"IX. -- If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create in Texas, or carry out in Texas, restrictions in the free pursuit in this State of the business of selling oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, [***26] or to fix, maintain or increase the price of such oil in Texas, or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of such oil, and that the defendant remained or was a party to and acted under such combination, if such there were on March 31, 1903, or any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph nine of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant became a party to a trust of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, that it remained a party to and acted under such trust, if there were any such days, would constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into a combination of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, for the purpose of creating in Texas, or which tended to create or carry out in Texas restrictions in the free [***27] pursuit in this State of the business of selling said character and kind of oil, or to fix, maintain or increase the price of such oil in Texas, or to prevent or lessen competition in Texas, in the sale of such oil, and that the defendant remained or was a party to, and acted under, such combination, if such there were subsequent to March 30, 1903, and prior to April 30, 1907, you will say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph nine of the court's charge.

[*174] "X. -- If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, and that they were placed under such common management or control, if any, by their respectively authorized officers, under such circumstances, that such common management or control, if such there were, created or tended to create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of oil of the kind and character mentioned in the last preceding paragraph [***28] of this charge, or to fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil, or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph ten of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, that it remained a party to such monopoly, if there were any such days, constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the direction of the affairs of the defendant corporation and the affairs of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey were under the same management or control on March 31, 1903, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, and that they were brought under such common management or control, if any, by their respectively authorized officers under such circumstances that such common management or control, if such there were, created or tended to [***29] create or carry out restrictions in the sale in Texas of such oil, or fix, maintain or increase the price in Texas of such oil, or to prevent or lessen in Texas the competition in the sale of such oil, you will say by your verdict, we, [**923] the jury, find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph ten of the court's charge.

"XI. -- If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation and thereby effected a combination of said two corporations, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if any, with the purpose and intention on part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of the character and kind of oil above mentioned, or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will return a [***30] verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eleven of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant entered into a monopoly of the character mentioned in this paragraph [*175] of the charge, each day between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, that it remained a party to such monopoly, if there were any such days, constituted a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had on March 31, 1903, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to April 29, 1907, acquired a majority of the capital stock of the defendant corporation, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that said stock was acquired and combination effected, if it were at all, with the purpose and intention on the part of the managing officers and directors of said Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of preventing or lessening the competition in the sale in Texas of said character and kind of oil, or that the effect of said combination, if such there were, [***31] tended to affect or lessen the competition in the sale in Texas of said oil, you will say by your verdict, we, the jury, find in defendant's favor on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eleven of the court's charge.

"XII. -- The evidence introduced before you does not show with sufficient definiteness that the defendant has, since May 31, 1900, acted under or persisted in the performance of either the contract with Clem and the Eagle Refining Company and others, or the contract with Roy Campbell and the Texas Oil and Gasoline Company, in such a manner as to violate the anti-trust laws of 1899 or 1903. You are, therefore, instructed to find in defendant's favor on the issues pleaded by the State with reference to said contracts.

"XIII. -- Evidence has been introduced before you tending to show that the defendant has given rebates and discounts in the course of its dealings; evidence has also been introduced before you tending to show that defendant has made contracts and entered into understandings other than those which have been submitted for your consideration in paragraphs seven to eleven, inclusive, of this charge. Evidence has also been introduced before [***32] you tending to show the general course of dealings of defendant in Texas and elsewhere, including some of its business methods in meeting competition. You are instructed that none of this evidence shows or tends to show any violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas, unless it tends in some degree to establish some one or more of the issues submitted for your consideration in the last above mentioned paragraphs of this charge; and you are therefore instructed to acquit the defendant and return a general verdict for it, notwithstanding any and all of said evidence, unless you find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for your consideration in some one or more of said paragraphs of the charge.

"XIV. -- If you convict the defendant under the foregoing instructions of any violation or violations of the anti-trust law of 1899, you will specify in your verdict the date or days for which it is convicted of having violated said law, and will further specify in your verdict that for said violation or violations, if any you find, that its permit to do business in Texas shall be forfeited, and the amount of money which shall be adjudged against it as penalties [*176] for said violations, [***33] if any. In fixing the penalties, if any, which you assess against the defendant for any violations of which you may convict it, of the anti-trust law of 1899, you will fix same at not less than two hundred dollars, or more than five hundred dollars per day for each day you find it has so violated the law. If you convict the defendant of any violations of the anti-trust law of 1903, you will specify in your verdict the date or days for which it is so convicted and further specify therein that as a result of said conviction, its permit to do business in Texas shall be forfeited, and the sum of money that shall be adjudged against it as a penalty for such violation, fixing said sum at fifty dollars per day for each and every day that you convict it of having violated said law.

"XV. -- In order to aid you in preparing your verdict in proper form, when you have reached same, the following forms of verdicts are submitted for your consideration:

"1. -- If you find in favor of the State on all of the issues submitted to you and for the entire time for which penalties are claimed by the State against the defendant in its petition, you will say: 'We, the jury, find for the plaintiff against [***34] the defendant on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for the penalties at __ Dollars; and we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted for each of the days [**924] between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty-eight days, and fix the penalties at Seventy-four Thousand Four Hundred Dollars. We further find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be canceled. We find for the defendant upon all the issues made by the pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court.'

"2. -- If you find in favor of the State on some of the issues submitted for your consideration, relating to the alleged violation of the anti-trust law of 1899, and in favor of the State with reference to some of the alleged violations of the anti-trust law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict:

"We, the jury, find in favor of the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in the following paragraphs of the court's charge ----.

"We further find that the defendant violated the anti-trust laws of Texas [***35] on the following days embraced between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903 ----.

"We further find that on account of said violations, the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of __ Dollars. We further find that the defendant violated the anti-trust laws of 1903, on the following days embraced between the 30th day of March, 1903, and the 29th day of April, 1907 ----.

"We further find that on account of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of __ Dollars. On all other issues raised by the pleadings, we find in favor of the defendant.

[*177] "3. -- If you find in favor of the State with reference to some or all of the alleged violations of the anti-trust law of 1899, submitted for your consideration, and if you find in favor of the defendant on other of said alleged violations, and if you find in favor of the defendant on the issue of all of the alleged violations of the antitrust law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict:

"We, the jury find in favor of [***36] the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in the following paragraph of the court's charge ___. We further find that the defendant has violated the antitrust laws of Texas on each of the following days embraced between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903 ----; we further find that because of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited and penalties should be imposed upon it in the amount of __ Dollars. We further find in defendant's favor on all alleged violations of the anti-trust laws of 1903, and on all other issues made by the pleadings.

"If you find in defendant's favor on all issues submitted for your consideration relating to its alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of 1899, but find in favor of the State on all or some of the issues relating to defendant's alleged violation of the anti-trust law of 1903, you may use the following form of verdict: "We, the jury, find in defendant's favor on all issues submitted for our consideration relating to its alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of 1899, but find in favor of the State under the following paragraphs of the court's charge: __, for alleged [***37] violations of the anti-trust laws of 1903. We further find that the defendant has violated said anti-trust laws on each of the following days embraced between March 30, 1903, and April 29, 1907, __. We further find that on account of said violations the permit of the defendant to do business in Texas should be forfeited, and that penalties should be imposed upon it in the sum of __ Dollars.

