pleaded. Though the LAB has conveniently omitted various details of ACM and Askin's duties and breaches that were explicitly relied upon in Granite II,¹⁷ the Complaint itself still militates against any conclusion that the Funds' wholesale reliance on DLJ's marks was reasonable. As the Complaint states, it was the duty of Askin and ACM, among other things, "to construct portfolios of low-risk, high-quality securities for Corp. and Partners that were market neutral, so as to eliminate risks resulting from interest rate movements, and to construct a portfolio for Quartz that was market directional without exposing Quartz to excessive interest rate risk." Compl. P 77. ACM and Askin were also "responsible for continually monitoring each of the Funds' portfolios and for adjusting the portfolios by purchasing and selling appropriate securities." Compl. P 77. Despite this responsibility, the Complaint alleges that "ACM and Askin did [93] not possess or employ adequate analytic models, did not understand how certain CMOs, particularly inverse IOs, would react to changes in interest rates, and were unable to determine the effective duration of the Funds' portfolios." Compl. P 85. The Complaint also alleges that ACM "did not have the capacity to determine, at the time it committed to purchase, whether [forward-settling] . . . CMOs would be consistent with a market neutral (or even a directional) strategy, which made them inappropriate for the Funds' portfolios." Compl. P 108.

[94] Askin and ACM were not widows or orphans, and they cannot be held to the standard of an ordinary investor in terms of the type and amount of diligence that would be expected prior to making a purchase or investment. See Schlaffer Nance & Co. v. Estate of Andy Warhol, 119 F.3d 91, 98 (2d Cir. 1997) ("The parties involved [*261] in this litigation are not widows or orphans. HN41 [↑] 'Where sophisticated businessmen engaged in major transactions enjoy access to critical information but fail to take advantage of that access, New York courts are particularly disinclined to entertain claims of justifiable reliance.'") (quoting Grumman Allied Indus. v. Rohr Indus., Inc., 748 F.2d 729, 737 (2d Cir. 1984)). The Funds collectively possessed close to $ 400 million in assets in March 1994, see Compl. P 7, and invested in highly complex and high-risk securities. Indeed, the LAB alleges that the Funds invested in especially volatile or "toxic" CMO tranches, see Compl. P 14, and that the response of certain of those CMOs to interest rate fluctuations was difficult to predict. See Compl. P 36.

The very purpose of the investment advisory agreements between ACM and the [95] Funds was for the Funds to have Askin and ACM evaluate and monitor the Funds' holdings. "By virtue of its position as registered advisor to and manager of the Funds," ACM owed fiduciary and contractual duties to the funds to "make investments prudently, with due care, and in accordance with the Funds' stated investment objectives." Compl. P 76. These duties were breached by ACM. Instead of keeping their obligations to the Funds, Askin and ACM instead relied on Broker "recommendations, representations, valuations, and reports and they . . . exposed the Funds to near-complete "market" -- i.e., Broker -- control. Compl. P 79. Despite the LAB's internally inconsistent claim that Broker marks were somehow required to meet ACM's advisory obligations, see Compl. P 77, this reliance constituted a wholesale abdication of ACM's responsibilities -- ACM and Askin's "analytic weaknesses" notwithstanding. Compl. P 85.

Just as this lack of due diligence was held in Granite II to belie any representation that Askin's reliance on February marks or DLJ's September 1993 valuation was justifiable or reasonable, see 17 F. Supp. 2d at 290-91; this lack of due diligence belies [96] the reasonableness of any reliance that the Funds may have had on the accuracy of the marks supplied by DLJ. Try as the LAB might, it cannot transform wholesale breaches of duty by the Funds' investment advisor into a claim against a broker selling the Funds securities at arm's length. Thus, Count IV of the Complaint is dismissed.

¹⁷ For example, the Complaint omits any allegation that Askin and ACM "had committed themselves to making extensive use of proprietary computerized models to analyze CMOs by modeling cash flows, prepayment expectations, and yields across numerous interest rate scenarios." (Id. P 67.) The Complaint also omits other details of ACM's nonfeasance, a catalogue of which is unnecessary.

HN40 [↑] Because an amended pleading supersedes the original pleading, facts not incorporated in the amended pleading are generally considered functus officio. See Kelley v. Crosfield Catalysts, 135 F.3d 1202, 1204-05 (7th Cir. 1998); Barris v. Hamilton, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7225, No. 96 CIV. 9541(DAB), 1999 WL 311813, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. May 17, 1999). This being the case, the LAB's prior allegations have not been relied upon in deciding the instant motions to dismiss.

V. The LAB Has Not Adequately Alleged Common Law Fraud, Based on the Brokers' Sale of Securities to the Funds at Excessive Markups (Count V)

In Count V of the Complaint, the LAB has asserted a claim for common law fraud based on the Brokers' alleged sale of securities to the funds at excessive markups. This claim was not present in the First Amended Complaint, and was therefore not addressed in Granite II.

The gravamen of this particular claim is that the Brokers sold CMO securities to the Funds at prices well in excess of either the prices at which the Brokers had obtained those instruments or the values that the Brokers had themselves assigned to the securities. The LAB claims that the Brokers passed these markups along to the Funds without full disclosure, and that the dealer-customer relationship between the Funds and the Brokers gave [97] rise to an "implied representation that the prices they charge are reasonably related to the fair market prices of the securities offered for sale." Compl. P 240. The LAB contends that the Funds were themselves unable to discover the markups prior to 1998, as it was only then that the Funds had access to the true acquisition costs of the bonds sold to the funds. The LAB further contends that the Funds would not have purchased securities sold at such extensive markups had those markups been disclosed.

In support of its claim, the LAB has offered multiple examples of CMOs that it believes were sold to the Funds at excessive [*262] markups. DLJ is alleged to have sold at least fifteen CMOs at prices well above their fair market price, recouping markups ranging from 3.5% to 36.7%. Compl. P 115. Bear Stearns is alleged to have sold the Funds at least nine CMOs at excessive markups, ranging from 3.7% to 13.4%. Compl. P 116. Merrill Lynch is alleged to have sold at least two CMOs to the Funds at prices between 5.8% and 8.5% above their fair market value. All of the Brokers are claimed to have recovered significant profits as a result of these markups.

As the Brokers have correctly contended, Count [98] V of the Complaint is essentially a "shingle theory" claim. The claim is that, as brokers selling securities, the defendants impliedly represented that the prices they charged the Funds for mortgage-related securities bore some reasonable connection to the fair market value of those securities or the price at which the Brokers obtained the securities. When a broker hangs out her "shingle" and does business with the public, the argument goes, the broker implicitly represents that customers will be dealt with fairly and cannot exploit the customer's trust and ignorance for profits higher than those that might be realized from an informed customer. See In re Duker & Duker, 6 S.E.C. 386 (1939); Charles Hughes & Co. v. SEC, 139 F.2d 434, 437-38 (2d Cir. 1943); 8 Louis Loss & Joel Seligman, Securities Regulation 3776-77 (1991).

Over the past six decades, the shingle theory has provided a remedy against brokers under federal law -- first to Government regulators and, later, to injured customers bringing private actions. HN42 Under the shingle theory, a broker-dealer who sells a security without disclosing that the price at which he is selling is not reasonably [99] related to the current fair market price of the security violates the anti-fraud provisions of the federal securities laws -- namely section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, Rule 10b-5 promulgated thereunder, and section 17(a) of the Securities Act of 1933. See, e.g., Grandon v. Merrill Lynch & Co., 147 F.3d 184, 189-90, 192-93 (2d Cir. 1998); SEC v. First Jersey Secs., Inc., 101 F.3d 1450, 1469 (2d Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 139 L. Ed. 2d 21, 118 S. Ct. 57 (1997); Charles Hughes & Co., 139 F.2d at 437-38; Loss & Seligman, supra, at 3772-98. As the Second Circuit observed in Grandon, the Supreme Court "has a rich tradition of interpreting the antifraud provisions of the federal securities laws expansively." 147 F.3d at 192. The shingle theory is an outgrowth of that general tradition, and has been expanded over the years to cover excessive markups of a wide variety of securities:

We have held previously that sales of securities by broker-dealers carry an implied representation that the prices charged are reasonably related to the prices charged in an open and competitive market. First Jersey, 101 F.3d at 1469 [100] (citing Charles Hughes & Co., 139 F.2d at 437). Moreover, we have held that "a broker-dealer who charges customers retail prices that include an undisclosed, excessive markup violates § 17(a) and § 10(b) of the securities laws." First Jersey, 101 F.3d at 1469.

True, our decision in First Jersey was in the context of an SEC enforcement action regarding excessive markups on over-the-counter securities. The time has come, however, to extend the First Jersey principles to private actions arising out of excessive markups on municipal bonds.

147 F.3d at 193. A considerable amount of attention has been devoted by both the courts and regulators to evaluating the reasonableness of markups in the sale of securities, as appropriate markups may vary depending on the market, the position of the broker, and the types of securities involved. See generally 3C Harold S. Bloomenthal, Securities and Federal Corporate Law § 12.13 (1997) (discussing calculation of appropriate dealer markups and markdowns); Anthony W. Djinis & Lee A. Pickard, Fair Prices: Markups, [*263] Markdowns and Guidelines for Determining Current Market Price, 744 PLI/Corp 239 [101] (1991) (same); Grandon, 147 F.3d at 193 (holding that, in assessing whether markups on municipal bonds are excessive, "courts should begin with the factors set forth under MSRB [Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board] Rule G-30."); Banca Cremi v. Alex, Brown & Sons, Inc., 132 F.3d 1017, 1033 (4th Cir. 1997) ("Although each case requires an independent analysis for determining whether a given markup is reasonable, the Board of Governors of the NASD has determined that, as a general guideline, a five percent markup is reasonable.").

However, the LAB's excessive markup claim has not been brought pursuant to section 10(b), Rule 10b-5, or any other federal law or regulation, but rather is a common law claim alone. A claim under the federal securities laws was not brought, perhaps, as a result of the time limits articulated by the Supreme Court in Lampf, Pleva, Lipkind, Prupis & Petigrow v. Gilbertson, 501 U.S. 350, 115 L. Ed. 2d 321, 111 S. Ct. 2773 (1991) (holding that statute of limitations for section 10(b) claims is one year from date of discovery, but no longer than three years from the date of the alleged fraud). The LAB claims that New York law affords the Funds [102] relief for common law fraud, as New York recognizes that omissions as well as misrepresentations may give rise to a claim for fraud. Nevertheless, neither the parties' memoranda nor this Court's independent research have revealed any explicit New York authority supporting a common law fraud claim based upon the shingle theory, let alone a shingle theory claim for excessive broker markups.

It is true that HN43[^A] New York law allows recovery for frauds based upon omissions, conduct, or speech that are tantamount to false representations. See Banque Arabe et Internationale v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 57 F.3d 146, 153, 155 (2d Cir. 1995); Minpeco v. Conticommodity Servs., Inc., 552 F. Supp. 332, 336 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) (collecting cases). As the Second Circuit explained in Brass v. American Film Tech., 987 F.2d 142 (2d Cir. 1993):

New York recognizes a duty by a party to a business transaction to speak in three situations: first, where the party has made a partial or ambiguous statement, on the theory that once a party has undertaken to mention a relevant fact to the other party it cannot give only half of the truth; second, when the parties [103] stand in a fiduciary or confidential relationship with each other; and third, "where one party possesses superior knowledge, not readily available to the other, and knows that the other is acting on the basis of mistaken knowledge."

Id. at 150 (quoting Aaron Ferer & Sons Ltd. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A., 731 F.2d 112, 123 (2d Cir. 1984)) (citations omitted); see Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 155.

The LAB has not alleged that the Brokers made partial or ambiguous statements concerning markups, or that the Brokers gave a less than truthful answer to any Fund's questioning about the extent of markups, but rather that the Brokers made no statements about markups at all. Furthermore, the Brokers did not have discretionary authority over the Funds' holdings, and owed no fiduciary duties to the Funds under New York law such as would give rise to a duty of disclosure. HN44[^A] Under ordinary circumstances a broker owes no fiduciary duties to a purchaser of securities, see Perl v. Smith Barney Inc., 230 A.D.2d 664, 666, 646 N.Y.S.2d 678, 680 (1st Dep't 1996), except those duties necessarily attendant to the "narrow task of consummating [104] the transaction requested." Press v. Chemical Inv. Servs. Corp., 166 F.3d 529, 536 (2d Cir. 1999) (citations omitted). The fact that the Funds allege excessive markups does not change this basic analysis. Cf. Press, 166 F.3d at 536-37 (finding no claim for failure to disclose markups given nature of broker-customer relationship under New York [*264] law, as no case law applying New York's fiduciary requirements supports broad proposition that all markups must be disclosed).

The LAB has pressed that the Brokers' charging of excessive markups gave rise to an affirmative obligation to disclose, because the brokers were in possession of superior knowledge concerning the market value of the securities it was selling the Funds. This begs the question, however, as to the real representation(s) inferred under New York law when a broker sells a security. Under the Federal securities laws, the representation of reasonable pricing is inferred. However, HN45¹⁸ the shingle theory has not developed as a generic theory of fraud liability based upon omissions, but rather a specific theory of recovery under the federal securities laws.¹⁸ A review of the cases cited by the LAB [105] in support of its position reveals facts and circumstances rather dissimilar from those of the case at bar. See, e.g., Minpeco, 552 F. Supp. at 334-37 (brokers' failure to disclose fact that increase in global price of silver was result of broker defendants' own conspiracy to monopolize silver market could constitute fraud under New York law, where brokers were alleged to have actively induced plaintiff to enter into futures contracts for short sales of silver); Donovan v. Aeolian Co., 270 N.Y. 267, 272, 200 N.E. 815, 817 \(1936\) (placement of used piano for sale in piano manufacturer's showroom, without indicating it as such, could constitute fraud; acts of manufacturer and words of salesman "may be regarded as an affirmation that the piano was taken out of stock and unused.").

[106] The only two cases cited by the LAB that remotely support its position, Farley v. Baird, Patrick & Co., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12036, No. 90 Civ. 2168 (MBM), 1995 WL 498785 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 18, 1995), and Manela v. Garantia Banking Ltd., 5 F. Supp. 2d 165 \(S.D.N.Y. 1998\), did not specifically address New York's embrace of the shingle theory. In Farley, the plaintiff had brought both federal securities claims and state common law claims, in addition to a RICO claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962, based on allegations of overcharges for commissions on purchases of over-the-counter stock. Despite dueling motions for summary judgment, the Farley court held that summary judgment was not appropriate as to plaintiff's section 10(b), Rule 10b-5, and state law claims -- as there were significant questions remaining as to the actual extent of markups charged. See 1995 WL 498785, at *1 ("The threshold factual issue underlying both parties' motions is the extent of the markups . . . charged plaintiff for the PSI and Hybrilonics shares. Without dispositive findings on this issue, summary judgment is inappropriate because plaintiff's federal and state law [107] claims fall or stand on the extent of the markups."). [*265] However, the decision concerned state law claims that apparently paralleled timely federal claims, and never explicitly discussed New York law or the relief that New York common law affords litigants under the shingle theory of broker liability. Indeed, the decision contains no real discussion of state law at all.

¹⁸ As the Second Circuit implicitly recognized in Charles Hughes & Co., the shingle theory was emphatically the result of federal regulation of securities markets, and of the SEC's interpretation of the securities laws:

We need not stop here to decide, however, how far common-law fraud was shown. For the business of selling investment securities has been considered one peculiarly in need of regulation for the protection of the investor. . . .

...

The essential objective of securities legislation is to protect those who do [not] know market conditions from the overreachings of those who do. Such protection will mean little if it stops short of the point of ultimate consequence, namely, the price charged for the securities. Indeed, it is the purpose of all legislation for the prevention of fraud in the sale of securities to preclude the sale of 'securities which are in fact worthless, or worth substantially less than the asking price.' People v. Federated Radio Corp., 244 N.Y. 33, 40 154 N.E. 655, 658. If after several years of experience under this highly publicized legislation we should find that the public cannot rely upon a commission-licensed broker not to charge unsuspecting investors 25 per cent more than a market price easily ascertainable by insiders, we should leave such legislation little more than a snare and a delusion. We think the Commission has correctly interpreted its responsibilities to stop such abusive practices in the sale of securities.

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *265L¹ 999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 107

While the Manela court spent a much more significant amount of time discussing fraud under New York's common law, it too allowed a state fraud claim based on excessive markups to survive summary judgment alongside a timely federal claim based upon the same price inflation. 5 F. Supp. 2d at 179. Rejecting defendants' motion for summary judgment on the Rule 10b-5 claim, the Manela court indicated that plaintiff's common law fraud claims could survive summary judgment as well -- explaining that having rejected defendants' arguments "pertaining to the alleged above-market price sale . . . there [was] no reason to reach a different conclusion in the common law fraud context." Id. While this outcome lends some measure of support to the LAB's position, it can hardly be taken as an indication that the [\[108\]](#) shingle theory has become part of the fabric of New York's common law.

Moreover, that courts have commented that the basic elements of a common law fraud claim in New York are "essentially" or "largely" the same as those establishing a claim under section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5, see Manela, 5 F. Supp. 2d at 178-79; The Pits, Ltd. v. American Express Bank Int'l, 911 F. Supp. 710, 719 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\), does not mean that all fraud claims cognizable under the federal securities laws are also cognizable under New York law, or that all theories of recovery are available under New York's common law as exist under federal law. See Norman S. Poser, Broker-Dealer Law & Reg. § 3.01[D][2], at 3-21 (1997) ("Liability under Rule 10b-5 does not depend on whether the defendant's activity would support an action for common law fraud, but rather on whether the activity 'constitutes a misleading or deceptive practice in the special Rule 10b-5 sense of the word [fraud].'"') (quoting Messer v. E.F. Hutton & Co., 833 F.2d 909, 914 (11th Cir. 1987), amended on reh'g in part, 847 F.2d 673 \(1988\)); see also In re Motel 6 Sec. Litig., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3909, Nos. 93 Civ. 2183 (JFK), 93 Civ. 2866 (JFK), 1997 WL 154011, [\[109\]](#) at 5-6 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 2, 1997); Schultz v. Commercial Programming Unlimited Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19557, No. 91 CIV. 7924 \(LJF\), 1992 WL 396434, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 23, 1992). Indeed, as the LAB itself contends in its papers, in addition to the absence of any common law "in connection with" requirement akin to that required for Rule 10b-5 claims, true shingle theory claims under the federal securities laws may not even require proof of affirmative reliance. See Manela, 5 F. Supp. 2d at 176 n.102. Moreover, shingle theory claims under the federal securities laws do not require a plaintiff to demonstrate that the defendant Broker knew that the plaintiff was acting in reliance on mistaken information -- a showing that appears necessary under common law fraud claims based upon the withholding of "superior knowledge." See Banque Arabe, 57 F.3d at 155-56.¹⁹

[\[110\]](#) The shingle theory is a theory of liability that has its genesis in a complex and wide-ranging statutory scheme. The Federal securities laws place many obligations on Brokers and others involved in the sale or trading of securities that did not exist at common law, and the markets in which those securities are exchanged have been heavily regulated pursuant to those laws. The shingle theory itself had its origins not in private litigation, but rather in SEC actions. See In re Duker & Duker, 6 S.E.C. at 386; [\[*266\] In re Trost & Co., 12 S.E.C. 531 \(1942\)](#).

Despite the LAB's best efforts, the Funds cannot avoid the consequences of Lampf and/or their failures to assert claims under the federal securities laws merely by raising a state claim for fraud. Without any indication that the New York courts have ever embraced the shingle theory as part of New York's common law of fraud, this Court is chary to do so itself. Consequently, Count V of the Complaint is dismissed.

VI. The Brokers' Motions' to Dismiss Counts XI and XII Alleging Tortious Interference With Contracts Are Granted

In its Complaint, the LAB has reasserted claims of tortious interference [\[111\]](#) with contracts against the Brokers, based once again on the Brokers' interference with both investment advisory agreements between the Funds and ACM (Count XI) and Public Securities Association Master Repurchase Agreements ("PSA agreements") governing the liquidation of the Funds' securities (Count XII). Though these claims essentially mirror those tortious interference claims dismissed in Granite II, 17 F. Supp. 2d at 292-95, the LAB has both pared down these claims and supplemented its allegations.

¹⁹ To the extent that the LAB's fraud claim based on excessive markups would be dependent on such a showing, the Complaint's allegations concerning the Brokers' awareness of the Funds' reliance are deficient. Consequently, even were the Court to decide that a quasi-shingle theory claim is available under New York law, Count V of the LAB's Complaint would be dismissed.

While Count II of the LAB's First Amended Complaint alleged that Bear Stearns, DLJ, and Merrill Lynch interfered with investment advisory agreements between ACM and each of the Funds by recommending and selling to the Funds inappropriate securities, the LAB has augmented its claims in Count XI of the Complaint. The LAB still maintains that the Brokers interfered with the advisory agreements by recommending and selling inappropriate securities, but now adds that the Brokers' provision of incorrect monthly marks also interfered with those agreements. The Brokers, the LAB alleges, "knew by virtue of the October 28, 1992 Agreements and the Brokers' provision of monthly marks [112] that ACM was contractually required to report accurately the market value of the Funds' portfolios on a monthly basis." Compl. P 283. Because ACM was allegedly unable to properly advise the Funds without those marks -- which the LAB contends the Brokers were uniquely able to provide -- the LAB claims that the Brokers' failure to provide accurate marks constituted tortious interference with the investment advisory agreements.

Count XII remains essentially unchanged, insofar as the LAB's basic claim is concerned, with the only noteworthy alteration being that the LAB now only asserts this claim against Bear Stearns for its tortious interference with the Funds' agreements with Kidder.

In Granite II, the LAB's tortious interference claims were dismissed on the grounds that the First Amended Complaint had not adequately pleaded "but for" causation. 17 F. Supp. 2d at 292. Though the LAB's papers manifest profound disagreement with that decision, as well as more general disagreement with this Court's articulation of New York's law of tortious interference with contractual relations, see Mina Inv. Holdings Ltd. v. Lefkowitz, 184 F.R.D. 245, 1999 WL 25050, at 5-12 (S. [113] D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 1999), the LAB has failed once again to adequately plead "but for" causation. Because it would be unduly repetitive to venture down a path that has already been well-traveled, Counts XI and XII are dismissed for essentially the same reasons stated in Granite II.

As far as Count XI of the Complaint is concerned, the LAB's only new pleadings of moment are those concerning the Brokers' provision of inaccurate marks. The pleadings are deficient for the very same reasons that the recommendation and sale of inappropriate securities allegations were found deficient in Granite II. Setting aside the Complaint's failure to adequately and credibly allege that the provision of marks, [*267] or even monthly reportage of the Brokers' assessment of the Funds' market value, were contractual obligation of ACM to the Funds that were breached,²⁰ [115] and its wholesale failure to adequately allege intent,²¹ [116] the logic of Granite II would ²⁰ A prerequisite to any tortious interference claim by the LAB would, of course, be some actual breach of a contract. See Robins v. Max Mara, U.S.A., Inc., 923 F. Supp. 460, 468 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) ("HN46↑") 'In order for the plaintiff to have a cause of action for tortious interference of contract, it is axiomatic that there must be a breach of that contract by the other party.") (quoting Jack L. Inselman & Co. v. FNB Fin. Co., 41 N.Y.2d 1078, 1080, 396 N.Y.S.2d 347, 349, 364 N.E.2d 1119, 1120 (1977)). The LAB has failed to adequately allege that any contract between ACM and the Funds was actually breached by the Brokers' provision of inaccurate marks. A review of an investment advisory agreement between ACM and Quartz, appropriately considered given the LAB's reference to the advisory agreements in the Complaint and presumed access to such a foundational document, reveals no explicit requirement whatsoever that ACM or any other advisor provide the Funds with Broker marks.

Nowhere does the LAB indicate how the Brokers' provision of false marks would result in any real breach of the investment advisory agreements, or provide any contractual language that supports its assertions.

²¹ HN47↑ To maintain a claim for tortious interference with contracts, a plaintiff must also allege that the defendant intended to interfere with a contract. See G.K.A. Beverage Corp. v. Honickman, 55 F.3d 762, 768 (2d Cir. 1995); Gruntal & Co. v. San Diego Bancorp, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8583, No. 94 Civ. 5366 (DC), 1996 WL 343079, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 21, 1996). In their papers, the parties have jostled over whether or not a plaintiff must plead "exclusive malicious motivation" -- that the interference was for the sole purpose of harming the plaintiffs, rather than merely for the defendant's own economic gain. See Elliott Assocs., L.P. v. Republic of Panama, 975 F. Supp. 332, 341-42 (S.D.N.Y. 1997); Rapp Boxx, Inc. v. MTV, Inc., 226 A.D.2d 324, 325, 642 N.Y.S.2d 228, 228 (1st Dep't 1996); Benjamin Goldstein Prods., Ltd. v. Fish, 198 A.D.2d 137, 138, 603 N.Y.S.2d 849, 851 (1st Dep't 1993). Because the LAB's Complaint does not adequately allege any intent whatsoever, or even the Brokers' awareness of any contract requiring the provision of Broker marks, this issue need not be reached.

Conclusory allegations that the Brokers acted "knowingly, intentionally, purposefully, maliciously, and without regard for the rights and interests of the Funds," are not sufficient pleadings of intent. Compl. P 291. The LAB's vague assertion that "by virtue apply to the LAB's mark-dependent contentions as well. Granite II held that the LAB's own complaint established that ACM "was predisposed toward breaching its agreements with the Funds and would have done so independently of each of the Broker's [114] actions or participation." 17 F. Supp. 2d at 294. Though the LAB has artfully and conveniently trimmed various sections of its Complaint, including sections that were explicitly relied upon by this Court in rendering its earlier decision,²² it has done [*268] nothing that changes this outcome as to its tortious interference claims.

[117] The LAB's Complaint still alleges that "ACM and Askin repeatedly breached their fiduciary and contractual relations to the Funds to make investments with due care and in accordance with the Funds' stated investment objectives." Compl. P 79. As described in more detail with regard to the LAB's new common law fraud claim against DLJ and Comerford, the Complaint still establishes that ACM itself approached its investment advisory agreements with the Funds with abandon. See supra at 70-74.

While the LAB's earlier claim regarding purchases of inappropriate securities alone is distinct from its later, marks-supplemented claim, the LAB's own pleadings still indicate that ACM and Askin approached the investment advisory agreements with either carelessness or ineptitude, failing to exercise even the most rudimentary diligence in evaluating, selecting, or valuing the bonds which were purchased and held by the Funds. This being the case, it can hardly be said by the LAB that the defendant Brokers' failures to supply accurate marks was the "but for" cause of any breach of ACM's contractual duties to provide accurate valuations of the Funds' holdings. Valuation and evaluation of the esoteric [118] securities held by the Funds was, presumably, a complicated and difficult task that was entrusted to ACM precisely because it could do the job properly. In fact, as the LAB's own pleadings establish, ACM made no credible attempt whatsoever to evaluate the Funds' securities, did not "possess or employ adequate analytic models, did not understand how certain CMOs, particularly inverse IOs, would react to changes in interest rates, and were unable to determine the effective duration of the Funds' portfolios." Compl. P 85. Just as ACM's careless approach to selecting securities leads to the conclusion that it was predisposed towards breaching its obligations to the Funds by making inappropriate purchases from other broker-dealers, its lackluster approach to valuing the Funds' holdings leads to the conclusion that it was predisposed towards providing inaccurate or of their knowledge of ACM's status as a registered investment advisor, or otherwise, the Brokers knew or should have known that ACM was a party to investment advisory agreements with each of the Funds and knew or should have known of those agreements' terms" is also patently insufficient. Compl. P 282. Nowhere does the LAB point to any facts indicating awareness on the Brokers' part that the advisory agreement required ACM to obtain accurate Broker marks, let alone any language in those agreements that even demanded those marks. Further, the LAB's assertion that the Brokers knew of ACM's contractual obligation to provide marks to the Funds "by virtue of the October 28, 1992 Agreements," Compl. P 283, is hardly adequate given the specific language of the October 28, 1992 letters. Nowhere do the October letters ever state that ACM is contractually obligated to provide the Funds with Broker marks.

Consequently, even had the LAB successfully pleaded "but for" causation, its failure to adequately plead intent would merit dismissal.

²² Compare First Am. Compl. P 4 ("Bear Stearns, DLJ, and Merrill Lynch . . . were among the principal sellers of CMOs to the Funds"), with Compl. P 4 ("Bear Stearns, DLJ, and Merrill Lynch . . . sold CMOs to the Funds"). In Granite II, P 4 of the LAB's First Amended Complaint was specifically relied upon by this Court in ruling that the LAB's own pleadings negated any possibility of "but for" causation:

Despite the words "direct result" in the Complaint, the facts alleged negate the possibility that the Brokers' alleged actions were the "but for" cause for the alleged breaches of contract. After all, the LAB maintains that numerous dealers, including nonparties, were selling inappropriate securities to the Funds. (See Compl. P 4 (acknowledging that the Brokers were "among" the principal sellers of CMOs to the Funds).) Thus, according to the Complaint, even if ACM had not purchased CMOs from each of the Brokers, it would have breached its contractual obligations to the Funds by making purchases from other broker-dealers.

17 F. Supp. 2d at 292. Despite the LAB's careful pruning of its Complaint, it does not now allege that the Brokers were the only sellers of CMOs to the Funds.

58 F. Supp. 2d 228, *268L^A999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11523, 118

incomplete valuations of the Funds' holdings -- no matter what marks the Brokers may have provided. Indeed, any dependence that ACM might have had on broker marks alone might itself have constituted a breach of its obligations to provide the Funds with appropriate valuations, given the Complaint's own assertion that ACM and Askin [119] breached their fiduciary and contractual duties to the Funds by exposing the Funds to "near-complete 'market' -- i.e., Broker -- control." Compl. P 79.

Regarding Count XII even less discussion is necessary. In the First Amended Complaint the LAB alleged that Bear Stearns, Rubin, DLJ, and Merrill Lynch had all interfered with the PSA and other agreements between the Funds and each of the Brokers. The gravamen of the LAB's current claim, as with Count XII of the First Amended Complaint, is that the collusive bidding process engaged in by the Brokers interfered with PSA and other agreements governing liquidation of the Funds' portfolios. In Granite II, this claim was dismissed as against all of the Brokers, given that the LAB's own pleadings alleged collusive conduct on the part of all of the Brokers. Because each Broker was itself part of the alleged bidding conspiracy, Granite II held, the LAB could not simultaneously allege that "each Broker's conduct was the causal force behind the purported breaches of contract by the [*269] other broker-dealers." 17 F. Supp. 2d at 295.

The LAB's rehashing of its prior pleadings, albeit with some greater specificity, and revision [120] of Count XII to only assert a claim against Bear Stearns do not now allow it to succeed where it has previously failed. The Complaint still establishes that all of the Brokers, including both Bear Stearns and Kidder, were participants in a collusive bidding scheme. Compl. P 249. While the current limitation of the claim to Bear Stearns' interference with agreements between the Funds and Kidder makes the LAB's pleading infirmities less obvious than was the case with the First Amended Complaint, the LAB's inability to allege "but for" causation remains.

Because the LAB's own pleadings belie any assertion that any of the Brokers' conduct was the "but for" cause of any breaches of contract, whether they be investment advisory contracts between ACM and the Funds, agreements between Kidder and the Funds, or any other agreements, the tortious interference with contract claims in Counts XI and XII of the Complaint are dismissed. Since the LAB's allegations fail to state a claim, the Brokers' contentions that the LAB's tortious interference claims are barred by New York's three-year statute of limitations need not be addressed.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the [121] Brokers' motions for partial dismissal of the Complaint are granted in part and denied in part.

Specifically, the Brokers' motions to dismiss the LAB's claims for common law fraud (Counts IV and VI), tortious interference with contracts (Counts XI and XII), and violations of the Sherman and Donnelly Acts (Counts VI and VII, respectively), are hereby granted.

The Brokers' motions to dismiss the LAB's claim for breach of contract (Count III) are denied.

It is so ordered:

New York, N. Y.

July 26, 1999

ROBERT W. SWEET

U.S.D.J.

End of Document

Armstrong Surgical Ctr., Inc. v. Armstrong County Mem'l Hosp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

April 23, 1998, Argued ; July 27, 1999, Filed

No. 97-3440

Reporter

185 F.3d 154 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 17726 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,595

ARMSTRONG SURGICAL CENTER, INC., Appellant, v. ARMSTRONG COUNTY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL; ROGELIO BORJA; RICHARD BOSCO; ZAFAR CHOWDHRY; JEFFREY DAVID; FRANK DAVIE; EGBERT DEVRIES; PAUL L. FREDERICK; JOHN GARROTT; FRANK N. GENOVESE; IRVING KLEIN; DAVID H. KOHL; LEE H. KOSTER; JOHN MARTY; MICHAEL P. ONDICH; KARL R. SALTRICK; WILLIS SHOOK; ANTHONY SMALDINO; PETER SOTOS; JAE T. YANG

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied June 26, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 4347.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) On Appeal From The United States District Court For The Western District Of Pennsylvania. (D.C. Civil No. 96-01384). District Judge: Honorable Gustave Diamond.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

immunity, misrepresentations, Surgical, state action, boycott, parties, antitrust, outpatient, Sherman Act, anticompetitive, injuries, surgery, petitioning, defendants', ambulatory, conspiracy, antitrust liability, majority opinion, private party, circumstances, adjudicatory, alleged misrepresentation, operating room, surgery center, duplicate, arena, government action, partially, corrupt, doctrine of immunity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN1 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court reviews a district court's order dismissing the plaintiff's complaint de novo. In reviewing that order, the court employs the same standard the district court used, accepting as true all factual allegations contained in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn therefrom.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

185 F.3d 154, *154L999 U.S. App. LEXIS 17726, 1

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN2 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

To state a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must allege a contract, combination or conspiracy; a restraint of trade; and an effect on interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 prohibits both monopolies and attempts to monopolize. A claim under § 2 must allege (1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

A classic boycott involves concerted action with a purpose either to exclude a person or group from the market, or to accomplish some other anticompetitive object, or both. Such commercially motivated group boycotts, or concerted refusals to deal, generally are considered illegal per se under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. When a boycott's aim is to monopolize trade, it might also violate § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not apply to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the states as an act of government.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Antitrust liability cannot be predicated solely on petitioning to secure government action even where those efforts are intended to eliminate competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The immunity afforded to a private party under the Noerr doctrine is not unlimited. Where the challenged private conduct is only "sham" petitioning, i.e., where it is not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action as opposed to a valid effort to influence government action, Noerr immunity is not available. In essence, sham petitioning entails the use of the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials are protected from antitrust liability. The scope of this protection depends, however, on the source, context, and nature of the anticompetitive restraint at issue. Where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

HN9 Private Actions, State Regulation

Considerations of federalism require an interpretation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, that forecloses liability predicated on anticompetitive injuries that are inflicted by states acting as regulators. Liability for injuries caused by such state action is precluded even where it is alleged that a private party urging the action did so by bribery, deceit or other wrongful conduct that may have affected the decision making process. The remedy for such conduct rests with laws addressed to it and not with courts looking behind sovereign state action at the behest of antitrust plaintiffs. Federalism requires this result both with respect to state actors and with respect to private parties who have urged the state action.

Counsel: John L. Laubach, Jr., John P. Klee, Laubach & Fulton, Carnegie, PA. James G. Park (Argued), Pittsburgh, PA, Attorneys for Appellant.

Alan A. Garfinkel, Klett, Lieber, Rooney & Schorling, Pittsburgh, PA. Jules S. Henshell (Argued), Klett, Lieber, Rooney & Schorling, Harrisburg, PA, Attorneys for Appellee Armstrong County Memorial Hospital.

Wendelynne J. Newton (Argued), Sheila S. DiNardo, Buchanan Ingersoll Professional Corporation, Pittsburgh, PA, Attorneys for Appellees Rogelio Borja, Richard Bosco, Zafar Chowdhry, Jeffrey David, Frank Davie, Egbert Devries, Paul L. Frederick; John Garrott, Frank N. Genovese, Irving Klein, David H. Kohl, Lee H. Koster, John Marty, Michael P. Ondich, Karl R. Saltrick, Willis Shook, Anthony Smaldino, Peter Sotos and Jae T. Yang.

Judges: BEFORE: NYGAARD and STAPLETON, Circuit Judges and SCHWARTZ, * District Judge. SCHWARTZ, Senior District Judge, Dissenting. [2]

Opinion by: STAPLETON

Opinion

[*155] OPINION OF THE COURT

STAPLETON, Circuit Judge:

Appellant Armstrong Surgical Center, Inc. (the "Surgical Center") contends that Armstrong County Memorial Hospital and nineteen of its staff physicians (the "Hospital Defendants") conspired to prevent it from establishing an ambulatory surgery center, thereby restraining and monopolizing trade in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The District Court dismissed the complaint after concluding that the alleged conduct was immune from antitrust scrutiny. We will affirm.

I.

HN1 [↑] We review the District Court's order dismissing the Surgical Center's complaint de novo. See Jeremy H. v. Mount Lebanon Sch. Dist., 95 F.3d 272, 277 (3d Cir. 1996). In reviewing that order, we employ the same standard the District Court used, accepting as true all factual allegations contained in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn therefrom. See Schuylkill Energy Resources, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 411 n.2 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 977, 118 S. Ct. 435, 139 L. Ed. 2d 335 (1997).

II.

The Surgical Center [3] has plans to build a free-standing ambulatory surgery center in the city of Kittanning, Armstrong County, Pennsylvania. If constructed, that facility would provide outpatient surgical services, including both general surgery and various specialities. Currently, the Hospital is the only facility with operating rooms in Armstrong County, and the nineteen staff physician defendants perform the vast majority of surgeries in the county. Only one independent ambulatory surgery [*156] center operates in the four counties that border Armstrong County, and this center is approximately fifty miles from the Surgical Center's proposed site. If constructed, the Surgical Center's facility would compete directly with the Hospital and its staff physicians in the outpatient surgery market. Moreover, the Surgical Center alleges that it would offer outpatient surgical services at prices significantly lower than the Hospital's.

* Honorable Murray M. Schwartz, Senior Judge for the United States District Court for the District of Delaware, sitting by designation.

Under the Pennsylvania Health Care Facilities Act, anyone proposing to establish a new health care facility must first obtain a Certificate of Need ("CON") from Pennsylvania's Department of Health. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 35, § 448.701\(a\)\(2\). The Act seeks to ensure "the orderly [4] and economical distribution of health care resources to prevent needless duplication of services." Id. at § 448.102. The Department individually reviews CON applications in an extensive proceeding consisting of an investigation, an evaluation of submitted materials, and a public hearing. During this review, the Department considers various health planning issues, including the adequacy of existing health care providers and the need for additional services or facilities. See id. § 448.707. Interested parties, including health care providers who supply similar services in the area, may petition for public meetings or hearings and submit information to the Department on any CON application. See id. §§ 448.103, 448.704(b).

In March of 1991, the Surgical Center filed an application for a CON with the Department as required. Thereafter, according to the Surgical Center's complaint, the Hospital defendants, including fourteen physicians who originally supported the Surgical Center's project, entered into a conspiracy to subvert establishment of the new facility. The alleged conspiracy involved: (1) the physicians announcing that they would boycott the proposed outpatient center [5] and (2) the Hospital defendants submitting false and misleading information to the Department. Specifically, the Surgical Center alleges that the Hospital defendants informed the Department that its nineteen physicians would not use the Surgical Center facility in the hope that this information would convince the Department that the proposed facility could not meet the statutory requirements for a CON. In addition, the Surgical Center claims that the Hospital defendants sought to mislead the Department into believing that the Hospital intended to open its own outpatient center, which was then under construction, and that this facility would satisfy all of Armstrong County's outpatient surgery needs. The Hospital's partially constructed facility was designed to provide alternative space for outpatient surgeries then conducted in three of the Hospital's six mixed-use operating rooms. According to the Surgical Center, however, the Hospital defendants knew that the construction of the Hospital's facility had been stopped with only the shell of the building completed and that the Hospital had made no commitment to resume construction. Despite this knowledge, it is alleged that the Hospital [6] defendants falsely represented to the Department that its new center was either in use or very near completion.

The Department denied the Surgical Center's CON application. The Surgical Center appealed that decision to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania State Health Facility Hearing Board, which conducted its own hearing and received additional evidence.¹ The Board affirmed the Department's decision after finding that (1) the Surgical Center's facility would result in needless duplication of existing facilities and health care services, and (2) the Surgical Center would not be economically viable [*157] because the nineteen Hospital surgeons who performed ninety percent of Armstrong County's surgeries would not use the Surgical Center facility. According to the Board, "the most damaging evidence [against the Surgical Center's application] is that the number of physicians who might have been expected to support the facility decreased significantly after the Applicant had submitted its projections." The Surgical Center appealed the Board's decision to the Commonwealth Court of Pennsylvania, which affirmed the Board's decision.

[7] The Surgical Center filed this antitrust action seeking treble damages for, inter alia, denial of the CON, lost value of the CON and the proposed outpatient center, and lost profits. It contends that the Hospital defendants' conspiracy caused the Department to deny its CON application. The District Court dismissed the Surgical Center's suit for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), holding that the Hospital defendants' conduct was immune from antitrust scrutiny.

III.

¹ The Act of Feb. 23, 1996, P.L. 27, 1996 Pa. Laws 10, § 9(a) (repealing Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 35, §§ 448.501-448.507), has since eliminated the Health Facility Hearing Board and transferred its review functions to the Health Care Policy Board. This change does not affect our review of the Surgical Center's appeal.

We begin by considering the Surgical Center's claim that the Hospital defendants conspired to boycott its outpatient center, thereby violating sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. HN2[⁸] To state a claim under section 1, a plaintiff must allege "a contract, combination or conspiracy; a restraint of trade; and an effect on interstate commerce." Fuentes v. South Hills Cardiology, 946 F.2d 196, 201 (3d Cir. 1991). HN3[⁹] Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits both monopolies and attempts to monopolize. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. A claim under section 2 must allege "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct [8] with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-91, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993); see also Schuylkill Energy Resources, 113 F.3d at 413.

"HN4[¹⁰] A classic boycott involves concerted action with a purpose either to exclude a person or group from the market, or to accomplish some other anticompetitive object, or both." Fuentes, 946 F.2d at 202 (internal quotes omitted); see also St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Barry, 438 U.S. 531, 541, 98 S. Ct. 2923, 2929-30, 57 L. Ed. 2d 932 (1978). Such commercially motivated group boycotts, or concerted refusals to deal, generally are considered illegal per se under section 1. See F.T.C. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 431-32, 110 S. Ct. 768, 779-80, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990); Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 818 (3d Cir. 1984). When a boycott's aim is to monopolize trade, it might also violate section 2. See Retina Associates v. Southern Baptist Hosp. of Fla., Inc., 105 F.3d 1376, 1384 (11th Cir. 1997). [9]

The Hospital defendants do not deny that the complaint alleges a threat of a boycott that might under other circumstances constitute an antitrust violation. They insist, however, that the complaint alleges facts establishing that they are immune from antitrust liability. Specifically, they contend that their activities are insulated from antitrust scrutiny because their allegedly wrongful conduct occurred in the context of supplying information to the Pennsylvania Department of Health during the Surgical Center's CON application process and because the injuries alleged resulted solely from the Department's denial of the CON.

In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943), an agricultural producer challenged a marketing program adopted by California's Director of Agriculture as invalid under the Sherman Act. The program served to restrict competition among growers and maintain prices in commodity distribution. "Relying on principles of federalism and state sovereignty, [the Supreme Court] held that HN5[¹¹] the Sherman Act did not apply to anticompetitive [*158] restraints imposed by the States 'as an act of government.' " City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991). [10]

In Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965), the Supreme Court held that HN6[¹²] antitrust liability cannot be predicated solely on petitioning to secure government action even where those efforts are intended to eliminate competition. As the Court explained in Noerr, "the right of the people to inform their representatives in government of their desires with respect to the passage or enforcement of laws cannot properly be made to depend on their interest in doing so." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 139.

The Parker doctrine and the Noerr-Pennington doctrine have been interpreted as complementing each other to protect the two related but distinct principles upon which they are founded. As the Supreme Court has more recently observed:

Parker and Noerr are complementary expressions of the principle that the antitrust laws regulate business, not politics; the former decision protects the States' acts of governing, and the latter the citizens' participation [11] in government.

Omni, 499 U.S. at 383.

As the Surgical Center emphasizes, however, HN7[¹³] the immunity afforded to a private party under Noerr is not unlimited. Where the challenged private conduct is only "sham" petitioning -- i.e., where it "is not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action as opposed to a valid effort to influence government action" -- Noerr immunity is not available. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. 508 U.S. 49, 123 L.

Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993) ("PRE"). In essence, sham petitioning entails "the use of the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon." PRE, 508 U.S. at 61 (emphasis added). Accordingly, the sham petitioning exception does not apply in a case like the one before us where the plaintiff has not alleged that the petitioning conduct was for any purpose other than obtaining favorable government action.²

[12] [*159] It is also true that a private party can be held liable even for bona-fide petitioning conduct where that conduct has caused direct antitrust injury in the market place. F.T.C. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n., 493 U.S. 411, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 (1990). In Trial Lawyers, for example, the public defenders of the District of Columbia engaged in a concerted refusal to represent indigent defendants in order to pressure the District into raising the hourly rate paid. The Court held that the defendants could be held liable under the Sherman Act for injuries that resulted directly from the boycott, even though the boycott was intended to secure government action.

The limitation on Noerr immunity recognized in Trial Lawyers is inapplicable, however, to a case where the sole antitrust injury is caused directly by the government action that the private defendant has helped to secure. Thus, even where the same petitioning conduct might give rise to antitrust liability for injury directly caused to a competitor in the marketplace, if relief is sought solely for injury as to which the state would enjoy immunity under Parker, the private [13] petitioner also enjoys immunity. As the Supreme Court explained in Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc.:

HN8 [↑]

Concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials are protected from antitrust liability under the doctrine established by [Noerr; Pennington, and California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking

² Plaintiff's allegations that both the threatened boycott and the claimed misrepresentations were intended to secure denial of the CON distinguish the situation before us from cases like Cheminor Drugs, Ltd. v. Ethyl Corp., 168 F.3d 119 (3d Cir. 1999), that deal with the "sham" exception to the Noerr doctrine. In Cheminor, the defendant, Ethyl, had petitioned the International Trade Commission and the Department of Commerce, alleging that Cheminor was dumping bulk ibuprofen on the U.S. market and seeking the imposition of extra duties to offset the alleged subsidies that enabled it to do so. Although Cheminor withdrew from the U.S. market prior to a final decision on Ethyl's petition, it alleged injuries resulting from the petition and brought an antitrust suit against Ethyl. In response to Ethyl's reliance on Noerr immunity, Cheminor asserted that the petition was a "sham" and Noerr immunity thus was unavailable. We analyzed and rejected Cheminor's argument under the teachings of PRE.

PRE holds that Noerr immunity is lost when the petition is a "sham," i.e., "is not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action." PRE, 508 U.S. at 58. As we noted in Cheminor, PRE further holds that determining whether a petition is a sham requires a two-step process. First, the Court determines whether the petition is "objectively baseless;" if not, the petition is not a sham without regard to the subjective intent of the petitioner. Second, if the petition is objectively baseless (and only if it is objectively baseless), the Court is to look to the petitioner's "subjective motivation" and determine "whether the baseless [petition] conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetition weapon." 508 U.S. at 60-61 (emphasis in original) (quoting Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144, and Omni, 499 U.S. at 380).

Cheminor holds that where the petitioning effort allegedly involves misrepresentations, the Court, at the first step, must "determine whether [the] petition was objectively baseless under[PRE] without regard to those facts that the [plaintiff] alleges [the petitioner] misrepresented." Cheminor, 168 F.3d at 123 (emphasis in original). Such a determination is unnecessary here, however, because the plaintiff affirmatively alleges that defendants' purpose was to secure the outcome of the process -- denial of the CON. Thus, even if defendants' opposition to the CON were found to be objectively baseless (a conclusion that could not be reached on this record), defendants would pass the second, "subjective" test and the sham exception to Noerr immunity would be inapplicable here.

While Cheminor focuses on the sham exception to Noerr immunity, it also rejects Cheminor's more general argument that "Noerr-Pennington immunity does not apply at all to petitions containing misrepresentations." Id. To that extent, it supports the conclusion reached below with respect to the misrepresentation claim.

Unlimited]. The scope of this protection depends, however, on the source, context, and nature of the anticompetitive restraint at issue. "Where a restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action," those urging the governmental action enjoy absolute immunity from antitrust liability for the anticompetitive restraint.

486 U.S. 492, 499, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 \(1987\) (citations omitted) (quoting Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136).

We applied this principle in Mass. School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. American Bar Assoc., 107 F.3d 1026 \(1997\) ("MSL"). There, the plaintiff, an unaccredited law school, complained of injuries resulting from the fact that, without ABA accreditation, the school's graduates were refused admittance to most states' [\[14\]](#) bar examinations. We identified the critical issue as "whether state or private conduct caused the injury MSL alleges it suffered." Id. at 1035. Looking to the source of the restraint-causing injury, we found that because "every state retains the final authority to set all the bar admission rules," any injury the plaintiff suffered "is the result of state action and thus immune." Id. at 1035-36.

This reasoning was similarly applied in Sandy River Nursing Care v. Aetna Casualty, 985 F.2d 1138, 1147 \(1st Cir. 1993\), where the defendant insurers allegedly employed a boycott in an effort to force the legislature to enact legislation permitting rate increases. Because all the plaintiff's claimed injuries were associated with increased rates charged by the defendants after the legislature removed the rate limits, the court concluded that "[plaintiff's [\[*160\]](#) injuries] must be viewed as a product of state action" and that the defendants were, accordingly, immune from liability.

Here, looking to the source of the complained of injuries, we find that all of the Surgical Center's alleged injuries arise solely from the denial of the CON: the denial [\[15\]](#) of the ability to operate the proposed facility; the loss of the CON's value, the value of the facility, and the value of the operation's proceeds; the delay in securing the CON; and "other related losses." Each of the injuries the plaintiff claims is a direct result of the Department's decision to deny the plaintiff's application for a CON.³

In sum, where, as here, all of the plaintiff's alleged injuries result from state action, antitrust liability cannot be imposed on a private party who induced the state action by means of concerted anticompetitive activity. It follows that the complaint fails to [\[16\]](#) state a boycott claim upon which relief can be granted. See Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136; Parker, 317 U.S. at 352.

IV.

The Surgical Center's second claim is that the Hospital defendants, as a part of their conspiracy, misled the Department, the Board, and the Commonwealth Court into believing that the Hospital's partially constructed facility would soon open and meet the needs of the relevant market when the Hospital defendants knew that the facility would not be completed. The resulting injury, it is said, was the denial of the Surgical Center's application for a CON. The Center would have us deny antitrust immunity to the Hospital defendants on the grounds that they successfully opposed the issuance of a CON using information known to be false.

Although the Supreme Court suggested in California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 512-13, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\), that petitioning activity involving knowingly false information submitted to an adjudicative tribunal might not enjoy antitrust immunity, the Court has never so held. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 61 n.6 (suggesting that the issues [\[17\]](#) of whether there is a misrepresentation exception to Noerr and, if so, the extent thereof, remain open). Moreover, since California Motor, the Supreme Court has decided a case that casts doubt on whether such an exception exists under any circumstances and dictates that, in the circumstances of this case, we honor the Hospital defendants' claim to immunity.

³ While plaintiff also claims "increased costs, legal and otherwise, in pursuing Plaintiff's application for a CON," the referenced costs apparently relate to the appeal plaintiff prosecuted from the Board's decision. Plaintiff does not contend that it incurred costs at the Board level in excess of the cost it would have incurred had the threat of a boycott (or the alleged misrepresentations) not been made.

In Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991), Columbia Outdoor Advertising, Inc. ("COA") controlled 95 percent of the billboard rental business in Columbia, South Carolina. According to respondent Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc. ("Omni"), a newcomer to the market, COA and city officials conspired to restrain competition in the market through adoption of a zoning ordinance limiting the size, spacing, and location of billboards in the city. Omni filed suit against the city and COA alleging a violation of the Sherman Act. A jury found the existence of a conspiracy between the city and COA, and both were held liable for Omni's injuries despite their insistence that they were entitled to antitrust immunity under Parker and Noerr, respectively.

The [18] Court first concluded that Omni's alleged injury was the result of state action. South Carolina had authorized its municipalities to regulate land use and construction and, in doing so, had provided a "clear articulation of state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct by the municipality" [*161] in connection with its regulation." Omni, 499 U.S. at 372 (quoting Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 40, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985)). As the Court explained:

The very purpose of zoning regulation is to displace unfettered business freedom in a manner that regularly has the effect of preventing normal acts of competition, particularly on the part of new entrants. A municipal ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards (surely a common form of zoning) necessarily protects existing billboards against some competition from newcomers.

499 U.S. at 373 (footnote omitted).

Having thus concluded that "the city's restriction of billboard construction was prima facie entitled to Parker immunity," id. at 374, the Court turned to the issue of whether the existence of a conspiracy between city officials [19] and COA had stripped the city of that immunity. It first noted the foundation of Parker immunity:

The rationale of Parker was that, in light of our national commitment to federalism, the general language of the Sherman Act should not be interpreted to prohibit anticompetitive actions by the States in their governmental capacities as sovereign regulators.

Id. It then observed that if conspiracy was taken to mean "nothing more than an agreement to impose the regulation in question," the purpose of Parker immunity would be defeated because "it is both inevitable and desirable that public officials often agree to do what one or another group of private citizens urges upon them." Id. at 375.

Because the jury had been instructed that a conspiracy was "an agreement . . . to accomplish an otherwise lawful result in an unlawful manner," id. at 376 n.5, the Court next considered whether Parker immunity is lost when it is shown that an agreement between the defendants involved governmental corruption, bribery, or other violations of state or federal law. It held that Parker immunity remains in such circumstances. The Court found "impractical" [20] the contention that Parker immunity is forfeited by governmental corruption, "defined variously as 'abandonment of public responsibilities to private interests,' . . . 'corrupt or bad faith decisions,' . . . and 'selfish or corrupt motives.'" Id. at 376. Such a rule would call upon antitrust courts to speculate as to whether state action purportedly taken in the public interest was the product of an honest judgment or desire for private gain. The Court stressed that Parker "was not meant to shift [judgments about the public interest] from elected officials to judges and juries." Id. at 377.

With respect to the contention that Parker immunity should be forfeited at least where bribery or other illegal activity may have subverted the state decision making process, the Court observed that this approach had "the virtue of practicality but the vice of being unrelated to" the purposes of the Sherman Act and Parker. 499 U.S. at 378. It chose to rely on sanctions other than the Sherman Act to discourage such behavior:

To use unlawful political influence as the test of legality of state regulation undoubtedly vindicates (in a rather blunt way) principles [21] of good government. But the statute we are construing is not directed to that end. Congress has passed other laws aimed at combating corruption in state and local governments.

Id. at 378-79.

For these reasons, the Court rejected "any interpretation of the Sherman Act that would allow plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state sovereigns to base their claims on [charges that the state's decision making process was corrupted by bribery or other unlawful activity]." Id. at [*162] 379. It concluded its discussion of the city's immunity by "reiterating that, with the possible market participant exception,⁴ any action that qualifies as state action is 'ipso facto . . . exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws.' "Id. at 379 (emphasis in original) (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 568, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, 104 S. Ct. 1989 (1984)).

[22] Turning to the liability of Omni, the Court addressed whether Noerr's immunity for private parties was subject to any of the exceptions that had been urged in the context of Parker immunity.⁵ It declined to restrict Noerr immunity in this way for the same reason it had declined to so restrict Parker immunity:

Insofar as the identification of an immunity-destroying "conspiracy" is concerned, Parker and Noerr generally present two faces of the same coin. . . . The same factors which, as we have described above, make it impracticable or beyond the purpose of the antitrust laws to identify and invalidate lawmaking that has been infected by selfishly motivated agreement with private interests likewise make it impracticable or beyond that scope to identify and invalidate lobbying that has produced selfishly motivated agreement with public officials. "It would be unlikely that any effort to influence legislative action could succeed unless one or more members of the legislative body became . . .'co-conspirators' " in some sense with the private party urging such action. And if the invalidating "conspiracy" is limited to one that involves some element [23] of unlawfulness (beyond mere anticompetitive motivation), the invalidation would have nothing to do with the policies of the antitrust laws. In Noerr itself, where the private party "deliberately deceived the public and public officials" in its successful lobbying campaign, we said that "deception, reprehensible as it is, can be of no consequence so far as the Sherman Act is concerned." 365 U.S. at 145.

499 U.S. at 383-84 (emphasis added).

The teachings of Omni are pertinent here. HN9 Considerations of federalism require an interpretation of the Sherman Act that forecloses liability predicated on anticompetitive injuries that [24] are inflicted by states acting as regulators. Liability for injuries caused by such state action is precluded even where it is alleged that a private party urging the action did so by bribery, deceit or other wrongful conduct that may have affected the decision making process. The remedy for such conduct rests with laws addressed to it and not with courts looking behind sovereign state action at the behest of antitrust plaintiffs. Federalism requires this result both with respect to state actors and with respect to private parties who have urged the state action.

Here, the Department is authorized by state statute to regulate the number, size, and spacing of health care facilities. Like the statute in Omni, this statute provides a "clear articulation of state policy" which authorizes the Department "to displace unfettered business freedom in a manner that regularly has the effect of preventing normal acts of competition, particularly on the part of new entrants." Id. at 373. While it is true that the challenged decision of the Department involved an individualized application of established criteria, rather than the establishment of criteria as in [*163] Omni, the Department's [25] action was every bit as essential to the execution of the sovereign's regulatory policy as was the adoption of the zoning ordinance by the Columbia city council.

The Surgical Center's CON application called upon the Department to determine whether the opening of a new ASC was in the public interest. The Department conducted its own investigation and then held a hearing at which all interested parties had the opportunity to tender evidence and argument. It then made findings and determined that the issuance of the CON was not in the public interest. After a second hearing, that determination was concurred in by the Board, and the Commonwealth Court thereafter concluded that the Board's decision was supported by substantial evidence.

⁴ The referenced possible exception relates to state action as a purchaser or seller in the market rather than as a sovereign regulator.

⁵ The Court first concluded that the "sham" exception to Noerr immunity was inapplicable because that exception "encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon." Id. at 380. COA had sought to use only the outcome of the process to suppress competition.

It is not clear to us that the issue of whether the Hospital's new facility would be completed was considered important by the Department or the Board. Neither made an express finding on that issue.⁶ It is clear from the Board's written decision, however, that the Board heard evidence on the issue, knew construction had been halted, and believed "there was credible evidence that the project had not been abandoned." Board Op. at 14. Thus, to the extent [26] this issue was material, the record reflects that the decision makers recognized that there was a dispute and made a credibility determination concerning it.

[27] On the facts alleged in the complaint, it is also clear that the state decision makers were disinterested, conducted their own investigation, and afforded all interested parties an opportunity to set the record straight. The initial decision was then twice reviewed. Finally, anyone who believed that a fraud was committed on the Department or Board could have moved to reopen the proceeding and attempted to persuade them that they were materially misled. See, e.g., 1 Pa. Code §§ 35.231, 35.233 (authorizing a reopening of an administrative proceeding on motion of a participant or by the agency whenever the public interest requires). As matters currently stand, however, the Department's decision concerning where the public interest lies remains in place as the final decision of the Board and the judgment of the Commonwealth Court.

In these circumstances, Omni compels us to affirm the District Court.⁷ [29] Indeed, such a result seems to follow, a fortiori, [*164] from Omni given the conceded presence here of disinterested decision makers, an independent investigation, an open process, and extensive opportunities for error correction. The risk that the plaintiff's injury is [28] not the result of a bona fide execution of state policy is far less substantial here than in Omni and there is, accordingly, far less justification for federal court review of the state's policy judgment. For these reasons, we must decline the Surgical Center's invitation to look behind the decisions of the Department, the Board, and the Commonwealth Court. Rather, based on Omni, we are constrained to honor the Hospital defendants' claim to Noerr immunity.⁸

⁶The Board's "need projection formula" projected a need for 6.5 operating rooms. The Hospital currently had six general purpose operating rooms and a room used for "short procedures" such as endoscopies, colonoscopies and sigmoidoscopies. If and when the Hospital's proposed facility was completed, three of the general purpose operating rooms would be closed and the ambulatory surgical services provided in the main building would be provided in the new facility. The Surgical Center proposed to add two operating rooms under circumstances where the State Health Plan's need-project formula indicated, at most, need for one additional (seventh) operating room. In terms of the population to be served and the surgical services to be rendered, the Surgical Center's project would do little other than raise the number of operating rooms in Armstrong County above the limit set by the State Health Plan. The Board, therefore, concluded that approval of the instant CON application would result in needless duplication of existing facilities and health care services. While the Surgical Center projected a higher need and suggested that its facility would serve a larger area than the hospital, the Board found its projections flawed. The opinion of the Commonwealth Court establishes that it also understood this to be the basis for the Board's ruling, a basis for which it found support in the record.

⁷We acknowledge that the result we reach is in conflict with the holding of the court in St. Joseph's Hospital v. Hospital Corp. of America, 795 F.2d 948 (11th Cir. 1986) and with the analysis of the courts in Kottle v. Northwest Kidney Centers, 146 F.3d 1056 (9th Cir. 1998) and Potters Medical Center v. City Hospital Ass'n., 800 F.2d 568 (6th Cir. 1986). To the extent of that conflict, we respectfully disagree with the views there expressed. We note that the courts in St. Joseph's Hospital and Potters Medical Center did not have the benefit of the Supreme Court's 1991 decision in Omni and that Kottle's brief analysis does not reference that decision.

⁸This is not a case like Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Machinery and Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965), or Woods Exploration & Prod. Co., Inc. v. Aluminum Company of America, 438 F.2d 1286 (5th Cir. 1971). In Walker, the state action was the issuance of a patent which allegedly had been procured by fraud. The attempted enforcement of the patent against the plaintiff was held actionable under the Sherman Act. The decision making process there was an ex parte one in which the Patent Office was wholly dependent on the applicant for the facts. While the Patent Office can determine the prior act from its own records, it effectively and necessarily delegates to the applicant the factual determinations underlying

[30] V.

Accordingly, we will affirm the District Court's order dismissing the Surgical Center's complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

Dissent by: MURRAY M. SCHWARTZ

Dissent

SCHWARTZ, Senior District Judge, Dissenting:

With its decision today, the majority holds private parties who make misrepresentations that pervasively influence the decision making process of public entities are entitled to immunity under both the state action immunity doctrine and the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine. The majority opinion conflicts with the teaching of this Court in an opinion issued less than four months ago, which held that under certain circumstances applicable here, material misrepresentations that affect the core of a litigant's submissions to an administrative body are not entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity. See Cheminor Drugs, Ltd. v. Ethyl Corp., 168 F.3d 119 \(3d Cir. 1999\).

I respectfully dissent for three reasons. First, I believe the misrepresentation exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine should be applied when intentional falsehoods pervade the entire state administrative proceeding leading to the denial of plaintiff [31]'s application for a certificate of need ("CON"). Second, the majority's position that the misrepresentation exception has no place in the jurisprudence of this Circuit is not supported by case law. Finally, the majority relies on a Supreme Court decision that is not applicable to this case. As a consequence, the defendant should not be able to escape liability for its misrepresentations under either the state action or Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrines.

According to the majority opinion, the defendants are immune from antitrust liability for their conduct during the course of petitioning the Pennsylvania State Health Facility Hearing Board ("Board") to deny plaintiff's application for a CON. The majority opinion finds City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 \(1991\), supports the dismissal of plaintiff's claim. First, the majority finds that the District Court properly dismissed the boycott and misrepresentation claims under [*165] the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The majority believes that Omni and Cheminor Drugs cast doubt on whether a misrepresentation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity [32] exists under any circumstances. Further, even if a misrepresentation exception exists, the majority asserts that the alleged misrepresentations were irrelevant because the Board denied the CON on grounds independent of the misrepresentations. The majority emphasizes that the decision makers were disinterested, conducted an independent investigation, and the process afforded opportunities for error correction. In summary, the majority has essentially found the denial of the CON was untainted by the alleged misrepresentations or boycott threats.

Second, the majority decision argues it was not the boycott or misrepresentation, but rather the denial of the CON that was the direct cause of the Surgical Center's alleged injuries. The majority concludes denial of the CON was state action and the Hospital parties are therefore immunized from antitrust liability under state action immunity, arguing that "liability for injuries caused by such state action is precluded even where it is alleged that a private party urging the action did so by . . . wrongful conduct that may have affected the decision making process."

the issuance of a patent. Accordingly, when the applicant has submitted false factual information, the state action is dependent on financially interested decision making. See Einer Elhauge, Making Sense of Antitrust Petitioning Immunity, 80 Calif. L. Rev. 1177, 1249 \(1992\) (suggesting that the immunity exception recognized in Walker is "very narrow" and applies only when financially interested parties essentially made the factual determinations that triggered the governmental restraint). The same is true of the situation in Woods where the Texas Railroad Commission was wholly dependent on the antitrust defendants for the factual information on which it predicated its allocation of production from a given field.

[Majority opinion at page 15]. Given the procedural posture of a motion to *33 dismiss, I believe the majority's conclusion is not only impermissible fact-finding, but also contrary to the Surgical Center's entitlement to all favorable inferences and resolution of factual disputes in its favor.¹

DISCUSSION

[[34] I. The Hospital Parties' Actions

Armstrong Surgical Center asserts the Hospital parties conspired to subvert the establishment of its facility by announcing to the Board, which was reviewing the Surgical Center's CON application, their intent to boycott the facility, and by submitting false and misleading information to the Board regarding the Hospital's ASC. The purpose of the boycott and misrepresentations was to eliminate a potential new entrant whose competition would adversely affect all the defendants. The Hospital has a complete area monopoly in providing operating room services. The nineteen physicians who sent boycott letters performed nearly 90% of all surgery in the relevant geographic area. Thus, the Hospital parties' actions targeted two criteria the Board considers in reviewing a CON application: (1) the need for the facility, and (2) its prospective economic viability.

The nineteen physicians in question sent letters to the Board, as it was considering the CON application, stating they would not use the plaintiff's ASC, but would only use the (fictional) ASC provided by the Hospital. The letters stated:

I do not intend to perform surgery at the proposed [[35]] Armstrong Surgical Center. I intend to use the services of the Ambulatory Surgery Center at Armstrong County Memorial Hospital. The hospital's Ambulatory Surgical Center provides the highest quality medical care at the most reasonable cost.

The letters go on to suggest that since the Hospital's ASC is superior, the proposed ASC is unnecessary: "It duplicates services already being provided, and it is not cost effective." All nineteen letters submitted to the Board were on the Hospital stationery, and contained the same language.

[[*166]] The Pennsylvania Department of Health ("Department") disapproved plaintiff 's CON application on November 23, 1993. The Board affirmed the Department's decision on March 13, 1996. The Board relied on two grounds for affirming the denial of the CON: (1) the Board found the Hospital ASC made Armstrong's ASC duplicative and unnecessary, and (2) Armstrong's ASC would not be economically viable because 90% of the staff physicians would not use it.

The Hospital misrepresented to the Board that its ASC was substantially built and would be ready for use in the near future. When the Hospital parties made their misrepresentations, they knew the Hospital had [[36]] ceased construction of its outpatient facility months before the hearing, and that construction had not resumed. The fact that the Department learned that this representation was false before it denied the CON does not detract from the falsity of the representation. The Department and the Board learned construction on the Hospital ASC had been interrupted, but they did not know the Hospital had no intent to build or operate a Hospital ASC. In fact, the Board opinion demonstrates the opposite was true. Although the Board knew the Hospital was using the building as a storage facility, it was led to believe that the Hospital had not abandoned the project. Further, because it was not in its economic interest, the Hospital did not plan to resume construction if Armstrong's CON application was denied. The Board's decision relied on the misrepresentation that the Hospital ASC was or would be built and the threat of a boycott.

¹ In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court must accept the well-pleaded facts as true and resolve them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Trump Hotels & Casino Resorts, Inc. v. Mirage Resorts Inc., 140 F.3d 478, 483 (3d Cir. 1998); Morse v. Lower Merion Sch. Dist., 132 F.3d 902, 906 (3d Cir. 1997). In addition, the court may consider allegations contained in the complaint, exhibits attached to the complaint, and matters of public record. See City of Pittsburgh v. West Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 259 (1998); Steinhardt Group, Inc. v. Citicorp, 126 F.3d 144, 145 (3d Cir. 1997). Accordingly, this dissent, like the majority, considers both the Board's decision and the Commonwealth Court decision.

Armstrong's ASC would not be economically viable because the nineteen physicians who performed nearly all surgeries in the area would not use the new facility if completed because they would use the Hospital ASC. The Board noted the effect of the boycott letters sent [37] by the physicians in explaining its denial of Armstrong's CON application:

The most damaging evidence is that the number of physicians who might have been expected to support the facility decreased significantly after the Applicant had submitted its projections. . . . The nineteen physicians who opposed the project in writing are responsible for approximately 90 percent of all surgery performed at the Hospital and each is on the Hospital's staff.

In other words, after the application was submitted (and for whatever reason) support for the facility eroded among physicians who either had supported it initially or were being counted upon for their eventual participation. Because the Applicant would therefore have to generate much of its volume from outside the service area or from patients who reside in the service area but currently "migrate" to other locales for ambulatory surgery, we seriously doubt that the volume projections made for the facility can be achieved.

Board Op. at 47-48 (citations and footnote omitted).

With these facts in mind, I turn to the majority conclusion that the Hospital parties have immunity for the injuries resulting from their misrepresentations.

[38] II. Applicability of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Hospital parties contend the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine applies because their announced intentions not to perform operations at Armstrong's ASC facility and statements regarding the existence of the Hospital ASC came in the context of supplying information to state agencies. In general, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade when petitioning the government. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); see Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc. ("PRE"), 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). [*167] The purpose or motive in petitioning government officials is irrelevant; the fact that the sole purpose might be to destroy a competitor does not undermine the protection afforded by the immunity. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 139. This is true even if "some direct injury" is an "incidental effect" of legitimate petitioning activity, regardless of whether the petitioner is aware of the infliction [39] of such injury. Id. at 143-144.²

If the physicians had simply expressed their opposition to the proposed facility without intentionally misleading administrative decision makers about their intent to use the uncompleted Hospital ASC, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine would protect their statements. Similarly, if the Hospital had not informed the administrative decision makers it was going to build and operate [40] a Hospital ASC, or if it had informed the decision makers it originally intended to build and operate a Hospital ASC but had concluded it would no longer do so, Noerr-Pennington immunity would be available to them. However, as set forth above and in the majority opinion, that is not what occurred.

A. Courts Have Distinguished Between Misrepresentations Made In The Political Context As Opposed to the Administrative or Adjudicative Context

The majority's reliance on City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991), for the proposition that there is no misrepresentation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity is

² The Court in Noerr stated:

It is inevitable, whenever an attempt is made to influence legislation by a campaign of publicity, that an incidental effect of that campaign may be the infliction of some direct injury upon the interests of the party against whom the campaign is directed. And it seems equally inevitable that those conducting the campaign would be aware of, and possibly even pleased by, the prospect of such injury. To hold that the knowing infliction of such injury renders the campaign itself illegal would thus be tantamount to outlawing all such campaigns.

misplaced. In Omni, one defendant sought to persuade the city of Columbia to create zoning ordinances, which had a detrimental effect on the plaintiff, who was a competitor of that defendant. The Supreme Court held that the defendant was not liable for antitrust violations for statements made to the city. 499 U.S. at 382. Omni reaffirmed that deliberate misrepresentations in the legislative arena, "reprehensible as [they are], can be of no consequence so far as [41] the Sherman Act is concerned." Id. at 384. The majority's reliance on Omni is not persuasive because here, the setting is an adjudicatory arena, not a lobbying or legislative one as in Omni.

The majority cites Omni for the proposition that there is no misrepresentation exception. PRE, which was decided two years after Omni, suggests that the issue of whether there is a misrepresentation exception to Noerr-Pennington remains an open question. 508 U.S. at 61 n.6. While PRE cited California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 512-13, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\), with approval, the Supreme Court in PRE declined to decide whether Noerr permits antitrust liability for a litigant's fraud or other misrepresentations. 508 U.S. at 61 n.6.

The Supreme Court has stated, not once, but twice, that "misrepresentations, condoned in the political arena, are not immunized when used in the adjudicatory process." California Motor Transp., 404 U.S. at 513. Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 499-500, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 \(1988\), [42] stated that unethical and deceptive practices in "less political arenas," such as administrative or adjudicatory settings, could violate antitrust laws. Thus, the Supreme Court has broadly hinted Noerr-Pennington immunity [*168] is not intended to shield petitioning activities that do not further, but rather distort, the decision-making process in the non-legislative context.

Several Circuit Courts of Appeal also have distinguished between the level of immunity afforded to misrepresentations made in different forums. In Potters Medical Center v. City Hospital Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 571 \(6th Cir. 1986\), the plaintiff alleged that the defendant hospital's certificate of need application contained materially false statements about the plaintiff. The court stated that "the knowing and willful submission of false facts to a government agency falls within the sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine." 800 F.2d at 580. The Fifth Circuit in Woods Exploration & Producing Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 438 F.2d 1286, 1296-98 \(5th Cir. 1971\), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1047, 30 L. Ed. 2d 736, 92 S. Ct. 701 \(1972\), held that [43] Noerr did not protect, inter alia, the filing of false production forecasts with a state regulatory commission. The court stated that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine seeks to protect attempts to influence policies and held that "the abuse of the administrative process here alleged does not justify antitrust immunity." Id. at 1298.

Other cases have held the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not immunize misrepresentations made in the administrative or adjudicative context. See, e.g., Cheminor Drugs, Ltd. v. Ethyl Corp., 168 F.3d 119, 124 \(3d Cir. 1999\) (holding that material misrepresentations in an adjudicative arena are not protected by Noerr-Pennington immunity); Whelan v. Abell, 310 U.S. App. D.C. 396, 48 F.3d 1247, 1255 \(D.C. Cir. 1995\) (finding that if sham claim involves administrative agencies, then Noerr does not protect "petitions based on known falsehoods"); St. Joseph's Hosp., Inc. v. Hospital Corp. of Am., 795 F.2d 948, 955, reh'g denied en banc, 801 F.2d 404 \(11th Cir. 1986\), see infra; Ottensmeyer v. Chesapeake & Potomac Tel. Co., 756 F.2d 986, 994 \(4th Cir. 1985\) [44] (suggesting that knowing submission of false information to police -- communications which "do not constitute the type of 'political activity' protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine" -- would fall within the sham exception); Clipper Express v. Rocky Mountain Motor Tariff Bureau, Inc., 690 F.2d 1240, 1261 \(9th Cir. 1982\) (stating that Noerr does not immunize false information given to an administrative or adjudicatory body), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1227, 75 L. Ed. 2d 468, 103 S. Ct. 1234 (1983); Israel v. Baxter Labs., Inc., 151 U.S. App. D.C. 101, 466 F.2d 272, 278 \(D.C. Cir. 1972\) ("No actions [efforts to deceive the Food and Drug Administration] which impair the fair and impartial functioning of an administrative agency should be able to hide behind the cloak of an antitrust exemption.").

The rationale for limiting immunity for private actors' efforts to mislead adjudicatory or administrative officials is that these entities, as compared to legislative bodies, rely on information supplied by the parties to a greater extent than legislative bodies. Allied Tube, 486 U.S. at 499-500. The Ninth Circuit [45] in Clipper Express, c 690 F.2d at 1261, explained:

There is an emphasis on debate in the political sphere, which could accommodate false statements and reveal their falsity. In the adjudicatory sphere, however, information supplied by the parties is relied on as accurate for decision making and dispute resolving. The supplying of fraudulent information thus threatens the fair and impartial functioning of these agencies and does not deserve immunity from the antitrust laws.

The majority recognizes the decision by the Department to deny the CON involved an individualized application of established criteria. However, it attempts to reconcile the difference between the adjudicative context and legislative context by arguing that the Department's decision to deny the certificate of need was "essential to the execution of the sovereign's regulatory policy" regarding health care facilities. [Majority opinion at page 16]. This distinction [*169] is unpersuasive. Although the government agency's decision on the certificate of need application could be viewed as essential to regulating health care facilities, St. Joseph's Hospital, 795 F.2d at 952, 46 and Kottle v. Northwest Kidney Centers, 146 F.3d 1056, 1063 (9th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 143 L. Ed. 2d 40, 119 S. Ct. 1031 (1999), both held that misrepresentations in this context do not have Noerr immunity. Every adjudicative decision could be viewed as essential to a sovereign's regulatory policy and thus, the majority would nullify the distinction the Supreme Court and other appellate courts have made between misrepresentations made in the legislative context as opposed to the administrative or adjudicative context.

The majority appears to argue that the process employed by the Department could uncover misrepresentations because the Department conducted its own investigation. However, in Cheminor, the governmental bodies -- the Department of Commerce ("DOC") and the International Trade Commission ("ITC") -- also conducted their own investigation, but another panel of this Court still held material misrepresentations that affect the core of the defendant's petition will preclude Noerr-Pennington immunity. 168 F.3d at 121, 124 (stating that the "DOC and ITC make final determinations after they have conducted their own 47 investigations . . . and after they have heard further arguments from the parties involved"); see Clipper Express, 690 F.2d at 1261-62 (stating that submitting false information in an adjudicatory proceeding can be the basis for antitrust liability even if the agency was not misled by the information). The majority's view, carried to its logical extreme, would allow the more skillful liar to avoid antitrust liability so long as the decision maker conducts its own investigation.

Moreover, it is not clear the Department conducted an independent investigation. Rather, the Department relied on the Hospital defendants to give truthful information so that it could make a fully informed decision. The majority's opinion recognizes the Board was misled because the Board "made a credibility determination" "that the project had not been abandoned." [Majority opinion at page 17]. However, the majority refuses to acknowledge that the Board opinion demonstrates that the denial of the CON was based on the false belief, nurtured by the Hospital defendants, that the Hospital would build its ASC.

B. Similar Cases Have Held That Misrepresentations Relating to a CON Application 48 Do Not Enjoy Noerr Immunity

The facts in St. Joseph's Hospital closely parallel those alleged by the plaintiff. The defendant, Memorial Medical Center ("MMC"), was the sole provider of cardiac surgery services in the relevant market area. 795 F.2d at 952. It opposed St. Joseph's CON application, claiming it already had the capacity to perform more heart procedures in the region than required, thus making its competitor's services unnecessary. Id. The Board relied upon this information in denying St. Joseph's request for a CON. Id. St. Joseph's sued, asserting MMC provided false information to the Board. Id. at 953. The court found that the misrepresentations were not made in the political arena and held that parties furnishing false information to a government agency passing on specific certificate applications are not entitled to Noerr-Pennington petitioning immunity. The court held:

When a governmental agency such as [the State Health Planning Agency] is passing on specific certificate applications it is acting judicially. Misrepresentations under these circumstances do not enjoy Noerr immunity.

Id. at 955. 49 Accordingly, the court reversed the district court's decision granting the defendant's motion to dismiss. Id. at 957.

[*170] The Ninth Circuit, like the Eleventh Circuit in St. Joseph's Hospital, also held Noerr-Pennington immunity does not protect a party's intentional misrepresentations in similar circumstances. Kottle v. Northwest Kidney Centers, 146 F.3d 1056 (9th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 143 L. Ed. 2d 40, 119 S. Ct. 1031 (1999). As in this case, the district court in Kottle granted the defendant's motion to dismiss. Id. at 1058-59. The Kottle court also examined allegedly false information relating to a CON application. Id. at 1058. The court stated that if misrepresentations made by a defendant were of such magnitude that the "entire CON proceeding was deprived of its legitimacy," then the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity would apply. Id. at 1063.

The misrepresentations in Kottle were made in an administrative or adjudicatory arena because the Department of Health, the decision maker, conducted public hearings, accepted written and oral arguments, [50] permitted representation by counsel, issued written findings, and its decision was appealable. Id. at 1062. In this case, the Department also conducted public hearings, accepted evidence and argument from interested parties, made findings, and its decision was appealable. Since the court in Kottle found that the misrepresentations were not made in the political or lobbying context, the court applied a different standard than the one set forth in Omni. Id. (stating that "intentional misrepresentation to government officials" is treated differently "outside of the political realm"). The court found, however, that the plaintiff's complaint fell short of invoking the sham exception because the plaintiff's vague allegations of misrepresentation were insufficient to overcome the defendant's Noerr-Pennington immunity. Id. at 1064. The court could not ascertain "what representations [the defendant] made, or to whom; with whom [the defendant] conspired . . . or what other testimony the Department may have had that could have influenced its decision to deny [plaintiff]'s CON application." Id. In contrast, the plaintiff's complaint [51] in this case details the alleged misrepresentations made by the defendants, and the Board decision demonstrates that such material misrepresentations influenced its decision, as well as that of the Commonwealth Court. See infra.

C. The Defendants' Actions Nullify Their Noerr-Pennington Immunity

Our recent decision in Cheminor Drugs, Ltd. v. Ethyl Corp., 168 F.3d 119 (3d Cir. 1999), does not support the majority's position. In Cheminor, the defendant Ethyl Corporation complained to the ITC and the DOC that plaintiff Cheminor was dumping and selling ibuprofen at less than fair value. Id. at 120. Cheminor brought antitrust claims in which it alleged that Ethyl's statements to the ITC were baseless, made in bad faith, contained false statements, and were brought only for anti-competitive reasons. Id. The issue decided by this Court was whether alleged misrepresentations by Ethyl vitiated its Noerr-Pennington immunity. The Court in Cheminor found the alleged misrepresentations were neither material, nor affected the core of the defendant's petition because the misrepresentations relating to the defendant's profitability [52] were "only a small proportion of the numerous factors the ITC must consider when making a determination of material injury." Id. at 126. Therefore, we affirmed the decision to grant summary judgment in favor of Ethyl because Cheminor did not satisfy the first step of PRE's sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Id. at 127.

Cheminor held material misrepresentations that "infect the core" of the defendant's claim and the government's resulting actions are not entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity under the "objectively baseless" prong of PRE. Id. at 123. Cheminor requires evaluation of misrepresentations in determining whether a defendant [*171] is entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity. The majority relies on the following language in Cheminor to assert Cheminor stands for the proposition that this Circuit has held the misrepresentation exception is not part of its jurisprudence.

We decline to carve out a new exception to the broad immunity that Noerr-Pennington provides. Rather, we will determine whether [defendant]'s petition was objectively baseless under the Supreme Court's [53] test in PRE, without regard to those facts that [plaintiff] alleges [defendant] misrepresented.

Id. There are three answers to the majority position. First, it ignores the immediately succeeding sentence in the opinion:

If the alleged misrepresented facts do not infect the core of Ethyl's claim and the government's resulting actions, then the petition had an objective basis and will receive Noerr-Pennington immunity under the first step of PRE.

Id. I read this language as meaning that prior to determining whether the "petition had an objective basis" the Court must determine "if the alleged misrepresented facts do . . . infect the core of Ethyl's claim." Id. If they do, the misrepresentation exception applies and there can be no "objective basis" for the defendant's position. If, on the other hand, the misrepresentation exception is not applicable, the defendant's petition could well have an objective basis.

Second, the majority has not explained why, if the Cheminor court held there was no misrepresentation exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, it formulated a test for the misrepresentation exception and then painstakingly [54] applied the test analyzing whether the misrepresented facts affected "the core of Ethyl's claim and the government's resulting action. . . ." Id. Third, the court in Cheminor relied on a district court case, Music Center S.N.C. Di Luciano Pisoni & C. v. Prestini Musical Instruments Corp., 874 F. Supp. 543, 549 \(E.D.N.Y. 1995\). The specific language cited with approval by Cheminor reads:

[A] determination [of objective basis] requires consideration, inter alia, of . . . the nature of the particular allegations of the petition or actions before the administrative agency claimed to be fraudulent or improper, and whether these claimed misrepresentations or improper actions would have been significant to the ultimate outcome or continuation of the proceeding.

Cheminor, 168 F.3d at 124 (citing Music Center, 874 F. Supp. 543 at 549) (emphasis added). If there were any doubts regarding the court's reliance on Music Center and its approval of the misrepresentation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity, the Cheminor court set them to rest:

If the government's action was not dependent [55] upon the misrepresented information, the misrepresented information was not material and did not go to the core of Ethyl's petition. In sum, a material misrepresentation that affects the very core of a litigant's . . . case will preclude Noerr-Pennington immunity, but not every misrepresentation is material to the question of whether a petition such as Ethyl's had an objective basis.

168 F.3d at 124 (second emphasis added and footnote omitted). I am simply unable to accept the majority's reading of Cheminor.

Further, the test set forth in Cheminor is applicable here because the alleged misrepresentations in Cheminor were made in the adjudicative context. Omni is not applicable because the alleged misrepresentations in that case were made in a legislative context. In a factually similar case, the 11th Circuit found that "when a government agency . . . is passing on specific certificate [of need] applications it is acting judicially." St. Joseph's Hospital, 795 F.2d at 955. Misrepresentations made under these circumstances do not enjoy Noerr immunity. Id.

[*172] There is a final troubling aspect of the majority's opinion. Assuming this [56] dissent's position is correct that Cheminor recognizes a misrepresentation exception as part of this Circuit's jurisprudence and that the majority holds there is no misrepresentation exception to the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine, the majority has done something it cannot do. Under Rule 9.1 of the Internal Operating Procedures of this Court, "no subsequent panel overrules the holding in a published opinion of a previous panel."

1. The Defendants' Alleged Misrepresentations Were Material And Infected The Core Of The Defendants' Statements To The Department

The legitimacy of the Board's decision is in question because it relied upon materially false information and was influenced by threats of an illegal boycott. As stated previously, at this stage of the litigation, the plaintiff is entitled to all favorable inferences and resolution of factual disputes in its favor. Therefore, the court must examine whether

Armstrong Surgical is entitled, at a minimum, to an inference that the misrepresentations were not only material, but also affected the core of the defendant's claims.

The majority concluded the Board would have denied the CON application regardless of whether the [57] Hospital ASC would be completed. However, the Board's opinion clearly shows that it premised the denial of the CON upon the Hospital's misrepresentation that it would complete and operate a Hospital ASC. In successive Findings of Fact the Board found:

25. The Hospital has partially completed construction of a building on its premises that would house a dedicated outpatient surgical facility.
26. Upon completion of the Hospital's outpatient surgical facility, three of its existing operating rooms would be moved into the new building.
27. The proposed ambulatory surgery center and the one which has been partially constructed by the Hospital would serve the same population and would provide essentially the same surgical services.
28. The Applicant's proposed ambulatory surgery center would needlessly duplicate existing facilities and health care services in Armstrong County.

Board Op. at 6 (citations omitted). Taken in context the phrase "needlessly duplicate existing facilities," supra, can only mean that Armstrong's proposed ASC would duplicate the proposed Hospital ASC. In addition, the letters from the 19 physicians stated that the proposed facility duplicated the [58] services already being provided. As previously rehearsed, the Hospital parties knew there was no commitment or intent to complete a functioning Hospital ASC.

Not only the Findings of Fact, but also the Board opinion make clear that the Board, relying upon the misrepresentations of the Hospital parties, premised its denial of the CON and its entire discussion of need-projection upon there being no need for two ASCs-- the Hospital's ASC and Armstrong's ASC:

Although outpatient surgery at the Hospital is now performed in the same operating room as inpatient surgery, the Hospital has partially completed construction of a building on its premises to house a dedicated outpatient surgery facility. Upon completing construction, the Hospital would move three existing operating rooms into the new building.

With regard to the population to be served and the surgical services to be offered, there would be little difference between the Applicant's ambulatory surgical center and the one that the Hospital has partially completed, except that the Applicant's project would raise the number of operating rooms in Armstrong County above the limit set by the SHP. We conclude that approval [59] of the instant CON application would result in needless duplication of existing facilities and health care services.

[*173] We believe that the factors set forth above, in themselves, are sufficient to support a finding that the Applicant has failed to establish need for the proposed facility by the population to be served. . . .

9. Apparently, after construction of the building and some of the interior walls had been completed, staff physicians at the Hospital began to question whether a separate outpatient facility was necessary. Although the building is currently being used as a storage facility, there was credible evidence that the project has not been abandoned.

Board Op. at 14 (citations omitted). It is noteworthy that the three Commonwealth Court judges, conducting judicial review, were of the belief that the Hospital ASC would be completed:

The hospital has partially completed construction of a building on its premises that would house a dedicated outpatient surgical facility. Upon completion of the hospital's outpatient surgical facility, three of its existing operating rooms would be moved into the new building.

The proposed ambulatory surgery center [60] and the one which has been partially constructed by the hospital would serve the same population and would provide essentially the same surgical services. Armstrong's proposed ambulatory surgery center would needlessly duplicate existing facilities and health care services in Armstrong county.

Commonwealth Court Op. p. 5. At the very least four judges -- three Commonwealth judges and this judge -- read the Board opinion as indicating that the Department believed the Hospital ASC would be completed.

The presence or absence of a Hospital ASC was significant. A CON is granted if a proposed health care expenditure will meet medical needs of the target population in an effective and cost efficient manner. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 35 § 448.707. There is no question that an ASC was more cost efficient than the continued use of the six hospital operating rooms. The Hospital's own accountant documented projected average cost savings of $ 400 per case if an ASC were used relative to the current Hospital operating rooms.

The issue before the Board was whether there would be overcapacity of ASCs if a CON were issued to Armstrong. Because the misrepresentations led the Board to [61] believe there would be a Hospital ASC, it never reached the issue of delivering effective and cost efficient medical services under the scenario in which there was no Hospital ASC. There is simply no way for the District Court or this Court to determine whether the Board would have granted the CON had it known the true facts. With the Court having to accept all well-pleaded facts as true and resolve them in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, see Trump Hotels & Casino Resorts, Inc. v. Mirage Resorts Inc., 140 F.3d 478, 483 \(3d Cir. 1998\), the plaintiff is surely entitled to the reasonable inference that the Board predicated its decision, in major part, on the belief that a Hospital ASC would be completed. Therefore, I would hold the alleged misrepresentations deprive the Hospital parties of Noerr-Pennington immunity because their misrepresentations were material and infected the very essence or core of the administrative proceeding and consequent denial of the CON by the Board and affirmance of the Board's decision by the Commonwealth Court. Where as here, the misrepresentations caused the Board and Commonwealth Court to make their determinations based upon [62] the existence of a fictional Hospital ASC, the administrative proceeding and Commonwealth Court review have been deprived of their legitimacy.

2. Noerr-Pennington Immunity Does Not Protect Threats of an Illegal Boycott

While an issue of first impression, the question of whether Noerr-Pennington [*174] petitioning immunity protects threats of an illegal boycott must also be answered in the negative. The Supreme Court has stated, "there are many other forms of illegal and reprehensible practice which may corrupt the administrative or judicial processes and which may result in antitrust violations." California Motor Transp., 404 U.S. at 513. If the Supreme Court would not immunize misrepresentations in the judicial or administrative context, it surely would not immunize threats of illegal activity when they corrupt the administrative adjudication process. Where a threat of illegal activity plays such a strong role in the administrative decision-making process and forms part of the basis for an administrative decision, it is impossible to say that the process has not been corrupted. Denying Noerr-Pennington immunity to those who provide false information to [63] the government in its deliberative decision-making process can only improve the information flowing to the government.

Attention is now turned to whether the Hospital parties are protected by state action immunity as urged by the majority.

III. Applicability of State Action Immunity

The majority opinion also dismisses Armstrong's complaint on the theory that the Hospital defendants' actions are immunized under the Parker state action immunity doctrine. See Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\). The state action immunity doctrine has two related aspects. First, as elaborated in Parker, state action immunity protects parties who engage in otherwise actionable antitrust conduct, pursuant to, and in reliance upon, state action. Second, state action immunity applies when the antitrust injury complained of arises directly from state action, as distinguished from the private action alleged in the complaint before us. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136. In this case, neither aspect of state action immunity is applicable.³

³The staff physicians defendants eschewed reliance upon Parker state action immunity, stating in the catch line of their argument, "Plaintiff's Attempt to Reframe this Appeal in Terms of State Action Immunity is Misguided. . ." Individual Appellee's Br. at 20. Further, the Hospital dropped all reference to state action immunity on appeal. Appellee's counsel made a deliberate,

[64] It is clear the actions complained of were not pursuant to, or in reliance upon, state action. Indeed, reliance upon the state action of denial of the CON to immunize unlawful anti-competitive conduct which occurred prior to and caused the denial of the CON presents severe conceptual difficulties. The only state action was denial of the CON. The Hospital parties engaged in no alleged unlawful anti-competitive behavior following the denial of the CON. Rather, the misrepresentations combined with the expressed intent to engage in a boycott all occurred before the Board's denial of the CON. With this state of affairs, it is difficult to understand how the misrepresentations coupled with the stated intent to boycott are somehow immunized by the CON, where the alleged wrongful activity itself was directed to and resulted in the denial of the CON. Furthermore, even assuming these conceptual difficulties are not insurmountable, there is no indication the Hospital parties relied upon the denial of the CON in carrying out the alleged unlawful anticompetitive behaviors, or were authorized by the state to do so. Indeed, the Parker court expressly noted that "a state does not [65] give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." [317 U.S. \[*175\] at 351](#). Therefore, the "authorization" aspect of state action immunity is not applicable to the facts of this case.

The second aspect of state action immunity doctrine "immunizes" antitrust injuries directly caused by state action. It is this second aspect upon which the majority opinion rests, arguing that liability for injuries caused by such state action is precluded even where it is alleged that a private party urging the action did do by unlawful conduct.

The defendants' actions are not protected by state action immunity for two reasons. First, at least some of the injuries of which Armstrong complains were not the direct result of the only state action alleged -- the denial of the CON. Second, a misrepresentation exception to state action immunity must apply under the circumstances presented by this case.

The majority finds the plaintiff failed to allege that its injuries were caused by the hospital parties' alleged economic boycott and misrepresentations. Rather, the majority asserts the alleged injuries were either directly [66] related to the denial of the CON, or the consequences thereof. Even accepting arguendo that state action immunity applies to this case, some of the injuries alleged by Armstrong are not the direct result of state action, but of the alleged misrepresentations and conspiracy to boycott. After reciting throughout its complaint the boycott and misrepresentations, the Surgical Center lists the following damages:

- (1) Denial of the CON required to establish and operate [its ambulatory surgery center].
- (2) Denial of [its] ability to establish and operate [the proposed facility].
- (3) Delay in securing the required CON, if ultimately granted, for the establishment and operation of the [ambulatory surgery center].
- (4) Increased costs, legal and otherwise, in pursuing Plaintiff's application for a CON.
- (5) Complete loss of the value of the CON, or a reduction in its value when and if ultimately granted.
- (6) Complete loss of the value of Plaintiff's [facility], or reduction of its value when and if permitted to be operated.

- (7) Complete loss of, or reduction in, the income and cash flow which Plaintiff would have received from operation of [67] the [center].
- (8) Other related losses.

Because of the threatened boycott, damage claims 5, 6 and 7 would have occurred even if Armstrong had received the coveted CON. The boycott of plaintiff's surgical center by physicians who perform 90% of surgical procedures in the relevant geographic market surely would serve to reduce the value of the plaintiff's facility, either by the loss of business or the increase in costs associated with attracting personnel to the facility. An agreement to exclude the plaintiff from the relevant market by an economic boycott and misrepresentations to the Board may result in antitrust injury. See, e.g., Brader v. Allegheny Gen. Hosp., 64 F.3d 869, 877 \(3d Cir. 1995\) (finding complaint reasoned choice not to rely on the theory, going so far as to state that "the correctness of the District Court's decision . . . is not accurately analyzed under state action immunity." Individual Appellee's Br. at 22. Thus, this is not a circumstance where a litigant's counsel overlooked a theory. While this Court is not limited by positions advanced by the litigants, caution is warranted where capable counsel expressly disavow reliance on a defense. The majority nonetheless has relied upon a state action defense explicitly and impliedly discarded by the defendants.

adequately alleged antitrust injury where plaintiff alleged that defendants unreasonably restricted his ability to practice medicine in the relevant market and thus reduced competition). Therefore, I cannot agree with the majority's conclusion that damage claims 5, 6 and 7 stemmed from denial of the CON.

The misrepresentation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity should also apply to state action immunity in the adjudicatory or administrative [68] context. Where misrepresentations and/or threats of illegal activity subvert the entire decision making process, the direct cause of the injury is not the state action, but rather the misrepresentations or threats which made a decision based on accurate information impossible. See Woods Exploration & Producing Co., Inc. v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 438 F.2d 1286, 1295 (5th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 1047, 30 L. Ed. 2d 736, 92 S. Ct. 701 [*176] (1972); see also Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 176, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965) (holding that procurement of patent by fraud on the United States Patent Office is actionable under the Sherman Act, notwithstanding intervening state action of granting the patent).

In the legislative arena, it is difficult to say that any particular action, no matter how inappropriate, results in a particular legislation which causes injury. However, in the administrative and judicial arenas, where agencies and courts write reasoned opinions and make decisions based on information supplied by the parties, they must depend on the parties to provide accurate information. [69] ⁴ [70] As stated above, the Supreme Court has noted different standards apply to conduct in administrative or adjudicatory processes. Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 500, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988); California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972); see supra, Part II.A. The misrepresentations here, at the very least, largely influenced and very probably dictated the outcome of the administrative process. Under that circumstance, it is the misrepresentations, not the state action, which caused the alleged injuries and dictated the Board's decision to deny the CON.⁵

Because Parker and Noerr are complementary expressions of one principle of antitrust law, a misrepresentation exception to Parker immunity is necessary to effectuate the misrepresentation exception [71] to Noerr-Pennington immunity. Without an exception for those misrepresentations which have a pervasive influence on administrative and adjudicative decisions, only those defendants who most effectively subvert the state's process -- the ones whose improper behavior results in favorable results for them from the state's administrative and adjudicatory processes -- would be immune under state action immunity. This would not only be a perverse result, but would entirely vitiate the misrepresentation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity.

This case is similar to Woods. In Woods, the defendants, partial owners of a natural gas field, intentionally gave false information about their production forecasts to the Texas Railroad Commission. 438 F.2d at 1295. The Commission used that information to determine allowable production. Id. The court rejected "the facile conclusion that action by any public official automatically confers exemption." Id. at 1294 (citations omitted). The court held that state action immunity was not applicable because the misrepresentations dictated the outcome: "defendants' conduct here can in no way be said to have [72] become merged with the action of the state since the Commission neither was the real decision maker nor would have intended its order to be based on false facts." Id.

⁴ It is for this reason that reliance by the majority on Sandy River Nursing Care v. Aetna Casualty, 985 F.2d 1138, 1142 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 818, 126 L. Ed. 2d 39, 114 S. Ct. 70 (1993), is misplaced. That case involved a decision by a legislature to change the law in the face of a boycott. It is impossible to say that the boycott dictated the outcome of the legislature's decision.

⁵ The majority's reliance on Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. American Bar Ass'n, 107 F.3d 1026 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 118 S. Ct. 264 (1997), also is misplaced. There, an unaccredited law school alleged the American Bar Association engaged in anticompetitive conduct because graduates from unaccredited schools could not sit for most state bar examinations. This Court concluded the source of the injury was the action of each of those states because "every state retains the final authority to set all the bar admission rules." Id. at 1035. That case is distinguishable from the instant case for two reasons. First, the state action in that case was non-adjudicative in nature. Second, and more importantly, the plaintiff made no allegation that the ABA knowingly made misrepresentations which were central to each state's actions.

at 1295. Thus, the injury was not directly [*177] caused by state action, but by the misrepresentations. Similarly in the instant case, the Board relied on the Hospital parties' statements of subjective intent in making its decision.

The majority believes that Woods is distinguishable from the present case because the Texas Railroad Commission "was wholly dependent on the antitrust defendants for the factual information on which it predicated its allocation of production from a given field." [Majority opinion at 18 n.8]. The court in Woods stated that the Railroad Commission had "no opportunity for meaningful supervision or verification" of the defendants' statements and therefore, the Commission "must rely on the truthfulness of the gas producers." Id. at 1295. I do not find Woods to be so different from this case. Here, the Department and Board had no way of ascertaining whether the Hospital truly intended to complete its ASC. The Department and the Board were reasonable in [73] relying on the defendants' statements, which clearly implied that the Hospital ASC would be completed and utilized. Further, the court in Woods did not require that the government entity be "wholly" dependent on the information provided by a defendant in order to deny state action immunity.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above I would hold state action immunity does not protect the defendants' actions. I also conclude there is a misrepresentation exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity and that it applies in this case. My view that material misrepresentations can vitiate Noerr-Pennington immunity is supported by Cheminor, 168 F.3d at 124, and the case law of other circuits, specifically the Fifth, Woods Exploration & Producing Co., Inc. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 438 F.2d 1286, 1298 (5th Cir. 1971), Sixth, Potters Medical Center v. City Hospital Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 580 (6th Cir. 1986), Ninth, Kottle v. Northwest Kidney Centers, 146 F.3d 1056, 1060 (9th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 143 L. Ed. 2d 40, 119 S. Ct. 1031 (1999), Eleventh, St. Joseph's Hospital v. Hospital Corp. of America, 795 F.2d 948, 955 (11th Cir. 1986), [74] and District of Columbia, Whelan v. Abell, 310 U.S. App. D.C. 396, 48 F.3d 1247, 1254-55 (D.C. Cir. 1995). See also Cheminor, 168 F.3d at 131 (Sloviter, J., dissenting) (citing Whelan and Kottle for the proposition that PRE preserves a fraud exception to antitrust immunity).

The misrepresentations were material as there is an overpowering inference that in denying the CON the Board accepted the Hospital parties' misrepresentation that the Hospital would complete construction and operate a Hospital ASC. These same misrepresentations caused the Board and Commonwealth Court to pass upon the question of whether there was a need for two ASCs. Specifically, the misrepresentations deprived the Board from passing upon the CON application based upon the true facts -- six hospital rooms vis-a-vis the grant of Armstrong's application for a CON, with concomitant cost savings of $ 400 per case, thereby meeting the statutory goal of meeting medical needs in an effective and cost efficient manner. We do not know, of course, whether the Board would have granted or denied the CON application had its proceeding not been so pervasively infected by the [75] misrepresentations and threat of boycott.

I respectfully and regrettably dissent for all of the reasons set forth above. While respecting my colleagues differing views, I cannot agree with them. I regret the majority result for two reasons. First, the majority opinion, in light of Cheminor, has provided little, if any, guidance to the bar, future litigants or the public. Second, to the extent the majority result provides guidance, it signals that it is willing to immunize clear antitrust violations if they can be disguised, however disingenuously, as petitioning activities without regard to whether they are legitimate, and without [*178] distinguishing the arena in which they are made.

Miller Pipeline Corp. v. British Gas PLC

United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division

July 27, 1999, Decided ; July 27, 1999, Opinion Filed

IP 94-1421-C-B/S

Reporter

69 F. Supp. 2d 1129 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15086 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,694

MILLER PIPELINE CORPORATION, Plaintiff, vs. BRITISH GAS PLC, Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Defendant's motion for partial summary judgment granted.

Core Terms

patents, pipe, fracturing, infringement, fragments, baseless, intense, mole, patent office, irregular, replacing, cutting, asserting, immunity, crack, anticompetitive, antitrust, sham, bad faith, contends, spreading, notices, antitrust liability, patent infringement, lawsuit, Sherman Act, threats, argues, axis, genuine issue of material fact

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

A motion for summary judgment shall be granted if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A genuine issue of material fact exists if there is sufficient evidence for a jury to return a verdict in favor of the nonmoving party on the particular issue.

69 F. Supp. 2d 1129, *1129 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15086, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A disputed fact is material only if it might affect the outcome of the suit in light of the substantive law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN4 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

While the burden rests squarely on the party moving for summary judgment to show that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case, the nonmoving party may not simply rest on the pleadings, but must affirmatively demonstrate by specific factual allegations that a genuine issue of material fact exists for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

Conclusory allegations by a party opposing a motion for summary judgment cannot defeat the motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN6 Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

The moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law if the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of her case with respect to which she has the burden of proof. However, if doubts remain as to the existence of a material fact, those doubts should be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party and summary judgment denied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN7 Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) provides that fraud must be pled with particularity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

69 F. Supp. 2d 1129, *1129 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15086, 1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

Antitrust liability under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act applies to the enforcement and maintenance of a patent obtained by fraud on the United States Patent and Trademark Office.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Clear & Convincing Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN9 [] Defenses, Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

In order to prove its claim that a party committed fraud on the United States Patent and Trademark Office in the procurement of its patents, a claimant must show by clear and convincing evidence that the party obtained its patents by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting or omitting material facts to the office.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Antitrust Immunity

HN10 [] Scope, Exemptions

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides general immunity from antitrust liability under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. 1 et seq., to persons pursuing relief through legislative action or influencing government officials, as well as administrative agencies and the courts, unless the activities are merely a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

69 F. Supp. 2d 1129, *1129 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15086, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN11[Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, an antitrust plaintiff first must show that the defendant's lawsuit is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under the doctrine, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. If the lawsuit is objectively baseless, the antitrust plaintiff must show additionally that the defendant's subjective motivation was anticompetitive, such that the defendant's meritless lawsuit conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Presumption of Validity

HN12[Infringement Actions, Burdens of Proof

Patent infringement claims are presumed to be brought in good faith. This presumption can be rebutted only by clear and convincing evidence.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: Donald Knebel, BARNES & THORNBURG, Indianapolis, Indiana.

For Defendant: Edward W. Harris, SOMMER & BARNARD, Indianapolis, Indiana.

For Defendant: Marvin Petry, LARSON & TAYLOR, Alexandria, Virginia.

Judges: SARAH EVANS BARKER, CHIEF JUDGE, United States District Court, Southern District of Indiana.

Opinion by: SARAH EVANS BARKER

Opinion

[*1130] ENTRY GRANTING DEFENDANT'S¹ MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT

This matter comes before the Court on Defendant's motion for partial summary judgment as to Plaintiff's claim that Defendant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 in asserting its patents against Plaintiff for anticompetitive [2] purposes. Defendant contends that Plaintiff's antitrust claim must fail because Defendant's assertion of its patents was not objectively baseless and thus Defendant is immune from antitrust liability. Plaintiff argues that antitrust immunity is not available in this case because (1) Defendant perpetrated fraud on the patent

¹We were informed after this decision was handed down, but before publication, that "in connection with a corporate reorganization during the pendency of this litigation, its name was changed to BG plc and the right to use the name British Gas plc was assigned to another entity."

office in prosecuting its patents, (2) Defendant asserted its patents against Plaintiff in bad faith and (3) Defendant's patent infringement claims were objectively baseless and motivated by an anticompetitive purpose. In addition to their submissions with respect to the current [*1131] motion, the parties incorporate their briefs and supporting evidence from Defendant's prior motion for partial summary judgment that Miller Pipeline infringes Defendant's patents. For the reasons set forth below, we grant Defendant's motion.

STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACTS²

[3] Plaintiff, Miller Pipeline Corporation ("Miller Pipeline"), is an Ohio corporation, having a principal place of business in Indianapolis, Indiana. Compl. P 1. Defendant, British Gas PLC ("British Gas"), is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of England and Wales, having a principal place of business at Rivermill House, 152 Grosvenor Road, London, SW1V 3JL, England. Compl. P 2. British Gas is the successor to British Gas Corporation, a government corporation that was dissolved in 1990. See id. Miller Pipeline and British Gas are competitors in the business of trenchless repair of underground pipes. Plaintiff Resp. Br. at 2. The relevant market at issue in this litigation is the licensing, promotion and sale of products and services for trenchless pipe repair. Id.

British Gas owns U.S. Patent No. 4,738,565 (the "565 patent"), entitled "Method of Replacing Mains," granted on April 19, 1988, and U.S. Patent No. 4,720,211 (the "211 patent"), entitled "Apparatus for Replacing Mains," granted on January 19, 1988. See Compl. P13; Def. Summary of Statement of Material Facts, Def. Prior Mot. Summ. Judg. ("SSMF") at 1. The '565 method patent and the '211 apparatus [4] patent disclose methods and apparatus for replacing crackable existing pipes with new pipe wherein the existing pipe is fractured into irregular fragments and the new pipe is moved into a clearance through the fractured pipe. The patents describe the use of a mole device to crack and expand the fragments of crackable existing pipe. Def. SSMF at 4-5. For purposes of its prior summary judgment motion on infringement, British Gas listed 4 exemplary claims, 2 from each patent. Claim 45 of the '565 patent describes:

- 45. A method for replacing an existing main with a new main, comprising the steps of:
 - A. starting with an existing main which is of a rigid material which cracks and is thus fracturable into irregular fragments,
 - B. moving a tool through the existing main which engages the internal wall thereof as it moves through the main, to apply an intense local pressure to the existing main to crack and fracture it into irregular fragments as the tool moves therethrough,
 - C. spreading the fragments outwardly generally about the axis of the tool to form a sufficient clearance through the fractured main for movement therethrough of an assembly for replacing the existing main, at [5] least a portion of the outward movement of the fragments occurring under the action of said intense local pressure which causes the fracturing of the existing main into irregular fragments.

Def. Prior Summ. Judg. Mot. Br. at 2-3. Claim 9 of the '565 patent describes:

- 9. A method for replacing an existing main which is of crackable, fracturable material with a new main using a mole having a front end which tapers radially inwardly towards the front of the mole and has a fracturing surface for engagement with the internal wall of the existing main, said fracturing surface comprising blades on the front end radially openable and retractable in relation to the axis of the taper surface, the method comprising

[*1132]

- A. attaching to the rear end of the mole a tubular replacement assembly,
- B. inserting the mole into the existing main with the front end of the mole leading and moving the mole along the existing main so that the front end of the mole engages internally with the existing main and ²The facts in this case are quite extensive, as the parties have been litigating since 1994 on very complex legal and factual issues. However, this motion addresses only Miller Pipeline's antitrust claim under the Sherman Act and so we will address facts relating to the patent infringement claims and defenses only to the extent necessary to establish a proper background for this case and when such facts are relevant to the issue directly before the Court today.

C. sequentially opening and retracting the blades to engage and fracture the wall of the existing main ahead of the assembly with the said blades exerting an intense local pressure [6] to crack and fracture the material of the existing main into irregular fragments,

D. spreading the fragments outwardly generally about the axis of the mole to form a sufficient clearance through the fractured main for movement of the assembly thereamong,

E. at least a portion of the outward spreading of the fragments occurring under the action of the blades essentially concurrently with the fracturing of the existing main into such fragments.

Def. Prior Summ. Judg. Mot. Br. at 3. Claim 31 of the '211 patent describes:

31. An apparatus for replacing an existing main which is of a rigid material which cracks and is fracturable into irregular fragments, said apparatus comprising:

A. an elongated pipe fracturing an displacement tool, (i) said tool having a fracturing means for applying an intense local pressure against the internal wall of the existing main to crack and fracture the existing main into irregular fragments, said fracturing means being operable to cause at least some outward movement of the fragments under the action of said intense local pressure which causes the fracturing of the main into irregular fragments, and said tool further having [7] (ii) an expansion means for moving the irregular fragments radially outwardly generally about the axis of the main to enlarge the clearance through the fractured existing main for the passage therethrough of an assembly for replacing the existing main, and

B. means for moving the tool through the existing clearance.

Def. Prior Summ. Judg. Mot. Br. at 3-4. Claim 22 of the '211 patent describes:

22. A device for replacing an existing buried fracturable main of a crackable fracturable material with a tubular replacement assembly, the device comprising:

A. an elongated main fracturing and bore widening mole for insertion into and movement along the existing main, the mole having

(i) a rearwardly, outwardly tapering bore widening potion having a small extremity not greater than the internal diameter of the buried fracturable main and a large extremity greater than the internal diameter of the buried fracturable main, to provide bore widening, and the mole being provided with

(ii) a fracturing means for applying an intense local pressure against the existing main to crack and fracture it into irregular fragments, said fracturing means comprising at least one retractable [8] outwardly movable main fracturing member which is so positioned on the mole to engage the internal wall of the fracturable main to crack and fracture the buried fracturable main to debris in the form of irregular fragments and causing at least some outward movement of said fragments, said large extremity comprising an expansion means for forcing the fragments radially outwardly from the axis of the existing main, generally about said axis to form a passage,

B. means for connecting the trailing end of the mole to a leading end of the assembly, whereby in use the new main or liner is moved linearly through the passage so formed, and

C. means for moving the mole through the buried fracturable main.

Def. Prior Summ. Judg. Mot. Br. at 4.

British Gas has been attempting to enforce its patents against allegedly infringing [*1133] devices by Miller Pipeline for many years, specifically products marketed under the name "XPANDIT" and including, among other things, a mole incorporating the invention disclosed in U.S. Patent No. 4,789,268 (the " '268 patent" or the "Yarnell mole"), a patent owned by Miller Pipeline and issued December 6, 1988. See Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 3; Compl. PP [9] 62-63. In June 1989, British Gas and its former exclusive licensee, PIM Corporation ("PIM"), first contacted Miller Pipeline and threatened to bring suit against Miller Pipeline for patent infringement based on its XPANDIT products and the Yarnell mole. Id.; Plaintiff. Exh. 1, Topf Aff. P 8. In August 1990, the parties met in Fredericksburg Virginia at a job site on which Miller Pipeline was using the Yarnell mole and other products to perform a trenchless operation in order that British Gas could witness the products in use. See Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 3; Topf Aff. P 10. The parties did not reach any resolution at this meeting or any other subsequent time. In late 1989 through at least 1994, British Gas also contacted several of Miller Pipeline's customers to inform them that it was British Gas' position that it may be entitled to royalties for the use of the XPANDIT system in view of its '565 patent. See Plaintiff. Exh. 2, letter to Costa Rica Sanitary District; Exh. 4, letter to Mountain Cascade Inc. However, British

69 F. Supp. 2d 1129, *1133 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15086, 9

Gas did not file suit against Miller Pipeline at this time. British Gas also pursued similar claims against TT Technologies, Inc. ("TTT") and Trenchless Replacement [10] Systems, Inc. ("TRS"), threatening these companies with patent infringement litigation but not bringing suit. See Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 4. Both TTT and TRS filed declaratory judgment actions against British Gas, at which point British Gas counterclaimed with its infringement claims, and the cases ultimately settled before trial. See id.

On September 23, 1994, Miller Pipeline sued British Gas for antitrust violations under § 2 of the Sherman Act, contending that British Gas asserted its patents against Miller Pipeline and certain of Miller Pipeline's customers in order to absorb all or most of the market in trenchless underground pipe repair and with the knowledge that such patents were invalid and unenforceable. Miller Pipeline contends that "British Gas has used two (invalid) patents against its competitors. For ten years, British Gas has threatened and coerced its competitors, and British Gas has done so in such a way as to avoid adjudication on the issues of validity and infringement." Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 6. Miller Pipeline also asserted a patent infringement claim based on its '268 patent against British Gas. British Gas subsequently filed an infringement action against [11] Miller Pipeline in the District of New Jersey on February 10, 1995 but did not serve Miller Pipeline immediately, instead seeking to negotiate a settlement agreement. See id. at 5. When its settlement attempts proved unsuccessful, British Gas served Miller Pipeline with the complaint, and the action was dismissed by the District of New Jersey in deference to the pending litigation in this case. See id. British Gas filed a counterclaim for patent infringement in the present litigation and also filed a Request for Reexamination with the United States Patent and Trademark Office of Miller Pipeline's '268 patent. Upon reexamination, the patentability of the '268 patent was confirmed, with amendments to some of the claims. See id. at 5-6.

British Gas moves for partial summary judgment on Miller Pipeline's antitrust claim, asserting that its patents are valid and enforceable and that in any event British Gas has a colorable claim for infringement by Miller Pipeline and that all that is required for immunity against antitrust claims is a reasonable belief that its patents are valid and infringed under the Noerr-Pennington "sham litigation" doctrine. Further, British Gas asserts [12] that Miller Pipeline has produced no evidence indicating that British Gas subjectively intended an anticompetitive effect by its conduct in attempting to enforce its patents. Thus, British Gas claims it is immune from liability for any alleged antitrust violation under the Sherman Act.

[*1134] Miller Pipeline responds that British Gas' attempts to enforce its patents were objectively baseless and subjectively motivated to produce an anticompetitive effect. Miller Pipeline also contends that there is more than one theory supporting its antitrust claims. In addition to the theory relied upon by British Gas, the Noerr-Pennington "sham litigation" doctrine, Miller Pipeline argues that it can prove that British Gas violated antitrust laws by showing that (1) British Gas obtained its patents through fraud on the patent office or (2) British Gas asserted its patents in "bad faith." British Gas asserts that Miller Pipeline has raised the theory of fraud on the patent office for the first time in this litigation in its response brief and that Miller Pipeline did not plead fraud with particularity in its complaint as required by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\). In addition, British Gas contends [13] that there is no generic "bad faith" theory for antitrust liability for asserting patent rights and that the only recognized theories are fraud in the prosecution of the patent or "sham litigation."

SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that HN1 [↑] a motion for summary judgment shall be granted "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). HN2 [↑] A genuine issue of material fact exists if there is sufficient evidence for a jury to return a verdict in favor of the nonmoving party on the particular issue. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2510, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\); Methodist Med. Center v. American Med. Sec., Inc., 38 F.3d 316, 319 \(7th Cir. 1994\). HN3 [↑] A disputed fact is material only if it might affect the outcome of the suit in light of the substantive law. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248, 106 S. Ct. at 2510; Greenslade v. Chicago Sun-Times, Inc., 112 F.3d 853, 857 \(7th Cir. 1997\). [14] Moreover, "in rendering a decision on a motion for summary judgment, a court must 'view the evidence presented through the prism of the substantive evidentiary burden' that would inhere at trial." Monarch Knitting Mach. Corp. v. Sulzer Morat GmbH, 139 F.3d 877, 880-881 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\) (quoting Anderson, 477 U.S. at 254, 106 S. Ct. at 2513). In considering a summary judgment motion, a court must draw all justifiable inferences in a light most favorable to the opposing party and must resolve any doubt against the moving party. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255, 106 S. Ct. at 2513; Spraying Sys. Co. v. Delavan, Inc., 975 F.2d 387, 392 \(7th Cir. 1992\).

69 F. Supp. 2d 1129, *1134 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15086, 14

HN4 [↑] While the burden rests squarely on the party moving for summary judgment to show "that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case," Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2553, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\), the nonmoving party may not simply rest on the pleadings, but must affirmatively demonstrate by specific factual allegations that a genuine issue of material fact exists for trial. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322-23, 106 S. Ct. at 2552-53; [15] Billups v. Methodist Hosp. of Chicago, 922 F.2d 1300, 1302 \(7th Cir. 1991\). HN5 [↑] Conclusory allegations by a party opposing a motion for summary judgment cannot defeat the motion. See Smith v. Shawnee Library System, 60 F.3d 317, 320 \(7th Cir. 1995\). HN6 [↑] The moving party is 'entitled to a judgment as a matter of law' [if] the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of her case with respect to which she has the burden of proof." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323, 106 S. Ct. at 2553. However, if doubts remain as to the existence of a material fact, those doubts should be resolved in favor of the nonmoving party and summary judgment denied. See Wolf v. City of Fitchburg, 870 F.2d 1327, 1330 \(7th Cir. 1989\).

DISCUSSION

First we will address the issue of fraud on the patent office. We agree with [*1135] British Gas that Miller Pipeline does not appear to have raised this theory previously, certainly not in their pleadings. HN7 [↑] Averments of fraud on the patent office must satisfy Rule 9\(b\)'s requirement that fraud be pled with particularity. See Xilinx Inc. v. Altera Corp., 33 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1149, 1150 \(N.D. Cal. 1994\); [16] Sun-Flex Co. Inc. v. Softview Computer Prods. Corp., 750 F. Supp. 962, 18 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1171, 1179 \(N.D. Ill. 1990\); Micro Motion, Inc. v. Exac Corp., 112 F.R.D. 2, 3 \(N.D. Cal. 1985\). Because Miller Pipeline has not alleged in its complaint that British Gas committed fraud on the patent office, it follows necessarily that Miller Pipeline has not pled fraud with particularity. However, in order to prevent merely delaying this issue while Miller Pipeline amends its complaint to add its fraud on the patent office allegation and because we find that we can decide the issue based on the evidence before the Court, we will address the merits of Miller Pipeline's fraudulent patent prosecution theory at this time.

The Supreme Court in Walker Process determined that HN8 [↑] antitrust liability under § 2 of the Sherman Act applies to the enforcement and maintenance of a patent obtained by fraud on the Patent and Trademark Office. Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery and Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 174, 86 S. Ct. 347, 349, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1965\). HN9 [↑] In order to prove its claim that British Gas committed fraud on the patent office in the [17] procurement of its patents, Miller Pipeline must show that British Gas obtained its patents by knowingly and willfully misrepresenting or omitting material facts to the patent office. See Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 177, 86 S. Ct. at 350. The Federal Circuit in Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\) articulated what type of evidence is required to prove fraud on the patent office under Walker Process. "Such a misrepresentation or omission must evidence a clear intent to deceive the examiner and thereby cause the PTO to grant an invalid patent. . . . A finding of Walker Process fraud requires higher threshold showings of both intent and materiality than does a finding of inequitable conduct. . . . It must be based on independent and clear evidence of deceptive intent together with a clear showing of reliance, i.e., that the patent would not have issued but for the misrepresentation or omission." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1070-1071. Because patents are presumed valid and "a patentee's infringement suit is presumptively in good faith," Miller Pipeline must prove fraud on the patent office by [18] clear and convincing evidence. See Argus Chemical Corp. v. Fibre Glass-Evercoat Co., 812 F.2d 1381, 1385 \(Fed. Cir. 1987\), quoting Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 601 F.2d 986, 996 \(9th Cir. 1979\).

Miller Pipeline asserts that British Gas committed fraud on the patent office in connection with its prosecution of its '565 patent, in particular its representations regarding U.S. Patent No. 3,181,302 (the "302 patent" or the "Lindsay patent"). In procuring its '565 patent, British Gas distinguished its invention over the Lindsay patent. Miller Pipeline challenges the following representation by British Gas to the patent examiner:

Applicant's operation of applying intense local pressure to crack and fracture the material of the existing main into irregular fragments is distinguishable from a true cutting action such as in Lindsay. Technically speaking, a cutting operation as in Lindsay involves an intense local pressure. But in a true "cutting" operation, the object is to apply the force so locally that the surrounding area of the subject material is undisturbed. This object is quite clear during the true cutting operation as in Lindsay, [19] wherein the cutter discs 46 slit a malleable pipe material without any intent to concurrently reposition or breakup the pipe at locations other than along the cutting line. (Of course the slit halves of Lindsay's pipe are eventually spread apart. But the spreading action is deferred until the pipe halves are subsequently engaged by spreader 20.) Another everyday example is the [*1136] cutting of a tomato. One seeks to make a cut in a tomato which is so sharp (the local pressure is so intense) that the knife will not disturb (mash) the portions of the tomato to either side of the cut. In contrast, the claims of the application now recite that the intense local pressure is characterized by causing cracking and fracturing into irregular elements, coupled with a disturbance of that general area sufficient for the fragments to be urged outwardly to some extent by the same intense local pressure action, and concurrently therewith.

Plaint. Exh. 8, '565 patent, Paper No. 8 at 15-16 (emphasis in original). British Gas also represented "Lindsay could not be modified to cut an existing pipe 'into a multiplicity of fragments rather than two halves.'" Plaintiff. Exh. 9, '565 patent, Paper No. [20] 7 at 14.

Miller Pipeline challenges the accuracy of these representations that the Lindsay patent could not be used for anything other than cutting malleable pipe. Miller Pipeline points to the fact that the Lindsay patent describes replacement of pipe "primarily due to corrosion of the pipe" (Plaint. Exh. 10, col. 1, line 12), asserting that "pipe which corrodes primarily is cast iron pipe, and contrary to British Gas' representations, the Lindsay device clearly was intended for use on cast iron pipe. Also, when pulled through cast iron pipe, the Lindsay device causes fracturing and cracking of the pipe." Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 12, citing Plaintiff. Exh. 11, Bowles Aff. PP 7, 8. Miller Pipeline's argument rests entirely on the affidavit of David A. Bowles, who worked with William R. Lindsay, the Lindsay patent inventor, in the late 50's and through the 60's, and who observed the Lindsay patented device in operation. See Bowles Aff. PP 3, 5, 6. In his affidavit, Mr. Bowles testified that he considers himself "intimately familiar with the operating principles of the Lindsay apparatus due to [his] involvement in designing, building and testing the same." Bowles Aff. P 5. Mr. Bowles [21] testified that "the Lindsay apparatus as described in the patent was intended and designed to crack and fracture existing pipes made of various frangible materials, including cast iron." Id. at P 7. He asserted that he had witnessed the Lindsay device in public demonstrations used on cast iron pipes and that the device did not sever the pipe in half but rather cracked and fractured the pipes. See id. at P 9. Miller Pipeline provides no additional evidence in support of its fraud claim.

Even assuming that Mr. Bowles' testimony is accurate and the Lindsay device was in fact designed and used to crack and fracture cast iron pipes in a similar fashion to the '565 patent, Miller Pipeline has produced no evidence suggesting that British Gas had knowledge of this fact, much less that British Gas willfully misrepresented this fact to the patent office with the intent to deceive.³ [23] In addition, Miller Pipeline has produced little or no evidence showing that this alleged misrepresentation was material and that the patent office relied upon it, such that the '565 patent would not have issued but for the misrepresentation (aside from the fact that British Gas addressed the issue in the [22] course of its patent prosecution, which we recognize indicates some measure of importance).⁴ Miller

³ It appears that Miller Pipeline at some point contended that the public demonstrations witnessed by Mr. Bowles constitute public use prior art, but Miller Pipeline has produced no evidence besides Mr. Bowles' own affidavit. British Gas argues that this uncorroborated evidence is insufficient, citing Lockheed Aircraft Corp. v. United States, 213 Ct. Cl. 395, 553 F.2d 69, 75 (Ct. Cl. 1977): "Indeed, the oral testimony of witnesses, speaking only from memory in regard to past transactions has, in the absence of contemporaneous documentary or physical evidence, consistently been found to be of little probative value Such uncorroborated testimony is insufficient to show anticipation, within the meaning of 35 U.S.C. § 102, of an issued patent." Miller Pipeline has not disputed this and so to the extent Miller Pipeline has advanced this argument, we consider it waived or abandoned, at least for purposes of this motion.

Pipeline asserts, "At best, it was [*1137] disingenuous for British Gas to represent that the teachings of the '302 patent are limited to the replacement of malleable pipe only. At worst, British Gas committed fraud on the patent office by making these misrepresentations." Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 12. However, this statement is nothing more than sheer speculation on Miller Pipeline's part. Considering Miller Pipeline's heavy burden at trial to prove by clear and convincing evidence that British Gas perpetrated fraud on the patent office, we find that Miller Pipeline has not produced sufficient evidence on several essential elements to survive summary judgment on this claim.

Next, Miller Pipeline asserts that British Gas is liable under antitrust law for asserting its patents in "bad faith," a theory Miller Pipeline claims is [24] distinct from the Noerr-Pennington "sham litigation" doctrine British Gas proposes. Miller Pipeline relies upon Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700 (Fed. Cir. 1992), Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co., 198 F.2d 416 (10th Cir. 1952) and Betmar Hats, Inc. v. Young America Hats, Inc., 116 F.2d 956 (2d Cir. 1941). These cases refer to infringement notices that were made in "bad faith" or for monopolistic purposes, lending support to Miller Pipeline's position that a showing of bad faith is sufficient for antitrust liability. See Mallinckrodt, 976 F.2d at 710; Kobe, 198 F.2d at 424-425; Betmar Hats, 116 F.2d at 957.

British Gas contends that there is no generic "bad faith" theory of antitrust liability for infringement notices and threats to sue, arguing that conduct falling short of actual litigation is still covered by HN10⁴ the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which provides general immunity from antitrust liability under the Sherman Act to persons pursuing relief through legislative action or influencing government officials, as well as administrative agencies and the courts, unless [25] the activities are merely a sham. See Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, (1965); California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972). "Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, therefore, 'the federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anti-competitive action from the government'" or courts. McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1558 (11th Cir. 1992), quoting City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, , 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1354, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). HN11⁴ In order to show that an antitrust defendant's lawsuit is a sham under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and thus not entitled to immunity, an antitrust plaintiff first must show that the defendant's lawsuit is "objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude [26] that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail." Professional Real Estate Investors v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1928, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). If the lawsuit is objectively baseless, the antitrust plaintiff must show additionally that the defendant's subjective motivation was anticompetitive, such that the defendant's meritless lawsuit "conceals an attempt to interfere directly with the business" [*1138] relationships of a competitor through the use of the governmental process--as opposed to the outcome of that process--as an anticompetitive weapon." PREI, 508 S. Ct. at 61, 113 S. Ct. at 1928 (citations omitted).

British Gas contends that its activities in notifying Miller Pipeline and its customers or competitors about potential infringement of British Gas patents and threatening to sue, although not litigation activities per se, nevertheless are covered by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and so Miller Pipeline must show that British Gas' infringement notices and threats to sue were [27] objectively baseless and subjectively motivated by anticompetitive purposes. See Def. Rep. Br. at 16, citing Glass Equipment Development, Inc. v. Besten, Inc., 174 F.3d 1337, 1999 WL 190747, *5 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (plaintiff failed to allege that defendant's "actual or threatened infringement suits were sham litigations"); Thermos Co. v. Igloo Prods. Corp., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18382, 1995 WL 745832, *5 (N.D. Ill. Dec.

⁴ Although this point is ignored by Miller Pipeline, we note that the patent office had the entire text of the Lindsay patent before it during the prosecution of the '565 patent and could have read the word "corrosion" in the text of the patent that Miller Pipeline finds so critical and could have determined independently whether the teachings of the Lindsay patent included cutting non-malleable pipe. While we recognize that prospective patentees may mislead the patent examiner, it is important to remember that British Gas disclosed the Lindsay patent and so the patent examiner had the opportunity to make its own determination, rather than relying exclusively on British Gas' representations. We do not need to factor this point into our analysis, primarily because Miller Pipeline has failed woefully in its evidentiary burden and because likely it is accounted for in the presumption of the validity of the patent, but we find it worthy of note.

13, 1995) ("Thermos' lawsuit and the related actions it took to protect its federally registered trademark constitute a protected activity immune from antitrust liability"); The Consortium, Inc. v. Knoxville Int'l Energy Exposition, 563 F. Supp. 56, 59 (E.D. Tenn. 1983) ("activity to enforce federal rights, short of filing lawsuits, must also be protected if the right of access to the courts is to have significance"); see also Pennwalt Corp. v. Zenith Laboratories, Inc., 472 F. Supp. 413, 424 (E.D. Mich. 1979) (granting Noerr-Pennington immunity to both lawsuits and threats of lawsuits). In addition, British Gas attempts to distinguish the cases cited by Miller Pipeline in support of its theory that mere "bad faith" is [28] enough to impose antitrust liability by asserting that such cases either dealt with issues other than antitrust law or were decided before PREI, 508 U.S. at 60-61, 113 S. Ct. at 1928, in which the Supreme Court reaffirmed the extension of Noerr-Pennington antitrust immunity to judicial proceedings and specifically in the intellectual property context.

We believe that extension of the "sham litigation" doctrine to activities that fall short of litigation but which manifest the patentholder's intent to protect its rights through judicial action, if necessary, is the more logical and practical rule and is consistent with the public interest in protecting access to the courts, a right derived at least in part from the First Amendment. Although the Seventh Circuit has not addressed this issue, we note that several circuit courts deciding this issue have found the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applicable to pre-litigation activities such as infringement notice letters and threats to sue, and we find this precedent persuasive. See Cardtoons v. Major League Baseball Players Assoc., 182 F.3d 1132, 1999 WL 436272, *4 (10th Cir. 1999); McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1558-1560 (11th Cir. 1992); [29] CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 850-851 (1st Cir. 1985); Coastal States Marketing, Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1367 (5th Cir. 1983); see also Glass Equipment Development Inc. v. Besten, 174 F.3d 1337, 1999 WL 190747, *5 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (stating that plaintiff failed to allege that defendant's "actual or threatened infringement suits were sham litigations," suggesting that threats to sue are covered by Noerr-Pennington). As the Fifth Circuit stated in Coastal States Marketing, "Given that petitioning immunity protects joint litigation, it would be absurd to hold that it does not protect those acts reasonably and normally attendant upon effective litigation. The litigator should not be protected only when he strikes without warning. If litigation is in good faith, a token of that sincerity is a warning that it will be commenced and a possible effort to compromise the dispute." 694 F.2d at 1367. Particularly because the patentholder's competitors who receive infringement notices and threats to sue have available to them the vehicle of a declaratory judgment action under 28 U.S.C. § 2201 [30] to challenge the patentholder's assertions of infringement,⁵ we find that the [*1139] sham litigation doctrine protects pre-litigation infringement notices and threats to sue. British Gas' activities about which Miller Pipeline complains in this case fall within this category and accordingly we will evaluate them under Noerr-Pennington and PREI, 508 U.S. at 60-61, 113 S. Ct. at 1928.

However, we note [31] that choosing between Miller Pipeline's and British Gas' proposed standards is somewhat unnecessary, as there appears to be little meaningful difference between them. Under the "bad faith" standard offered by Miller Pipeline, even if British Gas were incorrect as to the nature and scope of its patent rights, it would be absolved from liability as long as it had a good faith belief in its patent rights. See Mikohn, 165 F.3d 891 at 897. In other words, if the information contained within the notices was inaccurate but British Gas honestly and reasonably believed it to be true, it would not be subject to liability, while as long as the information was correct, even if British Gas had an anticompetitive motive for providing infringement notices, the notices would be legal. This standard is not unlike the objectively baseless and subjective anticompetitive intent standard of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine proposed by British Gas. Under both standards, any anticompetitive motive by British Gas is irrelevant as long as its patents are valid and infringed or British Gas had a reasonable belief in the validity and infringement of its patents. However, we will use the standards [32] set forth in Noerr-Pennington and its progeny to decide whether British Gas is entitled to antitrust immunity for its litigation-related activities. Because there is no dispute that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies to British Gas' infringement counterclaims in the present action and British Gas' pre-litigation activities are predicated on the same patents and claims as the counterclaim, we will consider all of British Gas' patent enforcement activities together in the same analysis.

⁵ See, e.g., Kaplan v. Helenhart Novelty Corp., 182 F.2d 311, 314 (2d Cir. 1950): "The only evidence of bad faith is the defendants' failure to sue promptly. But the plaintiffs have continuously had a plain and complete remedy for any wrong done them, in that they could have brought this suit whenever they pleased after the first notice was given, instead of waiting as they did . . . Any delay in putting the defendants' asserted rights to the test of actual litigation was, therefore, only what the plaintiffs chose to permit . . . The suit is as timely as they chose to make it."

Turning to the merits, we first must examine Miller Pipeline's allegations of anticompetitive conduct by British Gas. Miller Pipeline asserts that British Gas acted in restraint of trade by (1) repeatedly notifying Miller Pipeline, its customers and its competitors of its patents, (2) repeatedly threatening to sue for patent infringement without intending to sue and (3) bringing objectively baseless counterclaims in bad faith against Miller Pipeline in this lawsuit. Miller Pipeline asserts that these activities constitute an attempt by British Gas to monopolize the market in the promotion and sales of products and services related to trenchless repair and replacement of utility pipes in the [33] United States. As discussed above, British Gas' subjective intent is irrelevant provided it had a reasonable belief in the validity and infringement of its patent rights. Thus, our inquiry must focus first on the objective merits of British Gas' infringement claims to determine whether British Gas had probable cause to sue or threaten to sue Miller Pipeline for infringement. We must determine whether Miller Pipeline has shown that there is a genuine issue of material fact that British Gas' claims were objectively baseless. In addition, we recognize that, "as patents are cloaked in a presumption of validity, HN12[¹²] a patent infringement suit is presumed to be brought in good faith," Atari Games Corp. v. Nintendo of America, 897 F.2d 1572, 1577 \(Fed. Cir. 1990\), and "this presumption can be rebutted only by clear and convincing evidence," Argus Chemical Corp. v. Fibre Glass-Evercoat Co., 812 F.2d 1381, 1385 \(Fed. Cir. 1987\).

Miller Pipeline argues as follows: "Miller [Pipeline] concedes that the British Gas [*1140] patents are facially valid and are susceptible to a valid claim interpretation. However, under a valid claim interpretation, Miller's devices do not [34] infringe." Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 19. Miller Pipeline claims that:

in order to be valid over the prior art, British Gas' claims must be interpreted more narrowly than British Gas has asserted, and such a narrow interpretation necessarily means that Miller does not infringe. If the claims are given the broad interpretation asserted by British Gas, then British Gas' patent claims are invalid due to the prior art. Either Miller does not infringe or British Gas' claims are invalid. British Gas cannot have it both ways. Given that there is no construction which renders the British Gas patents valid and infringed, there is no objective basis for British Gas' infringement counterclaims.

Id. (citations omitted). As an example, Miller Pipeline focuses the Court's attention on the "intense local pressure" claim language in British Gas' '565 patent. Miller Pipeline contends that the prosecution history of the '565 patent reveals that "intense local pressure" was made distinct from "cutting" to allow the '565 patent to be patentable over the prior art, the Lindsay '302 patent. Miller Pipeline argues further that "this distinction was necessary for patentability, since the [35] prior art Lindsay device cuts the pipe with a series of rollers. Thus, in order to be patentable over the prior art, the 'intense local pressure' of the '565 patent cannot include cutting with rollers." Plaintiff. Resp. Br. at 20. Miller Pipeline contends that each of its challenged devices contains such rollers and so cannot infringe British Gas' patent.

British Gas, of course, disputes Miller Pipeline's proposed claim construction, referring the Court to the prosecution history of the '565 and '211 patents. British Gas contends that the words "intense local pressure" were never meant to be considered alone, particularly as it was undisputed that the Lindsay '302 patent, the prior art, contained the words "intense local pressure." Rather, British Gas argues that in the prosecution of the '565 and '211 patents, the patent examiner was concerned that the claims specify that the intense local pressure was of a kind that would cause the pipe to fracture into irregular fragments and cause the fragments to spread outward about the axis of the pipe, as distinct from the type of intense local pressure that would cut the pipe into halves, citing to British Gas' own statements as applicant ([36] see Plaintiff. Exh. 8, '565 patent, Paper No. 8 at 15-16, quoted in discussion above) and the patent examiner's statements in allowing the amended claims. The patent examiner stated, ". . . the claims are considered to be patentable over the reference to Lindsay in that Applicants' fracturing means are claimed as being 'operable to cause at least some outward movement of the fragments under the action of said intense local pressure which causes the fracturing of the main into irregular fragments.' This distinction was pointed out by Applicants' attorney, Mr. Petry, during the interview of June 25, 1987." Def. Statement of Material Facts, Def. Prior Summ. Judg. Mot. ("SMF") P 26, quoting prosecution history, A/573. Earlier in the prosecution history, in the portion of the Examiner Interview Summary Record entitled "Description of the general nature of what was agreed to . . .", the Examiner stated: "The claims to be amended to include the pipe broken by intense local pressure into irregular pieces; the pieces are spread generally about the axis; and the breaking and spreading takes place at the same location axially and at the same time." SMF P 19, quoting prosecution history, A/429.

[37] We find that British Gas' argument is supported reasonably by the language of the claims themselves and the prosecution history, including the remarks of the patent examiner, and that Miller Pipeline has not produced sufficient evidence supporting its proposed claim construction and non-infringement arguments to create a genuine issue of material fact that British Gas' claims were objectively baseless. [*1141] While the language of the prosecution history may be susceptible to the interpretation urged by Miller Pipeline, it is by no means clear that it is the only possible, reasonable interpretation or that British Gas' proposed interpretation is completely without support in the language of the claims and the prosecution history, nor has Miller Pipeline even created a genuine issue of material fact on this issue. The thrust of Miller Pipeline's argument appears to be that, because its devices are based upon the Lindsay '302 patented device, there is no way its devices can infringe the '565 patent. However, we note that Miller Pipeline does not dispute that it has made modifications to the Lindsay '302 patented design in its devices. We recognize that the Lindsay '302 patent in fact utilizes [38] some kind of cutting wheels to apply pressure, and that Miller Pipeline's device appears to use a similar mechanism, but the importance of the cutting wheels themselves is unclear, and Miller Pipeline has not explained or supported its relevance adequately. In fact, British Gas points out certain differences between the Lindsay device's cutting wheels and the cutting wheels used in Miller Pipeline's device, for example, the fact that "Lindsay's pipe cutter (part 18) has twenty longitudinally spaced cutter discs (part 46) all in a single plane (See Figs. 9 and 10 of '302). In contrast, Miller's accused 1994 device uses a frame with three wings and mounts three or four disc-shaped blades per wing. Miller also uses three triangular fin-like blades which are not shown by Lindsay '302." Def. Prior Summ. Judg. Mot. Br. at 40.

The essence of Miller Pipeline's entire non-infringement theory appears to involve whether the Lindsay '302 patent covers fracturing crackable pipe into irregular pieces, rather than just cutting nonmalleable pipe into two halves, as British Gas contends. The only evidence that Miller Pipeline produces in support of its theory is the affidavit of Dr. Bowles, discussed [39] above, while British Gas points to the language of the Lindsay '302 patent claims, which describe a "pipe splitter and spreader" and inventions for "a mechanism for replacing existing pipes with new pipes, the mechanism including means for slitting and spreading the existing pipe and then pulling a new pipe through the spread apart halves of the existing pipe, whereby the new pipe occupies the position of the existing pipe." Plaintiff Exh. 10, '302 patent, col. 1, lines 23-28; see also col. 1, lines 29-39; lines 52-60; col. 1, lines 70-72 through col. 2, lines 1-5 (describing similar mechanisms). This claim language of the '302 patent clearly describes slitting or cutting an existing pipe in half, rather than breaking the pipe into irregular fragments. While Dr. Bowles' affidavit may be enough to create a genuine issue of material fact as to the teachings of the Lindsay patented device,⁶ it is not adequate alone to support reasonably the conclusion that British Gas' claims are objectively baseless.

[40] After thoroughly reviewing the evidence in the record and the parties' arguments with respect to British Gas' infringement claims presented in the motion currently before the Court as well as British Gas' prior summary judgment motion, we cannot conclude that British Gas' claims are objectively baseless. On the contrary, it appears that there is a genuine dispute between the parties as to the proper claim construction of British Gas' patents, as well as the teachings and limitations of the Lindsay '302 patent and the relation of Miller Pipeline's devices to the Lindsay '302 patent and British Gas' patents. In addition, we find that Miller Pipeline has failed to meet its heavy burden to overcome the presumption that patent infringement claims are brought in good [*1142] faith and create a genuine issue of material fact that British Gas' claims were objectively baseless. Miller Pipeline's arguments are aimed at the ultimate question of infringement and it repeatedly argues that its position is correct and that "there is no way for the claims of the '565 patent to be broad enough to cover the Miller devices and not be invalid due to prior art." Plaintiff Resp. Br. at 20. However, this is mere [41] attorney argument, and Miller Pipeline does not present sufficient evidence or legal argument to support a jury determination that Miller Pipeline's interpretation is the only reasonable one or that no reasonable person would take the position British Gas has adopted, and we find such a conclusion unlikely from our review of the legal arguments and evidence in this case. This is a relatively complicated patent infringement case with sophisticated legal and factual arguments. Although there may seem to be only a subtle difference between arguing that one's position is correct and presenting support for the argument that one's position is the only possible, objective, definitive result, this distinction is critical in the determination of whether a claim is objectively baseless. We acknowledge that objective baselessness is very difficult to prove, for a litigant's reasonable belief in its chance to achieve success on the merits is quite a low threshold.

⁶ We do not need to decide whether Dr. Bowles' affidavit in fact creates a genuine issue of material fact about the teachings of the Lindsay '302 patent because it is not necessary to determine of the motion presently before the Court. However, we note that British Gas challenges Dr. Bowles' affidavit on many grounds, including inadmissible hearsay.

While we do not need to decide at this point whether British Gas ultimately will prevail on its infringement claims (and success or failure on the merits is not determinative of the issue of objective baselessness in any event, see [\[42\] PREI, 508 U.S. at 65, 113 S. Ct. at 1930-1931](#)), we find that Miller Pipeline's antitrust claim cannot survive because our independent review of the record reveals that British Gas' claims were not objectively baseless and further, because Miller Pipeline has not directed our attention to sufficiently compelling evidence or legal precedent from which a reasonable jury could conclude that British Gas' infringement claims were objectively baseless and asserted by British Gas without any reasonable belief in success on the merits. Because Miller Pipeline did not satisfy its admittedly steep burden as to the objective prong of the sham litigation test and we find that British Gas' claims were not objectively baseless, we do not need to examine British Gas' subjective motive in threatening to sue Miller Pipeline for infringement and filing its counterclaim and the other litigation-related activities about which Miller Pipeline complains.⁷ Accordingly, we grant British Gas' motion for partial summary judgment as to Miller Pipeline's claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

[43] CONCLUSION

Defendant moves for partial summary judgment on Plaintiff's claim that Defendant enforced its patents against Plaintiff in an anticompetitive manner in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. Defendant argues that it is immune from antitrust liability for asserting and enforcing its patents because it had at least a reasonable belief that Plaintiff was infringing its patents. Plaintiff responds that Defendant is not entitled to immunity because Defendant committed fraud on the patent office [\[*1143\]](#) in the procurement of its patents and asserted its patents against Plaintiff in bad faith. Plaintiff also argues that Defendant's infringement claims were objectively baseless. For the reasons discussed in the Court's opinion above, we find that (1) there is insufficient evidence to support the claim of fraud on the patent office; (2) British Gas' patent enforcement activities, including pre-litigation infringement notices and threats to sue, are subject to the Noerr-Pennington "sham litigation" doctrine and (3) British Gas' infringement claims were not objectively baseless. Accordingly, we hold that British Gas is entitled to antitrust immunity under the Noerr-Pennington [\[44\]](#) doctrine and grant British Gas' motion for partial summary judgment on Miller Pipeline's claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act.

It is so ORDERED this 27th day of July 1999.

SARAH EVANS BARKER, CHIEF JUDGE

United States District Court

Southern District of Indiana

⁷ Miller Pipeline relies upon Kobe, 198 F.2d at 425, for the proposition that British Gas' activities, taken as a whole, support a finding of anticompetitive conduct. We note that the Tenth Circuit in Kobe did find that the patentholder's infringement lawsuit and related activities were unlawful because they were intended and designed to further and give effect to an overall monopolistic scheme. However, the court expressly stated, "The infringement action and the related activities, of course, in themselves were not unlawful, and standing alone would not be sufficient to sustain a claim for damages which they may have caused . . ." 198 F.2d at 425. The Kobe court found such activities illegal only in combination with the rest of the patentholder's anticompetitive scheme. Here, Miller Pipeline only complains about British Gas' activities related to its infringement notices and threats to bring suit and other litigation-related activities and does not identify any broader monopolistic scheme of which these activities constitute only a part. Thus, we find that Kobe does not speak to this case.

End of Document

South Milwaukee Sav. Bank v. Barczak

Court of Appeals of Wisconsin

May 12, 1999, Oral Argument ; July 27, 1999, Decided ; July 27, 1999, Opinion Filed

No. 97-3759

Reporter

229 Wis. 2d 521 *; 600 N.W.2d 205 ; 1999 Wisc. App. LEXIS 802 ***

South Milwaukee Savings Bank, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Gary J. Barczak, in his official capacity as Clerk of Courts, unknown Clerk of Courts Docketing Clerk and Rod Lansen, Defendants-Respondents.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL from an order of the circuit court for Milwaukee County: LEE E. WELLS, Judge.

Disposition: Reversed and cause remanded with directions.

Core Terms

docketed, statute of limitations, clerk's office, six-year, anti-trust, judgments, two-year, proper time, trial court, summary judgment, wage statute, twenty-four, circumstances, treble damages, courts, deeds

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The interpretation of a statute is a question of law which an appellate court reviews de novo without deference to the circuit court's decision.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2[Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

An appellate court's review of a trial court's denial of summary judgment is de novo. Summary judgment should be granted if the evidence demonstrates that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Wis. Stat. § 802.08\(2\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judges

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN3[Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Wis. Stat. § 893.93\(1\)\(a\) imposes a six-year statute of limitations on actions upon liabilities created by statute when a different limitation is not prescribed by law. Section 806.10\(3\) plainly creates and imposes liability upon any clerk who fails to docket a judgment at the proper time. By contrast, Wis. Stat. § 893.93\(2\)\(a\) imposes a two-year statute of limitations upon an action by a private party upon a statute penalty.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Governments > Courts > Judges

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4[Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Although true that Wis. Stat. § 806.10\(3\) has some of the characteristics of anti-trust statutes, because it provides for treble damages which suggests a punitive intent, and the general public may derive some benefit from the statute's operation, § 806.10\(3\) does not provide public and private enforcement mechanisms, and does not create criminal penalties like the anti-trust statutes. Section 806.10\(3\) provides an individual remedy for damages to an individual party caused by the acts and omissions of the clerk's office, thus leading to the application of the six-year statute of limitations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Statutory Construction

Governments > Courts > Judges

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN5 Statute of Limitations, Statutory Construction

Unless the legislature clearly requires the application of a specific statute of limitations, case law requires application of the six-year statute of limitations. Reviewing courts must interpret statutes of limitations so that no person's cause of action will be barred unless clearly mandated by the legislature. Absent a clear legislative mandate, case law instructs that the two-year statute of limitations must be narrowly construed in favor of plaintiffs to avoid extinguishing otherwise meritorious claims. Wis. Stat. § 806.10\(3\) is covered by the six-year statute of limitations.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

Ordinarily a court must apply statutes as they are written, unless to do so would lead to an absurd result that did not reflect the legislature's intent.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Courts > Judges

HN7 Legislation, Interpretation

In determining if the docketing statute, Wis. Stat. § 806.10\(3\), has been violated the court needs to look at the individual circumstances presented in each case.

Counsel: On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, the cause was submitted on the briefs of Mark E. Sostarich of Petrie & Stocking, S.C., of Milwaukee, with oral argument by Mark E. Sostarich.

On behalf of the defendants-respondents, the cause was submitted on the brief of Mark A. Grady, Principal Assistant Corporation Counsel, of the Office of Milwaukee County Corporation Counsel.

Judges: Before Wedemeyer, P.J., Schudson and Curley, JJ.

Opinion by: CURLEY

Opinion

[206] [*524] CURLEY, J. South Milwaukee Savings Bank (South Milwaukee) appeals from the trial court's grant of summary judgment to the former Milwaukee County Clerk of Courts in South Milwaukee's suit alleging that an employee of the clerk of courts office violated § 806.10\(3\), Stats., by failing to docket, at the proper time, a judgment granting South Milwaukee money damages which, in turn, impaired South Milwaukee's collection attempts.¹

[2] South Milwaukee argues that the trial court erred in deciding that: (1) the two-year statute of limitations found in § 893.93\(2\)\(a\), Stats., not the six-year statute of limitations in § 893.93\(1\)\(a\), Stats., applies to actions under § 806.10\(3\); (2) South Milwaukee's cause of action accrued on September 27, 1994, the day after the clerk's office received the judgment, and not when South Milwaukee discovered the [*525] delayed docketing; (3) the requirement in § 806.10\(3\) that judgments be docketed "at the proper time" was ambiguous in describing when a judgment should be docketed and that "at the proper time" meant "as soon as practicable" or "within a reasonable time";² [4] and [207] (4) the respondent complied with § 806.10\(3\) by docketing the judgment the day after receipt of the judgment. In addition, South Milwaukee argues that the trial court improperly expanded the record without notice and that it was entitled to summary judgment. Because we agree with South Milwaukee that the six-year statute of limitations should govern actions under § 806.10\(3\), and because we are satisfied that under the undisputed facts of this case, as a matter of law, the respondent violated § 806.10\(3\) when [*3] the clerk failed to docket the judgment until the day after receipt, we reverse and [*526] remand and direct the trial court to enter partial summary judgment for South Milwaukee.³

[5] [*527] I. Background.

On October 13, 1993, South Milwaukee filed an action against Nikolau-Rooney Real Estate Investment Corporation for a money judgment on a promissory note and guarantee of the note. South Milwaukee also sued John W.

¹ Also listed in the complaint as defendants are "unknown docketing clerk" and Rod Lansen. No clerk has ever been identified, and no claims are raised regarding Rod Lansen. Thus, we assume that the former Milwaukee County Clerk of Courts is the sole defendant in this suit.

² The respondent argued, and the trial court agreed, that § 806.10\(3\)'s legislative history indicates that "at the proper time" means "as soon as practicable" and "reasonable." Respondent argued that an analysis of § 806.10\(3\)'s legislative history revealed that in the 1800's our legislature passed two laws, which appeared to be overlapping or duplicative, requiring the clerk to docket judgments "as soon as practicable" and "at the proper time," respectively. The two statutes existed side by side until 1897 when a revisor's bill eliminated the former. The respondent argued that despite eliminating this section, the revisor did not, and could not, intend any substantive change in the statute's meaning. Because the revisor could not have intended any substantive change in the statute's meaning, the respondent argued that the two statutes must be interpreted together so that "at the proper time" means "as soon as practicable." The trial court agreed with the respondent that statutory history and "statutory common sense" dictate that "at the proper time" means "as soon as practicable," and the trial court then concluded that "as soon as practicable" is consistent with "reasonable."

³ As an initial matter, we decline to address an argument raised by the respondent for the first time on appeal that the docketing date is irrelevant because the unrecorded conveyances remain valid against a judgment creditor. The respondent concludes that the time of docketing is irrelevant because the unrecorded quitclaim deed executed by Rooney rendered the judgment obtained against him ineffective. The respondent concedes that under § 706.08(1)(a), Stats., conveyances that are not recorded are void against any subsequent good faith purchasers for value; however, the respondent argues that an unrecorded conveyance remains valid against a judgment creditor, because a judgment creditor is not a good faith purchaser for value. Because South Milwaukee is a judgment creditor, not a good faith purchaser, the respondent concludes that the unrecorded quitclaim deed is valid against South Milwaukee and precludes recovery. Therefore, the Respondent reasons, if the judgment itself is ineffective, the time that the clerk's office actually docketed the judgment is irrelevant and could not have harmed South Milwaukee.

As a general rule, we refuse to consider issues raised for the first time on appeal. See Wirth v. Ehly, 93 Wis. 2d 433, 443-44, 287 N.W.2d 140, 145-46 (1980). The respondent acknowledges that it raises this argument for the first time on appeal but cites Johnson v. Seipel, 152 Wis. 2d 636, 449 N.W.2d 66 (Ct. App. 1989), for the proposition that this court may affirm the circuit court's decision based on any ground contained in the record. We are satisfied that Seipel is distinguishable on its facts and does not allow respondent to raise this issue for the first time on appeal. Further, at oral argument, counsel for South Milwaukee asserted that had the respondent raised this argument at trial, South Milwaukee would have challenged the validity of the deeds as well as their authenticity. Thus, it would be premature for us to address this issue here.

Rooney, Jr., because he signed a personal guarantee for the corporation's loan. On September 26, 1994, the circuit court granted summary judgment in favor of South Milwaukee in its suit against both the corporation and Rooney, and awarded $ 304,105.91 in damages.

After the hearing, South Milwaukee's attorney gave the trial court a proposed order and judgment which the trial court reviewed and signed. South Milwaukee's attorney then obtained the court file, went to the Milwaukee County judgment clerk's office at approximately 3:30 p.m., and paid the appropriate judgment and docketing fees. The clerk's office entered the judgment, but for reasons never explained, failed to docket the judgment until the [208] following day despite the fact that the clerk's office was open until 5:00 p.m.⁴

[6] The judgment encumbered two rental properties owned by Rooney. Although Rooney was out of the country when the trial court issued its judgment, his wife was present in the courtroom and heard the trial court's decision. After the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of South Milwaukee, Mrs. Rooney went home and retrieved two quitclaim deeds dated September 12, 1994, that allegedly conveyed Rooney's interest in the property to her. Mrs. Rooney, armed with her two quitclaim deeds, returned to the courthouse [*528] and went to the Register of Deeds office where she had the quitclaim deeds recorded. This occurred after the clerk's office entered South Milwaukee's judgment but before it was docketed.

Evidence submitted in support of the summary judgment motion revealed that in September of 1994, the clerk's office was in the process of implementing a computerized system for recording, entering, and docketing judgments. The old "manual system" required two steps: (1) the judgment would be presented, the appropriate fee paid, and the clerk would sign the judgment and formally enter it; and (2) the docketing clerk would type the judgment into what eventually became the Judgment Docket. [7] Depending on the circumstances, the entire process could take between one and three days.⁵

Additionally, despite the statutory mandate that judgments be docketed "at the proper time," the clerk's office devoted only a few hours a day to docketing judgments. On the day South Milwaukee's judgment was entered the clerk's office stopped docketing judgments at 3:20 p.m. and did not begin again until the following day.

Unaware of the delayed docketing, South Milwaukee proceeded in its attempt to collect the debt owed to it by Rooney. To satisfy the debt, South Milwaukee obtained an execution on its judgment and purchased the [8] Rooney rental properties at a Sheriff's sale for [*529] $ 115,000. South Milwaukee then filed a collection action against the Rooneys. As a result, Mrs. Rooney and South Milwaukee entered into a stipulated judgment that stated that South Milwaukee's judgment was for debt incurred in the interest of the marriage or family and was subject to satisfaction from all marital assets. This judgment was taken to the clerk's office and entered on May 15, 1995. Although South Milwaukee paid the docketing fee, the Milwaukee County Clerk's Office never docketed this judgment.

Unbeknown to South Milwaukee, Mrs. Rooney borrowed $ 78,000 from Wauwatosa Savings Bank (Wauwatosa) and gave the bank a mortgage on the rental properties as security. When it learned of the mortgage, South Milwaukee filed an action against Mrs. Rooney and Wauwatosa seeking a determination of the priority of South Milwaukee's lien as to Wauwatosa's mortgage; and if Wauwatosa held the superior position, a determination that the deed transfer was fraudulent; further, South Milwaukee requested the appointment of a receiver to sell the property to satisfy the mortgage and apply the balance to South Milwaukee's claim.

⁴ This court takes judicial notice of the fact that the filing clerk's office in the Milwaukee County Clerk of Courts' office closes at 5:00 p.m. This has been the practice for many years.

⁵ We are advised that under the current computerized system, the judgment is entered and docketed at the same time by the same clerk. The clerk's office did not switch to the new system until January of 1995. At the time at issue in this case, both systems were in place and the old system was being phased out. The judgment in question was entered and docketed using the old manual process.

In the priority [9] lien suit, summary judgment was granted in favor of Wauwatosa because Wauwatosa held a priority lien interest as a good faith purchaser. South Milwaukee contends that if the original [209] judgment would have been docketed before Mrs. Rooney filed the quitclaim deeds, South Milwaukee would have had a priority position over Wauwatosa. South Milwaukee started this action against the respondent arguing that pursuant to § 806.10\(3\), Stats., the clerk's office failed to docket the judgment "at the proper time" and South Milwaukee was entitled to treble damages. The statute in question reads:

[*530] Every clerk of circuit court who enters a judgment or decree and enters upon the judgment and lien docket a date or time other than that of its actual entry or neglects to enter the same at the proper time shall be liable in treble damages to the party injured.

Section 806.10\(3\), Stats., 1995-96 (emphasis added). The trial court granted the respondent's motion for summary judgment on several grounds. It found that: (1) the two-year and not the six-year statute of limitations applied; (2) South Milwaukee's cause of action accrued on September 27, 1994 and not at a later date; therefore, the [10] statute of limitations had run on this claim; (3) the wording of § 806.10\(3\), Stats. that docketing be done "at the proper time" was ambiguous and actually meant "as soon as practicable" and within a "reasonable" time; and (4) applying this interpretation of the language, the respondent complied with the statute by docketing the South Milwaukee judgment on September 27, 1994. This appeal follows.

II. Analysis.

South Milwaukee's appeal requires this court to determine the proper interpretation and application of a Wisconsin statute. HN1 The interpretation of a statute is a question of law which we review de novo without deference to the circuit court's decision. See [Erdman v. Jovoco, Inc., 181 Wis. 2d 736, 748, 512 N.W.2d 487, 491 (1994); In re I.V., 109 Wis. 2d 407, 409, 326 N.W.2d 127, 128 (Ct. App. 1982).

Because our interpretation of the statute requires us to reverse the trial court and apply the six-year statute of limitations, South Milwaukee has stated a [*531] viable cause of action and its motion for summary judgment must be considered. HN2 Our review of a trial court's denial of summary judgment is de novo. See [Green Spring Farms v. Kersten, 136 Wis. 2d 304, 315-16, 401 N.W.2d 816, 820 (1987). [11] Summary judgment should be granted if the evidence demonstrates "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Rule 802.08(2), Stats.

A. The six-year statute of limitations applies to actions brought under § 806.10(3), Stats.

South Milwaukee maintains that the circuit court erred in finding that the two-year statute of limitations contained in § 893.93\(2\)\(a\), Stats., governs actions under § 806.10\(3\), Stats. Instead, it argues the six-year statute of limitations should apply. We agree.

In Jovoco, the Wisconsin Supreme Court addressed the issue of whether a two-year, or a six-year statute of limitations governed a Wisconsin statute that prohibited employers, except under certain conditions, from deducting amounts from an employee's wages, absent written authorization from the employee. In deciding that the six-year statute of limitations applies here, we replicate the supreme court's analysis in Jovoco in which the supreme court determined that the six-year statute of limitations applied to a wage statute. This analysis requires us to interpret the statute in question, [12] to ascertain its intended purpose, and to decide whether the statute redressed a public wrong or remedied an individual harm. See Jovoco, 181 Wis. 2d at 761-63, 512 N.W.2d at 495-97. After applying the Jovoco analysis, we conclude that § 806.10\(3\), Stats., its intended purpose, and, in particular, [*532] its effect on individuals, requires [210] the application of the six-year statute of limitations.

1. The plain language of § 806.10(3), Stats., does not indicate which statute of limitations to apply.

HN3[[↑]] The plain language of § 806.10\(3\), Stats., as applied to the statutes of limitations found in § 893.93, Stats., creates a legitimate debate over which is the proper statute of limitations. Section 893.93\(1\)\(a\) imposes a six-year statute of limitations on actions upon liabilities "created by statute when a different limitation is not prescribed by law." Section 806.10\(3\) plainly creates and imposes liability upon any clerk who fails to docket a judgment at the proper time. By contrast, § 893.93\(2\)\(a\) imposes a two-year statute of limitations upon an action by a private party upon a statute penalty. Since South Milwaukee is a private party and § 806.10\(3\) [13] imposes treble damages, these facts make § 806.10\(3\) a statute penalty. Therefore, the plain language of § 806.10\(3\) is of little help in deciding which statute of limitations must be applied. Because the statutory language does not indicate which statute of limitations to apply, we next consider the statute's intended purpose, and determine whether it redresses a public wrong or remedies an individual harm.

2. Section 806.10\(3\), Stats., like the wage statute at issue in Jovoco, remedies an individual harm.

In Jovoco, the supreme court noted that the two-year statute of limitations under § 893.93\(2\)\(a\), Stats., had previously only been interpreted to apply to state anti-trust actions. See Jovoco, 181 Wis. 2d at 760, 512 N.W.2d at 495 (citing Open Pantry Food Marts v. Falcone, [*533] 92 Wis. 2d 807, 286 N.W.2d 149 (Ct. App. 1979); Segall v. Hurwitz, 114 Wis. 2d 471, 339 N.W.2d 333 (Ct. App. 1983)). Further, the supreme court characterized the anti-trust laws as remedial provisions intended to "preserve the free enterprise system." See Jovoco, 181 Wis. 2d at 761, 512 N.W.2d at 496 [14] (quoting City of Madison v. Hyland, Hall & Co., 73 Wis. 2d 364, 373, 243 N.W.2d 422, 427 (1976)); see also Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 262, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184, 92 S. Ct. 885 (1972) ("Every violation of the antitrust laws is a blow to the free-enterprise system envisaged by Congress."). Finally, the supreme court articulated that the anti-trust law is punitive in nature because it provides for treble damages which amounts to a statutory penalty. See Jovoco, 181 Wis. 2d at 761, 512 N.W.2d at 496. For all these reasons, the supreme court found that the two-year statute of limitations governs actions brought under the anti-trust statutes. See Jovoco, 181 Wis. 2d at 760-761, 512 N.W.2d at 495-496. However, in Jovoco, the Wisconsin Supreme Court asserted that the statute of limitations analysis was not complete until the court considered the purpose behind the substantive statute being analyzed. See id. at 761, 512 N.W.2d at 496 ("We are not persuaded by the defendants' analogy ... because the defendants do not acknowledge the different purposes of the two [15] statutes.").

The Jovoco court found that anti-trust statutes were designed to benefit the public; whereas the wage statute was designed to benefit individuals. See 181 Wis. 2d at 761-762, 512 N.W.2d at 496. Also, it observed that anti-trust laws "encourage private enforcement in an area where government regulation alone would not be adequate." Id. at 761, 512 N.W.2d at 496. By contrast, the supreme court stated that the wage statute provided only a remedy for individuals rather than the public as [*534] a whole. See id. at 762, 512 N.W.2d at 496. Ultimately the supreme court applied the six-year statute of limitations, concluding that insufficient similarity existed between the wage statute and the anti-trust statutes to apply the two-year statute of limitations. See id. ("There is not enough similarity between [the wage statute at issue] and the state anti-trust law to extend the applicability [211] of the two year statute of limitations to claims brought under [the wage statute].").

Using the teachings of Jovoco, the parties draw an elaborate set of contrasts and comparisons between § 806.10\(3\), Stats., [16] and the Wisconsin anti-trust laws and wage statutes in arguing that § 806.10\(3\) either redresses a public wrong or remedies an individual harm. South Milwaukee contends that § 806.10\(3\), like the wage statute, attempts to remedy a harm to the individual and thus the six-year statute of limitations should apply. Conversely, the respondent submits that § 806.10\(3\) is punitive-remedial and exclusively statutory, like the anti-trust laws, and the two-year statute of limitations should apply.

Following the court's reasoning in Jovoco, we find insufficient similarities between § 806.10\(3\), Stats., and Wisconsin anti-trust law to apply the two-year statute of limitation which governs anti-trust lawsuits. We find South Milwaukee's comparison of § 806.10\(3\) to the wage statute at issue in Jovoco to be more persuasive than the respondent's. HN4[[↑]] Although true that § 806.10\(3\) has some of the characteristics of anti-trust statutes, because it provides for treble damages which suggests a punitive intent, and the general public may derive some benefit from the statute's operation, § 806.10\(3\) does not provide public and private enforcement mechanisms, and does not create [17] criminal penalties like the anti-trust statutes. In addition, we [*535] find that the benefit derived by the general public from the operation of the statute, specifically society's interests in the regulation of property, is substantially outweighed by the benefit derived by individuals. Therefore, we conclude that § 806.10\(3\), like the wage statute, provides an individual remedy for damages to an individual party caused by the acts and omissions of the clerk's office, thus leading to the application of the six-year statute of limitations.

