For Cove Point LNG Limited Partnership, Williams Cove Point LNG Company, LLC, Dominion Resources, Inc., The Wholesale Power Group, Virginia Electric and Power Company, Defendants: Bryan A. Fratkin, Howard Feller, J. Brent Justus, MCGUIRE WOODS, Richmond, VA.; Jeffrey M. Wakefield, FLAHERTY SENSABAUGH & BONASSO, Charleston, WV.

For Cove Point Energy Company, Defendant: Jason A. Levine, McDermott Will & Emery, Washington, DC.; Kevin M. Jones, McDermott Will & Emery, Chicago, IL.; Pamela C. Deem, Allen Guthrie Mchugh & Thomas, Charleston, WV.

For Potomac Electric Power Company, Pepco Energy Company, Defendants: Jason A. Levine, McDermott Will & Emery, Washington, DC.; Pamela C. Deem, Allen Guthrie Mchugh & Thomas, Charleston, WV.

For Dominion Cove Point LNG LP, Dominion Cove Point LNG Company, LLC, DEFENDANT CLASS A: Three Federally Regulated Interstate Natural Gas Pipeline Companies (Columbia Gas Transmission Corporation, Columbia Gulf Transmission Company, And The Cove Point LNG Limited Partnership) That Participated In An

373 F. Supp. 2d 631, *631L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11776, **2

Illegal Scheme, etc., Defendants: Bryan A. Fratkin, Howard Feller, J. Brent Justus, MCGUIRE WOODS, Richmond, VA.; Jeffrey M. [**3] Wakefield, Erica M. Baumgras, FLAHERTY SENSABAUGH & BONASSO, Charleston, WV.

For Base Petroleum, Inc., Defendant: Johnny M. Knisely, II, Thomas R. Goodwin, GOODWIN & GOODWIN, Charleston, WV.

For Howard Energy Company, Inc., Defendant: Brian McAleenan, Ruchi Verma, Thomas K. Cauley, SIDLEY AUSTIN BROWN & WOOD, Chicago, IL.; Mark A. Glover, Stephen B. Farmer, FARMER CLINE & ARNOLD, Charleston, WV.

For Dynegy, Inc., Defendant: Marc E. Williams, HUDDLESTON BOLEN, Huntington, WV.; Roxanne A. Polidora, Ryan Takemoto, PILLSBURY WINTHROP SHAW PITTMAN, San Francisco, CA.; Steven A. Dahm, PILLSBURY WINTHROP SHAW PITTMAN, Washington, DC.

For Semco Pipeline Company, Semco Energy Services, Inc., Defendants: Avery Gardiner, James W. Draughn, Jr., Michael S. Becker, Thomas M. McDermott, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, Washington, DC.; John H. Tinney, THE TINNEY LAW FIRM, Charleston, WV.

For El Paso Merchant Energy, L.P., Defendant: David K. Hendrickson, HENDRICKSON & LONG, Charleston, WV.; John L. Shoemaker, Murray J. Fogler, Paul J. Franzetti, MCDADE FOGLER MAINES, Houston, TX.

Judges: ROBERT C. CHAMBERS, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: ROBERT C. CHAMBERS

Opinion

---

[*633] AMENDED [**4] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

The Court entered an Order on June 14, 2005, on Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss. In that Order, for the reasons stated, the Court DENIED the motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim based on the filed rate doctrine and preemption, and GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART the motion to dismiss based on failure to state a claim under antitrust law and common law claims. Following the entry of that Order, Defendants moved for the Court to amend the Order to certify the issues of filed rate doctrine and preemption for interlocutory appeal. For reasons stated in the concluding paragraph below, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion [Docket No. 378] and amends this Order for the sole purpose of certifying the above issues for interlocutory appeal. The remainder of the Order remains unchanged.

I.

Standard of Review

HN1 [↑] Under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a defending party may move to dismiss if the pleading party has failed to state a claim for which relief may be granted. A Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the sufficiency of the pleading. It does not resolve factual disputes, the merits of a claim, [**5] or the applicability of defenses. Republican Party of North Carolina v. Martin, 980 F.2d 943, 952 (4th Cir. 1992). HN2 [↑] In considering the motion, the claims must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and all allegations accepted as true. Id. Dismissal is appropriate only when it appears beyond a doubt that no set of facts would entitle the pleader to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). HN3 [↑] The motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is viewed with disfavor and rarely granted. See Rogers v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 883 F.2d 324, 325 (4th Cir. 1989) (reaffirmed in Mylan Laboratories, Inc. v. Matkari, 7 F.3d 1130, 1134 n.4

(4th Cir. 1993). See generally 5A Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure §§ 1356 and 1357 (1990 and 1998 Supplement).

II.

Factual Allegations and Procedural Background

Plaintiffs are eight shippers, wholesalers, and marketers of natural gas who transported and stored gas on the interstate pipeline systems owned by Columbia Gas Transmission Corporation, Columbia Gulf [**6] Transmission Company and Dominion Cove Point LNG, LP (Pipeline Defendants). Defendants fall into one of two groups. One group of defendants is the Pipeline Defendants who own pipelines used in the transportation and storage of natural gas. The other defendants are eight natural gas shippers (Select Shippers) whom Plaintiffs contend were given preferential treatment by the Pipeline Defendants.

Plaintiffs allege that the Pipeline Defendants granted preferential access to storage capacity and transportation on the interstate pipeline system to the Select Shippers in exchange for "kickback" payments. Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that the Pipeline Defendants allowed the Select Shippers to store gas on the pipeline system during the warmer months for resale during the colder months. This allowed [*634] the Select Shippers to maintain a "positive imbalance" on the pipeline system. Along the same line, it is alleged that the Select Shippers were able to "borrow" gas off the pipeline system during the colder months for resale at a high price and replace the borrowed gas during the warmer months at a decreased price. Additionally, Plaintiffs contend that the Select Shippers were also [**7] given preferential transportation services. Plaintiffs argue that the scheme allowed Defendants to monopolize the market and resulted in "diminished revenues from sales to existing end-user customers, obstruction to business expansion, loss of market share and loss of asset value" to Plaintiffs. (Pls.' Resp. to Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss at 5).

In the fall of 1998, Columbia Gas Transmission Company (TCO) filed an application with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC or Commission), seeking approval to operate a parking and lending service (PAL). The PAL service would allow shippers to park gas on the pipeline system as well as borrow gas from the pipeline system on an interruptible basis, which means it would be subject to interruption by higher priority shipping contracts. FERC approved TCO's application. Plaintiffs allege that subsequent to FERC's approval of the PAL license, the Pipeline Defendants continued their preferential treatment of the Select Shippers. Plaintiffs contend that though the Select Shippers accessed the inexpensive PAL service, the Pipeline Defendants continued to interrupt the higher priority shipping and transportation agreements of the Plaintiffs in [**8] favor of the interruptible agreements of the Select Shippers.

In February of 1999, TCO, Columbia Gulf Transmission Corp., and Columbia Energy Service Corp., voluntarily informed FERC of the gas imbalances which had occurred which Plaintiffs allege were a result of their preferential treatment of the Select Shipper Defendants prior to the 1998 PAL license. FERC instituted an investigation and in October, 2000, issued an Order approving a Stipulation and Consent Agreement with TCO, Columbia Gulf, and Columbia Energy Services. As a result of the Stipulation and Consent agreement, TCO, Columbia Gulf, and Columbia Energy Services agreed to refund the Storage in Transit (SIT) penalties and disgorgement of profits to the industry participants whom FERC found had been illegally excluded from the scheme, which included many of the plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs originally filed this action alleging violations of state antitrust laws and breach of contract arising out of the conduct of Defendants in the Circuit Court of Kanawha County, West Virginia. Defendants properly removed the action to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1441 and 1446. Plaintiffs amended their complaint, [**9] after expedited discovery, to add the Select Shipper Defendants. Defendants subsequently filed the instant motion to dismiss Plaintiffs Second Amended Complaint (SAC) on numerous grounds. The Court will address each of Defendants arguments in turn.

III.

Analysis

A. Filed Rate Doctrine

Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' claims are barred by the filed rate doctrine. HN4 Under § 717b of the Natural Gas Act (NGA), transporters and sellers of natural gas in interstate commerce are regulated by FERC. 15 U.S.C. § 717b. They must file their rates with the Commission and may charge only such rates as found by the Commission to be "just and reasonable." 15 U.S.C. § 717c\(a\). They may not grant any "undue preference or advantage," [*635] and they must file any change in their rates or services with the Commission in advance. 15 U.S.C. §§ 717c\(b\) and 717c\(d\). The Commission retains broad regulatory authority to determine the reasonableness of any rates or services. At its core, the filed rate doctrine recognizes the authority extended to the Commission, and not the courts, to determine the reasonableness [**10] of the rates stated in the filing. Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856, 101 S. Ct. 2925 \(1981\). The doctrine achieves two goals - restricting the regulated entity to charging only the approved rates and preserving the regulatory agency's authority to determine those rates. Id. at 577-78. See also Bryan v. BellSouth Communications, Inc., 377 F.3d 424, 429 \(4th Cir. 2004\) ("The doctrine's purpose is two-fold: to prevent discrimination among consumers and to preserve the rate-making authority of federal agencies"). "It would undermine the congressional scheme of uniform rate regulation to allow a state court to award as damages a rate never filed with the Commission and thus never found to be reasonable within the meaning of the Act." Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co., 453 U.S. at 579.

HN5 The doctrine applies to more than just rates; it extends to the services, classifications, charges, and practices included in the rate filing. See 15 U.S.C. § 717c\(c\). Similar statutory provisions have been found to support applying the doctrine to services that may not literally [**11] involve rates or rate-setting. AT&T v. Central Office Telephone, Inc., 524 U.S. 214, 233, 141 L. Ed. 2d 222, 118 S. Ct. 1956 \(1998\) (Stevens, J., dissenting). "Rates, however, do not exist in isolation. They have meaning only when one knows the services to which they are attached. Any claim for excessive rates can be couched as a claim for inadequate services and vice versa." Id. at 223. "In addition to barring suits challenging filed rates and suits seeking to enforce rates that differ from the filed rates, the filed-rate doctrine also bars suits challenging services, billing, or other practices when such challenges, if successful, would have the effect of changing the filed tariff." Brown, III v. MCI Worldcom Network Services, Inc., 277 F.3d 1166, 1170 \(9th Cir. 2002\) (citing AT&T v. Central Office, 524 U.S. at 223).

The doctrine has been raised by Defendants as a bar to all of Plaintiffs' claims. They contend that Plaintiffs are attacking the tariff by claiming, first, that Defendants violated the tariff and its rate schedule and General Terms and Conditions, and, second, that the subsequently approved PAL [**12] service as part of the tariff violates Plaintiffs' rights. The Court has examined the SAC and the relief Plaintiffs seek in each cause of action. Plaintiffs claim that they suffered diminished revenues from sales to their customers, obstruction to business expansion, loss of market share, and loss of asset value.<sup>1</sup> The suit does not directly challenge the rates contained in Defendants' tariffs but asserts that Plaintiffs have been wrongfully injured by the Pipeline Defendants and the Select Shippers' conduct, for which Plaintiffs seek compensatory damages.

HN6 A claim for compensatory damages may implicate the filed rate doctrine where it has the effect of challenging the filed rate. [**13] Hill v. BellSouth Telecommunications, Inc., 364 F.3d 1308, 1315 \(11th Cir. 2004\). Even though the complaint may not explicitly challenge the filed rate, the Court must consider whether the damages sought would effectively provide Plaintiffs with a different rate than the one contained in the tariff. "We therefore cannot permit any claim to go forward that, if successful, would require an award of damages that would have the effect of imposing different rates upon different consumers.... Similarly, authorizing a court to award damages that would effectively impose a rate different from that dictated by the tariff would usurp the FCC's [Federal Communications Commission's] authority to determine what rate is reasonable." Bryan v. BellSouth, 377 F.3d at 429-430.

---

<sup>1</sup> See SAC at PP 112, 170, 181, 206, 221, 234, 243, 251, 268, 278, 288, 299, and 309 for Counts One through Three and Five through Thirteen. Count Four, alleging unjust enrichment, seeks damages in the amount of profits earned by Defendants on sales Plaintiffs lost as a result of the alleged scheme.

373 F. Supp. 2d 631, *636L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11776, **13

The distinguishing element in the cases where the doctrine has been applied is the damages sought. Where plaintiffs seek damages based on the rates, the claims have been prohibited. In Arkansas Louisiana Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856, 101 S. Ct. 2925 \(1981\), the Supreme Court framed the issue, stating, "the question before us is whether that [**14] doctrine forbids a state court to calculate damages in a breach-of-contract action based on an assumption that had a higher rate been filed, the Commission would have approved it." Id. at 573. The Court agreed with the characterization that plaintiff's damage claim was "nothing less than the award of a retroactive rate increase based on speculation about what the Commission might have done..." Id. at 578-79. Damages for the breach of contract action based on assumptions as to what rate the Commission might have approved infringed on the powers of the agency, violating the doctrine. Id.

The Fourth Circuit applied this rationale in Bryan. There, the Court approached the filed rate doctrine by first explaining its rationale - preventing discrimination and preserving agency rate-making. Bryan, 377 F.3d at 429. It noted that a damage award would effectively lower that plaintiff's rates below that of other customers or require a court to determine a rate different from the filed rate. [\[\*\*15\] Id. at 430.](#) Turning to the complaint before it, the Court concluded:

In our view, the Complaint--read in the light most favorable to the plaintiff--nowhere purports to seek any form of damages other than a refund of some portion of the FUSC [Federal Universal Service Charge]. And it pleads no facts that would put BellSouth on notice that Bryan intends to seek damages resulting from any injury other than paying the FUSC.

Id. at 431.

Bryan relied on Hill v. BellSouth, where the Eleventh Circuit decided a case arising in a similar context, the Federal Communications Act universal service fund charges. Finding the filed rate doctrine prohibited the state law claims, the Eleventh Circuit considered the two prongs of the doctrine: nondiscrimination and nonjusticiability, and how they applied to plaintiff's claims. Hill, 364 F.3d at 1316. The court in Hill found the plaintiff's claim would violate the nondiscrimination principle because a damage award for excessive charges would result in a discounted rate for the services. Id. Additionally, the nonjusticiability principle would be violated because the [\[\*\*16\]](#) court would be retroactively finding the filed rate unreasonable and ordering a new rate, an inappropriate judicial determination of the reasonableness of rates. Id. at 1317. Thus, claims seeking damages based on rates or services differing from those set in the tariff are barred by the doctrine.

The critical factor in the analysis is the nature of the damages sought by the plaintiff. With this understanding in mind, the Court comments on the cases cited by the [\[\*637\]](#) parties to illustrate its analysis. Defendants rely on several cases which arose from the California energy crisis. In Public Util. Dist. No. 1 v. Dynegy Power Mktg., Inc., 384 F.3d 756 \(2004\), the Ninth Circuit applied the filed rate doctrine to dismiss state law claims. The consumer utility sued wholesale electricity generators and traders for market manipulation which caused the utility to pay higher rates than a competitive market would require. Id. at 758. The court reasoned that the claims would ask the district court to determine "fair price" rates. [\[\*\*17\] Id. at 761.](#) Public Util. Dist. No 1 v. IDACORP Inc., 379 F.3d 641 \(9th Cir. 2004\), reached a similar result, emphasizing that plaintiff's claims would depend on the district court's determination of what a fair price or rate should have been. Id. at 648. Snohomish County treats the antitrust claims in the same fashion that Grays Harbor handled contract claims. Whether antitrust, unfair practices, or breach of contract actions, the nature of the damages sought governs the application of the doctrine.

Defendants also rely on Lockyer v. Dynegy, Inc., 375 F.3d 831 \(9th Cir. 2004\), but its application of the doctrine arises in a different context. The State of California challenged the terms of the tariff by seeking to impose civil penalties, which the court declared was the province of FERC and would effect an alteration of the rates set by FERC. Id. at 853. Defendants also submitted In re W. States Wholesale Natural Gas Antitrust Litig., 368 F. Supp. 2d 1110, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8906, No. MDL 1566, CVS031431PMP(PAL) (Base File) (D. Nev. Apr. 8, 2005) [**18] , which applied the doctrine but only after finding "to calculate the necessary damages.... this Court would be required to make a determination as to what a just or reasonable rate would have been...." Id. In these cases the damages claimed by the plaintiffs implicated the filed rates and, for that reason, were precluded.

The cases cited by Plaintiffs underscore the proper application of the doctrine. In Brown v. MCI Worldcom, the plaintiffs brought an action in federal court alleging the defendants over-charged. 277 F.3d at 1169. Finding federal subject matter jurisdiction because the Federal Communications Act (FCA) permitted customers claiming violations of a filed tariff to bring an action in district court, the court then addressed the filed rate doctrine. Id. at 1170. The plaintiff did not challenge the validity of the tariff. Id. at 1171. Rather, he claimed it was being violated, and the FCA explicitly allows such actions in federal court. Id. at 1171-1172.

HN7 [↑] The filed-rate doctrine precludes courts from deciding whether a tariff is reasonable, reserving the evaluation of tariffs to the FCC, but [**19] it does not preclude courts from interpreting the provisions of a tariff and enforcing that tariff. If the filed-rate doctrine were to bar a court from interpreting and enforcing the provisions of a tariff, that doctrine would render meaningless the provisions of the FCA allowing plaintiffs redress in federal court.

Id. The NGA contains a similar provision allowing suits in federal court. 15 U.S.C. § 717u. The plaintiff in Brown claimed he was improperly charged multiple fees not provided for in the tariff. Brown, 277 F.3d at 1172.

Brown seeks merely to enforce the tariff. He does not claim that he was promised something outside the tariff and then denied it, as in Central Office. Nor does he claim that MCI had some obligation to him beyond the obligations set out in the tariff. Nor does he argue that the $ 10 fee, if authorized by the tariff, is unreasonable.

Id. (citations omitted). The filed rate doctrine did not preclude the suit. Id. The [*638] claims in [**20] Brown are analogous to those of the Plaintiffs here.

Gulf States Utilities Co. v. Alabama Power Co., 824 F.2d 1465 \(5th Cir. 1987\), also illustrates the distinction based on the damages sought and their effect on the tariff rates. To the extent a claim is premised on a theory that different rates would have been charged but for a breach of contract or other duty, the claim is barred. Id. at 1471. But claims which do not seek relief based on a rate different from that filed would not be precluded. Id. at 1471-72.

For the purposes of discussion, Plaintiffs' claims may be divided chronologically: the "illegal 'parking and lending' service that TCO was not authorized to provide under its FERC-approved natural gas tariff" (SAC at P 76) and the later use of the tariff -approved PAL service in a manner that violates Plaintiffs' rights. (SAC at PP 113-126). They first complain that the Pipeline Defendants provided certain preferences to the Select Shippers that were illegal - a PAL service not included in the tariff. This illegal scheme, Plaintiffs aver, kept their natural gas out of the market and allowed the Select Shippers greater [**21] access to the market, causing Plaintiffs to lose customers.

Plaintiffs do not claim that they were entitled to participate in these preferences. Had that been their claim, the filed rate doctrine would likely preclude it. They could not claim entitlement to services not included in the tariff any more than they could seek damages based on the rates they paid for the services received. Instead, they claim the off-tariff preferences displaced them from the market, resulting in the loss of revenue and business value.

After disclosure of these practices, Pipeline Defendants obtained approval from FERC to offer the PAL service but implemented it so as to perpetuate the advantage given the Select Shippers and the injury to Plaintiffs' business. As to this post-approval PAL service, their claim is even clearer. They argue that the Pipeline Defendants and Select Shippers have created a scheme to effectively deprive Plaintiffs of access to the transportation and storage services under their service agreements with the pipelines. In this regard, Plaintiffs seek to enforce the tariff. Plaintiffs make no complaint about the rates or services other than being denied the benefits of their service [**22] agreements and being injured by the unfair advantage purportedly given to the Select Shippers. They do not seek damages based on the rates they were charged or some hypothetical rate to be determined by the court. The filed rate doctrine does not bar their claims.

B. Preemption

Defendants also argue that Plaintiffs' state law claims should be dismissed because the claims are governed exclusively by federal law and thus are preempted. In support of its assertion, Defendants rely on the NGA, stating that in enacting the NGA Congress gave exclusive control of the "transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce" to the federal government, specifically FERC. 15 U.S.C. § 717\(b\).

Generally, under the Supremacy Clause federal law can preempt state law in one of three ways. First, Congress can expressly state an intention to do so. College Loan Corp. v. SLM Corp., 396 F.3d 588, 596 \(4th Cir. 2005\). Secondly, "if Congress evidences an intent to occupy a given field, any state law falling within that field is preempted." [**23] Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 248, 78 L. Ed. 2d 443, 104 S. Ct. 615 \(1984\). Finally, if Congress has not expressed such an intent "state law is still preempted to the extent it [*639] actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Id. This third type of preemption is known as conflict preemption. See Lockyer, 375 F.3d at 849.

Defendants assert that in the present case Congress, through the NGA, has created a comprehensive scheme occupying the entire field of the sale and transportation of natural gas and thus the entire field is preempted. In support of its argument, Defendants again cite Lockyer, a case which arose out of the California energy crisis and dealt with the Federal Power Act (FPA). Id. The Lockyer court found that because the FPA delegates "exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce" to FERC and the plaintiff's claims would encroach on that authority, [**24] the plaintiff's claims were preempted. Id. at 849, 852 (quoting Transmission Agency of California v. Sierra Pacific Power Co., 295 F.3d 918, 928 (9th Cir. 2002)). The Lockyer court began its analysis by discussing the broader underpinnings of preemption, particularly field preemption, and looking to Supreme Court precedent in Silkwood v. Kerr McGee. Lockyer, 375 F.3d 831 at 849. In Silkwood, the Court considered whether the Atomic Energy Act completely occupied the field of nuclear energy. In its analysis, the Court carefully considered the legislative history of the controlling statute and found that though Congress intended to completely occupy the nuclear safety field, it did not intend to preempt all state tort actions. See Silkwood, 464 U.S. at 251-52. The Court further found that though the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has exclusive authority to regulate safety matters, "Congress assumed that state law remedies, in whatever form they might take, were available to those injured by nuclear incidents." [**25] Id. at 256. Therefore, the plaintiff's claims for state punitive damages were not preempted. Id.

The Supreme Court later discussed the test for field preemption as it relates to the natural gas industry in Schneidewind v. ANR Pipeline Co., 485 U.S. 293, 99 L. Ed. 2d 316, 108 S. Ct. 1145 \(1988\). Explaining the test for field preemption, the Supreme Court noted in Schneidewind that HN8 "every state statute that has some indirect effect on rates and facilities of natural gas companies is not pre-empted." 485 U.S. at 308. In determining whether the effect of a state claim results in preemption, the Supreme Court articulated the following test:

When a state regulation "affect[s] the ability of [FERC] to regulate comprehensively...the transportation and sale of natural gas, and to achieve the uniformity of regulation which was an objective of the Natural Gas Act" or presents the "prospect of interference with the federal regulatory power," then the state law may be preempted even though "collision between the state and federal regulation may not be an inevitable consequence."

[**26] Id. at 310 (quoting Northern Natural Gas Co. v. State Corp. Comm'n of Kansas, 372 U.S. 84, 91-92, 9 L. Ed. 2d 601, 83 S. Ct. 646 (1963)). Defendants have not demonstrated that the relief sought for Plaintiffs' claims would interfere with FERC's regulatory authority. The consent decree and settlement do not purport to remedy Plaintiffs' claims, and there has been no showing that FERC is engaged in any proceedings that conflict with Plaintiffs' lawsuit.

373 F. Supp. 2d 631, *639 (2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11776, **26

Additionally, in California v. Federal Power Commission, 369 U.S. 482, 8 L. Ed. 2d 54, 82 S. Ct. 901 (1962), the Supreme Court specifically addressed whether the [*640] Federal Power Commission (FPC) should proceed with a decision on a merger where there was a pending state court antitrust action challenging the validity of that very merger. Id. at 487. The Court, stating that HN9<sup>1</sup> "immunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied," found that the FPC did not have exclusive authority over antitrust violations. [**27] Id. at 485, 487. Defendants have not established that FERC has such exclusive authority now.

When Lockyer and the precedents on which it relies, Duke Energy Trading and Marketing, L.L.C. v. Davis, 267 F.3d 1042 (9th Cir. 2001) and TANC v. Sierra Pacific Power Co., 295 F.3d 918 (9th Cir. 2002), are examined in the context laid out above, they are distinguishable from the case currently before the Court. In Duke Energy the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals considered whether the California governor was able to commandeer an energy supplier's "contractual rights to deliver electricity to public utilities within the state." 267 F.3d at 1045. The court found that the California governor's actions "directly nullified" a portion of the FERC approved tariff which "constituted an impermissible intrusion into FERC's territory." Id. at 1057. Similarly in TANC, the Ninth Circuit found that because the damages TANC sought from its state tort and property claims depended on a finding regarding the validity of a specific system for the transportation of electricity which had been expressly approved by [*28] FERC, the state claims were preempted. 295 F.3d at 928. Only FERC has the authority to modify the operation of the system which it approved. Id. Whether a state claim is preempted by field preemption hinges on the effect that claim will have on the authority of FERC over the industry.

Plaintiffs point out that the court in Brown, as discussed supra, allowed plaintiff's state breach of contract claims to go forward despite that the terms of the contract were dictated by the tariff. 277 F.3d 1166. The court in Brown focused its analysis on the filed-rate doctrine rather than field preemption; however, this Court finds it interesting that field preemption was not even addressed. The court in Brown allowed state claims to go forward in a field that was comprehensively regulated and in which the regulatory authority, the FCC, had the power to hear claims similar to those brought by the plaintiff. It is instructive that field preemption was not found to be a bar.

Plaintiffs in the present case do not make any state claims which directly affect FERC's authority to "regulate comprehensively" nor do they present "the prospect of interference [**29] with the federal regulatory power." Schneidewind, 485 U.S. at 310. Instead, Plaintiffs simply seek damages for the business they contend they lost as a result of Defendants' actions. Taking all of Plaintiffs' allegations as true, the Court finds that Defendants did not provide a convincing argument that Plaintiffs' claims interfere with FERC's regulatory authority to support dismissal based on field preemption.

C. Anti-Trust and Common Law Claims

Defendants also challenge the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' antitrust claims, asserting that Plaintiffs do not, and cannot, state facts necessary to support the elements of these claims. The SAC includes ten antitrust claims, Counts Four through Thirteen, which allege state and federal antitrust law violations. First, Defendants' motion to dismiss argues that Plaintiffs alleged only FERC violations, which are inadequate to state antitrust violations and failed to allege an "injury to competition." Second, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs lack standing as to some of their [*641] claims. Last, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' horizontal conspiracy claims in Counts Eleven and Thirteen contain insufficient conclusory [**30] allegations.

Defendants attack the Plaintiffs reliance on violations of FERC regulations alleged throughout the SAC. Citing Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823, 124 S. Ct. 872 (2004), Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' "refusal to deal" claims cannot survive. In Trinko the Supreme Court noted that the 1996 Telecommunications Act imposed new duties requiring a regulated company to deal with its competition. Id. at 401. Generally, a refusal to cooperate with rivals is a matter of right, but there are limited exceptions. Id. at 408. Where that refusal to cooperate is predicated on anticompetitive goals, antitrust law may restrict the right. Id. In determining whether the exception applied in Trinko, the Court reviewed several factors considered in Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985) and Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973). HN10<sup>1</sup>

The "existence of a regulatory structure designed to deter and remedy anticompetitive [**31] harm" significantly reduces the need to apply traditional antitrust principles. Trinko, 540 U.S. at 412. The Court explained at some length the regulatory framework imposed by the FCC to provide competition access in that setting, in new wholesale market created by the regulatory scheme pursuant to an act "more ambitious than the antitrust laws... 'to eliminate the monopolies.'" Id. at 415 (quoting Verizon Communications Inc. v. FCC, 535 U.S. 467, 476, 152 L. Ed. 2d 701, 122 S. Ct. 1646 \(2002\)). Trinko reaffirms Otter Tail and Aspen Skiing, even though it acknowledged the limits of antitrust liability. Though FERC regulates the rates for transporting and selling natural gas in interstate commerce, Defendants have not demonstrated that this case involves the same level of regulatory overlay and unique market found in Trinko.

The Court finds Otter Tail more closely on point. There, the Supreme Court applied antitrust laws despite the authority of the Federal Power Commission. [**32] Otter Tail, 410 U.S. at 374-75. "Repeals of antitrust law by implication is disfavored." Id. at 372 (quoting United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350-51, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 \(1963\)). There, the regulatory scheme did not explicitly take into account antitrust considerations. The Court found Otter Tail's use of its monopoly power violated antitrust law. Id. at 377. Here, FERC's authority to remedy anti-competitive behavior is decidedly less than the regulatory authority in Trinko. FERC's order provided relief limited to disgorging the Pipeline Defendants' ill-gotten profits and a small rebate of SIT fees, neither of which purported to address any anticompetitive results of the scheme.

Further, the SAC joins the Pipeline Defendants and Select Shippers as actors in concert claiming an "illegal agreement" (SAC at PP 40-42) between them to violate antitrust laws and FERC regulations. Characterizing the Select Shippers as their competitors, Plaintiffs, nonselect shippers, contend that the scheme falls within the "concerted action" cases noted by Footnote 3 in Trinko as presenting [**33] "greater anticompetitive concerns." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 410. Trinko does not alter the applicability of traditional antitrust principles to the Defendants in this case.

Next, Defendants argue that the SAC fails to allege an "injury to competition." They contend that any antitrust claim [*642] must allege a restriction in the output of some good or service. In Defendants' view, Plaintiffs allege only a loss of market share due to the preferential treatment afforded the Select Shippers in return for the "kickback" payment made to the pipelines.

HN11 [↑] In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the Court must ascertain whether the complaint covers all of the elements that comprise the theory for relief. Estate Construction Co. v. Miller & Smith Holding Co., 14 F.3d 213 \(4th Cir. 1994\). HN12 [↑] "Injury to competition," is an essential element of every antitrust claim. An antitrust claim must assert that a defendant's conduct constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade, not merely an economic injury to the plaintiff. [**34] Continental Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 277 F.3d 499, 508 \(4th Cir. 2002\). Defendants argue that the SAC fails to allege injury to competition because Plaintiffs do not allege and cannot show that Defendants' conduct resulted in a reduction in output. Defendants posit that Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that the conduct alleged caused any reduction in natural gas flowing into the market. In fact, Defendants point out, the SAC alleges that the Pipeline Defendants increased their storage capacity to accommodate greater quantities of gas from the Select Shippers. A shift in the market shares between the nonselect and select shippers, alone, would support only a finding of injury to a competitor. Plaintiffs respond by disputing whether a reduction in output is the test for injury to competition, but also argue that the SAC sufficiently alleges an injury to competition anyway.

A fair reading of the SAC supports the denial of Defendants' motion. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' manipulation of the parking and lending service blocked the nonselect shippers from access to the pipelines. Excluding the nonselect shippers from the marketplace allowed the Select [**35] Shippers, acting in concert with the Pipelines, to take over the market and led to higher prices to retail customers. Plaintiffs assert that more than simply units of natural gas were blocked from the pipelines; their services and other attributes were also prevented from reaching their customers and others in the market. At this stage, the Court is reluctant to require more. Finding a restriction in output is a complex matter which requires a determination of the relevant market and a means of measuring output. See VII Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1503 (2003); XI Phillip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1901(d) (2005). Here,

... it is enough to note that "output" is not always a clear concept. Even when we define it readily, it is usually difficult to observe. Many alleged restraints are examined before they have had time to work their results. And the longer a restraint has been in effect, the greater is the impact of changes in supply, demand, and other market forces. We are often unable to disentangle the effects of challenged conduct. That is the reason we are so often forced to turn to surrogate for actual effects.

VII Phillip [**36] Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1503 (2003).

The Fourth Circuit applied the "rule of reason" test in Continental and Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193 (4th Cir. 2002), and each case is relied upon by the parties to support their divergent analyses. Assuming that test applies to Plaintiffs' claims, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiffs' SAC fails to state a claim.<sup>2</sup> The [*643] discussion in Continental does not support Defendants' argument that a reduction in overall output, as opposed to an increase in price, is necessary to prove injury to competition. In Continental the competing airlines at Dulles Airport disputed the effects of templates used to control carry-on baggage. 277 F.3d at 502. Applying the "rule of reason" analysis, the Fourth Circuit discussed that if the template program restricted Continental's passengers from bringing carry-on baggage to the gates then a reduction in output, and therefore a restraint on trade, would be established. Id. at 515. The Court did not require a showing that fewer passengers departed at Dulles or even that fewer passengers chose Continental. Id. [**37] The Court noted that "Continental unquestionably incurred costs" in its effort to provide, as an alternative, a means of bypassing the templates. Id. The Court did not elaborate in its discussion of a restraint in trade based on restraining output but went on to state, "if Continental cannot show any effect on price or output, then it has shown only that it incurred costs in hiring people to lift templates." Id.

The Court also finds the discussion in Dickson, although limited, to be of help. 309 F.3d 193 (4th Cir. 2002). In Dickson the Fourth Circuit stated that, "aiding the maintenance of a monopoly theoretically could harm competition by affecting price and/or output in various ways." Id. at 206 [**38]. The Court theorized that potential harm to consumers would occur if rivals were foreclosed from access to consumers, denying competitive choices and allowing higher prices by the monopolist. Id. Increased prices and decreased access to consumers for rivals in the market are exactly what Plaintiffs allege here. To the extent that the "rule of reason" test applies to Plaintiffs' claims, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiffs' SAC fails to state a claim.

Defendants next challenge Plaintiffs' standing to assert antitrust claims based on price fixing. In the SAC Plaintiffs allege that the Select Shipper Defendants, utilizing the advantages they obtained from their preferential deal with the Pipeline Defendants, fixed their prices at just below Plaintiffs' to maximize their profits and avoid detection. Plaintiffs do not allege predatory pricing. Citing Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990), Defendants assert that competitors do not have standing to raise price-fixing antitrust claims. HN13[] Competitors are not injured by mere price fixing whether the conspiracy sets maximum or minimum prices. [**39] Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., LTD., et al. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 584 n.8, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) ("Respondents therefore may not complain of conspiracies that, for example, set maximum price above market levels, or that set minimum prices at any level."); See also Atlantic Richfield Co., 495 U.S. at 336 (finding maximum price-fixing agreements illegal but not causing injury to competitors). Plaintiffs respond that their claims assert that Defendants' price-fixing was accompanied by exclusionary conduct. Even so, the alleged exclusionary conduct does not alter the requirements for standing to claim price fixing. To the extent Plaintiffs' antitrust claims rely on the allegation that Defendants set a price below Plaintiffs' prices, Plaintiffs lack standing as to that aspect of the claims. Insofar as any violation of antitrust laws is based on price-fixing, the Court GRANTS IN PART Defendants' motion to dismiss Counts Four, Five, Six, Nine, Ten, and Eleven.

The final objection to the SAC is that the state common law contractual counts fail to state a claim. Defendants argue that the breach of contract [**40] count fails to identify sufficiently any particular contract. [*644] However,

---

<sup>2</sup> Defendants suggested application of the rule of reason test in footnote 21 to their Joint Reply in Support of Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim, and Plaintiffs rely on Continental and Dickson, both of which applied the test.

Plaintiffs refer explicitly to the tariff's General Terms and Conditions and the service agreements between them and the Pipeline Defendants.

Defendants argue that West Virginia law does not recognize an independent cause of action for a breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing separate and apart from a breach of contract claim. Although this Court cannot find any cases in West Virginia directly on point with the present case, this Court held in Hoffmaster v. Guiffrida, 630 F. Supp. 1289 (S.D. W. Va. 1986), that "the law . . . implies a covenant of good faith and fair dealing in every contract for purposes of evaluating a party's performance of that contract." Id. at 1290. In other jurisdictions, this implied covenant is subsumed in the contract claim and cannot be pled as an independent cause of action. See, e.g., Estrin v. Natural Answers, Inc., 103 Fed. Appx. 702, 705, 2004 W.L. 1444956 at *3 (4th Cir. 2004) (unpublished) (finding the district court did not err in dismissing a counterclaim for a breach of good faith and fair dealing because [**41] a separate claim is not recognized under Maryland law); Harte-Hanks Direct Marketing/Baltimore, Inc. v. Varilease Tech. Fin. Group, Inc., 299 F. Supp.2d 505, 518 (D. Md. 2004) (finding that under Michigan law a plaintiff may state a claim for breach of contract based upon an implied duty of good faith and fair dealing, but a breach of that "duty does not supply an independent cause of action where the plaintiff already is alleging breach of contract"); Rotec Servs. v. Encompass Servs. 359 S.C. 467, 597 S.E.2d 881, 883-84 (S.C. App. 2004) (agreeing with courts interpreting Georgia, Illinois, New York, and South Dakota laws that state an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing does not provide an independent cause of action that is separate and apart from a breach of contract claim). Given these cases and this Court's prior consistent pronouncement in Hoffmaster, the Court agrees with Defendants and DISMISSES Plaintiffs' independent cause of action for good faith and fair dealing.

Defendants also question how Plaintiffs can allege breach of contract and unjust enrichment, a form of restitution arising from implied contracts and generally [**42] precluded by an express contract. Plaintiffs insist this count is in the alternative and permitted despite the inconsistency. At this stage, the Court has not determined whether the contracts identified by Plaintiffs apply to the course of dealing alleged by the SAC. Plaintiffs are entitled to claim alternative theories. Further, while no implied contract may conflict with terms of an express contract, where the express contract between parties does not apply or subsequent conduct not covered by the express contract may support an implied agreement, unjust enrichment may be asserted. 66 Am Jur 2d, Restitution and Implied Contracts, §§ 6 and 7 (1973).

IV.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated, the Court DENIES Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim based on the filed rate doctrine and field preemption; DENIES IN PART Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim under antitrust law; GRANTS IN PART Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim under antitrust law to the extent Plaintiffs' claim is based upon price-fixing; DENIES Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a [**43] claim under common law breach of contract and unjust enrichment; and GRANTS Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim as it relates to Plaintiffs' independent cause of action for good faith and fair dealing.

[*645] The Court finds that its ruling on the filed-rate doctrine and preemption in sections III(A) and III(B) respectively involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion. See 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). Furthermore, the Court finds that an immediate appeal on these issues may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. Id. As such, the Court CERTIFIES the issues found in sections III(A) and III(B) for immediate interlocutory appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). In addition, the Court does not stay the proceedings while such an appeal is pursued. The parties are to adhere to the Order and Notice previously entered in this case on August 11, 2005.

373 F. Supp. 2d 631, *645L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11776, **43

The Court DIRECTS the Clerk to send a copy of this written opinion and order to counsel of record and any unrepresented parties.

ENTER: September 15, 2005

ROBERT [**44] C. CHAMBERS

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

United States v. Gosselin World Wide Moving, N.V.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit

March 18, 2005, Argued ; June 14, 2005, Decided

No. 04-4752, No. 04-4876, No. 04-4877

Reporter

411 F.3d 502 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 11144 **; 2005-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,829; 2005 AMC 1594

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. GOSSELIN WORLD WIDE MOVING, N.V.; THE PASHA GROUP, Defendants-Appellees. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. GOSSELIN WORLDWIDE MOVING, N.V., Defendant-Appellant, and THE PASHA GROUP, Defendant. UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. THE PASHA GROUP, Defendant-Appellant, and GOSSELIN WORLD WIDE MOVING, N.V., Defendant.

Subsequent History: US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Gosselin World Wide Moving, N.V. v. United States, 547 U.S. 1002, 126 S. Ct. 1464, 164 L. Ed. 2d 246, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2035 (Mar. 6, 2006)

Prior History: [**1] Appeals from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Alexandria. (CR-03-551). Gerald Bruce Lee, District Judge.

United States v. Gosselin World Wide Moving N.V., 333 F. Supp. 2d 497, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17008 \(E.D. Va., Aug. 16, 2004\)

Disposition: AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED FOR RESENTENCING.

Core Terms

---

bids, immunity, exemption, transportation, forwarders, defendants', Shipping, channels, conspiracy to defraud, segment, inland, sentencing, district court, antitrust, freight, rates, anti trust law, provisions, tariff, firms, antitrust liability, conspiracy, antitrust immunity, plea agreement, effects, counts, me-too, ports, Sherman Act, anticompetitive

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 Remedies, Injunctions

Price fixing is contrary to the policy of competition underlying the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. A bid rigging agreement is price-fixing agreement of the simplest kind.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > McCarran-Ferguson Act Exemption

HN2 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

The United States Supreme Court has consistently construed the reach of exemptions from antitrust laws narrowly, even when Congress confers these exemptions in terms. This narrow construction of antitrust immunity is appropriate because the robust marketplace competition that antitrust laws protect is a fundamental national economic policy. This canon of construction has been employed by the Supreme Court to defeat antitrust exemptions claimed under provisions of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts, and the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN3 [down] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

Although the Shipping Act of 1984, 46 U.S.C.S. app. §§ 1701-1719, contains several new grants of antitrust immunity, 46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(a), nowhere in the 1984 Act did Congress indicate an intention to override the principle of narrow construction for antitrust exemptions that the United States Supreme Court had long applied to the Shipping Act 1916, 46 U.S.C.S. §§ 801-842. Moreover, this interpretive maxim has informed the construction of every other grant of antitrust immunity in federal legislation.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Common Carriers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN4 [down] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(a)(4) exempts from antitrust liability any agreement or activity concerning the foreign inland segment of through transportation that is part of transportation provided in a United States import or export trade.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 [+] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

For an agreement or activity to "concern the foreign inland segment" under 46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(a)(4), the parties undertaking the agreement or participating in the activity must have in mind some consequence for the foreign inland segment that they intend their behavior to have. "Concerning" is essentially a connecting term, the scope and meaning of which is defined in part by the terms it modifies.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

HN6 [+] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

See 46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(a)(2).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

International Trade Law > International Commerce & Trade > Exports & Imports > General Overview

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > US Federal Maritime Commission

HN7 [+] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, Rates & Tariffs

There is a tariff filing exemption that the Federal Maritime Commission granted to non-vessel operating common carriers for the transportation of used military household goods and personal effects by ocean transportation intermediaries. 46 C.F.R. § 520.13\(c\) \(2004\).

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

HN8 [+] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

The touchstone of 46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(a)(2)(B) is reasonableness.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > US Federal Maritime Commission

HN9[] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1715 conditions exemption from the disclosure requirements of the Shipping Act of 1984, 46 U.S.C.S. app. §§ 1701-1719, on a finding by the Federal Maritime Commission that the exemption will not result in substantial reduction in competition or be detrimental to commerce. Section 1715 is quite clear in laying out the criteria for the granting of filing exemptions: no substantial reduction in competition nor a detriment to commerce may result from the exemption.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

HN10[] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

The statutory phrase "with a reasonable basis to conclude" in 46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(a)(2) clearly contemplates an inquiry into the propriety of a party's belief in light of the circumstances. And one of those circumstances is surely the terms of the statute governing the exemption. Sophisticated businesses operating in a regulatory regime are properly charged with knowledge of the statute that applies to their behavior.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

HN11[] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(a)(2)(B) may well extend to behavior taken pursuant to an Federal Maritime Commission filing or exemption whose anti-competitive effects are inadvertent, tangential, or debatable. But when the anticompetitive effects are intentional, direct, and palpable, reading § 1706(a)(2)(B) to insulate these effects from liability would encourage gross violations of the antitrust laws and vitiate the canon of construction that aims to protect the operation of these laws.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

**HN12** [blue document icon] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

See 46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(c)(1).

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Shipping Act

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Export Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

**HN13** [blue document icon] Regulations & Statutes, Shipping Act

46 U.S.C.S. app. § 1706(c)(1) was designed for those instances in which a firm has been operating under a clearly established statutory immunity, whose validity or scope is subsequently called into doubt -- for instance because of a changed circumstance or because of some discrete action on the part of the firm that the statute prohibits. When such an event occurs and immunity is abrogated, § 1706(c)(1) ensures that subsequent legal or administrative proceedings will not impose liability for the period between the event and the proceedings. The provision thus affords the regulated firm some time to re-engage the administrative process or otherwise render itself compliant. Under this interpretation, § 1706(c)(1) promotes beneficial reliance by the regulated industry on the regulatory process, particularly when the event that abrogates immunity is the invalidation of a filed tariff or operating agreement. Congress was evidently mindful of this end in passing this provision. To qualify for relief under § 1706(c)(1), a party must therefore identify a discrete event that triggers the provision's grace period. Obviously, that event cannot be the denial of immunity under another statutory provision of the Shipping Act of 1984, 46 U.S.C.S. app. §§ 1701-1719.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > Appeals

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Role of Court > Factual Basis

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > Knowing & Intelligent Requirement

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > Voluntariness

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Guilty Pleas > Allocution & Colloquy > Waiver of Defenses

**HN14** [blue document icon] Entry of Pleas, Guilty Pleas

Challenges to the factual basis for an adjudication of guilt following a guilty plea are severely circumscribed. A voluntary and intelligent plea of guilty is an admission of all the elements of a formal criminal charge. A defendant who pleads guilty therefore admits all of the factual allegations made in the indictment and waives all non-jurisdictional defects, including the right to contest the factual merits of the charges. In these circumstances, courts have permitted a defendant to challenge an adjudication of guilt only with the argument that the facts underlying the charge are insufficient to constitute a crime.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Fraud Against the Government > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > False Claims > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Conspiracy to Defraud, Elements

Conspiracy to defraud under 18 U.S.C.S. § 371 requires three elements: (1) the existence of an agreement, (2) an overt act by one of the conspirators in furtherance of the objectives, and (3) an intent on the part of the conspirators to agree as well as to defraud the United States. The statute covers not only conspiracies intended to involve the loss of government funds but also any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing, obstructing, or defeating the lawful function of any department of government.

Counsel: ARGUED: John J. Powers, III, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Antitrust Division, Appellate Section, Washington, D.C., for the United States. Charles Frederick Rule, FRIED, FRANK, HARRIS, SHRIVER & JACOBSON, L.L.P., Washington, D.C., for Gosselin World Wide Moving, N.V., and The Pasha Group.

ON BRIEF: R. Hewitt Pate, Assistant Attorney General, Makan Delrahim, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, James M. Griffin, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Andrea Limmer, Hays Gorey, Jr., Mark W. Pletcher, Craig Y. Lee, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Antitrust Division, Appellate Section, Washington, D.C., for the United States. Henry W. Asbill, COZEN O'CONNOR, P.C., Washington, D.C.; C. Allen Foster, Joe R. Reeder, Shirley Z. Johnson, GREENBERG TRAURIG, L.L.P., Washington, D.C., for Gosselin World Wide Moving, N.V. Anthony V. Nanni, Tommy P. Beaudreau, Michael J. Anstett, Franklin M. Rubinstein, FRIED, FRANK, HARRIS, SHRIVER & JACOBSON, L.L.P., Washington, D.C. [\[\*\*2\]](#), for The Pasha Group.

Judges: Before WILKINSON and GREGORY, Circuit Judges, and Frederick P. STAMP, Jr., United States District Judge for the Northern District of West Virginia, sitting by designation. Judge Wilkinson wrote the opinion, in which Judge Gregory and Judge Stamp joined.

Opinion by: WILKINSON

Opinion

---

[*505] WILKINSON, Circuit Judge:

In this case, we must decide whether defendants are criminally liable for a scheme that raised the prices the Department of Defense ("DOD") pays to transport its personnel's belongings overseas. Defendants have admitted to orchestrating this scheme and have agreed to accept liability under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(2000\), and the federal anti-fraud statute, 18 U.S.C. § 371 \(2000\), if we determine that their behavior is not immune from such liability under the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C. app. §§ 1701-1719 (2000). We hold that the Shipping Act's immunity provisions afford defendants no relief from liability for the antitrust violation and conspiracy to defraud they have admitted. We therefore affirm in part, reverse in part, and remand for resentencing.

I.

A.

When personnel of the DOD are [**3] posted to foreign countries, the International Through Government Bill of Lading program ("ITGBL") covers their moving expenses. The DOD contracts with private companies to provide this service. Under the Military Traffic Management Command ("MTMC"), bids are solicited for "through rates" from U.S. freight forwarding companies. A through rate is a payment encompassing all the costs involved in a door-to-door move of DOD personnel's household effects. Bidding for through rates occurs biannually and involves a two step process.

In the first step, or "initial filing," the freight forwarders file a bid for a through rate associated with a particular route, or channel. The low bid that emerges is referred to as the "prime through rate." MTMC publishes this bid and the next four lowest bids. The company that bids the prime is entitled to a set percentage of DOD freight business for the associated channel.

In the second step, other freight forwarders resubmit bids in light of the published prime. The remaining companies may match, or "me-too," the prime for each channel, or they may bid a higher rate. When the channel at issue operates [*506] in a competitive market, a forwarder must typically [**4] me-too the prime to receive any DOD business. Forwarders that me-too the prime are also entitled to a set portion of DOD business for the cycle and channel for which they have bid.

Because through rates are unitary, they encompass many costs, all of which the U.S. forwarders become responsible for when the DOD accepts their bids. Some of these costs relate to moving services undertaken by other firms along the channel. Costs of this sort cover five general categories of service: the carriage of goods between inland U.S. cities and U.S. ports, services performed at U.S. ports, ocean transportation between U.S. and foreign ports, foreign port services, and carriage of goods between foreign ports and foreign inland points. U.S. freight forwarders must naturally consider these costs in setting their bids.

B.

Defendant Gosselin World Wide Moving N.V. ("Gosselin"), a Belgian corporation, and defendant The Pasha Group ("Pasha"), a U.S. corporation, operate in the channels between the United States and Germany. Both companies provide a package covering local German moving agent services, European port services, and ocean transport services in this market. Defendants thus deal with goods [**5] shipments between German points of origin (the households of DOD personnel abroad) and U.S. ports of destination. Gosselin and Pasha offer a "landed rate," which is a fee that covers all the moving costs involved in the portion of the channels they service.

Defendants also act as the exclusive agents of the International Shippers' Association ("ISA"), a conference of freight forwarders organized to negotiate collectively with shippers operating in the through transportation market. Many of the U.S. freight forwarders who place bids in the MTMC are also ISA members. In their capacity as ISA agents, Gosselin and Pasha negotiate service contracts with the Trans Atlantic American Flag Line Operators ("TAAFLO"), a group of U.S. ocean carriers. TAAFLO's service contract with the ISA entitles all ISA members to ocean transportation with TAAFLO member-carriers at a predetermined rate.

In late 2001, initial filings for the summer bidding cycle of 2002 occurred. A U.S. freight forwarder ("FF1") filed prime through rates with the MTMC for twenty-six of the channels between Germany and the U.S. FF1 did not use the landed rate offered by either defendant. Instead, by negotiating separately with [**6] each service provider at every step of the transportation chain, FF1 was able to undercut its competitors by three dollars per hundredweight in twelve of the twenty-six channels. In December 2001, DOD published FF1's prime bid along with the next four lowest. The remaining forwarders then had until January 12, 2002 to file their second round bids.

Gosselin was evidently alarmed that FF1 had been able to low-bid for the twelve channels without using Gosselin's landed rate. Later in December, Gosselin's managing director sent an email to another landed rate provider, inviting the provider to collude with Gosselin to prevent the me-too rates for the twelve routes at issue from converging to the prime. Such convergence was likely, as we have noted, because of the competitiveness of the US-Germany through transportation market. The Gosselin managing director observed that by "not taking [FF1's bid] into consideration we would increase the rate level with an average of [$ 3.63]." The director opined that "this is the only thing that in my mind can happen." In a reply email sent the same day, an executive [*507] at the competitor concurred, noting that "if we do not react and give [the] industry [*7] a clear message which rate to base the [me-too bids] on, then everyone will use the low rate and later expect us to reduce our rates so those carriers can work under their [me-too] rates."

Shortly after this exchange, Gosselin's managing director forwarded the emails to the president of Pasha. The Gosselin executive identified the twelve channels, which had "quite some money on the table," and inquired "what rate levels would you be able to support if those [channels] would go to second level?" The director stressed that "it is important we []move rather quickly now." Pasha later indicated its willingness to cooperate.

Defendants faced a difficult task in preventing the imminent me-too bids from converging to the prime. FF1 had already demonstrated that defendants' landed rates could be undercut by contracting separately for each transportation segment along the twelve channels. Defendants therefore had to take preemptive action to prevent the remaining U.S. forwarders from following FF1's lead. In early January 2002, the managing director of Gosselin agreed in writing to pay twelve of the largest German moving agents a specified fee. The German agents, for their part, agreed [*8] not to handle business from freight forwarders in those channels unless the forwarders submitted me-too bids at the second lowest level (the "second low") or above. Gosselin thereafter arranged a telefax to U.S. freight forwarders who were finalizing their second-step bids advising them of the German agents' undertaking.

Not content with securing their share of the DOD business designated for the second-round bids, defendants set about eliminating FF1's prime rate in the twelve channels at issue. First, they persuaded FF1 to cancel its bid with the MTMC if the remaining freight forwarders would file second-step bids at or above the second-low level. Defendants then secured such an agreement from the remaining forwarders. The forwarders overwhelmingly honored this agreement, and those who strayed below the second-low level were persuaded to withdraw their competitive bids.

As a result of defendants' scheme, a good deal of household goods shipments during the 2002 summer cycle in the twelve channels occurred at or above the second-low rate. The net financial effect of the conspiracy was to cause the DOD to pay substantially more than if FF1's original prime rate had prevailed.

C.

[**9] The Department of Justice ("DOJ") charged defendants by information with two counts. The first count alleged a conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(2000\). The second count alleged a conspiracy to defraud the United States under 18 U.S.C. § 371 \(2000\).

Defendants agreed to conditional pleas. They stipulated to a statement of facts on the basis of which they would move the district court to dismiss both counts. Gosselin and Pasha agreed in their pleas to make only one argument in support of their motion to dismiss: that the conduct set forth in the statement of facts "is immune from prosecution under the [Shipping Act]." If the district court found such immunity with respect to "both counts," and this finding was affirmed on appeal, defendants would not enter a guilty plea. If the district court denied the motion "as to either or both counts," however, the defendant would plead guilty on the "remaining counts" subject to withdrawal if a higher court overturned the district court's [*508] finding. The plea agreements also indicated that the parties would recommend to the district court specified sentences [*10] in the form of financial penalties depending on which count or counts survived the motion to dismiss.

Pursuant to the plea agreement, defendants filed a motion to dismiss on the basis of immunity under the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C. app. §§ 1701-1719 (2000). The district court granted the motion with respect to the antitrust count, but denied it with respect to the conspiracy to defraud count. Following the arrangement set out in the plea agreements, Gosselin and Pasha pled guilty to the conspiracy to defraud count. Again pursuant to the pleas, the district court imposed on each defendant a criminal fine of $ 4.6 million. After the final sentencing order, the DOJ appealed the dismissal on immunity grounds of the antitrust count and defendants cross-appealed their convictions on the conspiracy to defraud count. We now address these appeals, beginning with the issue of immunity under the Shipping Act.

II.

Defendants' collusion with each other and with other firms operating in the twelve transportation channels clearly violated the Sherman Act's injunction on combinations "in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(2000\). "It has been held too often [**11] to require elaboration []that HN1[↑] price fixing is contrary to the policy of competition underlying the Sherman Act . . ." United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 351 U.S. 305, 309, 100 L. Ed. 1209, 76 S. Ct. 937 \(1956\). Defendants' scheme, which prevented second round bids from converging to the prime and even erased FF1's first round prime bid, amounted to naked bid rigging. And "bid rigging agreement is price-fixing agreement of the simplest kind." United States v. Portsmouth Paving Co., 694 F.2d 312, 318 \(4th Cir. 1982\) (quoting United States v. Bensinger Co., 430 F.2d 584, 589 \(8th Cir. 1970\)); see also United States v. W.F. Brinkley & Son Constr. Co., Inc., 783 F.2d 1157, 1160 \(4th Cir. 1986\). Criminal antitrust liability is therefore appropriate unless defendants enjoy immunity under another federal law.

HN2[↑] The Supreme Court has consistently construed the reach of exemptions from antitrust laws narrowly, even when Congress confers these exemptions in terms. See, e.g., Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 126, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647, 102 S. Ct. 3002 \(1982\). This narrow construction of antitrust immunity is appropriate [**12] because the robust marketplace competition that antitrust laws protect is a "fundamental national economic policy." Carnation Co. v. Pac. Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 218, 383 U.S. 932, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709, 86 S. Ct. 781 \(1966\); see also Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 374, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\). This canon of construction has been employed by the Supreme Court to defeat antitrust exemptions claimed under provisions of the McCarran-Ferguson Act, see Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. Royal Drug Co., 440 U.S. 205, 231-32, 59 L. Ed. 2d 261, 99 S. Ct. 1067 \(1979\), the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts, see McKesson, 351 U.S. at 316, and the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act, see United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198-200, 84 L. Ed. 181, 60 S. Ct. 182 \(1939\).

Defendants here claim exemption from antitrust law under a federal maritime statute, the Shipping Act of 1984. 46 U.S.C. app. §§ 1701-1719 (2000). The Act modified an earlier law enacted in 1916. See 46 U.S.C. §§ 801-842 (1982). The earlier enactment grew out of the difficulties faced by the U.S. shipping industry in [*509] the early [**13] part of the last century. See generally Puerto Rico Ports Auth. v. FMC, 919 F.2d 799, 806-807 \(1st Cir. 1990\); Plaquemines Port, Harbor and Terminal Dist. v. FMC, 267 U.S. App. D.C. 238, 838 F.2d 536, 542-43 \(D.C. Cir. 1988\). To set U.S. shippers on an equal footing with foreign competitors, who operated outside of U.S. antitrust strictures, Congress granted them limited antitrust immunity. See 46 U.S.C. § 814 (1982).

This immunity, however, came with regulatory strings attached. See id. § 804. The regulatory requirements of the 1916 Act were designed to prevent the maritime transportation industry from monopolistically abusing its newly conferred grant of immunity. See Puerto Rico Ports, 919 F.2d at 807. Regulation under the 1916 Act thus preserved some anti-competitive prohibitions. See id.; A & E Pacific Constr. Co. v. Saipan Stevedore Co., Inc., 888 F.2d 68, 71 \(9th Cir. 1989\); Plaquemines, 838 F.2d at 542-43. Nonetheless, regulated firms did enjoy the real benefit of operating outside the full strictures of federal antitrust laws. Mindful of this benefit, the Supreme [**14] Court concluded that the traditional canon of narrow construction, applicable to antitrust exemptions generally, applied with full force to the coverage provisions of the 1916 Act. See FMC v. Seatrain Lines, Inc., 411 U.S. 726, 732-33, 36 L. Ed. 2d 620, 93 S. Ct. 1773 \(1973\); Carnation, 383 U.S. at 217-218.

The 1916 Act was supplemented by the Shipping Act of 1984, 46 U.S.C. app. §§ 1701-1719 (2000). HN3[↑] Although the 1984 Act contained several new grants of antitrust immunity, see id. § 1706(a), nowhere in the 1984 Act did Congress indicate an intention to override the principle of narrow construction for antitrust exemptions that the Supreme Court had long applied to the 1916 Act. Moreover, this interpretive maxim has informed the construction of every other grant of antitrust immunity in federal legislation. We therefore see no reason to depart from ordinary practice in construing the 1984 Act.

III.

With the foregoing interpretive framework in mind, we turn to defendants' particular contentions. The district court found antitrust immunity for Gosselin and Pasha in three distinct statutory provisions of the Shipping Act. We address immunity [**15] under each statutory provision separately.<sup>1</sup>

A.

Defendants first claim immunity under HN4 [46 U.S.C. app. § 1706(a)(4) (2000)], which exempts from antitrust liability "any agreement or activity concerning the foreign inland segment of through transportation that is part of transportation provided in a United States import or export trade."

Defendants argue that this provision covers all [**16] aspects of their scheme to rig bids. The first step in this scheme, defendants emphasize, was the agreement with twelve large German local agents to handle no business from forwarders who filed bids below the second low level. This agreement, defendants claim, is covered by § 1706(a)(4) because the German agents [*510] provide only services between German ports and destinations in the interior -- a "foreign inland segment." Gosselin and Pasha had market leverage only in this segment; in the other segment they service, ocean transportation, they were constrained by their status as ISA agents and the strict terms of the TAAFLO service contract. Thus the success of the remainder of their scheme depended entirely on the continued viability of the arrangement defendants had reached with the local German firms. For this reason, defendants conclude, the scheme in its entirety should be covered by the immunity provision of § 1706(a)(4).

We do not believe that the statutory exemption extends as far as Gosselin and Pasha would have it. To begin with, the statutory language does not support defendants' position. HN5 [For an agreement or activity to "[concern] the foreign inland segment," § 1706(a)(4) [**17] (emphasis added), as the statute requires, the parties undertaking the agreement or participating in the activity must have in mind some consequence for the foreign inland segment that they intend their behavior to have. Accord Hileman v. Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Props., Inc., 290 F.3d 516, 519 (3d Cir. 2002) ("Concerning . . . is essentially a connecting term, the scope and meaning of which is defined in part by the terms it modifies."); Commerford v. Thompson, 2 Flip. 611, 1 F. 417, 420 (C.C. Ky. 1880) (observing that the "broadest sense" of the term "concerning" is "pertaining to or relative to"). Because defendants' collusive effort was aimed at the entire through transportation market, rather than just the foreign inland segment, we do not think that they can claim exemption from antitrust liability under § 1706(a)(4). Indeed, defendants fixed bids for through transportation rates, i.e. door-to-door rates, not just rates for the "foreign inland segment" of the routes. § 1706(a)(4).

It is true that defendants' original agreement with the German local agents may have had the relationship to a "foreign inland segment" that the statute requires. [**18] Id. Indeed, United States v. Tucor Int'l, Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1172 (N.D. Cal. 1998), aff'd, 189 F.3d 834 \(9th Cir. 1999\), the case upon which Gosselin and Pasha chiefly rely, awarded immunity under the Shipping Act. In Tucor, several Philippine firms, operating in a through transportation market "packed, picked up, and trucked household shipments [of U.S. military personnel] from Subic Naval Base and Clark Air Force Base . . . to a Philippine seaport." 189 F.3d at 836. The firms were indicted under the Sherman Act for conspiring amongst each other "to suppress competition by fixing prices." Tucor, 35 F. Supp. 2d at 1175. Defendants pled guilty, but the district court later dismissed the indictments on the basis of immunity under § 1706(a)(4). The Ninth Circuit affirmed, finding that § 1706(a)(4)'s reference to a "foreign inland segment," "unambiguously exempts the activities of [defendants]," Tucor, 189 F.3d at 836, occurring as they did between points "entirely within a foreign country." Id. at 835.

There is an argument to be made that the agreement defendants made with [**19] the local German firms fits under the immunity announced in Tucor. And if defendants' scheme had ended there, we would have to decide whether the agreement did so qualify and whether Tucor should be adopted in this circuit. But the scheme did not stop there. Rather, Gosselin and Pasha took additional steps to perfect their bid-rigging plan. And we are not persuaded that these additional steps "[concerned] the foreign inland segment," in the manner the statute requires. § 1706(a)(4).

<sup>1</sup> Defendants note that when parties enter into a conditional plea agreement designed to permit defendants to challenge the prosecution theory on a particular basis, any ambiguities in the stipulated facts must be resolved in defendants' favor and the government may not rely in its prosecution on facts beyond those stipulated. See United States v. Harvey, 791 F.2d 294, 300 (4th Cir. 1986). Accordingly, in resolving the contentions that defendants press on appeal, we take care not to rely on allegations that were not admitted in the plea agreements and the incorporated statement of facts.

[*511] Gosselin and Pasha's contacts with FF1, for instance, related not to foreign inland services, but to defendants' desire that FF1 withdraw the prime through rate bid it had filed with MTMC. Similarly, the agreement defendants secured from other U.S. freight forwarders to file bids at or above the second low level had little to do with the German inland segment of the through services these forwarders offered. Rather, the agreement was a precommitment mechanism to ensure that none of the freight forwarders defected from the anticompetitive cartel that defendants were assembling. When some of these forwarders later broke ranks, defendants instituted measures to reign them in. But these measures [*20] were designed only to secure withdrawal of the competitive through rate bids the forwarders had filed in the second round, not to have consequences for the foreign inland segment.

In short, none of the additional steps Gosselin and Pasha took beyond their agreement with the German local agents had intended effects for any aspect of the German inland part of the through transportation market. It is unclear, therefore, how these steps "[concerned]" this foreign inland segment, as they must for immunity to attach under § 1706(a)(4).

Moreover, a broad immunity of the sort that Gosselin and Pasha seek would threaten to excise antitrust liability from the through transportation market completely. If § 1706(a)(4) exempted from anti-trust all stages of a conspiracy that involves in some manner a foreign inland segment, then any firm operating in any segment of any through transportation channel need only execute an agreement with a local moving agent to shield itself from the antitrust laws entirely. It does not take much to imagine how sophisticated transportation firms, intent on reaping larger gains, might abuse the immunity of such a rule. The incentives for opportunistic associations [*21] with companies operating in foreign inland segments would simply be too great. And without the constraint of anticipated antitrust liability, the prices charged by companies in the through transportation market would escalate. Further, the agreements and activity for which defendants seek immunity here were not regulated by the FMC. Lack of regulatory oversight might only exacerbate the upward pressure on prices for through transportation engendered by the absence of antitrust liability.

The upshot of defendants' interpretation of § 1706(a)(4) would therefore be a through transportation market beset with collusive and artificially inflated bids, detrimental to consumers and non-cooperating competitors alike. The government, as a repeat purchaser, would stand to lose much, and the extra money it would have to pay would come from the fisc and thus taxpayers.

It is unlikely that Congress intended such dismaying effects, but if there is any doubt over whether § 1706(a)(4) affords defendants relief, it is settled by the maxim that exceptions to the antitrust laws should be construed narrowly. See Seatrain, 411 U.S. at 732-33. The Supreme Court has relied on this principle [*22] to render agreements subject to the antitrust laws rather than the lesser anticompetitive protections of FMC regulation. See id. Here defendants seek exemption from legal enforcement by the DOJ for agreements that have not been regulated by the FMC. We hold for reasons earlier expressed that § 1706(a)(4) does not immunize defendants' scheme to raise through rate bids in the twelve channels at issue.

B.

Defendants next claim immunity under § 1706(a)(2). That section exempts from antitrust laws

HN6 [↑] [*512] any activity or agreement within the scope of this chapter . . . undertaken or entered into with a reasonable basis to conclude that (A) it is pursuant to an agreement on file with the [FMC] and in effect when the activity took place, or (B) it is exempted by the FMC under § 1715 from any filing or publication requirement of this chapter.

Defendants do not claim that their "activity or agreements" were undertaken "pursuant to an agreement on file with the" FMC. Rather, they point to HN7 a tariff filing exemption that the FMC granted to non-vessel operating common carriers, like defendants, for the "transportation of used military household goods and personal effects by [\[\*\*23\]](#) ocean transportation intermediaries." 46 C.F.R. § 520.13\(c\) \(2004\). Gosselin and Pasha argue that they reasonably believed their collusive "activities and agreements" to be exempt from the filing requirements of the Shipping Act under this regulation, and thus beyond the antitrust laws under § 1706(a)(2)(B).

HN8 The touchstone of § 1706(a)(2)(B) is reasonableness. Yet the terms of the exemption on which defendants rely, and other features of the regulatory framework in which defendants operate, demonstrate that their reliance was, if anything, unreasonable.

To begin with, the exemption facially covers only "tariffs," see 46 C.F.R. § 520.1\(a\) \(2004\), not the kind of agreements and activities involved in defendants' bid rigging scheme. Yet a distinction between tariffs on the one hand and operating agreements on the other pervades the Shipping Act. Compare § 1703(a) (cataloguing the "agreements by or among ocean common carriers" to which the "chapter applies," including agreements to "discuss, fix, or regulate transportation rates"), with § 1707 (describing "tariffs" that "each common carrier and conference shall keep open [\[\*\*24\]](#) to public inspection"). This statutory distinction makes implausible defendants' claim that they understood the reference to tariffs in the exemption to cover the collusive agreements they secured during the course of their scheme.<sup>2</sup>

[\[\*\*25\]](#) The terms of § 1715, the Shipping Act provision mentioned in § 1706(a)(2)(B) which governs the FMC's exemption procedures, further erodes Gosselin and Pasha's claim of immunity under § 1706(a)(2)(B). HN9 Section 1715 conditions exemption from the disclosure requirements of the Act on a finding by the FMC "that the exemption will not result in substantial reduction in competition or be detrimental to commerce." The FMC was thus required to make such a finding before passing the tariff filing dispensation on which defendants claim to have relied.

Section 1715 is quite clear in laying out the criteria for the granting of filing exemptions: [\[\*513\]](#) no "substantial reduction in competition" nor a "[detriment] to commerce" may result from the exemption. The agreements that defendants secured during their bid rigging scheme, however, accomplished just those ends: indeed, it was precisely by a "reduction in competition" that Gosselin and Pasha succeeded in inflating bids above the prime level, and this result was clearly "[detrimental] to commerce." The incongruence between the conditions that § 1715 sets forth and the effects of defendants' bid-rigging scheme erodes defendants' claim that [\[\*\*26\]](#) they reasonably understood the tariff filing exemption to permit such activity.

Pasha and Gosselin complain that the ex ante judgment of the FMC under § 1715 should not apply ex post to our interpretation of the reasonableness standard under § 1706(a)(2)(B). But HN10 the statutory phrase "with a reasonable basis to conclude," § 1706 (a)(2), clearly contemplates an inquiry into the propriety of a party's belief in light of the circumstances. And one of those circumstances is surely the terms of the statute governing the exemption. As sophisticated businesses operating in a regulatory regime, defendants are properly charged with knowledge of the statute that applies to their behavior. Accord Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1548 \(9th Cir. 1989\) (citing Kansas Power & Light v. Burlington N. R.R. Co., 544 F. Supp. 1336, 1347 \(D. Kan. 1982\)) (indicating that "specialized knowledge" including of "statutory . . . law" may properly be presumed of parties according to their "experience"). Thus aware of the criteria set forth in § 1715, Gosselin and

---

<sup>2</sup>Indeed, it would appear that the reach of the immunity in § 1706(a)(2)(B) is not as broad as defendants assume. Gosselin and Pasha focus on the tariff disclosure dispensation they received, but the statutory provision clearly requires a reasonable belief in an exemption from "any filing or publication requirement of" the Shipping Act. § 1706(a)(2)(B) (emphasis added). Section 1706(a)(2)(B) thus refers not only to § 1707 -- the tariff disclosure provision -- but also § 1704, which governs disclosure of "agreements." And § 1704(a), by its terms, extends to agreements that "control, regulate, or prevent competition in international ocean transportation." § 1703(a)(6). The agreements secured during the course of defendants' scheme would qualify under this definition, making them subject to a "filing or publication requirement of" the Act under § 1706(a)(2)(B). But if this is so, defendants' would hardly have a "reasonable basis to conclude that" their "activity or agreements" were exempt from "any" disclosure provision of the statute, as they must to be immunized under § 1706(a)(2)(B).

Pasha can hardly claim a "reasonable basis to conclude that" their behavior [**27] was covered by the tariff filing exemption. § 1706(a)(2). An exemption conditioned upon no "substantial reduction in competition" simply should not be read to sanction, in any manner, behavior intended to accomplish just such a reduction. § 1715.

Moreover, defendants' position flies once again in the face of the maxim that exceptions to antitrust liability should be narrowly construed. Gosselin and Pasha's claim that the scope of the tariff filing exemption somehow applies to the stark anticompetitive agreements here is simply not persuasive. HN11[↑] Section 1706(a)(2)(B) may well extend to behavior taken pursuant to an FMC filing or exemption whose anti-competitive effects are inadvertent, tangential, or debatable. But when, as here, the anticompetitive effects are intentional, direct, and palpable, reading § 1706(a)(2)(B) to insulate these effects from liability would encourage gross violations of the antitrust laws and vitiate the canon of construction that aims to protect the operation of these laws.

For the foregoing reasons, we do not believe that Congress intended § 1706(a)(2)(B) to confer immunity on the kind of conduct for which defendants are being prosecuted. We therefore [**28] find that defendants' scheme to rig bids is not exempt from antitrust under § 1706(a)(2)(B).

C.

The final part of the Shipping Act under which defendants claim immunity is § 1706(c)(1). This provision states that HN12[↑] "any determination by an agency or court that results in the denial or removal of the immunity to the antitrust laws set forth in [§ 1706(a)] shall not remove or alter the antitrust immunity for the period before the determination." Defendants contend that an adverse decision on one of the two other statutory immunities they seek -- § 1706(a)(4) and § 1706(a)(2)(B) -- constitutes a "denial or removal," and that § 1706(c)(1) thus requires that any penalty be imposed only prospectively.

[*514] HN13[↑] Section 1706(c)(1) was designed for those instances in which a firm has been operating under a clearly established statutory immunity, whose validity or scope is subsequently called into doubt -- for instance because of a changed circumstance or because of some discrete action on the part of the firm that the statute prohibits. See, e.g., § 1709 (listing a variety of prohibited actions for firms operating under filed tariffs or agreements). When such an event occurs and immunity [**29] is abrogated, § 1706(c)(1) ensures that subsequent legal or administrative proceedings will not impose liability for the period between the event and the proceedings. The provision thus affords the regulated firm some time to re-engage the administrative process or otherwise render itself compliant. Under this interpretation, § 1706(c)(1) promotes beneficial reliance by the regulated industry on the regulatory process, particularly when the event that abrogates immunity is the invalidation of a filed tariff or operating agreement. Congress was evidently mindful of this end in passing this provision. See, e.g., H.R. Rep. No. 98-53, pt. 1, at 33 (1983) ("[Section 1706(c)] is needed to provide a degree of stability and certainty to an agreement filed in good faith and valid on its face.")

To qualify for relief under § 1706(c)(1), defendants must therefore identify a discrete event that triggers the provision's grace period. Obviously, that event cannot be our present denial of immunity under another statutory provision of the Shipping Act, as defendants would have it. Were we to countenance such an argument, a maritime firm wishing to avoid full antitrust liability would simply [**30] invent a series of spurious immunity arguments and remain perpetually one step ahead of the judicial or administrative proceedings invalidating them. Such a state of affairs would be the antithesis of the antitrust protections that the maxim requiring narrow construction of exemptions therefrom contemplates. See Seatrain, 411 U.S. at 732-33. We therefore reject defendants' interpretation of § 1706(c)(1).

D.

In short, we hold that defendants' scheme to rig bids does not qualify for immunity under any of the three provisions Gosselin and Pasha rely on -- § 1706(a)(4), § 1706(a)(2), and § 1706(c)(1).<sup>3</sup> [**31] We therefore conclude that defendants enjoy no immunity from antitrust prosecution under the Shipping Act.<sup>4</sup>

[**32] [*515] IV.

The charging information also contained a conspiracy to defraud count. See 18 U.S.C. § 371 \(2000\). Defendants argued in their motion to dismiss that the immunity provisions of the Shipping Act were broad enough to insulate them from liability under a conspiracy to defraud theory. Despite the district court's conclusion that defendants were indeed immunized from antitrust liability by the Shipping Act, the court found that this immunity did not extend to conspiracy to defraud. Employing the test set forth in Blockburger v. United States, 284 U.S. 299, 76 L. Ed. 306, 52 S. Ct. 180 \(1932\), the district court further determined that the elements of the antitrust claim did not subsume those of the conspiracy to defraud claim. The district court thus concluded that defendants could properly be prosecuted for the same behavior under both counts. See United States v. Ashley Transfer & Storage Co., Inc., 858 F.2d 221, 224-25 \(4th Cir. 1988\) (finding that conduct may form basis for prosecution under § 371 following acquittal on Sherman Act count). As a result, the court rejected defendants' motion to dismiss the fraud count on Shipping Act [**33] immunity grounds, and, following the terms of the plea agreements, Gosselin and Pasha pled guilty under § 371.

We have concluded that defendants enjoy no antitrust immunity under the Shipping Act. We therefore need not determine, as the district court did, whether immunity under the Shipping Act extends to anticompetitive behavior that is also actionable under a conspiracy to defraud theory. Furthermore, defendants concede on appeal that the district court's Blockburger analysis is "certainly correct" and that "simultaneous Sherman Act and Section 371 prosecutions are not multiplicitous." Prosecution of defendants' particular course of action under both statutes is therefore permissible.

In reviewing the district court's disposition of the conspiracy to defraud counts, it remains only to address the contention, raised on appeal, that there is insufficient factual support in the plea agreements and incorporated statement of facts for an adjudication of guilt under § 371.

HN14 [↑] Challenges to the factual basis for an adjudication of guilt following a guilty plea are severely circumscribed. "A voluntary and intelligent plea of guilty is an admission of all the elements of a formal [**34] criminal charge." United States v. Willis, 992 F.2d 489, 490 \(4th Cir. 1993\) (quoting McCarthy v. United States, 394 U.S. 459, 466, 22 L. Ed. 2d 418, 89 S. Ct. 1166 \(1969\)). A defendant who pleads guilty therefore "admits all of the factual allegations made in the indictment," O'Leary v. United States, 856 F.2d 1142, 1143 \(8th Cir. 1988\) (per curiam), and waives "all non-jurisdictional defects, including the right to contest the factual merits of the charges." Willis, 992 F.2d at 490 (internal citations omitted); see also United States v. Wiggins, 905 F.2d 51, 52 \(4th Cir.

<sup>3</sup> Because we reach this conclusion on the substance of defendants' immunity arguments, we need not address the government's alternative contention that the agreements for which Gosselin and Pasha seek immunity are beyond the coverage provisions of the Shipping Act and likewise beyond the FMC's jurisdiction. See § 1703; see also Tucor, 189 F.3d 834 (discussing a similar argument made in that case).

<sup>4</sup> One of the factors on which the district court rested its contrary determination was the "rule of lenity." Under this principle of interpretation, the application of ambiguous criminal statutes should be resolved in favor of a defendant. See, e.g., Rewis v. United States, 401 U.S. 808, 812, 28 L. Ed. 2d 493, 91 S. Ct. 1056 \(1971\). The Supreme Court has counseled, however, that there must be a "genuine ambiguity" before lenity will apply, Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 49 n.13, 62 L. Ed. 2d 199, 100 S. Ct. 311 \(1979\), and has warned that no such ambiguity exists when "the ambiguous reading relied on is an implausible reading of the congressional purpose." Caron v. United States, 524 U.S. 308, 316, 141 L. Ed. 2d 303, 118 S. Ct. 2007 \(1998\). The Court has also directed that "traditional tools of statutory construction" should be consulted before ambiguity is found. Id. (citing United States v. Shabani, 513 U.S. 10, 17, 130 L. Ed. 2d 225, 115 S. Ct. 382 \(1994\)). Finding, as we do, that such "traditional tools," including "congressional purpose" and ordinary canons of statutory construction, suffice to resolve the interpretive issues before us, we see no occasion for resort to the rule of lenity.

1990). In these circumstances, courts have permitted a defendant to challenge an adjudication of guilt only with the argument that "the facts underlying the charge" are insufficient "to constitute a crime." Stanback v. United States, 113 F.3d 651, 654 (7th Cir. 1997).

The most that Gosselin and Pasha may argue, therefore, is that the allegations in the plea agreements and the [*516] incorporated statement of facts are so insubstantial that they could not constitute an offense under § 371. It is clear that the factual recitations in the [**35] plea documents easily surmount this low hurdle. HN15 ↑ Conspiracy to defraud under § 371 requires three elements: "(1) the existence of an agreement, (2) an overt act by one of the conspirators in furtherance of the objectives, and (3) an intent on the part of the conspirators to agree as well as to defraud the United States." United States v. Tedder, 801 F.2d 1437, 1446 (4th Cir. 1986). The statute covers "not only conspiracies intended to involve the loss of government funds but also any conspiracy for the purpose of impairing, obstructing, or defeating the lawful function of any department of government." Id. The statement of facts laid out in some detail the course of defendants' conspiracy, including the discrete agreements Gosselin and Pasha secured with various firms engaged in the bidding cycle. The statement of facts also unequivocally recites that the foregoing actions "[increased] the rates paid by DOD for the transportation of military goods during the [cycle] to levels higher than would have prevailed in the absence of their conspiracy." The stipulation therefore contains an abundance of information to establish a conspiracy to "[impair] . . . the [**36] lawful function of [a] department of government," id. -- namely the MTMC program.

V.

The final contention that Gosselin and Pasha raise on appeal concerns their sentence. Following the adjudication of guilt on the conspiracy to defraud count, the district court considered the sentences that the parties had agreed to recommend in the event of this outcome. The district court settled on the figure recommended in the plea agreements -- a fine of $ 4.6 million for each defendant for its part in the conspiracy to defraud. Gosselin and Pasha now argue that this fine exceeded the maximum permissible under the relevant sentencing statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3571 (2000). They assert that the "gross loss" to the government as a result of the conspiracy to defraud was only $ 1 million, id. § 3571 (d), less than the $ 2.3 million amount on which the plea agreements' sentencing recommendations for the § 371 count were predicated.

The sentencing arrangement that the parties agreed to is carefully set out in each plea document. In the event of an adjudication of guilt, "the United States and the defendant agree that the appropriate disposition of this case is, and [*37] agree to recommend jointly, that the Court impose a sentence requiring the defendant to pay to the United States a criminal fine . . ." The agreements further provide that "Count 1 and Count 2 are [to be] grouped together" for sentencing purposes, "and thus, the total fine paid will be the greater of" two figures that each sentencing agreement recites. The first figure is derived by applying various listed Sentencing Guidelines factors to the penalty provisions governing Sherman Act violations. The second figure is derived by applying various listed Sentencing Guidelines factors to the penalty provisions governing § 371 violations.

Operating under the assumption that defendants were guilty only of conspiracy to defraud, the district court limited its attention during sentencing to the conspiracy to defraud part of each plea agreement's sentencing recommendation. We have found additionally that the Shipping Act affords defendants no immunity from the antitrust count. We therefore vacate the sentence and remand for resentencing in light of our immunity holding and the entirety of [*517] each plea agreement's sentencing provisions.

VI.

We have found that the three immunity provisions [**38] of the Shipping Act under which Gosselin and Pasha claim antitrust immunity afford them no relief. We have also determined that there was no error in the district court's adjudication of guilt on the conspiracy to defraud count. Because the district court applied the sentencing provisions of the plea agreement under the assumption that defendants were only guilty of conspiracy to defraud, a remand for resentencing in light of our disposition of the antitrust issue is in order. The judgment of the district court is therefore

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED FOR RESENTENCING.

---

End of Document

Tex. Commer. Energy v. TXU Energy, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

June 17, 2005, Filed

No. 04-40962

Reporter

413 F.3d 503 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 11553 **; 2005-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,836

TEXAS COMMERCIAL ENERGY, A TEXAS LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY, Plaintiff-Appellant versus TXU ENERGY, INC; ET AL, Defendants; TXU ENERGY INC; TXU GENERATION SERVICES COMPANY LP; TXU PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT COMPANY LP, formerly known as TXU Energy Trading Company LP; TXU ENERGY SOLUTIONS MANAGEMENT COMPANY, formerly known as TXU Energy Services Co; AMERICAN ELECTRIC POWER INC; AEP TEXAS CENTRAL COMPANY; AEP TEXAS NORTH COMPANY; AMERICAN ELECTRIC POWER SERVICE CORP; AEP TEXAS COMMERCIAL INDUSTRIAL RETAIL LP; RELIANT ENERGY INC; RELIANT RESOURCES INC; RELIANT ENERGY ELECTRIC SOLUTIONS LLC; RELIANT ENERGY RETAIL SERVICES LLC; RELIANT ENERGY SOLUTIONS LLC; AUTOMATED POWER EXCHANGE INC; ELECTRIC RELIABILITY COUNSEL OF TEXAS; TEXAS GENCO LP; CENTERPOINT ENERGY INC; CENTERPOINT ENERGY HOUSTON ELECTRIC LLC; TEXAS INDEPENDENT ENERGY LP; ODESSA-ECTOR POWER PARTNERS LLP; GUADALUPE POWER PARTNERS LLP; TRACTEBEL ENERGY MARKETING, INC., Defendants-Appellees

Subsequent History: [**1] As Revised June 30, 2005.

US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Tex. Commer. Energy v. TXU Energy, Inc., 2006 U.S. LEXIS 52 \(U.S., Jan. 9, 2006\)

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas.

Tex. Commer. Energy v. TXU Energy, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13908 \(S.D. Tex., June 24, 2004\)

Disposition: AFFIRM.

Core Terms

---

filed rate doctrine, electricity, energy, rates, antitrust, competitor, anti trust law, district court, anticompetitive, generators, argues, antitrust claim, manipulation

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

413 F.3d 503, *503L<sup>2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 11553, **1</sup>

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electricity Distribution & Transmission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

HN1[ Pipelines & Transportation, Electricity Transmission

Texas has deregulated its energy market with the passage of Senate Bill 7. 1999 Tex. Gen. Laws 2543. Bill 7 has amended the Texas Public Utility Regulatory Act (PURA) and has split the state's integrated utilities into three groups: electric generation companies, transmission and distribution companies, and retail electric providers. Tex. Util. Code Ann. § 39.051\(b\). The statute also gives the Public Utility Commission of Texas (PUCT) authority to regulate the state's electric grids and to monitor and remedy market power abuses. Specifically, PUCT has broad power to maintain safe, reliable, and reasonably priced electricity and to ensure that ancillary services necessary to facilitate the transmission of electric energy are available at reasonable prices with terms and conditions that are not unreasonably preferential, prejudicial, discriminatory, predatory, or anticompetitive. Tex. Util. Code Ann. §§ 39.101\(a\)\(1\), 35.004\(e\). PUCT is also empowered to remedy market abuses by seeking an injunction or civil penalties as necessary to eliminate or to remedy the market power abuse or violation as authorized by Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. ch. 15, by imposing an administrative penalty as authorized by Chapter 15, or by suspending, revoking, or amending a certificate or registration as authorized by Tex. Util. Code Ann. § 39.356. Tex. Util. Code Ann. § 39.157\(a\).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN2[ Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews a district court's grant of a motion to dismiss de novo. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Common Carriers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN3[ Filed Rate Doctrine, Common Carriers

The filed rate doctrine bars judicial recourse against a regulated entity based upon allegations that the entity's filed rate is too high, unfair, or unlawful. It is up to the respective governmental agency to determine whether the rates are discriminatory or unlawful, not the courts. The doctrine holds that any filed rate, that is, one approved by the governing regulatory agency, is per se reasonable and unassailable in judicial proceedings brought by ratepayers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

See Tex. Util. Code Ann. § 39.158\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The application of the filed rate doctrine is far different from the creation of an antitrust immunity. Defendants who engage in anticompetitive activities based on filed rates are still subject to scrutiny under the antitrust laws by the government and to possible criminal sanctions or equitable relief. The filed rate doctrine is very much a part of current federal antitrust law. It has been consistently applied as a defense to antitrust actions by various circuits and by the United States Supreme Court for decades.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN6 Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Applying the filed rate doctrine, along with other common-law defenses that are normally part of the federal antitrust legal landscape, gives effect to the legislature's intent to have the Texas Public Utility Regulatory Act complement other state and federal antitrust provisions. Tex. Util. Code Ann. § 39.158\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN7 Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

The rationales underlying the filed rate doctrine apply equally strongly to regulation by state agencies. Moreover, state antitrust claims do not need to be addressed separately because the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act explicitly mandates that its provisions be interpreted in harmony with federal antitrust law.

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Contracts for Service

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electricity Distribution & Transmission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Wholesale Rates

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Electricity Transmission

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN8 Utility Companies, Contracts for Service

The filed rate doctrine applies to market-based energy rates because the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is responsible for ensuring just and reasonable rates and, to that end, wholesale power rates continue to be filed and subject to agency review. Similarly, the Public Utility Commission of Texas (PUCT) is required to ensure safe, reliable, and reasonably priced electricity and that ancillary services necessary to facilitate the transmission of electric energy are available at reasonable prices with terms and conditions that are not unreasonably preferential, prejudicial, discriminatory, predatory, or anticompetitive. Tex. Util. Code Ann. §§ 39.101\(a\)\(1\), 35.004\(e\). PUCT also requires electricity generators to file detailed information to assess market power and even a market power mitigation plan for those generators that control more than 20 percent of the electricity market in a specific region. Tex. Util. Code Ann. §§ 39.155-156. Accordingly, PUCT's oversight over the market is sufficient to conclude that the Balancing Energy Service energy rates are "filed" within the meaning of the filed rate doctrine.

Counsel: For TEXAS COMMERCIAL ENERGY, A TEXAS LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY, Plaintiff - Appellant: Mikal C Watts, Gregory Lamar Gowan, Watts Law Firm, Corpus Christi, TX.

For TXU ENERGY INC, TXU GENERATION SERVICES COMPANY LP, TXU PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT COMPANY LP fka TXU Energy Trading Company LP, TXU ENERGY SOLUTIONS MANAGEMENT CO fka TXU Energy Services Co, Defendants - Appellees: Thomas Glascock Slater, Jr, Hunton & Williams, Richmond, VA; Richard L Adams, Hunton & Williams, Dallas, TX; Thomas Michael Hughes, Hunton & Williams, Washington, DC; Darrell L Barger, Hartline, Dacus, Barger, Dreyer & Kern, Corpus Christi, TX.

For AMERICAN ELECTRIC POWER INC, AEP TEXAS CENTRAL CO, AEP TEXAS NORTH CO, AMERICAN ELECTRIC POWER SERVICE CORP, AEP TEXAS COMMERCIAL INDUSTRIAL RETAIL LP, Defendants - Appellees: G Don Schauer, Schauer & Simank, Corpus Christi, [\[\*\*2\]](#) TX; Mary Anne Mason, Steven John Routh, Hogan & Hartson, Washington, DC.

For RELIANT ENERGY INC, RELIANT RESOURCES INC, RELIANT ENERGY ELECTRIC SOLUTIONS LLC, RELIANT ENERGY RETAIL SERVICES LLC, RELIANT ENERGY SOLUTIONS INC, Defendants - Appellees: Rufus W Oliver, III, David Keith Isaak, Baker Botts, Houston, TX.

For AUTOMATED POWER EXCHANGE INC, Defendant - Appellee: Osborne J Dykes, William Joseph Boyce, Lance R Bremer, Fulbright & Jaworski, Houston, TX.

For ELECTRIC RELIABILITY COUNSEL OF TEXAS, Defendant - Appellee: Judith R Blakeway, Strasburger & Price, San Antonio, TX.

For TEXAS GENCO LP, CENTERPOINT ENERGY INC, CENTERPOINT ENERGY HOUSTON ELECTRIC LLC, Defendants - Appellees: Daniel K Hedges, John A Irvine, Porter & Hedges, Houston, TX.

For TEXAS INDEPENDENT ENERGY LP, ODESSA-ECTOR POWER PARTNERS LLP, GUADALUPE POWER PARTNERS LLP, Defendants - Appellees: Lawrence A Gaydos, Kathleen McIntosh Beasley, Haynes & Boone, Dallas, TX.

For TRACTEBEL ENERGY MARKETING INC, Defendant - Appellee: Ernest L Edwards, B Richard Moore, Jr, Amy L Baird, Lemle & Kelleher, New Orleans, LA.

CIRRO ENERGY CORP, UTILITY CHOICE LP dba Utility Choice Electric, Amicus [\[\*\*3\]](#) Curiae: Robert S Potosky, Dallas, TX.

Judges: Before GARZA and BENAVIDES, Circuit Judges. *

Opinion by: EMILIO M. GARZA

Opinion

---

* Judge Garwood recused himself after oral argument in this case. As a result, this opinion is being entered by quorum pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 46.

[*506] EMILIO M. GARZA, Circuit Judge.

Texas Commercial Energy ("TCE"), an energy retailer, appeals the district court's dismissal of its lawsuit against TXU Energy, Inc. ("TXU"), a generator of electric power, and twenty-three other defendants. TCE argues that the district court erred by applying the filed rate doctrine to preclude it from recovering damages it sustained when TXU allegedly manipulated its market position to create substantial price increases in the short-term energy market.

I

HN1 [↑] Texas deregulated its energy market in 1999 with the passage of Senate Bill 7. Act of May 27, 1999, 76th Leg., R.S., ch. 405, 1999 Tex. Gen. Laws 2543. Bill 7 amended the Public Utility Regulatory Act ("PURA") and split the state's integrated utilities into three groups: electric generation companies, transmission and distribution companies, and retail electric providers. [**4] TEX. UTIL. CODE ANN. § 39.051\(b\). The statute also gives the Public Utility Commission of Texas ("PUCT") authority to regulate the state's electric grids and to monitor and remedy market power abuses.<sup>1</sup> Specifically, PUCT has broad power to maintain "safe, reliable, and reasonably priced electricity" and to "ensure that ancillary services necessary to facilitate the transmission of electric energy are available at reasonable prices with terms and conditions that are not unreasonably preferential, prejudicial, discriminatory, predatory, or anticompetitive." TEX. UTIL. CODE ANN. §§ 39.101\(a\)\(1\), 35.004\(e\). PUCT is also empowered to remedy market abuses by "seeking an injunction or civil penalties as necessary to eliminate or to remedy the market power abuse or violation as authorized by Chapter 15, by imposing an administrative penalty as authorized by Chapter 15, or by suspending, revoking, or amending a certificate or registration as authorized by Section 39.356." TEX. UTIL. CODE ANN. § 39.157\(a\).

[**5] TCE is a retail electric provider that sells electricity to customers in Texas by entering into bilateral agreements with generators and by purchasing electricity through the ancillary Balancing Energy Service ("BES") market. The BES market is a bid-based wholesale market for short-term electricity power. PUCT contracted with a private organization, the Electric Reliability Council of Texas, Inc. ("ERCOT"), to administer the BES market. Under the terms of the contract, ERCOT was required to ensure system reliability, nondiscriminatory access to transmission and distribution systems, access to market information, and clearance of all market transactions. PUCT also created the Market Oversight Division ("MOD") to ensure general compliance with the requirements of PURA. In 2002, MOD required all participants in the Texas electricity market to file an affidavit with PUCT pledging that they would not engage in market manipulation.

In February 2003, during severe winter weather, the price for electricity on the BES market soared. As a result, TCE was forced to pay considerably higher sums for the energy it had to supply its customers. The resulting losses led TCE [*507] to meet with [**6] MOD and express their concern that the price spikes were the result of anti-competitive bids and market manipulation. TCE alleged that, at the time of the price fluctuations, TXU controlled anywhere from seventy-five to ninety-nine percent of the BES market and that it used its market strength to purposefully withhold energy from the market in order to increase the price. TCE argues that while ERCOT made some attempts to force TXU to rectify the situation, it failed to follow its own protocols. Due to the mounting losses, TCE was forced to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

TCE filed suit against twenty-four market participants including TXU, its subsidiaries, and ERCOT. According to the complaint, TCE alleges that the defendants violated the federal Sherman Antitrust Act and the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act ("TFEAA"). TCE also alleges fraud, negligent misrepresentation, breach of contract, defamation, business disparagement, and civil conspiracy. The defendants filed motions to dismiss. After holding a hearing on the motions, the district court dismissed TCE's fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and state and federal antitrust claims on the basis of the filed rate doctrine. [**7] The court also dismissed some of the breach of contract and civil conspiracy claims, and denied ERCOT's motion to dismiss the defamation and business

---

<sup>1</sup> Texas' electrical system is independent from the rest of the United States' which is administered through the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC"). PUCT fulfills a similar role as FERC.

disparagement claims. Having dismissed the federal claims, the district court dismissed the entire case, finding that there was no basis for diversity jurisdiction on the remaining state law claims. TCE now appeals the district court's dismissal of its antitrust claims.<sup>2</sup>

II

HN2[↑] We review a district court's grant of a motion to dismiss de novo. Martin K. Eby Const. Co. v. Dallas Area Rapid Transit, 369 F.3d 464, 467 (5th Cir. 2004). A complaint "should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." [**8] Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957).

The district court held that, even if the defendants had engaged in market manipulation, the filed rate doctrine precluded TCE from recovering for its losses under federal and state antitrust law. HN3[↑] The filed rate doctrine bars judicial recourse against a regulated entity based upon allegations that the entity's "filed rate" is too high, unfair or unlawful. See, e.g., Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., 476 U.S. 409, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 (1986) (filed rate doctrine bars damage action against motor carriers under antitrust laws even though carriers colluded to set artificially high filed rate). The Supreme Court established this doctrine in Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Railway, Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922). In Keogh, the Supreme Court held that a shipper could not bring an antitrust action against carriers in connection with tariffs paid because those tariffs had been filed and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. [**9] Id. at 163. The Court reasoned that even if the carriers had conspired to eliminate competition, the shipper could not recover under antitrust law because it could receive a rebate that might give the shipper "preference over his trade competitors." Id. Furthermore, the Court held that it was up to the respective governmental agency to determine whether the [*508] rates were discriminatory or unlawful, not the courts. Id. at 164.

Since Keogh, courts have consistently applied the filed rate doctrine in a number of energy cases to preclude lawsuits against companies based on rates that were filed with a government agency. See, e.g., Ark. La. Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 578, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856, 101 S. Ct. 2925 (1981) (filed rate doctrine prohibits seller of natural gas to collect a rate different than the one it filed with the Federal Power Commission.); Tex. E. Transmission Corp. v. Fed. Energy Regulatory Comm'n, 102 F.3d 174, 189 (5th Cir. 1996) (natural gas pipeline precluded from retroactively assessing customer rates based on a new and different rate methodology because the prior rates had been filed with a federal agency). "Simply stated, [**10] the doctrine holds that any 'filed rate'--that is, one approved by the governing regulatory agency--is per se reasonable and unassailable in judicial proceedings brought by ratepayers." Wegoland, Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17, 18 (2d Cir. 1994).

III

TCE argues that the district court was erroneous in applying the doctrine because: 1) the legislature clearly intended for aggrieved parties to bring private claims under PURA; 2) wholesale energy rates in the BES market are not filed with PUCT; 3) antitrust exemptions should be narrowly construed; and 4) the filed rate doctrine cannot be applied because PURA does not create a substitute damages mechanism.

A

TCE argues that, under Bill 7, the Texas state legislature expressly intended to allow private antitrust claims to be brought under PURA and that the district court's decision violates "the primary rule in statutory interpretation [--] that a court must give effect to legislative intent." Zer-llan v. Frankford \(In re CPDC, Inc.\), 337 F.3d 436, 442 (5th Cir. 2003) (quoting [**11] Crown Life Ins. Co. v. Casteel, 22 S.W.3d 378, 383, 43 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 348 (Tex. 2000)). In support, TCE cites to PURA's savings clause which states that HN4[↑] "nothing in this chapter shall be construed to confer immunity from state or federal antitrust laws. This chapter is intended to complement other state and federal antitrust provisions. Therefore, antitrust remedies may also be sought in state or federal court to remedy anticompetitive activities." TEX. UTIL. CODE ANN. § 39.158\(b\).

---

<sup>2</sup>TCE does not challenge the district court's decision to dismiss their negligent misrepresentation and fraud claims under the filed rate doctrine.

TCE asserts that the application of the filed rate doctrine violates this provision of the statute by conferring immunity on the defendants. In Square D Co., the Supreme Court rejected this position by explicitly stating that HN5 the application of the filed rate doctrine "is far different from the creation of an antitrust immunity." 476 U.S. at 422; see also Wegoland, 27 F.3d at 22 ("filed rate doctrine does not leave regulated industries immune from suit under the RICO or antitrust statutes."). Rather, as the Court noted, defendants who engage in anticompetitive activities based on filed rates are "still subject to scrutiny under the antitrust laws by the Government and to possible criminal [**12] sanctions or equitable relief." Square D Co., 476 U.S. at 422. Moreover, contrary to TCE's assertions, the filed rate doctrine is very much a part of current federal antitrust law. It has been consistently applied as a defense to antitrust actions by various circuits and by the Supreme Court for decades. Id. at 423 ("the Keogh rule has been an established guidepost at the intersection of the antitrust and interstate commerce statutory regimes for 6 1/2 decades . . . [and is] an essential element of the settled legal context in which Congress has [*509] repeatedly acted in this area"). Thus, we find that HN6 applying the filed rate doctrine, along with other common-law defenses that are normally part of the federal antitrust legal landscape, gives effect to the legislature's intent to have PURA "complement other state and federal antitrust provisions." TEX. UTIL. CODE ANN. § 39.158\(b\).

Similarly, TCE's state antitrust arguments--that applying the filed rate doctrine would displace provisions set out in the TFEAA, or that the filed rate doctrine as a whole does not apply to the TFEAA--are misplaced. "Courts have uniformly held . . . that [**13] HN7 the rationales underlying the filed rate doctrine apply equally strongly to regulation by state agencies." Wegoland LTD., 27 F.3d at 20; see also H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 954 F.2d 485, 494 \(8th Cir. 1992\) ("the filed rate doctrine applies whether the rate in question is approved by a federal or state agency"); Taffet v. Southern Co., 967 F.2d 1483 \(11th Cir. 1992\); Korte v. Allstate Ins. Co., 48 F. Supp. 2d 647 \(E.D.Tex. 1999\). Moreover, state antitrust claims do not need to be addressed separately because the TFEAA explicitly "mandates that its provisions be interpreted in harmony with federal antitrust law." Johnson v. Hosp. Corp. of Am., 95 F.3d 383, 391 n.7 \(5th Cir. 1996\). Thus, the filed rate doctrine applies with equal force to TCE's state antitrust claims.<sup>3</sup>

[**14] B

TCE contends that the filed rate doctrine is inapplicable because PURA does not require rates in the BES market to be filed with PUCT, which does not set or approve these rates. We agree with the approach taken by other circuits who have addressed this issue in the context of rates filed with PUCT's federal counterpart, FERC. In Town of Norwood, Massachusetts v. New England Power Co., the First Circuit concluded that HN8 the filed rate doctrine applied to market-based energy rates because FERC was "responsible for ensuring 'just and reasonable' rates and, to that end, wholesale power rates continue to be filed and subject to agency review." 202 F.3d 408, 419 \(1st Cir. 2000\). The Ninth Circuit echoed this view, noting that while FERC had waived many requirements that it had applied under a cost-based system, the filed rate doctrine continued to apply to market-based energy rates because the agency continued to "oversee wholesale electricity rates . . . by reviewing and approving a variety of documents filed by [market actors]." [**15] Public Util. Dist. No. 1 v. Dynegy Power Mktg., Inc., 384 F.3d 756, 760-61 \(9th Cir. 2004\). Similarly, under Bill 7, PUCT is required to ensure "safe, reliable, and reasonably priced electricity" and "that ancillary services necessary to facilitate the transmission of electric energy are available at reasonable prices with terms and conditions that are not unreasonably preferential, prejudicial, discriminatory, predatory, or anticompetitive." TEX. UTIL. CODE ANN. §§ 39.101\(a\)\(1\), 35.004\(e\). PUCT also requires electricity generators to file detailed information to assess market power and even a market power mitigation plan for those generators that control more than 20% of the electricity [*510] market in a specific region. TEX. UTIL. CODE ANN. §§ 39.155-156. Accordingly, PUCT's oversight over the market is sufficient to conclude that the BES energy rates are "filed" within the meaning of the filed rate doctrine.

---

<sup>3</sup>TCE also contends that the district court erred by ruling that only the U.S. Congress has the authority to determine the applicability of the filed rate doctrine and that the doctrine may only be abrogated through an amendment to the Sherman Act. The defendants, however, "do not dispute that the Texas legislature, had it chosen to do so, could have repealed the application of the filed rate doctrine to cases brought under the TFEAA." Since we conclude there is no evidence that the state legislature sought to eliminate this doctrine from state antitrust suits, this argument is moot.

C

TCE argues that the filed rate doctrine should not be applied because antitrust exemptions should be narrowly construed. It morphs this general assertion into a more specific allegation that its claims are exempt from the filed rate doctrine under the "competitor exception." [**16] "The competitor exception, which has never been recognized by this court or the Supreme Court, holds that "an anticompetitive practice embodied in a [filed] tariff may [still] violate the antitrust laws if it . . . impacts upon competitors as opposed to customers." City of Groton v. Conn. Light and Power Co., 662 F.2d 921, 929 \(2d Cir. 1981\); see also Utilimax.com, Inc. v. PPL Energy, LLC, 378 F.3d 303, 307 \(3d Cir. 2004\) (competitor exception exists "because competitors are not the intended beneficiaries of that rule of public utility regulation") (quoting Essential Communications Sys. v. Am. Telephone & Telegraph Co., 610 F.2d 1114, 1121 \(3d Cir. 1979\)). But cf. Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Central Corp., 838 F.2d 1445-47 \(6th Cir. 1988\) (rejecting competitor exception).

Assuming, without deciding, that such an exception exists, we find that the competitor exception is not applicable to this case. TXU has affiliated retail electric providers as part of its subsidiaries. However, TCE is not a competitor to TXU in the context of this case because all of its claims of market manipulation are focused solely on TXU's actions as an electric generation [**17] company. Thus, the court did not err in refusing to apply the exception.

D

Finally, TCE argues that the filed rate doctrine is inapplicable because PURA did not create a "substitute mechanism for the recovery of damages." It also alleges that the "implication doctrine" warrants reversal and that the application of the filed rate doctrine violates the state constitution. TCE failed to raise these arguments before the district court. Accordingly, they are waived. Horton v. Bank One, N.A., 387 F.3d 426, 435 \(5th Cir. 2004\).

IV

For the above stated reasons, we AFFIRM the district court's judgment.

---

End of Document

Minn. Life Ins. Co. v. AXA Inv. Mgr

United States District Court for the District of Minnesota

June 22, 2005, Decided

Civil No. 03-4383 (DWF/SRN)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12320 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,875

Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc., Plaintiffs, v. AXA Investment Mgr, Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt, Defendants, and AXA Investment Mgr, Counter-Claimant, v. Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc., Counter-Defendants, and Frederick Fritz Feuerherm and Wayne Schmidt, Counter-Claimant, v. Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc., Counter-Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by, in part, As moot, Motion denied by, in part, Motion denied by, As moot
Minn. Life Ins. Co. v. Axa Inv. Mgr, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62011 \(D. Minn., July 11, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

Plaintiffs', summary judgment, track record, trade secret, employees, tortious interference, damages, fixed income, Counter-Claimants, Defendants', literally, press release, contracts, Lanham Act, confidential information, unfair competition, fiduciary duty, misappropriation, conversion, booklet, pitch, duplicative, disclosure, consumers, buy, breach of fiduciary duty, injunctive relief, genuine, issue of material fact, business advantage

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is proper if there are no disputed issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). A court must view the evidence and the inferences that may be reasonably drawn from the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. As the United States Supreme Court has stated, summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action. Fed. R. Civ. P. 1.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 [] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The moving party on summary judgment bears the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The nonmoving party must demonstrate the existence of specific facts in the record which create a genuine issue for trial. A party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment may not rest upon mere allegations or denials, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Burdens of Proof

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Competitive Advantage

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Ready Availability

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > Reasonable Measures > General Overview

HN3 [] Civil Actions, Burdens of Proof

In order to establish claims for misappropriation of confidential information and trade secrets, a plaintiff must show that: (1) the information is not generally known or ascertainable; (2) the information provides a demonstrable competitive advantage; and (3) the information was subject to reasonable efforts to maintain its secrecy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Remedies

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN4 [] Lanham Act, Remedies

To establish a Lanham Act or a Minnesota Deceptive Trade Practices Act claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate that: (1) the defendant made a false statement of fact in a commercial advertisement about its own or another's product; (2) the statement actually deceived or has the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (3) the deception is material; (4) the defendant caused its false statement to enter into interstate commerce; and (5) plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement. In addition, to recover money damages under the Lanham Act, a plaintiff must prove both actual damages and a causal link between a defendant's actions and those damages.

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN5 Federal Unfair Competition Law, Lanham Act

The false statement necessary to establish a Lanham Act violation generally falls into one of two categories: (1) commercial claims that are literally false as a factual matter; and (2) claims that may be literally true or ambiguous but which implicitly convey a false impression, are misleading in context, or are likely to deceive consumers.

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

HN6 Federal Unfair Competition Law, False Advertising

If a plaintiff is able to prove that a claim is literally false, a court may grant relief without considering whether the buying public was actually misled; the plaintiff need not prove actual consumer confusion. In determining whether a claim is literally false, a court must examine the message conveyed within its full context.

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

HN7 Evidence, Burdens of Proof

In examining whether use of another's track record is false or misleading, a court will consider the portability requirements of the Securities & Exchange Commission (SEC) and the CFA Institute, formerly known as the Association for Investment Management and Research (AIMR). While a court considers these portability requirements, the burden is still on plaintiff to prove that the advertising is false and misleading.

Securities Law > Investment Companies > Activities

Securities Law > Investment Companies > Illegal Acts & Unlawful Representations

HN8 Investment Companies, Activities

The Security and Exchange Commission's rules state that a registered investment company may not advertise the performance of accounts managed by its portfolio manager at a predecessor firm if other individuals played a significant role in achieving that record. 15 U.S.C.S. § 80b-6\(4\). CFA Institute has also set forth portability standards. Generally, CFA Institute standards require that a firm's investment decision-making processes remain substantially unchanged in order for a new firm to claim a prior firm's performance record. AIMR-PPS Standard 5.A.4.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > Lanham Act

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Remedies

HN9 [blue icon] False Advertising, Lanham Act

A plaintiff's burden in a Lanham Act case is, in part, dependent on the relief the plaintiff seeks. A plaintiff that wishes to recover money damages for a violation of the Lanham Act and related state statutes must establish actual confusion among the consumers of the plaintiff's products, actual injury, and a causal connection between the confusion and the injury. When a plaintiff seeks only injunctive relief, however, it need only prove a likelihood of confusion among consumers that has resulted from defendants' actions. Where a defendant has engaged in literally false advertising, a court will presume that the plaintiff has suffered injury that warrants injunctive relief.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action > General Overview

Governments > Fiduciaries

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Directors & Officers > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Management Duties & Liabilities, Causes of Action

Corporate officers and directors owe fiduciary duties to their employers. The fiduciary duty requires officers and directors to act in good faith, with honesty in fact, with loyalty, in the best interests of the corporation. A claim for breach of fiduciary duty requires a showing of four elements: (1) the existence of a duty; (2) breach of that duty; (3) causation; and (4) damages.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Governments > Fiduciaries

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Employment Contracts > Breaches

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Contract > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Uniform Trade Secrets Act

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Unfair Competition

HN11 [💡] Contract Interpretation, Fiduciary Responsibilities

Unfair competition is not a tort with specific elements, but instead describes a general category of torts that courts recognize to protect commercial interests. Unfair competition can cover claims such as tortious interference with contract, misuse of trade secrets, and an employee's breach of their fiduciary duties. A claim that asserts nothing more than misappropriation or misuse of a trade secret is displaced by the Minnesota Trade Secrets Act.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN12 [💡] Intentional Interference, Elements

In order to establish a tortious interference with prospective business relations claim, a plaintiff must show that a defendant intentionally and improperly interfered with plaintiffs' prospective business relations. The interference may come about by a defendant inducing a third-party not to enter into or to continue a prospective relation.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN13 [💡] Intentional Interference, Elements

In order to prevail on a tortious interference with contract claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate the existence of a contract, the alleged wrongdoer's knowledge of the contract, and an intentional procurement of its breach, without justification, that results in damage to the plaintiff.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Employment Contracts > Breaches

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Contract > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Questions of Fact

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > Existence & Ownership

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Customer Lists

HN14 [ ] Contract Interpretation, Fiduciary Responsibilities

A viable tortious interference with contract claim can arise out of a breach of fiduciary duty claim.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Elements

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > General Overview

HN15 [ ] Conversion, Elements

Under Minnesota law, conversion is defined as an act of willful interference with the personal property of another which is without justification or which is inconsistent with the rights of the person entitled to the use, possession or ownership of the property. Conversion may involve tangible property, or intangible property customarily merged in, or identified with some document.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Public Officials > General Overview

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Liability > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > Elements

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

HN16[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

The United States Supreme Court has established that the First Amendment right to petition includes a litigant's right to bring suit in state or federal court. Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the act of filing a lawsuit is immune from antitrust or tort liability unless it is found to be a mere sham intended to disguise tortious or anti-competitive liability. In the United States Court of Appeals Eighth Circuit, this exception has been further defined as follows: It is only where a defendant's resort to the courts is accompanied or characterized by illegal and reprehensible practices such as perjury, fraud, conspiracy with or bribery of government decision makers, or misrepresentation, or is so clearly baseless as to amount to an abuse of process, that the Noerr-Pennington cloak of immunity provides no protection. The filing of suit will fit within the "sham exception," and will give rise to tort liability, only if "clearly baseless," or if accompanied by perjury, fraud, conspiracy, bribery, misrepresentation, or other "illegal and reprehensible practices." If a court finds a lawsuit to be objectively baseless or without probable cause, then the court may look to the subjective motivation of the party bringing suit to determine whether liability should attach.

Counsel: [*1] For Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc., Plaintiffs: Daniel L. Scott, Esq., David M. Wilk, Esq., Kathleen M. Mahoney, Esq., Lawrence R. King, Esq., Sarah L. Beuning, Esq., and Stephen P. Laitinen, Esq., Larson King - St. Paul.

For Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc., Counter-Defendants: Daniel L. Scott, Esq., David M. Wilk, Esq., Kathleen M. Mahoney, Esq., Lawrence R. King, Esq., Sarah L. Beuning, Esq., and Stephen P. Laitinen, Esq., Larson King - St. Paul.

For Frederick Fritz Feuerherm and Wayne Schmidt, Defendants: Quentin R. Witrock, Esq., and Dean A. LeDoux, Esq., Gray Plant Mooty Moaty & Bennett - Minneapolis, counsel for Defendant and Counter-Claimant AXA Investment Mgr; Courtland C. Merrill, Esq., Richard T. Ostlund, Esq., and Mary L. Knoblauch, Esq., Anthony Ostlund & Baer, PA.

For Frederick Fritz Feuerherm and Wayne Schmidt, Counter-Claimants: Quentin R. Witrock, Esq., and Dean A. LeDoux, Esq., Gray Plant Mooty Moaty & Bennett - Minneapolis, counsel for Defendant and Counter-Claimant AXA Investment Mgr; Courtland C. Merrill, [*2] Esq., Richard T. Ostlund, Esq., and Mary L. Knoblauch, Esq., Anthony Ostlund & Baer, PA.

Judges: DONOVAN W. FRANK, Judge of United States District Court.

Opinion by: DONOVAN W. FRANK

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Introduction

The above-entitled matter came before the undersigned United States District Judge on April 15, 2005, pursuant to the Motion for Preliminary Injunction and Motion for Summary Judgment on Defendants' Tortious Interference Counterclaims brought by Plaintiffs and Counter-Defendants Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc. (collectively "Plaintiffs") and the Motions for Summary Judgment brought by Defendants and Counter-Claimants AXA Investment Mgr. ("AXA"), Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt (collectively "Defendants"). For the reasons set forth below, the Court grants in part and denies in part Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction and grants in toto Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment on Defendants' Tortious Interference Counterclaims. The Court also grants in part and denies in part Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment.

Background

Plaintiffs and Counter-Defendants [*3] Minnesota Life Insurance Company ("MN Life"), Advantus Capital Management, Inc., ("Advantus"), and Securian Financial Group, Inc. ("Securian") are interrelated companies. MN Life is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Securian and is an affiliate of Advantus. Advantus is MN Life's investment manager and is also a wholly owned subsidiary of Securian.

Defendant and Counter-Claimant AXA is a foreign corporation that is part of the AXA Group based in Paris, France. AXA has an office in Hennepin County and does business in Minnesota.

Defendants and Counter-Claimants Feuerherm and Schmidt ("the Individual Defendants") once worked for Advantus, but now work for AXA. Feuerherm was a member of Advantus' Board of Directors and was an officer of MN Life and Securian. Schmidt was an officer of Advantus. At Advantus, Feuerherm served as vice-president of investment strategy and Schmidt served as portfolio manager. Both men worked in Advantus' Total Return Fixed Income Group ("the Total Return Group"). The Total Return Group managed bond portfolios for MN Life and other institutional clients.

In 2000, AXA made the decision to enter into the U.S. market. Using the name "Western Track," AXA planned to [*4] buy a company that had an established track record in U.S. investments. AXA determined that it would be better to purchase an on-going concern rather than creating a new company to avoid the three- to five-year period it would take to grow the business and establish a track record. A track record is the official performance of a fund over a period of years. AXA referred to the period of time that it would lack a track record if it was not able to buy an on-going concern as the "credibility gap."

In order to implement Western Track, AXA hired a firm called Warren International to conduct a search for experienced fixed income investment professionals. Jacob Navon, a headhunter for Warren International, led the search. In spring 2003, Navon spoke with the Individual Defendants about the possibility of the two of them leaving Advantus to come to work for AXA. Both men told Navon that they were interested in the possibility of working for AXA.

Over the next few months, Feuerherm, Schmidt, and Navon discussed the possibilities of AXA and Advantus either partnering in a joint venture or of AXA buying Advantus' fixed income business. During the course of these conversations, the Individual [*5] Defendants disclosed a great deal of information regarding Advantus and MN Life. Feuerherm disclosed to Navon that MN Life had agreed to sell its equity business to Waddell & Reed before this information had been made available to the public. The Individual Defendants also turned over information regarding the composition of the personnel that supported Advantus' total return team, the total return team's source of alpha,<sup>1</sup> client lists, revenue from clients, and performance data. Feuerherm and Schmidt assert that they believed the information they provided to AXA was not confidential. Advantus contends that the information was confidential and that many of the documents that were provided to AXA were stamped "for internal use only."

Feuerherm claims that he believed a potential transaction involving AXA and Advantus would benefit both companies and the members of the Total Return Group. Feuerherm asserts that he discussed a potential transaction [*6] involving AXA with senior executives at Advantus as early as mid-June 2003. Advantus contends that the discussions between Feuerherm, Schmidt, and AXA were solely aimed at benefitting Feuerherm, Schmidt, and AXA at the expense of Advantus. Advantus also claims that it was not aware that discussions were taking place between Feuerherm, Schmidt, and AXA until AXA was prepared to make an offer to Advantus.

---

<sup>1</sup> "Alpha" refers to the ability to add value over a benchmark.

On April 26, 2003, Schmidt urged AXA to make offers of employment to Feuerherm, Kent Weber, and Steve Nelson, and himself (collectively "the former Advantus employees"). Weber and Nelson were also members of the Total Return Group. In May 2003, Feuerherm advised AXA that Advantus would likely sell its fixed income division to AXA if Feuerherm, Schmidt, Weber, and Nelson were hired by AXA.

On June 18, 2003, the Individual Defendants traveled to Paris to meet with AXA representatives to discuss AXA's proposal regarding the purchase of Advantus' fixed income division. Neither of the Individual Defendants informed Advantus of the purpose of this trip. While meeting with AXA representatives, the Individual Defendants signed confidentiality agreements.

On June 23, 2003, Feuerherm met with [*7] Robert Senkler, the Chairman, Chief Executive Officer, and President of MN Life and Securian. Feuerherm told Senkler that AXA was prepared to make an offer to buy Advantus' fixed income division. Feuerherm also gave Senkler background information about AXA and its representatives. At this meeting, Senkler agreed to meet with AXA on July 1.

On July 1, 2003, Advantus and AXA representatives met to discuss AXA's proposal. AXA proposed a purchase of Advantus' fixed income division rather than a joint venture between the two parties. Senkler agreed to get back to AXA within two weeks.

On July 10, 2003, Senkler offered Schmidt, Weber, and Nelson significant increases in pay if they remained at Advantus. Senkler also offered to strengthen the business to meet Feuerherm's expectations.

On July 15, 2003, Senkler notified AXA and the total return group that Advantus was rejecting AXA's proposal. Later, Feuerherm, Schmidt, Weber, and Nelson resigned from Advantus. On July 31, 2003, this suit was filed against AXA, Feuerherm, and Schmidt alleging: (1) misappropriation of confidential information; (2) violation of the Minnesota Deceptive Trade Practices Act and the Lanham Act; (3) breach of [*8] fiduciary duty; (4) breach of duty of loyalty; (5) unfair competition; (6) misappropriation of trade secrets; (7) tortious interference with business advantage; (8) tortious interference with contractual relations; and (9) conversion and civil liability for theft. Plaintiffs request both money damages and injunctive relief.

Plaintiffs contend that they have suffered millions of dollars in damages as a result of Defendants' alleged wrongdoing. Plaintiffs assert they have suffered three types of damages. First, Plaintiffs contend that they lost business for a roughly three-year period because analysts are wary of recommending a firm that has lost senior management or employees. In addition, Plaintiffs assert that they were not selected for any of the bids for which they were finalists.

Second, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants have been unjustly enriched by their use of Advantus' trade secrets and confidential information and their use of Advantus' track record. Plaintiffs contend that AXA's use of the Advantus track record has allowed AXA to land several large accounts.

Third, Plaintiffs assert that they have incurred certain costs as a result of Defendants' alleged misconduct. [*9] These costs allegedly include the ability to invest in a product that was being created by Feuerherm, restaffing costs, and additional client costs.

Defendants contest each of Plaintiffs' claims. In addition, Defendants brought counterclaims against Plaintiffs for tortious interference alleging that Plaintiffs' claims are baseless and without merit.

Discussion

I. Standard of Review

HN1 [↑] Summary judgment is proper if there are no disputed issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The court must view the evidence and the inferences that may be reasonably drawn from the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Enter. Bank v. Magna Bank of Missouri, 92 F.3d 743, 747 (8th Cir. 1996). However, as the Supreme Court has stated, "summary judgment procedure is properly regarded not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal Rules as a whole, which are designed 'to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action.'" Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 327, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986) [*10] (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1).

HN2 [↑] The moving party bears the burden of showing that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Enter. Bank, 92 F.3d at 747. The nonmoving party must demonstrate the existence of specific facts in the record which create a genuine issue for trial. Krenik v. County of Le Sueur, 47 F.3d 953, 957 (8th Cir. 1995). A party opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment may not rest upon mere allegations or denials, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 256, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Krenik, 47 F.3d at 957.

II. Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment

A. Misappropriation of Confidential Information (Count I) and Trade Secrets (Count VI)

HN3 [↑] In order to establish claims for misappropriation of confidential information and trade secrets, a plaintiff must show that: (1) the information is not generally known or ascertainable; (2) the information provides a demonstrable competitive advantage; and (3) the information [*11] was subject to reasonable efforts to maintain its secrecy. Cherne Indus., Inc. v. Grounds & Assoc., Inc., 278 N.W.2d 81, 92-93 (Minn. 1979) (stating the standard for common law misappropriation of confidential information claims); Strategic Directions Group, Inc. v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 293 F.3d 1062, 1064-65 (8th Cir. 2002) (stating the standard for Minnesota Uniform Trade Secrets Act claims).

Plaintiffs have identified four categories of information that Defendants allegedly have misappropriated, including: (1) financial and client information; (2) marketing information; (3) operational information; and (4) information the Individual Defendants allegedly provided to AXA to assist it in negotiations with Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs claim that all of this information is subject to protection and that they took reasonable efforts to protect the information. Plaintiffs claim three types of damages with regard to this claim and the other claims found in their Amended Complaint: (1) lost profit; (2) unjust enrichment on the part of Defendants; and (3) additional administrative and business costs.

Defendants do not deny that certain information was given [*12] to AXA by the Individual Defendants. Instead, Defendants contend that none of the information is entitled to protection as it is both readily ascertainable to the general public and Plaintiffs did not take reasonable measures to ensure its secrecy. AXA also claims that it did not know or have reason to know that the information was obtained by improper means or without the Plaintiffs' consent. Finally, Defendants claim that Plaintiffs have not been able to show that they were damaged in any way by AXA's use of the information or that AXA has been unjustly enriched by its access to this information.

The Court finds that Plaintiffs have demonstrated that AXA was provided information by the Individual Defendants. While the Court questions whether much of the information transferred to AXA is entitled to protection, the Court does find that genuine issues of material fact remain with regard to whether the information was readily ascertainable and subject to reasonable measures of protection. The Court also questions the damages, if any, that Plaintiffs suffered as a result of the transfer of this information. Plaintiffs assert that the transfer of information alone led to Advantus' lost [*13] profits. The Court finds this position to be extremely tenuous. Nonetheless, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have presented sufficient evidence of damages such that fact issues remain with regard to this count of the Amended Complaint.

B. Violation of the Minnesota Deceptive Trade Practices Act and the Lanham Act (Count II)

2

Plaintiffs contend that a July 22, 2003, press release, a document prepared along with that press release ("the Q&A"), and "pitch books" prepared by AXA violate the Lanham Act and the Minnesota Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("MDTPA").<sup>3</sup> HN4<sup>4</sup> To establish a Lanham Act or MDTPA claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate that: (1) the defendant made a false statement of fact in a commercial advertisement about its own or another's product; (2) the statement actually deceived or has the tendency [*14] to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (3) the deception is material; (4) the defendant caused its false statement to enter into interstate commerce; and (5) plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement. United Indus. Corp. v. Clorox Co., 140 F.3d 1175, 1180 \(8th Cir. 1998\). In addition, to recover money damages under the Lanham Act, a plaintiff must prove both actual damages and a causal link between a defendant's actions and those damages. Id.

HN5<sup>5</sup> The false statement necessary to establish a Lanham Act violation generally falls into one of two categories: (1) commercial claims that are literally false as a factual matter; and (2) claims that may be literally true or ambiguous but which implicitly convey a false impression, are misleading in context, or are likely to deceive [*15] consumers. Id. (citing Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1139 \(9th Cir. 1997\)). In this case, Plaintiffs contend that each of the documents previously mentioned unlawfully linked the former Advantus employees' work performance to the performance of Advantus' fixed income division.

AXA released a press release on June 22, 2003, discussing its hiring of the former Advantus employees and describing the former Advantus employees' success while at Advantus. The press release stated that the former Advantus employees had "produced a consistently strong track record of performance." (Affidavit of David M. Wilk ("Wilk Aff."), P 73, Ex. 75, at 1.)<sup>6</sup> The press release also provided that the former Advantus employees "have demonstrated a proven ability and track record . . ." (Id.) The Q&A booklet that was issued with the press release also contained statements attributing Advantus' track record to the former Advantus employees.

[*16] AXA also produced a number of pitch books that it provided to prospective clients. The pitch books purported to provide a one-, three-, and five-year performance history for AXA's fixed income division. The pitch books showed Advantus' track record up until September 30, 2003, even though the former Advantus employees left the company one month earlier. The pitch book also contained an "Important Disclosure Regarding Past Performance Data." (Wilk Aff, P 79, Ex. 81, at 2.) The disclosure stated that the former Advantus employees were "assisted by a team of analysts and others" and that the Advantus team would be the group handling client accounts at AXA. (Id.)

1. Literally False Claims

HN6<sup>7</sup> If a plaintiff is able to prove that a claim is literally false, a court may grant relief without considering whether the buying public was actually misled; the plaintiff need not prove actual consumer confusion. United Indus., 140 F.3d at 1180. In determining whether a claim is literally false, a court must examine the message conveyed within its full context. Id. (citing Rhône-Poulenc Rorer Pharms. v. Marion Merrell Dow, 93 F.3d 511, 516 \(8th Cir. 1996\)). [*17]

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction is tied to these claims. Thus, the Court will consider both Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction and Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment together.

<sup>3</sup> Pitch books are advertising materials containing information about a particular business entity sent to prospective customers by the business entity to solicit business.

<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs incorrectly delineated their exhibit numbers on the Wilk Affidavit. Accordingly, the Court will cite to the actual exhibit numbers rather than the erroneous numbers contained in the affidavit.

HN7 In examining whether AXA's use of Advantus' track record is false or misleading, the Court will consider the portability requirements of the Securities & Exchange Commission ("SEC") and the CFA Institute, formerly known as the Association for Investment Management and Research ("AIMR"). See Surdyk's Liquor, Inc. v. MGM Liquor Stores, Inc., 83 F. Supp. 2d 1016, 1022 n.2 (D. Minn. 2000) (citing Sandoz Pharm. Corp. v. Richardson-Vicks, Inc., 902 F.2d 222, 230 (3rd Cir. 1990)). While the Court considers these portability requirements, the burden is still on Plaintiffs to prove that the advertising is false and misleading. Id.

HN8 The SEC's rules state that a registered investment company may not advertise the performance of accounts managed by its portfolio manager at a predecessor firm if other individuals played a significant role in achieving that record. 15 U.S.C. § 80b-6\(4\). CFA Institute has also set forth portability standards. Generally, CFA Institute standards require that a firm's investment decision-making processes remain substantially unchanged in order for a new firm to claim a prior firm's performance record. AIMR-PPS [*18] Standard 5.A.4.

After reviewing the record, the Court finds that AXA's statements regarding the former Advantus employees' track record are literally false as the statements are presented in the June 22, 2003, press release and the accompanying Q&A booklet. The SEC and CFA Institute place significant restrictions on the ability of firms to use performance records generated by their employees at their former places of business. As previously stated, the Court considers these standards in determining whether a statement or statements are false. In this case, the Court finds that AXA has not complied with the SEC and CFA Institute guidelines with regard to the above-referenced documents. Further, the Court finds that these statements are literally false insofar as they suggest to potential customers that the former Advantus employees were solely responsible for the performance of Advantus' fixed income division.

While the Court finds that the statements in the press release and Q&A booklet were literally false, the Court finds that those same claims are neither literally false nor misleading as presented in the pitch books. In contrast to the press release and the Q&A booklet, the pitch [*19] books contain a disclosure that explicitly sets out that the former Advantus employees were assisted while at Advantus by a team of additional individuals.

Plaintiffs contend that the disclosure is not conspicuous and is ambiguous concerning the role played by other members of Advantus' fixed income division in the development of Advantus' track record. The Court finds that the disclosure is sufficient to clarify AXA's statements regarding the former Advantus employees' past performance. Thus, the Court finds that summary judgment is appropriate with regard to Plaintiffs' Lanham Act and MDTPA claims insofar as the claims arise out of the pitch books. However, the Court's ruling on this issue is limited in context to the claims before the Court. The SEC, CFA Institute, or other governmental and non-governmental entities may determine that additional action need to be taken with regard to AXA's pitchbooks.

2. Statement Actually Deceived or has the Tendency to Deceive

Plaintiffs must also establish that the statements contained in the press release and Q&A booklet were actually or likely deceptive. Plaintiffs can do so by showing that Defendants' statements were either: (1) literally [*20] false; or (2) likely to mislead or confuse consumers. Riggs Inv. Mgmt. Corp. v. Columbia Partners, L.L.C., 966 F. Supp. 1250, 1268 (D. D.C. 1997). Here, literal falsity has been shown.

HN9 A plaintiff's burden in a Lanham Act case is, in part, dependent on the relief the plaintiff seeks. A plaintiff that wishes to recover money damages for a violation of the Lanham Act and related state statutes must establish actual confusion among the consumers of the plaintiff's products, actual injury, and a causal connection between the confusion and the injury. Lenscrafters, Inc. v. Vision World, Inc., 943 F. Supp. 1481, 1489 (D. Minn. 1996). In light of the Court's finding that the statements made in the press release and the Q&A booklet were literally false, the Plaintiffs need not make a showing of consumer confusion. Ott v. Target Corp., 153 F. Supp. 2d 1055, 1072 (D. Minn. 2001).

When a plaintiff seeks only injunctive relief, however, it need only prove a likelihood of confusion among consumers that has resulted from defendants' actions. Id. In addition, where a defendant has engaged in literally false advertising, the Court will presume [*21] that the plaintiff has suffered injury that warrants injunctive relief. Id. In this case, Plaintiffs seek both money damages and injunctive relief.

The Court has considered this issue and finds that Plaintiffs have not been able to establish actual confusion among consumers resulting from AXA's press release and Q&A booklet. Nonetheless, the Court finds that granting summary judgment solely on the damages issue would be inappropriate at this time. See Slidell, Inc. v. Millennium Inorganic Chem., Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11738, No. Civ. 02-213 (JRT/FLN), 2004 WL 1447921, at *4 (D. Minn. June 28, 2004). Instead, the issue would be better considered in the form of a motion in limine at some later time.

Based on the Court's finding that AXA engaged in literally false advertising, the Court finds that it need not consider the remaining Lanham Act and MDTPA elements in order to grant Plaintiffs injunctive relief. Specifically, the Court finds that AXA may not link Advantus' track record to itself or the former Advantus employees without an appropriate and conspicuous disclosure. The Court acknowledges that this remedy might not be sufficient in light of SEC or CFA Institute standards, but [*22] finds that the remedy is sufficient in relation to the Lanham Act and MDTPA claims before the Court.

C. Breach of Fiduciary Duty (Count III) and Duty of Loyalty (Count IV)

HN10 [↑] Corporate officers and directors owe fiduciary duties to their employers. Westgor v. Grimm, 318 N.W.2d 56, 58 (Minn. 1982). The fiduciary duty requires officers and directors "to act in good faith, with honesty in fact, with loyalty, in the best interests of the corporation." Writers, Inc. v. West Bend Mut. Ins. Co., 465 N.W.2d. 419, 423 (Minn. Ct. App. 1991). A claim for breach of fiduciary duty requires a showing of four elements: (1) the existence of a duty; (2) breach of that duty; (3) causation; and (4) damages. Storage Tech. Corp. v. Cisco Sys., Inc., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17347, No. Civ. 00-2253 (JNE/JGL), 2003 WL 22231544, at *10 (D. Minn. Sept. 25, 2003).

Plaintiffs contend that the Individual Defendants violated their fiduciary duties to Advantus. Specifically, Plaintiffs assert that the Individual Defendants provided Advantus' confidential information to AXA. Plaintiffs also claim that the Individual Defendants assisted AXA in preparing its bid to buy Advantus' fixed income [*23] division. Plaintiffs claim that each of these acts was against Plaintiffs' interests. Plaintiffs assert that they have suffered millions of dollars in losses as a result of the Individual Defendants' breaches of their fiduciary duties.

The Individual Defendants dispute that they had any fiduciary duties to Defendants or that either of them violated any alleged duties. Nonetheless, the Individual Defendants assert that the Court need not consider these issues as Plaintiffs have failed to submit any evidence of damages resulting from these alleged breaches. The Individual Defendants assert that any confidential information transferred to AXA was done in the best interests of Plaintiffs and did not result in any damages to Plaintiffs. Further, the Individual Defendants contend that the former Advantus employees were free to leave at any time and as such the business disruption that occurred would have happened even in the absence of any alleged breach.

The Court finds that summary judgment is not appropriate as to Plaintiffs' breach of fiduciary duty and loyalty claims. As previously discussed, the Court finds that some of Plaintiffs' business information was transferred to AXA by the [*24] Individual Defendants. Plaintiffs have also made a showing that the Individual Defendants assisted AXA in preparing its bid to buy Advantus' fixed income division. Although the Court agrees with Defendants that some of Plaintiffs' damages claims are extremely tenuous, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have presented sufficient evidence of damages such that summary judgment is inappropriate.

D. Unfair Competition (Count V)

HN11 [↑] Unfair competition is not a tort with specific elements, but instead describes a general category of torts that courts recognize to protect commercial interests. Rehab. Specialists, Inc. v. Koering, 404 N.W.2d 301, 305-06 (Minn. Ct. App. 1987). Unfair competition can cover claims such as tortious interference with contract, misuse of trade secrets, and an employee's breach of their fiduciary duties. See id. However, a claim that asserts nothing more than misappropriation or misuse of a trade secret is displaced by the Minnesota Trade Secrets Act. SL Montevideo Tech., Inc. v. Eaton Aerospace, LLC, 292 F. Supp. 2d 1173, 1179-80 \(D. Minn. 2003\).

Plaintiffs contend that they have a viable unfair competition claim that is not [*25] duplicative of their trade secrets claims. Plaintiffs assert that their unfair competition claims cover not only Defendants' actions regarding trade secrets, but also AXA's use of Advantus' track record and AXA's actions in "lifting out" the former Advantus employees. Plaintiffs describe their unfair competition claim as covering Defendants' overall approach to competition. Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' unfair competition is nothing but a trade secrets claim. Thus, Defendants assert that it must be disposed of as duplicative of the Minnesota Trade Secrets Act.

After reviewing Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' unfair competition claim is duplicative of the Minnesota Trade Secrets Act. Plaintiffs attempt to broaden the scope of their claim but the claim remains essentially focused on the trade secrets issues. Thus, the Court finds that summary judgment is appropriate with regard to this claim.

E. Tortious Interference with Business Advantage (Count VII)

HN12[] In order to establish a tortious interference with prospective business relations claim, a plaintiff must show that a defendant intentionally and improperly interfered with Plaintiffs' prospective [*26] business relations. United Wild Rice, Inc. v. Nelson, 313 N.W.2d 628, 633 \(Minn. 1982\). The interference may come about by a defendant inducing a third-party not to enter into or to continue a prospective relation. Id.

Plaintiffs assert that the Individual Defendants coerced AXA to open an office in Minneapolis by providing AXA with Advantus' confidential information. Plaintiffs contend that the former Advantus employees would not have left Advantus without this exchange of information because the former Advantus employees enjoyed living in the Twin Cities area. Plaintiffs claim that they lost one client directly to AXA, lost three clients as a result of the former Advantus employees leaving the company, and lost numerous prospective clients as a result of the mass resignation of its employees.

Defendants assert that this claim is duplicative of Plaintiffs' Minnesota Uniform Trade Secrets Act claim and, therefore, must be dismissed. Defendants point to the fact that the sole allegation in Plaintiffs' Complaint with regard to this claim is that Defendants "wrongfully obtained plaintiffs' trade secrets and confidential proprietary information." (Am. Compl. at P [*27] 113.)

After reviewing Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint and the rest of the record, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' tortious interference with business advantage claim is duplicative of their Minnesota Uniform Trade Secrets Act claim. Plaintiffs attempt to broaden the scope of their tortious interference with business advantage claim, but it is clear from the Amended Complaint that the trade secrets issue is at the root of this claim. Accordingly, the Court finds that summary judgment in favor of Defendants is appropriate with regard to this claim.

F. Tortious Interference with Contract (Count VIII)

HN13[] In order to prevail on a tortious interference with contract claim, the plaintiff must demonstrate the existence of a contract, the alleged wrongdoer's knowledge of the contract, and an intentional procurement of its breach, without justification, that results in damage to the plaintiff. See Maness v. Star-Kist Foods, Inc., 7 F.3d 704, 709 \(8th Cir. 1993\) (citing Furlev Sales and Assocs., Inc. v. North American Auto. Warehouse, Inc., 325 N.W.2d 20, 25 \(Minn. 1982\)).

Plaintiffs assert that AXA tortiously interfered with the contracts of Plaintiffs' [*28] employees and clients. Plaintiffs contend that AXA interfered with Plaintiffs' employee contracts by inducing its employees to breach their fiduciary duties to Plaintiffs. Specifically, Plaintiffs claim that AXA offered the former Advantus employees positions with AXA if they provided AXA with confidential information and assisted AXA in negotiations between AXA and Advantus.

Plaintiffs assert that AXA was, or should have been, aware that engaging the Individual Defendants in these actions would cause the Individual Defendants to breach their fiduciary duties to Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs also contend that AXA tortiously interfered with the contracts of Plaintiffs' clients.

AXA claims that it did not interfere with the at-will employment contracts of the former Advantus employees. AXA asserts that the former Advantus employees did nothing more than prepare to enter into competition with Plaintiffs while they were employed at Advantus. The Individual Defendants claim that they did not breach their fiduciary duties to Plaintiffs and AXA asserts that it is unaware of any such violations if they did occur.

Defendants also contend that they did not interfere with the contracts of Plaintiffs' [*29] clients. Defendants claim that the only client Plaintiffs lost to AXA was an at-will client that chose to transfer its business to AXA after the former Advantus employees left the company. AXA contends that it secured the contract with this client without interfering in any way with the contract between Advantus and its former client. Defendants contend that any prospective clients that Plaintiffs assert were lost were not under contract with Plaintiffs at the time. Thus, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' claim fails because there were no contracts to interfere with and Plaintiffs cannot show that, but for AXA, Plaintiffs would have been able to turn these prospects into clients.

The Court finds that Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment as to the portion of Plaintiffs' claim regarding employment contracts, but that summary judgment is appropriate as to the client contract allegations. As previously discussed, the Court finds that genuine issues of material fact exist regarding the trade secret and breach of fiduciary duty claims. HN14 [↑] A viable tortious interference with contract claim can arise out of a breach of fiduciary duty claim. See *Storage Tech. Corp. v. Cisco Sys., Inc.*, 395 F.3d 921, 925 \(8th Cir. 2005\). [*30] After reviewing the record, the Court finds that genuine issues of material fact exist with regard to this claim.

The Court comes to a different conclusion with regard to Plaintiffs' allegations regarding interference with client contracts. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have not been able to provide the Court with evidence that any of their existing clients breached their contracts with Advantus as a result of the mass-resignation. Further, Plaintiffs have not presented evidence that any of the prospective clients would have contracted with Plaintiffs "but for" AXA's actions. *North Central Co. v. Phelps Aero, Inc.*, 272 Minn. 413, 139 N.W.2d 258, 263 \(Minn. 1965\). Thus, summary judgment is appropriate as to the client contract portion of this claim.

G. Conversion and Civil Liability for Theft (Count IX)

HN15 [↑] Under Minnesota law, conversion is defined as "an act of willful interference with the personal property of another which is without justification or which is inconsistent with the rights of the person entitled to the use, possession or ownership of the property." *Bloom v. Hennepin County*, 783 F. Supp. 418, 440 \(D. Minn. 1992\) (quoting *Dain Bosworth, Inc. v. Goetze*, 374 N.W.2d 467, 471 \(Minn. Ct. App. 1985\)). [*31] Conversion may involve "tangible property, or intangible property customarily merged in, or identified with some document." Id.

Plaintiffs contend that Defendants have wrongfully made use of Advantus' trade secrets and track record. Plaintiffs assert that Defendants' use of Advantus' trade secrets and track record constitutes conversion. In contrast, Defendants claim that Advantus' track record is not personal property. Defendants also contend that they have not exercised dominion over Advantus' track record in such a way as to repudiate Plaintiffs' rights in the track record or deprived Plaintiffs of its possession of the track record.

The Court finds that Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on this claim. Insofar as Plaintiffs argue this claim is based on the alleged misuse of Plaintiffs' trade secrets, the claim would appear to be duplicative of the Minnesota Trade Secrets Act. Notwithstanding the Court's finding that the claim is likely duplicative, the Court finds that the trade secrets and the track record at issue are "not the types of intangible property traditionally subject to conversion . . ." See *Bloom*, 783 F. Supp. at 441. Thus, the Court [*32] grants summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' conversion and civil theft claims.

III. Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment

Defendants have brought tortious interference counterclaims against Plaintiffs asserting that Plaintiffs' lawsuit is without merit and has been brought solely for the purpose of limiting Defendants' business prospects. Plaintiffs contend that their filing of this suit is protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. In *Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc.*, 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\), and *United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington*, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\), HN16[<sup>16</sup>] the Supreme Court established that the *First Amendment* right to petition includes a litigant's right to bring suit in state or federal court. Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the act of filing a lawsuit is immune from antitrust or tort liability unless it is found to be a mere sham intended to disguise tortious or anti-competitive liability. *Noerr*, 365 U.S. at 140. In the Eighth Circuit, this exception has been further defined as follows:

It is only where a defendant's resort to the courts is accompanied or [*33] characterized by illegal and reprehensible practices such as perjury, fraud, conspiracy with or bribery of government decision makers, or misrepresentation, or is so clearly baseless as to amount to an abuse of process, that the Noerr-Pennington cloak of immunity provides no protection. . . . Thus the filing of suit will fit within the "sham exception," and will give rise to tort liability, only if "clearly baseless," or if accompanied by perjury, fraud, conspiracy, bribery, misrepresentation, or other "illegal and reprehensible practices."

*Surgidev Corp. v. Eye Tech., Inc.*, 625 F. Supp. 800, 803 \(D. Minn. 1986\) (following *Razorback Ready Mix Concrete Co., Inc. v. Weaver*, 761 F.2d 484 \(8th Cir. 1985\)) (citations omitted). See also *Lund Indus., Inc. v. Westin, Inc.*, 764 F. Supp. 1342, 1345 \(D. Minn. 1990\) (following same authority). If a court finds a lawsuit to be objectively baseless or without probable cause, then the court may look to the subjective motivation of the party bringing suit to determine whether liability should attach. *Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc.*, 508 U.S. 49, 59, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 \(1993\). [*34] While the Noerr-Pennington doctrine arose in the context of the *Sherman Act* and antitrust litigation, the doctrine has been appropriately adopted by courts to apply in other contexts as well.

The Court has reviewed the record and finds that Plaintiffs' suit is neither "objectively baseless," nor "subjectively motivated to harm" Defendants. *Prof'l Real Estate Investors*, 508 U.S. at 59. As previously discussed, the Court has granted Plaintiffs injunctive relief with regard to their Motion for Preliminary Injunction and has denied summary judgment on several of Plaintiffs' claims. In light of the Court's findings with regard to these claims, the Court finds that summary judgment is appropriate on Defendants' counterclaims.

Conclusion

Although the Court has denied summary judgment with regard to some of Plaintiffs' claims, the Court believes that Plaintiffs will have a difficult task in convincing a jury of at least some of their claimed damages. Thus, the Court believes it is in the best interests of the parties to negotiate a resolution of this dispute. As the parties are aware, Magistrate Judge Susan Richard Nelson remains available to assist in the negotiation [*35] of a settlement should the parties find such services to be helpful. If the Court may be of assistance in this matter, the parties should contact Lowell Lindquist, Calendar Clerk for Judge Donovan W. Frank, at 651- 848-1296, or Beverly Riches, Calendar Clerk for Magistrate Judge Susan Richard Nelson, at 651-848-1200.

For the reasons stated, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

1. The Motion for Preliminary Injunction (Doc. No. 127) brought by Plaintiffs and Counter-Defendants Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc. is GRANTED, as follows:
  - a. Defendants and Counter-Claimants AXA Investment Mgr., Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt are enjoined from making commercial statements linking Advantus' track record to themselves without an appropriate and conspicuous disclosure concerning the role played by other members of Advantus' fixed income division in the development of Advantus' track record.

2. The Motions for Summary Judgment (Doc. Nos. 155 and 162) brought by Defendants and Counter-Claimants AXA Investment Mgr., Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt are GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART, [*36] as follows:

- a. The Motions for Summary Judgment brought by Defendants and Counter-Claimants AXA Investment Mgr., Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt are GRANTED as to Counts V (Unfair Competition), VII (Tortious Interference with Business Advantage), and IX (Conversion and Civil Liability for Theft).
- b. The Motions for Summary Judgment brought by Defendants and Counter-Claimants AXA Investment Mgr., Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt are DENIED as to Counts I (Misappropriation of Confidential Information), III (Breach of Fiduciary Duty), IV (Breach of Duty of Loyalty), and VI (Misappropriation of Trade Secrets).
- c. The Motions for Summary Judgment brought by Defendants and Counter-Claimants AXA Investment Mgr., Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt are GRANTED as to the claims in Count II (Lanham Act and Minnesota Deceptive Trade Practices Act) regarding the pitchbooks, but are DENIED as to the claims regarding the press release and Q&A booklet.
- d. The Motions for Summary Judgment brought by Defendants and Counter-Claimants AXA Investment Mgr., Frederick Fritz Feuerherm, and Wayne Schmidt are GRANTED as to the claims [*37] in Count VIII (Tortious Interference with Contract) regarding the customer contracts, but are DENIED as to the claims regarding employee contracts.

3. The Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. No. 150) brought by Plaintiffs and Counter-Defendants Minnesota Life Insurance Company, Advantus Capital Management, Inc., and Securian Financial Group, Inc. is GRANTED.

Dated: June 22, 2005

s/Donovan W. Frank

DONOVAN W. FRANK

Judge of United States District Court

---

End of Document

Am. Express Travel Related Servs. Co. v. Visa U.S.A.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

June 23, 2005, Decided

04 Civ. 8967 (BSJ)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42852 *; 2005 WL 1515399

AMERICAN EXPRESS TRAVEL RELATED SERVICES COMPANY Plaintiff, v. VISA U.S.A., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by *Discover Fin. Servs. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62687 \(S.D.N.Y., Nov. 9, 2005\)*

Motion denied by *Am. Express Travel Related Servs. Co. v. Visa U.S.A., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63179 \(S.D.N.Y., Nov. 10, 2005\)*

Motion denied by *Discover Fin. Servs. v. Visa U.S.A., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22097 \(S.D.N.Y., Apr. 17, 2006\)*

Objection overruled by, Decision reached on appeal by *Discover Fin. Servs. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116536 \(S.D.N.Y., Aug. 2, 2006\)* conspiracy, antitrust, terminate, banks, motion to dismiss, horizontal, terminable at will, member bank, Defendants', allegations, merchant, cards, restraint of trade, forecloses, supplier, concerted action, anti trust law, district court, buyers, brand

Core Terms

---

Counsel: [*1] For American Express Travel Related Services Company, Inc., Plaintiff: Cynthia McGaw Christian, Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Orlando FL US; Damien J. Marshall, Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Fort Lauderdale, FL US; David Boies, II, Eric J. Brenner, Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Armonk, NY US; Edward A. Baker, Boies Schiller & Flexner LLP, Hanover, NH US; John F. Cove, Jr., Kenneth Fisher Rossman, IV, Kieran Paul Ringgenberg, Michael Kai NG, Boies, Schiller and Flexner, Oakland, CA US; Kevin James Barry, Richard Drubel, Robert Cooper, Alanna Cyreeta Rutherford, Donald L. Flexner, Boies, Schiller & Flexner, LLP, New York, NY US; Richard A. Feinstein, Scott E. Gant, Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Washington, DC US.

For Visa U.S.A. Inc., Defendant: Anthony D Boccanfuso, Barbara S. Jones, Robert C. Mason, Arnold & Porter, L.L.P., New York, NY; Asim M. Bhansali, Keker & Van Nest LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Visa International Service Association, Defendant: A. Kelly Turner, Edward C. Fitzpatrick, Lord, Bissell & Brook LLP (IL), Chicago, IL; Angela L. Stinson-Marti, Jackie Redin Klien, Jolen V. Anderson, Joseph Nicholas Froehlich, Nina Huerta, Shane W. Blackstone, Susan Gloss, [*2] Timothy M. Maggio, Lord, Bissell & Brook, LLP (NYC), New York, NY; Ann-Marie Luciano, Alicia Joyce Batts, Dickstein, Shapiro, Morin & Oshinsky, LLP (DC), Washington, DC.

For Mastercard Incorporated, Mastercard International Inc., Defendants: Joseph Frank Tringali, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP (NY), New York, NY; Kenneth Anthony Gallo, Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison LLP, New York, NY.

For Bank One, Delaware, N.A., Bank One Corporation, JP Morgan Chase & Co., Chase Manhattan Bank USA, N.A., Defendants: Charles E. Buffon, Christopher D. Oatway, Edward C. Rippey, Jeffrey H. Lerner, Jenny C.

Ellickson, Joanne B. Grossman, John H. Fuson, Joseph Zambuto, Jr., Robert D. Wick, Covington and Burling, Washington, DC US.

For Providian Financial Corporation, Providian National Bank, Defendants: Eric John Sinrod, Duane Morris LLP (CA), San Francisco, CA; Edward George Biester, III, John Elliott Sindoni, Duane Morris (PA), Philadelphia, PA; John Dellaportas, Duane Morris, LLP (NYC), New York, NY.

For U.S. Bancorp, U.S. Bank, N.A., Defendants: Christopher S. Schilder, Eric L. Maassen, G. Michael Halfenger, James T. McKeown, Jodi Lee Malek, Kevin Patrick Whaley, Suzanne [*3] M. Nowak McManus, Trent Johnson, Foley & Lardner LLP, Milwaukee, WI US; Maurice J. McSweeney, Michael C Lueder, Foley & Lardner LLP (Madison, WI), Madison, WI; Robert Allen Scher, Foley & Lardner, LLP, New York, NY.

For Wells Fargo & Company, Wells Fargo Financial, Inc., Well Fargo Bank (Arizona) N.A., Wells Fargo Financial National Bank, Defendants: William Francis Cavanaugh, Jr, Patterson, Belknap, Webb & Tyler, LLP, New York, NY.

For Capital One Financial Corp., Capital One F.S.B., Capital One Bank, Defendants: Andrew Jay Frackman, Kenneth Takashi Murata, Edward David Hassi, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, New York, NY; Richard George Parker, O'Melveny & Meyers LLP, Washington, DC.

For Household International, Inc., Household Bank, N.A., Defendants: Howard Grant Sloane, Joel Laurence Kurtzberg, Patricia Farren, Thomas J Kavaler, Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP, New York, NY.

Judges: BARBARA S. JONES, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: BARBARA S. JONES

Opinion

---

BARBARA S. JONES

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

American Express ("Plaintiff") brings a claim against both named and unnamed defendants for allegedly conspiring "to extend and perpetuate the effects of their [*4] exclusionary rules, found unlawful by this Court, by agreeing to adopt and implement exclusive dealing arrangements with certain member banks." (Compl. at P160.) Plaintiff claims that these exclusive dealing arrangements violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits, in relevant part, "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1.

Both parties acknowledge that various members of Visa U.S.A., Inc. ("Visa") and MasterCard Incorporated ("MasterCard"), have entered into exclusive dealing arrangements ("EDAs") with Visa and MasterCard. Plaintiff describes the EDAs as multi-year contracts, extending up to ten years in duration, which obligate member banks to dedicate themselves to issuing all new cards with the association with which they have contracted, and requiring among other things that within a short period of time, such banks issue 80% to 90% of their general purpose cards as the contracting association's card."

(Compl. at P160.)

The banks named as defendants (collectively, the "Bank Defendants") have moved to dismiss Plaintiff's [*5] fifth claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) insofar as it relies on the EDAs. The Bank Defendants present two grounds for dismissal:

(1) Plaintiff fails to make out a claim of a horizontal conspiracy, and therefore cannot aggregate each EDA's market foreclosure amount to arrive at a figure large enough to ground an exclusive dealing claim. Because it relies on a theory of horizontal conspiracy, Plaintiff has failed to plead that any individual Bank Defendant's EDA forecloses a sufficient share of the market to violate § 1.

(2) The EDAs do not last for the extended period of time required for an exclusive dealing claim.

After reviewing the standard on a motion to dismiss, the Court will consider these arguments in turn.

Standard on a Motion to Dismiss

When considering a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) for "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted," a district court must accept the allegations contained in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party. Burnette v. Carothers, 192 F.3d 52, 56 \(2d Cir. 1999\). The Court "may [*6] dismiss the complaint only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Id.(citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\)).

In the context of antitrust cases, motions to dismiss "prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." George Haug Co., Inc. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 139 \(2d Cir. 1998\) (quoting Hosp. Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 \(1976\)). Thus while an antitrust plaintiff must "adequately define the relevant product market, . . . allege antitrust injury, [and] . . . allege conduct in violation of the antitrust laws," Sage Realty Corp. v. ISS Cleaning Servs. Group, 936 F. Supp. 130, 135 (quoting Re-Alco Indus. v. Nat'l Ctr. for Health Educ., 812 F. Supp. 387, 391 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\)), it faces "no greater [burden] than the [one] faced by a plaintiff alleging any cause of action not covered by the specific pleading requirements of [Rule 9 of the Federal \[\*7\] Rules of Civil Procedure](#)." Gross v. New Balance Athletic Shoe, Inc., 955 F. Supp. 242, 244 \(S.D.N.Y. 1997\).

Discussion

In the most general terms, [e]xclusive dealing arrangements require a buyer to purchase products or services for a period of time exclusively from one supplier." ABA SECTION ON ANTITRUST LAW, 1 ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS 214 (5th ed. 2002). Such agreements may, in some circumstances, create or extend market power of a supplier or the purchaser party to the exclusive-dealing arrangement, and may thus restrain horizontal competition. Exclusive dealing can have adverse economic consequences by allowing one supplier of goods or services unreasonably to deprive other suppliers of a market for their goods, or by allowing one buyer of goods unreasonably to deprive other buyers of a needed source of supply.

Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 45, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\). On the other hand, exclusive dealing arrangements can promote healthy markets; for buyers they "may assure supply, afford protection against rises in price, enable long-term planning on the basis of known costs, [*8] and obviate the expense and risk of storage in the quantity necessary for a commodity having a fluctuating demand." Standard Oil v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 306-07, 69 S. Ct. 1051, 93 L. Ed. 1371 \(1949\). By the same token, for sellers, exclusive dealing agreements "may make possible the substantial reduction of selling expenses, give protection against price fluctuations, and . . . offer the possibility of a predictable market . . . They may be useful, moreover, to a seller trying to establish a foothold against the counterattacks of entrenched competitors." Id. at 307.

In Standard Oil, the Supreme Court applied what has been labeled the "quantitative substantiality test" to the government's exclusive dealing claims against Standard Oil, focusing almost exclusively on the amount of the market foreclosed by Standard Oil's exclusive dealing arrangements with various independent gas stations. Id. at 314. The Supreme Court later decided Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 334, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 structure of the market for the products or services in question . . . the probable effect of the contract on the relevant area of effective competition, taking into account the relative strength of the parties, the proportionate volume of commerce involved in relation to the total volume of commerce in the relevant market area, and the probable immediate and future effects which pre-emption of that share of the market might have on competition therein.

L. Ed. 2d 580 (1961),<sup>1</sup> where it reaffirmed the pro-competitive potential of exclusive dealing agreements and applied [*9] a qualitative test to the plaintiff's exclusive dealing claim. The Supreme Court cited the following considerations:

Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 329.

[*10] Since Tampa Elec., exclusive dealing agreements are "judged under the Rule of Reason, and [are] condemned only if found to restrain trade unreasonably." Roland Machinery Co. v. Dresser Industries, Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 393 (7th Cir. 1984). Thus "in order not to condemn the positive aspects of exclusive dealing agreements, courts must take care to consider the competitive characteristics of the relevant market." Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 508 (2d Cir. 2004). See also Am. Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 521 F.2d 1230, 1251 (3d Cir. 1975) (Courts must therefore conduct a "broad inquiry," in order to "take into account the economic justification for the arrangement").

An additional factor to those cited by the Supreme Court in Tampa Elec. is "the duration and terminability of the arrangement: the shorter an agreement's term and the easier it is to terminate, the more likely that it will be upheld . . . In fact, courts increasingly view at-will exclusive arrangements as presumptively valid." 3M v. Appleton Papers Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1138, at 1143. Other relevant considerations include [*11] "ease of entry" into the market, "the extent to which competitors also employ exclusive dealing arrangements, the relationship between the parties to the exclusive dealing arrangement, and the extent to which competition is actually injured." ABA SECTION ON ANTITRUST LAW, 1 ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS 224-25. (5th ed. 2002).

Nonetheless, even after Tampa Elec., the degree to which an agreement forecloses the market remains arguably the most important factor in determining whether the agreement violates § 1. In Jefferson Parish, the most recent exclusive dealing case to reach the Supreme Court, the Court held that "[e]xclusive dealing is an unreasonable restraint on trade only when a significant fraction of buyers or sellers are frozen out of a market by the exclusive deal." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 45. Generally speaking, cases construing Jefferson Parish have held that an agreement must foreclose at least 30 percent to 40 percent of the market to support a § 1 violation, and one treatise

<sup>1</sup> In Tampa Elec., the Supreme Court addressed the plaintiff's claims brought under § 3 of the Clayton Act. That section provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person . . . to . . . make a sale or contract for sale of goods . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor or competitors of the . . . seller, where the effect of such . . . sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

15 U.S.C. § 14. Plaintiff here has not asserted a claim under § 3 based on the EDAs, presumably because § 3 reaches only arrangements dealing with "goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities," which are not at issue here. Id. The Court notes that in Tampa Elec., the Supreme Court stated that if an exclusive dealing arrangement "does not fall within the broader proscription of § 3 of the Clayton Act it follows that it is not forbidden by those of the [Sherman Act]." Tampa Elec., 365 U.S. at 335 (citing Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 608-609, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953)).

Professor Hovenkamp explains that "a few courts have followed the rule suggested in Times-Picayune of applying a more aggressive test under the Clayton Act than under the Sherman Act, but most apply the same test under both statutes . . . Nevertheless, the cases are divided, with a likely majority stating that the Clayton Act requires a smaller showing of anticompetitive effects." Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 2d P1800c4 (2005). See also Twin City Sportservice, Inc. v. Charles O. Finley & Co., 676 F.2d 1291, 1304 (9th Cir. 1982) ("a greater showing of anticompetitive effect is required to establish a Sherman Act violation than a section 3 Clayton Act violation in exclusive-dealing cases").

advises that there thus exists a "virtual safe harbor . . . for market foreclosure of 20 percent or less." ABA SECTION ON ANTITRUST LAW, 1 ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS [*12] 222 (5th ed. 2002). See, e.g., T.A.M., Inc. v. Gulf Oil Corp., 553 F. Supp. 499, 505 (E.D.Pa. 1982); Minnesota Mining and Manuf. Co. v. Appleton Papers Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1138, 1143 (D.Minn. 1999); United States v. Microsoft Corp., No. 98-1232, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14231, at *61 (D. D.C. 1998).

The Bank Defendants' Motion to Dismiss

With these general standards in mind, the Court turns to the issues raised by the Bank Defendants' motion to dismiss. The Bank Defendants' primary attack is that Plaintiff fails to state a claim for a horizontal conspiracy among the defendants, and therefore "may not aggregate the effects of all of the Visa or MasterCard dedication agreements in asserting an exclusive dealing claim against an individual bank." (D. Mem. at 5.) The Bank Defendants also argue for dismissal of the exclusive dealing claim because, pursuant to the Court's opinion in United States v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 183 F. Supp. 2d 613 (S.D.N.Y. 2001), the EDAs are terminable at will, and therefore will not last the extended period of time required for an exclusive dealing claim.

Horizontal Conspiracy

[*13] Plaintiff faces no additional pleading requirements by virtue of the fact that this is an antitrust case. Indeed, "a short plain statement of a claim for relief which gives notice to the opposing party is all that is necessary in antitrust cases, as in other cases under the Federal Rules." George C. Frey Ready-Mixed Concrete, Inc. v. Pine Hill Concrete Mix Corp., 554 F.2d 551, 554 (2d Cir. 1977). To make out a § 1 conspiracy claim, a plaintiff must allege three things: "(1) concerted action, (2) by two or more persons that (3) unreasonably restrains trade." In re Nine West Shoes Antitrust Litigation, 80 F. Supp. 2d 181, 190 (S.D.N.Y. 2000).

The Bank Defendants argue that Plaintiff has failed to satisfy its obligation to "do more than merely allege that a conspiracy exists," but rather "provide some factual basis for that allegation." Granite Partners, L.P. v. Bear, Stearns & Co., 58 F. Supp. 2d 228, at 238. The Bank Defendants argue that as a result, for the Court to find that Plaintiff states a claim for horizontal conspiracy, it must adopt a "walking conspiracy" view of the Association Defendants.

Under a walking conspiracy theory, every action undertaken [*14] by either Visa or MasterCard would be the equivalent of concerted action by each individual member. But the Second Circuit has rejected the concept of "membership-ratification theory as a basis for antitrust conspirator liability," holding that "every action by a trade association is not concerted action by the association's members." AD/SAT v. Associated Press, 181 F.3d 216, 234 (2d Cir. 1999) (citing Willk v. Am. Medical Ass'n, 671 F. Supp. 1465, 1492 (N.D. Ill. 1987), aff'd, 895 F.2d 352 (7th Cir. 1990)). The Second Circuit reasoned that "a finding of concerted action based on the defendants' status as members of the [association] would seriously undermine the standards articulated by the Supreme Court in Matsushita and Monsanto." Id. (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) and Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)). Under Matsushita and Monsanto, "an antitrust plaintiff must present evidence tending to show that association members, in their individual [*15] capacities, consciously committed themselves to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Id. The Second Circuit therefore rejected the use of "a 'walking conspiracy' theory in place of such a showing." Id.

The Bank Defendants also rely on Kendall v. Visa, U.S.A., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21449, No. 04 Civ. 4276 (JSW) (N.D. Cal. 2005), where Judge White recently dismissed the plaintiffs' § 1 claims against two member banks of Visa and MasterCard,<sup>2</sup> because their complaint made "no allegations that, as part of the Bank Defendants' participating in the management of, or their proprietary interest in, VISA or MASTERCARD, the Bank Defendants

---

<sup>2</sup> The plaintiffs in Kendall alleged that the associations' setting of merchant discount fees constitutes a horizontal price fixing arrangement in violation of § 1.

'knowingly, intentionally and actively participated in an individual capacity in the alleged scheme' to fix the interchange fee or merchant discount fee." Kendall v. Visa, U.S.A., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21449, No. 04 Civ. 4276 (JSW), at 3-4 (N.D. Cal. 2005). Having reviewed the complaint from Kendall, the Court finds that it is indeed devoid of any mention of the individual defendants' intentional involvement in the horizontal price-fixing scheme allegedly orchestrated by them, Visa and MasterCard. The only allegations the Kendall plaintiffs directed towards [*16] the member banks were that the banks "obtain supracompetitive profits by assessment of merchant discount fees on the deposits of Plaintiffs," and that "member banks of both VISA and MASTERCARD find it economically to their advantage not to opt out of systems which establish a non-competitive merchant discount." (Kendall Compl. at PP10, 11.)

By contrast, Plaintiff here alleges that the Bank Defendants engaged in concerted action to exclude Plaintiff from the relevant market. The complaint alleges that the Bank Defendants, "in collaboration with" the Association Defendants and other unnamed member banks, have supported the EDAs, and that they do so "because they receive the benefit of continuing the elimination of competition among each other based upon the actual or potential issuance of American Express general purpose cards by competing banks. [*17]" (Compl. at PP161, 160.) At oral argument, counsel for Plaintiff clarified that when it alleges that banks have "supported" other member banks' EDAs, it means that those banks "have voted for the procedure of the dedication agreements, and have voted to subsidize those agreements." (4/14/05 Tr. at 60.) Thus even banks without EDAs participate in the conspiracy to restrain trade "by agreeing to subsidize those banks that do, because it has the effect of continuing the horizontal constraint." Id. at 61. The unreasonable restraint of trade, according to the complaint, consists of "the harm to competition caused by the continuing boycott of American Express," a harm that outweighs any benefits accruing from "competition between Visa and MasterCard to sign member banks" to EDAs. (Compl. at P162.) Finally, the complaint alleges that the EDAs "foreclose a substantial volume of commerce from free and open competition." (Compl. at P163.)

Based on these allegations, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim that the Bank Defendants each "consciously committed themselves to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective," here, [*18] the boycott of American Express through a restraint of trade. AD/SAT v. Associated Press, 181 F.3d at 234. Plaintiff has satisfied the pleading requirements for a horizontal conspiracy under § 1, and does so without relying on the "walking conspiracy" theory rejected by the Second Circuit.<sup>3</sup> Plaintiff therefore need not allege that any individual EDA forecloses enough of the relevant market to violate that section. Accordingly, the Bank Defendant's motion to dismiss the exclusive dealing claim based on market foreclosure is denied.

The Terminability of the Exclusive Dealing Arrangements

The Bank [*19] Defendants also argue for dismissal of Plaintiff's exclusive dealing claims based on the fact that according to the Court's order in United States v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 183 F.Supp.2d 613 (S.D.N.Y. 2001), the EDAs are terminable at will by the member banks. That order provides the following injunctive relief:

In the event that any issuing member enters into an agreement to issue American Express or Discover brand payment cards on those respective networks . . . Defendants Visa U.S.A. and MasterCard shall permit that issuer to terminate, without penalty, any agreement it entered into with that Defendant prior to the effective date of this Final Judgment, pursuant to which the issuer committed to maintain a certain percentage of its general purpose card volume, new card issuance or total number of cards in force in the United States on that Defendant's network.

---

<sup>3</sup>Because the Court finds that Plaintiff has stated a claim for a horizontal conspiracy, it does not reach the issue of whether, without such a conspiracy, Plaintiff can aggregate the portion of the market foreclosed by each individual EDA in order to show that a "significant fraction of buyers and sellers are frozen out of a market." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 45.

United States v. Visa, U.S.A., Inc., 183 F. Supp. 2d at 618. The Bank Defendants point to case law upholding exclusive dealing arrangements with "reasonable termination provisions," arguing that because the Court's injunction allows banks to terminate their EDAs at will, Plaintiff's [*20] exclusive dealing claim fails as a matter of law. (Def. Br. at 6.)

The Bank Defendants rely primarily on Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793 (2d Cir. 1994), where the Second Circuit rejected the plaintiff's exclusive dealing claim. In Balaklaw, the plaintiff, an anesthesiologist, claimed that a hospital "violated the Sherman Act by entering into an exclusive contract with a group of anesthesiologists of which Dr. Balaklaw was not a member." Balaklaw, 14 F.3d at 795. The Second Circuit dismissed this claim because it found no "foreclosure of competition" and therefore no antitrust injury. Id. Under the agreement at issue, the hospital "was free at the end of six months to enter into a new arrangement with either [the current group] or with any other anesthesiologist." Id. The court explained that "[s]uch a situation may actually encourage, rather than discourage, competition, because the incumbent and other, competing anesthesiology groups have a strong incentive continually to improve the care and prices they offer in order to secure the exclusive positions." Id.

As in Balaklaw, agreements "providing short notice for termination" [*21] are often upheld. ABA SECTION ON ANTITRUST LAW, 1 ANTITRUST LAW DEVELOPMENTS 225 (5th ed. 2002). See, e.g., Western Parcel Express v. UPS of Am., 190 F.3d 974, 976 (9th Cir. 1999) (rejecting the plaintiff's exclusive dealing claim in part because "the challenged contracts had termination provisions that allowed a customer to terminate the contract for any reason with very little notice"); CDC Techs., Inc. v. IDEXX Lab., Inc., 186 F.3d 74, 81 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding it "highly significant" that the exclusive dealing agreements at issue "were easily terminable on short notice" in rejecting plaintiff's exclusive dealing claim).

An agreement's duration, however, is not dispositive of whether it violates § 1. Indeed, courts have held that even if an exclusive dealing contract is terminable at will, it can still operate as an unreasonable restraint on trade. For example, in Minnesota Mining & Manuf. Co. v. Appleton Papers, Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1138 (D.Minn. 1999) ("3M"), the district court denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment on an exclusive dealing claim, despite the fact that the agreements at issue, "sole-source" [*22] relationships between the defendant and various paper merchants, were terminable at will. The complaint alleged that by "saturating local markets with these agreements," the defendant "increased its market share by blocking its rivals' avenues of distribution." 3M, 35 F. Supp. 2d at 1140. In its motion for summary judgment, the defendant argued that because the agreements were terminable at will, its competitors remained "free to attempt to convert exclusive distributors," and therefore the agreements did not violate § 1. Id. at 1144.

Citing Tampa Elec., supra, the district court focused on "the 'practical effect' of the agreement, not merely its form," and found a genuine issue of fact as to whether or not the agreements were indeed terminable at will. The plaintiff pointed to evidence indicating that the "agreements often include incentives that have the practical effect of tying up the paper sheet inventory of a merchant over a period of several years." Id. Moreover, there existed "unique distribution factors, like the high costs a paper merchant must incur to switch completely from one brand to another, that make it very [*23] difficult for a supplier to dislodge a competitive brand from an exclusively dealing merchant." Id. There was also evidence that the defendant's "high market share and the deeply rooted customer preference for [its] brand of paper prevent merchants from surrendering [the defendant] as a supplier, which they must do under these agreements if they desire to distribute non-Appleton brands." Id. Finally, "major distributors have agreed among themselves that they will remain loyal to Appleton carbonless sheets regardless of competitors' pricing or product innovations." Id. Based on these four showings, the district court denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the plaintiff's exclusive dealing claims. See also United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 2001-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73,247 (D. Del. 2001) (denying summary judgment motion on exclusive dealing claims despite the fact that the agreements at issue were terminable at will).

Plaintiff argues that similarly, the "practical effect" of the EDAs is to bind individual member banks to a particular Visa or MasterCard for longer than permitted by the Court's order in United States v. Visa. Plaintiff [*24] explains that "[d]islodging banks from dedication agreements is likely to be particularly difficult where, as here, the parties who have conspired so effectively and for so long to boycott American Express will necessarily have a continuing incentive to accomplish the same end by other means." (P. Opp. at 11.)

The Court agrees that dismissal would be inappropriate based on the terminability of the EDAs because it remains to be seen whether the EDAs are, in fact, terminable at will. The practical ramifications considered by the court in 3M are important ones, even more so given that the motion before the Court is one to dismiss on the pleadings, rather than one for summary judgment. Moreover, under the rule of reason analysis applicable to Plaintiff's exclusive dealing claim, "the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited." K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 127 (2d Cir. 1995) (quoting Continental T. V. v. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36, 49, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977)). Therefore a single factor - the terminability of the agreements [*25] - cannot outweigh all the other factors the Court must consider, particularly not at this early pleading stage. See Am. Motor Inns, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 521 F.2d 1230 at 1252 (reversing where the district court failed to engage in the "broad inquiry" required under Tampa Elec.). Accordingly, the Bank Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's exclusive dealing claim based on the terminability of the EDAs is denied.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the Bank Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's fifth claim for restraint of trade, grounded on the EDAs, is denied.

SO ORDERED:

BARBARA S. JONES

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Dated: New York, New York

June 23, 2005

---

End of Document

Tippecanoe Assocs. II, LLC v. Kimco Lafayette 671, Inc.

Supreme Court of Indiana

June 23, 2005, Decided

No. 79S05-0506-CV-289

Reporter

829 N.E.2d 512 *; 2005 Ind. LEXIS 564 **

TIPPECANOE ASSOCIATES II, LLC, Appellant (Defendant below), v. KIMCO LAFAYETTE 671, INC., Appellee (Plaintiff below).

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the Tippecanoe Superior Court, No. 79D02-0112-CP-249. The Honorable Thomas H. Busch, Judge. On Petition To Transfer from the Indiana Court of Appeals, No. 79A05-0302-CV-85.

Tippecanoe Assocs. II, LLC v. Kimco Lafayette 671, Inc., 811 N.E.2d 438, 2004 Ind. App. LEXIS 1272 \(Ind. Ct. App., 2004\).

Disposition: Trial court's declaratory judgment affirmed.

Core Terms

---

covenant, restrictive covenant, shopping center, tenant, lease, grocery store, competitors, antitrust, unenforceable, promisee, space, site, trial court

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

Real Property Law > ... > Lease Agreements > Commercial Leases > General Overview

Real Property Law > ... > Lease Agreements > Commercial Leases > Shopping Center Leases

HN1[ Types of Contracts, Covenants

A covenant given by a shopping center to a tenant prohibiting the center from leasing to competitors of the tenant is generally enforceable. However, once the tenant or its successor voluntarily relinquishes the original use of the site, the anticompetitive covenant is severed from the occupancy and no longer enforceable to give the tenant or an assignee the right to restrict competition for a location outside the center.

829 N.E.2d 512, *512L2005 Ind. LEXIS 564, **1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Real Property Law > Landlord & Tenant > Lease Agreements > Lease Provisions

Real Property Law > ... > Lease Agreements > Commercial Leases > General Overview

Real Property Law > ... > Lease Agreements > Commercial Leases > Shopping Center Leases

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

HN2 [down] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Indiana law permits restrictive covenants but finds them disfavored and justified only to the extent they are unambiguous and enforcement is not adverse to public policy. Doubts should be resolved in favor of the free use of property and against restrictions. Courts have been quite willing to enforce restrictive covenants written in shopping center lease contracts even though they prevent competition within the center. Rather than restricting competition, such covenants serve to facilitate trade and induce tenants to rent in a particular shopping center. Restrictive covenants in shopping center leases have, for the most part, been found not to restrain competition unreasonably and have been generally found to be consistent with the public interest.

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

HN3 [down] Legislation, Overbreadth

A restraint may be unreasonable in either of two situations. The first occurs when the restraint is greater than necessary to protect the legitimate interests of the promisee. The second occurs when, even though the restraint is not greater than necessary to protect those interests, the promisee's need for protection is out-weighed by the hardship to the promisor and the likely injury to the public. Usually if a restriction is unenforceable it is because it prohibits an overbroad type of activity by the promisor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Real Property Law > ... > Lease Agreements > Commercial Leases > Shopping Center Leases

HN4 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, the issue is whether there is an adverse effect on competition. In a Sherman Act action, the proper inquiry is whether there has been an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market.

Counsel: FOR APPELLANT: Charles R. Vaughan, Linda H. Havel, Lafayette, Indiana.

FOR APPELLEE: Stephen R. Pennell, William P. Kealey, Lafayette, Indiana.

Judges: Boehm, Justice. Dickson and Rucker, JJ., concur. Sullivan, J., dissents with separate opinion in which Shepard, C.J., joins.

Opinion by: Boehm

Opinion

---

[*512] Boehm, Justice.

We hold that HN1 a covenant given by a shopping center to a tenant prohibiting the center from leasing to competitors of the tenant is generally enforceable. However, [*513] once the tenant or its successor voluntarily relinquishes the original use of the site, the anticompetitive covenant is severed from the occupancy and no longer enforceable to give the tenant or an assignee the right to restrict competition for a location outside the center.

Facts & Procedural History

In 1973, SES Development Company leased one of the stores in its Sagamore shopping center to Kroger Company for an initial term of twenty years, with four options to renew [*2] the lease, each for a term of five years.<sup>1</sup> The lease contained a restrictive covenant preventing SES from leasing space in the shopping center to another grocery store. Kroger operated a supermarket at the leased premises until 1982. In 1983, Kroger closed all three of its Tippecanoe County stores and assigned their leases to Pay Less Super Markets, Inc., which at the time operated two other grocery stores within two miles of the Sagamore Center.<sup>2</sup> After the assignment, Pay Less opened stores in two of the former Kroger sites, but Pay Less cheerfully concedes that it never intended to operate a grocery store in the Sagamore Center and acquired the Sagamore lease for the purpose of excluding competitors of its nearby stores. In 1984, Pay Less subleased its Sagamore space to H.H. Gregg, an appliance dealer, who remains in that location today.<sup>3</sup> The defendant, Tippecanoe Associates II, LLC, is a limited liability company owned by the family controlling Pay Less and the current holder of the Sagamore leasehold interest Pay Less acquired from Kroger. Tippecanoe acquired the lease in a series of maneuvers and seeks to enforce this thirty-year-old covenant against the current owner of [*3] the center, Kimko Lafayette 671, Inc.,<sup>4</sup> even though there has been no grocery store in the center since 1982.

In 2000, another large tenant, Target, left Sagamore Center, leaving nearly one-half of the center's space unoccupied. Kimco contends that the only prospective tenant to fill the void caused by Target's departure is Schuncks, a Missouri-based operator of grocery stores. Kimco filed a complaint asking the trial court to declare [*4] the restrictive covenant unenforceable. After a hearing the trial court granted Kimco's request, reasoning that "the use of the property and the surrounding area have changed so radically . . . that the original purpose of the covenant can no longer be achieved."

The Court of Appeals reversed, concluding that Tippecanoe's lease of the space to an appliance store and the empty space resulting from the Target move are not sufficient changes in the covenant to support invalidating the restrictive covenant. Tippecanoe Assoc. II, LLC v. Kimco Lafayette 671, Inc., 811 N.E.2d 438, 448-49 (Ind. Ct. App. 2004). The result is that Tippecanoe, which operates grocery stores within a few miles of the center, is allowed to enforce a restrictive covenant that neither benefits the shopping center nor Tippecanoe's interest in the shopping center [*514] (its sublease to H.H. Gregg). We now grant transfer.

---

<sup>1</sup> In 1974, the lease was amended by a lease modification agreement to provide that the initial lease began on June 1, 1974 and ended on May 31, 1994.

<sup>2</sup> The record is not clear as to how many other grocery stores, if any, Pay Less operated in the county.

<sup>3</sup> If H.H. Gregg chooses to exercise its options, it has the right to continue to occupy the former Kroger space at Sagamore Center until the expiration of the lease on June 1, 2014.