"5. -- If you desire to return a general verdict for defendant you may use the following form of verdict: We, the jury, find for the defendant.

"XVI. -- You are the exclusive judges of the facts proved, of the credibility of the witnesses, and of the weight to be given to their testimony; but you are bound to take the law as it is given you in charge by the court, and to be governed thereby in arriving at your verdict."

All requested instructions were refused. The verdict of the jury reads as follows:

"We the jury, find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each of the issues submitted to us for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, being 1033 days, and for penalties 1,549,500.00 dollars.

"And we find for the plaintiff against the defendant on each [***38] of the issues submitted for each of the days between April 1, 1903, and April 29, 1907, being fourteen hundred and eighty-eight days, and fix the penalties at seventy-four thousand four hundred dollars.

[*178] "We further find that the permit of the defendant to do business in the State of Texas should be canceled.

"We find for the defendant upon all issues made by the pleadings and not submitted in the charge of the court."

The court rendered judgment for the State in accordance with the verdict for $ 1,623,900, and a cancellation of the defendant's permit to do business in this State. The defendant has appealed and presents the case in this Court on one hundred and twenty-nine assignments of error.

There is evidence in the record which supports the findings of the jury, and we find the facts to be as found by the verdict.

Opinion. -- 1. -- Assisted by elaborate briefs and arguments submitted by able counsel on both sides, this court has given to this important case earnest and careful consideration. The volume of business on our docket and the great number of questions presented preclude extended [**925] consideration in this opinion of many of the questions raised [***39] in appellant's brief. We therefore announce, in general terms, our conclusion to the effect that it is not shown that error was committed in overruling appellant's application for a change of venue, in various rulings upon exceptions to pleadings, and as to admissibility of testimony.

A majority of the court also hold that no positive error has been assigned upon the charge of the court. The writer of this opinion is of a different view concerning the 11th section of the charge, and concurs with counsel for appellant in their contention that it was calculated to mislead the jury into the belief that they could find against the defendant upon the issue therein submitted, regardless of whether it had any knowledge of, participated with, or aided or abetted the Standard Oil Company in the wrongful conduct therein referred to. The provision of the anti-trust statute of March 31, 1903, upon which the charge in question was evidently founded, seems to be addressed, in the main, against the corporation which acquires stock or other property of another corporation with the intention of using it for the purpose specified in the statute, and it can not properly be construed to include the corporation [***40] whose stock or property has been acquired, and subject it to the penalties prescribed by the statute, unless that corporation is, in some manner, responsible for the unlawful acts of the acquiring corporation.

These are my individual views, and the other members of the court do not concur in the construction placed by me upon the charge. However, we are all agreed that if the charge in question be erroneous, it affords no ground for reversal, because the jury found that appellant had violated other provisions of the anti-trust Act of 1903, and awarded only one penalty for each day's violation. Having found for the State on these other issues, if the verdict had been in appellant's favor on the issue submitted by the charge under consideration, the judgment should have been the same; and therefore if that section of the charge was erroneous, such error is now harmless and immaterial.

In reference to the assignments of error complaining of the order [*179] of the court appointing a receiver, it is sufficient to say that appellant has exercised its right to prosecute a separate appeal from that order, and this court, in considering that appeal, has decided against appellant. It [***41] is not entitled to have the order appointing a receiver reviewed by this court twice or in two distinct proceedings.

2. -- The constitutionality and validity of the anti-trust Acts of May 25, 1899, and March 31, 1903, have been vigorously assailed in numerous respects. We overrule these objections and hold that these statutes authorize and sustain this suit. (State v. Laredo Ice Company, 96 Tex. 461; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. The State, 44 S.W. 936.)

The contention that these statutes are too indefinite and uncertain in the particulars involved in this case is not regarded as tenable. HN1[<sup>1</sup>] The Sherman Anti-trust Law enacted by Congress is not more definite and specific than these statutes, and that law has stood the test against similar objections in the Supreme Court of the United States. (United States v. Knight Company, 156 U.S. 1; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290; United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U.S. 505; Hopkins v. United States, 171 U.S. 578; Anderson v. United States, 171 U.S. 604; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211; Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38; Northern Securities Company v. United States, 193 U.S. 197.)

3. -- [***42] This suit was instituted on September 22, 1906, and the defendant interposed a special exception to the petition insofar as it sought to recover penalties for alleged violation of the anti-trust laws of this State prior to the 22d day of September, 1904, for the reason that it appeared from the face of the plaintiff's petition that the right to recover such penalties accrued more than two years before the suit was filed; and was therefore barred by the statute of limitation of two years, as prescribed in article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of this State. That exception was overruled, and the court refused to give the jury a special instruction, requested by appellant, announcing and applying the same proposition of law. These rulings of the trial court are assigned as error, and present one of the most important questions in the case. Chapter 1 of title 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is headed thus: "The time within which criminal actions may be commenced:" Article 219 reads as follows: HN2[<sup>1</sup>] "For all misdemeanors an indictment or information may be presented within two years from the commission of the offense and not after-ward."

By the Penal Code HN3[<sup>1</sup>] offenses which are punishable [***43] by pecuniary fine only are designated misdemeanors; and appellant's contention seems to be that the things condemned by the Act of May 25, 1899, upon which this suit in part is based, constitute misdemeanors; and that, although civil in form, the suit is criminal in nature and barred by article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is also contended that the pecuniary penalties imposed by the Act of March 31, 1903, constitute part of the punishment prescribed by that Act, and that the suit for the penalties accruing thereunder constitutes [*180] a criminal case, and is barred by article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, [**926] which bars prosecutions for felonies.

HN4[<sup>1</sup>] The second, third, fourth and sixth sections of the Act of May 25, 1899, declare that all persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons who violate those sections "shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in this Act." HN5[<sup>1</sup>] The 11th section states that all who do the things therein condemned shall be "adjudged a monopoly and be subject to all the pains and penalties provided in this Act." HN6[<sup>1</sup>] The seventh section provides for the forfeiture [***44] of the charter of any domestic corporation and permit to do business granted to any foreign corporation for violations of the statute. HN7[<sup>1</sup>] The 5th section reads as follows: "Any person, partnership, firm or association, or any representative or agent thereof, or any corporation or company, or any officer, representative or agent thereof, violating any of the provisions of this Act shall forfeit not less than two hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars for every such offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense, the penalties in such cases to be recovered by an action in the name of the State at the relation of the Attorney-General or the district or county attorney; the moneys thus collected to go into the State treasury, and to become a part of the general fund, except as hereinafter provided."

The pertinent part of the 9th section is expressed in these words: HN8 "It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General and the prosecuting attorney of each district or county, respectively, to enforce the provisions of this Act. The Attorney-General and the prosecuting attorney shall institute and conduct all [***45] suits begun in the District Courts, and upon appeal the Attorney-General shall prosecute said suits in the Courts of Civil Appeals and Supreme Court."