3. The two-year statute of limitations must be narrowly construed.

Moreover, HN5 unless the legislature clearly requires the application of a specific statute of limitations, case law requires application of the six-year statute of limitations. Reviewing courts must interpret statutes of limitations so that "no person's cause of action will be barred unless clearly mandated by the legislature." Saunders v. DEC International, Inc., 85 Wis. 2d 70, 74, 270 N.W.2d 176, 177 \(1978\). Absent a clear legislative mandate, case law instructs that the two-year statute of limitations must be narrowly construed in favor of plaintiffs to avoid [18] extinguishing otherwise meritorious claims. See Lovett v. Mt. Senario College, Inc., 154 Wis. 2d 831, 836, 454 N.W.2d 356, 358 \(Ct. App. 1990\). Here, the Wisconsin legislature has not clearly mandated the application of either statute of limitations to the facts of cases like the instant one. Noting that the two-year statute of limitations must be narrowly construed, and observing that the application of the two-year statute of limitations would extinguish South Milwaukee's claim, we therefore determine that § 806.10\(3\), Stats., is covered by the six-year statute of limitations. Thus, [*536] we reverse the circuit court's ruling and find that the six-year statute of limitations contained in § 893.93\(1\)\(a\), Stats., governs actions under § 806.10\(3\), Stats.⁶

[19] B. The clerk's office violated § 806.10(3), Stats., when it received

South Milwaukee's judgment and failed to docket it until the following day.

Next, we address the issue of whether the clerk's office violated [*212] § 806.10\(3\), Stats. The trial court found that the language, "at the proper time," was ambiguous because it was capable of more than one interpretation, and resorted to outside rules of construction and legislative history in determining that the statute permitted docketing "as soon as practicable," or within a "reasonable" time.⁷ South Milwaukee claims that "at the proper time" is unambiguous, and means that the clerk's office is required to docket judgments "immediately." We need not decide whether the statute is ambiguous because, under either interpretation, we conclude that, under the facts of this case, the delayed docketing violated the statute.

HN6

Ordinarily a court "must apply statutes as they are written, unless to do so would lead to an absurd result [20] that did not reflect the legislature's intent." [State v. \[*537\] Young, 180 Wis. 2d 700, 704, 511 N.W.2d 309, 311 \(Ct. App. 1993\)](#); see also DNR v. Wisconsin Power & Light Co., 108 Wis. 2d 403, 408, 321 N.W.2d 286, 288 \(1982\) ("When statutory language is clear and unambiguous, no judicial rule of construction is permitted, and the court must implement the express intention of the legislature by giving the language its ordinary and accepted meaning.").

There can be no doubt that if we accept South Milwaukee's interpretation, the clerk's office violated the statute because the judgment was not docketed immediately. On the other hand, the respondent urges us to find that the statutory language, "at the proper time," allows the clerk twenty-four hours to docket a judgment. The respondent

⁶ Because we find that South Milwaukee's action is governed by the six-year statute of limitations and the instant action was timely filed, we need not determine exactly when South Milwaukee's cause of action accrued. Accordingly, we will not consider whether the application of the discovery rule is proper. Cf. Gross v. Hoffman, 227 Wis. 296, 300, 277 N.W. 663, 665 \(1938\) (holding that if a decision on one point disposes of an appeal, the appellate court need not decide other issues raised).

⁷ See supra n.2.

relies on the Office of Court Operations in the Director of State Courts' Office (Office) for this contention, and argues that the Office's interpretation must be afforded great weight. We disagree.

The Office has not interpreted § 806.10\(3\), Stats. In several reports and in the model record keeping procedures generated by the Office there is a recommendation that [21] judgments be docketed "within twenty-four hours (same day preferred)." However, nowhere in the reports or the model procedures is there a specific mention of § 806.10\(3\), nor do the reports or the model procedures interpret this statute. We view the Office's suggestion that courts docket judgments within twenty-four hours "to avoid being sued for treble damages" to be merely a warning to clerks with no precedential value.⁸ [22] We do not read the "twenty-four [*538] hour (same day preferred)" standard recommended by the Office and included in the technical assistance project report as a grant of immunity to the clerk's office for every judgment docketed within twenty-four hours of receipt of the judgment. We read the recommendation as a caveat to the clerk's office of the increasing likelihood of liability for treble damages if a judgment is not docketed within twenty-four hours. The twenty-four hour standard is not both sword and shield that imposes liability on the clerk's office for judgments docketed after the twenty-four hours have passed and protects the clerk's office from all liability for judgments docketed within twenty-four hours.⁹

[213] [23] 1. In determining if the docketing statute, § 806.10\(3\), Stats., has been violated, we look at all of the individual circumstances in each case.

[*539] The circumstances in this case indicate that South Milwaukee's judgment was not docketed "at the proper time." The judgment was presented at 3:20 p.m. The clerk's office did not close until 5:00 p.m. The respondent has offered no explanation for why the clerk could not docket the judgment in the hour and a half between its receipt and the close of business.¹⁰ Indeed, evidence was submitted that revealed that the deputy clerks were never informed that the date and time a judgment was docketed carried any legal significance. The failure of the clerk's office to ever docket South Milwaukee's judgment against Mrs. Rooney suggests that the Milwaukee County Clerk of Courts Office did not give docketing a high priority. Further, the clerk's office did not docket judgments throughout the day, or at set times during the day, but docketed judgments sporadically. For example, on September 22, 1994, the clerk's office docketed judgments from 9:55 a.m. until 10:50 a.m.; on September 26, 1994, from 11:20 a.m. until 3:20 p.m.; and on September 28, 1994, from [24] 11:46 a.m. until 11:54 a.m.

We conclude that HN7 in determining if the docketing statute has been violated we need to look at the individual circumstances presented in each case. Thus, we next consider the trial court's and the respondent's interpretation of the language, "reasonable" or "as soon as practicable," to the circumstances present here to determine whether there is a violation under this interpretation.

[*540] 2. Under either interpretation of the docketing statute, § 806.10\(3\),

⁸ In addition, we see limited relevance to reports written by the Office that involve suggested docketing practices in Rock and Clark Counties, counties significantly smaller than Milwaukee County.

⁹ Further, we observe that the twenty-four hour rule must have been only a suggested practice and not a statutory interpretation because the "rule" would be certain to be violated over weekends and holidays when judgments are filed in the clerk's office at the close of the business day. In addition, the respondent has argued that the judgment was docketed at 9:01 a.m. the morning after it was entered, "within one working hour (or at most two) of its entry." Counting only "working hours" against the twenty-four hour rule avoids the problem created by weekends and holidays; however, considered together, the respondent's arguments would render § 806.10\(3\), Stats., nearly meaningless. If we are required to afford the clerk's office a twenty-four hour window in which to docket judgments, and we may only count working hours in determining whether a judgment was docketed at the proper time, the clerk's office would have three working days to docket the judgment. We conclude that such an interpretation is overly broad and unreasonable, given the legal significance attached to docketed judgments.

¹⁰ During the time left in the day, we note that Mrs. Rooney had ample time to go home from the courthouse, retrieve her quitclaim deeds, return to the courthouse, and have the deeds recorded before 5:00 p.m.

Stats., suggested by the respondent, the circumstances indicate that the Milwaukee County Clerk's Office violated the statute.

Whether we interpret § 806.10(3), Stats., to require the clerk's office to docket judgments as soon as practicable or within a reasonable time, as posited by the respondent, here the clerk's office [25] did neither. To determine whether the clerk's office docketed South Milwaukee's judgment within a "reasonable" time or "as soon as practicable," we must give those words their commonly understood meaning. Greenebaum v. Department of Taxation, 1 Wis. 2d 234, 237, 83 N.W.2d 682, 684 (1957); Lawver v. Boling, 71 Wis. 2d 408, 414, 238 N.W.2d 514, 517 (1976) (construing the term "employee" in an insurance policy). The respondent has not offered any evidence explaining the delay in docketing South Milwaukee's judgment that would allow us to determine that the clerk's office docketed South Milwaukee's judgment as soon as practicable, or within a reasonable time. There was no evidence presented as to why the judgment was not docketed on the same day it was entered. If there were no intervening circumstances that caused the delay, we must conclude that the judgment was not docketed as soon as practicable, or within a reasonable time. Therefore, even if we accept the trial court's and the respondent's interpretation of § 806.10(3), Stats., the circumstances indicate that the clerk did not docket the judgment within a "reasonable" time, or as "soon [26] as practicable." For all of these reasons, we conclude that the clerk's office failed to docket South Milwaukee's judgment within the [*541] proper time in violation of the statute.¹¹ Having [214] reversed the circuit court's decision with regard to the statute of limitations issue, and having found a violation of the docketing statute, § 806.10(3), we remand this case to the trial court and direct the trial court to enter partial summary judgment in favor of South Milwaukee on its claim that the clerk of courts office violated § 806.10(3).

By the Court.-Order reversed and cause remanded with directions.

End of Document

¹¹ Finally, we decline to address South Milwaukee's argument that the trial court improperly expanded the record without notice because that issue is now moot.

Long v. Abbott Labs.

North Carolina Superior Court, Mecklenburg County

July 30, 1999, Decided

97-CVS-8289

Reporter

1999 NCBC 10 *; 1999 NCBC LEXIS 10 **

STACY LEE LONG, on Behalf of Himself and all Other Similarly Situated Individuals, Plaintiff v. ABBOTT LABORATORIES; AMERICAN HOME PRODUCTS CORPORATION; BOEHRINGER INGELHEIM PHARMACEUTICALS, INC.; BRISTOL-MYERS SQUIBB COMPANY; BURROUGHS-WELLCOME CO.; KNOLL PHARMACEUTICAL COMPANY; ELI LILLY AND COMPANY; FOREST LABORATORIES, INC.; GLAXO, INC.; HOFFMANN-LAROCHE, INC.; JOHNSON & JOHNSON PHARMACEUTICAL TRADING CO., INC.; MERCK & CO., INC.; MARION MERRELL DOW, INC.; PFIZER, INC.; NOVARTIS PHARMACEUTICALS CORPORATION; THE PERDUE FREDERICK COMPANY; RHONE-POULENC RORER PHARMACEUTICAL INC.; SCHERING CORPORATION; SCHERING-PLough CORPORATION; G.D. SEARLE & CO.; SMITHKLINE BEECHAM PHARMACEUTICALS CO.; THE UPJOHN COMPANY; WARNER-LAMBERT COMPANY; and ZENECA, INC., Defendants settlement, cases, class member, purchaser, class action, attorney's fees, lawyers, indirect, expenses, percent, million dollars, lodestar, common fund, litigation costs, certification, retail, class certification, fee request, state court, coordinated, multidistrict litigation, courts, common fund case, community health, equitable, Centers, cy-pres, premium, merits, rates

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > American Rule

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN1[] Basis of Recovery, American Rule

The fact that a fund calls for a cy-pres distribution does not prevent classifying the settlement fund as a common fund for the purposes of deciding if attorney fees may be awarded and, if so, how much. The use of cy-pres distributions should not be discouraged. Often they provide the only feasible means of reaching a settlement. Thus, although a settlement does not provide a benefit for every member of the class which can be determined with mathematical certainty, the use of the cy-pres distribution compensates for that deficiency. Attorney fees can be allowed in cases which result in the preservation, protection or increase of a common fund. A court of equity, or a court in the exercise of equitable jurisdiction, may in its discretion, and without statutory authorization, order an allowance for attorney fees to a litigant who at his own expense has maintained a successful suit for the preservation, protection, or increase of a common fund or of common property, or who has created at his own expense or brought into a court a fund which others may share with him.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Legal Ethics > Client Relations > Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Basis of Recovery > American Rule

HN2[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

The determination of attorney fees in common fund cases involves issues of equity and requires the application of equitable principles. The North Carolina Supreme Court has directed trial courts to exercise their discretion in awarding fees from common funds with jealous caution, lest the administration of justice be brought into disrepute. In making its fee determination, the court must protect the public interest, the interests of the absent class members and the interests of class counsel. In common fund cases, the North Carolina trial courts have routinely adopted a multiple factor or hybrid approach to determining attorney fees which uses both the percentage of the fund method and the lodestar method in combination with a careful consideration of the fee factors set forth in the Rules of Professional Conduct of the North Carolina State Bar. This approach is also supported by the Attorney General of North Carolina. North Carolina does not impose mechanical guidelines in applying equitable principles to these determinations. Trial courts should also correlate the attorneys' compensation with the structure of the settlement benefits the attorneys negotiated for the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Compromise & Settlement

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3[] Class Actions, Compromise & Settlement

Equity should not condone use of the class action procedure simply for leverage in settlement. Courts have historically guarded against use of the class action process solely as a lever to induce settlement.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Client Relations > Attorney Fees > Fee Agreements

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

HN4 Remedies, Costs & Attorney Fees

The factors which North Carolina trial courts must consider in determining fee requests in common fund cases are each important, and the court must have full information on all factors, including details of services provided, rates, and experience of counsel, in order to reach an equitable result. In some cases where multiple class counsel from separate jurisdictions are seeking fees in one jurisdiction, it might prove beneficial to the court to have a copy of any fee agreements among counsel for in camera inspection. Full disclosure promotes public confidence in the process and insures against the abuses the North Carolina Supreme Court warned against.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Absent Members

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Client Relations > Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN5 Class Members, Absent Members

Class actions that create common funds are by their very nature contingency fee cases. The fee in such cases is always subject to court approval. Absent class members may not be bound by the agreement between a class representative they did not choose and an attorney or group of attorneys they did not choose. In multidistrict litigation, they may not be bound by the fee decisions in other jurisdictions. Each jurisdiction must resolve its own case on its own terms. Nor do common fund cases fit the usual contingency fee analysis. In the usual contingency fee case the lawyer and client have negotiated a fee arrangement, with each choosing the risk they are willing to take and the expense they are willing to incur for a specific reward. Therefore, in common fund cases it is more useful to look at percentage awards in other common fund cases than the contingency fee arrangement that might be negotiated between an individual client and an attorney. Even that approach poses difficulty because each case is decided on its own facts and any number of factors could cause a shift in the percentage applied by the court in a particular case. Mechanical rules simply do not apply when making equitable determinations. The fee should correlate with the structure of the settlement negotiated by class counsel.

Governments > Courts > Court Personnel

Legal Ethics > Client Relations > Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judges

HN6 Courts, Court Personnel

There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Client Relations > Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

The award of substantial attorneys' fees to the lawyers for the plaintiffs in a successful antitrust class action is important in order to encourage the bringing of such actions. Necessarily, these lawsuits are handled on a contingent-fee basis, and the uncertainty of antitrust law and the complexity of the facts in most antitrust cases create a substantial risk that the lawsuit will fail and the lawyers for the class therefore receive no fee. Because these are big cases, the investment of the attorney's time and effort -- an investment that he loses entirely if the suit is unsuccessful -- is very large; and payment of his fee may be long postponed due to the length of the typical antitrust case. In addition, the successful prosecution of an antitrust case requires highly specialized legal skills and aptitudes that are in great demand by conventional clients. Substantial fees are necessary if the lawyers having these skills are to be induced to devote their attention to the plaintiffs' side in antitrust class actions, rather than to the more secure forms of practice for which their skills equip them.

Opinion

[1] ORDER ON PETITION FOR ATTORNEY FEES

[*P1] This matter is before the Court on class counsel's petition for attorney fees. For the reasons set forth below, class counsel are awarded, in the Court's discretion, fees and expenses totaling $ 961,117.92.

I.

A.

[*P2] This class action is one of eleven separate class actions filed in eleven separate jurisdictions. The actions are listed on Appendix A attached hereto and will hereinafter be referred to as the "Actions," or "Action" when referring to an individual case. The Actions were virtually identical and prosecuted on a coordinated basis. (Affidavit of Bernard Persky Applicable to Indirect Purchaser Actions, para. 1, hereinafter "Persky Affidavit.") The class representatives in each Action sought to represent the same class: consumers in each jurisdiction who purchased (indirectly from defendants) brand name drugs at retail drugstores.

[*P3] Each separate class action is based upon the same allegations: that the defendants violated either antitrust laws, consumer protection laws or both in each jurisdiction by selling brand name drugs to health maintenance organizations (HMOs) and mail order pharmacies at a discount [2] to the price at which the same drugs were sold to retail pharmacies (the "two tiered pricing system"). The defenses in each jurisdiction were the same. First, defendants asserted that the class representatives lacked standing to bring the Actions since they were indirect purchasers. Second, defendants asserted that no conspiracy to fix prices existed and that their two tiered pricing system was justified by market conditions based on the differing leverage asserted in the purchasing process by their respective kinds of customers. HMOs could control what prescriptions were written, while retail pharmacists only filled the prescriptions brought to them. HMOs had leverage because of their power to control the prescription process. That leverage had expanded as HMOs and mail order pharmacies grew in size and control of the health services market. The two tiered pricing system has been in effect for many years.

[*P4] Since each Action sought class treatment, class certification issues existed in all cases.

[*P5] The Actions were not the first claims asserted against these defendants for violation of the antitrust laws arising out of the two tiered pricing system. Prior to any [3] of the Actions being filed, retail pharmacies and other direct purchasers from the defendants filed many cases in various federal courts alleging that the two tiered pricing system violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1994\). No similar cases were brought on behalf of indirect purchasers because the federal courts do not recognize indirect purchaser standing to assert violations of federal antitrust laws. See Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\). Under federal case law, only the direct purchaser (the retail drug store in this case) could recover for alleged violations, and defendants could not plead that the increased costs were passed through to another level in the distribution chain. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\). The federal cases were consolidated by the Judicial Panel for Multidistrict Litigation and assigned to one judge, the Honorable Charles P. Kocoras, for management (the "MDL Litigation"). See In re Brand Name Prescription Drug Antitrust Litigation, No. 94 C 897, MDL No. 997, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16658 [*4] (N.D. Ill. Nov. 15, 1994). Part of the litigation before Judge Kocoras included a class action brought on behalf of indirect purchasers in Alabama. Judge Kocoras refused to certify the Alabama Action as a class action, citing the complications arising from tracing the "pass on" of overcharges to customers through the various levels of the chain of distribution. *Id. at 19. Judge Kocoras did certify a class of retailers who were direct purchasers.

[*P6] Thus, at the end of 1994, a retailer class action was proceeding in federal court, and in the only state-based indirect purchaser case, the court had declined to certify a class.

B.

[*P7] Beginning in January 1995, class counsel filed "the first wave of coordinated indirect purchaser actions." (Persky Aff. para. 12.) In this context, "class counsel" consisted of six law firms that affiliated for the purpose of pursuing indirect purchaser cases against the defendants. (Persky Aff. para. 8.) Where necessary, the six firms then associated local counsel in each jurisdiction. Appendix C attached hereto details the law firms involved, whether they were class counsel or local counsel, and the time devoted by each to the coordinated [*5] effort in all jurisdictions. As Mr. Persky stated in his affidavit: "This coordination of effort, in practice, was intended to, and did, work in much the same manner as in federal actions coordinated by orders of the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation, with the informal appointment of 'lead counsel' and division of duties, responsibilities and expenses among the counsel involved." (Persky Aff. para. 1.) Unlike federal multidistrict litigation, no state court had jurisdiction to order anything done in any other jurisdiction, and, unlike federal multidistrict litigation, the process of determining lead counsel and allocation of responsibilities and expenses was by self-selection of class counsel, not by order of any court. In addition, unlike most federal multidistrict antitrust cases, the legal basis of each state action was different.

[*P8] Actions were filed in those jurisdictions in which indirect purchasers had been granted standing by statute or case law and those jurisdictions where it was unclear whether indirect purchasers had standing to sue for violations of state antitrust laws. Thus, Actions were initially filed in eight states and the District of Columbia. [*6] North Carolina was not in the first wave.

[*P9] The "second wave" consisted of Actions in Kansas (1996), Tennessee (1997) and Florida (1997). (Persky Aff. para. 40.) These Actions became mired in a procedural battle over whether they would be tried as part of the federal multidistrict litigation or as individual state cases. The cases were removed to federal court, consolidated with the multidistrict litigation, appealed to the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, remanded to the federal district court and subsequently back to the respective state courts. The protracted procedural battles over jurisdiction in the second wave cases had already ended when this settlement was reached.

[*P10] Last, but not least, was the North Carolina Action. It was filed in 1997 after the 1996 decision of the North Carolina Court of Appeals in Hyde v. Abbott Labs, 123 N.C. App. 572, 473 S.E.2d 680 \(1996\). That decision was the first in North Carolina to hold that indirect purchasers can have standing under the North Carolina antitrust laws. The class certification and standing issues were never ruled upon in this North Carolina Action.¹

[7] [*P11] The status of the Actions at the time of settlement is set forth in Appendix A attached hereto. As that chart and Mr. Persky's affidavit (paras. 57-61) make clear, when settlement discussions finally reached a serious stage, class counsel had been largely unsuccessful in winning both standing and certification challenges. Class counsel had prevailed on both issues in the District of Columbia (the least populous jurisdiction), but had lost certification battles in New York (the most populous jurisdiction) and several other large states. (See Appendix A.) Standing and certification loomed as big hurdles for class counsel, particularly if they were to conduct the litigation as one class action as opposed to eleven separate actions.

C.

[*P12] However, standing and certification issues were not the only hurdles facing class counsel. Even if they prevailed on standing and certification, they still had to prove a very difficult case on the merits. In fact, class counsel for the retailers failed to establish the very conspiracy that was at the heart of the Actions being pursued on behalf of the indirect purchasers. The retailer class action has been tried, and Judge Kocoras [8] dismissed the plaintiffs' case at the close of the plaintiffs' evidence (which lasted ten weeks), finding that there was insufficient proof of conspiracy to get beyond the motion for a directed verdict. In Re Brand Name Prescription Drug Antitrust Litigation, No. 94 C 897, MDL No. 997, 1999-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P84,118 \(N.D. Ill. Jan. 19, 1999\), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 550, 1999 WL 33889 \(Kocoras, J.\). Fortunately for class counsel, but perhaps not coincidentally, they had reached a settlement agreement with most of the defendants just a few months before the retailer class action went to trial.

[*P13] In summary, at the time of settlement, class counsel had experienced little success in establishing both standing and class certification in other jurisdictions and faced opposition on both issues in North Carolina. Even if they prevailed on the procedural issues they still faced a high risk of loss on the merits. The North Carolina Action was settled before any of the issues posing a high risk were heard.

D.

[*P14] This settlement encompasses all eleven Actions and resolves the claims against defendants representing 98.94 percent of the market. Only Forest [9] Laboratories, Inc. and The Purdue Frederick Company declined to participate. The settlement fund totaled $ 64,311,000. North Carolina's share was $ 8,904,600 before notice costs and administrative expenses. Rather than being divided among the class members, the fund is being distributed to a national organization for use by North Carolina Community Health Centers, which provide medical care in underserved communities. The vast majority of settlement class members in North Carolina will not see a penny from this settlement. This Court has no quarrel with the way the settlement fund was divided among the Actions. There was no single right way to divide the fund given the various stages of litigation in different jurisdictions and the differing laws of each state. Nor does the Court quarrel with the cy-pres distribution of the funds. It is apparent that just the cost of administration of distribution of the fund to the full range of actual class members in North Carolina would have far exceeded the resources of the fund and that the amount to be distributed would have been so paltry that few class members would have even bothered to file a claim if given the opportunity. For all [10] practical purposes, this was a cost of litigation settlement for such a small sum of money per class member that administration of the settlement fund could only be accomplished by means of a cy-pres distribution.

¹ Separate state court class actions in which class counsel are not involved may be pending in California and Alabama.

[*P15] In the North Carolina Action, the settlement represents a $ 1.23 benefit per person after deductions for notice and administrative fees, but before deductions for attorney fees and expenses. With the award made by this order, the North Carolina common fund drops well below eight million dollars. When $ 1.23 is divided by the number of years in the class period (approximately 4.8), the recovery becomes approximately 26 cents per person for each year claimed. See Persky Aff. para 70.

[*P16] There can be little doubt that this is a cost of litigation settlement. There are twenty-three settling defendants. Each had expenses associated with defending class actions in eleven jurisdictions, including the cost of national and local counsel. The allegations covered over eight hundred brand name drugs. Each defendant would also incur internal costs for its in-house counsel and business associates. These costs would have increased had these Actions gone [11] forward. The cost of all the trials, if eleven occurred, would have been tremendous. The cost of one trial might well have been high enough to justify this settlement. (The simpler retailer case took ten weeks for the plaintiffs' evidence alone!) If each defendant has incurred costs similar to those being experienced by class counsel (class counsel's lodestar figure was $ 6,532,537.75), and that figure is multiplied by 25, the cost already associated with defending these Actions to date could be over 160 million dollars. Even if each defendant has only incurred half of class counsel's time and expense, the cost of defense prior to settlement exceeds the amount of the settlement. Moreover, most of the cases were still in the early procedural stages. There is no question that the total cost to defendants of litigating these Actions through the balance of the procedural issues and trial would have been far in excess of the settlement. This was expensive litigation that consumed tens of millions of dollars in fees and expenses.

[*P17] The settlement must also be valued against the potential recovery. In the North Carolina Action, class counsel indicated that the potential base [12] recovery for compensatory damages was 19.3 million dollars a year. The class period alleged covered 4.8 years. Therefore, the potential recovery for North Carolina class members, including treble damages and excluding attorney fees, would have exceeded 277 million dollars. Defendants paid roughly 9 million dollars (or about three cents on the dollar) for their peace and a release. See Appendix B. Considering the potential costs of litigation and potential liabilities eliminated, this was a good bargain for defendants.

[*P18] Thus, defendants had a strong financial incentive to settle. However, a cost-effective settlement was not the only motivation for defendants to settle. Not only did the defendants escape further cost, they obtained a full and complete release and an agreement that no class member could sue them for continuing the pricing policies which were the subject of the Actions. See the Agreement of Settlement and Release of April 24, 1998 (hereinafter "Settlement Agreement") para. 15. They obtained assurance that no class member could challenge their historic pricing methodology in the future. No defendant has made, was required to make or will in the future [13] be required to make any change in any business practices that would arguably benefit the class.

[*P19] Other courts seem to have focused on the total dollar amount of the settlement, not the overall "success" of class counsel. In every other Action, class counsel have been awarded a 25 percent contingency fee for obtaining this settlement, or approximately fourteen million dollars ($ 14,000,000) in total. Since this Court will depart from the approach taken by the other courts in which Actions were pending, a detailed explanation of this Court's decision is in order.

II.

[*P20] Even though most class members will receive no benefit from this settlement, a fund has been created which constitutes a "common fund" under North Carolina law. Horner ex rel. City of Burlington v. Chamber of Commerce of the City of Burlington, Inc., 236 N.C. 96, 72 S.E.2d 21 (1952). HN1↑ The fact that the fund calls for a cy-pres distribution does not prevent classifying the settlement fund as a common fund for the purposes of deciding if attorney fees may be awarded and, if so, how much. The use of cy-pres distributions should not be discouraged. Often they provide the only [14] feasible means of reaching a settlement, as was the situation in this case. Thus, although the settlement does not provide a benefit for every member of the class which can be determined with mathematical certainty as specified in Bailey v. State, 348 N.C. 130, 500 S.E.2d 54 (1998), the use of the cy-pres distribution compensates for that deficiency. In Horner, the Supreme Court held that attorney fees could be allowed in cases which result in the preservation, protection or increase of a common fund.

The rule is well established that a court of equity, or a court in the exercise of equitable jurisdiction, may in its discretion, and without statutory authorization, order an allowance for attorney fees to a litigant who at his own expense has maintained a successful suit for the preservation, protection, or increase of a common fund or of common property, or who has created at his own expense or brought into a court a fund which others may share with him.

Horner, 236 N.C. at 97-98, 72 S.E.2d at 22.

III.

[*P21] This Court has concluded on previous occasions that HN2 the determination of attorney fees in common fund [15] cases involves issues of equity and requires the application of equitable principles. In re Senergy & Thoro Class Action Settlement, 1999 NCBC 7, paras. 18-19, (No. 96 CVS 5900, New Hanover County Super. Ct. July 14, 1999) (Tennille, J.) The North Carolina Supreme Court has directed trial courts to exercise their discretion in awarding fees from common funds with "jealous caution, lest the administration of justice be brought into disrepute." Horner, 236 N.C. at 101, 72 S.E.2d at 24. In making its fee determination, the Court must protect the public interest, the interests of the absent class members and the interests of class counsel.

[*P22] In common fund cases, the North Carolina trial courts have routinely adopted a multiple factor or hybrid approach to determining attorney fees which uses both the percentage of the fund method and the lodestar method in combination with a careful consideration of the fee factors set forth in the Rules of Professional Conduct of the North Carolina State Bar. This approach is also supported by the Attorney General of North Carolina.²

[16] [*P23] North Carolina does not impose mechanical guidelines in applying equitable principles to these determinations. Trial courts should also correlate the attorneys' compensation with the structure of the settlement benefits the attorneys negotiated for the class. See In re Senergy, 1999 NCBC 7; Goodrich v. E.F. Hutton Group, Inc., 681 A.2d 1039 (1996). This Court will apply the multiple factor approach in this case as it endeavors to correlate the attorneys' compensation to the structure of the benefits the attorneys negotiated for the class.

IV.

A.

[*P24] Benefit to the Class. Any assessment of the relevant factors begins with an analysis of the benefit created for the class by the efforts of class counsel. In this case, the class representative, Stacy Lee Long, did not ask for and did not receive any benefit from the settlement. The vast majority of absent class members will not receive any benefit from the settlement. The settlement class consisted of:

All persons who, at any time during the period commencing June 27, 1993 through April 24, 1998, purchased or obtained brand name prescription drugs from any retail drug [17] store or pharmacy in the State of North Carolina (excluding purchases paid for or reimbursed by Medicaid), which were manufactured, marketed,

² In a letter to the Court dated January 14, 1999, submitted at the request of the Court, the Attorney General offered the following comment on class counsel's fee petition:

Consistent with our comments in Ruff v. Parex, 1999 NCBC 6 (96 CVS 0059, New Hanover County), we believe that the simplistic percentage-of-the-fund approach suggested by plaintiff's counsel is inappropriate in this type of case. Instead, we recommend the multi-factor approach for determining the reasonableness of attorney's fees that the State Bar outlined in its Rule 1.5 (1998) as a more accurate means to assure that the attorney's fees are reasonable and not excessive. This framework was adopted by Judge Howard Manning in Smith et al. v. State of North Carolina et al. (95 CVS 6715, Wake County), by Judge Robert L. Farmer in Faulkenbury v. Teachers' and State Employees' Retirement System, et al. (90 CVS 12090, Wake County), and by this Court in Byers et al. v. Carpenter et al., 1998 NCBC 1 (94 CVS 04489, 96 NCB 103, Wake County).

distributed or sold (directly or indirectly) by any defendant, for consumption by themselves and/or their families and not for resale.

(Settlement Agreement para. 1.)

[*P25] The only class members who will receive a benefit are class members who qualify for assistance at North Carolina community health centers. There is no evidence in the record that any significant percentage of the absent class members will participate in the programs of the community health centers. No policy or practice of the defendants was changed in any way that benefited the class. To the contrary, defendants got a retroactive and prospective release.

[*P26] The amount of the settlement per person was so small that if this were not presented as a cy-pres settlement, it is doubtful that the court would approve a class certification for such a small amount of money per beneficiary. See, e.g., Maffei v. Alert Cable T.V. of N.C., 316 N.C. 615, 342 S.E.2d 867 \(1986\). The recovery for North Carolina residents was $ 1.23 per person (26 [18] cents per year), after the costs of notice and administration expenses, but before attorney fees and expenses are deducted.

[*P27] Further, the amount of the settlement (less than 8 million dollars net of expenses) was unimpressive compared with the potential recovery of 277 million dollars. (Appendix B.) This was a cost of litigation result that was outstanding only in the sense that class counsel were able to create such an expensive problem that they were able to get an expensive cost of litigation settlement. According to Mr. Persky's affidavit, the value of the settlement was declining as class certification contests were lost in the bigger states. See Persky Aff. paras. 59-62.

[*P28] Class counsel did not accomplish anything of significance for the class in this litigation. In other cases, this court has recognized the efforts of class counsel when they have overcome difficult odds to achieve an unexpected result for class members. See this Court's fee award in Byers v. Carpenter, 1998 NCBC 1, No. 94 CVS 04489 \(Wake Co. Sup. Ct. \(1998\)\) \(Tennille, J.\) (where class counsel turned the proverbial sow's ear into a silk purse). In this case, what was a sow's ear at the [19] outset remained mammalian in composition through settlement.

[*P29] In summary, the net settlement figure of under 8 million dollars for the North Carolina Action was a relatively poor result for the majority of North Carolina class members, but one which probably accurately reflected (1) the merits of the case and (2) North Carolina's share of the enormous cost associated with twenty-three defendants defending eleven class actions. See In re Brand Name Prescription Drug Antitrust Litigation, No. 94 C 897, MDL No. 997, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16658 \(N.D. Ill. Nov. 15, 1994\).

[*P30] A public benefit was achieved by the settlement to the extent that some North Carolina residents will benefit from the distributions to community health centers. That factor helped to justify the settlement and serves as a justification for the fee awarded herein.

[*P31] Time and Labor Involved. Analysis of this factor raises a number of questions for which there is little or no guidance in the appellate cases.

[*P32] 1. Under what circumstances may class counsel in an individual state case be credited with work on other cases in other jurisdictions? In this [20] action, class counsel have not filed any fee request based upon the actual time spent on the North Carolina Action. They have filed information setting forth the total time spent on all the Actions (although that time is not detailed in any fashion from which the court could discern the actual work done or, in the case of many of the firms, by whom). Thus, the fee request in this case raises the questions of when, whether and how individual state courts should treat a "multidistrict litigation" approach to litigation when setting fees in individual state common fund cases. That question cannot be avoided in this situation because it is clear that the amount of time expended in the North Carolina case was insignificant compared to the time spent in other jurisdictions.³ The nature of the settlement and the fees awarded in other jurisdictions also demand that this question be faced in this case. Indirect purchaser actions are typical of situations where class counsel treat a combination of state court class actions as if they had been assigned as lead counsel in consolidated federal actions by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation. (See Persky Aff. para. 1.)

³Local North Carolina counsel's time accounts for approximately three-tenths of one percent of the total lodestar submitted by class counsel. (Appendix C.)

[21] [*P33] The use of multidistrict class action litigation coordinated across state lines is a developing trend hastened by the retreat from certification of nationwide class actions in the federal courts, particularly in mass tort cases. See Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689, 117 S. Ct. 2231 (1997); Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 144 L. Ed. 2d 715, 119 S. Ct. 2295, 67 U.S.L.W. 4632 (U.S. June 23, 1999), 1999 U.S. Lexis 4373, 1999 WL 412604; Broussard v. Meineke Discount Muffler Shops, Inc., 155 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1998); and In re Stucco Litigation, 175 F.R.D. 210 (E.D.N.C. 1997). Publicity attendant to megafees in megafund cases may also have contributed to the interest in creating even larger lawsuits. In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 187 F.R.D. 465, 1998-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,337, 1998 WL 782020 (S.D.N.Y.) at *24-27, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17557 (S.D.N.Y.) at *57-69. At the same time, technology has made coordination of multiple cases in multiple jurisdictions more manageable for class counsel, thereby permitting them to expand the "class" they represent [22] beyond state borders.

[*P34] It is that unofficial, class counsel-generated expansion of the class beyond jurisdictional borders that creates the most problems for state courts. Most state courts do not have an equivalent to 28 U.S.C. § 1407, which authorizes the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation. State court jurisdiction seldom extends beyond the state borders. No state court is in a position to manage litigation in other states except, possibly, to coordinate discovery. Forum shopping can become significant, either for trial or settlement purposes. State courts are generally not as experienced or equipped as the federal courts to handle massive cases. State court endorsements of nationwide settlements are more susceptible to challenge in other jurisdictions than federally endorsed settlements because each state has a duty to guard the rights of its citizens and insure that they are not abridged by other state courts. In addition, the substantive law issues are different in each state. That creates a fundamental, unavoidable tension when class counsel attempt to try multiple jurisdiction class action cases as one lawsuit.

[*P35] As this [23] Court has previously indicated, the most difficult problem created by this multiple state class action approach is the heightened scrutiny required to protect absent class members.

In the typical class action, absent class members have their interests represented by parties and attorneys that they have not selected. Class representatives and their counsel must not have a conflict of interest if they are to adequately and fairly represent absent class members. The additional blending of the state class members' claims with claims of class members or individuals in other states adds another layer of difficulty. Now, absent class members have the added worries that their claims might be compromised or the amount of their attorney fees from a common fund affected by claims of other parties in other jurisdictions. While there can be many similarities in the causes of action and proof required to establish liability, state laws differ in many respects.

In re Senergy, 1999 NCBC 7.

[*P36] Those difficulties are well demonstrated here where issues of standing and class certification resulted in differing results in different jurisdictions (Appendix A) [*24] and different settlement amounts (Appendix B).

[*P37] The impact of the multidistrict approach is also important in this litigation because class counsel candidly acknowledged in one of the hearings in this matter that the settlement of the North Carolina Action was achieved because of the leverage created by the existence of multiple state cases. Given the failure to obtain favorable rulings on standing or certification in some jurisdictions that participated in the settlement, it is clear that each case was not settled individually, but as a part of the larger whole. Indeed, both defendants and class counsel appear to have insisted on a global settlement, rather than settling each case individually. (Persky Aff. paras. 57-66.) The settlement division between the states attempts in some way to allocate funds based upon the past history or future chances of success on the merits. (Persky Aff. paras. 68-71.) See also Appendix B. What is clear is that the interests of North Carolina class members were inextricably intertwined with the interests of other class members from other states who had differing causes of action and differing potential for success. That entanglement [25] was not voluntary, but imposed upon the class members by the strategy of class counsel. Where class counsel have created multiple jurisdiction class actions, the settlement of which must of necessity be approved in individual state class actions, it is appropriate for each individual state court to look at the contribution which the effort in the other litigation made towards the benefits received by the class members in that individual state. The court is not required to accept all of class counsels' time in other jurisdictions as the lodestar for assessing the appropriateness of the fee request. Each case in each jurisdiction must be decided on its own.

[*P38] There are clearly instances where work done in a case in one jurisdiction benefits class members in another jurisdiction. Use of discovery conducted in other cases is a good example. Actual judgments obtained in other jurisdictions that facilitate a favorable outcome in another state would be important. Efforts that create estoppel arguments or res judicata rulings are other examples of time and expense that could favorably impact other cases.

[*P39] In this case, the procedural battles over standing and class certification [26] in other jurisdictions must have consumed much of class counsel's time and expense. The issues in those procedural battles were solely related to application of the laws and legal principles applicable to those jurisdictions and the members of the class in each separate state.

[*P40] The settlement in this case, which was reached with the twenty-three defendants in eleven jurisdictions on a cost of litigation basis, was driven by the enormous expense resulting from the complexity created by class counsel's multiple jurisdiction approach. By including all their time and expense in the lodestar, class counsel seek credit for creating the complex situation that spawned the settlement and impacted its amount. As Mr. Persky stated at the hearing before this Court on July 23, 1998,

So we presented to them, by having these states, having these actions in those states with indirect purchases, and we presented them with a great problem. And we believe we've negotiated a settlement in an amount which is worth in total more than the sum of its parts, because what they're getting with this settlement, although they're not interrelated expressly, in other words, if your Honor [27] unfortunately chose not to approve it, that doesn't mean the other settlements would fall. They're not expressly interrelated. But the amounts that ultimately came out, the total was influenced by the fact that we presented this challenge to them nationwide and it was litigated in a coordinated way by Plaintiff's counsel with that intent. So we did reach an overall settlement in an amount that was a compromise between zero and the hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars that we would have won had we been successful.

(Hearing transcript of July 23, 1998 at 35) (emphasis supplied).

[*P41] This Court declines to extend credit to class counsel for using the strategy of multiple coordinated class actions where only a cost of litigation result or its equivalent was achieved.

[*P42] The policy behind the Court's decision is based upon the equitable nature of the class action proceeding. HN3  Equity should not condone use of the class action procedure simply for leverage in settlement. Courts have historically guarded against use of the class action process solely as a lever to induce settlement. See, e.g., Cohen v. Beneficial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 549-550, 69 S.Ct. 1221, 1227, 93 L.Ed 1528 (1949); Yaffe v. Detroit Steel Corp., 50 F.R.D. 481 (N.D. Ill. 1970); Surovitz v. Hilton Hotels Corp., 383 U.S. 363, 371-72, 15 L.Ed. 2d 807, 86 S.Ct. 845 (1966).

[*P43] The procedural history of the Actions, as well as the nature of the settlement and the amount in this action, dictate that class counsel not be given credit on a lodestar analysis for all the time spent in all the Actions or for creating the complexity which impacted the settlement. To do so would be inequitable and encourage misuse of multistate class actions.

[*P44] 2. Is the court required to solicit additional, more detailed information from class counsel regarding the breakdown of their time and expenses for purposes of analysis of their fee request?

[*P45] Class counsel in this case elected to file a fee request that provided only total hours and some rates for individual attorneys. Little information was provided for the nature of the services or the years of experience of counsel. Instead, class counsel based their fee request upon a theory that the Court should consider all of the time that every lawyer spent in every case in determining the appropriate fee in dividing the North Carolina common [29] fund between the North Carolina beneficiaries of the settlement and class counsel. Class counsel contend that the nature of the work done in other jurisdictions is not relevant to the Court's determination, since the settlement covered all jurisdictions and the effort of class counsel was (by election of counsel) coordinated. Class counsel contend that the amount of the work is relevant for lodestar purposes. The Court has rejected class counsel's approach.

[*P46] Should the Court then be required to engage in discovery from class counsel to make further inquiry of the details of their time and expenses? The Court does not believe that it is required to do so in this situation. While the role of class counsel shifts from fiduciary to the class to claimant against the fund when a settlement is reached, the decision with respect to fees is still part of an equitable process. In general, and particularly in this case where there is a cy-près distribution, no attorney is present to represent the beneficiaries of the common fund in the division of the fund between beneficiaries and counsel. It is left to the Court to make the equitable division. Class counsel have an obligation [30] to the Court to provide full and complete details of the time and expenses incurred in representing the class and to do so in an understandable and usable format. If they desire the protection of a confidentiality order they would be entitled to it. They may not simply advocate a theory of compensation and provide only the information that supports their theory. HN4[] The factors which North Carolina trial courts must consider in determining fee requests in common fund cases are each important, and the court must have full information on all factors, including details of services provided, rates, and experience of counsel, in order to reach an equitable result. In some cases where multiple class counsel from separate jurisdictions are seeking fees in one jurisdiction, it might prove beneficial to the court to have a copy of any fee agreements among counsel for in camera inspection. Full disclosure promotes public confidence in the process and insures against the abuses the North Carolina Supreme Court warned against in Horner.

[*P47] However, the Court has determined that it has sufficient information about the time and expenses of class counsel in this case that supplementation [31] of the record with more detail is not required. More detail is not required because the Court has used the lodestar or time involved only as a check on the appropriateness of fee determined. This is not a case in which the fee should be determined on a lodestar basis.

[*P48] Using the lodestar as a basis against which the fee determination can be measured does not require more detailed information in this case. In his letter to the Court of January 14, 1999, the Attorney General suggested determining the amount of the lodestar attributable to North Carolina in the following manner:

Counsel for plaintiff represent that, at their usual billing rates (which reach as high as $ 490 per hour (Affidavit of Bernard Persky Applicable to Indirect Purchaser Actions, Exhibit V-1)), they have rendered legal services in pursuing the various actions (including the North Carolina action) worth $ 6,532,537.75 through July 31, 1998 (Persky Affidavit, p. 49), and $ 7,527,989 through November 30, 1998 (Plaintiff's Memorandum in Support of Final Approval of Partial Class Action Settlement, p. 41). Applying the same factor (13.85%) used by plaintiff's counsel for allocating litigation costs [32] and expenses among the actions (Persky Affidavit, p. 50), the portion of the attorneys' fees lodestar amount attributable to the North Carolina action is $ 904,756.47 as indicated in the Persky Affidavit, or $ 1,042,626.40, as suggested by plaintiff's memorandum.

[*P49] The Court is convinced that the Attorney General's approach is appropriate in this case because the lodestar claimed includes time spent on other Actions and at billing rates higher than the North Carolina average. (See discussion below). The total fees and expenses awarded by the Court approximate the lodestar amount attributable to North Carolina as determined by the Attorney General. Thus, even if they had not already received 14 million dollars, class counsel are being fully compensated for all of their time and expense allocable to North Carolina. Since the North Carolina Action was the last one filed, the pro rata allocation proposed by the Attorney General is fair.

[*P50] The novelty and difficulty of the questions involved and the skill requisite to perform the legal services. The North Carolina Action involved both novel and difficult issues. The question of standing was not fully resolved. [33] Class certification issues would have required significant expertise, both legal and financial. The case on the merits would have posed issues requiring significant expertise and an advanced understanding of economics and pricing. The trial of an antitrust case would have been long and difficult. As stated earlier, this case involved pricing of over eight hundred brand name drugs. Garnering proof of pricing policies and establishing a conspiracy among multiple defendants would have required a great deal of expertise. The Court believes class counsel possessed the requisite expertise to address those issues had they been required to do so. However, since the case was settled before those issues were addressed under North Carolina law, no such requirement arose.

[*P51] The likelihood, if apparent to the client, that acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer. This factor is not significant in this case. The North Carolina Action was an add-on to the already pending actions in other states. It did not pose a situation which would preclude other employment. Rather, it supplemented a strategy which was already in place.

[*P52] [34] The customary fee charged in the locality for similar legal services and whether the fee is fixed or contingent. This factor involves Court review of the fee request by comparing it to the customary fee that would be charged in North Carolina for similar services if the fee were determined on both an hourly basis and a contingency basis.

[*P53] Hourly rates. The first difficulty in making this assessment is the fact that no detail of the services provided can be found in the submission of counsel. Class counsel have approached their fee request from the singular standpoint that it should be decided on the basis of the total dollar amount recovered in all the Actions. Therefore it is difficult to determine the services to which comparison should be made. Did the services include preparation of the fee request? Was the work properly allocated among the lawyers based upon their expertise and billing rates? Was there redundancy resulting from the use of multiple law firms? Those questions cannot be answered from the information supplied by counsel. However, there is information from which the court can compare the rates charged to those customarily charged in the locality. [35] Appendix D attached sets forth the rates charged for certain services as determined by the North Carolina Bar Association Economic Survey 1998, and Appendix C contains class counsels' rates which can be determined from their submission. It is clear from that comparison that North Carolina lawyers would have received far less for the services provided by class counsel. That is not to say that the rates charged by New York counsel for work done in the New York Action were not commensurate with rates charged in that location for similar work. Absent North Carolina class members did not choose to have that work done for them in New York by New York attorneys. The reasonableness of the fee to be charged to North Carolina class members should be evaluated based upon the fees normally charged by North Carolina lawyers for similar services. That comparison indicates that the reasonable charge for similar services by North Carolina lawyers would have been significantly less than that charged by out of state counsel in this case. It is instructive to look at the chart on Appendix C. It shows that the charges by local counsel in the Actions generally fall within the same range as the fees charged [36] by North Carolina lawyers. It is only the charges of class counsel that appear to be substantially in excess of those charged by North Carolina lawyers and local counsel in the Actions. The Court concludes that the lodestar suggested by class counsel has already been enhanced when compared to the customary North Carolina rates.

[*P54] Contingency analysis.  Class actions that create common funds are by their very nature contingency fee cases. The fee in such cases is always subject to court approval. Absent class members may not be bound by the agreement between a class representative they did not choose and an attorney or group of attorneys they did not choose. In multidistrict litigation, they may not be bound by the fee decisions in other jurisdictions. Each jurisdiction must resolve its own case on its own terms. Nor do common fund cases fit the usual contingency fee analysis. In the usual contingency fee case the lawyer and client have negotiated a fee arrangement, with each choosing the risk they are willing to take and the expense they are willing to incur for a specific reward. Therefore, in common fund cases it is more useful to look at percentage awards in other [37] common fund cases than the contingency fee arrangement that might be negotiated between an individual client and an attorney. Even that approach poses difficulty because each case is decided on its own facts and any number of factors could cause a shift in the percentage applied by the court in a particular case. Mechanical rules simply do not apply when making equitable determinations. Goodrich, 681 A.2d at 1048-49. The fee should correlate with the structure of the settlement negotiated by class counsel. In this case, the result was a cy-pres distribution that did not benefit the majority of class members and did not result in the change of any business practice which benefited the class. All the settlement did was to put an end to expensive and meritless litigation.

[*P55] In general, fees range from 6 percent to 35 percent in those cases using a percentage of the fund method. It is also true that the percentage usually decreases as the size of the fund increases. See In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litigation, 187 F.R.D. 465, 1998-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P72,337, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17557, 1998 WL 782020 \(38\) (S.D.N.Y. 1998). In Nasdaq, the Court found, after a thorough review of extensive case law, that in common fund cases the percentage should decrease as the size of the fund increases. The court noted that fund recoveries in the range of 51-75 million dollars "usually" generate fees in the 13 percent to 20 percent range. Fees drop to a range of 6 percent to 10 percent in larger cases. Some courts have used sliding scales to determine fees. See, e.g., Branch v. FDIC, No. Civ.A. 91-CV-1327ORGs., 1998 WL 151249 (D.Mass. March 24, 1998) (memorandum order) (applying 14 percent up to $ 22 million; 12 percent of the next $ 10 million, and 5 percent over and above $ 32 million). There are at least three justifications for altering the percentage as the fund gets bigger. First, it is generally not fifty times more difficult to try a case with a verdict of fifty million dollars than it is to try a case with a one million dollar verdict. See Report of the Third Circuit Task Force, Court Awarded Attorney Fees, 108 F.R.D. 237 \(1985\). Second, the margin for error increases with the size of the fund, requiring courts to exercise their discretion with caution [39] to avoid unjust enrichment of either counsel or the beneficiaries. See Edwards v. Alaska Pulp Corp., 920 P.2d 751 \(Alaska 1996\). Third, and most importantly, the awarding of attorney fees in common fund cases can impact the credibility of the judicial system and the legal profession. See Horner, 236 N.C. at 101, 72 S.E.2d at 24; Kuhnlein v. Department of Revenue, 662 So. 2d 309 \(1995\) (a case heavily relied upon by Judge Manning in his fee decision in the Smith case cited above). In Kuhnlein, the Florida Supreme Court articulated its concerns as follows:

Some time ago, this Court recognized the impact of attorneys' fees on the credibility of the court system and the legal profession when we stated: HN6 [↑] There is but little analogy between the elements that control the determination of a lawyer's fee and those which determine the compensation of skilled craftsmen in other fields. Lawyers are officers of the court. The court is an instrument of society for the administration of justice. Justice should be administered economically, efficiently and expeditiously. The attorney's fee is, therefore, a very important factor in the administration [40] of justice, and if it is not determined with proper relation to that fact it results in a species of social malpractice that undermines the confidence of the public in the bench and bar. It does more than that. It brings the court into disrepute and destroys its power to perform adequately the function of its creation.

Id. at 313 (citations omitted).

[*P56] The storm of public protest recently created by the fee request in the Smith case in this state and the national controversy and adverse media coverage surrounding the fees in the tobacco industry litigation demonstrate the public's interest in and concerns about attorney fees and the administration of justice.

[*P57] Balanced against the public concern over fee abuse is the strong public interest in encouraging attorneys to take contingency fee cases, particularly in antitrust cases. The Court is fully aware of the chilling effect fee decisions can have on plaintiffs' counsel. As Judge Richard Posner of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals stated so clearly:

HN7 [↑] The award of substantial attorneys' fees to the lawyers for the plaintiffs in a successful antitrust class action is important [41] in order to encourage the bringing of such actions. Necessarily, these lawsuits are handled on a contingent-fee basis, and the uncertainty of antitrust law and the complexity of the facts in most antitrust cases create a substantial risk that the lawsuit will fail and the lawyers for the class therefore receive no fee. Because these are big cases, the investment of the attorney's time and effort -- an investment that he loses entirely if the suit is unsuccessful -- is very large; and payment of his fee may be long postponed due to the length of the typical antitrust case. In addition, the successful prosecution of an antitrust case requires highly specialized legal skills and aptitudes that are in great demand by conventional clients. Substantial fees are necessary if the lawyers having these skills are to be induced to devote their attention to the plaintiffs' side in antitrust class actions, rather than to the more secure forms of practice for which their skills equip them.

(Emphasis added.) Pchemister v. Harcourt Brace Javanovich, Inc., 1984 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23595, 1984-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\), No. 77 C 39, P66, 234 \(N.D. Ill. Sept. 14, 1984\).

[*P58] In the case before this [42] Court, the Court and class counsel have a different perception of success. In this case, the lawsuit essentially failed, but the lawyers have asked for a premium. When class counsel win, they should be rewarded. There must be incentives in order to induce lawyers to take difficult cases. However, when class counsel settle on a cost of litigation basis prior to any test of the merits of their case and do not create any significant benefit for the class, they should not receive the same premium for their work as if they had won. They should be paid reasonably for what they achieved for the class. The Court believes the fee awarded in this case does just that. To award a premium fee for the results in this case might encourage other lawyers to bring meritless but multiple lawsuits in hopes of getting a premium fee for a cost of litigation settlement before achieving any real benefit for the class.

[*P59] The time limitations imposed by the client or circumstances. This does not appear to be a significant factor in this case.

[*P60] The nature and length of the professional relationship with the client. This does not appear to be a significant factor. Stacy Lee Long, [43] the class representative, never even appeared at any hearing before this court in the North Carolina Action, which was the last of the actions to be filed.

[*P61] The experience, reputation and ability of the attorneys. In this case, the Court has found the skills, reputation and abilities of the attorneys who have appeared before it in the North Carolina Action to be excellent. The Court is obviously without the ability to make any judgment with respect to the work of counsel in the other cases.

[*P62] Risk. This factor is important in this case. Class counsel undertook the first wave of litigation after direct purchaser actions had already begun. By obtaining access to the discovery in the federal MDL action, the potential burden of massive discovery in the indirect purchaser actions was significantly reduced. This is set forth in Mr. Persky's affidavit: "The discovery stipulation gave Class Counsel access to -- and the right to use -- a voluminous amount of discovery that would have literally cost millions of dollars to generate independently." (Persky Aff. para. 30.) In addition, the existence of the MDL action even facilitated class counsel in finding an expert. [44] (Persky Aff. para 30.) The MDL action was obviously going to trial before any of the indirect purchaser cases, thus insuring that class counsel would know the outcome if they were willing to wait on trial of the federal action before settling. There was a risk that no violation of the antitrust laws could be proven. This case was settled before the risk of failure on the merits was incurred in either the MDL action or any state Action.

[*P63] There was also a risk that class certification could not be obtained in the individual Actions. That risk was significant. It took employment of an expert to establish that a class or classes could be defined to support the certification request. Certification had been denied in New York, Maine, Michigan and Minnesota. It was uncertain or unlikely in six other jurisdictions and had only been upheld in the District of Columbia. See Appendix A. In North Carolina, class certification had not been ruled upon.

[*P64] There was also a risk that standing would not be allowed in those states that had not adopted an Illinois Brick repealer statute. See Appendix A. In North Carolina, standing was more likely because of the decision [45] in Hyde, but the Supreme Court had not addressed the issue.

[*P65] Had class counsel shouldered the burden of the obstacles described above and overcome them, they would have been entitled to a premium for taking the risks. In this case class counsel avoided the future risks and minimized the losses already incurred in the largest states by settling before the trial in the MDL action and before facing class certification contests in other states. They should not be rewarded for a cost of litigation settlement on the same basis as if they had taken the risks associated with certification and trial of the merits and prevailed, or at least obtained a significant settlement compared to the litigation costs or the potential recovery.

[*P66] The amount involved and the results obtained. The Court has already discussed many of the facts relevant to this factor. A summary of the key facts follows. This was a cost of litigation settlement that was entered into after class counsel had sustained key losses in certification fights in the largest jurisdictions. It was entered into before the trial in the MDL action, thus avoiding the risks associated with a decision on the merits. [46] The amount received, though large, was small when compared to the potential recovery if the case had been tried and won. As the MDL case established, the underlying substantive claims were meritless, and the settlement reflected that fact. The settlement was so meager from the standpoint of benefit to each class member that a cy-pres distribution had to be used to dispense the settlement fund. Defendants got a complete release and covenant not to sue, ensuring that they would not have to make any change to their pricing policies which would benefit the class members. The settlement was remarkable in its total amount, but that figure can be attributed to the complexity and costs of the legal entanglement created by pressing eleven class action cases in different jurisdictions against twenty-five large corporations covering eight hundred brand name drugs. To reward class counsel with a premium fee simply for creating a massive legal entanglement would not be in keeping with the equitable principles which apply to use of the class action procedure. Certainly, a cost of litigation settlement entered into before any significant risks are taken in a case does not warrant payment of any [47] premium for class counsel's services.

[*P67] Ten other jurisdictions have awarded class counsel a premium for the result in this case. While it would be simpler to either say that the 14 million dollars class counsel has already received is more than sufficient for the value created or blindly follow the other jurisdictions and award 25 percent, the decision on the division of the North Carolina common fund should be made independently. This was a separate action brought in the state courts of North Carolina, and it is the benefits received by and work performed for North Carolina class members that are most important.

V.

[*P68] The fee decision that the court has made in its discretion has the practical effect of fully reimbursing class counsel for all of North Carolina's prorated share of expenses incurred in all the Actions. Class counsel are also almost fully reimbursed for North Carolina's prorated share of the lodestar fees incurred in all the Actions, even though those fees are generally at a much higher rate than would be found in North Carolina and cover activities in other jurisdictions that related solely to legal issues exclusive to those jurisdictions. On [48] a percentage of the fund basis, the fee award amounts to approximately 10 percent of the North Carolina fund remaining after payment out of the fund for notice costs and administration expenses, but before attorney fees and expenses. That percentage is slightly below the low end of the range of fees awarded nationally in cases involving amounts between fifty and seventy-five million dollars. Use of the lower percentage in this case is justified because, among other reasons cited above: (1) the majority of class members did not benefit in any way from the settlement; (2) the case was settled before success on the merits was achieved and after procedural battles had been lost in large states; (3) class counsel's ability to piggy-back the discovery in the direct purchaser actions made it less risky; and (4) the underlying substantive claims lacked merit. No factors justifying a premium were present in this case.

[*P69] The Court has been informed by class counsel that despite the cap on the fee request, no funds at all have been distributed to community health centers in North Carolina, but all funds have been held in an interest bearing escrow account pending the Court's ruling [49] on attorney fees. The highest interest rate paid on those funds was 4.5 percent. Accordingly, class counsel will be entitled to interest on the amount of the award for fees and expenses at the rate of 4.5 percent from the date of the final order approving settlement in this case to the date of payment.

[*P70] Based upon the foregoing, and in the Court's exercise of its discretion, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED:

1. Within thirty days class counsel shall be paid from the common fund fees in the amount of $ 870,000.00 and expenses in the amount of $ 91,117.92.
2. Within thirty days class counsel shall also be paid from the common fund interest at the rate of 4.5 percent on the total amount of $ 961,117.92 from the date of the final order approving settlement through the date of payment.
3. Within ten days of the disbursement to class counsel the balance of the common fund shall be distributed to the National Association of Community Health Centers.
4. Within sixty days of this order, the National Association of Community Health Centers shall file with the Court a report containing its specific plans for distribution of the funds to North [50] Carolina Community Health Centers and a timetable showing when the funds will be distributed. The National Association shall make every effort to reduce the paperwork and bureaucratic delays in the process while insuring the funds are properly allocated.

5. In the event class counsel appeal from this order, an initial distribution shall still be made to the National Association of Community Health Centers in the amount of $ 6,000,000.00.

6. The Court shall retain jurisdiction of this case to oversee any additional issues concerning attorney fees and expenses or disbursement of the settlement fund.

This the 30th day of July, 1999.

APPENDIX A *

JURISDICTION	DATE FILED	INDIRECT PURCHASER	CLASS	PROCUDURAL
			STANDING
New York	7/13/95		No	No Case dismissed for lack of standing. Appeal pending
Arizona	8/29/95	Def.'s mtn to dismiss for lack of standing denied	Uncertain	Def.'s mtn to dismiss for lack of standing denied
Maine	11/3/95		No	Denied Appeal Pending
Michigan	1/20/96		No	Denied P's petition for permission to file interlocutory appeal denied
Minnesota	2/21/96		No	Denied P's petition for permission to file interlocutory appeal denied
D.C.	2/22/96	Allowed; III. Brick repealer	Granted
Wisconsin	2/22/96	Allowed; III. Brick repealer	Uncertain
Kansas	12/6/96	Allowed; III. Brick repealer	Uncertain
Florida	1/16/97	Uncertain	Unlikely
Tennessee	2/24/97	Uncertain;	Uncertain

* See Affidavit of Bernard Persky of September 14, 1998, at 5-6, 8-13, 16-25, 33-37.

1999 NCBC 10, *10LÁ1999 NCBC LEXIS 10, 50

JURISDICTION	DATE FILED	INDIRECT PURCHASER	CLASS	PROCUDURAL
		STANDING	CERTIFICATION	POSTURE
North Carolina	6/27/97	Uncertain; favorable lower ct. ruling	Uncertain
TOTALS		4 ALLOWED,TED, 4 NOT ALLOWED, 3 UNCERTAIN	1 GRANTED, 4 DENIED 6 UNCERTAIN

[51] APPENDIX B

			Actual Per Capita
		Amount of Net
		Net	Settlement
		Settlement
	Settlement	Amount
	Amount
Jurisdiction
AR		$ 8,131,329	$ 2.06<5>
	$ 8,409,900
D.C.	6,925,800	6,678,753	3.34<5>
FL	8,904,600	8,465,521	.62
KA	5,441,700	5,226,177	2.06<5>
ME	989,400	868,384	.70<6>
MI	3,166,080	2,948,881	.31<6>
MN	1,978,800	1,836,833	.41<6>
NY	1,978,800	1,686,833	.09<6>

	Actual Per Capita
	Amount of Net	Settlement	Net
	Settlement	Amount	Settlement
	Amount		Amount
Jurisdiction
NC	8,904,600	8,565,521	1.23
TN	7,420,500	7,162,945	1.41
WI	10,190,820	9,874,434	1.96<5>
Potential Damages			Relationship of in millions		Actual to
		Per Capita	Potential Per
	Over 4.8	Potential	Capita Value
			Value
	years
Jurisdiction
AR	$ 157.68	$ 39.92	5.16%
D.C.	23.18	11.59	28.82%
FL	548.93	39.99	1.55%
KA	101.38	39.99	5.15%
ME	49.54	39.95	1.75%

		Potential		Relationship of Actual to Potential Per Capita Value Damages
		in millions
		Over 4.8	Per Capita
		Potential	Capita Value
			Value
			years
Jurisdiction
MI		378.29	39.98	.78%
MN		180.86	39.98	1.03%
NY		725.90	39.99	1.03%
NC		277.92	39.98	3.08%
TN		203.76	40.00	3.53%
WI		201.74	40.00	4.90%

APPENDIX C [52] LODE* ANALYSIS*CLASS COUNSEL

FIRM	State	Hrs	fee	% tOT FEE	RATE¹
Goodkind	New York	7781.65	2,664,541	40.8	$ 342.41
Miller	Illinois	2212.5	779,095.25	11.9	352.13
Zwerling	New York	3940.1	1,219,494	18.7	309.51
Elwood	Michigan	2151.25	740,785	11.3	344.35
Bainbridge	Ala., Va.	2157.8	639,908.5	9.8	296.56
Zimmerman	Minnesota	1027	199,111	3	186.09
TOTAL		19,270.3	6,242,934.8	95.5	323.97

NORTH CAROLINA COUNSEL

* See Appendix of Exhibits to Affidavit of Bernard Persky of September 14, 1998, Exhibit V.

¹ These rates are average blended rates. That is, they include work done by attorneys at any level of experience, law clerks, and paralegals. The top hourly rates for class counsel attorneys were as follows: Goodkind, $ 490; Miller, $ 455; Zwerling, $ 445; Elwood, $ 415; Bainbridge, $ 395. The top hourly rate for class counsel paralegals was: Goodkind, $ 145.

Whitfield	North Carolina	60	10,292	0.2	171.53
-----------	----------------	----	--------	-----	--------

OTHER LOCAL COUNSEL

Bader	Colorado ²	55.65	10,445.75	0.2	187.7
Bonnett	Arizona	245.7	55,523	0.8	225.98
La Cava	Wisconsin	148.48	41,587.75	0.6	280.09
Shockman	Arizona	204.3	34,325	0.5	168.01
Sando	Wash. D.C.	87.5	22,750	0.3	260
Niewald	Kansas	227.7	44,526	0.7	195.55
Berman	Maine	169.5	31,521.25	0.5	185.97
Hoffman	Maine	88.4	17,680	0.3	200
Hyman	Michigan	101.5	15,228.75	0.2	150.04
Sinsheimer	Washington	(51.49)	7,723	0.1	(150)
GRAND TOTAL		20,956.22	6,532,537.7	99.9	$
			5		311.72

[53] APPENDIX D*Comparative Rates for North Carolina Lawyers¹

(Typical rates for lawyer during 1997 at highest rate for any size city or firm in North Carolina.)

Category	Hourly Rate
Lawyers admitted 1991-92	$ 148
Lawyers admitted 1987-88	$ 176
Lawyers admitted 1983-84	$ 201
Lawyers admitted 1977-78	$ 250*
Antitrust Lawyers	$ 190
Litigation	$ 192
Personal Injury - Plaintiff	$ 244
Securities	$ 250*
Highest hourly rate for law clerks	$ 72
Highest rate for paralegals	$ 61

End of Document

² While Lodestar figures for Washington and Colorado were included in class counsel's fee application, neither state was part of the settlement before this Court.

¹ Figures based on the 1998 North Carolina Bar Association Economic Survey.

* Highest rate on entire survey.

The Court notes that in Smith v. State of N.C., No. 95 CVS 6715 (Wake Co. Sup. Ct. (November 20, 1997)), Judge Manning awarded fees at the rate of $ 265 an hour for senior attorneys at Womble Carlyle Sandridge and Rice, a large N.C. law firm.

The Court also notes that in In Re Food Lion Effective Scheduling Litigation, No. 92-198-MISC-5-F (E.D.N.C.) (April 13, 1995), Judge Fox applied the rate for similar services in the specific locale of Eastern District of North Carolina attorneys in determining the proper fee award for class counsel, awarding $ 160 an hour for attorneys and $ 35 an hour for paralegals in an employment litigation case.

Subsolutions, Inc. v. Doctor's Assocs.

United States District Court for the District of Connecticut

July 30, 1999, Decided ; August 2, 1999, Filed

CASE NO. 3:98CV470(AHN)

Reporter

62 F. Supp. 2d 616 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12304 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,677

SUBSOLUTIONS, INC., et al. v. DOCTOR'S ASSOCIATES, INC., et al.

Subsequent History: Magistrate's recommendation at Subsolutions, Inc. v. Doctor's Assocs., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24393 \(D. Conn., Apr. 6, 2001\)

Disposition: [1] Defendants' Motion to Dismiss [doc. # 74] GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART.

Core Terms

franchise, franchisees, vendor, allegations, plaintiffs', amended complaint, antitrust, motion to dismiss, products, Sherman Act, antitrust claim, defendants', tying product, tied product, anticompetitive, competitors, conspiracy, sandwich, tying arrangement, anesthesiology, unfair, marks, relevant market, interchangeability, cross-elasticity, consumers, quotation, trademark, markets, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In deciding a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), the court is required to accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and must construe any well-pleaded factual allegations in the plaintiff's favor. A court may dismiss a complaint only where it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. A court must not consider whether the claim will ultimately be successful, but should merely assess the legal feasibility of the complaint. In fact, in antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly. In deciding such a motion, consideration is limited to the facts stated in the complaint or in documents attached thereto as exhibits or incorporated therein by reference.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Requirements

62 F. Supp. 2d 616, *616LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12304, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2 [down] Standing, Requirements

In order to have standing to bring a private antitrust claim, a plaintiff must allege more than a personal injury. An antitrust injury is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. In examining this requirement, a court must keep in mind the fundamental tenet that the antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN3 [down] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

While statements from the original complaint may be used as impeachment evidence at trial, the court should not consider such statements on a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN4 [down] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Generally, a tying arrangement occurs where a party will sell one product (the "tying product") only if the buyer also purchases another product (the "tied product") or at least agrees that he will not purchase the tied product from any other entity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. §1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A plaintiff must allege five essential elements in order to demonstrate an illegal tying arrangement. These elements include: first, a tying and a tied product; second, evidence of actual coercion by the seller that forced the buyer to accept the tied product; third, sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; fourth, anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and fifth, the involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the "tied" market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Trademark Law > ... > Licenses > Licensable Subject Matter > Tying Arrangements

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A franchiser's trademark may constitute a separate product for purposes of a tying arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN10 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In order to make out an antitrust claim, plaintiffs must allege a relevant product market in which the anticompetitive effects of the challenged activity can be assessed. The relevant product market includes all products reasonably interchangeable, determination of which requires consideration of cross-elasticity of demand. Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient, and a motion to dismiss may be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN11 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Products in a relevant market are characterized by a cross-elasticity of demand, in other words, the rise in the price of a good within a relevant product market would tend to create a greater demand for other like goods in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

To successfully bring a claim under §1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, a plaintiff must demonstrate a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities which constitutes an unreasonable restraint on interstate trade or commerce. Thus, as long as a manufacturer acts independently, it may generally deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it chooses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN13 [] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

An antitrust claim is not subject to any heightened pleading requirement and must simply be plead in conformity with Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\). However, a §1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, conspiracy claim supported by vague and conclusory allegations of concerted activity cannot withstand a motion to dismiss. A mere allegation that the defendants violated the antitrust laws as to a particular plaintiff and commodity is insufficient to survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

HN14 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim under §1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1, a plaintiff must assert facts demonstrating that the alleged competitors entered into an agreement which was designed to further their own economic interests while at the same time excluding other threatening competitors.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

HN15 [] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

The fundamental elements of a state law claim for tortious interference with a business expectancy are: the existence of a business relationship; the alleged tortfeasor's knowledge of that relationship; intentional interference with the relationship; and consequential loss. Given the nature of competition, not all conduct that interferes with a business relationship is actionable. Rather, the plaintiff must establish that the defendant's behavior was tortious. The plaintiff may make such a showing by alleging that the defendant engaged in fraud, misrepresentation, intimidation, obstruction or molestation, or acted maliciously.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] State Regulation, Claims

The Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 42-110b\(a\) (1999) (CUTPA), provides that no person shall engage in unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce. Initially, a plaintiff must satisfy two factors in order to bring a CUTPA claim. First, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant's conduct constitutes an unfair or deceptive practice. Second, the plaintiff must establish a basis for a reasonable estimate of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

HN17 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

In applying the "cigarette rule" to determine whether a trade practice is unfair or deceptive, a court must consider: (1) Whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise - whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers, competitors, or other businessmen. A plaintiff does not have to satisfy all three of these factors.

Counsel: For SUBSOLUTIONS INC, DECO SOLUTIONS GROUP INC, plaintiffs: Raul Davila-Carlos, E. Glastonbury, CT.

For DOCTOR'S ASSOCIATES, INC., COMPUTER REGISTER ASSOCIATES, INC, defendants: Edward Wood Dunham, Wiggin & Dana, New Haven, CT.

For DOCTOR'S ASSOCIATES, INC., defendant: Sharyn B. Zuch, Wiggin & Dana, Hartford, CT.

For DOCTOR'S ASSOCIATES, INC., COMPUTER REGISTER ASSOCIATES, INC, defendants: Suzanne Ellen Wachsstock, Wiggin & Dana, Stamford, CT.

Judges: Alan H. Nevas, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Alan H. Nevas

Opinion

[*618] RULING ON DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

The plaintiffs, Subsolutions, Inc. ("SSI") and Deco Solutions Group, Inc. ("DSG"), bring this action against the defendants, Doctor's Associates, Inc. ("DAI") and Computer Register Associates, Inc. ("CRA"), alleging violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and section 14 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. The plaintiffs also bring a state law claim for tortious interference with a business expectancy and allege violations of the Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act, Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 42-110a to -110q ("CUTPA").¹

[2] [*619] Now pending is DAI and CRA's Motion to Dismiss. For the reasons set forth below, the motion [doc. # 74] is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 In deciding a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the court is required to accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and must construe any well-pleaded factual allegations in the plaintiff's favor. See Cooper v. Parsky, 140 F.3d 433, 440 (2d Cir. 1998); Easton v. Sundram, 947 F.2d 1011, 1014-15 (2d Cir. 1991). A court may dismiss a complaint only where "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); see also Still v. DeBuono, 101 F.3d 888 (2d Cir. 1996). A court must not consider whether the claim will ultimately be successful, but should merely "assess the legal feasibility of the complaint." See Cooper, 140 F.3d at 440 (citation omitted). In fact, "in antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity [3] for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted); accord George Haug Co. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 139 (2d Cir. 1998); Strobl v. New York Mercantile Exch., 561 F. Supp. 379, 383 (S.D.N.Y. 1983); CBS, Inc. v. Ahern, 108 F.R.D. 14, 28 (S.D.N.Y. 1985); Eye Encounter, Inc. v. Contour Art., Ltd., 81 F.R.D. 683, 686 (E.D.N.Y. 1979). In deciding such a motion, consideration is limited to the facts stated in the complaint or in documents attached thereto as exhibits or incorporated therein by reference. See Kramer v. Time Warner Inc., 937 F.2d 767, 773 (2d Cir. 1991).

FACTS

DAI, one of the defendants, is a Florida corporation with its principal place of business in Milford, Connecticut, that sells and services "Subway" sandwich shop franchises. (See Am. Compl. P 4.) DSG, one of the plaintiffs, is a Florida corporation which develops and services point of sales systems ("POS systems"), a computerized alternative to conventional cash registers. [4] (See id. P 2.) SSI, the other plaintiff and another Florida corporation, markets and sells DSG's POS systems to Subway franchisees.² (See id. P 3.) SSI also provides extended service agreements to Subway franchisees who purchase DSG's POS system. (See id.) CRA, the other defendant, is a Florida corporation and DAI affiliate, that is in the process of developing POS system software for use in Subway sandwich shops. (See id. PP 5, 21.)

¹ The plaintiffs originally named Retail Business Systems, Inc. ("RBS") as an additional defendant in this action. On April 1, 1998, RBS filed a motion to dismiss. Because the plaintiffs failed to file a memorandum in opposition within twenty-one days of the date RBS filed its motion, the court granted the motion to dismiss absent objection on May 11, 1998. See D. Conn. L. Civ. R. 9(a) (recognizing that the "failure to submit a memorandum in opposition to a motion may be deemed sufficient cause to grant the motion"). The plaintiffs failed to seek timely reconsideration of this ruling. See D. Conn. L. Civ. R. 9(e) (requiring that motions for reconsideration be filed "within ten (10) days of the filing of the decision or order from which such relief is sought").

² According to the plaintiffs, "POS systems allow Subway franchisees to transmit certain sales figures and other financial data to DAI's home office electronically, and/or to reproduce the sales figures and other financial data in the format required by DAI." (Am. Compl. P 7.) The POS systems developed by DSG "are designed and programmed pursuant to operational specifications issued by DAI." (Id. P 8.)

Under the Subway franchise agreement, franchisees are only permitted to use Subway approved products and equipment.³ (See id. P 18.) A Subway franchisee [5] who uses unauthorized goods or equipment is subject to termination by DAI. (See id.) Since 1992, SSI has been an approved Subway POS system vendor. (See id. P 14.) In this capacity, SSI has sold approximately 1,565 POS systems to Subway franchisees. (See id.)

For the past fifteen years, RBS, a New York corporation, has exclusively supplied cash registers to Subway restaurants. (See id. P 6.) RBS also provides POS hardware [*620] and software systems to Subway franchisees. (See id.)

On February 24, 1998, DAI implemented a policy which mandated that all Subway franchisees employ a POS system by January 1, 2001. (See id. P 9.) Franchisees who refuse to comply with this policy are subject to termination. (See id.) This policy evolved out of an agreement between DAI and RBS, in which they recognized that RBS would be the "sole [6] DAI approved POS vendor in the Subway POS market."⁴ (Id. P 19.) Apparently, RBS's exclusive vendor status terminates once DAI's affiliate, CRA, develops its own POS system. (See id. P 22.) This agreement effectively forecloses SSI, as well as other POS vendors, from the Subway POS market.⁵ (See id. P 19) The plaintiffs allege that this agreement is part of a conspiracy between DAI, RBS and CRA to unreasonably restrain competition in the Subway POS market. (See id. P 20.)

On March 12, 1998, the plaintiffs commenced this action. An amended complaint was subsequently filed on October 27, 1998, raising various antitrust and state law claims against DAI and CRA.

DISCUSSION

[7] I. Allegations of an "Antitrust Injury"

HN2 In order to have standing to bring a private antitrust claim, a plaintiff must allege more than a personal injury. See Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 797 (2d Cir. 1994); George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 139. Such an action may be pursued only where an antitrust injury is present. See Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). An antitrust injury is an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. In examining this requirement, a court must keep in mind "the fundamental tenet that the antitrust laws . . . were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." Balaklaw, 14 F.3d at 797 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

The defendants initially argue that the plaintiffs' antitrust claims must be dismissed because the plaintiffs have not alleged [8] a cognizable antitrust injury, i.e., an injury to competition as a whole. The defendants rely heavily on Balaklaw in support of their position. In Balaklaw, the plaintiff physician was the president of a private group of doctors who were solely responsible for meeting a hospital's anesthesiology requirements. See Balaklaw, 14 F.3d at 795-96. No written contract governed this relationship. See id. The hospital subsequently decided to solicit proposals from outside physicians in an effort to establish an exclusive contract for its anesthesiology needs. See id. at 796. Nine interested parties, including the plaintiff physician's group, submitted proposals to the hospital. See id. Although interviewed by the hospital, the plaintiff physician's group was ultimately not awarded the contract. See id. The plaintiff physician brought suit claiming that the selection process was anticompetitive and thus, a violation of the Sherman Act. See id. In affirming the district court's grant of summary judgment, the Second Circuit held that there was no antitrust injury because the plaintiff's "claimed injury came as a result of his losing [9] out in the competition for an exclusive anesthesiology contact at [the hospital], and nothing more." Id. at 798.

³ SSI claims that prospective franchisees must agree to all of the terms of the Subway franchise agreement in order to operate a Subway franchise. (See id. P 37.)

⁴ The plaintiffs claim that traditionally the SSI POS system outsold the RBS POS system by a four to one margin. (See id. P 44.)

⁵ SSI alleges, however, that DAI will not terminate the franchisee agreement of any Subway franchisees who purchased the SSI POS system prior to February 24, 1998. (See id. P 25.)

[*621] The defendants argue that the present case is similar to Balaklaw because: (1) DAI unilaterally selected RBS as the supplier of POS systems at the culmination of an open and vigorous competitive process, and (2) DAI chose RBS for pro-competitive reasons, including the fact that RBS's POS system offered the lowest price to the consumer. (See Mem. of Law of DAI and CRA in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss at 6 [hereinafter "Defs.' Mem."].) Neither of these facts are contained in the plaintiffs' amended complaint. Rather, the defendants extract this information from the plaintiffs' original complaint. Because "it is well established that an amended complaint ordinarily supercedes the original, and renders it of no legal effect," Dluhos v. Floating & Abandoned Vessel, 162 F.3d 63, 68 (2d Cir. 1998) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted), the defendants' reliance on the plaintiffs' original complaint is misplaced. [HN3\[\]](#) While statements from the original complaint may be used as impeachment evidence at trial, see Andrews v. Metro North Commuter R.R. Co., 882 F.2d 705, 707 \(2d Cir. 1989\); [10] Decker v. Vermont Educ. Television, Inc... 13 F. Supp. 2d 569, 572 \(D. Vt. 1998\), the court should not consider such statements on a motion to dismiss.

Here, the plaintiffs' amended complaint contains numerous allegations that other competitors in the POS market have been injured as a result of the defendants' actions. (See Am. Compl. PP 19-20, 24.) Such allegations are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. See Delaware Health Care, Inc. v. MCD Holding Co., 893 F. Supp. 1279, 1291 \(D. Del. 1995\) (finding that plaintiff had "satisfied its minimal burden of pleading harm not only to itself, but also to others in the competitive landscape and thus to competition"); Capital Imaging Assoc., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assoc., 725 F. Supp. 669, 677-78 \(N.D.N.Y. 1989\) (same); cf. Falstaff Brewing Co. v. Stroh Brewery Co., 628 F. Supp. 822, 827 \(N.D. Cal. 1986\) (holding that an antitrust complaint was defective where it failed to allege an injury to competition). When the facts of Balaklaw are compared to those alleged in the plaintiffs' amended complaint, it is evident that Balaklaw is distinguishable. First, [11] the physician plaintiff in that case alleged nothing more than a personal injury. See Balaklaw, 14 F.3d at 796. Second, the Balaklaw court found that the exclusive anesthesiology contract entered into by the hospital actually enhanced competition because it expired after three years. See id. at 799. Here, there are no allegations that the agreement entered into between DAI and RBS is of a limited duration. Both of these factors limit the applicability of Balaklaw to the present case.

Accordingly, the court holds that the plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged an antitrust injury in their amended complaint.

II. The Tying Claim

[HN4\[\]](#) Generally, a tying arrangement occurs where a party will sell one product (the "tying product") only if the buyer also purchases another product (the "tied product") or at least agrees that he will not purchase the tied product from any other entity. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\). The plaintiffs' tying claim is apparently predicated on both Section 1 of the Sherman Act ⁶ and Section 14 of the Clayton Act.⁷ See [De Jesus v. Sears Roebuck & Co., \[*622\] Inc., 87 F.3d](#)

⁶ [HN5\[\]](#) This statute provides, in relevant part: "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 \(West 1997\).

⁷ [HN6\[\]](#) Section 14 provides that:

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities . . . or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

65, 70 \(2d Cir. 1996\) [12] (recognizing that a tying claim under either the Sherman Act or Clayton Act involves identical elements).

[13] HN7 [↑]

A plaintiff must allege five essential elements in order to demonstrate an illegal tying arrangement. See id. These elements include:

first, a tying and a tied product; second, evidence of actual coercion by the seller that forced the buyer to accept the tied product; third, sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; fourth, anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and fifth, the involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the "tied" market.

Id. at 70 (citation omitted). Here, the defendants argue that the plaintiffs' claim must be dismissed because the plaintiffs cannot satisfy the first, third, and fourth elements of an illegal tying arrangement. The court disagrees.

A. Existence of Separate Products

The plaintiffs allege that the Subway trademark is the tying product and the POS system is the tied product. (See Am. Compl. PP 29-30.) The Second Circuit has specifically recognized that HN8 [↑] a franchisor's trademark may constitute a separate product for purposes of a tying arrangement. See Susser v. Carvel Corp., 332 F.2d 505, 519 \(2d Cir. 1964\) [14] (recognizing that "the true tying item was rather the Carvel trademark, whose growing repute was intended to help the little band of Carvel dealers swim a bit faster than their numerous rivals up the highly competitive stream"); see also Power Test Petroleum Distrib., Inc. v. Calcu Gas, Inc., 754 F.2d 91, 96 \(2d Cir. 1985\) (stating that "a trademark could in proper circumstances constitute a separate tying product") (citation omitted); Esposito v. Mister Softee, Inc., 1979 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7978, No. 75 C 555, 1979 WL 1733, at *8 (E.D.N.Y. 1979) (finding a tying arrangement where the defendants conditioned the plaintiffs' "right to the use of the trademark of Mister Softee upon their purchasing of all their supplies from a designated supplier"), modified on other grounds by, 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17849, No. 75 CV 555, 1983 WL 1806 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 11, 1983); accord Photovest Corp. v. Fotomat Corp., 606 F.2d 704, 722 \(7th Cir. 1979\); Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F.2d 43, 47 \(9th Cir. 1971\); Little Caesar Enter. v. Smith, 34 F. Supp. 2d 459, 467 \(E.D. Mich. 1998\); Wilson v. Mobil Oil Corp., 940 F. Supp. 944 \(E.D. La. 1996\). [15] In light of this authority, the plaintiffs could make out a tying claim by alleging that the Subway trademark constitutes the tying product.

i. Are there Separate Markets for the Subway Franchise and the POS System?

The defendants argue that the plaintiffs cannot establish the first element of a tying claim because there is "no market for the Subway POS system distinct from the Subway franchise market." (Defs.' Mem. at 9.) Two Supreme Court cases control the court's consideration of this issue.

In Jefferson Parish Hosp. v. Hyde, the Supreme Court stressed "that HN9 [↑] the answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." 466 U.S. 2, 19, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\) (emphasis added). In Jefferson Parish, the Court recognized that anesthesiology services constituted a separate product from hospital services and rejected the defendant's argument [*623] that by linking the two the hospital was "merely providing a functionally integrated package of services." Id. at 19. Because "there [was] a sufficient demand for the purchase of anesthesiological [16] services separate from hospital services to identify a distinct product market in which it [was] efficient to offer anesthesiological services separately from hospital services," id. at 21-22, the Court concluded that the first element of a tying claim was satisfied.

In Eastman Kodak, the Supreme Court confronted Kodak's "policy of selling replacement parts for micrographic and copying machines only to buyers of Kodak equipment who use Kodak service." 504 U.S. at 458. The Court applied the criteria of Jefferson Parish in an effort to ascertain whether service and parts constituted separate products for purposes of a tying claim. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462-63. Kodak argued that parts and service were functionally linked and specifically "insisted that because there is no demand for parts separate from service, there cannot be separate markets for service and parts." Id. at 463. The Court disagreed and found that a factual question existed on this issue because service and parts had been "sold separately in the past and still are sold separately to self-service equipment owners." Id. at 462. [17] The Court commented that "the development of the entire high-technology service industry is evidence of the efficiency of a separate market for service." Id.

Recently, a district court has applied the reasoning of both Jefferson Parish and Eastman Kodak to the franchise context. See Little Caesar Enter., 34 F. Supp. 2d at 459. There, the plaintiffs, a class of "Little Caesar's" franchisees, accused the defendant of unlawfully tying the sale of certain items from a wholly-owned subsidiary of Little Caesar to "the sale and continued operation of the Little Caesar franchises." Id. at 464. These items included, in pertinent part, "condiments with [Little Caesar's] proprietary symbols and marks." Id. at 463. Little Caesar argued that there were not two separate markets for its logoed products and its franchise because the logoed items "could not be sold anywhere or used anywhere separate from a [Little Caesar's franchise]." Id. at 468. The court rejected this reasoning. Instead, the court found that the proper test was whether it would be "efficient for a firm to provide [these items] separate from the [18] [Little Caesar's] franchise." Id. at 469 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The court found that two distinct markets existed because, in the past, "other private distributors, unrelated to Little Caesar, sold all the goods and services necessary to run Little Caesar franchises, including logoed paper goods." Id. at 469. These products were sold separately from the franchise itself. See id. The court also noted that Little Caesar had recently approved several new distributors to provide these items to its franchisees. See id. Because these items had been sold separately in the past, the court concluded that the market for Little Caesar's franchises was separate from the market for logoed goods. See id. at 470.

The court finds the reasoning of Little Caesar Enter. persuasive and hereby adopts it. Applying the consumer demand test to the present case, the court finds that the plaintiffs have alleged the existence of two distinct product markets. First, the amended complaint asserts that Subway franchisees "must purchase the POS system(s) for use in their Subway submarine sandwich franchise(s) from other firms, [19] not DAI." (Am. Compl. P 31.) The plaintiffs further assert that prior to February 24, 1998, there were eight POS system vendors who competed for sales in the Subway POS system market. (See id. P 16.) Apparently, none of these vendors were related to DAI. The fact that a separate market for these POS system vendors evolved evidences that the Subway franchise market is distinct from the POS system [*624] market. See Little Caesar Enter., 34 F. Supp. 2d at 470.⁸

[20] Accordingly, the court finds that the plaintiffs have properly alleged the first element of their tying claim.

B. Does DAI Possess Sufficient Market Power in the Tying Product Market?

i. Relevant Product Market

The defendants next argue that the plaintiffs' amended complaint does not define a valid market for the tying product. The court agrees.

HN10  In order to make out their antitrust claim, the plaintiffs "must allege a relevant product market in which the anticompetitive effects of the challenged activity can be assessed." Re-Alco Indus., Inc. v. Nat'l Ctr. for Health Educ., Inc., 812 F. Supp. 387, 391 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (citation omitted); see also Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997) (recognizing that the plaintiff bears "the burden of defining the relevant market") (citation omitted); Hack v. President & Fellows of Yale College, 16 F. Supp. 2d 183, 196 (D. Conn. 1998)

⁸ It is the defendants' position that Casey v. Diet Ctr., Inc., 590 F. Supp. 1561 (N.D. Cal. 1984), provides the better reasoned approach to this issue. In Casey, the plaintiffs complained that the defendant tied the sale of its franchise, Diet Center, with the sale of certain nutritional products, including "Diet Supp." See Casey, 590 F. Supp. at 1563. The plaintiffs argued that equivalent nutritional products were available from various other sources for less money. See id. The court found no tying arrangement because "the demand for the Diet Supp is not separate from that for the franchise: it is generated wholly by the franchisee's operation of the franchise." Id. at 1564. Because Casey employs essentially a functional approach to this issue, the court finds it unpersuasive.

(same). "The relevant product market includes all products reasonably interchangeable, determination of which requires consideration of cross-elasticity of demand." ⁹ Re-Alco, 812 F. Supp. at 391 [21] (citation omitted); see also Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\) (stating that "the outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it").

Where the plaintiff fails to define its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor, the relevant market is legally insufficient and a motion to dismiss may be granted.

Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436; see also Hack, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 196 (stating that a complaint may be dismissed where it does not define the relevant market by reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity); Re-Alco, 812 F. Supp. at 391 (same); E. & G. Gabriel v. Gabriel Bros., Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9455, No. 93 CIV. 0894(PKL), 1994 WL 369147, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. July 13, 1994) (same). [22]

In their amended complaint, the plaintiffs define the relevant market as follows:

The Subway sandwich franchise sold by DAI is interchangeable only with sandwich franchises that are similar in price and that have similar qualities to the Subway sandwich franchise sold by DAI (the 'Sandwich Franchise Market'). Alternatively, the Sandwich Franchise Market is a sub-market within the market for fast food franchises.¹⁰

[*625] (Am. Compl. P 28.) The defendants maintain that these allegations are "so vague and so narrowly circumscribed as to be meaningless under basic principles of antitrust law." (Reply Mem. of Law of DAI and CRA in Further Supp. of their Mot. [23] to Dismiss at 6 [hereinafter "Defs.' Reply"].) The court agrees.

The plaintiffs' amended complaint contains no allegations regarding substitute products, does not differentiate the Subway franchise from comparable franchise opportunities, and does not include any facts regarding cross-elasticity of demand.¹¹ These deficiencies require that the defendants' motion to dismiss be granted with respect to this issue. See Re-Alco, 812 F. Supp. at 391 (stating that "if a complaint fails to allege facts regarding [24] substitute products, to distinguish among apparently comparable products, or to allege other pertinent facts relating to cross-elasticity of demand . . . a court may grant a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion").¹² However, this determination does not end the inquiry.

⁹ HN11 [↑] Products in a relevant market [are] characterized by a cross-elasticity of demand, in other words, the rise in the price of a good within a relevant product market would tend to create a greater demand for other like goods in that market." Tunis Bros. Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 722 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (citation omitted).

¹⁰ "Ultimately, a 'submarket' definition turns on the same inquiry as a 'market' definition - - 'whether the products in a proposed submarket are reasonably interchangeable in use or production with products in the broader market.'" Pepsico, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13440, No. 98 CIV. 3282(LAP), 1998 WL 547088, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 27, 1998) (citation omitted). Thus, the same pleading requirements which govern the relevant market also apply to the relevant sub-market. See id.

¹¹ As the defendants persuasively point out, consumers considering franchise opportunities would certainly look to other fast food franchise alternatives if Subway was to suddenly raise its franchise fees. Moreover, consumers would also eat at other fast food restaurants if Subway's menu prices dramatically increased.

¹² The plaintiffs maintain that the Second Circuit has found that "the proper tying product market in franchise tying cases, as a matter of law, is the market for franchising opportunities similar to that offered by the defendant." (Mem. in Supp. of Pls.' Objection to Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss at 19 [hereinafter "Pls.' Opp'n"].) The plaintiffs rely on both Susser and Capital Temp., Inc. v. Olsten Corp., 506 F.2d 658 \(2d Cir. 1974\). Neither of these cases supports this proposition. In fact, in Susser the court recognized that Carvel dealers "competed not only with similar chains - - Dairy Queen, Tastee Freez, Dari-Delite, King Kone, Dari-Isle, and others, but also with chains and independents utilizing mobile units, with chain stores and operations such [as] Howard Johnson, and with the ubiquitous corner drug-store." Susser, 332 F.2d at 518-19 (emphasis added).

[25] ii. Is the Market Power Element Satisfied by the Plaintiffs' "Lock-In" Theory?

Relying on Eastman Kodak, the plaintiffs alternatively argue that the market power element may still be satisfied despite the fact that the defendants lacked appreciable economic power in the tying product market of fast-food restaurants. Specifically, the plaintiffs argue that the franchisees have become "locked in" a relationship with DAI after substantially investing in the development of the franchise. The plaintiffs maintain that such a situation can satisfy the market power element. The court agrees.

As recognized previously, Eastman Kodak involved Kodak's "policy of selling replacement parts for micrographic and copying machines only to buyers of Kodak equipment who use Kodak service." 504 U.S. at 458. Kodak argued that because it lacked market power in the overall photocopier and micrographic equipment market, the fact that it possessed economic power in the aftermarket of parts and services was not sufficient to make out an antitrust claim. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 465-66. The Court rejected this claim on two grounds. First, the Court noted that [26] because of the expense and difficulty of obtaining "lifecycle pricing" data when purchasing a copying machine, less sophisticated consumers may not consider such factors as the future price of parts and services for Kodak equipment at the time of their purchase. See id. at 473-74. Second, and primarily relevant here, the Court stated that existing Kodak copier owners could face higher prices [26] switching to an alternative copier than by paying the supracompetitive parts and service prices charged by Kodak. See id. at 476. Thus, these consumers were "locked in" to accepting Kodak's parts and services arrangement because Kodak imposed the tie-in only after the consumers had expended significant capital purchasing the copier. See id.

Few courts have faced the difficult task of applying the Supreme Court analysis in Eastman Kodak to the franchise context. However, a well-reasoned approach to this issue was developed in Little Caesar Enter., 34 F. Supp. 2d at 470-513. There, the court recognized that [a] buyer knowing an announced or generally understood restrictive policy, or even a buyer who could reasonably anticipate [27] the risk of such a future policy can compare whether similar risks were faced with alternate competitors in the foremarket, or whether contractual protections would be available in the contract with the seller.

Id. at 490. Thus, the court found that a plaintiff may pursue a "lock-in" theory in the franchise context only if he demonstrates that a reasonable person could not "reasonably anticipate later 'exploitation' when they bought the . . . franchise and that they could not reasonably protect themselves in the marketplace by obtaining . . . contract guarantees or warranties from the defendant or his rivals." Id. (citation omitted). This examination requires a court to determine what a reasonable franchisee knew at the time he entered into the franchise agreement. See id.

Applying the approach taken by the court in Little Caesar Enter. to this case, the court finds that the plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts to make out a "lock-in" claim. First, at the time many of the franchisees entered into their franchise agreement with DAI the POS system was merely optional.¹³ (See Am. Compl. P 10.) Moreover, those franchisees who desired to purchase [28] a POS system were not limited to a single POS vendor. (See id. P 10.) On February 24, 1998, however, DAI implemented a policy requiring that Subway franchisees employ a POS system on or before January 1, 2001. (See id. P 9.) DAI further designated RBS as the sole approved POS system vendor. (See id. P 19.) Because this policy was not in place at the time many franchisees entered into their agreements with DAI, it is arguable that the franchisees could not reasonably foresee that DAI would implement such a restriction. A determination regarding this issue can only be made at a later point in this litigation. For purposes of deciding a motion to dismiss, these allegations satisfy the second element of the plaintiffs' tying claim.

C. Anticompetitive Effects in the Tied Product Market

The defendants next argue that because the selection of RBS as the exclusive vendor of POS systems "produced a sharp [29] cut in the price that Subway franchisees must pay for POS systems," the plaintiffs cannot establish anticompetitive effects in the POS system market. (See Defs.' Mem. at 14.) There are no facts in the amended complaint that indicate that DAI's selection of RBS as the exclusive POS vendor resulted in a price decrease to Subway franchisees. The defendants' attempt to raise this fact on a motion to dismiss is puzzling and will not be considered by the court at this stage of the litigation.

¹³ The plaintiffs allege that a franchisee's initial investment can range from $ 60,000 to $ 149,800.

62 F. Supp. 2d 616, *626L 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12304, 29

In order to make out their tying claim, all the plaintiffs have to allege is "that the tying arrangement has or is substantially likely to have an anticompetitive effect in the market for the tied product." Helen Brett Enter. v. New Orleans Metro. Convention & Visitors Bureau, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9137, Civ. A. No. 95-2888, 1996 WL 346314, at *7 n.5 (E.D. La. June 25, 1996) (citations omitted). Here, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants' tying arrangement has forced franchisees to purchase RBS's POS system despite the fact that numerous franchisees prefer SSI's POS system. (See Am. Compl. P 44.) The plaintiffs further allege that the defendants actions foreclosed competition in the POS system market [30] as a whole. (See id. P 45.) Such allegations satisfy the liberal pleading requirements of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Accordingly, the plaintiffs have satisfied the fourth element of their tying claim and the defendants' motion to dismiss this cause of action is DENIED.

III. Antitrust Conspiracy

HN12 To successfully bring a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must demonstrate "a combination or some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities which constitutes an unreasonable restraint on interstate trade or commerce." Daniel, M.D. v. American Bd. of Emergency Med., 988 F. Supp. 112, 123 (W.D.N.Y. 1997) (citations omitted). "Independent action is not proscribed." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); see also Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) (recognizing that Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not reach actions which are "wholly unilateral") (citation omitted). Thus, as long as a manufacturer acts independently, it may generally deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it chooses. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 761. [31]

HN13 An antitrust claim is not subject to any heightened pleading requirement and must simply be plead in conformity with Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\). See George C. Frey Ready-Mixed Concrete, Inc. v. Pine Hill Concrete Mix Corp., 554 F.2d 551, 554 (2d Cir. 1977). However, a Section 1 conspiracy claim supported by vague and conclusory allegations of concerted activity cannot withstand a motion to dismiss. See Estate Constr. Co. v. Miller & Smith Holding Co., 14 F.3d 213, 220-21 (4th Cir. 1994). "A mere allegation that the defendants violated the antitrust laws as to a particular plaintiff and commodity is insufficient to survive a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion." Id. at 221 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

The defendants maintain that the plaintiffs' Section 1 conspiracy claim must be dismissed because the plaintiffs have alleged nothing more than unilateral action on the part of DAI. While the court agrees that this claim must be dismissed against CRA, the plaintiffs may maintain this claim against DAI.

The plaintiffs' allegations that CRA participated in an antitrust conspiracy are both vague and conclusory. The amended complaint provides, [32] in relevant part:

The DAI/RBS Contract is part of a conspiracy between DAI, CRA and RBS . . . to unreasonably restrain and/or eliminate competition in the Subway POS Market by forcing Subway franchisees within the Subway POS Market to purchase the RBS POS System and/or CRA POS system once developed, depriving Subway franchisees from access to competitive POS vendors other than RBS and excluding SSI and other competitive POS system vendors from the Subway POS market.

(Am. Compl. P 20.) The plaintiffs further allege that CRA is currently in the process of developing its own POS system and that DAI intends to designate CRA as the sole approved supplier in the near future. (See id. PP 21-22.) The plaintiffs' amended complaint contains no allegations that CRA entered into an agreement with either DAI or RBS. There are also no allegations that CRA participated in any meetings with either DAI or RBS. Moreover, the plaintiffs have failed to assert [*628] that these three entities even communicated with each other. Given that the amended complaint contains no allegations from which it can be inferred that CRA participated in a conspiracy in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman [33] Act, this claim is dismissed with respect to CRA.

While not detailed, the allegations against DAI are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. The complaint alleges that DAI and RBS entered into an agreement on February 24, 1998, pursuant to which RBS was designated DAI's sole approved POS system vendor. (See Am. Compl. P 19.) The plaintiffs allege that the purpose of this agreement was to deprive Subway franchisees "from access to competitive POS vendors" and to exclude other POS system vendors from the POS market. (See id. PP 19-20.) The plaintiffs further allege that DAI ultimately seeks to designate its own affiliate, CRA, as the sole approved POS system vendor. (See id. P 20.) Such an action would obviously further DAI's economic interests to the detriment of other competitors. These allegations are sufficient to state a Section 1 conspiracy claim against DAI. See Daniel, 988 F. Supp. at 123-24 (recognizing that HN14[ to state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act "a plaintiff must assert facts demonstrating that the alleged competitors entered into an agreement which was designed to further their own economic interests while at the same time excluding [34] other threatening competitors").

IV. Tortious Interference with a Business Expectancy

In the third count of their complaint, the plaintiffs bring a state law claim for tortious interference with a business expectancy against DAI. HN15[ The fundamental elements of this claim are: "the existence of a business relationship; the alleged tortfeasor's knowledge of that relationship; intentional interference with the relationship; and consequential loss." Chem-Tek, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 816 F. Supp. 123, 130 (D. Conn. 1993) (citing Solomon v. Aberman, 196 Conn. 359, 383, 493 A.2d 193 (1985); Harry A. Finman & Son, Inc. v. Connecticut Truck & Trailer Serv. Co., 169 Conn. 407, 415, 363 A.2d 86 (1975)).

Given the nature of competition, not all conduct that interferes with a business relationship is actionable. See ChemTek, 816 F. Supp. at 130; see also Harry A. Finman & Son, 169 Conn. at 415 (recognizing that "fair and free competition is necessary to the economic life of a community, and one may, by legitimate means, interfere with a competitor's mere expectancy that his business relations will continue"). Rather, the plaintiff [35] must establish that the defendant's behavior was tortious. See McKeown Distrib., Inc. v. Gyp-Crete Corp., 618 F. Supp. 632, 644 (D. Conn. 1985). The plaintiff may make such a showing by alleging that the defendant "engaged in fraud, misrepresentation, intimidation, obstruction or molestation, or . . . acted maliciously." Id. (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).

Here, the plaintiffs have sufficiently plead each element of this claim. The amended complaint alleges that the plaintiffs were involved in a business relationship with Subway franchisees. (See Am. Compl. P 49.) The plaintiffs assert that despite the fact that DAI was aware of these relationships, it still intentionally interfered with them. (See id. PP 49, 51-53.) The plaintiffs contend that DAI's actions damaged their contractual relationships and caused them to suffer financial losses. (See id. PP 53-55.) Finally, the plaintiffs maintain that DAI acted intentionally and maliciously. (See id. PP 50-53.)

Because these allegations are sufficient to state a claim for tortious interference with a business expectancy, DAI's motion to dismiss this count is DENIED.

[*629] V. CUTPA [36] Claims

The plaintiffs also bring claims pursuant to CUTPA against both DAI and CRA. HN16[ CUTPA provides that "no person shall engage in unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 42-110b(a) (West Supp. 1999). Initially, a plaintiff must satisfy two factors in order to bring a CUTPA claim. See Chem-Tek, 816 F. Supp. at 130. First, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant's conduct constitutes an unfair or deceptive practice. See id. "Second, the plaintiff must establish a basis for a reasonable estimate of damages." Id. (citation omitted).

In order to determine whether a trade practice is unfair or deceptive, the Connecticut Supreme Court "has adopted the so-called 'cigarette rule' developed by the Federal Trade Commission in the context of section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act." Boulevard Assoc. v. Sovereign Hotels, Inc., 72 F.3d 1029, 1038 \(2d Cir. 1995\). HN17 [Footnote] In applying the "cigarette rule," a court must consider:

(1) Whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy [37] as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise - whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers [(competitors or other businessmen)].

Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Canaan Oil Co., 202 Conn. 234, 239, 520 A.2d 1008 \(1987\) (citations omitted). A plaintiff does not have to satisfy all three of these factors. See Chem-Tek, 816 F. Supp. at 130.

Here, the defendants concede that violations of either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act can support a claim of unfair competition under CUTPA. See Times-Picayune Publ'g Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 609, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 \(1953\) (recognizing that violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts also transgress the Federal Trade Commission Act); Raybestos Prods. Co. v. Coni-Seal, Inc., 989 F. Supp. 166, 169 \(D. Conn. 1997\) (finding that establishment of a claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act also establishes a claim under CUTPA). The defendants argue, however, that because the [38] plaintiffs have not established an antitrust claim, their CUTPA claims must also be dismissed. In opposition, the plaintiffs simply assert that they have adequately plead antitrust claims against both DAI and CRA and thus, have alleged CUTPA violations.

Because the court finds that the plaintiffs have stated an antitrust claim with respect to DAI, it likewise finds that the plaintiffs may maintain a CUTPA claim against this defendant. See Raybestos Prods., 989 F. Supp. at 169. The fact that the plaintiffs have failed to state an antitrust claim against CRA, however, requires that the CUTPA claim be dismissed with respect to this defendant.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing analysis, the defendants' Motion to Dismiss [doc. # 74] is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART. The motion is granted with respect to CRA. The motion is denied, however, as to DAI.

SO ORDERED this 30 day of July, 1999, at Bridgeport, Connecticut.

Alan H. Nevas

United States District Judge

Bizzle v. N. Mont. Healthcare

Twelfth Judicial District Court of Montana, Hill County

August 4, 1999, Decided

Cause No. DV-95-149

Reporter

1999 Mont. Dist. LEXIS 1136 *

DR. PAUL G. BIZZLE, Plaintiff, vs. NORTHERN MONTANA HEALTHCARE, INC., NORTHERN MONTANA HOSPITAL, and DR. JOEL E. CLEARY; Defendants.

Core Terms

geographic, relevant market, defendants', antitrust, patients, summary judgment, Practices, anti trust law, Unfair, orthopedic surgeon, monopoly power, market area, documents, planning, destroy Judges: [*1] John Warner, District Judge.

Opinion by: John Warner

Opinion

ON MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT NORTHERN MONTANA HEALTHCARE

Plaintiff Dr. Paul G. Bizzle brought this action against Defendants Northern Montana Healthcare, Inc., Northern Montana Hospital and Dr. Joel L. Cleary (hereinafter defendants) under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act. Specifically, plaintiff claims defendants violated 30-14-205, MCA, and requests treble damages as a result of that violation.

Defendants move the court for summary judgment under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. Defendants assert plaintiff has, as a matter of law, failed to 1) show an anti-trust injury, 2) identify the relevant geographic market, 3) show defendants possessed monopoly power within the geographic market, and 4) show harm to market-wide competition. Defendants further assert that plaintiff does not have standing to bring this action.

Plaintiff filed a memorandum in opposition stating that defendants erroneously apply federal law to this case when there are several distinctions between the federal law and Montana law. Plaintiff argues that the determinative issue is not so much the legal principles which apply, but rather the varied facts and factual inferences which [*2] are present in the case.

A hearing on defendants' motion for summary judgment was held July 27, 1999. Plaintiff was not present, but was represented by Lee C. Henning and D. James McCubbin. Defendants were not present, but were represented by Neil Ugrin, Kathleen M. Chancler and Jonathan B. Sprague.

Background

Northern Montana Hospital is located in Havre, Montana, and houses a variety of medical departments to serve the community's medical needs. Northern Montana Health Care, Inc. is the parent corporation which was created to oversee the various medical programs and services. Those programs and services include Northern Montana Hospital, Northern Montana Health Care Foundation, Inc., Northern Montana Chemical Dependency, Inc., North Care, and Northern Montana Care Center.

In 1990, Plaintiff Dr. Paul G. Bizzle, a board-certified orthopedic surgeon, moved to Havre, Montana. Plaintiff established his practice and had staff privileges at Northern Montana Hospital. When plaintiff moved to Havre another orthopedic surgeon, Dr. Luettjohann, was practicing at the hospital. By 1992, Dr. Luettjohann had retired. Dr. Luettjohann's retirement left plaintiff as the sole orthopedic surgeon [*3] practicing in Havre.

Shortly thereafter, plaintiff publicly announced his decision to no longer treat Medicare patients. Not only did plaintiff announce his decision to the medical staff, but he announced his decision in writing to the public at large in the Havre Daily News. In addition, plaintiff refused to sign the Medicare and Medicaid attestation documents which were required for the hospital's reimbursement for Medicare patients.

The hospital subsequently recruited an orthopedic surgeon, Dr. Joel E. Cleary, to provide orthopedic services to all members of the community, and he began practicing under contract with the hospital in 1993. Thereafter, the hospital and Dr. Cleary introduced a sports medicine outreach program, and the program is still in existence.

Dr. Cleary and plaintiff were competing orthopedic surgeons in Havre until 1995 when plaintiff relocated to Oklahoma.

Standard of Law

For a grant of summary judgment, the moving party must show that the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment [*4] as a matter of law. Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. Summary procedures should be used sparingly in complex antitrust litigation where motive and intent play leading roles. Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S.Ct. 486, 491, 7 L.Ed.2d 458 \(1962\).

The Ninth Circuit has held that Poller merely teaches caution and does not preclude summary judgment in antitrust actions where appropriate. Taggart v. Rutledge, 657 F.Supp. 1420, 1432 \(D.Mont.1987\) citing Barry v. Blue Cross of California, 805 F.2d 866, 871 \(9th Cir.1986\) (citations omitted). Summary judgment is appropriate in antitrust cases when there is no "significant probative evidence tending to support the complaint." Taggart, 657 F.Supp. at 1432 quoting Robert's Waikiki U-Drive, Inc. v. Budget Rent-A-Car Systems, Inc., 732 F.2d 1403, 1406 \(9th Cir.1984\).

There is minimal Montana law interpreting the Unfair Trade Practices Act. The Supreme Court of Montana has held that the antimonopoly provisions of the Unfair Trade Practices Act and the antimonopoly section of the Sherman Act are very similar and due weight will be given by Montana courts in interpreting [*5] the state statute to federal courts' interpretation of the Sherman Act. Smith v. Video Lottery Consultants \(1993\), 260 Mont. 54, 58, 858 P.2d 11, 13.

A party bringing a claim under 1 of the Sherman Act must prove three elements: 1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; 2) by which the persons or entities intend to harm or restrain competition; and 3) which actually injures competition. Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1445 \(9th Cir. 1988\). Although 30-14-205(2), MCA, is modeled after 1 of the Sherman Act, it differs in one critical respect. Unlike the Sherman Act, which requires two or more persons to be involved in unlawful trade restraint, one person acting alone may violate the restraint of trade provision of the Unfair Trade Practices Act. Smith, 260 Mont. at 54. Pursuant to the remaining two elements set forth in Oltz, to prevail in his claim plaintiff must show defendants intended to harm competition and actually did injure competition.

Proving injury to competition almost uniformly requires the claimant to prove the relevant market and to show effects on competition within [*6] that market. Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446. The relevant market is defined in terms of both product and geographic market. Morgenstern v. Wilson, 29 F.3d 1291, 1296 \(8th Cir.1994\). The assessment of the product market definition takes into account whether products excluded from the definition are interchangeable in use and whether there is cross-elasticity of demand between excluded and included products. Syufy Enterprises v. American Multicinema, Inc., 793 F.2d 990, 994 (9th Cir. 1986) citing United States v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 394-95, 76 S.Ct. 994, 1006-07, 100 L.Ed. 1264 (1956). The geographic market extends to the area of effective competition where buyers can turn for alternative sources of supply. Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446, citing Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., 550 F.2d 1207, 1218 (9th Cir. 1977). An actual monopolization claim often succeeds or fails strictly on the definition of the product or geographic market. Morgenstern v. Wilson, 29 F.3d 1291, 1296 (8th Cir. 1994). (citations omitted).

Relevant Market

The geographic market encompasses the geographic area to which [*7] consumers can practically turn for alternative sources of the product and in which the antitrust defendants face competition. Id. citing Baxley-DeLamar Monuments, Inc., v. American Cemetery Ass'n, 938 F.2d 846, 850 (8th Cir. 1991). The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that a specified area constitutes a relevant geographic market. Morgenstern, 29 F.3d at 1296. A close examination of the record indicates plaintiff has not met his burden in identifying a relevant geographic market.

A critical question in considering the relevant geographic market is the determination of where consumers of the product could practicably turn for alternate source of the product. Id. The focus is not on where patients actually went, but rather where the patients could practicably go. Id. In a recent decision, District Judge Jeffrey M. Sherlock granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants finding that, as a matter of law, heart surgeons in Great Falls compete with their counterparts in Spokane, Billings and Missoula for patients. Berger v. Montana Deaconess Medical Center, Cause No. ADV 95-609 (D.C. Cascade Co. 1998). Judge Sherlock aptly stated that "patient's vote [*8] with their feet", and the facts in that case showed that a number of people left the Golden Triangle market (the area identified by plaintiff as the relevant geographic market) every year for surgery in areas other than the Great Falls area.

In the case at hand, plaintiff defines the relevant market area as the Havre/Hi-Line area. In support of his position, plaintiff submitted various business plans prepared by defendants, the affidavit of economic analyst Dr. Paul E. Polzin, and the affidavit of a resident and nurse Mary Jane Hulett. Defendants urge the court to find that the market area is greater than the Havre/Hi- Line area and, at a minimum, includes Great Falls and Billings. Upon consideration of the record, the court agrees with defendants in that plaintiff's market definition is too narrow.

Defendants assert that plaintiff has confused the relevant market area with defendants' service area. The service area is described in several of defendants' business plan documents as the Havre/Hi-Line area. Plaintiff argues the defendants' business plans specifically utilize the words "market area" and, as such, that is the correct definition. Defendants aver that statements in planning [*9] documents which refer to "market area" do not define an antitrust relevant geographic market and cite Home Health Specialists, Inc. v. Liberty Health System, 1994 WL 463406, 3 (E.D.Pa. 1994) aff'd, 65 F.3d 162 (3d Cir. 1995), in support of their argument. The court finds Home Health to be well reasoned and credible. Defendants' business planning documents were not prepared for this litigation. The question of relevant market area revolves around what alternatives are available to defendants' customers. It is not determined by an area that was studied or considered for strategic business planning.

In Miller v. Indiana Hospital, 814 F.Supp. 1254 (W.D.Penn. 1992), the plaintiff physician attempted to identify the relevant geographic market by using language in a certificate of need and language in the hospital's program for development. The court held that by doing so, plaintiff ignored the fact that "what the Hospital itself perceives to be its competition is irrelevant to the question of whether in fact there existed competition." Miller, 814 F.Supp. at 1254. The Miller court found such statements in hospital documents to be insufficient [*10] to determine the relevant geographic market, and this court finds the same in the case at hand.

The court reviewed Dr. Polzin's affidavit and does not find such to be persuasive evidence. While Dr. Polzin provided a detailed explanation of the Central Place Theory, his affidavit indicates what people tend to do. It does not state what the record makes clear area patients actually do. Defendants provided 14 affidavits from area physicians which state what patients actually do and where patients actually go for medical care. "When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict. The expert opinion is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitution for them." Morgenstern, 29 F.3d at 1297 quoting Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co., 509 U.S. 209, 242, 113 S.Ct. 2578, 2598, 125 L.Ed.2d 168 \(1993\).

Plaintiff also submitted the affidavit of Mary Jane Hulett in support of its conclusion that the relevant market area is the Havre/Hi-Line area. Ms. Hulett [*11] is a resident and former nurse. She states that travel to Great Falls is very difficult for older persons, and that these problems are compounded by the road conditions and weather. This court is not able to base its decision as to relevant market area on one resident's opinion regarding what the local elderly population prefers. It is defined as what alternate sources of medical services the community as a whole could utilize.

In Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 929 F.2d 1404 \(9th Cir.1991\), the court found that the relevant market area exceeded the geographic area as defined by the plaintiff. In making such determination, the court considered evidence that doctors at the defendant hospital used doctors based in other towns to cover for them. Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1413, fn 12. In the case at hand, the record contains eighteen memorandums written by plaintiff himself in which he directed physicians and nursing personnel in Havre to refer orthopedic patients to Great Falls physicians in his absence.

It is readily apparent that the relevant geographic market area included Great Falls at all relevant times, and still does. Many area physicians as well as plaintiff [*12] refer patients to Great Falls. The record leaves virtually no doubt whatever that plaintiff and the defendants were at all relevant times in direct competition with the facilities located in Great Falls, as well as with each other. In consideration of modern transportation, for the court to say that people who reside in the Havre/Hi-Line area would be practically unable to travel to Great Falls, Glasgow, Shelby, Chester or Conrad for their general or orthopedic medical needs is completely inane and downright farcical. No reasonable finder of fact could find that Great Falls is not included in the relevant geographic market.

Effects On Competition Within The Relevant Market

Defining the market is not the aim of anti-trust law; it merely aids the search for competitive injury. Once defined, the relevant market demarcates "objective benchmarks" for separating reasonable and unreasonable restraints. It requires the claimant to demonstrate harm to the economy beyond the claimants' own injury. Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1448. (citations omitted).

To prevail in his claim, plaintiff "must establish a violation of antitrust laws and actual injury attributable to something the antitrust [*13] laws were designed to prevent." Taggart, 657 F.Supp. at 1433 quoting Kaiser Cement Corp. v. Fischbach & Moore, Inc., 793 F.2d 1100, 1104 \(9th Cir.1986\). Plaintiff cannot convert the losses he may have sustained as a result of alleged breaches of contract, or in this case potential tortious conduct, into an antitrust claim without demonstrating the type of injury against which the antitrust laws were intended to protect. Sadler v. Rexair, Inc., 612 F.Supp. 491, 494-95 \(D.Mont. 1985\) citing Gianna Enterprises v. Miss World LTD, 551 F.Supp. 1348, 1355 \(S.D.N.Y.1982\). Therefore, even if plaintiff would have identified the relevant market area he must still show an actual injury to something the laws were designed to prevent.

In Sadler, the court reiterated that the Montana legislature's purpose of 30-14-201 through 30-14-224, MCA, is to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and foster and encourage competition by prohibiting unfair and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented. Sadler, 612 F.Supp. at 495. The Sherman Act was designed to prohibit [*14] significant restraint of trade rather than to proscribe all unseemly business practices. Miller, 814 F.Supp. at 1265. (citations omitted). With similar purposes behind the federal and Montana statutes and with the absence of Montana case law interpreting the Montana statutes, the court is constrained to follow the federal precedent. Sadler, 612 F.Supp. at 495.

In Bathke v. Casey's General Stores, 64 F.3d 340 \(8th Cir.1995\), the court stated that the problem with the plaintiff's evidence was that it looked at the issue only from the perspective of the defendants' rivals, not from the perspective of the consumer. The court held it was not the correct approach in antitrust cases. Bathke, 64 F.3d at 347. The focus of antitrust law is on promoting competition, not on protecting competitors. Miller v. Indiana Hospital, 814 F.Supp. 1254, 1264 \(W.D.Penn.1992\) citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo-Bowl-O-Mat, Inc. 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S.Ct. 690, 697, 50 L.Ed.2d 701 (1977); National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 103, 104 S.Ct. 2948, 2961, 82 L.Ed.2d 70 (1984).

In Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 708 \(4th Cir.1991\) [*15] the court held:

"a plaintiff cannot demonstrate the unreasonableness of a restraint merely by showing that it caused him an economic injury. For example, the fact that a hospital's decision caused a disappointed physician to practice medicine elsewhere does not of itself constitute an antitrust injury. . . If the law were otherwise, many a physician's workplace grievance with a hospital would be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. To keep the antitrust laws from becoming so trivialized, the reasonableness of a restraint is evaluated based on its impact on competition as a whole within the relevant market." (citations omitted).

Plaintiff must show harm to the economy rather than economic injury to himself. To do so, plaintiff must submit evidence of a restraint on competition in the relevant market, and further must show evidence that the restraint is substantially adverse. Miller, 814 F.Supp. at 1265. (citations omitted). To show a substantial effect on competition, plaintiff must show that there was either 1) a rise in the price of medical services above a competitive level, 2) a decrease in the quantity of doctors in the market, or 3) a decrease [*16] in the quality of medical service provided. Tunis Bros. Co. Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 728 \(3d Cir.1991\).

Of the three factors that show a substantial effect on competition, plaintiff focuses on the first and claims there was a rise in the price of medical services. However, he has failed to produce any evidence showing that such was above the competitive level. Plaintiff asserts that "any increase" in prices will do. His assertion is not consistent with the prevailing law. The increase must be a rise above the competitive level. Plaintiff failed to submit any evidence regarding the competitive pricing levels. Even accepting the plaintiff's argument that the Havre/Hi-Line area is the relevant market area (which the court has clearly found it is not as stated above), plaintiff failed to offer any comparative evidence regarding the competitive pricing levels within that market area. Instead, plaintiff simply makes the assertion that defendants' have increased their prices. This assertion is far from sufficient to meet the standard necessary to establish a restraint on trade.

Market power is defined as the ability to raise prices significantly above competitive [*17] levels without losing all of one's business. K.M.B. Warehouse v. Walker Mfg Co., 61 F.3d 123, 129 \(2d Cir.1995\). (citations omitted). Monopoly power requires something greater than market power. Levine v. Central Florida Medical Affiliates, Inc. 72 F.3d 1538, 1555 (11th Cir.1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 820 (1996). (citations omitted). A defendant possesses monopoly power if it has the ability to change the competitive variables of a product to the disadvantage of consumers without causing effective competitors to enter the relevant market. Miller, 814 F.Supp. at 1266. Plaintiff has not introduced evidence of market power or monopoly power.

In the absence of evidence demonstrating the relevant geographic market or facts demonstrating defendants' ability to exert market dominance in that market, it would be impossible for plaintiff to establish that defendants formed a monopoly to prevent him from operating his trade. Id. citing Brown v. Our Lady of Lourdes Medical Center, 767 F.Supp. 618, 631-32, (D.N.J.1991).

State Law Extends Federal Law

The court finds it unnecessary to discuss defendants' assertion that plaintiff [*18] lacks standing to bring this action as plaintiff has failed to 1) identify the relevant geographic market, 2) show defendants possessed monopoly power, and 3) show an anti-trust injury and harm to market-wide competition.. However, the court does find it necessary to speak to one final issue raised by plaintiff.

At the hearing, plaintiff argued that defendants' actions in establishing the sports medical program were a per se violation of 30-14-209, MCA. He asserts that the statute prohibits sales at less than cost, and because defendants provided sports medicine for free, obviously for less than cost, and he lost business because of this, he has a claim for relief. Plaintiff asserts that this statute is a direct prohibition of such practice, without consideration of federal antitrust law, and he may therefore recover damages. There are significant flaws in plaintiff's argument.

First, plaintiff's second amended complaint does not mention a violation of 30-14-209, MCA, nor can any of the language used therein be interpreted to allege a violation of the statute. 30-14-209, MCA, says:

"it is unlawful for a vendor to sell, offer for sale, or advertise for sale any article of [*19] commerce at less than the costs thereof to the vendor or to give, offer to give, or advertise the intent to give away any article of commerce for the purpose of injuring competitors and destroying competition."

At the time of the hearing on defendants' motion for summary judgment, discovery had closed and the trial was approximately one month away. Plaintiff filed his claim against defendants in 1995, and amended his complaint on June 22, 1999. It would be unfair and could substantially prejudice the defense to require defendants to defend against a claim which was never formally noticed.

Second, even if plaintiff had properly pled a claim under 30-14-209, MCA, to succeed with such a claim, plaintiff must show defendants intended to give away services in the sports medicine program for the purpose of injuring plaintiff and destroying competition. As set forth above, defendants did not destroy competition, and there was no showing by plaintiff that such was their purpose. The record makes it clear that plaintiff himself at one time engaged in the same general activity for no cost, that it was a good business tool as well as a community service, and he was free to again offer [*20] such a service and considered doing so.

Further, the requirement in 30-14-209, MCA, that the purpose of the sale at less than cost be to destroy competition, not merely compete effectively, is a clear indication that antitrust law should apply and there is no legislative intent to create a new tort unique to Montana. Smith v. Video Lottery Consultants, supra., certainly suggests that 30-14-209, MCA, is not to be broadly interpreted outside of established antitrust theories.

Considering the record before the court, plaintiff simply cannot establish his claim.

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS ORDERED that Defendants' Northern Montana Hospital, Northern Montana Health Care, Inc., and Dr. Joe E. Cleary motion for summary judgment must be, and is hereby GRANTED.

JUDGMENT is hereby entered in favor of the said defendants and against Plaintiff Dr. Paul G. Bizzle, dismissing his complaint, and he shall take nothing thereby.

Defendants shall have their costs.

DATED this 4th day of August

John Warner

District Judge

Century 21 Region V, Inc. v. Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

August 4, 1999, Decided ; August 4, 1999, Filed

SACV97-203 DOC (EEx)

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21092 *; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,665

CENTURY 21 REGION V, INC. a California corporation, Plaintiff, v. THE PRUDENTIAL REAL ESTATE AFFILIATES, INC., a Delaware corporation; JTE REAL ESTATE GROUP, INC., a California corporation; RML REALTY, INC., a California corporation; THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA, a New Jersey corporation; and DOES 1 through 100, inclusive, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Instant Motion by the defendants for summary adjudication of count V, the California unfair trade practice claims, partially denied, with respect to the Section 17043 claim, and partially granted, with respect to the other claims in the 2AC.

Core Terms

declaration, franchise, competitors, franchisees, prices, market share, percent, summary judgment, Unfair, injurious effect, defendants', Practices, destroy the competition, real estate, below-cost, deposition, roughly, royalty payment, genuine issue, moving party, antitrust, broker, costs, summary adjudication, injure a competitor, conversion, brokerage, annually, targeted

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Summary judgment upon all or any part of a claim is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN2 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The moving party has the burden of demonstrating the absence of such a genuine issue, and for this purpose the material it lodges, and inferences therefrom, must be viewed in the light most favorable to the opposing party. The moving party has no burden to negate or disprove matters on which the opponent will have the burden of proof at trial. Indeed, the moving party need not produce any evidence at all on those matters.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Where the moving party has no burden of proof at trial, the moving party's burden is met by showing, that is, pointing out to the that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. If the movant satisfies its initial burden, it then rests with the opponent to set forth specific facts showing that there remains a genuine issue for trial. No defense to an insufficient showing, however, is required.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN4 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

In determining any motion for summary judgment, the court will assume that the material facts as claimed and adequately supported by the moving party are admitted to exist without controversy except to the extent that such material facts are (a) included in the statement of genuine issues and (b) controverted by declaration or other written evidence filed in opposition to the motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

To violate Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17043, a company must act with the purpose, i.e., the desire, of injuring competitors or destroying competition. Purpose requires a culpability beyond the knowledge of a result's near certainty.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN6 Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17071.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17043 makes it unlawful to sell any product or article below the vendor's cost for the purpose of injuring a competitor or destroying competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17071.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The ultimate element of the offense is whether the defendants acted with the purpose, i.e., the desire, of injuring competitors or destroying competition. The intent element is indeed crucial here, and summary judgment is inappropriate in antitrust cases where motivation, intent, and purpose are in issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN10 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Where there are only two competitors in the industry, and a building of defendant's customer base necessarily includes a reduction in the base of the dominant party.

Counsel: For CENTURY 21 REGION V INC, plaintiff: John A Belcher, Hanna & Morton, Los Angeles, CA.

For PRUDENTIAL REAL ESTATE AFFILIATES INC, PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA, defendants: Neal R Marder, Susan M Walker, Matthew I Kaplan, Sonnenschein Nath & Rosenthal, Los Angeles, CA.

For PRUDENTIAL REAL ESTATE AFFILIATES INC, PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA, defendants: Alan H Silberman, Sanford M Pastroff, Sonnenchein Nath & Rosenthal, Chicago, IL.

Judges: DAVID O. CARTER, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DAVID O. CARTER

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION OF PLAINTIFF'S COUNT V (CALIFORNIA UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES)

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Century 21 ("C-21") Region V, Inc., a California corporation ("Region V"), alleges that the remaining defendants -- the Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, Inc., a Delaware Corporation ("PREA"), JTE Real Estate Group, [*2] Inc., a California corporation, and the Prudential Insurance Company of America, a New Jersey corporation ("PICA") -- committed a single violation of Cal. Business and Professions Code section 17043.¹ Because genuine issues of fact remain with respect to both the below-cost sale element of the claim and the intent element, the Court denies summary adjudication on this count, the Section 17043 claim. All other pleadings of violations of other sections of the California Unfair Practices Act have been abandoned; as such, the Court grants summary adjudication in favor of PREA and PICA with respect to those other claims.

II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Region V filed its original complaint on January 14, 1994 in Orange County Superior Court, as case no. 723652. Region V twice amended the complaint at the state-court level; the operative pleading is the second amended complaint ("the 2AC"), filed March 12, 1997. Defendants PREA [*3] and PICA removed on March 17, 1997.

On September 28, 1998, PREA and PICA filed the instant motion, for summary adjudication of the California unfair trade practices claim ("the Instant Motion"). On November 9, 1998, Region V filed opposition papers ("the Opposition"). On November 16, 1998, PREA and PICA filed its reply. At the Court's request, on June 18, 1999, the parties concurrently filed supplemental briefs discussing the pertinence, if any, of [Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163 \[83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527\]](#) (1999), which was issued by the California Supreme Court after the earlier briefing was filed. Also, on July 7, 1999, PREA and PICA filed an unsolicited supplemental brief ("the RSK Chart Brief") about the meaning of an exhibit cited by Region V in the opposition papers.

The instant matter came on for hearing before this Court on July 6 and 12, 1999. Appearing for plaintiff Region V was John Belcher, Esq. Appearing for the defendants, PREA and PICA, were Alan Silberman, Esq., and Susan Walker, Esq.

III. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Legal Standard for Summary Judgment

HN1 Summary judgment upon all or [*4] any part of a claim is appropriate if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(c\).

HN2 The moving party has the burden of demonstrating the absence of such a genuine issue, and for this purpose the material it lodges, and inferences therefrom, must be viewed in the light most favorable to the opposing party." Neely v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 584 F.2d 341, 343 \(9th Cir. 1978\). "The moving party has no burden to negate or disprove matters on which the opponent will have the burden of proof at trial. Indeed, the moving party need not produce any evidence at all on those matters." William Schwarzer, et al., Cal. Practice Guide: Fed. Civil Procedure Before Trial, Summary Judgments, § 14:129 at 14-30 (rev. ed. 1998), citing [Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325-26 \[106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265\]](#) (1986) (emphasis omitted). HN3

Where the moving party has no burden of proof at trial, the moving party's burden is met by "showing" [*5] -- that is, pointing out to the District Court -- that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case."

Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325. "If the movant satisfies [its] initial burden, it then rests with the opponent to set forth specific facts showing that there remains a genuine issue for trial." Neely, 584 F.2d at 343-44. "No defense to an insufficient showing, however, is required." Id. at 344.

HN4 In determining any motion for summary judgment, the Court will assume that the material facts as claimed and adequately supported by the moving party are admitted to exist without controversy except to the extent that such material facts are (a) included in the 'Statement of Genuine Issues' and (b) controverted by declaration or other written evidence filed in opposition to the motion." C.D. Cal. Local Civ. Rule 7.14.3.

¹ All further statutory references are to the Cal. Business and Professions Code.

"Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment." [Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 \[106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202\]](#) (1986). "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence [*6] in support of the plaintiff's position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which a reasonable jury could reasonably find for the plaintiff." Id., at 252.

"Summary judgment is inappropriate in antitrust cases where motivation, intent, and purpose are in issue. See, e.g., Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Co., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 82 S. Ct. 486, 491, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458. [1962.]" Betaseed, Inc. v. U and I Inc., 681 F.2d 1203, 1229 \(9th Cir. 1982\) (discussing federal antitrust law); accord [Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Serv., 4 Cal. 3d 842, 852 \[94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953\]](#) (1971) (discussing state Cartwright Act).

B. California Unfair Practices Act Law

Section 17043 states in full:

It is unlawful for any person engaged in business within this State to sell any article or product at less than the cost thereof to such vendor, or to give away any article or product, for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition.

"It appears the Unfair Practices Act employs a fully allocated cost or fully distributed cost standard to determine whether a sale has violated section 17043." [Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc., 219 Cal. App. 3d 811, 819-20 \[268 Cal. Rptr. 856\]](#) [*7] (1990) (citations omitted). "The concept of fully allocated cost has been equated with average total costs, which reflects that portion of the firm's total costs -- both fixed and variable -- attributable on an average basis to each unit of output." Id., at 820 (citations and internal punctuation omitted).

"HN5 To violate section 17043, a company must act with the purpose, i.e., the desire, of injuring competitors or destroying competition." [Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 174-175 \[83 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 557, 973 P.2d at 536\]](#). "Purpose requires a culpability beyond the knowledge of a result's near certainty." [Id., 20 Cal. 4th at 173 \[83 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 556, 973 P.2d at 535\]](#) (citation omitted).²

HN6 Section 17071 states in full:

In all actions brought under this chapter proof of one or more acts of selling or giving away any article or product below cost or at discriminatory prices, together [*8] with proof of the injurious effect of such acts, is presumptive evidence of the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition.

IV. EVIDENTIARY OBJECTIONS

PREA and PICA make many evidentiary objections; Region V makes no objections. The Court rules as follows on each PREA and PICA objection:

1. Exhibit 43 to the 11/9/98 Declaration of John Belcher: Overruled. See Maljack Productions, Inc. v. Goodtimes Homevideo Corp., 81 F.3d 881, 889 n.12 \(9th Cir. 1996\) (ruling admissible, in law-and-motion, documents offered under attorney's affidavit where documents produced by other side in discovery and authenticity not challenged).
2. Exhibit 53 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).

² Regarding the other claims in the 2AC, see section 6(B), infra, titled "Other Claims."

3. Exhibit 116 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
4. Exhibit 46 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
5. All "unattributed quotations": Sustained, as Region V has not proffered evidence.
6. Exhibit 1 to the 9/28/98 Declaration of Susan Walker: Overruled (as deposition testimony is admissible under Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(e\)).
7. Exhibit 47 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled [9] (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
8. Exhibit 48 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 6, above).
9. Exhibit 49 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
10. Exhibit 117 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
11. Exhibit 52 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
12. Exhibit 45 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 6, above).
13. Exhibit 143 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
14. Exhibit 57 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
15. Exhibit 118 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (because even if declarant Jerry Cole is a lay witness, not an expert, the opinion testimony offered here is admissible under Fed.R.Evid. 701).
16. Exhibit 119 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
17. Exhibit 21 to the 11/9/98 Declaration of David Laufer: Overruled (for the same reason).
18. Exhibit 22 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
19. Exhibit 23 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled [10] (for the same reason).
20. Exhibit 24 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
21. Exhibit 31 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
22. Exhibit 32 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
23. Exhibit 33 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
24. Exhibit 34 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
25. Exhibit 35 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
26. Exhibit 36 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
27. Exhibit 37 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
28. P78 of the Laufer declaration (discussing Exhibit 31 to the declaration): Sustained. Exhibit 40 is the "best evidence" of its own contents. See Fed.R.Evid. 1002.
29. Exhibit 3 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 6, above).
30. Exhibit 120 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).

31. Exhibit 10 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
32. Exhibit 25 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
33. P16 [*11] of the Laufer declaration (discussing Exhibit 4 to the declaration): Sustained (for the same reason as no. 28, above).
34. P24 of the Laufer declaration (discussing Exhibit 10): Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
35. P66 of the Laufer declaration (discussing Exhibit 26): Overruled (for the same reason).
36. P80 of the Laufer declaration (discussing Exhibit 39): Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
37. P38 of the Laufer declaration (discussing Exhibit 12): Overruled (for the same reason).
38. Exhibit 3 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 6, above).
39. Exhibit 63 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
40. Exhibit 121 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
41. Exhibit 13 to the Laufer declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
42. Exhibit 122 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
43. Exhibit 123 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 6, above).
44. Exhibit 124 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason as no. 1, above).
45. Exhibit 125 to the Belcher [*12] declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
46. Exhibit 126 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
47. Exhibit 127 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).
48. Exhibit 128 to the Belcher declaration: Overruled (for the same reason).

V. FINDINGS OF UNDISPUTED (AND DISPUTED) FACTS

1. During the time period relevant to this litigation, Region V and PREA, along with several other companies, competed in the business of selling real estate brokerage franchises in Southern California. (See Consolidated Response of Plaintiff in Opposition to Defendants' Statements of Uncontroverted Facts at 161:2-13.)
2. Real estate brokerage franchise sellers earn revenues from periodic royalty payments and other fees coming from the franchisees. (See the Consolidated Response at 183:11-16.)
3. C-21 was the world's largest real estate brokerage franchise system. (See the Consolidated Response at 162:16-20.) PREA was no higher than no. 4 nationally. (See id. at 163:10-26.) Two of the other top four companies were ERA and Coldwell Banker. (See id. at 162:10-20.) There is no evidence of market share specific to the Southern [*13] California market; Region V provides zero evidence of PREA's share of this geographic market.
4. According to the defendants, PREA's expenses associated with the 1993 "conversion" and subsequent administration of the (James) Emery franchise were $ 1.066 million. (See Exhibit A to Exhibit 120 to the Opposition at 1975:16-17.)

5. According to the defendants, PREA's anticipated revenues from the Emery franchise were $ 1.350 million, based on a flat royalty rate over the seven-year (1993-to-1999) life of the franchise. (See Exhibit A to Exhibit 120 to the Opposition at 1975:16-17)

6. According to the plaintiff, PREA's anticipated revenues from the Emery franchise was $ 1.003 million, based on a royalty rate declining by seven percent annually over the life of the franchise. (See Exhibit 128 to the Opposition at 2002 and the Consolidated Response at 194:2-6.)

7. From 1989 to 1992, the Emery franchise's "gross commission income" ("GCI"), from which the royalty payment to PREA is calculated, declined from $ 12,112,195 (1989) to $ 11,020,983 (1990) to $ 11,308,362 (1991) and finally to either $ 10,619,608 or $ 9,538,391 (1992). (See Exhibits 124, 125 and 127 to the Opposition [*14] and contrast Exhibit 126 to the Opposition with Exhibit 2 to the June 22, 1998 Deposition of Robert S. Knudsen.) This decline averages as either roughly 3 percent (for the higher 1992 figure) or roughly 5 percent (for the lower 1992 figure) annually from 1989 to 1992. This decline averages as either 6 percent (for the higher 1992 figure) or roughly 15.5 percent (for the lower 1992 figure) from 1991 to 1992.

8. On January 26, 1993, Prudential executives Robert Bishop and Peter Stanford noted that the Emery franchise "has not been profitable and projections indicate cash flow losses (after debt service) will reach $ 178K by April, 1993 and $ 337K by March, 1994." (See Exhibit 31 to the Opposition.)

9. According to Region V, after PREA "converted" Emery, Region V lost approximately $ 2,940,000 in royalty payments that would have come from Emery. (See Exhibit 42 to the Opposition at 511:12-17.)

10. At a June 20, 1992 Region V broker's meeting, Emery stated his thanks that Region V had agreed to implement a rebate program which the franchisees had requested. (See Exhibit 46.) However, "there had been some tough times and some ruffled feelings and counter attacks back and [*15] forth..." (See id.)

11. Months prior to this June 20, 1992 meeting, Emery and other C-21 franchisees had formed a group of "concerned brokers" who attempted "in effect [to] force the Region to make changes in policy..." (See Exhibit 1 to the Walker declaration at 104:13, 104:21-105:1.)

12. Prior to and during the PREA conversion of Emery, Region V and Emery were involved in litigation against each other, over several hundred thousand dollars in royalty payments that Emery was withholding from Region V. (See Exhibit A to Region V's 11/9/98 Request for Judicial Notice.)

13. In roughly mid 1992, PREA decided to: "concentrate on [its] profitability, market presence, and leadership in Southern California. ...The proposed opportunities [included] ...a number of discussions with the largest broker in the C-21 national network C-21 Emery, about affiliation and possible merger with PruCal's Orange County Offices." (See Exhibit 43 to the Opposition at 517.)

14. According to former PREA president Jerry Cole, PREA's pricing of "sales were 'predatory' in the sense that pricing was designed to slightly undercut competitors' prices..." (See Exhibit A to Exhibit 118 to the [*16] Opposition at P7.) A PREA consultant outlined a strategy of attracting new franchisees by pricing franchises low, i.e., by "focusing on a strategy which allows cost to follow and not precede revenues." (See Exhibit 119 to the Opposition at 1950.)

15. When PREA went looking for other companies' franchisees to recruit, PREA ultimately focused on disgruntled Century 21 franchisees. (See Exhibit 52 to the Opposition at 569-70.)

VI. LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. Section 17043 claim

"HNT[↑] Section 17043 makes it unlawful to sell any product or article below the vendor's cost for the purpose of injuring a competitor or destroying competition." [Western Union Financial Services, Inc. v. First Data Corp., 20 Cal. App. 4th 1530, 1532 \[25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 341\]](#) (1993). The Court must decide whether PREA's "conversion" of the Emery franchise -- the only transaction at issue -- was a below-cost sale done with an unlawful purpose, and thus in violation of the statute.

1. Below-cost sale

The first element of the statutory violation concerns whether the Emery franchise sale was below cost. As noted above, "the Unfair Practices Act employs a fully allocated cost or fully distributed [*17] cost standard to determine whether a sale has violated section 17043." Turnbull, 219 Cal. App. 3d at 819-20. Determining whether the instant sale was below cost presents a special challenge, because we are dealing with a franchise sale, with costs and royalty income accruing over seven years at rates that could not have been precisely known, just estimated, at the commencement of the arrangement. Whether the sale was below cost should be analyzed from the perspective of 1993, when the franchise agreement was made; the determination should be based on the probability then of a money-losing outcome at the end of the franchise agreement.³

[*18] In this context, Region V's argument centers on rebutting the deposition and declaration testimony of Knudsen, who tried to show that PREA, in 1993, thought the costs and income associated with the Emery franchise were ultimately going to be profitable. (See Exhibits 120, 123, 125, and 128 to the Opposition.) Knudsen's analysis had concluded that "total estimated...expenses to PREA as a result of the Emery franchise are...$ 1.066 million." (See Exhibit A to Exhibit 120 to the Opposition at 1975:16-17.) In response, Region V directs the Court's attention to an exhibit from the deposition of Knudsen, which document (hereinafter, "the RSK Chart") is initialed at several places by "RSK." (See Exhibit 128 to the Opposition at 2002; and the Consolidated Response at 194:2-6.) The RSK Chart, Region V urges, appears to show that Knudsen calculated PREA's expected income from the transaction to be only "$ 1,003,800." (See id.) Given that $ 1.066 million in costs is higher than the $ 1.0038 million revenue figure, a below-cost sale is plainly indicated here.

PREA and PICA's motion and reply papers were silent with regard to the RSK Chart (other than an evidence objection to the document, overruled [*19] above). In an unsolicited supplemental filing with the Court, PREA and PICA admit that they "overlooked" the RSK Chart. (See the RSK Chart Brief at 2 n.1.) In the new brief, PREA and PICA go on to show that the document was created by Region V's counsel, not by Knudsen, and does not reflect Knudsen's opinions about projected income from the Emery sale. (See id. at 2-3.) Knudsen initialed the RSK Chart at his deposition only to reflect that he had, as requested by Region V's counsel, checked the math in the calculations contained in Region V's document. (See id. at 4.)

The RSK Chart contains an assumption that Emery's GCI, and thus PREA's royalty income, would decline at a rate of 7 percent annually over the life of the Emery franchise agreement. Is this assumption realistic? Looking at historical figures for Emery for the four years just prior to the PREA-Emery contract, when Emery was part of Region V, one sees that Emery's GCI declined from $ 12,112,195 (1989) to $ 11,020,983 (1990) to $ 11,308,362 (1991) and finally to either $ 10,619,608 or $ 9,538,391 (1992). (See Exhibits 124, 125 and 127 to the Opposition and contrast Exhibit 126 to the Opposition with Exhibit 2 to the June [*20] 22, Knudsen Deposition.) This decline averages as either roughly 3 percent (for the higher 1992 figure) or roughly 5 percent (for the lower 1992 figure) annually from the years 1989 to 1992. This decline averages as either 6 percent (for the higher 1992 figure) or roughly 15.5 percent (for the lower 1992 figure) from the years 1991 to 1992. Furthermore, on January 26, 1993, Prudential executives Bishop and Stanford noted that the Emery franchise "has not been profitable and projections indicate cash flow losses (after debt service) will reach $ 178K by April, 1993 and $ 337K by March, 1994." (See Exhibit 31 to the Opposition.) Based on these historical figures and the actual 1993 predictions, the Court concludes that, as of 1993, it was certainly reasonable, and also probable, to expect an annual 7 percent decline in the revenues from the Emery franchise. It follows that the sellers of the Emery franchise, in 1993, well could have, and probably, realized that they ultimately would lose money on the seven-year sale.

³The Court accepts as correct the methodology for determining a below-cost sale advanced by PREA and PICA witness Robert S. Knudsen, a certified public accountant, as he explained: "In order to assess the profitability to PREA of the Emery franchise, the franchise agreement was analyzed over its seven year term [footnote] using the fully allocated cost basis applicable under California Business and Professions Code Section 17043. Determination of whether or not the franchise was sold above or below cost was made by offsetting the expected franchise revenue to PREA by the costs that PREA would incur directly as a result of the services provided to the franchise in addition to other costs that are deducted as a result of the full cost allocation." (See id. at 1970:17-25; emphasis added.)

Therefore, Region V has demonstrated that there is a genuine issue of fact with respect to whether a below-cost sale occurred here.⁴

[*21] 2. Presumption of purpose

HN8 Once a below cost sale is shown, in order for there to be a presumption of the defendants' "purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition" (§ 17071), the plaintiff must also prove "the injurious effect of such acts." Id.

Region V proffers evidence showing that, after PREA converted Emery, Region V lost approximately $ 2,940,000 in royalty payments that would have come from Emery. (See Exhibit 42 to the Opposition at 511:12-17.) This is the alleged injurious effect.

PREA and PICA do not offer any rebutting evidence on this point. Instead, PREA and PICA cite Co-Opportunities, Inc. v. NBC, 510 F. Supp. 43, 50 \(N.D. Cal. 1981\), for the proposition that "the mere fact that the plaintiff claims to have lost business is not sufficient evidence of injurious effect to trigger the presumption of § 17071." (See the S.J. Motion at 16:14-17.)

PREA and PICA's interpretation of Co-Opportunities is correct in that the "injurious effect" element of Section 17071 requires the plaintiff to show more than lost business. The plaintiff must show that the loss of business was the result of the below-cost sale and not some other [*22] factor. See [E & H Wholesale, Inc. v. Glaser Bros., 158 Cal. App. 3d 728, 735 \[204 Cal. Rptr. 838\]](#) (1984) (finding evidence of injurious effect sufficient upon showing that diverted customers had been "previously satisfied with plaintiff's services"); accord, Co-Opportunities, 510 F. Supp. at 50 n.9 (finding evidence of injurious effect insufficient where "there is no indication of the reason for the cancellation" of dealing with plaintiff).

The record with respect to why Emery left Region V and whether Emery previously was satisfied with Region V's services is at best mixed. Region V repeatedly cites the notes of a June 20, 1992 Region V broker's meeting at which Emery stated his thanks that Region V had agreed to implement a rebate program which the franchisees had requested. (See Exhibit 46.) However, this same document reflects that "there had been some tough times and some ruffled feelings and counter attacks back and forth..." (See id.) Additionally, Phil Yeager, Region V's chief executive officer and chairman of the board, testified that Emery and other C-21 franchisees months before had formed a group of "concerned brokers" who attempted [*23] "in effect [to] force the Region to make changes in policy..." (See Exhibit 1 to the Walker declaration at 104:13, 104:21-105:1.) Finally, prior to and during the PREA conversion of Emery, Region V and Emery were involved in litigation against each other, over royalty payments that Emery was withholding from Region V. (See Exhibit A to Region V's 11/9/98 Request for Judicial Notice.)

Based on this ambiguous record, the Court cannot conclude that, under Section 17071, it was necessarily the below-cost sale, rather than Emery's unhappiness with Region V, that caused the injurious effect. Therefore, the ⁴The Court need not consider other evidence from Region V's Opposition's Exhibit 118, the Declaration of former PREA President Jerry Cole, that Knudsen underestimated the cost of the Emery deal to PREA by failing to account for certain fixed costs. Even assuming Knudsen's cost figures are correct, Region V has demonstrated a genuine issue of fact regarding whether the revenue could cover those costs.

Court does not find "presumptive evidence of the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition." § 17071.⁵ In other words, rather than the burden shifting to PREA to disprove the purpose element, the burden remains with Region V to prove this element. See Western Union, 20 Cal. App. 4th at 1540 (citation omitted). The analysis proceeds without a shift in the burden of proof.

[*24] 3. Actual purpose

HN9[[↑]] The ultimate element of the offense is whether the defendants acted "with the purpose, i.e., the desire, of injuring competitors or destroying competition." [Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 174 \[83 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 557, 973 P.2d at 536\]](#). The intent element is indeed crucial here, as the Court notes that "summary judgment is inappropriate in antitrust cases where motivation, intent, and purpose are in issue. See, e.g., Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting Co., 368 U.S. at 473, 82 S. Ct. at 491. [1962.]" Betaseed, 681 F.2d at 1229 (discussing federal antitrust law); accord Corwin, 4 Cal. 3d at 852 (discussing the Cartwright Act). "The Unfair Practices Act has as one of its purposes an antitrust law objective." [Uneedus v. Cal. Shoppers, Inc., 86 Cal. App. 3d 932, 941 \[150 Cal. Rptr. 596\]](#) (1978). This Court understands that it should be reluctant to grant summary judgment here, on the Section 17043 antitrust claim, if the defendants' intent is reasonably at issue.

Region V's evidence of the defendants' intent breaks into two categories: (1) that PREA picked prices just below its competitors [*25] in order to take away market share; and (2) that PREA specifically targeted for conversion Century 21 franchisees, rather than those of other companies like Coldwell Banker. Regarding (1) "just-below pricing," Region V cites the statement of Jerry Cole, the former PREA president, that PREA's "sales were 'predatory' in the sense that pricing was designed to slightly undercut competitors' prices..." (See Exhibit A to Exhibit 118 to the Opposition at P7.) Also, a PREA consultant outlined a strategy of attracting new franchisees by pricing franchises low, i.e., by "focusing on a strategy which allows cost to follow and not precede revenues." (See Exhibit 119 to the Opposition at 1950.) Regarding (2) "targeting" Century 21 franchisees, Region V cites an internal PREA document in which PREA and the Prudential Residential Services Corp. state that:

Because of its strategic importance to both PREA and PRSC, we will continue our most immediate focus on PruCal, concentrating on their profitability, market presence and leadership in Southern California. The proposed opportunities [include] ...a number of discussions with the largest broker in the C-21 national network C-21 Emery, about [*26] affiliation and possible merger with PruCal's Orange County Offices.

(See Exhibit 43 to the Opposition at 517.) And in the Opposition papers, Region V provides other general references to the defendants' plan to convert dissatisfied C-21 franchisees. See id. at 14:9-16:8 (and cited exhibits).

6

A relevant recent precedent on the intent question is Western Union. Reviewing a denial of a preliminary injunction on a Section 17043 claim, the Western Union Court considered a fact pattern in which a smaller money-transfer company admitted its promotional sales campaign was designed to capture market share from the dominant -- and only other -- company in the same industry. See 20 Cal. App. 4th at 1531-35. HN10[[↑]] Where, as here, there are only two competitors in the industry, and a building of [the defendant's] customer base necessarily [*27] includes a reduction in the base of the dominant party..." (id., at 1541 (internal punctuation omitted; emphasis added)) -- there is no unlawful purpose to injure competition, even where the defendant's "advertising [of the below-cost product] targeted [the plaintiff] by name." Id., at 1540. Additionally, the fact that the defendant's "internal documents show the promotion was intended to capture a customer base from [the plaintiff] is immaterial because that is something [the defendant] was entitled to do." Id.

⁵ This mixed evidence of Emery's motive in leaving Region V was sufficient for Region V to withstand the defendants' summary judgment motion on count 1, inducement of breach of the Emery contract. There, the Court found that a reasonable jury could (but might not) reasonably find that the monetary inducements were the legal cause of Emery's departure from Region V. Here, in contrast, the Court has considered something different: whether the evidence affirmatively establishes a legal presumption of injurious effect on Region V. The Court should not make this determination merely because a reasonable fact-finder might do so. It is the determination of actual purpose of injurious intent which is a mixed question of fact and law, and which would be given to the trier of fact if a fact issue existed. Cf. Mering v. Yolo County Grocery & Meat Market, 127 P.2d 985, 992 \(1942\) (noting different legal standard for presumption of purpose and actual purpose in Unfair Practices Act).

⁶ The Court need not (but does) consider this other material, which does not appear in the Consolidated Response. See C.D. Cal. Local Civ. Rule 7.14.3.

The instant fact pattern is similar, but not identical, to Western Union with respect to the market dominance of the plaintiff in the relevant industry. The instant case does not involve a "two-competitor industry" (id., 20 Cal. App. 4th at 1541), although the instant case's industry has just several large competitors. Region V does not dispute that, during the relevant time period, C-21 was the world's largest real estate brokerage franchise system, and that PREA was no higher than no. 4 nationally. (See the Consolidated Response at 161:2-13, 162:16-20, 163:10-26.) There is zero evidence of market share [*28] particular to the Southern California market.

The comparison between Western Union and our case goes only so far. In Western Union, when the defendant sought to increase its market share, this increase, as noted above, "necessarily" had to come at the expense of the plaintiff, the only other company in the industry. 20 Cal. App. 4th at 1541. In contrast, in the instant case, when PREA was looking to increase its market share, this likely increase had to come at the expense of one of the market leaders, but which one of these several companies would be targeted was not predetermined.

If Western Union applied here, then Region V's intent evidence would not be sufficient, because Western Union upheld the defendant's right to take actions similar to those of PREA and PICA, actions designed to enhance market share. As noted above, Western Union involved a unique fact pattern, a two-competitor industry. In such a situation, where any action taken by one competitor to gain market share necessarily comes at the expense of the other competitor, there is no way to distinguish acts designed simply to increase one's own market share, and thus having a lawful [*29] intent, from acts designed to injure a competitor, which is an improper purpose. But this principle does not apply to the case at bar, because one competitor's (namely, PREA's) acts in the multi-company real estate brokerage franchise industry do not inevitably and necessarily affect a particular other competitor (namely, Century 21). There is room here for a fact-finder to differentiate mere competitive purpose by PREA to gain market share from a deliberate, unlawful desire by PREA to target and injure Region V.

A more relevant precedent is E & H Wholesale. The procedural posture of E & H also was an appeal from a denial of a preliminary injunction. See 158 Cal. App. 3d at 730. The E & H defendants, two cigarette distributors in a multi-competitor industry, were selling cigarettes just below their competitors' invoice cost in order to capture market share. See id. at 731-38. On the critical question of intent, the Court ruled that certain evidence from one of the defendants, that it selected prices "arbitrarily" in order to be a "very nominal amount" below the competitors' costs, corroborated "the presumption of intent to injure competition." [*30] Id., at 738.

E & H's fact pattern of a multi-competitor industry is similar to ours. Furthermore, our case's evidence of the defendants' deliberate undercutting of Century 21's franchise prices (see above) echoes the evidence in E & H. E & H suggests that Region V's evidence of the defendants' intent to undercut Region V's price on the Emery franchise is sufficient for a law-and-motion proceeding.

In conclusion, Region V demonstrates a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the defendants acted with an unlawful purpose under Section 17043. Because of this finding of the Court, coupled with the finding that there is a genuine issue as to whether a below cost sale occurred, the Court denies summary judgment with respect to the Section 17043 claim.

B. Other Claims

In the 2AC, Region V also alleges that the defendants violated Sections 17044, 17045, and 17048 of the Unfair Practices Act. (See id. at PP69, 70, 72.) However, in the Opposition, Region V makes no reference to, and accordingly provides zero evidence of any violations of, these statutory sections. (In the June 18, 1999 supplemental briefing, requested by the Court, Region V makes its [*31] first mention of Section 17044, but still not the other sections.) Because the Court finds that Region V has abandoned its claims under Sections 17044, 17045, and 17048, the Court grants the Instant Motion in favor of PREA and PICA with respect to these statutory claims. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325.

VII. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Instant Motion by the defendants for summary adjudication of count V, the California unfair trade practice claims, is partially denied, with respect to the Section 17043 claim, and partially granted, with respect to the other claims in the 2AC.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: August 4, 1999

DAVID O. CARTER

United States District Judge

End of Document

J & S Oil, Inc. v. Irving Oil Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Maine

August 4, 1999, Decided ; August 4, 1999, Filed

Civil No. 98-60-B

Reporter

63 F. Supp. 2d 62 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12192 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,615

J & S OIL, INC., Plaintiff v. IRVING OIL CORP., Defendant

Disposition: [1] Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment as to Counts I and II of Plaintiff's Complaint GRANTED and Counts III, IV and V DISMISSED. Plaintiff's Motion for Further Discovery DENIED.

Core Terms

retail, gasoline, prices, summary judgment, discovery, stations, refined, petroleum, price discrimination, relevant market, below-cost, geographic, wholesale, refinery, selling, discriminating, competitors, genuine, Counts, seller, sales, Oil

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Summary judgment is appropriate in the absence of a genuine issue as to any material fact and when the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. An issue is genuine for these purposes if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. A material fact is one that has the potential to affect the outcome of the suit under the applicable law. Facts may be drawn from the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Secondary & Tertiary Line Injuries

HN3 [down arrow] Competitive Injuries, Primary Line Injuries

Two types of competitive injury are cognizable under the statute: primary-line injury and secondary-line injury. Primary-line injury refers to injury to competition among the direct competitors of the discriminating seller. Secondary-line injury occurs when a discriminating seller offers the same product to retailers (or wholesalers) at different prices, thereby injuring competition between them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

To establish an injury to competition under a primary-line theory, a plaintiff must demonstrate that (1) the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of the discriminating seller's costs; and (2) the discriminating seller has a reasonable prospect of eventually recouping the investment it made in below-cost pricing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Establishing that a defendant was reasonably likely to recoup its investment in below-cost pricing calls for proof that (1) its pricing practice is capable of producing the intended effect on its competitor, either driving the competitor out of business or disciplining it to raise its prices to a supracompetitive level within a disciplined oligopoly and that (2) it has sufficient market power to charge and maintain supracompetitive prices within the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

To demonstrate that a defendant has sufficient market power to maintain supracompetitive prices long enough to reap the benefit of its investment in below cost pricing, a plaintiff must: (1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run.

Counsel: FOR PLAINTIFF: Harold Friedman, Esq., Karen Wolf, Esq., FRIEDMAN, BABCOCK & GAYTHWAITE, Portland, ME.

FOR DEFENDANT: John Hubbard Rich III, Esq., David McConnell, Esq., PERKINS, THOMPSON, HINCKLEY & KEDDY, Portland, ME.

Judges: MORTON A. BRODY, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: MORTON A. BRODY

Opinion

[*63] ORDER AND MEMORANDUM OF DECISION

BRODY, District Judge

Plaintiff J & S Oil, Inc. ("Plaintiff") brings this antitrust action against Defendant Irving Oil Corp. ("Defendant") alleging predatory price discrimination in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\) (Count I) and unfair trade practices in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 45 (Count II). To these counts, Plaintiff appends state law claims for interference with business relations (Count III), violation of the Unfair Sales Act, Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 1201-1209 (Count IV), and breach of contract (Count V). Before the Court is Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment on Counts I and II of Plaintiff's Complaint and Plaintiff's [*2] Motion for Further Discovery. For the reasons set forth below, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment on Counts I and II and DISMISSES the remaining state claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\). Plaintiff's Motion for Further Discovery is DENIED.

I. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

HN1 [↑] Summary judgment is appropriate in the absence of a genuine issue as to any material fact and when the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). An issue is genuine for these purposes if "the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). A material fact is one that has "the potential to affect the outcome of the suit under the applicable law." Nereida-Gonzalez v. Tirado-Delgado, 990 F.2d 701, 703 \(1st Cir. 1993\). Facts may be drawn from "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

II. BACKGROUND

The following are the relevant facts presented in a light most favorable to [*3] Plaintiff. See McCarthy v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 56 F.3d 313, 315 \(1st Cir. 1995\).

Both Plaintiff and Defendant are Maine corporations. Plaintiff operates retail gasoline stations in Kennebec County, specifically in the towns of Winslow, Farmingdale, Manchester, and Augusta. In addition, Plaintiff sells refined petroleum products on a wholesale basis to independent gasoline stations and heating oil customers in central Maine.

Defendant operates retail gasoline stations throughout the state of Maine. Within Kennebec County, it has stations in Manchester, Gardiner, Waterville, and Augusta. In addition, Defendant is affiliated with Irving Oil Limited ("Irving Limited"), a refinery in the Canadian province of New Brunswick that converts crude oil into a number of refined petroleum products that it sells to Defendant and other carriers, including Plaintiff. While Defendant purchases refined petroleum from Irving Limited at an internal "accounting price," other carriers buy petroleum from Irving Limited at the "spot" price. The spot price is the price at which the product is available from other refineries selling in New York Harbor and elsewhere.

[*64] The predominant [*4] sources of the refined petroleum ultimately sold at retail gas stations in Maine are Irving Limited's refinery and refineries selling out of New York Harbor. Thus, no matter what brand name is displayed at retail stations in Maine, it is possible that the original source of the gas is Irving Limited. Between 1995

and 1997, Defendant imported an average of 30.58 percent of all motor gasoline refined by Irving Limited and imported into Maine.¹

Plaintiff claims, and for purposes of this Motion Defendant does not dispute, that the gas sold by Defendant at its retail stations in Kennebec County has been priced "below cost" on many occasions since August of 1995. In other words, Defendant [5] sold gas to consumers at a price lower than the price paid by other carriers to purchase gas at wholesale. During this same period, Defendant sold gas at its retail stations outside Kennebec County for prices higher than the below-cost prices it was charging at its stations within Kennebec County.

The market for retail gasoline in Kennebec County has been characterized as moderately competitive since June of 1995 by the Maine Attorney General. In 1995-96, the level of market concentration in Kennebec County decreased by nineteen percent from the prior year and has continued to decrease since then. The volume of retail gasoline sold in Kennebec County by Defendant totaled 7,247,000 gallons in 1995, 7,660,600 gallons in 1996, and 8,316,000 gallons in 1997. In contrast, the volume of retail gasoline sold by Plaintiff in Kennebec County during the same three years totaled 11,178,804 gallons, 11,887,273 gallons, and 11,914,950 gallons respectively.² Plaintiff opened a new retail station in Augusta in July of 1997.

[6] III. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Plaintiff filed its Complaint in this Court on March 3, 1998. On March 27, 1998, Defendant filed an Answer and United States Magistrate Judge Beaulieu issued a scheduling order setting July 1, 1998 as the deadline for joinder of parties and amendment of the pleadings. The order also directed the parties to complete discovery by September 16, 1998. That deadline was subsequently amended to December 16, 1998.

The parties had a phone conference with the Magistrate Judge on October 22, 1998 to discuss whether Defendant was entitled to limit its response to Plaintiff's request for information on its sales, pricing, costs, and profits to its retail stations in Kennebec County. The Magistrate Judge ruled that Defendant could not limit its disclosure in this manner.

Two months later, on December 23, 1998, Defendant filed the Motion for Summary Judgment that is the subject of this order, as well as a Motion to Bifurcate Discovery in which it sought to limit discovery to the issues of market definition, market share, barriers to entry, and market capacity.

Following a phone conference on December 23, 1998, the Magistrate Judge stayed all discovery pending resolution [7] by this Court of Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Plaintiff's anticipated Motion for Further Discovery.

IV. DISCUSSION

Plaintiff claims that Defendant's practice of selling its retail gasoline at below-cost prices in Kennebec County constitutes a violation of 15 U.S.C. §§ 13\(a\) and 45. In its Response to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment, Plaintiff concedes [<*65] that 15 U.S.C. § 45, barring unfair trade practices, provides no private right of action and withdraws that claim. The Court therefore will limit itself to an examination of Plaintiff's price discrimination and state law claims.

¹ In its Statement of Material Facts, Plaintiff asserts that "Irving's own sales to its Maine entity and direct imports to Maine exceed 50% during relevant times in this case." (Pl.'s Statement of Facts P 5.) The Court finds this statement not only undecipherable, but unsupported by the portion of the record to which Plaintiff cites.

² These totals reflect Plaintiff's fiscal year which runs from October 1 to September 31.

A. Price Discrimination

HN2 [↑] Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act and codified at 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\), prohibits a seller from charging different prices for the same product where the effect . . . may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

15 U.S.C. § 13 [8] \(a\) \(1994\). HN3 [↑] Two types of competitive injury are cognizable under the statute: primary-line injury and secondary-line injury. Primary-line injury refers to injury to competition among the direct competitors of the discriminating seller. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 220, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 \(1993\). Secondary-line injury occurs when a discriminating seller offers the same product to retailers (or wholesalers) at different prices, thereby injuring competition between them. See Jefferson County Pharmaceutical Ass'n v. Abbott Labs, 460 U.S. 150, 178 n.6, 74 L. Ed. 2d 882, 103 S. Ct. 1011 \(1983\) (O'Connor, J., dissenting).

HN4 [↑] To establish an injury to competition under a primary-line theory, a plaintiff must demonstrate that (1) the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of the discriminating seller's costs; and (2) the discriminating seller has a reasonable prospect of eventually recouping the investment it made in below-cost pricing.³ See Bridges v. MacLean-Stevens Studios, Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 20, 27 \(D. Me. 1998\) (citing Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 223-24). [9]

As set forth in its Complaint, Plaintiff's theory of the case appears to be that Defendant intended to establish itself as the dominant retailer in [10] Kennebec County by eliminating competition from Plaintiff. According to Plaintiff, Defendant's dominance of the retail market for gasoline in many parts of Maine enabled it to charge below-cost prices in Kennebec County. Plaintiff claims that this predatory pricing practice, begun in August of 1995, caused it to lose profits and presents a substantial risk of creating a more highly concentrated market for retail gasoline in Kennebec County and the state of Maine, thereby injuring competition. Though Plaintiff does not identify it as such, the facts alleged, if true, would constitute a primary-line injury.