<sup>4</sup> In 1997, Kimko Lafayette 671, Inc., purchased the center from SES, subject to the Pay Less lease and the H.H. Gregg sublease.

Restrictive Covenants in Shopping Centers

HN2 [↑] Indiana law permits restrictive covenants but finds them disfavored and justified only to the extent they are unambiguous and enforcement is not adverse to public policy. One Dupont Ctr., LLC v. Dupont Auburn, LLC, 819 N.E.2d 507, 516 \(Ind. Ct. App. 2004\). [**5] Doubts should be resolved in favor of the free use of property and against restrictions. Id. However, courts have been quite willing to enforce restrictive covenants written in shopping center lease contracts even though they prevent competition within the center. See, e.g., Almacs, Inc. v. Drogin, 771 F. Supp. 506, 513 \(D. R.I. 1991\); Whitinsville Plaza, Inc. v. Kotseas, 378 Mass. 85, 390 N.E.2d 243, 252-53 \(Mass. 1979\); Kingpin, Inc. v. Hillcrest Dev., 267 Minn. 256, 126 N.W.2d 435, 439 \(Minn. 1964\); Keith Hardware v. White, 956 S.W.2d 500, 501 \(Tenn. Ct. App. 1997\) ("Rather than restricting competition, such covenants serve to facilitate trade and induce tenants to rent in a particular shopping center. . . . It is reasonable for the plaintiff to want to avoid competition within this center."); 49 Am.Jur.2d Landlord and Tenant § 70 (1995).

Restrictive covenants in shopping center leases have, for the most part, been found not to restrain competition unreasonably and have been generally found to be consistent with the public interest. The rationales for this result focus on the need to encourage [**6] the investment in new development by both the shopping center developer and its tenants. See, e.g., Vt. Nat'l Bank v. Chittenden Trust Co., 143 Vt. 257, 465 A.2d 284, 287 \(Vt. 1983\). Courts have recognized that landlords and tenants of shopping centers invest considerable sums of money to make the center attractive to customers. Parker v. Lewis Grocer Co., 246 Miss. 873, 153 So. 2d 261, 272 \(Miss. 1963\) ("Tremendous outlays of venture capital and risk are required and entailed from the supermarket tenant as well as the developer-landlord. Restrictive covenants in the nature of ancillary and reasonable restraints are absolutely required to induce investors to place a new venture in such untried area."); Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Ingles Mkts., Inc., 158 N.C. App. 414, 581 S.E.2d 111, 116 \(N.C. Ct. App. 2003\) ("The development of new shopping centers requires tremendous outlays of venture capital and risk by prospective tenants as well as by landlords; restrictive covenants against unwanted competition are consistent with the public interest in such development."). Thus, restrictive covenants have allowed shopping centers to offer "noncompetitive and diversified, but interrelated, [**7] businesses designed not to serve just one need but as many needs of the consumer as is feasible within the economic framework of the shopping center." Annotation, 97 A.L.R.2d 4, 11 (1964). Accord Valley Prop., Inc. v. King's Dep't Stores, Inc., 505 F. Supp. 92, 95 \(D. Mass. 1981\) (restrictive covenants are "necessary inducements to shopping center tenants which facilitate the orderly and harmonious development for commercial use of real property"). All of these cited reasons support limiting the covenant to protection of current tenants of the center. Both the trial court and the Court of Appeals agreed that the initial covenant to Kroger was enforceable. In evaluating Kimco's claim that the covenant created in 1982 was no longer enforceable, the trial court and Court of Appeals focused on whether there have been significant changes in the circumstances. We think there is only one factor that is central and dispositive here. Because the Kroger site in the Sagamore Center is no longer being used as a grocery store location, there is no interest within the center for the restrictive [**515] covenant to protect. Pay Less is attempting to use the covenant to restrict [**8] competition for its grocery stores located at other locations. Kroger was within its rights to assign the lease to Pay Less, and if Pay Less had chosen to continue grocery operations at the center, its interest in the lease would support enforcement of the covenant. However, Pay Less voluntarily abandoned grocery operations in the center and thereby severed the restrictive covenant from the occupancy.

The shopping center obviously receives no benefit from permitting a transfer of the covenant. And it seems unlikely that a prospective new tenant would be significantly motivated by the prospect of recouping its investment by selling a restrictive covenant to a nearby competitor if the tenant's business fails. In any event, the effect of permitting a covenant to be sold separately from the operation it is designed to protect is perhaps to add some minimal value to the original lessee, but at considerable cost to the lessor and the public. None of these rationales suggests a powerful reason to permit a secondary market in restrictive covenants divorced from the real estate they are designated to protect. It is one thing to conclude that restrictive covenants in leases of shopping center [**9] tenants should be enforceable to protect the interests of the center and those tenants who have a current protectible interest within the center. It is quite another to permit enforcement of an anticompetitive covenant by someone foreign to the center who simply acquires the right to exclude competition without making any investment in the center. And the interest of the original lessee, Kroger in this case, may well be fully served by permitting enforcement of the covenant as long as it or a successor operates a grocery store in the center.

Finally, the issue is not whether the covenant violates federal or state antitrust law. We assume Judge Posner was correct in his passing observation deeming "implausible" a claim that federal antitrust law prevented a drug store from invoking a shopping center covenant to exclude a competitor.<sup>5</sup> But the issue here is not whether the antitrust laws prevent enforcement of such a covenant. It is whether state law permits its enforcement not by a tenant of the center, but in the hands of one who has never occupied the center and merely attempts to purchase the right to exclude competition from a remote site. As the comment to the Restatement [**10] (Second) of Contracts explains:

HN3↑ The restraint may be unreasonable in either of two situations. The first occurs when the restraint is greater than necessary to protect the legitimate interests of the promisee. The second occurs when, even though the restraint is not greater than necessary to protect those interests, the promisee's need for protection is out-weighed by the hardship to the promisor and the likely injury to the public.

Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 188 cmt. a (1981). This restraint is an example of a restriction that "proscribes types of activity more extensive than necessary to protect those engaged in by the promisee." Id. § 188 cmt. d. Usually if a restriction is unenforceable it is because it prohibits an overbroad "type of activity" by the promisor. In this case it is the protected activity of the promisee that needs to be narrowed to bring the justification and the existence of the restriction into harmony. It is true that this concern usually comes [*516] up in the context of an agreement not to compete, but the rationale is equally applicable where the agreement prevents the owner of a shopping [**11] center from leasing to a specified type of store that is no longer present in the center.

The restriction also runs afoul of the second concern: it is excessively burdensome to the public and the promisor compared to a remote promisee's need for protection. There is little doubt that a competitor in the same center may be harmful to a given store, even if overall competition is unharmed. The fact that tenants demand and seek to enforce these covenants demonstrates that. Indeed, the justification for the restriction is incentive for the tenant to invest--assuming the tenant expects to be benefited from the restriction. Similarly, Tippecanoe's effort to enforce the covenant demonstrates its belief that sales will flow [**12] to a new store if one is placed in the center. It follows that the convenience of the public and certainly the interest of the landlord are served by having a grocery store in the center.

The issue HN4↑ under the Sherman Act is whether there is an adverse effect on competition, i.e. whether overall competition suffers if a second drugstore is precluded from operating in a single shopping center. United States v. Visa USA, Inc., 344 F.3d 229, 242 (2d Cir. 2003) (in a Sherman Act action, "the proper inquiry is whether there has been an 'actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market." (emphasis in original)). A typical shopping center covenant has no such effect because customers in the center are served by the one seeking to enforce the covenant, and other locations for competitors are plentiful. See, e.g., Keith Hardware, 956 S.W.2d at 501. The issue here, however, is whether it is reasonable to deny the public access to any grocery store in the center and to deny the center the benefit of a grocery store and perhaps of any tenant at all for one of its largest spaces. Enforcement of the covenant in the hands of a non-tenant [**13] runs afoul of the policy against restrictive covenants unless justified by legitimate concerns of the promisee balanced against the interests of the public and the detriment to the promisor. As explained above, the policy usually justifying covenants in shopping centers--protection and encouragement of investment--is inapplicable here. The only policy the dissent identifies is naked enforcement of contracts. That is not a sufficient policy reason. If it were, all restrictive covenants would be enforceable. But the law recognizes that public interest may under some circumstances limit the ability of private parties to arrange their affairs. This is such a case.

<sup>5</sup> The issue was expressly not addressed in Walgreen Co. v. Sara Creek Prop. Co., 966 F.2d 273, 274 (7th Cir. 1992) ("Such an exclusivity clause, common in shopping-center leases, is occasionally challenged on antitrust grounds, . . . but that is an issue for another day . . .").

In sum, because Pay Less voluntarily relinquished the Kroger site as a grocery store location, it cannot enforce the restrictive covenant to prevent the shopping center from leasing to a grocery tenant. We hold that the restrictive covenant is not enforceable and cannot be used to stop competition and protect the holder's interests at some other site.

Conclusion

We affirm the trial court's declaratory judgment that the restrictive covenant has been severed from the occupancy and is unenforceable.<sup>6</sup>

[**14] Dickson and Rucker, JJ., concur.

Sullivan, J., dissents with separate opinion in which Shepard, C.J., joins.

Dissent by: Sullivan

Dissent

---

[*517] Sullivan, Justice, dissenting.

The Court here declares unenforceable a covenant in a contract bargained for at arm's length by two sophisticated parties. I respectfully dissent.

It is on grounds of public policy violation that the Court sets aside this contract: the covenant, the Court says, is "anticompetitive." But the trial court made no findings as to the degree of competition among grocery stores in the Lafayette market and the Court cites no evidence of any.

It is true that the reported cases challenging the enforceability of shopping center lease covenants like this one--cases the Court must distinguish because they all uphold the covenants--involve situations where the beneficiary of the restrictive covenant continues to be in the business that is the subject of the covenant. The Court says it makes a difference that the beneficiary of the covenant here is in a different business. That does not justify setting aside a freely-bargained-for contractual provision unless competition is materially and adversely affected by the [**15] covenant--that the citizens of Lafayette must pay more for their groceries or travel unreasonable distances to buy them or the like. There is, to repeat, no evidence of any of that here. In setting aside the covenant on this record, the Court favors one business (the landlord) by depriving the other (the lessee) of the benefit of its bargain without any evidence of any compensating benefit to the public.

Judge Posner has called challenges to the enforceability of shopping center restrictive covenants on antitrust grounds "implausible . . . given the competition among malls." Walgreen Co. v. Sara Creek Property Co., 966 F.2d 273, 274 \(7th Cir. 1992\) (Posner, J.). And two scholars have observed that:

A noncompetition clause in a lease of property ordinarily poses no threat to the competitive process, since the arrangement restrains one person in a relevant market that normally is replete with competitors engaged in vigorous competition with one another. Absent the effect of creating or tendency to create a monopoly in the relevant geographic market, such ancillary restraint should be upheld.

Milton Handler and Daniel E. Lazaroff, Restraint of Trade [**16] and the Restatement (Second) of Contracts, 57 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 669, 679 (1982).

---

<sup>6</sup> We summarily affirm the Court of Appeals on all issues not addressed in this opinion. Ind. Appellate Rule 58\(A\)\(2\).

The Court says that Judge Posner's comment and the Handler and Lazaroff analysis are irrelevant because they address the applicability of antitrust statutes, not common law, to such covenants. But it was not the provisions of any statute that caused Judge Posner to call antitrust challenges to the enforceability of these covenants "implausible"; it was simply because these covenants don't adversely affect competition "given the competition among malls." Walgreen Co., 966 F.2d at 274. The Court's discussion of antitrust statutes reminds us that the legislative branch has undertaken to regulate competition where it has found it to be appropriate. That the legislative branch has not chosen to do so in these circumstances is another reason why I believe the court should not undo this contract.

I also dissent from the Court's willingness to go beyond declaring this particular covenant unenforceable and mandate that all such covenants are and will be unenforceable whenever they are "severed from the occupancy." This rewrites existing commercial leases and \*\*17 restrains the ability of parties in the future to enter them on terms they view to be mutually beneficial, regardless of whether there is any demonstrable adverse effect on competition.

[*518] I would affirm the decision of the Court of Appeals.

Shepard, C.J., joins.

---

End of Document

ASAP Paging Inc. v. Centurytel of San Marcos Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

June 24, 2005, Filed

No. 04-50838

Reporter

137 Fed. Appx. 694 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 12642 **; 2005-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,849; 36 Comm. Reg. (P & F) 289

ASAP PAGING INC, Plaintiff-Appellant, versus CENTURYTEL OF SAN MARCOS INC; CENTURYTEL SERVICE GROUP LLC; CENTURYTEL SECURITY SYSTEMS OF TEXAS LP; CENTURYTEL INC, Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [**1] RULES OF THE FIFTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas. 1:04-CV-181-SS.

Core Terms

---

tariff, antitrust claim, numbers, district court, filed rate doctrine, charges, Skiing, switch, toll, doctrine of primary jurisdiction, Telecommunications, antitrust, proceedings, Preemption, customers, rated

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reviews a dismissal for failure to state a claim de novo.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A claim should be dismissed only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

137 Fed. Appx. 694, *694L 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 12642, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Common Carriers

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Federal Communications Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN3 Filed Rate Doctrine, Common Carriers

Under the "filed rate doctrine" (also sometimes called the "filed tariff doctrine"), when a carrier is required to file a tariff of its charges with a regulatory body, the charges filed are the only charges that the carrier may lawfully assess. The carrier cannot deviate from the tariff, and the terms of the tariff can be initially challenged only before the agency that approved the tariff, not in a court.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > US Federal Communications Commission Jurisdiction

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Federal Communications Act > Jurisdiction

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Telecommunications Act > Jurisdiction

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

HN4 Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

The doctrine of primary jurisdiction applies either when a government agency has exclusive original jurisdiction over an issue within a case or when a court having jurisdiction wishes to defer to an agency's superior expertise.

Communications Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

137 Fed. Appx. 694, *694L 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 12642, **1

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > US Federal Communications Commission Jurisdiction

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Federal Communications Act > General Overview

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Federal Communications Act > Jurisdiction

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Telecommunications Act > Jurisdiction

HN5 Communications Law, Federal Acts

Under 47 U.S.C.S. § 207, a plaintiff may complain of being damaged either to the Federal Communications Commission or in federal district court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Damages

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Federal Communications Act > General Overview

HN6 Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

See 47 U.S.C.S. § 207.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

HN7 Reviewability, Jurisdiction & Venue

Even where the doctrine of primary jurisdiction could be applied to a plaintiff's claims, a court must weigh the benefits of obtaining an agency's aid against the need to resolve the litigation expeditiously and may defer only if the benefits of agency review exceed the costs imposed on the parties.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Entry of Judgments > Stays of Judgments > General Overview

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Entities > Cable Systems > US Federal Communications Commission Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

HN8 Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

When dismissal may cause a plaintiff to lose rights, claims should be stayed pending deferral to an agency rather than dismissed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Telecommunications Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Telecommunications Act > General Overview

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Telecommunications Act > Federal Preemption

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Telecommunications Act specifically provides that it will not impair or supersede antitrust law. The Telecommunications Act does not expand the coverage of the antitrust laws, so behavior needs to constitute an antitrust violation in its own right for an antitrust action to lie. The Sherman Act generally does not restrict a private entity's refusal to deal, except in certain egregious circumstances. A refusal to deal does not fit within the limited exception where factors indicating a willingness to forgo short-term profit for anticompetitive purposes are absent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Where a defendant ends a previous voluntary practice that is presumably profitable, and will not accept retail price from a plaintiff for its product, this indicates a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN11[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Texas law instructs that Texas antitrust provisions shall be construed in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.04.

Counsel: For ASAP PAGING INC, Plaintiff - Appellant: W Scott McCollough, Austin, TX.

For CENTURYTEL OF SAN MARCOS INC, CENTURYTEL SERVICE GROUP LLC, CENTURYTEL SECURITY SYSTEMS OF TEXAS LP, CENTURYTEL INC, Defendants - Appellees: Richard D Milvenan, McGinnis, Lochridge & Kilgore, Capitol Center, Austin, TX.

Judges: Before GARWOOD, GARZA and BENAVIDES, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

---

[*694] PER CURIAM: *

ASAP Paging, Inc. (ASAP) appeals the dismissal without prejudice of its antitrust, [*695] Communications Act, and tortious interference claims against CenturyTel of San Marcos, Inc., [***2] CenturyTel Service Group, L.L.C., CenturyTel Security Systems of Texas, L.P., and CenturyTel, Inc. (collectively, CenturyTel). We affirm the district court's dismissal of the antitrust claims. We vacate the dismissal of the remaining claims and remand to the district court with instructions to stay these claims pending the outcome of related proceedings in state court and with the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

Facts and Proceedings Below

ASAP provides paging services and access to Internet service providers (ISPs) for customers in San Marcos, Texas and the surrounding communities of Fentress, Kyle, and Lockhart. CenturyTel is the incumbent local telephone company for San Marcos. There is an extended local calling service (ELCS) arrangement between the San Marcos exchange and several surrounding exchanges, including those of Kyle, Fentress and Lockhart, such that calls between these exchanges are charged at a local call rate. ASAP obtained telephone numbers from the FCC pursuant to its license as a commercial mobile radio service (CMRS) provider, and chose numbers that are normally associated with the Fentress, Lockhart, and Kyle exchanges. Calls to these phone [***3] numbers are routed by the relevant local telephone carriers to ASAP's switch, which was located in Austin, outside of the San Marcos ELCS area, during 2001 and 2002.

From October 2001 through March 2002, CenturyTel customers in San Marcos could dial ASAP's numbers assigned to Lockhart, Fentress or Kyle as local calls. Starting on April 1, 2002, however, CenturyTel began charging these calls as long-distance calls. This resulted in a greatly reduced call volume to ASAP's customers having these phone numbers. According to CenturyTel, it started charging calls to the ASAP numbers as toll calls once it determined that the calls were going to ASAP's switch in Austin.

ASAP immediately filed a complaint with the Texas Public Utility Commission (PUC), asking the commission to order CenturyTel to stop assessing toll charges on the calls. In an order issued October 9, 2003, the PUC ruled against ASAP, finding that the geographic location being called, rather than the exchange associated with the number being called, should determine whether a call is rated local or long distance. The commission also found that CenturyTel was following the tariff it filed with the PUC in assessing the toll [***4] charges. ASAP's appeal of the PUC order is currently working its way through the Texas court system.

In October or November of 2003, ASAP installed a switch in Kyle, which is in the San Marcos ELCS area. CenturyTel refused to rate calls from San Marcos to this Kyle switch as local, however. CenturyTel indicated to ASAP that ASAP would have to establish a direct interconnection with CenturyTel through an interconnection

---

* Pursuant to 5TH CIR. R. 47.5 the Court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except under the limited circumstances set forth in 5TH CIR. R. 47.5.4.

agreement, rather than the existing indirect connection through another telephone company, in order for the calls to be rated as other than toll calls, regardless of the location of the switch.<sup>1</sup>

In December of 2003, ASAP filed a Petition for Preemption with the FCC, requesting that the FCC [**5] preempt the PUC order in accordance with the FCC's authority to preempt state regulation that has the effect of prohibiting the provision [*696] of telecommunications service. See 47 U.S.C. §§ 253\(d\), 332\(c\)\(3\). The FCC has not acted on this petition, which remains pending before it.

ASAP subsequently filed a complaint in the Western District of Texas including federal and state antitrust claims, state tortious interference claims, and claims for damages under sections 206 and 207 of the Communications Act (47 U.S.C. §§ 206, 207), alleging violations of 47 U.S.C. §§ 201, 202, 251\(a\) and 251\(b\)\(3\). Id. at 38-42. ASAP points out in the complaint that some of its claims may be nearing the end of statute-of-limitations periods, and suggests that abatement of the action pending disposition of the petition for preemption to the FCC could be helpful to the court.

CenturyTel filed a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, arguing that (1) all of the claims are barred by the filed rate doctrine, (2) the antitrust claims are defective and barred [**6] as a matter of law by the Supreme Court's decision in Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 \(2004\), and (3) that the claims under the Communications Act should be dismissed because of the "primary jurisdiction" of the FCC. After a response to the motion, reply to the response, and a hearing, the district court issued an order dismissing ASAP's claims without prejudice. The court found that all of ASAP's claims are barred by the filed rate doctrine, and that, alternatively, the antitrust claims are barred by the Trinko decision and the Communications Act claims are barred by the doctrine of primary jurisdiction. ASAP appeals.

Discussion

I. Standard of Review

HN1 This court reviews a dismissal for failure to state a claim de novo. United States ex rel. Riley v. St. Luke's Episcopal Hosp., 355 F.3d 370, 375 \(5th Cir. 2004\). The HN2 claim should be dismissed "only if 'it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'" Id. (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 102, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\)).

[**7] II. Filed Rate Doctrine and Doctrine of Primary Jurisdiction

HN3 Under the "filed rate doctrine" (also sometimes called the "filed tariff doctrine"), when a carrier is required to file a tariff of its charges with a regulatory body, the charges filed are the only charges that the carrier may lawfully assess. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Cent. Office Tel., Inc., 524 U.S. 214, 118 S. Ct. 1956, 1962-63, 141 L. Ed. 2d 222 \(1998\). The carrier cannot deviate from the tariff, and the terms of the tariff can be initially challenged only before the agency that approved the tariff, not in a court. Arsberry v. Illinois, 244 F.3d 558, 562 \(7th Cir. 2001\); Southwestern Elec. Power Co. v. Grant, 73 S.W.3d 211, 216-17, 45 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 502 \(Tex. 2002\). ASAP argues that the filed rate doctrine does not apply to its dispute with CenturyTel because ASAP is not challenging the terms of the tariff, but rather CenturyTel's (and the PUC's) interpretation of the tariff: specifically, whether calls to ASAP's numbers should be classified as local or toll for application of the tariff.

There is no indication in the record that CenturyTel's filed tariff directly addresses [**8] which rate should be applied to calls to numbers such as ASAP's. Whether CenturyTel is following its tariff such that the filed rate doctrine would apply therefore depends on whether the PUC's interpretation of CenturyTel's tariff survives review by the state appellate courts and the FCC. In the event that either a Texas court or the FCC overturns the [*697] PUC's interpretation of the tariff, ASAP may have rights against CenturyTel that will be lost through the running of statutes of limitations. Staying the action in the district court to avoid this potential prejudice to ASAP is therefore the appropriate course, particularly since the district court seems to have intended that ASAP be able to present its claims again depending on the outcome of the other proceedings.<sup>2</sup> [**9] In addition, this approach would allow time for ASAP to obtain a ruling from the PUC on whether CenturyTel was following its tariff in refusing to rate calls to ASAP's Kyle switch as local calls.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup>The Telecommunications Act of 1996 provides for interconnection agreements between telecommunications carriers establishing compensation between the carriers for various services. See 47 U.S.C. §§ 251\(c\)\(1\), 252. There is no interconnection agreement between ASAP and CenturyTel.

The district court also dismissed ASAP's Communications Act claims based on the doctrine of primary jurisdiction. HN4[] The doctrine of primary jurisdiction applies either when a government agency has exclusive original jurisdiction over an issue within a case or when a court having jurisdiction wishes to defer to an agency's superior expertise. Arsberry, 244 F.3d at 563. These circumstances do not appear to apply to ASAP's Communications Act claims. Although the district court indicated that ASAP had requested that "the FCC exercise jurisdiction over each of its [Telecommunications Act] claims," ASAP's Petition for Preemption does not appear to be an assertion of Communications Act or Telecommunications Act claims against CenturyTel. [**10] HN5[] Under 47 U.S.C. § 207, ASAP may complain of being damaged by CenturyTel either to the FCC or in federal district court, and ASAP has chosen to do so in district court.<sup>4</sup> ASAP's petition for preemption is not a submission of its claims against CenturyTel to the FCC, but instead it is essentially a claim against the PUC, specifically an assertion that the PUC's interpretation is preempted by federal law.

HN7[] Even to the extent that the doctrine of primary jurisdiction could [**11] be applied to any of ASAP's claims, a court "must weigh the benefits of obtaining the agency's aid against the need to resolve the litigation expeditiously and may defer only if the benefits of agency review exceed the costs imposed on the parties." Wagner & Brown v. ANR Pipeline Co., 837 F.2d 199, 201 (5th Cir. 1988). HN8[] When dismissal may cause a plaintiff to lose rights, claims should be stayed pending deferral to an agency rather than dismissed. Id. at 206. Staying of the case pending the outcome of the state court and FCC proceedings is therefore appropriate for any dismissals based on the primary jurisdiction doctrine as well as for those based on the filed rate doctrine.

III. Antitrust Claims

The district court dismissed ASAP's antitrust claims as barred by the Supreme Court's Trinko decision, in addition to dismissing them under the filed rate doctrine. Although we do not agree with the district [*698] court's apparent rationale, that the antitrust claims should be dismissed by virtue of being premised on the Telecommunications Act, dismissal of the antitrust claims was nonetheless proper.

The Supreme Court noted in Trinko that [**12] HN9[] the Telecommunications Act specifically provided that it would not impair or supersede antitrust law. Trinko, 124 S. Ct. at 878. The Court held that the Telecommunications

<sup>2</sup> In addition to dismissing the claims without prejudice, the court asked CenturyTel about its willingness to waive statute-of-limitations defenses.

<sup>3</sup> The PUC appears to have exclusive primary jurisdiction on this question, which it has not yet considered with respect to the Kyle switch. TEX. UTIL. CODE § 52.002\(a\) (stating that the PUC "has exclusive original jurisdiction over the business and property of a telecommunications utility," subject to certain limitations).

<sup>4</sup> HN6[] Section 207 provides:

"Any person claiming to be damaged by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this chapter may either make complaint to the Commission as hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit for the recovery of the damages for which such common carrier may be liable under the provisions of this chapter, in any district court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but such person shall not have the right to pursue both such remedies."

Act did not expand the coverage of the antitrust laws, however, so that the complained-of behavior would need to constitute an antitrust violation in its own right for an antitrust action to lie. Id. The Court characterized the claim in Trinko as a refusal-to-deal claim and noted that the Sherman Act generally does not restrict a private entity's refusal to deal, except in certain egregious circumstances such as those in Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985). Trinko, 124 S. Ct. at 879. The Court proceeded to compare the complained-of actions to those in Aspen Skiing, stating that Aspen Skiing was "at or near the outer boundary of § 2 liability." <sup>5</sup> Id. at 879-80. The Court determined that the refusal to deal alleged in Trinko did not fit within the limited exception recognized in Aspen Skiing, since factors indicating a willingness to forgo short-term profit for [**13] anticompetitive purposes were absent.<sup>6</sup> Id.

[**14] ASAP's complaint alleges that CenturyTel's decision to rate its customers' calls to ASAP's numbers as long distance was part of a scheme to harm ASAP as a competitor in the one-way inbound call capability market. This is essentially a milder form of the refusal-to-deal claim in Trinko. In Trinko, the defendant allegedly refused to connect competitors, while in this case, CenturyTel allegedly refused to connect ASAP on favorable enough terms. CenturyTel's conduct should therefore be compared to that of the defendant in Aspen Skiing to see whether an antitrust action can be recognized.

Although ASAP claims that CenturyTel "voluntarily" rated calls to their numbers as local from October 2001 through March 2002, the complaint does not allege that CenturyTel understood where ASAP's switch was located at that time. So there is no indication that the prior arrangement was agreed to, and therefore presumably profitable, in the manner of the ski ticket arrangement in Aspen Skiing. And there is otherwise nothing that would suggest that CenturyTel is giving up short-term profits in hopes of running ASAP out of business. CenturyTel gets more short-term profit, not less, [*699] by charging [**15] the calls to ASAP's numbers as toll calls. Even if no one calls ASAP anymore when the calls are rated as toll, CenturyTel is not giving up profits as compared to rating calls to ASAP as local, because CenturyTel's customers pay a flat fee for local service. ASAP's allegations do not fit into the Aspen Skiing exception for refusal-to-deal claims, and therefore do not state a cognizable antitrust claim. The antitrust claims were therefore properly dismissed.<sup>7</sup>

Conclusion

Because ASAP's antitrust claims are barred by the Supreme Court's Trinko decision, we AFFIRM the district court's dismissal of the antitrust claims. We VACATE the dismissal of the Communications Act and tortious interference claims [**16] and REMAND to the district court with instructions to stay these claims pending the outcome of the state court appeals of the PUC order and the Petition for Preemption with the FCC.

<sup>5</sup> In Aspen Skiing, the defendant, who operated three ski resorts in the area, decided to stop participating with the plaintiff, who operated the fourth resort, in a joint all-resort ski ticket. Trinko, 124 S. Ct. at 879; Aspen Skiing, 105 S. Ct. at 2851-52. The defendant refused all efforts by the plaintiff to reinstate the ticket, even an offer to essentially buy the defendant's tickets at retail price. Trinko, 124 S. Ct. at 879; Aspen Skiing, 105 S. Ct. at 2853. In upholding a verdict for the plaintiff, the Court in Aspen Skiing found significant that the HN10 [defendant] ended a previous voluntary practice that was presumably profitable, and would not accept retail price. This indicated a "willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end." Trinko, 124 S. Ct. at 880; Aspen Skiing, 105 S. Ct. at 2861.

<sup>6</sup> In Trinko, a customer of a competing local exchange carrier sued Verizon, the incumbent local exchange carrier, when Verizon fell behind on filling orders by competing carriers for access to its network. Trinko, 124 S. Ct. at 876-77. The plaintiff did not claim that Verizon had previously engaged in a voluntary course of dealing with its competitors, and Verizon did not refuse an offer at retail price, but rather refused (according to the plaintiff) to provide services at a statutory wholesale rate. Id.

<sup>7</sup> HN11 [Texas law instructs that Texas antitrust provisions "be construed in harmony with federal judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes." TEX. BUS. COMM. CODE § 15.04. Dismissal of both the state and federal antitrust claims was therefore proper.

---

End of Document

Med. Sav. Ins. Co. v. HCA, Inc.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, Fort Myers Division

June 24, 2005, Decided ; June 24, 2005, Filed

Case No. 2:04-cv-156-FtM-29DNF

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20206 *; 2005 WL 1528666

MEDICAL SAVINGS INSURANCE COMPANY, Plaintiff, vs. HCA, INC., HCA HEALTH SERVICES OF FLORIDA, INC., LEE MEMORIAL HEALTH SYSTEM, CAPE MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, MARTIN MEMORIAL HEALTH SYSTEMS, INC., MARTIN MEMORIAL MEDICAL CENTER, INC., FLORIDA HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION, INC., and FLORIDA HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Affirmed by Medical Sav. Ins. Co. v. HCA, Inc., 186 Fed. Appx. 919, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 16430 (11th Cir. Fla., June 27, 2006)

Prior History: *Medical Sav. Ins. Co. v. HCA, Inc.*, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51601 \(M.D. Fla., Jan. 31, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

insureds, antitrust, alleges, amended complaint, business relationship, defendants', injuries, tortious interference, acute care hospital, inflated, prices, acute care, defamation, motion to dismiss, overcharges, patients, charges, hospitalization, customers, conspiracy, asserts, boycott, Counts, hospitalization insurance, fail to state a claim, prospective insured, health insurance, Sherman Act, contractual, customary

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding a motion to dismiss, a court must accept all factual allegations in a complaint as true and take them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. A complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts that would entitle it to relief. Dismissal is warranted under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\)* if, assuming the truth of the factual allegations of plaintiff's complaint, there is a dispositive legal issue which precludes relief. A court need not accept unsupported conclusions of law or of mixed law and fact in a complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 Justiciability, Standing

The Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) standard applies when a court reviews issues of standing pursuant to a motion to dismiss. The principal purpose of standing is to ensure that the parties before a court have a concrete interest in the outcome of the proceedings such that they can be expected to properly frame the issues. Every complaint must contain sufficient allegations of standing, but a complaint may be dismissed for lack of standing only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. Standing always remains an open issue, and can be revisited under a different standard at the summary judgment stage or at trial. It is plaintiff's responsibility to allege facts sufficient to establish its standing, and a court cannot speculate concerning the existence of standing, nor should it imagine or piece together an injury sufficient to give plaintiff standing when it has demonstrated none.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN3 Justiciability, Standing

In order to establish standing, a plaintiff must adequately allege, and ultimately prove, three elements: (1) that it has suffered an "injury-in-fact;" (2) a causal connection between the asserted injury-in-fact and the challenged conduct of the defendant; and (3) that the injury likely will be redressed by a favorable decision. These requirements are the "irreducible minimum" required by the Constitution for a plaintiff to proceed in federal court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

HN4 Justiciability, Standing

A plaintiff seeking injunctive relief lacks standing unless it alleges facts giving rise to an inference that it will suffer future injury by defendant. A party has standing to seek injunctive relief only if the party alleges, and ultimately proves, a real and immediate--as opposed to a merely conjectural or hypothetical--threat of future injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Florida Antitrust Act, Fla. Stat. Ann. § 542.15 et seq., was patterned after the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., and was intended to complement and follow the federal court interpretations of the Sherman Act. Fla. Stat. Ann. § 542.32.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Elements

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN6 [down] Standing, Injury in Fact

The question of standing to sue under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is one of law. In order to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action, a court must review the allegations contained in the complaint. More than constitutional standing must exist; a court must find a close relationship between a plaintiff's injury and an alleged antitrust violation. Antitrust standing requires more than the injury in fact and the case or controversy required by Article III of the Constitution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN7 [down] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit uses a two-prong approach in deciding whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. First, a plaintiff must establish that it has suffered "antitrust injury. As the United States Supreme Court has made clear, to have standing antitrust plaintiffs must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market, that is, but for causation. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. Antitrust injuries include only those injuries that result from interference with the freedom to compete. Second, a plaintiff must establish that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. This determination is predicated on the "target area test," which requires that an antitrust plaintiff both prove that he is within that sector of the economy endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry and that he is the target against which anticompetitive activity is directed. A plaintiff must show that it is a customer or competitor in the relevant antitrust market.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN8 [down] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

Under Florida law, the elements of tortious interference with a business relationship are: (1) the existence of a business relationship that affords plaintiff existing or prospective legal rights; (2) defendant's knowledge of the business relationship; (3) defendant's intentional and unjustified interference with the relationship; and (4) damage to plaintiff.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Business Relationships > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN9 [down] Intentional Interference, Elements

An action for tortious interference with a business relationship generally requires a business relationship evidenced by an actual and identifiable understanding or agreement which in all probability would have been completed if defendant had not interfered. A claim of tortious interference with a business relationship requires proof that plaintiff had a business relationship with "identifiable customers." The cause of action cannot be established by proof that defendant interfered with a relationship between plaintiff and the public at large.

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Fair Comment & Opinion

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defamation > Elements > General Overview

HN10 [down] Defenses, Fair Comment & Opinion

Under Florida law, to state a cause of action for defamation, a plaintiff must allege that (1) defendant published a false statement (2) about plaintiff (3) to a third party and (4) that the falsity of the statement caused injury to plaintiff. Florida courts also recognize a distinction between a pure expression of opinion, which is not actionable, and a mixed expression of opinion. Pure opinion occurs when a defendant makes a comment or opinion based on facts which are set forth in the article or which are otherwise known or available to the reader or listener as a member of the public. Mixed expression of opinion occurs when an opinion or comment is made which is based upon facts regarding the plaintiff or his conduct that have not been stated in the article or assumed to exist by the parties to a communication.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Torts > ... > Defamation > Defenses > Fair Comment & Opinion

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > Procedural Matters

HN11 [blue icon] Jury Trials, Province of Court & Jury

In a defamation action, whether a statement is one of pure or mixed opinion is an issue of law. In determining whether a statement is one of pure or mixed opinion, a court must examine the statement in its totality and the context in which it was uttered or published. A court must consider all of the words used, not merely a particular phrase or sentence. A court must give weight to cautionary terms used by the person publishing the statement and consider all of the circumstances surrounding the statement, including the medium by which the statement is disseminated and the audience to which it is published.

Counsel: [*1] For Medical Savings Insurance Company, Plaintiff: Alan Jeffrey Nisberg, John W. Kauffman, Butler Pappas Weihmuller Katz Craig LLP, Tampa, FL.

For HCA, Inc., HCA Health Services of Florida, Inc., Defendants: Adam Coates, Jeffrey W. Kilduff, Lani Miller, O'Melveny & Myers, LLP, Washington, DC; Benjamin H. Hill, III, Lara J. Tibbals, Marie A. Borland, Patrick J. Risch, Hill, Ward & Henderson, P.A., Tampa, FL; David R. Lipson, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, Washington, DC.

For Lee Memorial Health Systems, Inc., Defendant: Geoffrey P. Forgione, Julia C. Ambrose, Kevin D. McDonald, Toby G. Singer, Jones Day, Washington, DC; H. Jack Klingensmith, Walters Levine Brown Klingensmith & Thomison, PA, Sarasota, FL; Robert Clark McCurdy, Lee Memorial Health System, Ft. Myers, FL.

For Martin Memorial Health System, Martin Memorial Medical Center, Inc., Defendants: Jerome W. Hoffman, Holland & Knight LLP, Tallahassee, FL; Steven L. Brannock, David C. Borucke, Holland & Knight, LLP, Tampa, FL.

For Florida Hospital Association, Inc., Florida Hospital Association Management Corporation, Defendants: James R. Atwood, Jay T. Smith, Covington & Burling, Washington, DC; Robert L. Ciotti, Carlton [*2] Fields, P.A., Tampa, FL.

Judges: JOHN E. STEELE, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JOHN E. STEELE

Opinion

---

OPINION AND ORDER

This matter comes before the Court on the following dispositive motions: (1) HCA defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Second Amended Complaint for Lack of Standing and for Failure to State a Claim (Doc. #108); (2) Martin Memorial's Motion to Dismiss Second Amended Complaint (Doc. #109); (3) Florida Hospital Association, Inc. and Florida Hospital Association Management Corporation's Motion to Dismiss Second Amended Complaint (Doc. #110); and (4) Defendants Lee Memorial Health System and Cape Memorial Hospital's Motion to Dismiss the Second Amended Complaint (Doc. #111). Plaintiff Medical Savings Insurance Company filed Plaintiff's Consolidated Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Third Amended Complaint (Doc. #122).<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff filed a Notice of Supplemental Authority (Doc. #125) on February 24, 2005.

---

<sup>1</sup> On January 4, 2005, plaintiff filed a motion for leave to file a third amended complaint omitting the claim under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act against all defendants. Plaintiff's other claims remain unaltered. The Court, on January 31, 2005, granted leave to amend the Second Amended Complaint and applied the pending Motions to Dismiss (Doc. ##108-111) to the Third Amended Complaint, with the exception of the arguments directed to FDUTPA, which became moot. (Doc. #117.) Thus, the remaining arguments in the subject motions are applicable to the Third Amended Complaint (Doc. #119).

[*3] In an Order (Doc. #87) dated October 25, 2004, the Court dismissed certain counts with prejudice and other counts without prejudice. At plaintiff's request (Doc. #92), the Court allowed plaintiff to file another amended complaint to attempt to cure the deficiencies identified by the Court. (Doc. #104). Thus, for the reasons set forth in footnote one, the Third Amended Complaint (Doc. #119) is now the operative pleading. The Court freely plagiarizes from its October 25, 2004, Order where appropriate.

I.

HN1 [↑] In deciding a motion to dismiss, the Court must accept all factual allegations in a complaint as true and take them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Christopher v. Harbury, 536 U.S. 403, 406, 153 L. Ed. 2d 413, 122 S. Ct. 2179 (2002); Hill v. White, 321 F.3d 1334, 1335 (11th Cir. 2003). A complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts that would entitle it to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957) (footnote omitted); Marsh v. Butler County, Ala., 268 F.3d 1014, 1022 (11th Cir. 2001) (en banc). Even this liberal standard has its limits, however. Dura Pharm., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 161 L. Ed. 2d 577, 125 S. Ct. 1627, 1634 (2005). [*4] Additionally, dismissal is warranted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) if, assuming the truth of the factual allegations of plaintiff's complaint, there is a dispositive legal issue which precludes relief. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 326, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 109 S. Ct. 1827 (1989); Brown v. Crawford County, Ga., 960 F.2d 1002, 1009-10 (11th Cir. 1992). The Court need not accept unsupported conclusions of law or of mixed law and fact in a complaint. Marsh, 268 F.3d at 1036 n.16.

HN2 [↑] This standard applies when the Court reviews issues of standing pursuant to a motion to dismiss. The principal purpose of standing is to ensure that the parties before the Court have a concrete interest in the outcome of the proceedings such that they can be expected to properly frame the issues. Harris v. Evans, 20 F.3d 1118, 1121 (11th Cir. 1994) (en banc), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1045, 115 S. Ct. 641, 130 L. Ed. 2d 546 (1994). Every complaint must contain sufficient allegations of standing. Church v. City of Huntsville, 30 F.3d 1332, 1336 (11th Cir. 1994), but the complaint may be dismissed for lack of standing only "if it is clear [*5] that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Jackson v. Okaloosa County, Fla., 21 F.3d 1531, 1534 (11th Cir. 1994) (citation omitted). Standing always remains an open issue, and can be revisited under a different standard at the summary judgment stage or at trial. Church, 30 F.3d at 1336; Harris, 20 F.3d at 1121 n.4. This having been said, it is still plaintiff's responsibility to allege facts sufficient to establish its standing, and the Court cannot "speculate concerning the existence of standing, nor should we imagine or piece together an injury sufficient to give plaintiff standing when it has demonstrated none." Miccosukee Tribe of Indians of Fla. v. Florida State Athletic Comm'n, 226 F.3d 1226, 1229-30 (11th Cir. 2000); see also Shotz v. Cates, 256 F.3d 1077, 1081 (11th Cir. 2001).

HN3 [↑] In order to establish standing, a plaintiff must adequately allege, and ultimately prove, three elements: (1) that it has suffered an "injury-in-fact;" (2) a causal connection between the asserted injury-in-fact and the challenged conduct of the [*6] defendant; and (3) that the injury likely will be redressed by a favorable decision. Shotz, 256 F.3d at 1081, citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351, 112 S. Ct. 2130 (1992). These requirements are the "irreducible minimum" required by the Constitution for a plaintiff to proceed in federal court. Vermont Agency of Natural Res. v. United States, 529 U.S. 765, 771, 146 L. Ed. 2d 836, 120 S. Ct. 1858 (2000); Northeastern Fla. Chapter, Associated Gen. Contractors of Am. v. City of Jacksonville, 508 U.S. 656, 664, 124 L. Ed. 2d 586, 113 S. Ct. 2297 (1993).

In addition, HN4 [↑] a plaintiff seeking injunctive relief lacks standing unless it alleges facts giving rise to an inference that it will suffer future injury by the defendant. Shotz, 256 F.3d at 1081. "[A] party has standing to seek injunctive relief only if the party alleges, and ultimately proves, a real and immediate - as opposed to a merely conjectural or hypothetical - threat of future injury." Church, 30 F.3d at 1337; see also Bowen v. First Family Fin. Servs., Inc., 233 F.3d 1331, 1340 (11th Cir. 2000).

II.

The forty-six page Third Amended Complaint (Doc. #119) sets forth the following [*7] material facts, which at this stage of the proceedings are assumed to be true. Plaintiff Medical Savings Insurance Company (plaintiff or Medical Savings) is an insurance company authorized to do business as an acute care hospitalization insurer in, among other places, the State of Florida. Plaintiff's hospitalization insurance product requires a fairly significant level of self-insurance by the patients/insureds through Health Savings Accounts. Plaintiff's insurance policies provide coverage for "reasonable and customary" hospital charges, not the commonly referenced "usual and customary" charges. Pursuant to this policy provision, plaintiff will not pay what it considers to be unreasonable overcharges by health care providers. Medical Savings is also a provider in the health care financial services market, which it views as making it a competitor with defendants in the "related and inextricably intertwined" health insurance market. (Doc. #119, P21).

Medical Savings qualified for the acute care hospitalization insurance market in Florida in 1997, and began actively marketing its insurance product in early 2000. Medical Savings has approximately 15,000 insureds in Florida. Florida [*8] sales of its insurance policies rose generally at a substantial overall rate from April 2000 through December 2002. By December 2003, however, the sales growth of its insurance product in Florida had significantly declined, and this decline continued through the filing of the Third Amended Complaint. Plaintiff contends that this decline in sales growth and volume is attributable to certain unlawful actions (concerted refusal to deal or conspiracy to boycott, inflated prices, group boycott, deceptive practices, defamation, and wrongful business interference) by the defendants. Plaintiff describes the eight defendants as the principal Florida hospital "malfeasors," their principal acute care hospital "co-conspirators," and their trade association.

Defendant HCA, Inc. (HCA) is a for-profit hospital system with 41 acute care hospitals in Florida, and is a publicly traded company on the New York Stock Exchange. Defendant HCA Health Services of Florida, Inc. (HCA Florida) is a for-profit hospital system with 3 or more acute care hospitals in Florida.<sup>2</sup> HCA and HCA Florida are dominant or controlling members of defendant Florida Hospital Association, Inc. HCA controls over 10,000 acute [*9] care hospital beds in Florida, and are dominant providers of acute care hospital beds in Florida.

Defendant Lee Memorial Health System (LMHS) operates three acute care hospitals: Cape Memorial Hospital, Lee Memorial Hospital, and Lee Memorial Health System Health Park. Lee Memorial Hospital and Lee Memorial System Health Park are registered fictitious names for LMHS. Cape Memorial Hospital is owned by defendant Cape Memorial Hospital, Inc.<sup>3</sup> Defendant LMHS is a member of defendant Florida Hospital Association, Inc., and controls over 900 acute care hospital beds in Florida. In the past two years, the Lee Memorial defendants have initiated litigation against plaintiff and its insureds.

[*10] Defendants Martin Memorial Health Systems, Inc. and Martin Memorial Medical Center, Inc. are non-profit corporations that operate two acute care hospitals in Florida.<sup>4</sup> The Martin defendants have a total of 336 acute care hospital beds in Florida. Defendant Martin Memorial Medical Center, Inc. has initiated litigation against some of plaintiffs' insureds.

Defendant Florida Hospital Association, Inc. (FHA) is a tax-exempt, non-profit entity composed, in part, of 47 hospital systems that operate 322 acute care hospitals in Florida. Defendant Florida Hospital Association Management Corporation is a wholly owned subsidiary of defendant FHA.<sup>5</sup> Defendant FHA, through its FHA Insurance Services, competes with plaintiff in the Florida market for acute care hospitalization insurance by writing, selling, or otherwise providing such insurance. Defendant [*11] FHA has coordinated or attempted to coordinate

---

<sup>2</sup> Where appropriate, the Court will refer to defendants HCA, Inc. and HCA Health Services of Florida, Inc. collectively as HCA.

<sup>3</sup> Where appropriate, the Court will refer to defendants Lee Memorial Health System and Cape Memorial Hospital collectively as the Lee Memorial defendants.

<sup>4</sup> Where appropriate, the Court will refer to defendants Martin Memorial Health Systems, Inc. and Martin Memorial Medical Center, Inc. collectively as the Martin defendants.

<sup>5</sup> Where appropriate, the Court will refer to defendants Florida Hospital Association and Florida Hospital Association Management Corporation collectively as FHA.

legal action against plaintiff and has urged its members to avoid a dispute resolution program established by the Florida legislature.<sup>6</sup>

The eight-count Third Amended Complaint (Doc. #119) alleges the following causes of action: (1) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (group boycott and/or concerted refusal to deal) as to six defendants; (2) violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (price-fixing conspiracy) as to all defendants; (3) violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act (monopolization) as to two defendants; (4) violation of Florida's Antitrust Act (price-fixing and group boycott and/or concerted refusal to deal) as to all defendants; (5) [*12] violation of Florida's Antitrust Act (monopolization) as to one defendant; (6) tortious interference with business relations under Florida law, apparently as to all defendants; (7) defamation under Florida law as to two defendants; and (8) injunctive relief pursuant to Section 16 of the Clayton Act as to all defendants.

Count I alleges that six defendants (all except Lee Memorial Health System and Cape Memorial Hospital) entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy to refuse to deal with and to boycott Medical Savings in order to maintain, enhance or further solidify their concerted efforts to stabilize inflated prices for acute care hospitalization services, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiff asserts this was either a per se violation of § 1, or a violation of the "rule of reason" standard. The unlawful behaviors by defendants are alleged to include: (1) rejecting payments tendered by Medical Savings for hospital goods and services; (2) refusing medical treatment to Medical Savings' insureds; (3) refusing to recognize Medical Savings' insurance when admitting patients; (4) requiring Medical Savings' insureds to [*13] pay in advance before treatment is rendered; (5) coordinating sham litigation against Medical Savings and/or its insureds solely to deter challenges to defendants' inflated prices; (6) coercing insureds/patients into suing Medical Savings; and (7) making false statements to current and prospective insureds that Medical Savings refuses to pay and/or has not paid reasonable hospital charges. Plaintiff further alleges that the purpose of the boycott and refusal to deal with Medical Savings is to (1) punish Medical Savings for challenging inflated hospital prices, and (2) force Medical Savings out of the Florida health insurance market. Plaintiff alleges that defendants' behavior has resulted in antitrust injuries to competition in the acute care hospitalization services market and the healthcare insurance market, with the following specific antitrust injuries to Medical Savings: (1) lost customers; (2) lost sales; (3) lost revenue; (4) lost profits; (5) lost goodwill; (6) lost business opportunities in the healthcare insurance market; and (7) litigation expenses resulting from a pattern of "sham" proceedings initiated solely to further defendants' anti-competitive scheme. Plaintiff alleges [*14] that these injuries are distinct from injuries suffered by its insureds.

Count II alleges that all defendants entered into one or more agreement(s) to set prices in the acute care hospitalization services market at artificially elevated levels which bore no relation to the true prices that would prevail in a competitive marketplace, in violation of §1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff asserts this was either a per se violation of §1, or a violation of the "rule of reason." The unlawful behaviors by defendants are alleged to include: (1) knowingly sending inflated invoices to Medical Services and demanding full payment; (2) rejecting payments for the reasonable value for goods and services rendered; and (3) initiating efforts to collect on the inflated amounts. The efforts to collect on the artificially inflated invoices are alleged to have caused the same seven antitrust injuries to Medical Savings as described in Count I.

Count III alleges that HCA and LMHS conspired and attempted to monopolize the acute care health services market in Lee County, Florida. Defendants are alleged to have charged "supra-competitive prices" to Medical Savings and to patients, and to have engaged in [*15] anticompetitive conduct, including the deliberate misrepresentation and/or concealment of material facts and information concerning the true economic cost of acute care from patients and their insurers. Plaintiff asserts that while HCA does not compete in the health insurance services market, its monopolistic behavior in the acute care hospitalization services market has direct and substantial impact on insurers like Medical Savings by raising prices which insurers are obligated to pay. Plaintiff asserts that HCA's attempts to collect the excessive overcharges have caused and continue to cause injury to Medical Savings, even though it is not responsible to pay for the artificially inflated prices. This injury is the hindrance of Medical Savings' ability to renew and sell Hospital Savings Accounts to current and prospective insureds. The use of the monopoly power to inflate invoices and enforce payment is alleged to have caused the same seven antitrust injuries to Medical Savings as described in Count I and Count II.

---

<sup>6</sup> In addition to the named defendants, the Third Amended Complaint identifies some 23 "possible co-conspirators" to this action. (Doc. #119, p. 25).

Count V alleges violation of Florida's Antitrust Act by all defendants through a contract, combination or conspiracy in constraint of Medical Savings' trade and in constraint [*16] of competitive commerce in the acute health care hospitalization market place. Plaintiff adopts the prior allegations set forth in Counts I through Count III.

Count VI alleges violation of Florida's Antitrust Act by defendant HCA based on its monopolistic conduct targeting trade or commerce in the acute health care hospitalization marketplace in Florida. Plaintiff adopts the prior allegations set fourth in Counts III and Count V.

Count VII alleges tortious interference with business relations, apparently by all defendants. Plaintiff asserts that it had valid contractual relationships with its insureds, that defendants intentionally interfered with its insureds and induced breach or termination of the existing and prospective business relationships, and that Medical Savings lost current and prospective business relationships and incurred significant litigation expenses. The interference consisted of: (1) refusing to provide medical treatment to Medical Savings' insureds; (2) refusing to recognize Medical Savings' insurance when admitting its insureds; (3) requiring Medical Savings' insureds to provide down payments as condition precedent to treatment; (4) instituting sham litigation [*17] against Medical Savings' insureds for purposes of coercing them to aid and abet defendants' illicit practices; (5) misleading Medical Savings' insureds by telling them that Medical Savings does not pay reasonable charges for hospital goods and services; and (6) defaming Medical Savings to its insureds by telling patients and the public that Medical Savings does not honor its contractual obligation to pay reasonable amounts for hospital goods and services.

Count VIII alleges that LMHS and MMMC used defamatory language concerning Medical Savings to current and prospective insureds which was false and which adversely affected Medical Savings' reputation in the health insurance market. More specifically, plaintiff alleges that LMHS sent a letter to an insured stating "You need to be aware that Medical Savings Health Plan is engaged in a practice, state-wide, of discounting hospital bills and claiming that the charges are not 'reasonable.' Unfortunately, Medical Savings Health Plan does not appear to have any factual basis for its assertions in this regard. This policy of Medical Savings seems to be based on the desire to maximize its profits by under-paying hospitals, rather than on any [*18] real survey of the marketplace." Plaintiff alleges that MMMC sent a letter to an insured stating "I would like to explain why we do not accept your insurance plan. The Florida Department of Insurance has recommended that hospitals not accept the plan.... Your insurance company ... arbitrarily pays whatever it deems appropriate." Plaintiff alleges that these false statements were made with malice to further the conspiracy to protect defendants' inflated pricing scheme, and resulted in actual lost sales, lost profits, lost customers, lost business opportunities, and lost goodwill.

In Count IX, plaintiff re-alleges all its prior statements and claims entitlement to injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act and Florida law.

III.

Defendants assert that dismissal of claims in the Third Amended Complaint is warranted on the following grounds: (1) plaintiff lacks antitrust standing and antitrust injury, (2) plaintiff fails to make any specific allegations of a conspiracy, and (3) plaintiff fails to plead essential elements under Florida law for its state common law claims.

A. Antitrust Standing

Defendants contend that plaintiff's antitrust claims (Counts I, II, [*19] III, V, VI, and IX) must be dismissed because there is an absence of facts supporting plaintiff's antitrust standing.<sup>7</sup> Because plaintiff cannot show antitrust standing, the Court will dismiss the antitrust counts.

HN6[] The question of standing to sue under the Sherman Act is one of law. Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1448 (11th Cir. 1991); Austin v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Ala., 903 F.2d 1385, 1387 (11th Cir. 1990)). In order [*20] to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action, a court must review the allegations contained in the complaint. Austin, 903 F.2d at 1387. More than constitutional standing must exist; "the court must find a close relationship between the plaintiff's injury and the alleged antitrust violation." Id., quoting Amey, Inc. v. Gulf Abstract & Title, Inc., 758 F.2d 1486, 1493 (11th Cir. 1985) (internal quotes omitted); see also Florida Seed Co., Inc. v. Monsanto Co., 105 F.3d 1372, 1374 (11th Cir. 1997) ("Antitrust standing requires more than the injury in fact and the case or controversy required by Article III of the Constitution.") (internal quotes and citation omitted).

HN7[] The Eleventh Circuit uses a two-prong approach in deciding whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. Florida Seed Co., Inc., 105 F.3d at 1374, citing Municipal Utils. Bd. of Alberville v. Alabama Power Co., 934 F.2d 1493, 1499 (11th Cir. 1991). First, the plaintiff must establish that it has suffered "antitrust injury." Municipal Utils. Bd. of Alberville, 934 F.2d at 1499. "As the Supreme [*21] Court has made clear, to have standing antitrust plaintiffs 'must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market, [i.e., but for causation]. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful.'" Florida Seed, 105 F.3d at 1374, quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). "Antitrust injuries include only those injuries that result from interference with the freedom to compete." Johnson v. University Health Servs., Inc., 161 F.3d 1334, 1338 (11th Cir. 1998).

"Second, the plaintiff must establish that it is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws." Florida Seed, 105 F.3d at 1374, citing Municipal Utils. Bd. of Alberville, 934 F.2d at 1499. This determination is predicated on the "target area test," which "requires that an antitrust plaintiff both 'prove that he is within that sector of the economy endangered by a breakdown of competitive conditions in a particular industry' and that he is 'the target against which [*22] anticompetitive activity is directed.'" Florida Seed, 105 F.3d at 1374, quoting National Indep. Theatre Exhibitors, Inc. v. Buena Vista Distribution Co., 748 F.2d 602, 608 (11th Cir. 1984). "Basically, a plaintiff must show that it is a customer or competitor in the relevant antitrust market." Florida Seed, 105 F.3d at 1374, citing Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983).

Despite its new allegations, the Third Amended Complaint fails to allege antitrust standing. The core allegations are that Medical Savings has a hospitalization insurance policy that it offers to consumers; this hospitalization insurance policy is a contractual agreement between Medical Savings and its insureds; pursuant to this contract. Medical Savings agrees to pay those hospital charges which Medical Savings finds to be "reasonable and customary," and only those charges; Medical Savings does not pay those portions of hospital charges it determines are not "reasonable and customary;" Medical Savings has no contractual relationships with the defendants, and defendants have not [*23] agreed to accept the payments which Medical Savings finds to be "reasonable and customary" as full satisfaction for its services; and Medical Savings' insureds are responsible to the defendant hospitals for payment of those portions of the hospital bills not paid by Medical Services.

---

<sup>7</sup> HN5[] The Florida Antitrust Act, FLA. STAT. § 542.15 et seq., was patterned after the Sherman Act, and was intended to complement and follow the federal court interpretations of the Sherman Act. FLA. STAT. § 542.32; Auton v. Dade City, Fla., 783 F.2d 1009, 1010 n.1 (11th Cir. 1986). Accordingly, the Court's rulings on Counts I, II, and III, based on the Sherman Act, will apply as well to Counts V and VI, which assert parallel charges under the Florida Antitrust Act.

With respect to the first prong, plaintiff has not alleged an antitrust injury to itself. There is no allegation which would indicate an interference with the freedom to compete in the health care insurance business.<sup>8</sup> Quite the contrary, plaintiff markets a health insurance product that consumers are free to purchase if, as with any insurance product, they deem the coverage worth the premium. While lost sales and profits have been recognized as antitrust injuries in the Third Circuit, that court found those losses to be cognizable injuries when they were linked with actual payments of alleged overcharges. See Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n v. Medical Serv. Ass'n of Pa., 815 F.2d 270 (3d Cir. 1987). That is not the case here. Plaintiff made no payments of overcharges, but only partial payments which plaintiff, at its discretion, determined to be reasonable. Plaintiff has cited no binding [*24] case authority in which the alleged injuries were sufficient for antitrust standing without the actual payment of the alleged overcharges.

Additionally, plaintiff clearly falls short of the second prong. Plaintiff contends that it has antitrust standing under a direct purchaser theory, that is, that plaintiff also "purchases" the medical services through its insureds. The Court concludes that plaintiff is neither a customer nor a competitor of these defendants. Unlike Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n, plaintiff does not utilize a pre-paid insurance plan whereby the medical services have already been purchased. Plaintiff cannot base its injuries on an occurrence - payment of the alleged overcharge - that has not happened and which under its contractual obligations will never happen. [*25] Moreover, plaintiff does not fall within the target area of the alleged misconduct. As discussed in a prior Order, the targets are the patients, not an insurer such as plaintiff.

Moreover, the patients, as direct purchasers, would be the efficient enforcer.<sup>9</sup> Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 735, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977) ("antitrust laws will be more effectively enforced by concentrating the full recovery for the overcharge in the direct purchasers rather than by allowing every plaintiff potentially affected by the overcharge to sue only for the amount it could show was absorbed by it.")

[*26] Plaintiff's complaints, in essence, stem from a lack of market demand for its particular insurance product in the absence of an agreement by defendants to accept plaintiff as the arbiter of reasonable service fees. Nothing in the antitrust law compels defendants to acquiesce to such a role by an insurer. The Third Amended Complaint does not allege that plaintiff has suffered an antitrust injury<sup>10</sup>, and therefore the antitrust related claims will be dismissed.

B. State Common Law Claims

(1) Tortious Interference of Business Relations

Plaintiff alleges that, as a result of defendants' conduct, plaintiff's "ability to sell insurance to prospective insureds and renew policies for current insureds has been hindered...." (Doc. #119, pp. 26-27.) Defendants [*27] contend that plaintiff fails to state a claim under Count VII (tortious interference with business relations) because (1) there are no allegations that plaintiff's current insureds breached any contract with plaintiff, and (2) plaintiff's allegation of defendants' interference with its prospective insureds is insufficient because plaintiff fails to allege identifiable customers and renewals are not protected.

---

<sup>8</sup>While plaintiff asserts it is a provider in the health care financial services market, there are no allegations at all about its activities in this market or support for its assertion that this makes it a competitor of defendants.

<sup>9</sup>Plaintiff urges the Court to find that plaintiff has standing to pursue injunctive relief because the law does not require an efficient enforcer under section 16. (Doc. #122, pp. 29-30.) The Court disagrees. Standing for injunctive relief under the antitrust laws requires that the plaintiff allege "threatened injury that would constitute antitrust injury if inflicted upon the plaintiff and the defendant's causal responsibility for such threatened injury." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1452. Having found that plaintiff does not suffer from antitrust injury, the Court concludes that plaintiff does not have standing to seek injunctive relief.

<sup>10</sup>Because of the Court's conclusion that plaintiff lacks antitrust standing to pursue its antitrust claims, the Court will not consider defendants' remaining arguments regarding the alleged pleading deficiencies of plaintiff's antitrust claims.

HN8 [↑] Under Florida law, the elements of tortious interference with a business relationship are: (1) the existence of a business relationship that affords the plaintiff existing or prospective legal rights; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the business relationship; (3) the defendant's intentional and unjustified interference with the relationship; and (4) damage to the plaintiff. International Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Austral Insulated Prods., Inc., 262 F.3d 1152, 1154 (11th Cir. 2001), citing Ethan Allen, Inc. v. Georgetown Manor, 647 So. 2d 812, 814 (Fla. 1994); see also Salit v. Ruden, McClosky, Smith, Schuster & Russell, P.A., 742 So. 2d 381, 385-86 (Fla. 4th DCA 1999), citing Tamiami Trail Tours, Inc. v. Cotton, 463 So. 2d 1126, 1127 (Fla. 1985). [*28]

As the Florida Supreme Court said in Ethan Alien Inc., HN9 [↑] an action for tortious interference with a business relationship generally requires "a business relationship evidenced by an actual and identifiable understanding or agreement which in all probability would have been completed if the defendant had not interfered." 647 So. 2d 812, 815. The Court added in Ferguson Transp. Inc. v. North Am. Van Lines, that a claim of tortious interference with a business relationship requires proof that the plaintiff had a business relationship with "identifiable customers." 687 So. 2d 821, 821 (Fla. 1996). The cause of action cannot be established by proof that the defendant interfered with a relationship between the plaintiff and the public at large. Sarkis v. Pafford Oil Co., Inc., 697 So. 2d 524, 526-27 (Fla. 1st DCA 1997).

The Court agrees with defendants' positions. The Third Amended Complaint does not allege that existing insureds were induced to breach their contracts with plaintiff or that any breach occurred. A non-renewal of an insurance policy does not constitute an induced breach, since plaintiff does not allege any agreement with its [*29] existing insureds that they would renew their policies at the end of the current term. The mere hope that some of its past insureds may choose to renew their policy cannot be the basis for a tortious interference claim under Florida law. Therefore, plaintiff fails to state a claim, with respect to its current insureds, for tortious interference with business relations.

With respect to prospective customers, the Third Amended Complaint does not identify "a business relationship evidenced by an actual and identifiable understanding or agreement which in all probability would have been completed if the defendant had not interfered." Ethan Allen, Inc., 647 So. 2d at 815. No cause of action exists for tortious interference with a business's relationship to the community at large. Id. Thus, plaintiff fails to state a claim under Count VII.

(2) Defamation

Defendants Lee Memorial Health System and Martin Memorial Medical Center contend that the subject statements are pure opinion, and thus plaintiff's defamation count fails to state a claim. Plaintiff challenges the veracity of the subject statements, and thus insists then that a jury should resolve the issue [*30] of whether the statements are false.

HN10 [↑] Under Florida law, to state a cause of action for defamation, a plaintiff must allege that (1) the defendant published a false statement (2) about the plaintiff (3) to a third party and (4) that the falsity of the statement caused injury to the plaintiff. Valencia v. Citibank Int'l, 728 So. 2d 330, 330 (Fla. 3d DCA 1999). Florida courts also recognize a distinction between a pure expression of opinion, which is not actionable, and a mixed expression of opinion. Sullivan v. Barrett, 510 So. 2d 982, 983-84 (Fla. 4th DCA 1987); see also From v. Tallahassee Democrat, Inc., 400 So. 2d 52, 56 (Fla. 1st DCA 1981). Pure opinion occurs when a defendant makes a comment or opinion based on facts which are set forth in the article or which are otherwise known or available to the reader or listener as a member of the public. Hoch v. Rissman, Weisberg, Barrett, 742 So. 2d 451, 459 (Fla. 5th DCA 1999), citing Miami Child's World, Inc. v. Sunbeam Television Corp., 669 So. 2d 336 (Fla. 3d DCA 1996). Mixed expression of opinion occurs when an opinion or comment is made which is based [*31] upon facts regarding the plaintiff or his conduct that have not been stated in the article or assumed to exist by the parties to the communication. Hoch, 742 So. 2d at 459-60.

HN11 [↑] Whether a statement is one of pure or mixed opinion is an issue of law. Id. at 460. In determining whether the statement is one of pure or mixed opinion, the court must examine the statement in its totality and the context in which it was uttered or published. Id. The court must consider all of the words used, not merely a particular phrase or sentence. Id. In addition, the court must give weight to cautionary terms used by the person publishing the statement and consider all of the circumstances surrounding the statement, including the medium by which the statement is disseminated and the audience to which it is published. Id.

The Court agrees with defendants. While defendants published these statements to third parties - plaintiff's insureds - the Court finds the statements constitute opinions and are therefore not actionable. Defendants' statements are based on plaintiff's refusal to render full payment of the amount due. Plaintiff concedes that it makes only partial [*32] payments, and admits that the payment amount is based upon what plaintiff deems as reasonable for . the particular service. Viewing the statements in the context in which they were published, the Court concludes that the subject remarks are opinions. Because opinions cannot be the basis for a defamation claim, plaintiff fails to state a claim for defamation against defendants. Thus, the defamation claim is due to be dismissed.

Plaintiff's request for leave to file yet another amended complaint is denied. Plaintiff has been afforded several opportunities to allege viable claims, and failed to do so. Moreover, plaintiff has not provided any basis for the Court to grant leave to amend the Third Amended Complaint.

Accordingly, it is hereby

ORDERED:

1. HCA defendants' Motion to Dismiss the [Third] Amended Complaint for Lack of Standing and for Failure to State a Claim (Doc. #108) is GRANTED;
2. Martin Memorial's Motion to Dismiss [Third] Amended Complaint (Doc. #109) is GRANTED;
3. Florida Hospital Association, Inc. and Florida Hospital Association Management Corporation's Motion to Dismiss [Third] Amended Complaint (Doc. #110) is GRANTED;
4. Defendants [*33] Lee Memorial Health System and Cape Memorial Hospital's Motion to Dismiss the [Third] Amended Complaint (Doc. #111) is GRANTED;
5. Plaintiff's request for leave to amend the Third Amended Complaint is DENIED; and
6. The Clerk shall enter judgment in favor of defendants and against plaintiff. The Clerk shall terminate any pending motions or deadlines, and close the file.

DONE AND ORDERED at Fort Myers, Florida, this 24th day of June, 2005.

JOHN E. STEELE

United States District Judge

Asociacion de Detallistas de Gasolina de P.R., Inc. v. Shell Chem. Yabucoa Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico

July 5, 2005, Decided

CIVIL NO. 04-1848 (JAG)

Reporter

380 F. Supp. 2d 40 *; 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15930 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,917

Asociacion de Detallistas de Gasolina de Puerto Rico, Inc., represented by its President, Efrain Reyes Hernandez Plaintiff(s) v. Shell Chemical Yabucoa Inc., et al. Defendant(s)

Core Terms

---

removal, Writs, cause of action, federal court, questions

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > Federal Venue

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > General Overview

HN1[] Elements for Removal, Federal Venue

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1441\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > General Overview

HN2[] Removal, Procedural Matters

A removal notice shall be filed within thirty days after receipt by the defendant, through service or otherwise, of a copy of the complaint. 28 U.S.C.S. 1446\(b\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

380 F. Supp. 2d 40, *40L2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15930, **15930

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > General Overview

HN3 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

The United States Supreme Court of the United States has held that, in deciding (for removal purposes) whether a case presents a federal claim or right, a court is to ask whether the plaintiff's claim to relief rests upon a federal right, and the court is to look only to the plaintiff's complaint to find the answer.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

HN4 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

The existence of a federal defense is not sufficient for removal jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Limited Jurisdiction

HN5 Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

HN6 Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Federal Questions

While a defendant does have a right, given by statute, to remove in certain situations, a plaintiff is still the master of his own claim. As master of his own claim, a plaintiff may avoid federal jurisdiction by exclusive reliance on state law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

380 F. Supp. 2d 40, *40LAW2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15930, **15930

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > General Overview

HN7[] Removal, Specific Cases Removed

When a party questions the propriety of a removal petition, the removing party bears the burden of showing that removal is proper.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8[] Removal, Specific Cases Removed

Removal statutes are strictly construed against removal.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Postremoval Remands > Jurisdictional Defects

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Postremoval Remands > General Overview

HN9[] Postremoval Remands, Jurisdictional Defects

When a plaintiff and a defendant clash about jurisdiction, uncertainties are construed in favor of remand.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN10[] Removal, Procedural Matters

The United States Supreme Court has clearly ruled that a plaintiff can prevent removal by choosing not to pursue federal claims that are potentially available, without incurring in the artful pleading exception recognized in Franchise Tax Board v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust. In fact, the Supreme Court has noted that the artful pleading doctrine only allows removal where federal law completely preempts a plaintiff's state law claim.

Banking Law > Consumer Protection > State Law > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

380 F. Supp. 2d 40, *40L2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15930, **15930

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

**HN11** [ ] Consumer Protection, State Law

Neither the Puerto Rico Gasoline Law, 23 P.R. Laws Ann. § 1101 et seq., nor the Puerto Rico Antitrust Law, 10 P.R. Laws Ann. § 257 et seq., is preempted by federal law.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > All Writs Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

**HN12** [ ] Writs, All Writs Act

While the All Writs Act (Act), 28 U.S.C.S. § 1651, does empower a federal court to issue all the writs necessary to protect its jurisdiction, the United States Supreme Court has held that the Act is not an independent source of federal subject-matter jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > All Writs Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

**HN13** [ ] Writs, All Writs Act

The All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651, does not give federal courts authority to remove a state court case in order to prevent frustration of orders a federal court has previously issued. Rather, removal is only be proper if the federal court independently has original subject-matter jurisdiction over the suit.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Elements for Removal > Removability

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Preliminary Considerations, Removal

Defendants must demonstrate that a state cause of action is removable under 28 U.S.C. § 1441 in order for the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651, to control the removal. Where the plaintiff's state action is not removable under 28 U.S.C. § 1441, the All Writs Act does not empower a federal court to entertain the case on removal.

Counsel: [**1] For Plaintiffs: Carlos E. Montanez, Carlos E. Montanez Law Office, San Juan, PR.

For Defendants: Frank La Fontaine-Maestre, Samuel T. Cespedes, McConnell Valdes, San Juan, PR; Ana M. Nin-Torregrosa, Nin Torregrosa & Rodriguez Ruiz Law Office, San Juan, PR; Alberto G. Estrella, William Estrella Law Offices, San Juan, PR; Carlos A. Valldejuly-Sastre, Hermann D. Bauer-Alvarez, O'Neill & Borges, San Juan, PR.

Judges: Jay A. Garcia-Gregory, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Jay A. Garcia-Gregory

Opinion

---

[*41] OPINION AND ORDER

Pending before this Court is Plaintiffs' Motion to Remand (Docket No. 14). After carefully reviewing the record, the Court GRANTS the Motion and REMANDS the case to the Puerto Rico Court of First Instance.

PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Asociacion de Detallistas de Gasolina Puerto Rico ("ADG") filed a civil action in the Puerto Rico Court of First Instance seeking a declaratory judgment under Rule 59 of the Puerto Rico Rules of Civil Procedure.<sup>1</sup> In that action, ADG questions the legality under state law of certain incentive programs implemented by the defendants.

[**2] On August 17th, 2004, Shell Chemical Yabucoa Inc., and the Shell Company (Puerto Rico) Ltd., filed a "Notice of Removal" of the state action filed by ADG. (Docket No. 1). Shortly thereafter, the Esso Standard Oil Company of Puerto Rico and Texaco Puerto Rico Inc., filed motions joining Shell (collectively, "defendants") in its "Notice of Removal." (Dockets No. 10 and 11).

Defendants contend that this Court has original jurisdiction over the matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Alternatively, defendants contend that under the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651, this Court is empowered to remove the state proceeding in order to protect the integrity of an [*42] order issued in case No. 04-1141 (JAF), in which a settlement agreement between Shell and other defendants was approved by this Court.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Asociacion de Detallistas de Gasolina de Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Shell Chemical Yabucoa Inc., The Shell Company (Puerto Rico) Ltd.; Texaco de Puerto Rico Inc.; Esso Standard Oil Company of Puerto Rico Inc., KAC-2004-5026 (Docket 1, Exhibit 1).

<sup>2</sup> Section 2 of the "Settlement Agreement" provides that

Notification of any order, action, filing, intervention or proceeding, which intends to restrict, or by operation restricts, Shell's use or conduct of its Price Incentive Program shall be personally notified to Shell at least ten (10) business days prior to seeking enforcement of the same. The parties expressly understand and agree that, should any such event occur, the Plaintiffs may move to reopen Civil No. 04-1441-JAF. All arguments and objections, as well as the defenses raised by the Defendants in that case, and those that may result from or arise in any other action, intervention or proceeding, are hereby expressly preserved and reserved.

[**3] ADG then filed a "Motion for Remand" stating that no federal cause of action is actually alleged in state court and hence the case is not removable regardless of whether a federal claim could have been alleged. (Docket No. 14). ADG further states that it was never a party in case 04-1441 (JAF) and thus the settlement agreement reached in that case is not binding upon it. Moreover, ADG alleges that even if it had been a party, remand is still appropriate because the All Writs Act cannot be used to confer federal jurisdiction where another statute specifically addresses the particular issue at hand (referring to the removal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\)).

On September 24th, 2004, defendant Shell filed a "Consolidated Motion for More Definite Statement and Opposition to Motion for Remand." (Docket No. 20). On October 1st, 2004, both Esso and Texaco joined Shell's request for a more definite statement under Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(e\). (Dockets No. 21 and 22).

DISCUSSION

A. Standard

Pursuant to HN1 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\), "any civil action brought in a State court of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction, [**4] may be removed by the defendant or the defendants, to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place where such action is pending." City of Chicago v. International Coll. of Surgeons, 522 U.S. 156, 163-64, 139 L. Ed. 2d 525, 118 S. Ct. 523 (1997). HN2 The removal notice "shall be filed within thirty days after receipt by the defendant, through service or otherwise, of a copy of the [Complaint]." 28 U.S.C. 1446\(b\).

HN3 The Supreme Court of the United States has held that, in deciding (for removal purposes) whether a case presents a federal claim or right, a court is to ask whether the plaintiff's claim to relief rests upon a federal right, and the court is to look only to plaintiff's complaint to find the answer. Rossello-Gonzalez v. Calderon-Serra, 398 F.3d 1, 10 (1st Cir. 2004); Hernandez-Agosto v. Romero-Barcelo, 748 F.2d 1, 2 (1st Cir. 1984). HN4 The existence of a federal defense is not sufficient for removal jurisdiction. Franchise Tax Bd. v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 10-11, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420, 103 S. Ct. 2841 (1983).

HN5 Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction. HN6 While a defendant does have a right, [**5] given by statute, to remove in certain situations, plaintiff is still the master of his own claim. Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 391, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318, 107 S. Ct. 2425 (1987). As master of his own claim, plaintiff "may avoid federal jurisdiction by exclusive reliance on state law." Id., at 392; (emphasis added).

HN7 [*43] When a party questions the propriety of a removal petition, the removing party bears the burden of showing that removal is proper. See Danca v. Private Health Care Systems, 185 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1999) (citing BIW Deceived v. Local S6, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, IAMAW District Lodge 4, 132 F.3d 824, 831 (1st Cir. 1997)). HN8 Removal statutes are strictly construed against removal. See Rossello-Gonzalez, 398 F.3d at 11 (citing Shamrock Oil & Gas Corp. v. Sheets, 313 U.S. 100, 108-09, 85 L. Ed. 1214, 61 S. Ct. 868 (1941)). HN9 When plaintiff and defendant clash about jurisdiction, uncertainties are construed in favor of remand. Burns v. Windsor Ins. Co., 31 F.3d 1092, 1097 (11th Cir. 1994).

B. The Propriety of Removal in this Case

Defendants argue that this [**6] Court has original federal question jurisdiction--and hence removal is appropriate--because "but for [ADG's] artful pleading, the removed action would clearly raise substantial questions of federal jurisdiction." Relying on the Franchise Tax Board analysis,<sup>3</sup> defendants argue that plaintiff may not defeat removal by omitting necessary federal questions in its state court complaint.

---

<sup>3</sup> Franchise Tax Board, 463 U.S. at 22 (1983).

However, defendants fail to establish which unavoidable particular questions of federal law the state claim does not address. Furthermore, defendants' allegations seem to suggest that they are entitled to have ADG plead the causes of action they (the defendants) prefer. These allegations do not persuade this Court.

ADG, as master of its claim, chose to rely exclusively on the Puerto Rico Gasoline Law, 23 L.P.R.A. § 1101 et seq., and the Puerto Rico Antitrust Law, 10 L.P.R.A. § 257 et seq. This Court is [**7] convinced that no federal cause of action is necessary for the resolution of the state claims raised by ADG. Moreover, HN10[↑] the Supreme Court has clearly ruled that a plaintiff can prevent removal by choosing not to pursue federal claims that are potentially available, without incurring in the artful pleading exception recognized in Franchise Tax Board. See Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. at 392. In fact, the Supreme Court has noted that the artful pleading doctrine only allows removal "where federal law completely preempts a plaintiff's state law claim." Rivet v. Regions Bank, 522 U.S. 470, 475-76, 139 L. Ed. 2d 912, 118 S. Ct. 921 (1998); see also Rossello-Gonzalez, 398 F.3d at 12 ("we are skeptical of the applicability of the artful pleading doctrine outside of complete federal preemption of a state cause of action").

HN11[↑] Neither the Puerto Rico Gasoline Law nor the Antitrust Law is preempted by federal law. See e.g. Puerto Rico Department of Consumer Affairs v. Isla Petroleum Corp., 485 U.S. 495, 501, 99 L. Ed. 2d 582, 108 S. Ct. 1350 (1988); Caribe BMW v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft, 19 F.3d 745, 754 (1st Cir. 1994). Thus, to require ADG to invariably claim federal [**8] causes of action when they are available would amount to this Court preempting an area of the law when Congress has chosen not to do so. Such a proposition offends basic principles of federalism and separation of powers.

Since the state cause of action is not one of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction, removal is therefore improper under section 1441.

C. All Writs Act

Defendants alternatively ask this Court to remove ADG's complaint under the purview of the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651. [*44] They allege that removal is warranted under that statute in order for this Court to protect the integrity of its Order in Civil No. 04-1441 (JAF). That is, defendants argue that this Court is empowered by the All Writs Act to issue any order necessary to protect its jurisdiction from any action that threatens to undermine the consent order in case 04-1441 (JAF). This argument also fails to convince this Court.

HN12[↑] While the All Writs Act does empower a federal court to issue all the writs necessary to protect its jurisdiction, the Supreme Court has held that the Act is not an independent source of federal subject-matter jurisdiction. [**9] Syngenta Crop Prot., Inc. v. Henson, 537 U.S. 28, 31, 154 L. Ed. 2d 368, 123 S. Ct. 366 (2002). In Syngenta, the Court dealt with a case in which, like the one at hand, defendants based their All Writs Act claim on a prior federal court settlement which the state court action would arguably frustrate. Finding against removal, the Court held that by itself, HN13[↑] the All Writs Act does not give federal courts authority to remove a state court case in order to prevent frustration of orders the federal court had previously issued. Rather, removal would only be proper if the federal court independently has original subject-matter jurisdiction over the suit. Syngenta, 537 U.S. at 33-34.

Accordingly, HN14[↑] defendants must demonstrate that the state cause of action is removable under 28 U.S.C. § 1441 in order for the All Writs Act to control the removal. Inasmuch as plaintiff's state action is not removable under section 1441, the All Writs Act does not empower this Court to entertain this case on removal.

CONCLUSION

In light of the foregoing, the Court hereby REMANDS (Docket No. 14) the case to the Puerto Rico Court of First Instance. All pending motions are [**10] MOOT.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

In San Juan, Puerto Rico, this 5th day of July, 2005.

380 F. Supp. 2d 40, *44L2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15930, **10

s/Jay A. Garcia-Gregory

JAY A. GARCIA-GREGORY

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Am. Copper & Brass, Inc. v. Donald Boliden AB

United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division

July 6, 2005, Decided ; July 6, 2005, Filed

No. 04-2771-DV

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43642 *; 2005 WL 1631034

AMERICAN COPPER & BRASS, INC. and THE BANKRUPT ESTATE OF SMITH AND WOFFORD PLUMBING AND INDUSTRIAL SUPPLY, INC., on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs v. DONALD BOLIDEN AB, et al., Defendants

Subsequent History: Motion denied by Am. Copper & Brass, Inc. v. Donald Boliden Ab, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102874 \(W.D. Tenn., Mar. 27, 2006\)

Modified by, Motion denied by, On reconsideration by Am. Copper & Brass v. Boliden, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102878 \(W.D. Tenn., Mar. 27, 2006\)

Dismissed by, Sub nomine at Am. Copper & Brass, Inc. v. Mueller Eur., Ltd., 452 F. Supp. 2d 821, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68828 \(W.D. Tenn., Sept. 13, 2006\)

Dismissed by, Motion granted by Am. Copper & Brass, Inc. v. Boliden AB, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102876 \(W.D. Tenn., Oct. 10, 2006\)

Core Terms

---

copper, tubing, Sherman Act, conspiracy, purposes, interstate commerce, Plaintiffs', motion to dismiss, antitrust, diligence, principal place of business, concealment, averred, fraudulent concealment, statute of limitations, unreasonable restraint, alleged conspiracy, antitrust claim, business entity, press release, fix prices, anticompetitive, discovery

Counsel: [*1] For American Copper & Brass, Inc, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, The Bankrupt Estate of Smith and Wofford Plumbing and Industrial Supply, Inc., Plaintiff: B. J. Wade, GLASSMAN EDWARDS WADE & WYATT, P.C., Memphis, TN; Jason T. Baker, ALEXANDER HAWES & AUDET, LLP, San Jose, CA, US; Mary Jane Fait, WOLF HALDENSTEIN ADLER FREEMAN & HERZ LLC- Chicago, Chicago, IL; Paul Kent Bramlett, BRAMLETT LAW OFFICES, Nashville, TN; Richard N. LaFlamme, LAFLAMME & MAULDIN, P.C., Jackson, MI; Ryan M. Hagan, ALEXANDER HAWES & AUDET LLP, San Jose, CA; William M. Audet, ALEXANDER HAWES & AUDET LLP, San Jose, CA.

For Boliden AB, Boliden Fabrication AB, Boliden Cuivre & Zinc S.A., Defendant: Candy M. Lawson, DAVIS POLK & WARDWELL, New York, NY, US; David R. Esquivel, BASS BERRY & SIMS PLC, Nashville, TN; Joshua Ray Denton, BASS BERRY & SIMS PLC-Nashville, Nashville, TN; Paul W. Bartel, II, DAVIS POLK & WARDWELL, New York, NY, US; Robert Dale Grimes, BASS BERRY & SIMS PLC, Nashville, TN; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Halcor S.A., Defendant: David E Mollon, WINSTON & STRAWN, LLP, New York, NY, US; John I. Houseal, Jr., GLANKLER BROWN, [*2] PLLC, Memphis, TN; Marc S Palay, WINSTON & STRAWN LLP; Van Davis Turner, Jr., EVANS & PETREE, P.A., Memphis, TN.

For IMI PLC, IMI KYNOCH LTD, Defendant: J. Brook Lathram, BURCH PORTER & JOHNSON, Memphis, TN; Mark S. Olson, OPPENHEIMER WOLFF & DONNELLY, Minneapolis, MN; Ranelle A. Leier, OPPENHEIMER WOLFF & DONNELLY, Minneapolis, MN; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Yorkshire Copper Tube LTD, Europa Metalli Spa, Defendant: Colin J. Carnahan, BOULT CUMMINGS CONNERS & BERRY, Nashville, TN; Paul A. Alexis, BOULT CUMMINGS CONNERS & BERRY, Nashville, TN; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Trefimetaux SA, Defendant: Colin J. Carnahan, BOULT CUMMINGS CONNERS & BERRY, Nashville, TN; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Mueller Industries, Inc., Defendant: Alexandra H. Russello, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER LLP, New York, NY; Kelly M. Hnatt, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER LLP, New York, NY; Robert L. Crawford, WYATT TARRANT & COMBS, Memphis, TN; Sameer Nitanand Advani, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER LLP, New York, NY; Scott S. Rose, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER LLP, New York, NY; William [*3] H. Rooney, WILLKIE FARR & GALLAGHER LLP, New York, NY; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Mueller Europe LTD, WTC Holding Company, Inc., Defendant: Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN; Robert L. Crawford, WYATT TARRANT & COMBS, Memphis, TN.

For Outokumpu Oyj, Outokumpu Copper Products Oy, Defendant: Robert J Fluskey, HODGSON RUSS LLP, Buffalo, NY, US; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Austria Buntmetall AG, Defendant: Susanne M Kandel, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, New York, NY, US; James R. Newsom, III, HARRIS SHELTON HANOVER WALSH, PLLC., Memphis, TN; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Buntmetall Amstetten G.M.B.H., Defendant: Aidan Synnott, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON, New York, NY; Danielle M. Aguirre, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON AND GARRISON, LLP, New York, NY; Moses Silverman, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON, New York, NY; Susanne M Kandel, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, New York, NY, US; James R. Newsom, III, HARRIS SHELTON HANOVER WALSH, PLLC., Memphis, TN; Jerome A. Broadhurst, [*4] Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN.

For Wieland Metals, Inc., Defendant: Aidan Synnott, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON, New York, NY; Danielle M. Aguirre, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON AND GARRISON, LLP, New York, NY; James R. Newsom, III, HARRIS SHELTON HANOVER WALSH, PLLC., Memphis, TN; Moses Silverman, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON, New York, NY; Seema Tendolkar, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON, New York, NY; Susanne M Kandel, PAUL WEISS RIFKIND WHARTON & GARRISON LLP, New York, NY, US; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN; Robert L. Crawford, WYATT TARRANT & COMBS, Memphis, TN.

For Outokumpu Copper USA, Inc., Defendant: Daniel C. Oliverio, HODGSON RUSS, LLP, Buffalo, NY; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN; Kevin M. Kearney, HODGSON RUSS LLP, Buffalo, NY; Robert J Fluskey, HODGSON RUSS LLP, Buffalo, NY, US; Robert L. Crawford, WYATT TARRANT & COMBS, Memphis, TN.

For KME America Inc., Defendant: Colin J. Carnahan, BOULT CUMMINGS CONNERS & BERRY, Nashville, TN; David I. Gelfand, CLEARY GOTTLIEB STEEN & HAMILTON LLP, Washington, DC; Matthew I. Bachrack, CLEARY, GOTTLIEB, STEEN & HAMILTON, [*5] Washington, DC; Paul A. Alexis, BOULT CUMMINGS CONNERS & BERRY, Nashville, TN; Jerome A. Broadhurst, Apperson, Crump & Maxwell, PLC, Memphis, TN; Robert L. Crawford, WYATT TARRANT & COMBS, Memphis, TN.

Judges: BERNICE BOUIE DONALD, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: BERNICE BOUIE DONALD

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS OF WTC HOLDING COMPANY, INC., AND DENO HOLDING COMPANY, INC., AND DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS OF DEFENDANTS' MUELLER INDUSTRIES, INC., KME AMERICA INC., OUTOKUMPU COPPER (U.S.A.), INC., AND WIELAND METALS, INC. (DKT. # 71)

This matter is before the Court upon the motion of Defendants, Mueller Industries, Inc. ("Mueller"); WTC Holding Company, Inc. ("WTC"); DENO Holding Company, Inc. ("DENO"); KME America Inc. ("KME"); Outokumpu Copper (U.S.A.), Inc. ("Outokumpu"); and Wieland Metals, Inc. ("Wieland"), (collectively "moving Defendants" or "Defendants") to dismiss in its entirety the class action complaint of American Copper & Brass, Inc. ("American Copper") and The Bankrupt Estate of Smith and Wofford Plumbing and Industrial Supply, Inc. ("Smith Estate"), (collectively "Plaintiffs"). The moving Defendants' motion was brought pursuant to Fed.R.Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) [*6] as to Plaintiffs' section 1 Sherman Act claim, and pursuant to Rules 12\(b\)\(6\) and 9\(b\) as to Plaintiffs' fraudulent concealment claim. For the following reasons, the Court DENIES the motion to dismiss as to moving Defendants Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland, and GRANTS the motion to dismiss as to moving Defendants WTC and DENO.

I. BACKGROUND*A. Procedural Background<sup>1</sup>

On September 24, 2004, American Copper invoked this Court's jurisdiction pursuant to the provisions of sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26, to recover treble damages for, and obtain injunctive relief from, Defendants' alleged violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the cost of this suit, including [*7] reasonable attorneys fees. On March 9, 2005, Plaintiffs<sup>2</sup> filed a Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint<sup>3</sup> (hereinafter, "complaint") with this Court. On May 6, 2005, the moving Defendants sought dismissal of Plaintiffs' complaint in its entirety.

B. Factual Background

American Copper is a Michigan corporation. Compl. P 8. The Smith Estate is an entity in the State of Tennessee. Id. at P 9. The moving Defendants hail from various jurisdictions across the United States ("U.S."). Mueller, the leading producer of copper tubing in the world, is a corporation with its principal place of business in Memphis, Tennessee. WTC is a corporation with its principal place of business in Michigan. DENO is a corporation with its principal place of business in Michigan. KME is a Delaware corporation [*8] with its principal place of business in Illinois. Outokumpu is a corporation with its principal place of business in Illinois. Wieland is a corporation with its principal place of business in Illinois.

There are twenty-three (23) defendants in this case. Of the six moving Defendants, Mueller, KME, Outokumpu and Wieland have affiliations, either as a subsidiary or a parent entity, to at least one of the non-moving EU-based Defendants: Mueller (Mueller Europe Ltd., United Kingdom), KME (KM Europa Metal AG, Germany), Outokumpu (Outokumpu OYJ and Outokumpu Copper Products of OY, Finland), and Wieland (Wieland Werke AG, Germany).

---

<sup>1</sup> The Court received a letter from Plaintiffs' counsel dated June 30, 2005. The Court did not consider this letter in deciding this motion because the communication did not constitute a proper pleading.

<sup>2</sup> The Smith Estate was Plaintiff in Civil Action No. 04-2930-DV prior to consolidation.

<sup>3</sup> Individually and on behalf of a class pursuant to Fed.R.Civ. P. 23\(a\),\(b\)\(2\)-\(3\).

Plaintiffs allege that between June 1, 1988, and March 31, 2001, ("Class Period"), the moving Defendants, directly or through their subsidiaries and/or affiliates, produced Copper Plumbing Tubes (hereinafter, "copper tubing") and sold them throughout the United States. Compl. PP 22, 24, 25, 28, 30, and 43. Copper tubing includes both plain copper plumbing tubes and plastic-coated copper tubal fixtures used in dwelling structures to transfer water, heat, and gas. Id. at P 5. Copper tubing is used in residential and office buildings and throughout the transportation [*9] industry. Id. at PP 47-48.

Plaintiffs rely to a great extent on a September 3, 2004 European Commission ("EC") press release for its facts. This press release detailed the EC's imposition of fines against named European copper tubing manufacturers, some of whom are moving Defendants. Id. at P 53. EC fines were levied against Boliden Group (Sweden), Halcor S.A. (Greece), HME Nederland BV (The Netherlands), the IMI Group (United Kingdom), the KME Group (Germany, Italy, and France), Mueller Industries, Inc. (U.S., United Kingdom, and France), Outokumpu Industries, Inc., (Finland), and Wieland Werke AG (Germany). The EC investigation led to uncovering the operation of a European cartel to fix prices of copper tubing between June, 1988, and March, 2001 "throughout most of the European Economic Area . . . in violation of EU Treaty 81 and EEA Agreement Article 53." Id.

Plaintiffs aver that on September 29, 1989, European manufacturers, some of whom are also named Defendants, met in Zurich, Switzerland (dubbed the "Airport Forum") and made statements expressing an intent to keep the price of copper tubing high in "high price level countries." Id. at P 56. Plaintiffs assert [*10] that a cartel grew into "a 'group of five' [of the] largest European producers of copper plumbing tubes" with the intent to fix prices in the global copper tubing market. Id. at P 57.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A 12(b)(6) motion tests whether a plaintiff has plead a cognizable claim. Scheid v. Fanny Farmer Candy Shops, Inc., 859 F.2d 434, 436 (6th Cir. 1988). Essentially, it allows the court to dismiss meritless cases and claims which would otherwise waste judicial resources and result in unnecessary discovery. See, e.g., Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 326-27, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1989). A court, however, is to presume that well plead allegations are true, resolve all doubts and inferences in favor of the pleader, and view the pleading in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Smythe, Cramer, Co., 265 F.Supp. 2d 882, 886 (6th Cir. 2003).

"A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957); see also [*11] Neitzke, 490 U.S. at 326-27; Lewis v. ACB Bus. Servs., 135 F.3d 389, 405 (6th Cir. 1997). The standard to be applied when evaluating a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is very liberal in favor of the party opposing the motion. Westlake v. Lucas, 537 F.2d 857, 858 (6th Cir. 1976). Even if the plaintiff's chances of success are remote or unlikely, a motion to dismiss should be denied.

Before deciding to grant a motion to dismiss, the court must first examine the complaint. The complaint must contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed.R.Civ. P. 8(a). The complaint must provide the defendant with "fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Conley, 355 U.S. at 47; Westlake, 537 F.2d at 858. The plaintiff must allege the essential material facts of the case. Scheid, 859 F.2d at 436-37. Where there are conflicting interpretations of the facts, they must be construed in the plaintiff's favor. Sinay v. Lamson & Sessions Co., 948 F.2d 1037, 1039-40 (6th Cir. 1991). [*12] However, in considering a 12(b)(6) motion, the court must not accept plaintiff's legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences as true. Lewis, 135 F.3d at 405-06.

III. ANALYSIS

To state a § 1 Sherman Act claim in a private antitrust action, a plaintiff must aver three essential elements: (1) the existence of a conspiracy (2) affecting interstate commerce (3) that imposes an unreasonable restraint on trade. Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Concrete Corp., 691 F.2d 818, 827 (6th Cir. 1982); Davis-Watkins Co. v. Service Merchandise, 686 F.2d 1190, 1195-96 (6th Cir. 1982).

The basic objective of the Sherman Act is to prevent or suppress devices or practices that create monopolies or restrain trade or commerce in the United States. See United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U.S. 371, 388, 43 S. Ct. 607, 67 L. Ed. 1035 (1923); Sugar Institute, Inc. v. United States, 297 U.S. 553, 597, 56 S. Ct. 629, 80 L. Ed. 859 (1936). "The Sherman Act was conceived as a weapon against monopolies, trusts, and conspiracies that use[] agreement instead of financial consolidation to achieve the same results." Northwest Power Products, Inc. v. Omkar Industries, Inc., 576 F.2d 83, 89 (5th Cir. 1978), [*13] rehearing denied, 579 F.2d 643, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1116, 99 S. Ct. 1021, 59 L. Ed. 2d 75 (1979). Although the Sherman Act, by its terms, prohibits every agreement "in restraint of trade," Congress' intent was to outlaw only unreasonable restraints. See 15 U.S.C. § 1: see, e.g., State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997).

Two major threads of antitrust judicial analysis are employed to determine whether there has been a violation of the Sherman Act: (1) per se unreasonable restraint on trade, derived from judicial experience with certain forms of egregious, anti-competitive restraints, and (2) "rule of reason," which entails a closer scrutiny of a plaintiff's allegations against the antitrust statute and its case law. Congress "expected the courts to give shape to the statute's broad mandate by drawing on common-law tradition." Nat'l Soc'y of Prof. Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 688, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978).

Judicial antitrust common law has established price-fixing as one of the per se unreasonable restraints on trade. See United States v. Nat'l Ass'n of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485, 489, 70 S. Ct. 711, 94 L. Ed. 1007 (1950) [*14] ("An agreement, shown either by adherence to a price schedule or by proof of consensual action fixing the uniform or minimum price, is itself illegal under the Sherman Act, no matter what end it was designed to serve. That is the teaching of an unbroken line of decisions"). Where a per se unreasonable restraint on trade is not shown, a court's analysis must be based on an application of the rule of reason. This involves the initial showing of a relevant product and geographic market, as well as an injury to competition.

For purposes of a 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, it is not a court's function to rule on the weight of the evidence or the issue of credibility, Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); however, failure of a plaintiff to aver either of the essential statutory elements justifies dismissal of an antitrust claim. Furthermore, while the pleading standard under the federal rules is very liberal, see Fed.R.Civ. P. 8, the essential elements of a private antitrust claim must be alleged in more than vague and conclusory terms to prevent a 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal. See Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d 802, 805 (6th Cir. 1988).

[*15] 1. Conspiracy

A claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act requires that a plaintiff "establish that the defendants combined or conspired with an intent to unreasonably restrain trade." Smith v. Northern Mich. Hosps., 703 F.2d 942, 949 (6th Cir. 1983). The moving Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' allegations of an illegal agreement are vague and conclusory and do not sufficiently allege a conspiracy under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The moving Defendants cite this Court's opinion in Cupp v. Alberto-Culver USA, Inc., 310 F. Supp. 2d 963 (W.D. Tenn. 2004), for the proposition that vague and conclusory statements of collusive activity are insufficient to survive a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion. Cupp v. Alberto-Culver USA, Inc., 310 F. Supp. 2d at 972 (citing Crane & Shovel Sales Corp. v. Bucyrus-Erie Co., 854 F.2d at 805). The moving Defendants' reliance on Cupp for this proposition is appropriate. The moving Defendants assert that the alleged conspiracy must detail the time, place, and alleged effect of the conspiracy. Estate Constr. Co. v. Miller & Smith Holding Co., 14 F.3d 213, 221-22 (4th Cir. 1994) [*16] (the Fourth Circuit dismissed an antitrust claim that "merely reiterated mechanically the words of the Sherman Act"). Indeed, while the pleading standard under the federal rules is very liberal, see Fed.R.Civ. P. 8, "the price of entry, even to discovery, is for the plaintiff to allege a factual predicate concrete enough to warrant further proceedings, which may be costly and burdensome." DM Research, Inc. v. College of Am. Pathologists, 170 F.3d 53, 55 \(1st Cir. 1999\).

Estate Constr. Co. can be distinguished from the case at bar. Plaintiffs in Estate Constr. Co. merely reiterated statutory language without including any factual allegations. Plaintiffs at bar, though relying exclusively on the information and belief of facts from the EC investigation for the existence of dates, meetings, and statements, have asserted facts that point to the concerted conspiratorial acts of some of the Defendants. For purposes of this motion, all of these facts are assumed true. The moving Defendants further assert that no factual link is alleged to connect U.S. copper tubing manufacturers with the conspiratorial acts that occurred [*17] in Europe. This is true as to the moving Defendants WTC and DENO, but not as to the remaining four moving Defendants. WTC and DENO are business entities organized solely under U.S. laws and Plaintiffs have averred no link between these entities and the activities that occurred within the EU. On the other hand, Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland all have affiliated business entities in Europe who were identified parties to the alleged conspiracy and subject to EC anticompetitive sanctions. It is not inconceivable that knowledge of and participation in the conspiratorial acts existed among the U.S. and EU affiliated business entities and that such acts extended to the U.S. market. Though the holding of a foreign tribunal alone does not establish that antitrust activities have occurred under U.S. antitrust laws, the acts alleged are sufficient to state the conspiracy element for purposes of Section 1 of the Sherman Act against Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland. As to Mueller, both its U.S. and EU business entities were specifically named in the EC press release that reported the copper tubing cartel. Accordingly, the Court finds that, as to Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland, a [*18] conspiracy has been alleged for purposes of a violation of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, the motion to dismiss as to these Defendants is not well founded as to this element.

2. Interstate Commerce

The second element of a § 1 Sherman Act claim is the interstate commerce requirement, which is often referred to as jurisdictional. The Supreme Court has held that there is no practical distinction between the "jurisdictional" interstate commerce inquiry and whether a complaint pleads an effect on interstate commerce sufficient to state a claim for relief under the Sherman Act. Hosp. Bide. Co. v. Trs. of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 742, 96 S. Ct. 1848, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338 & n. 1 \(1976\) ("an analysis of challenges to antitrust claims based on the interstate commerce element under either Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) or 12(b)(6) leads to the same result."). Further, the Supreme Court has held that the Sherman Act's reach is as broad as Congress' power under the Commerce Clause. McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 241-42, 100 S. Ct. 502, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441 \(1980\).

To establish that interstate commerce has been [*19] impacted, a plaintiff must demonstrate either (1) that the proscribed activities are actually "in" or part of interstate commerce, Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 68 S. Ct. 996, 92 L. Ed. 1328 \(1948\), or (2) that the defendant's business activities in general substantially affect interstate commerce. McLain, 444 U.S. at 239.

Plaintiffs assert that the conspiracy to fix prices in the copper tubing industry was carried out with the intent to reach global markets. Additionally, Plaintiffs contend that the price of copper tubing in the U.S. during the Class Period, due to the conspiracy, resulted in the members of the Class paying substantially more for copper tubing than they would have paid in the absence of Defendants' conspiracy. Mueller alone is the leading global manufacturer of copper tubing. KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland also transact business globally and throughout the U.S. . The Court finds that for purposes of the 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, Plaintiffs have satisfied the second element of their antitrust claim.

3. Restraint on Trade

Per se violations involve "agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive [*20] that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality." National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 \(1978\). The strict per se rules of modern antitrust law establish a conclusive presumption that a particular kind of action has improper anticompetitive effects, and this presumption governs regardless of whether the particular conduct in its actual context has been proved to have those consequences. State Oil Co., 522 U.S. at 10 \(1997\), overruling Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 88 S. Ct. 869, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998 \(1968\).

Here, Plaintiffs contends that EU-based business entities conspired to fix copper tubing prices, not just within the EU, but also in the U.S. This, Plaintiffs assert, constitutes a per se violation against the moving Defendants. The Court agrees. Price fixing is per se anticompetitive and does not require a rule of reason analysis to determine whether restraint on trade has been adequately averred by a showing of the relevant product and geographic markets or injury to competition. For purposes of this motion, Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland's alleged participation in a horizontal [*21] restraint on trade by conspiring to fix prices in the copper tubing industry constitutes a per se restraint on trade for purposes of a 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss. Because there is nothing to link WTC and DENO to the concerted acts that occurred in Europe, a claim of per se restraint has not been sufficiently averred against them. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have adequately alleged facts of a per se restraint on trade against Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland for purposes of surviving a motion to dismiss.

4. Statute of Limitations

The moving Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' complaint for damages for acts that occurred more than four years from the time the Sherman Act claim accrued is defeated by the statute of limitations. The Sherman Act's limitation of action establishes that:

[a]ny action to enforce any cause of action under Section 15, 15a, or 15c of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. No cause of action barred under existing law on the effective date of this Act shall be revived by this Act.

15 U.S.C. § 15b.

A Sherman Act claim [*22] accrues when the defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiffs' business. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 \(1971\)("each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the defendant a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and, as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act"). Plaintiffs allege that the moving Defendants' violation of the Sherman Act began "at least as early as June 1, 1988, and continu[ed] until no earlier than March 31, 2001." Compl. P 61. Defendants assert that, to the extent Plaintiffs seek to recover damages for injuries that occurred more than four years preceding the commencement of this action (i.e., September 24, 2000), Plaintiffs' claim is time-barred and should be dismissed. Plaintiffs argue that the statute of limitations is tolled by Defendants' acts of fraudulent concealment. To establish fraudulent concealment, a plaintiff must allege:

(1) wrongful concealment of their actions by the defendants; (2) failure of the plaintiff to discover the operative facts that are the basis of his cause of action within the limitations period; [*23] and (3) plaintiff's due diligence until discovery of the facts.

Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389, 394 \(6th Cir. 1975\).

Additionally, Fed.R.Civ. P. 9\(b\) requires that a party alleging fraudulent concealment "plead the circumstances giving rise to it with particularity." Dayco Corp., 523 F.2d at 394; see also, Campbell v. Upjohn Co., 676 F.2d 1122, 1126 \(6th Cir. 1982\). Plaintiffs in the case at bar allege that the conspiracy "was inherently self-concealing." Compl. P 71. See Dry Cleaning & Laundry Inst. of Detroit, Inc. v. Flom's Corp., 841 F. Supp. 212, 217 \(E.D. Mich. 1993\)(citing Pinney Dock and rejecting the contention that because the price-fixing conspiracy was inherently "self-concealing," plaintiffs do not need to prove affirmative acts of concealment") (emphasis added).

In Dayco Corp., the Sixth Circuit held that affirmative acts of concealment by the defendant beyond the original fraud do not relieve the plaintiff of the requirement of due diligence. Dayco Corp., 523 F.2d at 394. The Supreme Court in Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U.S. (11 Otto) 135, 25 L. Ed. 807 (1879), [*24] stated that "concealment by mere silence is not enough." Wood, 101 U.S. (11 Otto) at 143, 25 L. Ed. 807 (the circumstances of the discovery must be fully stated and proved, and the delay which has occurred must be shown to be consistent with the requisite diligence). Id.

For purposes of this motion, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have averred affirmative acts and shown diligence. Plaintiffs have averred that the means by which they discovered the alleged conspiracy was the EC press release of September 3, 2004, which sets forth the concerted conspiratorial acts. On September 24, 2004, Plaintiffs filed their original complaint in this matter. Plaintiffs argues that at this stage, it is not appropriate to determine whether their diligence was sufficient. The Court agrees. Whether their diligence was reasonably sufficient will be measured at the evidentiary stage.

Furthermore, in spite of the fact that the only known concerted acts of conspiracy occurred in Europe, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' averment sufficiently meets the particularity requirement of Fed.R.Civ. P. 9(b) for fraudulent concealment when it avers that the first European-wide [*25] meeting was held on September 29, 1989 at the "Airport Forum" in Zurich, Switzerland. According to the complaint, at this meeting Defendants agreed to meet again less than a month later in the negotiation room of the Amsterdam airport to continue their plan to fix prices. Accordingly, Plaintiffs should be allowed to proceed as to all claims against Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland since, for purposes of a 12(b)(6) motion, Plaintiffs have alleged wrongful concealment and Plaintiffs could not have discovered the concealment. Furthermore, Plaintiffs' discovery of the EC press release goes to their diligence in discovering the alleged conspiracy. For the reasons stated above, Defendants' motion to dismiss based on the statute of limitations is DENIED.

IV. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, the Court DENIES the motion to dismiss as to moving Defendants Mueller, KME, Outokumpu, and Wieland, and GRANTS the motion to dismiss against moving Defendants WTC and DENO.

IT IS SO ORDERED on this 6th day of July, 2005.

BERNICE BOUIE DONALD

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

In re Enron Corp.

United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York

July 6, 2005, Decided

Chapter 11, Case No. 01 B 16034 (AJG)

Reporter

2005 Bankr. LEXIS 3470 *; 2005 WL 3873899

In re: ENRON CORP., et al., Reorganized Debtors.

Notice: NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Core Terms

---

filed rate doctrine, electricity, rates, wholesale, state law claim, tariff, preemption, energy, sales, anti trust law, state law, market-based, preempted, markets, manipulation, regulation, interstate, anti-competitive, refunds, transactions, violations, cases, state antitrust law, Sherman Act, antitrust, argues, courts, exclusive jurisdiction, field preemption, energy crisis

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN1 [] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720\(b\), prohibits agreements to limit or reduce the production, or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity.

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

HN2 [] Federal Trade Commission Act, Unfair Competition & Practices

The Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, prohibits unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business acts and practices.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

HN3 [] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the Supremacy Clause, U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. Where Congress manifests an intent to occupy an entire regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

**HN4** Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted (1) when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field, (field preemption), and (2) to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > General Overview

**HN5** Electric Power Industry, Federal Power Act

Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states. The Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C.S. § 824-824m.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN6** Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

See 16 U.S.C.S. § 824e.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Judicial Review

**HN7** Federal Power Act, Judicial Review

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit disgorgement and refunds. Further, FERC can proceed by rule making rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue discrimination on the part of individual utilities. 16 U.S.C.S. §§ 824d, 824e; 42 U.S.C.S. § 7173\(c\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN8** Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

Anomalous market behavior is (1) behavior that departs significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include (a) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; (b) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; (c) unusual trades or transactions; (d) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and e) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN9 [down] Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. The filed rate doctrine forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority. The purpose of the doctrine is preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN10 [down] Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

While market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN11 [down] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Injury implies violation of a legal right.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN12 [down] Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

Under the filed rate doctrine, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN13 [down] Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine may bar a court from awarding monetary damages in a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission rate case.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN14[] Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

Injunctive relief may be barred by the filed rate doctrine and preemption principle where remedies for breach and non-performance of Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC)-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC.

Counsel: [*1] For Reorganized Debtors, Special Counsel: Edward A. Smith, Esq., Of Counsel, CADWALADER, WICKERSHAM & TAFT LLP, New York, NY; Mark C. Ellenberg, Esq., David F. Williams, Esq., Of Counsel, Washington, DC.

For Southern California Edison Company: Philip Bentley, Esq., P. Bradley O'Neill, Esq., Jonathan T. Koevary, Esq., Of Counsel, KRAMER LEVIN NAFTALIS & FRANKEL LLP, New York, New York.

Judges: Arthur J. Gonzalez, UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE.

Opinion by: Arthur J. Gonzalez

Opinion

---

OPINION SUSTAINING DEBTORS' OBJECTION TO PROOFS OF CLAIM NOS. 22630 THROUGH 22632 REGARDING STATE LAW CLAIMS IN ELECTRICITY MARKET FILED BY SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON COMPANY ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ United States Bankruptcy Judge

ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ

United States Bankruptcy Judge

Southern California Edison Company ("Edison") filed proofs of claim regarding manipulation in the electricity market in the State of the California in unliquidated amounts against Enron Corporation and certain of its affiliated entities, (collectively, the "Debtors") in the following cases: Enron Corp. (Claim No. 22630); Enron Energy Services, Inc. (Claim No. 22631); and Enron Power Marketing, Inc. (Claim No. 22632) (collectively, the "Claims"). The Claims allege that [*2] the Debtors violated state antitrust and competition laws as a result of their improper and illegal manipulation in the California power market.

The issue before the Court is whether the Claims are preempted by the Federal Power Act (the "FPA") and precluded by the filed rate doctrine. The Court finds that because the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") has exclusive jurisdiction over interstate sales of wholesale electricity, the state law claims sought to be enforced by Edison in the prosecution of the Claims are preempted by the FPA. Further, the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of such Claims.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

A. The Debtors

Commencing on December 2, 2001, and from time to time continuing thereafter, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of title 11 of the United States Code (the "Bankruptcy Code"). On July 15, 2004, the Court entered an Order confirming the Debtors' Supplemental Modified Fifth Amended Joint Plan of Affiliated Debtors (the "Plan") in these cases. The Plan became effective on November 17, 2004.

B. The Claims

This litigation arises out of the California energy crisis of 2000-01. Prior to the energy crisis, [*3] the California legislature had passed Assembly Bill 1890<sup>1</sup> (the "Bill") to create two nongovernmental entities, the California Power Exchange (the "PX") and the California Independent System Operator (the "ISO"), to operate markets and manage the sale of electricity. The PX and the ISO were organized under California law, but regulated by FERC. California v. Dynegy, Inc., 375 F.3d 831, 850 \(9th Cir. 2004\). The central transactions, wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce, were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Further, the centralized wholesale spot electricity markets operated by the ISO and the PX were established subject to FERC review and approval. The ISO and the PX served as clearinghouses. Edison is an investor-owned utility that purchases, transmits, generates, distributes, and sells electricity in California. Under the Bill, Edison was required to procure all electric power necessary to meet its total peak demand in excess of its generation capacity through the PX and ISO.

Since August 2, 2000, FERC has commenced refund proceeding, and partnership and gaming proceeding to investigate certain of the Debtors. FERC [*4] found that the Debtors engaged in gaming<sup>2</sup> in the form of inappropriate trading strategies and further engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information. Enron Power Mktg., Inc., et al., 106 FERC ¶ 61,024 \(2004\). Both proceedings are ongoing, including the determination of remedies by FERC.

On March 6, 2003, Edison filed the Claims against the Debtors. Edison alleges that the Debtors manipulated energy markets in California and overcharged for energy through unlawful and anti-competitive acts during the western power crisis of 2000 and 2001. Edison maintains the alleged manipulation in the electricity market constitutes a violation of state antitrust law, specifically, the Cartwright Act,<sup>3</sup> and the Unfair Competition Law<sup>4</sup> and seeks disgorgement, restitution, [*5] actual and treble damages together with interest and injunctive relief.

On March 9, 2005 and May 16, 2005, the Debtors filed separate objections to Edison's state law claims, seeking to disallow the Claims on the ground that the FPA preempts state law and the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of these Claims, and that Edison's state law claims are duplicative of the claims filed by the California Attorney General.

On May 2, 2005, Edison filed its response to the Debtors' objection. Citing case law, Edison contends the FPA does not preclude operation of other state laws, or judicial adjudication of certain issues relating to wholesale energy markets regulated by FERC. Edison maintains that the Court may decide whether the Debtors' various fraudulent gaming and market manipulation activities violated state laws without having to determine a nonmanipulated rate. In addition, Edison [*6] argues that the filed rate doctrine should not apply unless rates are properly filed; therefore, because the filed rates are not at issue before this Court, the filed rate doctrine should not preclude the state law claims.

A hearing on this matter was held before the Court on May 18, 2005 (the "Hearing").

II. DISCUSSION

---

<sup>1</sup> 1996 Cal. Stat. 854

<sup>2</sup> The ISO tariff, through the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol defines gaming, in part, as "taking unfair advantage of the rules and procedures set forth in the PX or the ISO tariffs, Protocols or Activity Rule ... to the detriment of the efficiency of, and of consumers in, the ISO markets." Am. Electric Power Service Corp., et al., 103 FERC at ¶ 62,330 (2003).

<sup>3</sup> HN1 The Cartwright Acts prohibits agreements "to limit or reduce the production, or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720\(b\).

<sup>4</sup> HN2 The Unfair Competition Law prohibits unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business acts and practices. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

A. Legal Standard of Preemption

HN3 [↑] "Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the *Supremacy Clause, Article VI, clause 2, of the United States Constitution.*" Transmission Agency of Cal. v. Sierra Pacific Power Co., 295 F.3d 918, 928 (9th Cir. 2002). Where Congress manifests an intent to occupy an entire regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted ("Complete Preemption"). *Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 63-64, 107 S. Ct. 1542, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55 \(1987\)*. Federal courts have rarely identified legislation which has been found to completely preempt state jurisdiction. *Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 393, 107 S. Ct. 2425, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318 \(1987\)*. Here, the Court agrees with Edison that there is no evidence in the record that would support the conclusion that Congress intended for complete preemption to apply in this case. The Court does not need to identify a "clear and [<sup>7</sup>] manifest" congressional intent to preempt state laws in an entire field under the FPA because the Debtors do not argue that complete preemption is applicable here. HN4 [↑] In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted (1) "when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field," *Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 248, 104 S. Ct. 615, 78 L. Ed. 2d 443 \(1984\)* ("Field Preemption"), and (2) "to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Id. ("Conflict Preemption").

B. Preemption

1) Field Preemption

The Debtors, in support of their position that the state law claims should be barred by FERC's exclusive jurisdiction, cite to *Grays Harbor v. Idacorp Inc., 379 F.3d 641 \(9th Cir. 2004\)*, *Dynegy, and Snohomish County v. Dynegy Power Marketing Inc., 384 F.3d 756 \(9th Cir. 2004\)*. These cases addressed FERC's exclusive jurisdiction and its remedial power concerning the wholesale electricity market. The Debtors argue that Edison's claims alleging violations of state antitrust and unfair competition [<sup>8</sup>] law are nearly identical to those involved in the cited cases, and field preemption is applicable here for the same reasoning set forth in those cases.

The Dynegy court ruled that "state actions against wholesale electricity suppliers alleging violations of California's unfair business practices law are preempted by FPA because the conduct the state sought to condemn was expressly governed by the ISO tariffs and they encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to FERC, both to enforce and to seek remedy." 375 F.3d at 852.

The Court finds that the statute's framework under the FPA supports the conclusion in Dynegy that FERC has been granted broad authority by Congress, in addition to the authority to determine the "just and reasonable rates" for wholesale power. The Court disagrees with Edison that FPA's savings clause allows the application of state law claims in the instant case because the statute delegates to the Federal Energy Commission "exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states . . . . [<sup>9</sup>] HN5 [↑] Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824-824m. Edison does not dispute that the transactions at issue involved wholesale interstate sales. Further, there has been no evidence presented or any representation by either party that the sales that gave rise to this dispute should be characterized as either retail sales of electricity or wholesale intrastate sales.

The FPA further provides that upon a determination by FERC that HN6 [↑] "any rate charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824e (emphasis added).

Moreover, pursuant to the FPA, HN7 FERC possesses broad remedial authority to address [*10] anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit disgorgement and refunds. Further, FERC can proceed by rulemaking rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue discrimination on the part of individual utilities. Federal Power Act, §§ 205, 206\(a\), as amended, 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e; Department of Energy Organization Act, § 403(c), 42 U.S.C.A. § 7173\(c\).

In addition, after the deregulation of California energy markets, the central transactions, the wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce, were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Having examined FERC's regulatory authority over the deregulated electricity market in California, the Snohomish court concluded that "FERC is doing enough regulation to justify federal preemption of state laws under the market-based system of setting wholesale electricity rates." Snohomish, 384 F.3d at 760-61. For instance,

(1) FERC continued to oversee wholesale electricity rates by reviewing and approving a variety of documents filed by the PX and [*11] the ISO. FERC approved the market-based tariffs only upon a showing that the seller lacked or had mitigated its market power. (2) FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports under FPA §205(c) 16 U.S.C. §824d\(c\). (3) FERC reviewed and approved detailed tariffs filed by the PX and the ISO, which described in detail how the markets operated by each entity would function. Id.

In addition, "[e]ach participant in the PX and the ISO markets was required to sign an agreement acknowledging that the tariff filed by either the PX or the ISO would govern all transactions in that market." Id.

The Court also notes that a mechanism for FERC to enforce anti-competitive acts is in place. "[E]ntities that transact through the ISO or [the] PX and engage in improper practices<sup>5</sup> are in violation of filed tariffs . . . . FERC and the Market Surveillance Unit are directed by the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol to refer matters to the FERC for enforcement." 103 FERC at ¶ 62,334. Edison was required to procure all electric power necessary to meet its total peak demand in excess of its generation capacity through the PX and ISO during the western energy crisis. Thus, FERC has an enforcement [*12] power over the alleged transactions and practices by the Debtors occurring in the ISO and PX markets.

Edison argues that field preemption is not applicable because courts have referred the state law claims related to filed rates before regulatory commissions. In supporting its assertion, Edison cites [*13] the Supreme Court's decision in Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 \(1973\). The Supreme Court found that Congress does not intend to bar governments from bringing actions in violation of antitrust laws related to filed tariffs before regulatory commissions.

Having reviewed the case, the Court disagrees with Edison's argument and finds that two important differences exist. First, a critical distinction between the instant matter and the cited case is that there is a regulatory scheme against anti-competitive behavior that has been entrusted to FERC. In contrast, the Court in Otter Tails Power found that the limited authority of the Federal Power Commission (the "FPC") to order interconnections was not intended to be a substitute for the Sherman Act. 410 U.S. at 375. In Otter Tails Power, the FPA does not authorize the FPC to order a power company to wheel electric power over its transmission lines; accordingly, enforcing the Sherman Act against anticompetitive and monopolistic practices on interconnections by the district court did not conflict with authority of the FPC. Id. at 376-77. However, here as the Court discussed above, the statute under 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e(a) [*14] provides FERC with broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior. In fact, FERC has exercised this power to act in the proceedings instituted against the Debtors concerning alleged market manipulation during the energy crisis. FERC has asserted that it "can order disgorgement of monies above the post-October 2, 2000 refunds ordered in the California Refund Proceeding, if it finds violations of the ISO and the PX tariffs and finds that a monetary remedy is appropriate for such violations. It can additionally order additional disgorgement of unjust profits for tariff violations that occurred after October 2, 2000." 103 FERC at ¶62,331. Further, "implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates to the marketers is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority." 106 FERC ¶61,024.

<sup>5</sup> Since 1998, the ISO and the PX tariffs have contained provisions that identify and prohibit "gaming" and "anomalous market behavior" in the sale of electric power. HN8 "Anomalous market behavior" is (1) behavior that departs significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include a) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; b) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; c) unusual trades or transactions; d) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and e) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges." Am. Elec. Power Serv. Corp., et al., 103 FERC at ¶ 62,332 (2003).

Second, Otter Tail Power discussed issues of the interaction between federal administrative law and federal antitrust law; no state law preemption issue was presented in that case. In Otter Tail Power, the government brought [*15] an action against an electric power company to enjoin violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §2. 410 U.S. at 368. In order to protect market competition in certain cases, Congress did not expressly displace federal antitrust laws.

Edison argues that state and federal antitrust law would be impacted the same way. Edison cites a Seventh Circuit case, which asserts that "when state antitrust law only mirrors federal antitrust law, there is no reason to conclude that Congress intended to preempt the state law." State of Ill., ex rel. Burris v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 935 F.2d 1469, 1479 (7th Cir. 1991). In Panhandle Eastern, the court found that the Illinois Antitrust Act mirrored the Sherman Act based upon the evidence that "the state law claims . . . were modeled after the Sherman Act and Illinois law provides that its courts should use the construction of federal antitrust law by federal courts to guide their construction of those state antitrust laws that are substantially similar to federal antitrust law." Id. at 1480.<sup>6</sup> The Court notes that "California has long held that the federal antitrust act—Sherman Act and the Cartwright Act are similar and that Sherman Act cases [*16] apply, [although not binding], in construing the Cartwright Act." Derish v. San Mateo-Burlingame Board of Realtors, 724 F.2d 1347, 1350 (9th Cir. 1983). However, the Court also recognizes the decision made by the Supreme Court in Connell Construction Company, Inc., v. Plumbers and Steamfitters Local Union No. 100, etc. 421 U.S. 616, 635-36, 95 S. Ct. 1830, 44 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1975). The Supreme Court held that a party's agreement was subject to the federal antitrust laws, but it did not follow that state antitrust law may apply as well because "[p]ermitting state antitrust law . . . could frustrate the basic federal policies . . . and interfere with the detailed system Congress has created for regulating organizational techniques." Id. Here, Congress through the FPA, made clear that the interstate "transmission" or "sale" of wholesale energy pursuant to a federal tariff, not merely the "rates," falls within FERC's exclusive jurisdiction. Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824e. A bright-line distinction is drawn between wholesale sales, which fall within FERC's plenary jurisdiction, and retail sales or wholesale intrastate sales, over which the states exercise jurisdiction. Duke Energy Trading and Mktg, L.L.C. v. Davis, 267 F.3d 1042, 1056 (9th Cir. 2001). [*17] Allowing state law claims in the wholesale interstate electricity market would encroach upon the authority Congress entrusted exclusively to FERC.

Edison further argues that state law claims related to wholesale energy have been allowed by the court in Gulf States Util. Co. v. Alabama Power Co., 824 F.2d 1465 (5th Cir. 1987). The court in that case concluded that state law claims concerning contractual disputes were not within the scope of FERC's jurisdiction. The viability of the

---

<sup>6</sup>The Court notes that the Ninth Circuit in Snohomish and Dynegy did not discuss the issue of the similarity between California antitrust law and the Sherman Act. In Snohomish, a consumer utility in Washington sued generators and traders of wholesale electricity, for violations of California state antitrust and consumer protection laws. 384 F.3d 756. In Dynegy, the Attorney General of the State of California brought state court actions against wholesale electricity suppliers for violations of California's unfair business practices law. 375 F.3d 831. Although the Court does not know whether the issue was raised in either case, it is clear that the issue was not addressed therein.

Edison's comparison depends on [*18] the substantial similarity of facts between the case before the Court and the cited case. The Court finds that the facts here are distinguishable. First, the state law claims in the cited case were related to contractual issues, which exclusively fall within a state's jurisdiction. The court in Gulf States held that executed contract performance, such as the failure to negotiate in good faith and fraud, were not preempted by the FPA. 824 F.2d at 1474. Here, no evidence or argument presented before the Court demonstrates that there is an issue involving contractual disputes. Second, contract formation issues would not necessarily intrude upon the rate-setting jurisdiction of FERC. Grays Harbor, 379 F.3d at 653. Therefore, field preemption bars Edison from pursuing its state law claims before the Court.

2) Conflict Preemption

As to conflict preemption, for the foregoing reasons, the Court disagrees with Edison that the FPA only provides FERC with authority to determine the "just and reasonable" rates for wholesale power. Instead, FERC has broad authority concerning anti-competitive activities related to the filed rate. Accordingly, conflict preemption also bars Edison from pursuing its [*19] state law claims before the Court.

C. Filed Rate Doctrine

Another threshold question before the Court is whether the Court would have to determine a tariff. HN9[↑] The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. E. & J. Gallo Winery v. Encana Energy Servs., Inc., Case No. CV F 03-5412 AWILJO, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29383 at \*29-30. The Court recognizes that the filed rate doctrine "forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority." Ark. L.A. Gas Co. v. Frank Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577-78, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 \(1981\). The Court also acknowledges that the purpose of the doctrine is "preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant." City of Cleveland v. FPC, 525 F.2d 845, 854, 174 U.S. App. D.C. 1 \(D.C. Cir. 1976\).

The [*20] first argument made by Edison is that the filed rate doctrine is inapplicable because no properly filed rates were on file during the period when the alleged conduct occurred. However, Edison relied on the following finding in California v. FERC, 383 F.3d 1006, 1016 \(9th Cir. 2004\) to support its position "without the required filings, neither FERC nor any affected party may challenge the rate. Pragmatically, under such circumstances, there is no filed tariff in place at all." Id. This argument, however, inappropriately equates the Debtors' alleged violation of the filing requirements with no-filed tariffs. FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports pursuant to FPA §205(c) 16 U.S.C. §824d\(c\) on transaction-specific information about its sales and purchases at market-based rates. The court in Grays Harbor concluded, HN10[↑] "while market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine." 379 F.3d at 651.

Further, the Court agrees with the opinion of the California v. FERC court which concluded that "the reporting requirements are an integral part of a tariff, with FERC's implied enforcement [*21] mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates." 383 F.3d at 1016. On August 13, 2002, FERC's Initial Report in Docket No. PA02-2-000 concluded that the Debtors engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information.<sup>7</sup> Then, FERC concluded that such behavior constituted market manipulation and resulted in unjust and unreasonable rates and violated the express requirements in the orders allowing the Debtors to make sales at market-based rates. 106 FERC ¶ 61,024. As noted by FERC, implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority. The Debtors were expressly directed, when they were granted market-based rate authority, to inform the FERC promptly of changes in status (which would include changes in their generation market shares) that reflect a departure from the characteristics that the FERC relied upon in granting [*22] market-based rate authority. Id.

Moreover, the Court in California v. FERC, indirectly recognized the application of the filed rate doctrine when marketers had not properly reported to FERC where such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC. 383 F.3d at 1016. Without the availability of retroactive refunds, "[p]arties aggrieved by the illegal rate would have no FERC remedy, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a direct action against the offending seller. That result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the FPA." Id.

The second argument made by Edison is that the filed rate doctrine is not applicable because the issue presented before the Court is distinguishable from those in Grays Harbor and Snohomish. The plaintiff in Snohomish brought an action against a company that engaged in market manipulation during the energy crisis in violation of [*23] state antitrust and unfair competition law. The court confirmed that the filed rate doctrine applies because the court could not determine the rates that "would have been achieved in a competitive market." 384 F.3d at 761. Similarly, the court in Grays Harbor rejected the request from the plaintiff for a determination of the "fair price." 379 F.3d at 645. Here, Edison argues that it is not asserting a price which should be paid in a competitive market as the benchmark for a calculation of a remedy. Rather, Edison maintains that the remedy would be unrelated to the ISO tariff and the Court would not have to determine a non-manipulated rate because FERC has done so. Edison argues that it is merely requesting the Court to determine liability, and thereafter, remand to FERC for a determination of remedies.

The Ninth Circuit in California v. FERC examined the substance of the law and remanded to FERC for the determination of remedies. The court there declined to order refunds to a state because the court reasoned it was more appropriate for FERC to consider its remedial options in the first instance. 383 F.3d at 1018. The substantive law examined by the court in California v. FERC concerned [*24] whether retroactive refunds were legally available. Id. As such, no liability issue was raised and determined by that court. Further, the Court finds that determining the liability or the legal right of Edison against the Debtors for violation of the antitrust laws would have to be measured by the tariff. Therefore, the filed rate doctrine would be applicable.

In addressing the right of action that a violation of the antitrust laws give to one who has been injured in its business or property, the Supreme Court in Keogh v. Chicago & N.W.R.Y. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 \(1922\), stated that HN11 [↑] "[i]njury implies violation of a legal right." Id. at 163. The Supreme Court concluded that "the legal rights of [a] shipper as against [a] carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff." Id. at 163. Justice Brandeis explained "[a] rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Anti-Trust Act. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under Section 8 of the latter act . . . the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the 'person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained [*25] in consequence of any such violation.'" Id. at 162. Thus, the finding of liability in antitrust laws would be integral to the Court's determination of whether the Debtors are liable due to their violations of state antitrust law and unfair competition law. For instance, the Court could not determine the overcharge claim owed by the Debtors for any electricity market manipulation without first deciding the reasonableness of the filed tariff.

<sup>7</sup> FERC found that the Debtors failed to inform FERC in a timely manner of changes in their market shares that resulted from their gaining influence/control over others' facilities, as required under their market-based rate authorization. 106 FERC ¶ 61,024.

The Supreme Court case, Arkansas Louisiana, further supports the Court's position that the filed rate doctrine should apply here. "In asserting that the filed rate doctrine had no application, respondents in Arkansas Louisiana contended that the state court has done no more than determine the damages they have suffered as a result of the breach of a contract by a gas company." 453 U.S. at 579. The Supreme Court rejected this argument by reasoning that "the mere fact that respondents brought this suit under state law would not rescue it, for when Congress has established an exclusive form of regulation . . . there can be no divided authority over interstate commerce . . . HN12[] Under the filed rate doctrine, FERC alone is empowered to make that judgment, [*26] and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged." Id. at 580-84.

Moreover, to award monetary relief, the Court would have to determine a "fair price." Thus, HN13[] the filed rate doctrine bars the Court from awarding monetary damages sought by Edison. Nonetheless, the Court finds that injunctive relief would also be unavailable to Edison. The Court agrees with the Ninth Circuit's decision in Snohomish, which declined to grant HN14[] injunctive relief because such relief is barred by the filed rate doctrine and preemption principle. 384 F.3d at 762. "Remedies for breach and non-performance of FERC-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC." Dynegy, 375 F.3d at 836.

The decisions from the Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association v. Citizens Utilities Co., 45 F.3d 58 \(2d Cir. 1995\) and Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17 \(2d Cir. 1994\), provide an additional basis for dismissal of the Claims sought by Edison. The Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association affirmed the decision from the district court, which had declined the plaintiff's invitation to find a fraud exception to the [*27] filed rate doctrine. In determining whether the filed rate doctrine applied, the court focused on the impact the court's decision would have on agency procedures and rate determination. Sun City Taxpayers' Ass'n v. Citizens Utils. Co., 847 F.Supp.281, 291 \(D. Conn. 1994\). The Second Circuit in Wegoland recognized that the filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that (a) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate-making issues, (b) courts lack the competence to set utility rates, and (c) the interference of courts in the rate-making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime. 27 F.3d at 21.

Therefore, having considered the policy objectives, the Court finds it is inappropriate to frustrate FERC's jurisdiction afforded by Congress. The Court lacks authority to impose a different rate than the one approved by a federal agent. Any other conclusion departing from this principle would undermine the filed rate doctrine. The Court, therefore, rejects Edison's challenge to the application of the filed rate doctrine. [*28] Accordingly, the filed rate doctrine bars the relief sought by Edison.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that the state law claims sought by Edison concerning electricity market manipulation are preempted by the FPA and precluded by the filed rate doctrine. Therefore, the Court sustains the Debtors' objection to the Claims filed by Edison.

Counsel for the Debtors is directed to settle an order consistent with this Court's Opinion.

Dated: New York, New York

July 6, 2005

/s/ Arthur J. Gonzalez

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

Sickles v. Cabot Corp.

Superior Court of New Jersey, Appellate Division

June 8, 2005, Submitted ; July 7, 2005, Decided

DOCKET NO. A-3129-04T53129-04T5

Reporter

379 N.J. Super. 100 *; 877 A.2d 267 **; 2005 N.J. Super. LEXIS 217 ***; 2005-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,858

LOUIS SICKLES, PLAINTIFF-RESPONDENT, v. CABOT CORPORATION, PHELPS DODGE CORPORATION, COLUMBIAN CHEMICALS COMPANY, DEGUSSA ENGINEERED CARBONS, LP, DEGUSSA AG, AND DEGUSSA CORPORATION, DEFENDANTS-APPELLANTS.

Subsequent History: [***1] Approved For Publication July 7, 2005.

Certification denied by Sickles v. Cabot Corp., 185 N.J. 297, 884 A.2d 1267, 2005 N.J. LEXIS 1408 (N.J., Oct. 18, 2005)

Prior History: On appeal from the Superior Court of New Jersey, Law Division, Camden County, L-6230-03.

Core Terms

---

purchasers, indirect, antitrust, carbon black, defendants', manufacture, consumers, anti trust law, unconscionable, tires, antitrust violation, motion to dismiss, damages, consumer fraud, price-fixing, overcharge, practices, putative class, interpretations, products, block, tape, cause of action, treble-damages, ingredient, deception, pass-on, chain, Shoe

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss under N.J. Ct. R. 4:6-2(e) should be approached with great caution and should only be granted in the rarest of instances. Courts must view the allegations with great liberality and without concern for a plaintiff's ability to prove the facts alleged in the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A court must dismiss a plaintiff's complaint if it has failed to articulate a legal basis entitling the plaintiff to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss a complaint under N.J. R. 4:6-2\(e\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted must be evaluated in light of the legal sufficiency of the facts alleged in the complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN4 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A plaintiff's obligation on a motion to dismiss is not to prove the case, but only to make allegations, which, if proven, would constitute a valid cause of action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN5 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Appellate courts review a motion to dismiss by the same standard applied by a trial court; thus, considering and accepting as true the facts alleged in the complaint, the appellate courts determine whether they set forth a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-12.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

379 N.J. Super. 100, *100L<sup>2005</sup> A.2d 267, **267L<sup>2005</sup> N.J. Super. LEXIS 217, ***1

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

New Jersey courts follow federal antitrust law in interpreting their own antitrust statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN9[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Federal court interpretations of federal law constitute persuasive authority as to the meaning of the particular state antitrust enactments.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN12[] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The private right of action under the Clayton Act does not extend to indirect purchasers, as only overcharged direct purchasers, and not others in the chain of manufacture or distribution, are parties injured in their business or property within the meaning of the Clayton Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN13 [ ] Private Actions, Standing

The entire antitrust remedy belongs to, and only to, direct purchasers, i.e., those who purchased an affected product directly from the defendants; indirect or pass-through purchasers, i.e., those who purchased the defendants' product further down the distribution chain, have no standing under federal antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The United States Supreme Court has upheld the right of states to allow suits by indirect purchasers under their own antitrust statutes, notwithstanding the federal rule limiting federal antitrust recoveries to direct purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN15 [ ] Private Actions, Standing

In a standing context for a private cause of action, given the long history of state common-law and statutory remedies against monopolies and unfair business practices, it is plain that this is an area traditionally regulated by the states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN16 [ ] Private Actions, Standing

In a standing context, nothing in Illinois Brick suggests that it would be contrary to congressional purposes for states to allow indirect purchasers to recover under their own antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-1 to -20, should be applied broadly to accomplish its remedial purpose, namely to root out consumer fraud.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

A claim for unconscionable commercial practices must demonstrate a capacity to mislead, a fundamental predicate for maintaining a claim under the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-1 to -20.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN19 [blue icon] Legislation, Interpretation

It is basic in the construction of legislation that every effort should be made to harmonize the law relating to the same subject matter.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Private Actions, Standing

The New Jersey Antitrust Act (ATA), N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-1 to -19, does not expressly restrict the right of action to direct purchasers injured by antitrust violations. It is clear, however, based on the holding in Illinois Brick, the harmonization clause of N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-18, and the failed attempt by the New Jersey Legislature to amend the ATA with an Illinois Brick repealer, that an indirect purchaser is precluded from suing for antitrust violations under the ATA.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Clayton Act, Claims

Indirect or pass-through purchasers, i.e., those who purchased a manufacturer's product further down the distribution chain, have no standing under federal antitrust laws for damages caused by price-fixing. The indirect purchasers are not parties "injured in their business or property" under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN22** [L] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

In an antitrust context, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-18 is a mandatory, not a permissive statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN23** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

As New Jersey's antitrust act was patterned after the Sherman Act, courts have consistently acknowledged the significance of federal antitrust decisions in the interpretation of the state antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN24** [L] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The language of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-1 to -19, conferring the right to treble-damage recovery on any person who shall be injured in his business or property by antitrust violations, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-12, is identical to Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN25** [L] Legislation, Interpretation

Caution must be exercised in using the action of a legislature on proposed amendments as an interpretative aid in discerning legislative intent.

379 N.J. Super. 100, *100L<sup>2005</sup> A.2d 267, **267L<sup>2005</sup> N.J. Super. LEXIS 217, ***1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN26[ Private Actions, Standing

In the absence of an Illinois Brick repealer or other language by the New Jersey Legislature evidencing an intent to permit indirect, as well as direct purchasers, to recover for antitrust violations, it is clear New Jersey courts are directed to follow the Illinois Brick holding limiting federal antitrust recoveries to direct purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Legal Services Marketing > Advertising

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN27[ Private Actions, Standing

The New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-1 to -20, empowers private plaintiffs to recover for treble damages, attorneys fees, and costs upon a demonstration of an ascertainable loss of moneys or property, real or personal, as a result of an unlawful practice as defined by the act. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-19.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN28[ Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > General Provisions (Article 1) > Definitions & Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN29[ Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

In an antitrust context, the phrase "unconscionable commercial practice," added to N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-2's definition of "unlawful practice" in 1971, has been defined as acts lacking good faith, honesty in fact, and observance of fair dealing. Capacity to mislead is the prime ingredient of deception or an unconscionable commercial practice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:8-1 to -20, was enacted to help eradicate consumer fraud, not to advance public policy in favor of competition and prevent practices that deprive consumers of the benefit of competitive markets, which is the overriding purpose of the New Jersey Antitrust Act, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-1 to -19.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Contracts Law > Statute of Frauds > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN31 [blue icon] Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

Although New Jersey's antitrust and consumer fraud statutes are to be liberally interpreted, their remedial provisions are not without limit.

Counsel: Brown and Connery and Jennifer L. Merzon (Jones Day) of the Washington DC bar, admitted pro hac vice, attorneys for appellant Cabot Corporation (Michael J. Vassalotti and Ms. Merzon, on the joint brief).

Dechert and Gary W. Kubek (Debevoise & Plimpton) of the New York bar, admitted pro hac vice, attorneys for appellants Phelps Dodge Corporation and Columbian Chemicals Company (Michelangelo Troisi, of counsel; Michelle Hart Yearly and Mr. Kubek, on the joint brief).

Campbell, Campbell, Edwards & Conroy and Hima Vatti (O'Melveny & Myers) of the Washington DC bar, admitted pro hac vice, attorneys for Degussa Engineered Carbons, LP, Degussa AG, and Degussa Corporation (C. Scott Toomey, William A. Rupert and Ms. Vatti, on the joint brief).

Sufrin Zucker Steinberg Sonstein & Wixted, Krishna B. Narine, of the Pennsylvania bar, admitted pro hac vice, Steven E. Connolly (Schiff & Waide) of the Pennsylvania bar, admitted pro hac vice, and Isaac L. Diel, admitted pro hac vice, of the Kansas bar, attorneys for respondent (Ms. Narine, Mr. Connolly and Mr. Diel, of counsel; David W. Sufrin, on the brief).

Judges: Before Judges NEWMAN, AXELRAD and BILDER. The opinion of the court was delivered by AXELRAD, J.T.C. (temporarily assigned).

Opinion by: AXELRAD

Opinion

---

[*103] [**268] The opinion of the court was delivered by

[**269] AXELRAD, J.T.C. (temporarily assigned).

A purchaser of Goodyear tires filed a class action suit against companies which produce, manufacture and sell carbon black, a primary ingredient in tires. At issue in this appeal is whether an [*104] indirect purchaser of an allegedly price-fixed product may state a claim for antitrust violations under the New Jersey Antitrust Act (ATA), N.J.S.A. 56:9-1 to -19, and the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act (CFA), N.J.S.A. 56:8-1 to -20. We hold that neither statute provides a cause of action to a pass-through purchaser such as the putative class plaintiff, and reverse the order of the Law Division denying defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's complaint under Rule 4:6-2\(e\).

In November and December 2001, plaintiff Louis Sickles purchased from the Goodyear Auto Service Center in Cherry Hill, New Jersey, two Goodyear tires [***3] (P215/70R15 97S S1 Regatta 2 XNWRPTL) for his wife's vehicle and one Goodyear tire (P205/65 R15 92H S1 Eagle HP VSBLRPTL) for his vehicle. He then filed an action alleging violations of the ATA and CFA, seeking damages on behalf of [a]ll persons residing in the state of New Jersey who purchased any product that was manufactured using Carbon Black sold by Defendants from January 1999 through November 2002.

Defendants are Cabot Corporation (Cabot); Phelps Dodge Corporation (Phelps Dodge); Columbian Chemicals Company (Columbian); Degussa Engineered Carbons, LP (DEC); Degussa AG; and Degussa Corporation. Cabot, a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Massachusetts, is the world's largest producer of carbon black, accounting for one-quarter of the worldwide production capacity and market share. Phelps Dodge is a New York corporation with its principal place of business in Arizona and wholly owns the subsidiary Columbian, which is engaged in the manufacture and sale of carbon black within the United States and throughout the world and maintains a carbon black facility in Ulysses, Kansas. DEC, a limited partnership with its principal place of business in [***4] New Jersey, is co-owned by Degussa AG and engages in the manufacture and sale of carbon black throughout the world.

Carbon black is a mixture of partially burned hydrocarbons produced by a combustion of natural gas. It is used as a reinforcing agent in rubber products such as tires, tubes, cables [*105] and conveyor belts and is the primary ingredient in car and truck tires. It is also used as an ingredient in countless other products such as dry-cell batteries, electrical conductors, and carbon brushes, and as a pigment in printing, carbon paper, typewriter ribbon inks, paints, photocopier toner and record discs.

The complaint alleged that defendants and their co-conspirators engaged in anti-competitive activities in violation of the ATA to artificially raise, stabilize, and maintain the price of carbon black sold by defendants from January 1999 through November 2002, resulting in plaintiff and other similarly situated consumers paying more for tires containing carbon black than they would have in the absence of defendants' alleged unlawful conduct. Plaintiff further claimed that defendants coordinated and cooperated with one another to implement output restrictions and price increases [***5] and agreed not to compete against one another to increase their respective market shares. Plaintiff also alleged these acts constituted an unconscionable practice under the CFA.

By order of November 29, 2004, the trial court denied defendants' motion to dismiss [**270] plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a claim. On February 24, 2005, we granted defendants' motion for leave to appeal. Defendants raise the following issues on appeal:

POINT I

THE [ATA] DISALLOWS INDIRECT PURCHASER CLAIMS.

1. The Harmonization Provision of the [ATA] Directs Conformity To Federal Antitrust Precedents, and Thus Prohibits Plaintiff's Claims.

2. The New Jersey Legislature Rejected An Illinois Brick Repealer Bill.

3. The Trial Court Erred in Failing To Follow Illinois Brick and in Misapplying ARC America.

POINT II

THE []CFA DOES NOT ALLOW PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM.

1. The []CFA Does Not Cover Any Antitrust Claims Whatsoever.

2. The []CFA Cannot Be Used To Make An End Run Around the [ATA's] Bar of Indirect Purchaser Claims.

We find these arguments persuasive.

I

We recognize the indulgent standard that applies to review of complaints in [***6] the context of a motion to dismiss for [*106] failure to state a claim. Printing Mart-Morristown v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 116 N.J. 739, 771-72, 563 A.2d 31 (1989). HN1 A motion to dismiss under Rule 4:6-2(e) should be "approach[ed] with great caution" and should only be granted in "the rarest of instances." Ibid. We must view the allegations with great liberality and without concern for the plaintiff's ability to prove the facts alleged in the complaint. Id. at 746, 563 A.2d 31.

However, HN2 a court must dismiss the plaintiff's complaint if it has failed to articulate a legal basis entitling plaintiff to relief. Camden County Energy Recovery Assocs., L.P. v. New Jersey Dep't of Envtl. Prot., 320 N.J. Super. 59, 64, 726 A.2d 968 (App.Div.1999). HN3 "A motion to dismiss a complaint under Rule 4:6-2(e) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted must be evaluated in light of the legal sufficiency of the facts alleged in the complaint." Donato v. Moldow, 374 N.J. Super. 475, 482, 865 A.2d 711 (App.Div.2005). HN4 The plaintiff's obligation on a motion to dismiss [***7] is "not to prove the case but only to make allegations, which, if proven, would constitute a valid cause of action." Leon v. Rite Aid Corp., 340 N.J. Super. 462, 472, 774 A.2d 674 (App.Div.2001).

HN5 We review such a motion by the same standard applied by the trial court; thus, considering and accepting as true the facts alleged in the complaint, we determine whether they set forth a claim upon which relief can be granted. Donato, supra, 374 N.J. Super. at 483, 865 A.2d 711.

II

The ATA was passed in 1970 "to promote the unhampered growth of commerce and industry throughout the State by prohibiting restraints of trade which are secured through monopolistic practices and which act or tend to act to decrease competition between and among persons engaged in commerce and trade." N.J.S.A. 56:9-1 (Historical and Statutory Notes). Under the ATA, HN6 "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or [*107] property by reason of a violation of the provisions of this act may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages sustained by him, together with reasonable attorneys' fees, filing fees and reasonable costs of suit." N.J.S.A. 56:9-12.

[***8] HN7 We follow federal antitrust law in interpreting our own antitrust statute. [**271] See N.J.S.A. 56:9-18 HN8 ("This act shall be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable Federal antitrust statutes and to effectuate, insofar as practicable, a uniformity in the laws of those states which enact it."). See also Pomanowski v. Monmouth County Bd. of Realtors, 89 N.J. 306, 313, 446 A.2d 83 (1982) (Because the ATA is patterned after the Sherman Antitrust Act, courts have "concluded that HN9 federal court interpretations of federal law constitute persuasive authority as to the meaning of the particular state enactments.") (quoting State v. Lawn King, Inc., 84 N.J. 179, 192, 417 A.2d 1025 (1980)).

Passed by Congress in 1890, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, declares illegal HN10 "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. . ." Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 15, provides a private right of action to HN11 "any person who shall be injured in his business [***9] or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws."

HN12 This private right, however, does not extend to indirect purchasers, as only overcharged direct purchasers, and not others in the chain of manufacture or distribution, are parties "injured in [their] business or property" within the meaning of the Clayton Act. *Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois*, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, reh'g denied, 434 U.S. 881, 98 S. Ct. 243, 54 L. Ed. 2d 164 (1977). In Illinois Brick the State of Illinois, on behalf of itself and 700 municipalities who were indirect purchasers of concrete block, brought an antitrust action under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, alleging concrete block manufacturers and distributors had fixed prices of the concrete block in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. *Id. at 726-27, 97 S. Ct. at 2065, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 713*. As in the present case, the plaintiffs did not purchase the products directly from the defendants. Rather, the plaintiffs "[sought] to demonstrate that masonry contractors, who incorporated [defendants'] block into walls and other masonry structures, passed on the alleged [***10] overcharge on the block to general contractors, who incorporated the masonry structures into entire buildings, and that the general contractors in turn passed on the overcharge to [plaintiffs] in the bids submitted for those buildings." *Id. at 735, 97 S. Ct. at 2069, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 718*. Thus, the block passed through two separate levels in the chain of distribution before reaching the plaintiffs. *Id. at 726, 97 S. Ct. at 2065, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 713*.

The Supreme Court held that HN13 the entire antitrust remedy belongs to, and only to, direct purchasers, i.e., those who purchased the affected product directly from the defendants, and that indirect or pass-through purchasers, i.e., those who purchased the defendants' product further down the distribution chain, have no standing under federal antitrust law. As the Court reasoned,

[p]ermitting the use of pass-on theories under S. 4 essentially would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers. . . . [This] would add whole [***11] new dimensions of complexity to the treble-damages suits and undermine their effectiveness.

[*\[Id. at 737, 97 S. Ct. at 2070, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 719.\]*](#)

This rationale was consistent with the Court's holding in *Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp.*, 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 \(1968\), an antitrust action brought under Section 4 of the Clayton Act [\[\*\*272\]](#) against a manufacturer of shoe machinery by one of its customers, a manufacturer of shoes. The Court rejected as a matter of law the defense that the retailer plaintiff as a direct purchaser had not been injured in its business as required by the statute because it had passed on the claimed illegal overcharge to its customers who were indirect purchasers of defendant's shoe machinery. *Id. at 494, 88 S. Ct. at 2232, 20 L. Ed. 2d at 1241-42*.

[\[\*109\]](#) In Illinois Brick, the Supreme Court reaffirmed its holding in Hanover Shoe, concluding the rationale in that case could not justify unequal treatment of plaintiffs and defendants with respect to the permissibility of pass-on arguments:

The principal basis for the decision in Hanover Shoe was the [\[\*12\]](#) Court's perception of the uncertainties and difficulties in analyzing price and output decisions "in the real economic world rather than an economist's hypothetical model," . . . and of the costs to the judicial system and the efficient enforcement of the antitrust laws of attempting to reconstruct those decisions in the courtroom. This perception that the attempt to trace the complex economic adjustments to a change in the cost of a particular factor of production would greatly complicate and reduce the effectiveness of already protracted treble-damages proceedings applies with no less force to the assertion of pass-on theories by plaintiffs than it does to the assertion by defendants. . . . Indeed, the evidentiary complexities and uncertainties involved in the defensive use of pass-on against a direct purchaser are multiplied in the offensive use of pass-on by a plaintiff several steps removed from the defendant in the chain of distribution. The demonstration of how much of the overcharge was passed on by the first purchaser must be repeated at each point at which the price-fixed goods changed hands before they reached the plaintiff.

[***13] [Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. at 731-33; 97 S. Ct. at 2067-68, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 716-17 (internal citation omitted).]

Additionally, the Court reasoned if both direct and indirect purchasers were permitted to recover, antitrust defendants would be exposed to duplicate damages for the same injury. Id. at 746-47, 97 S. Ct. at 2075, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 725-26.

In response to Illinois Brick, several state legislatures amended their antitrust acts to include a so-called "Illinois Brick repealer" expressly granting standing in antitrust treble-damage actions to indirect purchasers, including the ultimate consumers.<sup>1</sup> In [**273] *California [*110] v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 109 S. Ct. 1661, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86 (1989)*, HN14↑ the Supreme Court upheld the right of states to allow suits by indirect purchasers under their own antitrust statutes, notwithstanding the federal rule limiting federal antitrust recoveries to direct purchasers. The Court found that HN15↑ "[g]iven the long history of state common-law and statutory remedies against monopolies and unfair business practices, it is plain that this is an area traditionally regulated by the States." Id. at 101, 490 U.S. 93, 109 S. Ct. 1661, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 94-95 [***14] (footnote omitted). In concluding that state indirect purchaser statutes were not pre-empted by federal law, the Court stated, HN16↑ "nothing in Illinois Brick suggests that it would be contrary to congressional purposes for States to allow indirect purchasers to recover under their own antitrust laws." Id. at 103, 109 S. Ct. at 1666, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 96.

[***15] Not only has our Legislature not enacted a repealer amendment in response to Illinois Brick, but when an attempt was made, the bill was never reported out of committee. (Assembly Bill No. 4629, March 11, 1991). The bill proposed to amend N.J.S.A. 56:9-12 of the ATA to allow recovery to "[a]ny person who shall be injured directly or indirectly in his business or property by reason of a violation of the provisions of this act." The statement [*111] accompanying the bill expressly referenced the Illinois Brick holding and stated it was intended to clarify that under the [ATA], indirect purchasers of goods and services are permitted to seek damages in antitrust cases. The bill would create a presumption that in the absence of a preponderance of evidence to the contrary, the final indirect purchaser of goods and services is the party actually injured in the antitrust violation. [Statement to Assembly Bill No. 4629 (March 11, 1991).]

In the present case, the trial judge recognized our courts' obligation to follow federal law in construing the ATA and, under Illinois Brick, that federal antitrust law prohibits indirect purchaser suits. [***16] He further acknowledged that our Legislature declined to pass an Illinois Brick repealer. The judge concluded, however, that a claim asserting an antitrust violation by an indirect purchaser, such as plaintiff, is cognizable under both the ATA and CFA. His rationale was based on the Supreme Court's ruling in ARC America permitting states to allow indirect purchaser suits, the broad language of N.J.S.A. 56:9-12 which grants standing to "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property" to bring an action under the ATA for an antitrust violation, and the absence of express statutory language prohibiting indirect purchasers from suing under the ATA. (Emphasis added). The judge further concluded that plaintiffs "put forth a cause of action based on defendants' alleged price fixing, which . . . can be construed as . . . an unconscionable commercial practice" under the CFA.

<sup>1</sup> Twenty-three states and the District of Columbia have adopted Illinois Brick repealer statutes: Alabama, Ala. Code § 6-5-60(a) 2005; Alaska, Alaska Stat. § 45.50.577 (Michie 2004); California, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750(a) (West 2005); Colorado, Colo. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 6-4-111(2) (West 2005) (authorizing the state attorney general to bring suit for indirect injury to any government or public entity); District of Columbia, D.C. Code Ann. § 28-4509 (2005); Hawaii, Haw. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 480-3, -13, and -14 (Michie 2004) (allowing the state attorney general to file class action suit on behalf of indirect purchasers); Idaho, Idaho Code § 48-108(2) (Michie 2004) (permitting the state attorney general as parens patriae to bring suit); Illinois, 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 10/7(2) (West 2005); Kansas, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-161(b) (2004); Maine, Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. tit. 10, § 1104(1) (West 2005); Maryland, Md. Code Ann., Com. Law II § 11-209(b)(2)(ii) (2005) (allowing the state and its subdivisions to bring indirect purchaser suits); Michigan, Mich. Comp. Laws § 445.778(2) (2005); Minnesota, Minn. Stat. Ann. § 325D.57 (West 2005); Mississippi, Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-9 (2005); Nebraska, Neb. Rev. Stat. § 59-821 (2005); Nevada, Nev. Rev. Stat. 598A.210(2) (2005); New Mexico, N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-3(A) (Michie 2005); New York, N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(6) (McKinney 2005); North Dakota, N.D. Cent. Code § 51-08.1-08(3) (2003); Oregon, Ore. Rev. Stat. § 646.775(1) (2005) (allowing attorney general to sue on behalf of indirect purchasers); Rhode Island, R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-12 (2004) (allowing attorney general to sue on behalf of indirect purchasers); South Dakota, S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-33 (Michie 2005); Vermont, Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 2465(b) (2004); Wisconsin, Wis. Stat. Ann. § 133.18(1)(a) (West 2005). See Bunker's Glass Co., v. Pilkington PLC, 206 Ariz. 9, 75 P.3d 99, 104 n. 4 (2003).

We decline to adopt this rationale. We are persuaded, instead, by the logic and analysis of Judge Miniman in Island Mortgages of New Jersey v. 3M, 373 N.J. Super. 172, 860 A.2d 1013 (Law Div. 2004), denying standing to a putative class of purchasers of invisible and [***17] transparent tape products [**274] to assert an antitrust claim against 3M, a tape manufacturer, under the CFA. The plaintiffs, who purchased 3M products through independent retailers, alleged that "3M engaged in a course of unconscionable conduct aimed at restricting the access of plaintiffs and the class to lower-priced transparent tape offered by 3-M competitors" [*112] through tactics such as a rebate structure which rewarded retailers for refusing to carry private label Scotch tape and providing cash incentives for entering into exclusive arrangements with defendant. Id. at 175-76, 860 A.2d 1013. According to the plaintiffs, "[t]he effect of such arrangements was to prevent retailers from offering lower cost private label Scotch tape to plaintiffs and the class" causing "significant harm to class members by increasing the price they have paid for transparent tape above competitive levels and/or by denying them a free choice in a competitive market, as well as the benefits of innovation." Id. at 176, 860 A.2d 1013. As in the present case, the plaintiffs rested their CFA claim on the legal theory that 3M's alleged monopolistic conduct was, by itself, an unconscionable commercial practice actionable [***18] under the CFA. Id. at 177, 860 A.2d 1013.

The court acknowledged HN17[<sup>17</sup>] the CFA should be "applied broadly to accomplish its remedial purpose, namely to root out consumer fraud." Id. at 176, 860 A.2d 1013 (quoting Lemelledo v. Beneficial Mgmt. Corp. of Am., 150 N.J. 255, 264, 696 A.2d 546 (1997)). Nevertheless, the court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss under Rule 4:6-2\(e\), concluding the plaintiffs had "failed to set forth any factual allegation that would satisfy the requirement that HN18[<sup>18</sup>] a claim for unconscionable commercial practices demonstrate 'a capacity to mislead[,]' a fundamental predicate for maintaining a claim under the CFA. Island Mortgages, supra, 373 N.J. Super. at 177, 860 A.2d 1013 (citing Fenwick v. Kay America Jeep, Inc., 72 N.J. 372, 378, 371 A.2d 13 (1977); New Jersey Citizen Action v. Schering-Plough Corp., 367 N.J. Super. 8, 13, 842 A.2d 174 (App.Div.), certif. denied, 178 N.J. 249, 837 A.2d 1092 (2003); and Leon v. Rite Aid Corp., 340 N.J. Super. 462, 470-72, 774 A.2d 674 (App.Div. 2001)).

Alternatively, the court dismissed the plaintiffs' [***19] complaint on the grounds that, as indirect purchasers, they lacked standing to pursue antitrust claims under the CFA. Island Mortgages, supra, 373 N.J. Super. at 177-78, 860 A.2d 1013. The court reasoned that indirect purchasers would lack standing to pursue claims under [*113] the ATA based on the harmonizing provision of N.J.S.A. 56:9-18 and the Supreme Court's holding in Illinois Brick, which deprives indirect consumers of standing under the Clayton Act. Id. at 179-80, 860 A.2d 1013. Accordingly, the plaintiffs were precluded from attempting to recast the very same antitrust conduct as a CFA claim. Ibid. The court insightfully stated:

This court finds that plaintiffs' attempt to bring suit under the [CFA] is in direct conflict with the well-founded policies interpreting federal and New Jersey antitrust law. Plaintiffs in this case allege conduct that is traditionally classified under antitrust law. Although the CFA should be broadly applied, in this instance, allowing plaintiffs to move forward with their suit would undermine the standing requirements of the [ATA]. HN19[<sup>19</sup>] "It is basic in the construction of legislation that every effort should [***20] be made to harmonize the law relating to the same subject matter." State v. Green, 62 N.J. 547, 554, 303 A.2d 312, 316 (1973).

[Id. at 180, 860 A.2d 1013.]

We recognize that HN20[<sup>20</sup>] the ATA does not expressly restrict the right of action to [**275] direct purchasers injured by antitrust violations. It is clear, however, based on the holding in Illinois Brick, the harmonization clause of N.J.S.A. 56:9-18, and the failed attempt by our Legislature to amend the ATA with an Illinois Brick repealer, that an indirect purchaser is precluded from suing for antitrust violations under the ATA. The United States Supreme Court unequivocally held in Illinois Brick that HN21 [indirect or pass-through purchasers, i.e., those who purchased a manufacturer's product further down the distribution chain, have no standing under federal antitrust laws for damages caused by price-fixing. The Court expressly found that indirect purchasers were not parties "injured in [their] business or property" under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Illinois Brick, supra, 431 U.S. at 728-29, 97 S. Ct. at 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 714-15. In ARC California, the [***21] Court merely held that state indirect purchaser laws, so-called Illinois Brick repealers, were not pre-empted by federal law, notwithstanding the Illinois Brick rule limiting federal antitrust recoveries under the Clayton Act to direct purchasers. The decision did not create a cause of action for indirect purchasers to pursue.

Our Legislature specifically incorporated federal precedent, providing in N.J.S.A. 56:9-18 that the ATA "shall be construed [*114] in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of comparable Federal antitrust statutes. . . ." HN22 [This is a mandatory, not a permissive statute. HN23] As our antitrust act was patterned after the Sherman Act, we have consistently "acknowledged the significance of federal antitrust decisions in the interpretation of our State antitrust law." Monmouth Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 102 N.J. 485, 494, 509 A.2d 161 (1986) (citing Pomanowski, supra, 89 N.J. at 313, 446 A.2d 83; Lawn King, supra, 84 N.J. at 179, 417 A.2d 1025). HN24 [The language of our ATA conferring the right to treble-damage recovery on "[a]ny person who shall be injured in his business or property" by antitrust [***22] violations, N.J.S.A. 56:9-12, is identical to Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

In Illinois Brick, the United States Supreme Court rendered a decision directly on point construing that language and limiting federal antitrust recoveries to direct purchasers. Although we recognize that a piece of legislation may not be reported out of committee for a variety of reasons unrelated to its substance and that legislative inaction is not conclusive, the fact that in 1991 our Legislature expressly considered, and rejected, an Illinois Brick repealer amendment to the ATA, clearly signals its agreement with Illinois Brick. See, e.g., Garden State Farms, Inc. v. Bay, 77 N.J. 439, 453, 390 A.2d 1177 (quoting 2A Sutherland Statutory Construction, § 48.18 at 225 (Sands ed., 4th ed. 1973)) HN25 [("Caution must be exercised in using the action of the legislature on proposed amendments as an interpretative aid' in discerning legislative intent."). Thus, HN26 [in the absence of an Illinois Brick repealer or other language by our Legislature evidencing an intent to permit indirect, as well as direct purchasers, to recover for antitrust violations, [***23] it is clear New Jersey courts are directed to follow the Illinois Brick holding.<sup>2</sup>

[*115] [**276] Plaintiff brought this antitrust action seeking to recover treble damages under the ATA on behalf of all residents [***24] of New Jersey "who purchased any product that was manufactured using Carbon Black sold by Defendants from January 1999 through November 2002." As the pleadings clearly indicate that plaintiff's putative class is comprised of indirect or pass-through purchasers, plaintiff has no standing to bring suit against defendants under N.J.S.A. 56:9-12 for alleged antitrust violations. Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim under Rule 4:6-2(e) should have been granted.

III

Nor can this putative class plaintiff maintain an action seeking damages for monopolization, price-fixing, and other anticompetitive activities under the CFA. Enacted in 1960, the CFA "was passed in response to widespread complaints about selling practices which victimized consumers." Fenwick, supra, 72 N.J. at 376, 371 A.2d 13. It was intended to "root out consumer fraud" and protect consumers by eliminating "sharp practices and dealings in the marketing of merchandise and real estate whereby the consumer could be victimized by being lured into a purchase through fraudulent, deceptive or other similar [***25] kind of selling or advertising practices." Lemelledo, supra, 150 N.J. at 266, 696 A.2d 546 (quoting Daaleman v. Elizabethtown Gas Co., 77 N.J. 267, 271, 390 A.2d 566 (1978)). HN27[↑] The CFA empowers private plaintiffs to recover for treble damages, attorneys fees and costs upon a demonstration of an "ascertainable loss of moneys or property, real or personal" as a result of an unlawful practice as defined by the act. N.J.S.A. 56:8-19. The CFA declares the following to be an unlawful practice:

---

<sup>2</sup> Of the twenty-six states and District of Columbia that allow some form of indirect purchaser actions for antitrust violations, only four of the states have done so by judicial construction of their statutes in the absence of an Illinois Brick repealer: Arizona, Bunker's Glass Co. v. Pilkington, PLC, 206 Ariz. 9, 75 P.3d 99, 106-08 (2003); Iowa, Comes v. Microsoft Corp., 646 N.W.2d 440, 451 (Iowa 2002); North Carolina, Hyde v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 123 N.C. App. 572, 473 S.E.2d 680, 684 (1996); and Tennessee, Blake v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 894 F. Supp. 327, 329 (E.D.Tenn.1995). We note that Arizona's antitrust statute is phrased permissively, rather than mandatorily. Bunker's Glass Co., supra, 75 P.3d at 105.

[*116] HN28[↑] The act, use or employment by any person of any unconscionable commercial practice, deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, or the knowing, concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact with intent that others rely upon such concealment, suppression or omission, in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise or real estate, or with the subsequent performance of such person as aforesaid, whether or not any person has in fact been misled, deceived or damaged thereby. . . .

[N.J.S.A. 56:8-2.]

HN29[↑] The phrase "unconscionable commercial practice[.]" [***26] added to the definition of "unlawful practice" in 1971, N.J.S.A. 56:8-2, L. 1971, c. 247, § 1 (June 29, 1971), has been defined by our Supreme Court as acts lacking "good faith, honesty in fact, and observance of fair dealing." Cox vs. Sears Roebuck & Co., 138 N.J. 2, 18, 647 A.2d 454 (1994). "[C]apacity to mislead is the prime ingredient of deception or an unconscionable commercial practice." Fenwick, supra, 72 N.J. at 378, 371 A.2d 13.

Plaintiff's complaint is bereft of any allegation that defendants used deception, fraud or misrepresentation or concealed material facts concerning the sale of carbon black to the putative class of consumers. Plaintiff does not allege that defendant carbon black manufacturers made any misrepresentations to him, fraudulently concealed any carbon black pricing information from him, or had communication or contact of any kind with him. Nor does he assert that defendants' price-fixing of carbon black, an ingredient in tires, lured [**277] him into, or even influenced, his decision to purchase Goodyear tires. Even with every reasonable inference of fact and the most liberal construction, Printing Mart-Morristown, supra, 116 N.J. at 746, 563 A.2d 31, [***27] these claims cannot be read into plaintiff's lawsuit. Plaintiff's sole legal theory under the CFA is that defendants' alleged monopolistic conduct constitutes an unconscionable commercial practice. Plaintiff has failed to set forth any factual allegations to demonstrate "a capacity to mislead" as there is nothing inherently misleading in defendants' alleged acts of controlling the supply and overcharging for the price-fixed products.

Moreover, the putative class plaintiff lacks standing to pursue his CFA claim. HN30[↑] The CFA was enacted to help eradicate [*117] consumer fraud, not to "advance public policy in favor of competition and prevent practices which deprive consumers of the benefit of competitive markets" which is the "overriding purpose of the New Jersey Antitrust Act." Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. Farmland Dairy Farms, Inc., 282 N.J. Super. 140, 175, 659 A.2d 904 (App.Div.), certif. denied, 141 N.J. 99, 660 A.2d 1197 (1995). Plaintiff alleges only that defendants' price-fixing and monopolistic conduct resulted in higher-priced tires. Thus, for us to permit an indirect purchaser, such as plaintiff, to recast his antitrust claim as a consumer fraud violation would undermine [***28] the standing requirements of the ATA and would "essentially permit an end run around the policies allowing only direct purchasers to recover under the Antitrust Act." Abbott Labs., Inc. v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503, 506, (Texas 1995); see also Blewett v. Abbott Labs., 86 Wn. App. 782, 938 P.2d 842 (1997), review denied, 133 Wn.2d 1029, 950 P.2d 475 (1998) (denying an indirect purchaser standing to recover for antitrust conduct through a lawsuit under its consumer fraud act). Cf. Mack v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 673 So.2d 100 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.1996), review dismissed, 689 So.2d 1068 (1977) (permitting indirect purchasers to sue under Florida's consumer protection statute which contained language protecting consumers from "unfair methods of competition" in addition to unconscionable, deceptive and unfair acts).

HN31[↑] Although we recognize our antitrust and consumer fraud statutes are to be liberally interpreted, their remedial provisions are not without limit. In analyzing and interpreting these statutes in light of their context, historical background, policy considerations, legislative [***29] history, case law, and policy considerations, we are satisfied our holding advances the intent and spirit of the ATA and CFA.

As plaintiffs, indirect consumers, do not have a valid cause of action against defendants under either the ATA or the CFA, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's complaint under Rule 4:6-2(e) should not have been denied by the trial court.

[*118] Accordingly, the order of November 29, 2004 is reversed and plaintiff's complaint is dismissed with prejudice.

---

End of Document

Chase Med., LP v. CHF Techs., Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Dallas Division

July 11, 2005, Decided ; July 11, 2005, Filed

Civil Action No. 3:04-CV-2570-M

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13731 *; 2005 WL 1638976

CHASE MEDICAL, LP, Plaintiff, v. CHF TECHNOLOGIES, INC., and ENDOSCOPIC TECHNOLOGIES, INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Appeal dismissed by Chase Med., Inc. v. CHF Techs., Inc., 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 14161 \(Fed. Cir., June 17, 2008\)

Core Terms

---

affirmative defense, Counterclaims, motion to strike, argues, allegations, patent, redundant, portions, amend

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN1 [?] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\), a court has discretion to grant defendant's request to amend his answer, and it should do so unless the court uncovers a substantial reason for refusing amendment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\) requires the trial court to grant leave to amend freely, and the language of this rule evinces a bias in favor of granting leave to amend.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Immaterial Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Scandalous Matters

**HN2** [down arrow] Pleadings, Counterclaims

Under *Fed. R. Civ. P. 13\(f\)*, a court may strike from a pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter. However, motions to strike are disfavored, and when the contents of a pleading are legally sufficient, but improper for some other reason, a motion to strike should be granted only when the moving party shows that the inclusion of the disputed claims or defenses would cause it prejudice. If the moving party does not show prejudice, the court should defer action on the motion and leave the sufficiency of the allegations for determination on the merits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

**HN3** [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

Antitrust claims are not held to a heightened pleading standard, and the plaintiff need only include a short and plain statement of the claim showing an entitlement to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Immaterial Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Scandalous Matters

**HN4** [down arrow] Pleadings, Counterclaims

*Fed. R. Civ. P. 13\(f\)* is facially limited to what a court deems to be an insufficient defense, or a redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter.

Counsel: [*1] For Chase Medical Inc, Plaintiff: Eric B Meyertons, Dwayne K Goetzel, Ryan T Beard, Meyertons Hood Kivlin Kowert & Goetzel, Austin, TX.

For CHF Technologies Inc, Defendant: Joseph A Turano, Strasburger & Price -- Dallas, Dallas, TX; Marc D Youngelson, Barry J Marenberg, Marc S Friedman, Sills Cummis Esptein & Gross, Newark, NJ; Philip Braginsky, Sills Cummis Esptein & Gross, PC, New York, NY.

For Endoscopic Technologies Inc, Defendant: Joseph A Turano, Lori J Lamoreaux, Strasburger & Price -- Dallas, Dallas, TX; Marc D Youngelson, Barry J Marenberg, Marc S Friedman, Sills Cummis Esptein & Gross, Newark, NJ; Philip Braginsky, Sills Cummis Esptein & Gross, PC, New York, NY.

For CHF Technologies Inc, Counter Claimant: Lori J. Lamoreaux, Strasburger & Price -- Dallas, Dallas, TX.

Judges: Barbara M. G. Lynn, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Barbara M. G. Lynn

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Before the Court are: (I) Plaintiff's Motion to Strike portions of the Answer and Counterclaims of Defendant Endoscopic Technologies, Inc. ("Estech"); (II) Estech's Motion for Leave to Amend its Answer and Counterclaims; and (III) Plaintiff's Motion to Strike portions of the [*2] Answer and Counterclaims of Defendant CHF Technologies, Inc. ("CHF"). Defendants have requested oral argument of these Motions. The Court finds oral argument unnecessary. For the following reasons, the Court DENIES Plaintiff's Motions to Strike, and GRANTS Estech's Motion for Leave to Amend its Answer and Counterclaims.

Plaintiff filed its Motion to Strike Estech's Answer and Counterclaims on March 10, 2005. In that Motion, Plaintiff argues the Answer does not properly plead Estech's assertion that Plaintiff engaged in fraud and inequitable conduct. See FED. R. CIV. P. 9\(b\) (requiring allegations of fraud to be pled with particularity). In Response to the Motion to Strike, Estech requests leave to amend its Answer and Counterclaims, so it may withdraw its allegations of fraud and inequitable conduct.

HN1[] Under FED. R. CIV. P. 15\(a\), the Court has discretion to grant Estech's request, and it should do so unless the Court uncovers a "substantial reason" for refusing amendment. Lyn-Lea Travel Corp. v. American Airlines, Inc., 283 F.3d 282, 286 \(5th Cir. 2002\) (Rule 15\(a\)) "requires the trial [*3] court to grant leave to amend freely, and the language of this rule evinces a bias in favor of granting leave to amend."). Plaintiff has not asserted any such "substantial reason", and the Court does not find one. Therefore, the Court grants Estech leave to file its Amended Answer and Counterclaims.

Plaintiff, in its Reply, anticipates that the Court will grant Estech's request for leave, and raises new arguments for striking portions of Estech's Amended Answer and Counterclaims. Simultaneously, Plaintiff asserts a Motion to Strike analogous portions of the Answer and Counterclaims filed by CHF Technologies, Inc. ("CHF"). In both filings, Plaintiff argues Defendants have insufficiently pled their affirmative defenses of equitable estoppel, patent misuse, and unclean hands, as well as their counterclaims arising under federal and state antitrust laws.<sup>1</sup>

[*4] HN2[] Under FED. R. CIV. P. 13\(f\), the Court may strike from a pleading "any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter." However, motions to strike are disfavored, and when the contents of a pleading are legally sufficient, but improper for some other reason, a motion to strike should be granted only when the moving party shows that the inclusion of the disputed claims or defenses would cause it prejudice. See U.S. v. Cushman & Wakefield, Inc., 275 F. Supp.2d 763, 767-68 \(N.D. Tex. 2002\). If the moving party does not show prejudice, the Court should "defer action on the motion and leave the sufficiency of the allegations for determination on the merits." Id. at 768 n.3, citing Augustus v. Board of Public Instruction of Escambia County, Fla., 306 F.2d 862 \(5th Cir. 1962\).

Plaintiff first argues Defendants' affirmative defenses should be stricken as legally insufficient. Plaintiff asserts that "it is unknown" whether Defendants' counterclaims and affirmative defenses are based on an unstated allegation that Plaintiff has engaged in fraudulent conduct, and if [*5] they are based on such allegations, they are not pled with particularity, as required by FED. R. CIV. P. 9\(b\). However, the Court does not find any allegations of fraudulent conduct on the face of CHF's Answer and Estech's Amended Answer. Moreover, Defendants, in their consolidated Response to Plaintiff's Motion to Strike CHF's Answer, admit that neither Defendant is currently alleging fraud as part of their counterclaims or affirmative defenses. Defendants have thus abandoned any allegations of fraudulent conduct that might be in their current pleadings. See Vela v. City of Houston, 276 F.3d 659, 678 \(5th Cir. 2001\). Therefore, Defendants' affirmative defenses and counterclaims need not be pled in accordance with FED. R. CIV. P. 9\(b\). See also, Apani Southwest, Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enterprises, Inc., 300 F.3d 620, 631 \(5th Cir. 2002\) HN3[ (antitrust claims are not held to a heightened pleading standard, and the plaintiff need only include a short and plain statement of the claim showing an entitlement to relief).

---

<sup>1</sup> It would ordinarily be improper for the Court to consider arguments raised for the first time in a Reply Brief. See Senior Unsecured Creditors' Comm. of First Republic Bank Corp. v. FDIC, 749 F. Supp. 758, 772 \(N.D. Tex. 1990\). In this case, however, Estech acquiesced to the Court considering Plaintiffs new arguments by joining in Defendants' Response to Plaintiffs Motion to Strike CHF's Answer.

Alternatively, Plaintiff argues that Defendants' affirmative defenses [*6] are legally insufficient because they do not satisfy the general pleading requirements of FED. R. CIV. P. 8. It argues the Defendants do not allege any facts in support their affirmative defenses of equitable estoppel, patent misuse, and unclean hands. The Court disagrees. Defendants' Answers, when viewed in their entirety, make clear that Defendants' affirmative defenses rely on factual allegations asserted within their counterclaims, including allegations that: (1) Plaintiff initiated this suit in bad faith with the intention of using it as an "anticompetitive weapon"; (2) Plaintiff misrepresented the scope of its patent in a press release, with the intention of excluding its competitors from the relevant market; and (3) Plaintiff tortiously interfered with Defendants' business relationships. Plaintiff argues it should not be required to "guess as to what facts alleged in the Amended Complaint purportedly support the asserted defenses", and that Defendants should be required to directly reference the factual allegations that pertain to each affirmative defense. The Court finds the link between the above-referenced factual allegations and Defendants' [*7] affirmative defenses to be reasonably clear. See FED. R. CIV. P. 8\(f\) (requiring the Court to construe pleadings so as to do "substantial justice"). If Plaintiff requires further detail, it may seek it in discovery.

Plaintiff next argues that several phrases in Defendants' Answers should be stricken because they "create placeholders so that Defendants can assert new causes of action in the future without repleading." For instance, Plaintiff protests that in Defendants' affirmative defenses and counterclaims, Defendants accuse Plaintiff of violating "general principles" of patent law and antitrust law, and Defendants twice use the phrase "among other things" to broaden the scope of the conduct which they allege makes Plaintiff's patent unenforceable. Plaintiff argues the vagueness of these phrases prejudices its preparation of its legal strategies. However, Plaintiff does not cite any authority that portions of an affirmative defense or counterclaim can be stricken on account of imprecision. HN4 [Rule 13\(f\) is facially limited to what the Court deems to be an insufficient defense, or a redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter. The [*8] Court finds the phrases at issue do not render Defendants' affirmative defenses insufficient, and they are not redundant or scandalous. At most, they are vague or surplusage, and are not "so unrelated to plaintiff's claims as to be unworthy of any consideration as a defense." F.D.I.C. v. Niblo, 821 F. Supp. 441, 449 \(N.D. Tex. 1993\). Again, discovery should be used to obtain further detail.