The first section of the anti-trust Act of March 31, 1903, defines a trust. The second section defines a monopoly, and the third section prescribes what acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade. The fourth section declares all trusts, monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade to be illegal. The 5th, 6th and 7th sections make provision for the forfeiture of charters of domestic corporations violating that Act, and the 8th section makes a similar provision in reference to the permit of foreign corporations to do business in this State. The 7th and 10th sections use the word "convicted," but the 7th relates to the subject of the forfeiture of charter rights, and the tenth to the subject of forfeiture of a foreign corporation's right to do business in the State, which shows that the Legislature did not have in mind a proceeding by indictment or criminal information. HN9 The 11th section reads as follows:

"Each and every firm, person, corporation or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions [***46] of this Act shall for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars, which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside, or in Travis County, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, or [*181] the district or county attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to prosecute for the recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the State in proceedings under this Act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill."

The 13th section of that Act reads as follows: "And in addition to the penalties and forfeitures herein provided for, every person violating this Act may further be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than ten years."

We agree with counsel for appellant that these statutes are penal. They were enacted for the purpose of suppressing and preventing certain things regarded by the Legislature as detrimental to the public interest. The penalties prescribed were intended as punishment, but it does not follow [***47] that this is a criminal case within the purview of article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. After a careful consideration of all their terms, we have reached the conclusion that HN10 it was the intention of the Legislature in enacting the two statutes under consideration to create a cause of action in behalf of the State for the pecuniary penalties therein prescribed, to be recovered in a civil suit.

We reach this conclusion mainly from the language of the 5th section of the Act of 1899, and the 11th section of the Act of 1903. These sections declare that those who violate any of the provisions of those Acts shall forfeit and pay, in the one instance not less than $ 200 nor more than $ 5000, and in the other instance $ 50, to be recovered in an action in the name of the State. It is true that in some places in these laws the procedure is designated "prosecutions," but in others they are spoken of as "actions" and "suits." In the 9th section of the Act of 1899, it is declared to be the duty of the Attorney-General and district and county attorneys "to institute and conduct all suits begun in the District Courts, and upon appeal the Attorney-General shall prosecute said suits [***48] in the Courts of Civil Appeals and Supreme Court."

Section 5 of that Act, construed in connection with section 9, indicates with absolute certainty a legislative purpose to authorize civil suits for the recovery of the pecuniary penalties prescribed. The two sections together indicate that it was not intended that such penalties should be enforced by a criminal proceeding, because if that act creates a criminal offense [**927] such offense would be a misdemeanor, of which the District Court would have no jurisdiction. The Constitution confers upon that court exclusive jurisdiction of suits by the State for forfeitures and penalties, and it must be presumed that in enacting that statute, the Legislature intended to provide for such suits as were authorized by that provision of the Constitution, and not to create criminal offenses of which the County Court alone would have original jurisdiction, otherwise the Legislature would not have used the language, "shall institute and conduct all suits begun in the District Courts."

It is true that both of these statutes contain some expressions common to criminal procedure, such as "offense," "guilty" and "convicted." The word "guilty," [***49] however, is frequently used in civil cases, [*182] as "guilty of fraud," "guilty of negligence." And the word "offense," as used in these statutes, has reference to violations of their provisions, and is not equivalent to the words "felony" or "misdemeanor." However, we do not hold that it is necessary to use either of the latter terms to create a criminal offense; nor, on the other hand, do we think that the words "offense," "guilty" and "convicted" necessarily determine that these are criminal statutes to be enforced exclusively by indictment or information. The word "suit" is very generally used to designate a civil case, and seldom if ever applied to criminal cases.

As these statutes do not, in terms, require a resort to criminal procedure for their enforcement, then, even if they do not direct any method of enforcement, we are of the opinion that the State had the right to proceed in a civil action for a recovery of the pecuniary penalties. In such cases it is a well established rule that HN11[<sup>1</sup>] an action of debt will lie for the recovery of statutory penalties. (5 Ency. Plead. & Prac. 907, and authorities there cited.) It has been so decided in this State in Davidson v. Missouri [***50] Pacific Ry. Co., 3 Texas App. Civ. 173, where it was held that a suit to recover a statutory penalty was an action of debt, and barred by our statute of limitation, which requires actions for debt, where the indebtedness is not evidenced by a contract in writing, to be commenced within two years. That HN12[<sup>1</sup>] the State may also bring an action for debt for the recovery of statutory penalties seems to be equally well settled. It was so held by the Supreme Court of the United States in Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 531. That was an action by the government to recover double the value of certain shingles, alleged to have been illegally imported into the United States. The Act of Congress upon which the suit was founded reads as follows: "That if any person or persons shall receive, conceal or buy any goods, wares or merchandise, knowing them to have been illegally imported into the United States, and liable to seizure by virtue of any act in relation to the revenue, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum double the amount or value of the goods, wares or merchandise so received, concealed or purchased." In that case, among other things, the court said:

[***51] "A verdict and judgment having been recovered against the defendants in the court below, the record has been removed into this court and four errors have been assigned.

"The first is that a civil action of debt will not lie, at the suit of the United States, to recover the forfeitures or penalties incurred under this Act of Congress, and that the court below erred in holding that such an action might be maintained. It is not contended that an action of debt will not lie to recover duties, if the defendant be the owner or importer of the goods imported, for it is conceded that by the act of importing, an obligation to pay the duties is incurred. The obligation springs out of the statutes which impose duties. Nor is it doubted that when a statute gives a private person a right to recover a penalty for a violation of law he may maintain an action of debt, but it is insisted that when the government proceeds for a penalty based on an offense against law, it must be by indictment or by information. No authority has been adduced in support of this [*183] position, and it is believed that none exists. It can not be that whether an action of debt is maintainable or not depends upon [***52] the question who is the plaintiff. Debt lies whenever a sum certain is due to the plaintiff, or a sum which can readily be reduced to a certainty -- a sum requiring no future valuation to settle its amount. It is not necessarily founded upon contract. It is immaterial in what manner the obligation was incurred, or by what it is evidenced, if the sum owing is capable of being definitely ascertained. The Act of 1823 (3 Stat. at L., 781), fixes the amount of the liability at double the value of the goods received, concealed or purchased, and the only party injured by the illegal acts, which subject the perpetrators to the liability is the United States. It would seem, therefore, that whether the liability incurred is to be regarded as a penalty or as liquidated damages for an injury done to the United States, it is a debt, and as such it must be recoverable in a civil action.

"But all doubts respecting the matter are set at rest by the fourth section of the Act, which enacted that all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force thereof shall be sued for, recovered, distributed and accounted for in the manner prescribed by the Act of March 2, 1799 (1 Stat. at L., 627), entitled 'An Act [***53] to regulate the collection of duties on Imports and Tonnage.' By referring to the 89th section of that Act, it will be seen that it directs all penalties accruing by any breach of the Act, to be sued for and recovered, with costs of suit, in the name of the United States of America, in any court competent to try the same; and the collector [**928] within whose district a forfeiture shall have been incurred, is enjoined to cause suits for the same to be commenced without delay. This manifestly contemplates civil actions, as does the proviso to the same section, which declares that no action or prosecution shall be maintained in any case under the Act, unless the same shall have been commenced within three years after the penalty or forfeiture was incurred. Accordingly, it has been frequently ruled that debt will lie at the suit of the United States, to recover the penalties and forfeitures imposed by statutes. United States v. Colt. Pet. (C. C.), 145; Jacob v. United States, 1 Brock. 520; United States v. Bougner, 6 McLean 277; Walsh v. United States, 3 Wood. & M. 342; United States v. Lyman, 1 Mas. 482; United States v. Allen, 4 Day 474. It is true that the statute of 1823 imposes [***54] the forfeiture and liability to pay double the value of the goods received, concealed or purchased with knowledge that they had been illegally imported, 'on conviction thereof.' It may be, therefore, that an indictment or information might be sustained. But the question now is whether a civil action can be brought, and, in view of the provision that all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force of the Act shall 'be sued for and recovered,' as prescribed by the Act of 1799, we are of the opinion that debt is maintainable. The expression 'sued for and recovered' is primarily applicable to civil actions, and not to those of a criminal nature."