While Defendant concedes for purposes of summary judgment that its price for retail gasoline in Kennebec Country was below-cost, it asserts that Plaintiff has not established a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Defendant had a reasonable prospect of recouping its investment.⁴ [*66] Plaintiff counters that any failure to establish a ³ In addition to these substantive requirements, section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act contains a jurisdictional requirement: the statute applies only to those discriminatory sales that take place "in commerce." See Coastal Fuels of P.R., Inc. v. Caribbean Petroleum Corp., 79 F.3d 182, 189 \(1st Cir. 1996\); see also 1A Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovencamp, Antitrust Law P 267c (Aspen Law & Business 1997). In the context of a primary-line injury, the "in commerce" requirement has been interpreted to mean that the product exchanged in at least one of the sales, whether the below-cost sale or the sale to which the below-cost sale is being compared, must cross a state line. See Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 200-201, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392 \(1974\); see also Areeda & Hovencamp, supra, P 267c.

⁴ Defendant also argues that Plaintiff's claim does not meet the statute's threshold "in commerce" requirement because neither the gasoline sold at Defendant's retail stations in Kennebec County at below-cost prices, nor the gasoline sold at its retail stations elsewhere in Maine at higher prices, crossed a state line in the course of the sales. Plaintiff responds that Defendant's sales of retail gas to its customers in Maine were "in commerce" because the gas originated at Irving Limited's refinery in Canada.

It appears that Plaintiff is relying on an exception, established by the Supreme Court in Standard Oil Co. v. FTC, 340 U.S. 231, 237-38, 95 L. Ed. 239, 71 S. Ct. 240 \(1951\), to the "in commerce" requirement for goods which are sold intrastate, but nevertheless remain in the "flow of commerce." Cases from other circuits interpreting Standard Oil have found the "flow of commerce" rationale applies genuine issue of material fact with respect to recoupment is due to Defendant's refusal to comply with discovery. Plaintiff argues that consideration of Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment is consequently premature and moves that the Court allow [\[11\]](#) discovery to continue pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(f\).

63 F. Supp. 2d 62, *66L^A 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12192, 10

[\[12\]](#) HN5

Establishing that a defendant was reasonably likely to recoup its investment in below-cost pricing calls for proof that (1) its pricing practice is capable of producing the intended effect on its competitor, either driving the competitor out of business or disciplining it to raise its prices to a suprareactive level within a disciplined oligopoly ⁵ [\[13\]](#) and that (2) it has sufficient market power to charge and maintain suprareactive prices within the relevant market. See Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 225; see also 3 Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovencamp, Antitrust Law PP 745d & e (1996). The parties focus on the second of these requirements in their briefs and so shall the Court.⁶

(1) Where [goods] are purchased by the retailer upon the order of a customer with the definite intention that the goods are to go at once to the customer; (2) where the goods are purchased by the retailer from the supplier to meet the needs of specified customers pursuant to some understanding with the customer, although not for immediate delivery; and (3) where the goods are purchased by the retailer based on the anticipated needs of specific customers.

Cliff Food Stores, Inc. v. Kroger, Inc., 417 F.2d 203, 210 \(5th Cir. 1969\) (citing Walker Oil Co. v. Hudson Oil Co., 414 F.2d 588, 590 \(5th Cir. 1969\)).

There is no clear First Circuit precedent on this issue. The case cited by Defendant, Coastal Fuels of P.R., Inc. v. Caribbean Petroleum Corp., 79 F.3d 182, 189-90 \(1st Cir. 1996\), is distinguishable because the refined oil at issue in that case never crossed state lines: the oil was refined in Puerto Rico and the relevant sales were made by the refinery to wholesalers in Puerto Rico. On the other hand, the case relied upon by Plaintiff, Rio Vista Oil, Ltd. v. Southland Corp., 667 F. Supp. 757 \(D. Utah 1987\) has been criticized by a leading commentator in the field and flatly contradicted by the decisions of other courts. See Areeda & Hovencamp, supra note 3, P 267c; see also Indiana Grocery Co. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 647 F. Supp. 254, 261 \(S.D. Ind. 1986\) (holding retail sale of groceries not "in commerce"); Cliff Food Stores, Inc., 417 F.2d at 210 (same).

Clearly, the case law regarding the "in commerce" requirement is unsettled. The Court declines to reach the issue here, however, in light of its finding that Plaintiff has failed to make out a genuine question of material fact as to the substantive elements of its price discrimination claim.

⁵ This latter effect, called "oligopolistic price coordination" or "conscious parallelism," occurs when firms that share monopoly power in a highly concentrated market "[set] their prices at a profit-maximizing, suprareactive level by recognizing their shared economic interest and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions." Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 227.

⁶ With respect to the first requirement, Plaintiff's Complaint asserts that Defendant instituted its below-cost pricing strategy in August of 1995 with the credible intention of putting Plaintiff out of business in Kennebec County. Though Defendant does not press the point, the Court finds that Plaintiff has not created a genuine issue of fact as to whether it was adversely affected by the below-cost pricing, much less as to whether it was in danger of going out of business.

It undisputed that Plaintiff currently operates retail gasoline stations in Winslow, Farmingdale, and Manchester, just as it has since 1995, the beginning of the alleged predatory period. Moreover, Plaintiff acknowledges that it opened a new station in Augusta in July of 1997. Beyond a bare allegation in the Complaint, there is no indication that these stations have lost money. Indeed, the affidavit of William Norwood, Plaintiff's Chief Financial Officer, does nothing to substantiate Plaintiff's claim of lost profits, and there is evidence that the volume of retail gas sold in Kennebec County by Plaintiff exceeded that sold by Defendant each year from 1995 to 1997.

Plaintiff's claim that it requires additional discovery to establish the fact or probability of its own injury is unavailing. Proving such injury "requires an understanding of the extent and duration of the alleged predation, the relative financial strength of the predator and its intended victim, and their respective incentives and will." Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 225. Information about Plaintiff's own financial strength, incentives and will, if not those of its competitor, are well within Plaintiff's control, yet it has produced no evidence of any ill-effect despite four years of alleged predation. The Court thus finds that Plaintiff has failed to meet its burden to show that Defendant's below-cost pricing could drive it from the retail gasoline market. Furthermore, the

[14] HN6[↑]

[*67] To demonstrate that a defendant has sufficient market power to maintain supracompetitive prices long enough to reap the benefit of its investment in below cost pricing, a plaintiff must "(1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir. 1995\); see also Brooke Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 226 (noting relevance of market concentration, barriers to entry, and capacity of defendant to absorb market shares of rivals to market power analysis). Defining the relevant market requires identification of both the product at issue and the geographic market for that product. See Coastal Fuels of P.R., Inc., 79 F.3d at 196 (determining relevant market in context of monopoly claim).

Defendant posits that the relevant market in this case is the market for retail gasoline in Kennebec County and argues it is entitled to summary judgment because Plaintiff has not raised a genuine issue [15] of fact as to Defendant's dominance in that market or the existence of structural conditions that would stifle competitors.

At the heart of Plaintiff's Response to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment is its contention that it has not received adequate discovery to allow it to perform an analysis of market power. Specifically, Plaintiff asserts that it needs "the volume of product sold by Irving at its refinery, the price at which it sold this product to others and to itself, who Irving's customers were and where the product ended up, and the corporate relationship between Irving's entities." (Ernest T. Kendall, Aff. P 13.) In support of this argument, Plaintiff resorts to a theory of liability different from the one presented in its Complaint: its Response appears to allege that Defendant is likely to gain control over the market for retail gasoline because Defendant, through Irving Limited, currently controls the supply of refined gasoline available to retail outlets in the state of Maine. Plaintiff also suggests for the first time that the relevant market should be defined with reference to wholesale, as well as retail, gasoline and that the geographic market is much larger [16] than Kennebec County because "if Irving sells refined product to every retailer in Kennebec County, then consumers must leave Kennebec County to obtain alternative product." (Pl.'s Resp. Def.'s Mot. Summ. J. at 12.)

The Court finds that Plaintiff's allegations bear little, if any, connection to the required elements of a price discrimination claim. First, the Court observes that Plaintiff's definition of the relevant market reflects a flawed understanding of that concept. For one thing, Plaintiff's Complaint does not allege, nor does the record support, a claim that Defendant discriminated in its sales of wholesale gasoline. Thus, wholesale gasoline has no relevance to the definition of the market in this case. Plaintiff's assertion that the geographic market for retail gasoline is [*68] larger than Kennebec County also misses the mark. Simply put, the geographic market for retail gasoline depends on how far individuals are willing and able to travel to purchase the product. See Bathke v. Casey's Gen. Stores, Inc., 64 F.3d 340, 346 \(8th Cir. 1995\) ("the geographic market encompasses the geographic area to which consumers can practically turn for alternative sources of the [17] product"). While the Court does not deny the possibility that people will travel beyond county lines to purchase gasoline, it finds that Plaintiff has failed to establish a factual issue as to this matter and that none of the discovery it requests is reasonably calculated to do so. See id. at 346 (observing that information regarding practical alternative sources is rarely available from defendant) (citing H. Hovencamp, Federal Antitrust Policy, § 3.6d at 113-14).

Second, Plaintiff's claim that additional discovery will reveal that Defendant, through Irving Limited, has the ability to control the price at which gasoline is available to retailers in Maine and thereby can limit the capacity of its rivals to increase their output in the short run is similarly unpersuasive. Not only does this argument raise a question about whether Plaintiff has brought suit against the appropriate party, it ignores the affidavit testimony of Plaintiff's own expert which indicates that Irving Limited is not the only source from which Maine retailers can obtain gasoline. Indeed, according to Plaintiff's expert, "the predominant sources of imported refined products in Maine are the [18] Irving . . . refinery and New York Harbor." (Kendall Aff. P 8.) (emphasis added). If the price of Irving Limited's refined petroleum price plus transportation costs exceeded the spot price plus transportation costs of suggestion in Plaintiff's brief that Defendant's pricing strategy was intended to discipline Plaintiff to raise its own prices to a supracompetitive level within an oligopolistic market also is completely without support.

petroleum available at New York Harbor, Maine retailers could purchase petroleum at New York Harbor. (Kendall Aff. P 8.) The existing evidence thus indicates that any attempt by Defendant to limit its rivals' output capacity would be unsuccessful. Moreover, much of the evidence necessary to demonstrate otherwise relates to alternate sources of refined petroleum and therefore is beyond the scope of Plaintiff's requested discovery.

Lastly, there is no evidence of significant barriers to entry in the retail gasoline market. In fact, Defendant has offered evidence that entry into the retail gasoline market can be accomplished with an initial capital outlay of approximately $ 250,000.00 to $ 280,000.00, some of which would be advanced by a gasoline supplier. Defendant further asserts that the cost of leasing a gasoline-only station in the Manchester/Augusta area is about $ 1,200.00 per month, while the cost of leasing a station in that area that also offers in-store sales [19] is about $ 2,600.00 per month. The Court finds no reason why Plaintiff could not have presented contrary evidence on this point since such information is not in the exclusive control of Defendant. In the absence of such evidence, the Court can only conclude that Defendant would be unable to maintain supracompetitive retail prices because such prices would be undercut by new entrants to the market.

The Supreme Court recently has observed that "the prerequisites to recovery [in a price discrimination case] are not easy to establish" and that such claims are "rarely tried, and even more rarely successful." Brook Group Ltd., 509 U.S. at 226 (internal quotations omitted). In the present case, Plaintiff has failed to put forth a coherent theory of liability or evidence that would satisfy the elements of price discrimination under any theory, nor has it shown how the discovery it requests from Defendant would remedy these deficiencies. Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's price discrimination claim therefore is granted.

B. State Law Claims

Plaintiff has asserted claims under state law for interference with business relations and breach of contract, [20] as well as a claim under the Unfair Sales Act, Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 1201-1209. [*69] In light of the fact that the Court has dismissed Plaintiff's federal antitrust claims by way of summary judgment, the Court declines to exercise its supplemental jurisdiction over these remaining claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(c\)\(3\); see Mercado-Garcia v. Ponce Federal Bank, 979 F.2d 890, 896 \(1st Cir. 1992\) ("Once the court dismissed some of the federal claims and resolved the others before trial by summary judgment, it had the discretion also to dismiss the pendent state claims."); Martinez v. Colon, 54 F.3d 980, 990 \(1st Cir. 1995\) ("once the court determined so far in advance of trial that no legitimate federal question existed, the jurisdictional basis for plaintiff's pendent claims under Puerto Rico law evaporated"). Plaintiff, of course, is free to pursue these claims in state court.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment as to Counts I and II of Plaintiff's Complaint and DISMISSES Counts III, IV and V. Plaintiff's Motion for Further Discovery is DENIED.

[21] SO ORDERED.

MORTON A. BRODY

United States District Judge

Dated this 4th day of August, 1999.

Red Lion Med. Safety, Inc. v. Ohmeda, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of California

August 4, 1999, Decided ; August 6, 1999, Filed

CIV-S-96-1919 DFL GGH

Reporter

63 F. Supp. 2d 1218 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12985 **

RED LION MEDICAL SAFETY, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, v. OHMEDA, INC., Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Motion for summary judgment GRANTED as to plaintiffs' claim of monopolization of service market for all anesthesia machines and as to per se and rule of reason group boycott claims. Motion DENIED as to all other claims.

Core Terms

machines, anesthesia, prices, customers, plaintiffs', manufacturer, market power, antitrust, consumers, monopoly power, market share, aftermarket, relevant market, monopolization, monitors, trained, buy, summary judgment, competitors, tooling, costs, share of the market, triable issue, permanently, platforms, policies, products, switch, brand, replacement part

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b, private antitrust claims are subject to a four-year statute of limitations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

HN2 Price Discrimination, Defenses

In antitrust law, a continuing violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of action arises each time the plaintiff is injured. When a continuing violation exists, the limitations period runs from the "last overt act" by the defendant, which must be (1) a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous decision that (2) inflicts "new and accumulating" injury on the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Sherman Act, Claims

A monopoly claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Circumstantial & Direct Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN4 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Proof of monopoly power, which the Supreme Court has defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition, may be by direct or circumstantial evidence. Direct evidence of monopoly power is evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices. To demonstrate monopoly power by circumstantial evidence, a plaintiff must: (1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

As an abstract matter of law and economics, a manufacturer can have monopoly power in the servicing of its own equipment even if it has no such power in the sale of that equipment, and further, that a manufacturer can achieve monopoly power in servicing by tying service to parts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Parts and service can constitute separate markets, and a single brand, by itself, can constitute a separate market for parts or service.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The proper market definition can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the "commercial realities" faced by consumers. The crucial inquiry in determining whether related products, such as equipment and service, constitute one or multiple markets is whether there is sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide one separately from the others.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN8 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Although ultimately what constitutes a relevant market is a factual determination for the jury, a court may grant summary judgment on a Sherman Act § 2 claim where no reasonable jury could find in favor of the plaintiff on the relevant market issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN9 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A dominant share often carries with it the power to control output across the market, and thereby control prices. Courts generally require a 65 percent market share to establish a prima facie case of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN10 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The extent to which one market prevents exploitation of another market depends on the extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another, i.e., the "cross-elasticity of demand."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [down] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

63 F. Supp. 2d 1218, *1218 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12985, 1

Even if a Sherman Act § 2 plaintiff shows that the defendant has a 100 percent share of a given market, it cannot make out a valid § 2 claim without showing barriers to market entry and expansion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

A Sherman Act § 2 monopoly plaintiff must also show monopolistic conduct by the defendant, which is the use of monopoly power to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN13 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Where a plaintiff presents evidence of exclusionary action designed to maintain a parts monopoly and use of control over parts to strengthen a monopoly share of a service market, liability turns on whether legitimate business justifications can explain the defendant's actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN14 [] Price Discrimination, Defenses

When the defendant offers a legitimate business justification, the plaintiff may rebut that justification by demonstrating either that the justification does not legitimately promote competition or that the justification is pretextual.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Finally, a Sherman Act § 2 plaintiff must establish antitrust injury by showing that its injury flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

63 F. Supp. 2d 1218, *1218 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12985, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To make out an attempted monopolization claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

A tying arrangement is a device used by a competitor with market power in one market (for the "tying" product) to extend its market power into an entirely distinct market (for the "tied" product). To accomplish this, the competitor agrees to sell the tying product only on the condition that its customers also purchase the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

To make out a tying claim, a plaintiff must establish that: (1) defendant has tied two products or services sold in different markets; (2) defendant has market power in the tying product, and (3) the tie affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The Supreme Court defines market power as the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.

Counsel: For RED LION MEDICAL SAFETY, INCORPORATED, ANATECH, INC., ANESTHESIA PLUS, BELL MEDICAL, INC., BIO-MEDIC, BIOMEDICAL EQUIPMENT SPECIALISTS, INC., GARRETT MED-TECH, INC., SAFETY ANESTHESIA EQUIPMENT SERVICES, INC., plaintiffs: Andrea M Miller, Nageley and Meredith Inc., Sacramento, CA.

For RED LION MEDICAL SAFETY, INCORPORATED, ANATECH, INC., ANESTHESIA PLUS, Incorporated, BELL MEDICAL, INC., BIO-MEDIC, BIOMEDICAL CONCEPTS, INC., BIOMEDICAL EQUIPMENT SPECIALISTS, INC., GARRETT MED-TECH, INC., SAFETY ANESTHESIA EQUIPMENT SERVICES, INC., plaintiffs: Merrill G Davidoff, PRO HAC VICE, Edward W Millstein, PRO HAC VICE, Berger and Montague, Philadelphia, PA. David R. Scott, PRO HAC VICE, Scott & Scott, LLC, Colchester, CT.

For OHMEDA, INC., defendant: Scott E Mortman, PRO HAC VICE, Thomas A McGrath, PRO HAC VICE, Shearman and Sterling, New York, NY.

63 F. Supp. 2d 1218, *1218A 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12985, 1

For OHMEDA, INC., defendant: James T Halverson, PRO HAC VICE, Richard H Porter, PRO HAC VICE, John L Jacobus, PRO HAC VICE, Kenneth P Ewing, PRO HAC VICE, Steptoe and Johnson [2] LLP, Washington, DC.

For OHMEDA, INC., defendant: Bradley Nelson Webb, Law Offices of Bradley N Webb, Sacramento, CA.

For OHMEDA, INC., defendant: Geoffrey Alan Goodman, Murphy Austin Adams Schoenfeld LLP, Sacramento, CA.

Judges: DAVID F. LEVI, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DAVID F. LEVI

Opinion

[*1221] MEMORANDUM OF OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs Red Lion Medical Safety, Inc. et al. bring this antitrust action against defendant Ohmeda, Inc. Ohmeda moves for summary judgment.

I.

Ohmeda, Inc. is one of the nation's leading manufacturers of medical anesthesia equipment. Plaintiffs are independent service organizations ("ISOs") who service anesthesia equipment, including Ohmeda machines. Plaintiffs accuse Ohmeda of trying to exclude them from the servicing market for Ohmeda equipment.

Until recently, when it was partitioned and sold, Ohmeda was the health care division of The BOC Group, a British conglomerate. (See Willig Decl. at 7.) Ohmeda manufactures and sells anesthesia systems. (See Brandmeier Decl., P 8.) An anesthesia system consists of (1) a gas delivery platform, including vaporizers and ventilators, that mixes gases with anesthetic agent and induces the mixture [3] into the patient; (2) respiratory gas monitors that track the presence of gases in the patient; and (3) physiological monitors that track the patient's vital signs, such as heart rate. (See id., P 9.) Ohmeda provides service for its anesthesia systems and also manufactures and sells replacement parts for its machines.

Ohmeda classifies the parts it manufactures for its hardware into three categories. (See Grosse Decl., PP 19-21.) Some parts are "restricted" and are not for sale by themselves; instead, these parts are incorporated into larger "subassemblies" and sold in that form. (See id., P 19.) Other parts are "unrestricted" and may be sold to anyone. Ohmeda asserts that "the vast majority of [its] repair and maintenance parts and subassemblies" fall within the unrestricted category. (See id., P 20.) Finally, about 12% of Ohmeda parts are [*1222] "service restricted." (See id., P 24.) This category includes parts "which require installation, replacement or adjustment by trained personnel using specialized procedures to help maintain patient safety and proper operation of the equipment." (Id., Exh. A.)

From at least 1984 to mid-1997, Ohmeda refused to sell service [4] restricted parts or provide any training or manuals to ISOs. (See Lewitzke Decl., P 9.) If a hospital did not use Ohmeda for service, Ohmeda would only sell the hospital service restricted parts in two situations: first, if the hospital had its own in-house, Ohmeda-trained biomedical technicians to do the servicing, or second, if the hospital signed a waiver letter absolving Ohmeda of liability arising out of the use of the machine, including liability unrelated to service by the ISO. (See id.; Burke Decl., P 22.) Plaintiffs allege that Ohmeda maintained these restrictions on the sales of replacement parts in order to coerce buyers of its equipment into using Ohmeda service rather than ISO service.

Ohmeda's restrictive parts policy is the heart of plaintiffs' claim that Ohmeda has sought to dominate the servicing market in violation of the antitrust laws. In addition to their attack on the availability of Ohmeda parts, plaintiffs make a number of other related factual allegations: they assert that Ohmeda engaged in price discrimination by selling identical parts at different prices under separate part numbers, (see Ardrey Decl., P 12); levied hidden price increases on [5] its customers by decreasing the amount of service provided while keeping prices constant, (see Lemanek Decl., P 9; Lewis Decl., P 14); struck back at customers who used ISOs by making unnecessary repairs,

(see Lesko Decl., PP 24-25), and even sabotaging its own machines, (see Burke Decl., P 31; Garrett Decl., P 21); and generally disparaged the quality of ISO service, (see Lemanek Decl., P 6; Lesko Decl., P 9; Lewis Decl., P 28). Plaintiffs also assert that Ohmeda forbade independent original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs") of Ohmeda parts from selling service restricted parts to ISOs. (See Foster Decl., P 16; Garrett Decl., P 18.)

Plaintiffs filed this lawsuit on November 1, 1996. In June 1997, Ohmeda changed its parts and servicing policy and established the Qualified Independent Service Organization ("QISO") program. Under this program, Ohmeda offers the same service training to ISOs that it requires of its own service technicians and hospital biomedical technicians. (See Willig Decl. at 60; Yeager Decl., PP 3-4.) Any ISO with a technician who has passed the Ohmeda training course becomes eligible to order manuals and parts -- even service restricted parts [6] -- directly from Ohmeda for any equipment on which the technician has been trained. (See Willig Decl. at 60-61.)

According to plaintiffs, however, Ohmeda's QISO training is infrequently given, prohibitively expensive, and unhelpful to most experienced technicians. Plaintiffs assert that it costs approximately $ 40,000 to train a single technician on the full line of Ohmeda equipment, (see Ardrey Decl., P 24; Coholan Decl., P 23; L. McBride Decl., P 24), not including lost income and travel expenses. Plaintiffs allege that the classes are given only a few times a year and are often full. (See Coholan Decl., P 25; Foster Decl., P 23). As a result, it may take "up to three years" to fully train a single technician. (Id.) Even after an ISO technician completes QISO training, the technician is required to take periodic refresher courses, a requirement Ohmeda does not impose on its service employees. (See id.) Moreover, plaintiffs contend that if a trained technician leaves one ISO for another, Ohmeda requires that the technician be retrained. (See Coholan Decl., P 23; L. McBride Decl., P 24.) Finally, plaintiffs allege that Ohmeda is free to cancel an ISO's QISO [7] status at any time without justification or penalty. (See Coholan Decl., P 26; Foster Decl., P 24.)

Based on the above policies and practices, plaintiffs make eight antitrust claims [*1223] against Ohmeda: (1) monopolization of the market for service on all anesthesia equipment in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act; (2) monopolization of the market for service on Ohmeda equipment in violation of § 2; (3) attempted monopolization of the market for service on all anesthesia equipment under § 2; (4) attempted monopolization of the market for service on Ohmeda equipment under § 2; (5) per se illegal tying of service to parts under § 1 of the Sherman Act; (6) illegal tying of service to parts under the rule of reason in violation of § 1; (7) a per se illegal group boycott under § 1; and (8) an illegal group boycott under the rule of reason in violation of § 1. Ohmeda now moves for summary judgment on all claims.

II.

Ohmeda first argues that plaintiffs' claims are time-barred. HN1 Under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15b, private antitrust claims are subject to a four-year statute of limitations. See Hennegan v. Pacifico Creative Serv., Inc., 787 F.2d 1299, 1300 (9th Cir. 1986). [8] "A civil cause of action under the [antitrust laws] arises at each time the plaintiff's interest is invaded to his damage, and the statute of limitations begins to run at that time." Id. (quoting AMF, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 591 F.2d 68, 70 (9th Cir. 1979)). Plaintiffs filed this suit on November 1, 1996, so any antitrust claim that accrued before November 1, 1992 is untimely. It is undisputed that Ohmeda's restrictive parts policy was put into effect no later than 1984, eight years before the start of the limitations period. (See Lewitzke Decl., PP 8-9.) Plaintiffs' industry expert, Michael Brinkman, conjectures that the Ohmeda policy dates from the late 1970s. (See Brinkman Depo. at 28.) All but one of the plaintiffs had been in business for more than four years at the time the suit was filed.¹

[9] In response, plaintiffs argue that the continuing violations doctrine saves their claims. HN2 In antitrust law, "[a] continuing violation is one in which the plaintiff's interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of action arises each time the plaintiff is injured." Pace Industries, Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 237 (9th Cir. 1987) (citing Hennegan, 787 F.2d at 1300-01). When a continuing violation exists, the limitations period runs from the "last overt act" by the defendant, which must be (1) a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous decision that (2) inflicts "new and accumulating" injury on the plaintiff. Id. at 238.

¹ Fred Nichols of Anatech, Inc. did not enter the industry until January 1996. (See Nichols Decl., P 6.) Although Nichols was an Ohmeda employee prior to and during the limitations period and was aware of Ohmeda's parts policy when he formed Anatech, (see id., PP 5-6, 16-17), his late entry into the market means Anatech did not suffer antitrust injury until some point within the limitations period. Thus, even if the other plaintiffs' claims were time-barred, Anatech's claims would go forward.

"New and independent acts" may include active enforcement of policies first put into place outside the limitations period. In Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland General Elec. Co., 111 F.3d 1427 (9th Cir. 1996), a power company refused to sell power to the plaintiff under an 18-year-old horizontal market share division agreement. The Ninth Circuit held that the refusal was a new and independent act because the original agreement "was not a permanent and final decision [10] that controlled the later act." 111 F.3d at 1444. Similarly, in Hennegan, tour operators diverted customers from plaintiffs' souvenir shop. Although the tour operators had originally agreed to do so more than four years before plaintiffs filed suit, the Ninth Circuit held that the original agreement "did not immediately and permanently destroy the Hennegans' business, nor [was it] 'irrevocable, immutable, permanent and final.'" 787 F.2d at 1301. New and accumulating injury was inflicted upon the plaintiffs each time a defendant diverted [*1224] customers from plaintiffs' business. See also Airweld, Inc. v. Airco, Inc., 742 F.2d 1184, 1190 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding that active enforcement of an illegal tie is an independent act); Aurora Enterprises, Inc. v. National Broadcasting Co., Inc., 688 F.2d 689, 694 (9th Cir. 1982) (holding that active enforcement of the terms of an illegal contract is a new and independent act).

In contrast to Columbia Steel and Hennegan, the Ninth Circuit has found no continuing violation only in situations in which the act outside the limitations period "completely and permanently excluded [11] [the plaintiff] from the market." Hennegan, 787 F.2d at 1301. In AMF, 591 F.2d 68, four automobile manufacturers collectively refused to buy afterburners from the plaintiff outside the limitations period, deciding instead to manufacture their own afterburners. The AMF court reasoned that because the defendants required considerable lead time to integrate afterburners into new cars, the market for plaintiff's new car afterburners "effectively disappeared" then and for the foreseeable future at the point defendants decided to develop their own afterburners. In practice, the decision not to buy from plaintiff was "irrevocable, immutable, permanent, and final." 591 F.2d at 72. Because defendants' decision had the effect of permanently excluding plaintiff from the afterburner market, plaintiff's injury was complete at that time, and it suffered no additional harm within the limitations period.² See id.

[12] This case is more like Columbia Steel and Hennegan than AMF. Although Ohmeda's parts policy has been in place for at least 15 years, the policy is not a "permanent and final" decision that forever more compels Ohmeda to refuse to sell service restricted parts to ISOs. Ohmeda could always change its policy, as indeed it did in 1997 by establishing the QISO program, or make an exception for a particular ISO or a particular part. Unlike AMF, there is no technological impediment or necessary lead time associated with an amendment to the service restricted parts policy. Moreover, unlike the auto manufacturers' decision in AMF, the mere adoption of the parts policy did not "immediately and permanently destroy" plaintiffs' businesses or "completely and permanently exclude" plaintiffs from the relevant market. Hennegan, 787 F.2d at 1301. Instead, Ohmeda's policy incrementally limits plaintiffs' ability to expand their businesses. Thus, the effects of the policy are felt not all at once and for the foreseeable future, as was the case in AMF, but each time an ISO is unable to sign a hospital customer to a service contract because it cannot readily obtain [*13] Ohmeda parts.

Because Ohmeda's enforcement of its parts policy allegedly has caused new injury to plaintiffs within the four-year limitations period, plaintiffs' claims are not time-barred.³

² Defendant also relies on Pace Industries, 813 F.2d 234, but that case is limited to a particular kind of allegation. In Pace Industries, the only alleged antitrust violation was the defendants' prosecution of a lawsuit seeking to enforce an assertedly illegal contract. The plaintiff argued that "each phase" of the lawsuit "from the filing of [the] complaint through resolution of the final appeal constituted discrete overt acts which restarted the statute of limitations." Id. at 237. The Ninth Circuit rejected this argument, holding that the filing of the suit was the last overt act for statute of limitations purposes "where the alleged antitrust violation is the attempted enforcement of an illegal contract through the judicial process." Id.

III.

Plaintiffs claim that Ohmeda has monopolized the market for service on all anesthesia equipment, or, alternatively, on [*1225] Ohmeda anesthesia equipment in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. HN3 A monopoly claim under § 2 has two elements: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, [14] business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 2089, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\) (hereinafter Kodak I) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 1704, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 \(1966\)).

A. Monopoly Power in the Relevant Market.

HN4 Proof of monopoly power, which the Supreme Court has defined as "the power to control prices or exclude competition," see Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571, 86 S. Ct. at 1704 (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1005, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\)), may be by direct or circumstantial evidence. See Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 \(9th Cir. 1997\) (hereinafter Kodak II). Direct evidence of monopoly power is "evidence of restricted output and supracompetitive prices." Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (citing Federal Trade Comm'n v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 2018-19, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 \(1986\)). [15] To demonstrate monopoly power by circumstantial evidence, "a plaintiff must: (1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run." Kodak II, 125 F.3d at 1202 (quoting Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d 1421 at 1434). Plaintiffs rely on circumstantial evidence to establish their monopoly power claim.

In Kodak I, the Supreme Court addressed the antitrust implications of "aftermarkets," derivative markets for replacement parts and servicing. The Kodak plaintiffs were ISOs who serviced Kodak photocopiers and micrographics equipment. They sued Kodak for monopolizing the market for service on Kodak equipment by restricting access to replacement parts. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 456, 112 S. Ct. at 2076. The Court held that HN5 as an abstract matter of law and economics, a manufacturer could have monopoly power in the servicing of its own equipment even if it had no such power in the sale of that equipment, and further, that a manufacturer could achieve monopoly [16] power in servicing by tying service to parts. See id. at 481-82, 112 S. Ct. at 2089-90; see also Shapiro, "Aftermarkets and Consumer Welfare: Making Sense of Kodak," 63 Antitrust L.J. 483, 483-84 \(1995\). Two related principles follow from the Kodak analysis: HN6 first, parts and service can constitute separate markets, see Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 462-63, 481-82, 112 S. Ct. at 2079-80, 2090, and second, a single brand, by itself, can constitute a separate market for parts or service, see id. at 482, 112 S. Ct. at 2090.

In making its ruling, the Court reaffirmed that HN7 "the proper market definition . . . can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the 'commercial realities' faced by consumers." Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 482, 112 S. Ct. at 2090. The crucial inquiry in determining whether related products -- such as equipment and service -- constitute one or multiple markets is whether there is "sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide" one separately from the others. Id. at 462, 112 S. Ct. at 2080 (citing Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 21-22, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1563, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\)). [17]

[*1226] 1. The Relevant Market⁴

³ However, as counsel for plaintiffs acknowledged at oral argument, plaintiffs' recovery is limited to damages suffered within the four-year limitations period. See Hanover Shoe Co. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 502, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 2236, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 \(1968\); LaSalvia v. United Dairymen of Ariz., 804 F.2d 1113, 1119 \(9th Cir. 1986\).

⁴ HN8 -

Plaintiffs argue that the relevant market is for service of all anesthesia gas platforms, excluding monitors, or, alternatively, of Ohmeda gas platforms. Ohmeda contends that the relevant market is much broader, encompassing sales of gas systems, including monitors, as well as post-sale service. (See Willig Decl. at 11-12.) Ohmeda argues that there is no separate and distinct market for service of anesthesia gas systems, apart from sales, and thus that service cannot be a "relevant market" for antitrust purposes.⁵

[18] The Ninth Circuit has defined the "relevant market" as the group of sellers or producers who have the "actual or potential ability to deprive each other of significant levels of business." 51 F.3d at 1434 (quoting Thurman Indus., Inc. v. Pay 'N Pak Stores, Inc., 875 F.2d 1369, 1374 \(9th Cir. 1989\)). Market definition thus "focuse[s] on . . . whether consumers view the products as substitutes for each other." 51 F.3d at 1435 (citing Sullivan & Harrison, Understanding Antitrust and Its Economic Implications § 6.04[2] (1988)). "If consumers view the products as substitutes, the products are part of the same market." Id.

Plaintiffs have introduced sufficient evidence to create a triable issue as to whether service is a separate and distinct product from sales of anesthesia equipment and parts. Plaintiffs do not sell gas machines and monitors themselves, and have only recently begun to sell parts in conjunction with Ohmeda's QISO program. There is plainly enough consumer demand so that it is efficient for competitors such as the plaintiffs here to provide service without selling equipment or parts. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 462, 112 S. Ct. at 2080 [19] (noting that "service and parts have been sold separately in the past"). Ohmeda's claim that hospitals view the equipment and service markets as one because hospitals engage in life cycle pricing is placed in dispute by plaintiffs' evidence to the contrary.⁶

[20] Moreover, contrary to Ohmeda's assertion, that consumers may often buy equipment and service as a package does not necessarily combine those products into a single market. The Supreme Court held in Kodak I that parts and service could constitute separate markets even though "there is no demand for parts separate from service." Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 463, 112 S. Ct. at 2080. Otherwise, "we would be forced to conclude that there could never be separate markets, for example, for cameras and film, computers and software, or automobiles and tires." Id. And in tying cases under § 1 of the Sherman Act, the Court has "often found arrangements involving functionally linked products at least one of which is useless without the other to be prohibited tying devices." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 19 n.30, 104 S. Ct. at 1562 n.30.

[*1227] Plaintiffs have also created a triable issue as to whether the relevant market is service of Ohmeda machines rather than anesthesia systems in general, including those manufactured by other companies. In Kodak I, the Court held that the relevant market was service of Kodak copiers and not all copiers:

The relevant [21] market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to Kodak equipment owners. Because service and parts for Kodak equipment are not interchangeable with other manufacturers' service and parts, the relevant market from the Kodak equipment owner's perspective is composed of only those companies that service Kodak machines.

Although "ultimately what constitutes a relevant market is a factual determination for the jury," Kodak II, 125 F.3d at 1203, a court may grant summary judgment on a § 2 claim where no reasonable jury could find in favor of the plaintiff on the relevant market issue, see Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435.

⁵ Both parties assume for this motion that the relevant geographic market is the United States. (See Mot. at 33 n.100.)

⁶ Life cycle pricing is discussed later in greater detail as part of Ohmeda's attempt to distinguish Kodak I on the basis that its customers (1) were not surprised by any sudden changes to Ohmeda's parts sales policy, (2) make purchasing decisions in the equipment market based on costs throughout the life cycle of the equipment, and (3) were not locked in to continued use of Ohmeda machines by high switching costs. These factors are considered infra in Part III.A.3 as part of the evaluation of Ohmeda's market power, although they also relate to market definition. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 469 n.15, 112 S. Ct. at 2083 n.15 ("Whether considered in the conceptual category of 'market definition' or 'market power,' the ultimate inquiry is the same -- whether competition in the equipment market will significantly restrain competition in the service and parts markets.").

504 U.S. at 481-82, 112 S. Ct. at 2090. As was the case in Kodak I, service and parts for Ohmeda equipment are not interchangeable with other manufacturers' service and parts; presumably this is the reason Ohmeda insists on specialized training through the QISO program. In sum, the jury may find that from the perspective of an owner of Ohmeda equipment the relevant market for service consists only of organizations that service Ohmeda machines. If so, service of Ohmeda machines could constitute a relevant market for antitrust analysis.

Finally, the parties dispute whether service on the monitors attached to the gas delivery platform should be included as part of the relevant service market. There seems to be evidence pointing either way on this issue. On the one hand, all ISOs who service Ohmeda platforms also service the [22] monitors attached to the platforms. Ohmeda also services both its gas platforms and its monitors. On the other hand, monitors are often sold separately from gas machines, (see Leath Decl., P 8; Bernick Decl., P 5; Boldan Decl., P 5), and are normally upgraded more frequently than machines, (see Leath Decl., P 8). Most Ohmeda gas machines are designed specifically to function with any monitor, not just monitors manufactured by Ohmeda. (See id.) Ohmeda gas machine owners do not always purchase Ohmeda monitors. (See id.). Finally, many monitor manufacturers, such as Hewlett Packard and SpaceLabs, do not make gas machines. It is a reasonable inference that there are companies who service monitors but not gas platforms.

For these reasons, plaintiffs have created a triable issue as to whether the relevant antitrust market here is the market for service on Ohmeda anesthesia gas machines whether with or without monitors.

2. Market Power: Dominant Share of the Market

Next, plaintiffs must show that a jury could find that Ohmeda owns a dominant share of the relevant market for service on Ohmeda gas platforms. See Kodak II, 125 F.3d at 1206 (citing Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1434). [23] HN9 [↑] "A dominant share often carries with it the power to control output across the market, and thereby control prices. Courts generally require a 65% market share to establish a prima facie case of market power." Id. (citing American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 1133, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946) (internal citation omitted)).

Plaintiffs rely on three kinds of evidence to establish Ohmeda's share of the market for service of Ohmeda machines.⁷ First, they cite a 1994 survey which reported that 69% of hospitals that own Ohmeda machines contracted with Ohmeda for service. (See Pls' Exh. 469.) As plaintiffs concede, (see Opp'n at 45 n.220), this figure is not as impressive as it appears because some customers used more than one service provider. Ohmeda's actual market share for all available accounts according to this document is 58.06%. (See id.) Second, plaintiffs cite to internal Ohmeda reports which state that "of the [1228] 24,000 Ohmeda machines in use, 17,000 are on Ohmeda maintenance contracts," (Opp'n at 45 (citing Pls' Exh. 141)), which works out to a market share of 70.83%. Third, they offer the testimony of various former [24] Ohmeda employees as to Ohmeda's market share in regional service markets. (See, e.g., Lewis Decl., P 22 ("Our service market share on Ohmeda machines was nearly 100%").)⁸

Ohmeda disputes the accuracy of its internal market [25] share data, stating that the figures were casually compiled through broad estimates. (See Spence Depo. at 394, 405-06; see also Brandmeier Depo. at 104-05, 174-75; Brandmeier Decl., P 27-30.) Instead, Ohmeda offers three reports -- one compiled by an outside source -- showing that Ohmeda has achieved only between 40% and 48% of the market for service on all anesthesia equipment. (See Stoll Decl., P 32 & Exh. 8 (presentation by president of Ohmeda to potential purchasers describing

⁷ These statistics include monitor service as part of the relevant market; excluding monitors would likely increase Ohmeda's market share.

⁸ Plaintiffs argue that Ohmeda's share of the service market on its machines is actually higher than the data suggest because the data include customers who service their machines in-house and thus, according to plaintiffs, do not participate in the service market at all. (See Opp'n at 44-46.) But because the proper definition of an antitrust market turns on "whether consumers view the products as substitutes for each other," Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1435, in-house technicians may be viewed as part of the overall service market. In-house technicians are a substitute for outside service contracts, whether with Ohmeda or an ISO.

40% market share); Stoll Decl., P 26 & Exh. 3 (Bain & Company report commissioned by Ohmeda showing 48% market share); Willig Decl. at 78 & Exh. 13 (hospital survey prepared for Dr. Willig showing 47% share).) Ohmeda has not offered any evidence on its share of the market for service on Ohmeda machines alone.

Ohmeda's market share figures for servicing on all machines are actually consistent with plaintiffs' data concerning servicing on Ohmeda systems. Because Ohmeda only performs service on Ohmeda machines, its share of the market for service on those machines will equal its share of the total service market divided by its share of the equipment market.⁹ Ohmeda's share of the equipment sales [26] market is in dispute, but plaintiffs offer evidence that Ohmeda controls between 61%, (see Pls' Exh. 424 (1996 Booz-Allen and Hamilton study)), and 65%, (see Millstein Decl., Exh. A (1993 Frost & Sullivan report)), of the market. Ohmeda's own evidence, gathered in more informal surveys, shows a market share somewhere between 46%, (see Pls' Exh. 210 (blind survey conducted at 1992 American Society for Anesthesiology convention)), and "about" 50%, (Willig Decl. at 84 & Exh. 11 (1997 Willig telephone survey)).

Adopting a provisional figure of 55% for Ohmeda's share of the equipment market -- roughly halfway between plaintiffs' top figure of 65% and Ohmeda's bottom figure of 46% -- plaintiffs' claim that Ohmeda possesses 71% of the service market for Ohmeda machines [27] is consistent with Ohmeda's assertion that it controls 40% of the service market for all anesthesia machines.¹⁰ In light of this evidence, plaintiffs' claim that Ohmeda possesses a 71% share of the service market on its own machines, and thus controls a "dominant share of the market" under Kodak II, is triable.

Despite this market share evidence, Ohmeda insists that an examination of market realities reveals that it has no market [*1229] power. First, it asserts that it is losing money on its service business. (See Bourgart Decl., P 37 (showing 6.1% loss for fiscal 1997).) By itself, the fact that an accused monopolist is operating at a loss is not dispositive; an [28] aspiring monopolist might accept short-run losses as the price of eliminating competition in a given market. Ohmeda also claims that it has not raised its prices appreciably in recent years, (see Shrago Decl., P 30), behavior it asserts is inconsistent with monopoly power. Plaintiffs, however, may prove market power through circumstantial evidence and need not submit direct evidence of suprareactive prices. See Kodak II, 125 F.3d at 1202. Moreover, plaintiffs have introduced evidence suggesting that Ohmeda has levied hidden price increases on its customers by keeping its prices constant while reducing the amount of service its technicians actually provide. (See Lemanek Decl., P 9; Lewis Decl., P 14.) A triable issue thus exists as to whether and to what extent Ohmeda has increased its prices.

Although plaintiffs have come forward with sufficient evidence as to whether Ohmeda possesses a monopoly share of the service market for its own machines, they have not shown that Ohmeda possesses a dominant share of the market for service of anesthesia machines in general. Even if plaintiffs' most favorable market share data is accurate, Ohmeda possesses only 71% [29] of the market for service on its own machines, and only 65% of the equipment sales market. When the service-market percentage is multiplied by the overall equipment percentage, Ohmeda's share of the overall service market is only 46.15%, well short of the 65% threshold announced in Kodak II. Plaintiffs' monopolization claim can thus succeed only if the trier of fact accepts plaintiffs' position that the relevant market is the market for service on Ohmeda machines.

3. Market Power: the Kodak Aftermarket Issues

Ohmeda asserts the same defenses to the allegation of market power offered by Kodak in Kodak I: Ohmeda argues that even if it has monopoly power in the service market, it cannot exercise that power because of competition in the equipment market. Ohmeda contends that if it were to flex its muscles in the service market by raising its service prices above a competitive level, any resulting increase in profits would be more than offset by losses in the equipment market as customers switched to equipment with lower service costs. In Kodak I, the Supreme Court accepted the plausibility of this general principle, noting that HN10¹¹ the "extent to which one market prevents [30] exploitation of another market depends on the extent to which consumers will change their consumption of one product in response to a price change in another, i.e., the 'cross-elasticity of demand.'"Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 469, 112 S. Ct. at 2083 (citing United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 400, 76 S. Ct. at 1010, and 2 Areeda & Kaplow, Antitrust Analysis P 342(c) (1988)).

⁹ In other words, A (Ohmeda's share of the Ohmeda service market) will equal B (Ohmeda's share of the total service market) divided by C (Ohmeda's share of the equipment market, or the percentage of all machines that were made by Ohmeda).

¹⁰ Forty percent (Ohmeda's share of the service market on all machines, according to Ohmeda) divided by .55 (Ohmeda's share of the market for sales of anesthesia equipment) equals 72.73% (.40 / .55 = .7273). This figure is very close to the 71% share of the market for service on Ohmeda anesthesia machines that plaintiffs contend Ohmeda controls.

The Kodak I ISOs offered two possible and related reasons why equipment sales and service prices might not be "cross-elastic," and thus why equipment sales might not respond to an increase in service prices, as apparently they had not. First, consumers looking to purchase equipment might not have enough information or sophistication to engage in "life cycle pricing," the estimation of the total cost of a piece of equipment over the life of the machine, including parts and service. See id. at 473, 112 S. Ct. at 2085. Second, once the consumer has purchased the equipment, the cost of switching to another brand of equipment in response to high servicing charges might be prohibitive. See id. at 476, 112 S. Ct. at 2087. Consumers [31] who cannot readily switch to another brand -- whether because of the high capital outlay or for other reasons -- are "locked in" and "will tolerate some level of service-price increases." Id. "Under this [1230] scenario, a seller profitably could maintain supracompetitive prices in the aftermarket if the switching costs were high relative to the increase in service prices, and the number of locked-in customers were high relative to the number of new purchasers." Id.

Several circuit courts have found in Kodak I an implicit limitation on aftermarket antitrust claims to situations involving a change of policy or pricing as to after market parts and services. In PSI Repair Servs., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811 (6th Cir. 1997), the Sixth Circuit held that "an antitrust plaintiff cannot succeed on [an aftermarket] theory when the defendant has not changed its policy after locking in some of its customers, and the defendant has been otherwise forthcoming about its pricing structure and service policies." 104 F.3d at 820; see also Digital Equip. Corp. v. Uniq Digital Techs., Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 762-63 (7th Cir. 1996); Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 23 F.3d 14, 20 (1st Cir. 1994). [32] Ohmeda asserts that, unlike Kodak, it did not surprise its equipment customers by changing its parts policy or raising its servicing prices. It contends that it has not raised its prices appreciably in recent years, (see Shrago Decl., P 30), its parts policy remained constant between 1984 and 1997, (see Lewitzke Decl., PP 8-9), and the policy was public and widely-known by hospital customers, (see Taylor Decl., P 12).

The Honeywell court's interpretation of Kodak I, however, is not supported by the text or reasoning of that opinion. Kodak I does not hold that an aftermarket claim is contingent on a change in a manufacturer's parts or service policy; it simply acknowledges that Kodak's ability to make a policy change without suffering losses in the equipment market was evidence that the service market was not disciplined by competition in the equipment market. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 477, 112 S. Ct. at 2087-88 ("It is clearly reasonable to infer that Kodak has market power to raise prices and drive out competition in the aftermarket, since respondents offer direct evidence that Kodak did so.").¹¹

The Honeywell opinion assumes that information [33] costs "were particularly high in Kodak because Kodak adopted its parts-restrictive policy after numerous customers had already purchased Kodak copiers, thus creating a 'lock-in' effect." Honeywell, 104 F.3d at 818. But this has it backwards. The policy change did not create lock-in; instead, the existence of lock-in -- high switching costs -- made it both possible and economically desirable for Kodak to change its policy and exploit aftermarket consumers. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 476-77, 112 S. Ct. at 2087. Thus, the policy change did not create monopoly power; it was merely persuasive evidence that Kodak had market power in parts and engaged in monopolistic conduct in the aftermarket despite competition in the equipment market. To insist on a showing of a policy change confuses a symptom of market power and a lack of cross elasticity with the underlying condition itself.¹¹

¹¹ Acknowledging that the Kodak I Court "did not explicitly state the extent to which Kodak's change in policy affected the Court's analysis," the Sixth Circuit in Honeywell bases its interpretation of Kodak I on the following cryptic statement in a footnote:

[34] [*1231] It is noteworthy that in the Kodak I Court's lengthy discussion of information costs it never once makes reference to Kodak's change in policy. Information costs may be high, and a manufacturer may thus have considerable market power in the aftermarket, even in the absence of a change in policy. As the Kodak I Court pointed out, even if consumers were capable of acquiring the complex body of [life cycle pricing] information, they may choose not to do so. Acquiring the information is expensive. If the costs of service are small relative to the equipment price, or if consumers are more concerned about equipment capabilities than service costs, they may not find it cost efficient to compile the information.

Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 474-75, 112 S. Ct. at 2086.

Moreover, to the extent that the Ninth Circuit has considered the Honeywell aftermarket theory, it appears to have rejected it. In Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett Packard Co., 60 F.3d 1421 \(9th Cir. 1995\), Hewlett Packard allegedly refused to provide software support to its customers unless they agreed also to buy hardware service. Various ISOs sued, alleging an illegal tie. [35] The Ninth Circuit never examined whether competition in the equipment market might discipline the service aftermarkets. Neither party offered evidence that Hewlett Packard had recently changed its software service policy, and the court never indicated that a policy change was the crucial element of an aftermarket claim. Instead, in the marked absence of such evidence, the court held that Hewlett Packard's conduct could amount to an illegal tie. See id. at 1426. And when Kodak returned to the Ninth Circuit on remand, the Ninth Circuit did not identify Kodak's policy change as an essential element of the plaintiffs' aftermarket claim.¹² the dissent disagrees [with our conclusion in this case] based on its hypothetical case of a tie between equipment and service. "The only thing lacking" to bring this case within the hypothetical case, states the dissent, "is concrete evidence that the restrictive parts policy was generally known." But the dissent's "only thing lacking" is the crucial thing lacking -- evidence.

504 U.S. at 477 n.24, 112 S. Ct. at 2087 n.24. This enigmatic comment, designed as a brisk rejoinder, is too slender a reed on which to base a significant restriction on the Court's holding particularly when in its very next sentence, the Kodak I majority emphasizes that liability "depends on whether the equipment market prevents the exertion of market power in the [aftermarket]." The Sixth Circuit also attempts to limit Kodak I in light of Jefferson Parish, on the theory that unless a change of policy is understood as a critical component of the Kodak I decision, then Kodak I would implicitly overrule Jefferson Parish. But the two cases are so factually distinct that there is little or no tension between them. In the factual setting of Jefferson Parish, where there was no evidence of an increase in price or decrease in quality of the tied product -- anesthesiology services -- and no evidence that any consumer was forced to accept unwanted anesthesiology services, the Court was unwilling to base a finding of an illegal tying arrangement solely on alleged market imperfections, including information costs. Jefferson Parish is not addressed to the question of information costs in the context of after market services and the effect of competition in the equipment market.

Nor is much of the discussion in the Seventh Circuit's opinion in Digital consistent with Kodak I. The Digital court noted that Kodak I could not stand for the proposition that "there is a market in a firm's own products, even if it sells in vigorous competition," 73 F.3d at 762, because then Kodak I would have effectively overruled the Supreme Court's earlier decision in Jefferson Parish. In the first place, Kodak I does hold, and unambiguously, that a single brand can be a relevant antitrust market where "service and parts for [that brand] are not interchangeable with other manufacturers' service and parts." See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 482, 112 S. Ct. at 2090. It is doubtful that this holding is inconsistent with Jefferson Parish, in which the Court found that a hospital -- the "single brand" -- did not have market power because consumers could easily travel to other hospitals. In any event, Digital does not involve the specific question of aftermarket servicing that was the issue in Kodak I and is the issue here.

¹² Declining to reverse the jury's verdict for plaintiffs, the court stated that the record reflects the following [evidence of monopoly power in the service market]: Kodak has a 95% share of the Kodak high volume photocopier service market and an 88% share of the Kodak micrographic service market. Several ISOs withdrew from the Kodak service market or substantially restricted their service due to the lack of available parts, although other ISOs made substantial profits and continued to grow steadily. Some ISOs could not obtain any parts for newer models, indicating that the current ISO service market may last only as long as the pre-1986 models survive. Kodak equipment customers experienced the "lock-in" and information imperfections as described in [Kodak I]. Kodak's market share in the equipment market further limits choices by consumers. Finally, although Kodak criticizes their methodology, the [36] [*1232] Thus, the mere fact that Ohmeda has not recently changed its parts policy does not entitle it to summary judgment.

Applying Kodak I to the facts here, plaintiffs have presented sufficient evidence of information costs and "lock-in" to defeat Ohmeda's contention that competition in the equipment market restrains any market power that it might have in the aftermarket. Plaintiffs offer evidence that consumers in the anesthesia equipment market do not engage in lifecycle pricing. (See Lemanek Decl., P 19; Naylor Decl., P 19; Perkins Decl., P 8.) There is no dispute that service costs are small compared to the cost of a new anesthesia machine, which reduces a purchaser's incentive to collect life cycle information. And plaintiffs offer an additional reason why hospitals might not collect life cycle information, or might even buy Ohmeda machines despite high service costs: most gas machine users are anesthesiologists, who generally prefer to use the same brand of equipment on which they were trained. (See Leath Decl., P 6; Lesko Decl., P 19; Perkins Decl., P 9.) A hospital whose purchasing anesthesiologist was trained on Ohmeda equipment might not gather life cycle price information [37] because the convenience and comfort of the familiar Ohmeda machine is more important than some measure of service market savings. Finally, plaintiffs contend that Ohmeda did not inform its equipment customers of its restrictive parts policy prior to sales of equipment. (See Lesko Decl., P 16; Naylor Decl., P 21.)

The disparity in cost between anesthesia machines and service on those machines also increases the likelihood of lock-in. Anesthesia machines cost anywhere from $ 35,000 to $ 100,000, while a year's preventive maintenance contract costs approximately $ 940. (See J. McBride Decl., P 15). A hospital is unlikely to switch brands and incur thousands of dollars in capital expenses in order to save $ 20 to $ 40 per hour, (see Burke Decl., P 13; Foster Decl., P 13; Garrett Decl., P 15; Lueders Decl., P 13), in service costs, (see Naylor Decl., P 22; Horner Decl., P 8; Lemanek Decl., P 20; Lowe Decl., P 9). This is particularly true given the important role physician preference plays in brand selection. And because anesthesiology machines are expensive, each purchase must be approved months ahead of time as part of a hospital's capital budget for a given year. ([38] See Naylor Decl., P 19.) In his deposition, Mark Jones, an Ohmeda employee, conceded that it "can often take a number of years" for a hospital to switch all of its gas machines from one brand to another, (Jones Depo. at 519). Finally, plaintiffs assert that the lack of a market for used anesthesia equipment makes it harder for customers to switch brands. They aver that the trade-in value of a $ 40,000 anesthesia system is just $ 3,000.¹³ (See Horner Decl., P 6.)

Ohmeda offers evidence that points [39] in the other direction regarding life cycle pricing by customers and the existence of lock-in, (see, e.g., Bernick Decl., P 8; Boldan Decl., P 9; DeMur Decl., P 9 (consumers regularly calculate life cycle cost); Bernick Decl., P 12; DeMur Decl., P 13; Rongey Decl., P 15 (consumers would consider switching to another brand in the event of a substantial price increase)), but these are disputed issues for trial. Kodak I does not entitle Ohmeda to summary judgment on this claim.

4. Barriers to Entry and Potential to Increase Output

HN11 [+] Even if a § 2 plaintiff shows that the defendant has a 100% share of a given [*1233] market, it cannot make out a valid § 2 claim without showing barriers to market entry and expansion. See Kodak II, 125 F.3d at 1208. "Barriers to entry 'must be capable of constraining the normal operation of the market to the extent that the problem is unlikely to be self-correcting.'" Id. (quoting Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1439). Common entry barriers include patents

ISOs presented evidence that Kodak earns supracompetitive profits in service, and overall. Substantial evidence supports the jury's verdict on the issue of Kodak's service market monopoly.

Kodak II, 125 F.3d at 1212.

¹³ Ohmeda replies by noting that this figure applies only to machines traded in at the end of their useful lives. (See Horner Decl., P 6.) Ohmeda asserts that a newer used machine would command significantly more on the trade-in market, but they provide no testimony or evidence to support this specific assertion. Ohmeda does offer general testimony about the "lively" market for used anesthesia systems. (See Brandmeier Decl., P 16; Willig Decl. at 89.) This is an issue for the fact finder to resolve.

and other intellectual property licenses, control of essential or superior resources, entrenched buyer preferences, high capital entry costs and economies of scale. [40] See id.

In their declarations, plaintiffs assert that hospitals will not buy service from ISOs who do not maintain a full inventory of Ohmeda parts. (See Burke Decl., PP 19-21 & Exh. B; Garrett Decl., P 20; Hoyt Decl., PP 16-17; Horner Decl., P 19; Wier Decl., P 7; Lueders Decl., P 14.) Robert Burke, the owner of plaintiff Safety Anesthesia Equipment Services ("SAES"), states that "as a result of Ohmeda's restrictive and anticompetitive policy, SAES has been prohibited from expanding its business beyond those customers with whom I have established a business relationship." (Burke Decl., P 20.) Burke names six specific hospitals that have refused to contract with SAES because it cannot guarantee a full inventory of Ohmeda parts, and estimates that Ohmeda's parts policy costs him at least $ 130,000 per year. (See id., P 21.) Burke also submits a bid request from a hospital that requires ISO bidders to "show proof of parts stock relevant to each item listed on bid requisition" and "provide exact model loaners to the hospital if the hospital machine is down past one day of operation" in order to obtain the hospital's service contract. (Id., Exh. B at 2.)

Similarly, Daniel [41] Coholan, president of plaintiff De-Tec, Inc., contends that De-Tec has been unable to expand its business into the Ohmeda service market because of Ohmeda's policy. (See Coholan Decl., P 17.) Coholan also names six hospitals that would have contracted with De-Tec for service on Ohmeda machines were it not for Ohmeda's restrictive parts policy. (See id., P 18.) Gerald Hoyt, president of plaintiff Bio-Medic, Inc., also alleges that Ohmeda's parts policy has prevented Bio-Medic from expanding its service business beyond its existing customer base, (see Hoyt Decl., P 21), and names five hospitals that would have contracted with Bio-Medic had Ohmeda been willing to sell parts directly to ISOs, (see id., P 22).

Plaintiffs concede they are generally able to obtain service restricted parts on the gray market, although they are required to pay up to 25% more than Ohmeda's list price. (See Garrett Decl., P 19; L. McBride Decl., P 19; see also Foster Decl., P 17; Keogh Decl., P 16.) Plaintiffs assert, however, that spending so much time, energy and money locating parts through alternative channels prevents them from increasing their output. (See Garrett Decl., P 19; [42] Keogh Decl., P 16; Lueders Decl., P 18.) And although Ohmeda has recently begun to allow ISOs to purchase parts directly under the QISO program, plaintiffs assert that the program takes many years to complete, is prohibitively expensive, and can be canceled by Ohmeda at any time without notice. (See Ardrey Decl., P 24; Coholan Decl., PP 23, 25-26; Foster Decl., PP 23-24; L. McBride Decl., P 24.) This is enough evidence of barriers to expansion to avoid summary judgment.

B. Willful Acquisition or Maintenance of Monopoly Power

HN12[] A § 2 monopoly plaintiff must also show monopolistic conduct by the defendant, which is the use of monopoly power "to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor." Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 482-83, 112 S. Ct. at 2090 (quoting United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107, 68 S. Ct. 941, 945, 92 L. Ed. 1236 (1948)). Plaintiffs assert that the following actions taken by Ohmeda have injured competition in the Ohmeda service market: (1) refusing to sell service restricted parts to hospitals without a signed [*1234] waiver letter; (2) refusing to sell parts or manuals to ISOs and insisting that [43] OEMs who manufacture Ohmeda parts do the same; (3) disparaging ISOs to end users; and (4) establishing the allegedly unfair QISO program. As Ohmeda concedes, plaintiffs' evidence here is similar to the evidence of monopolistic acts introduced by the Kodak I plaintiffs.¹⁴ HN13[] Where a plaintiff presents evidence of exclusionary action designed "to maintain [a] parts monopoly and [use of] control over parts to strengthen [a] monopoly share of [a] service market," liability turns on whether legitimate business justifications can explain the defendant's actions. See id. at 483, 112 S. Ct. at 2091.

¹⁴ Kodak also refused to sell parts to ISOs, controlled sales of parts by OEMs, pressured its customers not to purchase service from ISOs, and restricted the availability of used Kodak machines. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 456-48, 112 S. Ct. at 2076-78.

C. Legitimate Business Justifications

Even where a plaintiff shows monopoly power and monopolistic conduct, the defendant may not be [44] liable under § 2 if its conduct is excused by a legitimate business justification. See Kodak II, 125 F.3d 1195 at 1212 (citing Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 483, 112 S. Ct. at 2090-91). HN14 When the defendant offers a legitimate business justification, the plaintiff may rebut that justification "by demonstrating either that the justification does not legitimately promote competition or that the justification is pretextual." Id. Here, Ohmeda offers four justifications for its restrictive parts policies: (1) promoting patient safety, (2) reducing potential liability, (3) preserving its reputation, and (4) protecting its investment in its equipment and parts business. (See Mot. at 62-68.)

All four of these justifications are essentially restatements of each other. By promoting patient safety, Ohmeda can avoid liability. By avoiding liability, it can avoid a bad reputation. By avoiding liability and maintaining its good reputation, Ohmeda can avoid commercial damage to its equipment and parts business. In Kodak I, Kodak offered a similar business justification -- maintaining high quality service and avoiding blame for equipment breakdowns. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 483, 112 S. Ct. at 2091. [45] The Ninth Circuit has held that the quality-control justification "is suspect." High Technology Careers v. San Jose Mercury News, 996 F.2d 987, 991 (9th Cir. 1993); see also Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of North America, 833 F.2d 1342, 1349-52 (9th Cir. 1987) (describing "skepticism" with which courts have viewed the justification). In Kodak I, in rebuttal to Kodak's legitimate business justifications, the ISOs presented evidence that they provided quality service and that some Kodak equipment owners preferred ISO service to Kodak service. The Court found that this evidence was "sufficient to raise a genuine issue of fact" as to the legitimacy of the justification. 504 U.S. at 483-84, 112 S. Ct. at 2091. In this case, plaintiffs have offered similar evidence that some Ohmeda hardware owners consider ISO service to be both safe and superior to Ohmeda service. (See Leath Decl., P 11; Lowe Decl., PP 9-10; Naylor Decl., PP 15-16; Perkins Decl., PP 9-12; Wier Decl., P 7.)

The respondents in Kodak I also argued that Kodak's quality-control justification was pretextual. Specifically, they pointed out that the quality justification appears [46] inconsistent with its thesis that consumers are knowledgeable enough to lifecycle price Kodak claims the exclusive-service contract is warranted because customers would otherwise blame Kodak equipment for breakdowns resulting from ISO service. Thus, Kodak simultaneously claims that its customers are sophisticated enough to make complex and subtle lifecycle-pricing decisions, and yet too obtuse to distinguish which breakdowns are due to bad equipment and which are due to bad service.

Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 484, 112 S. Ct. at 2091.

Ohmeda echoes Kodak's argument in its discussion of the need to preserve its [*1235] reputation, stating that "in any given case, the cause of the problem may be inadequate service by a third party service provider, but to physicians and other clinicians whose work depends on the availability of the system, the problem may appear to be with the equipment or its design rather than with the service provider." (Mot. at 66-67.) In the anesthesia equipment market, however, it is these "physicians and clinicians" who are primarily responsible for making purchasing and service decisions regarding equipment. (See Bernick Decl., P 3; Boldan [47] Decl., P 4; DeMur Decl., P 4; Rongey Decl., P 4.) Like Kodak, Ohmeda portrays its customers as sophisticated when making buying decisions but undiscerning when apportioning blame for breakdowns.

On this record, plaintiffs have established a triable issue as to the legitimacy of Ohmeda's business justifications.

D. Antitrust Injury

HN15 Finally, a § 2 plaintiff must establish antitrust injury by showing that its injury flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Lucas Automotive, 140 F.3d 1228 at 1233 (quoting Cargill, 479 U.S. 104 at 113, 107 S. Ct. at 491). Plaintiffs have done so. To begin with, the asserted antitrust violation in this case is Ohmeda's restrictive parts policy, and plaintiffs have submitted adequate evidence that they have lost service business as the result of that policy. Plaintiffs have introduced testimony from Ohmeda equipment owners who, because of Ohmeda's parts policy, use Ohmeda service despite their preference for ISO service, (see Lowe Decl., P 6-9; Naylor Decl., PP 13, 16; Oltz Decl., PP 12-13; Wier Decl., P 7), and who believe that ISO service is of higher quality than Ohmeda service, (see Leath Decl., [48] P 11; Naylor Decl., P 16; Wier Decl., P 7). Plaintiffs also offer testimony from ISOs who claim that they have lost substantial, specified business because of Ohmeda's parts policies. (See Coholan Decl., PP 18-19; Foster Decl., PP 18-19; Garrett Decl., PP 19-20; Migliaccio Decl., P 10; Nichols Decl., P 21.) This is a sufficient showing that plaintiffs' injuries are caused by Ohmeda's challenged parts policies.

In response, Ohmeda argues that, far from harming competition in the service market, its policies have actually had procompetitive effects. Because of these positive effects, Ohmeda contends that, even if its parts policy has harmed plaintiffs, it has not done the sort of harm that the antitrust laws were enacted to prevent. Specifically, Ohmeda argues that even if its policies have increased prices to supracompetitive levels and restricted competition in the service market, these alleged harms actually benefit plaintiffs: if Ohmeda charges artificially high prices, the argument goes, plaintiffs are able either to make more money by charging higher prices themselves or to boost their market share by undercutting Ohmeda, and if Ohmeda's policies weed competitors out of the [49] market by decreasing competition, the remaining service firms, such as plaintiffs, will be able to increase their market share and raise their prices. (See Mot. at 86-87.)

If courts adopted such backwards economic logic, a plaintiff would never be able to establish antitrust injury. Plaintiffs allege that Ohmeda is only able to increase its own prices and restrict competition by excluding ISOs such as plaintiffs from large segments of the service market. This is precisely the sort of harm to consumer welfare and competition that the antitrust laws address. Plaintiffs have established a triable issue as to whether they suffered antitrust injury.

E. Summary

Ohmeda is entitled to summary judgment on plaintiffs' claim of monopolization with respect to the market for service on all anesthesia systems because plaintiffs have not established that Ohmeda has monopoly [*1236] power in that market. Ohmeda is not entitled to summary judgment on plaintiffs' monopolization claim regarding the market for service on Ohmeda machines.

IV.

Next, plaintiffs contend that Ohmeda attempted to monopolize the market for service on anesthesia equipment, or, alternatively, Ohmeda anesthesia equipment. HN16 [50] To make out an attempted monopolization claim under § 2, plaintiffs must show "(1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving "monopoly power"; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1433 (citing McGlinch v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988)). As noted above, plaintiffs have established triable issues as to three of the four elements of the claim: anticompetitive conduct, monopoly power in the service market, and antitrust injury.

The remaining element, specific intent, can be inferred where the defendant's asserted anticompetitive conduct is "predatory or clearly in restraint of competition such as a per se violation under section 1." Thurman Indus., 875 F.2d at 1378 (citing Blanton v. Mobil Oil Corp., 721 F.2d 1207, 1214 (9th Cir. 1983)). Plaintiffs have come forward with evidence that Ohmeda refused to sell service restricted parts to ISOs, refused to sell such parts directly to end users without a signed waiver of liability, and disparaged [51] the quality of ISO service. Faced with similar evidence, the Kodak I Court permitted an attempt claim to go forward at the summary judgment stage, see 504 U.S. at 485-86, 112 S. Ct. at 2092, and the Kodak II panel upheld the subsequent jury verdict on that claim, see 125 F.3d at 1212 (upholding both § 2 verdicts). Accordingly, plaintiffs have offered enough evidence to support an attempt claim, and Ohmeda is not entitled to summary judgment.

Moreover, the minimum required showing of market share on an attempt claim is "a lower quantum than the minimum showing required in an actual monopolization case." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1438. Although most courts have held that a market share of 30% is too low to establish market share for purposes of an attempt claim, see id., the Rebel Oil court found a triable issue as to market share where the defendant had a 44% share of a market with high barriers to entry and expansion, see id. at 1438 & n.10.

As noted above, plaintiffs have introduced evidence showing that Ohmeda's share of the market for service on all anesthesia machines is about 46.15%. Plaintiffs [52] have also offered evidence that Ohmeda's parts policy prevents them from expanding their output. (See Burke Decl., PP 19-21 & Exh. B; Garrett Decl., P 20; Hoyt Decl., PP 16-17; Horner Decl., P 19; Wier Decl., P 7.) This is sufficient under Rebel Oil to create a triable issue as to whether Ohmeda attempted to monopolize the market for service on anesthesia machines generally as well as the service market for Ohmeda machines.

Accordingly, Ohmeda is not entitled to summary judgment on either of plaintiffs' attempt claims.

V.

Plaintiffs allege that Ohmeda has illegally tied a customer's purchase of Ohmeda service to the sale of Ohmeda equipment and replacement parts in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. HN17 [↑] "A tying arrangement is a device used by a competitor with market power in one market (for the "tying" product) to extend its market power into an entirely distinct market (for the "tied" product). To accomplish this, the competitor agrees to sell the tying product . . . only on the condition that its customers also purchase the tied product." [Datagate, \[*1237\] 60 F.3d at 1423](#).¹⁵

[53] HN18 [↑]

To make out a tying claim, plaintiffs must establish that: (1) Ohmeda has tied two products or services sold in different markets; (2) Ohmeda has market power in the tying product, and (3) the tie affects a "not insubstantial volume of commerce." 60 F.3d at 1423-24. Plaintiffs argue that Ohmeda has illegally tied the purchase of Ohmeda service to the sale of Ohmeda parts. Ohmeda concedes that the alleged tie affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce, but contends that plaintiffs have not established the other two elements of their tying claim.

A. Tie-In Between Two Products

To defeat Ohmeda's motion for summary judgment on the tying claims, plaintiffs must come forward with evidence that (1) service is a product distinct from equipment and parts, and (2) Ohmeda has tied the sale of those products. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 462, 112 S. Ct. at 2079-80. Plaintiffs have presented enough evidence to establish a material issue as to whether the market for service is distinct from the market for parts.¹⁶

¹⁵ In their complaint, plaintiffs assert both a per se tying claim and a tying claim under the rule of reason. (See Compl., PP 100-111.) As the Sixth Circuit noted in Honeywell, however, these theories have merged in recent years. See Honeywell, 104 F.3d at 815 n.2. As applied by the Supreme Court in Kodak I, per se tying analysis involves detailed factual inquiries into the defendant's market power and whether the defendant's challenged conduct has procompetitive effects, see Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 478-79, 112 S. Ct. at 2088-89, which looks more like traditional rule of reason methodology than a per se rule. The Supreme Court never mentions the terms "per se" or "rule of reason" in its Kodak I opinion. Professors Areeda, Elhauge and Hovenkamp explain the apparent merger of the two tying theories by stating that "the per se rule against tying is 'per se' in only one respect -- namely, dispensing with proof of anticompetitive effects... ." 10 Areeda, Elhauge & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1760e, at 372 (1996). The two theories may be analyzed together on this motion.

¹⁶ As was the case with the distinction between the equipment sales market and the service market, there is sufficient customer demand for market participants to provide service but not parts and vice versa. Like Kodak I, there is evidence in the record in this case "that service and parts have been sold separately in the past and still are sold separately to self-service equipment owners." Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 462, 112 S. Ct. at 2080. Many, if not most, ISOs do not sell parts and would presumably not need to if Ohmeda would make service restricted parts readily available to equipment owners.

[54] Ohmeda argues, however, that plaintiffs have not established that it tied the purchase of Ohmeda service to the sale of Ohmeda parts. Ohmeda contends that it has only provided incentives for customers to buy Ohmeda service by refusing to sell parts directly to ISOs or to hospitals without trained in-house biomeds or a signed waiver letter. It asserts that these incentives, although potentially powerful, do not amount to a tie because it has not explicitly limited the sale of parts to purchasers of Ohmeda service.

But as Datagate makes clear, the "essential characteristic' of a per se illegal tying arrangement is that the seller makes use of its market power in the tying product to coerce the buyer to purchase the tied product." 60 F.3d 1421 at 1426 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12-13, 104 S. Ct. at 1558). And in an earlier opinion during the Datagate litigation, the Ninth Circuit described a tie as a relationship in which the seller "coerced to some extent the purchaser into buying the tied product." Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 941 F.2d 864, 870 \(9th Cir. 1991\) (emphasis added). In Datagate, summary judgment [55] was inappropriate because the plaintiff had shown that the defendant's restrictive policies "precluded [customers] from considering other providers of hardware service." Datagate, 60 F.3d at 1426. Here, plaintiffs have offered testimony from customers who would prefer to use ISOs to service their Ohmeda machines but do not because of defendant's restrictive parts policy. (See Leath Decl., P 11; [*1238] Lowe Decl., PP 9-10; Naylor Decl., PP 15-16; Perkins Decl., PP 9-12; Wier Decl., P 7.) This is a sufficient showing to establish that Ohmeda "coerced to some extent" hospitals into buying Ohmeda service instead of ISO service, and is thus sufficient evidence of a tying relationship under Datagate. See also Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 462-63, 112 S. Ct. at 2079-80.

B. Market Power in the Tying Product

Plaintiffs contend that the tying product in this case is replacement parts for Ohmeda machines and that Ohmeda has market power in this market. (See Compl., PP 101-02.) Market power under § 1 is a more lenient standard than monopoly power under § 2. See Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 481, 112 S. Ct. at 2089-90. HN19 ↑ The Supreme Court defines [56] market power as "the power 'to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.'" Id. at 464, 112 S. Ct. at 2080 (quoting Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 14, 104 S. Ct. at 1559). Generally, market power is inferred from a seller's possession of a dominant share of the market. Id. at 464, 112 S. Ct. at 2081.

Both parties have assumed throughout the litigation, and the court sees no reason to doubt, that Ohmeda has a dominant share of the market for its own parts. Although plaintiffs are able to buy service restricted parts from sources other than Ohmeda on a secondary gray market, (see Shrago Decl., P 12; Pepper Decl., P 8; Lewitzke Decl., P 9), there is no indication that the gray market occupies anything more than a small fraction of the overall parts market. It is undisputed that Ohmeda has a monopoly over service restricted parts and that it restricts its OEMs from selling parts directly to customers. (See Coholan Decl., P 16; Hoyt Decl., P 18; Lueders Decl., P 16.) This is sufficient evidence to establish market power for purposes of § 1. Cf. Kodak II, 125 F.3d at 1207 (holding that defendant [57] had power in market for its own parts where it manufactured 30% of parts itself, controlled an additional 20-25% through tooling clauses and discouraged self-servicing and resale of parts by end users, even though replacement parts were not "absolutely unavailable" from other sources). Summary judgment is inappropriate as to plaintiffs' tying claims.

VI.

Finally, plaintiffs contend that Ohmeda and its OEMs engaged in a group boycott in violation of § 1 by conspiring to refuse to sell parts to ISOs. Plaintiffs base this claim on the tooling clause provision in the contracts between Ohmeda and its OEMs that bars the OEMs from manufacturing service restricted parts for anyone other than Ohmeda.

Plaintiffs advance both a per se boycott claim and a boycott claim under the rule of reason. Under the Supreme Court's recent decision in Nynex Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510, 119 S. Ct. 493 \(1998\), however, the per se rule is limited "in the boycott context to cases involving horizontal agreements among direct competitors." 119 S. Ct. at 498. The asserted boycott in this case does not involve a horizontal agreement among competitors; instead, the allegation [58] involves a purely vertical agreement between Ohmeda and each of its various OEMs. Ohmeda is not a competitor of its OEMs. And the OEMs who may be competitors have not come to an agreement with one another but individually with Ohmeda. In this circumstance, plaintiffs' per se boycott claim must be dismissed.

Plaintiffs may still assert a boycott claim under the rule of reason. Ohmeda argues, however, that plaintiffs have not offered sufficient evidence that Ohmeda conspired with OEMs to deny ISOs access to replacement parts. Instead, Ohmeda contends, it unilaterally imposed the tooling clause on its OEMs. A plaintiff asserting a § 1 claim must offer evidence "that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others 'had a conscious commitment [*1239] to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective,'" Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1471, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\), including evidence that "tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and [alleged co-conspirators] were acting independently." Id. at 766, 104 S. Ct. 1471.

Plaintiffs do not submit any direct evidence that Ohmeda and the [59] OEMs jointly agreed to adopt the tooling clause and boycott parts sales to ISOs, such as declarations from the OEMs.¹⁷ [60] Plaintiffs' only evidence of a group boycott is the tooling clause itself. While this may be circumstantial evidence of an agreement to a common scheme, where a § 1 plaintiff presents only circumstantial evidence of a conspiracy, "defendant may discharge its initial summary judgment burden by proffering a plausible and justifiable alternative interpretation of its conduct that rebuts the plaintiff's allegation of conspiracy." American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 788-89 \(9th Cir. 1996\) (quoting T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 632 \(9th Cir. 1987\)) (internal quotation marks omitted).¹⁸

¹⁷ In fact, the inadmissible hearsay evidence plaintiffs have offered supports the opposite conclusion. Several plaintiffs testify that various OEMs have told them that although they would like to sell service restricted parts directly to ISOs, Ohmeda will not let them. (See Foster Decl., P 16; Garrett Decl., P 18; J. McBride Decl., P 5.) The alleged statements by OEMs are out-of-court statements offered for their truth -- i.e., to prove that Ohmeda coerced OEMs into a group boycott - and as such are hearsay, see Fed. R. Evid. 801(c), and are inadmissible to defeat a motion for summary judgment, see Anheuser-Busch v. Natural Beverage Distributors, 69 F.3d 337, 345 n.4 (9th Cir. 1995), unless they fall within an exception to the hearsay rule, see, e.g., Fed. R. Evid. 801(d), 803, 804. Plaintiffs do not suggest any potentially applicable hearsay exceptions and none is readily apparent.

In any event, although plaintiffs offer the statements to prove the existence of a common scheme, they actually point to the opposite conclusion. The fact that OEMs would sell service restricted parts directly to ISOs but for Ohmeda's insistence on the tooling clause tends to prove that the tooling clause was Ohmeda's unilateral creation rather than the result of concerted action between Ohmeda and its OEMs. As noted below, it would make no economic sense for OEMs to agree to the tooling clause if they had any choice in the matter, because the tooling clause restricts their ability to sell their products and earn revenue.

¹⁸ In one case, the Ninth Circuit appeared to create another requirement for a defendant seeking summary judgment in a § 1 case: proof that "permitting an inference of conspiracy would pose a significant deterrent to beneficial procompetitive behavior." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litig., 906 F.2d 432, 440 \(9th Cir. 1990\). The Ninth Circuit has not always imposed the requirement in subsequent cases. See American Ad Management, 92 F.3d at 788-89.

The significant deterrent requirement has its origins in the Supreme Court's opinion in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\). In Matsushita, the Court "emphasized that courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetitive conduct." 475 U.S. at 593, 106 S. Ct. at 1360. "Thus, mistaken inferences in cases such as this one are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Id. at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1360. Here, the inference plaintiffs ask the court to draw -- that OEMs agreed with Ohmeda to adopt a tooling clause that substantially limited the OEMs' sales opportunities -- is implausible on its face, and plaintiffs have offered no evidence to suggest otherwise.

Moreover, plaintiffs do not dispute that tooling clauses are standard throughout the medical anesthesia equipment industry and have the effect of protecting Ohmeda's proprietary service restricted parts from counterfeiting. There is no question that Ohmeda's ability to protect its proprietary parts enhances its ability to compete in the equipment sales market. Inferring a conspiracy from the tooling clause would restrict Ohmeda's ability to protect its proprietary parts and thus hamper this beneficial [61] [*1240] Ohmeda's assertion that the tooling clause was the result of its independent action and not a conspiracy is a "plausible and justifiable alternative interpretation" of the facts of this case. Ohmeda has every incentive to protect its proprietary parts by requiring its OEMs to agree not to sell those parts to ISOs. The OEMs, on the other hand, would gain nothing by agreeing to boycott ISOs and forego thousands of dollars in potential sales every year. Commercial common sense supports an inference that Ohmeda presented its OEMs with a form contract, including a tooling clause, that they were free either to sign or to reject but not to modify. Simple acquiescence to a form contract is normally not the sort of concerted action that constitutes an "agreement" under § 1. See Matrix Essentials v. Emporium Drug Mart, Inc., 988 F.2d 587, 594 (5th Cir. 1993); American Airlines v. Christensen, 967 F.2d 410, 412-15 (10th Cir. 1992). Plaintiffs offer no evidence to support the contrary -- and counterintuitive -- conclusion that the OEMs bargained for or participated in the drafting or adoption of a tooling clause that has the direct effect of limiting their potential [62] profits.

Plaintiffs are free to offer evidence of the tooling clause and its effect on competition in the service market in support of their monopolization, attempted monopolization and tying claims. But because they have not established that the tooling clause was the product of concerted action between Ohmeda and its OEMs, plaintiffs may not bring an independent group boycott claim based on the clause.

VII.

In Kodak I, the Supreme Court acknowledged that, in the end, Kodak's aftermarket arguments might prove to be correct. "It may be that [Kodak] parts, service, and equipment are components of one unified market, or that the equipment market does discipline the aftermarkets so that all three are priced competitively overall, or that any anti-competitive effects of Kodak's behavior are outweighed by its competitive effects." Kodak I, 504 U.S. at 486, 112 S. Ct. at 2092. The same may be true here, but the court cannot conclude that Ohmeda is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law on all of plaintiffs' claims.

The motion for summary judgment is GRANTED as to plaintiffs' claim of monopolization of the service market for all anesthesia machines and [63] as to the per se and rule of reason group boycott claims. The motion is DENIED as to all other claims.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: 4 August 1999.

DAVID F. LEVI

United States District Judge

End of Document

Rhode Island Laborers' Health & Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island

August 11, 1999, Decided ; August 11, 1999, Filed

C.A. No. 97-500L

Reporter

99 F. Supp. 2d 174 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12400 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,936

RHODE ISLAND LABORERS' HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, by and through its Trustees, on behalf of all other similarly situated Health & Welfare Funds in the state of Rhode Island, Plaintiffs v. PHILIP MORRIS, INC.; R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY; BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION; B.A.T. RILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY; LIGGETT GROUP, INC; THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY; THE COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH-U.S.A., INC.; THE TOBACCO INSTITUTE, INC.; and HILL & KNOWLTON, INC., Defendants Disposition: [1] Recommended that Defendants' Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss granted as to all of Fund's claims.

Core Terms

antitrust, smoking, smokers, damages, proximate cause, illnesses, costs, injuries, antitrust claim, tobacco use, tobacco-related, contingencies, recommend, initiatives, speculation, cigarette, argues, alleged misconduct, tobacco company, anti trust law, addictive, alleges, tobacco, safer, misrepresentations, remote, Funds, household purposes, tobacco product, deny a motion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 [] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) provides for dismissal of an action if that action fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The degree of specificity with which the operative facts must be stated in the pleadings varies depending on the case's context. In deciding a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, the court must accept the well-pleaded factual averments of the complaint as true, and construe these facts in the light most flattering to plaintiff's cause. Further, the court must deny a motion to dismiss if the allegations of the complaint permit relief to be granted on any theory, even one not expressly stated therein. Plaintiff is required to set forth factual allegations, either direct or inferential, respecting each material element necessary to sustain recovery under some actionable legal theory.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN2 [] Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

It is only when conclusions are logically compelled, or at least supported, by the stated facts, that is, when the suggested inference rises to what experience indicates is an acceptable level of probability, that conclusions become facts for pleading purposes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN3 Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

The court has the discretion to impose heightened specificity requirements when it is concerned about plaintiff's ability to make out a cause of action based on the events as narrated in the complaint. If despite the opportunity to fine-tune a complaint, especially at the court's direction, a naked conclusion, unanchored in any meaningful set of factual averments is the asserted basis for relief, dismissal may follow.

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN4 Securities Law, RICO Actions

Both R.I. Gen. Laws § 7-15-4\(c\) and 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\) provide for civil recovery for any person injured in his or her business or property by reason of a predicate RICO offense.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Legislation, Interpretation

The Rhode Island Antitrust Act, R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-1 et seq., is to be construed in harmony with judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust laws .

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

HN6 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

18 U.S.C. S. § 1964\(c\)(RICO) and 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) (antitrust) both characterize proper plaintiff as one who has suffered an injury to business or property by reason of a violation of the laws predicate substantive provisions. Both also require that the alleged violation of the law be a proximate cause of the injury suffered. Proximate causation requires that there be some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. Plaintiff who complains of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by defendant's acts generally stands at too remote a distance to recover.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN7 [+] Private Actions, Standing

To determine whether an injury is too remote to allow standing under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act and antitrust law, the United States Supreme Court has developed a three factor test which requires the court to ask the following questions: (1) Are there more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct who can be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general? (2) Will it be difficult to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's damages attributable to defendant's wrongful conduct? And (3) will the court have to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries?

Torts > ... > Damages > Collateral Source Rule > General Overview

HN8 [+] Damages, Collateral Source Rule

Rhode Island's collateral source rule prevents plaintiff's damages from being reduced to the extent he or she has been reimbursed for medical expenses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Relief From Judgments > Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding > Fraud, Misconduct & Misrepresentation

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Elements of Proof > Causation & Proximate Causation

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

HN9 [+] Grounds for Relief from Final Judgment, Order or Proceeding, Fraud, Misconduct & Misrepresentation

Both the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act and the antitrust laws have been interpreted to incorporate common-law principles of causation. Contingencies, conjecture, and speculation will not support a finding of proximate cause.

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN10 [+] Types of Contracts, Lease Agreements

A private cause of action under the Rhode Island Unfair Trade Practices Act (Act), R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-5.2 (1992), exists for any person who purchases or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by another person of a method, act, or practice declared unlawful by the Act.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

To prevail on a fraudulent misrepresentation claim, plaintiff must be able to prove that he relied on defendant's misrepresentation and that such reliance was the proximate cause of his injury.

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Elements > Duty > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Elements, Causation

A special duty claim is essentially a negligence claim and, therefore, requires proof of the underlying elements of a negligence claim, including proximate cause.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: MICHAEL SPENCER, ESQ., MILLBERG, WEISS, BERSHAD, HYNES & LERACH, NEW YORK, NEW YORK.

For Plaintiff: GEORGE L. SANTOPIETRO, ESQ., COIA & LePORE, LTD., PROVIDENCE, RI.

For Defendant: DAVID A. WOLLIN, ESQ., ADLER, POLLOCK & SHEREHAN, P.C., PROVIDENCE, RI.

For Defendant: KENNETH J. PARSIGIAN, ESQ., GOODWIN, PROCTER & HOAR, LLP, BOSTON, MA.

Judges: Robert W. Lovegreen, United States Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: Robert W. Lovegreen

Opinion

[Class Action]

[*180] REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Robert W. Lovegreen, United States Magistrate Judge

Rhode Island Laborers' Health & Welfare Fund ("Plaintiff" or "Fund") has brought this proposed class action against a number of the leading tobacco companies, their research affiliates, and a public relations firm ("Defendants")¹. The Fund alleges violation of both the federal and state Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Acts ("RICO"), violation of federal and state antitrust law, fraud, failure to perform a special duty, and violation of the Rhode Island Unfair Trade Practice and Consumer Protection Act ("RIUTPA"). Defendants [*2] have moved to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In the alternative, Defendants have moved to dismiss for failure to join a party under Rule 19 pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(7). Plaintiff has opposed both motions.

This matter has been referred to me for preliminary review, findings, and recommended disposition. 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B); Local Rule of Court 32(c). A hearing was held on June 23, 1999. After examining the memoranda submitted, listening to the arguments of counsel, and researching the applicable law, I recommend that Plaintiff's complaint be dismissed in its entirety pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) and, therefore, Defendants' 12(b)(7) argument will not be addressed.

¹ It is not clear from the record whether all the named defendants were served with process. Therefore, the court refers only to those defendants who were served and are properly before the court.

Background

Plaintiff [3] is a nonprofit, multi-employer health and welfare trust fund established through collective bargaining between certain unions and employers. The purpose of the Fund is to provide participants and beneficiaries with comprehensive health care benefits. In connection with such benefits, the Fund alleges that it has expended huge sums related to coverage of its participants' tobacco-related illnesses. The Fund has brought this claim in order to recover those costs. The Fund also demands injunctive relief that would require Defendants to finance tobacco-use cessation programs for the Fund's participants.

The Fund's ninety-three page complaint notwithstanding, its claim pares down to a very simple proposition: because of Defendants' fraudulent misrepresentations about and concealment of the health-related risks of using tobacco and an agreement among Defendants to forgo development of safer tobacco products, the Fund was unable to make intelligent decisions about the management of its resources and, consequently, was unable to curtail or effect the use of tobacco by its participants, resulting in vast expenditures on tobacco-related illnesses that could have been avoided if Defendants had [4] been honest and forthright about the information they possessed. The Defendants' seventy-two page memorandum notwithstanding, their argument also pares down to a very simple proposition: whatever injury the Fund may have suffered, it is purely derivative of the physical injuries sustained by those participants who used tobacco products [*181] and is, therefore, an indirect injury and too remote to allow recovery. Although it is important that the court be able to separate the wheat from the chaff for the purposes of narrowing and focusing on the precise issues before it, the chaff in the instant case merits explication in order that the enormity of the impact of Defendants' alleged misconduct is not unduly minimized.

According to Plaintiff, cigarette smoking is the leading cause of premature death in the United States. Each year, cigarette smoking kills more than 400,000 Americans; accounts for one of every five deaths overall; and is responsible for at least 30% of all deaths from cancer, 80% of all deaths from pulmonary diseases such as emphysema and bronchitis, and thousands of deaths from cardiovascular disease, including stroke and heart attack. In addition, smoking reduces fertility, [5] increases the rate of miscarriages and stillbirths, and causes lower birth weights in infants. Moreover, cigarettes contain nicotine which is an addictive drug and, although it is illegal to sell cigarettes to children, virtually all smokers begin smoking before reaching maturity, often becoming addicted while they are still children. Plaintiff also alleges that the use of smokeless tobacco can cause oral cancer, cancer of the esophagus, gum disease, and dental decay.

Plaintiff describes the obstacles against which individuals, who have allegedly suffered physical injury from tobacco use, have struggled, often unsuccessfully, to hold the tobacco industry liable through initiation of products liability lawsuits. Envisioning a loss of profitability as a result of potential adverse judgments and encouraged by counsel, the tobacco companies embarked on a forty year campaign of deceit, distortion, concealment, and misrepresentation meant to undermine individual plaintiffs' ability to prove causation, a necessary element in a products liability claim. Fearing that the truth about the devastating health effects of tobacco use would cause a public outcry and consequent pressure on businesses [6] and government to restrict smoking in the workplace, the tobacco companies, their research organizations, their public relations agents, and their attorneys worked together to suppress important scientific research tending to link tobacco use with cancer. Moreover, it is alleged that the tobacco industry strenuously denied any such link and attempted to undermine the validity of any scientific information tending to support a contrary position by pointing to studies, funded by the industry itself, that tended to discredit the causal connection. In this way, the tobacco companies attempted, successfully for the most part, to maintain the illusion of an open controversy on the issue. Such artificially created controversy allowed addicted smokers to justify their continued use of tobacco even in the face of their deteriorating health and allowed the courts to dismiss the claims of those allegedly injured by tobacco use based on the speculative nature of the causal link between such use and the injuries claimed.

Plaintiff also claims that the tobacco industry specifically targeted children in order to replenish its consumer base as older smokers died each year from tobacco-related illnesses. [7] Marketing studies aimed at discovering how best to attract children and teenagers to smoking, use of cartoons in advertising, distribution of promotional items such as t-shirts and baseball caps were all aimed at encouraging young people to smoke, while, at the same time, the tobacco companies knew that, if such tactics were successful, young people would become addicts and would eventually suffer the same dismal fate as those they were meant to replace.

In attempting to right what, if proved to be true, would be a horrific wrong on a grand scale, the Fund has brought claims against the Defendants grounded in fraud, antitrust, unfair trade practices, and assumption of a special duty. This, the Fund maintains, is not a subrogation claim. Instead, it argues that the Fund's [*182] injuries were direct and not based on the alleged injuries to its participants. The Fund alleges that Defendants' fraudulent misrepresentations and concealment were directed at the Fund itself and were intended to facilitate the shifting of tobacco-related health care costs from the tobacco companies to health care payors like the Fund. Furthermore, the Fund alleges that Defendants manipulated the market in tobacco [8] products in order to prevent development of safer, less addictive tobacco products, thereby making any potential preventative care initiatives by the Fund virtually impossible and causing the Fund to spend more on tobacco-related illnesses than would otherwise have been necessary.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) Standard

HN1 [↑] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) provides for dismissal of an action if that action fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The First Circuit Court of Appeals has recognized a tension among precedents regarding the particularity of pleading required to overcome a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion and has noted that "the degree of specificity with which the operative facts must be stated in the pleadings varies depending on the case's context." Boston & Maine Corp. v. Town of Hampton, 987 F.2d 855, 863 \(1st Cir. 1993\) (quoting United States v. AVX Corp., 962 F.2d 108, 115 \(1st Cir. 1992\)).

In deciding a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, "the court must accept the well-pleaded factual averments of the . . . complaint as true, and construe these facts in the light most flattering to the [plaintiff's] cause . . ." Gooley v. Mobil Oil Corp., 851 F.2d 513, 514 \(1st Cir. 1988\) [9] (quoting Chongris v. Board of Appeals, 811 F.2d 36, 37 \(1st Cir. 1987\)). Further, "the Court must deny a motion to dismiss if the allegations of the complaint permit relief to be granted on any theory, even one not expressly stated therein." O'Neil v. Q.L.C.R.I., 750 F. Supp. 551, 553 \(D.R.I. 1990\). "Nevertheless, minimal requirements are not tantamount to nonexistent requirements." Gooley v. Mobil Oil Corp., 851 F.2d at 514. "[A] plaintiff . . . is . . . required to set forth factual allegations, either direct or inferential, respecting each material element necessary to sustain recovery under some actionable legal theory." Id. at 515.

In connection with run-of-the-mine motions brought under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a reviewing court is obliged neither to "credit bald assertions, periphrastic circumlocutions, unsubstantiated conclusions or outright vituperation," nor to honor subjective characterizations, optimistic predictions or problematic suppositions. "Empirically unverifiable" conclusions, not "logically compelled, or at least supported by the stated facts," deserve no deference.

United States v. AVX Corp., 962 F.2d at 115 [10] (citations omitted). HN2 [↑] "It is only when such conclusions are logically compelled, or at least supported, by the stated facts, that is, when the suggested inference rises to what experience indicates is an acceptable level of probability, that 'conclusions' become 'facts' for pleading purposes." The Dartmouth Review v. Dartmouth College, 889 F.2d 13, 16 \(1st Cir. 1989\).

HN3 [↑] The Court has the discretion to impose heightened specificity requirements when it is concerned about the plaintiff's ability to make out a cause of action based on the events as narrated in the complaint. See Boston & Maine Corp. v. Town of Hampton, 987 F.2d at 867. If despite the opportunity to fine-tune a complaint, especially at the Court's direction, "'a naked conclusion, unanchored in any meaningful set of factual averments' is the asserted basis for relief, dismissal may follow." Id. (quoting Gooley v. Mobil Oil Corp., 851 F.2d at 515).

Discussion

RICO and Antitrust: Claims for Damages

This court is aware of at least eleven federal district courts and three circuit courts, all presented with claims by health care trust funds against most or all [11] of the defendants being sued in the instant case [*183] for RICO and/or antitrust violations, that concluded that those claims should be dismissed on grounds of proximate cause and/or standing. See, e.g., Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912 (3rd Cir. 1999) (RICO and antitrust); Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, 172 F.3d 223 (2nd Cir. 1999) (RICO) withdrawn from bound volume at request of the court; Oregon Laborers & Operating Eng'rs Util. Agreement Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., __ F.3d __ 1999 WL 493306 (9th Cir.) (RICO and antitrust); Laborers' & Operating Eng'r's Util. Agreement Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, 42 F. Supp. 2d 943 (D.Ariz. 1999) (RICO and antitrust); Hawaii Health & Welfare Trust Fund for Operating Eng'r's v. Philip Morris, Inc., 42 F. Supp. 2d 943 1999 WL 399860 (D.Haw. 1999) (RICO and antitrust); International Brotherhood of Teamsters Local 734 Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 34 F. Supp. 2d 656 (N.D.Ill. 1998) (antitrust); [12] Kentucky Laborers Dist. Council Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Hill & Knowlton, Inc., 24 F. Supp. 2d 755 (W.D.Ky. 1998) (antitrust and some RICO claims); Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 7 F. Supp. 2d 277 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (antitrust); New Jersey Carpenters Health Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 2d 324 (D.N.J. 1998) (antitrust); Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 2d 1170 (D.Or. 1998) (RICO and antitrust); Seafarers Welfare Plan v. Philip Morris, 27 F. Supp. 2d 623 (D.Md. 1998) (RICO and antitrust); Southeast Fla. Laborers Dist. Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5440, 1998 WL 186878 (S.D.Fla. Apr. 13, 1998) (RICO and antitrust); Stationary Eng's Local 39 Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8302, 1998 WL 476265 (N.D.Cal. Apr. 30, 1998) (RICO and antitrust); Texas Carpenters Health Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 21 F. Supp. 2d 664 (E.D.Tex. 1998) (RICO and antitrust).

Only a minority of federal district courts and no circuit courts of appeal have [13] upheld RICO and/or antitrust claims brought by health care trust funds against these defendants. See, e.g., Iron Workers Local Union No. 17 Ins. Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 23 F. Supp. 2d 771 (N.D.Ohio 1998) (denying motion to dismiss RICO and antitrust claims); Kentucky Laborers Dist. Council Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Hill & Knowlton, Inc., 24 F. Supp. 2d 755 (W.D.Ky. 1998) (denying motion to dismiss some RICO claims); Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 7 F. Supp. 2d 277 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (denying motion to dismiss RICO claims); Nat'l Asbestos Workers Med. Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 23 F. Supp. 2d 321 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) (denying motion to dismiss RICO claim); New Jersey Carpenters Health Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 17 F. Supp. 2d 324 (D.N.J. 1998) (denying motion to dismiss certain RICO claims).

After an independent review of the issues presented, this court finds that the very practical concerns imbedded in the concepts of standing and proximate cause weigh against allowing the Fund to go forward with its claims. As the Ninth Circuit recently observed in Oregon Laborers, [*14] a case practically on all fours with the instant case, proximate cause is a judicial tool which "at bottom . . . reflects ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient." 1999 WL 493306, at *3 (quoting Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992)). Although Defendants have urged a number of grounds for dismissal of Plaintiff's RICO and antitrust claims, for the following reasons this court finds the related issues of proximate cause and standing to be dispositive.

HN4 [↑] Both the Rhode Island and federal RICO statutes provide for civil recovery for any person "injured in his or her business or property by reason of" a predicate RICO offense. R.I. Gen Laws § 7-15-4(c); [*184] 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). Therefore, the requirements for standing under both statutes require a similar analysis. Vitone v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 943 F. Supp. 192, 200 (D.R.I. 1996). In addition, HN5 [↑] the Rhode Island Antitrust Act, R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-1 through § 6-36-26, is to be "construed in harmony with judicial interpretations of comparable federal [15] antitrust laws . . ." R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-2(b); see also UXB Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. Rosenfeld Concrete Corp., 599 A.2d 1033, 1035 (R.I. 1991). Therefore, the court will apply a unified analysis to the federal and state RICO claims (hereinafter "RICO") and a unified analysis to the federal and state antitrust claims (hereinafter "antitrust"), guided by federal law.

Furthermore, the requirements for standing to maintain a civil action under RICO and the antitrust laws are also similar. Oregon Laborers, 1999 WL 493306, at *3 (citing Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268). HN6[] RICO and antitrust law both characterize a proper plaintiff as one who has suffered an injury to "business or property by reason of" a violation of the laws' predicate substantive provisions. 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c)(RICO); 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (antitrust). "Both also require that the alleged violation of the law be a 'proximate cause' of the injury suffered." Oregon Laborers, 1999 WL 493306, at *3 (citing Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268) (RICO); Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) [16] (antitrust)).

Since the causes of an action or condition may be traced backward to the dawn of time and effects may reverberate forever forward, the concept of proximate causation has traditionally included the requirement that there be "some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged." Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268. This direct relationship has been one of the central elements necessary to establish proximate causation in RICO and antitrust claims. Oregon Laborers, 1999 WL 493306, at *3 (citing Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 540, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983)))). Therefore, "a plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover." Id. (quoting Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268-69).

In support of its antitrust claim, the Fund alleges that Defendants "engaged in a decades-long conspiracy to restrain trade and inhibit competition by suppressing the development [17] and marketing of safer, less addictive tobacco products . . . and by agreeing in furtherance of this conspiracy to conceal information concerning the negative health attributes of their products. As a result of [Defendants'] conduct, competition in the market for alternative safe (or safer) tobacco products . . . has been restrained, causing the Fund[] to incur substantial costs to treat the tobacco-related illnesses of [its] participants." Plf.'s Mem. at 30-31 (citations to the complaint omitted). Further, the Fund argues that the injury it has suffered as a result of Defendants' anti-competitive agreement was a direct injury and not derivative of the physical injuries allegedly suffered by its participants.

Similarly, in support of its RICO claim, the Fund argues that Defendants' fraud was meant to maintain the illusion of an open controversy over the causal connection between tobacco use and ill health and/or addiction and, consequently, the Fund was unable to provide a comprehensive health care program to address the subsequently recognized need to discourage and reduce tobacco use so as to decrease costs associated with tobacco-related illness. Its inability to have an [18] impact on those costs is alleged as a direct injury to the Fund.

HN7[] To determine whether an injury is too remote to allow RICO and/or antitrust standing, the United States Supreme Court has developed a three factor test [*185] which requires the court to ask the following questions: (1) are there more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct who can be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general; (2) will it be difficult to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's damages attributable to defendant's wrongful conduct; and (3) will the court have to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries. Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269-70 (RICO); Associated General, 459 U.S. at 545 (antitrust).

1. Are There More Direct Victims Who Can Vindicate the Law?

The Fund argues that it has standing to assert its Rico and antitrust claims because it has suffered a direct injury to its business or property in the form of economic losses attributable to reimbursing Fund participants for medical expenses in connection with their tobacco-related diseases. Furthermore, the Fund maintains that its "economic losses are [19] not a form of compensation for personal injuries suffered by smokers." Plf.'s Mem. at 51. Moreover, since "the Fund participants cannot and will not assert such claims," there are no more direct victims that can vindicate violation of RICO and the antitrust laws. See Plf.'s Mem. at 50. In essence, "without the Fund's action, Defendants' misconduct would remain undeterred and the purposes of RICO [and the antitrust laws would be] thwarted." Id.

Although the Fund characterizes its injury as direct, it would have suffered no injury at all if its participants had not used tobacco and had not suffered diseases caused by tobacco use. Therefore, in order for the Fund to have been harmed by Defendants' alleged misconduct, the Funds participants must first have chosen to smoke and, subsequently, must have suffered an illness caused by smoking that they would not otherwise have contracted. It is clear that whatever injury the Fund may have suffered, it was contingent upon the actions and injury of others, which in each particular case requires its own causal connection to be established. Assuming that the Fund has in fact been injured, the most that can be said about that injury is [20] that it is indirect. See Oregon Laborers, WL 493306, at *4.

However, the Fund argues that the injured smokers cannot bring RICO or antitrust claims to recover medical expenses related to their personal injuries. While, the Fund may be right about this, see id., it does not necessarily make the Fund a proper party to bring these claims. As the Ninth Circuit noted in Oregon Laborers, "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Id. (quoting Associated General, 459 U.S. at 534). "Some injuries caused by an antitrust [or RICO] violation may thus be left unremedied for lack of a proper plaintiff." Id. The court pointed out that the policy objective of limiting standing to those more directly injured is to "promote the general interest in deterring injurious conduct," id. at *5, thus suggesting that the focus of the direct injury requirement for RICO and antitrust standing is less on vindicating the kind of injury sustained and more on deterring the kind of misconduct that may lead to various injuries and theories of recovery.

In the instant [21] case, Defendants' alleged misconduct may arguably constitute a RICO and/or antitrust violation. However, because of the indirectness of the Fund's injuries, it cannot be said that those violations were the proximate cause of the harm suffered by the Fund. In addition, there are injured persons, i.e., the smokers, capable and motivated to bring suit, thus "promoting the general interest in deterring injurious conduct." Therefore, because there are more direct victims of Defendants' alleged misconduct who can be counted on to vindicate a direct injury caused by the alleged misconduct, this factor of the test for RICO and/or [*186] antitrust standing weighs in favor of dismissing those claims. See id.

2. Would Damages be Difficult to Ascertain?

The Fund claims as damages monies spent to reimburse its participants for their medical care due to smoking related illnesses. The Fund alleges that its harm arose from its inability, due to Defendants' fraud and collusive anticompetitive conduct, to take initiatives aimed at reducing the incidence of smoking among its participants, which allegedly would have reduced costs associated with medical care for smoking-related illnesses. Although [22] the fund's actual expenditures would not be difficult to ascertain, because of the many variables that might have affected those costs, it would be extremely difficult to ascertain which of those costs would or would not have been lowered. Such variables include whether individual smokers would have quit or cut down on their smoking as a result of the Fund's preventative initiatives and whether smokers would have chosen to continue with the type of cigarettes they had always smoked despite the availability of "safer" alternatives. Furthermore, the term "smoking-related illness" is only another way of saying "illness caused by smoking" and the causal link in each case would need to be established.

Nonetheless, the Fund argues that the risk that the damages will be uncertain should be born by the wrongdoer. Plf.'s Mem. at 41 (citing Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, 327 U.S. 251, 265, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 (1946)). However, in the instant case, the problem is not in calculating the actual amount spent to reimburse smokers for their medical expenses, rather the problem is in establishing to what extent smokers and potential smokers might have been affected by the initiatives [23] that the Fund might have taken to discourage or reduce smoking among its participants. In this respect, it is not only the amount that is uncertain; the link between how the Fund might have acted and how smokers might have reacted is highly speculative as well.

As the Third Circuit stated in analyzing the identical issue, "It is apparent why the Funds argue that they can demonstrate all of this through aggregation and statistical modeling: it would be impossible for them to do so otherwise. Yet we do not believe that aggregation and statistical modeling are sufficient to get the Funds over the hurdle of the [Associated General] factor focusing on whether the 'damages claim is . . . highly speculative.'" Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 929; accord Oregon Laborers, 1999 WL 493306, at *5; This court agrees with the circuit courts of appeal that have addressed this issue and finds that the difficulty of ascertaining the damages in this case weighs in favor of dismissing the Fund's claims.

3. Would There be Potential for Duplicative Recovery and/or Would Complex Apportionment of Damages be Required?

In the past two years, there have been several [24] cases filed in the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island by individual smokers or their family members against one or more of the tobacco company defendants in this case. It is not unlikely that we will see more of these cases in years to come. The individual plaintiffs seek the same recovery as the Fund, i.e., their medical expenses, among their other claims for damages. Moreover, HN8[↑] Rhode Island's collateral source rule prevents a plaintiff's damages from being reduced to the extent he or she has been reimbursed for medical expenses, see Gelsomino v. Mendonca, 723 A.2d 300, 301 (R.I. 1999), thus increasing the potential for duplicative recovery should the Fund's claims be allowed to go forward. In addition, the potential for multiple recovery would intensify if indirect injury claims like the Fund's were recognized in this context. Employers might well assert an interest as distinct from that of the Fund [*187] and might claim that, had they been properly informed of the dangers of tobacco use, they too would have instituted different policies in order to discourage smoking, which might have allowed employers to negotiate a lesser amount payable into [25] the Fund.

It is clear that all three factors weigh in favor of finding the Fund's injury too remote to confer standing on the Fund to bring its RICO and antitrust claims for damages. Therefore, I recommend that Defendants' 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss these claims be granted.

Antitrust and RICO: Claims for Injunctive Relief

Assuming, arguendo, that injunctive relief is available in private civil RICO actions, cf. Lincoln House, Inc. v. Dupre, 903 F.2d 845, 848 (1st Cir. 1990) (assuming without deciding that relief may be available), and that all three factors of the RICO/antitrust remoteness test need not be met in order to demand injunctive relief because the calculation and apportionment of damages would no longer be an issue, the Fund must still show that its injury was proximately caused by Defendants' alleged misconduct. HN9[↑] Both RICO and the antitrust laws have been interpreted to incorporate common law principles of causation. See, e.g., Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268 (RICO); Associated General, 459 U.S. at 533-34, and n. 29, 536, n. 33 (antitrust). Contingencies, conjecture, and speculation will not support a finding of proximate [26] cause. See, e.g., Holmes, 503 U.S. at 271 (applying common law interpretation of proximate cause to RICO claim and finding that "the link is too remote between the stock manipulation alleged and the customers' harm, being purely contingent on the harm suffered by the broker-dealers"); Babbitt v. Sweet Home Chapter of Communities for a Great Oregon, 515 U.S. 687, 712, 132 L. Ed. 2d 597, 115 S. Ct. 2407 (1995) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (explaining that "by the use of the word 'actually,' the regulation clearly rejects speculative or conjectural effects, and thus itself invokes principles of proximate causation").

Here, the Fund's theory of its case is full of contingencies and necessarily invites unacceptable levels of speculation and conjecture. The court has already found that whatever injury the Fund has suffered, if indeed there was an injury, it was indirect and contingent. If not for the alleged smoking-related injuries to the smokers, the Fund would not have sustained any injury itself.

The Fund argues, however, that because of the intentional nature of Defendants' alleged misconduct (misrepresentations directed toward the Fund and its participants [27] and collusion to abandon efforts to develop a "safer" cigarette) and because the actions and injuries of the individual smokers was foreseeable and their addiction intended, the smokers themselves, although, perhaps, an intervening force, do not constitute a superceding cause that would break the chain of causation between Defendants' actions and the Fund's injury.

However, as discussed above in connection with the difficulty of calculating the Funds' damages, the problem with the Fund's argument is not that the amount of actual damages would be so difficult to calculate, after all the Fund can document the amount it has spent on each smoker's health care, rather the problem lies in the number of contingencies that would first have to be realized before the Fund could sustain an injury.

First, the Fund would have to show what initiatives it would or could have taken to reduce the incidence of smoking among its participants had the Defendants been honest about the health effects of smoking and had they not agreed to abandon development of a safer cigarette. Second, it would have to show whether and to what extent smokers would have responded to the Fund's initiatives and whether and [28] to what extent their responses would [*188] have reduced the occurrence and complexity of their illnesses and thus lowered their reimbursable health care costs. Assuming that a significant number of the Fund's participants and beneficiaries are smokers, there would necessarily be a significant amount of contingency and speculation involved in figuring out who, if anyone, might have quit smoking due to the Fund's initiatives as opposed to other influences; who, if anyone, might have reduced the number of cigarettes smoked and to what level; who, if anyone, would have smoked a "safer" cigarette; what, if any, effect the different levels of response would have had on the illnesses suffered; and what, if any, reduction in reimbursable health care costs would have been realized.

The number of possible scenarios linking the Defendants' alleged misconduct to the Funds' purported injury could only be narrowed by a significantly limited imagination as to the scope of potential influences on human action and motivation and the nature of the individual's capacity to exercise free will. Allowing the factfinder to wander freely through such a philosophical, psychological, and biological bazaar is exactly [29] what the concept of proximate cause was meant to prevent. Therefore, because proximate cause is an essential element of the Fund's claim and because the Fund has not pled the alleged causal connection in a way that substantially removes the claim from the realm of contingency, speculation, and conjecture, I recommend that the Fund's RICO and antitrust claims for injunctive relief be dismissed.

Rhode Island Unfair Trade Practices Act ("RIUTPA" or "Act")

RIUTPA makes unlawful "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce . . ." R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-2 (1992). HN10 A private cause of action under RIUTPA exists for "any person who purchases or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes and thereby suffers any ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the use or employment by another person of a method, act, or practice declared unlawful" by the Act. R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-5.2 (emphasis added).

The Fund argues that it has standing to bring its RIUTPA claim because a "person," under the Act, includes "trusts." See Plf.'s Mem. at [30] 25 (citing R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-1\(3\) ("Person" means natural persons, corporations, trusts . . .)). However, the Fund ignores the further requirement that such person be a purchaser or lessee of "goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes . . ." See § 6-3.1-5.2.

In Schroeder v. Lotito, 577 F. Supp. 708 \(D.R.I. 1983\), District Judge Selya, now Circuit Judge, was presented with a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss plaintiff's RIUTPA claim on the ground that plaintiff lacked standing. The plaintiff was a union who claimed that defendants had used a trademark similar to the union's mark in order to fool the public into thinking that defendants employed union labor in their printing business when that was not the case. Although the court found that the union had alleged an injury that was linked to the deception, it emphasized that "the inescapable inference which flows from [RIUTPA's] legislative scheme is that the General Assembly intended the entitlement to sue under its Deceptive Trade Practices Act to be limited to those classes of persons designated thereunder." Schroeder, 577 F. Supp. at 717. Further, since [31] RIUTPA provided a private action only to those who purchased or leased "goods or services primarily for personal, family or household purposes," the court found that "plaintiffs [could not] by any stretch of the imagination tuck themselves within the citizen suit provision of § 6-13.1-5.2." Id.; accord Scully Signal Co. v. Joyal, 881 F. Supp. 727, 741 \(D.R.I. 1995\) (dismissing corporate plaintiff's RIUTPA claim for lack of standing because the Act only provides private [*189] rights of action to the Attorney General and to "person[s] who purchase or lease goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes . . ."); ERI Max Entertainment, Inc. v. Streisand, 690 A.2d 1351, 1354 \(R.I. 1997\) (dismissing plaintiff video store's RIUTPA claim for lack of standing because plaintiff was clearly not a person who's injury stemmed from the purchase or lease of "goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes").

The Fund has not alleged, nor do the facts suggest, that it was a purchaser or lessee of any of Defendants' goods or services that were intended to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes. [32] Therefore, the Fund lacks standing to bring its RIUTPA claim and I recommend that the claim be dismissed.

Fraud

HN11 [↑] To prevail on a fraudulent misrepresentation claim in Rhode Island, plaintiff must be able to prove, inter alia, that he relied on defendant's misrepresentation and that such reliance was the proximate cause of his injury. See, e.g., Ralston Dry-Wall Co., Inc. v. United States Gypsum, 926 F.2d 99, 102 (1st Cir. 1991) (applying Rhode Island law). As discussed above in connection with the Fund's RICO claim based on fraud, the Fund will not be able to meet its burden as to the necessary showing of proximate cause.

The Fund alleges that Defendants' intentional false statements about the health effects of tobacco use were directed at both smokers and at "payors of tobacco-related health care costs, including the Fund[]." Plf.'s Mem. at 54. Defendants' false statements were intended to deceive smokers and the Fund and "to divert liability for paying substantial sums to treat . . . tobacco-related illnesses onto the Fund[] and other health care payors." Id. In addition, because the Fund justifiably relied on those statements, it was prevented [33] from discouraging and reducing tobacco use by its participants, which resulted in higher medical costs to the Fund than otherwise would have been incurred. Further, the Fund maintains, because Defendants' conduct was intentional and morally blameworthy, the remoteness of the Fund's injury is not dispositive of the proximate cause analysis. Moreover, the Fund argues, the Fund's increased costs for health care was intended, foreseeable, and substantially likely to occur as a result of Defendants' acts. Finally, in these circumstances, the Fund urges the court to equate substantial cause with proximate cause.

Assuming, arguendo, that Defendants' alleged misrepresentations were intended to preclude the Fund from implementing initiatives to reduce or eliminate smoking among its participants and to shift medical care costs from the tobacco companies to the Funds and even assuming that such consequences were foreseeable and such conduct is morally blameworthy, the Fund cannot escape the fact that there exist innumerable contingencies through which a factfinder would have to sort in order find that the Fund's purported injury was substantially likely to result from Defendants' conduct. [34] Therefore, even accepting a formula that equates substantial cause with proximate cause, as discussed above in connection with the Fund's RICO and antitrust claims, the gap between Defendants' conduct and the Fund's purported injury can only be filled with contingency, speculation, and conjecture. The path chosen in an attempt to bridge that gap would inevitably be arbitrary. Accordingly, I recommend that the Fund's fraud claim be dismissed.

Failure to Perform a Special Duty

As the Third Circuit noted in Steamfitters, HN12 [↑] a special duty claim is essentially a negligence claim and, therefore, requires proof of the underlying elements of a negligence claim, including proximate cause. 171 F.3d at 936. For the reasons discussed at length above, the Fund will be unable to prove this element of its claim [*190] and, therefore I recommend that the Fund's special duty claim be dismissed.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated, I recommend that Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss be granted as to all of the Fund's claims. Any objection to this Report and Recommendation must be specific and must be filed with the Clerk of Court within ten (10) days of its receipt. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b); Local Rule 32. Failure to file timely, specific objections to the report constitutes waiver of both the right to review by the district court and the right to appeal the district court's decision. United States v. Valencia-Copete, 792 F.2d 4 (1st Cir. 1986); Park Motor Mart, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 616 F.2d 603 (1st Cir. 1980).

99 F. Supp. 2d 174, *190 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12400, 35

Robert W. Lovegreen

United States Magistrate Judge

August 11, 1999

End of Document

JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

May 20, 1999, Argued ; June 22, 1999, Decided

Nos. 98-3919, 98-4251

Reporter

190 F.3d 775 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 38876 **

JTC Petroleum Company, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] Counsel Amended July 19, 1999. As Amended on Partial Grant of Rehearing of August 17, 1999.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois. No. 96-334-GPM--G. Patrick Murphy, Judge.

JTC Petroleum Co. v. Piasa Motor Fuels, Inc., 179 F.3d 1073, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 13802 \(7th Cir. Ill., 1999\)

Disposition: Reversed.

Core Terms

producers, applicators, cartel, conspiracy, monopolize, asphalt, competitors, emulsified, collusion, plants, prices, summary judgment, Sherman Act, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Circumstantial Evidence

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An inference of conspiracy can be drawn from circumstantial evidence as well as from admissions or other direct testimony of the conspirators' communications with each other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Attempt to monopolize differs from conspiracy to monopolize primarily in dispensing with the requirement of an agreement, and the usual case therefore is one in which the defendant has or seeks to obtain monopoly power all by itself.

Counsel: For JTC PETROLEUM COMPANY, Plaintiff - Appellant (98-3919): Glenn E. Davis, ARMSTRONG, TEASDALE, SCHLAFLY & DAVIS, St. Louis, MO.

For PIASA MOTOR FUELS, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (98-3919): David W. Harlan, GALLOP, JOHNSON & NEUMAN, St. Louis, MO USA. Gordon R. Broom, BURROUGHS, HEPLER, BROOM, MACDONALD & HEBRANK, Edwardsville, IL USA.

For MACOUPIN [2] COUNTY ASPHALT, INC., Defendant - Appellee (98-3919): Lyndon P. Sommer, SANDBERG, PHOENIX & VON GONTARD, St. Louis, MO USA.

For DOUGHERTY OIL & STONE SUPPLY, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (98-3919): Steven H. Schwartz, BROWN & JAMES, St. Louis, MO USA.

For JTC PETROLEUM COMPANY, Plaintiff - Appellant (98-4251): Daniel D. Doyle, ARMSTRONG, TEASDALE, SCHLAFLY & DAVIS, St. Louis, MO.

For PIASA MOTOR FUELS, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (98-4251): David Streubel, David W. Harlan, GALLOP, JOHNSON & NEUMAN, St. Louis, MO USA. Gordon R. Broom, BURROUGHS, HEPLER, BROOM, MACDONALD & HEBRANK, Edwardsville, IL USA.

For DOUGHERTY OIL & STONE SUPPLY INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (98-4251): Charles E. Reis, IV, Steven H. Schwartz, BROWN & JAMES, St. Louis, MO USA.

For MACOUPIN COUNTY ASPHALT, INC., Defendant - Appellee (98-4251): Jonathan Ries, SANDBERG, PHOENIX & VON GONTARD, St. Louis, MO USA.

Judges: Before Posner, Chief Judge, and Easterbrook and Rovner, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: POSNER

Opinion

Posner, [*776] Chief Judge. The plaintiff seeks damages for violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act arising out of the road-repair business in southern [3] Illinois. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. There are two groups of defendants: the road contractors themselves, called "applicators," and producers of the emulsified asphalt that the applicators apply to the surface of the roads. After the plaintiff, itself an applicator, settled with all three of the producers and three of the six applicator defendants, the district court granted summary judgment for the remaining applicator defendants, who are the appellees in this court.

Before going further, we note a problem of appellate jurisdiction, namely that two claims against one of the applicator defendants were dismissed without prejudice, and indeed with express leave to reinstate should this appeal fail. The circuits and indeed the cases in this court are divided over whether this form of dismissal affects the finality of the district court's judgment, but most hold, we think correctly (see also Rebecca A. Cochran, "Gaining Appellate Review by 'Manufacturing' a Final Judgment Through Voluntary Dismissal of Peripheral Claims," 48 Mercer L. Rev. 979 \(1997\)), that such a form of dismissal does not terminate the litigation in the district court [4] in any realistic sense and so is not a final decision within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1291, which authorizes the appeal of such decisions. Compare Union Oil Co. v. John Brown E & C., 121 F.3d 305 \(7th Cir. 1997\); Horwitz v. Alloy Automotive Co., 957 F.2d 1431, 1435-36 \(7th Cir. 1992\); Construction Aggregates, Ltd. v. Forest Commodities Corp., 147 F.3d 1334 \(11th Cir. 1998\) (per curiam); Chappelle v. Beacon Communications Corp., 84 F.3d 652 \(2d Cir. 1996\); Dannenberg v. Software Toolworks Inc., 16 F.3d 1073 \(9th Cir. 1994\); Cook v. Rocky Mountain Bank Note Co., 974 F.2d 147 \(10th Cir. 1992\); Ryan v. Occidental Petroleum Corp., 577 F.2d 298 \(5th

Cir. 1978), with United States v. Kaufmann, 985 F.2d 884, 890-91 (7th Cir. 1993); Division 241 Amalgamated Transit Union v. Suscy, 538 F.2d 1264, 1266 and n. 1 (7th Cir. 1976) (per curiam); State ex rel. Nixon v. Coeur d'Alene Tribe, 164 F.3d 1102, 1106 (8th Cir. 1999); Hicks v. NLO, Inc., 825 F.2d 118, 120 (6th Cir. 1987) (per curiam). [5] That makes this an interlocutory appeal, and one that does not fit into any of the pigeonholes that permit such appeals in the federal courts. But when we raised this point at argument, the plaintiff's lawyer quickly agreed that we could treat the dismissal of the two claims as having been with prejudice, thus [*777] winding up the litigation and eliminating the bar to our jurisdiction. Health Cost Controls of Illinois, Inc. v. Washington, 187 F.3d 703, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 18470, slip op. at 6 (7th Cir. 1999). And so we can proceed to the merits of the appeal.

The plaintiff presented evidence both that the applicator defendants had agreed not to compete with one another in bidding on local government contracts and that the producers had agreed not to compete among each other either, both agreements being (if proved) per se violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 (1990) (per curiam); Israel Travel Advisory Service, Inc. v. Israel Identity Tours, Inc., 61 F.3d 1250, 1256 (7th Cir. 1995); Metro Industries, Inc. v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839, 843-44 (9th Cir. 1996). [6] There is a long history of bid-rigging and related practices of collusion in the road construction and road maintenance business. See, e.g., Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392 (1974); United States v. Azzarelli Construction Co., 612 F.2d 292 (7th Cir. 1979); In re Western Liquid Asphalt Cases, 487 F.2d 191 (9th Cir. 1973). (In recent years most criminal antitrust prosecutions have been of road contractors.) These are local markets, with a limited number of competitors, selling a rather standardized service to local governments constrained to give their business to the lowest bidder, a constraint that makes it easy for colluding bidders to determine whether one of their number is cheating on the agreement to divide markets. The conditions are thus ripe for effective collusion, making it unsurprising that there is evidence that the applicator defendants in fact colluded with one another to allocate the applicator business in their region. (In discussing the evidence, we emphasize that we are construing it in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, as we are required to do in reviewing [*7] the grant of summary judgment to the defendants.)

As for the producers of the asphalt used by these applicators, the record contains evidence that the product is both heavy relative to value and prone to deteriorate when transported long distances, and that as a result the practical radius within which a plant can supply applicators is only about 70 miles. This has limited to three the number of producers that can supply applicators in the region served by the plaintiff and by the applicator defendants. The plants are specialized to the production of emulsified asphalt, meaning that they can't readily be switched to producing other products. This gives the producers an incentive to produce emulsified asphalt up to the capacity of their plants (because there is no profitable use of the plants other than producing this product), and, since it is a fungible product, about the only way of increasing output is by cutting price. But since the demand for emulsified asphalt is inelastic--that is, lower prices do not yield commensurate increases in volume--the effect of price competition would be to diminish profits. So the producers, like the applicators, have much to gain by eliminating [8] competition among themselves. And since the product is standard and the number of competing producers few, an agreement not to compete should not be too difficult to enforce; that is, at the producer level as at the applicator level, cheating should be readily observable and hence quickly checked by a retaliatory price cut. Therefore a cartel agreement would not be quickly eroded by cheating, and so again the conditions for collusion are ripe and again the record contains evidence of such collusion.

But the only defendants remaining in the case are applicators, which is to say the plaintiff's competitors. The producers have settled out. Suppose that all that the plaintiff were complaining about, therefore, was a conspiracy of the applicators to raise prices or (what amounts to the same thing) to allocate customers or markets. The complaint would fail at the threshold. A conspiracy of a firm's competitors to do these things could only help the firm, by providing an umbrella under which it could sell a large quantity at a supracompetitive price generating supracompetitive profits [*778] just by setting price in between the conspirators' price and the lower, competitive price that [9] would prevail in the absence of the conspiracy. Israel Travel Advisory Service, Inc. v. Israel Identity Tours, Inc., supra, 61 F.3d at 1256-57. You want your competitors to charge high prices. The fact that it was in JTC's interest that the other applicators agree not to compete with each other would be irrelevant if the Department of Justice were suing the applicators, but it is not; this is a private suit by a competitor that, since it cannot show harm to itself from its competitors' eliminating competition among themselves, cannot obtain relief under the antitrust laws. Id.; Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). To put it bluntly, you cannot obtain damages without proving injury. (This is a general principle of both common law tort law and statutory tort law, rather than anything special to antitrust.) As a purchaser of emulsified asphalt, JTC could of course be hurt by a producers' cartel, but, to repeat, no producer remains as a defendant.

So what JTC has tried to show is that the applicators enlisted the producers in their conspiracy, assigning them the role [10] of policing the applicators' cartel by refusing to sell to applicators who defied the cartel--such as JTC, which has bid for jobs that the cartel had assigned to other applicators. JTC, a maverick, was a threat to the cartel--but only if it could find a source of supply of emulsified asphalt. The claim is that the applicators got the producers to deny JTC this essential input into its business, and as a result injured it. The producer was the cat's paw; the applicators were the cat.

Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra, 475 U.S. at 587, however, teaches that an antitrust claim which makes no economic sense can on that ground be dismissed on summary judgment. See also In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599, 614 \(7th Cir. 1997\). And it might seem to make no sense from the producers' standpoint to shore up a cartel of their customers. Cartels, as we have pointed out, raise price above the competitive level and by doing so reduce the demand for their product. The less asphalt the members of the applicators' cartel sell (perhaps because the higher, cartel price induces municipalities to defer [11] road maintenance), the less they will buy, and so the producers will be hurt. But if the producers have nowhere else to turn to sell their product, as may be the case here because of the specialized character of their plants and the limited radius within which they can ship their product from the plant, the applicator defendants may be able to coerce them into helping to police their cartel by threatening to buy less product from them or pay less for it, as in the well-known case of Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Ass'n v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951 \(1914\); see also Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730 n. 4, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1988\); United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 \(1966\); Morrison v. Murray Biscuit Co., 797 F.2d 1430, 1438 \(7th Cir. 1986\); Rossi v. Standard Roofing Inc., 156 F.3d 452, 462 \(3d Cir. 1998\).

Alternatively, and more plausibly (at least on this record), the cartelist may have been paying the producers to perform the policing function, rather [12] than coercing them, by threats, to do so. In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, supra, 123 F.3d at 614. If by refusing to sell to mavericks the producers increase the profits of the applicators' cartel, they create a fund out of which the cartel can compensate them, in the form of a higher price for the purchase of the product, for their services to the cartel. Cf. Elizabeth Granitz & Benjamin Klein, "Monopolization by 'Raising Rivals' Costs': The Standard Oil Case," 39 J. Law & Econ. 1 \(1996\). The record contains evidence that one of the producers obtained from applicators in the cartel area [*779] prices that were 4 to 18 (or maybe even 28) percent higher than the prices it obtained from presumably noncolluding applicators in the adjacent region, though there is no suggestion that the producer's costs were any higher in that region. The evidence is contested by the defendants, but the resolution of the contest is for trial. There is also evidence (again contested, and again this is irrelevant to whether summary judgment was properly granted) that the reasons the producers gave for refusing to sell to JTC were pretextual, [13] as in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 484, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\); McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 36 L. Ed. 2d 668, 93 S. Ct. 1817 \(1973\)--for example, that JTC was not a good credit risk, even though when JTC offered to pay cash the producers still refused to sell to it. This suggests that the real reason for the refusal was one that the producers didn't want to acknowledge--namely that they were being compensated by the cartel for refusing to sell to a customer whom otherwise they would have been happy to sell to. The combination of the price difference with the evidence of pretext support an inference that the producers were being compensated by the applicators for shoring up the cartel by boycotting an applicator that was competing with the cartel. If so--if the producers were working for the cartel--they were part of the applicators' conspiracy, and for the injury that they inflicted on JTC as agents of the applicators' cartel by denying JTC a source of supply the members of the cartel, three of which are the remaining defendants, would be culpable under elementary principles [14] of both conspiracy law and agency law. E.g., Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 678 F.2d 742, 743 \(7th Cir. 1982\); Rossi v. Standard Roofing Co., supra, 156 F.3d at 472.

There may be an innocent explanation for why producers would charge lower prices elsewhere or why they refused to sell to JTC. But the only issue for us, in reviewing the grant of summary judgment for these defendants, is whether a rational jury, having before it the evidence developed to date, could conclude (construing the evidence as favorably to the plaintiff as the record permits) that the reason for the producers' refusal to deal with JTC was that they were in cahoots with the cartel to discourage competition in the applicator market. Given the evidence of cartelization at both the applicator and producer level, the suspicious producer price behavior (suggestive of the producers' having been "paid off" by the cartel to boycott JTC and other upstarts), and the pretextual character of the reasons the producers gave for the refusal to deal, a rational jury could conclude that JTC was indeed the victim of a producers' boycott organized by the applicator defendants. [\[15\]](#) All the evidence that we have discussed is circumstantial, but of course HN1[↑] an inference of conspiracy--of, in this case, an informal agreement among the applicators and the producers to deny supply to firms that tried to break into the applicators' cosily divided market--can be drawn from circumstantial evidence as well as from admissions or other direct testimony of the conspirators' communications with each other. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\); Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1171-73 \(7th Cir. 1990\); Petrucci's IGA Supermarkets, Inc. v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1233 \(3d Cir. 1993\). JTC has some direct evidence as well. It strikes us as equivocal, and we have not thought it necessary to discuss it; but we do not mean to suggest that it should not be admitted at the trial to which, we conclude, JTC was entitled.

We have finally to consider whether JTC is entitled to proceed to trial on its section 2 claims as well. One claim is that the defendants engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize the local applicator market. See, e.g. [\[16\]](#), Great Escape, Inc. v. Union City Body Co., 791 F.2d 532, 540-41 \(7th Cir. 1986\). This is a puzzling offense, as it seems entirely duplicative of a claim under section 1 [\[*780\]](#) of a conspiracy to restrain trade. IIIA Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application P 809, pp. 370-71 (1996). But there are cases with facts like those of the present case in which section 2 claims have been allowed, e.g., Full Draw Productions v. Easton Sports, Inc., 182 F.3d 745, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14616, 1999 WL 435807, at *6, *10 \(10th Cir. 1999\); Movie 1 & 2 v. United Artists Communications, Inc., 909 F.2d 1245, 1247-48, 1255-56 \(9th Cir. 1990\), and the appellees here do not argue that the jury would be confused to be instructed under section 2 as well as under section 1. Cf. Gehring v. Case Corp., 43 F.3d 340, 343 \(7th Cir. 1994\); McDonald v. Sandvik Process Systems, Inc., 870 F.2d 389, 395 \(7th Cir. 1989\).

The second section 2 claim pressed by JTC is that the defendants attempted to monopolize the local applicator market. [\[17\]](#) HN2[↑] Attempt to monopolize differs from conspiracy to monopolize primarily in dispensing with the requirement of an agreement, and the usual case therefore is one in which the defendant has or seeks to obtain monopoly power all by itself. E.g., Elliott v. United Center, 126 F.3d 1003 \(7th Cir. 1997\). There is no suggestion of that here. JTC's argument rather is that the defendants were acting jointly to exclude JTC from the market; there is no evidence that had any single one of the defendants boycotted a producer who sold emulsion to JTC, the producer would have kowtowed. So this theory of violation merges with JTC's last and most audacious theory, that section 2 can be violated by purely tacit collusion. Each of the defendants knew that if all of them boycotted a producer who supplied JTC, that producer would knuckle under; it was thus in their common interest to act jointly. But if they acted jointly in this manner without any agreement to do so, it would be novel to characterize their behavior as conspiratorial within the meaning of either section 1 or section 2 of the Sherman Act.

The question whether purely tacit collusion, or as it is sometimes called oligopolistic [\[18\]](#) interdependence, might violate the Sherman Act has been much mooted in academic circles, as discussed in IIIA Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, PP 810 et seq. A number of cases treat it as open. Morgenstern v. Wilson, 29 F.3d 1291, 1295 n. 2 \(8th Cir. 1994\); Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc. v. General Cinema Corp., 850 F.2d 477, 490 \(9th Cir. 1988\); see also Springfield Terminal Ry. v. Canadian Pacific Ltd., 133 F.3d 103, 108 \(1st Cir. 1997\). We cannot find a case that squarely supports the theory; the Second Circuit appears to have rejected it, H.L. Hayden Co. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1018 \(2d Cir. 1989\); Crimpers Promotions Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 724 F.2d 290, 291 n. 1 \(2d Cir. 1983\) (Friendly, J.); we threw some cold water on it in Indiana Grocery Inc. v. Super Valu Stores, Inc., 864 F.2d 1409, 1416 \(7th Cir. 1989\); and the Ninth Circuit rejected it outright in Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1443 \(9th Cir. 1995\). We cannot agree that it derives any support at all from the fact that section 2, unlike section 1 [\[19\]](#) (which is limited to combinations, contracts, and conspiracies), does not require an agreement (unless the specific charge is conspiracy to monopolize). If oligopolistic interdependence can be described as "joint monopolization" or "attempted joint monopolization" (JTC's terms), equally it can be described as a combination or a (tacit) conspiracy.

The most compelling objection to JTC's theory has nothing to do with the language of the Sherman Act but rather is the difficulty of formulating effective relief without transforming the district court into a regulatory agency, here for example charged with compelling producers of emulsion to sell to JTC. At all events the theory is a novel one and when a litigant wants a court to buy a novel theory it has to do more than assert it, wholly ignoring the objections that have been made to it and the cases that have questioned or rejected it. Huntzinger v. Hastings Mutual Ins. Co., 143 F.3d 302, 308 n. 7 (7th Cir. [*781] 1998); Colburn v. Trustees of Indiana University, 973 F.2d 581, 593 (7th Cir. 1992); Turner v. Chicago Housing Authority, 969 F.2d 461, 463 (7th Cir. 1992); Burdett v. Miller, 957 F.2d 1375, 1382 (7th Cir. 1992). [20] The Second Circuit has put it well: "We have no obligation to review issues that are raised, but not independently and sufficiently developed, in an appellant's main brief." Karibian v. Columbia University, 14 F.3d 773, 777 n. 1 (2d Cir. 1994). Indeed not; and so JTC will have to prove an agreement in order to prevail on remand.

Reversed.

End of Document

Center for Legal Studies, Inc. v. Lindley

United States District Court for the District of Oregon

August 18, 1999, Decided

Civil No. 99-473-JO

Reporter

64 F. Supp. 2d 970 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12784 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,667

CENTER FOR LEGAL STUDIES, INC.; ET AL., Plaintiffs, v. RAY LINDLEY; ET AL., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendants' motion for summary judgment (# 27) as to all claims GRANTED and case dismissed. Any other pending motions denied as moot.

Core Terms

plaintiffs', conspiracy, paralegal, rights, official capacity, defendants', commerce, immunity, training, unreasonable restraint, state official, licensure, deprive, summary judgment motion, summary judgment, civil rights, monopoly, exempt, restraint of trade, antitrust claim, state tort, Certificate, Regulations, interstate, antitrust, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Summary judgment should be granted if there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the moving party shows that there are no genuine issues of material fact, the non-moving party must go beyond the pleadings and designate facts showing an issue for trial. A scintilla of evidence, or evidence that is merely colorable or not significantly probative, does not present a genuine issue of material fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The substantive law governing a claim determines whether a fact is material.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Reasonable doubts as to the existence of a material factual issue are resolved against the moving party. Inferences drawn from facts are viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment regarding whether conduct was within the scope of employment is appropriate when only one reasonable conclusion can be drawn from the facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > State Immunity

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > Abrogation of Immunity

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > Waiver > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN5 State Sovereign Immunity, State Immunity

The U.S. Const. amend. XI bars citizens from bringing claims against a state or state agency in federal court unless the state has waived its immunity or Congress abrogates it under the U.S. Const. amend. XIV.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Sherman Act, Claims

To prevail on a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, plaintiffs must satisfy the following elements: (a) the existence of a combination or conspiracy, (b) entered into by the parties in order to achieve monopoly power and effectuate an unreasonable restraint of trade, and (c) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

64 F. Supp. 2d 970, *970LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12784, 1

The focus of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 analysis is on evidence of an unreasonable restraint of trade resulting from action undertaken pursuant to the conspiracy or agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

With respect to the evidence adduced in support of an antitrust claim in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 context, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN9 Sherman Act, Claims

To prevail on a monopolization of trade or commerce claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, plaintiffs must establish the following elements: (1) defendants possess monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) defendants willfully acquired or maintained their monopoly power, and (3) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A claim that defendants attempted to monopolize must establish the following facts: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, also is violated if an organization takes action in furtherance of a plan with the purpose of imposing an unreasonable restraint other than monopoly or price-fixing.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

HN12 State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

State officials who are sued in their official capacities are not persons for purposes of the suit because they assume the identity of the government that employs them.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

64 F. Supp. 2d 970, *970LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12784, 1

HN13 [blue icon] State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Contractual Relations & Housing > Civil Rights Act of 1866

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Contractual Relations & Housing, Civil Rights Act of 1866

There are two essential elements to a claim brought under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983: (1) that the defendant acted under color of state law and (2) that the conduct deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities conferred by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Environmental Law > Federal Versus State Law > Federal Preemption

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN15 [blue icon] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

The negative commerce clause denies the States the power unjustifiably to discriminate against or burden the interstate flow of articles of commerce.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Dormant Commerce Clause

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Balancing Tests

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Commerce Clause, Dormant Commerce Clause

In analyzing a law under the negative commerce clause, the initial inquiry centers on whether the law is discriminatory or regulates evenhandedly with only incidental effects on interstate commerce. Regulations falling into the latter category are valid unless the burden imposed on such commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Conspiracy Against Rights > Elements

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Conspiracy Against Rights, Elements

To prevail on a claim of civil rights conspiracy, plaintiffs must allege and prove four elements: (1) a conspiracy; (2) for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws, or of the equal privileges and immunities under the laws; and (3) an act in furtherance of this conspiracy; (4) whereby a person is either injured in his person or property or deprived of any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Conspiracy Against Rights > Elements

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN18[] Conspiracy Against Rights, Elements

A conspiracy under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1985\(3\) is an agreement between two or more individuals to deprive a person of some protected right, where one individual acts in furtherance of the objective of the conspiracy, which causes an actual injury to a person or property, or deprives a person of exercising any right or privilege as a United States citizen. Each member of the conspiracy must have knowledge of the nature and scope of the agreement.

Counsel: For Plaintiffs: James L. Hiller, HITT & HILLER, Portland, OR.

For Plaintiffs: Craig William Barber, CRAIG WILLIAM BARBER, P.C., Golden, CO.

For Defendants: Cynthia A. Botsios, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Salem, OR.

Judges: ROBERT E. JONES, U.S. District Judge.

Opinion by: ROBERT E. JONES

Opinion

[*972] OPINION AND ORDER

JONES, Judge:

Plaintiffs Center for Legal Studies, Inc. ("CLS") and Scott Hatch, Director of CLS, bring this action against defendants Ray Lindley, Lin Fleming, David Young (both in his official capacity and individually), Oregon Department of Education ("ODE"), Oregon Office of Educational Support Services ("OEES"), State of Oregon, and John Does 1 through 9. Plaintiffs allege claims arising from the actions of ODE and OEES regarding CLS's licensure to operate a paralegal training program in Oregon.

Specifically, plaintiffs allege the following claims and damages: federal antitrust claims (treble damages), defamation and misrepresentation ($ 500,000), slander per se, interference with contractual relations ($ 500,000), negligence and [[2]] negligence per se ($ 250,000), restraint of trade, slander, outrageous conduct, trademark disparagement ($ 500,000), violations of federally protected rights, violation of civil rights ($ 250,000), conspiracy to violate protected [*973] rights, and unlawful trade practices. Plaintiffs also seek $ 900,000 in punitive damages, interest, and attorneys' fees.

The case is now before the court on defendants' motion for summary judgment (# 27). For the reasons explained below, defendants' motion is granted in its entirety.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs contracted with Western Oregon University ("WOU") to provide a paralegal course at WOU during the fall of 1997 and the spring, summer, and fall of 1998. First Amended Complaint ("Complaint") P 14. The tasks associated with providing the course were to be shared or allocated between WOU and CLS. Complaint P 14; Memorandum in Support of Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment ("MSJ"), Ex. 3, p. 3. With respect to advertising, CLS developed a flyer, approved by WOU, for the Paralegal Certificate Course, which contained the following statement: "This Professional Certificate establishes that an individual has achieved the level of professional [3] knowledge and competency necessary to work within the legal field." MSJ, Ex. 5.

On September 25, 1997, defendant Young, who was the Administrator of the Office of Degree Authorization ("ODA") at the time, received a letter from Pioneer Pacific College ("PPC") raising concerns regarding the marketing of the WOU program as one for paralegal professional training that prepares the novice for work as a paralegal. Defendant's Reply to Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment ("Reply"), Ex. 1, p. 1. Young investigated the course between September 19, 1997 and April 6, 1998 to determine whether CLS needed to be licensed to offer the training program in Oregon. Affidavit of David Young ("Young Aff.") PP 10-17.

As a result of that investigation, Young filed a formal complaint with ODE Specialist Lindley, and both the ODE and ODA corresponded with CLS to determine if an exemption could be crafted for CLS. Affidavit of Ray Lindley ("Lindley Aff.") PP 6-17; Young Aff. PP 10-17; MSJ, Exs. 2-4, 6-10; Affidavit of Scott Hatch ("Hatch Aff."), Exs. 6, 12, 13. These efforts failed, however, because CLS did not seek licensure and WOU did not seek to "sponsor" [4] CLS and assume responsibility for the program. MSJ, Ex. 9; Affidavit of Michele Price ("Price Aff.") P 13. Some efforts were made to bring the CLS course into compliance, including the development of a new flyer, Hatch Aff., Ex. 15, the distribution of a disclaimer to students, Hatch Aff. P 26, and verification that all students were professionals before entering the course, Hatch Aff., Exs. 16, 18.

WOU terminated its agreement with CLS on June 18, 1998, effective August 2, 1998, after having offered the course three times for total revenue of $ 25,440, seventy percent ($ 17,808) of which went to plaintiffs. Price Aff. PP 12, 14. CLS notified Oregon of its intent to sue on May 5, 1998. Complaint P 26.

STANDARD

HN1[] Summary judgment should be granted if there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). If the moving party shows that there are no genuine issues of material fact, the non-moving party must go beyond the pleadings and designate facts showing an issue for trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\). A scintilla of evidence, [5] or evidence that is merely colorable or not significantly probative, does not present a genuine issue of material fact. United Steelworkers of America v. Phelps Dodge, 865 F.2d 1539, 1542 \(9th Cir. 1989\).

HN2[] The substantive law governing a claim determines whether a fact is material. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\); see also T.W. Elec. Service v. Pacific Elec. Contractors, 809 F.2d 626, 630 \(9th Cir. 1987\). HN3[] Reasonable doubts as to [*974] the existence of a material factual issue are resolved against the moving party. T.W. Elec. Service, 809 F.2d at 631. Inferences drawn from facts are viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Id. at 630-31.

DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs' claims involve state tort claims as well as federal antitrust and civil rights claims. As discussed below, under the Oregon Tort Claims Act ("OTCA"), the state of Oregon is the only proper defendant for state tort claims, and the state is immune from suit in federal court under the Eleventh Amendment. Plaintiffs' federal claims also fail for the reasons explained [6] below. I thus conclude that summary judgment in favor of defendants is appropriate.

A. State Tort Claims

1. Oregon Tort Claims Act

Plaintiffs bring a variety of tort claims against defendants, as noted above. The state argues that the OTCA substitutes the state as the only defendant in actions based on alleged torts of a public body or its employees, officers, and agents acting "within the scope of their employment or duties." See ORS 30.265. The OTCA's definition of a "public body" includes departments, agencies, boards, commissions, and political subdivisions of the state as well as intergovernmental organizations. See ORS 30.260\(4\). The statute thus covers all named defendants, including Lindley, Fleming, and Young, as long as they were acting within the scope of their employment or duties. Plaintiffs do not allege that defendants Lindley or Fleming were acting outside the scope of their employment. Thus, under the OTCA, the state is substituted as the only proper defendant in this suit against the ODE, OEES, and defendants Lindley and Fleming.

Plaintiffs do contend that defendant Young was not acting within the scope of his employment in his contact with [7] CLS, arguing that Young, "on his own volition and motivated by his personal agenda, which was not related to the ODA, maliciously raised the claims that CLS was allegedly violating ORS 345.603." Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment ("Response"), p. 7. This claim evidently is founded on plaintiffs' belief that Young had a relationship with PPC which motivated his investigation of CLS. Response, p. 7; Plaintiffs' Statement of Material Fact in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment ("Response Facts") P 10; Hatch Aff. P 19. Plaintiffs further argue that under Berry v. Dept. of Gen'l. Services, 141 Ore. App. 225, 228, 917 P.2d 1070 \(1996\), defendant Young cannot gain automatic immunity via the OTCA based solely on the Attorney General's determination that the state is the only proper defendant.

In Brungardt v. Barton, 69 Ore. App. 440, 443, 685 P.2d 1021 \(1984\), the Oregon Court of Appeals laid out the following considerations in analyzing whether a defendant was acting within the scope of his or her employment within the meaning of ORS 30.265\(1\): (a) whether the conduct was of the kind the defendant was hired [8] to perform, (b) whether the conduct occurred within an "authorized time and space," and (c) whether the defendant was "motivated, at least in part, by a purpose to serve the employer." 69 Ore. App. at 443 (citing Stanfield v. Laccoarce, 284 Ore. 651, 655, 588 P.2d 1271 \(1978\)). HN4 Summary judgment regarding whether conduct was within the scope of employment is "appropriate when only one reasonable conclusion can be drawn from the facts." Id. (citing Stanfield, 284 Ore. at 655; Thomas v. Parker Refrigerated Services, Inc., 61 Ore. App. 234, 240, 657 P.2d 692 \(1983\)) (affirming the trial court's grant of defendant's motion for summary judgment where, under the facts before the court, the excessive use of force was not necessarily outside the scope of employment since defendant was authorized to use force under some circumstances).

[*975] In support of the claim, plaintiffs offer little more than statements made in plaintiff Hatch's own affidavit. Indeed, the only other evidence cited by plaintiffs is a statement made at the end of a two-page letter from Young to WOU provost Betty Youngblood, asking, "Do you not agree that my relationship [9] with officials of other schools is irrelevant?" Hatch Aff., Ex. 6, p. 2.

An analysis of the Brungardt factors in the circumstances presented here leaves no doubt that defendant Young's conduct in "raising the claims" against CLS fell within the scope of his employment. Brungardt, 69 Ore. App. at 443.

1. Conduct of kind defendant was hired to perform

Young conducted an investigation upon receiving the complaint from PPC, contacted defendant Lindley, and reported his investigation findings to WOU and to CLS as was his responsibility. Reply, Ex. 1, 2; Hatch Aff., Ex. 2, 6,

10. Young's conduct was authorized, even required, by state regulations and was, therefore, of the type he was hired to perform. See ORS 348.603;¹ OAR 583-040-0005;² [\[10\] ORS 345.030](#).³

Plaintiffs contend that ORS 345.015\(4\) exempted them from state regulation under ORS Chapter 345 because it exempts training that is "advertised or promoted to be in the nature of professional self-improvement but is not advertised or promoted as leading to or fulfilling the requirements for licensing, certification, accreditation or education credentials." (Emphasis added.) However, the statute clearly does not exempt those programs that are promoted as leading to certification, and it was plaintiffs' promotion of the program as leading to a "Professional Certificate" that apparently prompted the complaint and subsequent investigation of the program. Thus, plaintiffs' program is not exempt under ORS 345.015, [\[11\]](#) and defendant Young's conduct in dealing with CLS was of the kind he was hired to perform.

b. Conduct occurred in authorized time and space

There is no allegation that Young's conduct was performed outside of the space and time related to his employment.

c. Conduct motivated by purpose to serve employer

While plaintiffs allege that Young was motivated by "his personal agenda," Response, p. 7, they provide no evidentiary support for this assertion and none can be inferred from the record, particularly as Young initiated the investigation only upon receiving a complaint and was responsible for responding to the complaint. Thus, the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the facts is that Young was motivated by a purpose to serve his employer, the ODA and state of Oregon. Hence, Young's conduct was within the scope of his employment.

Plaintiffs' argument that, under Berry, the court cannot simply accept the Attorney General's assertion of immunity is accurate but does not alter my decision today. Berry held that the court should determine for itself whether the defendant [\[*976\]](#) was acting within the scope of employment and should not dismiss the claims against a defendant [\[12\]](#) in his or her individual capacity "until it is satisfied that there is either no legal or no factual basis for them." 141 Ore. App. at 231. In that case, the trial court had not made an independent determination of either the factual or legal basis for immunity. In contrast, I have analyzed whether defendant Young was acting within the scope of his employment and determined that he was within the scope of his employment in the conduct alleged here, thus Berry is not controlling. I conclude that the state of Oregon is the only proper defendant for all of the state tort claims.

2. Eleventh Amendment Immunity

It is well established that HNS⁴ the Eleventh Amendment bars citizens from bringing claims against a state or state agency in federal court unless the state has waived its immunity or Congress abrogates it under the Fourteenth Amendment. See Alden v. Maine, 144 L. Ed. 2d 636, 119 S. Ct. 2240 (1999); Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 54, 134 L. Ed. 2d 252, 116 S. Ct. 1114 (1996); Duffy v. Riveland, 98 F.3d 447, 452 (9th Cir. 1996) (citing Atascadero State Hospital v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 242, 87 L. Ed. 2d 171, 105 S. Ct. 3142 (1985)).⁵ The state of Oregon has not consented to the suit, MSJ, p. 5, and plaintiffs have not shown a basis for federal court jurisdiction over the state for these claims. Thus, the Eleventh Amendment bars the state tort claims raised in plaintiffs' complaint from being heard in this court.

¹ ORS 348.603 delegates to the ODA the responsibility of terminating "substandard or fraudulent degree activities" and reviewing "proposed new publicly funded post-secondary programs and locations." (WOU is a publicly funded post-secondary school.)

² OAR 583-040-0005(1) gives the ODA the "responsibility to prevent new publicly funded post-secondary programs or locations from causing detrimental duplication or significantly adverse intersegmental impact."

³ ORS 345.030 requires the licensure of career schools, defined in ORS 345.010 as "any private proprietary professional, technical, home study, correspondence, business or other school instruction, organization or person that offers any instruction or training for the purpose or purported purpose of instructing, training or preparing persons for any profession." (Emphasis added.)

B. Antitrust Claims

Plaintiffs claim that defendants violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, "in restraining trade and intent to monopolize trade in a specific geographic area through activities prohibited by law including 'sham' complaints to governmental agencies designed to restrain trade and to drive [plaintiffs] from a specific geographic market through harassment rather than through legitimate process." Complaint P 31.

HN6[¹⁴] To prevail on a claim under 15 U.S.C. § 1, plaintiffs must satisfy the following elements: "(a) the existence of a combination or conspiracy, (b) entered into by the parties in order to achieve monopoly power and effectuate an unreasonable restraint of trade, and (c) causal antitrust injury." Foremost Int'l. Tours, Inc. v. Qantas Airways Ltd., 478 F. Supp. 589, 594 \(D. Haw. 1979\) (citing Knutson v. Daily Review, Inc., 548 F.2d 795 \(9th Cir. 1976\)). [¹⁴]

HN7[¹⁵] The focus of a § 1 analysis is on "evidence of an unreasonable restraint of trade resulting from action undertaken pursuant to the conspiracy or agreement." Foremost, 478 F. Supp. at 595. HN8[¹⁶] With respect to the evidence adduced in support of an antitrust claim in a § 1 context, "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence." Pacific Exp., Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 959 F.2d 814, 816 \(9th Cir. 1992\)(quoting Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\)).

HN9[¹⁷] To prevail on a monopolization of trade or commerce claim under 15 U.S.C. § 2, plaintiffs must establish the following elements: (1) defendants possess monopoly power in the relevant market, (2) defendants willfully acquired or maintained their monopoly power, and (3) causal antitrust injury. See Pacific Express, 959 F.2d at 817 (citing Movie 1 & 2 v. United Artists Communications Inc., 909 F.2d 1245, 1254 \(9th Cir. 1990\)). HN10[¹⁸] A claim that defendants attempted to monopolize must establish the following facts: (1) specific [¹⁵] intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury. Pacific Express, 959 F.2d at 817 (citing Movie 1 & 2, 909 F.2d at 1254). Within the meaning of § 2, "monopoly" means "the acquisition of power to fix prices, limit production, and deteriorate quality." [Lynch v. Magnavox, Co. \[977\] et al., 94 F.2d 883, 888 \(9th Cir. 1938\)](#) (citing Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 52, 53, 61, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 \(1911\)). HN11[¹⁹] The Sherman Act also is violated if an organization takes action in furtherance of a plan with the purpose of imposing an "unreasonable restraint" other than monopoly or price-fixing. See Lynch, 94 F.2d at 890.

Defendants do not maintain monopoly power in the paralegal training market. Defendants regulate plaintiffs and plaintiffs' competition in the relevant market; they do not compete with plaintiffs in the relevant market. Plaintiffs allege that defendants restrain trade through "sham" complaints, presumably referring to the complaint lodged [¹⁶] by PPC. Plaintiffs further allege that defendants used harassment, rather than legitimate process, to effectuate this restraint of trade. While the correspondence between Oregon's agents and CLS was somewhat heated, plaintiffs' evidence falls short of demonstrating that defendants harassed them. Indeed, defendant Lindley repeatedly attempted to resolve the dispute, while plaintiffs responded both by objecting to the demands and, occasionally, by acquiescing to them. Thus, plaintiffs also fail to establish an unlawful motive on behalf of defendants.

In summary, plaintiffs have not shown that defendants intended to destroy competition in the paralegal training market, or that defendants' regulatory efforts were predatory or anti-competitive and aimed at achieving an illegal purpose such as unreasonable restraint of trade. Thus, plaintiffs have failed to establish an antitrust claim under either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act. Because plaintiffs' claim for treble damages under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, is based upon their antitrust claim, plaintiffs' claim for treble damages also fails.

C. Federal Civil Rights Claims

1. Section 1983

Plaintiffs [17] allege that defendants infringed upon their civil rights "to engage in interstate commerce and to be free from unreasonable restraints of trade." Complaint P 86. Because plaintiffs also allege that this court has jurisdiction under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, I assume that they mean to bring their civil rights claim under § 1983.⁴ Plaintiffs further allege that the defendants' uneven enforcement of ORS 345.030 constitutes unconstitutional discrimination, because the statute's predecessor, ORS 348.835, was ruled unconstitutional in part because it applied differently to out-of-state schools operating in Oregon. See City University v. State of Oregon, Office of Educational Policy and Planning, 126 Ore. App. 459, 870 P.2d 222 \(1994\); Response, pp. 10-11.

[18] Because claims brought against state officials in their official capacity and claims brought against state officials in their personal or individual capacity are treated differently, these claims are addressed separately here.

a. Defendants Sued in Official Capacity

The Supreme Court determined in Will v. Michigan Dept. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 64, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 109 S. Ct. 2304 \(1989\), that "a State is not a person within the meaning of § 1983." 491 U.S. at 64; see also Thompson v. City of Los Angeles, 885 F.2d 1439, 1443 \(9th Cir. 1989\) (determining that the University of California is "an arm of the state" and therefore not a person within the meaning of § 1983). Suits against state officials in their official capacity are suits "against the official's office" and thus "no different from a suit against the State itself." Will, 491 U.S. at 71.

To resolve any doubts regarding state officials' liability in § 1983 claims, the Supreme Court held in Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 27, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301, 112 S. Ct. 358 \(1991\), that HN12[↑] state officials who are sued in their official capacities [19] "are not 'persons' for purposes of the suit because they assume the identity of the government that employs them." 502 U.S. at 27 (citing Will, 491 U.S. 58 at 71). However, HN13[↑] state officials who are sued in their personal capacities are "persons" within the meaning of § 1983. See Hafer, 502 U.S. at 27-29. As such, the focus of analysis is not on "the capacity in which the officer inflicts the alleged injury" but on the capacity in which the state official is sued. Id. at 26.

In this case, plaintiffs sue all of the defendants in their official capacities only, except defendant Young. Thus, the § 1983 claims against defendants ODE, OEES, the State of Oregon, Lindley, Fleming, and Young in his official capacity are not properly before this court, because the state officials sued in their official capacities, arms of the state, and the state itself, are not persons within the meaning of § 1983 and therefore are not liable under § 1983. See Will, 491 U.S. at 64; Thompson, 885 F.2d at 1443; see also Peters v. Lieuallen, 693 F.2d 966 \(9th Cir. 1982\) (finding that a suit brought [20] under either § 1981 or § 1983 against the Oregon State Board of Higher Education is "a suit against the state qua state" and hence barred by the Eleventh Amendment); Jackson v. Hayakawa, 682 F.2d 1344, 1350 \(9th Cir. 1982\) (finding the University of California and the Board of Regents to be "instrumentalities of the state for purposes of the Eleventh Amendment").

b. Defendant Sued in Personal Capacity

With respect to their § 1983 claim against defendant Young in his personal capacity, plaintiffs fail to satisfy the elements of a § 1983 claim, because defendant Young's conduct remained within the confines of his official authority. HN14[↑] There are two essential elements to a claim brought under § 1983: (1) that the defendant acted under color of state law and (2) that the conduct deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities conferred by the Constitution or laws of the United States. See West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 48, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40, 108 S. Ct. 2250 \(1988\); Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662, 106 S. Ct. 662 \(1986\).

⁴ Plaintiffs claim that this court has subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, but § 1983 contains no jurisdictional provision. Congress provided for federal jurisdiction over federal civil rights claims in 28 U.S.C. § 1343. See Ybarra v. Town of Los Altos Hills, 503 F.2d 250, 252 \(9th Cir. 1974\); York v. Story, 324 F.2d 450 \(9th Cir. 1963\). Strictly speaking, federal courts have subject matter jurisdiction over § 1983 claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331, as long as the complaint alleges "a right to recover under the Constitution and laws of the United States," and is not "wholly insubstantial and frivolous." Keniston v. Roberts, 717 F.2d 1295, 1298 \(9th Cir. 1983\) (quoting Jackson Transit Authority v. Local Division 1285, 457 U.S. 15, 21 n.6, 72 L. Ed. 2d 639, 102 S. Ct. 2202 \(1982\)).

With respect to the first element, Young's actions fell within the purview of his responsibilities [21] as defined by Oregon law, as discussed previously, and he was, therefore, acting under color of state law. See ORS 348.603, ORS 345.030, OAR 583-040-0005.

With respect to the second element, however, Young's conduct did not violate rights conferred to plaintiffs by either the Constitution or federal statutes. Plaintiffs assert that Young violated their right to "engage in interstate commerce" and "be free from unreasonable restraints of trade." Complaint P 86. Young did not violate the constitutional rights, conferred to plaintiffs in the "negative" commerce clause,⁵ when he required that CLS either seek licensure or obtain sponsorship from WOU to continue operating as a career school in Oregon.

[*979] HN15[↑] The "negative" commerce clause "denies the States the power unjustifiably to discriminate [22] against or burden the interstate flow of articles of commerce." Oregon Waste Systems, Inc. v. Environmental Quality Comm'n. of the State of Oregon, 511 U.S. 93, 98, 128 L. Ed. 2d 13, 114 S. Ct. 1345 \(1994\). HN16[↑] In analyzing a law under the negative commerce clause, the initial inquiry centers on whether the law is discriminatory or "regulates evenhandedly with only "incidental" effects on interstate commerce." Id. (quoting Hughes v. Oklahoma, 441 U.S. 322, 336, 60 L. Ed. 2d 250, 99 S. Ct. 1727 \(1979\)). Regulations falling into the latter category are valid unless "the burden imposed on such commerce is clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits." Id. (quoting Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174, 90 S. Ct. 844 \(1970\)).

Plaintiffs contend that ORS 345.030 is discriminatory in its enforcement, but they apparently concede that it is not discriminatory on its face. See Complaint, pp. 10-11. Thus, the focus of this analysis is on the incidental effects of the law on interstate commerce. The law in question is not excessively burdensome, as it merely requires the licensure of career [23] schools. See ORS 345.030. The standards for licensure are codified in ORS 345.325, which plaintiffs do not challenge. Plaintiffs did not seek licensure, nor do they assert that the standards were too stringent to permit compliance. Thus, plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that defendant Young violated § 1983 in his contact with CLS.

2. Section 1985\(3\)

Plaintiffs also claim that defendants conspired to interfere with plaintiffs' civil rights, in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1985\(3\). HN17[↑] To prevail on a claim of civil rights conspiracy, plaintiffs must allege and prove four elements:

- (1) a conspiracy; (2) for the purpose of depriving, either directly or indirectly, any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws, or of the equal privileges and immunities under the laws; and (3) an act in furtherance of this conspiracy; (4) whereby a person is either injured in his person or property or deprived of any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States.

Keenan v. Allan, 889 F. Supp. 1320, 1364 \(E.D. Wash. 1995\), aff'd., 91 F.3d 1275 \(9th Cir. 1996\).

HN18[↑] A conspiracy under § 1985\(3\) is "an [24] agreement between two or more individuals to deprive a person of some protected right, where one individual acts in furtherance of the objective of the conspiracy, which causes an actual injury to a person or property, or deprives a person of exercising any right or privilege as a United States citizen." Rios v. Navarro, 766 F. Supp. 1158, 1162 \(S.D. Fla. 1991\). Each member of the conspiracy "must have knowledge of the nature and scope of the agreement." Id.

The second element of a civil rights conspiracy claim requires a showing of both (a) a "legally protected right" and (b) "deprivation of that right motivated by "some racial, or perhaps otherwise class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus behind the conspirators" action." Keenan, 889 F. Supp. at 1364 (quoting Sever v. Alaska Pulp Corp., 978 F.2d 1529, 1536 (9th Cir. 1992)) (dismissing the conspiracy claim on motion for summary judgment, primarily due to plaintiffs' insufficient showing under the second element, finding that "persons who complain about sexual harassment" is not a qualifying class"). The "class" that is targeted by the defendant must be "something more [25] than a group of individuals who share a desire to engage in conduct that the § 1985(3) defendant disfavors." Keenan, 889 F. Supp. at 1364; see also Lopez v. Arrowhead Ranches, et al., 523 F.2d 924, 928 (9th Cir. 1975) ("Of itself, the creation of a class of victims by tortious conduct does not bring a claim within § 1985(3); such a class is created by every tort").

⁵ Plaintiffs do not specify what federal statute or portion of the Constitution defendants allegedly violated. Given the nature of the rights plaintiffs assert, I analyze their claim under the "negative" Commerce Clause.

Aside from the bare allegations, plaintiffs provide no evidence to support [*980] even an inference of conspiracy to deprive plaintiffs of the rights conferred under the negative commerce clause or of Young's alleged intent to drive CLS from the paralegal training market. Indeed, though CLS did not attempt to gain licensure, defendants did attempt to craft an exemption for CLS.

Certainly, the second element is not satisfied here. Plaintiffs appear to claim that defendants violated their federally protected rights by conspiring "together and with employees of Oregon . . . to drive Plaintiffs from the marketplace." Complaint P 89. Plaintiffs apparently claim that this action violated their "right to conduct commerce in Oregon and to be free from unreasonable restraints, free from arbitrary and [26] selective government interference, and free from conspiracies involving government employees to violate Plaintiff's protected rights." Complaint P 82.

Plaintiffs' claim appears to be precisely the type to which the Ninth Circuit referred in Lopez, in that the "class" plaintiffs assert here is comprised of "paralegal training programs regulated by defendants." Thus, plaintiffs have failed to satisfy the legal requirements for a civil rights conspiracy claim. Even if plaintiffs stated a claim under § 1985(3), they failed to provide any evidence to survive defendants' motion for summary judgment.

CONCLUSION

Defendants' motion for summary judgment (# 27) as to all claims is GRANTED, and this case is dismissed. Any other pending motions are denied as moot.

DATED this 18th day of August, 1999.