Finally, Plaintiff argues that portions of Defendants' seventh affirmative defense should be stricken as redundant. Defendants, in their fifth affirmative defense, allege Plaintiff's claims are barred by equitable estoppel and unclean hands. In their sixth affirmative defense, Defendants allege Plaintiff's claims are barred by misuse. Plaintiff argues the seventh affirmative defense, which alleges Plaintiff's patent is unenforceable, is redundant because the purported unenforceability is explicitly predicated on alleged "misuse of the patent . . . and the doctrines of unclean hands and equitable estoppel". However, Plaintiff has not alleged, or produced any evidence that this purported redundancy causes it prejudice. Therefore, the Court denies Plaintiff's Motion to Strike the [*9] seventh affirmative defense. See Cushman & Wakefield, 275 F. Supp.2d at 767-68.

For these reasons, Plaintiff's Motions to Strike are DENIED, and Estech's Motion for Leave is GRANTED. The Clerk of Court is directed to file a copy of Estech's Amended Answer and Counterclaims.

SO ORDERED.

DATED: July 11, 2005.

Barbara M. G. Lynn

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

In re Enron Corp.

United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York

July 11, 2005, Decided

Chapter 11, Case No. 01 B 16034(AJG), (Confirmed)

Reporter

326 B.R. 257 *; 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 1278 **; 44 Bankr. Ct. Dec. 280

In re: ENRON CORP., et al., Reorganized Debtors.

Core Terms

---

filed rate doctrine, rates, anti trust law, energy, electricity, tariff, market-based, cases, regulations, manipulation, wholesale, markets, refunds, federal law claim, file a tariff, interstate, violations, antitrust, courts, crisis

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Primary Jurisdiction

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

HN1 [down arrow] Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. The filed rate doctrine forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority. The purpose of the doctrine is preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant. Courts have consistently held that the filed rate doctrine applies to federal antitrust actions relating to rates established by federal agencies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

HN2 Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Under the filed rate doctrine, once the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission determines that a rate is "just and reasonable," the courts cannot authorize a departure from that rate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

While market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

HN4 Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

The reporting requirements are an integral part of a tariff, with Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's implied enforcement mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > Implicit Delegation of Authority

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN5 Legislative Controls, Implicit Delegation of Authority

Implicit in Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN6 Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, Rates & Tariffs

In addressing the right of action that a violation of the antitrust laws give to one who has been injured in its business or property, the United States Supreme Court has stated that injury implies violation of a legal right. The Supreme Court concluded that the legal rights of a shipper as against a carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff. A rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Antitrust Act. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under § 8 of the latter act, the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Preemption

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > Purchase Contracts > Remedies for Breach

HN7 Equitable Relief, Injunctions

Remedies for breach and non-performance of operating agreements approved by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

HN8 Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Under the filed rate doctrine, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission alone is empowered to make a judgment regarding rates, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Ratemaking Procedures

HN9 [blue] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that: (1) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate-making issues; (2) courts lack the competence to set utility rates; and (3) the interference of courts in the rate-making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Preemption

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN10 [blue] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

The Federal Power Act (FPA) provides the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) with broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior. Congress through the FPA, made clear that the interstate "transmission" or "sale" of wholesale energy pursuant to a federal tariff, not merely the "rates," falls within FERC's exclusive jurisdiction. 16 U.S.C.S. § 824e.

Counsel: [**1] Special Counsel for Reorganized Debtors: Edward A. Smith, Esq., CADWALADER, WICKERSHAM & TAFT LLP, New York, NY; Mark C. Ellenberg, Esq., David F. Williams, Esq., Washington, DC.

Attorneys for the People of the State of California and the California Department of Water Resources: Bill Lockyer, Esq., Mark Breckler, Esq., Irene K. Tamura, Esq., Martin Goyette, Esq., STATE OF CALIFORNIA DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL, Sacramento, CA.

Attorneys for the People of the State of California and the California Department of Water Resources: Steven H. Felderstein, Esq., Paul J. Pascuzzi, Esq., Christa K. McKimmy, Esq., FELDERSTEIN FITZGERALD WILLOUGHBY & PASCUZZI LLP, Sacramento, CA.

Attorneys for Southern California Edison Company: Philip Bentley, Esq., P. Bradley O'Neill, Esq., Jonathan T. Koevary, Esq., KRAMER LEVIN NAFTALIS & FRANKEL LLP., New York, New York.

Judges: ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ, United States Bankruptcy Judge.

Opinion by: ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ

Opinion

---

[*259] OPINION SUSTAINING DEBTORS' OBJECTION TO PROOFS OF CLAIM NOS. 12172-12174 AND 12252-12257 FILED BY BILL LOCKYER, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA; TO PROOFS OF CLAIM NOS. 12498, 12500, 24685, AND 24687 FILED [*2] BY CALIFORNIA DEPARTMENT OF WATER RESOURCES; AND TO PROOFS OF CLAIM NOS. 22630-22632 FILED BY SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON COMPANY REGARDING FEDERAL LAW CLAIMS IN ELECTRICITY MARKET

On October 11, 2002, the Attorney General of the State of California (the "State") filed separate proofs of claim in unliquidated amounts on behalf of the People of the State of California against Enron Corporation ("Enron") and certain of its affiliated entities (collectively, the "Debtors") in the following nine cases: Enron (Claim No. 12173); Enron North America Corp. ("ENA") (Claim No. 12172); Enron Power Marketing, Inc. ("EPMI") (Claim No. 12174); Enron Energy Services, Inc. ("EESI") (Claim No. 12255); Enron Energy Services, LLC (Claim No. 12254); Enron Energy Services Operations, Inc. (Claim No. 12257); Enron Energy Marketing Corp. (Claim No. 12256); and Enron Capital & Trade Resources International Corp. (Claim No. 12253). The Attorney General also filed proofs of claim on behalf of the California Department of Water Resources ("CDWR") in unliquidated amounts against the Debtors in the following cases: Enron (Claim No. 12500); ENA (Claim No. 12498); EPMI (Claim No. 24685); and EESI (Claim No. 24687). [*3] On March 6, 2003, Southern California Edison Company ("Edison") filed proofs of claim in unliquidated amounts against the Debtors in the following cases: Enron (Claim No. 22630); EESI (Claim No. 22631); and EPMI (Claim No. 22632).

The State, CDWR and Edison (collectively, the "Claimants") allege that the Debtors manipulated energy markets in California and overcharged for energy through unlawful and anti -- competitive acts during the western power crisis of 2000 and 2001. They maintain the alleged manipulation in the electricity market constitutes a violation of the federal antitrust law and regulations, and seek disgorgement, restitution, actual and treble damages together with interest and injunctive relief. On March 10 2005, the Debtors filed objections to the Claimants' federal law claims and argued that the Federal Power Act (the "FPA") preempts the federal laws and the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of these claims.

The issues before the Court are whether (i) the federal law claims are preempted by the FPA; and (ii) whether such claims are precluded by the filed rate doctrine. The Court finds that because the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") has exclusive [*4] jurisdiction over interstate sales of wholesale electricity, the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of such federal law claims. For the reasons set below, the Court will not determine the preemption issue.

I. BACKGROUND

Commencing on December 2, 2001, and from time to time continuing thereafter, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of title 11 of the United States Code (the "Bankruptcy Code"). On July 15, 2004, the Court entered an Order confirming the Debtors' Supplemental Modified Fifth Amended Joint Plan of Affiliated Debtors (the [*260] "Plan") in these cases. The Plan became effective on November 17, 2004.

This litigation arises out of the California energy crisis of 2000-01. Prior to the energy crisis, the California legislature had passed Assembly Bill 1890 <sup>1</sup> (the "Bill") to create two non-governmental entities, the California Power Exchange (the "PX") and the California Independent System Operator (the "ISO"), to operate markets and manage the sale of electricity. The PX and the ISO were organized under California law, but regulated by FERC. California v. Dynegy, Inc., 375 F.3d 831, 850 \(9th Cir. 2004\). The central transactions, [**5] wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce, were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Further, the centralized wholesale spot electricity markets operated by the ISO and the PX were established subject to FERC review and approval. The ISO and the PX served as clearinghouses. Since August 2, 2000, FERC has commenced refund proceeding, and partnership and gaming proceeding to investigate certain of the Debtors. FERC found that the Debtors engaged in gaming <sup>2</sup> in the form of inappropriate trading strategies and further engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information. Enron Power Mktg., Inc., et al., 106 FERC P 61,024 \(2004\). Both proceedings are ongoing, including the determination of remedies by FERC.

[**6] II. DISCUSSION

The threshold question regarding the filed rate doctrine before the Court is whether the Court would have to determine a tariff. HN1 The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. E& J. Gallo Winery v. EnCana Energy Servs., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24240, \*29, Case No. CV F 03-5412 AWLJO. The Court recognizes that the filed rate doctrine "forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority." Ark. L.A. Gas Co. v. Frank Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577-78, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856, 101 S. Ct. 2925 \(1981\). The Court also recognizes that the purpose of the doctrine is "preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant. [**7] " City of Cleveland v. FPC, 174 U.S. App. D.C. 1, 525 F.2d 845, 854 \(D.C. Cir. 1976\). Courts have consistently held that the filed rate doctrine applies to federal antitrust actions relating to rates established by federal agencies. Ark. L.A. Gas 453 U.S. 571, at 580; County of Stanislaus v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., 114 F.3d 858, 863 \(9th Cir. 1997\); In re Western States Wholesale Natural Gas Antitrust Litig., 368 F. Supp. 2d 1110, 1114-45 \(D. Nev. 2005\).

The Debtors argue that FERC has exclusive jurisdiction over whether wholesale [*261] electricity price is "just and reasonable." The Debtors assert that the federal law claims necessarily require the Court to determine whether rates were reasonable or whether the Debtors violated applicable FERC approved tariffs. HN2 Under the filed rate doctrine, once FERC determines that a rate is "just and reasonable," the courts cannot authorize a departure from that rate. The Claimants do not contest such assertion by the Debtors. Instead, the Claimants raise two arguments to support that the filed rate doctrine is not applicable here.

The first argument made by the Claimants is that the filed rate doctrine [**8] is inapplicable because no properly filed rates were on file during the period when the alleged conduct occurred. However, the Claimants relied on the following finding in California v. FERC, 383 F.3d 1006, 1016 (9th Cir. 2004) to support its position "without the required filings, neither FERC nor any affected party may challenge the rate. Pragmatically, under such circumstances, there is no filed tariff in place at all." Id. This argument, however, inappropriately equates the Debtors' alleged violation of the filing requirements with no-filed tariffs. FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports pursuant to FPA § 205(c) 16 U.S.C. § 824d\(c\) on transaction-specific information about its sales and purchases at market-based rates. The court in Public Util. Dist. No 1 v. IDACORP Inc., 379 F.3d 641, 651 (9th Cir. 2004), concluded, HN3↑ "while market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine."

<sup>1</sup> 1996 Cal. Stat. 854

<sup>2</sup> The ISO tariff, through the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol defines gaming, in part, as "taking unfair advantage of the rules and procedures set forth in the PX or the ISO tariffs, Protocols or Activity Rule . . . to the detriment of the efficiency of, and of consumers in, the ISO markets." Am. Electric Power Service Corp., et al., 103 FERC P 61,346 \(2003\).

Further, the Court agrees with the opinion of the California v. FERC court which concluded that HN4↑ "the reporting requirements are an [**9] integral part of a tariff, with FERC's implied enforcement mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates." 383 F.3d at 1016. On August 13, 2002, FERC's Initial Report in Docket No. PA02-2-000 concluded that the Debtors engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information.<sup>3</sup> Then, FERC concluded that such behavior constituted market manipulation and resulted in unjust and unreasonable rates and violated the express requirements in the orders allowing the Debtors to make sales at market-based rates. 106 FERC P 61,024. As noted by FERC, HN5↑ implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority. The Debtors were expressly directed, when they were granted market-based rate authority, to inform the FERC promptly of changes in status (which would include changes in their generation market [**10] shares) that reflect a departure from the characteristics that the FERC relied upon in granting market-based rate authority. Id.

Moreover, the Court in California v. FERC, indirectly recognized the application of the filed rate doctrine when marketers had not properly reported to FERC where such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC. 383 F.3d at 1016. Without the availability of retroactive refunds, "parties [*262] aggrieved by the illegal rate would have no FERC remedy, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a direct action against the offending seller. That result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the FPA." Id.

The second [**11] argument made by the Claimants is that the filed rate doctrine is not applicable because the issue presented before the Court is distinguishable from those in Grays Harbor and Public Util. Dist. No. 1 v. Dynegy Power Mktg., Inc., 384 F.3d 756 (9th Cir. 2004). The plaintiff in Snohomish brought an action against a company that engaged in market manipulation during the energy crisis in violation of state antitrust and unfair competition law. The court confirmed that the filed rate doctrine applies because the court could not determine the rates that "would have been achieved in a competitive market." Id. at 761. Similarly, the court in Grays Harbor rejected the request from the plaintiff for a determination of the "fair price." 379 F.3d at 645. Here, the Claimants argue that they are not asserting a price which should be paid in a competitive market as the benchmark for a calculation of a remedy. Rather, the Claimants maintain that the remedy would be unrelated to the ISO tariff and the Court would not have to determine a non-manipulated rate because FERC has done so. The Claimants argue that it is merely requesting the Court to determine [**12] liability, and thereafter, remand to FERC for a determination of remedies.

The Ninth Circuit in California v. FERC examined the substance of the law and remanded to FERC for the determination of remedies. The court there declined to order refunds to a state because the court reasoned it was more appropriate for FERC to consider its remedial options in the first instance. 383 F.3d at 1018. The substantive law examined by the court in California v. FERC concerned whether retroactive refunds were legally available. Id.

---

<sup>3</sup> FERC found that the Debtors failed to inform FERC in a timely manner of changes in their market shares that resulted from their gaining influence/control over others' facilities, as required under their market-based rate authorization. 106 FERC P 61,024.

As such, no liability issue was raised and determined by that court. Further, the Court finds that determining the liability or the legal right of the Claimants against the Debtors for violation of the federal antitrust law would have to be measured by the tariff.

HN6 [↑] In addressing the right of action that a violation of the antitrust laws give to one who has been injured in its business or property, the Supreme Court in Keogh v. Chicago & N. W.R. Y. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922), stated that "injury implies violation of a legal right." Id. at 163. The Supreme Court concluded that "the legal rights of [a] shipper as [**13] against [a] carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff." Id. at 163. Justice Brandeis explained "[a] rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Anti-Trust Act. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under Section 8 of the latter act . . . the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation." Id. at 162. Thus, the finding of liability in antitrust laws would be integral to the Court's determination of whether the Debtors are liable due to their violations of the federal antitrust law and regulations. For instance, the Court could not determine the overcharge claim owed by the Debtors for any electricity market manipulation without first deciding the reasonableness of the filed tariff.

Moreover, to award monetary relief, the Court would have to determine a "fair price." Thus, the filed rate doctrine bars [*263] the Court from awarding monetary damages sought by the Claimants. Nonetheless, the Court finds that injunctive [**14] relief would also be unavailable to the Claimants. The Court agrees with the Ninth Circuit's decision in Snohomish, which declined to grant injunctive relief because such relief is barred by the filed rate doctrine. 384 F.3d at 762. HN7 [↑] "Remedies for breach and non-performance of FERC-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC." Dynegy, 375 F.3d at 836.

The Supreme Court case, Arkansas Louisiana, further supports the Court's position that the filed rate doctrine should apply here. HN8 [↑] "Under the filed rate doctrine, FERC alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged." 453 U.S. 571, at 580-84. The decisions from the Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association v. Citizens Utilities Co., 45 F.3d 58 (2d Cir. 1995) and Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17 (2d Cir. 1994), provide an additional basis for dismissal of the Claims sought by the Claimants. The Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association affirmed the decision from the district court, which [**15] had declined the plaintiff's invitation to find a fraud exception to the filed rate doctrine. In determining whether the filed rate doctrine applied, the court focused on the impact the court's decision would have on agency procedures and rate determination. Sun City Taxpayers' Ass'n v. Citizens Utils. Co., 847 F.Supp.281, 291 (D. Conn. 1994). The Second Circuit in Wegoland recognized that HN9 [↑] the filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that (a) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate-making issues, (b) courts lack the competence to set utility rates, and (c) the interference of courts in the rate-making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime. 27 F.3d at 21.

Therefore, having considered the policy objectives, the Court finds that granting the relief sought to Claimants would frustrate FERC's jurisdiction afforded by Congress. The Court lacks authority to impose a different rate than the one approved by a federal agent. Any other conclusion departing from this principle would undermine [**16] the filed rate doctrine. The Court, therefore, rejects the Claimants' challenge to the application of the filed rate doctrine. Accordingly, the Court finds that the filed rate doctrine bars the relief sought by the Claimants.

The Debtors argue that the antitrust law and regulations are preempted by the FPA. However, the Debtors primarily focus on the argument against state antitrust law claims. By comparison, the Claimants argue that the federal antitrust law and regulations are not preempted by the FPA because courts have referred the federal antitrust law claims related to filed tariffs determined by regulatory commissions. In supporting its assertion, the Claimants cite the Supreme Court's decisions in Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 (1973), and California v. Federal Power Commission, 369 U.S. 482, 8 L. Ed. 2d 54, 82 S. Ct.

901 (1962). In both cases, the Supreme Court found that Congress does not intend to bar the government from bringing actions in violation of antitrust laws related to filed tariffs before regulatory commissions.

Having reviewed these cases, the Court disagrees with the Claimants' argument and finds them distinguishable from the instant case. [**17] In California v. Federal Power Commission, a gas company filed a [*264] motion to dismiss the antitrust suit pursuant to the Clayton Act, § 7 as amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 18, or in the alternative, to stay it, pending completion of the proceedings for its authority to acquire another company's assets pursuant to the Natural Gas Act (the "NGA"), § 7(c) as amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 717f(c), before the Power Energy Commission. 369 U.S. at 483. In Otter Tail Power, the government brought an action against an electric power company to enjoin violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 2. 410 U.S. at 368. In order to protect market competition in certain cases, Congress did not expressly displace federal antitrust laws.

However, a critical distinction between the instant matter and the two cited cases is that there is a regulatory scheme against anti-competitive behavior that has been entrusted to FERC in the instant case. In contrast, the court in California v. Federal Power Commission concluded that the NGA did not contain a provision to immunize the carriers involved in the mergers from the [**18] Clayton Act. 369 U.S. at 485. "The Commission's standard, set forth in § 7 of the NGA, will serve the public convenience and necessity.' If existing natural gas companies violate the antitrust laws, the Commission is directed by § 20(a) to transmit such evidence' to the Attorney General." Id. at 486. Similarly, the Court in Otter Tail Power found that the limited authority of the Federal Power Commission to order interconnections was not intended to be a substitute for the Sherman Act. 410 U.S. at 375. In Otter Tail Power, the FPA does not authorize the FPC to order a power company to wheel electric power over its transmission lines; accordingly, enforcing the Sherman Act against anticompetitive and monopolistic practices on interconnections by the district court did not conflict with authority of the FPC. Id. at 376-77. Moreover, the Supreme Court in Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 383 U.S. 932, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709, 86 S. Ct. 781 (1966) declined to grant antitrust immunity to a shipping company because "the provisions of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.A. § 801, can not reasonably be construed as [**19] an implied repeal of antitrust regulation of the shipping industry's rate-making activities." Id. at 217. The Shipping Act does not give the Federal Maritime Commission (the "FMC") any mandate to regulate rate competition and the statutory scheme was designed to minimize the role of the FMC. Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, 476 U.S. 409, 422, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 (1986).

Here, HN10↑ the FPA provides FERC with broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior. Congress through the FPA, made clear that the interstate "transmission" or "sale" of wholesale energy pursuant to a federal tariff, not merely the "rates," falls within FERC's exclusive jurisdiction. Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824e. In fact, FERC has exercised this power to act in the proceedings instituted against the Debtors concerning alleged market manipulation during the energy crisis. FERC has asserted that it "can order disgorgement of monies above the post-October 2, 2000 refunds ordered in the California Refund Proceeding, if it finds violations of the ISO and the PX tariffs and finds that a monetary remedy is appropriate for such violations. It can additionally [**20] order additional disgorgement of unjust profits for tariff violations that occurred after October 2, 2000." 103 FERC P 61,346. Further, "implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates to the marketers is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority." [*265] 106 FERC P 61,024. Under the preemption analysis, allowing the federal antitrust law claims in the wholesale interstate electricity market would appear to encroach upon the authority Congress entrusted exclusively to FERC. Thus, the cited cases by the Claimants are not controlling in the instant case. Because the parties do not substantially further develop their argument on preemption, and as a result of the Court's determination regarding the filed rate doctrine, the Court will not determine the preemption issue.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that the federal antitrust law claims sought by the Claimants concerning electricity market manipulation are precluded by the filed rate doctrine. Therefore, [**21] the Court sustains the Debtors' objection to those claims filed by the Claimants.

Counsel for the Debtors is directed to settle an order consistent with this Court's Opinion.

Dated: New York, New York

July 11, 2005

Arthur J. Gonzalez

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

---

End of Document

Jackson, Tenn. Hosp. Co. v. W. Tenn. Healthcare, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

March 10, 2005, Argued ; July 11, 2005, Decided ; July 11, 2005, Filed

File Name: 05a0292p.06:

No. 04-5387

Reporter

414 F.3d 608 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 13799 **; 2005 FED App. 0292P (6th Cir.) ***; 2005-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,857

JACKSON, TENNESSEE HOSPITAL COMPANY, LLC, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. WEST TENNESSEE HEALTHCARE, INC., JACKSON-MADISON COUNTY GENERAL HOSPITAL DISTRICT, and BLUECROSS BLUESHIELD OF TENNESSEE, INC., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: Rehearing denied by, Rehearing, en banc, denied by Jackson, Tenn. Hosp. Co., LLC v. W. Tenn. Healthcare, Inc., 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 22937 \(6th Cir., Oct. 19, 2005\)

Prior History: [\[\*1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee at Jackson. No. 03-01166. James D. Todd, Chief District Judge.

Jackson v. W. Tenn. Healthcare, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4571 \(W.D. Tenn., Feb. 27, 2004\)

Core Terms

---

powers, hospital authority, anticompetitive, state action doctrine, anti trust law, authorization, antitrust liability, healthcare, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

**HN1** [] Governments, State & Territorial Governments

The state action doctrine protects subdivisions of a state government from antitrust liability when there is a clearly expressed state policy authorizing anticompetitive acts.

414 F.3d 608, *608L<sup>2005</sup> U.S. App. LEXIS 13799, **1L<sup>2005</sup> FED App. 0292P (6th Cir.), ***Cir.)

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2 [down] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reviews the district court's grant of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN3 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

On a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, all factual allegations are taken to be true, and the court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion should only be granted if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiffs can prove no set of facts in support of their claim which would entitle them to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Public Contracts Law > Contract Provisions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN4 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Under the so-called "state action doctrine," it is well established that antitrust law does not apply to states acting as sovereigns. Principles of federalism and state sovereignty provide blanket protection for states, but political subdivisions of the states are not automatically immune from antitrust liability. Political subdivisions of states are beyond the reach of the antitrust laws only when they act pursuant to a clearly expressed state policy. The state legislature need not explicitly authorize anticompetitive conduct, as long as anticompetitive effect would logically result from the authority granted by the state. Applying these principles, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit holds that Michigan law implicitly authorizes anticompetitive conduct when it empowers prisons to grant public contracts for the provision of telephone services. The issues of implied authority and "foreseeable" anticompetitive effects are recurring ones in the case law, but, obviously, are relevant only when there is no express authorization for anticompetitive conduct.

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN5 [down] Antitrust Actions, Facilities

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 7-57-502\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN6 [+] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The phrase "competitive consequences" is commonly used in antitrust and competition law. The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit is not aware of any other context in which this phrase is commonly used. The antitrust laws protect competition and are concerned with competitive consequences; thus, permission to act "regardless of competitive consequences" is most sensibly read as an authorization to act without regard for the antitrust laws for purposes of the state action doctrine.

Counsel: ARGUED: Harry M. Reasoner, VINSON & ELKINS, Houston, Texas, for Appellant.

David Marx, Jr., McDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, Illinois, Kevin D. McDonald, JONES DAY, Washington, D.C., for Appellees.

ON BRIEF: Harry M. Reasoner, Bruce A. Blefeld, VINSON & ELKINS, Houston, Texas, Cannon F. Allen, ARMSTRONG ALLEN, Memphis, Tennessee, Robert V. Redding, ARMSTRONG ALLEN, Jackson, Tennessee, for Appellant.

David Marx, Jr., Joseph Fisher, Kevin M. Jones, McDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, Illinois, Kevin D. McDonald, Julia C. Ambrose, JONES DAY, Washington, D.C., Jerry D. Kizer, Jr., RAINY, KIZER, REVIERE & BELL, Jackson, Tennessee, Max Shelton, HARRIS, SHELTON, DUNLAP, COBB & RYDER, Memphis, Tennessee, for Appellees.

Cathrine G. O'Sullivan, David Seidman, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D.C., Victor J. Domen, Jr., OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, Nashville, Tennessee, Carlos C. Smith, MILLER & MARTIN, Chattanooga, Tennessee, J. Robin Rogers, STRANG, FLETCHER, CARRIGER, WALKER, HODGE & SMITH, Chattanooga, Tennessee, [**2] for Amici Curiae.

Judges: Before: BOGGS, Chief Judge; and COOK and BRIGHT, Circuit Judges. *

Opinion by: BOGGS

Opinion

---

[*609] [**2] BOGGS, Chief Judge. Although this is an antitrust case, it turns on the proper interpretation of a Tennessee statute. The plaintiff alleges that the Jackson-Madison County General Hospital District (the "Hospital District"), which is a political subdivision of the state of Tennessee, and the other defendants have committed antitrust violations. The district court dismissed the suit, finding that the state action doctrine protects the defendants from antitrust liability. HN1 [+] The state action doctrine protects subdivisions of a state government from antitrust liability when there is a clearly expressed state policy authorizing anticompetitive acts. Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 40, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 \(1985\). The issue, then, is whether Tennessee law authorizes the Hospital District to engage in anticompetitive actions. We conclude that it does, and therefore affirm.

I

---

* The Honorable Myron H. Bright, United States Circuit Judge for the Eighth Circuit, sitting by designation.

The Hospital District is a "private act" [*610] hospital authority" [*3] <sup>1</sup> ("hospital authority) created by the Tennessee Legislature.<sup>2</sup> The Hospital District was created in 1949 to own, manage, and operate hospital facilities. The original rationale for the Hospital District was to serve indigent and low-income patients, although it has since expanded into a full-service healthcare operation. The Hospital District is a political subdivisions of the state of Tennessee.

The Tennessee Legislature recently reformed the statutory framework governing hospital authorities. In Acts passed in 1995 and 1996 ("the Acts"), the legislature gave hospital authorities [*4] far greater freedom of operation.<sup>3</sup> The Acts granted hospital authorities broad powers, including the ability to: [***3]

- . Borrow, issue bonds, or take on other forms of debt
- . Own and operate subsidiaries such as outpatient departments, clinics, etc.
- . Participate as a shareholder or partner in any lawful form of business
- . Set fees to be charged to patients
- . Hire and fire all employees, as well as set the terms of compensation
- . Set rules governing physicians and other providers operating within the authority
- . Set criteria for admission of patients
- . Sue and be sued
- . Invest any excess funds
- . Acquire or improve any real property

Tenn. Code Ann. § 7-57-502(a)-(b). And, just in case anything was missed, the list ends with a catch-all provision: the hospital authority shall "have and exercise all powers necessary or convenient to effect any or all the purposes for which a private act metropolitan hospital authority is organized." Tenn. Code Ann. § 7-57-502(b)(10) (emphasis added). In short, after the Acts, a hospital authority has broad powers to do almost [*5] anything plausibly related to its mission of providing healthcare services.

[**6] At the heart of this dispute is the final provision in the "Powers Granted" section:

In the exercise of its powers, including, without limitation, the powers in this section, any other provision of this part and of any other law a private act metropolitan hospital authority may acquire, [*611] manage, lease, purchase, sell, contract for or otherwise participate solely or with others in the ownership or operation of hospital, medical or health program properties and facilities and properties, facilities, and programs supporting or relating thereto of any kind and nature whatsoever and in any form of ownership whenever the board of

<sup>1</sup> Tenn. Code Ann. § 7-57-602:

For the purpose of this part, "private act hospital authority" is any hospital owned or operated by one (1) or more local governments or any hospital, hospital authority or hospital district created or authorized by a private act of the general assembly.

<sup>2</sup> Another named defendant, West Tennessee Healthcare, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Hospital District.

<sup>3</sup> The stated purpose of the Acts was:

The general assembly hereby finds that the demand for hospital, medical and health care services is rapidly changing as is the way and manner in which such services are purchased and delivered; that the market for hospital and health care services is becoming increasingly competitive; and that the hospital and other health care providers need flexibility to be able to respond to changing conditions by having the power to develop efficient and cost-effective methods to provide for hospital, medical and health care needs. The general assembly also finds that the increasing competition and changing conditions force hospitals and other health care providers to develop market strategies and strategic plans to effectively compete. The general assembly further finds that public hospitals in metropolitan areas are presently at a competitive disadvantage, and that significant investments in the public assets of private act metropolitan hospital authorities could be jeopardized by inability to compete with private hospitals because of legal constraints upon the scope of their operations and limitations upon the power granted to public hospitals under existing law.

Tenn. Code Ann. § 7-57-501(b).

trustees in its discretion shall determine it is consistent with the purposes and policies of this part or any private act applicable to it, and may exercise such powers regardless of the competitive consequences thereof.

Tenn. Code Ann. § 7-57-502(c) (emphasis added). The meaning of the last two lines is in dispute.

On July 6, 2003, Jackson, Tennessee Hospital Company ("THC"), which operates a private hospital in Jackson-Madison County, filed suit in federal district court against the Hospital District, West Tennessee [**7] Healthcare, and BlueCross BlueShield ("BlueCross") alleging violations of state and federal antitrust laws. THC alleges that the defendants engaged in various anticompetitive acts to monopolize the local healthcare market. Among the acts alleged were exclusive contracting with doctors and insurance companies, acquiring real estate around the private hospital to block expansion, charging prices that were too low or too high, acquiring other healthcare providers, and bundling its services. On February 27, 2004, the district court granted the defendants' Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss on the grounds that the state action doctrine barred antitrust liability.

[***4] II

HN2 [↑] We review the district court's grant of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss de novo. AirTrans, Inc. v. Mead, 389 F.3d 594, 597 (6th Cir. 2004). HN3 [↑] All factual allegations are taken to be true, and we draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Ibid. "A Rule 12(b)(6) motion should only be granted if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiffs can prove no set of facts in support [**8] of [their] claim which would entitle [them] to relief." Ibid. (quotation marks omitted).

The defendants argue that the state action doctrine bars liability on any of the antitrust claims raised by the plaintiff. BlueCross also argues, in the alternative, that it is protected from antitrust liability by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Because we conclude that the state action doctrine bars antitrust liability for all the defendants, including BlueCross, we do not reach this alternative argument.

A

HN4 [↑] Under the so-called "state action doctrine," it is well established that antitrust law does not apply to states acting as sovereigns.<sup>4</sup> [**10] Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). The Supreme Court has determined that principles of federalism and state sovereignty provide blanket protection for states, but political subdivisions of the states are not automatically immune from antitrust liability. City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 370, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991). Political subdivisions of states are beyond the reach of the antitrust laws only when they act pursuant to a "clearly expressed" [*612] state policy. [**9] " <sup>5</sup> Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 40, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985). The state legislature need not explicitly authorize anticompetitive conduct, as long as anticompetitive effect would logically result from the authority granted by the state. Columbia, 499 U.S. at 372-73 ("it is enough, we have held, if suppression of competition is the 'foreseeable result' of what the statute authorizes"); Hallie, 471 U.S. at 41-42. Applying these principles, we recently held that Michigan law implicitly authorized anticompetitive conduct when it empowered prisons to grant public contracts for the provision of telephone services. Michigan Paytel Joint Venture v. City of Detroit, 287 F.3d 527 (6th Cir. 2002). The issues of implied authority and "foreseeable" anticompetitive effects are recurring ones in the case law, but, obviously, are relevant only when there is no express authorization for anticompetitive conduct.

---

<sup>4</sup> The parties do not contest that the state action doctrine, if applicable, protects both the government entity - the hospital authority - and the private parties with whom it contracts - BlueCross. This is sensible, as the protection would be worthless in many cases if a plaintiff could simply sue private parties that contracted with the government.

<sup>5</sup> After Hallie, the only requirement for sovereign immunity for political subdivisions is a clearly articulated state policy. Id. at 46. At one time, there was also an "active state supervision requirement," but in Hallie the Supreme Court noted that this was primarily evidentiary and discarded this part of the test unless "regulation by a private party" is involved. Ibid.

B

Defendants hold the trump in this case: plain statutory language. The crux is the following sentence, which appears after the long list of specific and general powers granted by the Acts: HN5 "[hospital authorities] may exercise such powers regardless of the competitive consequences thereof." Tenn. Code Ann. § 7-57-502\(c\) (emphasis added). HN6 The phrase "competitive consequences" is commonly used in antitrust and competition law. See, e.g., Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 251, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (1993) ("[an element] of the violation is the competitive consequences of predatory conduct."); Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 557, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990) [**11] ("the [Robinson-Patman Act] plainly reveals a concern with competitive consequences [***5] . . . ."). We are not aware of any other context in which this phrase is commonly used, and the plaintiff has not provided any authority suggesting an alternative meaning. The antitrust laws protect competition and are concerned with competitive consequences; thus, permission to act "regardless of competitive consequences" is most sensibly read as an authorization to act without regard for the antitrust laws.

Although no Tennessee court has addressed this issue,<sup>6</sup> [\[\*12\]](#) the Tennessee Attorney [\[\*613\]](#) General reached the same conclusion in a 1995 Opinion. Around the time the 1995 Act was passed, the Tennessee Attorney General opined that "the exercise of the increased powers and privileges set forth in the Act qualifies for state action immunity from the federal antitrust law."<sup>7</sup> In his analysis, the Attorney General concluded that the Act "contemplates and expresses an intent to displace competition." In this litigation, the current Attorney General takes a different view, but we think the original position, issued without the prospect of litigation, expresses the better view of the language.

The primary response of plaintiff and its amici is to argue that the Tennessee legislature intended to promote competition in the healthcare market, and favors competition generally. See Tenn. Const. Art. I, § 22 ("That perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free State, and shall not be allowed."); Tenn. Code Ann. § 68-11-1625\(b\) ("It is the policy of the state of Tennessee that: . . . The state's health care resources should be developed to address the needs of Tennesseans while encouraging competitive markets, economic efficiencies and the continued development of the state's health care industry"). The plaintiff also notes that the statement of purpose for the 1995 Act expresses a desire to enable public hospitals to compete with private hospitals. See [\[\*13\]](#) supra n.3. In the face of a clear public policy favoring competition, plaintiff argues, the "regardless of" phrase cannot be interpreted to grant antitrust immunity. Defendants and their amici dispute whether Tennessee is in fact uniformly hostile to monopoly, and advance the view that, although the legislature was somewhat concerned with competitive effects, it was determined to advance the interests of hospital authorities even at the expense of competition.

<sup>6</sup> Both parties rely upon the opinion of the Tennessee Supreme Court in City of Cookeville ex rel. Cookeville Regional Med. Ctr. v. Humphrey, 126 S.W.3d 897 (Tenn. 2004). The Cookeville court faced the issue of whether the statute authorized a hospital authority to close its imaging department and then enter into an exclusive contract with a private provider. The Tennessee Supreme Court stated:

[Tennessee statute] provides in pertinent part that a metropolitan hospital authority, in the exercise of its powers, may "contract for or otherwise participate solely or with others" in furtherance of the hospital's operation. Additionally, the plain language of this statute permits private act metropolitan hospitals to enter into a contract "regardless of the competitive consequences [of the contract]." Therefore, it is clear that private act metropolitan hospital authorities are statutorily authorized to execute exclusive provider contracts.

*Id. at 902* (citations omitted)(emphasis in original). Cookeville does confirm that the "regardless of" clause applies to all the powers granted in § 7-57-502\(a\)-\(b\) and that those powers are quite broad. However, Cookeville did not involve an antitrust claim, and is therefore of limited usefulness in determining whether the "regardless of" phrase was meant to create an exemption from the antitrust laws.

<sup>7</sup> This opinion was actually issued six days before the 1995 Act was passed (the then-draft language was the same as the enacted version). It therefore serves a dual role as legislative history and as the opinion of the Tennessee Attorney General at the time the bill was passed.

More importantly, the plaintiff's argument is at odds with a basic principle of interpretation: the specific trumps the general. It is no doubt true that Tennessee prefers competition as a general matter, but this is true of the federal government and probably every other state as well. Despite this, our various federal and state governments regularly carve out exceptions. Indeed, the appropriate level of competition in health care is a policy question that is regularly revisited at both [***6] the federal and state levels. Here, the language of the statute clearly indicates the desire to create an exception to the antitrust laws, and the general preference for competition is therefore superseded.

When the plaintiff [**14] turns to the "regardless of" language, it is only to dismiss it as a "tag-line phrase." It argues that the language only authorizes hospital authorities to enter into contracts and exercise their powers even if such actions disadvantage competing hospitals and doctors: the "regardless of" phrase "thus recognized that the 'competitive consequences' of making public hospitals more competitive was that individual competitors might be harmed. This type of harm, however is the essence of competition." Pl.'s Br. at 24-25. This reading, however, would render the language hortatory. Obviously, any government entity's actions will have an effect, sometimes negative, on private [*614] actors. Moreover, the "regardless of" clause appears in a section of the Act granting powers to hospital authorities, and this would be an odd place for the legislature to add a "tag-line" phrase that simply notes a possible consequence of its enactment. Finally, the plaintiff does not cite any examples or authority for this limited reading of the phrase "competitive consequences," and it is contrary to the common legal usage.

In sum, we read the legislative language and surrounding circumstances as demonstrating that [**15] the Tennessee legislature invested public hospital corporations with very broad powers to ensure their continued viability; authorized them to exercise many powers, such as contracting for services and acquiring property, that could easily lead to anti-competitive consequences; and then specifically stated that such activities could be undertaken without regard to the effects of such activity on competition. This constitutes the authorization necessary to invoke the state action doctrine.

III

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

Sanderson v. Culligan Int'l Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

April 1, 2005, Argued ; July 11, 2005, Decided

No. 04-3253

Reporter

415 F.3d 620 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 13969 **; 2005-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,853

CHARLES H. SANDERSON, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. CULLIGAN INTERNATIONAL COMPANY, Defendant-Appellee.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division. No. IP 00-0459-C H/K. David F. Hamilton, Judge.

Sanderson v. Ind. Soft Water Servs., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15671 \(S.D. Ind., July 23, 2004\)

Core Terms

---

magnetic, anti trust law, producers, products, rivals, distributors, advertising, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim]

On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), even highly unlikely propositions must be taken as given.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN2[ Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials]

The party opposing summary judgment receives the benefit of all reasonable inferences.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3[ Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation]

Complaints need not allege facts or legal theories.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN4** [] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust laws protect consumers, not producers. They favor competition of all kinds, whether or not some other producer thinks the competition "fair." Much competition is unfair, or at least ungentlemanly; it is designed to take sales away from one's rivals. There is no obligation to be kindly or cooperative toward other producers. Some laws, including the Lanham Act, condemn particular tactics deemed unfair; the Sherman Act is not among these laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN5** [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust law condemns practices that drive up prices by curtailing output. False statements about a rival's goods do not curtail output in either the short or the long run. They just set the stage for competition in a different venue: the advertising market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN6** [] Private Actions, Remedies

Warfare among suppliers and their different products is competition. Antitrust law does not compel a competitor to praise your product or sponsor the work of others. To require cooperation or friendliness among rivals is to undercut the intellectual foundations of antitrust law. Unless one group of suppliers diminishes another's ability to peddle its wares (technically, reduces rivals' elasticity of supply), there is not even the beginning of an antitrust case, no reason to investigate further to determine whether the restraint is reasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

415 F.3d 620, *620L<sup>2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 13969, **1</sup>

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defamation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Remedies

What producers say about each others' goods in an effort to sway consumers is competition in action. Some other law may require judicial intervention in order to increase the portion of truth in advertising; the Sherman Act does not. Commercial speech is not actionable under the antitrust laws. There can be no restraint of trade without a restraint.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Scope

HN8 False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\)\(B\), covers only commercial advertising or promotion.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Scope

HN9 False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

Section 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\), addresses promotional material disseminated to anonymous recipients. This leaves to state law the evaluation of oral statements and brochures at trade shows.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Actual Authority > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Duties & Liabilities, Unlawful Acts of Agents

Unsuccessful efforts at prevention of the commission of business torts do not imply agency or an assumption of liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Frivolous Appeals

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Jurisdiction

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Scope

HN11 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Penalties

Neither the Sherman Act nor the Lanham Act is designed to throw into federal courts all disputes about the efficacy of competing products.

Counsel: For CHARLES H. SANDERSON, SR. - Plaintiff - Appellant; Robert Hendren, Indianapolis, IN.

For CULLIGAN INTERNATIONAL COMPANY - Defendant - Appellee; Gayle A. Reindl, Indianapolis, IN.

Judges: Before EASTERBROOK, MANION, and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: EASTERBROOK

Opinion

---

[*621] EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judge. Magnatech Corporation sells "magnetic water conditioners." Its sole stockholder brought this suit in his own name, contending that Culligan, a manufacturer of chemical and filtration systems of water purification, violated the federal antitrust and trademark laws by asserting that magnetic systems don't work. The suit might have been dismissed immediately, for Magnatech rather than Sanderson is the appropriate plaintiff. See, e.g., *In re Industrial Gas Antitrust Litigation*, 681 F.2d 514, 519-20 \(7th Cir. 1982\); *Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange National Bank*, 877 F.2d 1333, 1335-36 \(7th Cir. 1989\). Sanderson does not claim to be injured as a consumer; his injury (a reduction in the value of his stock) is derivative of Magnatech's. Cf. *Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois*, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\). But Culligan did not catch this, and it is not the sort of jurisdictional [*622] problem that a court must notice on its own. See *Associated General Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters*, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 & n.31, *459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\)*; *Hammes v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc.*, 33 F.3d 774, 778 \(7th Cir. 1994\).

Instead Culligan defended on the merits, prevailing in a series of decisions. First the district court dismissed the antitrust allegations for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted. *2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8309 \(S.D. Ind. May 29, 2001\)*. Then it granted summary judgment on the *Lanham Act* claim to the extent that any of the statements preceded the period of limitations. [*622] *2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19212 \(S.D. Ind. Sept. 20, 2002\)*.

Finally it terminated the case, again by summary judgment, because none of the remaining statements fits the Lanham Act's definition of advertising. 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15671 \(S.D. Ind. July 23, 2004\).

Because the case ended without a trial, we must assume that magnetic systems can reduce lime scale deposits in pipes, the only benefit that Magnatech and its Superior Manufacturing Division claim for their products. (They do not contend [**3] that magnetic treatment removes minerals or biological agents from water.) HN1[↑] On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), even highly unlikely propositions must be taken as given. See, e.g., Miles v. Augusta City Council, 710 F.2d 1542 \(11th Cir. 1983\) (assuming, as the complaint alleged, that cats can talk). And HN2[↑] the party opposing summary judgment receives the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Some evidence in the record suggests that magnetic systems can reduce lime buildup, though whether this evidence, which has not been published in a scientific journal, meets the standard of Fed. R. Evid. 702 is doubtful.

Lime deposits in plumbing are calcium carbonate (CaCO<sub>3</sub>), which is non-magnetic. Sanderson's lawyer could not explain why magnets affect nonferrous materials, and the unpublished study to which his brief refers at length does not do so either. This study finds that non-chemical devices can reduce the hardness of calcium carbonate build-up in industrial air-conditioning systems, but only when the water moves faster than 2.3 meters per second -- and even so the paper [**4] offers Sanderson little support, for it lumps together a variety of non-chemical approaches and does not report separately on the sort of magnetic systems that Magnatech sells. See Young I. Cho, Efficiency of physical water treatments in controlling calcium scale accumulation in recirculating open cooling water system, American Society of Heating, Refrigerating & Air-Conditioning Engineers Research Project 1155-TRP (May 29, 2002). Positive reports about magnetic water treatment are not replicable; this plus the lack of a physical explanation for any effects are hallmarks of junk science. For a review of the literature see John S. Baker & Simon J. Judd, Magnetic amelioration of scale formation, 30 Water Research 247 (1996). Nonetheless, we shall indulge the assumption that adverse statements about Magnatech's products are calumnies.

Sanderson's antitrust claim rests on § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and fails at the threshold because Sanderson does not contend (in the complaint or anywhere else) that Culligan has conspired with other producers to set price or output, or that it possesses the sort of market power that would lead to condemnation [**5] under the Rule of Reason. See National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\). Recast under § 2 it would fare no better, because Sanderson does not contend that Culligan possesses monopoly power or that bad-mouthing Magnatech's products creates a dangerous probability of monopolization. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\).

The problem is not that the pleading is short, as Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 contemplates. HN3[↑] Complaints need not allege facts or legal theories. See Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 152 L. Ed. 2d 1, 122 S. Ct. 992 \(2002\); Bartholet v. Reishauer A.G. \(Zurich\), 953 F.2d 1073 \(7th Cir. 1992\). Sanderson's problem, rather, is that his complaint and other papers demonstrate [*623] that the claim rests on a belief that the antitrust laws forbid all "unfair" business tactics, without regard to the likelihood that the adversary will achieve and retain a monopoly at consumers' expense. Not at all. HN4[↑] The antitrust laws protect consumers, not producers. They favor competition of all kinds, whether or not some other [**6] producer thinks the competition "fair." Much competition is unfair, or at least ungentlemanly; it is designed to take sales away from one's rivals. There is no obligation to be kindly or cooperative toward other producers. See, e.g., Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823, 124 S. Ct. 872 \(2004\). Some laws, including the Lanham Act, condemn particular tactics deemed "unfair"; the Sherman Act is not among these laws.

HN5[↑] Antitrust law condemns practices that drive up prices by curtailing output. See, e.g., NCAA, 468 U.S. at 103-07; Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\). False statements about a rival's goods do not curtail output in either the short or the long run. They just set the stage for competition in a different venue: the advertising market. Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397 \(7th Cir. 1989\), another antitrust case based on a supposed commercial falsehood, makes this point forcefully. We observed:

HN6 Warfare among suppliers and their different products is competition. Antitrust law does not [**7] compel your competitor to praise your product or sponsor your work. To require cooperation or friendliness among rivals is to undercut the intellectual foundations of antitrust law. Unless one group of suppliers diminishes another's ability to peddle its wares (technically, reduces rivals' elasticity of supply), there is not even the beginning of an antitrust case, no reason to investigate further to determine whether the restraint is "reasonable".

870 F.2d at 399 (citations omitted; emphasis in original). Magnatech remains free to sell to all who can be persuaded that magnets reduce lime buildup; Culligan faces competition from dozens of other producers that use different, though more conventional, technologies to filter, purify, or reduce mineral content in water.

Sanderson contends that Schachar is incompatible with American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330, 102 S. Ct. 1935 \(1982\), but Schachar pointed out that Hydrolevel depended on something missing there (and here): an enforcement mechanism. Some producers persuaded an engineering society to write standards in such a way that only their [**8] products were acceptable. Because many governmental bodies made compliance with the standards mandatory (they were incorporated into building codes and other legal mandates), this curtailed the available supply (rivals' products having been knocked out) and could have enabled the conspirators to raise prices.

Nothing comparable is alleged here. Although magnetic devices were at one time banned from some trade shows (supposedly at Culligan's behest), that ban was lifted in the mid-1990s and is outside the period of limitations, see 15 U.S.C. § 15\(b\) -- and anyway is some distance from the legal restraint that led to Hydrolevel. Sanderson also maintains that Culligan persuaded the Water Quality Association, a trade group, to withhold its "Gold Seal" from magnetic systems. No unit of government incorporates this "Gold Seal" into any legal requirement; it is just a marketing device. Anheuser-Busch might as well claim that by selling a beer called "Blue Ribbon" Pabst has violated the antitrust laws, unless [*624] Pabst is willing to bestow the same "Blue Ribbon" on Budweiser. HN7 What producers say about each others' goods in an effort to sway consumers is competition in [**9] action. Some other law may require judicial intervention in order to increase the portion of truth in advertising; the Sherman Act does not. Commercial speech is not actionable under the antitrust laws. As we put it in Schachar: "There can be no restraint of trade without a restraint." 870 F.2d at 397. See also Santana Products, Inc. v. Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc., 401 F.3d 123, 133 \(3d Cir. 2005\).

As for Sanderson's claim under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\)\(1\)\(B\), the district court held that it founders on the federal statute's limited scope. HN8 Section 43\(a\) covers only "commercial advertising or promotion". The district court concluded that Sanderson had just three examples of supposedly false statements within the period of limitations, and that all three were person-to-person communications at trade shows. We held in First Health Group Corp. v. BCE Emergis Corp., 269 F.3d 800, 804 \(7th Cir. 2001\), that HN9 § 43\(a\) addresses "promotional material disseminated to anonymous recipients". This leaves to state law the evaluation of oral statements and brochures at trade shows. Sanderson does [**10] not contend that the statements of which he complains are "commercial advertising or promotion" as First Health Group understood that phrase. Indeed, he does not mention that opinion, though it was the mainstay of the district court's decision.

For that matter, Sanderson does not contend that any of the statements within the period of limitations was uttered by Culligan. He attributes these oral statements and handouts to its franchisees or distributors and says that Culligan must be vicariously liable because it insists that they live up to high standards of business ethics. That Culligan tries to prevent its distributors from committing business torts, and reserves the right to stop selling to anyone who does, hardly makes any of the distributors its agent for the purpose of defaming rivals. HN10 Unsuccessful efforts at prevention do not imply agency or an assumption of liability. If Culligan told its distributors to avoid reckless driving and to obey all state laws, this would not make it vicariously liable for their auto accidents or oblige it to pay if a distributor shot his neighbor's dog for barking late at night.

Sanderson pursued some claims under state law, which for [**11] reasons we have given is the only applicable body of legal norms. The district judge granted summary judgment to Culligan on all of the state-law claims, and Sanderson does not contest this decision on appeal. His arguments have been limited to the frivolous claims under federal law. He should be thankful that Culligan has not filed a cross-appeal from the district court's order denying its motion for sanctions. HN11[] Neither the Sherman Act nor the Lanham Act is designed to throw into federal courts all disputes about the efficacy of competing products. Whether magnetic water conditioners work is a question about science, not law, and scientific disputes must be resolved by scientific means.

AFFIRMED

---

End of Document

Teamsters Local Union No. 117 v. Sysco Food Servs. of Seattle, Inc.

United States District Court for the Western District of Washington

July 11, 2005, Decided ; July 11, 2005, Filed

Case No. C05-0113L

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43789 *; 2005 WL 1643890

TEAMSTERS LOCAL UNION NO. 117, Plaintiff, v. SYSCO FOOD SERVICES OF SEATTLE, INC., et al., Defendants.

Core Terms

---

tortious interference, single employer, district court, collective bargaining agreement, motion to dismiss, contractual relationship, primary jurisdiction, employees, alter ego, arbitration, conspiracy, preempted, bargaining unit, non-signatory, Defendants', contractual, proceedings, parties, defer, unfair labor practice, alter ego theory, state law claim, federal court, breached

Counsel: [*1] For Local 117 Teamsters, Plaintiff: Dmitri Iglitzin, LEAD ATTORNEY, SCHWERIN CAMPBELL BARNARD LLP, SEATTLE, WA; Spencer Nathan Thal, LEAD ATTORNEY, TEAMSTERS LOCAL 117, SEATTLE, WA; Tracey Anne Thompson, LEAD ATTORNEY, TEAMSTERS LOCAL UNION NO 117, SEATTLE, WA; Judith Krebs, SCHWERIN CAMPBELL BARNARD LLP, SEATTLE, WA.

For Sysco Food Services of Seattle Inc, a Delaware corporation, Defendant: John M Payne, LEAD ATTORNEY, Paul Milton Nordsletten, LEAD ATTORNEY, DAVIS GRIMM PAYNE & MARRA, SEATTLE, WA; Richard J. Omata, LEAD ATTORNEY, Tracy M Miller, KARR TUTTLE CAMPBELL, SEATTLE, WA.

For Sysco Food Services Inc, a Delaware corporation, Defendant: Richard J. Omata, LEAD ATTORNEY, Tracy M Miller, KARR TUTTLE CAMPBELL, SEATTLE, WA.

For Sysco Corporation, a Delaware corporation, Defendant: Lawrence J Song, LEAD ATTORNEY, EPSTEIN TURNER & SONG, LOS ANGELES, CA; Richard J. Omata, LEAD ATTORNEY, Tracy M Miller, KARR TUTTLE CAMPBELL, SEATTLE, WA; Edward M Melillo, LAW OFFICES OF EDWARD M, MELILLO, SEATTLE, WA.

Judges: Robert S. Lasnik, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Robert S. Lasnik

Opinion

---

ORDER REGARDING MOTIONS TO DISMISS OR TO STAY

This matter comes before the Court on motions [*2] filed by defendants Sysco Food Services of Seattle, Inc. ("Sysco Seattle"), Sysco Food Services, Inc. ("Sysco Post Falls"), and Sysco Corporation ("Sysco Corp.") (Dkt. # s 20, 23, & 26). Defendants move to dismiss or, in the alternative, to stay the federal court proceedings pending resolution of issues before the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB"). For the reasons set forth below, defendants' motions are granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Seattle are both wholly owned subsidiaries of Sysco Corporation. Sysco Seattle operates a facility in Kent, Washington from which it distributes groceries to retail stores throughout the Pacific Northwest, including a number of locations in ORDER REGARDING MOTIONS TO DISMISS OR TO STAY eastern Washington and northern Idaho. Sysco Seattle's employees, including its drivers, are represented by Teamsters Local Union No. 117 ("Local 117").

Local 117 and Sysco Seattle have entered into a collective bargaining agreement (the "CBA") which covers the terms and conditions of employment at Sysco Seattle. Section 20.01 of the CBA, the parties agree that the work of the bargaining unit may only be performed [*3] by employees that belong to that bargaining unit. Section 20.02 prohibits Sysco Seattle from unilaterally changing employment terms or sub-contracting work without first engaging in good-faith bargaining with Local 117 about the effects of the changes.

The dispute between the parties arose when Sysco Post Falls announced that it intended to open a new facility in Post Falls, Idaho that would supply groceries to eastern Washington and northern Idaho. When it learned of the new facility, Sysco Seattle decided to stop operating in eastern Washington and northern Idaho. Sysco Seattle informed Local 117 that 33 drivers would be laid off as a result of its decision, but also informed Local 117 that Sysco Post Falls would likely require the services of the drivers.

In late 2004, Teamsters Local 690, based in Spokane, Washington, was designated by the Joint Council of Teamsters No. 28 as the bargaining representative with exclusive jurisdiction for all drivers and warehouse employees hired at the new Post Falls facility. In January, 2005, Local 690 and Sysco Post Falls began negotiations on labor agreements to cover employees at the Post Falls facility. The Post Falls agreement, however, [*4] has yet to be implemented.

When Local 117 learned that Sysco Seattle intended to cease operating in eastern Washington and northern Idaho, it asked Sysco Seattle to consult with it under § 20.02 of the CBA about the effects of the decision. The "effects bargaining" was scheduled for February 10, 2005. Several weeks before that meeting, however, Local 117 learned that Sysco Post Falls either had begun hiring, or intended to start hiring, employees for the new Post Falls facility. Local 117 filed this lawsuit on January 21, 2005.

After the lawsuit was filed, defendants filed several complaints with the NLRB. For instance, Sysco Post Falls filed unfair labor practice charges against Local 690, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and Local 117. These claims assert that Local 690 has refused to accept the negotiated labor agreement with Sysco Post Falls and that the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and Local 117 have violated § 8\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) of the National Labor Relations Act. In addition, Sysco Seattle and Sysco Post Falls have both filed unit clarification petitions with the NLRB.

In its amended complaint, Local 117 seeks injunctive relief under § 301 of the Labor Management [*5] Relations Act (the "LMRA"), 29 U.S.C. § 185\(a\), to prevent breaches of §§ 20.01 and 20.02 of the CBA. Local 117 has asserted these claims against Sysco Seattle and against Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Corp. as "alter egos" of Sysco Seattle. In the event that Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Corp. are not alter egos of Sysco Seattle, Local 117 has filed alternative claims of tortious interference with contractual relationship (under both Washington law and federal common law), and civil conspiracy against Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Seattle. Finally, Local 117 seeks a declaratory judgment regarding its rights under the CBA.

In their respective motions to dismiss, defendants argue that the § 301 claims should be dismissed or stayed because (1) this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the claims, and (2) the NLRB, not this Court, has primary jurisdiction over issues arising under § 301 of the LMRA. Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Corp. argue that the tort-based claims should be dismissed because they are preempted by both § 301 of the LMRA and the Garmon presumption doctrine, see San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 244, 79 S. Ct. 773, 3 L. Ed. 2d

775 \(1959\). [*6] In addition, Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Corp. argue that the Civil Conspiracy claim fails as a matter of law.<sup>1</sup>

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review.

In the context of a defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\), this Court must "take the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint as true." Wolfe v. Strankman, 392 F.3d 358, 362 (9th Cir. 2004). In the context of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, a court must (1) construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, (2) [*7] accept all well-pleaded factual allegations as true, and (3) determine whether the plaintiff can prove any set of facts to support a claim that would merit relief. See Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996).

B. Claims under § 301 of the LMRA.

1. Subject Matter Jurisdiction and Failure to Submit Claims to Arbitration.

Sysco Seattle argues that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the § 301 claims asserted against it because Local 117 never submitted the underlying breach of contract claims to arbitration. There is no dispute that the underlying question of whether Sysco Seattle has breached, or is about to breach, §§ 20.01 or 20.02 of the CBA are subject to the CBA's arbitration provision. The underlying contractual dispute, however, is not before the Court. Instead, Plaintiff's § 301 causes of action seek a "reverse Boys Markets" injunction. See Boys Markets, Inc. v. Retail Clerks Union, Local 770, 398 U.S. 235, 254, 90 S. Ct. 1583, 26 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1970); see also Newspaper & Periodical Drivers' & Helpers' Union, Local 921 v. San Francisco Newspaper Agency, 89 F.3d 629, 632 (9th Cir. 1996). [*8] A "reverse Boys Markets" case is one in which "an employer makes changes in areas which are subject to the grievance arbitration procedure, and the union seeks to enjoin the employer from making the changes until the grievance is resolved through arbitration." San Francisco Newspaper Agency, 89 F.3d at 632. Since the purpose of Plaintiff's § 301 claims is not to determine the parties' obligation under the CBA, but to preserve the status quo pending arbitration, Plaintiff is not required to submit the § 301 claims to arbitration.

2. Dismissal or Stay in Deference to NLRB's Primary Jurisdiction.

Section 301 of the LMRA gives this Court subject matter jurisdiction over cases involving the violation of private labor agreements. See 29 U.S.C. § 185\(a\); SEIU v. St. Vincent Medical Center, 344 F.3d 977, 983 (9th Cir. 2003). This Court's jurisdiction, however, is concurrent with the NLRB's, and it is well-settled that "federal courts 'must tread lightly' in areas of the NLRB's primary jurisdiction and must defer to the NLRB 'when on close examination, section 301 cases fall within the NLRB's primary jurisdiction.'" [*9] Id. (quoting United Ass'n of Journeymen & Apprentices of Plumbing & Pipefitting Indus., Local 342 v. Valley Engineers, 975 F.2d 611, 613-14 (9th Cir. 1992)). In determining whether to defer to the NLRB, the Court asks "whether the major issues to be decided . . . can be characterized as primarily representational or primarily contractual." Pace v. Honolulu Disp. Serv., Inc., 227 F.3d 1150, 1157 (9th Cir. 2000) (quoting Valley Engineers, 975 F.2d at 614). Issues that are primarily representational should be decided by the NLRB while this Court should retain jurisdiction over issues that are primarily contractual.

Whether the issues in this dispute are primarily representational or primarily contractual turns on whether Local 117 has brought a "single employer" claim or an "alter ego" claim against defendants. In UA Local 343 United Ass'n of Journeymen & Apprentices of Plumbing and Pipefitting Indus. of U.S. and Canada, AFL-CIO v. Nor-Cal Plumbing, Inc., the Ninth Circuit noted that "the requirements of [the alter ego and single employer] theories overlap substantially. [*10] Under both theories, the district court must . . . determine whether the two firms are a single employer be measuring the degree of common ownership, management, operations, and labor relations." 48 F.3d 1465, 1470 \(9th Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 912, 116 S. Ct. 297, 133 L. Ed. 2d 203 (1995).

---

<sup>1</sup> Defendants also argued that this Court lacks diversity jurisdiction over the state law claims and should not exercise pendent jurisdiction over those claims. Since, as discussed below, this Court has determined that the state law claims are preempted by the LMRA, these arguments need not be addressed.

Once the single employer determination has been made, however, the two theories have different requirements. The single employer theory requires a showing that employees of the two firms constitute a single bargaining unit. Since the NLRB "has primary jurisdiction to determine whether the employees of both the union and non-union firms constitute an appropriate bargaining unit," a district court must defer to the NLRB when a single employer theory is raised. Id. at 1470. The alter ego theory, on the other hand, does not require a showing that a single bargaining unit exists. Instead, the alter ego theory requires a plaintiff to prove, and the district court to find, that one of the firms "was being used in a sham effort to avoid collective bargaining obligations rather than for the pursuit of legitimate business objectives untainted by union animus." Id. (internal quotations [*11] and citations omitted). As the Ninth Circuit has made clear,

The single employer and alter ego doctrines function differently. . . . To impose a labor agreement on a nonsignatory company under the single employer doctrine, the employees of both companies must be shown to constitute a single bargaining unit. Such a showing is not required under the alter ego doctrine. It focuses on whether there is an attempt to avoid the obligations of a collective bargaining agreement through a sham transaction or a technical change in operation.

Carpenters' Local Union No. 1478 v. Stevens, 743 F.2d 1271, 1276-77 \(9th Cir. 1984\) (footnotes omitted), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1015, 105 S. Ct. 2018, 85 L. Ed. 2d 300 (1985). If the plaintiff prevails on both steps of the alter ego theory, the court can hold that a bargaining agreement covered both Sysco Seattle and Sysco Post Falls without deferring to the NLRB's primary jurisdiction. See Nor-Cal Plumbing, 48 F.3d at 1470 (citing Northwest Admrs., Inc. v. Con Iverson Trucking, Inc., 749 F.2d 1338, 1340 \(9th Cir. 1984\)).

Here, it is clear that the issues before this Court do not fall under the NLRB's [*12] primary jurisdiction. To begin, Local 117 has abandoned any claims based on a single employer theory (see Dkt. # 33, Opp. to Sysco Food Services' Mot. to Dismiss at p. 8) and chosen to proceed under an alter ego theory.<sup>2</sup> [*13] What is more, in dismissing the unit clarification claims filed by Sysco Seattle and Sysco Post Falls, the NLRB held that "Local 117 has alleged a work dispute claim, rather than a representational claim. . . . Local 117's allegation that [Sysco Post Falls] is an alter ego of [Sysco Seattle] is a necessary component of its contractual claim . . ." <sup>3</sup> Dkt. # 65, Ex. 1, NLRB Regional Director's Decision and Order Dismissing Petitions at p. 4. Based on the holding in Nor-Cal Plumbing, Local 117's abandonment of any single employer claim, and the conclusions of the NLRB's Regional Director, this Court finds that Local 117's claims are "primarily contractual" and are "properly in federal court rather than before the NLRB." Pace, 227 F.3d at 1157.

3. Stay in Deference to NLRB's Concurrent Jurisdiction.

Defendants argue that even if the claims are not within the primary jurisdiction of the NLRB, the Court should exercise its discretion and stay this case in favor of the NLRB's concurrent jurisdiction. In cases such as this where a district court and the NLRB share concurrent jurisdiction, the district court may exercise its discretion and stay its own proceedings pending resolution of the NLRB dispute. See Northern California Dist. Council of Hod Carriers, Bldg. and Const. Laborers, AFL-CIO v Opinski, 673 F.2d 1074, 1075 \(9th Cir. 1982\). In determining whether to stay proceedings, a district court should consider, among other things, whether a decision in the case before it and a decision before the NLRB present more than a potential conflict and whether an eventual NLRB decision will have issue preclusive effect. See Central Valley Typographical Union No. 46 v. McClatchy Newspapers, 762 F.2d 741, 749 \(9th Cir. 1985\).

<sup>2</sup>The fact that Local 117 has not raised a single employer claim distinguishes this case from Valley Engineers. In Valley Engineers, the Ninth Circuit recognized that "a single employer finding must be supplemented by a unit clarification before the terms of a collective bargaining agreement can be imposed on an nonsigning entity." 975 F.2d at 614. Since only the NLRB can conduct the unit clarification inquiry, the Court held that where a party asserts claims under both a single employer theory and an alter ego theory, the district court must defer to the NLRB on both issues. Id. Here, since no single employer claim has been raised, the NLRB's primary jurisdiction has not been triggered.

<sup>3</sup>Sysco Seattle and Sysco Post Falls have appealed this finding.

Certainly, [*14] the unit clarification claims will not present a conflict with the issues to be decided by this Court. See Carpenters Local Union No. 1846 of United Broth. of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO v. Pratt-Farnsworth, Inc., 690 F.2d 489, 517 \(5th Cir. 1982\) ("Obviously, the Board will not make an alter ego finding in a unit clarification proceeding, since the alter ego theory does not raise a unit determination issue"), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 932, 104 S. Ct. 335, 78 L. Ed. 2d 305 (1983). Defendants, however, note that Sysco Post Falls has another set of claims before the NLRB. These claims assert that Local 117 and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters have committed unfair labor practices by interfering with Sysco Post Falls' efforts to enter into an agreement with Local 690. There is some potential that the unfair labor practices claims will address some of the issues raised before this Court. For instance, defendants have presented letters from the NLRB indicating that the NLRB "must make a determination on the single employer/alter ego question in order to decide these cases." See Dkt. # s 61, Ex. 2 & 62, Ex. 2.

Despite this potential conflict, a stay is not [*15] appropriate. See Intern'l Broth. of Elec. Workers, Local 532 v. Brink Constr. Co., 825 F.2d 207, 213 \(9th Cir. 1987\) ("While the potential for conflict exists between the court's decision and the NLRB's ultimate decision, this alone does not compel a stay"). To begin, "[t]he presence of the NLRB does not place all issues of a case within the NLRB's primary jurisdiction." SEIU v. St. Vincent Med. Ctr., 344 F.3d at 985. This is especially true where, as here, there is no question that the unfair labor practices claims before the NLRB "differ from the issue before the district court." See Sheet Metal Workers Intern. Ass'n, Local No. 162 v. Jason Mfg., Inc., 900 F.2d 1392, 1401 \(9th Cir. 1990\). The NLRB claims assert that Local 690, Local 117, and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters have interfered with Sysco Post Falls employees' rights to enter into a collective bargaining agreement. This suit, on the other hand, regards the applicability of a reverse Boys Markets injunction under the CBA. In addition, although the NLRB has requested information regarding whether the defendants are a single entity or alter egos, it is [*16] far from certain that resolving the alter ego dispute is necessary to resolve the unfair labor practices claim. See Durkin v. Shea & Gould, 92 F.3d 1510, 1516 \(9th Cir. 1996\) (issue preclusion occurs where same issue is "actually and necessarily decided" in prior case).

Finally, the Court notes that the unfair labor practices claims were filed by Sysco Post Falls after Local 117 initiated this suit. A similar situation occurred in Brink Constr., where "the defendant in the LMRA § 301 suit filed unfair labor practice charges after the filing of the suit." Brink Constr., 825 F.2d at 214 (emphasis in original). As in Brink Constr., allowing a stay here "would frustrate the congressional intent to have the district courts resolve labor-management contract disputes," and "turn on its head the general federal court practice of avoiding conflicts of jurisdiction by the court in the subsequently filed proceeding staying its proceeding pending the outcome of the initial suit." Id. Under the circumstances, entering a stay until the NLRB claims have been resolved would not be appropriate.

C. Claims under Washington Law. [*17]

1. Civil Conspiracy and CPA Claims.

Local 117's civil conspiracy claim is based on the premise that defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Washington Consumer Protection Act ("CPA"), RCW 19.86.030, by creating a horizontal division of territory.

These claims fail as a matter of law. Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Seattle are wholly owned subsidiaries of Sysco Corporation. "[T]he coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as a single enterprise for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act." Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1984\). The state law conspiracy claim must fail because the defendants "cannot form a 'combination or conspiracy' for purposes of Section 1." Boulware v. State of Nev., Dept. of Human Resources, 960 F.2d 793, 797 \(9th Cir. 1992\).

Local 117's CPA claim fails for similar reasons. The CPA was drafted to "complement the body of federal law governing restraints of trade, unfair competition and unfair, deceptive, and fraudulent acts or practices. . . ." RCW 19.86.920 [*18]. "When the Legislature enacted the CPA, it anticipated our courts would be guided by the interpretation given by the federal courts to the corresponding federal statutes." Ballo v. James S. Black Co., 39 Wn. App. 21, 25-26, 692 P.2d 182 \(1984\). Washington courts, of course, are not bound to follow federal antitrust law, but any departures from federal law "must be for a reason rooted in our own statutes or case law. . . ." Blewett v. Abbot Laboratories, 86 Wn. App. 782, 788, 938 P.2d 842 \(1997\), rev. denied, 133 Wn.2d 1029, 950 P.2d 475 (1998). This Court has not found, and Local 117 has not identified, any statutes or case law that would suggest departing from the Copperweld holding.

2. State Law Claim of Tortious Interference With Contractual Relationships.

Defendants argue that the state law claims of tortious interference with contractual relationships against Sysco Post Falls and Sysco Corp. are preempted by § 301 of the LMRA. Section 301 preempts state law claims "if resolution of the claim hinges on the court's interpretation of a CBA." Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 U.S. 399, 413, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 \(1988\). State law claims that are "independent" [*19] of the CBA or do not turn on any provision of the CBA, however, are not preempted See Lingle, 486 U.S. at 407; see also Livadas v. Bradshaw, 512 U.S. 107, 114 S. Ct. 2068, 129 L. Ed. 2d 93 \(1994\) ("the bare fact that a collective-bargaining agreement will be consulted in the course of state-law litigation plainly does not require the claim to be extinguished").

There is little doubt that the state tortious interference with contractual relationship claim is preempted by the NLRA. The Ninth Circuit "has generally found claims for interference with contractual relations and prospective economic advantage preempted by section 301." Milne Employees Ass'n v. Sun Carriers, 960 F.2d 1401, 1412 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 959, 113 S. Ct. 2927, 124 L. Ed. 2d 678 (1993). Such a finding is appropriate here. At its core, this claim requires the Court to determine whether the parties have breached the terms of the CBA.<sup>4</sup> The state tortious interference claim will not just require a consultation of the CBA, but will require this Court to determine what duties the parties owed to one another under the CBA and whether those duties were breached. Section 301 [*20] preemption applies to just such circumstances. See Milne, 960 F.2d 1401, 1412 \(9th Cir. 1992\) (preemption of tortious interference claim brought under California law<sup>5</sup> because the claim "will require interpretation of provisions in the collective bargaining agreements").<sup>6</sup>

[*21] D. Federal Claim for Tortious Interference with Contractual Relationships.

In its opposition to the Motion to Dismiss, Local 117 asserts that it brought tortious interference with contractual relations claims under both state and federal law. It argues that if the state law claim is preempted, then the federal law claim based on § 301\(a\) of the LMRA and federal common law would still survive. Section 301(a), 29 U.S.C. § 185\(a\), provides:

Suits for violation of contracts between an employer and a labor organization representing employees in an industry affecting commerce as defined in this chapter, or between any such labor organizations, may be brought in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, without respect to the amount in controversy or without regard to the citizenship of the parties.

<sup>4</sup> To prove tortious interference with contractual relationships, a plaintiff must show "(1) the existence of a valid contractual relationship or business expectancy; (2) that defendants had knowledge of that relationship; (3) an intentional interference inducing or causing a breach or termination of the relationship or expectancy; (4) that defendants interfered for an improper purpose or used improper means; and (5) resultant damage." Leingang v. Pierce County Med. Bureau, Inc., 131 Wn.2d 133, 157, 930 P.2d 288 \(1997\).

<sup>5</sup> California's tortious interference with contractual relations claim is substantively identical to Washington's. Compare, Leingang, 131 Wn.2d at 157 with Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 \(1990\).

<sup>6</sup> Because the tortious interference claim is preempted by § 301, this Court need not determine whether it would also be preempted under the Garmon preemption doctrine.

The Federal Circuits that have addressed the question have split on whether § 301 confers jurisdiction to hear claims against non-signatories to a collective bargaining agreement for tortious interference with that agreement. See Int'l Union, United Mine Workers of America v. Covenant Coal Corp., 977 F.2d 895, 897 \(1992\) [*22] (identifying split in Circuits).

Although International Union identified the Ninth Circuit as one of the Courts that allows for tortious interference claims under § 301, see id., the Ninth Circuit has, in fact, yet to explicitly rule on the issue. In Painting and Decorating Contractors Ass'n of Sacramento v. Painters and Decorators Joint Comm. of the East Bay Counties, 707 F.2d 1067, 1071 \(9th Cir. 1983\), the Ninth Circuit held that a non-signatory to a collective bargaining agreement is a proper party to a suit brought under § 301. In Painting and Decorating, however, the non-signatory defendant was inextricably intertwined with the collective bargaining agreement that plaintiff claimed had been breached. Indeed, the non-signatory defendant was an association created by the collective bargaining agreement and responsible for administering and enforcing that agreement. See id. at 1069. Painting and Decorating did not hold that § 301 permits a plaintiff to bring a tort claim against a non-signatory to a collective bargaining agreement. See Wynn v. National Broadcasting Co., 234 F. Supp. 2d 1067, 1120 \(C.D. Cal. 2002\) [*23] (discussing Painting and Decorating). Although the Ninth Circuit has indicated that a district court may fashion § 301 remedies in a manner consistent with traditional tort remedies, see Rozay's Transfer v. Local Freight Drivers, Local 208, 850 F.2d 1321 \(9th Cir. 1988\), it has not held that a party may bring a tort action under § 301.

In Wynn, the district court for the Central District of California, had an opportunity to address this issue. See 234 F. Supp. 2d at 1119-1121. After carefully analyzing the Ninth Circuit case law as well as precedent from other Circuits, the Wynn court held that § 301 did not allow for a tortious interference claim. See id. The court in Wynn cited with approval the Seventh Circuit's conclusion that "'section 301 creates a right of action only for breach of a collective bargaining agreement; it is not a tort statute.'" Id. at 1120 (citing Kimbro v. Pepsico, Inc., 215 F.3d 723, 726-27 \(7th Cir. 2000\)). This Court agrees with the holdings in Wynn and Kimbro. Although § 301 should be read broadly, it provides jurisdiction only for breach of contract [*24] claims. Absent a clear ruling from the Ninth Circuit holding otherwise, this Court will not extend § 301 to allow federal common law tortious interference claims.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, defendants' motions to dismiss or, in the alternative, to stay proceedings (Dkt. # s 20, 23, & 26) are GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. Defendants' motions to dismiss the § 301 claims premised on a breach of §§ 20.01 and 20.02 of the CBA are DENIED. Defendants' motions to dismiss the state law tortious interference with contractual relations and conspiracy claims are GRANTED. Defendants' motions to dismiss the tortious interference of contractual relations claims arising under federal common law are GRANTED. Finally, defendants' requests that this Court stay proceedings pending the conclusion of NLRB proceedings are DENIED.

DATED this 11th day of July, 2005

Robert S. Lasnik

United States District Judge

Schor v. Abbott Labs.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

July 12, 2005, Decided ; July 12, 2005, Filed

No. 05 C 1592

Reporter

378 F. Supp. 2d 850 *; 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14261 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,927

GARY SCHOR, a Florida resident, on behalf and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. ABBOTT LABORATORIES, an Illinois corporation, Defendant.

Disposition: The court granted the manufacturer's motion to dismiss.

Core Terms

---

patent, monopoly, boosted, Sherman Act, instant case, patentee, patent holder, anti trust law, collateral estoppel, leveraging, antitrust, motion to dismiss, antitrust liability, invention, monopoly power, patent law, manufactured, antitrust violation, anticompetitive, holder's, cases, drugs, relevant market, defense motion, final judgment, competitors, estoppel, alleges, license, denial of a motion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN1[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a court accepts the allegations of the complaint as true and views the facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless there is no doubt that the plaintiff cannot prove a set of facts that would entitle her to relief based on her claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

378 F. Supp. 2d 850, *850LÁ2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14261, **14261

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN2[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, bars the litigation in a subsequent action of an issue that has been decided in a prior action. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has held that the party invoking collateral estoppel has the burden of proving four elements: (1) that the issue sought to be precluded is identical to the issue raised in the prior action; (2) that the issue is actually litigated; (3) that determination of the issue is essential to the final judgment; and (4) that the party against whom estoppel is invoked is fully represented in the prior action. The party asserting estoppel has the burden of establishing which issues are actually determined in his favor in a prior action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Collateral Order Doctrine

HN3[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

A motion to dismiss is typically not a final judgment for the purposes of collateral estoppel, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has held that there are instances in which a motion to dismiss ruling may have preclusive effect.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN4[] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

To determine whether a decision is "final" for collateral estoppel purposes, courts are instructed to consider whether: (1) the decision is not "avowedly tentative"; (2) the hearing is adequate and the parties are fully heard; (3) the court has supported its decision with a reasoned opinion; and (4) the decision is appealable or has been appealed. The ultimate question, then, is whether the prior adjudication is determined to be sufficiently firm to be accorded conclusive effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

378 F. Supp. 2d 850, *850L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14261, **14261

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Patent Law > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

One consequence of the overlap between the patent and antitrust statutes and case law is that there is no easy delinement between a patent holder's permissible exercise of its rights under patent law, which grants a government-sanctioned monopoly and expressly allows the patentee to engage in exclusionary conduct, and anticompetitive behavior that violates antitrust law, which proscribes exclusionary conduct when coupled with monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Sherman Act, Claims

To establish a § 2 Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, violation based on monopoly leveraging, a plaintiff must prove that the monopolist: (1) possesses monopoly power in the primary relevant market; (2) gains or attempts to gain a monopoly power in a second relevant market; and (3) willfully acquires the monopoly power by some exclusionary conduct and not through efficiency and innovation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim for a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, violation, a plaintiff must allege conduct that hurts competition in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

378 F. Supp. 2d 850, *850LÁ2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14261, **14261

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

A patent holder does not violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, by refusing to license or sell a patented item in a second market, even when the patented product is necessary to the second market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

HN10 [] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

Absent illegal tying, fraud in the Patent and Trademark Office, or sham litigation, a patentee may enforce its statutory rights "free from liability under the antitrust law." A patent holder's right to exclude extends to any relevant market that involves the use, manufacture or sale of the invention.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN11 [] Civil Infringement Actions, Jurisdiction

The United States Supreme Court has significantly curtailed the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction over antitrust claims. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1338, the congressional grant of jurisdiction to the Federal Circuit, requires that a plaintiff's complaint "creates the cause of action."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

378 F. Supp. 2d 850, *850L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14261, **14261

HN12 [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A patentee's exercise of its statutorily-granted market power does not constitute a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, violation, even if such conduct affects a second market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A patent holder may, of course, violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, by excluding others from inventions beyond the scope of the patent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

HN14 [blue document icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The United States Supreme Court case law suggests that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, does not limit the patent holder's right to exclude others from the protected invention to a single market, but rather that the right is coextensive with the scope of the patent grant. Thus, patent law extends to protect a patent holder from antitrust liability in a second market that is encompassed by the patent claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > Indirect Infringement

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN15 [blue document icon] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > Indirect Infringement

378 F. Supp. 2d 850, *850L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14261, **14261

HN16 [blue document icon] Infringing Acts, Indirect Infringement

Although 35 U.S.C.S. § 271\(d\) does not explicitly refer to an antitrust violation, the United States Supreme Court has frequently used the language of whether a patent holder's actions have "expanded" or "enlarged" the patent grant to analyze allegations of antitrust violation, implying that the phrase in § 271\(d\) includes antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN17 [blue document icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

A court agrees with the Federal Circuit's suggestion that the statutory language of the Patent Act indicates that a patent holder is not liable for an antitrust violation for refusing sell or license a patented product within the scope of the patent grant, and that this immunity is not limited to a single market. Thus, if the product is encompassed within the patent claims, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, does not limit the patent holder's refusal to license or sell that item, or limit the patent holder's right to charge a higher price, in any market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN18 [blue document icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

If a product is encompassed within the patent claims, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, does not limit the patent holder's refusal to license or sell that item, or limit the patent holder's right to charge a higher price, in any market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

HN19 [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The United States Supreme Court has held that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is enacted to prevent restraint of commerce, but has explicitly recognized the patent grant as an exception.

Counsel: <sup>[**1]</sup> For Gary Schor a Florida resident, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Ben Barnow, Sharon Harris, Barnow & Associates, P.C., Chicago, IL.

For Abbott Laboratories an Illinois corporation, Defendant: George Carter Lombardi, David James Doyle, James F. Hurst, Samuel S Park, Winston & Strawn, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Judge Robert W. Gettleman.

Opinion by: Robert W. Gettleman

Opinion

---

[*851] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff Gary Schor filed a three-count class action complaint against defendant <sup>[*852]</sup> Abbott Laboratories ("Abbott"), alleging violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 2, and the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, 815 ILCS 505/1, et seq. Plaintiff also asserts a state law claim for unjust enrichment. Plaintiff alleges that defendant used its monopoly over its patented AIDS drug Norvir to unreasonably inflate the price of competitors' drug combinations that contain Norvir.

Subject matter jurisdiction of the Sherman Act claim is based on 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1337, and 15 U.S.C. § 15. Jurisdiction over the state law claims is based on supplemental <sup>[**2]</sup> jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367.

Defendant has moved to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim. For the reasons discussed below, the court grants defendant's motion to dismiss Count I, and declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims.

FACTS

1

Defendant Abbott, an Illinois corporation, is a pharmaceutical company engaged in the business of manufacturing, developing, and distributing anti-retroviral drugs worldwide, including throughout the United States. Plaintiff, a citizen of Florida, purchased one of defendant's AIDS drugs, Norvir, for his personal use.

Norvir was originally <sup>[**3]</sup> marketed as a stand-alone protease inhibitor ("PI"). PIs are anti-retroviral drugs that inhibit the AIDS virus from copying itself into new cells. Plaintiff alleges that Norvir cannot be interchanged with any other drug, and therefore constitutes a product market subject to antitrust laws. Through various patents, defendant controls 100% of the Norvir market, and there are no generic versions of Norvir. Norvir causes severe side effects when used alone, but when taken in conjunction with other PIs, it boosts the effectiveness of the other drugs. These "boosted PIs" also remain effective for longer periods of time. It is important for AIDS patients to have a variety of PIs available to them because patients may build a tolerance to certain drug combinations.

Defendant produces its own boosted PI, called Kaletra, which is boosted by Norvir. At least seven other boosted PIs, not manufactured by defendant, are boosted by Norvir: Agenerase, Crixivan, Fortovase, Invirase, Lexiva, Reyataz, and Viracept. Plaintiff alleges that PIs boosted by Norvir are not interchangeable with any other drugs and are a market subject to antitrust laws. Plaintiff asserts that defendant effectively controls <sup>[**4]</sup> this market for "all of the anti-retroviral drugs dependent on a boost from Norvir in the United States," and that the United States is a proper geographical market for antitrust purposes.

---

<sup>1</sup> For the purposes of a motion to dismiss, the court accepts all well-pleaded allegations as true and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Travel All Over the World, Inc. v. Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, 73 F.3d 1423, 1428 (7th Cir. 1996).

Kaletra, defendant's boosted PI, began to lose its market share in 2003. In December 2003, defendant raised the price of Norvir by more than 400%. Defendant did not, however, pass this price increase on to Kaletra. As a result, Kaletra costs substantially less than other boosted PIs. Plaintiff asserts that defendant's "anticompetitive pricing scheme is designed to exclude competition for Kaletra, even though Kaletra might not be the most effective PI for a particular patient." Prior to the increase, it was projected that defendant would receive over $ 2 billion in revenues [*853] for Norvir. According to plaintiff, defendant "had no legitimate justification for the exorbitant price increase of Norvir other than to strangle the market to the detriment of AIDS victims."

DISCUSSION

HN1 In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court accepts the allegations of the complaint as true and views the facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Travel All Over the World, 73 F.3d at 1428. [**5] A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless there is no doubt that the plaintiff cannot prove a set of facts that would entitle her to relief based on her claim. Pressalite Corp. v. Matsushita Electric Corp. of America, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5600, 2003 WL 1811530, at \*2 \(N.D. Ill. Apr. 4, 2003\).

I. Collateral estoppel

Plaintiff argues in his response to the motion to dismiss that defendant is collaterally estopped from raising its arguments in favor of its motion to dismiss by two earlier decisions issued by Judge Wilken of the Northern District of California, Doe v. Abbott Laboratories, C 04-1511 CW, unpub. order \(N.D. Cal. Oct. 21, 2004\), and Service Employees International Union Health and Welfare Fund v. Abbott Laboratories, 2005 WL 528323 \(N.D. Cal. Mar. 2, 2005\). Like the instant case, Doe and Service Employees are class actions against defendant brought by indirect consumers of Norvir. The Doe and Service Employees plaintiffs allege violations of the Sherman Act, as well as violations of the California Business and Professions Code and state law unjust enrichment claims. Judge Wilken denied the defendant's motions [**6] to dismiss in both cases, which remain pending.

In the instant case, defendant argues that collateral estoppel does not apply because a ruling on a motion to dismiss is not a "final judgment," and thus does not trigger collateral estoppel.<sup>2</sup> HN2 Collateral estoppel, or issue preclusion, bars the litigation in a subsequent action of an issue that has been decided in a prior action. Meyer v. Rigdon, 36 F.3d 1375, 1378 n. 1 \(7th Cir. 1994\). The Seventh Circuit has held that the party invoking collateral estoppel has the burden of proving four elements: (1) that the issue sought to be precluded is identical to the issue raised in the prior action; (2) that the issue was actually litigated; (3) that determination of the issue was essential to the final judgment; and (4) that the party against whom estoppel is invoked was fully represented in the prior action. Id. The party asserting estoppel has the burden of establishing which issues were actually determined in his favor in a prior action. Gilldorn Savings Ass'n. v. Commerce Savings Ass'n., 804 F.2d 390, 393 \(7th Cir. 1986\).

---

<sup>2</sup> Defendant also argues that collateral estoppel does not apply because the California court "did not address 'identical' issues" to those presented in the instant case. In its joinder motion filed with the Judicial Panel on Multi-District Litigation ("MDL"), however, defendant asserts that the instant case and Doe and Service Employees "are based on identical facts and allege identical legal theories." Judicial estoppel prevents a party that has taken one position in litigating a particular set of facts from later reversing its position when it is to its advantage to do so, if the party to be estopped has convinced the court to adopt its position. Levinson v. United States, 969 F.2d 260, 264 \(7th Cir. 1992\). Although at this point judicial estoppel does not strictly apply because the MDL has not ruled on the joinder and transfer motion, the court notes that defendant's positions regarding identical facts appear clearly inconsistent. Id.

[**7] Although defendant is correct that a ruling denying HN3 a motion to dismiss is typically not a final judgment for the purposes of collateral estoppel, the Seventh Circuit has [\[\*854\]](#) held that there are instances in which a motion to dismiss ruling may have preclusive effect. For example, the Gilldorn court held that a district court's denial of a motion to dismiss was sufficiently final for purposes of collateral estoppel. Id. In Gilldorn, an Illinois district court judge granted the plaintiff's motion to enjoin a pending action brought by the defendant in Texas, based on the plaintiff's argument that the Texas action should have been brought as a compulsory counterclaim in the Illinois action. The plaintiff, however, had already moved for dismissal in the Texas action, and had made the compulsory counterclaim argument, along with others, unsuccessfully. Id. at 391. The Seventh Circuit held that the Illinois district court should have given collateral estoppel effect to the Texas district court's denial of the plaintiff's dismissal motion. Id. at 395.

In support of its holding that a denial of a motion to dismiss may, in some cases, operate as collateral estoppel, the [\[\*8\]](#) Gilldorn court cited the Seventh Circuit's earlier holding in Miller Brewing Co. v. Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co., 605 F.2d 990 \(7th Cir. 1979\), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1102, 62 L. Ed. 2d 787, 100 S. Ct. 1067 (1980). HN4 To determine whether a decision is "final" for collateral estoppel purposes, the Miller court instructed courts to consider whether: (1) the decision was not "avowedly tentative"; (2) the hearing was adequate and the parties were fully heard; (3) the court supported its decision with a reasoned opinion; and (4) the decision was appealable or had been appealed. 605 F.2d at 996. The ultimate question, then, is whether the "'prior adjudication...is determined to be sufficiently firm to be accorded conclusive effect.'" Id. (quoting Restatement \(Second\) of Judgments § 41 comment G (Tent. Draft No. 1 1973)); see also In re Bridgestone/Firestone Inc., 333 F.3d 763, 767 \(7th Cir. 2003\) ("For the purposes of issue preclusion (as distinguished from merger and bar), 'final judgement' includes any prior adjudication of an issue in another action that is determined to be sufficiently firm to be accorded conclusive [\[\*9\]](#) effect.").

Judge Wilken's findings regarding the California plaintiffs' Sherman Act claims do not have collateral estoppel effect in the instant case.<sup>3</sup> First, most of the "holdings" listed by plaintiff in its brief are not in fact holdings. The plaintiffs in Doe and Service Employees, like plaintiff in the instant case, rely on a "monopoly leveraging theory" of antitrust liability. Although the Ninth Circuit applied this theory to a patentee in Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak, Co., 125 F.3d 1195 \(9th Cir. 1997\), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1094, 140 L. Ed. 2d 792, 118 S. Ct. 1560 (1998), there is a circuit split on this question, as discussed below, and Ninth Circuit case law is not binding on this court. More damaging to plaintiff's collateral estoppel argument, Judge Wilken did not hold that defendant was liable under this theory, but only that the plaintiffs in those cases had alleged sufficient facts to survive the motions to dismiss. Doe at 6; Service Employees, 2005 WL 528323, at \*3. Similarly, the California court did not issue a final judgment or appealable ruling on the question of defendant's monopoly power in the boosted PI market, [\[\*10\]](#) but held only that under Ninth Circuit law the plaintiffs had sufficiently pled all of the essential elements of their Sherman Act claims. Id. Such non-final holdings cannot collaterally estop defendant from advancing similar arguments here.

[\[\*855\]](#) Second, although Judge Wilken held that the plaintiffs in Doe and Service Employees had standing as indirect consumers of Norvir to pursue their Sherman Act claims, the Seventh Circuit has held that the "denial of a motion to dismiss for lack of standing does not qualify as a final judgment." Triad Assocs., Inc. v. Robinson, 10 F.3d 492, 496 n. 2 \(7th Cir. 1993\) (citing Crymes v. DeKalb County, Ga., 923 F.2d 1482, 1484-1485 \(11th Cir. 1991\); see also Carter v. Signode Industries, Inc., 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13456, 1988 WL 130619, at \*1 \(N.D. Ill. Dec. 1, 1988\) [\[\*11\]](#) (noting that denial of motion to dismiss for lack of standing, absent certification of interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\), is "otherwise unappealable"). Because the denial of the motions to dismiss Doe and Service Employees for lack of standing were not final orders and thus not appealable, they do not have collateral estoppel effect on defendant's arguments in support of its motion to dismiss in the instant case.

II. Sherman Act

---

<sup>3</sup> Although the court does not reach plaintiff's state law claims, it is clear that Judge Wilken's rulings on the California plaintiffs' state law claims, brought under California law, do not have a collateral estoppel effect on a court applying Illinois law.

Count I of plaintiff's complaint alleges that defendant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by abusing its monopoly power in the U.S. market for Norvir, its patented product, to unfairly injure competition in the market for PIs boosted by Norvir.<sup>4</sup> Defendant's own boosted PI, Kaletra, competes in this second market with approximately seven other PIs boosted by Norvir. Defendant argues that Count I should be dismissed because its patents for Norvir, which cover its use as a stand-alone drug and as a booster when combined with other PIs, preclude antitrust liability. Defendant also argues that plaintiff fails to sufficiently allege defendant's market power in the boosted PI market, [\[\*\*12\]](#) and that plaintiff lacks standing to obtain relief under the Sherman Act because he is an indirect consumer and has failed to allege that he suffered any antitrust injuries.<sup>5</sup>

The instant case reveals the tension between antitrust laws, which discourage monopolies, and patent laws, which protect monopolies. See Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1217 \(9th Cir. 1997\) ("At the border of intellectual property monopolies and antitrust [\[\*\*13\]](#) markets lies a field of dissonance yet to be harmonized by statute or the Supreme Court."); Sheet Metal Duct, Inc. v. Lindab, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9928, 2000 WL 987865, at \*2 \(E.D. Pa. July 18, 2000\) ("patent and antitrust laws exist in tension, as the patent laws protect monopoly power, while antitrust laws seek to restrain it"); see also Patrick H. Moran, Comment, The Federal and Ninth Circuits Square Off: Refusals to Deal - the Precarious Intersection Between Antitrust and Patent Law, 87 MARQ. L. REV. 387, 387 \(2003\) ("Although both the patent and antitrust laws were designed to stimulate the economy and benefit consumers, a fundamental tension between the two has always existed."). HN6↑ One consequence of the overlap between the patent and antitrust statutes and case law is that there is no easy delinement between a patent holder's permissible exercise of its rights under patent law, which grants a government-sanctioned monopoly and expressly allows the patentee to engage in exclusionary conduct, and anticompetitive behavior that [\[\*856\]](#) violates antitrust law, which proscribes exclusionary conduct when coupled with monopoly power.

Although not a model of clarity in antitrust [\[\*\*14\]](#) pleading, plaintiff's complaint alleges two separate markets: the Norvir market and the market of PIs boosted by Norvir. Plaintiff clarifies in his response to the motion to dismiss that he does not dispute the validity of the Norvir patents or defendant's lawful monopoly in the Norvir market. Instead, he is challenging defendant's use of its monopoly of the Norvir market to attain a monopoly in the boosted PI market. Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim is premised on an extension of the monopoly leveraging theory to patent holders, under which antitrust liability may be based on the improper use of a monopoly in one market to strengthen or create a monopoly in another market. Virgin Atlantic Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 272 \(2nd Cir. 2001\); Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc, 948 F.2d 536, 547 \(9th Cir. 1991\). HN7↑ To establish a § 2 Sherman Act violation based on monopoly leveraging, a plaintiff must prove that the monopolist: (1) possesses monopoly power in the primary relevant market; (2) gained or attempted to gain a monopoly power in a second relevant market; and (3) willfully acquired the monopoly power by some exclusionary [\[\*\*15\]](#) conduct and not through efficiency and innovation." Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 547.

The Supreme Court emphasized in Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 415 n. 4, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823, 124 S. Ct. 872 \(2004\), that a monopoly leveraging claim "presupposes anticompetitive conduct." It is well established that not all conduct that hurts competitors is anticompetitive or a violation of the antitrust laws. See, e.g., Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\) ("The [Sherman Act] directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself."); Endsley v. City of Chicago, 230 F.3d 276, 283 \(7th Cir. 2000\) ("Under § 2, intent to obtain a monopoly is unlawful only where an entity seeks to maintain or achieve monopoly power by anticompetitive means."); Intergraph Corp. v. Intel Corp, 195 F.3d 1346, 1363 \(Fed. Cir. 1999\) ("Precedent makes clear that a customer who is dependent on a manufacturer's supply of a component cannot on that ground force the producer to provide it; there must also be an anticompetitive [**16] aspect invoking the Sherman Act [to warrant imposition of antitrust liability."]. HN8↑ To state a claim for a Sherman Act violation, a plaintiff must allege conduct that hurts competition in the relevant market. Endsley, 230 F.3d at 284 (affirming dismissal of plaintiff's antitrust claim because plaintiff failed to identify "any facts which point to the [defendant's] alleged anti-competitive use of its power to control the price").

<sup>4</sup> HN5↑ Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, prohibits monopolization or attempts to monopolize: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony . . . ."

<sup>5</sup> In plaintiff's response to the motion to dismiss, he withdraws his claims for damages under Count I of his complaint, and now seeks only injunctive relief.

There is sparse case law regarding if or how the monopoly leveraging theory applies to conduct by a patentee, and what little case law there is does not concern a price increase by a patent holder. In the instant case, both parties cite to opinions addressing whether a patentee's refusal to deal -- to license or sell its patented product -- is a violation of antitrust law. The court agrees with the parties' implicit assumption that it is appropriate to analogize refusal to deal cases with the price increase at issue here because if a patentee has the right to refuse to sell its product altogether, it has the right to raise the price. See Zenith Laboratories, Inc. v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 530 F.2d 508, 513 n. 9 \(3rd Cir. 1976\) [**17] ("a patentee is privileged to withhold [its invention] from sale at any [*857] price, or to offer it for sale at any price he wishes, low or high") (citing 6A CORBIN, CONTRACTS § 1410 at 246 (1962)). Applying the refusal to deal case law to the instant case, however, is no easy task. There is no Supreme Court precedent, and a split exists between the Ninth and Federal Circuits regarding whether the monopoly leveraging theory may be applied to patent holders. Thus, this is a case of first impression in the Seventh Circuit whether a patent holder may be liable under the monopoly leveraging theory, and whether the Sherman Act limits a patentee's right to exclude others from more than one relevant market.

The Ninth Circuit was the first court to examine the antitrust liability of a patent holder under the monopoly leveraging theory. Sharon Brawner McCullen, Comment, The Federal Circuit and Ninth Circuit Face-Off: Does A Patent Holder Violate the Sherman Act By Unilaterally Excluding Others From A Patented Invention In More Than One Relevant Market?, 74 TEMP. L. REV. 469, 500 \(2001\). In Image Technical Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195 \(9th 1997\), [**18] cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1094, 140 L. Ed. 2d 792, 118 S. Ct. 1560 (1998) ("Kodak II"), the court held that patent rights do not immunize a patent holder to antitrust violations based on monopoly leveraging, and that a patent holder may be liable under the monopoly leveraging theory for using its monopoly over a patented product to affect a secondary market. The plaintiffs in Kodak II were a group of independent service organizations (ISOs) who alleged Sherman Act violations after Kodak refused to sell replacement parts, many of which were patented, to the ISOs, who serviced and repaired Kodak photocopier equipment.

In Kodak II the Ninth Circuit extended earlier monopoly leveraging precedent to antitrust cases involving patented products, and limited a patent holder's right to exclude others to a single market. Id. at 1217-18. Kodak II held that Kodak violated § 2 of the Sherman Act when it refused to sell its patented parts for use by independent service organization in the secondary service market. In support of its finding, the Kodak II court relied in part on a footnote in the Supreme Court's opinion affirming the Ninth Circuit's earlier denial of summary judgment. [**19] Id. at 1215-16. Addressing the plaintiffs' § 2 monopolization claim, the Court rejected the argument that a manufacturer competing in the secondary service market enjoys per se immunity to antitrust laws. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 479 n. 29, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\) ("Kodak I"). The Court noted that it "has held many times that power gained through some natural and legal advantage such as a patent, copyright, or business acumen can give rise to liability if 'a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next.'" Id.

Three years later, and faced with a very similar factual situation to Kodak II, the Federal Circuit expressly rejected the Ninth Circuit's reasoning, and held that HN9↑ a patent holder does not violate the Sherman Act by refusing to license or sell a patented item in a second market, even when the patented product is necessary to the second market. In re Independent Service Organizations Antitrust Litigation CSU, L.L.C., v. Xerox, 203 F.3d 1322 \(Fed. Cir. 2000\), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 1143, 148 L. Ed. 2d 954, 121 S. Ct. 1077 (2001) ("Xerox"). The Xerox plaintiffs, [**20] ISO competitors in the photocopier service market, sued Xerox over its refusal to sell its patented replacement parts and other copyrighted materials to ISOs unless they were also end-users of Xerox copiers. Id. at 1324. Affirming the district court's grant of summary [*858] judgment to the defendant, the Federal Circuit held that HN10↑ absent "illegal tying, fraud in the Patent and Trademark Office, or sham litigation," a patentee may enforce its statutory rights "free from liability under the antitrust law." Id. at 1327-28. Contrary to the Ninth Circuit, the Federal Circuit also held that a patent holder's right to exclude extends to any relevant market that involves the use, manufacture or sale of the invention. Id. at 1325-26.

Defendant in the instant case incorrectly argues that Xerox is binding precedent because the instant case involves patents, and therefore the law of the Federal Circuit, rather than Seventh or Ninth Circuit law, controls. See In re Spalding Sports Worldwide, Inc., 203 F.3d 800, 803 (Fed. Cir. 2000) (Federal Circuit law applies to issues of substantive patent law). HN11[<sup>1</sup>] The Supreme Court, however, has significantly [**21] curtailed the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction over antitrust claims, which had expanded during the 1990s. In Holmes Group, Inc. v. Vornado Air Circulation Systems, Inc., 535 U.S. 826, 829-830, 153 L. Ed. 2d 13, 122 S. Ct. 1889 (2002), the Court held that 28 U.S.C. § 1338, the congressional grant of jurisdiction to the Federal Circuit, requires that the plaintiff's complaint "creates the cause of action." In the instant case, defendant cites Unitherm Food Systems, Inc. v. Swift-Eckrich, Inc., 375 F.3d 1341, 1355 (Fed. Cir. 2004), in support of its argument that Federal Circuit precedent controls, but Unitherm is inapposite. The plaintiffs in Unitherm sought a declaration of patent invalidity, in addition to asserting monopolization and tortious interference claims, Id. In contrast, plaintiff in the instant case has disavowed any patent claims, and patent law does not create the cause of action. Federal Circuit law may nevertheless control the instant case, however, because, as discussed below, the scope of the patent is an issue.

Regardless of which circuit's law must control, for the reasons discussed below the court finds the Xerox court's reasoning [**22] persuasive, and that the holding represents a sounder approach to a patentee's antitrust liability in a second market than the Ninth Circuit's opinion in Kodak II. The court agrees with the Federal Circuit that subject to narrow limitations, not at issue in the instant case, HN12[<sup>1</sup>] a patentee's exercise of its statutorily-granted market power does not constitute a Sherman Act violation, even if such conduct affects a second market. The Federal Circuit's decision is in keeping with the case law and the statutory language suggesting that a court must consider the scope of the patent grant when determining whether an antitrust violation has occurred, and properly holds that a patentee is not liable for conduct within the scope of its valid patent grant.

HN13[<sup>1</sup>] A patent holder may, of course, violate the Sherman Act by excluding others from inventions beyond the scope of the patent. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 457-58, 84 L. Ed. 852, 60 S. Ct. 618, 1940 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 758 (1940). For example, the Supreme Court has held that a patent holder exceeded the scope of its patent by conditioning a license agreement on the licensee's use of the protected invention with products not included in the patent grant, Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U.S. 502, 512, 61 L. Ed. 871, 37 S. Ct. 416, 1917 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 391 (1917). [**23] on royalty payments for products not within the scope of the patented invention, Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 135-36, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969), or on the purchase, use or sale of other products, Ethyl Gasoline, 309 U.S. at 447-48. As these cases indicate, the Supreme Court carefully distinguishes between the unlawful enlargement of a patent and a patentee's [*859] lawful exercise of the right to sell others the invention within the scope of the patent. See, e.g., Ethyl Gasoline, 309 U.S. at 457-58 ("The picture here revealed is not that of a patentee exercising its right to refuse to sell or to permit his licensee to sell the patented product."). HN14[<sup>1</sup>] The Supreme Court case law suggests that the Sherman Act does not limit the patent holder's right to exclude others from the protected invention to a single market, but rather that the right is coextensive with the scope of the patent grant. Thus, patent law extends to protect a patent holder from antitrust liability in a second market that is encompassed by the patent claims.

The court agrees with the Xerox court that footnote 29 in the Supreme Court's decision in Kodak I, [**24] which suggests that a patentee's expansion into a second market may be an antitrust violation, is largely inapposite to the facts of Kodak II and Xerox, and was incorrectly applied by the Ninth Circuit in Kodak II. As the Federal Circuit noted, Kodak I was a tying case when it came before the Supreme Court, and no patents had been asserted in defense of the antitrust claims against Kodak. Xerox, 203 F.3d at 1327. "Properly viewed within the framework of a tying case, the footnote can be interpreted as restating the undisputed premise that the patent holder cannot use his statutory right to refuse to sell patented parts to gain a monopoly in a market beyond the scope of the patent. Id. (emphasis in original). The Federal Circuit recognized that a patent grant may encompass multiple markets, and held that Xerox's actions fell within the statutory patent grant. Id. at 1327.

The Federal Circuit cited section 271\(d\) of the Patent Act, which immunizes a patent holder against certain liabilities, in support of its expansion of a patentee's rights into a second market. Xerox, 203 F.3d at 1326. HN15<sup>15</sup> Section 271\(d\) states [\[\*\*25\]](#) that, "No patent owner otherwise entitled to relief. . .shall be denied relief or deemed guilty of misuse or illegal extension of the patent right by reason of his having...(4) refused to license or use any rights to the patent..." 35 U.S.C. § 271\(d\) (emphasis added). HN16<sup>16</sup> Although § 271\(d\) does not explicitly refer to an antitrust violation, the Supreme Court has frequently used the language of whether a patent holder's actions have "expanded" or "enlarged" the patent grant to analyze allegations of antitrust violation, implying that the phrase in § 271\(d\) includes antitrust violations. See McCullen, 74 TEMP. L. REV. 469, 494 (collecting cases). HN17<sup>17</sup> The court agrees with the Federal Circuit's suggestion that the statutory language of the Patent Act indicates that a patent holder is not liable for an antitrust violation for refusing sell or license a patented product within the scope of the patent grant, and that this immunity is not limited to a single market. Thus, HN18<sup>18</sup> if the product is encompassed within the patent claims, the Sherman Act does not limit the patent holder's refusal to license or sell that item, or limit the patent holder's right to [\[\*\*26\]](#) charge a higher price, in any market.

Lastly, the instant case is factually distinguishable from Kodak II and Xerox in aspects that support defendant's argument that it should not be subject to antitrust liability for raising the price of Norvir. First, defendant's patents cover Norvir's use in the stand-alone market as well as the boosted PI market. Plaintiff does not challenge defendant's assertion that its patents "explicitly cover the use of Norvir as a 'booster' in combination with another PIs." In Xerox and Kodak II, in contrast, the second market at issue was a service and repair market, which was apparently not covered by the defendants' patent grants. Here, the alleged second market is for compound products containing the [\[\*860\]](#) first market's product, and plaintiff does not argue that defendant's use of Norvir in Kaletra or its sale of Norvir as a booster for competitors' boosted PIs exceeds the patent grant. Unlike Xerox and Kodak II, defendant's Norvir patents apply in both markets to cover Norvir's use in conjunction with drugs manufactured and sold by third parties.

Second, in Xerox the Federal Circuit determined that the defendant's refusal to [\[\*\*27\]](#) deal was within the scope of its patent claims and thus permissible. 203 F.3d at 1327-28. In the instant case, defendant has taken a less drastic measure than the defendants in Kodak II and Xerox, because it has not instituted a unilateral refusal to deal, which would prevent customers or a group of customers from obtaining its product. Plaintiff does not allege that Norvir or any of the boosted PIs that depend on Norvir are unavailable, but only that they are significantly more expensive. The court is not unsympathetic to plaintiff's seemingly legitimate concerns that the drastic price increase will prevent him and other AIDS patients from receiving the best drug treatments for their disease, but antitrust laws do not impose liability for a business entity's failure to act morally or in the public interest.

To accept plaintiff's argument would seem to impose antitrust liability on any manufacturer who holds patents for a product when used alone as well as for its use as a component in products manufactured by the patentee and competitors, and raises the price it charges competitors for its patented component. Such a result runs contrary to the aims of the antitrust [\[\*\*28\]](#) and patent laws to encourage innovation and competition, and is not supported by the case law. HN19<sup>19</sup> The Supreme Court has held that the Sherman Act was enacted to prevent restraint of commerce, but has explicitly recognized the patent grant as an exception. United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U.S. 287, 309, 92 L. Ed. 701, 68 S. Ct. 550 \(1948\). The court is not persuaded by plaintiff's arguments in the instant case, or by the Ninth Circuit's reasoning in Kodak II, that a patentee's right to exclude others, including by raising prices, is limited to the primary market only, particularly when, as here, it is not disputed that the use of the patented invention in second market is within the scope of the patent claims.

For the reasons stated above, defendant may not be held liable for a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act for increasing the price of its patented product, even though that price increase may affect competition in a second market. Accordingly, the court grants defendant's motion to dismiss Count I with prejudice.

Because the court grants defendant's motion to dismiss Count I, it need not reach defendant's alternative arguments that plaintiff failed to allege market power or that [\[\*\*29\]](#) plaintiff lacks standing as an indirect consumer to pursue injunctive relief. In addition, the court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims. Accordingly, the court grants defendant's motion to dismiss Counts II and III without prejudice.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court grants defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint. Count I is dismissed with prejudice. Counts II and III are dismissed without prejudice.

ENTER: July 12, 2005

Robert W. Gettleman

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Meijer, Inc. v. 3M

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

July 13, 2005, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO. 04-5871

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13995 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,882

MEIJER, INC., et al. On Behalf of Itself and Others Similarly Situated v. 3M (MINNESOTA MINING AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY)

Subsequent History: Settled by, Motion granted by Meijer, Inc. v. 3M, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56744 \(E.D. Pa., Aug. 14, 2006\)

Core Terms

---

damages, antitrust, statute of limitations, purchaser, tape, four year, overcharges, alleges, cause of action, accrue, prices, monopoly power, monopolist, argues, limitations period, speculative, transparent, motion to dismiss, antitrust action, anticompetitive, continuing violation, lawsuit, rebates, levels, injurious act, invisible

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

HN1 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When determining a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), the trial court may look only to the facts alleged in the complaint and its attachments. The trial court must accept as true all well pleaded allegations in the complaint and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion will be granted when the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts, consistent with the complaint, which would entitle him or her to relief. Documents integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint and related matters of public record may be considered on a motion to dismiss.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2 [] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

The statute of limitations is an affirmative defense, and the burden of establishing its applicability to a particular claim rests with the defendant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When considering a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) on statute of limitations grounds, courts must determine whether the time alleged in the statement of a claim shows that the cause of action has not been brought within the statute of limitations. The defendant bears a heavy burden in seeking to establish that the challenged claims are barred as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN4 Clayton Act, Claims

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b, which governs private antitrust actions, provides that any action to enforce any cause of action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, § 15a, or § 15c shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. Generally, a cause of action accrues, and the statute begins to run, when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN5 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

The four-year statute of limitations under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b, does not bar recovery for later private antitrust actions if the defendant's conduct constituted a continuing violation of the Sherman Act and inflicted continuing and accumulating harm. In such situations, even if the overt act which demonstrates the antitrust violation occurs outside the statute of limitations period, an injurious act within the limitations period may serve as the basis for a timely antitrust suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN6 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

While it should seem that high prices following the creation of a monopoly are mere inertial consequences one naturally expects to flow from such acts, a purchaser suing a monopolist for overcharges paid within the previous four years may satisfy the conduct prerequisite to recovery by pointing to anticompetitive actions taken before the limitations period. This principle is based on the recognition that although the business of a monopolist may be injured at the time the anticompetitive conduct occurs, a purchaser, by contrast, is not harmed until the monopolist actually exercises its illicit power to extract an excessive price. The case of predatory pricing illustrates the point clearly. As soon as the dominant firm commences such a policy, other producers, who may be driven out of the market, are injured. But, clearly, purchasers are not, for they receive the temporary boon of artificially low prices. It is only when the monopolist, having devoured its smaller rivals, enjoys the spoils of its conquest by boosting its price to excessive levels that a purchaser feels the adverse impact of the violation. And if the monopolist never consummates its scheme by taking this final step, the purchaser has no cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Purchasers

In purchaser antitrust actions, the requisite injurious act within the limitations period can include being overcharged as the result of an unlawful act which took place outside the limitations period but continues to allow the defendant to maintain market control.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN8 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

The general rule of accrual in antitrust actions provides that if a plaintiff feels the adverse impact of an antitrust violation on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues to him to recover all damages incurred by that date and all provable damages that will flow in the future. The mere fact that damages may continue to accrue in the future, as opposed to at the time the acts are committed, does not prevent the cause of action from accruing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

In antitrust actions as in others, even if injury and a cause of action have accrued as of a certain date, future damages that might arise from the conduct sued on are unrecoverable if the fact of their accrual is speculative or their amount and nature unprovable. In these instances, antitrust causes of action for future damages will accrue only on the date the damages are suffered; thereafter the plaintiff may sue to recover them at any time within four years from the date they were inflicted. In purchaser antitrust actions, damages from future overcharges necessarily fall into the speculative damages exception to the four year statute of limitations. At the time a monopolist commits anticompetitive conduct it is entirely speculative how much damage that action will cause its purchasers in the future. Indeed, some of the buyers who will later feel the brunt of the violation may not even be in existence at the time. Not until the monopolist actually sets an inflated price and its customers determine the amount of their purchases can a reasonable estimate be made. The purchaser's cause of action, therefore, accrues only on the date damages are suffered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN10 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

To state a claim for monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a plaintiff must allege (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. The right to maintain a private cause of action for damages arising under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 flows from § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\), which provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the Accordingly, plaintiffs bringing a private cause of action under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

**HN11** [+] Private Actions, Remedies

The existence of antitrust injury is not typically resolved through motions to dismiss. Moreover, there are no special pleading requirements for an antitrust claim. Rather, notice pleading is all that is required for a valid antitrust complaint. Courts, therefore, must accept as true the factual allegations in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn from them. Courts are not, however, required to accept as true unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences.

Counsel: [*1] For MEIJER, INC., MEIJER DISTRIBUTION, INC., ON BEHALF OF THEMSELVES AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED, Plaintiffs: BRENT W. LANDAU, DANIEL A. SMALL, COHEN, MILSTEIN, HAUSFELD & TOOL, PLLC, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID P. GERMAINE, JOSEPH M. VANEK, THOMAS A. VICKERS, DAAR & VANEK PC, CHICAGO, IL; IRA NEIL RICHARDS, KATHRYN C. HARR, TRUJILLO RODRIQUEZ & RICHARDS, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For 3M COMPANY, formerly known as MINNESOTA MINING AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Defendant: BRENT N. RUSHFORTH, KATHERINE E. WOOD, KIT A. PIERSON, PAUL ALEXANDER, HELLER EHRLMAN LLP, WASHINGTON, DC; DAVID W. ENGSTROM, ELEANOR ILLOWAY, JOHN G. HARKINS, JR., HARKINS CUNNINGHAM, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Judges: John R. Padova, J.

Opinion by: John R. Padova

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM

Padova, J.

Plaintiffs, Meijer, Inc. and Meijer Distribution, Inc. (collectively "Meijer"), have brought this antitrust action against Defendant 3M for damages arising out of 3M's anticompetitive conduct during the time period from October 2, 1998, through the present. Presently before the Court is 3M's Motion to Dismiss the Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\). For the reasons that [*2] follow, this Motion is denied.

I. BACKGROUND

The conduct of 3M which forms the basis of this class action lawsuit was the subject of a prior lawsuit in this Court, LePage's, Inc. v. 3M, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18501, Civ. A. No. 97-3983 \(E.D. Pa.\). In that suit, LePage's, Inc., a competing supplier of transparent tape, sued 3M alleging, inter alia, unlawful maintenance of monopoly power in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. After a nine-week trial, the jury found in favor of LePage's on its unlawful maintenance of monopoly power claim. The jury awarded damages in the amount of $ 22,828,899.00, which were subsequently trebled to $ 68,486,697.00. See LePage's, Inc. v. 3M, Civ. A. No. 97-3983, 2000 WL 280350 \(E.D. Pa. Mar. 14, 2000\). 3M filed a Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law, which this Court denied on March 14, 2000. See id. 3M thereafter appealed this Court's denial of its Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ("Third Circuit"). A Third Circuit panel initially reversed this Court's Order upholding the jury's verdict and directed the Court to enter judgment for 3M on LePage's [*3] 'unlawful maintenance of monopoly power claim. LePage's, Inc. v. 3M, 277 F.3d 365 \(3d Cir. 2002\) ("LePage's I"). Upon rehearing en banc, the Third Circuit vacated the panel decision and reinstated the original jury verdict against 3M. LePage's, Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141 \(3d Cir. 2003\) ("LePage's II"), cert. denied 542 U.S. 953, 124 S. Ct. 2932, 159 L. Ed. 2d 835 (2004).

Thereafter, Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store, Inc. brought a class action lawsuit against 3M on the basis of the conduct litigated in LePage's. Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, Civ. A. No. 02-7676 \(E.D. Pa.\). Bradburn, who originally had sought to represent a class which included Meijer, was ultimately granted class certification on a modified class that excluded purchasers of private label tape, such as Meijer. Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store v. 3M, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16193, Civ. A. No. 02-7676, 2004 WL 1842987 \(E.D. Pa. Aug. 18, 2004\). Having been excluded from the class in Bradburn, Meijer first attempted to intervene in that lawsuit as an additional class representative. In denying Meijer's motion to intervene, the Court noted that "there is nothing which would prevent Meijer [*4] from filing its own individual or class action lawsuit against [3M] and presenting its claims in that forum." Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25246, Civ. A. No. 02-7676, 2004 WL 2900810, at \*6 \(E.D. Pa. Dec. 10, 2004\). On December 16, 2004, Meijer filed the instant Complaint.

Meijer brings this action on behalf of itself and other members of a proposed class, which includes "all persons and entities who purchased invisible or transparent tape directly from 3M . . . at any time during the period from October 2, 1998 to the present . . ." (Compl. P 18.) The Complaint sets forth one count of monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. The Complaint alleges that 3M unlawfully maintained monopoly power in the transparent tape market through its bundled rebate programs<sup>1</sup> and through exclusive dealing arrangements with various retailers. (Id. P 27.) The Complaint further alleges that "3M has used its unlawful monopoly power . . . to harm Plaintiffs and the other Class members in their business or property by increasing, maintaining, or stabilizing the prices they paid for invisible and transparent tape above competitive levels." (Id. P 34.) [*5] The damages period in this case runs from October 2, 1998, to the present. (Id. P 18.) In the instant Motion, 3M moves to dismiss the Complaint in its entirety pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1 When determining a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the court may look only to the facts alleged in the complaint and its attachments. Jordan v. Fox, Rothschild, O'Brien & Frankel, 20 F.3d 1250, 1261 \(3d Cir. 1994\). The court must accept as true all well pleaded allegations in the complaint and view them in the light most favorable to the Plaintiff. Angelastro v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 764 F.2d 939, 944 \(3d Cir. 1985\). [*6] A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion will be granted when a Plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts, consistent with the complaint, which would entitle him or her to relief. Ransom v. Marrazzo, 848 F.2d 398, 401 (3d Cir. 1988). Documents "integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint" and related matters of public record may be considered on a motion to dismiss. In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 (3d Cir. 1997).

---

<sup>1</sup> As described at length in the LePage's litigation, 3M's bundled rebate programs provided purchasers with significant discounts on 3M's products. However, the availability and size of the rebates were dependant upon purchasers buying products from 3M from multiple product lines. See LePage's II, 324 F.3d at 154-55.

III. DISCUSSION

3M argues that the Complaint should be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) because (1) Meijer's claim is barred by the applicable statute of limitations; and (2) the Complaint fails to state a valid claim of antitrust injury.

A. Statute of Limitations

3M first argues that this case is time-barred under the applicable statute of limitations. HN2↑ The statute of limitations is an affirmative defense, and the burden of establishing its applicability to a particular claim rests with the defendant. Buskirk v. Carey Canadian Mines, Ltd., 760 F.2d 481, 487 (3d Cir. 1985). HN3↑ When considering a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) on statute of limitations grounds, "[courts] must [*7] determine whether the time alleged in the statement of a claim shows that the cause of action has not been brought within the statute of limitations." Davis v. Grusemeyer, 996 F.2d 617, 623 (3d Cir. 1993) (quoting Cito v. Bridgewater Twp. Police Dept., 892 F.2d 23, 25 (3d Cir. 1989)). The defendant bears a heavy burden in seeking to establish that the challenged claims are barred as a matter of law. Davis, 996 F.2d at 623, n.10 (citing Buskirk, 760 F.2d at 498).

HN4↑ The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15b, which governs private antitrust actions, provides that "any action to enforce any cause of action under section 15, 15a, or 15c of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." 15 U.S.C. § 15b. "Generally, a cause of action accrues, and the statute begins to run, when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, 91 S. Ct. 795 (1971). Meijer, which seeks damages for the period from October 2, 1998 through the present [*8] based on conduct by 3M which began as early as 1993, does not dispute the applicability of the Clayton Act's four year statute of limitations. Meijer argues, however, that the instant action is timely under the continuing violation and speculative damages exceptions to the four-year accrual rule.

1. Continuing violation exception

Meijer argues that the instant action is timely because 3M's conduct constitutes a continuing violation of the Sherman Act. "The Supreme Court has considered and rejected the argument that, in the context of a defendant's continuing violation of the Sherman Act, the statute of limitations runs from the violation's earliest impact on a plaintiff." In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1171 (3d Cir. 1993). HN5↑ The four year statute of limitations does not bar recovery for later private antitrust actions if the defendant's conduct "constituted a continuing violation of the Sherman Act and . . . inflicted continuing and accumulating harm." Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 502, n.15, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968). In such situations, even if the overt act which demonstrates [*9] the antitrust violation occurs outside the statute of limitations period, an injurious act within the limitations period may serve as the basis for a timely antitrust suit. Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore, 998 F.2d at 1172.

Here, Meijer argues that the continuous violation exception should be applied because the predatory and exclusionary practices 3M engaged in outside the limitations period have resulted in continuing and accumulating harm to Meijer within the limitations period by allowing 3M to continue to charge supracompetitive prices for its invisible and transparent tape. Generally, a subsequent act will only preserve an antitrust claim if that act is an "injurious act actually occurring during the limitations period, not merely the abatable but unabated inertial consequence[] of some pre-limitations action." Al George, Inc. v. Envirotech Corp., 939 F.2d 1271, 1275 (5th Cir. 1991) (quoting Pace Indus., Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 238 (9th Cir. 1987)) (emphasis deleted); see also Varner v. Peterson Farms, 371 F.3d 1011, 1019 (8th Cir. 2004); Grand Rapids Plastics, Inc. v. Lakian, 188 F.3d 401, 406 (6th Cir. 1999); [*10] see generally Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law, P 320 at 208-211 (2d ed. 2000). HN6↑ While a leading commentator has noted that "it should seem that high prices following . . . the creation of a monopoly are mere inertial consequences one naturally expects to flow from such acts," Areeda P 320 at 210, it has long been held that "a purchaser suing a monopolist for overcharges paid to recovery by pointing to anticompetitive actions taken before the limitations period." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 296 \(2d Cir. 1979\). This principle is based on the recognition that although the business of a monopolist may be injured at the time the anticompetitive conduct occurs, a purchaser, by contrast, is not harmed until the monopolist actually exercises its illicit power to extract an excessive price. The case of predatory pricing illustrates the point clearly. As soon as the dominant firm commences such a policy, other producers, who may be driven out of the market, are injured. But, clearly, purchasers are not, for they receive the temporary boon of artificially low prices. It is only when the monopolist, having devoured its smaller [*11] rivals, enjoys the spoils of its conquest by boosting its price to excessive levels that a purchaser feels the adverse impact of the violation. And if the monopolist never consummates its scheme by taking this final step, the purchaser has no cause of action.

Id. at 295 (quoting Zenith, 401 U.S. at 339).

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ("Third Circuit") has similarly differentiated between "on the one hand, an 'overt act' necessary to show the existence of a [continuing violation], and, on the other hand, an injurious act causing damages within the limitations period." Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore, 998 F.2d at 1172. Accordingly, courts have held that, HNT in purchaser antitrust actions, the requisite injurious act within the limitations period can include being overcharged as the result of an unlawful act which took place outside the limitations period but continues to allow the defendant to maintain market control. See In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 338 F. Supp. 2d 517, 551 \(D.N.J. 2004\) (purchasers' antitrust claims "are not barred by the statute of limitations to the extent that they bought [*12] and overpaid for [defendant's] products within the applicable time limitations"); see also In re Buspirone Patent & Antitrust Litig., 185 F. Supp. 2d 363 at 365, 378 \(S.D.N.Y. 2002\) ("if a party commits an initial unlawful act that allows it to maintain market control and overcharge customers for a period longer than four years, purchasers maintain a right of action for any overcharges paid within the four years prior to their filings.").

Here, the Complaint alleges that "as found in LePage's or otherwise, 3M's unlawful maintenance of its tape monopoly has suppressed competition and has maintained prices paid by direct purchasers to 3M above competitive levels, even after any 3M rebates attributable to tape purchases." (Compl. P 32.) The Complaint further alleges that "the issues regarding 3M's violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act in LePage's v. 3M are identical to those in the case at bar," (id. P 37), and that "3M has used its unlawful monopoly power . . . to harm Plaintiffs and other Class members in their business or property by increasing maintaining, or stabilizing the prices they paid for invisible and transparent tape above competitive levels." (Id. [*13] P 34.) The Complaint, therefore, alleges a cause of action on the basis of an initial overt act of unlawful maintenance of monopoly power that occurred more than four years ago, but which continues to allow 3M to commit the injurious act of overcharging Meijer and other purchasers. See Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore, 998 F.2d at 1172; see also In re K-Dur, 338 F. Supp. 2d at 551; In re Buspirone, 185 F. Supp. 2d at 378. Accordingly, the Court concludes that Meijer's claims are not barred by the statute of limitations to the extent that Meijer seeks to recover for any overcharges paid within the four years prior to the filing of the instant Complaint, plus any additional time period during which the statute of limitations may be tolled.<sup>2</sup>

[*14]

---

<sup>2</sup> Although the parties have made some arguments with respect to the possible tolling of the statute of limitations in this case, which would extend the damages time period in this case. The Court notes, however, that it need not decide what the applicable period for the calculation of damages may ultimately be in ruling on the instant Motion. In re K-Dur, 338 F. Supp. 2d at 551. Moreover, Meijer has advised the Court that "there are additional arguments for further tolling," which it did not develop in the submission currently before the Court. (04/04/2005 Tr. at 40.) Accordingly, the Court will defer ruling on the propriety of tolling the statute of limitations at this time.

2. Speculative damages exception

Meijer also argues that the statute of limitations does not bar the instant action because Meijer's damages were speculative prior to the filing of the instant lawsuit. HN8[<sup>15</sup>] The general rule of accrual in antitrust actions provides that "if a plaintiff feels the adverse impact of an antitrust [violation] on a particular date, a cause of action immediately accrues to him to recover all damages incurred by that date and all provable damages that will flow in the future." Zenith, 401 U.S. at 339. The mere fact that damages may continue to accrue "in the future, as opposed to at the from accruing." Astoria Entm't, Inc. v. Edwards, 159 F. Supp. 2d 303, 316 \(E.D. La. 2001\) (quoting 8 Julian O. van Kalinowski et al., Antitrust Laws and Trade Regulation § 162.02[1] at 162-5). However, it is hornbook law, HN9[<sup>16</sup>] in antitrust actions as in others, that even if injury and a cause of action have accrued as of a certain date, future damages that might arise from the conduct sued on are unrecoverable if the fact of their accrual is speculative or their amount and nature unprovable. [*15]

Zenith, 401 U.S. at 339. In these instances, antitrust causes of action for future damages "will accrue only on the date [the damages] are suffered; thereafter the plaintiff may sue to recover them at any time within four years from the date they were inflicted." Id.

In purchaser antitrust actions, damages from future overcharges necessarily fall into the speculative damages exception to the four year statute of limitations. See Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 295-96. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has explained that plainly, at the time a monopolist commits anticompetitive conduct it is entirely speculative how much damage that action will cause its purchasers in the future. Indeed, some of the buyers who will later feel the brunt of the violation may not even be in existence at the time. Not until the monopolist actually sets an inflated price and its customers determine the amount of their purchases can a reasonable estimate be made. The purchaser's cause of action, therefore, accrues only on the date damages are 'suffered.'

Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 295-96 (internal quotations [*16] omitted.) To hold otherwise would require a purchaser to predict and prove, within four years of the time it was first injured by anticompetitive conduct, the amount of future overcharges, the quantity of future product purchases, the level of future competition in the relevant market, and the availability of substitutes and new suppliers over time. Resolution of these issues depends on overall changes in consumer demand for tape, developments in the purchaser's overall business, variations in the cost of producing the product over time, and the future prices which the supplier ultimately decides to charge. These considerations are too speculative and remote to properly predict a purchaser's future damages. The Court, therefore, finds that Meijer's antitrust claim against 3M could not accrue until it actually payed the overcharge. See Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 295.

3M argues that the Court should nonetheless find that Meijer's claims are barred by the statute of limitations, because repose is especially valuable in antitrust, where tests of legality are often rather vague, where many business practices can be simultaneously efficient and beneficial to consumers [*17] but also challengeable as antitrust violations, where liability doctrines change and expand, where damages are punitively trebled, and where duplicate treble damages for the same offense may be threatened.

Areeda, P 320a at 205. The Court notes, however, that "there can be no unfairness in preventing a monopolist that has established its dominant position by unlawful conduct from exercising that power in later years to extract an excessive price," because "the . ." Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 296. The Court, therefore, concludes that because Meijer's future damages were speculative in 1993, when Meijer was first injured, a new cause of action accrued to Meijer each time it payed an overcharge. See Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 295. Accordingly, this action is not barred by the statute of limitations to the extent that Meijer seeks to recover for overcharges during the four years prior to the filing of the instant Complaint, plus any additional time period during which the statute of limitations may be tolled.

B. Failure to State a Valid Claim of Antitrust Injury

3M also argues that the Complaint should be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) [*18] because it fails to state a valid claim of antitrust injury.

HN10 [↑] To state a claim for monopolization in violation of [Section 2], a plaintiff must allege "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident."

Schuylkill Energy Res., Inc. v. Pa. Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 412-13 (3d Cir. 1997) (quoting Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., 980 F.2d 171, 197 (3d Cir. 1992)). The right to maintain a private cause of action for damages arising under Section 2 flows from Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\), which provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the Accordingly, plaintiffs bringing a private cause of action under Section 2 must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and [*19] that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). The Court notes that HN11 [↑] "the existence of antitrust injury is not typically resolved through motions to dismiss." Schuylkill Energy, 113 F.3d at 417 (citing Brader v. Allegheny Gen. Hosp., 64 F.3d 869, 876 (3d Cir. 1995)). Moreover, "there are no special pleading requirements for an antitrust claim. Rather, 'notice pleading is all that is required for a valid antitrust complaint.' Bradburn Parent/Teacher Store, Inc. v. 3M, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13273, Civ. A. No. 02-7676, 2000 WL 34003597, at *2 (E.D. Pa. July 25, 2003) (quoting Mun. Utils. Bd. of Albertville v. Ala. Power Co., 934 F.2d 1493, 1501 (11th Cir. 1991)). Courts, therefore, "must accept as true the factual allegations in the complaint and all reasonable inferences that can be drawn from them." Schuylkill Energy, 113 F.3d at 417. Courts "are not, however, required to accept [*20] as true unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences." Id.

Here, 3M argues that the Complaint fails to state a valid claim for antitrust injury because, although the Complaint alleges rebate programs and exclusive dealing arrangements with retailers, "it does not necessarily follow . . . that Meijer or the class it seeks to represent suffered any injury at all because such retailers benefitted directly and significantly from those rebates." (Def. at 18.) The Complaint alleges as follows:

As found in LePage's or otherwise, 3M's unlawful maintenance of its tape monopoly has suppressed competition and has maintained tape prices paid by direct purchasers to 3M above competitive levels, even after any 3M rebates attributable to tape purchases. . . . 3M has used its unlawful monopoly power described herein to harm [Meijer] and other Class members in their business or property by increasing, maintaining, or stabilizing the prices they paid for invisible and transparent tape above competitive levels.

(Compl. PP 32, 34.) (emphasis added). Moreover, the Complaint alleges that 3M "intended to use, did use, and continues to use" its "anitcompetitive and monopolistic [*21] practices in the conduct of trade or commerce." (Compl. P 1.) The Court has previously held that these allegations, "if proven, could establish that, were it not for [3M's] anti-competitive conduct, [Meijer] would have paid less for transparent tape than it actually paid during the damages period, even when any bundled rebates or other discounts are taken into account." Bradburn, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13273, 2000 WL 34003597, at *4. The Court, therefore, concludes that Meijer has properly alleged injury of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.<sup>3</sup> Accordingly, 3M's Motion is denied in this respect.

---

<sup>3</sup>The Court notes that it is "not in a position to predict whether [Meijer] will ultimately be able to sustain [its] burden of proof on this issue since [Meijer] has not yet had an opportunity to obtain evidence." Brader, 64 F.3d at 876. Accordingly, the sufficiency

[*22] ORDER

AND NOW, this 13th day of July, 2005, upon consideration of Defendant 3M's Motion to Dismiss (Doc. No. 9), all documents submitted in response thereto, and the Argument held on April 25, 2005, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that said Motion is DENIED.

BY THE COURT:

John R. Padova, J.

---

End of Document

Olstad v. Microsoft Corp.

Supreme Court of Wisconsin

September 22, 2004, Submitted on Briefs ; July 13, 2005, Opinion Filed

2003AP1086

Reporter

2005 WI 121 *; 284 Wis. 2d 224 **; 700 N.W.2d 139 ***; 2005 Wisc. LEXIS 393 ****; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,918

Gene L. Olstad, Individually and on Behalf of All Others Similarly Situated, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. Microsoft Corporation, a foreign corporation, and Does 1 through 100, inclusive, Defendants-Respondents.

Subsequent History: Costs and fees proceeding at, Remanded by Bettendorf v. Microsoft Corp., 2009 Wisc. App. LEXIS 986 \(Wis. Ct. App., Dec. 22, 2009\)

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL from an order of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County, Jeffrey Kremers, Judge. (L.C. No. 00 CV 3042).

Olstad v. Microsoft Corp., 2004 WI 50, 271 Wis. 2d 113, 679 N.W.2d 548, 2004 Wisc. LEXIS 404 (2004)

Disposition: Reversed and cause remanded.

Core Terms

---

interstate commerce, antitrust, commerce, monopolize, conspiracy, anti trust law, revision, cases, state law, Sherman Act, regulation, attorney general, intrastate, federal statute, circuit court, preempt, courts, intrastate commerce, legislative intent, commerce clause, circumstances, effects, antitrust statute, interstate, preemption, files, restraint of trade, manufacturers, practices, recreated

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1[ Supporting Materials, Discovery Materials

An appellate court reviews the circuit court's grant of summary judgment independently, applying the same methodology as the circuit court. Summary judgment shall be rendered if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Wis. Stat. § 802.08\(2\). The appellate court evaluates the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and draws all reasonable inferences from the facts in his favor. If the salient facts are undisputed, its task is simply to apply the law to the undisputed facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

HN2 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A state may regulate interstate commerce in some circumstances. The most important point is that when a practice has sufficient effects within the state, that state has the power to apply its antitrust law. A state antitrust law of general application can virtually always be applied to a practice having sufficient effects within the state. State law is precluded from regulating interstate commerce only if it "unduly burdens" interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN3 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Wis. Stat. § 133.03 (2001-02).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews de novo the circuit court's construction of a statute.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Legislation, Interpretation

Statutory interpretation begins with the language of the statute. If the meaning of the statute is plain, the court ordinarily stops the inquiry. It assigns the words in the statute their common, ordinary, and accepted meaning. It also considers the context and structure of the statute. It interprets statutes to avoid absurd or unreasonable results and to give effect to every word in the text.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

See Wis. Stat. § 133.01 (2001-02).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Wis. Stat. § 133.03 (2001-02) is ambiguous, in that reasonably well-informed observers have interpreted it in two different senses. The language itself provides no express limit to the statute's scope.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 Legislation, Interpretation

To resolve an ambiguity in a statute, a court turns to both intrinsic and extrinsic sources, including legislative history, to determine the intent of the legislature.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Supreme Law of the Land

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Preemption

HN9 Interstate Commerce, State Powers

The federal constitution is clearly the supreme law of the land. U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. Therefore, a federal law regulating interstate commerce may preempt a state law on the same topic. Federal preemption may occur through express preemption or implied preemption. Congress may expressly preempt contradictory--or even coterminous-- state laws in the text of the laws it passes. In that event, the state laws must yield to the federal law. Congress may also impliedly preempt state laws by completely occupying a given regulatory field. However, if the preemption is only implied, courts typically require clear evidence of legislative intent to preempt. The United States Supreme Court has stated that there is a "strong presumption" against a finding of preemption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Congress has neither expressly (in the language of the Sherman Act) nor impliedly attempted to preempt state antitrust laws. Each state can and does prevent and control combinations within the limit of the state. This Congress has not proposed to interfere with. Congress has never expressed the least willingness to limit state antitrust by making federal antitrust occupy the field, thus preempting state law. The result is that federal and state policy often overlap and address precisely the same practices, often with inconsistent results.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN11[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The U.S. Supreme Court has acknowledged that state legislation, designed to serve legitimate state interests and applied without discrimination against interstate commerce, does not violate the Commerce Clause even though it affects commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Balancing Tests

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN12[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

States may burden interstate commerce unless the burden is "clearly excessive" in relation to the local benefits.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN13[] Legislation, Interpretation

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has often used legislative declarations as a valuable aid to its analysis of statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN14 [+] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Wisconsin Supreme Court concludes that Wis. Stat. ch. 133, particularly Wis. Stat. § 133.03, applies to interstate commerce, at least in some circumstances. Consistent with this holding, it withdraws the language from Conley Publ'g Group v. Journal Communications, 2003 WI 119, 265 Wis. 2d 128, 665 N.W.2d 879, that the scope of Wis. Stat. ch. 133 is limited to intrastate transactions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Double Jeopardy

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > General Overview

HN15 [+] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

In some circumstances, a monopolist's conduct is actionable under either federal law, Wisconsin law, or both. This concern is not unique to antitrust law. Concerns about "double jeopardy" prosecutions date back to the adoption of the Bill of Rights.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Double Jeopardy

HN16 [+] Procedural Due Process, Double Jeopardy

See U.S. Const. amend. V.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Double Jeopardy

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Double Jeopardy > Dual Sovereignty Doctrine

HN17 [+] Procedural Due Process, Double Jeopardy

As a general rule, a person is not unconstitutionally subject to double jeopardy when he is tried successively by different sovereigns for the same crime. This rule derives from the more general concept that the states and the federal government are separate sovereigns, each entitled to enforce its own laws. Duplicative prosecution is one thing; duplicative recovery is another. It goes without saying that the courts can and should preclude double recovery by an individual.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN18 [blue checkmark] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A civil plaintiff filing an action under Wisconsin's antitrust act must allege that (1) actionable conduct, such as the formation of a combination or conspiracy, occurred within Wisconsin, even if its effects are felt primarily outside Wisconsin; or (2) the conduct complained of "substantially affects" the people of Wisconsin and has impacts in Wisconsin, even if the illegal activity resulting in those impacts occurred predominantly or exclusively outside Wisconsin. Questions of provincialism, favoritism, and undue burden on interstate commerce should be determined by resort to contemporary federal commerce clause jurisprudence.

Counsel: For the plaintiff-appellant there were briefs by John F. Maloney and McNally, Maloney & Peterson, S.C., Milwaukee and Ben Barnow and Barnow and Associates, P.C., Chicago, IL, and oral argument by John F. Maloney.

For the defendant-respondent there were briefs by W. Stuart Parsons, Jeffrey Morris, Brian D. Winters, Kelly H. Twigger, and Quarles & Brady LLP, Milwaukee; David B. Tulchin, Jeremy T. Kamras, Ryan C. Williams and Sullivan & Cromwell, LLP, New York, NY; Charles B. Casper and Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads LLP, (of counsel), Philadelphia, PA; and Thomas W. Burt, Richard J. Wallis, Steven J. Aeschbacher (of counsel) and Microsoft Corporation, Redmond, WA, and oral argument by David B. Tulchin.

An amicus curiae brief was filed by Stephen E. Meili, Peter C. Carstensen and Susan LaCava and Susan LaCava S.C., Madison, on behalf of the University of Wisconsin Law School Consumer Law [****2] Litigation Clinic, Professor Peter C. Carstensen of the University of Wisconsin Law School, and Susan LaCava, Esq.

An amicus curiae brief was filed by John J. Prentice, Andrew T. Phillips and Prentice & Phillips, LLP, Milwaukee; Richard M. Hagstrom and Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette LLP, Minneapolis, MN, on behalf of Wisconsin Counties Association.

An amicus curiae brief was filed by H. Dale Peterson and Stroud, Willink & Howard, LLC, Madison; William L. Oemichen, Madison; Gary Bakke and Bakke Norman SC, New Richmond; on behalf of Wisconsin Farm Bureau Federation, Cooperative, Wisconsin Federation of Cooperatives and Wisconsin Agri-Service Association.

An amicus curiae brief was filed by Gerald Thain, University of Wisconsin Law School, Madison, and James May, Washington College of Law/American University of Law School, Washington, D.C., on behalf of the American Antitrust Institute.

An amicus curiae brief was filed by Peggy A. Lautenschlager, attorney general and Eric J. Wilson, assistant attorney general, on behalf of the Wisconsin Department of Justice, and oral argument by Eric J. Wilson.

Judges: DAVID T. PROSSER, J. SHIRLEY S. ABRAHAMSON, C.J., and ANN [****3] WALSH BRADLEY, J., did not participate.

Opinion by: DAVID T. PROSSER

Opinion

---

[**229] ON CERTIFICATION FROM THE COURT OF APPEALS

[*P1] [***141] DAVID T. PROSSER, J. Gene L. Olstad (Olstad), suing individually and as class representative of all others similarly situated, appeals from a final order of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County granting Microsoft Corporation's (Microsoft) motion for summary judgment and dismissing Olstad's action alleging that Microsoft employs monopolistic practices prohibited by Wis. Stat. § 133.03 (2001-02).<sup>1</sup> The circuit court dismissed Olstad's complaint because it found that Chapter 133 of the Wisconsin Statutes applies only to intrastate commerce. We reverse the circuit court's order because we conclude that Wisconsin's antitrust statutes may reach interstate commerce if (1) actionable conduct, such as the formation of a combination or conspiracy, occurred within this state, even if its effects are felt primarily outside Wisconsin; or (2) the conduct complained of "substantially affects" the people of Wisconsin and has impacts in this state, even if the illegal activity resulting in those impacts occurred predominantly or exclusively outside this [****4] state.

---

<sup>1</sup> All subsequent references to the Wisconsin Statutes are to the 2001-02 edition unless otherwise indicated.

I. FACTS AND PROCEDURAL POSTURE

[*P2] Olstad, <sup>2</sup> [****5] seeking to represent a class of Wisconsin consumers,<sup>3</sup> alleges that Microsoft controls a [**230] "dominant and persistent share" of the market for Intel-compatible<sup>4</sup> personal computer operating systems. In 1985 Microsoft introduced its "Windows" operating system. In the following years, Microsoft released newer--and increasingly dominant--versions of Windows. Olstad alleges that Microsoft's Windows market share has "at times exceeded ninety-five percent."

[*P3] Olstad claims that Microsoft's dominant market share acts as a barrier to entry for would-be competitors. He alleges that Microsoft has created a continuously increasing feedback loop: that is, because "everyone" uses Windows, all new [***142] consumers must also buy Windows. In Olstad's view, this feedback loop has become a vicious cycle for consumers. He claims that Microsoft has engaged in various forms of anticompetitive conduct to maintain its monopoly, including actively discouraging competitors from "encroaching upon its operating system monopoly."

[*P4] In 2000 a United States District Court in the District of Columbia accepted most of these arguments. United States v. Microsoft Corp., 97 F. Supp. 2d 59 (D.D.C. 2000) [****6] (final judgment); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 87 F. Supp. 2d 30 (D.D.C. 2000) (conclusions of law); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 84 F. Supp. 2d 9 (D.D.C. 1999) (findings of fact). Olstad directs our attention to the District Court's findings for "the details of Microsoft's and its co-conspirators' conduct."

[*P5] In its "conclusions of law," the District Court found that Microsoft's conduct violated the federal Sherman Act "sufficient to meet analogous elements of [**231] causes of action arising under the laws of each plaintiff state," one of which was Wisconsin. Microsoft, 87 F. Supp. 2d at 54. Microsoft argued that "a plaintiff cannot succeed in an antitrust claim under the laws of . . . Wisconsin without proving an element that is not required under the Sherman Act, namely, intrastate impact." Id. at 55. The court rejected Microsoft's argument, concluding that even if a state like Wisconsin had such a requirement, "that element is manifestly proven by the facts presented here." Id. The court was "compelled" to the conclusion that "Microsoft's anticompetitive conduct has substantially hampered competition" [****7] in Wisconsin. Id. Accordingly, the court found that Microsoft violated Wis. Stat. § 133.03. Id. at 56.

[*P6] Microsoft appealed, and the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit affirmed that part of the District Court's decision holding that Microsoft committed monopoly violations. United States v. Microsoft Corp., 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330, 253 F.3d 34, 51 (D.C. Cir. 2001). The court of appeals remanded the case for further findings on other issues. See id. at 95.

[*P7] Olstad alleges that as a result of Microsoft's anticompetitive conduct, Wisconsin consumers have paid artificially high prices for Microsoft products over the past six years. He argued to the circuit court that Microsoft's conduct violated Wis. Stat. § 100.18 (prohibiting unfair trade practices) and Wis. Stat. § 133.03 (prohibiting unlawful contracts and conspiracies).

<sup>2</sup>There is a question whether Olstad is a proper class representative. At oral argument, Olstad's counsel asserted that if this court reversed the circuit court's order, he would substitute a new class representative. Because the circuit court ultimately dismissed Olstad's complaint, it never addressed the issue of whether to certify the class. We need not reach the issue for the purposes of determining this appeal.

<sup>3</sup>Olstad asserts that the class consists of "all persons or entities in the State of Wisconsin who purchased for purposes other than re-sale or distribution during the last six years, Microsoft licensed Intel compatible PC operating systems." The class does not include government entities. Id.

<sup>4</sup>"Intel" is a brand of microprocessor commonly used in personal computers.

[*P8] Microsoft denied these allegations and moved for summary judgment. Microsoft noted that it is a foreign corporation, not organized under the laws of Wisconsin, and its principal place of business is [****8] not in Wisconsin. It is undisputed that most of the conduct complained of occurred outside Wisconsin and affected interstate commerce. Microsoft argued that Wisconsin \*\*232 courts have consistently held that Wisconsin's antitrust law, Chapter 133, does not apply to conduct that primarily affects interstate commerce. Microsoft also argued that Olstad failed to state a claim actionable under Wis. Stat. § 100.18.

[*P9] The Milwaukee County Circuit Court, Jeffrey Kremers, Judge, granted Microsoft's motion and dismissed Olstad's complaint. In an oral ruling, Judge Kremers held that plaintiffs like Olstad could not recover under Chapter 133 because it does not extend to interstate commerce. Judge Kremers relied on a line of cases beginning with Pulp Wood Co. v. Green Bay Paper & Fiber Co., 157 Wis. 604, 147 N.W. 1058 \(1914\).

[*P10] Olstad appealed,<sup>5</sup> and the court of appeals certified the following issue to this \*\*\*\*143 court: "Does Wisconsin's antitrust act, Wis. Stat. § 133.03, apply to interstate commerce affecting Wisconsin commerce?" We accepted the certification.

[*P11] [****9] In this appeal we are not concerned with the truth or merit of Olstad's allegations. The circuit court did not address the substance of the claim that Microsoft violated Chapter 133. The circuit court concluded that controlling precedent did not allow it to consider whether Chapter 133 had been violated because, as a threshold matter, the statute could not apply to the interstate conduct at issue. Accordingly, we must decide whether the Wisconsin statute reaches interstate commerce.

[*P12] HN1 We review the circuit court's grant of summary judgment independently, applying the same methodology \*\*233 as the circuit court. Smaxwell v. Bayard, 2004 WI 101, P12, 274 Wis. 2d 278, 682 N.W.2d 923. Summary judgment "shall be rendered if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Wis. Stat. § 802.08\(2\). We evaluate the facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, Olstad, and draw all reasonable inferences from the facts in \*\*\*\*10 his favor. Garcia v. Mazda Motor of America, 2004 WI 93, P4 n.3, 273 Wis. 2d 612, 682 N.W.2d 365. If, as here, the salient facts are undisputed, our task is simply to apply the law to the undisputed facts.

II. DISCUSSION

[*P13] We note at the outset that Microsoft concedes that HN2 a state may regulate interstate commerce in some circumstances. This point is well settled. See, e.g., California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 101-02, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 \(1989\) (state laws may reach interstate commerce in indirect purchaser action); David Lamb, Avoiding Impotence: Rethinking the Standards for Applying State Antitrust Laws to Interstate Commerce, 54 Vand. L. Rev. 1705, 1721 \(2001\) ("Most recent decisions have upheld state antitrust regulations despite their incidental impact on interstate commerce"); Herbert Hovenkamp, State Antitrust in the Federal Scheme, 58 Ind. L.J. 375, 386-87 \(1983\) ("applications of state antitrust laws to situations 'in or affecting' interstate commerce have rarely been condemned and nearly all cases that did condemn such applications were decided before 1935, \*\*234 when judges had a much more \*\*\*\*11 restrictive view of the power of the states to regulate in interstate commerce").

[*P14] "The most important point is that when a practice has sufficient effects within the state, that state has the power to apply its antitrust law . . . a state antitrust law of general application can virtually always be applied to a practice having sufficient effects within the state." Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P2403a (2d ed. 2000). State law is precluded from regulating interstate commerce only if it "unduly burdens" interstate commerce. Von Kalinowski, Antitrust Laws & Trade Regulation § 100.03 (2d ed. 2004).

---

<sup>5</sup> Olstad decided not to pursue the circuit court's dismissal of his claim under Wis. Stat. § 100.18, because he did not brief that issue to this court. Accordingly, we address only the issue certified by the court of appeals.

[*P15] While conceding that Wisconsin may enact a statute reaching interstate commerce, Microsoft contends that our legislature has not done so. We turn to Wisconsin's antitrust act, Wis. Stat. § 133.03, to determine whether Microsoft is correct.

[***144] A. Statutory Analysis

[*P16] At issue is Wis. Stat. § 133.03, which provides:

133.03 Unlawful contracts; conspiracies. (1) HN3<sup>6</sup> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce [****12] is illegal. Every person who makes any contract or engages in any combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or [**235] commerce may be fined not more than $ 100,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, may be fined not more than $ 50,000 or imprisoned for not more than 7 years and 6 months or both.

(2) Every person who monopolizes, or attempts to monopolize, or combines or conspires with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of trade or commerce may be fined not more than $ 100,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, may be fined not more than $ 50,000 or imprisoned for not more than 7 years and 6 months or both.

Wis. Stat. § 133.03.<sup>6</sup>

[*P17] HN4<sup>7</sup> This court reviews de novo the circuit court's construction of the statute. State v. Lombard, 2004 WI 95, P17, 273 Wis. 2d 538, 684 N.W.2d 103. [****13]

[*P18] HN5<sup>8</sup> Statutory interpretation begins with the language of the statute. If the meaning of the statute is plain, we ordinarily stop the inquiry. Kalal v. Circuit Court for Dane County, 2004 WI 58, P45, 271 Wis. 2d 633, 681 N.W.2d 110. We assign the words in the statute their common, ordinary, and accepted meaning. Id. We also consider the context and structure of the statute. Id., P46. We interpret statutes to avoid absurd or unreasonable results and to give effect to every word in the text. Id.

[*P19] Olstad argues that the plain language of the statute shows that it applies to interstate commerce because of the absence of any language expressly limiting the scope of the statute. On its face, the statute refers to "every contract," "any contract," and "every person" without restricting its purview to Wisconsin contracts or persons in Wisconsin. Wis. Stat. § 133.03.

[*P20] Olstad also directs our attention to the context of the statute, namely, the expression of legislative intent in Wis. Stat. § 133.01:

HN6<sup>9</sup> [\[\*\*236\]](#) The intent of this chapter is to safeguard the public against the creation or [****14] perpetuation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition by prohibiting unfair and discriminatory business practices which destroy or hamper competition. It is the intent of the legislature that this chapter be interpreted in a manner which gives the most liberal construction to achieve the aim of competition. It is the intent of the legislature to make competition the fundamental economic policy of this state and, to that end, state regulatory agencies shall regard the public interest as requiring the preservation and promotion of the maximum level of competition in any regulated industry consistent with the other public interest goals established by the legislature.

Wis. Stat. § 133.01.

<sup>6</sup>The legislature revised this statute effective February 1, 2003, to alter its penalty provisions. The revision is not material to this appeal and we will not address it further. See 2001 Wis. Act 109.

[*P21] Microsoft does not address the broad language of Wis. Stat. § 133.03. Instead it relies on several cases that, it claims, interpret the statute's plain language to apply only to purely intrastate conduct. Microsoft then quotes Zimmerman v. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., 38 Wis. 2d 626, 633-34, \*\*\*145L-157 N.W.2d 648 \(1968\), to the effect that:

It has often been said that once a construction has been [****15] given to a statute, the construction becomes part of the statute; and it is within the province of the legislature alone to change the law.

. . . Where a law passed by the legislature has been construed by the courts, legislative acquiescence in or refusal to pass a measure that would defeat the courts' construction is not an equivocal act. The legislature is presumed to know that in absence of its changing the law, the construction put upon it by the courts will remain unchanged.

Microsoft asserts that the judicial gloss this court has placed on the language of Wis. Stat. § 133.03 unambiguously [**237] shows that the statute can be applied only to purely intrastate commerce.

[*P22] The evidence to support Microsoft's argument begins with Pulp Wood. This was also the case principally relied upon by the circuit court. In Pulp Wood, the court evaluated an allegedly illegal contract made in Wisconsin involving a wood supply from Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, and Canada. Pulp Wood, 157 Wis. at 615. The court stated: "The contract we think involved interstate commerce, and if so the federal statute is applicable and the case will [****16] be treated on that basis." Id. at 615. However, the court noted that it observed "little difference" whether the state or federal statute or both applied. Id. at 616. It added that the state statute "is a copy of the federal statute, except that it applies to attempts to monopolize trade and commerce within the state . . ." Id. at 625.<sup>7</sup>

[*P23] Most of our cases since Pulp Wood have followed its bright line division between interstate [****17] commerce (governed by the federal statute) and intrastate commerce (governed by Chapter 133) without further analysis. See, e.g., Pulp Wood Co. v. Green Bay Paper & Fiber Co., 168 Wis. 400, 404-05, 170 N.W. 230 \(1919\) (Pulp Wood II) ("The contract in question involved interstate commerce, and hence the federal statute is the statute to be applied to the case, although little, if any, difference is to be observed in the result in [**238] the present case whether the state or the federal statutes, or both, apply"); State v. Lewis & Leidersdorf Co., 201 Wis. 543, 549, 230 N.W. 692 \(1930\) ("sec. 133.01 [has] application to intrastate as distinguished from interstate transactions"); Reese v. Assoc. Hosp. Serv., Inc., 45 Wis. 2d 526, 532, 173 N.W.2d 661 \(1970\) ("Sec. 133.01 . . . has been held by this court to be a reenactment of the first two sections of the federal Sherman Antitrust Act, with application to intrastate as distinguished from interstate transactions"); John Mohr & Sons, Inc. v. Jahnke, 55 Wis. 2d 402, 410, 198 N.W.2d 363 \(1972\) (same); Grams v. Boss, 97 Wis. 2d 332, 346, 294 N.W.2d 473 \(1980\) [****18] (same); Conley Publ'g Group v. Journal Communications, 2003 WI 119, P16, 265 Wis. 2d 128, 665 N.W.2d 879 ("the scope of Chapter 133 is limited to intrastate transactions"). Microsoft emphasizes the importance of Grams and Conley Publishing because both were decided after a 1980 revision of Chapter 133.

[*P24] There are two notable exceptions to this line of cases. In State v. Allied Chemical & Dye Corp., 9 Wis. 2d 290, 101 N.W.2d 133 \(1960\), the court evaluated the circuit court's grant of summary judgment to three defendant corporations. The court reversed, concluding that even though the acts at issue involved interstate commerce and none of the defendants owned, operated, or maintained "any manufacturing plant, sales or other office, warehouse, or stock of calcium chloride in the state of Wisconsin," Chapter 133 could apply. Id. at 292, 296. Without elaboration, the court held:

---

<sup>7</sup> In its decision, the court did not declare the contract void. It remanded the case to the circuit court for Brown County. Pulp Wood Co. v. Green Bay Paper & Fiber Co., 157 Wis. 604, 625, 147 N.W. 1058 \(1914\). The case was tried to the court, which dismissed the complaint on the ground that the contract was void "because [the contract was] contrary to both the federal and state anti-trust statutes." Pulp Wood Co. v. Green Bay Paper & Fiber Co., 168 Wis. 400, 402, 170 N.W. 230 \(1919\).

1. There is no language in the federal enactments that pre-empts the field of regulation and enforcement in the federal government or that precludes the states from enacting effective legislation dealing with such unlawful practices. [****19]

[**239] 2. There is no conflict between the federal and state statutes.

3. The Wisconsin statutes make no attempt to regulate or burden interstate commerce.

Id. at 295.

[*P25] The Allied Chemical court also concluded that "The public interest and welfare of the people of Wisconsin are substantially affected if prices of a product are fixed or supplies thereof are restricted as the result of an illegal combination or conspiracy. The people of Wisconsin are entitled to the advantages that flow from free competition . . ." Id. The briefs in Allied Chemical permit no doubt that our court was challenged by the Department of Justice to apply Wisconsin's antitrust statute to interstate commerce, and it did.<sup>8</sup>

[*P26] [***20] [**240] In State v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc., 31 Wis. 2d 699, 144 N.W.2d 1 (1966), the court addressed the departure from Wisconsin of the Milwaukee Braves baseball club. The State charged that major league baseball unlawfully practiced monopolistic conduct in violation of Chapter 133. Id. at 702. Despite the interstate nature of major league baseball, the court appeared willing to apply Wisconsin's antitrust statute, noting:

[Major League Baseball] terminated very substantial business activity in Wisconsin . . . On their face, these facts support a conclusion that there is a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce, declared illegal by the first sentence of sec. 133.01, Stats., as well as a combination to monopolize trade, under the third sentence of the section.

....

[***147] The state may, ordinarily, protect the interests of its people by enforcing its antitrust act against persons doing business in interstate commerce . . . (citing Allied Chemical, 9 Wis. 2d at 295.

Id. at 713-14, 721.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>8</sup> In its brief, the State argued that even though the respondent corporations were "undoubtedly engaged in interstate commerce, they are subject to prosecution for violating the applicable Wisconsin Statutes by conspiring to fix and control the prices at which other defendants" in Milwaukee sold calcium chloride to Milwaukee County. The State quoted Leader Theatre Corp. v. Randforce Amusement Corp., 186 Misc. 280, 58 N.Y.S.2d 304, 307 (1945): "It is now well established that states, under their police powers, can enact and implement legislation which affects interstate commerce, when such commerce has significant local consequences." The State summed up: "While there is no denying that the respondents are engaged in interstate commerce and that all of the calcium chloride sold in Wisconsin is shipped in interstate commerce, significant and necessary parts of this conspiracy are alleged to have been carried out in [Wisconsin], concern this state and are within the jurisdiction of our courts."

The three chemical companies answered: "After the calcium chloride leaves the producing point no employee or agent of the respondent handles or has any contact with it." The corporations continued: "A corporation engaged in interstate commerce may, of course, be subject to state antitrust laws for violations which occur in connection with transactions which are wholly intrastate." (Emphasis added.)

The focused argument by the parties in State v. Allied Chemical & Dye Corp., 9 Wis. 2d 290, 101 N.W.2d 133 (1960), put the court's decision in context.

<sup>9</sup> In his dissenting opinion, Justice Nathan Heffernan wrote:

It is well settled that a state may exercise its police powers through such devices as the antitrust laws even though an incidental benefit may be to local commerce, providing that the law or its operation do not discriminate against interstate commerce or disrupt its required uniformity. There is no intimation . . . that the Wisconsin antitrust laws are applied in a [*P27] [****21] [**241] The Milwaukee Braves court declined to enforce Chapter 133 in part because of major league baseball's well-settled exception from the antitrust laws. Id. at 725. But all seven members of the court asserted that Chapter 133 could be applied to interstate commerce.

[*P28] Taking this authority into account, we conclude that Chapter 133 has been interpreted inconsistently. Wisconsin Stat. § 133.03 is HNT<sup>1</sup> ambiguous, in that reasonably well-informed observers have interpreted it in two different senses. The language itself provides no express limit to the statute's scope, but this court ascribed a limit to the statute as recently as 2003. Conley Publ'g, 2003 WI 119, 265 Wis. 2d 128, P16, 665 N.W.2d 879. HN8<sup>2</sup> To resolve this ambiguity, we turn to both intrinsic and extrinsic sources, including legislative history, to determine the intent of the legislature. Kalal, 2004 WI 58, 271 Wis. 2d 633, PP43, 50.

B. Legislative History

[*P29] The late nineteenth century saw the birth and growth of the earliest antitrust laws, a genesis that took place against a backdrop dominated by principles of dual federalism [****22] dating back to the Founding Era. Cf. [**242] James May, Antitrust Practice and Procedure in the Formative Era: The Constitutional and Conceptual Reach of State Antitrust Law, 1880-1918, 135 U. Pa. L. Rev. 495, 497-99, 518 (1987). The Wisconsin Legislature enacted Wisconsin's antitrust act in 1893. See ch. 219, Laws of 1893. It did not act in a vacuum. It was influenced by the constraining boundaries of federal commerce clause jurisprudence.

[*P30] Article I, Section 8, clause 3 of the federal constitution gives Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." U.S. Const., art. I § 8 cl.3. The Supreme Court's early cases made clear that this "commerce clause" also has a negative or "dormant" form restricting the states' ability to regulate interstate commerce. Quill Corp. v. North Dakota, 504 U.S. 298, 309, 119 L. Ed. 2d 91, 112 S. Ct. 1904 (1992) (citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1, 231-232, 239, 6 L. Ed. 2d 23 (1824) (Johnson, J., concurring) ("It would be in vain to deny the possibility of a clashing and collision between the measures of the two governments. . . . When [a ****23] collision] does arise, the question must be decided how far the powers of Congress are adequate to put it down.")).

[*P31] Chief Justice Marshall shaped early conceptions of the role of the national government. "If any one proposition could command the universal assent of mankind we might expect it would be this--that the government of the Union, though limited [****148] in its powers, is supreme within its sphere of action." McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 405, 4 L. Ed. 579 (1819). Marshall believed that the federal government could employ any means not expressly prohibited to it as long as it acted within the "sphere of its specified powers." Id. at 384. In so holding, the Court implied that the states, too, are sovereign within their spheres of influence.

[*P32] [**243] Marshall's concept of mutually exclusive spheres of influence dominated judicial analysis throughout most of the nineteenth century. "It is unquestionably no easy task to . . . fix the precise point, in relation to every important article, where the paramount power of Congress terminates, and that of the State begins." Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 46 U.S. 504, 514, 12 L. Ed. 256 (1847) [****241] (Opinion of Taney, C.J. <sup>10</sup>).

[*P33] During the latter half of the nineteenth century, the concept of "spheres of influence" attained nearly impregnable status as black letter law. "The general government, and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other, within their respective spheres." The Collector v. Day, 78 U.S. 113, 124, 20 L. Ed. 122 (1870).

discriminatory manner. It is equally clear that state antitrust laws can be enforced concurrently with, or in the absence of, federal regulation.

State v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc., 31 Wis. 2d 699, 739, 144 N.W.2d 1 (1966) (Heffernan, Hallows, and Beifuss, JJ., dissenting) (internal citations omitted).

<sup>10</sup> In Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 46 U.S. 504, 12 L. Ed. 256 (1847), popularly known as "The License Cases," the Court did not file a majority opinion; each Justice concurred separately.

[*P34] Shortly before the passage of the federal Sherman Act, the Court pronounced that "no state has the right to lay a tax on interstate commerce in any form." Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U.S. 640, 648, 32 L. Ed. 311, 8 S. Ct. 1380 (1888). The court believed that such a tax would be a "burden" on interstate commerce, [****25] regulation of which "belongs solely to congress." Id. To put it in Marshall's terms, the Court believed that interstate commerce fell within the "sphere" of federal power, to the total exclusion of state power. McCulloch, 17 U.S. at 384.

[*P35] Antitrust law was born in this era of mutually exclusive sovereignties. At least 13, and possibly as many as 21, states acted before Congress passed the Sherman Act. Compare ARC America, 490 U.S. at 101 n.4, with May, supra at 499. Wisconsin was not one of these states.

[*P36] [**244] In 1890 Congress passed the Sherman Act. It provided:

- (1) Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. . . .
- (2) Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, [****26] or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.
- ....
- (8) That the word "person," or "persons," wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

[***149] Sherman Antitrust Act, ch. 647 §§ 1-8, 26 Stat. 209 (1890) (codified as amended at 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7 \(2000\)).

[*P37] Although the passage of a federal statute so similar to then existing state laws--and so similar to the state laws passed shortly thereafter--raises the specter of federal preemption, the legislative history reveals that Congress did not intend to preempt state laws. See Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 2401a, at 290 (2d ed. 2000). Rather, in accord with the dominating theory of the era, Congress intended the federal law to apply only to interstate cases while the state laws continued to apply to intrastate cases. See id.

[*P38] [**245] HN9 The federal constitution is clearly "the supreme law of the land." U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. Therefore, [****27] a federal law regulating interstate commerce may preempt a state law on the same topic. Federal preemption may occur through express preemption or implied preemption. Gorton v. Am. Cyanamid Co., 194 Wis. 2d 203, 215-16, 533 N.W.2d 746 (1995). Congress may expressly preempt contradictory--or even coterminous--state laws in the text of the laws it passes. In that event, the state laws must yield to the federal law. Congress may also impliedly preempt state laws by completely occupying a given regulatory field. Id. However, if the preemption is only implied, courts typically require clear evidence of legislative intent to preempt. Id. at 216. In a similar vein, the United States Supreme Court has stated that there is a "strong presumption" against a finding of preemption. Id. at 219 (citing Cipollone v. Liggett Group, 505 U.S. 504, 523, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407, 112 S. Ct. 2608 \(1992\)).

[*P39] But HN10 Congress has neither expressly (in the language of the Sherman Act) nor impliedly attempted to preempt state antitrust laws. See ARC America, 490 U.S. at 102 (citing Watson v. Buck, 313 U.S. 387, 403, 85 L. Ed. 1416, 61 S. Ct. 962 \(1941\)); [****28] Puerto Rico v. Shell Co., 302 U.S. 253, 259-60, 82 L. Ed. 235, 58 S. Ct. 167 \(1937\)). Before the passage of the Sherman Act, its sponsor, Senator John Sherman of Ohio, stated: "Each state can and does prevent and control combinations within the limit of the state. This we do not propose to interfere with." 21 Cong. Rec. 2456, 2460. In fact, "Congress has never expressed the least willingness to limit state antitrust by making federal antitrust 'occupy the field,' thus preempting state law. The result is that federal and state policy often overlap and address [**246] precisely the same practices, often with inconsistent results." Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P216 (2d ed. 2000).

[*P40] We discuss preemption only for the sake of completeness, as Microsoft has not argued that the Sherman Act preempts Wisconsin's antitrust laws.

[*P41] Three years after the passage of the Sherman Act, the Wisconsin Legislature enacted its own antitrust act. See ch. 219, Laws of 1893. The 1893 law provided:

(1) Every contract or combination in the nature of a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, is hereby declared illegal.

(2) Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt [****29] to monopolize, or combine, or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in this state, shall be deemed guilty of violating the provisions of this act, and upon conviction thereof shall forfeit for each such violation not less than fifty dollars, nor more than three thousand dollars . . .

. . .

(8) The word "person" or "persons," wherever used in this act, shall be deemed to include corporations, partnerships, [***150] individuals and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of the United States, the laws of any of the territories, the laws of this or any other state, or the laws of any foreign country.

Ch. 219, Laws of 1893 (codified at Wis. Stat. § 1747e (1898)) (emphasis added).

[*P42] Comparison of the language and structure of the Sherman Act and Wisconsin's antitrust act reveals many similarities. The pivotal language in the first two sections is nearly identical. This has led courts [**247] and commentators to refer to that first incarnation of Wisconsin's antitrust act as the "Little Sherman Act." See, e.g., Conley Publ'g, 2003 WI 119, 265 Wis. 2d 128, P18, 665 N.W.2d 879.

[*P43] The dawn of the twentieth century [****30] coincided with the heyday of the federal "trust-busters" led by President Theodore Roosevelt. See Marc Winerman, The Origins of the FTC: Concentration, Cooperation, Control and Competition, 71 Antitrust L.J. 1, 16 (2003);<sup>11</sup> see generally Edwin J. Hughes, The Left Side of Antitrust: What Fairness Means and Why It Matters, 77 Marq. L. Rev. 265, 292 (1994). The early twentieth century presidents implemented policies favoring broad application of the Sherman Act--and furthered the stratification of the state and federal antitrust laws. See generally Hughes, 77 Marq. L. Rev. at 292 (noting that in 1912, Woodrow Wilson made attacks on trusts one of the centerpieces of his successful presidential campaign).

[*P44] [****31] By 1914 antitrust regulation was "most prominent as a political issue." Id. This court's 1914 holding in Pulp Wood is best understood in light of the dominant conception of the time, fathered by Chief Justice Marshall, that the federal government and the various state governments existed in mutually exclusive spheres, with no overlap. See McCulloch, 17 U.S. at 405. As the Pulp Wood court expressed it: "The contract we think involved interstate commerce, and if so the federal statute is applicable and the case will be treated on that basis." Pulp Wood, 157 Wis. at 615. That determination reflected the outlook of the era, even [**248] though the disputed contract was made in Wisconsin and its effects were felt in Wisconsin.

[*P45] In 1921 the Wisconsin Legislature undertook the first significant revision to the 1893 act. Ch. 458, Laws of 1921. The legislature chose to "amend and renumber" the first section of the statute. Id. The new section stated:

Every contract or combination in the nature of a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is hereby declared illegal. Every combination, conspiracy, trust, [****32] pool, agreement or contract intended to restrain or prevent competition in the supply or price of any article or commodity in general use in this state, to be produced or sold therein or constituting a subject of trade or commerce therein, or . . . in any manner control the price of any such article or commodity . . . manufactured, mined, produced or sold in this state, or fix any standard or figure in which its price to the public shall be in any manner controlled or established, is hereby declared an illegal restraint of trade. Every person, corporation, copartnership, trustee or association who shall . . . monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in this state shall forfeit for each offense not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five thousand [***151] dollars. Any such person . . . shall also be liable to any person transacting or doing business in this state for all damages he may sustain by reason of the doing of anything forbidden by this section.

<sup>11</sup> Roosevelt's predecessor, William McKinley, had initiated only three antitrust cases in four years of his presidency; Roosevelt initiated 45 cases during his eight years in office. Marc Winerman, The Origins of the FTC: Concentration, Cooperation, Control and Competition, 71 Antitrust L.J. 1, 16 (2003).

Id. (emphasis added). The amendment is notable not because it made major substantive changes to the law, but because of its repeated use of the phrase "in this state." <sup>12</sup> [***33] The phrase had appeared once in the 1893 legislation that copied the Sherman Act. The sentence [**249] from the Sherman Act, "Every person who shall . . . conspire . . . to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States," was changed in the Wisconsin legislation to read, "Every person who shall . . . conspire . . . to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in this state." Although, in hindsight, the language could have been interpreted to focus on the place where the effects of a conspiracy were felt as opposed to the place where the conspiracy was hatched, this does not appear to have been the initial interpretation. Consequently, the addition of three more "in this state" phrases to the section was not inconsequential. It must be noted, however, that the phrase "in this state" is linked to the word "sold," meaning that it could distinguish the manufacture or production of an article from its sale.

[*P46] [***34] As the twentieth century unfolded, this court formally adhered to Pulp Wood. See, e.g., Pulp Wood II, 168 Wis. at 404-05; Lewis & Leidersdorf Co., 201 Wis. at 549. But the face of federalism was changing. The line between Chief Justice Marshall's mutually exclusive spheres of influence began to blur, as noted by the United States Supreme Court's decision in H.P. Hood & Sons, Inc. v. DuMond, 336 U.S. 525, 93 L. Ed. 865, 69 S. Ct. 657 (1949), in which the Court recognized "broad power in the State to protect its inhabitants against perils to health or safety, fraudulent traders and highway hazards even by use of measures which bear adversely on interstate commerce." Id. at 531-32 (citations omitted).

[*P47] By 1978 the erosion of Marshall's "spheres of influence" concept was complete. In Raymond Motor Transportation, Inc. v. Rice, 434 U.S. 429, 54 L. Ed. 2d 664, 98 S. Ct. 787 (1978), HN11[] the Court acknowledged that "state legislation, designed to serve legitimate state interests and applied without [**250] discrimination against interstate commerce, does not violate the Commerce Clause even though it affects commerce. [***35] " Id. at 440.

[*P48] The Rice Court characterized the process of evaluating a state law under the dormant commerce clause as one of "delicate adjustment" and announced a balancing test, believing that "no single conceptual approach identifies all of the factors that may bear upon a particular case." Id. at 440-41. The Court framed the inquiry as a balance between the state regulatory concern and the burden imposed on interstate commerce.

[*P49] The Court elaborated on the test courts should use to determine whether a state law unduly burdens interstate commerce:

The general rule that emerges can be phrased as follows: Where the statute regulates evenhandedly to effectuate a legitimate local public interest, and its effects on interstate commerce are only incidental, it will be upheld unless the burden imposed on such commerce is [***152] clearly excessive in relation to the putative local benefits. If a legitimate local purpose is found, then the question becomes one of degree. And the extent of the burden that will be tolerated will of course depend on the nature of the local interest involved, and on whether it could be promoted as [***36] well with a lesser impact on interstate activities.

Id. at 441-42 (quoting Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174, 90 S. Ct. 844 (1970) (internal citations omitted)).

[*P50] This "delicate" balancing test, expressing the Court's view of the commerce clause in 1978, is dramatically different from the rigid interpretation of the same clause in the late nineteenth century.

---

<sup>12</sup> The Legislature also made minor changes to what is now Wis. Stat. § 133.03 in 1923, 1945, 1947, 1957, 1969, and 1975.

[*P51] In 1980 the Wisconsin Legislature repealed and recreated Chapter 133 of the statutes. Ch. 209, [**251] Laws of 1979. As in 1893, it did not act in a vacuum. When it recreated this chapter, the legislature acted in an entirely different era of commerce clause jurisprudence than at the time of the law's original passage.

[*P52] By 1980 the United States Supreme Court had clearly abandoned the notion that there might be a "precise point, in relation to every important article, where the paramount power of Congress terminates, and that of the State begins." Thurlow, 46 U.S. at 514. That view had been replaced by the Court's new perception that HN12↑ states could burden interstate commerce unless the burden was "clearly excessive" in relation [***37] to the local benefits. See Rice, 434 U.S. at 441-42.

[*P53] Conversely, the Supreme Court had approved federal legislation under the commerce clause that might, in an earlier era, have been considered regulation of intrastate commerce. In Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 13 L. Ed. 2d 258, 85 S. Ct. 348 \(1964\), the Court's analysis was revealing:

It is said that the operation of the motel here is of a purely local character. But, assuming this to be true, "if it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze." United States v. Women's Sportswear Mfrs. Ass'n, 336 U.S. 460, 464, 93 L. Ed. 805, 69 S. Ct. 714 \(1949\). As Chief Justice Stone put it in [United States v. Darby \[312 U.S. 100, 118, 85 L. Ed. 609, 61 S. Ct. 451 \(1941\)\]](#):

The power of Congress over interstate commerce is not confined to the regulation of commerce among the states. It extends to those activities intrastate which so affect interstate commerce or the exercise of the power of Congress over it as to make regulation of them appropriate means to the attainment of a legitimate end, the [***38] exercise of the granted power of Congress to regulate [**252] interstate commerce. See [McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 4 Wheat. 316, 421, 4 L. Ed. 579].
....

Thus the power of Congress to promote interstate commerce also includes the power to regulate the local incidents thereof, including local activities in both the States of origin and destination, which might have a substantial and harmful effect upon that commerce. ....

Id. at 258 (internal citation omitted).

[*P54] If a state were to confine itself to the regulation of what remained as purely intrastate commerce after Heart of Atlanta Motel, it would not be regulating much.

[*P55] Against this new backdrop, the legislature recreated Chapter 133. Microsoft discounts the significance of the 1980 legislation, arguing that the legislature "did not intend to alter the long-standing [***153] interpretation of the act." After careful review, however, we think the 1980 action leaves little doubt of the legislature's intent to apply the Wisconsin antitrust statute to interstate commerce.

[*P56] First, 1979 Assembly Bill 831, which led to 1979 Act 209, was introduced "by request [***39] of Attorney General Bronson C. La Follette." Representative Mary Lou Munts, the principal Assembly author, had introduced a bill to repeal and recreate Chapter 133 in 1977. See 1977 A.B. 685. It proved to be very controversial and did not pass. Her legislation was revised for the 1979 session with the help of the Wisconsin Department of Justice, and the new version was given the official imprimatur of the Attorney General. In testimony on the 1979 bill, Representative Munts said: "I am very pleased to have been involved with the Justice Department in the effort to revise Chapter 133, the [**253] Wisconsin Statute on Trusts and Monopolies. We are indebted to the work of the Attorney General's office for the basic revision and to a number of attorneys with anti-trust experience for their suggestions for significant improvements in our current statutes." Testimony of Mary Lou Munts dated October 8, 1979 (located in Legislative Council Files, Madison, Wisconsin).

[*P57] On October 3, 1979, Attorney General La Follette wrote the chair of the Assembly Commerce and Consumer Affairs Committee, Representative Marjorie (Midge) Miller. He indicated that Assembly Bill 831 was a "comprehensive [****40] revision of Chapter 133, Wisconsin's antitrust law." He wrote that the "revision is the result of many hours of work by University of Wisconsin Law School faculty, members of the private bar, legislators, and members of the Department of Justice." Letter to Representative Marjorie Miller from Attorney General Bronson C. La Follette dated October 3, 1979 (located in Legislative Council files, Madison, Wisconsin).

[*P58] Nineteen years before Assembly Bill 831 was introduced, the State argued its authority to regulate interstate commerce in the Allied Chemical case and won. Three years before Assembly Bill 831 was introduced, the Wall Street Journal published a story on state antitrust enforcement. It cited Wisconsin Assistant Attorney General Michael Zaleski to the effect that in 1975, Wisconsin's antitrust division won 29 convictions against businesses, filed 32 consent decrees, and recovered almost $ 1 million. Timothy D. Schellhardt, Antitrust Enforcement Stepped Up by States: Budgets, Staffs Grow, Wall St. J., Oct. 4, 1976. Legislative files show that Zaleski played a key role in developing Assembly Bill 831. One year before Assembly Bill 831 was introduced, the Wisconsin [****41] Department of Justice argued Raymond Motor Transportation, Inc. v. [**254] Rice, in the United States Supreme Court. The case was argued by Albert Harriman, an assistant attorney general who helped write the State's brief in Allied Chemical. As noted above, Rice is one of the key cases revitalizing state power to regulate interstate commerce.

[*P59] A few months before introduction of Assembly Bill 831, Attorney General La Follette spoke at the Antitrust Seminar of the National Association of Attorneys General and stated: "It is now more likely that the wrath of state antitrust enforcement will be felt by violators than that of the federal government." Press Release, State of Wisconsin Department of Justice (May 18, 1979) (on file at Wisconsin Legislative Reference Bureau).