As to the point made in reference to the penalties being indefinite under the Act of 1899, in addition to the case just cited, we refer to Rockwell v. State, 11 Ohio 130, where the law fixed the penalty at not less than $ 5 nor more than $ 50, and the objection referred [*184] to was overruled, and it was held that an action of debt would lie. Other courts have held that statutes somewhat similar to those under consideration confer upon the State a cause of action to be maintained in a civil suit. (Burgh v. State, 108 Ind. 132; [Davis, Admr., \[\*\*\*55\] v. State, 119 Ind. 555](#); State v. Grove, 77 Wis. 448; Territory of New Mexico v. Baca, 2 N.M. 183.) Interesting discussions of the terms "fines," "forfeitures" and "penalties" will also be found in People v. Nedrow, 122 Ill. 363; Gosselfink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa 296.

Our conclusion is that the statutes under consideration vest in the State a civil right of action for the pecuniary penalties prescribed for violations of the provisions of those statutes. This being true, and as our statute of limitations applicable to civil cases does not include and bar the State, we hold that limitation is not available as a defense in this case. We do not rest this ruling upon the ground that the statutes under consideration do not create criminal offenses. HN13↑] If it be conceded that they create such offenses, criminal prosecutions for which would be barred within two years, it does not follow that the penalties which might have been recovered by such prosecutions can not, when authorized, be recovered in a civil action. Our Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure deal exclusively with criminal cases, and that portion of the latter which deals with the subject of limitation only purports to fix the time [***56] within which criminal actions may be commenced; and article 219, relied on by appellant, merely forbids prosecutions by indictment or information after two years from the commission of the offense.

It is argued on behalf of appellant that, even though a statute creating an offense may confer upon the State the right to maintain a civil action to recover a pecuniary penalty for violating the statute, still that right would be barred by article 219, which would bar the right to enforce the penalty by indictment or information. If article 219, or any other statute, declared that no right of action should exist or no sort of proceeding be instituted for the collection of a penalty after two years, appellant's contention would be correct; but that article is much narrower in its scope and merely prohibits prosecutions in the manner and by the means prescribed for the prosecution of criminal cases. It may be true that the same general result would be sought in the one case as in the other, viz.: recovery of the penalty, and if that were the only thing to be considered, there would be force in the argument that in prohibiting criminal prosecutions after a specified time the Legislature intended [***57] thereby to prevent any other character of procedure which had for its purpose the accomplishment of the same general result. If the two proceedings, civil and criminal, were not so essentially different the contention urged might be sustained; but the statutes under consideration apply to natural persons as well as corporations, and as to such persons, civil and criminal proceedings are widely different. In a civil action against an individual to recover a penalty he is notified of the suit by delivering to him a citation. When the case is tried, if he loses, the only result is a personal judgment against him for a specified sum of money to be collected by execution and not otherwise. But if he is proceeded against criminally for the enforcement of a penalty he is arrested [*185] and required to give bond or stay in jail until after the case is tried. Upon trial, if he is convicted, the judgment not only goes against him for the penalty, but unless he pays it, he is again incarcerated in jail. Thus it will be seen that in a criminal proceeding to enforce the penalty the defendant would necessarily be subjected to the ignominy of an arrest by a public officer, and, upon contingencies [***58] which often occur, would be incarcerated in jail. Now, when the Legislature prescribed a time which would prevent a prosecution fraught [**929] with these serious consequences, does it necessarily follow that it intended to cut off any right the State might have to obtain a personal judgment for a pecuniary penalty, without resorting to a procedure that would bring about any such harsh results? We think not. HN14[] In prescribing limitation for criminal proceedings we believe the Legislature had in mind cases criminal, both in substance and form, and had no intention of affecting any right the State might assert in a civil action.

Chief Justice Marshall, in *Adams v. Woods, 2 Cranch 336*, announced that if a law should merely declare that no indictment or information should be presented after a specified time, such law would be pleadable only in bar of indictments or informations, and would not bar a civil action for a recovery of the penalty prescribed for violating a statute.

An offense which is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary absolutely or in the alternative, is a felony; and as the anti-trust Act of 1903 fixes confinement in the penitentiary as an alternative punishment, [***59] appellant pleaded article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in bar of the State's right to recover part of the penalties sued for under that Act. Article 218 is framed like article 219, and would apply to a criminal prosecution based upon the Act of 1903 and bar such prosecution after three years. As we hold that it was the intention of the Legislature to confer upon the State the right to maintain a civil action for the pecuniary penalties therein prescribed, we hold that such right of action is not barred by article 218. In other words, while the penalties referred to were intended, in a certain sense, as punishment, they were not imposed as punishment to be inflicted through the onerous instrumentalities of a criminal prosecution.

Appellant also pleaded the statute of limitation of two and four years embodied in the Revised Statutes and applicable to civil cases. It is contended that the two years statute has application upon the theory that if the State's suit is an action of debt, and not instituted for the preservation of the public rights, revenues or property, then the State should not be exempt from limitation, but should be treated as any other litigant. It is the rule [***60] of the common law of England that unless so expressly enacted, limitation does not run against the sovereign, and that is the rule in the American States. We are not prepared to place upon that rule the restriction urged, but if we should do so it would not be proper to apply it to this case. In seeking to recover the penalties here involved, the State is endeavoring to enforce statutes enacted for the protection of the public interest. One of the main objects of the suit is to protect and preserve public rights and promote a well established public policy.

[*186] In view of what we have already said it is hardly necessary to add that we regard the four years statute of limitation as equally unavailing. In *Brown v. Sneed, 77 Tex. 471*, which holds that HN15[] limitation does not apply to the State unless so expressly provided, the authorities are collated and reviewed. We also hold that no error was committed in refusing a charge to the effect that the State must prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. Being a civil case, the rule does not apply.

4. -- It is contended on behalf of appellant that the anti-trust Act of May 25, 1899, was rendered unconstitutional by the passage of another [***61] statute at the same session of the Legislature entitled "An Act to protect workingmen in the right of organization and the purposes thereof," approved May 27, 1899, wherein it was provided that from and after its passage it should be lawful for any and all persons engaged in any kind of work or labor, manual or mental, or both, to associate themselves together and form trades unions and other organizations for the purpose of protecting themselves in their personal work, personal labor and personal service in their respective pursuits and employments. By the third section it is declared that that Act shall not apply to combinations or associations of capital or capital and persons natural or artificial, formed for the purpose of limiting the production or consumption of labor's products, or for any other purpose in restraint of trade, and that nothing therein contained shall be held to interfere with the terms and conditions of private contracts with regard to the time of service or other stipulations between employers and employees, and "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal, affect or diminish the force and effect of any statute now existing on the subject of trusts, [***62] conspiracies against trade, pools and monopolies." In view of these limitations placed upon that act, we are of the opinion that it was not the intention of the Legislature to authorize anything to be done that was prohibited by the Act of May 25, 1899. Hence, we hold that this statute engrafts no exemptions upon the anti-trust statute referred to.