ROBERT E. JONES

U.S. District Judge

SMS Sys. Maintenance Servs. v. Digital Equip. Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

August 19, 1999, Decided

No. 99-1009

Reporter

188 F.3d 11 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19715 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,617

SMS SYSTEMS MAINTENANCE SERVICES, INC., Plaintiff, Appellant, v. DIGITAL EQUIPMENT CORPORATION, Defendant, Appellee.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied February 28, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 1585.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. Edward F. Harrington, U.S. District Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

warranty, aftermarket, customers, manufacturer, consumers, switching, purchasers, installed, hardware, products, software, costs, mid-range, prices, monopoly power, relevant market, foremarket, antitrust, markets, brand, terms, locked-in, package, firms, market power, anticompetitive, three-year, machines, offering, lock-in

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 Sherman Act, Defenses

The single product defense is customarily invoked to rebut allegations of an illegal tie brought under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down] Sherman Act, Defenses

The success of a single product defense invoked to rebut allegations of an illegal tie brought under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, ordinarily hinges on observations of actual market practices. If evidence shows that there is significant demand for separate components of what is alleged to be a single product and the product is in fact sold in those forms, there is no single product. Conversely, if all or substantially all competing firms always or almost always, discounting occasional accommodations for customers with special needs, sell two seemingly separate items together, then the two attributes may be treated as components of a single product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN3 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

To prove a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, the plaintiff must show both that the defendant has monopoly power in a relevant market and that it has maintained or increased that power through anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN4 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The purpose of defining a relevant market is to assist in determining whether a firm has market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 [down] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The monopolist's market power consists of having sufficient economic muscle to permit it to raise prices well in excess of competitive levels without inducing customers to turn elsewhere.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN6 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A traditional product or geographic market definition exercise would be the starting point in an aftermarket case if, but only if, a large market share in such a derivative market invariably translated into (or at least reliably indicated) monopoly power in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN7 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Most firms that service their manufactured products can be expected to have a very high percentage of the services aftermarket for those products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN8 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The foremarket does not always exert sufficient competitive pressure to insulate the aftermarket from monopolistic practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN9 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

A court may conclude that the aftermarket is the relevant market for antitrust analysis only if the evidence supports an inference of monopoly power in the aftermarket that competition in the primary market appears unable to check.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN10 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In any market with some degree of product differentiation, goods of a single brand will enjoy a certain degree of uniqueness. While that uniqueness may account for a manufacturer having a large market share in the services aftermarket for its own brand, that fact, without more, does not suffice to establish that the manufacturer enjoys monopoly power in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN11 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Unless the evidence shows that the manufacturer can exert raw power in the aftermarket without regard for commercial consequences in the foremarket, the aftermarket is not the relevant market. This means that, for antitrust cases involving derivative markets, courts cannot reflexively resort to traditional product market definition methods, but must look to other modes of scrutinizing the existence and measure of market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN12 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In aftermarket situations, market power vel non must be assessed by weighing the complete package of primary equipment, parts, and services.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN13 [+] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

As long as a warranty does not limit a customer's choice of service provider, there is usually no antitrust problem.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN14 [+] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Unless a substantial number of preexisting customers are locked-in, defections from the manufacturer's installed base, coupled with losses in the foremarket, in all probability will sabotage any effort to exploit the aftermarket.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN15 [+] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To make out a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, the plaintiff must show that the alleged monopolist has engaged in improper exclusionary conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN16 [+] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Antitrust law is designed to protect competition, not competitors. If there is no objective indication of harm to competition, a court cannot stifle a firm's ability to compete in the primary market just because some of its aftermarket competitors complain that they have lost business as a result. Such harm frequently occurs due to the specialized and dependent nature of the investment made by aftermarket firms rather than as the anticompetitive exercise of market power by manufacturers.

Counsel: Ronald S. Katz, with whom Anne Fiero, Coudert Brothers, Ronald F. Kehoe, and Warner & Stackpole LLP were on brief, for appellant.

J. Anthony Downs, with whom Shepard M. Remis, P.C., Anthony S. Fiotto, and Goodwin, Procter & Hoar LLP were on brief, for appellee.

Judges: Before Torruella, Chief Judge, Campbell, Senior Circuit Judge, and Selya, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: SELYA

Opinion

[*13] SELYA, Circuit Judge. In a complaint filed in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, SMS Systems Maintenance Services, Inc. (SMS) accused Digital Equipment Corporation (DEC) of violating Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, by integrating three-year warranties with sales of computer systems. SMS, an equipment servicer, asserted that deploying warranties in this manner unfairly constrained consumers' ability to choose their preferred service providers and thereby paved the way for a monopoly in the services aftermarket for DEC computers. The district judge granted summary judgment in DEC's favor. See [*2] SMS v. DEC, 11 F. Supp. 2d 166 (D. Mass. 1998). Although our reasoning does not mirror that of the lower court, we nonetheless affirm.

I

We sketch the facts, viewing them as favorably to SMS as reason and the record will permit. See Conward v. Cambridge Sch. Comm., 171 F.3d 12, 17 (1st Cir. 1999) (articulating summary judgment standard). We furnish additional details as they become relevant to the ensuing analysis.

DEC manufactures an array of hardware, ranging from personal computers (PCs) to mainframes. In the market for mid-range computers, DEC battles other heavyweights (e.g., IBM, Sun Microsystems, and Hewlett-Packard) for the attention and affection of consumers. In April 1994, DEC introduced its "Alpha" line, consisting largely of mid-range servers. These models were more powerful and more versatile than their predecessors and embodied certain distinctive technological advances. DEC included a three-year warranty as part of the mid-range Alpha [*14] package. Although multi-year warranties for PCs had become standard fare in the early 1990s, a three-year warranty in the mid-range server market was uncommon in 1994. One-year warranties were the [*2] norm -- indeed, DEC itself provided a one-year warranty in respect to its pre-Alpha products and continued to offer one-year warranties in connection with sales of its established "VAX" line of mid-range computers even after it introduced the Alpha models.¹

DEC's conception of a warranty as an instrument of competition is scarcely original. See, e.g., 3A Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P 761, at 55 (1996) (referring to warranty protection as a tool of "non-price competition" that has particular importance for firms competing in robust product-differentiated markets for durable equipment). A warranty functions essentially as an insurance policy. See generally Thomas J. Holdych and Bruce D. Mann, The Basis of the Bargain Requirement: A Market and Economic Based Analysis of Express Warranties, 45 DePaul L. Rev. 781, 794-99 (1996). The customer pays the purchase [*4] price and receives not only the purchased product itself but also the manufacturer's promise to repair defects and supply replacement parts without extra charge (usually under certain conditions and during a certain interval). Because a warranty is a mechanism through which a consumer can protect himself against the uncertainties inherent in owning a product that likely will require parts and service over time, the product's allure increases as the warranty terms become more generous. This attraction is magnified in some cases because a strong warranty signals a manufacturer's faith in the quality of its product. In theory, then, warranties boost sales (and, ultimately, profits).

Given this general experience, SMS's claim that DEC's warranty is anticompetitive appears odd at first blush. There is, however, a certain offbeat logic to SMS's position. The aftermarket for servicing computers is both dynamic and lucrative. While manufacturers usually seek to service the hardware that they produce, other firms compete with them for this business. Many of these independent service organizations (ISOs) operate nationally or regionally and some specialize in servicing particular brands of [*5] equipment. A manufacturer's customers may in fact prefer to use these ISOs for a variety of reasons, including loyalty, convenience, response time, pricing, and perceived quality of service.

Against this backdrop, SMS -- an ISO that operates nationally and specializes in servicing DEC equipment -- puts a sinister cast on DEC's introduction of "mandatory" warranties (that is, warranties that accompany the product at no extra charge). SMS contends that current users of DEC equipment, known in the industry argot as its "installed base," are effectively "locked-in" to buying DEC computers in the future because of the magnitude of their sunk costs (e.g., outlays related to training employees to work with DEC systems and to the acquisition of expensive software that is compatible with those systems). This lock-in phenomenon, SMS warns, creates an environment in which a warranty can function as a vehicle for aftermarket monopolization by creating a disincentive for computer purchasers to consult service firms other than the manufacturer itself. In SMS's view, a purchaser who has a warranty will not readily take his service business to an ISO because no consumer wants to pay twice for the [6] same service -- and the longer the warranty, the less the opportunity for ISOs to compete. SMS predicts that, if such practices are left unchecked, lost business opportunities will ruin ISOs, eliminate competition, and [*15] eventually enable manufacturers to raise aftermarket prices.

¹ In 1995, DEC extended the three-year warranty policy to new versions of the mid-range VAX systems.

II

Before moving to an analysis of SMS's claim, we must put a Trojan horse out to pasture. DEC suggests that this case involves only a "single product," because the challenged three-year warranty is nothing but an "attribute" of the hardware. If this were true, the primary equipment market would constitute the relevant market and DEC's share of it (according to its estimates, at least) would be far below what SMS would need to show a credible threat of monopolization, and, thus, the case would vanish quietly into the night.

HN1[] The single product defense is customarily invoked to rebut allegations of an illegal tie brought under Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1). See, e.g., Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 18-25, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). In the context of SMS's Section 2 monopoly claim, DEC appears to wield the [7] defense in a different manner, i.e., as a means of eliminating the possibility that its warranty has any relevant connection with the services aftermarket. Although we are tempted to dismiss DEC's assertion simply as a matter of common sense, the best indication of its infirmity resides in the record.

HN2[] The success of a single product defense ordinarily hinges on observations of actual market practices. If evidence shows that there is significant demand for separate components of what is alleged to be a single product and the product is in fact sold in those forms, there is no single product. See Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 462-63, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\); 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1744, at 203. Conversely, if all or substantially all competing firms always or almost always (discounting occasional accommodations for customers with special needs) sell two seemingly separate items together, then the two attributes may be treated as components of a single product. See generally 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1744, at 197-98.

In mounting its single product defense, DEC relies heavily on the affidavit [8] of Professor Jerry Hausman, a distinguished economist, who explains uncontroversially that warranties are tools used by manufacturers to promote the attractiveness of their products and thus to gain a competitive edge. Using this statement as a springboard, DEC vaults to the conclusion that hardware and warranty are a single product. But DEC leaps without looking. The record is pellucid that, while some other computer manufacturers bundle warranties with their machines, the practice, especially with regard to mid-range computers, is anything but universal.

Vendors of mid-range computers offer a variety of ancillary packages with their products, including service contracts, warranties of differing lengths, or nothing at all. Indeed, a DEC official, Jane Heaney, affirmed in the course of pretrial discovery that differing service packages are items that customers can (and do) use to differentiate between competing computer brands. In competitive markets, suppliers' offerings generally reflect consumer demand. See, e.g., Digital Equipment Corp. v. Uniq Digital Tech., Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 762 \(7th Cir. 1996\). We therefore conclude -- at least for the purpose of summary [9] judgment -- that the mid-range computer market treats warranty and equipment as separate products.

III

Having laid to rest DEC's attempt to shortstop the requisite analysis, we turn to the parameters of SMS's burden. HN3[] To prove a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, the plaintiff must show both that the defendant has monopoly power in a relevant market and that it has maintained or increased that power through anticompetitive conduct. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\); Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 21 \(1st Cir. 1990\); Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 373 \(7th Cir. 1986\). SMS's monopolization hypothesis begins with the proposition that, before all else, we must define the relevant market. Relying on traditional product market definition cases, see Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 \(1962\); United States v. E.I. du Pont De Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 \(1956\), SMS contends that, because [10] DEC's aftermarket products are "unique" and servicing DEC computers requires specialized expertise, the relevant market must be the aftermarket for servicing DEC mid-range servers.

The argument, if successful, would place SMS at a distinct advantage. Market share often serves as a proxy for market power. See, e.g., Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 30; Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New Engl., Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 797 \(1st Cir. 1988\). If we were to agree with SMS that the relevant market is DEC's aftermarket for services, then, given that DEC predominates in that market (as evidenced by its large market share), SMS would have traveled far on the road to establishing DEC's monopoly power. But we believe that SMS's single-minded focus on traditional concepts of product market definition oversimplifies the route it must take. Cases involving aftermarkets are sui generis.

HN4[] The purpose of defining a relevant market is to assist in determining whether a firm has market power. See Israel Travel Advisory Serv., Inc. v. Israel Identity Tours, Inc., 61 F.3d 1250, 1252-53 \(7th Cir. 1995\); see also U.S. Healthcare Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 598 \(1st Cir. 1993\) [11] (noting the importance of remembering what antitrust question the court is trying to answer when it engages in market definition). In its most basic iteration, HN5[] the monopolist's market power consists of having sufficient economic muscle to permit it to raise prices well in excess of competitive levels without inducing customers to turn elsewhere. See Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 31. It follows inexorably that HN6[] a traditional product or geographic market definition exercise would be the starting point in an aftermarket case if, but only if, a large market share in such a derivative market invariably translated into (or at least reliably indicated) monopoly power in that market.

This condition does not obtain as a matter of course. HN7[] Most firms that service their manufactured products can be expected to have a very high percentage of the services aftermarket for those products. See generally Daniel Wall, Aftermarket Monopoly Five Years After Kodak, 11 Antitrust 32, 32-33 (1997). Virtually by definition, manufacturers possess relative expertise in repairing their own products (an expertise that increases in importance as the good increases in technological [12] complexity) and consumers typically are reluctant to incur the transaction costs associated with locating and hiring alternative service providers.

But the naked fact that a manufacturer has a high percentage of the market for servicing its own products does not mean that it can raise the price of services or parts with impunity in that market. See 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1740, at 170-71. Reputation is important to a firm that constantly competes for new customers, and a manufacturer's behavior in the aftermarket probably will be scrutinized by customers shopping for the firm's products in the primary market. If the firm has a bad reputation, that will prompt potential customers to go elsewhere. Moreover, such a firm eventually will suffer defections from its installed base as well, for firms concerned with the long term cannot afford to bite the hands that feed them. See id. P 1740, at 153; see also Joseph Kattan, Market Power in the Presence of an Installed Base, 62 Antitrust [*17] L. J. 1, 15-16 (1993); Wall, supra, at 33. Under such circumstances, it ordinarily captures the reality of the marketplace to envision a firm's behavior in the aftermarket [13] as having a direct effect on the "cross-elasticity of demand," du Pont, 351 U.S. at 400, with respect to its products in the primary market.

Of course, markets do not always function in the manner we have just described. Kodak is a case in point. There, a group of ISOs complained that a copy-machine manufacturer which competed with ISOs in servicing its brand of copiers had engaged in exclusionary behavior in its parts and services aftermarket (Kodak had stopped supplying the ISOs with the parts required to service Kodak copy machines, while at the same time entering into pacts with independent parts manufacturers that prohibited them from supplying the ISOs with copier parts). See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 455-56. Then, the manufacturer told its customers that they could not purchase parts unless they agreed to use the manufacturer's aftermarket services. See id. at 456-58. Coupling evidence of this scheme with evidence that Kodak was charging supracompetitive prices in the aftermarket, the ISOs accused Kodak of improperly expanding its monopoly in the services aftermarket. See id.

Kodak countered that, as a matter of law, a manufacturer [14] cannot wield monopoly power in a derivative market because competitive primary markets, by definition, always check aftermarket behavior. The Court granted certiorari to consider the bona fides of this argument. See id. at 454-55. Ultimately, it rejected Kodak's contention as a matter of law and affirmed the remand for further proceedings because data in the record suggested that Kodak might in fact have been exacting monopoly prices in its derivative market and there was no sign that competition in the primary market deterred it from doing so. See id. at 477-78.

Kodak, then, stands for the proposition that HN8 the foremarket does not always exert sufficient competitive pressure to insulate the aftermarket from monopolistic practices. It does not hold, as SMS entreats, that the foremarket never exerts sufficient competitive pressure to keep the aftermarket pristine. And the fact that the primary market at times may fail to discipline a derivative market does not mean that the latter necessarily constitutes the relevant market for antitrust analysis. Rather, a litigant who envisions the aftermarket as the relevant market must advance hard evidence [15] dissociating the competitive situation in the aftermarket from activities occurring in the primary market. Cf. id. at 477 (noting that the plaintiff adduced evidence that the defendants were able to -- and did -- charge supracompetitive prices in the aftermarket). Put another way, HN9 a court may conclude that the aftermarket is the relevant market for antitrust analysis only if the evidence supports an inference of monopoly power in the aftermarket that competition in the primary market appears unable to check. See id. at 481-82; see also 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1740, at 170-71.

We summarize succinctly. HN10 In any market with some degree of product differentiation, goods of a single brand will enjoy a certain degree of uniqueness. See 3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 761, at 55-56. While that uniqueness may account for a manufacturer having a large market share in the services aftermarket for its own brand, that fact, without more, does not suffice to establish that the manufacturer enjoys monopoly power in that market. HN11 Unless the evidence shows that the manufacturer can exert raw power in the aftermarket without regard for commercial [16] consequences in the foremarket, the aftermarket is not the relevant market. This means that, for antitrust cases involving derivative markets, courts cannot reflexively resort to traditional product market definition methods, but must look to [*18] other modes of scrutinizing the existence and measure of market power. As Kodak teaches, HN12 in aftermarket situations, market power vel non must be assessed by weighing the complete package of primary equipment, parts, and services.²

[17] IV

We turn next to the question of whether SMS has managed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to DEC's alleged monopoly power. We think it has not.

A

Laboring to dispel the customary expectation that competition in the primary market may serve as a substantial deterrent to anticompetitive behavior in an aftermarket, SMS first asserts that this is a case in which information

² Although SMS lobbies for a different legal standard, the focal point of its consumer exploitation thesis is that DEC is attempting to exploit its installed base and achieve a monopoly (or a near-monopoly market share) in the services aftermarket by imposing a three-year warranty on all hardware purchases. In the last analysis, this theory depends on the proposition that DEC asserts power in the services aftermarket only by forcing matters in the primary computer equipment market, and thus raises questions characteristic of those situations in which monopolists are alleged to have parlayed power from one market into another. See, e.g., Kodak, 504 U.S. at 461-62 (discussing tying); United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107-08, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 \(1948\) (discussing leveraging). This approach, in and of itself, invites us to look at the primary market, and thus tends to confirm our conclusion that, in determining whether DEC enjoys an aftermarket monopoly, we cannot ignore the impact of the foremarket.

costs have distorted market behavior. The argument has its genesis in Kodak, where the Court suggested that, under some circumstances, the foremarket's inability to obtain needed information about the aftermarket could foil the former's ability to act as a check on the latter. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 473-76. Because this information could be difficult for ordinary copy-machine buyers to obtain, and Kodak apparently treated informed purchasers more favorably than uninformed purchasers (through price and term discrimination), the Court suggested that these facts might explain Kodak's ability to charge suprareactive prices in the aftermarket without suffering adverse consequences in the foremarket. See id. at 473-74.

DEC counters that the purely prospective [\[18\]](#) nature of its warranty policy removes this case from Kodak's sphere of influence. DEC explains that the only customers affected by the warranty policy are those who purchase new DEC mid-range systems; contracts between ISOs and current owners of DEC platforms are unimpaired. Furthermore, purchasers are keenly aware of the warranty terms. If a customer does not like the warranty, DEC continues, he will shop elsewhere, either for a different brand of computer or for a DEC computer without a warranty. See, e.g., Digital, 73 F.3d at 762 (explaining that customers will shop for other brands if a manufacturer does not satisfy their needs).

We agree that both the transparency of DEC's warranty policy to buyers in the primary market and the policy's prospective outlook militate in DEC's favor. Let us begin with transparency. The Kodak Court's discussion of information costs stemmed exclusively from the concern that the type of information necessary for allowing the primary market to check anticompetitive behavior in the aftermarket was unavailable to the average copy machine purchaser. See 504 U.S. at 473-76. Given the specific means that [\[19\]](#) Kodak had adopted to stifle competition, the information relevant to the primary market would be lifecycle costing, which, the Justices concluded, was difficult to access. See id. at 473-74.

The information deficits that concerned the Kodak Court are largely absent here. SMS cites the three-year warranty as the instrument of market dominance. But, unlike [\[*19\]](#) the precise cost of owning a machine for its useful life (the Kodak scenario), the warranty's existence is obvious to any purchaser in the primary market and, therefore, SMS's ruminations about each purchaser's need to engage in lifecycle costing for installed hardware are beside the relevant point.³ Hence, the only datum that bears on alleged anticompetitive activity in the aftermarket is readily available to the foremarket. Given that the primary market's ability to check a firm's behavior in its own aftermarket hinges in substantial part on whether information about the latter is sufficiently reflected in the former, the transparency of DEC's allegedly monopolistic policy represents a salient departure from the Kodak scenario. Accord PSI Repair Serv., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811, 819-20, 822 [\[20\]](#) (6th Cir.) (concluding that the fact that the defendant's policies were "generally known" was a central datum in barring a Kodak-type claim), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1265, 138 L. Ed. 2d 195, 117 S. Ct. 2434 (1997).

[\[21\]](#) The prospective nature of the warranty further distinguishes this case from Kodak. Kodak had entered into agreements that precluded the distribution of Kodak parts to ISOs. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 458. These agreements were tantamount to a retroactive change in the rules because many customers had purchased Kodak machines against a background understanding that they would be able to procure parts from ISOs. Accordingly, this tergiversation detrimentally affected the expectations of those who had already sunk considerable sums of money into the acquisition of Kodak equipment. Such "bait and switch" tactics can be problematic from an antitrust standpoint when they enable exploitation. See Digital, 73 F.3d at 763 (concluding that "the material dispute that called for a trial [in Kodak] was whether the change in policy enabled Kodak to extract supra-competitive prices from customers who had already purchased its machines"); Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 23 F.3d 14, 20 (1st Cir.

³ In addressing the question of information deficits between a foremarket and an aftermarket, perfect information about the aftermarket is not required. Rather, the focus should be on whether the primary market is in possession of information that sufficiently reveals the anticompetitive tendencies of a manufacturer in its aftermarket. The nature of this information will depend on the product, the plaintiff's theory, and the particular facts. In some cases (like Kodak), lifecycle costing may be significant. In others, however, primary market consumers will not need to calculate lifecycle costs to gain an appreciation for what is happening in an aftermarket. Here, SMS points to no aftermarket behavior on DEC's part that would necessitate a foremarket consumer's inquiry into lifecycle costs. And in all events, SMS's theory of the case makes lifecycle costing irrelevant.

1994) (noting that Kodak's policy change jeopardized its customers' ability to protect themselves). Like the easy availability of information, the purely [22] prospective nature of the warranty helps to take this case out of Kodak's precedential orbit. See PSI Repair, 104 F.3d at 820, 822.

B

Although this constellation of factors undermines SMS's rote reliance on Kodak, the scenario would be fully dispositive of SMS's Section 2 claim only if all purchasers in the primary market were free agents. But SMS says that is not the case. It endeavors to draw an analogy between the Kodak plaintiffs' need to buy copier parts and the perceived need of those who already own DEC computers to purchase any new hardware from DEC (rather than its competitors). The linchpin of this analogy is SMS's insistence that repeat purchasers of computers are more or less compelled to patronize the manufacturer with whom they originally dealt because of the concomitant investment in, among other things, specialized training and software. As to these "locked-in" firms, SMS asseverates, integrating a three-year warranty into new computer systems is akin to the "policy change" that the Kodak Court decried because, at the time of the initial purchases, these consumers [*20] had no idea that future generations of DEC computers would bear [23] such warranty terms.

This argument has some conceptual footing. In theory, aftermarkets may be insulated from the competitive atmosphere of primary markets if, and to the extent that, current owners of a manufacturer's products find it prohibitively dear to "switch" to another product because of the large investment they have made. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 476. Because of switching costs, these owners might be harmed even if information about anticompetitive behavior is reflected in the primary market (for example, the manufacturer may offer better purchase terms to first-time buyers). Withal, we do not believe that the evidence suffices to create a genuine issue as to whether this theoretical possibility has been realized here.

Even though SMS's lock-in argument relies heavily on Kodak, there is an important factual distinction between the two cases in regard to the nature of the alleged switching costs. When the Kodak Court spoke of switching costs, it referred specifically to the cost of purchasing new copying equipment. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 476-77. What prompted the Court to suggest that switching would be necessary was Kodak's policy [24] of offering parts only to those customers who also purchased service from it. This meant that if a customer did not turn to Kodak for service, it could not get parts, and its copy machine eventually would be rendered useless.

Here, by contrast, DEC neither withholds parts nor otherwise precludes any hardware purchaser from using another service provider. If a customer prefers to retain an ISO, it does not need to switch to another computer system. Indeed, the record shows not only that customers do continue to hire ISOs to service DEC machines that are under warranty, but that SMS itself bids for (and has procured) such contracts. Thus, the only switching cost at issue is the cost of writing off the portion of the equipment's purchase price that represents the warranty. If the behavior of consumers and ISOs is any indication, the switching cost is not particularly significant. (Although SMS presents some conclusory testimony that this cost is the rough equivalent of the outlays for regular service contracts, it has absolutely no solid evidence to back up the claim -- and, indeed, this testimony is at variance with its announced position that the warranty is in actuality a "loss leader" [25] for DEC. See infra note 5.) At any rate, SMS has not proffered significantly probative evidence sufficient to create a fact question as to whether this alleged switching cost is material to a large enough segment of DEC's installed base to harm competition.

To sum up, while the warranty at issue here may act, at least in some cases, as a subtle disincentive that inhibits customers from consulting ISOs (because the customer would, by retaining an ISO, in effect write off whatever extra cost the manufacturer had built into the computer's purchase price to permit it to offer the warranty), there is nothing inherently anticompetitive about the warranty. Unlike Kodak, this is not a case in which a manufacturer effectively forces consumers to use one, and only one, service outfit. Moreover, nothing in the record before us (except for conclusory, self-serving testimony by SMS officers, which we need not credit on summary judgment) suggests that the existence of the warranty dissuades a sufficient number of customers who otherwise would have used ISOs' from doing so. Testimony of unbearable switching costs by a mere handful of disaffected customers does not satisfy SMS's burden of [26] showing that consumers are generally worse off as a result of DEC's warranty policy. See, e.g., 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1740, at 152-53.

That is essentially what the Eighth Circuit concluded in a post-Kodak case when it indicated that, HN13 as long as a warranty does not limit a customer's choice of service [*21] provider, there is usually no antitrust problem. See Marts v. Xerox, Inc., 77 F.3d 1109, 1112 (8th Cir. 1996); see also Digital, 73 F.3d at 761-62 (reaching a similar conclusion with respect to installed operating systems). We agree with this conclusion. Many manufacturers offer the market bundled products that have separable components. Every day, consumers purchase these products because "buyers often find package sales attractive; a seller's decision to offer such packages can merely be an attempt to compete effectively -- conduct that is entirely consistent with the Sherman Act." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12.

Of course, some consumers may not like all the components, but the overall package fits their needs, they are not constrained in looking elsewhere for alternative components, and they will not have [27] to scrap their prior investments just because the new package is not a perfect fit. Given this commonplace, it cannot be that every time some consumer or group of consumers does not like one component of a complex product, the manufacturer will be exposed to an antitrust claim on the ground that it has circumscribed consumer choice. The antitrust laws do not require manufacturers to customize their offerings to the precise specifications of each and every customer.

At the expense of carting coal to Newcastle, we note a second serious shortcoming that permeates SMS's lock-in argument. Throughout its analysis in this case, SMS assumes that all current DEC customers fall into the locked-in category. This taxonomy does not hold together: being part of an installed base and being locked-in are not synonymous. A lock-in phenomenon must be shown, not assumed. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 476; see also 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1740, at 152-53. Moreover, in undertaking this inquiry, the nature of the product must be taken fully into account, for that will inform an inquiring court about the degree of effective control the manufacturer may be able to exert over a consumer's [28] purchasing decisions. That is singularly important here, for the evidence required to show that an installed base is locked-in to future purchases of computer systems is quite different from that needed to show that a copy machine owner is locked-in to buying parts for that machine.

It is an article of faith, for antitrust purposes, that HN14 unless a substantial number of preexisting customers are locked-in, defections from the manufacturer's installed base, coupled with losses in the foremarket, in all probability will sabotage any effort to exploit the aftermarket. Our review of the instant record affords no reason to believe that an appreciable number of DEC users are, in fact, significantly locked-in to making repeat purchases of DEC mid-range computers. SMS's most direct evidence of lock-in comes from the testimony of individuals employed by two of DEC's customers. These individuals -- none of whom bore the ultimate responsibility for making decisions regarding new computer purchases and none of whom exhibited any specific or detailed knowledge of how management might go about calculating switching costs -- testified generally that once a company has committed to a certain brand [29] of hardware and has acquired ancillary software (including an operating system), it would be costly to migrate to another platform. Significantly, however, the testimony fails properly to account for the nature of a company's decision to purchase new computer hardware and, therefore, we cannot put much stock in it.

The evidence to which we have just referred assumes that a company's decision to replace its computer system will be dictated solely by the hardware that it currently uses. Under certain circumstances, the assumption might hold. The best example probably derives from the analogy that Kodak offers. Although the owner of a copy machine might hope that he will not require parts during the machine's useful life, the hope defies reality. [*22] When the moment of need occurs, the corporate decisionmaker must be able to purchase a Kodak part -- or else, scrap the machine. The fragility of the equipment forces the owner to buy parts, and this need, linked with owners' general unwillingness to sacrifice the remaining useful life of machinery, enables the manufacturer to control and exploit the situation.⁴

⁴This schema will not be true for every copier owner. If, for example, the remaining useful life of the copier is short enough that scrapping the machine rather than submitting to suprareactive aftermarket prices becomes a viable option, there is no lock-in with respect to that customer. Where relevant, the percentage of installed base customers who have old machines as opposed to those who have purchased more recently may be important to determining whether there is a substantial lock-in. We need not pursue the matter here.

[30] The record evidence shows that decisionmaking surrounding the purchase of a new mid-range computer, however, is qualitatively different from the decision to buy copier parts. Typically, a much wider variety of factors will enter into the computer user's decision. Although we do not discount the impact of a server's speed and power (which will lead to hardware upgrades), the record indicates that the availability of software applications designed to meet current or anticipated business needs usually is the determinative factor in this calculus.

This reality is largely borne out by a marketing survey and report that SMS considers to be one of the most significant pieces of documentary evidence in this case. The report's observations are particularly noteworthy because many of the survey respondents were chosen from DEC's installed base and the purpose of the study was to gauge their receptivity to DEC's Alpha and VAX computers. The survey concludes that end users do not focus principally on hardware when making decisions about buying new systems. Rather, in the words of the report, "applications drive the choice of platforms," because software applications represent the business solutions [31] to the problems confronting the computer user. There is no record evidence that contradicts, or even comes close to undercutting, this telling point.

A fortiori, if software is the primary determinant in commercial decisionmaking on computer system purchases, the power of affecting a customer's purchasing decisions resides more with those who design and sell software than with hardware manufacturers. That is exactly what the survey indicates. To complicate matters further, software companies tend to develop their applications so that they can be used with the more popular operating systems. In turn, given the efficiencies of networks, many consumers tend to opt for software that is usable on such systems. The evidence in this case shows that operating systems other than DEC's VMS -- such as Windows NT and UNIX - - are becoming increasingly prevalent (which perhaps explains why DEC engineered the new Alpha line to operate with all three) and many other hardware manufacturers make systems that can accommodate these other operating systems. If DEC is to remain the company of choice for its installed base, it cannot rest on its laurels.

The complex nature of the decision to purchase a [32] new computer system means that an analysis of switching costs in this context cannot parrot the linear inquiry that proved possible in Kodak. Here, the cost of shifting to another system must take into account the efficiency gains of buying new software -- gains that often may dwarf hardware price in dollar terms. This is true even if one considers the switching costs that are associated with retraining employees and discarding software designed to run exclusively on a particular platform. The record demonstrates convincingly that, in this industry, both software vendors and hardware manufacturers offer migration support for new customers in the form of significant discounts on training, installation, and software [*23] conversion, thus internalizing much of the switching costs.

The impressions that we have gathered from the marketing survey are largely confirmed by the very witnesses on whose testimony SMS relies. Quite aside from the statements these witnesses make about the magnitude of the cost of randomly switching from one currently functioning computer system to another -- testimony which, as is clear from our discussion, addresses an irrelevant scenario -- all of them acknowledge [33] that, all things considered, if a new computer system would bring more benefits, there would be no objection to the switch. The actual behavior of these witnesses' employers illustrates the point: their firms were in fact in the process of switching some of their systems to other platforms, citing the sorts of reasons we have catalogued.

In fine, the record does not support the conclusion that a substantial number of installed base customers are locked-in -- and SMS has failed to make the case. The power of software vendors, the rapid progress of software solutions, the unpredictability of when consumers will seek to purchase a brand new system, the ready willingness of competitors to absorb migration costs, and the uncertain calculus of cost versus efficiency gains that obtains when a firm moves to new applications all distinguish the computer purchase context from the copier context. This plethora of factors strongly implies that, in most instances, DEC has no effective control over whether a customer will remain loyal when opting to purchase a new computer system.

To address these issues, which are central to assessing the existence of a lock-in, SMS ought to have focused on proof [34] of the actual behavior of an installed base in terms of such consumers' tendency to return to the same manufacturer. It did not marshal any such proofs. Consequently, the record lacks the empirical evidence required to give us a proper glimpse into whether members of an installed base actually behave in conformity with SMS's switching cost hypothesis. Although we do not doubt that some customers may experience the lock-in that SMS envisions, the record affords no reason to believe that such customers are numerous or that they are representative of the installed base. And -- in marked contrast to Kodak -- there is no evidence, direct or circumstantial, that DEC has attempted to locate or exploit vulnerable customers within its installed base (or that it has the capacity to identify and isolate such customers).

These last points are particularly important. In a product-differentiated market (such as the mid-range computer hardware market), there always will be a subset of customers whose subjective preferences, given their specific business needs, will align them more closely with one manufacturer. As we remarked in a closely related context, however, this kind of preference does [\[35\]](#) not translate into the kind of economic power that antitrust law aims to mitigate. See Grappone, 858 F.2d at 797 ("Of course, virtually every seller of a branded product has some customers who especially prefer its product. But to permit that fact alone to show market power is to condemn ties that are bound to be harmless, including some that may serve some useful social purpose."). Sophisticated consumers with such preferences will know beforehand that they will lock themselves in by their choice of manufacturer and do so willingly. What would be of concern is if a firm were able to extend its control by improper means over a sufficiently sizable number of customers who did not have such a preference. The facts at hand do not fit this model. The evidence, taken most favorably to SMS, does not demonstrate a lock-in, certainly not one that raises antitrust concerns. See 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1740, at 152-53.

[*24] C

Because this case arises on an appeal from the entry of summary judgment, it behooves us to stress further SMS's failures at the empirical level.

Here, unlike in Kodak, the record is devoid of any evidence of supracompetitive prices [\[36\]](#) or other oppressive terms of business in the aftermarket.⁵ [\[37\]](#) Here, unlike in Kodak, the record furnishes no reason to believe that new customers are irrelevant to DEC; to the contrary the record shows unequivocally that DEC intended to sell Alpha computers vigorously to new as well as old customers in an effort to grow its market share.⁶ Here, unlike in Kodak, there is also no proof indicating that DEC has attempted to discriminate between customers who are knowledgeable and those who are not, or that it discriminates in price (or in offering different warranty terms) between new and repeat purchasers.⁷ Such discrimination, the Court explained, would be one way that manufacturers would attempt to prevent sophisticated purchasers from disciplining the aftermarket through their decision to forego buying from the manufacturer. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 475. Moreover, data such as these -- that new customers remain important to DEC and that the warranties offered to new and installed base customers have exactly the same terms -- are further signs of the absence of aftermarket exploitation. See 10 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 1740, at 159.

All of these factors were crucial to the Kodak Court's conclusions, forming the bases for the Court's attempts to explain, through hypotheses involving information deficits and switching costs, the possible causes of the market's apparently irregular behavior. See [\[38\]](#) 504 U.S. at 473-78. DEC's alleged behavior, however, is worlds apart

⁵ For example, there is no evidence that DEC has displayed a pattern of raising service and parts prices in the aftermarket, nor is there evidence that the price of the warranty itself represented a means of extracting monopoly profits. Indeed, SMS has taken the position that the price of the warranty -- whatever it may be -- actually represents a loss to DEC compared to what it would have gained had it kept its one-year warranties and charged for service during the second and third years.

⁶ In this regard, SMS points to evidence that DEC was not depending on its VAX models to grow market share. This evidence, however, is not damaging. Because Alpha and VAX both compete for the DEC installed base, one would expect that the terms governing the sale of VAX computers must be comparable to those of Alpha models. And if Alpha computers are competitive with computers in the mid-range computer market generally, then a transitive logic compels the conclusion that VAX terms are disciplined by the mid-range market. SMS has adduced no proof to suggest that matters are any different.

⁷ We do not mean to suggest that price discrimination is always a sign of anticompetitive behavior. It is not. See, e.g., Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler, Inc., 866 F.2d 525, 527-28 \(1st Cir. 1989\).

from Kodak's. In the absence of comparably suspicious practices, there is no reason to assume that DEC's interest in maintaining its position in a fiercely competitive primary market is not checking any exploitative tendencies in the derivative market.

Represented by able counsel, SMS strives resourcefully to fill these evidentiary gaps. When queried at oral argument, it referred us to the affidavit of Joseph Scordino (SMS's director of marketing). That affidavit does not remedy the empirical shortcomings that we have identified. The closest it comes is the following: "It has been my experience that when [DEC] does not face competition, its prices tend to be higher. For example, [DEC] does not discount its maintenance services on the Alpha 8000s. Thus, the elimination of competition from SMS and other Independent Service Organizations, should result in price increases to customers." We fail to see how we can allow this self-serving speculation to pass for competent evidence. The third sentence is conclusory [*25] conjecture of a kind that begs the very question at issue, namely, whether the foremarket sufficiently disciplines [39] the aftermarket. The same is true for the first sentence, because, if competition in the foremarket checks activity in the aftermarket, the absence of competitors in the aftermarket will not lead to higher prices. The second sentence, which deals with Alpha 8000s, is irrelevant; those computers are high-end servers and belong to a different product market (and the record is bereft of evidence that the market structure for high-end servers has any bearing, direct or by reasoned analogy, on the market structure for mid-range servers).

SMS also cites the report of its retained expert, Dr. William Bleuel, to the effect that DEC has a much greater share of the services aftermarket than it should enjoy, given low customer satisfaction. If DEC did not have monopoly power, this argument runs, it would not have been able to keep its large share of the aftermarket in spite of rampant dissatisfaction. Expert opinions, however, are no better than the data and methodology that undergird them -- and, on this score, Dr. Bleuel's conclusions are highly suspect. Although we find Dr. Bleuel's report deficient on several levels, it suffices to discuss only the shortcomings of his data collection.

[40] Dr. Bleuel did not conduct a customer satisfaction survey, but based his opinion on his interpretation of certain internal DEC documents. The relevant part of his report begins with the intuitively obvious proposition that when customer satisfaction declines, chances are that a company will lose some business. Then, citing to sources which it neither attaches nor discusses, the report concludes that DEC's customer satisfaction ratings have been declining. Dr. Bleuel's conclusion may or may not be correct, but an expert must vouchsafe the reliability of the data on which he relies and explain how the cumulation of that data was consistent with standards of the expert's profession. See Wessmann v. Gittens, 160 F.3d 790, 804-05 (1st Cir. 1998); see also Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 1176 (1999) (directing courts "to make certain that an expert, whether basing testimony upon professional studies or personal experience, employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field").

Not only did Dr. Bleuel fail to discuss in his report the nature of [41] the data and its meaning, but he failed to explain whether the information-gathering technique used in the DEC documents was valid, whether the data was sufficiently representative to permit him to draw any relevant conclusions, and whether the sampling methodology used to compile these documents corresponded to methods that might be considered legitimate in his discipline. Expert testimony that offers only a bare conclusion is insufficient to prove the expert's point. See Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange Nat'l Bank, 877 F.2d 1333, 1339 (7th Cir. 1989) ("An expert who supplies nothing but a bottom line supplies nothing of value to the judicial process.").

V

We add a coda. When a party brings a Section 2 claim, it is not enough simply to show that there is monopoly power. Monopoly power may be obtained through legitimate means. An antitrust problem arises only when an improper use of that power, to the detriment of the forces of competition, occurs. Thus, HN15 to make out a Section 2 claim, the plaintiff must show that the alleged monopolist has engaged in improper exclusionary conduct. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 482-83; Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 600-05, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985); [42] Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 230 (1st Cir. 1983).

The improper conduct identified by SMS is the inclusion of a three-year warranty [26] on new equipment in the purchase package.⁸ But a warranty has obvious virtue as a tool of competition, and the commercial justification for its use is compelling. Indeed, people ordinarily associate warranties with consumer welfare and highly competitive markets.

To avoid the presumption that DEC's warranty is no more [*43] than a legitimate sales tool, SMS points to two internal documents which it claims show that DEC intended to use the warranty as a device to capture the totality of the services aftermarket. These documents appear to be a part of an ongoing series of correspondence between DEC functionaries relative to the launching of the Alpha product line. One document makes mention of the warranties having "100% penetration with all product sales" and the other makes a similar point. Read in context, neither document so much as hints at an intent to suffocate the aftermarket. The mere fact that the terms "warranty," "penetration," and "100%" appear in a single writing does not signal an improper attempt to distort market forces.

In the last analysis, SMS's monopoly power hypothesis defies common sense. If the three-year warranty is the only means toward monopolization, it will, under the assumptions that SMS adopts, prove to be a remarkably ineffective tool. SMS has taken the position that the warranty actually represents a loss to DEC because, all things being equal, DEC can make more money providing services than it can offering warranties. See supra note 5. If this is true, SMS's argument [*44] takes on the flavor of the predatory pricing cases and, therefore, must afford some basis for a belief that DEC can recoup these losses at some point in the future in order to make the enterprise worthwhile.

But DEC has placed no restriction on the aftermarket for service of its products. Parts are available to all market participants, and there is no indication in the record either that there are restrictions on their availability or that such a policy is even being contemplated. Meanwhile, ISOs are free to service all DEC computers, including those that are under warranty, both during the warranty period and after its expiration. On these facts, it seems highly unlikely that DEC will recoup the sums that SMS says that it foregoes when it offers the warranties in the first place. All of this indicates that the more likely explanation for the warranty relates to its efficiency as a means of growing market share in the primary market. In any event, sacrifice now/recoup later claims do not necessarily bespeak monopolistic behavior, see, e.g., Barry Wright, 724 F.2d at 231-36, and we believe that this dimension of SMS's logic is yet another element that distances [*45] its case from Kodak while simultaneously bringing it within the orbit of Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) (noting that evidence must be even more persuasive to stave off summary judgment when the theory set forth by the party opposing the motion is implausible).

That SMS may have lost business as a result of DEC's policy is not, in and of itself, a concern of the antitrust laws. HN16 [↑] Antitrust law is designed to protect competition, not competitors. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458-59, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993). If there is no objective indication of harm to competition, we cannot stifle a firm's ability to compete in the primary market just because some of its aftermarket competitors complain that they have lost business as a result. After all, such [27] harm frequently occurs due to the specialized and dependent nature of the investment made by aftermarket firms rather than as the anticompetitive exercise of market power by manufacturers. See 3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 762, at 65-66 (explaining the phenomenon in the context [*46] of self-distribution decisions made by manufacturers).

VI

⁸ SMS claims that the warranty also indirectly causes further damage to ISOs because of the phenomenon of "one stop" servicing. The idea is that companies that have several DEC machines will opt to go with DEC services after purchasing a new (warranty-bearing) computer because they do not want to deal with the confusion resulting from having several different service providers. As with much else in this case, concrete evidence that this supposed behavioral pattern exists, or that it is in any way significant, is wanting.

We need go no further. The Kodak Court resorted to economic theory in order to highlight the possibility that, under the notably sinister circumstances of the case (evidence of supracompetitive prices in the aftermarket, price discrimination favoring certain consumers, and no resulting change in sales in the primary market), information deficits and switching costs better explained the available market data than did the defendant's glib assertion that the aftermarket is never independent of the foremarket. Theory is powerful when it explains reality. But when evidence for the trumpeted reality is lacking, the theory is of no practical value. Here, the record contains no significantly probative evidence that DEC is engaged in sinister practices or otherwise suffocating competition, and, hence, theoretical possibilities alone are inadequate to block the swing of the summary judgment ax.

Affirmed.

End of Document

Fogie v. THORN Ams., Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

May 10, 1999, Submitted ; August 20, 1999, Filed

No. 98-2442, No. 98-2447

Reporter

190 F.3d 889 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19728 **

Vickie Fogie, Joan Leonard, and Angela Adams, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated; Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. THORN Americas, Inc., Defendant-Appellant, THORN EMI North America Holdings, Inc., a Delaware corporation, * Defendant-Appellant. Vickie Fogie, Joan Leonard, and Angela Adams, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated; Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. THORN Americas, Inc., formerly known as Rent-A-Center, Inc., Defendant-Appellee, THORN EMI North America Holdings, Inc., A Delaware corporation, Defendant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: [1] As Corrected August 25, 1999.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota.

Disposition: Judgment of District Court vacated and all other respects affirmed.

Core Terms

enterprise, racketeering, plaintiffs', entities, rent-to-own, retrospective, collection, principal and interest, subsidiary, cy pres, conspiracy, damages, predicate act, leased, wholly owned subsidiary, summary judgment, cancellation, circuits, courts, harsh, retroactive application, civil suit, circumstances, conducting, designated, related business, escrow fund, challenges, consisting, customers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Standing

HN1[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To recover in a civil suit for a violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act (RICO), a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant violated 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962; (2) that the plaintiff suffered injury to business or property; and (3) that the plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by the defendant's RICO violation. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\) \(1994\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

190 F.3d 889, *889 U.S. App. LEXIS 19728, 1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN2 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\) \(1994\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, only individuals who have suffered injury from the use or investment of racketeering income have standing to bring a civil suit under 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1962\(a\) and 1964\(c\).

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > National Banks > Usury Litigation

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Penalties

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Adjustments & Enhancements > Criminal History > Three Strikes

HN4 [down] Interest & Usury, Usury Litigation

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) forbids the predicate acts of racketeering only insofar as an enterprise is involved. RICO is not a recidivist statute with enhanced penalties for acts of racketeering that are elsewhere proscribed in the criminal code.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The collection of unlawful debt does not constitute a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\). It does not involve the use or investment of racketeering income in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

190 F.3d 889, *889 U.S. App. LEXIS 19728, 1

HN6 [blue download icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act grants standing only to parties injured by the use or investment of the unlawfully obtained income, the completed 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\) violation.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN7 [blue download icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\) \(1994\) creates liability for those persons who conduct or participate in the conduct of a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization enterprise.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 [blue download icon] Legislation, Interpretation

Statutes should be read to give each word some operative effect.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To bring a claim under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\), a plaintiff must allege an injury from the use or investment of the racketeering income that is separate and distinct from injuries allegedly caused by the defendant's engaging in the predicate acts.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\) \(1994\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To be found liable for a violation of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), the person who conducts or participates in the conduct of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization enterprise must be distinct from the enterprise itself.

190 F.3d 889, *889 U.S. App. LEXIS 19728, 1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

A corporation may serve as a "person" for purposes of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961\(3\) \(1994\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

For purposes of liability under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act, a firm and its employees, or a parent and its subsidiaries, are not an enterprise separate from the firm itself.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

A subsidiary cannot be sufficiently distinct from its parent or other related subsidiaries so as to satisfy 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\)'s distinctiveness requirement.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

To satisfy the distinctiveness requirement of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), there must be a greater showing that the parent and subsidiary are distinct than the mere fact that they are separate legal entities.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

190 F.3d 889, *889LÁ1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19728, 1

HN17 [blue document icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(d\) \(1994\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Harmless & Invited Errors > General Overview

HN18 [blue document icon] Standards of Review, Harmless & Invited Errors

An appellate court may affirm the district court's judgment on any basis supported by the record.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN19 [blue document icon] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

As a matter of law a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiaries are legally incapable of forming a conspiracy with one another.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

HN20 [blue document icon] Defenses, Usury

Minnesota usury law permits a victim of usury to retain goods purchased through a usurious contract without paying full value for them.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > National Banks > Usury Litigation

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

Banking Law > ... > National Banks > Interest & Usury > General Overview

HN21 [blue document icon] Interest & Usury, Usury Litigation

The Minnesota usury statute provides two remedies for victims of usury: recovery of all interest paid pursuant to Minn. Stat. § 334.02; and a declaration that the usurious contract is canceled as void pursuant to Minn. Stat. §§ 334.03 and 334.05.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

HN22 [blue document icon] Remedies, Equitable Relief

When a victim of usury cancels a usurious contract, the victim does not need to compensate the user for the goods obtained under the usurious contract as a condition for receiving cancellation.

190 F.3d 889, *889 U.S. App. LEXIS 19728, 1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Rights of Buyers

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Performance, Rights of Buyers

Under Minnesota law, if a seller commits usury when selling goods, the buyer may keep the goods purchased without paying the seller the full value of the goods. The buyer also may cancel the contract pursuant to Minn. Stat. §§ 334.03 and 334.05 and demand that the usurious seller repay all interest collected as required by Minn. Stat. § 334.02.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

Real Property Law > Financing > Mortgages & Other Security Instruments > Usury

HN24 [blue icon] Defenses, Usury

When a usurious loan is canceled, the one guilty of usurious exaction must bear the legal consequences flowing from such violation. As such he must lose not only the interest on the money risked, but also the principal, including as well all security given to secure performance.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Usury

HN25 [blue icon] Defenses, Usury

Under some circumstances, forfeiture of the interest alone is the proper remedy for usury because forfeiture of both the principal and interest would be too harsh a remedy.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN26 [blue icon] Courts, Judicial Precedent

In Minnesota, the general rule is that a judicial decision is to be given retroactive effect. But Minnesota courts recognize that sometimes retroactive application of a judicial decision is inappropriate.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN27 [blue icon] Courts, Judicial Precedent

To determine when a legal principle should be applied prospectively only, Minnesota courts employ a three-factor standard. The three factors to consider are: (1) whether the decision overrules clear precedent or resolves an issue of first impression in a manner not clearly foreshadowed; (2) whether, considering the history, purpose, and effect of the legal principle at issue, retroactive application will retard, not further, that principle; and (3) whether the inequities that would result from retroactive application provide an ample basis for applying the legal rule prospectively only.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Commercial Law (UCC) > Negotiable Instruments (Article 3) > Discharge & Payment > General Overview

HN28 [+] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

An appellate court reviews factual determinations for clear error.

Counsel: Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellant was Janice M. Symchych of Minneapolis, Minnesota. In addition the names of Peter W. Carter and David M. Genrich of Minneapolis, Minnesota, appear on the brief of the appellant.

Counsel who presented argument on behalf of the appellee was Kay Nord Hunt of Minneapolis, Minnesota. In addition the names of Phillip A. Cole, David L. Ramp, Seymour J. Mansfield and Richard J. Fuller of Minneapolis, Minnesota, appear on the brief of the appellee.

Judges: Before RICHARD S. ARNOLD, JOHN R. GIBSON, and BOWMAN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: BOWMAN

Opinion

[*892] BOWMAN, Circuit Judge.

Vickie Fogie, Joan Leonard, and Angela Adams filed a class-action lawsuit against THORN Americas, Inc. and its parent companies, including THORN EMI North America Holdings, Inc. (TEMINAH),¹ alleging the companies had violated Minnesota and federal law while operating a rent-to-own business. The District Court entered judgment for the plaintiff class on its claim that THORN Americas and TEMINAH committed usury in violation of Minnesota law by charging excessive interest rates on credit sales of consumer goods. The plaintiffs recovered approximately $ 30 million in damages on their usury claim, and the District Court dismissed their other claims. THORN Americas and TEMINAH appeal several aspects of the District Court's damage award on the usury claim. The plaintiffs cross-appeal, claiming the District Court erred when it dismissed their claims that the defendants violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968 \(1994\).

[*893] I.

As described in this Court's previous opinion, Fogie v. THORN Americas, Inc., 95 F.3d 645 \(8th Cir. 1996\), appellant THORN Americas operates stores called Rent-A-Centers (RAC)² that offer household goods, including furniture and appliances, for sale or lease. Customers choosing to lease goods enter rent-to-own agreements with RAC. Under the agreements, customers pay [*3] a portion of the goods' purchase price plus interest and take possession of the goods for an initial period of a week or month. At the end of this period, a customer either returns the goods or renews the agreement. Once a rent-to-own agreement has been renewed a designated number of times, the customer obtains ownership of the goods.

¹ THORN Americas, Inc. is a wholly owned subsidiary of THORN EMI, Inc., which is a wholly owned subsidiary of TEMINAH, the ultimate North American parent company. TEMINAH, in turn, is a wholly owned subsidiary of THORN EMI, plc, a British conglomerate that owns and operates businesses worldwide. The plaintiffs originally sued additional related companies such as THORN EMI (USA) Holdings, Inc., but these companies subsequently merged into THORN Americas or TEMINAH, thereby ceasing to have a separate corporate existence.

² This opinion, like our earlier opinion, uses RAC to refer collectively to THORN Americas and its parent companies, including appellant TEMINAH. We also capitalize "THORN," even when citing to other opinions, to reflect THORN's own practice.

In 1991, several RAC customers in Minnesota (plaintiff class representatives Fogie, Leonard, and Adams) filed a class-action lawsuit against RAC, alleging that RAC had engaged in usury and deceptive and unlawful business practices. The plaintiffs claimed these practices violated several Minnesota statutes, including the Consumer Credit Sales Act (CCSA), Minn. Stat. § 325G.15-16 (1998), and the General Usury Statute, Minn. Stat. § 334.01. [\[4\]](#) 20 (1998). The plaintiffs also claimed that THORN Americas and its parent companies' actions violated several federal statutes, including RICO, § 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968. Defending its practices, RAC argued that its rent-to-own agreements complied with Minnesota and federal law, in particular with Minnesota's Rental Purchase Agreement Act (RPAA), Minn. Stat. § 325F.84-97 (1998).

In March 1993, the District Court certified the plaintiff class to include "all persons who have entered into rent to own contracts on or after August 1, 1990 in the State of Minnesota with the defendants or any of their predecessors or successors in interest in a written form substantially similar to that executed by plaintiff Fogie." Fogie v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 867 F. Supp. 1398, 1407 \(D. Minn. 1993\) (Memorandum Opinion and Order). The class certification encompasses individuals who entered approximately 58,000 agreements. The District Court also determined the rent-to-own agreements were "consumer credit sales" governed by the CCSA and entered partial summary judgment for the plaintiffs on their CCSA claim. See 867 F. Supp. 1398, 1407. The court's decision to [\[5\]](#) treat rent-to-own agreements as consumer credit sales governed by the CCSA was subsequently endorsed by the Minnesota Supreme Court in its response to the District Court's certified questions, Fogie v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 \(Minn. 1994\), and in a separate case, Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 \(Minn. 1994\).

When answering the District Court's certified questions, the Minnesota Supreme Court also directed the District Court to apply the Minnesota General Usury Statute's limitation on interest rates to the rent-to-own agreements. See Fogie, 518 N.W.2d at 544. The District Court therefore declared RAC's rent-to-own agreements usurious as a matter of law under CCSA and the Minnesota General Usury Statute and "unlawful debt" under RICO. It permanently enjoined RAC from entering into rent-to-own agreements with interest rates exceeding the General Usury Statute's limits, voided the existing rent-to-own agreements with the plaintiff class ab initio, ordered rescission of all payments made by the plaintiff class to RAC, and prohibited RAC from collecting or receiving future payments from class members under the [\[6\]](#) voided agreements. RAC appealed the award of injunctive relief and this Court affirmed, conducting interlocutory review only of the injunctive relief and interdependent matters. See Fogie, 95 F.3d at 648, 654.

The District Court later modified its original order, directing the defendants to [\[*894\]](#) hold in escrow all payments received from rent-to-own customers during the litigation. Appointing a special master to determine the quantum of damages owed to the plaintiff class on its usury claim and to plan the damage distribution, the District Court also entered summary judgment for the defendants on the plaintiffs' non-usury claims, including their claims that THORN Americas and its parent companies had violated RICO.

The special master submitted his report and recommendations, and the District Court essentially adopted them. It entered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in the amount of $ 29,898,250 plus $ 3418 per day from December 9, 1997, to April 15, 1998. The District Court also adopted the special master's recommended plan for depositing and distributing the damages, determined fees for the plaintiffs' attorneys, and ordered that all funds remaining unclaimed after [\[7\]](#) complete distribution be placed in a cy pres fund. This appeal followed.

II.

We consider first the issues raised in the plaintiffs' cross-appeal, which challenges the District Court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' RICO claims. HN1 To recover in a civil suit for a violation of RICO, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant violated 18 U.S.C. § 1962; (2) that the plaintiff suffered injury to business or property; and (3) that the plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by the defendant's RICO violation. See 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\) \(1994\); Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 265-68, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 \(1992\); see also United HealthCare Corp. v. American Trade Ins. Co., 88 F.3d 563, 572 (8th Cir. 1996). The plaintiffs alleged that RAC violated subsections (a), (c), and (d) of § 1962 and that each of those violations caused the plaintiffs injuries for which they can recover under § 1964(c). The District Court for various reasons dismissed the plaintiffs' claims for alleged violations of § 1962(a), (c) and (d). We evaluate the plaintiffs' claims under each subsection separately.

A.

[8] The District Court ruled the plaintiffs could not recover for alleged violations of § 1962(a) because they did not have standing under § 1964(c) to bring such claims. Section 1962(a) states that

It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived . . . from a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt in which such person has participated as a principal . . . to use or invest . . . any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in . . . interstate or foreign commerce.

HN2 [↑] 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a) (1994). Under § 1964(c), only those injured "by reason of" a § 1962 violation have standing to bring a civil suit. See 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c); Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985); Appletree Square I, L.P. v. W.R. Grace & Co., 29 F.3d 1283, 1286 (8th Cir. 1994). The District Court determined that RAC's usury constituted the collection of unlawful debts and that the plaintiffs were individuals injured by that [9] unlawful debt collection. But the District Court concluded that only individuals injured by a completed violation of § 1962(a), those injured by the use or investment of the racketeering income, have been injured "by reason of" a § 1962(a) claim as § 1964(c) requires. Therefore, since the collection of unlawful debts was not by itself a violation of § 1962(a), the District Court dismissed the plaintiffs' § 1962(a) claim for lack of standing.

Determining whether only those injured by the use or investment of racketeering income have standing to bring a civil suit for violation of § 1962(a), or whether those injured by the predicate acts of the racketeering activity also have standing, involves an issue of first impression for this Court, one that has split the other circuits. Seven of the eight circuits that have addressed the issue [*895] agree with the District Court that §§ 1962(a) and 1964(c) limit standing only to plaintiffs who have suffered injury from the use or investment of the racketeering income. See, e.g., Vemco, Inc. v. Camardella, 23 F.3d 129, 132 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1017, 130 L. Ed. 2d 495, 115 S. Ct. 579 (1994); Nugget Hydroelectric, L.P. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 981 F.2d 429, 437 (9th Cir. 1992), [10] cert. denied, 508 U.S. 908, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 2336 (1993); Parker & Parsley Petroleum v. Dresser Indus., 972 F.2d 580, 584 & n.4 (5th Cir. 1992); Glessner v. Kenny, 952 F.2d 702, 708-10 (3d Cir. 1991); Danielsen v. Burnside-Ott Aviation Training Ctr., Inc., 291 U.S. App. D.C. 303, 941 F.2d 1220, 1229-30 (D.C. Cir. 1991); Quaknne v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 82 (2d Cir. 1990); Grider v. Texas Oil & Gas Corp., 868 F.2d 1147, 1149-51 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 820, 107 L. Ed. 2d 43, 110 S. Ct. 76 (1989). The Fourth Circuit, however, allows plaintiffs whose injuries flow from the predicate acts as well as to those injured by the use or investment of the racketeering income to bring a § 1962(a) claim. See Busby v. Crown Supply, Inc., 896 F.2d 833, 836-40 (4th Cir. 1990).

After examining the matter de novo, we believe that the majority position is correct: HN3 [↑] under RICO, only individuals who have suffered injury from the use or investment of racketeering income have standing to bring a civil suit under §§ 1962(a) and 1964(c). As has been discussed by the other circuits, two grounds support this conclusion. First, § 1964(c) allows [11] only persons injured "by reason of" a § 1962 violation to bring a civil suit under RICO. A person injured by predicate racketeering acts, such as RAC's unlawful debt collection, is not injured "by reason of" a violation of § 1962(a). Rather, that person is injured by conduct constituting only a predicate act. Cf. Bennett v. Berg, 685 F.2d 1053, 1060 (8th Cir. 1982) ("Significantly, HN4 [↑] [RICO] forbids the predicate acts of racketeering only insofar as an 'enterprise' is involved. . . . RICO is not a recidivist statute with enhanced penalties for acts of racketeering that are elsewhere proscribed in the criminal code."), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1008 (1983). In this case, for example, the plaintiffs were injured by RAC's collection of unlawful debt. They have recovered substantial damages for this injury under Minnesota usury law, and later in this opinion we uphold that recovery. RAC's HN5 [↑] collection of unlawful debt, however, does not constitute a violation of § 1962(a): it does not involve the use or investment of racketeering income "in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities [12] of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce." 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(a\). Therefore, the plaintiffs' injuries did not flow from a violation of § 1962 as § 1964\(c\) requires. Rather, RAC violated § 1962\(a\) only when it used or invested income from its unlawful debt collection in a manner prohibited by § 1962\(a\). HN6¹⁵ RICO grants standing only to parties injured by the use or investment of the unlawfully obtained income, the completed § 1962\(a\) violation, and the plaintiffs are not such injured parties. See also Nugget Hydroelectric, 981 F.2d at 437 (criticizing Busby because, by not requiring that a plaintiff suffer injury from the use or investment of the racketeering income, the Fourth Circuit allows "an individual to recover for injuries caused by an action that does not constitute a violation of § 1962\(a\)").

Second, if individuals injured only by predicate acts could bring a civil action under § 1962\(a\), § 1962\(c\) would be rendered superfluous. HN7¹⁶ Section 1962\(c\) creates liability for those persons who "conduct or participate . . . in the conduct" of a RICO enterprise. See 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) \(1994\); [13] see also Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 178-79, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525, 113 S. Ct. 1163 \(1993\). If § 1962\(a\) were read to allow any person harmed by a predicate act to bring a civil suit under RICO, a defendant could be held liable for violating RICO when that defendant engaged in a predicate act, whether or not [*896] that defendant also conducted or participated in the conducting of a RICO enterprise. The restriction of § 1962\(c\) liability to those in management positions would be meaningless. Reading § 1962\(a\) so broadly that it renders § 1962\(c\) meaningless runs contrary to HN8¹⁷ the interpretive canon that statutes should be read to give "each word some operative effect." Walters v. Metropolitan Educ. Enters., 519 U.S. 202, 209, 136 L. Ed. 2d 644, 117 S. Ct. 660 \(1997\) (citing United States v. Menasche, 348 U.S. 528, 538-39, 99 L. Ed. 615, 75 S. Ct. 513 \(1955\)). To prevent almost unlimited civil liability plainly contrary to the statutory scheme of § 1962, standing to bring a civil suit for a violation of § 1962\(a\) must be limited to those plaintiffs whose injuries flow from the use or investment of the racketeering income.

The plaintiffs claim they can satisfy a use-or-investment requirement because RAC reinvested the income [14] it obtained from the unlawful debt collection in the operation and maintenance of the rent-to-own business. Such allegations of reinvestment do not suffice to give the plaintiffs standing under §§ 1962\(a\) and 1964\(c\). Rather, HN9¹⁸ to bring a claim under § 1962\(a\), a plaintiff must allege an injury from the use or investment of the racketeering income that is separate and distinct from injuries allegedly caused by the defendant's engaging in the predicate acts. See Vemco, 23 F.3d at 132-33. A distinct injury is required because, if reinvestment "were to suffice, the use-or-investment injury requirement would be almost completely eviscerated when the alleged pattern of racketeering is committed on behalf of a corporation. . . . Over the long term, corporations generally reinvest their profits, regardless of source." Brittingham v. Mobil Corp., 943 F.2d 297, 305 \(3d Cir.1991\). The plaintiffs have not and apparently cannot allege an injury from a use or investment distinct or separate from the predicate acts they allege. Therefore, the District Court properly dismissed the plaintiffs' § 1962\(a\) claim for lack of standing.

B.

The plaintiffs also appeal [15] the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the defendants on the plaintiffs' § 1962\(c\) claim. Section 1962\(c\) makes it "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in . . . interstate or foreign commerce[] to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." HN10¹⁹ 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) \(1994\). HN11²⁰ The person who conducts or participates in the conduct of the RICO enterprise must be distinct from the enterprise itself. See United HealthCare, 88 F.3d at 570. The District Court concluded the plaintiffs failed to show the requisite distinctiveness of the persons and enterprise, so it granted the defendants summary judgment on the plaintiffs' § 1962\(c\) claim.

The plaintiffs assert that the persons allegedly conducting the RICO enterprise, THORN Americas and TEMINAH, are sufficiently distinct from the enterprise, RAC. The plaintiffs explain that THORN Americas conducts the usurious rental-purchase business nationwide while TEMINAH, the ultimate North American parent company, receives much of the [16] illegal income. By "RAC," the plaintiffs say they refer to the alleged RICO enterprise, the "conglomerate of corporate entities that conduct the corporate affairs of THORN EMI, plc." Appellee/Cross-Appellant's Br. at 45. The plaintiffs also describe the roles of some of the other corporate entities that made up the RAC conglomerate: THORN EMI, Inc., for example, was "involved in the cash management," including paying THORN Americas' bills and transferring the usurious profits to other related entities; and THORN EMI, plc headed the international corporate structure. See id.

HN12[] A corporation such as THORN Americas or TEMINAH may serve as a "person" for purposes of RICO § 1962(c). HN13[] See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(3) (1994) (defining [*897] "person" as including "any individual or entity capable of holding a legal or beneficial interest in property"); see also Atlas Pile Driving Co. v. DiCon Fin. Co., 886 F.2d 986, 995 (8th Cir. 1989) (involving a RICO enterprise allegedly conducted by two corporate persons). An association of business entities such as RAC also may serve as an "enterprise." See United HealthCare., 88 F.3d at 570; Atlas Pile Driving, 886 F.2d at 995 n.7. [17] In this case, however, the plaintiffs allege that the RICO enterprise consists solely of wholly owned, related business entities, and that some of the wholly owned subsidiaries conducted the racketeering activities for the enterprise.

This Court has not previously considered whether the § 1962(c) distinctiveness requirement may be satisfied when wholly owned subsidiaries are the persons who conduct a RICO enterprise consisting only of the parent company and other related business entities that comprise the defendants' corporate family. When we look to the other circuits, we find little direct guidance, but we do find substantial indications that to impose liability on a subsidiary for conducting an enterprise comprised solely of the parent of the subsidiary and related businesses would be to misread the statute. Ten other circuits require that the person and enterprise be distinct.³ Most of these circuits have suggested some limits on when related business entities, or business entities and their employees, may serve as both the person and enterprise under § 1962(c). See, e.g., Bachman v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 178 F.3d 930, 1999 WL 335343, at *2 (7th Cir. 1999); [18]⁴ Brannon v. Boatmen's First National Bank, 153 F.3d 1144, 1146-47 (10th Cir. 1998); Compagnie de Reassurance D'Ile De France v. New England Reinsurance Corp., 57 F.3d 56, 92 (1st Cir. 1995); Davis v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 6 F.3d 367, 377 (6th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1193, 127 L. Ed. 2d 650, 114 S. Ct. 1298 (1995); NCNB Nat'l Bank v. Tiller, 814 F.2d 931, 936 (4th Cir. 1987), overruled on other grounds by Busby, 896 F.2d at 841-42; Atkinson v. Anadarko Bank & Trust Co., 808 F.2d 438, 440-41 (5th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1032, 97 L. Ed. 2d 780, 107 S. Ct. 3276 (1987). Much of the controversy among these circuits concerns whether officers or employees of an entity may conduct an enterprise consisting of the employing entity. Compare, e.g., Jaguar Cars, Inc. v. Royal Oaks Motor Co., 46 F.3d 258, 268-69 (3d Cir. 1995) (stating the distinctiveness requirement is satisfied with allegations of "conduct by officers or employees who operate or manage a corporate enterprise"); Sever v. Alaska Pulp Corp., 978 F.2d 1529, 1534 (9th Cir. 1992) (determining that employees [19] may conduct their employer as a RICO enterprise), with Riverwoods Chappaqua Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank, 30 F.3d 339, 344-45 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating that a [*898] group allegedly consisting of a corporation and two of its employees could not "conduct" the corporation itself as the RICO enterprise). The plaintiffs have not claimed that any employees or officers of RAC were the persons conducting the RICO enterprise, however, so we need not address this issue.

[20] But we must consider whether HN15[] a subsidiary may be sufficiently distinct from its parent or other related subsidiaries so as to satisfy § 1962(c)'s distinctiveness requirement. We believe it cannot. A parent company and a subsidiary are separate legal entities, but this is not enough. Nor is it enough that the parent and subsidiary corporations have different roles in the alleged enterprise, as would be typical of every parent-subsidiary relationship. Rather, HN16¹ there must be a greater showing that the parent and subsidiary are distinct than the mere fact that they are separate legal entities. To conclude otherwise would be to read the distinctiveness requirement out of RICO.

³The sole exception is the Eleventh Circuit, which does not require distinctiveness between the person and enterprise. See Cox v. Administrator United States Steel & Carnegie, 17 F.3d 1386, 1398 (11th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1110 (1995).

⁴The plaintiffs claim the Seventh Circuit has determined that allegations that subsidiaries conducted a parent-company enterprise are sufficient. The plaintiffs base their argument on Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co., 747 F.2d 384 (7th Cir. 1984), aff'd on other grounds, 473 U.S. 606, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437, 105 S. Ct. 3291 (1985), in which the Seventh Circuit asserted that it is "virtually self-evident that a subsidiary acts on behalf of, and thus conducts the affairs of, its parent corporation." 747 F.2d at 402-03. More recently, however, the Seventh Circuit has indicated that related business entities may not serve as both the person and enterprise. In Bachman v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 178 F.3d 930, 1999 WL 335343 (7th Cir. 1999), the court appears to reject the conclusion it suggested in Haroco. Stating that it deliberately omitted four corporations when it described the alleged RICO enterprise, the Court explains, "HN14[] A firm and its employees, or a parent and its subsidiaries, are not an enterprise separate from the firm itself." Id. at *2; see also Fitzgerald v. Chrysler Corp., 116 F.3d 225, 226-27 (7th Cir. 1997) (affirming dismissal on distinctiveness grounds of a complaint that alleged Chrysler Corporation was the person conducting an enterprise comprised of the "Chrysler family").

Turning our attention to the present case, the plaintiffs have not shown sufficient distinctiveness between THORN Americas; TEMINAH; THORN EMI, plc; or any of the other related business entities that allegedly comprise the RAC enterprise. All these entities are part of one corporate family operating under common control. Therefore, we affirm the District Court's granting of summary judgment to the defendants on the plaintiffs' § 1962\(c\) claim.

C.

The plaintiffs' final RICO argument is that the District Court [\[*21\]](#) incorrectly granted the defendants summary judgment on a claim that THORN EMI, plc; THORN Americas; and TEMINAH violated § 1962\(d\) by conspiring to violate RICO. Subsection (d) makes it "unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection (a), (b), or (c) of [\[§ 1962\]](#)." HN17¹ 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\) \(1994\). The District Court concluded the plaintiffs' § 1962\(d\) claim necessarily failed because the plaintiffs lacked standing to bring a § 1962\(a\) claim and their § 1962\(c\) claim failed as a matter of law.

We affirm the District Court's grant of summary judgment on a different basis. Cf. Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 173 F.3d 1109, 1116 \(8th Cir. 1999\) ("HN18¹ We may affirm the district court's judgment on any basis supported by the record."). The plaintiffs allege that the only participants in this conspiracy were THORN EMI, plc and its wholly owned subsidiaries THORN Americas and TEMINAH. See Third Amended Complaint at 18. Such allegations fail to allege a conspiracy, because HN19¹ as a matter of law a parent corporation and its wholly owned subsidiaries are legally incapable of forming a conspiracy with one another. [\[*22\]](#) We believe that Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\), in which the Supreme Court held that a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary lacked the capacity to conspire to violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, requires the identical conclusion when the same principle is applied to alleged parent-subsidiary RICO civil conspiracies.

In Copperweld, the Supreme Court stated that "in any conspiracy, two or more entities that previously pursued their own interests separately are combining to act as one for their common benefit." Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769 (emphasis added). The Court determined that an alleged conspiracy between a parent and a subsidiary lacks this crucial element:

A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousnesses, but one. They are not unlike a multiple team of horses drawing a vehicle under the control of a single driver.

Id. at 771. The Court also noted that the whole notion of an "agreement" [\[*899\]](#) between a parent [\[*23\]](#) and a wholly owned subsidiary "lacks meaning." Id.

In our analysis of the plaintiffs' § 1962\(c\) claim, we have already discussed the plaintiffs' failure to show any distinctiveness or independence between THORN EMI, plc and its subsidiaries THORN Americas and TEMINAH. This lack of distinctiveness or independence reinforces the conclusion derived from Copperweld that THORN EMI, plc and its subsidiaries "are common, not disparate," and that their actions are driven by a single consciousness. Cf. id. Therefore, we conclude that THORN EMI, plc; THORN Americas; and TEMINAH as wholly related business entities are incapable of conspiring with one another to violate § 1962\(c\).⁵

⁵ We do not consider the situation in which a corporation and its officers or employees allegedly formed a conspiracy. Cf. United States v. American Grain & Related Indus., 763 F.2d 312, 320 \(8th Cir. 1985\) (concluding that a corporation may be convicted of criminal conspiracy where corporate agents conspired with each other on behalf of the corporation).

[24] We recognize that the Seventh and Ninth Circuits have reached a conclusion different from ours. In Ashland Oil, Inc. v. Arnett, 875 F.2d 1271 \(7th Cir. 1989\), the Seventh Circuit determined that Copperweld does not prevent a RICO conspiracy from consisting solely of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary because, according to the Seventh Circuit, special policy considerations embodied in the Sherman Act do not apply in RICO cases. See id. at 1281 (discussing the theoretical "community of interest" that causes a parent and subsidiary to pose "no threat to the goals of antitrust law-protecting competition"). The Seventh Circuit stated that liability should extend to intracorporate RICO conspiracies because "intracorporate conspiracies do threaten RICO's goals of preventing the infiltration of legitimate businesses by racketeers and separating racketeers from their profits." Id. In Webster v. Omnitrition International, Inc., 79 F.3d 776, 787 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 865, 136 L. Ed. 2d 115, 117 S. Ct. 174 (1996), the Ninth Circuit relied upon the Seventh Circuit's reasoning to extend § 1962\(d\) liability to a wholly intracorporate [25] conspiracy.⁶

We find this reasoning unconvincing. Neither the Seventh nor the Ninth Circuit explains why, when two entities are under common control and there is no distinctiveness or independence of action, an agreement or understanding between them creates any of the special dangers § 1962\(d\) targets. In the absence of such an explanation, we read the plaintiffs' allegations as essentially asserting that THORN EMI, plc conspired with its arms and hands. Such allegations are not sufficient. See United States v. Computer Sciences Corp., 689 F.2d 1181, 1190 \(4th Cir. 1982\) ("We would not take seriously . . . an assertion that a defendant could conspire with his right arm, which held, aimed and fired the fatal weapon."), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1105, 74 L. Ed. 2d 953, 103 S. Ct. 729 (1983).

Therefore, although [26] we do not reach the ground upon which the District Court relied, we affirm the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the defendants on the plaintiffs' § 1962\(d\) claim.

III.

Now we turn to the arguments raised in RAC's direct appeal regarding the damages awarded to the plaintiff class on its state-law usury claim. RAC challenges two aspects of the District Court's award of damages to individual plaintiffs. In order to give these challenges a context, we briefly summarize the District Court's damage distribution plan. The distribution plan divides plaintiffs into three groups. The first group includes two subgroups: [*900] those plaintiffs who leased goods that RAC did not designate for return and those who had previously returned their leased goods to RAC. Under the District Court's distribution plan, plaintiffs in both subgroups recover all principal and interest paid. The second group of plaintiffs consists of those plaintiffs who, when RAC designated their goods for return, elected to retain the goods. These plaintiffs receive a refund only of the interest they paid under the rent-to-own agreements. The third group also leased goods that RAC designated for return, but, unlike [27] the second group, the third group elected to return those goods. The District Court's order grants this group, like the first group, repayment of all principal and interest paid. See Fogie v. THORN Americas, Inc., Civ. No. 3-94-359, slip op. at 7-8 (D. Minn. Apr. 15, 1998) (Order for Judgment; Orders in Enforcement of Injunction, Allowing Attorneys' Fees and Costs, and Plan of Distribution) [hereinafter "Order for Judgment"].

The first aspect of the damage distribution plan that RAC challenges is that it allows some plaintiffs--apparently members of the first and second groups--to keep the goods they had leased without paying RAC the full value of those goods. According to RAC, plaintiff class members failed to pay the department-store price for the goods leased (i.e., the fair value of the goods as determined by an unrelated retail seller) in approximately 37,500 of the 58,000 rent-to-own agreements covered by the class certification. The distribution plan allows plaintiffs who entered those 37,500 agreements to keep the goods, even those goods RAC designated for return, without making further payments. RAC claims this awards such plaintiffs an improper windfall. Citing Burney v. THORN Americas, Inc., 944 F. Supp. 762 \(E.D. Wis. 1996\), [28] RAC urges this Court to redefine the plaintiff class to exclude such plaintiffs, whom RAC calls "windfall plaintiffs."

⁶ We note that the Seventh Circuit's recent decisions regarding intracorporate liability under § 1962\(c\), see supra note 4, appear to undercut the conclusions it reached in Ashland Oil.

Reviewing this legal issue de novo, we find that the District Court's order is consistent with HN20[↑] Minnesota usury law, which permits a victim of usury to retain goods purchased through a usurious contract without paying full value for them. Since 1877, HN21[↑] the Minnesota usury statute has provided two remedies for victims of usury: recovery of all interest paid pursuant to Minnesota Statutes § 334.02; and a declaration that the usurious contract is canceled as void pursuant to §§ 334.03 and 334.05. See Barton v. Moore, 558 N.W.2d 746, 750-51 \(Minn. 1997\). Minnesota courts have long stated that, HN22[↑] when a victim of usury cancels a usurious contract, the victim does not need to compensate the usurer for the goods obtained under the usurious contract as a condition for receiving cancellation. In Trauernicht v. Kingston, 156 Minn. 442, 195 N.W. 278 \(Minn. 1923\), the Minnesota Supreme Court stated, "The general rule over the country is that a borrower on usury when he comes to a court of equity asking affirmative relief by way of the cancellation of an obligation [29] . . . must restore the money actually received. . . . Our own rule, often announced, is that restoration need not be made." 195 N.W. at 279. The Minnesota Supreme Court determined that the Minnesota General Usury Statute requires this result. See id.

Trauernicht's interpretation of the Minnesota usury statute remains valid. See First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Guildner, 295 N.W.2d 501, 503 \(Minn. 1980\) (citing Trauernicht for the principle that a "plaintiff suing for cancellation of [a] usurious loan need not return the money actually received"); see also In re Estate of Fauskee, 497 N.W.2d 324, 328 \(Minn. Ct. App. 1993\) ("If a loan is usurious, it is unenforceable and the lender must forfeit interest and principal payments."). HN23[↑] Under Minnesota law, therefore, if a seller commits usury when selling goods, the buyer may keep the goods purchased without paying the seller the full value of the goods. The buyer also may cancel the contract pursuant to §§ 334.03 and 334.05 and demand that the usurious seller repay all interest collected as required by § 334.02. The District Court's distribution [*901] plan grants the so-called windfall [30] plaintiffs nothing more than that specified by Minnesota law. This Court has no reason to redefine the plaintiff class as RAC requests.

The second aspect of the District Court's damage distribution that RAC challenges is the provisions that force RAC to repay principal and interest to plaintiffs in the first and third groups. Relying on Rathbun v. W. T. Grant Co., 300 Minn. 223, 219 N.W.2d 641 \(Minn. 1974\), and its progeny, RAC argues that Minnesota law allows victims of usury to recover interest only. In Rathbun, a class-action lawsuit involving usurious retail sales installment contracts, the Minnesota Supreme Court determined "that the recovery of both interest and principal provided a remedy too harsh under the circumstances." 219 N.W.2d at 653. Therefore, the Minnesota Supreme Court permitted the plaintiffs to recover interest only. See id. RAC claims that Rathbun provides a bright-line rule for Minnesota usury lawsuits, or at the least for usury class-action lawsuits similar to Rathbun and the present case, that limits a usury victim's recovery to interest only. We disagree.

As we have already discussed, the Minnesota General Usury Statute grants [31] usury victims two remedies: return of all interest paid and cancellation of the contract as void. See Barton, 558 N.W.2d at 750. HN24[↑] When a usurious loan is canceled, "the one guilty of usurious exaction must bear the legal consequences flowing from such violation. As such he must lose not only the interest on the money risked, but also the principal, including as well all security given to secure performance." Midland Loan Fin. Co. v. Lorentz, 209 Minn. 278, 296 N.W. 911, 915 \(Minn. 1941\); accord United Realty Trust v. Property Dev. & Research Co., 269 N.W.2d 737, 743 n.12 \(Minn. 1978\); Fauskee, 497 N.W.2d at 328. The distribution plan, therefore, correctly enforces Minnesota law when it compels RAC to forfeit and repay all principal and interest collected on the usurious loans.

Rathbun and its progeny do not create a bright-line rule to the contrary. Rather, Rathbun and its progeny indicate that in some circumstances the forfeiture of both principal and interest may punish the usurer too harshly. See Rathbun, 219 N.W.2d at 653 (stating "that the recovery of both interest and principal provides a remedy too [32] harsh under the circumstances" (emphasis added)); Katz & Lange, Ltd. v. Beugen, 356 N.W.2d 733, 735 \(Minn. Ct. App. 1984\) ("Although the interest rate . . . was usurious, [the] counterclaim seeking to have the entire underlying debt declared void is too harsh under the circumstances. Forfeiture of all the charges is a sufficient remedy." (emphasis added) (citation omitted)); Kudzia v. Weise, 1994 Minn. App. LEXIS 509, No. C7-93-1906, 1994 WL 233599 (Minn. Ct. App. May 31, 1994) (unpublished) (citing Rathbun and Beugen for the proposition that "HN25[↑] under some circumstances . . . forfeiture of the interest alone is the proper remedy for usury because forfeiture of both the principal and interest would be too harsh a remedy" (emphasis added)).

This case does not involve circumstances in which the forfeiture of principal and interest constitutes too harsh a remedy. The Order for Judgment permits a plaintiff to recover both principal and interest only when RAC failed to designate the plaintiffs goods for return or when the plaintiff returned goods RAC designated for return. In these instances, the Order for Judgment essentially rescinds the original contract: RAC [33] has to repay both principal and interest only when it either recovers the leased goods or declines to recover those goods, apparently because the goods have little residual value. Rescission is a common remedy that does not seem too harsh, nor does RAC argue that it is. Furthermore, Rathbun and its progeny do not involve rescission cases. Concluding the distribution plan's awarding of principal and interest to plaintiffs in the first and third groups is permitted by Minnesota law and not too harsh considering the circumstances of this case, we affirm the District Court on this matter.

[*902] IV.

RAC also claims that the District Court erred when it granted the plaintiff class a retrospective remedy based on Miller v. Colortyme, Inc., 518 N.W.2d 544 (Minn. 1994). HN26¹ In Minnesota, "the general rule is that . . . [a] decision is to be given retroactive effect." Hoff v. Kempton, 317 N.W.2d 361, 363 (Minn. 1982). But Minnesota courts recognize that sometimes retroactive application of a judicial decision is inappropriate. HN27¹ To determine when a legal principle should be applied prospectively only, Minnesota courts employ a three-factor standard the United States [34] Supreme Court described in Chevron Oil Co. v. Huson, 404 U.S. 97, 30 L. Ed. 2d 296, 92 S. Ct. 349 (1971). The three factors to consider are: (1) whether the decision overrules clear precedent or resolves an issue of first impression in a manner "not clearly foreshadowed"; (2) whether, considering the history, purpose, and effect of the legal principle at issue, retroactive application will retard, not further, that principle; and (3) whether the inequities that would result from retroactive application provide an ample basis for applying the legal rule prospectively only. See Hoff, 317 N.W.2d at 363 (quoting Chevron Oil, 404 U.S. at 106-07); see also Holmberg v. Holmberg, 588 N.W.2d 720, 726 (Minn. 1999).

This Court already considered the Chevron Oil factors and determined that retroactive application of the Miller v. Colortyme decision is appropriate. See Fogie, 95 F.3d at 651. RAC argues that our decision in Fogie does not foreclose its argument that a retrospective remedy is inappropriate because the United States Supreme Court distinguishes between retroactive application of a rule and the awarding of a retrospective [35] remedy based upon the rule, and recognizes that sometimes retroactive-application and retrospective-remediation issues should be considered independently. See Reynoldsville Casket Co. v. Hyde, 514 U.S. 749, 754-59, 131 L. Ed. 2d 820, 115 S. Ct. 1745 (1995) (summarizing four instances when the Supreme Court observed this application-remediation distinction). Without examining the Reynoldsville Casket decision further, RAC argues this case is one in which this Court should consider the retrospective-remediation issue separately. RAC believes that, should we engage in independent retroactivity analysis of the remediation issue and use the Chevron Oil factors as directed by Hoff we will conclude that the District Court erred in granting a retrospective remedy. RAC makes such claims even though the Minnesota Supreme Court declined to apply the Miller v. Colortyme decision prospectively only. See Miller v. Colortyme, No. C2-92-2595, slip op. at 1 (Minn. Aug. 2, 1994) (Order denying petition for clarification).

In raising its retrospective-remediation argument, RAC bids us to make three substantial analytical leaps. First, there is no precedent indicating that Minnesota courts would make the [36] application-remediation distinction the Supreme Court recognized in Reynoldsville Casket. Second, the United States Supreme Court, while recognizing the application-remediation distinction, has largely superseded Chevron Oil with a test under which we would be compelled to apply Miller v. Colortyme retroactively.⁷ Thus, while encouraging us [*903] to employ a distinction

⁷ While Reynoldsville Casket states that sometimes retrospective remediation should be considered independently from retroactive application and provides instances of when such independent consideration was appropriate, the Supreme Court in Reynoldsville Casket does not provide a test a court should use when evaluating whether a retrospective remedy is appropriate. The Supreme Court, however, largely superseded Chevron Oil when, in Harper v. Virginia Department of Taxation, 509 U.S. 86, 96-97, 125 L. Ed. 2d 74, 113 S. Ct. 2510 (1993), it enunciated a new standard for assessing when a legal principle should be applied retroactively. Under this new standard, "when [the Supreme] Court applies a rule of federal law to the parties before it, that rule is the controlling interpretation of federal law and must be given full retroactive effect in all cases still open on direct review and as to all events." Id. at 97 If this Court applied the Harper standard to the present case, the Minnesota Supreme not previously recognized by any Minnesota court, RAC urges us to use a Minnesota standard that would not be used in federal courts, the courts that have recognized the distinction. Third, RAC has not attempted to prove that, even if Minnesota courts would distinguish between retroactive application and retrospective remedy, the present case is one in which retroactive application and retrospective remedy should be [37] We do not explore these three analytical leaps, however, because even if we resolved each one in RAC's favor we would still conclude that the District Court did not err when it awarded a retrospective remedy. Applying the three-factor Chevron Oil standard to consider the propriety of awarding a retrospective remedy, we would first recognize that Miller v. Colortyme did not overturn a prior decision nor did it announce a legal principle not clearly foreshadowed in Minnesota law. Rather, Miller v. Colortyme "simply stated a reasonable and correct interpretation of the law which differs from the erroneous view RAC had chosen to follow." Fogie, 95 F.3d at 651. According to the Minnesota Supreme Court in Miller v. Colortyme, this interpretation flows from the only conceivable reason the Minnesota legislature amended the CCSA in 1981--because it wanted the CCSA to cover rent-to-own agreements. See Miller v. Colortyme, 518 N.W.2d at 548.

Second, awarding a retrospective remedy would further, not retard, the principles of the Minnesota usury statute as reflected in its purpose, history, and effect. The Minnesota General Usury Statute seeks [38] "to protect the weak and necessitous from being taken advantage of by lenders who can unilaterally establish the terms of the loan transaction." Trapp v. Hancuh, 530 N.W.2d 879, 884 (Minn. Ct. App. 1995). RAC charged interest on the rent-to-own agreements ranging from 46 to 746 percent, see Fogie, 95 F.3d at 652, approximately six to ninety-three times greater than the eight percent permitted under Minnesota law. See Minn. Stat. § 334.01 (1998). The award of a retrospective remedy for such conduct, while perhaps harsh, would further the statutory purpose of discouraging business entities from charging excessive interest rates on loans to consumers. Moreover, this remedy comports with the history and traditional effects of the Minnesota usury statute, under which courts have held that a victim may recover the principal and interest paid and security given without even paying the usurer the principal borrowed. See supra Part III.

Third, we reject RAC's arguments that the inequities that would result from awarding a retrospective remedy provide a compelling basis for us to grant only prospective relief. RAC complains that a retrospective remedy [39] will unjustly compensate plaintiffs because it will allow them to escape paying for RAC's overhead expenses and for use of and damage to the leased goods. RAC ignores that it charged interest rates far in excess of the legal limits. RAC also ignores that the Order for Judgment allows RAC to keep some income from its usurious transactions: profits included in the retail price of designated goods the second group of plaintiffs had paid for and chose to keep and income RAC made using or investing the plaintiffs' payments of principal and interest before the plaintiffs filed suit. The equities of this case do not provide a sufficient basis for us to conclude that only prospective relief is appropriate.

None of the three Chevron Oil factors weighs in favor of denying the plaintiffs a retrospective remedy. Furthermore, as we have already stated, the Minnesota Supreme Court has refused to amend Miller [*904] v. Colortyme to make it apply only prospectively. See Miller v. Colortyme, No. C2-92-2595, slip op. at 1 (Minn. Aug. 2, 1994) (Order denying petition for clarification). Reassured by the Minnesota Supreme Court's refusal to amend Miller v. Colortyme that our determination correctly [40] interprets Minnesota law, we affirm the District Court's grant of a retrospective remedy.

V.

RAC also challenges the cy pres fund that the judgment of the District Court creates for unclaimed damages. According to the Order for Judgment, if any monies remain "after the Unlocated Members Subfund is closed . . . , the pay over of waived principal refunds to [THORN] is completed . . . , all disputes are resolved . . . [,] all checks issued on the Common Fund have either expired or been cashed," and certain other taxes, fees, and expenses are paid, they are to be placed in a cy pres fund. Order for Judgment at 12. The District Court directs class counsel at that time to provide an accounting to the District Court and "petition the [District] Court for direction on distribution of the Cy Pres Fund." Id. at 13.

Court's decision to apply Miller v. Colortyme to the parties before it would seem to compel us also to apply Miller v. Colortyme retroactively in this case. considered separately. Nevertheless, RAC urges us to engage in a separate remediation analysis.

RAC claims that the creation of a cy pres fund is unprecedented and inappropriate when, as in this case, the District Court formulates an individualized remedy tied to specific transactions, and all class members are known and will receive full compensation if they come forward. RAC argues that undistributed funds should be returned so that RAC can compensate [41] class members who seek payment after the common fund is closed but still within the time for enforcing a judgment set forth by Minnesota law.

Several questions regarding the cy pres fund remain unanswered. Most importantly, we do not yet know whether any undistributed monies will remain. For all that appears, at the end of the day there may be nothing left to go into the fund. Moreover, the District Court has not decided how any such funds will be distributed or to whom. In the absence of information regarding the existence and amount of residual funds, the District Court acted prematurely in ordering the creation of a cy pres fund. Accordingly, we vacate the portion of the District Court's order that creates the cy pres fund for unclaimed monies without prejudicing the District Court's ability to consider the creation of a cy pres fund if in fact there are unclaimed monies left after the plan for the payout of damages has been fully carried out. Cf. Hennenfent v. Mid Dakota Clinic, P.C., 164 F.3d 419, 420 (8th Cir. 1998) (vacating without prejudice a district court's determination that an ADA plaintiff could not perform an essential function of his [42] job because the plaintiff might still elect to undergo the medical testing necessary to make that determination).

VI.

Finally, RAC argues the District Court mistakenly granted the plaintiffs double recovery when it ordered RAC to return funds from an escrow account to the plaintiffs. RAC claims that the $ 1.6 million in escrow funds were already included when the parties stipulated that RAC had received $ 27.9 million from the plaintiff class in transactions governed by the rent-to-own agreements. The District Court found to the contrary, ordering RAC to return the $ 1.6 million in escrow funds and to pay damages based on the $ 27.9 million in receipts. HN28 We review this factual determination for clear error. See Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. FDIC, 172 F.3d 601, 604 (8th Cir. 1999).

To determine whether the escrow funds were included in the damage stipulation, we trace the history of the two amounts. Initially, the District Court did not establish an escrow account; rather, it ordered RAC to "cease making any further collections or receiving any further payments of any kind from the Plaintiff Class on the rental purchase agreements." Fogie v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., [43] No. 3-94-359, slip op. at 16 (D. Minn. [*905] Sept. 28, 1995) (Memorandum Opinion and Order). RAC later requested that the District Court stay this requirement, claiming that, because the District Court's order prevented RAC from contacting the class members, RAC's return of payments without explanation would create unnecessary confusion. The District Court agreed with RAC that returning payments would create unnecessary confusion but declined to grant a stay. Instead, the court ordered RAC to place all payments received in a "separate, interest bearing account" until the plaintiffs were notified regarding the outcome of this litigation. See Fogie v. THORN Americas, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23562, No. 3-94-359, slip op. at 7 (D. Minn. Feb. 19, 1997) (Memorandum Opinion and Order).

The parties subsequently stipulated that the total amount of sales subject to rescission--that is, the amount "reflecting receipts on rental purchase contracts issued by [THORN] from August 1, 1990, through November 13, 1996"--totaled approximately $ 27.9 million. See Order for Judgment at 2. The District Court used this amount to calculate interest, made other adjustments, and ordered RAC to pay approximately $ 29.9 million [44] in damages. The District Court also ordered RAC to return the $ 1.6 million in payments that had been placed in escrow.

After reviewing the District Court's orders regarding the treatment of payments received after litigation commenced, the creation of the escrow account, and the Order for Judgment, we do not believe the District Court clearly erred when it determined that the escrow funds were not included in the total damage stipulation. The damage stipulation provided the total amount of RAC's actual receipts. Because the funds placed in escrow were never received by RAC, the District Court did not clearly err when it determined the escrow funds were not included in the damage stipulation. Therefore, we uphold the District Court's decision to calculate damages based on the $ 27.9 million stipulation and also order RAC to return the $ 1.6 million in escrow funds.

VII.

For the reasons stated above, the judgment of the District Court is vacated without prejudice insofar as it creates a cy pres fund. In all other respects, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

End of Document

Modesto Irrigation Dist. v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

August 20, 1999, Filed

No. C-98-3009 MHP

Reporter

61 F. Supp. 2d 1058 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13505 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,654

MODESTO IRRIGATION DISTRICT, Plaintiff, vs. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, and DYNERGY POWER SERVICES, INC., as successor to DESTEC POWER SERVICES, INC., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendants' motion to dismiss MID's federal antitrust and Cartwright Act claims against DESTEC and PG&E GRANTED. Claims DISMISSED without prejudice.

Core Terms

electric power, substation, allegations, wholesale, transmission, retail, conspiracy, monopolization, antitrust, Sherman Act, electricity, defendants', immunity, consumers, anticompetitive, deliver, antitrust claim, anti trust law, incidental, asserts, competitors, unilateral, license, monopoly power, interconnection, lawsuit, wheel, conspiracy to monopolize, antitrust liability, motion to dismiss

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim will be denied unless it appears that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him or her to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 [] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Although the court is generally confined to consideration of the allegations in the pleadings, when the complaint is accompanied by attached documents, such documents are deemed part of the complaint and may be considered in evaluating the merits of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1058, *1058 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13505, 1

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN3 [down] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

In the Ninth Circuit, antitrust pleadings need not contain great factual specificity. There is no special rule requiring more factual specificity in antitrust pleadings. However, as noted by many courts, the court need not accept legal conclusions asserted in the complaint even if pled as facts or conclusory allegations without more.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN4 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN5 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a claim for a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must establish (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition under a per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN6 [down] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

Most antitrust claims are analyzed under a rule of reason, according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect. However, some types of restraints are deemed unlawful per se if they have a predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

61 F. Supp. 2d 1058, *1058 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13505, 1

HN7 Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

A business generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it does so independently.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN8 Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

An agreement under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., may be found when the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN9 Sherman Act, Defenses

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN10 Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

To state a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., for monopolization violation, plaintiff must allege that defendant (1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN11 Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

"Willful acquisition" or "maintenance of monopoly power" involves exclusionary conduct, not power gained from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > Rates > Ratemaking Factors > Rate of Return

61 F. Supp. 2d 1058, *1058 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13505, 1

HN12 [blue document icon] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

In the case of a regulated utility struggling with dual regulation, bearing in mind that the utility is entitled to recover its costs of service and to provide its investors with a reasonable rate of return, an antitrust plaintiff must also establish a specific intent by the monopoly to engage in monopolistic conduct through the actions of the utility, taken as a whole.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To prevail on a § 2 attempt claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., a plaintiff must establish: (1) a specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving "monopoly power," and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN14 [blue document icon] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

Documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading, may be considered in ruling on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Notice Requirement

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > Public Records

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Evidence > Judicial Notice > Adjudicative Facts > General Overview

HN15 [blue document icon] Motions for Summary Judgment, Notice Requirement

The court can take judicial notice of facts beyond the complaint and matters of public records such as pleadings in another action and records and reports of administrative bodies in considering a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Unilateral Contracts > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN16 [blue document icon] Types of Contracts, Unilateral Contracts

A trial court must confine its inquiry of whether a plaintiff has sufficiently stated a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., to those allegations contained in the amended complaint, or incorporated by reference.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1058, *1058 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13505, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a conspiracy to monopolize claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., a plaintiff must set forth a specific intent to monopolize and the anticompetitive acts designed to effect that intent, although in the conspiracy claim the act may be no more than the agreement itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, one who files a lawsuit or otherwise petitions the government for redress is generally immune from antitrust liability unless such litigation or activity is a sham.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

The Ninth Circuit has held that a decision to accept or reject an offer of settlement is conduct incidental to the prosecution of a lawsuit and not a separate and distinct activity which might form the basis for antitrust liability.

Counsel: For MODESTO IRRIGATION DISTRICT, Plaintiff: Maxwell M. Blecher, Donald R. Pepperman, Blecher & Collins, P.C., Los Angeles, CA.

For MODESTO IRRIGATION DISTRICT, Plaintiff: Scott T. Steffen, Modesto Irrigation Dist, Modesto, CA.

For PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, defendant: Marie L. Fiala, Kirk G. Werner, M. Fehrenbacher Claire, Heller Ehrman White & McAuliffe, San Francisco, CA.

For DESTEC ENERGY, INC., defendant: Robert A. Mittelstaedt, Pillsbury Madison & Sutro LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: MARILYN HALL PATEL, Chief Judge, United States District Court, Northern District of California.

Opinion by: MARILYN HALL PATEL

Opinion

[*1060] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

On August 3, 1998, plaintiff Modesto Irrigation District, Inc. ("MID") filed this action alleging that defendants Pacific Gas & Electric Company ("PG&E") and Dynergy Power Services, Inc. ("DESTEC") refused to deliver wholesale electric power to MID in violation of federal and state antitrust laws and state tort laws. In particular, MID alleged (1) violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720 et seq., California's antitrust statute by both PG&E and DESTEC; (2) tortious interference with contract and with prospective business relationship against PG&E alone; and, (3) breach of contract against DESTEC. The court dismissed MID's federal and state antitrust claims on February 2, 1999, on defendants' motion, but granted MID leave to amend its complaint. See Modesto Irrigation Dist. v. Pacific [2] Gas & Elec., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14944, Case No. 98-3009 MHP, slip op. at 12-13 (N.D. Cal., Feb. 2, 1999) ("February order").

MID subsequently filed a first amended complaint ("FAC") on March 4, 1999, adding to the factual allegations in its original complaint and raising two additional causes of action: (1) violations of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, against PG&E and DESTEC, and (2) conspiracy to violate section 2 against PG&E and DESTEC. Again before the court is defendants' motion to dismiss MID's federal and state antitrust claims. Having considered the parties' arguments and submissions, the court enters the following memorandum and order.

[*1061] BACKGROUND

Plaintiff MID is an irrigation district, a public agency created under the authority of the California Water Code, which owns and operates facilities for the generation, transmission and distribution of electric power. FAC, at P 4. MID provides retail electric service in Stanislaus, Tuolumne, San Joaquin and Contra Costa counties, and wholesale electric service throughout the western United States. Id. Defendant PG&E is an investor-owned public utility engaged in the generation, transmission and distribution [*3] of electricity in northern and central California.¹ FAC, at PP 7, 10. PG&E sells and delivers electric power to both retail and wholesale consumers and separately sells transmission services to resellers of electric power. Id. at PP 9-10. As the predominant wholesaler and retailer of electric power in northern and central California, PG&E dominates and controls facilities for the transmission of electricity within its California service territory. Id. at P 10. According to MID, PG&E and MID are in "actual and potential competition" to supply residential and industrial consumers with electric power. Id. at P 12. Finally, DESTEC, a subsidiary of Dynergy Corporation of Houston, Texas, is a wholesaler of electric power, which is also referred to as a "power marketer." Id. at PP 6, 15.

[*4] The events at issue in this action concern the purchase and use of a "substation" ("Praxair substation") originally owned by Praxair, Inc. ("Praxair"), a large industrial consumer of electricity located in Pittsburg, California, and a retail customer of PG&E. FAC at P 17. A "substation" is a facility which receives electric power at high voltage and transforms the power into lower, usable voltages. Id. at P 16. MID alleges that PG&E, as the sole supplier of retail electric power in the geographic market of Pittsburg, possessed monopoly power and could control prices or exclude competition from the Pittsburg retail electric power market. Id. at P 19. MID further alleges that significant barriers allow PG&E to limit the access of competitors such as MID to the retail electric power market in the vicinity of Pittsburg. Id. at P 20. Among these barriers include PG&E's ownership or control of all the transmission lines and services supplying wholesale and retail electric power to Pittsburg and the impracticability of duplicating PG&E's local transmission services because of cost and regulatory barriers. Id. at PP 21-22. Finally, as a result of the exclusion of MID from [*5] the retail electric power market in the vicinity of Pittsburg, MID alleges that Praxair and other residential and commercial consumers of retail electric power have been deprived of the benefits of low-cost electric power. Id. at P 28.

¹ "Generation" is the conversion of energy from fuel or other sources into electricity. "Transmission" refers to the transportation of electricity via high voltage lines from generation facilities to distribution areas. "Distribution" involves the delivery and sale of electricity to ultimate retail and wholesale consumers. FAC, at P 7.

Prior to the events at issue in this action, DESTEC entered into a Control Area and Transmission Service Agreement ("CATSA") with PG&E which allowed DESTEC to utilize PG&E's electric transmission lines to deliver electric power to wholesale customers of DESTEC. FAC, at P 15. DESTEC intended to use PG&E's transmission facilities to sell and deliver low-cost electric power purchased in the Pacific Northwest to California electricity consumers. Among other limitations, the CATSA prohibits DESTEC from using PG&E's transmission facilities to directly deliver electric power to end-user, or retail, customers of PG&E. Id. In accordance with the requirements of the Federal Power Act ("FPA"), 16 U.S.C. § 824d\(c\), and regulations promulgated thereunder, 18 C.F.R. § 35.1, the CATSA was submitted to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") and became effective on April 14, 1995. Def. Request for Judicial Notice ("RJN"), [\[6\] Exh. 1 \[Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 71 F.E.R.C. P 61,045 \(April 14, 1995\)\]](#). As a result of the CATSA, DESTEC and PG&E were [\[*1062\]](#) direct competitors in the sale of wholesale electric power, but were not competitors with respect to the retail sale of electric power. FAC, at P 15.

Because DESTEC was prohibited from selling electric power at retail under the CATSA, it determined that it could service the needs of retail power consumers and sell its low-cost electric power only if two critical elements could be satisfied. First, DESTEC would have to persuade a utility company permitted under state and federal law to sell electricity to retail consumers to purchase a substation. FAC, at P 16. DESTEC could then supply its low-cost electric power on a wholesale basis to the utility company, which could then resell the electric power to retail electricity consumers via the substation. Id. at PP 16-17. Second, DESTEC would have to obtain PG&E's approval to allow DESTEC to deliver wholesale electric power to the substation under the terms of the CATSA. See id. at P 23.

To put its plan into motion, DESTEC approached MID with a proposal that MID buy the Praxair substation and [\[7\]](#) supply retail electric power consumers, such as Praxair and other residential and commercial consumers in the Pittsburg area, with low-cost DESTEC-supplied electric power via the Praxair substation. FAC, at P 17. On March 21, 1996, DESTEC entered into a written Power Sales Agreement with MID, in which MID agreed to purchase the Praxair substation and DESTEC agreed to deliver power to MID at the substation. Id. At the same time, MID and the City of Pittsburg ("Pittsburg") entered into a "Permission Agreement" under which Pittsburg agreed to allow MID to provide retail electric power to its residents and "to offer City residents an alternative for obtaining electricity at more competitive rates." ² Id. MID and Praxair also entered into a "Equipment Sales Agreement" for the purchase of the Praxair substation that was expressly conditioned upon PG&E's approval of the substation as a valid "output point" for DESTEC under the CATSA. Id. at P 18.

[\[8\]](#) By letter dated January 30, 1996, DESTEC sought PG&E's approval to provide the necessary transmission services needed to allow DESTEC to deliver wholesale electric power to the Praxair substation under the terms of the CATSA. FAC, at PP 23-24. MID also sought to enter into an "interconnection agreement" with PG&E setting forth the conditions under which PG&E would provide transmission services to MID at the Praxair substation. Id. at 24. On February 26, 1996, PG&E denied DESTEC's request that PG&E deliver power to the Praxair substation. Id. at P 24. In its opposition, MID also asserts that PG&E refused to grant MID's request to enter into an interconnection agreement as well. P's Opp. at 4. MID alleges that PG&E agreed to an identical request for the provision of transmission service by DESTEC in order to sell electric power wholesale to the Port of Oakland for later resale to Port tenants at retail. FAC, at P 24.

Thereafter, DESTEC and PG&E commenced proceedings in several forums to resolve their dispute. DESTEC initiated an arbitration proceeding under the terms of the CATSA to compel PG&E to provide transmission service to the Praxair substation. FAC, at P 25. PG&E filed [\[9\]](#) suit in federal district court seeking to enjoin the arbitration, but no order issued. Id. PG&E also filed a petition with FERC to disallow the Praxair scheme, which was opposed by MID and DESTEC. See RJN, Exh. 3 [Petition for Declaratory Order filed September 28, 1996]; RJN, Exhs. 4-6. Prior to any resolution of these proceedings, DESTEC and PG&E entered into a settlement of their dispute, which included an amendment of the CATSA [1063] which, in effect, prohibits DESTEC from supplying energy transmitted through PG&E to "substations." ³ FAC, at P 26. MID alleges that in particular PG&E and DESTEC jointly agreed that DESTEC would not supply wholesale electric power to MID via the Praxair substation using PG&E's transmission services. Id. To induce DESTEC to agree to the CATSA amendment, PG&E agreed to "functionally assign" to DESTEC certain wholesale power contracts permitting DESTEC to market its low-cost electric power at much higher rates negotiated and contracted for by PG&E. Id.

² Under the Permission Agreement, approximately one-half of the capacity of the Praxair substation would have been devoted to serving Praxair. FAC, at P 18. MID intended to deliver the remaining one-half of the Praxair substation capacity to commercial and residential accounts in Pittsburg which were at that time served almost entirely by PG&E. Id. at PP 18-19.

[10] On November 1, 1996, PG&E subsequently submitted the proposed amendment to the CATSA for approval and filing by FERC. FAC, at P 27; RJN, Exh. 9 [PG&E's Application for Approval of Second Amendment to CATSA]. However, on December 12, 1996, PG&E and DESTEC jointly requested that FERC suspend consideration of the proposed amendment. Id.; RJN, Exh. 10 [Joint Req. of PG&E and DESTEC]. Although FERC has taken no action on either the application for approval or the subsequent request to suspend consideration, MID asserts that PG&E and DESTEC have abided by their agreement not to provide MID with electric power to the Praxair substation at wholesale prices. Id. As a result, MID alleges that as a result of the CATSA amendment PG&E has thwarted both the Power Sales Agreement between MID and DESTEC and the Equipment Sales Agreement between MID and Praxair. Id. Similarly, although the Power Sales Agreement required that both MID and DESTEC "use their respective good faith best efforts to timely negotiate and obtain the agreements and the regulatory approvals" necessary to implement the agreement, MID alleges that DESTEC abrogated the Power Sales Agreement. Id. at P 28. These [11] actions, taken together, frustrated its plans to sell electric power to Praxair and to numerous commercial and residential electricity consumers in Pittsburg. Id. at PP 27-28.

MID first alleges that DESTEC and PG&E engaged in a "contract, combination and/or conspiracy" to unreasonably restrain competition in the wholesale and retail sale of electric power in PG&E's service area in northern and central California in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. FAC, at P 29. According to MID, DESTEC and PG&E have entered into an agreement under which DESTEC will not sell electric power at wholesale for delivery to substations and will abandon its arbitration proceeding against PG&E in exchange for the assignment by PG&E of certain wholesale power contracts. Id. at PP 29-30. MID also alleges two claims based on section 2 of the Sherman Act: actual or attempted monopolization and conspiracy to monopolize. In Count Two, MID alleges that PG&E has attempted to monopolize and/or has monopolized the market for the retail distribution of electric power to Praxair and Pittsburg's electricity consumers. Id. at P 36. Specifically, MID alleges that PG&E has refused to permit its transmission [12] lines to be used by MID or DESTEC to supply wholesale electric power to the Praxair substation by improperly invoking various provisions of the CATSA agreement. Id. at P 38. In doing so, MID asserts that PG&E has unlawfully exercised its monopoly power over its transmission lines. FAC at P 40. In Count Three, MID also asserts that PG&E and DESTEC engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize the retail electric power market in the Pittsburg area. Id. at P 48.

LEGAL STANDARD

HN1 A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim will be denied unless it appears that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him or her to relief. Conley [*1064] v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Fidelity Financial Corp. v. Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco, 792 F.2d 1432, 1435 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1064, 93 L. Ed. 2d 998, 107 S. Ct. 949 (1987). All material allegations in the complaint will be taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. HN2 NL Industries, Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986). Although the court is generally confined [13] to consideration of the allegations in the pleadings, when the complaint is accompanied by attached documents, such documents are deemed part of the complaint and may be considered in evaluating the merits of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Durning v.

³ Likewise, PG&E and MID reached a settlement agreement under which MID agreed to withdraw its opposition to the proposed CATSA amendment and submitted this proposed agreement to the CPUC for approval. However, the CPUC declined to approve the settlement agreement. RJN, Exh. 11 [Re: Pacific Gas & Electric Co., No. 98-06-020 (June 4, 1998)].

First Boston Corp., 815 F.2d 1265, 1267 (9th Cir. 1987), cert. denied sub. nom., Wyoming Community Dev. Auth. v. Durning, 484 U.S. 944, 98 L. Ed. 2d 358, 108 S. Ct. 330 (1987).

HN3[¹⁴] In the Ninth Circuit, "antitrust pleadings need not contain great factual specificity." Portland Retail Druggists Ass'n v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan, 662 F.2d 641, 648 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1229, 84 L. Ed. 2d 368, 105 S. Ct. 1230 (1981). "There is no special rule requiring more factual specificity in antitrust pleadings." Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 924 (9th Cir. 1980) (citing Franchise Realty Interstate Corp. v. San Francisco Local Joint Executive Bd. of Culinary Workers, 542 F.2d 1076, 1082 (9th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 940, 51 L. Ed. 2d 787, 97 S. Ct. 1571 (1977)). However, as noted by many [14] courts, the court need not accept legal conclusions asserted in the complaint even if pled as "facts" or conclusory allegations without more. JM Computer Svcs. Inc. v. Schlumberger Technologies, Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21885, 1996 WL 241607, *2 (N.D. Cal., May 3, 1996) (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209, 106 S. Ct. 2932 (1986)).

DISCUSSION

I. Analytical Framework for the Sherman Act, Section 1

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes unlawful "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the HN4[¹⁵] States." HN5[¹⁵] 15 U.S.C. § 1. To state a claim for a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must establish (1) an agreement, conspiracy, or combination among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) which is intended to harm or unreasonably restrain competition under a per se or rule of reason analysis; and (3) which actually causes injury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant, within a field of commerce in which the claimant is engaged (i.e. "antitrust injury"). McGlinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811 (9th Cir. 1988); [15] see also Rickards v. Canine Eye Registration Found., Inc., 704 F.2d 1449, 1453 (9th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 994, 78 L. Ed. 2d 683, 104 S. Ct. 488 (1983) (plaintiff must show "contract, combination or conspiracy" under section 1 of the Sherman Act). HN6[¹⁵] "Most antitrust claims are analyzed under a 'rule of reason,' according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition, taking into account a variety of factors, including specific information about the relevant business, its condition before and after the restraint was imposed, and the restraint's history, nature, and effect." State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 118 S. Ct. 275, 279, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997). However, some types of restraints are deemed unlawful per se if they have a "predictable and pernicious anticompetitive effect." Id.

In noting that section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that there be a "contract, combination, . . . or conspiracy," the Supreme Court observed HN7[¹⁵] that a business "generally has a right to deal, or refuse to deal, with whomever it likes, as long as it [16] does so independently." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 601 n. 27, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985). Thus, section 1 does not proscribe "independent action." Id. However, "agreements not to [¹⁰⁶⁵] compete, with the aim of preserving or extending a monopoly," are unlawful under the Sherman Act. Cf. Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 376, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973) (citing Schine Chain Theatres v. U.S., 334 U.S. 110, 119, 92 L. Ed. 1245, 68 S. Ct. 947 (1948), overruled on other grounds, Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771-72, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984)). HN8[¹⁵] "A § 1 agreement may be found when 'the conspirators had a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds in an unlawful arrangement.'" Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 771 (quoting American Tobacco Co. v. U.S., 328 U.S. 781, 810, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946)).

II. Analytical [17] Framework for the Sherman Act, Section 2

In contrast to section 1 of the Sherman Act, section 2 claims tend to encompass a narrower range of anticompetitive behaviors specifically defined as monopolization and attempts to monopolize." Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1521 (9th Cir. 1997). Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides that "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any person or persons, to monopolize . . . trade shall be guilty" of an antitrust violation. HN9 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 2. In essence, section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits a monopolist's unilateral action, such as a unilateral refusal to deal, "if that conduct harms the competitive process in the absence of a legitimate business justification." Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1209-10 \(9th Cir. 1997\) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1094, 118 S. Ct. 1560, 140 L. Ed. 2d 792 (1998). HN10 [↑] To state a claim for a section 2 monopolization violation MID must allege that PG&E: "(1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) willfully acquired or maintained that [18] power." See Image Tech., 125 F.3d at 1202. HN11 [↑] "'Willful acquisition' or 'maintenance of monopoly power' involves 'exclusionary conduct,' not power gained 'from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" Id. at 1208 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\)). HN12 [↑] In the case "of a regulated utility struggling with dual regulation, bearing in mind that the utility is entitled to recover its costs of service and to provide its investors with a reasonable rate of return," an antitrust plaintiff must also establish a specific intent by the monopoly to engage in monopolistic conduct through "the actions of the utility, taken as a whole." City of Anaheim v. Southern California Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1373, 1378 \(9th Cir. 1992\) ("the requirement of specific intent is an appropriate way to erect a dike which is sufficient to prevent an untoward invasion of the land of legal monopolies by the sea of antitrust") (citing City of Mishawaka v. American Elec. Power Co., Inc., 616 F.2d 976, 985-86 \(7th Cir. 1980\)). [19] cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1096, 66 L. Ed. 2d 824, 101 S. Ct. 892 (1981)).

"The traditional claim for attempted monopolization arises when the danger of monopolization is clear and present, but before a full-blown monopolization has necessarily been accomplished." Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 541 \(9th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 977, 118 L. Ed. 2d 316, 112 S. Ct. 1603 (1992). HN13 [↑] To prevail on a section 2 attempt claim, MID must establish: "(1) a specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed at accomplishing that purpose; (3) a dangerous probability of achieving 'monopoly power,' and (4) causal antitrust injury." See Image Tech., 125 F.3d at 1202 (quoting Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield, Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir.\)), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 987, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424, 116 S. Ct. 515 (1995). "The requirements of a § 2 monopolization claim are similar, differing primarily in the requisite intent and the necessary level of monopoly power." Id. (citing [California Computer Products, Inc. \[*1066\] v. International Business Machines Corp., 613 F.2d 727, 736-37 \(9th Cir. 1979\)](#)). [20]

Common to both the monopolization and attempt to monopolize claims, "section 2 plaintiffs must also establish antitrust injury." Id. (citing Cost Management Services, Inc. v. Washington Natural Gas Co., 99 F.3d 937, 949 \(9th Cir. 1996\)). In order to survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), an antitrust complaint "need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws." Newman v. Universal Pictures, 813 F.2d 1519, 1522 \(9th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1059, 100 L. Ed. 2d 931, 108 S. Ct. 2831 (1988)

.III. Analysis

In support of its second motion to dismiss, defendants contend that (1) PG&E's unilateral refusal to provide transmission service to the Praxair substation is necessarily incidental to a valid petition to a federal agency immune from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington⁴ doctrine; (2) MID has failed to allege a sufficient "contract, combination or conspiracy" to state a claim for a section 1 of the Sherman Act violation or for a conspiracy to violate section 2 of the Sherman Act; (3) MID [21] has failed to point to a cognizable theory under which to impose section 2 monopolization liability upon PG&E; and (4) that MID lacks standing because it has failed to plead a sufficient antitrust injury as a result of defendants' actions. Defendants finally ask the court to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over MID's state law claims if MID's federal antitrust claims are dismissed.

A. Judicial Notice

⁴ Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-70, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\)

Defendants again ask the court to take judicial notice of numerous documents which relate to either the CATSA or subsequent amendments to the CATSA and regulations and other regulatory decisions promulgated by FERC. HN14 [↑] "Documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically [22] attached to the pleading, may be considered in ruling on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss." Fecht v. The Price Co., 70 F.3d 1078, 1080 n. 1 \(9th Cir. 1995\), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1136, 134 L. Ed. 2d 547, 116 S. Ct. 1422 (1996) (quoting Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 \(9th Cir.\), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1219, 129 L. Ed. 2d 832, 114 S. Ct. 2704 \(1994\)); Emrich v. Touche Ross & Co., 846 F.2d 1190, 1198 \(9th Cir. 1988\) (holding that a district court's taking notice of the "proceedings and determinations" of prior related litigation does not necessitate treating the Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion as one for summary judgment). HN15 [↑] The court can take judicial notice of facts beyond the complaint and matters of public records such as pleadings in another action and records and reports of administrative bodies. Anderson v. Calif. Republican Party, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18246, 1991 WL 472928, *2 \(N.D. Cal., Nov. 26, 1991\), aff'd, 977 F.2d 587 (9th Cir. 1992) (table).

The court again finds that several of the documents submitted as part of PG&E's request for judicial notice are of the type capable of ready determination [23] by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot be reasonably questioned. See Fed. R. Evid. 201\(b\). Of note is the "Joint Request of Pacific Gas and Electric Company and DESTEC Power Services, Inc. to Suspend Commission Consideration of Second Amendment to the Control Area and Transmission Service Agreement," RJN, Exh. 10 ["Joint Request"], and the PG&E Petition for Declaratory Order, RJN, Exh. 3. Both documents clearly show the date-stamp of FERC and refers to the docket number under which the request is filed, and is readily accessible through the Internet. See RJN, Exhs. 3, 10. Finally, the court takes judicial notice of PG&E's submission to FERC for filing and acceptance of its "Second Amendment to the [*1067] Control Area and Transmission Services Agreement" between DESTEC and PG&E for the same reasons as stated above. RJN, Exh. 9.

B. Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 2 Conspiracy to Monopolize

In its prior order, the court held that although MID attempted to characterize the events following PG&E's unilateral refusal to permit DESTEC to use its lines to supply wholesale electricity to the Praxair substation as some sort of "agreement" to engage in anticompetitive [24] activity, it became clear at the hearing that defendants continue to operate under the CATSA and not as part of a speculative "agreement" intended to restrain trade. The court therefore finds that MID's allegations of an "agreement" fail to sufficiently describe an actionable "contract, combination, . . . , or conspiracy under section 1.

February order, at 12. In giving MID leave to amend its complaint, the court in essence asked MID "to articulate with . . . clarity the nature of [the alleged] agreement." Id. at 11.

In again arguing that there could have been no section 1 violation because there was no agreement, defendants assert that MID has provided no new facts with which to support its claim that MID and DESTEC engaged in a conspiracy or concerted activity in violation of section 1.⁵ MID, however, points to several allegations in its complaint which it maintains establish the existence of an agreement, combination or conspiracy. Plaintiff again initially points to its allegation that defendants:

have been engaged in a continuing contract, combination and conspiracy to unreasonably restrain competition in interstate commerce in the wholesale and retail [25] sale of electricity in PG&E's service area in Northern and Central California in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

⁵ Despite MID's protestations to the contrary, defendants again do not argue that the actions or regulatory authority of FERC or CPUC immunizes them from federal antitrust liability under the state action doctrine. See February order at 8 (noting cases holding that Federal Power Act ("FPA"), 16 U.S.C. § 824a\(b\), does not insulate electric power companies from operation of antitrust laws).

FAC, at P 29; compare Compl., at P 23 (stating identical allegation). MID again asserts that this allegation is sufficient to state a claim under section 1. However, as held in the February order, "although antitrust pleadings need not contain great factual specificity, the court need not accept conclusory allegations or legal conclusions couched as facts." See February order at 10.

In subsequent paragraphs, however, MID alters somewhat the factual allegations [26] forming the basis of its section 1 claims as alleged in its original complaint. Plaintiffs allege that:

The aforesaid contract, combination and/or conspiracy have consisted of a continuing agreement among and between the named defendants that DESTEC will not sell electricity transmitted by defendant PG&E at wholesale for delivery at substations, including substations owned or to be acquired by plaintiff MID, and specifically including the Praxair substation in Pittsburg, California. Further, that DESTEC will forego its contention, set forth and presented in an arbitration proceeding that under the CATSA agreement, that PG&E was legally obligated to deliver power to DESTEC for resale to MID at the Praxair substation.⁶ [28]

FAC at P 30. As before, MID continues:

In furtherance of and as part of that agreement and to induce and persuade [*1068] DESTEC to abandon the arbitration proceeding and to renege its planned wholesale electric sales to MID at the Praxair substation, defendants have entered into an agreement under which PG&E functionally assigned to DESTEC certain wholesale customers at prices vastly in excess of the market price. In effect, PG&E bribed DESTEC to give [27] up its efforts to carry out its obligations to MID under the Power Sales Agreement. This contract, combination and/or conspiracy not to provide electric power to MID for retail resale constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade.⁷

FAC at P 31.

In contrast to its earlier allegations, MID has now shifted its focus from the "Second Amendment" to the CATSA as part of the settlement of defendants' arbitration dispute, see Compl. at P 21, to an agreement to abandon the arbitration proceeding initiated by DESTEC and to "give up its efforts to carry out its obligations to MID under the Power Sales Agreement." FAC at P 31. For instance, MID again alleges that "as arbitration was about to conclude . . . , PG&E and DESTEC entered into a settlement wherein they jointly agreed DESTEC would not supply energy to MID . . . They also formulated a formal proposed amendment [29] of their CATSA agreement . . ." FAC at P 26; compare Compl., at P 21. MID again alleges that PG&E submitted the proposed CATSA amendment to FERC, but that PG&E and DESTEC jointly requested that FERC suspend consideration of the proposed amendment. FAC at P

⁶ In paragraph 24 of its original complaint, MID stated:

The aforesaid contract combination and conspiracy have consisted of a continuing agreement among and between the named defendants that defendant DESTEC will not sell electricity at wholesale for delivery at substations, including substations owned or to be acquired by plaintiff MID and specifically including the Linde substation in Pittsburg, California.

Compl., at P 24. It further added in its opposition that PG&E's refusal to deal with either DESTEC or MID with respect to the Praxair substation also constitutes a section 1 violation: PG&E "refused to enter into an interconnection agreement with . . . MID (and refused DESTEC's request pursuant to the CATSA) which would have permitted MID to resell electric power from the Praxair substation to Praxair and customers in Pittsburg." P's Opp., at 14 (citing Compl., at PP 18-20). MID concludes that these allegations, taken together or individually, establish that "the intended goal of defendants' concerted conduct was nevertheless achieved, i.e., block MID from competing with PG&E" regardless of whether the CATSA amendment became effective. P's Opp., at 15.

⁷ In the parallel allegations in the original complaint, MID alleged that:

In furtherance of and as part of that agreement: defendants have entered into an agreement under which PG&E functionally assigned to DESTEC certain wholesale power contracts, which will enable DESTEC to sell power to its wholesale customers at prices vastly in excess of the market price in exchange for DESTEC agreeing not to sell power for delivery at substations.

27; compare Compl. at P 21. MID finally concludes that "although the FERC never ruled upon the proposed amendment, PG&E and DESTEC have nevertheless adhered to their explicit and/or implicit agreement not to supply power to plaintiff MID at the Praxair substation utilizing PG&E's transmission services." FAC at P 27; compare P's Opp. to D's Mot. to Dismiss the Orig. Compl., at 15 (concluding that allegations in original complaint establish that "the intended goal of defendants' concerted conduct was nevertheless achieved, i.e., block MID from competing with PG&E" regardless of whether the CATSA amendment became effective).

Despite this shift in focus, the only allegations of a "contract, combination, . . . , or conspiracy" in restraint of trade made in connection with MID's section 1 claim as alleged in Count One of the FAC are those raised in paragraphs 29, 30 and 31 of the FAC. MID fails to incorporate by reference [30] into Count One the paragraphs preceding Count One, including those paragraphs containing specific allegations providing greater detail of the transactions between PG&E, DESTEC and MID, including various agreements, attempted agreements and unilateral acts. Since none of these paragraphs are specifically incorporated or referred to in the first cause of action the court cannot tell whether any of these relate to the section 1 claim. Furthermore, HN16[¹⁴] the court must [*1069] confine its inquiry of whether MID has sufficiently stated a section 1 claim to those allegations contained in paragraphs 29, 30, and 31. In light of the generalized allegations contained in these paragraphs regarding the nature of the contract, combination or conspiracy, it is clear that the agreement alleged in the FAC is no different and no more specific than that found by the court to fail to state a claim upon defendants' earlier motion.

Nonetheless, although MID attempts to distinguish the factual allegations regarding the existence of an agreement in its original complaint from those newly asserted in the FAC, it is clear that MID reasserts the identical claim that PG&E and DESTEC "agreed" that DESTEC would not sell electric [31] power at wholesale for delivery to substations and in exchange would acquire certain wholesale electric power contracts which permitted DESTEC to resell electricity at a substantial profit. Cf. U.S. v. American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., 433 F.2d 174, 182 (3rd Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 948, 28 L. Ed. 2d 231, 91 S. Ct. 928 (1970) ("no formal agreement is necessary to constitute an unlawful conspiracy; it is sufficient that a concert of action be contemplated and the defendants conform to the arrangement"). As this court held in the February order, the instant action at most involves a unilateral effort by PG&E to deny DESTEC's request that PG&E provide wholesale electric power to the Praxair substation. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984). In reaching its decision, the court again notes that MID has recourse to "other laws, for example, 'unfair competition' laws, business tort laws, or regulatory laws, [which] provide remedies for various 'competitive practices thought to be offensive to proper standards of business morality,'" such as the allegations [32] of bribery contained in paragraph 30 of the FAC. See NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 498, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998) (quoting 3 P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, ANTITRUST LAW P 651d, at 78 (1996)). MID's allegations are insufficient to state a section 1 claim that PG&E and DESTEC engaged in a "contract, combination, . . . , or conspiracy" in restraint of trade.

In contrast to its section 1 claim, MID in its third cause of action for conspiracy to monopolize under section 2 of the Sherman Act does incorporate by reference all preceding paragraphs and factual allegations. HN17[¹⁵] To state a conspiracy to monopolize claim under section 2, a plaintiff must set forth a specific intent to monopolize and the anticompetitive acts designed to effect that intent, "although in the conspiracy claim the act may be no more than the agreement itself." Hunt-Wesson Foods, Inc. v. Ragu Foods, Inc., 627 F.2d 919, 926 (9th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 921, 67 L. Ed. 2d 348, 101 S. Ct. 1369 (1981). "No particular level of market power or 'dangerous probability of success' has to be alleged or proved in a conspiracy [to monopolize] [33] claim where the specific intent to monopolize is otherwise apparent from the character of the actions taken." Id. Whereas MID's first cause of action fails to state a claim for being too generalized, its third cause of action fails for providing an excess of detail without pointing to the specific agreement that constitutes the basis of its conspiracy claim. In its FAC, MID points to a host of allegations specifying a number of agreements and activities but neglects to identify which of these run afoul of the antitrust laws and form the basis for this third claim. However, MID simply concludes that PG&E and DESTEC have "engaged in a continuing conspiracy to monopolize the market for the sale of retail electric power" without providing any direction as to the overt acts or agreements that constitute the conspiracy. See FAC, at P 48.

Furthermore, MID provides only a general allegation of antitrust injury arising from its section 2 conspiracy claim, but fails to point to how any of the overt acts or agreements alleged resulted in the antitrust injury asserted. A plaintiff must establish "the existence of antitrust injury, [*1070] which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were [*34] intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990) (citations and internal quotations omitted). That is, plaintiff must have suffered an injury which bears a causal connection to the alleged antitrust violation. Associated Gen. Contractors of Calif., Inc. v. Calif. Council of State Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). MID alleges in paragraph 45 that "as a direct and proximate result" of the alleged violations it will be "immediately and irreparably injured." FAC, at P 45. However, MID's allegation of antitrust injury is conclusory and does not provide any causal relationship between its section 2 conspiracy claim and an antitrust injury. As such, the court dismisses both Counts One and Three of MID's FAC in their entirety.

C. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Defendants further argue that MID's antitrust claims are barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine because PG&E's refusal to wheel power to DESTEC was "necessarily incidental" to filing a FERC petition, which it contends [*35] constitutes a valid petitioning activity. Although defendants suggest that Noerr-Pennington immunity should extend to both MID's section 1 and section 2 claims, they direct their Noerr-Pennington argument primarily to MID's section 2 monopolization claim asserted in Count Two of the FAC. In Count Two, MID alleges that PG&E monopolized or attempted to monopolize the Pittsburgh market for the retail distribution of electric power by unilaterally refusing to grant DESTEC's request for transmission services and by improperly invoking various provisions of the CATSA in doing so. See FAC at P 38. As such, the court confines its analysis of Noerr-Pennington immunity to MID's section 2 claim based on PG&E's unilateral refusal to deal. In any event, the court need not consider PG&E's suggestion that Noerr-Pennington immunity attaches to Counts One or Three of the FAC since MID fails to allege a sufficient contract, combination or conspiracy in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act.

In opposition, MID maintains that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is of no relevance to this action because it does not claim that defendants run afoul of the antitrust laws through their [*36] efforts to petition FERC, initiate litigation in the federal courts or to petition or solicit any other government agency or court. Rather, MID briefly argues that an alleged anticompetitive agreement between PG&E and DESTEC was not "incidental" to bringing a valid FERC petition because the agreement was solely the result of defendants' private actions, and not the result of any valid governmental action. In doing so, it wrongly asserts that Noerr stands for the proposition that Noerr-Pennington immunity attaches only where a restraint or monopolization is the result of valid government action, as opposed to private action. See Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136; compare Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 503-06, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988) (citing Noerr, 365 U.S. at 143) (Noerr immunity extends to situations "where, independent of any government action, the anticompetitive restraint results directly from private action, the restraint cannot form the basis of antitrust liability if it is 'incidental' to a valid effort to influence governmental action"). Moreover, MID misconstrues its own complaint [*37] in asserting that its section 2 claim and resultant antitrust injury arises out of an alleged agreement between PG&E and DESTEC not to supply power to the Praxair substation. See FAC at PP 36-43 & 45-6. Finally, in an important concession, MID maintains that because the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply it need not plead facts to establish that defendants' conduct falls within the "sham exception" to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Cf. California Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 511, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 [*1071] S. Ct. 609 (1972) (no Noerr immunity if petitioning activity is "mere sham to cover . . . an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor"); Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc., 944 F.2d 1525, 1529 (9th Cir. 1991) ("the filing of a lawsuit is immune from the antitrust laws unless the suit is a sham"), aff'd, 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993).

HN18 [↑] Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, one who files a lawsuit or otherwise petitions the government for redress is generally immune from antitrust liability [*38] unless such litigation or activity is a sham. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993); Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-70, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965).

In California Motor Transp., the Supreme Court adapted the Noerr doctrine to the judicial process in addressing the contention of the respondent out-of-state highway carriers that a group of in-state highway carriers conspired to monopolize the transportation of goods in California by instituting state and federal proceedings to resist and defeat applications by respondents to acquire operating rights within California. Id. at 509. In rejecting antitrust liability, the Court concluded that "it would be destructive . . . to hold that groups with common interests may not, without violating the antitrust laws, use the channels and procedures of state and federal agencies and courts to advocate their causes and points of view respecting [39] resolution of their business and economic interests vis-a-vis their competitors." Id.

Defendants maintain that PG&E's refusal to grant DESTEC's request to provide transmission service to the Praxair substation should be considered to be "incidental" to its filing of a petition to FERC seeking a declaration that "PG&E is not obligated to interconnect and provide transmission service" in connection with the agreement between DESTEC and MID to provide electric power to Praxair and other retail consumers of Pittsburg. See D's Exh. 3 [PG&E FERC Petition dated Feb. 28, 1996]. According to MID's allegations, DESTEC requested that PG&E provide to the Praxair substation transmission service under the CATSA by letter dated January 30, 1996. FAC at P 24. "Simultaneously," MID requested that PG&E enter into a separate interconnection agreement under which MID could receive interconnection service at the Praxair substation. Id. On February 26, 1996, PG&E denied DESTEC's request. Id. A flurry of activity ensued after PG&E's denial of DESTEC's request: DESTEC initiated private arbitration proceedings under the terms of the CATSA to direct PG&E to provide transmission service; and [40] PG&E filed a lawsuit in the United States District for the Northern District of California seeking an order enjoining arbitration. FAC at P 25. Importantly, on February 28, 1996, PG&E filed its FERC petition. D's Exh. 3 [PG&E FERC Petition dated Feb. 28, 1996]. In the petition, PG&E alleges, among other things, that the proposed transaction between DESTEC and MID is a "sham wholesale transaction under the Energy Policy Act of 1992 ["EPAct"]," Pub. L. No. 102-486, 106 Stat. 2776 (1992), and that the transaction would undermine a scheme devised by the California Public Utilities Commission ("CPUC") to open up the electric power industry to greater competition at the wholesale and retail levels. Id. at i & 2. On March 26, 1999, MID filed an application with FERC as well in which it sought an order requiring PG&E to interconnect its transmission system with the Praxair substation and to agree to an interconnection agreement. D's Exh. 6 [MID FERC Petition dated March 26, 1999]. In light of the proximity in time of PG&E's rejection of DESTEC's wheeling request and its filing of a FERC petition, defendants maintain that the propriety of DESTEC's [1072] request for transmission service [41] to the Praxair substation was in dispute from the outset and that PG&E's refusal to wheel electric power was a "jurisprudential precondition" to PG&E's FERC petition.

In support of its argument, defendants point to Primetime 24 Joint Venture v. National Broadcasting Co., Inc., 21 F. Supp. 2d 350, 358-59 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), in which the court held that a decision by defendants "not to negotiate with or grant to plaintiff a copyright license amounted to the rejection of a settlement offer and could not form the basis of antitrust liability." The plaintiff asserted that defendants engaged in concerted action in violation of federal antitrust laws by encouraging numerous lawsuits against plaintiff alleging copyright infringement and by refusing to deal with plaintiff in its efforts to negotiate a copyright license. In rejecting plaintiff's arguments, the court noted that "conduct or communication which is incident to or attendant upon effective litigation should also receive Noerr immunity." Id. at 356 (citations omitted). It reasoned that "because pre-litigation communications provide useful notice of potential liability and facilitate the settlement [42] of controversies, it would be foolish to adopt antitrust rules encouraging suit before communication by penalizing the communication but not the suit." Id. at 357 (internal citations and quotations omitted). Importantly, the court also held that defendants' refusals to negotiate a licensing agreement should "receive Noerr immunity because if the defendants had accepted [plaintiff's] offer and agreed to license it, any infringement dispute would be moot." Id. at 359.

HN19 [↑] The Ninth Circuit likewise has held that "[a] decision to accept or reject an offer of settlement is conduct incidental to the prosecution of [a lawsuit] and not a separate and distinct activity which might form the basis for antitrust liability." Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc., 944 F.2d 1525, 1528 (9th Cir. 1991), aff'd, 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). In Columbia Pictures, the counterclaimants alleged that several movie studio counterdefendants had engaged in anticompetitive conduct by filing a copyright infringement action against the counterclaimants and by subsequently [43] concertedly refusing to grant copyright licenses. Id. at 1528. In rejecting the counterclaimants antitrust claims, the court noted that the counterclaimants request for copyright licensing "amounted to an offer to settle the lawsuit" and that the lawsuit would have been mooted by any agreement to license the copyrights at issue. Id. Similarly, in Transphase Systems, Inc. v. Southern Calif. Edison Co., 839 F. Supp. 711, 716 (C.D. Cal. 1993), plaintiff alleged that defendants violated section 1 by "appearing together before the CPUC to take positions that would disadvantage [plaintiff]" and by "speaking in unison before the CPUC to demand the fruits of their monopolies." Id. (internal quotations omitted). Plaintiff further alleged that defendants "maintained their monopoly power by 'resisting meaningful changes'" through the public positions they took in the CPUC proceedings in violation of section 2. Id. The court rejected plaintiff's claims in holding that defendants' petitioning activity before the CPUC was clearly protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Id.

In contrast, the Ninth Circuit has also held that "applying to [44] an administrative agency for approval of an anticompetitive contract is not lobbying activity within the meaning of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine." Columbia Steel Casting Co., Inc. v. Portland General Electric Co., 111 F.3d 1427, 1445-46 (9th Cir. 1996). In Columbia Steel, the plaintiff-consumer of electric power brought an antitrust action against two electric utilities, both of whom were competitors in the Portland-area electric power market, charging them with violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by entering into an agreement to divide the City of Portland into exclusive service territories. Id. at 1432-33. After the state public utility commission ("PUC") approved an agreement between the utilities to exchange certain property and customer accounts, but not an allocation [*1073] of exclusive service territories, plaintiff sought to purchase electricity from the lower cost utility. Id. at 1435-36. The competitor utility, however, refused to wheel power from the lower cost utility to plaintiff's casting plant, asserting that it had an exclusive right to service plaintiff's plant because the plant fell within its service [45] territory. Id. at 1436. In response to the plaintiff's antitrust claims, the defendant utility company asserted that it was entitled to Noerr-Pennington immunity because it had sought the approval of the state PUC for the anticompetitive agreement. In rejecting defendants' contention, the court noted that "in any event" the defendant utility company was being held liable for entering into an agreement with a competitor to replace competition with area monopolies, and not for the filing of an application with the state PUC. Id. at 1445-46.

In essence, MID maintains that defendants' assertion of Noerr-Pennington immunity fails because PG&E's anticompetitive conduct was not "incidental" to bringing a valid FERC petition or other litigation. In doing so, it asserts that PG&E's refusal to wheel electric power to the Praxair substation occurred before it brought its FERC petition against DESTEC. It reasons that therefore PG&E's refusal was not "incidental" to its FERC petition and should not be accorded Noerr protection. However, it is clear that PG&E's refusal is akin to the refusals to negotiate or grant copyright licenses in Columbia Pictures [46] and Primetime 24. PG&E's refusal to honor DESTEC's request to wheel power to the Praxair substation was clearly a precondition to its FERC petition seeking a declaration that the proposed transaction between DESTEC and MID was a sham wholesale transaction and any agreement to wheel power to the Praxair substation would have mooted PG&E's FERC petition.

The court thus finds that PG&E's refusal to honor DESTEC's request was "incidental" to its FERC petition and therefore falls within the scope of Noerr-Pennington immunity. As such, the court dismisses in its entirety Count Two of the FAC. Finally, because MID alleges that its state law antitrust claims are bound up in the same conduct as and are ancillary to its federal antitrust claims, see FAC at P 51, the court dismisses MID's Cartwright Act claim on parallel grounds. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720. Cf. Vinci v. Waste Management, Inc., 36 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 1814 n.1 (1995); Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court (U.S. West Cellular), 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1232 n.2 (1993); Redwood Theatres, Inc. v. Festival Enterprises, Inc., 908 F.2d 477, 481-82 & n.3 (9th Cir. 1990). [47]

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the court hereby GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss MID's federal antitrust and Cartwright Act claims against DESTEC and PG&E. Furthermore, because MID's counsel is an experienced antitrust lawyer who knows how to prepare a well-pleaded complaint and the court has already provided MID with the opportunity to amend its complaint, the court denies MID any further leave to amend its complaint.

61 F. Supp. 2d 1058, *1073 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13505, 47

Finally, the court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction pursuant to section 1337\(c\)\(3\) over the remaining state law claims and DISMISSES these claims without prejudice. Under 28 U.S.C. section 1337\(d\), the statute of limitations on plaintiff's state law claims is tolled while claims are pending until thirty (30) days after an order of dismissal, thus allowing the plaintiff time for filing a new action in state court without a lapse of her rights.

This order fully adjudicates the motion reflected at Docket # 37 and the Clerk of the Court shall remove it from the pending motions list.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Date:

MARILYN HALL PATEL

Chief Judge

United States District Court

Northern District of California [48]

End of Document

Pan Asia Venture Capital Corp. v. Hearst Corp.

Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, Division Four

August 20, 1999, Decided

Nos. A077561, A079071.

Reporter

74 Cal. App. 4th 424 *; 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 118 ; 1999 Cal. App. LEXIS 773 ; 99 Cal. Daily Op. Service 6844; 99 Daily Journal DAR 8651; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,624

PAN ASIA VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATION, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. HEARST CORPORATION et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Notice: [1] Opinion certified for partial publication. *

Subsequent History: As Modified on Denial of Rehearing of September 20, 1999, Reported at: 1999 Cal. App. LEXIS 851.

Review Denied December 15, 1999, Reported at: 1999 Cal. LEXIS 8662.

Prior History: San Francisco County Superior Court. Super. Ct. No. 962780. Honorable Donald Mitchell, Judge.

Disposition: The judgment and attorney fee order are reversed. The order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is affirmed. Appellants shall recover their costs.

Core Terms

costs, allocated, advertising, bid, Transportation, products, trial court, overhead, inches, per mile, editorial, issue of fact, trier of fact, irrational, allocation of costs, attorney's fees, matter of law, total cost, newspapers, expenses, purposes, appears, space

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

The purpose of the California Unfair Practices Act is to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17001.

* Pursuant to California Rules of Court, rules 976(b) and 976.1, this opinion is certified for publication with the exception of parts II., III., and IV.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN2 Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

The California Unfair Practices Act forbids most locality discriminations, the use of loss leaders, gifts, secret rebates, boycotts and deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200, 17500, 17040-17041, 17049-10750, 17044, 17043, 17045, 17046.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

HN3 Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The California Unfair Practices Act prohibits the sale of goods and services below cost. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17043, 17048.5, 17049.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Proof that a defendant sold or distributed articles or products below cost will be presumptive evidence of the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17071.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

HN5 Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

In a case involving production, the California Unfair Practices Act defines cost to include the cost of raw materials, labor and all overhead expenses. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17026.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

The separate definition of overhead expenses is given as labor (including salaries of executives and officers), rent, interest on borrowed capital, depreciation, selling cost, maintenance of equipment, delivery costs, credit losses, all types of licenses, taxes, insurance and advertising. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17029.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

California's fully allocated cost standard is a fair allocation of all fixed or variable costs associated with production of the article or product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN8 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

Fixed costs are those that do not vary with changes in output, while variable costs are those that do vary with changes in output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN9 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

Fully allocated cost has been equated with average total cost, which 'reflects that portion of the firm's total costs--both fixed and variable--attributable on an average basis to each unit of output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN10 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

Cost has been described as the initial expense of producing the article together with its share of the load of carrying on the business through which it is sold.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

HN11 [] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

Cost has been treated as the burden imposed upon the producer's overall cost of doing business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

HN12 [] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

Cost is to be measured as the fair average cost of production over a reasonable time, rather than the cost of one item on a particular occasion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

HN13 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

Determination of the defendant's cost has always been treated as an issue of fact.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN14 [] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

An issue of fact is one where the evidence introduced will support a decision on either side, that is to say, reasonable minds could fairly differ as to the answer to the question posed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN15 [] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

An issue of fact can become an issue of law when reasonable minds can draw only one conclusion from the evidence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

HN16 [] Standards of Review, Substantial Evidence

An issue of fact cannot be taken from a jury by the trial court and treated as an issue of law unless only one conclusion is legally deducible and any other conclusion cannot command the support of substantial evidence that will survive appellate review.

Headnotes/Summary

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

A newspaper brought an action against another newspaper, alleging that defendant, in successfully bidding for a contract to publish public notices for a city and county, had bid below the actual cost of publishing ads, in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17043 (prohibition against selling below cost to injure competitors), of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA). The parties offered conflicting methods for determining defendant's incurred costs. Plaintiff allocated defendant's costs between its news products and its advertising products according to defendant's revenue, while defendant's method allocated its costs according to space devoted to advertising as opposed to news or editorials. The trial court determined that a revenue allocation method was appropriate and did not allow defendant to present its method to the jury. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, the trial court trebled the jury's award under the UPA, and the court awarded plaintiff attorney fees. (Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, No. 962780, Donald S. Mitchell, Judge.)

The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment and the order awarding attorney fees. The court held that the trial court erred in determining that plaintiff's method for determining defendant's costs was the only appropriate method and in precluding defendant from presenting its method to the jury. Neither of the parties' cost models was irrational or insufficiently allocated to comply with the requirement of the UPA. Neither model was so persuasive that it alone would attract all reasonable minds, allowing the issue to be resolved as a question of law, and thus it remained an issue of fact for the jury. Further, the error was reversible, since it was tantamount to directing a verdict against defendant. (Opinion by Sepulveda, J., with Hanlon, P. J., and Poche, J., concurring.)

Headnotes

CA(1a) [] (1a) CA(1b) [] (1b)

Unfair Competition § 3—Unfair Practices Act—Selling Below Cost—Determination of Cost.

--The Unfair Practices Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17000 et seq.), which prohibits the selling of products below cost to injure competitors, embodies California's fully allocated cost standard, that is, a fair allocation of all fixed or variable costs associated with production of the article or product. Cost is to be measured as the fair average cost of production over a reasonable time, rather than the cost of one item on a particular occasion. Fixed costs are those that do not vary with changes in output, while variable costs are those that do vary with changes in output. Fully allocated cost has been equated with average total cost, which reflects that portion of the firm's total costs, both fixed and variable, attributable on an average basis to each unit of output. Thus, cost is the initial expense of producing the article together with its share of the load of carrying on the business through which it is sold. Cost also may be treated as the burden imposed upon the producer's overall cost of doing business. Determination of a defendant's costs has always been treated as an issue of fact, and although there are many feasible methods of determining costs, the determination is best approached on a case-by-case basis.

CA(2) [] (2)

Trial § 61—Province of Court and Jury—Questions of Fact.

--An issue of fact is one where the evidence introduced will support a decision on either side, that is to say, reasonable minds could fairly differ as to the answer to the question posed. An issue of fact can become an issue of law when reasonable minds can draw only one conclusion from the evidence. An issue of fact cannot be taken from a jury by the trial court and treated as an issue of law unless only one conclusion is legally deducible and any other conclusion cannot command the support of substantial evidence that will survive appellate review.

CA(3) [] (3)

Unfair Competition § 9—Unfair Practices Act—Action for Selling Newspaper Notices Below Cost in Violation of Act—Evidence—Determination of Cost—As Question of Law or Fact.

--In a newspaper's action against another newspaper, in which plaintiff alleged that defendant, in successfully bidding for a contract to publish public notices for a city and county, had bid below the actual cost of publishing ads in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17043 (prohibition against selling below cost to injure competitors), of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA), the trial court erred in determining that plaintiff's method for determining defendant's costs was the only appropriate method and in precluding defendant from presenting its method to the jury. Plaintiff's method allocated defendant's costs between defendant's news products and its advertising products according to revenue, while defendant's method allocated its costs according to space devoted to advertising as opposed to news or editorials. Neither of the parties' cost models was irrational or insufficiently allocated to comply with the requirement of the UPA. Neither model was so persuasive that it alone would attract all reasonable minds, allowing the issue to be resolved as a question of law, and thus it remained an issue of fact for the jury. Further, the error was reversible, since it was tantamount to directing a verdict against defendant. In light of the six days it took the jury to return a nine-to-three verdict in favor of plaintiff, there was more than a reasonable probability of a more favorable result for defendant.

[See 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1987) Contracts, § 591 et seq.]

Counsel: Howard, Rice, Nemerovski, Canady, Falk & Rabkin, Jerome B. Falk, Jr., Pauline E. Calande; Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton, Gary L. Halling and Thomas D. Nevins for Defendants and Appellants.

Steinhart & Falconer, James T. Fousekis, Roger R. Myers and Joshua Koltun for A.H. Belo Corporation, the Copley Press, Inc., Gannett Co., Inc., Knight-Rider, Inc., McClatchy Newspapers, Inc., the New York Times Company, Pulitzer Community Newspapers, 2 Inc., and E.W. Scripps Company as Amici Curiae on behalf of Defendants and Appellants.

Horvitz & Levy, Lisa Perrochet, Jon B. Eisenberg; Commerce Law Group, Darrell J. Salomon; and Bernard Knapp for Plaintiff and Respondent.

Sideman & Bancroft, Donald J. Puttermann and Barry W. Strike for 61 California Newspapers as Amici Curiae on behalf of Plaintiff and Respondent.

Judges: Opinion by Sepulveda, J., with Hanlon, P. J., and Poche, J., concurring.

Opinion by: SEPULVEDA

Opinion

[*426] [119] SEPULVEDA, J.

One provision of California's Unfair Practices Act specifies that "It is unlawful for any person engaged in business within [120] this State to sell any article or product at less than the cost thereof . . . for the purpose of injuring competitors or destroying competition." (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17043.¹) The fundamental issue here is how to compute the cost of news paper advertising space in a major metropolitan market. A [*427] complicating factor is that, for all practical purposes, there are only two actors in that market.

[3] An unbroken line of decisional authority holds that just what constitutes an economic actor's "cost" is an issue of fact to be decided by the trier of fact. In this case, however, the trial court decided the cost issue as a matter of law in circumstances that virtually ensured a verdict for the plaintiff. We therefore shall reverse the judgment for plaintiff together with an ensuing order awarding attorney fees.

BACKGROUND

The dispute between the parties, and the extensive record generated by that dispute, reveal a mountain of detail, not all of which warrants recapitulation here. For present purposes, the following abbreviated narrative will suffice:

For a number of years the City and County of San Francisco let an annual contract for its "official newspaper" publishing public notice of matters as required by state and municipal law. (See Gov. Code, § 6000 et seq.; S.F. Admin. Code, § 2.81.) The contract became an issue of bitter contention between two competitors for the contract, the San Francisco Examiner and the San Francisco Independent.²

[4] By 1993, the Examiner had lost out in the bidding process for this contract to the Independent for three years' running. The last time out prior to the year in controversy here, the Independent's winning bid was approximately 35 cents per line less than the Examiner's.³ This time, the Examiner dropped its bid from $ 2.28 per

¹ Statutory references are to this code unless otherwise indicated.

² The Examiner is an evening paper owned by the Hearst Corporation. The Examiner and the San Francisco Chronicle, a non-Hearst morning paper, produce a joint Sunday edition; they share facilities and noneditorial business functions pursuant to a joint operating agreement authorized by the Newspaper Preservation Act (15 U.S.C. § 1801-1804; 28 C.F.R. § 48.1-48.16 (1998)). The overlap between the two papers is the responsibility of the San Francisco Newspaper Printing Company, Inc. That entity and the Hearst Corporation were named as defendants and answered the complaint at issue here. For purposes of simplicity, however, these defendants will be collectively referred to as "the Examiner."

The Independent is owned by Pan Asia Venture Capital Corporation, the plaintiff in this litigation. In order to maintain the symmetry of this dispute between newspapers, plaintiff will be referred to as "the Independent."

³ The Independent bid $ 2.35 per line, while the Examiner bid $ 2.28. The Examiner concedes, however, that technical factors such as differing type size and line count means that "the dollar amounts of the respective bids . . . are not directly comparable. To derive directly comparable bids, the dollar amount of the Independent's bid must be reduced by approximately 15 . . . which reduces the Independent's bid of $ 2.35 per line to approximately $ 2.00 per line for purposes of comparison."

line to $ 1.40 per line. The Independent's final bid increased from $ 2.35 to $ 2.67 per line. After the Examiner won the contract, the Independent brought suit for compensatory and punitive damages, attorney fees, and a permanent injunction. Although various causes of action were alleged in the Independent's complaint, its case against the Examiner [*428] came to trial on a single theory--that the Examiner's winning bid was less than the costs incurred and thus in violation of the statutory prohibition against "below cost" sales.

[5] From the outset, both sides recognized that the issue of cost was crucial. No sooner had the case been called for trial than both sides submitted in limine motions attacking and requesting exclusion of the other party's "cost study evidence" or "cost allocation model." Because the Examiner and the Independent agreed that "the fundamental legal dispute . . . on the proper cost method should be resolved by the Court 'before the presentation of any argument or evidence to the trier of fact,' " the court conducted an extensive [121] evidentiary hearing pursuant to Evidence Code section 402. (See fn. 11, post.) Based on the evidence it had heard, the court ruled that the Examiner "produces two relevant products"--the actual "physical newspapers" and advertising space--for purposes of this action.⁴ The Independent's "cost [*429] allocation method" recognized the existence of the two

⁴ In its opening brief, the Examiner states: "Although Defendants continue to believe that the Examiner can be viewed as constituting a single 'product' with multiple revenue streams--a newspaper containing both editorial material and paid advertisements--the distinction is academic in the circumstances of this case. Whether the Examiner is viewed as a single, integrated product, or as two distinct products--a newspaper and advertising, Defendants did not engage in below-cost pricing. Nor would Defendants be found to have engaged in below-cost pricing if one separately calculated the costs of classified advertisements. For that reason, Defendants' arguments in this brief are addressed to other rulings of the trial court, and assume--solely for purposes of this appeal, and arguendo--that there are indeed two 'products': a daily 'newspaper product' which consumers purchase from a newsstand or by subscription, and an 'advertising product.' Defendants reserve the right to contend in the future, should the occasion arise, that their 'product' or 'products' should be defined differently. [P] It should be noted, however, that Plaintiff's two-product theory--which is a fundamental premise of Plaintiff's claim in this case--is inconsistent with Plaintiff's rationale for the 'revenue allocation' methodology that the trial court approved."

The Independent treated this as a "concession" that the Examiner was not contesting the trial court's ruling that two products were at issue. The Examiner responded in its reply brief that no such concession had been made; it also made the first developed argument attacking the two-product ruling as a grounds for reversal. Three days after the Examiner's reply brief was filed, a number of publishers filed an amicus curiae brief supporting the Examiner, in which they passionately contend that the trial court's ruling on this issue was error. This mutual desire of the Examiner and amici curiae to now litigate the two-product ruling on appeal will not be indulged.

As did the Independent, we too read the language in the Examiner's opening brief as a concession that it will not be contesting the correctness of the trial court's two-product ruling. The operative language of the footnote--"the distinction is academic in the circumstances of this case," "Defendants' arguments in this brief are addressed to other rulings," "assume--solely for purposes of this appeal . . . --that there are indeed two 'products,' " "Defendants reserve the right to contend in the future, should the occasion arise" (italics added)--cannot be reasonably read as other than a concession. Nor does the reference to page 32 at the end of the footnote assist the Examiner. Page 32 finds the Examiner stating: "If, as Plaintiff urged and the trial court ruled, the 'newspaper product' and the 'advertising product' are indeed separate products for purposes of the UPA, then the cost of each such 'product' must be measured separately and accurately." A FOOTNOTE AT THIS POINT GOES ON: "Conversely, if Plaintiff persists in arguing that the pricing of advertising and newspapers are inseparably intertwined, it will be necessary for the Court to examine the trial court's ruling that they are, indeed, two separate 'products' for purposes of the UPA's below-cost pricing statute." These 10 lines do not constitute a developed argument with supporting authority and appropriate references to the record. The opening brief will therefore not be regarded as raising the issue of the two-product ruling for review. (See, e.g., [Troensegaard v. Silvercrest Industries, Inc. \(1985\) 175 Cal. App. 3d 218, 228 \[220 Cal. Rptr. 712\]](#).) There being no reason why the issue could not have been developed in the opening brief, the Examiner's attempt to raise it in the reply brief will not be indulged. (See, e.g., [Scott v. CIBA Vision Corp. \(1995\) 38 Cal. App. 4th 307, 322 \[44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902\]](#); [Neighbours v. Buzz Oates Enterprises \(1990\) 217 Cal. App. 3d 325, 335, fn. 8 \[265 Cal. Rptr. 788\]](#).) The amicus curiae brief cannot remedy this defect because amici curiae are not allowed to expand the issues raised by the parties. (See, e.g., [California Assn. for Safety Education v. Brown \(1994\) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1274-1275 \[36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 404\]](#) and decisions cited.) Exceptions are allowed on points of jurisdiction or issues that will result in affirmance (see [E. L. White, Inc. v. City of Huntington Beach \(1978\) 21 Cal. 3d 497, 511 \[146 Cal. Rptr. 614, 579 P.2d 505\]](#)), but amici curiae are attempting to argue a nonjurisdictional evidentiary error they view as requiring reversal. The ordinary rule of party issue selection and preclusion therefore applies to this and the other evidentiary error claimed only by amici curiae.

products and allocated costs between them; the Examiner's motion to exclude the Independent's cost determination study was therefore denied. On the other hand, because the Examiner's method did not allocate costs between these two products, the Independent's motion [6] to exclude evidence of this method was granted.

[7] In line with this ruling, the Examiner's expert, Dr. Crichfield, prepared a new study that allocated costs between newspapers and advertising. The Independent moved to exclude all evidence of this new [122] study. Following a second Evidence Code section 402 hearing, the court denied the Independent's motion and ruled that the study could be used at trial. Each side would be permitted, the trial court ruled, to produce its own cost determination study, despite difference in their methodologies. The Independent's method of determining cost was based on a "revenue allocation," the Examiner's on allocation according to the amount of space dedicated to advertising, as opposed to news or editorial coverage.

Trial then commenced. The first witness was Earl Pierson, who testified about the newspaper business in general and the state of that business in San Francisco in the early 1990's. The Independent's next witness was its economic expert, Dr. McLeod. He testified that the Examiner's winning bid of $ 1.40 was well below its actual per line cost of $ 1.82. The major purpose of Dr. McLeod's testimony was to attack the validity of the Crichfield model. He accused Dr. Crichfield [8] of employing "accounting tricks" that "distort" the real picture of the Examiner's costs.

The Independent's next witness was accounting expert Dr. Maher, who had reviewed McLeod's findings and endorsed them. Dr. Maher specifically [*430] agreed with McLeod that the Examiner's costs had to be determined using the "revenue basis of allocation." He also criticized Crichfield's model. Dr. Maher's testimony ended the fourth day of trial.

Prior to the start of the fifth day of the trial, while discussing another matter with counsel in chambers, the court announced that "I have something to talk about." The court then explained that it had reexamined the issue of the cost studies prepared by the parties' experts and concluded that "[T]he only model that's appropriate is a revenue allocation model for allocating costs in this case." The Independent's experts, Drs. McLeod and Maher, endorsed a revenue allocation model. The Examiner, by contrast, relied on Dr. Crichfield's allocation of division between advertising and editorial/newsgathering functions according to the unit of measure of inches of the Examiner devoted to one or the other of these tasks. The court told counsel: "[T]he [9] only model that's appropriate is a revenue allocation model for allocating costs in this case. You cannot use this physical unit allocation model approach in this context. You can't do it. [P] . . . This is not a fully-allocated cost model, the one that Dr. Crichfield made. It just isn't." The court repeatedly called Dr. Crichfield's approach "irrational." The court denied the Examiner's motion for a mistrial and trial proceeded for approximately six weeks.

The Independent's expert, Dr. McLeod, testified at length about the revenue allocation methodology utilized in his cost study. Dr. McLeod's testimony will be discussed in more detail post, but its general import was to allocate cost according to revenue generated by those costs. His bottom line was that the Examiner's genuine cost per line was $ 1.92, far above the $ 1.40 bid.

In accordance with the court's most recent ruling, the Examiner's expert, Dr. Crichfield, was not allowed to testify about his cost model, but he did testify as to methodological defects he perceived in Dr. McLeod's model. After both Crichfield and McLeod had testified, and shortly before the case was sent to the jury, the court granted [10] the Independent's motion to strike portions of Crichfield's testimony that were critical of McLeod's methods and conclusions; the theory was that allowing Crichfield to criticize McLeod's methods and conclusions would permit the Examiner to circumvent the court's ruling excluding substantive affirmative testimony [123] from Crichfield. During the course of discussing instructions, the court granted the Independent's motion for a directed verdict on the Examiner's "meeting competition" affirmative defense. (See § 17050, subd. (d).)

The court instructed the jury in effect that the only relevant evidence on the issue of cost had come from the Independent, a point the court reiterated [431] when expressly asked by the jury.⁵ Three days after the case was sent to them the jury sent a note to the court asking "[W]hat do we do when we have come to an impasse?" The court questioned the jury, determined that there was not a true deadlock, and sent them back to continue the deliberations. Three days later the jury, by a vote of nine to three, returned a "general" (i.e., liability only) verdict in favor of the Independent.

[11] After a brief damages phase, the jury returned a unanimous "special" verdict for the Independent in the amount of $ 348,981--the amount requested--together with interest. After this amount was trebled (§ 17082), and prejudgment interest was added, a judgment for $ 1,149,636 was entered. Almost twice this amount--$ 2,230,051--was awarded for costs and attorney fees. The Examiner's motions for a new trial and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict were denied. The Examiner appeals from the judgment, the attorney fee order, and the order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

DISCUSSION

I. Determination of Cost Under the Unfair Practices Act Is an Issue of Fact to Be Determined by the Jury.

A. Applicable Law.

HN1[[↑]] The purpose of the Unfair Practices Act (UPA) is "to safeguard the public against the creation or perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and [432] encourage competition, by prohibiting unfair, dishonest, deceptive, destructive, fraudulent and discriminatory practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented. [12] " (§ 17001.) HN2[[↑]] It forbids most locality discriminations (§ 17040-17041, 17049-17050), the use of loss leaders (§ 17044), gifts (§ 17043), secret rebates (§ 17045), boycotts (§ 17046), and "deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising" (§ 17200, 17500). HN3[[↑]] It also prohibits the sale of goods and services below cost (§ 17043, 17048.5, 17049). This last was the violation the Independent alleged it had suffered at the hands of the Examiner.

HN4[[↑]] Proof that a defendant sold or distributed articles or products below cost will be [124] "presumptive evidence of the purpose or intent to injure competitors or destroy competition" (§ 17071). The UPA provides definitions for "cost" in various settings (e.g., production and distribution) (§ 17026, 17029). A number of UPA provisions specify what sort of evidence may be used to demonstrate cost (§ 17027, 17071.5-17077).

⁵ The jury was instructed that "the evidence in this case has been that the only method for allocating costs to these two products [i.e., the newspaper product and advertising space product] is the so-called 'revenue method' of allocating joint costs. The revenue method of allocating joint costs is a method based on the assumption that the ratio between the amounts of revenue earned by the products involved is the same as the ratio of the costs incurred in producing these products." (Italics added.)

Two days into their deliberations the jury asked the court "Is the revenue method the only legal method to consider in determining if the cost of advertising is below cost in this case?" The court responded that "The answer to that question is yes." Counsel for the Independent had forcefully made the same point during his closing argument.

The court drove the same point home by telling the jury what they could not consider: "During the trial of this action, there has been evidence of methods of cost allocation defendants used before [the date of their winning bid] to determine their costs. I instruct you that you are to consider those methods only as they may bear on the defendants' state of mind, and not as methods which you may apply to determine the defendants' advertising costs in this action."

One other point must be mentioned. The Examiner states in its brief that "[D]uring its deliberations the jury inquired as to which portions of Dr. Crichfield's testimony were in evidence . . . but the trial court never clarified the issue." The clear implication of this passage is that the trial court was, to use the mildest term, derelict in its duty. The Examiner's statement is literally true but almost slanderous in its innuendo. What actually happened, and what clearly appears on page 7354 of the reporter's transcript, is that the jury foreman told the court "The jury has decided we no longer need the information that we requested." The court then verified "you are telling me that you no longer need this information; is that right?" The jury foreman answered, "That's right."

HN5[] [13] This case involved production, for which the UPA defines cost to include "the cost of raw materials, labor and all overhead expenses" (§ 17026). HN6[] The separate definition of overhead expenses is given as "labor (including salaries of executives and officers), rent, interest on borrowed capital, depreciation, selling cost, maintenance of equipment, delivery costs, credit losses, all types of licenses, taxes, insurance and advertising" (§ 17029).

CA(1a)[] (1a) These statutes embody HN7[] California's fully allocated cost standard, that is, a fair allocation of all fixed or variable costs associated with production of the article or product.⁶ (See Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 811, 820 [268 Cal. Rptr. 856]; G.H.I.I. v. MTS, Inc. (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 256, 275 [195 Cal. Rptr. 211, 41 A.L.R.4th 653].) HN8[] Fixed costs are those that do not vary with changes [14] in output, while variable costs are those that do vary with changes in output. HN9[] "[F]ully allocated cost has been equated with average total cost, which 'reflects that portion of the firm's total costs--both fixed and variable--attributable on an average basis to each unit of output.' " (Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc., supra at p. 820.) HN10[] Thus, cost has been described as the initial expense of producing the article together with "its share of the load of carrying on the business through which it is sold." (People v. Kahn (1936) 19 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 758, 765 [60 P.2d 596].) HN11[] Cost has also been treated as "the burden" imposed upon the producer's "overall cost of doing business." (Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc., supra, at p. 822.)