[*P60] Because Assembly Bill 831 was so closely linked to the Wisconsin Department of Justice, it must have reflected the thinking of the Wisconsin Department of Justice that Chapter 133 reached interstate [***154] commerce, for that was the interpretation the Department consistently gave to the statute after the Allied Chemical decision.

[*P61] Second, one of the major objectives of the 1980 legislation [****42] was to "reverse" the holding in Illinois Brick Co. v. State of Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977). In Illinois Brick, the Supreme Court concluded that indirect purchasers harmed by antitrust violations could not recover under federal antitrust law. Assembly Bill 831 addressed this deficiency in Wis. Stat. § 133.18, which provides in part: "Any person injured, directly or indirectly, by reason of anything prohibited by this chapter may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages sustained by the person . . ." (Emphasis added.)

[*P62] [**255] In his letter to Representative Marjorie Miller of October 3, 1979, Attorney General La Follette wrote:

An important new change would reverse the effect of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in the Illinois Brick case on Wisconsin law. The Court, in that case, ruled that only direct purchasers may recover damages for illegally price-fixed goods. Thus, indirect purchasers -- such as state and local governments which purchase most of their supplies through wholesalers, retailers or other middlemen -- are left out in the cold when it comes to recovering for the illegally [****43] inflated prices they and their constituents must pay. As only one example of how this adversely affects Wisconsin and its taxpayers, my office recently returned nearly a half million dollars to numerous Wisconsin schools, hospitals, municipalities, and counties from a settlement of an antitrust case against manufacturers of contract hardware. Had the Illinois Brick decision been in effect in 1973, when this case was brought, we would not have been able to recover this money for Wisconsin taxpayers.

Letter to Representative Marjorie Miller from Attorney General Bronson C. La Follette dated October 3, 1979 (located in Legislative Council files, Madison, Wisconsin).

[*P63] When the legislature permitted indirect purchasers to seek recovery for antitrust violations it certainly intended the statute to reach interstate commerce. This result was discussed and upheld in ARC America.<sup>13</sup> The Court's holding in ARC America reveals that at least under some circumstances, state antitrust [**256] statutes are expected to reach interstate commerce.<sup>14</sup> It would be completely unrealistic [***155] to interpret Wis. Stat. § 133.18 as being limited to intrastate commerce. [****44]

[*P64] [***45] Third, turning directly to the text of the legislation, there is ample evidence of changes in prior law requiring a new interpretation of the statute. This evidence supports four significant principles.

[*P65] a. Chapter 133 was repealed and recreated, not simply amended. In her testimony, Representative Munts stated:

Wisconsin's current anti-trust laws rest on a foundation begun over eighty years ago and are overdue for a comprehensive revision. . . .

[**257] Because the laws concerning anti-trust have been enacted in [] piecemeal fashion, conflicts have arisen in the interpretation and wording of the various sections. . . .

AB 831 not only clarifies the scope and intent of Wisconsin's anti-trust laws, but also insures that the state's statutes are brought into line with federal statutes. . . .

....

AB 831 . . . broadens critical sections of the statutes [citing sections including section 133.03].

In conclusion, AB 831 will eliminate many ambiguities in the present statutes. More importantly, it will improve compatibility with federal anti-trust law, enhance state enforcement and insist on the preservation of a competitive climate in Wisconsin. [***46] . . .

Testimony of Mary Lou Munts dated October 8, 1979 (located in Legislative Council files, Madison, Wisconsin) (emphasis added).

[*P66] In an October 5, 1979, memorandum to Representative Miller, a senior staff attorney for the Legislative Council, Russ Whitesel, wrote: "This Bill is a complete revision of the state anti-trust and monopoly law, Ch. 133 . . ." Wisconsin Legislative Council Staff Memorandum to Representative Midge Miller from Russ Whitesel, Senior Staff Attorney dated October 5, 1979 (located in Wisconsin Legislative Council files, Madison, Wisconsin). In testimony on October 8, 1979, a representative of Wisconsin Manufacturers and Commerce, Fred W. Shaffer, said "AB 831 does far more than revise existing Wisconsin law. It changes it significantly." Testimony of Fred W. Shaffer dated October 8, 1979 (located in Legislative Council files, Madison, Wisconsin).

<sup>13</sup> In California v. ARC America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 (1989), several states alleged violations of both federal and state antitrust law by an interstate monopoly of concrete block producers. Id. at 97. The parties settled the case, but the federal judge administering the settlement refused to allow indirect purchasers to have access to the settlement fund because he believed that federal law preempted the state antitrust statutes. Id. at 99. The Supreme Court held that the state "repeater" statutes were not preempted. Id. at 101.

<sup>14</sup> Wisconsin's Department of Justice has certainly interpreted the law as enabling it to reach activities in interstate--and even international--commerce. See Press Release, Wisconsin Department of Justice, Doyle Announces Historic Settlements With Vitamin Companies; Six Manufacturers Agree to Pay More Than $ 335 Million (Oct. 10, 2000), available at www.doj.state.wi.us. In the "vitamin cases," Wisconsin led 23 states alleging that the six companies met in secret in locations "around the world" to fix vitamin prices, harming indirect purchasers. Id. The states alleged violations of "state and federal law." Id. The six companies involved are giants in international commerce, including BASF of Germany and Eisai Company of Japan. Id. Three of the companies were European and three were Japanese. Id. None was based in the United States, let alone Wisconsin.

We recognize that the Department's conduct cannot, sua sponte, legitimize the underlying statute. However, it is persuasive evidence that in practice, commercial parties tacitly agree that Wisconsin's law may apply to interstate--even international--commerce.

[*P67] [**258] These statements contradict Microsoft's interpretation of the 1980 action and document a comprehensive revision of the law.

[*P68] b. The legislature created a very broad statement of legislative intent in a new section 133.01. This declaration said in part: "It is the intent [****47] of the legislature that this chapter be interpreted in a manner which gives the most liberal construction to achieve the aim of competition."

[*P69] Wisconsin's Little Sherman Act did not have a declaration of intent in 1914 when this court decided the Pulp Wood case. Moreover, section 133.01 now [§ 133.03] was not covered by any legislative declaration of intent until revision of the whole chapter in 1980. A previous statement of intent applied to only "ss. 133.17 [through] 133.185." Thus, the 1980 legislation not only added the phrase "most liberal construction," but also applied [***156] the legislative declaration to § 133.03 for the first time.

[*P70] HN13[] This court has often used legislative declarations as a valuable aid to our analysis. See, e.g., LeMere v. LeMere, 2003 WI 67, P15, 262 Wis. 2d 426, 663 N.W.2d 789; Wood v. City of Madison, 2003 WI 24, P18, 260 Wis. 2d 71, 659 N.W.2d 31; Ocasio v. Froedtert Mem'l Lutheran Hosp., 2002 WI 89, P14, 254 Wis. 2d 367, 646 N.W.2d 381.

[*P71] c. The Legislature deleted references to "in this state" in the Little Sherman Act portion of the chapter. Considering that [****48] Assembly Bill 831 came out of the Department of Justice and the elimination of the phrase "in this state" furthered the Department's views, a reasonable inference may be drawn that the elimination has significance. Microsoft directs our attention to Emergency One, Inc. v. Waterous Co., 23 F. Supp. 2d 959, 963-64 \(1998\), in which a federal district court faced [**259] with the same question dismissed the repeated deletion of "in this state" as insignificant. We disagree. It is true enough that we have no document addressing the issue directly. Nonetheless, in interpreting the statute in context, we believe the deletion carries some weight.

[*P72] d. If we discount the prevailing atmosphere of 1893 in an interpretation of Wis. Stat. § 133.03, we are left with an exceptionally broad statute that uses such phrases as "Every contract . . . or conspiracy," "Every person," "any contract," "any combination," and "Every person who . . . attempts to monopolize." The text itself does not permit a limiting construction.

[*P73] Finally, we address the principle of statutory interpretation stated in Zimmerman that "once a [****49] construction has been given to a statute, the construction becomes part of the statute; and it is within the province of the legislature alone to change the law." Zimmerman, 38 Wis. 2d at 633. In the Allied Chemical and Milwaukee Braves cases, this court gave a focused construction to the statute. We think it is far more likely that in 1980 the legislature acquiesced in or strengthened the interpretation of Allied Chemical than that it revised the statute with the intent of undoing that decision.

[*P74] In short, HN14[] we conclude that Chapter 133, particularly § 133.03, applies to interstate commerce, at least in some circumstances. Consistent with this holding, we withdraw the language from Conley Publishing that "the scope of Chapter 133 is limited to intrastate transactions." See Conley Publ'g, 2003 WI 119, 265 Wis. 2d 128, P16, 665 N.W.2d 879.

[*P75] The United States District Court in Milwaukee reached the same conclusion in the Emergency One case. The court extensively analyzed the history and [**260] purpose of Chapter 133, and determined that it applies to interstate commerce under some circumstances. 23 F. Supp. 2d at 966-67. [****50] Like this court, the Emergency One court was persuaded by the legislative history of the 1980 revision, particularly the portion legislatively repealing Illinois Brick, as well as our holdings in Allied Chemical and Milwaukee Braves. Emergency One, 23 F. Supp. 2d at 966-67.

[*P76] In 1997 the Seventh Circuit considered an antitrust case involving an Alabama statute in which the defendants, manufacturers and wholesalers of prescription drugs, made similar arguments to those Microsoft makes in this case. In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litigation, 123 F.3d 599, 612 \(7th Cir. 1997\). The defendants cited several cases seemingly showing that "Alabama's antitrust statute is indeed limited to intrastate commerce." Id. (citing Georgia Fruit Exchange v. Turnipseed, 9 Ala. App. 123, [***157] 62 So. 542, 546 (Ala. 1913) ("There being thus both a state and national law prohibiting unlawful combinations in restraint of trade--the one law relating to intrastate, the other to interstate, commerce . . . ")).<sup>15</sup>

2005 WI 121, *1211-284 Wis. 2d 224, **260L-700 N.W.2d 139, ***156L-2005 Wisc. LEXIS 393, ****50

[*P77] [****51] The Seventh Circuit rejected the defendant's argument. It stated:

The cases on which the defendants rely . . . date from a period in which, interstate commerce being narrowly defined, and federal power to regulate such commerce being deemed exclusive, a state statute limited to intrastate commerce would have some, albeit a strictly limited, scope and could not have a greater scope no matter how much the state wanted it to. The [**261] cases thus were not interpreting the statute; they were interpreting the Constitution as placing upper and lower bounds on the reach of the statute, and the Constitution has since been reinterpreted.

Id. at 612-13.

[*P78] The Seventh Circuit added: "If the statute is limited today as it once was to commerce that is not within the regulatory power of Congress under the commerce clause, it is a dead letter because there are virtually no sales, in Alabama or anywhere else in the United States, that are intrastate in that sense." Id. at 613. We agree.

[*P79] The Seventh Circuit thus interpreted the Alabama statute to have evolved in response to changing interpretations of the federal constitution. [****52]<sup>16</sup> In Wisconsin, the interpretation of our statute has changed not only because of evolution in constitutional theory, but also because the legislature acted to repeal and recreate Chapter 133 in 1980, with altered language.

[*P80] [****53] [**262] A number of state courts have construed statutes similar to Wisconsin's to reach interstate commerce. See, e.g., C. Bennett Building Supplies, Inc. v. Jenn Air Corp., 759 S.W.2d 883, 888 (Mo. Ct. App. 1988); State v. Sterling Theatres Co., 64 Wn.2d 761, 394 P.2d 226, 227 (Wash. 1964).

[*P81] HN15↑ We recognize that our holding implies that in some circumstances, a monopolist's conduct is actionable under either federal law, Wisconsin law, or both. This concern is not unique to antitrust law. Concerns about "double jeopardy" prosecutions date back to the adoption of the Bill of Rights. U.S. Const. Amend. V (HN16↑) "nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb". HN17↑ As a general rule, a person is not unconstitutionally subject to double jeopardy when he is tried successively by different sovereigns for the same crime. See United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 317, [***158] 55 L. Ed. 2d 303, 98 S. Ct. 1079 (1978). This rule derives from the more general concept that the states and the federal government are separate sovereigns, each entitled to enforce its own laws. Id. at 320. [****54]

[*P82] Duplicative prosecution is one thing; duplicative recovery is another. "It goes without saying that the courts can and should preclude double recovery by an individual." E.E.O.C. v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 297, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755, 122 S. Ct. 754 (2002).

<sup>15</sup> The Alabama court's statement is remarkably similar to the language in Pulp Wood: "The contract we think involved interstate commerce, and if so the federal statute is applicable and the case will be treated on that basis." Pulp Wood, 157 Wis. at 615.

<sup>16</sup> We acknowledge that the Alabama Supreme Court subsequently interpreted the same statute differently. Abbott Laboratories v. Durrett, 746 So. 2d 316, 337 n.5 (Ala. 1999). The Alabama court conducted an extensive review of the Supreme Court's commerce clause jurisprudence, as we have. Id. at 330-32. It reached the same conclusion we have: that during the late nineteenth century, the theory of "dual sovereignty" or, as we have termed it, "mutually exclusive spheres" of power, was predominant. Id. However, the Alabama court adopted an originalist construction of the statute, giving great weight to the Alabama Legislature's intent at the time it enacted the Alabama statute. Id. at 337 n.5. Specifically, the Alabama court relied on the presence of the phrase "within this state" in the original act. Id. The case here is different because, as we have discussed, our legislature repealed and recreated our antitrust act, expressly deleting all references to "in this state," after our decision in Allied Chemical.

[*P83] In summary, we conclude that Chapter 133 may reach interstate commerce under some circumstances.

C. When May Chapter 133 Reach Interstate Commerce?

[*P84] Having determined that Wisconsin's antitrust law may apply to interstate commerce under some [**263] circumstances, we are confronted with the question of what those circumstances are.

[*P85] HN18↑ A civil plaintiff filing an action under Wisconsin's antitrust act must allege that (1) actionable conduct, such as the formation of a combination or conspiracy, occurred within this state, even if its effects are felt primarily outside Wisconsin; or (2) the conduct complained of "substantially affects" the people of Wisconsin and has impacts in this state, even if the illegal activity resulting in those impacts occurred predominantly or exclusively outside this state. Allied Chemical, 9 Wis. 2d at 295. Operating with lesser standards [****55] would jeopardize the action, undermine the validity of our antitrust statute, and create the spectacle of Lilliputian harassment in Wisconsin courts. Questions of provincialism, favoritism, and undue burden on interstate commerce should be determined by resort to contemporary federal commerce clause jurisprudence. To say more is beyond the scope of this opinion.

By the Court.-The order of the circuit court is reversed and the cause is remanded.

[*P86] SHIRLEY S. ABRAHAMSON, C.J., and ANN WALSH BRADLEY, J., did not participate.

---

End of Document

In re GlaxoSmithKline PLC

Supreme Court of Minnesota

July 14, 2005, Filed

A04-2150, A04-2151

Reporter

699 N.W.2d 749 *; 2005 Minn. LEXIS 403 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,892

In the Matter of GlaxoSmithKline plc

Subsequent History: On remand at, Remanded by In re GlaxoSmithKline PLC, 713 N.W.2d 48, 2006 Minn. App. LEXIS 51 \(Minn. Ct. App., Apr. 18, 2006\)

Prior History: [**1] Court of Appeals. H. Peter Albrecht.

In re GlaxoSmithKline plc, 2005 Minn. LEXIS 61 \(2005\)

Disposition: Reversed and remanded (No. A04-2150); dismissed as moot (No. A04-2151).

Core Terms

---

confidential, documents, special proceeding, substantial rights, court of appeals, district court, discovery, merits, protective order, final order, antitrust, discretionary, notice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Relevance of Discoverable Information

HN1\[ Discovery, Privileged Communications

A civil investigative demand (CID) is a discovery tool provided by statute to aid the state in the investigation of suspected violations of Minnesota laws. Minn. Stat. § 8.31, subd. 2 (2004), authorizes the attorney general to obtain discovery from any person regarding any matter, fact or circumstance, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending investigation, in accordance with the provisions of this subdivision. The discovery may be obtained without commencement of a civil action and without leave of court.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Governments > Courts > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The Supreme Court of Minnesota applies de novo review to the court of appeals' interpretations of the rules of civil appellate procedure.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

HN3 US Department of Justice Actions, Investigations

The Supreme Court of Minnesota has defined a final order as one that ends the proceeding as far as the court is concerned or that finally determines some positive legal right of the appellant relating to the action. A confidential agreement and protective order (CID order) may be considered final if it determines all issues presented to the court in the CID proceeding. This conclusion parallels federal law, which generally recognizes that orders from proceedings related to CIDs and administrative subpoenas are appealable as "final decisions" of the district courts under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1291.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

HN4 US Department of Justice Actions, Investigations

Federal law generally recognizes that orders from proceedings related to a civil investigative demand (CID) and administrative subpoenas are appealable as "final decisions" of the district courts under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1291.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

At least three federal statutes specify that orders enforcing federal confidential agreements and protective orders (CID order) are appealable under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1291. Federal courts of appeals have held administrative subpoenas to be appealable as final decisions under § 1291.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Criminal Law & Procedure > Counsel > Right to Counsel > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > General Overview

HN6 [↓] Appellate Jurisdiction, Final Judgment Rule

Minn. R. Civ. P. 103.03(g), regarding appealable orders, does not define substantial right. "Substantial right" is defined as an essential right that potentially affects the outcome of a lawsuit and is capable of legal enforcement and protection, as distinguished from a mere technical or procedural right.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

Governments > Courts > Court Records

HN7 [↓] Discovery, Protective Orders

Court proceedings and documents enjoy a "presumption of openness" that generally may be overcome only by showing that a party's constitutional rights would be at risk if the proceeding or document is made public.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Discovery

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

Governments > Courts > Court Records

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Protection Orders

HN8 [↓] Bill of Rights, Fundamental Freedoms

Documents produced as discovery are not presumed to be public and district courts have broad discretion to issue protective orders, such as to protect trade secrets and similar commercial information. Minn. R. Civ. P. 26.03\(g\). Still, district courts presiding over civil actions are directed to weigh policies in favor of openness against the interests of the litigant in sealing the record.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Court Records

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

HN9 Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The attorney general has a statutory duty to enforce state antitrust laws. Minn. Stat. § 8.31, subd. 1 (2004) requires the attorney general to investigate suspected antitrust violations under Minn. Stat. § 325D.49-66 (2004). Finally, the state has the right under the Minnesota Government Data Practices Act (MGDPA), Minn. Stat. ch. 13 (2004), to bring an action in the district court in the county where the data is maintained to obtain disclosure of data classified as confidential or protected nonpublic. Minn. Stat. § 13.39, subd. 2a (2004).

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Court Records

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

HN10 Discovery, Protective Orders

The classification of inactive investigation data is relevant when a civil action is not brought. Minn. Stat. § 13.39, subd. 3 (2004). The pertinent question under the Minnesota Government Data Practices Act (MGDPA), Minn. Stat. ch. 13 (2004), may be whether commencement of a county action makes the investigative data public. Minn. Stat. § 13.39, subd. 2a (2004). And the conclusion that there is a First Amendment privilege for "petitioning documents" is not clearly recognized in case law.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Independent Actions

HN11 Appellate Jurisdiction, Final Judgment Rule

Minn. R. Civ. P. 103.03(g), regarding appealable orders, does not define the words "special proceeding." The Supreme Court of Minnesota has preferred an interpretation that preserves the parties' rights to appeal where appropriate. A special proceeding is defined as usually meaning such a proceeding as may be commenced independently of a pending action by petition or motion, upon notice, in order to obtain special relief. Its existence is not dependent upon the existence of any other action and it therefore is not an integral part of the original action but is separate and apart. It adjudicates by final order a substantial right distinct from any judgment entered upon the merits of the original action.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > Content & Form

HN12 Motion Practice, Content & Form

A special proceeding is a generic term for a remedy that is not part of the underlying action and that is brought by motion or petition, upon notice, for action by the court independent of the merits of the underlying action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Conferences > Pretrial Orders

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Protective Orders

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Investigations

The attorney general is authorized to serve a civil investigative demand (CID) without commencement of a civil action, and the district court is authorized to order compliance with CID procedures. Minn. Stat. § 8.31, subds. 2, 2a (2004). In a CID proceeding, the ultimate remedy to be provided by the court is the ordering of the production of discovery, which includes any determination of the public or confidential nature of discovery documents. The CID proceeding is not merged into any subsequent litigation, and discovery produced pursuant to a CID may or may not lead to a separate action. Thus, a CID order should not be characterized as a "pretrial discovery tool."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > Investigations

HN14 [blue icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Investigations

A civil investigative demand (CID) enforcement proceeding that finally determines the confidentiality of documents produced in response to a CID meets the prior definitions of a "special proceeding." It is not dependent upon the existence of any other action. It is commenced and enforced independent of the merits of the underlying action.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN15 [blue icon] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

Generally, an appellate court does not address issues that were not raised in a petition for review. But the Supreme Court of Minnesota may deviate from its usual procedure in the interest of justice. Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.04.

Syllabus

---

- When the district court issues an order finally determining the confidentiality status of documents produced pursuant to a Civil Investigative Demand, the order may be appealed of right under Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.03\(g\) as a final order affecting a substantial right in a special proceeding.

- The interests of justice do not warrant the consideration of the merits of confidentiality issues that were not raised in the petition for further review.

Counsel: For Appellants: MIKE HATCH, Attorney General, MICHAEL J VANSELOW, Assistant Attorney General, St Paul, MN.

For Respondent's: MICHAEL A LINDSAY, Dorsey & Whitney LLP, Minneapolis, MN.

For Amicus Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of American: CHARLES R. SHREFFLER, Mohrman & Kaardal, Minneapolis, MN, MARGARET M. ZWISLER, ELIZABETH B McCALLUM, Howrey LLP, Washington, D.C.

For Amicus Minnesota Newspaper Association: MARK R. ANFINSON, Minneapolis, MN.

Judges: Hanson, J.

Opinion by: Hanson

Opinion

---

[*752] Heard, considered, and decided by the court en banc.

HANSON, Justice.

We review orders of the court of appeals [**2] dismissing two appeals by appellant State of Minnesota from an order of the Hennepin County District Court determining that certain discovery documents produced pursuant to a Civil Investigative Demand were confidential and could not be made public. The court of appeals denied discretionary review under Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 105.01 and a separate panel then dismissed the appeal of right under Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.03. We granted the state's petitions for review of both orders and consolidated the matters. We reverse the dismissal of the appeal of right and remand to the court of appeals for consideration of the merits.

HN1 A Civil Investigative Demand (CID) is a discovery tool provided by statute to aid the state in the investigation of suspected violations of Minnesota laws. Minnesota Statutes § 8.31, subd. 2 (2004), authorizes the attorney general to obtain discovery from any person regarding any matter, fact or circumstance, not privileged, which is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending investigation, in accordance with the provisions of this subdivision. The discovery may be obtained without commencement of a civil action and without [**3] leave of court * * *.

The state served a CID on respondent GlaxoSmithKline plc (GSK), a pharmaceutical company that the state suspected of committing antitrust violations by preventing Canadian pharmacies from supplying prescription drugs to United States consumers. The CID requested the production of documents concerning, among other things, GSK's sales of drugs in Canada and its communications with Canadian pharmacies that sold drugs in the United States.

Before any documents were produced, GSK and the state entered a Confidentiality Agreement that (1) permitted GSK to mark documents as "confidential" if they contained trade secret information or if GSK could assert "another legal basis for treating the documents as confidential, including * * * commercial information that could be subject to a protective order pursuant to Minnesota Rule of Civil Procedure 26.03"; (2) required the state to use confidential documents solely for the "investigation and any litigation arising from the investigation"; and (3) stated that if the state objected to a confidentiality designation or received a third-party request for access to a document, the state would give 10-day notice to GSK and [**4] GSK then could move the district court to resolve the issue. The Confidentiality Agreement specified that if the state were to commence litigation, the agreement "shall continue to govern * * * until such time as the Court should modify, terminate, or supersede it."

After GSK produced some documents, the state brought a motion in the Hennepin County District Court to compel production of further documents, and GSK countered with a motion for a protective order. The court granted a Protective Order that largely mirrored the Confidentiality Agreement, but also contained a provision stating that confidential documents filed with the court in any resulting litigation must be filed under seal, "pending further Order of the presiding judge in such proceedings." GSK then produced additional documents--the vast majority of which were marked as "confidential." The state filed a second motion in Hennepin County District Court for an order declaring that about 45 of those documents were [*753] not confidential under the Confidentiality Agreement, the Protective Order, the Minnesota Government Data Practices Act (MGDPA), Minn. Stat. ch. 13 (2004), or Minn. R. Civ. P. 26.03 (which governs protective [**5] orders).

Five days after a hearing on its motion, the state commenced a civil antitrust action against GSK in Ramsey County District Court and provided a copy of the complaint to the judge presiding over the CID proceeding in Hennepin County. On October 13, 2004, the Hennepin County District Court denied the state's motion, ruling that the documents were to remain confidential because (1) civil investigative data do not become "inactive" under the MGDPA when a suit is commenced; (2) the documents were "petitioning documents subject to First Amendment privilege," thus disclosure was not required under Minn. R. Civ. P. 26.03; and (3) public disclosure was not permitted by terms of the Confidential Agreement and the Protective Order (the CID order).

The state appealed the CID order by simultaneously filing a Notice of Appeal and a Petition for Discretionary Review. A three-judge special-term panel of the court of appeals denied discretionary review under Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 105.01, holding that the petition "does not establish that the district court's enforcement of the state's agreement to maintain confidentiality (even if litigation resulted) warrants discretionary review." [\[\*\*6\] In the Matter of GlaxoSmithKline plc](#), No. A04-2151 (Minn. App. Dec. 8, 2004).

A separate special-term panel of the court of appeals subsequently granted GSK's motion to dismiss the state's appeal of right on grounds that the appeal was taken from a nonappealable order. In the Matter of GlaxoSmithKline plc, No. A04-2150 (Minn. App. Dec. 22, 2004). The court rejected the state's first argument that the CID order was a final order affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding under Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.03\(g\). The court held that "[a] motion to compel compliance with a CID under Minn. Stat. § 8.31, subd. 2a, is not a special proceeding because a CID is a pretrial discovery tool, not a remedy." The court further rejected the state's arguments that the CID order was appealable under other parts of rule 103.03--as an injunction under part (b), as a collateral order under part (j), or as an order that determines the action and prevents a judgment under part (e).

The state submitted two petitions for review to this court, asking us to reinstate the appeal and remand to the court of appeals. Then, on brief, the state argued that we should [\[\*\*7\]](#) decide the merits of the CID order, even though not requested in the petitions for further review. GSK argues that this is not an "exceptional case" warranting departure from our usual procedure to only review issues raised in the petition for further review.

I.

We begin our analysis with the state's first argument that the CID order was appealable of right as "a final order, decision or judgment affecting a substantial right made in an administrative or other special proceeding." Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.03\(g\).<sup>1</sup> We HN2 apply de novo review to court of appeals' interpretations of the rules of civil appellate procedure. See Kastner v. Star Trails Ass'n, 646 N.W.2d 235, 238 (Minn. 2002).

[\[\*754\]](#) First, we examine whether the CID [\[\*\*8\]](#) order was a "final order" under rule 103.03\(g\). We HN3 have defined a final order as one that "ends the proceeding as far as the court is concerned or that finally determines some positive legal right of the appellant relating to the action." In re Estate of Janecek, 610 N.W.2d 638, 642 (Minn. 2000) (holding that the order disqualifying an attorney in a probate proceeding was a final order, and citing Weinzierl v. Lien, 296 Minn. 539, 540, 209 N.W.2d 424, 424 (1973)). The CID order may be considered final because it determined all issues presented to the court in the CID proceeding. This conclusion parallels HN4 federal law, which generally recognizes that orders from proceedings related to CIDs and administrative subpoenas are appealable as "final decisions" of the district courts under 28 U.S.C. § 1291 \(2000\).<sup>2</sup> Cf. Gordon v. Microsoft

<sup>1</sup> We have examined a CID order once before and did so under discretionary review. Kohn v. State, 336 N.W.2d 292, 295-97 (Minn. 1983). But we did not explain why discretionary review was selected or even discuss review as of right. Id. at 294.

<sup>2</sup> HN5 At least three federal statutes specify that orders enforcing federal CIDs are appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. See 15 U.S.C. § 57b-1\(h\) \(2000\) (Federal Trade Commission's CID); 15 U.S.C. § 1314\(e\) \(2000\) (federal antitrust CID); 31 U.S.C. § 3733\(j\)\(5\) \(2000\) (False Claims Act CID). We have not previously examined the appealability of attorney general administrative subpoenas issued pursuant to Minn. Stat. § 8.16 (2004) and express no opinion on the question here. But it is helpful for our present analysis to note that federal courts of appeals have held administrative subpoenas to be appealable as final decisions under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. See Univ. of Med. & Dentistry of N.J. v. Corrigan, 347 F.3d 57, 63 (3d Cir. 2003); United States v. Legal Servs. for New York City, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 83, 249 F.3d 1077, 1080-81 (D.C. Cir. 2001); In re Subpoena Duces Tecum, 228

Corp., 645 N.W.2d 393, 399-400 (Minn. 2002) (examining federal law to determine standards for appealability of class certification orders in Minnesota courts).

[**9] Next, we examine whether a "substantial right" is at issue. HN6 [↑] Rule 103.03(g) does not define substantial right, and our prior interpretations of the words have been fact specific. See In re Janecek, 610 N.W.2d at 642 (indicating that a person has substantial right to be represented by an attorney of one's choice); In re Trust of Tufford, 275 Minn. 66, 67 n.1, 145 N.W.2d 59, 60 n.1 (1966) (holding that right to terminate a trust is a substantial right); see also Douglas D. McFarland & William J. Keppel, Minnesota Civil Practice § 2719 (3d ed. 1999) (observing that "the appellate court will rarely find an order in a special proceeding nonappealable on the ground that it does not affect a substantial right"); Black's Law Dictionary 1349 (8th ed. 2004) (defining substantial right as "an essential right that potentially affects the outcome of a lawsuit and is capable of legal enforcement and protection, as distinguished from a mere technical or procedural right").

The state suggests that a substantial right is at issue because the order requiring the state to keep the documents confidential will envelop the entire litigation in a "shroud" [**10] of secrecy," requiring the trial and any appeals to take place behind closed doors. GSK counters that no substantial right is at issue because the state is not hindered from prosecuting the merits of the antitrust case, and the CID order may be appealed after the merits ultimately are decided. The court of appeals did [*755] not examine whether a substantial right was at issue.

Although the state's prediction of a "secret" trial is premature, we cannot ignore that HN7 [↑] court proceedings and documents enjoy a "presumption of openness" that generally may be overcome only by showing that a party's constitutional rights would be at risk if the proceeding or document is made public. See Minneapolis Star & Tribune Co. v. Schumacher, 392 N.W.2d 197, 203-04 (Minn. 1986) (citing Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 573, 575-81, 65 L. Ed. 2d 973, 100 S. Ct. 2814 (1980)); see also Gannett Co., Inc., v. DePasquale, 443 U.S. 368, 386 n.15, 61 L. Ed. 2d 608, 99 S. Ct. 2898 (1979) ("For many centuries, both civil and criminal trials have traditionally been open to the public."). In civil actions, "each case involves a weighing of the policies in favor of openness against the" [**11] interests of the litigant in sealing the record. In re Rahr Malting Co., 632 N.W.2d 572, 576 (Minn. 2001) (citing Schumacher, 392 N.W.2d at 202-03).

GSK is correct that HN8 [↑] documents produced as discovery are not presumed to be public and that district courts have broad discretion to issue protective orders, such as to protect trade secrets and similar commercial information. Minn. R. Civ. P. 26.03(g); Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart, 467 U.S. 20, 33, 81 L. Ed. 2d 17, 104 S. Ct. 2199 (1984) (holding that "pretrial depositions and interrogatories are not public components of a civil trial"). And GSK has claimed that a constitutional right--a "petitioning privilege" under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution--is implicated. Compare Schumacher, 392 N.W.2d at 204 (holding that there is no First Amendment right for the public to access sealed settlement documents and transcripts). Still, district courts presiding over civil actions are directed to weigh "policies in favor of openness against the interests of the litigant in sealing the record." In re Rahr Malting Co., 632 N.W.2d at 576.

We cannot ignore HN9 [↑] the [**12] attorney general's statutory duty to enforce state antitrust laws. Minn. Stat. § 8.31, subd. 1 (2004) (requiring attorney general to investigate suspected antitrust violations under Minn. Stat. § 325D.49-66 (2004)). To be fully effective, such enforcement usually must be done publicly, for educational purposes and to deter similar conduct by others. See, e.g., Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 473, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) (referencing "broad remedial and deterrent objectives" of federal antitrust law). In addition, the state is a party to the Confidentiality Agreement and has a right to seek enforcement of its terms, including enforcement of the state's right to object to GSK's confidentiality designations and to seek a judicial determination of confidentiality. Similarly, the state has the right under the Protective Order to object to GSK's

---

F.3d 341, 345-46 (4th Cir. 2000); E.E.O.C. v. Citicorp Diners Club, Inc., 985 F.2d 1036, 1038 (10th Cir. 1993); Sheehan v. Doyle, 513 F.2d 895, 898 (1st Cir. 1975). A decision from the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals is particularly instructive. In In re Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Co., the panel sua sponte asked the parties to argue whether an order involving an administrative subpoena was appealable under 28 U.S.C. § 1291, as an interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292 (2000), or under the collateral order doctrine. 214 F.3d 586, 589 (5th Cir. 2000). The panel concluded that appeal of right was most appropriate because "an order enforcing an administrative subpoena is considered a final order." Id.

designations and to seek court review of those designations. Finally, the state has the right under the MGDPA to "bring an action in the district court in the county where the data is maintained to obtain disclosure of data classified as confidential or protected [**13] nonpublic." Minn. Stat. § 13.39, subd. 2a (2004). We conclude that substantial rights of the state are at issue in this appeal.<sup>3</sup>

[**14] [*756] Finally, we examine whether the CID order resulted from a "special proceeding." HN11↑ Rule 103.03\(g\) does not define the words "special proceeding." We have preferred an interpretation that preserves the parties' rights to appeal where appropriate. As we observed in Willeck v. Willeck:

A special proceeding is defined as usually meaning such a proceeding as may be commenced independently of a pending action by petition or motion, upon notice, in order to obtain special relief. Its existence is not dependent upon the existence of any other action and it therefore is not an integral part of the original action but is separate and apart. It adjudicates by final order a substantial right distinct from any judgment entered upon the merits of the original action.

286 Minn. 553, 554 n.1, 176 N.W.2d 558, 559 n.1 \(1970\).

On occasion, we have referenced the remedial nature of a special proceeding. See In re Janecek, 610 N.W.2d at 642 (stating that HN12↑ a special proceeding is a "generic term for a remedy that is not part of the underlying action and that is brought by motion or petition, upon notice, for action by the court independent of the merits of [**15] the underlying action"); Chapman v. Dorsey, 230 Minn. 279, 283, 41 N.W.2d 438, 440-41 \(1950\) (stating that a special proceeding is a "generic term for any civil remedy in a court of justice which is not of itself an ordinary action"). The court of appeals held that a CID order does not result from a special proceeding "because a CID is a pretrial discovery tool, not a remedy."

We view a CID order differently. HN13↑ The attorney general is authorized to serve a CID "without commencement of a civil action," and the district court is authorized to order compliance with CID procedures. Minn. Stat. § 8.31, subds. 2, 2a (2004). In a CID proceeding, the ultimate remedy to be provided by the court is the ordering of the production of discovery, which includes any determination of the public or confidential nature of discovery documents. The CID proceeding is not merged into any subsequent litigation, and discovery produced pursuant to a CID may or may not lead to a separate action. Thus, a CID order should not be characterized as a "pretrial discovery tool."

HN14↑ A CID enforcement proceeding that finally determines the confidentiality of documents produced in [**16] response to a CID meets our prior definitions of a "special proceeding." It "is not dependent upon the existence of any other action." Willeck, 286 Minn. at 554 n.1, 176 N.W.2d at 559 n.1. It is commenced and enforced "independent of the merits of the underlying action." In re Janecek, 610 N.W.2d at 642. In addition, GSK had notice of the proceeding and participated in it. For these reasons, we conclude that the CID order arose from a special proceeding.

We hold that when a district court issues an order in a CID proceeding that finally determines the confidentiality of documents produced, the order may be appealed of right under Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.03\(g\). [*757] Because <sup>3</sup> To the extent that our determination of whether the state's rights are substantial involves consideration of the likelihood that the state will prevail on the merits of the appeal, we observe that the district court's analysis underlying the CID order may not have been complete. The district court's conclusion that the state's request was precluded by the Protective Order or the Confidentiality Agreement does not consider that both documents specifically authorized the state to object to GSK's confidentiality designations and to seek district court review. The conclusion that the documents are not "inactive investigative data" under the MGDPA may answer the wrong question. HN10↑ The classification of inactive investigation data is relevant when a civil action is not brought. Minn. Stat. § 13.39, subd. 3 (2004). The pertinent question under the MGDPA may be whether commencement of the Ramsey County action makes the investigative data public. Id., subd. 2a. And the conclusion that there is a First Amendment privilege for "petitioning documents" is not clearly recognized in case law.

this holding resolves the appealability question, we need not consider whether the order may be appealed under other parts of rule 103.03, or whether the court of appeals abused its discretion by denying discretionary review.

II.

Next, we examine whether it is appropriate for us to consider the merits of the CID order as to whether the documents are confidential. The state's petitions to this court requested remand to the court of appeals and did not request that we examine the merits. [\[\*\*17\]](#) Subsequently, the state argued on brief that we should decide the issues on the merits in the "interest of justice" pursuant to Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.04.

HN15  Generally, we do not address issues that were not raised in a petition for review. Anderly v. City of Minneapolis, 552 N.W.2d 236, 239-40 (Minn. 1996); accord Northwest Racquet Swim & Health Club v. Deloitte & Touche, 535 N.W.2d 612, 613 n.1 (Minn. 1995); Hapka v. Paquin Farms, 458 N.W.2d 683, 685-86 (Minn. 1990). But the state is correct that we may deviate from our usual procedure in the interest of justice. Minn. R. Civ. App. P. 103.04; see also Putz v. Putz, 645 N.W.2d 343, 350 (Minn. 2002) (concluding that "justice requires" consideration of child-support issue not previously raised because the court system has a key role in ensuring welfare of children).

It is unclear whether GSK might have argued its position on the merits more extensively had these issues been described in the state's petition for further review and fully developed in the state's brief. For this reason, we apply the general rule that we will consider only issues raised in a petition [\[\*\*18\]](#) for review. Anderly, 552 N.W.2d at 239-40. We reverse the order of the court of appeals dismissing the appeal of right in case no. A04-2150 and remand to the court of appeals. See, e.g., Pulju v. Metro. Prop. & Cas., 535 N.W.2d 608, 609 (Minn. 1995). In light of our ruling in case no. A04-2150, we dismiss case no. A04-2151 as moot.

Reversed and remanded to the court of appeals (No. A04-2150); dismissed as moot (No. A04-2151).

---

End of Document

Medtronic Navigation, Inc. v. BrainLAB Medizinische Computersystems GmbH

United States District Court for the District of Colorado

July 14, 2005, Decided ; July 14, 2005, Filed

Civil Action No. 98-cv-1072-RPM

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21695 *; 2005 WL 1661081

MEDTRONIC NAVIGATION, INC., MEDTRONIC SOFAMOR DANEK, INC., SOFAMOR DANEK HOLDINGS, INC. and ST. LOUIS UNIVERSITY, Plaintiffs, v. BRAINLAB MEDIZINISCHE COMPUTERSYSTEMS GMBH, BRAINLAB AG, a German corporation, BRAINLAB USA, INC., a Delaware corporation, and BRAINLAB, INC., a Delaware corporation Defendants.

Subsequent History: Count dismissed at, Claim dismissed by Medtronic Navigation v. Brainlab Medizinische Computersystems GmbH, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38256 \(D. Colo., Sept. 8, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

patents, unfair competition, counterclaim, Unfair, plaintiffs', bundling

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of § 2 of the Sherman Act provided the other elements necessary to a § 2 case are present.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Scope

HN3 [down arrow] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

Enforcement of a patent alleged to have been obtained through inequitable conduct in the Patent Office does not give rise to a claim under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Scope

HN4 [down arrow] False Designation of Origin, Elements of False Designation of Origin

Marketplace communications by a patentee concerning its patent may be actionable under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)\(1\), where the marketplace conduct is undertaken in bad faith.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Health Insurance > Reimbursement > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Public Contracts Law > Voiding Contracts > Bribes, Gratuities & Kickbacks

HN5 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

42 U.S.C.S. § 1320a-7b\(b\)\(2\)\(b\) makes it a criminal offense to offer any compensation to induce any person to purchase any good for which payment may be made under a Federal health care program.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Public Contracts Law > Voiding Contracts > Bribes, Gratuities & Kickbacks

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

HN6 Public Contracts, Bribes, Gratuities & Kickbacks

The Anti-Kickback statute, 42 U.S.C.S. § 1320a-7b\(b\)\(2\)\(b\), is a criminal statute and does not provide a private right of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See Col. Rev. Stat. § 6-2-108.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

A private right of action is provided in Col. Rev. Stat. § 6-2-111\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See Col. Rev. Stat. § 6-2-111\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

An element of a claim under Col. Rev. Stat. § 6-2-108 is injury of a competitor.

Counsel: [*1] For Surgical Navigation Technologies, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff: Conor Fitzgerald Farley, Lee Frederick Johnston, James Edward Hartley, Holland & Hart, LLP-Denver CO, Denver, CO; J. James Li, Vera M. Elson, McDermott, Will & Emery-Palo Alto California, Palo Alto, CA; Krista Leigh Vink Venegas, McDermott, Will & Emery-Los Angeles California, Los Angeles, CA.

For Sofamor Danek Group, Inc., an Indiana corporation, Plaintiff: J. James Li, Vera M. Elson, McDermott, Will & Emery-Palo Alto California, Palo Alto, CA.

For Sofamor Danek Holdings, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Medtronic Sofamor Danek, Inc., an Indiana corporation, Plaintiffs: Conor Fitzgerald Farley, Lee Frederick Johnston, James Edward Hartley, Holland & Hart, LLP-Denver CO, Denver, CO; J. James Li, Vera M. Elson, McDermott, Will & Emery-Palo Alto California, Palo Alto, CA; Krista Leigh Vink Venegas, McDermott, Will & Emery-Los Angeles California, Los Angeles, CA; Kurt A. Luther, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow Garrett & Dunner-DC, Washington, DC; Leslie I. Bookoff, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner-DC, Washington, DC.

For Medtronic Navigation, Inc., formerly known as Surgical Navigation [*2] Technologies, Inc., Plaintiff: Conor Fitzgerald Farley, James Edward Hartley, Holland & Hart, LLP-Denver CO, Denver, CO; Christopher D. Bright, McDermott, Will & Emery-Irvine CA, Irvine, CA.

For Dartmouth College, Trustees of, Plaintiff: Conor Fitzgerald Farley, James Edward Hartley, Holland & Hart, LLP-Denver CO, Denver, CO.

For BrainLAB Medizinishche Computersystems GmbH, a German corporation, BrainLAB USA, Inc., a Delaware corporation, BrainLAB AG, a German corporation, Defendants: Jay R. Campbell, John J. Del Col, Joshua M. Ryland, Renner, Otto, Boisselle & Sklar, LLP, Cleveland, OH; Kyle B. Fleming, Electrolux, Cleveland, OH; L. Andrew Cooper, Marc David Flink, Baker & Hostetler-Colorado, Denver, CO; Thomas H. Shunk, Baker & Hostetler-Ohio, Cleveland, OH.

For St. Louis University, a Missouri corporation, Plaintiff: Conor Fitzgerald Farley, Lee Frederick Johnston, James Edward Hartley, Holland & Hart, LLP-Denver CO, Denver, CO; J. James Li, Vera M. Elson, McDermott, Will & Emery-Palo Alto California, Palo Alto, CA; Krista Leigh Vink Venegas, McDermott, Will & Emery-Los Angeles California, Los Angeles, CA; Kurt A. Luther, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow Garrett & Dunner-DC, [*3] Washington, DC; Leslie I. Bookoff, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner-DC, Washington, DC; David W. Harlan, Senniger Powers, St. Louis, MO.

For BrainLAB Medizinishche, Computersystems GmbH, BrainLAB USA, Inc., Counter Claimants: Jay R. Campbell, Renner, Otto, Boisselle & Sklar, LLP, Cleveland, OH; L. Andrew Cooper, Marc David Flink, Baker & Hostetler-Colorado, Denver, CO; Thomas H. Shunk, Baker & Hostetler-Ohio, Cleveland, OH.

For Surgical Navigation Technologies, Inc., St. Louis University, Medtronic Sofamor Danek, Inc., Counter Defendants: James Edward Hartley, Holland & Hart, LLP-Denver CO, Denver, CO.

For BrainLAB, Inc., Counter Claimant: Thomas H. Shunk, Baker & Hostetler-Ohio, Cleveland, OH.

For Sofamor Danek Holdings, Inc., Counter Defendant: James Edward Hartley, Holland & Hart, LLP-Denver CO, Denver, CO; Kurt A. Luther, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow Garrett & Dunner-DC, Washington, DC; Leslie I. Bookoff, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner-DC, Washington, DC.

Judges: Richard P. Matsch, Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: Richard P. Matsch

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON DEFENDANTS' UNFAIR COMPETITION COUNTERCLAIM

[*4] The defendants (collectively, "BrainLAB") allege in their eighth counterclaim:

Plaintiffs have competed unfairly through various improper activities including bringing suit on a patent knowing that it is not infringed by the defendants and that the said patent is invalid and/or unenforceable, using this suit as a marketing ploy, using this suit as a means to settle other conflicts between the parties and improperly characterizing this suit in conversations with customers and potential customers.

(Countercl. P 20; Answer to Fourth Am. Compl). BrainLAB claims that the plaintiffs have engaged in unfair competition "under federal law, under the laws of the State of Colorado and under common law." (Id. P 21).

In response to contention interrogatories served by the plaintiffs, BrainLAB identified two categories of allegedly anti-competitive conduct. First, BrainLAB asserted that the plaintiffs had actual knowledge that the Bucholz patents were invalid at the time the lawsuit was commenced, "making the institution and maintenance of this lawsuit an act of unfair competition." Second, BrainLAB asserted that "SNT<sup>1</sup> routinely ties the pricing of StealthStation products [*5] and related items to the sales of other products made and sold by the Medtronic Family' of companies," and that such tying "may be a violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7b\(b\)...."

The plaintiffs moved for summary judgment, arguing that neither the alleged fraudulent procurement of the Bucholz patents, nor the alleged "bundling" supports a claim for unfair competition under state or federal law. In its opposition brief, BrainLAB identified three bases for its unfair competition counterclaim: (1) § 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) § 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act, and (3) the Colorado Unfair Practices Act, specifically C.R.S. § 6-2-108 and § 6-2-111.

The Sherman Act, § 2. In Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 174, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 (1965), the United States [*6] Supreme Court held that HN1 enforcement of a patent procured by fraud on the Patent Office may be violative of § 2 of the Sherman Act provided the other elements necessary to a § 2 case are present." BrainLAB has alleged that during the patent application process Dr. Richard Bucholz of St. Louis University misrepresented his inventorship of the 454 and 183 patents by failing to disclose to the Patent Office that Dr. Waldean Schulz was a co-inventor. BrainLAB's affirmative defense of inequitable conduct is premised on its contention that this omission renders the Bucholz patents unenforceable. (Answer to Fourth Am. Compl. PP 67-68). BrainLAB now asserts that the plaintiffs have violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by bringing suit on the Bucholz patents, knowing these patents are unenforceable. BrainLAB's position is that its unfair competition claim encompasses a Walker Process antitrust claim.

BrainLAB never pleaded a claim arising under § 2 of the Sherman Act, and it did not reveal during discovery that it was pursuing a Walker Process antitrust claim. BrainLAB's effort to include a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act within its claim for unfair competition is untimely.

---

<sup>1</sup> Surgical Navigation Technologies, Inc. ("SNT") is now known as Medtronic Navigation, Inc. Medtronic Navigation, Inc. has been substituted for SNT as a plaintiff in this action.

[*7] The Lanham Act. BrainLAB next argues that the plaintiffs have engaged in unfair competition prohibited under the Lanham Act by bringing suit on the allegedly unenforceable Bucholz patents, and by using the Bucholz patents as a marketing tool.

HN2 Section 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act provides:

(1) Any person who, on or in connection with any goods or services, or any container for goods, uses in commerce any word, term, name, symbol, or device, or any combination thereof, or any false designation of origin, false or misleading description of fact, or false or misleading representation of fact, which --

(A) is likely to cause confusion, or to cause mistake, or to deceive as to the affiliation, connection, or association of such person with another person, or as to the origin, sponsorship, or approval of his or her goods, services, or commercial activities by another person, or

(B) in commercial advertising or promotion, misrepresents the nature, characteristics, qualities, or geographic origin of his or her or another person's goods, services, or commercial activities, shall be liable in a civil action by any person who believes that he or she is or is [*8] likely to be damaged by such act.

15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\)\(1\). HN3 Enforcement of a patent alleged to have been obtained through inequitable conduct in the Patent Office does not give rise to a claim under the Lanham Act. Pro-Mold and Tool Co. v. Great Lakes Plastics, Inc., 75 F.3d 1568, 1575 \(Fed. Cir. 1996\). HN4 Marketplace communications by a patentee concerning its patent may be actionable under the Lanham Act where the marketplace conduct is undertaken in bad faith. Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340, 1353 \(Fed. Cir. 1999\).

BrainLAB has submitted four documents that it contends are evidence of misleading market-directed statements made by SNT. One is an article from the St. Louis Business Journal dated February 12, 2004. (Defs.' opp'n br., Ex. D). This article quotes SNT's counsel as stating that Dr. Bucholz's invention made neurosurgery "much more accurate than it was 10 years ago." The second document is a press release issued by St. Louis University on March 10, 2003. (Ex. E). This press release states that "Bucholz's earlier patented image guided surgical tool, the StealthStation, registers objects that don't [*9] move in relation to each other -- the skull and the brain -- and gives the physicians control of precise movements during surgery." The third document is an article from the St. Louis Business Journal dated February 15, 2002, describing SNT's StealthStation as the brain mapping device invented and patented by Dr. Bucholz. (Ex. F). The fourth document is a selection from the User Manual for the StealthStation's Spine Software. (Ex. H). The manual refers to the spine application as including the patented Bucholz concept of providing free-hand localization and dynamic referencing. BrainLAB characterizes these documents as showing that SNT has used the Bucholz patents as a marketing tool, knowing that the Bucholz patents were fraudulently procured.

The evidence submitted by BrainLAB is not sufficient to support a Lanham Act claim. In Zenith, the alleged wrongful acts of the patentee were statements to customers that a competitor's products infringed its patents and representations that its patents could not be designed around. There is no evidence of conduct of that nature by the patentee in this case. BrainLAB has not submitted any evidence showing that SNT disparaged BrainLAB's products [*10] through marketplace communications. There is no evidence that SNT represented itself to be the exclusive source of image guided surgery equipment. BrainLAB emphasizes Exhibit E, the press release dated March 10, 2003, in which Dr. Bucholz is quoted as saying, "Almost no one does intracranial surgery without image guidance now." Contrary to BrainLAB's contention, this press release does not imply that SNT is the exclusive source of image guided surgery equipment. Moreover, BrainLAB has not shown that the purportedly misleading statements were likely to cause confusion among consumers or influence purchasing decisions.

The Colorado Unfair Practices Act. The other prong of BrainLAB's unfair competition claim involves an alleged bundling scheme by two Medtronic entities, SNT and Medtronic Sofamor Danek. BrainLAB does not assert that these entities engaged in any tying arrangements prohibited by antitrust law, but it contends that the alleged bundling violated the federal Anti-Kickback statute, 42 U.S.C. § 1320a-7b. HN5 [↑] Subsection (b)(2)(B) of that statute makes it a criminal offense to offer any compensation to induce any person to purchase any good for which [*11] payment may be made under a Federal health care program.

HN6 [↑] The Anti-Kickback statute is a criminal statute and does not provide a private right of action. BrainLAB apparently concedes this point, arguing instead that SNT's bundling activities violated the following provision of the Colorado Unfair Practices Act:

HN7 [↑] The secret payment or allowance of rebates, refunds, commissions, or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, or secretly extending to certain purchasers special services or privileges not extended to all purchasers upon like terms and conditions, to the injury of a competitor and where such payment or allowance tends to destroy competition, is an unfair trade practice.

C.R.S. § 6-2-108. HN8 [↑] A private right of action is provided in C.R.S. § 6-2-111\(1\):

HN9 [↑] Any person, firm, private corporation, municipal corporation, public corporation, or trade association may maintain an action to enjoin a continuance of any act in violation of sections 6-2-103 to 6-2-108 or section 6-2-110 and, if injured thereby, for the recovery of damages. If, in such action, the court finds that the defendant is [*12] violating or has violated any of the provisions of sections 6-2-103 to 6-2-108 or section 6-2-110, it shall enjoin the defendant from a continuance of the violations. It shall not be necessary that actual damages to the plaintiff be alleged or proved. In addition to such injunctive relief, the plaintiff in said action shall be entitled to recover from the defendant three times the amount of the actual damages, if any, sustained.

BrainLAB argues that its counterclaim for unfair competition encompasses a claim under these Colorado statutes.

BrainLAB's claim under the Colorado Unfair Practices Act is untimely. BrainLAB did not specifically plead this statutory claim. In its response to the plaintiffs' contention interrogatories BrainLAB did not identify these statutes as providing a basis for its unfair competition counterclaim. At this stage, BrainLAB cannot assert a claim under the Colorado Unfair Practice Act under the broad label of unfair competition.

In addition, HN10 [↑] an element of a claim under C.R.S. § 6-2-108 is injury of a competitor, and BrainLAB has provided no evidence showing that it was injured as a result of the alleged bundling activities. [*13] BrainLAB merely asserts that the offering of illegal and secret discounts harms competition generally. BrainLAB's claim under the Colorado Unfair Practices Act fails for this reason as well.

Based on the foregoing, it is ORDERED that the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment dismissing defendants' unfair competition counterclaim is granted; it is FURTHER ORDERED that the plaintiffs' unopposed motion filed February 18, 2005, for permission to file under seal Appendices 3-10 to their memorandum in support of plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on defendants' counterclaim for unfair competition is granted.

Dated: July 14th, 2005

BY THE COURT:

Richard P. Matsch, Senior District Judge

In re Enron Corp.

United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York

July 18, 2005, Decided

Chapter 11, Case No. 01 B 16034 (AJG) (Confirmed)

Reporter

2005 Bankr. LEXIS 3471 *; 2005 WL 3873895

In re: ENRON CORP., et al., Reorganized Debtors.

Notice: NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Core Terms

---

filed rate doctrine, electricity, Claimants, tariff, preemption, rates, wholesale, energy, cases, state law claim, anti-trust law, market-based, regulation, preempted, markets, sales, violations, state law, anti-competitive, interstate, manipulation, transactions, antitrust, refunds, Federal Power Act, commerce, entities, reasons

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > Preemption

HN1 [down arrow] Federal Common Law, Preemption

Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the Supremacy Clause, U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. Where Congress manifests intent to occupy an entire regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > Preemption

HN2 [down arrow] Federal Common Law, Preemption

In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted (1) when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field (field preemption), and (2) to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN3[ Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

State actions against wholesale electricity suppliers alleging violations of California's unfair business practices law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, are preempted by Federal Power Act where the conduct the state sought to condemn was expressly governed by tariffs and encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, both to enforce and to seek remedy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN4[ Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) has been granted broad authority by Congress, in addition to the authority to determine the just and reasonable rates for wholesale power. The statute delegates to the FERC exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states. Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states. 16 U.S.C.S. §§ 824-824m.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN5[ Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit disgorgement and refunds. Further, FERC can proceed by rule making rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue discrimination on the part of individual utilities. Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C.S. §§ 824d, 824e; Department of Energy Organization Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 7173\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

HN6[ Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

"Anomalous market behavior" is (1) behavior that departs significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include (a) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; (b) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; (c) unusual trades or transactions; (d) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and (e) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN7[ Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. The filed rate doctrine forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority. The purpose of the doctrine is preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN8** Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

Reporting requirements are an integral part of a tariff, with Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's implied enforcement mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Judicial Review

**HN9** Federal Power Act, Judicial Review

Implicit in Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Judicial Review

**HN10** Federal Power Act, Judicial Review

The filed rate doctrine applies where marketers had not properly reported to Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), where such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > General Overview

**HN11** Civil Procedure, Pleading & Practice

Injury implies violation of a legal right.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

**HN12** Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

Under the filed rate doctrine, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Judicial Review

HN13[] Federal Power Act, Judicial Review

Remedies for breach and non-performance of Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC)-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN14[] Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that (a) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate making issues, (b) courts lack the competence to set utility rates, and (c) the interference of courts in the rate making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime.

Counsel: [*1] For Reorganized Debtors, Special Counsel: Edward A. Smith, Esq., Of Counsel, CADWALADER, WICKERSHAM & TAFT LLP, New York, NY; Mark C. Ellenberg, Esq., David F. Williams, Esq., Of Counsel, Washington, DC.

For Fallbrook Public Utility District, Borrego Water District, Ramona Municipal Water District, Vista Irrigation District, and Yuima Municipal Water District: C. Michael Cowett, Esq., Robert J. Hanna, Esq., James B. Gilpin, Esq., Mary E. Coburn, Esq., Of Counsel, BEST BEST & KRIEGER LLP, San Diego, CA.

Judges: Arthur J. Gonzalez, UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE.

Opinion by: Arthur J. Gonzalez

Opinion

---

OPINION SUSTAINING DEBTORS' OBJECTION TO PROOF OF CLAIM NO. 12233, FILED BY FALLBROOK PUBLIC UTILITY DISTRICT; TO PROOF OF CLAIM NO. 12234, FILED BY BORREGO WATER DISTRICT; TO PROOF OF CLAIM NO. 12235 FILED BY RAMONA MUNICIPAL WATER DISTRICT; TO PROOF OF CLAIM NO. 12236 FILED BY VISTA IRRIGATION DISTRICT; AND TO PROOF OF CLAIM NO. 12237 FILED BY YUIMA MUNICIPAL WATER DISTRICT REGARDING STATE LAW CLAIMS IN ELECTRICITY MARKET

ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ

United States Bankruptcy Judge

On October 11, 2002, claimants' counsel filed separate proofs of claims (the "Claims") in unliquidated amounts on behalf of Vista Irrigation District, [*2] Borrego Water District, Ramona Municipal Water District, Fallbrook Public Utility District and Yuima Municipal Water District (collectively ,the "Claimants") against Enron Corporation ("Enron") and certain of its affiliated entities (collectively, the "Debtors") in the following cases (Claim Nos. 12233, 12234, 12235, 12236, 12237). The claims are based on actions filed by the Claimants and other plaintiffs against Enron Energy Services, Inc. ("EESI"), Enron Power Marketing, Inc. ("EPMI") and other defendants in the Superior Court of the State of California for San Diego County.

The Claimants allege that the Debtors manipulated energy markets in California and overcharged for energy through unlawful and anti-competitive acts during the western power crisis of 2000 and 2001. They maintain the alleged manipulation in the electricity market constitutes a violation of state antitrust law and unfair competition law, and seek disgorgement, restitution, actual and treble damages together with interest and injunctive relief<sup>1</sup>. On February 18, 2005, the Debtors filed objections to the Claimants' state law claims and argued that the Federal Power Act (the "FPA") preempts the state laws and the [*3] filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of these claims.

The issue before the Court is whether the Claims are preempted by the Federal Power Act (the "FPA") and precluded by the filed rate doctrine. The Court finds that because the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") has exclusive jurisdiction over interstate sales of wholesale electricity, the state law claims sought to be enforced by Claimants in the prosecution of the Claims are preempted by the FPA. Further, the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of such Claims.

I. BACKGROUND

Commencing on December 2, 2001, and from time to time continuing [*4] thereafter, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of title 11 of the United States Code (the "Bankruptcy Code"). On July 15, 2004, the Court entered an Order confirming the Debtors' Supplemental Modified Fifth Amended Joint Plan of Affiliated Debtors (the "Plan") in these cases. The Plan became effective on November 17, 2004.

This litigation arises out of the California energy crisis of 2000-01. Prior to the energy crisis, the California legislature had passed Assembly Bill 1890<sup>2</sup> (the "Bill") to create two non-governmental entities, the California Power Exchange (the "PX") and the California Independent System Operator (the "ISO"), to operate markets and manage the sale of electricity. The PX and the ISO were organized under California law, but regulated by FERC. California v. Dynegy, Inc., 375 F.3d 831, 850 \(9th Cir. 2004\). The central transactions, wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce, were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Further, the centralized wholesale spot electricity markets operated by the ISO and the PX were established subject to FERC review and approval. The ISO and the PX served as clearinghouses. [*5] Since August 2, 2000, FERC has commenced refund proceeding, and partnership and gaming proceeding to investigate certain of the Debtors. FERC found that the Debtors engaged in gaming<sup>3</sup> in the form of inappropriate trading strategies and further engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information. Enron Power Mktg., Inc., et al., 106 FERC ¶ 61,024 \(2004\). Both proceedings are ongoing, including the determination of remedies by FERC.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standard of Preemption

<sup>1</sup> Claimants allege that the Debtors' violation of the Cartwright Act, the Unfair Competition Law and the California Commodity Law. The Cartwright Act prohibits agreements "to limit or reduce the production, or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720\(b\). The Unfair Competition Law prohibits unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business acts and practices. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. The California Commodity Law prohibits fraudulent acts or conduct in connection with the purchase or sale of a commodity. Cal. Corp. Code §§ 29536-37.

<sup>2</sup> 1996 Cal. Stat. 854

<sup>3</sup> The ISO tariff, through the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol defines gaming, in part, as "taking unfair advantage of the rules and procedures set forth in the PX or the ISO tariffs, Protocols or Activity Rule . . . to the detriment of the efficiency of, and of consumers in, the ISO markets." Am. Electric Power Service Corp., et al., 103 FERC ¶ 61,345, 62,330 \(2003\).

HN1[] "Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the Supremacy Clause, Article VI, clause 2, of the United States Constitution." Transmission Agency of Cal. v. Sierra Pacific Power Co., 295 F.3d 918, 928 (9th Cir. 2002). Where Congress manifests intent to occupy an entire [*6] regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted. Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. at 63-64 (1987). Federal courts have rarely identified legislation that has been found to completely preempt state jurisdiction. Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 107 S. Ct. 2425, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318 (1987).

Here, neither party raises the argument that complete preemption is applicable, nor is there any evidence in the record that would support the conclusion that Congress intended for complete preemption to apply in this case.

HN2[] In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted (1) "when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field." Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 248, 104 S. Ct. 615, 78 L. Ed. 2d 443 (1984) ("Field Preemption"), and (2) "to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Id. ("Conflict Preemption").

B. Field Preemption

The Debtors, in support of their position that the state law claims should be barred by FERC's exclusive jurisdiction, [*7] cite to Grays Harbor v. IDACORP Inc., 379 F.3d 641 (9th Cir. 2004), Dynegy, and  Snohomish County v. Dynegy Power Marketing Inc., 384 F.3d 756 (9th Cir. 2004). These cases addressed FERC's exclusive jurisdiction and its remedial power concerning the wholesale electricity market. The Debtors argue that state law claims in the instant case, alleging violations of state antitrust and unfair competition law, are nearly identical to those involved in the cited cases, and for the reasons set forth in those cases, field preemption is applicable here.

The Dynegy court ruled that HN3[] "state actions against wholesale electricity suppliers alleging violations of California's unfair business practices law are preempted by FPA because the conduct the state sought to condemn was expressly governed by the ISO tariffs and they encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to FERC, both to enforce and to seek remedy." 375 F.3d at 852.

The Court finds that the statute's framework under the FPA supports the conclusion in Dynegy that HN4[] FERC has been granted broad authority by Congress, in addition to the authority to determine the "just and reasonable rates" for wholesale [*8] power. The statute delegates to the Federal Energy Commission "exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states . . . . Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824-824m.

Claimants do not dispute that the transactions at issue involved wholesale interstate sales. Further, there has been no evidence presented or any representation by either party that the sales that gave rise to this dispute should be characterized as either retail sales of electricity or wholesale intrastate sales. The statute provides that upon a determination by FERC that "any rate charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, [*9] classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824e (emphasis added).

Moreover, pursuant to the statute, HN5[] FERC possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit disgorgement and refunds. Further, FERC can proceed by rulemaking rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue discrimination on the part of individual utilities. Federal Power Act, §§ 205, 206(a), as amended, 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e; Department of Energy Organization Act, § 403(c), 42 U.S.C.A. § 7173\(c\).

In addition, after the deregulation of California energy markets, the central transactions, the wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce, were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Having examined FERC's regulatory authority over the deregulated electricity market in California, the Snohomish court concluded, "FERC is doing enough regulation to justify federal preemption [*10] of state laws under the market-based system of setting wholesale electricity rates." Snohomish, 384 F.3d at 760-61. For instance,

(1) FERC continued to oversee wholesale electricity rates by reviewing and approving a variety of documents filed by the PX and the ISO. FERC approved the market-based tariffs only upon a showing that the seller lacked or had mitigated its market power. (2) FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports under FPA §205(c) 16 U.S.C. §824d\(c\). (3) FERC reviewed and approved detailed tariffs filed by the PX and the ISO, which described in detail how the markets operated by each entity would function. Id.

In addition, "[e]ach participant in the PX and the ISO markets was required to sign an agreement acknowledging that the tariff filed by either the PX or the ISO would govern all transactions in that market." Id.

The Court also recognizes that "entities that transact through the ISO or [the] PX and engage in improper practices<sup>4</sup> are in violation of filed tariffs . . . . FERC and the Market Surveillance Unit are directed by the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol to refer matters to the FERC for enforcement." 103 FERC ¶ 62,334. Here, Claimants do [*11] not dispute the fact that it procured electricity through the market administered by the ISO.

Moreover, the Court finds that Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1973), and California v. Federal Power Commission, 369 U.S. 482, 82 S. Ct. 901, 8 L. Ed. 2d 54 (1962) are not controlling in the instant case. In both cases, [*12] the Supreme Court found that Congress does not intend to bar governments from bringing actions in violation of antitrust laws related to filed tariffs before regulatory commissions. However, two important differences exist. First, both cases discussed issues of the interaction between federal administrative law and federal antitrust law; thereby no state law preemption issue was presented in these cases. In California v. Federal Power Commission, a gas company filed a motion to dismiss the antitrust suit pursuant to the Clayton Act, § 7 as amended 15 U.S.C.A. §18, or in the alternative, to stay it, pending completion of the proceedings for its authority to acquire another company's assets pursuant to the Natural Gas Act (the "NGA"), § 7(c) as amended 15 U.S.C.A. §717f\(c\), before the Power Energy Commission. 369 U.S. at 483. In Otter Tail Power, the government brought an action against an electric power company to enjoin violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §2. 410 U.S. at 368. In order to protect market competition in certain cases, Congress did not expressly displace federal antitrust laws. The Court will not address whether, as a result, Congress has left room for enforcement [*13] of state antitrust laws.

Second, and more importantly, a critical distinction between the instant matter and the two cited cases is that there is a regulatory scheme against anti-competitive behavior that has been entrusted to FERC. As the Court discussed above, the statute under 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e\(a\) provides FERC with broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior. In fact, FERC has exercised this power to act in the proceedings instituted against the Debtors concerning alleged market manipulation during the energy crisis. FERC has asserted that it "can order disgorgement of monies above the post-October 2, 2000 refunds ordered in the California Refund Proceeding, if it finds violations of the ISO and the PX tariffs and finds that a monetary remedy is appropriate for such violations. It can additionally order additional disgorgement of unjust profits for tariff violations that occurred after October 2, 2000." 103 FERC at ¶ 62,331. Further, "implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates to the marketers is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were [*14] and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority." 106 FERC ¶ 61,024.

<sup>4</sup> Since 1998, the ISO and the PX tariffs have contained provisions that identify and prohibit "gaming" and "anomalous market behavior" in the sale of electric power. HN6 [↑] "Anomalous market behavior" is (1) behavior that departs significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include a) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; b) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; c) unusual trades or transactions; d) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and e) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges." Am. Elec. Power Serv. Corp., et al., 103 FERC at ¶ 62,332 (2003).

In contrast, the court in California v. Federal Power Commission concluded that the NGA did not contain a provision to immunize the carriers involved in the mergers from the Clayton Act. 369 U.S. at 485. "The Commission's standard, set forth in § 7 of the NGA, will serve 'the public convenience and necessity.' If existing natural gas companies violate the antitrust laws, the Commission is directed by § 20\(a\) to 'transmit such evidence' to the Attorney General." Id. at 486. Similarly, the Court in Otter Tails found that the limited authority of the Federal Power Commission to order interconnections was not intended to be a substitute for the Sherman Act. 410 U.S. at 375. Moreover, the Supreme Court in Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 383 U.S. 932, 86 S. Ct. 781, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709 \(1966\) declined to grant antitrust immunity to a shipping company because "the provisions of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.A. §801, can not reasonably be construed as an implied repeal of antitrust regulation of the shipping industry's rate-making activities." Id. at 217. The Shipping Act does not give the Federal Maritime Commission (the "FMC") [*15] any mandate to regulate rate competition and the statutory scheme was designed to minimize the role of the FMC. Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, 476 U.S. 409, 422, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 \(1986\).

The Court further finds that Grays Harbor and Gulf States Util. Co. v. Alabama Power Co., 824 F.2d 1465 \(5th Cir. 1987\) are not applicable in the instant case. The courts in both cases concluded that the state law claims concerning contractual disputes were not within the scope of FERC's jurisdiction. The Court finds that the facts here are distinguishable. First, the state law claims in the cited cases were related to contractual issues, which exclusively fall within a state's jurisdiction. The court in Grays Harbor granted the utility leave to amend its complaint to seek declaratory relief only as to issues of contract formation. 379 F.3d. at 652-53. Similarly, the court in Gulf States held that executed contract performance, such as the failure to negotiate in good faith and fraud, were not preempted by the FPA. 824 F.2d at 1474. Here, no evidence or argument presented before the Court demonstrates that there is an issue involving contractual disputes. Second, contract formation issues would not necessarily [*16] intrude upon the rate-setting jurisdiction of FERC. Grays Harbor, 379 F.3d. at 653. Therefore, field preemption bars the Claimants from pursuing its state law claims before the Court.

C. Conflict Preemption

As to conflict preemption, for the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that FERC has broad authority concerning anti-competitive activities related to the filed rate, apart from that FERC has authority to determine the "just and reasonable" rates for wholesale power. A conflict between the FPA in which grants FERC jurisdiction over the anti-competitive acts and state antitrust claims exists. Accordingly, conflict preemption also bars the Claimants from pursuing state law claims before the Court.

D. Filed Rate Doctrine

Another threshold question before the Court is whether the Court would have to determine a tariff. The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. HN7 The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions [*17] are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. E.& J. Gallo Winery v. Encana Energy Servs., Inc., Case No.CV F 03-5412 AWILJO. at 15. The Court recognizes that the filed rate doctrine "forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority." Ark. L.A. Gas Co. v. Frank Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577-78, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 \(1981\). The Court also acknowledges that the purpose of the doctrine is "preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant." *City of Cleveland v. FPC*, 525 F.2d 845, 854, 174 U.S. App. D.C. 1 \(D.C. Cir. 1976\).

In addition, FERC requires each seller to file quarterly reports pursuant to FPA §205(c) 16 U.S.C. § 824d\(c\) on transaction-specific information about its sales and purchases at market-based rates. The Debtors alleged violations of the filing requirements do not preclude FERC from challenging the rate. *California v. FERC*, 383 F.3d 1006, 1016 \(9th Cir. 2004\).

Further, the Court agrees with the opinion of the *California v. FERC* court which concluded that HN8 "the reporting requirements [*18] are an integral part of a tariff, with FERC's implied enforcement mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates." 383 F.3d at 1016. On August 13, 2002, FERC's Initial Report in Docket No. PA02-2-000 concluded that the Debtors engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information.<sup>5</sup> Then, FERC concluded that such behavior constituted market manipulation and resulted in unjust and unreasonable rates and violated the express requirements in the orders allowing the Debtors to make sales at market-based rates. 106 FERC ¶ 61,024. As noted by FERC, HN9 implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority. The Debtors were expressly directed, when they were granted market-based rate authority, to inform the FERC promptly of changes in status (which would include changes in their generation market shares) that reflect a departure [*19] from the characteristics that the FERC relied upon in granting market-based rate authority. Id.

Moreover, the Court in *California v. FERC*, indirectly recognized the application of HN10 the filed rate doctrine when marketers had not properly reported to FERC where such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC. 383 F.3d at 1016.

Without the availability of retroactive refunds, "[p]arties aggrieved by the illegal rate would have no FERC remedy, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a direct action against the offending seller. That result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the FPA." Id.

The Court finds that determining the liability or the legal right of Claimants against the Debtors for violation of the antitrust laws would have to be measured by the tariff. Therefore, the filed rate doctrine would be applicable.

In addressing the right of action that [*20] a violation of the antitrust laws give to one who has been injured in its business or property, the Supreme Court in *Keogh v. Chicago & N.W.R.Y. Co.*, 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 \(1922\), stated that HN11 "[i]njury implies violation of a legal right." Id. at 163. The Supreme Court concluded that "the legal rights of [a] shipper as against [a] carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff." Id. at 163. Justice Brandeis explained "[a] rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Anti-Trust Act. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under Section 8 of the latter act . . . the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the 'person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation.'" Id. at 162. Thus, the finding of liability in antitrust laws would be integral to the Court's determination of whether the Debtors are liable due to their violations of state antitrust law and unfair competition law. For instance, the Court could not determine the overcharge claim owed by the Debtors for any electricity market manipulation without first [*21] deciding the reasonableness of the filed tariff.

---

<sup>5</sup> FERC found that the Debtors failed to inform FERC in a timely manner of changes in their market shares that resulted from their gaining influence/control over others' facilities, as required under their market-based rate authorization. 106 FERC ¶ 61,024.

The Supreme Court case, Arkansas Louisiana, further supports the Court's position that the filed rate doctrine should apply here. "In asserting that the filed rate doctrine had no application, respondents in Arkansas Louisiana contended that the state court has done no more than determine the damages they have suffered as a result of the breach of a contract by a gas company." 453 U.S. at 579. The Supreme Court rejected this argument by reasoning that "the mere fact that respondents brought this suit under state law would not rescue it, for when Congress has established an exclusive form of regulation . . . there can be no divided authority over interstate commerce . . . HN12[] Under the filed rate doctrine, FERC alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged." Id. at 580-84.

Moreover, to award monetary relief, the Court would have to determine a "fair price." Thus, the filed rate doctrine bars the Court from awarding monetary damages sought by Claimants. Nonetheless, the Court finds that injunctive relief would also be unavailable to Claimants. The Court agrees with the [*22] Ninth Circuit's decision in Snohomish, which declined to grant injunctive relief because such relief is barred by the filed rate doctrine and preemption principle. 384 F.3d at 762. HN13[] "Remedies for breach and non-performance of FERC-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC." Dynegy, 375 F.3d at 836.

The decisions from the Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association v. Citizens Utilities Co., 45 F.3d 58 \(2d Cir. 1995\) and Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17 \(2d Cir. 1994\), provide an additional basis for dismissal of the Claims sought by Claimants. The Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association affirmed the decision from the district court, which had declined the plaintiff's invitation to find a fraud exception to the filed rate doctrine. In determining whether the filed rate doctrine applied, the court focused on the impact the court's decision would have on agency procedures and rate determination. Sun City Taxpayers' Ass'n v. Citizens Utils. Co., 847 F.Supp.281, 291 \(D. Conn. 1994\). The Second Circuit in Wegoland recognized that HN14[] the filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the [*23] type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that (a) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate-making issues, (b) courts lack the competence to set utility rates, and (c) the interference of courts in the rate-making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime. 27 F.3d at 21.

Therefore, having considered the policy objectives, the Court finds it is inappropriate to frustrate FERC's jurisdiction afforded by Congress. The Court lacks authority to impose a different rate than the one approved by a federal agent. Any other conclusion departing from this principle would undermine the filed rate doctrine. The Court, therefore, rejects Claimants' challenge to the application of the filed rate doctrine. Accordingly, the filed rate doctrine bars the relief sought by Claimants.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that the state law claims sought by Claimants concerning electricity market manipulation are preempted by the FPA and precluded by the filed rate doctrine. Therefore, the Court sustains the Debtors' objection to the Claims filed by claimants.

Counsel [*24] for the Debtors is directed to settle an order consistent with this Court's Memorandum Opinion.

Dated: New York, New York

July 18, 2005

/s/ Arthur J. Gonzalez

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

In re Acacia Media Techs. Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose Division

July 19, 2005, Decided ; July 19, 2005, Filed

NO. C 05-01114 JW

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37009 *; 2005 WL 1683660

In re: ACACIA MEDIA TECHNOLOGIES CORPORATION.

Subsequent History: Patent interpreted by Acacia Media Techs. Corp. v. New Destiny Internet Group, 405 F. Supp. 2d 1127, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38810 \(N.D. Cal., Dec. 7, 2005\)

Prior History: Acacia Media Techs. Corp. v. New Destiny Internet Group, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13415 \(C.D. Cal., July 12, 2004\)

Core Terms

---

patents, Counterclaim, lawsuit, abuse of process, motion to dismiss, patent infringement, injunctions, default, unfair, alleges, video, baseless, media, initiated, infringe, knowingly false, entertainment, Technologies, antitrust, practices, threatens, abused

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss tests the legal sufficiency of the claims stated in a complaint. In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court must accept as true all allegations of material fact and must construe said allegations in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Any existing ambiguities must be resolved in favor of the pleading. A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss must not be granted unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is viewed with disfavor and is rarely granted. A motion to dismiss a counterclaim under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) is treated the same as a motion to dismiss a complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN2[ Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 prohibits five wrongs: (1) unlawful business acts/practices; (2) unfair business acts/practices; (3) fraudulent business acts/practices; (4) unfair, deceptive, untrue, or misleading advertising; and (5) any act prohibited by Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17500-17577.5.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN3 Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Generally speaking, the "unfair" standard under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 is broad by design. The unfair standard is intentionally broad, allowing courts maximum discretion to prohibit new schemes to defraud. However, the California Supreme Court has changed the test of "unfairness" for commercial cases. The California Supreme Court holds that, in cases between business competitors, "unfair" means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law

Antitrust law covers patent infringement lawsuits initiated in bad faith. Patent infringement actions initiated and conducted in bad faith contribute nothing to the furtherance of the policies of either the patent law or the antitrust law.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > General Overview

HN5 Intentional Torts, Abuse of Process

The mere filing of a complaint or maintenance of a lawsuit, even for an improper purpose, does not constitute an abuse of process. It is well settled that the mere filing or maintenance of a lawsuit -- even for an improper purpose -- is not a proper basis for an abuse of process action. The gravamen of abuse of process is not the wrongful initiation of civil proceedings.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > General Overview

HN6 Intentional Torts, Abuse of Process

For purposes of the tort of abuse of process, the process that is abused must be judicial process. The essence of the tort lies in the misuse of the power of the court. It is an act done in the name of the court and under its authority for the purpose of perpetrating an injustice. Statements (or misstatements) to the media do not abuse judicial process.

Counsel: [*1] For Acacia Media Technologies Corp., Plaintiff: Alan P. Block, Hennigan Bennett & Dorman LLP, Los Angeles, CA; David P. Pearson, Winthrop & Weinstine, PA, Minneapolis, MN; Jay R. Campbell, Renner Otto Boisselle & Sklar LLP, Cleveland, OH; Kevin I. Shenkman, Hennigan Bennett & Dorman LLP, Los Angeles, CA;

Mark Anchor Albert, Hennigan Bennett & Dorman LLP, Los Angeles, Ca; Mark C. Johnson, Renner Otto Boisselle & Sklar, Cleveland, OH; Roderick G. Dorman, Hennigan Bennett & Dorman LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Todd R. Tucker, Renner Otto Boisselle & Sklar LLP, Cleveland, OH.

For Mediacom Communications Corporation, Defendant: Jan J. Klohonatz, Taylor & Company Law Offices, San Francisco, CA; Stephen E. Taylor, Taylor & Company Law Offices, Inc., San Francisco, CA; Jeffrey D. Sullivan, Baker Botts LLP, New York, NY; Michael J. McNamara, Baker Botts LLP, New York, NY; Mitchell D. Lukin, Baker Botts LLP, Houston, TX.

For Hospitality Network, Inc., Coxcom Inc, Defendants: J. Timothy Nardell, Richard R. Patch, Coblenz, Patch, Duffy & Bass LLP, San Francisco, CA; Annamarie A. Daley, Emmett J. McMahon, Stephen P. Safranski, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi LLP, Minneapolis, MN.

For Charter [*2] Communications, Inc, Defendant: Morgan William Tovey, William R. Overend, Reed Smith LLP, San Francisco, CA; Andrew D. Raymond, Bradford P. Lyerla, Jeffrey H. Dean, Kevin D. Hogg, Marshall Gerstein & Borun LLP, Chicago, IL.

For The Directv Group, Inc., Defendant: Maria K. Nelson, Marsha Ellen Mullin, Victor George Savikas, Kevin G. McBride, JONES DAY, Los Angeles, CA.

For Echostar Satellite LLC, Echostar Technologies Corporation, Defendants: Harold J. McElhinny, Jason A. Crotty, Matthew I. Kreeger, Rachel Krevans, Morrison & Foerster LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Echostar Technologies Corporation, Defendant: Paul A. Friedman, Morrison & Foerster, San Francisco, CA; David C. Doyle, Morrison & Foerster LLP, San Diego, Ca.

For Mid-Continent Media, Inc., US Cable Holdings LP, Sjoberg's Cablevision, Inc., Savage Communications Inc., Loretel Cablevision, Cannon Valley Communications Inc., Arvig Communication Systems, Defendants: Albert L. Underhill, John C. Reich, Rebecca A. Bortolotti, Merchant & Gould, Minneapolis, MN; Bradford P. Lyerla, Jeffrey H. Dean, Kevin D. Hogg, Marshall Gerstein & Borun LLP, Chicago, IL.

For COMCAST CABLE COMMUNICATIONS LLC, Defendant: Daralyn [*3] J. Durie, David J. Silbert, Keker & Van Nest LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Armstrong Group, Wide Open West LLC, East Cleveland Cable TV and Communications LLC, Massillon Cable TV Inc., Consol Defendants: Bradford P. Lyerla, Carl E. Myers, Jeffrey H. Dean, Kevin D. Hogg, Marshall Gerstein & Borun LLP, Chicago, IL; Christopher B. Fagan, Fay Sharpe Fagan Minnich & McKee, Cleveland, OH.

For Block Communications Inc doing business as Buckeye Cable, Consol Defendant: Fritz Byers, Toledo, OH.

For Game Link Inc, Consol Defendant: Christopher S. Marchese, Fish & Richardson, San Diego, Ca; Jonathan E. Singer, Fish & Richardson, P. C., P.A., Minneapolis, MN; Juanita R. Brooks, Todd Glen Miller, Fish & Richardson P.C., San Diego, CA; William R. Woodford, Fish & Richardson P.C., Minneapolis, MN.

For CJ Inc, Consol Defendant: Juanita R. Brooks, Fish & Richardson P.C., San Diego, CA.

For Club Jenna Inc. ACMP LLC, Cybernet Ventures Inc., Global AVS Inc, National A-1 Advertising Inc a Pennsylvania Corporation, Lightspeedcash Erroneously sued as lightspeed Media Corp., Consol Defendants: Jonathan E. Singer, Fish & Richardson, P. C., P.A., Minneapolis, MN; Juanita R. Brooks, Fish [*4] & Richardson P.C., San Diego, CA; Todd Glen Miller, Fish & Richardson P.C., San Diego, CA; William R. Woodford, Fish & Richardson P.C., Minneapolis, MN.

For AP Net Marketing Inc., ICS Inc, Consol Defendant: Adam Robert Alper, David A. York, Latham and Watkins, Menlo Park, Ca.

For AEBN Inc, Ademia Multimedia LLC, Audio Communications Inc, Cyber Trend Inc, Innovative Ideas International, Lightspeed Media Group Inc, VS Media Inc, Consol Defendants: Todd Glen Miller, Fish & Richardson P.C., San Diego, CA; William R. Woodford, Fish & Richardson P.C., Minneapolis, MN.

For ASKCS.com Inc, Consol Defendant: Alfredo A. Bismonte, Daniel Harlan Fingerman, Bobby T. Shih, Mount & Stoelker, San Jose, CA; Douglas W. Sprinkle, Mark D. Schneider, Gifford Krass Groh Sprinkle Anderson & Citkowski, P.C., Troy, MI.

For New Destiny Internet Group LLC, Adult Revenue Services, Consol Defendants: Juanita R. Brooks, Fish & Richardson P.C., San Diego, CA; Todd Glen Miller, Fish & Richardson P.C., San Diego, CA.

For Offendale Commercial Limited BV, Consol Defendant: James Michael Slominski, Los Angeles, Ca.

For International Web Innovations Inc, Consol Defendant: Victor de Gyrfas, [*5] William J. Robinson, Foley & Lardner LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Cable America Corp, Consol Defendant: Robert F. Copple, Sean David Garrison, Lewis & Roca LLP, Phoenix, AZ.

For Cable One Inc, Consol Defendant: C Mark Kittredge, Perkins Coie Brown & Bain PA, Phoenix, AZ; Mitchell D. Lukin, Baker Botts LLP, Houston, TX.

For NPG Cable Inc, Consol Defendant: Patrick J. Whalen, Spencer Fane Britt & Browne LLP, Kansas City, MO.

For Cebridge Connections, Consol Defendant: Jan J. Klohonatz, Taylor & Company Law Offices, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: JAMES WARE, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JAMESWARE

Opinion

---

ORDER DENYING ACACIA'S MOTION TO DISMISS NEW DESTINY'S EIGHTH COUNTERCLAIM AND GRANTING ACACIA'S MOTION TO DISMISS NEW DESTINY'S NINTH COUNTERCLAIM

I. INTRODUCTION

This is a patent infringement lawsuit in which Plaintiff Acacia Media Technologies Corporation ("Acacia") claims that various internet-based adult entertainment providers infringe U.S. Patents Nos. 5,132,992 and 6,144,702, which Acacia owns. In response, Defendant New Destiny Internet Group, LLC ("New Destiny") asserts nine counterclaims against Acacia. Presently before this Court is Acacia's Motion [*6] to Dismiss New Destiny's Eighth and Ninth Counterclaims for Failure to State a Claim. (See Acacia's Motion to Dismiss Defendants' Eighth and Ninth Counterclaims for Failure to State a Claim, hereinafter "Acacia's Motion," Docket Item No. 43 in Central District of California Case No. SA CV 02-1040.)<sup>1</sup> Based upon the arguments advanced by the parties, and for the reasons set forth below, this Court GRANTS Acacia's Motion in part and DENIES it in part.

II. BACKGROUND

---

<sup>1</sup> Acacia's Motion purports to "move[] to dismiss Defendant Game Link's . . . Eighth . . . and Ninth Counterclaim[s] . . . for failure to state a claim under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)." (Acacia's Motion at 1:3-6.) Acacia purports to attach Game Link's Answer and Counter-Claim as Exhibit 1 to its Motion. In fact, Exhibit 1 is Defendant New Destiny's Answer and Counter Claim. (Acacia's Motion Ex. 1.) Accordingly, this Court treats Acacia's Motion as a Motion to Dismiss New Destiny's (not Game Link's) Eighth and Ninth Counterclaims.

New Destiny alleges, [*7] inter alia, that Acacia is and has been "threaten[ing], harass[ing], and intimidat[ing] [New Destiny] and other companies in [New Destiny's] industry into paying [Acacia] for license[s] to patents [that] it and they have not infringed and do not infringe." (New Destiny's Opposition to Acacia's Motion, hereinafter "New Destiny's Opposition," Docket Item No. 188 in Central District of California Case No. SA CV 02-1040, Ex. 1 at 42:12-14.) According to New Destiny, Acacia perceived New Destiny and others in New Destiny's industry as unsophisticated, and so "create[d] an atmosphere of fear so as to force [New Destiny] and other companies in [New Destiny's] industry . . . to pay royalties rather than defend against objectively baseless patent infringement suits." (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 42:14-20.) As part of its campaign to "create an atmosphere of fear," Acacia allegedly mailed documents to [New Destiny] and others in [New Destiny's] industry, falsely stating that Acacia had patent claims covering content delivery methods such as video on demand, audio on demand, and video streaming.' Acacia made no mention in this correspondence that the [*8] scope of its patent claims was very narrow and covered only very specific systems and methods. Instead Acacia stated, incorrectly and without investigation, that [New Destiny's] systems and methods used Acacia's patented systems and methods.

(New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 43:2-8.) Furthermore, New Destiny alleges, Acacia repeatedly and publicly overstated the breadth of its patents. (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 43:9-13 ("Acacia . . . continued to falsely state that its patents covered all methods and systems for transmitting audio and/or video information in press releases, interviews, and in pleadings to this Court[,] [but] [t]hese public statements all ignored the narrow scope of the claims that were obtained by the named inventors of the patents now allegedly owned by Acacia"); see also New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 44:8-26, 47:1-15, 47:20-48:7.) "Had Acacia, in fact, conducted . . . analyses [of prior art and other validity issues]," New Destiny alleges, "[Acacia] would have been fully aware of the prosecution histories of its patents and that its patent claims could not be given the broad scope they later urged in their media campaign." (New [*9] Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 43:24-26.) "As such," New Destiny concludes, those later claims were knowingly false and intended to intimidate, harass, and instill fear in those companies in [New Destiny's] industry, with the intent of interfering with the business relationships between [New Destiny] and its existing and prospective customers, and to further intimidate companies in [New Destiny's] industry to entering into unnecessary patent royalty agreements.

(New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 43:26-44:3.) New Destiny claims that Acacia's posturing was part and parcel of its business plan to "secure a revenue stream of some $ 200 million a year, without writing a single line of code."

(New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 45:1-2.) To support its claim, New Destiny quotes an article from technologymarketing.com, which allegedly states that:

[Acacia CEO Paul] Ryan and his team of executives decided it would be better for the firm if they could get other companies to pay up without the hassle of forcing them to do so through a lawsuit . . . [.] Acacia also decided that alleged infringers would sign up more quickly if it looked as if everyone else were [*10] jumping on the bandwagon. Ryan launched a rollout plan that involved convincing a host of smaller firms to sign up, and the subsequent publicizing of those signings in order to create a sense of momentum for Acacia's claims. . . By selecting fragmented markets rather than going after big players like MSN or AOL, Acacia hoped to avoid getting embroiled in a debilitating legal battle. My approach is to get some deals done and get some goodwill,' says Rob Berman, Acacia's senior vp [sic] of business development. I don't want to end up in the bowels of legal hell.' . . . Acacia hoped that the adult entertainment industry would be low-hanging fruit. After all, online adult entertainment is a fragmented and apparently incoherent set of companies, full of business amateurs who, Acacia hoped, would probably rather pay a percentage than get hauled into court.

(New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 45:3-17.)

On July 14, 2003, in a separate patent infringement lawsuit, Acacia Media Technologies Corporation v. Wild Ventures, LLC, No. SACV 02-1053 AHS (MLGx), which involved the same patents at issue in this lawsuit, Judge Alicemarie Stotler granted Acacia a default judgment and an [*11] injunction against Defendant Wild Ventures, LLC ("Wild Ventures"). (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 45:18-26.) <sup>2</sup> According to New Destiny, "Similar default injunctions were entered against Extreme Productions (SACV 02-CV-1062), Go Entertainment (SACV 03-CV-204), Lace Productions (SACV 02-CV-1047), and WebZotic LLC (SACV 02-CV-1065)." (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 45:26-46:2.) Thereafter, Acacia allegedly embarked upon a media campaign that misrepresented the nature of the default injunctions. Although the default injunctions were entered because the defendants failed to respond to Acacia's lawsuit, Acacia allegedly told the media that "these rulings vindicated Acacia's claims regarding the allegedly broad scope of its patents." (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 46:14-15.) New Destiny cites an article in CNET news.com as an illustration. In it, the author explains that,

---

<sup>2</sup> Later, on November 21, 2003, pursuant to stipulation, this Court set aside the default judgment entered against Wild Ventures.

The company [Acacia] has won a preliminary injunction against five adult entertainment Web sites, barring them from using on-demand digital video or audio online, or providing advertising links to any other such sites. The ruling was a default decision, after the five companies declined to respond [*12] to a lawsuit, but does mark the first court validation of sweeping patent claims that could ultimately encompass virtually every site offering online multimedia content. Acacia owns patents on the process of transmitting compressed audio or video, which is one of the most fundamental multimedia technologies used on the Internet. We will not allow for the unauthorized use of our technology,' said Rob Berman, Acacia's general counsel. Although not our preference, we are willing to use the power of the court where necessary to stop unauthorized use.'

(New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 46:16-27 (first emphasis added).) On July 18, 2003, Rob Berman allegedly told Wired News that "Acacia's patents cover just about every form of digital audio and video distribution . . . [sic] these [sic] kinds of activities violate Acacia's intellectual property rights: pushing MP3s from peer-to-peer groups, streaming newscasts from Internet radio sites and delivering movies through cable networks." (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 47:1-5.) Furthermore, on September 12, 2003, and again on September 15, 2003, Acacia allegedly issued press releases, in which it stated "that its DMT [*13] technology, which is covered by pioneering patents, relates to audio and video transmission and receiving systems, commonly known as audio on-demand, video on-demand, and audio/video streaming, and is used for distributing content via several means including Internet, cable television, direct broadcast satellite, and wireless systems." (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 47:20-25.)

New Destiny argues that Acacia's patent infringement and business tort claims against New Destiny are "objectively baseless." (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 41:26-42:5, 47:26-27, 48:16-18, 49:4-7.) New Destiny also argues that Acacia's statements to the press are "false, misleading, and intimidating" and "were made . . . with the intent to make others reluctant to engage in . . . business with Defendant, to intimidate others in Defendant's industry into paying Acacia for patent licenses that they did [*14] not need to enter but entered to avoid further harassment and potential baseless infringement litigation." (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 47:26-48:6.) Acacia's conduct, Defendant counterclaims, constitutes Violation of CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200 (Eighth Counterclaim) and Abuse of Process (Ninth Counterclaim). (New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 41:14-49:19.) Acacia here moves to dismiss these counterclaims.

III. STANDARDS

HN1 [↑] A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss tests the legal sufficiency of the claims stated in a complaint. In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the court must accept as true all allegations of material fact and must construe said allegations in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Western Reserve Oil & Gas Co. v. New, 765 F.2d 1428, 1430 \(9th Cir. 1985\). Any existing ambiguities must be resolved in favor of the pleading. Walling v. Beverly Enterprises, 476 F.2d 393, 396 \(9th Cir. 1973\). Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\), sets forth the strict standard for granting a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss. A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss must not be granted "unless it appears [*15] beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Id. at 45-46. As the Ninth Circuit has observed, "The [Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)] motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is viewed with disfavor and is rarely granted." Gilligan v. Jamco Develop. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 \(9th Cir. 1997\). A motion to dismiss a counterclaim under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) is treated the same as a motion to dismiss a complaint. Fabricant v. Sears Roebuck, 202 F.R.D. 306, 308 \(S.D. Fla. 2001\) (citing KRW Sales, Inc. v. Kristel Corp., 154 F.R.D. 186, 187 \(N.D. Ill. 1994\)).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. New Destiny's Eighth Counterclaim: Violation of CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200

New Destiny's Eight Counterclaim against Acacia is for Violation of CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200. The purpose of § 17200 is to preserve fair business competition. Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999) (quoting Barquis v. Merchants Collection Ass'n, 7 Cal. 3d 94, 110, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817 (1972)). [*16] HN2↑ Section 17200 prohibits five wrongs: (1) unlawful business acts/practices; (2) unfair business acts/practices; (3) fraudulent business acts/practices; (4) unfair, deceptive, untrue, or misleading advertising; and (5) any act prohibited by CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE §§ 17500-17577.5. CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200; WILLIAM L. STERN, BUS. & PROF. C. § 17200 PRACTICE § 3:13 (2005). Only the first three wrongs are relevant here. (See New Destiny's Opposition at 5:6-6:27 (arguing that New Destiny has alleged that Acacia has engaged in "fraudulent" business acts), 7:1-11:2 (arguing that New Destiny has alleged that Acacia has engaged in "unlawful" business acts), 11:3-13:13 (arguing that New Destiny has alleged that Acacia has engaged in "unfair" business acts).)

At minimum, New Destiny arguably alleges that Acacia engaged in an "unfair" business acts or practices. HN3↑ Generally speaking, the "unfair" standard under § 17200 is broad by design. STERN, supra, § 3:113 ("The unfair' standard is intentionally broad, allowing courts maximum discretion to prohibit new schemes to defraud") (citing Motors, Inc. v. Times Mirror Co., 102 Cal. App. 3d 735, 740, 162 Cal. Rptr. 543 (1980)). [*17] However, in Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999), the California Supreme Court changed the test of "unfairness" for commercial cases. Id. § 3:114. In Cel-Tech, the Court held that, in cases between business competitors, "unfair" means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 187. Acacia and New Destiny dispute whether Cel-Tech's narrower test of "unfairness" applies here. (Acacia's Motion at 4:24 ("Defendant does not come close to pleading an antitrust-related cause of action [as required by Cel-Tech]"); New Destiny's Opposition at 12:23-24 ("Defendant need not satisfy Cel-Tech's test for unfair' to state a claim under section 17200"); Acacia's Reply Brief Re: Acacia's Motion, hereinafter "Acacia's Reply," Docket Item No. 198 in Central District of California Case No. SA CV 02-1040, at 6:5 ("Defendants therefore cannot escape the standard [*18] set forth in Cel-Tech".)) This Court need not determine whether Cel-Tech's narrower test of "unfairness" applies here as a matter of law because, even if it does, New Destiny states a claim under it.

HN4↑ Antitrust law covers patent infringement lawsuits initiated in bad faith. As the Ninth Circuit observed in Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 601 F.2d 986, 993 (9th Cir. 1979), [Patent] infringement actions initiated and conducted in bad faith contribute nothing to the furtherance of the policies of either the patent law or the antitrust law. The district court was correct in holding, in effect, that such actions may constitute an attempt to monopolize violative of Section 2 of the antitrust law.

New Destiny has alleged that Acacia initiated its patent infringement lawsuit against New Destiny in bad faith. In particular, New Destiny alleges that:

Acacia has (i) made knowingly false and/or misleading statements about the systems and methods covered by its patents; (ii) made knowingly false and misleading statements about the validity of its patents . . . ; (iii) made false statements, without investigations, about alleged infringement of [*19] its patents by Defendant and others; (iv) filed and is prosecuting objectively baseless patent infringement lawsuits, without pre-suit investigation against Defendant and others in Defendant's industry; (v) filed and prosecuted objectively baseless patent infringement lawsuits, without pre-suit investigation, against companies which Acacia's executives concede to do not even need to license the patents-in-suit; (vi) filed and is prosecuting objectively baseless claims of unfair competition, interference with business advantage, and trade libel against Defendant and others in Defendant's industry; (vii) sought and obtained default injunction orders against certain companies incorporating knowingly false statement about the scope of its patent claims; and (viii) has touted those default injunction orders in the press to validate its knowingly false statements about the systems and methods covered by its patents.

(New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 41:21-42:9.) Construing New Destiny's pleading in the light most favorable to it, this Court concludes that New Destiny has alleged conduct that "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit [*20] of one of those laws . . . , or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 187; see also Lynch v. Magnavox Co., 94 F.2d 883 (9th Cir. 1938) (holding that plaintiff stated an antitrust claim against defendants when it alleged that defendants attempted to monopolize by initiating 55 patent infringement lawsuits and mailing numerous letters threatening to sue for patent infringement); Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co., 198 F.2d 416 (10th Cir. 1952) (holding that evidence that patent holders had given wide publicity to the number of patents they held -- many of which had expired -- supported a finding that the patent holders had engaged in monopolistic practices).

Accordingly, this Court DENIES Acacia's Motion to Dismiss New Destiny's Eight Counterclaim for Violation of CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200.

B. New Destiny's Ninth Counterclaim: Abuse of Process

New Destiny's Ninth Counterclaim against Acacia is for Abuse of Process. As far as this Court can tell, New Destiny premises its Abuse of Process counterclaim upon two "abuses" of "process." First, New Destiny [*21] appears to allege that this lawsuit, which New Destiny characterizes as "objectively baseless," is abuse of process. (See New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 49:5-7 ("Acacia has abused the legal process by instituting and maintaining its objectively baseless patent infringement and business tort claims against Defendant . . . to accomplish a purpose for which the legal system is not designed or intended").) Second, New Destiny appears to allege that Acacia's lawsuits against others is abuse of process. (See New Destiny's Opposition Ex. 1 at 45:18-46:27, 47:26-48:7, 48:14-15, 48:21-24 (alleging that Acacia, after obtaining default injunctions against other defendants in other cases, embarked upon a media campaign that misrepresented the nature of the default injunction); see also New Destiny's Opposition at 20:19-23 ("Acacia has filed a multitude of dubious lawsuits against defendants it perceived as low-hanging fruit,' then deceptively leveraged publicity generated by those lawsuits to coerce defendants -- and others - - into paying for licenses from Acacia").) Neither of these alleged "abuses" of "process" are a sufficient basis upon which to premise an abuse of [*22] process claim.

First, HN5 [↑] "[t]he mere filing of a complaint or maintenance of a lawsuit, even for an improper purpose, does not constitute an abuse of process." 6A CAL. JUR. 3D Assault and Other Willful Torts § 17 (2003); see also Loomis v. Murphy, 217 Cal. App. 3d 589, 595, 266 Cal. Rptr. 82 (1990) ("[I]t is well settled that . . . the mere filing or maintenance of a lawsuit -- even for an improper purpose -- is not a proper basis for an abuse of process action") (citing Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc., 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1169, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 (1986)); RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 682 cmt. a (1977) ("The gravamen of [abuse of process] . . . is not . . . the wrongful initiation of . . . civil proceedings"); 5 B.E. WITKIN, SUMMARY OF CALIFORNIA LAW § 460 (9th ed. 1988) ("Obviously, the mere filing of a lawsuit is not an abuse of process"). Thus, Acacia's initiation of this lawsuit cannot form the basis of New Destiny's abuse of process counterclaim. See Loomis, 217 Cal. App. 3d at 595 (affirming the dismissal of an abuse of process claim because the pleading "contained no allegations of [*23] misuse of process other than the filing of the complaint"). New Destiny conclusorily argues that its "allegations are extensive and encompass much more than the mere filing or maintenance of a lawsuit." (New Destiny's Opposition at 22:6-7.) Notably, however, New Destiny fails to support this argument with specific citations to its pleading.

Second, Acacia's other lawsuits against other defendants -- and the default injunctions obtained therefrom -- cannot form the basis of New Destiny's abuse of process counterclaim against Acacia. In every case upon which New Destiny relies, the alleged "process" that the defendants/counterdefendants allegedly "abused" is always directed at the plaintiff/counterclaimant. See Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group, 41 Cal. 3d 782, 788, 226 Cal. Rptr. 90, 718 P.2d 77

(1986) (plaintiff alleged that defendant wrongfully appealed a judgment in plaintiffs favor); Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Assocs., 107 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1014, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 602 (2003) (plaintiff alleged that defendant wrongfully levied plaintiffs bank accounts); Brown v. Kennard, 94 Cal. App. 4th 40, 43-44, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891 (2001) (plaintiff alleged that defendant wrongfully levied plaintiff's deposit account); Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat, 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 526, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 (1979) [*24] (counterclaimant alleged that counterdefendant wrongfully obtained two contempt orders against counterclaimant). Here, Acacia's other lawsuits against other defendants -- and the default injunctions obtained therefrom -- simply are too remote to form the basis of New Destiny's abuse of process counterclaim against Acacia.

As a final matter, Acacia's alleged misrepresentations to the media regarding the scope of the default injunctions is not the type of "process" protected by the abuse of process claim.HN6 [↑] "For purposes of the tort of abuse of process, the process that is abused must be judicial process. The essence of the tort lies in the misuse of the power of the court. It is an act done in the name of the court and under its authority for the purpose of perpetrating an injustice." 6A CAL. JUR. 3D Assault and Other Willful Torts § 12 (2003) (emphasis added). Statements (or misstatements) to the media, such as those allegedly made by Acacia, do not abuse judicial process.

Accordingly, this Court GRANTS Acacia's Motion to Dismiss New Destiny's Ninth Counterclaim for Abuse of Process.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, this Court DENIES Acacia's [*25] Motion to Dismiss New Destiny's Eighth Counterclaim and GRANTS Acacia's Motion to Dismiss New Destiny's Ninth Counterclaim.

Dated: July 19, 2005

JAMES WARE

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Briggs & Stratton Corp. v. Kohler Co.

United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin

July 20, 2005, Decided

05-C-0025-C

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14808 *; 2005 WL 1711154

BRIGGS & STRATTON CORP., Plaintiff v. KOHLER CO., Defendant

Subsequent History: Patent interpreted by, Summary judgment granted, in part, summary judgment denied, in part by, Partial summary judgment granted by, Motion to strike granted by, in part, Motion to strike denied by, in part Briggs & Stratton Corp. v. Kohler Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26913 \(W.D. Wis., Nov. 3, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

patent, antitrust, antitrust claim, consumer, sever, counterclaims, allegations, motion to dismiss, engine, unfair competition, infringement, manufacture, notice, lawn tractor

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) will be granted only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations of the complaint. In deciding a R. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, the court takes as true all well-pleaded facts, drawing all inferences and resolving all ambiguities in favor of the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide for a system of notice pleading pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, which requires only that the plaintiff set out a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). The primary purpose of Rule 8 is rooted in fair notice: under Rule 8, a complaint must be presented with intelligibility sufficient for a court or opposing party to understand whether a valid claim is alleged and if so what it is. In light of this liberal standard, a party can resist a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss by setting out facts sufficient to outline the basis of its claim.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

Federal pleading rules require that a complaint only give notice of the plaintiff's claim and not that it spell out the facts underlying the claim. Plaintiffs don't have to file long complaints, don't have to plead facts, and don't have to plead legal theories.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Misjoinder

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN4 Joinder of Parties, Misjoinder

Fed. R. Civ. P. 21 allows a court to sever any claim against a party.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Separate Trials

HN5 Trials, Separate Trials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 42\(b\) allows a court to conduct separate trials on claims in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > Federal Court Jurisdiction

HN6 Intellectual Property, Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse

The jurisdiction of the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit does not change upon severance of patent infringement claims from antitrust counterclaims in a suit; the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction is based on the allegations in the complaint. Where a complaint alleges patent infringement claims, the Federal Circuit has jurisdiction. The Federal Circuit has appellate jurisdiction if the district court's original jurisdiction is based in part on 28 U.S.C.S. § 1338, as determined by the plaintiff's well-pleaded complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Separate Trials

Patent Law > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Ancillary Jurisdiction

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Separating trials of patent and antitrust claims pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 42\(b\) is typical. As a general rule, separate trials of patent and antitrust claims further the interests of convenience, expediency and economy.

Counsel: [*1] For BRIGGS & STRATTON CORPORATION, Plaintiffs: DAVID L. DEBRUIN, MARK L. KOVNER, THOMAS O. KUHNS

For KOHLER CO., Defendants: DAVID J. HARTH, HELLER EHRLMAN LLP, MADISON, WI

Judges: BARBARA B. CRABB, District Judge

Opinion by: BARBARA B. CRABB

Opinion

---

OPINION AND ORDER

In this patent infringement suit, plaintiff Briggs & Stratton Corp. accuses defendant Kohler Co. of manufacturing and selling a single-cylinder internal combustion engine that infringes plaintiff's U.S. Patents Nos. 6,382,166 and 6,460,502. In response to the lawsuit, defendant has filed six counterclaims, alleging noninfringement, patent invalidity, violations of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, Wisconsin antitrust laws, Wis. Stat. §§ 133.03, 133.04, 133.04, 133.14 and 133.18, and Wisconsin common law of unfair competition. Now before the court is plaintiff's motion to dismiss defendant's antitrust and unfair competition counterclaims. Jurisdiction is present. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1338.

The crux of plaintiff's motion is whether defendant's counterclaims meet the liberal pleading standards under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\). Plaintiff argues that because defendant has alleged no injury [*2] to the competitive process and because it fails to plead the elements of any recognized federal or state antitrust claim, this court should grant plaintiff's motion to dismiss defendant's antitrust and unfair competition counterclaims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). In the alternative, plaintiff asks the court to sever the patent claims from the antitrust claims pursuant to Rule 21. In response, defendant contends that its counterclaims meet the notice pleading requirements of Rule 8\(a\) and that the court can meet plaintiff's concerns about delay, increased complexity of trial and juror confusion by bifurcating the patent and antitrust cases under Rule 42\(b\), rather than severing them under Rule 21. Because defendant's counterclaims meet the minimal pleading requirements of Rule 8\(a\), I will deny plaintiff's motion to dismiss. In addition, because both parties agree to bifurcation of the patent and antitrust cases, I will deny plaintiff's motion to sever the antitrust claims under Rule 21 and bifurcate the cases pursuant to Rule 42\(b\).

For the sole purpose of deciding the motion to dismiss, I find that the well-pleaded allegations of plaintiff's complaint and defendant's answer fairly [*3] allege the following.

ALLEGATIONS OF FACT

A. Factual Allegations of Complaint

Plaintiff Briggs & Stratton Corporation and defendant Kohler Co. are competitors in the market for the manufacture and sale in the United States of engines used in consumer lawn tractors.

On May 7, 2002, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office issued U.S. Pat. No. 6,382,166 (the '166 patent) to Daniel L. Klika and John H. Thiermann for an invention entitled "Balancing System Using Reciprocating Counterbalance Weight." On October 8, 2002, the United States Patent and Trademark Office issued U.S. Pat. No. 6,460,502 (the '502 patent) to Gary J. Gracyalny for an invention entitled "Engine Cylinder Head Assembly." By virtue of assignment, plaintiff acquired and continues to maintain all rights, title and interest in the '166 and '502 patents.

Without the permission of plaintiff, defendant manufactures, sells and offers for sale deliberately and willfully in the United States a single-cylinder internal combustion engine that infringes the claims of the '166 patent. In addition, defendant manufactures, sells and offers for sale deliberately and willfully in the United States a single-cylinder internal combustion [*4] engine that infringes the claims of the '502 patent.

B. Factual Allegations of Answer and Counterclaim

According to defendant, the '166 and '502 patents are invalid and void for failing to meet one or more of the conditions for patentability specified in 35 U.S.C. §§ 102, 103 and 112. In addition, plaintiff has monopoly power in the consumer lawn tractor market, as demonstrated by plaintiff's market share as well as by significant barriers to entry, including the investment, technology and business reputation necessary to manufacture and market the products in the consumer lawn tractor market. Plaintiff has willfully maintained its monopoly power in the consumer lawn tractor market by illegal anticompetitive and exclusionary acts and by engaging in unreasonable agreements in restraint of trade affecting a substantial volume of commerce, including, but not limited to the following: 1) bundling rebates that defendant pays to both its direct purchasers (original equipment manufacturers that incorporate engines into a consumer lawn tractor) and to retailers that sell completed consumer lawn tractors directly to consumers; and 2) entering into exclusionary contracts [*5] that expressly or effectively require direct purchasers or retailers to deal exclusively with plaintiff and not with its competitors, including defendant. Plaintiff has acted for the purpose and with the effect of obtaining and maintaining monopoly power in the market for engines for consumer lawn tractors and it has excluded competition from that market in violation of the Sherman Act §§ 1 & 2, Wis. Stat. §§ 133.03, 133.04, 133.05, 133.14 and 133.18 and Wisconsin unfair competition laws. Plaintiff's monopoly power has not resulted from superior products or business acumen or competition on the merits, but rather from unlawful anticompetitive conduct.

As a result of plaintiff's conduct, consumers have been harmed by having to pay higher prices for products in the consumer lawn tractor market and by being denied choice. In addition, plaintiff's conduct has harmed defendant in its business or property through lost sales and profits. Defendant had a reasonable probability of deriving economic benefit from ongoing and prospective business relationships with third parties involving the sale of products to those parties. Plaintiff interfered with defendant's relationships with its customers [*6] and prospective customers knowingly and without justification or excuse, causing harm to those relationships and economic loss to defendant.

DISCUSSION

A. Motion to Dismiss

HN1 [↑] A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) will be granted only if "it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations" of the complaint. Cook v. Winfrey, 141 F.3d 322, 327 \(7th Cir. 1998\) (citing Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229, \(1984\); Gossmeier v. McDonald, 128 F.3d 481, 489 \(7th Cir. 1997\)). In deciding a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, the court takes as true all well-pleaded facts, drawing all inferences and resolving all ambiguities in favor of the non-moving party. Dawson v. General Motors Corp., 977 F.2d 369, 372 \(7th Cir. 1992\).

HN2 [↑] The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provide for a system of notice pleading pursuant to Rule 8, which requires only that the plaintiff set out a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). "The primary purpose of [Rule 8] is rooted in fair notice: [*7] under Rule 8, a complaint must be presented with intelligibility sufficient for a court or opposing party to understand whether a valid claim is alleged and if so what it is." Vicom, Inc. v. Harbridge Merchant Services, Inc., 20 F.3d 771, 775 (7th Cir. 1994) (citations omitted). In light of this liberal standard, a party can resist a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss by setting out facts sufficient to outline the basis of its claim. Panaras v. Liquid Carbonic Indus. Corp., 74 F.3d 786, 792 (7th Cir. 1996).

Plaintiff raises two related arguments: 1) defendant lacks standing to bring antitrust claims because it failed to allege injury to the competitive process and instead alleged that it lost business, which is not an antitrust injury; and 2) even if defendant had standing, it failed to allege any facts that amount to a violation of antitrust law. Specifically, according to plaintiff, defendant failed to allege what market share plaintiff has, what shares its competitors have or what barriers it has erected to expansion by existing firms such as defendant. Defendant points out correctly that Rule 8(a) requires notice pleading only and therefore, its allegations [*8] are sufficient. Defendant's counterclaims identify the laws under which it is suing and the anticompetitive actions in which plaintiff is engaged, namely 1) bundling rebates that defendant pays to both its direct purchasers and to retailers that sell completed consumer lawn tractors directly to consumers; and 2) entering into exclusionary contracts that expressly or effectively require direct purchasers or retailers to deal exclusively with plaintiff and not with its competitors, including defendant. These allegations are sufficient to put plaintiff on notice of the counterclaims and allow it to file an answer. See, e.g., Beanstalk Group, Inc. v. AM General Corp., 283 F.3d 856, 863 (7th Cir. 2002) HN3[<sup>1</sup>] (federal pleading rules require that complaint only give notice of plaintiff's claim and not that it spell out facts underlying claim) (citing Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 113 S. Ct. 1160 (1993); Kirksey v. R.I. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 168 F. 3d 1039, 1041 (7th Cir. 1999)) ("The courts keep reminding plaintiffs that they don't have to file long complaints, don't have to plead facts, don't have [*9] to plead legal theories.") (citing Johnson v. Hondo, Inc., 125 F.3d 408, 417 (7th Cir. 1997)). Whether defendant will be able to prove facts consistent with its allegations that reveal a violation of antitrust law is a matter for summary judgment.

B. Motion to Sever

As an alternative to its motion to dismiss, plaintiff asks the court to sever the antitrust claims from the patent claims pursuant to Rule 21 because the antitrust claims raise different issues and will require different proof. HN4[<sup>1</sup>] Rule 21 allows a court to sever any claim against a party. According to plaintiff, without severance, the jury may become confused regarding damages incurred from the patent infringement claims and the antitrust claims. Furthermore, plaintiff contends, without severance and upon appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit will have to apply the antitrust laws of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit; severance would allow the Seventh Circuit to hear any appeals regarding the antitrust claims.

Defendant points out that plaintiff's concerns can be addressed by separating the patent and antitrust trials pursuant to HN5[<sup>1</sup>] Rule 42(b), which allows a court to conduct separate [*10] trials on claims in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice and which defendant would be willing to accept. Defendant is correct when it contends that HN6[<sup>1</sup>] the Federal Circuit's jurisdiction does not change upon severance of claims; the court's jurisdiction is based on the allegations in the complaint. Apotex, Inc. v. Thompson, 347 F.3d 1335, 1343 (Fed. Cir. 2003). Because the complaint in this case alleges patent infringement claims, the Federal Circuit has jurisdiction. Id. (Federal Circuit has appellate jurisdiction if district court's original jurisdiction was based in part on 28 U.S.C. § 1338, as determined by plaintiff's well-pleaded complaint). In addition, HN7[<sup>1</sup>] separating trials of patent and antitrust claims pursuant to Rule 42(b) is typical. See, e.g., Brandt, Inc. v. Crane, 97 F.R.D. 707, 708 (N.D. Ill. 1983) ("As a general rule, separate trials of patent and antitrust claims further the interests of convenience, expediency and economy.") In its reply brief, plaintiff appears to concede that it would be satisfied with a separate trial and separate discovery and pre-trial schedules for the antitrust claims. Plt. [*11]'s Reply Br., dkt. # 31, at 3. Therefore, I will order the clerk of court to set a scheduling conference to arrange a separate trial date and discovery schedule for defendant's antitrust and unfair competition claims and deny plaintiff's motion to sever those claims from the patent claims as unnecessary.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that

1. Plaintiff Briggs & Stratton Corporation's motion to dismiss plaintiff Kohler Co.'s antitrust and unfair competition counterclaims pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is DENIED;
2. Plaintiff's motion to sever defendant's antitrust counterclaims from the patent claims pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 21 is DENIED as unnecessary;
3. The clerk of court is directed to set a scheduling conference before the magistrate judge to address bifurcation of the antitrust claims from the patent claims.

Entered this 20th day of July, 2005.

BARBARA B. CRABB

District Judge

---

End of Document

eMag Solutions LLC v. Toda Kogyo Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

July 20, 2005, Decided ; July 20, 2005, Filed

No. C 02-1611 PJH

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44512 *; 2005 WL 1712084

eMAG SOLUTIONS LLC; et al., Plaintiffs, v. TODA KOGYO CORPORATION, et al., Defendants.

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR CITATION

Subsequent History: Motion denied by *eMag Solutions, LLC v. Toda Kogyo Corp., 426 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22543 \(N.D. Cal., 2006\)*

Core Terms

---

commerce, domestic, purchases, export, imports, conspiracy, antitrust, defendants', prices, Sherman Act, eMag, foreign commerce, plaintiffs', bought, anti trust law, but-for, effects, reasonably foreseeable, domestic commerce, manufactured, allegations, anticompetitive conduct, injuries, sales, foreign nation, give rise, price-fixing, causation, inflated, abroad

Counsel: For eMag Solutions LLC, eMag Solutions Limited, Plaintiffs: James Christopher Bradley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kim Keevers, Michael Joseph Brickman, Richardson, Patrick, Westbrook & Brickman, Charleston, SC; Joseph R. Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lieff, Cabraser, Heiman & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lowell Brickman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Lowell Brickman, Austin, TX; Robert G. Eisler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Leiff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein LLP, New York, NY; Robert L. King, Stephen M. Tillery, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Carr Korein Tillery Kunin, Montroy Cates Katz & Glass LLC, St. Louis, MO; Steven Elliott Fineman, LEAD ATTORNEY, New York, NY U.S.A; Francis O. Scarpulla, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Peter Edwin Leckman, Lieff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, CA.

For Cintas VAC S.A. de C.V., Plaintiff: Eric B. Fastiff, Joseph R. Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; James Christopher Bradley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kim Keevers, Michael Joseph Brickman, Richardson, Patrick, Westbrook & Brickman, Charleston, SC; Lowell Brickman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Lowell Brickman, Austin, TX; Robert G. [*2] Eisler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Leiff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein LLP, New York, NY; Robert L. King, Stephen M. Tillery, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Carr Korein Tillery Kunin, Montroy Cates Katz & Glass LLC, St. Louis, MO; Steven Elliott Fineman, LEAD ATTORNEY, New York, NY U.S.A.

For Greencorp Magnetics Pty Ltd, Plaintiff: James Christopher Bradley, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kim Keevers, Michael Joseph Brickman, Richardson, Patrick, Westbrook & Brickman, Charleston, SC; Joseph R. Saveri, LEAD ATTORNEY, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Lowell Brickman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Law Offices of Lowell Brickman, Austin, TX; Robert G. Eisler, LEAD ATTORNEY, Leiff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein LLP, New York, NY; Robert L. King, Stephen M. Tillery, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Carr Korein Tillery Kunin, Montroy Cates Katz & Glass LLC, St. Louis, MO; Steven Elliott Fineman, LEAD ATTORNEY, New York, NY U.S.A; Francis O. Scarpulla, Zelle Hofmann Voelbel Mason & Gette, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Delta Magnetics, S.A. de C.V., Plaintiff: Eric B. Fastiff, LEAD ATTORNEY, Joseph R. Saveri, Lieff, Cabraser, Heimann & Bernstein, LLP, San Francisco, CA; Daniel E. Barenbaum, Lieff Cabraser Heimann & Bernstein, San Francisco, [*3] CA.

For Toda Kogyo Corporation, Toda America Inc., Defendants: Abby F. Rudzin, John N. Gallo, John W. Treece, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Sidley Austin LLP, Chicago, IL; Thomas P. Hanrahan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Sidley Austin LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Sakai Chemical Industry Co. Ltd., Sakai Trading Co. Ltd., Defendants: Joseph Froehlich, Richard E. Donovan, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, New York, NY; Denise H. Field, Mia S. Blackler, Buchalter Nemer, San Francisco, CA.

For Sakai Trading Inc., Defendant: Joseph Froehlich, Richard E. Donovan, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, New York, NY.

For Titan Kogyo Kabushiki Kaisha, Defendant: Jeremy D. Blank, LEAD ATTORNEY, Topel & Goodman, San Francisco, CA; William M. Goodman, LEAD ATTORNEY, LIAISON COUNSEL FOR DEFENDANTS, Topel & Goodman, San Francisco, CA.

For Inabata & Company Ltd., Inabata America Corporation, Defendants: Irving P. Seidman, Lawrence H. Silverman, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Seidman Silverman & Seidman P.C., New York, NY.

For Ishihara Sangyo Kaisha, Ltd., Defendant: Bryan Cave, Louis F. Bonacorsi, LEAD ATTORNEYS, St. Louis, MO; Bryan Dunlap, Mark Hellerer, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Pillsbury Winthrop LLP, New York, [*4] NY; Daveed A. Schwartz, LEAD ATTORNEY, Pillsbury Winthrop LLP, San Francisco, CA; Paul R. Griffin, Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw Pittman LLP, San Francisco, CA; Sutton Keany, Berger & Webb, LLP, New York, NY.

For ISK Americas Incorporated, ISK Magnetics Inc., Ishihara Corporation, USA, Defendants: Leslie W. Jacobs, Matthew E. Liebson, Thomas James Collin, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Thompson Hine LLP, Cleveland, OH; Christopher B. Hockett, Viveka A. Rydell, Bingham McCutchen LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

Defendants' motion to dismiss the claims of the foreign plaintiffs for failure to state a claim and for lack of subject matter jurisdiction came on for hearing before this court on May 25, 2005. Plaintiffs appeared by their counsel Eric B. Fastiff, Joseph R. Saveri, Kimberly S. Keevers, and Joshua P. Davis. Defendants Toda Kogyo Corporation and Toda America, Inc. appeared by their counsel Thomas P. Hanrahan. William M. Goodman appeared specially for defendant Titan Kogyo Kabushiki Kaisha. Defendant Sakai Trading New York, Inc. appeared by its counsel Richard E. Donovan and Mia [*5] S. Blackler, who also appeared specially for defendants Sakai Trading Co. Ltd., and Sakai Chemical Co. Ltd.<sup>1</sup>

Having read the parties' papers and considered the relevant legal authority, and good cause appearing, the court hereby GRANTS the motion as follows.

---

<sup>1</sup> Defendants Ishihara Sangyo Kaisha, Ltd. ("ISK"); ISK Americas Incorporated ("ISKA"); ISK Magnetics, Inc. ("ISKM"); and Ishihara Corporation (USA) ("ISK USA") -- collectively, "the ISK defendants" -- did not appear. The parties previously advised the court that plaintiffs and the ISK defendants were in the process of settling.

BACKGROUND

This is an antitrust case, alleging violations of § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and filed as a proposed class action seeking damages under §§ 4(a) and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 15 and 26. Plaintiffs are eMag Solutions, LLC (a Delaware limited liability company), and four "foreign plaintiffs" -- eMag Solutions Limited ("eMag [*6] Wales" -- incorporated under the laws of England and Wales); Greencorp Magnetics Pty Ltd. ("Greencorp" -- incorporated under the laws of Australia); Delta Magnetics, S.A. de C.V. ("Delta" -- incorporated under the laws of Mexico); and Cintas VAC, S.A. de C.V. ("Cintas" -- incorporated under the laws of Mexico). Plaintiffs allege that defendants engaged in a worldwide conspiracy to set the prices of magnetic iron oxide ("MIO"), a substance used in magnetic products such as audio and video tapes.

The action is brought as a proposed class action by four of the plaintiffs as "representative plaintiffs," and by the fifth plaintiff individually. The representative plaintiffs claim to represent a class of persons and entities who purchased MIO from defendants in the United States from 1991 to the present, and a class of United States persons or entities who purchased MIO from defendants from 1991 to the present. They allege that defendants fixed the price of MIO throughout the world, including in the United States.

The ten defendants can be divided into four groups. First is the ISK group, which consists of Ishihara Sangyo Kaisha, Ltd. ("ISK" -- a Japanese corporation); ISK Magnetics, Inc. [*7] ("ISKM" -- a Delaware corporation); ISK's wholly-owned subsidiary ISK Americas, Incorporated ("ISKA" -- a Delaware corporation); and ISKA's wholly-owned subsidiary, Ishihara Corporation USA ("ISK USA" -- a California corporation).

Second is the Sakai group, which consists of Sakai Chemical Industry Co., Ltd. ("Sakai Chemical" -- a Japanese corporation); Sakai Trading Co., Ltd. ("Sakai Trading" -- a Japanese corporation); Sakai Trading's subsidiary, Sakai Trading New York, Inc. ("Sakai NY" -- a New York corporation); and Sakai Chemical Industry Co., Ltd. ("Sakai Chemical" -- place of incorporation not stated), the parent corporation of Sakai Trading (which in turn is the parent corporation of Sakai NY). Plaintiffs claim that Sakai Trading and Sakai NY are so controlled by Sakai Chemical that each is the alter ego of Sakai Chemical.

Third is Titan Kogyo Kabushiki Kaisha ("Titan" -- a Japanese corporation), which is partially owned by Inabata & Co., Ltd. ("Inabata Japan") and Inabata American Corporation ("Inabata America"). Although the Inabata entities are not named as defendants, plaintiffs assert that each is so controlled by Titan that it is the alter ego of Titan.

Fourth is the [*8] Toda group, which consists of Toda Kogyo Corporation ("Toda Japan" -- a Japanese corporation); and Toda American, Inc. ("Toda America" -- an Illinois corporation).

The Toda defendants, the Sakai defendants, and Titan now seek an order dismissing the claims asserted against them by the foreign plaintiffs in the Third Amended Complaint ("TAC"), for failure to state a claim and for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Defendants also contend that the foreign plaintiffs lack standing to assert antitrust claims because foreign harm is not actionable under the antitrust laws, and argue that the TAC fails to adequately plead antitrust injury.

DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standards

A court should dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim only where it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim which would entitle the plaintiff to relief. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\); Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro v. Lemer, 31 F.3d 924, 928 \(9th Cir. 1994\). Review is limited to the contents of the complaint. Allarcom Pay Television, Ltd. v. Gen. Instrument Corp., 69 F.3d 381, 385 \(9th Cir. 1995\). [*9] All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Smith v. Jackson, 84 F.3d 1213, 1217 \(9th Cir. 1996\).

The plaintiff bears the burden of demonstrating that subject matter jurisdiction exists over this complaint when challenged under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\). See, e.g., Tosco Corp. v. Communities for a Better Env't, 236 F.3d 495, 499 \(9th Cir. 2001\). The defendant may either challenge jurisdiction on the face of the complaint or provide extrinsic evidence demonstrating lack of jurisdiction on the facts of the case. White v. Lee, 227 F.3d 1214, 1242 \(9th Cir. 2000\). Here, since the defendants challenge jurisdiction on the face of the complaint, all allegations of the complaint are taken as true and all disputed issues of fact are resolved in favor of the non-moving party. See Love v. United States, 915 F.2d 1242, 1245 \(9th Cir. 1990\).

B. The Sherman Act and the FTAIA

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides, in part, that "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, [*10] in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act of 1982 ("FTAIA"), which is an amendment to the Sherman Act, excludes from the Sherman Act's reach "much anticompetitive conduct that causes only foreign injury." F. Hoffman-LaRoche v. Empagran, 542 U.S. 155, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 2363, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 \(2004\).

The FTAIA sets forth a general rule that the Sherman Act "shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce . . . with foreign nations," 15 U.S.C. § 6a, but creates exceptions to that general rule for conduct that significantly harms imports, domestic commerce, or American exporters. This "domestic-injury exception" provides that the Sherman Act is applicable to foreign commerce where the conduct has "a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" (a) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; or (b) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States, where [*11] that "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" also "gives rise to a claim" under the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 6a; see also Empagran, 124 S.Ct. at 2366 (under limitations imposed by FTAIA, courts have jurisdiction over Sherman Act claim brought by foreign plaintiff only when plaintiff alleges that defendant's conduct affected U.S. commerce and that the effect gave rise to the plaintiff's injury). In addition, if the Sherman Act applies to the alleged anticompetitive conduct only because of the effect on "export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States," the Sherman Act applies to such conduct "only for injury to export business in the United States." 15 U.S.C. § 6a.

In Empagran, the Court held that foreign purchasers who bought product from the sellers for delivery outside of the United States could not bring a Sherman Act claim based on the foreign effect of foreign anti-competitive conduct where the alleged domestic effect was independent of the foreign effect giving rise to the plaintiffs' claims. Empagran, 124 S.Ct. at 2363. [*12] The Court stated that application of American antitrust laws to foreign anticompetitive conduct is reasonable only where those laws "reflect a legislative effort to redress domestic antitrust injury that foreign anticompetitive conduct has caused." Id. at 2366. That is, where the defendant's conduct affects both domestic and foreign commerce, and the plaintiff's injury arises only from the effect on foreign commerce, the plaintiff's injury is independent from the domestic effect and the court has no jurisdiction. In addition, the Court ruled that the language "gives rise to a claim" (the second part of the FTAIA test) means that the foreign conduct's domestic effect must be sufficient to cause a cognizable injury to the plaintiff or plaintiffs. Id. at 2371-72.

C. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Jurisdiction and Failure to State a Claim

In the TAC, plaintiffs allege that defendants' conspiracy to fix prices resulted in the sale of MIO at artificially high and non-competitive levels in four categories of commerce -- U.S. imports, purely domestic commerce, U.S. exports, and purely foreign commerce. They allege that ISKM sold MIO in [*13] purely domestic commerce and as U.S. exports, and that ISK, the Sakai defendants, the Toda defendants, and Titan sold MIO in purely foreign commerce and as U.S. imports. Plaintiffs also assert that direct purchasers of MIO throughout the world were deprived of the benefit of free and open competition in the purchase and pricing of MIO in each of these four categories of commerce, and that plaintiffs and the members of the proposed class paid more for MIO than they would have otherwise paid in the absence of defendants' unlawful conduct. Defendants argue that the action should be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and/or for failure to state a claim as to each of these four categories of commerce.

sales in "purely foreign" commerce

In the TAC, plaintiffs allege that eMag Wales and Greencorp (not Delta and Cintas) were injured by their purchases of MIO in "purely foreign" commerce. Plaintiffs claim that eMag Wales purchased MIO manufactured and sold in Japan by Sakai companies and Toda Japan, and delivered to eMag Wales in Wales. They allege that Greencorp purchased MIO manufactured and sold in Japan by Sakai companies and Toda Japan, and delivered to Greencorp in [*14] Australia.

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' claims for recovery based on "purely foreign" commerce are outside the scope of U.S. antitrust law, and must therefore be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Relying on Empagran, defendants contend that the FTAIA generally excludes from the Sherman Act's reach all conduct that involves commerce with foreign countries. Id. at 2364.

Plaintiffs argue, however, that the FTAIA does not bar their claims of sales in "purely foreign" commerce, and that they have adequately alleged that those sales had an effect on U.S. commerce. In the TAC, plaintiffs assert that the effect of defendants' conspiracy on "purely foreign" commerce was dependent on its effect on "American commerce"<sup>2</sup> in three ways: First, they claim that they "bought MIO in American commerce," and so "would have been particularly well-suited to replace purchases of MIO in purely foreign commerce with purchases of MIO in American commerce, if the conspiracy had not affected the prices of MIO in American commerce." TAC P 85(a). Second, they assert that "defendants' conspiracy to fix prices above competitive levels in American commerce was necessary [*15] for them to support their conspiracy to fix prices in purely foreign commerce because competition from American commerce would have put downward pressure on sales internationally, including through sales diverted to American commerce and through arbitrage by purchasers in American commerce, and thus the defendants' conspiracy to fix prices in American commerce caused . . . [plaintiffs] to pay artificially high prices for MIO they purchased in purely foreign commerce." TAC P 85(b). Third, they allege that they "used the MIO they bought from the defendants in American and purely foreign commerce to manufacture magnetic tape and other products that they in turn sold in substantial volume in American commerce at prices inflated as a result of the defendants' conspiracy." TAC P 85(c).

Defendants contend, however, that the foreign plaintiffs cannot recover based on their foreign purchases for several reasons. [*16] They argue that the TAC does not adequately plead that the alleged price fixing of MIO purchased by eMag Wales and Greencorp in "purely foreign" commerce had a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on domestic commerce, or that the alleged harm to the foreign plaintiffs arose from the effect in the United States.

Defendants submit that rather than alleging that a foreign conspiracy had a direct, substantial, and foreseeable domestic effect that caused their injury, the foreign plaintiffs assert that they "pa[id] artificially high prices for MIO they purchased in Purely Foreign Commerce" because they could not engage in "arbitrage" purchases in the U.S. market due to inflated domestic prices for MIO. Defendants contend that not only do such circular allegations not meet the "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable" test because they are entirely speculative and conclusory, but also that the claims in the TAC arise only from the foreign plaintiffs' foreign purchases of MIO, and not from any effect on the foreign plaintiffs in the United States, as required by the FTAIA.

Defendants also contend that policy considerations underlying the Sherman Act and the [*17] government's deterrence of international cartels will be undermined by permitting plaintiffs' foreign commerce claims to proceed. Defendants point to arguments made in an amicus brief filed in the remanded Empagran case (in the D.C. Circuit) by the United States Department of Justice ("DOJ") and the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC"), in which those agencies argued that the FTAIA does not grant jurisdiction over claims of worldwide price-fixing conspiracies in worldwide markets based on theories of arbitrage and "but-for" causation without any specific domestic harm.

---

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs define "American commerce" as meaning U.S. imports, "purely domestic" commerce, and U.S. exports.

Just as in the present case, the foreign plaintiffs in Empagran had argued that defendants' "cartel" would have been unsustainable if the United States had been excluded from it, because plaintiffs would have either purchased in the U.S. at lower prices or from arbitrageurs selling product imported from the U.S. The Empagran plaintiffs thus asserted that their injuries would not have occurred "but for" the fact that the cartel included the United States, and that the U.S. effect of the cartel "gave rise to" their claim as required by the FTAIA. The DOJ and the FTC noted that the Supreme Court had rejected plaintiffs' [*18] argument that their construction of the FTAIA would help deter cartels, in light of "important experience-backed arguments (based on amnesty-seeking incentives)" raised by defendants, the United States, and foreign governments. The DOJ and the FTC argued that permitting cases such as the plaintiffs to proceed would undermine the government's deterrence of cartels, because cartel members who do not qualify for amnesty but might otherwise want to cooperate with the government -- i.e., through plea agreement -- would be discouraged from doing so.

Plaintiffs contend, however, that Empagran does not bar all foreign buyers from bringing claims under U.S. antitrust law for purchases in "purely foreign" commerce, arguing that the Court ruled that purchasers in foreign commerce may bring claims under U.S. antitrust law if their injuries would not have occurred "but for" the domestic effects of anticompetitive conduct (citing *Empagran*, 124 S.Ct. at 2372). They claim in addition that case law allows "purely foreign" commerce claims if the effects in the U.S. are the "but-for" cause of the plaintiff's foreign injuries (citing *Sniado v. Bank Austria AG*, 378 F.3d 210, 213 \(2d Cir. 2004\); [*19] *MM Global Servs., Inc. v. Dow Chem. Co.*, 329 F.Supp. 2d 337, 342-43 \(D.Conn. 2004\)).

Thus, with regard to the present case, plaintiffs argue that the foreign defendants' international conspiracy had an adverse effect in the United States, and that this effect was a "but-for" cause of plaintiffs' injuries; and they also assert that the domestic effects of defendants' conspiracy were the "but-for" cause of their injuries abroad. They contend that if defendants' conspiracy had not inflated U.S. prices, the foreign plaintiffs would not have been injured because lower American prices would have driven down international prices overall, including through arbitrage; and the domestic effects of the conspiracy caused their injuries because they had already bought some MIO in American commerce and could have purchased the rest of their MIO from the U.S. market had it remained competitive.

The provision in the FTAIA that limits the Sherman Act's application to conduct with a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on domestic commerce addresses the court's subject matter jurisdiction over antitrust claims and is not merely an element of the claims. *U.S. v. LSL Biotechnologies*, 379 F.3d 672, 679-80 \(9th Cir. 2004\). [*20] Accordingly, the court must consider whether plaintiffs have met their burden of showing that the court has jurisdiction over their claims of anticompetitive conduct in "purely foreign" commerce. The court finds that plaintiffs' theory of "but-for" causation - that plaintiffs would have paid lower foreign prices "but for" inflated domestic prices - is not sufficient to support a claim under the Sherman Act and is inconsistent with the "gives rise to a claim" language of the FTAIA.<sup>3</sup>

The court disagrees with plaintiffs' characterization of Empagran [*21] as setting forth a "but-for" standard of causation for claims alleging antitrust conduct in purely foreign commerce. In Empagran, which involved an alleged scheme to fix the price of vitamins, the respondents (foreign plaintiffs) argued that because vitamins are fungible and readily transportable, the sellers could not have maintained their international price-fixing arrangement and respondents would not have suffered their foreign injury if there had not been an adverse domestic effect (i.e., higher prices in the United States), and that this "but-for" condition was sufficient to bring the price-fixing conduct within the scope of the FTAIA's exception. *Empagran*, 124 S.Ct. at 2372.

However, the Supreme Court specifically declined to address this argument, stating, "We have assumed that the anticompetitive conduct here independently caused foreign injury," and noting that the question of the standard to be applied where the alleged foreign injury was not independent had not been addressed by the court of appeals below. The Court added that the respondents remained "free to ask the Court of Appeals to consider the claim." Id. at 2372. The Court [*22] did not set forth a standard for such claims - it merely commented that the respondents had raised the argument.

---

<sup>3</sup> In addition, the TAC does not seek class-wide damages arising from "purely foreign" commerce, as the definition of the proposed class includes only (a) "all persons" or other "entities" who purchased MIO in American commerce, and (b) "all United States persons" or other "entities" who purchased MIO in American or in purely foreign commerce. TAC P 72. In other words, plaintiffs do not seek to represent foreign plaintiffs who bought in purely foreign commerce.

Thus, plaintiffs in the present case are advocating a skewed reading of Empagran. Contrary to plaintiffs' argument, the Supreme Court did not conclude that foreign purchasers could pursue claims in the United States if their injuries abroad would not have occurred "but for" the domestic effect of the alleged conduct. Moreover, apart from what is stated above, the Court did not make any ruling about what was required for foreign purchasers in foreign commerce to bring a claim under the Sherman Act.

In addition, the D.C. Circuit noted on remand that the Supreme Court had "declined to decide whether this 'but for' condition is sufficient to bring the contested price-fixing conduct within the scope of the FTAIA's exception," and had remanded the case for further proceedings on the issue. Empagran S.A. v. F. Hoffman-LaRoche, LTD, 363 U.S. App. D.C. 333, 388 F.3d 337, 339 (D.C. Cir. 2004). The D.C. Circuit indicated that it would order full merits briefing on the question whether the nature of the alleged link between foreign injury and domestic effects was legally sufficient to [*23] trigger application of the FTAIA's domestic-injury exception. Id. at 339, 342-46.

Subsequently, the D.C. Circuit ruled that the court lacked jurisdiction under the FTAIA. Among other things, the court held that "but-for" causation between the domestic effects and the claim of foreign injury was not sufficient to bring the anti-competitive conduct at issue within the FTAIA exception. *Empagran v. F. Hoffman-Laroche, 368 U.S. App. D.C. 18, 417 F.3d 1267, 2005 WL 1512951 at *3 (D.C. Cir., June 28, 2005)*. The court emphasized that the language of the FTAIA exception - "gives rise to" - indicates "a direct causal relationship, that is, proximate causation, and is not satisfied by the mere but-for 'nexus'" advanced by the plaintiffs-appellants. Id.

This court also disagrees that plaintiffs' position in the present case is supported by Sniado and MM Global Services. It is true that the court in Sniado noted that the plaintiff's complaint had not even alleged that "but for the European conspiracy's effect on United States commerce, he would not have been injured in Europe." Nevertheless, the Second Circuit nowhere adopted "but-for" causation as the [*24] appropriate standard for antitrust claims involving "purely foreign" commerce. Indeed, the Second Circuit refused to "infer from the general allegations in [plaintiff's] amended complaint that the 'domestic component' of the alleged worldwide conspiracy was 'necessary . . . for the conspiracy's overall success.'" Sniado, 378 F.3d at 213.

Nor does MM Global Services support plaintiffs' position. In that case, an Indian corporation, Mega Visa, was the distributor for products manufactured by American corporations Union Carbide and Dow Chemical. Mega Visa and its affiliates purchased these products in the United States and resold them in India. The plaintiffs -- Mega Visa and its affiliates -- alleged that Dow and Union Carbide and their affiliates had compelled plaintiffs to agree to a price maintenance conspiracy. The defendants moved to dismiss, arguing that the court was without jurisdiction to hear the claim under the FTAIA, because the complaint failed to allege antitrust conduct having a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on U.S. commerce. The court found that the complaint did allege that the defendants' misconduct gave rise to antitrust [*25] effects in the U.S. that injured the plaintiffs -- quoting the allegation in the complaint that as a result of defendants' price-fixing, competition in the sale and resale of [p]roducts in and from the United States was improperly diminished and restrained, and as a result of such effect on competition, [the] [p]laintiffs were injured by being precluded from effectively and fully competing and maximizing their sales of [p]roducts.

M.M Global, 329 F.Supp. 2d at 342.

The district court in MM Global court never discussed whether "but-for" causation is the appropriate standard for foreign claims under the FTAIA. Moreover, the case did not concern "purely foreign" commerce -- the plaintiffs had purchased product in the U.S., which led the court to conclude that the complaint properly alleged that defendants' conduct had an effect on competition in and from the United States, and that plaintiffs were injured as a result of that effect.

Here, plaintiffs seek relief for overcharges in "purely foreign" commerce, but this claim does not arise from a "direct, substantial, and foreseeable effect" on United States commerce (as required by the FTAIA). [*26] The FTAIA does leave room for the possibility that foreign anticompetitive conduct can be subject to the jurisdiction of the U.S. courts. However, the FTAIA contemplates that occurring only subject to two conditions - the foreign conduct must have a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on U.S. commerce, and the plaintiff's claim must arise from the effect on U.S. commerce.

Indeed, as defendants argue, plaintiffs' proposed theory - pleading a global marketplace where inflated prices in the United States facilitated inflated prices abroad - would effectively nullify the Supreme Court's ruling in Empagan, because it would allow any foreign plaintiff who suffered harm abroad as a result of a foreign conspiracy to gain access to the U.S. courts and treble damages by making unsupported allegations of a global marketplace with the possibility of arbitrage pricing, even where there are no allegations of a direct impact on U.S. commerce. This result would run counter to the Empagan principle that U.S. courts should avoid unreasonable interference with the sovereign authority of other nations, see *Empagan*, 124 S.Ct. at 2366, and would require [*27] district courts to engage in complex, fact-determinations of alleged linkages between foreign and domestic injuries despite the Court's admonition that FTAIA's jurisdictional test should be capable of being applied "simply and expeditiously," see *id. at 2369*.

In short, the foreign plaintiffs' claims of antitrust injury in "purely foreign" commerce must be dismissed because plaintiffs are unable to allege that their injury was directly linked to acts that caused injury to U.S. commerce.

U.S. imports, U.S. exports, and sales in "purely domestic" commerce

In addition to alleging the sales in "purely foreign" commerce, plaintiffs claim that the alleged price-fixing conspiracy resulted in the sale of MIO at artificially high levels in three other categories of commerce - U.S. imports, "purely domestic" commerce, and U.S. exports. Defendants contend that the TAC fails to state a claim under the Sherman Act in any of these categories of commerce.

U.S. imports

With regard to U.S. imports, eMag USA (a U.S. plaintiff - not a subject of this motion to dismiss the foreign plaintiffs' claims) alleges that it bought MIO manufactured in Japan, from Toda Kogyo and Sakai [*28] Trading in the United States; and Delta and Cintas allege that they bought MIO manufactured in Japan, from ISKM in the United States. By its terms, the FTAIA does not apply to cases alleging antitrust conduct in foreign import commerce. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a. Thus, the rule articulated by the U.S. Supreme Court in *Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California*, 509 U.S. 764, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 \(1993\) applies - that is, "the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect" in the United States." *Id. at 796*.

Here, defendants argue that the purchases by Delta and Cintas do not constitute U.S. imports because these foreign plaintiffs are not themselves importers into the U.S. <sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs contend, however, that the MIO that defendants delivered to the foreign plaintiffs in the U.S. does qualify as U.S. import commerce. Defendants respond that plaintiffs have confused a claim premised on injury to the import trade between the United States and foreign nations with injury to persons who bought goods after they were imported into the U.S. Defendants also argue that the purchases by Delta and Cintas [*29] cannot be considered U.S. imports because the MIO simply passed through the United States en route to final destinations outside the borders of the United States.

The court finds that the motion must be GRANTED as to the claims of antitrust injury in American import commerce, because plaintiffs have not alleged that Delta and Cintas engaged in "import commerce" that produced some substantial effect in the United States. Moreover, as defendants note, the flow of commerce is not interrupted simply by an intermediate drop in the United States before shipping continues to a foreign destination.

---

<sup>4</sup> The MIO was imported from Japan into the United States by ISKM. Delta took possession of the shipment in Texas, and Cintas took possession in California. In both cases, Mexico was the ultimate destination of the MIO.

"purely domestic" commerce

With regard to "purely domestic" commerce, plaintiffs allege that eMag U.S., eMag Wales, Delta, and Cintas all bought MIO manufactured in the United States from ISKM, in the [*30] United States and abroad.

Defendants argue that the purchases by eMag Wales, Delta, and Cintas do not constitute "purely domestic" commerce because the "ultimate" destination of the MIO sold to each of these plaintiffs was outside the United States. Defendants note that each of the foreign plaintiffs is incorporated and has its principal place of business outside the United States. Defendants claim that the act of taking control of the MIO within the United States for ultimate delivery and use outside the United States does not give rise to a claim for violation of the Sherman Act, because the flow of commerce ends when goods reach their ultimate destination.

As with the argument regarding "import commerce," plaintiffs respond that the MIO that defendants delivered to the foreign plaintiffs in the United States qualifies as U.S. "purely domestic" commerce. Plaintiffs contrast the facts in the present case with the facts in Empagran, where the Court observed that the foreign purchasers had bought vitamins for delivery outside of the United States, and there was no claim that the plaintiffs had bought any vitamins in the United States or in transactions in U.S. commerce. *Empagran*, 124 S.Ct. at 2363-64. [*31] Plaintiffs contend that the Court's reasoning reflects that it is possible for foreign purchasers to buy a product in the United States or in transactions in U.S. commerce.

Plaintiffs also argue that the Court never suggested that the final destination of a product, rather than the location of delivery, dictates the kind of commerce at issue. They cite the legislative history, noting that the House Report stated that the FTAIA "preserves antitrust protections in the domestic marketplace for all purchasers, regardless of nationality or the situs of the business." H.R. Rep. No. 97-686, at 10 (1982) ("House Report"). They argue that a foreign purchaser who buys in the United States is participating in the domestic marketplace, even if the foreign purchaser then transports those goods abroad.

The court finds that the motion must be GRANTED as to the claims of antitrust injury in "purely domestic" commerce because plaintiffs have not alleged facts showing that the purchases by eMag Wales, Delta, and Cintas constituted "purely domestic" commerce. The court agrees with defendants that the flow of commerce is not interrupted simply by an intermediate drop in the U.S. before shipping continues [*32] to a foreign destination. The portion of the House Report cited by plaintiffs says nothing more than that foreign entities are not excluded from the protection of the U.S. law simply because they operate overseas -- it does not purport to define what is or is not within the flow of domestic commerce. Empagran did not address this issue, as the Court merely stated that the case involved foreign companies' purchases that were delivered outside of the U.S. It never addressed -- because it was not at issue -- whether transient receipt of product in the U.S. for ultimate delivery and use outside the U.S. constitutes "purely domestic" commerce.

U.S. export commerce

With regard to U.S. exports, plaintiffs allege that eMag Wales and Greencorp bought MIO manufactured in the United States, from ISKM, in the United States and abroad.

Defendants argue that eMag Wales and Greencorp, as purchasers of U.S. exports, cannot recover because they are not export competitors of an American exporter. Plaintiffs allege violations of the Sherman Act in connection with MIO that was manufactured and sold in the United States by ISKM, and was exported to eMag Wales in Wales and Greencorp in Australia. [*33] Defendants assert that the FTAIA expressly protects from the reach of the Sherman Act any anticompetitive activities of U.S. exporters, except if the plaintiff is "an American export competitor" injured by such activity. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a (requirement that the anticompetitive conduct have "a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on "export trade . . . of a person engaged in such trade . . . in the United States").

Plaintiffs argue, however, that the FTAIA codified the longstanding "effects" test, under which it is the location of the effect of conduct, not the location of the conduct itself, which determines the applicability of U.S. antitrust law (citing House Report at 5-6). They claim that one of the primary aims of the FTAIA was to provide U.S. exporters a special exemption from the "effects" test -- in other words, to exempt U.S. exporters from claims by foreign purchasers except in the limited circumstance where the U.S. exporter's conduct adversely affects U.S. imports or purely domestic commerce. They assert, conversely, where the U.S. exporter's conduct does affect U.S. imports or "purely domestic" commerce, then the foreign [*34] purchaser can sue for conduct that is not solely export-related.

Plaintiffs contend that the TAC supports their claims for purchases of U.S. exports, because it alleges sufficient effects on American commerce (citing TAC PP 15-17, 19, 29, 30, 34, 35, 51, 59, 63, 68, and 84).<sup>5</sup> Plaintiffs also assert that the TAC alleges that ISKM manufactured millions of dollars' worth of MIO in the U.S., which it sold in purely domestic commerce; that ISK Japan pleaded guilty to price-fixing; that defendants' conspiracy had the requisite direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effects on U.S. exports, U.S. imports, and purely domestic commerce; that defendants' conspiracy had a "spillover effect," inflating the price of U.S. imports and purely domestic commerce; and that eMag USA bought over $ 500,000 worth of MIO as U.S. imports subject to defendants' conspiracy (citing TAC PP 52, 98, 84, 86, and 15-17).

[*35] The court finds that the motion must be GRANTED as to the claims of antitrust injury in export commerce, as plaintiffs have not adequately alleged a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on U.S. commerce caused by these export sales, because they do not allege that the foreign plaintiffs are American export competitors.

D. Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Antitrust Standing

Defendants argue that the foreign plaintiffs lack standing to assert antitrust claims. Antitrust standing is an issue separate from the jurisdictional question discussed above. Unlike Article III standing, antitrust standing is not jurisdictional. Datagate, Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 60 F.3d 1421, 1425, n. 1 (9th Cir.1995). In Assoc. Gen'l Contractors v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), the Supreme Court set forth the factors a court must consider in determining whether a plaintiff has standing to bring a claim for violation of the antitrust laws. These are (1) whether there is a causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm plaintiff allegedly suffered, and whether defendants intended to cause that harm; (2) [*36] whether the nature of plaintiff's injury is the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (3) the directness of the injury; (4) the existence of more direct victims; (5) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (6) the complexity of apportioning damages. Id. at 538-47.

Defendants focus on one of the these five factors, arguing that the allegations in the TAC fail to establish that the foreign plaintiffs have suffered "antitrust injury" -- i.e., the type of injury that "the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977). Because "antitrust laws were enacted for "the protection of competition, not competitors,'" a private antitrust claim must allege an injury that results from the anticompetitive aspect of the defendants' conduct. Legal Econ. Evaluations, Inc. v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 39 F.3d 951, 954 (9th Cir.1994) (citation and quotation omitted).

<sup>5</sup> Those paragraphs of the TAC do not appear to support plaintiffs' argument with regard to U.S. export commerce. TAC PP 15 and 16 allege that eMag USA purchased MIO as U.S. imports. TAC P 17 alleges that eMag USA purchased MIO in purely domestic commerce. TAC P 19 alleges that eMag Wales purchased MIO in purely domestic commerce. TAC P29 alleges that Delta purchased MIO directly as U.S imports. TAC P 30 alleges that Delta purchased MIO in purely domestic commerce. TAC P 34 alleges that Cintas purchased MIO directly as U.S. imports. TAC P 35 alleges that Cintas purchased MIO directly in purely domestic commerce. TAC P 51 alleges that ISK sold MIO as U.S. imports. TAC P 59 alleges that Sakai sold MIO as U.S. imports. TAC P 63 alleges that Titan sold MIO as U.S. imports. TAC P68 alleges that Toda sold MIO as U.S. imports. TAC P 84 alleges that all the activities of the defendants alleged in the TAC had a direct, substantial, and foreseeable effect on all four categories of commerce.

Defendants contend that even if U.S. courts have jurisdiction to hear the claims of the foreign plaintiffs, the U.S. antitrust laws intended to protect [*37] such foreign plaintiffs, and the foreign plaintiffs do not have antitrust standing under the FTAIA. Defendants argue that foreign consumers who have not participated in the U.S. market as consumers or competitors have no right to bring a Sherman Act claim. Defendants also contend that each plaintiff has failed to adequately allege an antitrust injury -- that is, an injury that reflects the anticompetitive effect either of the alleged violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation.

Plaintiffs contend that antitrust standing doctrine does not apply to parties, like the foreign plaintiffs here, who are consumers in the relevant market, who bought the goods at issue directly from the defendants, whose injuries are clear, and who are entitled to recover the full amount they were overcharged. They claim that it applies only to parties who are not consumers or competitors or consumers in the market at issue, who suffer only an indirect injury, whose injury is speculative, or whose claims might give rise to duplicative recoveries or difficulties in apportioning damages.

The court finds that in view of the disposition of the Sherman Act claim, above, there is no need [*38] for consideration of defendants' alternative claim that plaintiffs lack antitrust standing. See Verizon Communications, Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis v. Trinko LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 416 n.5, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004).

CONCLUSION

In accordance with the foregoing, the court finds that defendants' motion must be GRANTED and that the claims of the foreign plaintiffs must be DISMISSED. Because the court finds that amendment would be futile, the dismissal is WITH PREJUDICE.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: July 20, 2005

PHYLLIS J. HAMILTON

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Lundsford v. Callaway Golf Co.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee

July 20, 2005, Filed

No. 3:04-cv-442

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59896 *

JAMES P. LUNDSFORD, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. CALLAWAY GOLF COMPANY, a Delaware corporation and CALLAWAY GOLF SALES COMPANY, a California Corporation, Defendants.

Core Terms

---

retailers, products, class action, manufacturer, golf, golf club, damages, class member, dealer, class certification, anti trust law, summary judgment, minimum price, predominate, representative plaintiff, distributors, antitrust, consumers, putative class, termination, discount, prices, sales, injunctive relief, plaintiff's claim, Sherman Act, depositions, conspiracy, partial summary judgment, common question

Counsel: [*1] For James P Lundsford, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Gordon Ball, LEAD ATTORNEY, Gordon Ball Lw Office PLLC, Knoxville, TN USA; Stephen G Kabalka, Maddox & Anderson, PLLC, Chattanooga, TN USA.

For Callaway Golf Co, a Delaware Corporation, Callaway Golf Sales Company, a California Corporation, Defendants: David Ettinger, LEAD ATTORNEY, Honigman, Miller, Schwartz & Cohen, Detroit, MI USA; Edward Wasmuth, Jr, Thomas W Rhodes, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Smith, Gambrell and Russell, Atlanta, GA USA; John A Lucas, Howard & Howard, PC, Knoxville, TN USA.

Judges: James H. Jarvis, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: James H. Jarvis

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION

This putative class action arises out of claims of illegal restraint of trade and anticompetitive conduct by Callaway Golf Company and Callaway Golf Sales Company throughout the United States occurring since March 30, 2000. The plaintiff claims to have been injured in that they have paid more for Callaway golf clubs than they otherwise would have paid absent Callaway's allegedly unlawful conduct. The plaintiff seeks a determination that this action is a proper class action maintainable pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a declaration that the defendant's [*2] alleged conduct violated the Sherman Act, an order enjoining Callaway from the alleged illegal conduct in the future, and an award of legal costs and damages. The motions currently pending in this action are: (1) the plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment as to liability under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 [Court File 11], and (2) the plaintiff's motion for class certification [Court File 14]. For the reasons that follow, the motion for partial summary judgment is denied, and the motion for class certification is denied.

I.Factual Background

The original complaint and amended complaint names James P. Lundsford, a resident of Jefferson County, Tennessee, as the sole putative class representative. During the putative Class Period, the plaintiff purchased Callaway golf clubs from Wynn's Sports World in Sevierville, Tennessee, a retail dealer in golf equipment and supplies.

Defendant Callaway Golf Company is a Delaware corporation transacting business across the United States, with its principal place of business in Carlsbad, California. Defendant Callaway Golf Sales Company is a California corporation transacting business across the United States. Callaway is the largest manufacturer of [*3] golf clubs in the United States, distributing them through retail dealers located throughout the country.

In 2000, Callaway implemented the New Product Introduction Policy ("NPIP"). The policy stated that Callaway would only supply retailers that sold directly to golfers, that did not discount the products, that did not engage in bait-and-switch selling, that did not disparage the Callaway Golf product, and that complied with all laws. This new policy was part of Callaway's conscious decision to do business with full-price retailers rather than discounters. Callaway also claimed that discounting and bait-and-switch tactics by some of its retailers caused the company to fear degradation of the Callaway name brand. Among other things, the policy set a minimum price that retailers could sell Callaway products. Callaway claimed that the minimum price was set to allow for sufficient profit margins such that full-price retailers could provide fitting and training services to accompany Callaway products (e.g., 30-35% in the store where the representative plaintiff purchased clubs). Large, national retailers refuse to carry products that will not yield such profit margins.

The policy was developed [*4] with the close advice of legal counsel to adhere to antitrust laws. The NPIP states on its face that it is a "unilateral statement" and "not a contract, or an offer," further stating that Callaway "does not ask, and will not accept, any agreement about [a retailer's] compliance with this Policy." Callaway expressly forbade its sales force from discussing the policy with retailers, forcing any communications about the policy to go through their legal department.

Twenty NPIPs were issued between September 8, 1999 and August 30, 2004 to an estimated 17,000 retailers nationwide. These NPIPs were separated by more than six months only three times, while two or fewer months separated the issuances ten times. Each new NPIP superseded the previous one, allowing Callaway to add new products, carry over existing products, and remove products based on each product's life cycle. Each new NPIP described Callaway's requirement for retailers selling its golf clubs, including the minimum resale price for the product. The original NPIP dated September 8, 1999 included a signature line for acknowledging receipt of the policy and denying that the policy is an agreement, but Callaway abandoned that practice [*5] beginning with the NPIP dated October 18, 2000. Over 90% of Callaway's retailers received the NPIPs and had no other communication with Callaway about the policy.

Callaway attempted to enforce the policy, investigating each violation separately. Callaway's retailers generally fit into three categories: pro shops located on golf courses, stand-alone stores, and inside national sporting-goods stores. The NPIP was applied differently to different retailers. For example, in February 2001, Callaway excluded certain products sold in Tennessee by Dick's Sporting Goods. Similarly, "Mill River" plans sold at pro shops were originally not subject to the NPIP. They were included for a short time, and then excluded again. Callaway also treated violators of the policy differently. Some were sent letters stating that Callaway was aware of the violation and would refuse to accept new orders if the retailer continued to act contrary to the NPIP. Some had their shipments of the specific inventory item suspended for an indefinite amount of time, although Callaway would continue to accept orders for all other products carried by the retailer. The period of time in which Callaway would refuse to accept [*6] new orders varied by customer and product, and also changed from year to year. For example, the store that the representative plaintiff bought clubs from claims to not have been able to order a particular club for six months, while another store was allowed to purchase the same club again in an identical situation after only three months. Sometimes, Callaway elected not to enforce the NPIP at all, such as when retailers discounted products that were about to be taken off the NPIP.

Wynn's Sports World ("Wynn's") in Sevierville, Tennessee, was a retailer for Callaway. Mike Coughlin, the president of Wynn's, signed an NPIP covering certain Callaway products in January 2000. James D. Bowles, the director of golf operations at Wynn's, claims to have signed another NPIP the following year in 2001, but the last NPIP issued with a line for signature had an effective date of January 20, 2000. The first NPIP issued for the 2001 year had an effective date of May 1, 2001. In the summer of 2001, Callaway sent a letter to Wynn's advising them that they suspected Wynn's was selling Callaway's "Big Bertha Steelhead Plus Metal Woods" below the minimum price listed in the NPIP. When Wynn's did not stop [*7] selling the Callaway clubs below the agreed price, Callaway refused to accept any more orders from them for that item. During the 2001 PGA show in Orlando Florida, Mike Coughlin and Robert Jones, the vice president of retail operations at Wynn's, met with Michael Rider, legal representative for Callaway, to discuss the problems. This meeting did not produce any results. The plaintiff claims that Wynn's was not able to purchase the item until it was no longer subject to the NPIP. However, the NPIP issued with an effective date of May 2, 2001 stated that the clubs in question were no longer "covered by the 2001 New Product Introduction Policy" (as did the subsequent NPIP with an effective date of August 24, 2001).

In November 2000, the plaintiff James P. Lundsford purchased a set of "Big Bertha Hawk Eye Irons" from Wynn's. He paid the minimum price of $1249 as listed in the NPIP with the effective date of October 18, 2000. A few weeks later, the plaintiff also purchased from Wynn's a "Great Big Bertha Hawk Eye Driver" for $459. This product does not appear in the NPIP effective at that time. There is no evidence to indicate that he retained his receipt or paid the NPIP price. Jerry Messer [*8] was the salesman for Wynn's at the time, who later gave a copy of the NPIP to the plaintiff. At the time of the purchase, Callaway had not discussed the NPIP with Wynn's.

II.

Procedural History

In 2001, the plaintiff filed an original class action in Tennessee state court regarding Tennessee and Kansas law. The plaintiff also filed an identical class action in Kansas, which was later stayed. Rule 23.03 of the Tennessee Rules of Civil Procedure states that class certification should be decided "[a]s soon as practicable after the commencement of an action brought as a class action." Three years later, the defendant filed a motion that the class should not be certified. The day before the hearing on that motion, the plaintiff filed this action. The Tennessee state court action has still not been certified.

In the complaint, the plaintiff alleged three causes of action.

Count I alleged a cause of action for illegal restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. This Count was the subject of the plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment. [Court File 11]. The plaintiff subsequently filed two affidavits supporting the motion. On March 30, 2005, the defendant filed a response in opposition of the motion, subsequently filing deposition [*9] excerpts in support of the opposition. On April 7, the plaintiff filed a motion for leave to file a consolidated memorandum, in part replying to the defendant's opposition to the motion.

Count II was dismissed.

Count III alleged causes of action for violations of the antitrust laws of Tennessee, Kansas, South Carolina, and Oklahoma under the court's supplemental jurisdiction. However, the plaintiff now attempts to drop this Count III altogether in the proposed amended complaint. Defendant opposes this amendment.

VI.Motion for Partial Summary Judgment for violation of Sherman Act § 1

The plaintiff claims that summary judgment is proper in this case because "the undisputed facts show that Callaway and participating retail dealers have engaged in a contract, combination or conspiracy to fix prices on Callaway products, creating a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the antitrust statutes of Tennessee, Kansas, South Carolina and Oklahoma."

a.

Standard of Review for Summary Judgment

Pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment shall be rendered when requested if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, show that there [*10] is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. It is the burden of the party seeking summary judgment to show the court that, under uncontradicted facts, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Summary judgment is intended to provide a quick, inexpensive means of resolving issues as to which there is no dispute regarding material facts. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\). In assessing the validity of a summary judgment motion, the court views the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions, and competent affidavits in the light most favorable to the opponent of the motion. However, the party opposing the motion for summary judgment may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of his pleadings, but must set forth through competent and material evidence, specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\). "[T]he mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment." Id. Rule 56 mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient [*11] to establish the existence of an essential element of that party's case, and on which the party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Catrett, 477 U.S. at 322.

b.

Federal Antitrust Claims

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C.A. § 1. Although this section describes criminal penalties, the Clayton Act states that, "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U.S.C.A. § 15 (formerly Clayton Act § 4).

In United States v. Colgate & Co., the Supreme Court held that a manufacturer has a near absolute right to select with whom it will deal, and to announce in advance the terms and conditions upon which it will do business. 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 \(1919\). A manufacturer could announce that it would sell only to dealers charging a predetermined resale [*12] price, and could terminate sales to any dealer which did not comply. Id. Later in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., the Court upheld minimum prices set by manufacturers because "[t]he manufacturer often will want to ensure that its distributors earn sufficient profit to pay for programs such as hiring and training additional salesmen or demonstrating the technical features of the product, and will want to see that 'free-riders' do not interfere." 465 U.S. 752, 762-63, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\). No antitrust violation arises from a manufacturer's merely adopting a resale price policy and a retailer's following the policy to avoid termination of sales to the account. Under such antitrust laws, the retailer/distributor is "free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination." Id. Moreover, a plaintiff claiming resale-price agreement must show "both that the distributor communicated its acquiescence or agreement, and that this was sought by the manufacturer." Id. at 764 n.9. Unless the manufacturer seeks such a communication from the retailer/distributor and receives it, there is no "agreement." Id. Further, in Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., the Court held that there must be an "agreement [*13] on the price or price levels to be charged by the remaining dealer" as well as an agreement between the manufacturer and a dealer to terminate a 'price cutter.'" 485 U.S. 717, 726, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 \(1988\).

The plaintiff suggests that, under United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 \(1919\), a manufacturer can suggest prices but has only one choice with respect to violators — immediate termination of product purchasing privileges with no warning, no second chances, and no continued shipments in response to assurances of future compliance. The plaintiff maintains that Callaway never intended that termination of a dealer was an option under the NPIP. However, Callaway did terminate the ability of Wynn's (the plaintiff's sole example) to purchase the golf clubs that were subject to the NPIP. Callaway only allowed Wynn's to again order the clubs once they were no longer subject to the NPIP.

Plaintiff further asserts that Callaway's conduct constitutes a "per se violation" of state and federal antitrust laws. "Per se rules of illegality are appropriate only when they relate to conduct that is manifestly anticompetitive." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 \(1977\). The allegedly illegal practices, "because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable [*14] and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 \(1958\). Thus, the plaintiff is asking the court to find that Callaway's sales policy generally harms society, devoid of any accompanying benefit, without a substantial inquiry into the circumstances.

The court finds that this is not a per se violation of antitrust laws. The defendant has presented a plausible argument that the policy may be beneficial to the company, its suppliers, and the golf industry as a whole. The resale price policy, inter alia, protects reseller margins so that services such as fitting and testing can be provided, supports a premium brand image, facilitates investment into research and product development, and provides stability to combat destructive competition between retailers.

The plaintiff cites Bender v. Southland Corp. for the proposition that the "Supreme Court has long held that vertical price fixing is a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act." 749 F.2d 1205, 1211-12 \(6th Cir. 1984\). However, the court in that case maintained that the "practice is unlawful because it restricts the freedom of traders who are at lower levels of the product or service distribution system [*15] to set their own prices." Id. (citing Kiefer-Stewart, 340 U.S. 211, 71 S. Ct. 259, 95 L. Ed. 219 \(1951\); AAA Liquors, Inc. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 705 F.2d 1203 \(10th Cir. 1982\)). The instant case is distinguishable because there are no lower levels in the distribution system. Callaway sells only to retailers who deal directly with consumers.

In adopting that policy with the assistance of experienced antitrust counsel, Callaway followed well-established antitrust law that allows a manufacturer to choose its retail customers — including those retailers who do not discount. Before implementing the policy, Callaway sought expert legal advice, devising both an unambiguous document and a vigilant method of executing the policy. In fact, Callaway appears to have made more than reasonable efforts to implement its NPIP as an independent action, not subject to negotiation or agreement with any of its retailers. Wynn's had the choice to discontinue business with Callaway, but they voluntarily chose to acquiesce to Callaway's sales policy requirements. There is no evidence to show that Callaway sought any sort of agreement from Wynn's to abide by its sales policy. Thus, the plaintiff has failed to show that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. In fact, the facts are uncontradicted at this point that the plaintiff has failed [*16] to come forward with evidence that at least two elements of a per se claim have been met, specifically (1) the existence of an agreement, and (2) harm to society with a lack of any accompanying benefit.

c.

State Antitrust Claims

The plaintiffs also maintain state law claims in their complaint. The relevant Tennessee law states that:

All arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, full and free competition in the importation or sale of articles imported into this state, or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or of domestic raw material, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend, to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article, are declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void. Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 (1995). Any person who may be injured or damaged by any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination described in this part may sue for and recover, in any court of competent jurisdiction, from any person operating such [*17] trust or combination, the full consideration or sum paid by the person for any goods, wares, merchandise, or articles, the sale of which is controlled by such combination or trust. Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106 (1995).

The law was passed by Tennessee in 1891 to supplement the federal antitrust laws. See Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S.W. 705, 710 \(Tenn. 1907\) ("The wrongs to trade which were intended to be corrected and punished were those being perpetrated against commerce within the state, which Congress could not reach, and for which there was then no efficient remedy."). Thus, Tennessee courts have held that state antitrust laws are consistent with the federal law in that they focus on the same illegal conduct. Jo Ann Forman, Inc. v. Nat'l Council on Comp. Ins., Inc., 13 S.W.3d 365, 368 \(Tenn. Ct. App. 1999\) ("The Legislature clearly intended to prohibit trusts, combinations, and agreements affecting all commerce not covered by the federal statute, and upon which it had a right to legislate.").

For the reasons stated above for the federal antitrust claims, the plaintiff has failed to show that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Plaintiff has filed a motion to amend his complaint to drop his state law antitrust claims [Court File #54]. Defendant objects contending that the only purpose for dropping the state law claims at this point would be to allow [*18] the plaintiff to rebring the same lawsuit in state court should this court deny class certification. The court agrees with the defendant and finds that plaintiff has failed to show good cause for the amendment. Accordingly, the motion to amend [Court File #54] will be denied.

VIII.

Class Certification

The complaint defines the class as follows:

All persons who purchased Callaway golf clubs from dealers and co-conspirators in the United States that were subject to Callaway's and the dealers' agreements setting minimum prices from March 20, 2000 until the trial of this action is concluded. Excluded from the Class are all directors, officers, agents, and/or employees of Callaway.

Before a class may be certified under Rule 23, the party seeking class certification must establish that the class satisfies all four prerequisites of Rule 23\(a\). In re American Medical Sys., Inc., 75 F.3d 1069, 1079 (6th Cir. 1996). Pursuant to Rule 23\(a\), the burden is on the party seeking class certification to prove that: (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impractical; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims of the representative plaintiffs are typical of the claims of the class; and (4) the named plaintiffs and class counsel are adequate representatives [*19] for the class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\). In addition, the party seeking class certification must also establish that the proposed class action qualifies for class treatment under one or more of the Rule 23\(b\) subcategories. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\).

Subtle differences distinguish some of these categories. For instance, there is an "extensive" overlap between Rule 23\(a\)\(3\) and \(a\)\(4\). 1 NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS § 3.22, at 411. However, satisfaction of the typicality test "does not automatically mean that adequacy of representation is present." Id., at 412. Additionally, "[t]here is considerable overlap between Rule 23\(a\)\(2\) and \(b\)\(3\)." 2 NEWBERG ON CLASS ACTIONS § 4.22, at 152. "The Rule 23\(a\)\(2\) prerequisite requires that common questions exist. Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) requires that they predominate." Id. Each will be addressed below.

a.

Rule 23\(a\)\(1\) Numerosity

Rule 23\(a\)\(1\) requires that "the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impractical." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(1\). In this case, numerosity is not in dispute.

b.

Rule 23\(a\)\(2\) Commonality

Rule 23\(a\)\(2\) requires that "there are questions of law or fact common to the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(2\). One issue that is common to all class members is sufficient. In re Cardizem, 200 F.R.D. 326, 335 (E.D. Mich. 2001).

The defendant notes the vast number agreements comprised of various types of relationships and varying interactions between Callaway and its retailers. However, this argument is better suited for the higher threshold [*20] set for predominance in Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), which is "an important check on this requirement." In re American Medical Sys., Inc., 75 F.3d 1069, 1080 (6th Cir. 1996).

The plaintiff satisfies the commonality requirement because there are common questions of law and fact. Callaway's liability to individual purchasers depends upon the determination of the same issue of law, namely whether Callaway violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. As for common questions of fact, the plaintiff offers the following examples: whether Callaway possesses market power in the golf club market; whether Callaway used its market power ... to raise the prices of its golf clubs; whether competition in the golf club market and among Callaway's retailers was adversely affected; whether the members of the class suffered injury as a result.

It is worth noting that the defendant suggests the purchased golf clubs were not subject to the NPIP. If this is true, the plaintiff would not have a common question of fact with the putative class members, failing the commonality requirement. However, that question cannot be resolved at this point.

c.

Rule 23(a)(3) Typicality

Rule 23(a)(3) requires that "the claims of the representative plaintiffs are typical of the claims of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3). "Typical claims arise from the same event or course of conduct [*21] giving rise to the claims of other class members and is based on the same legal theory." [Court File 15] (citing Senter v. General Motors Corp., 532 F.2d 511, 525 (6th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 870 (1976)). Claims may satisfy this requirement, "even if members purchase different quantities and pay different prices." In re Cardizem, 200 F.R.D. 326, 335-36 (E.D. Mich. 2001) (quoting In re Playmobil Antitrust Litig., 35 F.Supp.2d 231, 242 (E.D.N.Y. 1998))."

The defendant alleges that the plaintiff does not meet the typicality requirement because his case is "[]encumbered by the presence of active participation by plaintiff's counsel," referencing the relationship between the plaintiff and counsel. However, the plaintiff satisfies the typicality requirement because the claims of the representative plaintiff are typical of the claims of the class. The sole putative class representative is James P. Lundsford. The plaintiff purchased a Callaway golf club during the class period from Wynn's Sports World, who was allegedly "subject to Callaway's and the dealers' agreements setting minimum prices." Claims brought by other members of the putative class would be substantially similar to the representative plaintiff.

The court again notes that the defendant suggests the purchased golf clubs were not subject to the NPIP. If this is true, the plaintiff would not have a claim typical of the putative [*22] class members, failing the typicality requirement. Again, however, that question cannot be resolved at this point.

d.

Rule 23(a)(4) Adequacy

Rule 23(a)(4) requires that "the named plaintiffs and class counsel are adequate representatives for the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). The plaintiff offers [Court File 15] two elements for this test: (1) the representative must have common interests with the unnamed class members, and (2) it must appear that the representative will vigorously prosecute the class action through qualified counsel. Senter v. General Motors Corp., 532 F.2d 511, 525 (6th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 870 (1976).

The plaintiff claims to meet the adequacy requirement because (1) "the named representative and the class members ... were similarly injured by the same illegal conduct," and (2) the plaintiff's counsel are qualified and experienced lawyers. [Court File 15]. Indeed, there appears to be no conflict between the representative plaintiff and the class members, and the qualifications of plaintiff's counsel are clearly sufficient. However, the plaintiff's failure to move to certify the class during the past three years is a "strong indication" that the plaintiff is not adequately representing the putative class. East Tex. Motor Freight Sys. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 404-405, 97 S. Ct. 1891, 52 L. Ed. 2d 453 (1977) (citing Beasley v. Kroehler Mfg. Co., 406 F.Supp. 926, 931 (D.C.Tex. 1976) ("The Court concludes that the plaintiff may not maintain her suit as [*23] a class action due to her failure to pursue class representation diligently through the filing of a motion to certify her suit as a class action.")); see also McGowan v. Faulkner Concrete Pipe Co., 659 F.2d 554, 559 (5th Cir. 1981) ("the district judge might properly take into consideration the circumstance that the plaintiffs' counsel did not move for certification during the two years the suit was pending."). Here, I also conclude that the adequacy requirement has not been met because the plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that he will vigorously prosecute the class action through qualified counsel.

e.

Rule 23(b)(2) Injunctive Relief

Rule 23(b)(2) applies when "the party opposing the class has acted ... on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate injunctive relief ... with respect to the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). The plaintiff maintains that the elements to this rule are that: (1) the claims of the class are cohesive, and (2) the relief sought is equitable in nature.

The plaintiff claims to meet the injunctive relief requirement because (1) the claims of the putative class are cohesive because they all share "a common characteristic subjected to [actions by the defendant]." Wetzel v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 508 F.2d 239, *250 (C.A.Pa. 1975). Also, (2) the plaintiff has asked for injunctive relief in their complaint. However, [*24] class certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is appropriate only "so long as the predominant relief sought is injunctive or declaratory." Ford v. Nylcare Health Plans of Gulf Coast, Inc., 190 F.R.D. 422, 428 (S.D.Tex., 1999) (quoting Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 411 (5th Cir. 1998)). "[O]ne critical factor is whether the compensatory relief requested requires individualized damages determination or is susceptible to calculation on a classwide basis." Coleman v. GMAC, 296 F.3d 443, 448 (6th Cir., 2002). Because any damages assessed will have to be determined for every retailer of Callaway products due to factors such as market prices, damages are not "susceptible" to a classwide calculation. Id. Further, it is reasonable to assume that the primary relief sought in this case is monetary damages and attorney fees, based on the history of the case, conduct of the parties, and the nominal attention paid to injunctive relief by the plaintiff in the complaint and supporting briefs.

The plaintiff cites Olden v. Lafarge Corp. for the proposition that any class seeking injunctive relief should be certified under Rule 23(b)(2), 383 F.3d 495, 510 (6th Cir. 2004). However, the court in that case emphasized the "importance of the injunctive relief" itself. Indeed, the plaintiffs in that case were homeowners that were having their health and homes damaged by a large cement manufacturer emitting hazardous toxic waste in violation of a consent [*25] decree. Moreover, there is virtually nothing in the record in this case to indicate that the predominant relief sought is injunctive.

f.