5. -- The anti-trust statute of May 25, 1899, having been superseded and repealed by the Act of March 31, 1903, which diminished the pecuniary penalties, appellant sought to have the latter statute applied to the time before as well as after it went into effect. This was refused, and we think properly so, on account of HN16[<sup>1</sup>] this proviso in the latter Act: "provided nothing in this Act shall be held or construed to affect or destroy any rights of the State of Texas to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in this State, for acts committed before this Act took effect." We are of opinion that this proviso preserved whatever rights the State had under the former law, including the right to enforce the penalties prescribed by that [\[\*\*930\]](#) Act. We are unable to concur [\[\*\*\*63\]](#) in the proposition that it was merely intended to preserve the right to, but not the amount of, the penalties. Nor can we sanction the proposition that because of the location of a comma in the proviso quoted, it was the intention of the Legislature to protect and preserve the right of the State to recover penalties from domestic corporations and not preserve such right as against [\[\*187\]](#) foreign corporations. No reason existing for making such a marked discrimination, we are not willing to hold that it was the intention of the Legislature to do so, merely because a comma was so used as to render that construction plausible. HN17[<sup>1</sup>] In construing written laws courts are not bound by rules of grammar, and may disregard them in order to give effect to manifest legislative intention.

6. -- It is claimed that the trial court should have granted appellant's motion for a new trial based upon the ground that the judgment imposes excessive fines, and operates as a deprivation of property without due process of law. It is also contended that the Act of 1899 should be declared void, because it authorizes excessive fines and forfeitures. That question has already been decided against appellant's [\[\*\*\*64\]](#) contention in State v. Laredo Ice Co., 96 Tex. 461. The verdict, while large, is much under the maximum permitted by the law. Its magnitude is mainly attributable to appellant's repeated and long-continued violations of the law, covering a period of six years. Hence, we have reached the conclusion that the verdict is not so large as to render it manifest that the jury were actuated by prejudice or other improper motives.

7. -- In appellant's motion for a new trial in the court below, and in its presentation of the case here, the verdict of the jury has been challenged, the contention being that the testimony fails to show that appellant has violated any of the anti-trust laws of this State. The evidence is very voluminous, and it is not necessary that it be set out or epitomized in this opinion. It is sufficient, we think, to show that from the date of its permit to do business in this State, May 31, 1900, appellant has been a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, one object of which was to create a monopoly and control the price of petroleum oil and prevent competition in its sale in a large and specified territory, including the State [\[\*\*\*65\]](#) of Texas; and that, to a large extent, such object has been accomplished. Insofar as that agreement related to this State, appellant, acting by its agents, performed it within this State; and such performance within the limits of the State constitutes violations of Texas laws and renders appellant amenable to such laws, although the agreement between it and the Standard Oil Company may not have been made in this State. To a large extent the case rests upon circumstantial evidence; but we can not say that the jury were not warranted in the conclusions drawn from it. Hence, we hold that the verdict is supported by testimony, and no error was committed in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Upon the whole case our conclusion is that reversible error has not been shown, and therefore the judgment will be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Writ of error refused.

Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co.

Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit

September 10, 1908

No. 1,797

Reporter

164 F. 803 *; 1908 U.S. App. LEXIS 4678 **; 9 Ohio L. Rep. 37

DR. MILES MEDICAL CO. v. JOHN D. PARK & SONS CO.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucky.

Core Terms

---

proprietor, retail, consignee, Medicines, monopoly, wholesale, jobbers, retail price, dozen, contracts, formula, percent, consignment, articles, dealer, prices, proprietary, agrees, discount, invoice, parties, secret, advances, restrain, selling, patent, unsold, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Duration & Renewal > General Overview

HN1 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

A distinction exists between the extent of the protection granted by the patent and copyright statutes, and the copyright statute has been held not to create the right to impose, by notice, a limitation at which a book shall be sold at retail by future purchasers, with whom there is no privity of contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A trade secret or medical formula is a monopoly until discovered by fair means, and will be protected against abuse by one who learns it under a contract limiting its use or in the confidence of an employment.

Counsel: Frank F. Reed (Edward S. Rogers and Frederick W. Hinkle, on the brief), for appellant.

William J. Shroder, for appellee.

Opinion by: LURTON

Opinion

---

[*804] Before LURTON, SEVERENS, and RICHARDS, Circuit Judges.

LURTON, Circuit Judge. We see no substantial difference between the systems of contracts under which the Dr. Miles Medical Company is now conducting its business and that under which Dr. Hartman carried on his business as a manufacturer of Peruna, considered by this court at length in the case of Jno. D. Park & Sons v. Hartman, 153 Fed. 24, 82 C.C.A. 158, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135. That case is pending, undecided, in the Supreme Court. The complainant's very learned counsel was the counsel for Hartman in that case, and both systems of contracts are most probably the fruit of his acknowledged skill in respect to this class of business arrangements. No difference whatever is suggested between the system of contracts considered in that case and those here presented, except, it is claimed, that the agreement with jobbers and wholesale dealers here involved is one of bailment or agency [**2] and not one of sale as in the Hartman Case. If this were admitted, it does not, in our judgment, operate to legalize the "system" of which that agreement is but one part. The effect of that contract with jobbers, whether it be regarded as one of sale or of agency, is to restrain jobbers from selling to any save retailers licensed by complainant, and to restrain retailers from selling for resale to any save those licensed to buy or to persons who buy for consumption only, and to none, by either jobber or retailer, except at a price imposed by the manufacturer. The confessed object of this plan or system is to obtain a price to the jobber and to the retailer unaffected by any competition between them. The scheme is one to enhance or maintain prices by eliminating all possibility of competing rates between either jobbers or retailers, and is quite as effectual in its results as if the contract with the jobber was plainly one of sale.

But we are not disposed to concede that the contracts with jobbers are contracts of bailment. There are too many features which seem inconsistent with a mere agency or commission agreement. All the responsibility of an owner seems cast upon the so-called [**3] "consignee." He is not given the right to return goods unsold; that can be done only upon the cancellation of the contract and demand for return. The [*805] retention of title for the security of the price would after all make the contract one of conditional sale, and the jobber would still be the general owner and responsible as such. Curiously enough, the actual payment of the price at which the consignment is billed is not to affect the title; it is still, under the contract, to remain with the so-called "consignor." Yet the heavy inducement of 5 per cent. upon a very close class of goods is held out to induce a payment in advance of sales. It is difficult to believe, whatever the technical relation of the parties under such an agreement, and whatever the belief each may have had as to his relation to the other, that such jobbers were not in fact and law the general owners of goods so "consigned," and engaged in selling for themselves and not as the mere agents, del credere or otherwise, of the complainant. The scheme seems to be an effort to disguise the wholesale dealers in the mask of agency upon the theory that in that character one link in the system for the suppression [**4] of the "cut rate" business might be regarded as valid. Hardly any two contracts raising the question of sale or agency are so near alike as to make an opinion construing one an authority in another. It matters little what the parties call such agreements. Whether the result is a sale or an agency must depend upon the meaning and intent of the instrument as a whole. Looking at this agreement thus, we think the jobber must be regarded as the general owner and engaged in selling for himself and not as a mere agent of another. True, he must sell, if this system of doing business is valid and enforceable, as he obligates himself to do, but nevertheless he is selling for himself and upon his own account and risk. Coweta Fertilizer Co. v. Brown (decided at this term, and cases therein cited) 163 Fed. 162; Ex parte White, L.R. 1870, 6 Ch. App. Cases; Mack v. Drummond Tobacco Co., 48 Neb. 397, 67 N.W. 174, 58 Am. St. Rep. 691; Peoria Co. v.