[*15] HN13[] Determination of the defendant's cost has always been treated as an issue of fact. One of the earliest decisions construing the UPA found our Supreme [*433] Court stating that ". . . any difficulty in computing cost is a factual one" (People v. Pay Less Drug Store (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 108, 118 [153 P.2d 9]; accord, Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc., supra, 219 Cal. App. 3d 811, 820; People v. Kahn, supra, 19 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 758, 765). That principle remains true. (See Western Union Financial Services, Inc. v. First Data Corp. (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1530, 1539 [25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 341].)

CA(2)[] (2) HN14[] An issue of fact is one where the evidence introduced will support a decision on either side, that is to say, reasonable minds could fairly differ as to the answer to the question posed. (E.g., Hamilton v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1939) 12 Cal. 2d 598, 603 [86 P.2d 829]; Greyhound Lines, Inc. v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 356, 260 [83 Cal. Rptr. 343].) HN15[] An issue of fact can become an issue of law when reasonable minds can draw only one conclusion from the evidence. (E.g., People v. Wild (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 829, 832 [131 Cal. Rptr. 713]; Wozniak v. Peninsula Hospital (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 716, 725 [82 Cal. Rptr. 84].) HN16[] An issue of fact cannot be taken from a jury by the trial court and treated as an issue of law unless only one conclusion is legally deducible and any other conclusion cannot command the support of substantial evidence that will survive appellate review. (E.g., Seneris v. Haas (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 811, 821 [291 P.2d 915, 53 A.L.R.2d 124]; Serian Brothers, Inc. v. Agri-Sun Nursery (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 306, 311-312 [30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 382].)

Several reported decisions are helpful in demonstrating the minimal quantum of evidence necessary to qualify [17] the issue of cost as one which must be determined by the trier of fact.

Tri-Q, Inc. v. Sta-Hi Corp. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 199 [45 Cal. Rptr. 878, 404 P.2d 486] involved competing manufacturers of [125] equipment and machinery used in the printing of newspapers. Tri-Q sued Sta-Hi for selling a specific product below cost, in violation of section 17043. During the relevant time period Sta-Hi had no formal cost accounting system in place. Sta-Hi's president testified that he fixed the price of the product using a rough estimate of the labor and materials involved. The opposing evidence was in the form of an accounting report showing that the "range of estimated probable unit costs" was above the prices charged by Sta-Hi. The trial court, acting as the trier of fact, found that Sta-Hi had not sold its products below cost. This determination was upheld by the Supreme Court, which held that "Since there was substantial support in the record for the trial court's resolution of the issue as to whether the product was sold below cost, the finding of fact with respect thereto cannot be disturbed on appeal." (Id. at pp. 203-207.)

⁶ HN12[] Cost is to be measured as "the fair average cost of production over a reasonable time, rather than the cost of one item on a particular occasion." (Johnson v. Farmer (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 874, 882 [107 P.2d 959].) This is not a problem in this case, where both sides' cost studies and models were based on annual production costs.

At issue in Western Union Financial [18] Services, Inc. v. First Data Corp., supra, 20 Cal. App. 4th 1530 was the cost of money orders. Relying on what [*434] is described as "a single document created by a nonmanagement First Data employee," Western Union presented expert testimony that First Data charged $ 9 for a money order whose cost could range from $ 20.80 to as much as $ 26.60. First Data's evidence was that its cost per transaction was $ 16.26, but it realized revenue of about $ 17.31 per transaction. The trial court, acting as the trier of fact, found that First Data was making a profit on the transactions and therefore was not selling its products below cost. (Id. at pp. 1533-1535.) The Court of Appeal held that ". . . there is a factual dispute about the manner in which costs were computed . . . and what that means is that we will not disturb the trial court's findings." (Id. at p. 1539, citations omitted.)

For present purposes, Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc, supra, 219 Cal. App. 3d 811, is perhaps most instructive. Turnbull and ARA operated bus transportation services and were competing bidders for annual contracts to bus children within the San Joaquin [19] County school system. After repeatedly losing out to ARA, Turnbull brought suit, claiming that ARA's bids were below its costs. ARA's routine destruction of documentation meant that Grundig, Turnbull's economic expert, was unable to recreate precise cost figures. "Grundig used four different methods in calculating whether ARA's bid was below its costs. The first method involved comparing the revenue per mile received by ARA on the San Joaquin County contract with the revenue per mile it received on other bus transportation contracts in other counties, after having made adjustments for cost differentials between the counties. The second method compared the revenue per mile ARA received on the San Joaquin County contract with the revenue per mile it received on its Delta College contract in San Joaquin County. In the third method, Grundig calculated ARA's costs based on two national cost surveys regarding operating costs of private passenger vans. Grundig's fourth method entailed an analysis of ARA's operating statements and an allocation of ARA's operating expenses per mile traveled. ARA's total operating costs for the year were divided by the total miles traveled to yield [20] an average cost per mile. This figure was then multiplied by the contract mileage to determine the contract cost. In each year in question, ARA's bid was below its costs of providing the contract services." (Id. at p. 816.)

ARA provided no testimony or documentation concerning projected or actual costs for performing the contracts. One ARA financial officer testified that ". . . ARA was concerned with making a profit on each contract and would not bid under cost. Jack Gottsman, the president of ARA's transportation group, testified . . . ARA was concerned that each contract make a profit and bids were reviewed to make sure ARA was going into a contract on a profitable basis. [P] Robert Griffiths, the area controller who was in charge of the bidding process . . . , testified concerning [126] ARA's method of [*435] allocating costs. It appears that variable costs were allocated per bus, per day. Fixed or overhead costs were allocated on the basis of bus days and revenue generated by each contract. The overhead would first be allocated among the various divisions based on the number of bus days generated by each division. Then each division would allocate the overhead [21] per contract in proportion to the percentage of revenue generated by each contract. According to Griffiths, the San Joaquin County bids covered ARA's costs and generated a profit." (219 Cal. App. 3d at pp. 818-819.)

The jury returned a verdict for Turnbull. ARA appealed, contending inter alia that the UPA was unconstitutional "because the method for determining whether a service is sold below cost is arbitrary and irrational." (Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc, supra, 219 Cal. App. 3d 811, 819.) In the course of rejecting this claim, the Court of Appeal stated: "ARA claims the fully allocated cost method is arbitrary because there are many ways of allocating costs (for example, in the present case per mile, per bus or per student) each of which may result in significantly different cost profiles. While we agree there are many ways of fully allocating costs, the possibilities are not without limitation. To be legally acceptable, the allocation of indirect or fixed overhead costs to a particular product or service must be reasonably related to the burden such product or service imposes on the overall cost of doing business. [Citations [22] .] Moreover, a defendant is free to demonstrate to the trier of fact that its fully allocated cost, using another reasonable allocation method other than that used by the plaintiff, is actually lower than the plaintiff alleges and lower than defendant's sales or bid price. [Citation.] ARA did not do so. It merely presented witnesses who testified ARA always bid above cost or always sought to make a profit. In fact, ARA did not even demonstrate it sold its services above its average variable cost or long-run incremental cost, the methods it espouses. As such, defendant failed to demonstrate that the use of the fully allocated cost method was arbitrary or irrational as applied to the facts of this case." (Id. at. pp. 822-823, italics added.)

CA(1b) [1b] Several conclusions are obvious. First, the concept of cost may appear simple, but can often prove deceptively hard to grasp in the real world. (See People v. Kahn, supra, 19 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 758, 765 ["It must be conceded that in many cases it is going to be extremely difficult to determine what cost of an article is."]; Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. IBM Corp. (9th Cir. 1983) 698 F.2d 1377, 1387 [23] [noting "the uncertainty and imprecision inherent in determining 'costs' "].) Authorities in the field argue passionately over the many possible models and approaches. (See, e.g., 3 Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law (1996 rev. ed.) § 722-724d, 739-742, pp. 221-244, 367-426.) Second, and as a corollary, the determination of cost is best approached on a case-by-case basis. The provisions of the UPA and [*436] various judicial glosses reflect an appreciation that no single formulation will ever be broad enough to encompass all possibilities. The principle may be fixed and constant, but the application is prey to the infinite permutations of the question--what did it cost a particular defendant to produce or sell a given article at a specific point in time? Third, California appears to have adopted a very expansive approach to the evidence that may be used to establish cost; no formula has been expressly sustained or denounced.

With this background, we turn to the Examiner's first contention--that the trial court committed reversible error when it precluded the Examiner from presenting its version of how it calculated cost for purposes of bidding for the City's contract.

B. [24] Application of Law in This Case.

CA(3) [3] The parties continue the intransigence they displayed throughout the trial, each insisting that its economic model is the only acceptable method for determining cost, and that the other side's model is worthless and erroneous as a matter of law. The Examiner insists not only must [127] the judgment be reversed, there must be no retrial, and it is entitled to judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The Independent is equally adamant that the trial court was correct in excluding evidence of Crichfield's analysis because "revenue allocation the only rational way to determine the Examiner's cost." ⁷ (Original italics.)

The revenue allocation adopted by Dr. McLeod, and to a lesser extent by Dr. Maher, appears to be an allocation [25] approach used if the standard cost allocation (see S 17026 ["cost of raw materials, labor and all overhead expenses"]) either will not work or is inappropriate for some reason. McLeod believed it was inappropriate in this case to use the standard cost allocation (S 17026 ["cost of raw materials, labor, and all overhead expenses"]) because there is not a common physical unit of measurement, and because "you have two products that are intertwined and therefore there is no rational way of simply allocating the costs." (The latter premise obviously ties in to the trial court's "two-product" ruling; see fn. 4 and accompanying text, ante.) Using the revenue allocation method, McLeod assigns costs to the two products "[b]ased on an approximation of the value received from the sales of those two products."

Dr. Crichfield's opinion was that revenue allocation was not appropriate because there was a common physical unit of measurement--the inches of space devoted to the advertising and "editorial" (i.e., news gathering and [*437] reporting) functions, which could be used to allocate the cost of production of the Examiner. He allocated 55 percent of the Examiner's total costs [26] to the editorial side, and 45 percent to advertising.

The difference in result between the two approaches is gaping. Working from the conceded figure of approximately $ 60.5 million for the Examiner's total costs, McLeod allocated only $ 11,228,000 to "non-advertising revenues," resulting in $ 49,250,000 of costs allocated to advertising; that figure was then divided by the number of "advertising inches" to produce a "cost per classified ad line" of $ 1.85. ⁸ Dr. Crichfield found $ 23.8 million of advertising costs divided by the same number of advertising inches to produce a per line cost of 89 cents for advertising. Where Crichfield assigned 45 percent of the Examiner's total costs to the "advertising product," McLeod allocated almost 85 percent.

⁷ Not even Dr. McLeod made this claim for his method. He candidly admitted that using revenue allocation was "a judgment call to some extent," that it was not a "precise formula," but it was "the best you can come up with under the circumstances."

Each side can and does point to flaws in the other's model. This, we believe, illuminates the fundamental point missed by both parties and by the trial court. The [27] hyperbole obscures the fact that each approach has its relative merits and demerits. Neither is entitled to prevail as a matter of law. Neither is so strong that it can banish the other. In short, both approaches are sufficiently reasonable that both ought to have been put before the jury.

When the Examiner condemns McLeod for using "an irrational 'revenue allocation' methodology that is not sanctioned by California law," it overstates its case. The revenue allocation method may lack an express sanction in California, but so does the Examiner's approach. And while no reported California decision explicitly sanctions or endorses any approach to determining cost, the revenue allocation method was mentioned in Turnbull & Turnbull without a hint that it was inappropriate. Moreover, the Examiner never suggested that the revenue allocation approach was new, unscientific, or unaccepted in the fields of economics and cost accounting. (Cf. In re IBM Peripheral EDP Devices, etc. \(N.D.Cal. 1979\) 481 F. Supp. 965, 998 ["Revenue apportionment is a generally accepted and commonly used method of . . . cost allocation."].) Certainly with the record so undeveloped on this point, [28] we cannot hold as a matter of law that the revenue allocation approach could not be used.

On the other hand, the advantage of measuring the cost of an item backwards from the revenue generated by that item is [128] not immediately self-obvious and can seem incompatible with common sense. This approach appears to have no connection with the traditional tests of "initial cost," or the item's "share of the load of carrying on the business through which it is sold" (People v. Kahn, supra, 19 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 758, 765, 60 P.2d 596), or "the burden [438] . . . impose[d] on the overall cost of doing business." (Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc., supra, 219 Cal. App. 3d 811, 822, 268 Cal. Rptr. 856.) It further appears that there are distinct logical flaws in the approach as developed in this case.

According to Dr. McLeod, the revenue allocation approach should be used only in a joint cost situation where there is no common unit of measurement. In this situation, however, as the Examiner repeatedly urged, there was a common unit of measurement, specifically the literal inches of the Examiner. It is not irrational to divide the Examiner by the inches of space [29] devoted to the editorial and advertising products.⁹ [30] On the other hand, as Dr. McLeod testified, one may buy X number of inches of advertising space, but "You can't go to the newsstand and say, 'I'd like to buy 25 inches of news copy today.' " Moreover, as the Examiner points out in its opening brief, McLeod's model treats more than $ 23 million of the Examiner's total costs, those for "editorial costs" plus ink and newsprint, as joint costs when in fact they are obviously and easily segregated as part of the "editorial product."¹⁰ They would therefore not be subject to the revenue allocation percentages and would almost certainly require a recalculation of those percentages. This suggests that Dr. McLeod's analysis was perhaps too ambitious in its scope and its application of deductive revenue allocation; in effect it made all costs joint costs. These flaws are not, however, of sufficient magnitude to condemn the revenue allocation approach per se and make it inadmissible as a matter of law. These and other imperfections would go to the weight the jury ought to give McLeod's testimony, but they do not make it wholly illegitimate.

We conclude that neither of the parties' cost models was irrational or insufficiently allocated to comply with the UPA's requirement. Neither model is so persuasive that it alone would attract all reasonable minds, allowing the issue to be resolved as a question of law. (See Seneris v. Haas, supra, 45 Cal. 2d 811, 821; Serian Brothers, Inc. v. Agri-Sun Nursery, supra, 25 Cal. App. 4th 306, 311-312.) The issue of the Examiner's cost remained a question of fact on which the parties could introduce conflicting evidence. It was therefore error to exclude evidence of the Examiner's model from being [*439] presented to the jury.¹¹ (E.g., Western Union Financial Services, Inc. v. First Data Corp., supra, 20 Cal. App. 4th 1530, 1539, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d [129] 341; People v. Kahn, supra, 19 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 758, 765.) [31]

⁸ Dr. McLeod's bottom-line per-line cost figure fluctuated from $ 1.82 to $ 1.92.

⁹ As cogently expressed by amici curiae: "A physical-unit method of accounting is appropriate because it directly tracks the requirement that it be 'reasonably related to the burden such product or service imposes on the overall cost of doing business.' [Citation.] Unlike the revenue-allocation method, the physical-unit method actually has a close relationship to the working operations of the newspaper. Public notice advertising takes up physical space in the newspaper, thereby consuming newsprint and ink, is sold in physical units known as column-inches, and is delivered to readers in such physical form."

¹⁰ The difficulty with the revenue approach is perhaps best illustrated with a specific example: Dr. McLeod identified $ 15,863,613 as "editorial costs," yet his approach allocates almost all of these costs to the "advertising product."

C. Taking Issue of Determination of Cost From Jury Requires [32] Reversal.

The error clearly requires reversal because of its importance and its manifold consequences. Cost was the issue of this litigation as it went to trial.¹² Dr. Crichfield's testimony would therefore be crucial for the Examiner. Although both sides in opening statements made reference to Crichfield's anticipated testimony, the comments of counsel for the Independent were far more numerous and pointed.¹³ The preemptive attacks on Crichfield continued virtually from the start of the actual jury trial, with the Independent's second and third witnesses (Drs. McLeod and Maher) spending almost as much time attacking the as-yet-unheard Crichfield conclusions as explaining their own. The court's sua sponte overturning of its ruling could not help but cause confusion and consternation for the jury. The thing they had heard so much about would now not be produced, and they were told to forget all about it. For the Examiner, whose counsel had featured Crichfield prominently in his opening statement, the inability to call that witness was unquestionably damaging. (Cf. People v. Corona (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 684, 725-726 [145 Cal. Rptr. 894] [defense [33] counsel dealt "devastating blow" to client when he failed to present evidence promised in opening statement].) The jury did finally get to hear Dr. Crichfield, but he was only allowed to present negative testimony, which is to say, testimony [*440] about the defects in the Independent's case. Even then, a good part of his testimony was stricken. It is hardly surprising that the jury initially had trouble remembering what part of Crichfield's testimony was available to them. (See fn. 5, ante.) Counsel for the Independent told the jury that the only relevant evidence on the dispositive issue of cost favored the Independent, and the trial court twice told the jury that the Independent's cost model was the sole legal method for determining cost. (Ibid.) This was tantamount to the court directing a verdict against the Examiner. In light of the six days it took the jury to return a nine-to-three verdict in favor of the Independent, there is more than a reasonable probability of a more favorable result; the error thus compels reversal. (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13; People v. Watson (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 818, 836 [299 P.2d 243]; Code Civ. Proc., § 475 [34] .).)¹⁴¹⁴

¹¹ We reject the Independent's argument that this issue amounts to invited error and was waived by the Examiner's counsel when he asked the court to decide the reasonableness of the respective cost models as a matter of law. First, that request was made in connection with the first model submitted by Dr. Crichfield, which the court found was unallocated, resulting in its order that a new model be prepared. The Examiner's request was not renewed with respect to the second Crichfield model, the one at issue here. The second Evidence Code section 402 hearing was conducted at the Independent's request, based on its motion to exclude Dr. Crichfield's second cost determination study. Second, the trial court obviously did not deem the Examiner's request applicable to the second model, as evident from its initial decision that neither it nor the McLeod model was "unreasonable" and the choice between them would be left to the jury.

¹² As the Independent's attorney told the jury in his opening statement: "[W]hat this case is all about is the allegation on the part of The Independent that when The Independent competed with The Examiner . . . to get the public notice contract . . . The Examiner bid below cost, below their fully allocated cost."

¹³ E.g., "And so what they chose to do was to hire Dr. Crichfield. They will say that Dr. Crichfield is an independent accountant who gave them independent advice with regard to their costs. [P] But the evidence will show that, in fact, Dr. Crichfield's primary career role is the creation of litigation cost models, and that this cost model is really a cost model designed to defend The Examiner in a lawsuit. . . . There are some other accounting tricks . . . which Dr. McLeod [the Independent's expert] will say makes this allocation study by Dr. Crichfield completely useless."

¹⁴ In its petition for rehearing, the Independent contends that we "mistakenly decided the 'cost' issue under Evidence Code section 403 instead of Evidence Code section 405." We were not mistaken, because we decided no such issue, and the Independent's belated presentation of this claim will not avert reversal.

[35] [*441] [130] II.-IV. *

....

V. Conclusion.

The Independent's argument is apparently based on this statement from Turnbull: "To be legally acceptable, the allocation of . . . costs to a particular product or service must be reasonably related to the burden such product or service imposes on the overall cost of doing business." (Turnbull & Turnbull v. ARA Transportation, Inc., supra, 219 Cal. App. 3d 811, 822.) The Independent reasons that whether Dr. Crichfield's model complied with this standard is a preliminary fact, one that Evidence Code section 405 vests with the trial court to decide. Evidence Code section 403, by contrast, allows the jury to decide whether the preliminary fact exists if "the court finds that there is evidence sufficient to sustain a finding of the existence of the preliminary fact" (Evid. Code, § 403, subd. \(a\)). In fact, the latter statute requires the issue of preliminary fact determination to be submitted to the jury but "Section 405 requires the judge to determine the existence or nonexistence of disputed preliminary facts except in certain situations covered by Section[] 403 Section 405 deals with evidentiary rules designed to withhold evidence from the jury because it is too unreliable to be evaluated properly or because public policy requires its exclusion." (See Assem. Com. on Judiciary, coms. to Evid. Code, § 403, 405, 29B West's Ann. Cal. Evid. Code (1995 ed.) pp. 361, 374; Deering's Ann. Cal. Evid. Code (1986) pp. 142, 150-151.)

Whether the economic models' compatibility with section 17026 and the Turnbull standard is properly handled under Evidence Code section 403 or Evidence Code section 405 is an intriguing question, but one we cannot, and need not, decide. There is undoubtedly a case to be made for viewing the admissibility of evidence dependent upon its compliance with an established legal standard as one involving both reliability and public policy, and therefore governed by Evidence Code section 405. On the other hand, it is not fanciful to view the problem as relevance, that is to say, a model that did not comport with Turnbull would not be relevant on the issue of cost. This approach would make the problem subject to Evidence Code section 403, subdivision \(a\)\(1\). Certainly this was the trial court's initial view of the matter: In its written order deciding that the McLeod model could be used but Crichfield's initial model could not (see ante at pp. 428-429), the court made these decisions "pursuant to Evidence Code section 403 \(a\)\(1\)." Although the court did not enter a written order when it ruled that Crichfield's revised model was not "unreasonable in the context of . . . the Turnbull case" and not "unreasonable to the extent that it's something that should be precluded from being presented to the Jury altogether," it is difficult to believe the court would have shifted the statutory basis it had been employing up to that point. The blizzard of paper generated by the parties' motions to exclude the other's economic model demonstrates that neither party was entirely consistent in invoking either section 403 or 405 of the Evidence Code. Unfortunately, when the trial court reversed course it became impossible to determine if the court would have continued to treat the issue as an Evidence Code section 403 subject. It was because of this uncertainty that we said nothing more specific than that the court had conducted the pretrial hearings "pursuant to Evidence Code section 402." (See ante, at pp. 428-429.) It is therefore inaccurate for the Independent to believe we "decided the 'cost' issue under Evidence Code section 403." We did no such thing.

The issue is also immaterial because there is little practical consequence to which statute the trial court used. With or without special instructions (see Evid. Code, § 403, subd. \(c\), 405, subd. \(b\)\(2\)), the essential duty of the jury would have been pretty much the same--judge the evidence against the Turnbull standard given in the court's instructions. With Turnbull as the benchmark, the jury would decide which party's evidence it found to reflect the Examiner's cost. If the jury had accepted Crichfield's model, it would in effect have decided that his evidence was compatible with the preliminary fact of compliance with the Turnbull standard and the McLeod model was not. On the other hand, if the jury had accepted the McLeod/Maher testimony, it would have reached the opposite conclusions.

Such speculation aside, the Independent's contention is ultimately doomed because it does not matter which provision of the Evidence Code the trial court did or ought to have used. Even if (as the Independent assumes) the trial court did use Evidence Code section 405, the court erred when it determined that the Crichfield model was "irrational" and therefore presumably not fully allocated as required by section 17026 and Turnbull as a preliminary fact. Alternatively if the trial court did follow through on its initial ruling and continue to apply Evidence Code section 403 when it excluded Crichfield's evidence, the court would also be in error because "there [was] evidence sufficient to sustain a finding of the existence of the preliminary fact" (Evid. Code, § 403, subd. \(a\)), i.e., that it was fully allocated in compliance with governing legal criteria. Both of these possibilities are encompassed by our analysis and our conclusion that reversible error occurred.

* See footnote, ante, page 424.

74 Cal. App. 4th 424, *441A88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 118, 130A1999 Cal. App. LEXIS 773, 35

The judgment and attorney fee order are reversed. The order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is affirmed. Appellants shall recover their costs.

Hanlon, P. J., and Poche, J., concurred.

A petition for a rehearing was denied September 20, 1999, and the opinion was modified to read as printed above. Appellants' petition for review by the Supreme Court was denied December 15, 1999.

End of Document

Concho Residential Servs., Inc. v. MHMR Servs.

Court of Appeals of Texas, Third District, Austin

August 26, 1999, Filed

NO. 03-98-00022-CV

Reporter

1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 6356 *; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,728

Concho Residential Services, Inc., Appellant v. MHMR Services for the Concho Valley a/k/a Concho Valley Center for Human Advancement, in its Capacity as an Unincorporated Association, its Capacity as a Mental Retardation Authority, and as a Purported Community MHMR Center; James Young; Joe Finn; Karen Sheppard; John Brubaker; The Texas Council of Community Mental Health Mental Retardation Centers, Inc.; Spencer McClure; Texas Council Risk Management Fund; Board of Trustees of the Texas Council Risk Management Fund, as Trustee of the Liability Trust Account, the Property Trust Account, and the Workers' Compensation Trust Account; Brain Crews; JI Specialty Services, Inc.; Central Plains Center for MHMR and Substance Abuse; Richard Hall; Hector Cantu; James Coffey; Ruby Gutierrez; Sheirran Hughes; Brenda Morris; Jacqueline Shannon; Roger Sidener; Hale County; Tom Green County; and City of San Angelo, Appellees

Notice: [*1] PURSUANT TO THE TEXAS RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE, UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS SHALL NOT BE CITED AS AUTHORITY BY COUNSEL OR BY A COURT.

Subsequent History: Motion for Rehearing of Petition for Review Overruled April 27, 2000.

Petition for review denied by, 03/09/2000

Motion for rehearing on petition for review overruled by, 04/27/2000

Writ of certiorari denied Concho Residential Serv. v. MHMR Servs. for the Concho Valley, 531 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 340, 148 L. Ed. 2d 273, 2000 U.S. LEXIS 6915 (Oct. 16, 2000)

Prior History: FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF TOM GREEN COUNTY, 119TH JUDICIAL DISTRICT NO. CV92-0444-B, HONORABLE ROYAL HART, JUDGE PRESIDING.

Disposition: Affirmed in Part; Vacated and Dismissed in Part.

Core Terms

community center, trial court, summary judgment, Antitrust, membership, exemption, cause of action, government entity, mentally retarded, state-action, entities, disposing, asserts, sovereign immunity, complains, waived, common-law, centers, argues, default judgment, local government, anti trust law, mental health, Texas Act, interlocutory, residential, injunction, contends, enjoin, grant summary judgment

LexisNexis® Headnotes

HN1 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The purpose of the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§15.01-52, is to promote economic competition in commerce in Texas. See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §15.04. As such, the restraint of trade or commerce is made unlawful. See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN2 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983 explicitly states that its provisions shall be construed in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code §15.04.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Since 1943, the United States Supreme Court, in interpreting federal antitrust statutes, has recognized that antitrust laws do not apply to anti-competitive restraints imposed as an act of government.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 15.05 of the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983 specifically exempts "actions required or affirmatively approved by any statute of this state or by a regulatory agency of this state acting under statutory authority vesting the agency with such power. See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code §15.05\(g\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The federal Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984 expressly immunizes all local governmental entities from antitrust liability under the Clayton Act. See 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 34-36. Counties are included in the definition of "local government." See 15 U.S.C.S. § 34.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

If summary judgment may have been granted on a ground not challenged, failure to address each theory that might support the trial court's rendition of summary judgment requires an affirmance.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Environmental Law > Administrative Proceedings & Litigation > Jurisdiction

HN7 [down arrow] Justiciability, Standing

The general rule is that standing to bring suit depends upon some interest peculiar to the person individually, and not as a member of the general public. More specifically, a person has standing to sue if: (1) he has sustained, or is immediately in danger of sustaining, some direct injury as a result of the wrongful act of which he complains; (2) there is a direct relationship between the alleged injury and the claim to be adjudicated; (3) the plaintiff has a personal stake in the controversy; (4) the challenged action has caused the plaintiff some injury in fact, either economic, recreational, environmental, or otherwise; or (5) the plaintiff is an appropriate party to assert the public interest in the matter as well as his own interest.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Default & Default Judgments > Default Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Default & Default Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN8 [down arrow] Default & Default Judgments, Default Judgments

As a prerequisite to presenting an argument for appellate review, the record must show that the complaint was first made to the trial court. See Tex. R. App. P. 33.1\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Default & Default Judgments > Default Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Default & Default Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Default & Default Judgments > Relief From Default

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

HN9[] Default & Default Judgments, Default Judgments

A trial court has broad, virtually unlimited discretion to vacate an interlocutory order prior to its rendition of a final judgment. See Tex. R. Civ. P. 329b.

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion > Continuances

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

HN10[] Pretrial Matters, Continuances

The granting or denial of a continuance is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. The denial of a motion for continuance will not be disturbed unless the record shows a clear abuse of discretion.

Judges: Before Justices Jones, Kidd and Patterson.

Opinion by: J. WOODFIN JONES

Opinion

Appellant Concho Residential Services, Inc. ("CRS") sued appellees MHMR Services for the Concho Valley (Concho Valley) and 22 others¹ for damages and injunctive relief, alleging multiple statutory and common-law causes of action. The trial court rendered summary judgment that CRS take nothing, disposing of all causes of action against all appellees. CRS perfected this appeal. We will affirm in part and dismiss the cause in part.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL [*2] BACKGROUND

This case involves the expansive legislative scheme for providing mental health and mental retardation services to the citizens of Texas. The Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation ("TDMHMR") and other governmental entities operating under its direction shoulder the responsibility of providing the administration and delivery of mental health and mental retardation services to the public. See Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 531.001- 615.002 (West 1992 & Supp. 1999). A key element in the statutory scheme is the establishment of mental health and mental retardation community centers, which provide the needed services to mentally disabled persons at a local level under the supervision of TDMHMR. These community centers are created by local governmental entities such as counties, municipalities, or hospital districts, or a combination of entities joining together. See id. § 534.001. Community centers are, by statutory definition, "an agency of the state, a governmental unit, and a unit of local government." Id.

Also key in the statutory scheme is the creation of Mental Health or Mental Retardation [*3] Authorities ("MRAs"). MRAs are selected by TDMHMR and contract directly with the agency. It is the duty of the MRA to ensure that the statutorily mandated services are provided in its designated service area and to oversee state-funded community-based services. See id. §§ 534.052-.070. MRAs, in turn, work with community centers, as well as private entity providers of mental retardation and mental health services. Each MRA acts as the referral center for MHMR services in its service area.

¹ There are 23 named appellees in this appeal, generally referred to collectively as appellees. As necessary, we will refer to appellees individually by name.

At all times relevant to this suit, CRS was a for-profit provider of residential facilities and services to mentally retarded persons. Concho Valley was both a community center and a designated MRA.

Although CRS asserted numerous claims against the various appellees, the crux of CRS's complaint is that Concho Valley and several of its employees allegedly blocked potential clients' access to CRS's residential facilities. CRS alleges that Concho Valley conspired with the City of San Angelo and Tom Green County--the local governmental creators of Concho Valley--to limit CRS's business; alternatively, CRS argues that the City of San Angelo and Tom Green County are vicariously liable for Concho's [*4] conduct. CRS also sought an injunction prohibiting Concho Valley from being a member of the Texas Council, a nonprofit corporation made up of community centers from all around Texas. The remaining appellees are asserted to be either directly liable for their participation in the conspiracy and other fraudulent acts, or derivatively liable due to their association with Concho Valley or the Texas Council.

DISCUSSION

CRS presents sixteen issues for this Court's review. The first complains generally that the trial court erred in granting summary judgment disposing of all of its causes of action against all appellees.² [*6] Issue two concerns the trial court's denial of CRS's request for injunctive relief. Issues three through six assert error related to the trial court's refusal to grant a default judgment against Tom Green County. Issue seven concerns CRS's antitrust cause of action. The eighth issue asserts generally that the trial court erred in dismissing the claims against Hale County. Issue nine addresses CRS's claims brought under the Deceptive Trade Practices-Consumer Protection Act ("DTPA").³ The tenth and eleventh issues concern federal claims for violation [*5] of the Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO")⁴ and "section 1983".⁵ Issue twelve complains of the trial court's disposal of various common-law claims. Issue thirteen asserts error related to the dismissal of CRS's statutory claims grounded in the Persons with Mental Retardation Act of 1977.⁶ Issue fourteen generally contends that the trial court erred in disposing of the vicarious liability claims against Central Plains. The final two issues complain of procedural rulings by the trial court.

Antitrust Liability

CRS asserted claims under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983 ("Antitrust Act" or "Texas Act")⁷ against Concho Valley; Concho Valley employees Finn, Sheppard, and Young; Tom Green County; the Texas Council; McClure (Council director); and Central Plains, a community center and member of the Council. CRS argues that the named appellees violated the Antitrust Act by conspiring to restrict the access of potential clients

² The trial court rendered the following orders: (1) summary judgment for Tom Green County dated May 28, 1996, disposing of all claims against the county; (2) summary judgment for Concho Valley, Young, Finn, Sheppard, Texas Council, McClure, and Central Plains dated October 29, 1996, disposing of all claims arising under the Texas Free Enterprise Antitrust Act; (3) summary judgment for Hale County dated September 15, 1995, disposing of all claims against the County; and (4) final summary judgment dated December 19, 1997, disposing of all claims against all defendants.

³ See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.46 (West 1987 & Supp. 1999).

⁴ See 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 (West 1984 & Supp. 1999).

⁵ See 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 (West 1994 & Supp. 1999).

⁶ See Tex. Health & Safety Code Ann. §§ 591.001-025 (West 1992 & Supp. 1999).

⁷ Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 15.01-52 (West 1987 & Supp. 1999).

from CRS's services. The appellees respond that their conduct is "immunized from antitrust liability by exemptions derived directly from the Texas Antitrust Act and from federal laws incorporated [*7] by the Act." We agree.

HN1[] The purpose of the Antitrust Act is to promote economic competition in commerce in Texas. See Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.04 (West 1987). As such, the restraint of trade or commerce is made unlawful. See id. § 15.05\(a\). The 1983 Act was meant to be a major reform and modernization of Texas antitrust law and is modeled after the federal Sherman Antitrust Act and Clayton Act. See Caller-Times Publishing Co. v. Triad Communications, Inc., 826 S.W.2d 576, 579-80 \(Tex. 1992\). HN2[] The Texas Act explicitly states that its provisions "shall be construed . . . in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes . . ." Bus. & Com. Code § 15.04. It is to one of these federal judicial interpretations that we now turn.

HN3[] Since 1943, the United States Supreme Court, in interpreting [*8] federal antitrust statutes, has recognized that antitrust laws do not apply to anti-competitive restraints imposed "as an act of government." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 352, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\). Parker involved a marketing program adopted pursuant to the California Agricultural Prorate Act governing the 1940 California raisin crop. Brown, a producer of raisins, complained that the program violated the Sherman Act. The Court rejected this contention, relying on principles of federalism and state sovereignty, holding that the Sherman Act should be interpreted as a prohibition on individual, not "state action." Id. at 352. Because the program was not the product of a private agreement or combination by others in restraint of trade, it did not violate the Sherman Act. Id. at 351. The Court stated: "The state in adopting and enforcing the prorate program made no contract or agreement and entered into no conspiracy in restraint of trade or to establish monopoly but, as sovereign, imposed the restraint as an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit." Id. at 352. Because [*9] the Texas Act specifically adopts federal judicial interpretation of federal antitrust law, we are bound to apply the Parker state action exemption to the Texas Act. See Bus. & Com. Code § 15.04.

Texas has chosen to regulate the health and welfare of its mentally challenged citizens through a comprehensive statutory scheme, rather than leaving the availability of services to the marketplace. We believe this regulation fits squarely within the Parker exemption for an "act of government by the State as sovereign." See City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 413, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 \(1978\) (discussing the Parker exemption); see also City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 370, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 \(1991\) (confirming Sherman Act does not apply to anti-competitive restraints imposed by states as an act of government). As in Parker, Texas has not entered into a contract or agreement with an individual to establish a monopoly and is not engaged in a conspiracy to restrain for-profit entities from providing services to mentally challenged [*10] persons. Rather, the state has decided to pursue a policy of replacing competition with regulation.

The statutory scheme charges TDMHMR with governing the state policies concerning mentally disabled persons. In turn, local community centers are created to carry out the state's policies, with extensive oversight by TDMHMR. By definition, community centers are agencies of the state. See Health & Safety Code § 534.001. As state agencies engaging in acts of government by the state, these centers enjoy antitrust immunity under the state-action exemption. See Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 360-62, 53 L. Ed. 2d 810, 97 S. Ct. 2691 \(1977\); Benton, Benton & Benton v. Louisiana Pub. Facilities Auth., 897 F.2d 198, 199, 203 \(5th Cir. 1990\).⁸ We conclude that the Parker state-action exception is applicable to statutorily created state agency community centers such as Concho Valley and Central Plains.

[*11] In addition, the Texas Act includes its own state-action exemption. HN4[] Section 15.05 of the Antitrust Act specifically exempts "actions required or affirmatively approved by any statute of this state . . . or by a regulatory agency of this state . . . acting under . . . statutory authority vesting the agency with such power." See Bus. & Com.

⁸ This is to be contrasted with municipalities, which are not themselves sovereign, and therefore carry a higher burden to demonstrate that their anti-competitive actions are authorized by the state pursuant to the state's policy to replace competition with regulation. See Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 40-42, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 \(1985\).

Code § 15.05(g). Accordingly, we hold that the trial court properly granted a take-nothing summary judgment against CRS on its antitrust claims against Concho Valley and Central Plains.

Furthermore, the individuals Finn, Sheppard, and Young, as employees of Concho Valley, also enjoy the benefits of the Parker state-action exemption. The state-action doctrine applies equally to the officers and agents of the governmental body who participate in the challenged conduct. See Foley v. Alabama State Bar, 648 F.2d 355, 359 (5th Cir. 1981) (citing City of Lafayette, 435 U.S. 389, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123). We hold the trial court did not err in disposing of CRS's antitrust claims against these individuals.

Similarly, the Texas Council and its director McClure enjoy the benefits [*12] of the Parker state-action doctrine. State-action immunity extends to private persons and entities taking a role in implementing state policy. See Benton, 897 F.2d at 204. The controversy in Benton involved a state agency's policy of always using the same law firm as bond counsel. Attorneys from a law firm not selected sued both the agency and the chosen private attorneys, alleging antitrust violations. The court found that not only was the agency protected by the state-action exemption, the private attorneys selected to perform services for the public agency were also shielded by the doctrine. See id.

In the instant case, the summary judgment evidence shows that the Texas Council is created and governed by its community center membership for the sole purpose of performing services for the centers in their endeavors to provide services to mentally challenged Texans. Accordingly, the Texas Council and its agent McClure are entitled to the state-action exemption. We hold that the trial court did not err in disposing of CRS's antitrust claims against Texas Council and McClure.

Finally, CRS asserted antitrust claims against Tom Green County. Because the County [*13] is also exempt from antitrust liability, this claim fails. HNS↑ The federal Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984 expressly immunizes all local governmental entities from antitrust liability under the Clayton Act. See 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 34-36 (West 1997). Counties are included in the definition of "local government." Id. § 34. As noted previously, the purpose of the Texas Act was to drastically reform Texas antitrust law to mirror federal antitrust law. See Caller-Times, 826 S.W.2d at 579-80. The legislature explicitly adopted federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes, and further provided that nothing in the Antitrust Act should be "construed to prohibit activities that are exempt from the operation of the federal antitrust laws." See Bus. & Com. Code §§ 15.04, 15.05(g). We believe these expressions of the legislature incorporate the local government exemption for counties contained in the Local Government Antitrust Act. Further, as previously noted, the Texas Act also includes its own state-action exemption, which we conclude is expansive enough to cover the County's participation [*14] in the anti-competitive scheme. See id. § 15.05(g). Accordingly, we hold that the trial court did not err in dismissing CRS's antitrust claims against Tom Green County.

Lawfully Formed Community Centers

As will be made clear later in this opinion, CRS's causes of action for DTPA violations, RICO violations, and common-law torts are premised on its assertion that Concho Valley and Central Plains are not legally constituted community centers and thus are not governmental entities entitled to sovereign immunity. Accordingly, we turn to the threshold issue of the community centers' legitimacy.

1. Failure for Lack of Contract

Concho Valley and Central Plains were established in June 1966 and July 1967, respectively, pursuant to article 3 of the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Act ("MHMRA") as enacted in 1965. See Act of April 5, 1965, 59th Leg., R.S., ch. 67, § 1, 1965 Tex. Gen. Laws 165, 171 (since repealed and codified as amended at Health & Safety Code Title VII). Section 3.01 of the MHMRA, as it existed at the community centers' creation, provided:

One or more cities, counties, hospital districts, school districts, rehabilitation districts, [*15] state-supported institutions of higher education, and state-supported medical schools, or any combination of these, may cooperate, negotiate, and contract with each other through their governing bodies to establish and operate a community center.

Id.

It is undisputed that the creating entities of Concho Valley and Central Plains did not enter into written contracts to establish the two community centers. CRS urges this Court to read the above-quoted language to require a written contract as a prerequisite to the valid establishment of the community centers. We decline to do so.

We read section 3.01, as written in 1965, to allow the joint creation and operation of a community center by cooperation, negotiation, or contract between local governmental entities. Clearly, the legislature meant to authorize the creation of community centers by means of contract. It appears that the legislature may have anticipated these local entities were likely to enter into contracts when forming joint community centers. However, there is nothing to indicate that the entities were required to form a written contract, or that the failure to do so would invalidate the legal existence [16] of a jointly formed community center.⁹

Even assuming, however, that the version of section 3.01 applicable in 1967 could somehow be construed to require a contract in the formation of a community center, the record shows that in 1967 the creating entities of Central Plains did enter into a written agreement governing the selection of trustees for the center. In November 1989, the sponsoring local government creators of Concho Valley adopted written procedures setting forth, among other things, the selection of trustees, as required by the version [17] of section 3.01 applicable in 1989. See Act of June 20, 1987, 70th Leg., R.S., ch. 956, § 3.01, 1987 Tex. Gen. Laws 3194, 3211 (since repealed and codified as amended at Health & Safety Code Title VII). Therefore, at the time the present lawsuit was filed, and only months following the date CRS alleges Concho Valley's offending conduct began, both centers had written contracts in place.

We decline to invalidate Concho Valley and Central Plains' 30-year history as legally created community centers for lack of written contracts at their inception.

2. Failure as Incorporated Entity

CRS next argues that because Central Plains was incorporated from 1969 to 1996 as a nonprofit corporation, it cannot be a valid community center. Basically, CRS contends that because governmental entities may not legally fund a corporation, and because the sponsoring governmental entities provide Central Plains with funding, Central Plains must not be a community center.

We are unpersuaded by this argument. Central Plains was incorporated pursuant to the Texas Non-Profit Corporation Act.¹⁰ The summary-judgment evidence shows that Central Plains exercises only public functions for public [18] purposes under the control of the State. Contrary to CRS's assertions, Central Plains is governed by a board of trustees appointed by the participating local governmental entities creating the community center. Nothing in the statute authorizing the creation of community centers indicates that a center may not be a nonprofit corporation properly formed under the Texas Non-Profit Corporation Act. We fail to see how Central Plains' nonprofit corporate status strips it of its identity as a governmental entity.

We reject CRS's contention that Concho Valley and Central Plains are not valid community centers. Having so held, we turn to those causes of action asserted by CRS turning on the premise that the centers are invalid, and thus not governmental entities entitled to sovereign immunity.

⁹ We note that section 3.01 was amended in 1969 to require the governing bodies creating a community center to enter into a contract. See Act of June 12, 1969, 61st Leg., R.S., ch. 688, § 3, 1969 Tex. Gen. Laws 2010, 2012 (since repealed and codified as amended at Health & Safety Code Title VII). We believe this supports our conclusion that prior to the amendment, when Concho Valley and Central Plains were created, no contract was required.

¹⁰ Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 1396--1.01-11.01 (West 1997 & Supp. 1999).

RICO Claims

CRS contends in its tenth issue that the trial court erred in disposing of [*19] its cause of action asserting RICO violations. As conceded by CRS in its brief to this Court, however, its RICO claims fail if this Court finds Concho Valley and Central Plains are legitimate community centers entitled to sovereign immunity from these claims. Moreover, CRS's RICO claims against appellees other than Concho Valley and Central Plains are premised on their alleged improper holding out of the community centers as legitimate. Because we reject CRS's contention that the centers are illegitimate, the RICO claims against all appellees fail accordingly. We hold that the trial court did not err in rendering judgment that CRS take nothing by its RICO cause of action.

Common-law Tort Claims

CRS next challenges the trial court's rejection of its common-law tort claims against all appellees, including claims of fraud, negligence, and tortious interference with contract. CRS's challenge fails for two reasons.

First, CRS provides no authority or argument to this Court that sovereign immunity has been waived; accordingly, CRS has failed to present anything for us to review, and the judgment should be affirmed on this ground alone. See Rodriguez v. Morgan, 584 S.W.2d 558, 559 [*20] (Tex. Civ. App.--Austin 1979, writ ref'd n.r.e.). To the extent CRS asserts that sovereign immunity has been waived due to Concho Valley's and Central Plains' not being valid community centers, and therefore not governmental units, we have rejected this argument, as discussed above.

Second, appellees asserted grounds for summary judgment before the trial court that are not addressed by CRS on appeal. In granting summary judgment against CRS on this claim, the trial court did not specify the basis for its ruling; thus, the summary judgment may be affirmed on any ground presented in appellees' motion. See Cincinnati Life Ins. Co. v. Cates, 927 S.W.2d 623, 625 (Tex. 1996). HN6 ↑ If summary judgment may have been granted on a ground not challenged, failure to address each theory that might support the trial court's rendition of summary judgment requires an affirmance. See, e.g., Holloway v. Starnes, 840 S.W.2d 14, 23 (Tex. App.--Dallas 1992, writ denied), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 828, 114 S. Ct. 93, 126 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1993). Because CRS failed to assign error to all bases upon which the appellees moved for summary judgment on its common-law tort claims, complaint on appeal [*21] has been waived.

We hold that the trial court did not err in granting appellees a take-nothing judgment on CRS's common-law tort causes of action.

DTPA Claims

In its ninth issue presented, CRS asserts that the trial court erred in dismissing its DTPA claims against all appellees because they are not shielded by sovereign immunity. We disagree. To the extent CRS contends that the appellees do not enjoy sovereign immunity because Central Plains and Concho Valley are "impostor" community centers, we have previously rejected this contention. Although CRS presents additional creative arguments as to why the DTPA waives sovereign immunity, none are viable. We hold there was no error.

Section 1983

In its eleventh issue, CRS complains that the trial court erred in dismissing its "section 1983" cause of action. See 42 U.S.C.A § 1983 (West 1994 & Supp. 1999). In granting summary judgment against CRS on this claim, the trial court did not specify the basis for its ruling; thus, the summary judgment may be affirmed on any ground presented in appellees' motion. See Cincinnati Life, 927 S.W.2d at 625. Because CRS [*22] failed to assign error to all bases upon which the appellees moved for summary judgment on its section 1983 claims, complaint on appeal has been waived.

Injunction

CRS sought to enjoin Concho Valley from membership in the Texas Council, a nonprofit corporation created by community centers from throughout the state in a joint effort to effectuate the centers' responsibilities to mentally challenged Texans. CRS claims that Concho Valley lacks statutory authority to be a dues-paying member of a corporation such as the Council, and that Concho Valley's membership violates that portion of article 3, section 52 of the Texas Constitution prohibiting public entities from holding stock in a corporation. See Tex. Const. art. III, § 52.

Concho Valley counters that CRS lacks standing to seek an injunction to void its membership in the Council. CRS argues it has standing because it pays ad valorem taxes on five residential properties to Tom Green County and the City of San Angelo, which, in turn, fund Concho Valley. Alternatively, CRS argues it has standing as a citizen with a peculiar interest adversely affected by the actions of Concho Valley.

We agree with CRS that, generally [*23] speaking, a taxpaying citizen has standing to seek an injunction to enjoin public officials from the illegal expenditure of public funds. See, e.g., Lara v. Williams, 986 S.W.2d 310, 314-15 (Tex. App.--Fort Worth 1999, pet. filed) (citing Osborne v. Keith, 142 Tex. 262, 177 S.W.2d 198, 200 (Tex. 1944); Hoffman v. Davis, 128 Tex. 503, 100 S.W.2d 94, 95 (Tex. 1937)). However, CRS does not seek to enjoin an expenditure by Tom Green County or the City of San Angelo to Concho Valley, or Concho Valley's expenditure to the Council in the form of membership dues. Rather, CRS seeks to enjoin Concho Valley from remaining a member of the Council. Because CRS has not properly placed itself within the parameters of taxpayer standing, CRS's taxpayer status cannot in itself provide it with the necessary standing to maintain its request for injunction.

CRS argues alternatively that it has standing to seek injunctive relief as a citizen with a special interest adversely affected by Concho's membership in the Texas Council. HNT[¹] The general rule is that standing to bring suit depends upon some interest peculiar to the person individually, and not as [*24] a member of the general public. See, e.g., Hunt v. Bass, 664 S.W.2d 323, 324 (Tex. 1984). More specifically, a person has standing to sue if:

- (1) he has sustained, or is immediately in danger of sustaining, some direct injury as a result of the wrongful act of which he complains; (2) there is a direct relationship between the alleged injury and the claim to be adjudicated; (3) the plaintiff has a personal stake in the controversy; (4) the challenged action has caused the plaintiff some injury in fact, either economic, recreational, environmental, or otherwise; or (5) the plaintiff is an appropriate party to assert the public interest in the matter as well as his own interest.

Lake Medina Conservation Soc'y, Inc./Bexar-Medina-Atascosa Counties WCID No. 1 v. Texas Natural Resource Conservation Comm'n, 980 S.W.2d 511, 515 (Tex. App.--Austin 1998, pet. denied) (emphasis added); see also Amerada Hess Corp. v. Garza, 973 S.W.2d 667, 680 (Tex. App.--Corpus Christi 1996, no writ); Billy B., Inc. v. Board of Trustees, 717 S.W.2d 156, 158 (Tex. App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1986, no writ).

[*25] CRS concedes that following the rendition of the final summary judgment in this case, it sold its licenses by which it had been authorized to provide residential services to mentally retarded persons. CRS asserts that it nevertheless maintains standing to seek an injunction because it leases real property to a company that currently operates residential service centers on that property. In effect, CRS contends that, because it has a financial stake in the profitability of its lessee, who in turn is allegedly affected by Concho Valley's membership in the Council, it maintains an interest adversely affected by Concho Valley's actions.

We conclude that the lessor/lessee relationship between CRS and its tenant does not create the special interest needed to support standing. Assuming Concho Valley's membership in the Council is improper, CRS, as landlord, has not sustained, and is not in danger of sustaining, a direct injury as a result of the membership. Further, the relationship between the possible injury to CRS and the allegedly improper membership of Concho Valley in Council is attenuated, at best. We certainly cannot say the relationship is direct. Finally, CRS has no [*26] personal stake in Concho Valley's membership, and CRS can point to no injury in fact resulting from the membership.

Accordingly, we hold that CRS lacks standing to enjoin Concho Valley's membership in the Texas Council. Because lack of standing is a ground for dismissal rather than a take-nothing judgment on the merits, see Alexander v. City of Greenville, 585 S.W.2d 333, 334 (Tex. Civ. App.--Dallas 1979, writ ref'd n.r.e.), the proper course for this Court is to vacate the portion of the summary judgment ordering that CRS take nothing by its request for injunctive relief, and to render judgment dismissing that portion of the cause in its entirety.

Persons with Mental Retardation Act

In its thirteenth issue presented, CRS urges this Court to find error in the trial court's disposal of its claims under the Persons with Mental Retardation Act ("PMRA"). See Health & Safety Code §§ 591.001-025 (West 1992 & Supp. 1999). We decline.

The PMRA creates a statutory cause of action to redress violations of the rights of mentally retarded persons. See id. § 591.022. However, the right to sue is expressly [*27] limited to the person injured, the injured party's parent or guardian, or next friend. Id. § 591.022(d). CRS argues that it is a "person injured" and is therefore entitled to maintain suit. This precise contention has been advanced and rejected previously in Develo-Cepts, Inc. v. City of Galveston, 668 S.W.2d 790, 794 (Tex. App.--Houston [14th Dist.] 1984, no writ) (PMRA "clearly restricts recovery to mentally retarded persons and to those entitled to bring suit in their behalf"). CRS's conclusory statement that Develo-Cepts is erroneous is not persuasive.

Because CRS had no right to sue under the PMRA, the trial court properly granted summary judgment disposing of this claim.

Claims Against Hale County

All of CRS's claims against Hale County are derivative in nature. CRS asserts that because Hale County participated in the creation, controlling, and funding of Central Plains, it is vicariously liable for the wrongdoings and liabilities of Central Plains. Because we have concluded that Central Plains is not liable under any theory advanced by CRS, there can be no vicarious liability imputed to Hale County. We hold that the trial court [*28] properly granted summary judgment for Hale County.

Interlocutory Default Judgment

CRS complains in issues three through six that the trial court erred in: (1) refusing to sign an interlocutory default judgment against Tom Green County after such judgment was rendered on the record in open court; (2) holding a "show cause" hearing on whether the court should sign an interlocutory default judgment against Tom Green County; (3) applying an improper legal test at the "show cause" hearing; and (4) making findings of fact at the "show cause" hearing.

HN8 As a prerequisite to presenting an argument for appellate review, the record must show that the complaint was first made to the trial court. See Tex. R. App. P. 33.1\(a\). CRS failed to complain to the trial court regarding the default judgment issues presented, and failed to obtain a ruling on any complaint; therefore, CRS has not preserved error for appellate review. See id.

Even if CRS had preserved error, and assuming CRS is correct that the trial court orally rendered an interlocutory default judgment, CRS's complaints are still without merit. HNG The trial court had broad, virtually unlimited discretion to vacate an [*29] interlocutory order prior to its rendition of a final judgment. See Tex. R. Civ. P. 329b; Fruehauf Corp. v. Carrillo, 848 S.W.2d 83, 84 \(Tex. 1993\) (trial court has continuing power over interlocutory orders and may set them aside at any time before final judgment is entered). We find no error.

Procedural Rulings

In its final two issues presented, CRS complains of procedural rulings made in connection with the granting of summary judgment. By a scheduling order dated June 6, 1997, the trial court set deadlines after which the parties would not be permitted to file summary judgment argument or evidence. That order gave CRS until July 11, 1997, to complete summary judgment filings, and gave appellees until July 18, 1997. Appellees filed additional summary judgment argument and evidence on July 18. CRS filed an omnibus motion requesting the trial court to grant it leave to reply to the newly filed argument and evidence. The motion was denied. CRS asserts that the June 6 order improperly allowed appellees (as movants) the "last word" and that the trial court erred in denying its omnibus motion.

The record does not show that CRS complained to the trial [*30] court about the June 6 order or secured a ruling on any complaint; therefore, the point is waived. See Tex. R. App. P. 33.1. Furthermore, CRS provides no authority to this Court to support its assertion that it was error to allow movants the "last word." Error was therefore waived. See, e.g., Marsh v. Wallace, 924 S.W.2d 423, 425 (Tex. App.--Austin 1996, no writ). Even if CRS's contention had not been waived, we would still find it to be without merit. The order did not preclude CRS from responding to any additional summary judgment argument or evidence presented by appellees; rather, it required CRS to seek leave of court before doing so. We do not find an abuse of discretion in the filing of the scheduling order.

As to the denial of the omnibus motion, while the trial court did deny the motion's general request for additional time to respond, the court granted CRS leave to file the only evidence specifically identified by CRS as necessary to respond to appellee's July 18 filing. The remainder of the omnibus motion, in essence, was simply a request for a continuance for more time to gather potentially responsive evidence. HN10[] The granting or denial of a continuance [*31] is within the sound discretion of the trial judge. See State v. Crank, 666 S.W.2d 91, 94 \(Tex. 1984\). The denial of a motion for continuance will not be disturbed unless the record shows a clear abuse of discretion. See id. Given the extended time frame within which the parties filed and responded to motions for summary judgment; the numerous motions for continuance that had previously been granted in this case; and the fact that CRS was granted leave to file the evidence it contends was responsive to appellee's July 18 filing, we conclude that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by generally denying CRS's omnibus motion.

CONCLUSION

We hold that CRS lacks standing to seek to enjoin Concho Valley from future membership in the Texas Council; accordingly, we vacate that portion of the trial court's final summary judgment that CRS take nothing by its request for injunctive relief and render judgment dismissing that claim. Having found all remaining issues presented by CRS to be without merit, we affirm the summary judgment in all other respects.

J. Woodfin Jones, Justice

Before Justices Jones, Kidd and Patterson

Affirmed in Part; [*32] Vacated and Dismissed in Part

Filed: August 26, 1999

7-UP Bottling Co. v. Archer Daniels Midland Co. (In re Citric Acid Litig.)

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

May 19, 1999, Argued and Submitted, San Francisco, California ; September 1, 1999, Filed

No. 98-15344

Reporter

191 F.3d 1090 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 20892 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,641; 99 Cal. Daily Op. Service 7223; 99 Daily Journal DAR 9233

In re: CITRIC ACID LITIGATION 7-UP BOTTLING CO. OF JASPER INC., et al., Plaintiffs, and VARNI BROTHERS CORP., on its own behalf and all others similarly situated dba Seven-Up Bottling of Modesto; 7-UP BOTTLING COMPANY OF PHILADELPHIA, INC. Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. ARCHER DANIELS MIDLAND CO., INC., a Delaware corporation, et al., Defendants, and CARGILL, INC., Defendant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied March 27, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 2213.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. MDL-01092-FMS. Fern M. Smith, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

conspiracy, conspirators, citric acid, documents, joining, prices, market share, summary judgment, circumstantial evidence, competitors, meetings, district court, fix prices, price-fixing, figures, argues, firms, act independently, antitrust, direct evidence, aggregate, distributed, infer, production and sale, legal control, statistics, producers, oil, reasonable inference, judicial notice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Scope

Price fixing is illegal per se under section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

On a claim of concerted price fixing under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN3 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN4 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A court is obligated to construe the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party in summary judgment context, to give the non-moving party the benefit of all reasonable inferences, and to refrain from making credibility determinations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Although the non-moving parties in summary judgment setting are to be given the benefit of the doubt, they must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [blue download icon] Remedies, Damages

An inference of conspiracy is sustainable only if reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action, and to survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Courts reviewing anti-trust complaints have developed a two-part test to be applied whenever a plaintiff rests its case entirely on circumstantial evidence. First, the defendant can rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice. The burden then shifts back to the plaintiff to provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendant was not engaging in permissible competitive behavior.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A plaintiff who relies solely on circumstantial evidence of conspiracy in an anti-trust case must produce evidence tending to exclude the possibility that defendants acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is not reasonable to infer that a firm is engaging in illegal activities merely from the fact that it fails to continue to increase market share.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN12 [blue speech bubble icon] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

An expert report cannot be used to prove the existence of facts set forth therein. Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN13 [blue speech bubble icon] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN14 [blue speech bubble icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Communications between competitors do not permit an inference of an agreement to fix prices unless those communications rise to the level of an agreement, tacit or otherwise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15 [blue speech bubble icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Although the possession of competitor price lists is consistent with conspiracy, it does not, at least in itself, tend to exclude legitimate competitive behavior. There are many legal ways in which an anti-trust defendant could have obtained pricing information on competitors. To allow an inference of agreement from such evidence, standing alone, would have the effect of deterring competitors from obtaining information about other companies' actual retail prices, even through legitimate means.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > Mandatory Disclosures

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miranda Rights > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Custodial Interrogation

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

HN16 [blue speech bubble icon] Disclosure, Mandatory Disclosures

Fed. R. Civ. P. 45 (a) requires a party served with a subpoena for records to produce those records that are in its possession, custody or control.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > Mandatory Disclosures

HN17 [blue speech bubble icon] Disclosure, Mandatory Disclosures

For purposes of discovery, control of documents is defined as the legal right to obtain documents upon demand.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Foreign Discovery

HN18[] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

In a case where documents are in the possession of a foreign entity and discovery is requested from a domestic entity, the proof of theoretical control of the domestic over the foreign is insufficient; a showing of actual control is required.

Counsel: Jerome B. Falk, Jr. (argued), Therese M. Stewart, Sue A. Krenek, Howard, Rice, Nemerovski, Canady, Falk & Rabkin, San Francisco, California; Leonard Barrack, Steven A. Asher, Barrack, Rodos & Bacine, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Joseph W. Cotchett, Bruce L. Simon, Marie S. Weiner, Steven C. Keller, Cotchett, Pitre & Simon, Burlingame, California; Guido Saveri, Richard Saveri, R. Alexander Saveri, Saveri & Saveri, San Francisco, California, for plaintiffs-appellants Varni Brothers Corp., on its own behalf and on behalf of all others similarly situated, dba Seven-Up Bottling of Modesto; 7-Up Bottling Company of Philadelphia, Inc.

Robert E. Bloch, Robert L. Bronston, Richard J. Favretto (argued), Lawrence S. Robbins, Mark W. Ryan, Mayer, Brown & Platt, Washington, D.C.; Charles F. Preuss, Vernon I. Zvoleff, Michael J. Stortz, Preuss, Walker & Shanagher, San Francisco, California, for defendant-appellee Cargill, Incorporated.

Frederick S. Fields, Steven H. Winick, Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon, San Francisco, California; [2] Christian M. Hoffman, Peter M. Casey, Daniel H. Haines, Foley, Hoag & Eliot, Boston, Massachusetts, for non-party appellee Coopers & Lybrand L.L.P.

Judges: Before: Diarmuid F. O'Scannlain, M. Margaret McKeown, and Kim McLane Wardlaw, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge O'Scannlain.

Opinion by: Diarmuid F. O'Scannlain

Opinion

[*1092] OPINION

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge:

We must decide whether purchasers were able to establish that a citric acid manufacturer conspired with competitors to fix prices and to allocate market share in violation of the federal antitrust laws.

I

Citric acid is a corn derivative with a wide variety of uses in the manufacture of food, soft drinks, detergents, and pharmaceuticals. Varni Brothers Corp. and 7-Up Bottling Company of Philadelphia, Inc. (collectively "Varni") filed civil antitrust class actions against Cargill, Incorporated ("Cargill"), Archer Daniels Midland ("ADM"), Haarman & Reimer ("H&R"), Hoffmann LaRoche ("HLR"), and Jungbunzlauer ("JBL"), alleging that these firms conspired to fix citric acid prices and to allocate market share. These cases were consolidated and transferred to the Northern District of California. The district court certified a class consisting [3] of all people [*1093] and entities (other than government purchasers and the defendants themselves and affiliated companies) who had purchased citric acid directly from the defendants.

Conceding the existence of a conspiracy in the citric acid market but denying its participation therein, Cargill moved for summary judgment. ADM, H&R, HLR, and JBL (collectively the "admitted conspirators") each admitted to conspiring to fix citric acid prices and reached settlements with Varni. Thus, the only question before the district court was whether Cargill was a member of this conspiracy or, more precisely, whether Varni had produced sufficient evidence such that a reasonable factfinder could so infer. The district court concluded that Varni failed to satisfy this test because its evidence did not "tend[] to exclude the possibility that [Cargill] acted independently." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Accordingly, the court granted summary judgment in favor of Cargill and commented that "apparently hoping that quantity will substitute for quality, plaintiffs [\[4\]](#) have submitted voluminous but weak circumstantial evidence that they argue indicates that Cargill was a member of the conspiracy."

On appeal, Varni argues that Cargill's participation in the conspiracy can be reasonably inferred from the circumstantial evidence in the record. Varni also appeals the district court's denial of a discovery motion, an issue we consider in Part IV.

II

To avoid extensive repetition of the facts, we will first consider the legal standard by which we decide whether Varni has produced sufficient evidence to survive summary judgment. By understanding the proper legal framework applicable at the summary judgment stage, we can better analyze the evidence.

A

HN1 Price fixing is illegal per se under section 1 of the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 1; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 \(1940\). HN2 "On a claim of concerted price fixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\). [\[5\]](#) HN3 Summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\) HN4 ("Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.").)

Varni can establish a genuine issue of material fact by producing either direct evidence that Cargill conspired to fix citric acid prices or circumstantial evidence from which a reasonable factfinder could conclude that Cargill so conspired. Although Varni argues halfheartedly that it has produced direct evidence that Cargill entered into illegal price-fixing agreements with the admitted conspirators - in which case summary judgment would, of course, be inappropriate, [\[6\]](#) see McLaughlin v. Liu, 849 F.2d 1205, 1208 \(9th Cir. 1988\); T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 631-32 \(9th Cir. 1987\) - Varni concedes that such evidence is, at best, weak. Having reviewed the proffered evidence, we can find nothing in the record that establishes, without requiring any inferences, that Cargill participated in the citric acid price-fixing conspiracy. See In re Baby Food Antitrust Litig., 166 F.3d 112, 118 [\[*1094\]](#) \(3d Cir. 1999\) ("Baby Food") ("Direct evidence in a Section 1 conspiracy must be evidence that is explicit and requires no inferences to establish the proposition or conclusion being asserted."). We thus agree with both parties that the essential question in this case is whether Varni's circumstantial evidence is sufficient to permit a reasonable factfinder to conclude that Cargill was a participant in the citric acid conspiracy.¹

[\[7\]](#) Matsushita is the Supreme Court's foremost explanation of how summary judgment works in the antitrust context. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 585-97. The Matsushita Court began by reaffirming hornbook law that HN5 courts are obligated to construe the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, to give the non-moving party the benefit of all reasonable inferences, and to refrain from making credibility determinations. See id. HN6¹ The Court cautioned, however, that, although plaintiffs are to be given the benefit of the doubt, they "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Id. at 588. Importantly, HN7¹ "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. at 586. Instead, HN8¹ an inference of conspiracy is sustainable only if "reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action," and "to survive a motion for summary judgment . . . , a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the [8] alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. at 588 (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764); accord City of Long Beach v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 872 F.2d 1401, 1404 (9th Cir. 1989)). The Court warned that permitting the inference of conspiratorial behavior from evidence consistent with both lawful and unlawful conduct would deter pro-competitive conduct - an especially pernicious danger in light of the fact that the very purpose of the antitrust laws is to promote competition. See 475 U.S. at 593 ("Courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetitive conduct.").

¹ In its briefs, Varni argued that it need show only a "slight connection" between Cargill and the conspiracy to survive summary judgment. See, e.g., United States v. Dunn, 564 F.2d 348, 357 \(9th Cir. 1977\). At oral argument, however, Varni expressly disclaimed any reliance upon this theory.

Based on Matsushita, this circuit has outlined HN9¹ a two-part test to be applied whenever a plaintiff rests its case entirely on circumstantial evidence. First, the defendant can "rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice." Richards v. Neilson Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898, 902 (9th Cir. 1987); accord City of Long Beach, 872 F.2d at 1406; [\[9\]](#) Wilcox v. First Interstate Bank of Oregon, 815 F.2d 522, 526-28 (9th Cir. 1987); T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 632, 635. The burden then shifts back to the plaintiff to provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendant was not engaging in permissible competitive behavior. See Long Beach, 872 F.2d at 1406; Jeanery, Inc. v. James Jeans, Inc., 849 F.2d 1148, 1159 (9th Cir. 1988); Wilcox, 815 F.2d at 525; Richards, 810 F.2d at 902, 904; T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 632.²

[\[10\]](#) [\[*1095\]](#) B

We have repeatedly applied this summary judgment framework, which, to repeat, we must apply whenever the plaintiff cannot establish every element of its case without asking the court to draw an inference in his favor. In Richards, a local trucking carrier, Foothills Express, accused major trucking companies of engaging in a concerted group boycott against Foothills Express. The defendant corporations used Foothills Express as an interliner for shipments to the Sacramento area: the defendants carried freight from areas nationwide to Sacramento using their own trucks and Foothills Express made the deliveries from Sacramento to surrounding areas. Foothills Express, however, began soliciting the business of defendants' customers using information gained from carrier freight bills, a practice known as "back solicitation." In response to Foothill Express's back solicitation, each of the defendants cut off or substantially reduced its business with Foothills. See Richards, 810 F.2d at 900-01.

Foothills Express alleged that the defendants had violated the antitrust laws by agreeing not to employ the services of any local carrier who engaged in back solicitation. [\[11\]](#) In support of its claims, Foothills Express cited the fact that each defendant stopped using its services around the same time. The defendants, however, responded that it was in each defendant's independent self-interest to refrain from doing business with local carriers who competed with them. Considering the defendants' explanation, we held that the defendants had "met their burden of proffering a plausible justification for their conduct consistent with proper business practice." Id. at 902. Thus, the burden

² This second requirement flows directly from Matsushita. As then-Judge Kennedy explained in Richards:

Were the case to go to trial, [the antitrust plaintiff] would bear the burden of proving the existence of the alleged conspiracy . . . To discharge its burden, it would have to introduce evidence that would permit a jury to conclude that a conspiracy . . . [is] more likely than not. If the evidence produced in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment does not give reasonable support to a finding of conspiratorial, as opposed to unilateral, behavior, summary judgment is appropriate.

Richards, 810 F.2d at 903 (citing Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); 6 P. Areeda, Antitrust Law Par. 1405, at 21 (1986)).

shifted to Foothills to demonstrate that the trucking companies acted pursuant to some sort of conspiracy, since the legality of their conduct depended crucially, as is often the case, on whether they had acted independently or pursuant to an agreement.

Foothills Express asserted that the existence of a conspiracy could be inferred from the concession by one of the defendant corporations' presidents that there was "a gentlemen's agreement" with the other major trucking companies against back solicitation. Richards, 810 F.2d at 903. We acknowledged that it was possible to interpret this deposition testimony as evidence of an agreement 12 amongst competitors, but noted that this evidence was not necessarily inconsistent with lawful behavior. The evidence could also plausibly be interpreted either as a "reference to industrywide acceptance of the competitive reality that back solicitation was an abuse of the interlining relation" or as "meaning there were discrete, bilateral understandings between each defendant on one hand, and its interlining company on the other" (rather than a horizontal agreement amongst the defendants). Id. Under both of these latter interpretations, defendants would have engaged only in lawful conduct. Because the circumstantial evidence was as consistent with permissible competitive behavior as with illegal conspiracy - and thus did not tend to exclude the possibility of legitimate behavior - we concluded that the supposed smoking gun was not sufficient for Foothills to overcome defendants' summary judgment motion. See id. at 903-04.

We reached a similar conclusion in T.W. Electrical Service, in which electrical contractors accused the Pacific Electrical Contractors Association ("PECA") of conspiring with unions to require all contractors to make certain contributions. 13 Because PECA offered a legitimate, non-conspiratorial interpretation of its conduct, we emphasized that, to withstand PECA's summary judgment motion, "the contractors must not only come forward with 'specific facts' showing the existence of a genuine issue of material fact, but also must set forth 'specific facts' that tend to exclude the possibility that PECA acted independently." T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 635. *1096 In light of the fact that the contractors failed to produce evidence showing that the contribution requirement was the product of an agreement between PECA and others, rather than a requirement unilaterally imposed by PECA, we affirmed the grant of summary judgment in favor of PECA. See id.

In Wilcox, commercial borrowers of the First Interstate Bank of Oregon ("FIOR") sued FIOR alleging that it had conspired with other banks to fix interest rates. After the borrowers successfully convinced a jury to infer conspiracy from evidence of price parallelism, exchanges of pricing information, and opportunities to conspire, the district court granted judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of FIOR. Agreeing that there was no direct evidence of 14 any agreement to set interest rates, that the circumstantial evidence of price fixing did not tend to exclude the possibility that FIOR set rates independently, and that FIOR did not act against its own independent self-interest, we affirmed. See Wilcox, 815 F.2d at 524-28.

In another case, the City of Long Beach, which sold oil to various major oil companies at a price based on posted prices for Wilmington crude oil, alleged that the oil companies conspired to maintain uniformly low, noncompetitive posted prices. Although it lacked direct evidence of conspiracy, the City produced evidence that the defendants exchanged crude oil amongst themselves using a complicated "three-cut exchange system" rather than simply valuing oil based upon the posted prices. The City asserted that the companies used the three-cut exchange system because the posted prices were rigged: the oil corporations were making an "unusual effort" to maintain the elaborate three-cut exchange system, and the defendants did not demonstrate any advantage of this "cumbersome and inconvenient" system over valuing oil using posted prices. Long Beach, 872 F.2d at 1403, 1406. Applying the 15 legal framework outlined above, we concluded that evidence of such behavior, inexplicable absent a conspiracy, did tend to exclude the possibility that defendants acted independently and thus reversed the grant of summary judgment in the defendants' favor. See id. at 1406-07.

C

Notwithstanding our many cases applying this legal framework for analyzing circumstantial evidence cases, Varni asks us to apply a very different summary judgment standard whereby it need not produce evidence tending to exclude the possibility that defendants acted independently even though it relies entirely on circumstantial evidence. Varni cites only a single case, In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Products Antitrust Litigation, 906

F.2d 432 (9th Cir. 1990), in support of its proposed legal standard. The plaintiffs in that case, however, presented direct evidence of conspiracy, see id. at 456-57, 459-60 & n.22, thus making dicta any discussion therein of the standard applicable when plaintiffs rely exclusively on circumstantial evidence. See United States Nat'l Bank of Oregon v. Independent Ins. Agents of Am., Inc., 508 U.S. 439, 463 n.11, 124 L. Ed. 2d 402, 113 S. Ct. 2173 (1993) [16] (recognizing the "need to distinguish an opinion's holding from its dicta"); Delta & Pine Land Co. v. Sinkers Corp., 177 F.3d 1343, 1349-50 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (declining to follow dicta).

The requirement that a HN10[[↑]] plaintiff who relies solely on circumstantial evidence of conspiracy - as Varni does - must produce evidence tending to exclude the possibility that defendants acted independently follows directly from the Supreme Court's opinion in Matsushita and is, as we have explained, well-established in both this circuit, see Long Beach, 872 F.2d at 1406; Jeanery, 849 F.2d at 1159; Wilcox, 815 F.2d at 525; Richards, 810 F.2d at 902, 904; T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 632, as well as in our sister circuits. See Mitchael v. Intracorp, 179 F.3d 847, 858 (10th Cir. 1999); Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 123; City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chems., Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 569-70 (11th Cir. 1998), petition for cert. filed, 67 U.S.L.W. 3773 [*1097] (U.S. June 9, 1999) (No. 98-1997); Corner Pocket of Sioux Falls, Inc. v. Video Lottery Techs., Inc., 123 F.3d 1107, 1112 (8th Cir. 1997), [17] cert. denied, 118 S. Ct. 1054 (1998); Clorox Co. v. Sterling Winthrop, Inc., 117 F.3d 50, 55 (2d Cir. 1997); Thompson Everett, Inc. v. National Cable Adver., L.P., 57 F.3d 1317, 1323 (4th Cir. 1995); Wallace v. Bank of Bartlett, 55 F.3d 1166, 1170 (6th Cir. 1995); Reserve Supply Corp. v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., 971 F.2d 37, 49 (7th Cir. 1992); In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 907 F.2d 510, 514 (5th Cir. 1990).

With the appropriate legal standard in mind, we now analyze the evidence in the record.

III

Varni offers a plethora of evidence which it claims shows that Cargill was a member of the citric acid conspiracy. As Varni emphasizes, the crucial question is whether all the evidence considered as a whole can reasonably support the inference that Cargill conspired with the admitted conspirators to fix prices. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962). Thus, we consider the evidence offered by Varni, and then ask whether, in light of all the evidence considered together, a reasonable [18] factfinder could have concluded that Cargill conspired to fix prices.

A

Varni contends that the admitted conspirators and Cargill used the industry's trade association, the European Citric Acid Manufacturers Association ("ECAMA"), as a vehicle for conducting illegal conspiratorial activities. The claim, in a nutshell, is that ECAMA functioned as a front organization for conspiratorial activities.

ECAMA held semi-annual meetings that were attended, on a regular basis, by "masters" (the term used by the conspirators to describe high-level executives involved in the conspiracy who negotiated the broad terms of the conspiracy) and "sherpas" (lower-level corporate executives responsible for implementing the details of the conspiracy), among others. Varni argues that these meetings provided an opportunity for competitors to reach illegal agreements and that it is unlikely that these meetings were legitimate in light of the fact that many of those attending ECAMA meetings were active players in the conspiracy.

Having reviewed the record independently, however, we agree with the district court that there is no evidence to support Varni's theory that these meetings were used to pursue illegal [19] ends. Although the evidence makes clear that representatives of the admitted conspirators gathered in "unofficial" meetings to fix prices and to allocate market shares - often in the same city as, and within a few days of, officially scheduled ECAMA meetings - there is no evidence that illegal activities took place during ECAMA meetings attended by Cargill representatives. Nor is there evidence that Cargill participated in any of the "unofficial" meetings. Instead, the apparently uncontested testimony of Hans Hartmann, president of H&R and a master in the conspiracy, was to the contrary: that official ECAMA meetings were legitimate and that the illegal activities took place in separate, non-ECAMA meetings. According to Hartmann, the ECAMA gatherings merely provided a convenient excuse for the conspirators to be in the same city at the same time.

Lacking evidence that the admitted conspirators and Cargill negotiated or reached price-fixing agreements during ECAMA meetings, Varni alleges that the citric acid manufacturers used ECAMA as a mechanism for negotiating illegal agreements with Chinese citric acid producers, whose expanding market share had caused increasing concern among [20] ECAMA members. Varni cites the following evidence: (1) that ECAMA gathered information about Chinese citric acid producers; (2) that ECAMA commissioned a study of [*1098] "the Chinese situation as to location, production, distribution, prices"; (3) that ECAMA held a meeting to discuss a report on Chinese citric acid producers; (4) that an executive of Gadot Petrochemical Industries, Ltd. ("Gadot") circulated a memorandum advising ECAMA to correspond with Chinese citric acid producers to "stabilize and regulate Chinese production and exports"; and (5) that handwritten notes of an ADM employee at a March 1994 ECAMA working group meeting contained the following statement - "Undertaking is a confidential agreement to maintain price. Producers must police."³

[21] We have little trouble concluding that the first three pieces of evidence do not tend to exclude the possibility of legitimate behavior. Gathering information about pricing and competition in the industry is standard fare for trade associations. If we allowed conspiracy to be inferred from such activities alone, we would have to allow an inference of conspiracy whenever a trade association took almost any action. As the Supreme Court has recognized, however, trade associations often serve legitimate functions, such as providing information to industry members, conducting research to further the goals of the industry, and promoting demand for products and services. See, e.g., Maple Flooring Mfrs. Ass'n v. United States, 268 U.S. 563, 567, 69 L. Ed. 1093, 45 S. Ct. 578 (1925).

At first glance, the last two pieces of evidence appear more ominous. The Gadot memorandum suggests an illegal course of conduct - that ECAMA contact the Chinese producers and agree to stabilize prices. However, minutes of an ECAMA meeting indicate that the suggestion "was quickly overviewed and it was decided not to pay attention to that message for most of the information contained in it [22] [was] against the spirit of the anti-trust law." It would not be reasonable to infer that Cargill engaged in illegal activities merely from evidence that an illegal course of action was suggested but immediately rejected.⁴ Finally, the handwritten notes that constitute the fifth piece of evidence were taken at a meeting at which Cargill was not present. Thus, even if we interpret the notes as Varni asks us to, it would nevertheless not be reasonable to infer from such notes that Cargill conspired to fix prices.

B

Varni argues that, even if ECAMA was not directly used as a mechanism for fixing prices, it served as a front organization for the illegal distribution [23] of detailed, firm-specific information on citric acid production and sales, information which facilitated the policing of agreed-upon market share allocations.

ECAMA collected figures on production and sales from each of its members, audited this information on an annual basis, and produced statistics aggregated by country on citric acid production and sales. ECAMA members reported production and sales information to an independent agent of ECAMA, who distributed information aggregated by country to members. The reason that only aggregate statistics were distributed was to preserve the confidentiality of individual members' sales and production figures. It is uncontested that these activities served the legitimate purpose of informing members of worldwide citric acid conditions and were, in themselves, wholly legal. Cargill vigorously [*1099] maintains that ECAMA distributed only aggregate information.

Varni contends, however, that ECAMA engaged in the additional illegal step of distributing firm-specific data to each member firm so that they could verify that all conspirators were adhering to agreed-upon market shares. The only evidence produced by Varni in support of its allegation [24] that members received firm-specific information is a table with detailed, firm-specific market share information found in Cargill's business records. Although Varni asserts that this information could have come only from ECAMA, Cargill maintains that these figures were generated from its own internal market research, and Varni has offered no evidence to the contrary. Moreover, the only other evidence in the record relating to this issue is Hartmann's testimony that the admitted conspirators policed their conspiracy by exchanging sales and production figures on a monthly basis by telephone, which clearly supports Cargill's position.

³ Varni also attempts to rely on a search warrant affidavit by FBI Agent Brian Shepard, which reports what a witness had told the FBI agent that a master had told the witness. The district court did not abuse its discretion in deciding not to consider this evidence because it was hearsay. See Quevedo v. Trans-Pacific Shipping, Inc., 143 F.3d 1255, 1258 (9th Cir. 1998).

⁴ Importantly, we note that Varni's theory of the case is that Cargill conspired with the admitted conspirators to fix prices and to allocate market shares amongst themselves. Varni has not articulated a conspiracy theory wherein Cargill or the admitted conspirators actually conspired with Chinese producers to fix prices or to allocate market shares.

Lacking solid evidence that ECAMA ever disclosed firm-specific information to members, Varni falls back upon its argument that such an inference is reasonable in light of the fact that ECAMA hired auditors to verify the information submitted by members. According to Varni, the only conceivable reason ECAMA would have had to hire an independent firm to audit production and sales data is to allow conspirators to police their price-fixing conspiracy.

Cargill, however, offers a legitimate explanation - that the auditing process served the perfectly legal purpose [25] of guaranteeing the reliability of the aggregate statistics on worldwide market conditions that ECAMA distributed to members. Cargill joined ECAMA to get "a more accurate picture of world supply/demand conditions." Cargill, like the other firms, valued having accurate information on market conditions throughout the world, because such information was being used to make strategic business decisions. If any ECAMA member submitted inaccurate data (whether intentionally or not), the resulting aggregate statistics would be inaccurate. Decisions made on the basis of inaccurate data are, of course, likely to be sub-optimal. If firms had to worry about whether their competitors were submitting accurate information, they would likely have been less willing to rely on the information distributed by ECAMA in making strategic business decisions. Auditing eliminated this worry.

Applying the legal framework outlined in Part II, we conclude that (1) Cargill's participation in an organization that collected and audited members' production and sales figures to calculate and distribute aggregate market statistics is as consistent with legitimate behavior as with conspiratorial behavior, and (2) [26] Varni has failed to produce evidence tending to exclude the possibility that Cargill acted independently.

C

Lacking evidence that ECAMA itself served illegal ends, Varni falls back upon the argument that Cargill's decision to join ECAMA in the first place constitutes indirect evidence that Cargill was a participant in the citric acid conspiracy. Its theory is the same here as with much of the other evidence - that Cargill's behavior was inconsistent with its own self-interest and that, since no non-conspiring rational actor would have decided to do what Cargill did, Cargill must have been conspiring.

Cargill asserts that it joined ECAMA to obtain accurate information on worldwide market conditions in the citric acid industry, which it valued because it was considering expanding into foreign markets. In joining, Cargill believed that information on worldwide supply and demand in the citric acid industry would assist it in deciding which markets to enter, when to enter them, and how best to do so.

Varni, however, maintains that the costs of joining ECAMA far outweighed any [*1100] benefits, such that Cargill must have received some other (i.e., conspiracy-related) benefit from joining. [27] The costs relate to Cargill's obligation, as an ECAMA member, to disclose sales and production information to an independent agent of ECAMA who would calculate the aggregate statistics distributed to members. Cargill itself concedes that it considered the danger that its production and sales figures would fall into the hands of competitors to be a drawback of joining ECAMA. Varni argues that, on the benefits side, Cargill gained little from joining ECAMA because ECAMA's focus was on the European citric acid market and Cargill did not compete in that market.

In response, Cargill points to the uncontested evidence in the record that it did explicitly weigh the costs and benefits of joining ECAMA and did take steps to assure that its data would be kept as confidential as possible. When ECAMA and Cargill representatives met in February 1993 to negotiate and discuss terms of membership, Robert Simpson, a Cargill executive, conveyed Cargill's concerns about joining ECAMA. Simpson stated that he recognized that, as an ECAMA member, Cargill would have to disclose production and sales information to ECAMA so that ECAMA could compute aggregate statistics, but wanted to be absolutely [28] sure that Cargill-specific figures would not fall into the hands of competitors. In a letter of March 12, 1999, ECAMA's Secretary responded, explaining that Cargill's data would be kept confidential and that only aggregate market data would be provided to other firms. The Secretary did, however, acknowledge that when Cargill joined ECAMA, ECAMA members would be able to derive a one-time estimate of Cargill's sales and production figures by comparing the pre-Cargill figures with the new figures after Cargill's joinder, with the difference roughly equaling Cargill's sales and production figures.

Simpson evaluated the costs and benefits of joining ECAMA in an internal memorandum. By joining ECAMA, Cargill would get a better picture of world supply and demand conditions, which would be of increasing importance as Cargill expanded worldwide. In addition, Cargill stood to benefit from ECAMA's work on product development and other industry-related matters. Simpson noted that "the only drawback to ECAMA membership [was] disclosure of Cargill's sales volume and production capacity," but concluded that this drawback was minimal because, "after several detailed discussions with ECAMA, I feel [29] comfortable with the confidentiality of Cargill trade data and ECAMA's position on national competition laws (antitrust)." Weighing the costs against the benefits, Simpson recommended that Cargill join ECAMA, and Cargill subsequently did so in May 1993.

To the extent that Cargill's decision is consistent with conspiratorial behavior, the evidence is equally well, if not better, interpreted as a decision in Cargill's own independent self-interest. Cargill offered a sound reason for joining ECAMA, and, importantly, Varni's evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility that Cargill, acting independently, reasonably concluded that the benefits of membership outweighed the costs. Varni's theory might be validated if information on worldwide market conditions were truly useless to Cargill, but this information was valuable because Cargill was considering expanding abroad. Finally, we note that Varni's argument that information on worldwide market conditions was worthless to Cargill is inconsistent with its attacks on Cargill for not expanding operations rapidly enough outside of the United States. See infra Part III.D.

D

Varni argues that Cargill's failure to expand its production [30] capacity more rapidly than it did constitutes circumstantial evidence that it was conspiring to fix prices. When it entered the citric acid market, Cargill's production facility had an annual production capacity of 56 million pounds. In 1992, Cargill expanded capacity [*1101] to 80 million pounds. In March 1992, Cargill issued a press release announcing that it would double capacity to 160 million pounds per year. Sometime in or before October 1992, however, Cargill decided to increase capacity from 80 million to only 120 million pounds.⁵ Varni contends that Cargill's decision to expand capacity by 50 percent rather than by 100 percent is circumstantial evidence that Cargill was conspiring to fix prices and allocate market share.

The timing of this decision, however, does not fit with Varni's theory of the conspiracy. Varni [31] contends that Cargill was a vigorous competitor until it turned conspirator in 1993, but the decision to expand capacity to 120 million rather than 160 million pounds was made by late 1992. Because "the factual context renders [appellants'] claim implausible," no reasonable factfinder could conclude from this evidence that Cargill was part of the conspiracy. Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587.

Moreover, Cargill did expand rapidly. It increased its annual production capacity from 56 million to 80 million and then to 120 million - in only a matter of years. Faulting a company for expanding too slowly where it doubled capacity in a few years would subject countless strategic business decisions to second-guessing by courts. Courts have recognized that firms must have broad discretion to make decisions based on their judgments of what is best for them and that business judgments should not be second-guessed even where the evidence concerning the rationality of the challenged activities might be subject to reasonable dispute. See Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 49-53; Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 662 \(7th Cir. 1987\). [32]⁶ Cargill has explained why it did not expand even more rapidly: it was concerned that an excessively rapid expansion in citric acid supply would undermine prices and wanted to avoid precipitating a costly price war as it had done when it first entered the citric acid market (incurring substantial losses as a result).

⁵ This expansion was completed by 1994. Cargill also implemented improvements such as installing a liquid extraction recovery process, which increased the efficiency of the manufacturing process.

E

Varni contends that Cargill "decided" to stop increasing its market share in 1993, which only a conspirator would have done. We note, as an initial matter, HN11⁶ that it is not reasonable to infer that a firm is engaging in illegal activities merely from the fact that it failed to continue to increase market share. If a conspiracy could be inferred so easily, then no firm against whom an antitrust claim is levied would ever be entitled to summary judgment unless it continually increased its market share. In light of the fact that firms enjoy discretion in 33 exercising business judgment, see supra Part III.D, such a rule of law would be untenable.

In any case, there is no evidence in the record supporting Varni's claim that Cargill's market share flattened after 1993. Varni attempts to rely on market share statistics contained in an internal Cargill document cited in the report of its economic expert. See infra n.9. That document, however, was not included as part of the summary judgment record. To be considered in a motion for summary judgment, "documents must be authenticated by and attached to an affidavit that meets the requirements of [\[Federal Rule of Civil Procedure\] 56\(e\)](#) and the affiant must be a person through whom the exhibits could be admitted into evidence." Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1550-51 \(9th Cir. 1989\) (internal quotation marks omitted). The document on which Varni relies for its market share figures was not submitted as part of the [\[*1102\]](#) summary judgment record, and thus we do not consider it.

Varni attempts to get this document in through the back door. First, it argues that this data is admissible because it is discussed in an expert report which was part 34 of the record. The law is clear, however, that HN12⁷ an expert report cannot be used to prove the existence of facts set forth therein. See Paddock v. Dave Christensen, Inc., 745 F.2d 1254, 1261-62 \(9th Cir. 1984\); see also Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 242, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 \(1993\) ("Expert testimony is useful as a guide to interpreting market facts, but it is not a substitute for them."); Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1436 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (same). Varni makes the alternative argument that the expert report can be used to show the truth of facts stated therein because it is a summary of the data admissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 1006. Varni, however, has failed to show that the underlying document that it neglected to attach as evidence to its opposition motion qualifies as a voluminous writing that cannot be conveniently examined. See Fed. R. Evid. 1006 ("The contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation.").

Because there 35 is no evidence in the record establishing that Cargill's market share was constant between 1993 and 1995,⁷ any inference founded upon that factual assertion - even one drawn by an economic expert - is necessarily unreasonable. See Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 242 HN13⁸ ("When an expert opinion is not supported by sufficient facts to validate it in the eyes of the law, or when indisputable record facts contradict or otherwise render the opinion unreasonable, it cannot support a jury's verdict.").

F

Varni argues that the fact that Cargill's list prices mirrored those of its competitors is evidence of conspiracy. A section 1 violation cannot, however, be inferred from parallel pricing alone, see Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1168; Wilcox, 815 F.2d at 526; Reserve Supply, 971 F.2d at 50, 36 nor from an industry's follow-the-leader pricing strategy, see United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U.S. 693, 708-09, 71 L. Ed. 1302, 47 S. Ct. 748 \(1927\).

⁶ For the same reason, we reject Varni's assertion that illegal conduct can be inferred from Cargill's failure to expand more rapidly in Europe.

⁷ In fact, the only market share data actually in the record - and thus the only data properly before this court - indicates that Cargill's market share continued to increase even after 1993.

Wilcox, 815 F.2d at 526. Parallel pricing is a relevant factor to be considered along with the evidence as a whole; if there are sufficient other "plus" factors, an inference of conspiracy can be reasonable. See Petroleum Prods., 906 F.2d at 441-60.

It is true that Cargill's list prices have generally been nearly identical to those of ADM and H&R. Between 1990 and 1997, ADM, H&R, and Cargill always changed list prices within a month of one another and generally did so in the same month. We must, however, consider the evidence in the record as a whole. See Continental Ore, 370 U.S. at 699. Although there appears to have been little competition in citric acid list prices, Cargill did price aggressively in actual contracts. An internal Cargill document stated its strategy of generally "support[ing] industry price increases" but "selectively competing at strategic accounts." As part of this strategy, Cargill reached agreements to supply most of the [37] citric acid needs of Coca-Cola, Pepsi, Kraft General Foods, Procter & Gamble Beverage, and Quaker Oats, and these five accounts constituted the majority of Cargill's sales.

Also relevant is Cargill's success in gaining 22 percent of the United States market share by 1995, which came largely at the expense of ADM and H&R. A May 1993 H&R internal monthly report expressed exasperation with Cargill's success, reporting [*1103] as follows: "We as a company can no longer take a position of 'maintaining our share of the business'. [sic] Why? Because we are losing! Cargill has new capacity coming on stream and they will continue to go after anyone they can get. Each time we play it conservative in our negotiations and price offerings Cargill beats us by half to one cent. Most of the time its [sic] a price issue." A second H&R internal report from 1994 on the domestic citric acid market concluded that Cargill had gained market share from ADM and H&R by consistently underpricing them. A third H&R document, dated 1995, similarly reported that "Cargill has been quite aggressive with citric price offers."

Considering the foregoing evidence together, we conclude that the evidence does not tend to [38] exclude the possibility that Cargill acted legally in its pricing decisions.

G

Varni asks the court to infer Cargill's role in the conspiracy from the fact that representatives of Cargill attended meetings and had telephone conversations with individuals who have been identified as masters and sherpas. Varni does not offer any specific details with regard to illegal discussions, but instead merely asks us to infer participation in the conspiracy from the opportunity to do so. Such meetings, at least in and of themselves, do not tend to exclude the possibility of legitimate activity. See Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 126 HN14 [+] ("Communications between competitors do not permit an inference of an agreement to fix prices unless 'those communications rise to the level of an agreement, tacit or otherwise.'") (quoting Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1013 (3d Cir. 1994)).

H

Varni argues that the fact that Cargill's files contained copies of competitors' price lists is circumstantial evidence that Cargill was conspiring with competitors to fix prices. Varni relies upon United States v. Container Corp. of America, 393 U.S. 333, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526, 89 S. Ct. 510 (1969), [39] in which the Supreme Court held that the reciprocal exchange of price information pursuant to an agreement by the defendants was concerted action sufficient to establish a price-fixing conspiracy. There is, however, a crucial difference between that case and the case before us. Unlike the plaintiffs in Container who presented evidence of an agreement to exchange pricing information, see Container, 393 U.S. at 340; accord Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 125-26, Varni has made no showing - or even any claim - that there was an agreement to exchange pricing information.

HN15 [+] Although the possession of competitor price lists is consistent with conspiracy, it does not, at least in itself, tend to exclude legitimate competitive behavior. See Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 125; Wallace, 55 F.3d at 1169; Stephen Jay Photography, Ltd. v. Olan Mills, Inc., 903 F.2d 988, 996 (4th Cir. 1990). There are many legal ways in which Cargill could have obtained pricing information on competitors. See United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441 n.16, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978); Petroleum Prods., 906 F.2d at 455 [40] ("To allow an inference of agreement from such evidence, standing alone, would have the effect of deterring competitors from obtaining information about other companies' actual retail prices, even through legitimate means. We can think of few inferences that would have a more undesirable distorting effect on market conduct."). Varni has not, for example, produced evidence tending to exclude the possibility that Cargill received these price lists legitimately from customers after they were distributed by competitors as Cargill claims.

I

Varni contends that a 1994 H&R document recommending that H&R "gain share at accounts where no significant effect on ADM, Cargill, JBL share" is circumstantial [*1104] evidence of Cargill's role in the conspiracy because H&R would have been concerned about taking market share from Cargill only if they were conspiring with one another. Cargill responds with an innocent explanation - that H&R avoided competing directly with Cargill because H&R had consistently lost when it tried to do so due to Cargill's lower prices, and that H&R apparently found it easier simply to compete with other firms instead.⁸

[41] In a similar case, plaintiffs produced what they characterized as direct evidence of a horizontal conspiracy. Upon close analysis, however, this court concluded that such evidence could be interpreted as evidence of a horizontal conspiracy but also could be construed in a benign light. We held that, in such a situation, the purported "smoking gun" was not sufficient in itself to preclude summary judgment because evidence as consistent with legitimate behavior as illegal behavior cannot independently support an inference of conspiracy. See Richards, 810 F.2d at 903-04.

The Third Circuit recently reached a similar conclusion when it was confronted with purported smoking gun evidence in an antitrust price-fixing case involving the baby food industry. In Baby Food, an internal Heinz memorandum contained the following statement:

I was told by [a prospective Heinz customer] that they wanted to stock only two brands of baby food - Gerber and someone else. Their main objective was to stock the lines that were preferred by the retailers. I advised them that we would make every effort to secure a majority base of distribution. However, with our "truce" in effect, [42] our hands were tied.

Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 120. The Baby Food plaintiffs contended that the "truce" was evidence of a price-fixing conspiracy - namely, that Heinz's hands were "tied" because they had agreed not to lower prices. The Third Circuit rejected this argument and concluded instead that "the single use of the term ['truce'] in a highly competitive business environment and in the face of continuing fierce competition is as consistent with independent behavior as it is with price-fixing." Id. at 127.

Considering Varni's interpretation of this evidence in light of Cargill's explanation, we conclude that the district court did not err in ruling that this evidence did not tend to exclude the possibility that Cargill was acting lawfully.

J

Varni also cites scattered evidence from 1991 and 1992 which purportedly supports an inference that Cargill was a conspirator. In its briefs, however, Varni conceded that "until mid-1993, Cargill competed with the Admitted Conspirators." At oral argument, Varni argued that Cargill joined the conspiracy in October 1992 - when Cargill indicated its receptiveness to joining ECAMA - rather than [43] in May 1993 - when Cargill actually joined ECAMA. Even under this revised theory, all circumstantial evidence pre-dating October 1992 is irrelevant because it does not comport with Varni's theory that Cargill joined the conspiracy in October 1992.

K

⁸This document is not direct evidence of conspiracy because there remains a gap between the document and the conclusion that Cargill was a conspirator, a gap that can be bridged only by making some sort of inference. See Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 120-21.

Varni points to the trial testimony of ADM employee Barrie Cox in a criminal proceeding involving a price-fixing conspiracy in the lysine industry, in which Cox stated that he had discussions regarding the "bidding price for certain [citric acid] accounts" with someone from Cargill, and maintains that Cox's testimony constitutes direct evidence of price-fixing by Cargill. Cox's testimony at the lysine trial does not constitute direct evidence, however, because it still requires an inference that the price discussions were conspiratorial in nature. Furthermore, Cox's trial testimony, [*1105] not subjected to cross-examination, does not possess the requisite specificity to withstand summary judgment. See Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 125 ("Evidence of sporadic exchanges of shop talk among field representatives who lack pricing authority is insufficient to survive summary judgment.") (citing Krehl v. Baskin Robbins Ice Cream Co., 664 F.2d 1348, 1357 (9th Cir. 1982)). [44]

Subsequent to oral argument in this case, Varni filed a request for judicial notice of and motion to supplement the record with the government's sentencing memorandum in the lysine conspiracy case. Varni relies in particular on an FBI investigative report attached to the sentencing memorandum, which summarizes statements allegedly made by ADM employee Cox in an FBI interview. According to the report, Cox claimed that he had discussions with Cargill employee William Gruber regarding the bidding price for specific citric acid accounts. Varni argues that Cox's statements, as described in the FBI report, constitute specific, direct evidence of price-fixing by Cargill in the citric acid industry.

Cargill has vigorously opposed Varni's request for judicial notice, offering several arguments as to why the substance of Cox's FBI interview statements is not a proper subject for judicial notice. Cargill makes the following arguments: (1) Cox's statements in the FBI report are inadmissible "triple hearsay"; (2) the statements are inadmissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 403 because they lack probative value; (3) as a general rule, the summary judgment record cannot be supplemented on appeal [45] and is limited to material before the district court; and (4) under Federal Rule of Evidence 201, only facts "not subject to reasonable dispute" can be proper subjects of judicial notice, and Cox's statements fail to satisfy this requirement. The arguments offered by Cargill against Varni's request for judicial notice possess considerable force.

We need not resolve the dispute over whether judicial notice of this evidence would be proper, however, because the documents Varni seeks to add to the record would not change the result in this case, for several reasons. First, the documents support Cargill's theory that Cargill was not part of the "Group of Four" or the "Group of Five" (the terms used by the citric acid conspirators in referring to themselves). Second, Cox's statements in the FBI report show, at best, that Cox engaged in sporadic price discussions with one individual at Cargill, which evidence is neither sufficient to survive summary judgment under Baby Food nor probative of the industry-wide conspiracy alleged by Varni. Third, the documents upon which Varni seeks to rely do not comport with Varni's theory that Cargill joined the conspiracy when it joined ECAMA in May [46] 1993, since the FBI report on which Varni relies makes clear that the conspirators considered asking Cargill to join the conspiracy in 1995 - some two years after Cargill joined ECAMA. In sum, even if we were to grant Varni's request for judicial notice, the new evidence would not alter the outcome because it appears to be inconsistent with Varni's theory of the case.

L

Applying the legal framework set forth in Matsushita and developed through several subsequent cases in this circuit, we have concluded that none of the various pieces of evidence offered by Varni supports a reasonable inference that Cargill conspired to fix prices because none of the evidence, when considered individually, tends to exclude the possibility that Cargill acted independently.⁹ The crucial question, [*1106] however, is whether the evidence considered as a whole can support an inference of conspiracy on Cargill's part. As we stated at the outset of this analysis, such an inference may still be plausible when looking, as we must, at the big picture. Summing the iota up, of course, makes it more difficult to say whether a reasonable factfinder could conclude that Cargill was more likely than not a conspirator, [47] especially in light of the fact that this case is unique in that several citric acid manufacturers have already admitted to conspiring about prices.

⁹ Varni argues that the reports of its expert economist, Robert G. Harris, mandate the denial of Cargill's summary judgment motion. Harris concluded that a company acting independently would not have done many of the things that Cargill did. Purported to be irrational absent conspiratorial behavior on the part of Cargill were Cargill's decision to join ECAMA (the strongest piece of evidence in Harris's view), the virtual identity in list prices among citric acid producers, Cargill's failure to increase its market share between 1993 and 1995, its failure to expand its annual production capacity by more than it did, its decision not to enter the European citric acid market sooner, and the fact that, "given the number and type of known contacts - to say nothing of other possible communications - between Cargill and personnel of the admitted conspirators, it is inconceivable

[48] Considered as a whole, the evidence in the record, though it clearly shows that several citric acid producers conspired to fix prices and to allocate market shares, does not tend to exclude the possibility that Cargill acted independently - and thus does not support a reasonable inference that Cargill was involved in the citric acid price-fixing conspiracy. Cargill has offered reasonable legitimate explanations for joining ECAMA, for its strategic decisions relating to expansion, for its citric acid pricing, and for the various other pieces of evidence offered by Varni purportedly showing that Cargill engaged in price fixing. We note that all four major citric acid manufacturers admitted to conspiring to fix prices but none identified Cargill as a co-conspirator. All in all, there is no more than a scintilla of evidence that Cargill was a participant in the citric acid conspiracy, and the existence of "a scintilla of evidence of concerted, collusive conduct" is not sufficient for Varni to overcome Cargill's summary judgment motion. Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 137.¹⁰ Thus, the district court did not err in granting summary judgment in favor of Cargill.

[49] IV

Finally, we address whether the district court abused its discretion in denying Varni's motion to compel Coopers & Lybrand L.L.P. ("C&L-US") to produce various documents in its possession and in the possession of Societe Fiduciare Suisse Coopers & Lybrand ("C&L-Switzerland"), which had performed certain accounting and auditing work for ECAMA.

A

C&L-Switzerland and C&L-US are both members of Coopers & Lybrand International ("C&L International"), an association (organized under the laws of Switzerland) consisting of member accounting firms around the world (including C&L-US and C&L-Switzerland). By virtue of membership in C&L-International, member firms are allowed to utilize the Coopers & Lybrand name. Although members use the "Coopers & Lybrand" name, each firm is autonomous. Firms do not share profits or losses, nor do they have any management, authority, or control over other member firms. In addition, C&L-International does not exercise management, authority, or control over member firms. Of particular relevance to the case at hand, C&L-US does not have any economic or legal interest in C&L-Switzerland, and C&L-Switzerland has no such interest in C&L-US.

[*1107] Varni served C&L-US [50] with a subpoena to produce various documents in its possession and in the possession of C&L-Switzerland. C&L-US produced all the relevant documents in its possession and wrote a letter to C&L-Switzerland asking if it would voluntarily turn over the documents sought by Varni. C&L-Switzerland declined. Varni then filed a motion to compel C&L-US to produce C&L-Switzerland's documents. The magistrate judge ruled that, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 45(a), Varni could compel only C&L-US to produce those records in its legal control. Finding that C&L-US lacked legal control over documents held by C&L-Switzerland, the magistrate denied the motion to compel in an order subsequently adopted by the district court. Varni argues that the district court abused its discretion by denying its motion to compel.

B

that Cargill remained ignorant of the existence of the conspiracy." We have already considered all the evidence discussed by Harris, see supra Part III.A-III.L, and our conclusion that no piece of evidence tends to exclude the possibility that Cargill acted independently is not affected by the conclusory statements in the expert report to the contrary. See Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 242.

¹⁰ Because the evidence must, on summary judgment, be construed to the greatest extent reasonably possible in favor of finding an antitrust violation, rare is the antitrust case in which there is absolutely no evidence which could support some inference of an antitrust violation.

HN16[] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require a party served with a subpoena for records to produce those records that are in its "possession, custody or control." Fed. R. Civ. P. 45\(a\). The documents in question are neither in the possession nor custody of C&L-US. Thus, the only question before us is whether C&L-US has "control" over documents in the possession of C&L-Switzerland.HN17[]

[51] "Control is defined as the legal right to obtain documents upon demand." United States v. International Union of Petroleum & Indus. Workers, 870 F.2d 1450, 1452 \(9th Cir. 1989\) ("International Union"). In International Union, the Department of Labor had served a subpoena on the International Union of Petroleum and Industrial Workers ("IUPIW"), seeking records from local unions affiliated with IUPIW. The court concluded that IUPIW lacked legal control over documents in the possession of local unions because IUPIW and each local union were separate entities under the law and because the contract governing the union relationship did not expressly give IUPIW the right to obtain the records of local unions upon demand. See id. at 1452-53. Although there was a theoretical possibility that IUPIW could dissolve a local union and thereby gain access to the documents of the dissolved union, the court deemed this remote possibility insufficient to give IUPIW "control" for purposes of Federal Rule 45\(a\). The court emphasized that HN18[] proof of theoretical control is insufficient; a showing of actual control is required. See id. at 1453-54. [52]

Varni concedes - as it must - that the district court's ruling was correct under an application of the legal control test, because there is no dispute that C&L-US lacks the legal ability to obtain documents from C&L-Switzerland. Just as IUPIW and the local unions were separate entities under the law, so are C&L-US and C&L-Switzerland. Also as in International Union, there is no contract giving C&L-US the right to compel C&L-Switzerland to furnish it with documents in C&L-Switzerland's possession.

Recognizing that the district court's ruling is entirely consistent with International Union, Varni urges this court to reject the legal control test used in International Union. It asks us instead to define "control" in a manner that focuses on the party's practical ability to obtain the requested documents and argues that International Union does not foreclose the application of this practical-ability-to-obtain-documents test, because International Union's decision to apply the legal control test rather than the practical-ability-to-obtain-documents test is purportedly "an unexamined assumption," which stare decisis does not compel the present court to follow.

[53] Even if International Union does not conclusively settle the question, we conclude - consistently with all of our sister circuits who have addressed the issue - that the legal control test is the proper standard under Rule 45. See Cochran Consulting, Inc. v. Uwatec USA, Inc., 102 F.3d 1224, 1229-30 \(Fed. Cir. 1996\); [In re Bankers Trust Co., 61 F.3d 465, 469 \[*1108\] \(6th Cir. 1995\)](#); Chaveriat v. Williams Pipe Line Co., 11 F.3d 1420, 1426 \(7th Cir. 1993\); Gerling Int'l Ins. Co. v. Commissioner, 839 F.2d 131, 140-41 \(3d Cir. 1988\); Searock v. Stripling, 736 F.2d 650, 653 \(11th Cir. 1984\). Ordering a party to produce documents that it does not have the legal right to obtain will oftentimes be futile, precisely because the party has no certain way of getting those documents. Varni claims that C&L-US has the practical ability to obtain documents from C&L-Switzerland because C&L-Switzerland has voluntarily furnished C&L-US with documents and information in the past. With respect to the ECAMA documents, however, C&L-US asked C&L-Switzerland to produce those documents, but C&L-Switzerland refused. There is no [54] mechanism for C&L-US to compel C&L-Switzerland to produce those documents, and it is not clear how Varni wants C&L-US to go about getting the ECAMA documents, since C&L-Switzerland could legally - and without breaching any contract - continue to refuse to turn over such documents. Because C&L-US does not have legal control over C&L-Switzerland's documents, Varni could not compel C&L-US to produce those documents.

V

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the district court did not err either by granting summary judgment in favor of Cargill or by denying Varni's motion to compel.

AFFIRMED.

Found. for Interior Design Educ. Research v. Savannah College of Art & Design

United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, Southern Division

September 3, 1999, Decided ; September 3, 1999, Filed

Case No. 1:98-CV-346

Reporter

73 F. Supp. 2d 829 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14194 **

FOUNDATION FOR INTERIOR DESIGN EDUCATION RESEARCH, Plaintiff, v. SAVANNAH COLLEGE OF ART AND DESIGN, Defendant.

Disposition: [\[1\]](#) Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss Counterclaims (docket no. 51) and Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss First Amendment to Count V of Defendant's Counterclaims (docket no. 67) GRANTED. Defendant's counterclaims DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

Core Terms

accreditation, Sherman Act, relevant market, market power, antitrust, counterclaims, interior design, decisions, common law, fraud claim, allegations, cases, common law claim, motion to dismiss, anticompetitive, discovery, commerce, education program, due process, deferential, faculty, motive, breach of fiduciary duty, substantial evidence, anti trust law, certification, capricious, consumers, prestige, products

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

An action may be dismissed if the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The moving party for a dismissal on the ground that the pleading did not state a claim or cause of action has the burden of proving that no claim exists.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

73 F. Supp. 2d 829, *829LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14194, 1

HN3 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

Although a complaint is to be liberally construed, the complaint must contain more than bare assertions of legal conclusions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN4 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court must presume all factual allegations in the complaint to be true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN5 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court need not accept unwarranted factual inferences.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Dismissal is proper only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Immunity

HN7 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Dismissal is proper if the complaint fails to allege an element necessary for relief or when a successful affirmative defense or other bar to relief appears on the face of the complaint, such as the absolute immunity of a defendant.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN8 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

A complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN9[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The governing precept is that while the plaintiff's facts must be accepted as alleged, this does not automatically extend to bald assertions, subjective characterizations, and legal conclusions. The factual allegations must be specific enough to justify dragging a defendant past the pleading threshold.

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Informal Agency Action

Education Law > Administration & Operation > Career & Technical Schools

Governments > Fiduciaries

HN10[Courts, Common Law

Courts that have considered common law claims as part of a dispute over denial of accreditation have uniformly held that decisions by accrediting bodies should be analyzed as administrative decisions rather than as traditional common law claims.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Informal Agency Action

HN11[Agency Adjudication, Informal Agency Action

Accrediting bodies are not engaged in commercial transactions for which state-law contract principles are natural matches.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Informal Agency Action

HN12[Agency Adjudication, Informal Agency Action

Principles of federal administrative law supply the right perspective for review of accrediting agencies' decisions.

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Governments > Fiduciaries

HN13[Courts, Common Law

73 F. Supp. 2d 829, *829LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14194, 1

A plaintiff could only maintain a claim under breach of fiduciary duty and violation of an association's constitution and bylaws if the decision by the association was arbitrary, capricious, or discriminatory.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

HN14 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The proscriptions of the Sherman Act are tailored for the business world, not for the noncommercial aspects of the liberal arts and the learned professions. In these contexts, an incidental restraint of trade, absent an intent or purpose to affect the commercial aspects of the profession, is not sufficient to warrant application of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is possible to conceive of restrictions on eligibility for accreditation that could have little other than a commercial motive; and as such, antitrust policy would presumably be applicable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Absent commercial motives, the process of accreditation is an activity distinct from the sphere of commerce; it goes rather to the heart of the concept of education itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN17 [] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

Anticompetitive effect on the market is necessary unless the action at issue is found to be a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

73 F. Supp. 2d 829, *829LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14194, 1

HN18 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A per se analysis applies only to agreements or actions which, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming value, are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Colleges & Universities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Higher Education & Professional Associations, Colleges & Universities

Because the rule of reason applies, in order to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiff must allege an injury to competition in the marketplace.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A defendant must have market power before its conduct can be shown to have an adverse effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN21 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Unless an antitrust plaintiff alleges the existence of market power, the complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market power must be alleged in more than vague and conclusory terms to prevent the dismissal of the complaint on a defendant's Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

73 F. Supp. 2d 829, *829LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14194, 1

HN23 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Dismissal is appropriate if the definition of the relevant market in the complaint is implausible or not tenable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN24 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The relevant market, for antitrust purposes, is composed of products or services that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use, and qualities considered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN25 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Courts have repeatedly rejected efforts to define markets by price variances or product quality variances. Such distinctions are meaningless where the differences are actually a spectrum of price and quality differences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN26 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Stigma or loss of prestige to an entity that is denied accreditation or certification of its service or product does not constitute an injury to competition under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > Professional Associations

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Negotiable Instruments > Discharge & Payment > Discharge of Secondary Obligors

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Negotiable Instruments > Enforcement > Joint & Several Instruments

HN27 Higher Education & Professional Associations, Professional Associations

When a trade association provides information, or gives a seal of approval, but does not constrain others to follow its recommendations, it does not violate the antitrust laws.

Counsel: For FOUNDATION FOR INTERIOR DESIGN EDUCATION RESEARCH, plaintiff: Douglas W. Van Essen, Bruce Anthony Courtade, Law, Weathers & Richardson, Grand Rapids, MI.

For SAVANNAH COLLEGE OF ART AND DESIGN, defendant: David L. Harrison, Tolley, VandenBosch, Walton, Korolewicz, et al, Grand Rapids, MI.

73 F. Supp. 2d 829, *829LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14194, 1

For SAVANNAH COLLEGE OF ART AND DESIGN, counter-claimant: David L. Harrison, Tolley, VandenBosch, Walton, Korolewicz, et al, Grand Rapids, MI.

For FOUNDATION FOR INTERIOR DESIGN EDUCATION RESEARCH, counter defendant: Bruce Anthony Courtade, Law, Weathers & Richardson, Grand Rapids, MI.

Judges: GORDON J. QUIST, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: GORDON J. QUIST

Opinion

[*831] OPINION

Plaintiff, Foundation for Interior Design Education Research ("FIDER"), has sued Defendant, Savannah College of Art and Design ("Savannah College"), pursuant to the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202, for a declaratory judgment that FIDER's [*2] decision to deny accreditation to Savannah College was in accordance with FIDER's own procedures, supported by substantial evidence, and not arbitrary or capricious. In an Opinion and Order dated December 21, 1998, this Court entered a declaratory judgment in favor of FIDER. See Foundation for Interior Design Educ. Research v. Savannah College of Art and Design, 39 F. Supp. 2d 889, 890-91 \(W.D. Mich. 1998\)(hereinafter "FIDER").

Savannah College has brought counterclaims against FIDER, alleging breach of contract, violation of common law due process, breach of fiduciary duty, antitrust violations under Michigan and federal law, and fraud arising out of FIDER's denial of accreditation. This matter is before the Court on FIDER's Motion to Dismiss Counterclaims.

Facts

The Court adopts the statement of facts from its previous opinion. See FIDER, 39 F. Supp. 2d at 891-93. The Court also reiterates that it has held that:

In acting to deny accreditation to the interior design program at Savannah College of Art and Design, Plaintiff FIDER followed its own procedures; those procedures were fair and impartial; FIDER's decision was supported [*3] by substantial evidence in the record upon which the FIDER Board of Trustees acted; and FIDER did not otherwise act in an arbitrary, capricious, or wrongful manner.

Id. at 890-91.

Standard

HN1 An action may be dismissed if the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Fed. R. Civ. P. HN2 12(b)(6). The moving party has the burden of proving that no claim exists. HN3 Although a complaint is to be liberally construed, the complaint must contain more than bare assertions of legal conclusions. See Allard v. Weitzman \(In re DeLorean Motor Co.\), 991 F.2d 1236, 1240 \(6th Cir. 1993\). HN4 The court must presume all factual allegations in the complaint to be true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. [See 2 James Wm. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice P 12.34\[1\]\[b\] \(3d ed. 1997\).](#) HN5 The court need not, however, accept unwarranted factual inferences. See Morgan v. Church's Fried Chicken, 829 F.2d 10, 12 \(6th Cir. 1987\). HN6 Dismissal is proper "only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 2232, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 \(1984\). [*4]

HN7 Dismissal is also proper if the complaint fails to allege an element necessary for relief or "when a successful affirmative defense or other bar to relief appears on the face of the complaint, such as the absolute immunity of a defendant . . ." 2 James Wm. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice PP 12.34[4][a],[b] (3d ed. 1997).

[*832]

In practice, HN8 "a . . . complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory."

Allard, 991 F.2d at 1240 (quoting Scheid v. Fanny Farmer Candy Shops, Inc., 859 F.2d 434, 436 (6th Cir. 1988)).

The standard for dismissal was summarized recently in DM Research, Inc. v. College of American Pathologists, 170 F.3d 53 (1st Cir. 1999), an antitrust case, which states:

HN9 The governing precept . . . is that while the plaintiff's "facts" must be accepted as alleged, this does not automatically extend to "bald assertions, subjective characterizations, and legal conclusions . . . The factual allegations must be specific enough to justify 'dragging a defendant past the pleading threshold.'"

[5] DM Research, 170 F.3d at 55 (quoting Gooley v. Mobil Oil Corp., 851 F.2d 513, 514 (1st Cir. 1998)(citation omitted)(alterations in original)).

Analysis

I. Common law counterclaims

Savannah College alleges five common law counterclaims: (1) breach of contract; (2) violation of common law procedural due process; (3) violation of common law substantive due process; (4) breach of fiduciary duty; and (5) fraud. HN10 Courts that have considered common law claims as part of a dispute over denial of accreditation have uniformly held that decisions by accrediting bodies should be analyzed as administrative decisions rather than as traditional common law claims. For example, in Chicago School of Automatic Transmissions, Inc. v. Accreditation Alliance of Career Schools and Colleges, 44 F.3d 447 (7th Cir. 1994), a case cited in this Court's Opinion of December 21, 1998, the plaintiff, Chicago School of Automatic Transmissions, argued that the denial of accreditation by defendant was a breach of contract under Illinois law. However, the Seventh Circuit rejected the application of state law, noting that HN11 "accrediting bodies are not [6] engaged in commercial transactions for which state-law contract principles are natural matches." Chicago School, 44 F.3d at 449. The Seventh Circuit instead concluded, after citing many of the decisions cited by this Court in its Opinion of December 21, 1998, "that HN12 principles of federal administrative law supply the right perspective for review of accrediting agencies' decisions." Id. at 450 (noting that "administrative law entails deferential review, while courts applying contract law do not defer to either of the contracting parties' views").

A similar conclusion was reached in Dietz v. American Dental Association, 479 F. Supp. 554 (E.D. Mich. 1979), another case cited in this Court's opinion of December 21, 1998. In Dietz, the plaintiff sued for breach of fiduciary duty and violation of the American Dental Association's constitution and by-laws. The court concluded that HN13 plaintiff could only maintain a claim under these common law causes of action if the decision by the association was "arbitrary, capricious, or discriminatory." Dietz, 479 F. Supp. 554 at 557.

A third case cited in this Court's prior Opinion, Transport Careers, Inc. v. National Home Study Council, 646 F. Supp. 1474 \(N.D. Ind. 1986\), [\[7\]](#) also supports this conclusion. The plaintiff in Transport Careers alleged violations of common law procedural due process, common law substantive due process, disparate treatment, and breach of fiduciary duty. The court applied the deferential standard for review of the decisions of accrediting bodies to each of plaintiff's common law claims, concluding that summary judgment in favor of defendant was appropriate because the accrediting body followed its own rules and its decision to terminate plaintiff's accreditation was supported by substantial evidence. See Transport Careers, 646 F. Supp. at 1486.

Savannah College's counsel essentially admitted at oral argument that each of the college's common law counterclaims, except [\[*833\]](#) for its fraud claim, is precluded by this Court's prior determination that FIDER followed its own procedures in denying Savannah College accreditation, that those procedures were fair and impartial, that FIDER's decision was supported by substantial evidence in the record, and that FIDER did not otherwise act in an arbitrary, capricious, or wrongful manner. The Court concludes that allowing Savannah College to proceed with these counterclaims [\[8\]](#) would sanction form over substance, allowing artful pleading to avoid the deferential standard of review uniformly applied to the review of accreditation decisions. Accordingly, Savannah College's breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, violation of common law procedural due process, and violation of common law substantive due process claims will be dismissed.

Savannah College argues that its fraud claim must be treated differently from these other common law counterclaims for two reasons: (1) in order to state a fraud claim, Savannah College must meet the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\), which provides adequate protection for FIDER and distinguishes the fraud claim from the other common law claims; and (2) none of the cases applying the deferential standard of review to common law claims arising out of a denial of accreditation have involved a fraud claim. The Court is not persuaded that the enhanced pleading requirement for a fraud claim offers any basis for treating the fraud claim differently from Savannah College's other common law claims, considering that the cases are clear "that principles of federal administrative law supply the right perspective [\[9\]](#) for review of accrediting agencies' decisions." Chicago School, 44 F.3d at 450 (applying arbitrary or unreasonable test to all common law claims complaining of denial of accreditation).

The fact that the cases dealing with common law claims arising out of a denial of accreditation have not involved an allegation of fraud by the school denied accreditation does not lead to a different result in light of this Court's prior ruling. Savannah College's fraud claim essentially alleges that: (1) it was the victim of disparate treatment by FIDER, in that it was denied accreditation while other schools were granted accreditation despite non-compliance with several of the Student Achievement Standards; and (2) it did not receive a meaningful appeal when it filed its appeal with the FIDER Board of Appeals because the FIDER Board of Trustees made the final decision regarding Savannah College's accreditation. (See 1st Am. Countercl. PP 137-145.) However, the Court already concluded in its December 21, 1998, Opinion that FIDER cannot maintain a disparate treatment claim. See FIDER, 39 F. Supp. 2d at 898-99. The Court also concluded that FIDER followed its own [\[10\]](#) procedures in denying Savannah College accreditation, and that FIDER's procedures clearly indicate that the Board of Trustees, not the Board of Appeals, makes the final decision about accreditation. See id. at 892, 896-97. Accordingly, the Court concludes that Savannah College's fraud claim merely repackages its previous claim that accreditation was wrongfully denied in an attempt to avoid the deferential standard of review uniformly applied to the review of accreditation decisions. Therefore, Savannah College's fraud claim will also be dismissed.

II. Antitrust counterclaim

Savannah College also alleges that FIDER has unreasonably restrained trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1¹ [\[11\]](#), and the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, M.C.L. § 445.772.² FIDER's [\[*834\]](#) arguments in support of dismissal of these claims are addressed below.

¹ Savannah College was granted leave to file an Amended Counterclaim on June 15, 1999, after FIDER filed its motion to dismiss counterclaims, in order to correct any deficiencies in the pleading of its antitrust counterclaim.

A. Accreditation as "trade or commerce"

FIDER's initial argument is that the denial of accreditation in this case is not "trade or commerce" governed by the Sherman Act. FIDER relies heavily on Marjorie Webster Junior College v. Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Inc., 139 U.S. App. D.C. 217, 432 F.2d 650 \(D.C. Cir. 1969\), in support of its argument. The court in Marjorie Webster began by noting that "despite the broad wording of the Sherman Act, it has long been settled that not every form of combination or conspiracy that restrains trade falls within its ambit." Marjorie Webster, 432 F.2d at 653.³ The court then explained that:

HN14[] the proscriptions of the Sherman Act were "tailored ... for the [12] business world," not for the noncommercial aspects of the liberal arts and the learned professions. In these contexts, an incidental restraint of trade, absent an intent or purpose to affect the commercial aspects of the profession, is not sufficient to warrant application of the antitrust laws.

Id. at 654 (footnotes omitted).

However, the court stopped short of granting accreditation decisions in the education field complete immunity under the Sherman Act, holding that HN15[] "it is possible to conceive of restrictions on eligibility for accreditation that could have little other than a commercial motive; and as such, antitrust policy would presumably be applicable." Id. at 654-55.⁴ The court concluded that:

HN16[] Absent such motives, however, the process of accreditation is an activity distinct from the sphere [13] of commerce; it goes rather to the heart of the concept of education itself. We do not believe that Congress intended this concept to be molded by the policies underlying the Sherman Act.

Id. at 655.

Other courts have cited Marjorie Webster with approval, prompting the authors of a recent article to conclude that "decisions involving Sherman Act challenges against accrediting associations have been consistent with this deferential view of favoring the accrediting associations." Jeffrey C. Sun & Philip T.K. Daniel, The Sherman Act Antitrust Provisions and Collegiate Action: Should There be a Continued Exception for the Business of the University?, 25 J.C. & U.L. 451, 469 (1999)(citing Marjorie Webster, [14] Brandt v. American Bar Ass'n, No. CIV. A 3:96-cv-2606 D, 1997 WL 279762 (N.D. Tex. May 15, 1997)(mem. op.), and Massachusetts Sch. of Law at Andover, Inc. v. American Bar Ass'n, 107 F.3d 1026 \(3d Cir. 1997\)). In fact, Sun and Daniel suggested that this deference is similar to the "arbitrary or unreasonable" standard of review applied to direct review of accrediting decisions. See id. (citing two cases cited in this Court's previous opinion of December 21, 1998, Wilfred Academy of Hair & Beauty Culture v. Southern Ass'n of Colleges & Schs., 957 F.2d 210, 214 \(5th Cir. 1992\) and Parsons College v. North Central Ass'n of Colleges & Secondary Schs., 271 F. Supp. 65, 72 \(N.D. Ill. 1967\)).

Savannah College does not dispute the applicability of Marjorie Webster, but rather argues that it has met the exception in Marjorie Webster allowing antitrust scrutiny of accreditation decisions with "little other than a commercial motive" by alleging that FIDER applied its accreditation [*835] standards in this case with a commercial motive, namely the commercial desire to insulate FIDER's members from competing with Savannah College [15] in the recruitment of students and faculty and in obtaining grants, scholarships, endowments, and links to professional organizations that would arise from accreditation. (See 1st Am. Countercl. PP 80, 113, 115, 118.) Savannah College argues that resolution of FIDER's purpose, motive, and intent in applying its accreditation standards in this case is a question of fact that can only be considered after allowing discovery. See Potters Med. Ctr. v. City Hosp. Ass'n, 800 F.2d 568, 572, 581 (6th Cir. 1986)(noting that "motive and intent play leading roles" when evaluating antitrust claims and that "discovery should proceed for further development of the facts").

² The parties agree that claims of unreasonable restraint of trade under the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act are analyzed exactly the same as claims of unreasonable restraint of trade under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., Blair v. Checker Cab Co., 219 Mich. App. 667, 674, 558 N.W.2d 439, 442 \(1996\).

³ The Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination ..., or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce ... is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

⁴ For example, the court noted that the Sherman Act would apply if accreditation was denied to an institution simply because it did not buy textbooks from an agreed-upon supplier who provided special discounts for association members. See Marjorie Webster, 432 F.2d at 655 n.21.

Hamilton Chapter of Alpha Delta Phi, Inc. v. Hamilton College, 128 F.3d 59 (2d Cir. 1997), is helpful in resolving this issue. The plaintiffs alleged that Hamilton College violated the Sherman Act by changing its residential policy to require all of its students to live in college-owned facilities and to purchase college-sponsored meal plans. The plaintiffs alleged that this policy was adopted for the commercial purpose of raising revenues and forcing the fraternity houses out of business, [16] allowing the college to purchase the fraternity houses at below-market prices. See Hamilton College, 128 F.3d at 66. The college moved to dismiss, arguing that its residential policy was not "trade or commerce" under the Sherman Act, but was adopted in response to evidence that fraternities were dominating social life at the college, which was leading the most talented of Hamilton's prospective female students to enroll elsewhere. See id. The plaintiffs alleged that the college's stated purpose for the new policy was a mere pretext designed to obscure the college's purely commercial purpose. See id.

The Second Circuit cited Marjorie Webster with approval in considering whether the college's residential policy was "trade or commerce" governed by the Sherman Act. However, the court also emphasized that Marjorie Webster held that an incidental restraint of trade resulting from an accreditation decision was not "trade or commerce" under the Sherman Act "absent an intent or purpose to affect the commercial aspects of the profession...." 128 F.3d at 64 (quoting Marjorie Webster, 432 F.2d at 654); see also United States v. Brown Univ., 5 F.3d 658, 667 (3d Cir. 1993) [17] (holding that the Sherman Act applies to the commercial aspects of higher education). The Second Circuit reversed the district court's dismissal of the complaint, concluding that "in the procedural posture of this case, [plaintiffs'] allegations must be accepted as true." Hamilton College, 128 F.3d at 66. Accordingly, because the plaintiffs alleged that the policy was adopted for a commercial purpose, it was reversible error to dismiss the complaint on the basis that the conduct did not involve "trade or commerce" under the Sherman Act. See id.

The Court finds that Savannah College has made a sufficient allegation of commercial intent to avoid dismissal for failure to state a claim on this ground. Savannah College has alleged that it was denied accreditation by FIDER because FIDER members sought to diminish competition that FIDER members and their institutions face for recruiting students and faculty and acquiring grants. (See 1st Am. Countercl. P 113). This is similar to the allegation of commercial purpose made by plaintiffs in Hamilton College and is sufficient to avoid dismissal. Accordingly, Plaintiff's motion to dismiss on this issue will be denied.

[18] B. Anticompetitive effect

FIDER's second argument is that Savannah College has failed to properly allege an anticompetitive effect on the market from FIDER's decision to deny accreditation to Savannah College. HN17 [+] Anticompetitive effect on the market is necessary unless the action at issue is found to be a per se violation of the Sherman Act. [*836] See, e.g., Stratmore v. Goodbody, 866 F.2d 189, 194 (6th Cir. 1989).

HN18 [+] A per se analysis applies only to "agreements or actions which, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming value, are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal" Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing, Inc., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 2617, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985)(quoting Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 518, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958)). FIDER's denial of accreditation to Savannah College does not fall in the category of an action that categorically has a "pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming value" such that a conclusive presumption that the actions violated [19] the Sherman Act should apply. No case of which this Court is aware has ever held that denial of accreditation by any type of accrediting body is a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Accreditation has pro competitive effects ("redeeming value") in that it "enhance[s] competition and promotes efficiency by clarifying and informing choices that market actors must make. Clark C. Havighurst, Accrediting and The Sherman Act, 57-AUT L. & Contemp. Probs. 199, 200 (1994). "Cases demonstrate the existence of a general presumption that 'the public interest is served by the promotion of enhanced education and training requirements.'" Sun & Daniel, supra, at 476 (quoting Sherman College of Straight Chiropractic v. American Chiropractic Ass'n, Inc., 654 F. Supp. 716, 722 (N.D. Ga. 1986)).

In this case, Savannah College has not alleged any refusal to deal nor any joint action of any kind against FIDER other than the refusal to grant accreditation. The parties agree that FIDER accreditation has substantial redeeming value. (See 8/12/99 Hr'g Tr. at 26-27.) The Court has already concluded that in this case "FIDER followed its own procedures; those procedures were [20] fair and impartial; FIDER's decision was supported by substantial evidence in the record upon which the FIDER Board of Trustees acted; and FIDER did not otherwise act in an arbitrary, capricious, or wrongful manner." FIDER, 39 F. Supp. 2d at 890-91.

The denial of accreditation by FIDER is not the type of naked restraint on the market to which a per se analysis applies. Accordingly, the Court concludes that a rule of reason analysis is appropriate in this case.

1. Market power in a relevant market

HN19[] Because the rule of reason applies, in order to state a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, Savannah College must allege an injury to competition in the marketplace. See, e.g., Valley Prods. Co. v. Landmark, 128 F.3d 398, 406 (6th Cir. 1997); Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co., 917 F.2d 1413, 1422 (6th Cir. 1990). This requires Savannah College to allege that FIDER has substantial market power in a particular market, as HN20[] "[a] defendant must have market power before its conduct can be shown to have an adverse effect on competition." Hand v. Central Transp., Inc., 779 F.2d 8, 11 (6th Cir. 1985) [21] (per curiam); see also Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 26-29, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1558, 1565-67, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984)(requiring proof of market power and holding that proof of a 30 percent share of the market, standing alone, is an insufficient basis from which to infer market power); PSI Repair Servs., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811, 818 (6th Cir. 1997)(stating that "the market power requirement is important because, without market power, a seller cannot engage in the forcing necessary to establish a § 1 violation"); Sanjuan v. American Bd. of Psychiatry & Neurology, Inc., 40 F.3d 247, 251 (7th Cir. 1995)(stating that "substantial market power is an essential ingredient of every antitrust case under the Rule of Reason"). [*837]

HN21[] "Unless an antitrust plaintiff alleges the existence of market power, the complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Health First, Inc. v. Bronson Methodist Hosp., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11007, No. 1:89-CV-1191, 1990 WL 157372, at *2 (W.D. Mich. Aug. 20, 1990)(citing Hand). HN22[] Market power "must be alleged in more than vague and conclusory terms" [22] to prevent the dismissal of the complaint on a defendant's Rule 12(b)(6) motion." Id. (citing Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802, 805 (6th Cir. 1988)). As part of its allegation that FIDER has market power, Savannah College must plead "the existence of relevant product and geographic markets in order to establish a Section 1 claim." Id. (citing Davis-Watkins Co. v. Service Merchandise, 686 F.2d 1190, 1195 (6th Cir. 1982)); see also Hand, 779 F.2d at 11 (holding that "determining whether the defendants have market power ... can only be accomplished by first defining the relevant market"). HN23[] Dismissal is appropriate if the definition of the relevant market in the complaint is "implausible" or "not tenable." See B.V. Optische v. Hologic, Inc., 909 F. Supp. 162, 172 (S.D.N.Y. 1995)(rejecting plaintiff's definition of the relevant market and dismissing the complaint because plaintiff failed to "offer an explanation" as to why the product market was defined "in such narrow terms"); Staudinger v. Educational Comm'n for Foreign Med. Graduates, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10580, No. 92 Civ. 8071, 1994 WL 410875, [23] at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 3, 1994)(dismissing complaint because relevant market was "not tenable")); E. & G. Gabriel v. Gabriel Bros., Inc., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9455, No. 93 CIV. 0894, 1994 WL 369147, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. July 13, 1994)(dismissing plaintiff's complaint because alleged market was "implausible").

Savannah College has failed to plead that FIDER has substantial market power in a relevant market. Savannah College's counterclaim defines the market as "accredited interior design education programs in the United States." (1st Am. Countercl. P 74.) If the relevant market is accredited interior design education programs, as opposed to interior design education programs generally, whether accredited or not, there is little question that FIDER had substantial market power, as it is the only organization that specifically accredits interior design education programs in the United States. (See id. P 81.)

However, the Court concludes that the relevant market is not accredited interior design education programs and that the relevant market is interior design education programs generally. Savannah College's own pleadings and arguments are inconsistent with Savannah College's [24] narrow definition of the relevant market and are consistent with the Court's conclusion.

The Supreme Court has indicated that HN24 the relevant market, for antitrust purposes, "is composed of products [or services] that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced -- price, use, and qualities considered." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 1012, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\); see also American Council of Certified Podiatric Physicians & Surgeons v. American Bd. of Podiatric Surgery, Inc., 185 F.3d 606, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 16861, 1999 WL 51 6283, at *12 (6th Cir. July 22, 1999)(noting that "the relevant market includes those products or services that are reasonably interchangeable with, as well as identical to, defendant's product"). The question facing the Court in duPont was whether the relevant market was cellophane, of which duPont had a 75 percent share, or all flexible packaging material, of which duPont's share was less than twenty percent. The Court concluded that the relevant market was all flexible packaging materials, finding that "despite cellophane's advantages it has [25] to meet competition from other materials in every one of its uses" and that "a very considerable degree of functional interchangeability exists between these products." Id. at 399, 76 S. Ct. at 1009. While not identical, the Court concluded that cellophane and other flexible packaging materials were "reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes" and were therefore [*838] part of the same relevant market under the Sherman Act. Id. at 395, 76 S. Ct. at 1007.

Savannah College admitted at oral argument that it was competing with accredited schools for the same pool of students, faculty, and staff. (See 8/12/99 Hr'g Tr. at 29.) Savannah College suggested that it was "severely crippled" in its ability to compete because of perceived differences by students, faculty, and staff in the quality of accredited versus non-accredited interior design programs. (Id.) However, HN25 "courts have repeatedly rejected efforts to define markets by price variances or product quality variances. Such distinctions are meaningless where the differences are actually a spectrum of price and quality differences." Haagen-Dazs Co. v. Double Rainbow Gourmet Ice Creams, Inc. \(In re Super Premium Ice Cream Distribution Antitrust Litig.\), 691 F. Supp. 1262, 1268 \(N.D. Cal. 1988\) [26] (emphasis added)(rejecting attempt by plaintiff to define the relevant market as "premium ice creams," because "all grades of ice creams compete with one another for customer preference" and "the relevant market is ice cream generally"); see also Murrow Furniture Galleries, Inc. v. Thomasville Furniture Indus., Inc., 889 F.2d 524, 528 \(4th Cir. 1989\)(holding that "better branded" furniture is not a relevant market distinct from the furniture market generally). Thus while students, faculty, and staff may consider whether a school is FIDER-accredited in deciding whether to attend or work at that school, the contention that accredited interior design programs actually constitute a legally separate market from non-accredited interior design programs is "implausible" and "not tenable" in light of Savannah College's admission that it has been and is continuing to compete for the same pool of students, faculty, and staff.

Because Savannah College has not alleged that FIDER has substantial market power in the relevant market of interior design programs generally, its antitrust counterclaim must be dismissed.

2. Injury to competition

Savannah College has also failed [27] to allege an injury to competition. Savannah College alleges that the denial of accreditation by FIDER has injured the marketplace by artificially reducing the number of educational choices for students, the number of teaching opportunities for professors, and the amount of competition for grants and scholarships, all resulting in a smaller output of qualified design school graduates. (See 1st Am. Countercl. PP 114-18.)

During oral argument, this Court opined that Sanjuan v. American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology, Inc., 40 F.3d 247 \(7th Cir. 1995\) seemed to be the case most analogous to the instant case. In an opinion written by a former professor of antitrust law, Frank H. Easterbrook, the Seventh Circuit held that the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology's decision to deny certification to two doctors could not, as a matter of law, "amount to an exercise of market power, which entails cutting back output in the market and thus driving up prices to consumers." Sanjuan, 40 F.3d at 251. The Seventh Circuit noted that the doctors "already are sellers in the market for psychiatric services; turning down their applications for certification [28] does not remove their output from the market and therefore does not raise prices to consumers." Id. Similarly, Savannah College or any other school is free to offer an interior design program without FIDER accreditation. In fact, Savannah College had a growing interior design program for many years prior to its voluntary decision to apply for FIDER accreditation. With refreshing candor, Savannah College's lawyer acknowledged during oral argument that if this District Court were to follow the Seventh Circuit's decision in Sanjuan, this Court would have to grant FIDER's motion to dismiss. (See 8/12/99 Hrg Tr. at 32.)

In essence, the injuries alleged by Savannah College are all injuries that result from the stigma and loss of prestige allegedly [*839] suffered by Savannah College because of the denial of accreditation by FIDER. According to Savannah College, some students, teachers, and business organizations choose not to attend, work for, or donate money to Savannah College because of the denial of accreditation by FIDER.

It is well settled that HN26 stigma or loss of prestige to an entity that is denied accreditation or certification of its service or product does not constitute [29] an injury to competition under the Sherman Act. For example, in Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. American Bar Association, 107 F.3d 1026 \(3d Cir. 1997\), the plaintiff law school was denied accreditation as an approved law school by the ABA. In granting summary judgment in favor of the defendant, the Third Circuit held that "[a] loss of prestige resulting from a refusal to approve a product or service does not alone make out an antitrust claim." Massachusetts School of Law, 107 F.3d at 1037-38.

In Consolidated Metal Products, Inc. v. American Petroleum Institute, 846 F.2d 284 \(5th Cir. 1988\), the defendant trade association delayed its decision whether or not to certify plaintiff's product for almost three years. Plaintiff alleged a conspiracy under the Sherman Act by the members of the trade association, several of whom were competitors of plaintiff. The Fifth Circuit held that even if product certification "is very important to buyer acceptance," denial of certification by a trade association does not constitute an injury to competition unless there is proof that "customers were coerced ... or otherwise constrained [30] to buy only [certified] products." Consolidated Metal Prods., 846 F.2d at 295-96.

Zavaletta v. American Bar Association, 721 F. Supp. 96 \(E.D. Va. 1989\)(mem. op.) held that the ABA's denial of accreditation to certain schools did not have any anticompetitive effect under the Sherman Act. The Court held that, other than stigma and loss of prestige suffered by an individual law school resulting from a denial of accreditation, the only effects in the market were caused by the independent decisions by many states to adopt the ABA accreditation list as their own. The stigma and loss of prestige suffered by the law school was insufficient as a matter of law to constitute injury to competition. See Zavaletta, 721 F. Supp. at 98.

In Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397 \(7th Cir. 1989\), another case authored by Judge Easterbrook, the plaintiffs alleged that an American Academy of Ophthalmology press release characterizing radial keratotomy surgery for myopia as "experimental" violated section 1 of the Sherman Act. The plaintiffs argued that the press release was issued to restrain the ability [31] of ophthalmologists to perform this surgery. In holding that there was no injury to competition under the Sherman Act, Judge Easterbrook cited Consolidated Metal Products with approval for the proposition that HN27 "when a trade association provides information ([or] gives a seal of approval) but does not constrain others to follow its recommendations, it does not violate the antitrust laws." Schachar, 870 F.2d at 399. The court went on to note that although the press release almost certainly had some effect on the demand for this surgery, the press release merely "appealed to consumers' (and third-party payors') better judgment" and that "the plaintiffs had no entitlement to consumers' favor." Id. at 400. The court explained that "if such statements should be false or misleading or incomplete or just plain mistaken, the remedy is not antitrust litigation but more speech -- the marketplace of ideas." Id.

These cases are analogous to the instant case. In this case, the effects on the market alleged by Savannah College would be caused by the voluntary decision of students, teachers, or business organizations not to do business with Savannah College [32] because it was denied FIDER accreditation. Even without FIDER accreditation, Savannah College is free to continue to offer an interior design program, and has [*840] done so. There has been no restriction of output.

Savannah College relies on two cases, Full Draw Productions v. Easton Sports, Inc., 182 F.3d 745, 1999 WL 435807 (10th Cir. 1999), and J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524 (3d Cir. 1990), for the proposition that an injury to a particular competitor can constitute injury to competition for the purpose of stating a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. However, to the extent these cases arguably stand for the proposition asserted by Savannah College, both cases are distinguishable. Full Draw involved a per se violation for which proof of adverse effect on competition and substantial market power are not required, and is therefore not applicable to this case, which involves rule of reason analysis. See Full Draw, 1999 WL 435807, at *4. Feeser involved a price discrimination claim under section 2 of the Clayton Act and is therefore wholly inapplicable to Savannah [33] College's claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act. See Feeser, 909 F.2d at 1532-33.

"It is axiomatic that the antitrust laws were passed for 'the protection of competition, not competitors'" and that an injury suffered only by the antitrust plaintiff is insufficient as a matter of law to prove anticompetitive effect in the market. Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 224, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2588-89, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993)(quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1521, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)); see also Langenderfer, 917 F.2d at 1422, 1431 (same); McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802, 812 (9th Cir. 1988)(holding that an injury to an antitrust plaintiff alone is not sufficient to prove injury to competition).

Savannah College has failed to allege injury to anyone or anything other than itself. Therefore, Savannah College has failed to allege an anticompetitive effect of the denial of accreditation necessary to avoid dismissal.

3. Further Discovery and Amendment of Complaint

This Court seriously considered allowing Savannah [34] College some discovery to establish a relevant market and anticompetitive effect. When this Court asked the College's lawyer what discovery the College would need in order have to show a relevant market and injury to competition, counsel's answer had nothing to do with showing the market or injury to competition. Rather, the College's lawyer requested, once again, discovery to show that the College was not treated fairly in comparison with other schools that had applied for accreditation. In counsel's words, although the standards are not challenged on their face, "the fix was in." (8/12/99 Hrg Tr. at 27.) The "fix was in" argument was disposed of by this Court in its prior decision. Furthermore, as Judge Easterbrook said in Schachar, even if FIDER was wrong in denying Savannah College accreditation, "the remedy is not antitrust litigation but more speech -- the marketplace of ideas." Schachar at 400.

This Court does not believe that further discovery or further amendment of Savannah College's Counterclaim will enable Savannah College to submit a legitimate claim under the antitrust laws. Accordingly, the Court will dismiss Savannah College's antitrust counterclaim with prejudice. [35] ⁵

Conclusion

⁵ The Court, therefore, does not reach FIDER's third argument that Savannah College has not alleged concerted action by the member schools that are part of FIDER.

73 F. Supp. 2d 829, *840 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14194, 35

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff's motion to dismiss counterclaims will be granted.

An Order consistent with this Opinion will be entered.

Dated: SEP - 3 1999

GORDON J. QUIST

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER

For the reasons stated in the Opinion entered on this date,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss Counterclaims (docket no. 51) and Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss First Amendment to Count V of Defendant's Counterclaims (docket no. 67) are GRANTED. Defendant's counterclaims are hereby DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

This case is concluded.

Dated: SEP - 3 1999

GORDON J. QUIST

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Merck-Medco Managed Care, LLC v. Rite Aid Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit

June 8, 1999, Argued ; September 7, 1999, Decided

No. 98-2847

Reporter

1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 21487 *; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,640

MERCK-MEDCO MANAGED CARE, LLC, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. RITE AID CORPORATION; EAGLE MANAGED CARE CORPORATION, a Subsidiary of Rite Aid Corporation; GIANT FOOD, INC.; EPIC PHARMACY NETWORK, INCORPORATED; NEIGHBORCARE PHARMACIES, INCORPORATED, Defendants-Appellees, NATIONAL PRESCRIPTION ADMINISTRATORS, INCORPORATED, Movant.

Notice: [*1] RULES OF THE FOURTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 36612.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, at Baltimore. Benson E. Legg, District Judge. (CA-96-499-L).

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

pharmacies, conspiracy, network, antitrust, summary judgment, join, conspire, tends, independent action, prescription, forecast, reimbursement rate, present evidence, district court, factors, summary judgment motion, conversations, conscious, reasonable inference, antitrust case, negotiations, restraint of trade, act independently, advertisement, manufacturers, participated, practices, discount, asserts, quantum

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN1 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The court of appeals reviews a summary judgment determination by a district court de novo. Summary judgment is appropriate when there exists no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). Movants bear the burden of initially coming forward and demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. When making a summary judgment determination, the facts and all reasonable inferences must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Movants can bear their burden either by presenting affirmative evidence, or by demonstrating that the non-movant's evidence is insufficient to establish its claim.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Once movants have met their burden of demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact regarding a summary judgment motion, the non-movants must then affirmatively demonstrate that there is a genuine issue of material fact which requires trial. There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring non-movants for a jury to return a verdict for them. The standard for summary judgment therefore mirrors the standard for judgment as a matter of law under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(a\), viz. a trial court must grant a judgment if, under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict. A trial judge faced with a summary judgment motion must ask himself not whether he thinks the evidence unmistakably favors one side or the other, but whether a fair-minded jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff on the evidence presented.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN3 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

In opposing summary judgment, the non-moving party must set forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). Inadmissible hearsay cannot be used to oppose summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

While the summary judgment standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 for an antitrust suit is the same as that for any other action, the application of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 to antitrust cases is somewhat unique. The inferences to be drawn from underlying facts on summary judgment must be viewed in a light most favorable to the non-movant. But antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN6 Sherman Act, Claims

To prove a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, plaintiff must establish: first, that there are at least two persons acting in concert and, second, that the restraint complained of constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Certain restraints on trade are per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, which presume that the questionable conduct has anticompetitive effects without comprehensive inquiry into whether the concerted action produced adverse, anticompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A plaintiff alleging conspiracy in restraint of trade must demonstrate a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Monsanto requires "something more" than independent action, and must rise to the level of a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Circumstantial & Direct Evidence

HN9 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A party may demonstrate an agreement in restraint of trade by direct evidence or circumstantial evidence. When relying upon circumstantial evidence, the range of permissible inferences that the court may draw from the evidence is limited by the plausibility of the plaintiff's theory and the danger associated with such inferences. A plaintiff may have a plausible theory, but the danger to the market or innocent participants in the market may be so great as to warrant a limitation of the inferences available to the plaintiff. Consequently, conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN10 [down arrow] Remedies, Damages

To withstand a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged competitors acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Jury Instructions > Particular Instructions > Use of Particular Evidence

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN11 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

On summary judgment motions in antitrust cases, when there is evidence of conduct that is consistent with both legitimate competition and an illegal conspiracy, courts may not infer that an illegal conspiracy has occurred without other evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

When there is no direct evidence of antitrust activity, an agreement to restrain trade may be inferred from other conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN13 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

There are two possible judicial interpretations when conduct to restrain trade is ambiguous. The first interpretation is that the suspected agreement may be found consistent with the independent conduct or a legitimate business purpose. The second interpretation is that the agreement may be consistent with an illegal agreement. To prove a violation through ambiguous conduct, proof must be offered that tends to exclude the first interpretation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Given the Monsanto/Matsushita standard, a plaintiff must discharge a twofold evidentiary burden to prove conduct in restraint of trade. First, they must establish that defendants had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. Second, plaintiff must bring forward evidence that excludes the possibility that the alleged coconspirators acted independently or based upon legitimate business purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Regarding a case alleging a conspiracy in restraint of trade, the quantum of evidence required to exclude the possibility of independent action or legitimate business purposes is directly related to the plausibility of the plaintiff's theory. If the plaintiff advances a strong, plausible theory then the quantum of evidence tending to exclude independent action is not as great as if the plaintiff advances a weak or implausible theory. Likewise, when there is a risk that the threat of antitrust liability will chill legitimate, procompetitive conduct by market participants, the quantum of evidence is also high.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

An agreement to boycott may be inferred from the business conduct of the parties. This pattern of uniform business practices is commonly referred to as "conscious parallelism. Courts may find consciously parallel behavior where a plaintiff shows: (1) that the defendants' behavior was parallel; and (2) that the defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and that this awareness was an element in their decision-making process.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Parallel behavior alone is not enough to prove a conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In order to infer a conspiracy, conscious parallelism must be accompanied by "plus factors."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN19 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

If a party establishes the existence of plus factors, a rebuttable presumption of conspiracy arises. Viewing all the evidence and taking the plus factors into consideration, the court must then determine if the evidence tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged coconspirators acted independently or based upon legitimate business purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A court should not tightly compartmentalize the evidence put forward by the nonmovant regarding a motion for summary judgment in a case alleging the existence of an agreement in restraint of trade, but instead should analyze it as a whole to see if together it supports an inference of concerted action.

Counsel: ARGUED: James Patrick Tallon, SHEARMAN & STERLING, New York, New York, for Appellant.

Lewis A. Noonberg, PIPER & MARBURY, L.L.P., Washington, D.C.; Glenn Alfredo Mitchell, STEIN, MITCHELL & MEZINES, Washington, D.C., for Appellees.

ON BRIEF: Kenneth M. Kramer, Daniel D. Edelman, SHEARMAN & STERLING, New York, New York; Thomas M. Wilson, III, John B. Isbister, Scott Patrick Burns, TYDINGS & ROSENBERG, L.L.P., Baltimore, Maryland, for Appellant.

Leonard L. Gordon, Kenneth G. Starling, Susan H. Pope, PIPER & MARBURY, L.L.P., Washington, D.C., for Appellees Rite Aid and Eagle; David U. Fierst, Andrew Beato, STEIN, MITCHELL & MEZINES, Washington, D.C., for Appellee Giant Food; Michael F. Brockmeyer, Jay I. Morstein, PIPER & MARBURY, L.L.P., Baltimore, Maryland, for Appellee Epic; Ward B. Coe, III, Pamela M. Conover, WHITEFORD, TAYLOR & PRESTON, L.L. [*2] P., Baltimore, Maryland, for Appellee NeighborCare.

Judges: Before MICHAEL, Circuit Judge, HOWARD, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of North Carolina, sitting by designation, and FRIEDMAN, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting by designation.

Opinion

OPINION

PER CURIAM:

The managed health care industry has drastically changed the way medical and pharmaceutical services are dispensed in this country. Where individuals once stopped at their local drug store to fill a prescription, people now shop almost exclusively in those stores which service the health benefit plans provided by their employers. Competition is keen over what company will administer an employer's health plan.

In September 1995, the State of Maryland awarded to the appellant, Merck-Medco Managed Care, Inc. ("Medco"), a contract to manage the prescription drug benefits program for State employees and retirees (the "Maryland Plan" or the "Plan"). Under the terms of the award, Medco was required to assemble an extensive statewide network of pharmacies which would agree to fill prescriptions at a steeply discounted rate.

The Maryland Plan was scheduled to go [*3] "live" on January 1, 1996. By mid-December 1995, the State had grown concerned about Medco's ability to put together a satisfactory network in time. On December 20, 1995, the State issued an ultimatum to Medco, requiring Medco to submit a certified list of participating pharmacies within three days. Because Medco failed to assemble a network satisfactory to the State, the State terminated Medco's contract on December 27, 1995. Ultimately, the State rebid the contract and awarded it to one of Medco's competitors.

The appellees own or represent approximately one-half of the retail pharmacies in Maryland. Four of the appellees were engaged in the retail pharmacy business in 1995. Rite Aid operated 180 pharmacies in Maryland. Giant, a supermarket, had 76 stores in Maryland and each included a pharmacy. NeighborCare operated 20 pharmacies in Maryland, all of which were located in hospitals or medical centers. EPIC is an umbrella organization that represented the interests of over 200 independently owned pharmacies. The fifth appellee, Eagle, is a wholly owned subsidiary of Rite Aid and a direct competitor of Medco. In partnership with EPIC, Eagle was an unsuccessful bidder for the Maryland [*4] contract.

Both Eagle and Medco are Pharmacy Benefits Managers ("PBM"). PBMs were created in response to the rising costs of pharmaceutical products. They seek to keep prices down by pooling claims. A PBM will contract with a plan sponsor, such as the State of Maryland, and for a fee, will manage the drug benefits program for the sponsor's employees. The PBMs put together a network of participating pharmacies. To be included in the network, the pharmacies must agree to dispense drugs at a discount. For each prescription filled, the PBM reimburses the pharmacy under a formula based on the drug's average wholesale price ("AWP") less a percentage, plus a dispensing fee. For the Maryland Plan, the network pharmacies were to be reimbursed at a rate of AWP minus 15% plus $ 2.00. The PBM that can offer the greatest price discount gains an advantage in winning the contracts of large employers.

Pharmacies can decide to either join or not join a network and numerous factors influence their decision. These factors include the number of people covered by the plan, the pharmacy's market share, the PBM's reputation for prompt payment and whether a particular network is "open" or "closed." "Open" [*5] networks permit any pharmacy to enter or exit at any time. "Closed" networks fix the membership at a certain date and no other pharmacies can join afterwards. Pharmacies are more willing to accept deep discounts in a "closed" network because they are more certain of their market share. The incentive to join an "open" network comes from an increase in volume of customers to the pharmacy who typically buy other incidental items for sale at the pharmacy, like magazines and non-prescription drugs. Increased volume is difficult to measure.

Some PBMs, like Medco, fill prescriptions by mail and, therefore, are not only administering the network but are also directly competing with the pharmacies in the network. Medco, as a subsidiary of Merck, a very large drug manufacturer, has a substantial advantage in discounting the price of prescription drugs. This practice by drug manufacturers has prompted retail pharmacies to file a suit in federal court in Chicago alleging price fixing, conspiracy and other antitrust violations. Hundreds of similar lawsuits from around the country have been consolidated before the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois.

During the time [*6] leading up to the filing of this lawsuit, the retail pharmacies in Maryland were not only attempting to determine if they should become part of Medco's network, but they were also attempting to have fair pricing laws enacted and attempting to carve out pharmacy benefits from a transfer of the state Medicare population into managed care.

After receiving bids from PBMs, the State awarded the contract to Medco on September 13, 1995, based on its representation that over 800 pharmacies would be members of the open network. Medco made this prediction without contacting any of the pharmacies and provided a list to the State of the pharmacies Medco expected to be in the network. This list included all appellees except NeighborCare. The contract required Medco to assemble participation by 86.3% of Maryland's pharmacies by January 1, 1996. Medco was unsuccessful in assembling the network because over half of Maryland's pharmacies refused to participate in the plan. Medco accused Rite Aid of leading a conspiracy to sabotage Medco's network.

On February 20, 1996, Medco filed the instant suit against appellees, alleging that they jointly agreed to sabotage the Plan by boycotting Medco's network [*7] and that appellees' actions constituted a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Maryland Antitrust Act. Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits any conspiracy the object of which is to restrain trade or commerce.

After extensive discovery, the parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment, and after holding four hearings, the district court granted the appellees' motion for summary judgment on the antitrust claims and granted the appellant's motion for summary judgment as to some ancillary claims. In an 83-page decision, the district court concluded that Medco's evidence did not tend to exclude the possibility of independent conduct on the part of the appellees and the evidence was, therefore, insufficient to support a reasonable inference of a conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws.

Medco alleges that numerous actions by appellees indicate a conspiracy, such as: an advertisement placed in the Baltimore Sun and Washington Post by Rite Aid on December 21, 1995; various conference calls between the different pharmacies; denials of communication; statements by corporate officers; and, reactions of appellees. Medco catalogs over 450 instances of contact between defendants [*8] and others from September 11, 1995, to December 27, 1995.

In its answer, Rite Aid alleged that its Vice President of Government and Trade Relations, Jim Krahulec, did not discuss the Maryland Plan with any of the other appellees. In an unrelated case, Krahulec signed a Federal Trade Commission consent decree promising that he would not attend a formal or informal meeting of representatives of pharmacy firms that he expects, or reasonably should expect, will facilitate communications concerning the firms' participation in managed care benefit plans. Medco produced evidence that Krahulec participated in conversations with other pharmacies in which discussion of the Maryland plan occurred.

Discovery produced evidence that on September 15, 1995, Rite Aid's Senior Vice President, Joel Feldman, called Giant's Assistant Director of Managed Care Programs, Gary Wirth, and informed him that Medco received the contract. There was also a conference call on September 15 between EPIC and Rite Aid and another on September 17 involving Rite Aid, NeighborCare and others. Other conference calls occurred on September 18 involving Krahulec (Rite Aid), Giant, NeighborCare and representatives from the [*9] National Association of Chain Drug Stores; on September 19 involving Krahulec and NeighborCare; and, on September 20 involving Rite Aid and Giant.

I. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 [↑] The court reviews a summary judgment motion by a district court de novo. Summary judgment is appropriate when there exists no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\); Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). Defendants bear the burden of initially coming forward and demonstrating the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Ross v. Communications Satellite Corp., 759 F.2d 355, 364 (4th Cir. 1985). When making the summary judgment determination, the facts and all reasonable inferences must be viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255. Defendants can bear their burden either by presenting affirmative evidence, or by demonstrating that Medco's evidence is insufficient to [*10] establish its claim. See Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 331 (Brennan, J., dissenting).

HN2 [↑] Once defendants have met their burden, Medco must then affirmatively demonstrate that there is a genuine issue of material fact which requires trial. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). There is no issue for trial unless there is sufficient evidence favoring Medco for a jury to return a verdict for it. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250. The standard for summary judgment therefore mirrors the standard for judgment as a matter of law under Fed. R. Civ. P. 50\(a\), viz. a trial court must grant a judgment if, under the governing law, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the verdict. See Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250. A trial judge faced with a summary judgment motion "must ask himself not whether he thinks the evidence unmistakably favors one side or the other, but whether a fair-minded jury could return a verdict for the plaintiff on the evidence presented." Id. at 252.

HN3 [↑] In opposing summary judgment, the non-moving party must "set [*11] forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). Inadmissible hearsay cannot be used to oppose summary judgment. See Greensboro Prof. Fire Fighters Ass'n v. Greensboro, 64 F.3d 962, 967 (4th Cir. 1995).

At oral argument, counsel for Medco succinctly stated the issues in this appeal -- what is Medco's burden under the summary judgment standard and did Medco meet its burden?

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT IN ANTITRUST CASES

HN4 [↑] While the summary judgment standard of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 for an antitrust suit is the same as that for any other action, the application of Rule 56 to antitrust cases is somewhat unique. The inferences to be drawn from underlying facts on summary judgment must be viewed in a light most favorable to Medco. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587. "But antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case . . . conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. (citing Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984)); [*12] see also Thompson Everett, Inc. v. National Cable Advertising, L.P., 57 F.3d 1317, 1323 (4th Cir. 1995) ("Inferences which may be drawn vary from one substantive area of the law to another. . . .").

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act states in relevant part:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or other wise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal.

HN5 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(West 1997\). HN6 [↑] To prove a violation of this statute, Medco must establish: first, that there are at least two persons acting in concert and, second, that the restraint complained of constitutes an unreasonable restraint on trade or commerce. See Estate Constr. Co. v. Miller & Smith Holding Co., Inc., 14 F.3d 213, 220 (4th Cir. 1994).

A. Unreasonable Restraint on Trade

Medco must establish that an agreement among appellees not to participate in Medco's plan would be an unreasonable restraint on trade.

HN7 Certain restraints on trade are per se violations "which presume[] that the questionable conduct has anticompetitive effects without comprehensive [*13] inquiry into whether the concerted action produced adverse, anticompetitive effects." In re Baby Food Antitrust Litigation, 166 F.3d 112, 118 (3rd Cir. 1999); see also Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 708 (4th Cir. 1991) ("Certain forms of agreements, such as varieties of group boycotts, have been classified as per se violations."). Medco asserts a per se violation of § 1 and appellees do not contest this characterization.¹

[*14] Because Medco has alleged a per se violation of § 1, it is unnecessary for the court to evaluate appellees' conduct under the rule of reason which involves a case-by-case determination of whether the methods are anticompetitive and should be prohibited. See id.; see also Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 709 (discussing rule of reason test).

B. Conspiracy

HN8 A plaintiff alleging conspiracy must demonstrate a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Thompson Everett, Inc. v. National Cable Advertising, L.P., 57 F.3d 1317, 1324 (4th Cir. 1995) (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764). Monsanto requires "something more" than independent action, and must rise to the level of "a unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of minds." Parkway Gallery Furniture, Inc. v. Kittinger/Pennsylvania House Group, Inc., 878 F.2d 801, 805 (4th Cir. 1989) (quoting Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

HN9 A party may demonstrate an agreement by direct evidence or circumstantial evidence. When relying upon circumstantial evidence, the range of permissible inferences [*15] that the court may draw from the evidence is limited by the "plausibility of the plaintiff's theory and the danger associated with such inferences." In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 124. A plaintiff may have a plausible theory, but the danger to the market or innocent participants in the market may be so great as to warrant a limitation of the inferences available to the plaintiff. Consequently, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764).

Therefore, HN10 to withstand a motion for summary judgment, "a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged competitors acted independently." Id. The heart of this case is to what degree Medco must produce evidence tending to exclude independent action by defendants and whether Medco has presented such evidence. The standards for summary judgment and the limits on inferences in antitrust lawsuits are often quoted but not universally agreed upon. The Supreme [*16] Court has considered numerous antitrust appeals and through Matsushita, Monsanto and Eastman Kodak v. Image Technical Services, 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992), has established a framework within which to analyze antitrust summary judgment motions.

1. Matsushita and Monsanto

Matsushita involved a suit filed by American TV manufacturers alleging a 20-year conspiracy by Japanese TV manufacturers to unfairly price their products in America in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The American manufacturers alleged that the intent of the conspiracy was to force the Americans out of business by fixing prices below the market level in the United States. The losses sustained in the American market were offset by monopoly profits in the Japanese markets.² The Supreme Court concluded that "to survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." 475 U.S. at 588. The Supreme Court borrowed the "tends to exclude the possibility" language from the Court's earlier [*17] Monsanto decision.

¹ We believe that the characterization of appellees' alleged conduct as a per se violation of § 1 is appropriate. Most boycotts have been considered per se violations of § 1. Only boycotts having valid business justifications and procompetitive effects may possibly be considered under a rule of reason analysis. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). If appellees committed the acts alleged, the state's cost for administering the Plan would have increased and competition among PBMs would have been adversely affected, thereby resulting in an unfair restraint of trade.

Monsanto was a vertical antitrust case. The plaintiff, Spray-Rite, alleged that Monsanto, an agricultural herbicide manufacturer, along with its distributors, fixed the price of herbicide and unfairly prejudiced the plaintiff, a former distributor of Monsanto's products. The case went to trial and Spray-Rite won a $ 10 million judgment that was upheld on appeal. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment but on different grounds than those of the district or appellate courts. The Supreme Court held that "something more than evidence of complaints [about price fixing] is needed. There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764.

Appellant attempts to distinguish Monsanto and Matsushita [*18] on the grounds that one was a vertical antitrust case and the other was a horizontal antitrust case.³ We do not agree that the cases turned on this distinction because the Supreme Court in Matsushita, decided after Monsanto, specifically held that in the absence of direct evidence of a conspiracy, "to survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence 'that tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Matsushita, 475 at 588. The Court later stated that "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id.

[*19] 2. Eastman Kodak Company v. Image Technical Services

Eastman Kodak did not involve a conspiracy claim under § 1 of the antitrust act as did Monsanto and Matsushita. In Eastman Kodak, the Court considered whether Eastman Kodak's market power was sufficient to find it guilty of "tying." Tying deals with the ability of a market participant to condition the sale of product A on the purchase of product B. A market participant can violate § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act "if the seller has 'appreciable economic power' in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market." Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462 (quoting Fortner Enterprises, Inc. v. United States Steel Corp., 394 U.S. 495, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252 \(1969\)).

Kodak did not dispute that it began a program to condition the sale of replacement parts for its copiers on the use of Kodak service and repair programs. This policy adversely affected the independent servicers of Kodak equipment. Kodak also did not deny that its arrangement affected a substantial volume of commerce. However, Kodak denied that its practices [*20] were an unlawful tying arrangement. Kodak asserted that competition in a market foreclosed the finding of monopoly power in certain instances. Kodak further argued that the court's failure to adopt its view would deter procompetitive behavior. See 504 U.S. at 467.

Kodak relied on Matsushita in attempting to convince the court that if Kodak had a plausible economic theory, then the plaintiffs' claims could not make sense; thus, entitling Kodak to summary judgment. In discussing Kodak's summary judgment burden, the Court rejected Kodak's proposed presumption that "equipment competition precludes any finding of monopoly power in derivative aftermarkets."⁴ Id. at 466. The Court explained:

² This agreement by Japanese manufacturers is called a horizontal antitrust claim because it deals with manufacturers banding together to unlawfully control a price.

³ By making this distinction, appellant attempts to convince the court that because Monsanto was a vertical antitrust case, it does not apply to horizontal antitrust cases. Therefore, we cannot rely on it to analyze the horizontal antitrust dispute between Medco and appellees.