Rule 23(b)(3) Predominance and Superiority

To be certified as a class under Rule 23(b)(3), "questions of law or fact common to the members of the class [must] predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and [the class action must be] superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: ... (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

The plaintiff claims to meet the predominance and superiority requirement because the fact of injury and damages can be demonstrated with "common proof." According to the plaintiff, this case would establish the fact of injury for the entire class. As long as the injury was common to all class members, the variability of the damages from member to member does not matter. However, this argument is contrary to precedent in this circuit. In Mekani v. Miller Brewing Co., the court addressed a similar argument in which the plaintiff alleged a beer manufacturer and its distributors were engaged in illegal [*26] price fixing. 93 F.R.D. 506, 510 (D.C.Mich., 1982). The court held that:

The plaintiffs in the instant case have not satisfactorily demonstrated any method by which the distributors' participation in the conspiracy can be proved through any common set of facts. Plaintiffs' argument that there are common issues because there is only one conspiracy does not address the real issue. The complaint specifically alleges that the brewers, by agreement or coercion, imposed their plan on the distributors. Thus, the plaintiffs will necessarily have to show some sort of agreement or coercion between the brewers and each of the 180 distributors. Defendants contend, and the Court agrees, that the very process of proving the existence of the vertical arm of the conspiracy will raise questions which would require individual treatment. The case would degenerate into 180 separate trials and common questions would be overwhelmed by issues peculiar to individual parties. The plaintiffs' bald allegation that a conspiracy existed in violation of the antitrust laws does not insure that common questions will predominate.

Id. Further, the 6th Circuit has held that the refusal to certify a class on this basis is not an abuse of discretion. Stout v. J.D. Byrider, 228 F.3d 709, 718 \(6th Cir. 2000\) (holding [*27] that the plaintiff did not meet the requirement of Rule 23\(b\) when any resolution of claims other than the representative plaintiff would be subject to an "individual assessment").

The putative class cannot be properly certified under Rule 23\(b\)\(3\) because the plaintiff has failed to show that "questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\). Litigating the issue of whether Callaway's sales policy could be found to be an agreement with the nearly 17,000 other Callaway golf locations would devolve into an unmanageable tangle of fact-specific mini-trials. Individual issues that would have to be resolved for each class member would include whether there was an agreement, the scope of the agreement, the timeframe of the agreement, whether a class member was actually injured, and what the extent of the damages were.

"The central issue in each class member's case would be whether [a particular] retailer's decision to sell at the NPIP price or not in that specific transaction was the product of an 'agreement' with Callaway Golf." The effort and expense of both parties to determine the issues for just one such store should be noted, including [*28] the numerous affidavits, depositions, subpoenas, and expert witnesses. There is no reason to believe that any class member would face any easier or shorter task. During the class period Callaway distributed products through shops at golf courses, stand-alone stores, and inside national sporting-goods stores. Even the plaintiff admits that Callaway made individual decisions and took varying actions against different retailers. The NPIP was not consistently and continually applied and Callaway considered other factors before choosing to pursue any particular retailer.

Even if the fact of an agreement was established, individual class members would have to litigate the scope and timeframe of the alleged agreement. The court would have to determine which products were subject to the agreement. This issue has already come up in the instant case, where the defendant contends the plaintiff did not purchase clubs subject to the NPIP.

The timing of the alleged agreement is an even more elusive issue. The period of "probation" given to violators of the policy varied in each circumstance. Callaway's decision would vary "product by product, and it would depend customer by customer, and it would [*29] depend on what time period . . ." [Rider Deposition at 160]. Callaway would not tell the retailer, and the retailer would not know how long they would be unable to purchase the product. [Rider Deposition at 76]. The NPIPs do not include specific dates, only the item that it purports to cover. Callaway's variable treatment of individual retailers suggests that the length of time the policy remained in effect differed from retailer to retailer. Further, the plaintiff does not dispute that approximately 50% of products covered by the policy are discounted. Thus, the issue of whether the alleged agreement could be negated by the actions of the retailer's themselves would have to be addressed in many of the cases.

Additionally, any formula offered by the plaintiff could not calculate damages for the entire class. The issue of damages would have to be resolved with each individual retailer. First, the markets will fluctuate widely based on geographic location. No comparison of prices that would have been charged without the alleged illegal conduct could be made without litigating this issue. Second, the sales policy did not affect the actions of many retailers. For instance, many retailers [*30] sold Callaway products at more than the minimum price. Also, many retailers willingly sold Callaway products at the suggested minimum price for other reasons, including the fact that the suggested price built in a substantial profit margin. Further, when consumers purchase golf equipment, they often receive discounts, store credit, or additional free items such as golf balls. The damages calculation would have to include any of the various means of affecting the actual price of the equipment.

Finally, it would be difficult at best for individual consumers to determine whether they were entitled to membership in the class. Individual consumers would have no reason to know about potential litigation connected with their purchase of Callaway products. Even if notice was sufficient to alert every person who purchased a Callaway product within the time period, there would be tremendous difficulty in determining which consumers had legitimate claims. Only the most diligent consumers keep receipts for recreational supplies such as golf clubs for any appreciable amount of time. The fact of purchase would then become a matter for the jury. Johnston v. HBO Film

Management, Inc., 265 F.3d 178, 190 (3rd Cir. 2001) ("In cases raising issues similar to those here, it [*31] has become well-settled that, as a general rule, an action based substantially on oral rather than written communications is inappropriate for treatment as a class action."). The complaint also fails to address consumers who may have resold their clubs.

IX.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the motion for partial summary judgment [Court File #11] is DENIED and the motion for class certification [Court File #14] is DENIED. The plaintiff has not sustained the burden of proving that summary judgment is due under Rule 56 or that this case should be certified as a class action under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff's motion to amend his complaint [Court File #54] is DENIED.

Order accordingly.

s/ James H. Jarvis

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Mothershed v. Justices of the Supreme Court

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

April 15, 2005, Argued and Submitted, San Francisco, California ; July 21, 2005, Amended

No. 03-16878

Reporter

2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 14812 *

GEORGE L. MOTHERSHED, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT; CLERK OF THE SUPREME COURT, STATE OF ARIZONA; SUPREME COURT OF ARIZONA DISCIPLINARY COMMISSION; HEARING OFFICER; BAR COUNSEL OF ARIZONA STATE BAR ASSOCIATION; STATE OF OKLAHOMA JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT; OKLAHOMA PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY TRIBUNAL OF THE SUPREME COURT, Chief Master; OKLAHOMA PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY TRIBUNAL OF THE SUPREME COURT, Trial Panel of February 1, 2002; GENERAL COUNSEL OF OKLAHOMA BAR ASSOCIATION; TRIAL COUNSEL OF OKLAHOMA BAR ASSOCIATION; RUDOLPH HARGRAVE, Oklahoma Supreme Chief Justice; MADELINE HARGRAVE, Wife; ROBERT E. LAVENDER, Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; MAXINE LAVENDER, Wife; JOSEPH M. WATT, Vice-Chief Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; CATHY WATT, Wife; RALPH B. HODGES, Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; JANELLE HODGES, Wife; MARIAN P. OPALA, Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; JANE DOE OPALA, Wife; DANIEL J. BOUDREAU, Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; JANE DOE BOUDREAU, Wife; YVONNE KAUGER, Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; NED BASTOW, Husband; HARDY SUMMERS, Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; MARILYN SUMMERS, Wife; JAMES WINCHESTER, Justice, Oklahoma Supreme Court; SUSAN WINCHESTER, Wife; J. DANIEL MORGAN, Chief Master, Professional Responsibility Tribunal of the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma; JANE DOE MORGAN, Wife; J. PATRICK KENT, Presiding Master, Professional Responsibility Tribunal of the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma; JANE DOE KENT, Wife; ROBERT L. HERT, JR., Member of Trial Panel of the Professional Responsibility Tribunal of the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma; JANE DOE HERT, Wife; DANA WILLIAMS, Member of Trial Panel of the Professional Responsibility Tribunal of the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma; DALE CABINESS, Member of Trial Panel of the Professional Responsibility Tribunal of the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma; JANE DOE CABINESS, Wife; DAN MURDOCK, General Counsel, Supreme Court of Oklahoma; JANE DOE MURDOCK, Wife; ALLEN J. WELCH, Bar Counsel, Oklahoma Supreme Court; JANE DOE WELCH, Wife; CHARLES E. JONES, Chief Justice, Arizona Supreme Court; JANE DOE JONES, Wife; RUTH V. MCGREGOR, Vice Chief Justice, Arizona Supreme Court; JOHN DOE MCGREGOR, Husband; STANLEY FELDMAN, Justice, Arizona Supreme Court; JANE DOE FELDMAN, Wife; REBECCA WHITE BERCH, Justice, Arizona Supreme Court; JOHN DOE BERCH, Husband; MICHAEL D. RYAN, Justice, Arizona Supreme Court; JANE DOE RYAN, Wife; PETER CAHILL, Member of the Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Arizona; JESSICA GIFFORD FUNKHOUSER, Member of the Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Arizona; CYNTHIA L. CHOATE, Member of the Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Arizona; BARBARA ATWOOD, Member of the Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Arizona; C. ALAN BOWMAN, Member of the Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Arizona; CRAIG MEHRENS, Member of the Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Arizona; STEVEN G. NELSON, Member of the Disciplinary Commission of the Supreme Court of Arizona; LOREN J. BRAUD, Bar Counsel, Arizona Supreme Court aka Loren J. Broad; JANE DOE BRAUD, Wife aka Jane Doe Broad; JOHN PRESSLEY TODD, Hearing Office 7X, Arizona Supreme Court; JANE DOE TODD, Wife; NOEL K. DESSAINT, Clerk, Arizona Supreme Court; WILLIAM M. SPENCE, Attorney; JANE DOE SPENCE, Wife, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: Related proceeding at State ex rel. Okla. Bar Ass'n v. Mothershed, 2011 OK 84, 2011 Okla. LEXIS 91 \(Okla., 2011\)

Prior History: [*1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Arizona. D.C. No. CV-02-02375-RCB. Robert C. Broomfield, District Judge, Presiding.

*Mothershed v. Justices of the Supreme Court, 410 F.3d 602, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 10407 \(9th Cir. Ariz., 2005\)*

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

---

Antitrust, district court, disciplinary proceeding, regulation, practice of law, challenges, state court, disciplinary, state bar, Sherman Act, out-of-state, quotation, marks, subject matter jurisdiction, lower federal court, federal court, restrictions, lack subject matter jurisdiction, anti trust law, overbreadth, proceedings, state-court, decisions, licensed

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

[**HN1** \[down arrow\] **Preclusion of Judgments, Full Faith & Credit**](#)

The Rooker-Feldman doctrine's applicability is confined to cases of the kind from which the doctrine acquired its name: cases brought by state-court losers complaining of injuries caused by state-court judgments rendered before the district court proceedings commenced and inviting district court review and rejection of those judgments.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction on Certiorari > Considerations Governing Review > State Court Decisions

[**HN2** \[down arrow\] **Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions**](#)

Under Rooker-Feldman, lower federal courts are without subject matter jurisdiction to review state court decisions, and state court litigants may therefore only obtain federal review by filing a petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. The doctrine does not, however, prohibit a plaintiff from presenting a generally applicable legal challenge to a state statute in federal court, even if that statute has previously been applied against him in state court litigation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Sanctions > Disbarments

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction on Certiorari > Considerations Governing Review > State Court Decisions

HN3 Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

For purposes of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, United States district courts have subject-matter jurisdiction over general challenges to state bar rules, promulgated by state courts in non-judicial proceedings, which do not require review of a final state-court judgment in a particular case. They do not have jurisdiction, however, over challenges to state-court decisions in particular cases arising out of judicial proceedings even if those challenges allege that the state court's action was unconstitutional. Review of those decisions may be had only in the United States Supreme Court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

HN4 Preclusion of Judgments, Full Faith & Credit

The Rooker-Feldman doctrine is only operative where a federal suit is initiated after state court proceedings have ended. Proceedings end for Rooker-Feldman purposes when the state courts finally resolve the issue that the federal court plaintiff seeks to relitigate in a federal forum, even if other issues remain pending at the state level. A state supreme court's interlocutory ruling will therefore trigger the Rooker-Feldman doctrine's applicability where such ruling constitutes the final determination of an issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, does not apply to certain categories of state action, and included in these categories is the licensing and regulation of attorneys by a state supreme court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Arizona Uniform State Antitrust Act, Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 44-1401 et seq., is interpreted in conformity with the federal antitrust laws. To this end, the Arizona legislature clearly intended to strive for uniformity between federal and state antitrust laws. Indeed, Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 44-1412 explicitly provides, it is the intent of the legislature that in construing the Uniform State Antitrust Act, the courts may use as a guide interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable federal antitrust statutes.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

HN7 Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

When interpreting state law, federal courts are bound by decisions of the state's highest court. In the absence of such a decision, a federal court must predict how the highest state court would decide the issue.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Overbreadth & Vagueness of Legislation

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Third Party Standing

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Third Party Standing

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Standing

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

HN8 [blue icon] Judicial & Legislative Restraints, Overbreadth & Vagueness of Legislation

A plaintiff generally must assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties. This limitation is relaxed in the First Amendment context, however, because when there is a danger of chilling free speech, society's interest in having the statute challenged may outweigh the prudential considerations that normally counsel against third-party standing. A plaintiff's ability to invoke so-called "overbreadth standing" "has nothing to do with whether or not his own First Amendment rights are at stake but instead depends upon whether the plaintiff satisfies the requirement of "injury-in-fact," and whether he can be expected satisfactorily to frame the issues in the case.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Criminal Law & Procedure > Counsel > Right to Counsel > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN9 [blue icon] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Association

The right to hire and consult an attorney is protected by the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of speech, association and petition.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Criminal Law & Procedure > Counsel > Right to Counsel > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judges

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN10 [blue speech bubble icon] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Speech

While the Supreme Court has acknowledged that the right to consult with an attorney falls within the First Amendment's purview, the Court has also repeatedly emphasized that the States have broad power to regulate the practice of law. The Court has explained that the interest of the States in regulating lawyers is especially great since lawyers are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice, and have historically been officers of the courts.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

Criminal Law & Procedure > Counsel > Right to Counsel > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > General Overview

HN11 [blue speech bubble icon] Judicial & Legislative Restraints, Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

Time, place, and manner regulations are reasonable provided that the restrictions are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, that they are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and that they leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information. The principal inquiry in determining content neutrality is whether the government has adopted a regulation of speech because of disagreement with the message it conveys. Speech restrictions are content-neutral when they can be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

Governments > Courts > Rule Application & Interpretation

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN12 [blue speech bubble icon] Judicial & Legislative Restraints, Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

Ariz. Sup. Ct. R. 33(d) and 34 are content-neutral time, place and manner restrictions for purposes of the First Amendment because the rules impose a generally applicable prohibition on the retention of out-of-state counsel without regard to the subject matter of the representation.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

HN13 [blue speech bubble icon] Judicial & Legislative Restraints, Time, Place & Manner Restrictions

A time, place, and manner regulation is narrowly tailored as long as the substantial governmental interest it serves would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation and the regulation achieves its ends without significantly restricting a substantial quantity of speech that does not create the same evils.

Counsel: George L. Mothershed, Phoenix, Arizona, argued the cause for the appellant and filed a brief.

LeslieAnn Haacke, Renaud Cook Drury Mesaros, P.A., Phoenix, Arizona, argued the cause for the appellees; Terry Goddard, Attorney General, Phoenix, Arizona, Rosa Mroz, Assistant Attorney General, Phoenix, Arizona, N. Todd McKay, Renaud Cook Drury Mesaros, P.A., Phoenix, Arizona, Charles K. Babb, Assistant Attorney General, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and Allen J. Welch, Oklahoma Bar Association, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, were on the brief.

Judges: Before: Alfred T. Goodwin, Robert R. Beezer, and Diarmuid F. O'Scannlain, Circuit Judges. Opinion by Judge O'Scannlain.

Opinion by: Diarmuid F. O'Scannlain

Opinion

---

AMENDED OPINION

O'SCANNLAIN, Circuit Judge:

We must decide whether a disbarred attorney may collaterally attack his state bar disciplinary proceedings in federal court.

I

In 1999, the State Bar of Arizona initiated disciplinary proceedings against George L. Mothershed, an attorney who was licensed by the Oklahoma Bar Association [*2] but who lived and practiced in Arizona. In response to the disciplinary board's allegation that he had unlawfully practiced law in the State, Mothershed entered a special appearance and moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that he had not received a summons. The hearing officer denied this motion, and Mothershed subsequently refused to participate further in the disciplinary proceedings. A default judgment was entered against him, and the Supreme Court of Arizona issued an order censuring Mothershed for engaging in the unauthorized practice of law. See In re Mothershed, No. SB-01-0076-D, 2001 Ariz. LEXIS 63 \(2001\).

The Oklahoma Bar Association thereafter initiated its own disciplinary proceedings against Mothershed. A three-member trial panel found that he had unlawfully practiced law in Arizona, and the Supreme Court of Oklahoma entered an order disbarring him. See State ex rel. Okla. Bar Ass'n v. Mothershed, 2003 OK 34, 66 P.3d 420, 428 \(Okla. 2003\).

Mothershed responded by filing suit in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona against the Justices of the Oklahoma Supreme Court, the three members of the Oklahoma disciplinary [*3] trial panel, and several officials of the Oklahoma Bar Association (the "Oklahoma Defendants"). He also sued the Justices of the Arizona Supreme Court, the Clerk of the Arizona Supreme Court, the members of the Arizona Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission, the hearing officer in the Arizona disciplinary proceedings, and a state bar staff counsel (the "Arizona Defendants"). Mothershed alleged that the Arizona disciplinary proceedings were invalid because he had not been served with a summons. He contended that the Oklahoma proceedings were likewise defective because his hearing did not occur between thirty and sixty days after appointment of the trial panel, as required by Rule 6.7 of the Oklahoma Rules Governing Disciplinary Proceedings.<sup>1</sup> Based upon these alleged procedural shortcomings, Mothershed asserted a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for due process and other constitutional violations, as well as state law tort claims for interference with contractual relationships, defamation, abuse of process, malicious prosecution, false light, and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

[*4] Mothershed also contended that Arizona Supreme Court Rules 33(d) and 34,<sup>2</sup> which set forth the pro hac vice admission requirements for out-of-state attorneys and the standards for admission to the State Bar of Arizona, violate Arizonans' First Amendment right to consult with an attorney and contravene both the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Arizona Uniform State Antitrust Act, ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 44-1402. Mothershed requested damages totaling more than $ 330 million and an injunction reinstating his membership in the Oklahoma Bar Association and prohibiting the defendants from interfering with his Arizona law practice.

[*5] After the defendants moved to dismiss the complaint on various grounds, the district court dismissed the Oklahoma defendants due to the absence of personal jurisdiction. The court later dismissed the claims against the Arizona defendants on the ground that Mothershed was improperly seeking review of the Arizona bar disciplinary proceedings in a lower federal court and that subject matter jurisdiction was therefore absent under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. Mothershed timely appealed.

II

In the face of growing judicial uncertainty about the Rooker-Feldman doctrine's parameters, the Supreme Court recently reiterated that HN1↑ its applicability "is confined to cases of the kind from which the doctrine acquired its name: cases brought by state-court losers complaining of injuries caused by state-court judgments rendered before the district court proceedings commenced and inviting district court review and rejection of those judgments." Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Saudi Basic Indus. Corp., 161 L. Ed. 2d 454, 544 U.S. , 125 S. Ct. 1517, 1521-22 \(2005\); see also Rooker v. Fid. Trust Co., 263 U.S. 413, 416, 68 L. Ed. 362, 44 S. Ct. 149 \(1923\); D.C. Court of Appeals v. Feldman, 460 U.S. 462, 486-87, 75 L. Ed. 2d 206, 103 S. Ct. 1303 \(1983\). [*6]

We must therefore decide whether Mothershed's claims fall within the Rooker-Feldman doctrine's narrowed scope.

A

HN2↑ Under Rooker-Feldman, lower federal courts are without subject matter jurisdiction to review state court decisions, and state court litigants may therefore only obtain federal review by filing a petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. See Rooker, 263 U.S. at 416 (holding that a federal district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over a suit that effectively sought review of an Indiana state court's decision); Feldman, 460 U.S. at 486-87 (holding that a federal district court was without subject matter jurisdiction to entertain a challenge to a decision of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1257 ("Final judgments or decrees rendered by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had, may be reviewed by the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari . . . ."). The doctrine does not, however, prohibit a plaintiff from presenting a generally applicable legal challenge to a state statute in federal court, even if that statute [*7] has previously been applied against him in state court litigation.

<sup>1</sup> The rule provides:

The Chief Master or Vice-Chief Master of the Professional Responsibility Tribunal shall notify the respondent and the General Counsel of the appointment and membership of the Trial Panel and of the time and place for hearing, which shall not be less than thirty (30) nor more than sixty (60) days from the date of appointment of the Trial Panel. Extensions of this period may be granted by the Chief Master (or the Vice-Chief Master, in case of the unavailability of the Chief Master) for good cause shown.

<sup>2</sup> Rule 33(d) provides that a member in good standing of the bar of another State may be admitted to appear pro hac vice in Arizona upon approval by the court hearing the matter. Rule 34 lists the requirements for admission to the State Bar of Arizona, which include passing the bar examination and being certified by the Committee on Character and Fitness as possessing good moral character.

This distinction is well illustrated by the Feldman decision itself. There, two aspiring attorneys had petitioned the District of Columbia Court of Appeals for a waiver of a D.C. bar rule requiring applicants to have graduated from an accredited law school. Feldman, 460 U.S. at 466. After the Court of Appeals denied their petitions, the plaintiffs filed suit in federal district court challenging both the D.C. bar rule's general constitutionality and the District of Columbia court's decision in their particular cases. Id. at 468, 472. The Supreme Court held that the district court possessed subject matter jurisdiction over the former claim but not the latter. Id. at 486-87. The Court explained:

HN3[<sup>1</sup>] United States district courts . . . have subject-matter jurisdiction over general challenges to state bar rules, promulgated by state courts in nonjudicial proceedings, which do not require review of a final state-court judgment in a particular case. They do not have jurisdiction, however, over challenges to state-court decisions in particular cases arising out of [*8] judicial proceedings even if those challenges allege that the state court's action was unconstitutional. Review of those decisions may be had only in this Court.

Id. at 486; see also id. at 482 n.16 ("Orders of a state court relating to the admission, discipline, and disbarment of members of its bar may be reviewed only by the Supreme Court of the United States on certiorari to the state court, and not by means of an original action in a lower federal court." (quoting MacKay v. Nesbett, 412 F.2d 846, 846 (9th Cir. 1969)) (alteration in original)).

Similarly, in Craig v. State Bar of California, 141 F.3d 1353, 1354 (9th Cir. 1998) (per curiam), the plaintiff filed a § 1983 claim in federal court against the California bar after the state supreme court denied review of the California Committee of Bar Examiners' refusal to modify the new-attorney oath to comport with his religious beliefs. We held that subject matter jurisdiction was absent because the plaintiff was seeking review of his individual claim and did not present a general challenge to the California bar's policy. Id. We reasoned that a [*9] plaintiff can challenge the state supreme court's denial of bar admission to a particular applicant, the validity of the state's rules governing admission, or both. Lower federal courts lack subject matter jurisdiction over the first type of challenge . . . . In contrast, a general attack on a state's admissions rules may be heard by lower federal courts because a state supreme court acts in a nonjudicial capacity when it promulgates such rules.

Id. (citation omitted).

B

Mothershed alleges that the Oklahoma defendants denied him due process and committed various state law torts because the Oklahoma bar disciplinary panel did not hold its hearing within the thirty-to-sixty-day time frame required by Rule 6.7 of the Rules Governing Disciplinary Proceedings. Because Mothershed does not contend that Rule 6.7 is systematically disregarded in all attorney disciplinary proceedings or that the rule is itself facially invalid, he is not asserting a "general challenge[] to [a] state bar rule[]." Feldman, 460 U.S. at 486. Rather, Mothershed is alleging that the Oklahoma defendants failed to apply Rule 6.7 during his own state bar disciplinary hearing, [*10] which constitutes a "challenge[] to [a] state-court decision[] in [a] particular case[]." Id. Under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, the district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to review Mothershed's Oklahoma disciplinary proceedings,<sup>3</sup> [*11] and we therefore affirm the dismissal of the Oklahoma defendants.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>3</sup> In Exxon Mobil, the Supreme Court clarified that HN4[<sup>1</sup>] the Rooker-Feldman doctrine is only operative where a federal suit is initiated after state court proceedings have ended. 125 S. Ct. at 1526 ("In both [Rooker and Feldman], the losing party in state court filed suit in federal court after the state proceedings ended . . . ."). Proceedings end for Rooker-Feldman purposes when the state courts finally resolve the issue that the federal court plaintiff seeks to relitigate in a federal forum, even if other issues remain pending at the state level. See Federacion de Maestros de Puerto Rico v. Junta de Relaciones del Trabajo de Puerto Rico, 410 F.3d 17, 25 (1st Cir. 2005) ("if the state court proceedings have finally resolved all the federal questions in the litigation, but state law or purely factual questions (whether great or small) remain to be litigated, then the state proceedings have 'ended' within the meaning of Rooker-Feldman on the federal questions at issue"). A state supreme court's interlocutory ruling will therefore trigger the Rooker-Feldman doctrine's applicability where such ruling constitutes the final determination of an issue. See id. at 28 (relying upon Exxon Mobil to conclude that Rooker-Feldman prohibited a federal district court from deciding an issue already finally resolved by an interlocutory ruling of the Puerto Rico Supreme Court because "the state court proceedings had ended with regard to the sole federal issue").

C

Mothershed's claims premised upon the alleged absence of a summons directing him to appear at the Arizona disciplinary hearing are likewise barred by the Rooker-Feldman doctrine because these claims constitute a particularized challenge to the Arizona disciplinary proceedings' results. The district court therefore correctly concluded that it lacked subject matter [*12] jurisdiction over Mothershed's § 1983 and state law tort claims against the Arizona defendants, all of which are premised upon his failure to receive a summons.

D

Mothershed also alleges, however, that the admission requirements set forth in Arizona Supreme Court Rules 33(d) and 34 violate Arizonans' First Amendment right to consult an attorney of their choosing and contravene both the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Arizona Uniform State Antitrust Act. These claims pertain to the rules' validity as applied to all attorneys within Arizona (and, indeed, all Arizona residents) and thus do not present an individualized challenge to Mothershed's bar disciplinary proceedings. Rather--like the Feldman plaintiffs' general constitutional attack on the D.C. bar's accreditation requirement--these claims constitute a general challenge to the rules governing admission to the Arizona bar. See Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 564-65, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, 104 S. Ct. 1989 \(1984\) (entertaining a Sherman Act challenge to the Arizona bar exam's grading methodology brought by an attorney who had earlier contested his own exam results in separate Arizona state court proceedings).

Because "a general attack [*13] on a state's admissions rules may be heard by lower federal courts," Craig, 141 F.3d at 1354, the district court erred by concluding that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction over Mothershed's First Amendment and antitrust claims against the Arizona defendants.

III

Although the district court did indeed possess subject matter jurisdiction over Mothershed's general challenges to the Arizona Supreme Court rules, we "may affirm the district court's dismissal on any ground supported by the record." Wolfe v. Strankman, 392 F.3d 358, 362 \(9th Cir. 2004\). We first consider Mothershed's antitrust claims and then turn to his First Amendment challenge.

A

In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 352, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\), the Supreme Court held that HN5↑ the Sherman Act does not apply to certain categories of state action. Later decisions have held that one of these categories is the regulation of attorneys by a state supreme court. In Bates v. State Bar of Arizona, 433 U.S. 350, 359, 53 L. Ed. 2d 810, 97 S. Ct. 2691 \(1977\), for example, the plaintiffs alleged that an Arizona bar disciplinary rule prohibiting advertising by attorneys violated the Sherman [*14] Act. The Court determined that the Arizona Supreme Court--not the state bar--was the "real party in interest." Id. at 361. That court had "adopted the rules," id., and was "the ultimate body wielding the State's power over the practice of law," id. at 360. Because the advertising

Here, state court proceedings ended for Rooker-Feldman purposes when the Oklahoma Supreme Court denied Mothershed's request that it issue a writ of mandamus halting the Oklahoma bar disciplinary proceedings against him. That May 2002 state court ruling finally resolved that the disciplinary proceedings complied with Rule 6.7's timing requirements and that Mothershed's due process rights therefore were not violated, which represent the same issues that Mothershed subsequently sought to relitigate in federal district court.

<sup>4</sup>The district court's dismissal of the Oklahoma defendants was premised upon the absence of personal jurisdiction, not subject matter jurisdiction. Where "subject-matter jurisdiction will involve no arduous inquiry," however, "both expedition and sensitivity to state courts' coequal stature should impel the federal court to dispose of that issue first." Ruhrgas AG v. Marathon Oil Co., 526 U.S. 574, 587-88, 143 L. Ed. 2d 760, 119 S. Ct. 1563 \(1999\). Here, the subject matter jurisdiction inquiry involves a straightforward application of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, and we accordingly adhere to the Supreme Court's admonition by relying upon the lack of subject matter jurisdiction to dismiss the Oklahoma defendants.

restrictions were "compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign," id. (internal quotation marks omitted), they were not amenable to a Sherman Act challenge.

Likewise, in Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. at 565, a plaintiff who had failed the Arizona bar exam filed suit against the members of the Committee on Examinations and Admissions alleging that the manner in which they graded the exam violated the Sherman Act. Although the individual members of the Committee were the named defendants, the Court concluded that the suit was barred by Parker's state-action exception because the "Arizona Supreme Court necessarily delegated the administration of the admissions process to the Committee . . . and retained the sole authority to determine who should be admitted to the practice of law in Arizona." Id. at 573. Accordingly, the [*15] conduct being "challenged was in reality that of the Arizona Supreme Court." Id.; cf. Goldfarb v. Va. State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 790, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572, 95 S. Ct. 2004 (1975) (holding that a minimum fee schedule enforced by the Virginia state bar did not fall within the Parker exception because the fee schedule was not mandated by the Virginia Supreme Court and thus it could not "fairly be said that the State of Virginia through its Supreme Court Rules required the anticompetitive activities").

Here, Mothershed alleges that Arizona Supreme Court Rules 33(d) and 34 violate the Sherman Act. These claims are squarely foreclosed by Bates and Hoover. Although Mothershed's claim is nominally against certain state bar officials and the Supreme Court Justices in their individual capacities, it is the Supreme Court of Arizona that is the "real party in interest" because the state bar rules that Mothershed is challenging are promulgated by the court in its supervisory role over the practice of law in Arizona. See In re Shannon, 179 Ariz. 52, 876 P.2d 548, 571 (Ariz. 1994) ("the determination of who shall practice law in Arizona and under what condition is a function [*16] placed by the state constitution in this court" (internal quotation marks omitted)). Rules 33(d) and 34 are therefore "compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign," Bates, 433 U.S. at 360 (internal quotation marks omitted), and are exempt from Sherman Act challenges.

B

Mothershed also asserts a state antitrust claim under Arizona law. HN6 The Arizona Uniform State Antitrust Act "is interpreted in conformity with the federal [antitrust laws]." Arizona v. Maricopa County Med. Soc'y, 643 F.2d 553, 554 n.1 (9th Cir. 1980), rev'd on other grounds, 457 U.S. 332, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982); see also Wedgewood Inv. Corp. v. International Harvester Co., 126 Ariz. 157, 613 P.2d 620, 623 (Ariz. Ct. App. 1979) ("The Arizona legislature clearly intended to strive for uniformity between federal and state antitrust laws."). Indeed, ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 44-1412 explicitly provides, "It is the intent of the legislature that in construing [the Uniform State Antitrust Act], the courts may use as a guide interpretations given by the federal courts to comparable federal antitrust statutes." Cf. Bunkers Glass Co. v. Pilkington, PLC, 206 Ariz. 9, 75 P.3d 99, 102, 106 (Ariz. 2003) [*17] (acknowledging the federal antitrust laws' general "importance" to the interpretation of the Uniform State Antitrust Act, while also observing that Arizona courts need not "rigidly follow federal precedent on every issue of antitrust law regardless of whether differing concerns and interests exist in the state and federal systems").

No court has previously had occasion to consider whether there exists a state-action exception to the Arizona antitrust laws. Nevertheless, in light of the Arizona legislature's avowed desire to achieve uniformity between the Uniform State Antitrust Act and the federal antitrust laws, the Arizona Supreme Court would most likely follow Bates and Hoover and hold that its rules governing attorney conduct are not amenable to state law antitrust challenges. See Assurance Co. of Am. v. Wall & Assocs. LLC of Olympia, 379 F.3d 557, 560 (9th Cir. 2004) HN7 ("When interpreting state law, federal courts are bound by decisions of the state's highest court. In the absence of such a decision, a federal court must predict how the highest state court would decide the issue . . ." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). Mothershed's state [*18] law antitrust claim therefore fails for the same reason as its federal counterpart.

C

Mothershed contends that Arizona Supreme Court Rules 33(d) and 34 violate the First Amendment right of Arizonans to consult with a lawyer of their choosing. Because Mothershed does not allege that he has himself suffered a First Amendment injury, we must first determine whether he has standing to pursue this claim on behalf of other Arizonans.

1

HN8[] A "plaintiff generally must assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 499, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343, 95 S. Ct. 2197 (1975). This limitation is relaxed in the First Amendment context, however, because "when there is a danger of chilling free speech, . . . society's interest in having the statute challenged" may outweigh the prudential considerations that normally counsel against third-party standing. Secretary of Maryland v. Joseph H. Munson Co., 467 U.S. 947, 956, 81 L. Ed. 2d 786, 104 S. Ct. 2839 (1984). A plaintiff's ability to invoke so-called "overbreadth standing" "has nothing to do with whether or not [his] own First Amendment rights are at [*19] stake" but instead depends upon whether the plaintiff "satisfies the requirement of 'injury-in-fact,' and whether [he] can be expected satisfactorily to frame the issues in the case." Id. at 958; see also Gospel Missions of Am. v. City of Los Angeles, 328 F.3d 548, 554 (9th Cir. 2003) ("the requirements of 'overbreadth standing' [are] injury-in-fact and the ability to frame the issues in the case satisfactorily").

In Secretary of State v. Joseph H. Munson Co., 467 U.S. at 950, for example, a for-profit company that charged charities a fee for raising funds on their behalf brought a First Amendment challenge to a Maryland statute that prevented charities from paying more than 25% of their funds as expenses. Although the plaintiff was not itself a charity and did not allege that its own First Amendment rights were infringed, id. at 955, the Court concluded that the company had overbreadth standing to pursue the claim. The Court reasoned that, as a result of the statute, charities were reluctant to contract with the plaintiff because it charged fees in excess of 25% and that the plaintiff's impetus to challenge the [*20] statute was therefore consonant with the charities' First Amendment interests. Id. at 958 ("The activity sought to be protected is at the heart of the business relationship between Munson and its clients, and Munson's interests in challenging the statute are completely consistent with the First Amendment interests of the charities it represents."); see also Clark v. City of Lakewood, 259 F.3d 996, 1010-11 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that the owner of an adult entertainment establishment had overbreadth standing to pursue a First Amendment challenge against provisions of an ordinance that required the employees of such establishments to obtain a license because the licensing scheme--although not directly applicable to the owner--threatened his business's viability).

Here, Mothershed alleges that the prohibitions embodied in Rules 33(d) and 34 have a chilling effect upon Arizonans' purported First Amendment right to consult with out-of-state counsel. Like the plaintiff in Munson, Mothershed--though not alleging any First Amendment harm to himself--has incurred a financial injury because these rules prevent him from practicing law in the State. Mothershed's [*21] violation of these provisions has also resulted in his being censured by the Arizona Supreme Court. Moreover, Mothershed has a strong interest in obtaining the invalidation of Rules 33(d) and 34 because he desires to practice law in Arizona without being admitted to the state bar. Mothershed therefore satisfies our requirements for overbreadth standing because he has suffered an injury-in-fact and can be expected to pursue the First Amendment claim vigorously. See id. at 1011 (concluding that the owner of the adult entertainment establishment could "satisfactorily frame the issues in the case" because he "had a vested interest in having the [licensing] Ordinance overturned").

2

Although the First Amendment's applicability in the area of lawyer-client relations is not well-defined, we recognize that--at least as a general matter--HN9[] the "right to hire and consult an attorney is protected by the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of speech, association and petition." Denius v. Dunlap, 209 F.3d 944, 953 (7th Cir. 2000); see also United Mine Workers v. Illinois State Bar Ass'n, 389 U.S. 217, 221-22, 88 S. Ct. 353, 19 L. Ed. 2d 426 (1967) (holding [*22] that a union had a First Amendment right to employ a salaried attorney to represent members pursuing workers' compensation claims); DeLoach v. Bevers, 922 F.2d 618, 620 (10th Cir. 1990) ("The right to retain and consult an attorney . . . implicates . . . clearly established First Amendment rights of association and free speech.").

HN10[] While the Supreme Court has acknowledged that the right to consult with an attorney falls within the First Amendment's purview, the Court has also repeatedly emphasized that "the States have broad power to regulate the practice of law." III. State Bar Ass'n, 389 U.S. at 222. The Court has explained that the "interest of the States in regulating lawyers is especially great since lawyers are essential to the primary governmental function of administering justice, and have historically been 'officers of the courts.'" Goldfarb, 421 U.S. at 792.

In order to further its substantial interest in regulating the legal profession, the State of Arizona may institute reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on Arizonans' First Amendment right to consult with an attorney.

HN11[] Time, place, and manner regulations are [*23] reasonable provided that "the restrictions 'are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, that they are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and that they leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information.'" Kuba v. 1-A Agric. Ass'n, 387 F.3d 850, 858 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 105 L. Ed. 2d 661, 109 S. Ct. 2746 (1989) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

"The principal inquiry in determining content neutrality . . . is whether the government has adopted a regulation of speech because of disagreement with the message it conveys. Speech restrictions are content-neutral when they can be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech." Honolulu Weekly, Inc. v. Harris, 298 F.3d 1037, 1043 (9th Cir. 2002) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). HN12[] Arizona Supreme Court Rules 33(d) and 34 are content-neutral because they impose a generally applicable prohibition on the retention of out-of-state counsel without regard to the subject matter of the representation. (The rules do not, for example, prohibit out-of-state [*24] counsel from undertaking only certain categories of representation, such as suits against the State or against tobacco companies).

HN13[] A time, place, and manner regulation is narrowly tailored as long as the substantial governmental interest it serves "would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation and the regulation achieves its ends without . . . significantly restricting a substantial quantity of speech that does not create the same evils." Galvin v. Hay, 374 F.3d 739, 753 (9th Cir. 2004) (internal quotation marks omitted; alteration in original). As already noted, the State of Arizona has a significant interest in regulating the practice of law within its boundaries, see Bates, 433 U.S. at 361 ("the regulation of the activities of the bar is at the core of the State's power to protect the public"), and Supreme Court Rules 33(d) and 34 further that interest by ensuring that attorneys practicing in the State are qualified and possess a familiarity with Arizona law. The rules' narrow tailoring is further evidenced by the fact that they do not impose a blanket prohibition on the appearance of out-of-state attorneys in Arizona courts. Rather, [*25] they provide that a qualified out-of-state attorney may be admitted pro hac vice by an Arizona court.

Lastly, Rules 33(d) and 34 leave open ample alternative channels through which Arizonans can obtain legal representation. Notwithstanding the restrictions on out-of-state attorneys, Arizonans have access to legal representation from the thousands of attorneys licensed by the Arizona bar.

Because Arizona Supreme Court Rules 33(d) and 34 are reasonable time, place, and manner regulations of Arizonans' First Amendment right to retain and consult with a lawyer, Mothershed's First Amendment claim fails as a matter of law.

IV

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

In re Enron Corp.

United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York

July 22, 2005, Decided

Chapter 11, Case No. 01 B 16034 (AJG), (Confirmed)

Reporter

2005 Bankr. LEXIS 3472 *; 2005 WL 3873894

In re: ENRON CORP., et al., Reorganized Debtors.

Notice: NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Core Terms

---

filed rate doctrine, electricity, preemption, tariff, rates, wholesale, energy, market-based, cases, state law claim, anti trust law, regulation, preempted, markets, sales, state law, anti-competitive, interstate, violations, manipulation, transactions, antitrust, refunds, Federal Power Act, commerce, entities, reasons

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

HN1 [] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the Supremacy Clause, U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. Where Congress manifests intent to occupy an entire regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted. Federal courts have rarely identified legislation that has been found to completely preempt state jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > Preemption

HN2 [] Federal Common Law, Preemption

In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted (1) when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field (field preemption), and (2) to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Judicial Review

HN3[] Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

State actions against wholesale electricity suppliers alleging violations of California's unfair business practices law are preempted by the Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C.S. § 824-824m, because the conduct the state sought to condemn was expressly governed by tariffs, and they encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), to enforce and to seek remedy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN4[] Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) has been granted broad authority by Congress, in addition to the authority to determine the just and reasonable rates for wholesale power. The statute delegates to the FERC exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states. Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states. 16 U.S.C.S. § 824-824m.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN5[] Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

See 16 U.S.C.S. § 824e.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN6[] Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit disgorgement and refunds. FERC can proceed by rule making rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue discrimination on the part of individual utilities. 16 U.S.C.S. §§ 824d, 824e; 42 U.S.C.S. § 7173\(c\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

"Anomalous market behavior" is (1) behavior that departs significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include (a) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; (b) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; (c) unusual trades or transactions; (d) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and (e) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN8 Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) can order disgorgement of unjust profits for tariff violations that occurred after October 2, 2000. Further, implicit in FERC orders granting market-based rates to the marketers is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN9 Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. The filed rate doctrine forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority. The purpose of the doctrine is preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN10 Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) requires each seller to file quarterly reports pursuant to 16 U.S.C.S. § 824d\(c\) on transaction-specific information about its sales and purchases at market-based rates. While market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

HN11 Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

Implicit in Federal Energy Regulatory Commission orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN12** [L] Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

Where marketers have not properly reported to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) and such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC the application of the filed rate doctrine.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN13** [L] Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

Without the availability of retroactive refunds, parties aggrieved by an illegal rate would have no remedy before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a direct action against an offending seller. Such a result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the Federal Power Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

**HN14** [L] Regulated Practices, Price Discrimination

An injury implies violation of a legal right.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

**HN15** [L] Regulated Practices, Price Discrimination

A rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under the latter act the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN16** [L] Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

Under the filed rate doctrine, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN17** [L] Federal Power Act, Federal Rate Regulation

Remedies for breach and non-performance of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC)-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

HN18 [+] Electric Power Rates, Filed Rate Doctrine

The filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that (a) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate making issues, (b) courts lack the competence to set utility rates, and (c) the interference of courts in the rate making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime.

Counsel: [*1] For Reorganized Debtors, Special Counsel: Edward A. Smith, Esq., Of Counsel, CADWALADER, WICKERSHAM & TAFT LLP, New York, NY; Mark C. Ellenberg, Esq., David F. Williams, Esq., Of Counsel, Washington, DC.

For Valley Center Municipal Water District, Sweetwater Authority, and Padre Dam Municipal Water District: C. Michael Cowett, Esq., Robert J. Hanna, Esq., James B. Gilpin, Esq., Mary E. Coburn, Esq., Of Counsel, BEST BEST & KRIEGER LLP, San Diego, California.

Judges: Arthur J. Gonzalez, UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE.

Opinion by: Arthur J. Gonzalez

Opinion

---

OPINION SUSTAINING DEBTORS' OBJECTION TO PROOF OF CLAIM NO. 12231 FILED BY VALLEY CENTER MUNICIPAL WATER DISTRICT; TO PROOF OF CLAIM NO. 12238 FILED BY SWEETWATER AUTHORITY; AND TO PROOF OF AMENDED CLAIM NO. 23154 FILED BY PADRE DAM MUNICIPAL WATER DISTRICT REGARDING STATE LAW CLAIMS IN ELECTRICITY MARKET

ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ

United States Bankruptcy Judge

On October 11, 2002, plaintiff's counsel filed separate proofs of claims ((Claim Nos. 12231, 12238, and 23154 (amending and superseding Claim No. 12232), collectively the "Claims")) in unliquidated amounts on behalf of Valley Center Municipal Water District, Sweetwater Authority, and Padre Dam Municipal Water District [*2] (collectively, the "Claimants") against Enron Corporation ("Enron") and certain of its affiliated entities (collectively, the "Debtors"). The Claims are based on actions filed by the Claimants and other plaintiffs against Enron Energy Services, Inc. ("EESI"), Enron Power Marketing, Inc. ("EPMI") and other defendants in the Superior Court of the State of California for San Diego County.

The Claimants allege that the Debtors manipulated energy markets in California and overcharged for energy through unlawful and anti-competitive acts during the western power crisis of 2000 and 2001. They maintain the alleged manipulation in the electricity market constitutes a violation of state antitrust law and unfair competition law, and seek disgorgement, restitution, actual and treble damages together with interest and injunctive relief.<sup>1</sup> On February 18, 2005, the Debtors filed objections to the Claimants' state law claims and argued that the Federal Power Act (the "FPA") preempts the state laws and the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of these claims.

---

<sup>1</sup> California Antitrust Law, Business & Professional Code § 16720 et.seq. (The Cartwright Act) and California Unfair Competition Law, Business [*3] & Professional Code § 17200. Claimants allege that the Debtors' violation of the Cartwright Act, by engaging in acts and practices which constitute anti-competitive practices, violates Business & Professional Code § 17200's proscription against engaging in unlawful business acts and practices.

The issues before the Court are whether the Claims are preempted by the Federal Power Act (the "FPA") and precluded by the filed rate doctrine. The Court finds that because the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") has exclusive jurisdiction over interstate sales of wholesale electricity, the state law claims sought to be enforced by Claimants in the prosecution of the Claims are preempted by the FPA. Further, the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of such Claims.

I. BACKGROUND

Commencing on December 2, 2001, and from time to time continuing thereafter, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of title 11 of the United States Code (the "Bankruptcy Code"). On July 15, 2004, the Court entered an Order confirming the Debtors' Supplemental Modified Fifth Amended Joint Plan of Affiliated Debtors (the "Plan") in these cases. The Plan became effective on November [*4] 17, 2004.

This litigation arises out of the California energy crisis of 2000-01. Prior to the energy crisis, the California legislature had passed Assembly Bill 1890<sup>2</sup>(the "Bill") to create two non-governmental entities, the California Power Exchange (the "PX") and the California Independent System Operator (the "ISO"), to operate markets and manage the sale of electricity. The PX and the ISO were organized under California law, but regulated by FERC. California v. Dynegy, Inc., 375 F.3d 831, 850 \(9th Cir. 2004\). The central transactions, wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce, were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Further, the centralized wholesale spot electricity markets operated by the ISO and the PX were established subject to FERC review and approval. The ISO and the PX served as clearinghouses. Since August 2, 2000, FERC has commenced refund proceeding, and partnership and gaming proceeding to investigate certain of the Debtors. FERC found that the Debtors engaged in gaming<sup>3</sup> in the form of inappropriate trading strategies and further engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material [*5] information. Enron Power Mktg., Inc., et al., 106 FERC ¶ 61,024 \(2004\). Both proceedings are ongoing, including the determination of remedies by FERC.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standard of Preemption

HN1 [↑] "Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the Supremacy Clause, Article VI, clause 2, of the United States Constitution." Transmission Agency of Cal. v. Sierra Pacific Power Co., 295 F.3d 918, 928 (9th Cir. 2002). Where Congress manifests intent to occupy an entire regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted. Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. at 63-64, 107 S. Ct. 1542, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55 \(1987\). Federal courts have rarely identified legislation that has been found to completely preempt state jurisdiction. Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. at 393, 107 S. Ct. 2425, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318 \(1987\).

Here, neither [*6] party raises the argument that complete preemption is applicable, nor is there any evidence in the record that would support the conclusion that Congress intended for complete preemption to apply in this case. HN2 [↑] In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted (1) "when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field." Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 248, 104 S. Ct. 615, 78 L. Ed. 2d 443 \(1984\) ("Field Preemption"), and (2) "to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Id. ("Conflict Preemption").

<sup>2</sup> 1996 Cal. Stat. 854

<sup>3</sup> The ISO tariff, through the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol defines gaming, in part, as "taking unfair advantage of the rules and procedures set forth in the PX or the ISO tariffs, Protocols or Activity Rule ... to the detriment of the efficiency of, and of consumers in, the ISO markets." Am. Electric Power Service Corp., et al., 103 FERC ¶ 61,346 \(2003\).

B. Preemption

1) Field Preemption

The Debtors, in support of their position that the state law claims should be barred by FERC's exclusive jurisdiction, cite to Grays Harbor v. Idacorp Inc., 379 F.3d 641 (9th Cir. 2004), Dynegy, and Snohomish County v. Dynegy Power Marketing Inc., 384 F.3d 756 (9th Cir. 2004). These cases addressed FERC's exclusive jurisdiction and its remedial power concerning the wholesale electricity market. The Debtors argue that state law claims in the [*7] instant case, alleging violations of state antitrust and unfair competition law, are nearly identical to those involved in the cited cases, and for the reasons set forth in those cases, field preemption is applicable here.

The Dynegy court ruled that HN3 "state actions against wholesale electricity suppliers alleging violations of California's unfair business practices law are preempted by FPA because the conduct the state sought to condemn was expressly governed by the ISO tariffs and they encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to FERC, both to enforce and to seek remedy." 375 F.3d at 852.

The Court finds that the statute's framework under the FPA supports the conclusion in Dynegy that HN4 FERC has been granted broad authority by Congress, in addition to the authority to determine the "just and reasonable rates" for wholesale power. The statute delegates to the Federal Energy Commission "exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states . . . . Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales [\[\*8\]](#) are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824-824m.

Claimants do not dispute that the transactions at issue involved wholesale interstate sales. Further, there has been no evidence presented or any representation by either party that the sales that gave rise to this dispute should be characterized as either retail sales of electricity or wholesale intrastate sales. The statute provides that upon a determination by FERC that HN5 "any rate charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824e (emphasis added).

Moreover, pursuant to the statute, HN6 FERC possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit [\[\*9\]](#) disgorgement and refunds. Further, FERC can proceed by rulemaking rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue discrimination on the part of individual utilities. Federal Power Act, §§ 205, 206\(a\), as amended, 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e; Department of Energy Organization Act, § 403(c), 42 U.S.C.A. § 7173\(c\).

In addition, after the deregulation of California energy markets, the central transactions and the wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Having examined FERC's regulatory authority over the deregulated electricity market in California, the Snohomish court concluded, "FERC is doing enough regulation to justify federal preemption of state laws under the market-based system of setting wholesale electricity rates." Snohomish, 384 F.3d at 760-61. For instance,

- (1) FERC continued to oversee wholesale electricity rates by reviewing and approving a variety of documents filed by the PX and the ISO. FERC approved the market-based tariffs only upon [\[\*10\]](#) a showing that the seller lacked or had mitigated its market power. (2) FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports under FPA §205\(c\) 16 U.S.C. §824d\(c\). (3) FERC reviewed and approved detailed tariffs filed by the PX and the ISO, which described in detail how the markets operated by each entity would function. Id.

In addition, "[e]ach participant in the PX and the ISO markets was required to sign an agreement acknowledging that the tariff filed by either the PX or the ISO would govern all transactions in that market." Id.

The Court also recognizes that "entities that transact through the ISO or [the] PX and engage in improper practices<sup>4</sup> are in violation of filed tariffs . . . . FERC and the Market Surveillance Unit are directed by the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol to refer matters to the FERC for enforcement." 103 FERC ¶ 61,346. Here, Claimants do not dispute the fact that it procured electricity through the market administered by the ISO.

Moreover, the Court finds that Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 93 S. Ct. 1022, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1973), and California v. Federal Power Commission, 369 U.S. 482, 82 S. Ct. 901, 8 L. Ed. 2d 54 (1962) are not controlling in the instant case. In both cases, the Supreme Court found that Congress does not intend to bar governments from bringing actions in violation of antitrust laws related to filed tariffs before regulatory commissions. However, two important differences exist. First, both cases discussed issues of the interaction between federal administrative law [*12] and federal antitrust law; thereby no state law preemption issue was presented in these cases. In California v. Federal Power Commission, a gas company filed a motion to dismiss the antitrust suit pursuant to the Clayton Act, § 7 as amended 15 U.S.C.A. §18, or in the alternative, to stay it, pending completion of the proceedings for its authority to acquire another company's assets pursuant to the Natural Gas Act (the "NGA"), § 7\(c\) as amended 15 U.S.C.A. §717f\(c\), before the Power Energy Commission. 369 U.S. at 483. In Otter Tail Power, the government brought an action against an electric power company to enjoin violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. §2. 410 U.S. at 368. In order to protect market competition in certain cases, Congress did not expressly displace federal antitrust laws. The Court will not address whether, as a result, Congress has left room for enforcement of state antitrust laws.

Second, and more importantly, a critical distinction between the instant matter and the two cited cases is that there is a regulatory scheme against anti-competitive behavior that has been entrusted to FERC. As the Court discussed above, the statute under 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e\(a\) provides [*13] FERC with broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior. In fact, FERC has exercised this power to act in the proceedings instituted against the Debtors concerning alleged market manipulation during the energy crisis. FERC has asserted that it "can order disgorgement of monies above the post-October 2, 2000 refunds ordered in the California Refund Proceeding, if it finds violations of the ISO and the PX tariffs and finds that a monetary remedy is appropriate for such violations.HN8↑ It can additionally order additional disgorgement of unjust profits for tariff violations that occurred after October 2, 2000." 103 FERC ¶ 61,346. Further, "implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates to the marketers is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority." 106 FERC ¶ 61,024.

In contrast, the court in California v. Federal Power Commission concluded that the NGA did not contain a provision to immunize the carriers involved in the mergers from the Clayton Act. 369 U.S. at 485. "The Commission's standard, [*14] set forth in § 7 of the NGA, will serve 'the public convenience and necessity.' If existing natural gas companies violate the antitrust laws, the Commission is directed by § 20\(a\) to 'transmit such evidence' to the Attorney General." Id. at 486. Similarly, the Court in Otter Tail Power found that the limited authority of the Federal Power Commission to order interconnections was not intended to be a substitute for the Sherman Act. 410 U.S. at 375. Moreover, the Supreme Court in Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 383 U.S. 932, 86 S. Ct. 781, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709 (1966) declined to grant antitrust immunity to a shipping company because "the provisions of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.A. §801, can not reasonably be construed as an implied repeal of antitrust regulation of the shipping industry's rate-making activities." Id. at 217. The Shipping Act does not give the Federal Maritime Commission (the "FMC") any mandate to regulate rate competition and the statutory scheme was designed to minimize the role of the FMC. Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, 476 U.S. 409, 422, 106 S. Ct. 1922, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413 (1986).

<sup>4</sup> Since 1998, the ISO and the PX tariffs have contained provisions that identify and prohibit "gaming" and "anomalous market behavior" in the sale of electric power. HN7↑ "Anomalous market behavior" is (1) behavior that departs [*11] significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include a) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; b) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; c) unusual trades or transactions; d) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and e) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges." Am. Elec. Power Serv. Corp. et al., 103 FERC ¶ 61,346\(2003\).

The Court further finds that Grays Harbor and Gulf States Util. Co. v. Alabama Power Co., 824 F.2d 1465 (5th Cir. 1987) are not [*15] applicable in the instant case. The courts in both cases concluded that the state law claims concerning contractual disputes were not within the scope of FERC's jurisdiction. The facts here are distinguishable. First, the state law claims in the cited cases were related to contractual issues, which exclusively fall within a state's jurisdiction. The court in Grays Harbor granted the utility leave to amend its complaint to seek declaratory relief only as to issues of contract formation. 379 F.3d. at 652-53. Similarly, the court in Gulf States held that executed contract performance, such as the failure to negotiate in good faith and fraud, were not preempted by the FPA. 824 F.2d at 1474. Here, no evidence or argument presented before the Court demonstrates that there is an issue involving contractual disputes. Second, contract formation issues would not necessarily intrude upon the rate-setting jurisdiction of FERC. Grays Harbor, 379 F.3d. at 653. Therefore, field preemption bars the Claimants from pursuing its state law claims before the Court.

C. Conflict Preemption

As to conflict preemption, for the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that FERC has broad authority concerning anti-competitive [*16] activities related to the filed rate, apart from that FERC has authority to determine the "just and reasonable" rates for wholesale power. A conflict between the FPA in which grants FERC jurisdiction over the anti-competitive acts and state antitrust claims exists. Accordingly, conflict preemption also bars the Claimants from pursuing state law claims before the Court.

D. Filed Rate Doctrine

Another threshold question before the Court is whether the Court would have to determine a tariff. HN9↑] The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. E. & J. Gallo Winery v. Encana Energy Servs., Inc., Case No. CV F 03-5412 AWILJO. at 15. The Court recognizes that the filed rate doctrine "forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority."

[*17] Ark. L.A. Gas Co. v. Frank Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577-78, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1981). The Court also acknowledges that the purpose of the doctrine is "preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant." City of Cleveland v. FPC, 525 F.2d 845, 854, 174 U.S. App. D.C. 1 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

In addition, HN10↑] FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports pursuant to FPA §205(c) 16 U.S.C. §824d(c) on transaction-specific information about its sales and purchases at market-based rates. The court in Grays Harbor concluded "while market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine." 379 F.3d at 651.

Further, the Court agrees with the opinion of the California v. FERC court which concluded that "the reporting requirements are an integral part of a tariff, with FERC's implied enforcement mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates." 383 F.3d at 1016. On August 13, 2002, FERC's Initial Report [\*18] in Docket No. PA02-2-000 concluded that the Debtors engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information.<sup>5</sup> Then, FERC concluded that such behavior constituted market manipulation and resulted in unjust and unreasonable rates and violated the express requirements in the orders allowing the Debtors to make sales at market-based rates. 106 FERC ¶ 61,024. As noted by FERC, HN11[↑] implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority. The Debtors were expressly directed, when they were granted market-based rate authority, to inform the FERC promptly of changes in status (which would include changes in their generation market shares) that reflect a departure from the characteristics that the FERC relied upon in granting market-based rate authority. Id.

Moreover, the Court in California v. FERC, indirectly recognized HN12[↑] the application of the filed rate doctrine when marketers had not properly reported to FERC where such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC. 383 F.3d at 1016.

HN13[↑] Without the availability of retroactive refunds, "[p]arties aggrieved by the illegal rate would have no FERC remedy, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a direct action against the offending seller. That result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the FPA." Id.

The Court finds that determining the liability or the legal right of Claimants against the Debtors for violation of the antitrust laws would have to be measured by the tariff. Therefore, the filed rate doctrine would be applicable.

In addressing the right of action that a violation of the antitrust laws give to one who has been injured in its business or property, the Supreme Court in Keogh v. Chicago & N.W.R.Y. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 \(1922\), stated that HN14[↑] "[i]njury implies violation of a legal right." Id. at 163. The Supreme Court concluded that [\*20] "the legal rights of [a] shipper as against [a] carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff." Id. at 163. Justice Brandeis explained HN15[↑] "[a] rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Anti-Trust Act. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under Section 8 of the latter act . . . the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the 'person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation.'" Id. at 162. Thus, the finding of liability in antitrust laws would be integral to the Court's determination of whether the Debtors are liable due to their violations of state antitrust law and unfair competition law. For instance, the Court could not determine the overcharge claim owed by the Debtors for any electricity market manipulation without first deciding the reasonableness of the filed tariff.

The Supreme Court case, Arkansas Louisiana, further supports the Court's position that the filed rate doctrine should apply here. "In asserting that the filed rate doctrine had no application, respondents in Arkansas Louisiana [\*21] contended that the state court has done no more than determine the damages they have suffered as a result of the breach of a contract by a gas company." 453 U.S. at 579. The Supreme Court rejected this argument by reasoning that "the mere fact that respondents brought this suit under state law would not rescue it, for when Congress has established an exclusive form of regulation . . . there can be no divided authority over interstate commerce . . . HN16[↑] Under the filed rate doctrine, FERC alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged." Id. at 580-84.

---

<sup>5</sup> FERC found that the Debtors failed to inform FERC in a timely manner of changes in their market shares that resulted from their gaining influence/control over others' facilities, [\*19] as required under their market-based rate authorization. 106 FERC ¶ 61,024.

Moreover, to award monetary relief, the Court would have to determine a "fair price." Thus, the filed rate doctrine bars the Court from awarding monetary damages sought by Claimants. Nonetheless, the Court finds that injunctive relief would also be unavailable to Claimants. The Court agrees with the Ninth Circuit's decision in Snohomish, which declined to grant injunctive relief because such relief is barred by the filed rate doctrine and preemption principle. 384 F.3d at 762. HN17 [↑] "Remedies for breach and non-performance of FERC-approved operating agreements in the interstate [*22] wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC." Dynegy, 375 F.3d at 836.

The decisions from the Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association v. Citizens Utilities Co., 45 F.3d 58 (2d Cir. 1995) and Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17 (2d Cir. 1994), provide an additional basis for dismissal of the Claims sought by Claimants. The Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association affirmed the decision from the district court, which had declined the plaintiff's invitation to find a fraud exception to the filed rate doctrine. In determining whether the filed rate doctrine applied, the court focused on the impact the court's decision would have on agency procedures and rate determination. Sun City Taxpayers' Ass'n v. Citizens Utils. Co., 847 F.Supp. 281, 291 \(D. Conn. 1994\). The Second Circuit in Wegoland recognized that HN18 [↑] the filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that (a) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate-making issues, (b) courts lack the competence to set utility rates, and (c) the interference of courts in the rate-making [*23] process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime. 27 F.3d at 21.

Therefore, having considered the policy objectives, the Court finds it is inappropriate to frustrate FERC's jurisdiction afforded by Congress. The Court lacks authority to impose a different rate than the one approved by a federal agent. Any other conclusion departing from this principle would undermine the filed rate doctrine. The Court, therefore, rejects Claimants' challenge to the application of the filed rate doctrine. Accordingly, the filed rate doctrine bars the relief sought by Claimants.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that the state law claims sought by Claimants concerning electricity market manipulation are preempted by the FPA and precluded by the filed rate doctrine. Therefore, the Court sustains the Debtors' objection to the Claims.

Counsel for the Debtors is directed to settle an order consistent with this opinion.

Dated: New York, New York

July 22, 2005

/s/ Arthur J. Gonzalez

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

Loeffel Steel Prods. v. Delta Brands, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

July 22, 2005, Decided ; July 22, 2005, Filed

No. 01 C 9389

Reporter

387 F. Supp. 2d 794 *; 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15718 **; 2005 WL 6200338

LOEFFEL STEEL PRODUCTS, INC., Plaintiff, vs. DELTA BRANDS, INC., d/b/a DBI; and SAMUEL F. SAVARIEGO, individually, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Partial summary judgment denied by, Motion to strike denied by Loeffel Steel Prods. v. Delta Brands, Inc., 379 F. Supp. 2d 968, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15278 \(N.D. Ill., July 28, 2005\)

Prior History: Loeffel Steel Prods. v. Delta Brands, 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11601 \(N.D. Ill., 2005\)

Core Terms

---

Loeffel, steel, economic loss, metal, processing, damages, reliability, deposition, defendants', machine, service center, products, lost profits, methodology, cases, expert opinion, calculation, comparable, expertise, expert testimony, Declaration, customers, employees, expert witness, manufactured, automotive, profits, certified public accountant, district court, customer base

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Procedural Matters > Preliminary Questions > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > Standards for Admissibility

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

HN1 [blue download icon] Judicial Officers, Judges

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, the United States Supreme Court stressed the trial judge's obligation to act as a gatekeeper to ensure that expert testimony is reliable. The insistence on reliability helps to ensure the integrity of the judicial process. That goal is of such obvious and transcendent importance that judges can act sua sponte to prohibit testimony that does not pass muster under the Daubert standard.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Procedural Matters > Preliminary Questions > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Examination > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN2 [down arrow] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, while Daubert reaffirmed the value of the adversary system generally and the capability of juries to understand scientific evidence and weigh the credibility of the competing experts, with their often absolutist and clashing conclusions, it also made clear that in those cases in which the proponent of an expert could not demonstrate the reliability of the methodology employed by the expert, the court was required to disallow the testimony. The opportunity for vigorous cross examination and the presentation of contrary evidence - the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence, is not a basis for allowing otherwise inadmissible testimony to be admitted.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > Standards for Admissibility

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, the Daubert factors are not applicable, semper ubique et ab omnibus. They need only be considered when doing so will aid in the determination of the testimony's reliability. The inquiry is always, and of necessity, highly fact- specific, and no one factor, even when applicable, is outcome-determinative.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN4 [down arrow] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, Daubert cautions judges assessing a proffer of expert testimony under Fed. R. Evid. 702 to be mindful of other applicable rules, such as Fed. R. Evid. 703, which permits an expert to base an opinion on information that need not itself be admissible, so long as it is the kind of information relied on by other experts in the field.

387 F. Supp. 2d 794, *794L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15718, **15718

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN5 Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, overemphasis on qualifications over testimonial reliability reflects a pre-Daubert sensibility.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN6 Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, no case holds that only a certified public accountant has the necessary expertise to testify about economic loss. In fact, being a certified public accountant does not ensure admissibility of testimony.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

HN7 Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

Anyone with relevant expertise enabling him to offer responsible opinion testimony helpful to judge or jury may qualify as an expert witness.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > Standards for Admissibility

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN8 Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

While the Daubert factors apply to valuation testimony, whether offered by certified public accountants or economists, the Daubert factors are not to be rigidly applied in this or any other context. In some context, they may not be applicable at all or may have diminished utility as measures of reliability. Some courts have held they do not conform easily to an analysis of economic theory. In determining the admissibility of expert testimony with respect to future lost profits, a trial judge has considerable leeway in determining the testimony's reliability.

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Damages > Property Damages > Measurements

HN9 [↓] Sales (Article 2), Remedies

Both contract law and the Uniform Commercial Code provide the appropriate remedy for "economic loss" occasioned by diminished commercial expectations, not coupled with injury to person or property. Generally speaking, a defective product can cause three types of injury: personal injury, property damage, and economic loss. "Economic loss" has been defined as damages for inadequate value, costs of repair and replacement of the defective product, or consequent loss of profits - without any claim of personal injury or damage to other property as well as the diminution in the value of the product because it is inferior in quality and does not work for the general purposes for which it was manufactured and sold.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Consequential Damages

Contracts Law > ... > Sales of Goods > Warranties > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Application & Construction > Remedies > Damages

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Buyer Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Buyer Remedies > Damages > Damages for Breach Following Acceptance

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Buyer Remedies > Damages > Consequential & Incidental Damages

Contracts Law > ... > Sales of Goods > Breach, Excuse & Repudiation > General Overview

HN10 [↓] Damages, Consequential Damages

The Uniform Commercial Code provides that the measure of damages for breach of warranty is the difference at the time and place of acceptance between the value of the goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted, unless special circumstances show proximate damages of a different amount. 810 III. Comp. Stat. 5/2-714\(2\). In addition, a party may also recover incidental and consequential damages, 810 III. Comp. Stat. 5/2-715, including lost profits.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

387 F. Supp. 2d 794, *794L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15718, **15718

**HN11** [blue document icon] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

The victim of a fraudulent misrepresentation is entitled to recover as damages those losses caused by the misrepresentation, including the difference between the value of what he has received in the transaction, and its purchase price or other value given for it.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

**HN12** [blue document icon] Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

The benefit of the bargain rule provides that the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of what plaintiff received and its value had the representations been true.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

**HN13** [blue document icon] Expert Witnesses, Helpfulness

Expert opinions that are contrary to law are inadmissible. They cannot be said to be scientific, to be reliable, or to be helpful to the trier of fact.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Counsel > Right to Counsel > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Client Relations > Duties to Client > Effective Representation

**HN14** [blue document icon] Counsel, Right to Counsel

There is more in membership in the Bar than a license to sign a brief or intone a prosy argument. Justice is not a game, and zealous advocacy does not entitle a lawyer to hoodwink a judge or an opponent who is not otherwise.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

**HN15** [blue document icon] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

See *Fed. R. Evid. 703*.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

**HN16** [blue document icon] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

*Fed. R. Evid. 703*'s relaxation of the usual requirement of firsthand knowledge - a rule which represents a pervasive manifestation of the common law's insistence upon the most reliable sources of information - was premised on an assumption that the expert's opinion will have a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of his discipline.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

HN17 [] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

While Fed. R. Evid. 703 was intended to liberalize the rules relating to expert testimony, it was not intended to abolish the hearsay rule and to allow a witness, under the guise of giving expert testimony, to in effect become the mouthpiece of the witnesses on whose statements or opinions the expert purports to base his opinion.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN18 [] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Under Fed. R. Evid. 703, an expert may rely on hearsay in formulating his opinion - provided the requirements of Fed. R. Evid. 702 are met - but the evidence is not admissible for the truth of the matters asserted.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN19 [] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

Fed. R. Evid. 703 was never intended to allow oblique evasions of the hearsay rule. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit acknowledged that it is common in technical fields for an expert to base an opinion in part on what a different expert believes on the basis of expert knowledge not possessed by the first expert.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN20 [] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

A scientist, however well credentialed he may be, is not permitted to be the mouthpiece of a scientist in a different specialty. That would not be responsible science. An expert's "professional knowledge and ability" must be adequate to evaluate calculations and opinions upon which he based his opinion.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN21 [] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

The rationale of Fed. R. Evid. 703 is certainly not satisfied where the expert fails to demonstrate any basis for concluding that another individual's opinion on a subjective financial prediction was reliable, other than the fact that it was the opinion of someone he believed to be an expert who had a financial interest in making an accurate prediction.

387 F. Supp. 2d 794, *794L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15718, **15718

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Torts > ... > Proof > Custom > Expert Testimony

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN22 [] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, in calculating lost future profits or lost business, the measure of damages is guided by analysis of comparable businesses in the area. The business used as a standard must be as nearly identical to the plaintiff's as possible. This is often referred to as the "yardstick approach." Absent the requisite showing of comparability, a damage model that predicts either the presence or absence of future profits is impermissibly speculative and conjectural. Of course, exact correlation is not necessary but the samples must be fair congeners. If they are not, the comparison is manifestly unreliable and cannot logically advance a material aspect of the proposing party's case. The United States Supreme Court refers to this second prong of the Daubert analysis as the fit requirement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN23 [] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

In antitrust cases, proof of the relevant product and geographic market is absolutely essential. A determination of the geographic market must entail an analysis of several factors including the location of competitors and price data.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN24 [] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

It cannot be too often repeated or too strongly emphasized that nothing in either Daubert or the Federal Rules of Evidence requires a district court to admit opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert. A court may conclude that there is simply too great an analytical gap between the data and the opinion proffered.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN25 [] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, spending a few minutes on the internet does not make one an expert on any "industry" or on any topic.

387 F. Supp. 2d 794, *794L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15718, **15718

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > Standards for Admissibility

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

HN26 [blue icon] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, even where a witness is an expert in the relevant field, the evidentiary reliability demanded by Daubert is not present when his or her opinion is speculative or rests on an unsound basis.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Judicial Officers, Judges

Daubert requires that trial judges must ensure that any and all expert testimony is not only relevant, but reliable. To that end, a judge must undertake a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts at issue. The judge must look behind the expert's ultimate conclusion and analyze the adequacy of its foundation. Expert opinion that is speculative is inadmissible.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN28 [blue icon] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

Courts should be particularly wary of unfounded expert opinion when causation is the issue.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Helpfulness

HN29 [blue icon] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

To be admissible, expert testimony must be not only reliable, but relevant. Testimony is relevant if it assists the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact at issue. An expert who supplies nothing but a bottom line supplies nothing of value to the judicial process.

387 F. Supp. 2d 794, *794L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15718, **15718

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > Mandatory Disclosures

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > General Overview

HN30 [ ] Disclosure, Mandatory Disclosures

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B), requires that an expert report must disclose a complete statement of all opinions to be expressed and the basis and reasons therefor.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > Mandatory Disclosures

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > General Overview

HN31 [ ] Disclosure, Mandatory Disclosures

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B).

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN32 [ ] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

In the context of determining the admissibility of expert testimony, expertise is a rational process, and a rational process implies express reasons for judgment. An expert's opinion full of assertion but empty of reasons has no value and is devoid of persuasiveness and legal significance.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN33 [ ] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

An expert witness must demonstrate in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > Mandatory Disclosures

HN34 [ ] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2)(B) requires the disclosure of any other cases in which the witness has testified as an expert at trial or by deposition within the preceding four years. The report must be detailed and complete. Thus, the cases have generally defined the "listing of cases" requirement to include the name of the court, the name of the parties, the case number, and whether the testimony was given at deposition or trial.

Counsel: [**1] For Loeffel Steel Products, Inc., Plaintiff: Michael P. Connelly, Matthew Patrick Connelly, William Edward Snyder, Connelly, Roberts & McGivney, Chicago, IL.

For Delta Brands, Inc., Defendant: George N. Vurdelja, Jr., Griswold L. Ware, John M. Heaphy, Vurdelja & Heaphy, Chicago, IL; Randall Edmund Server, Tucker Bower Robin & Romanek, Chicago, IL.

For Samuel F Savariego individually, Defendant: H. N. Cunningham, III, Roberts, Cunningham & Stripling, Dallas, TX; George N. Vurdelja, Jr., Griswold L. Ware, John M. Heaphy, Vurdelja & Heaphy, Chicago, IL; Randall Edmund Server, Tucker Bower Robin & Romanek, Chicago, IL.

For Delta Brands, Inc., Counter Claimant: George N. Vurdelja, Jr., Griswold L. Ware, John M. Heaphy, Vurdelja & Heaphy, Chicago, IL; Randall Edmund Server, Tucker Bower Robin & Romanek, Chicago, IL.

For Loeffel Steel Products, Inc., Counter Defendant: Michael P. Connelly, Matthew Patrick Connelly, William Edward Snyder, Connelly, Roberts & McGivney, Chicago, IL.

For Delta Brands, Inc., ThirdParty Plaintiff: George N. Vurdelja, Jr., Griswold L. Ware, John M. Heaphy, Vurdelja & Heaphy, Chicago, IL; Randall Edmund Server, Tucker Bower Robin & Romanek, [**2] Chicago, IL.

For Samuel F Savariego, ThirdParty Plaintiff: H. N. Cunningham, III, James C. Baker, Roberts, Cunningham & Stripling, Dallas, TX; George N. Vurdelja, Jr., Griswold L. Ware, John M. Heaphy, Vurdelja & Heaphy, Chicago, IL; Randall Edmund Server, Tucker Bower Robin & Romanek, Chicago, IL.

For Industrial Magnetics Inc, Third Party Defendant: Charles J. Risch, John Scott Monical, Paul Michael Weltlich, Lawrence, Kamin, Saunders & Uhlenhop, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Magistrate Judge Jeffrey Cole.

Opinion by: Jeffrey Cole

Opinion

---

[*797] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

INTRODUCTION

On June 9, 2005, I denied the Defendants' Motion to Bar the testimony of [*798] Loeffel Steel Products' expert liability witness, Mr. Rudolph Toczył. See Loeffel Steel Products v. Delta Brands, 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 2005 WL 1388076 \(N.D.Ill. 2005\). The history of the parties' dispute is discussed in that opinion and need not be repeated. I address here the plaintiff's motion to bar the testimony of the defendants' damages expert, Mr. Robert Dohmeyer and Dohmeyer Valuation Corporation ("DVC").

Like Gaul, Mr. Dohmeyer's expert opinion and report may be divided into three parts. The first is a "preliminary critique" [**3] of the report of Loeffel's damage expert, William Wiersema, contained in a letter dated February 27, 2004. The second and third components are contained in a separate, 41 (unnumbered) page document captioned, "Analysis of Economic Loss." ("the Analysis"). It, too, was dated February 27th.

The Analysis was a compendium of spreadsheets, reflecting 1) Mr. Dohmeyer's calculations of the $ 248,000 economic loss he concluded was suffered by Loeffel, and 2) charts and graphs reflecting financial data for the period 1999 - 2002 for Loeffel and for eight, large, publicly traded companies, which were supposed to depict the economic conditions in the steel industry at that time.

Loeffel's present motion challenges Mr. Dohmeyer's qualifications to offer expert opinion on economic loss and his methodology and definition of economic loss, which Loeffel argues did not comply with the four, non-definitive factors that Daubert said a court could use in determining testimonial reliability. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 (1993). Loeffel also contends that Mr. Dohmeyer should not be allowed to testify because of his unquestioning reliance on the defendants' [**4] theory that the deficiencies in the Line could be cured by the addition of extra workers and additional shifts.<sup>1</sup> Lastly, the motion contends that Mr. Dohmeyer should not be allowed to testify about Mr. Wiersema's damage analysis, because his critique of February 27, 2004 did not comply with Rule 26(a)(2)(B).

I

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Prior to preparing his February 27th "preliminary critique" and his Analysis, Mr. Dohmeyer (and/or his two assistants at DVC) reviewed Loeffel's financial statements for the fiscal years ending November 30, 1999 through November 30, 2002, reviewed the deposition testimony of Loeffel's president, Maurice Loeffel [**5] and that of Mr. Wiersema, compiled financial data from annual 10k reports and Standard & Poor's Stock Reports on eight large publicly traded companies in what Mr. Dohmeyer categorized as the "(steel) metals industry," and interviewed the defendants' employees.<sup>2</sup> As we shall see, these interviews would play a pivotal role in Mr. Dohmeyer's analysis of Loeffel's "economic loss."

The Analysis concluded that Loeffel had damages prior to August of 2003 of $ 280,000, damages thereafter of $ 142,339, and lost profits of $ 50,000. The Analysis [*799] itself has no textual elaboration or explanation, and the reader is left to divine its meaning from the headings, captions, and the figures on its charts and spreadsheets. A meaningful understanding can only be gained by reference to Mr. Dohmeyer's deposition testimony. The Analysis's damage spreadsheets differentiated between pre- [**6] and post-August 2003 because, as Mr. Dohmeyer later explained, he assumed - based upon what he had been told by the defendants' employees - that the trouble with the magnets in the stacker had been alleviated or nearly so. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 39, 42-43). The Analysis then discounted the figures by $ 225,000, which represented the amount of the purchase price held back by Loeffel.

The Analysis's second and core assumption was provided by defendants' employees, who assured Mr. Dohmeyer that the various deficiencies in the Line could be offset by adding two additional workers to production runs and increasing the number of shifts. Using this methodology, and based on his conclusions about "industry" conditions between 1999 and 2002 - as reflected by the financial data of eight publicly traded companies - Mr. Dohmeyer concluded that Loeffel's lost profits could not exceed $ 50,000.

The Analysis begins with an estimate of the hourly wages of the two additional workers, based upon the rates in Texas, where the defendants were located. Adjusting those rates - $ 13.00 for an operator and $ 7.50 for a helper - to what would be comparable in the Chicago area, Mr. Dohmeyer arrived at a total [**7] of $ 26.65 for both positions. Factoring in benefits left the combined rate at $ 39.98, which Mr. Dohmeyer arbitrarily increased to $ 50.00 per hour. Over the 702 days Loeffel ran the machine prior to August of 2003, based upon one eight-hour shift per day, Mr. Dohmeyer arrived at a maximum "economic loss" figure of $ 280,000, the amount that would compensate the two additional workers for the relevant period. (Analysis at 2; Dohmeyer Deposition at 26, 30, 33).

Mr. Dohmeyer then calculated future damages over a ten-year life of the Line, beginning in August of 2003. He began with the assumption, again based on what he was told by the defendants' employees, that Loeffel could process ten coils of steel on the Line every eight- hour shift. The "economic loss" figure was based on the defendants' assessment of the processing time. (Dohmeyer Deposition at 63-64). For this period, he was told by the defendants that an additional five minutes of labor per coil would alleviate any problems remaining with the Line during that period.<sup>3</sup> Once again this was based on the twin assumptions that the problems with the stacker's magnets had been responsible for the vast majority of the deficiencies, [**8] and that these problems had been rectified by August, 2003. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 39, 42-43).

<sup>1</sup> Literally every facet of this labor-added theory and every bit of information regarding alleviation of the Line's problems - as well as information regarding prior claimed fixes - came from the defendants' employees. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 26-39, 42-45, 55-57, 61-63, 109). The Line is the Rotary Shear Multi-blanking machine that Loeffel purchased from Delta Brands.

<sup>2</sup> Although its title suggested that a more comprehensive and edifying analysis was to come, the "preliminary critique" underwent not a single change.

The five-minute estimate was a product of the defendants' assurances that the remaining problem - leveling the steel - could be corrected manually in 30 seconds to one minute per coil, which Mr. Dohmeyer rounded up to five minutes to be "conservative." (Dohmeyer Deposition at 62-63). This amounted to fifty minutes of labor per shift which he rounded up to an hour. This figure was then multiplied by 468 shifts per year over the ten-year period. Discounting the resulting sum to account for present value, cost of capital, and inflation, Mr. Dohmeyer arrived at $ 142,339 for future damages. (Analysis at unnumbered p. 3).

The lost profits calculations are a bit more difficult to discern, as the Analysis [*800] simply says under the captioned "Lost Business (Max):"

Lost Business (Economic Profits - August 2003 > .10 Gauge $ 50,000 60" Inch Line Sold in February 2003

(Analysis [**9] at unnumbered page 5). The footnote after the $ 50,000 figure says "Expected Value of Economic Profits - Max - See Industry Analysis." However, referring to the 1 1/2 page portion of the Analysis captioned "Industry Analysis" is a hopelessly uninformative exercise. All this part of the Analysis did was to summarize some unilluminating generalizations about the steel industry that Mr. Dohmeyer's DVC assistant had gotten off the internet.

At his deposition, Mr. Dohmeyer explained that the $ 50,000 figure was drawn from his analysis for processing "high gauge" steel or "toll processing." (Dohmeyer Dep., at 104, 106). The problems processing "high gauge" steel or "toll processing" could not be corrected by additional labor - that business was lost. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 70-71, 102-104). Although it is unclear from the Analysis, this was apparently a new business that Loeffel hoped to get into by virtue of the Line, but could not due to the Line's shortcomings. (Dohmeyer Dep. at 106). In reaching the $ 50,000 figure, Mr. Dohmeyer also considered his review of Loeffel's performance between 1999 and 2002, as well as the performance of the eight publicly traded companies selected as the sampling [**10] against which Loeffel's prospects in that period were to be measured. (Analysis at unnumbered pp. 6-11; Dohmeyer Dep. at 116-128).

II.

THE ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK FOR DETERMINING ADMISSIBILITY

Loeffel Steel Products v. Delta Brands, 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 2005 WL 1388076 \(N.D.Ill. 2005\) discussed the analytical backdrop of motions to bar the testimony of an expert, and that discussion is incorporated by reference. To it, the following should be added. HN1 The Supreme Court in Daubert stressed the trial judge's obligation to act as a gatekeeper to ensure that expert testimony is reliable. The insistence on reliability helps to ensure the integrity of the judicial process. Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange Nat'l Bank of Chicago, 877 F.2d 1333, 1340 \(7th Cir. 1989\). That goal is of such obvious and transcendent importance that judges can act sua sponte to prohibit testimony that does not pass muster under Daubert, O'Conner v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 13 F.3d 1090, 1094 \(7th Cir. 1994\).

HN2 While Daubert reaffirmed the value of the adversary system generally and the capability of juries to understand scientific evidence and weigh the credibility [**11] of the competing experts, with their often absolutist and clashing conclusions, it also made clear that in those cases in which the proponent of an expert could not demonstrate the reliability of the methodology employed by the expert, the court was required to disallow the testimony. The opportunity for vigorous cross examination and the presentation of contrary evidence - the traditional and appropriate means of attacking shaky but admissible evidence, Daubert, 509 U.S. at 596 - is not a basis for allowing otherwise inadmissible testimony to be admitted.

---

<sup>3</sup> Each coil of steel weighs as much as 60,000 lbs.

Kumho Tire Co. Ltd. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238, 119 S. Ct. 1167 \(1999\) reaffirmed the teachings of Daubert, but emphasized that HN3 the Daubert factors were not applicable, semper ubique et ab omnibus. They need only be considered when doing so will aid in the determination of the testimony's [*801] reliability. Id. at 142, 150. The inquiry is always, and of necessity, highly fact- specific, and no one factor, even when applicable, is outcome-determinative.

HN4 Daubert also cautioned judges assessing a proffer of expert testimony under Rule 702 to be mindful of other applicable rules, such as [**12] Rule 703, which permits an expert to base an opinion on information that need not itself be admissible, so long as it is the kind of information relied on by other experts in the field. 509 U.S. at 595.

A

Evaluation of Reliability of Mr. Dohmeyer's Testimony

I

Qualifications of Mr. Dohmeyer and his Firm

Mr. Dohmeyer has a bachelor's degree in finance and is an accredited senior appraiser with the American Society of Appraisers ("ASA"). That accreditation was, according to Mr. Dohmeyer, the equivalent of a CPA for valuation and financial analysts. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 13).<sup>4</sup> He has lectured on the valuation of privately held businesses, and he has given expert testimony in 32 cases involving "economic loss." (See Analysis, Qualifications of Principal Appraisers). At his deposition, Mr. Dohmeyer testified that DVC was primarily in the business of appraising privately held businesses and analyzing economic loss, which, Mr. Dohmeyer conceded could include the loss of profits due to poorly manufactured products. Mr. Dohmeyer estimated that perhaps one in ten of the economic loss cases he had handled involved equipment that failed to perform as [**13] the seller had promised. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 8-12).

Mr. Dohmeyer was assisted in his analysis by Kevin Morrison and Sontwa Sinkala. Mr. Morrison has a bachelor's degree in business administration, accounting, and finance. Sontwa Sinkala has a master's degree in business administration, specializing in corporate finance, and a doctorate in economics and geography. Nonetheless, Loeffel contends that all three are unqualified to testify in this case since none is a certified public accountant, none has any expertise in the steel industry, none has experience in cases dealing with lost profits due to faulty machinery, and the USPAP guidelines were not followed in preparing the Analysis of Economic Loss. (Pl.Mem., at 6-9).

[**14] The argument that only a CPA with expertise in the steel industry -- preferably, with regard to multi-blanking machines and a prior history of expert testimony in a case involving lost profits due to a poorly performing piece of machinery - is inconsistent with the liberal approach to expert witness qualification taken by Rule 702. See Holbrook v. Lykes Brothers Steam Ship, 80 F.3d 777, 782 \(3rd Cir. 1996\); Carroll v. Otis Elevator Co., 896 F.2d 210, 212 \(7th Cir. 1990\). HN5 Overemphasis on qualifications over testimonial reliability reflects a pre-Daubert sensibility. Rushing v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 185 F.3d 496, 507 \(5th Cir. 1999\).

Mr. Dohmeyer's and his colleagues' educational background and experience qualify Mr. Dohmeyer and his colleagues to testify about, at least, certain of the matters presented in this case. Characterizing them as

---

<sup>4</sup> The requirements for accreditation are completion of five years' experience in business appraisals, passing three technical exams, an ethics and the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice ("USPAP") exam, and the submission of two appraisals for evaluation. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 13).

"appraisers" does not advance [*802] analysis. Even appraisers can have sufficient expertise to rebut the testimony of certified public accountants in appropriate cases. See, e.g., Frymire-Brinati v. KPMG Peat Marwick, 2 F.3d 183, 186-87 (7th Cir. 1993)(district court erred [**15] in precluding a real estate appraiser to rebut a CPA's opinion about real estate values in financial statement).

HN6[<sup>1</sup>] No case of which we are aware remotely suggests, let alone holds, that only a certified public accountant has the necessary expertise to testify about economic loss. In fact, being a certified public accountant does not ensure admissibility of testimony. See e.g., Frymire-Brinati, 2 F.3d at 186-87 (under Daubert, expert testimony of certified public accountant should not have been admitted); SEC v. Lipson, 46 F. Supp. 2d 758, 762 (N.D.Ill. 1999) (applying Daubert to bar testimony of certified public accountant on reliability grounds); De Jager Construction, Inc. v. Schleininger, 938 F.Supp. 446, 449-455 (W.D.Mich. 1996) (excluding certified public accountant expert opinion testimony that blurred the distinction between substantive liability and a calculation of damages); Lithuanian Commerce Corp Ltd. v. Sara Lee Hosiery, 179 F.R.D. 450 (D.N.J. 1998) (excluding certified public accountant's damage calculations because they relied on speculative and unsupported assumptions).

In Tuf Racing Products, Inc. v. American Suzuki Motor Corp., 223 F.3d 585 (7th Cir. 2000), [**16] the court rejected as unsound the notion that Daubert required particular credentials for an expert witness, finding that HN7[<sup>1</sup>] "anyone with relevant expertise enabling him to offer responsible opinion testimony helpful to judge or jury may qualify as an expert witness." Id. at 591. Thus, Mr. Dohmeyer's admitted lack of specific experience with multi-blanking machines is not a disqualifying factor. See Loeffel Steel Products v. Delta Brands, 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 2005 WL 1388076 at *7.<sup>5</sup>

[**17] We turn then to the second prong of the inquiry, namely the reliability of the method that Mr. Dohmeyer and his associates employed to arrive at their damage figures.

2

The Methodology Underlying The Analysis of Economic Loss

There are two aspects to Mr. Dohmeyer's methodology that trouble Loeffel. The first is Mr. Dohmeyer's use of a definition of "economic loss" that he devised, and the second is his reliance on the defendants' employees for the theory and supporting information that any deficiencies in the Line can be rectified by additional labor and extra shifts.

a

Mr. Dohmeyer's Definition Of Economic Loss

The Analysis defined "economic loss" as: "the dollar sum, exclusive of prejudgment interest and professional fees, required as payment in full necessary to make the damaged party equal on an economic basis." The definition, at least semantically, seems straightforward and consistent with the general Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC") and contract damage theory that the fundamental purpose of any damage [*803] award is to place the plaintiff in the position it would have been in had there been no breach, but not to place it in a better position or provide [**18] it with a windfall. Platinum Technology, Inc. v. Federal Insurance Co., 282 F.3d 927, 932 \(7th Cir. 2002\).<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>5</sup> See also Maiz v. Virani, 253 F.3d 641 (11th Cir. 2001) (allowing economist with no real estate development experience to testify about expected returns from real estate investment); Quinton v. Farmland Industries, 928 F.2d 335, 336 (10th Cir. 1991) (veterinarian need not be a specialist in toxicology to testify on toxic effect of a substance on cows); Ashland Oil, Inc. v. Delta Oil Prods. Corp., 685 F.2d 175, 178 (7th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1081, 76 L. Ed. 2d 343, 103 S. Ct. 1769 (1983) (trial court properly relied on testimony of expert in chemistry despite lack of expertise in polyurethane chemistry).

This apparent consonance was delusive, however, for Mr. Dohmeyer boasted in his deposition that "many years ago" he and his boss devised the definition: "this is our definition of what we believe the question is, what answer we are giving." (Dohmeyer Dep., at 19) (Emphasis supplied). If this definition of economic loss were faithful to basic damage theory, there would have been no need for Mr. Dohmeyer to have devised and employed his own definition. Cf. Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 48, 39 S. Ct. 247, 63 L. Ed. 470, 17 Ohio L. Rep. 26, 17 Ohio L. Rep. 149 \(1919\)(Holmes, [**19] J.)("Of course the document would not have been sent unless it had been intended to have some effect. . . ."); United States v. Ladish Malting Co., 135 F.3d 484, 490 \(7th Cir. 1998\)("The prosecutor must have thought that the instruction mattered; why else so vigorously oppose Ladish's request for an actual-knowledge instruction").

Mr. Dohmeyer's admissions about the origin and uniqueness of his definition - he conceded the definition was not to be found anywhere else (Dohmeyer Dep., at 18-19) - would seem to trigger the principle that the opinion of an expert need not be accepted when based on nothing more than personal opinion or belief instead of an understandable scientific basis. Turpin v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 959 F.2d 1349, 1360 \(6th Cir.\), cert. denied 506 U.S. 826, 121 L. Ed. 2d 47, 113 S. Ct. 84 \(1992\); Thomas v. FAG Bearings Corp., 846 F.Supp. 1382, 1393 \(W.D.Mo. 1994\). But this is only the beginning.

Mr. Dohmeyer's definition was the basis for a damage theory and calculation that is impermissible as a matter of law. It is not merely that the definition was not peer reviewed, not tested, and not generally accepted, as Loeffel [**20] correctly argues.<sup>7</sup> In addition, Mr. Dohmeyer's theory and methodology led him to exclude as a component of "economic loss" any amount attributable to the diminished value of the Line, itself.

[**21] HN9 Both contract law and the UCC provide the appropriate remedy for "economic loss" occasioned by diminished commercial expectations, not coupled with injury to person or property. See In re Chicago Flood Litigation, 176 Ill.2d 179, 200, 680 N.E.2d 265, 275, 223 Ill. Dec. 532 \(1997\); Mars, Inc. v. Heritage Builders of Effingham, Inc., 327 Ill.App.3d 346, 351, 763 N.E.2d 428, 434, 261 Ill. Dec. 458 \(4th Dist. 2002\).

[*804] "Generally speaking, a defective product can cause three types of injury: personal injury, property damage, and economic loss." Trans States Airlines v. Pratt & Whitney Can., 177 Ill.2d 21, 27, 682 N.E.2d 45, 48, 224 Ill. Dec. 484 \(1997\). In Moorman Mfg. Co. v. National Tank Co., 91 Ill.2d 69, 82, 435 N.E.2d 443, 449, 61 Ill. Dec. 746 \(1982\), the Illinois Supreme Court held that "economic loss"

"has been defined as 'damages for inadequate value, costs of repair and replacement of the defective product, or consequent loss of profits - without any claim of personal injury or damage to other property' (Note, Economic Loss in Products Liability Jurisprudence, 66 Colum. L.Rev. 917, 918 (1966)(economic loss)) as well as 'the diminution in the value of the [**22] product because it is inferior in quality and does not work for the general purposes for which it was manufactured and sold.'"

<sup>6</sup> Accord 810 ILCS 5/2-106\(1\)(UCC remedies "shall be liberally administered to the end that the aggrieved party may be put in as good a position as if the other party had fully performed."); Dynamic Recycling Services, Inc. v. Shred Pax Corp., 210 Ill.App.3d 602, 615, 569 N.E.2d 570, 578, 155 Ill. Dec. 389 \(1st Dist. 1991\).

<sup>7</sup> HN8 While Daubert applies to valuation testimony, whether offered by people like Mr. Dohmeyer, certified public accountants, or economists, Frymire-Brinati v. KPMG Peat Marwick, 2 F.3d 183 \(7th Cir. 1993\), the Daubert factors are not to be rigidly applied in this or any other context. In some context, they may not be applicable at all or may have diminished utility as measures of reliability. Loeffel Steel Products v. Delta Brands, 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 2005 WL 1388076 at \*6. Some courts have held they "do not conform easily to an analysis of economic theory." Bailey v. Allgas, Inc., 148 F.Supp.2d 1222, 1235 \(N.D.Ala. 2000\). In determining the admissibility of expert testimony with respect to future lost profits, a trial judge has considerable leeway in determining the testimony's reliability. ID Security Systems Canada, Inc. v. Checkpoint Systems, Inc., 249 F.Supp.2d 622, 690 \(E.D.Pa. 2003\).

91 Ill.2d at 82, 435 N.E.2d at 449 (Emphasis supplied)(Parentheses in original).

In their Response to Loeffel's motion, the defendants have "changed positions as nimbly as if dancing a quadrille." Orloff v. Willoughby, 345 U.S. 83, 87, 97 L. Ed. 842, 73 S. Ct. 534 (1953), for they now insist that Mr. Dohmeyer's definition is "entirely consistent" with traditional breach of contract damages theory, as expressed in Moorman. However, the Response ignores Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony in which he said that he created the definition years ago, and that it was to be found nowhere else. Nor does it attempt to explain why he would have insisted on using such a definition if it was consistent with the traditional and legal definition. (Response at 10).

In quoting from Moorman, the Response placed a period after the word "property," and ended the quote, thus conveying to the reader the impression that there was nothing further in the sentence. Omitted was the reference to the Columbia Law Review article and this critical phrase:

". . . as well [**23] as 'the diminution in the value of the product because it is inferior in quality and does not work for the general purposes for which it was manufactured and sold.'"

HN10 [↑] The UCC provides that "the measure of damages for breach of warranty is the difference at the time and place of acceptance between the value of the goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted, unless special circumstances show proximate damages of a different amount." 810 ILCS 5/2-714(2). In addition, a party may also recover incidental and consequential damages, 810 ILCS 5/2-715, including lost profits. See Arcor, Inc. v. Textron, Inc., 960 F.2d 710, 713-14 (7th Cir. 1992) (buyer of a machine that failed to live up to its warranty was entitled to not only the difference between the value of the machine as warranted and its actual value, but lost profits as well); Mercer v. Long Mfg., N.C., Inc., 665 F.2d 61, 69 (5th Cir. 1982) (in case involving faulty combine, economic loss consists of difference in value between combine as warranted and as received and any lost profits on crops resulting [**24] from inability to use combine for harvesting); Cognitest Corp. v. Riverside Publ. Co., 107 F.3d 493, 496 (7th Cir. 1997).<sup>8</sup>

[*805] The measure of damages under Loeffel's fraud claim (Count V) is the same. HN11 [↑] The victim of a fraudulent misrepresentation is entitled to recover as damages those losses caused by the misrepresentation, "including (a) the difference between the value of what he has received in the transaction, and its purchase price or other value given for it. . ." Restatement (2d) Torts § 549 [**25] (1977). Accord DiRose v. PK Management Corp., 691 F.2d 628, 631 (2nd Cir. 1982); FDIC v. Palermo, 815 F.2d 1329, 1341 (10th Cir. 1987); Four S Alliance Inc. v. American National Bank, 104 Ill. App.3d 636, 432 N.E.2d 1213, 60 Ill. Dec. 314 (1st Dist. 1982); Dobbs, Remedies, § 9.2 at 594-95 (1973) ("If a plaintiff has been induced to buy a house because of an intentional false representation that it is free from termites, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the difference between the value of the house as it actually exists and the value it would have had if it had not had termites. This rule puts him in the same financial position as if the fraudulent representations had been true.").

An examination of Mr. Dohmeyer's deposition testimony reveals the likely reason for the omission from the Moorman quotation. He testified that his assessment of economic loss necessarily omitted any consideration of the difference between the value of the Line as warranted and its diminished value resulting from the Line's flaws. He attempted to illustrate the point with the following hypotheticals.

A: Well, if you paid - if you bargain to buy a machine for [**26] $ 10 and you allege once you got it you only paid nine because you hold back a dollar until it works right, but you say, hey, this machine doesn't work right; in fact, the damages on the machine the way it doesn't work are $ 2.00. So pay me the two. Well, he's going to go, I'm not going to pay you the two, I'll pay you one, because you already owe me one.

<sup>8</sup> In a lengthy "Declaration" belatedly submitted by the defendants in response to the present motion, Mr. Dohmeyer insisted that there is no authoritative text regarding the calculations of damages due to a machine that operates at a rate below its specifications. (Defendant's Response to Plaintiff's Motion to Bar, Ex. A, P19). The controlling legal definitions of economic loss and the measure of damages available under Illinois law - which the defendants concede controls this case - would have been a starting point.

387 F. Supp. 2d 794, *805L<sup>2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15718, **26</sup>

Q: Right. But couldn't I also take the position in your analogy that, hey, I paid you a million two hundred fifty thousand in the purchase price and a million five and the line I got isn't worth $ 100,000.

A: No, because you'd be double-counting . . . you can only get your damages.

(Dohmeyer Dep., at 133; see also id. at 134).

Mr. Dohmeyer's second hypothetical is even more convoluted. He posited a machine sold for four dollars that was warranted to print one dollar every year for five years. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 135). Then he continued:

A: All right. So it doesn't print-it doesn't even print the dollars for you. Okay? So you say, I want my $ 5.00, because the machine is defective, it didn't print money like you said it does. You want the machine back, too. That doesn't make any sense.

Q: I - I - [**27] what I'm saying is, I'm not disagreeing with your contention. There's no way I can say, hey, I have lost profits, and I can't say, I needed the machine to create the profits I lost. I understand this. What I'm saying is, you're - you're assuming in your analogy, that because we didn't pay the other two hundred and fifty grand, the machine must have been worth a a[sic] million two hundred and fifty, and that's the part I'm disagreeing with.

A: Absolutely, it's worth that because your damages get you whole to make it worth that.

By its selective misquotation, the Response allowed the defendants to argue [*806] that Mr. Dohmeyer's definition of economic loss was "consistent" with basic damage theory, without simultaneously revealing that it wasn't and without thereby revealing the unreliability of his methodology and his deposition testimony.

In his belatedly filed Declaration, Mr. Dohmeyer claimed what he had never claimed at his deposition, namely that his analysis of economic loss relied on a "benefit of the bargain theory," which he defined this way: "But for' the defendant's allegedly defective machine, Loeffel would have had a faster machine, (one capable of producing at the [**28] rates provided in the contract specifications." (Parenthesis in original). Mr. Dohmeyer's newly claimed allegiance to the benefit of the bargain rule, is belied by and incompatible with his conclusion that diminution in value of a faulty piece of equipment and lost profits are mutually exclusive. **HN12**<sup>1</sup> The benefit of the bargain rule provides that the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of what plaintiff received and its value had the representations been true. See Gerill Corp. v. Jack L. Hargrove Builders, Inc., 128 Ill.2d 179, 538 N.E.2d 530, 537-38, 131 Ill. Dec. 155, cert. denied 493 U.S. 894, 107 L. Ed. 2d 193, 110 S. Ct. 243 (1989); Out of Pocket or Benefit of the Bargain As Proper Rule of Damages for Fraudulent Representations Inducing Contract for the Transfer of Property, 13 A.L.R.3d 875 (1967)(collecting cases).

**HN13**<sup>1</sup> Expert opinions that are contrary to law are inadmissible. Langehennig v. Sofamor, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19120, 1999 WL 1129683 at n.6 (D.Kan. 1999); Bailey v. Allgas, Inc., 148 F.Supp.2d 1222, 1245-46 (N.D.Ala. 2000). They cannot be said to be scientific, to be reliable, or to be helpful to the trier of fact. Indeed, "it is not an 'expert' [**29] opinion, but rather a personal opinion about what [damages Mr. Dohmeyer] believes should apply" in this case. In re Diet Drugs Products Liability Litigation, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1174, 2001 WL 454586 at *18 (E.D.Pa. 2001).

Whatever the motivation for the Response's misquotation or Moorman, it is deeply troubling. Loeffel Steel Products, 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 2005 WL 1388076 at *11 **HN14**<sup>1</sup> "There is more in membership in the Bar than a license to sign a brief or intone a prosy argument." Cardozo, Law and Literature, 145-46 (1931). Justice is not a game, and zealous advocacy does not entitle a lawyer to "hoodwink a judge [or an opponent] who is not otherwise." United States v. Paglia, 190 F.2d 445, 448 (2nd Cir. 1951)(L. Hand, J.).<sup>9</sup>

<sup>9</sup> A similar kind of manipulation is found in the defendants' rendition of Frymire-Brinati v. KPMG Peat Marwick, 2 F.3d 183 (7th Cir. 1993). The discussion in the Response brief makes it appear as though the plaintiff's expert, a real estate appraiser, was improperly forbidden to testify that the plaintiff's expert, a certified public accountant, "bungled" his "valuation of damages." (Response at 16). "Similarly," the defendants say, they proffer "Mr. Dohmeyer, an economist, as its expert." Id. Mr. Dohmeyer isn't an economist, and the two cases are not similar. In Brinati, the chairman of the real estate committee of the American

[**30] b

The Reliability Of Mr. Dohmeyer's "Labor-Added" Methodology

Mr. Dohmeyer's damage model and calculation of economic loss suffer from the further flaw that they violate of Rule 703 of the Federal Rules of Evidence.<sup>10</sup> [*807]

[**31] Mr. Dohmeyer's calculation of economic loss is based on the assumption that the addition of extra labor and shifts would allow the Line to yield the same productivity as it would have running at faster speeds with fewer shifts. The theory and the precise number of traditional workers and shifts needed came from the defendants' employees, on whom Mr. Dohmeyer uncritically relied. It is undisputed that neither Mr. Dohmeyer nor his assistants at DVC had any expertise in blanking machines and were incapable of assessing the validity of the information provided by the defendants. (Dohmeyer deposition at 26, 33-38, 89). Cf. Bailey v. Allgas, 148 F.Supp.2d 1222, 1240 (N.D.Ala. 2000)(unquestioning reliance on opinions expressed by plaintiff's counsel not proper).

Proceeding from this "unquestioning reliance," Gentieu v. Tony Stone Images/Chicago, Inc., 214 F. Supp. 2d 849, 853 (N.D.Ill. 2002)(Shadur, J.), Mr. Dohmeyer calculated the amount it would cost Loeffel to pay the additional workers in order to produce as much finished steel as would have been produced had the Line operated properly. Mr. Dohmeyer's difficulty in explaining how the additional workers [**32] would cure the situation demonstrates dramatically that he brought no expertise to bear on the underlying assumptions on which his economic loss theory was based:

Sure, just by having, you know, the kinds of things, you know - you have to, I guess, re - recalibrate the machine every time you put a new roll on it where it should have been automatic, you can have a guy standing there, you know, doing that kind of thing. You know, once again, I don't know the technical parts of it, and I understood them a lot better when I did the interview and when I prepared for this deposition last time, but I haven't gone back to re-talk to them about those specifics again for today's deposition . . . . (Dohmeyer Dep. at 37).

Yet, HN16[ Rule 703's relaxation of the usual requirement of firsthand knowledge - a rule which represents a pervasive manifestation of the common law's insistence upon the most reliable sources of information - was premised on an assumption that the expert's opinion will have a reliable basis in the knowledge and experience of his discipline. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592. When pressed, Mr. Dohmeyer could not even say whether the additional labor would solve the [**33] alleged problems and raise the level of production. For that information, one would, he said, have to check with Messrs. Barron, King and DaClue. (Id. at 37-38, 45, 89). Referring to his damage figure, he said:

All it really assumes is with the addition of this expense. And it would probably be labor, you know. . . It says with this much money thrown at the problem, probably - probably, in terms of labor, you can solve the production problems that are alleged. (Dohmeyer Dep. at 44-45).

Institute of Certified Public Accountants, not the appraiser, testified that the plaintiff's CPA had "bungled" by using historical rather than projected future income in his cash flow analysis. 2 F.3d at 187. It was in an effort to "move from theory to concrete valuation" that the appraiser was to testify thereafter about the accuracy of property values in the financial statements.

<sup>10</sup> Rule 703 provides:

HN15[ Bases of Opinion Testimony by Experts

The facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to the expert at or before the hearing. If of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject, the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence in order for the opinion or inference to be admitted. Facts or data that are otherwise inadmissible shall not be disclosed to the jury by the proponent of the opinion or inference unless the court determines that their probative value in assisting the jury to evaluate the expert's opinion substantially outweighs their prejudicial effect.

[*808] It is no answer to say that since Rule 703 allows an expert to base an opinion on inadmissible evidence, Mr. Dohmeyer must be allowed to testify, even though the basis of the information on which he relied came from the defendants. First, the defendants have made no effort to carry their burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the kind of information given to Mr. Dohmeyer is the kind "reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject. . . ." The argument is thus forfeited. United States v. Baretz, 411 F.3d 867 \(7th Cir. 2005\).

Second, and more importantly, HN17 while Rule 703 was intended to liberalize [*34] the rules relating to expert testimony, it was not intended to abolish the hearsay rule and to allow a witness, under the guise of giving expert testimony, to in effect become the mouthpiece of the witnesses on whose statements or opinions the expert purports to base his opinion. See, e.g., Dura Automotive Systems of Indiana, Inc. v. CTS Corp., 285 F.3d 609, 613 \(7th Cir. 2002\); TK-7 Corp. v. The Estate of Barbouti, 993 F.2d 722, 731-34 \(10th Cir. 1993\); In re James Wilson Assoc., 965 F.2d 160, 173 \(7th Cir. 1992\).

HN18 Under Rule 703, an expert may rely on hearsay in formulating his opinion - provided the requirements of Rule 702 are met - but the evidence is not admissible for the truth of the matters asserted. United States v. Gonzales, 307 F.3d 906, 910 \(9th Cir. 2002\); TK-7 Corp. v. Estate of Barbouti, 993 F.2d 722, 734 \(10th Cir. 1993\)("the hearsay is admitted for the limited purpose of informing the jury of the basis of the expert's opinion and not for proving the truth of the matter asserted."). Cf. Gregory v. Oliver, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24730, 2002 WL 31972165 at \*3 \(N.D.Ill. Dec. 27, 2002\)(Shadur, [*35] J.).

HN19 Rule 703 was never intended to allow oblique evasions of the hearsay rule. In Dura Automotive, the Seventh Circuit acknowledged that it "is common in technical fields for an expert to base an opinion in part on what a different expert believes on the basis of expert knowledge not possessed by the first expert." 285 F.3d at 613. For example, as the Committee Notes to the 1972 Proposed Rule 703 observed, a physician, though not an expert in radiology, may rely for a diagnosis on an x-ray. Id. The Seventh Circuit extrapolated from there to make its point:

We too do not believe that the leader of a clinical medical team must be qualified as an expert in every individual discipline encompassed by the team in order to testify as to the team's conclusions. But suppose the soundness of the underlying expert judgment is in issue. Suppose a thoracic surgeon gave expert evidence in a medical malpractice case that the plaintiff's decedent had died because the defendant, a radiologist, had negligently failed to diagnose the decedent's lung cancer until it was too advanced for surgery. The surgeon would be competent to testify that the cancer was too advanced for [*36] surgery, but in offering the additional and critical judgment that the radiologist should have discovered the cancer sooner he would be, at best, just parroting the opinion of an expert in radiology competent to testify that the defendant had x-rayed the decedent carelessly.

Id. The problem, then, is that the expert is vouching for the truth of what another expert told him - he is merely that expert's spokesman. But, HN20 "[a] scientist, however well credentialed he may be, is not permitted to be the mouthpiece of a scientist in a different specialty. That would not be responsible science." Id. at 614. See also Grant v. Chemrex, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6058, No. 93 C 0350, 1997 WL 223071, \*8 \(N.D.Ill. Apr. 28, 1997\) (expert's "professional knowledge and ability" were not adequate to evaluate calculations and opinions upon which he based his opinion).<sup>11</sup>

---

<sup>11</sup> By way of example, the court in Dura Automotive said that a theoretical economist, who relied on the findings of an econometric study conducted by another economist, would not be allowed to testify if he lacked expertise in econometrics, and the study raised questions that only an econometrician could answer. 285 F.3d at 614. Even Judge Wood, who dissented, agreed with this example. Id. at 620. See also TK-7 Corp., 993 F.2d at 732 HN21 (the rationale of Rule 703 "is certainly not satisfied in this case where the expert failed to demonstrate any basis for concluding that another individual's opinion on a subjective financial prediction was reliable, other than the fact that it was the opinion of someone he believed to be an expert who had a financial interest in making an accurate prediction.").

[**37] That is precisely the situation here: If allowed to testify, Mr. Dohmeyer would be "hiding behind" Messrs. Barron, King and DaClue and acting as their "mouthpiece." Id. at 615. He would, in effect, be vouching for their labor-added methodology, when he has absolutely no knowledge of whether the theory is valid and reliable. See also TK-7 Corp., 993 F.2d 722. Thus, Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony cannot be used to prove that additional labor and shifts were in fact the medicament for the Line's ills. In re James Wilson Associates, 965 F.2d 160, 173 (7th Cir. 1992)(Posner, J.)

The example posed by Judge Posner in James Wilson Associates demonstrates the problem with Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony:

"If, for example, the expert witness (call him A) bases his opinion in part on a fact (call it X) that the parties lawyer told him, the lawyer cannot, in closing argument, tell the jury, 'see we proved X through our expert witness. A.'"

Id. at 173. (Parenthesis in original).

This was the kind of hand-off attempted in James Wilson Associates, where an architect attempted to testify to the value of a building based upon a report [**38] provided to him by a consulting engineer, who had examined the building. The Seventh Circuit held that the trial judge "was entitled to exclude the architect's evidence as hearsay." Id. at 172. The issue was the state of the building, and the expert who had evaluated that state - the consulting engineer - was the one who should have testified. The architect could use what the engineer told him to offer an opinion within the architect's domain of expertise, but he could not testify for the purpose of vouching for the truth of what the engineer told him - "of becoming in short the engineer's spokesman." Id. at 173. It "is improper to use an expert witness as a screen against cross-examination (though the other side could always call him as an adverse witness, and cross-examine him)." Id. (Parenthesis in original).

Yet, without the testimony of Messrs. Barron, King and DaClue explaining and justifying their labor-added theory, Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony will "rest[] on air." Dura Automotive, 285 F.3d at 615. If the underlying assumptions cannot be proven by admissible, competent evidence, the very nature of which would appear [**39] to require expert testimony, Mr. Dohmeyer's analysis of economic loss would have no evidentiary support and would be irrelevant. See Rule 402, Federal Rules of Evidence. Yet, the only expert disclosure in the case on the defendants' side is Mr. Dohmeyer's. Messrs. Barron, King and DaClue have not been designated as experts. Hence, it would appear that Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony, even if initially allowed, would ultimately have to be stricken.

The instant case is analytically congruent with Dura Automotive. There, the [*810] court held that the expert could have testified that the well field was contaminated by volatile organic compounds and that if the defendant's plastics plant was within the well field's capture zone, some of the contamination may have come from that plant. It did not follow, however, that he could testify that the plant was within the well field's capture zone. 285 F.3d at 613-614.

The defendant moved to bar the hydrogeologist's testimony and to dismiss Dura's claim. Dura responded with affidavits from the four employees who had prepared the models on which the hydrogeologist was basing his conclusions. The [**40] defendant moved to strike the affidavits on the ground that the disclosure of additional expert witness was untimely. The district court granted the motion and held that without the affidavits, there was insufficient evidence of the reliability of the models, and the hydrogeologist's testimony could not prove that accuracy. The court barred the testimony and concluded that without it, Dura had no case. 285 F.3d at 612.

The Court of Appeals affirmed. It held that to the extent the affidavits contained evidence that would have to be presented at trial by an expert witness or witnesses other than the hydrogeologist in order for Dura to withstand a motion of judgment as a matter of law, Dura's failure to have made timely disclosure of their experts' opinions invited application of Rule 37(c)(1) to bar the authors of the affidavits (or any other expert for that matter) from testifying. In the instant case, denying the motion to prohibit Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony and allowing him to testify when there will be no competent evidence to prove the truth of the underlying assumptions would result in allowing testimony that would have to be stricken as irrelevant. The law never requires [**41] an idle thing to be done. Brooklyn Life Insurance Co. v. Dutcher, 95 U.S. 269, 272, 24 L. Ed. 410 (1877).

TK-7 Corp. v. Estate of Barbouti is also instructive.<sup>12</sup> To support the plaintiff's claim and to calculate the amount of damages, the plaintiffs presented testimony from Dr. Boswell, a financial economist and professor of finance. Dr. Boswell predicated his calculations of lost profits on sales projections of one Werber. The district court initially allowed the testimony, but ultimately directed a verdict against the plaintiff, based on insufficiency of the evidence of damages. Mr. Werber was not called to testify, and the district court held that in order to prevail, the plaintiff had to present affirmative evidence on the projections that Dr. Boswell had assumed to be true. Accord International Adhesive Coating Co. v. Bolton Emerson International, 851 F.2d 540, 546. Since there was no such evidence, the plaintiff failed to carry its burden of proof. In affirming, the Tenth Circuit pointed out that Dr. Boswell had no familiarity with methods or reasoning used by Mr. Werber in arriving at his projections. In the instant case, Mr. Dohmeyer conceded a similar [**42] lack of understanding or familiarity of the models crafted by Messrs. Barron, King and DaClue.

c

The Unreliability of The Methodology Underlying Mr. Dohmeyer's Conclusions Regarding Loeffel's Claim For Future Lost Profits And Business

The third aspect of Mr. Dohmeyer's proposed expert testimony focuses on the Loeffel's claim for lost profits and business [*811] resulting from deficiencies in the Line. The Analysis of Economic Loss was accompanied by a letter of transmittal containing a 1 1/2 page discussion of the "(steel) metals industry," under the caption, "Industry Discussion." (Parenthesis in original). It summarized isolated bits of information that Mr. Dohmeyer or one of his colleagues had read on "money.msn.com and cnnfn.com." (See letter of February 27, 2004). As one would expect given Mr. Dohmeyer's admitted lack of expertise in the steel/metals industry and the sources of the information on which [**43] he relied, the 1 1/2 page discussion is superficial, generalized, and inexpert.

The discussion began by noting that the steel industry is made up of three tiers: primary metals producers, metals processors and/or service centers, and end users. The primary producers are the source of steel for the service centers, which "undertake value-adding services such as precision design and other pre-production processing as may be required by specific customers." These service centers, according to DVC, were formerly mostly distribution centers performing little processing. By the 1980s, however, they began to add processing capabilities that allowed them to add a broad range of value-added services.

Concurrently, the primary metals producers began concentrating on high volume production. As these industry changes continued, the discussion explained, many service centers found themselves unable to obtain processed products and had to begin outsourcing their customized metal processing to service centers with value-added capabilities. Recent challenges in the industry include the recession and frequent, unpredictable increases in domestic steel prices.

The Analysis of Economic Loss contained [**44] 12 pages of graphs and charts reflecting financial data about 8 companies: A.M. Castle & Co.; Friedman Industries Inc.; Gibraltar Steel Corp.; Olympic Steel Inc.; Reliance Steel & Aluminum Co.; Ryerson Tull, Inc.; Steel Technologies Inc.; and Worthington Industries, Inc. The information was obtained from 10k's and Standard & Poor's reports. Mr. Dohmeyer could not explain how the companies were selected for inclusion in the sampling. This is the best he could say:

I think one of the guys did a search on one company that was - that had a similar description to the description for this kind of business, what they do.

(Dohmeyer's Dep. at 121)(Emphasis supplied). How the other seven were selected remains unexplained.

The charts reflected the total sales, gross profit margins, net income, equity, return on equity, stock price, book value, and market to book value of the 8 companies for the period 1999 - 2002. According to Mr. Dohmeyer, the financial history of the eight companies during that period was relevant in evaluating Loeffel's potential for acquiring new business with the Line. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 119-121). But what that new business was to be, Mr. Dohmeyer [**45] wasn't sure. He referred to it, variously, as "toll processing, [] heavier gauge or wider gauge or both, I don't know." (Dohmeyer Dep., at 126). Whatever it was to be, Mr. Dohmeyer explained, its net present value was a function of the competitive environment of the "industry," as reflected by the eight corporations that been chosen. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 126).

<sup>12</sup> Barbouti was cited approvingly in Dura Automotive. 285 F.3d at 613.

He testified that since the 8 companies had experienced financial difficulties between 1999 and 2002, Loeffel could not have hoped to do any better. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 120-122). The figures showed, among other things, declines in median total sales for the 8 companies from 2001 [*812] to 2002. But Loeffel had a 5.3% increase in 2002, while the 8 companies had a median loss of 2.2%. Similarly, while the median decline from 2000 to 2001 in gross profit margins of the 8 companies was 5.8%, Loeffel had a 1.4% increase. From 2001 to 2002, there was a median increase in gross profit margin of the 8 companies of 6.7%, while Loeffel's increased 23.9%.

In order for the sampling chosen by DVC comparison to have the requisite predictive capacity and the reliability Daubert demands, Mr. Dohmeyer had to "select samples that [**46] are truly comparable. To put it another way, care must be taken to be sure that the comparison is one between 'apples and apples' rather than one between 'apples and oranges.'" Donnelly v. Rhode Island Board of Governors for Higher Education, 929 F.Supp 583, 591 \(D.R.I. 1996\).

HN22 [↑] In calculating lost future profits or lost business, the measure of damages is guided by analysis of "comparable businesses in the area." Cates v. Morgan Portable Bldg. Corp., 591 F.2d 17, 21 n.7 \(7th Cir. 1979\)(Emphasis supplied). "The business used as a standard must be as nearly identical to the plaintiff's as possible." Lehrman v. Gulf Oil, 500 F.2d 659, 667 \(5th Cir. 1974\), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 929, 43 L. Ed. 2d 400, 95 S. Ct. 1128 (1975). Accord In re James O'Connell Co. Inc., 799 F.2d 1258, 1259 \(9th Cir. 1986\); National Farmers' Organization, Inc. v. Associated Milk Producers, Inc., 850 F.2d 1286, 1292 \(8th Cir. 1989\). This is often referred to as the "yardstick approach." Absent the requisite showing of comparability, a damage model that predicts either the presence or absence of future profits is impermissibly speculative and conjectural. [**47] Cf. Home Placement Svc., Inc. v. The Providence Journal Co., 819 F.2d 1199, 1209 \(1st Cir. 1987\); ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments, 877-879 (5th ed. 2002)(and cases cited).

Of course, exact correlation is not necessary but the samples must be fair congeners. If they are not, the comparison is manifestly unreliable and cannot "'logically advance[] a material aspect of the proposing party's case. The Supreme Court [in Daubert] referred to this second prong of the analysis as the fit requirement.'" Loeffel Steel Products v. Delta Brands, 372 F. Supp. 2d 1104, 2005 WL 1388076 at \*16 (quoting Judge Kozinski's opinion on remand from the Supreme Court . Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 43 F.3d 1311, 1315 \(9th Cir.\), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 869, 133 L. Ed. 2d 126, 116 S. Ct. 189 (1995)).

Undiscriminatingly labeling all nine companies "steel service centers," Mr. Dohmeyer tacitly assumed that they are necessarily monolithic, that they necessarily compete for the same customers, and thus the past financial profile of the eight is a reasonable predictor of how Loeffel would have performed. Stated more simply, Mr. Dohmeyer's argument [**48] runs this way: 1) Loeffel and the eight companies are in the same "industry;" 2) all participants in "an industry" are necessarily competitors; 3) therefore, the financial performance of the eight companies in 1999-2002 is relevant to determining Loeffel's prospect for new business had the Line performed properly.<sup>13</sup> (Dohmeyer Dep., at 124). Here as always, "we must think things, not words, or at least we must constantly translate our words into facts [*813] for which they stand, if we are to keep to the real and the true." Holmes, Law In Science and Science In Law, 12 Harv.L.Rev. 443, 460 (1889).

---

<sup>13</sup> When asked at his deposition how, since he knew nothing about the customer base of Loeffel or the eight publicly traded companies, he could have concluded that Loeffel served the same customer market as the eight other service centers, Mr. Dohmeyer said:

Oh they have to. I mean it's -- you're in that industry, you're competing. You can't help -- once you're in an industry, you can't help but compete with other people in your industry. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 124).

[**49] Mr. Dohmeyer's inexpert conclusion that each participant in "an industry" necessarily competes with every other participant in the industry is demonstrably false, as Dohmeyer's own report shows. He claimed that the "steels/metals industry" was comprised of three tiers. But as his report noted, the three categories of industry participants were not competitors, but enjoyed a symbiotic relationship. Bentleys and Kias are in the same "industry," but obviously don't compete for the same customers. Arnold Schwarzenegger and Anthony Hopkins never competed for the same roles, although they were both in the "movie industry."

Of course, these are matters of public knowledge. The inquiry becomes more difficult, when the "industry" is more complicated and less obvious. Perhaps, all "steel service centers" do compete; perhaps they don't, or perhaps they do only to an exceedingly limited degree, measured by the extent of the products and services they offer in common, and their geographic location. But only an expert in the field is qualified to say, and neither Mr. Dohmeyer nor his colleagues even begin to qualify. Cf. Gentieu, 214 F.Supp.2d at 851. (What controls the admissibility [**50] of an expert's opinion evidence, "depends on whether his claimed expertise qualifies him to opine on the specific matters that he seeks to address.").

A moment's reflection demonstrates the error in Mr. Dohmeyer's facile, and under-inclusive methodology. Suppose the eight companies selected by DVC had, as does Loeffel, blanking operations, but, in addition, offered a very large number of other diversified products and services, not offered by Loeffel. Assume further that unlike Loeffel with its localized customer base in the Midwest, the eight companies had nationwide or worldwide operations. In that event, the companies could scarcely be said to be comparable, and comparing their undifferentiated sales and income figures to those of Loeffel, would prove absolutely nothing. Cf. Bailey v. Allgas, Inc., 148 F. Supp. 2d 1222, 1232 \(N.D.Ala. 2000\).<sup>14</sup>

[**51] Mr. Dohmeyer at his deposition admitted he knew nothing about the respective geographic or product markets or customer bases of the eight companies or of the quality of service or any other relevant factor that would bear upon the question of comparability. See Home Placement Svc., Inc. v. The Providence Journal Co., 819 F.2d 1199, 1206 \(1st Cir. 1987\). And the charts he compiled do not break out financial data by product or services. Hence, the raw financial data does not tell anything about the performance of the eight companies as to those products and services that they had in common with Loeffel. And it is only with respect to those products that they would be competitors -- at least for the purposes relevant to this case.

Even in cases involving far more comparability than is apparent here, courts have refused to allow the seemingly comparable companies to be used as a yardstick. [*814] In Eleven Line, Inc. v. North Texas State Soccer Ass'n, Inc., 213 F.3d 198 \(5th Cir. 2000\), the plaintiff owned indoor soccer arenas. The court rejected soccer arenas in general as comparable businesses where there was no evidence offered regarding geographical location, [**52] size or attractiveness of those facilities, the size and type of the market that they served, the relative costs of operation, the amounts charged, or the number years the facility was run. Id. at 208. The Fifth Circuit stressed that employing such a broad category was like "arguing that because McDonald's franchises earn a certain average rate of return, a particular franchise will perform to the average." Id. at 208-09. See also, Kinesoft Development Corp. v. Softbank Holdings Inc., 139 F.Supp.2d 869, 910 \(N.D.Ill. 2001\) (rejecting damages calculation where expert gave no consideration to any analysis of a comparable company selling comparable products).

HN24 [↑] It cannot be too often repeated or too strongly emphasized that "nothing in either Daubert or the Federal Rules of Evidence requires a district court to admit opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert. A court may conclude that there is simply too great an analytical gap between the data and the opinion proffered." Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 157. That caution applies with singular force to Mr. Dohmeyer's conclusion that [**53] the eight publicly traded companies were comparable to Loeffel for purposes of assessing lost future business and profits.

<sup>14</sup> HN23 [↑] In antitrust cases, proof of the relevant product and geographic market is absolutely essential. The relevant geographic market is generally defined as the area of effective competition, that is the area in which the product or its reasonably interchangeable substitutes are traded. A determination of the geographic market must entail an analysis of several factors including the location of competitors and price data. Id. Although this case presents different issues, for purposes of determining comparability, the analysis is much the same.

Mr. Dohmeyer lacked the qualifications to conclude that merely because all nine companies could be classified as "service centers," they necessarily competed with Loeffel or that they were comparable. HN25<sup>15</sup> Spending a few minutes on the internet does not make one an expert on any "industry" or on any topic. Cf Charter National Bank & Trust v. Charter One Financial, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13919, 2001 WL 1035721 at \*6 \(N.D.Ill. September 4, 2001\)(assistant professor of law at the University of Chicago and a fellow in economics and public policy was not qualified as an expert on trademark law despite his extensive reading of trademark cases).<sup>15</sup>

[**54] The eight congeners selected by DVC were large to massive, publicly traded companies. According to Mr. Dohmeyer's charts, their average median total sales for the period 1999 - 2002 was $ 640 million, while Loeffel's was $ 19 million.<sup>16</sup> Perhaps this alone is not enough to tip the balance. But, what does is Mr. Dohmeyer's inexplicable failure to have considered such critical factors as what services the companies provided, their customer base, the products they sold, the geographic markets in which they operated, their prices and other critical aspects of the businesses. In fact, Mr. Dohmeyer admitted at his deposition that neither he nor his colleagues [\*815] researched Loeffel or the eight comparative companies' customer bases. Yet, unless Loeffel's customer base and the services and products it offered approximated those of the eight companies, they were not "comparable," and the latters' economic fortunes would not be a "reliable" predictor of how Loeffel would have fared in the period 1999-2002.

[**55] The internet reveals the manifest unreliability of Mr. Dohmeyer's assumption about the uniformity of steel service centers -- an assumption that is the lynchpin in his theory of comparability. It also reveals the "fundamentally unsound basis [and] fatally deficient amount of data" on which Mr. Dohmeyer based his conclusion that the eight companies and Loeffel were comparable. Thomas v. FAG Bearings Corp., 846 F.Supp. 1382 \(W.D.Mo. 1994\).<sup>17</sup>

[**56] Even a cursory search reveals that steel service centers are not monolithic and offer an extraordinary array of services and products, most of which are not offered by Loeffel, but are offered by the eight companies DVC selected.

In addition to cutting and slitting, coil processing, decoiling, bending, (and perhaps blade decambering) -- the services offered by Loeffel -- service centers also offer many services that Loeffel does not, such as: polishing, plasma profiling, grinding, gun drilling, tempering, stress relieving, annealing, heat treating, burning, abrasive and carbide blade sawing, computerized plasma cutting and automatic splice welding, piercing, notching, edging, ribbon and oscillate winding, punching, drilling, flame cutting, beam splitting. See www.steelvillage.com. Similarly, the same internet site reveals a varied array of products offered by service centers, but not offered by Loeffel, including:

<sup>15</sup> The defendants have taken a somewhat inconsistent position on the question of Mr. Dohmeyer's expertise in the steel industry. First, they say that that expertise is "inconsequential." (Response at 9). Then, as an afterthought, they say that Mr. Dohmeyer "perform[ed] thorough research on the steel industry." Of course he did no such thing and saying it doesn't make it so. Finally, they say he consulted with the defendants' personnel, who have extensive experience in the steel industry. Id. There is nothing to support the claim that the defendants' employees are experts, and Mr. Dohmeyer never claimed that they imparted information beyond their labor-added theory. In any event, even if they had, that would not begin to satisfy the requirements of Rule 702 or 703.

<sup>16</sup> In 2002, the actual sales for the eight companies ranged from $ 99 million to $ 2.296 billion. There was a similar range in gross profit margins ranging from a low of 6% to a high of 29.8% in 2002.

<sup>17</sup> HN26<sup>18</sup> Even where a witness is an expert in the relevant field, the evidentiary reliability demanded by Daubert is not present when his or her opinion is speculative or rests on an unsound basis. See American Bearing Co. v. Litton Industries, Inc., 540 F.Supp. 1163, 1173 \(E.D.Pa. 1982\), aff'd on other grounds, 729 F.2d 943 \(3rd Cir.\), cert. denied 469 U.S. 854, 83 L. Ed. 2d 112, 105 S. Ct. 178 \(1984\); Lithuanian Commerce Corp Ltd. v. Sara Lee Hosiery, 179 F.R.D. 450 \(D.N.J. 1998\)(assumptions of a certified public accountant with several advanced degrees).

pipe, rod, bar, aluminum, brass, bronze, tubing, carbon, alloy, high speed steels, alloy heat treated, abrasion resistant, high strength, HSLA plate, valves, fitting and flanges. Id.

Further dissimilarities abound. Loeffel is a small company with offices in [**57] the greater Chicago area. It employs 70 people, and its customer base is largely in the Midwest. It is in the business of slitting and cutting raw steel into lengths and thicknesses according to customer specifications. Its customers include various industries, from filing cabinet manufacturers to metal building products and stock containers. (Complaint, P 1; www.loeffel.com).

A.M. Castle & Co., specializes in the distribution of carbon, alloy and stainless steels; nickel alloys; aluminum; titanium; and brass and copper in a variety of product forms, including bar, plate, tube, sheet and coil. It operates a subsidiary, Total Plastics, Inc., through which it distributes a broad range of value-added industrial plastics. Through another subsidiary, Oliver Steel Plate, it has a market position in alloy and heavy gauge carbon plate products. Along with its affiliated companies, Castle has facilities in over 40 locations throughout North America. Its customer base includes numerous Fortune 500 companies as well as thousands of medium and smaller-sized firms spread across a wide [*816] spectrum of industries. (www.amcastle.com).

Friedman Industries, Inc. is in the flat roll sheet and plate [**58] steel processing and distribution business. It operates two plants, in Texas and Arkansas, each capable of cutting-to-length, leveling, and temper passing hot roll steel coils. It operates a division selling excess prime, secondary, and transition steel coils, and a division that rolls and welds pipe for use in the water well industry, steel building columns, steel pipe piling, water and air lines, and many structural applications. (www.friedmanindustries.com).

Gibraltar Steel Corp.'s core business is producing value-added, high-margin steel products and services. It has expanded into the metal processing, building products, and commercial heat-treating markets, and is now the second-largest commercial heat-treater in North America and is a major supplier of metal building products. These operations utilize any one or a combination of more than 25 different processes and services to manufacture and deliver a variety of high-quality steel products and services. Gibraltar has expanded its customer base through the acquisition of 22 businesses and the investment of more than $ 200 million in capital expenditures and now has 72 facilities in 26 states, Mexico, and Canada serving more [**59] than 10,000 customers in a variety of industries. These customers are both domestic and international, including manufacturers and distributors and, to a lesser extent, end-users for a wide range of applications, and consumers through hardware and building products distributors and mass merchandisers. Gibraltar's major commercial markets include the automotive, automotive supply, building and construction, steel, machinery, and general manufacturing industries. (www.gibraltar1.complaint).

Olympic Steel is a domestic steel service center with a primary focus on the direct sale and distribution of large volumes of processed carbon, coated and stainless flat-rolled sheet, coil and plate steel products. Its processing services include both traditional service center processes of cutting-to-length, slitting, and shearing and higher value-added processes of blanking, tempering, plate burning, laser welding, and precision machining of steel parts. Olympic operates 12 processing and distribution facilities in Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, with over 800 employees. It participates in two joint ventures in Michigan that primarily service [**60] the automotive market in the Detroit area. Its customers include both regional concerns and larger national and multi-location accounts, located throughout the midwestern, eastern and southern United States. (www.olysteel.com).

Reliance Steel & Aluminum Co., which is traded on the New York Stock Exchange, is one of the largest metals service center companies in the United States. It operates a network of more than 100 locations in 30 states, Belgium, France and South Korea, providing value-added metals processing services. It distributes a full line of more than 90,000 metal products, including galvanized, hot-rolled and cold-finished steel, stainless steel, aluminum, brass, copper, titanium, and alloy steel. Reliance boasts more than 95,000 customers in a broad range of industries. (www.rsac.com).

Ryerson Tull, Inc. is a leading North American distributor and processor of metals with annual sales of over $ 2.2 billion. With over 5,000 employees, it operates a network of service centers across the United States and Canada, has investments in additional service centers in Mexico and Asia, and maintains metal trading capabilities around the world. Recently, it [*817] acquired Integris Metals, [**61] Inc., North America's fourth largest metals service center with 2004 revenues of $ 2 billion. Ryerson Tull processes stainless steel, aluminum, copper alloys, and industrial plastics, and maintains inventories over more than 100,000 metal and plastic items in a wide variety of grades, shapes, and sizes. (www.ryersontull.com).

Steel Technologies, Inc. is one of the largest independent steel processors in North America, and operates a network of 20 facilities throughout the eastern half of the United States and Mexico. It processes precision flatrolled products for various industries, including the automotive, appliance, lawn and garden, agricultural, office equipment and railcar industries. Steel Technologies employs over 1,000 people. (www.steeltchnologies.com).

Finally, Worthington Industries, is a global company that processes steel for use in the automotive, construction, hardware, aerospace and many other industries. With some 8,000 employees, Worthington operates 65 facilities in 10 countries across North America and Europe. It manufactures metal products such as metal framing, pressure cylinders, automotive past model service stampings, metal ceiling grid systems and laser [**62] welded blanks. Worthington's metal framing subsidiary produces steel studs, floor joists, roof trusses, and other metal accessories for wholesale distributors and commercial and residential building contractors. Its pressure cylinder business caters to customers in the liquified petroleum gas and refrigeration industries, and manufactures cylinders to hold everything from acetylene for welding to oxygen for breathing. (www.worthingtonindustries.com).

HN27 [Daubert] requires that trial judges must ensure that any and all expert testimony is not only relevant, but reliable. To that end, a judge must undertake a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts at issue. Frymire-Brinati, 2 F.3d at 186. The judge must look behind the expert's ultimate conclusion and analyze the adequacy of its foundation. Mid-State Fertilizer, 877 F.2d at 1339. Expert opinion that is speculative is inadmissible. Cf. Target Market Pub., Inc. v. ADVO, Inc., 136 F.3d 1139, 1143 \(7th Cir. 1998\).

Mr. Dohmeyer's opinion [**63] that the financial performance of the eight companies in the period 1999-2002 can be used in evaluating Loeffel's lost profits or business in that period is unreliable and speculative. The defendants' use the phrase, "junk science," to refer to Mr. Toczy's expert opinion. It was inappropriate there. Loeffel Steel Products, supra. It is, however, appropriately applied to the sampling of supposedly comparable companies compiled by DVC. Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony will not be allowed. The oft-repeated caution that HN28[] courts should be particularly wary of unfounded expert opinion when causation is the issue applies here. See In re Agent Orange Product Litigation, 611 F.Supp. 1223, 1249 \(E.D.N.Y. 1985\), aff'd, 818 F.2d 187 \(2nd Cir. 1987\), cert. denied sub nom., Lombardi v. Dow Chemical Co., 487 U.S. 1234, 101 L. Ed. 2d 932, 108 S. Ct. 2898 \(1988\); Thomas v. FAG Bearings, 846 F.Supp. 1382, 1394 \(W.D.Mo. 1994\).

B

Assessment of Relevance

HN29[] To be admissible, expert testimony must be not only reliable, but relevant. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 597; United States v. Allen, 390 F.3d 944, 949 \(7th Cir. 2004\). Testimony [**64] is relevant if it [*818] assists the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact at issue. An expert, who, like Mr. Dohmeyer, supplies nothing but a bottom line supplies nothing of value to the judicial process. Minasian v. Standard Chartered Bank, PLC, 109 F.3d 1212, 1216 \(7th Cir. 1997\).

III

MR. DOHMEYER'S REPORT CRITIQUING MR. WIERSEMA'S ANALYSIS VIOLATED RULE 26(a)(2)

We come then to the argument that the defendants' failure to comply with the requirements of Rule 26(a)(2)(B), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, requires barring testimony by Mr. Dohmeyer critical of Mr. Wiersema's conclusions. Recognizing that secrecy is not congenial to truth seeking, HN30<sup>18</sup> the Rule requires that an expert report must disclose "a complete statement of all opinions to be expressed and the basis and reasons therefor . . ." <sup>19</sup>

<sup>18</sup> [\*\*65\] Hoffman v. Caterpillar, Inc., 368 F.3d 709, 714 \(7th Cir. 2004\)](#)(Emphasis supplied). <sup>19</sup>

Mr. Dohmeyer's critique of Mr. Wiersema's report is his one page letter of February 27, 2004. Despite the clarity of Rule 26, and the fact that Mr. Dohmeyer was engaged specifically to analyze Mr. Wiersema's conclusions (Defendants' Response at 2), his report consisted of but five unadorned conclusions, set forth in bullet-point format:

- . the Report's model has multiple incorrect premises of damages;
- . The Report's model fails to incorporate risk/cost of capital procedures;
- . The Report's model adds the alleged lost profits of the equipment as represented and the cost of the machine;
- . The Report's model's methodology; and
- . The Report's model has [sic] other assumptive and methodological errors.

The letter concludes: "As a result of the foregoing, Mr. Wiersema's model and related opinions are not reliable."

At his [\*\*66\]](#) deposition, Mr. Dohmeyer conceded that his criticisms of Mr. Wiersema's report offered no explanation, no written opinions, no details, no analysis. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 76, 78). HN32<sup>20</sup> Expertise is a rational process, and a rational process implies express reasons for judgment. Federal Power Commission v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 320 U.S. 591, 627, 88 L. Ed. 333, 64 S. Ct. 281 \(1944\)(Frankfurter, J. dissenting). An expert's opinion full of assertion but empty of reasons has no value and is devoid of persuasiveness and legal significance.

HN33<sup>21</sup> An expert must demonstrate in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field. Kumho Tire, 1819 526 U.S. at 152. At his deposition, Mr. Dohmeyer spoke of the rigorous standards for admission into the American Society of Appraisers. (Dohmeyer Dep., at 13). He would never have gained admission to the ASA had he submitted an appraisal for evaluation as devoid of explanation and reasoning as was the "preliminary critique" of Mr. Wiersema's report. "Why should a court rely on the sort of exposition [a responsible member of the ASA] would not tolerate in his professional life." Mid-State Fertilizer Co., 877 F.2d at 1339. <sup>22</sup>

What Judge Shadur wrote in Gregory, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24730, 2002 WL 31972165 at \*1, applies equally here: "There is frankly no justification that would permit any 'expert' witness, or any lawyer dealing with one, to tender a report that is so patently deficient in every one of those [things required by Rule 26] as the one that is at issue here." The deficiencies in the February 27th letter -- which was never supplemented -- are all the more inexcusable in light of Mr. Dohmeyer's involvement in hundreds of cases as an expert and the defendants' lawyers' experience and skill. <sup>23</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Rule 26(a)(2)(B) provides, in pertinent part:

HN31<sup>24</sup> Except as otherwise stipulated or directed by the court, this disclosure shall, with respect to a witness who is retained or specially employed to provide expert testimony in the case or whose duties as an employee of the party regularly involve giving expert testimony, be accompanied by a written report prepared and signed by the witness. The report shall contain a complete statement of all opinions to be expressed and the basis and reasons therefor; the data or other information considered by the witness in forming the opinions; [and] any exhibits to be used as a summary or support for the opinions; . . . (Emphasis supplied).

<sup>19</sup> Mr. Wiersema's report referred to approximately 1800 pages of exhibits, detailing expenses Loeffel claims to have incurred as a result of the Line's malfunctioning and the damages from claimed losses of current and prospective customers.

<sup>20</sup> To emphasize the extent of his experience as an expert witness, Mr. Dohmeyer's Declaration says that he has provided "expert witness testimony and analysis for over 15 years in hundreds of cases." [2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24730, \[WL\] at 2](#).

The second aspect of Mr. Dohmeyer's report is the "Analysis of Economic Loss," to which was attached Mr. Dohmeyer's curriculum vitae. It contains the heading, "EXPERT WITNESS TESTIMONY."<sup>HN34</sup> Rule 26(a)(2)(B) requires the disclosure [**68] of "any other cases in which the witness has testified as an expert at trial or by deposition within the preceding four years." The report must be "detailed and complete." Salgado by Salgado v. General Motors Corp., 150 F.3d 735, 741 n.6 (7th Cir. 1998) (quoting Advisory Committee's note). Thus, the cases have generally defined the "listing of cases" requirement to include the name of the court, the name of the parties, the case number, and whether the testimony was given at deposition or trial. Id. Accord Zollinger v. Owens-Brockway Glass Container, Inc., 233 F.Supp.2d 349, 356 (N.D.N.Y. 2002); Coleman v. Dydula, 190 F.R.D. 316, 318 (W.D.N.Y. 1999); Hilt v. SFC Inc., 170 F.R.D. 182, 185 (D.Kan. 1997); Giladi v. Strauch, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4645, No. 94 Civ. 3976, 2001 WL 388052, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 16, 2001).<sup>21</sup>

[**69] In nearly every instance, Mr. Dohmeyer's description of the cases in which he previously had been involved was uninformative. Here are 2 examples: "Breach of Contract -- Analysis of Economic Loss to an Oil & Gas Concern," and "Economic Loss -- Injury -- Jay Gueck, Esq. (August, 2002)." As to the 33 entries that topically were relevant to Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony, involving as they did, "economic loss," the only case name listed was Ellis v. Walker. (Qualifications of Principal Appraisers, at 1-6). The others are listed as "Analysis of Economic Loss" or "Economic Loss," followed by the kind of business involved: a restaurant franchise, a weekly newspaper, a mobile home park, an aircraft maintenance facility, medical industry, residential building company, real estate agent, law firm, printing company, software developer, retail dress shop, real estate developer, and so on. As to these entries, their format made impossible, any [*820] meaningful investigation of Mr. Dohmeyer's background as an expert witness.<sup>22</sup>

[**70] Significantly, Mr. Dohmeyer did not list In Matter of Dunham, 110 F.3d 286 (5th Cir. 1997).<sup>23</sup> There, Mr. Dohmeyer was engaged to testify regarding the value of an insurance agency's book of business. He concluded that the value was $ 26,000; his opposite number in the case, Mr. Phillips, concluded the figure was closer to $ 200,000. The district court held that Mr. Dohmeyer was not only inexperienced in the insurance industry, but his computations rested on the "erroneous assumption" that no non-competition agreements had been executed. 110 F.3d at 288. The district court did not find Mr. Dohmeyer's assessment credible. The Fifth Circuit agreed that the district court was right in attributing little or no probative value to the Mr. Dohmeyer's appraisal. Id. at 289.

[**71] I need not decide why the curriculum vitae failed, with but two exceptions, to list the names of the 116 cases. Whatever the reason, given Mr. Dohmeyer's extensive experience and the defendants' lawyer's sophistication, the skeletal format employed was indefensible and severely compromised Loeffel's ability to investigate Mr. Dohmeyer's involvement in any but a handful of the 116 matters he listed.

But this omission is insignificant compared to Mr. Dohmeyer's failure to disclose that the Analysis of Economic Loss was based entirely upon a theory given to him by the defendants, namely that the claimed deficiencies with the Line could be cured by the simple expedient of adding two additional workers and running the Line longer. While the theory, itself, might be deducible from the content of the arithmetic schedules that comprise the Analysis of Economic Loss Report, the source of the theory was not. Nothing in the "Limiting Conditions," which purported to state the "general assumptions and general limiting conditions" on which the "value opinion report has been prepared," hinted that the core assumptions on which all of Mr. Dohmeyer's endeavors were predicated came from [**72] his employers. Indeed, Mr. Dohmeyer's report conveyed precisely the opposite impression.

<sup>21</sup> The Rule requires the qualifications of the witness, including a list of all publications authored by the witness within the preceding ten years; the compensation to be paid for the study and testimony; and a listing of any other cases in which the witness has testified as an expert at trial or by deposition within the preceding four years.

<sup>22</sup> Only a handful of the entries contain the designation "trial" or "deposition." Even as to those that did, it was impossible to tell anything about the engagement or Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony since the entry did not contain sufficient information to enable Loeffel to conduct an appropriate inquiry.

<sup>23</sup> The only conceivable reference to the Dunham case in the curriculum vitae is the terse entry, "Bankruptcy -- Valuation of an insurance agency," which was buried in the middle of the 116 entries.

In the "Appraisal Certification" attached to his report, Mr. Dohmeyer "certified that, to the best of our knowledge and belief," the "reported analyses, opinions, and conclusions are limited only by the reported assumptions and limiting conditions, and are our personal, unbiased professional analyses, opinions, and conclusions." He went on to say that "no one provided significant professional assistance to the person signing this report." (Emphasis supplied). This was untrue: the defendants' employees had provided the salient "assumption" on which the Analysis Of Economic Loss was based, and nothing played a more "significant" role in that analysis.

Mr. Dohmeyer attempted at his deposition to distance himself from the "Statement of Limiting Conditions" by claiming that the attachment was "boilerplate that we use in . . . all of our assignments," and that the Appraisal Certification wasn't particularly meaningful since his report was not a business appraisal, but an economic loss analysis. (Dohmeyer deposition at 21, [*821] 15-17). In his belatedly filed Declaration, he said that the [**73] appraisal certification was attached in error to the Analysis. Id. at 2.

Some six months after the deposition, Loeffel filed the instant motion and raised the issue of the non-compliance with Rule 26(a)(2)(B). In response, the defendants filed a nine-page declaration from Mr. Dohmeyer and a paragraph from a book on valuation by Sharron Pratt. The breezy squib cites no authority, either scholarly or legal for its conclusion. Ms. Pratt, according to her internet site, is the owner of Business Valuation Resources, a company dedicated to "high-quality valuation related resources" for all manner of professionals.<sup>24</sup>

The Declaration echoed much of Mr. Dohmeyer's deposition testimony. But it went substantially beyond [**74] that and attempted to make the case against Mr. Wiersema that the February 27th "critique" did not. Not surprisingly, Loeffel objects to the Declaration and to the squib from Ms. Pratt's book.

The Declaration contended that, as a certified public accountant, Mr. Wiersema lacked "valuation expertise" and thus, wrongly concluded that Loeffel's economic loss exceeded the pre-damaged value of the company. (Declaration, P 9). This opinion appeared nowhere in the February 27, 2004 letter. Ms. Pratt apparently agrees, but the one paragraph excerpt relied on by Mr. Dohmeyer, contains no citation of authority and nothing beyond her ipse dixit that "it is axiomatic that the present value of lost future profits can be equal to but not greater than, the total value of the enterprise had the damaging event not occurred." However, there immediately follows this sentence, which supports Mr. Wiersema's position: "however, I have seen 'experts' testify to damage sums many times any reasonable value for the entire entity." Apparently some judges have admitted as proper expert opinion the conclusion denounced by Mr. Dohmeyer.

He again repeated in his Declaration that there was no authoritative [**75] test for assessing damages when a machine operated at a level below specifications. (Declaration, P 19). This opinion seems at odds with the defendants' Response, which insists that the measure of damages is properly set forth in Moorman. More importantly, Mr. Dohmeyer contradicted his deposition testimony by claiming that the Analysis of Economic Loss relied upon a "benefit of the bargain" theory and took into account the production rates provided by the contract specifications. (Declaration, P 23). To say this contradicts his previous position is an understatement; he testified that the specifications were "inherently not relevant" and that he "didn't consider them one way or another." (Dohmeyer Dep., at 35, 83).

The defendants do not attempt to justify the omissions and deficiencies in the February 27th critique or in Mr. Dohmeyer's curriculum vitae; nor do they attempt to argue that the omissions are harmless. Instead, they say that Mr. Dohmeyer has "satisfied all the requirements of Rule 26," and that Loeffel's only objection relates to the "format" of the February 27th letter. (Response at 17). Any argument of harmlessness is therefore forfeited. See Hammel v. Eau Galle Cheese Factory, 407 F.3d 852, 869 (7th Cir. 2005); [**76] Musser v. Gentiva Health Servs., 356 F.3d 751, 758 (7th Cir. 2004); Rule 37(c)(1). Federal [*822] Rules of Civil Procedure. To the extent the Declaration repeats Mr. Dohmeyer's deposition testimony, it is irrelevant. To the extent it seeks to explain the basis for his opinions either in his deposition or in his reports, it is improper and untimely and will not be considered. Bailey v. Allgas, 148 F.Supp.2d at 1236. Cf. Dura Automotive.

<sup>24</sup> The defendants' Response calls Ms. Pratt a "highly regarded economist," but does not identify the basis for the representation. (Response at 7). An internet search reveals that she writes on valuation of businesses. www.bvresources.com. Ms. Pratt is apparently in the same field as Mr. Dohmeyer.

IV

CONCLUSION

The plaintiff's motion to bar the testimony of Mr. Dohmeyer [77] is GRANTED, and the plaintiff's motion to strike exhibits A and C to the Response [93] is also GRANTED. The defendants' unamplified request for a "full Daubert hearing to determine the admissibility of Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony," made in the last sentence of their Response brief, is denied. I have before me the deposition of Mr. Dohmeyer and his reports. No more is needed to determine reliability. Kumho Tire, 526 U.S. at 152; Group Health Plan, Inc. v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 344 F.3d 753, 761 n.3 (8th Cir. 2003); Oddi v. Ford Motor Co., 234 F.3d 136, 153-154 \(3rd Cir.\), [**77] cert. denied 532 U.S. 921, 149 L. Ed. 2d 287, 121 S. Ct. 1357 (2000); Jaros v. DuPont \(In re Hanford Nuclear Reservation Litig.\), 292 F.3d 1124, 1138-39 \(9th Cir. 2002\); Kirstein v. Parks Corp., 159 F.3d 1065, 1067 \(7th Cir. 1998\). They will not be permitted to "return to the drawing board" to restructure Mr. Dohmeyer's testimony. Gregory, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24730, 2002 WL 31972165 at \*3.

DATE: July 22, 2005

ENTERED:

Jeffery Cole

UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

---

End of Document

Polygram Holding, Inc. v. FTC

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

September 16, 2004, Argued ; July 22, 2005, Decided

No. 03-1293

Reporter

416 F.3d 29 *; 367 U.S. App. D.C. 367 **; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 14931 ***; 2005-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,870

Polygram Holding, Inc., et al., Petitioners v. Federal Trade Commission, Respondent

Prior History: [***1] On Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

In re Polygram Holding, 2003 FTC LEXIS 155 \(F.T.C., Oct. 14, 2003\)

Disposition: Petition for review denied.

Core Terms

---

album, concert, advertising, FTC, moratorium, consumers, rule of reason, procompetitive, condemned, output, anticompetitive, discounting, products, competitors, promoted, prices, joint venture, distribute, antitrust, courts, anti trust law, learning, restrain, reasons

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Judicial Review

HN1[] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Judicial Review

The Federal Trade Commission's findings of fact are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. 15 U.S.C.S. § 45\(c\). The legal issues are for the courts to resolve, although even in considering such issues the courts are to give some deference to the Commission's informed judgment that a particular commercial practice is to be condemned as unfair.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There are two complimentary categories of antitrust analysis. In the first category are agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality; they are illegal per se. In the second category are agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts particular to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se analysis, which requires courts to generalize about the utility of a challenged practice, reduces the cost of decisionmaking but correspondingly raises the total cost of error by making it more likely some practices will be held unlawful in circumstances where they are harmless or even procompetitive. The converse, increased litigation cost but reduced cost of error, obtains under the rule of reason, which requires an exhaustive inquiry into all the myriad factors bearing on whether the conduct is on balance anticompetitive or procompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Rather than focusing upon the category to which a particular restraint should be assigned, judicial precedent emphasizes the basic point that under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 the essential inquiry is whether the challenged restraint enhances competition. In order to make that determination, a court must make an enquiry meet for the case, looking to the circumstances, details, and logic of a restraint, which in some cases may not require a full-blown market analysis. The object is to see whether the experience of the market has been so clear, or necessarily will be, that a confident conclusion about the principle tendency of a restriction will follow from a quick (or at least quicker) look, in place of a more sedulous one. And of course what the court sees may vary over time, if rule-of-reason analyses in case after case reach identical conclusions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

At bottom, the Sherman Act requires the court to ascertain whether the challenged restraint hinders competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

If, based upon economic learning and the experience of the market, it is obvious that a restraint of trade likely impairs competition, then the restraint is presumed unlawful and, in order to avoid liability, the defendant must either identify some reason the restraint is unlikely to harm consumers or identify some competitive benefit that plausibly offsets the apparent or anticipated harm.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

HN7 Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

A restraint on trade cannot be justified solely on the ground that it increases the profitability of the enterprise that introduces the new product, regardless whether that enterprise is a joint venture or a solo undertaking.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

In any case in which competitors are able to increase the price level or to curtail production by agreement, it could be argued that the agreement has the effect of making the market more attractive to potential new entrants. If that potential justifies horizontal agreements among competitors imposing one kind of voluntary restraint or another on their competitive freedom, it would seem to follow that the more successful an agreement is in raising the price level, the safer it is from antitrust attack.

Counsel: Bradley S. Phillips argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Glenn D. Pomerantz and Stephen E. Morrissey.

John F. Daly, Deputy Special Counsel for Litigation, Federal Trade Commission, argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Michele Arington, Attorney, Susan A. Creighton, Director, and Richard B. Dagen, Assistant Director.

Judges: Before: GINSBURG, Chief Judge, and EDWARDS and ROGERS, Circuit Judges. Opinion for the Court filed by Chief Judge GINSBURG.

Opinion by: Ginsburg

Opinion

---

[**369] [*31] Ginsburg, CHIEF JUDGE: PolyGram Holding, Inc. and several of its affiliates petition for review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission holding PolyGram violated § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45. As detailed below, PolyGram entered into an agreement with Warner Communications, Inc. to distribute the recording of a concert to be given by "The Three Tenors" in 1998. The two companies later entered into a separate agreement to suspend, for ten weeks, advertising and discounting of two earlier Three Tenors concert albums, one distributed by PolyGram [***2] and the other by Warner. The Commission held the latter agreement unlawful and prohibited PolyGram from entering into any similar agreement in the future. We agree with the Commission that, although not a per se violation of antitrust law, the agreement was presumptively unlawful and PolyGram failed to rebut that presumption. We therefore deny PolyGram's petition for review.

I. Background

Here are the facts as found by the Commission in its order and opinion of July 28, 2003. See In re PolyGram Holding, Inc., 2003 FTC LEXIS 120, Docket No. 9298 \(FTC\), 2003 WL 21770765 \(2003\), available at <http://www.ftc.gov/os/2003/07/polygramopinion.pdf> (hereinafter, FTC Op.). The Three Tenors -- Jose Carreras, Placido Domingo, and Luciano Pavarotti -- put on spectacular concerts coinciding with the World Cup soccer finals in 1990, 1994, and 1998. PolyGram distributed the recording of the 1990 concert, which became one of the best-selling classical albums of all time. FTC Op. at 5-6. Warner distributed the 1994 concert album, which also met with great success. Both albums remained on the top-ten classical list throughout 1994, 1995, and 1996. Id. at 6.

In late 1997 PolyGram and Warner agreed jointly [***3] to distribute the recording of The Three Tenors' July 1998 concert. Warner, which had the worldwide rights, retained the United States rights but licensed to PolyGram the exclusive right to distribute the 1998 album outside the United States, and the companies agreed to share equally the worldwide profit or loss on the project. FTC Op. at 8. The agreement also obligated PolyGram and Warner to consult with one another on all "marketing and promotional activities" for the 1998 concert album, but each company was free ultimately to pursue its own marketing strategy and to continue exploiting its earlier Three Tenors concert album without limitation. The agreement also provided that PolyGram and Warner would collaborate on the distribution of any future Three Tenors album released through August 2002. Id.

[*32] [**370] Representatives of PolyGram and Warner first met in January 1998 to discuss "marketing and operational issues." One of PolyGram's representatives voiced concern about the effect of marketing the earlier Three Tenors albums upon the prospects for the 1998 concert album and suggested the two companies impose an "advertising moratorium" surrounding the 1998 release, which was scheduled [***4] for August 1. According to notes of their next meeting (in March) PolyGram and Warner representatives agreed that "a big push" on the earlier albums "shouldn't take place before November 15." After that meeting, each company instructed its affiliates to cease all promotion of the 1990 and 1994 Three Tenors albums for approximately six weeks, beginning in late July or early August. FTC Op. at 8.

Apparently Warner's overseas division did not get the message because in May it announced an aggressive marketing campaign, scheduled to run through December, to discount and to promote the 1994 album throughout Europe. When PolyGram learned of this, it threatened to "retaliate" by cutting the price of its 1990 album. Accusations then flew between the two companies about which had started the imminent price war. Meanwhile, in June the promoter of The Three Tenors concert informed PolyGram and Warner that the repertoire for the 1998 concert would substantially overlap those of the 1990 and 1994 concerts, which in the view of both PolyGram and Warner executives jeopardized the commercial viability of the forthcoming concert album. FTC Op. at 8-9.

By the time The Three Tenors performed in Paris [***5] on July 10, PolyGram and Warner had exchanged letters reaffirming their commitment to suspend advertising and discounting the 1990 and 1994 concert albums and agreeing the moratorium would run from August 1 through October 15. About a week later, however, PolyGram's Senior Marketing Director, who had passed on the details of the agreement to PolyGram's General Counsel, sent a memorandum around the company stating, "Contrary to any previous suggestion, there has been no agreement with [Warner] in relation to the pricing and marketing of the previous Three Tenors albums." Warner followed suit on August 10, sending a letter to PolyGram repudiating any pricing or advertising restrictions relative to its 1994 album. At the same time, however, PolyGram and Warner executives privately assured one another their respective companies intended to honor the agreement, and in fact the companies did substantially comply with the agreement through October 15, 1998. FTC Op. at 9.

In 2001 the Commission issued complaints against PolyGram and Warner charging that, by entering into the moratorium agreement, the companies had engaged in an unfair method of competition in violation of § 5 of the FTC Act. [***6] Warner soon consented to an order barring it from making any similar agreement in the future.

FTC Op. at 3 n.3. PolyGram contested the charge and, after a trial, an Administrative Law Judge ruled that PolyGram had violated § 5 and ordered PolyGram, like Warner, to refrain from making any similar agreement in the future.

The Commission affirmed the order of the ALJ. After first observing (correctly) that the analysis under § 5 of the FTC Act is the same in this case as it would be under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, FTC Op. at 13 n.11, the Commission revived the analytic framework it had first announced In re Massachusetts Board of Optometry, 110 F.T.C. 549 (1988), which begins with the proposition that conduct "inherently suspect" as a restraint of competition -- that is, conduct that "appears [\[\*33\]](#) [\[\*\*371\]](#) likely, absent an efficiency justification, to restrict competition and decrease output" -- is to be presumed unreasonable. FTC Op. at 22-24. Only if the competitive harm wrought by the restraint is not readily apparent from the nature of the restraint itself, or the charged party offers a plausible competitive justification for the restraint, [\[\*\*\*7\]](#) must the Commission, under this approach, engage in a more searching analysis of the market circumstances surrounding the restraint. Id. at 29.

Here the Commission determined the agreement between PolyGram and Warner to prohibit discounts and advertising for a time was indeed "inherently suspect" because such restraints by their nature tend to raise prices and to reduce output. FTC Op. at 35-40. The Commission then looked to PolyGram to identify some competitive justification for the restraint. Id. at 40. PolyGram objected that the Commission must first offer some evidence the agreement actually harmed competition. In any event, PolyGram argued, the agreement was justified because it prevented PolyGram and Warner, as distributors of the 1990 and 1994 albums, respectively, from free-riding upon -- and thereby diminishing -- each other's efforts to promote the 1998 album; hence the restraints created an incentive for each company vigorously to promote the 1998 album and thereby increased output. The Commission rejected that purported efficiency justification as legally insufficient. In the Commission's view, the moratorium agreement could not have had any such procompetitive [\[\*\*\*8\]](#) effect but instead simply shielded the 1998 concert album from the competition of the two earlier albums. Id. at 41-48.

Observing that under the analytic framework of Mass. Board it could have stopped there, the Commission nonetheless went on to rule that, even if PolyGram's efficiency justification were cognizable, the facts simply did not support it, FTC Op. at 50; indeed, the Commission found the moratorium had no effect upon the degree to which the companies promoted the 1998 album and did not make the joint venturers any more likely to release a future Three Tenors album. Id. at 56-57. Thus, upon closer inspection, the Commission confirmed its initial conclusion that the moratorium agreement was an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and, hence, an unfair method of competition in violation of § 5 of the FTC Act. Id. at 58.

II. Analysis

PolyGram raises four objections to the decision of the Commission: First, the Commission should not have rejected the free-rider justification as legally insufficient because the moratorium agreement had a legitimate, procompetitive purpose reasonably related to the joint venture. Second, [\[\*\*\*9\]](#) the Commission was required to show the restraints actually harmed competition before it could require PolyGram to proffer a competitive justification. Third, the Commission's findings concerning the competitive impact of the restraint were not supported by substantial evidence. Finally, there is no danger the same conduct will recur, so the Commission's prohibitory remedy is unreasonable.

HN1  The Commission's findings of fact are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. See 15 U.S.C. § 45\(c\). The legal issues are "for the courts to resolve, although even in considering such issues the courts are to give some deference to the Commission's informed judgment that a particular commercial practice is to be condemned as 'unfair.'" FTC v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 454, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1987) (IFD).

The Supreme Court's approach to evaluating a § 1 claim has gone through a transition over the last twenty-five years, from [\[\*34\]](#) [\[\*\*372\]](#) a dichotomous categorical approach to a more nuanced and case-specific inquiry. In 1978, just before the transition began, the Court summarized its doctrine as follows:

HN2[<sup>10</sup>] There are ... two complimentary [***10] categories of antitrust analysis. In the first category are agreements whose nature and necessary effect are so plainly anticompetitive that no elaborate study of the industry is needed to establish their illegality -- they are "illegal per se." In the second category are agreements whose competitive effect can only be evaluated by analyzing the facts particular to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed.

Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 (1978).

Courts and commentators have recognized the trade-offs inherent in each category. HN3[<sup>11</sup>] Per se analysis, which requires courts to generalize about the utility of a challenged practice, reduces the cost of decision-making but correspondingly raises the total cost of error by making it more likely some practices will be held unlawful in circumstances where they are harmless or even procompetitive. See, e.g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Med. Soc., 457 U.S. 332, 344, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982) ("For the sake of business certainty and litigation efficiency, we have tolerated the invalidation of some agreements that a fullblown inquiry [***11] might have proved to be reasonable"); Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P1509c (2d ed. 2003) (observing that per se analysis "dispenses with costly proof requirements, such as proof of market power," but consequently "produces a certain number of false positives"). The converse -- increased litigation cost but reduced cost of error -- obtains under the rule of reason, which requires an exhaustive inquiry into all the myriad factors "bearing on whether the conduct is on balance anticompetitive or procompetitive." Donald F. Turner, The Durability, Relevance, and Future of American Antitrust Policy, 75 CAL. L. REV. 797, 800 (1987); see Frank H. Easterbrook, The Limits of Antitrust, 63 Tex. L. Rev. 1, 12-13 (1984) ("When everything is relevant, nothing is dispositive .... Litigation costs are the product of vague rules combined with high stakes, and nowhere is that combination more deadly than in antitrust litigation under the Rule of Reason").

Since Professional Engineers the Supreme Court has steadily moved away from the dichotomous approach -- under which every restraint of trade is either unlawful per se, and [***12] hence not susceptible to a procompetitive justification, or subject to full-blown rule-of-reason analysis -- toward one in which the extent of the inquiry is tailored to the suspect conduct in each particular case. For instance, the Court did not hold unlawful per se an agreement limiting the number of football games each participating college could sell to television, which agreement was challenged in NCAA v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 100, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984) (recognizing but declining to apply doctrine that "horizontal price-fixing and output limitation are ordinarily condemned as a matter of law under an 'illegal per se' approach"); or the refusal of an organization of dentists to provide x-rays to dental insurers, which was at issue in IFD, 476 U.S. at 458 ("Although this Court has in the past stated that group boycotts are unlawful per se, we decline to resolve this case by forcing the Federation's policy into the 'boycott' pigeonhole and invoking the per se rule") (citations omitted). Compare, e.g., United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940) (price-fixing per [***13] se unlawful); and Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, [*35] [*373] 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959) (group boycott per se unlawful).

At the same time, however, in NCAA and IFD the Court did not insist upon the elaborate market analysis ordinarily required under the rule of reason to prove the defendant had market power and the restraint it imposed had an anticompetitive effect. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109-10 (rule of reason analysis unnecessary in light of district court's finding price and output not responsive to demand); IFD, 476 U.S. at 459 ("While this is not price fixing as such, no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement"). The Court instead adopted an intermediate inquiry, since dubbed the "quick look," to evaluate horizontal restraints of trade. See, e.g., Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P1911a.

It would be somewhat misleading, however, to say the "quick look" is just a new category of analysis intermediate in complexity between "per se" condemnation and full-blown "rule of reason" treatment, for that would suggest the Court has [***14] moved from a dichotomy to a trichotomy, when in fact it has backed away from any reliance upon fixed categories and toward a continuum. The Court said as much in California Dental Association v. FTC:

The truth is that our categories of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like "per se," "quick look," and "rule of reason" tend to make them appear. We have recognized, for example, that there is often no bright line separating per se from Rule of Reason analysis, since considerable inquiry into market conditions may be required before the application of any so-called "per-se" condemnation is justified.

526 U.S. 756, 779, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935, 119 S. Ct. 1604 \(1999\).

HN4[] Rather than focusing upon the category to which a particular restraint should be assigned, therefore, the Court emphasized the basic point that under § 1 the essential inquiry is "whether ... the challenged restraint enhances competition." Id. at 779-80 (quoting NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104). In order to make that determination, a court must make "an enquiry meet for the case, looking to the circumstances, details, and logic of a restraint," id. at 781, which in [***15] some cases may not require a full-blown market analysis. The Court continued:

The object is to see whether the experience of the market has been so clear, or necessarily will be, that a confident conclusion about the principle tendency of a restriction will follow from a quick (or at least quicker) look, in place of a more sedulous one. And of course what we see may vary over time, if rule-of-reason analyses in case after case reach identical conclusions.

Id.; cf. United States v. Microsoft, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330, 253 F.3d 34, 84 \(D.C. Cir. 2001\) (declining to condemn per se tying arrangements involving platform software products because there was "no close parallel in prior antitrust cases" and "simplistic application of per se tying rules carries a serious risk of harm").

In this case, as we have said, the Commission analyzed PolyGram's conduct under the legal framework it had devised in Mass. Board (1988), which it maintains is consistent with the Supreme Court's teaching of more than a decade later in California Dental (1999). FTC Op. at 28-29. The Mass. Board analysis proceeds in several distinct steps: First, the Commission [***16] must determine whether it is obvious from the nature of the challenged conduct that it will likely harm consumers. If so, then the restraint is deemed "inherently [*36] [**374] suspect" and, unless the defendant comes forward with some plausible (and legally cognizable) competitive justification for the restraint, summarily condemned. "Such justifications," the Commission explained, "may consist of plausible reasons why practices that are competitively suspect as a general matter may not be expected to have adverse consequences in the context of the particular market in question, or they may consist of reasons why the practices are likely to have beneficial effects for consumers." Id. at 29.

If the defendant does offer such an explanation, then the Commission "must address the justification" in one of two ways. First, the Commission may explain why it can confidently conclude, without adducing evidence, that the restraint very likely harmed consumers. Id. at 33-34. Alternatively, the Commission may provide the tribunal with sufficient evidence to show that anticompetitive effects are in fact likely. Id. at 33. If the Commission succeeds in either way, then the evidentiary burden shifts [***17] to the defendant to show the restraint in fact does not harm consumers or has "procompetitive virtues" that outweigh its burden upon consumers. Id. at 34 n.45.

PolyGram argues the Commission's framework conflicts with Supreme Court precedent by condemning a restraint that is not per se illegal without the Commission having to prove the restraint actually harms competition. According to PolyGram, "proof of actual anticompetitive effect (or market power as its surrogate) is required in any Rule of Reason case."

For reasons we have already explained, we reject PolyGram's attempt to locate the appropriate analysis, and the concomitant burden of proof, by reference to the vestigial line separating per se analysis from the rule of reason. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P1511a ("judges and litigants too often assume erroneously that the classification, per se or rule of reason, necessarily determines what must or may be alleged and proved, made the subject of detailed findings, or submitted to the jury"). HN5[] At bottom, the Sherman Act requires the court to ascertain whether the challenged restraint hinders competition; the Commission's framework, at least as [***18] the Commission applied it in this case, does just that.

We therefore accept the Commission's analytical framework. HN6[] If, based upon economic learning and the experience of the market, it is obvious that a restraint of trade likely impairs competition, then the restraint is presumed unlawful and, in order to avoid liability, the defendant must either identify some reason the restraint is unlikely to harm consumers or identify some competitive benefit that plausibly offsets the apparent or anticipated harm. That much follows from the caselaw; for instance, in NCAA the Court held that a "naked restraint on price and output requires some competitive justification even in the absence of a detailed market analysis." 468 U.S. at 110. Similarly, in IFD, the Supreme Court ruled a horizontal agreement to withhold services could not be sustained because the dentists failed to advance any "credible argument" that "some countervailing procompetitive virtue ... [redeemed] an agreement limiting consumer choice by impeding the 'ordinary give and take of the market place.'" 476 U.S. at 459; see also California Dental, 526 U.S. at 771 (remanding for [***19] closer look at challenged advertising restrictions after concluding they "might plausibly be thought to have a net procompetitive effect, or possibly no effect at all on competition").

Although the Commission uses the term "inherently suspect" to describe those restraints that judicial experience and economic [*37] [**375] learning have shown to be likely to harm consumers, see FTC Op. at 29, we note that, under the Commission's own framework, the rebuttable presumption of illegality arises not necessarily from anything "inherent" in a business practice but from the close family resemblance between the suspect practice and another practice that already stands convicted in the court of consumer welfare. The Commission appears to acknowledge, as it must, that as economic learning and market experience evolve, so too will the class of restraints subject to summary adjudication. See California Dental, 526 U.S. at 781 (the ability of a court to draw "a confident conclusion about the principal tendency of a restraint ... may vary over time, if rule-of-reason analyses in case after case reach identical conclusions); see also Broad. Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 9, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\) [***20] ("it is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations"). See generally INDUSTRIAL CONCENTRATION: THE NEW LEARNING (Harvey J. Goldschmid, H. Michael Mann, J. Fred Weston, eds., 1974).

That said, we have no difficulty with the Commission's conclusion that PolyGram's agreement with Warner in all likelihood had a deleterious effect upon consumers -- unless, that is, PolyGram comes forward with some plausible explanation to the contrary. An agreement between joint venturers to restrain price cutting and advertising with respect to products not part of the joint venture looks suspiciously like a naked price fixing agreement between competitors, which would ordinarily be condemned as per se unlawful. The Supreme Court has recognized time and again that agreements restraining autonomy in pricing and advertising impede the "ordinary give and take of the market place." IFD, 476 U.S. at 459; see also NCAA, 468 U.S. at 107 ("restrictions on price and output are the paradigmatic examples of restraints of trade that the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit"); Bates v. State Bar of Ariz., 433 U.S. 350, 364, 53 L. Ed. 2d 810, 97 S. Ct. 2691 \(1977\) [***21] (advertising "serves to inform the public of the availability, nature, and prices of products and services, and thus performs an indispensable role in the allocation of resources in a free enterprise system").

PolyGram's fate in this case therefore rests upon the plausibility of the sole competitive justification it proffered for the moratorium agreement, namely, that the restrictions on discounting and advertising enhanced the long-term profitability of all three concert albums and promoted the "Three Tenors" brand. According to PolyGram, each company was concerned the other would "free ride" on the promotional activities of the joint venture by promoting its own earlier concert album; as a result fewer Three Tenors albums would be sold overall and the joint venture would be less likely to create future products, such as a "greatest hits" album or a boxed set. Thus, PolyGram likens the moratorium agreement here to the restraint at issue in Polk Brothers, Inc. v. Forest City Enterprises, 776 F.2d 185 \(7th Cir. 1985\), where two potential retail competitors collaborated to build a store offering some of each company's products but agreed not to sell competing products [***22] at the new store. Because the restraint arguably promoted productivity and output by controlling each participant's ability to free-ride on the other's promotional efforts, the court, rather than condemning the restraint summarily, went on to evaluate it under the rule of reason. Id. at 190.

At first glance PolyGram's contention has some force; the moratorium appears likely to have mitigated the "spillover" effects that could be expected to follow an [*38] [**376] aggressive launch of the 1998 album. Absent the moratorium, that is, a consumer, after learning of the new album through the joint venture's advertising, might decide that he would be just as happy with an older concert album, especially if the older album were then available at a discount. The "free-riding" to be eliminated by the moratorium agreement, however, was nothing more than the competition of products that were not part of the joint undertaking. Why not an agreement by which PolyGram and

Warner would eliminate advertising and price competition on all their records for a time while they focused exclusively upon promoting the new Three Tenors album? The "procompetitive" justification PolyGram offers is "nothing [***23] less than a frontal assault on the basic policy of the Sherman Act." Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Engineers, 435 U.S. at 695.

To take the Commission's example, if General Motors were vigorously to advertise the release of a new model SUV, other SUV manufacturers would no doubt reap some of the benefit of GM's efforts. FTC Op. at 43. But that would not mean General Motors and its competitors could lawfully agree to restrict prices and advertising on existing SUV models in return for General Motors giving its rivals a share of its profit on the new model. Nor would an agreement to restrain prices and advertising on existing SUVs be lawful if General Motors were to release the new model SUV as a joint venture with one of its competitors. Id. at 45. HN7↑ A restraint cannot be justified solely on the ground that it increases the profitability of the enterprise that introduces the new product, regardless whether that enterprise is a joint venture or a solo undertaking. And it simply does not matter whether the new SUV would have been profitable absent the restraint; if the only way a new product can profitably be introduced is to restrain the legitimate competition of older products, [***24] then one must seriously wonder whether consumers are genuinely benefitted by the new product. As the Supreme Court said in Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 649, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, 100 S. Ct. 1925 (1980),

HN8↑ in any case in which competitors are able to increase the price level or to curtail production by agreement, it could be argued that the agreement has the effect of making the market more attractive to potential new entrants. If that potential justifies horizontal agreements among competitors imposing one kind of voluntary restraint or another on their competitive freedom, it would seem to follow that the more successful an agreement is in raising the price level, the safer it is from antitrust attack. Nothing could be more inconsistent with our cases.

See also Law v. NCAA, 134 F.3d 1010, 1023 (10th Cir. 1998) ("While increasing output, creating operating efficiencies, making a new product available, enhancing service or quality, and widening consumer choice have been accepted by courts as justifications for otherwise anticompetitive agreements, mere profitability or cost savings have not qualified as a defense under the antitrust [***25] laws").

In sum, because PolyGram has failed to identify any competitive justification for its agreement with Warner to refrain from advertising or discounting their competitive Three Tenors products, we hold it violated § 5 of the FTC Act. Hence, we need not go on to determine whether the Commission's findings of fact concerning actual competitive harm are supported by substantial evidence.

Finally, we hold the remedy ordered by the Commission was reasonable. The Commission found there was a significant risk that, if not prohibited from doing so, PolyGram would enter into similar arrangements [*39] [**377] in the future. That determination is supported by substantial evidence. The record shows the condition that gave rise to the moratorium agreement -- namely, the company "feared that a new release by one of [its] recording artists may lose sales to the artist's older albums owned by a competitor," FTC Op. at 59 -- is a recurrent one in the record industry; therefore, PolyGram would have the same incentive in the future to enter into other agreements to restrain advertising and price discounting.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, PolyGram's petition for review [***26] is Denied.

Kendall v. Visa U.S.A. Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

July 25, 2005, Decided

No. C 04-04276 JSW

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21449 *; 2005 WL 2216941

SHERI L. KENDALL, et al., Plaintiffs, v. VISA U.S.A. INC., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Claim dismissed by, Motion to strike granted by Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21450 \(N.D. Cal., July 25, 2005\)

Prior History: Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53690 \(N.D. Cal., Mar. 29, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

allegations, Sherman Act, merchant, banks, discount, motion to dismiss, Consortiums, interchange, antitrust, acquiring, leave to amend, card

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim will be denied unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him or her to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN2 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Dismissal is proper only where there is no cognizable legal theory or an absence of sufficient facts alleged to support a cognizable legal theory.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN4 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court is not bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

For private antitrust claims, if the facts do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, the plaintiffs will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, plaintiffs must allege: (1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain competition; and (3) which actually injures competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Sherman Act, Claims

To prevail on a § 1 Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, claim, a plaintiff must establish a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful result.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN8 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Plaintiffs may not simply recite legal conclusions in an effort to state a claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN9 [↓] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A court is not bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN10 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A claimant must, at a minimum, sketch the outline of the antitrust violation with allegations of supporting factual detail.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN11 [↓] Price Discrimination, Defenses

No general principle of antitrust law forbids charging different prices to different customers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN12 [↓] Private Actions, Remedies

Threatened antitrust injury is a prerequisite to equitable relief.

Counsel: [*1] For Sheri L. Kendall, doing business as Bala Hair Salon, James Maser, Maiz Holding Company, on Behalf of Themselves & All Others Similarly Situated, doing business as Picante Cocina Restaurant, Plaintiffs: Richard Joseph Archer, Archer & Hansen, Occidental, CA; James Archer Kopcke, Golden & Kopcke, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Visa U.S.A. Inc., Defendant: Marie L. Fiala, Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mastercard International, Inc., Defendant: Gianluca Morello, Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, New York, NY; Jay Neil Fastow, Weil Gotshal & Manges LLP, New York, NY; Nancy Karen Raber, Clifford Chance US LLP, Palo Alto, CA; Wesley Railey Powell, Hunton & Williams LLP, New York, NY; Debra J. Pearlstein, Weil Gotshal & Manges LLP, New York, NY; Keila Doris Ravelo, Clifford Chance US LLP, New York, NY.