Lyons, 153 Ill. 427, 38 N.E. 661; Arbuckle v. Kirkpatrick, 98 Tenn. 221, 39 S.W. 3, 36 L.R.A. 285, 60 Am. St. Rep. 854.

This case must, after all, turn upon whether there is such identity of character between the statutory monopoly of articles made [**5] under a valid patent or copyright and articles made according to some private formula as to exempt them from the principles which apply to contracts which tend to create a monopoly or restrain trade when the subject is an article not made under a patent or copyright or secret formula. HN1↑ A distinction exists between the extent of the protection granted by the patent and copyright statutes, and the copyright statute has been held "not to create the right to impose, by notice, a limitation at which a book shall be sold at retail by future purchasers, with whom there is no privity of contract." Bobbs Merrill Co. v. Straus (decided by the Supreme Court, June 1, 1908) 210 U.S. 339, 28 Sup. Ct. 722, 52 L. Ed. 1086. This distinction has been drawn since the decision of the cases we refer to, and since the decision of the Hartman Case above referred to. There are decisions by most respectable courts which hold that articles, such as proprietary medicines, are outside of all rules and statutes which forbid contracts in restraint of trade, because they are made under a secret formula. Some, if not most, of these decisions have been made in cases in which the Dr. Miles Medical Company has been [**6] a party. They are cited and commented [*806] upon by this court in the case of Jno. D. Park & Sons v. Hartman, 153 Fed. 24, 34, 82 C.C.A. 158, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135. They go upon the conceded fact that HN2↑ a trade secret or medical formula is a monopoly until discovered by fair means, and will be protected against abuse by one who learns it under a contract limiting its use or in the confidence of an employment. They do not observe any distinction between the necessary monopoly of the secret itself and the unnecessary monopoly of the articles made according to the secret process and offered for sale and resale to the consuming public. Neither do those decisions recognize any distinction between the statutory monopoly accorded to articles protected by a patent or copyright and those made under such private formulas. The argument in support of this result is epitomized in all the cases referred to, but may be seen in full in the opinion of Colt, C.J., in the case styled "Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Jaynes Drug Co." (C.C.) 149 Fed. 838. The same argument was presented by the counsel now representing the Dr. Miles Medical Company in the case decided by this court of Jno. D. Park & Sons[**7] Co. v. Hartman, 153 Fed. 24, 82 C.C.A. 158, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135, and again presented with elaboration in the present case. In the case referred to, we reached with unanimity the conclusion that no legal, economic, or moral reason existed for regarding contracts in respect to the vast and ever-increasing commerce in proprietary medicines as either outside of the mischief intended to be remedied by the federal statute against monopolies or the rules of the common law, or within the statutory protection afforded by the patent and copyright statutes. Any other conclusion would be to sanction a monopoly in that class of goods vastly more far-reaching than the monopoly extended upon high grounds of public policy to the inventor. The statutory monopoly has a limitation of a few years. To obtain it the inventor must put on record his invention. At the end of the term the public will be free to employ the discovery without the burden theretofore imposed as a compensation to the inventor. Not so with the monopoly asked for by those who control the enormous proprietary trade of this country. Their monopoly will go on forever, and, if there be merit in their formula, they may not only [**8] preserve it through all time, but continue to restrain prices and prevent competition in the sale of the product. It is said that the proprietor of such a secret remedy need never communicate his formula. Concede this. To say that he need never compound his medicine, and that, if he does, he need not sell it unless he chooses, is undoubtedly true. But as much may be said about any article which the producer may choose to make or not to make, sell or not sell, as he wills. So much pertains inherently to the natural freedom of man in respect to his own actions. But if he elects to make and sell a product according to his formula, a public interest is affected if he be permitted to restrain freedom of trade in the article when it has once passed under the dominion of a buyer. A free right of alienation is an incident to the general right of property in articles which pass from hand to hand in the commerce of the world. Coke on Littleton, § 360. The mere fact that one article or class of articles is made under an unknown and private formula and another class is not is an undeniable fact which may serve for some purposes to differentiate them. But [*807] that single fact does [**9] not afford an economic reason, and still less a legal reason, for saying that it operates to exempt such articles from rules against unlawful restraints of trade.

We need not repeat the argument by which we reached the conclusion that the system of contracts which Hartman sought to enforce through the injunctive power of a court of equity was obnoxious not only to the statute of Congress against restraints and monopolies in respect of interstate trade but inimical also to the reasonable restraints which at common law may be imposed as ancillary to a principal contract. All that we said in respect to the Hartman system is applicable here. The case falls directly within the reasoning and decision of that case in respect to every aspect of the question, and the decree sustaining the demurrer interposed by the appellees must be affirmed.

"Consignment Contract. Wholesale. The Dr. Miles Medical Company.

"This agreement made by and between the Dr. Miles Medical Company, a corporation, of Elkhart, Indiana, hereinafter referred to as the proprietor and hereinafter referred to as the consignee, witnesseth:

"That the said proprietor hereby appoints said consignee one of [**10] its wholesale distributing agents, and agrees to consign to such consignee for sale for the account of said proprietor such goods of its manufacture as the proprietor may deem necessary, the title thereto and property therein to be and remain in the proprietor absolutely until sold under and in accordance with the provisions hereof, and all unsold goods to be immediately returned to said proprietor on demand and the cancellation of this agreement. Said goods to be invoiced to consignee at the following prices:

"Medicines, of which the retail price is $1.00; $8.00 per dozen.

"Medicines (if any) of which the retail price is 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

"Medicines, of which the retail price is 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

"Freight on all orders, the invoice price of which amounts to $100.00 or more, to be prepaid by the proprietor; otherwise, freight to be paid by consignee.

"Said consignee agrees to confine the sale of all goods and products of the said proprietor strictly to and to sell only to the designated retail agents of said proprietor as specified in lists of such retail agents furnished by said proprietor and alterable at the will of said proprietor, and to faithfully [**11] and promptly account and pay to the proprietor the proceeds of all sales, after deducting as full compensation for all services, charges and disbursements a commission of ten per cent of the invoice value, and a further commission of five per cent on the net amount of each consignment, after deducting the said ten per cent commission, on all advances on account remitted within ten days from date of any consignment, it being agreed between the parties hereto that such advances shall in no manner affect the title to such goods, which title shall remain in the proprietor as if no such advances had been made; provided that such advances shall be repaid to said consignee should the said proprietor terminate this agreement and the return of any unsold goods on which advances have been made. Said consignee guarantees the payment for all goods sold under this agreement and agrees to render a full account and remit the net proceeds on the first day of each month of and for the sales of the month preceding. Failure to make such accounting and remittance within ten days from the first of each month shall render the whole account payable and subject to draft, but the proceeds of such draft shall [**12] not affect the title of any unsold goods which shall remain in the proprietor until actually sold, as herein provided.