⁴ Kodak presented no statistical evidence in support of its economic theory.

The . . . requirement in Matsushita that the plaintiffs' claims make economic sense did not introduce a special burden on plaintiffs facing summary judgment in antitrust cases. The Court did not hold that if the moving party enunciates any economic theory supporting its behavior, regardless of its accuracy in reflecting the actual market, it is entitled to summary judgment. Matsushita demands only that the nonmoving party's inferences be reasonable in order to reach the jury [*21]

Id. at 468.

Because of the Court's response to Kodak's argument, Medco relies on Eastman Kodak to dismiss its requirement under Monsanto and Matsushita to produce evidence that tends to exclude that the defendants acted independently. However, we do not read Eastman Kodak as reaching that far. The Court was not dealing with a § 1 conspiracy in Eastman Kodak as it was in Monsanto and Matsushita. It was dealing with monopoly power under § 2 of the Antitrust Act. The Court did not overrule Monsanto and Matsushita with this statement, and it would be a mistake to dismiss the requirements imposed on Medco due to the inherent dangers to the market and innocent parties associated with a conspiracy case.

Our conclusion that Eastman Kodak did not overrule or modify the requirements explained in Matsushita and Monsanto is further bolstered by Fourth Circuit precedent. In [*22] Thompson Everett, this court recognized that HN11 [↑] "on summary judgment motions in antitrust cases, the Supreme Court instructed that when there is evidence of conduct that is consistent with both legitimate competition and an illegal conspiracy, courts may not infer that an illegal conspiracy has occurred without other evidence." 57 F.3d at 1323; see also Blomkest Fertilizer, Inc. v. Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, Inc., 176 F.3d 1055, 1074 (8th Cir. 1999), vacated, reh'g en banc granted ("Eastman Kodak was not concerned with the sufficiency of the evidence of conspiratorial acts") (Beam, J., dissenting); Super Sulky, Inc. v. United States Trotting Ass'n, 174 F.3d 733 (6th Cir. 1999) (relying on Matsushita to grant summary judgment in § 1 case without discussing Eastman Kodak); RE/MAX International, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1999 WL 184350 (6th Cir. 1999) (relying on principles of Matsushita and Monsanto to reverse district court's grant of summary judgment on § 1 claim); In re Baby Food Antitrust Litigation, 166 F.3d 112 [*23] (same as Super Sulky).

Therefore, Medco must forecast evidence which tips the balance in favor of a conspiracy. If it is as likely that the conduct was lawful as it was conspiratorial, it is improper to let the case proceed to trial.

In Laurel Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 924 F.2d 539 (4th Cir. 1990), we described the antitrust summary judgment procedure. HN12 [↑] When there is no direct evidence of antitrust activity, "an agreement to restrain trade may be inferred from other conduct." Id. at 542.

HN13 [↑] There are two possible judicial interpretations when the conduct to restrain trade is ambiguous. The first interpretation is that the "suspected agreement may be found consistent with the independent conduct or a legitimate business purpose." Id. The second interpretation is that the agreement may be consistent with an illegal agreement. "To prove a violation through ambiguous conduct, proof must be offered that tends to exclude the first interpretation." Id. We concluded, HN14 [↑] given the Monsanto/Matsushita standard, [plaintiffs] must discharge a twofold evidentiary burden. First, they must establish that [defendants] [*24] had a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Second, [plaintiffs] must bring forward evidence that excludes the possibility that the alleged coconspirators acted independently or based upon legitimate business purpose.

Id. at 543.

The district court correctly noted that HN15 [↑] the quantum of evidence required to exclude the possibility of independent action or legitimate business purposes is directly related to the plausibility of the plaintiff's theory. Compare Matsushita, 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348, and Super Sulky, 174 F.3d 733, with Monsanto, 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464, and Petrucci's IGA Supermarkets v. Darling-Delaware Co., 998 F.2d 1224, 1242-43 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 994 (1993). If the plaintiff advances a strong, plausible theory then the quantum of evidence tending to exclude independent action is not as great as if the plaintiff advances a weak or implausible theory. Likewise, when there is a risk that the threat of antitrust liability will chill legitimate, procompetitive [*25] conduct by market participants, the quantum of evidence is also high.

C. Conscious Parallelism

HN16 [↑] An agreement to boycott may be inferred from the business conduct of the parties. This pattern of uniform business practices is commonly referred to as "conscious parallelism." See ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments, p. 8 (4th ed. 1997). The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has explained that courts may find consciously parallel behavior where a plaintiff shows: "(1) that the defendants' behavior was parallel; [and] (2) that the defendants were conscious of each other's conduct and that this awareness was an element in their decision-making process." Id. n.39 (quoting Petrucci's IGA, 998 F.2d at 1242-43).

There is no doubt that conscious parallelism was at work in appellees' business conduct. Through newspaper articles and trade organization meetings, Rite Aid, EPIC, NeighborCare and Giant were each aware that the other had not participated in the Maryland Plan. Each also knew that if not enough pharmacies participated, the State would likely cancel the contract with Medco and award the contract to another pharmaceutical benefits [*26] manager that would offer better terms than Medco. However, it has long been recognized that HN17 [↑] parallel behavior alone is not enough to prove a conspiracy. See Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954) ("This Court has never held that proof of parallel business behavior conclusively establishes agreement or, phrased differently, that such behavior itself constitutes a Sherman Act offense.").

HN18 [↑] In order to infer a conspiracy, conscious parallelism must be accompanied by "plus factors." While the Supreme Court has not recounted a list of plus factors, numerous plus factors, such as "motive to conspire," "opportunity to conspire," "high level of interfirm communications," irrational acts or acts contrary to a defendant's economic interest, but rational if the alleged agreement existed, and departure from normal business practices, have been considered by other circuits. See City of Tuscaloosa v. Harcros Chemicals, Inc., 158 F.3d 548, 571 n.35 (11th Cir. 1998); Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253-54 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977 (1987). [*27]

HN19 [↑] If a party establishes the existence of plus factors, a rebuttable presumption of conspiracy arises. See In re Baby Food, 166 F.3d at 122; Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1456 n.30 (11th Cir. 1991). Viewing all the evidence and taking the plus factors into consideration, the court must then determine if the evidence tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged coconspirators acted independently or based upon legitimate business purposes.

III. APPLICATION OF THE STANDARD FOR ANTITRUST CASES TO MEDCO'S FORECAST OF EVIDENCE

In order to survive summary judgment, Medco must first forecast evidence of a conspiracy to restrain trade. If successful, Medco must then demonstrate evidence that tends to exclude independent action by the defendants.

A. Conscious Commitment to a Common Scheme

Medco has asserted a plausible theory of conspiracy. If the alleged conspiracy succeeded, the State would rescind the contract with Medco and the conspirators would likely receive more lucrative reimbursements from the next pharmaceutical benefits manager. If the conspiracy failed, the conspirators could merely join Medco's network after [*28] the plan went live.

While Medco's theory is plausible, it also creates a danger of chilling legitimate, procompetitive activity by other pharmaceutical service providers. A low quantum of proof tending to exclude independent action in cases such as this would threaten pharmacies with antitrust litigation when they have legitimate, procompetitive reasons for not joining a plan. Incentives to negotiate, to hold out for better terms and ultimately to not participate would have to be weighed in the light of a possible lawsuit if other pharmacies engaged in the same activities.

As discussed above, Medco has presented sufficient evidence that conscious parallelism occurred among appellees during the fall of 1995. Therefore, the court must examine the plus factors in order to determine if a conspiracy may be inferred from appellees' consciously parallel behavior.

1. Motive to Conspire

Rite Aid, Giant, NeighborCare and EPIC owned or controlled 50% of the pharmacies in Maryland. Medco's plan proposed deep cuts in profits from the pharmacies' previous plan. Additionally, Rite Aid had been sanctioned by the United States Justice Department for antitrust actions in New York where they [*29] conspired to boycott a Medco plan. Thus, construing all reasonable inferences in Medco's favor, it appears that the defendants had a motive to conspire against the Medco plan.

2. Opportunity to Conspire and High Level of Inter-Firm Contacts

Medco presented voluminous evidence of inter-firm contacts between the parties providing ample opportunity to conspire. The inter-firm contacts occurred between high level corporate officers. Reasonable inferences from this evidence establishes opportunity to conspire and high level of inter-firm contacts.

3. Acts Contrary to Economic Interest

Evidence of acts contrary to an alleged conspirator's economic interest is perhaps the strongest plus factor indicative of a conspiracy. Having reviewed the record, we conclude that rejecting the Medco plan was consistent with the pharmacies' economic interests. Particularly, NeighborCare's involvement would have been directly contrary to its economic interest. Ninety-eight percent of NeighborCare's business consisted of prescriptions. They did not sell ancillary items that Medco promised would make up for the lower reimbursement rate.

Also, it was in each company's best interest to hold out as [*30] long as possible in an effort to attain a better deal with Medco. Due to the plan's "open" nature, if the company did not receive better terms, it could merely join at a later date. Medco presents no evidence of price sharing among appellees. All indications from the evidence point to independent negotiations by Giant, NeighborCare and EPIC with Medco concerning the rate of reimbursement. Consequently, there are no acts by appellees inconsistent with their economic best interests.

4. Departure From Normal Business Practices

Medco has not asserted a departure from normal business practices. In fact, Medco concedes that both Giant and Rite Aid had a history of holding out until the last minute and negotiating for a better reimbursement rate. NeighborCare had never joined a plan with a reimbursement rate as low as the one offered by Medco. Only EPIC departed from the normal business practice of binding all 200 independent pharmacies at the Medco rate.

B. Appellees' Evidence Rebutting the Inference of Conspiracy

Medco's establishment of two plus factors requires appellees to rebut the resulting inference of conspiracy. The district court painstakingly reviewed the evidence [*31] presented by Rite Aid, Giant, EPIC and NeighborCare offered to rebut the inference of conspiracy.⁵

1. Rite Aid

Eagle, Rite Aid's subsidiary, submitted an unsuccessful bid for the Maryland Plan. As a result of the unsuccessful bid, Eagle and EPIC launched a bid protest on September 18, 1995. Eagle and EPIC contended that the State's failure to verify the accuracy of Medco's proposal amounted to an arbitrary [*32] and capricious award of the contract to Medco. As evidence of Medco's inaccurate proposal, Eagle relied on Medco's representation to the ⁵ The district court relied in part on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Medco assigned error to the district court's reliance on this doctrine because defendants had not affirmatively raised it in their pleadings. Under this doctrine, horizontal competitors may join together to lobby the government. The First Amendment shields this joint lobbying from antitrust liability, even when the competitors are seeking governmental action that would eliminate competition or exclude competitors. We do not believe it is necessary to invoke the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to affirm the district court's decision.

State that Rite Aid would join Medco's network.⁶ Rite Aid asserts that becoming a member of Medco's network while Eagle was protesting the award of the contract would undercut Eagle's appeal.

Rite Aid also presented evidence that part of its business practice was to initially decline participation in a plan and bargain for the best terms they could;⁷ particularly when the plan was open and there was no risk that they would be shut out if they did not join before the plan went live.

[*33] According to Rite Aid, the low reimbursement rate offered by Medco did not attract Rite Aid. Rite Aid presented evidence that its decision to join a plan at such a low reimbursement rate was governed by how large the plan was, Rite Aid's market share, whether the plan was open or closed and the prominence of the plan's sponsor. Rite Aid asserts that due to Rite Aid's prominent market share in Maryland,⁸ it was not quick to sacrifice prescription profits for unproven ancillary income.

2. Giant

Giant presented evidence that they had forecasted a loss of over $ 1 million if they joined Medco's network at the offered reimbursement rate. Since the beginning of 1995, Giant had been in the process of abandoning plans⁹ with rates similar to those Medco offered.

[*34] Evidence presented by Giant indicates that Giant was deeply concerned about Medco's mail order program. According to Giant, their participation in another plan administered by Medco caused a loss of 225,485 prescriptions per year to Medco's mail order program, valued at over $ 10 million. Giant engaged in negotiations with Medco through December 1995, attempting to bargain for "reasonable" reimbursement rates.

3. EPIC

EPIC asserts that its board chose not to participate in the Maryland Plan because of the low reimbursement rate and because of slow payments by Medco in other plans in which EPIC was involved. Medco requested to address EPIC's board two times in an attempt to convince them to join Medco's network. The board offered to participate in a plan with a rate of AWP minus 12% plus $ 2.00, but Medco and EPIC were unable to reach an agreement. However, EPIC allowed Medco to directly solicit the independent pharmacies over which EPIC had contractual binding authority. Medco's solicitation yielded the participation of 100 independent pharmacies.

Additionally, EPIC was involved in the bid protest along with Eagle, and EPIC contends that until their protest was denied in late [*35] November 1995, they had absolutely no incentive to join Medco's network.

4. NeighborCare

NeighborCare had never participated in a plan with a reimbursement rate as low as the one offered by Medco. NeighborCare's two owners had a longstanding policy to reject any networks offering reimbursement rates which fell below their profitability threshold.

NeighborCare also did not engage in the sale of ancillary items to which an increase in customer flow would contribute. Ninety-eight percent of NeighborCare's profits came from prescriptions.

Based on the evidence presented by Rite Aid, Giant, EPIC and NeighborCare, we are convinced that they have rebutted Medco's inference of conspiracy. Medco may still survive summary judgment if it carries its ultimate burden and forecasts proof which tends to exclude independent action or legitimate business decisions by appellees.

⁶ Medco contends this is normal business practice in the industry.

⁷ Medco representatives admitted that Rite Aid typically held out before joining a plan and that Rite Aid's Joel Feldman was "a great negotiator."

⁸ In 1995, Rite Aid had 180 pharmacies in the State of Maryland.

⁹ Giant had dropped out of nine plans due to the reimbursement rate. Eight of the nine plans had rates greater than or equal to Medco's rate.

C. Medco's Evidence Tending to Exclude Independent Action or Legitimate Business Purpose

Medco does not forecast direct evidence of a conspiracy to restrain trade, but relies on circumstantial evidence. It advances at least seven factual arguments that purportedly demonstrate a conspiracy and exclude independent [*36] action: (1) appellees' reaction as soon as Maryland announced its plan; (2) the reaction of EPIC which had historically joined a plan at the price offered by Medco; (3) the actions of Rite Aid's Jim Krahulec; (4) the statement on September 29 by EPIC's representative that the plan would "kill us" if it went into effect; (5) Rite Aid's advertisement; (6) conversations between high level officers within appellees' companies; and (7) statements by EPIC and Giant on December 7, 1995.

1. Appellees' Reaction to Announcement of Award of Contract to Medco

No pharmacy reacted with joy to the news that Maryland had awarded Medco the pharmacy plan. The deep discount Medco attempted to achieve in its pricing forecasted large losses to some appellees.¹⁰ The offset to this deep discount was intended to be an increased flow of patrons to the pharmacies, but for pharmacies like NeighborCare, which derived 98% of profits from prescriptions, an increase in the sale of incidentals like magazines and candy could not make up for the loss in prescription dollars.

[*37] After learning on September 11, 1995, of the State's intention to award the contract to Medco at a Board of Public Works meeting on September 13, Rite Aid's Joel Feldman testified that "we were really focused on developing a strategy to somehow influence the process politically" comparable to a "red alert." (A. 451) The "red alert" was implemented by "getting on the telephone and . . . calling as many people as you can who you think will have some role in influencing the decision of the Board of Public Works." Id.

As indicated by the flurry of activity after the announcement, most pharmacies,¹¹ not just appellees, attempted to address concerns raised by the award of the Plan to Medco. The thrust of these activities appears to be influencing the governor and state representatives to rethink some of the details of the Plan.

[*38] 2. EPIC's Reaction to the Plan

Medco asserts EPIC's reaction to the plan creates an inference of conspiracy. EPIC was "up in arms" over the contract price Medco was offering even though they had always accepted contracts for similar prices in the past.

EPIC counters that it needed to accept low reimbursement rates in the past in order to prove that it could deliver on the participation of its 200 independent pharmacies. Now that EPIC had established that their pharmacies would honor contracts entered into on their behalf by EPIC, the board felt that it was time to seek higher rates of reimbursement. EPIC's board voted not to participate after brief negotiations with Medco due to the low rate and delays in payments by Medco on other contracts. If EPIC's board had voted to accept the contract, all 200 independent pharmacies would be bound by their decision. Rather than accept the rate, EPIC gave Medco permission to directly solicit the individual pharmacies.

3. Actions of Rite Aid's Jim Krahulec

Medco contends that the presence of Jim Krahulec at trade organization meetings and conference calls raises an inference of conspiracy given Krahulec's past activity. Krahulec entered [*39] into a consent judgment with the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") whereby the FTC ordered him not attend "a formal or informal meeting of representatives of pharmacy firms that [he] expects or reasonably should expect will facilitate communications . . . concerning one or more firms' intentions or decisions with respect to entering into, refusing to enter into, threatening to refuse to enter into . . . any existing or proposed participation agreement . . ." (A.57).

¹⁰ Giant predicted that it would lose in excess of $ 700,000 per year by joining the Plan at Medco's rate.

¹¹ As indicated by conference call participation, not only did appellees take part in the lobbying effort, but so did Safeway Inc., Thrift Drug, Inc., Revco D.S. Inc., CVS and the National Association of Chain Drug Stores.

4. EPIC's Statement that the Plan "Would Kill Us"

Jim Miller, EPIC's representative at a September 29 meeting of the Maryland Association of Chain Drug Stores, stated that he did not "know why we're having a meeting to discuss the Medicaid waiver considering that if the Maryland deal went through it would kill us."

EPIC negotiated with Medco until mid-December, giving Medco's representative numerous opportunities to address the board concerning the merits of Medco's plan. Even after rejecting Medco's plan, EPIC permitted direct solicitation of the independent pharmacies resulting in participation by half of them in Medco's network.

5. Rite Aid's Advertisement

Medco also contends that the advertisement that [*40] Rite Aid ran in the Baltimore Sun and the Washington Post is evidence of a conspiracy. When Rite Aid ran the ad, none of the other retailers gave Rite Aid permission to include their names, and none of them protested that their names were included.

As justification for its actions, Rite Aid relies on a December 19, 1995, article in the Baltimore Sun announcing that "three large chains and a network of independent pharmacies said yesterday that they are refusing to participate in the state employee's drug plan." (A. 60) Rite Aid allegedly ran the advertisement on December 21, because it felt that it should explain to its customers why it was not participating and wanted to make a public statement concerning the State's award of the contract to Medco. The advertisement asked State employees to contact the governor or their union to seek a change in the Plan and listed other pharmacies that had refused to participate in the Plan.

6. Conversations Between High Level Corporate Officers

As a forecast of evidence from which a reasonable inference of conspiracy may be drawn, Medco also relies on telephone conversations and September 15, 17, 18, 19 and 20 conference calls, and the appellees' [*41] failure to remember these conversations. In their answer to Medco's complaint, appellees denied having ever talked to each other. Later, in deposition testimony, representatives of Rite Aid, EPIC and NeighborCare testified under oath that they had not communicated with their competitors regarding the Maryland Plan. When new evidence surfaced, appellees admitted talking about the plan but submitted that they were only lobbying or that they had simply forgotten their prior conversations.

It challenges logic to assert that individuals concerned about the loss of millions of dollars to a new pharmacy plan would simply forget conversations about the plan. Evidence of these forgotten conversations is Medco's strongest argument for reversal of the district court's summary judgment order. This evidence must be viewed in light of all the evidence in determining if Medco has carried its ultimate burden of establishing a reasonable inference of a conspiracy.

7. Statements by EPIC and Giant on December 7, 1995

Finally, Medco asserts that statements made by NeighborCare and Giant on December 7, 1995, that Medco "would not have a network," excludes the possibility of independent action. This [*42] statement, along with the selective memories of appellees' corporate officers regarding their telephone conversations, does not meet the quantum of proof required to establish lack of independent action.

8. Evidence as a Whole

HN20 [A] court should not tightly compartmentalize the evidence put forward by the nonmovant, but instead should analyze it as a whole to see if together it supports an inference of concerted action." Petrucci, 998 F.2d at 1230. Taking all of the evidence together, the court is not convinced that Medco has presented evidence to support an inference of concerted action. Two examples of an inference of conspiracy presented by Medco, fail under closer review.

The district court concluded that to infer improper restraint of trade from the advertisement was pure speculation, and we agree. There was no reason for the other retailers to object to Rite Aid's justification for their collective failure to join the network.

Medco contends that EPIC's failure to join the network was not a mere coincidence, but that EPIC's actions indicate a conspiracy. However, the court does not believe that a conspirator would permit Medco to essentially invalidate [*43] its decision not to participate by allowing Medco to directly solicit its independent pharmacies. A conspiracy based on EPIC's actions is not a reasonable inference from the facts.

We must avoid the danger of an inevitable competition chilling result that would occur should a low quantum of proof be required before a party may harness the power of the Sherman Antitrust Act against facially legitimate, procompetitive business practices. Viewing all the plus factors presented by Medco, the rebuttal by appellees and the additional evidence Medco asserts tends to exclude independent action, we conclude that Medco has not met the threshold of forecasting the quantum of proof required for its claims to survive summary judgment. All of the evidence viewed together does not create a reasonable inference of conspiracy.

Had Medco been able to forecast evidence of activity that was completely outside of normal business practices in negotiating for health care networks, actions not in the best economic interests of the appellees or an utter failure to negotiate with Medco along with the record of appellees' communications, this likely would be a different case.

Medco has failed to establish [*44] that the evidence is more consistent with conspiracy than with independent action. Medco's forecast of evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility that the pharmacies' decisions were independent or were made for legitimate business reasons. Thus, viewing the facts in a light most favorable to appellant, Medco has failed to present material issues of disputed fact necessitating a trial.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we conclude that the district court properly ruled that no genuine issue of material fact exists on the issue of Medco's claim that the defendants conspired to boycott the Maryland Plan. The district court correctly found that Medco failed to forecast sufficient evidence tending to exclude independent conduct by the defendants. Therefore, the ruling of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

National Asbestos Workers Med. Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

September 7, 1999, Decided ; September 7, 1999, Filed

98 CV 1492, 98 CV 3287

Reporter

74 F. Supp. 2d 221 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14041 **

THE NATIONAL ASBESTOS WORKERS MEDICAL FUND, et al., Plaintiffs, -against- PHILIP MORRIS, INC., et al., Defendants. BLUE CROSS AND BLUE SHIELD OF NEW JERSEY, INC., et al., Plaintiffs, - against PHILIP MORRIS, INCORPORATED, et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Motions to dismiss amended complaints in Blue Cross and National Asbestos denied.

Core Terms

racketeering, plaintiffs', personal injury, subrogated, cases, court of appeals, subrogee, defendants', injuries, damages, insurers, pecuniary loss, complaints, parties, courts, healthcare, discovery, pecuniary, subrogors, remedies, costs, proximate cause, allegations, proximate causation, cause of action, predicate act, aggregate, policies, clinics, deter

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

HN1[] Causation, Proximate Cause

The legal concept of proximate causation is a normative, flexible, and highly fact specific doctrine which requires individualized inquiry in each case.

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > General Overview

HN2[] Causation, Proximate Cause

Proximate cause is an elusive concept, one always to be determined on the facts of each case upon mixed considerations of logic, common sense, justice, policy and precedent.

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

HN3 Causation, Proximate Cause

The legal concept of proximate causation mandates a multi-faceted and highly fact specific inquiry. Proximate cause analysis is driven by considerations of policy, fairness, and practicability, rather than by a rigid adherence to classifications or abstractions.

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

HN4 Causation, Proximate Cause

Problems of proximate causation require a normative inquiry based at least in part upon notions of social justice.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN5 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

A subrogee can assert a Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Remedies

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN6 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Remedies

Recovery of pecuniary losses associated with physical injuries directly caused by racketeering conduct is consistent with the language of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. Such claims advance the statute's legislative purposes of deterring racketeering, in all its forms, and of remedying, as fully as practicable, the economic consequences of racketeering.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN7 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The most natural reading of the language in the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act supports the conclusion that pecuniary losses resulting from racketeering personal injuries should be compensable under the statute.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN8 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN9 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Victims of racketeering who have been deprived of their monetary resources as a direct result of racketeers' predicate acts should, under the most natural interpretation of the phrase "business or property," recover their pecuniary losses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10 Justiciability, Standing

Standing under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act has been interpreted much more broadly than antitrust law standing.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act contains an express admonition that the statute be read broadly in order to effectuate its policies. It provides that its provisions shall be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN12 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Where the plaintiff alleges each element of the violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, the compensable injury necessarily is the harm caused by predicate acts sufficiently related to constitute a pattern, for the essence of the violation is the commission of those acts in connection with the conduct of an enterprise.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN13 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act provides a civil recovery for businesses which have suffered economic loss as a result of actual or threatened physical violence conducted in a pattern of racketeering.

Counsel: For The National Asbestos Workers Medical Fund, et al., Plaintiffs: E. David Hoskins, Esq., David L. Palmer, Esq., Kenneth D. Pack, Esq., Law Offices of Peter G. Angelos, P.C., Baltimore, MD.

For The National Asbestos Workers Medical Fund, et al., Plaintiffs: Sally M. Tedrow, Esq., Louis P. Malone, Esq., O'Donoghue & O'Donoghue, Washington, D.C.

For Blue Cross & Blue Shield of N.J., Inc., et al., Plaintiffs: Paul J. Bschorr, Esq., Vincent R. Fitzpatrick, Jr. Esq., Michael C. Hefter, Esq., Heather K. McDevitt, Esq., Robert J. Morrow, Esq., Dewey Ballantine LLP, New York, NY.

For Philip Morris, Incorporated, Defendant: Herbert M. Wachtell, Esq., Steven M. Barna, Esq., Michael A. Charish, Esq., Peter C. Hein, Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz, New York, NY.

For Philip Morris, Incorporated, Defendant: Jeffrey M. Wagner, Esq., Winston & Strawn, Chicago, IL.

For Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation, Defendant: Marjorie Press Lindblom, Esq., Kirkland & Ellis, New York, NY.

For Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation, Defendant: David M. Covey, Esq., Sedgwick, Detert, Moran & Arnold, [2] New York, NY.

For Lorillard Tobacco Company, Lorillard, Inc., Loews Corp., Defendants: Alan Mansfield, Esq., Greenberg Traurig, LLP, New York, NY.

For Lorillard Tobacco Company, Lorillard, Inc., Loews Corp., Defendants: Gary R. Long, Esq., Shook, Hardy & Bacon, L.L.P., Kansas City, MO.

For Council for Tobacco Research, U.S.A., Inc., Defendant: Harry Zirlin, Esq., Anne E. Cohen, Esq., Debevoise & Plimpton, New York, NY.

For Smokeless Tobacco Council, Inc., Defendant: David R. Crittenden, Esq., Jacob, Medinger & Finnegan, LLP, New York, NY.

For R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., RJR Nabisco, Inc., Defendants: Peter J. Busch, Esq., Howard, Rice, Nemerovski, Canady, Falk & Rabkin, San Francisco, CA.

For R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., RJR Nabisco, Inc., Defendants: Alan E. Kraus, Esq., Riker, Danzig, Scherer, Hyland & Perretti, LLP, Morristown, NJ.

For British American Tobacco (investments) limited (formerly known as British-American Tobacco Company Limited), Defendant: Joseph M. McLaughlin, Esq., Michael P. Panagrossi, Esq., Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, New York, NY.

For Hill & Knowlton, Inc., Defendant: Bruce M. Ginsberg, Esq., Marc J. Rachman, Esq., Davis & [3] Gilbert, LLP, New York, NY.

Judges: Jack B. Weinstein, United States Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: Jack B. Weinstein

Opinion

[*222] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

WEINSTEIN, United States Senior District Judge:

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION

[*223] II. FACTS

A. Plaintiffs' Original Claims

B. Procedural Background

C. Amendments To Plaintiffs' Original Complaints

III. ANALYSIS OF CLAIMS

A. "Direct" RICO

1. Proximate Causation Generally
2. Laborers Local 17
3. Application Of Law To Blue Cross And National Asbestos

B. Subrogation

1. RICO Claims
2. Pecuniary Losses Associated With Personal Injuries
 - a. Statutory Language
 - b. Legislative Purpose
 - c. Case Law
 - d. RICO Limitations In Other Circuits
 - e. Laborers Local 17

C. Aggregation Of Claims

D. State Claims

IV. CONCLUSIONI. INTRODUCTION

Defendants moved to dismiss the complaints in these two cases on the theory that a decision in Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., ("Laborers Local 17"), 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, 1999 WL 639865 \(2d Cir. 1999\), superseding 172 F.3d 223 \(2d Cir. 1999\), [4] blocks the plaintiffs' federal causes of action and requires dismissal of all state law claims. The motions were denied. See Preliminary Memorandum And Order, August 2, 1999. This memorandum and order explains that decision.

Laborers Local 17 held that the plaintiffs' injuries in that case were too remote--i.e., were not proximately caused--to support a cause of action under RICO. As observed in an opinion issued prior to Laborers Local 17, and as Laborers Local 17 itself recognized, HN1 [↑] the legal concept of proximate causation is a normative, flexible, and highly fact specific doctrine which requires individualized inquiry in each case. See Blue Cross & Blue Shield of N.J., Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 36 F. Supp. 2d 560, 579 \(E.D.N.Y. 1999\) ("This determination [of proximate cause] is primarily one of policy, requiring a highly flexible and case specific approach."); see also Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *14, 1999 WL 639865, at *4 HN2 [↑] ("Proximate cause is an elusive concept, one 'always to be determined on the facts of each case upon mixed considerations of logic, common sense, justice, policy and precedent. [5]'" (quoting W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 42, at 279 (5th ed. 1984) (quoting 1 Street, Foundations of Legal Liability 110 (1906)))).

There are differences between the parties and circumstances in the present cases and those in Laborers Local 17 relevant to the proximate cause inquiry and providing grounds to distinguish the two litigations. Laborers Local 17 does not preclude the instant cases' complaints. Even if the plaintiffs' federal causes of action, as originally stated, are ultimately found to be barred by Laborers Local 17, neither of the present actions can be dismissed at the pleading stage. The plaintiffs in both cases have amended their complaints to state valid, alternative theories of liability.

II. FACTS

A. Plaintiffs' Original Claims

Both cases involve claims by medical providers to be compensated for the economic injuries they have allegedly sustained as a result of the treatment of tobacco related illnesses. In both cases [*224] the defendants are the major tobacco manufacturers and related entities.

In Blue Cross & Blue Shield of New Jersey, Inc., et al. v. Philip Morris, Inc., et al. ("Blue Cross"), the plaintiffs [6] are medical provider plans ("The Blues") claiming violations of both federal and state law. The federal causes of action are brought under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) and antitrust statutes. The pendent state law claims are asserted under various state statutes and under common law theories such as fraudulent misrepresentation, fraudulent concealment, breach of special duty, unjust enrichment, and conspiracy.

In The National Asbestos Workers Medical Fund, et al. v. Philip Morris, Inc., et al. ("National Asbestos"), the plaintiffs are self-insured ERISA trust funds which provide health care benefits to union workers in the building trades. The plaintiffs state claims under federal RICO and under federal common law on theories of unjust enrichment, restitution, indemnity, and breach of assumed duty. See Blue Cross, 36 F. Supp. 2d 560 \(E.D.N.Y. 1999\) (setting out original allegations in detail); National Asbestos Workers Medical Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 23 F. Supp. 2d 321 \(E.D.N.Y. 1998\).

B. Procedural Background

On October 19, 1998, defendants' Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion in National Asbestos was denied. See National Asbestos, 23 F. Supp. 2d at 323. [*7] Given the expansive public policies of RICO, the comprehensive preemptive force of ERISA, and the conflicting decisions regarding the sufficiency of similar claims, a dismissal based on the pleadings was inappropriate.

On March 30, 1999, the defendants' motion to dismiss in Blue Cross was denied. See Blue Cross, 36 F. Supp. 2d at 564. The RICO allegations contained in the Blues' complaint were sufficiently consonant with Supreme Court precedent, modern tort law's conception of proximate causation, and the statutory design and policy of RICO to withstand a motion directed at the complaint.

Ten days after the Blue Cross opinion was issued and approximately six months after the National Asbestos opinion, the court of appeals of the Second Circuit decided an interlocutory appeal in a case involving RICO allegations against the tobacco industry by union trust fund-insurers. See Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 172 F.3d 223 \(2d Cir. 1999\), withdrawn and superseded by 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, 1999 WL 639865 \(2d Cir. 1999\). The court in Laborers Local 17 found the claims of plaintiff [8] trust funds to be compensated for tobacco related expenditures to be too "indirect." See id., 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *29, 1999 WL 639865, at *9. The defendants then renewed their motions to dismiss the complaints in both Blue Cross and National Asbestos on the grounds that both suits are controlled by Laborers Local 17.

C. Amendments To Plaintiffs' Original Complaints

In June 1999 plaintiffs in both Blue Cross and National Asbestos moved to amend their complaints to add new claims and to restate, in the alternative, the original federal and state claims under subrogation; they continued to press all their original claims. They were permitted to amend their complaints pursuant to the liberal standards of Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Decision was reserved on whether the amended complaints stated valid causes of action.

III. ANALYSIS OF CLAIMS

A. "Direct" RICO

Defendants contend that Laborers Local 17 bars plaintiffs' original RICO claims. In contrast, plaintiffs argue that there are important factual and pleading distinctions between Laborers Local 17 and Blue Cross and National Asbestos which distinguish [*9] the cases.

[*225] 1. Proximate Causation Generally

HN3 The legal concept of proximate causation mandates a multi-faceted and highly fact specific inquiry. Proximate cause analysis is driven by considerations of policy, fairness, and practicability, rather than by a rigid adherence to classifications or abstractions. The Supreme Court has pointed out that the proximate causation decision should be guided by a flexible, case-by-case approach. In Associated General Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 536-37, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983), the Court stated:

The infinite variety of claims that may arise make it virtually impossible to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate the result in every case. Instead, previously decided cases identify factors that circumscribe and guide the exercise of judgment in deciding whether the law affords a remedy in specific circumstances.

459 U.S. at 536-37. In Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992), the Court reiterated the impropriety of black letter rules in a proximate cause context, adding, "our use of the term 'direct' should merely be understood as a reference to the proximate-cause enquiry that is informed by the concerns set out [in the opinion]." 503 U.S. at 272 n.20.

The formulation of rigid, simple rules for proximate cause is often inappropriate. The classification of claims and injuries into a priori categories such as "derivative" or "direct" is at times an exercise in obscurantism. See, e.g., Blue Cross, 36 F. Supp. 2d at 582 ("Courts' treatment of loss of consortium claims demonstrate how the decision to label an injury 'derivative' is itself a subjective and policy-based analysis."); see also Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *27 n.4, 1999 WL 639865, at *9 n.4 ("The term "indirect" may connote concepts - such as remoteness in time or space - other than "derivative," which itself cannot be defined with absolute precision.").

New HN4 problems of proximate causation require a normative inquiry based at least in part upon notions of social justice. As a leading treatise on tort law sums up the matter:

"Proximate cause" . . . is merely the limitation which [11] the courts have placed upon the actor's responsibility for the consequences of the actor's conduct. . . . Some boundaries must be set to liability for the consequences of any act, upon the basis of some social idea of justice or policy.

This limitation is to some extent associated with the nature and degree of the connection in fact between the defendant's acts and the events of which the plaintiff complains. Often to greater extent, however, the legal limitation on the scope of liability is associated with policy--with our more or less inadequately expressed ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient.

W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 41, at 264 (5th ed. 1984); see also Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268 (quoting Prosser & Keeton).

Analysis of proximate causation must remain flexible, rather than static: as society, its needs, and its norms change, so too must the contours of tort liability and enforcement procedures.

2. Laborers Local 17

In Laborers Local 17, the court concluded that the RICO claims of the union trust funds were "too remote" as a matter of law. The court acknowledged [12] that a black letter rule precluding all claims capable of being characterized as "derivative" or "indirect" would be inconsistent with the modern notion of proximate cause and Supreme Court case law. "Where a plaintiff complains of injuries that are wholly derivative of harm to a third party," the court stated, "plaintiff's injuries are generally [*226] deemed indirect and as a consequence too remote, as a matter of law, to support recovery." Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *19, 1999 WL 639865, at *6 (emphasis added). "At the same time," the court continued, "the Supreme Court noted the impossibility of articulating a black-letter rule capable of dictating a result in every case." Id. (citing Holmes, 503 U.S. at 272 n.20).

74 F. Supp. 2d 221, *226 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14041, 12

The court of appeals proceeded to analyze the plaintiffs' claims in the context of the three policy concerns outlined in Holmes and discussed in the district court's Blue Cross memorandum. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269-70; Blue Cross, 36 F. Supp. 2d at 574-77. The court in Laborers Local 17 reiterated that the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' legal claims must [13] be tested by reference to the general policy considerations set out in Holmes rather than by a facile characterization. It declared:

Accordingly, we follow the lead of the Holmes Court in making clear that, to the extent our description of "indirect" or "derivative" injury might seem to encompass cases where recovery by the plaintiff would not run afoul of the policy concerns set forth above, the outer limits of the direct injury test are described more by those concerns than by any bright-line, verbal definition.

Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *27 n.4, 1999 WL 639865, at *9 n.4.

Laborers Local 17 rejected the plaintiffs' complaint only after it had concluded that the claims presented substantial difficulties with respect to the ascertainment and apportionment of damages and after it had decided that the rejection of plaintiffs' claims would not undermine the policies incorporated in the RICO statute. See Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *29-36, 1999 WL 639865, at *9-12.

3. Application Of Law To Blue Cross And National Asbestos

In Blue Cross, 36 F. Supp. 2d 560 (E.D.N.Y. 1999), [14] the district court concluded that the plaintiff health plan providers had standing to press their RICO claims by virtue of the application of the three policy considerations articulated in Holmes and in light of the common law's acceptance of analogous claims under proximate cause and tort analysis. Here, the statutory design and common law conceptions of proximate cause do not appreciably diverge. See Moore v. PaineWebber, 189 F.3d 165, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 20180, *42, 1999 WL 647118, at *13 (2d Cir. 1999) (Calabresi, J., concurring) ("Where the defendant's behavior is made actionable by a statute, it must of course be the statute that defines the extent of his liability.").

Even were a court to accept defendants' proposition that a large part of the reasoning in Blue Cross was rejected by Laborers Local 17, it does not follow that dismissal is required of the individual claims of the plaintiffs in the current separate Blue Cross cases. As pointed out in some detail in Blue Cross, there are a number of unique features of the Blue Cross plaintiffs and their injuries which are relevant to the proximate cause analysis. Some of these special characteristics were not present in [15] Laborers Local 17. A court should hesitate before stretching precedent too broadly with respect to the flexible and highly fact specific analysis of proximate causation, particularly when a new case presents complicated and distinguishing aspects. See, e.g., People v. Olah, 300 N.Y. 96, 101, 89 N.E.2d 329, 332 (1949) ("No opinion is an authority beyond the point actually decided, and no judge can write freely if every sentence is to be taken as a rule of law separate from its association." (citation and quotation marks omitted)).

The Blues are not simply traditional insurers which passively receive premiums for the purpose of allocating risk. Rather, they play a far more active and direct role in the provision of health care to the general public than do traditional insurers, including the plaintiffs in Laborers Local 17. As observed in Blue Cross:

Today subscribers often rely on organizations such as the Blues not only to [227] allocate risk, but also to help establish and administer networks of hospitals and physicians to make health care more affordable. The Blues are the largest provider of such managed care programs in the country. Some 45 million individuals [16] are enrolled in some type of managed care administered by the Blues. Through these managed care programs plaintiffs take an active and leading role in shaping the delivery of health care in this country. Directly and indirectly, medical insurers-providers such as the Blues decide what medical procedures will be offered, to whom they will be offered and when and how they will be offered.

36 F. Supp. 2d at 586.

The active role of the Blues in providing medical care to the nation's population is relevant for a number of reasons. First, injuries to the Blues are analogous to other "derivative" injuries, such as loss of consortia, which the law generally favors as compensable. As pointed out in Blue Cross:

Recognizing a direct cause of action on the part of the Blues is consistent with the role plaintiffs play in today's society. In the same way that a spouse or parent has an obligation to provide for the medical injuries of his spouse or child, non-profit medical providers such as the Blues have an obligation to supply medical care to their covered populations. More and more, medical providers such as the Blues have assumed the responsibility for ensuring [17] that individuals have access to medical care. For the nearly 70 million people, one out of every four Americans, who rely on the Blues to provide their medical care, plaintiffs occupy a type of parens patriae relationship with their insureds which is analogous to the parent-child relationship.

36 F. Supp. 2d at 581. Injury to the Blues was allegedly more foreseeable, and allegedly more calculated as part of the defendants' racketeering scheme, because of the Blues' dominant and highly visible role as health care providers throughout the nation.

These unique aspects of the Blues and their injuries are relevant to at least two of the three policy considerations set out in Holmes. The court in Laborers Local 17 reasoned that the apportionment of damages would be complicated by the existence of multiple layers of health care insurers. See 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *32-34, 1999 WL 639865, at *10-11. With respect to at least some of the Blues plaintiffs, the apportionment of damages may be substantially simplified where the Blues provide health care directly to the covered population. The Blues' dominant and central role [18] as providers of health care coverage might also simplify the apportionment of damages.

Organizations with the incentives and resources of the Blues are uniquely suited to vindicate the economic injuries sustained by the nations' health care infrastructure, allegedly as a result of the defendants' racketeering. The court in Laborers Local 17 observed that the plaintiffs in that action could initiate a subrogated claim to recover their economic losses. See 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, at *35, 1999 WL 639865, at *11. Unless the subrogated claims are brought under RICO, however, those claims will not serve to fully vindicate the overriding policy of the RICO statute in deterring racketeering.

The unique features of the Blues and their injuries support their original RICO claims in light of Laborers Local 17. It is difficult to conclude that the court of appeals intended its proximate cause analysis to apply to the precise set of facts presented in Blue Cross. Despite the fact that the memoranda in Blue Cross and National Asbestos were issued prior to the court of appeals' decision in Laborers Local 17, and even though, according to the [19] defendants, the decisions were brought to the panel's attention before it issued its decision, the facts of Blue Cross and National Asbestos were neither mentioned nor alluded to in Laborers Local 17.

[*228] While there appears to be sufficient legal bases for allowing the Blues' original RICO claims to proceed, that issue need not be definitively decided now. The Blues have amended their complaint to state a valid, alternative basis for recovery under RICO. As a result, there is little to be gained by the dismissal of their original RICO claim at this time. The discovery required by the different claims is virtually identical. Striking of portions of either complaint would not appreciably save time or expense. It would not refine the issues for trial in any meaningful way.

In the case of National Asbestos, there are few features distinguishing it from Laborers Local 17. Thus, dismissal of the plaintiffs' original stated RICO claims might arguably be warranted. Because these plaintiffs have also amended their complaint to state valid causes of action under an alternate theory, however, the defendants' motion to dismiss these "direct" RICO claims is denied, with leave [20] to renew in the event that further developments during discovery demonstrate the desirability of pre-trial dismissal.

B. Subrogation

The plaintiffs in Blue Cross and National Asbestos have amended their complaints to add RICO causes of action under a theory of subrogation. These claims are consistent with the policies, legislative history, and statutory language of RICO as well as Supreme Court case law interpreting the statute. The plaintiffs in both cases will be allowed to pursue this litigation under this theory.

1. RICO Claims

The equitable doctrine of subrogation allows insurers, analogous in some respects to the plaintiffs, to bring their own claims for the recovery of the economic damages incurred as a result of tortious injury to their insureds.

Subrogation functions as a form of assignment. RICO claims are assignable. See, e.g., Koehler v. NationsBank Corp., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2732, *6, 1997 WL 112836, at *2 (N.D. Ill. March 10, 1997) ("Federal courts have consistently held that RICO claims are assignable."); Resolution Trust Corp. v. S & K Chevrolet, 868 F. Supp. 1047, 1054 (C.D. Ill. 1994) ("Lower federal courts which have addressed the issue of the assignability [21] of RICO claims have universally found that they are assignable."); Nicholls Pointing Coulson, Ltd. v. Transportation Underwriters of La., Inc., 777 F. Supp. 493, 495 (E.D. La 1991) ("District courts in other circuits have uniformly held that RICO treble damages claims are assignable."); Federal Ins. Co. v. Parella, 767 F. Supp. 157, 163 (N.D. Ill. 1990) ("There is very little room to argue that Congress would intend to allow the assignment of antitrust claims and would prohibit the assignment of RICO claims."); In re National Mortgage Equity Corp. Mortgage Pool Certificates Securities Litig., 636 F. Supp. 1138, 1155-56 (C.D. Cal. 1986) ("Permitting the assignment of RICO claims . . . would not restrict RICO's scope, but would serve to effectuate RICO's 'broad remedial purposes'.").

A number of courts have agreed that HN5[↑] a subrogee can assert a RICO claim. See, e.g., Ramos v. Patrician Equities Corp., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2979, 1993 WL 58428 (S.D.N.Y. March 3, 1993) (surety allowed to assert RICO claims of defaulting investors); Federal Ins. Co. v. Ayers, 760 F. Supp. 1118, 1119-20 (E.D. Pa. 1990); Securities Investor Protection Corp. v. Poirier, 653 F. Supp. 63, 65-66 (D. Or. 1986); [22] General Accident Ins. Co. of America v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md., 598 F. Supp. 1223, 1246 (E.D. Pa. 1984).

The Supreme Court has assumed, for purposes of argument, that it was proper for a plaintiff to assert a subrogated RICO claim. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 271. Analogous precedent in this circuit includes Redington v. Touche Ross & Co., 592 F.2d 617, 624 (2d Cir. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 442 U.S. 560, 61 L. Ed. 2d 82, 99 S. Ct. 2479 (1979), in which the court of appeals allowed the plaintiff to [*229] bring an equitable subrogation claim under the securities laws.

2. Pecuniary Losses Associated With Personal Injuries

Defendants suggest that the plaintiffs cannot have a subrogated RICO claim because the subrogee plaintiffs "stand in the shoes" of their subrogors and, they argue, the subrogors themselves have no RICO claims for the economic injuries associated with treatment of smoking related illnesses.

The defendants' analysis is unpersuasive. The HN6[↑] recovery of pecuniary losses associated with physical injuries directly caused by racketeering conduct is consistent with the language of the RICO statute. Such [23] claims, furthermore, would materially advance the statute's legislative purposes of deterring racketeering, in all its forms, and of remedying, as fully as practicable, the economic consequences of racketeering. Finally, the recovery of these pecuniary losses is consistent with the expansive scope of RICO's civil remedy provisions as consistently interpreted by the Supreme Court.

a. Statutory Language

HN7[↑] The most natural reading of the language in RICO supports the conclusion that pecuniary losses resulting from racketeering personal injuries should be compensable under the statute. The statute confers standing on "any person injured in his business or property by reason of [racketeering acts defined in the statute]." HN8[↑] 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c).

Money, the Supreme Court has recognized in another context, is a form of property. See Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 338, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931, 99 S. Ct. 2326 (1979) ("The word 'property has a naturally broad and inclusive meaning. In its dictionary definition and in common usage 'property' comprehends anything of material value owned or possessed. Money, of course, is a form of property." (citation [24] omitted)).

HN9 [↑] Victims of racketeering who have been deprived of their monetary resources as a direct result of racketeers' predicate acts should, under the most natural interpretation of the phrase "business or property," recover their pecuniary losses.

A hypothetical will illustrate the anomaly of the restrictive interpretation of the statutory language proposed by the defendants. Assume racketeers attack a manufacturing plant to coerce its owner and an employee, and in so doing throw the owner and her employee through a window. Defendants argue that the racketeers should be made to pay for the costs of the broken window under RICO, but not for the pecuniary costs, such as medical bills or lost wages and profits, associated with the broken arms and legs of the owner and employee. A line must be drawn under the "business and property" rubric of the statute, but it would seem more sensible to draw it between pain and suffering and outlays for repairing windows and limbs.

Limitations of the phrase "business and property" in the antitrust context do not apply to RICO. In an antitrust case, the Supreme Court stated that the phrase "business or injury" excluded "personal injuries suffered. [25] " Reiter, 442 U.S. at 339. The Court's use of the term "personal injuries" in Reiter may simply have been a reference to claims for emotional distress or pain and suffering. Even if the Court intended the phrase to refer to the pecuniary losses associated with personal injury, however, it would be inappropriate to apply this phrase in the RICO context. While analogies between RICO and the Clayton Act can be instructive, there are sharp differences between the two statutes and their aims which can sometimes render such comparisons inappropriate. A version of RICO was originally proposed in the Senate as an amendment to the Clayton Act. See S. 2048, 90th Cong. \(1967\). Congress ultimately rejected the notion that RICO should be a subsection of the antitrust laws apparently for the reason that it did not want RICO [*230] to be limited by existing interpretations of antitrust law. See, e.g., 115 Cong. Rec. 6994 \(1969\) (recommendation of American Bar Association against attaching RICO to Clayton Act because the "use of antitrust laws themselves as a vehicle for combating organized crime could create inappropriate and unnecessary obstacles" to private litigants by requiring [26] them to "contend with a body of precedent-appropriate in a purely antitrust context-setting requirements on questions such as 'standing to sue' and 'proximate cause.'"); see also 115 Cong. Rec. 6993 \(1969\) (statements of Sen. Hruska).

HN10 [↑] RICO standing has been interpreted much more broadly than antitrust law standing which, for example, contains an "antitrust injury" requirement. The concerns which animated RICO were different from those which inform the interpretation of the antitrust statutes. As noted below, RICO was an attempt to deter racketeering in all its aspects, including physical violence aimed at the person, and to remedy the full range of economic consequences of racketeering. Physical violence and attacks upon the person were standard tools of racketeers that RICO was designed to address; such attacks are specifically proscribed by the statute. The two statutes' coverage of "personal injuries" are not fully congruent.

Most importantly, HN11 [↑] the RICO statute contains an express admonition that the statute be read broadly in order to effectuate its policies. It provides that, "the provisions of this title shall be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes." Pub. [27] L. No. 91-452, § 904(a), 84 Stat. 922, 947 (1970); see also Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 497-98, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\) ("RICO is to be read broadly. This is the lesson not only of Congress' self-consciously expansive language and overall approach but also of its express admonition" (citation omitted)). The statute's "liberal construction" provision is particularly applicable to the civil remedies contained in section 1964. See Sedima, 473 U.S. at 491 n.10 ("Indeed, if Congress' liberal-construction mandate is to be applied anywhere, it is in § 1964, where RICO's remedial purposes are most evident.").

While the phrase "business and property" could be interpreted to exclude all pecuniary losses associated in any way with a personal injury, such an interpretation would undermine the policies of RICO.

b. Legislative Purpose

Analysis of the statute's legislative history confirms that RICO was intended to deter the use of physical violence by racketeers and to remedy the economic consequences of those physical injuries resulting from racketeering violence.

In enacting RICO, Congress recognized that the use [28] and threat of physical violence were traditional tools of the racketeer and that the infliction of personal injuries could result in substantial economic losses to the victims of racketeering. During the bill's debate, RICO's co-sponsor in the Senate summarized the problem Congress faced: "[Organized Crime] employs physical brutality, fear and corruption to intimidate competitors and customers to achieve increased sales and profits." 116 Cong. Rec. 602 (1970) (statement of Sen. Hruska); see also 113 Cong. Rec. 17998 (1967) (Sen. Hruska, during consideration of a precursor to RICO, describing tools of racketeers as "large amounts of cash coupled with threats of violence, extortion, and similar techniques").

This concern for the economic consequences of the physical injuries caused by racketeers led Congress to include numerous references to personal injury offenses in RICO's definition of "racketeering activity." RICO's definition of "racketeering activity" includes, for example, "any act or threat" involving murder, kidnaping, robbery, and extortion, which is chargeable under State law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year. 18 U.S.C. § 1961 [29] (1). [*231] In addition, RICO's definition of predicate racketeering acts includes violations of federal laws designed to control damages to the person. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 1513 (retaliating against a witness, victim, or informant), § 1951 ("Hobbs Act," proscribing interstate robbery, extortion and any threats or acts of physical violence to any person or property in furtherance of interstate robbery or extortion), § 1958 (use of interstate commerce facilities in the commission murder-for-hire) §§ 2251, 2251A, 2252, 2258 (sexual exploitation of children), and § 2421-24 ("white slave" traffic), found in 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1).

The commission of a "pattern" of any of these predicate offenses, when committed in conjunction with the statute's other requirements, affords a civil remedy for "any person" who has incurred business or property losses as a result of the commission of the predicate acts. 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). RICO's legislative scheme evinces a desire on the part of Congress to deter racketeering, in all its forms, including racketeering violence which inflicts personal injuries. As a result, it is reasonable [30] to conclude that RICO is also intended to remedy the range of economic costs of racketeering, including those economic costs racketeers inflict when they choose to achieve their aims through a pattern of violence and physical injury or by fraud designed to injure the person.

c. Case Law

The Supreme Court's expansive interpretations of RICO standing support the conclusion that RICO should remedy the pecuniary losses caused by the infliction of personal injuries by racketeers.

In Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\), the Supreme Court rejected an attempt by the court of appeals for the Second Circuit to limit the classes of racketeering victims who can recover under the Act. The court of appeals had held that RICO plaintiffs were required to plead a "racketeering injury" in order to recover under the statute. In rejecting that ruling the Supreme Court HN12 [↑] stated:

Where the plaintiff alleges each element of the violation, the compensable injury necessarily is the harm caused by predicate acts sufficiently related to constitute a pattern, for the essence of the violation is the commission of those acts in connection [31] with the conduct of an enterprise. Those acts are, when committed in the circumstances delineated in § 1962(c), "an activity which RICO was designed to deter." Any recoverable damages occurring by reason of a violation of § 1962(c) will flow from the commission of the predicate acts.

Sedima, 473 U.S. at 497.

When the racketeering conduct involves acts of physical violence and injury, the natural interpretation of the phrase "any recoverable damages . . . flowing from the commission of the predicate acts" suggests that those who pay an economic price for the racketeering acts are included in the class of individuals who may recover.

This conclusion is further supported by the fact that the majority in Sedima rejected an attempt by the dissent to limit RICO in a manner analogous to that now proposed by the defendants. In Sedima, the dissent urged that the direct victims of predicate acts such as murder and kidnapping be excluded from recovery under the statute in order to limit recovery to those parties suffering "commercial" losses. See Sedima 473 U.S. at 519 (Marshall, J., dissenting) ("Congress' concern was not for the direct victims [32] of the racketeers' acts, whom state and federal laws already protected, but for the competitors and investors whose businesses and interests are harmed or destroyed by racketeers, or whose competitive positions decline because of infiltration in the relevant market."). The majority refused to adopt this approach, reasoning that there was no basis for inferring either a "racketeering injury" requirement or a "competitive injury" [*232] requirement in the statute's language or legislative history. Id. at 497 n.15 ("The dissent would also go further than did the Second Circuit in its requirement that the plaintiff have suffered a competitive injury. . . . The language [Congress] chose, allowing recovery to 'any person injured in his business or property,' § 1964(c) (emphasis added), applied to this situation, suggests that the statute is not so limited.").

Additional support is provided by the Supreme Court's holding and reasoning in National Organization for Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 127 L. Ed. 2d 99, 114 S. Ct. 798 (1994). In Scheidler, the plaintiffs included two health care centers that provided medical services including abortion. [33] The defendants were a collection of organizations and individuals, some of whom allegedly constituted the RICO "enterprise," who opposed the performance of abortions at these and other health care facilities. In their efforts to prevent abortions at the plaintiff clinics, the defendants allegedly were involved in a pattern of "threatened or actual force, violence, or fear" intended to deter employees and patients from utilizing the clinics' services. See Scheidler, 510 U.S. at 253 (quoting plaintiffs' second amended complaint P 97). The plaintiff clinics alleged that these efforts by the defendants had resulted in economic and business losses.

Rejecting several lower court holdings that RICO's civil remedies require racketeering activity that is motivated by an economic purpose, the Supreme Court in Scheidler held that the plaintiff clinics' allegations were sufficient to state a claim under RICO:

[The plaintiffs clinics] alleged in their complaint that respondents conspired to use force to induce clinic staff and patients to stop working and obtain medical services elsewhere. Petitioners claimed that this conspiracy "has injured the business and/or [34] property interests of the [petitioners]." In addition, petitioners claimed that respondent Scheidler threatened [plaintiff's] clinic administrator with reprisals if she refused to quit her job at the clinic. . . . Nothing more is needed to confer standing on [plaintiff clinics] at the pleading stage.

Scheidler, 510 U.S. at 256 (quoting second amended complaint) (citations omitted).

As the Court's reasoning in Scheidler HN13↑ illustrates, RICO provides a civil recovery for businesses which have suffered economic loss as a result of actual or threatened physical violence conducted in a pattern of racketeering. If a business were required to shut down by virtue of racketeering-inflicted personal injuries to its workers, the Court's analysis in Scheidler suggests that the business should also be allowed to recover those economic losses resulting from the closure. There appears to be no principled basis for allowing the business to recoup these costs while denying that same right to the injured employees, who also have sustained real pecuniary losses and therefore have been "injured in their property." The encompassing phrase "any person" contained in the [35] statute's standing provision, as well as RICO's mandate to liberally construe the provisions of the statute to effectuate the statute's policies, require that the same remedies available to businesses also be extended to individuals who have sustained economic losses.

It is often difficult to draw a clear distinction between the economic losses borne by individuals and by businesses. In the instant case, where those injured in their "persons" were fortunate to have medical insurance, the costs have ultimately been borne by the Blues who are in the business of providing health care to the nation. These alleged economic injuries to the plaintiffs' business and property have allegedly undermined the financial health and stability of a critical industry in this nation --that devoted to health care of millions of people. See, e.g., Vernellia R. Randall, Managed Care, Utilization Review, [*233] and Financial Risk Shifting, 17 U. Puget Sound L. Rev. 1, 3 (1994) ("The costs of health care delivery has increased and has become a national concern."); Peter T. Kilborn, Experts

Offer Information About Americans Without Health Insurance, N.Y. Times, Feb. 26, 1999, at A1 (43.4 million Americans [36] without insurance, "adding to the burdens on the nation's health care system"). Employers have even found it increasingly expensive and difficult to fund health care coverage for their own employees. See Jennifer Steinhauer, Health Insurance Costs Rise, Hitting Small Business Hard, N.Y. Times, Jan. 19, 1999, at A1. Businesses have been forced to devote larger and larger portions of their resources to providing health care or have reduced benefits to their workers, compelling taxpayers, the plaintiffs, and premium payers to subsidize the medical treatment of those who can no longer afford insurance. Research or treatment which would have been supported by resources of the health care industry have, it is contended, gone unfulfilled as a result of the defendants' racketeering. This is arguably precisely the type of economic injury which RICO was designed to address and deter.

A number of courts, including two district courts in this circuit, have accepted or shown a disposition in favor of allowing RICO claims for the pecuniary losses associated with physical injuries caused by racketeering. See Libertad v. Welch, 53 F.3d 428, 437 n.4 (1st Cir. 1995) ("Plaintiffs [37] like Libertad and Emancipacion could have standing to sue under RICO, if they were to submit sufficient evidence of injury to business or property such as lost wages or travel expenses, actual physical harm, or specific property damage sustained as a result of a RICO defendant's actions." (emphasis added)); Jerry Kubecka, Inc. v. Avellino, 898 F. Supp. 963, 968 (E.D.N.Y. 1995) ("If [murder victims] had been merely disabled by the attempt on their lives but survived, presumably they would have had a RICO claim for lost earnings from their business activities because they had been injured in their 'business or property.'"); von Bulow v. von Bulow, 634 F. Supp. 1284, 1309 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("The cost to [comatose murder target] of her committee and her inability to enjoy her personal and real property may well be compensable monetary injuries under RICO."); Meyer v. First National Bank & Trust Co., 698 F. Supp. 798, 803 (D.N.D. 1987) (interpreting Sedima, "the direct damages resulting from the predicate acts would also be compensable (i.e., recovery for the cost of a burned building, or personal injury resulting from threats [38]), just as damages for 'infiltration injury' to a legitimate business enterprise would be compensable." (emphasis added)); Hunt v. Weatherbee, 626 F. Supp. 1097, 1100-1101 (D. Mass. 1986) (sexual discrimination and harassment victim allowed to seek lost wages under RICO); Rice v. Janovich, 109 Wash. 2d 48, 742 P.2d 1230, 1237-38 (Wash. 1987) (assault victim allowed to seek lost wages under RICO).

The plaintiff in Rice, a night watchman and janitor at a business establishment, was allegedly assaulted and beaten while his place of employment was fire bombed. The court concluded that the plaintiff's loss of wages was a compensable injury under RICO:

The defendants' arguments that plaintiff's claim for lost wages should not be within the scope of injuries recoverable under RICO conflict with these conclusions in Sedima. Injuries resulting from the predicate offenses are compensable under the act. The scope of recoverable damages for injury "in his business or property" is to be broadly construed. . . . The narrow interpretation of "business and property" advocated by the defendants, based upon analogy to numerous cited cases of antitrust [39] law, has been rejected by the Supreme Court.

Rice, 742 P.2d at 1237.

Other courts have allowed recovery for lost wages outside the "personal injury" [*234] context. See, e.g., Shearin v. E.F. Hutton Group, Inc., 885 F.2d 1162, 1170 (3d Cir. 1989) (allowing RICO claim stating, "loss of earnings, benefits, and reputation constitute self-evident injury as in any standard wrongful discharge action"); Snead v. Hygrade Food Products Assocs., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20296, 1998 WL 910223, at *3 (E.D. Pa. 1998) (claims for economic damages resulting from loss of employment allowed under RICO); Reynolds v. Condon, 908 F. Supp. 1494, 1517-19 (N.D. Iowa 1995) (claims for loss of income or employment opportunities compensable under RICO); Rodonich v. House Wreckers Union, 627 F. Supp. 176, 180 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (lost wages claim allowed under RICO); Callan v. State Chemical Mfg. Co., 584 F. Supp. 619, 623 (E.D. Pa. 1984) (claim for lost income from plaintiffs' discharge allowed under RICO); cf. In re Cordis Corp. Pacemaker Product Liab. Litig., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22612, 1992 WL 754061, at *3 (S.D. Ohio 1992) (medical costs associated [40] with implanting and explanting defective pacemakers "property" under RICO).

d. RICO Limitations In Other Circuits

Defendants' support their position by reference to the holdings in some other circuits which have not allowed the pecuniary losses due to "personal injuries." See, e.g., Bast v. Cohen, Dunn & Sinclair, P.C., 59 F.3d 492 (4th Cir. 1995); Doe v. Roe, 958 F.2d 763, 770 (7th Cir. 1992); Oscar v. University Students Co-Operative Ass'n, 965 F.2d 783 (9th Cir. 1992); Genty v. Resolution Trust Corp., 937 F.2d 899 (3d Cir. 1991); Grogan v. Platt, 835 F.2d 844, 848 (11th Cir. 1988); Drake v. B.F. Goodrich Co., 782 F.2d 638, 643-44 (6th Cir. 1986). But see Libertad v. Welch, supra, 53 F.3d at 437 n.4. To date the court of appeals for the Second Circuit has not cited these negative holdings of other circuits as binding.

Defendants' citation to Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades 741 F.2d 511 (2d Cir. 1984), vacated by 473 U.S. 922, 87 L. Ed. 2d 673, 105 S. Ct. 3550 (1985), is unavailing. See 741 F.2d at 515 (reasoning that plaintiff must show a "propriety" type of damage" which does not include "personal injuries"). The facts of Bankers Trust did not involve personal injuries and did not present the court with the unique issue of whether pecuniary damages associated with personal injuries are compensable under the statute. The decision in Bankers Trust, furthermore, was issued one day after the Second Circuit's decision in Sedima and espoused the same restrictive approach to RICO rejected by the Supreme Court in Sedima. Bankers Trust was vacated and remanded for further consideration by the Court the day after its decision in Sedima. See 473 U.S. 922 (1985). The court of appeal's subsequent opinion in Bankers Trust did not contain language attempting to define the types of injury encompassed by the phrase "business of property." See 859 F.2d 1096, 1100 (2d Cir. 1988). The issues now before this court are not controlled by a passing phrase of dictum embedded in a pre-Sedima holding that was ultimately vacated by the Supreme Court.

In Grogan, the court of appeals for the Eleventh Circuit recognized that there was "some merit" in allowing the pecuniary costs of personal injuries [42] to be recovered under RICO. See Grogan 835 F.2d at 848; see also Doe, 958 F.2d at 770 (acknowledging that economic aspects of personal injuries could, "as a theoretical matter," be viewed as injury to business or property.). Nevertheless, the court in Grogan refused to allow injured FBI agents and the estates of murdered agents to seek the pecuniary losses they allegedly suffered as a result of predicate acts of racketeering. 835 F.2d at 847. The court based its conclusion in part on the observation that "pecuniary and non-pecuniary aspects of personal injury claims . . . are often to be found, intertwined, in the same claim for relief." Id.

The courts reasoning in Grogan is not controlling. The pecuniary and non-pecuniary aspects of tort claims are not "intertwined" in a way that prevents the courts from treating the two sets of claims differently. [*235] Subrogation, where pecuniary claims of subrogees are often separated from non-pecuniary claims of subrogors, is one example of how the two types of claims are distinguished by courts and treated separately. See, e.g., Arkwright-Boston Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. City of New York, 762 F.2d 205, 209 (2d Cir. 1985) [43] ("These two claims [of subrogor and subrogee] are separate and distinct, and do not constitute unlawful splitting under New York law."); Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Gaspard, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8689, *5, 1997 WL 335598, at *2 (E.D. La. 1997) ("Since the two claims [of subrogee and subrogor] against [defendant] are distinct, a judgement rendered in the absence of [subrogor] would have no prejudicial affect on him."); Winkelmann v. Excelsior Ins. Co., 85 N.Y.2d 577, 582, 626 N.Y.S.2d 994, 650 N.E.2d 841 (1995) ("The claims of the insurer for amounts paid by it and the insured's claim for uninsured losses are divisible and independent, and 'permitting the insurer to sue . . . as equitable subrogee does not affect the insured's right to sue for the amount of the loss remaining unreimbursed.' (quoting Federal Ins. Co. v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 75 N.Y.2d 366, 374, 553 N.Y.S.2d 291, 552 N.E.2d 870 (1990))).

Under federal law, subrogees and subrogors are allowed to pursue their claims in separate actions. See, e.g., Virginia Elec. & Power Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 485 F.2d 78, 84 (4th Cir. 1973) ("Either party may bring the suit--the [44] insurer-subrogee to the extent it has reimbursed the subrogor, or the subrogor for either the entire loss or only its unreimbursed loss."); 6A Charles A. Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1546, at 360 (2d ed. 1990) ("Either the insured or the insurer may sue."). The general rule in federal courts is that the insured is not an indispensable party under Rule 19 and need not be joined in the subrogee's action against the tortfeasor if joinder would deprive the court of subject matter jurisdiction. See, e.g., United States v. Aetna Casualty

74 F. Supp. 2d 221, *235 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14041, 44

& Surety Co., 338 U.S. 366, 382 n.19, 94 L. Ed. 171, 70 S. Ct. 207 (1949) (insureds and insurers "clearly not 'indispensable' parties"); Krueger v. Cartwright, 996 F.2d 928, 934 (7th Cir. 1993) ("We agree with the majority of courts that have addressed the issue and applied this principle [that neither is indispensable] as a general rule in cases of partial subrogation.").

As the example provided by subrogation suggests, there is no conceptual or practical difficulty in separating the "intertwined" pecuniary and non-pecuniary aspects of personal injury claims. See also, e.g., N.Y. C.P.L.R. [45] 4111(d), (e) & (f) (New York juries, including those trying cases in federal courts applying New York substantive law, are required to itemize verdicts separating items of pecuniary and "non-pecuniary," including pain and suffering, damages). It would be inappropriate to frustrate the policies of RICO on the theory that the two types of claims--pecuniary and non-pecuniary--are "indivisible."

In Genty, 937 F.2d 899 (3d Cir. 1991), the court of appeals for the Third Circuit rejected the plaintiffs' pecuniary claims in part because of the existence of alternative state law remedies. See 937 F.2d at 918 ("Ample law already existed [at the time of RICO's passage] to provide recovery for wrongfully inflicted personal injuries. The unavailability of a civil RICO treble damages action for personal injuries in no way restricts the plaintiff's right to bring a pendent state wrongful death or personal injury action along with a RICO action for damages to business or property.").

The fact that alternative state law remedies may exist for victims of personal injury caused by racketeering is not a dispositive factor in the interpretation of the statute. There [46] are alternative remedies for every injury caused by the predicate acts of racketeers. A victim whose window or arm was broken by racketeering has a number of alternative tort claims from which to choose. The purpose of RICO was to superimpose another layer [*236] of remedies in order to deter racketeering. As the statute's preface states, RICO is designed to "seek the eradication of organized crime in the United States . . . by providing enhanced sanctions and new remedies." Pub. L. No. 91-452, § 1, 84 Stat. 922, 923 (1970) (emphasis added).

Similar attempts to limit RICO on the theory that it was not intended to supplant traditional remedies have been rejected by the Supreme Court. In Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 741 F.2d 482 (2d Cir. 1984), rev'd, 473 U.S. 479, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985), the court of appeals for the Second Circuit held that RICO plaintiffs were required to assert a "racketeering injury" in order to recover under RICO. The court based its conclusion in part on the assumption that Congress would not have wanted to provide additional remedies for already compensable injuries. See 741 F.2d at 494 n.37 [47] ("State law offenses are not the gravamen of RICO offenses. RICO was not designed to punish state law violations." (quoting United States v. Forsythe, 560 F.2d 1127, 1135 (3d Cir. 1977))).

The Supreme rejected the court of appeal's reasoning as contradictory to the plain meaning of the statute. It pointed out that, "RICO was an aggressive initiative to supplement old remedies and develop new methods for fighting crime." Sedima, 473 U.S. at 498.

The court of appeal's effort to limit RICO's standing provision in Sedima was also motivated in part by the court's fear of the effect of expansion of the statute into new areas. See Sedima, 473 U.S. at 499 ("Underlying the Court of Appeals' holding was its distress at the 'extraordinary, if not outrageous,' uses to which civil RICO has been put. Instead of being used against mobsters and organized criminals, it has become a tool for everyday fraud cases brought against 'respected and legitimate "enterprises.''" (quoting 741 F.2d at 487)).

The Supreme Court criticized the attempt to limit the statute's scope when such a limitation contradicted the statute's language and [48] policies. It stated:

Though sharing the doubts of the Court of Appeals about this increasing divergence, we cannot agree with either its diagnosis or its remedy. The "extraordinary" uses to which civil RICO has been put appear to be primarily the result of the breadth of the predicate offenses, in particular the inclusion of wire, mail, and securities fraud, and the failure of Congress and the courts to develop a meaningful concept of "pattern." We do not believe that the amorphous standing requirement imposed by the Second Circuit effectively responds to these problems, or that it is a form of statutory amendment appropriately undertaken by the courts.

Sedima, 473 U.S. at 500; cf. Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) ("Consistent with the congressional purpose, we have refused to engraft artificial limitations on the [standing provision of the Clayton Act].").

Similarly, in Scheidler the Supreme Court rejected efforts by the lower courts to reign in RICO by engrafting a requirement that the racketeering injury be "motivated by an economic purpose." Scheidler, 510 U.S. at 262 [49] ("The fact that RICO has been applied in situations not expressly anticipated by Congress does not demonstrate ambiguity. It demonstrates breadth.") (quoting Sedima, 473 U.S. at 499 (quoting Haroco, Inc. v. American Nat'l. Bank & Trust Co., 747 F.2d 384, 398 (7th Cir. 1984), aff'd, 473 U.S. 606, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437, 105 S. Ct. 3291 (1985)))).

As in Sedima and Scheidler, the exclusion of an entire class of pecuniary losses in the present litigation from the statute's reach would contravene the comprehensive Congressional scheme, contradict the most natural reading of the statute's language, and result in the underenforcement of the statute's policies. The interpretations of [*237] RICO relied upon by defendants are reminiscent of earlier attempts to engraft artificial limitations upon the standing provisions of RICO. Attempts to handcuff RICO have been rejected by the Supreme Court since the statute's plain language and legislative history call for a freer and more expansive interpretation.

e. Laborers Local 17

The defendants final argument is that the plaintiffs' subrogated RICO claims should be denied based on a paragraph of dictum [50] contained in Laborers Local 17. In Laborers Local 17, the court of appeals recognized that the union trust funds retained their right to bring claims as subrogees notwithstanding the holding that their "direct" claims were barred. In contrast to the two instant cases, in Laborers Local 17 the position of the plaintiff trust funds was, for tactical purposes, that the smokers did not possess a RICO claim for the economic damages associated with the medical treatment of tobacco use. In dictum the court of appeals accepted the plaintiffs' position, concurred in by defendants for arguments sake, as a correct statement of law:

The Funds correctly note that these RICO causes of action could not be asserted by the smokers or by the Funds in a subrogation action because the RICO statute requires an injury to "business or property," whereas the smokers' injuries are personal in nature. . . . The Funds may still bring a subrogation action to recover the medical costs paid out for the individual smokers Although these will not be RICO claims, they will remedy the harm done by defendants' alleged misconduct.

Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576, [51] at *35-36, 1999 WL 639865, at *11.

Defendants suggest that this passage of dictum in Laborers Local 17 should be interpreted as a holding by the court of appeals for the Second Circuit that smokers do not possess a RICO claim for the economic damage resulting from the medical treatment of tobacco use.

The argument is not persuasive. This circuit's court of appeals has recently cautioned against placing too heavy reliance on judicial dictum:

The rationale for the principle that preclusive effect will be given only to those findings that are necessary to a prior judgment is that "a collateral issue, although it may be the subject of a finding, is less likely to receive close judicial attention and the parties may well have only limited incentive to litigate the issue fully since it is not determinative."

United States v. Hussein, 178 F.3d 125, 129 (2d Cir. 1999) (quoting Commercial Assocs. v. Tilcon Gammino, Inc., 998 F.2d 1092, 1097 (1st Cir. 1993)).

The plaintiffs in Laborers Local 17 did not advance a subrogated claim in their pleadings. The plaintiffs never argued before the district court or the court of appeals [52] that they possessed a subrogated RICO claim. To the contrary, as noted, they suggested, arguendo, that the smokers did not possess a RICO claim for their economic injuries. The court of appeals' dictum appears to represent an assumption the court made for purposes of argument rather than an attempt to definitively state an important new rule of law on a complex and controversial issue without the benefit of adverse briefing, argument of counsel, or its own analysis. Such a leap to bind future parties actually litigating the issue for the first time would constitute an extraordinary and dangerous development in the common law process.

When both parties advocated the same view with respect to the pecuniary damages related to personal injuries, the Blue Cross memorandum accepted, in dictum, some of the views expressed in other circuits with respect to RICO claims for such injuries. See Blue Cross, 36 F. Supp. 2d at 571 ("In all the cases where pecuniary damages were not allowed, the gravamen of the plaintiffs' claims was for personal injuries."). After adverse briefing from [*238] counsel and an extended opportunity to analyze the statutory text, case law, and legislative [53] history, conclusions which differ from the Blue Cross dictum are required. The court of appeals may reach the same conclusion favoring plaintiffs' subrogation claims if the issue were squarely presented on appeal by parties with a full incentive to litigate.

In summary, the plaintiffs' complaints in both Blue Cross and National Asbestos are sufficient to state a subrogated claim under federal RICO. According to the allegations, the plaintiffs qualify as subrogees of the smokers who have been injured economically as a result of the misconduct of the defendants. Plaintiffs have allegedly expended billions of dollars in the treatment of smoking related diseases. These payments were made as part of the plaintiffs' legal obligations to their subrogors. Any challenges to the plaintiffs' positions as proper subrogees raises factual issues best addressed at a later stage of these litigations. The factual allegations contained in the complaints are sufficient to state a cause of action under RICO. See Blue Cross, 36 F. Supp. 2d 560, 565-68 (E.D.N.Y. 1999).

C. Aggregation Of Claims

Defendants objections to the plaintiffs' "aggregation of claims" are misplaced at this stage [54] of the litigation. As subrogees, the plaintiffs are real parties in interest who possess their own substantive rights. See, e.g., United States v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 338 U.S. 366, 379, 94 L. Ed. 171, 70 S. Ct. 207 (1949) ("Both the insured and insurer . . . have substantive rights against the tortfeasor which qualify them as real parties in interest."). As real parties in interest, plaintiffs have a right, pursuant to Rule 18, to join as many claims as they have against a defendant. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 18(a) ("A party asserting a claim to relief may join, either as independent or as alternate claims, as many claims, legal, equitable, or maritime, as the party has against an opposing party."). In contrast to the class action context, furthermore, a subrogee may aggregate its own claims to meet the amount-in-controversy requirement of diversity jurisdiction. See Allstate Ins. Co. v. Hechinger Co., 982 F. Supp. 1169, 1172 (E.D. Va. 1997) ("As real party in interest, the insurer-subrogee owns the substantive rights on which it sues. Therefore, just as an individual can aggregate the claims it owns to meet the jurisdictional amount, so, too, [55] can a subrogee aggregate the claims to which it is subrogated, and hence owns, to meet the jurisdictional amount." (citations omitted)); Ministry of Health v. Shiley Inc., 858 F. Supp. 1426, 1431 (C.D. Ca. 1994) (allowing subrogee to aggregate its own claims, distinguishing between class action context and aggregation by subrogee); Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tel-Mor Garage Corp., 92 F. Supp. 445, 446 (S.D.N.Y. 1950) ("Combining the [subrogee's] three claims to constitute the required jurisdictional amount was proper." (citations omitted)).

Defendants' "aggregation" objections amount to an assertion that the plaintiffs' pleadings do not demonstrate that they are entitled to the relief they request. In particular, defendants contend that plaintiffs have not alleged sufficient facts with respect to their subrogors, for example, the injuries each has suffered, the dates of each injury, and the brands of cigarettes each has smoked. These objections are more properly presented in the context of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure Rule 12(e) (motion for more definite statement) or Rule 8(a) (pleading claim for relief).

The federal rules of procedure employ [56] liberal standards for pleading under Rule 8(a) (requiring "short and plain statement" showing party is entitled to relief). A party is not required to allege every particular and detail at the pleading stage. If defendants were correct, complaints in complicated and large cases such as this one would run into the thousands of pages. As the Second Circuit has explained:

[*239]

Such pleading of the evidence is surely not required and is on the whole undesirable. It is a matter for the discovery process, not for allegations of detail in the complaint. The complaint should not be burdened with possibly hundreds of specific instances; and if it were, it would be comparatively meaningless at trial where the parties could adduce further pertinent evidence if discovered. They can hardly know all their evidence, down to the last detail, long in advance of trial.

Nagler v. Admiral Corp., 248 F.2d 319 (2d Cir. 1957); see also Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47-48, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) ("All the Rules require is 'a short and plain statement of the claim' that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds [*57] upon which it rests. . . . Such simplified 'notice pleading' is made possible by the liberal opportunity for discovery and the other pretrial procedures established by the Rules to disclose more precisely the basis of both claim and defense and to define more narrowly the disputed facts and issues.").

The 205 page complaint in Blue Cross and the 87 page complaint in National Asbestos have set out sufficient facts, including detailed allegations with respect to the defendants' conduct, to give defendants "fair notice" of the plaintiffs' claims. The discovery process and Rule 16 conferences can be expected to identify further elements of both parties' claims.

Defendants aptly point out that plaintiffs face substantial difficulties in establishing numerous aspects of their claims, for example, issues related to causation. That fact, however, is not sufficient reason for dismissing the claims at the pleading stage.

Defendants' suggestion that the plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed because the plaintiffs "intend" to utilize improper and "unconstitutional" methods of statistical analysis to prove elements of their case is not a proper argument for a motion addressed to the [*58] pleadings. Whether plaintiffs will be allowed to use statistical methods of proof, and if so in what contexts, is an issue that can only be determined during and after the discovery process. The defendants' argument that plaintiffs will not be able to prove all their claims without recourse to "unconstitutional" means is no reason for striking, with prejudice, all the plaintiffs' claims or for attempting to winnow those claims without the benefits of discovery. Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts in their complaint to establish that, if proven, they are entitled to some relief. The appropriate time to determine how much relief they may be entitled to is after discovery reveals how many, if any, of their allegations they can prove.

The flexibility in structuring the litigation provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure will help ensure that the rights of all parties will be protected throughout the litigation. See, e.g., Letter dated September 2, 1999 to magistrate judge by attorney for plaintiff suggesting "staged" discovery and trial.

D. State Claims

So much effort has already been invested in these cases that it is expedient to exercise supplemental jurisdiction [*59] over the state law claims in Blue Cross pursuant to section 1337 of title 28. The validity of the Blues' state law claims remain unaddressed by Laborers Local 17. These state law claims provide an independent basis for this court's retention of jurisdiction over Blue Cross. The case was filed in this court more than sixteen months ago. After more than a full year of discovery and motion practice, considerations of efficiency and fairness dictate that the parties be allowed to continue their closely related suits in this court.

The viability of state law claims has not been fully briefed. Discovery on all claims --federal and state-- appears at this pleading stage to be essentially the same.

[*240] IV. CONCLUSION

The motions to dismiss the amended complaints in Blue Cross and National Asbestos are denied. Discovery is to proceed under the close supervision of the magistrate judge with every effort made to limit the costs and to utilize materials already available from sources in the many tobacco litigations in state and federal courts. Both the magistrate judge and the district judge will entertain suggestions for effectively structuring the litigation.

74 F. Supp. 2d 221, *240 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14041, 59

SO ORDERED

Dated: September 7, 1999

Brooklyn, [60] New York

Jack B. Weinstein

United States Senior District Judge

End of Document

American Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. General Tel. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

December 10, 1998, Argued and Submitted, Pasadena, California ; September 9, 1999, Filed

No. 97-55679

Reporter

190 F.3d 1051 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 21563 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,648; 99 Cal. Daily Op. Service 7431; 99 Daily Journal DAR 9441

AMERICAN AD MANAGEMENT, INC., a California Corporation; O'CONNOR AGENCY, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. GENERAL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA; GTE DIRECTORIES CORPORATION; GTE DIRECTORIES PUBLISHING CORP.; GTE DIRECTORIES SERVICE CORPORATION; GTE NATIONAL MARKETING SERVICE CORP.; GTE DIRECTORIES SALES CORP., Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California. D.C. No. CV 92-2810. LGB CV 93-3650 LGB. Lourdes G. Baird, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: REVERSED and REMANDED.

Core Terms

antitrust, advertising, competitor, damages, anti trust law, district court, discounting, consumer, alleged injury, prices, summary judgment, flows, yellow pages, commissions, speculative, factors, duplicative, publishers, customers, unlawful conduct, Sherman Act, space, lower price, anticompetitive, acquisitions, directories, purchasers, restrained, weighs

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews the grant of summary judgment de novo.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Antitrust standing is a question of law reviewed de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN3 Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Industries, Communications

Courts construct the concept of antitrust standing, under which they evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them, to determine whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Industries, Communications

The factors for determining whether a plaintiff who has borne an injury has antitrust standing include: (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Industries, Communications

To conclude that there is antitrust standing, a court need not find in favor of the plaintiff on each factor. Generally no single factor is decisive. Instead, the court balances the factors. Nevertheless, the court gives great weight to the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury. A showing of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under 15 U.S.C.S. § 4.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN7 [down] Regulated Industries, Communications

The antitrust laws do not provide a remedy to every party injured by unlawful economic conduct. It is well established that the antitrust laws are only intended to preserve competition for the benefit of consumers. It is competition, not competitors, which the act protects. A plaintiff may only pursue an antitrust action if it can show antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. There are four requirements for antitrust injury: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Industries, Communications

Without a violation of the antitrust laws, there can be no antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN9 [down] Regulated Industries, Communications

A plaintiff must allege some credible injury caused by the unlawful conduct. There can be no antitrust injury if the plaintiff stands to gain from the alleged unlawful conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN10 [down] Regulated Industries, Communications

It is not enough that the plaintiff's claimed injury flows from the unlawful conduct. An antitrust injury must flow from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN11 [down] Regulated Industries, Communications

The plaintiff's injury must be of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Injuries that result from increased competition or lower, but non-predatory, prices are not encompassed by the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN12 [down] Regulated Industries, Communications

Antitrust injury requires the plaintiff to have suffered its injury in the market where competition is being restrained. Parties whose injuries, though flowing from that which makes the defendant's conduct unlawful, are experienced in another market do not suffer antitrust injury.

Governments > Courts > General Overview

HN13 Governments, Courts

In the absence of a showing of personal bias, reassignment to another district court judge is appropriate only in unusual circumstances.

Counsel: Maxwell M. Blecher, Blecher & Collins, Los Angeles, California, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Mark L. Callister, Callister Nebeker & McCullough, Salt Lake City, Utah, for the defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: Alfred T. Goodwin, A. Wallace Tashima, and Kim McLane Wardlaw, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Tashima.

Opinion by: A. WALLACE TASHIMA

Opinion

[*1053] OPINION

TASHIMA, Circuit Judge:

American Ad Management, Inc. and O'Connor Agency (collectively "American") appeal the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of General Telephone Company of California and related companies (collectively "GTE"), in American's suit against GTE for asserted violations of the federal antitrust laws and related state law claims. We previously reversed the district court's award of summary judgment on the merits in favor of GTE. See American Ad Management, Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781 (9th Cir. 1996) ("American Ad I"). On remand, the district court again granted summary [2] judgment to GTE, holding that American lacks antitrust standing. American appeals, contending that it has standing under the test set forth in Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983), and theories based on American's participation in the restrained market and the fact that American's injury was inextricably intertwined with GTE's anticompetitive scheme. We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we reverse.

I.

GTE publishes telephone directories commonly known as Yellow Pages. Advertisers may purchase advertising space in the directories either directly from GTE or through an Authorized Selling Representative ("ASR"). American is an ASR.

Once an ASR receives an order for advertising space, the ASR purchases the space from the publisher. The publisher sells the space to the ASR at a lower price than that given to the public, thereby providing the ASR with a commission. By charging customers a price lower than the publicly available price, the ASR passes some of the commission on to the customers. This common practice is called [3] "discounting."

GTE is a member of the Yellow Pages Publishers Association ("YPPA"). In 1992, American filed suit against GTE, raising claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, other federal antitrust laws, and state law.¹ American alleges that members of the YPPA agreed to eliminate commissions on local accounts and to restrict the definition of national accounts on which commissions are still paid with the effect of ending the ASRs' practice of discounting with respect to local accounts.

In 1994, the district court granted GTE's motion for summary judgment on American's antitrust claims and dismissed its supplemental state law claims on the ground that American had failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether GTE's conduct unreasonably restrained trade. American appealed. This court reversed the award of summary judgment, [*1054] finding that there were disputed [4] issues of fact with respect to all of the elements of American's claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. See American Ad I, 92 F.3d 781 at 792.² In the process of deciding whether the district court applied the correct analytical framework to the issue of whether the alleged conspiracy constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade, we found the relationship between the ASRs and the publishers to be one of agency, rather than one of retailer and wholesaler. See id. at 785. We stated, "in short, ASRs do not compete with publishers in the sale of yellow pages advertising, rather the relationship is one of agency." Id. at 786 (footnote omitted). Because genuine issues of material fact existed, we remanded the case to the district court. See id. at 792.

On remand, the district court again [5] granted summary judgment in favor of GTE, this time on the ground that American lacks antitrust standing to bring this suit. American appeals.

II.

HN1[] We review the grant of summary judgment de novo. See Tri-State Dev., Ltd. v. Johnston, 160 F.3d 528, 529 (9th Cir. 1998). Because the facts underlying the district court's conclusion that American lacked antitrust standing are not in dispute, the only question we must determine is whether the district court correctly applied the relevant law. See id. HN2[] Antitrust standing is a question of law reviewed de novo. See Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1507 (9th Cir. 1997).

III.

A. Antitrust Standing

HN3[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act authorizes the award of damages under the antitrust laws: "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (1999). This provision is quite broad, and if "read literally, could afford relief to all persons whose injuries are causally [6] related to an antitrust violation." Amarel, 102 F.3d at 1507 (quoting Lucas v. Bechtel Corp., 800 F.2d 839, 843 (9th Cir. 1986)) (internal quotation marks omitted) (alteration in the original). The Supreme Court has determined, however, that Congress did not intend § 4 to have such an expansive scope. See Associated General, 459 U.S. at 530-35. Therefore, HN4[] courts have constructed the concept of antitrust standing, under which they "evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them," id. at 535, to determine whether a plaintiff is a proper party to bring an antitrust claim.³

¹ O'Connor Agency filed suit against GTE in 1993, and its action was consolidated with American's action.

² American waived its other antitrust claims in its prior appeal when it did not challenge their dismissal by the district court. See American Ad I, at 783 n.1.

³ Antitrust standing is distinct from Article III standing. A plaintiff who satisfies the constitutional requirement of injury in fact is not necessarily a proper party to bring a private antitrust action. See Associated General, 459 U.S. at 535 n.31.

Recognizing that it is "virtually impossible [7] to announce a black-letter rule that will dictate the result in every case," id. at 536, the Supreme Court in Associated General identified HN5 certain factors for determining whether a plaintiff who has borne an injury has antitrust standing. These factors include:

- (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall;
- (2) the directness of the injury;
- (3) the speculative measure of the harm;
- (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and
- (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

[*1055] Amarel, 102 F.3d at 1507 (citing Associated General, 459 U.S. 519 at 535); see also Lucas Automotive Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1232 (9th Cir. 1998) (citing same factors).

HN6 To conclude that there is antitrust standing, a court need not find in favor of the plaintiff on each factor. See Amarel, 102 F.3d at 1507. Generally "no single factor is decisive." R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 146 (9th Cir. 1989) (en banc). Instead, we balance the factors. [8] See id. Nevertheless, we give great weight to the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury. See Amarel, 102 F.3d at 1507. In fact, the Supreme Court has noted that "[a] showing of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under § 4." Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986).

The district court concluded that the factors weighed against American's having antitrust standing. The district court found that American's alleged injury was not the type that the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; American's damages were speculative; and allowing the suit to go forward could result in duplicative and complex damages. The only factor the district court found weighing in favor of finding antitrust standing was the directness of American's alleged injury. We respectfully disagree.⁴

[9] 1. The Nature of American's Alleged Injury

HN7 The antitrust laws do not provide a remedy to every party injured by unlawful economic conduct. It is well established that the antitrust laws are only intended to preserve competition for the benefit of consumers. See Associated General, 459 U.S. at 538. Thus the famous aphorism, "it is competition, not competitors, which the Act protects." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 344, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). A plaintiff may only pursue an antitrust action if it can show "antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990) ("ARCO") (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)). Parsing the Supreme Court's definition, we can identify four requirements for antitrust injury: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that [10] which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

⁴ At the outset, we reject American's argument that this court implicitly found American to have antitrust standing in American Ad I because we reversed the district court's award of summary judgment instead of affirming on other grounds. American Ad I, although relevant to the antitrust standing inquiry, raised neither the question of antitrust standing nor any of the Associated General standing factors. Furthermore, because the issue of antitrust standing can be raised at any time, see Amarel, 102 F.3d at 1507, GTE has not waived this defense by failing to have raised it prior to this point. Therefore, neither American Ad I nor this case's procedural posture compels a reversal.

Because we conclude that American has antitrust standing under the test set forth in Associated General, we do not address American's alternative arguments.

(1) Plaintiffs sometimes forget that the antitrust injury analysis must begin with the identification of the defendant's specific unlawful conduct. In Cargill, for example, the plaintiff alleged only that if its two competitors were allowed to merge, they would lower prices to gain market share. The plaintiff claimed the lower prices would eventually drive it out of business, reducing competition. Cargill, 479 U.S. at 114-17. The Supreme Court rejected this allegation as a basis for antitrust injury because "the kind of competition that [plaintiff] alleges here, competition for increased market share, is not an activity forbidden by the [*1056] antitrust laws." Id. at 116. HN8[¹] Without a violation of the antitrust laws, there can be no antitrust injury. In this case, we have already held that American has raised genuine issues of material fact regarding whether GTE violated § 1 of the Sherman Act. See American Ad I, 92 F.3d at 787-92.

(2) HN9[¹] A plaintiff must also allege some credible injury caused by the unlawful conduct. There can be [*11] no antitrust injury if the plaintiff stands to gain from the alleged unlawful conduct. See e.g., Associated General, 459 U.S. at 539 (no antitrust injury because union's goals might well be served by reduced competition among employers). Competitors who challenge a rival's price-fixing are often unable to show injury. In ARCO, for example, the plaintiff alleged ARCO was engaging in maximum-price-fixing of retail prices, then a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act under Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968), overruled by State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199, 118 S. Ct. 275 (1997). In Albrecht, the Court worried that maximum-price-fixing might develop into minimum-price-fixing or might undermine the ability of dealers to provide services for which their customers were willing to pay. The plaintiff in ARCO was a competitor of ARCO's retailers, however, and the Supreme Court found it highly unlikely that the plaintiff stood to suffer from any increase in prices or from any inability of ARCO's dealers to serve their customers. The plaintiff's claim of antitrust [*12] injury was, consequently, rejected. See ARCO, 495 U.S. 328 at 335-37. See also, e.g., Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1999 WL 459519, *4 (9th Cir. 1999) (no antitrust injury where "plaintiffs stand to benefit from the fact that prices for those services are inflated" as a result of alleged illegal price-fixing). We are satisfied that American stands to suffer, not gain, from GTE's alleged participation in the conspiracy to eliminate commissions to ASRs, thereby eliminating the practice of discounting to advertising consumers.

(3) HN10[¹] It is not enough that the plaintiff's claimed injury flows from the unlawful conduct. An antitrust injury must "flow[] from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." The Supreme Court articulated this requirement in its seminal opinion in Brunswick. Due to the vagaries of the bowling industry, Brunswick, a large bowling equipment manufacturer, had become "by far the largest operator of bowling centers" in the country. Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 480. Pueblo challenged Brunswick's acquisition of some of Pueblo's competitors who were on the verge of bankruptcy. Pueblo [*13] alleged that the acquisitions threatened to create a monopoly, given Brunswick's market power. Pueblo's claimed injury was the additional profit it would have earned had its competitors been allowed to fold. See id. at 479-80. The Supreme Court held that Pueblo's claimed injury did not flow from the illegality of Brunswick's conduct. If the acquisitions violated § 7, it was only because the acquisitions "brought a 'deep pocket' parent into a market of 'pygmies.'" Id. at 487. Pueblo's injuries, however, were unrelated to Brunswick's potential to monopolize, that which made the acquisition potentially unlawful. Any rescue of the troubled centers would injure Pueblo in the same way. See id.

This case is easily distinguished from Brunswick. Pueblo's injury flowed from any rescue of its competitors, but the rescue of the bowling centers was not in itself unlawful. It was potentially unlawful only because of Brunswick's size. Here, American's injury, its lost commissions, flows from the agreement to eliminate ASR discounts to advertising consumers. This conduct is itself potentially unlawful. We have already held that any intent by GTE to eliminate [*14] discounting is equivalent to an intent to harm competition by increasing prices. American Ad I, 92 F.3d at 789. American's injury flows from that which makes unlawful GTE's conduct, the agreement to eliminate discounts.

[*1057] (4) HN11[¹] Finally, the plaintiff's injury must be "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." The Supreme Court has made clear that injuries which result from increased competition or lower (but non-predatory) prices are not encompassed by the antitrust laws. See e.g., ARCO, 495 U.S. at 337-40 (holding no antitrust injury for business lost to lower, but non-predatory, prices resulting from alleged unlawful maximum-price-fixing; noting antitrust laws were intended to promote this kind of injury). In this case, American has not suggested its injury is the result of increased competition or lower prices.

The Supreme Court's cases have also "emphasized the central interest [of the Sherman Act] in protecting the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Associated General, 459 U.S. at 538. We have derived from this principle the "corollary" that the "injured party be a participant in [15] the same market as the alleged malefactors." Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 (9th Cir. 1985). HN12[] Antitrust injury requires the plaintiff to have suffered its injury in the market where competition is being restrained. Parties whose injuries, though flowing from that which makes the defendant's conduct unlawful, are experienced in another market do not suffer antitrust injury.⁵ As a broker for the advertisements whose prices are allegedly restrained, American is a participant in the relevant market and it has suffered an injury in that market, the loss of commissions on advertisement purchases.

[16] GTE claims that the "market participant" test has been narrowed by our case law to a "consumer or competitor" test. Because American is not its consumer or competitor, GTE argues American has no antitrust injury. We reject GTE's contention. The Supreme Court has never imposed a "consumer or competitor" test but has instead held the antitrust laws are not so limited. The Supreme Court's only suggestion of such a restriction is a passing comment in Associated General that the plaintiff union was "neither a consumer nor a competitor" in the relevant market. Associated General, 459 U.S. at 539. The Court did not find that fact in any way dispositive, however, and concluded the antitrust injury of unions required case-by-case consideration. See id. The previous year, in Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 472, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982), the Court stated § 4 "does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated."

While consumers [17] and competitors are most likely to suffer antitrust injury, there are situations in which other market participants can suffer antitrust injury. See generally Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law (1995 & 1998 Supp.) (analyzing possible antitrust injury of indirect purchasers (§ 371), potential entrants (§ 374), suppliers (§ 375), licensors and landlords (§ 376), and dealers (§ 362c)). Not surprisingly, courts routinely recognize the antitrust claims of market participants other than consumers or competitors.⁶ [19] A [*1058] number of our opinions do use the phrase "competitor or consumer" as a rough gloss on the Associated General/Bahn "market participant" test. But those cases usually concern parties who are clearly not participants of any kind in the restrained market.⁷ We have not found any Ninth Circuit case rejecting a claim of antitrust injury by a market participant simply because the plaintiff was not a "consumer or competitor" of the defendant.⁸ We do not believe our case law has superceded Supreme Court precedent as understood in Bahn. Further, it is not the status as a consumer or competitor that confers antitrust standing, but the relationship between the defendant's [18] alleged unlawful conduct and the resulting harm to the plaintiff. See Amaral, 102 F.3d at 1508 ("Losses a competitor suffers as a result of predatory pricing is a form of antitrust injury because 'predatory pricing has the requisite anticompetitive effect' against competitors.") (quoting ARCO, 495 U.S. at 339)).

⁵ We recognize that the Supreme Court has carved a narrow exception to the market participant requirement for parties whose injuries are "inextricably intertwined" with the injuries of market participants. See Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982); see also Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., 740 F.2d 739, 745-46 (9th Cir. 1984).

⁶ See, e.g., ARCO, 495 U.S. at 345 (recognizing ARCO's dealers' antitrust rights against ARCO and noting dealers could bring suit); J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 565, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981) (analyzing dealer's antitrust injury under Robinson-Patman Act); Adaptive Power Solutions, LLC v. Hughes Missile Sys. Co., 141 F.3d 947 (9th Cir. 1998) (analyzing supplier's antitrust injury); Hasbrouck v. Texaco, Inc., 842 F.2d 1034, 1041-42 (9th Cir. 1987) (finding gasoline dealers suffered antitrust injury in Clayton Act suit against oil company), aff'd, 496 U.S. 543, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990); Fine v. Barry and Enright Prod., 731 F.2d 1394, 1397-98 (9th Cir. 1984) (finding potential game show contestant has antitrust standing to bring § 1 claim against producers and networks limiting his appearances); Caribe BMW, Inc. v. Bayerische Motoren Werke AG, 19 F.3d 745, 753 (1st Cir. 1994) (finding dealer suffered antitrust injury from manufacturer's maximum-price-fixing); Illinois Corp. Travel, Inc. v. American Airlines, Inc., 806 F.2d 722, 729 (7th Cir. 1986) (analyzing travel agent's claim against airline under rule of reason).

⁷ See e.g., Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Research USA Inc., 185 F.3d 957, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 15711, 1999 WL 493306 (9th Cir. 1999) (health plans suing tobacco companies for the costs of treating patients deceived by conspiracy among tobacco companies); Vinci v. Waste Management, Inc., 80 F.3d 1372 (9th Cir. 1996) (terminated employee and former shareholder of defendant); R.C. Dick, 890 F.2d at 148-50 (landlord and lessor of mineral rights); Eagle v.

[20] Having analyzed all the prerequisites of antitrust injury, we conclude that American's showing is sufficient to establish that the alleged injury it suffered was an antitrust injury for purposes of antitrust standing.

2. The Directness of American's Alleged Injury

The second factor looks to whether American's alleged injury was the direct result of GTE's allegedly anticompetitive conduct. American contends that GTE increased the prices paid by consumers by eliminating the practice of discounting on local accounts, thereby causing American to suffer financial harm. To assess the directness of this injury, we look to the chain of causation between American's injury and the alleged restraint in the market for yellow pages advertising space. See Associated General, 459 U.S. at 540; Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp., 951 F.2d 1158, 1162 (9th Cir. 1991) ("Directness in the antitrust context means close in the chain of causation." (quoting R.C. Dick, 890 F.2d at 147 (quoting Associated General, 459 U.S. 519 at 540)) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

This court was presented with a similar [21] factual scenario in Yellow Pages. The plaintiffs in that case were consulting firms ("Consultants") who offered advice to businesses on advertising efficiently in telephone directories. See Yellow Pages, 951 F.2d at 1159. The Consultants sued the publishers of the directories under the federal antitrust laws after the publishers [*1059] announced that the Consultants would no longer be allowed to place advertisements in the directories on behalf of advertisers. See id. at 1160. We found the causal link between the defendant's refusal to allow the plaintiffs to place advertisements for their clients and the plaintiffs' loss of clients to be direct for purposes of antitrust standing; "there could hardly be a closer causal link than the one between GTE's refusal to let Consultants place advertisements for their clients and their clients' canceling contracts in letters to Consultants that mention the GTE policy change." Id. at 1162. There is no relevant distinction to be drawn between this scenario and that presented by the case at hand; American's alleged injury is the result of GTE's discontinuing commissions on local accounts because American's [22] inability to provide advertisers with lower prices through discounting resulted in a loss of business.

Therefore, this factor weighs in favor of American's having antitrust standing.

3. The Speculative Measure of Harm

Under the third factor, we consider whether American's damages are only speculative. See Associated General, 459 U.S. at 542. In Associated General, the Supreme Court found the damages claim in question to be speculative because (1) the alleged injury was indirect; and (2) "the alleged effects . . . may have been produced by independent factors." Id.; see also Eagle v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538, 542 (9th Cir. 1987) (citing these considerations).

We conclude that American's alleged damages are not speculative. First, as discussed above, American's alleged injury flows directly from GTE's decision to eliminate commissions on local accounts. Second, there has been no suggestion that American's alleged injury may be the result of factors other than GTE's decision to eliminate Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538, 540-41 (9th Cir. 1987) (crew members of defendant's suppliers and affiliated union); Lucas v. Bechtel Corp., 800 F.2d at 844 (defendant's employees).

⁸ The one possible exception is Exhibitors' Serv. Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc. 788 F.2d 574, 578-79 (9th Cir. 1986). We believe that case is properly analyzed, however, under Brunswick. The plaintiff's injury flowed from defendants' decision not to utilize its services. That decision, however, was independent of the defendants' unlawful conduct, agreeing to split the market. The plaintiff suffered no antitrust injury because its injury was not necessary to the unlawfulness of the defendants' conduct.

commissions. Third, although ascertaining the amount of American's damages is complicated by the fact that discounts given to customers were [23] negotiated on a case-by-case basis and the fact that discounts varied over time, this complexity is not so unusual as to distinguish this case from other complex business disputes. "Complex antitrust cases . . . invariably involve complicated questions of causation and damages." Forsyth v. Humana, Inc., 114 F.3d 1467, 1478 (9th Cir. 1997), aff'd on other grounds, 525 U.S. 299, 119 S. Ct. 710, 142 L. Ed. 2d 753 (1999). It is not uncommon for prices to fluctuate over time or by customer. Furthermore, evidence of American's past practices with respect to discounting, which may shed light on the amount of damages American has suffered, is presumably within American's control.

Thus, this is not a situation in which the determination of damages is so speculative as to call into question the existence of a link between the defendant's allegedly anticompetitive behavior and the plaintiff's injury.

4. The Risk of Duplicative Recoveries

"The risk to be avoided under [the duplicative recovery factor] is that potential plaintiffs may be in a 'position to assert conflicting claims to a common fund . . . thereby creating the danger of multiple liability [24] for the fund.'" Eagle, 812 F.2d at 542 (quoting Associated General, 459 U.S. at 544) (omission in original). We conclude that this factor weighs in favor of finding that American has antitrust standing for two reasons.

First, the damages suffered by the ASRs and the advertisers are distinct despite their resulting from the same anticompetitive conduct. In Associated General, the Supreme Court explained the danger posed by duplicative recoveries in terms of suits by indirect purchasers to recover damages for the passing on to them of higher costs, which were the result of an antitrust violation higher up the distribution chain. See Associated General, 459 U.S. at 543-44. "Potential plaintiffs at each level in the distribution chain would be in a position to assert conflicting claims to a common fund, [*1060] the amount of the alleged overcharge, thereby creating the danger of multiple liability for the fund and prejudice to absent plaintiffs." Id. at 544 (citing Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977)). Because American's loss of business flowed directly from [25] the advertisers' having to pay higher prices, there was no opportunity for American to pass on part of its damages to the advertisers, and no corresponding danger of duplicative recoveries under a pass-on theory.

Moreover, Yellow Pages demonstrates how advertisers could recover damages for the increased cost of yellow pages advertising space while the ASRs could recover their lost profits without claiming overlapping damages.

An advertiser with a yellow pages advertising budget of $ 1,000 might pay that entire sum to GTE rather than use Consultants because of the inconvenience caused by GTE's refusal to let Consultants place ads with them on its behalf. Had GTE allowed Consultants to place the ads, causing the advertiser to use Consultants, it might have paid only $ 500 to GTE and $ 200 to Consultants and retained $ 300 itself. The Consultants would recover the $ 200 in the instant suit; the advertiser might recover $ 300 in a subsequent suit.

Yellow Pages, 951 F.2d at 1163.⁹ Applied to the case at bench, this calculation would result in American's receiving a $ 500 commission and passing $ 300 of it on to the advertiser in the form of discounting. [26] American could recover the amount of its commission minus the discount ($ 200), and the advertiser could recover the discount ($ 300), without subjecting GTE to double recovery for the same injury.

Second, no advertiser has filed a related suit against GTE. Cf. Eagle, 812 F.2d at 542-43 (finding existence of related suit to pose danger of duplicative [27] recoveries). That American alleges the conspiracy began in 1989 and American filed suit in 1992 suggest that if an advertiser was going to file suit, it probably would have already done so.¹⁰

⁹ GTE tries to distinguish Yellow Pages on the ground that the Consultants in Yellow Pages apparently were compensated on the basis of a fixed percentage of the amount the advertisers saved by placing their ads through the plaintiffs instead of directly with the publisher, while American's customers were given a negotiable, and hence varying, discount. This distinction amounts to a suggestion that there is a danger of duplicative recoveries when the calculation of damages is complicated. The complexity of the calculation of damages is more appropriately considered under the third and fifth factors of the Associated General analysis.

5. Complexity in Apportioning Damages

As discussed above with respect to the speculative measure of harm factor, we do not find the calculation of damages in this case to be exceedingly complicated. Furthermore, unlike Associated General in which damages would have had to have been apportioned among "directly victimized contractors and subcontractors and indirectly affected employees and union entities," Associated General, 459 U.S. at 545, apportioning damages in this case would require only a determination of the damages suffered by the ASRs and their customers. [28] Therefore, this factor also weighs in favor of finding that American has antitrust standing.

In sum, all five of the Associated General factors support finding that American has antitrust standing. We conclude, therefore, that American has antitrust standing and is a proper plaintiff to bring this suit. Accordingly, we reverse the district court's award of summary judgment to GTE on American's antitrust claim. We also reverse the district court's dismissal of American's supplemental state [*1061] law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(c\)\(3\). See American Ad I, 92 F.3d at 792.

B. Request for Reassignment

Based on the fact that the district court has granted summary judgment to GTE three times, American asserts that "it is asking a lot of American to go back to the district court and expect to receive anything but another two year delay as the district court searches for one more basis to throw American out of court." It therefore requests that this case be remanded to a different district judge. HN13[] In the absence of a showing of personal bias, however, which American does not claim, reassignment is appropriate only in "unusual circumstances." [29] " See United States v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., Inc., 785 F.2d 777, 780 \(9th Cir. 1986\) (quoting United States v. Arnett, 628 F.2d 1162, 1165 \(9th Cir. 1979\) (quoting United States v. Robin, 553 F.2d 8, 10 \(2d Cir. 1977\))) (internal quotation marks omitted). We conclude that the circumstances relied on by American for its request to reassign this case to another district judge are not such "unusual circumstances" as would warrant reassignment. We are confident that the district court will expeditiously set this case for trial.

IV.

The district court's grant of summary judgment to GTE on American's claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act and dismissal of American's state law claims are reversed, and this case is remanded to the district court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

End of Document

¹⁰ The existence of a related lawsuit is by no means a prerequisite to finding a risk of duplicative recoveries. Rather, the existence or threat of a related lawsuit merely weighs against finding in the plaintiff's favor on this factor.

Redwood Empire Life Support v. County of Sonoma

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

June 18, 1999, Argued and Submitted, San Francisco, California ; September 10, 1999, Filed

Nos. 98-15170, 98-15637

Reporter

190 F.3d 949 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 21635 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,650; 99 Cal. Daily Op. Service 7510; 99 Daily Journal DAR 9483

REDWOOD EMPIRE LIFE SUPPORT, a corporation; STANLEY P. CANTOR, Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. THE COUNTY OF SONOMA; THE SONOMA COUNTY EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AGENCY; MARK A. KOSTIELNEY; 911 EMERGENCY SERVICES, INC., dba SONOMA LIFE SUPPORT, Defendants-Appellants.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Denied January 18, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 586.

Prior History: [\[*1\]](#) Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. CV-91-01665-VRW. Vaughn R. Walker, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: REVERSED AND INJUNCTION VACATED.

Core Terms

Ambulance, ambulance service, life support, non-emergency, EMS Act, emergency, immunity, interfacility, transfers, level of service, district court, state action, providers, injunction, anti trust law, transportation, ordinances, monopoly, confer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Counties in California are authorized to develop emergency medical services programs within the auspices of the Emergency Medical Services System and Prehospital Emergency Medical Care Personnel Act (EMS Act). Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 1797.1799.200. Counties implementing a program under the EMS Act must designate a local emergency medical services agency that will be responsible for the administration of the county's program, including ambulance and paramedic services. The EMS Act permits a local EMS agency to create one or more exclusive operating areas for emergency ambulance services or providers of limited advanced life support or advanced life support. Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 1797.85, 1797.224.

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN2 [down] Local Governments, Administrative Boards

See Cal. Health & Safety Code § 1797.224.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN3 [down] State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

See Cal. Health & Safety Code § 1797.85.

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN4 [down] Local Governments, Administrative Boards

So long as a local emergency medical services agency creates an exclusive operating area for services consistent with those described in Cal. Health & Safety Code § 1797.85, the agency's action will not be subject to federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, declares that every contract "in restraint of trade" is illegal. This law applies to local governments.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down] Scope, Exemptions

190 F.3d 949, *949 U.S. App. LEXIS 21635, 1

If a county's contract granting a monopoly for ambulance services is subject to § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, it is an illegal restraint of trade. But the contract is not subject to the Sherman Act if it is authorized by state law and hence protected by state action immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Under the state action immunity doctrine, a local government may restrict trade without violating the antitrust laws if the state has "clearly articulated" and affirmatively expressed its intention to allow the municipality to replace competition with regulation or monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

California has "clearly articulated" its intention to grant state action immunity to local governments that implement emergency medical services plans that are consistent with the terms of the Emergency Medical Services System and Prehospital Emergency Medical Care Personnel Act. Cal. Health & Safety Code § 1797.6\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Under the Emergency Medical Services System and Prehospital Emergency Medical Care Personnel Act, a county can establish an exclusive operating area for emergency ambulance services that encompasses all services rendered by emergency ambulances.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN10 State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

"Emergency ambulances" can perform non-emergency interfacility transfers within an exclusive operating area under the Emergency Medical Services System and Prehospital Emergency Medical Care Personnel Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN11 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A state legislature need not explicitly authorize a municipality to engage in anticompetitive conduct to confer antitrust immunity. Rather, the state legislature satisfies the "clear articulation" requirement when the logical and foreseeable result of a statute is to displace competition either with regulation or monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN12 [+] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Virtually any anti-competitive effect would appear to be well within the Emergency Medical Services System and Prehospital Emergency Medical Care Personnel Act's contemplation.

Counsel: Vernon I. Zvoleff, Preuss, Walker & Shanagher, LLP, San Francisco, California, for the defendants-appellants.

Richard P. Hill, Moody & Hill, San Francisco, California, for the plaintiffs-appellees.

Judges: Before: Mary M. Schroeder, Betty B. Fletcher, and Cynthia Holcomb Hall, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Schroeder.

Opinion by: MARY M. SCHROEDER

Opinion

[*950] OPINION

SCHROEDER, Circuit Judge:

This case requires us again to consider the scope of state action immunity from the federal antitrust laws conferred by California's Emergency Medical Services System and the Prehospital Emergency Medical Care Personnel Act ("EMS Act"). Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 1797-1799.200. See A-1 Ambulance Serv., Inc. v. County of Monterey, 90 F.3d 333 (9th Cir. 1996); Mercy-Peninsula Ambulance, Inc. v. County of San Mateo, 791 F.2d 755 (9th Cir. 1986). Appellee Redwood Empire Life Support ("Redwood") brought this antitrust action against Sonoma County and 911 Emergency Services, [*951] Inc., d/b/a Sonoma Life Support. Redwood challenged the County's exclusive contract with Sonoma [*951] Life Support to provide ambulance services, including non-emergency transports, in central Sonoma County.

The district court issued a permanent injunction against Sonoma County because it concluded that the EMS Act did not contemplate exclusive contracts for non-emergency ambulance services at a basic life support ("BLS") level of service. With the guidance of an intervening decision of the California courts interpreting the statute, Schaefer's Ambulance Service v. County of San Bernardino, 68 Cal. App. 4th 581, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 (Ct. App. 1998), review denied, March 31, 1999, we now reverse and hold that the statute authorizes exclusive franchises covering all levels of service provided by ambulances.

FACTS

A. Background

HN1 [+] Counties in California are authorized to develop emergency medical services programs within the auspices of the EMS Act. See Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 1797-1799.200. Counties implementing a program under the

EMS Act must designate a local EMS agency that will be responsible for the administration of the county's program, including [3] ambulance and paramedic services. The EMS Act permits a local EMS agency to create one or more exclusive operating areas for "emergency ambulance services or providers of limited advanced life support or advanced life support." Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 1797.85, 1797.224 (West 1990).¹

Section 1797.6\(b\) of the EMS Act explains that the California Legislature, [4] by enacting sections 1797.85 and 1797.224, intended to confer state action immunity from federal antitrust laws for actions taken by local governmental entities under the EMS Act. Therefore, HN4[[↑]] so long as a local EMS agency creates an exclusive operating area for services consistent with those described in § 1797.85, the agency's action will not be subject to federal antitrust laws. See Mercy-Peninsula, 791 F.2d at 758.

The Sonoma County Board of Supervisors enacted two ordinances that authorized the creation of exclusive operating areas in Sonoma County and designated the Sonoma County Public Health Department to serve as the local Emergency Medical Services Agency ("the Agency"). The ordinances authorized the Agency to create an exclusive operating area in which all three types of services specified in § 1797.85 of the EMS Act are offered: emergency ambulance services, advanced life support ("ALS") and limited ALS. Advanced life support incorporates various techniques for emergency medical care including cardiopulmonary resuscitation, cardiac defibrillation and intravenous therapy. See Cal. Health & Safety Code § 1797.52. Basic life support, which Redwood contends [5] is not covered by § 1797.85, is a subset of ALS comprising emergency first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation. See id. § 1797.60. Limited ALS consists of techniques exceeding basic life support, but less than ALS. See id. § 1797.92. Sonoma County's ordinance required that all ambulances within the exclusive operating area provide a limited ALS service.

The County adopted an "exclusive franchise zone" covering a portion of Sonoma County in which only one provider would be allowed to provide ambulance services. In accordance with the EMS Act and the County's ordinances, the Agency initiated a competitive bidding process for the selection [^{*}952] of the exclusive ambulance services provider for this zone. The County awarded the contract to Sonoma Life Support. Plaintiff Redwood, which had previously provided emergency and nonemergency services in the county, was an unsuccessful bidder.

Following the contract award to Sonoma Life Support, the County notified Redwood that it could not continue to provide ambulance services in the exclusive operating area. Furthermore, the County denied Redwood's request for a permit to provide "non-emergency ambulance services" because the County's [6] ordinances authorized the issuance of ambulance permits to operators of emergency ambulances that respond to 911 calls. In the exclusive operating area, only Sonoma Life Support was entitled to an emergency ambulance permit. Consequently, the County informed Redwood that it could operate "non-emergency vehicles," such as "gurney cars and wheelchair vans" within the exclusive operating area. These vehicles are not routinely equipped with the medical equipment and personnel required for the specialized care offered by ambulances. See Cal. Code Regs. tit. 22, §§ 51151.3, 51151.5 (defining "litter van" (similar to a gurney car) and "wheelchair van" for the purposes of Medi-Cal program).

B. Procedural History of this Litigation

¹ The material portions of the EMS Act provide as follows:

HN2[[↑]] A local EMS agency may create one or more exclusive operating areas in the development of a local plan, if a competitive process is utilized to select the provider or providers of the services pursuant to the plan.

Cal. Health & Safety Code § 1797.224.

HN3[[↑]] "Exclusive operating area" means an EMS area or subarea defined by the emergency medical services plan for which a local EMS agency, upon the recommendation of a county, restricts operations to one or more emergency ambulance services or providers of limited advanced life support or advanced life support.

Id. § 1797.85.

In 1991, Redwood filed suit against Sonoma County and Sonoma Life Support, alleging that the County's exclusive contract with Sonoma Life Support is not immune from federal antitrust laws insofar as it purports to grant an exclusive franchise in non-emergency interfacility transfers. Non-emergency interfacility transfers involve the transportation of a patient from one health care facility, such as a hospital or nursing home, to another. The district court [7] issued a preliminary injunction precluding the County from implementing the contract as to "nonemergency medical transportation as defined in Title 22 § 51151.7 of the California Code of Regulations." The preliminary injunction was affirmed by this court in an unpublished disposition.

After a trial, the district court dismissed Redwood's antitrust claims by relying on this court's decision in A-1 Ambulance Service, Inc. v. County of Monterey, 90 F.3d 333 \(9th Cir. 1996\). In A-1 Ambulance, we held that an exclusive provider of ALS ambulance services can engage in non-emergency interfacility transportation, even though ALS services typically are used for emergency responses. Following the reasoning of A-1 Ambulance, the district court concluded that the exemption from the antitrust laws covered Sonoma County's contract with Sonoma Life Support, including the provision of non-emergency transportation, because all of that company's ambulances are required to provide an advanced life support level of service.

Redwood filed a motion to amend the district court's judgment on the antitrust issue. Pointing to Footnote 1 of the A-1 Ambulance opinion, Redwood argued [8] that the district court had failed to consider that Sonoma County's exclusive operating area also incorporates BLS ambulance services. Footnote 1 states that:

Nothing in this opinion should be read to imply that EMS agencies may establish exclusive operating areas for basic life support ambulance service.

A-1 Ambulance, 90 F.3d 333 at 335 n.1.

The district court requested the parties to brief whether Sonoma County had created an exclusive operating area for "basic life support ambulance service" as that term is used in A-1 Ambulance. The district court then granted Redwood's motion and issued a permanent injunction against the County prohibiting enforcement of the contract with Sonoma Life Support to the extent that the contract prevents Redwood from providing "non-emergency ambulance services at a basic life support level of service."

[*953] The district court awarded Redwood its costs of suit and attorney's fees in the amount of $ 47,243.25 under 15 U.S.C. § 26.

ANALYSIS

I.

HN5 Section 1 of the Sherman Act declares that every contract "in restraint of trade" is illegal. See 15 U.S.C. § 1. This law applies [9] to local governments. See HN6 City of Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 408, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 \(1978\). If the County's contract granting a monopoly to Sonoma Life Support for ambulance services in central Sonoma County is subject to § 1 of the Sherman Act, it is an illegal restraint of trade. But the contract is not subject to the Sherman Act if it is authorized by state law and hence protected by state action immunity, a doctrine first recognized in HN7 Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\).

Under the state action immunity doctrine, a local government may restrict trade without violating the antitrust laws if the state has "clearly articulated" and affirmatively expressed its intention to allow the municipality to replace competition with regulation or monopoly power. A-1 Ambulance, 90 F.3d at 336 (citing City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 372, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 \(1991\)). This court previously has held that HN8 California has "clearly articulated" its intention to grant state action immunity to local governments that implement [10] emergency medical services plans that are consistent with the terms of the EMS Act. See Mercy-Peninsula, 791 F.2d at 758; see also Cal. Health & Safety Code § 1797.6\(b\). Therefore, so long as the County's contract with Sonoma Life Support establishes an exclusive operating area for services contemplated by the EMS Act, it is immune from federal antitrust laws. Because the district court's decision to grant an injunction relies on the interpretation of a state statute, we review de novo. A-1 Ambulance, 90 F.3d at 335.

Sonoma County argues that its exclusive operating area falls squarely within the EMS Act because the Act authorizes a single provider to offer ALS and emergency ambulance services. Redwood responds that the County's ALS requirement effectively prohibits providers other than Sonoma Life Support from offering non-emergency BLS ambulance service in the exclusive operating area because ALS subsumes a BLS level of service. Redwood asserts that this monopoly in BLS ambulance services is not immune from the antitrust laws because the EMS Act covers only emergency services and services provided at an ALS level.

Relying upon this court's [11] reservation in Footnote 1 of the A-1 Ambulance opinion, the district court agreed with Redwood's reasoning. Yet, A-1 Ambulance did not decide as a matter of law that a monopoly in non-emergency BLS ambulance services would fall outside the immunity provisions of the EMS Act. Footnote 1 explains only that the court had no need to consider the propriety of exclusive operating areas for BLS ambulance services. A-1 Ambulance, 90 F.3d at 335 n.1. The issue was left unresolved by the A-1 Ambulance court. It is essentially an issue of state statutory interpretation.

After the district court issued the permanent injunction in this case, the California Court of Appeal decided Schaefer's Ambulance Service v. County of San Bernardino, 68 Cal. App. 4th 581, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 (App. 1998). Interpreting the EMS Act, Schaefer's held that HN9 [↑] a county can establish an exclusive operating area for "emergency ambulance services" that "encompasses all services rendered by emergency ambulances." 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 390. It did not limit the scope of the statute to the provision of advanced life support services.

Schaefer's involved an ambulance company that [12] provided non-emergency interfacility transfers at a BLS level of service outside of its own exclusive operating area. Schaefer's argued that it was entitled to perform these transfers because in its view [*954] "all interfacility transfers constitute nonemergency ambulance services," id. at 389, and thus fall outside the EMS Act's exclusive operating area scheme. San Bernardino County argued to the contrary, asserting that all interfacility transfers made by an "emergency ambulance," which it defined as an ambulance staffed and equipped to provide at least BLS service, constitute "emergency ambulance services." Id. The court agreed with the county, citing with approval our decision in A-1 Ambulance. Just as we had there held that ALS refers to the level of service available in an ambulance, not the needs of the patient being transported, the California Court of Appeal held that an "emergency ambulance" is one capable of providing a particular level of service, whether or not the patient is transported in an emergency situation. Id. at 390; see A-1 Ambulance, 90 F.3d at 336.

The reasoning of the Schaefer's decision materially undercuts Redwood's position [13] here. First, Schaefer's concluded that HN10 [↑] "emergency ambulances" can perform non-emergency interfacility transfers within an exclusive operating area under the EMS Act. Second, noting that the EMS Act does not define "emergency ambulance services," Schaefer's implicitly accepted that an "emergency ambulance" provides at least a BLS level of service. Therefore, the court held that a county can establish an exclusive operating area within which the exclusive operator provides non-emergency BLS ambulance services.

In addition, the Schaefer's court agreed with policy arguments similar to those offered by Sonoma County in support of its position here. The court observed that the EMS Act contemplates a regulatory "deal" in which an exclusive operator receives protection from competition in profitable, populous areas of a county in exchange for the obligation to serve unprofitable, sparsely populated areas. See Schaefer's, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 391 (quoting Valley Med. Transport, Inc. v. Apple Valley Fire Protection Dist., 17 Cal. 4th 747, 952 P.2d 664, 671 (Cal. 1998)). As part of this deal, the EMS Act permits exclusive operators to perform non-emergency [14] services that provide a stable source of income to offset the less predictable income derived from 911 responses. "If interfacility transfers were deemed nonemergency ambulance services, outside providers could invade an exclusive operating area and 'cherry-pick' this income." Id. The court concluded that the California Legislature drafted the EMS Act to serve as a prophylactic measure against such "cherry-picking" by permitting "emergency ambulances" and providers of ALS to perform non-emergency interfacility transfers.

The Schaefer's court also adopted the argument, advanced here by Sonoma County, that carving out interfacility transfers from an exclusive operating area "would pose serious enforcement problems." Id. The court observed that allowing non-exclusive operators to provide ambulance services in non-emergency situations would require a particularized evaluation of a patient's medical needs before each ambulance run. The court reasoned that the Legislature wanted to avoid this undesirable result and thus authorized that the scope of an exclusive operating area depend on the "nature of the ambulance providing the services." Id.

Applying the principles of [\[15\] A-1 Ambulance](#) and Schaefer's, we conclude that Sonoma County's ordinances and its contract with Sonoma Life Support are protected by state action immunity. Because Sonoma Life Support provides ALS service, it is entitled to exclusively perform non-emergency interfacility transfers at an ALS level of service under our decision in A-1 Ambulance. Moreover, because Sonoma Life Support provides "emergency ambulance services," it is entitled to exclusively perform non-emergency interfacility transfers requiring an emergency ambulance, which encompasses a BLS level of service, under the decision in Schaefer's. Accordingly, we vacate the district court's injunction because the County has permissibly [\[*955\]](#) established an exclusive operating area for all "emergency ambulance services."

II.

Redwood alternatively contends that even if the California courts have disagreed with its interpretation of state law, we are not bound by state law in determining the scope of state action immunity. Redwood relies on this court's decision in Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland General Electric Co., 111 F.3d 1427 \(9th Cir. 1997\), where we held that a state public utility [\[16\]](#) commission failed to confer state action immunity on two private utilities that attempted to allocate service territories in Portland, Oregon, because the commission did not clearly express its intent to create exclusive operating areas or to displace competition between the companies. Id. at 1436-37. In Columbia Steel, we concluded that the commission's approval of an exchange of properties between the two utilities did not satisfy the threshold test for state action immunity established in Parker. Here, in contrast, we find in the EMS Act a clearly expressed state policy to create exclusive operating areas for emergency ambulance services. See Cal. Health & Safety Code §§ 1797.6, 1797.85.

Redwood also contends that the EMS Act does not clearly articulate an intent to confer state action immunity on exclusive operating areas for non-emergency BLS ambulance services. Redwood reasons that § 1797.85 does not expressly include basic life support services, but refers only to "emergency ambulance services" and "providers of advanced life support." Redwood's argument is foreclosed by the Supreme Court's decision in Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 \(1985\). [\[17\]](#) In Town of Hallie, the Court held that HN11[] a state legislature need not explicitly authorize a municipality to engage in anticompetitive conduct to confer antitrust immunity. Rather, the state legislature satisfies the "clear articulation" requirement when the logical and foreseeable result of a statute is to displace competition either with regulation or monopoly. Id. at 42-43. Relying on Town of Hallie, this court has concluded that HN12[] "virtually any anti-competitive effect . . . would appear to be well within" the EMS Act's contemplation. Mercy-Peninsula, 791 F.2d at 758. We also have recognized that the EMS Act has the foreseeable effect of excluding some providers from a local EMS system. See id.

Finally, Redwood argues that the panel should affirm the injunction because the County's Board of Supervisors, not the EMS agency, created the exclusive operating area. See Memorial Hosp. Ass'n v. Randol, 38 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 547 \(1995\). The County points out that Redwood raised this issue for the first time on appeal and therefore we should not consider it. The A-1 Ambulance court was presented with the same [\[18\]](#) claim. We noted that "as it appears not to be a purely legal issue," we would not consider the issue on appeal when it was abandoned by plaintiff at trial. A-1 Ambulance, 90 F.3d at 337 n.3. Sonoma County argues that it established the exclusive operating area by adopting the recommendation of the EMS agency, a method it contends is permissible under Randol. Because the County has demonstrated that this issue turns on the resolution of disputed facts, we do not reach it.

190 F.3d 949, *955LÁ999 U.S. App. LEXIS 21635, 18

Because Redwood is no longer the "prevailing party," we vacate the district court's award of costs and fees to Redwood in the amount of $ 47,243.25. See 15 U.S.C. § 26; Fed. R. Civ. P. 54\(d\).

The judgment is REVERSED AND INJUNCTION VACATED.

End of Document

Rockholt Furniture, Inc. v. Kincaid Furniture Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

September 10, 1999, Filed

NO. 98-6106

Reporter

1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 22436 *

ROCKHOLT FURNITURE, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, v. KINCAID FURNITURE COMPANY, INC.; RHODES FURNITURE COMPANY (TN-RHODES, INC.), doing business as Rhodes Furniture Company, Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [*1] NOT RECOMMENDED FOR FULL-TEXT PUBLICATION. SIXTH CIRCUIT RULE 206 LIMITS CITATION TO SPECIFIC SITUATIONS. PLEASE SEE RULE 206 BEFORE CITING IN A PROCEEDING IN A COURT IN THE SIXTH CIRCUIT. IF CITED, A COPY MUST BE SERVED ON OTHER PARTIES AND THE COURT. THIS NOTICE IS TO BE PROMINENTLY DISPLAYED IF THIS DECISION IS REPRODUCED.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 28243.

Prior History: ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE. 96-00588. Collier. 7-6-98.

Rockholt Furniture, Inc. v. Kincaid Furniture Co., 188 F.3d 509, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 28243 (6th Cir. Tenn., Sept. 10, 1999)

Rockholt Furniture, Inc. v. Kincaid Furniture Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24255 \(E.D. Tenn., July 6, 1998\)

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

furniture, summary judgment, district court, distributor, set price, terminated, discount, deposition testimony, independent action, civil conspiracy, anti trust law, no evidence, manufacturer, contradicts, complaints, antitrust, genuine, pricing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN1 [] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Independent action by a manufacturer in response to a distributor's complaints is permitted under antitrust law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Affidavits

HN2 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

A party may not create a factual issue by filing an affidavit, after a motion for summary judgment has been made, which contradicts its earlier deposition testimony.

Counsel: For ROCKHOLT FURNITURE, INC., Plaintiff - Appellant: Richard J. McAfee, Baker, Donelson, Bearman & Caldwell, Chattanooga, TN.

For ROCKHOLT FURNITURE, INC., Plaintiff - Appellant: Richard A. Fisher, Logan, Thompson, Miller, Bilbo, Thompson & Fisher, Cleveland, TN.

For KINCAID FURNITURE COMPANY, INC., Defendant - Appellee: Denise A. Miller, Miller, Martin & Trabue, Chattanooga, TN.

For KINCAID FURNITURE COMPANY, INC., Defendant - Appellee: John M. Murchison, Jr., Kennedy, Covington, Lobdell & Hickman, Charlotte, NC.

For RHODES FURNITURE COMPANY (TN-RHODES, INC.), Defendant - Appellee: William L. Maddux, City Attorney's Office, Chattanooga, TN.

For RHODES FURNITURE COMPANY (TN-RHODES, INC.), Defendant - Appellee: [*2] Joseph B. Haynes, Michael L. Brown, King & Spalding, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: BEFORE: NORRIS and SUHRHEINRICH, Circuit Judges, and WEBER, District Judge. *

Opinion

PER CURIAM: Plaintiff discount furniture dealer, Rockholt Furniture, Inc. ("Rockholt"), appeals the summary judgment for Defendant retail furniture competitor, Rhodes Furniture Company ("Rhodes"), and Defendant furniture manufacturer, Kincaid Furniture Company, Inc. ("Kincaid"), on Plaintiff's claims of state and federal antitrust violations, breach of an oral distributor contract, tortious interference with that contract, and civil conspiracy. Rockholt claims that Kincaid stopped supplying it with products because Rhodes complained about Rockholt's "free-riding" and "price-cutting."

The district court found no evidence of an agreement to fix-prices between Kincaid and Rhodes and no evidence of a valid distributor contract between Rockholt and Kincaid that obligated Kincaid to indefinitely sell furniture to Rockholt. Accordingly, the district court dismissed the antitrust claims and the breach [*3] of contract claims.

* The Honorable Herman J. Weber, United States District Judge for the Southern District of Ohio, sitting by designation.

Rockholt raises five issues: whether there was sufficient evidence for a jury to have found (1) violation of the Sherman Act; (2) a violation of Tennessee's antitrust laws; (3) an oral contract and breach of the contract; (4) an unlawful inducement to breach the contact; and (5) a civil conspiracy to do these acts.

We have reviewed the district court's well-reasoned opinion of July 6, 1998, granting summary judgment in favor of Defendants and adopt it as our own. We write only to address Rockholt's claim that an affidavit of Calvin Rockholt, owner and operator of Plaintiff Rockholt Furniture, Inc., creates a genuine issue of fact that a contract existed between Defendants Kincaid and Rhodes to set prices of Kincaid furniture.

In his discovery deposition Calvin Rockholt stated that Dennis Kincaid, an independent sales representative for Kincaid, told him that Kincaid terminated Rockholt in response to Rhodes' complaints about Rockholt's discount pricing. Calvin Rockholt also denied knowing whether Dennis Kincaid had an agreement with Rhodes to set prices and never mentioned any agreement between Kincaid and Rhodes to set prices. At most, Calvin Rockholt said that [*4] Dennis Kincaid told him that if Rockholt raised its profit margin to 42 percent, then Rhodes would stop complaining. J.A. at 264, 276, 289. The most that can be reasonably inferred from this evidence is Kincaid's independent action in response to a distributor's complaint of discount pricing. As the district court noted, HN1 independent action by a manufacturer in response to distributor complaints is permitted under antitrust law. See Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 731, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1988\); Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\); Bailey's Inc. v. Windsor Am., Inc., 948 F.2d 1018, 1030 \(6th Cir. 1991\).

However, after Defendants moved for summary judgment, Plaintiff Rockholt filed an affidavit of Calvin Rockholt stating that Dennis Kincaid told him that Kincaid terminated Rockholt as the result of an agreement with Rhodes to terminate Rockholt. This affidavit essentially contradicts Calvin Rockholt's earlier deposition testimony. It is well-established that HN2 a "party may not create a factual issue by filing an affidavit, [*5] after a motion for summary judgment has been made, which contradicts [its] earlier deposition testimony." Reid v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 790 F.2d 453, 460 \(6th Cir.1986\). Therefore, Calvin Rockholt's affidavit cannot be used to create a genuine issue of material fact precluding summary judgment.

Accordingly, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

Glen Holly Entertainment, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

September 14, 1999, Decided ; September 15, 1999, Filed

CV 99-02476 SVW (RCx)

Reporter

100 F. Supp. 2d 1073 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18427 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,679

GLEN HOLLY ENTERTAINMENT, INC., a California corporation dba Digital Images, Plaintiff, v. TEKTRONIX, INC., an Oregon corporation, and AVID TECHNOLOGY, INC. a Delaware corporation, Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Antitrust claims DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Core Terms

antitrust, anti trust law, editing, digital, discontinuation, product line, non-linear, customer, prices, video, manufacturer, allegations, restrained, consumers, anti-competitive, markets, antitrust claim, Defendants', injuries, lodging, Images, alleged conduct, competitor, distributor, inventory, purchaser, machines, factors, lock-in, renting

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In evaluating a motion to dismiss, a court must take all facts alleged in a complaint as true and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. However, the court need not accept conclusory allegations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN2 Private Actions, Standing

Although the antitrust laws might on their face appear to provide a cause of action to anyone whose injuries are causally related to an antitrust violation, Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to have so expansive a scope. To provide meaningful application of the antitrust laws, courts therefore developed the notion of antitrust standing. To assure that a plaintiff is the proper plaintiff to bring suit, a court must evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them. The existence of antitrust standing and antitrust injury are issues of law.

100 F. Supp. 2d 1073, *1073L⁹⁹⁹ U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18427, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 Private Actions, Standing

To assist in the evaluation of antitrust standing, courts consider five factors. One of the five factors is of particular importance: antitrust injury. Antitrust injury is regularly described as necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish antitrust standing. In other words, although antitrust injury is sometimes discussed within the context of antitrust standing, it is easier to say that antitrust injury is a necessary precondition for antitrust standing. A court will evaluate antitrust injury first and then, if antitrust injury exists, the court will turn to the remaining factors for antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Remedies

To state an antitrust claim, a plaintiff must prove the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. An injury will not qualify as antitrust injury unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Remedies

There are four requirements for antitrust injury: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. In addition to these four requirements, courts identify a fifth requirement: antitrust injury requires that the plaintiff have suffered its injury in the same market where competition is being restrained. Parties whose injuries are experienced in another market do not suffer antitrust injury. Although a plaintiff need not be a customer or competitor in the restrained market, a plaintiff does need to be a participant in the restrained market. However, there is an exception to the requirement. A plaintiff need not be a participant in the restrained market if the plaintiff's injuries are inextricably intertwined with the injuries of market participants.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Standing

If a plaintiff demonstrates antitrust injury, the court must then evaluate whether an antitrust plaintiff has antitrust standing. In other words, even if the plaintiff's injuries result from the unlawful nature of the defendants' alleged conduct, the court must assure itself that the plaintiff is the proper party to bring suit.

100 F. Supp. 2d 1073, *1073LÁ1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18427, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

In addition to antitrust injury, there are four other factors that courts regularly consider: (1) the directness of the injury, (2) the speculative measure of the harm, (3) the risk of duplicative recovery, and (4) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The antitrust laws are intended to preserve competition for the benefit of consumers. The most basic form of competition is competition on price within a commodity product. But an equally important form of competition is competition between different lines of products that achieve similar goals. Particularly for products in which differences in features are important (and in which improvement is possible), consumers benefit from the competition between manufacturers who are creating different product lines. The importance of competing product lines may be particularly important in high technology fields. The antitrust laws favor competition of product lines, particularly in high technology fields.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN9 [down] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The antitrust laws do not preclude any manufacturer from independently discontinuing a product line any more than they preclude a manufacturer from independently raising prices. When a manufacturer raises prices or discontinues a product in response to market forces, there is no antitrust violation. However, when a manufacturer discontinues a product in return for a benefit from a competitor, this conduct may violate the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN10 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

A harm may still be an antitrust harm if it might occur naturally, but in fact occurs because of an anti-competitive agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN11 [down] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The discontinuation of a product line has a negative effect on competition. Where competitors reach an agreement that results in such a negative effect in return for a benefit to the discontinuing party, such conduct may be wrongful under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN12 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Injuries which result from increased competition or lower (but non-predatory) prices are not encompassed by the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN13 [] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust laws are designed to ensure competition, so as to lower prices and to maximize quality and features at a given price. The antitrust laws are also designed to spur innovation. Nothing about the antitrust laws, however, is designed to insure that a plaintiff's inventory remains current.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN14 [] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust laws do not seek to protect consumers against the lack of support or the expense involved in a product-transition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN15 [] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust laws do not protect consumers against the diminution in value of their current inventory, even when they are locked-into that inventory and will incur expenses in transition. The stigma of obsolescence is not the sort of harm against which the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN16 [] Private Actions, Remedies

An antitrust plaintiff must suffer its harm as part of the market in which trade is being restrained. This requirement is a necessary part of antitrust injury rather than antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN17 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Standing

It is not status as a consumer or competitor that confers antitrust standing, but the relationship between the defendant's alleged unlawful conduct and the resulting harm to the plaintiff. In other words, the mere fact that one has the status of "customer" in the restrained market will not make the injury antitrust injury if the injury is suffered in another market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN18 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

Where a plaintiff fails to establish antitrust injury, a court need not consider the remaining factors for antitrust standing because the plaintiff cannot establish antitrust standing.

Counsel: For GLEN HOLLY ENTERTAINMENT INC., plaintiff: Jeffrey T Makoff, Charlotte N Makoff, Makoff Kinnear Law Offices, San Francisco, CA.

For TEKTRONIX INC., defendant: Howard A Kroll, Preston Gates & Ellis, Los Angeles, CA.

For TEKTRONIX INC., defendant: Stanley M Gorinson, John L Longstreth, Jeffrey A Marks, Preston Gates Ellis & Rouvelas Meeds, Washington, DC.

For AVID TECHNOLOGY INC., defendant: Gregory N Pimstone, Stephen J Newman, Latham & Watkins, Los Angeles, CA.

For AVID TECHNOLOGY INC., defendant: Peter A Spaeth, James C Burling, Ethan J Brown, Hale & Dorr, Boston, MA.

Judges: STEPHEN V. WILSON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: STEPHEN V. WILSON

Opinion

[*1074] ORDER DISMISSING ANTITRUST CLAIMS IN PLAINTIFF'S FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT WITH LEAVE TO AMEND

I. INTRODUCTION

As is so often the case in antitrust law, a deceptively simple set of facts forces the Court to confront a doctrinal quagmire. This case requires the Court to determine whether a rental firm, owning and renting only one type of video editing system, suffers antitrust injury if the only two manufacturers [*1075] of video editing systems conspire to discontinue this [2] particular type of video editing system and thereby render the rental firm's current inventory obsolete and undesirable.

Notwithstanding the fact that Plaintiff's injury derives from the anti-competitive nature of the Defendants' alleged conduct, the Court concludes that Plaintiff's injury is not the sort of harm that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. In addition, Plaintiff's harm is suffered in a different market than the market in which Defendants allegedly conspired. As a result, the Court concludes that Plaintiff has not demonstrated "antitrust injury" and therefore fails to state a claim. The Court will therefore DISMISS the current antitrust claims with leave to amend.

II. FACTS ALLEGED IN THE COMPLAINT RELEVANT TO PLAINTIFF'S ANTITRUST CLAIMS

HN1 In evaluating a motion to dismiss, the Court must take all facts alleged in the Complaint as true and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. However, the Court need not accept conclusory allegations. Under that standard the relevant allegations for the purposes of the current motion¹ can be summarized as follows:

[3] The current case revolves around non-linear digital editing systems. Non-linear digital editing systems are computerized video editing systems, which allow video editors the ability to easily access and rearrange images and audio tracks without physically cutting and splicing film and audio track.²

Prior to September 3, 1998, Defendants Tektronix and Avid were the only two manufacturers of non-linear digital editing systems supplying the U.S. film market. Although the Tektronix "Lightworks" line had once commanded a dominant position in part of the video editing market, the total Lightworks market share had dropped to a mere 15% by September 3, 1998. Avid held the other 85% share of the video editing market.

Plaintiff [4] Glen Holly Entertainment, Inc. ("Digital Images") is (or was) a business that specializes in video editing. Although Plaintiff Digital Images did some editing itself on behalf of movie and TV producers, it is clear that the vast majority of Plaintiff's business consisted of renting video editing equipment to producers so that the producers could do such editing themselves. At all relevant times to this Complaint, Plaintiff Digital Images based all of its operations around the Tektronix Lightworks line to the exclusion of Avid products.³

On September 3, 1998, Tektronix and Avid announced a "joint venture." As part of this [5] joint venture, Tektronix agreed to discontinue its Lightworks line and thereby cease competition with Avid. In return for allowing Avid complete dominance of market for the manufacture and sale of non-linear digital editing systems, Tektronix was given a preferred position as an Avid distributor.

The "joint venture" had a devastating effect on Plaintiff's business. Aware that [*1076] the Lightworks line had been discontinued, video producers refused to have their work edited on Lightworks products.⁴ As Plaintiff's business consisted exclusively of using and renting Lightworks products, Plaintiff's business was abruptly destroyed.

[6] III. LEGAL ANALYSIS

¹ Plaintiff has also alleged various state law fraud claims against Tektronix arising out of Tektronix statements about its future plans made before September 3, 1998. These statements are not relevant to the antitrust claims and are discussed in a separate Order.

² Although not explicitly alleged in the Complaint, it can be inferred from the various features discussed therein that digital editing systems are also advantageous because they allow easier manipulation of the images and sounds themselves, such as the addition of various special effects.

³ Digital Images describes itself in its complaint as an exclusive Lightworks "vendor." Although the entertainment industry may use this term to describe rental companies like Digital Images which rent only Lightworks equipment, the term "vendor" has apparently lead to some unnecessary confusion. The Court will refer to Digital Images in this capacity as a "lessor" of Lightworks equipment.

⁴ The Complaint does not specify why potential customers refused to use a discontinued product, but the Complaint implies that such customers recognized that they would have to use Avid products in the future and should therefore begin their training on Avid products. The Court also assumes that customers refused to use Lightworks because work done with a discontinued computer product is often difficult to use in the future; once a product line has been discontinued, it is often difficult to find equipment capable of working with files formatted for that discontinued product line.

A. Requirement of Antitrust Standing and Antitrust Injury

Defendants have both moved to dismiss the antitrust claims on the argument that Plaintiff has failed to adequately allege antitrust injury and antitrust standing. The Ninth Circuit's recent opinion in American Ad Management, Inc. v. General Tel. Co., 190 F.3d 1051, 1999 WL 694859 \(9th Cir. 1999\) ("American Ad II") contains an excellent discussion of the nature and relationship of antitrust injury and antitrust standing.

HN2 [↑] Although the antitrust laws might on their face appear to provide a cause of action to anyone "whose injuries are causally related to an antitrust violation," Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1507 \(9th Cir. 1997\), the Supreme Court has concluded that Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to have so expansive a scope. American Ad II, 190 F.3d 1051, 1999 WL 694859 (citing Associated General Contractors v. California States Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 530-35, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\)). To provide meaningful application of the antitrust laws, courts therefore developed [7] the notion of antitrust standing. To assure that a plaintiff is the proper plaintiff to bring suit, a court must "evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them." American Ad II (quoting Associated General, 459 U.S. 519 at 535, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897). The existence of antitrust standing and antitrust injury are issues of law. American Ad II.

HN3 [↑] To assist in this evaluation of antitrust standing, courts have considered five factors derived from the Supreme Court's decision in Associated General. American Ad II (citing Amarel, 102 F.3d 1494 at 1507 and Lucas Automotive Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1232 \(9th Cir. 1998\)). One of these five factors is of particular importance: antitrust injury. American Ad II; Amarel, 102 F.3d at 1507. Antitrust injury is regularly described as "necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish [antitrust] standing." American Ad II, quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\); see also Barton & Pittinos, Inc. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 118 F.3d 178, 182 \(3rd. Cir. 1997\) [8] (citing Cargill).

In other words, although antitrust injury is sometimes discussed within the context of antitrust standing, it is easier to say that antitrust injury is a necessary precondition for antitrust standing. A court will therefore evaluate antitrust injury first and then, if antitrust injury exists, the court will turn to the remaining factors for antitrust standing.

1. Antitrust Injury

HN4 [↑] To state an antitrust claim, a plaintiff "must prove the existence of 'antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\) ("ARCO") (quoting [*1077] Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\)). An injury "will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to [the antitrust laws] to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition." ARCO, 495 U.S. at 334 (internal [9] quotations and citations omitted).

a. Four Requirements Derived from ARCO

In its recent discussion, the Ninth Circuit found in the above language "four HN5 [↑] requirements for antitrust injury: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." American Ad II.

b. Plaintiff Must Usually Be A Participant In the Market Restrained by Defendants' Conduct

In addition to these four requirements, however, the Ninth Circuit has also identified a fifth requirement: antitrust injury requires that the plaintiff have suffered its injury in the same market where competition is being restrained. American Ad II. "Parties whose injuries, though flowing from that which makes the defendant's conduct unlawful, are experienced in another market do not suffer antitrust injury." Id. Although a plaintiff need not be a customer or competitor in the restrained market, a plaintiff does need to be a participant in the restrained market. Id.

However, there is an exception to this requirement. A plaintiff need not be a participant in the restrained [10] market if the plaintiff's injuries are "inextricably intertwined" with the injuries of market participants. Id. at n.5, citing Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) and Ostroff v. H.S. Crocker Co., 740 F.2d 739, 745-46 (9th Cir. 1984).

2. Antitrust Standing

HN6 If a plaintiff has demonstrated antitrust injury, the Court must then evaluate whether an antitrust plaintiff has antitrust standing. In other words, even if the plaintiff's injuries result from the unlawful nature of the defendants' alleged conduct, the Court must assure itself that the plaintiff is the proper party to bring suit.

HN7 In addition to antitrust injury, there are four other factors derived from Associated General that courts regularly consider:

- (2) the directness of the injury;
- (3) the speculative measure of the harm;
- (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and
- (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

American Ad II, citing Amarel, 102 F.3d at 1507 (in turn citing Associated General, 459 U.S. at 535).

B. Market Definition

1. Level of Specificity at Which [11] the Affected Market Must Be Defined

Defendants object that Plaintiff fails to adequately identify the affected market with sufficient particularity to allow the Court to evaluate the harm to competition. Plaintiff argues that it has alleged a per se violation and that the harm to competition is therefore presumed.

As discussed below, the Plaintiff has alleged the affected markets with sufficient particularity that the Court may evaluate antitrust injury. Because the Court finds that Plaintiff has failed to allege antitrust injury, the Court need not (and does not) consider whether Plaintiff's allegations would state a per se violation of the antitrust laws or a violation evaluated under the rule of reason.

2. There Are Two Separate Markets Disclosed in Plaintiff's Complaint: The Purchase Market and the Renting Market

In the original round of briefing for this motion, the parties disagreed on how to [*1078] characterize the Plaintiff's position in the video editing market. Digital Images argued that it was a purchaser of video equipment and therefore had antitrust standing to complain of the injury to its business. Defendants argued that Digital Images was a distributor because it [12] was merely an intermediary between the manufacturer and the end user. Defendants argued that Digital Images therefore does not have antitrust standing because distributors usually do not have standing.

As the Court indicated in its May 25, 1999 Order, both characterizations failed to recognize that there are, in fact, two separate markets revealed in Plaintiff's Complaint. The first is the purchase market for new non-linear digital editing systems. The second is the rental market for non-linear digital editing systems. Plaintiff is a customer in the purchase market, and a lessor in the rental market.⁵

⁵ In response to this characterization, Avid cited United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956), for the proposition that "markets generally are defined at the consumer level according to product substitutability." This is a correct statement of the law.

However, the relevant products are viewed not only in terms of the physical item used but also in the way in which consumers purchase the product in question. Using the automotive example discussed infra, it is obvious that the car renting market is

[13] 3. The Two Markets Relate to Non-Linear Digital Editing Equipment Generally and Not the Lightworks Line in Particular

The Court adds that the markets described in the complaint are markets for digital non-linear editing equipment generally, not markets for Lightworks equipment in particular. This is a significant distinction, because Plaintiff's allegations must be measured by the impact on the purchase market for non-linear digital editing equipment and the rental market for non-linear digital editing equipment. It may be true that Defendants have entirely destroyed the sub-markets relating to Lightworks equipment but the destruction of such a submarket will not give rise to antitrust claim.⁶

[14]

[*1079] C. Plaintiff Has Failed to State a Claim for Injury in the Purchase Market

The Court begins by noting that, as a purchaser, Plaintiff might have standing to bring an antitrust claim for increased prices in the purchase market for new non-linear digital editing systems. Although Defendants have intimated that Plaintiff is merely be an intermediary, the Court concludes that Plaintiff as lessor would be the ultimate consumer in the purchase market and any harm to Plaintiff's customers is derivative of such harm to Plaintiff. Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977); cf. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro v. Lerner, 31 F.3d 924, 929 (9th Cir. 1994) (applying antitrust analysis to determine that subtenant had no separate from the car buying market; there is very little cross-elasticity between the two markets because people do not generally choose between renting and buying cars. By contrast, it is less clear that the leasing market for automobiles is separate from the purchase market, because people may choose between leasing and buying a car.

Although it is possible that there is some cross-elasticity between renting and purchasing video editing equipment, the Court would assume that there is a reasonably clear point at which an entity does enough video editing to make it worth purchasing the equipment. The Court would further assume that the vast majority of video editors are well to one side or another of that point.

More importantly, despite an explicit invitation at Note 8 of the Court's May 25, 1999 Order, no party has chosen to disagree with the Court's characterization of two separate markets. Plaintiff, in fact, indicated that it "believes that the Court's analysis of this case in terms of two markets (purchase and rental markets) is correct."

The Court does not now rule out the possibility that, on amendment, Plaintiff may allege that there is only a single market for "use of video editing equipment." However, the Court would caution Plaintiff both that such an allegation must be made in good faith and that such an allegation runs the risk of placing Plaintiff in the position of being a distributor.

⁶ The Court draws this market definition from the allegations of the First Amended Complaint, which plainly allege a "U.S. Market for Non-Linear Film Editing Systems." See generally First Amended Complaint PP 7-10.

It is not inconceivable that Plaintiff could have alleged a market limited to Lightworks products alone. However, the Court notes that such a limited market would seem to fly in the face of the Ninth Circuit's decision in General Business Systems v. North American Philips Corp., 699 F.2d 965 (9th Cir. 1983). In that case, the Ninth Circuit rejected the argument that a market should be limited to one line of computers because purchasers were "locked into" that line of computers. Id. at 972. Instead, the Ninth Circuit held that the relevant market was all similar small business computer systems.

This is not to say that markets can never be limited to a particular product line, if there is no reasonable cross-elasticity between the particular market and markets for other brands. For example, replacement parts for Ford cars may be an entirely different market than replacement parts for Chrysler cars. See generally Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs. Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (replacement parts Kodak copiers may be cognizable market). However, this complaint focuses upon production of new systems, and courts have usually rejected the claim that one brand is its own market when there are competing brands. Little Caesar Enterprises, Inc. v. Smith, 34 F. Supp. 2d 459, 477 n.30 (E.D. Mi. 1998); cf. State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 118 S. Ct. 275, 282, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997) ("The primary purpose of the antitrust laws is to protect interbrand competition.").

RICO standing to challenge increase in master tenant's lease, despite pass through provision for increase).⁷ In addition, to the extent that Plaintiff itself engages in actual editing at a client's request, Plaintiff would also have standing because Plaintiff would be purchasing on its own behalf.

[15] In addition, the Court assumes without deciding that Plaintiff might have standing to bring suit for lack of future innovation of purchased machines in the non-linear digital editing market.⁸ Assuming without deciding that a lack of future innovation is a cognizable antitrust injury in a private antitrust action, Plaintiff would clearly have standing to the extent that Plaintiff itself engages in actual editing. The Court does not reach the question of whether Plaintiff as lessor or the end renter would be the appropriate party to bring suit.⁹

[16] However, to have standing in the purchase market, Plaintiff must allege that it is actually a purchaser in that market. In other words, Plaintiff must allege that it will pay higher prices or purchase less-capable machines as a result of the anti-competitive behavior of the Defendants. Plaintiff's complaint does not allege that Digital Images has made or intends to [*1080] make any new purchases of digital editing equipment.¹⁰

Plaintiff must make such an allegation to demonstrate injury.¹¹ The injury described in Plaintiff's current complaint does not result from Plaintiff's position in the purchase market. If Plaintiff were never to have bought another machine, Plaintiff would still have suffered the injury described in the complaint.

[17] In short, Plaintiff's allegations do not suffice to state a claim for antitrust injury in the purchase market.

D. Plaintiff's Injury as a Lessor of Obsolete Equipment in the Rental Market Does Not Constitute Antitrust Injury

1. Plaintiff's Allegations

Reduced to its essence, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants reached a deliberate decision to reduce competition by discontinuing one competing product line in a market that consisted only of two product lines. Plaintiff alleges that it was injured because its business depended upon the existence of the discontinued product line.

2. Application of American Ad II

⁷ The Court's May 25, 1999 Order contained an example that illustrated this point. Imagine that Ford and General Motors agreed not to sell their cars to any rental car agency, so that such rental car agencies would have to purchase cars at inflated prices from DaimlerChrysler. Although such rental car agencies are not the actual drivers of the cars, they are clearly the victims of the conspiracy as the parties who pay the higher prices. Moreover, although the artificial increase may be passed through in whole or in part to the ultimate car renters, it is obviously the rental agency and not the renter who has suffered the antitrust injury and who has antitrust standing.

The parallel is clear. If Digital Images pays an artificially increased price for new video editing equipment, Digital Images has suffered antitrust harm and has antitrust standing.

⁸ The Court notes that the parties have provided some briefing on the question of whether private plaintiffs may sue for an artificial constraint on innovation. Nevertheless, the Court need not and does not reach the issue now. The Court only notes that no court yet has addressed this question, and that the question requires balancing complex policy considerations.

⁹ Defendants argue that unlike a price increase, a lack of innovation is not "passed along" from lessor to renter but is felt only by the renter. Plaintiff responds that the lessor is the only party properly situated to bring suit on behalf of the end users.

As with the question above, the issue requires balancing complex policy issues which the Court need not now address.

¹⁰ In fact, the allegations in the current complaint would suggest that the destruction of demand for Plaintiff's current business has robbed it of any intention to make future purchases.

¹¹ Plaintiff must not only allege that it has made or will make a new purchase, but Plaintiff must also allege that the new purchase involved an artificially increased price or an artificially less-innovative machine. Moreover, to the extent that Plaintiff seeks to plead harm from purchasing a less-innovative machine, Plaintiff must allege that the machine is a less innovative digital editing system generally rather than a less innovative Lightworks machine.

The Ninth Circuit's recent decision in American Ad II provides a helpful guide in determining whether Plaintiff's have stated a claim for antitrust injury.

a. Unlawful Conduct: Plaintiff must first identify specific unlawful conduct by the Defendants.

The Defendants do not challenge this element, and Plaintiff has met this requirement. There is no question that Plaintiff has alleged conduct that would violate the antitrust laws.

b. Causing an Injury to Plaintiff: Plaintiff must next allege that it has suffered an injury in fact proximately caused [18] by Defendants' alleged conduct.

Again, the Defendant do not challenge this element, and Plaintiff has met this requirement. Plaintiff has alleged an injury that was proximately caused by Defendants' alleged conduct.

c. That Flows From That Which Makes the Conduct Unlawful: Plaintiff must also allege that its injury flows from the wrongful nature of Defendant's alleged conduct. As the Ninth Circuit noted in American Ad II, this requirement was articulated by the Supreme Court's seminal opinion in Bruswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)), where the Supreme Court rejected a complaint because the plaintiff's injury would not have come from the illegal nature of the defendant's alleged conduct.

Defendants do challenge this element. Defendants argue that the discontinuation of a product line is not the sort of harm against which the antitrust laws protect consumers. Defendants place heavy reliance on Lucas Automotive Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228 (9th Cir. 1998), in which the Ninth Circuit considered the claim of a tire distributor that a rival had wrongfully [19] gained control of a particular brand. The Ninth Circuit rejected the distributor's claim because the distributor's harm resulted from the natural fact of a third party's control of the brand, rather than the fact that the particular rival had gained control of the brand.

[*1081] Plaintiff responds that the discontinuation of a product line is the sort of harm against which the antitrust laws protect consumers. Moreover, the Plaintiff observes that discontinuation may be a natural event in some circumstances, but that it will not be a natural event where competitors conspire to kill one line to benefit another.

The Court agrees with Plaintiff. As the Ninth Circuit observed in American Ad II, HN8¹² the antitrust laws are "intended to preserve competition for the benefit of consumers." The most basic form of competition is competition on price within a commodity product. For example, two gold mines may compete to sell a troy ounce of gold more cheaply than the other. But an equally important form of competition is competition between different lines of products that achieve similar goals. Particularly for products in which differences in features are important (and in which improvement is [20] possible), consumers benefit from the competition between manufacturers who are creating different product lines.¹² The importance of competing product lines may be particularly important in high technology fields. See generally Susan Creighton & Perry Narncic, "Mergers and Acquisitions: Antitrust Issues in High-Tech and Emerging Markets Growth Markets," 1122 PLI/Corp. 753, 762-64, 776 (1999) (discussing fact that ¹² The Court recognizes that there are countervailing benefits in standardization of technical elements. Such standardization will create a larger market for related products, which in turn will increase economies of scale and allow more competition within the larger market. See generally, Mark A Lemley & David McGowan, Legal Implications of Network Economic Effects, 86 Calif. L. Rev. 479, 518 (1998) (discussing benefits of standard-setting organizations). Returning to the automobile context for an example, there is a clear benefit to the fact that most automobiles use certain standard sizes of tires. If tires were not standardized, tire manufacturers would have to make a different size tire for each make and model of car and the market for each tire would be much smaller.

Had Plaintiff alleged that the Defendants agreed to standardize on the Avid system but continue to compete in creative Avid systems, the Court's conclusion on this element might well be different. Put another way, the Court does not mean that competing standards are always beneficial to the consumer so long as there are sufficient competitors within a given standard. However, in the absence of competition within a standard, competition between standards is presumptively better than no competition at all.

"high technology industries generally are characterized by intense non-price competition" and tendency of competing product lines to "leapfrog" each other in advancing innovation). The Court concludes that the antitrust laws favor competition of product lines, particularly in high technology fields.

[21] Of course, HN9 the antitrust laws do not preclude any manufacturer from independently discontinuing a product line any more than they preclude a manufacturer from independently raising prices. When a manufacturer raises prices or discontinues a product in response to market forces, there is no antitrust violation. However, when a manufacturer discontinues a product in return for a benefit from a competitor, this conduct may violate the antitrust laws.

Defendants' reliance on Lucas in this regard is misplaced, inasmuch as Defendants would read Lucas to say that a harm cannot be an antitrust harm unless it could only result from anti-competitive behavior. In fact, Lucas stands for a much more limited proposition: a harm is not an antitrust harm if it would necessarily have occurred without the anti-competitive behavior. As noted in the preceding paragraph, HN10 a harm may still be an antitrust harm if it might occur naturally but in fact occurs because of an anti-competitive agreement.

Returning to the allegations of the present case, the Court has concluded that HN11 the discontinuation of a product line has a negative effect on competition. Where competitors reach an agreement [22] that results in such a negative effect in return for a benefit to the discontinuing party, such [*1082] conduct may be wrongful under the antitrust laws. Because Plaintiff's injury resulted from this discontinuation, Plaintiff's harm resulted from wrongful conduct under the antitrust laws.

d. That Is Of the Type that the Antitrust Laws Were Intended to Prevent. Finally, Plaintiff must allege an injury that is of the sort that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. As the Ninth Circuit noted in American Ad II, "injuries HN12 which result from increased competition or lower (but non-predatory) prices are not encompassed by the antitrust laws."

The parties hotly contest this issue. Plaintiff argues that its injury is not an injury that resulted from increased competition or lower prices. Defendants argue that Plaintiff's injury is nevertheless not the sort of injury that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Defendants contend that Plaintiff's injury resulted from the obsolescence of its current inventory, and that the antitrust laws are not intended to prevent inventory from becoming obsolete.¹³

[23] Clearly Plaintiff is correct that its injury is not an injury that resulted from increased competition or lower prices. If this requirement means only that Plaintiff's harm cannot result from the type of "injury" that is desired by the antitrust laws, then Plaintiff must prevail on this element as well.

However, neither the Supreme Court or the Ninth Circuit has formulated the requirement in this way. As formulated, the requirement affirmatively demands that the injury be of the sort that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. In evaluating this question, the Court finds useful a quotation from two leading antitrust commentators contained within a recent Eleventh Circuit opinion:

Many mergers have been challenged by suppliers (including dealers, franchisees, and employees providing the merging firms with distribution and other services) displaced as a result of the merger. Injury-in-fact may be doubtful when equivalent opportunities are available elsewhere. If other opportunities do not exist [as alleged by Florida Seed], displaced suppliers made redundant by a merger suffer actual losses but not antitrust injury, for the rationale for condemning a merger lies [24] in its potential for supracompetitive pricing, not in its potential for cost savings and other efficiencies. A merger that actually brings about supracompetitive prices and diminished output reduces the need for inputs and can therefore injure suppliers. Although such an injury connects more closely with the rationale for finding a violation, it is still not antitrust injury because it is neither the means by which output is restricted nor the direct concern of antitrust rules protecting product market competition.

¹³ Defendants also contend that Plaintiff's injury is an injury to an intermediary rather than a consumer, and that the antitrust laws were not designed to protect intermediaries. However, the Court rejects the concept that a harm to an intermediary is never actionable and indeed, American Ad II and Yellow Pages Cost Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp., 951 F.2d 1158 \(9th Cir. 1991\), would both stand for the proposition that harm to an intermediary may be actionable under the right circumstances. It is true that distributors rarely have antitrust standing, but this relates more to the fact that the antitrust laws do not exist to prefer one distributor over another.

Florida Seed Co., Inc. v. Monsanto Co., 105 F.3d 1372, 1375 n.3 \(11th Cir. 1997\) (quoting Philip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 381 (rev. ed. 1995)) (emphasis added by this Court). The Court notes that in this last example, the supplier's harm is not a result of lower prices or increased competition.

HN13 [↑] The antitrust laws are designed to ensure competition, so as to lower prices and to maximize quality and features at a given price. The Court will also assume, for the purposes of this Order, that the antitrust laws are designed to spur innovation. Nothing about the antitrust laws, however, [*1083] is designed to insure that a plaintiff's [25] inventory remains current.

Plaintiff's injury is integrally related to the "lock-in" phenomena noted above in Footnote 6. Both the courts and commentators have observed that consumers may be locked into particular product lines and therefore be less willing to shift to another product line. Such a "lock-in" phenomena is regularly discussed as a potential barrier to entry and there has been much discussion about the extent to which "lock-ins" can define the relevant marketplace for the purpose of determining market power. See, e.g., General Business Systems v. North American Philips Corp., 699 F.2d 965 \(9th Cir. 1983\) (rejecting market limitation to particular product line despite possible lock-in of some consumers).

Plaintiff's claim raises a different "lock-in" concern. Plaintiff's basic position is that, because it is locked into a particular product line, it suffers harm when the product line is discontinued. Owners who are locked into a product line always suffer harm when the product line is discontinued, because there are many fewer developments for the product line either from the manufacturer or from third-party vendors. Returning to the automobile example, [26] if General Motors were to cease producing Oldsmobile cars, every owner of an Oldsmobile would suffer some harm because there would be fewer after-market options and fewer Oldsmobile specialists. Indeed, every owner of an Oldsmobile might discover that, as a result of these factors, the resale value of their used car had dropped right after General Motors made the discontinuation announcement.¹⁴

In addition, if Plaintiff were to have remained in the rental market, Plaintiff would have had to shift from Lightworks to Avid and thereby incur the costs of such a product transition. In other words, the "lock-in" effect exists because shifting from one product line to another is costly, and the discontinuation of Lightworks would eventually require Plaintiff (and all other Lightworks users) to incur this expense.