For Bank of America, N.A., a subsidiary of Bank of America Corporation, Defendant: Sonya D. Winner, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA; Tara M. Steeley, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA.

For Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., a subsidiary of Wells Fargo & Company, Defendant: J. Thomas Rosch, Latham & Watkins, San Francisco, CA; Joshua N. Holian, [*2] Latham & Watkins, San Francisco, CA.

For U.S. Bank, N.A., a subsidiary of U.S. Bancorp, Defendant: Michael C. Lueder, Foley & Lardner LLP, Milwaukee, WI; Eileen R. Ridley, Foley & Lardner, San Francisco, CA; Maurice J. McSweeney, Foley & Lardner, Milwaukee, WI.

For Jasa, Inc., Jasperson Sod Service, Randall Jasperson, Rookies, Inc., Miscellaneous: Kevin K. Eng, Markun Zusman & Compton LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: JEFFREY S. WHITE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JEFFREY S. WHITE

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING BANK DEFENDANTS' SECOND MOTION TO DISMISS WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND

Now before the Court is the second motion of defendants Bank of America, N.A., Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., and U.S. Bank, N.A. (the "Bank Defendants") to dismiss each of Plaintiffs' claims against them pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Having carefully read the parties' papers and considered the arguments and the relevant legal authority, the Court hereby GRANTS the Bank Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims against them without leave to amend.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs are various merchant, retail and service businesses [*3] who bring this action against Mastercard International, Inc. ("MASTERCARD"), VISA U.S.A., Inc. ("VISA"), and the Bank Defendants, who are credit card issuing and/or acquiring banks (collectively "Defendants"). Through their member banks, VISA and MASTERCARD issue various forms of payment cards. Member banks can issue VISA or MASTERCARD payment cards to consumers and set interest rates, fees, and other terms for cardholders. (First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), PP 8-11.) Member banks also individually contract with retailers on behalf of VISA or MASTERCARD to purchase payment card transactions. Id. Member banks may function as either "issuing" banks or "acquiring" banks, or both. Id.

Plaintiffs' claims are directed at payment card transaction fees, which include a "merchant discount fee," which is the transaction fee between the merchant and the acquiring bank, and an "interchange fee," which is the transaction fee between the acquiring bank and the issuing bank. (Id., PP 16-18.) In their first amended complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' act of setting merchant discount and interchange fees amounts to horizontal price fixing under Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust [*4] Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs again allege that Defendants' conduct violates Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26.

The Bank Defendants moved to dismiss the original complaint, challenging the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' allegations against them on the ground that Plaintiffs failed to allege the requisite anti-competitive conduct necessary to state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. In its order granting the Bank Defendants' first motion to dismiss, the Court found that the allegations in the original complaint were insufficient to state a claim under Section 1 because they did not allege an agreement, combination, or conspiracy by the Bank Defendants to fix prices. See Order dated March 29, 2005 ("Order") at 3, citing Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 507 \(9th Cir. 1989\).

On April 25, 2005, Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint. On June 3, 2005, the Bank Defendants moved to dismiss. The Court heard oral argument on the motion on July 8, 2005.

DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standard on Motion to Dismiss.

HN1[<sup>1</sup>] A motion to dismiss for failure to [*5] state a claim will be denied unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him or her to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). HN2[<sup>1</sup>] All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). HN3[<sup>1</sup>] Dismissal is proper only where there is no cognizable legal theory or an absence of sufficient facts alleged to support a cognizable legal theory. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001). HN4[<sup>1</sup>] The Court is not, however, bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation. Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209, 106 S. Ct. 2932 (1986); Arpin v. Santa Clara Transp. Agency, 261 F.3d 912, 923 (9th Cir. 2001) (internal quotation omitted). HN5[<sup>1</sup>] For private antitrust claims, if the facts "do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Rutman Wine Co. v. E&J Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987). [*6]

B. Section 1 Sherman Act Claim.

HN6[<sup>1</sup>] To state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Plaintiffs must allege: (1) an agreement or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain competition; and (3) which actually injures competition. Les Shockley Racing, 884 F.2d at 507 (citations omitted); see also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984). HN7[<sup>1</sup>] (to prevail on a Section 1 Sherman Act claim, a plaintiff must establish a "conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful result").

Plaintiffs have failed to remedy the deficiencies identified by the Court in its prior order. The Court stated clearly that the original complaint failed to allege that the Bank Defendants conspired or agreed to fix merchant discount or interchange fees, and explicitly stated that the allegations concerning the setting of a floor for the merchant discount fee did not, standing alone, constitute unlawful conduct on the part of the Bank Defendants. See Order at 4. In their amended complaint, Plaintiffs now allege that: [*7] (1) the Defendant Banks charge to Plaintiffs and other merchants "the amount of the interchange rate fixed by the Consortiums [VISA and MASTERCARD] as the merchant discount fee"; (2) the Defendant Banks adopt the interchange fees set by the Consortiums; (3) the acquiring banks "knowingly, intentionally and actively participated in an individual capacity with the Consortiums in following these fees"; and (4) there is an agreement among all financial institutions to charge a minimum merchant discount set by the Consortiums. (See FAC,-PP 8, 14, 11, 13(a).)

Plaintiffs contend that they have adequately alleged that the Bank Defendants "individually participated in setting the interchange fees with the Consortiums and then individually as an acquirer applied the particular category of fee to each of the merchants as a minimum discount fee." See Opp. Br. at 7. However, Plaintiffs have failed to allege that the Bank Defendants "knowingly, intentionally, and actively participated in an individual capacity" in setting those fees, as is required to state a claim under Section 1. See Kline v. Coldwell, Banker & Co., 508 F.2d 226, 232 (9th Cir. 1974). HN8[<sup>1</sup>] Plaintiffs may [*8] not simply recite legal conclusions in an effort to state a claim. See Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286; Arpin, 261 F.3d at 923 HN9[<sup>1</sup>] (a court is not bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegations). HN10[<sup>1</sup>] A claimant must, at a minimum, sketch the outline of the antitrust violation with allegations of supporting factual detail. See Les Shockley, 884 F.2d at 508; see also Rutman Wine Co., 829 F.2d at 736.

Contrary to Plaintiffs' contentions, the foregoing revised allegations are insufficient to state a claim against the Bank Defendants under Section 1 because they still fail to allege an agreement, combination, or conspiracy by the Bank

Defendants to fix prices. See Les Shockley, 884 F.2d at 507. In other words, there are no allegations that, as part of the Bank Defendants' participation in the management of, or their proprietary interest in, VISA or MASTERCARD, the Bank Defendants "knowingly, intentionally and actively participated in an individual capacity in the alleged scheme" to fix the interchange fee or the merchant discount fee. Merely charging, adopting [*9] or following the fees allegedly set by the Consortiums is insufficient as a matter of law to state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>1</sup>

[*10] To the extent Plaintiffs attempt to aver an independent third cause of action for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act under a "consortium marketing" theory, this allegation fails for the same reasons stated herein. The allegations relating to price differentials between customers does not state a claim for an antitrust violation. See Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 887 \(9th Cir. 1982\); USM Corp. v. SPS Technologies, Inc., 694 F.2d 505, 512 \(7th Cir. 1982\) HN11 [↑] ("No general principle of antitrust law forbids charging different prices to different customers").

Based on the foregoing, Plaintiffs' Section 1 Sherman Act claims against the Bank Defendants are DISMISSED without leave to amend.

C. Section 16 Clayton Act Claim.

Because Plaintiffs' have failed to state a claim under Section 1 of Sherman Act against the Bank Defendants', Plaintiffs' fourth claim for relief, under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, predicated upon a violation Section 1 of the Sherman Act, is also dismissed without leave to amend. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\) [*11] HN12 [↑] (threatened antitrust injury is a prerequisite to equitable relief); see also Lucas Auto. Eng'g, 140 F.3d 1228, 1234-35.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Bank Defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED without leave to amend.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: July 25, 2005

/s/ Jeffrey S. White

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

---

<sup>1</sup> In this regard, Plaintiffs' somewhat premature motion for leave to file a motion for reconsideration of this Order indicates that a number of members of the Board of Directors of the Consortiums is comprised of bank members. (See Sheedy Deposition at 46-47; Jonas Deposition at 44-45). Plaintiffs, however, have still failed to allege that the bank members knowingly, intentionally or actively participated in the setting of the interchange fees and, after many opportunities to amend and to plead sufficient facts, Plaintiffs have again apparently conducted no discovery to demonstrate such necessary facts nor have they pled the requisite facts to establish a claim against the Bank Defendants. In addition, Plaintiffs were admonished by this Court upon granting the Bank Defendants' first motion to dismiss that Plaintiffs must conduct a reasonable inquiry of the underlying factual and legal grounds supporting their claims before amending. See Order at 4. Because the first amended complaint represents the fifth attempt to allege sufficient facts to support claims against the Defendant Banks (including the three complaints filed in Reyn's on the same basic theories and two attempts in this matter), the Court, in its discretion, finds that amendment under these particular circumstances would be futile and grants the present motion without leave to amend.

Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

July 25, 2005, Decided

No. C 04-04276 JSW

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21450 *

SHERI L. KENDALL, et al., Plaintiffs, v. VISA U.S.A. INC., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Affirmed by Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 5032 \(9th Cir. Cal., Mar. 7, 2008\)

Prior History: Kendall v. Visa U.S.A. Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21449 \(N.D. Cal., July 25, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

merchant, discount, acquirers, Consortiums, antitrust, interchange, purchasers, allegations, card, discount rate, amended complaint, motion to dismiss, cause of action, Sherman Act, indirect, banks, indirectly, estoppel, conclusory allegation, prior litigation, leave to amend, collateral, overcharge, network, member bank

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Banking Law > Bank Activities > General Overview

Immigration Law > Admission of Immigrants & Nonimmigrants > Visa Eligibility & Issuance > Issuance of Visas

HN1 Banking Law, Bank Activities

In a credit card system, the issuing bank rather than the merchant bears the risk of nonpayment by the cardholder.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN2 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim will be denied unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him or her to relief. All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Dismissal is proper only where there is no cognizable legal theory or an absence of sufficient facts alleged to support a cognizable legal theory. The court is not, however, bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

For private antitrust claims, if the facts do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., the plaintiffs will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Immaterial Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Strike > Scandalous Matters

HN4 Motions to Strike, Immaterial Matters

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\) provides that a court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter. Immaterial matter is that which has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded. Impertinent material consists of statements that do not pertain, or are not necessary to the issues in question. Motions to strike are regarded with disfavor because they are often used as delaying tactics and because of the limited importance of pleadings in federal practice. The possibility that issues will be unnecessarily complicated or that superfluous pleadings will cause the trier of fact to draw unwarranted inferences at trial is the type of prejudice that is sufficient to support the granting of a motion to strike.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN5 Private Actions, Standing

The United States Supreme Court in Illinois Brick, in an effort to increase effectiveness and deterrent power of private treble damages suits which are vital to the enforcement of the antitrust laws, has held that recovery for damage incurred by indirect purchasers is barred. The Court has held that permitting the use of pass-on theories essentially would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers. However appealing that attempt to allocate the overcharge might seem in theory, it would add whole new dimensions of complexity to treble-damages suits and seriously undermine their effectiveness. Courts are not permitted to determine what portion of an illegal overcharge was passed on and what part was absorbed by the middlemen because such an analysis would involve all the evidentiary and economic complexities that Illinois Brick clearly forbade.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN6 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Dismissal of claims is proper where there is an absence of facts alleged sufficient to support a cognizable legal theory. The court is not bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation. For purposes of deciding a motion to dismiss, the court does not have to accept every allegation in the complaint as true in considering the sufficiency of the allegations; rather, the court should examine whether conclusory allegations follow from the description of facts as alleged by the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN7 Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Collateral estoppel bars the relitigation of an issue that is: (1) identical to an issue; (2) actually litigated and decided in prior litigation; when (3) the determination of the issue in the prior litigation was critical and necessary to support the judgment rendered in the prior litigation. The burden to demonstrate the presence of those elements is on the party seeking to establish collateral estoppel effect. Further, the factors are applied strictly. It is not sufficient that an issue is factually similar to the one in an earlier case; to satisfy the collateral estoppel factors, the issues must be identical and involve the same facts and surrounding context.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN8 Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

Indirect purchasers can sue for damages if there is no realistic possibility that the direct purchaser will sue over the antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The allegation of price differentials between customers does not state a claim for an antitrust violation.

Counsel: [*1] For Sheri L. Kendall, doing business as Bala Hair Salon, James Maser, Maiz Holding Company, on Behalf of Themselves & All Others Similarly Situated doing business as Picante Cocina Restaurant, Plaintiffs:

Richard Joseph Archer, Archer & Hansen, Occidental, CA; James Archer Kopcke, Golden & Kopcke, LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Visa U.S.A. Inc., Defendant: Marie L. Fiala, Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Mastercard International, Inc., Defendant: Gianluca Morello, Jay Neil Fastow, Debra J. Pearlstein, Weil, Gotshal & Manges LLP, New York, NY; Nancy Karen Raber, Clifford Chance US LLP, Palo Alto, CA; Wesley Railey Powell, Hunton & Williams LLP, New York, NY; Keila Doris Ravelo, Clifford Chance US LLP, New York, NY.

For Bank of America, N.A., a subsidiary of Bank of America Corporation, Defendant: Sonya D. Winner, Tara M. Steeley, Covington & Burling, San Francisco, CA.

For Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., a subsidiary of Wells Fargo & Company, Defendant: J. Thomas Rosch, Joshua N. Holian, Latham & Watkins, San Francisco, CA.

For U.S. Bank, N.A., a subsidiary of U.S. Bancorp, Defendant: Michael C. Lueder, Maurice J. McSweeney, Foley & Lardner [*2] LLP, Milwaukee, WI; Eileen R. Ridley, Foley & Lardner, San Francisco, CA.

For Jasa, Inc., Jasperson Sod Service, Randall Jasperson, Rookies, Inc., Miscellaneous: Kevin K. Eng, Markun Zusman & Compton LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: JEFFREY S. WHITE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JEFFREY S. WHITE

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING VISA U.S.A. INC.'S AND MASTERCARD'S MOTIONS TO DISMISS WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND

Now before the Court are the motions of defendant VISA U.S.A. Inc. ("VISA") and defendant MasterCard International Incorporated ("MASTERCARD") to dismiss and/or to strike each of Plaintiffs' claims against them pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) and 12\(f\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Having carefully read the parties' papers and considered the arguments and the relevant legal authority, the Court hereby GRANTS VISA's and MASTERCARD's motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims without leave to amend.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs are various merchant, retail and service businesses who bring this action against VISA, MASTERCARD, and the Bank Defendants, who are credit card issuing and/or acquiring banks (collectively, "Defendants"). Through their member banks, VISA and MASTERCARD [*3] (for ease of reference, the network defendants are referred to herein as "the Consortiums") issue various forms of payment cards. Member banks can issue VISA or MASTERCARD payment cards to consumers and set interest rates, fees, and other terms for cardholders. (First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), 118-11.) Member banks also individually contract with retailers on behalf of VISA or MASTERCARD to purchase payment card transactions. Id. Member banks may function as either "issuing" banks or "acquiring" banks, or both. Id.

When a customer pays with a payment card, the "acquiring" bank purchases the payment card receipt (or electronic equivalent) from the retailer for the amount of payment less a "merchant discount fee." Through the VISA or MASTERCARD system, the acquiring bank then receives reimbursement from the cardholder's "issuing" bank for the purchase price less an "interchange fee" - a preset fee consented to by all issuing and acquiring banks on the VISA or MASTERCARD network. The issuing bank then profits by the amount of the interchange fee, while the acquiring bank profits by the amount of the merchant discount fee less the interchange fee. HN1[ In a credit card system, the [*4] issuing bank rather than the merchant bears the risk of nonpayment by the cardholder. See National Bancard Corp. \(NaBanco\) v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 779 F.2d 592, 595 (11th Cir. 1986).

Plaintiffs' claims are directed at payment card transaction fees. In their first amended complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' conduct in setting merchant discount and interchange fees amounts to horizontal price fixing under Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 1. Plaintiffs again allege that Defendants' conduct violates Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26.

VISA moves to dismiss the amended complaint and/or to strike certain allegations pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) and 12\(f\). VISA contends that the first and second causes of action are barred by Illinois Brick v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), the third cause of action fails to state a claim, and the fourth cause of action does not provide an independent ground for relief.

MASTERCARD moves to dismiss the amended complaint on the basis that Plaintiffs lack standing to [*5] assert the first and second causes of action for violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act based on the alleged fixing of the interchange fee and the "Citigroup allegation," that the third cause of action fails to state an independent antitrust claim, and that the fourth cause of action fails to provide a basis for injunctive relief for a violation of another antitrust law.

Because the issues raised in both VISA and MASTERCARD's motions to dismiss overlap significantly, the Court will address the substance of the two motions together, and delineate the differences where appropriate.

DISCUSSION

A. Legal Standard on Motion to Dismiss and Motion to Strike.

HN2 A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim will be denied unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him or her to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). All allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). Dismissal is proper only where there is no cognizable legal [*6] theory or an absence of sufficient facts alleged to support a cognizable legal theory. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 (9th Cir. 2001). The Court is not, however, bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation.

Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209, 106 S. Ct. 2932 (1986); Arpin v. Santa Clara Transp. Agency, 261 F.3d 912, 923 (9th Cir. 2001) (internal quotation omitted). HN3 For private antitrust claims, if the facts "do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Rutman Wine Co. v. E&J Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 (9th Cir. 1987).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(f\) provides that HN4 a court may "order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Immaterial matter "is that which has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded." Cal. Dep't of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc., 217 F. Supp. 2d 1028, 1032 (C.D. Cal. 2002) [*7] (internal citations and quotations omitted). Impertinent material "consists of statements that do not pertain, or are not necessary to the issues in question." Id. Motions to strike are regarded with disfavor because they are often used as delaying tactics and because of the limited importance of pleadings in federal practice. Colaprico v. Sun Microsystems Inc., 758 F. Supp. 1335, 1339 (N.D. Cal. 1991). The possibility that issues will be unnecessarily complicated or that superfluous pleadings will cause the trier of fact to draw unwarranted inferences at trial is the type of prejudice that is sufficient to support the granting of a motion to strike. Cal. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control, 217 F. Supp. at 1028.

B. Standing Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

[HN5] The Supreme Court in Illinois Brick, in an effort to "increase effectiveness and deterrent power [of] private treble damages suits [which are] vital to the enforcement of the antitrust laws," held that recovery for damage incurred by "indirect purchasers" is barred. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736; see also Royal Printing Co. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 621 F.2d 323, 325-26 (9th Cir. 1980). [*8] The Court held that permitting the use of pass-on theories "essentially would transform treble-damages actions into massive efforts to apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers. However appealing this attempt to allocate the overcharge might seem in theory, it would add whole new dimensions of complexity to treble-damages suits and seriously undermine their effectiveness." Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 737. Courts are not permitted to determine "what portion of [an] illegal overcharge was 'passed on' . . . and what part was absorbed by the middlemen" because such an analysis would "involve all the evidentiary and economic complexities that Illinois Brick clearly forbade." Royal Printing, 621 F.2d at 327; see also Lucas Auto. Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1233 (9th Cir. 1998) ("The indirect purchaser rules serves to avoid the complications of apportioning overcharges between direct and indirect purchasers and to eliminate multiple recoveries.")<sup>1</sup>

[*9] 1. Allegations That the Consortiums Indirectly Set Merchant Discount Fees.

In their amended complaint, Plaintiffs attempt to aver that VISA and MASTERCARD somehow, indirectly, set the merchant discount fees. However, viewed in context, each allegation is constructed on the premise that VISA's and MASTERCARD's interchange fee sets the minimum, or floor, for the merchant discount fee. (See, e.g., FAC P8 ("a minimum merchant discount fee . . . is established, both directly and indirectly, by the Consortiums"); P9 (merchants are charged by the acquiring banks "the amount of the interchange rate fixed by the Consortiums as the minimum merchant discount fee"); P11 ("a merchant discount fee . . . is established, both directly and indirectly, by the Consortiums. Most of the merchant discount fee is the interchange rate which is established by the Consortiums.") (citation omitted).)

Plaintiffs' damages theory is based therefore on the allegation that the Consortiums set the interchange fee to acquirers who then pass it along to merchants as a component of what Plaintiffs allege to be inflated merchant discount rates. To the extent Plaintiffs contend that therefore the Consortiums [*10] "indirectly" set the merchant discount rates, those claims are precluded by operation of the Illinois Brick bar on recovery for indirect purchasers. See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746; see also Kansas v. Utilicorp United Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 216, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 (1990) (holding that there was no exception to Illinois Brick even where the direct purchaser almost certainly passed on the entire cost of alleged overcharge to the indirect purchaser); see also In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings in Petroleum Prods. Antitrust Litig., 691 F.2d 1335, 1342 (9th Cir. 1982) ("indirect purchasers

<sup>1</sup> In their original complaint in this matter, Plaintiffs alleged that VISA and MASTERCARD set only the interchange fee, which then "established" the basis or floor for the merchant discount rates. (See Complaint, P21(a).) Plaintiffs lack standing to assert such claims because they have not suffered the requisite antitrust injury from the Consortiums' setting of the interchange rate. See, e.g., Associated General Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983) (plaintiff failed to demonstrate requisite antitrust injury because it was "neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which the trade was restrained."); see also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 113, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986) ("a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage 'of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'") (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)).

This contention is the independent basis for much of MASTERCARD's current motion to dismiss. To the extent Plaintiffs' claims are premised upon the setting only of the interchange fee, MASTERCARD's argument is well-taken. However, the First Amended Complaint alleges that the Consortiums set, either directly or indirectly, the merchant discount rate, which, for the purpose of resolving the pending motions, is the more troubling of the allegations now before the Court.

of price-fixed goods may not maintain an antitrust damage action for overcharges passed on to them by direct purchasers from the defendant.")

2. Allegations That the Consortiums Directly Set Merchant Discount Fees.

In addition to the claims of indirect control over the merchant discount rates which are expressly precluded by the holding in Illinois Brick, Plaintiffs attempt to aver that VISA and MASTERCARD directly set the merchant discount rates. (See, e.g., FAC PP8-11, 16 ("minimum merchant discount fee ... is established [*11] . . . directly . . . by the Consortiums").)

First, in order to avoid the bar of Illinois Brick, Plaintiffs cannot allege that VISA and MASTERCARD directly negotiate with certain merchants to promote the Consortiums' acceptance in the marketplace. Plaintiffs have expressly excluded from the class all "merchants who negotiate merchant discounts directly with VISA and/or MASTERCARD or receive payments directly from them." (FAC, P16.) Those merchants that directly negotiate with the networks are explicitly excluded from the class of Plaintiffs and therefore, are not currently before the Court alleging an antitrust injury for the direct setting of the merchant discount rates by VISA or MASTERCARD.

Second, to the extent that Plaintiffs aver that the Consortiums directly set the merchant discount rates for those merchants in the plaintiff class, those allegations are conclusory. HN6 Dismissal of claims is proper where there is an absence of facts alleged sufficient to support a cognizable legal theory. Navarro, 250 F.3d at 732. The Court is not bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation. See, e.g., Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286; [*12] Arpin, 261 F.3d at 923. For purposes of deciding a motion to dismiss, the Court does not have to accept every allegation in the complaint as true in considering the sufficiency of the allegations; rather, the Court should examine whether conclusory allegations follow from the description of facts as alleged by the plaintiff. See Holden v. Hagopian, 978 F.2d 1115, 1121 (9th Cir. 1992).

In context, each time Plaintiffs aver that the Consortiums set the merchant discount fees directly, Plaintiffs quote United States v. VISA U.S.A., Inc. ("VISA I") in which the Southern District of New York court stated "merchant acceptance of a card brand is also defined and controlled at the system level and the merchant discount rate is established, directly and indirectly, by the networks." 163 F. Supp. 2d 322, 338 \(S.D. N.Y. 2001\) (citing the trial and deposition transcripts before that court); see FAC, PP8-11.

a. Estoppel Effect of Statement in VISA I.

Plaintiffs cite the decision by the New York court as evidence that the merchant discount fee is established, directly or indirectly, by the Consortiums. Plaintiffs, however, [*13] cannot rely on the collateral estoppel effect of the statement in that matter. HN7 Collateral estoppel bars the relitigation of an issue that is (1) identical to an issue (2) actually litigated and decided in prior litigation, when (3) the determination of the issue in the prior litigation was critical and necessary to support the judgment rendered in the prior litigation. Pool Water Prods. v. Olin Corp., 258 F.3d 1024, 1031 (9th Cir. 2001). The burden to demonstrate the presence of these elements is on the party seeking to establish collateral estoppel effect. Id. at 1033. Further, the factors are applied strictly. It is not sufficient that an issue is "factually similar" to the one in an earlier case; to satisfy the collateral estoppel factors, the issues must be "identical" and involve the same facts and surrounding context. Western Oil & Gas Ass'n v. United States EPA, 633 F.2d 803, 809 (9th Cir. 1980).

Having failed to come forward with any showing to establish that the elements of the collateral estoppel doctrine are satisfied, the Court cannot rely on the brief statement made in VISA I on the factually complex record before [*14] it in order to determine the veracity of the conclusory allegations presented here. It is not clear from the opinion of the New York court that the issue was even contested by the parties or that it was actually litigated. See, e.g., Gospel Missions v. City of Los Angeles, 328 F.3d 548, 553 (9th Cir. 2003) (rejecting collateral estoppel argument where prior issue was "neither framed in the pleadings nor contested by the parties" in the earlier litigation). The context of the court's determination and the record before that court are completely different from the context and record presented to this Court. There has been no showing that the issues are identical, that they were actually litigated and decided in the prior litigation, or that the determination of the issue in the prior litigation was critical and necessary to support the judgment rendered in the prior litigation. See Pool Water Prods., 258 F.3d at 1031. Therefore, the statement in the VISA / opinion has no preclusive effect on this Court. See id. at 1030-31.<sup>2</sup>

[*15] b. The Factual Record Does Not Support Plaintiffs' Theory.

Lastly, the Court was urged by both parties to examine closely the record before the Court as presented in conjunction with the motions for summary judgment, to determine whether the Court should grant leave to amend with regard to the conclusory allegations in the amended complaint. Having reviewed the evidence submitted with the pending summary judgment motions, the Court is satisfied that the factual record does not support Plaintiffs' claims that the Consortiums directly set the merchant discount fees. The uncontested evidence demonstrates that neither VISA nor MASTERCARD are directly involved in the setting of the merchant discount rates. (See Declaration of William Sheedy in Support of VISA's Motion for Summary Judgment ("Sheedy Decl."), P17 ("the merchant discount fee is the fee set by Visa acquirers and/or their designated third-parties, in their sole discretion based on agreement with their merchants, and in competition with other Visa acquirers"), P18 ("Merchant discount fees are negotiated only between merchants and acquirers, and not with Visa."), P19 ("It is certainly the case that IRF [interchange [*16] reimbursement fee] is a cost that acquirers typically seek to recover in the overall fees they charge merchants and thus IRF generally has an impact on merchant discount rates. But it is only one of a number of costs acquirers face, including costs for terminal deployment, risk management, customer service, marketing and sales - to name a few."), P20 ("Visa does not set these merchant discount fees. My understanding is that the extent to which acquirers can generate an appropriate revenue stream while recovering these various costs, including IRF, varies greatly and depends upon the particular acquirer and the particular merchant. The way in which acquirers recover their costs and generate revenue is entirely within their discretion."). See also Declaration of Steven Jonas in Support of MASTERCARD's Motion for Summary Judgment ("Jonas Decl."), P15 ("MasterCard does not set any acquirer's merchant discount fee; the acquirers set the merchant discount fees, which are agreed to by merchants in contracts between merchants and their acquirers. Further, MasterCard has no input into whether or how an acquirer factors any interchange fee amount into its merchant discount fee level."). [*17] )

Because the essential facts demonstrating that neither VISA nor MASTERCARD set the merchant discount fee are uncontested, and having given Plaintiffs adequate opportunity to contest those facts in conjunction with the pending motions for summary judgment, the Court is satisfied that the factual record fails to support Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations in the First Amended Complaint that the Consortiums directly set the merchant discount fee.<sup>3</sup>

[*18] 4. Exceptions to Illinois Brick Do Not Apply.

Arguing only that Plaintiffs have averred in the amended complaint that the Consortiums set the merchant discount rates directly, Plaintiffs fail to address whether an exception to the rule set out in Illinois Brick applies in this matter. HN8 Indirect purchasers can sue for damages if there is no "realistic possibility that the direct purchaser will sue" over the antitrust violation. Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 322 F.3d 1133, 1145 \(9th Cir. 2003\) (citing Royal Printing Co. v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 621 F.2d 323, 326 \(9th Cir. 1980\)). During oral argument on <sup>2</sup> In this regard, without converting the current motion before the Court to a motion for summary judgment, the Court has reviewed the full evidentiary record presented by the parties in their motions for summary judgment. Although the motions for summary judgment filed by VISA and MASTERCARD, which are fully briefed and set for hearing on August 19, 2005, will not be necessary as the Court by this order will dismiss the case, the Court has substantively reviewed those motions and the evidence submitted in conjunction therein for purposes of resolving the current motions.

<sup>3</sup> The failure of Plaintiffs to come forward with any evidence to the contrary also dictates that this Court grant the pending motions to dismiss without leave to amend. It is clear from the record before this Court that Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they have standing to sue and have failed to garner evidence which would enable them to generate a sufficient basis for the Court to find standing should leave be granted. Because the first amended complaint represents the fifth attempt to allege sufficient claims (three complaints filed in Reyn's and two attempts in this matter), and because, after development of the factual record, Plaintiffs are still unable to marshal sufficient facts to confer standing, the Court finds in its discretion that amendment in this particular context would be futile and grants the present motions without leave to amend.

these motions, the parties were specifically asked to address the issue of what entity would have standing to make an antitrust claim against the Consortiums should the Court find that Plaintiffs lack standing. Plaintiffs failed to address the question directly, and merely reiterated the holding in Freeman. The Consortiums contended that the acquiring banks would have standing to sue on an antitrust theory regarding the incorporation of the set interchange fee in the passed on merchant discount fees. Although the record reflects [*19] that a number of the members of the Board of Directors of the Consortiums is comprised of bank members,<sup>4</sup> there are apparently on the order of 8,000 acquirers in the VISA network and 9,000 members in the MASTERCARD network, a large portion of which are acquiring banks. (Sheedy Decl., P3; Jonas Decl., P4.) Certainly, any number of those banks could sue and would be granted standing to do so.

In addition, the Court notes that processing agents for the member banks have standing to sue and could make, in essence, the claims alleged herein. In this regard, the Court takes judicial notice of claims against VISA by First Data Corporation, currently pending before the undersigned, a lawsuit which contains, inter alia, allegations of antitrust violations with regard to the setting of interchange rates.<sup>5</sup>

[*20] C. Third Cause of Action Fails to State a Claim Upon Which Relief May Be Granted.

To the extent Plaintiffs attempt to aver an independent third cause of action for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act under a "consortium marketing" theory, this allegation fails for the same reasons stated herein. HN9[
↑] The allegation of price differentials between customers does not state a claim for an antitrust violation. See Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 887 (9th Cir. 1982); USM Corp. v. SPS Technologies, Inc., 694 F.2d 505, 512 (7th Cir. 1982) ("No general principle of antitrust law forbids charging different prices to different customers").

Based on the foregoing, Plaintiffs' Section 1 Sherman Act claims against VISA and MASTERCARD are DISMISSED without leave to amend.

D. CitiGroup Allegations Are Stricken.

MASTERCARD moves against paragraph 15 of the amended complaint, which concerns the allegations that the 1997 proposal by the CEO of CitiGroup to merge the processes of clearing and settlement of payment cards with the clearing and settlement of checks was rejected.

Although MASTERCARD's motion, properly a motion to strike, [*21] is rendered moot by this Court's determination that the claims against the Consortiums must be dismissed, the motion is also GRANTED on the merits on the basis that, having no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief, such allegations are immaterial. See California Dept. of Toxic Substance Control, 217 F. Supp. 2d at 1032. In addition, there is no indication that Plaintiffs have standing to make such a claim as the allegation concerns card issuers, not interchange, merchant acquirers or merchant discount fees. Accordingly, Plaintiffs cannot make a claim for antitrust injury for allegedly anticompetitive effects on issuers. See, e.g., Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 539 (plaintiff failed to demonstrate requisite antitrust injury because it was "neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which the trade was restrained."); see also Cargill, 479 U.S. at 113. Such immaterial and baseless allegations are independently stricken.

E. Section 16 Clayton Act Claim.

---

<sup>4</sup> See Sheedy Deposition at 46-47; Jonas Deposition at 44-45.

<sup>5</sup> See VISA U.S.A., Inc. v. First Data Corporation, et al., C02-1786 JSW; see also National Bancard Corp. \(NaBanco\) v. VISA U.S.A., Inc., 596 F. Supp. 1231 (S.D. Fla. 1984), aff'd, 779 F.2d 592 (11th Cir. 1986).

Because Plaintiffs' have failed to state a claim under Section 1 of Sherman Act against VISA, Plaintiffs' fourth claim for relief, [*22] under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26, predicated upon a violation Section 1 of the Sherman Act, is also dismissed without leave to amend. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 109, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986) (threatened antitrust injury is a prerequisite to equitable relief); see also Lucas Auto. Eng'g, 140 F.3d at 1234-35.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, VISA's and MASTERCARD's motions to dismiss and/or to strike are GRANTED without leave to amend.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: July 25, 2005

/s/ JEFFREY S. WHITE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

People's Choice Wireless, Inc. v. Verizon Wireless

Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division Two

July 28, 2005, Filed

B175179

Reporter

131 Cal. App. 4th 656 *; 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 819 **; 2005 Cal. App. LEXIS 1183 ***; 2005 Cal. Daily Op. Service 6701

PEOPLE'S CHOICE WIRELESS, INC., et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. VERIZON WIRELESS, Defendant and Respondent.

Prior History: [***1] Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. BC291811, Charles W. McCoy, Jr., Judge.

Core Terms

---

independent dealer, cellular telephone, customers, dealers, machines, holdback, anti trust law, consumer, brand, manufacturers, new model, price competition, antitrust, fulfilled, sales, service contract, relevant market, territorial, discount, warranty, allegations, selling, models, prices, competitors, intrabrand, demurrer, monopoly, service provider, monopoly power

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN1 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Demurrs

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

When a complaint has been disposed of via demurrer, appellate review is de novo. The appellate court treats a demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law. The court also considers matters which may be judicially noticed. Further, the court gives the complaint a reasonable interpretation, reading it as a whole and its parts in their context. When a demurrer is sustained, the court determines whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Injury to a competitor is not equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Subject to antitrust laws such as the Sherman Act, there is a long recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. Refusal to deal is not an unqualified right. Still, the United States Supreme Court has been very cautious in recognizing exceptions, because of the uncertain virtue of forced sharing and the difficulty of identifying and remedying anticompetitive conduct by a single company.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Tax Law > ... > Sales & Exchanges > Related Party Transactions > Fifty Percent Ownership

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Tax Law > ... > Sales & Exchanges > Related Party Transactions > General Overview

HN6 [down] Sherman Act, Defenses

The offense of monopoly under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. One brand does not necessarily constitute a relevant market if substitutes are available. The second element requires the use of monopoly power to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor. Section 2 prohibits a monopolist's unilateral action if that conduct harms the competitive process in the absence of a legitimate business justification.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The mere refusal to deal does not violate the spirit or policy of antitrust law. Antitrust policy attempts to balance the benefits of protecting and fostering economic incentives for entrepreneurs to pursue business with the benefits procured for consumers when courts manage markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a contract, combination or conspiracy between separate entities. It does not reach conduct that is wholly unilateral. A parent and its wholly-owned subsidiaries are considered a single economic entity for purposes of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN10 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Vertically imposed territorial restrictions normally have the potential for creating, simultaneously, benefits and detriments to competition. Such restraints typically inhibit the dealers in a given brand of product from competing against other dealers in the same brand; hence intrabrand competition is reduced. But these restraints may also achieve efficiencies that stimulate competition between brands. In assessing whether a violation had occurred, a court has to weigh any enhancement of interbrand competition against the restrictive effect on intrabrand competition, determine whether the restraints were, in all the circumstances, reasonable, and look to the history of the restraint itself, to the problem perceived by the manufacturer and the goal sought to be achieved, and to the actual effect of the restraint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[ Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Concerted activity subject to 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is judged more sternly than unilateral activity under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. This is largely because there are countervailing policies involved with § 2. The Sherman Act contains a basic distinction between concerted and independent action. The conduct of a single firm is governed by § 2 alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization. It is not enough that a single firm appears to restrain trade unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression. For instance, an efficient firm may capture unsatisfied customers from an inefficient rival, whose own ability to compete may suffer as a result. This is the rule of the marketplace and is precisely the sort of competition that promotes the consumer interests that the Sherman Act aims to foster. In part because it is sometimes difficult to distinguish robust competition from conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects, Congress has authorized Sherman Act scrutiny of single firms only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Compensatory Damages

HN12[ Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203 can apply even if a defendant has not violated the antitrust laws.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Summary

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS SUMMARY

The trial court sustained a cellular telephone company's demurrer without leave to amend in an action by independent dealers of cellular telephones that alleged that the company engaged in unfair competition under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203. The independent dealers claimed that the company engaged in unfair competition by refusing to sell popular, new cellular telephone models to them during an extended holdback period and by selling cellular telephones to customers below cost in certain circumstances when the independent dealers could not afford to compete. (Superior Court of Los Angeles County, No. BC291811, Charles W. McCoy, Jr., Judge.)

The Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that the allegations failed to demonstrate that the effect of the company's conduct was comparable to or the same as a violation of the antitrust laws. Unless there was an exception, the right to refuse to deal remained sacrosanct. Accordingly, the mere refusal to deal did not violate the spirit or policy of antitrust law. The allegations also failed to demonstrate that the company's conduct otherwise significantly threatened or harmed competition. Although there might have been a reduction in intrabrand competition regarding some of the company's cellular telephones for short periods of time, there was no reduction in interbrand competition. Furthermore, although the company's conduct had injured the independent dealers, injury to competitors was not the same thing as injury to competition, and the court could only consider the latter. The company's conduct did not pose an evil because it and its stores were viewed as a single entity, and because it did not possess a monopoly and was not threatening a monopoly. The court was aware of no case or statute, state or federal, which contained a policy that would force a company to either let its competitors have all of a particular category of sales, or force it to prop up its competitors financially. (Opinion by Ashmann-Gerst, J., with Doi Todd, Acting P. J., and Nott, J., * concurring.)

[*657]

Headnotes

CA(1) [1] (1)

Appellate Review § 128—Scope of Review—De Novo—Function of Appellate Court—Rulings on Demurrers.

When a complaint has been disposed of via demurrer, appellate review is de novo. The appellate court treats a demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law. The court also considers matters which may be judicially noticed. Further, the court gives the complaint a reasonable interpretation, reading it as a whole and its parts in their context. When a demurrer is sustained, the court determines whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

CA(2) [2] (2)

Unfair Competition § 1—Violation of Antitrust Laws or Harm to Competition.

A cellular phone company's demurrer to independent dealers' unfair competition action under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203, was properly sustained because the dealers' allegations that the company engaged in unfair competition by refusing to sell popular new cellular phone models to them during an extended holdback period and by selling cellular phones to customers below cost in certain circumstances when the dealers could not afford to compete, failed to demonstrate that the company's conduct violated the policy or spirit of the antitrust laws or that its conduct otherwise significantly threatened or harmed competition. Injury to a competitor was not equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter was the proper focus of antitrust laws.[b].]

[13 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Equity, § 123; 1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1987) Contracts, §§ 560, 575; Simon et al., Matthew Bender Practice Guide: Cal. Unfair Competition and Business Torts (2005) § 2.11[3]

CA(3) [3] (3)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Refusal to Deal—Particular Agreements and Combinations—Sherman Act.

Subject to antitrust laws such as the Sherman Act, there is a long-recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise its own independent discretion as to parties with whom it will deal. Refusal to deal is not an unqualified right. Still, the United States Supreme Court has been very cautious in recognizing exceptions, because of the uncertain virtue of forced sharing and the difficulty of identifying and remedying anticompetitive conduct by a single company.

* Retired Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, assigned by the Chief Justice pursuant to article VI, section 6 of the California Constitution.

CA(4) (4)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Monopoly Elements—Particular Agreements and Combinations—Sherman Act.

The offense of monopoly under 15 U.S.C. § 2, section 2 of the Sherman Act [*658] has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. One brand does not necessarily constitute a relevant market if substitutes are available. The second element requires the use of monopoly power to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor. Section 2 prohibits a monopolist's unilateral action if that conduct harms the competitive process in the absence of a legitimate business justification.

CA(5) (5)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 1—Refusal to Deal—No Violation of Antitrust Law.

The mere refusal to deal does not violate the spirit or policy of antitrust law. Antitrust policy attempts to balance the benefits of protecting and fostering economic incentives for entrepreneurs to pursue business with the benefits procured for consumers when courts manage markets.

CA(6) (6)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Parent and Wholly Owned Subsidiaries—Particular Agreements and Combinations—Sherman Act.

15 U.S.C. § 1, the Sherman Act, reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a contract, combination or conspiracy between separate entities. It does not reach conduct that is wholly unilateral. A parent and its wholly owned subsidiaries are considered a single economic entity for purposes of the Sherman Act.

CA(7) (7)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 1—Vertically Imposed Territorial Restrictions—Intrabrand and Interbrand Competition.

Vertically imposed territorial restrictions normally have the potential for creating, simultaneously, benefits and detriments to competition. Such restraints typically inhibit the dealers in a given brand of product from competing against other dealers in the same brand; hence intrabrand competition is reduced. But these restraints may also achieve efficiencies that stimulate competition between brands. In assessing whether a violation had occurred, a court has to weigh any enhancement of interbrand competition against the restrictive effect on intrabrand competition, determine whether the restraints were, in all the circumstances, reasonable, and look to the history of the restraint itself, to the problem perceived by the manufacturer and the goal sought to be achieved, and to the actual effect of the restraint.

CA(8) (8)

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 4—Concerted and Unilateral Activity—Particular Agreements and Combinations—Sherman Act.

Concerted activity subject to 15 U.S.C. § 1 is judged more sternly [\*659] than unilateral activity under 15 U.S.C. § 2. This is largely because there are countervailing policies involved with § 2. The Sherman Act contains a basic distinction between concerted and independent action. The conduct of a single firm is governed by § 2 alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization. It is not enough that a single firm appears to restrain trade unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression. For instance, an efficient firm may capture unsatisfied customers from an inefficient rival, whose own ability to compete may suffer as a result. This is the rule of the marketplace and is precisely the sort of competition that promotes the consumer interests that the Sherman Act aims to foster. In part because it is sometimes difficult to distinguish robust competition from conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects, Congress has authorized Sherman Act scrutiny of single firms only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur.

CA\(9\)A [9] (9)

Unfair Competition § 1—Application.

Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17203, can apply even if a defendant has not violated the antitrust laws.

Counsel: Blecher & Collins, Maxwell M. Blecher and Matthew E. Hess for Plaintiffs and Appellants.

Overland Borenstein Scheper & Kim, Diann H. Kim and Wendy O. Clendening for Defendant and Respondent.

Judges: Ashmann-Gerst, J., with Doi Todd, Acting P.J., and Nott, J., concurring.

Opinion by: ASHMANN-GERST

Opinion

---

[**820] ASHMANN-GERST, J.—Appellants People's Choice Wireless, Inc., and Cellular Depot, Inc., sued respondent Verizon Wireless (Verizon) for unfair competition pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 17203<sup>1</sup> on behalf of themselves and similarly situated independent dealers of cellular telephones (collectively, the Independent Dealers). In their first amended complaint (the complaint), the Independent Dealers alleged that Verizon engaged in unfair competition by: (1) refusing to sell popular new cellular [\*660] telephone models to the Independent [\[\*\*821\]](#) Dealers during an extended holdback period; and (2) selling cellular [\[\*\*2\]](#) telephones to customers below cost in certain circumstances when the Independent Dealers could not afford to compete. According to the Independent Dealers, the trial court erred when it sustained Verizon's demurrer without leave to amend. We have reviewed the complaint and the law and find no error.

We affirm.

FACTS

---

<sup>1</sup> All further statutory references are to the Business and Professions Code unless otherwise indicated. Section 17203 provides, in relevant part: “HN1A Any person who engages, has engaged, or proposes to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction.”

The Complaint

The Independent Dealers alleged: Because cellular telephones are expensive, service providers such as Verizon sell them below cost if a consumer agrees to purchase telephone service for a set period of time, usually one to three years. Similarly, service providers often subsidize the cost if a customer wishes to upgrade to a new cellular telephone. Verizon sells cellular telephones through [***3] its wholly owned retail stores and retail stores operated by the Independent Dealers.

At Verizon's request, companies such as Motorola, Nokia and Sony manufacture cellular telephone models that are solely compatible with Verizon's telephone network. The manufacturers agree to sell new models to Verizon on an exclusive basis for a specified period of time, normally three to six months (the exclusive period). During the exclusive period, the Independent Dealers cannot purchase new models from the manufacturers, but they can purchase new models directly from Verizon. Most consumer sales occur within the exclusive period during the first one to two months of when a new model is released.

The Independent Dealers match the prices being charged for cellular telephones in the Verizon stores. Above and beyond that, the Independent Dealers provide customers who purchase a cellular telephone with several useful accessories, such as headsets or carrying cases, at no additional cost. If a customer wanted to purchase these same accessories at a Verizon store, the customer would have to pay extra. By providing free accessories to their customers, the Independent Dealers undercut Verizon's prices [***4] and create price competition.

Count I

In the past, within the exclusive period, Verizon imposed a two-week holdback period on its most popular new cellular telephones models. During [*661] this holdback period, Verizon released its most popular new models to Verizon's retail stores but not to the Independent Dealers. As a result, the Independent Dealers could not sell the most popular new models of Verizon's cellular telephones for the first two weeks of their release. Then, when the Motorola T720 was released for sale, Verizon extended the holdback period to two months. For the Blackberry 6750, Verizon extended the holdback for a period of time that exceeded four months and was continuing as of the date the complaint was filed. Verizon claims that the holdback period is necessary for quality control. The true purpose is to ensure that Verizon's retail stores obtain the majority of sales for popular new models. Verizon heavily advertises the availability of popular new models during the holdback period. Once the holdback period ends, Verizon's advertising ceases almost entirely. The Independent Dealers depend on new model sales for a majority of their income and are adversely impacted [***5] by the holdback period. Moreover, if they were given access to the models subject to the holdback period on the same terms as the Verizon stores, they would match Verizon's prices, offer free accessories and undercut [**822] Verizon's prices. As a practical matter, the holdback period prevents price competition and is therefore violative of section 17200 et seq.

Count II

Until recently, Verizon's commission structure placed the Independent Dealers on an equal footing with Verizon's wholly owned retail stores. Verizon subsidized the cost of new cellular telephones only for those customers who had fulfilled at least one year of their service contract. On a parallel basis, Verizon's authorized wholesale distributors paid a commission to the Independent Dealers whenever they obtained service contract renewals from customers who had fulfilled at least one year of their existing service contract. The Independent Dealers were able to use their service contract renewal commissions to partially offset the cost of new cellular telephones and then price those new models to match the prices being charged for the same models in Verizon's stores. In December 2002, Verizon began subsidizing all [***6] new cellular telephone sales, even sales to customers who had not fulfilled a least one year of their service contract. Verizon did not, however, change its commission structure for the Independent Dealers. Without commissions on sales to customers who fulfilled less than one year of their service contracts, the Independent Dealers cannot subsidize the cost of new cellular telephones to those customers.

Verizon's commission structure reduces intrabrand competition, discriminates against the Independent Dealers, and amounts to unfair competition.

[*662] The Demurrer and This Appeal

Verizon demurred to the complaint on the grounds, inter alia, that the allegations did not satisfy the test set forth by [Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. \(1999\) 20 Cal.4th 163 \[83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548, 973 P.2d 527\]](#) (Cel-Tech). The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and the Independent Dealers noticed this appeal. Because there was no judgment, the clerk of the Court of Appeal informed the Independent Dealers that the Court of Appeal lacked jurisdiction. Thereafter, in order to perfect appellate jurisdiction, the parties stipulated that the action was dismissed [***7] and judgment entered in favor of Verizon. The stipulation was filed and the trial court ordered that it be given legal effect.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

CA(1) [1] (1) HN2 When a complaint has been disposed of via demurrer, our review is de novo. In other words, “ ‘[w]e treat [a] demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law. [Citation.] We also consider matters which may be judicially noticed.’ [Citation.] Further, we give the complaint a reasonable interpretation, reading it as a whole and its parts in their context. [Citation.] When a demurrer is sustained, we determine whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. [Citation.]” ([Zelig v. County of Los Angeles \(2002\) 27 Cal.4th 1112, 1126 \[119 Cal.Rptr.2d 709, 45 P.3d 1171\]](#).)

DISCUSSION

1. The holdback period.

CA(2) [2] (2) According to the Independent Dealers, the allegations in count I of the complaint satisfy two of the three possible grounds for finding conduct between competitors to be considered unfair pursuant to our Supreme Court's opinion in Cel-Tech. We are unable to concur with this assessment. As we shall discuss below, the [***8] allegations fail to demonstrate either [***823] that Verizon's conduct (1) violates the policy or spirit of the antitrust laws because the effect of the conduct is comparable to or the same as a violation of the antitrust laws, or (2) it otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 187)<sup>2</sup> While expediting our duties, we have kept the following principle uppermost in our reasoning. HN3 “Injury to a competitor is not [*663] equivalent to injury to competition; only the latter is the proper focus of antitrust laws. [Citations.]” (Cel-Tech, supra, 20 Cal.4th at p. 186.)

a. Violation of antitrust policies.

To kick off their argument, the Independent Dealers solicit [***9] a comparison of this case to a refusal-to-deal case, [Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc. \(1992\) 504 U.S. 451 \[119 L.Ed.2d 265, 112 S.Ct. 2072\]](#) (Eastman Kodak). Verizon parries with the contention that, with few exceptions, a company owes no duty to help anyone and is free to deal or not deal with a competitive rival.

<sup>2</sup> The third Cel-Tech ground is that the conduct threatens an incipient violation of the antitrust laws. We need not analyze this ground. The Independent Dealers freely admit that this is not an antitrust case under federal law or section 16720 et seq. (the Cartwright Act).

CA(3) [↑] (3) Indeed, Verizon is on target with the general rule. Nearly a century ago, the Supreme Court recognized that, HN4 [↑] subject to antitrust laws such as the Sherman Act,<sup>3</sup> there is a “long recognized right of [a] trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.” (United States v. Colgate & Company (1919) 250 U.S. 300, 307 [63 L.Ed. 992, 39 S.Ct. 465, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460] (Colgate).) That theme has continued life. (See Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell (9th Cir. 1986) 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 [stating that a “manufacturer may choose those with whom it wishes to deal and unilaterally may refuse to deal with a distributor or customer for business reasons without running afoul of the antitrust laws”].)

[***10] Recently, we were treated to the Supreme Court’s scholarship on the matter when it revisited Colgate and the Sherman Act to once again place its intellectual brackets on our land’s antitrust law. (See Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP (2004) 540 U.S. 398, 408 [157 L.Ed.2d 823, 124 S.Ct. 872] (Verizon Communications).) The Supreme Court explained that the “opportunity to charge monopoly prices—at least for a short period—is what attracts ‘business acumen’ in the first place; it induces risk taking that produces innovation and economic growth.” (Id. at p. 407.) Diligent companies, of course, are in a position to gain monopoly power by building an infrastructure that allows them to excel in business. Upon noting this market reality, the court segued into the following observation: “Compelling such [companies] to share the source of their advantage is in some tension with the underlying purpose of antitrust law, since it may lessen the incentive for the monopolist, the rival, or both to invest in those economically beneficial facilities. Enforced sharing also requires antitrust courts to act as central planners, identifying [***11] the proper price, quantity, and other terms of dealing—a role for which they are ill-suited.” (Id. at pp. 407–408.) For this reason, the general rule expressed in Colgate remains a major policy point.

[**824] [*664] By the same token, the Verizon Communications court explained that refusal to deal is not an unqualified right. (Verizon Communications, supra, 540 U.S. at p. 408.) Still, the court has “been very cautious in recognizing … exceptions [to Colgate], because of the uncertain virtue of forced sharing and the difficulty of identifying and remedying anticompetitive conduct by a single [company].” (Ibid.) In the view of the Supreme Court, the leading case for liability based on refusal to deal is Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. (1985) 472 U.S. 585 [86 L.Ed.2d 467, 105 S.Ct. 2847] (Aspen Skiing), a cased cited in the Independent Dealers’ briefs. In Aspen Skiing, there was a ski locale comprised of four mountain areas. The defendant owned three of those areas, and the plaintiff owned one. For years, they cooperated by issuing joint, multiple-day, all-area ski tickets. When the plaintiff refused to give [***12] the defendant a greater share of the proceeds, the defendant canceled the joint tickets. The plaintiff tried unsuccessfully to recreate the joint tickets, even offering to buy the defendant’s tickets at retail price. The Supreme Court upheld the jury’s verdict in favor of the plaintiff, concluding that the jury may well have found that the defendant was more interested in reducing competition than obtaining the short-run benefits of the joint tickets. (Verizon Communications, supra, 540 U.S. at pp. 408–409.) But the Verizon Communications court highlighted the fact that Aspen Skiing “is at or near the outer boundary of [title 15 United States Code section] 2 liability.” (Verizon Communications, supra, 540 U.S. at p. 409.)

Now that we are done with our preliminaries, we bring Eastman Kodak to the fore. The book on that case goes like this. Kodak was in the business of providing service and parts for its office equipment to its customers. It produced some of the parts itself, and the rest were made to order by independent original-equipment manufacturers (OEM’s). In the early 1980’s, independent service organizations (ISO’s) started [***13] repairing and servicing Kodak equipment. As well, they sold parts and reconditioned Kodak machines. Soon thereafter, Kodak adopted a policy of limiting the availability of parts to the ISO’s. It sold replacement parts for micrographic and copying machines only to buyers of Kodak equipment who also purchased service from Kodak for any repair of those machines. There were a variety of corollaries. Kodak and the OEM’s agreed that the OEM’s would not sell parts to anyone but Kodak. Through pressure, Kodak convinced Kodak equipment owners and independent parts distributors to stop selling Kodak parts to the ISO’s. Last, Kodak implemented a plan to prevent others from obtaining used Kodak machines. The intent behind Kodak's machinations regarding parts was to inhibit the ISO's ability to sell service for Kodak machines. (Eastman Kodak, supra, 504 U.S. at pp. 455–459.)

---

<sup>3</sup> Title 15 United States Code section 1 et seq.

The ISO's sued under the Sherman Act, claiming that Kodak had unlawfully tied the sale of service for Kodak machines to the sale of parts, in [*665] violation of title 15 United States Code section 1, and had unlawfully monopolized and attempted to monopolize the sale of service for Kodak machines, [***14] in violation of title 15 United States Code section 2.<sup>4</sup> (*Eastman Kodak, **8251 supra, 504 U.S. at p. 459.*) The district court granted summary judgment for Kodak, and the matter was reversed on appeal.

CA(4)↑ (4) Because the Independent Dealers do not allege a tying agreement, we focus on the portion of Eastman Kodak that discusses section 2 of the Sherman Act. In affirming the reversal, the Supreme Court noted that [***15] HN6↑ the “ ‘offense of monopoly under [\[section\] 2](#) of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.’ [Citation.]” (Eastman Kodak, supra, 504 U.S. at p. 481.) The fact that Kodak controlled nearly 100 percent of the parts market and 80 percent to 95 percent of the service market, with no readily available substitutes, was sufficient to suggest the existence of monopoly power. Kodak complained that, as a matter of law, a single brand of a product or service can never be a relevant market under the Sherman Act. The court disagreed. “The relevant market for antitrust purposes is determined by the choices available to Kodak equipment owners. [Citation.] Because service and parts for Kodak equipment are not interchangeable with other manufacturers' service and parts, the relevant market from the Kodak equipment owner's perspective is composed of only those companies that service Kodak machines. [Citation.] This Court's prior cases support [***16] the proposition that in some instances one brand of a product can constitute a separate market. [Citations.] The proper market definition in this case can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the ‘commercial realities’ faced by consumers. [Citation.]” (Eastman Kodak, supra, at pp. 481–482, fn. omitted.) In a footnote, the court explained that United States v. Du Pont & Co. (1956) 351 U.S. 377 [100 L.Ed. 1264, 76 S.Ct. 994], did not foreclose single brands from being a market. Rather, it merely held that “one brand does not necessarily constitute a relevant market if substitutes are available. [Citations.]” (Eastman Kodak, supra, at p. 482, fn. 30.)

With respect to the second element, which required “the use of monopoly power ‘to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage, or to destroy a competitor,’ ” the court stated that there was a triable issue if [*666] “Kodak adopted its parts and service policies as part of a scheme of willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power.” (Eastman Kodak, supra, 504 U.S. at pp. 482–483.) Though Kodak offered justifications for its exclusionary policy, the court [***17] found triable issues as to whether the justifications were valid and sufficient. (Id. at p. 483.)

On remand, the jury found for the ISO's on the title 15 United States Code section 2 claim. The Ninth Circuit affirmed in Image Tech. Services, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co. (9th Cir. 1997) 125 F.3d 1195 (Image Tech). In doing so, the court detailed the “substantial evidence” that supported the jury's finding that Kodak used its monopoly over parts in order to gain a monopoly over the service of Kodak equipment. (Id. at p. 1208.) The court elucidated the controlling law thusly: “Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits a monopolist's unilateral action, like Kodak's refusal to deal, if that conduct harms the [**826] competitive process in the absence of a legitimate business justification. [Citations.]” (Image Tech, supra, at p. 1209.)

Jumping into the appellate fray, the Independent Dealers aver that the facts alleged in the complaint are “strikingly similar” to those in Eastman Kodak and Image Tech because: (1) the ISO's were forced to purchase all of their replacement parts from Kodak, and the [***18] Independent Dealers were forced to purchase new Verizon cellular telephones from Verizon; and (2) like Kodak, which willingly sold replacement parts to the ISO's and then stopped, Verizon always had a two-week holdback period and then suddenly and unfairly lengthened that period.

<sup>4</sup> Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides: HN5↑ “Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 1,000,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.” (15 U.S.C. § 2.)

To be frank, a skepticism was born with this forced analogy. The two cases are decidedly dissimilar. The relevant market in Eastman Kodak was defined by a single brand of service, i.e., it was composed of companies that serviced Kodak machines because there were no available substitutes. Kodak had a monopoly in the parts market and used it to monopolize the service market. In contrast, the relevant market here is comprised of all cellular telephones, and there is no allegation that Verizon has monopolized that market, or any related market. Customers change service providers, options, calling plans and cellular telephones on a regular basis. There are service providers other than Verizon, such as T-Mobile and Cingular, and there are manufacturers, such as Motorola, Nokia and Sony, which all sell cellular telephones. Moreover, the Independent Dealers do not claim that they, like the ISO's, have been [***19] permanently cut off from a whole brand of products, or that consumers will be forced to purchase cellular telephones only from Verizon. Rather, they merely contend that they are denied the ability to sell the most popular new Verizon models, only two of which are identified by the complaint, for a finite period of time. It can be inferred from the complaint that their ability to sell other brands is unfettered, and consumers still have a wide variety of [*667] choices of what and where to buy. Finally, whereas competition in the relevant market in Eastman Kodak was diminished, there is no equivalent allegation here. The Independent Dealers complain about the diminution of "intrabrand" price competition, rather than the diminution of market competition. In other words, all they can say is that there is less price competition for Verizon's cellular telephones, not that there is less price competition among all the different cellular telephone brands. Given this, it cannot be said that the effect of Verizon's conduct is comparable to or the same as a violation of the antitrust laws. In fact, a logical deduction from the complaint is that even though the Independent Dealers cannot undercut [***20] Verizon's prices on popular new Verizon cellular telephone models during the holdback period, they can still undercut Verizon's prices with respect to the competing brand models acquired from manufacturers and other service providers.

CA(5) [↑] (5) In essence, the Independent Dealers want to force Verizon to immediately release its most popular new models and thereby "share the source of [its] advantage." (Verizon Communications, supra, 540 U.S. at p. 407.) But, unless there is an exception, the right to refuse to deal remains sacrosanct. Because that is true, HNT[↑] the mere refusal to deal does not violate the spirit or policy of antitrust law. In the absence of an abuse of monopoly power in a relevant market, this case involves nothing more than a permissible refusal to deal with the Independent Dealers.

Boiled down, the Independent Dealers' position is that the trial court failed to [**827] properly balance Colgate against other antitrust policies. In their reply brief, the Independent Dealers advert to the following Supreme Court quote: "'Congress designed the Sherman Act as a "consumer welfare prescription." ' [Citation.] A restraint that has the effect of reducing the importance [***21] of consumer preference in setting price and output is not consistent with this fundamental goal of anti-trust law. Restrictions on price and output are the paradigmatic examples of restraints of trade that the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit. [Citation.]'" (NCAA v. Board of Regents of Univ. of Okla. (1984) 468 U.S. 85, 107–108 [82 L.Ed.2d 70, 104 S.Ct. 2948], fn. omitted.) Using this language as a springboard, the Independent Dealers declare that price competition is "the single most important public policy goal furthered by the antitrust laws." What the Independent Dealers fail to appreciate is that antitrust policy attempts to balance the benefits of protecting and fostering economic incentives for entrepreneurs to pursue business with the benefits procured for consumers when courts manage markets. In our view, the trial court found the right balance when it sustained Verizon's demurrer without leave to amend. Because we are dealing with a limited time restriction on some cellular telephones of one of many brands in a vibrant, volatile market with many consumer options, we take special heed of the warning in Verizon Communications that we should be cautious before creating exceptions [***22] to the conduct allowed by Colgate.

[*668] It is true, as the Independent Dealers take pains to stress, that Cel-Tech does not require an antitrust violation in order to state a section 17203 claim. But we must still look at the alleged impact of the conduct, and we must consider any countervailing policies. The allegations here are simply too far removed from cognizable antitrust evils to warrant intervention by a California court.

b. Significant threat or harm to competition.

The Independent Dealers' argument regarding the threat or harm to competition is set forth in the following three sentences: "Here, Verizon's conduct indisputably reduces both consumer choice and price competition. It reduces consumer choice by choking off one of the avenues of distribution of Verizon's products. More significantly, it prevents [the Independent Dealers] from selling [cellular] telephones at a discount." After parsing this argument, we find it lacking.

We do not perceive a threat or harm to competition which can be characterized as significant. As explained in part 1.a., ante, there may be a reduction in intrabrand competition regarding some Verizon cellular telephones for [***23] short periods of time, but there is no reduction in interbrand competition. The continuing interbrand competition from manufacturers and other service providers offers consumers a healthy array of choices and the benefit of price competition. What shines through most clearly in the complaint is that Verizon's conduct has injured the Independent Dealers. But, as Cel-Tech teaches, injury to competitors is not the same thing as injury to competition, and we may only consider the latter.

2. The commission structure.

Count II fails to state a claim under section 17203.

In part, the problem is that the meaning of count II is murky. In their prayer for relief in the complaint, the Independent Dealers requested an "injunction prohibiting Verizon from permitting customers to upgrade their [cellular telephones] at Verizon owned stores if they have not fulfilled [**828] at least one year of their service contract, which injunction shall continue in force unless and until Verizon adjusts its commission structure in such a manner as to permit [the] Independent Dealers to subsidize the [cellular telephone] purchases of those customers who have not fulfilled at least one year of [***24] their service contract."

Essentially, the Independent Dealers paint the following picture. In the past, when a Verizon customer wanted a new cellular telephone, Verizon [*669] would sell that cellular telephone below cost if the customer had fulfilled a year of his or her existing service contract. The only way the Independent Dealers could compete was to get a customer who had fulfilled a year of his or her existing service contract to renew that contract and then use the commission from that renewal to offset the cost of the new cellular telephone. When Verizon began selling all new cellular telephones below cost, the Independent Dealers were unable to compete in situations in which they did not receive a renewal commission. To remedy this situation, the Independent Dealers want a court to prohibit customers from upgrading their cellular telephones at Verizon stores until after they fulfill at least a year of their service contracts. Oddly, this would make it unlawful for Verizon to sell cellular telephones to some of their own customers. Also, it would mean that those customers could only get upgrades through the Independent Dealers or the manufacturers. According to the Independent Dealers, [***25] this injunction should last until such time as Verizon devises a commission structure that allows the Independent Dealers to sell Verizon cellular telephones below cost to all customers, not just those who have fulfilled a year of their service contracts.

The bottom line is the Independent Dealers want to prevent Verizon from discounting in situations where they themselves cannot discount. This means that if the Independent Dealers cannot share in the wealth, they want a court to force certain Verizon customers to pay higher prices. What antitrust policy would be at play here? The Independent Dealers do not say, and it is difficult for us to conceive. A few things must be sorted out before we even try.

CA(6) [6] It is important to note that the policies behind section 1 of the Sherman Act are not implicated here.<sup>5</sup> (15 U.S.C. § 1.) We have been instructed by the Supreme Court that HN8 [8] section 1 of the Sherman Act

<sup>5</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides: HN9 [9] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 100,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any

"reaches unreasonable restraints of trade effected by a 'contract, combination ... or conspiracy' between separate entities. It does not reach conduct that is 'wholly unilateral.' [Citations.]" ([Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp. \(1984\) 467 U.S. 752, 768 \[81 L.Ed.2d 628, 104 S.Ct. 2731\]](#) [***26] (Copperweld.) A parent and its wholly owned subsidiaries, like Verizon and its stores, are considered a single economic entity for purposes of the Sherman Act. (Copperweld, supra, at pp. 771?774.)

Now to the bone of contention.

[*670] To establish the validity of count II, the Independent Dealers contend that Verizon's commission structure produces [***27] an [**829] effect comparable to or the same as that in Eiberger v. Sony Corp. of America \(2d Cir. 1980\) 622 F.2d 1068 (Eiberger), and therefore triggers Cel-Tech. We disagree.

In Eiberger, the question was whether Sony Corporation of America (Sony) had violated section 1 of the Sherman Act. (Eiberger, supra, 622 F.2d at p. 1070.) The background facts were these. Eiberger's company (ABP) was a nonexclusive dealer of Sony dictation machines in the Atlanta, Georgia territory. ABP eventually began to sell large quantities of dictation machines to discounters who undersold to authorized dealers in other territories. Subsequently, Sony revised its dealership agreements. Nonselling dealers were required to accept warranty responsibilities on dictation machines when requested and paid by Sony. Additionally, if the selling dealer did not render warranty service, then it had to pay a scheduled warranty fee to Sony. Nonselling dealers began finding machines sold by others in their territories and reporting the serial numbers of those machines to Sony. Sony credited the accounts of those dealers with warranty fees and debited a corresponding amount to [***28] the accounts of the selling dealers. Sony did so whether or not warranty service had been rendered and regardless of whether the warranty period had begun. When Sony began docking ABP's account, ABP refused to pay. As a result, Sony elected not to renew ABP's franchise. (Id. at pp. 1071–1074.)

CA(7)↑ (7) The district court found that Sony's warranty fee requirement amounted to a vertical territorial restriction on trade, and that it was unlawful. As the Eiberger court explained, the reality is that HN10↑ "vertically imposed territorial restrictions normally have the potential for creating, simultaneously, benefits and detriments to competition. Such restraints typically inhibit the dealers in a given brand of product from competing against other dealers in the same brand; hence intrabrand competition is reduced. But these restraints may also achieve efficiencies that stimulate competition between brands." (Eiberger, supra, 622 F.2d at pp. 1075–1076.) In assessing whether a violation had occurred, the court had to "weigh any enhancement of interbrand competition against the restrictive effect on intrabrand competition," "determine whether the restraints [were], [***29] in all the circumstances, reasonable," and "look to the history of the restraint itself, to the problem perceived by the manufacturer and the goal sought to be achieved, and to the actual effect of the restraint." (Id. at p. 1076.) Given that formula and the facts, the district court did not err. (Ibid.)

[*671] There were two main findings that dictated the outcome. "First, [the district court] found that the principal purpose of the 1975 warranty plan was not to assure that the users of Sony dictation equipment secured warranty service but was rather to enforce the territorial divisions reflected in the dealership agreements. Second, the [district court] found that the effect of the new system 'would be the elimination of intrabrand competition within each authorized dealer's territory.' [Citation.]" (Eiberger, supra, 622 F.2d at pp. 1076–1077, fn. omitted.)

We now turn to the Independent Dealers' position. They contend: "In the instant case, the [complaint] alleges that Verizon refuses to pay commissions for sales made by [the] Independent Dealers but does pay commissions for identical sales made by its own stores . . . . The allegations [***30] in the [complaint] do not reveal any procompetitive justification for this practice. On the contrary, they clearly suggest that the true motive behind Verizon's discriminatory commission structure [**830] is to prevent the [Independent Dealers] from discounting." The Independent Dealers suggest that Verizon's conduct violates the policy and spirit of the antitrust laws and creates an effect similar to an antitrust violation.

Reflecting on this argument proves difficult. First, it assumes allegations that the Independent Dealers never made. The complaint does not allege, for example, that Verizon pays commissions to its own stores.<sup>6</sup> Nor does it allege that the Independent Dealers never receive commissions. Second, while Eiberger involved vertically imposed territorial restrictions on intrabrand sales by authorized dealers, the case at bar does not involve any such allegations. Third, there were separate entities and anti-competitive contracts in Eiberger, but not here. It is only in the reply brief that some light is finally shed on why Independent Dealers direct us to consider the Eiberger decision. There, they claim that though this case is by no means identical to Eiberger, [***31] “both cases are based on exactly the same public policy concerns, namely the protection of discounters and the promotion of price competition.”

CA(8) [8] (8) The discrepancy about the true contents of the complaint aside, our initial hesitation with trying to compare the commission structure to the facts in Eiberger is that, legally, these two cases are apples and oranges. Eiberger was the result of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Count II, if anything, implicates the polices underlying section 2 of the Sherman Act. As explained [*672] in Copperweld, HN11 [“c]oncerted activity subject [***32] to title [15 United States Code section 1 is judged more sternly than unilateral activity under title [15 United States Code section 2.” (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at p. 768.) This is largely because there are countervailing policies involved with title 15 United States Code section 2. “The Sherman Act contains a ‘basic distinction between concerted and independent action.’ [Citation.] The conduct of a single firm is governed by title [15 United States Codes section 2] alone and is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization. It is not enough that a single firm appears to ‘restrain trade’ unreasonably, for even a vigorous competitor may leave that impression. For instance, an efficient firm may capture unsatisfied customers from an inefficient rival, whose own ability to compete may suffer as a result. This is the rule of the marketplace and is precisely the sort of competition that promotes the consumer interests that the Sherman Act aims to foster. In part because it is sometimes difficult to distinguish robust competition from conduct with long-run anticompetitive effects, Congress authorized Sherman Act scrutiny of [***33] single firms only when they pose a danger of monopolization. Judging unilateral conduct in this manner reduces the risk that the antitrust laws will dampen the competitive zeal of a single aggressive entrepreneur.” (Copperweld, supra, 467 U.S. at pp. 767–768, fns. omitted.)

Thus, from a policy standpoint, Verizon's conduct does not pose an evil because it and its stores are viewed as a single entity, and because it does not possess a monopoly and it is not threatening a monopoly. Moreover, because we are dealing with a [**831] single entity, we do not want to dampen its competitive zeal.

CA(9) [9] (9) To reiterate, we are aware that HN12 [section 17203] can apply even if a defendant has not violated the antitrust laws. But, simply put, this case falls outside the policy and spirit of Eiberger. Eiberger protected discounters and price competition by awarding damages to an authorized agent who was damaged by dealership contracts that created a punishment greater than the profit when the authorized agent sold in other territories. Here, there is no allegation that Verizon imposed contracts with punitive provisions on the Independent Dealers. While ABP objected to Sony's interference [***34] with discounting, the Independent Dealers make no such complaint. Rather, they complain that Verizon should be forced to cease selling cellular telephones to certain customers, or that it should be forced to assist the Independent Dealers financially so that they can discount and compete. We are aware of no case or statute, state or federal, which contains a policy that would force a company to either let its competitors have all of a particular category of sales, or force it to prop up its competitors financially. Having found no such law cited in the briefs, we can only conclude that Cel-Tech is not satisfied.

[*673] DISPOSITION

The judgment of dismissal is affirmed.

<sup>6</sup> We find the Independent Dealers' recapitulation of the complaint perplexing for two reasons. As we have indicated, the complaint never states that Verizon started paying commissions to its own stores. If that were not confusing enough, the trial court's statement of decision indicated that the “commission changes alleged involve Verizon and Verizon stores, not” the Independent Dealers. It is unclear why the trial court made this assumption.

Verizon shall recover its costs on appeal.

Doi Todd, Acting P. J., and Nott, J.,* concurred.

---

End of Document

---

* Retired Associate Justice of the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, assigned by the Chief Justice pursuant to article VI, section 6 of the California Constitution.

Banner Pharmacaps, Inc. v. Perrigo Co.

United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina

August 1, 2005, Decided ; August 1, 2005, Filed

1:04CV492

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37842 *; 2005 WL 2136927

BANNER PHARMACAPS INC., Plaintiff, v. PERRIGO COMPANY; L. PERRIGO COMPANY; and PERRIGO COMPANY OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Adopted by, Partial summary judgment granted by, in part Banner Pharmacaps Inc. v. Perrigo Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38034 \(M.D.N.C., Sept. 6, 2005\)

Prior History: [*1] Case 1:04-cv-00492-FWB.

Banner Pharmacaps, Inc. v. Perrigo Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56180 \(M.D.N.C., July 6, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

patent, infringement, marking, inequitable conduct, anti-trust, summary judgment, products, counterclaim, argues, summary judgment motion, patentee, notice, literal, tablets, prior art, misrepresented, references, material fact, containers, disclose, damages, recommended, violations, gelatin, cases, partial summary judgment, genuine issue, matter of law, misrepresentation, unenforceable

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. A party seeking summary judgment bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the record which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Once the moving party has met its burden, the nonmoving party must then set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN2 [down arrow] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

In making a determination on a summary judgment motion, a federal district court views the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, according that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Mere allegations and denials, however, are insufficient to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Judges are not required to submit a question to a jury merely because some evidence has been introduced by the party having the burden of proof, unless the evidence be of such a character that it would warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of that party. Thus, the moving party can bear its burden either by presenting affirmative evidence or by demonstrating that the nonmoving party's evidence is insufficient to establish its claim. A complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of a plaintiff's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial. The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has clearly determined that summary judgment is available in patent cases as it is in any other type of case.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Presumption of Validity

HN3 [down arrow] Infringement Actions, Burdens of Proof

A patent is literally infringed if every element it recites in a given claim or claims is present in the accused product. 35 U.S.C.S. § 271. The patentee has the burden of proving infringement by a preponderance of the evidence. By contrast, a patent is presumed valid and an accused infringer has the burden of overcoming this presumption by clear and convincing evidence. 35 U.S.C.S. § 282. A court should employ a two-step analysis in making an infringement determination. First, the court must construe the asserted claims to ascertain their meaning and scope. Construction of the claims is a question of law subject to de novo review. The trier of fact must then compare the properly construed claims with the accused infringing product. This second step is a question of fact.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Defenses, Patent Invalidity

It is well settled that the validity of a patent and patent infringement are separate questions that must be answered independently of each other.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Defenses, Inequitable Conduct

Every applicant for a patent has a duty of candor and good faith in its dealing with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office and the examiner handling his application. This means that the applicant and his lawyer must not intentionally withhold or misrepresent material information concerning the invention, as defined by the asserted claim. A breach of this duty is inequitable conduct and renders the patent unenforceable. To find that a patent applicant engaged in inequitable conduct in the pursuit of a patent, a court must find by clear and convincing evidence that the applicant omitted or misrepresented material facts with the intention of misleading or deceiving the examiner. Inequitable conduct includes affirmative misrepresentation of a material fact, failure to disclose material information, or submission of false material information, coupled with an intent to deceive. Even if conduct is found to be misleading on a material point, however, an inference of intent is not required. Finally, the more material the information, the less amount of intent is required, and vice versa.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Inequitable Conduct > Effect, Materiality & Scienter > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Infringement Actions, Summary Judgment

Even if materiality and intent to commit inequitable conduct in obtaining a patent are adequately demonstrated, a federal district court must balance the equities to determine whether a patentee committed inequitable conduct that warrants holding the patent unenforceable. The defense of inequitable conduct is entirely equitable in nature, and is thus not an issue for a jury to decide. A patentee, therefore, has no right to a jury trial respecting the factual element of culpable intent as part of the defense of inequitable conduct. Thus, a disputed finding of intent to mislead or to deceive is one for the judge to resolve, not the jury, albeit not on summary judgment if there is a genuine dispute.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

HN7 [down arrow] Defenses, Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

The legal standard for fraud on the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) is similar to that of inequitable conduct in that it requires that a patentee make a material misrepresentation to the PTO or withhold information material to the prosecution of the patent. Fraud on the PTO, however, requires a higher threshold showing of both intent and materiality than does a finding of inequitable conduct. Indeed, there must be clear evidence of deceptive intent and a clear showing that the examiner would not have issued the patent but for the misrepresentation or omission.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN8 [down arrow] Defenses, Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has held that summary judgment is seldom appropriate in cases in which particular states of mind are decisive as elements of a claim or defense. In Morrison v. Nissan Motor Co., Ltd., the Fourth Circuit cautioned that cases which turn on a finding of intent are not appropriate for summary judgment since resolution of that issue depends on the credibility of witnesses as determined by the trier of fact after observation of the witnesses' demeanor during direct and cross-examination. The principles enunciated by the Fourth Circuit in Charbonnages de France v. Smith and Morrison v. Nissan Motor Co., Ltd. apply with particular emphasis in patent cases involving issues of fraud or inequitable conduct. In holding that issues of fraud or inequitable conduct are usually not appropriate for resolution by way of a motion for summary judgment, the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has stated that a summary judgment of fraud or inequitable conduct, reached while denying to the person accused of the fraud or inequitable conduct the opportunity to be heard on the issue, is a draconian result.

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > General Overview

**HN9** [blue download icon] Patent Law, US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings

References to prior art play a significant role in the application process for a patent. Applicants for patents have a duty of candor and good faith in dealing with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (PTO), which includes a duty to disclose to the PTO all information known to that individual to be material to patentability. 37 C.F.R. § 1.56. However, the duty of candor and good faith requires more than the obligation merely to bring material prior art to the attention of the PTO, and the issue is whether the plaintiff's argument to the examiner on appeal was contrary to the actual state-of-art.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Fraudulent Procurement of Patent

**HN10** [blue download icon] Misuse of Rights, Patent Misuse Defense

The holder of a patent is generally immune from antitrust liability. Nevertheless, the United States Supreme Court established in Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp. that the fraudulent procurement of a patent or the enforcement of a patent knowingly obtained by fraud on the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) may be the basis of an action under § 2 of the Sherman Act, provided that the other elements of a Sherman Act claim are present. Thus, one who procures a patent by defrauding the PTO is stripped of antitrust immunity. In Walker Process, the Supreme Court provided the guiding principles that where a patentee obtains its patent by fraud, it cannot enjoy the limited exception to the prohibitions of § 2 of the Sherman Act, but must answer under that section and § 4 of the Clayton Act in treble damages to those injured by any monopolistic action taken under the fraudulent patent claim. Nor can the interest in protecting patentees from innumerable vexatious suits be used to frustrate the assertion of rights conferred by the antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

**HN11** [blue download icon] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

Although the failure of a party to respond to a summary judgment motion may leave uncontested those facts established by the motion, the moving party must still show that the uncontested facts entitle the party to a judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

**HN12** [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish an antitrust violation under the Sherman Act, a party must show (i) a specific attempt by the another party to monopolize the relevant market, and (ii) a dangerous probability that the attempt would be successful in achieving a monopoly in the relevant market.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Marking

HN13 [ ] Defenses, Marking

Under 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\), a patentee or other party selling a patented product under the patent must mark that product as patented in order to give the public notice. In cases where a patent owner sells a product embodying the invention, a patent owner may seek damages for infringement occurring during a period in which the accused infringer had actual or constructive notice of the asserted patent. 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\). A patentee may provide constructive notice of a patent through marking the patented product with the word "patent" or the abbreviation "pat.", together with the number of the patent. 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\). If the product itself cannot feasibly be marked, then packaging containing the patented product may be marked instead. 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\). If the patentee fails to comply, he may only recover damages for the period after the infringer was actually notified of the infringement, and, under 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\), the filing of an action for infringement shall constitute such notice. 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\). A patentee's licensees also must mark products with the patent number, and when the failure to mark is caused by someone other than the patentee, the court may consider whether the patentee made reasonable efforts to ensure compliance with the marking requirements.

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Marking

HN14 [ ] Burdens of Proof, Allocation

A patentee bears the burden to prove compliance with the marking statute, 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\). In addition, compliance with the marking statute is a question of fact. Nevertheless, this issue is properly decided upon summary judgment when no reasonable jury could find that the patentee either has or has not provided actual notice to the 'particular defendants by informing them of his patent and of their infringement of it.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Marking

HN15 [ ] Defenses, Marking

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 287\(a\).

Counsel: For BANNER PHARMACAPS, INC., Plaintiff: ANTHONY B. ASKEW, JASON M. PASS, KATRINA M. QUICKER, STEPHEN M. SCHAETZEL, KILPATRICK & STOCKTON, ATLANTA, GA.; JAMES JASON LINK, JOHN STEVEN GARDNER, E. DANIELLE THOMPSON WILLIAMS, KILPATRICK STOCKTON, L.L.P., WINSTON-SALEM, NC.; PETER M. BOYLE, KILPATRICK STOCKTON, L.L.P., WASHINGTON, DC.

For PERRIGO COMPANY, L. PERRIGO COMPANY, PERRIGO COMPANY OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Defendants: AARON J. WONG, DOUG SIEGEL, HAROLD W. REICK, JAMES MITCHELL, PRICE HENEVELD COOPER DEWITT & LITTON, GRAND RAPIDS, MI.; DAVID DREIFUS, POYNER & SPRUILL, L.L.P., RALEIGH, NC.

For L. PERRIGO COMPANY, Counter-Claimant: DAVID DREIFUS, POYNER & SPRUILL, L.L.P., RALEIGH, NC.; JAMES MITCHELL, PRICE HENEVELD COOPER DEWITT & LITTON, GRAND RAPIDS, MI.

For BANNER PHARMACAPS, INC., Counter-Defendant: ANTHONY B. ASKEW, KATRINA M. QUICKER, STEPHEN M. SCHAETZEL, KILPATRICK & STOCKTON, ATLANTA, GA.; JOHN STEVEN GARDNER, KILPATRICK STOCKTON, L.L.P., WINSTON-SALEM, NC.

Judges: Wallace W. Dixon, United States Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: Wallace W. Dixon

Opinion

---

RECOMMENDATION OF UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

This matter is before the court on Plaintiff's [*2] motion for partial summary judgment (docket no. 34). Defendant L. Perrigo has responded in opposition (docket no. 47), and Plaintiff has replied (docket no. 51). In this posture, this matter is ripe for disposition. Furthermore, because the parties have not consented to the jurisdiction of a magistrate judge, the court must deal with the motion by way of recommendation.

I. Background

Plaintiff Banner designs, manufactures, and sells pharmaceutical products, including over-the-counter medications for the treatment of cold, cough, flu, allergy, and other ailments. App. 11, Francis Aff. P 3. Banner employees conceived of a form of medication wherein a tablet, or "core," is enrobed in a gelatin covering formed by two layers of elastic gelatin film on opposite sides of the tablet. App. 1, '516 Parent, Abstract; App. 11, Francis Aff. P 3. These products are commercially known as Banner's Softlet(R) products. In 2002, Banner obtained a patent on these products, Banner Patent 6,482,516 (the "516 patent"). Defendant L. Perrigo Company ("L. Perrigo") is a pharmaceutical company which manufactures and sells lower-priced, store-brand alternatives to comparable brand over-the-counter [*3] pharmaceutical products. Banner is a vendor to pharmaceutical companies such as L. Perrigo and for some time supplied to L. Perrigo its gelatin film-enrobed tablets in bulk quantities. Plaintiff has now sued L. Perrigo, its parent and its sister company, accusing them of infringing on the '516 patent. L. Perrigo has counterclaimed, seeking a declaratory judgment that the '516 patent is invalid for several reasons and unenforceable due to Banner's inequitable conduct and fraud in obtaining the '516 patent. L. Perrigo has also counterclaimed that Banner has used the fraudulently obtained patent in violation of anti-trust laws. Finally, L. Perrigo argues that even if Banner wins on the patent invalidity and contested infringement issues, Banner may recover damages only from June 4, 2004, the date it filed its complaint. According to L. Perrigo, this is so because Banner failed to properly mark its Softlet(R) products with the '516 patent number in accordance with 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\) and, thus, failed to give constructive notice of the patent. Plaintiff now seeks partial summary judgment on the following questions: (1) whether L. Perrigo has literally infringed Claims [*4] 8, 12, 13, and 14 of the '516 Patent; (2) whether summary judgment should be granted as to L. Perrigo's counterclaims for inequitable conduct, fraud, and anti-trust; and (3) whether Banner marked its Softlet(R) products in compliance with 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\), thereby giving constructive notice to the public that these products were patented.

II. Discussion

HN1 [↑] Under Rule 56\(c\), summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." FED. R. CIV. P. 56\(c\). A party seeking summary judgment "bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the [record] which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\). Once the moving party has met its burden, the non-moving party must then set forth "specific facts showing that there [*5] is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\) (quoting FED. R. CIV. P. 56\(e\)).

HN2[] In making a determination on a summary judgment motion, the court views the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, according that party the benefit of all reasonable inferences. Bailey v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 67 F.3d 53, 56 \(4th Cir. 1995\). Mere allegations and denials, however, are insufficient to establish a genuine issue of material fact. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\). Judges are not "required to submit a question to a jury merely because some evidence has been introduced by the party having the burden of proof, unless the evidence be of such a character that it would warrant the jury in finding a verdict in favor of that party." Id. at 251 (citations omitted). Thus, the moving party can bear its burden either by presenting affirmative evidence or by demonstrating that the non-moving party's evidence is insufficient to establish its claim. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 331 [*6] (Brennan, J., dissenting). "[A] complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of [a plaintiff's] case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323. The Federal Circuit has clearly determined that summary judgment is available in patent cases as it is in any other type of case. Barmag Barmer Maschinenfabrik AG v. Murata Mach., Ltd., 731 F.2d 831, 835 \(Fed. Cir. 1984\).

Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment As to Whether Claims 8, 12, 13, and 14 of the '516 Patent Have Been Infringed

Here, the court first addresses whether partial summary judgment should be granted to Plaintiff on the issue of literal infringement of certain claims of the '516 patent. HN3[] A patent is literally infringed if every element it recites in a given claim or claims is present in the accused product. 35 U.S.C. § 271. The patentee has the burden of proving infringement by a preponderance of the evidence. Deering Precision Instruments, L.L.C. v. Vector Distribution Sys., Inc., 347 F.3d 1314, 1324-27 \(Fed. Cir. 2003\). By contrast, a patent is presumed valid and an accused infringer [*7] has the burden of overcoming this presumption by clear and convincing evidence. 35 U.S.C. § 282; Iron Grip Barbell Co. v. USA Sports, Inc., 392 F.3d 1317, 1320 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\). A court should employ a two-step analysis in making an infringement determination. Markman v. Westview Instruments, Inc., 52 F.3d 967, 976 \(Fed. Cir. 1995\). First, the court must construe the asserted claims to ascertain their meaning and scope. Id. Construction of the claims is a question of law subject to de novo review. Cybor Corp. v. FAS Techs., Inc., 138 F.3d 1448, 1454 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\). The trier of fact must then compare the properly construed claims with the accused infringing product. Markman, 52 F.3d at 976. This second step is a question of fact. Bai v. L & L Wings, Inc., 160 F.3d 1350, 1353 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\).

Here, Plaintiff Banner alleges that Defendant L. Perrigo and the other defendants have literally infringed Claims 8 and 12-14 of the '516 patent by offering for sale and selling film-enrobed, unitary-core tablets that meet the limitations of those claims. More specifically, Plaintiff [*8] argues that L. Perrigo's products with a gelatin to plasticizer ratio of 4.8:1 infringe Claims 8, 12, 13, and 14 of the '516 Patent. Plaintiff has offered affidavit and other testimony as to literal infringement of these claims. In response, Defendant has not offered any summary judgment evidence to rebut Plaintiff's contention of literal infringement of these claims. Indeed, Defendant concedes literal infringement of these particular claims if the patent is valid and enforceable, but Defendant argues that the patent is neither valid nor enforceable. Specifically, Defendant states in its brief:

L. Perrigo has countered that it does not infringe some of the claims of the '516 patent, but has agreed that some of the very broad claims would be infringed, if they were valid. Banner has moved for summary judgment on infringement of those claims, which L. Perrigo asks to be deferred or otherwise dealt with in such a way as to avoid prejudice in the trial of the remainder of the case.

D.'s Br. p. 2. This statement by Defendant L. Perrigo appears to be nothing less than a clear admission of literal infringement of Claims 8, 12, 13, and 14 of the '516 patent. The court should, [*9] therefore, grant summary judgment to Plaintiff on the issue of whether Defendant's products with a gelatin to plasticizer ratio of 4.8:1 literally infringe Claims 8, 12, 13, and 14 of the '516 patent. The remaining disputed issue, therefore, is whether summary judgment is appropriate as to Defendant's counterclaims, including that the patent is unenforceable because of inequitable conduct and fraud and that Plaintiff has committed anti-trust violations.<sup>1</sup>

[*10] Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment As to Defendant's Counterclaims for Inequitable Conduct, Fraud, and Anti-trust Violations

Plaintiff has moved for summary judgment on Defendant's counterclaims that the patent is unenforceable due to Plaintiff's inequitable conduct, fraud, and anti-trust violations. Defendant's allegations of inequitable conduct, fraud, and antitrust liability are based on the assertion that Plaintiff misrepresented the state-of-art during an appeal on the denial of a patent. Defendant specifically points to prior art references for United States Patent 4,154,636 to Motoyama (Motoyama), United States Patent 2,775,081 to Stirn et al. (Stirn), and United States Patent 2,155,444 to Pittenger et al. (Pittenger). In opposing summary judgment on this issue, Defendant does not argue that Plaintiff failed to disclose these references during the application process in general. Indeed, it is undisputed that Plaintiff did disclose these references. Instead, Defendant argues that Plaintiff failed to disclose these references while distinguishing other references upon which the examiner had relied. Answer and Countercl., PP 40-43. Specifically, Defendant argues [*11] that Plaintiff (1) positively misrepresented the state-of-the-art of film-enrobed tablets; (2) misrepresented the state-of-the-art of gelatin formulations used to enrobe liquid core products, which included formulations in the range claimed in the '516 patent application and which were known to Plaintiff; and (3) allowed the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office Patent Office ("PTO") to make an obvious error in allowing the "tenacious adherence" claims, when it failed to point out that the Pittenger '444 patent claimed that the film on its film-enrobed tablets adhered "tenaciously" to the tablet cores. See Def.'s Br. in Opp'n, p. 15. Defendant further argues that Plaintiff "did these things to intentionally mislead and deceive" the PTO. Id.

HN5 Every applicant for a patent has a duty of candor and good faith in its dealing with the PTO and the Examiner handling his application. This means that the applicant and his lawyer must not intentionally withhold or misrepresent material information concerning the invention, as defined by the asserted claim. A breach of this duty is inequitable conduct and renders the patent unenforceable. To find that a patent applicant engaged in inequitable [*12] conduct in the pursuit of a patent, a court must find by clear and convincing evidence that the applicant omitted or misrepresented material facts with the intention of misleading or deceiving the examiner. Monsanto Co. v. Bayer BioScience N.V., 363 F.3d 1235, 1239 (Fed. Cir. 2004) (citing Glaxo Inc. v. Novopharm Ltd., 52 F.3d 1043, 1048 (Fed. Cir. 1995)). "Inequitable conduct includes affirmative misrepresentation of a material fact, failure to disclose material information, or submission of false material information, coupled with an intent to deceive." Molins PLC v. Textron, Inc., 48 F.3d 1172, 1178 (Fed. Cir. 1995). Intent can, sometimes, be inferred from misleading conduct itself, Monsanto, 363 F.3d at 1241 (citing Paragon Podiatry Lab., Inc. v. KLM Labs., Inc., 984 F.2d 1182, 1191 (Fed. Cir. 1993)). Even if conduct is found to be misleading on a material point, however, an inference of intent is not required. Monsanto, 363 F.3d at 1241. Finally, the more material the information, the less amount of intent is required, and vice versa.<sup>2</sup> Critikon, Inc. v. Becton Dickinson Vascular Access, Inc., 120 F.3d 1253, 1256 (Fed. Cir. 1997). [*13]

<sup>1</sup> HN4 It is well settled that validity and infringement are separate questions that must be answered independently of each other. See, e.g., Pandrol USA, LP v. Airboss Ry. Prods., Inc., 320 F.3d 1354, 1364 (Fed. Cir. 2003) (where the defendants "did not waive the right to a trial on the issue of invalidity by failing to raise it in opposition to the cross-motion for summary judgment as to the issue of infringement"); Medtronic, Inc. v. Cardiac Pacemakers, Inc., 721 F.2d 1563, 1583 (Fed. Cir. 1983) (clarifying that "though an invalid claim cannot give rise to liability for infringement, whether it is infringed is an entirely separate question capable of determination without regard to its validity").

<sup>2</sup> HN6 Even if materiality and intent have been adequately demonstrated, the district court must balance the equities to determine whether the patentee has committed inequitable conduct that warrants holding the patent unenforceable. Monsanto Co., 363 F.3d at 1239 (citing Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc. v. Promega Corp., 323 F.3d 1354, 1359 (Fed. Cir. 2003)). Furthermore, the "defense of inequitable conduct is entirely equitable in nature, and [is] thus not an issue for a jury to decide." PerSeptive Biosystems, Inc. v. Pharmacia Biotech, Inc., 225 F.3d 1315, 1318 (Fed. Cir. 2000). A patentee, therefore, has no right to a jury trial respecting the factual element of culpable intent as part of the defense of inequitable conduct. Id. Thus, a disputed finding of HN7[] The legal standard for fraud on the PTO is similar to that of inequitable [*14] conduct in that it requires that a patentee make a material misrepresentation to the PTO or withhold information material to the prosecution of the patent. Unitherm Food Sys., Inc. v. Swift-Eckrich, Inc., 375 F.3d 1341, 1358 (Fed. Cir. 2004); Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1069 (Fed. Cir. 1998). Fraud on the PTO, however, requires a "higher threshold showing of both intent and materiality than does a finding of inequitable conduct." Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1070-71. Indeed, there must be clear evidence of deceptive intent and a clear showing that the examiner would not have issued the patent but for the misrepresentation or omission. Id. at 1070; see also Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Ben Venue Lab., 90 F. Supp. 2d 540, 542 (D.N.J. 2000).

HN8[] The Fourth Circuit has held that summary judgment is seldom appropriate in cases in which particular states of mind are decisive as elements of a claim or defense. Charbonnages de France v. Smith, 597 F.2d 406, 414 (4th Cir. 1979). In Morrison v. Nissan Motor Co., Ltd., 601 F.2d 139, 141 (4th Cir. 1979), [*15] the Fourth Circuit cautioned that cases which turn on a finding of intent are not appropriate for summary judgment since resolution of that issue depends on the credibility of witnesses as determined by the trier of fact after observation of the witnesses' demeanor during direct and cross-examination. The principles enunciated by the Fourth Circuit in the Charbonnages and Morrison cases apply with particular emphasis in patent cases involving issues of fraud or inequitable conduct. In holding that issues of fraud or inequitable conduct are usually not appropriate for resolution by way of a motion for summary judgment, the Federal Circuit has stated that:

[a] summary judgment of fraud or inequitable conduct, reached while denying to the person accused of the fraud or inequitable conduct the opportunity to be heard on the issue, is a draconian result.

KangaROOS U.S.A., Inc. v. Caldor, Inc., 778 F.2d 1571, 1573-74 (Fed. Cir. 1985); see also Paragon Podiatry, 984 F.2d at 1190 (observing that "the intent element of fraud or inequitable conduct . . . requires the fact finder to evaluate all the facts and circumstances in each case" [*16] and therefore "such an evaluation is rarely enabled in summary proceedings").

Here, having considered the alleged prior art patents cited by Defendant along with expert witness testimony, depositions, affidavits, and other evidence submitted by both parties, the court finds that genuine issues of fact exist regarding whether, in prosecuting the patent application, Plaintiff engaged in inequitable conduct and/or fraud. To grant summary judgment to Plaintiff on Defendant's counterclaim of inequitable conduct and/or fraud, this court must be able to conclude from the evidence in the summary judgment record that Defendant has been unable raise a genuine issue of fact as to whether (1) Plaintiff either omitted or misrepresented material prior art references; (2) that any of these omissions or misrepresentations were made without the requisite "knowing and willful" intent; or (3) that these omissions or misrepresentations could have been the but-for cause of the patent's issuance. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Defendant as the non-movant, this court cannot summarily make such conclusions. Defendant has produced summary judgment evidence that sufficiently raises the [*17] issues of whether Plaintiff intentionally misled and deceived the examiner by misrepresenting the "state of the art" during the appeal stage of the patent prosecution, used an inappropriate subjective double standard to assess the "state of the art," failed to disclose prior art teachings that directly contradicted its statements made to the examiner, and cited only those relevant documents that supported its arguments and not those which were contrary to its arguments.

The court notes that in its reply to Defendant's response to the summary judgment motion, Plaintiff does not adequately address Defendant's claims that Plaintiff violated its duty of candor by misrepresenting the state of the prior art to the examiner during the appeal stage. Plaintiff argues simply that because it is undisputed that it did disclose the Motoyama, Stirn, and Pittenger prior art references in the grandparent and parent applications of the '516 patent, it cannot be found to have engaged in fraud or inequitable conduct on the PTO as a matter of law. HN9[] References to prior art play a significant role in the application process for a patent. Applicants for patents have a "duty of candor and good faith in dealing [*18] with the [PTO], which includes a duty to disclose to the [PTO] all information known to that individual to be material to patentability . . ." 37 C.F.R. § 1.56. The court agrees with Defendant, however, that the duty of candor and good faith requires more than the obligation merely to bring material prior art to the attention of the PTO, and the issue is whether Plaintiff's argument to the examiner on appeal was contrary to the actual state-of-art. Plaintiff, the movant, has failed to demonstrate to this court that these particular questions can be answered as a matter of law. Thus, it will be recommended that the court deny Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment as to Defendant's counterclaims alleging that the '516 patent is unenforceable due to inequitable conduct and fraud.

As for Defendant's counterclaim alleging that Plaintiff violated antitrust law, Defendant asserts that Plaintiff obtained the '516 patent by committing fraud upon the PTO and thereafter used the patent to exclude parties from the relevant market. Defendant argues that Plaintiff has therefore violated federal antitrust law, specifically the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 et seq., [*19] "by attempting to acquire and/or maintain unlawful monopoly power in the American market for film enrobed tablets and caplets." Answer and Countercl., P 64. Plaintiff requests that this court grant summary judgment on Defendant's counterclaim for anti-trust violations, arguing that anti-trust liability can only attach after fraud on the PTO is established and that, as a matter of law, Plaintiff has not committed fraud on the PTO. For the following reasons, it will recommended that the court deny Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment as to this counterclaim.

HN10[<sup>1</sup>] The holder of a patent is generally immune from anti-trust liability. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court established in Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965), that the fraudulent procurement of a patent or the enforcement of a patent knowingly obtained by fraud on the PTO may be the basis of an action under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, provided that the other elements of a Sherman Act claim are present.<sup>3</sup> 382 U.S. at 177, 177 n.5. Thus, one who procures a patent by defrauding the PTO is stripped of anti-trust immunity. Walker Process Equip., Inc., 382 U.S. at 174. [*20] The Walker Process Court provides the guiding principles that:

since [the patentee] obtained its patent by fraud it cannot enjoy the limited exception to the prohibitions of § 2 of the Sherman Act, but must answer under that section and § 4 of the Clayton Act in treble damages to those injured by any monopolistic action taken under the fraudulent patent claim. Nor can the interest in protecting patentees from "innumerable vexatious suits" be used to frustrate the assertion of rights conferred by the antitrust laws. It must be remembered that we deal only with a special class of patents, i.e., those procured by intentional fraud.

Id. at 176. As previously discussed, the court has found that there is an issue of fact as to whether Plaintiff committed fraud in obtaining the '516 patent. Thus, summary judgment cannot not be granted to Plaintiff on Defendant's counterclaim for anti-trust violations. Plaintiff argues that because Defendant does not address the anti-trust claim in its reply to Plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment it has, therefore, waived its anti-trust claim. The court does not agree. The court has already found that issues [*21] of fact exist as to whether Plaintiff obtained the patent through fraud, and the anti-trust is necessarily based on a finding of fraud. Thus, summary judgment should not be granted to Plaintiff on Defendant's counterclaim alleging anti-trust violations. As the Fourth Circuit has made clear, HN11[<sup>1</sup>] "although the failure of a party to respond to a summary judgment motion may leave uncontested those facts established by the motion, the moving party must still show that the uncontested facts entitle the party to 'a judgment as a matter of law.'" Custer v. Pan Am. Life Ins. Co., 12 F.3d 410, 416 (4th Cir. 1993) (emphasis added). Here, this court finds that the material facts relevant to the anti-trust claim are in dispute because the anti-trust issue cannot be separated from the fraud issue. Therefore, the court should deny Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment as to this counterclaim.

[*22] Plaintiff's Motion for Summary Judgment on the Issue of Whether Banner Properly Marked its Products with the '516 Patent Number

<sup>3</sup> HN12[<sup>1</sup>] To establish an anti-trust violation under the Sherman Act, Defendant must show (i) a specific attempt by Plaintiff to monopolize the relevant market, and (ii) a dangerous probability that the attempt would be successful in achieving a monopoly in the relevant market. See Loctite Corp. v. Ultraseal Ltd., 781 F.2d 861, 875 (Fed. Cir. 1985).

Before addressing the parties' arguments regarding marking, the court will first explain the general marking requirements for patent law. HN13<sup>4</sup> Under 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\), a patentee or other party selling a patented product under the patent must mark that product as patented in order to give the public notice.<sup>4</sup> In cases where a patent owner sells a product embodying the invention, a patent owner may seek damages for infringement occurring during a period in which the accused infringer had actual or constructive notice of the asserted patent. See 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\). A patentee may provide constructive notice of a patent through marking the patented product with "the word 'patent' or the abbreviation 'pat.', together with the number of the patent." 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\). If the product itself cannot feasibly be marked, then packaging containing the patented product may be marked instead. Id. If the patentee fails to comply, he may only recover damages for the period after the [*23] infringer was actually notified of the infringement, and, under § 287\(a\), the "filing of an action for infringement shall constitute such notice." 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\). A patentee's licensees also must mark products with the patent number, and "when the failure to mark is caused by someone other than the patentee, the court may consider whether the patentee made reasonable efforts to ensure compliance with the marking requirements." Maxwell v. J. Baker, Inc., 86 F.3d 1098, 1111-12 \(Fed. Cir. 1996\). HN14<sup>5</sup> The patentee bears the burden to prove compliance with the marking statute. Id. at 1112-13. Finally, compliance with the marking statute is a question of fact. Gart v. Logitech, Inc., 254 F.3d 1334, 1339 \(Fed. Cir. 2001\). Nevertheless, "this issue is properly decided upon summary judgment when no reasonable jury could find that the patentee either has or has not provided actual notice to the 'particular defendants by informing them of his patent and of their infringement of it.'" Id. (quoting Amsted Indus. Inc. v. Buckeye Steel Castings Co., 24 F.3d 178, 187 \(Fed. Cir. 1994\)).

[*24] Here, Plaintiff has moved for summary judgment on the issue of marking, asking this court to conclude that Plaintiff marked its Softlet(R) products in compliance with 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\), thereby giving notice to the public, including Defendant L. Perrigo, that these articles are patented. The '516 patent issued on November 19, 2002, and Plaintiff asserts that less than two months later, on January 10, 2003, Plaintiff began marking the containers for all of its products covered by the '516 patent with that patent number and that it has consistently done so since that date.<sup>5</sup> Thus, according to Plaintiff, if the court ultimately finds that it is entitled to damages on Defendant's infringement, then it may recover damages from that date.

[*25] Defendant counters that genuine issues of material fact exist as to whether (1) Plaintiff actually marked containers used to provide bulk product to Defendant and whether (2) "the tiny printed patent number on [Plaintiff]'s label provided notice to the public of [Plaintiff]'s patent." Br. in Opp'n, pp. 15-16. As evidence, Defendant offers an affidavit by Tim Adamczyk, the warehouse manager for L. Perrigo, stating that the containers were barrels, not boxes as Plaintiff has argued, and that the barrels were never marked with any patent number. Id. at 16 (citing Ex. F., Adamczyk Decl., PP 2-3, and 4, respectively). Attached to the Adamczyk affidavit is a sample label from September 1998, offered as an example of the manner in which Plaintiff labeled its products with the '516 patent. Adamczyk Decl. P 5. Defendant further claims that it and the other bulk purchasers of Plaintiff's gelatin-enrobed tablets were implied licensees and, therefore, should have been instructed to mark the finished products with the '516 patent. Defendant argues that the absence of this requirement between Plaintiff and its bulk customers resulted in a failure to provide notice to the public as required [*26] by § 287. According to Defendant, because the patented products sold to end users were never marked, Plaintiff is precluded from recovering damages prior to the date that it actually notified Defendant of the alleged infringement, which Defendant contends was June 4, 2004, the date when the original complaint was filed. In response, Plaintiff argues that the sample label from September 1998 that was attached to the Adamczyk affidavit is entirely irrelevant to a patent that was issued in November 2002. Plaintiff also argues that its markings comply with 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\) since that section has no requirement of "font size or the like." Finally, Plaintiff argues in reply that Defendant is a customer, and not an implied licensee, and was not, therefore, required to mark the finished products with Plaintiff's patent number.

<sup>4</sup> 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\) provides, in pertinent part:

HN15<sup>5</sup> Patentees, and persons making, offering for sale, or selling within the United States any patented article for or under them, or importing any patented article into the United States, may give notice to the public that the same is patented, either by fixing thereon the word "patent" or the abbreviation "pat.", together with the number of the patent, or when, from the character of the article, this can not be done, by fixing to it, or to the package wherein one or more of them is contained, a label containing a like notice. In the event of failure so to mark, no damages shall be recovered by the patentee in any action for infringement, except on proof that the infringer was notified of the infringement and continued to infringe thereafter, in which event damages may be recovered only for infringement occurring after such notice. Filing of an action for infringement shall constitute such notice.

<sup>5</sup> Plaintiff states that since the individual tablets are far too small to display such a notice, Plaintiff "properly marked the container in which the tablets are shipped to its customers in accordance with 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\)." Pl.'s Br. Supp. Summ. J. at p. 19.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Defendant as the nonmovant, this court cannot grant Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on the issue of whether the products or product containers in question were marked in accordance with 35 U.S.C. § 287\(a\). First, the distinction between customer and implied licensee, [*27] and the question of how that distinction affects Plaintiff's responsibility regarding marking and noticing the public, simply cannot be decided on the pleadings thus far. Furthermore, there is a question of fact as to whether the containers were marked at all, as well as what type of containers were used, and the specific size of the markings. Although the sample label which Defendant provided in the Adamczyk deposition predates the issuance of the '516 patent, Adamczyk declares under oath that he never saw a container marked with the patent information. In sum, there are genuine issues of fact as to marking. It will, therefore, be recommended that the court deny Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment as to this issue.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed herein, it is recommended that Plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment be GRANTED as to whether Defendant has literally infringed Claims 8, 12, 13, and 14 of the '516 patent, and DENIED as to the issues of inequitable conduct, fraud, anti-trust liability, and marking.

Wallace W. Dixon

United States Magistrate Judge

Durham, NC

August 1, 2005

---

End of Document

McBee v. Delica Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

August 2, 2005, Decided

No. 04-2733

Reporter

417 F.3d 107 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 15826 **; 75 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1609 ***; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,904

CECIL McBEE, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. DELICA CO., LTD., Defendant, Appellee.

Prior History: [**1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MAINE.
[Hon. Gene Carter, Senior U.S. District Judge].

McBee v. Delica Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23414 \(D. Me., Nov. 19, 2004\)

Core Terms

---

Lanham Act, sales, website, extraterritorial, commerce, subject matter jurisdiction, substantial effect, consumers, trademark, products, personal jurisdiction, district court, no evidence, infringing, injunction, clothing, shipped, investigators, domestic, touring, courts, McBee's Lanham Act, cases, magistrate judge, endorsement, import, claim for damages, reputation, questions, purposes

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Tribunals

HN1[] Lanham Act, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

In addressing questions of extraterritoriality, the United States Supreme Court considers Congressional intent, employing various presumptions designed to avoid unnecessary international conflict. Unless a contrary intent appears, legislation of Congress is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

HN2 Lanham Act, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

The Lanham Act can sometimes be used to reach extraterritorial conduct, but the United States Supreme Court has never laid down a precise test for when such reach would be appropriate. Circuit courts have established a variety of tests for determining when extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act is appropriate, treating different factual contexts as all subject to the same set of criteria.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

International Law > ... > Comity Doctrine > Areas of Law > Commercial Transactions

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

HN3 Lanham Act, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

To demonstrate extraterritorial application, a Lanham Act (Act) plaintiff must show (1) some effect on United States commerce, (2) an effect that is sufficiently great to be a cognizable injury to plaintiff under the Act, and (3) the interests and links to American commerce that are sufficiently strong in relation to those of other nations to justify, in terms of comity, an extraterritorial application of the Act.

International Trade Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Jurisdiction

HN4 International Trade Law

The Lanham Act (Act) confers broad jurisdiction, as its purpose is to regulate commerce within the control of Congress. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1127. The Act prohibits the use of certain infringing marks in commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1114\(1\), 1125\(a\). Commerce is defined, in § 1127 of the Act, as all commerce which may lawfully be regulated by Congress.

Governments > Federal Government > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN5 Governments, Federal Government

The power of Congress to regulate the conduct of its own citizens may extend to extraterritorial conduct. That doctrine is based on the idea that Congressional power over American citizens is a matter of domestic law that raises no serious international concerns, even when the citizen is located abroad.

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN6 International Law, Authority to Regulate

An American citizen cannot evade the thrust of the laws of the United States by moving his or her operations to a privileged sanctuary beyond its borders.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

HN7 Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

When a purported trademark infringer is not an American citizen, and the alleged illegal activities occur outside the United States, the analysis appears to rest solely on the foreign commerce power. However, the Lanham Act can be applied against foreign corporations or individuals in appropriate cases.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

International Trade Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > Foreign & International Protection > Enforcement of Foreign Trademark Rights

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Trademark Law > Foreign & International Protection > General Overview

HN8 Lanham Act, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

In both the antitrust and the Lanham Act areas, there is a risk that absent a certain degree of extraterritorial enforcement, violators will either take advantage of international coordination problems or hide in countries without efficacious antitrust or trademark laws, thereby avoiding legal authority.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

417 F.3d 107, *107LAW2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 15826, **1LAW25 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1609, ***1609

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

HN9 [blue icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

American jurisdiction over foreign conduct exists under the antitrust laws if that conduct is meant to produce and does in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Dispute Resolution > Conflict of Law > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Conflict of Law, Jurisdiction

Comity considerations, such as whether relief ordered by an American court would conflict with foreign law, are properly understood not as questions of whether a United States court possesses subject matter jurisdiction, but instead as issues of whether such a court should decline to exercise the jurisdiction that it possesses.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Lanham Act, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

The United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit holds that the Lanham Act grants subject matter jurisdiction over extraterritorial conduct by foreign defendants only where the conduct has a substantial effect on United States commerce. Absent a showing of such a substantial effect, at least as to foreign defendants, the court lacks jurisdiction over the Lanham Act claim. Congress has little reason to assert jurisdiction over foreign defendants who are engaging in activities that have no substantial effect on the United States, and courts, absent an express statement from Congress, have no good reason to go further in such situations. Where the government's interest in a transaction is remote, minor, tangential, or otherwise insignificant, the government would presumably not seek to control it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

HN12 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

The substantial effects test requires that there be evidence of impacts within the United States, and these impacts must be of a sufficient character and magnitude to give the United States a reasonably strong interest in the litigation. The "substantial effects" test must be applied in light of the core purposes of the Lanham Act, which are both to protect the ability of American consumers to avoid confusion and to help assure a trademark's owner that it will reap the financial and reputational rewards associated with having a desirable name or product. The goal of the jurisdictional test is to ensure that the United States has a sufficient interest in the litigation, as measured by the interests protected by the Lanham Act, to assert jurisdiction.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

HN13 [blue icon] Lanham Act, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

Where the substantial effects test is met in a Lanham Act claim against a foreign defendant, the court should proceed, in appropriate cases, to consider the doctrine of comity.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

Where all the relevant facts are undisputed and a district court did not make any finding of fact, an appellate court's review of a challenge for lack of subject matter jurisdiction is de novo, and the burden is on the party asserting the claim to establish jurisdiction.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Contracts, Sales of Goods

Congress has the power to enjoin sales of infringing goods into the United States, and, as a matter of Congressional intent, Congress intended to reach such sales via the Lanham Act. Courts distinguish between domestic acts of a foreign infringer and foreign acts of that foreign infringer; the extraterritoriality analysis to determine jurisdiction attaches only to the latter.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 6\(a\)\(1\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

Computer & Internet Law > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > Internet Business > General Overview

Computer & Internet Law > ... > Trademark Protection > Civil Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Lanham Act, Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

The mere existence of a website that is visible in a forum and that gives information about a company and its products is not enough, by itself, to subject a defendant to personal jurisdiction in that forum. Something more is necessary, such as interactive features which allow the successful online ordering of the defendant's products. The mere existence of a website does not show that a defendant is directing its business activities towards every forum where the website is visible; as well, given the omnipresence of Internet websites today, allowing personal jurisdiction to be premised on such a contact alone would eviscerate the limits on a state's jurisdiction over out-of-state or foreign defendants.

Trademark Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Dilution of Famous Marks > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

Confusion and reputational harm in the eyes of American consumers can often, although not always, be inferred from the fact that American consumers have been exposed to an infringing mark. But no inference of dilution or other harm can be made where American citizens are not exposed to the infringing product.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Extraterritorial Jurisdiction

HN19[] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

Courts may consider sales diverted from American companies in foreign countries in their analyses of a Lanham Act claim against a foreign defendant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Baseless Filings > General Overview

HN20[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

A federal court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over claims that involve no real federal controversy, where the claims clearly appear to be immaterial and made solely for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction or where such a claim is wholly insubstantial and frivolous. The test is whether, legally, there is any real federal interest involved in the case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > State Sovereign Immunity > State Immunity

HN21[] Jurisdiction, In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction

The requirements of personal jurisdiction are not rooted in U.S. Const. art. III, although they do have constitutional resonance through the Due Process clause. Unlike subject matter jurisdiction under Article III, which goes to the fundamental institutional competence of the court and can be raised sua sponte at any time, personal jurisdiction is an individual liberty right and is therefore waivable; a court cannot raise personal jurisdiction sua sponte.

417 F.3d 107, *107LÁ2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 15826, **1LÁ5 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1609, ***1609

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN22[ In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

A court will not force a defendant to expend resources on difficult personal jurisdiction issues and will not reach more difficult issues where there is an exceptionally easy method on the merits for the defendant to prevail.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN23[ Appellate Review, Standards of Review

Where questions raised on appeal were decided on a summary judgment record, the reviewing court may affirm on any ground supported by that record.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN24[ Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Absent any viable federal claim, a district court's dismissal of pendent state law claims without prejudice to their being refiled in state court is fully appropriate and not an abuse of discretion.

Counsel: Alfred C. Frawley, with whom Robert O. Newton and Preti, Flaherty, Beliveau, Pachios & Haley, LLP were on brief, for plaintiff, appellant.

Todd S. Holbrook, with whom John G. Osborn and Bernstein, Shur, Sawyer & Nelson were on brief, for defendant, appellee.

Judges: Before Selya, Lynch, and Howard, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: LYNCH

Opinion

---

[***1610] [*110] LYNCH, Circuit Judge. It has long been settled that the Lanham Act can, in appropriate cases, be applied extraterritorially. See Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U.S. 280, 97 L. Ed. 319, 73 S. Ct. 252, 1953 Dec.

Comm'r Pat. 424 (1952). This case, dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, requires us, as a matter of first impression for this circuit, to lay out a framework for determining when such extraterritorial use of the Lanham Act is proper.

In doing so, we choose not to adopt the formulations used by various other circuits. See, e.g., Reebok Int'l, Ltd. v. Marnatech Enters., 970 F.2d 552, 554-57 (9th Cir. 1992); Vanity Fair Mills v. T. Eaton Co., 234 F.2d 633, 642-43 (2d Cir. 1956). [**2] The best-known test, the Vanity Fair test, asks (1) whether the defendant is an American citizen, (2) whether the defendant's [*111] actions have a substantial effect on United States commerce, and (3) whether relief would create a conflict with foreign law. 234 F.2d at 642-43. These three prongs are given an uncertain weight. Based on Steele and subsequent Supreme Court case law, we disaggregate the three prongs of the Vanity Fair test, identify the different types of "extraterritorial" application questions, and isolate the factors pertinent to subject matter jurisdiction.

Our framework asks first whether the defendant is an American citizen; that inquiry is different because a separate constitutional basis for jurisdiction exists for control of activities, even foreign activities, of an American citizen. Further, when the Lanham Act plaintiff seeks to enjoin sales in the United States, there is no question of extraterritorial application; the court has subject matter jurisdiction. [***1611]

In order for a plaintiff to reach foreign activities of foreign defendants in American courts, however, we adopt a separate test. We hold that subject matter jurisdiction under the [**3] Lanham Act is proper only if the complained-of activities have a substantial effect on United States commerce, viewed in light of the purposes of the Lanham Act. If this "substantial effects" question is answered in the negative, then the court lacks jurisdiction over the defendant's extraterritorial acts; if it is answered in the affirmative, then the court possesses subject matter jurisdiction.

We reject the notion that a comity analysis is part of subject matter jurisdiction. Comity considerations, including potential conflicts with foreign trademark law, are properly treated as questions of whether a court should, in its discretion, decline to exercise subject matter jurisdiction that it already possesses. Our approach to each of these issues is in harmony with the analogous rules for extraterritorial application of the antitrust laws. See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 795-99, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 (1993).

The plaintiff, Cecil McBee, an American citizen and resident, seeks to hold the defendant, Delica Co., Ltd. (Delica), responsible for its activities in Japan said to harm McBee's reputation in both Japan and the United States and for Delica's [*4] purported activities in the United States. McBee is a well-known American jazz musician; Delica is a Japanese corporation that adopted the name "Cecil McBee" for its adolescent female clothing line. McBee sued for false endorsement and dilution under the Lanham Act. The district court dismissed all of McBee's Lanham Act claims, concluding that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction. See McBee v. Delica Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23414, No. 02-198-P-C, 2004 WL 2674360 (D. Me. Nov. 19, 2004) (unpublished).

We affirm, albeit on different reasoning. We conclude that the court lacked jurisdiction over McBee's claims seeking (1) an injunction in the United States barring access to Delica's Internet website, which is written in Japanese, and (2) damages for harm to McBee due to Delica's sales in Japan. McBee has made no showing that Delica's activities had a substantial effect on United States commerce. As to McBee's claim for (3) an injunction barring Delica from selling its goods in the United States, we hold that the district court had jurisdiction but conclude that this claim is without merit because the only sales Delica has made into the United States were induced by McBee for purposes of [**5] this litigation, and there is no showing that Delica plans on selling into the United States again.

I.

The relevant facts are basically undisputed. McBee, who lives in both Maine [*112] and New York, is a jazz bassist with a distinguished career spanning over forty-five years. He has performed in the United States and worldwide, has performed on over 200 albums, and has released six albums under his own name (including in Japan). He won a Grammy Award in 1989, was inducted into the Oklahoma Jazz Hall of Fame in 1991, and teaches at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. McBee has toured Japan several times, beginning in the early 1980s, and has performed in many major Japanese cities, including Tokyo. He continues to tour in Japan. McBee has never licensed or authorized the use of his name to anyone, except of course in direct connection with his musical performances, as for example on an album. In his own words, he has sought to "have [his] name associated only with musical excellence."

Delica is a Japanese clothing retailer. In 1984, Delica adopted the trade name "Cecil McBee" for a line of clothing and accessories primarily marketed to teen-aged girls. Delica holds [**6] a Japanese trademark for "Cecil McBee," in both Japanese and Roman or English characters, for a variety of product types. Delica owns and operates retail shops throughout Japan under the brand name "Cecil McBee"; these are the only stores where "Cecil McBee" products are sold. There are no "Cecil McBee" retail shops outside of Japan. Delica sold approximately $ 23 million worth of "Cecil McBee" goods in 1996 and experienced steady growth in sales in subsequent years; in 2002, Delica sold $ 112 million worth of "Cecil McBee" goods.

Delica puts out a "style book" or catalog that includes pictures and descriptions of the products in its "Cecil McBee" line; this style book is written in Japanese with some English words for effect. The style book is available in Japan at the retail stores and in certain other locations; sometimes it is included with shipped packages of "Cecil McBee" products. The style book contains telephone and fax numbers which allow a customer to order "Cecil McBee" merchandise from another [***1612] company, Opus M. Co., Ltd., and have it shipped directly to the customer. Opus M. Co. buys the goods from Delica for this purpose, and then uses yet another company, Hamasho Co. [**7], Ltd., to do the shipping. It is undisputed that Hamasho Co. has never shipped any "Cecil McBee" goods outside of Japan. As described later, Delica's policy generally is to decline orders from the United States.

Delica operates a website, <http://www.cecilmcbee.net>, which contains pictures and descriptions of "Cecil McBee" products, as well as locations and telephone numbers of retail stores selling those products. The website is created and hosted in Japan, and is written almost entirely in Japanese, using Japanese characters (although, like the style book, it contains some English words). The website contains news about the "Cecil McBee" line, including promotions. Customers can log onto the site to access their balance of bonus "points" earned for making past "Cecil McBee" purchases, as well as information about how to redeem those points for additional merchandise. However, the site does not allow purchases of "Cecil McBee" products to be made online. The website can be viewed from anywhere in the Internet-accessible world.

McBee produced evidence that, when searches on Internet search engines (such as Google) are performed for the phrase "Cecil McBee," Delica's website (www.cecilmcbee.net) generally comes up as one of the first few results, and occasionally comes up first, ahead of any of the various websites that describe the musical accomplishments of the plaintiff. Certain other websites associated with Delica's "Cecil [*113] McBee" product line also come up when such searches are performed; like www.cecilmcbee.net, it is evident from the search results page that these websites are written primarily in Japanese characters.

In 1995, plaintiff McBee became aware that Delica was using his name, without his authorization, for a line of clothing in Japan. He contacted an American lawyer, who advised him that Delica was unlikely to be subject to personal jurisdiction in the United States. McBee retained a Japanese attorney, who sent a letter to Delica asking it to cease using the "Cecil McBee" name. When Delica declined, McBee petitioned the Japanese Patent Office to invalidate Delica's English-language trademark on "Cecil McBee."

On February 28, 2002, the Japanese Patent Office ruled Delica's trademark in Japan invalid. However, Delica appealed to the Tokyo High Court, which on December 26, 2002, vacated the decision of the Japanese Patent Office. On remand, [**9] the Japanese Patent Office found for Delica and reinstated Delica's registration of the "Cecil McBee" trademark. McBee appealed that ruling to the Tokyo High Court and lost; the trademark reinstatement has become final.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> The Japanese courts' rationale for finding in favor of Delica was (1) while Japanese law protects a person's full name from exploitation, McBee's full name, including his middle name, was "Cecil Leroy McBee," and thus the "Cecil McBee" line of

In early 2002, Delica formulated a policy not to sell or ship "Cecil McBee" brand products to the United States and informed its managers throughout the company. Delica's admitted reason for this policy was to prevent McBee from being able to sue Delica in the United States.

McBee was beginning to consider just such a [**10] strategy. From December 2001 through early 2003, McBee retained three Japanese-speaking investigators to attempt to purchase "Cecil McBee" products from Delica and have them shipped to Maine. They met with mixed success. One initially, in December 2001, contacted the webmaster of <http://www.cecilmcbee.net> by email, asking about certain jewelry displayed on the website; that webmaster referred the investigator to the "Cecil McBee" retail shops in Japan for further information, but noted that at that time only domestic shipping was available.

The investigators then used the telephone numbers on the <http://www.cecilmcbee.net> website to contact various "Cecil McBee" retail stores in Japan directly. The investigators made it clear that they were residents of the United States inquiring about purchasing "Cecil McBee" goods. When the investigators requested an opportunity to buy merchandise and have it shipped to them in Maine, some stores stated that this could not be done, some of the stores worked out an arrangement whereby they would ship to an address in Japan [***1613] but the investigator would then arrange to have the products forwarded to Maine, and some of the stores, at various times, shipped [**11] directly to the investigators in Maine. The total value of "Cecil McBee" merchandise purchased by these three investigators -- including both goods shipped directly to Maine by Delica and goods shipped via the indirect method -- was approximately $ 2,500. As counsel for McBee has conceded, there is no evidence of any other "Cecil McBee" sales by Delica to the United States.

Further, there is virtually no evidence of "Cecil McBee" brand goods entering the [*114] United States after being sold by Delica in Japan. McBee stated in affidavit that "friends, fellow musicians, fans, students, and others . . . have reported seeing [his] name on clothing, shopping bags [and] merchandise (whether worn or carried by a young girl walking on the street in Boston or New York or elsewhere) . . . ." But no further evidence or detail of these sightings in the United States was provided. McBee also provided evidence that Cecil McBee goods have occasionally been sold on eBay, an auction website that allows bids to be placed and items sold anywhere in the world. Most of the sellers were not located in the United States, and there is no evidence that any of the items were purchased by American buyers.

[**12] McBee states that he finds the use of his name by Delica "undignified, highly offensive and repugnant." He feels that he has been harmed by Delica's use of his name because people have reported to him that they have seen his name on Delica's products, either in the United States or in Japan, or on Delica's website, and have asked him if he endorsed those products. Even when he denies having a relationship with Delica, some people do not believe him, and some have asked him, "both in jest and with some degree of seriousness," whether he is "into young girls," the target audience for Delica's "Cecil McBee" line.<sup>2</sup>

McBee produces little evidence relating to the frequency of such incidents, [**13] nor does he give many specific examples. He testified in deposition that two of his American friends and fellow musicians, while touring Japan, had seen a "Cecil McBee" advertisement created by Delica and had become confused as to whether McBee had some relationship with a clothing line; they asked McBee about the relationship when they returned to the United States. McBee told some of his students at the New England Conservatory of Music about his lawsuit against Delica, in order to help them understand the value of intellectual property law to a musician; some of his students found the Delica website and started rumors of his having a relationship with a women's clothing company. He feels that some of his students may have lost their focus during his classes because they are thinking about his connection to products was not an exact copy of McBee's full name; and (2) McBee received no protection for the abbreviated version of his name, "Cecil McBee," because the name had not received sufficient recognition in general Japanese society.

---

<sup>2</sup> McBee's expert, Joseph McNulty, testified that Delica's use of the name "Cecil McBee" on its Internet website could decrease McBee's ability to receive compensation for lending his name to another company's brand. However, as McBee's own brief points out, McBee has never shown any interest in this kind of product marketing.

women's clothing. Further, his class enrollment has dropped "for one reason or another" and so his position as a professor at the Conservatory has been made more uncertain.

McBee has seen his own name on "Cecil McBee" merchandise in Japan while touring and has become angry. His Japanese touring partner during his recent tours of Japan (from 2002 onwards) has made announcements [**14] before concerts that McBee had no relationship with the Delica clothing line. In McBee's view, his audience of Japanese fans at his concerts has become younger through time and therefore more in line with the core age group of consumers for Delica's brand. McBee also notes that a fan once came up to him while he was performing in Taiwan to speak with him about Delica's line; the fan apparently presumed a connection between McBee and the line. As of 2003, McBee only had one regular tour in Japan each year, lasting three weeks or so each time; in McBee's view "it is speculating, but it is . . . possible" that Delica's "Cecil McBee" brand had led to his failure to receive additional Japanese touring opportunities.

[*115] II.

McBee's complaint, filed October 1, 2002, alleged trademark dilution and unfair competition claims under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1051 et seq., as well as various pendent Maine state law claims. McBee requested injunctive relief, damages, and attorney's fees. The core of McBee's Lanham Act claims is false endorsement: that the unlicensed use of his name has "made a misleading and false inference" that McBee endorses, approves, or [***1614] sponsors [**15] Delica's product, and that inference has caused McBee harm. See 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\); 4 J.T. McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 28.14, at 28-19 (4th ed. 2005); see also Wendt v. Host Int'l, Inc., 125 F.3d 806, 812 \(9th Cir. 1997\).

Delica first moved to dismiss the complaint, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(2\), on the ground that the Maine federal district court lacked personal jurisdiction over it. A magistrate judge recommended that the motion be denied, emphasizing the existence of Delica's website and the $ 2,500 in sales to McBee's investigators in Maine, see McBee v. Delica Co., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6123, No. 02-198-P-C, 2003 WL 1872907 \(D. Me. April 14, 2003\) (unpublished); the district court adopted the magistrate judge's recommendation on July 9, 2003. Discovery proceeded. Delica then moved to dismiss McBee's complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\), asserting that the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction over McBee's Lanham Act claims because Delica's actions constituted extraterritorial conduct outside the ambit of the Act. [**16] Delica also moved for summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 based on laches, collateral estoppel due to the Japanese court decision against McBee, and various merits issues, including McBee's alleged failure to make a sufficient showing of likelihood of confusion to sustain his Lanham Act claims. McBee opposed but not on grounds of insufficient discovery, nor did he file a Rule 56\(f\) affidavit.

The magistrate judge issued a recommended decision on these motions on August 19, 2004.<sup>3</sup> See McBee v. Delica Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23415, No. 02-198-P-C, 2004 WL 2634465 \(D. Me. Aug. 19, 2004\) (unpublished). On the subject matter jurisdiction question, the magistrate judge first noted that the Supreme Court had held, in Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U.S. 280, 97 L. Ed. 319, 73 S. Ct. 252, 1953 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 424 \(1952\), that the Lanham Act could, in some circumstances, be applied to reach extraterritorial conduct. See McBee, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23415, 2004 WL 2634465, at \*2. The magistrate judge also noted that this circuit has never laid out a test for when such extraterritorial application is appropriate. See [id. 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23415, at \[WL\] \*2 n.3](#). The magistrate judge thus utilized the test stated [**17] by the Second Circuit in Vanity Fair Mills, Inc. v. T. Eaton Co., 234 F.2d 633, 642 \(2d Cir. 1956\), described earlier. See McBee, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23415, 2004 WL 2634465, at \*2. However, the magistrate judge accepted the Fifth Circuit's modification of the first prong in Am. Rice, Inc. v. Arkansas Rice Growers Coop. Ass'n, 701 F.2d 408, 414 n.8 \(5th Cir. 1983\), and required

---

<sup>3</sup> Delica's laches claim was rejected in a separate, earlier recommended decision of the magistrate judge, see McBee v. Delica Co., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20132, No. 02-198-P-C, 2003 WL 22586387 \(D. Me. Nov. 10, 2003\) (unpublished), which was adopted by the district court.

a showing of only "some" effect on United States commerce. See McBee, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23415, 2004 WL 2634465, at \*4. The magistrate judge recommended that all of McBee's Lanham Act claims for injunctive relief be dismissed because they failed two of the three Vanity Fair factors, but that all of his Lanham Act damages claims be allowed to go forward because they met two prongs of the test.<sup>4</sup> See [id. 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23415, at \[WL\] \*3-\*4](#).

[**18] [*116] Delica filed an objection, arguing that all of McBee's Lanham Act claims -- and not just those claims requesting injunctive relief -- failed the Vanity Fair test for extraterritorial application. McBee moved that the recommended decision be modified. He conceded that American courts had no extraterritorial jurisdiction to enjoin sales that occurred in Japan, but argued that there was jurisdiction for his damages claim against those sales. McBee also stated that he sought an injunction against Delica's sales of "Cecil McBee" goods in the United States and against Delica's use of the "Cecil McBee" website to reach United States consumers; these forms of relief, he argued, did not constitute extraterritorial applications of the Lanham Act at all and therefore the court should assert subject matter jurisdiction over them.

The district court amended the magistrate judge's recommended decision by holding that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction over all of McBee's Lanham Act claims, including both those for injunctive relief and damages. See McBee v. Delica Co., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23414, No. 02-198-P-C, 2004 WL 2674360 \(D. Me. Nov. 19, 2004\) (unpublished). The district court, like the [**19] magistrate judge, applied essentially the test laid out by the Second Circuit in Vanity Fair. See [id. 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23414, at \[WL\] \*1](#). But the district court disagreed with the magistrate judge's application of that [**1615] test, finding that a claim for damages, like a claim for injunctive relief, would create a conflict with Japanese trademark law. See [id. 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23414, at \[WL\] \*2](#). Finding two of the three factors unsatisfied, the court ordered McBee's Lanham Act claims dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction without considering the effect of Delica's actions on United States commerce. See id. With respect to this factor, however, the court noted that Delica's only sales into the United States "appear to have been made for purposes of this lawsuit alone." [Id. 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23414, at \[WL\] \*1 n.2](#). After dismissing McBee's Lanham Act claims, the court declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over his pendent state law claims. See [id. 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23414, at \[WL\] \*2](#). This made it unnecessary for the court to consider Delica's summary judgment motion on other bases.

On appeal, McBee renews his argument that his claims for a domestic injunction, both against Delica's sales into the United States and against its broadcasting of its website in the United [**20] States, do not constitute extraterritorial applications of the Lanham Act at all. Further, while McBee concedes that United States courts lack jurisdiction over his Lanham Act claim for an injunction against Delica's sales in Japan, he argues that the district court had extraterritorial jurisdiction over damages claims against those same sales. Delica responds by arguing that United States courts lack extraterritorial jurisdiction over all of McBee's Lanham Act claims, and further urges lack of personal jurisdiction, preclusion due to collateral estoppel based on the Japanese judgment, and laches as alternative grounds for affirmance.

III.

A. Framework for Assessing Extraterritorial Use of the Lanham Act

By extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act, we mean application of the Act to activity (such as sales) of a defendant outside of the territorial boundaries of the United States. In addressing extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act, we face issues of Congressional intent to legislate extraterritorially, undergirded by issues of Congressional power to legislate extraterritorially. HN1↑ Usually in addressing [*117] questions of extraterritoriality, the Supreme Court [**21] has discussed Congressional intent, doing so by employing various presumptions designed to avoid unnecessary international conflict. See, e.g., Spector v. Norwegian Cruise Line Ltd., 545 U.S. 119, 162 L. Ed. 2d 97, 125 S. Ct. 2169, 2177 (2005); F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd. v. Empagran S.A., 542 U.S. 155, 124 S. Ct. 2359, 2366-73, 159 L. Ed. 2d 226 (2004); see also EEOC v. Arabian Am. Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 248, 113 L. Ed. 2d 274, 111 S. Ct. 1227 (1991) ("It is a longstanding principle of American law that legislation of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)).

---

<sup>4</sup> The magistrate judge recommended that Delica's motion for summary judgment on the remaining Lanham Act damages claims and on the various pendent state law claims be denied. See McBee, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23415, 2004 WL 2634465, at \*5-\*15.

The parties characterize the extraterritoriality issue as, at least in part, one of subject matter jurisdiction under the Act, and it is often viewed that way. See, e.g., Levi Strauss & Co. v. Sunrise Int'l Trading Co., 51 F.3d 982, 984 (11th Cir. 1995); Ocean Garden, Inc. v. Marktrade Co., Inc., 953 F.2d 500, 502 (9th Cir. 1991); see also United Phosphorus, Ltd. v. Angus Chem. Co., 322 F.3d 942, 945-51 (7th Cir. 2003) [**22] (en banc) (question whether Sherman Act applied extraterritorially under the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act (FTAIA), 15 U.S.C. § 6a, went to subject matter jurisdiction of court).

The Supreme Court has long since made it clear that HN2 [↑] the Lanham Act could sometimes be used to reach extraterritorial conduct, but it has never laid down a precise test for when such reach would be appropriate.<sup>5</sup> Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U.S. 280, 97 L. Ed. 319, 73 S. Ct. 252, 1953 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 424 (1952); see also Arabian Am. Oil Co., 499 U.S. at 252-53 (distinguishing Steele). The circuit courts have established a variety of tests for determining when extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act is appropriate, treating different factual contexts as all subject to the same set of criteria. See Vanity Fair Mills v. T. Eaton Co., 234 F.2d 633, 642 (2d Cir. 1956); see also Int'l Cafe, S.A.L., v. Hard Rock Cafe Int'l \(U.S.A.\), Inc., 252 F.3d 1274, 1278-79 (11th Cir. 2001) (applying Vanity Fair); Nintendo of Am., Ltd., v. Aeropower Co., 34 F.3d 246, 250-51 (4th Cir. 1994) (adopting the Vanity Fair [**23] test, although [***1616] requiring a "significant effect" rather than a "substantial effect" on United States commerce); Reebok Int'l, Ltd. v. Marnatech Enters., Inc., 970 F.2d 552, 554-57 (9th Cir. 1992) (applying the jurisdictional "rule of reason" from Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of Am., 549 F.2d 597 (9th Cir. 1977)): HN3 [↑] plaintiff must show (1) some effect on United States commerce, (2) an effect that is sufficiently great to be a cognizable injury to plaintiff under the Lanham Act, and (3) the interests and links to American commerce must be sufficiently strong in relation to those of other nations to justify, in terms of comity, an extraterritorial application of the act); Am. Rice, Inc. v. Ark. Rice Growers Coop. Ass'n, 701 F.2d 408, 414 & n. 8 (5th Cir. 1983) (modifying Vanity Fair's first prong to require only "some effect" on United States commerce). This court has not previously addressed the question.

[**24] Steele found that there was Lanham Act jurisdiction over a defendant, selling watches in Mexico, who was a United States citizen and whose "operations and their effects were not confined within the [*118] territorial limits of a foreign nation."<sup>6</sup> 344 U.S. at 286. Defendant made no sales within the United States. The Court held that HN4 [↑] the Lanham Act conferred broad jurisdiction in that its purpose was to regulate "commerce within the control of Congress." 15 U.S.C. § 1127. The Act prohibits the use of certain infringing marks "in commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1114\(1\); Id. § 1125\(a\). Importantly, commerce is defined in the Act as "all commerce which may lawfully be regulated by Congress." Id. § 1127.

[**25] The Steele Court did not define the outer limits of Congressional power because it was clear that the facts presented a case within those limits. The Steele Court explicitly and implicitly relied on two different aspects of Congressional power to reach this conclusion. First, it explicitly relied on the HN5 [↑] power of Congress to regulate "the conduct of its own citizens," even extraterritorial conduct. Steele, 344 U.S. at 285-86. This doctrine is based on an idea that Congressional power over American citizens is a matter of domestic law that raises no serious international concerns, even when the citizen is located abroad. See *id. at 285-86* (citing *Skirioites v. Florida*, 313 U.S. 69, 73, 85 L. Ed. 1193, 61 S. Ct. 924 \(1941\)) (Florida state criminal law banning taking of sponges from high seas) and *Branch v. Federal Trade Comm'n*, 141 F.2d 31, 35, 38 F.T.C. 857 \(7th Cir. 1944\) (federal unfair competition law); see also *F. Hoffmann-La Roche Ltd.*, 124 S. Ct. at 2367; *Cook v. Tait*, 265 U.S. 47, 54-56, 68 L. Ed. 895, 44 S. Ct. 444, 1924-1 C.B. 73, T.D. 3594 \(1924\) (income tax law); [*Restatement \(Third\) of Foreign Relations Law of the United States* § 402\(2\) \[\*\*26\]](#) (1986) ("[A] state has jurisdiction to prescribe law with respect to . . . the activities . . . of its nationals outside as well as within its territory.").<sup>7</sup> Second, Steele also implicitly appears to rely on Congressional power over foreign commerce, although the Foreign *Commerce clause* is not cited -- the Court noted that the defendant's actions had an impact on the plaintiff's reputation, and thus on commerce within the United States. See *344 U.S. at 286-87, 288*. The Steele Court concluded that *HN6*↑ an American citizen could not evade the thrust of the laws of the United States by moving his operations to a "privileged sanctuary" beyond our borders. *Id. at 287*.

<sup>5</sup> The Lanham Act was substantially amended in 1988, see Trademark Law Revision Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-667, 102 Stat. 3935, and was amended again in 1999, see Trademark Amendments Act of 1999, Pub. L. No. 106-43, 113 Stat. 218, but the key jurisdictional language of the Lanham Act has remained unchanged since Steele.

<sup>6</sup> The Court in a more recent case held that Title VII could not be applied extraterritorially at all, even to domestic employees working for domestic employers overseas. See Arabian Am. Oil Co., 499 U.S. at 250-54. The Court held that Title VII's jurisdictional language, in contrast to the language of the Lanham Act, did not evince a Congressional intent to apply Title VII abroad sufficient to overcome the presumption against such extraterritorial application. See id.

[**27] For purposes of determining subject matter jurisdiction, we think certain distinctions are important at the outset. The reach of the Lanham Act depends on context; the nature of the analysis of the jurisdictional question may vary with that context. Steele addressed the pertinent Lanham Act jurisdictional analysis when an American citizen is the defendant. In such cases, the domestic effect of the international activities may be of lesser importance and a lesser showing of domestic effects may be all that is needed. We do not explore this further because our case does not involve an American citizen as the alleged infringer.

*HN7*↑ [*119] When the purported infringer is not an American citizen, and the alleged illegal activities occur outside the United States, then the analysis is different, and appears to rest solely on the foreign commerce power. Yet it is beyond much doubt that the Lanham Act [**1617] can be applied against foreign corporations or individuals in appropriate cases; no court has ever suggested that the foreign citizenship of a defendant is always fatal. See, e.g., *Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Bayer AG*, 14 F.3d 733, 746 \(2d Cir. 1994\); *Wells Fargo & Co. v. Wells Fargo Express Co.*, 556 F.2d 406, 429 \(9th Cir. 1977\). [**28] Some academics have criticized treating the Lanham Act differently from patent and copyright law, which generally are not applied extraterritorially. See C. Bradley, *Extraterritorial Application of U.S. Intellectual Property Law*, *37 Va. J. Int'l L. 505 \(1997\)*; but see R. Schechter, Comment, *The Case For Limited Extraterritorial Reach of the Lanham Act*, *37 Va. J. Int'l L. 619 \(1997\)*. Nonetheless, the Supreme Court recently reaffirmed the Steele approach to extraterritorial jurisdiction under the Lanham Act by distinguishing it in Arabian American Oil Co. See *499 U.S. at 252-53*. The question becomes one of articulating a test for Lanham Act jurisdiction over foreign infringing activities by foreign defendants.

The decisions of the Supreme Court in the antitrust context seem useful to us as a guide. The Court has written in this area, on the issue of extraterritorial application, far more recently than it has written on the Lanham Act, and thus the decisions reflect more recent evolutions in terms of legal analysis of extraterritorial activity. As the Court noted in Steele, Lanham Act violations abroad often radiate unlawful [**29] consequences into the United States, see *344 U.S. at 288*; see also *Schechter, supra, at 629-30*. One can easily imagine a variety of harms to American commerce arising from wholly foreign activities by foreign defendants. There could be harm caused by false endorsements, passing off, or product disparagement, or confusion over sponsorship affecting American commerce and causing loss of American sales. Further, global piracy of American goods is a major problem for American companies: annual losses from unauthorized use of United States trademarks, according to one commentator, now amount to $ 200 billion annually. See *Schechter, supra, at 634*. *HN8*↑ In both the antitrust and the Lanham Act areas, there is a risk that absent a certain degree of extraterritorial enforcement, violators will either take advantage of international coordination problems or hide in countries without efficacious antitrust or trademark laws, thereby avoiding legal authority.

---

<sup>7</sup> The nationality basis for extraterritorial jurisdiction is also explicit in certain statutes. For example, both the treason statute, see *18 U.S.C. § 1381*, and the selective service statute, see 50 U.S.C. App. § 453, apply to all American citizens regardless of whether they might be located abroad.

In Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 (1993), the Supreme Court addressed the issue of when a United States court could assert jurisdiction over Sherman Act [**30] claims brought against foreign defendants for a conspiracy that occurred abroad to raise reinsurance prices. It held that HN9 jurisdiction over foreign conduct existed under the antitrust laws if that conduct "was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." Id. at 796; see also United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 109 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1997); Doe I v. Unocal Corp., 395 F.3d 932, 961 (2d Cir. 2002) (applying the substantial effects test to determine whether jurisdiction should be asserted over foreign securities fraud).<sup>8</sup> [*120] The Hartford Fire Court also held that HN10 comity considerations, such as whether relief ordered by an American court would conflict with foreign law, were properly understood not as questions of whether a United States court possessed subject matter jurisdiction, but instead as issues of whether such a court should decline to exercise the jurisdiction that it possessed. See id. at 797-98 & n.24.

[**31] The framework stated in Hartford Fire guides our analysis of the Lanham Act jurisdictional question for foreign activities of foreign defendants. HN11 We hold that the Lanham Act grants subject matter jurisdiction over extraterritorial conduct by foreign defendants only [***1618] where the conduct has a substantial effect on United States commerce.<sup>9</sup> Absent a showing of such a substantial effect, at least as to foreign defendants, the court lacks jurisdiction over the Lanham Act claim. Congress has little reason to assert jurisdiction over foreign defendants who are engaging in activities that have no substantial effect on the United States, and courts, absent an express statement from Congress, have no good reason to go further in such situations. See 1A P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 272f (2d ed. 2000) ("When a government's interest in a transaction is remote, minor, tangential, or otherwise insignificant, that government would presumably not seek to control it."); 1 W. Fugate, Foreign Commerce and the Antitrust Laws § 2.13, at 99-100 (5th ed. 1996).

[**32] HN12 The substantial effects test requires that there be evidence of impacts within the United States, and these impacts must be of a sufficient character and magnitude to give the United States a reasonably strong interest in the litigation. See, e.g., 1 Fugate, supra, §§ 2.9, 2.12, [*121] 2.13; see also 1A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 272f2; United Phosphorus, 322 F.3d at 952-53. The "substantial effects" test must be applied in light of <sup>8</sup>This effects test had its origins in United States v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 148 F.2d 416 (2d Cir. 1945), although it took a considerable period of time to gain widespread acceptance. See generally 1 W. Fugate, Foreign Commerce and the Antitrust Laws § 2.10 (5th ed. 1996). An older and now discredited view, reflected in American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, 356, 53 L. Ed. 826, 29 S. Ct. 511 (1909), was that antitrust laws were wholly territorial in nature. Notably, Steele cited American Banana and rejected a territorial interpretation of that case; it read American Banana as applying only when there were no effects in the United States from the foreign antitrust violation. See Steele, 344 U.S. at 288.

In 1982, Congress passed the FTAIA, which provided that the Sherman Act "shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless . . . such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on United States commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 6a; see 1 Fugate, supra, § 2.14. The Supreme Court has never explained the relationship between the FTAIA and the older, judicially-created effects test; thus it remains unclear the extent to which the FTAIA is a codification of that test and the extent to which the FTAIA amends it. See Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 796 n.23; see also Nippon Paper, 109 F.3d at 4.

<sup>9</sup>The traditional extraterritorial test for jurisdiction in the antitrust area has often, including in Hartford Fire, been articulated as containing a requirement that the defendant intend to cause the substantial effects on United States commerce that actually have been created. 509 U.S. at 796. The FTAIA's "reasonably foreseeable" requirement appears to be related to this traditional intent requirement. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a. We need not and do not decide whether a defendant's intent to target United States commerce plays any role in the jurisdictional inquiry for purposes of extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act -- either, for example, as a requirement in addition to the substantial effect requirement, or instead as a factor that, if present, may reduce the amount of effects on United States commerce that a plaintiff must show. It is evident that Delica, in this case, had no intent to target United States commerce.

We do note that lack of intent can sometimes change the scope of remedies under the Lanham Act. For example, an innocent infringer can generally only be subject to an injunction against future use. See 15 U.S.C. § 1114\(2\). This, of course, is not a jurisdictional matter.

the core purposes of the Lanham Act, which are both to protect the ability of American consumers to avoid confusion and to help assure a trademark's owner that it will reap the financial and reputational rewards associated with having a desirable name or product. See, e.g., Dastar Corp. v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp., 539 U.S. 23, 33-34, 156 L. Ed. 2d 18, 123 S. Ct. 2041 (2003); see also Atl. Richfield Co. v. ARCO Globus Int'l Co., 150 F.3d 189, 193-94 (2d Cir. 1998). The goal of the jurisdictional test is to ensure that the United States has a sufficient interest in the litigation, as measured by the interests protected by the Lanham Act, to assert jurisdiction.

Of course, the [**33] Vanity Fair test includes a "substantial effects" inquiry as part of its three-part test.<sup>10</sup> We differ from the Vanity Fair court in that we disaggregate the elements of its test: we first ask whether the defendant is an American citizen, and if he is not, then we use the substantial effects test as the sole touchstone to determine jurisdiction.

[**34] HN13 If the substantial effects test is met, then the court should proceed, in appropriate cases, to consider comity. We also transplant for Lanham Act purposes Hartford Fire's holding that comity considerations are properly analyzed not as questions of whether there is subject matter jurisdiction, but as prudential questions of whether that jurisdiction should be exercised. See Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 798 n.24. Our analysis differs again from Vanity Fair on this point. See Vanity Fair, 234 F.2d at 642. Vanity Fair and other cases have considered as part of the basic jurisdictional analysis whether the defendant acted under color of protection of the trademark laws of his own country. We disagree and do not see why the scope of Congressional intent and power to create jurisdiction under the Lanham Act should turn on the existence and meaning of foreign law. [***1619]

Congress could, of course, preclude the exercise of such Lanham Act jurisdiction by statute or by ratified treaty. Or it could by statute define limits in Lanham Act jurisdiction in such international cases, as it has chosen to do in the antitrust area. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a. [**35] It has not done so.

B. Application of the Framework

We apply the framework we have established to the facts of this case. Although district court fact-finding is permissible in a subject matter jurisdiction inquiry, and we defer to such fact-finding, HN14 here all the relevant facts are undisputed and the district court did not find any facts.<sup>11</sup> [*122] Our review is de novo, see, e.g., Skwira v. United States, 344 F.3d 64, 71-72 (1st Cir. 2003), and the burden is on McBee to establish jurisdiction, see, e.g., Able Sales Co. v. Compania de Azucar de P.R., 406 F.3d 56, 61 (1st Cir. 2005).

[**36] 1. Claim for Injunction Barring Delica's United States Sales

McBee contends that his claim for an injunction against Delica's sales to consumers inside the United States does not constitute an extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act, and therefore the district court should have taken jurisdiction over this claim without pausing to consider whether there was a substantial effect on United States commerce. The factual predicate for this argument is the $ 2,500 of "Cecil McBee" brand goods that Delica sold to <sup>10</sup> Some courts have criticized Vanity Fair's "substantial effects" inquiry as having been taken out of context, and have replaced it with a much less demanding "some effect" inquiry. These courts state that the "substantial effects" test was not clearly embraced in Steele and stems from attempts to determine when local commerce has a sufficient effect on interstate commerce to be congressionally reachable, which has no relevance to the question of determining when wholly foreign commerce can be reached. See Am. Rice, 701 F.2d at 414 n.8; Wells Fargo & Co. v. Wells Fargo Express Co., 556 F.2d 406, 428 (9th Cir. 1977). American Rice involved domestic defendants, although the court did not restrict the modification of its test to such situations. The Supreme Court has embraced the "substantial effects" test for extraterritorial application of the antitrust laws, and Congress, in the FTAIA, has either codified that understanding or established an even more restrictive test. We see no reason to treat the Lanham Act differently.

<sup>11</sup> As we noted above, the subject matter jurisdiction issue was determined on a summary judgment record, after extensive discovery; McBee did not file a Rule 56\(f\) affidavit below stating that he needed more discovery. We note also that in this context, the jurisdictional inquiry will generally not be wholly distinct from the merits. See 1A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, P 273a.

McBee's investigators in Maine; there is no evidence of any other sales made by Delica to United States consumers. McBee is correct that the court had subject matter jurisdiction over this claim.

HN15 [+] There can be no doubt of Congress's power to enjoin sales of infringing goods into the United States, and as a matter of Congressional intent there can be no doubt that Congress intended to reach such sales via the Lanham Act. Courts have repeatedly distinguished between domestic acts of a foreign infringer and foreign acts of that foreign infringer; the extraterritoriality analysis to determine jurisdiction attaches only to the latter. See, e.g., Totalplan Corp. of Am. v. Colborne, 14 F.3d 824, 829-30 (2d Cir. 1994); [**37] Sterling Drug, 14 F.3d at 744-47 & n.8; Wells Fargo, 556 F.2d at 426-30; Vanity Fair, 234 F.2d at 638-39, 645; see also 4 J. T. McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 29:56, at 29-151 (4th ed. 2005). Since sales in the United States are domestic acts, McBee need not satisfy the "substantial effect on United States commerce" test for this claim; jurisdiction exists because, under the ordinary domestic test, the $ 2,500 worth of goods sold by Delica to McBee's investigators in the United States were in United States commerce, at least insofar as some of those goods were shipped directly by Delica to the buyers in the United States. See Carpet Group Int'l v. Oriental Rug Importers Ass'n, Inc., 227 F.3d 62, 71-75 (3d Cir. 2000).

Our holding that the extraterritoriality tests are inapplicable where plaintiff seeks a remedy for imported goods sold to American consumers is supported in the antitrust context by the language of the FTAIA. The FTAIA provides that HN16 [+] the Sherman Act:

shall not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign [**38] nations unless . . . such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect (A) on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or import commerce with foreign nations; or (B) on export trade or export commerce with foreign nations, of a person engaged in such trade or commerce in the United States . . . .

15 U.S.C. § 6a(1). The statute exempts "import trade or import commerce" from its extraterritoriality effects test; such import trade or import commerce would seem to be reachable so long as the domestic commerce tests are met. See Carpet Group Int'l, 227 F.3d at 71-75; W. Fugate [*123] & L. Simonwitz, Foreign Commerce and the Antitrust Laws § 2.14, at 30 (5th ed. Supp. 2004).

The district court thus had subject matter jurisdiction over McBee's claim for an injunction against Delica's sales of "Cecil McBee" goods in the United States. Nonetheless, dismissal [***1620] of the claim was appropriate for reasons stated later.<sup>12</sup>

[**39] 2. Claim for Injunction Barring Access to Internet Website

McBee next argues that his claim for an injunction against Delica's posting of its Internet website in a way that is visible to United States consumers also does not call for an extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act. Here McBee is incorrect: granting this relief would constitute an extraterritorial application of the Act, and thus subject matter jurisdiction would only be appropriate if McBee could show a substantial effect on United States commerce. <sup>13</sup> McBee has not shown such a substantial effect from Delica's website.

We begin with McBee's argument that his website claim, like his claim for Delica's sales into the United States, is not an extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act. McBee does not seek to reach the website because it is a method, by Delica, for selling "Cecil McBee" goods into the United States. In such a case, if a court had jurisdiction to enjoin sales of goods within the United States, it might have jurisdiction to enjoin the website as well, <sup>12</sup> We do not reach the more complicated question of whether comity concerns would ever allow a court to decline to exercise jurisdiction when an injunction is sought against sales in the United States.

<sup>13</sup> Preliminarily, Delica disputes whether it is technologically possible to prevent access by American consumers while simultaneously allowing access to the website in the rest of the world. We lack the information to resolve this dispute, and at any rate we need not resolve it in order to decide this dispute.

or at least those parts of the website that are necessary to allow the sales to occur.<sup>14</sup> Rather, the injury McBee complains about from the website is that its mere existence has caused him harm, because United States citizens can view the website and become confused about McBee's relationship with the Japanese clothing company. In particular, McBee argues that he has suffered harm from the fact that Delica's website often comes up on search engines ahead of fan sites about McBee's jazz career.

[**41] Delica's website, although hosted from Japan and written in Japanese, happens to be reachable from the United States just as it is reachable from other countries. That is the nature of the Internet. The website is hosted and managed overseas; its visibility within the United States is more in the nature of an effect, which occurs only when someone in the United States decides to visit the website. To hold that any website in a foreign language, wherever hosted, is automatically reachable under the Lanham Act so long as it is visible in the United States would be senseless. The United States often will have no real interest in hearing trademark lawsuits about websites that are written in a foreign language and hosted in other countries. McBee attempts to analogize the existence of Delica's website, which happens to be visible in any country, to the direct mail advertising that the Vanity Fair court considered to be domestic conduct [**124] and so held outside the scope of the extraterritoriality analysis. See Vanity Fair, 234 F.2d at 638-39. The analogy is poor for three reasons: first, the advertising in Vanity Fair was closely connected with mail-order sales; second, [**42] direct mail advertising is a far more targeted act than is the hosting of a website; and third, Delica's website, unlike the advertising in Vanity Fair, is in a foreign language.

Our conclusion that McBee's website claim calls for extraterritorial application of the Lanham Act is bolstered by a consideration of the now extensive case law relating to treatment of Internet websites with respect to personal jurisdiction. We recognize that the contexts are distinct, but the extraterritorial application of jurisdiction under the Lanham Act evokes concerns about territorial restraints on sovereigns that are similar to concerns driving personal jurisdiction. To put the principle broadly, HN17<sup>15</sup> the mere existence of a website that is visible in a forum and that gives information about a company and its products is not enough, by itself, to subject a defendant to personal jurisdiction in that forum. See, e.g., Jennings v. AC Hydraulic A/S, 383 F.3d 546, 549-50 \(7th Cir. 2004\); ALS Scan, Inc. v. Digital Serv. Consultants, Inc., 293 F.3d 707, 713-15 \(4th Cir. 2002\).

Something more is necessary, such as interactive features which allow the successful [**43] online ordering of the defendant's products. See, e.g., Jennings, 383 F.3d at 549. The mere existence of a website does not show that a defendant [**1621] is directing its business activities towards every forum where the website is visible; as well, given the omnipresence of Internet websites today, allowing personal jurisdiction to be premised on such a contact alone would "eviscerate" the limits on a state's jurisdiction over out-of-state or foreign defendants. Id. at 549-50.

Similarly, allowing subject matter jurisdiction under the Lanham Act to automatically attach whenever a website is visible in the United States would eviscerate the territorial curbs on judicial authority that Congress is, quite sensibly, presumed to have imposed in this area.

Our conclusion does not make it impossible for McBee to use the Lanham Act to attack a Japan-based website; it merely requires that McBee first establish that the website has a substantial effect on commerce in the United States before there is subject matter jurisdiction under the Lanham Act. We can imagine many situations in which the presence of a website would ensure (or, at least, help to ensure) that [**44] the United States has a sufficient interest. The substantial effects test, however, is not met here.

Delica's website is written almost entirely in Japanese characters; this makes it very unlikely that any real confusion of American consumers, or diminution of McBee's reputation, would result from the website's existence. In fact, most American consumers are unlikely to be able to understand Delica's website at all. Further, McBee's claim that Americans looking for information about him will be unable to find it is unpersuasive: the Internet searches reproduced in the record all turned up both sites about McBee and sites about Delica's clothing line on their first page of results. The two sets of results are easily distinguishable to any consumer, given that the Delica sites are clearly shown, by the search engines, as being written in Japanese characters. Finally, we stress that McBee has produced no evidence of any American consumers going to the website and then becoming confused about whether McBee had a relationship with Delica.

<sup>14</sup> The cases cited by McBee involve such situations and are therefore easily distinguishable; as well, they contain no analysis at all of the question McBee has raised. See Euromarket Designs, Inc. v. Crate & Barrel Ltd., 96 F. Supp. 2d 824, 831-33 \(N.D. Ill. 2000\); Playboy Enters. v. Chuckleberry Publ'g, Inc., 939 F. Supp. 1032, 1039-40 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\).

[*125] 3. Claim for Damages for Delica's Japanese Sales

McBee's claim for damages due to Delica's sales in Japan fares no better, because these sales [**45] as well have no substantial effect on commerce in the United States. McBee seeks damages for Delica's sales in Japan to Japanese consumers based on (a) tarnishing of McBee's image in the United States, and (b) loss of income in the United States due to loss of commercial opportunity as a jazz musician in Japan, stemming from the tarnishing of McBee's reputation there. The alleged tarnishing -- both in the United States and Japan -- is purportedly caused by the confusion of McBee's name with a brand selling (sometimes provocative) clothing to young teenage girls in Japan. McBee presents essentially no evidence that either type of tarnishing has occurred, much less that it has any substantial effect on United States commerce.

McBee's first argument, that American consumers are being confused and/or led to think less of McBee's name because of Delica's Japanese sales, cuts very close to the core purposes of the Lanham Act. See Atl. Richfield Co., 150 F.3d at 193; Sterling Drug, Inc., 14 F.3d at 746; see also Schechter, supra, at 628-30 (arguing that what distinguishes the Lanham Act from areas like patent or copyright, and makes extraterritorial [**46] jurisdiction proper in the trademark context while it is improper in those other areas, is the risk that the trademark infringer's foreign sales will eventually confuse domestic consumers, thus costing the mark holder sales domestically as well as abroad). Such HN18[<sup>18</sup>] confusion and reputational harm in the eyes of American consumers can often -- although not always -- be inferred from the fact that American consumers have been exposed to the infringing mark. But no inference of dilution or other harm can be made in situations where American citizens are not exposed at all to the infringing product. The trouble with McBee's argument is that there is virtually no evidence that American consumers are actually seeing Delica's products.

Quite commonly, plaintiffs in these sorts of cases can meet their burden by presenting evidence that while the initial sales of infringing goods may occur in foreign countries, the goods subsequently tend to enter the United States in some way and in substantial quantities. See, e.g., Steele, 344 U.S. at 286; Nintendo of Am., 34 F.3d at 249, 251; Atl. Richfield Co., 150 F.3d at 193; Totalplan, 14 F.3d at 830. [**47] McBee has presented essentially no evidence that Delica's products have been brought into the United States after their initial sale in Japan. McBee's own statement, [***1622] without more, that people have seen women wearing Delica clothing in the United States does not show very much; likewise, McBee's evidence that Delica's goods are occasionally sold on eBay shows little, given particularly that such goods need not have been auctioned to buyers in the United States. The evidence indicates only one incident in which an American citizen saw McBee advertisements while traveling in Japan and demonstrated confusion upon returning to the United States.

Beyond that, there is also nothing that indicates any harm to McBee's career in the United States due to Delica's product sales. McBee's argument that there has potentially been harm to McBee's career as a product endorser is most unlikely, especially given his own disinterest in performing such endorsements. Further, McBee's statement that his teaching career may have been hindered by Delica is speculation.

McBee's second argument is that Delica's sales have confused Japanese consumers, hindering McBee's record sales and [*126] touring career in Japan. [**48] Evidence of economic harm to McBee in Japan due to confusion of Japanese consumers is less tightly tied to the interests that the Lanham Act intends to protect, since there is no United States interest in protecting Japanese consumers. American courts do, however, arguably have an interest in protecting American commerce by protecting McBee from lost income due to the tarnishing of his trademark in Japan. HN19[<sup>19</sup>] Courts have considered sales diverted from American companies in foreign countries in their analyses. See Totalplan, 14 F.3d at 830-31; see also Am. Rice, 701 F.2d at 414-15 (considering diverted sales in finding "some effects" test met).

Assuming arguendo that evidence of harm to an American plaintiff's economic interests abroad, due to the tarnishing of his reputation there, might sometimes meet the substantial effects test, McBee has presented no evidence of such harm in this case. McBee has presented no evidence of economic harm due to losses in record sales or touring opportunities in Japan. McBee's statement that he might have expected more Japanese touring opportunities by now, and may have had such opportunities absent Delica's [**49] sales, is wholly speculative. There is no probative evidence of any decline in McBee's touring revenue as compared to past patterns, nor is there any evidence of any decline in McBee's Japanese record sales.

McBee has not shown that Delica's Japanese sales have a substantial effect on United States commerce, and thus McBee's claim for damages based on those sales, as well as McBee's claim for an injunction against Delica's website, must be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. We need not reach the issue of whether we should decline jurisdiction because of comity.<sup>15</sup> Were we to assert jurisdiction in this case, where there is no evidence of any harm to American commerce beyond the facts that the plaintiff is an American citizen and that the allegedly infringing goods were sold and seen in a foreign country, we would be forced to find jurisdiction in almost all false endorsement or trademark cases involving an American plaintiff and allegedly infringing sales abroad.

[**50] C. Frivolousness of Claim Based on Delica's Product Sales in the United States

Because we do have subject matter jurisdiction over McBee's claim for an injunction against Delica's sales in the United States,<sup>16</sup> we proceed on that claim. [***1623]

[*127] We dispose of a preliminary issue: whether there is any required [**51] order for deciding the remaining issues. We would ordinarily next reach Delica's defense that the federal district court, sitting in Maine, lacked personal jurisdiction over it. See, e.g., United States v. Swiss Am. Bank, Ltd., 191 F.3d 30, 46 (1st Cir. 1999). But we choose to decide this case on much simpler grounds. Although the Supreme Court in Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210, 118 S. Ct. 1003 (1998), generally barred the practice of "hypothetical jurisdiction," we have noted that "the rule does not appear to be an absolute one," Parella v. Ret. Bd. of the R.I. Employees' Ret. Sys., 173 F.3d 46, 53-56 (1st Cir. 1999), and we have consistently interpreted the rule as applying in its strict form only to issues going to Article III's requirements. See, e.g., Cozza v. Network Assocs., Inc., 362 F.3d 12, 15 (1st Cir. 2004); Restoration Pres. Masonry v. Grove Europe Ltd., 325 F.3d 54, 59-60 (1st Cir. 2003); United States v. Woods, 210 F.3d 70, 74 n.2 (1st Cir. 2000); Parella, 173 F.3d at 53-56.

HN21 [↑] The requirements [**52] of personal jurisdiction are not rooted in Article III, although they do have constitutional resonance through the Due Process clause. See Ins. Corp. of Ir. v. Compagnie des Bauxites de <sup>15</sup> Were we to reach comity principles, they would most likely counsel for dismissal of McBee's claim seeking damages for Delica's sales in Japan. McBee argues that so long as he seeks only damages and not an injunction, there is no "true conflict" with Japanese law because it would be theoretically possible for Delica to comply with both Japanese and United States law. See Hartford Fire, 509 U.S. at 798-99. McBee's argument makes no sense: an injunction would no more create a "true conflict" under this definition than damages, for under either form of relief it would be theoretically possible for Delica to comply with both nations' laws by not using the trademark. There is no meaningful distinction between an injunction and damages for this purpose. The reasoning developed in the antitrust context in Hartford Fire is not "automatically transferable" to the trademark context: "It is one thing for the British reinsurers in Hartford Fire to be barred under United States law from boycotting activity that they might be free to engage in without violating British law. But it is quite a different thing for the holder of rights in a mark under German law to be ordered to refrain from uses of that mark protected by German law." Sterling Drug, 14 F.3d at 746-47.

<sup>16</sup> It is true that HN20 [↑] we lack subject matter jurisdiction over claims that involve no real federal controversy because they "clearly appear[] to be immaterial and made solely for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction or where such a claim is wholly insubstantial and frivolous." Steel Co. v. Citizens for a Better Env't, 523 U.S. 83, 89-90, 140 L. Ed. 2d 210, 118 S. Ct. 1003 (1998). This test goes to whether, legally, there is any real federal interest involved in the case. The fatal flaw in McBee's claim here, as we explain below, is that the only sales made to the United States were sales instigated at his own behest. This sort of factual weakness in a claim does not go to subject matter jurisdiction.

Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702-03, 72 L. Ed. 2d 492, 102 S. Ct. 2099 (1982). Unlike subject matter jurisdiction under Article III, which goes to the fundamental institutional competence of the court and can be raised sua sponte at any time, personal jurisdiction is an individual liberty right and is therefore waivable; a court cannot raise personal jurisdiction sua sponte. See id. at 702-05. In Parella, we held that Eleventh Amendment immunity is not subject to the strict form of Steel Co. and can be bypassed in certain cases, stressing the waivability of the immunity and the fact that a court need not raise it sua sponte. See Parella, 173 F.3d at 54-55. As in the sovereign immunity area, HN22[<sup>17</sup>] we do not wish to force defendants to expend resources on difficult personal jurisdiction issues or courts to reach more difficult issues when there is an exceptionally easy method -- on the merits -- for the defendant to prevail. See id. at 56.

Here, where [**53] McBee's claim for an injunction barring Delica's sales in the United States is wholly without merit, and where the personal jurisdiction question is briefed only as a subsidiary issue by both sides, providing us with little guidance, we have the power to pretermit the personal jurisdiction question.<sup>17</sup> We reach these merits now, noting that HN23[<sup>18</sup>] the questions appealed to us were decided on a summary [*128] judgment record and that we may affirm on any ground supported by that record, see, e.g., Cimon v. Gaffney, 401 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 2005), as well as that the ground for our decision on the merits is closely tied to the facts we used to decide the jurisdictional question.

[**54] As to the merits, there is no evidence of existing confusion or dilution due to Delica's past sales, since these few sales were all made to McBee's own investigators, who were brought in to assist in this litigation and therefore fully understood McBee's lack of any relationship with Delica. See Millennium Enters., Inc. v. Millennium Music, Inc., 33 F. Supp. 2d 907, 911 (D. Or. 1999) (gravamen of unfair competition claim is whether defendant's actions have created confusion; sale to plaintiff's agent could not have created any). There is no evidence of any other sales, nor any evidence that Delica has any desire to sell into the United States in the future. All the evidence, in fact, is to the contrary. Thus, there is no justification for injunctive relief, and summary judgment must enter for Delica on this claim.

HN24[<sup>19</sup>] Absent any viable federal claim, the district court's dismissal of all of McBee's pendent state law claims (without prejudice to their being refiled in state court) was fully appropriate and was not an abuse of discretion -- McBee has not argued otherwise. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c); Gonzalez-de-Blasini v. Family Dep't, 377 F.3d 81, 89 (1st Cir. 2004). [**55] We need not reach Delica's laches or collateral estoppel arguments. [**1624]

IV.

The district court's decision ordering judgment for the defendant Delica is affirmed. Costs are awarded to Delica.

---

End of Document

<sup>17</sup> Ruhrgas AG v. Marathon Oil Co., 526 U.S. 574, 143 L. Ed. 2d 760, 119 S. Ct. 1563 (1999), is not to the contrary. Although Ruhrgas contained language on the importance of personal jurisdiction, the decision merely established that a court can, in some circumstances, dispose of a case on a different threshold ground before reaching subject matter jurisdiction. See id. at 584-85; see also Tenet v. Doe, 544 U.S. 1, 161 L. Ed. 2d 82, 125 S. Ct. 1230, 1234 n.4 (2005). The thrust of Ruhrgas was to increase judicial flexibility, not to decrease it. See Ruhrgas AG, 526 U.S. at 587-88.

In re Enron Corp.

United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York

August 5, 2005, Decided

Chapter 11, Case No. 01-16034 (AJG), Jointly Administered

Reporter

328 B.R. 75 *; 2005 Bankr. LEXIS 1463 **; 45 Bankr. Ct. Dec. 38

In re: ENRON CORP., et al., Reorganized Debtors.

Subsequent History: Affirmed by *Oscar's Photo Lab v. Enron Corp., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66681 \(S.D.N.Y., Apr. 27, 2006\)*

Core Terms

---

electricity, filed rate doctrine, manipulation, wholesale, markets, proof of claim, preemption, tariff, original claim, rates, natural gas, anti trust law, regulation, preempted, motion to amend, market-based, energy, cases, trading, sales, courts, prong, anti-competitive, transactions, state law, interstate, violations, misconduct, Partial, reasons

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Gambling > Elements

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Cogeneration & Independent Companies > Independent System Operators

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN1[ State & Territorial Government Licensing, Gaming & Lotteries

The California Independent System Operator (ISO) tariff, through the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol defines gaming, in part, as taking unfair advantage of the rules and procedures set forth in the California Power Exchange (PX) or the ISO tariffs, Protocols or Activity Rule to the detriment of the efficiency of, and of consumers in, the ISO markets.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN2 Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the Supremacy Clause, U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2. Where Congress manifests intent to occupy an entire regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted. Federal courts have rarely identified legislation that has been found to completely preempt state jurisdiction.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN3 Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted: (1) when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field. (field preemption); and (2) to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. (conflict preemption)

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Electricity Transmission

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > Preemption

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > ... > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Civil Actions > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electricity Distribution & Transmission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Wholesale Rates

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

HN4 Pipelines & Transportation, Electricity Transmission

The statute's framework under the Federal Power Act supports the conclusion that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) has been granted broad authority by Congress, in addition to the authority to determine the "just and reasonable rates" for wholesale power. The statute delegates to the FERC exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce except those which Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states. Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states. Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C.S. §§ 824-824m.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electricity Distribution & Transmission > General Overview

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Wholesale Rates

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN5 Electric Power Industry, Electricity Distribution & Transmission

Section 206(a) of the Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C.S. § 824e, provides that upon a determination by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) that any rate charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the FERC, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the FERC shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Informal Agency Action

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > Purchase Contracts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Cogeneration & Independent Companies > Independent System Operators

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Deregulation & Restructuring

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN6 Agency Adjudication, Informal Agency Action

Pursuant to the Federal Power Act, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit disgorgement and refunds. Further, FERC can proceed by rulemaking rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue discrimination on the part of individual utilities. §§ 205 and 206(a) of the Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C.S. §§ 824d, 824e; Department of Energy Organization Act, § 403(c), 42 U.S.C.S. § 7173\(c\).

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Cogeneration & Independent Companies > Independent System Operators

HN7 Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

Each participant in the California Power Exchange (PX) and the California Independent System Operator (ISO) markets is required to sign an agreement acknowledging that the tariff filed by either the PX or the ISO would govern all transactions in that market. Entities that transact through the ISO or the PX and engage in improper practices are in violation of filed tariffs. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) and the Market Surveillance Unit are directed by the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol to refer matters to the FERC for enforcement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Gaming & Lotteries

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Cogeneration & Independent Companies > Independent System Operators

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN8 State & Territorial Government Licensing, Gaming & Lotteries

Since 1998, the California Power Exchange (PX) and the California Independent System Operator (ISO) tariffs have contained provisions that identify and prohibit "gaming" and "anomalous market behavior" in the sale of electric power. "Anomalous market behavior" is: (1) behavior that departs significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation; or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include: (1) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; (2) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; (3) unusual trades or transactions; (4) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and (5) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > Implicit Delegation of Authority

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > Involuntary Dissolution

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN9 [blue icon] Legislative Controls, Implicit Delegation of Authority

Implicit in Federal Energy Regulatory Commission orders granting market-based rates to the marketers is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. The filed rate doctrine forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority. The purpose of the doctrine is preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > Federal Rate Regulation

**HN11** [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

While market-based rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

**HN12** [blue download icon] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

The reporting requirements are an integral part of a tariff, with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's implied enforcement mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > Implicit Delegation of Authority

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Federal Power Act > General Overview

**HN13** [blue download icon] Legislative Controls, Implicit Delegation of Authority

Implicit in Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority. Moreover, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has indirectly recognized the application of the filed rate doctrine when marketers had not properly reported to FERC where such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC. Without the availability of retroactive refunds, parties aggrieved by an illegal rate would have no FERC remedy, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a direct action against the offending seller. That result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the Federal Power Act.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

**HN14** [blue download icon] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, Rates & Tariffs

In addressing the right of action that a violation of the antitrust laws give to one who has been injured in its business or property, the United States Supreme Court has stated that injury implies violation of a legal right. The Supreme Court concluded that the legal rights of a shipper as against a carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff. A rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Antitrust Act. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under § 8 of the latter act, the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the person injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN15[] Exemptions & Immunities, Filed Rate Doctrine

Under the filed rate doctrine, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission alone is empowered to make a judgment regarding rates, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Administrative Proceedings > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > Purchase Contracts > Remedies for Breach

HN16[] Regulators, US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission

Remedies for breach and non-performance of operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market approved by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) fall within the exclusive domain of FERC.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Filed Rate Doctrine

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Ratemaking Procedures

HN17[] Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that: (1) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate-making issues; (2) courts lack the competence to set utility rates; and (3) the interference of courts in the rate-making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime.

Bankruptcy Law > ... > Bankruptcy > Claims > Allowance of Claims

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Bankruptcy Law > Claims > Proof of Claim > Effects & Procedures

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN18 [ ] Claims, Allowance of Claims

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 3003(c)(3) directs a bankruptcy court to establish a bar date beyond which proofs of claim are disallowed in a Chapter 11 case. The bar date is critically important to the administration of a successful Chapter 11 case for it intended to be a mechanism providing the debtor and its creditors with finality. In particular, a bar date order serves the important purpose of enabling the parties to a bankruptcy case to identify with reasonable promptness the identity of those making claims against the bankruptcy estate and the general amount of the claims, a necessary step in achieving the goal of successful reorganization. Therefore, a bar date order does not function merely as a procedural gauntlet, but as an integral part of the reorganization process. Accordingly, a bar date is likened to a statute of limitations which generally must be strictly observed.

Bankruptcy Law > Claims > Proof of Claim > Effects & Procedures

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Bankruptcy Law > Claims > Proof of Claim > General Overview

HN19 [ ] Proof of Claim, Effects & Procedures

The decision to grant or deny an amendment to a timely-filed proof of claim rests with the sound discretion of a bankruptcy judge. Although amendments to proofs of claim should in the absence of contrary equitable considerations or prejudice to the opposing party be freely permitted, such amendments are not automatic. The amendments are allowed, however, where the purpose is to cure a defect in the claim as originally filed, to describe the original claim with greater particularity or to plead a new theory of recovery on the facts set forth in the original claim. Nevertheless, an amendment may not be used as a mechanism for circumventing the bar date. Therefore, a bankruptcy court must carefully scrutinize a post bar-date amendment to ensure that the amendment is truly amending timely-filed proofs of claims and not asserting an entirely new claim. An amendment will not be permitted when its purpose is to create an entirely new claim.