"It is further agreed that the consignee shall furnish the proprietor from time to time upon demand full statements of the stock of goods of the proprietor on hand on any date specified and that a failure to furnish such statements within ten days from date of such demand shall be a sufficient cause for the cancellation of this agreement, and a demand for the return of the consigned goods.

[*808] "It is further agreed that the proprietor will cause each retail package of its goods to be identified by a number and said consignee hereby agrees to furnish the said proprietor full reports upon proper cards or blanks furnished by said proprietor of the disposition of each dozen or fraction of such goods by means of the identifying numbers, specifying the names and addresses of the retail agents to whom such goods have been delivered and the dates of such delivery, and to send such reports to said proprietor at least semi-monthly, and at any other time on the request of said proprietor.

"It is understood and agreed between the parties hereto that the commissions [**13] herein specified shall not be considered as earned by said consignee upon any goods of said proprietor which shall have been delivered to dealers not authorized agents of said proprietor, as per list of such agents, or upon any goods whose disposition by said consignee shall not have been properly reported as herein provided, or sold at prices less than the prices authorized, and that said consignee shall not credit any such commissions when making remittances on consignment account provided notice has been given by said proprietor that such commissions are unearned; and that if such unearned commissions have been deducted by said consignee in making advance payments or monthly remittances on account they shall be charged back to said consignee and credited and paid to said proprietor. It is understood that violation or non-observance of any provision hereof by the consignee shall make this agreement terminable and all unsold goods returnable at the option of the proprietor.

"It is agreed that the goods of said proprietor shall be sold by said consignee only to the said retail or wholesale agents of said proprietor, as per list furnished, at not less than the following prices, to-wit:

[**14] "Medicines, of which the retail price is $1.00; $8.00 per dozen.

"Medicines (if any), of which the retail price is 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

"Medicines, of which the retail price is 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

"Provided, that said consignee may allow a cash discount not exceeding one per cent, if paid within ten days from date of invoice, and that when sales at one time and at one invoice, amount to $15.00 or more, the said consignee may allow three per cent trade discount, and if said purchase amounts to $50.00 or more, five per cent trade discount, all without cost to the proprietor, and if such $50.00 quantity shall be shipped direct to the retail purchaser from the laboratory of the said proprietor, on the order for the said wholesale distributing agent, freight will be prepaid by the proprietor, but not otherwise.

"This contract will take effect when the original, duly signed by the consignee, has been received and accepted by the Dr. Miles Medical Company, at Elkhart, Indiana.

"Done under our hands A.D., 1907.

(Fill in date on above line.)

"The Dr. Miles Medical Company.

"

"Wholesale dealer. Sign your name on above line. Original return [**15] in enclosed envelope."

"Retail Agency Contract.

"The Dr. Miles Medical Company.

"This agreement between the Dr. Miles Medical Company of Elkhart, Indiana, and _____ of _____, Retailers named on above line, _____ Town, _____ State, hereinafter referred to as the retail agent, witnesseth:

"Appointed Agent.

"The said Dr. Miles Medical Company hereby appoints said retail dealer as one of the retail distributing agents of its proprietary medicines and agrees that said retail agent may purchase the proprietary medicines manufactured by said Dr. Miles Medical Company (each retail package of which the said company will cause to be identified by a number) at the following prices, to-wit:

[*809] "Wholesale Prices.

"Medicines, of which the retail price is $1.00; $8.00 per dozen.

"Medicines, of which the retail price is 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

"Medicines, of which the retail price is 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

"Quantity Discounts.

"Provided that when purchasers at one time and on one invoice amount to $15.00 (or more), wholesale distributing agents are authorized to allow three per cent trade discount; if such purchase amounts to $50.00 (or more) [**16] five per cent trade discount will be allowed, and if such $50.00 quantity be shipped direct to the purchaser from the laboratory of said Dr. Miles Medical Company for the account at such wholesale agent, freight will be prepaid, but not otherwise.

"Full Price.

"In consideration whereof said retail agent agrees in no case to sell or furnish the said proprietary medicines to any person, firm or corporation whatsoever, at less than the full retail price as printed on the packages, without reduction for quantity; and said retail agent further agrees not to sell the said proprietary medicines at any price to wholesale or retail dealers not accredited agents of the Dr. Miles Medical Company.

"Violation.

"It is further agreed between the parties hereto that the giving of any article of value, or the making of any concession by means of trading stamps, cash register coupons, or otherwise, for the purpose of reducing the price above agreed upon shall be considered a violation of this agreement, and further it is agreed between the parties hereto that the Dr. Miles Medical Company will sustain damage in the sum of twenty-five dollars ($25.00) for each violation of any provision of this [**17] agreement, it being otherwise impossible to fix the measure of damage.

"This contract will take effect when a duplicate thereof, duly signed by the retail agent, has been received and approved by the Dr. Miles Medical Company, at its office at Elkhart, Indiana.

"Done under our hands , A.D., 1907.

(Fill in date on above line.)

"The Dr. Miles Medical Company.

"

"Retail dealer, sign your name on above line in ink.

"To retail dealer:

"Paste printed label, giving name and address, that your name may be correctly listed.

"Duplicate. Keep for reference."

Redland Fruit Co. v. Sargent

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas

October 15, 1908, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

51 Tex. Civ. App. 619 *; 113 S.W. 330 **; 1908 Tex. App. LEXIS 283 ***

Redland Fruit Company v. H. H. Sargent.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from the District Court of Harrison County. Tried below before Hon. W. C. Buford.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

premises, passengers, railroad, railway company, anti-trust, pursuit, general demurrer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Demurrsers

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN1 [ Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Demurrsers

If a party's cause of action as stated in his petition shows that he is undertaking to recover damages for the breach of an illegal contract, then the objection may be made at any stage of the proceedings. The objection goes to the substance of the petition, and the error, if it exists, is fundamental.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN2 [ Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In 1903 Tex. Gen. Laws p. 119, a trust is defined as a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for either, any or all of the following purposes: (1) To create, or which may tend to create, or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the law of this State.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The business competition which can not be restricted under 1903 Tex. Gen. Laws p. 119 is that which, under the laws of the State, a person is permitted or authorized to engage in. The privilege of selling goods upon the premises of another is not derived from the laws of the State, but from the consent of the owner.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Illegal Contract -- Fundamental Error.

If the contract pleaded and sued on is illegal because prohibited by the laws of the State against trusts and monopolies, a recovery by plaintiff presents fundamental error, which may be availed of in any stage of the proceedings, and is not waived by defendant failing to call his demurrer to the attention of the court and have action thereon.

Trusts -- Inducing Persons to Trade.

An agreement by A. to endeavor to induce his employes to trade with B. is not obnoxious to the statute prohibiting trusts and monopolies (Act of March 31, 1903, Laws, 28th Leg., p. 119).