In [27] the Court's research, the Court has found HN14 [↑] no suggestion that the antitrust laws seek to protect consumers against the lack of support or the expense involved in a product-transition. If Plaintiff were correct, all Lightworks owners (and all owners of any artificially discontinued system) would suffer an antitrust injury in the lessening of both manufacturer and third-party support. The Oldsmobile owners in the previous example would suffer an antitrust injury in the reduction in the used value of their cars. The Court notes that although such injury results from anticompetitive activity, it has no relation to any anti-competitive benefit, such as monopoly profits, received by the monopolist.

In other words, the Court agrees that such owners suffer an injury, but the Court concludes that this is not the sort of injury against which the antitrust laws were intended to protect. See generally Associated General, 459 U.S. at 524 ("Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation."); Exhibitors' Serv., Inc. v. American Multi-Cinema, Inc., 788 F.2d 574, 580 n.7 \(9th Cir. 1986\) [28] ("The fact that injury has occurred and that other claims have failed does not permit this court to expand the coverage of antitrust law.").

¹⁴ The Court expects that owners of Peugeot automobiles suffered such an immediate drop in the value of their Peugeot automobiles when Peugeot announced that it would cease selling cars in this country.

Put yet another way, the Court concludes that HN15¹⁵ the antitrust laws do not protect consumers against the diminution in value of their current inventory, even when they are locked-into that inventory and will incur expenses in transition. Expressed in terms used by the Plaintiff, the Court concludes that the "stigma of obsolescence" is not the sort of harm against [\[*1084\]](#) which the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.¹⁵

[29] The parallel between Areeda and Hovenkamp's last example and the current case is clear. In both cases, the potential plaintiff suffers an actual injury, proximately caused by the defendants' behavior, and traceable to the anti-competitive nature of that behavior. However, the harm to the plaintiff does not relate to the goals of the antitrust law in protecting competition in the market.

As such, the Plaintiff fails to state a claim for antitrust injury and consequently fails to state a claim for an antitrust violation.

e. Participant In the Relevant Market: In addition to the four ARCO elements discussed above, the Ninth Circuit in American Ad II identified a fifth requirement, the requirement that the plaintiff be a participant in the market in which trade was restrained by the defendants.

Plaintiff has effectively argued that it meets this requirement solely by virtue of the fact that it has been a customer in the purchase market for non-linear digital editing equipment. As a threshold matter, the Court would again note that although Plaintiff had previously been a customer in that market, there is no allegation that Plaintiff would continue to be a purchaser in that 30 market. The fact that one was a past participant in the market is not relevant for this determination.

More importantly, the Court concludes that this requirement is really a requirement that HN16¹⁶ plaintiff must suffer its harm as part of the market in which trade is being restrained. In reaching this conclusion, the Court notes that the requirement is a necessary part of antitrust injury rather than antitrust standing; this highlights the fact that the market participation requirement is related to the injury and not merely to the actor's abstract status. As the Ninth Circuit explained in American Ad II, there is no magic about one's abstract status that meets this requirement: "it HN17¹⁷ is not status as a consumer or competitor that confers antitrust standing, but the relationship between the defendant's alleged unlawful conduct and the resulting harm to the plaintiff." American Ad II. In other words, the mere fact that one has the status of "customer" in the restrained market will not make the injury antitrust injury if the injury is suffered in another market.¹⁶

[31] Plaintiff's allegations are that Defendants restrained trade in the market for new digital non-linear editing systems. However, Plaintiff did not suffer its injury as a customer in the market to buy new non-linear digital editing systems. Rather, [\[*1085\]](#) Plaintiff suffered its injury as a lessor in the market for renting out non-linear digital

¹⁵ Plaintiff's argument that the antitrust laws do protect against stigmatization is misplaced. It is true that the antitrust laws will prevent stigmatization where such stigmatization is a tool to limit competition. See, e.g., Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 (1988). The antitrust harm in those cases, however, is not the stigmatization per se but the use of stigmatization to limit competition and target competitors. See generally National Ass'n of Review Appraisers and Mortg. Underwriters, Inc. v. Appraisal Foundation, 64 F.3d 1130 (8th Cir. 1995) (holding that stigmatization not actionable where it does not restrain trade); Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397 (7th Cir. 1989) (same).

In this case, Plaintiff's injury does not result from stigmatization intended to reduce competition, but merely as a by-product of Defendants' activity in a different market.

¹⁶ Reference to the last Areeda and Hovenkamp example may help clarify this point. Assume that a steel company supplies raw steel to a forklift manufacturer. Assume further that the forklift manufacturer merges with its only rival, and the resulting firm raises prices and cuts output. The steel company sells less steel to the combined forklift company.

The steel company's injury as a supplier is not antitrust injury merely because the company also happens to be a forklift customer who buys forklifts. The steel company may, of course, bring suit for higher forklift prices -- which is the market in which the steel company is the customer.

editing systems. Plaintiff's injury was not suffered in the market where Plaintiff has alleged that Defendants restrained trade.¹⁷

Plaintiff argues that it is a party who is "inextricably intertwined" with the injuries [32] of market participants. See American Ad II at n.5 (citing Blue Shield v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) and Ostrofe v. H.S. Crocker Co., 740 F.2d 739, 745-46 (9th Cir. 1984)). However, Plaintiff has failed to focus on the proper market. It is true that Plaintiff is "inextricably intertwined" with those who rent its machines and to the extent that those customers were complaining of higher prices or less-innovative machines, Plaintiff's entanglement with those customers might give it antitrust standing. However, Plaintiff's customers are not market participants in the purchase market for new digital editing machines and Plaintiff's harm is not related to its customers' harm. Unlike the patient in McCready whose harm was related to the limitation on psychiatric services (and who was a customer in the relevant market), Plaintiff's injury is not "inextricably intertwined" with the harm suffered by end users.¹⁸ [33] Plaintiff has relied on Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1999 WL 459519 (9th Cir. 1999) to argue that a plaintiff need not be a participant in the market in which competition was restrained, if plaintiff is a participant in a related market. However, Plaintiff's reliance is misplaced for two reasons. Big Bear involved an agreement between ski lift operators, preferred lodging operators and preferred lodging referral services to cut off the supply of discounted lift tickets to disfavored lodging operators and disfavored lodging referral services. First, the plaintiffs in Big Bear suffered their harm in the lift ticket market as consumers of lift tickets, because they had to buy full-price lift tickets to create lodging packages. In addition, however, Big Bear involved a conspiracy between the resort operators and preferred lodging operators. To the extent that the plaintiff lodging operators suffered their harm in the lodging market, they were competitors with the members of the conspiracy who the conspiracy attempted to benefit. By contrast, Plaintiff in this case did not suffer its harm in the purchase market, and it is [34] not a competitor with any member of the conspiracy.

IV. CONCLUSION

The Court concludes that the allegations of the current complaint, as pled, do not demonstrate antitrust injury. HN18¹⁹ Where a plaintiff fails to establish antitrust injury, the Court need not consider the remaining factors for antitrust standing because the plaintiff cannot establish antitrust standing. Florida Seed Co., Inc. v. Monsanto Co., 105 F.3d 1372, 1375 (11th Cir. 1997).

The Court DISMISSES WITHOUT PREJUDICE the antitrust claims. [*1086] Should Plaintiff desire to amend, Plaintiff should file an amended complaint by Tuesday, November 2, 1999.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: 9/14/99

¹⁷ It is not sufficient that the plaintiff's harm be closely tied to the market in which trade was restrained, if plaintiff is not a participant in that market. See Eagle v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 812 F.2d 538, 540-41 (9th Cir. 1987) (rejecting claims of crew members who received commission on fish catch because crew members were not participants in the sale of the fish, which was the market in which canneries were allegedly restricting trade.)

¹⁸ Although Ostrofe is more helpful to Plaintiff, it still does not expand the "narrow exception" sufficiently to bring Plaintiff within the exception. Ostrofe was an employee who was terminated for refusing to participate in a bid rigging-scheme. Ostrofe does say that the employee could sue because "the injury he sustained was such an integral part of the scheme to eliminate competition." 740 F.2d at 746. However, the Ninth Circuit made it clear that by "integral part," the Ninth Circuit meant that the plaintiff's injury was necessary to achieve the conspirators' illegal end. Id. at 746 ("The discharge of Ostrofe furthered the anti-competitive scheme.")

There is no allegation in this case that the harm to Digital Images was necessary to achieve the Defendants' goal.

100 F. Supp. 2d 1073, *1086 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18427, 34

STEPHEN V. WILSON

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Western Parcel Express v. UPS of Am.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

June 15, 1999, Argued and Submitted, San Francisco, California; June 25, 1999, Memorandum Filed ; September 14, 1999, Filed

No. 98-16338

Reporter

190 F.3d 974 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14668 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,623

WESTERN PARCEL EXPRESS, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. UNITED PARCEL SERVICE OF AMERICA, INC., a Delaware corporation; UNITED PARCEL SERVICE, INC., an Ohio corporation; UNITED PARCEL SERVICE, INC., a New York corporation; and UNITED PARCEL SERVICE GENERAL SERVICES CO., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] The Publication Status of this Document has been Changed by the Court from Unpublished to Published September 14, 1999.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. CV-96-01526-CAL. Charles A. Legge, District Judge, Presiding.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

contracts, delivery, package, relevant market, barriers, district court, Antitrust, terminability, dealings, Parcel, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Pricing

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a valid claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act for predatory pricing, a plaintiff must demonstrate that defendant has sufficient market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

190 F.3d 974, *974L 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14668, 1

To demonstrate market power a plaintiff must: (1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Courts have defined entry barriers as additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants, or factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The main sources of barriers to entry to a market are: (1) legal license requirements; (2) control of an essential or superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preference; (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants; and, in some situations, (5) economies of scale.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

To justify a finding that a defendant has the power to control prices sufficient to warrant judicial intervention, entry barriers must be capable of constraining the normal operation of the market to the extent that the problem is unlikely to be self-correcting.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Where contracts could be terminated in sixty days, short duration and easy terminability substantially negated potential to foreclose competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

190 F.3d 974, *974L 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 14668, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

An exclusive dealing contract involves a commitment by a buyer to deal only with a particular seller.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Volume discount contracts are legal under antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

Contracts that do not preclude consumers from using other delivery services are not exclusive dealings contracts that preclude competition in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The decrease of plaintiff's profit margins since the deregulation of the plaintiff's market is alone insufficient to sustain an antitrust claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN11 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is a basic fact of economic life that a high market share, though it may ordinarily raise an inference of monopoly power, will not do so in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendant's inability to control prices or exclude competitors.

Counsel: Thomas Gundlach, San Francisco, California, for the plaintiff-appellant.

Paul T. Friedman, Morrison and Foerster, San Francisco, California, for the defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: Joseph T. Sneed, David R. Thompson and William A. Fletcher, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge Sneed.

Opinion by: JOSEPH T. SNEED

Opinion

[*974] ORDER

The Memorandum disposition filed June 25, 1999, is redesignated as an authored Opinion by Judge Sneed.

[*975] OPINION

SNEED, Circuit Judge:

Western Parcel Express ("WPX") appeals from the decision of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, the Honorable Charles A. Legge, Presiding, which granted summary judgment in favor of United Parcel Service of America, Inc., et al. ("UPS"). We affirm.

WPX in its complaint alleged that UPS: (1) monopolized and attempted to monopolize the package delivery market through predatory pricing; and (2) illegally [*2] restrained trade in the package delivery market by entering into exclusive dealing contracts with buyers. The parties stipulated to bifurcated proceedings and limited discovery to the issue of whether UPS had the required market power in the relevant market. At the close of discovery on this issue, UPS moved for summary judgment, arguing that WPX failed to establish the existence of market power in the relevant market. The district court agreed and granted summary judgment in favor of UPS. WPX now appeals that Order. We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291 and affirm.

I.

HN1 [↑] To state a valid claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act for predatory pricing, WPX must demonstrate that UPS has sufficient market power. See Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 \(9th Cir. 1995\). HN2 [↑] To demonstrate market power WPX must:

(1) define the relevant market, (2) show that the defendant owns a dominant share of that market, and (3) show that there are significant barriers to entry and show that existing competitors lack the capacity to increase their output in the short run.

Id. (citations omitted). [*3] The district court determined that WPX failed either to establish the proper boundaries of the relevant market or to demonstrate UPS' market share in that relevant market. We agree. Moreover, even if WPX has established properly the contours of the relevant market and has demonstrated that UPS owns a dominant share in that market, we nevertheless conclude that WPX's claims under Section 2 must fail because it cannot demonstrate that there are significant barriers to entry or expansion in the market it has defined. We focus on that element for purposes of this disposition.

II.

HN3 [↑] We have defined entry barriers as "additional long-run costs that were not incurred by incumbent firms but must be incurred by new entrants," or "factors in the market that deter entry while permitting incumbent firms to earn monopoly returns." Los Angeles Land Co. v. Brunswick Co., 6 F.3d 1422, 1427-28 \(9th Cir. 1993\). HN4 [↑] "The main sources of entry barriers are: (1) legal license requirements; (2) control of an essential or superior resource; (3) entrenched buyer preference; (4) capital market evaluations imposing higher capital costs on new entrants; and, in some situations, (5) economies of [*4] scale." Rebel Oil, 51 F.3d at 1439. HN5 [↑] "To justify a finding that a defendant has the power to control prices" sufficient to warrant judicial intervention, "entry barriers must be . . . capable of constraining the normal operation of the market to the extent that the problem is unlikely to be self-correcting." Id. (citing United States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 663 \(9th Cir. 1990\)).

WPX, in this appeal, claims that UPS' exclusive dealings contracts have created insurmountable barriers to entry. WPX argues that it presented sufficient evidence to withstand summary judgment that UPS entered into exclusive dealing contracts that will significantly constrain WPX's access to the parcel delivery market and likewise will prevent other carriers from entering the market. The district court rejected WPX's exclusive dealings contracts argument, concluding that the contracts were not actually exclusive dealings contracts that hindered competition. We agree.

[*976] First, the challenged contracts had termination provisions that allowed a customer to terminate the contract for any reason with very little notice. See Omega Environmental, Inc. v. Gilbarco, Inc., 127 F.3d 1157, 1163 \(9th Cir. 1997\) [*5] (holding that HN6 [↑] where contracts could be terminated in sixty days, "short duration and easy terminability" substantially negated potential to foreclose competition). In addition to being terminable on short notice, a UPS customer could cancel the contract for "virtually any reason at any time."

Second, the contracts did not foreclose consumers from entering into contracts with other delivery service providers. A company that entered into one of these contracts with UPS could nonetheless contract with another carrier for parcel delivery service. HN7 [↑] "An exclusive dealing contract involves a commitment by a buyer to deal only with a particular seller." L. Sullivan, Law of Antitrust § 163, at 471 (1977). The district court properly concluded that UPS' contracts are volume discount contracts, not exclusive dealings contracts. Such HN8 [↑] volume discount contracts are legal under antitrust law. See Fedway Assocs., v. United States Treasury, 298 U.S. App. D.C. 112, 976 F.2d 1416, 1418 \(D.C. Cir. 1992\) (holding that volume discount contracts provide pro-competitive effects). HN9 [↑] Because the contracts do not preclude consumers from using other delivery services, they are not exclusive [*6] dealings contracts that preclude competition in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.¹

WPX failed to present evidence that there were barriers to expansion in the relevant market. HN10 [↑] While it is true that WPX's profit margins have decreased since the deregulation of the package delivery market, that fact alone is insufficient to sustain an antitrust claim. UPS has presented evidence that during the time period in which WPX alleges antitrust injury, the market has actually expanded; other carriers, including Roadway Packaging Systems, Inc. ("RPS"), have entered the market.

Moreover, WPX has seen significant increase in profits during that time period as well. Between 1994 and 1997, WPX's revenues in the geographic market it defined (i.e., California, Arizona and [*7] Nevada) grew from $ 29 million to $ 47 million. Although it is true that WPX's profit margin decreased from a remarkable rate of twenty-percent in 1993 to a robust, albeit significantly lower profit margin of ten-percent in 1997, WPX still has experienced significant growth.

In addition, competitors such as RPS have aggressively entered the market during the relevant time period. Since deregulation of the package delivery market in 1995, RPS has penetrated the next-day, ground based package delivery market and established a substantial presence there. RPS now offers next-day, local and regional coverage throughout a significant portion of California, Arizona and Nevada.² Uncontradicted evidence also demonstrates that both UPS and WPX consider RPS a significant competitor. In fact, in a WPX business plan, WPX proclaimed that RPS' anticipated entry into the next-day, ground-based package delivery market in California is "Western Parcel Express's single greatest threat."

¹ WPX also contends that these contracts unreasonably restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Because we conclude that the contracts are not exclusive dealings contracts as WPX argues, the Section 1 claim fails as well.

² WPX contended at oral argument that RPS does not provide next-day service in the western United States. WPX's own evidence belies this assertion. WPX presented evidence in the form of declarations that demonstrate that RPS does indeed provide next-day delivery service in the western United States and continues to develop routes and expand its next-day presence in the market in that region.

[8] Federal Express ("FedEx") now owns RPS, thereby strengthening RPS' presence in the relevant package delivery market as defined by WPX. In addition, FedEx, independent of its purchase of RPS, [*977] has made significant headway into the package delivery market in the western United States. UPS presented evidence that FedEx has spent $ 200 to $ 300 million per year over the last several years developing its ground delivery capabilities so that it can compete in the market. To compete more effectively with UPS and WPX in the western United States, FedEx has undertaken the task of increasing its route density in the region and has broadened the services it offers to consumers. FedEx now has expanded its services and provides consumers with the opportunity to deliver their time-sensitive packages, via ground delivery, at a cost that competes with prices set by UPS and WPX.

We therefore conclude, based upon uncontradicted evidence in the record, that UPS does not have nor will have the ability to exclude competition in the relevant market as defined by HN11[] WPX. "Time after time, we have recognized . . . [a] basic fact of economic life: A high market share, though it may ordinarily raise an inference [9] of monopoly power, will not do so in a market with low entry barriers or other evidence of a defendant's inability to control prices or exclude competitors." Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d at 664 (quoting Oahu Gas Serv., Inc. v. Pacific Resources Inc., 838 F.2d 360, 366 (9th Cir. 1988)). There is simply no evidence before us that there are unnatural market barriers precluding robust competition in the relevant market.

For the foregoing reasons, the decision of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

Noack v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, Inc.

Court of Appeal of Florida, First District

September 16, 1999, Opinion Filed

CASE NO. 98-3826

Reporter

742 So. 2d 433 *; 1999 Fla. App. LEXIS 12381 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,656; 24 Fla. L. Weekly D 2153

LYNNE NOACK, HARRY NOACK, AND NOACK AND ASSOCIATES INSURANCE AND FINANCIAL SERVICES, INC., Appellants, v. BLUE CROSS AND BLUE SHIELD OF FLORIDA, INC.; FLORIDA COMBINED LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY; FLORIDA COMBINED AGENCY, INC.; HEALTH OPTIONS, INC.; AFFILIATED INSURANCE OF PENSACOLA, INC. AND MARK TUBBS, Appellees.

Subsequent History: [1] Released for Publication October 4, 1999.

Subsequent appeal at, Remanded by Noack v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Fla., Inc., 2003 Fla. App. LEXIS 18076 \(Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist., Nov. 26, 2003\)

Prior History: An appeal from the Circuit Court for Escambia County. Joseph Q. Tarbuck, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed in part, reversed in part, remanded.

Core Terms

inducement, antitrust, promise, insurance business, reformation, cause of action, McCarran-Ferguson Act, alleges, exempts, insurer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action, the trial court must accept the allegations of a complaint as true. Likewise, the appellate court must accept the facts alleged in a complaint as true when reviewing an order that determines the sufficiency of the complaint.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Dismissal of Appeals > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN2 [down] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Whether a complaint is sufficient to state a cause of action is an issue of law. Consequently, a ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action is reviewable on appeal by the de novo standard of review.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Contracts Law > Contract Formation

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Compensatory Damages > Types of Losses > Economic Losses

HN3 [down] Contracts, Contract Formation

Fraud in the inducement to make a contract is not barred by the economic loss rule.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Contracts Law > Contract Formation

HN4 [down] Contracts, Contract Formation

As a general rule, fraud cannot be predicated upon a mere promise not performed. However, under certain circumstances, a promise may be actionable as fraud where it can be shown that the promisor had a specific intent not to perform the promise at the time the promise was made, and the other elements of fraud are established.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Contracts Law > Contract Formation

HN5 [down] Contracts, Contract Formation

In order for a promise of future performance to serve as a predicate for a claim of fraud, it must be established that the promise was made with the present intention not to comply.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Contracts Law > Contract Formation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

HN6 [down] Contracts, Contract Formation

Neither is the presence of a merger clause an impediment to a cause of action for fraud in the inducement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Evidence > Admissibility > Statements as Evidence > Parol Evidence

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Parol Evidence

HN7 Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

Parol evidence is admissible in a reformation action in equity for the purpose of demonstrating that the true intent of the parties was something other than that expressed in the written instrument.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Reformation

Evidence > Admissibility > Statements as Evidence > Parol Evidence

Real Property Law > Deeds > Remedies > Damages

HN8 Remedies, Reformation

The doctrine of merger in deed, under which preliminary understandings, negotiations, and agreements regarding a conveyance are held to merge in the deed leaving it as the sole expositor of the parties' intent, is inapplicable in an action seeking the equitable remedy of reformation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Insurers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > General Overview

HN9 Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The United States Supreme Court, interpreting the McCarran-Ferguson Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-1015 \(1997\), exemption, holds that the act exempts only the "business of insurance" not the "business of insurance companies" from antitrust claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN10 Private Actions, Remedies

A complaint which does not allege a per se violation must in sum contain three elements: a) a specifically defined market; b) an allegation that defendants possessed the ability to affect price or output; and c) an allegation that plaintiff's exclusion from the market did affect or was intended to affect the price or supply of goods in that market. It is not enough to allege that plaintiffs were injured; there must be an allegation of harm to competition in general.

Counsel: Michael J. Pugh of Levin and Tannenbaum, P.A., Sarasota and Daniel Stewart, Milton, for Appellants.

Nancy W. Gregoire, W. Edward McIntyre, and Daniel Alter of Bunnell, Woulfe, Krischbaum, Keller, Cohen & McIntyre, P.A., Ft. Lauderdale for Appellees Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Florida, Inc., Florida Combined Life Insurance Company, Inc., and Health Options, Inc.; T.A. Borowski, Jr., of Emmanuel, Sheppard & Condon, Pensacola, for Appellees Affiliated Insurance of Pensacola, Inc. and Mark Tubbs; and Donald H. Partington of Clark, Partington, Hart, Larry, Bond, Stackhouse & Stone, Pensacola, for Appellees.

Judges: LAWRENCE, J., ERVIN and BROWNING, JJ., CONCUR.

Opinion by: LAWRENCE

Opinion

[*434] LAWRENCE, J.

Harry Noack, Lynne Noack, and Noack and Associates Insurance and Financial Services, Incorporated (Noack), appeal an order dismissing with prejudice their second amended complaint against Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Florida, Incorporated; Florida Combined Life [2] Insurance Company; Florida Combined Agency, Incorporated; and Health Options, Incorporated (Blue Cross). We affirm in part, and reverse in part.

Noack's second amended complaint raises multiple claims surrounding the cancellation of its contract to sell insurance as an agent of Blue Cross. We affirm without discussion the dismissal of the counts which sought to allege a cause of action based upon a written contract, an oral contract, bad faith, and conspiracy.

We write to address the facial sufficiency of Noack's counts based upon fraud in the inducement, reformation, and antitrust. Our court tells us:

HN1 [↑] When ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action, the trial court must accept the allegations of a complaint as true. Likewise, the appellate court must accept the facts alleged in a complaint as true when reviewing an order that determines the sufficiency of the complaint. HN2 [↑] Whether a complaint is sufficient to state a cause of action is an issue of law. Consequently, a ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action is reviewable on appeal by the de novo standard of review.

Sarkis v. Pafford Oil Co., 697 So. 2d 524, 526 (Fla. 1st DCA 1997) [3] (citations omitted) (emphasis added).

Fraud in the Inducement

The trial court's order holds that Noack's claim alleging fraud in the inducement is barred by the economic loss rule; this holding is error, for our court holds that HN3 [↑] "fraud in the inducement to make a contract is not barred by the economic loss rule." Sarkis, 697 So. 2d at 527. The order also recites that a claim for fraud cannot be predicated upon a mere promise that was not performed; this too is error, as our sister court observes:

HN4 [↑] As a general rule, fraud cannot be predicated upon a mere promise not performed. However, under certain circumstances, a promise may be actionable as fraud where it can be shown that the promisor had a specific intent not to perform the promise at the time the promise was made, and the other elements of fraud are established.

....

HN5 [↑] In order for a promise of future performance to serve as a predicate for a claim of fraud, it must be established that the promise was made with the present intention not to comply.

Alexander/Davis Properties, Inc. v. Graham, 397 So. 2d 699, 706, 707-08 (Fla. 4th DCA 1981) (citations [4] omitted) (emphasis added). HN6 [↑] Neither is the presence of a merger clause an impediment to a cause of action for fraud in the inducement. See Wilson v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 622 So. 2d 25, 27 (Fla. 2d DCA 1993) (it is a well-established rule that "alleged fraudulent misrepresentations may be introduced [*435] into evidence to prove fraud notwithstanding a merger clause in a related contract").

Noack's complaint specifically alleges that Blue Cross, through its agent Suber, represented that if Noack received a written release from Tubbs, Noack would immediately become general agents able to sell Blue Cross insurance; that Suber's representation was made to induce Noack not to file suit against Tubbs and Blue Cross; that Suber's representation was false when made and Suber, when a general release was received, did not immediately make Noack a general agent. The complaint further alleges that Suber represented that if Noack moved out of their home into a commercial setting, and if Noack hired a secretary, then Noack would immediately become a general agent able to sell Blue Cross insurance and as long as Noack performed adequately Noack would remain a general agent; that [5] Suber made these representations to induce Noack to forego filing suit to enforce earlier promises; that Noack complied with the conditions; and still Blue Cross withheld a contract. Noack's complaint thus states particular misrepresentations of fact. Noack further alleges that these representation were "false when made," "known by [Tubbs and Blue Cross] to be untrue when they were made," and "were made with intent to deceive, mislead, and defraud." Noack further alleges reliance, and damage. The trial court thus erred in dismissing Noack's action for fraud in the inducement.

Reformation

The trial court concluded that Noack's count seeking to reform its contract with Blue Cross is barred by the written contract's merger clause, and the parol evidence rule. This is error. Our court holds:

HN7 Parol evidence is admissible in a reformation action in equity for the purpose of demonstrating that the true intent of the parties was something other than that expressed in the written instrument. By the same token, HN8 "the doctrine of merger in deed, under which preliminary understandings, negotiations, and agreements regarding a conveyance are held to merge in the deed leaving [6] it as the sole expositor of the parties' intent, is inapplicable in an action seeking the equitable remedy of reformation."

Ayers v. Thompson, 536 So. 2d 1151, 1154 (Fla. 1st DCA 1988) (emphasis added) (affirming the trial court's reformation of a deed, and reversing for clarification of findings on damages).

Antitrust

The trial court dismissed Noack's count based on the Florida Antitrust Act ¹ because "the McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts insurance business from antitrust law." HN9 The United States Supreme Court, interpreting the McCarran-Ferguson Act ² exemption, holds that the act exempts only the "business of insurance" not the "business of insurance companies" from antitrust claims. Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 217, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 (1979) (holding that the McCarran-Ferguson Act exempts from antitrust laws the business of insurance and not the business of insurers, and where the challenged agreements were merely arrangements for the purchase of goods and services by the insurer, enabling the insurer to minimize costs and maximize profits, and where the agreements [7] did not involve underwriting or spreading of risk, the agreements were not the "business of insurance" so as to be exempt from antitrust [*436] scrutiny by virtue of the McCarran-Ferguson Act). The instant claim has nothing to do with the spreading of insurance risks or the issuance of insurance policies, that is, the relationship between an insurer and its insureds. Id. (to include every business decision of an insurance company in the "business of insurance" would be plainly contrary to the statutory language). The court below thus erred in dismissing Noack's antitrust claim on the basis of the McCarran-Ferguson Act.

¹ The relevant statutes provide: "Every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in this state is unlawful"; "It is unlawful for any person to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of trade or commerce in this state." §§ 542.18, 542.19, Fla. Stat. (1997).

² See 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1011-1015 (1997).

[8] We agree that Noack's complaint alleges injury to the market, rather than mere injury to Noack. See HN10 [Footnote] Greenberg v. Mount Sinai Med. Ctr., 629 So. 2d 252, 257 (Fla. 3d DCA 1993) ("A complaint which does not allege a per se violation must in sum contain three elements: a) a specifically defined market; b) an allegation that defendants possessed the ability to affect price or output; and c) an allegation that plaintiff's exclusion from the market did affect or was intended to affect the price or supply of goods in that market. It is not enough to allege that plaintiffs were injured; there must be an allegation of harm to competition in general.") (citations and footnote omitted).

We thus hold that the court below correctly dismissed Noack's claims for breach of oral and written contract, bad faith, and conspiracy, but incorrectly dismissed with prejudice claims for fraud in the inducement, reformation, and antitrust. We accordingly affirm in part and reverse in part the order below, and remand for consistent proceedings.

ERVIN and BROWNING, JJ., CONCUR.

End of Document

Amundson & Assocs. Art Studio v. Nat'l Council on Comp. Ins.

Court of Appeals of Kansas

September 17, 1999, Opinion Filed

No. 81,028

Reporter

26 Kan. App. 2d 489 *; 988 P.2d 1208 ; 1999 Kan. App. LEXIS 733 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,668

AMUNDSON & ASSOCIATES ART STUDIO, LTD., d/b/a THE AMUNDSON GROUP, Individually and representing a class of similarly situated persons, Appellant, v. NATIONAL COUNCIL ON COMPENSATION INSURANCE, INC., et al., Appellees.

Subsequent History: As Amended December 7, 1999.

Prior History: [1] Appeal from Wyandotte District Court; BILL D. ROBINSON, JR., judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

rates, carriers, insurance commissioner, filed rate doctrine, insurers, residual, workers' compensation, regulation, antitrust, damages, argues, antitrust statute, allegations, conspiracy, insurance company, injunctive, Square, courts, anti trust law, insurance code, provisions, expertise, contends, shipper, collateral attack, regulatory scheme, equitable relief, district court, discriminatory, price-fixing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1 [down arrow] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

When a motion to dismiss under Kan. Stat. Ann. § 60-212\(b\)\(6\) raises an issue concerning the legal sufficiency of a claim, the question must be decided from the well-pleaded facts of plaintiff's complaint. A court must accept the plaintiff's description of the events, along with any inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom. However, this does not mean the court is required to accept conclusory allegations on the legal effects of events the plaintiff has set out if these allegations do not reasonably follow from the description of what happened or if these allegations are contradicted by the description itself. Dismissal is justified only when the allegations of the petition clearly demonstrate plaintiff does not have a claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN2 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-101 defines a trust to be a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, to increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to control the cost or rates of insurance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Insurance Law > Remedies > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

HN3 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-112 provides that all trusts, combinations, and agreements in restraint of trade and free competition are unlawful, including such trusts between persons or corporations, designed or which tend to control the cost or rate of insurance. Entities violating these sections are subject to suit seeking actual damages, treble damages, and reasonable attorney fees.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4 [down] Legislation, Interpretation

It is a settled rule of statutory construction that where an irreconcilable conflict exists between statutes, the latest enactment will be held to supersede, repeal or supplant the earlier by implication; the later enactment must prevail.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Approval Process

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Insurance Fraud > Penalties

Insurance Law > Regulators > State Insurance Commissioners & Departments > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

HN5 [down] Rate Regulation, Approval Process

The Kansas Legislature has given the insurance commissioner the authority to administer all laws relating to insurance and insurance companies; included therein is the duty of setting or approving insurance rates. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 40-102. The insurance commissioner is deemed to have the expertise to determine proper rates. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 40-102 and Kan. Stat. Ann. § 40-110 (Supp. 1998). The Kansas Workers Compensation Act, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-501 et seq., contains a comprehensive regulatory scheme for insurance companies, including provisions for punishing violators of the act. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-563.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > General Overview

Insurance Law > Regulators > State Insurance Commissioners & Departments > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

26 Kan. App. 2d 489, *489 P.2d 1208, 1208 LEXIS 733, 1

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Judicial Review

Insurance Law > ... > Hearings & Orders > Judicial Review > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > Discrimination

HN6 [PDF] Administrative Law, Judicial Review

The Kansas insurance code contains a comprehensive scheme for the insurance commissioner to regulate, control, and establish rates, and guard against excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory rates. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 40-101 et seq. Further, the insurance code provides that all decisions and findings of the insurance commissioner are subject to review in accordance with the Act for Judicial Review and Civil Enforcement of Agency Actions. Kan. Stat. Ann. § 40-251\(b\); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 40-778.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

HN7 [PDF] Federal Regulations, Antitrust Regulations

The Kansas Legislature has authorized cooperation among rating organizations and insurers, which tends to be in direct conflict with principles of antitrust. It is also clear the insurance commissioner has strict control over these cooperative activities in order to prevent violations of the insurance code.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

HN8 [PDF] Insurance Law, Industry Practices

See Kan. Stat. Ann. § 40-956\(e\) (Supp. 1998).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

HN9 [PDF] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine bars antitrust suits alleging competitive injury resulting from the payment of a rate filed with a federal regulatory agency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 [PDF] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine has been held to apply equally to rates filed with state agencies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine stands for the proposition that because an administrative agency is vested with the authority to determine what rate is just and reasonable, courts should not adjudicate what a reasonable rate might be in a collateral lawsuit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

HN12 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

The Kansas antitrust act, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-101, is broader than the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1011-15, since it expressly applies to the business of insurance.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Industry Practices, Rate Regulation

Kan. Stat. Ann. 40-955\(e\) (Supp. 1998) provides that in reviewing a rate filing, the commissioner may require the insurer or rating organization to provide, at the insurer's or rating organization's expense, all information necessary to evaluate the reasonableness of the filing.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employer Liability > Third Party Insurers

HN14 [blue icon] Insurance Law, Industry Practices

See Kan. Stat. Ann. § 44-562.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > Approval Process

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

Insurance Law > Regulators > State Insurance Commissioners & Departments > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > State Insurance Commissioners & Departments > Authorities & Powers > Examinations & Investigations

HN15 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

If proposed rates are filed with and approved by the insurance commissioner, the filed rate doctrine applies notwithstanding any allegation that the rates were affected by nonrate conduct or that such nonrate conduct was not regulated by the insurance commissioner. The insurance commissioner has the sole power of regulating the rates and that power includes examining any information deemed necessary to determine the excessiveness or adequacy of the rates.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

HN16 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Any claim for injunctive or equitable relief in the antitrust area is permissible by the government, not individuals.

Syllabus

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT

1. The Kansas Legislature has given the insurance commissioner the authority to administer all laws relating to insurance and insurance companies, which includes the duty of setting and approving insurance rates.
2. The Kansas insurance code contains a comprehensive scheme for the insurance commissioner to regulate, control, and establish rates, and guard against excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory rates.
3. The "filed rate doctrine" is recognized in Kansas.
4. The Kansas antitrust statutes contain express language seemingly prohibiting the control of insurance costs or rates. However, with the enactment of the insurance rating laws, the Kansas Legislature gave the insurance commissioner, not the market place, the power to control insurance and insurance companies.
5. Where an irreconcilable conflict exists between statutes, the latest enactment will be held to supersede, repeal, or supplant the earlier.
6. The availability of injunctive relief concerning insurance rates is discussed.

Counsel: Scott A. McCreight, Steven M. Sprenger, and [2] Korey A. Kaul, of Sprenger & McCreight, L.C., of Kansas City, Missouri, for the appellant.

Reid F. Holbrook and Brent G. Wright, of Holbrook, Heaven & Osborn, P.A., of Kansas City, and David H. Bamberger, of Piper & Marbury, L.L.P., of Washington, D.C., for appellee United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company.

Jerome T. Wolf and Curtis E. Woods, of Sonnenschein, Nath & Rosenthal, of Kansas City, Missouri, and Mark F. Horning and Shannen W. Coffin, of Steptoe & Johnson, L.L.P., of Washington, D.C., for appellees Aetna Casualty & Surety Company and Travelers Insurance Company.

Floyd R. Finch, of Blackwell, Sanders, Matheny, Weary & Lombardi, L.L.P., of Kansas City, Missouri, for appellee Houston General Insurance Company.

Lori R. Schultz, of Morrison & Hecker L.L.P., of Kansas City, Missouri, for appellee Liberty Mutual Insurance Company.

David W. Hauber, of Boddington & Brown, Chtd., of Kansas City, and David J. Healy, of Arnold, White & Durkee, of Houston, Texas, for appellees Continental Western Insurance Company and Hartford Underwriters Insurance Company.

Roger D. Stanton, of Berkowitz, Feldmiller, Stanton, Brandt, Williams & Stueve, L.L.P., of Kansas [3] City, Missouri, and James R. Safley, of Robins, Kaplan, Miller & Ciresi, L.L.P., of Minneapolis, Minnesota, for appellee Employers Insurance of Wausau.

Edward M. Boyle, of Payne & Jones, Chartered, of Overland Park, for appellee Commercial Union Insurance Company.

Robert B. Sullivan and Miriam Glueck, of Polsinelli, White, Vardeman & Shalton, a Professional Corporation, of Overland Park, for appellee Granite State Insurance Company.

Wyatt A. Hoch and Martha Aaron Ross, of Foulston & Siefkin, L.L.P., of Wichita, John A. Karaczynski, of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld, L.L.P., of Los Angeles, California, and Kevin J. Arquit and Gary R. Carney, of Rogers & Wells, of New York, New York, for appellee National Council on Compensation Insurance, Inc.

Leslie A. Greathouse, of Shughart, Thomson & Kilroy, of Overland Park, R. Lawrence Ward, of Shughart, Thomson & Kilroy, of Kansas City, Missouri, and Richard G. Parker, of O'Melveny & Myers, L.L.P., of Washington, D.C., for appellee Insurance Company of North America.

William R. Sampson and Timothy M. O'Brien, of Shook, Hardy & Bacon, L.L.P., of Overland Park, and James P. Kleinberg, of McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enerson, [4] L.L.P., of San Jose, California, for appellees Fireman's Fund Insurance Company and National Surety Corporation.

William R. Sampson and Timothy M. O'Brien, of Shook, Hardy & Bacon, L.L.P., of Overland Park, and Stanley B. Block, of Vedder, Price, Kaufman & Kammholz, of Chicago, Illinois, for appellee Continental Insurance Company. Wyatt A. Hoch and James D. Oliver, of Foulston & Siefkin L.L.P., of Wichita, for amici curiae American Insurance Association, Alliance of American Insurers, and National Association of Independent Insurers.

Judges: Before PIERRON, P.J., RULON, J., and ROBERT J. FLEMING, District Judge, assigned.

Opinion by: PIERRON

Opinion

[*491] [1209] PIERRON, J.: Amundson & Associates Art Studio, Ltd. (Amundson) appeals from the district court's dismissal of its cause of action for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Amundson filed a class action lawsuit against the National Council on Compensation Insurance, Inc., and a number of insurance companies (collectively NCCI) challenging their conduct in managing the "residual" market for workers compensation insurance in Kansas. Amundson alleges that NCCI violated the Kansas Antitrust Act by conspiring to fix costs associated [5] with the residual market.

[1210] Amundson and the class of similarly situated persons it represents are Kansas employers. Kansas employers are generally required to purchase workers compensation insurance to protect their employees. See K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 44-532\(b\).

There are at least two bodies of employers purchasing workers compensation insurance in Kansas. The majority of employers purchase workers compensation insurance in the "voluntary market." In the voluntary market, employers purchase the insurance at the prevailing rate, based upon their individual circumstances. Employers who are considered high risk are typically unable to purchase workers compensation insurance in the voluntary market because of the nature of their businesses, their injury record, and the increased risk of insuring them. To remedy this problem, the legislature has mandated that every insurance company writing workers compensation insurance in Kansas participate in a plan for the equitable apportionment of these high risk employers. K.S.A. 40-2109. Such a plan is known as the involuntary or "residual" market.

NCCI is a corporation owned and operated by its 700 member insurance carriers. NCCI is an insurance [6] "rating organization" licensed in Kansas to develop and file proposed rates for the insurance commissioner's approval. NCCI proposes rates that will be charged to employers within the residual market. The plan used in Kansas for the equitable apportionment of these high risk employers was promulgated by NCCI.

The rates proposed by NCCI are filed with the insurance commissioner, who has the authority to approve, reject, or modify the rates.

[*492] NCCI delegates responsibility for the daily administration of the risks written in the residual market to certain insurers known as "servicing carriers." The residual market imposes significant risk on insurers because employers insured in the residual market generally have worse loss experience than employers who are able to obtain coverage in the voluntary market. In order to mitigate these risks, most insurers in Kansas have entered into a contractual arrangement known as the National Workers' Compensation Reinsurance Pool.

NCCI selects certain insurers to act as servicing carriers. These servicing carriers accept the risks required by the plan, thereby fulfilling the obligation of all pool participating companies. The servicing carriers issue [7] policies, collect premiums, investigate and pay claims, and provide other services to residual market policyholders. The servicing carriers then reinsurance 100 percent of their assigned risks with the pool companies. By this means, the servicing carriers avoid liability themselves for any loss sustained by the employers in the residual market. Any loss experienced in the residual market is allocated to every insurer writing workers compensation insurance in Kansas, based on each company's market share. The cost of losses experienced in the residual market and allocated to each insurer writing workers compensation insurance is treated as an expense in setting a company's rates.

As compensation for performing their duties, these service carriers are awarded fees (a servicing carrier allowance) in the form of a percentage of the premiums paid by the employers purchasing insurance in the residual market. In the past, NCCI has had complete discretion in picking the servicing carriers and determining the rate of compensation paid to them. NCCI has not chosen the servicing carriers based upon a competitive bidding process.

Amundson alleges that the servicing carrier allowance was excessive [8] because NCCI selected servicing carriers and determined the allowance by mutual agreement rather than by competitive bidding. Amundson also alleges that NCCI conspired with the other defendants to systematically and fraudulently understate the net operating gain and/or overstate the net operating loss for the residual market. Amundson alleges rates are forced up by the use [*493] of the servicing carrier fees, which are undisclosed noncompetitive expenses, and loss factors that would have been demonstrably lower in a competitive residual market, thereby adversely affecting purchasers of workers compensation insurance in both the voluntary and residual markets.

Amundson contends a competitive bidding environment for the selection of the servicing [1211] carriers would reduce the overall rates in both markets.

Amundson filed a petition alleging damages as a result of the price-fixing conspiracy among the defendants. The first count asserted a violation of the Kansas antitrust laws, K.S.A. 50-101 et seq., and sought treble damages under K.S.A. 50-801\(b\). The remaining counts alleged common-law fraud, unjust enrichment, and a civil conspiracy, and requested compensation, fees and costs, and [9] an injunction prohibiting further illegal conduct. NCCI removed the case to federal court, which remanded it to state court for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

NCCI filed a motion to dismiss based primarily on the "filed rate doctrine." The district court agreed and concluded that Amundson's allegations were an impermissible collateral attack on rates approved by the insurance commissioner and thus barred by the filed rate doctrine. The court stated that to allow Amundson to challenge the rates under the provisions of the antitrust law would infringe upon the authority of the insurance commissioner. The court indicated that no matter how Amundson framed the issue, it was challenging the rates established by the insurance commissioner.

Amundson argues the district court erred in granting NCCI's motion to dismiss based on the filed rate doctrine.

Our review of a motion to dismiss is clearly established. HN1 When a motion to dismiss under K.S.A. 60-212\(b\)\(6\) raises an issue concerning the legal sufficiency of a claim, the question must be decided from the well-pledged facts of plaintiff's complaint. A court must accept the plaintiff's description of the events, along with any inferences [10] reasonably to be drawn therefrom. However, this does not mean the court is required to accept conclusory allegations on the legal effects of events the plaintiff has set out if these allegations [*494] do not reasonably follow from the description of what happened or if these allegations are contradicted by the description itself. Dismissal is justified only when the allegations of the petition clearly demonstrate plaintiff does not have a claim. See Grindsted Products, Inc. v. Kansas Corporation Comm'n, 262 Kan. 294, 302-03, 937 P.2d 1 \(1997\).

Amundson first argues the express language of the Kansas antitrust statutes explicitly allows an action for antitrust against entities that attempt to control the cost or rates of insurance. HN2 [↑] K.S.A. 50-101 Second defines a trust to be a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, "to increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to control the cost or rates of insurance."

HN3 [↑] K.S.A. 50-112 provides that all trusts, combinations, and agreements in restraint of trade and free competition are unlawful, including [11] such trusts "between persons or corporations, designed or which tend to . . . control the cost or rate of insurance." Entities violating these sections are subject to suit seeking actual damages, treble damages, and reasonable attorney fees. See K.S.A. 50-108, 50-115, and 50-801\(b\).

Amundson contends that NCCI conspired to control the cost or rates of workers compensation insurance by fixing the fees paid to NCCI's servicing carriers at levels far in excess of those that would exist under a competitive system. Applying statutory rules of construction, Amundson argues the plain and unambiguous language of the Kansas antitrust statutes permit its cause of action and the district court's failure to follow the statutes is grounds for reversal. Amundson directs our attention to the fact there are no statutory provisions excepting insurance from antitrust actions either in the antitrust statutes or the statutes regulating insurance and workers compensation. Without an express exemption, Amundson relies on the well-settled law that immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied and is strongly disfavored. See Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 372, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\), [12] and U. S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 348, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 \(1963\). [*495]

Amundson insists the filed rate doctrine cannot be applied in this case without rendering the Kansas antitrust statutes wholly inapplicable to insurance rates.

The purpose of regulating the workers compensation rates is to "protect policy holders [1212] and the public against the adverse effects of excessive, inadequate or unfairly discriminatory rates." K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-951\(a\). However, the rating laws are also intended to "encourage, as the most effective way to produce rates that conform to the standards of paragraph (a), independent action by and reasonable price competition among insurers." K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-951\(b\). The parties rely on similar language in K.S.A. 40-1111\(a\) and 40-1112\(c\). These statutes were repealed in 1997. But NCCI points out that these statutes were only changed in location, not substance, and can now be found in K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-951 et seq.

Amundson argues an injunction ordering NCCI to change its selection of servicing carriers and granting treble damages to the plaintiffs will not affect the insurance commissioner's ability to [13] approve rates in the voluntary market and will not frustrate any previous rate decision by the insurance commissioner.

We recognize the express language in the Kansas antitrust statutes prohibiting the control of insurance costs or rates. However, the Kansas antitrust statutes were passed in 1897 at a time when Kansas laws did not provide for the regulation of insurance rates. See L. 1897, Ch. 265; R.S. 1923, 50-101 et seq. The workers compensation insurance rating laws were passed in 1927. See L. 1927, Ch. 231, 40-1106. With the enactment of the insurance rating laws, the Kansas Legislature gave the insurance commissioner, not the marketplace, the power to control insurance and insurance companies. "It HN4 [↑] is a settled rule of statutory construction that where an irreconcilable conflict exists between statutes, the latest enactment will be held to supersede, repeal or supplant the earlier by implication; the later enactment must prevail." HN5 [↑] Richards v. Etzen, 231 Kan. 704, Syl. P 1, 647 P.2d 1331 \(1982\).

The Kansas Legislature has given the insurance commissioner the authority to administer all laws relating to insurance and insurance companies; included therein [14] is the duty of setting or approving [*496] insurance rates. K.S.A. 40-102. The insurance commissioner is deemed to have the expertise to determine proper rates. See K.S.A. 40-102 and K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-110. The Kansas Workers Compensation Act, K.S.A. 44-501 et seq., contains a comprehensive regulatory scheme for insurance companies, including provisions for punishing violators of the act. See K.S.A. 44-563 ("For any violation of the provisions of this act the commissioner of insurance may suspend or revoke the authority of any insurance carrier to do business in this state.").

HN6[[↑]] The Kansas insurance code also contains a comprehensive scheme for the insurance commissioner to regulate, control, and establish rates, and guard against excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory rates. K.S.A. 40-101 et seq. Further, the insurance code provides that all decisions and findings of the insurance commissioner are subject to review in accordance with the Act for Judicial Review and Civil Enforcement of Agency Actions. K.S.A. 40-251\(b\); K.S.A. 40-778.

We also note that HN7[[↑]] the Kansas Legislature has authorized cooperation among rating organizations and insurers, which tends to be in direct [15] conflict with principles of antitrust. It is also clear the insurance commissioner has strict control over these cooperative activities in order to prevent violations of the insurance code. HN8[[↑]] K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-956\(e\) provides:

"Cooperation among rating organizations or among rating organizations and insurers in rate making or in other matters within the scope of this act is hereby authorized, provided the filings resulting from such cooperation are subject to all the provisions of this act which are applicable to filings generally. The commissioner may review such cooperative activities and practices and if, after a hearing, the commissioner finds any such activity or practice is unfair, unreasonable or otherwise inconsistent with this act or other provision of the insurance laws of this state, the commissioner may issue a written order requiring discontinuance of such activities or practices."

We do not believe that with these comprehensive regulatory schemes the Kansas Legislature intended that the approved rates could be collaterally attacked. In this case, the insurance code, in conjunction with the filed rate doctrine, supersedes the Kansas Antitrust Act.

[*497] [1213] Amundson argues we [16] should decline to find the filed rate doctrine creates an exemption from the Kansas antitrust statutes. The filed rate doctrine, also called the "Keogh doctrine," originated in the United States Supreme Court case of Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Ry. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 \(1922\), where a private shipper claimed that rates filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) had been fixed by a conspiracy, and, as a result, the rates "were higher than the rates would have been, if competition had not been thus eliminated." 260 U.S. at 160. The defendants countered that the ICC's approval conclusively established that the rates were "reasonable and nondiscriminatory," and the Keogh court agreed. The court held that the plaintiff could not recover damages under the federal antitrust statute based on the claim that it would have paid lower rates absent the defendants' conspiracy to fix rates. 260 U.S. at 162.

The Keogh court based its decision on four rationales. First, under the Interstate Commerce Act, shippers injured by the price-fixing conspiracy could recover their damages in proceedings before the [17] ICC. The court assumed Congress did not intend to provide a duplicative remedy under the Sherman Antitrust Act. Second, the Keogh court stated that granting a recovery only to those shippers that chose to sue could result in a discriminatory rate structure, because the successful litigants effectively would pay a lower rate than other shippers. Third, the court was concerned that antitrust damages would require calculation of a hypothetical lower rate, along with proof that such a lower rate would be adopted by the ICC. The court stated that whether this rate would be approved by the ICC should be left to the agency itself, rather than the courts. Last, the Keogh court stated that the plaintiff shipper had suffered no injury because it was able to simply pass along the overcharges to its customers. 260 U.S. at 162-65.

We agree with the district court's rationale in accepting and applying the filed rate doctrine to dismiss Amundson's claim. HN9[[↑]] The filed rate doctrine bars antitrust suits alleging competitive injury resulting from the payment of a rate filed with a federal regulatory agency. See HN10 [↑] Keogh, 260 U.S. at 162; Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 584, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856, 101 S. Ct. 2925 (1981). [18]

The filed rate doctrine has been held to apply equally to rates filed with state agencies. See Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17, 20 (2d Cir. 1994) ("the rationales underlying the filed rate doctrine apply equally strongly to regulation by state agencies"); Taffet v. Southern Co., 967 F.2d 1483, 1494 (11th Cir.), cert. denied 506 U.S. 1021, 121 L. Ed. 2d 583, 113 S. Ct. 657 (1992) ("this principle, which is central to the filed rate doctrine . . . , applies with equal force to preclude recovery under RICO whether the rate at issue has been set by a state rate-making authority or a federal one"); H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 954 F.2d 485, 494 (8th Cir.), cert. denied 504 U.S. 957, 119 L. Ed. 2d 228, 112 S. Ct. 2306 (1992) ("the rationale underlying the filed rate doctrine applies whether the rate in question is approved by a federal or state agency").

HN11 [↑] The filed rate doctrine stands for the proposition that because an administrative agency is vested with the authority to determine what rate is just and reasonable, courts should not adjudicate what a reasonable rate might be in a collateral lawsuit. See Montana-Dakota Co. v. Pub. Serv. Co., 341 U.S. 246, 250-51, 95 L. Ed. 912, 71 S. Ct. 692 (1951); [19] Wegoland, 27 F.3d at 19.

Amundson relies on Judge Friendly's refutation of each of the rationales in Keogh in the case of Square D. Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bur., 760 F.2d 1347 (2d Cir. 1985), aff'd, 476 U.S. 409, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 (1986), for authority that this court should reject Keogh. The glaring quandary with Square D is that although Judge Friendly seemingly eviscerated the rationale in Keogh, the court still followed the doctrine due to stare decisis.

Amundson argues that Keogh is a weak and discredited doctrine that continues to exist at the federal level only through stare decisis. Amundson contends that in this case of first impression, this court should not extend the Keogh holding beyond its original boundaries where it has retained life at the federal level only in the narrow circumstances [1214] of its original decision and it should not be utilized to override Kansas' antitrust statutes. The court in Capital Freight Serv. v. Trailer Marine Transport, 704 F. Supp. 1190, 1195 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) stated: [*499]

"Although the Supreme Court's ruling in [20] Square D saved Keogh from extinction, it did not breathe a new expansive energy into the doctrine. The decision represents simply an unwillingness to deliver a coup de grace to a weak and forcefully criticized doctrine because that function might be more appropriately carried out by Congress."

Amundson cites Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Superior Court, 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 (1993), for supporting authority that other courts have rejected Keogh. There, the California court refused to expand the Keogh doctrine to apply to causes of action brought under California's antitrust statute where individual consumers and corporate sales agents brought a wholesale and retail price fixing action against providers of cellular telephone service. The court reiterated the weakness of Keogh as stated by Judge Friendly in Square D. The court then added six additional reasons for refusing to extend the Keogh doctrine. 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1241-42.

Amundson applies these six reasons to the case at bar. First, HN12 [↑] the Kansas antitrust act, similar to California's Cartwright Act, is broader than the Sherman Antitrust Act, [21] since it expressly applies to the business of insurance. See K.S.A. 50-101 Second; 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1242; 15 U.S.C. §§ 1011-15 \(1994\). Second, Keogh dealt with the ICC's regulation of common carriers, whereas here, a different statutory scheme is involved in the insurance commissioner's regulation of insurance. Third, because of the procedural posture of the case, it must be presumed that regulating the servicing agreements would benefit the plaintiffs by lowering rates. Fourth, the Cellular Plus court concluded that "the Keogh court focused on whether the common carrier rates were illegal under the ICC statutes and regulations, whereas Cellular Plus does not argue the rates charged were not duly approved and legal under PUC [the California Public Utilities Commission] regulations, but it focuses on the alleged wrongful acts in fixing prices." 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1242. Here, Amundson similarly alleges that it does not contest the legality of the rates, but rather that NCCI illegally conspired to fix prices paid to the servicing agents. Fifth, Keogh and the current case are similar in that both deal [22] with claims with individual consumers, not the insurance companies (a factor in [*500] NCCI's favor). Sixth, the Cellular Plus court stated that the PUC desired the cellular telephone service industry to be as freely competitive as possible, whereas the ICC in Keogh and Square D appeared to be more concerned about price uniformity and nondiscrimination than competition. 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1242.

Amundson states that it is undisputed that NCCI's servicing carrier agreements have never been filed with, reviewed by, or approved by the insurance commissioner. Amundson argues the insurance commissioner is by necessity ignorant of the price-fixing conspiracy of NCCI, and has never approved or endorsed that conspiracy. Amundson suggests that if NCCI escapes liability, then other regulated entities will be encouraged to engage in price-fixing knowing that the conduct will escape review.

We agree with NCCI that the filed rate doctrine, although not heretofore applied in Kansas by name, has nevertheless been recognized in principle. Christl v. Missouri Pacific Railway Co., 92 Kan. 580, 585, 141 P. 587 \(1914\) (shipper bound by tariffs filed and published in accordance [23] with the interstate commerce law); Schenberger v. Railroad Co., 84 Kan. 79, 81, 113 P. 433 \(1911\) (The schedule of rates published and filed with the interstate commerce commission must govern. Any claim that such rate is unjust must be presented to that tribunal.); Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Superior Refining Co., 83 Kan. 732, 734, 112 P. 604 \(1911\) (regulated entity seeking relief from an allegedly unreasonable rate must obtain redress from the rate regulator, not the courts).

A certain level of deference to an agency's expertise in performing the functions assigned by the legislature is not a new concept in Kansas. The court in [Southwestern Bell \[1215\] Tele. Co. v. State Corporation Commission, 192 Kan. 39, 48-49, 386 P.2d 515 \(1963\)](#), emphasized that courts are ill-equipped to second guess a rate regulator's determination of a reasonable rate:

"Where [the Kansas Corporation Commission's] findings of fact are based upon substantial evidence and the other matters shown by the record with which that tribunal is authorized to deal, a court is not justified in setting its orders aside because the record shows that a different order or decision than [24] the one made by the commission could fairly have been based thereon.' (Citation omitted.)"

[*501] "The Commission's decisions involve the difficult problems of policy, accounting, economics and other special knowledge that go into rate making. It is equipped with a staff of assistants, with experience as statisticians, accountants and engineers. The courts have no comparable suitability for making the determination."

Regardless of whether the filed rate doctrine is seen to protect the consumer or the competitor, it preserves the integrity of the agency's decision. An award of antitrust or common-law damages (the equivalent of a rate refund) or the granting of injunctive relief (the equivalent of a rate reduction) would undermine such rate regulatory schemes by allowing a jury or court to intrude upon the insurance commissioner's authority to determine the reasonableness of filed rates. The agency's authority would be frustrated because an award of damages or equitable relief would necessitate the substitution of the court's or jury's judgment for the insurance commissioner's expert determination of rate reasonableness. The filed rate doctrine prevents this result by barring such nonadministrative [25] collateral attacks on approved rates.

Amundson makes much of the fact that the insurance commissioner did not review the servicing carrier agreements in setting the rates and, thus, there is no diminishing of the commissioner's authority or possibility of duplicative or inconsistent standards. We believe this is a good example of why questions involving rates should be settled by the insurance commissioner and not a jury. Whether the payment of the servicing carrier fees is a relevant factor which must be considered by the commissioner in setting rates pursuant to K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-954 is a technical question which requires considerable expertise to answer. It is best decided by the commissioner, who has this expertise. It should not be decided by a court or jury, which does not have this expertise.

Amundson disagrees with the argument that the filing of rates by insurers in the voluntary market means the insurance commissioner has approved NCCI's servicing carrier agreements. Amundson maintains the mere filing of rates with the insurance commissioner does not place the agency's imprimatur on all conduct that affect the level of those rates. Rather, Amundson contends that if the [26] insurance commissioner reviewed the rates filed by the voluntary [*502] market insurers, the commissioner at most determined that the rates filed by the nonparty insurers met the minimum statutory requirements of being "reasonable, adequate and not unfairly discriminatory." K.S.A. 40-1112(d). The insurance code implies otherwise.

HN13[] K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-955(e) provides that in reviewing a rate filing, "the commissioner may require the insurer or rating organization to provide, at the insurer's or rating organization's expense, all information necessary to evaluate the reasonableness of the filing." HN14[] K.S.A. 44-562 also provides:

"Every insurance carrier writing insurance for liability hereunder, or the liability of employers rejecting this act, shall report to the commissioner of insurance, in accordance with such rules as he may adopt, such information as he may at any time require for the purpose of determining the solvency of the carrier or the fairness, reasonableness and adequacy of its rates, and for such purposes the commissioner of insurance may inspect the books and records of such carriers and examine its officers, agents and servants under oath."

Due to these statutes, we can assume [27] the insurance commissioner is familiar with the servicing carrier process and has approved the subject rates.

We find the decision of N.C. Steel, Inc. v. National Council on Compensation Ins., 347 N.C. 627, 496 S.E.2d 369 (1998), to be persuasive. [1216] There, the plaintiffs, like Amundson, claimed that "rates are forced up by the use of the servicing carrier fees, which are undisclosed noncompetitive expenses . . . thereby adversely affecting purchasers of workers' compensation insurance in both the voluntary and residual markets." 347 N.C. at 631. The North Carolina Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of this claim, reasoning that:

"The General Assembly has given the Insurance Commissioner the duty of setting rates. The Commissioner, aided by his staff, has the expertise to determine proper rates. We do not believe that, by the enactment of [the North Carolina antitrust law], the General Assembly intended that duly set rates be challenged in another forum. When the Commissioner approved the rates, they became the proper rates.

"[The North Carolina Insurance Code] contains a comprehensive regulatory scheme for insurance companies, which includes provisions [28] for punishing violators of the chapter. (Citation omitted.) It also contains a provision for the appeal of decisions of the Commissioner. (Citation omitted.) We do not believe that, with [*503] this comprehensive regulatory scheme, the General Assembly intended that the rates could be collaterally attacked." 347 N.C. at 632.

The case at bar is also similar to Uniforce Temp. Personnel v. National Council, 892 F. Supp. 1503 (S.D.Fla. 1995), aff'd, 87 F.3d 1296 (11th Cir. 1996), which involved a claim that the ratepayers were improperly insured in the residual market and thus forced to pay higher rates than they would have if they had obtained insurance in the voluntary market. The employers claimed that the defendant-insurance carriers conspired to fix excessively high servicing carrier fees, which resulted in the employers' being forced to purchase insurance in the residual market instead of the voluntary market. The Uniforce court determined the "plaintiffs' claims for damages [fell] squarely within the filed rate doctrine." 892 F. Supp. at 1512. A jury in the present case, similar to the jury in Uniforce, would [29] have had "to measure the difference between the properly approved workers' compensation insurance rates paid by plaintiffs and those mythical rates which would have been applicable but for the defendants' concerted activity. This undertaking is not within the province of the courts but should reside with the respective state regulators with authority over rate-setting." 892 F. Supp. at 1512.

We agree with the district court that Amundson was injured, if at all, only to the extent that the insurance companies that paid the servicing carrier fees passed those fees to their insureds in the form of higher rates. If Amundson paid a higher rate, it was an approved rate. HN15[] If proposed rates are filed with and approved by the insurance commissioner, the filed rate doctrine applies notwithstanding any allegation that the rates were affected by nonrate conduct or that such nonrate conduct was not regulated by the insurance commissioner. The insurance commissioner has the sole power of regulating the rates and that power includes examining any information deemed necessary to determine the excessiveness or adequacy of the rates.

Next, Amundson contends that even if we adopt the filed [30] rate doctrine, it does not apply in this case. Amundson argues the Keogh doctrine applies only when a governmental agency has jurisdiction over and approves the allegedly anticompetitive conduct. Amundson [*504] argues that since it is undisputed that NCCI's servicing carrier agreements were never filed with, reviewed by, or approved by the insurance commissioner, then the Keogh doctrine does not apply.

In Brown v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 982 F.2d 386 (9th Cir. 1992), the plaintiff alleged a conspiracy to fix price levels for title search and examination services. The court rejected the defendant's reliance on the Keogh doctrine.

"Ticor makes much of the fact that the filed rates are the only rates which it may legally charge in Arizona and Wisconsin. However, if those rates were the product of unlawful activity prior to their being filed and were not subjected to meaningful review by the state, then the fact that they were filed does not render them immune from challenge. The absence of meaningful state review allows the insurers to file [1217] any rates they want. Therefore, the act of filing does not legitimize a rate arrived at by improper action." 982 F.2d at 393-94. [31]

Amundson's claims that the Keogh doctrine does not apply because the insurance commissioner has no control over the servicing carrier agreements also fails. As previously discussed, the insurance commissioner has control over any and all information in determining whether the proposed rates are excessive, inadequate or unfairly discriminatory. See K.S.A. 1998 Supp. 40-955(e); K.S.A. 44-562. No matter how the issue is stated, Amundson is ultimately challenging the rates as established by the insurance commissioner. The district court correctly concluded: "However framed by the plaintiff the claim is an attack on the rate levels previously approved by the commissioner." Any claim of price-fixing or misstatement of losses or gains is a collateral attack on the reasonableness of the approved rate.

Last, Amundson argues the district court erroneously dismissed its claim for injunctive and declaratory relief along with the rest of the case without addressing the issue of whether the Keogh doctrine barred such claims. It contends the filed rate doctrine does not bar a claim for injunctive relief. In Keogh, the court stated: "Under the Anti-trust Act a combination of carriers [32] to fix reasonable and nondiscriminatory rates may be illegal, and if so, the Government may have redress by criminal proceedings . . . [or] by injunction." 260 U.S. at 161. [*505]

Amundson relies on Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 (1945), which applied Keogh to bar the State of Georgia's claim for treble damages, but allowed the claim for injunctive relief. Amundson maintains the Court's holding that Georgia sought to enjoin the conspiracy, and not the approved rates, applies equally to the case at bar. See 324 U.S. at 455. Amundson also relies on a sentence in Square D., 476 U.S. at 422, where the Court stated: "The alleged collective activities of the defendants . . . were subject to scrutiny under the antitrust laws by the Government and to possible criminal sanctions or equitable relief."

We find Amundson's claims to be without merit. HN16↑ Any claim for injunctive or equitable relief in this area is permissible by the government, not individuals. See N.C. Steel, 347 N.C. at 636 ("We are not bound by the United States Supreme Court's ruling as to equitable [33] relief. Nevertheless, we believe the two sentences [in Keogh and Square D.] relied upon by the plaintiffs say it is the government, and not individuals, that is entitled to equitable relief.").

By this decision we do not rule on the issue as to whether the Kansas Antitrust Act is never applicable to the insurance industry by private parties. NCCI argues, and may be correct, that there may be appropriate application of our antitrust laws in the insurance area by private parties. We need not reach that issue in this case.

Affirm.

Arkansas Carpenters' Health & Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas, Western Division

September 28, 1999, Decided ; September 28, 1999, Filed

Case No. LR-C- 97-754

Reporter

75 F. Supp. 2d 936 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388 **

ARKANSAS CARPENTERS' HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, on behalf of itself and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. PHILIP MORRIS INC; R J REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY; BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION; BAT INDUSTRIES PLC; LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY; LIGGETT GROUP INC; AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY; COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH-U.S.A.; TOBACCO INSTITUTE, INC; SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL, INC., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Motions of defendants to dismiss matter with prejudice [DOC # 20, 29] granted. Motions to dismiss for failure to join party under Rule 19 [DOC # # 22, 30] and any other pending motions, moot.

Core Terms

cigarettes, smoking, defendants', damages, tobacco company, warranty, misrepresentations, alleges, special duty, Tobacco, labeled, smokers, proximate cause, injuries, products, plaintiff's claim, tobacco product, trust fund, remote, health and welfare, motion to dismiss, unjust enrichment, antitrust claim, racketeering, plan participant, wrongful conduct, anti trust law, manufacturers, plaintiffs', proximately

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

See 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1962\(b\) and \(d\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When considering a motion to dismiss, the court assumes that all the factual obligations contained in the complaint are true. A motion to dismiss will be granted only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle it to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN3 Remedies, Damages

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), provides a private right of action for damages only to those individuals injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of RICO's substantive provisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), provides a private right of action for any person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN5 Private Actions, Standing

The language of both the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), and the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), has been interpreted to limit claimants to those who have suffered injuries "proximately caused" by the alleged wrongdoer.

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

HN6 Causation, Proximate Cause

The court uses "proximate cause" to label generically the judicial tools used to limit a person's responsibility for the consequences of that person's own acts. At bottom, the notion of proximate cause reflects ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient. Accordingly, among the many shapes this concept took at common law, was a demand for some direct relation between the injury, asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. Thus, a plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover. Although directness of relationship is not the sole requirement of Clayton Act causation, it has been one of its central elements for a variety of reasons.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Insurers

Securities Law > RICO Actions > General Overview

HN7 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), and antitrust actions brought by health and welfare trust funds which provide health care benefits to their participants, a three point test has emerged to gauge "remoteness." To determine whether an injury, is too remote to allow recovery under RICO and the antitrust laws, the court applies the following three-factor "remoteness" test: (1) whether there are more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct who can be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general; (2) whether it will be difficult to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's damages attributable to defendant's wrongful conduct; and (3) whether the courts will have to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Warranties > Merchantability

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Provisions > Warranties > Implied Warranty of Merchantability

Torts > Products Liability > Theories of Liability > Breach of Warranty

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Provisions > Contract Terms > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Sales of Goods > Warranties > General Overview

HN8 Warranties, Merchantability

An implied warranty claim cannot be maintained if the goods at issue: (1) pass without objection in the trade under the contract description; (2) are of fair average quality within the description; (3) are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used, and; (4) run of even kind, quality and quantity within each unit and among all units involved; (5) are adequately contained, packaged, and labeled; and (6) conform to the promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label, if any. Ark. Code Ann. § 4-2-314\(2\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Warranties > Fitness

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Provisions > Warranties > Implied Warranty of Fitness

Torts > Products Liability > Theories of Liability > Breach of Warranty

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Provisions > Contract Terms > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Contract Provisions > Warranties > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Sales of Goods > Warranties > General Overview

HNG[] Warranties, Fitness

To create an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, the seller must have reason to know (1) the buyer's particular purpose, and (2) that the buyer is relying upon the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods. Ark. Code Ann. § 4-2-315.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN10[] Remedies, Restitution

To maintain a claim for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must show that the defendant obtained a benefit from the plaintiff to which he was not entitled through some operative act, intent, or situation to make the enrichment unjust and compensable. The courts will imply a promise to pay for services only where they were rendered in such circumstances as authorized the party performing them to entertain a reasonable expectation of their payment by the party beneficiary. Plaintiff must establish that defendant received money to which he was not entitled and which he should restore.

Counsel: For ARKANSAS CARPENTERS' HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, plaintiff: John McN. Broaddus, Robert J. Connerton, Connerton & Ray, Washington, D.C.

For ARKANSAS CARPENTERS' HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, plaintiff: Richard L. Gray, Shook, Hardy & Bacon, Kansas City, MO.

For ARKANSAS CARPENTERS' HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, plaintiff: Thomas H. McGowan, Nga C. Ostoja-Starzewski, Youngdahl, Sadin & McGowan, Little Rock, AR.

For ARKANSAS CARPENTERS' HEALTH & WELFARE FUND, plaintiff: George M. Fleming, D'Lisa R. Simmons, Sylvia Davidow, Fleming & Associates, Houston, TX.

For PHILIP MORRIS INC, R J REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION, AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY, SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL INC, defendants: Sherry P. Bartley, Mitchell, Williams, Selig, Gates & Woodyard, P.L.L.C., Little Rock, AR.

For PHILIP MORRIS INC, defendant: Jack E. McClard, Maya M. Eckstein, Hunton & Williams, Richmond, VA.

For PHILIP MORRIS INC, defendant: John Lucas, Hunton & Williams, Knoxville, [2] TN.

For R J REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, defendant: Robert Klonoff, Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Washington, DC.

For BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORPORATION, AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY, defendants: Kenneth N. Bass, Kirkland & Ellis, Washington, DC.

For LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, defendant: John S. Cherry, Jr., Robert L. Henry, III, Barber, McCaskill, Jones & Hale, P.A., Little Rock, AR.

For LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, defendant: Jeffrey S. Nelson, Christine L. McDaniel, Shook, Hardy & Bacon, Kansas City, MO.

For LIGGETT GROUP INC, defendant: Overton S. Anderson, Anderson, Murphy & Hopkins, L.L.P., Little Rock, AR.

For COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH-U.S.A., TOBACCO INSTITUTE INC, defendants: James M. McHaney, Jr., Hilburn, Calhoon, Harper, Pruniski & Calhoun, Ltd., North Little Rock, AR.

For COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH-U.S.A. defendant: Peter G. Kumpe, Williams & Anderson, Little Rock, AR.

Judges: James M. Moody, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: James M. Moody

Opinion

[*938] ORDER

In the matter before the Court, the plaintiff, a union health and welfare trust fund, has brought suit against several cigarette manufacturers and related entities in which it seeks to recover [3] reimbursement for medical payments it has paid out to its beneficiaries. It seeks recovery under several legal theories, including violation of federal "RICO" and antitrust laws and a variety of state statutory and common laws.

The defendants have moved for dismissal of all claims. For the reasons set out herein, the motions to dismiss are granted.

This Court exercises jurisdiction over the claims both on account of the complete diversity of the parties, 28 U.S.C. § 1332, and the presence of federal questions, 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

* * *

I. The Parties

The plaintiff is the Arkansas Carpenters Health and Welfare Trust Fund ("the Fund"). It is not disputed that the Fund is an "employee welfare benefit plan" and an "employee benefit plan" within the meaning of language of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C. § 1001, et seq. As such, it [*939] provides comprehensive health care benefits to participants who are employed under various collective bargaining agreements, or retired from same, and their dependants. In its class action complaint, the Fund seeks to recover, for itself and on behalf [4] of those similarly situated, reimbursements for what it describes as tobacco related benefit costs incurred when paying health and welfare claims to its plan participants. It also seeks various declaratory and equitable relief.

Defendants Philip Morris Incorporated ("Philip Morris"), R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company ("RJR"), Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation ("Brown & Williamson"), Lorillard Tobacco Company ("Lorillard"), and the Liggett Group, Inc. ("Liggett") are domestic corporations which manufacture, market, sell, and distribute tobacco products, including cigarettes. Separate defendant American Tobacco Company is a corporation with activities similar to those of the defendants just named but which has been purchased by separate defendant Brown & Williamson. Separate defendant B.A.T. Industries P.L.C. is a British company which essentially owns Brown & Williamson.

Separate defendant Council for Tobacco Research ("CTR") is a successor to another research group, the Tobacco Industry Research Committee, and has engaged in tobacco related research, as has separate defendant Smokeless Tobacco Council ("STC"). Both are non-profit New York corporations.

Separate defendant The Tobacco [5] Institute, Inc. ("TI") is a non-profit corporation which has done public relations work for many of the cigarette manufacturers. The firm of Hill & Knowlton is an ad agency which has been utilized by the major cigarette manufacturers and has been mentioned by the plaintiff in its complaint as a defendant. However, the firm was not set out as a defendant anywhere in the style of plaintiff's complaint.

II. The Claims

At the center of the plaintiff's claims are three groups of factual assertions: (1) smoking has severe health risks which have long been known to the defendants, (2) the defendants have conspired to withhold this information from the cigarette buying public, and in some cases, to knowingly and affirmatively present false evidence to the public which minimized the risks of smoking, and (3) the cigarette companies have manipulated the addictive qualities of some of the chemicals in cigarettes, such as nicotine, despite being aware of the dangerousness of those chemicals.¹

[6] These factual assertions are made in support of the following legal claims:

Count I - Violation of "RICO"

Plaintiff has alleged a violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), specifically 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962\(c\) and \(d\), by the tobacco company defendants. Allegedly, the "persons" within the meaning of the Act were the tobacco companies and the "enterprise" was the public relations work and bogus scientific research conducted by the CTR and the Tobacco Institute. The alleged predicate acts of racketeering include mail and wire fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343.

The plaintiffs have arguably been injured in their business and property "because Plaintiffs have been required to [*940] incur significant costs and expenses attributable to tobacco-related diseases." Plaintiff's Complaint at p. 83, P 230.

Count II - Violation of RICO

The plaintiff alleges RICO was violated by all the defendants by investing income from racketeering activity in the "acquisition ..., establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in ... interstate commerce." § 1962\(a\). The [7] predicate acts of racketeering are alleged to have been the deliberate concealment of the medical risks related to smoking. The enterprise is alleged to have been a combination of CTR and the Tobacco Institute.

Count III - Violation of RICO

The plaintiff alleges violations of §§ 1962\(b\) and \(d\). HN1 [↑] These two sub-sections provide:

- (b) It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate commerce or foreign commerce.
- (d) It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section.

For the purposes of this count, the plaintiff alleges that each defendant was a "person" within the meaning of the Act and the enterprises were potential witnesses, government investigators, prosecutors, legislators, and regulators concerned with the health risks of cigarette smoking. The racketeering acts were those relating to a pattern of deceiving the public and public officials about [8] the true dangers of cigarettes.

Count IV - Sherman Act

¹ The factual allegations are much more detailed than this Court's abrupt summary suggests. The plaintiff describes a conspiracy dating at least as far back as the early 1950's during which the tobacco companies and their agents discovered, then withheld from the public, critical information about the dangers of tobacco use. The plaintiff also describes in detail the great lengths to which the defendants allegedly lied to and otherwise deceived the public, scientists, and government regulators. However, the Court sees no need in repeating most of that in this Order. The point of this Court's granting of the dismissal motions, as is the case with the granting of any dismissal motion, is that even if all the allegations are true, the plaintiff has nevertheless failed to state a claim.

The plaintiff has alleged that the defendants violated the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by conspiring to eliminate competition for their products in the marketplace, which had the effect of limiting "the dissemination of product information regarding the quality, safety and composition of cigarettes and tobacco products, thereby eliminating alternative products from the market, restricting consumer choice, and causing consumers to suffer smoking-related illnesses and health care costs." Complaint at p. 90, P 259.

Count V - Fraud and Misrepresentation (labeled on plaintiff's complaint as Count IV)

The plaintiff alleges that the defendants had a duty to disclose to the public, including the plaintiff and its plan participants, all the material facts about the hazards of smoking, including the addictive qualities of cigarettes. Plaintiff claims the defendants breached that duty by fraudulently misrepresenting the true dangers of the products the tobacco companies were selling to the public. The plaintiff argues that by raising the issue of smoking, and by making "incomplete" [9] statements on the subject, they were obligated to reveal all material facts about the dangers of cigarettes.

The plaintiff argues that "as a direct and proximate result of Defendants' fraudulent misrepresentations, nondisclosures and active concealment, Plaintiffs have suffered and will continue to suffer substantial injuries and damages for which Plaintiffs are entitled to recovery, and for which Defendants are jointly and severally liable." Complaint at p. 99, P 296.

Count VI - Intentional Breach of Special Duty (labeled by plaintiff as Count V)

In a separate count, the plaintiff claims that all defendants, because of certain public positions taken by them, have "assumed a special duty to protect the public health and a duty to those who advance the public health, including the Health and Welfare Trust Fund." Complaint at p. 100, P 298. Plaintiff claims that it and those similarly situated acted in reliance on those intentional misrepresentations and failed to act as soon as it might have to take measures which would have reduced substantially its pay outs on smoking related claims.

[*941] Count VII - Negligent Breach of Special Duty (labeled by plaintiff [10] as Count VI)

In a related theory, in this count the plaintiff alleges that all defendants "knew or should have known" that each had undertaken this special duty and each failed to exercise reasonable care to discharge this duty.

Count VIII - Breach of Express and Implied Warranties (labeled by plaintiff as Count VI)

The plaintiff alleges that the tobacco company defendants made express warranties to the public regarding the safety of their products and made further promises to provide the public with accurate information as to the safety of their tobacco products, that the plaintiffs and their plan participants relied on these promises, and that these warranties were breached by the tobacco companies when they in fact provided unsafe products and misleading health information.

The plaintiff further alleges that the "defendants' products are unmerchantable and are unfit for safe use when sold and consumed as intended. Defendants breached their implied warranty of merchantability because their products are not fit for their intended purposes." Complaint at pp. 103-04, P 314.

Count IX - Unjust Enrichment (labeled by plaintiff as Count VII)

Plaintiffs [11] also allege that because the defendants have breached the "special duty" discussed above, and the plaintiff has had to pay resulting medical expenses, the plaintiff has conferred a benefit upon the defendants, i.e., it has paid out sums to its plan participants which should have been borne by the defendants. The defendants should therefore have to make restitution to the plaintiff by reimbursing the plaintiff for the funds thus paid out.

III. The Dismissal Motions

Before the Court are the parties' motions to dismiss for "failure to state a claim," F.R.Civ.Pro. 12\(b\)\(6\) [DOC # # 20, 29], and "failure to join a party under Rule 19," Rule 12\(b\)\(7\) [DOC # # 22, 30]. The Court needs only to consider the 12(b)(6) motions.

HN2 When considering a motion to dismiss, the Court assumes that all the factual obligations contained in the complaint are true. Westcott v. Omaha, 901 F.2d 1486, 1488 \(8th Cir. 1990\). A motion to dismiss will be granted only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle it to relief. In the instant case, even if the Court assumes that all of the factual allegations about the defendants' activities are 12 true, i.e., that the defendants knew of the medical risks associated with their tobacco products, intentionally misled the public about same, and conspired with each other to do so, the Court nevertheless holds that the plaintiff has failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted for plaintiff.

Each of the plaintiff's claims suffers from some version of the same fatal flaw: the aggrieved party or parties, legally speaking, in each of the claims is someone or some group other than the plaintiff. The plaintiff, in other words, is too far removed from the challenged harmful conduct to succeed on any of the several claims. Instead, the plaintiff derives its claims from the injuries allegedly occurring to others, i.e., smokers. Without any injury to smokers, the plaintiff would not have incurred any of the additional, smoking related expenses for which it is now seeking reimbursement. Therefore, there is no direct link between the alleged misconduct and the damages of which the plaintiff complains and the defendants did not proximately cause the injuries to the plaintiff. This lack of direct causation between the alleged improper acts of the defendants and the asserted 13 injuries suffered by the plaintiff will be discussed in particular detail as the Court takes up each of the counts in turn.

A. RICO and Antitrust Claims

Counts I, II, and III of the complaint involve alleged violations of the RICO Act and Count IV alleges a violation of the *942 Sherman Act. HN3 The former provides a private right of action for damages only to those individuals "injured in his business or property by reason of" a violation of RICO's substantive provisions. 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). HN4 The latter provides one for "any person ... injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\). The similarity in language is not coincidental. The Supreme Court has noted that "Congress modeled § 1964\(c\) on the civil-action provision of the federal antitrust law" Holmes v. SIPC, 503 U.S. 258, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 \(1992\).

HN5 The language of both statutes has been interpreted to limit claimants to those who have suffered injuries "proximately caused" by the alleged wrongdoer. Associated General Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\)(antitrust); 14 Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268 (RICO)(holding "the reasoning [of Associated General] applies just as readily to § 1964\(c\)"). We may fairly credit the 91st Congress, which enacted RICO, with knowing the interpretation federal courts had given the words earlier Congresses had used").

The Supreme Court has conceded the difficulty of formulating a "one size fits all" definition of proximate cause within the context of determining whether a party has standing to bring a claim of this type but has nevertheless emphasized the "directness" of the relationship between the conduct and the resulting injury.

HN6 Here we use "proximate cause" to label generically the judicial tools used to limit a person's responsibility for the consequences of that person's own acts. At bottom, the notion of proximate cause reflects "ideas of what justice demands, or of what is administratively possible and convenient." [citation omitted] Accordingly, among the many shapes this concept took at common law, see Associated General Contractors, [459 U.S. at 532-533], was a demand for some direct relation between the injury, asserted and the injurious conduct alleged. Thus, 15 a plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover. [citation omitted]

75 F. Supp. 2d 936, *942 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, 15

Although directness of relationship is not the sole requirement of Clayton Act causation, [footnote omitted] it has been one of its central elements, Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 540, ... for a variety of reasons.

Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268-69, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311.

HN7 In RICO and antitrust actions brought by health and welfare trust funds which, like the plaintiff in the instant case, provide health care benefits to their participants, a three point test has emerged to gauge "remoteness:"

To determine whether an injury, is "too remote" to allow recovery under RICO and the antitrust laws, the Court applies the following three-factor "remoteness" test: (1) whether there are more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct who can be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general; (2) whether it will be difficult to ascertain the amount of the plaintiff's damages attributable to defendant's wrongful conduct; and (3) whether [16] the courts will have to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries. See [Holmes] 503 U.S. at 269-70, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (RICO); AGC, 459 U.S. at 545, 103 S. Ct. 897 (antitrust).

Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, 185 F.3d 957, 1999 WL 493306 (9th Cir. 1999).

In applying this test, the Court of Appeals in Oregon Laborers-Employers, which involved every one of the tobacco companies involved in the case before this Court, determined that:

[*943] (1) smokers who were participants in the funds in question were "more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct" and could be counted on "to vindicate the injury caused by defendants' alleged wrongful conduct;"

(2) "The difficulty of ascertaining the damages attributable to defendants' alleged wrongful conduct and the complexity involved in calculating these damages weigh heavily, if not dispositively, in favor of barring plaintiffs' actions," Id.; and

(3) the ability of smokers to seek recovery directly under various state law theories for personal injuries and the related medical costs - the same [17] damages the plaintiff health care funds were seeking - would require courts "to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiffs at different levels of injury from the violative acts, to obviate the risk of multiple recoveries." Id., citing Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269.

The Court of Appeals in Oregon Laborers-Employers concluded that all three of the factors of the remoteness test "weigh in favor of barring plaintiffs' claims. We therefore hold that plaintiffs lack standing to bring either a RICO or an antitrust claim for damages." Oregon Laborers-Employers, 1999 WL 493306 at *6. This decision by the Ninth Circuit was in keeping with those of two other Courts of Appeals presented with RICO and/or antitrust claims brought by health and welfare trust funds against some or all of these same tobacco companies: Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912 (3rd. Cir. 1999)(addressing RICO and antitrust) and Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, 1999 WL 639865 (2nd Cir. Aug. 18, 1999)(RICO only).² In both cases, the respective Courts of Appeals [18] found that the claimed injuries of the plaintiff health care funds were "entirely derivative of the harm suffered by plan participants as a result of using tobacco products."

²The Second Circuit had previously issued this opinion at 172 F.3d 223 but requested it be withdrawn from the published volumes. Presumably, it will be published in the version distributed via Westlaw which the Circuit accessed after the parties had completed their briefing in the instant case.

Laborers Local 17, Id. at *9, and did not "proximately cause" the injuries alleged by the health funds. Thus, the funds' claims brought under RICO or federal antitrust law were dismissed in both of those cases.

Though the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has not yet passed on such a case, three Courts of Appeals, the Second, Third, and Ninth, have considered cases squarely on point with the one before this Court and involving the same defendant tobacco companies being sued by various health trust funds similar in all relevant respects [19] to the plaintiff in this case. Each Court of Appeals has unanimously held that such a plaintiff's claims are too remote, too derivative to maintain a RICO or antitrust claim against these defendants. Though not binding authority on this Court, those decisions persuade the Court that the RICO and antitrust claims in the case at bar should be dismissed as well.

B. Fraud and Misrepresentation

In what the Court shall refer to as Count V, the Fund alleges that the defendants fraudulently misrepresented the true dangers of the products the tobacco companies were selling to the public. The plaintiff argues that "as a direct and proximate result of Defendants' fraudulent misrepresentations," the Fund has suffered damages.

In so doing, the plaintiff attempts to avoid the appearance of suing the defendants because of some injury inflicted on others, i.e., smokers. As was the case with Oregon law in Oregon Laborers-Employers, Arkansas follows the traditional, and prevailing, rule that a plaintiff may not recover for fraud and misrepresentation directed to a third party. Therefore, plaintiff has argued that misrepresentations were made by the defendants to the Fund.

[*944] However, [20] it is inescapable that the Fund's claims are directly linked to the alleged misrepresentations made to the Fund's participants who smoked, not to the Fund itself. This is borne out by the fact that the damages it claims is the amount of smoking related medical claims it has paid. In barring a virtually identical claim for fraud in Oregon Laborers-Employers, the Ninth Circuit concluded:

plaintiffs seek only to recover medical costs paid on behalf of their beneficiaries. This is a classic claim for indemnity, with plaintiffs attempting to recover for the economic loss they have suffered as a result of the physical harm suffered by third parties - the smokers. ... This claim for damages is barred.

Moreover, for the same reasons that proximate cause did not exist for plaintiff's RICO and antitrust claims, proximate cause is lacking for their fraud claim.

Oregon Laborers-Employers, 1999 WL 493306.

The fraud and misrepresentation claims before this Court are no different. In its complaint, the Fund alleges that the defendants' "fraudulent statements, concealment and conduct, ... was [sic] a substantial cause persuading Plaintiffs' participants and [21] beneficiaries to purchase and use [cigarettes]." Complaint at P 292. Despite allegations that the fraud was perpetrated on the Fund, this is simply a case of a third party (the Fund) attempting to recover on account of a fraud allegedly being perpetrated on someone else (the smokers). The claim must fail as a matter of law.

Accordingly, the Court need not address the defendants' alternate defense: that even if misrepresentations were made to the Fund and the Fund relied on such misrepresentations, any such reliance on what the tobacco companies said would have been unreasonable as a matter of law.

C. "Special Duty"

Counts VI & VII allege both intentional and negligent failure to discharge a "special duty" it had to the plaintiff. As to the former claim, this Court is aware of no theory recognized under Arkansas law for a claim of "intentional breach" of a "special duty." An examination of the allegations in plaintiff's complaint causes the Court to conclude that this is nothing more than a restatement of the fraud and misrepresentation claims discussed above. It fails for those reasons.

As to "negligent breach" of a special duty, the Fund argues that by running advertisements [22] like the so called "Frank Statement," the defendants took on a special duty or "responsibility" to act as a sort of guardian of the public health with regard to tobacco products. The defendants were therefore obligated to provide accurate and helpful scientific information about tobacco products to, among others, health trust funds like the plaintiff. It is argued that the defendants' conspiracy to distribute disinformation about the relationship between smoking and certain health problems was a failure to discharge that duty and prevented the plaintiff from "undertaking measures sooner to discourage tobacco use by their participants and beneficiaries." Complaint at P 309. This, in turn, caused the Fund to incur greater expenses relating to paying smoking related health claims.

This Court finds no Arkansas case even remotely suggesting that one can assume the sort of "special responsibility" plaintiff describes simply by placing advertisements or issuing corporate statements. Furthermore, any cause of action involving negligence requires the element of proximate cause. The scenario described by plaintiff has much too tenuous a causal connection between the defendants' actions [23] and plaintiff's injuries for the former to be the proximate cause of the latter. Even if one were to assume that defendants' public statements and advertisements were directed to the Fund (though the ads were plainly targeted toward consumers), it is difficult to say with any measure of certainty, much less precision, how many of its participants the Fund might have been [*945] dissuaded from smoking but for the defendants' suppression of critical information.

This lack of certainty as to causation, the difficulty in fixing the portion of plaintiff's damages which are fairly attributable to defendants' conduct,³ etc., speak to the practical considerations of why such a claim should not be allowed. Simply put, plaintiff cannot show that defendants' alleged conduct was the proximate cause of its injuries.

[24] As the Second Circuit put it last month, "hence, analogous principles to those that doomed plaintiffs' RICO causes of action also bar plaintiffs' common law fraud and special duty actions." Laborers Local 17, 1999 WL 639865 at *13 (2nd Cir. 1999).

D. Warranties

Count VIII⁴ contains the Fund's allegations that the defendants have violated express and implied warranties made to the public, including the Fund and its participants. However, there is no allegation that defendants ever provided the plaintiff with any sort of product to which these warranties would apply. Furthermore, there is no allegation that defendants made any express warranties to the Fund as to any product it sold.

³This uncertainty as to both causation and damages was precisely the sort of policy consideration discussed by the Second Circuit in Laborers Local 17, albeit in the context of evaluating standing to bring a RICO claim:

These concerns become particularly pointed in a case, like the present one, where the injuries are alleged to derive not simply from defendants' affirmative misconduct but also from plaintiffs' fraudulently induced inaction. That is, it is often easier to ascertain the damages that flow from actual, affirmative conduct, than to speculate what damages arose from a party's failure to act. In the latter situation, as in the case at hand, it becomes difficult to distinguish among the multitude of factors that might have affected the damages. Here, for example, plaintiffs' alleged damages might have derived from inefficiencies in the Funds own management, as well as from non-smoking related health problems suffered by the smokers, and it would be the sheerest sort of speculation to determine how these damages might have been lessened had the Funds adopted the measures defendants allegedly induced them not to adopt.

The complexity of these calculations makes the ultimate question of damages suffered by the Funds virtually impossible to determine. Indeed, this case seems to present precisely the type of large, complicated damages claims that Holmes and Associated General Contractors sought to avoid.

Laborers Local 17, 1999 WL 639865 at *10 (2nd Cir. 1999).

⁴This was numbered as "Count VI" in plaintiff's complaint on page 103.

With respect to any claim of breach of an implied warranty of merchantability, the Court first looks to Arkansas' statutes. HN8[] An implied warranty claim cannot be maintained if the goods at issue: (1) "pass without objection in the [25] trade under the contract description;" (2) "are of fair average quality within the description;" (3) "are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used, and;" (4) "run ... of even kind, quality and quantity within each unit and among all units involved;" (5) "are adequately contained, packaged, and labeled;" and (6) "conform to the promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label, if any." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-2-314\(2\).

Plaintiff has not alleged that the cigarettes manufactured and sold by the defendants failed to meet any of the criteria set out above. For example, there is no charge that the cigarettes were not properly labeled or that the cigarettes smoked by the Fund's participants were of an inferior or atypical grade from those usually sold or that they failed to live up to promises made on the container. On the contrary, read as a whole, it is plaintiff's claim that a typical cigarette, like all cigarettes, is "generally defective." This type of allegation cannot state a claim for breach of implied warranty of merchantability.

To the extent plaintiff attempts to state a claim for a breach of implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, [26] [*946] the Court finds it fails as well. HN9[] To create a such a warranty, the seller must have reason to know (1) the buyer's particular purpose, and (2) that the buyer is relying upon "the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-2-315.

In its complaint the Fund made no allegation of any particular purpose for which it (or its participants) bought cigarettes. There is likewise no allegation that the Fund or its participants ever told the defendants of any such need. Accordingly, the plaintiff has not properly stated such a claim.

E. Unjust Enrichment

Finally, Count IX of the complaint is a claim for unjust enrichment against the defendants. In a nutshell, plaintiff argues that the medical payments it has made to its participants over the years for smoking related problems should have been made by the defendants. That plaintiff made them instead means the defendants have received a benefit, i.e., the defendants have been "unjustly enriched."

HN10[] To maintain such a claim, a plaintiff must show that the defendant obtained a benefit from the plaintiff to which he was not entitled through "some operative act, intent, or situation to make [27] the enrichment unjust and compensable. The courts will imply a promise to pay for services only where they were rendered in such circumstances as authorized the party performing them to entertain a reasonable expectation of their payment by the party beneficiary." Sparks Regional Medical Center v. Blatt, 55 Ark. App. 311, 935 S.W.2d 304, 307 \(Ark.Ct.App. 1996\). Plaintiff must establish that defendant received money "to which he was not entitled and which he should restore." Id.

The Court finds that the defendants received nothing of value, within the meaning of unjust enrichment analysis, when the plaintiff paid the smoking related health claims which it was legally obligated to pay.

Because plaintiffs had an independent obligation to pay the smokers' medical expenses, they cannot maintain an action for unjust enrichment against defendants just because defendants were incidentally benefitted. See Restatement of Restitution § 106 (1936) ("A person who, incidentally to the performance of his own duty ... has conferred a benefit upon another, is not thereby entitled to contribution.").

Oregon Laborers-Employers, 1999 WL 493306 at *10.

It was the [28] plaintiff's legal obligation to pay the smokers, not the defendants' obligation. With no benefit having been conveyed, the issue of whether it would be "unjust" for defendant to keep such a benefit is moot.

75 F. Supp. 2d 936, *946LÁ1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18388, 28

For the foregoing reasons, the motions of the defendants to dismiss this matter with prejudice [DOC # 20, 29] are granted. The motions to dismiss for failure to join a party under Rule 19 [DOC # # 22, 30], and any other pending motions, are deemed moot.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

James M. Moody

United States District Judge

September 28, 1999

End of Document

Philip Morris, Inc. v. Grinnell Litho. Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

September 28, 1999, Decided ; September 28, 1999, Filed

95-CV-0733 (DRH)

Reporter

67 F. Supp. 2d 126 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,708

PHILIP MORRIS, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff, -against- GRINNELL LITHOGRAPHIC CO., INC., OLIVER MUNSON and LES SUTORIUS, Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Relief sought by defendants in the motion denied except (1) plaintiff's claim under § 180.03 of the New York State Penal Law dismissed and (2) defendants' application to preclude Rapp's testimony and the Rapp Report granted in part.

Core Terms

antitrust, competitive injury, treble damages, Robinson-Patman Act, bribes, commercial bribery, defendants', damages, anti trust law, cause of action, private right of action, anticompetitive, cases, products, vendor, price discrimination, summary judgment, Clayton Act, violations, Penal Law, decisions, summary judgment motion, district court, courts, business practice, plaintiff's claim, lithographic, competitors, purchaser, purposes

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

A motion for summary judgment may be granted only when it is shown that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN2[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

The party seeking summary judgment bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying which materials it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The substantive law governing the case will identify those facts that are material, and only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN3 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Once the moving party has come forward with support demonstrating that no genuine issue of material fact remains to be tried, including pleadings, depositions, interrogatory answers, and affidavits, the burden shifts to the non-moving party to provide similar support setting forth specific facts about which a genuine triable issue remains. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\). The court must resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. Moreover, the court's role on a motion for summary judgment in short, is confined to issue-finding; it does not extend to issue-resolution.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN4 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact. Moreover, conclusory allegations will not suffice to create a genuine issue. There must be more than a scintilla of evidence, and more than some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. The non-movant cannot escape summary judgment merely by vaguely asserting the existence of some unspecified disputed material facts, or defeat the motion through mere speculation or conjecture.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

There is a legal presumption that, at a minimum, the prices paid by plaintiff to produce supplier were inflated by the amount of the bribes and, accordingly, the bribe amounts are recoverable as damages.

67 F. Supp. 2d 126, *126LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN6 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN7 Remedies, Injunctions

For a plaintiff's cause of action predicated on 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\) to survive a defendants' motion for summary judgment, it must first appear that there is a factual basis to maintain that the conduct alleged constitutes "commercial bribery" within the purview of the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 Remedies, Damages

The terms "antitrust injury" and "competitive injury" are not interchangeable, or synonymous, for purposes of a private antitrust claim for treble damages based on a substantive violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

67 F. Supp. 2d 126, *126L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN9 Standing, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\) simply defines that certain conduct is illegal. To pursue a private claim for treble damages requires reference to 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 which expressly creates the right. Section 13\(c\) makes certain business practices unlawful, while § 15 provides for an express private right of action for treble damages to any person injured in his business or property as a result of any antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN10 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN11 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Although the expansive language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), particularly the phrase "by reason of," would appear to authorize treble damages to any aggrieved party that was able to establish a nexus between an injury sustained and a defendant's violation of an antitrust law provision, the statute has not been so broadly construed. To recover treble damages a plaintiff must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN12 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Antitrust injury is an element of a cause of action seeking treble damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

67 F. Supp. 2d 126, *126L999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN13 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A per se unlawful practice under 15 U.S.C.S. §13\(c\) is inherently anticompetitive, thus obviating the need to prove anticompetitive injury when the relief sought is injunctive or declaratory in nature; for a non per se practice, such injury is not implicit and, thus, more than the mere commission of the act must be shown in order to establish a substantive violation of the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §15\(a\), including the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\), the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and certain parts of a federal tariff act, constitute the federal antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 12. Their shared goal is to protect competition and, in the case of the Robinson-Patman Act, to protect competitors as well. Unlike the Sherman Act which protects competition, not competitors, the Robinson-Patman Act extends its protection to competitors. From that, however, it may not be inferred that proof of an effect on competition, or competitive injury, is a sine qua non to a charged Robinson-Patman Act violation. Such may, or may not be the case depending on the statutory provision involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN15 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

5 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) makes unlawful price discriminations where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition. This price discrimination provision is hedged with qualifications. An exception is made for price differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery. Care was taken that price changes are not outlawed where made in response to changing market conditions. Finally, 13(a) codifies the rule protecting the right of a person in commerce to select his own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

67 F. Supp. 2d 126, *126LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN16 [] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

15 U.S.C.S. §§ 13\(c\), \(d\), and \(e\) unqualifiedly make unlawful certain business practices other than price discriminations. In terms, the proscriptions of these three subsections are absolute. Unlike § 13\(a\), none of them requires, as proof of a prima facie violation, a showing that the illicit practice has had an injurious or destructive effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN17 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

With respect to per se violations of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, it is not that the targeted practices do not effect competition. Were that the case, the antitrust laws would not be implicated. Instead, Congress decided that such practices are necessarily anticompetitive and, thus, no proof to that effect is required to establish a violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN18 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

It is well established that certain practices are per se unlawful under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, as inherently anticompetitive, while others are not. Commercial bribery falls within the former category.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN19 [] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Any examination of a plaintiff's right to sue under a statute must begin with the language of the statute itself. There is nothing in the language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\) to justify imposing a competitive injury requirement on potential plaintiffs. Unlike 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) which outlaws price discrimination whose effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 13\(c\), \(d\), and \(e\) prohibit business practices other than price discrimination. None of these latter sections requires, as proof of a prima facie violation, a showing that the illicit practice has had an injurious or destructive effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN20 [] Remedies, Damages

Suits for damages by private plaintiffs injured in business or property are authorized by the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, which has long been read to include a requirement that any potential plaintiff under the antitrust laws be within the so-called target area of the antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Robinson-Patman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN21 [] Remedies, Damages

When commercial bribes are paid to a company's employees to obtain contracts for the sale of goods, the company has standing to bring an action for damages under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN22 [] Remedies, Damages

While price discrimination may, or may not be violative of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), commercial bribery is always violative of 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\) and is never in the public interest. There is no reason that the per se character of such conduct should not be recognized in private suits for damages under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. To the contrary, such private suits will serve to curtail such purely pernicious business practices in the marketplace, consistent with the purpose of § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN23 [+] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The holdings in antitrust cases involving non per se violations are not interchangeable with those involving per se unlawful business practices under the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13, such as commercial bribery under 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(c\).

Banking Law > ... > Criminal Offenses > Employee Fraud > General Overview

HN24 [+] Criminal Offenses, Employee Fraud

See N.Y. Penal Law § 180.03.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN25 [+] Crimes Against Persons, Bribery

N.Y. Penal Law § 180.03 does not itself create a private right of action. Absent such a directive, the courts are to determine themselves, considering such factors as legislative history, consistency with the overall legislative scheme for creating the private right and whether the plaintiff is one of the class for whose special benefit the statute was enacted.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: Edward M. Spiro, Esq., Morvillo, Abramowitz, Grand, Iason & Silberberg, P.C., New York, New York.

For Grinnell Lithographic Co., Inc., and Oliver Munson, Defendants: Joseph W. Ryan, Jr., Esq., Uniondale, New York.

For Les Sutorius, Defendant: David J. Sutton, Esq., Garden City, New York.

Judges: DENIS R. HURLEY, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: DENIS R. HURLEY

Opinion

[*127] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

HURLEY, District Judge

By notice of motion dated January 15, 1999, defendants Grinnell Lithographic Co., Inc. ("Grinnell") and Oliver Munson ("Munson"), seek the following relief:

1. an order pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure:

(a) dismissing all claims of Philip Morris, Incorporated ("plaintiff") for failure to prove that it suffered an injury as a result of defendants' conduct, or, alternatively;

(b) dismissing plaintiff's treble damages claim under Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13 [2] (c) ("§ 2(c)"), given the absence of proof of "antitrust injury" as required by Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 ("§ 4");

(c) dismissing plaintiff's claim under Section 180.03 of the New York State Penal Law ("§ 180.03") on the ground that the statute does not create a private cause of action; and

[*128] (d) dismissing plaintiff's claims against Munson on the ground there is no evidence to indicate his authorization or awareness of payments made by Les Sutorius ("Sutorius") to Louis Cappelli ("Cappelli").

2. an order, pursuant to Federal Rules of Evidence 104, 401, 403 and/or 702, declaring the report of plaintiff's expert (the "Rapp Report") to be inadmissible as "irrelevant and unreliable"; and

3. in the event plaintiff's federal claim -- i.e., the purported violation of the Robinson-Patman Act -- is dismissed, declining to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state claims asserted.

As explained below, the relief sought in paragraphs 1(a)(b) and (d) above are denied; the relief sought in paragraph 1(c) -- pertaining to the cause of action predicated on § 180.03 -- is granted; the relief sought in paragraph 2 -- pertaining to the Rapp [3] Report -- is granted to the extent a hearing will be held before me immediately prior to jury selection to determine whether the Rapp Report and corresponding testimony of its author passes muster under relevant provisions of the Federal Rules of Evidence, consistent with the holding in Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 \(1999\); and the relief sought in paragraph 3 is denied as moot in view of the above determinations.

BACKGROUND

The complaint in this action arises from a bribery scheme participated in by Cappelli, the former Graphics Purchasing Manager of plaintiff's Marketing Services Purchasing Department, and Grinnell, a vendor which provided lithographic printing services to plaintiff.

Munson was and is the President, Chair of the Board, and a shareholder of Grinnell. Sutorius was a salesperson for Grinnell. For more than ten years, Sutorius, acting for Grinnell, made weekly bribe payments to Cappelli. The weekly sums began at $ 100 per week in or about 1979, increasing over time to $ 400 a week for the mid-1988 to 1990 period. In addition, Cappelli was provided with golf vacations, and other gratuities, by Grinnell during [4] the 1980s.

It is alleged in the complaint that "in excess of $ 150,000 in illegal bribes, kickbacks and gratuities" were paid to Cappelli in return for his manipulating the purchasing process for lithographic printing services to favor Grinnell. (Amended Compl. P 1.) During the time frame involved, plaintiff awarded Grinnell contracts in excess of $ 54 million. The resulting injury to plaintiff was that "it paid substantially inflated prices" for the services received. Id.

On February 21, 1995, plaintiff filed the present action, alleging a federal claim based on the Robinson-Patman Act, as well as state law claims for fraud, commercial bribery and breach of fiduciary duty.

Extensive pre-trial proceedings occurred thereafter, with the case being placed on the ready trial calendar on October 15, 1998. A week later, defendants successfully sought permission to file a belated summary judgment motion.

DISCUSSION

A. Format

The items of relief requested by defendants ¹ shall be discussed seriatim consistent with the sequence set forth in the notice of motion, beginning with the multiple requests for summary judgment. Before doing so, however, the standards for [5] determining a motion for summary judgment will be reviewed.

B. Standards for Summary Judgment

HN1 [↑] A motion for summary judgment may be granted only when it is shown "that there [*129] is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); see also HN2 [↑] Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986); Donahue v. Windsor Locks Bd. of Fire Comm'rs, 834 F.2d 54, 57 (2d Cir. 1987).

The party seeking summary judgment "bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion" and identifying which materials "it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323; see also Trebor Sportswear Co. v. The Ltd. Stores, Inc., 865 F.2d 506, 511 (2d Cir. 1989). [6] The substantive law governing the case will identify those facts that are material, and "only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment." HN3 [↑] Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

Once the moving party has come forward with support demonstrating that no genuine issue of material fact remains to be tried, including pleadings, depositions, interrogatory answers, and affidavits, the burden shifts to the non-moving party to provide similar support setting forth specific facts about which a genuine triable issue remains. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250; Borthwick v. First Georgetown Sec., Inc., 892 F.2d 178, 181 (2d Cir. 1989); Donahue, 834 F.2d at 57. The Court must resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. See Donahue, 834 F.2d at 57. Moreover, the Court's role on a motion for summary judgment "in short, is confined . . . to issue-finding; it does not extend to issue-resolution." Gallo v. Prudential Residential Servs., Ltd. Partnership, 22 F.3d 1219, 1224 (2d Cir. 1994); [7] see also HN4 [↑] Consarc Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank, N.A., 996 F.2d 568, 572 (2d Cir. 1993).

"The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment; the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 247-48 (emphases omitted). Moreover, "conclusory allegations will not suffice to create a genuine issue. There must be more than a 'scintilla of evidence,' and more than 'some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.'" Delaware & Hudson Ry. Co. v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 902 F.2d 174, 178 (2d Cir. 1990) (quoting Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252, and Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986)); see also Carey v. Crescenzi, 923 F.2d 18, 21 (2d Cir. 1991). "The non-movant cannot escape summary judgment merely by vaguely asserting the existence of some unspecified disputed material facts, . . . or defeat the motion through mere speculation or conjecture." Western World Ins. Co. v. Stack Oil, Inc., 922 F.2d 118, 121 (2d Cir. 1990) [8] (citations and internal quotations omitted).

C. Purported Absence of Proof of Injury

¹ For the sake of simplicity, the moving defendants -- Grinnell and Munson -- will be referred to herein as the "defendants," although there is a third, and non-moving defendant, viz., Sutorius.

Defendants' initial argument is that all of plaintiff's claims should be dismissed because it has not suffered any injury as a result of defendants' conduct.

Plaintiff intends to call Richard T. Rapp, Ph.D. ("Rapp"), an economist and president of an economics consulting firm, to testify as an expert that "Philip Morris paid an average of approximately 22 percent more for products when purchased from Grinnell than in comparable transactions from other vendors, resulting in approximately $ 11.5 million in damages to Philip Morris." (See Rapp Affidavit, sworn to Feb. 5, 1999 ("Rapp Aff."), at P 3.) But, as noted, defendants have moved to preclude such testimony being offered at trial, and therefore, have asked the Court to focus solely on the "undisputed [*130] factual (i.e., non-expert) evidence" in deciding this issue. (See Defs.' Mem. at 20.)

Based on the submissions of counsel, it appears - as defendants assert - that neither Cappelli nor any other individual who provided information during the discovery phase of the case, was able to identify a specific transaction in which a [9] product supplied by Grinnell could have been furnished to plaintiff by another vendor at a lower price. That circumstance, however, is not fatal to plaintiff's case. To the contrary -- and not considering the proffered testimony of Rapp as requested by defendants -- HN5[↑] there is a legal presumption that, at a minimum, the prices paid by plaintiff to Grinnell were inflated by the amount of the bribes and, accordingly, the bribe amounts are recoverable as damages. Grace v. E.J. Kozin Co., 538 F.2d 170, 173-74 (7th Cir. 1976); Continental Mgmt. Inc. v. United States, 208 Ct. Cl. 501, 527 F.2d 613, 618 (Ct. Cl. 1975) ("It is enough to show the fact and amount of the bribes -- nothing further need be alleged or proved by way of specific or direct injury."); Novartis Corp. v. Luppino (In re Luppino), 221 B.R. 693, 703 n.4 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1998); see also Donemar, Inc. v. Molloy, 252 N.Y. 360, 365, 169 N.E. 610 (1930); City of New York v. Liberman, 232 A.D.2d 42, 660 N.Y.S.2d 872, 875 (1st Dep't 1997).

In sum, there is a material issue of fact whether plaintiff sustained an injury as a result of the bribes paid to Cappelli even if the damages delineated [10] by Rapp are culled from the discussion. That being the case, defendants' omnibus request for summary judgment is rejected, thereby necessitating a discussion of their alternative, more limited summary judgment applications. The first of these, seeking a dismissal of plaintiff's treble damages claim based on a violation of § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act, is the subject of the next section of this Memorandum Opinion, section "D."

D. Motion to Dismiss Robinson-Patman Act Claim for Purported Failure to Satisfy Antitrust Injury Requirement

(1) Commercial Bribery Falls Within the Ambit of § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act

Plaintiff's first cause of action is based on a charged violation of § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act² which provides:

Payment or acceptance of commission, brokerage, or other compensation

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either [11] to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

HN6[↑] 15 U.S.C. § 13\(c\).

Section 2(c) was enacted primarily to prevent large buyers from obtaining indirect price discrimination by demanding that the suppliers pay fees to bogus brokers, which fees would then be returned to the buyers. Federal ²The Robinson-Patman Act amended the Clayton Act. As a result, § 2(c) is sometimes referred to as § 2(c) of the Clayton Act, and sometimes as § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act. Here, it will be referred to as § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Trade Comm'n v. Henry Broch & Co., 363 U.S. 166, 174, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1124, 80 S. Ct. 1158 (1960); Hansel 'N Gretel Brand, Inc. v. Savitsky, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13324, 94 CV 4027, 1997 WL 543088, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 3, 1997); [12] Roosevelt Savings Bank v. Eveready Maint. Supply Co., 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13397, 85 CV 245, 1987 WL 30194, at *1 (E.D.N.Y. Dec. 2, 1987). But it has also been construed "to [*131] cover cases of commercial bribery involving a breach of a fiduciary duty by the buyer's agent," a situation akin to the one at bar. Roosevelt Savings Bank, 1987 WL 30194, at *1, and cases cited therein; see also Hansel 'N Gretel, 1997 WL 543088, at *7, and cases cited therein including Broch, 363 U.S. at 169 n.6.

(2) Defendants Have Violated § 2(c)

HN7 For plaintiff's cause of action predicated on § 2(c) to survive defendants' motion for summary judgment, it must first appear that there is a factual basis to maintain that the conduct alleged constitutes "commercial bribery" within the purview of the statute. That requirement clearly has been satisfied here, nor do defendants contend otherwise for present purposes. Indeed, if plaintiff's proof regarding Grinnell's conduct parallels the allegations in the complaint, it would have been entitled to injunctive or declaratory relief if the conduct was ongoing, even in the absence of evidence of concomitant antitrust or competitive [13] injury. See, e.g., Federal Trade Comm'n v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 360 U.S. 55, 64-66, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1079, 79 S. Ct. 1005 (1959); The Grand Union Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 300 F.2d 92, 99 (2d Cir. 1962); Biddle Purch. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 96 F.2d 687, 691 (2d Cir. 1938); Federal Paper Board Co. v. Amata, 693 F. Supp. 1376, 1385-86 (D. Conn. 1988).

(3) Parties' Positions as to Whether Defendants' Violation of § 2(c), Standing Alone, is Sufficient to Support Plaintiff's Claim for Treble Damages Under its First Cause of Action

Plaintiff, however, is not asking for declaratory or injunctive relief. Instead, it seeks treble damages under § 4.³ As to that claim, is the violation of § 2(c) by Grinnell sufficient to defeat defendants' motion for summary judgment? What, if anything, beyond the violation of that Section is required to vest plaintiff with a private right of action to sue for damages under the Clayton Act?

[14] In defendants' view, considerably more is required. Citing such cases as Amata, 693 F. Supp. 1376; Hansel 'N Gretel, 1997 WL 543088; Miyano Machinery USA, Inc. v. Zonar, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 963, 1993 WL 23758, *7 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 29, 1993); NL Industries, Inc. v. Golden Western Industries, 650 F. Supp. 1115 (D. Kan. 1986); and Haff Jewelmont Corp., 594 F. Supp. 1468, 1471-79 (N.D. Cal. 1984), defendants make reference to § 4, and urge that a violation of § 2(c) must be supplemented by proof of "antitrust injury" to permit an award for damages. (Defs.' Mem. at 22.) And it is urged that plaintiff "cannot prove any set of facts sufficient to show that it suffered as a competitor: there is no evidence of collusion, no evidence that Grinnell interfered with other bids, and no evidence that Philip Morris was injured as against other cigarette manufacturers or other purchases of lithographic displays." (Id. at 27 (emphases added).) It should be noted from the above underscoring that defendants equate "antitrust injury" with "competitive injury."

Plaintiff begins its counter-argument by correctly noting that commercial [*15] bribery is included within the scope of § 2(c), (Pl.'s Mem. at 14), and then arguing that in order to curb that abuse, "courts have expanded the scope of standing under Section 2(c) to include plaintiffs who demonstrate injury in the form of overcharges attributable to commercial bribe payments . . ." (Id. at 16.) Competitive injury, in plaintiff's view, is simply not an element of its cause of action for damages. In support of this position, the Court's attention is directed to Grace v. E.J. Kozin Co., 538 F.2d 170, 173 (7th Cir. 1976); Edison Elec. Institute v. Henwood, 832 F. Supp. 413, 418-19 (D.D.C. 1993); Roosevelt Savings Bank v. Eveready Maintenance Supply Co., 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13397, No. 85 CV 245, 1987 WL 30194 (E.D.N.Y. 1987); Gregoris Motors v. Nissan Motor Corp., 630 F. Supp. 902, 910 [*132] (E.D.N.Y. 1986); and Municipality of Anchorage v. Hitachi Cable, Ltd., 547 F. Supp. 633, 639-40 (D. Alaska 1982).

Plaintiff, like defendants, treats "antitrust injury" and "competitive injury" as synonymous. (See, e.g., Pl.'s Mem. at 14 ("Defendants contend that Philip Morris must prove it suffered 'antitrust injury' [*16] as a result of the commercial bribery -- i.e., competitive injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent, see J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 (1981) -- in order to prevail on its claim under Section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act." (emphases added).) But, as shall be discussed, HN8¹⁸ infra, the terms "antitrust injury" and "competitive injury" are not interchangeable, or synonymous, for purposes of a private antitrust claim for treble damages based on a substantive violation of § 2(c).

³ The text of § 4 of the Clayton Act is provided infra at 16.

67 F. Supp. 2d 126, *132 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638, 16

(4) Unsettled State of Law re Elements of a Private Cause of Action for Treble Damages Based on a Violation of § 2(c)

Neither the Supreme Court nor the Second Circuit has delineated the elements which a private litigant must establish to recover treble damages for a violation of § 2(c),⁴ and decisions from district courts and other circuits reflect varied approaches to the issue, producing divergent, often unreconcilable results.

[17] Indeed, some courts have held that § 2(c) is essentially a self-contained antitrust statute, the violation of which may properly serve as a predicate for a monetary award. See Calnetics Corp. v. Volkswagen of Am. Inc., 532 F.2d 674, 696 (9th Cir. 1976) ("We hold that, if distributor is able on remand to prove that [defendants] indeed committed acts of commercial bribery in violation of § 2(c), then the [distributor] ought to be allowed any damages proximately caused by that violation."); Roosevelt Savings, 1987 WL 30194, at *1; Gregoris Motors, 630 F. Supp. at 910.

In Roosevelt Savings, the terms "antitrust injury" and "competitive injury" are used interchangeably. See 1987 WL 30194, at *2 ("Whether antitrust injury must be shown is a closer question A plain reading of § 2(c) . . . convinces me that a § 2(c) claim need not include a showing of anticompetitive injury."). The court in Gregoris Motors speaks solely of "anticompetitive effect" and concludes, based on "plain language" of § 2(c), that such injury need not be proven by plaintiff. 630 F. Supp. at 910.

Cases such as [18] Calnetics Corp., Roosevelt Savings and Gregoris Motors reflect a literal reading of § 2(c), absent any reference to the requirements of § 4.

Other courts have concluded that a violation of § 2(c) is insufficient to warrant an award of damages, unless coupled with proof of competitive injury. See Hansel 'N Gretel, 1997 WL 543088, at *8-10; Miyano, 1993 WL 23758, at *7-8; Amata, 693 F. Supp. at 1386-87; NL Industries, 650 F. Supp. at 1123 ("The absence of competitive injury is fatal to an antitrust claim.").

And finally, there is a third school of judicial thought. Its proponents are of the view that a party seeking treble damages as a result of commercial bribery must only establish a violation of § 2(c) and an "antitrust injury," which injury need not include proof of competitive injury. Edison [*133] Elec. Inst. v. Henwood, 832 F. Supp. 413, 418-19 (D.C. 1993); Municipality of Anchorage, 547 F. Supp. 633. Cf. Fitch v. Kentucky-Tennessee Light and Power, 136 F.2d 12, 16 (6th Cir. 1943).

The differing positions urged by the present parties as to the elements [19] of plaintiff's cause of action for treble damages - as well as the divergent results reached by courts grappling with the same issue in other cases - seem to be traceable to how the following threshold questions are answered:

- (i) is "antitrust injury" an element of a cause of action aimed at recovering treble damages for a violation of § 2(c) ("Question 1"); and ⁴The issue, of course, is not whether an aggrieved party may recover damages as a result of a defendant's conduct, but instead whether such a recovery may be premised on the purported federal antitrust character of that conduct. Cf. Calderone Enters. Corp. v. United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 454 F.2d 1292, 1297 (2d Cir. 1971) ("Our decision [dismissing plaintiff's claim for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act] does not leave the plaintiff here without a remedy. Assuming plaintiff's claims to be meritorious, it is not precluded from recovering single damages from UATC in a state court suit for breach of terms of the lease . . .").

(ii) if so, does plaintiff's obligation to establish "antitrust injury" necessarily require proof that defendants' conduct caused it competitive harm in the marketplace ("Question 2")?

These questions will be addressed seriatim.

(5) "Antitrust Injury" Is an Element of Plaintiff's Cause of Action for Treble Damages (Question 1)

Preliminarily, it should be noted HN9^[↑] that § 2(c) simply defines that certain conduct is illegal. To pursue a private claim for treble damages requires reference to § 4 which expressly creates the right.⁵ See, e.g., Genesco Inc. v. T. Kakiuchi and Co., 815 F.2d 840, 853 (2d Cir. 1987) (§ 2(c) makes certain business practices "unlawful" . . . while § 4 of the Clayton Act . . . provides for an express private right of action for treble damages to any [\[*20\]](#) person injured in his business or property as a result of any antitrust violation."); Amata, 693 F. Supp. at 1386-88. Cf. J. Truett Payne, 451 U.S. at 561-62 (discussing relationship between § 2(a) and § 4 of the Clayton Act); Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 484-87, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (discussing relationship between § 7 and § 4 of the Act)).

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides:

Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of [\[*21\]](#) the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

HN10^[↑] 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\).

Section 4, by its terms, authorizes damage awards to those private antitrust litigants which demonstrate injury to their "business or property," caused "by reason of" a violation of the antitrust laws.

HN11^[↑] Although the expansive language of § 4 -- particularly the phrase "by reason of" -- would appear to authorize treble damages to any aggrieved party that was able to establish a nexus between an injury sustained and a defendant's violation of an antitrust law provision, the statute has not been so broadly construed. Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489 ("To recover treble damages . . . [plaintiff] must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market." (emphasis added)); Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petro. Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990); Local Beauty v. LaMaur, 787 F.2d 1197, 1200-01 (7th Cir. 1986).

Indeed, [\[*22\]](#) § 4 has been judicially circumscribed to include only claims of "antitrust injury." That term has been defined by the Supreme Court to mean "actual injury [\[*134\]](#) attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." J. Truett Payne, 451 U.S. at 557. But -- prescinding for the moment from the question of whether antitrust injury may exist absent proof of competitive injury -- that limiting definition does not appear to be an impediment to plaintiff. The injury to its business -- in an amount at least equal to the bribes paid -- was the direct result of commercial bribery, an activity outlawed by § 2(c) thereby satisfying the J. Truett Payne definition. Moreover, the damage incurred clearly dovetails with the statutory language of § 4, that is, an injury caused "by reason of [something] forbidden in the antitrust laws."

In sum, HN12^[↑] antitrust injury is an element of a cause of action seeking treble damages, which plaintiff seemingly has met. Defendants note, however, that the complaint speaks solely of plaintiff having paid inflated sums for goods and services purchased from Grinnell, devoid of any suggestion that the increased prices affected its ability [\[*23\]](#) to function in the marketplace. Is that a fatal flaw in plaintiff's first cause of action? In other words, may antitrust injury be established by plaintiff without a showing of competitive injury?

⁵ Plaintiff does not argue that § 4 is wholly irrelevant to its first cause of action. Indeed, it would be hard pressed to do so, since the sole statutory authority for the treble damages sought is found in that Section. But it vigorously contests defendants' claim that § 4 requires plaintiff to establish "antitrust injury," which, again, it incorrectly construes as requiring proof of "competitive injury."

(6) Absence of Demonstrable Competitive Injury Does not Preclude Plaintiff From Recovering Treble Damages Based on Defendants' Violation of § 2(c) (Question 2)

This subdivision of the opinion will be divided into two major parts for analytical purposes.

The first part consists of a review of a settled area of antitrust law, viz., that Congress, in enacting the Robinson-Patman Act, determined, as recognized by the courts, that certain business practices -- such as those covered by § 2(c) -- are unlawful per se, while others -- such as discriminatory pricing under § 2(a) -- are not necessarily unlawful, i.e., are non per se in character. The recognized difference between the two is that HN13 a per se unlawful practice under the Robinson-Patman Act is inherently anticompetitive, thus obviating the need to prove anticompetitive injury when the relief sought is injunctive or declaratory in nature; for a non per se practice, such injury is not implicit and, thus, more than the [24] mere commission of the act must be shown in order to establish a substantive violation of the statute.

After reviewing that settled area of the law, and with the corresponding principles in mind, attention will be turned to the pivotal, and unsettled issue regarding plaintiff's first cause of action, that being whether its burden of proof in seeking treble damages under § 4 requires a showing that defendants' conduct caused competitive injury. Or, given the per se character of commercial bribery, may the required antitrust element of the § 4 claim be satisfied without such proof?

a) Whether Competitive Injury Must be Shown to Establish a Substantive Violation of the Robinson-Patman Act Depends on the Antitrust Provision Involved.

HN14 The Clayton Act, including the Robinson-Patman Act, the Sherman Act, and certain parts of a federal tariff act, constitute the federal antitrust laws. (1050 PLI/Corp. 811, 819 (1998), citing 15 U.S.C. § 12.) Their shared goal is to protect competition and, in the case of the Robinson-Patman Act, to protect competitors as well. Chroma Lighting v. GTE Prods. Corp., 111 F.3d 653, 657-58 \(9th Cir. 1997\); Monahan's Marine, Inc. v. Boston Whaler, 866 F.2d 525, 528 \(1st Cir. 1989\) [25] ("Unlike the Sherman Act which protects 'competition, not competitors,' Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 . . . (1962), the Robinson-Patman Act extends its protection to competitors.") From that, however, it may not be inferred that proof of an effect on competition, or competitive injury, is a sine qua non to a charged Robinson-Patman Act violation. [*135] Such may, or may not be the case depending on the statutory provision involved.

As to a substantive violation of the Robinson-Patman Act -- as distinct from & concomitant private claim for damages under § 4, which will be discussed shortly -- the Supreme Court underscored the above point in F.T.C. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., thusly:

HN15 Section 2(a) makes unlawful price discriminations 'where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition'

This price discrimination provision is hedged with qualifications. An exception is made for price differentials 'which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery.' Care was taken [26] that price changes are not outlawed where made in response to changing market conditions. Finally, § 2(a) codifies the rule of United States v. Colgate & Co., 1919, 250 U.S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, protecting the right of a person in commerce to select his 'own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade.' HN16

Subsections (c), (d), and (e), on the other hand, unqualifiedly make unlawful certain business practices other than price discriminations.

In terms, the proscriptions of these three subsections are absolute. Unlike § 2(a), none of them requires, as proof of a prima facie violation, a showing that the illicit practice has had an injurious or destructive effect on competition.

In Simplicity, the Supreme Court reversed a circuit decision which had set aside a cease and desist order issued by the Federal Trade Commission. That cease and desist order, based on a violation of § 2(e),⁶ prohibited Simplicity Pattern from continuing its practice of providing services and facilities to its larger customers which were not afforded to competing smaller customers on a proportionally [27] equal basis.

Given that Congress has concluded that § 2(e), along with § 2(c) and § 2(d) involve per se violations, (i.e., "the proscriptions of these three subsections are absolute"; id.), the Court held that neither the absence of proven competitive injury nor the presence of cost justification was relevant to the charged violation. In other words, if the act was committed, the substantive violation occurred.

HN17[] With respect to per se violations of the Robinson-Patman Act, it is not that [28] the targeted practices do not effect competition. Were that the case, the antitrust laws would not be implicated. Instead, Congress decided that such practices are necessarily anticompetitive and, thus, no proof to that effect is required to establish a violation. See, e.g., Grand Union, 300 F.2d at 99 ("In making same, but not all, of the practices outlawed by the Robinson-Patman Act illegal per se, Congress indicated that those selected for per se treatment always led to the undesired effects in competition." (emphasis added)); Fitch v. Kentucky-Tennessee Light & Power, 136 F.2d 12, 16 (6th Cir. 1943) ("Plainly, the payment of the secret commissions to Fitch was an unfair labor practice, and obviously resulted in lessening competition in the sale of coal to the Power Company."). Cf. Simplicity, 360 U.S. at 63 n.5 ("Simplicity argues that the [*136] Examiner 'affirmatively found an absence of competitive injury.' This view was apparently adopted by the Court of Appeals. . . . We do not so read the record, however. What the Examiner said was that 'there is no showing of competitive injury' (emphasis added)).").

In HN18[] sum, it is well [29] established that certain practices are per se unlawful under the Robinson-Patman Act as inherently anticompetitive, while others are not. Commercial bribery falls within the former category.

b) Plaintiff's Proof of Antitrust Injury Under § 4 Need Not Include Proof of Competitive Injury.

Does the distinction between per se and non per se violations of the Robinson-Patman Act carry over to corresponding damage claims under § 4 to the extent an aggrieved party who has established (1) a substantive violation of § 2(c) and (2) "antitrust injury" need not also prove anticompetitive effect?

Plaintiff, as discussed previously, has framed the issue under discussion somewhat differently than above. But in urging that competitive injury is not an element of its cause of action for treble damages, considerable stock has been placed in Roosevelt Savings Bank v. Eveready Maintenance Supply Co., and Gregoris Motors v. Nissan Motors Corp., the two decisions from this district addressing that question. Both concluded that such proof is not required for the victim of commercial bribery to recover damages. Although I agree with the results reached in both Roosevelt Savings Bank [30] and Gregoris Motors, defendants are correct in noting that the analytical process in each of those cases is perhaps overly cryptic in that no reference is made to § 4, nor to the requirement -- as explained in J. Truett Payne -- that one seeking treble damages must establish antitrust injury. See also Edison Elec. Inst. v. Henwood, 832 F. Supp. 413, 418 (D.D.C. 1993) (court relied on per se illegality of commercial bribery in concluding that competitive injury need not be established; however, like Roosevelt Savings and Gregoris Motors, no mention is made of § 4).

However, among the many other decisions cited by plaintiff in support of its position, I found Municipality of Anchorage, 547 F. Supp. at 640, to be particularly helpful for present purposes. Fitch, 136 F.2d 12, also warrants brief mention.

⁶ Section 2(e) of the Robinson-Patman Act provides that "it shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms."

67 F. Supp. 2d 126, *136 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638, 30

In Municipality of Anchorage, the municipality brought an action under, inter alia, § 2(c) for damages caused by defendants' bribery of two municipal employees in a bid-rigging scheme.

Defendant Hitachi sought the dismissal of the § 2(c) claim, arguing along the following lines as synopsized by the district [31] court:

The Municipality lacks standing to sue. Hitachi suggests that when a seller bribes a buyer's agent, only competitors of the seller suffer competitive injury and have standing to sue. Furthermore, since the Utility is a regulated monopoly and has no competitors, it cannot suffer a competitive injury.

547 F. Supp. at 637.

After recognizing the unsettled state of the law as to whether proof of an adverse effect on competition is necessary to establish liability under § 2(c) and § 4, the district court found that it was not, reasoning:

HN19[[↑]] Any examination of a plaintiff's right to sue under a statute must begin with the language of the statute itself. I find nothing in the language of section 2(c) to justify imposing a competitive injury requirement on potential plaintiffs. Unlike section 2(a) which outlaws price discrimination whose effect 'may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly', sections 2(c), (d), and (e) prohibit business practices other than price discrimination. F.T.C. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 360 U.S. 55, 65, 79 S. Ct. 1005, 1011, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1079 (1959). None of these latter sections [32] [*137] "requires, as proof of a prima facie violation, a showing that the illicit practice has had an injurious or destructive effect on competition." Id.

....

HN20[[↑]] Suits for damages by private plaintiffs "injured in . . . business or property" are authorized by section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. . . . Section 4 has long been read to include a requirement that any potential plaintiff under the antitrust laws be within the so-called 'target area' of the antitrust violations. . . . Although the exact boundaries of the target area may be the subject of much dispute, the purpose of this requirement is to limit recovery under antitrust law to those entities whom the laws were meant to protect. Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, [457 U.S. 465,] 102 S. Ct. [2540], 2548, [73 L. Ed. 2d 149] [1982]; Brunswick Corporation v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977).

....

I conclude that, HN21[[↑]] when commercial bribes are paid to a company's employees to obtain contracts for the sale of goods, the company has standing to bring an action for damages under section 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman [33] Act. 15 U.S.C. § 13(c) I reject the analysis [in those decisions which have reached a contrary result], believing that those cases adopt too narrow a view of the intent and purpose of section 2(c).

547 F. Supp. at 639-40.

Anchorage is instructive for, inter alia, its focus on the statutory language of § 2(c) and that section's per se character, as well as its explanation of the standing requirements for a § 4 claim which dovetails nicely with the definition of "antitrust injury" given in J. Truett Payne.

In Fitch, the utility's former president, Fitch, accepted bribes in return for awarding purchase contracts to the Nashville Coal Company. As a result, he, the coal company and its president were sued by the utility, which obtained a judgment for treble damages against defendants based on violations of § 2(c).

On appeal, appellant argued that § 2(c) "is concerned only with price discriminations extended by sellers to different buyers; and that there is no proof that the seller in this case so discriminated." 136 F.2d at 15.

Fitch predates the decisions which articulated the dichotomy between the primary purpose [34] for enacting § 2(c) (i.e., to curtail price discrimination accomplished through sham brokers) and the additional goal of curbing commercial bribery in the purchase or sale of goods. Thus, in rejecting appellant's argument that the subject conduct was beyond the ambit of § 2(c), the Court did not employ the later developed term of "commercial bribery." Yet, Fitch -- in affirming the treble damages award to the victimized utility -- is significant for present purposes in that it speaks of "secret commissions" being an "unfair trade practice [which] obviously result[s] in lessening competition." Id. at 16.

Plaintiff, at least as to the result urged, I believe has the better side of the argument. Commercial bribery by its very nature is anticompetitive. Indeed, the sole purpose of the practice is to circumvent competitive forces in obtaining a contract. Congress, as explained by the Supreme Court in Simplicity, recognized that fact in drafting § 2(c). HN22 [↑] While price discrimination may, or may not be violative of § 2(a), commercial bribery is always violative of § 2(c) and is never in the public interest.

There is no reason that the per se character [35] of such conduct should not be recognized in private suits for damages under § 4. To the contrary, such private suits will serve to curtail such purely pernicious business practices in the marketplace, consistent with the purpose of § 4 as tellingly explained by the Supreme Court in Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready:

[*138] The lack of restrictive language [in the treble damages provision of § 4] reflects Congress' 'expansive remedial purpose' in enacting § 4: Congress sought to create a private enforcement mechanism that would deter violators and deprive them of the fruits of their illegal actions, and would provide ample compensation to the victims of antitrust violations.

457 U.S. 465, 472, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 \(1982\) (citations omitted); see also Calderone Enters., 454 F.2d at 1295.

In sum, plaintiff was a victim of a violation of § 2(c) on the undisputed facts, and sustained an injury consistent with both the statutory requirements of § 4 as written by Congress and the definition of "antitrust injury" set forth in J. Truett Payne. Antitrust injury need not entail proof of competitive injury, given that commercial bribery under § 2(c) is [36] the type of per se violation which presupposes an anticompetitive effect.⁷

In reaching this conclusion, I declined to follow such cases as Hansel 'N Gretel, 1997 WL 543088, Amata, 693 F. Supp. 1376, and NL Industries 650 F. Supp. 1115, which hold that the absence of proof of competitive injury is fatal to a cause of action for treble damages. Common to those three decisions -- all of which are relied upon by defendants -- is what I perceive to be a failure to draw the critical distinction [37] between non per se antitrust violations, and per se Robinson-Patman Act violations, for purposes of private damages claims under § 4.

By way of example, consider Hansel 'N Gretel. There, Savitsky, while an officer of Hansel 'N Gretel, conducted a kickback scheme whereby various suppliers overcharged the company and divided the excess with him. 1997 WL 543088, at *1. The company sued for, inter alia, treble damages under §§ 2(c) and 4 of the Clayton Act, naming Savitsky, and two participating suppliers as defendants.

Defendants moved to dismiss the company's Robinson-Patman Act cause of action on the ground that it failed to allege "competitive injury." The district court accepted that argument,⁸ based on the following rationale:

⁷ While commercial bribery under § 2(c) of the Robinson-Patman Act is, by its very nature and purpose, anticompetitive, the same may not be said of all per se antitrust violations. See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petro., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\) ("Actions per se unlawful under the antitrust laws [such as low prices produced by non predatory price fixing in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act] may nonetheless have some procompetitive effects.")

⁸ Parenthetically, although the district court in Hansel 'N Gretel Brand Inc. v. Savitsky, 1997 WL 543088, adopted the position that antitrust injury required proof of anticompetitive harm to permit damages under § 4 for a violation of § 2(c), it found that plaintiff's complaint satisfied that standard. Id. at 10.

67 F. Supp. 2d 126, *138 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15638, 37

When a § 2(a) claim is brought by a buyer who has allegedly been discriminated against directly by the seller, it "must first prove that, as the disfavored purchaser, it was engaged in actual competition with the favored purchaser(s) at the time of the price differential." . . . Although the present case concerns § 2(c), the same principle must apply. Absent such discrimination against parties engaged in actual competition, I [38] discern no anticompetitive effect arising out of the kickbacks at issue which harmed plaintiff.

Id. at *10.

The relevant excerpt from Amata reads:

To recover damages under section 4, the Court [in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)] held that the petitioner had to do more than prove that the defendant violated section 7. . . . In addition to proving a violation of the substantive antitrust law, "plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' [*139] acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive [39] effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation." . . .

The Brunswick analysis has been applied to violations of the Robinson-Patman Act, and it governs Federal's claim for treble damages. In J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981), the petitioner alleged a violation of section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. In its analysis of the petitioner's claim, the Court noted that "our decision here is virtually governed by our reasoning in [Brunswick]." Id. at 562, 101 S. Ct. at 1927. The petitioner had to prove more than just a violation of section 2(a), "since such proof establishes only that injury may result." Id. (quoting Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 486, 97 S. Ct. at 696). "To recover treble damages . . . a plaintiff must make some showing of actual injury attributable to something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent." Id. Although J. Truett Payne involved section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, there is no reason why its analysis should not also apply to claims arising out of section 2(c) since in both [40] instances the right to treble damages is granted by section 4 of the Clayton Act.

693 F. Supp. at 1387-88.

And finally, the district court in NL Industries held that a private antitrust claim for damages based on a violation of § 2(c) is not viable in the absence of competitive injury, citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977), 650 F. Supp. at 1123. But Brunswick involved a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. That section proscribes mergers whose effect "may be substantially to lessen competition . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 18 (emphasis added). Obviously, given the statutory language involved, a private litigant may not rely simply on a violation of § 7 in seeking damages under § 4. Instead, such a party must prove actual as distinct from potential harm, which harm must pertain to competition, again, given the language of § 7. And to have standing under § 4, or "antitrust injury" as explained in J. Truett Payne, the competitive harm must have been to that party.

In sum, Hansel 'N Gretel relied in large measure on § 2(a) decisions to decide a § 2(c) case; Amata [41] used both § 2(a) and § 7 decisions, while NL Industries relied on Brunswick, a § 7 case, for the same purpose, i.e., to decide a § 2(c) case.

For the reasons given, HN23 the holdings in antitrust cases involving non per se violations are not interchangeable with those involving per se unlawful business practices under the Robinson-Patman Act, such as commercial bribery under § 2(c). That statement is beyond cavil for substantive violations. Based on the statutory language of § 2(c) and § (4), the purpose sought to be advanced by each of the statutes, and what I believe to be the better reasoned cases, (particularly Municipality of Anchorage), I conclude that the per se character of § 2(c) violations is equally applicable to claims under § 4 in the sense that an aggrieved party -- while required to establish both a substantive violation and an antitrust injury -- is not obligated to also prove that such injury caused competitive harm.

I have also reviewed the other cases cited by defendants and find them unpersuasive as well.

For the reasons indicated above, defendants' motion for summary judgment on plaintiff's first cause of action is denied.

E. [42] Private Right of Action Under Penal Law § 180.03

Plaintiff's second claim against defendants is for commercial bribery in violation of Penal Law § 180.03. (See Compl. PP 37-40.) Plaintiff asserts that by defendants' violation of the Penal Law, it "has been injured in its business" and its damages include "the payment of inflated [*140] prices for goods and services." (See id. P 39.) Plaintiff further contends that by virtue of the willful conduct of defendants, punitive damages should be awarded. (Id. P 40.) Defendants, however, contend that plaintiff's second claim should be dismissed because "there is no private right of action for a violation of section 180.03 of the penal code." (Defs.' Mem. at 33.)

HN24 [↑] Section 180.03 of the New York State Penal Law provides:

A person is guilty of commercial bribing in the first degree when he confers, or offers or agrees to confer, any benefit upon any employee, agent or fiduciary without the consent of the latter's employer or principal, with intent to influence his conduct in relation to his employer's or principal's affairs . . .

N.Y. Penal Law § 180.03. As a threshold matter, the Court notes that HN25 [↑] the statute does not [43] itself create a private right of action. As Judge McKenna explained in Philip Morris, Inc. v. Heinrich, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9156, No. 95 CIV. 0328, 1996 WL 363156, at *18 (S.D.N.Y. June 28, 1996), that does not end the inquiry; "absent such a directive, the courts are to determine themselves, considering such factors as legislative history, consistency with the overall legislative scheme for creating the private right and whether the plaintiff is one of the class for whose special benefit the statute was enacted." Id. The court in Philip Morris concluded that it was unnecessary to create a private right of action under the Penal Law as recovery could be had under common law theories of fraud and breach of fiduciary duty for such conduct. *Id. at 17.

It appears that every federal court considering the issue has concluded that the commercial bribery sections of the Penal Law do not create a private right of action. See, e.g., *id. at 18 (declining to find private right of action under Penal Law § 180.03 (citing Kinley Corp. v. Integrated Resources Equity Corp. \(In re Integrated Resources, Inc.\), 851 F. Supp. 556, 563 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\) (holding that there is no [44] private right of action under Texas commercial bribery statute)); Sierra Rutile Ltd. v. Katz, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14366, *14, No. 90 Civ. 4913, 1996 WL 556963, at *4 (S.D.N.Y., Oct. 1, 1996) (no private right of action under Penal Law § 180.08); Texwood Ltd. v. Gerber, 621 F. Supp. 585, 589 \(S.D.N.Y. 1985\) (noting that plaintiffs cited no authority for the proposition that a private right of action exists under Penal Law § 180.03, but explaining that under New York law an employer may recover from his employee bribes taken in violation of § 180.08 and limiting plaintiffs' recovery to the amount of the bribes).⁹

[45] Aside from the case law distinguished by Judge McKenna in Philip Morris and a more recent case, City of New York v. Liberman, 232 A.D.2d 42, 660 N.Y.S.2d 872 (1st Dep't 1997), plaintiff cites no authority to support its view that a private cause of action under the Penal Law exists. Liberman, moreover, does not compel the conclusion urged by plaintiff. Indeed, Liberman is not applicable because the claim pursued by plaintiff in that case was not based upon the commercial bribery section of the New York Penal Law. Rather, the Court in Liberman simply held that the purchaser was entitled to recover any bribe monies paid by a vendor to its agent.¹⁰ That

⁹ In Benedict v. Amaducci, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17684, 92 Civ. 5239, 1995 WL 702444, at *8 (S.D.N.Y., Nov. 28, 1995), cited by plaintiff, the court held that because the complaint failed to allege that benefits were conferred without the consent of the employer, the complaint did not properly allege commercial bribery under Penal Law § 180.03 as a RICO predicate act. The court did not address whether a private right of action under Penal Law § 180.03 existed.

¹⁰ Also, as the bribery in Liberman involved a public official, the Court explained that a more stringent rule should be applied. See 232 A.D.2d at 49. Specifically, "vendors that corrupt public officials forfeit their right to all payments due under the tainted transaction." Id. The Liberman Court noted that, while the plaintiff did not seek such relief there, "the policy . . . that those who holding dovetails with [*141] the well-settled principle of New York law that an employer whose agent has received commercial bribes is entitled to recovery of such bribes. See, e.g., Donemar, 252 N.Y. at 365 ("If . . . a vendor bribes purchaser's agent, it must be assumed that the purchase money is loaded by the amount of the bribe. The vendor has had and received money which belongs to the purchaser to the extent of the bribe, which neither the vendor nor the unfaithful agent may in good conscience and good [46] morals retain."); British Am. & E. Co. v. Wirth Ltd., 592 F.2d 75, 79 (2d Cir. 1979) ("Where there is an agency relationship, the principal is entitled to recover any monies paid as commercial bribes to his agent."); Sierra, 1996 WL 556963, at *4 (same).¹¹

[47] Based on the foregoing, the Court agrees with the other federal courts that have refused to recognize a private right of action based on a violation of New York Penal Law § 180.03. Accordingly, plaintiff's second claim is dismissed.

F. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss all of Plaintiff's Claims Against Defendant Oliver Munson Is Denied

It should be noted that Munson was during the time frame alleged in the complaint, and apparently still is, the President, Chair of the Board, and a shareholder of Grinnell. Now that discovery has been completed, defendants' counsel moves to dismiss all claims against Munson on the ground that there is no proof that he either authorized or was aware of the bribes Sutorius paid to plaintiff's purchasing agent Cappelli.

Although the bulk of the bribes to Cappelli consisted of weekly cash payments (see "Stipulated Facts," Ex. A to Not. of Mot., at 9), the bribes also were furnished in other forms. By way of example, plaintiff alleges in its complaint that, as part of the "Bribery Scheme," "Grinnell, Munson and Sutorius also arranged for or paid for Cappelli's golf vacations on at least four occasions. . . ." (Am. Compl. "The Bribery Scheme" [*48] P 23 at 7.) That such "all expenses paid" golf vacations were provided to Cappelli, with the "knowledge and consent of Munson," is conceded in the stipulation of facts entered into between plaintiff and defendants. (Stipulation of Facts, Ex. A to Not. of Mot., P 22 at 10.) Conceivably, defendants will posit that the free golf vacations at distant locales were not bribes, contrary to the position taken by plaintiff in its complaint and now. However, at the very least, the present scenario raises a material issue of fact which precludes defendants' request for summary judgment as to the claims asserted against Munson. Whether Munson may also be held accountable for other bribes paid to Cappelli based on, e.g., his review of the expense reports of Sutorius which were inflated by the bribe payments, need not be addressed in view of the foregoing.

In sum, for the reasons indicated, defendants' motion to dismiss all claims against defendant Munson is denied.

G. Defendants' Application to Preclude the Admission Into Evidence of the Rapp Report as Being Irrelevant and Unreliable Is Granted to the Extent That a Hearing Will be Held Prior to Trial

Rapp was retained by plaintiff [*49] to testify as an expert regarding the damages it sustained as a result of defendants' commercial bribery. In performing his analysis, Rapp examined "4,067 product contracts set forth on purchase orders prepared and issued by Philip Morris for [*142] lithographic products of the type Grinnell supplied from 1979 to 1991." (Rapp Aff. P 13.) Utilizing that data, he created "268 product categories, each containing products of a similar nature." Id. The purpose of this process was to "standardize" the various non-Grinnell and Grinnell products involved by endeavoring to account for numerous factors which could produce price differentials other than preferential treatment afforded to Grinnell. At the conclusion of this highly detailed undertaking, Rapp opined that plaintiff paid approximately 22% more for products it purchased from Grinnell than for similar products purchased from other vendors, resulting in a damage estimate of $ 11.5 million. (Id. at P 6.)

Following Grinnell's receipt of the Rapp Report, it hired G. Hossein Borhani, Ph.D. ("Borhani"). Borhani focused on the obvious linch pin of the Rapp Report, to wit, the determination as to which non-Grinnell products were engage in corrupt acts with public officials are subject to serious civil consequences, provides an independent basis for the awarding, at an absolute minimum, of damages equal to the amount of the bribe." See id.

¹¹ Defendants do not take issue with plaintiff's argument that it should recover the amount of the bribes; in fact, defendants have offered a tender of judgment in that amount, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 68. (See Defs.' Reply Mem. at 24.)

sufficiently [50] similar to the products purchased from Grinnell to permit meaningful comparisons. (See Mar. 17, 1998 Borhani Report at 3.) Upon analyzing the Rapp Report, Borhani identified two purported problems:

1. Product category or codes so narrowly defined that many Grinnell products have been assigned a product code for which there are no corresponding products supplied by other vendors; and
2. That even when products are supplied by both Grinnell and other vendors, Rapp's methodology fails to appropriately account for a number of factors -- such as, e.g., number of colors in the lithographic materials supplied -- which may affect the contract price. (See id. at 5-6.)

The Rapp Report, viewed in isolation, suggests that its introduction would be of assistance to the jury in determining plaintiff's damages, and that the methodology employed is sufficiently reliable to warrant its introduction consistent with my "gatekeeper" role under Rule 104\(a\) and Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 119 S. Ct. 1167, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238 \(1999\). But, of course, the Rapp Report may not be reviewed in isolation. Rather the comments of Borhani must be taken into account. Those comments [51] go directly to the reliability of the methodology employed.

Under the circumstances, a hearing will be scheduled immediately prior to trial to provide me with an opportunity to hear Rapp's and Borhani's testimony concerning their respective positions and the factual predicates for those positions, subject to questioning by the Court and to cross-examination by opposing counsel.

CONCLUSION

The relief sought by defendants in the motion are denied except (1) plaintiff's claim under § 180.03 of the New York State Penal Law is dismissed and (2) defendants' application to preclude Rapp's testimony and the Rapp Report is granted to the extent that a hearing will be held immediately prior to jury selection to determine their admissibility.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: Hauppauge, New York

September 28, 1999

DENIS R. HURLEY, U.S.D.J.

End of Document

Bayou Fleet, Inc. v. Alexander

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

September 29, 1999, Decided ; September 29, 1999, Filed; September 30, 1999, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. 97-2205 SECTION "I" (1)

Reporter

68 F. Supp. 2d 734 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15540 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,709

BAYOU FLEET, INC. VERSUS ELLIS A. ALEXANDER, INDIVIDUALLY AND IN HIS OFFICIAL CAPACITY AS A MEMBER OF THE ST. CHARLES PARISH COUNCIL, ET AL.

Disposition: [1] Judgment entered in favor of defendants Neal Clulee, Mary Clulee, Homeplace Batture Leasing, Inc., and N/C Materials, Inc. and against plaintiff Bayou Fleet, Inc., dismissing plaintiff's claims with prejudice, plaintiff to bear costs.

Core Terms

sand, Levee, sand pit, pits, non-conforming, dredging, minutes, ordinance, permit application, phone call, antitrust, lawsuit, conspiracy, permits, attend, notice, letters, River, audit, telephone, zoning, color of state law, Sherman Act, violations, meetings, rights, front, voted, no evidence, constituents

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Types of Evidence, Testimony

The Fifth Circuit describes the adverse witness rule as an archaism for which there is no longer any justification, particularly where the witness could have been called by either party, as in the present case. In any event, the adverse witness rule is discretionary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The essence of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is that parties who petition the government for government action favorable to them cannot be prosecuted under the antitrust laws even though their petitions are motivated by anticompetitive intent.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

HN3 Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Speech

U.S. Const. amend. I protects attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws, no matter how harmful their incidental impact may be.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine applies when a defendant uses the governmental process, as opposed to the outcome of that process, as an anticompetitive weapon.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Section 1983 Actions > General Overview

HN5 Elements, Color of State Law

In a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 action the plaintiff must establish two essential elements: (1) that the conduct in question deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States; and (2) that the conduct complained of was committed by a person acting under color of state law.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

HN6 State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

A private person may be considered a state actor under color of state law if the individual is engaged in a conspiracy or willfully engages in joint activity with one or more parties acting under color of state law, even if the state agent is immune to liability.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN7 Conspiracy, Elements

68 F. Supp. 2d 734, *734LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15540, 1

A civil conspiracy under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 is an agreement between private and public actors to violate the plaintiff's constitutional rights. A conspiracy may be proven by circumstantial evidence; however, the acts of the alleged conspirators must show a unity of purpose, common design, and understanding, or meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

HN8 [] State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

The joint action inquiry focuses on whether the state has so far insinuated itself into a position of interdependence with the private entity that it must be recognized as a joint participant in the challenged activity. A private party does not act under color of state law when he merely elicits but does not join in an exercise of official authority. It is not sufficient to allege that the private and state defendants merely acted in concert or with a common goal. There must be allegations that the defendants had directed themselves towards an unconstitutional action by virtue of a mutual understanding. Even were such allegations to be made, they must further be supported by some factual allegations suggesting such a meeting of the minds.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

HN9 [] State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

Under 42 U.S.C.S. §1983 there can be no liability, much less a conspiracy between individuals that had no personal involvement in the allegedly wrongful conduct.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

HN10 [] State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

Individual liability under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 must rest on facts reflecting the defendant's personal participation or involvement in the alleged wrong.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [] Sherman Act, Claims

A violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 is established when the plaintiff shows that the asserted violator: (1) has antitrust standing; (2) possesses or intends to possess monopoly power in the relevant market and (3) acquired or maintained that power or intends to do the same in a wilful manner.

Counsel: For BAYOU FLEET INC, plaintiff: J. Mac Morgan, Law Office of J. Mac Morgan, New Orleans, LA.

For ELLIS A ALEXANDER, defendant: Bernard L. Charbonnet, Jr., Attorney at Law, New Orleans, LA.

For HOME PLACE BATTURE LEASING, INC., NEAL - CLULEE, MARY CLULEE, N C MATERIALS INC, defendants: Joel Thomas Chaisson, Chaisson & Chaisson, Destrehan, LA.

For HOME PLACE BATTURE LEASING, INC., NEAL - CLULEE, MARY CLULEE, N C MATERIALS INC, defendants: Jack Martin Capella, David James Motter, Capella Law Firm, Metairie, LA.

Judges: Henry A. Mentz, Jr., UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Henry A. Mentz, Jr.

Opinion

[*735] MEMORANDUM OPINION

Plaintiff Bayou Fleet, Inc. filed this action for monetary, injunctive, and declaratory relief alleging civil rights violations under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, antitrust violations under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and state law violations of the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices [2] Act, La. Rev. Stat. ann. § 15:1401, et seq.. Bayou [*736] Fleet named as defendants, Ellis Alexander, individually and as a member of the St. Charles Parish Council, St. Charles Parish, Coregis Insurance Company, Neal Clulee ("Clulee") and his wife Mary Clulee (referred to herein jointly as "the Clulees"), and two companies owned by the Clulees, Homeplace Batture Leasing, Inc. ("Homeplace") and N/C Materials, Inc.¹

Bayou Fleet claims that Alexander and the Clulee defendants acted jointly and in conspiracy to put Bayou Fleet out of business through a series of arbitrary and capricious zoning challenges, permit challenges, and a sales tax audit which render them liable under section 1983 for violation of its rights to due process and equal protection of the law under the Fourteenth Amendment, and under the Sherman Act for conspiring and attempting to restrain trade and [3] monopolize the river sand business. Bayou also claims that after it filed the present lawsuit, Alexander and the Clulee defendants continued to act jointly and in conspiracy to put Bayou Fleet out of business by adopting a criminal ordinance referred to herein as the "Levee Law," and the adoption of a resolution to appoint a "Special Legal Counsel" to determine whether Bayou Fleet had lost the non-conforming status of its property in violation of the same constitutional and statutory provisions above, as well as its First Amendment right of access to the courts. Bayou Fleet claims damages for loss of income due to delays in the permitting process allegedly caused by the conspirators, treble damages, attorney fees, and punitive damages.

After a trial on the merits of Bayou Fleet's request for a preliminary and permanent injunction, this court declared the Levee Law ordinance and the resolution to appoint Special Legal Counsel unconstitutional. See Bayou Fleet, Inc. v. Alexander, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15567, 1997 WL 625492 (E.D. La. Oct. 7, 1997). The Parish Council subsequently voted to rescind the ordinance and resolution. Shortly before trial of the defendants' liability, Bayou Fleet settled [4] its dispute with Alexander, St. Charles Parish, and Coregis Insurance Company. The remaining issues before the court are the liability of the Clulee defendants for the alleged violations of antitrust, civil rights, and state unfair trade practice laws and damages, if any.

FACTS

Plaintiff Bayou Fleet owns and operates sand pits located on the batture along the right descending bank of the Mississippi River in Hahnville, Louisiana, in St. Charles Parish. Bayou Fleet is a family-owned company represented at trial by one of the family members, Robin Durant.

Defendants Homeplace and N/C Materials are also family-owned companies in the sand pit business. Neal and Mary Clulee are the owners of Homeplace and N/C Materials. Homeplace owns a sand pit on the batture just down river from Bayou Fleet. Homeplace leases in part to N/C Materials, which handles the sales and trucking of the sand.

¹ Neal Clulee, Mary Clulee, Homeplace Batture Leasing, Inc. and N/C Materials, Inc. are referred to herein, in globo, as the "Clulee defendants."

In 1981, Bayou Fleet's sand pit and the sand pit now owned by Homeplace were zoned B-1, which did not permit the operation of sand pits. Because both sand pits were in operation prior to the creation of that zoning classification, the sand pits were grandfathered to allow continued operations as [5] a non-conforming use, provided that the sand pit activities were not suspended for a period of six months.

Bayou Fleet and the Clulee defendants are competitors in the sand business. They are the only active sand pit businesses in the greater Hahnville area. In between Bayou Fleet's and Homeplace's sand pits is a non-operating sand pit owned by the Giambelluca family. The sand pits are adjacent to residential areas of Hahnville. Two other sand pit businesses [*737] operate in the same market, but in the nearby town of Waggaman, Louisiana.

The Durants and the Clulees have a history of litigation over the years, as described below. The present controversy began in 1997 when Ronald Adams Contractors, Inc. ("RAC") obtained a Louisiana road construction contract which required a source of approximately 750,000 cubic yards of river sand for the job. The following is a chronology of the facts of what occurred when RAC undertook to acquire the sand.

RAC wanted to source its own sand by dredging the Mississippi River and stockpiling it in a sand pit. RAC sought quotes from Clulee and Durant to use their sand pits to stockpile the sand and haul out as needed for the project. RAC ultimately decided [6] to use the Durant/Bayou Fleet sand pits.

In order to dredge sand from the Mississippi River, RAC had to obtain a permit from the U.S. Army Department Corps of Engineers. A permit is also needed from the Lafourche Basin Levee District Board of Commissioners (hereinafter "Levee Board") to operate a sand pit, meaning pumping, stockpiling, and hauling sand across the levee. A permit to operate Bayou Fleet's sand pit was held by a company called Vulcan, which offered to name RAC as licensee. RAC declined because it wanted all permits in its own name. If the Levee Board denies a permit to operate, the Corps of Engineers is required by regulation to deny a permit to dredge.

RAC started the permitting process in March, 1997. By resolution adopted April 3, 1997, the Levee Board issued a permit to RAC to make improvements to the levee crossing to Bayou Fleet's sand pits. On April 4, 1997, RAC submitted an application to the Corps of Engineers for a permit to dredge the Mississippi River. About this same time, it became apparent that there were neighborhood concerns about the project. The Corps of Engineers' file shows a flurry of complaints during this period from residents opposing the RAC [7] permit. The evidence established that sand pit operations in general can cause public health problems from air pollution and safety risks, as well as nuisances to neighbors.

Andrew Courreges, RAC's operations manager, and Durant met with Alexander at Durant's office to assure him that they would make a good effort to abate potential problems for the community. Durant told Alexander that his pit was in operation and permitted. Alexander indicated that he would support the project.

Telephone records show a one-minute phone call from Clulee's home to Alexander's home on April 28, 1997.² Clulee recalls speaking with Alexander during this period about the status of Bayou Fleet's non-conforming use and the RAC permits. On approximately the same date, Alexander telephoned the Director of the Department of Planning & Zoning ("P & Z"), Earl Matherne, to advise him of his constituents' objection to the operation of Bayou Fleet's sand pits. He also advised Matherne that the residents were willing to testify that Bayou Fleet's sand pits had lost their non-conforming use because they had been shut-down for more than six months.

[8] In response, Matherne advised RAC that it might have zoning problems with using Bayou Fleet's sand pits. On May 5, 1997, Matherne requested a legal opinion from Randy Lewis, Parish Attorney, regarding whether Bayou Fleet had lost its non-conforming use by abandonment. Lewis investigated the issue, including reviewing documents voluntarily produced by Bayou Fleet, such as sales records and affidavits from truck haulers. If Bayou Fleet had lost its non-conforming use, RAC would either have to use a different sand pit, or Bayou Fleet would have to try to get Bayou Fleet's property re-zoned.

² The court finds that none of the one-minute phone calls in this case involved any conversation, but show only that a call was made where an answering machine picked up.

[*738] On May 17, 1997, Courreges set up a meeting between himself, another RAC employee, and Clulee, to discuss purchasing sand from Homeplace's pit. They discussed the particulars of Clulee's bid. Courreges mentioned that he had received a letter in which Clulee questioned the project. Clulee explained that his only problem with the project was RAC's proposed dredging in front of his property. Courreges felt that Clulee seemed to have a lot of knowledge about the progress of RAC's permit applications. Clulee told Courreges that if RAC used his sand "he could keep local authorities 'satisfied' (sheriff's [9] dept., weigh units, etc.) and "left the 'rest' unsaid if [RAC did] not use him."³ RAC decided to stick with Bayou Fleet.

On May 21, 1997, the Parish Attorney issued his opinion letter that Bayou Fleet had not lost its non-conforming use. Alexander disagreed with that opinion.

The St. Charles Parish Coastal Zone Advisory Committee (hereinafter "CZAC"), an eight-member committee that makes recommendations to the Parish Council on wetlands and environmentally-related permit applications within the Parish, had on its May 29, 1997 agenda, inter alia, the RAC permit application before the Corps of Engineers. The CZAC was to decide whether to recommend to the Parish Council that it submit a letter of objection or no objection to the Corps. Alexander prepared and mailed to everyone in the immediate area of the Bayou Fleet sand pits a notice of that meeting. The CZAC published an official notice [10] as well.

Bayou Fleet received a copy of Alexander's notice. Durant was surprised by it because his prior meeting with Alexander led him to believe that Alexander would support the RAC project.

Alexander asked Clulee to attend the CZAC hearing, but he could not attend, so Clulee had his attorney Joel T. Chaisson (a retired state district court judge), attend on behalf of Homeplace. Alexander, Chaisson, and seven members of the public spoke in opposition to the project, their main concerns being dust, noise, increased industrial traffic on a substandard roadway, and the sand pits' alleged loss of its non-conforming use. The citizens also presented a petition with forty signatures against "the reopening of sand pits in Hahnville." There is nothing unusual about members of the public or Parish Council members presenting their views at a CZAC meeting. CZAC meetings are televised. Durant did not attend the hearing.

Phone records establish that on the day of the CZAC hearing, there were two phone calls from Clulee's home to Alexander's home -- one for eight minutes and another for 12 minutes.

On May 30, 1997, the CZAC issued a recommendation to the Parish Council that a letter of no objection [11] be issued to all concerned agencies.

On the same date, Mary Clulee wrote a letter on behalf of Homeplace to the Corps of Engineers objecting to RAC's permit application "on the basis that their proposed dredging area extended the entire length of our property." She further stated: "I feel that there is enough dredging area in the immediate area frontage fill of their site."

At the regularly scheduled June 2, 1997 meeting of the Parish Council, Alexander introduced a resolution calling for the Parish to issue a letter of objection to the Corps of Engineers based on concerns of air pollution and its effects on persons with medical problems such as asthma and emphysema, industrial congestion, noise, and dangers to children playing in the unfenced [*739] sand pits.⁴ Alternatively, the resolution requested the Corps. to stipulate conditions for issuance of the permit that would ease neighborhood concerns.⁵ One of the alternative conditions

³ The quoted language is from a summary of the conversation made by Courreges on an RAC "Standard Conversation Form."

⁴ A child had been killed at Bayou Fleet's property while tunneling into sand piles.

⁵ Such as: limiting operations to daylight hours, requiring level truck loads and covered truck beds, limiting the height of the stockpiles to the height of the levee, wetting ramps three times a day, fencing the stockpile, installing asphalt ramps over the was for the trucks to drive behind the levee and exit at Homeplace's ramp to avoid driving along the river road near the residential areas. Because no such road existed, Durant believed that this condition was a subterfuge to block the deal with RAC. This [12] resolution in effect would reject the recommendation of the CZAC that the Parish issue a letter of no objection. The Parish Council voted with one dissent to adopt Alexander's resolution of objection. Durant attended this meeting; the Clulees did not.

After the May 29 CZAC meeting and prior to the June 2 Parish Council meeting, there were four phone calls from the Clulee's home to Alexander's home -- two for one minute each, one for nine minutes, and one for seven minutes -- for a total talk time of 16 minutes.

[13] By letters dated June 4, 1997, Alexander forwarded the Parish Council's objection to Senators Mary Landrieu and John Breaux asking for their support of the citizens' opposition to the RAC permit application before the Corps of Engineers. Both Senators responded by asking the Corps of Engineers to provide them with information about the project.

By letters dated June 5 and 6, 1997, Alexander requested P & Z and Chris Tregre, the Parish President, to advise him of the status of Bayou Fleet's non-conforming use.

By letters dated June 5 and 6, 1997, Alexander informed the Levee Board of the Parish Council's resolution to object. Alexander requested the Levee Board to rescind its prior permit for RAC to make improvements to Bayou Fleet's levee crossing and to deny RAC's pending operations permit application based on the harmful impact of the proposed operations on the residential community.

After considering the opposition Alexander presented, the Levee Board voted on June 5, 1997, to deny RAC an operations permit -- (a permit to pump, stockpile, load, and haul sand over the levee).⁶ Alexander promptly informed the Corps of Engineers of the Levee Board's decision. Because the Levee [14] Board's denial meant automatic denial of a dredging permit from the Corps of Engineers, RAC requested the Corps to postpone decision on his application until he had a chance to defend his permit application before the Levee Board.

In the meantime, Durant had a friend, who was a fraternity brother of U.S. Congressman Robert Livingston, write to the Congressman to help expedite the Corps of Engineers' permit process. Livingston did write a letter to the Corps on June 24, 1997, but later in September, 1997 (after the Corps had granted the permit) withdrew his letter as he realized that the matter was not within his district, but the district of Congressman William J. Tauzin.

RAC wrote to Homeplace/Mary Clulee on June 27, 1997, assuring her that it did not intend to dredge in front of Homeplace's property.

On July 1, 1997, RAC and Durant attended a second meeting of the Levee Board and obtained a reversal of its decision [15] to deny the operation permit. Alexander was also present. After the meeting, Alexander and Durant had a heated exchange. Durant informed Alexander [*740] that he did not have any immunity for his actions before the Levee Board; Alexander replied: "I'm going to get you." The Clulees did not attend this meeting.

After the June 2, 1997 meeting of the Parish Council and prior to the July 1, 1997 meeting of the Levee Board, there were two phone calls from the Clulee's home to Alexander's home -- one for one minute and one for six minutes -- for a total talk time of six minutes.

On July 3, 1997, Mary Clulee wrote a second letter on behalf of Homeplace to the Corps of Engineers asking that RAC amend the drawings of its proposed dredging area in accordance with its letter to her that it would not dredge the area next to her property.

levee, lowering the speed limit to 25 mph, installation of truck crossing signs, requiring sand hauling trucks to access the pits by traveling behind the levee.