Bankruptcy Law > Claims > Proof of Claim > Effects & Procedures

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN20 [ ] Proof of Claim, Effects & Procedures

When deciding whether to permit an amendment to a proof of claim, a bankruptcy court is guided by a two-prong test. A court must first look to whether there was timely assertion of a similar claim or demand evidencing an intention to hold the estate liable. If there were such a timely assertion, the court then examines each fact within the case and determines whether it would be equitable to allow the amendment. In balancing the equities, the court considers the following equitable factors: (1) undue prejudice to opposing party; (2) bad faith or dilatory behavior on part of the claimant; (3) whether other creditors would receive a windfall were the amendment not allowed; (4) whether other claimants might be harmed or prejudiced; and (5) the justification for the inability to file the amended claim at the time the original claim was filed. This second prong of the test is applied only if the first prong is satisfied and the claim qualifies as an amendment and not a new claim.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Adversary Proceedings > Commencement of Adversary Proceedings

Bankruptcy Law > Claims > Proof of Claim > Effects & Procedures

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Contested Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

HN21 [+] Adversary Proceedings, Commencement of Adversary Proceedings

Neither the Bankruptcy Code nor the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure directly address an amendment of a proof of claim. Nevertheless, in determining whether to permit a post-bar date amendment to a timely-filed proof of claim under the first prong of the two-prong test, several courts have applied Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(c\) by analogy or explicitly, pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7015 and Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014\(c\), to analyze such an amendment.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Adversary Proceedings > Commencement of Adversary Proceedings

Bankruptcy Law > ... > Bankruptcy > Claims > Objections to Claims

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > General Overview

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Adversary Proceedings > General Overview

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Contested Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN22 [+] Adversary Proceedings, Commencement of Adversary Proceedings

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7015 provides that Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 applies in adversary proceedings. Although the filing of an objection to a proof of claim is a contested matter, and not an adversary proceeding, Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014 permits a bankruptcy court, at its discretion, to extend Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7015 to contested matters as well as adversary proceedings.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Adversary Proceedings > Commencement of Adversary Proceedings

Governments > Courts > Rule Application & Interpretation

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > Contested Matters

HN23 [blue icon] Adversary Proceedings, Commencement of Adversary Proceedings

Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9014(c) states that the court may at any stage in a particular matter direct that one or more of the other rules in Part VII, which includes Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7015, shall apply and, further, the Advisory Committee Note to the rule provides that when the rules of Part VII are applicable to a contested matter, reference in the Part VII rules to adversary proceedings is to be read as a reference to a contested matter. Part VII of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure is based on the premise that to the extent possible practice before the bankruptcy courts and the district courts should be the same.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Amendment of Pleadings, Relation Back

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(2).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Amendment of Pleadings, Relation Back

After the statute of limitations has run, Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(2) is used for amending an original pleading to add a claim or defense.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN26 [blue icon] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Courts, in general, have moved away from the cause of action test in allowing an amendment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15, and instead, an amendment has been allowed which adds another claim if it is arising out of the same transaction or occurrence.

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Energy & Utilities Law, Antitrust Issues

Wash trading occurs when a party simultaneously buys and sells the same commodity at or near the same price within a very short period time so that the party has no financial risk in the transactions. Wash trading establishes

"bogus" prices which are not related to real conditions in the gas market, and creates an illusion of volume and liquidity which encourages other market participants to engage in the frenzy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > US Federal Energy Regulatory Commission > Authorities & Powers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

HN28 Filed Rate Doctrine, Public Utilities & Telecommunications Carriers

The essential purpose of the filed rate doctrine is to protect the jurisdiction of a regulatory body that Congress has designated to determine whether rates charged, such as those in the natural gas market, are just and reasonable.

Counsel: [**1] Attorneys for the Reorganized Debtors: Edward A. Smith, Esq., Of Counsel, CADWALADER, WICKERSHAM & TAFT LLP, New York, New York; Mark C. Ellenberg, Esq., Of Counsel, Washington, D.C.

Attorneys for Oscar's Photo Lab: Wendy R. Fleishman, Of Counsel, LIEFF, CABRASER, HEIMANN & BERNSTEIN, LLP, New York, New York; William Bernstein, Esq., Barry R. Himmelstein, Esq., Karin Kramer, Esq., Of Counsel, San Francisco, California.

Judges: ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ, United States Bankruptcy Judge.

Opinion by: ARTHUR J. GONZALEZ

Opinion

---

[*77] OPINION SUSTAINING DEBTORS' OBJECTION TO PROOFS OF CLAIM NO. 15229-35 FILED BY OSCAR'S PHOTO LAB AND MOTION TO AMEND CERTAIN PROOFS OF CLAIM FILED BY OSCAR'S PHOTO LAB

In August 2002, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ("FERC") issued [*78] the Initial Report on Price Manipulation in Western Markets: Fact-Finding Investigation of Potential Manipulation of Electric and Natural Gas Price ("Initial Report"). On October 15, 2002, Oscar's Photo Lab ("OPL") filed separate proofs of claims (Claim Nos. 15229-35, collectively, the "Claims") in unliquidated amounts against Enron Corp. ("Enron") and certain of its affiliated entities (collectively, the "Debtors"). OPL alleges that [**2] the Debtors manipulated the wholesale electricity market in California and overcharged for energy through unlawful and anti-competitive acts during the western power crisis of 2000 and 2001. OPL maintains the alleged manipulation in the wholesale electricity market constitutes a violation of state antitrust law and unfair competition law, and seeks disgorgement, restitution, actual and treble damages together with interest and injunctive relief.<sup>1</sup> In March 2003, FERC issued the Final Report on Price Manipulation in Western Markets: Fact-Finding Investigation of Potential Manipulation of Electric and Natural Gas Price ("Final Report"). In September 2003, OPL filed Partial Objection of Claimant OPL to Motion of Enron

---

<sup>1</sup> California Unfair Competition Law, Business & Professional Code § 17200. OPL alleges that the Debtors' violation of Business & Professional Code § 17200's proscription against engaging in unlawful business acts and practices.

Corp., et. al. for Order Establishing Procedures to Estimate Disputed, Unliquidated, or Contingent Claims (the "Partial Objection"). In footnote 2 of the Partial Objection, OPL asserts that the misconduct relating to the natural gas trading platform is at issue in determining the Debtors' liability to California ratepayers under the timely-filed original Claims. On February 1, 2005, the Debtors filed objections to the Claims and argued that the Federal Power Act (the [**3] "FPA") preempts the Claims and the filed rate doctrine precludes consideration of them.

On March 16, 2005, OPL filed the motion to amend proofs of claim (Claim Nos. 15231-33),<sup>2</sup> [**4] to include a cause of action based on the Debtors' alleged manipulation of the California natural gas market. (collectively, the "Gas Claims"). On April 11, 2005, the Debtors filed its objection the relief sought by OPL.<sup>3</sup>

The issues before the Court are (1) whether the Claims are preempted by the Federal Power Act (the "FPA") and precluded by the filed rate doctrine, (2) whether OPL may amend the Claims to include additional claims concerning the alleged manipulation of California's gas market. Upon consideration of the pleadings and arguments of the parties, the Court finds that because the FERC has exclusive jurisdiction over interstate sales of wholesale electricity, the Claims sought to be enforced by OPL are preempted by the FPA. Further, the filed rate doctrine also precludes consideration of the Claims. In addition, the Court finds that OPL's [*79] request to amend its original proofs of claim against the Debtors is not warranted since OPL has failed to meet the standard for a motion to amend. In that, it has included new claims [**5] or created new causes of action in its request, and the amendment was not timely asserted. Therefore, the Court sustains the Debtors' objection to the Claims and the Debtors' objection to the motion to amend. Further, the Court finds that even if the amendment regarding the Gas Claims were granted, the filed rate doctrine would preclude the Court from considering such claims.

I. BACKGROUND

Commencing on December 2, 2001, and from time to time continuing thereafter, the Debtors filed voluntary petitions for relief under chapter 11 of title 11 of the United States Code (the "Bankruptcy Code"). On July 15, 2004, the Court entered an Order confirming the Debtors' Supplemental Modified Fifth Amended Joint Plan of Affiliated Debtors (the "Plan") in these cases. The Plan became effective on November 17, 2004.

This litigation arises out of the California energy crisis of 2000-01. Prior to the energy crisis, the California legislature had passed Assembly Bill 18904 (the "Bill")<sup>4</sup> to create two non-governmental entities, the California Power Exchange (the "PX") and the California Independent System Operator (the "ISO"), to operate markets and manage the sale of electricity. The PX and [**6] the ISO were organized under California law, but regulated by FERC. California v. Dynegy, Inc., 375 F.3d 831, 850 (9th Cir. 2004). The central transactions, wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce, were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Further, the centralized wholesale spot electricity markets operated by the ISO and the PX were established subject to FERC review and approval. The ISO and the PX served as clearinghouses. Since August 2, 2000, FERC has commenced refund proceeding, and partnership and gaming proceeding to investigate certain of the Debtors. FERC found that the Debtors engaged in gaming<sup>5</sup> in the form of inappropriate trading strategies and further

---

<sup>2</sup> OPL filed the motion to amend its original proofs of claim against Enron North America Corp. (Claim No. 15231), Enron Corp. (Claim No. 15232), and Enron Energy Services, Inc (Claim No. 15233) based on their alleged manipulation of the natural gas market in California. Because OPL did not file the amendment against Enron Energy Marketing Corp. (Claim No. 15229), Enron Power Marketing Inc. (Claim No. 15230), Enron Energy Services, LLC (Claim No. 15234) and Enron Energy Services North American, Inc (Claim No. 15235), it is presumed that these entities did not involve the gas market manipulation.

<sup>3</sup> The Debtors responded to the relief sought by OPL as if it included a request for leave to file late proofs of claim. However, since OPL neither briefed nor argued such a request, the Court only addresses the relief sought as a request to amend OPL's timely-filed original Claims.

<sup>4</sup> 1996 Cal. Stat. 854

engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information. Enron Power Mktg., Inc., et al., 106 FERC P 61,024 \(2004\). Both proceedings are ongoing, including the determination of remedies by FERC.

[**7] II. DISCUSSION

1. Preemption and Filed Rate Doctrine

A. Legal Standard of Preemption

HN2 [↑] "Federal preemption of state law is rooted in the Supremacy Clause, Article VI, clause 2, of the United States Constitution." Transmission Agency v. Sierra Pac. Power Co., 295 F.3d 918, 928 (9th Cir. 2002). Where Congress manifests intent to occupy an entire regulatory field, any remedy sought outside of the congressional scheme is considered completely preempted. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 481 U.S. 58, 63-64, 95 L. Ed. 2d 55, 107 S. Ct. 1542 (1987). Federal courts have rarely identified legislation that has been found to completely preempt state jurisdiction. [Caterpillar, Inc. v. \[\*80\] Williams](#), 482 U.S. 386, 393, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318, 107 S. Ct. 2425 (1987).

Here, neither party raises the argument that complete preemption is applicable, nor is there any evidence in the record that would support the conclusion that Congress intended for complete preemption to apply in this case.

HN3 [↑] In the absence of an express preemption by Congress, state law is preempted (1) "when Congress intends that federal law occupy a given field." Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 U.S. 238, 248, 78 L. Ed. 2d 443, 104 S. Ct. 615 (1984) [**8] ("Field Preemption"), and (2) "to the extent that state law actually conflicts with federal law, that is, when it is impossible to comply with both state and federal law, or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress." Id. ("Conflict Preemption").

B. Preemption

1) Field Preemption

The Debtors, in support of their position that the Claims should be barred by FERC's exclusive jurisdiction, cite to Public Util. Dist. No 1 v. IDACORP Inc., 379 F.3d 641 (9th Cir. 2004), Dynegy, and Public Util. Dist. No. 1 v. Dynegy Power Mktg., Inc., 384 F.3d 756 (9th Cir. 2004). These cases addressed FERC's exclusive jurisdiction and its remedial power concerning the wholesale electricity market. The Debtors argue that the Claims, alleging violations of state antitrust and unfair competition law, are nearly identical to those involved in the cited cases, therefore, for the reasons set forth in those cases, field preemption is applicable here.

The Dynegy court ruled that "state actions against wholesale electricity suppliers alleging violations of California's unfair business practices law are [**9] preempted by FPA because the conduct the state sought to condemn was expressly governed by the ISO tariffs and they encroach upon the substantive provisions of the tariff, an area reserved exclusively to FERC, both to enforce and to seek remedy." 375 F.3d at 852.

The Court finds that HN4 [↑] the statute's framework under the FPA supports the conclusion in Dynegy that FERC has been granted broad authority by Congress, in addition to the authority to determine the "just and reasonable rates" for wholesale power. The statute delegates to the Federal Energy Commission "exclusive authority to regulate the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce except those which <sup>5</sup> HN1 [↑] The ISO tariff, through the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol defines gaming, in part, as "taking unfair advantage of the rules and procedures set forth in the PX or the ISO tariffs, Protocols or Activity Rule . . . to the detriment of the efficiency of, and of consumers in, the ISO markets." Am. Electric Power Service Corp., et al., 103 FERC P 61,346 \(2003\).

Congress has made explicitly subject to regulation by the states. . . . Retail sales of electricity and wholesale intrastate sales are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824-824m.

Neither party disputes that the transactions at issue involved wholesale interstate sales of electricity. Further, there has been no evidence presented or any representation by either party that the sales that gave rise to this dispute [**10] should be characterized as either retail sales of electricity or wholesale intrastate sales. HN5↑ The statute provides that upon a determination by FERC that "any rate charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same [*81] by order." Federal Power Act, 16 U.S.C. § 824e (emphasis added).

Moreover, HN6↑ pursuant to the statute, FERC possesses broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior, specifically through profit disgorgement and refunds. Further, FERC can proceed by rulemaking rather than case-by-case adjudication, and can rely on general findings of systemic monopoly conditions and the resulting potential for anti-competitive behavior, rather than evidence of monopoly and undue [**11] discrimination on the part of individual utilities. Federal Power Act, §§ 205, 206(a), as amended, 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e; Department of Energy Organization Act, § 403(c), 42 U.S.C.A. § 7173\(c\).

In addition, after the deregulation of California energy markets, the central transactions and the wholesale sales of energy in interstate commerce were governed by FERC approved rules and a FERC "jurisdictional" ISO and PX. Having examined FERC's regulatory authority over the deregulated electricity market in California, the Snohomish court concluded, "FERC is doing enough regulation to justify federal preemption of state laws under the market-based system of setting wholesale electricity rates." Public Util. Dist. No. 1, 384 F.3d at 760-61. For instance,

(1) FERC continued to oversee wholesale electricity rates by reviewing and approving a variety of documents filed by the PX and the ISO. FERC approved the market-based tariffs only upon a showing that the seller lacked or had mitigated its market power. (2) FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports under FPA § 205(c) 16 U.S.C. § 824d\(c\). (3) [**12] FERC reviewed and approved detailed tariffs filed by the PX and the ISO, which described in detail how the markets operated by each entity would function. Id.

In addition, HN7↑ "each participant in the PX and the ISO markets was required to sign an agreement acknowledging that the tariff filed by either the PX or the ISO would govern all transactions in that market." Id. The Court also recognizes that "entities that transact through the ISO or [the] PX and engage in improper practices<sup>6</sup> are in violation of filed tariffs. . . . FERC and the Market Surveillance Unit are directed by the ISO's Market Monitoring and Information Protocol to refer matters to the FERC for enforcement." 103 FERC P 61,346.

[**13] Moreover, the Court finds that Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\), and California v. Federal Power Commission, 369 U.S. 482, 8 L. Ed. 2d 54, 82 S. Ct. 901 \(1962\) are not controlling in the instant case. In both cases, the Supreme Court found that Congress does not intend to bar the government from bringing actions in violation of antitrust laws related to filed tariffs before regulatory commissions. However, two important differences exist. First, both cases discussed issues of the [*82] interaction between federal administrative law and federal antitrust law; thereby no state law preemption issue was presented in these cases. In California v. Federal Power Commission, a gas company filed a motion to dismiss the antitrust suit pursuant to the Clayton Act, § 7 as amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 18, or in the alternative, to stay it, pending completion of the proceedings for its authority to acquire another company's assets pursuant to the Natural Gas Act (the "NGA"), § 7(c) as amended 15 U.S.C.A. § 717f\(c\), before the Power Energy Commission. 369 U.S. at 483. In Otter Tail Power, the government brought [**14] an action against an electric power company to enjoin violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 2. 410 U.S. at 368. In order to protect market competition in certain cases, Congress did not expressly displace federal antitrust laws. The Court will not address whether Congress has left room for enforcement of state antitrust laws because OPL does not argue that state antitrust law and federal antitrust law would be impacted the same way. Further, the Court notes that the Ninth Circuit in Snohomish and Dynegy did not discuss the issue of the similarity between California antitrust law and Sherman Act.<sup>7</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup> HN8↑ Since 1998, the ISO and the PX tariffs have contained provisions that identify and prohibit "gaming" and "anomalous market behavior" in the sale of electric power. "Anomalous market behavior" is (1) behavior that departs significantly from the normal behavior in competitive markets that do not require continuing regulation or (2) as behavior leading to unusual or unexplained market outcomes. Circumstances include a) withholding of generation capacity under circumstances in which it would normally be offered in a competitive market; b) unexplained or unusual redeclarations of availability; c) unusual trades or transactions; d) pricing and bidding patterns that are inconsistent with prevailing supply and demand conditions; and e) unusual activity or circumstances relating to imports from or exports to other markets or exchanges." Am. Elec. Power Serv. Corp. et al., 103 F.E.R.C. P 61346 \(2003\).

[**15] Second, and more importantly, a critical distinction between the instant matter and the two cited cases is that there is a regulatory scheme against anti-competitive behavior that has been entrusted to FERC. As the Court discussed above, the statute under 16 U.S.C.A. §§ 824d, 824e\(a\) provides FERC with broad remedial authority to address anti-competitive behavior. In fact, FERC has exercised this power to act in the proceedings instituted against the Debtors concerning alleged market manipulation during the energy crisis. FERC has asserted that it "can order disgorgement of monies above the post-October 2, 2000 refunds ordered in the California Refund Proceeding, if it finds violations of the ISO and the PX tariffs and finds that a monetary remedy is appropriate for such violations. It can additionally order additional disgorgement of unjust profits for tariff violations that occurred after October 2, 2000." 103 FERC P 61,346. Further, HN9↑ "implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates to the marketers is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. Companies failing to adhere to such standards [**16] were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority." 106 FERC P 61,024.

In contrast, the court in California v. Federal Power Commission concluded that the NGA did not contain a provision to immunize the carriers involved in the mergers from the Clayton Act. 369 U.S. at 485. "The Commission's standard, set forth in § 7 of the NGA, will serve the public convenience and necessity.' If existing natural gas companies violate the antitrust laws, the Commission is directed by § 20\(a\) to transmit such evidence' to the Attorney General." Id. at 486. Similarly, the Court in Otter Tail Power found that the limited authority of the Federal Power Commission to order interconnections was not intended to be a substitute for the Sherman Act. 410 U.S. at 375. Moreover, the Supreme Court in Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 383 U.S. 932, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709, 86 S. Ct. 781 \(1966\) [*83] declined to grant antitrust immunity to a shipping company because "the provisions of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.A. § 801, can not reasonably be construed as an implied repeal of antitrust regulation of the shipping industry's [**17] rate-making activities." Id. at 217. The Shipping Act does not give the Federal Maritime Commission (the "FMC") any mandate to regulate rate competition and the statutory scheme was designed to minimize the role of the FMC. Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, 476 U.S. 409, 422, 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 \(1986\).

The Court further finds that Grays Harbor and Gulf States Util. Co. v. Alabama Power Co., 824 F.2d 1465 \(5th Cir. 1987\) are not applicable in the instant case. The courts in both cases concluded that the Claims concerning contractual disputes were not within the scope of FERC's jurisdiction. The Court finds that the facts here are distinguishable. First, the Claims in the cited cases were related to contractual issues, which exclusively fall within a state's jurisdiction. The court in Grays Harbor granted the utility leave to amend its complaint to seek declaratory relief only as to issues of contract formation. 379 F.3d. at 652-53. Similarly, the court in Gulf States held that executed contract performance, such as the failure to negotiate in good faith and fraud, were not preempted by the FPA. 824 F.2d at 1474. [**18] Here, no evidence or argument presented before the Court demonstrates that there is an issue involving contractual disputes. Second, contract formation issues would not necessarily intrude upon the rate-setting jurisdiction of FERC. Public Util. Dist. No 1, 379 F.3d. at 653. Therefore, field preemption bars OPL from pursuing the Claims.

<sup>7</sup> In Snohomish, consumer utility in Washington sued generators and traders of wholesale electricity, for violations of California state antitrust and consumer protection laws. 384 F.3d 756. In Dynegy, Attorney General of the State of California brought state court actions against wholesale electricity suppliers for violations of California's unfair business practices law. 375 F.3d 831.

C. Conflict Preemption

As to conflict preemption, for the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that FERC has broad authority concerning anti-competitive activities related to the filed rate, apart from that FERC has authority to determine the "just and reasonable" rates for wholesale power. A conflict between the FPA in which grants FERC jurisdiction over the anti-competitive acts and state antitrust claims exists. Accordingly, conflict preemption also bars OPL from pursuing the Claims.

D. Filed Rate Doctrine

Another threshold question before the Court is whether the Court would have to determine a tariff. HN10↑ The filed rate doctrine is essentially a rule of jurisdiction whose applicability is circumscribed by both the congressionally mandated jurisdiction of the regulatory agency and the occurrence of the triggering event of \*\*19 filing a rate or tariff. The filed rate doctrine is applicable where rates were filed with a federal regulatory agency and where the offending transactions are carried out with reference to a filed tariff. E& J. Gallo Winery v. Encana Energy Servs., Inc., Case No. CV F 03-5412 AWILJO. at 15. The Court recognizes that the filed rate doctrine "forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its service other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority." Ark. L.A. Gas Co. v. Frank Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577-78, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856, 101 S. Ct. 2925 \(1981\). The Court also acknowledges that the purpose of the doctrine is "preservation of the agency's primary jurisdiction over reasonableness of rates and the need to insure that regulated companies charge only those rates of which the agency has been made cognizant." Cleveland v. Federal Power Comm'n, 174 U.S. App. D.C. 1, 525 F.2d 845, 854 \(D.C. Cir. 1976\).

In addition, FERC required each seller to file quarterly reports pursuant to FPA § 205(c) 16 U.S.C. § 824d\(c\) on transaction-specific \*84 information about its sales and purchases at market-based rates. The court in Grays Harbor concluded HN11↑ "while market-based \*\*20 rates may not have historically been the type of rate envisioned by the filed rate doctrine, they do not fall outside the purview of the doctrine." 379 F.3d at 651.

Further, the Court agrees with the opinion of the California v. FERC court which concluded that HN12↑ "the reporting requirements are an integral part of a tariff, with FERC's implied enforcement mechanisms sufficient to provide substitute remedies for the obtaining of refunds for the imposition of unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory rates." Cal. ex rel. Lockyer v. FERC, 383 F.3d 1006 at 1016. On August 13, 2002, FERC's Initial Report in Docket No. PA02-2-000 concluded that the Debtors engaged in the deliberate submission of false information or the deliberate omission of material information.<sup>8</sup> Then, FERC concluded that such behavior constituted market manipulation and resulted in unjust and unreasonable rates and violated the express requirements in the orders allowing the Debtors to make sales at market-based rates. 106 FERC P 61,024. As noted by FERC,

HN13↑ implicit in Commission orders granting market-based rates is a presumption that a company's behavior will not involve fraud, deception or misrepresentation. \*\*21 Companies failing to adhere to such standards were and are subject to revocation of their market-based rate authority. The Debtors were expressly directed, when they were granted market-based rate authority, to inform the FERC promptly of changes in status (which would include changes in their generation market shares) that reflect a departure from the characteristics that the FERC relied upon in granting market-based rate authority. Id.

---

<sup>8</sup> FERC found that the Debtors failed to inform FERC in a timely manner of changes in their market shares that resulted from their gaining influence/control over others' facilities, as required under their market-based rate authorization. 106 FERC P 61,024.

Moreover, the Court in California v. FERC, indirectly recognized the application of the filed rate doctrine when marketers had not properly reported to FERC where such improper reporting affected the reasonableness of the tariff approved by FERC. 383 F.3d at 1016.

Without the availability of retroactive refunds, "parties aggrieved by the illegal rate would have no FERC remedy, and the filed rate doctrine would preclude a direct action against the offending seller. That result does not comport with the underlying theory or the regulatory structure established by the FPA." Id.

[**22] The Court finds that determining the liability or the legal right of OPL against the Debtors for violation of the antitrust laws would have to be measured by the tariff. HN14↑ In addressing the right of action that a violation of the antitrust laws gives to one who has been injured in its business or property, the Supreme Court in Keogh v. Chicago & N.W.R. Y. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 \(1922\), stated that "injury implies violation of a legal right." Id. at 163. The Supreme Court concluded that "the legal rights of [a] shipper as against [a] carrier in respect to a rate are measured by the published tariff." Id. at 163. Justice Brandeis explained "[a] rate is not necessarily illegal because it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Anti-Trust Act. What rates are legal is determined by the Act to Regulate Commerce. Under Section 8 of the latter act . . . the exaction of any illegal rate makes the carrier liable to the person injured thereby for the full amount of [*85] damages sustained in consequence of any such violation." Id. at 162. Thus, the finding of liability in antitrust laws would be integral [**23] to the Court's determination of whether the Debtors are liable due to their violations of state antitrust law and unfair competition law. For instance, the Court could not determine the overcharge claim owed by the Debtors for any electricity market manipulation without first deciding the reasonableness of the filed tariff.

The Supreme Court case, Arkansas Louisiana, further supports the Court's position that the filed rate doctrine should apply here. "In asserting that the filed rate doctrine had no application, respondents in Arkansas Louisiana contended that the state court has done no more than determine the damages they have suffered as a result of the breach of a contract by a gas company." 453 U.S. at 579. The Supreme Court rejected this argument by reasoning that "the mere fact that respondents brought this suit under state law would not rescue it, for when Congress has established an exclusive form of regulation . . . there can be no divided authority over interstate commerce. . . . HN15↑ Under the filed rate doctrine, FERC alone is empowered to make that judgment, and until it has done so, no rate other than the one on file may be charged." Id. at 580-84. [**24]

Moreover, to award monetary relief, the Court would have to determine a "fair price." Thus, the filed rate doctrine bars the Court from awarding monetary damages sought by OPL. Nonetheless, the Court finds that injunctive relief would also be unavailable to OPL. The Court agrees with the Ninth Circuit's decision in Snohomish, which declined to grant injunctive relief because such relief is barred by the filed rate doctrine and preemption principle. 384 F.3d at 762. HN16↑ "Remedies for breach and non-performance of FERC-approved operating agreements in the interstate wholesale electricity market fall within the exclusive domain of FERC." Dynegy, 375 F.3d at 836.

The decisions from the Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association v. Citizens Utilities Co., 45 F.3d 58 \(2d Cir. 1995\) and Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17 \(2d Cir. 1994\), provide an additional basis for dismissal of the Claims sought by OPL. The Second Circuit in Sun City Taxpayers' Association affirmed the decision from the district court, which had declined the plaintiff's invitation to find a fraud exception to the filed rate doctrine. In [**25] determining whether the filed rate doctrine applied, the court focused on the impact the court's decision would have on agency procedures and rate determination. Sun City Taxpayers' Ass'n v. Citizens Utils. Co., 847 F.Supp. 281, 291 \(D. Conn. 1994\). The Second Circuit in Wegoland recognized that HN17↑ the filed rate doctrine exists for reasons independent of the type of plaintiff maintaining the action. Those reasons include that (a) legislatively appointed regulatory bodies have institutional competence to address rate-making issues, (b) courts lack the competence to set utility rates, and (c) the interference of courts in the rate-making process would subvert the authority of rate-setting bodies and undermine the regulatory regime. 27 F.3d at 21.

Therefore, having considered the policy objectives, the Court finds it is inappropriate to frustrate FERC's jurisdiction afforded by Congress. The Court lacks authority to impose a different rate than the one approved by a federal agent. Any other conclusion departing from this principle would undermine the filed rate doctrine. The Court, therefore, rejects OPL's challenge to the application of the filed [*86] rate [**26] doctrine. Accordingly, the filed rate doctrine bars the relief sought by OPL.

2. Motion to Amend<sup>9</sup>

A. General Standards For Permitting A Post-Bar Date Amendment To Timely-Filed Proofs Of Claim

HN18[] Bankruptcy Rule 3003\(c\)\(3\) directs a bankruptcy court to establish a bar date beyond which proofs of claim are disallowed in a chapter 11 case. The bar date is critically important to the administration of a successful chapter 11 case for it intended "to be a mechanism providing the debtor and its creditors with finality." *In re Manville Forest Products Corp.*, 89 B.R. 358, 374 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1988\). In particular, a "bar [date] [**27]" order serves the important purpose of enabling the parties to a bankruptcy case to identify with reasonable promptness the identity of those making claims against the bankruptcy estate and the general amount of the claims, a necessary step in achieving the goal of successful reorganization." *In re Keene Corp.*, 188 B.R. 903, 907 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995\) (quoting *First Fidelity Bank, N.A. v. Hooker Invs., Inc.* \(*In re Hooker Invs., Inc.*\), 937 F.2d 833, 840 \(2d Cir. 1991\)). Therefore, a bar date order "does not function merely as a procedural gauntlet,' . . . but as an integral part of the reorganization process." Id. (quoting *First Fidelity*, 937 F.2d at 840 (quoting, in turn, *United States v. Kolstad* \(*In re Kolstad*\), 928 F.2d 171, 173 \(5th Cir. 1991\))). Accordingly, a bar date is likened to a statute of limitations which generally must be strictly observed. Id. (citing *Maxwell Macmillan Realization Liquidating Trust & MCA GAO, Inc. v. Aboff* \(*In re Macmillan*\), 186 B.R. 35, 49 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995\)).

HN19[] The decision to grant or deny an amendment to a timely-filed proof of claim rests with the sound [**28] discretion of a bankruptcy judge." *In re McLean Industries, Inc.*, 121 B.R. 704, 708 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1990\). "Although amendments to proofs of claim should in the absence of contrary equitable considerations or prejudice to the opposing party be freely permitted, such amendments are not automatic. . . ." *In re W.T. Grant Co.*, 53 B.R. 417, 420 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1985\). The amendments "are allowed, [however,] where the purpose is to cure a defect in the claim as originally filed, to describe the [original] claim with greater particularity or to plead a new theory of recovery on the facts set forth in the original claim." Id.; *In re G.L. Miller & Co.*, 45 F.2d 115, 116 \(2d Cir. 1930\) (enumerating same three factors for amending claims). Nevertheless, an "amendment may not be used as a mechanism for circumventing the bar date." *In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Group*, 151 B.R. 684, 694 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1993\). Therefore, a bankruptcy court must carefully scrutinize a post bar-date amendment "to ensure that the amendment is truly amending timely-filed [proofs of] claims and not asserting an entirely new claim." *In re Macmillan*, 186 B.R. at 49; [**29] see *In re Alexander's Inc.*, 176 B.R. 715, 723 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1995\) (citing *In re W.T. Grant*, 53 B.R. at 422). An amendment will not be permitted when its purpose is to create an entirely new claim. *In re Andover Togs, Inc.*, 231 B.R. 521, 549 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1999\).

HN20[] When deciding whether to permit an amendment to a proof of claim, a bankruptcy court is guided by a two-prong [*87] test. *Integrated Resources, Inc. v. Ameritrust Co. N.A.* \(*In re Integrated Resources, Inc.*\), 157 B.R. 66, 70 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\) (citing *In re Black & Geddes, Inc.*, 58 B.R. 547, 553 \(S.D.N.Y. 1983\)). "A court must first look to whether there was timely assertion of a similar claim or demand evidencing an intention to hold the estate liable." Id. (quoting *Black & Geddes*, 58 B.R. at 553). If there were such a timely assertion, the court then examines each fact within the case and determines whether it would be equitable to allow the amendment. Id. In balancing the equities, the court considers the following equitable factors:

<sup>9</sup>The Court addressed issue of whether a Claimant may amend a timely-filed proof of claim to include an additional claim in its memorandum decision in *In re Enron Corp.*, 298 B.R. 513, 518-26 \(Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2003\). This section of the Opinion is based on the legal analysis regarding an amendment as set forth in In re Enron Corp.

(1) undue prejudice to opposing party; (2) bad faith or dilatory behavior [**30] on part of the claimant; (3) whether other creditors would receive a windfall were the amendment not allowed; (4) whether other claimants might be harmed or prejudiced; and (5) the justification for the inability to file the amended claim at the time the original claim was filed.

Integrated Resources, 157 B.R. at 70 (quoting McLean Industries, 121 B.R. at 708); see also In re Miss Glamour Coat Co., 1980 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14545, at *12-13 (S.D.N.Y. 1980) (formulating similar equitable factors for considering in applying the two-prong test in permitting an amendment to a proof of claim). This second prong of the test is applied "only if the first prong is satisfied and the claim qualifies as an amendment and not a new claim." In re Sage-Dey, Inc., 170 B.R. 46, 49 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1994).

B. Application Of Rule 15(c) Of The Federal Rules Of Civil Procedure

HN21[↑] Neither the Bankruptcy Code nor Bankruptcy Rules directly address an amendment of a proof of claim. Nevertheless, in determining whether to permit a post-bar date amendment to a timely-filed proof of claim [**31] under the first prong of the two-prong test, several courts have applied Rule 15(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("Rule") by analogy or explicitly, pursuant to Bankruptcy Rules 7015 and 9014(c), to analyze such an amendment. See Enjet, Inc. v. Maritime Challenge Corp. (In re Enjet, Inc.), 220 B.R. 312, 315 (E.D. La. 1998) (noting that "numerous courts have applied Rule 7015 and Rule 15(c) explicitly or by analogy in non-adversary [bankruptcy] proceedings"); In re Brown, 159 B.R. 710, 714 (Bankr. D.N.J. 1993) (noting that Rule 15's "standards for allowing amendments to pleadings in adversary proceedings . . . also apply to amendments to a proof of claim"); Liddle v. Drexel Burnham Lambert Group, Inc., 159 B.R. 420, 425 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) ("Several courts have held that the analysis for amendment of claims in bankruptcy is identical to the analysis required by Rule 15"); McLean Industries, 121 B.R. at 710 ("The test under Rule 15 is basically the same as that developed in the case law for amending claims in bankruptcy . . .").

HN22[↑] Bankruptcy Rule 7015 provides that "Rule [**32] 15 . . . applies in adversary proceedings." Although "the filing of an objection to a proof of claim is a contested matter,' [and] not an adversary proceeding[,] . . . Bankruptcy Rule 9014 permits a [bankruptcy] court, at its discretion, to extend Rule 7015 to contested matters as well as adversary proceedings." In re Stavriots, 977 F.2d 1202, 1204 (7th Cir. 1992) (citations omitted). In particular, HN23[↑] Bankruptcy Rule 9014(c) states that "the court may at any stage in a particular matter direct that one or more of the other rules in Part VII [which includes Bankruptcy Rule 7015] shall apply" and, further, the Advisory Committee Note to the rule provides that "when the rules of Part VII are applicable to a contested matter, reference in the Part VII rules to [*88] adversary proceedings is to be read as a reference to a contested matter." "Part VII of the Bankruptcy Rules is based on the premise that to the extent possible practice before the bankruptcy courts and the district courts should be the same." Stavriots, 977 F.2d at 1204 (quoting Advisory Committee Note to Bankruptcy Rule 7001). Accordingly, the Court exercises its discretion under Bankruptcy [**33] Rule 9014(c) in applying by analogy the standards of subsections (c)(2) of Rule 15 to determine whether OPL's Gas Claims relate back to its original Claims against the Debtors.

Rule 15(c) provides, in pertinent part, that

HN24[↑] an amendment of a pleading relates back to the date of the original pleading when
 (2) the claim or defense asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading,

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(c)(2) (2004). HN25[↑] After the statute of limitations has run (here, the Bar Date), Rule 15(c)(2) is used for amending an original pleading (here, the original Proof of Claim) to add a claim or defense.

HN26[↑] "Courts, in general, have moved away from the cause of action' test in allowing an amendment under Rule 15 . . . , and instead, on [sic] amendment has been allowed which adds another claim if it is arising out of the same transaction or occurrence." Miss Glamour, 1980 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14545, at *9; see CIT Group/Factoring Mfrs. Hanover, Inc. v. Srour, 138 B.R. 413, 418 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1992) (holding same). The Claims concerning market manipulation [**34] in the wholesale electricity market arise out of certain trading strategies that the Debtors utilized in the California wholesale electricity markets, which allegedly wrongfully inflated the electricity bills of California ratepayers. The trading strategies, which OPL alleges as unlawful, unfair and fraudulent business practices in the original Claims, include as follows:

(1) The Debtors manipulated supplies in the California wholesale electricity markets by withholding supplies from the PX and ISO markets. Thus creating artificial shortages of electricity which, in turn, raised prices, (2) the Debtors engaged in a "megawatt laundering," whereby Enron purchased electricity from a California generator, but instead of directly bidding the power into the PX or ISO markets, the trader sold the rights to the power to an affiliate outside of California. The affiliate then would sell the rights to the power back into California at even greater prices in order to inflate the price of electricity, (3) the Debtors engaged in a practice of scheduling energy over a transmission line that it knew would be congested at a given point, even though it had no intention of actually using [**35] that line for transmission, in order to receive a payment not to use that line. (emphasis added).

By comparison, the practices of market manipulation in the Gas Claims include wash trades, also known as churning, and false reporting of gas market transactions to publications for compilation and price indexes. HN27<sup>10</sup> Wash trading occurs when a party simultaneously buys and sells the same commodity at or near the same price within a very short period time so that the party has no financial risk in the transactions. Wash trading establishes "bogus" prices which are not related to real conditions in the gas market, and creates an illusion of volume and liquidity which encourages other market participants to engage in the frenzy. Thus, the Court finds that the underlying alleged practices by [*89] the Debtors in two markets were vastly different.

Additionally, the legal analysis regarding each of the two markets is different because they are regulated by different federal acts. The Natural Gas Act (the "NGA") regulates the gas market, while the FPA regulates the electricity market. While the jurisdictional provisions of the FPA and the NGA may be similar, because of the unique context of the natural [**36] gas market during the energy crisis in California, the legal conclusion on whether the NGA preempts state law claims may be drawn differently from the Court's finding in the electricity market. Actually, the district court in Nevada, *In re: Western States Wholesale Natural Gas Antitrust Litigation*, 346 F.Supp.2d 1123 \(D. Nev. 2004\), held that NGA did not completely preempt state law claims. While the Court does not address herein the issue as to whether the NGA preempts state law claims, the Court notes the differences in the two markets. For instance, unlike the electricity market, where FERC reviews and approves detailed tariffs filed by the PX and the ISO, at the time of the alleged misconduct in the natural gas market, FERC granted blanket approval for most gas sales. Unlike the energy market, the natural gas market largely was deregulated at the time of the alleged anti-competitive conduct. At that time, section 284.402 of the FERC regulations contained no explicit guidelines on misconducts, such as churning, spot market, wash sales and netting agreements in gas market. Unlike the energy industry, which partially was regulated by the FERC-supervised ISO [**37] and PX, the natural gas industry was driven almost completely by the market forces of supply and demand.<sup>10</sup>

Rule 15\(c\)\(2\) requires the Court to consider whether the asserted Gas Claims arose out of the same transaction or occurrence set forth in the original Claims. In its original Claims, OPL made it clear that the perimeter of the alleged market manipulation claims against the Debtors is drawn by OPL within the wholesale electricity market, by stating as follows: "the [original] Claims arise out of certain trading strategies that the Debtors utilized in the California wholesale electricity markets, which wrongfully inflated the electricity bills of California ratepayers. By engaging in these unlawful, unfair, and fraudulent business practices, Enron violated [various state laws]."
(emphasis added).

[**38] See OPL's Statement Regarding Proof of Claim.

---

<sup>10</sup> Final Report on Price Manipulation in Western Markets: Fact-Finding Investigation of Potential Manipulation of Electric and Natural Gas Price, Docket No. PA02-2-00, II-61 (Mar. 2003).

Here, the Court has found that the trading strategies in the gas markets are not the same as those stated in the original Claims. Further, since vast differences between the gas and electricity market exist, these two markets are not be interchangeable. The Court agrees that the amendment would change the nature of the original Claims by introducing significantly different factual and legal allegations. Accordingly, the Court finds that the Gas Claims do not arise out of the same transaction or occurrence set forth in the original Claims, that is, these two claims are not related under a Rule 15\(c\) analysis. Moreover, the Court finds that OPL's Gas Claims are not for the purpose of curing a defect in the original Claims, or supplementing the original Claims with greater particularity or to pleading a new theory of recovery on the facts set forth in the Claims.

[*90] Additionally, in the first prong of the test, "[a] court must first look to whether there was timely assertion of a similar claim or demand evidencing an intention to hold the estate liable." Integrated Resources (quoting Black & Geddes, 58 B.R. at 553). [***39] Here, even if the Gas Claims are similar to the original Claims, the Court finds that OPL failed to timely assert the Gas Claims. OPL argues that it put the Court and the Debtors "on notice" in the footnote of the Partial Objection in September 2003. In the footnote, OPL states as follows: "information regarding the Debtor's misuse of the Enron Online natural gas trading platform and its impact on California electricity and natural gas prices, did not become public until after the Claimant filed the Proofs of claim. This misconduct, as well as the Debtors' other misconduct described in the FERC report, is equally at issue in determining the Debtors' liability to California ratepayers." See, footnote 2 of the Partial Objection.

The Court finds that even if footnote 2 sufficiently placed the Debtors on notice as to the inclusion of the alleged gas market manipulation claims in its original Claims against the Debtors under the standard of a motion to amend, such notice was not timely. In that, in August 2002, FERC issued the Initial Report, containing, inter alia, the relevant findings regarding the assertions of the Debtors' natural gas market manipulation. On October 11, 2002, Attorney [***40] General of the California timely filed proofs of claim regarding the Debtors' alleged manipulation in the electricity and gas markets. In March 2003, FERC issued the Final Report. The claimed notice came six months after the FERC's Final Report and thirteen months after the FERC's Initial Report was available. Both FERC reports discussed the Debtors' alleged manipulation in the electricity and gas markets.

Further, regarding the timing of the motion to amend, the Debtors' Plan was confirmed on July 15, 2004 and the Plan became effective on November 17, 2004. OPL filed motion to amend eight months after the confirmation of the Plan and four months after the Plan had become effective, as well as roughly two and half years after the October 15, 2002 bar date. Most significantly, OPL's motion to amend was filed at least eighteen months after OPL referenced the gas market manipulation claims in its claimed notice, and thirty-one months after FERC's Initial Report became available, containing the relevant information regarding the assertions of the Debtors' gas market manipulation (the State of California and California Department of Water Resources asserted the gas manipulation claims [***41] in their timely filed proofs of claim dated October 11, 2002, based on the FERC's finding on the Debtors' alleged misconduct in the gas market in Initial Report. In that FERC's Final Report was not issued until March 2003). Accordingly, the Court finds that the length of the delay in filing the Gas Claims here is substantial.

Thus, OPL has failed to meet the first prong of the test, i.e., it has failed to establish that the amendment was a timely assertion of a similar claim or demand evidencing an intention to hold the estate liable. The second prong of the test on equitable factors is applied "only if the first prong is satisfied, and the claim qualifies as an amendment and not a new claim." In re Sage-Dey, Inc., 170 B.R., at 49. Here, OPL's Gas Claims are new and do not relate back to its original Claims. Thus, the Court does not need to address the second prong of the test. Additionally, the Court considers OPL's new Gas Claims as "other or further claims" that are barred, absent some form of relief, by, [***91] inter alia, the Confirmation Order.<sup>11</sup> Therefore, based upon OPL's failure to satisfy the first prong of the test, the motion to amend is denied.

<sup>11</sup> The Confirmation Order provides that "all Persons and Entities are hereby precluded from asserting against the Debtors . . . any other or further Claims based upon any act or omission, transaction or other activity of any kind or nature that occurred prior to the Confirmation Date, whether or not the facts or legal bases therefore were known or existed prior to the Confirmation Date. . . ." See, Order Confirming Supplemental Modified Fifth Amended Joint Plan of Affiliated Debtors Pursuant to Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, and Related Relief, p. 22.

[**42] 3. Filed Rate Doctrine Bars the Gas Claims

The filed rate doctrine would apply to preclude the Court from considering the Gas Claims even if the motion to amend were allowed. As discussed previously, there were vast differences between the gas and the electricity markets during the energy crisis in California, and the Court notes that the Neveda court in Natural Gas Antitrust Litigation, 346 F.Supp.2d 1123, held that NGA did not completely preempt state law claims. However, regardless of the outcome of preemption issue, the Court is barred from considering the Gas Claims because determining the Debtors' liability or the legal right of OPL against the Debtors for violation of the antitrust laws would have to be measured by the tariff. The Court agrees with the Neveda court in its separate decision concerning the filed rate doctrine, In re W. States Wholesale Natural Gas Antitrust Litig. 368 F. Supp. 2d 1110 \(D. Nev. 2005\). HN28 "The essential purpose of the filed rate doctrine is to protect the jurisdiction of a regulatory body that Congress has designated to determine whether rates charged, such as those in the natural gas market, \*\*43 are just and reasonable. Under the NGA, FEC retains statutory authority over wholesale natural gas prices and therefore the filed rate doctrine applies even though FERC, in exercising its authority, chose to move toward a market-based system." Id. at 1116. Based on the reasons that the Court discussed previously in Section 1.D (Filed Rate Doctrine), the Court lacks authority to impose a different rate than the one approved by a federal agent. Any other conclusion departing from this principle would undermine the filed rate doctrine. Accordingly, the filed rate doctrine would bar the relief sought by OPL, even if the motion to amend were granted.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court concludes that the Claims sought by OPL concerning electricity market manipulation are preempted by the FPA and precluded by the filed rate doctrine. Therefore, the Court sustains the Debtors' objection to the Claims filed by OPL. Further, because OPL's Gas Claims do not relate back to its original Claims, and the amendment was not timely filed, the motion to amend is denied. The Court further finds that even if the Gas Claims were allowed to be filed, the filed rate doctrine would \*\*44 bar the Court from considering the OPL's Gas Claims against the Debtors.

Counsel for the Debtors is directed to settle an order consistent with this Opinion.

Dated: New York, New York

August 5, 2005

Arthur J. Gonzalez

UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

Wine & Spirits Retailers, Inc. v. Rhode Island

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

August 10, 2005, Decided

No. 05-1549

Reporter

418 F.3d 36 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16718 **

WINE AND SPIRITS RETAILERS, INC. AND JOHN HARONIAN, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. STATE OF RHODE ISLAND ET AL., Defendants, Appellees.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by Wine & Spirits Retailers, Inc. v. R.I. & Providence Plantations, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105612 \(D.R.I., Apr. 11, 2006\)

Subsequent appeal at Wine & Spirits Retailers, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 481 F.3d 1, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 6412 \(1st Cir. R.I., Mar. 20, 2007\)

Prior History: [**1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF RHODE ISLAND. Hon. Ernest C. Torres, U.S. District Judge.

Wine And Spirits Retailers, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 364 F. Supp. 2d 172, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6093 \(D.R.I., Apr. 8, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

liquor license, advertising, franchisees, rights, holders, retail, licensed, liquor, entity, franchisor, franchise, preliminary injunction, commercial speech, injunction, advice, regulation, alcoholic beverage, package, franchise agreement, district court, coordinated, merits, business activity, anti trust law, license holder, chain store, free speech, trade name, restrictions, concerted

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN1 State & Territorial Governments, Licenses

Under Rhode Island law, any individual or entity engaged in the manufacture, sale, or importation of alcoholic beverages must hold a valid license issued by the Department of Business Regulation (DBR). R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-1. A Class A retail license entitles the holder to obtain alcoholic beverages from licensed wholesalers and to operate a retail package store, from which the beverages may be sold in sealed containers. R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 3-7-1, 3-7-3. Since 1933, the State has prohibited chain store organizations from holding Class A liquor licenses. R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11. This enactment gave the DBR full discretion to determine whether an entity fell into the "chain store" category.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN2 Agriculture & Food, Food Product Promotions

The Rhode Island General Assembly amended R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11 to identify a set of licensee activities that would allow the Department of Business Regulation (DBR) to find that an entity was in fact a chain store organization. The new statute, enacted July 8, 2004, and effective April 1, 2005, expanded the term "chain store organization" to encompass any group of one or more holders of Class A liquor licenses who engage in one or more of the following practices with respect to the business conducted under such licenses, either directly or indirectly, or have any direct or indirect beneficial interest in the following practices: (i) common, group, centralized, or coordinated purchases of wholesale merchandise; (ii) common billing or utilization of the services of the same person or the same entity in the management or operation of more than one liquor licensed business; (iii) participation in a coordinated or common advertisement with one or more liquor licensed business in any advertising media; (iv) coordinated or common planning or implementation of marketing strategies; (v) participation in agreed upon or common pricing of products; and (vi) any term or name identified as a chain or common entity. R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\).

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Disclosure & Registration > Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN3 Disclosure & Registration, Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

By its terms, R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\) restricts a holder of a Class A liquor license from participating in many business activities that are typical of a franchise relationship.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Disclosure & Registration > Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Franchise Agreements

HN4 Disclosure & Registration, Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

Simultaneous with the enactment of R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11\(b\), the Rhode Island General Assembly passed R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1. This provision has a similar but more direct effect: it explicitly excludes franchisees from holding Class A liquor licenses.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Disclosure & Registration > Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN5 Disclosure & Registration, Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1\(a\).

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Franchise Agreements

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Disclosure & Registration > Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Alcohol Related Offenses > Distribution & Sale > Penalties

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN6 Franchise Relationships, Franchise Agreements

R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1 nullifies all franchise agreements involving the retail sale of alcoholic beverages, R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1\(b\), stipulates that any franchisor or franchisee who is a party to such an agreement must terminate it within 30 days of the statute's effective date, R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1\(c\), and empowers the Department of Business Regulation to fine violators (including franchisors) and to revoke or suspend a transgressor's liquor license and/or franchise registration, R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1\(d\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Dismissal of Appeals > Involuntary Dismissals

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN7 Justiciability, Standing

It is axiomatic that U.S. Const. art. III standing is a constitutional precondition to a federal court's power to adjudicate a case. When standing is put in issue, a reviewing court is warranted in confirming its existence before proceeding to tackle the merits of the case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

418 F.3d 36, *36L2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16718, **1

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN8 Justiciability, Standing

The burden of establishing standing lies with the party invoking federal jurisdiction. Accordingly, that party must show that (1) it personally has suffered some actual or threatened injury, (2) the injury fairly can be traced to the challenged conduct, and (3) a favorable decision likely will redress the injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Third Party Standing

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN9 Justiciability, Standing

The requirement that an alleged injury be fairly traceable to the defendant's action does not mean that the defendant's action must be the final link in the chain of events leading up to the alleged harm. Nor does that requirement exclude injuries produced by coercive effect upon the action of someone else. Given these principles, the fact that the deleterious effect of a statute is indirect will not by itself defeat standing.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN10 Justiciability, Standing

To ground a claim of standing, harm must be actual or imminent rather than conjectural or speculative.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN11 Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

A district court must weigh four factors in determining whether to issue a preliminary injunction: (1) the likelihood of success on the merits; (2) the potential for irreparable harm to the movant if the injunction is denied; (3) the balance of relevant impositions, i.e., the hardship to the nonmovant if enjoined as contrasted with the hardship to the movant if no injunction issues; and (4) the effect (if any) of the court's ruling on the public interest. The sine qua non of this four-part inquiry is likelihood of success on the merits: if the moving party cannot demonstrate that he is likely to succeed in his quest, the remaining factors become matters of idle curiosity.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

418 F.3d 36, *36LAW2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16718, **1

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN12 [down] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

An appellate court reviews the grant or denial of a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion. Under that rubric, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and issues of law are reviewed de novo. Judgment calls and issues that demand the balancing of conflicting factors are reviewed deferentially. In the last analysis, then, the appellate court will set aside a district court's ruling on a preliminary injunction motion only if the court clearly erred in assessing the facts, misapprehended the applicable legal principles, or otherwise is shown to have abused its discretion.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > State Application

HN13 [down] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Speech

The Free Speech Clause provides that Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech. U.S. Const. amend. I. By incorporation through the Fourteenth Amendment, this prohibition applies to states and their political subdivisions.

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

HN14 [down] Freedom of Speech, Commercial Speech

Some profit-directed speech, such as legal or medical advice, is entitled to constitutional protection.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Disclosure & Registration > Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN15 [down] Disclosure & Registration, Enforcement of Franchise Requirements

R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\) simply does not prohibit the communication of advice between a franchisor and the holders of Class A liquor licenses.

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

HN16 [blue speech bubble icon] Freedom of Speech, Commercial Speech

The First Amendment does not guarantee that speech will be profitable to the speaker or desirable to its intended audience.

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

HN17 [blue speech bubble icon] Freedom of Speech, Commercial Speech

A case in which the statute imposes no burden on the communication between the speaker and the intended audience but has the effect of decreasing the audience's demand for a particular kind of business advice, is distinguishable from cases dealing with a state's direct imposition of financial burdens on the dissemination of particular kinds of speech.

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

HN18 [blue speech bubble icon] Freedom of Speech, Commercial Speech

The First Amendment does not safeguard against changes in commercial regulation that render previously profitable information valueless. The First Amendment's core concern is with the free transmission of a message or idea from speaker to listener, not with the speaker's ability to turn a profit or with the listener's ability to act upon the communication.

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > Advertising

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

HN19 [blue speech bubble icon] Commercial Speech, Advertising

Commercial speech, including truthful liquor advertising, is entitled to a measure of protection under the First Amendment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Licenses

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

418 F.3d 36, *36LAW2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16718, **1

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

HN20 [💡] Conveyances, Licenses

The commercial speech doctrine protects the communication of truthful information to potential customers about a proposed commercial transaction. The provision of advertising and licensing services is not speech that proposes a commercial transaction and therefore does not constitute commercial speech.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Expressive Conduct

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN21 [💡] Freedom of Speech, Expressive Conduct

It is the duty of the party seeking to engage in allegedly expressive conduct to demonstrate that the First Amendment applies to that conduct.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Standing

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Third Party Standing

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > General Overview

HN22 [💡] Justiciability, Standing

A party ordinarily has no standing to assert the First Amendment rights of third parties. There is an isthmian exception that applies when some barrier or practical obstacle deters a third party from asserting its rights.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Overbreadth & Vagueness of Legislation

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Third Party Standing

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > Third Party Standing

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Judicial & Legislative Restraints > Standing Governments > Legislation > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Judicial & Legislative Restraints, Overbreadth & Vagueness of Legislation

In some circumstances, out of concern that an overly broad statute might chill constitutionally protected speech, the United States Supreme Court has relaxed the prudential limitations on third-party standing to permit a litigant to pursue a facial challenge to such a statute on overbreadth grounds, even though the litigant's own conduct could be regulated validly by a more narrowly drawn statute. The overbreadth doctrine is inapplicable in the commercial speech context.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Assembly

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN24 [blue icon] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Assembly

Freedom of speech embraces the freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and ideas. This freedom of expressive association emerges from the insight that expressive rights explicitly guaranteed by the First Amendment could not be vigorously protected from interference by the state unless a correlative freedom to engage in group effort toward those ends were not also guaranteed. Because protection of the right to associate evolves from the First Amendment's guarantees of speech, assembly, petition, and free exercise, the scope of protection for association corresponds to the constitutional solicitude afforded to the mode of First Amendment expression in which a particular group seeks collectively to engage.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN25 [blue icon] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Association

In a free speech case, an association's expressive purpose may pertain to a wide array of ends, including economic ends, but the embedded associational right protects only collective speech and expressive conduct in pursuit of those ends; it does not cover concerted action that lacks an expressive purpose. So viewed, the right to expressive association does not confer a generalized freedom for individuals or entities collectively to engage in activity that is otherwise regulable when undertaken by a single individual or entity. The United States Supreme Court has tended to view the right of association as dependent on underlying individual rights of expression; there is no right of association in the abstract.

418 F.3d 36, *36LAW2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 16718, **1

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

HN26 [blue speech bubble icon] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Association

Business entities have no First Amendment right to combine operations or coordinate market activities for the purpose of obtaining a greater market share for each participant. The fact that communication serves as the primary instrument of conducting business among separate enterprises does not alter this conclusion.

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Free Press > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

HN27 [blue speech bubble icon] Freedom of Speech, Free Press

Although courses of conduct are, in most instances, effectuated by speaking or writing, it has never been deemed an abridgment of freedom of speech or press to make a course of conduct illegal merely because the conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language. Indeed, such an expansive interpretation of the constitutional guaranties of speech and press would make it practically impossible ever to enforce laws against agreements in restraint of trade as well as many other agreements and conspiracies deemed injurious to society. The state does not lose its power to regulate commercial activity deemed harmful to the public whenever speech is a component of that activity.

Constitutional Law > Prohibition

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Alcohol Related Offenses > Distribution & Sale > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Alcohol Related Offenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Alcohol Related Offenses > Distribution & Sale > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Alcohol Related Offenses > Transportation > Elements

HN28 [blue speech bubble icon] Constitutional Law, Prohibition

U.S. Const. amend. XXI, § 2, prohibits the transportation or importation, for delivery or use, of intoxicating liquors into any state in violation of state law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

HN29 [blue speech bubble icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The constitutionality of the antitrust laws is not open to debate. Such laws, by definition, regulate the ways in which market players may pool their capabilities to acquire market power. While the state cannot regulate the right of speakers to band together to convey a common message in the marketplace of ideas, it most assuredly can exercise control over the efforts of market players to exploit the principle of strength in numbers in the marketplace of goods.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Political Speech

HN30 [blue icon] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Association

The case law dealing with claimed exceptions to antitrust or commercial conspiracy laws on First Amendment associational grounds indicates that the state's right to enforce such laws against collusive market behavior must abate only in instances in which the joint activity constitutes an exercise of a core speech right.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Association

Constitutional Law > ... > Freedom of Speech > Commercial Speech > General Overview

HN31 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In the absence of anything uniquely expressive about the concerted commercial activity, no First Amendment exception to the enforcement of an otherwise valid antitrust law is warranted.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN32 [blue icon] Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

When economic legislation neither employs suspect classifications nor infringes on fundamental rights, the legislation need only survive rational basis scrutiny. Under that standard, an inquiring court must uphold the legislation as long as the means chosen by the legislature are rationally related to some legitimate government purpose. In conducting that analysis, the state's legislative choices bear a strong presumption of validity. A challenger can overcome this presumption only by demonstrating that there exists no fairly conceivable set of facts that could ground a rational relationship between the challenged classification and the government's legitimate goals.

Counsel: Evan T. Lawson, with whom Robert J. Roughsedge, Michael Williams, and Lawson & Weitzen, LLP were on brief, for appellants.

Rebecca Tedford Partington, Deputy Chief, Civil Division, Department of Attorney General, with whom Patrick C. Lynch, Attorney General, was on brief, for state appellees.

Joseph S. Larisa, Jr., with whom Larisa Law and Consulting, LLC was on brief, for intervenor-appellee.

Judges: Before Selya, Circuit Judge, Hill, * Senior Circuit Judge, and Lynch, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: SELYA

Opinion

---

[*41] SELYA, Circuit Judge. Rhode Island, like many states, regulates the intrastate channels through which alcoholic beverages may be manufactured, imported, and sold. One recently enacted piece of this regulatory mosaic prevents any franchisor or franchisee from holding a Class A retail liquor license. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1 [**2]. Another piece, enacted at the same time, amended a related statute, which prohibits any "chain store organization" from holding such a license, id. § 3-5-11\(a\), so that it explicitly [*42] encompasses package stores that engage in certain coordinated business activities, see id. § 3-5-11\(b\).

Plaintiff Wine & Spirits Retailers, Inc. (W & S), a franchisor of package stores, brought this action against the State seeking, inter alia, to enjoin the enforcement of those new enactments.<sup>1</sup> W & S premised its suit on the thesis that the two statutes, singly and in combination, violate (i) its First Amendment rights to speech and association and (ii) its Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection.

[**3] In this early chapter of the litigation, W & S appeals from the district court's denial of its motion for a preliminary injunction. Having weighed the considerations relevant to the preliminary injunction balance, we conclude that the district court did not abuse its discretion in determining that W & S failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits of its claims and, therefore, did not demonstrate an entitlement to preliminary injunctive relief.

I. BACKGROUND

HN1 [↑] Under Rhode Island law, any individual or entity engaged in the manufacture, sale, or importation of alcoholic beverages must hold a valid license issued by the Department of Business Regulation (DBR). See R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11. A Class A retail license entitles the holder to obtain alcoholic beverages from licensed wholesalers and to operate a retail package store, from which the beverages may be sold in sealed containers. See id. §§ 3-7-1, 3-7-3. Since 1933, the State has prohibited chain store organizations from holding Class A liquor licenses. See 1933 R.I. Pub. Laws ch. 2013, § 6 (current version at R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11). This enactment [**4] gave the DBR full discretion to determine whether an entity fell into the "chain store" category. Id.

---

* Of the Eleventh Circuit, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup> Posturing this action as one brought by W & S against the State is a harmless oversimplification. In fact, W & S's principal, John Haronian, is also a plaintiff and Jeffrey J. Greer, in his official capacity as associate director of Rhode Island's Department of Business Regulation, is also a defendant. Because their presence is essentially superfluous, we opt for simplicity and proceed as if W & S and the State were the only parties.

The ingenuity of lawyers is nearly endless and, recently, franchised package stores began to crop up throughout Rhode Island. In an apparent effort to block this easy evasion of the chain store prohibition, HN2↑ the Rhode Island General Assembly amended section 3-5-11 to identify a set of licensee activities that would allow the DBR to find that an entity was in fact a chain store organization. The new statute, enacted July 8, 2004 and effective April 1, 2005, expanded the term "chain store organization" to encompass:

Any group of one or more holders of Class A liquor licenses who engage in one or more of the following practices with respect to the business conducted under such licenses, either directly or indirectly, or have any direct or indirect beneficial interest in the following practices:

- (i) Common, group, centralized or coordinated purchases of wholesale merchandise.
- (ii) Common billing or utilization of the services of the same person or the same entity in the management or operation of more than one liquor licensed business.

(iii) Participation in \*\*5 a coordinated or common advertisement with one or more liquor licensed business in any advertising media.

(iv) Coordinated or common planning or implementation of marketing strategies.

[\[\*43\]](#) (v) Participation in agreed upon or common pricing of products.

(vi) Any term or name identified as a chain or common entity.

R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\). HN3↑ By its terms, this statute restricts a holder of a Class A liquor license from participating in many business activities that are typical of a franchise relationship.

HN4↑ Simultaneous with the enactment of section 3-5-11\(b\), the General Assembly passed what is now section 3-5-11.1. This provision has a similar but more direct effect: it explicitly excludes franchisees from holding Class A liquor licenses. The amended statute reads in pertinent part:

HN5↑ To promote the effective and reasonable control and regulation of the Rhode Island alcoholic beverage industry and to help the consumer by protecting their choices and ensuring equitable pricing. Class A liquor licenses authorized by this title shall not be granted, issued, renewed or transferred to or for the use of any liquor franchisor or franchisee. \*\*6 Class A liquor license holders are expressly prohibited from utilizing the provisions of the Franchise Investor [sic] Act, [R.I. Gen. Laws] § 19-28-1 et seq.

Id. HN6↑ § 3-5-11.1\(a\). The latter statute also nullifies all franchise agreements involving the retail sale of alcoholic beverages, id. § 3-5-11.1\(b\); stipulates that any franchisor or franchisee who is a party to such an agreement must terminate it within thirty days of the statute's effective date, id. § 3-5-11.1\(c\); and empowers the DBR to fine violators (including franchisors) and to revoke or suspend a transgressor's liquor license and/or franchise registration, id. § 3-5-11.1\(d\).

At the time these bills were passed, W & S had been operating for roughly seven years as a franchisor of independently owned Class A liquor retailers. It had a portfolio of eleven franchise agreements in Rhode Island, all of which were registered under the Franchise Investment Act, R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 19-28.1-1 to 19-28.1-34. These franchisees conducted business under names owned by W & S (seven under the name "Douglas Wine & Spirits" and four under the name "People's \*\*7 Liquor Warehouse").

In general, W & S's franchise agreements provided that, for an annual fee, royalties, a commitment to maintain certain quality standards, and a pledge to pay into a joint advertising and promotion fund, the franchisee would receive an exclusive franchise territory. The franchisee also would receive the right to use either the Douglas or People's trade name and other proprietary marks, and would be given access to a compendium of marketing, advertising, training, accounting, purchasing, and consulting services. Additionally, the franchise agreements authorized W & S to require the franchisees to carry certain products, to designate vendors for those items, and to dictate the layout of each retail store (including product placement).

In July of 2004 (when sections 3-5-11\(b\) and 3-5-11.1 were enacted), W & S was negotiating with two more potential Rhode Island franchisees. Recognizing the relevance of the new statutes to its operation, W & S wrote to the DBR on August 12, 2004, asking whether it would be permissible to register those two new franchises prior to the statutes' effective date. The DBR responded on September 1, 2004, explaining that W & S would have [**8] to submit applications in order for any new franchise registrations to be considered. The DBR's letter left no doubt that this would be an exercise in futility; the epistle declared the DBR's position to be "that as of April 1, 2005, all store franchise agreements as of that time will become null and void and it [thereafter] will be illegal for a [*44] Class A package store to operate under a franchise agreement."

II. TRAVEL OF THE CASE

With the death knell set to toll, W & S filed this action on September 29, 2004. Its complaint set forth eight statements of claim. On January 18, 2005, W & S moved to enjoin enforcement of the challenged provisions throughout the currency of the litigation. In the motion for preliminary injunctive relief, it relied on only three of its eight claims: (i) that sections 3-5-11 and 3-5-11.1 prohibit it from engaging in expression protected by the First Amendment; (ii) that the laws violate its First Amendment right to association; and (iii) that the laws violate the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment by treating it differently from others who are similarly situated. The State opposed the motion. The United Independent Liquor Retailers [**9] of Rhode Island (UILRRI), an association of Class A licensees that had lobbied for passage of the challenged laws, successfully moved to intervene as a party defendant and sided with the State.

Following a hearing, the district court denied the request for a preliminary injunction, principally on the ground that W & S had not demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits. See Wine & Spirits Retailers, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 364 F. Supp. 2d 172, 176-83 \(D.R.I. 2005\). W & S filed a timely notice of appeal. See Fed. R. App. P. 4\(a\); 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(a\)\(1\). We granted expedited review.

In the meantime, the district court had granted an injunction pending appeal, see Fed. R. Civ. P. 62\(c\), to prevent the State "from enforcing R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11 to the extent that the enforcement action is based solely on a Class A licensee's use of a name similar to or the same as that of another licensee." Wine & Spirits Retailers, Inc. v. Rhode Island, No. 04-418 (D.R.I. April 29, 2005) (unpublished order). At W & S's request, we [**10] extended that injunction to the date of the issuance of our mandate but, like the lower court, denied other requested relief. See Wine & Spirits Retailers, Inc. v. Rhode Island, No. 05-1549 (1st Cir. May 23, 2005) (unpublished order); see also Fed. R. App. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). We heard oral argument on June 7, 2005 and took the matter under advisement. We now affirm.

III. JUSTICIABILITY

W & S maintains that the district court wrongfully denied its request for a preliminary injunction against the enforcement of sections 3-5-11 and 3-5-11.1. Both the State and UILRRI assert that W & S lacks Article III standing to challenge those laws.

HN7 It is axiomatic that Article III standing is a constitutional precondition to a federal court's power to adjudicate a case. Osediacz v. City of Cranston, 414 F.3d 136, 140, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 13382 \(1st Cir. 2005\) [No. 04-2673, slip op. at 2]; R.I. Ass'n of Realtors, Inc. v. Whitehouse, 199 F.3d 26, 30 \(1st Cir. 1999\). When standing is put in issue, a reviewing court is warranted in confirming its existence before proceeding to tackle the merits of the case. We do so here.

HN8 The [**11] burden of establishing standing lies with the party invoking federal jurisdiction. [Osediacz, F.3d at , 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 13382 \[slip op. at 3\]](#). Accordingly, W & S "must show that (1) it personally has suffered some actual or threatened injury, (2) the injury fairly can be traced to the challenged conduct, and (3) a favorable decision likely will redress [the injury]." R.I. Ass'n of Realtors, 199 F.3d at 30.

W & S easily satisfies these requirements with respect to section 3-5-11.1. After all, it alleges that section 3-5-11.1's [*45] prohibition on liquor franchises nullifies its franchise agreements with no fewer than eleven franchisees and subjects it, as a franchisor, to monetary penalties should it attempt to maintain its franchise relationships. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1\(b\), \(d\). Those imminent consequences satisfy the requirement of an injury in fact. That injury, in turn, is fairly traceable to the statute and redressable in a federal court proceeding. Consequently, W & S has standing to press its constitutional claims insofar as those claims implicate section 3-5-11.1.

With respect to section 3-5-11, the defendants' cardinal [*12] contention is that W & S cannot meet the standing requirement because it does not itself hold a Class A liquor license and, therefore, is not subject to any enforcement action or penalty under the statute's terms. This contention has a patina of plausibility. Section 3-5-11 does not carry any direct penalties applicable to franchisors but, rather, applies directly to holders of Class A liquor licenses. Thus, it cannot be enforced against a franchisor, like W & S, which does not itself possess such a license.

In the end, however, this statutory configuration does not undermine the allegation that W & S has suffered an injury that is fairly traceable to the statute. That allegation draws its essence from W & S's claim that section 3-5-11, by restricting the holders of Class A liquor licenses from engaging in certain business activities vital to franchise arrangements, infringes on a franchisor's First Amendment rights of speech and association and thereby causes W & S economic harm. No more is exigible to clear the standing hurdle.

HN9 [↑] The requirement that an alleged injury be fairly traceable to the defendant's action does not mean that the defendant's action must be the final link in [*13] the chain of events leading up to the alleged harm. See Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 168-69, 137 L. Ed. 2d 281, 117 S. Ct. 1154 \(1997\). Nor does that requirement exclude injuries produced by "coercive effect upon the action of someone else." Id. at 169. Given these principles, the fact that the deleterious effect of a statute is indirect will not by itself defeat standing. See Becker v. FEC, 230 F.3d 381, 387 \(1st Cir. 2000\); see also Eulitt v. Me. Dep't of Educ., 386 F.3d 344, 353 \(1st Cir. 2004\) (holding that parents had sufficiently alleged an Article III injury even though "it [was] the educational institution, not the parents," that was denied access to certain tuition payments under the challenged statute); Houlton Citizens' Coalition v. Town of Houlton, 175 F.3d 178, 183 \(1st Cir. 1999\) (finding that trash hauler had standing to assert a constitutional challenge to an ordinance mandating residents' use of a town-designated competitor); Wash. Legal Found. v. Mass. Bar Found., 993 F.2d 962, 972 \(1st Cir. 1993\) (finding that client had standing based on alleged injury [*14] to her constitutional rights that was fairly traceable to a rule, enforceable only against attorneys, that required them to place client funds in a pooled interest-bearing account).

These precedents are determinative here. Section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\) has an obviously coercive effect on W & S's franchisees; under its terms, those franchisees either must desist from engaging in certain collective business activities with W & S or forfeit their Class A liquor licenses. Either way, W & S's business relationship with the franchisees, which it claims to be constitutionally protected, is damaged.<sup>2</sup> [*46] Consequently, the economic harm that W & S alleges is fairly traceable to the statute (and, thus, to the State).

[**15] To cinch matters, the threat to the franchisees is both actual and imminent. It is undisputed that the DBR has taken preliminary steps to enforce the statute against non-compliant holders of Class A liquor licenses and has warned that it will undertake such enforcement from and after the statute's effective date. That is enough to show that the threatened harm is imminent. See, e.g., Aroostook Band of Micmacs v. Ryan, 404 F.3d 48, 65-66 \(1st Cir. 2005\); Montalvo-Huertas v. Rivera-Cruz, 885 F.2d 971, 976 \(1st Cir. 1989\); see also Berner v. Delahanty, 129 F.3d 20, 24 \(1st Cir. 1997\) (noting that HN10 [↑] to ground a claim of standing, harm must be actual or imminent rather than conjectural or speculative). Granting the requested declaratory and injunctive relief plainly would palliate this threatened harm.

---

<sup>2</sup> There is no suggestion here that any of W & S's franchisees plan to terminate the franchise relationships for reasons unrelated to the threatened enforcement of the new statutory provisions. Therefore, this is not a case in which "the injury complained of is 'the result [of] the independent action of some third party not before the court.'" Bennett, 520 U.S. at 169 (alterations and emphasis in original) (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351, 112 S. Ct. 2130 \(1992\)).

To say more on this point would be to paint the lily. For the reasons elucidated above, we conclude, without serious question, that W & S has alleged an injury fairly traceable to each of the challenged statutes and redressable by the federal courts. Accordingly, it has standing to pursue the claims that it asserts.

[**16] IV. THE PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION STANDARD

We turn next to the legal standards that apply to the grant or denial of preliminary injunctions. HN11 A district court must weigh four factors in determining whether to issue a preliminary injunction:

(1) the likelihood of success on the merits; (2) the potential for irreparable harm [to the movant] if the injunction is denied; (3) the balance of relevant impositions, i.e., the hardship to the nonmovant if enjoined as contrasted with the hardship to the movant if no injunction issues; and (4) the effect (if any) of the court's ruling on the public interest.

Bl\(a\)ck Tea Soc'y v. City of Boston, 378 F.3d 8, 11 (1st Cir. 2004) (citing Ross-Simons of Warwick, Inc. v. Baccarat, Inc., 102 F.3d 12, 15 (1st Cir. 1996)). "The sine qua non of this four-part inquiry is likelihood of success on the merits: if the moving party cannot demonstrate that he is likely to succeed in his quest, the remaining factors become matters of idle curiosity." New Comm Wireless Servs., Inc. v. SprintCom, Inc., 287 F.3d 1, 9 (1st Cir. 2002).

HN12 This court reviews the grant or denial of a preliminary [\[\*\*17\]](#) injunction for abuse of discretion. Bl\(a\)ck Tea Soc'y, 378 F.3d at 11; Ross-Simons, 102 F.3d at 16. Under that rubric, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error and issues of law are reviewed de novo. Air Line Pilots Ass'n, Int'l. v. Guilford Transp. Indus., Inc., 399 F.3d 89, 95 (1st Cir. 2005); New Comm Wireless Servs., 287 F.3d at 9. Judgment calls and issues that demand the balancing of conflicting factors are reviewed deferentially. Bl\(a\)ck Tea Soc'y, 378 F.3d at 11. In the last analysis, then, we will set aside a district court's ruling on a preliminary injunction motion only if the court clearly erred in assessing the facts, misapprehended the applicable legal principles, or otherwise is shown to have abused its discretion. McGuire v. Reilly, 260 F.3d 36, 42 (1st Cir. 2001).

V. THE FIRST AMENDMENT CHALLENGE

W & S asserts that sections 3-5-11 and 3-5-11.1 impair its First Amendment [\[\*47\]](#) rights to free speech and expressive association by (i) constricting its ability to peddle marketing and management advice, advertising services, and trade name protection to [\[\*\*18\]](#) holders of Class A liquor licenses and (ii) making it unlawful to engage in a franchise relationship with those license holders. We consider these assertions separately.

A. The Free Speech Claim.

HN13 The Free Speech Clause provides that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech." U.S. Const. amend. I. By incorporation through the Fourteenth Amendment, this prohibition applies to states and their political subdivisions. Knights of Columbus v. Town of Lexington, 272 F.3d 25, 30 (1st Cir. 2001).

In this case, W & S directs its free speech claim to section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\). It asseverates that various provisions of that section adversely affect its ability to sell business advice (sub-paragraphs \(i\), \(ii\), \(iv\), and \(v\)), advertising design and placement services (sub-paragraph \(iii\)), and trade name rights (sub-paragraph \(vi\)) to the holders of Class A liquor licenses. Thus, the law unduly infringes on W & S's right to communicate with the license holders. We examine this asseveration.

As an initial matter, we assess each of the activities identified by W & S in light of its allegation that section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\) operates to prohibit or [\[\*\*19\]](#) unduly curtail the activity. We then consider the contention that the activity constitutes protected speech or expressive conduct.

1. Business Advice. W & S maintains that the provision of business advice for a fee is speech protected by the First Amendment. The advice in question takes the form of a marketing and management plan (including recommendations about purchasing and pricing). The Supreme Court has recognized that HN14<sup>1</sup> some profit-directed speech, such as legal or medical advice, is entitled to constitutional protection. See Board of Trustees v. Fox, 492 U.S. 469, 482, 106 L. Ed. 2d 388, 109 S. Ct. 3028 \(1989\). Here, however, we need not determine whether and to what extent the business advice offered by W & S to Class A license holders fits within this taxonomy. The plain, hard fact is that HN15<sup>1</sup> section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\) simply does not prohibit the communication of advice between a franchisor and the holders of Class A liquor licenses.

To begin, nothing in the statute prevents W & S from selling or otherwise communicating its recipe for the operation of a successful package store to a Class A license holder. Nor does the statute forbid a license holder [\[\*\*20\]](#) from purchasing or receiving that information. While the statute prevents certain conduct -- the implementation of W & S's business model -- that prohibition imposes no legally cognizable burden on the exchange of information between the speaker (W & S) and the invited audience (the holders of Class A liquor licenses).

Stripped of rhetorical flourishes, W & S's real complaint is that section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\) will have the incidental effect of suppressing or eliminating the market demand for the particular type of business advice that W & S offers (that is, marketing and management strategies whose successful implementation requires the coordination of business activities with those of other market players). That circumstance does not suffice to hoist the red flag of constitutional breach: HN16<sup>1</sup> the First Amendment does not guarantee that speech will be profitable to the speaker<sup>3</sup> or desirable [\[\*48\]](#) to its intended audience. See AMSAT Cable Ltd. v. Cablevision of Conn. Ltd. P'ship, 6 F.3d 867, 871 \(2d Cir. 1993\); see also Young v. Am. Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 78, 49 L. Ed. 2d 310, 96 S. Ct. 2440 \(1976\) (Powell, J., concurring) (noting that "the inquiry for First [\[\*\*21\]](#) Amendment purposes is not concerned with economic impact; rather, it looks only to the effect of [the challenged] ordinance upon freedom of expression").

[\[\*\*22\]](#) By the same token, HN18<sup>1</sup> the First Amendment does not safeguard against changes in commercial regulation that render previously profitable information valueless. That is a commonplace occurrence in today's fast-moving world (an example would be the closing of a tax loophole that renders a previously profitable tax shelter worthless). The First Amendment's core concern is with the free transmission of a message or idea from speaker to listener, not with the speaker's ability to turn a profit or with the listener's ability to act upon the communication.

That ends this aspect of the matter. Because section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\), on its face, imposes no burden on the ability of a business advisor to relay marketing and management advice to holders of Class A liquor licenses, W & S is unlikely to succeed on this facet of its First Amendment claim.

2. Advertising Services and Trade Names. W & S suggests that section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\)\(iii\)'s proscription on the ability of the holders of Class A liquor licenses to participate jointly "in a coordinated or common advertisement" and section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\)\(vi\)'s prohibition on a license holder's use of "any term or name identified as a chain or common [\[\*\*23\]](#) entity" constitute undue restraints on commercial speech. We take no view on that suggestion for two reasons: first, it would require us to examine the commercial speech rights of Class A licensees -- none of whom are before this court -- and second, W & S has not established any basis upon which it can assert those rights on behalf of third parties (including its franchisees). The only question properly before us is narrower: whether the joint advertising and common naming restrictions infringe on any speech or expressive conduct of W & S that is protected by the First Amendment. We answer that question in the negative.

<sup>3</sup> HN17<sup>1</sup> A case like this one, in which the statute imposes no burden on the communication between the speaker and the intended audience but has the effect of decreasing the audience's demand for a particular kind of business advice, is distinguishable from cases dealing with the State's direct imposition of financial burdens on the dissemination of particular kinds of speech. See, e.g., Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N.Y. State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 115-18, 123, 116 L. Ed. 2d 476, 112 S. Ct. 501 \(1991\) (invalidating law requiring publisher to place convicted criminals' income derived from publications about their crimes into escrow for victim compensation); Minneapolis Star & Tribune Co. v. Minn. Comm'r of Rev., 460 U.S. 575, 581-83, 75 L. Ed. 2d 295, 103 S. Ct. 1365 \(1983\) (finding that tax on paper and ink products consumed in newspaper production imposed an unconstitutional burden on freedom of the press). In such cases, the government, not waning market demand, was directly responsible for the financial disincentive to speak.

Let us be perfectly clear. We agree with W & S's underlying premise that HN19 [↑] commercial speech, including truthful liquor advertising, is entitled to a measure of protection under the *First Amendment*. See *44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island*, 517 U.S. 484, 501, 516, 134 L. Ed. 2d 711, 116 S. Ct. 1495 \(1996\); *Cent. Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n*, 447 U.S. 557, 566, 65 L. Ed. 2d 341, 100 S. Ct. 2343 \(1980\); [*Va. State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Va. Citizens Consumer Council, Inc.*, 425 U.S. 748, 770, 48 L. Ed. 2d 346, 96 S. Ct. 1817 \[\*491\] \(1976\)](#). We nonetheless [**24] reject W & S's suggestion because, in performing its role in the activities in question, it does not engage in commercial speech.

The activities that W & S claims to be protected as commercial speech are its provision of advertising services, including designing advertisements, arranging for their placement in various media, and licensing the common use of trade names that, according to W & S, have become synonymous with quality and value. See Appellants' Br. at 5, 8; see also *Wine & Spirits*, 364 F. Supp. 2d at 177. HN20 [↑] The commercial speech doctrine protects the communication of truthful information to potential customers about a proposed commercial transaction. See *Fox*, 492 U.S. at 482; *Cent. Hudson*, 447 U.S. at 561-63. W & S's assertions do not amount to a claim that the joint advertising and common naming restrictions impede its right to communicate with its potential customers, rather, the claim is that those restrictions interfere with a right to provide certain services. The provision of advertising and licensing services is not speech that proposes a commercial transaction and therefore does not constitute commercial speech. [**25] See *Fox* 492 U.S. at 482 (distinguishing between the proposal of a commercial transaction, "which is what defines commercial speech," and the provision of certain services for a profit, which is not commercial speech).

Nor do these activities -- W & S's creation of advertisements, assistance in their placement, and facilitation of the use of its trade names by franchisees -- fall into the broader category of expressive activity in which conduct itself can be said to convey a particularized message and, thus, be entitled to protection as symbolic speech. See *United States v. O'Brien*, 391 U.S. 367, 376-77, 20 L. Ed. 2d 672, 88 S. Ct. 1673 \(1968\); see generally *Hurley v. Irish-Am. Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Group*, 515 U.S. 557, 569-70, 132 L. Ed. 2d 487, 115 S. Ct. 2338 \(1995\) (discussing instances in which the Supreme Court has found conduct to be inherently communicative). HN21 [↑] It is the duty of the party seeking to engage in allegedly expressive conduct to demonstrate that the *First Amendment* applies to that conduct. *Clark v. Cmty. for Creative Non-Violence*, 468 U.S. 288, 293 n.5, 82 L. Ed. 2d 221, 104 S. Ct. 3065 \(1984\). W & S has offered no plausible argument [**26] as to why the provision of advertising services is an inherently expressive activity.

Of course, W & S also complains that the advertising and common naming restrictions infringe on the franchisees' rights jointly to propose retail liquor sales through newspaper advertisements and the like. Though loudly bruted, that complaint lacks force because W & S has not established standing to pursue it.

HN22 [↑] A party ordinarily has no standing to assert the *First Amendment* rights of third parties. See *Eulitt*, 386 F.3d at 351. While there is an isthmian exception that applies when some barrier or practical obstacle deters a third party from asserting its rights, see, e.g., *Powers v. Ohio*, 499 U.S. 400, 414-15, 113 L. Ed. 2d 411, 111 S. Ct. 1364 \(1991\) (allowing criminal defendant to assert rights of jurors because they lack financial incentive to undertake the burden of litigation), nothing in the record indicates that W & S's franchisees are unable or unlikely to protect their own rights.

HN23 [↑] In some circumstances, out of concern that an overly broad statute might chill constitutionally protected speech, the Supreme Court has relaxed the prudential limitations on third-party [**27] standing to permit a litigant to pursue a facial challenge to such a statute on overbreadth grounds, [*50] even though the litigant's own conduct could be regulated validly by a more narrowly drawn statute. *Broadrick v. Oklahoma*, 413 U.S. 601, 612, 37 L. Ed. 2d 830, 93 S. Ct. 2908 \(1973\). Here, however, any assertion that the advertising and common naming provisions substantially overreach would fail because the overbreadth doctrine is inapplicable in the commercial speech context. See, e.g., *Vill. of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc.*, 455 U.S. 489, 496-97, 71 L. Ed. 2d 362, 102 S. Ct. 1186 \(1982\); *Bates v. State Bar of Ariz.*, 433 U.S. 350, 380-81, 53 L. Ed. 2d 810, 97 S. Ct. 2691 \(1977\).

To recapitulate, W & S has not laid any groundwork sufficient to establish third-party standing, so it cannot assert the commercial speech rights of Class A license holders. W & S's spavined attempt to assert a facial challenge affords no safety net for this claim. Accordingly, we endorse the district court's conclusion that W & S's free speech claim has little chance of succeeding on the merits.

B. The Freedom of Association Claim.

W & S strives to persuade [**28] us that the challenged statutes, by directly and indirectly prohibiting the holders of Class A liquor licenses from engaging in franchise relationships, impinge on its First Amendment right to associate with its franchisees for the purposes of joint advertising and development of common management and marketing strategies. We are not convinced.

The Supreme Court long has recognized that HN24[] freedom of speech embraces the "freedom to engage in association for the advancement of beliefs and ideas." NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 460, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1488, 78 S. Ct. 1163 \(1958\). This freedom of expressive association emerges from the insight that expressive rights explicitly guaranteed by the First Amendment "could not be vigorously protected from interference by the State unless a correlative freedom to engage in group effort toward those ends were not also guaranteed." Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 622, 82 L. Ed. 2d 462, 104 S. Ct. 3244 \(1984\). Because protection of the right to associate evolves from the First Amendment's guarantees of speech, assembly, petition, and free exercise, the scope of protection for association corresponds to the constitutional solicitude afforded [**29] to the mode of First Amendment expression in which a particular group seeks collectively to engage. See id.

It follows logically that, HN25[] in a free speech case, an association's expressive purpose may pertain to a wide array of ends (including economic ends), see id., but the embedded associational right protects only collective speech and expressive conduct in pursuit of those ends; it does not cover concerted action that lacks an expressive purpose, see City of Dallas v. Stanglin, 490 U.S. 19, 24-25, 104 L. Ed. 2d 18, 109 S. Ct. 1591 \(1989\). So viewed, the right to expressive association does not confer a generalized freedom for individuals or entities collectively to engage in activity that is otherwise regulable when undertaken by a single individual or entity. See id. As one treatise has noted, "the Court has tended to view the right of association as dependent on underlying individual rights of expression; there is no right of association in the abstract." Kathleen M. Sullivan & Gerald Gunther, Constitutional Law 1337 (14th ed. 2001). Thus, W & S must demonstrate that sections 3-5-11 and 3-5-11.1 unduly curtail its associational right to engage in activities protected [**30] by the First Amendment. Elsewise, it cannot prevail on its associational claim.

We already have explained why section 3-5-11\(b\)\(1\) does not violate any of W & [**51] S's speech rights. See supra Part V(A). The question, then, reduces to whether section 3-5-11.1 may be said to work such a violation. To this end, W & S labors to characterize its concerted business activities as speech or expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. That effort fails.

HN26[] Business entities have no First Amendment right to combine operations or coordinate market activities for the purpose of obtaining a greater market share for each participant. The fact that communication serves as the primary instrument of conducting business among separate enterprises does not alter this conclusion. The Supreme Court elaborated on this point more than half a century ago in Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 93 L. Ed. 834, 69 S. Ct. 684 \(1949\).

The Giboney Court acknowledged that, HN27[] although courses of conduct are, in most instances, effectuated by speaking or writing, "it has never been deemed an abridgment of freedom of speech or press to make a course of conduct illegal merely because the [**31] conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language." Id. at 502. Indeed, "such an expansive interpretation of the constitutional guarantees of speech and press would make it practically impossible ever to enforce laws against agreements in restraint of trade as well as many other agreements and conspiracies deemed injurious to society." Id.; see also Calif. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513-15, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 \(1972\) (explaining that while communication is an integral part of joint conduct, that fact cannot be used as a pretext for obtaining immunity from laws prohibiting anticompetitive commercial activities). After all, the Court has made clear that "the State does not lose its power to regulate commercial activity deemed harmful to the public whenever speech is a component of that activity." Ohrlik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 456, 56 L. Ed. 2d 444, 98 S. Ct. 1912 (1978) (citing "the exchange of price and production information among competitors" as an example of "communications that are regulated without offending the First Amendment").

Against this backdrop, we turn [**32] to the case at hand. In enacting section 3-5-11.1, Rhode Island exercised its police power, including its power under the Twenty-First Amendment,<sup>4</sup> to regulate commercial transactions involving liquor and the organizational structure of the market in which such transactions take place. Seen in this light, the statute is tantamount to an antitrust law -- a category of regulation that recognizes the authority of the State to adjust the distribution of market power among commercial entities so as to prevent conditions that are, in its reasonably held view, harmful to healthy competition and free trade.

It is black letter law that HN29[] "the constitutionality of the antitrust laws is not open to debate." Calif. Motor Transp., 404 U.S. at 515. Such laws, by definition, regulate the ways in which [**33] market players may pool their capabilities to acquire market power. While the State cannot regulate the right of speakers to band together to convey a common message in the marketplace of ideas, it most assuredly can exercise control over the efforts of market players to exploit the principle of strength in numbers in the [*52] marketplace of goods. See United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. at 638 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (positing that "there is only minimal constitutional protection of the freedom of commercial association," id. at 634, and that, in all events, "no First Amendment interest stands in the way of a State's rational regulation of economic transactions by or within a commercial association"); Kathleen M. Sullivan, Free Speech and Unfree Markets, 42 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 949, 950 (1995) (observing that, in the modern constitutional order, legislatures are free to pass laws "that override private economic arrangements on allocative grounds -- such as correcting for collective action problems, externalities, information asymmetries, or monopolies - - or for reasons of redistribution or paternalism").

HN30[] The case law dealing with claimed exceptions to antitrust [**34] or commercial conspiracy laws on First Amendment associational grounds indicates that the State's right to enforce such laws against collusive market behavior must abate only in instances in which the joint activity constitutes an exercise of a core speech right. In Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), the Supreme Court recognized that commercial actors' concerted petitioning for legislative change was a form of political expression protected by the First Amendment and, therefore, exempt from certain applications of the antitrust laws. Id. at 136-38. In NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215, 102 S. Ct. 3409 (1982), where black citizens had banded together to boycott white merchants as a means of protesting discriminatory practices, the Supreme Court held that the merchants could not premise liability for state antitrust violations and common law conspiracy on the boycotters' collective exercise of First Amendment rights. See id. at 890-92, 915, 933. Finding that the boycott involved the exercise of core First Amendment rights (speech, [**35] petition, and assembly), the Court ruled that the State's right "to regulate economic activity could not justify a complete prohibition against a nonviolent, politically motivated boycott designed to force governmental and economic change and to effectuate rights guaranteed by the Constitution." Id. at 914. Several other cases in that lineage also turned on the fact that the concerted activity implicated exceptions to the antitrust laws designed to protect core speech rights. See, e.g., Pro'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56-60, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993) (explaining that antitrust liability cannot be imposed upon entities that collectively pursue objectively reasonable litigation, even when an anticompetitive intent motivates the suit); United Mine Workers of Am. v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-70, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965) (decreeing that antitrust laws cannot be interpreted to prohibit joint efforts to influence public officials through otherwise legal methods).

---

<sup>4</sup> In pertinent part, HN28[] that amendment prohibits "the transportation or importation . . . for delivery or use . . . of intoxicating liquors [into any state]" in violation of state law. U.S. Const. amend. XXI, § 2.

These cases must be contrasted with cases such as FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 (1990), <sup>**36</sup> in which the Court upheld the imposition of an injunction under the Sherman Act against a cadre of court-appointed lawyers that enjoined their concerted refusal to accept further case assignments pending a requested fee increase. See id. at 426-36. The Court explained that "the undenied objective of [the] boycott was an economic advantage for those who agreed to participate," id. at 426, and that the lawyers' joint activity was aimed at "profiting financially from a <sup>*53</sup> lessening of competition in the boycotted market," id. at 427 (internal quotation marks omitted). In those circumstances, the Court refused to accept the lawyers' claim that the law, as applied, violated their right to associate for expressive purposes because to do so would be to "exaggerate[] the significance of the expressive component in the [lawyers'] boycott." Id. at 430. HN31↑ In the absence of anything uniquely expressive about the concerted commercial activity, no First Amendment exception to the enforcement of an otherwise valid antitrust law was warranted. Id. at 431 (noting that "the most blatant, naked price-fixing agreement <sup>**37</sup> is a product of communication, but that is surely not a reason for viewing it with special solicitude"); accord National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 697, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 (1978) (upholding, against a First Amendment challenge, an antitrust injunction that prohibited a professional society "from adopting any official opinion, policy statement, or guideline stating or implying that competitive bidding is unethical").

Here, it is nose-on-the-face plain that W & S's commercial conduct exhibits nothing that even the most vivid imagination might deem uniquely expressive. Certainly, the mere fact that the joint activities that define the business relationship between the franchisor and its franchisees have some communicative component cannot, in and of itself, establish an entitlement to the prophylaxis of the First Amendment. See Superior Court Trial Lawyers, 493 U.S. at 430. Consequently, that conduct does not warrant overriding the State's historic right to regulate market forces in the retail liquor industry.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>**38</sup> In sum, W & S has not established that the neoteric laws prohibiting the holders of Class A liquor licenses from conducting joint business activities infringe upon any right to advance its beliefs or ideas by engaging in activities protected by the First Amendment. Accordingly, there is scant reason to believe that W & S can succeed on the merits of its freedom of expressive association claim.

VI. THE EQUAL PROTECTION CLAIM

As a last resort, W & S mounts an equal protection challenge to sections 3-5-11 and 3-5-11.1. Its complaint is that these statutes apply to package stores but not to other entities licensed to sell alcoholic beverages at retail (such as restaurants and bars). Its contrived attempt to tease an equal protection violation out of this imperfect analogy is unpersuasive.

HN32↑ When economic legislation neither employs suspect classifications nor infringes on fundamental rights, the legislation need only survive rational basis scrutiny. Hodel v. Indiana, 452 U.S. 314, 331, 69 L. Ed. 2d 40, 101 S. Ct. 2376 (1981). Under that standard, an inquiring court must uphold the legislation as long as the means chosen by the legislature are rationally related to some <sup>**39</sup> legitimate government purpose. Id. In conducting that analysis, the State's legislative choices "bear[] a strong presumption of validity." Kittery Motorcycle, Inc. v. Rowe, 320 F.3d 42, 47 (1st Cir. 2003) (internal quotation marks omitted). A challenger can overcome this presumption only by "demonstrating <sup>*54</sup> that there exists no fairly conceivable set of facts that could ground a rational relationship between the challenged classification and the government's legitimate goals." Eulitt, 386 F.3d at 356.

---

<sup>5</sup> The conclusion that otherwise valid regulation of commercial interactions between business entities does not offend the First Amendment merely because such interactions have a communicative component would apply with equal force to our analysis in Part V(A)(1), had we found that the relevant sub-paragraphs of section 3-5-11(b)(1) did in fact impede communications between W & S and the holders of Class A liquor licenses.

These rules are dispositive here. The legislation at issue is economic in nature. It neither utilizes suspect classifications nor trenches upon fundamental rights.<sup>6</sup> Its purpose, as stated by the Rhode Island General Assembly, is to protect consumer choice and ensure the equitable pricing of retail liquor products. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 3-5-11.1\(a\). W & S has not explained why, given the unexceptionable goal of maintaining a competitive retail liquor industry, it is irrational for Rhode Island to enact measures aimed at preventing anticompetitive practices by ensuring that holders of Class A liquor licenses operate \*\*40 independently. By like token, W & S has wholly failed to show that restaurants and bars (which are licensed to sell alcoholic beverages only for consumption on their licensed premises) are similarly situated entities vis-a-vis package stores (which are licensed to sell alcoholic beverages only in sealed containers and for off-premises consumption).<sup>7</sup> Finally, it has failed to support its contention that Rhode Island's decision to devise a special regulatory scheme for the retail liquor market is arbitrary; for example, it has not negated the possibility that healthy competition already exists with respect to other sectors of the liquor industry (thus rendering regulation unnecessary).

\*\*41 The short of it is that W & S has not demonstrated that the challenged legislation lacks a rational basis. Accordingly, the district court did not miscalculate in finding it improbable that W & S would prevail on its equal protection claim.

VII. CONCLUSION

We need go no further. W & S has not shown that it is likely to succeed on the merits of any of its claims. Since such a showing is a precondition to the securing of a preliminary injunction, New Comm Wireless Servs., 287 F.3d at 9, we need not probe the other components of the applicable four-part test. It suffices to say that the district court acted well within the encirclement of its discretion in denying W & S's request for preliminary injunctive relief.

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>6</sup> To be sure, W & S contends that the challenged statutes burden its fundamental rights of speech and association. We dismiss that contention out of hand. See supra Part V (establishing that the challenged statutes do not impermissibly impinge upon W & S's First Amendment rights).

<sup>7</sup> Even in the improbable event that the two markets were to be deemed substantially similar, that showing alone would not ensure W & S's success. Regulation must start somewhere. See FCC v. Beach Communications, 508 U.S. 307, 316, 124 L. Ed. 2d 211, 113 S. Ct. 2096 \(1993\) (explaining that "the legislature must be allowed leeway to approach a perceived problem incrementally").

N. Jackson Pharm., Inc. v. Caremark RX, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

August 12, 2005, Decided ; August 12, 2005, Filed

No. 04 C 5674

Reporter

385 F. Supp. 2d 740 *; 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17020 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,900

NORTH JACKSON PHARMACY, INC., et al., etc., Plaintiffs, v. CAREMARK RX, INC., et al., Defendants.

Prior History: N. Jackson Pharm., Inc. v. Express Scripts, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 2d 1279, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23413 \(N.D. Ala., 2004\)

Core Terms

---

Sponsors, cooperative, pharmacies, rule of reason, prescription drug, purchasing, prices, conspiracy, horizontal, ancillary, buyers, allegations, negotiation, retail, reimbursement rate, common agent, anticompetitive, network, antitrust, monopsony, license, venture, dispensing, functions, drugs, naked, alleged agreement, discounted, enterprise, costs

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Conferences > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

In part Fed. R. Civ. P. 16\(c\) permits a court to take appropriate action, with respect to (1) the formulation and simplification of the issues and (9) such other matters as may facilitate the just, speedy, and inexpensive disposition of the action. Resolution of issues as a matter of law under Rule 16 is analogous to a Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(d\) proceeding as to those issues (but not as to the entire case) in the summary judgment area. But there is at least one important difference: Fed. R. Civ. P. 16 motions need not be accompanied by evidentiary statements called for by U.S. Dist. Ct., N.D. Ill., 56.1, as is required for Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 motions for summary judgment. Such evidentiary statements, which serve to highlight which facts are disputed and which are agreed upon as an aid to determining whether the definitive disposition of a case or a discrete portion of a case is appropriate, are not called for when a party moves under Fed. R. Civ. P. 16 only for an order narrowing the legal issues in a case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN2 [+] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

Two complementary categories of antitrust analysis may be applied to determine whether an alleged restraint of trade is unreasonable. Which applies depends on the nature and effects of the alleged restraint. Where the competitive effect of an alleged restraint is not readily apparent, the "rule of reason" supplies the standard of analysis. To that end the factfinder evaluates the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed to form a judgment about the restraint's competitive significance. But in other cases a restraint's effect on competition is more obvious, so that the "per se" rule is applied instead. Per se treatment is appropriate for a restraint that falls into the category of agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm caused or the business excuse for their use. Per se treatment, rather than being a distinct method of analysis, follows from the rule of reason and is applied only once experience with a particular restraint enables courts to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3 [+] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Courts must avoid "formalistic line drawing" and must be hesitant to declare, as illegal per se, restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > Formation

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

HN4 [+] Cartels & Horizontal Restraints, Price Fixing

A horizontal conspiracy among buyers to stifle competition is as unlawful as one among sellers. But even so, a cooperative purchasing agreement among competing buyers does not necessarily stifle competition. Economists recognize that where buyers join to make purchases, any one of three economic models may exist. First, "cooperative buying" may be nothing more than a euphemism for collusive monopsony that drives prices below competitive levels and has negative economic effects on social welfare similar to those caused by price fixing sellers. Second, a cooperative buyer effort may not result in an aggregation of buying power at all and therefore, the use of this power cannot be the motivation. Instead, these joint ventures are formed for the purpose of exploiting the productive efficiencies that result from conducting business on a larger scale. A third possibility is to have elements of both monopsony, with the attendant losses in allocative efficiency, and joint purchasing efficiency, resulting in productivity gains, at the same time. Which of those models will stem from a given cooperative purchasing agreement will not always be apparent immediately, so that the question becomes how to analyze such agreements under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Antitrust's "ancillary restraints" doctrine is well-suited to that task.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the ancillary restraints doctrine, courts must distinguish between "naked" restraints, those in which the restriction on competition is unaccompanied by new production or products, and "ancillary" restraints, those that are part of a larger endeavor whose success they promote. Naked restraints are unlikely to have any redeeming value and so are usually accorded per se treatment. But ancillary restraints that may contribute to the success of a cooperative venture that promises greater productivity and output demand the more thorough analysis provided by the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

The evaluation of ancillary restraints under the Rule of Reason does not imply that ancillary agreements are not real horizontal restraints. They are. But because antitrust law is designed to ensure an appropriate blend of cooperation and competition, not to require all economic actors to compete full tilt every moment, such restraints are excluded from per se treatment where they contribute to productivity through integration of efforts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > Formation

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

An agreement is not anticompetitive because it seeks to lower prices, and antitrust plaintiffs have to do more than complain about their failure to make more money.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

While it is clear that substantial market power is an indispensable ingredient of every claim under the Rule of Reason, there appears to be no authority to support the notion that substantial market power is a sufficient, rather than a necessary, basis for finding that a given restraint is per se unlawful under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

Counsel: [\[\*\*1\]](#) For North Jackson Pharmacy, Inc., individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, C&C Inc, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs: Heather L Necklaus, Nicholas B Roth, Eyster, Key, Tubb, Weaver & Roth, LLP, Decatur, AL; Robert M. Foote, Craig S. Mielke, Foote, Meyers, Mielke, Flowers & Solano, Geneva, IL; A David Fawal, Archie C Lamb, Jr., Christopher W. Cantrell, Law Offices of Archie Lamb LLC, Birmingham, AL; Andrew C Allen, Joe R. Whatley, Jr., Othni J. Lathram, Russell J. Drake, Whatley, Drake, LLC, Birmingham, AL; Edward K. Wood, Jr., Law Offices of Edward Kirk Wood, Birmingham, AL; Gail A McQuilkin, Harley S Tropin, Kozyak Tropin & Throckmorton PA, Coral Gables, FL; Gregory C. Cook, Balch & Bingham, Birmingham, AL; James G Adams, Jr, Decatur, AL; Kathleen Currie Chavez, Chavez Law Firm P.C., Geneva, IL.

For Caremark RX Inc, Caremark Inc., Advance PCS, Defendants: Michael Sennett, Erik F. Dyhrkopp, Michael Edward Martinez, Paula W. Render, Scott M. Mendel, Victor E. Grimm, Bell Boyd & Lloyd, Chicago, IL; Anthony C Harlon, W. Michael Atchison, Starnes & Atchison, Birmingham, AL.

Judges: Milton I. Shadur, Senior United States District [\[\*\*2\]](#) Judge.

Opinion by: Milton I. Shadur

Opinion

---

[*743] MEMORANDUM ORDER

North Jackson Pharmacy, Inc. and C & C, Inc. d/b/a Big C Discount Drugs, Inc. (collectively "North Jackson," treated for convenience as a singular noun) brought suit individually and on behalf of all other similarly situated independent pharmacies against Caremark Rx, Inc. and Caremark, Inc. (collectively "Caremark," also treated for convenience as a singular noun), charging violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1 ("Section 1"). This Court originally inherited this action via a 28 U.S.C. §1404\(a\) transfer from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama, where it had been part of a three-case package of putative class actions.

Shortly after the transfer, Caremark filed a Fed. R. Civ. P. ("Rule") 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") with prejudice. North Jackson's responsive memorandum included a copy of the 25-page opinion issued by the transferor judge, Honorable Virginia Emerson Hopkins, that rejected a like Rule 12(b)(6) motion that had sought to dispatch the selfsame SAC [\[\*\*3\]](#) in the two cases that were retained in the Alabama District Court (North Jackson Pharmacy, Inc. v. Express Scripts, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 2d 1279 \(N.D. Ala. 2004\) ("Express Scripts")) Adopting the reasoning set out in Express Scripts without repeating Judge Hopkins' meticulous analysis, this Court summarily denied Caremark's Rule 12(b)(6) motion and ordered an answer to the SAC.

Caremark answered the SAC, and it has now filed a Rule 16 issue-narrowing motion that seeks an order from this Court establishing the rule of reason as the standard of analysis applicable to one of North Jackson's two Section 1 claims. For the reasons set out below, Caremark's motion is granted.

Rule 16

HN1 In part Rule 16\(c\) permits a court to take "appropriate action, with respect to (1) the formulation and simplification of the issues ... [and] (9) such other matters as may facilitate the just, speedy, and inexpensive disposition of the action." Resolution of issues as a matter of law under Rule 16 is analogous to a Rule 56(d) proceeding as to those issues (but not as to the entire case) in the summary judgment area (see 6A Charles A. Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Mary Kay [<sup>**4</sup>] Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure: Civil 2d §1529, at 299-301 (2d ed. 1990)). But there is at least one important difference: Rule 16 motions need not be accompanied by evidentiary statements called for by this District Court's LR 56.1, as is required for Rule 56 motions for summary judgment.

Such evidentiary statements, which serve to highlight which facts are disputed and which are agreed upon as an aid to determining whether the definitive disposition of a case or a discrete portion of a case is appropriate, are not called for when a party moves under Rule 16 only for an order narrowing the legal issues in a case--and none have been submitted here. Here the absence of such statements does not prevent this Court from ruling on the issue presented by Caremark's motion. That issue--the proper standard to be applied to North Jackson's Sherman Act claim--is one of law that can be resolved based on the allegations of the SAC and facts that neither party disputes. What follows then is a summary of the circumstances giving rise to this lawsuit, as set forth by the allegations of the SAC and the undisputed facts as set forth in the parties' submissions.

[<sup>**4</sup>] Background

1

[<sup>**5</sup>] Caremark is a Pharmacy Benefits Manager ("PBM") that administers prescription drug benefit plans on behalf of employers, health insurers and other third-party payors of prescription drug costs ("Plan Sponsors") (SAC P14). Over 1,200 of such Plan Sponsors have hired Caremark to help control the cost of prescription drugs for their employees or members ("Plan Subscribers") (SAC PP15, 29). Caremark accomplishes that goal by performing a number of functions on Plan Sponsors' behalf, the most important of which for purposes of this motion is the creation of a network of retail pharmacies where Plan Subscribers can purchase discounted drugs (SAC P30). Caremark also lowers Plan Sponsors' costs by processing claims, maintaining patient records, creating and managing "formularies" (lists of drugs preferred by a given plan) and negotiating discounts or rebates with drug manufacturers that wish their drugs to be included on plan formularies (C. Mem. 4; C. Ex. 4 at 1-2).

North Jackson is an independent retail pharmacy that, like many retail pharmacies, has entered into an agreement with Caremark to dispense prescription drugs to Plan Subscribers (SAC PP9, 11). In return for inclusion in Caremark's [<sup>**6</sup>] network and access to the large volume of business that such inclusion brings, North Jackson must agree to dispense drugs to Plan Subscribers at a discount from prices charged to its cash-paying customers (SAC P30). Such discounted prices, for which Caremark reimburses North Jackson, are set by agreement between Caremark and North Jackson, but are usually determined using a formula based on a drug's average wholesale price plus a dispensing fee (SAC P31).

North Jackson objects among other things to Caremark's creation of retail pharmacy networks and its negotiation of reimbursement rates on Plan Sponsors' behalf. When Caremark approaches independent pharmacies such as North Jackson for inclusion in Caremark's network, it presents such pharmacies with, as North Jackson would have it, a Hobson's choice between (1) being included in the network and accepting unconscionably low reimbursement rates for drugs dispensed to Plan Subscribers and (2) being left out of the network and thereby losing access to the large volume of business represented by Plan Subscribers who have an incentive to patronize network pharmacies. North Jackson's suit thus charges that Caremark's negotiation of those [<sup>**7</sup>] low reimbursement rates is not a "negotiation" at all, but is instead a form of coercion that results from an illegal conspiracy to fix drug prices between and among Caremark and other PBMs and the Plan Sponsors they represent.

North Jackson's Section 1 Claims

---

<sup>1</sup> This opinion uses "C." and "N.J." to identify documents respectively submitted by Caremark and North Jackson.

North Jackson's SAC alleges two per se violations of Section 1. Claim I asserts a conspiracy between Plan Sponsors, using Caremark as their "common agent," to fix the prices paid independent pharmacies for dispensing prescription drugs to Plan Subscribers. Claim II charges a conspiracy between Caremark and PBMs with which it competes to fix those same prices. To establish that it is entitled to relief on either claim, North Jackson must demonstrate that Caremark took part in a "contract, combination...or conspiracy" that unreasonably restrains trade (Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\)).

[*745] HN2↑ Two "complementary categories of antitrust analysis" may be applied to determine whether an alleged restraint of trade is unreasonable (National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 \(1978\)). Which applies depends on the nature and effects of the alleged [**8] restraint (Denny's Marina, Inc. v. Renfro Prods., Inc., 8 F.3d 1217, 1220 \(7th Cir. 1993\)). Where the competitive effect of an alleged restraint is not readily apparent, the "rule of reason" supplies the standard of analysis. To that end the factfinder evaluates "the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed" to form a judgment about the restraint's competitive significance (Prof'l Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 692).

But in other cases a restraint's effect on competition is more obvious, so that the "per se" rule is applied instead. Per se treatment is appropriate for a restraint "that falls into the category of agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm caused or the business excuse for their use" (N.W. Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 \(1985\) (internal quotation marks omitted)). Per se treatment, rather than being a distinct method of analysis, follows from [**9] the rule of reason and is applied only "once experience with a particular restraint enables [courts] to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it" (Ariz. v. Maricopa County Med. Soc., 457 U.S. 332, 344, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 \(1982\)).

Caremark implicitly concedes that the conspiracy alleged in Claim II--that between Caremark and other PBMs to fix drug prices--would if proved constitute a naked horizontal price-fixing agreement subject to per se treatment. But it contests application of the per se rule to Claim I--the "common agent" claim--and seeks this Court's ruling that the rule of reason supplies the standard of analysis as to that claim. Such a ruling falls within Rule 16's purview, Caremark contends, because the choice between per se and rule of reason treatment will bear heavily on the conduct of discovery and, perhaps more importantly, on the propriety of class certification.

This Court of course reserves judgment as to how the standard chosen will affect North Jackson's inevitable class certification motion. But because the choice between per se and rule of reason treatment as to the common agent claim will plainly aid in the formulation of issues and will [**10] facilitate the just, speedy and inexpensive disposition of this action, this opinion proceeds to a decision on the merits of Caremark's Rule 16 motion.

Treatment of North Jackson's Common Agent Claim

North Jackson urges that the alleged conspiracy between the Plan Sponsors and their use of Caremark as a common agent to effect that conspiracy's aim constitutes an illegal horizontal restraint of trade of the nature and type historically subject to per se treatment. Caremark challenges that assertion on two fronts. First it contends that the challenged arrangement between Caremark and the Plan Sponsors it represents is not properly viewed as a horizontal restraint between direct competitors, but is instead more accurately characterized as a series of vertical restraints. Such restraints are, as Caremark observes, generally subject to rule of reason rather than per se treatment and so should be in this case. Second, Caremark argues that even if the SAC is construed to allege a horizontal restraint, the [*746] Plan Sponsors' use of Caremark as a common agent is not a "naked" restraint that should be presumed illegal, but is rather "ancillary" to a legitimate cooperative enterprise that [**11] has the potential to increase productive efficiency. Consequently that ancillary restraint should be analyzed under the rule of reason. Those contentions will be dealt with in turn.

In support of its first argument, Caremark urges that the proper objects of analysis are the individual contracts between Caremark and the more than 1,200 Plan Sponsors it represents. Caremark is not a competitor of the Plan

385 F. Supp. 2d 740, *746L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17020, **11

Sponsors, operating instead at a different level of the prescription drug purchasing chain, and so the argument goes that the contracts at issue are vertical restraints. And because Business Elec. Corp. v. Sharp Elec. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 724, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1988\) emphasized the Court's view that "the scope of per se illegality should be narrow in the context of vertical restraints," Caremark says that rule of reason treatment is proper as to those 1,200 individual contracts.

But that argument ignores the allegations of the SAC as construed by Express Scripts, 345 F.Supp.2d at 1294:

The SAC implies that plan sponsors share, and are aware that they share, a common strategy--i.e., the utilization of a PBM to combine purchasing power and drive down [**12] pharmacy costs.

Under United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 276, 86 L. Ed. 1461, 62 S. Ct. 1070, 1942 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 777 \(1942\) the Plan Sponsors' knowledge of and acquiescence in that common strategy could reasonably support a finding of conspiracy under Section 1. And as Express Scripts, 345 F.Supp.2d at 1294-95 observed, if the Plan Sponsors have conspired to fix prices "a horizontal restraint is created even if PBMs are used to carry out the scheme."

Hence Caremark's assertion that the complained-of agreements are vertical restraints misses the mark. For purposes of Pharmacy's common agent claim, the relevant agreement is that alleged to exist among the Plan Sponsors. And that agreement, between firms that would normally compete with each other for the purchase of prescription drugs, may fairly be said to constitute a horizontal restraint.

But Caremark's alternative argument properly stresses that the SAC's allegation of horizontal price-fixing and its asserted attachment of the "per se" label do not, as North Jackson would have it, constrain this Court's ability to scrutinize the alleged agreement to determine whether per se treatment is indeed appropriate (Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1108 \(7th Cir. 1984\)). [**13] This Court's obligation to do so exists because the Supreme Court has cautioned that HN3[↑] courts must avoid "formalistic line drawing" (Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 59, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\)) and must be hesitant to declare, as illegal per se, "restraints imposed in the context of business relationships where the economic impact of certain practices is not immediately obvious" (State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199, 118 S. Ct. 275 \(1997\)). To see whether the challenged conduct falls within the per se category, it is thus necessary to consider the alleged agreement among Plan Sponsors in the larger context of the arrangement between them and Caremark.

By negotiating prescription drug reimbursement rates on behalf of the 1,200 Plan Sponsors it represents, Caremark acts on behalf of what is essentially a cooperative purchasing group. In support of its contention that a cooperative purchasing agreement among Plan Sponsors should not be presumed illegal, Caremark [*747] makes much of the distinction made between buyers and sellers under the antitrust laws.

To be sure, that distinction does not carry the full significance Caremark attaches to it, because HN4[↑] "a horizontal [**14] conspiracy among buyers to stifle competition is as unlawful as one among sellers" (Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 201 \(2nd Cir. 2001\), citing Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. Am. Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 235, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 \(1948\)). But even so, a cooperative purchasing agreement among competing buyers does not necessarily stifle competition. Economists recognize that where buyers join to make purchases, any one of three economic models may exist (Roger D. Blair & Jeffrey L. Harrison, Monopsony: Antitrust Law and Economics 93-94 (1993)):

First, "cooperative buying" may be nothing more than a euphemism for collusive monopsony that drives prices below competitive levels and has negative economic effects on social welfare similar to those caused by price fixing sellers. Second, a cooperative buyer effort may not result in an aggregation of buying power at all and therefore, the use of this power cannot be the motivation. Instead, these joint ventures are formed for the purpose of exploiting the productive efficiencies that result from conducting business on a larger scale....A third possibility is to have elements of both monopsony, with the [**15] attendant losses in allocative efficiency, and joint purchasing efficiency, resulting in productivity gains, at the same time.

Which of those models will stem from a given cooperative purchasing agreement will not always be apparent immediately, so that the question becomes how to analyze such agreements under Section 1. Antitrust's "ancillary restraints" doctrine is well-suited to that task.

HN5 Under the ancillary restraints doctrine, courts "must distinguish between 'naked' restraints, those in which the restriction on competition is unaccompanied by new production or products, and 'ancillary' restraints, those that are part of a larger endeavor whose success they promote" (Polk Bros., Inc. v. Forest City Enters., Inc., 776 F.2d 185, 188-89 \(7th Cir. 1985\)). Naked restraints are unlikely to have any redeeming value and so are usually accorded per se treatment. But ancillary restraints that "may contribute to the success of a cooperative venture that promises greater productivity and output" (id. at 189) demand the more thorough analysis provided by the rule of reason.

As Polk Bros., id. observed, HN6 "the evaluation of ancillary restraints [**16] under the Rule of Reason does not imply that ancillary agreements are not real horizontal restraints. They are." But because "antitrust law is designed to ensure an appropriate blend of cooperation and competition, not to require all economic actors to compete full tilt every moment" (id. at 188), such restraints are excluded from per se treatment where they "contribute[] to productivity through integration of efforts" (id.).

Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\), a case upon which Caremark relies heavily, applied those principles to a licensing agent's issuance of "blanket licenses" for the performance of all of its client composers' musical compositions. Acknowledging that such a blanket license "involves 'price fixing' in the literal sense" because the composers had joined together in an organization that set the price for the blanket license it sold (id. at 8) the Court nonetheless held that per se treatment was inappropriate because rather than being a naked restraint, the blanket license "accompanied [*748] the integration of sales, monitoring, and enforcement against unauthorized copyright use" [**17] (id. at 20). And as the Court further explained, "a bulk license of some type is a necessary consequence of the integration necessary to achieve these efficiencies, and a necessary consequence of an aggregate license is that its price must be established" (id. at 21).

While there are few reported cases that apply Section 1 and the ancillary restraints doctrine to cooperative purchasing arrangements, Kartell v. Blue Shield of Mass., Inc., 749 F.2d 922, 925 \(2nd Cir. 1984\) observed that courts had invalidated such arrangements only where "the buyer was typically a 'sham' organization seeking only to combine otherwise independent buyers in order to suppress their otherwise competitive instinct to bid up price." But where in contrast buyers join together in a productive venture, cooperative buying is rarely viewed as a per se unlawful restraint under Section 1 so long as it contributes to the productive enterprise.

N.W. Wholesale Stationers thus held that a non-profit wholesale purchasing cooperative that allowed office-supply retailers to "achieve economies of scale in purchasing and warehousing that would be otherwise unavailable [**18] to them" (472 U.S. at 286-87) was (id. at 295 (internal quotation marks omitted)):

not a form of concerted activity characteristically likely to result in predominantly anticompetitive effects.
Rather, such cooperative arrangements would seem to be designed to increase economic efficiency and render markets more, rather than less, competitive.

And Addamax Corp. v. Open Software Found., Inc., 152 F.3d 48, 52 \(1st Cir. 1998\) held that per se treatment was inappropriate where the alleged anticompetitive conduct--an agreement between a joint venture's constituent firms as to the price at which the venture would purchase inputs--was ancillary to the joint venture's productive contribution to the economy.

Caremark relies on Broadcast Music, N.W. Wholesale and Addamax to argue that its negotiation of reimbursement rates on behalf of Plan Sponsors, even if it were to be viewed as reflective of an otherwise anticompetitive horizontal restraint, is part and parcel of a larger cooperative enterprise whose purpose and effect is to increase competition in the insurance-reimbursed prescription drug market. Any alleged agreement [**19] between Plan Sponsors to set the price paid for prescription drugs thus cannot be viewed in a vacuum, but must instead be looked at as a corollary of the cooperative arrangement between Caremark and the Plan Sponsors under which Caremark performs a variety of functions in the administration of Plan Sponsors' drug benefit plans. Those functions include not only the negotiation of reimbursement rates with retail pharmacies but also the processing of reimbursement claims, maintenance of patient records, design and management of drug formularies, negotiation of manufacturer rebates and maintenance of a mail order pharmacy. According to Caremark, those functions contribute to increased efficiency and a reduction in the cost of prescription drugs delivered to Plan Subscribers.

For its part North Jackson argues that the designation of an agreement to lower prices as "ancillary" to a larger cooperative venture does not reflect the true nature of the arrangement between Plan Sponsors and Caremark, whose primary purpose is to lower the price of prescription drugs. But HN7<sup>1</sup> an agreement is not anticompetitive because it seeks to lower prices, and antitrust plaintiffs have to do more than complain [\[\*\*20\]](#) about their failure to make more money (Brillhart v. Mut. Med. I*749 Ins., Inc., 768 F.2d 196, 200 (7th Cir. 1985)). So the fact that the purpose of the cooperative relationship between Caremark and the Plan Sponsors is to affect drug prices (indeed, to lower them) begs the question whether it does so in a procompetitive, efficiency-enhancing manner that benefits consumers, or whether instead that goal is accomplished through unlawful collusion that drives prices below competitive levels and thereby reduces social welfare.

As described by the SAC and the parties' submissions on the current motion, the arrangement between Plan Sponsors and Caremark clearly has efficiency-enhancing potential. Caremark specializes in various functions of benefit plan administration and is likely able to achieve economies of scale in the performance of those functions that would otherwise be unavailable to Plan Sponsors. And the creation of retail pharmacy networks, which necessarily involves the setting of reimbursement rates, undoubtedly contributes to the success of that larger endeavor.

What is more, there is a real question whether, on the other side of the coin, the arrangement actually [\[\*\*21\]](#) has any countervailing anticompetitive consequences. Last year the FTC had occasion to consider Caremark's negotiation of reimbursement rates on behalf of Plan Sponsors when it investigated Caremark's acquisition of AdvancePCS, a former competitor. Addressing the question whether that acquisition would confer monopsony power on Caremark vis-a-vis retail pharmacies, the FTC explained in its Feb. 11, 2004 statement (In re Caremark Rx, Inc./AdvancePCS, FTC 031-0239, 2004 WL 318820):

A buyer has monopsony power--or a group of buyers has oligopsony power--when it can profitably reduce prices in a market below competitive levels by curtailing purchases of the relevant product or service. The exercise of this power causes competitive harm because the monopsonist or the group will shift some purchases to a less efficient source, supply too little output to the downstream market, or do both.

In the present case there is no reason to expect a monopsony or oligopsony outcome--i.e., one in which overall purchases from pharmacies are reduced--even if the acquisition enables the merged PBM (or PBMs as a group) to reduce the dispensing fees they pay to retail pharmacies. [\[\*\*22\]](#) Characteristics of the relevant market make monopsony or oligopsony power unlikely.

Rather than explaining how the arrangement purportedly reduces competition or responding to the potentially procompetitive aspects of the cooperative enterprise. North Jackson simply asserts that the alleged agreement between plan sponsors is a "naked restraint" on price, going on to list various allegations from the SAC that it says "establish per se violations" (N.J. Mem. 14-15). But none of the allegations listed there pertain to the alleged agreement between Plan Sponsors that is the subject of Claim I. Instead all of those allegations go to Claim II: the alleged horizontal conspiracy between Caremark and its competitor PBMs--a conspiracy that, if established, Caremark acknowledges would constitute a per se violation of Section 1. Such allegations do not negate what has already been said: that the bundle of services provided by Caremark reflects a cooperative arrangement between Caremark and the Plan Sponsors that has efficiency-enhancing potential. And because the alleged anticompetitive agreement between Plan Sponsors is ancillary to that arrangement, it will be assessed under the more probing [\[\*\*23\]](#) analysis offered by the rule of reason.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> North Jackson's other principal argument in favor of per se treatment is that Caremark has "immense market power" and that its activities should therefore be judged under the per se rule. That argument has no merit. HN8<sup>1</sup> While it is clear that

[*750] Application of the rule of reason to North Jackson's common agent claim is supported by two other related factors. First, the alleged anticompetitive agreement is one that might at least in the short term result in lower drug prices for consumers. According to a July 2004 joint [*24] report of the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice to which Caremark calls the Court's attention, "the empirical evidence suggests that consumers with prescription drug insurance administered by a PBM save substantially on their drug costs as compared to cash-paying customers" (Improving Health Care: A Dose of Competition 7:11, available at: http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/public/health\_care/204694.htm). As Sanjuan v. Am. Bd. of Psychiatry & Neurology, Inc., 40 F.3d 247, 251 (7th Cir. 1994) puts it, the antitrust laws "are designed to drive producers' prices down rather than up." To hold an agreement that tends to lower consumer prices illegal per se, without careful examination of the agreement's true economic consequences, would seem at odds with the Sherman Act's purpose.<sup>3</sup>

[**25] Another and related factor arises from a concern explained by Kartell, 749 F.2d at 931 (citation omitted):

The subject matter of the present agreement--medical costs--is an area of great complexity where more than solely economic values are at stake. How to provide affordable, high quality medical care is much debated. And, many different solutions--ranging from stricter regulation to greater reliance on competing service organizations--have been proposed. This fact, too, warrants judicial hesitancy to interfere.

That is of particular relevance here, where (as North Jackson itself alleges) PBMs such as Caremark administer the prescription drug benefits of "approximately 210 million Americans; 70% of the U.S. population" (SAC P3). Any premature ruling that one of the primary functions performed by PBMs is per se illegal would have particularly far-reaching consequences for the delivery of affordable prescription drugs to a large portion of the population, a consideration that further supports thorough rule of reason analysis.

What has been said to this point should not be read as expressing an ultimate view as to the lawfulness of the alleged conspiracy [*26] between Plan Sponsors. If the required rule of reason inquiry were to reveal that the anticompetitive consequences of any such conspiracy sufficiently outweigh its procompetitive benefits so that the restraint is ultimately judged unreasonable under Section 1, this Court would not hesitate to rule accordingly. But because no authority even suggests that all [*751] cooperative purchasing agreements run afoul of Section 1, and because the agreement at issue here is part of a larger and potentially procompetitive enterprise, the rule of reason must be applied to North Jackson's Claim I.

Conclusion

As North Jackson would have it, the application of such pejorative labels as "horizontal restraint of trade" automatically triggers the application of a malum in se label--a per se violation of Sherman Act §1--that just as automatically renders illegal a group buying arrangement through an intermediary that lowers costs without restricting competition<sup>4</sup> or decreasing output. That universe, generated by an unthinking adherence to the tyranny of labels, may exist in North Jackson's corporate mind and the minds of its counsel, but it does not exist in the real "substantial market power is an indispensable ingredient of every claim under the Rule of Reason" (Digital Equip. Corp. v. Uniq Digital Tech., Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 761 (7th Cir. 1996)), there appears to be no authority (and indeed none is found in the cases North Jackson cites) to support the notion that substantial market power is a sufficient, rather than a necessary, basis for finding that a given restraint is per se unlawful under Section 1.

<sup>3</sup>It is true that the SAC alleges that consumers will ultimately be harmed by the alleged conspiracy, as "PBMs will bankrupt [independent] pharmacies, thereby capturing a larger segment of the insurance-paid prescription market for the PBMs' own prescription-dispensing business, [which will] allow[] the PBMs to charge higher prices for that service" (Express Scripts, 345 F.Supp.2d at 1292). Whether that is so, however, is a question better answered by a full rule of reason inquiry. What controls for present purposes is that the immediate and assured consequence of the alleged agreement appears to be lower prices for the consumers of insurance-reimbursed prescription drugs.

<sup>4</sup>For purposes of the current analysis, North Jackson's Claim II--that other aspects of Caremark's activities in conjunction with other PBMs assertedly restrict competition--is not implicated in the claim now under review.

world of antitrust jurisprudence. [**27] Because rule-of-reason rather than per se treatment applies, Caremark's Rule 16 motion on that score is granted.<sup>5</sup>

[**28] Milton I. Shadur

Senior United States District Judge

Date: August 12, 2005

---

End of Document

---

<sup>5</sup> Whether (as appears likely) this opinion proves to be the last major assignment of this Court's soon-to-depart law clerk Alex Pearce, it well exemplifies his outstanding work throughout his clerkship year. That high quality has marked all of Alex's tenure, whether in the production of draft opinions or in the performance of all the other duties that devolve upon this Court's clerks in what is akin to a three-lawyer law firm. As always it should be made clear, however, that any errors that may have found their way into the final opinions signed by this Court are its responsibility rather than that of its fine clerk, for every such work product has been the result of this Court's word by word and sentence by sentence vetting and recasting of the clerk's original draft.

Smith Wholesale Co. v. Philip Morris USA Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee

August 16, 2005, Decided ; August 17, 2005, Filed

NO. 2:03-CV-221

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18078 *; 2005 WL 1981452

SMITH WHOLESALE COMPANY, INC., et al. v. PHILIP MORRIS USA INC.

Subsequent History: Later proceeding at Smith Wholesale Co. v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18058 \(E.D. Tenn., Aug. 23, 2005\)

Affirmed by Smith Wholesale Co. v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 4754 \(6th Cir. Tenn., Feb. 27, 2007\)

Core Terms

---

discount, cigarette, customers, plaintiffs', prices, competitors, market share, market power, buyer, sales, products, summary judgment, monopolize, anti-competitive, manufacturers, price discrimination, distributors, Wholesale, brands, purchasing, quantity, seller, tier, genuine issue of material fact, monopoly power, best price, practices, preliminary injunction, specific intent, anti trust law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Promotional Allowances & Services

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN1 [down arrow] Remedies, Damages

To establish a prima facie case under § 2\(a\) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), plaintiffs must prove that: (1) the defendant's product sales to the plaintiffs and their competitors are "in interstate commerce"; (2) the sales involve products of "like grade and quality"; (3) the sales discriminate in prices among these competing distributors; and (4) the discrimination substantially lessens competition and causes antitrust injury to the plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN2 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

If the best prices are available equally and functionally to all customers, then no price discrimination has occurred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN3 Price Discrimination, Defenses

The use of the functional availability theory to demonstrate the lack of an essential element of the plaintiffs' case, i.e. price discrimination, is technically not an affirmative defense, but the negation of an element of the plaintiff's case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

If an essential element of the plaintiff's case is negated, summary judgment is appropriate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Remedies > Seller's Damages & Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN5 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The practice of conditioning price concessions and allowances upon the customer's purchase of a specific quantity of goods will not give rise to a Robinson-Patman violation if the concessions are available equally and functionally to all customers. Further, a claim of price discrimination will not lie if the buyer failed to take advantage of a price concession which was realistically and functionally available. The legislative history reveals that the aim of the Robinson-Patman Act is to prevent a large buyer from gaining discriminatory preferences over the small buyer solely because of the large buyer's greater purchasing power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN6 Price Discrimination, Defenses

To the extent that there is an "availability" defense, it will fail if the lower price is not "practically" available to all competing customers. Discounts must be available not only in theory but in fact to be practically available. "Equal opportunity" is required; even when a seller has a dual pricing system, if the lower price is available to all purchasers, not only in theory but in fact, there is no violation of § 2\(a\) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN7 Price Discrimination, Defenses

Discounts that have been held to not be functionally available because they were discounts in theory but not in fact are: (1) Quantity discounts, which are not functionally available to many small buyers; (2) When the purchaser was not told about the discount; and (3) When the purchaser was not permitted to participate in the program.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust laws were never intended to protect individual competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN9 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Case law does not support the conclusion that the demands of a purchaser's customer can render a discount functionally unavailable for purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act. Courts have refused to find discrimination when the buyer's inability to take advantage of the best discount was within the control of the buyer, such as poor credit, management choices, decisions not to hold inventory, or particular marketing strategies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN10 [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Claims

A claim for attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires: (1) a specific intent to monopolize; (2) anti-competitive conduct; and (3) a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN11 [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Market power is a necessary element for showing a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in an attempt to monopolize case. In determining whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts have considered the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or to destroy competition in that market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

An attempt to monopolize claim requires "proof of market power." An analysis of market power requires that the court, focus on the ability of a single seller to unilaterally raise prices and restrict output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

On an attempt to monopolize claim, an analysis of market power requires that the court, focus on the ability of a single seller to unilaterally raise prices and restrict output.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN14 [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

For purposes of an attempt to monopolize analysis, market share, standing alone, is insufficient to establish market power as a matter of law and is only the starting point for determining whether monopoly power exists. The inference of monopoly power does not automatically follow from the possession of a commanding market share.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN15 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Competition is a ruthless process and the anti-trust laws are not a balm for the rivals' wounds.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN16 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is well established that the anti-trust laws are designed to protect competition, not individual competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN17 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A firm lacks market power when its competitors have excess capacity. Excess capacity is the ability of existing competitors to expand output to counteract a reduction in output by a provider with a large market share. Excess capacity inhibits monopoly pricing because consumers can obtain the product or service at competitive pricing from another provider. Excess capacity deprives a relatively large "market share" of its normal "market power."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN18 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Anticompetitive conduct is conduct designed to destroy competition, not just to eliminate a competitor. Lively legal competition will result in the efficient and shrewd businessman routing the inefficient and imprudent from the field. The anti-trust laws must be administered in such a way that they do not restrain such vigorous competition in order to protect inefficient competitors. The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned on when he wins. Merely to attempt to succeed in business is not anti-competitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN19 [ ] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Specific intent to monopolize may be inferred from evidence of anti-competitive conduct, but not from legitimate business practices aimed only at succeeding in competition. Antitrust law protects competition, not particular competitors. Whether conduct is anti-competitive for purposes of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, depends on whether valid business reasons can explain defendants' actions.

Counsel: [*1] For Smith Wholesale Company, Inc., Plaintiff: Dustin R Bagwell, Kyle M Keegan, Susannah M DeNicola, Chris D Kiesel, David A Lowe, Roy, Kiesel, Keegan & DeNicola, Baton Rouge, LA.

For A D Bedell Company, Inc., Andalusia Distributing Company, Inc., Axton Candy & Tobacco Co., Buyers Wholesale Distributors, Inc., Dixie Tobacco & Candy Co., Inc., Forest City Grocery Co., Inc., Home Folks Wholesale Co., Inc., Independent Wholesale, Inc., Macon Cigar & Tobacco Co., Inc., Mydad, LLC doing business as Hardec's, Pittman Brothers Co., Inc., Renfro Supply Co., Inc., Rice Wholesale Company, Inc., Robert's Cigar & Tobacco Co., Inc., C T Jewell, Co., Inc, Derigo Sales, Plaintiffs: Kyle M Keegan, Chris D Kiesel, David A Lowe, Roy, Kiesel, Keegan & DeNicola, Baton Rouge, LA.

For A B Coker Co., Inc., Affiliated Foods INC., Ashland Specialty Co, Eby Brown Co., Huntsville Wholesale Grocery, Jackson Wholesale, LAG, Inc., M-K Grocery Co. doing business as Bates Distributing Co., Market Grocery Co. doing business as Modern Grocery Co., Novelart Manufacturing Co., Inc. doing business as TOPICZ, Park City Tobacco, Reidsville Grocery Company, Inc., R.C. Taylor Distributing, Triple C Wholesale, Wichita [*2] Tobacco & Candy Co., Plaintiffs: Earl R Booze, Herrin, Booze, Rambo, Jenkins & Wheeler, Johnson City, TN; Kyle M Keegan, Chris D Kiesel, David A Lowe, Roy, Kiesel, Keegan & DeNicola, Baton Rouge, LA.

For William Brockman Co., Plaintiff: Kyle M Keegan, Chris D Kiesel, Roy, Kiesel, Keegan & DeNicola, Baton Rouge, LA.

For Philip Morris, Inc., Defendant: Kenneth L Chernof, Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, LLP, Washington, DC; Melinda Meador, Bass, Berry and Sims, Knoxville, TN; Michael A Brille, Alanna Rutherford, Robert M Cooper, Boies, Schiller & Flexner, LLP, Washington, DC; Christopher M Green, David Boies, Boies, Schiller & Flexner LLP, Armonk, NY; Daniel P Filor, J Matthew Donohue, Philip J Iovieno, Boies, Schiller & Flexner, LLP, Albany, NY; Dawn L Smalls, Evan Glassman, Jack A Simms, Jack G Stern, Kelly Yuan, Boies, Schiller & Flexner, LLP, New York, NY.

For State of Mississippi, Intervenor Plaintiff: Sondra S McLemore, Attorney General of Mississippi, Office of Consumer Protection, Jackson, MS. David A Lowe, Roy, Kiesel, Keegan & DeNicola, Baton Rouge, LA.

Judges: J. RONNIE GREER, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: Greer

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION

[*3] This Robinson-Patman Act/Sherman Act complaint is before the Court to consider the Motion for Summary Judgment filed by the defendant, Philip Morris USA Inc. ("PM"), on the basis that the defendant's discounts are functionally available to all distributors and because the defendant's market share incentive program is lawful under the Sherman Act. [Doc. 176].

On June 11, 2003, sixteen plaintiffs filed suit against PM alleging that PM's Wholesale Leaders ("WL") program, a market share based discount program, constituted illegal price discrimination and an attempt to monopolize under federal antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. On July 14, 2003, the State of Mississippi filed an Intervenor's Complaint after obtaining leave of this Court. Seventeen new plaintiffs were added in an amended complaint filed with this Court on November 14, 2003.

On August 6, 2003, this Court granted a preliminary injunction which enjoined PM from providing lower price discounts and /or rebates to the plaintiffs than are provided to the plaintiffs' competitors as proposed in the new 2003 WL. PM appealed this Court's order granting the preliminary injunction to the Court of [**4] Appeals for the Sixth Circuit and a Stay of the Preliminary Injunction was granted on September 18, 2003. PM's appeal of this injunction was argued and is currently pending before the Sixth Circuit.<sup>1</sup> Discovery is now closed. PM has filed its motion for summary judgment on all of the plaintiffs' claims and the claims of the State of Mississippi. After careful consideration of the record as a whole, this Court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law. For the purpose of deciding this motion for summary judgment, the Court will adopt the facts as submitted by the plaintiffs.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND SUBMITTED BY THE PLAINTIFF

A. Cigarette Industry

The U.S. cigarette industry is highly concentrated and oligopolistic. Philip Morris is the unchallenged market leader with 56% of sales by dollar volume and [*5] the two largest manufacturers, PM and R.J. Reynolds (RJR), now control more than 80% of the market. Like most oligopolies, the cigarette industry exhibits little price competition and shows lock-step pricing among manufacturers of premium cigarettes. Producers of low price 4th tier cigarettes have entered the market since the Master Settlement Agreement of 1998 and their entry has captured less than 15% of the market but has not caused a decrease in premium cigarette prices.

B. Plaintiffs' Business

Plaintiffs sell tobacco and other products at wholesale to grocery and convenience stores and other retail outlets in various states. Tobacco products constitute 50% or more of their sales and most plaintiffs have purchased, directly from PM for more than 50 years. As full service wholesalers, plaintiffs supply their retailer customers with products they request, including all major manufacturers' cigarettes as well as 4th tier and other non-PM cigarettes. The retailers base their purchases on customer demand which is influenced by advertising, product promotions and retail store programs, all controlled by the manufacturer.

C. PM's Wholesale Leaders Programs [*6] -- 1999 To Present

From 1999 through 2nd Quarter 2003, PM's Wholesale Leaders ("WL") program gave a 2.75% gross discount on PM products to direct distributors. It also paid back-end money (i.e., quarterly rebates) conditioned on the wholesaler's achieving market share-based sales quotas of PM brands. Thus, a distributor's sales of PM brands compared with non-PM brands determined its rebate, and the best back-end monies were paid for achieving PM share percentages which could go as high as 58.9%. In other words, PM's WL program rewards distributors based on their sales of PM cigarettes as a percentage of their total cigarette sales.

Effective 3rd Quarter 2003, PM unilaterally revised its wholesale pricing structure by establishing a three-level pricing system, ranging from Level 1 (the least favored) to Level 3 (the most favored), that based both price discounts and back-end monies on a market share comparison. A share-based component also remains part of WL 2004. WL's per carton price differences between the worst and best price from 2nd Quarter 1999 to present were as follows:

---

<sup>1</sup> Given this Court's conclusion that PM's WL program violates neither the Robinson-Patman Act nor the Sherman Act, the preliminary injunction was improvidently granted.

Effective Date	Maximum Price Difference
2nd Quarter 1999 -- 2nd Quarter 2000	$ 0.23
3rd Quarter 2000 -- 1st Quarter 2002	$ 0.30
2nd Quarter 2002 -- 2nd Quarter 2003	$ 0.32
3rd Quarter 2003	$ 0.81
4th Quarter 2003	$ 0.55 (post injunction)
1st Quarter 2004 -- present	$ 0.24

[*7]

PM's highest share (Level 3) quotas and its most favored prices have never been achieved by the plaintiffs.

ROBINSON PATMAN/ACT CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Plaintiffs' price discrimination claim is brought under Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). HN1 To establish a prima facie case under Section 2\(a\), plaintiffs must prove that: (1) PM's cigarette sales to plaintiffs and their competitors are "in interstate commerce"; (2) the sales involve PM cigarettes of "like grade and quality"; (3) the sales discriminate in prices <sup>2</sup> among these competing distributors; and (4) the discrimination substantially lessens competition and causes antitrust injury to plaintiffs. Schwartz v. Sun Co., Inc., 276 F. 3d 900, 903-904 \(6th Cir.2002\). Plaintiffs seek damages for claimed loss of profit, customers, sales, goodwill and business value that resulted from PM's allegedly discriminatory pricing. Plaintiffs further seek permanent injunctive relief against this alleged discrimination. The State of Mississippi is seeking injunctive relief on behalf of its consumers, wholesalers, and manufacturers and to prevent alleged injury [*8] to the economy of the state.

PM contends that summary judgment on plaintiffs' Robinson- Patman Act claims is appropriate in this case because PM's discounts are functionally available to the plaintiffs. HN2 If the best prices are "available equally and functionally to all customers", then no price discrimination has occurred. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 68 S. Ct. 822, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 44 F.T.C. 1499 \(1948\); Bouldis v. U.S. Suzuki Motor Corp., 711 F.2d 1319 \(6th Cir. 1983\). The plaintiffs contend that summary judgment is inappropriate in this case because issues of material fact remain in regard to whether or not the defendant's discounts are functionally available for several reasons:

1. PM's data demonstrate that its best price is not available to all or most distributors,
2. PM's best price is unattainable because distributors do not control consumer demand,
3. Plaintiffs do everything asked of them to sell PM [*9] products,
4. PM's share quotas are inherently unachievable, and
5. Plaintiffs must sell 4th tier and other competitor cigarettes to retain their business.

Plaintiffs appear to concede that PM's discounts are theoretically available to them but argue that the "choices" they must make to take advantage of PM's best prices "could potentially destroy their businesses". They argue that Section 2\(a\) does not require them "to change their business structure, reconfigure their customer base, or adopt an expensive and risky business plan in an effort" to achieve the best prices.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Simply put, this means a difference in price.

<sup>3</sup> The Court notes that such is the essence of a competitive economic system. Businesses that wish to succeed and gain market advantage over their competitors must make such choices everyday. Some flourish, some fail, but such is the nature of competition.

HN3[] The use of the functional availability theory to demonstrate the lack of an essential element of the plaintiffs' case, i.e. price discrimination, is technically not an affirmative [*10] defense, but the negation of an element of the plaintiff's case. See *Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co.*, 145 F.3d 320, n. 17 \(5th Cir.1998\). HN4[] If an essential element of the plaintiff's case is negated, summary judgment is appropriate.

The theory of "functional availability" is explained by the Sixth Circuit in *Bouldis v. U.S. Suzuki Motor Corp.*, 711 F.2d 1319, 1326 \(6th Cir. 1983\):

HN5[] The practice of conditioning price concessions and allowances upon the customer's purchase of a specific quantity of goods will not give rise to a Robinson-Patman violation if the concessions are available equally and functionally to all customers. See *Federal Trade Comm. v. Morton Salt Co.*, 334 U.S. 37, 42, 68 S. Ct. 822, 826, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 44 F.T.C. 1499 \(1948\); *Shreve Equipment, Inc. v. Clay Equipment Corp.*, 650 F.2d 101, 105 \(6th Cir.\), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 897, 102 S. Ct. 397, 70 L. Ed. 2d 213 (1981); *Mowery v. Standard Oil Company of Ohio*, 463 F. Supp. 762, 775-76 n. 17 \(N.D.Ohio 1976\), aff'd without opinion, 590 F.2d 335 (6th Cir.1978). See generally 16C Von Kalinowski, BUSINESS [*11] ORGANIZATIONS § 27.04 (1982). Further, a claim of price discrimination will not lie if the buyer failed to take advantage of a price concession which was realistically and functionally available. See *Shreve Equipment, Inc., supra*, 650 F.2d at 105. The legislative history reveals that the aim of the Act is to prevent a large buyer from gaining discriminatory preferences over the small buyer solely because of the large buyer's greater purchasing power. See *Federal Trade Comm. v. Henry Broch & Co.*, 363 U.S. 166, 168-69, 80 S.Ct. 1158, 1160-61, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1124 \(1960\); *Morton Salt Co.*, *supra*, 334 U.S. at 43, 68 S. Ct. at 826.

In Bouldis, the district court found that Suzuki's various promotional concessions and allowances were practically and realistically available to Bold-Morr, Inc., a former Suzuki motorcycle dealership whose officers and sole stockholders were Pete Bouldis and Norman Morris. In addition, the testimony of Bouldis revealed that he had cash flow and inventory problems at times which prevented him from participating in the promotional sales. Therefore, the Sixth Circuit found that, by his own admission, there [*12] was no causal link between Suzuki's practices and Bouldis' alleged injuries but rather his inability to participate was attributable to his own business problems. The Sixth Circuit concluded that conditioning price concessions and allowances on the purchase of a specific quantity of goods is allowed if concessions were made available equally and functionally to all customers. Id.

Several other circuits have addressed the "availability" theory as well. In *Edward J. Sweeney & Sons Co. v. Texaco, Inc.*, 637 F.2d 105 \(3d Cir. 1980\), the Third Circuit found that customer pickup allowances from the seller's uniform zone delivered pricing system based upon the distance from the seller's delivery point was nondiscriminatory because it was available to all customers using a nondiscriminatory formula, even though different customers paid different prices. The Fifth Circuit found, in *Metro Ford Truck Sales*, 145 F.3d at 326, that price discrimination did not exist, and that no violation of the Robinson-Patman Act occurred, because Metro was treated the same as all other Ford dealers with respect to the CPA program for the same customer and products of like [*13] grade and quality. In *Comcoa, Inc. v. NEC Tel., Inc.*, 931 F.2d 655 \(10th Cir. 1991\), the Tenth Circuit found that there could be no recovery if the challenged discount was functionally available to the plaintiff and the program was evenly administered.

HN6[] To the extent that there is an "availability" defense, it will fail if the lower price is not "practically" available to all competing customers. Discounts must be available not only in theory but in fact to be practically available. See *FLM Collision Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co.*, 543 F.2d 1019, 1025-26 \(2d Cir. 1976\). ("equal opportunity" is required; "even when a seller has a dual pricing system, if the lower price is available to all purchasers, not only in theory but in fact, there is no violation of § 2\(a\)")

HN7[] Discounts that have been held to not be functionally available because they were discounts in theory but not in fact are:

1. Quantity discounts. See *FTC v. Morton Salt Co.*, 334 U.S. 37, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 44 F.T.C. 1499 \(1948\) (holding that quantity discounts are not functionally available to many small buyers);

2. When the purchaser was not told about the discount. See *Caribe BMW, Inc. v. Bayerische Motoren Werke, 19 F.3d 745 \(1st Cir. 1994\)* [*14] (favorable prices not practically available if the buyer was not told that it would receive the same prices as customers purchasing from different facility of supplier should buyer agree to purchase from that facility); and

3. When the purchaser was not permitted to participate in the program. See *DeLong Equip. Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499 \(11th Cir. 1989\)* (recognizing the validity of the availability defense, but finding it inapplicable because the plaintiff was not given the opportunity to buy the lower-priced item).

None of these examples apply to the plaintiffs' situation because this case does not involve a quantity discount, the plaintiffs were told about the discount, and the plaintiffs were permitted to participate in the program. The Court FINDS that PM's discount is available to all customers using a nondiscriminatory formula, even though different customers may pay different prices, and that there is no evidence that the program was not evenly administered. Therefore, the Court FINDS that PM's discount was functionally available to the plaintiffs in both theory and in fact. That plaintiffs may be faced with difficult business choices, [*15] and even that some may go out of business, makes little difference and does not create a genuine issue of material fact in this case. HN8 ↑ The antitrust laws were never intended to protect individual competitors. See *Conwood Co., L.P. v. U.S. Tobacco Co., 290 F.3d 768, 769 \(6th Cir. 2002\)*, cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1148, 123 S. Ct. 876, 154 L. Ed. 2d 850 (2003). Each of the individual plaintiffs may choose to make these difficult decisions or to do nothing at all; nevertheless, the choice is theirs. PM does not dictate the choices these wholesalers make.

The plaintiffs cite *Caribe, 19 F.3d at 752*, for the proposition that "plaintiff need not give up the advantages of its importer's contract in order to obtain the most favorable price." However, Caribe really states:

The emphasized language says that Caribe did not know that its competitors were receiving favored treatment. And, we do not see how ordinarily one could say that a seller has made favored treatment "available" to a disfavored customer if the disfavored customer does not know about the favored treatment. See, e.g., *Alterman Foods, Inc. v. F.T.C., 497 F.2d 993, 1001 \(5th Cir. 1974\)*; [*16] *Mueller Co. v. F.T.C., 323 F.2d 44, 46-47 \(7th Cir. 1963\)*, cert. denied, 377 U.S. 923, 84 S. Ct. 1219, 12 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1964); *Century Hardware Corp. v. Acme United Corp., 467 F. Supp. 350, 355-56 \(E.D. Wis. 1979\)*.

Caribe also argues that the favored treatment, as a practical matter, was not "available" because BMW AG insisted that it give up various advantages of its importer's contract in order to obtain it. We cannot tell from the complaint, however, just what those advantages were and how they related to the practical "availability" of the favorable treatment given other retailers. Thus, we cannot say, at this time, whether or not Caribe will be able to prove that the favorable price and terms, as a practical matter, were not available. At this stage, however, Caribe has sufficiently alleged that they were not.

Our conclusion is that Caribe's complaint states a valid *Robinson-Patman Act* claim, in respect to price discrimination under *Robinson-Patman Act § 2\(a\)*, and for similar reasons, under the *Robinson-Patman Act* sections that deal with payments for services, furnishing services, and brokerage payments. 15 U.S.C. § 13 [*17] *\(b\), \(d\)-\(e\)*. Although Caribe's pleadings regarding these other *Robinson-Patman Act* sections are rather sparse, they are sufficient to give BMW AG and BMW NA notice of the substance of Caribe's complaint. (emphasis added)

Id. at 752. Therefore, Caribe does not hold what the plaintiffs assert but merely addresses the sufficiency of the complaint.

The plaintiffs also cite *National Dairy Products Corp. v. F.T.C., 395 F.2d 517, 523 \(7th Cir. 1968\)* for the proposition that "the *Robinson-Patman Act* does not force [plaintiffs] to sacrifice their independence' in order to receive the highest discounts." National Dairy was a proceeding on a petition of a dairy product distributor to set aside an order and decision of the Federal Trade Commission. The Seventh Circuit held that where a dairy product distributor operated in 35 states and it was typical to have volume discount schedules in effect at various operations, the order of the Federal Trade Commission requiring it to cease from unlawful price practices was not an abuse of discretion in view of the showing that the practices had occurred in widespread areas over a long period of time. The Seventh [*18] Circuit concluded:

We also cannot accept National's argument that the disfavored independents should have joined voluntary or cooperative groups and thus obtained higher discounts. The Robinson-Patman Act does not force them to sacrifice their independence. One of the reasons for its enactment was to protect the independents from the chains and other large buying groups. Federal Trade Commission v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 543-544, 80 S. Ct. 1267, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385; Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act (1962), pp. 11-23.

Id. at 523.

The Court FINDS that National Dairy is not on point with this case because that case involved volume discounts and there has been no suggestion or requirement by PM that these plaintiffs join voluntary or cooperative groups and sacrifice their independence.

In addition, the plaintiffs cite Calumet Breweries, Inc. v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., Inc., 951 F. Supp. 749 (N.D.Ind. 1994), in which a beer wholesaler brought an action challenging the legality of a brewer's quantity discount program. The Court in Calumet stated:

Moreover, the evidence tends [*19] to discount Heileman's contention that it would be a reasonable business decision for Calumet, because of its physical storage capacities and economic resources, to purchase enough beer to obtain the maximum discount. Heileman argues that Calumet does not do so because it has decided to maximize sales of competing brands, such as Anheuser-Busch, rather than aggressively promoting sales of Heileman products. According to Heileman, Calumet should compete with Central by structuring its purchases: obtaining the maximum discount by buying more than a month's supply of beer, warehousing it, and then selling from inventory in the following month(s). Nothing in the Robinson-Patman Act or the cases interpreting it suggests that Calumet's decision to emphasize other brands and remain a (relatively) small seller of Heileman products ipso facto means Heileman may charge Calumet a higher price:

The legislative history of the Robinson-Patman Act makes it abundantly clear that Congress considered it to be an evil that a large buyer could secure a competitive advantage over a small buyer solely because of the large buyer's quantity purchasing ability. The Robinson-Patman Act was passed [*20] to deprive a large buyer of such advantages except to the extent that a lower price could be justified by reason of a seller's diminished costs due to quantity manufacture, delivery or sale, or by reason of a seller's good faith effort to meet a competitor's equally low price. Morton Salt, 334 U.S. at 43, 68 S. Ct. at 826. (emphasis added)

Id. at 755.

Calumet is also not on point with this case because this case does not involve volume discounts which permit a large buyer to secure a competitive advantage over a small buyer because of the large buyer's quantity purchasing ability.

Therefore, the cases cited by the plaintiffs stand for the proposition that the plaintiffs do not have to alter their independent purchasing status to receive the discount. Not one of the cases cited by the plaintiffs addresses plaintiffs' selling status nor supports plaintiffs' assertion that Section 2(a) does not require plaintiffs to change their business structure, reconfigure their customer base, or undertake an expensive and risky business plan.

Although the plaintiffs contend that PM's discounts are not functionally available to them because of the [*21] demands of their customers, applicable HNG[] case law does not support the plaintiffs' conclusion that the demands of a purchaser's customer can render a discount functionally unavailable. Courts have refused to find discrimination when the buyer's inability to take advantage of the best discount was within the control of the buyer, such as poor credit, management choices, decisions not to hold inventory, or particular marketing strategies. See Bouldis, 711 F.2d at 1327; Shreve, 650 F.2d at 105; Edward J. Sweeney, 637 F.2d at 121; Chapman v. Rudd Paint & Varnish Co., 409 F.2d 635, 643 (9th Cir. 1969).

The Court FINDS that the undisputed fact that an outside influence, not in the control of PM, i.e. plaintiffs' customer demands, frustrated their performance does not render the discounts under PM's WL program functionally unavailable. Therefore, because PM's discount is functionally available under the undisputed facts of this case, the defendant has demonstrated the lack of an essential element of the plaintiffs' case, i.e. price discrimination, and PM is entitled to summary judgment on plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claims.

[*22] In this case, the Court also FINDS that there is no causal link between PM's practices and the plaintiffs' alleged injuries. Plaintiffs contend that they did not make a voluntary choice to emphasize fourth-tier or other non-PM brand over PM's products, but that they have simply responded to the demands of their customers. Therefore, by their own admission, the plaintiffs' inability to participate in WL is attributable to an outside influence over which PM had no control. In effect, the plaintiffs seek to reap the rewards of the WL without furthering the purpose of that program, i.e., increasing the demand for PM products.

The Court FINDS that, because the plaintiffs did not take advantage of a lower price or discount which was functionally available on an equal basis, no price discrimination has occurred. In the alternative, the Court FINDS that any alleged discrimination was not the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' complained of injuries.

SHERMAN ACT/CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

In addition to their claims under the Robinson-Patman Act, plaintiffs also allege that PM has engaged in an actionable attempt to monopolize in violation of the Sherman Act. HN10[] A claim for attempted [*23] monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, requires: (1) a specific intent to monopolize; (2) anti-competitive conduct; and (3) a dangerous probability of success. Tarrant Service Agency, Inc. v. American Standard, Inc., 12 F.3d 609 (6th Cir. 1993) Because plaintiffs cannot show genuine issues of material fact as to these three necessary elements, summary judgment will also be granted to defendant on plaintiffs' Sherman Act claim.

DANGEROUS PROBABILITY OF SUCCESS

Market Power

The United States Supreme Court has held that HN11[] market power is a necessary element for showing a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in an attempt to monopolize case. Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 457, 113 S. Ct. 884, 891, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). In determining whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts have considered the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or to destroy competition in that market. Id.

HN12[] An attempt to monopolize claim requires "proof of market power", Id. at 457, and market power is "the power [*24] to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (quoting United States v. E. I. du Pont De Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956)) HN13[] An analysis of market power requires that the court, focus on the ability of a single seller to unilaterally raise prices and restrict output. Spectrum Sports at 457; Virgin Atlantic Airways, LTD. v. British Airways, 257 F.3d 256 (2nd Cir. 2001); Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421 (9th Cir. 1995)

Plaintiffs assert that PM's "high market share is strong evidence of monopoly power" and argue that PM's dollar share of the cigarette market (56%) makes it the dominant company in the United States cigarette industry. This alone, according to plaintiffs, is sufficient to defeat summary judgment. PM's market share based on units sold has been calculated by plaintiffs at 49.6%.

Plaintiffs' position, however, has been expressly rejected by the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. HN14[] Market share, standing alone, is insufficient to establish market power as a matter of law and is only the starting [*25] point for determining whether monopoly power exists. "The inference of monopoly power does not automatically follow from the possession of a commanding market share." *American Counsel of Certified Podiatric Physicians and Surgeons v. American Board of Podiatric Surgery, Inc.*, 185 F.3d 606, 623 \(6th Cir. 1999\) (quoting *Byars v. Bluff City News Co.*, 609 F.2d 843, 850-851 \(6th Cir. 1979\)). See also *Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Concrete Corp.*, 691 F.2d 818 \(6th Cir. 1982\) PM's market share, standing alone, is therefore insufficient to establish market power as a matter of law.

Plaintiffs also suggest that PM's market share "likely understates its market power" since PM and RJR have a combined market share of about 83% and have very similar "exclusionary" programs. It is improper, however, to combine PM's market share with RJR's market share in determining whether or not PM has market power. *Arthur S. Langenderfer, Inc. v. S.E. Johnson Co.*, 917 F.2d 1413 \(6th Cir. 1990\) Plaintiffs have alleged no facts in this case which would suggest, and have not established, that PM and RJR have entered into any conspiracy [*26] such as would justify a combined share approach to determining market power. In short, plaintiffs have produced no evidence to show that PM's market share translates into market power.

Plaintiffs also assert that there is direct evidence that PM has monopoly power "as shown by its ability to exclude rivals and control price." In support of their assertion, plaintiffs point to certain affidavits and exhibits in which plaintiffs contend that PM's WL program has undermined their competitiveness and increased their costs of distribution. Plaintiffs also assert that PM's ability to control prices is "demonstrated by the pricing of its premium cigarettes at almost five times the level of 4th tier products, its high product margins and inelastic demand for its products." This Court has already found that PM's conduct with respect to its WL program of market share discounts is not illegal or anti-competitive but is rather a valid business reaction to market pressures. Also, as pointed out by PM, the fact that PM prices its cigarettes at almost five times the level of 4th tier brands does not demonstrate PM's ability to unilaterally control the price. While this Court has considerable sympathy [*27] with the plaintiffs in this case and the effects the WL program may have on their businesses, it is well established that HN15[] "competition is a ruthless process . . . and the anti-trust laws are not a balm for the rivals' wounds." *Tennessee Truck Stop, Inc. v. NTS, Inc.*, 875 F.2d 86, 90 \(6th Cir. 1989\) (quoting *Ball Memorial Hospital, Inc. v. Mutual Hosp. Ins., Inc.*, 784 F.2d 1325, 1338 \(7th Cir. 1986\)) HN16[] It is also well established that the anti-trust laws are designed to protect competition, not individual competitors. *Conwood*, 290 F.3d at 788. Simply put, there is no evidence, direct or indirect, in this record that PM has monopoly power.

Low barriers to entry

The parties in this case apparently agree that entry into the U. S. cigarette market is relatively easy and that numerous new manufacturers and brands have entered the industry and successfully captured market share over the last few years.<sup>4</sup> "The difficulty of entry into the market is relevant because if entry is easy, even a firm holding a commanding percentage of the market cannot charge a price above the competitive price, for once it does, competitors [*28] will enter the market and undercut the firm's price." *American Counsel of Certified Podiatric Physicians and Surgeons at 623*. Plaintiffs respond to PM's argument that such actual entry "is a strong indicator" that PM lacks market power by arguing that such entry "has not constrained premium cigarette pricing" and asserts that "the fringe 4th tier manufacturers have been limited by punitive state legislation and restricted access to efficient distribution channels as spearheaded by PM and RJR." This Court fails to see how such arguments by the plaintiffs can overcome the undisputed evidence of ease of entry by competitors into the U. S. cigarette market, and both parties agree that the relevant market at issue in this case is the United States cigarette market, not just the market for premium cigarettes.

---

<sup>4</sup> Since the Master Settlement Agreement of 1998, dozens of new cigarette manufacturers have entered the market and have captured approximately 15% of the market despite an overall significant decline in U.S. cigarette sales over the last 20 years.

[*29] Excess capacity

HN17 [↑] A firm also lacks market power when its competitors have excess capacity. Excess capacity is the ability of existing competitors to expand output to counteract a reduction in output by a provider with a large market share. Excess capacity inhibits monopoly pricing because consumers can obtain the product or service at competitive pricing from another provider. Excess capacity deprives a relatively large "market share" of its normal "market power." Rebel Oil Co. at 1441. Two of PM's competitors, RJR and Lorillard, with a combined market share of less than 30%, together have the capacity to produce nearly 50% of the 400 billion cigarettes consumed in the United States in 2003. Plaintiffs respond to PM's argument by arguing that the excess capacity "resides primarily in PM and RJR" who have an "oligopoly strategy" of "supracompetitive" pricing. Plaintiffs ignore the fact that two of PM's competitors have nearly one-half of all excess capacity and that, as discussed by the Court above, market power is the ability of a single seller to raise prices and restrict output. Plaintiffs have presented no evidence that PM has the ability to control any [*30] other firm's production capacity or that PM can raise prices above competitive levels without rival manufacturers simply increasing output.

In summary, after examining barriers to entry, excess capacity, and PM's market share, plaintiffs have not established that there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether or not PM has sufficient market power to establish a dangerous probability of success. See Ford v. Stroup, 113 F.3d 1234, 1997 WL 201560 (6th Cir. (Tenn.)) PM is, therefore, entitled to summary judgment for this reason alone.

ANTI-COMPETITIVE CONDUCT WITH THE SPECIFIC INTENT TO MONOPOLIZE

As the Sixth Circuit has observed:

HN18 [↑] Anticompetitive conduct is conduct designed to destroy competition, not just to eliminate a competitor. Lively legal competition will result in the efficient and shrewd businessman routing the inefficient and imprudent from the field. The anti-trust laws must be administered in such a way that they do not restrain such vigorous competition in order to protect inefficient competitors. As Judge Learned Hand has pointed out, "The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned on [*31] when he wins" United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 430 (2nd Cir. 1945). Merely to attempt to succeed in business is not anti-competitive conduct.

Richter Concrete Corp. at 823.

Plaintiffs argue that PM's WL programs are exclusionary and anti- competitive and that specific intent to monopolize "can be inferred from the defendant's anti-competitive practices." Plaintiffs are correct that HN19 [↑] specific intent to monopolize may be inferred from evidence of anti-competitive conduct, see Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 153, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 (1951), but not from legitimate business practices aimed only at succeeding in competition. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 626, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1952). Antitrust law protects competition, not particular competitors. Spectrum Sports at 458-459. Whether conduct is anti-competitive for purposes of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, depends on "whether 'valid business reasons' can explain [defendants'] actions." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 483, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992). [*32]

The inference claimed by plaintiffs here, however, is unavailable to them because they have been unable to establish that PM's WL program has anti-competitive effect. In fact, plaintiffs have been unable to establish that WL decreases rather than increases competition. At best, plaintiffs' proof establishes only harm to individual competitors, not harm to competition. Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence that creates a genuine issue of material fact to support their allegation that WL has foreclosed any cigarette manufacturer from access to the relevant market.

The relative lack of difficulty of entry into the U.S. cigarette industry likewise negates plaintiffs' claim of anti-competitive conduct. Were PM to charge a price above the competitive price for its products, this record establishes that either existing competitors (RJR and Lorillard) or new competitors would enter the market (or increase production) and undercut PM's price. As indicated above, RJR and Lorillard together possess about fifty percent (50%) of the excess capacity for production of cigarettes and dozens of new manufacturers have entered the market since 1998. PM's WL program is a valid business reaction [*33] to market pressure brought about by increased competition for a declining cigarette market. Moreover, these plaintiffs admit that, were they to choose to discontinue sales of fourth tier brands altogether in order to achieve PM's best discounts, those brands would immediately be picked up by a competing distributor.

Thus, not only have plaintiffs not established a genuine issue of material fact on the issue of whether PM possesses sufficient market power to establish a dangerous probability of monopolization, no genuine issue of material fact exists on the issues of whether or not PM has engaged in anti-competitive conduct with the specific intent to monopolize. PM is likewise entitled to summary judgment on these grounds.

Antitrust Injury

As set forth throughout this memorandum opinion, plaintiffs also cannot establish an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendant's acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701\(1977\). Plaintiffs surely have suffered harm but such harm does not result from a decrease in competition [*34] rather than some other consequences of PM's WL program. Their injuries, therefore, are not injuries which the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

An appropriate order shall issue.

ENTER:

Date: 8/16/05

s/ J. RONNIE GREER

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER

For the reasons set out in the Memorandum Opinion that accompanies this order, it is hereby ORDERED that that the Motion for Summary Judgment filed by the defendant, Philip Morris USA, Inc., is GRANTED, [Doc. 176], and the plaintiffs' complaint as well as the intervening complaint if the State of Mississippi is DISMISSED.

On August 6, 2003, this Court entered a preliminary injunction on behalf of the plaintiffs, the entry of which was appealed by Philip Morris USA and which is the subject of Court of Appeals Docket No. 03-6025 in the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. This Court's order provided that this injunction would remain in effect during the pendency of this lawsuit. In view of the dismissal of the plaintiffs' complaint by this order, it is also hereby ORDERED that the preliminary injunction entered by the Court on August 6, 2003 is VACATED. [Doc. [*35] 67]. The defendant's motion for a hearing and request for oral argument is DENIED. [Doc. 178].

ENTER:

Date: 8/16/05

s/ J. RONNIE GREER

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Guichard v. Mandalay Pictures, LLC

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

August 22, 2005, Decided; August 22, 2005, Filed

No. C 04-4363 JSW

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45410 *; 2005 WL 2007883

ROBERT GUICHARD, Plaintiff, v. MANDALAY PICTURES, LLC. d/b/a MANDALAY ENTERTAINMENT, METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER STUDIOS, INC., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Subsequent appeal at *Guichard v. Mandalay Pictures LLC, 143 Fed. Appx. 818, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 19784 \(9th Cir. Cal., 2005\)*

Core Terms

---

motion picture, antitrust, Studio, Defendants', Pictures, pleadings, registration, trademark, alleges, Sherman Act, registered, screenplay, producing, rights, amend, motion for judgment, motion to dismiss, relevant market, contends, film

Counsel: [*1] Robert Guichard, Plaintiff, Pro se, San Francisco, CA.

For Mandalay Pictures, LLC, doing business as Mandalay Entertainment, Defendant: David Aaron Grossman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jacques M. Rimokh, Loeb & Loeb LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Inc., Defendant: David Aaron Grossman, LEAD ATTORNEY, Jacques M. Rimokh, Loeb & Loeb LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Thomas R. Burke, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Motion Picture Association of America, Paramount Pictures Corporation, Sony Pictures Entertainment Inc., Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, Universal City Studios LLP, Walt Disney Pictures and Television Inc., Warner Bros. Entertainment, Inc., Defendants: Henry James Tashman, Thomas R. Burke, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

Judges: JEFFREY S. WHITE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JEFFREY S. WHITE

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING MPAA DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS AND STUDIO DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

Now before the Court is the motion by Defendants Motion Picture Association of America, Inc., erroneously named as MPAA; Sony Pictures Entertainment Inc.; Warner Bros. Entertainment, Inc.; Walt Disney Pictures and Television, erroneously named [*2] as Buena Vista Pictures Distribution; Paramount Pictures Corporation; Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation; and Universal Studios LLLP (collectively "MPAA Defendants") to dismiss Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint ("FAC") for failure to state a claim under *Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\)*.

Also before the Court is the motion by Defendants Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Inc. ("MGM") and Mandalay Pictures LLC ("Mandalay") (collectively "Studio Defendants") for judgment on the pleadings on the fifth sixth, seventh and eighth claims pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(c\).

Having carefully read the parties' papers and considered the arguments and the relevant legal authority, the Court hereby GRANTS the MPAA Defendants' motion to dismiss without leave to amend on all claims pending against them and GRANTS the Studio Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on the fifth sixth, seventh and eighth claims against them.

BACKGROUND

In his initial complaint filed on October 15, 2004, Plaintiff named only the Studio Defendants and asserted claims for trademark infringement under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\), for breach of confidentiality, common law misappropriation, [*3] and violations of California Business and Professions Code § 17200. In his amended complaint filed December 13, 2004, Plaintiff named the MPAA Defendants for the first time and added claims against them and the Studio Defendants for violation of the Sherman and Cartwright Acts, as well as for violation of the California Business and Professions Code § 17200. Plaintiff alleges that Defendant Motion Picture Association of America is a "trade association of the American film industry" and the other MPAA Defendants are six of the seven members of the Association. (FAC, P 30.) Plaintiff alleges that MPAA members constitute a majority of the United States theatrical motion picture production and distribution markets. (FAC, PP 31, 43.)

Plaintiff alleges that in 1925 the MPAA established the Title Registration Bureau ("TRB") that functions as the central registration bureau for titles of motion pictures in the United States. (FAC, P 32.) The TRB promulgates a set of rules ("TRB Rules") which require all members to register their titles for theatrical motion pictures prior to their release. (FAC, P 32; TRB Rules §§ 2.2.3, 3.1 (attached to Motion Brief as Appendix 1).) TRB members are prohibited [*4] from using a particular title unless they have priority granted by prior registration. (FAC, P 36; TRB Rules § 5.1.2.) Once a title is registered, an identical title cannot be used for a theatrical motion picture by any other MPAA member or signatory without a waiver from the initial title registrant. (FAC, P 36, TRB Rules § 4.3.) The MPAA members all participate in the TRB, although the TRB is open to non-members if they sign an agreement to join, agree to follow the TRB Rules, and pay an annual fee. (FAC, P 30; TRB Rules §§ 2.2.4, 2.4.1.)

Plaintiff contends that he wrote a screenplay in 1993 called "Into The Blue," an underwater action and adventure story about searching the waters off Florida and the Bahamas for a sunken ship and treasure. (FAC, PP 21-22.) Plaintiff contends that in 1997 he submitted his screenplay to Mandalay who declined to pursue its production. (FAC, PP 24-25.) Plaintiff claims that the Studio Defendants misappropriated his title, ideas, and elements of the screenplay by making a similar motion picture and improperly registered the title with the TRB when they knew, or should have known, that the title belonged to Plaintiff. (FAC, PP 60-61.) In 1999, Plaintiff [*5] changed the title of his screenplay to "In2Blue" and claims still to be developing and producing his theatrical motion picture based on his original script. (FAC, P 21, 5.)

According to Plaintiffs complaint, Defendant Mandalay registered the title "Into The Blue" with the TRB in June 2002 and on MGM registered the identical title in May 2003. (FAC, PP 34, 35.) Also, in 2003, Mandalay waived its rights to the title with the TRB, thereby putting MGM in priority position. (FAC, P 36.) Plaintiff contends that the prior registrations of the motion picture title preclude Plaintiff from having the member studios produce his screenplay without receiving a waiver from MGM. (FAC, P 37.) He claims that the TRB Rules function as a monopoly and unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act, as well as the Cartwright Act and California Business and Professions Code § 17200.

ANALYSIS

A. Legal Standard on Motion to Dismiss.

A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim will be denied unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him or her to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\). All allegations of material fact are [*6] taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 \(9th Cir. 1996\). Dismissal is proper only where there is no cognizable legal theory or an absence of sufficient facts alleged to support a cognizable legal theory. Navarro v. Block, 250 F.3d 729, 732 \(9th Cir. 2001\). The Court is not, however, bound to accept as true conclusory allegations of law or legal conclusions couched as a factual allegation. Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 \(1986\); Arpin v. Santa Clara Transp. Agency, 261 F.3d 912, 923 \(9th Cir. 2001\) (internal quotation omitted). For private antitrust claims, if the facts "do not at least outline or adumbrate a violation of the Sherman Act, the plaintiffs will get nowhere merely by dressing them up in the language of antitrust." Rutman Wine Co. v. E&J Gallo Winery, 829 F.2d 729, 736 \(9th Cir. 1987\). A claimant must, at a minimum, sketch the outline of the antitrust violation with allegations of supporting factual detail. Les Shockley Racing, Inc. v. National Hot Rod Ass'n, 884 F.2d 504, 508 \(9th Cir. 1989\).

B. Plaintiff Has Failed to State a Claim Under the Sherman Act.

In order to plead a [*7] claim under the Sherman Act, Plaintiff must allege a restraint on competition that harms competition in the relevant market. See McClinchy v. Shell Chem. Co., 845 F.2d 802, 812-13 \(9th Cir. 1988\) ("It is the impact upon competitive conditions in a definable market which distinguishes the antitrust violation from the ordinary business tort. [The] failure to allege injury to competition is a proper ground for dismissal by judgment on the pleadings.")

The essence of Plaintiff's claims against the MPAA Defendants is that the TRB Rules serve as a monopolistic structure precluding the production and distribution of motion pictures by small, independent film makers. However, the uncontested facts are that the TRB Rules do not prevent members (or non-members) from distributing Plaintiff's, or any other independent film maker's, motion picture. At most the rules restrict MPAA members from producing a motion picture with a title identical to one accorded priority under the TRB Rules. (FAC, P 36, TRB Rules §§ 2.2.3, 3.1, 5.1.2.) Restricting the use of a title does not harm competition in the relevant markets alleged by Plaintiff, the United States motion picture production or distribution markets. [*8] (FAC, PP 73, 91.)

The TRB Rules effectively manage, among its members, the priority of rights given to the users of various titles for motion pictures. Such mechanism for priority of rights is similar (although not identical) to the assertion of trademark rights.<sup>1</sup> As a matter of law, possessing and asserting priority of trademark rights does not harm competition in the market associated with the mark. See Clorox Co. v. Sterling Winthrop, Inc., 117 F.3d 50, 56 \(2nd Cir. 1997\) (holding that a trademark is, by its nature, non-exclusionary, and "does not confer a legal monopoly on any good or idea; it confers rights to a name only.") Because a trademark, or in this case, a priority to use of a motion picture title, "merely enables the owner to bar others from use of the mark, . . . the opportunity for effective antitrust misuse of a trademark, as distinguished from collateral anti-competitive activities on the part of the manufacturer or seller of the goods bearing the mark, is so limited that it poses a far less serious threat to the economic health of the nation." Id. (citing Carl

<sup>1</sup> In his written submissions as well as at oral argument on the motion, Plaintiff asserts that the TRB Rules effectively create a private Patent and Trademark Office and grant a "language monopoly" or a "monopoly of words from the dictionary." (Opp. Br. at 7; FAC, P 85.) The MPAA's private arrangement to prioritize the use of motion picture titles, as Plaintiff concedes in his complaint, is designed "to avoid confusion in the marketplace between competing projects with identical or similar marks." (FAC, P 84.) Such private arrangement serves its members by prioritizing the right to use a certain title among its members; [*10] it does not constitute a private PTO and such prioritizing does not constitute a monopoly in the relevant market. There is no relevant market made up of words, or titles, and the relevant market designated by Plaintiff -- the United States motion picture production and distribution -- is not affected by the restrictions imposed by the TRB Rules, as discussed above.

Zeiss Stiftung v. V.E.B. Carl Zeiss, Jena, 298 F. Supp. 1309, 1314 (S.D.N.Y. 1969).) [*9] A trademark agreement does no more than regulate how a certain name may be used and does not in any way restrict competition in the production or sale of a competing good with a different name. Id. at 57; see also California Packing Corp. v. Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California, 165 F. Supp. 245, 250-51 (S.D. Cal. 1958) (holding that private agreement limiting the use of a certain mark does not prevent competitor from engaging in competitive production and sales in the market, but only restricts the use of the name, and therefore does not raise antitrust concerns).

Restrictions on the use of a title do not ultimately bear on the production or distribution of the motion picture associated with that title. Even accepting as true all of Plaintiff's assertions, the TRB Rules do not function to restrict its members from producing or distributing Plaintiff's motion picture project and do not prevent Plaintiff from selling his motion picture project to member or non-member producers or distributors or from entering those markets himself. As Plaintiff contends, the TRB Rules are apparently designed to avoid confusion in the marketplace as to those motion pictures its members or signatories decide to market or distribute. (FAC, P 84.) The TRB Rules, therefore, have no effect on the motion picture production or distribution markets.

Having failed to demonstrate that the rules harm competition [*11] in the relevant market, Plaintiff cannot state a claim under the Sherman Act. Because Plaintiff cannot allege facts sufficient to demonstrate that the MPAA Defendants' rules harm competition, leave to amend would be futile and is denied. See Rutman Wine, 829 F.2d at 738 (request for leave to amend should be denied if amendment would be futile).

C. Plaintiff Lacks Antitrust Standing.

The fact that Plaintiff lacks antitrust standing serves as an alternate basis for dismissal of Plaintiff's claims against the MPAA Defendants. The Clayton Act authorizes a private individual to bring suit under the antitrust laws if that individual has been "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. Only individuals who possess antitrust standing by virtue of having suffered such injury may sue to redress an antitrust violation. Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529-535, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983); see also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 113, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) ("a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage `of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent [*12] and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'") (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977))).

First, as addressed above, restrictions on the use of any particular title do not prevent Plaintiff, or any other screenwriter, from entering the market for motion picture production or distribution, and therefore do not restrain competition in those relevant markets. See Clorox, 117 F.3d at 56. Second, Plaintiff cannot allege any specific injury he has suffered as a result of the MPAA Defendants' conduct. Plaintiff alleges that he wrote his screenplay nine years before Mandalay registered "Into The Blue" with the TRB and did not meet with any success producing or distributing his motion picture project during that time period. (FAC, PP 21, 34.) Further, although Plaintiff contends that film projects often take years to come to successful fruition, he has not alleged, and cannot allege, that since Mandalay's registration in 2002 or MGM's registration in 2003, any motion picture producer or distributor has rejected Plaintiff's project on the basis that a similar title has been granted priority among MPAA members by virtue of prior title registration. [*13] Therefore, there is no factual support for a claim for direct injury as a result of the MPAA Defendants' conduct.<sup>2</sup>

Plaintiff has not alleged, and cannot in good faith allege, facts sufficient to demonstrate that he has the requisite standing for his federal antitrust claims against the MPAA Defendants. Because Plaintiff cannot allege facts demonstrating injury as a result of anticompetitive conduct by defendants, leave to amend on this basis would also be futile and is denied. See Rutman Wine, 829 F.2d at 738 (request for leave to amend should be denied if amendment would be futile).

---

<sup>2</sup> In addition, Plaintiff has not alleged in his complaint that he attempted to register his title with the TRB and only represented at oral argument that his attempt to register was frustrated by his own refusal to abide by the terms required for registration. Without having tried to benefit from the TRB's registration process, Plaintiff cannot contend that he has suffered from rejection of the registration of his own title.

D. Other California Causes of Action.

Plaintiff has also alleged two California state law claims against the MPAA Defendants, under the Cartwright Act and California Business and Professions Code § 17200. [*14] In the absence of anticompetitive conduct capable of harming competition in the relevant market, Plaintiff's Cartwright Act claim fails. See, e.g., Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1476-77 \(9th Cir. 1986\). In addition, the claim falters due to Plaintiff's lack of standing to assert antitrust injury. Furthermore, Plaintiff's state unfair competition claim fails because it is not based upon "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 \(1999\); see also Kentmaster Mfg. Co. v. Jarvis Products Corp., 146 F.3d 691, 695 (holding that plaintiff's failure to allege harm to competition was fatal to Section 17200 just as it was to Sherman Act, Section 2 claims).

E. Studio Defendants' Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings.

The Studio Defendants join the arguments of the MPAA Defendants and move for judgment on the pleadings as to the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth causes of action pending against [*15] them. Judgment on the pleadings is appropriate where, even if all the material facts in the complaint are true, the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner & Co., 896 F.2d 1542, 1550 \(9th Cir. 1989\). For the same reasons discussed herein, Plaintiff has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and lacks antitrust standing as to those same claims pending against the Studio Defendants. Therefore, the Studio Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings is granted.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court hereby GRANTS the MPAA Defendants' motion to dismiss without leave to amend on all claims pending against them and GRANTS the Studio Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on the fifth sixth, seventh and eighth claims against them.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: August 22, 2005

JEFFREY S. WHITE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Wilson Learning Corp. v. Schlechte

United States District Court for the District of Minnesota

August 24, 2005, Decided

Civil No. 04-4703(DSD/SRN)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39631 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,997

Wilson Learning Corporation, a Delaware corporation, Plaintiff v. David W. Schlechte, a Missouri resident, Norman H. Evans, A Missouri resident, and Douglas M. Schlechte, a Missouri resident (d/b/a Personal Skills Development, a Missouri fictitious business name), Defendants

Core Terms

---

defendants', counterdefendants, counterclaims, antitrust, motion to dismiss, damages, statute of limitations, summary judgment, claimant, alleges, conspiracy, products, sales, anticompetitive, civil conspiracy, overt act, distributors, speculative, genuine

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN1[] Pleadings, Counterclaims

Parties joined by a defendant to answer a counterclaim along with a party plaintiff are referred to as counter-defendants rather than third-party defendants.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) provides that summary judgment is appropriate if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN3[] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

For a party moving for summary judgment to prevail, it must demonstrate to the court that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). A fact is material only when its resolution affects the outcome of the case. A dispute is genuine if the evidence is such that it could cause a reasonable jury to return a verdict for either party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN4 Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

On a motion for summary judgment, all evidence and inferences are to be viewed in a light most favorable to the non-moving party. The non-moving party, however, may not rest upon mere denials or allegations in the pleadings, but must set forth specific facts sufficient to raise a genuine issue for trial. Moreover, if a plaintiff cannot support each essential element of its claim, summary judgment must be granted, because a complete failure of proof regarding an essential element necessarily renders all other facts immaterial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN5 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a court takes all the facts alleged in support of the claim being attacked as true and construed in the light most favorable to the claimant. However, a court is free to ignore legal conclusions, unsupported conclusions, unwarranted inferences and sweeping legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations. The motion should not be granted unless the claimant can prove no set of facts entitling him to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

HN6 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Where it appears from the face of the pleading that the statute of limitations has run, a limitations defense may properly be invoked in a motion to dismiss pursuant to *Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\)*. If the claimant then wishes to avail himself of an exception to the statute of limitations, he bears the burden to plead and prove that he is entitled to it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 4B of the Clayton Act provides that any action for damages under the federal antitrust laws must be commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b. Generally, such a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

**HN8** [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Generally, where a claimant complains of an anticompetitive agreement, the statute of limitations begins to run when the claimant becomes subject to the terms of the agreement. Later acts in performance of the agreement do not restart the limitations period.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

**HN9** [blue download icon] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

The speculative damages exception holds that a cause of action for an antitrust violation does not accrue until the claimant's damages become ascertainable.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

**HN10** [blue download icon] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

A statute of limitations will not be tolled merely because the unlawful act of an antitrust defendant will inflict damages continuing into the future.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

**HN11** [blue download icon] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

The speculative damages exception will only delay accrual of a cause of action when future damages are not susceptible of proof at the time of the antitrust defendant's unlawful act.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

**HN12** [blue download icon] Statute of Limitations, Tolling

Federal courts have distinguished uncertain damages from uncertain extent of damages. The former constitutes a plaintiff's inability to establish an injury and, thus, a cause of action. The latter constitutes mere imprecision in the calculation of damages, which may be settled by the jury's reasonable estimation.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

**HN13** [blue download icon] Statute of Limitations, Extensions & Revivals

A continuing violation is one in which the claimant's interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of action arises each time the claimant is injured. When a claimant alleges a continuing violation, an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act. An overt act has two elements: (1) it must be a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act, and (2) it must inflict new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff. If an act is merely the unabated inertial consequence of a previous act, the subsequent act will not restart the statute of limitations.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

HN14 [L] Statute of Limitations, Extensions & Revivals

Performance of an alleged anticompetitive contract is not sufficient to restart the limitations period.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN15 [L] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

Under Missouri law, civil conspiracy is a theory of joint liability for a tortious act. If a party fails to state a claim for an underlying tort, his conspiracy claim fails of necessity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN16 [L] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Act's prohibition of trade restraints implemented by contract, combination, or conspiracy, is aimed at the inherent anticompetitive risk posed by the consolidation of efforts by actors that previously pursued their own interests separately.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN17 [L] Sherman Act, Claims

Because the officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, they do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a conspiracy under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Counsel: [*1] For plaintiff: Edward T. Matthews, Esq., Nathan J. Hartshorn, Esq., Richard J. Wegener, Esq., Todd A. Wind, Esq. and Fredrikson & Byron, P.A., Minneapolis, MN; Heidi G. Welsch, Esq. and Welsch Law Offices, Bloomington, MN

For defendants: Arthur G. Muegler, Jr., Esq., Louis, MO; James P. Cullen, Esq., Minneapolis, MN; Alan I Silver, Esq., Todd J. Thun, Esq. and Bassford Remele, Minneapolis, MN

Judges: David S. Doty, Judge, United States District Court

Opinion by: David S. Doty

Opinion

---

ORDER

This matter is before the court upon defendant Douglas M. Schlechte's motion for summary judgment, plaintiff's motion to dismiss defendants' <sup>1</sup> counterclaims and counterdefendants' motion to dismiss defendants' counterclaims. <sup>2</sup> Based upon a review of the file, record and proceedings herein, and for the reasons stated, the court denies the motion for summary judgment and grants the motions to dismiss.

[*2] BACKGROUND

In one view, this is a rather run-of-the-mill breach of contract action arising from defendants' alleged failure to pay an amount owing on a promissory note. In another view, it is a complicated antitrust case. Wilson Learning Corporation ("WLC") develops and sells what it terms "human performance improvement solutions," that is "how-to" books, outlines and other training materials meant to increase individuals' business performance. Defendants David W. Schlechte, Norman H. Evans and Douglas M. Schlechte are former distributors of WLC's products who conducted their business under the fictitious name of Personal Skills Development ("PSD").

For its claim against defendants, WLC alleges that defendants purchased products from it for resale without paying for them. Subsequently, PSD executed a promissory note in WLC's favor in the amount of $ 114,321.58 of which $ 78,377 is now due and owing.<sup>3</sup> WLC sues to recover that money under breach of contract and unjust enrichment theories. WLC also seeks a declaration that the termination of its distributor agreement with defendants was proper and that the termination does not bar collection of PSD's debt. Douglas M. Schlechte [*3] moves for summary judgment upon the ground that he was not an owner, partner or joint venturer in PSD. WLC opposes the motion by submitting evidence that Douglas Schlechte is listed as a one-third owner of PSD on a "registration of fictitious name" document filed with the Missouri Secretary of State pursuant to state statute. Schlechte's signature also appears on the document next to the instruction "Individual Owners Sign Here."

For their counterclaims against WLC, defendants David Schlechte and Norman Evans allege various violations of federal and Missouri state antitrust law and civil conspiracy under Missouri state law. Defendants also join as counterdefendants several officers, directors and employees of WLC and several unknown fellow distributors of WLC products. Defendants allege that they, WLC and counterdefendants:

voluntarily joined together in concert with each other and agreed, conspired and combined to illegally [*4] restrain trade and commerce and to lessen competition within the [market for how-to products] through horizontal competitor price fixing, vertical price fixing, horizontal competitor allocation of exclusive markets, horizontal competitor allocation of exclusive customers, group boycotts, price discrimination and other illegal anticompetitive restraints. . . .

(1st Am. Countercl. P 34.) Among other things, defendants assert that WLC and its officers, directors and employees coerced defendants and other distributors to enter into a "Wilson Learning Corporation Standard Representative Agreement" which "contained and implemented the [conspiracy's illegal restraints]." (1st Am. Countercl. P 69(a).) The contract was executed on October 16, 1999. WLC and the counterdefendants, excluding the John Doe distributors, now move to dismiss defendants' counterclaims.

DISCUSSION

---

<sup>1</sup> Defendant Douglas M. Schlechte does not join in the counterclaims. Nevertheless, for ease of reference, the court refers to the counterclaims throughout as "defendants' counterclaims."

<sup>2</sup> The counterdefendants characterize themselves as "third-party defendants." However, no third-party claim has been asserted against them because defendants do not allege that they are liable "to [defendants] for all or part of the plaintiff's claim against the [defendants]." Fed. R. Civ. P. 14 (a). Rather, HN1 parties joined by a defendant to answer a counterclaim along with a party plaintiff are referred to as "counterdefendants." See, ironically, Independence Tube Corp. v. Copperweld Corp., 74 F.R.D. 462, 468 (N.D. 111. 1977).

<sup>3</sup> The complaint also alleges that David W. Schlechte personally guaranteed the debt.

I. Defendant Douglas Schlechte's Motion for Summary Judgment

A. Summary Judgment Standard

HN2 [↑] Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that summary judgment is appropriate "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, [*5] and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." HN3 [↑] In order for the moving party to prevail, it must demonstrate to the court that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)(quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\)). A fact is material only when its resolution affects the outcome of the case. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). A dispute is genuine if the evidence is such that it could cause a reasonable jury to return a verdict for either party. See id. at 252.

HN4 [↑] On a motion for summary judgment, all evidence and inferences are to be viewed in a light most favorable to the non-moving party. See id. at 255. The non-moving party, however, may not rest upon mere denials or allegations in the pleadings, but must set forth specific facts sufficient to raise a genuine issue for trial. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324. [*6] Moreover, if a plaintiff cannot support each essential element of its claim, summary judgment must be granted because a complete failure of proof regarding an essential element necessarily renders all other facts immaterial. Id. at 322-23.

B. Merits of the Motion

The court finds that a genuine issue of material fact exists which precludes summary judgment in defendant Douglas Schlechte's favor. His motion is therefore denied.

II. Motions to Dismiss

A. Standard on Motion to Dismiss

HN5 [↑] When considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, all the facts alleged in support of the claim being attacked are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the claimant. Varner v. Peterson Farms, 371 F.3d 1011, 1016 (8th Cir. 2004)(quoting Kottschade v. City of Rochester, 319 F.3d 1038, 1040 (8th Cir. 2003)). However, the court is "free to ignore legal conclusions, unsupported conclusions, unwarranted inferences and sweeping legal conclusions cast in the form of factual allegations." Id. at 1016 (quoting Wiles v. Capitol Indem. Corp., 280 F.3d 868, 870 (8th Cir. 2002)). [*7] The motion should not be granted unless the claimant can prove no set of facts entitling him to relief. Kottschade, 319 F.3d at 1040.

HN6 [↑] When it appears from the face of the pleading that the statute of limitations has run, a limitations defense may properly be invoked in a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12 \(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Varner, 371 F.3d at 1016. If the claimant then wishes to avail himself of an exception to the statute of limitations, he bears the burden to plead and prove that he is entitled to it. See Wollman v. Gross, 637 F.2d 544, 549 (8th Cir. 1980); Coleman v. Kansas City, Mo., 173 S.W.2d 572, 578, 351 Mo. 254 (Mo. 1943)(Missouri law).

B. Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss

1. Antitrust Claims

WLC argues that all of defendants' antitrust claims are barred by the relevant statute of limitations. HN7 Section 4B of the Clayton Act provides that any action for damages under the federal antitrust laws must be commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued.<sup>4</sup> [*9] 15 U.S.C. § 15b. "Generally, a cause of action accrues [*8] and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 \(1971\). Here, the principal act of which defendants complain is that WLC and others "intimidated and caused WLC representatives, including [defendants], to execute a Wilson Learning Corporation Standard Representative Agreement" which imposed a number of anticompetitive restrictions on defendants' participation in the market for training materials. (1st Am. Countercl. P 69 (a); see also PP 37.) This contract was executed on October 16, 1999.<sup>5</sup> (Id. P 69 (a).) Defendants did not file their counterclaim until December 20, 2004. HN8 Generally, where a claimant complains of an anti-competitive agreement, the statute of limitations begins to run when the claimant becomes subject to the terms of the agreement. See Varner, 371 F.3d at 1020. Later acts in performance of the agreement do not restart the limitations period. See id. at 1020. Therefore, on the face of the pleading, defendants' federal antitrust claims are outside the statute of limitations.

Defendants invoke two separate exceptions to the statute of limitations in a bid to buoy their claims. First, defendants allege that their damages from WLC's anti-competitive conduct were speculative for a time due to a phenomenon which they refer to as "sales delay." (1st Am. Countercl. PP 31-33.) HN9 The speculative damages exception holds that a cause of action for an antitrust violation does not accrue until the claimant's damages become ascertainable. See Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1051 \(5th Cir. 1982\) (citing Zenith, 401 U.S. at 339-40, cited in Varner, 371 F.3d at 1019 n.6). Defendants allege that, to sell products in the marketplace, they had [*10] to undertake a laborious, multiple-step process including targeting the decisionmaker within a potential customer organization, determining the restrictions on the decisionmaker's authority, developing a personal relationship with the decisionmaker, identifying appropriate products to pitch to the decisionmaker, preparing a sales presentation and so forth. (Id. P 31.) Defendants allege that this "sales delay" would have prevented them from realizing a first sale of market products until December 22, 2000. (Id. P 31.) Defendants further allege that, until that date, their damages were speculative and incapable of proof. (Id. P 31.)

Defendants' "sales delay" allegations are unavailing. HN10 The statute of limitations will not be tolled merely because the unlawful act of an antitrust defendant will inflict damages continuing into the future. See Zenith, 401 U.S. at 338-39 (antitrust plaintiffs may recover future damages). HN11 The speculative damages exception will only delay accrual of a cause of action when future damages are not susceptible of proof at the time of the antitrust defendant's unlawful act. See id. at 339.<sup>6</sup> Here, defendants' pleading [*11] offers no factual basis from which the court can conclude that "sales delay" rendered their damages insusceptible of proof. That is, defendants' allegations, taken as true, fail to offer any factual support for the proposition that realization of actual sales, or even the hypothetical realization of sales, was a necessary pre-condition to their ability to prove injury resulting from

<sup>4</sup> Defendants do not dispute that their claim for violations of Missouri antitrust law is governed by federal antitrust law. (See Mem. Opp'n at 10.)

<sup>5</sup> Elsewhere, defendants allege that certain of the offending terms had been in effect since as early as 1998 as part of a conspiracy between WLC and its authorized sales representatives. (See, e.g., 1st Am. Countercl. PP 39-42.) Because 1998 is even earlier than 1999, those allegations do not impact the court's statute of limitations analysis.

<sup>6</sup> Thus, HN12 federal courts have distinguished "uncertain damages" from "uncertain extent of damages." Pace Indus., Inc. v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 240 \(9th Cir. 1987\) (citing In re Multidistrict Vehicle Air Pollution, 591 F.2d 68, 73 \(9th Cir. 1979\)). The former constitutes a plaintiff's inability to establish an injury and, thus, a cause of action. See id. at 240. The latter constitutes mere imprecision in the calculation of damages, which may be settled by the jury's reasonable estimation. See id. at 240.

WLC's conduct. In the absence of such a factual basis, the court must conclude that defendants could have substantiated their damages, through expert testimony or otherwise, prior to December 2000. See, e.g., Mir v. Little Co. of Mary Hosp., 844 F.2d 646, 650 (9th Cir. 1988) (statute not tolled where plaintiff could have presented evidence of projected lost income); Brunswick Corp. v. Riegel Textile Corp., 752 F.2d 261, 271 (7th Cir. 1984). Therefore, the speculative damages exception does not apply.

[*12] Defendants also argue that they have alleged a continuing violation of the antitrust laws. HN13 [↑] "A continuing violation is one in which the [claimant's] interests are repeatedly invaded and a cause of action arises each time the [claimant] is injured." Pace Indus., 813 F.2d at 237 (citing Hennegan v. Pacifico Creative Serv., Inc., 787 F.2d 1299 (9th Cir. 1986)). When a claimant alleges a continuing violation, "an overt act by the defendant is required to restart the statute of limitations and the statute runs from the last overt act." Varner, 371 F.3d at 1019 (quoting Peck v. General Motors Corp., 894 F.2d 844, 849 (6th Cir. 1990)). "An overt act has two elements: (1) it must be a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act, and (2) it must inflict new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff." Id. at 1019 (citing Pace Indus., 813 F.2d at 238). If an act is merely the unabated inertial consequence of a previous act, the subsequent act will not restart the statute of limitations. See id. at 1019. Defendants argue that paragraph sixty-nine of the counterclaim [*13] alleges a host of independent overt acts.

Defendants' counterclaim is insufficient to invoke the continuing violation doctrine. As the court has observed, HN14 [↑] performance of an alleged anticompetitive contract is not sufficient to restart the limitations period. Varner, 371 F.3d at 1020. Defendants admit in the pleading itself that the October 16, 1999, contract "contained and implemented" the illegal conduct which forms the basis of their counterclaim: (1st Am. Countercl. P 69 (a).) Furthermore, in response to WLC's motion to dismiss, defendants fail to explain how any of the various acts they allege depart from what was contemplated in the contract or were otherwise new and independent. Therefore, the continuing violation doctrine does not apply. Defendants' antitrust counterclaims, counts one through five, are dismissed.

2. Civil Conspiracy Claim

Count six of defendants' counterclaim alleges a "civil conspiracy" claim under Missouri state law. No such cause of action exists. See Bockover v. Stemmerman, 708 S.W.2d 179, 182 (Mo. Ct. App. 1986), abrogated on other grounds by Roth v. La Societe Anonyme Turbomeca France, 120 S.W.3d 764 (Mo. Ct. App. 2003). [*14] Rather, HN15 [↑] in Missouri, civil conspiracy is a theory of joint liability for a tortious act. See id. at 182. If a party fails to state a claim for an underlying tort, his conspiracy claim fails of necessity. See Rice v. Hodapp, 919 S.W.2d 240, 245 (Mo. 1996) (citing Williams v. Mercantile Bank of St. Louis, 845 S.W.2d 78, 85 (Mo. Ct. App. 1993)). Here, because of the applicable statute of limitations, defendants have failed to state any substantive claim. Therefore, their conspiracy claim must fail as well. Defendants' counterclaim against WLC is dismissed.

C. Counterdefendants' Motion to Dismiss

1. Sherman Act and Clayton Act Claims

Counterdefendants Iizuka, Roth, Kielley, Leveille, Magnuson, Gillem and Skon, each an officer, director or employee of WLC, also move to dismiss defendants' counterclaims. At the outset, because defendants allege that counterdefendants' participation in the conspiracy was accomplished through WLC's contract with defendants, it is doubtful that the claims survive the statute of limitations for the reasons stated above. (1st Am. Countercl. P 69(a).) Nevertheless, counterdefendants have identified an additional [*15] fundamental problem with defendants' counterclaims.

Defendants' claims against counterdefendants must be dismissed because, as WLC's officers, directors and employees, counterdefendants cannot have conspired with WLC. HN16[<sup>16</sup>] The Sherman Act's prohibition of trade restraints implemented by "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy" is aimed at the inherent anticompetitive risk posed by the consolidation of efforts by actors "that previously pursued their own interests separately." *Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp.*, 467 U.S. 752, 768-69, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1984\). HN17[<sup>17</sup>] Because "the officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests," they "do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a § 1 conspiracy." *Id. at 769*. Furthermore, counterdefendants persuasively argue, and defendants do not deny, that the holding of Copperweld should also apply to defendants' claim under section three of the Clayton Act because its elements are identical to a Sherman Act section one claim. Cf. *Advanced Health-Care Servs., Inc. v. Radford Cnty. Hosp.*, 910 F.2d 139, 152 \(4th Cir. 1990\). Defendants have neither pleaded [*16] in their counterclaim nor argued in response to counterdefendants' motion that the counterdefendants' economic interests diverged from those of WLC or that their acts in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy were separate from those of WLC. In fact, in each instance where the counterclaim alleges an "overt act" by counterdefendants, WLC is included as a co-actor. (See, e.g., 1st Am. Countercl. PP 69(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (g) & (h) .) Because defendants have failed to allege an actionable antitrust conspiracy with respect to counterdefendants, defendants' claims must be dismissed.

2. Other Claims

Defendants have not responded to counterdefendants' arguments that defendants' Robinson-Patman Act claim against them is fatally flawed. The court dismisses those claims for the reasons cited by counterdefendants. Furthermore, because defendants' Missouri antitrust claim is governed by principles of federal law, it too is dismissed. Finally, as defendants have failed to state any actionable claim against counterdefendants, defendants' civil conspiracy claim is dismissed for the same reason expressed in section II.B.2. of this order.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY [*17] ORDERED that:

1. Defendant Douglas M. Schlechte's motion for summary judgment [Doc. No. 24] is denied.
2. Counterdefendants' motion to dismiss defendants' counterclaims [Doc. No. 30] is granted.
3. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss defendants' counterclaims [Doc. No. 34] is granted.

Dated: August 24, 2005

David S. Doty, Judge

United States District Court

Adeduntan v. Hosp. Auth. of Clarke County

United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia, Athens Division

August 25, 2005, Decided

Case No. 3:04-CV-65 (CDL)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18281 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,956

AZEEZ P. ADEDUNTAN, VICTORY VASCULAR & GENERAL SURGERY OF GEORGIA, P.C. Plaintiffs, v. HOSPITAL AUTHORITY OF CLARKE COUNTY d/b/a ATHENS REGIONAL MEDICAL CENTER, ATHENS REGIONAL MEDICAL CENTER, INC., ATHENS REGIONAL HEALTH SERVICES, INC., ATHENS VASCULAR SURGERY, P.C., DAVID M. SAILORS, MARK J. CONSTANTINO, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Costs and fees proceeding at Adeduntan v. Hosp. Auth., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46846 \(M.D. Ga., July 11, 2006\)

Core Terms

---

peer review, Plaintiffs', summary judgment, Vascular, privileges, Defendants', antitrust, peer review process, discovery, patient, surgery, performing, immunity, immunity defense, antitrust claim, recommendation, rights, direct observation, anti trust law, medical staff, nonmoving, proceedings, competence, written opinion, Sherman Act, anticompetitive, Credentials, courts, rebut, terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Immunity From Liability > Private Parties

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Defenses > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Employment Issues > Employment Discrimination

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

HN1\[ Summary Judgment, Partial Summary Judgment

The Health Care Quality Improvement Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111 et seq., expressly excludes federal civil rights claims from its immunity provisions. 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111\(a\)\(1\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\) provides that summary judgment shall be granted if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. An issue of fact is material if, under the applicable substantive law, it might affect the outcome of the case. An issue of fact is genuine if the record taken as a whole could lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A court must decide at summary judgment whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN4 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

The moving party at summary judgment bears the initial responsibility of informing the court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Where the nonmoving party bears the burden of proof at trial, the moving party at summary judgment may discharge this initial responsibility by showing that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case or by showing that the nonmoving party will be unable to prove its case at trial.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5 Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

To survive summary judgment, the nonmoving party bearing the ultimate burden of proof at trial must come forward with evidence sufficient to withstand a directed verdict motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

On summary judgment, the evidence of the nonmovant is to be believed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN7 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A district court should resolve all reasonable doubts about the facts at summary judgment in favor of the nonmovant, and draw all justifiable inferences in his favor.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN8 Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

The starting point in contract construction under Georgia law is to look at the four corners of an instrument to determine the intention of the parties from the language employed. In making this determination, all the attendant and surrounding circumstances may be proved, but not explained. O.C.G.A. § 13-2-3. If the language of the agreement is clear, unambiguous, and capable of only one reasonable interpretation, no construction is necessary or even permissible by the court.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

HN9 Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

An ambiguity in a contract is defined as duplicity, indistinctness, or an uncertainty of meaning or expression. A mere lack of clarity on casual reading is not the criterion for determining whether a contract is afflicted with ambiguity.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Parol Evidence

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

HN10[ Defenses, Ambiguities & Mistakes

Under Georgia law, if an ambiguity exists in an agreement, a court should attempt to resolve the ambiguity by applying the statutory rules of contract construction. If the ambiguity cannot be negated by applying the rules of construction, then parol evidence may be introduced, and the issue of what was intended by the parties is a matter for a jury to decide.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN11[ Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Plaintiffs may not amend their complaint through argument opposing summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN12[ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., declares every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states to be illegal, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and also prohibits the monopoly of, or attempt to monopolize, or combine and conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of trade or commerce among the several states. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN13 [ ] Remedies, Damages

Private enforcement suits for damages caused by violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., are permitted under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. The Clayton Act allows successful plaintiffs to recover treble damages. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN14 [ ] Standing, Clayton Act

Standing under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, has been described by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit as a search for the proper plaintiff to enforce the antitrust law. As a result, the courts have developed a two-step inquiry to evaluate whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: (1) a court should determine whether the plaintiff suffered antitrust injury; and then, (2) the court should determine whether the plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN15 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

An antitrust injury has been defined by the United States Supreme Court as injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause. This requires the antitrust plaintiff to show that his own injury coincides with the public detriment tending to result from the alleged violation increasing the likelihood that public and private enforcement of the antitrust laws will further the same goal of increased competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The antitrust laws were not enacted to permit one person to profit from the anticompetitive behavior of another.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The legislative intent behind the antitrust statutes was the protection of competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN18 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The aim of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market. For that reason, the law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Enforcement & Execution > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN19 [+] Justiciability, Standing

Even if plaintiffs are able to establish that they suffered antitrust injury, they still must demonstrate that they are efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws. This analysis requires consideration of several factors that might be useful in determining whether a party is a proper plaintiff in a particular antitrust suit. These factors include: (1) the directness of the injury and whether there exists an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; (2) the nature of the damages; (3) the importance of avoiding duplicative recoveries; and (4) whether the plaintiff can enforce an antitrust judgment efficiently and effectively.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Immunity From Liability > Private Parties

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Public Health & Welfare Law > Healthcare > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN20 [+] Immunity From Liability, Private Parties

Pursuant to 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111\(a\), individuals associated with a medical professional review action - including a professional review body, members or staff of the body, persons under contract with the body, and persons who participate or assist with the review action - are entitled to immunity from damages under federal and state law under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111 et seq.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > Professional Review

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN21 [blue document icon] Protection of Rights, Public Versus Private Discrimination

A "professional review action" is defined as an action or recommendation of a professional review body which is based on the competence or professional conduct of an individual physician (which conduct affects or could affect adversely the health or welfare of a patient or patients) and which affects (or may affect) adversely the clinical privileges, or membership in a professional society, of the physician. Such term includes a formal decision of a professional review body not to take an action or make a recommendation and also includes professional review activities relating to a professional review action. 42 U.S.C.S. § 11151\(9\).

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Torts > ... > Types of Negligence Actions > Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Immunity From Liability > Private Parties

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress > General Overview

HN22 [blue document icon] Protection of Rights, Public Versus Private Discrimination

42 U.S.C.S. § 11111\(a\)\(1\) excludes civil rights actions brought under state or federal law.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Immunity From Liability > Private Parties

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Public Versus Private Discrimination

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN23 [blue document icon] Immunity From Liability, Private Parties

For immunity to apply, a professional review action must have been pursued: (1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in furtherance of quality health care, (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the facts of the matter, (3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirement of paragraph (3). 42 U.S.C.S. § 11112\(a\). A professional review action is presumed to have met these standards, but the presumption is rebuttable by a preponderance of the evidence. The standard for resolving this issue at summary judgment is therefore: Might a reasonable jury, viewing the facts in the best light for the plaintiff, conclude that he has shown, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the defendants' actions are outside the scope of § 11112\(a\)?

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN24 [blue] Discovery, Privileged Communications

Georgia has codified its peer review and medical review privileges. O.C.G.A. §§ 31-7-133 and 31-7-143.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN25 [blue] Discovery, Privileged Communications

See O.C.G.A. § 31-7-133.

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Organizations

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN26 [blue] Official Information Privilege, Reports Privilege

The language of O.C.G.A. § 31-7-143 is substantially the same as O.C.G.A. § 31-7-133, substituting "medical review committee" for "peer review organization."

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN27 [blue] Discovery, Privileged Communications

In enacting the peer review and medical review privileges statutes, the Georgia General Assembly has placed an absolute embargo upon the discovery and use of all proceedings, records, findings, and recommendations of peer review groups and medical review committees in civil litigation.

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

Governments > Courts > Rule Application & Interpretation

Evidence > Privileges > General Overview

HN28 [blue document icon] Official Information Privilege, Reports Privilege

Fed. R. Evid. 501 sets forth the rules of evidentiary privilege as they are applied in federal court.

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

HN29 [blue document icon] Official Information Privilege, Reports Privilege

See Fed. R. Evid. 501.

Evidence > Privileges > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Governments > Courts > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN30 [blue document icon] Evidence, Privileges

Fed. R. Evid. 501 clearly provides federal courts with the statutory power to recognize new or novel evidentiary privileges. However, courts do not create and apply an evidentiary privilege unless it promotes sufficiently important interests to outweigh the need for probative evidence.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

HN31 [blue document icon] Business Administration & Organization, Peer Review

Peer review, the process by which physicians and hospitals evaluate and discipline staff doctors, has become an integral component of the health care system in the United States.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Immunity From Liability > Private Parties

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Torts > Malpractice & Professional Liability > Healthcare Providers

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN32 [blue icon] Immunity From Liability, Private Parties

The enactment of peer review and medical review privileges statutes represents a proper legislative choice between the competing public concerns of fostering medical staff candor, on the one hand, and impairing medical malpractice plaintiffs' access to evidence, on the other hand. However, when a state law privilege would essentially prevent a plaintiff from rebutting a federal immunity defense or would defeat a federal claim which bears little relation to the type of claim the privilege was designed to address, the need for probative evidence sufficiently outweighs the interests protected by the privilege.

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Reports Privilege

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > Health Care Quality Improvement Act

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Self-Critical Analysis Privilege

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN33 [blue icon] Official Information Privilege, Reports Privilege

While the Health Care Quality Improvement Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 11111 et seq., is certainly intended to promote the peer review process, it does not, by its terms, completely bar confidential peer review information from disclosure, particularly in cases where the peer review process itself is at issue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Government Privileges > Official Information Privilege > Self-Critical Analysis Privilege

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

HN34 [blue icon] Discovery, Privileged Communications

As a matter of federal common law, the self-critical analysis privilege does not exist.

Counsel: [*1] For Azeez P. Adeduntan, M.D., Victory Vascular & General Surgery of Georgia, P.C., Plaintiffs: Lawrence Edwards Newlin, Atlanta, GA.

For Athens Vascular Surgery, P.C., David M. Sailors, M.D., Mark J. Costantino, M.D., Defendants: Benton J. Mathis, Jr., Atlanta, GA; Gary Bryan Blasingame, Athens, GA; J. Ralph Beard, Athens, GA; Bradley T. Adler, Atlanta, GA.

For M.D. Azeez P. Adeduntan, Counter Defendant: Lawrence Edwards Newlin, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: CLAY D. LAND, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: CLAY D. LAND

Opinion

---

ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

This lawsuit arises from the medical peer review of Plaintiff Dr. Azeez P. Adeduntan conducted after a patient of Dr. Adeduntan died at the Athens Regional Medical Center (ARMC). The peer review was allegedly conducted and directed by the Defendants. Dr. Adeduntan, along with his professional corporation, Victory Vascular & General Surgery of Georgia, P.C., assert various federal and state claims based upon Defendants' peer review conduct. Those claims include federal civil rights claims pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1985, 1983, and Title VII; federal antitrust claims under the Sherman Act, [15 U.S.C. §§ 1, \[\*2\] 2](#); and state law claims for the negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress and for attorney's fees.

Defendants have filed motions for summary judgment and partial summary judgment. Defendants Hospital Authority of Clarke County (doing business as Athens Regional Medical Center), Athens Regional Medical Center, Inc., and Athens Regional Health Services, Inc. (collectively referred to as the "ARMC Defendants") have moved for summary judgment as to all of Plaintiffs' claims based upon a release executed by Dr. Adeduntan. In addition to their release defense, the ARMC Defendants also contend that they are entitled to summary judgment on: (1) Dr. Adeduntan's Title VII claim because they were not his employer; (2) Plaintiffs' peer review related claims, excluding the federal civil rights claims,<sup>1</sup> based upon immunity under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act (HCQIA), 42 U.S.C. § 11111, et seq.; and (3) Plaintiffs' antitrust claims based upon Plaintiffs' alleged lack of standing to assert those claims.

[*3] Defendants Athens Vascular Surgery, P.C., Dr. David M. Sailors, and Dr. Mark J. Costantino (collectively referred to as the "Athens Vascular Defendants") seek partial summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' peer review related claims, except for Plaintiffs' federal civil rights claims, based upon immunity under the HCQIA. The Athens Vascular Defendants also seek summary judgment on Plaintiffs' antitrust claims based upon Plaintiffs' lack of standing.

Having reviewed the motions and responses and having heard oral argument on the motions, the Court grants summary judgment in favor of the ARMC Defendants as to all of Plaintiffs' claims and grants partial summary judgment to the Athens Vascular Defendants as to Plaintiffs' antitrust claims against them. The Court defers ruling on the Athens Vascular Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment as to Plaintiffs' peer review related claims based upon HCQIA immunity until Plaintiffs are provided with the opportunity to conduct additional limited discovery regarding Defendants' peer review of Dr. Adeduntan.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> HN1 [↑] The HCQIA expressly excludes federal civil rights claims from its immunity provisions. 42 U.S.C. § 11111 \(a\) \(1\).

<sup>2</sup> To overcome Defendants' immunity defense and to prove their federal discrimination claims, Plaintiffs contend that they need to review peer review materials. Defendants take the position that those materials are protected by the Georgia peer review privilege and are not subject to discovery. The ARMC Defendants, who have custody and control of the peer review materials, have filed a Motion for Protective Order, and therefore, those materials have not been produced to Plaintiffs. In light of the Court's grant of summary judgment to the ARMC Defendants and the fact that the Athens Vascular Defendants do not seek summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' federal discrimination claims, a question exists as to whether the peer review privilege issue, which had been presented by the ARMC Defendants in their motion for a protective order, is now necessary to resolve. The Court, as explained in further detail in this Order, finds that the issue must be decided since it is relevant to the Athens Vascular Defendants' summary judgment motion based upon HCQIA immunity and because those peer review materials are relevant to Plaintiffs' federal discrimination claims against the Athens Vascular Defendants, for which no summary judgment motion has been filed.

[*4] II. BACKGROUND

Dr. Adeduntan is a physician and surgeon with his own professional medical practice, Victory Vascular & General Surgery of Georgia, P.C., in Athens, Georgia. Dr. Adeduntan is black; his national origin is Nigerian. He first applied for and was granted medical staff privileges at ARMC, a local hospital, on August 28, 1996. These privileges allowed Dr. Adeduntan to admit and treat his patients in the hospital, so that ARMC could provide care for those patients during their stays. Dr. Adeduntan also maintained medical staff privileges at other Athens area hospitals, including St. Mary's Hospital.

ARMC requires that surgeons reapply for medical staff privileges on a regular basis. Dr. Adeduntan did as required, and his privileges were renewed on four separate occasions. In February 2002, Dr. Adeduntan performed an emergency abdominal aortic aneurysm (AAA) surgery in ARMC's operating room. The patient did not survive; the ARMC Defendants state that the patient died during the procedure, while Dr. Adeduntan contends that the patient was "clinically dead" before he was ever contacted for surgery.

Afterwards, ARMC's Surgical Case Review Committee conducted a peer [*5] review of the procedure and recommended to the credentialing committee that Dr. Adeduntan complete a continuing education course or arrange for a local proctor before performing the same procedure again at ARMC. Dr. Adeduntan appealed this recommendation and agreed to refrain from performing the procedure while the matter was unresolved. He still maintained all other medical staff privileges at ARMC at that time.<sup>3</sup>

On September 3 and October 6, 2003, Dr. Adeduntan filed two charges of discrimination with the EEOC regarding ARMC's peer review process.<sup>4</sup> Dr. Adeduntan applied for reappointment to the medical staff at ARMC on March 24, 2003, and ARMC granted him a six-month extension pending resolution of the peer review process on April 23, 2003. A second extension was granted in October 2003. On February 9, 2004, Dr. Adeduntan and the ARMC Defendants [*6] executed a Peer Review Resolution Agreement (PRRA), intended to encompass all issues and claims related to the peer review process. Dr. Adeduntan's privileges lapsed at the end of April 2004.<sup>5</sup> He commenced this proceeding on July 1, 2004.

III. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

HN2 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(c\) [*7] provides that summary judgment shall be granted "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law."

An issue of fact is "material" if, under the applicable substantive law, it might affect the outcome of the case. Allen v. Tyson Foods 121 F.3d 642, 646 (11th Cir. 1997). An issue of fact is "genuine" if the record taken as a whole could lead a rational trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party. Id. HN3 A court must decide "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must

---

<sup>3</sup> It appears that until April 30, 2004, when all of his staff privileges lapsed, Dr. Adeduntan maintained all privileges except for permission to perform AAA surgeries.

<sup>4</sup> The first charge of discrimination alleged that Dr. Adeduntan was subjected to peer review, had limited hospital privileges, and faced future loss of his hospital privileges because of his race and national origin. His second charge stated that he was subject to retaliation for filing the first charge.

<sup>5</sup> The ARMC Defendants state that Dr. Adeduntan's privileges lapsed because his application to renew them was incomplete in three ways: (1) he did not provide an appropriate written opinion from Dr. Vittimberga in accordance with the PRRA (discussed in more detail infra); (2) the reference from St. Mary's Hospital was not timely received; and (3) the reference from Elberton Hospital was never received.

prevail as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

HN4 The moving party bears "the initial responsibility of informing the . . . court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any,' which it believes demonstrate the absence of [*8] a genuine issue of material fact." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett 477 U.S. 317, 323, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). Where the nonmoving party bears the burden of proof at trial, the moving party may discharge this "initial responsibility" by showing that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case or by showing that the nonmoving party will be unable to prove its case at trial. United States v. Four Parcels of Real Property 941 F.2d 1428, 1437-38 (11th Cir. 1991). HN5 To survive summary judgment, the nonmoving party bearing the ultimate burden of proof at trial must come forward with evidence sufficient to withstand a directed verdict motion. Fitzpatrick v. City of Atlanta 2 F.3d 1112, 1116 (11th Cir. 1993).

HN6 On summary judgment, "the evidence of the non-movant is to be believed." Anderson 477 U.S. at 255. HN7 "The district court should resolve all reasonable doubts about the facts in favor of the non-movant, and draw all justifiable inferences . . . in his favor." Four Parcels, 941 F.2d at 1437 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. The ARMC Defendants and the PRRA Release

[*9] Dr. Adeduntan and the ARMC Defendants entered into the PRRA as a means of resolving the peer review process without resorting to a formal medical staff hearing. The PRRA acknowledges that Dr. Adeduntan had voluntarily discontinued performing AAA procedures during the peer review process and set forth the recommendation of the credentialing committee to which Dr. Adeduntan had objected (namely, that he receive additional instruction in performing the procedure or arrange for local proctoring). The substantive terms of the agreement set forth that

Based upon direct observation of Dr. Adeduntan performing AAA procedure(s) (exact number to be determined by Dr. Vittimberga, but more than one), Dr. Vittimberga will provide a written opinion to the Credentials Committee that Dr. Adeduntan has the requisite clinical skills to perform the AAA procedure consistent with the standard of care. Further, Dr. Adeduntan agrees to a retrospective review of his next five (5) AAA surgeries at ARMC.

The Credentials Committee will deem Dr. Vittimberga's opinion and certification as sufficient evidence of Dr. Adeduntan's competence and qualification in performing AAA procedures, and his agreement to [*10] refrain from performing AAA surgery will no longer be necessary. In the event Dr. Vittimberga fails to certify Dr. Adeduntan's competence and qualifications in performing these procedures, this matter will be referred back to the Credentials Committee for consideration, with input, as requested, from Dr. Adeduntan and Dr. Vittimberga.

The release of the PRRA provided that

Each party hereto unconditionally releases, remises, discharges, and acquits the other party from each, every, and all claims, both in law and in equity, and all expenses, debts, covenants, liabilities, or responsibilities in any way relating to or arising from said claims, which either party had or now has against the other party, whether known or unknown, and whether foreseen or unforeseen arising from, or in any way connected directly or indirectly with, or otherwise related to the peer review investigation of Case No. 10-63-13 and the hearing regarding the same. The release of ARMC is limited only to ARMC, Athens Regional Health Services, Inc., Athens Regional Medical Center, Inc., Hospital Authority of Clarke County, Georgia, Athens Regional Foundation, Inc., Athens Regional Health Resources, Inc., Athens [*11] Area Health Plan Select, Inc., Athens Regional Physician Services, Inc., Regional FirstCare, Inc., Athens Regional Health Ventures, Inc., Athens Area Health Plan Governance Committee and Athens Regional Home Health.

Dr. Adeduntan further acknowledges and agrees that with respect to the rights and claims he is waiving, to [sic] he is not only waiving his right to recover money or any other relief in any action he might commence, but also his right to file and recover in any action brought on his behalf against ARMC by any other party, including, but not limited to the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission or any other federal, state or local government agency or department.

ARMC and Dr. Adeduntan expressly agree that this release does not preclude Dr. Adeduntan from bringing any and all claims, demands, rights, causes of action and/or seeking evidence arising out of any other matter or against any other party, including, but not limited to, any claims, demands, rights, or causes of action that are presently pending in the State Court of Clarke County.

The ARMC Defendants contend that this release bars all of Plaintiffs' claims arising out of the peer review [*12] process before February 9, 2004, the effective date of the PRRA. In response, Plaintiffs argue that the PRRA is unenforceable as a whole because the agreement lacks consideration or, in the alternative, the release is unenforceable because the ARMC Defendants materially breached the terms of the agreement.

1. Enforceability of Release

a. Consideration

The Court finds Plaintiffs' argument that the agreement lacks consideration to be without merit. If Dr. Adeduntan complied with the conditions set forth in the agreement, the ARMC Defendants agreed to reinstate his privileges in full and to discontinue any further peer review process. The PRRA also provides that any individual or entity inquiring into Dr. Adeduntan's standing at ARMC would be informed that he had no pending disciplinary actions and that he maintained privileges in good standing. The PRRA also contained a mutual release of claims arising from the peer review process. The agreement therefore was supported by more than adequate consideration.

b. Breach of Contract

Plaintiffs contend that the ARMC Defendants breached the terms of the PRRA, rendering any release of claims contained in the agreement unenforceable. [*13] The breach occurred, according to Plaintiffs, when ARMC refused to accept the written opinion of Dr. Vittimberga certifying Dr. Adeduntan's competence. In response, the ARMC Defendants contend that the written opinion of Dr. Vittimberga did not comply with the terms of the PRRA.

Plaintiffs' allegation of breach of contract requires a review of additional facts regarding the procurement of Dr. Vittimberga's written opinion. After entering into the PRRA, Dr. Adeduntan sent a letter to Dr. Vittimberga dated March 8, 2004, requesting that Dr. Vittimberga send a letter to ARMC regarding Dr. Adeduntan's qualifications to perform the AAA procedure. Dr. Adeduntan essentially dictated the letter's content to Dr. Vittimberga, instructing that it should read: "Based on direct observations; I hereby certify that Dr. Azeez Adeduntan; is a well trained Surgeon who is highly qualified & competent in performing Abdominal Aortic Aneurysms (AAA) procedures consistent with the standard of Care."<sup>6</sup> On March 17, 2004, Dr. Vittimberga sent a one-sentence letter to ARMC containing language that was nearly the verbatim language requested by Dr. Adeduntan. Dr. Vittemberga included with his letter a copy [*14] of Dr. Adeduntan's March 8 letter to him.

Dr. Cecil Hudson, Chief Medical Officer at ARMC, contacted Dr. Vittimberga to follow up on the letters he received. When asked the date of his observation of Dr. Adeduntan's performance of AAA procedures, Dr. Vittimberga responded that he had observed Dr. Adeduntan performing the procedure eight years prior, while Dr. Adeduntan was in a training program for residents and fellows in vascular surgery under Dr. Vittimberga's supervision. This additional information led Dr. Hudson to subsequently inform Dr. Adeduntan that the written opinion of Dr. Vittimberga did not satisfy the requirement of direct observation in the PRRA.

---

<sup>6</sup> Punctuation and capitalization as in original.

The issue for the Court is the meaning of the direct observation requirement in the PRRA. HN8↑ The starting point in contract construction under Georgia law is "to look at the four corners of the instrument to determine the intention of the parties from the language employed." Livoti v. Aycock, 263 Ga. App. 897, 901-02, 590 S.E.2d 159, 164 \(2003\). [*15] In making this determination, "all the attendant and surrounding circumstances may be proved, but not explained." Id.; see also O.C.G.A. § 13-2-3. If the language of the agreement is "clear, unambiguous, and capable of only one reasonable interpretation, no construction is necessary or even permissible by the court." Estate of Sam Farkas, Inc. v. Clark, 238 Ga. App. 115, 119-20, 517 S.E.2d 826, 830 \(1999\) (quoting Reahard v. Ivester, 188 Ga. App. 17, 19, 371 S.E.2d 905, 907 \(1988\)). HN9↑ An "[a]mbiguity in a contract is defined as duplicity, indistinctness, or an uncertainty of meaning or expression." Thomas v. B&I Lending, LLC, 261 Ga. App. 39, 41, 581 S.E.2d 631, 634 \(2003\). "[A] mere lack of clarity on casual reading is not the criterion for determining whether a contract is afflicted with ambiguity." McCann v. Glynn Lumber Co., 199 Ga. 669, 679, 34 S.E.2d 839, 845 \(1945\).

Plaintiffs assert that the language of the PRRA is silent as to whether the direct observation requirement is prospective or retrospective, so that Dr. Vittimberga's previous observation of Dr. Adeduntan satisfies [*16] its terms.<sup>7</sup> The plain language of the PRRA does not support Plaintiffs' argument. The language of the agreement is in the present tense and written in a way that contemplates future action: the number of procedures observed is "to be determined" by Dr. Vittimberga; Dr. Vittimberga is to determine whether Dr. Adeduntan "has" the competency to perform AAA procedures. The language regarding the number of procedures to be observed by Dr. Vittimberga is particularly awkward when attempting to interpret it in Plaintiffs' suggested manner; the provision that the number of procedures observed is "to be determined by Dr. Vittimberga" is rendered meaningless if viewed retrospectively, considering that Dr. Vittimberga has apparently already observed Dr. Adeduntan perform a finite number of AAA procedures under his previous supervision. Plaintiffs' interpretation of the language of the direct observation requirement is tortured and overreaching. The clear and unambiguous language of the agreement clearly evinces the parties' intention that the direct observation requirement is prospective in nature, and the Court finds that it is the only reasonable interpretation of that provision.

[*17] For that reason, Plaintiffs have not demonstrated that Defendants breached the terms of the PRRA, nor have they offered any other legal basis supporting their contention that the PRRA is not enforceable. The Court finds as a matter of law that the release contained in the PRRA is enforceable. The next issue is whether Plaintiffs released the claims that they assert in this lawsuit.

2. Scope of Release

Plaintiffs have asserted federal claims against the ARMC Defendants under 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1983, and 1985; Title VII; and the Sherman Act. The Court finds, that according to the terms of the release, it encompasses all of Plaintiffs' claims in this suit:

Each party hereto unconditionally releases, remises, discharges, and acquits the other party from each, every, and all claims, both in law and in equity, and all expenses, debts, covenants, liabilities, or responsibilities in any way relating to or arising from said claims, which either party had or now has against the other party, whether known or unknown, and whether foreseen or unforeseen arising from, or in any way connected directly or indirectly with, or otherwise related to the peer review [*18] investigation of Case No. 10-63-13 and the hearing regarding the same.

<sup>7</sup> Plaintiffs' logic is inconsistent with the law in that they seem to argue that because the direct observation requirement was ambiguous as to whether it was prospective or retrospective in nature, they have satisfied the requirement by fulfilling it according to their interpretation. HN10↑ Under Georgia law, if an ambiguity exists in an agreement, the court should attempt to resolve the ambiguity by applying the statutory rules of contract construction. Atlanta Dev., Inc. v. Emerald Capital, 258 Ga. App. 472, 476, 574 S.E.2d 585, 589 \(2002\). If the ambiguity cannot be negated by applying the rules of construction, then parol evidence may be introduced, and the issue of what was intended by the parties is a matter for a jury to decide. Livoti, 263 Ga. App. at 903, 590 S.E.2d at 164. Simply establishing that an ambiguity exists does not mean that Plaintiffs' interpretation must prevail.

All of the federal claims Plaintiffs have asserted are related to the peer review process. Moreover, since Plaintiffs' state law claims of negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress arise from the peer review process, they are also covered by the release in the PRRA.

During the hearing on Defendants' motion, Plaintiffs attempted to identify other instances of discriminatory conduct that occurred outside the peer review process, giving rise to independent and discrete causes of action. Plaintiffs stated that the ARMC Defendants: (1) sent the police to Dr. Adeduntan's home on one occasion; (2) encouraged an employee to file a sexual harassment complaint against Dr. Adeduntan; (3) sent Dr. Adeduntan more uninsured patients than other doctors; (4) referred a patient complaint to the State Medical Board rather than handling it internally; (5) posted a confidential letter written by Dr. Adeduntan in the doctors' lounge; (6) made unnecessary chart reviews of Dr. Adeduntan's cases; and (7) placed observers in the operating room.

While these alleged acts may be probative of Dr. Adeduntan's clearly [*19] asserted discrimination claims, Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that each separate instance of conduct alleged is actionable. First, Plaintiffs failed to allege specifically in their Complaint any facts relating to the complaint of alleged sexual harassment against Dr. Adeduntan; the inclusion of observers in Dr. Adeduntan's operating room; or the excessive review of Dr. Adeduntan's patient charts. HN11[↑] Plaintiffs may not amend their Complaint "through argument . . . opposing summary judgment." *Gilmour v. Gates, McDonald & Co., 382 F.3d 1312, 1315 \(11th Cir. 2004\)*. The remaining incidents, which were raised by Plaintiffs in the Complaint, either do not constitute actionable discriminatory conduct or are part of the peer review process and covered by the PRRA.

Because all of Plaintiffs' viable claims against the ARMC Defendants are encompassed and therefore barred by the release in the PRRA, the Court grants summary judgment to the ARMC Defendants on all of Plaintiffs' federal and state law claims.<sup>8</sup>

[*20] B. Antitrust Claims

Plaintiffs have brought a private suit for alleged restraint of trade and monopoly under the federal antitrust statutes against the ARMC Defendants and the Athens Vascular Defendants.<sup>9</sup> HN12[↑] The Sherman Act declares "[e]very contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States . . . to be illegal," 15 U.S.C. § 1, and also prohibits the monopoly of, "or attempt to monopolize, or combine and conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of trade or commerce among the several States. . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. HN13[↑] Private enforcement suits for damages caused by violations of the Sherman Act are permitted under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15. The Clayton Act allows successful plaintiffs to recover treble damages. Id.

[*21] Defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiffs' antitrust claims because Plaintiffs do not have legal standing to assert those claims. HN14[↑] Standing under the Clayton Act has been described by the Eleventh Circuit "as a search for the proper plaintiff to enforce the antitrust law." *Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1448 \(11th Cir. 1991\)*. As a result, the courts have developed a two-step inquiry to evaluate whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: (1) "a court should determine whether the plaintiff suffered antitrust

---

<sup>8</sup>In light of this ruling, it is unnecessary to address the ARMC Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Dr. Adeduntan's Title VII claim based upon their contention that they were not his employer.

<sup>9</sup>The only remaining antitrust claims are those asserted against the Athens Vascular Defendants. The release in the PRRA bars Plaintiffs' antitrust claims against the ARMC Defendants. The Court notes that Defendant Hospital Authority of Athens-Clarke County is not in any event subject to Plaintiffs' antitrust claims as an instrumentality, agency, or political subdivision of Athens-Clarke County, which Plaintiffs concede in their Complaint. (Compl. at PP 64, 69.) Even if the PRRA did not operate to bar Plaintiffs' antitrust claims against the ARMC Defendants, they would still be entitled to summary judgment for the reasons stated herein.

injury"; and then, (2) "the court should determine whether the plaintiff is an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws." Id. at 1449.

HN15[<sup>15</sup>] An antitrust injury has been defined by the Supreme Court as injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be "the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause."

Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) [*22] (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 125, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969)). This "requires the antitrust plaintiff to show that his own injury coincides with the public detriment tending to result from the alleged violation . . . increas[ing] the likelihood that public and private enforcement of the antitrust laws will further the same goal of increased competition." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1450 (quoting Austin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Ala., 903 F.2d 1385, 1389 (11th Cir. 1990)).

Plaintiffs allege in their Complaint that the Defendants "have conspired to impose and have imposed an unreasonable restraint on the vascular surgery market in and around Athens-Clarke County, Georgia" and "have engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with the specific intent to monopolize the Athens-Clarke County area vascular surgery market." The effect of this conduct, Plaintiffs allege, has been economic injury caused by the Defendants' attempt to drive Plaintiffs out of the vascular surgery market.

In Todorov the Eleventh Circuit denied antitrust standing to a physician who did not receive the staff privileges he requested because [*23] it found that the doctor had shown only that he had been deprived of "the profits he would have garnered had he been able to share a part of the . . . supercompetitive, or monopoly, profits." Id. at 1453-54. This injury clearly did not fall within the definition of an antitrust injury because HN16[<sup>16</sup>] "the antitrust laws were not enacted to permit one person to profit from the anticompetitive behavior of another." Id. at 1454.

The type of harm complained of by Plaintiffs in this case is of the type deemed insufficient for antitrust standing in Todorov. As the Supreme Court has noted, HN17[<sup>17</sup>] the legislative intent behind the antitrust statutes was "the protection of competition, not competitors." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). The harm alleged in the Complaint is harm to the individual doctor, not to competition within the marketplace. HN18[<sup>18</sup>] The aim of the Sherman Act "is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market."<sup>10</sup> Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel Communications, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1069 (11th Cir. 2004) (quoting Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993)). [*24] For that reason, "the law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself." Id. Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they have suffered the type of antitrust injury contemplated under the Sherman Act.

[*25] HN19[<sup>19</sup>] Even if Plaintiffs were able to establish that they suffered antitrust injury, they still must demonstrate that they are efficient enforcers of the antitrust laws. This analysis requires consideration of several factors "that might be useful in determining whether a party is a proper plaintiff in a particular [antitrust] suit." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1451. These factors include: (1) the directness of the injury and whether there "exists an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement"; (2) the nature of the damages; (3) the importance of avoiding duplicative recoveries; and (4) whether the plaintiff can enforce an antitrust judgment efficiently and effectively. Id. at 1451-52. Considering those factors, Plaintiffs are not appropriate enforcers. All of Plaintiffs' allegations relate to the economic harm suffered by Plaintiffs, and there are no allegations regarding the effect of the alleged anticompetitive behavior on the consumers in the market. Parties who "have a stronger interest in ensuring that prices and services remain at competitive levels" are the appropriate [*26] enforcers of antitrust laws. Robles v. Humana Hosp. Cartersville, 785 F. Supp. 989, 999. Plaintiffs' interest "is that [they] be allowed to compete . . . not that patients receive quality services at competitive prices." <sup>11</sup> Id.

<sup>10</sup> The Athens Vascular Defendants also provide numerous citations to cases outside the Eleventh Circuit that have similarly found that denial of a doctor's hospital privileges does not satisfy the requirement of antitrust injury. See, e.g., Patel v. Midland Mem'l Hosp. & Med. Ctr., 298 F.3d 333, 346 (5th Cir. 2002) (finding suspension of privileges at one hospital did not eliminate plaintiff as competitor when he continued to treat patients at another facility); BCB Anesthesia Care, Ltd. v. Passavant Mem'l Area Hosp. Ass'n, 36 F.3d 664, 667, 668-69 (7th Cir. 1994) (holding anesthetists failed to show impact on competition, rather than themselves and also collecting federal cases that have reached same conclusion on antitrust claims); Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 739 (9th Cir. 1992) (noting that "[e]ven the elimination of a single competitor, standing alone, does not prove anticompetitive effect. . . . [I]njury to competition, beyond the impact on the claimant" is required).

Plaintiffs [*27] have therefore failed to show that they meet either prong of the two-step inquiry into antitrust standing. Because they lack antitrust standing, the Court grants summary judgment in favor of the Athens Vascular Defendants as to Plaintiffs' antitrust claims.

C. HCQIA Immunity

The Athens Vascular Defendants seek summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' state law claims based upon HCQIA immunity. HN20[] Individuals associated with a medical "professional review action"-including a professional review body, members or staff of the body, persons under contract with the body, and persons who participate or assist with the review action-are entitled to immunity from damages under federal and state law under the HCQIA. <sup>12</sup> 42 U.S.C. § 11111\(a\). HN21[] A "professional review action" is defined as:

[A]n action or recommendation of a professional review body . . . which is based on the competence or professional conduct of an individual physician (which conduct affects or could affect adversely the health or welfare of a patient or patients) and which affects (or may affect) adversely the clinical privileges, or membership in a professional society, of the physician. Such [*28] term includes a formal decision of a professional review body not to take an action or make a recommendation . . . and also includes professional review activities relating to a professional review action.

42 U.S.C. § 11151\(9\).

If the action at issue meets this definition, the HCQIA also sets forth precise standards for such actions that must be fulfilled for the immunity provision to apply. HN23[] For immunity to apply, the review action must have been pursued:

(1) in the reasonable belief that the action was in furtherance of quality health care, (2) after a reasonable effort to obtain the [*29] facts of the matter, (3) after adequate notice and hearing procedures are afforded to the physician involved or after such other procedures as are fair to the physician under the circumstances, and (4) in the reasonable belief that the action was warranted by the facts known after such reasonable effort to obtain facts and after meeting the requirement of paragraph (3).

<sup>11</sup> Plaintiffs note that St. Mary's Hospital, where Dr. Adeduntan also maintains privileges, lacks open heart and dedicated angioplasty facilities. Although these are not facilities needed for Dr. Adeduntan to perform his surgeries, Plaintiffs submit that they may be needed for some of his patients, who often suffer from heart-related problems. Plaintiffs contend that the limited facilities at St. Mary's therefore impact Dr. Adeduntan's ability to treat patients there because patients may require a transfer from St. Mary's to ARMC, resulting in financial impact on those patients. However, the Court finds that this connection between vascular surgery and cardiac procedures is still insufficient to establish antitrust injury to the competition for vascular surgery in the Athens-Clarke area.

<sup>12</sup> HN22[] The statute excludes civil rights actions brought under state or federal law. 42 U.S.C. § 11111\(a\)\(1\). Accordingly, the immunity sought would apply to Plaintiffs' antitrust claims-which the Court has already disposed of on other grounds-and their state law claims of intentional infliction of emotional distress and negligent infliction of emotional distress.

42 U.S.C. § 11112 (a). A professional review action is presumed to have met these standards, but the presumption is rebuttable by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. The standard for resolving this issue at summary judgment is therefore: "Might a reasonable jury, viewing the facts in the best light for [the plaintiff], conclude that he has shown, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the defendants' actions are outside the scope of § 11112 (a)?" Bryan v. James E. Holmes Reg'l Med. Ctr., 33 F.3d 1318, 1333 (11th Cir. 1994) (quoting Austin v. McNamara, 979 F.2d 728, 735 (9th Cir. 1992)).

It is clear that the peer review process undertaken by ARMC of Dr. Adeduntan fits within the statutory definition of a professional review action. However, Plaintiffs [*30] have been denied a full opportunity to rebut the presumption of immunity because they have been denied access to the peer review materials that may show that Defendants' actions were outside the scope of activity protected by HCQIA immunity.<sup>13</sup> The Athens Vascular Defendants seek to invoke a federal law peer review immunity defense while at the same time indirectly finding refuge in a state law peer review privilege asserted by a fellow Defendant that has the effect of denying Plaintiffs the opportunity to rebut the immunity defense. The Court therefore must determine whether the peer review materials sought by Plaintiffs are protected from discovery under federal law based upon Georgia's peer review statute. If they are privileged and thus not discoverable, then no evidence exists (and none would be forthcoming) to rebut the HCQIA immunity defense, and the Athens Vascular Defendants would be entitled to summary judgment. However, if those materials are not privileged, then Plaintiffs should be given the opportunity to conduct limited discovery regarding those materials before being subjected to summary judgment.

[*31] 1. Georgia's Peer Review/Medical Review Committee Privileges

HN24[↑] Georgia has codified its peer review and medical review privileges. O.C.G.A. §§ 31-7-133, 31-7-143. The peer review statute provides that HN25[↑] [T]he proceedings and records of a review organization shall be held in confidence and shall not be subject to discovery or introduction into evidence in any civil action; and no person who was in attendance at a meeting of such organization shall be permitted or required to testify in any such civil action as to any evidence or other matters produced or presented during the proceedings or activities of such organization or as to any findings, recommendations, evaluations, opinions, or other actions of such organization or any members thereof. The confidentiality provisions of this article shall also apply to any proceedings, records, actions, activities, evidence, findings, recommendations, evaluations, opinions, data, or other information shared between review organizations who are performing a peer review function or disclosed to a government agency as required by law. However, information, documents, or records otherwise available from original [*32] sources are not to be construed as immune from discovery or use in any such civil action merely because they were presented during proceedings of such organization, nor should any person who testifies before such organization or who is a member of such organization be prevented from testifying as to matters within the person's knowledge; but such witness cannot be asked about such witness's testimony before such organization or about opinions formed by such witness as a result of organization hearings.

O.C.G.A. § 31-7-133. HN26[↑] The language of O.C.G.A. § 31-7-143 is substantially the same, substituting "medical review committee" for peer review organization. At least one federal district court within Georgia has described the effect of the peer review statutes as "confer[ring] upon peer review organizations the qualities of a black hole; what goes in does not come out, and, unless the information exists in duplicate in the surrounding orbit, nothing that went in is discoverable." Doe v. UNUM Life Ins. Co. of Am., 891 F. Supp. 607, 610 (N.D. Ga. 1995). The Georgia Supreme Court has recognized that HN27[↑] in enacting [*33] these statutes, "the General Assembly has placed an absolute embargo upon the discovery and use of all proceedings, records, findings, and recommendations of peer review groups and medical review committees in civil litigation." Emory Clinic v. Houston, 258 Ga. 434, 434-35, 369 S.E.2d 913, 913 (1988) (per curiam).

---

<sup>13</sup> As noted previously, the ARMC Defendants have refused to produce any peer review materials based upon their contention that such materials are not discoverable because of the Georgia peer review privilege.

Defendants urge the Court to adopt this state law privilege and apply it in this case pursuant to Rule 501 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. HN28<sup>14</sup> Rule 501 sets forth the rules of evidentiary privilege as they are applied in federal court, providing that HN29<sup>15</sup> Except as otherwise required by the Constitution of the United States or provided by Act of Congress or in rules prescribed by the Supreme Court pursuant to statutory authority, the privilege of a witness, person, government, State, or political subdivision thereof shall be governed by principles of the common law as they may be interpreted by the courts of the United States in the light of reason and experience. However, in civil actions and proceedings, with respect to an element of a claim or defense as to which State law supplies the rule of decision, the privilege [*34] . . . shall be determined in accordance with State law.

Fed. R. Evid. 501. HN30<sup>16</sup> The rule "clearly provides federal courts with the statutory power to recognize new or novel" evidentiary privileges." In re Int'l Horizons, Inc. 689 F.2d 996, 1003 (11th Cir. 1982). However, courts do not "create and apply an evidentiary privilege unless it promotes sufficiently important interests to outweigh the need for probative evidence." Univ. of Pa. v. EEOC, 493 U.S. 182, 189, 107 L. Ed. 2d 571, 110 S. Ct. 577 (1990) (quoting Trammel v. United States 445 U.S. 40, 51, 63 L. Ed. 2d 186, 100 S. Ct. 906 (1980)).

HN31<sup>17</sup> "Peer review, the process by which physicians and hospitals evaluate and discipline staff doctors, has become an integral component of the health care system in the United States." Bryan v. James E. Holmes Reg'l Med. Ctr. 33 F.3d 1318, 1321 (11th Cir. 1994). While the peer review privilege has been upheld in a few cases within the Eleventh Circuit, those cases are distinguishable from the instant action on the basis that they did not involve the HCQIA immunity defense; nor did they involve federal civil rights claims. See Somer v. Johnson 704 F.2d 1473, 1479 (11th Cir. 1983) [*35] (upholding similar privilege under Florida law in medical malpractice diversity action); Doe, 891 F. Supp. at 609 (upholding privilege under Georgia law where insurance company sought information regarding physician's suspended privileges due to alleged drug abuse). There is no Eleventh Circuit authority addressing application of the peer review privilege in a federal question case, particularly in a case involving the HCQIA immunity defense or civil rights claims of discrimination.<sup>14</sup> The Court understands the decision the Georgia legislature has made in adopting its peer review privilege: HN32<sup>18</sup> "[T]he enactment of such statutes represents a proper legislative choice between the competing public concerns of fostering medical staff candor, on the one hand, and impairing medical malpractice plaintiffs' access to evidence, on the other hand." Eubanks v. Ferrier 245 Ga. 763, 765, 267 S.E.2d 230, 232 (1980). However, when a state law privilege would essentially prevent a plaintiff from rebutting a federal immunity defense or would defeat a federal claim which bears little relation to the type of claim the privilege was designed to address, the need for probative [*36] evidence sufficiently outweighs the interests protected by the privilege.<sup>15</sup> The Court therefore finds that the Georgia peer review privilege cannot be used to prevent Plaintiffs from discovering peer review materials that may be relevant to rebut the Athens Vascular Defendants' HCQIA immunity defense.

[*37] 2. Federal Self-Critical Analysis Privilege

Defendants also urge the Court to adopt the federal self-critical analysis privilege, which offers substantially the same protections as the Georgia statutory peer review privilege. The Court has located no Eleventh Circuit decision applying this privilege in the HCQIA immunity context. District courts within the Eleventh Circuit have divided on the issue of whether the privilege should be applied in discrimination cases. Compare Reid v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Co., 199 F.R.D. 379, 384-385 (N.D. Ga. 2001) with Johnson v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 206 F.R.D. 686, 690 (M.D. Ala. 2002). The Supreme Court has rejected the application of the privilege to peer review materials associated with a professor's denial of tenure. Univ. of Pa. 493 U.S. at 189.

<sup>14</sup> Other circuits have rejected the application of the peer review privilege in federal question or civil rights cases, despite the widespread adoption of such statutory privileges throughout the United States. See Virmani v. Novant Health, Inc., 259 F.3d 284, 293 (4th Cir. 2001); Mem'l Hosp. v. Shadur, 664 F.2d 1058, 1063 (7th Cir. 1981) (per curiam).

<sup>15</sup> Furthermore, the Court notes that Congress, in enacting the HCQIA and providing immunity from civil damages to individuals who participate in medical peer review proceedings, specifically excluded immunity from suits brought for violations of civil rights. 42 U.S.C. § 11111\(a\)\(1\). HN33<sup>19</sup> While the HCQIA is certainly intended to promote the peer review process, it does not, by its terms, completely bar confidential peer review information from disclosure, particularly in cases where the peer review process itself is at issue.

The Eleventh Circuit has not explicitly recognized the self-critical analysis privilege, joining other federal Courts of Appeal in failing to do so. See Dowling v. Am. Haw. Cruises, Inc., 971 F.2d 423, 425-26 & n.1 (9th Cir. 1992); FTC v. TRW, Inc. 202 U.S. App. D.C. 207, 628 F.2d 207, 210 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Emerson Elec. Co. v. Schlesinger 609 F.2d 898, 907 (8th Cir. 1979). [*38] <sup>16</sup> HN34↑ As a matter of federal common law, the self-critical analysis privilege does not exist. The Court finds that under the circumstances of this case such privilege cannot be applied to prevent the discovery of limited peer review materials.

Based on the foregoing, the Court finds that limited peer review materials are discoverable in this case. Therefore, the Court defers ruling on the Athens Vascular Defendants' summary judgment motion based on the HCQIA immunity defense, until this discovery has been completed.

D. The ARMC Defendants' Motion for Protective Order

As previously mentioned, the ARMC Defendants have filed a Motion for Protective Order to avoid having to produce the peer review materials sought by Plaintiffs in their discovery requests. For the reasons stated in this Order, the Court has concluded that those materials are not absolutely [*39] protected under the circumstances of this case. However, the Court also finds that Plaintiffs' discovery requests are overly broad. The Court finds that Plaintiffs' discovery should be limited to those materials that pertain to the peer review specifically undertaken of Dr. Adeduntan arising from the emergency AAA surgery that precipitated the peer review in the first place. The Court therefore denies the ARMC Defendants' motion for a protective order to the extent they seek to prohibit Plaintiffs' access to Dr. Adeduntan's peer review materials, as described hereinabove. Accordingly, the ARMC Defendants are ordered to produce those peer review materials to Plaintiffs within thirty days of the date of this Order.<sup>17</sup>

[*40] V. CONCLUSION

The ARMC Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment is granted as to all of Plaintiffs' claims. The Athens Vascular Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment is granted as to Plaintiffs' antitrust claims. The Court defers ruling on the Athens Vascular Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment as to Plaintiffs' other claims based upon the HCQIA immunity defense until Plaintiffs have had a reasonable opportunity to complete their limited discovery regarding the peer review materials that the Court has ordered are discoverable. The ARMC Defendants' Motion for Protective Order is denied to the extent described in this Order.<sup>18</sup>

[*41] IT IS SO ORDERED, this 25th day of August, 2005.

CLAY D. LAND

<sup>16</sup> See also Donald P. Vandergrift, Jr., The Privilege of Self-Critical Analysis: A Survey of the Law 60 Alb. L. Rev. 171, 180-81 (1996).

<sup>17</sup> The Court observes that although it has granted summary judgment to the ARMC Defendants as to all of Plaintiffs' claims, it retains the authority to order the ARMC Defendants to produce the documents pursuant to Rule 54 (b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as the Court has not entered final judgment as to those parties.

<sup>18</sup> In light of this ruling, the Court anticipates that the remaining parties may need to amend the scheduling/discovery order for the limited purpose of addressing the scheduling of the additional limited discovery permitted by this Order. The parties are ordered to confer and provide the Court with a proposed amended scheduling order within thirty days of the date of this Order.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Florida v. Tenet Healthcare Corp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida

August 25, 2005, Decided ; August 29, 2005, Filed

CASE NO. 05-20591-CIV-SEITZ, CASE NO. 05-80183-CIV-SEITZ

Reporter

420 F. Supp. 2d 1288 *; 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41107 **

STATE OF FLORIDA, OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, et al., Plaintiffs, v. TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION, Defendant. BOCA RATON COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, INC., d/b/a BOCA RATON COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, on behalf of itself and on behalf of a class of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by *Boca Raton Cnty. Hosp. Inc. v. Tenet Healthcare Corp., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38560 \(S.D. Fla., Apr. 24, 2006\)*

Motion granted by *Boca Raton Cnty. Hosp. v. Tenet Healthcare Corp., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115508 \(S.D. Fla., Dec. 28, 2006\)*

Core Terms

---

outlier, allegations, enterprise, charges, reimbursements, unjust enrichment, conspiracy, costs, motion to dismiss, Threshold, unfair, predicate act, converted, inflated, argues, cases, Pool, regulations, patients, stolen, violations, deceptive, alleged injury, funds, contends, alleged conduct, Medicare Act, turbocharging, proximate cause, alleged facts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Public Health & Welfare Law > ... > Medicare > Coverage > General Overview

HN1 [down] Medicare, Coverage

Medicare, established in Title XVIII of the Social Security Act, *42 U.S.C.S. § 1395 et seq.*, is the federal program that provides health care insurance to the nation's aged and disabled.

Public Health & Welfare Law > ... > Providers > Reimbursement > General Overview

HN2 [down] Providers, Reimbursement

The outlier provision of Medicare under Title XVIII of the Social Security Act, *42 U.S.C.S. § 1395 et seq.*, permits hospitals to request additional payments in any case where charges, adjusted to cost, exceed an amount that the Secretary of Health and Human Services specifies. *42 U.S.C.S. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(ii\)*. According to the Centers for

420 F. Supp. 2d 1288, *1288L<sup>A</sup>2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41107, **41107

Medicare & Medicaid Services, this additional payment is designed to protect the hospital from large financial losses due to unusually expensive cases. The outlier payment is meant to approximate the marginal cost of care. 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(iii\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

**HN3** Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) provides that dismissal of a claim is appropriate when it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. At this stage of the proceedings, a court must accept the plaintiff's allegations in the complaint as true, and view those allegations in a favorable light to determine whether the complaint states claims for which relief can be granted. Thus, a court may dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

**HN4** Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss, plaintiffs must do more than merely state legal conclusions; they are required to allege some specific factual bases for those conclusions or face dismissal of their claims. Indeed, conclusory allegations, unwarranted factual deductions or legal conclusions masquerading as facts will not prevent dismissal for failure to state a claim. Therefore, in considering motions to dismiss, the court is not bound by the legal conclusions in the complaint, and must look instead at the pleaded facts to determine whether the plaintiffs' claims can proceed through discovery.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Public Health & Welfare Law > Social Security > Medicare > Medicare Act Interpretation

**HN5** Supremacy Clause, Federal Preemption

Medicare is a vast and complicated federal program. In Medicare, Congress has enacted a comprehensive statutory regime and conferred on the Health and Human Services Secretary exceptionally broad authority to prescribe standards for carrying out certain sections of the Social Security Act. Regulatory schemes can displace state law causes of action just as completely as statutes can. However, the federal Medicare statute can be found to preempt state law causes of action if and only if Congress intended it to do so.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

**HN6** Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

The test for standing under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., is whether the alleged injury was directly caused by the RICO violation. Further, a RICO plaintiff must demonstrate that its damages flow from the commission of the predicate acts. A plaintiff who complains of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts is generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN7 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., if the existence of a public authority that could prosecute a claim against putative RICO defendants meant that the plaintiff is too remote, then no private cause of action could ever be maintained, for every RICO predicate offense, as well as the RICO enterprise itself, is separately prosecutable by the government.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

HN8 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Pursuant to 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., it is illegal for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\). Thus, in order to establish a federal civil RICO violation under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), the plaintiffs must satisfy four elements of proof: (1) conduct; (2) of an enterprise; (3) through a pattern; (4) of racketeering activity. In civil cases, however, RICO plaintiffs must also satisfy the requirements of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), which states that any person injured in his business or property by reason of RICO's substantive provisions has the right to recover threefold the damages he sustains. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\). Thus, under § 1964\(c\), RICO claimants must show (1) the requisite injury to business or property; and (2) that such injury was by reason of the substantive RICO violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN9 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

For purposes of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., a "pattern of racketeering activity" requires at least two acts of racketeering activity. An act of racketeering is commonly referred to as a predicate act. A pattern of racketeering activity is shown when a racketeer commits at least two distinct but related predicate acts. If distinct statutory violations are found, the predicate acts will be considered to be distinct irrespective of the circumstances under which they arose.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Elements

HN10 [down] Conversion, Elements

To state a claim under § 2314 of the National Stolen Property Act, a plaintiff must allege (1) that the defendant transported, transmitted or transferred or caused to be transported, transmitted or transferred in interstate commerce, monies that were stolen or converted; (2) that such monies had a value of $ 5,000 or more; and (3) that the defendant transported the monies willfully and with knowledge that the monies had been stolen or converted. 18 U.S.C.S. § 2314.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Elements

HN11 Conversion, Elements

To allege an 18 U.S.C.S. § 2315 violation of the National Stolen Property Act, a plaintiff must show that: (1) the defendant received, possessed, concealed, stored or disposed of stolen money; (2) that such monies had a value in excess of $ 5,000; (3) that such monies had crossed a state or United States boundary after having been stolen or unlawfully converted; and (4) that the defendant knew that the property had been stolen or unlawfully converted. 18 U.S.C.S. § 2315. The word "stolen" includes any wrongful and dishonest taking. Likewise, the word "converted" means the unauthorized exercise of control over the property of another inconsistent with the owner's rights.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Elements

HN12 Conversion, Elements

Although there must be a taking against the will of the owner for a claim under the National Stolen Property Act, or a trespass to his possession, the requirement is satisfied where the owner is induced by some fraud or trickery to deliver the property to one who feloniously converts it to his own use. In such circumstances there is an absence of real consent and the taking of possession is wrongful.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > Elements

HN13 Conversion, Elements

The legal standard for claims under the National Stolen Property Act requires that a plaintiff allege that the monies that a defendant took did not rightfully belong to the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN14 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Essential to any successful claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., are the basic requirements of establishing a RICO enterprise. Whatever the pleading requirements for other causes of action, plaintiffs in RICO claims must plead specific facts, not mere conclusory allegations, which establish the enterprise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN15 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

420 F. Supp. 2d 1288, *1288L<sup>A</sup>2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41107, **41107

Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., a RICO enterprise exists where a group of persons associates, formally or informally, with the purpose of conducting illegal activity. To allege an enterprise under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), a plaintiff must name a RICO person distinct from the RICO enterprise. The plain language of § 1962\(c\) envisions two separate entities. Thus, RICO forbids the imposition of liability where the enterprise is nothing more than a subdivision or part of the person. Where the plaintiffs allege that the enterprise is an association-in-fact, the crucial factor is whether each entity alleged to be part of the association-in-fact is free to act independently and advance its own interests contrary to those' of the other entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN16 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

Under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., both the United States Supreme Court and the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit have held that the existence of a legal distinction between the RICO defendant and the RICO enterprise is sufficient to establish an enterprise under RICO. Therefore, under established and binding precedent, corporations and their agents are distinct entities for RICO purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

HN17 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

The "by reason of" requirement contained in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., implicates two concepts: (1) a sufficiently direct injury so that the plaintiffs have standing to sue; and (2) proximate cause, whereby the allegedly wrongful conduct is shown to be a substantial cause of the alleged injury and the causal connection is foreseeable and not speculative.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Torts > ... > Causation > Proximate Cause > General Overview

HN18 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

It is well-established that plaintiffs under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., must prove proximate causation in order to recover. A proximate cause is not, however, the same thing as sole cause. Instead, a factor is a proximate cause if it is a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Elements

HN19 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

To establish a conspiracy violation under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., specifically 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(d\), a plaintiff must allege that the defendant objectively manifested, through words or actions, an agreement to participate in the conduct of the affairs of the enterprise through the commission of two or more predicate crimes. The focus is on the agreement to participate in the enterprise through the pattern of racketeering activity, not on the individual predicate acts. Although the defendant must have agreed to participate in the affairs of the enterprise, the plaintiff may prove agreement: (1) by showing an agreement on an overall objective, or (2) by showing that the defendant agreed personally to commit two predicate acts and therefore to participate in a single objective conspiracy. Further, to be guilty of conspiracy parties must have agreed to commit an act that is itself illegal -- parties cannot be found guilty of conspiring to commit an act that is not itself against the law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Elements

**HN20** [] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has recognized that, particularly at the pleading stage, a conspiracy under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., need not be supported by direct evidence, but rather, may be inferred from the parties' conduct.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

**HN21** [] Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

Under Florida law, to state a claim for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must allege that: (1) the plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant, who had knowledge of the benefit; (2) the defendant voluntarily accepted and retained the benefit; and (3) under the circumstances, it would be inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without paying for it.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

**HN22** [] Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

Liability in unjust enrichment has in principle nothing to do with fault. It has to do with wealth being in one person's hands when it should be in another person's. Thus, the paradigm examples of unjust enrichment are mistaken transfers. However, as soon as a claimant relies on a wrong to supply the unjust factor, the right on which the plaintiff relies arises from that wrong, not from unjust enrichment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

**HN23** [] State Regulation, Claims

To state a cause of action under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act (FDUPTA), Fla. Stat. § 501 et seq., the complaint must not only plead that the conduct complained of was unfair and deceptive, but also that the complaining party was aggrieved by the alleged act. A FDUPTA plaintiff, therefore, need only allege facts sufficient to show that it was actually aggrieved by the unfair and deceptive conduct. A court, in determining whether the alleged conduct violates FDUTPA, shall also take into consideration whether the Federal Trade Commission and other federal courts deem such conduct to be an unfair method of competition or an unconscionable, unfair or deceptive act or practice under federal law. Because the legislature does not define what is an unfair or deceptive act, a practice which offends established public policy or is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers may violate FDUTPA.

420 F. Supp. 2d 1288, *1288L<sup>A</sup>2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41107, **41107

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN24[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

It is well-established that the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act, Fla. Stat. § 501 et seq., does not apply to any acts or practices that are required or specifically permitted by federal or state law. However, an act does not need to violate a specific rule or regulation in order to be considered deceptive. Therefore, the relevant analysis is whether the moving party for dismissal, has demonstrated that a specific federal or state law affirmatively authorized it to engage in the conduct alleged in the complaints, not whether plaintiffs have demonstrated that the defendant's conduct violates a specific rule or regulation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN25[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act, Fla. Stat. § 501 et seq., has been enacted to provide remedies for conduct outside the reach of traditional common law torts such as fraud, and therefore, a plaintiff need not prove the elements of fraud to sustain an action under the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN26[] State Regulation, Claims

Section 17200 of the California Unfair Competition Law provides a remedy for any injuries resulting from unfair competition, defined as any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN27[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

There is no constitutional impediment in permitting non-Californians a right of action under a domestic statute because California has a clear and substantial interest in preventing fraudulent practices in the state, or in extending state-created remedies to out-of-state parties harmed by wrongful conduct occurring in California.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

HN28 [ ] State Regulation, Claims

A California district court has defined "unlawful acts" under the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, as business practices that constitute violations of civil or criminal, federal or regulatory law. Thus, a claimant may "borrow" a violation of another law that is committed in the course of business activity to support a claim under § 17200. An adequately pled Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act violation is sufficient to support a claim under the unlawful prong of California's UCL.

Counsel: [\[\*\*1\]](#) For STATE OF FLORIDA, Office of the Attorney General, Department of Legal Affairs, BERT FISN MEDICAL CENTER, INC., CAPE MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, INC., HALIFAX HOSPITAL MEDICAL CENTER, HENDRY COUNTY HOSPITAL AUTHORITY, HOLMES COUNTY HOSPITAL CORPORATION, JACKSON COUNTY HOSPITAL DISTRICT, LEE MEMORIAL HEALTH SYSTEM, NORTH BREVARD COUNTY HOSPITAL DISTRICT, PUBLIC HEALTH TRUST OF DADE COUNTY, SARASOTA COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT, SOUTH BROWARD HOSPITAL DISTRICT, WEST ORANGE HEALTHCARE DISTRICT, plaintiffs: David A. Coulson, Greenberg Traurig, Miami, FL; Paul Courtney Huck, Jr., Office of the Attorney General, Fort Lauderdale, FL; Christopher M. Kise, Russell Scott Kent, Lori S. Rowe, Office of Attorney General, Tallahassee, FL.

For BOCA RATON COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, INC., consolidated plaintiff: David A. Coulson, Greenberg Traurig, Miami, FL.

For TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION, defendant: Sanford Lewis Bohrer, Scott Daniel Ponce, Brett Alan Barfield, Holland & Knight, Miami, FL; Jay P. Lefkowitz, Karen Natalie Walker, John C. O'Quinn, Nicole B. Pitman, Susan E. Engel, Jennifer G. Levy, Patrick M. Bryan, Bridget K. O'Connor, Kirkland & Ellis, Washington, DC.

For UNITED STATES, amicus: [\[\*\*2\]](#) Daniel Spiro, United States Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

For STATE OF FLORIDA, Office of the Attorney General, Department of Legal Affairs, plaintiff: David A. Coulson, Greenberg Traurig, Miami, FL; Paul Courtney Huck, Jr., Office of the Attorney General, Fort Lauderdale, FL; Christopher M. Kise, Russell Scott Kent, Lori S. Rowe, Office of Attorney General, Tallahassee, FL.

For BOCA RATON COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, INC., a Florida not-for-profit corporation dba Boca Raton Community Hospital, Inc., plaintiff: Hilarie Bass, David A. Coulson, Greenberg Traurig, Miami, FL; Melvyn I. Weiss, Milberg Weiss Bershad & Schulman, New York, NY; Robert P. Charrow, Greenberg Traurig, Washington, DC; Maya Susan Saxena, Milberg Weiss Bershad & Schulman, Boca Raton, FL; Arthur R. Miller, Harvard University, Cambridge, MA; Richard A Edlin, Hal M Hirsch, Ann C Turetsky, Greenberg Traurig, New York, NY; David A.P. Brower, Milberg Weiss Bershad & Schulman, New York, NY; David K. Isom, Greenberg Traurig, Denver, CO.

For OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, DEPARTMENT OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, consolidated plaintiff: Russell Scott Kent, Office of Attorney General Medicaid Fraud Control Unit, Tallahassee, [\[\*\*3\]](#) FL.

For TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION, a Nevada corporation, defendant: Michael Nachwalter, Amanda Marie McGovern, Lauren Carol Ravkind, Kenny Nachwalter Seymour Arnold Critchlow & Spector, Miami, FL; Peter Prieto, Sanford Lewis Bohrer, Scott Daniel Ponce, Brett Alan Barfield, Holland & Knight, Miami, FL; Jay P. Lefkowitz, Karen Natalie Walker, John C. O'Quinn, Nicole B. Pitman, Susan E. Engel, Jennifer G. Levy, Patrick M. Bryan, Bridget K. O'Connor, Kirkland & Ellis, Washington, DC.

For UNITED STATES, amicus: Daniel Spiro, United States Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

Judges: PATRICIA A. SEITZ, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: PATRICIA A. SEITZ

Opinion

---

[*1292] ORDER ON DEFENDANT TENET HEALTHCARE CORPORATION'S MOTIONS TO DISMISS

THIS MATTER is before the Court upon Defendant Tenet Healthcare Corporation's Motions to Dismiss filed in Case No. 05-20591-CIV-SEITZ [DE-29] and Case No. 05-80183-CIV-SEITZ [DE-30]. The Plaintiffs in these two cases-- Boca Raton Community Hospital ("Boca"), thirteen public hospitals in Florida ("the Hospital Plaintiffs"), <sup>1</sup> and the Florida Attorney General ("Florida AG") -- allege that Tenet purposefully inflated the amount that it charged [***4] for hospital services in order to increase Medicare reimbursements that its hospitals received. Specifically, the Plaintiffs <sup>2</sup> contend that Tenet engaged in "turbocharging" to obtain excessive outlier payments on cases that qualified for additional reimbursements under the Medicare program pursuant to a complex formula prescribed by the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS").

[**5] Defendant Tenet moves to dismiss the Complaints on the grounds that: (1) Medicare [*1293] preempts the Plaintiffs' state law claims and supercedes their federal RICO claims; (2) Plaintiffs failed to exhaust Medicare's administrative remedies; (3) Plaintiffs lack standing to assert their RICO claims because Tenet's alleged conduct did not proximately cause Plaintiffs' alleged injuries; (4) Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts which, if proven, would constitute a predicate act under RICO; (5) Plaintiffs have failed to adequately allege an enterprise or a conspiracy under RICO; (6) the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA") claim must fail because Tenet's alleged conduct was authorized by then-applicable Medicare regulations and the Florida AG has failed to plead this claim with particularity; (7) substantive limits on the scope of state regulatory jurisdiction bar Boca's claim under California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"); and (8) the unjust enrichment count fails to state a claim because the Plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that anything was taken from them.

The Court has considered the Motions, the responses and replies thereto, the amicus brief of the United [***6] States of America, the applicable case law, and the oral argument of counsel at the June 20, 2005, hearing. Having considered the allegations of the Complaints -- viewed in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs -- as well as the Medicare regulatory structure, the Court concludes that: (1) Plaintiffs' claims are not preempted under, or superseded by, Medicare; (2) Plaintiffs are not required to pursue the administrative remedies under the Medicare Act; (3) Plaintiffs properly allege RICO standing; (4) Plaintiffs have adequately alleged predicate acts, a RICO enterprise, and proximate cause; (5) Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts supporting a RICO conspiracy; (6) the FDUTPA and UCL claims are properly pled and are not subject to dismissal at this stage; and (7) the unjust enrichment claim must be dismissed with prejudice. Accordingly, Tenet's Motions to Dismiss are granted in part, denied in part.

1. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

This action involves the operation of the Medicare outlier trust fund or pool for inpatient hospital services. HN1↑ Medicare, established in Title XVIII of the Social Security Act ("SSA"), 42 U.S.C. § 1395, et seq., is the [***7] federal program that provides health care insurance to the nation's aged and disabled. Compl. of Boca Raton Community Hosp. ("Boca Compl.") P 22; Am. Compl. of State of Fla., Office of Att'y Gen., et al. ("Pub. Hosp. Compl.") P I. Medicare is administered by the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services ("CMS"), a non-independent agency within HHS, and has over 40 million beneficiaries. Id.

---

<sup>1</sup> The thirteen Hospital Plaintiffs in Case No. 05-20591 are: Bert Fish Medical Center, Inc.; Cape Memorial Hospital, Inc.; Halifax Hospital Medical Center; Hendry County Hospital Authority; Holmes County Hospital Corporation; Jackson County Hospital District; Lee Memorial Health System; North Brevard County Hospital District; North Broward Hospital District; Public Health Trust of Miami-Dade County, Florida, Sarasota County Public Hospital District; South Broward Hospital District; and West Orange Healthcare District.

<sup>2</sup> The term "Plaintiffs" will be used throughout this Order to refer to all three Plaintiff groups -- Boca, the Hospital Plaintiffs, and the Florida AG -- collectively.

Because this case addresses the operation of the Medicare outlier trust fund for inpatient hospital services, it is necessary to situate the allegations in the Complaints within the pertinent regulatory and statutory framework governing Medicare reimbursements.

A. Medicare Regulatory Background and the Outlier Pool Medicare and its implementing regulations establish an Inpatient Prospective Payment System ("IPPS") under which hospitals are reimbursed for inpatient services provided to Medicare beneficiaries at prospectively fixed rates. Boca Compl. PP 36-37; Pub. Hosp. Compl. PP 26-27. Under IPPS, each patient's condition is classified into one of over 520 Diagnosis-Related Groups ("DRG"), to which CMS has assigned a numeric weight reflecting the amount of resources needed, on average, [**8] to treat a patient with the corresponding diagnosis. Id. Greatly simplified, a hospital's payment for treating a specific [*1294] patient is determined by multiplying the numeric weight for that DRG by a standardized amount. Id. The standardized amount is based on the average resources used to treat cases in all DRGs, and is adjusted to take into account regional wage rates as well as other factors. Id. Hospitals submit their claims for reimbursement to "fiscal intermediaries," usually private insurance companies, to which the Secretary of HHS delegates the day-to-day administration of the Medicare program. See 42 U.S.C. § 1395h.

1. The Outlier System

Although IPPS assumes that fixed payments based on cases of average complexity will provide adequate compensation to efficiently run hospitals, Congress recognized that an extremely costly case could undermine any averaging. Boca Compl. P 43; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 28. Therefore, in addition to fixed IPPS rates, the Medicare statute also requires that hospitals be reimbursed for atypical medical cases known as "outliers." Id. Outlier payments are designed to supplement standard IPPS payments "for [**9] extraordinarily high-cost cases."<sup>3</sup> Id.; see 42 C.F.R. § 412.84. Under IPPS, a hospital may receive outlier payments when the cost it incurs to treat a patient exceeds the normal IPPS payment by a fixed deductible, the exact magnitude of which is established by a computer program on an annual basis (i.e., the "Outlier Threshold"). Boca Compl. P 44; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 29. The higher the Outlier Threshold, the fewer the number of cases that qualify as outliers and, for those that qualify, the lower the outlier payments. Boca Compl. P 44; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 30.

[**10] The statute empowers the Secretary to promulgate regulations establishing when outlier payments are appropriate. See 42 U.S.C. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(iii\) ("The amount of such additional payment under clauses (i) and (ii) shall be determined by the Secretary and shall . . . approximate the marginal cost of care beyond the cutoff point applicable under clause (i) or (ii)."). The statute also authorizes hospitals to submit claims for outlier payments that satisfy the criteria set forth in the Secretary's outlier regulations. See 42 U.S.C. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(ii\). Exercising this statutory authority, the Secretary decided to tie the outlier payment system to hospital charges -- not actual costs. Under the Secretary's formula, although a case qualifies as an outlier if its costs exceed a certain threshold, i.e., "a fixed dollar amount determined by the Secretary," for all cases before October 1, 2003, the hospital's costs were determined based on the hospital's billed charges, adjusted by the hospital's cost-to-charge ratio ("CCR"). 42 U.S.C. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(II\); 42 C.F.R. § 412.84\(h\) [**11].

Congress constrained the Secretary's discretion in reimbursing outlier cases by setting a five to six percent target for the total amount of outlier payments made each fiscal year in the aggregate to all hospitals, as compared to total aggregate IPPS reimbursements to all hospitals. 42 U.S.C. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(iv\). For the years at issue in this case, from 1999-2003, the Secretary established a target of 5.1 %. See 68 Fed. Reg. at 34501. In 2003, the Secretary amended the rules regarding outlier reimbursements, and determined [*1295] that outlier payments are subject to reconciliation on a case-by-case basis when the cost report relevant to each case is settled. See 42 C.F.R. § 412.84\(i\)\(3\); 68 Fed. Reg. at 34501. The amended rule thus implements a formula designed to "ensure that when final outlier payments are made, they . . . reflect an accurate assessment of the actual costs the hospital incurred." Id. The amended rule did not, however, "make retroactive adjustments to outlier payments to ensure total payments [to all hospitals] are 5.1 percent of [all inpatient spending]," 68 Fed. Reg. at 34502, \*\*12 nor did it restrict a hospital's right to set its own charges or to submit outlier claims for cases that purportedly meet the prescribed criteria.

<sup>3</sup> Specifically, HN2 [↑] the outlier provision permits hospitals to "request additional payments in any case where charges, adjusted to cost," exceed an amount that the Secretary of HHS specifies. Id.; 42 U.S.C. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(ii\). According to CMS, "this additional payment is designed to protect the hospital from large financial losses due to unusually expensive cases." Id., 68 Fed. Reg. 10420, 10421 \(Mar. 5, 2004\). The outlier payment is meant to "approximate the marginal cost of care." Id.; 42 U.S.C. § 1395ww\(d\)\(5\)\(A\)\(iii\).

2. The Cost-to-Charge Ratio

Each hospital, including the Tenet hospitals, uses what is called a "charge master" that lists charges for each item or service that the hospital provides. Boca Compl. P 45; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 31. While the outlier system is based on the costs that a hospital incurs to treat a specific Medicare patient, the charges (as reflected on the "charge master") act as a surrogate for a hospital's costs if there is a rational relationship between the hospital's charges and its underlying costs. Boca Compl. P 47; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 32. To that end, each hospital has a CCR, which is an average that can be used to transform a charge into a cost.<sup>4</sup> \*\*13 Id. Outlier payments equal 80% of the difference between the hospital's costs for treating a patient (calculated by adjusting its charges by its CCR), less the sum of the IPPS payment and the Outlier Threshold.<sup>5</sup> Boca Compl. P 48; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 33.

The outlier system assumes, and CMS issuances require, that a hospital's charges be reasonably and consistently related to its costs of providing the services. Id. (citing Prov. Reimb. Man., Part 1, §§ 2202-2203; 42 C.F.R. § 413.53\(b\)\(2\)\(ii\)). As CMS indicated in September 1988, "the use of hospital-specific cost-to-charge ratios is essential to ensure that outlier payments are made only for cases that have extraordinarily high costs, and not merely high charges." Boca Compl. P 49; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 34; 68 Fed. Reg. at 10423 (Mar. 5, 2003) (citing 53 Fed. Reg. 38476, 38503 (Sept. 30, 1988)).

B. Tenet's Alleged "Turbocharging"

Tenet is the nation's second-largest for-profit hospital chain. Boca Compl. P 5; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 24. At all relevant times, Tenet owned or operated approximately 100 hospitals in 13 states, including 15 in Florida. Id. \*\*14 Beginning in 1999 and continuing into 2003, Plaintiffs allege, Tenet engaged in a scheme to improperly maximize its outlier payments by artificially inflating its charges. Boca Compl. PP 50, 75; Pub. Hosp. Compl. PP 35, 52. By so doing, the Tenet Hospitals transformed ordinary or average-cost IPPS patients into outlier patients, even though the costs that the hospital actually incurred in treating the patients fell within the norm and would not qualify for outlier funds. Boca Compl. P 51; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 36. By dramatically increasing their billed charges, the Tenet Hospitals represented to CMS that their costs had similarly increased. Id. Thus, when the Tenet Hospitals artificially inflated their charges, their "costs" -- computed by using CCRs that predated the charge increases -- [\[\*1296\]](#) rose dramatically despite the fact that their real costs remained the same or even declined. Boca Compl. P 52; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 37.

While the audited CCR should have eventually caught up with the hospitals, that was not the case. Instead, many of the Tenet Hospitals dramatically increased their charges over time to the extent that their CCRs fell precipitously below the range that was considered \*\*15 reasonable under Medicare regulations (i.e. three standard deviations from the mean of the log distribution of CCRs for all hospitals) by the next settled cost report. Boca Compl. P 54; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 39. The fiscal intermediary then assigned a Statewide Average ("SWA") CCR to these hospitals instead of the hospital-specific CCR figure. Id. The SWA was considerably higher than the hospital's actual CCR.<sup>6</sup> Boca Compl. P 54; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 40. Therefore, when the fiscal intermediary applied the higher SWA to compute an individual hospital's outlier payment, it generated excessive outlier payments to Tenet. Boca Compl. P 54; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 40.

<sup>4</sup> For example, if a hospital's CCR is 0.5 and its charges for a patient total $ 10,000, then its costs to treat that patient would be roughly $ 5,000. Id.

<sup>5</sup> The calculation is represented by the following equation: Outlier payment = 80% x [(charges x CCR) -- IPPS Payment -- Outlier Threshold]. Boca Compl. P 33; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 48.

On average, between June 1, 2000, and December 31, 2002, Tenet received outlier payments of over $ 35 million [**16] per month, for a total of $ 1.1 billion in a period of only 31 months. Id. In contrast, if Tenet's outlier payments had been 5.1% of its IPPS payments, Tenet would have received roughly $ 6 million per month during the same time period. Id. Thus, Plaintiffs allege, Tenet's inflation of its charges resulted in Tenet receiving an additional $ 29 million per month of outlier payments. More than a third of Tenet's hospitals had dramatic increases in their outlier payments since 2000, with three in particular -- Doctors Medical Center (in California), Garfield Medical Center (in California), and Brownsville Medical Center (in Texas) -- holding positions in the top 10 of the 200 hospitals nationwide with the greatest increases in outlier payments since 2000. Boca Compl. P 76; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 56.

C. The Complaints

The Plaintiffs commenced their respective actions on March 2, 2005. In their First Amended Complaint, filed in Case No. 05-20591-CIV-SEITZ, the Florida AG and the Hospital Plaintiffs assert claims for RICO violations through transporting and receiving stolen or converted money, 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) (Count I); conspiracy to violate 18 U.S.C. § 1962 [**17] \(c\) through transporting and receiving stolen or converted money, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\) (Count II); violation of Florida's civil RICO statute, Fla. Stat. §§ 772.103\(3\) and 772.104 (Count III); conspiracy to violate Fla. Stat. § 772.103\(4\) (Count IV); violation of the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act (Count V); and unjust enrichment (Count VI). Boca's Complaint in Case No. 05-80183-CIV-SEITZ alleges claims of RICO violations under 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) (Count I); conspiracy to violate 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\) (Count II); violation of California's Unfair Competition Law (Count V); and unjust enrichment (Count VII).<sup>7</sup>

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN3[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) provides that dismissal [**18] of a claim is appropriate [*1297] when "it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Blackston v. Alabama, 30 F.3d 117, 120 (11th Cir. 1994). At this stage of the proceedings, the Court must accept the Plaintiff's allegations in the Complaints as true, and view those allegations in a favorable light to determine whether the Complaints state claims for which relief can be granted. S & Davis Int'l, Inc. v. Republic of Yemen, 218 F.3d 1292, 1298 (11th Cir. 2000). Thus, a court may dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. See Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1984).

However, HN4[] "to survive a motion to dismiss, plaintiffs must do more than merely state legal conclusions; they are required to allege some specific factual bases for those conclusions or face dismissal of their claims." Jackson v. BellSouth Telecomm., 372 F.3d 1250, 1263 (11th Cir. 2004). Indeed, "conclusory allegations, unwarranted factual deductions [**19] or legal conclusions masquerading as facts will not prevent dismissal [for failure to state a claim]." Davila v. Delta Air Lines, 326 F.3d 1183, 1185 (11th Cir. 2003). Therefore, in considering Tenet's Motions to Dismiss, the Court is "not bound by the legal conclusions in the complaint," and must look instead at the pleaded facts to determine whether the Plaintiffs' claims can proceed through discovery. Day v. Taylor, 400 F.3d 1272, 1275 (11th Cir. 2005).

---

<sup>6</sup> CMS assigns the SWA to a hospital when its CCR falls below the national threshold because CMS presumes that a CCR below this level is unreasonable and probably due to a faulty data reporting or entry. Boca Compl. P 55; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 39.

<sup>7</sup> Boca voluntarily dismissed its fraud-based causes of action, set forth in Counts III, IV, and VI of its Complaint.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Federal Preemption Does Not Bar These Actions

In its Motions to Dismiss, Tenet first argues that the Plaintiffs' Complaints must be dismissed in their entirety because the state law claims are preempted, and the federal RICO claims superceded, by the comprehensive regulatory scheme that Congress adopted through the Medicare program. More specifically, Tenet contends that Plaintiffs may not bring state law claims for what amounts to alleged overpayments to Tenet because the Medicare scheme sets forth both (1) the substantive rules for determining the amount of Medicare reimbursement due to Tenet; and (2) the administrative process by which that amount is finally [**20] determined. See Def.'s Mem. at 11. Likewise, Tenet argues that the federal RICO claims are superceded by the "comprehensive and reticulated" Medicare scheme. Id. at 11-12.

HN5 [↑] "Medicare is a vast and complicated federal program." Stephenson v. Shalala, 87 F.3d 350, 351 (9th Cir. 1996). In Medicare, Congress has enacted a comprehensive statutory regime and "conferred on the [HHS] Secretary exceptionally broad authority to prescribe standards for carrying out certain sections of the Act." Id. at 356 (quoting Schweiker v. Gray Panthers, 453 U.S. 34, 43, 101 S. Ct. 2633, 69 L. Ed. 2d 460 (1981)). Regulatory schemes can displace state law causes of action just as completely as statutes can. See Fidelity Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. de la Cuesta, 458 U.S. 141, 153, 102 S. Ct. 3014, 73 L. Ed. 2d 664 (1982) ("Federal regulations have no less preemptive effect than federal statutes."); see also Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 295, 99 S. Ct. 1705, 60 L. Ed. 2d 208 (1979). However, the federal Medicare statute can be found to preempt state law causes of action "if and only if Congress intended it to do so." Mass. Med. Soc'y v. Dukakis, 815 F.2d 790, 791 (1st Cir. 1987).

Although Tenet [**21] cites nearly two dozen federal preemption cases to the Court, not one of them involves the Medicare Act. In contrast, the four federal [*1298] courts of appeals that have addressed the question in the context of the Medicare Act have rejected Tenet's argument, noting, inter alia, that Medicare is not a field preempting statute. Downhour v. Soman, 85 F.3d 261, 266 (6th Cir. 1996); Med. Soc'y of N. Y. v. Cuomo, 976 F.2d 812, 820 (2d Cir. 1992); Pa. Med. Soc'y v. Marconis, 942 F.2d 842, 847 (3d Cir. 1991); Mass. Med. Soc'y, 815 F.2d at 791.

Only last year, another district court rejected this argument when Tenet itself made it. See United States v. Tenet Healthcare Corp., 343 F. Supp. 2d 922 (C.D. Cal. 2004). In that case, the federal government filed suit against Tenet under various common law theories, including unjust enrichment. The government alleged that 26 Tenet hospitals had submitted more than 2,400 Medicare claims that were upcoded and that, as a result, CMS paid Tenet more than it was entitled to receive. In denying Tenet's motion to dismiss based on preemption, the Court held that:

Here, [**22] although the government's claim implicates reimbursement determinations, it is not the type of claim that falls within the scope of § 405(h) [of the Medicare Act]. Since the Court is not faced with a claim for reimbursement from a dissatisfied provider that should be channeled through the administrative process, this case does not "arise under" the Medicare Act. Rather, because the government's action is predicated on the submission of inaccurate and misleading claims, the common law, not the Medicare Act, provides both standing and the substantive basis for the claim.

Tenet, 343 F. Supp. 2d at 928. Upon review of the case law, there is no indication that Congress intended to preempt state law causes of action through the implementation of the Medicare Act. Further, while the Plaintiffs' claims may address reimbursement determinations, at least peripherally, they are not claims that arise under the Medicare Act. Accordingly, Tenet's motions to dismiss on this basis are denied.

B. Exhaustion of Medicare Remedies

As a parallel argument to their preemption claim, Tenet argues that the Complaints must be dismissed because Plaintiffs failed to allege [**23] that they invoked the Medicare regulatory process that Congress established. Tenet correctly argues that the Medicare statute specifically provides a mechanism for the Plaintiffs to seek review of reimbursement determinations, first through an administrative process and ultimately in the courts. See 42 U.S.C. § 1395oo; Regions Hosp. v. Shalala, 522 U.S. 448, 452-53, 118 S. Ct. 909, 139 L. Ed. 2d 895 \(1998\). However, while Tenet contends that the Plaintiffs' claims set forth in the Complaints are "nothing more than a dressed up complaint about the reimbursements Plaintiffs received from CMS," the characterization of these RICO-based actions as ones for such types of reimbursements is inappropriate. Further, the Eleventh Circuit has clarified that actions against a party other than the HHS Secretary or the federal government are not subject to the exhaustion requirements of the SSA. See United States ex rel. Body v. Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Ala., 156 F.3d 1098, 1104 \(11th Cir. 1998\) ("actions such as Body's, which do not seek payment from the government and could not be brought under [42 U.S.C.] section 405, are therefore not barred by subsection 405(h). [**24] "). Because the Plaintiffs do not seek payment from the Government, but instead seek recovery from Tenet for damages resulting from the alleged "turbocharging" scheme, Tenet's argument with respect to exhaustion of administrative remedies is not persuasive.

[*1299] C. Plaintiffs Have Properly Alleged RICO Standing

Tenet also asserts that the Plaintiffs lack standing to make their RICO and Florida RICO claims<sup>8</sup> because Tenet's alleged conduct did not proximately cause Plaintiffs' alleged injury. According to Tenet, the Plaintiffs' alleged harm is far too remote from Tenet's conduct because the independent actions of CMS, its fiscal intermediaries, and other hospitals stand in the middle of the causal chain. See Def.'s Mem. at 16-17. Specifically, Tenet asserts that Plaintiffs' causation theory fails because: (1) Tenet hospitals make up only a fraction of the hospitals with low CCRs receiving payments for outliers, and thus, the practices of hospitals other than Tenet's led the Secretary to raise the Outlier Threshold; (2) it is CMS, and not Tenet, that assigns the SWA to a hospital when its CCR falls below the national threshold; and (3) the Secretary, in exercising his sole discretion, [**25] elected to raise the Outlier Threshold instead of raising the outlier percentage target. Id. at 18. Tenet therefore contends that, even assuming arguendo that its alleged actions were wrongful, it did not, as a matter of law, cause the Plaintiffs any direct injury.<sup>9</sup> Id. at 19.

[**26] In response, the Plaintiffs maintain that their Complaints properly allege "some direct relation between the injury asserted and the injurious conduct alleged," as required under Holmes v. Sec. Investor Prof. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 267, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 \(1992\). Plaintiffs rely significantly on excerpts from the March 11, 2003, testimony of CMS Administrator Thomas A. Scully, before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. In relevant part, Administrator Scully testified that:

As a direct result [of the excessive outlier payments,] more hospitals have been forced to absorb the costs of the complex cases they treat, while a relatively small number of hospitals that have been aggressively gaming <sup>8</sup>The Florida RICO law was patterned after its federal counterpart. See Jackson, 372 F.3d at 1263-64 (quoting Jones v. Childers, 18 F.3d 899, 901 \(11th Cir. 1994\) (noting that "interpretation of Florida's RICO law is informed by case law interpreting the federal RICO statute . . . on which Chapter 772 is patterned.")). The Court therefore applies the same analysis to Plaintiff's federal and state RICO claims. Id.; see also All Care Nursing Serv., Inc. v. High Tech Staffing Servs., Inc., 135 F.3d 740, 745 \(11th Cir. 1998\) ("Florida's RICO statutes have consistently been interpreted using federal RICO claim cases.").

<sup>9</sup>Tenet bases its standing argument on the following characterization of Plaintiffs' alleged causal chain:

Increasing gross charges gave some Tenet hospitals low CCRs; CMS's fiscal intermediary assigned all hospitals with low CCRs (including some Tenet hospitals) the SWA; using the SWA gave some hospitals (including some Tenet hospitals) higher outlier payments from CMS; higher outlier payments by CMS to these hospitals (only some of which were Tenet hospitals) increased the volume of outlier payments made nationwide; CMS increased the outlier threshold in order to decrease outlier payments nationwide; and this increase by CMS in the outlier threshold potentially deprived plaintiffs of a fraction of outlier payments they might have qualified for had CMS not raised the outlier threshold.

the current rules benefit by getting a hugely disproportionate share of outlier payments. As you can see, the behavior of a few hundred hospitals -- those that took advantage of the outlier program -- [is] the main cause of the sharp increases in the loss threshold.

Boca Compl. at P 73, Ex. C; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at P 51. Further, Plaintiffs respond to Tenet's reliance on the independent actions of CMS, its fiscal intermediaries, [\[\*\*27\]](#) [\[\*1300\]](#) and other hospitals by arguing that: (1) the causal connection is far simpler and less tenuous than Tenet alleges; (2) the mere presence of third parties, such as CMS or other hospitals, does not preclude the Plaintiffs' RICO claims; (3) Tenet cannot evade liability merely because some other hospitals may have engaged in the same form of misconduct; and (4) even if other intermediaries contributed to the alleged injury, expert witnesses will be able to ascertain with reasonable certainty Tenet's direct contribution to the damage, as well as guide the Court in apportioning recoveries to the Hospital Plaintiffs. See Pls.' Mem. at 22-26.

1. Test for RICO Standing

HN6  "The test for RICO standing is whether the alleged injury was directly caused by the RICO violation. . . ." Bivens Gardens Office Bldg., Inc. v. Barnett Banks of Fla., Inc., 140 F.3d 898, 908 (11th Cir. 1998) (citing Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268); see also Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S. Ct. 3275, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346 (1985) (holding that "a plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting [\[\*\*28\]](#) the violation" of RICO). Further, a RICO plaintiff must demonstrate that its damages "flow from the commission of the predicate acts." Williams v. Mohawk Indus., Inc., 411 F.3d 1252, 1263 (11th Cir. 2005) (citing Sedima, 473 U.S. at 497); see also Pelletier v. Zweifel, 921 F.2d 1465, 1497 (11th Cir. 1991). "[A] plaintiff who complains of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts [is] generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover." Green Leaf Nursery v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours, 341 F.3d 1292, 1307 (11th Cir. 2003) (citing Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268-69). Therefore, the question before the Court is whether the Plaintiffs' alleged injury to their business or property is sufficiently direct to bestow standing to sue for Tenet's alleged RICO violations.

2. Analysis

According to the Plaintiffs, the injury that they suffered is a direct, proximate, and foreseeable result of the conduct of Tenet and its hospital co-conspirators. Plaintiffs specifically allege that when Tenet, through its alleged RICO enterprise, committed predicate acts [\[\*\*29\]](#) of theft and conversion to take hundreds of millions of dollars more a year from the outlier pool than it was entitled to receive, CMS's computer program automatically increased the Outlier Threshold (i.e. the deductible applied to the Plaintiffs) in the subsequent year to take into account the large payout to Tenet the previous year. Pls.' Mem. at 23; see Boca Compl. at P 65; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at P 44. As a result of the increasing Outlier Threshold, the other hospitals members of the outlier pool (including the Hospital Plaintiffs) received less than that to which they otherwise would have been entitled. Tenet, in the subsequent year, again raised its charges to keep pace with the increase in the Outlier Threshold. These actions, Plaintiffs contend, drove the Outlier Threshold even higher in the next year, and further reduced the amount of outlier payments to the other participating hospitals. Id. It is this continuing cycle that the Plaintiffs allege caused them direct injury, as Tenet's alleged intentional inflation of its outlier claims directly reduced the outlier payments to the other participating hospitals.

Upon review of the Plaintiffs' allegations, the Court [\[\*\*30\]](#) finds that, for purposes of the Motions to Dismiss, the Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts supporting the requisite direct injury. The Hospital Plaintiffs have set forth extensive allegations describing how Tenet's practice of "turbocharging" [\[\*1301\]](#) has injured their business or property by driving up the Outlier Threshold and reducing the reimbursements that they were entitled to receive from the outlier pool. These allegations appear to be supported by the statements of Administrator Scully.

Although Tenet contends that the involvement of third parties -- such as CMS and other hospitals that contribute to the outlier pool -- as potential players in the causal chain that led to the Plaintiffs' injuries precludes a finding of RICO standing, the Court must disagree. First, as to the involvement of CMS, the mere fact that the government may be able to pursue relief against Tenet does not preclude a separate action by the Plaintiffs.<sup>10</sup> See Rodriguez v. McKinney, 878 F. Supp. 744, 749 (E.D. Pa. 1995) ("Nor is the causal nexus destroyed here merely because DOE [the Department of Education] occupied a spatially intermediate position between defendant and plaintiffs in [**31] the flow of the alleged fraud") (citing Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 828 F. Supp. 287, 297 (D.N.J. 1993)). Indeed, HN7 "if the existence of a public authority that could prosecute a claim against putative RICO defendants meant that the plaintiff is too remote under Holmes, then no private cause of action could ever be maintained, for every RICO predicate offense, as well as the RICO enterprise itself, is separately prosecutable by the government." Commer. Cleaning Servs., L.L.C. v. Colin Serv. Sys., Inc., 271 F.3d 374, 385 (2d Cir. 2001).

[**32] Second, Tenet's contention that the Plaintiffs lack standing because the practices of other non-Tenet hospitals also contributed to the Secretary's decision to raise the Outlier Threshold also fails. Tenet essentially asks the Court to relieve it of liability because other hospitals may have engaged in the same form of alleged misconduct. However, even if other wrongdoing contributed to the alleged injury, that may not relieve Tenet of responsibility for its own alleged conduct. As this case proceeds through discovery, and if evidence exists to support a finding that Tenet inflated its outlier charges and caused injury to the Plaintiffs, the parties can seek expert testimony to apportion each player's direct contribution to the damage and to ascertain the amount of the injury that each Hospital Plaintiff suffered.

Finally, the mere fact that the Secretary, in exercising his sole discretion, elected to raise the Outlier Threshold instead of raising the outlier percentage target does not preclude a finding of RICO standing. Tenet argues, in essence, that its conduct was too remote because CMS has the discretion to modify the amount contributed to the outlier pool from 5.1% to 6.0%, [**33] and that had CMS done that, the Hospital Plaintiffs would not have been injured. Tenet's point here is that it was CMS's intervening decisions -- and not Tenet's alleged "turbocharging" -- that led to Plaintiffs' alleged injuries. But as Plaintiffs point out, this argument fails because "what CMS might have done is irrelevant since that is not what the Complaints allege that CMS, in fact, did." Pls.' Mem. at 25. Further, the factual allegations in the Complaints indicate that even had the Secretary raised the contribution to 6.0% in response to Tenet's misconduct, rather than raising the Outlier Threshold, the Hospital Plaintiffs still could have been damaged through their need to make higher contributions via withholdings to subsidize [*1302] Tenet's alleged artificially inflated billings (i.e., the hospitals would have been required to make the additional 0.9% contribution).

While it does appear that, for pleading purposes, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged a direct injury to meet the requirements of RICO standing, the degree to which other intervening acts contributed to the alleged injury must be explored more fully during discovery and may ultimately form the basis for a subsequent [**34] motion for summary judgment. However, given this stage of the litigation, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that Tenet's unlawful conduct had a direct impact on them. Williams, 411 F.3d at 1264. Consequently, Plaintiffs have standing to maintain their RICO claims against Tenet.

D. Plaintiffs Have Stated a Claim Under RICO

HN8 Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\), it is illegal "for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity. . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\). Thus, in order to establish a federal civil RICO violation under § 1962\(c\), the plaintiffs must satisfy four elements of proof: "(1) conduct; (2) of an enterprise; (3) through a pattern; (4) of racketeering activity." Williams, 411 F.3d at 1256 (citing Jones v. Childers, 18 F.3d 899, 910 (11th Cir. 1994)). In civil cases, however, RICO plaintiffs must also satisfy the requirements of 18 U.S.C. § 1964 [**35] (c), which states that "any person injured in his

---

<sup>10</sup> As Plaintiffs' counsel identified at the oral argument, the damages that the Government may choose to seek from Tenet are different than those that Plaintiffs claim in these actions. Indeed, "the government would be seeking to recover its shortfall and [the Plaintiffs] would be seeking to recover damages as a result of the increased threshold; the increased deductible." See Tr. of June 20, 2005, Oral Argument ("Tr."), DE-62 at 26.

business or property by reason of? RICO's substantive provisions has the right to "recover threefold the damages he sustains. . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). Thus, under § 1964\(c\), RICO claimants must show (1) the requisite injury to business or property; and (2) that such injury was "by reason of? the substantive RICO violation. Williams, 411 F.3d at 1256.

Tenet challenges Plaintiffs' RICO claims on three grounds. First, Tenet argues that Plaintiffs have not alleged facts sufficient to support a finding that their conduct constituted a predicate act under RICO. Second, Tenet maintains that Plaintiffs failed to properly plead a RICO enterprise. And third, Tenet contends that the allegations do not demonstrate that its alleged racketeering activity caused the Hospital Plaintiffs' injuries. The Court now addresses each of these issues in turn.

1. Predicate Act

HN9 For purposes of the RICO Act, a "pattern of racketeering activity" requires at least two acts of racketeering activity. Williams, 411 F.3d at 1256-57 (quoting Cox v. Adm'r U.S. Steel & Carnegie, 17 F.3d 1386, 1397 \(11th Cir. 1994\), [\[\*\*36\]](#) modified on other grounds, 30 F.3d 1347 \(11th Cir. 1994\)). An act of racketeering is commonly referred to as a predicate act. A pattern of racketeering activity is shown when a racketeer commits at least two distinct but related predicate acts. Id. (quoting Maiz v. Virani, 253 F.3d 641, 671 \(11th Cir. 2001\) (internal quotation marks, citations, and brackets omitted)). "If distinct statutory violations are found, the predicate acts will be considered to be distinct irrespective of the circumstances under which they arose." Cox, 17 F.3d at 1397 (quotation marks, citations, and emphasis omitted).

Plaintiffs assert that Tenet, by its alleged "turbocharging" practice, stole or converted money from the outlier pool. They maintain, therefore, that their Complaints properly allege a pattern of racketeering activity under sections 2314 and 2315 of the National Stolen Property Act ("NSPA"). Tenet seeks dismissal of the RICO claims on the grounds that the allegations of theft or conversion fail to constitute [\[\*1303\]](#) a predicate act because: (1) Tenet obtained the alleged monies with CMS's consent; and (2) Plaintiffs have no colorable claim of right [\[\*\*37\]](#) to the allegedly "stolen" funds.

HN10 To state a claim under § 2314 of the NSPA, the Hospital Plaintiffs must allege (1) that Tenet transported, transmitted or transferred or caused to be transported, transmitted or transferred in interstate commerce, monies that were stolen or converted; (2) that such monies had a value of $ 5,000 or more; and (3) that Tenet transported the monies willfully and with knowledge that the monies had been stolen or converted. 18 U.S.C. § 2314; 11th Cir. Pattern Crim. Jury Instr. 78.1 (2003). Further, HN11 to allege a § 2315 violation, the Hospital Plaintiffs must show that: (1) Tenet received, possessed, concealed, stored or disposed of stolen money; (2) that such monies had a value in excess of $ 5,000; (3) that such monies had crossed a State or United States boundary after having been stolen or unlawfully converted; and (4) that Tenet knew that the property had been stolen or unlawfully converted. 18 U.S.C. § 2315; 11th Cir. Pattern Crim. Jury Instr. 79 (2003). As set forth in the Eleventh Circuit Pattern Jury Instructions, "the word 'stolen' includes any wrongful and dishonest taking." 11th Cir. Pattern Crim. [\[\*\*38\]](#) Jury Instr. 78.1 (2003); see also United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407, 412, 77 S. Ct. 397, 1 L. Ed. 2d 430 \(1957\) ("stealing" has no accepted common law meaning and includes any "felonious taking with . . . intent to deprive the owner of the rights and benefits of ownership"); Lyda v. United States, 279 F.2d 461, 464 \(5th Cir. 1960\)<sup>11</sup> (noting that the term "stealing" is "commonly used to denote any dishonest transaction whereby one obtains that which rightfully belongs to another"). Likewise, "the word 'converted' means the unauthorized exercise of control over the property of another inconsistent with the owner's rights." 11th Cir. Pattern Crim. Jury Instr. 78.1 (2003); see also United States v. Evans, 579 F.2d. 360, 361 \(5th Cir. 1978\) (finding trial court did not err in instructing jury that "converted," as used in § 2314, meant "to appropriate dishonestly or illegally to one's own use anything of value").

[\[\*\*39\]](#) The Complaints allege facts sufficient to satisfy each of the aforementioned required elements. As alleged, Tenet intentionally stole from the Medicare outlier system by grossly inflating its hospitals' charges and engaging in a "systematic, ongoing course of conduct with the goal and intent to steal and/or convert money from the Outlier Pool." Boca Compl. at PP 49-61, 102; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 34-61. Additionally, the Complaints allege that:

---

<sup>11</sup> In Bonner v. Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1209 \(11th Cir. 1981\) (en banc), the Eleventh Circuit adopted as binding precedent all decisions of the former Fifth Circuit handed down prior to October 1, 1981.

the money (i.e. Outlier overpayments) sought and received by the Tenet Hospitals did not belong to them. At no time did Tenet or the Tenet Hospitals have a legitimate ownership or possessory right, entitlement or interest in that money from the Outlier Pool. Thus, Tenet and the Tenet Hospitals' exercise of control over the money was unauthorized and wrong.<sup>12</sup>

Boca Compl. at P 104; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at P 81. Further, the Complaints allege that Tenet's receipt and exercise of control over payments from the Outlier Pool injured the Hospital Plaintiffs who "were forced to absorb the costs of care for Outlier patients that they would have otherwise been compensated for from the Outlier Pool but for Tenet's improper and illegal acts. <sup>**40</sup>" Boca Compl. at P 108; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at P 85. The Complaints continue <sup>[*1304]</sup> to allege that Tenet transmitted these "stolen" funds in interstate commerce over several years in amounts that exceeded $ 5,000.00 for most, if not all, of the thousands of predicate acts it committed. Boca Compl. at PP 104-07, 113-14; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 81-84, 90-91. The necessary elements for proving violations of the NSPA as predicate acts under RICO have, therefore, been pled.

Tenet argues that the RICO claims based on NSPA violations must fail because CMS "consented" to Tenet's alleged scheme. Tenet relies on case law interpreting the terms "stealing" and "converting" as requiring a showing that the taking was without the owner's consent. See Def.'s Mem. at 22-23. As Tenet argues, theft requires a "taking of property without the owner's consent." Black's Law Dictionary 1477 (6th ed. 1991); see also United States v. Turley, 352 U.S. 407, 413, 77 S. Ct. 397, 1 L. Ed. 2d 430 \(1957\). Likewise, conversion is the "unauthorized and wrongful exercise of the dominion and control over another's personal property." United States v. McRee, 7 F.3d 976, 985 n.2 \(11th Cir. 1993\) (citing Black's Law Dictionary <sup>**41</sup> 332 (6th ed. 1991)). This argument fails for several reasons. First, there are no allegations in the Complaints that CMS both knew of, and consented to, Tenet's allegedly dishonest scheme. Rather, this argument depends on facts (i.e. that CMS had knowledge and gave consent) outside of the four corners of the Complaints, and must be ignored at this juncture. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\); see also Crowell v. Morgan Stanley, 87 F. Supp. 2d 1287, 1290 \(S.D. Fla. 2000\). Second, in Stewart v. United States, 151 F.2d 386 \(8th Cir. 1945\), the Court rejected a similar argument and held that <sup>HN12</sup> "although there must be a taking against the will of the owner, or a trespass to his possession, the requirement is satisfied where the owner is induced by some fraud or trickery to deliver the property to one who feloniously converts it to his own use. In such circumstances there is an absence of real consent and the taking of possession is wrongful." Stewart, 151 F.2d at 388. Given the allegations that Tenet made submissions to CMS that did not reflect actual costs, in an effort to receive excessive outlier payments <sup>**42</sup> to which they were not entitled (but to which the Plaintiffs were allegedly entitled), the Court cannot find that CMS knowingly consented to the allegedly wrongful takings based on the mere fact that CMS disbursed monies to Tenet.<sup>12</sup>

Finally, Tenet contends that the RICO claims must fail because the Hospital Plaintiffs did not allege that they had a colorable claim of right to the stolen outlier funds. In support, Tenet cites to a case holding that "in order for property to be considered stolen,' the property <sup>**43</sup> must rightly belong to someone other than the person who has it." United States v. One Lucite Ball Containing Lunar Material, 252 F. Supp. 2d 1367, 1378 \(S.D. Fla. 2003\) (internal quotations omitted). Tenet argues that because the distribution of Medicare reimbursements is "purely a creature of statute and regulation, and Plaintiffs have not demonstrated a specific statutory or regulatory violation, they cannot be held liable for a felonious taking. However, this argument misses the point. <sup>HN13</sup> The legal standard for claims under the NSPA requires that Plaintiffs allege that the monies that Tenet took did not rightfully belong to Tenet. See Lyda, 279 F.2d at 464 <sup>[*1305]</sup> (stealing "denotes any dishonest transaction whereby one person obtains that which rightfully belongs to another."). The Hospital Plaintiffs have properly alleged that Tenet stole and converted monies that did not rightfully belong to it. Boca Compl. at PP 104-06; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 81-83. While the Plaintiffs will ultimately have to prove their own interest in the outlier funds, at this juncture, viewing the <sup>12</sup> In so ruling, the Court is not concluding that allegations exist to support a finding of "fraud or trickery." Indeed, Plaintiffs have dismissed their fraud claims, and have agreed to eliminate references to alleged fraud from the Complaints. However, given the allegations, there is support for a finding that CMS did not "consent" to the alleged scheme because Tenet's excessive outlier reimbursements were based on intentionally inaccurate charge submissions to CMS that did not reasonably reflect costs.

---

allegations in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs, there is at least impliedly [**44] (if not explicitly) the allegation that the funds that Plaintiffs seek to recover were funds that would have been theirs. Accordingly, at this stage of the litigation, dismissal of the Complaints for failure to properly allege RICO predicate acts would be inappropriate.

2. Enterprise

Next, Tenet asserts that Plaintiffs have failed to properly allege a RICO enterprise. HN14 [↑] "Essential to any successful RICO claim are the basic requirements of establishing a RICO enterprise." Jackson, 372 F.3d at 1264; see also Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 161, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 \(2001\). "Whatever the pleading requirements for other causes of action, plaintiffs in RICO claims must plead specific facts, not mere conclusory allegations, which establish the enterprise." Manax v. McNamara, 842 F.2d 808, 811 \(5th Cir. 1988\) (internal quotation omitted).

HN15 [↑] A RICO enterprise exists "where a group of persons associates, formally or informally, with the purpose of conducting illegal activity." United States v. Hewes, 729 F.2d 1302, 1311 \(11th Cir. 1984\); see also United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S. Ct. 2524, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246 \(1981\). [**45] To allege an enterprise under § 1962(c), the Plaintiffs must "name a RICO person distinct from the RICO enterprise." United States v. Goldin Indus., Inc., 219 F.3d 1268, 1271 \(11th Cir. 2000\) ("Goldin I"); see also Cedric Kushner Promotions, Ltd. v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 162, 121 S. Ct. 2087, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198 \(2001\) (noting that § 1962(c) "requires some distinctness between the RICO defendant and the enterprise."). The "plain language of § 1962(c) envisions two separate entities." Id. at 1270. Thus, "RICO forbids the imposition of liability where the enterprise is nothing more than a subdivision or part of the person." United States v. Goldin Indus., Inc., 219 F.3d 1271, 1276 \(11th Cir. 2000\) ("Goldin II"). Where, as here, the Plaintiffs allege that the enterprise is an association-in-fact, the "crucial factor is whether each entity alleged to be part of the association-in-fact is free to act independently and advance its own interests contrary to those' of the other entities." Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Boeing Co., 357 F. Supp. 2d 1350, 1365 \(M.D. Fla. 2005\) (quoting Goldin II, 219 F.3d at 1277).

Tenet contends that the [**46] Complaints do not adequately allege a RICO enterprise because Tenet and the hospital co-conspirators "form a single unit" and are not distinct entities. However, Tenet's argument appears to be rooted in an antitrust and intra-corporate conspiracy doctrine<sup>13</sup> that has been rejected in the RICO context. See Def.'s Mem. at 26. In recent [*1306] years, HN16 [↑] both the Supreme Court and the Eleventh Circuit have held that the existence of a legal distinction between the RICO defendant and the RICO enterprise is sufficient to establish an enterprise under RICO. See Kushner, 533 U.S. at 165-66; see also Kirwin v. Price Communs. Corp., 391 F.3d 1323, 1327 \(11th Cir. 2004\) (specifically rejecting the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine as a bar to § 1962(d) claims). Therefore, under established and binding precedent, "corporations and their agents are distinct entities" for RICO purposes. Kirwin, 391 F.3d at 1327; see also Kushner, 533 U.S. 163 ("The corporate owner/employee, a natural person, is distinct from the corporation itself, a legally different entity with different rights and responsibilities due to its different legal status. [**47] ").

Here, the Plaintiffs allege that Tenet's RICO enterprise consists of Tenet; a number of hospitals that are wholly-owned, [**48] separately incorporated subsidiaries of Tenet; at least one hospital that is part of a joint venture with Tenet; and hospitals leased by subsidiaries of Tenet; and their officers, directors, managers, employees, agents, representatives, and outside consultants. Boca Compl. at PP 87, 92, 94; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 25, 66, 71. The allegations of the Complaints are sufficient to indicate that Tenet and the hospitals that allegedly form the Tenet RICO enterprise, as well as its employees and officers, are legally distinct entities that played separate and distinct roles in the enterprise. Boca Compl. at PP 5, 92, 94, 96-97, 100, 105; see also Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 24-25, 66, 71, 73-74. Therefore, applying Kushner and Kirwin, the Hospital Plaintiffs have properly alleged a RICO enterprise sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss.

<sup>13</sup> The intracorporate conspiracy doctrine holds that acts of corporate agents are attributed to the corporation itself, thereby negating the multiplicity of actors necessary for the formation of a conspiracy." Kirwin v. Price Commc' ns Corp., 391 F.3d 1323, 1326 \(11th Cir. 2004\) (citing McAndrew v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 206 F.3d 1031, 1035 \(11th Cir. 2000\) (en banc)). When applicable, the doctrine precludes a finding of conspiracy because "a corporation cannot conspire with its employees, and its employees, when acting in the scope of their employment, cannot conspire among themselves." Id.; see also Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 769, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1984\) (holding, in the antitrust context, that "officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative for a [Sherman Antitrust Act] § 1 conspiracy.").

3. Proximate Cause

HN17 [↑] The "by reason of requirement contained in 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\) implicates two concepts: (1) a sufficiently direct injury so that Plaintiffs have standing to sue; and (2) proximate cause, whereby the allegedly wrongful conduct is shown to be a substantial cause of the alleged injury and the causal [**49] connection is foreseeable and not speculative. Williams, 411 F.3d at 1260-61 (citations omitted). The Court has already concluded that Plaintiffs' allegations support their standing to sue Tenet. In order for the RICO claims to survive the Motions to Dismiss, the allegations must also support a finding of proximate cause.<sup>14</sup>

HN18 [↑] "It is well-established that RICO plaintiffs must prove proximate causation in order to recover." Id. at 1261 (citing Cox v. Adm'r U.S. Steel & Carnegie, 17 F.3d 1386, 1399 \(11th Cir. 1994\)). A proximate cause is not, however, the same thing as sole cause. Instead, a factor is a proximate cause if it is a substantial factor in [**50] the sequence of responsible causation. Id. Here, even though Tenet argues that other intervening causes destroyed the causal chain between Tenet's actions and Plaintiffs' alleged injuries, Plaintiffs have alleged facts indicating that Tenet's "turbocharging" practice was a substantial factor in the causal chain leading to their injuries. For instance, Plaintiffs allege [*1307] that as outlier claims skyrocketed, due in significant part to Tenet's overcharging scheme, CMS raised the Outlier Threshold to try to stay within the 5.1 percent target, consequently reducing the frequency and amount of the Plaintiffs' own outlier payments. Boca Compl. P 81; Pub. Hosp. Compl. P 59. Plaintiffs therefore allege that they were damaged by not receiving significant amounts of outlier funds to which they were otherwise entitled. Boca Compl. P 82; Pub. Hosp. Compl. PP 59-60. Finally, Plaintiffs allege that between June 1, 2000, and December 31, 2002, Tenet hospitals received an additional $ 29 million per month, on average, in outlier payments, and that more than a third of Tenet's hospitals had dramatic increases in their outlier payments since 2000. Boca Compl. PP 54, 76; Pub. Hosp. Compl. PP 40, 56. [**51] These allegations, if proven, would suggest that Tenet's alleged misconduct was a substantial link in the causal chain resulting in the Plaintiffs' financial injuries. Thus, for reasons similar to those identified in the standing section, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged proximate cause.<sup>15</sup> Williams, 411 F.3d at 1262 ("although the plaintiffs in this case may not ultimately satisfy the proximate-cause requirement, . . . it remains possible that plaintiffs may prove their allegations, and [the Court] cannot say at this Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) stage that there is no possibility of such proof.").

[**52] E. Plaintiffs Have Stated a Claim for RICO Conspiracy

Tenet further challenges the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' allegations as it relates to their RICO conspiracy claims. HN19 [↑] To establish a RICO conspiracy violation under 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(d\), the Hospital Plaintiffs must allege "that the defendant objectively manifested, through words or actions, an agreement to participate in the conduct of the affairs of the enterprise through the commission of two or more predicate crimes." United States v. Starrett, 55 F.3d 1525,

<sup>14</sup> The Eleventh Circuit has recognized the significant overlap between the standing and proximate cause issues. Williams, 411 F.3d at 1261, n.4. Notwithstanding the interconnectedness of the two concepts, the Court reviews the proximate cause issue as a separate, distinct element of a RICO claim.

<sup>15</sup> Tenet's argument regarding the presence of intervening players and acts, addressed in the standing section of this Order, also merits discussion here. As a general matter, the "presence of intervening factors breaks the causal chain between predicate acts and injury, thereby precluding a proximate cause finding." Andrews v. Am. Nat'l Red Cross, Inc., 176 F. Supp. 2d 673, 689 \(W.D. Tex. 2001\). However, at this stage of the litigation, the degree of involvement by each alleged actor in the causal chain is unknown, and Tenet has simply failed to demonstrate that it should be absolved of all liability merely because some other actors may have impacted on Plaintiffs' injuries.

1543 \(11th Cir. 1995\). "The focus is on the agreement to participate in the enterprise through the pattern of racketeering activity, not on the individual predicate acts." Id. at 1544. Although Tenet "must [have] agreed to participate in the affairs of the enterprise," United States v. Valera, 845 F.2d 923, 929 \(11th Cir. 1998\), the Hospital Plaintiffs may prove Tenet's agreement: "(1) by showing an agreement on an overall objective, or (2) by showing that [Tenet] agreed personally to commit two predicate acts and therefore to participate in a single objective' conspiracy." Starrett, 55 F.3d at 1544 [**53] (citations omitted). Further, "to be guilty of conspiracy . . . parties must have agreed to commit an act that is itself illegal -- parties cannot be found guilty of conspiring to commit an act that is not itself against the law." United States v. Vaghela, 169 F.3d 729, 732 \(11th Cir. 1999\); see also Jackson, 372 F.3d at 1269; Spain v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 363 F.3d 1183, 1199 (11th Cir. 2004).

In summary, the Hospital Plaintiffs have alleged that Tenet agreed to participate in the conduct of the affairs of the enterprise: (1) when Tenet engaged in a scheme to improperly inflate the outlier [\[\*1308\]](#) charges submitted to CMS; (2) when Tenet and its hospitals directly manipulated the charges submitted to CMS; (3) when "Tenet . . . agreed to participate, and participated, in an inflated charging scheme to steal and/or convert money from the Outlier Pool . . . "; and (4) when the object of the conspiracy was to illegally obtain excessive reimbursements from CMS. Boca Compl. at PP 75, 121-22; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 52, 98-99. As alleged, Tenet and its hospital co-conspirators illegally inflated the claims submitted for outlier payments. [\[\*\*54\]](#) Boca Compl. at PP 49-61, 100(c) & (e); Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 34-41, 77(c) & (e). That agreement to violate the NSPA, if proven, demonstrates the existence of a conspiracy through the conspirators' actions. Thus, the Hospital Plaintiffs have properly pled that Tenet and its hospital co-conspirators were engaged in a conspiracy by alleging that they had an agreement on an overall objective. Starrett, 55 F.3d at 1544; Valera, 845 F.2d at 929.

Tenet argues that the Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts, as opposed to legal conclusions, sufficient to sustain a finding that an agreement existed. In assessing the sufficiency of the conspiracy claim, the Court can look to whether the defendant's actions "manifested an agreement to participate" in the alleged racketeering activity. Starrett, 55 F.3d at 1548. Further, HN20 [↑] the Eleventh Circuit has recognized that, particularly at the pleading stage, the RICO conspiracy need not be supported by direct evidence, but rather, may be inferred from the parties' conduct. Republic of Panama v. BCCI Holdings \(Luxembourg\) S.A., 119 F.3d 935, 950 \(11th Cir. 1997\). Although the allegations [\[\*\*55\]](#) in the Complaints border on being conclusory, given the liberal notice pleadings standard applicable to this claim, the allegations suffice to survive dismissal. Plaintiffs have asserted extensive allegations, as noted above, from which it can be inferred that Tenet's "turbocharging" scheme was devised as part of a conspiracy. Accordingly, while this issue must be further developed during discovery and may be revisited on summary judgment, the Court cannot grant Tenet's motion to dismiss the conspiracy claim at this time.

F. Unjust Enrichment

HN21 [↑] Under Florida law, to state a claim for unjust enrichment, the plaintiff must allege that: (1) the plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant, who had knowledge of the benefit; (2) the defendant voluntarily accepted and retained the benefit; and (3) under the circumstances, it would be inequitable for the defendant to retain the benefit without paying for it. Greenberg v. Miami Children's Hosp. Research Inst., 264 F. Supp. 2d 1064, 1072 \(S.D. Fla. 2003\) (citing Toolrend, Inc. v. CMT Utensili, SRL, 198 F.3d 802, 805 \(11th Cir. 1999\)); see also Duncan v. Kasim, Inc., 810 So.2d 968, 971 \(Fla. 2002\). [\[\*\*56\]](#) Tenet seeks dismissal of this claim on the dual basis that Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they actually conferred any benefit on Tenet, and that the Plaintiffs cannot base an unjust enrichment claim on alleged wrongdoing for which an independent basis for recovery exists.

In support of their claim, the Hospital Plaintiffs assert that they conferred a benefit on Tenet "because the reductions in the standardized amount they were to receive under IPPS have been used to pay Tenet for the inflated and improper costs' it claimed in connection with the treatment of Outlier patients. Thus the monies received by Tenet from the Outlier Pool far exceeded the true costs of treating the aforesaid Outlier patients." See Boca Compl. at P 141. Tenet contends that because the Hospital Plaintiffs have no right, or any colorable claim of title, to the outlier funds, they cannot demonstrate that [\[\*1309\]](#) they actually conferred any benefit on Tenet or that anything was actually taken away from them. Further, Tenet argues that even if the Court finds that the Hospital

Plaintiffs did confer some benefit on Tenet by virtue of their reduced standardized reimbursements, such benefit is far too indirect [**57] to maintain an unjust enrichment claim. See Nova Info. Sys., Inc. v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 365 F.3d 996, 1007 \(11th Cir. 2004\) (finding that "at best, [the plaintiff] conferred an indirect or incidental benefit on [the defendant]," which could not support a claim for compensation under the doctrine of unjust enrichment).

The Court need not reach the issue of whether the Hospital Plaintiffs actually conferred a benefit on Tenet, because the allegations of the Complaint, which are premised on Tenet's purported RICO violations and theft of outlier funds, cannot support a claim for unjust enrichment. HN22 [↑] "Liability in unjust enrichment has in principle nothing to do with fault. It has to do with wealth being in one person's hands when it should be in another person's." Guyana Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Melbourne Int'l Comms., Ltd., 329 F.3d 1241, 1245 n.3 \(11th Cir. 2003\). Thus, the "paradigm examples of unjust enrichment are mistaken transfers." Id. However, as soon as a claimant relies on a wrong to supply the unjust factor, as the Hospital Plaintiffs do here, "the right on which [the plaintiff] relies arises from that wrong, not from unjust enrichment. [**58]" Id. (citation omitted). Here, the Hospital Plaintiffs predicate their unjust enrichment claim on "the wrongful conduct of Tenet" in allegedly submitting "inflated and improper costs." Boca Compl. at PP 188, 189; Pub. Hosp. Compl. at PP 142-43. The Plaintiffs' right of recovery, if any, "arises from the wrong of the [alleged] tort," which, if proven, might entitle them to damages, "rather than unjust enrichment." Guyana, 329 F.3d at 1245 n.3. Because "the law of unjust enrichment is concerned solely with enrichments that are unjust independently of [alleged] wrongs," Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims must be dismissed. Flint v. ABB, Inc., 337 F.3d 1326, 1330 n.2 \(11th Cir. 2003\) (noting that when the plaintiff relies on a wrong to supply the unjust factor, "the causative event is a wrongful enrichment rather than an unjust enrichment").

G. Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act

Tenet's challenge to the Florida Attorney General's FDUTPA claim is two-fold. First, Tenet contends that because its alleged conduct was authorized by then-applicable Medicare regulations, it cannot form the basis for a FDUTPA claim. Second, Tenet [**59] argues that the FDUTPA claim must fail because it is not pled with particularity in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\). Upon careful review of the allegations in the Pub. Hosp. Compl., both arguments must fail.

The Florida legislature enacted FDUTPA to protect the "consuming public and legitimate business enterprises from those who engage in unfair methods of competition, or unconscionable, deceptive, or unfair acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." Fla. Stat. §§ 501.202\(2\), 501.204\(1\) \(2005\). HN23 [↑] To state a cause of action under FDUTPA, the complaint must not only plead that the conduct complained of was unfair and deceptive, but also that the complaining party was aggrieved by the alleged act. Haun v. Don Mealey Imps., 285 F. Supp. 2d 1297, 1308 \(M.D. Fla. 2003\). A FDUTPA plaintiff, therefore, need only allege facts sufficient to show that it was actually aggrieved by the unfair and deceptive conduct. Tuckish v. Pompano Motor Co., 337 F. Supp. 2d 1313, 1320 \(S.D. Fla. 2004\). A court, in determining whether the alleged conduct violates FDUTPA, should [*1310] also take into [**60] consideration whether the Federal Trade Commission and other federal courts deem such conduct to be an "unfair method of competition or an unconscionable, unfair or deceptive act or practice under federal law." Mack v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 673 So.2d 100, 105 \(Fla. 1st DCA 1996\). Because the legislature did not define what is an unfair or deceptive act, a practice which "offends established public policy or is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers may violate FDUTPA." Betts v. Advance Am., 213 F.R.D. 466, 482 \(M.D. Fla. 2001\).

HN24 [↑] It is well-established that FDUTPA does not apply to any acts or practices that are "required or specifically permitted by federal or state law." 3B TV, Inc. v. Office of Atty. Gen., 794 So.2d 744, 747 \(Fla. 1st DCA 2001\) (quoting Fla. Stat. § 501.212\(1\)); see also Eirman v. Olde Disc. Corp., 697 So.2d 865, 866 \(Fla. 4th DCA 1997\) (holding that conduct did not violate FDUTPA because it was authorized by then-existing rules of the U.S. Securities & Exchange Commission). However, an act does not need to violate a specific rule or regulation [**61] in order to be considered deceptive. Dep't of Legal Affairs v. Father & Son Moving & Storage, Inc., 643 So.2d 22, 24 \(Fla. 4th DCA 1994\). Therefore, the relevant analysis for this Court is whether Tenet, as the moving party, has demonstrated that a specific federal or state law affirmatively authorized it to engage in the conduct alleged in the Complaints, not whether Plaintiffs have demonstrated that Tenet's conduct violates a specific rule or regulation.

Other than its conclusory assertion that its "alleged conduct was authorized by then-applicable Medicare regulations," see Def.'s Mem. at 38, Tenet does not identify any federal statute or regulation that "specifically permitted" it to grossly inflate its charges for outlier procedures in order to garner outlier payments for average-cost Medicare cases, as alleged in the Complaints. Tenet merely cites to 42 C.F.R. § 412.84 (which provides the regulatory guidelines for outlier payments) and states, with no supporting analysis or factual discussion, that "submitting accurate charges" is specifically permitted. Of course, the Plaintiffs maintain that the charges that Tenet used to [\[\*\*62\]](#) maximize its outlier reimbursements were not accurate, in the sense that they did not correlate reasonably to the actual costs of the procedures being performed. See Pub. Hosp. Compl. at P 36. Therefore, accepting the Plaintiffs' allegations as true, and viewing those allegations in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs, Tenet's alleged conduct may form the basis for a FDUTPA claim.

Likewise, Tenet's insistence that the Florida AG must plead its FDUTPA claim "with particularity" is without merit. Tenet correctly states that Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) requires that in all averments of fraud, the circumstances constituting fraud "shall be stated with particularity." However, the Florida AG's FDUTPA claim is not premised on allegations of fraud. HN25 FDUTPA was enacted to provide remedies for conduct outside the reach of traditional common law torts such as fraud, and therefore, "the plaintiff need not prove the elements of fraud to sustain an action under the statute." Davis v. Powertel, Inc., 776 So.2d 971, 974 (Fla. 1st DCA 2000); see also Office of Attorney Gen., Dept. of Legal Affairs v. Wyndham Int'l, Inc., 869 So.2d 592, 598 (Fla. 1st DCA 2004) [\[\*\*63\]](#) ("A deceptive or unfair trade practice constitutes a somewhat unique tortious act because, although it is similar to a claim of fraud, it is different in that, unlike fraud, a party asserting a deceptive trade practice claim need not show actual reliance on the representation or omission at [\[\*1311\]](#) issue."). Accordingly, the Florida AG's failure to allege facts constituting fraud is not fatal to its FDUTPA claim.<sup>16</sup>

H. Boca's Claim Under the California Unfair Competition Law

HN26 Section 17200 of the California Unfair Competition Law ("UCL") provides a remedy for any injuries resulting from unfair competition, defined as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 [\[\*\*64\]](#). Tenet argues that: (1) Boca, a resident of Florida, cannot assert a claim under the UCL because of the fundamental limits on the scope of state regulatory jurisdiction; (2) Boca has not alleged an unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business practice; and (3) Boca is not entitled to restitution. Upon review of the applicable case law, the Court disagrees.

First, Tenet's argument with respect to the territorial limitations of the UCL overlooks the fact that Boca has alleged unfair conduct occurring in the State of California. Specifically, Boca alleges that Tenet devised, implemented, and directed the scheme that is the subject of the Complaints at its executive headquarters in Santa Barbara, California. See Boca Compl. at PP 5, 170. Boca further alleges that Tenet ultimately received the ill-gotten gains from its outlier overcharge scheme in California. Id. at PP 78-80, 100(g), 105, 107, 112-13, 171. Because Boca has alleged that it was harmed by wrongful conduct occurring in California, Boca may assert a claim under the UCL.<sup>17</sup>

<sup>16</sup> In a footnote, Tenet also argues that the FDUTPA claim must be dismissed to the extent that the Florida AG seeks recovery for conduct prior to July 1, 2001. See Def.'s Mem. at n. 16. However, Tenet has not demonstrated that these pre-2001 claims are subject to dismissal at this time.

<sup>17</sup> Tenet's reliance on Norwest Mortgage, Inc. v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 4th 214, 225-26, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 18 (Cal. Ct. App. 1999) is misplaced. Tenet relies on Norwest for its assertion that Boca's UCL claim must be dismissed. However, in Norwest, the Court specifically held that it was dismissing the UCL claim because the facts demonstrated that the non-Californians were injured by conduct occurring outside of California's borders, by defendants whose headquarters and principal places of operation are outside of California. Id. Here, as noted above, Boca has specifically alleged conduct taking place in California, and Tenet's executive headquarters are in Santa Barbara, California.

Diamond Multimedia Sys., Inc. v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.4th 1036, 1063-64, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 968 P.2d 539(Cal. 1999) HN27<sup>18</sup> (finding no constitutional impediment in permitting [**65] non-Californians a right of action under a domestic statute because California had a "clear and substantial interest in preventing fraudulent practices in this state," or in "extending state-created remedies to out-of-state parties harmed by wrongful conduct occurring in California.") (emphasis in original) (citations omitted).

[**66] Second, Tenet incorrectly states that Boca has failed to state a claim under the UCL. Boca's claim is premised on the unlawful and unfair prongs of the UCL.<sup>18</sup> In Watson Labs., Inc. v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 178 F. Supp. 2d 1099, 1120 (C.D. Cal. 2001), HN28<sup>19</sup> the court defined "unlawful acts" under the UCL as business practices that constitute violations of civil or criminal, federal or regulatory law. Id. Thus, a claimant may "borrow" a violation of another law that is committed in the course of business activity to support a claim under § 17200. Id.; see also Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1143, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (Cal. 2003). An adequately pled RICO violation is sufficient to support a claim under the unlawful prong of California's [*1312] UCL. Conn. Gen. Life Ins. Co. v. New Images of Beverly Hills, 108 Fed. Appx. 497, 498 (9th Cir. 2004). Because the Court previously concluded that Boca's Complaint states a claim under RICO, such allegations suffice to support Tenet's UCL claim. Boca has also adequately alleged unfair business practices. See Cel-Tech Commc ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal.4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (Cal. 1999) [**67] (finding that unfair conduct is that which "threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition."). Tenet's motion to dismiss Boca's UCL claim is, therefore, denied.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, it is hereby

ORDERED that:

- (1) Defendant Tenet Healthcare Corporation's Motions to Dismiss filed in Case No. 05-20591-CIV-SEITZ [DE-29] and Case No. 05-80183 [DE-30] are GRANTED IN PART, DENIED IN PART;
- (2) The Motions to Dismiss are GRANTED to the extent that Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims, set forth in Count VI in Case No. 05-20591-CIV-SEITZ and Count VII in Case No. 05-80183-CIV-SEITZ, are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE;
- (3) The Motions to Dismiss are DENIED in all other aspects.

DONE [**68] AND ORDERED in Miami, Florida, this 25th day of August, 2005.

PATRICIA A. SEITZ

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

---

<sup>18</sup> Boca is not proceeding on the theory that Tenet's practices were fraudulent. See Pls.' Mem. at n. 26.

Freeman Indus. LLC v. Eastman Chem. Co.

Supreme Court of Tennessee, At Knoxville

May 3, 2005, Session ; August 25, 2005, Filed

No. E2003-00527-SC-S09-CV

Reporter

172 S.W.3d 512 *; 2005 Tenn. LEXIS 668 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P94,914

FREEMAN INDUSTRIES, LLC v. EASTMAN CHEMICAL COMPANY, ET AL.

Subsequent History: Appeal after remand at, Remanded by *Freeman Indus. LLC v. Eastman Chem. Co., 2006 Tenn. App. LEXIS 761 \(Tenn. Ct. App., Nov. 30, 2006\)*

Prior History: [**1] Tenn. R. App. P. 11 Appeal by Permission; Judgment of the Court of Appeals Affirmed in Part; Reversed in Part; Remanded to the Trial Court. Appeal by Permission from the Court of Appeals Circuit Court for Sullivan County. No. C34355-L. Richard E. Ladd, Chancellor.

*Freeman Indus. L.L.C. v. Eastman Chem. Co., 2004 Tenn. App. LEXIS 321 \(Tenn. Ct. App., May 18, 2004\)*

Disposition: Judgment of the Court of Appeals Affirmed in Part; Reversed in Part; Remanded to the Trial Court.

Core Terms

---

purchasers, indirect, unjust enrichment, commerce, anticompetitive conduct, trial court, antitrust, effects, sorbates, interstate commerce, anti trust law, defendants', remedies, consumer, exhaust, circumstances, courts, supermarket, contracts, violator, prices, substantial effect, cause of action, overcharge, futile, antitrust statute, bring suit, regulation, products, principal place of business

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim pursuant to Tenn. R. Civ. P. 12.02(6) admits the truth of all of the relevant and material allegations contained in the complaint, but it asserts that the allegations fail to establish a cause of action. When reviewing a dismissal of a complaint under Rule 12.02(6), the court must take the factual allegations of the complaint as true and review the trial court's legal conclusions de novo without any presumption of correctness.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106 (2001) provides for a civil remedy against those who violate the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq. (2001).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

By providing a civil remedy to "any person who is injured or damaged" as the result of violations of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq. (2001), the plain language of Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106 provides a cause of action to indirect purchasers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The plain language of Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106 does not prohibit recovery to indirect purchasers who are nonresidents of Tennessee. Moreover, Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 47-25-101 and 47-25-102 (2001) prohibit price fixing agreements that tend to affect the price to the "producer or consumer" of such products. These statutes reflect a clear intent to protect and afford a remedy to ultimate consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6  Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 (2001).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN7  Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-102.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Damages > Consequential Damages > Actions for Price

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN8  Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Supreme Court of Tennessee has identified two purposes of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq. (2001). The first purpose is to preserve full and free competition in the sale of merchandise that "had become a part of the mass of property in the State." The second purpose is to preserve full and free competition in the manufacture and sale of "articles of domestic growth and domestic raw material" and to prevent combinations tending to affect the price or cost of these articles to the producer or consumer. Permitting indirect purchasers to recover under the TPPA promotes these purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN9  Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

"Control" means power or authority to manage, direct, superintend, restrict, regulate, govern, administer, or oversee as well as the ability to exercise a restraining or directing influence over something. A sale "controlled by" an antitrust violation includes not only a sale made by the violator to the direct purchaser but also a transaction between the direct purchaser and the consumer in which the price of the product purchased by the consumer is influenced by the antitrust violator's conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

A plain reading of Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106 permits a person to recover the consideration or sum that was "controlled by" or influenced by the antitrust violator. In other words, an indirect purchaser may recover from the antitrust violator the amount of the overcharge that the direct purchaser passed on to the indirect purchaser.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN11 [blue download icon] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

Indirect purchasers do not have a cause of action under federal antitrust law because they do not suffer a legally cognizable injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN13 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The United States Supreme Court's holding in Illinois Brick Co. applies only to federal antitrust law. Clearly, states may provide a remedy to indirect purchasers under their own antitrust laws.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN14 [ ↗ ] Legislation, Interpretation

While legislative inaction is generally irrelevant to the interpretation of existing statutes, the legislature's failure to express disapproval of a judicial construction of a statute is persuasive evidence of legislative adoption of the judicial construction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN15 [ ↗ ] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Unlike many states that have applied Illinois Brick Co. in disallowing indirect purchasers from bringing a private action under their antitrust laws, Tennessee does not have a statutory "harmony clause" mandating courts to interpret the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq. (2001), consistently with federal law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN16 [ ↗ ] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Supreme Court of Tennessee joins other jurisdictions in declining to interpret Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois as precluding indirect purchasers from bringing suit under the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq. (2001).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN17 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

By construing *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106* (2001) as permitting indirect purchaser suits, the Supreme Court of Tennessee is affording a remedy to the ultimate victims of the antitrust conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN18 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Antitrust is a complex area of law and generally involves highly complex litigation. The ends of justice should not be defeated simply because the risk of complicated litigation exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN19 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

An indirect purchaser may bring an action under *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106* for conduct in violation of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq.* (2001), even though the indirect purchaser is a non-resident of Tennessee.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN20 [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Penalties

In considering the reach of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq.* (2001), the Supreme Court of Tennessee has concluded that the legislature clearly intended to prohibit trusts, combinations, and agreements affecting all commerce not covered by the federal statute, and upon which it had a right to legislate. It did not intend to stop short of its power or to exceed it.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN21 [blue download icon] Legislation, Interpretation

Courts have a duty to construe statutes in such a manner as to avoid conflict with the United States Constitution if the construction can be accomplished without disregarding the legislature's intent.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

HN22 [blue document icon] Legislation, Interpretation

Although a statute includes terms that are overly broad, courts have a duty to limit a statute's application to circumstances within the legislature's intent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN23 [blue document icon] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

The United States Supreme Court considers state antitrust regulations to supplement and complement the federal antitrust laws and the enforcement of these state laws to be consistent with the federal antitrust laws. Furthermore, a state generally is not prohibited from giving effect to its antitrust laws merely because the regulation affects interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Balancing Tests

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN24 [blue document icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A state antitrust regulation that has only incidental effects on interstate commerce and is regulated evenhandedly to effectuate a legitimate local interest does not run afoul of the Commerce Clause unless the burden imposed on interstate commerce is clearly excessive when compared to the punitive local benefits.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN25 [blue document icon] Legislation, Interpretation

In construing statutes, the court must ascertain and give effect to the legislature's intent and purpose. Furthermore, the court must construe a statute so as to avoid a constitutional conflict if any reasonable construction exists that satisfies the Constitution's requirements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN26[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq.* (2001), prohibits agreements adversely affecting competition in the "sale of articles imported into this state" or influencing the "price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article." *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101* (2001).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN27[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The purpose of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), *Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq.* (2001), is to protect the state's trade or commerce affected by the anticompetitive conduct. The Supreme Court of Tennessee rejects any standard that requires examination of the anticompetitive conduct in determining whether a particular case falls within the scope of the TTPA.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN28[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Anticompetitive conduct cannot predominantly affect both intrastate commerce and interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN29[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The proper standard for determining whether a case falls within the scope of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act (TTPA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq., is a "substantial effects" standard. Pursuant to this standard, courts must decide whether the alleged anticompetitive conduct affects Tennessee trade or commerce to a substantial degree. Federal courts have applied the substantial effects standard to the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN30 [L] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A "substantial effects" standard for determining whether alleged anticompetitive conduct affects Tennessee trade or commerce to a substantial degree furthers the goal of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq., of protecting Tennessee commerce without offending constitutional provisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN31 [L] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The determination of whether an effect is substantial does not involve "mathematical nicety." The anticompetitive conduct, however, need not threaten the demise of Tennessee businesses or affect market prices to substantially affect intrastate commerce.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN32 [L] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is appropriate only when the moving party demonstrates that no genuine issues of material fact exist and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Tenn. R. Civ. P. 56.04.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN33 [L] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The purpose of summary judgment is to resolve controlling issues of law rather than to find facts or resolve disputed factual issues.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN34 [ ] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court must review a trial court's decision to grant or deny summary judgment de novo with no presumption of correctness attached to the trial court's conclusions. It must also view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, drawing all reasonable inferences in the non-moving party's favor.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Contracts Implied in Fact

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Quasi Contracts

HN35 [ ] Types of Contracts, Contracts Implied in Fact

The court has previously recognized two types of implied contracts: contracts implied in fact and contracts implied in law. Contracts implied in fact arise under circumstances establishing the parties' mutual intention to contract. Contracts implied in law or quasi contracts are created by law without the parties' assent and are based upon reason and justice. Courts may impose a contract implied in law where no contract exists under various quasi contractual theories, including unjust enrichment.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN36 [ ] Remedies, Equitable Relief

The elements of an unjust enrichment claim are: 1) a benefit conferred upon the defendant by the plaintiff; 2) appreciation by the defendant of such benefit; and 3) acceptance of such benefit under such circumstances that it would be inequitable for him to retain the benefit without payment of the value thereof. The most significant requirement of an unjust enrichment claim is that the benefit to the defendant be unjust. The plaintiff must further demonstrate that he or she has exhausted all remedies against the person with whom the plaintiff enjoyed privity of contract.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN37 [ ] Remedies, Equitable Relief

A plaintiff need not be in privity with a defendant to recover under a claim of unjust enrichment.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN38[ Remedies, Equitable Relief

A benefit is any form of advantage that has a measurable value including the advantage of being saved from an expense or loss. The underlying principle of the doctrine of unjust enrichment is that a party who receives a benefit that he or she desires, under circumstances rendering retention of the benefit without providing compensation inequitable, must compensate the provider of the benefit.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN39[ Remedies, Equitable Relief

To recover for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff need not establish that the defendant received a direct benefit from the plaintiff. Rather, a plaintiff may recover for unjust enrichment against a defendant who receives any benefit from the plaintiff if the defendant's retention of the benefit would be unjust.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > General Overview

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN40[ Justiciability, Exhaustion of Remedies

To maintain an action for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff is not required to exhaust all remedies against the party with whom the plaintiff is in privity if the pursuit of the remedies would be futile.

Counsel: Barry C. Barnett, Dallas, Texas; Daniel R. Karon, Cleveland, Ohio; Isaac L. Diel and Rex A. Sharp, Prairie Village, Kansas; John S. Bingham, Kingsport, Tennessee; and Todd R. Seelman, Denver, Colorado, for the appellant, Freeman Industries, LLC.

Herbert S. Washer, New York, New York, and Morris Hadden, Kingsport, Tennessee, for the appellee, Daicel Chemical Industries, Ltd.

Michelle K. Fisher and Thomas Demittrack, Cleveland, Ohio, and William T. Gamble, Kingsport, Tennessee, for the appellee, Eastman Chemical Company.

Jennifer B. Patterson and Michael D. Blechman, New York, New York, and Morris Hadden, Kingsport, Tennessee, for the appellees, Hoechst Aktiengesellschaft and Nutrinova Nutrition Specialities & Food Ingredients, GmbH.

Eugene G. Illovsy, Walnut Creek, California, and Morris Hadden, Kingsport, [**2] Tennessee, for the appellee, Nippon Gohsei Industries, Ltd.

Judges: JANICE M. HOLDER, J., delivered the opinion of the court, in which FRANK F. DROWOTA, III, C.J., and E. RILEY ANDERSON, ADOLPHO A. BIRCH, JR., and WILLIAM M. BARKER, JJ., joined.

Opinion by: JANICE M. HOLDER

Opinion

---

[*515] We granted permission to appeal to determine: 1) whether an indirect purchaser may bring an action under the Tennessee Trade Practices Act against defendants involved in an price-fixing scheme; 2) whether the conduct complained of falls within the scope of the act; and 3) whether the trial court erred in declining to grant summary judgment to the defendants as to the plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim. We conclude that although an indirect purchaser may bring an action under the Tennessee Trade Practices Act, the conduct complained of in this case did not substantially affect Tennessee commerce and thus falls outside the scope of the act. We further conclude that to sustain an unjust enrichment claim, the plaintiff is not required to: 1) establish that the defendants received a direct benefit or 2) exhaust all remedies against the party with whom the plaintiff is in privity if the pursuit of the remedies would be [*516] futile. Because the plaintiff failed to provide a factual basis to support its bare allegation that any attempt to exhaust its remedies would have been futile, the trial court erred in failing to grant the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the unjust enrichment claim. Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the case is remanded [**3] to the trial court for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Defendant Eastman Chemical Co. ("Eastman") is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Kingsport, Tennessee. Defendants Hoechst Aktiengesellschaft ("Hoechst") and Nutrinova Nutrition Specialities & Food Ingredients, GmbH ("Nutrinova") are German corporations with principal places of business in Frankfurt, Germany. Defendants Daciel Chemical Industries, Ltd. ("Daciel") and Nippon Gohsei Industries, Ltd. ("Nippon") are Japanese corporations with principal places of business in Tokyo and Osaka, Japan, respectively. Eastman, Hoechst, Nutrinova, Daciel, and Nippon (collectively "defendants") are producers of sorbates. Sorbates are food preservatives used in small quantities in high-moisture and high-sugar [**4] products to slow the growth of mold.

Between 1998 and 2001, each defendant pleaded guilty to fixing the prices of sorbates in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1997). The defendants also have settled federal lawsuits brought by a nationwide class of direct purchasers of sorbates as well as lawsuits brought by indirect purchasers in fourteen states, including Tennessee, and the District of Columbia.

Plaintiff Freeman Industries, LLC ("Freeman") is a New York corporation with its principal place of business in Tuckahoe, New York. Freeman is an end-user of food products containing sorbates and purchases these products at supermarkets in New York. Freeman, as an indirect purchaser of sorbates, filed a lawsuit against the defendants claiming a violation of the Tennessee Trade Practices Act ("TTPA"), Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 et seq. (2001), and unjust enrichment.

The trial court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss Freeman's TTPA claim. The trial court concluded that the TTPA does not apply to indirect purchasers or to transactions occurring outside of Tennessee. The trial court denied the defendants' [**5] motion for summary judgment as to Freeman's unjust enrichment claim.

On interlocutory review, the Court of Appeals concluded that although indirect purchasers may recover under the TTPA, the act does not apply to indirect purchasers who are not "Tennessee consumers." The Court of Appeals further concluded that Freeman could not recover under the TTPA because it failed to establish that it "had a transaction in Tennessee that was substantially affected by the defendants' illegal conduct." With respect to Freeman's unjust enrichment claim, the Court of Appeals held that a plaintiff is not required to confer a direct benefit upon a defendant to proceed with a claim for unjust enrichment. The Court of Appeals therefore modified the portion of the trial court's judgment that held that the TTPA is not applicable to indirect purchasers and affirmed the trial court's judgment in all other respects. We granted review.

ANALYSIS

A. Tennessee Trade Practices Act

We must first decide whether the trial court erred in granting the defendants' motion to dismiss Freeman's TTPA claims pursuant to Tennessee Rule of Civil Procedure 12.02(6). HN1 A motion to dismiss a complaint for failure [**6] to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12.02\(6\) "admits the truth of all of the relevant and material allegations contained in the complaint, but it asserts that the allegations fail to establish a cause of action." Leach v. Taylor, 124 S.W.3d 87, 90 \(Tenn. 2004\). When reviewing a dismissal of a complaint under Rule 12.02\(6\), we must take the factual allegations of the complaint as true and review the trial [*517] court's legal conclusions de novo without any presumption of correctness. Id.

1. Indirect Purchasers

HN2 Tennessee Code Annotated section 47-25-106 (2001) provides for a civil remedy against those who violate the TPPA. Section 47-25-106 states that:

HN3 any person who is injured or damaged by any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination described in this part may sue for and recover, in any court of competent jurisdiction, from any person operating such trust or combination, the full consideration or sum paid by the person for any goods, wares, merchandise, or articles, the sale of which is controlled by such combination or trust.

HN4 By providing a civil remedy to "any person who is injured or damaged" as the [**7] result of violations of the TPPA, the plain language of section 47-25-106 provides a cause of action to indirect purchasers. See City of Cookeville ex rel. Reg'l Med. Ctr. v. Humphrey, 126 S.W.3d 897, 902 \(Tenn. 2004\) (providing that where the language of a statute is clear and unambiguous, we must apply the statute in accordance with its plain language). Contrary to the Court of Appeals' holding, HN5 the plain language of section 47-25-106 does not prohibit recovery to indirect purchasers who are non-residents of Tennessee. Moreover, sections 47-25-101 and -102<sup>1</sup> (2001) prohibit price fixing agreements that tend to affect the price to the "producer or consumer" of such products. These statutes reflect a clear intent to protect and afford a remedy to ultimate consumers.

[**8] HN8 This Court has identified two purposes of the TPPA. See Baird v. Smith, 128 Tenn. 410, 161 S.W. 492, 493 \(Tenn. 1913\). The first purpose is to preserve full and free competition in the sale of merchandise that "had become a part of the mass of property in the State." Id. The second purpose is to preserve full and free competition in the manufacture and sale of "articles of domestic growth and domestic raw material" and to prevent combinations tending to affect the price or cost of these articles to the producer or consumer. Id. We believe that permitting indirect purchasers to recover under the TPPA promotes these purposes.

The defendants contend that the language of Tennessee Code Annotated section 47-25-106 permitting recovery of "the full consideration or sum paid by the person" for the products, "the sale of which is controlled by such combination or trust," [*518] limits recovery to direct purchasers. According to the defendants, the only sale "controlled by" an antitrust violator is the transaction between the violator and the direct purchaser. We believe that their argument is flawed. First, HN9 "control" means "power or authority [**9] to manage, direct, superintend, restrict, regulate, govern, administer, or oversee" as well as "the ability to exercise a restraining or directing

<sup>1</sup> Tennessee Code Annotated section 47-25-101 (2001) provides that

HN6 All arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, full and free competition in the importation or sale of articles imported into this state, or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or of domestic raw material, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend, to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article, are declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

Tennessee Code Annotated 47-25-102 prohibits agreements HN7 "to sell and market . . . products and articles, manufactured in this state, or imported into this state, to any producer or consumer at prices reduced below the cost of production or importation into this state." The statute further prohibits "any other arrangements, contracts, or agreements, by and between its agents and subagents, which tend to lessen full and free competition in the sale of all such articles manufactured and imported into the state, and which amount to a subterfuge for the purpose of obtaining the same advantage and purposes."

influence over something." Black's Law Dictionary 329 (6th ed. 1990). A sale "controlled by" an antitrust violation includes not only a sale made by the violator to the direct purchaser but also a transaction between the direct purchaser and the consumer in which the price of the product purchased by the consumer is influenced by the antitrust violator's conduct.

Second, we believe that this language pertains not to persons who may recover but to the recovery itself.HN10<sup>1</sup>] A plain reading of section 47-25-106 permits a person to recover the consideration or sum that was "controlled by" or influenced by the antitrust violator. In other words, an indirect purchaser may recover from the antitrust violator the amount of the overcharge that the direct purchaser passed on to the indirect purchaser.<sup>2</sup>

[**10] Third, we conclude that the United States Supreme Court's holding in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), does not require a different result. In that case, the Supreme Court held that "the overcharged direct purchaser, and not others in the chain of manufacture or distribution, is the party 'injured in his business or property' within the meaning of [section 4 of the Clayton Act]."<sup>3</sup> Illinois Brick Co., 431 U.S. at 729. Thus, HN11<sup>4</sup>] indirect purchasers do not have a cause of action under federal antitrust law because they do not suffer a legally cognizable injury. See id. The Court in Illinois Brick Co. was concerned that permitting offensive use of the "pass-on" theory by indirect purchasers would create: 1) a risk of recovery of the entire overcharge by both the direct and indirect purchasers, resulting in multiple liability for the defendant; 2) difficulty in apportioning the responsibility for the overcharge among those in the chain of distribution; and 3) lack of incentive for direct purchasers to bring suit. Id. at 737-38. The Court further reasoned that permitting indirect purchasers to [**11] bring suit would result in highly complex litigation due to the necessity of determining the amount of the overcharge passed on to the indirect purchasers. Id. at 732.

HN13<sup>5</sup>] The Supreme Court's holding in Illinois Brick Co., however, applies only to federal antitrust law. Clearly, states may provide a remedy to indirect purchasers under their own antitrust laws. [California v. \[\*519\] ARC Am. Corp.](#), 490 U.S. 93, 103, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 (1989).

In response to Illinois Brick Co., many states [**12] amended their antitrust statutes to either provide indirect purchasers with a private right of action or permit the state's attorney general to bring an action as parens patriae on behalf of indirect purchasers.<sup>6</sup> The defendants identify various failed attempts by the Tennessee legislature to amend the TTPA to expressly permit indirect purchaser claims in support of its contention that the TTPA does not currently provide for such suits. HN14<sup>7</sup>] While legislative inaction is generally irrelevant to the interpretation of existing statutes, the legislature's failure to "express disapproval of a judicial construction of a statute is persuasive

<sup>2</sup> The defendants contend that permitting Freeman to recover the full consideration that it paid to the direct purchaser for the food products violates the constitutional principles of fairness and due process. Because we interpret Tennessee Code Annotated section 47-25-106 as permitting Freeman to recover only the amount of the overcharge that the direct purchaser passed on to Freeman, we need not reach this issue.

<sup>3</sup> Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, provides:

HN12<sup>8</sup>] Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

<sup>4</sup> See, e.g., Ala. Code § 6-5-60 (2004); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750 (1987); Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-111 (1992); D.C. Code Ann. § 28-4509 (1981); Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 480-3 (1987), 480-13 (2002), 480-14 (2003); 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7 (2003); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-161 (2000); Me. Rev. Stat. tit. 10, § 1104 (2004); Mich. Comp. Laws § 445.778 (1985); Minn. Stat. § 325D.57 (1984); Miss. Code Ann. § 75-21-9 (2005); Neb. Rev. Stat. § 59-821 (2002); Nev. Rev. Stat. § 598A.210 (1999); N.M. Stat. Ann. § 57-1-3 (1979); N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 (1999); N.D. Cent. Code § 51-08.1-08 (1991); Or. Rev. Stat. § 646.775 (2001); R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-12 (1979); S.D. Codified Laws § 37-1-33 (1991); Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 2465 (1999); Wis. Stat. § 133.18 (1987).

evidence of legislative adoption of the judicial construction." Hamby v. McDaniel, 559 S.W.2d 774, 776 (Tenn. 1977); see Forman, Inc. v. Nat'l Council on Comp. Ins., Inc., 13 S.W.3d 365, 373 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1999).

[**13] The present case, however, involves the Tennessee legislature's failure to amend a state statute in response to a federal court's interpretation of a federal statute. Furthermore, the United States Supreme Court has emphasized that its holding in Illinois Brick Co. applies only to federal antitrust law. ARC Am. Corp., 490 U.S. at 103. This case is this Court's first opportunity to address the issue of whether indirect purchasers have a cause of action under the TPPA. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to assert with any degree of assurance that [legislative] failure to act represents (1) approval of the status quo, as opposed to (2) inability to agree upon how to alter the status quo, (3) unawareness of the status quo, (4) indifference to the status quo, or even (5) political cowardice.

Johnson v. Transp. Agency Santa Clara County, Cal., 480 U.S. 616, 672, 94 L. Ed. 2d 615, 107 S. Ct. 1442 (1987) (Scalia, J., dissenting). Therefore, we, like other jurisdictions, decline to presume that our state legislature considered Illinois Brick Co. as affecting the TPPA and thus requiring an amendment to the current statute.

Furthermore, HN15 [↑] unlike [**14] many states that have applied Illinois Brick Co. in disallowing indirect purchasers from bringing a private action under their antitrust laws, Tennessee does not have a statutory "harmony clause" mandating courts to interpret the TPPA consistently with federal law. Cf. Stifflear v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., 931 P.2d 471, 476 (Colo. Ct. App. 1996); Vacco v. Microsoft Corp., 260 Conn. 59, 793 A.2d 1048, 1056 (Conn. 2002); Davidson v. Microsoft Corp., 143 Md. App. 43, 792 A.2d 336, 341 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2002); Major v. Microsoft Corp., 2002 OK CIV APP 120, 60 P.3d 511, 513 (Okla. Ct. App. 2002); Siena v. Microsoft Corp., 796 A.2d 461, 464 (R.I. 2002); Abbott Labs., Inc. v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503, 505, 38 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 961 (Tex. 1995). HN16 [↑] Thus, we join other jurisdictions in declining to interpret Illinois Brick Co. as precluding indirect purchasers from bringing suit under the TPPA. See Bunkers Glass Co. v. Pilkington PLC, 206 Ariz. 9, 75 P.3d 99, 107 (Ariz. [\[\*520\]](#) 2003); Comes v. Microsoft Corp., 646 N.W.2d 440, 445 (Iowa 2002); Hyde v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 123 N.C. App. 572, 473 S.E. 2d 680, 686-87 (N.C. Ct. App. 1996); [\[\*\*15\]](#) Arthur v. Microsoft Corp., 267 Neb. 586, 676 N.W.2d 29, 38 (Neb. 2004).

In addition, the concerns identified by the United States Supreme Court in Illinois Brick Co. do not justify prohibiting indirect purchaser suits under the TPPA. The Supreme Court expressed concerns regarding the possibility of multiple liability. Illinois Brick Co., 431 U.S. at 730. The risk that an antitrust violator may be subject to both a direct purchaser suit and an indirect purchaser suit under the TPPA does exist. Our trial courts, however, are competent to handle such a problem. See Bunkers Glass Co., 75 P.3d at 108; Comes, 646 N.W.2d at 449-50. In fact, many Illinois Brick Co. repealer statutes leave the solution of the risk of multiple liability to the trial courts. Bunkers Glass Co., 75 P.3d at 108 (citing statutes from Illinois, New Mexico, and South Dakota).

The Supreme Court also expressed concern regarding the decreased incentive for direct purchasers to bring suit. Illinois Brick Co., 431 U.S. at 745. The Court, however, recognized that direct purchasers likely will not bring suit due [**16] to fear of retaliation by their suppliers. Id. at 746. Rather, the direct purchasers frequently pass on the overcharge to the indirect consumers who are the injured parties. Id. at 764 (Brennan, J. dissenting); Comes, 646 N.W.2d at 450. The Supreme Court conceded that by allowing only direct purchaser actions, the person "actually injured," the indirect purchaser who ultimately paid the overcharge, is not afforded redress. Illinois Brick Co., 431 U.S. at 746. Thus, the indirect purchasers, the real victims of the antitrust violations, have the true incentive to bring suit. HN17 [↑] By construing Tennessee Code Annotated section 47-25-106 (2001) as permitting indirect purchaser suits, we are affording a remedy to the ultimate victims of the antitrust conduct. Accepting the defendants' position would leave such victims of illegal activity with no redress, a result that hardly comports with notions of fair play.

Finally, the Supreme Court expressed concern regarding the risk of highly complex litigation due to the difficulty in apportioning damages. Id. at 745-47. HN18 [↑] Antitrust, however, [\[\*\*17\]](#) is a complex area of law and generally involves highly complex litigation. See Comes, 646 N.W.2d at 451. We do not believe that the ends of justice should be defeated simply because the risk of complicated litigation exists. See id.

Accordingly, we conclude that HN19↑ an indirect purchaser may bring an action under Tennessee Code Annotated section 47-25-106 for conduct in violation of the TPPA even though the indirect purchaser is a non-resident of this state.

2. Scope of the TPPA

We must next determine whether the conduct complained of falls within the scope of the TPPA. Tennessee Code Annotated section 47-25-101 (2001) provides that all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, full and free competition in the importation or sale of articles imported into this state, or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or of domestic raw material, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, or which tend, to advance, [\[\*\*18\]](#) reduce, or control the price or the cost to [\[\*521\]](#) the producer or the consumer of any such product or article, are declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

This Court last addressed the reach of the TPPA in Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S.W. 705, 709 \(1907\), in which we held that this state's antitrust statutes did not apply to interstate commerce "when properly construed" and that the statute's purpose was to "correct and prohibit abuses of trade within the state." At the time of this holding, a theory of dual sovereignty presuming mutually exclusive jurisdiction for state and federal regulation prevailed. See Abbott Labs. v. Durrett, 746 So. 2d 316, 330-34 \(Ala. 1999\) (discussing the theory of dual sovereignty).