⁶This operations permit was the same kind held by Vulcan which RAC chose not to operate under.

At the July 7, 1997 meeting of the Parish Council, Alexander proposed a resolution to have a sales tax audit performed on Bayou Fleet. The resolution was rejected.

Two days before that Parish Council meeting there was a six minute phone call from the Clulee's home to Alexander's home.

Bayou Fleet filed the present lawsuit on July 14, 1997.

Despite the Parish Council's [16] rejection of Alexander's proposed sales tax audit resolution, Alexander spoke to the head of the St. Charles Parish Tax Collection Department, R.J. Lorio, about Bayou Fleet's payment of sales taxes. On July 30, 1997, Lorio issued notice of a sales and use tax audit to Bayou Fleet. Bayou Fleet cooperated with the audit, which did not result in any citations for failure to pay taxes.

After the July 7, 1997 meeting of the Parish Council and before the July 30, 1997 tax audit notice, there were two one-minute phone calls from the Clulee's home to Alexander's home.

The Corps of Engineers issued a dredging permit to RAC on July 21, 1997, under four months from the date of application. This would have been the last permit RAC needed to begin operations at Bayou Fleet, but P & Z in discussions with the Parish President, who was historically opposed to sand pit operations, raised questions about and ultimately determined that RAC would have to apply for a "Change of Occupancy" permit for the Bayou Fleet site. No one challenged this permit, which was issued on September 22, 1997. No more permits were required in order for RAC to begin operations.

There is no evidence that the Clulee defendants [17] or Alexander played any role in P & Z's decision to require this permit or in the length of time it took to obtain the permit. The evidence that on August 15, 1997, an unsigned, form affidavit was telefaxed between the Chaisson and Chaisson law firm and Alexander's home does not show that the Clulee defendants or Alexander were involved in the Change of Occupancy permit. The affidavit related to the issue of Bayou Fleet's non-conforming use and was to be used by residents in the immediate area of the sand pits who believed that Bayou Fleet's sand pits had ceased operations for a period of time. No one ever signed the affidavit, nor is there any evidence that Alexander or the Clulee defendants ever attempted to have any one sign the affidavit.⁷

[18] Alexander introduced the Levee Law ordinance and the Special Legal Counsel resolution at the September 8, 1997 meeting of the Parish Council. The Levee Law would have made it a criminal offense for any person to cross over the levee without written permission of the Parish Council. The resolution acknowledged the opinion of the Parish Attorney that Bayou Fleet [*741] had maintained its non-conforming use, yet concluded without explanation that "it is in the best interest of the Parish Council and residents of St. Charles Parish to employ Special Legal Counsel to conduct a thorough investigation" of "whether or not Bayou Fleet has had a sand pit operation continuously for the past twelve months on property located on the Mississippi batture in Hahnville." The resolution empowered the Special Legal Counsel to "subpoena the business records of Bayou Fleet." Alexander requested that Joel Chaisson, counsel for Homeplace, be selected to serve as Special Legal Counsel.

Notice of these proposed acts was published in the local newspaper. The notice of the Special Legal Counsel resolution did not mention that it was directed at Bayou Fleet. Bayou Fleet did not have adequate notice of the proposed [19] resolution. Neither Bayou Fleet, nor the Clulee defendants attended the September 8, 1997 Parish Council meeting.

The Parish Council voted to adopt both the ordinance and the resolution, but the decision as to whom to appoint as Special Legal Counsel was deferred pending receipt of a contract.

⁷ The affidavit was the second page of the fax transmission. Alexander was not able to produce the first page of the fax in discovery. Typically, the first page of a telefax is a cover sheet with only the name of the sender, the sender's fax number, and the number of pages telefaxed. For this reason and because the affidavit was never used, the court rejects Bayou Fleet's argument that the absence of the first page should create an adverse inference against the Clulee defendants.

Parish President Chris Tregre vetoed both measures on September 11, 1997 because he believed the Parish Council had acted beyond its authority. On September 27, 1997, the Parish Council voted to override the vetoes, however, the acts never became law. After this court declared the acts unconstitutional, the Parish Council voted to rescind them.

After the July 30 tax audit letter and prior to the September 8, 1997 meeting of the Parish Council, there were 5 phone calls from the Clulees' home to Alexander's home -- 4 one-minute calls and one 18 minute call -- for a total talk time of 18 minutes. Between September 8, 1997 and the September 22, 1997 override vote, there were three phone calls from the Clulees' home to Alexander's home -- each for one minute.

RAC wanted to place a small 6 by 6 foot guard house on the property, which required a permit. The pendency of this permit application did [20] not prevent RAC from dredging and stockpiling sand. There is no evidence that anyone challenged the issuance of this permit; however, P & Z did request an opinion from the Parish Attorney as to whether the shack would present an expansion of the non-conforming use. There is no evidence that the Clulee defendants or Alexander played any role in this permit process. Once the Parish Attorney issued his opinion that it would have no effect on their non-conforming use, and the Fire Marshall approved the structure, P & Z issued RAC a permit on October 16, 1997 to install the guard shack.

RAC completed its project on time. The evidence establishes that it took RAC approximately 110 days to obtain the Corps of Engineers' permit, and approximately six months to obtain all permits necessary to commence operations. In comparison, when Homeplace applied for the same kind of dredging permit from the Corps of Engineers in January, 1998, it took over ten months to obtain the permit, notwithstanding that the Parish Council unanimously adopted a resolution to issue a letter of no objection.⁸ Even considering the evidence that for two to three months the Clulees delayed the process by failing to take [21] any action on their permit application, RAC's dredging permit application was approved in far less time.

Neal Clulee made a total of 46 telephone calls from his home to Alexander's home in 1997. The 1997 phone calls commenced on April 28, 1997, admittedly because of RAC's permit applications before the Corps of Engineers and the Levee Board, and continued until December 30, 1997. Twenty-eight of the 46 calls were one-minute calls with no conversation. Prior [*742] to this lawsuit being filed, the records show seven phone conversations totaling 58 minutes between Clulee and Alexander.

Clulee did not recall specific phone conversations. He admitted discussing the RAC permits and his belief that Bayou Fleet had lost its non-conforming use. He explained that several calls were unrelated to Bayou Fleet and involved matters such as resident complaints about his business operations, a diversion project in St. Charles Parish, and the asphalt ramp the Parish required him to install. Clulee [22] recalled speaking with Alexander on other occasions about the sand pit business in general. Alexander was trying to educate himself about the operations and the permitting process. Clulee thinks most of the phone calls were made as a result of the lawsuit being filed against him and Alexander. Indeed, there were only 15 phone calls totaling 58 minutes prior to the lawsuit being filed; whereas there were 31 phone calls totaling three hours and five minutes after the lawsuit was filed. Some of the calls Clulee made were to return calls initiated by Alexander to Clulee's beeper.

In addition to these permit and legislative processes, the court considers the parties' following history of litigation as relevant to the claims herein.

In the 1984, one of the Durant family companies sued Clulee personally to collect a debt and obtained a judgment in excess of $ 100,000. Durant's company filed a lien on Clulee's property and the sheriff foreclosed on Clulee's home. Durant's company purchased Clulee's home at the sale.

Also, in 1984, a dispute arose regarding the non-conforming use of the Clulees' sand pit. Both Chris Tregre, a Parish Council member at the time and now Parish President, and [23] the Durant family, tried to stop the pit operations on the ground that the non-conforming use had been abandoned for five years. Tregre was acting pursuant to his constituents' opposition. Tregre attended hearings to voice his opposition and spoke to the parish president about it. No legislative acts such as the resolutions and ordinance at issue here were proposed.

⁸ Alexander abstained from voting.

Another sand pit feud began in 1989 between the Clulees and the Giambellucas, who owned the pit in between Bayou Fleet and Homeplace. The court takes judicial notice of the facts of that dispute as set forth in Giambelluca v. Parish of St. Charles, 687 So. 2d 423 \(La. App. 5th Cir. 1996\). Briefly, the dispute centered around the use of a levee ramp that was the only access to the Giambelluca property. After two lawsuits, one of which was presided over by Joel Chaisson (now Homeplace's attorney), who ruled in favor of the Clulees, a Parish ordinance sponsored at the request of Clulee by Alexander, and destruction of the ramp by Clulee, the Giambelluca property was left without road access and was forced out of business. The Giambelluca sand pit has been out of business ever since Clulee had the ramp torn [24] up, leaving Homeplace and Bayou Fleet as the only sand pits operating in Hahnville.

Another sand pit lawsuit was brought by one of the Durant family companies, LA Materials, to have the Clulee sand pit closed based on loss of non-conforming use. LA Materials withdrew the suit when the operating company, Westside Sand, claimed that LA Materials was trying to monopolize the sand business.

Bayou Fleet urges the court to impose an adverse inference against the defendants because Mary Clulee, a will call witness for the defense, did not testify. [HN1\[!\[\]\(ead0345f5afa2342c66bc595dae43b97_img.jpg\)\]](#) The Fifth Circuit has described the adverse witness rule as an "archaism" for which there is no longer any justification, particularly where the witness could have been called by either party, as in the present case. See Herbert v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 911 F.2d 1044, 1048-49 \(5th Cir. 1990\). In any event, the adverse witness rule is discretionary. See Evangeline Refining Co. v. Charles N. Wooten, Ltd., 890 F.2d 1312, 1320 \(5th Cir. 1989\). The court finds [*743] that Mary Clulee's testimony would have offered no information that the court did not already have before it. Her testimony likely would have been cumulative [25] to her husband's testimony. Moreover, the evidence from all the witnesses failed to show that she was personally involved in any of the alleged violations. See id. (quoting II J. Chadbourne, Wigmore on Evidence § 287). Mary Clulee was present during the entire trial, and Bayou Fleet could have called her as a witness. Finally, the court notes that Bayou Fleet did not raise this issue at trial. Under the circumstances of this case, the court declines to invoke the adverse witness rule.

ANALYSIS

A. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Clulee defendants contend that they are immune from liability pursuant to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.⁹ See Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 \(1961\); United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 \(1965\). The doctrine, which was developed by the Supreme Court in the context of antitrust law, has its underpinnings in First Amendment principles that the right to petition the government legislatively, judicially, or administratively is constitutionally protected speech regardless of its motivation. [26] [HN2\[!\[\]\(0f4e50d9b19e08576f803dcd71608371_img.jpg\)\]](#) Noerr, 365 U.S. at 138, 81 S. Ct. at

⁹ The court may consider the Noerr-Pennington doctrine with respect to the liability of the Clulee defendants even though they did not assert the doctrine in their answer. The court raised the issue sua sponte a few weeks prior to trial and ordered the parties to brief the issue. The Clulee defendants then included the issue in the pre-trial order, over Bayou Fleet's objection. It has been held that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is not an affirmative defense in the sense that it is the plaintiff's burden to prove the substantive violation claimed, which cannot be done where the defendant's allegedly wrongful conduct consists of petitioning the government. See PrimeTime 24 Joint Venture v. National Broadcasting Co., Inc., 21 F. Supp. 2d 350, 355 \(S.D.N.Y. 1998\)(citing 1 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 207c (rev. ed. 1997)); see also McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1558 n. 9 \(11th Cir. 1992\)(citing Areeda and H. Hovenkamp). Certainly, there would be no justification for the court to reject application of the doctrine on a procedural error, where to do so would abridge the defendant's First Amendment rights. Here, where Bayou Fleet was given adequate advance notice of the court's intent to consider the issue, and where the doctrine was asserted in the pre-trial order, it is appropriate to consider the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as it may apply in this case.

530; Pennington, 381 U.S. at 669-70, 85 S. Ct. at 1593. "The essence of the doctrine is that parties who petition the government for government action favorable to them cannot be prosecuted under the antitrust laws even though their petitions are motivated by anticompetitive intent." Video Int'l Production v. Warner-Amex Cable Communications, Inc., 858 F.2d 1075, 1082 (5th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 491 U.S. 906, 109 S. Ct. 3189, 105 L. Ed. 2d 697 (1989).

[27] Although the Noerr-Pennington doctrine was originally applied in the antitrust context, it has been applied to protect First Amendment petitioning of the government from claims brought under federal and state laws, including section 1983. 858 F.2d at 1084. See e.g., Gorman Towers, Inc. v. Bogoslavsky, 626 F.2d 607, 615 (8th Cir. 1980)(section 1983) (landowners' secret meetings with city officials and petitioning for enactment of city ordinance to rezone plaintiff's property) (citing Sawmill Products, Inc. v. Town of Cicero, 477 F. Supp. 636, 642 (N.D.Ill. 1979) (section 1983) (protesting presence of plaintiff's sawmill which was then shut down by town ordinance); Weiss v. Willow Tree Civic Ass'n, 467 F. Supp. 803, 816-18 (S.D.N.Y. 1979) (section 1983) (lobbying town officials and filing groundless judicial and administrative complaints to oppose zoning permit); Aknin v. Phillips, 404 F. Supp. 1150, 1153 (S.D.N.Y. 1975), aff'd, 538 F.2d 307 (2d Cir. 1976) (section 1983) (urging officials to enforce unconstitutionally vague noise ordinance against plaintiff's discotheque); [*744] Sierra Club v. Butz, 349 F. Supp. 934, 938-39 (N.D.Cal. 1972) [28] (contractual interference) (filing lawsuit and administrative appeals to halt plaintiff's logging operation; filings constitutionally privileged even if motivated by malice)). Bayou Fleet's claims under section 1983 and the LUTPA are all based on the same events as the antitrust claims.

Bayou Fleet has accused the Clulee defendants of lobbying and influencing state and federal officials in private meetings, telephone calls, letters, and public hearings to deny permits, revoke Bayou Fleet's non-conforming use, and enact ordinances and resolutions, all designed to put Bayou Fleet out of business. Pursuit of that goal using the administrative and legislative channels and procedures that the Clulee defendants did was within their First Amendment rights. Their actions are nothing more than protected First Amendment activity to procure favorable government actions. They have the right to advance their opinions to government officials about Bayou Fleet's or RAC's business, whatever the underlying motive. Indeed, Bayou Fleet and other Durant family companies have pursued similar actions against the Clulees such as filing objections to permits and a lawsuit to declare a loss of non-conforming [29] use. Bayou Fleet made lobbying efforts of its own. Bayou Fleet had private meetings with Alexander to get his support for the project; it garnered support from a United States Congressman. This is traditional political activity. HN3[¹⁰] The First Amendment protects "attempts to influence the passage or enforcement of laws," no matter how harmful their incidental impact may be. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 135, 81 S. Ct. at 528.

The sham exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply in this case. HN4[¹⁰] That exception applies when a defendant uses "the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 380, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1354, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). Here, the Clulee defendants genuinely sought to achieve the governmental measures for which they lobbied. The sham exception does not apply to them because their actions were designed to achieve the outcome of the processes they used.¹⁰ Therefore, the petitioning of Alexander, the Parish Council, the CZAC, and the Corps of Engineers was not a sham. See Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 500 n.4, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 1937 n. 4, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988). [30] Accordingly, the court finds that the Clulee

¹⁰ Bayou Fleet alleged but did not prove that the Clulee defendants abused the legislative process by bribing Alexander. There was some testimony that council members heard rumors that Clulee had bribed Alexander, but none of the witnesses were able to recall any specific details such as from whom they had heard the rumor. Because of the unreliability and prejudicial nature of this hearsay evidence, the court denied Bayou Fleet's motion to introduce this evidence under Federal Rule of Evidence 807. The court did allow the evidence as a proffer. Even if the court were to have admitted the evidence, the court finds that it would not carry any probative value because of its vagueness and unreliability. Furthermore, to the extent that Bayou Fleet contends that a corrupt or illegal conspiracy existed, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not recognize a conspiracy exception. See City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. at 382-83, 111 S. Ct. at 1355-56.

defendants have no liability under the antitrust laws, section 1983, or the LUTPA because they are protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

[31] As alternative reasons for absolving the Clulee defendants of any liability in this case, the court finds that the evidence fails to establish essential elements of the section 1983 and antitrust claims.

B. Section 1983

HN5 [↑] In a section 1983 action the plaintiff must establish two essential elements: (1) that the conduct in question deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities [*745] secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States; and (2) that the conduct complained of was committed by a person acting under color of state law. See 42 U.S.C. § 1983; Gomez v. Toledo, 446 U.S. 635, 640, 100 S. Ct. 1920, 64 L. Ed. 2d 572 \(1980\).

The Clulee defendants are private persons who do not occupy positions that can be considered actors "under color of state law." HN6 [↑] A private person may be considered a state actor under color of state law if the individual is engaged in a conspiracy or willfully engages in joint activity with one or more parties acting under color of state law, even if the state agent is immune to liability. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 1605, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 \(1970\); Cinel v. Connick, 15 F.3d 1338, 1343 \(5th Cir. 1994\), [32] cert. denied, 513 U.S. 868, 115 S. Ct. 189, 130 L. Ed. 2d 122 (1994). In this case, the state official whose actions are implicated is Alexander. The parties stipulated that all of Alexander's actions were under color of state law.

HN7 [↑] A civil conspiracy under section 1983 is an agreement between private and public actors to violate the plaintiff's constitutional rights. Cinel, 15 F.3d at 1343. A conspiracy may be proven by circumstantial evidence, Mack v. Newton, 737 F.2d 1343 \(5th Cir. 1984\); however, the acts of the alleged conspirators must show a "unity of purpose, common design, and understanding, or meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement." Hale v. Townley, 19 F.3d 1068, 1075 \(5th Cir. 1994\)(citing American Tobacco Co. v. U.S., 328 U.S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 \(1946\)).

HN8 [↑] "The joint action inquiry focuses on whether the state has 'so far insinuated itself into a position of interdependence with [the private entity] that it must be recognized as a joint participant in the challenged activity ...'" Gorenc v. Salt River Project Agric. Improvement and Power Dist., 869 F.2d 503, 507 \(9th Cir. 1989\) [33] (quoting Burton v. Wilmington Parking Auth., 365 U.S. 715, 725, 81 S. Ct. 856, 862, 6 L. Ed. 2d 45 \(1961\)). "A private party does not act under color of state law when [he] merely elicits but does not join in an exercise of official authority." Auster Oil & Gas. Inc. v. Stream, 764 F.2d 381, 388 \(5th Cir. 1985\), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 848, 109 S. Ct. 129, 102 L. Ed. 2d 102 (1988). "It is not sufficient to allege that the [private and state] defendants merely acted in concert or with a common goal. There must be allegations that the defendants had directed themselves towards an unconstitutional action by virtue of a mutual understanding. Even were such allegations to be made, they must further be supported by some factual allegations suggesting such a 'meeting of the minds'." See Tarkowski v. Robert Bartlett Realty Co., 644 F.2d 1204, 1206 \(7th Cir. 1980\).

Initially, it must be noted that there is scant evidence of personal involvement on the part of Mary Clulee, Homeplace, and N/C Materials. HN9 [↑] Under section 1983 there can be no liability, much less a conspiracy between individuals that had no personal involvement [34] in the allegedly wrongful conduct. See Murphy v. Kellar, 950 F.2d 290, 292 \(5th Cir. 1992\); Jacquez v. Procunier, 801 F.2d 789, 793 \(5th Cir. 1986\). HN10 [↑] Individual liability under section 1983 must rest on facts reflecting the defendant's personal participation or involvement in the alleged wrong. The only evidence regarding Mary Clulee is two letters she wrote on behalf of Homeplace to the Corps of Engineers objecting to the permit because of proposed dredging in front of her property. Her letters show that she was not trying to prevent issuance of a permit insofar as dredging in front of Bayou Fleet's property, but only dredging that might occur in front of her property. This evidence does not come close to establishing a conspiracy or joint action between her and Alexander. The only other evidence specifically regarding Homeplace is its appearance at the CZAC meeting through an attorney to voice its objection [*746] to RAC's Corps of Engineers' permit. As for N/C Materials, the only evidence of action taken directly by it is the quote for sand it gave to RAC. This evidence is simply insufficient to establish a conspiracy between Homeplace and/or N/C

Materials [35] and Alexander. See also Scutieri v. Estate of Revitz, 683 F. Supp. 795, 800-01 (S.D. Fla. 1988) (a private corporation is not vicariously liable under § 1983 unless a policy-making individual takes action constituting "official policy" of the corporation).

Both Alexander and Clulee specifically denied the existence of a conspiracy. Alexander indicated repeatedly at hearings and in his letters that his motives were to represent his constituents who had health and safety concerns about the sand pit operations. The evidence established that there are legitimate community concerns about sand pit operations.¹¹ Based on those concerns, the council members are historically opposed to sand pit operations. Clulee admitted that he was motivated by a belief that Bayou Fleet had lost its non-conforming use and by concern that there might be dredging in front of his property, both obviously matters of self-interest rather than community concerns. The fact that Alexander and Clulee wanted the same objective, that is, to prevent sand pit operations at Bayou Fleet, does not establish an agreement or joint action to put Bayou Fleet out of business by unconstitutional means.

[36] Bayou Fleet places great emphasis on the telephone communications between Clulee and Alexander. As discussed above, private communications between a political representative and his constituent are legitimate. The First Amendment envisions interactions between political representatives and their constituents. There are no limits on how many times one can telephone a public official. Even so, in the court's opinion, the evidence does not show an unusual number or length of telephone conversations, considering that Alexander and Clulee were in legitimate cooperation with each other regarding RAC's permit applications, that Clulee had information about the technical permit process that would be helpful to Alexander, and that they had other legitimate matters to discuss, such as this lawsuit.

The evidence fails to establish that the Clulee defendants had any involvement in the Parish Attorney's investigation of the status of Bayou Fleet's non-conforming use, in the letter writing campaign that Alexander undertook to various political representatives and agencies, in the sales tax audit, the Levee Law ordinance, the Special Legal Counsel resolution, the requirement of a Change of Occupancy [37] permit, the requirement of a permit to install the guard shack, or any delays associated with those two permits.

Having found insufficient evidence of a conspiracy or joint action to equate the Clulee defendants' conduct with state action, any conduct of Alexander that violated Bayou Fleet's constitutional rights is not actionable under § 1983 as to the Clulee defendants.¹² See Scott v. Greenville County, 716 F.2d 1409, 1424 (4th Cir. 1983) (recognizing that "even overtly biased citizens who write letters, speak up at public [*747] meetings, or even express their prejudices in private meetings with public officials without formulating a joint plan of action are not 'conspiring' with those officials in a way that subjects them to § 1983 liability").

[38] C. Sherman Act, Sections 1 and 2

Bayou Fleet's antitrust claims are based on sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. In order to state a claim for violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege (1) concerted action by two or more persons, (2) that unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce.

¹¹ In the prior opinion rendered by this court, the court noted that there was no evidence presented at the hearing on the permanent injunction that Bayou Fleet's or any other sand pit's operations caused problems in the community. See Bayou Fleet, 1997 WL 625492 *8. Such evidence was presented at the trial on the merits of plaintiff's claims.

¹² In the prior opinion rendered by this court, it was stated: "Robin Durant's uncontradicted testimony establishes that the resolution was part of a scheme to eliminate Bayou Fleet's business so that Home Place would be the only sand pit in town." See id. Neither the Clulees nor Alexander testified at that prior hearing. Furthermore, the court's conclusion herein, that there is no evidence of a conspiracy or joint action between the Clulee defendants and Alexander to put Bayou Fleet out of business by a unconstitutional means is not inconsistent with the court's prior statement.

The evidence failed to show an unreasonable restraint of interstate trade. The permits RAC needed to begin its pit operations were issued without any delays beyond those normally encountered in the process. Even assuming that there were delays, there is no evidence that the delay impacted interstate trade.

HN11[] A violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act is established when the plaintiff shows that the asserted violator: (1) has antitrust standing; (2) possesses or intends to possess monopoly power in the relevant market and (3) acquired or maintained that power or intends to do the same in a wilful manner. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands, 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 2859, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 \(1985\); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 \(1966\). [39]

The evidence failed to show that Bayou Fleet suffered an antitrust injury, which is a component of antitrust standing. See Bell v. Dow Chemical Co., 847 F.2d 1179, 1182 \(5th Cir. 1988\). Bayou Fleet did not prove that the conduct of the Clulee defendants had any anticompetitive effect. RAC obtained all of the permits it sought. The evidence showed that the alleged delay in the permit process was not any longer than with other applications. And, even if there had been an unreasonable delay, there is no evidence that the delay had an anticompetitive effect. Even assuming that the Clulee defendants played a wrongful role in passage of the Levee Law ordinance and the Special Legal Counsel resolution, (a fact which the evidence failed to prove), those acts were declared unconstitutional and rescinded before they took effect.

Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that judgment be entered in favor of defendants Neal Clulee, Mary Clulee, Homeplace Batture Leasing, Inc., and N/C Materials, Inc. and against plaintiff Bayou Fleet, Inc., dismissing plaintiff's claims with prejudice, plaintiff to bear costs.

New Orleans, Louisiana this 29th day of September, 1999.

Henry A. Mentz, [40] Jr.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Albany Specialties v. Bd. of Educ.

United States District Court for the Northern District of New York

October 1, 1999, Decided ; October 1, 1999, Filed

99-CV-1462(TJM)

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21040 *; 162 L.R.R.M. 3071

Albany Specialties, Inc., Plaintiff, -against- Board of Education of the South Glens Falls School District, Turner Construction Company, Glens Falls Building and Trades Council, Teamsters Local 294 and Sprinkler Fitters Local Union 669, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Vacated and supplanted by this Memorandum Decision & Order.

Core Terms

construction industry, Proviso, collective bargaining, subcontracting, contractors, bidding, terms, bargaining, preliminary injunction, employees, jobsite, exempt, declaratory judgment, labor agreement, negotiated, relations, Harbor, documents, Falls, construction project, successful bidder, Antitrust, merits, contracts, prehire, entity, hired

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Union Refusal to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN1[] Union Violations, Union Refusal to Bargain

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 158.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > General Overview

HN2[] Justiciability, Ripeness

Ripeness is a constitutional prerequisite to jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Actual Controversy

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3 Case & Controversy Requirements, Actual Controversy

In the declaratory judgment/ preliminary injunction context, to determine justiciability, a court considers (1) the fitness of the issues for judicial review, and (2) the injury or hardship to the parties of withholding judicial consideration. The determination of whether particular facts are sufficiently immediate and real to make an actual controversy must be determined on a case-by-case basis.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Ripeness > General Overview

HN4 Justiciability, Ripeness

A case may be ripe even though future contingencies will determine whether a controversy actually becomes real.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN5 Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

To obtain a preliminary injunction the movant must show (1) irreparable harm; (2) a likelihood of success on the merits or a serious question regarding the merits; and (3) a balance of hardships tipping decidedly in favor of the movant. Where the moving party seeks to stay governmental action taken in the public interest pursuant to a statutory or regulatory scheme, the district court should not apply the less rigorous standard and should not grant the injunction unless the moving party establishes, along with irreparable injury, a likelihood that he will succeed on the merits of his claim.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN6 Labor Arbitration, Judicial Review

A subcontracting agreement negotiated within the context of a collective bargaining relationship, but applying to more than one jobsite, was protected by the Construction Industry Proviso, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158. Thus, the Construction Industry Proviso does not exempt subcontracting agreements that were not sought or obtained in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN7 Labor Arbitration, Judicial Review

The mere existence of a labor agreement that was entered into before employees were hired and before the union had demonstrated that it represented a majority of the workforce (a prehire agreement), demonstrates a sufficient collective bargaining relationship to invoke the protection of the Construction Industry Proviso, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN8 Legislation, Interpretation

The term "employer" is construed broadly by both the National Labor Relations Board and Federal Courts. In determining whether an entity is an employer under the Construction Industry Proviso, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158, courts look to the degree of control over the construction-site labor relations it elects to retain.

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Definition of Employers

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN9 At Will Employment, Definition of Employers

An employer, within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act, is someone who, among other things, has a substantial degree of control over the jobsite and labor relations.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Definition of Employers

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

HN10 Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

It is generally recognized that when a court is faced with competing interpretations of contractual language, the court first looks to the plain language of the contract. If there is still ambiguity, the court can look to extrinsic evidence to determine the meaning. In completing this exercise, the court should avoid interpreting a contract in such a way that provisions are rendered meaningless.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Employment Issues > Collective Bargaining & Labor Unions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

HN11 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The fact that an agreement falls within the Construction Industry Exception, 29 U.S.C.S. § 158, is not alone sufficient to shelter the agreement from the Federal Antitrust laws. Instead, Courts have held that the Construction Industry Proviso (and the related nonstatutory exemption to Federal Antitrust Law) fails to act as a shield when such clauses are not the product of bona fide arms length bargaining, and instead are the product of an illegal relationship. Accordingly, if a clause is the product of collective bargaining, it cannot serve as the basis for an antitrust claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Nonstatutory Exemptions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Labor Arbitration > Judicial Review > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Labor, Nonstatutory Exemptions

In determining whether an agreement falls within the nonstatutory Construction Industry exemption, a court should look to whether the product is the subject of collective bargaining before examining whether the agreement furthers the goals protected by national labor law, is within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining, and does not impose a direct restraint on the business market that has substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Judgments, Declaratory Judgments

A court may render a declaratory judgment (1) when the judgment will serve a useful purpose in clarifying and settling the legal relations in issue, and (2) when it will terminate and afford relief from the uncertainty, insecurity, and controversy giving rise to the proceeding.

Counsel: Joel M. Howard, Esq., James J. Barriere, Esq., Couch White, LLP, Albany, NY, for Plaintiff.

John B. Hogan, Esq., Hogan & Sazynski, LLC, Binghamton, NY, for Board of Education of South Glens Falls School District, Defendant.

Gregory R. Begg, Esq., Peckar & Abramson, P.C., River Edge, NJ, for Turner Construction Company, Defendant.

Gerard M. Waites, Esq., Nicholas R. Femia, Esq., O'Donaghue & O'Donoghue, Washington, DC, for Glens Falls Building and Construction Trades Council, Defendant.

Richard P. Walsh, Esq., Paul Davenport, Esq., Lombardi, Reinhard, Walsh & Harrison, P.C., Albany, NY, for Glens Falls Building and Construction Trades Council, Defendant.

William W. Osborne, Esq., Osborne Law Offices, Washington, D.C. for Sprinkler Fitters Local 209, Defendant.

Ross P. Andrews, Esq., Satter & Andrews, LLP, Syracuse, NY, for Sprinkler Fitters Local 209, Defendant.

Judges: Hon. Thomas J. McAvoy, Chief U.S. District Judge.

Opinion by: Thomas J. McAvoy

Opinion

Memorandum - Decision & OrderMcAvoy, Chief Judge:*I. BACKGROUND

Albany Specialties, Inc. is a corporation engaged in the [*2] construction industry, typically performing work on heating, ventilation, and air condition ("HVAC") contracts. Albany Specialties is a "merit shop firm" whose current employees have elected not to be represented by organized labor unions. Albany Specialties recently received and reviewed contract and bid documents regarding a construction project at the South Glens Falls Senior High School (the "Project"). The Project is financed by taxpayers, who passed a $ 35,950,000 Bond Referendum on July 1, 1998. See PLA Art. 2.

The Project documents reviewed by Albany Specialties during the bidding process included a Project Labor Agreement ("PLA"), which binds successful bidders and contractors to its terms. See PLA Art. III, Section 4(b). The PLA has not been formally executed; however, its inclusion in the bidding documents precludes changing of certain terms, including some relating to the site contractors. See Def. Trade Council's Mem. of Law at 5 n.5. Turner Construction Company ("Turner Construction"), on behalf of the Board of Education of the South Glen Falls School District (the "School District"), negotiated the PLA with The Building and Construction Trades Council of [*3] Glen Falls (the "Trades Council") and other Defendants. See Waites Aff. P 3.

Prior to negotiating the PLA, Turner construction conducted a study to determine the most economic and efficient manner for completing the expansion and renovation of Glen Falls Senior High School. See Waites Aff. P 4. Due to overcrowding of the school, the Project's timing is of utmost importance. Turner's study indicated that any delay would have serious financial and educational impact, that a PLA was the most effective way to avoid delay or disruption of labor on the Project, and that a PLA would ensure that qualified craft workers were available. See Waites Aff. P 4. The PLA applies only to this project.

Plaintiff moves for a preliminary injunction, or alternatively, a declaratory judgment on the grounds that the PLA is an unlawful contract under the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA"). 29 U.S.C. § 141, et. seq. HN1↑ Specifically, Plaintiff argues that the PLA violates Section 8(e) of the NLRA, 29 U.S.C. § 158 ("Section 8(e)'), which reads, in pertinent part:

It shall be an unfair labor practice for any labor organization to enter into [*4] any contract or agreement, express or implied, whereby such employer ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting or otherwise dealing in any of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person, and any contract or agreement entered into heretofore or heretoafter containing such an agreement shall be to such extent unenforceable.

It is undisputed that provisions of the PLA, requiring contractors to assent to the terms of the agreement, regulate labor relations of third party employers and fall within Section 8(e). Defendants argue, however, that the agreement is not unlawful, because it is exempt under the "Construction Industry Proviso" in Section 8 (e). This proviso reads:

Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting work to be done at the site of the construction. . . .

Plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that neither Turner Construction or the School District is a "construction industry employer" within the meaning of the Construction [*5] Industry Proviso, and thus, the PLA is not exempt from Section 8(e).

Turner Construction, The Building and Construction Trades Council, AFL-CIO, the Trades Council, Teamsters Local Union 294, and Sprinkler Fitters Local Union 669 are parties to the PLA. The School District is not a party to the agreement; however, the School District is bound by the agreement because Turner Construction, its agent, is a party. There is a Construction Management Agreement in place between Turner Construction and the School District which provides, inter alia, that Turner Construction maintains day to day control of the Project and will play a part in the selection of subcontractors. See Lynch Aff. Ex. A; Waites Aff. P 8. This agreement also provides that contracts between subcontractors will be with the School District, not Turner Construction.

The Project is of the type that Albany Specialties would normally bid on. See Colloton Aff. PP 15, 18. Bids for the HVAC portion of the Project were due on September 16, 1999. Id. P 18. Albany Specialties, however, did not submit a bid because it did not want to be bound to the PLA, which requires recognition of the Unions¹ and use of Union [*6] Employees.² See PLA, Art. V, Sec. 3. The terms of the PLA also require contractors who have been awarded work on the Project to "accept and be bound by the terms and conditions of this Agreement." PLA Article III, Sec. 4(a). Instead, of bidding, and taking the chance it would be bound by the PLA, Albany Specialties, who did not have unionized employees, applied to this Court for relief.

II. Discussion

Plaintiff moves, by order to [*7] show cause, for a preliminary injunction, or in the alternative, a declaratory judgment declaring the PLA unlawful. Plaintiff argues that the PLA violates Section 8(e) of the NLRA, 29 U.S.C. § 158, and Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Defendants, on the other hand, contend that the PLA is not unlawful because it fits within the Construction Industry Proviso and that the PLA does not violate the Sherman Act.³

A. Justiciability

Defendant Turner Construction Company first argues that Plaintiff's claims should be dismissed on ripeness grounds because Defendants have not executed the PLA. Plaintiffs, however, believed the PLA was executed. [*8] Moreover, it was provided to the Plaintiff as one of the bidding documents, thus certain terms cannot be altered. See Def. Trade Council's Mem. of Law at 5 n.5.

HN2[] Ripeness is a constitutional prerequisite to jurisdiction. See Nutritional Health Alliance v. Shalala, 144 F.3d 220, 225 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1040, 119 S. Ct. 589, 142 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1998). HN3[] In the declaratory judgment/ preliminary injunction context, to determine justiciability, a Court should consider (1) the "fitness of the issues for judicial review, and (2) the injury or hardship to the parties of withholding judicial consideration." Id. (internal citations omitted). The determination of whether particular facts are sufficiently immediate and real to make an actual controversy must be determined on a case-by-case basis. See Hendrix v. Poonai, 662 F.2d 719, 721-22 \(11th Cir. 1981\) (per curiam) (citing Mobil Oil Corp. v. Oil Chem. & Atomic Workers Int'l Union, 483 F.2d 603, 607 (5th Cir. 1973)); see also Sheet Metal Div. of Capitol Dist. Sheet Metal, Roofing & Air Conditioning Contractors Assoc. Inc. v. Local Union 38 of the Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Assoc., 45 F. Supp. 2d 195, 200 \(N.D.N.Y. 1999\) [*9] (internal citations omitted). HN4[] A case may be ripe even though future contingencies will determine whether a controversy actually becomes real. See GTE Directories Publishing Corp. v. Trimen America, Inc., 67 F.3d 1563, 1569 \(11th Cir. 1995\) (internal citation omitted).

¹ Article V, Section 1 of the PLA reads "the Contractor recognizes the Unions as the sole and exclusive bargaining representatives of all craft employees working on the Project within the scope of this Agreement."

² Article V, Section 3 (a) of the PLA reads, in pertinent part "the Contractor will hire, per craft, one (1) journeyperson employee referred by the affected trade or craft, and may then hire (1) core employee who is employed by that Contractor and shall repeat the process, one and one, until the crew requirements for that craft are met. . . ."

³ Plaintiff filed a Reply Memorandum of Law and accompanying affidavit on September 27, 1999. Under the Local Rules, Reply papers in Order to Show Cause actions may only be filed upon leave of the Court. N.D.N.Y.L.R. 7.1(b)(2), 7.1(E). Leave was not granted so the Reply papers were not considered.

In this case, Plaintiff was presented with a packet of bidding documents, including the PLA, relevant to a construction project. The PLA requires all successful bidders to comply with the terms set forth therein, including the provisions objected to by Plaintiff, some of which require union recognition and one to one hiring of union and non-union employees. See PLA Art. V, Sec. 3. Indeed, the PLA was included in the bidding documents and by its terms, is binding on all successful bidders. Thus, it was reasonable for Plaintiff, as a potential bidder, to believe that it was bound by the terms of the PLA though it was not a formally executed document. Significantly, the terms to which Plaintiff objects relate to "site contractors," at least some of which cannot be altered because the PLA was included in the bidding documents. In this case, the practical likelihood that an actual controversy exists supports [*10] a finding of justiciability. See Nat'l Basketball Assoc. v. SDC Basketball Club, Inc., 815 F.2d 562 (9th Cir.) cert. dismissed, 484 U.S. 960 (1987).

Additionally, because Plaintiff raises antitrust claims in addition to labor claims at the outset, he may seek declaratory and injunctive relief related to those claims in federal court rather than before the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB"). See Connell Const. Co., Inc., v. Plumbers and Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, 421 U.S. 616, 626, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830 (1975); Sheet Metal, 45 F. Supp. 2d at 202 (citing cases). Accordingly, Plaintiff's claims are ripe for review and appropriately before this Court.

B. Standard for Preliminary Injunction

HN5 To obtain a preliminary injunction, on the other hand, the movant must show (1) irreparable harm; (2) a likelihood of success on the merits or a serious question regarding the merits; and (3) a balance of hardships "tipping decidedly in favor of the movant." Tom Doherty Assoc., Inc. v. Saban Entertainment, Inc., 60 F.3d 27, 33 (2d Cir. 1995). Where the moving party "seeks to stay governmental [*11] action taken in the public interest pursuant to a statutory or regulatory scheme, the district court should not apply the less rigorous. . .standard and should not grant the injunction unless the moving party establishes, along with irreparable injury, a likelihood that he will succeed on the merits of his claim." Plaza Health Lab., Inc., v. Perales, 878 F.2d 577, 580 (2d Cir. 1989). The Court will now address Plaintiff's claim for a preliminary injunction.

C. Labor Claims

1. Section 8(e)

Plaintiff claims that the PLA violates Section 8(e) of the National Labor Relations Act. Section 8(e) prohibits employers from entering into contracts where, among other things, the employer "ceases or refrains from doing business with any other person." Article Five of the PLA requires that successful bidders recognize the Union as the "sole and exclusive bargaining representatives of all craft employees working on the Project," and hire at least one union worker for every non-union worker employed. Article Three, Section Four, requires all successful bidders to "accept and be bound by the terms of this agreement." According to the Plaintiff, the PLA constitutes an [*12] unlawful subcontracting agreement. Plaintiff further claims that the PLA is not exempt from Section 8(e) under the Construction Industry Proviso, which states that nothing in the Section "shall apply to an agreement between a labor organization and an employer in the construction industry relating to the contracting or subcontracting of work to be done at the site of the construction." 29 U.S.C. § 158(e).

The Supreme Court interpreted Section 8(e) and the Construction Industry Proviso in Connell, 421 U.S. 616, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830. In that case, the union sought a subcontracting agreement from Connell, a general contractor. When attempts to obtain the agreement failed, the union picketed Connell and caused a massive walkout on the jobsite. See Donald Schriver, Inc. v. NLRB, 204 U.S. App. D.C. 4, 635 F.2d 859, 871 (DC Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 976, 68 L. Ed. 2d 357, 101 S. Ct. 2058 (1981). Connell did not employ any workers in the union's jurisdiction at the time of the picketing and the union had never represented, and had no intent to represent, any of Connell's employee. Connell, 421 U.S. at 619-21. [*13] The Union, therefore, was effectively engaging in "top down" organization, obtaining representation without negotiation for unit employees. Moreover, the subcontracting clause at issue was designed to organize nonunion subcontractors rather than reduce jobsite friction. The Court ruled that, although the agreement was within the broad reach of the Construction Industry Proviso's language, the subcontracting clause was illegal. In coming to this conclusion, the Court stated that "Section 8(e) must be interpreted in light of the statutory setting and the circumstances surrounding its enactment." Id. at 628. The Court recognized that Congress limited the scope of the Proviso, "allowing subcontracting agreements only in relation to work done on a jobsite." Id. at 630. This limitation indicates that the Construction Industry Proviso was intended to alleviate friction between union and nonunion laborers at jobsites. The Connell Court also noted that Congress did not intend to allow unions to "use subcontracting agreements as a broad organizational weapon" and that the amendments to the NLRA were meant to limit "top-down" organizational campaigns. Id. at 630, 632. [*14] The Connell Court concluded that the Construction Industry Proviso "extends only to agreements in the context of collective bargaining and . . . possibly to common situs relationship on particular jobsites as well." Id. at 633.

The Court subsequently addressed Section 8(e) and the Connell ruling, in Woeke & Romero Framing, Inc. v. NLRB, 456 U.S. 645, 653, 72 L. Ed. 2d 398, 102 S. Ct. 2071 (1982). HN6[¹⁵] In Woeke, the Court found that a subcontracting agreement negotiated within the context of a collective bargaining relationship, but applying to more than one jobsite, was protected by the Construction Industry Proviso. Thus, the Construction Industry Proviso does not "exempt subcontracting agreements that were not sought or obtained in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship." Id. at 666. The Woeke Court recognized that subcontracting agreements create some top-down organizing pressure, but found that Congress intended to tolerate such pressure where an agreement was obtained "in the context of a collective-bargaining relationship." Id. at 664. Moreover, the Woeke Court's discussion [*15] of Section 8(e)'s legislative history indicated that the provision was intended to preserve the present state of the law, which allowed subcontracting agreements between unions and employers in the construction industry; reflected concerns about jobsite friction; and emphasized the "close community of interests present at jobsites." Id. at 656-57, 661.

1. Was the PLA the product of Collective Bargaining?

Plaintiff claims that the PLA at issue is not protected by the Construction Industry Proviso because it was not the result of collective bargaining, as required by Connell and Woeke. HN7[¹⁶] Although the Woeke Court did not rule on what constitutes a collective bargaining relationship, subsequent rulings by the NLRB and Federal Courts have found that the mere existence of a labor agreement that was entered into before employees were hired and before the union had demonstrated that it represented a majority of the workforce (a prehire agreement),⁴ [*18] demonstrates a sufficient collective bargaining relationship to invoke the protection of the Construction Industry Proviso under Connell.⁵ See Bldg. & Const. Trades Council of the Metro. Dist. v. Assoc. Builders and Contractors of Massachusetts Rhode Island, Inc., 507 U.S. 218, 229, 122 L. Ed. 2d 565, 113 S. Ct. 1190 (1993) [*16] [hereinafter Boston Harbor] (finding prehire agreements are collective bargaining agreements providing for union recognition prior to the hiring of any employees); A.L. Adams Const. Co. v. Georgia Power Co., 733 F.2d 853, 856 (11th Cir.) ("[These agreements provide] the very means by which unions and employers typically initiate a bargaining relationship in the construction industry.") (quoting Donald Shriver, 635 F.2d at 872-76), reh'g denied, 751 F.2d 394 (1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1075, 85 L. Ed. 2d 511, 105 S. Ct. 2155 (1985); Bldg. & Const. Trades Council of San Mateo County, et al. v. Alberici/Denver, Inc., 1985 WL 56729, *3 (Apr. 22, 1985, N.D. Cal.) ("[The] language in Woeke indicated that the requirement that the subcontracting clause be negotiated within the context of a collective bargaining relationship is both necessary and sufficient to protect the agreement."). The Second Circuit, moreover, has held that prehire agreements are valid when they bind non-signatory parties to their terms "even when the employees in the bargaining unit have not yet designated the union [*17]" as their representative." Local 210, Laborers' Int'l Union of N. Am. v. Labor Relations Div. Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Am., 844 F.2d 69, 73 (2d Cir. 1987) (Citing Woeke, 456 U.S. at 663-64, 72 L. Ed. 2d 398, 102 S. Ct. 2071).

⁴ Section 8(f) of the NLRA, 29 U.S.C. § 158(f) "authorizes construction industry employers and unions to enter into so-called 'prehire' agreements setting the terms and conditions of employment for workers hired by the signatory employer without the union's majority status first having been established under § 9 of the Act." McNeff, Inc. v. Todd, 461 U.S. 260, 75 L. Ed. 2d 830, 103 S. Ct. 1753 (1983). The conditions under which labor agreements may be considered valid prehire agreements under Section 8(f) are: (1) the employer must be engaged primarily in the building or construction industry; (2) the labor organization must have members who are building and construction employees; and (3) the agreement must cover employees engaged (or who, upon their employment, will be engaged) in the building and construction industry. The parties in this case did not address the specific question of whether the PLA is a valid Section 8(f) agreement; however, the PLA, on its face, meets Section 8(f)'s requirements. Congress indicated similar concerns in enacting Section 8(f) as it did in enacting Section 8(e). Thus, Congress recognized that "construction industry unions often would not be able to establish majority support with respect to many bargaining units" prior to employment and Congress was "cognizant of the construction industry employer's need to 'know his labor costs before making the estimate upon which his bid will be based' and that 'the employer must be able to have available a supply of skilled craftsmen for quick referral.'" Id. at 266 (internal citations omitted). The PLA in this case was negotiated to further substantially similar goals. See PLA Art. II. Agreements that fall within the ambit of Section 8(f) are collective bargaining agreements within the meaning of Connell, and thus, are protected by the Construction Industry Proviso. See Donald Shriver, 635 F.2d at 872-76.

Plaintiff does not allege any facts to support its claim that the PLA was not the product of collective bargaining, whereas, Defendants indicate that the agreement was negotiated by Turner Construction, and on the initiative of Turner Construction and the School District. Moreover, the rationale behind the PLA in this case suggests that the PLA was a product of collective bargaining. There are no alleged or apparent facts which suggest that the PLA is an attempt by the Union to engage in top-down organizing. In fact, the evidence before the Court indicates that Turner Construction, the Construction Manager, at the direction [*19] of the School District, organized a feasibility study to determine how a PLA would effect the Project. See Def. Trades Council Mem. of Law at Ex. 12; Waites Aff. P 4. The results of this study indicated that a PLA would save significant costs, minimize work stoppages, and increase labor productivity. See id. On the basis of this study, the School District concluded that the PLA would be the most effective means of avoiding delay and disruption of the Project. See Waites Aff. P 4. It appears that the School District and Turner Construction initiated the bargaining process, not the union. Therefore, the Connell Court's concern that a broad reading of Section 8(e) would permit unions to use subcontracting agreements as an organizational weapon is not present here. Moreover, in this case the union seeks to represent employees who are, or will be, employed on the Project. In Connell, the union had no desire to represent the workers. Instead, they wanted to ensure that only subcontractors who had signed collective bargaining agreements would be awarded bids. Additionally, the PLA in this case is limited to on-site work on this Project, thus it furthers the permissible [*20] goal of reducing on-site friction. The factual distinctions between this case and Connell indicate the Supreme Court's concern, that the "careful limits established by Congress to restrain the ability of unions to organize from the top-down would be undermined seriously if the proviso to § 8(e) was construed to allow unions to seek subcontracting agreements from contractors with which it had no bargaining relationships," is not relevant in this case. Donald Schriver, 635 F.2d at 873. Moreover, these facts indicate that the PLA was the product of collective bargaining.

In the context of a motion for Preliminary Injunction, where the moving party bears the burden of proving to this Court that they are likely to succeed on the merits of the action, Plaintiff's bare allegation that the PLA was not the product of collective bargaining is not enough to overcome the evidence presented that the PLA, is a valid Section 8(f) Agreement, and thus was the product of collective bargaining. See, e.g., Ivy Mar Co. v. C.R. Seasons Ltd., 907 F. Supp. 547, 561 (E.D.N.Y. 1995) (stating that bare allegations are not enough to support a motion for preliminary injunction). [*21]

2. Are Turner Construction and/or the School District "employers in the construction industry?"

Plaintiff next argues that the PLA is not exempt from Section 8(e) because the School District and Turner Construction are not "employers in the construction industry." HN8[] The term "employer" has been construed broadly by both the NLRB and Federal Courts. See, e.g., Milwaukee & Southeast Wisconsin Dist. Council of Carpenters v. Rowley-Schlimgen, 2 F.3d 765, 768 (7th Cir. 1993). In determining whether an entity is an employer under the Construction Industry Proviso, courts have looked to the "degree of control over the construction-site labor relations it elects to retain." Rowley-Schlimgen, 2 F.3d 765, 768 (7th Cir. 1993) (quoting Carpenters Local (Longs Drugs), 278 N.L.R.B. 440, 442 (N.L.R.B. Jan. 31, 1986)). Turner, a company whose primary business is construction, was hired by the School District to manage the Project. In its management capacity, Turner participates in the selection of contractors; is required to ensure that these contractors comply with the terms of the PLA; and has been given day to day control over the Project. [*22] See PLA Article III, Section 4; ⁶ Owner Construction Manager Contract Article 7. The fact that Turner is employed in a managerial capacity and will not employ its own workers on the Project does not remove it from the category of "construction employer." See Rowley-Schlimgen, 2 F.3d at 766; A.L. Adams Constr. Co., 733 F.2d 853.

⁵ Note that exceptions to this rule exist. Prehire agreements must be consistent with the goals of the NLRA. For example, a Union cannot enter into a prehire agreement for the purpose of restricting the subcontractors to which it may subcontract work rather than for the purpose of representing a subcontractors employees. See, e.g., Ironworkers District Council of Pacific Northwest, 292 N.L.R.B. 562, enf'd, 913 F.2d 1470 (9th Cir. 1990).

Plaintiff claims that the plain language of the PLA precludes Turner Construction from fitting within the definition of "employer." To support this claim, Plaintiff cites to Article III, Section 6 of the PLA, which reads in relevant part, "this Agreement shall only be binding on the signatory parties hereto. . . . Neither the District, nor any of its agencies, is an employer within [*23] the construction industry. . . ." This language, however, does not support Plaintiff's contention that Turner is not an employer in the construction industry. HNg[↑] An employer, within the meaning of the NLRA, is someone who, among other things, has a substantial degree of control over the jobsite and labor relations. See Rowley-Schlimgen, 2 F.3d 765, 768 (7th Cir. 1993) (quoting Carpenters Local (Longs Drugs), 278 N.L.R.B. 440, 442 (N.L.R.B. Jan. 31, 1986)). Terms of the PLA, including those cited above, give Turner Construction control over both the day to day workings of the jobsite and over labor relations. Thus, the practical import of accepting Plaintiff's reading of this clause, such that neither Turner or the School District is an "employer" in the construction industry, would contradict later terms in the PLA, see PLA Article 3, Section 4, and eradicate all possible employers on this Project. If neither the School District, the Project Owner, or Turner, the Project Manager, is an "employer," within the meaning of the NLRA, who is? HN10[↑] It is generally recognized that when a court is faced with competing interpretations of contractual language, the [*24] court first looks to the plain language of the contract. See State-Wide Capital Corp. v. Superior Bank FSB, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6159, 1999 WL 258268 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 29, 1999). If there is still ambiguity (which here, arguably there is not if Section 6 is read as a whole), the court can look to extrinsic evidence to determine the meaning. See Starter Corp. v. Converse, Inc., 170 F.3d 286, 295 (2d. Cir 1999). In completing this exercise, the court should avoid interpreting a contract in such a way that provisions are rendered meaningless. See, e.g., Sure-Trip, Inc., v. Westinghouse Eng'g, 47 F.3d 526, 533 (2d Cir. 1995). Interpreting the PLA in the manner suggested by Plaintiff would create internal contradiction and contradict the plain meaning of Article III, Section 6. Thus, the language of the PLA does not prevent this Court from finding that Turner Construction is an "employer in the construction industry."

Even if Turner Construction was not an "employer in the construction industry," however, the Defendants could take advantage of this exemption. The fact that the School District is exempt from the definition of employer through the contractual language [*25] of the PLA does not mean that the School District, an entity of the state,⁷ is unable to take advantage of the Construction Industry Proviso when acting as a purchaser in the marketplace. See Boston

⁶ Article III Section 4 (a) of the PLA reads, in pertinent part, "the District, the Construction Manager, and/or Contractors, as appropriate, have the absolute right to select any qualified contractor for the award of contracts or subcontracts on this Project. . . ."

⁷ New York Courts have found that School Districts and School Boards are entities of the State. See, e.g., City of New York v. State of New York, 86 N.Y.2d 286, 289, 631 N.Y.S.2d 553, 655 N.E.2d 649 (1995) (Municipal corporate bodies--counties, towns and school districts--are merely subdivisions of the State, created by the State for the convenient carrying out of the State's governmental powers and responsibilities as its agents."); Herman v. Board of Education of Union School Dist. No. 8, Town of Arcadia, Wayne County, 234 N.Y. 196, 202, 137 N.E. 24 (1922) ("The school district is a civil division of the state. It may act only through its officers and agents. Its power of individual corporate action is limited to the choice of agents, who act in a representative capacity. Its members are the residents of the district. The board of education is the agency to which the state delegates the power and duty of controlling the schools in the district. Under such circumstances the position of the board is the same as that of any other agent of the state similarly situated.").

Harbor, 507 U.S. at 231. In Boston Harbor, the Supreme Court found that a state entity could implement a project labor agreement on a state funded construction project. In that case, the Massachusetts Water Resource Authority ("MWRA") was ordered by the Court to construct a waste water facility to clean up harbor pollution. The MWRA, operating under mandatory timetables - delay would lead to continued environmental exposure and financial penalties - decided that a project labor agreement would allow it to predict long range costs and minimize the potential for work stoppages. Thus, the MWRA issued a bid specification that required successful bidders to abide by the project labor agreement, which was negotiated by the Authority's project manager and the Boston Building and Trades Council. The agreement, by its terms, required signatory contractors to recognize the United Building and Trades Council of Camden County and Vicinity ("BCTC") and its affiliated craft unions [*26] as the exclusive collective bargaining representatives of their employees, to secure their work forces through the unions referral systems, and to adopt the wages and other conditions of employment contained in the collective bargaining agreements between the applicable trade union and the local contractors' association. Id.

[*27] The Boston Harbor Court found that because the MWRA was acting as an owner and manager of its own property, rather than as a regulator, in the context of the construction project the project labor agreement fit within the Construction Industry Proviso. The Court explained that "permitting the States to participate freely in the marketplace is not only consistent with NLRA preemption principles generally, but also, in this case, promotes the legislative goals of the §§ 8(e) and 8(f) exceptions for the construction industry." 113 S. Ct. at 1197. The goals of these sections, according to the Court, include "the short-term nature of employment, . . . the contractor's need for predictable costs and a steady supply of skilled labor, and a long-standing custom of prehire bargaining in the industry." Id. at 1198. The Court recognized that allowing prehire agreements forced contractors who do not normally enter PLAs, but wished to bid on the project, to make a choice - "they may alter their usual mode of operation to secure the business opportunity at hand, or seek business from purchasers whose perceived needs do not include a project labor agreement." See id., 507 U.S. at 231. [*28]

This case is similar to the Boston Harbor case. Significantly, in both cases, the project labor agreements were negotiated by a party other than the state entity. Thus, the fact that the state entity was not engaged in the actual bargaining process did not bar legal enforcement. In this case, like the MWRA in Boston Harbor, the School District is the owner of a construction project, the timely completion of which has serious public impact -- both financial and educational. The Project is financed by taxpayers, and delay will increase the cost of the project. See Feasibility Study, Def. Trades Council Mem. of Law Ex. 12. Therefore, the underlying goals of Section 8(e) outlined in Boston Harbor are impacted in this case, and the PLA furthers these goals. Like the MWRA, the School District is acting as an owner of a construction project, or a purchaser in the marketplace. Therefore, despite the fact that it is not an "employer," it is covered by the Construction Industry Proviso.

For the reasons detailed above, this Court finds that the PLA is covered by the Construction Industry Proviso and, therefore, does not violate Section 8(e) of the NLRA.

D. Antitrust Claims

[*29] HN11 [↑] The fact that the PLA falls within the Construction Industry Exception is not alone sufficient to shelter the agreement from the Federal Antitrust laws.⁸ See Connell, 421 U.S. 616, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418, 95 S. Ct. 1830. Instead, Courts have held that the Construction Industry Proviso (and the related nonstatutory exemption to Federal Antitrust Law) fails to act as a shield when such clauses are not the product of bona fide arms length bargaining, and instead are the product of an illegal relationship. Accordingly, if a clause is the product of collective bargaining, it cannot serve as the basis for an antitrust claim. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79 (internal quotations and citations omitted); see also, Sun-Land Nurseries, Inc. v. S. California Dist. Council of Laborers, 793 F.2d 1110, 1112 (9th Cir. 1986) (en banc), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1090, 94 L. Ed. 2d 155, 107 S. Ct. 1299 (1987).

⁸ Courts recognize two labor law exemptions to antitrust scrutiny- one statutory and one nonstatutory. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79. The statutory exemption is inapplicable here because it does not reach activity between a union and non-labor party, such as an employer. See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79. Therefore, this discussion is relevant only to the non-statutory exemption.

[*30] In determining whether an agreement falls within this nonstatutory exemption, a court should look to whether the product is the subject of collective bargaining before examining whether the agreement furthers the goals protected by national labor law, is within the scope of traditionally mandatory subjects of collective bargaining, and does not impose a "direct restraint on the business market [that] has substantial anticompetitive effects, both actual and potential, that would not follow naturally from the elimination of competition over wages and working conditions." See Local 210, 844 F.2d at 79 (internal citations omitted). Because Plaintiff has not provided evidence to support allegations that the PLA in this case is not a valid collective bargaining agreement and the factual circumstances indicate the PLA was the product of collective bargaining; the PLA furthers the goals of labor policy; and the PLA falls within the ambit of the Construction Industry Proviso, it is subject to the nonstatutory exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

Accordingly, upon the proof submitted by Plaintiff, this Court cannot find a violation of the Sherman Act or the NLRA. [*31] Because the Court's decision rests on the clear import of the statutory language at issue in the PLA, Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction is denied under both the likelihood of success on the merits standard, and the less rigorous, sufficiently serious question for litigation standard used to determine whether a preliminary injunction should be granted. Therefore, Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction is denied.

E. Declaratory Judgment

Plaintiff Albany Specialties requests a declaratory judgment declaring the PLA unlawful. HN13 A court may render a declaratory judgment "(1) when the judgment will serve a useful purpose in clarifying and settling the legal relations in issue, and (2) when it will terminate and afford relief from the uncertainty, insecurity, and controversy giving rise to the proceeding." See Broadview Chemical Corp. v. Loctite Corp., 417 F.2d 998, 1000-01 (2d Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 1064, 25 L. Ed. 2d 686, 90 S. Ct. 1502 (1970). Plaintiff failed to prove that the sections of the PLA requiring Contractors to recognize Unions and employ Union workers violate the NLRA or the Sherman Act. Accordingly, [*32] this Court will not issue a declaratory judgment.

III. Conclusion

Because Plaintiff has failed to show a fair chance of success on the merits, the motion for preliminary injunction is denied. The Court declines to enter a declaratory judgment. The decision rendered from the bench on September 28, 1999 is hereby vacated and supplanted by this Memorandum Decision & Order.

IT IS SO ORDERED

October 1, 1999

Binghamton, New York

Hon. Thomas J. McAvoy

Chief U.S. District Judge

Toscano v. PGA Tour, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of California

October 12, 1999, Decided ; October 12, 1999, Filed

CIV-S-97-1238 DFL PAN

Reporter

70 F. Supp. 2d 1109 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15818 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,702

HARRY TOSCANO, Plaintiff, v. PGA TOUR, INC., et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Sponsor defendants' motion for summary judgment GRANTED.

Core Terms

sponsors, tournament, players, Regulations, concerted action, distributors, manufacturer, Senior, golf, conspiracy, independent action, advertising, commented, terms, organizations, contracts, summary judgment, participates, Television, complaints, qualifying, top

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce. This phrase has been interpreted to require concerted action of more than a single entity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Before a plaintiff can establish concerted action between a manufacturer and its distributors under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act, there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently. In particular, the plaintiff must advance evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

70 F. Supp. 2d 1109, *1109 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15818, 1

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Whether a contract alone gives rise to an inference of concerted action under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, depends upon the nature of the anticompetitive conduct alleged by plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Defenses

Where the conduct challenged by plaintiff under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is subject to Rule of Reason analysis, the existence of a contract between a party who announces his terms and a party who acquiesces in them does not, without more, give rise to an inference of concerted action under § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To avoid summary judgment, plaintiff must present evidence showing that the hypothesis of collusive action is more plausible than that of individual action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Where the evidence is consistent with the hypothesis that the entity at the top of the vertical chain designed the challenged restrictions for its own purposes, an inference of conspiracy is inappropriate.

Counsel: For HARRY TOSCANO, plaintiff: Thomas August Casazza, Law Offices of Thomas Casazza, Sacramento, CA.

For JIM COLBERT, BRUCE DEVLIN, TERRY DILL, DALE DOUGLASS, RAYMOND FLOYD, GIBBY GILBERT, BOB GOALBY, MIKE HILL, KEN STILL, AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY, AMERITECH CORPORATION, BANKBOSTON CORPORATION, BANC ONE CORPORATION, BELL ATLANTIC CORPORATION, BOONE VALLEY, BRICKYARD CROSSING, BRUNO'S INC, BURNET, CHRYSLER CORPORATION, COUNTRY-WIDE CREDIT INDUSTRIES, INC, DINERS CLUB INTERNATIONAL, EVEREADY BATTERY CO, FIRST OF AMERICA, FHP HEALTH CARE, FORD MOTOR COMPANY, FRANKLIN QUEST CO, GENERAL MOTORS CORP, THE GILLETTE COMPANY, GTE CORPORATION, HYATT CORPORATION, THE KROGER COMPANY, LG GROUP, LIBERTY MUTUAL GROUP, MERCEDES-BENZ OF NORTH AMERICA, INC., NATIONWIDE INSURANCE ENTERPRISES, NYT MAGAZINE GROUP, PAINE WEBBER GROUP, INC, QUICKSILVER, R J REYNOLDS TOBACCO CORPORATION, RALEY'S, RALPH'S GROCERY COMPANY, ROYAL CARRIBEAN CRUISE LINE, SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC, THE SCOTTS COMPANY, TOSHIBA CORPORATION, TOYOTA MOTOR CORPORATION, TRANSAMERICAN CORPORATION, TRUEGREEN-CHEMLAWN, WENDY'S INTERNATIONAL, INC, DAVE STOCKTON, DEANE R BEMAN, [\[2\]](#) TIMOTHY W FINCHEM, OJAI GOLF CHARITIES, GOLD

RUSH CLASSICS, CENTINELA HOSPITAL MEDICAL CENTER, CLASSIC CHARITIES OF ORANGE COUNTY, GRAND SLAM CHARITIES, defendants: Cary M Adams, Murphy Austin Adams Schoenfeld LLP, Sacramento, CA.

For AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY, AMERITECH CORPORATION, defendants: William J Maledon, PRO HAC VICE, Diane M Johnson, PRO HAC VICE, Osborn Maledon, Phoenix, AZ.

For GENERAL MOTORS CORP, defendant: Will Barnett Fitton, Latham and Watkins, San Francisco, CA.

For GENERAL MOTORS CORP, defendant: William B Slowey, PRO HAC VICE, General Motors Corporation, Detroit, MI.

Judges: DAVID F. LEVI, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DAVID F. LEVI

Opinion

[*1110] MEMORANDUM OF OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff Harry Toscano brings this action against the PGA Tour, Inc. ("the [*1111] Tour"), the individual officers and directors of the Tour, and various sponsors of the Tour's golf tournaments, alleging that they conspired to restrain trade in senior professional golf in violation of Section One of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The sponsor defendants move for summary judgment.

I.

The Senior PGA Tour co-sponsors professional golf tournaments for players [*3] over the age of 50. (March 23, 1998 Mem. of Op. & Order at 1.) Toscano challenges the Tour's regulations governing (1) player eligibility, and (2) player participation in non-PGA events.

The Tour's Rules and Regulations provide for a 78-player field for each tournament. A player is exempt from having to compete in the qualifying rounds of the tournament if he has secured 75 or more victories in Senior PGA or PGA Tour events or is within any of the following categories: (1) the top 31 available players from the previous year's Tour Money List; (2) the top 31 available players from the All-Time Career Money List (which includes purses won both in Senior PGA Tour tournaments and in PGA tournaments); (3) the top eight players from the Tour's annual National Qualifying Tournament (in order of finishing); (4) players who have won a Tour tournament within the past 12 months; (5) the top four scorers in the qualifying round of play held before the tournament at issue; (6) four players designated by the tournament's local sponsor; and (7) on a space available basis, any otherwise non-exempt player who has won a Senior PGA Tour or PGA Tour tournament. (Moorhead Decl. P 9; Pl.'s App. 1 at 5-9.)

[*4] The Rules and Regulations also restrict the ability of Tour members to participate in non-Tour events. Under the "Conflicting Events" Rule, a player who qualifies to play in a Tour event generally may not enter a non-Tour tournament scheduled on the same date unless he first obtains a written release from the Tour Commissioner.¹ (Pl.'s App. 1 at 25.) The Commissioner has discretionary authority to grant a Tour member two releases annually, assuming he participates in 15 Tour events, and an additional release for every five Tour events in which he participates above 15. (Id. at 26.) The Commissioner may deny a Tour member's request for a waiver if he determines that it "would cause [the] Tour to be in violation of a contractual commitment to a tournament or would otherwise significantly or unreasonably harm [the] Tour and such tournament." (Id.) Moreover, under the "Television Release" or "Media Rights" Rule, Tour members must also seek the Commissioner's approval before participating in a televised tournament that is not co-sponsored or approved by the Tour, irrespective of whether the tournament conflicts with a Tour event. (Id. at 27-28.)

¹ A member may enter a conflicting tournament if it is cosponsored or approved by the PGA, a major tournament such as the Masters or U.S. Open, the Ryder Cup tournament, a Nike Tour event (if the member meets certain qualifications), or, if the member is a foreign national, a golf event on his home circuit. (Pl.'s App. 1 at 25.)

[5] The Rules and Regulations governing the Senior PGA Tour are controlled by the Tour's Division Board (the "Board"). (Pl.'s App. 1 at 48.) The Board is comprised of four Player Directors, the immediate past President of the PGA, and four Independent Directors, defined as "four public figures with a demonstrated interest in the game of golf." (Id. at 45.) Player Directors are elected by voting members of the Tour, and hold office for a period of two years. (Id.) Any amendment to the Rules and Regulations must be approved by a majority of the Board, including three Player Directors, unless a conflict of interest exists.² Amendments adopted by the [*1112] Board may be reversed by a two-thirds vote of all voting members of the Tour.

[6] Although no representative of the sponsor defendants is or has been a member of the Board, (Moorhouse Decl. P 14), Toscano contends that the sponsor defendants conspired with the Tour to perpetuate and enforce the Rules and Regulations he challenges. Tour sponsors fall into two rough categories: "local sponsors" and "title sponsors." Local sponsors are nonprofit or charitable organizations that contract directly with the Tour. (Id. P 3.) Local sponsors serve as the principal organizers of Tour events, and are responsible for reserving a golf course that meets Tour specifications, hiring and paying staff for the tournament, amassing the tournament prize money, advertising and promoting the event, and arranging for the sale of concessions. (Id. P 4.) In order to cover the cost of organizing and operating the tournament, local sponsors in turn enter into agreements with title sponsors -- businesses who pay for the right to advertise in connection with the tournament. (Moorhouse Decl. P 5.) The local sponsor typically agrees to organize and conduct the tournament in accordance with PGA Rules and Regulations, incorporate the title sponsor's name into the Tournament title, display [7] signage with the title sponsor's name at the tournament site, provide hospitality benefits at the tournament, and secure national television and print media advertising. (E.g., Defs.' App. 7, 9, 10.) In return, the title sponsor generally makes payments under a fixed schedule, or assumes financial responsibility for a significant portion of the Tournament purse and television and advertising costs.³ (Id. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.)

[8] The organization of the Ralphs Senior Classic tournament illustrates the relationships among local sponsors, title sponsors, and the Tour. The local sponsor, defendant Centinela Hospital Medical Center ("Centinela"), entered into a contract directly with the PGA to organize and run a golf tournament in Los Angeles, California. The agreement provides that "the general division of duties will be that [Centinela] will provide the course, the clubhouse, and all other facilities of every kind necessary or appropriate for professional golf competition, and PGA Tour, with the assistance of [Centinela], will conduct the competition." (Def.'s App. 3 at CH-00014.) Centinela in turn entered into a title sponsorship with Ralphs. In exchange for a series of payments to Centinela, Ralphs secured advertising and media rights in connection with the tournament, including the right to have its name included in the tournament's title (hence, "The Ralphs Senior Classic") and to use the tournament logo in its advertisements. (Def.'s App. 15 at RG-00054, 00060).

II.

HN1 Section One of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint [9] of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. This phrase "has been interpreted to require

² If a Board member has a conflict of interest, a majority of the Board may vote to amend the Rules and Regulations "even if (i) such majority is comprised of no Player Directors, and/or (ii) the disinterested directors constitute less than a majority of the Board, and provided further that if any Player Directors do not vote on such change, such majority shall include at least 75 percent of the Player Directors voting thereon." (Pl.'s App. 1 at 48.)

³ Defendant Royal Caribbean Cruises, Ltd. served as both a local and title sponsor. (Def.'s App. 19.) Moreover, in addition to serving as a title sponsor for an individual tournament (the "Cadillac-NFL Golf Classic"), General Motors paid for "umbrella sponsorship" rights to a series of telecasts of Tour events on ESPN. (Fitton Decl. Exs. B, C; Finchem Depo. at 94:11-23; Moorhouse Depo. at 71:22-25, 73:21-74:13). As an umbrella sponsor, GM was entitled to have its name presented as the overall series sponsor, a status distinct from the title sponsor of the individual tournaments comprising the series. (Fitton Decl. Ex.C at GM00000011.)

concerted action of more than a single entity." The Jeanery, Inc. v. James Jeans, Inc., 849 F.2d 1148, 1152 (9th Cir. 1988).

[*1113] The Sponsor defendants argue that there is no triable issue of fact as to whether they and the Tour engaged in concerted anticompetitive action in violation of § 1.⁴ Because the local sponsor defendants and title sponsor defendants have somewhat different relationships with the Tour, they are discussed separately below.

[10] A. Local Sponsors

Defendants maintain that under the Supreme Court's decision in Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), the local sponsors' dealings with the Tour do not rise to the level of concerted action within the meaning of § 1. The court agrees.

In Monsanto, the Court affirmed the right of a manufacturer to announce the terms under which it will deal with distributors and then refuse to deal with those unwilling to accept its terms. The Court explained that a conspiracy between a manufacturer and its distributors could not be inferred from mere compliance by the distributors with the manufacturer's sales restrictions, since manufacturers often have independent reasons for imposing such restrictions. See id. at 762-63, 104 S. Ct. at 1470. For example, a manufacturer may "want to ensure that its distributors earn sufficient profit to pay for programs such as hiring and training additional salesmen or demonstrating the technical features of the product, and will want to see that 'free riders' do not interfere." Id. at 762-63, 104 S. Ct. at 1470. Accordingly, ^{HN2} before [11] a plaintiff can establish concerted action between a manufacturer and its distributors under § 1, "there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471. In particular, the plaintiff must advance evidence "that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Id. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471 (citation and internal quotations omitted) (emphasis added).

Defendants argue that Monsanto applies here because the relationship between the Tour and the local sponsors is analogous to that between a manufacturer and its distributors. According to defendants, the Tour unilaterally establishes its Rules and Regulations, and local sponsors merely acquiesce in those rules, much the same way a distributor acquiesces in terms announced by a manufacturer. Moreover, defendants point out that the interests of the Tour and the local sponsors do not necessarily coincide; even assuming that Toscano is correct in asserting that the Rules and Regulations [12] are designed to qualify players with established PGA records and lock those players into the Tour, the Tour may have adopted this strategy to maximize the popularity of its tournaments, irrespective of the local sponsor's views about how the tournaments should be structured.

In response, Toscano contends that the following circumstantial evidence excludes the possibility of independent action by the Tour and the local sponsors: (1) contractual agreements between those parties; and (2) evidence that the local sponsors commented on the Tour's rules.

[*1114] 1. Local Sponsorship Contracts

Toscano points out that the local sponsorship contracts make express reference to the provisions challenged by Toscano. For example, the sponsorship agreement between the Tour and defendant Centinela Hospital states:

⁴ Defendants also maintain that summary judgment should be granted for title sponsors Franklin Covey Co. and Pacificare because Toscano was permitted to play in the tournaments sponsored by those defendants and therefore was not injured by them. To the extent, however, that a triable issue of fact exists as to whether Franklin Covey and Pacificare conspired with the Tour and the other sponsor defendants to maintain the rules challenged by Toscano, his claim continues as to these two defendants notwithstanding his participation in their tournaments. It is uncontested that the Rules and Regulations disqualified Toscano from participating in many other tournaments sponsored by the Tour.

Sponsor and PGA Tour agree . . . that PGA Tour will provide services for such competition in accordance with the provisions herein and with the Senior PGA Tour Tournament Regulations as they may from time to time apply, and which are incorporated herein by reference.

PGA Tour will fill the field of contestants in accordance with the SENIOR PGA TOUR Tournament Regulations. [13]

Players eligible to apply to enter the Tournament shall be those prescribed in the Senior PGA Tour Tournament Regulations.

(Def.'s App. 3, at CH-00016, CH-00017, CH-00018.) This language does not, however, exclude the possibility of independent action or support a finding that the local sponsors and the Tour had a "conscious commitment" to a scheme to establish and perpetuate the Rules and Regulations. The agreements merely obligate the Tour to run its tournaments in accordance with its own rules; they in no way suggest that the local sponsors have any influence or exert any control over the rules themselves or did anything other than to accede to the Tour's natural desire to run its tournaments according to its rules.

Toscano counters that the mere existence of contracts between the Tour and its local sponsors suffices to satisfy the concerted action requirement of § 1. But HN3[¹] whether a contract alone gives rise to an inference of concerted action depends upon the nature of the anticompetitive conduct alleged by plaintiff. Cf. VII Philip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 1400 at 5 (1986) (observing that "if the reasons for prohibiting or controlling certain [14] conduct are very strong, it makes sense to err on the side of overinclusiveness in determining the presence of an agreement"). Toscano's § 1 claim is based upon a vertical boycott theory. He alleges that the Tour conspired with certain of its officers, the Player Directors, and the sponsors to boycott Toscano and similarly situated players from participating in the market for senior professional golf. None of these categories of defendants competes with each other, and each plays a different role in the conspiracy theory advanced by Toscano.⁵ Because "precedent limits the per se rule in the boycott context to cases involving horizontal agreements among direct competitors," Nynex Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 498, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998), Toscano's claim must be analyzed under the Rule of Reason.

[15] The Rule of Reason governs a wide array of conduct that requires cooperation and may be as likely to promote competition as it is to suppress it. See e.g., Polk Bros., Inc. v. Forest City Enters., Inc., 776 F.2d 185, 188 (7th Cir. 1985) (Easterbrook, J.) (observing that "joint ventures, mergers, systems of distribution -- all these and more require extensive cooperation, and all are assessed under a Rule of Reason"). Because contracts are often used to regulate relationships among cooperating entities, a rule equating the [*1115] mere existence of a contract with concerted action in Rule of Reason cases would create a significant risk of deterring procompetitive behavior. Cf. Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763, 104 S. Ct. at 1470 (warning that inferring concerted action from conduct consistent with independent action "could deter or penalize perfectly legitimate conduct"). Accordingly, the courts have held that HN4[¹] where the conduct challenged by the plaintiff is subject to Rule of Reason analysis, the existence of a contract between a party who announces his terms and a party who acquiesces in them does not, without more, give rise to an inference of concerted action [16] under § 1. See Matrix Essentials v. Emporium Drug Mart, Inc., 988 F.2d 587, 594 (5th Cir. 1993) (rejecting the defendant's § 1 defense despite the existence of a contract between the plaintiff manufacturer and its distributors in which the plaintiff unilaterally established the non-price

⁵ As Toscano explains in his brief:

Every fact of the combination complained of has financial gain written all over it. The Tour wants to continue to build its empire of golf-related businesses. The Tour's members (including the Player Directors) want to keep earning money playing golf, making appearances, giving endorsements, and even designing golf courses. The local sponsors need to be able to sell sponsorship packages to the title sponsors in order to continue operating. . . . The title sponsors want to further relationships with their major clients, promote employee loyalty, and sell their products and services without having to compete with like-image products to reach their target markets.

restraint challenged by the defendant); American Airlines v. Christensen, 967 F.2d 410, 413 \(10th Cir. 1992\) (concluding that contracts between the defendant airline and members of its travel awards program raised no triable issue of fact as to concerted action where "no evidence in the record suggested that [the airline] did not independently set the terms under which it would offer its travel awards"); see also Beutler Sheetmetal Works v. McMorgan & Co., 616 F. Supp. 453, 454-56 \(N.D. Cal. 1985\) (finding no triable issue of fact as to whether the defendant lender and its borrowers engaged in concerted action where the borrowers acquiesced in terms announced by the lender and incorporated in the latter's commitment letters).⁶

[17] If the contract between the Tour and the local sponsors sufficed to make the latter co-conspirators under § 1, any party, however small, would risk antitrust liability based upon the Tour's conduct simply by contracting with the Tour to do business at a typical Tour event run according to Tour rules. Antitrust liability would potentially extend to sidewalk vendors, limousine services, local businesses seeking advertising -- any business, however far removed from the market for professional golf, that happened to enter into such an agreement with the Tour. Because this result would be inconsistent with the purpose of the Sherman Act,⁷ Toscano [*1116] must, under Monsanto, come forward with additional evidence excluding the possibility of independent action and suggesting that the Tour and the local sponsors "had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471 (citation and internal quotations omitted).

[18] 2. Notice and Comment Procedure

Toscano also points out that before the Tour's Board takes a final vote on amendments to the Rules and Regulations, it oversees a notice-and-comment procedure in which both local and title sponsors may participate. According to Toscano, the sponsors use this process to influence and shape the rules.

There is little support in the record for this contention. It is undisputed that no representative of the sponsor defendants has ever sat on the Board. The testimony of PGA Tour Commissioner Timothy Finchem, on which Toscano heavily relies, suggests that the decision to adopt or amend the Rules and Regulations rests ultimately ⁶Where the challenged conduct raises strong antitrust suspicions and is therefore per se illegal, a contract may satisfy the concerted action requirement even if one of the parties was coerced into the agreement. For example, a sales contract alone may give rise to an inference of concerted action under § 1 if the agreement was part of a tying arrangement. See Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 60 F.3d 1421, 1427 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (explaining that § 1's concerted action requirement "is satisfied in tie-in cases by the coerced sales contract for the tied item") (emphasis omitted); Systemcare, Inc. v. Wang Labs. Corp., 117 F.3d 1137, 1142 \(10th Cir. 1997\) (holding that "a contract between a buyer and seller satisfies the concerted action element of section 1 of the Sherman Act where the seller coerces a buyer's acquiescence in a tying agreement imposed by the seller"). In cases involving restraints that are per se illegal, it "makes sense to err on the side of over-inclusiveness in determining the presence of an agreement," VII Areeda, supra, P 1437 at 5, because the restraints "pose an unacceptable risk of stifling competition", Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 9, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1556, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\); cf. Nynex, 119 S. Ct. at 497 (observing that "certain kinds of agreements will so often prove so harmful to competition and so rarely prove justified that the antitrust laws do not require proof that an agreement of that kind is, in fact, anticompetitive in the particular circumstance"). As explained above, however, this case does not involve allegations of tying or other conduct subject to the per se rule.

⁷Defendants also cite to Acquaire v. Canada Dry Bottling Co., 24 F.3d 401 \(2d Cir. 1994\), Precision Piping & Instruments, Inc. v. E.I. duPont de Nemours & Co., 951 F.2d 613 \(4th Cir. 1991\), 49er Chevrolet, Inc. v. General Motors Corp., 803 F.2d 1463 \(9th Cir. 1986\), and Smilecare Dental Group v. Delta Dental Plan of Cal., Inc., 88 F.3d 780 \(9th Cir. 1996\). Each of these cases is distinguishable. Smilecare is a § 2 case, and the plaintiff alleged no agreement in restraint of trade. See 88 F.3d at 786 (holding that the plaintiff's "failure to allege the essential element of conspiracy between [the defendant] and any other parties precludes a group boycott claim"). While Acquaire involved an allegedly anticompetitive agreement between a manufacturer and distributor, the policy challenged by the plaintiff in that case was not set forth in a written agreement. See 24 F.3d at 407-08. The same is true of 49er Chevrolet, 803 F.2d at 1467 (finding no agreement under § 1 between the defendant auto-manufacturer and its shippers where the alleged anticompetitive contracts made no reference to the challenged policies regarding dealer reimbursement for damaged cars), and Precision Piping, 951 F.2d at 615-18 (finding no agreement within the meaning of § 1 where the alleged antitrust conspirators had no written agreement and there was no evidence that the defendants collaborated on the policy challenged by plaintiff).

with the Board. Finchem testified that there is "a period of time where the sponsors -- the tournaments can have impact and access to various members of the board to write memos stating their position or orally make their position known to players who are on the Player Advisory Council or player directors or independent directors or whatever." (Finchem Depo. at 78:1-8.) But he also made clear that "sometimes [the sponsor's] position is one that the board eventually agreed with and sometimes it doesn't." (Id. at 79:12-13.)

[19] Evidence that the local sponsors sporadically participated in the Tour's notice and comment procedures does not reasonably exclude the possibility of independent action. In the analogous context of manufacturer-distributor relationships, the courts have uniformly held that concerted action between manufacturers and distributors may not be inferred from mere evidence that the manufacturer considered complaints from distributors before enforcing its sales rules against a wayward distributor. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 763, 104 S. Ct. at 1470 (explaining that distributor complaints "arise in the normal course of business and do not indicate illegal concerted action") (citation and internal quotations omitted); O.S.C. Corp. v. Apple Computer, Inc., 792 F.2d 1464, 1468 \(9th Cir. 1986\) (holding that "[dealer] complaints followed by termination are not enough to provide sufficient proof of an antitrust conspiracy"); The Jeanery, 849 F.2d at 1157 ("Complaints by competitors, standing alone, are not sufficient to show a conspiracy."); Isaksen v. Vermont Castings, Inc., 825 F.2d 1158, 1162 \(7th Cir. 1987\) (Posner, J.) ("Complaints [20] to a supplier, made by competitors of a dealer who is cutting prices below suggested levels are not, standing alone, evidence of agreement"). Moreover, there is no evidence that any of the sponsor defendants commented on the particular rules challenged by Toscano.⁸ The mere possibility that a local sponsor could advocate for or against a rule is not sufficient by itself to support a finding that [*1117] the Tour and the local sponsors reached common objectives concerning eligibility requirements.

3. The Record as a Whole

HN5 To avoid summary judgment, Toscano must present evidence showing "that the hypothesis of collusive action is more plausible than that of individual action." In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 186 F.3d 781, 785 \(7th Cir. 1999\) [21] (Posner, C.J.); see also Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356-57, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\) (explaining that a plaintiff asserting a § 1 claim "must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [him]"). As noted above, however, the record lacks concrete evidence that the local sponsors held specific views about the Rules and Regulations targeted by Toscano, that those views, if any, were communicated to the Tour, and that the Tour relied on these putative views in adopting or amending its rules.⁹ It is equally if not more reasonable to infer from the record that the Tour and local sponsors acted independently with respect to the challenged rules.

⁸ Indeed, the evidence in the record suggests that many local sponsors never commented to the Tour about its Rules and Regulations. ((Centinela Hosp. Rep.) Peterson Depo. at 24:17-25:4; (Grand Slam Charities Rep.) Kramer Depo. at 67:22-68:11; ((Gold Rush Classics Rep.) Bell Depo. at 35:19-25.)

⁹ Toscano invokes Volvo North Am. Corp. v. Men's Int'l Prof'l Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55 \(2d Cir. 1988\), but, as the defendants point out, that case is distinguishable. In Volvo, a former sponsor of a men's professional tennis tour brought a § 1 claim against the tour, asserting that it conspired with other sponsors and tournament operators (not named as defendants) to prevent the plaintiff from sponsoring future tour events. Although the decision dealt principally with the issue of antitrust standing, see id. at 66-70, the court went on to hold that the plaintiff adequately alleged a conspiracy within the meaning of § 1, see id. at 70-71. The court explained that "courts have consistently held that, since joint ventures -- including sports leagues and other such associations -- consist of multiple entities, they can violate § 1 of the Sherman Act." Id. In the court's view, the tour was no different from these defendants, since it consisted of "representatives of national tennis associations, tournament owners and directors, and professional tennis players." Id. at 71.

Because no sponsors were sued in Volvo, the decision does not discuss the circumstances in which the sponsors of a sports league may be held liable under § 1 as co-conspirators of the league. Moreover, unlike the professional tennis tour at issue in Volvo, the Tour is not a joint venture, and the Tour's Board does not include representatives of sponsors hosting tournaments. See id. at 58, 67, 71.

[22] According to Toscano, the Tour's eligibility and participation requirements are intended to capture golfers who have met with previous success on the Tour "to the exclusion of equally or better qualified individuals." However, the local sponsors might very well be indifferent as to whether the Tour focuses on players with a history of winning or players with the best ability, so long as the Tour's events draw public attention sufficient to further the local sponsors' fundraising objectives. Nor are the local sponsors' interests clearly aligned with the Tour's interest in the Conflicting Event and Television Release rules. Toscano maintains that these rules are designed to prevent competing leagues from springing up. But the local sponsors could well benefit from a market with competing leagues in which they might be able to negotiate more favorable terms with the Tour and have greater choice.¹⁰

[23] Because "the evidence is consistent with the hypothesis that the [entity] at the top of the vertical chain designed the [challenged] restrictions for its own purposes, an inference of conspiracy is inappropriate." [*1118] Illinois Corp. Travel, Inc., 806 F.2d 722, 726 (7th Cir. 1986) (Easterbrook, J.). Accordingly, the local sponsors are entitled to summary judgment.

B. Title Sponsors

Toscano's § 1 claim against the title sponsor defendants is even weaker than his claim against the local sponsors. Unlike the local sponsors, the title sponsors do not contract directly with the Tour.¹¹ And, as discussed above, Toscano has submitted no evidence showing that any of the sponsor defendants commented specifically on the rules he challenges.

[24] Toscano correctly points out that a GM representative testified in his deposition that "the possibility that someone from General Motors commented on the regulations at one time in the nine-year history is likely." (Comb Depo. at 47:20-24.) In addition, Commissioner Finchem stated in his deposition that GM, like any sponsor, would be able to comment on the Rules and Regulations as part of the notice and comment period preceding a vote by the Tour's Board:

Question: If, in fact, you portend [sic] to make changes to the regulations, would Cadillac have the ability to comment upon same?

Answer: Yes, we would treat Cadillac in that context in the same way we would treat any of the title sponsors or the tournament organizations. We would ask for their comments.

(Finchem Depo. at 11-17.) As explained above, however, evidence that a sponsor commented on the Rules and Regulations is consistent with independent decision making by the Board, and does not alone give rise to a reasonable inference of concerted action.¹² Moreover, there is no evidence that GM or any other title sponsor directed any comments to the particular rules that Toscano attacks as anti-competitive. [25]

¹⁰ The economic evidence advanced by Toscano is conclusory and unpersuasive. According to Toscano's expert, Dr. Tollison, "the economic theory explaining why the local tournament sponsors are involved in the anticompetitive combination in this case is simply that they contractually bind themselves to, and benefit from, the very aspects of the Senior PGA Tour's operation that are anticompetitive." (Tollison Decl. at 15.) Tollison's declaration fails to explain, however, why the local sponsors have an economic interest in the eligibility and participation rules challenged by Toscano.

HN6 [↑]

¹¹ Because Caribbean Cruise Lines acted as a local sponsor as well as a title sponsor, the analysis applicable to local sponsors applies equally to it. GM's situation differs from that of the other title sponsors because it contracted directly with the Tour to act as an umbrella sponsor for a series of tour events. However, neither of the two umbrella sponsorship agreements between the Tour and GM refers to the Tour's Rules and Regulations. (Fitton Decl. Ex. D; Fitton Decl. Ex. E.)

¹² Toscano also cites as specific circumstantial evidence of concerted action among the defendants the fact that officers of title sponsor Pacificare served on the board of a local sponsor, whose other directors in turn were representative of other sponsors. According to Toscano, one of Pacificare's officers was also President of the local sponsor, and "participated at an organizational board meeting where the topics of discussion included the agreements necessary to be entered into with the Tour." (Pls.' Am.

70 F. Supp. 2d 1109, *1118 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15818, 25

Because Toscano has failed to present evidence "showing that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inference[] of independent action," Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, 106 S. Ct. at 1356, the title sponsor defendants are entitled [26] to summary judgment.

The sponsor defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: 12 October 1999.

DAVID F. LEVI

United States District Judge

End of Document

In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division

October 14, 1999, Decided ; October 15, 1999, Filed

Master File No. 99-md-1278, MDL No. 1278

Reporter

90 F. Supp. 2d 819 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20698 **

IN RE CARDIZEM CD ANTITRUST LITIGATION, THIS DOCUMENT RELATES TO: Case Nos. 99-73314 (Lowy), 99-73750 (Aetna), 99-73667 (Gabriel), 99-73345 (Sizemore), 99-73981 (Eirich), 99-74377 (Glover), 99-73845 (Sunshine), 99-73713 (D'Esposito), 99-73871 (Galloway)

Disposition: [1] Plaintiffs' motions for remand GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

Core Terms

unjust enrichment, disgorgement, Plaintiffs', aggregated, Defendants', injunctive relief, attorney's fees, federal question, removal, class member, restitution, damages, amount-in-controversy, federal law, alleges, cause of action, state law, cases, statutory damages, integrated, amount in controversy, diversity jurisdiction, injunction, dollars, benefits, undivided interest, tens of millions, district court, well-pleaded, overpayment

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > General Overview

HN1 Removal, Procedural Matters

Generally, a civil case brought in state court may be removed by a defendant to federal court if it could have been brought there originally. The burden of establishing federal jurisdiction rests clearly upon the defendants as the removing party. The court is required to look to the complaint as it existed at the time the petition for removal was filed to determine the matter of federal jurisdiction raised by the defendant's notice of removal. The federal courts strictly construe removal petitions in a manner that resolves all doubts against removal.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

HN2 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

90 F. Supp. 2d 819, *819LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20698, 1

In multidistrict litigation, the binding precedent, if any, from the circuit in which the litigation has been consolidated should be examined and, if none exists, an evaluation of other circuit law should be undertaken in order to make a reasoned decision regarding removal.

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > Diversity Jurisdiction

HN3 Diversity Jurisdiction, Amount in Controversy

Although state law will dictate the nature of the claim asserted and what amounts are actually at stake, federal law will determine whether the amounts exceed the statutory minimum necessary for diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1332.

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > Determination

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

HN4 Amount in Controversy, Determination

The defendant's burden of proof regarding the amount in controversy varies depending on whether and how much the plaintiff seeks in damages. If the plaintiff's complaint specifies that she is seeking an unspecified amount in damages, then the preponderance of the evidence (more likely than not) test will apply, and the defendant must show, by a preponderance standard, that the plaintiff's allegations, if properly proved, will justify an award in excess of the jurisdictional minimum. If the plaintiff's complaint specifies that she is seeking an amount less than the amount required for diversity jurisdiction, then the defendant must show by a substantial likelihood or reasonable probability that the plaintiff's claims meet the amount-in-controversy requirement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

HN5 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

If the defendant shows that the relevant state law does not limit the plaintiff's damages to the amount pled, removal may still be an option. If plaintiff's cause of action and the relief actually sought clearly involve a controversy in excess of the required amount, removal is not defeated by a monetary prayer for less than the amount. If the state court complaint alleges damages less than the jurisdictional amount, but state law does not limit the plaintiff to the amount pleaded, there is the specter of bad-faith pleading to avoid removal.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Class Action Fairness Act

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > Diversity Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > Determination

90 F. Supp. 2d 819, *819LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20698, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN6 Class Actions, Class Action Fairness Act

Generally, to permit removal of a class action lawsuit under the diversity jurisdiction statute, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1332, a defendant must show that the jurisdictional amount is satisfied by each class member, and the class members' claims may not be aggregated. The general rule is that while separate and distinct claims may not be aggregated, aggregation is permissible when two or more plaintiffs unite to enforce a single title or right in which they have a common and undivided interest. An identifying characteristic of a common and undivided interest is that if one plaintiff cannot or does not collect his share, the shares of the remaining plaintiffs are increased. Accordingly, a determination whether a plaintiff's claim may be aggregated or not requires examination of the nature of the right the plaintiff is asserting.

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > Determination

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Attorneys > Fees

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN7 Amount in Controversy, Determination

Although plaintiffs' claims in class actions for statutory damages and attorneys' fees cannot be aggregated, the claims for injunctive relief can be aggregated and thus the amount-in-controversy requirement for diversity jurisdiction can be satisfied.

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > Determination

Civil Procedure > ... > Diversity Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > General Overview

HN8 Amount in Controversy, Determination

In determining the amount in controversy threshold for diversity jurisdiction is met, the court evaluates the cost of an injunction from the viewpoint of either the plaintiff or the defendant, considers the costs of compliance defendants will incur if the injunctive relief plaintiffs in class actions request were granted, does not exclude lost benefits from agreements plaintiffs allege are unlawful, concludes the injunctive relief may be aggregated, and concludes that defendants have satisfied their jurisdictional burden by showing that, more likely than not, the costs of complying with the requested injunction will exceed the jurisdictional threshold.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

90 F. Supp. 2d 819, *819LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20698, 1

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > Federal Questions

HN9 [blue icon] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Federal Questions

The inquiry whether federal question jurisdiction exists under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1331 is guided by the well-pleaded complaint rule, which states that federal jurisdiction exists only when a federal question is presented on the plaintiff's properly pleaded complaint. Since a defendant may remove a case only if the claim could have been brought in federal court, the question for removal jurisdiction must also be determined by reference to the well-pleaded complaint. Moreover, because federal preemption is ordinarily a defense and does not appear on the face of a well-pleaded complaint, it does not authorize removal to federal court. Removal and preemption are two distinct concepts, and the fact that plaintiffs' claim might ultimately prove to be preempted does not establish that it is removable to federal court.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

The Hatch-Waxman Act, 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(i\), does not provide a private right of action and thus cannot be the basis for removal jurisdiction under the complete preemption doctrine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Because the Noerr-Pennington doctrine constitutes a defense, it cannot form the basis for federal question jurisdiction.

Counsel: For LOUISIANA WHOLESALE DRUG COMPANY, INCORPORATED, SIXTEENTH STREET COMMUNITY HEALTH CENTER, plaintiffs: Bruce E. Gerstein, Garwin, Bronzaft, New York, NY.

For BENTOR, INCORPORATED, plaintiff: Stephen Lowey, Lowey, Dannenberg, White Plains, NY.

For ALBERT EIRICH, plaintiff: Elwood S. Simon, Elwood S. Simon Assoc., Birmingham, MI.

For AETNA U.S. HEALTHCARE, AETNA U.S. HEALTHCARE OF CALIFORNIA, INCORPORATED, plaintiffs: Joseph J. Tabacco, Berman, DeValerio, San Francisco, CA.

For DUANE READE, INCORPORATED, plaintiff: Richard B. Drubel, Boies & Schiller, Hanover, NH.

For HOECHST AG, HOECHST AKTIENGESELLSCHAFT, defendants: Joe Rebein, Shook, Hardy, Kansas City, MO.

For HOECHST MARION ROUSELL, INCORPORATED, defendant: Craig L. John, Dykema Gossett, Bloomfield Hills, MI. Joe Rebein, Shook, Hardy, Kansas City, MO.

For ANDRX PHARMACEUTICALS, INCORPORATED, ANDRX CORPORATION, defendants: Louis M. Solomon, Solomon, Zauderer, New York, NY.

For EUGENIA WYNNE SAMS, defendant: Michael D. Hausfeld, Cohen, Milstein, Washington, DC.

For PHILIP NEAL, movant: Elwood S. Simon, Elwood [2] S. Simon Assoc., Birmingham, MI. Stephen Lowey, Lowey Dannenberg, White Plains, NY. Angela K. Green, Niewald, Waldeck, Kansas City, MO. Richard W. Cohen, Lowey, Dannenberg, White Plains, NY.

Judges: Honorable Nancy G. Edmunds, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Nancy G. Edmunds

Opinion

[*822] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER DENYING IN PART AND GRANTING IN PART PLAINTIFFS' MOTIONS FOR REMAND

Plaintiffs in these consolidated cases brought class-action suits in state court against Defendants Hoechst Aktiengesellschaft, Hoechst Marion Roussel, Inc. ("Hoechst"), and Andrx Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Andrx") alleging that Defendants have violated various state antitrust and related laws, have conspired and entered into arrangements that have effectively prevented any lower-cost generic version of a prescription heart medication, known as Cardizem CD, from entering the United States marketplace, and have thus harmed Plaintiffs and the putative class members. Defendants removed the actions to federal court, and Plaintiffs' motions for remand are presently before this Court in the following nine matters:¹

Case No.	Case Name
99-cv-73314	Pearl Bence Lowy v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-73750	Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-73667	Jan Gabriel v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-73345	Larry S. Sizemore v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-73981	Albert Eirich v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-74377	Shirlean Glover v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-73845	Sunshine Pharmacy of NY, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-73713	D'Esposito v. Hoechst, et al.
99-cv-73871	Galloway, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al.

[3]

¹ The only remaining remand issue pending before the Court involves Lightner et al. v. Hoechst Aktiengesellschaft, et al., Middle District of Alabama Case No. CV-99-A-784-N. The remand in the Lightner case is not being considered at this time because the Court has not yet received the record from the transferor court, has not yet assigned the matter a case number, and Defendants have not yet had an opportunity to respond to the pending motion.

Each case is addressed individually. The discussion begins with the cases where Plaintiffs plainly allege unjust enrichment or admit that Plaintiff and the class are seeking restitution or disgorgement: Gabriel, Sunshine Pharmacy, Eirich and Glover. Next, the Court addresses the cases where the Plaintiffs complaint specifically pleads for less than the required jurisdictional threshold amount for diversity jurisdiction: Sizemore; and those where the Plaintiff's complaint does not clearly allege unjust enrichment or seek the equitable remedies of [4] disgorgement or restitution: Galloway, Inc. and D'Esposito. Here, the Court addresses Defendants' arguments that aggregation is proper with regard to Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive relief, statutory damages, and attorneys fees. Finally, the Court addresses those cases where there is no diversity of citizenship and removal, if proper, must be based on the federal question grounds Defendants assert: Lowy and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc.

Plaintiffs' motions for remand are DENIED in Gabriel, Sunshine Pharmacy, Eirich, Glover, Sizemore, Galloway, Inc., and D'Esposito because Plaintiffs' complaints present integrated claims which satisfy the amount-in-controversy requirement for diversity jurisdiction. Plaintiffs' motions for remand are GRANTED in Lowy, and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. because the Court finds no basis for federal question jurisdiction.

I. Standard of Review

"HN1[] Generally, a civil case brought in state court may be removed by a defendant to federal court if it could have been brought there originally." Gafford v. General Elec. Co., 997 F.2d 150, 155 \(6th Cir. 1993\). The burden of establishing federal jurisdiction [5] rests "clearly upon the defendants as the removing party." Alexander v. Electronic Data Systems Corp., 13 F.3d 940, 949 \(6th Cir. 1994\). The court is required to "look to the complaint as it existed at the time the petition for removal was filed to determine' the matter of federal jurisdiction raised by the defendant's notice of removal." Alexander, 13 F.3d at 949 (quoting Cromwell v. Equicor-Equitable HCA Corp., 944 F.2d 1272, 1277 \(6th Cir. 1991\)). The federal courts strictly construe removal petitions in a manner that resolves all doubts against removal. Her Majesty The Queen v. City of Detroit, 874 F.2d 332, 339 \(6th Cir. 1989\).

II. Analysis

A. Diversity Jurisdiction - Amount in Controversy Disputes

Defendants assert that removal is proper here because the parties are completely diverse, and the amount in controversy exceeds the $ 75,000 statutory minimum under 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Other than in Lowy and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc., which are discussed below under federal question jurisdiction, Plaintiffs do not dispute that the parties are completely diverse but [6] move for a remand asserting that Defendants cannot satisfy their burden of proving that the amount-in-controversy requirement under § 1332 is satisfied.

1. General Principles

a. Controlling Law. HN2[] In multidistrict litigation such as this, "the binding precedent, if any, from the Sixth Circuit should be examined and, if none exists, an evaluation of other circuit law should be undertaken in order to make a reasoned decision. This multidistrict litigation, ..., deserves to have but one interpretation of federal law." In re Air Crash at Detroit Metro. Airport, 791 F. Supp. 1204, 1213 \(E.D. Mich. 1992\). HN3[] Although state law will dictate the nature of the claim asserted and what amounts are actually at stake, federal law will determine whether the amounts exceed the statutory minimum necessary for diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332. See 15 Moore's Federal Practice, § 102.101 (Matthew Bender 3d ed).

b. Burden of Proof. HN4[] The defendant's burden of proof regarding the amount in controversy varies depending on whether and how much the plaintiff seeks in damages. See Gafford, 997 F.2d 150. If the [7] plaintiff's complaint specifies that she is seeking an unspecified amount in damages, then the "preponderance of the evidence" ('more likely than not') test will apply, and the Defendant must show, by a preponderance standard, that the plaintiffs allegations, if properly proved, will justify an award in excess of the jurisdictional minimum. Gafford, 997 F.2d at 158. If the plaintiffs complaint specifies that she is seeking an amount less than the amount required for diversity jurisdiction, then the defendant must show by a "substantial likelihood" or "reasonable probability" that the plaintiffs claims meet the amount-in-controversy requirement. See Gafford, 997 F.2d at 157-58; Crosby v. America Online, Inc., 967 F. Supp. 257, 261 n. 2 (N.D. Ohio 1997).²

[8] [*824] c. Aggregation of Class Action Claims

HN6[↑] Generally, to permit removal of a class action lawsuit under the diversity jurisdiction statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1332, a defendant must show that the jurisdictional amount is satisfied by each class member, and the class members' claims may not be aggregated. Zahn v. International Paper Co., 414 U.S. 291, 38 L. Ed. 2d 511, 94 S. Ct. 505 (1973). "The general rule is that while separate and distinct claims may not be aggregated, aggregation is permissible when 'two or more plaintiffs unite to enforce a single title or right in which they have a common and undivided interest.'" Sellers v. O'Connell, 701 F.2d 575, 579 (6th Cir. 1983) (quoting Snyder v. Harris, 394 U.S. 332, 335, 22 L. Ed. 2d 319, 89 S. Ct. 1053 (1969)). The Sixth Circuit has observed that "an identifying characteristic of a common and undivided interest is that if one plaintiff cannot or does not collect his share, the shares of the remaining plaintiffs are increased." Sellers, 701 F.2d at 579. Accordingly, a determination whether a plaintiffs claim may be aggregated or not requires [9] examination of the nature of the right the plaintiff is asserting.

d. Overview of the Parties Arguments

Defendants assert that removal is proper and diversity jurisdiction exists because the various Plaintiffs claims for unjust enrichment, injunctive relief, statutory damages, and attorneys' fees may be considered in the aggregate when determining whether the amount in controversy requirement is satisfied. Plaintiffs argue to the contrary.

² HN5[↑] If the Defendant shows that the relevant state law does not limit the plaintiffs damages to the amount pled, removal may still be an option. As observed by one commentator, "if plaintiffs cause of action and the relief actually sought clearly involve a controversy in excess of the required amount, removal is not defeated by a monetary prayer for less than the amount." 15 Moore's Federal Practice, § 102.107[3] at 102.186.1 (Matthew Bender 3d ed). "If the state court complaint alleges damages less than the jurisdictional amount, but state law does not limit the plaintiff to the amount pleaded, there is the specter of bad-faith pleading to avoid removal." Id.

The Court is aware of the split in the circuits as to the burden of proof a defendant must satisfy when a plaintiff pleads for less than the jurisdictional amount, but declines to follow the approach adopted by either the Eleventh or Fifth Circuits and instead follows the approach discussed in Gafford. The Eleventh Circuit has held that a plaintiffs allegations as to the jurisdictional amount are entitled to deference and a presumption of truth and therefore, to avoid a remand, the defendant must prove "to a legal certainty" that the plaintiffs claim must exceed the jurisdictional minimum. Burns v. Windsor Ins. Co., 31 F.3d 1092 (11th Cir. 1994).

The Fifth Circuit applies a different burden of proof standard. In De Aguilar v. Boeing Co., 47 F.3d 1404 (5th Cir. 1995), which involved the crash of a Mexican airliner, the plaintiffs' attorneys filed a state court complaint alleging that the amount in controversy was less than the jurisdictional minimum for diversity jurisdiction and attached an affidavit which stated that the plaintiffs had agreed on an irrevocable cap on the amount of damages. The Fifth Circuit, observing that Texas law does not limit a plaintiffs damages to the amount set forth in the complaint, determined that it was necessary to address the fact that these "rules have created the potential for abusive manipulation by plaintiffs, who may plead for damages well below the jurisdictional amount in state court with the knowledge that the claim is actually worth more, but also with the knowledge that they may be able to avoid federal jurisdiction by virtue of the pleading." Id. at 1410. To protect against such manipulation by plaintiffs, the Court set forth the following shifting burden of proof rule: "if a defendant can show that the amount in controversy actually exceeds the jurisdictional amount, the plaintiff must be able to show that, as a matter of law, it is certain that he will not be able to recover more than the damages for which he has prayed in the state court complaint." Id. at 1411. The defendant satisfies its initial burden under a preponderance standard. The burden then shifts to the plaintiff and becomes a "legal certainty" obligation; i.e., plaintiff can satisfy the burden by showing that state law prohibits recovery of a greater amount than that in the complaint, or, if there is no such law, plaintiffs can file "a binding stipulation or affidavit with their complaints." Id. at 1412.

2. Specific Amount-in-Controversy Disputes

a. Where Unjust Enrichment and/or Disgorgement Plainly Asserted: Gabriel, Sunshine Pharmacy, Eirich and Glover

In each of these four cases, there is no dispute that the parties are completely diverse for the purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 1332 and that the Defendants are not citizens of the forum state as required for removal jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(b\). Rather, the dispute centers on [*825] the question whether each of these actions involves an amount in controversy that exceeds the $ 75,000 jurisdictional minimum necessary for diversity jurisdiction. In each, Plaintiff did not specify the amount of damages sought. Accordingly, [10] Defendants need only show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the amount in controversy exceeds the jurisdictional amount. Gafford, 997 F.2d at 158.

Consistent with other consolidated cases in this multidistrict litigation, the parties likewise do not dispute "the general rule that each member of the plaintiff's class must independently satisfy the jurisdictional amount-in-controversy requirement to meet the elements of 28 U.S.C. § 1332." Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al., 48 F. Supp. 2d 37, 40 \(D. D.C. 1999\) (citing Zahn v. Intern'l Paper Co., 414 U.S. 291, 294-95, 94 S. Ct. 505, 38 L. Ed. 2d 511 \(1973\) and Snyder v. Harris, 394 U.S. 332, 336, 22 L. Ed. 2d 319, 89 S. Ct. 1053 \(1969\)). Rather, "both sides focus on what has been characterized as an exception to this general rule. As both Zahn and Snyder state, the value of the claims of the entire class can be considered collectively against the statutory threshold when the members of the class 'unite to enforce a single title or right in which they have a common and undivided interest.'" Aetna U.S. Healthcare, 48 F. Supp. 2d at 40-41 [11] (quoting Snyder, 394 U.S. at 335; Zahn, 414 U.S. at 294).

Thus, to allow aggregation, Plaintiffs must allege an integrated claim. The Sixth Circuit has observed that "an identifying characteristic of a common and undivided interest is that if one plaintiff cannot or does not collect his share, the shares of the remaining plaintiffs are increased." Sellers v. O'Connell, 701 F.2d 575, 579 \(6th Cir. 1983\).

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs here have asserted claims for unjust enrichment and demand that Defendants disgorge tens of millions of dollars to the class. They further argue that such claims are properly construed as "integrated claims" that satisfy the amount-in-controversy requirement. This Court agrees. The Gabriel, Sunshine Pharmacy, Eirich and Glover complaints allege claims for unjust enrichment or seek disgorgement of the tens of millions of dollars Defendant Hoechst allegedly paid to Andrx in connection with the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement, and thus assert "an integrated claim arising from a common right of the class that can be collectively used to satisfy the $ 75,000 amount-in-controversy requirement." Aetna U.S. Healthcare, 48 F. Supp. 2d at 39-40 \(D. D.C. 1999\). [12]

(1) Jan Gabriel v. Hoechst, Case No. 99-cv-73667

Paragraphs 103-108 of Plaintiff Gabriel's complaint allege a cause of action for unjust enrichment against all Defendants, allege that it would be inequitable for Defendants to be permitted to retain any of the proceeds of the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement, and demand Defendants' "disgorgement to the Class of all such monies acquired through defendants' illegal and inequitable conduct." Illinois law recognizes an independent cause of action based on a theory of unjust enrichment where a plaintiff alleges "that the defendant has unjustly retained a benefit to the plaintiff's detriment, and that defendant's retention of the benefit violates the fundamental principles of justice, equity, and good conscience." Peddinghaus v. Peddinghaus, 295 Ill. App. 3d 943, 948, 692 N.E.2d 1221, 1225, 230 Ill. Dec. 55 \(Ill. App. 1998\) (quoting HPI Health Care Services, Inc. v. Mt. Vernon Hospital, Inc., 131 Ill. 2d 145, 160, 545 N.E.2d 672, 137 Ill. Dec. 19 \(1989\)).

As observed by this Court and the United States District Court for the District of Columbia in Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al., 48 F. Supp. 2d at 41, [13] when examining a substantially similar unjust enrichment claim seeking disgorgement, the amount-in-controversy requirement is satisfied here because the claim asserted is an integrated one and "the disgorgement remedy would inure to [*826] the benefit of the class rather than vindicate any alleged violations of individual rights." Id. at 41. As in the District of Columbia case, Plaintiffs allegation of disgorgement against Andrx here "does not depend, rely upon, or arise out of the vindication of individual rights of the putative class members. In the words of the complaint, disgorgement is appropriate because 'it would be inequitable for Andrx to be permitted to retain any of the proceeds of the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement."³ Id. at 42 (quoting Plaintiffs Complaint P 138).³ This Court agrees with the Aetna Court's conclusion that, pursuant to the allegations in Plaintiffs complaint, (1) Plaintiff is seeking, on behalf of the putative class as a whole, to disgorge the tens of millions of dollars paid to Andrx in connection with the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement on the ground that it was unjustly enriched by such payment; (2) this claim is in addition to and separate [14] from individual claims for compensation for overpayments to Defendant Hoechst; (3) "the disgorgement remedy would inure to the benefit of the class rather than vindicate any alleged violations of individual rights," Id. at 41; and (4) "if any given plaintiff does not collect his, her, or its share, then it does not change the amount of profits of which defendants must be disgorged. Thus, according to the complaint, the plaintiff class has a collective right to a disgorgement in the amount of the unjust enrichment, and that amount does not depend upon the number of plaintiffs." Id. Plaintiff, as alleged in the complaint, seeks to compel Andrx to pay to the Class the full amount it has received in connection with the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement, regardless of the actual damages proved by each plaintiff and regardless of the number of plaintiffs in the purported class. The possible recovery on this claim is either all or nothing. It is therefore an integrated claim for an amount that easily satisfies the jurisdictional requirement for diversity jurisdiction. This Court made similar observations and reached the same result in Zucarrini v. Hoechst, et al., Case No. [15] 98-cv-74043.

(2) Sunshine Pharmacy

Plaintiffs complaint in this matter similarly alleges a claim of unjust enrichment and seeks disgorgement. Paragraphs 64-69 of the complaint allege a cause of action for unjust enrichment under New York common law against all Defendants, allege that it would be inequitable for Defendants to be permitted to retain any of the proceeds of the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement, and demand "that defendants disgorge all such monies acquired through defendants' illegal and inequitable conduct." Complaint P 69. As to this unjust enrichment cause of action, Plaintiff seeks the following relief: "that the jury find and that this Court adjudge and decree that all defendants have been unjustly enriched by their illegal deceptive, unfair and unconscionable acts of unfair competition and restraint of trade, and that such defendants be required to disgorge to plaintiff and the Class all amounts by which they have been unjustly [16] enriched, plus interest and costs". Complaint, Prayer for Relief, P B (emphasis added). Under New York law, a cause of action for unjust enrichment "requires the court to determine whether it is against equity and good conscience to permit defendant to retain what is sought to be recovered." Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. v. Chipetine, 221 A.D.2d 284, 286, 634 N.Y.S.2d 469, 471 (N.Y. App. Div. 1995) (internal quotes and citation omitted). Because the unjust enrichment claim in the Sunshine Pharmacy complaint seeks disgorgement and is substantially similar to the claims discussed above, this Court likewise concludes that it states an integrated claim that satisfies the amount-in-controversy requirement necessary for diversity jurisdiction.

(3) Albert Eirich

The amount-in-controversy requirement is also satisfied in Eirich. Plaintiff's complaint [827] here also alleges a similar claim for unjust enrichment and seeks disgorgement of the $ 40 million paid to Andrx pursuant to the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement. Paragraphs 101-106 of the complaint allege a cause of action for unjust enrichment against all Defendants, allege that it would be inequitable for [17] Defendants to be permitted to retain any of the proceeds of the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement, and demand that Defendants "disgorge all such monies acquired through Defendants' illegal and inequitable conduct." Complaint P 106. Under Wisconsin law, a cause of action "for recovery based upon unjust enrichment is grounded on the moral principle that one who has received a benefit has a duty to make restitution where retaining such a benefit would be unjust. Accordingly, unjust enrichment is based on equitable principles, with damages being measured by the benefit conferred upon the defendant, not the plaintiffs loss." Management Computer Services, Inc. v. Hawkins, Ash, Baptie & Co., 206 Wis. 2d 158, 188, 557 N.W.2d 67, 79-80 (1996) (internal quotes and citations omitted).

(4) Shirlean Glover

³The same language is found in the Gabriel Complaint P 106.

Plaintiffs complaint alleges a claim of unjust enrichment under North Carolina common law and seeks restitution from Defendants. Paragraphs 144-149 of the complaint, which allege the cause of action for unjust enrichment, assert that:

145. Plaintiff and Class members have conferred a benefit upon the Hoechst Defendants by virtue of, and the Hoechst Defendants have knowingly [18] accepted and benefitted from, the overcharges the Hoechst Defendants have been able to levy on plaintiff and Class members for Cardizem CD. The benefit conferred and accepted was not gratuitous in nature.

146. Defendant Andrx has benefitted from the unlawful acts alleged in this Complaint to the extent of the payments it has received and will continue to receive under the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement. Funds for such payments by Hoechst are derived in part from plaintiffs and Class members' overpayment of Cardizem CD. Plaintiff and Class members have conferred a benefit upon Defendant Andrx by virtue of, and Defendant Andrx has knowingly accepted and benefitted from, the overcharges the Hoechst Defendants have been able to levy on plaintiff and Class members for Cardizem CD in that such overpayment is the source and/or motivation for the payments made (and to be made) to Defendant Andrx under the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement. The benefit conferred and acceptable was not gratuitous in nature.

147. It is inequitable for Defendant Andrx to be permitted to retain any of the proceeds of the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement to the extent such funds were derived from plaintiff's and Class [19] members' overpayment for Cardizem CD.

148. It is inequitable for the Hoechst Defendants to be permitted to retain any portion of the overpayment for Cardizem CD by plaintiff or the Class members which is derived from their unfair and unconscionable methods, acts and trade practices, including but not limited to the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement and other acts alleged herein regarding efforts to prevent or limit the introduction of QD Diltiazem products and generic Cardizem CD.

149. Plaintiff and Class members are entitled to restitution from defendants to the extent of their overpayments.

Complaint PP 145-149 (emphasis added). Plaintiff also prays for relief that includes [*828] treble damages for statutory violations, punitive damages, declaratory and injunctive relief, and "restitution of the amounts overpaid by them for Cardizem CD during the Class Period". Complaint, Prayer for Relief P f.

Although Plaintiff alleges a claim for unjust enrichment under North Carolina law, she attempts to limit recovery under this claim to the amount each member of the class overpaid for their Cardizem CD prescription. Under North Carolina law, however, an unjust enrichment claim [20] is not limited to a plaintiffs losses. It is not designed to compensate a plaintiff for losses it suffered; rather it is designed to force a defendant to disgorge benefits that it would be unjust for it to keep. North Carolina law distinguishes between restitution recovery and damages recovery and observes that the damages award is designed to compensate a plaintiff for her loss whereas a restitution award is designed to deprive a defendant of benefits that in equity and good conscience the defendant ought not to keep. Plaintiffs unjust enrichment claim, and the determination whether it presents an integrated claim, must be evaluated with these principles in mind.

Under North Carolina law, "unjust enrichment" has been defined as:

a legal term characterizing the result or effect of a failure to make restitution of, or for, property or benefits received under such circumstances as to give rise to a legal or equitable obligation to account therefor. It is a general principle, underlying various legal doctrines and remedies, that one person should not be permitted unjustly to enrich himself [or herself] at the expense of another.

Adams v. H.L. Moore, 96 N.C. App. 359, 362, 385 S.E.2d 799, 801 \(N.C. App. 1989\) [21] (quoting Ivey v. Williams, 74 N.C. App. 532, 534, 328 S.E.2d 837, 838-39 \(1985\)).

The North Carolina courts have also observed that it is not necessary in all unjust enrichment cases "that the plaintiff must have actual damages." Booher v. Frue, 86 N.C. App. 390, 393, 358 S.E.2d 127, 129 \(N.C. App. 1987\), aff'd, 321 N.C. 590, 364 S.E.2d 141 \(1988\). This is because "restitution recovery and damages recovery are based on entirely different theories.... The main purpose of the damages award is some rough kind of compensation for the plaintiffs loss. This is not the case with every kind of money award, only with the damages award. In this respect, restitution stands in direct contrast to the damages action. The restitution claim, on the other hand, is not aimed at compensating the plaintiff, but at forcing the defendant to disgorge benefits that it would be unjust for him to keep. A plaintiff may receive a windfall in some cases, but this is acceptable in order to avoid any unjust enrichment on the defendant's part. The principle of restitution is to deprive the defendant of benefits that in equity and good conscience he ought not to [22] keep ... even though plaintiff may have suffered no demonstrable losses." Booher, 86 N.C. App. at 393-94, 358 S.E.2d at 129 (internal quotes and citations omitted).

Thus, if it is shown that, in equity and good conscience, Defendant Andrx should not keep the tens of millions of dollars it has been paid in connection with the Hoechst/Andrx Agreement, then under North Carolina law, it will be disgorged of that entire amount. Under equitable principles, it makes no sense to say that it would be unjust for a defendant to keep a sum of money and then limit the amount disgorged to only that amount claimed by individual plaintiffs. As observed by the Sixth Circuit in Sellers v. O'Connell, 701 F.2d 575, 579 \(6th Cir. 1983\), "an identifying characteristic of a common and undivided interest is that if one plaintiff cannot or does not collect his share, the shares of the remaining plaintiffs are increased." Here, the entire amount would be disgorged, and if any one class member does not collect his or her share, then the remaining plaintiffs' shares will be increased. Plaintiff cannot change the integrated nature of her unjust enrichment claim by [*829] limiting the [23] share she wishes to take from the disgorged amount. This Court finds that the unjust enrichment claim asserted in the Glover complaint is an integrated claim that satisfies the amount-in-controversy requirement.

b. Where Unjust Enrichment Alleged and Disgorgement/Restitution Sought but Plaintiff Expressly Disclaims Damages in Excess of $ 75,000: Sizemore

(1) Larry S. Sizemore.

The Sizemore action was originally filed in Tennessee state court and brought on behalf of a putative class of consumers in fifteen different jurisdictions including Tennessee, Michigan, California, Maine, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Mississippi, Alabama, New Mexico, South Dakota, North Carolina, Kansas, West Virginia, North Dakota, and the District of Columbia. See Sizemore Complaint P 1. It alleges violations of Tennessee's Trade Practices and Consumer Protections Acts as well as violations of similar antitrust laws in the 14 additional jurisdictions listed above. Id. Similar to the other complaints in this multidistrict litigation, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants' conduct has resulted in "unjust enrichment inuring to the benefit of the Hoechst Defendants, and unjust enrichment [24] to Andrx." Id. at P 65. Plaintiff prays for relief "awarding plaintiff and all members of the Class compensatory and other legal damages in an amount which may be proven at trial, together with interest thereon, including, but not limited to, treble damages pursuant to Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-18-109\(a\)\(3\)", costs, expenses, reasonable attorneys fees, and "such other and further relief to which plaintiff and the class are entitled." Id., Prayer for Relief PP 3-6. Plaintiff also seeks to avoid removal by pleading for less than the jurisdictional amount. Plaintiff's complaint expressly states that "the amount in controversy as to plaintiff individually and each class member individually does not exceed $ 74,999, including interest, and award of attorneys' fees and costs, disgorgement, restitution or treble damages" and Plaintiff expressly "disclaims for himself any recovery greater than $ 74,999 (including interest, any award of attorneys' fees and costs, disgorgement, restitution or treble damages)". Sizemore Complaint P 6 (emphasis added). In his Reply, Plaintiff acknowledges that he and the Class are seeking disgorgement. See Plf's Reply at 10-14.⁴

[25] Because Plaintiff has expressly claimed a damage amount that is less than the jurisdictional minimum, Defendants have a higher standard of proof. Defendants must show that there is a substantial likelihood or reasonable probability that the amount in controversy actually will exceed the jurisdictional threshold. See Gafford, 997 F.2d at 157-158. The burden is satisfied here.

⁴ The Court is mindful of Plaintiff's attempt to distance himself from these statements at the hearing on this matter. Despite that attempt, the Court finds that the Sizemore complaint does make allegations of unjust enrichment and does include "disgorgement" when discussing the items of recovery sought therein.

Plaintiff argues that Defendants cannot satisfy the amount-in-controversy requirement because: (1) Plaintiff and each class member plead an amount less than the $ 75,000 jurisdictional minimum; and (2) there is no common, integrated claim because each individual disgorgement claim is tied to the unlawful overcharges paid by each, "indirectly to the Hoechst defendants which Hoechst shared with Andrx pursuant to the Hoechst/Andrx Agreement." See Plaintiff's Reply at 10-14. This Court disagrees with Plaintiff's arguments.

First, Plaintiff's complaint does not so limit its unjust enrichment allegation and concomitant disgorgement demand as Plaintiff does in his Reply. Because Plaintiff's complaint can be construed as seeking disgorgement of the amounts paid to Andrx under the Hoechst/Andrx [26] Agreement based on the theory of unjust enrichment, [*830] this Court concludes that it asserts an integrated claim that satisfies the amount-in-controversy requirement under 28 U.S.C. § 1332.

When the nature of the unjust enrichment/disgorgement claim is examined under the law of the various jurisdictions under which Plaintiff brings this action, it becomes apparent that Plaintiff's request for disgorgement of the tens of millions of dollars paid pursuant to the Hoechst/Andrx Agreement constitutes an integrated claim in which Plaintiff and the putative class possess a common and undivided interest. To illustrate, under Wisconsin law, which is one of the jurisdictions included in this action, the courts recognize that "unjust enrichment is based on equitable principles, with damages being measured by the benefit conferred upon the defendant, not the plaintiff's loss."

Management Computer Services, 557 N.W.2d at 79-80. Likewise, under North Carolina law, which is also one of the jurisdictions included in this action, the courts distinguish between restitution recovery for unjust enrichment and compensatory damages because they are premised on entirely [27] different theories. "The main purpose of the damage award is some rough kind of compensation for the plaintiff's loss. This is not the case with every kind of money award, only with the damages award. ... The restitution claim, on the other hand, is not aimed at compensating the plaintiff, but at forcing the defendant to disgorge benefits that it would be unjust for him to keep. A plaintiff may receive a windfall in some cases, but this is acceptable in order to avoid any unjust enrichment on the defendant's part. The principle of restitution is to deprive the defendant of benefits that in equity and good conscience he ought not to keep ... even though plaintiff may have suffered no demonstrable losses." Booher v. Frue, 86 N.C. App. 390, 393-94, 358 S.E.2d 127, 129 \(N.C. App. 1987\) (internal quotes and citations omitted).

Finally, the Court observes that an argument, similar to Plaintiff's here, was recently rejected by the District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee in a matter that is now consolidated in this multidistrict litigation, Eugenia Wynne Sams v. Hoechst, et al., Tenn. Case No. 2:98-cv-348, Our Case No. 99-cv-73190. In Sams, the plaintiff's [28] complaint has a similar clause expressly limiting the damage amount per plaintiff to less than the $ 75,000 jurisdictional minimum. The court denied Plaintiff's motion for a remand observing that, although "there is nothing inherently improper in avoiding federal diversity jurisdiction by seeking a recovery below the jurisdictional amount", aggregation for jurisdictional purposes was permissible here because plaintiff's "claim for disgorgement, which obviously involves tens of millions of dollars, is the type of integrated claim which satisfies the jurisdictional amount in controversy despite the plaintiff's disclaimers." Sams, Tenn. Case No. 2:98-cv-348, 4/9/99 Order at 5. The Tennessee District Court also denied a motion for reconsideration of its April 9, 1999 order denying Plaintiff's motion for a remand. See Sams, Tenn. Case No. 2:98-cv-348, 5/20/99 Order. Plaintiff urged reconsideration arguing "that her disgorgement claim does not satisfy the amount in controversy requirements because each class member's right to a share of this money would be tied to his or her individual compensatory damages for drug overpayments." Id. at 3. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument, [29] observed that "the disgorgement of illegal profits sought in this case is over and above any fund for payment of compensatory or punitive damages", and concluded that, "in this Court's judgment, it must, of necessity, produce a common fund in which the individual class members would hold an undivided, group right or interest entirely unrelated to their right to recover damages." Id. at 4-5.

c. Where Unjust Enrichment and/or Disgorgement Claims Are Not Plainly Asserted: Galloway, Inc. and Joseph D'Esposito

In both Galloway, Inc. and D'Esposito, there is no express claim for unjust enrichment [*831] and/or disgorgement. In D'Esposito, the Plaintiff's Reply asserts that Plaintiff and the class are not alleging a claim for unjust enrichment and are not seeking disgorgement or restitution. In Galloway, Inc., Plaintiffs do not clarify their intent. Because these cases are closer than those addressed above, the Court explores Defendants' additional arguments in support of their claim that each action involves an amount in controversy in excess of $ 75,000 as required under 28 U.S.C. § 1332. These include arguments that Plaintiffs' claims [30] for statutory damages, statutory attorneys' fees, and injunctive relief can be aggregated so as to satisfy the amount-in-controversy requirement. The Court finds that, HN7[ although Plaintiffs' claims for statutory damages and attorneys' fees cannot be aggregated, the claims for injunctive relief can be aggregated and thus the amount-in-controversy requirement is satisfied in these two cases.

(1) Galloway, Inc.

The Galloway, Inc. Complaint, filed February 17, 1999 as a class action suit by pharmacies and other retail sellers, seeks redress "under the laws of the State of California, and all other jurisdictions that recognize the standing of indirect purchasers to recover damages based on combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade for defendants' illegal course of conduct in restraining competition". Complaint P 1 (emphasis added). Plaintiff's complaint alleges that Defendants violated Sections 16720 and 16726 of the California Business and Professions Code. There is no common law claim for unjust enrichment and no specific claim for equitable relief. There are, however, allegations that: (1) Plaintiff and the Class are victims of the Hoechst-Andrx collusive and unlawful [31] conduct (P 62); (2) the Hoechst-Andrx conduct "has resulted in overpayment by Plaintiffs and the Class of many millions of dollars for Cardizem CD, and a concomitant gain and unjust enrichment inuring to the benefit of Hoechst and Andrx" (P 63); (3) Plaintiffs and the Class are persons injured in their business or property by reason of Defendants' violations and are authorized to bring suit pursuant to Section 16750 of the California Business and Professions Code (P 76); and (4) Plaintiffs and the members of the Class have each been harmed and injured in their business and property by Defendants' actions, including among other things, loss of monies paid for the artificially inflated pharmaceuticals (P 78). Plaintiffs pray for damages, injunctive and declaratory relief. The damage claim is broad: "That damages be granted according to proof, and that Plaintiffs and the Class be awarded treble damages or statutory damages, where applicable, attorneys' fees, costs and disbursements." Complaint, Prayer for Relief P (d). There is also a claim for "further relief as the Court may deem just and proper under the circumstances." Id. at P (g).

Defendants assert that Plaintiff's complaint, [32] Paragraph 63, alleges Defendants were unjustly enriched by their illegal conduct, and thus, this Court should construe that allegation as a claim for unjust enrichment seeking disgorgement of the tens of millions of dollars paid to Andrx in connection with the Hoechst/Andrx Agreement. See Andrx Response at 8. Defendants also emphasize the fact that, even if disgorgement or a fluid recovery fund may not be available under § 16750 of the California Business and Professions Code, disgorgement may be available under one of the other jurisdictions under which Plaintiffs bring their claims.

(2) Joseph D'Esposito

The D'Esposito Complaint, filed February 22, 1999 in New York state court, alleges an antitrust class action brought by New York purchasers of Cardizem CD against Defendants for violations of New York General Business Law § 340 (the "Donnelly Act"). Specifically, the Complaint alleges two causes of action: violation of the Donnelly Act and an action for [*832] injunctive relief. Paragraphs 116-117 assert that "all Cardizem CD purchasers are the intended, foreseeable, and direct victims of [the described] collusive and unlawful conduct by the Hoechst Defendants and [33] Andrx, and as a result," they have sustained and will continue to sustain economic damages "attributable to this illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade" in the form of "overpayment of tens of millions of dollars for Cardizem CD." Paragraph 123 further alleges that Andrx has converted the alleged monopoly "into a $ 40 million per year windfall for which it is required to do nothing." In his Prayer for Relief, Plaintiff seeks, among other things, treble damages, an injunction "permanently enjoining defendants from continuing to engage in the unlawful conduct alleged", reasonable attorneys fees, and "such other relief" as the court may deem just and proper under the circumstances. D'Esposito Complaint, Prayer for Relief, PP c, d, f, and g.

Plaintiff does not allege a claim for unjust enrichment or seek disgorgement or restitution with respect to the tens of millions of dollars allegedly paid to Andrx by Hoechst in connection with the Hoechst/Andrx Agreement. Nonetheless, Defendants insist that Plaintiff's complaint alleges such a claim. Plaintiff's Reply, however, unequivocally states that the complaint contains no claim for unjust enrichment, nor any demand for disgorgement. See [\[34\]](#) Plf's Reply at 2 and 4.

Defendants also argue that removal is proper here because Plaintiffs' claims for statutory damages, attorneys' fees, and injunctive relief should be aggregated when considering whether the amount in controversy requirement is satisfied. The Court explores these arguments below.

d. Argument that Claims for Injunctive Relief, Statutory Damages, and Attorneys' Fees Can Be Aggregated: Galloway, Inc. and D'Esposito

While it is true that potential awards of injunctive relief, statutory damages, and attorneys' fees can be added to compensatory damages and considered in determining whether the amount-in-controversy requirement is met as to each Plaintiff, the pivotal question here is whether any of these may be aggregated instead of being measured pro rata. See Crosby, 967 F. Supp. at 261 (citing Clark v. Nat'l Travelers Life Ins. Co., 518 F.2d 1167, 1168 \(6th Cir. 1975\)) and Sellers v. O'Connell, 701 F.2d 575, 579 \(6th Cir. 1983\)). If they can be aggregated, then Defendants will easily satisfy their burden as to the amount-in-controversy requirement. This Court concludes that, although the claims for [\[35\]](#) statutory damages and attorneys' fees at issue here should not be aggregated, the claims for injunctive relief should be aggregated.

1. Statutory Damages.

In the Galloway, Inc. action, Plaintiffs seek statutory damages. They assert, however, that Defendants have not and cannot meet their burden and show the amount in controversy requirement is satisfied. Despite the "many millions of dollars" that "Plaintiffs and the Class overpaid for their prescription drugs," Plaintiffs argue, this amount "breaks down into only thousands per Class member. For example, if the overcharge during the Class Period amounted to $ 100,000,000, and there were 10,000 Class members throughout California and the relevant jurisdictions, then prorated damages would amount to $ 10,000 per Class member. Even trebling this amount and adding prorated attorneys' fees and injunctive relief would result in an average loss per Class member of about one-half the jurisdictional minimum." Plaintiff's Br. at 9. This Court agrees that Defendants have not met their burden here.

Defendants do not attempt to show that the each Class member's statutory damages will carry it over the required jurisdictional threshold [\[36\]](#) amount. They do not explain why this statutory damage claim [\[*833\]](#) should be construed as an "integrated" claim; i.e., one where two or more plaintiffs have united to enforce a common and undivided interest, as opposed to separate and distinct claims based on each Plaintiff and class members' overpayments. Rather, they merely assert that statutory damages of this sort are punitive in nature and thus should be aggregated like some courts have aggregated punitive damages. They rely for support on decisions from the Fifth and Eleventh Circuits which allowed the aggregation of punitive damages in a class action suit after examining the state law basis for the punitive damage claim and observing that such damages were not awarded to compensate plaintiffs for individual losses but rather were awarded to serve a broader societal purpose of punishing and deterring the defendant's unlawful conduct towards all of the class members. See Tapscott v. MS Dealer Serv. Corp., 77 F.3d 1353, 1358-59 \(11th Cir. 1996\) (applying Alabama law); Allen v. R & H Oil & Gas Co., 63 F.3d 1326, 1333 \(5th Cir. 1995\) (applying Mississippi law).⁵ This Court finds Defendants arguments for [\[37\]](#) aggregating the claimed statutory damages unconvincing.

⁵ This result and analysis has been rejected by the Second and Seventh Circuits. See Gilman v. BHC Securities, Inc., 104 F.3d 1418, 1428-31 \(2d Cir. 1997\) (where the Court observed that punitive damages may not be aggregated unless the plaintiffs underlying claims can be aggregated); In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599, 608-09 \(7th Cir. 1997\) (where the Court observed that "[a] plaintiffs award of punitive damages is not limited by awards made to previous plaintiffs complaining of the same act of the defendant.... Whether it is a good rule or a bad rule it shows that the right to punitive damages is a right of the individual plaintiff, rather than a collective entitlement of the victims of the defendant's misconduct").

Defendants fail to discuss the state law which creates Plaintiffs' right to statutory damages and whether that law is designed to serve a broad societal purpose (possibly [38] justifying aggregation) or whether it is designed to serve a narrower individual remedial purpose. The United States District Court for the Northern District of California recently observed that similar allegations in a related case, brought pursuant to the same California Business and Professional Code sections at issue here, required the Court to look to § 16750 for available remedies. See Betnor Inc. v. Hoechst, et al. and Aetna/US Health Care, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al., California Case Nos. 98-3609 and 98-4729, 4/14/99 Mem. and Order Denying Plaintiff's motion for remand, at 9-10. The Betnor Court further observed that § 16750 allows treble damages, injunctive relief, attorneys' fee and costs but there is no mention of punitive damages as an available remedy. Id. Accordingly, the Court found punitive damages were not available and thus there was no foundation for the defendants' aggregation argument. Id. Likewise, there is no foundation for Defendants' aggregation argument here.

2. Attorney Fees

In both the Galloway, Inc. and D'Esposito actions, Plaintiffs seek statutory attorneys' fees. Defendants argue that, because the attorneys' fees in [39] these complex class actions are likely to exceed $ 75,000, the amount-in-controversy requirement is satisfied. Defendants' argument assumes that the attorneys' fees may be aggregated. There is a split in the courts on the issue whether attorneys' fees may be aggregated. Some courts allow aggregation by applying the Eleventh Circuit's analysis in Tapscott which permits the aggregation of state law claims for punitive damages when there is a recognized broad societal purpose served by such an award. See Howard v. Globe Life Ins. Co., 973 F. Supp. 1412, 1419-20 (N.D. Fla. 1996); In re Abbott Labs., 51 F.3d 524, 526 (5th Cir. 1995) (where the Court observed that the Louisiana statutes at issue attributed all of a class's attorneys' fees to the named plaintiffs, thus allowing aggregation and satisfaction of the amount-in-controversy requirement for diversity jurisdiction). [*834] Others do not allow aggregation of attorneys' fees and hold instead that the fees must be pro rated across the plaintiff class because the underlying claims are separate and distinct. See Goldberg v. CPC Int'l, Inc., 678 F.2d 1365, 1367 (9th Cir. 1982); Lauchheimer v. Gulf Oil, 6 F. Supp. 2d 339, 345-346 (D. N.J. 1998) [40] (disagreeing with the rationale and result in Howard v. Globe Life Ins. Co., 973 F. Supp. 1412 (N.D. Fla. 1996); Crosby, 967 F. Supp. at 261-62.

This Court finds the better approach to be that which "decline[s] to treat prospective attorneys' fees in class actions as a bootstrap for establishing federal jurisdiction." Colon v. Rent-A-Center, Inc., 13 F. Supp. 2d 553, 562 (S.D. N.Y. 1998). "The better approach is to allocate to each Plaintiff, for jurisdictional purposes only, his or her individual and pro rata share as a class member of the total attorney's fees." Lauchheimer, 6 F. Supp. 2d at 346. Accordingly, to satisfy their burden here, Defendants must show, by a preponderance standard, that the attorneys' fees will exceed $ 75,000 per class member. Defendants have not met this burden.

3. Injunctive Relief

Both the Galloway, Inc. and D'Esposito complaints seek an injunction enjoining Defendants from enforcing the arrangements and conspiracies described in the complaints, including enforcement of the Hoechst/Andrx Agreement, and enjoining Defendants from continuing violations as alleged therein. [41] Defendant Andrx argues that, if an injunction is granted, it will cost it more than the $ 75,000 jurisdictional threshold amount to comply with it because they will no longer be able to reap the benefits (in the tens of millions of dollars) it would otherwise receive under the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement or under the license it was granted in that same agreement regarding the Hoechst patents.⁶ Plaintiffs argue that the Court cannot value the injunctive relief from Defendants' viewpoint, and even if it does, Defendants cannot consider the value of agreements Plaintiffs allege are unlawful, and Defendants cannot aggregate their costs of complying with Plaintiff's requested injunctive relief. This Court is not persuaded by Plaintiffs' arguments. HN8[↑] The Court rather follows the legal authority which evaluates the cost of an injunction from the viewpoint of either the plaintiff or the defendant, considers the costs of compliance Defendants will incur if the injunctive relief Plaintiffs request were granted, does not exclude lost benefits from agreements Plaintiffs allege are unlawful, concludes the injunctive relief may be aggregated, and concludes that Defendants have satisfied their jurisdictional [42] burden by showing that, more likely than not, the costs of complying with the requested injunction will exceed the jurisdictional threshold in the Galloway, Inc. and D'Esposito matters.

⁶ Although Defendant Hoechst joins Defendant Andrx's arguments regarding diversity jurisdiction, it does not state what costs it will incur if required to comply with the injunctive relief Plaintiffs seek.

There is a split in the federal courts concerning whose viewpoint-plaintiff's, defendant's, or either one's--the Court considers when placing a value on the requested injunction. See 14B Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure: Jurisdiction, § 3703 (West 3d ed. 1998); 15 James Wm. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 102-109 (Matthew Bender 3d ed.). This Court finds the "either viewpoint" to be the better approach. See In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 123 F.3d at 609-610. See also Crosby v. America Online, Inc., 967 F. Supp. 257, 264 (N.D. Ohio 1997); [43] Hambell v. Alphagraphics Franchising, Inc., 779 F. Supp. 910, 912 (E.D. Mich. 1991). This rule serves "the purpose of a jurisdictional amount in controversy requirement -- to keep trivial cases away from the federal court system." 14B Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure: Jurisdiction, § 3703 at 124-25 (West 3d ed. 1998). "Because the jurisdictional amount was enacted primarily to measure substantiality of the suit, the question of whether the controversy is substantial should not be answered unqualifiedly by looking only to the value of that which the plaintiff stands to gain or lose." 15 James Wm. Moore et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 102.109[4] at 102-200 (Matthew Bender 3d ed.). Under this "either viewpoint" approach, the Court considers the pecuniary result to either party and considers both "the value to the plaintiff of conducting his ... personal affairs free from the activity sought to be enjoined" and the costs of compliance the defendant will incur if the injunction is granted. 14B Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure: Jurisdiction, § 3708 at 239 (West 3d ed. 1998).

Moreover, when considering [44] the defendant's costs of compliance, the Court is not required to ignore pecuniary benefits that derive from conduct the plaintiff alleges is unlawful. The Court is not persuaded by Plaintiffs' arguments to the contrary, and Plaintiffs' reliance on dicta in In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 123 F.3d at 610 is misplaced. At this stage of the litigation, the Court is attempting to value the amount "in controversy." The legality of Defendants' conduct is at issue in this case, and thus, the amount in controversy, what is being fought over, includes the value of the Hoechst/Andrx Agreement and other transactions that Plaintiffs' allege are illegal. To adopt the approach Plaintiffs' urge would force the Court to simply assume Defendants' liability and ignore its potential costs of complying with the requested injunctive relief. Plaintiffs do not cite any decisions holding that this is an acceptable approach, and this Court finds its arguments unpersuasive.

When applying the "either viewpoint" approach, the Court must be careful to ensure that there is no circumvention of the nonaggregation rule expressed in Zahn and Snyder. Thus, in a class action case, "the [45] court must determine the nature of the right that would be protected by an injunction in order to set the appropriate value." Shelly v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., Inc., 873 F. Supp. 613, 616 (M.D. Ala. 1995) (citing Snow v. Ford Motor Co., 561 F.2d 787, 790 (9th Cir. 1977)). Where the claims of the plaintiff and the class members are separate and distinct, the defendant "is deemed to face multiple claims for injunctive relief, each of which must be separately evaluated." In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs, 123 F.3d at 610 (citing Snow v. Ford Motor Co., 561 F.2d 787, 790 (9th Cir. 1977)). "Each plaintiff's claim must be held separate from each other plaintiff's claim from both the plaintiff's and the defendant's standpoint." Id. On the other hand, where the plaintiff and the class members have a common and undivided interest in the injunctive relief, it is appropriate to aggregate the total cost of the requested injunctive relief from the defendant's viewpoint. See Earnest v. General Motors Corp., 923 F. Supp. 1469, 1472-73 (N.D. Ala. 1996) (where the court observed that where the equitable [46] relief sought "would benefit the putative class as a whole and not just any individual plaintiff", then "each plaintiff has a common interest in the injunctive and declaratory relief"); Hoffman v. Vulcan Materials Co., 19 F. Supp. 2d 475, 483 (M.D. N.C. 1998) (where the court considered the defendant's costs of complying with plaintiff's requested injunctive relief and observed that "because the defendant will sustain this loss even if only one plaintiff were to obtain the injunction, this is a case where plaintiffs have an undivided interest in the injunction").

Defendants have presented evidence that the cost of compliance with the requested injunction will exceed the amount in controversy threshold because it will lose the tens of millions of dollars it would otherwise receive under the Hoechst-Andrx Agreement and under the license it was granted in that same Agreement regarding [*836] the Hoechst patents. Defendants also argue that, because Plaintiffs and the class are seeking to enforce a single right in which they have a common and undivided interest, the entire value of its costs of compliance with the requested injunctive relief may be considered in determining the [47] amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes. This Court agrees. Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief that will benefit the class as a whole. Defendants' costs of compliance do not depend upon the size of the class or the identity of its members. Accordingly, it is based upon a common and undivided interest and constitutes an integrated claim; its entire value may be considered when determining whether the amount-in-controversy requirement for diversity jurisdiction is satisfied, and that requirement is satisfied here.

To summarize, this Court finds that Defendants have satisfied their burden of showing that this Court has diversity jurisdiction over the Galloway, Inc. and D'Esposito matters. This, however does not end the Court's inquiry. Defendants also assert that this Court has federal question jurisdiction over two Florida state court actions, Pearl Lowy and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. In the two Florida actions, removal jurisdiction is not available, unless federal question jurisdiction exists, because Defendant Andrx and Plaintiffs are both Florida citizens, thus precluding removal under 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b).

B. Federal Question [48] Jurisdiction: Galloway, Inc., D'Esposito, Pearl Lowy, and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc.

Defendants contend that federal question jurisdiction exists under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 because: (1) the Hatch-Waxman Act completely preempts state laws that would render illegal conduct authorized or mandated under that Act; and (2) application of the "artful pleading" exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule is appropriate where resolution of Plaintiffs' claims require resolution of substantial questions of federal law; i.e., interpretation of the Hatch-Waxman Act, a FTC Consent Order, patent law and the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine.

The same federal question arguments Defendants advance here have been repeatedly rejected by all but one of the federal district courts that has considered them. Compare Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al., Case No. 99-2034-KHV (D. Kan. June 9, 1999); Betnor, Inc. and Aetna/US Healthcare, Inc., et al. v. Hoechst, et al., Consolidated Cases C-98-3609 MHP and C-98-4729 MHP (N.D. Cal. April 14, 1999); Sams v. Hoechst, et al., Case No. 2:98-CV-348 (E.D. Tenn. April 7, 1999); Lightner, et al. v. Hoechst, et al. [49], Case No. 98-T-1057 (M.D.Ala. November 23, 1998) (Decisions rejecting Defendants' federal question jurisdiction arguments) with Aetna/U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al., Case No. 99-124 DWF/AJB (D. Minn. April 29, 1999) (sole decision accepting Defendants' federal question jurisdiction arguments). This Court finds persuasive the analysis and result reached by the majority of the federal district courts and likewise rejects Defendants' federal question jurisdiction arguments.

1. Guiding Principles

H9 The inquiry whether federal question jurisdiction exists under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 "is guided by the well-pleaded complaint rule, which states that 'federal jurisdiction exists only when a federal question is presented on the plaintiff's properly pleaded complaint.'" Strong v. Electronics Pacing Systems, Inc., 78 F.3d 256, 259 (6th Cir. 1996) (quoting Caterpillar Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 392, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318, 107 S. Ct. 2425 (1987)). "Since a defendant may remove a case only if the claim could have been brought in federal court, 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b), ..., the question for removal jurisdiction [50] must also be determined by reference to the 'well-pleaded complaint.'" Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804, 808, *837, 106 S. Ct. 3229, 92 L. Ed. 2d 650 (1986). Moreover, because federal preemption is ordinarily a defense and does not appear on the face of a well-pleaded complaint, it "does not authorize removal to federal court." Strong, 78 F.3d at 259 (quoting Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 63, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55, 107 S. Ct. 1542 (1986)). "'Removal and preemption are two distinct concepts,' and the fact that plaintiffs' claim might ultimately prove to be preempted does not establish that it is removable to federal court." Strong, 78 F.3d at 261 (quoting Warner v. Ford Motor Co., 46 F.3d 531, 535 \(6th Cir. 1995\)).

There are two exceptions to the well-pleaded complaint rule: (1) the "complete preemption" doctrine permits removal when the state law the complaint is based upon has been totally preempted by federal law; and (2) the "artful pleading" doctrine permits removal when the plaintiff has "artfully" pled her complaint to avoid stating the federal claim the complaint [\[51\]](#) is necessarily based upon. Defendants rely on both doctrines for removal.

2. Complete Preemption

Complete preemption is a recognized exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule. This doctrine "holds that when Congress intends the preemptive force of a statute to be so extraordinary that it completely preempts an area of state law, 'any claim purportedly based on that pre-empted state law is considered, from its inception, a federal claim, and therefore arises under federal law.'" Strong, 78 F.3d at 259 (quoting Caterpillar, 482 U.S. at 393). The Sixth Circuit has "reasoned that the congressional intent necessary to confer removal jurisdiction upon the federal district courts through complete preemption is expressed through the creation of a parallel federal cause of action that would 'convert' a state cause of action into the federal action for purposes of the well-pleaded complaint rule." Strong, 78 F.3d at 260. See also Schmeling v. NORDAM, 97 F.3d 1336 \(10th Cir. 1996\); Rains v. Criterion Systems, Inc., 80 F.3d 339 \(9th Cir. 1996\).

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' claims are wholly [\[52\]](#) preempted by the Hatch-Waxman amendments to the Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act, 21 U.S.C. § 355\(j\) ("The Hatch-Waxman Act"). This Court disagrees. To successfully remove Plaintiffs' state law claims under the complete preemption doctrine, Defendants must show that federal law creates a parallel federal cause of action that "converts" a state court action into a federal action. Strong, 78 F.3d at 260. Defendants cannot meet this burden. HN10 The Hatch-Waxman Act does not provide a private right of action, see 21 U.S.C. § 355\(j\), thus there can be no removal jurisdiction under the complete preemption doctrine. Accord, Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al., 54 F. Supp. 2d 1042, 1054-55; Betnor, Inc., 4/14/99 Mem. and Order at 4.

3. Substantial Federal Question

Defendants also contend that Plaintiffs' claims, as pleaded, require resolution of substantial questions of federal law because they require interpretation of (1) the Hatch-Waxman Act; (2) an FTC Consent Order; and (3) patent law including application of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. This Court disagrees. Defendants have not established [\[53\]](#) that a substantial disputed question of federal law is a necessary element of one of the Plaintiffs' well-pleaded claims. See Merrell Dow, 478 U.S. at 810-817.

In City of Chicago v. Intern'l College of Surgeons, 522 U.S. 156, 164, 118 S. Ct. 523, 529, 139 L. Ed. 2d 525 \(1997\), the Supreme Court observed that "'even though state law creates [a party's] causes of action, its case might still 'arise under' the laws of the United States if a well-pleaded complaint established that its right to relief under state law requires resolution of a substantial question of federal law.' Franchise Tax Bd. of Cal. v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust for Southern Cal., 1*8381 463 U.S. 1, 13, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420, 103 S. Ct. 2841 \(1983\) (case arises under federal law when 'federal law creates the cause of action or ... the plaintiff's right to relief necessarily depends on resolution of a substantial question of federal law'); Gully v. First Nat. Bank in Meridian, 299 U.S. 109, 112, 81 L. Ed. 70, 57 S. Ct. 96 \(1936\) (federal question exists when a 'right or immunity created by the Constitution or laws of the United States [is] [\[54\]](#) an element, and an essential one, of the plaintiffs cause of action')."

a. Hatch-Waxman Act

Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' claims in essence allege that Defendants have violated the Hatch-Waxman Act, require the Court to interpret the Act, and thus raise substantial questions of federal law. Similar to the Kansas and California district courts who considered these arguments, this Court finds them unpersuasive. Plaintiffs here are not alleging that Defendants violated the Hatch-Waxman Act. "While plaintiffs allege that defendants abused their rights under the Act, plaintiffs' claims also focus on defendants' conduct outside of the Act-the stipulation agreement. To show [the alleged state violation], plaintiffs do not need to show that defendants violated the Act; plaintiffs need only show that defendants acted to restrict competition. While this showing might include proof that defendants violated the Act, that fact alone is insufficient to confer federal question jurisdiction. [citation omitted]. Plaintiffs can just as easily show that defendants fully complied with the Act, yet unfairly restricted competition with their conduct outside of the Act. Defendants cite [55] no portion of the Act which addresses their stipulation agreement, and while consideration of the agreement will reference defendants' rights under the Act, it will not require an interpretation or application of the Act. No substantial issue of federal law arises under the Hatch-Waxman Act." Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1055. The mere fact that state law claims may require consideration of the Hatch-Waxman Act does not raise a sufficiently significant federal issue so as to confer federal question jurisdiction. See Merrell Dow, 478 U.S. at 813 (where the Court observed that "the mere presence of a federal issue in a state cause of action does not automatically confer federal-question jurisdiction").

Likewise, the Court is not persuaded by Defendants' arguments that the need for uniform interpretation of the Act creates a substantial federal question. The Supreme Court considered and rejected a similar argument in Merrell Dow, 478 U.S. at 815-16. This Court agrees with the observations of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California in the consolidated Betnor action. "The Merrell Dow [56] court found that petitioner's argument regarding uniformity of interpretation was actually an argument in favor of preemption, not an argument which supports the conclusion of federal question jurisdiction. See id. In addition, the court noted that the concern about uniformity of interpretation is considerably mitigated by the fact that even in the absence of original federal jurisdiction, the Supreme Court still retains power to review the decision of a federal issue in a state cause of action. See id. Accordingly, defendants' arguments in favor of federal jurisdiction on this grounds [sic] is meritless." Betnor, 4/19/99 Mem. and Order at 6.

b. The FTC Order

The D'Esposito, Lowy, and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. complaints allege, in support of their state law claims, that Defendant Hoechst violated an FTC Consent Order and that Defendant Hoechst also renounced a commitment it made in a December 18, 1995 letter to the FDA. Defendants argue here that Plaintiffs' entitlement to relief for any violation of the FTC Consent Order, even if brought on state law grounds, necessarily depends on this Court's construction and application of [*839] that federal consent [57] order. This same argument was recently rejected by the district courts in Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Hoechst, et al., 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1054 and in Betnor, 4/14/99 Mem. and Order at 6-7. This Court agrees with the analysis and result reached by the Aetna and Betnor courts. Plaintiffs' substantive claim is one that arises under state law; not federal law. "The allegations regarding the FTC order merely evidence plaintiffs' state law claims. As plaintiffs note, if [Hoechst] did not violate the FTC order, it could still violate state law. In a companion case, the Northern District of California has likewise found that allegations of unfair competition under state law seek to litigate [Hoechst]'s conduct, not the FTC order." Aetna, 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1054 (citing Betnor, Inc., Mem. and Order at 6-7). Plaintiffs' claims do not require interpretation of the FTC order. Moreover, as the Betnor court observed, the cases Defendants rely upon fail to support their position. See Sable v. General Motors Corp., 90 F.3d 171 \(6th Cir. 1996\); Eyak Native Village v. Exxon Corp., 25 F.3d 773, 777-79 \(9th Cir. 1994\), [58] cert. denied, 513 U.S. 943, 130 L. Ed. 2d 307, 115 S. Ct. 351 (1995); Dennison v. City of Los Angeles Dep't of Water and Power, 658 F.2d 694 \(9th Cir. 1981\)). Unlike the circumstances presented here, in each of the cited cases, "the plaintiffs' claim was a disguised attack on the propriety of a specific finding made by a federal court.... Here, plaintiffs do not seek to overturn the FTC Consent Order, nor do they challenge the appropriateness of the judgment. Rather, plaintiffs attack [Hoechst]'s conduct in carrying out the duties provided for in the consent decree." Betnor, 4/14/99 Mem. and Order at 6.

c. Patent Law

"Plaintiffs allege that [Hoechst] filed frivolous patent infringement actions for the sole purpose of delaying and preventing entry of competing products into the marketplace." Aetna, 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1052. Despite Defendant Hoechst's claim that Plaintiffs' complaints raise substantial questions regarding federal patent law, Plaintiffs do not question the validity of Hoechst's patents. Rather, as the Kansas District Court observed, "they allege that [Hoechst] violated [state] law by instigating [59] patent litigation for the sole purpose of delaying and preventing competition." Aetna, 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1053. Accordingly, "Plaintiffs' right to relief does not necessarily depend[] on resolution of a substantial question of federal law, and federal law is not a necessary element of one of the well-pleaded ... claims." Id. (internal quotes and citations omitted). "Plaintiffs' claims do not depend on whether the [Hoechst] patents are valid; they allege only that [Hoechst] had an impure heart when it filed suit. Moreover, regardless whether the [Hoechst] patent is valid, plaintiffs allege that defendants committed other acts" that would violate state law - "such as the stipulation agreement. Any discussion of patent law is merely tangential to plaintiffs' claim that [Hoechst] had an ill motive which resulted in [state law violations]. While federal law may be implicated in an examination of [Hoechst]'s motives, it is hardly a substantial or necessary part of plaintiffs' claim." Id. at 1053-54.

d. Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Defendants also argue that resolution of Plaintiffs' claims necessarily depend upon construction, interpretation [60] and application of federal law under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine because "the doctrine requires that Plaintiffs: (1) establish that defendants' submissions to the FDA were not immune from anti-trust liability; and (2) plead and prove that the underlying patent litigation is a sham." Betnor, 4/14/99 Mem. and Order at 7 (citing United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\); Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\)). "The Noerr-Pennington doctrine is based upon the protections of the First Amendment [*840] and exempts from antitrust liability any legitimate use of the political process by private individuals, even if their intent is to eliminate competition." Aetna, 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1052 (quoting Zimomra v. Alamo Rent-A-Car, Inc., 111 F.3d 1495, 1503 \(10th Cir. 1997\)). There is, however, a "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine which does not allow immunity protection to "sham" actions.

Plaintiffs here, similar to the Plaintiffs in the Aetna and Betnor cases, argue that the Noerr-Pennington [61] doctrine is a defense and thus cannot be used to establish federal question jurisdiction under the well-pleaded complaint rule. Defendants, on the other hand, argue that the "doctrine is not really an affirmative defense because plaintiffs bear the burden of proving that defendants' conduct falls within an exception to the doctrine." Aetna, 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1053. This Court agrees with the Aetna and Betnor Courts and likewise finds that, HN11 [↑] because "the Noerr-Pennington doctrine constitutes a defense, it cannot form the basis for federal question jurisdiction in this case." Aetna, 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1053. See also Betnor, 4/14/99 Mem. and Order at 7-8. As the Aetna Court observed, "while a defendant can attack plaintiffs' complaint for failing to allege an exception to the doctrine, [citation omitted], such an exception is not a necessary element of plaintiffs' claim. Rather, it is a response to an anticipated defense. The doctrine is a defense which, once asserted by defendants, plaintiffs must defeat." Aetna, 54 F. Supp. 2d at 1053 (quotations and cites omitted).

e. Summary

In light of the above, this Court finds [62] that federal question jurisdiction does not exist under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Accordingly, the Lowy,⁷ [63] and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc.⁸ cases were improperly removed and Plaintiffs' motions for remand are GRANTED.

⁷ Defendant Andrx also argues, in connection with the Lowy action, that diversity jurisdiction exists despite the fact that both it and Plaintiffs are citizens of Florida. Defendant bases its argument on the fact that Defendant Hoechst is a foreign entity and thus there is only a need for minimal diversity and not complete diversity under 28 U.S.C. § 1332\(a\)\(3\). This Court finds Defendant's argument unpersuasive.

Defendant's argument ignores the first part of § 1332\(a\)\(3\) which requires that parties be citizens of different states and that the foreign citizen be an "additional party." This point is illustrated In Transure, Inc. v. Marsh and McLennan, Inc., 766 F.2d 1297 \(9th Cir. 1985\). There, the Court observed that the "presence of an alien corporation on one side as an additional party does not defeat diversity jurisdiction." Id. at 1298 (emphasis added). Therefore, the Court reasoned, "the presence of alien corporations on both sides of the controversy did not defeat diversity jurisdiction." Id. at 1299. In other words, absent the alien parties, diversity jurisdiction existed. Construing the language of § 1332\(a\)\(3\), the Court determined that the addition of alien

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs' motions for remand are DENIED in Gabriel, Sunshine Pharmacy, Eirich, Glover, Sizemore, Galloway, Inc., and D'Esposito, and GRANTED in Lowy and Aetna U.S. Healthcare, Inc.

Nancy G. Edmunds

United States District Judge

Dated: OCT 14 1999

End of Document

corporations on both sides would not defeat the diversity jurisdiction that already existed. Defendant's reliance on Dresser Indus., Inc. v. Underwriters at Lloyd's of London, 106 F.3d 494 (3d Cir. 1997) is misplaced. Dresser refutes rather than supports Defendant's position. In Dresser, the Court held that "the language of section 1332(a)(3) grants federal jurisdiction when aliens are additional parties. The statute makes no distinction based upon which side of the controversy-plaintiff, defendant, or both-the aliens appear. Although the statute plainly requires that the dispute be between citizens of different states, it includes the phrase 'additional parties' without any such limitation." Id. at 497.

⁸ In light of this Court's decision that jurisdiction is lacking, there is no need to address the collateral estoppel argument that Plaintiff raises in connection with this case.

Hawaii v. Gannett Pac. Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

October 15, 1999, Decided ; October 15, 1999, Filed

CIV. NO. 99-687 ACK-BMK

Reporter

99 F. Supp. 2d 1241 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19069 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,696

STATE OF HAWAII, by EARL I. ANZAI, Attorney General, State of Hawaii, Plaintiff, v. GANNETT PACIFIC CORPORATION, ET AL., Defendants Disposition: [1] State's motion for a preliminary injunction GRANTED. Defendants enjoined to preserve the status quo, including without limitation.

Core Terms

Newspaper, Advertiser, Termination, editorial, Preservation, enjoined, preliminary injunction, reportorial, antitrust, injunctive relief, irreparable, publish, press, public interest, anti trust law, exemptions, monopolize, merits, Sherman Act, conspiracy, hardships, voices, thirteen years, announced, commerce, parties, annual, weighs, entertainment, subscribers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Temporary Restraining Orders

HN1 Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

The standards for granting a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction are identical.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN2 Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

The standard for granting a preliminary injunction is as follows: Traditionally the court considers (1) the likelihood of the moving party's success on the merits; (2) the possibility of irreparable injury to the moving party if relief is not granted; (3) the extent to which the balance of hardships favors the respective parties; and (4) in certain cases, whether the public interest will be advanced by granting the preliminary relief.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

For a preliminary injunction, the moving party must show either (1) a combination of probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable harm, or (2) the existence of serious questions going to the merits, the balance of hardships tipping sharply in its favor, and at least a fair chance of success on the merits.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN4 [down arrow] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

To merit a preliminary injunction, if the balance of harm tips decidedly toward the plaintiff, then the plaintiff need not show as robust a likelihood of success on the merits as when the balance tips less decidedly. At an irreducible minimum, however, the plaintiff must demonstrate a fair chance of success on the merits or questions serious enough to require litigation. Moreover, under any formulation of the test, the plaintiff must demonstrate a significant threat of irreparable injury.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Temporary Restraining Orders

HN5 [down arrow] Injunctions, Temporary Restraining Orders

The grant or denial of a temporary restraining order is reviewed for abuse of discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to establish a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must establish (1) the existence of an agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities; (2) an unreasonable restraint of competition; and (3) an effect on interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To establish a claim for attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must prove: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN9 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Counsel: For HAWAII, STATE OF, plaintiff: Rodney I. Kimura, Office of the Attorney General-State of Hawaii, Honolulu, HI.

For GANNETT PACIFIC CORPORATION, HAWAII NEWSPAPER AGENCY, defendants: John R. Lacy, Goodsill Anderson Quinn & Stifel, Honolulu, HI.

For GANNETT PACIFIC CORPORATION, defendant: Robert C. Bernius, John S. Smith, Gordon L. Lang, Nixon Hargrave Devans & Doyle, Washington, DC.

For LIBERTY NEWSPAPERS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, defendant: Anna H. Oshiro, Damon Key Bocken Leong & Kupchak, Honolulu, HI.

For LIBERTY NEWSPAPERS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, defendant: Alan L. Marx, King & Barlow, Nashville, TN.

For HAWAII NEWSPAPER AGENCY, defendant: Lisa W. Munger, Goodsill Anderson Quinn & Stifel, Honolulu, HI.

Judges: Alan C. Kay, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Alan C. Kay

Opinion

[*1243] ORDER GRANTING THE STATE'S MOTION FOR A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

SYNOPSIS

This case presents a difficult, close call on an issue of first impression under the Newspaper Preservation Act. It is not a typical free enterprise situation where the owner of a [2] business wishes to close it. Here, Defendants have availed themselves of exemptions under the Newspaper Preservation Act and have been allowed to operate under a Joint Operating Agreement ("JOA") which, but for the Newspaper Preservation Act, would have violated the antitrust laws from its inception. After carefully weighing the various factors, the Court will GRANT the State's motion for a preliminary injunction.

The Court finds that the State has demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits. In reaching this conclusion, the Court notes that it is not convinced by Defendants' arguments that the Newspaper Preservation Act exempts the Amendment and Termination Agreement ("Termination Agreement") from antitrust scrutiny. The stated purpose of the Act is to preserve newspapers, yet the current Termination Agreement would inevitably result in the closure of the Star-Bulletin [*1244] because, without the benefit of the JOA, it lacks the infrastructure necessary to continue publishing the newspaper. Thus, because Defendants' actions contravene the purpose of the Newspaper Preservation Act and, in effect, will lead to the closure of the Star-Bulletin, the Court finds that Defendants do not [3] enjoy the antitrust exemptions otherwise available to them under the Act.

The existing JOA pays Liberty a guaranteed annual return ranging from 12% in 1999 to 17% in 2012 on its initial $15 million investment in 1993. Under the Termination Agreement, GPC would pay Liberty what Liberty would otherwise receive as guaranteed payments over the next thirteen years -- but without Liberty having to publish the Star-Bulletin. In effect, GPC would be buying out the Star-Bulletin. This would result in the elimination of any competition to the Advertiser in this unique island community. In this regard, the Court notes that GPC's parent company (or subsidiary) first purchased the Star-Bulletin when it was the healthier of the two local newspapers operating under the JOA and then in 1993 purchased the Advertiser because at that point in time it apparently had a more promising future. It then sold the Star-Bulletin to Liberty after first stripping the Star-Bulletin of its operating equipment and assets. There evidently has been no effort by Liberty to sell the Star-Bulletin as a going concern.