Trusts and Monopolies -- Right to Sell Goods on Premises.

The statute prohibiting contracts creating trusts or monopolies is violated only by a restriction of such business competition as a person has a right under the laws of the State to engage in; the right to sell goods on certain premises is derived from the owner thereof; and his contract giving it to one person only is not illegal.

Trusts and Monopolies -- Cases Discussed.

Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. State, 99 Tex. 34; and Lewis v. Weatherford, M. W. & N. W. Ry. Co., 36 Tex. Civ. App. 48, followed; Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 89 Tex. 394, distinguished.

Pleading.

A petition seeking damages for violation of a contract giving plaintiff the exclusive right to sell goods on defendant's premises considered and held sufficient.

Statement of Facts.

Questions concerning the sufficiency of evidence are not considered in the absence of a proper statement of facts, a copy instead of the original being sent up in disregard of the law. (Act of May 25, 1907, Laws 30th Leg., 1st Called Session, p. 509.)

Counsel: Jno. M. Scott, for appellant.

An objection that the contract sued on is void will be considered on general demurrer, though not specially pleaded. Fuqua v. Pabst Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 301; Texas and Pac. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 89 Tex. 394; Texas Brewing Co. v. Templeton, 90 Tex. 277; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. v. Chenault, 92 Tex. 504.

As applied to the facts in this case, a "trust" is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, to create or carry out restriction in trade; to prevent or lessen competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, and any contract or agreement creating such combination is absolutely void, and not enforceable in law or equity. Ch. 94, sec. 1, p. 119, Acts of the Twenty-eighth Legislature, 1903; Texas & Pac. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 89 Tex. 394, and authorities above cited.

No principle is more firmly established than that remote and speculative damages can not be recovered on account of a breach of contract, when that breach is unmixed with the elements of fraud. Jones v. George, 56 Tex. 153; Voorhees v. Fry, 1\*\*\*21 52 S.W. 580; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. v. Wise, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 461-2; Crouch v. Osborn, 23 S.W. 937-8; Elmendorf v. Classen, 92 Tex. 477; Couch v. Parker, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 193; Waco Tap Ry. v. Shirley, 45 Tex. 372; Sabine, etc., Ry. Co. v. Joachimi, 58 Tex. 460.

A contract by two or more persons, firms or corporations combining their capital, skill or acts, to create or carry out restrictions in trade or to prevent or lessen competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, is a trust within the meaning of our statutes, and therefore void, and no action can be founded thereon. Ch. 94, sec. 1, p. 119, Acts of the Twenty-eighth Legislature, 1903; Texas & Pac. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 89 Tex. 394; Fuqua v. Pabst Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 301; Texas Brewing Co. v. Templeton, 90 Tex. 277.

Scott & Lane, for appellee.

Judges: HODGES, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: HODGES

Opinion

---

[*621] [**330] HODGES, Associate Justice.--The appellee recovered a judgment in the court below against the appellant for damages on account of the alleged breach of a contract theretofore made and entered into between the parties. The allegations in the appellee Sargent's petition are substantially [***3] as follows: That the appellee and one E. L. Harper, who was superintendent and manager for the appellant company, entered into the following written contract:

"The State of Texas, county of Harrison.

"September 4, 1905.

"This agreement made and entered into between E. L. Harper, superintendent of the Redlands Fruit Company, of the first part, and H. R. Sargent, of the second part, witnesseth: That the said E. L. Harper, superintendent, for and under instructions of said company, and in and for the consideration of five percent on all sales of goods made by the said H. R. Sargent, the second party, on the premises of the said company, does agree for the said H. R. Sargent to erect a store house on their premises, and to conduct a general merchandise business, and the company will endeavor to give the said H. R. Sargent their trade from the said plantation, and will give no other rights on the premises to other parties for the sale of merchandise. The said H. R. Sargent shall sell no whisky or other intoxicating drinks on the premises of said company. The said Sargent shall have the right to removal of said store house and the right to sell same. The said [**331] company acquires [***4] no claim or title to said store house building, and the said Sargent no rights on premises, only so far as terms of the agreement.

"E. L. Harper,

"Supt. Redlands Fruit Company.

"H. R. Sargent."

It is alleged that this contract was to last five years; that in pursuance thereof the appellee, plaintiff below, did erect a store house at an expense of $ 750, and put therein a stock of goods which, it is claimed, was worth at the time of the alleged breach from $ 700 to $ 1,000; and that the reasonable profits which he would realize from the sale of those goods would have been $ 4100 per year; that but for the contract aforesaid he would not have erected the house nor bought the stock of goods; that the appellant company broke the contract it had thus entered into by throwing the trade of the plantation to others and allowing others to erect a store house on its premises; that on account of the breach of the said contract by the appellant company the appellee's trade, and the profits therefrom, which, he says, would have amounted to $ 5,000, left him. Appellee also alleges that this house was rendered valueless to him, except to the extent of what it would be worth in lumber, which was [***5] estimated at $ 50; that his goods deteriorated to the extent of $ 750 on account of being left on his hands. He sues to recover the aggregate sum of $ 6,450.

The defendant answered by a general demurrer, general denial and specially, that appellee breached the contract by selling intoxicating liquors on the premises, and in not paying over the five percent commissions provided for in the contract.

[*622] The case was submitted to the court without a jury, and a judgment rendered in favor of the appellee for the sum of $ 240. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

There are five assignments of error in the record, two of which assail the refusal of the court to sustain the appellant's general demurrer. The remaining three attack the grounds upon which the court predicated its judgment in matters of facts.

The first question that presents itself for our consideration is, whether or not the contract, as pleaded by the appellee, is void by reason of being in conflict with the provisions of what is known as the anti-trust law of the State.

The first error assigned complains of the refusal of the court to sustain the general demurrer interposed by the appellant in the trial [***6] below. It appears that the general demurrer was filed, but not called to the attention of the trial court, and was not passed on. The reason urged in the appellant's brief as grounds upon which the court should have sustained its general demurrer is that the contract sued upon and set out in the appellee's original petition shows upon its face that it is in violation of the law of this State prohibiting the formation of trusts and monopolies. HN1 If the appellee's cause of action as stated shows that he is undertaking to recover damages for the breach of an illegal contract, then the objection may be made at any stage of the proceedings. The objection goes to the substance of the petition, and the error, if it exists, is fundamental. Grant v. Whittlesey, 42 Tex. 320; Norris v. Logan, 94 S.W. 123; Schuster v. Frendenthal, 74 Tex. 53; 11 S.W. 1051; Alamo Ins. Co. v. Davis, 45 S.W. 605; 6 Amer. & Eng. Ency. Plead & Prac., 380.

The question then is: Do the terms of the contract sued on violate the anti-trust statute? The provisions of the contract pointed out as being obnoxious to that statute are those by which Sargent is given the exclusive right to sell goods on the appellant's premises, [***7] and by which appellant bound itself to endeavor to induce its employes to trade with Sargent. In the Acts of 1903, p. 119, HN2 a trust is defined as "A combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons . . . for either, any or all of the following purposes: (1) To create, or which may tend to create, or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the law of this State." An undertaking on the part of the appellant to endeavor to induce its employes to trade with the appellee could not be regarded as any violation of law, and the vice, if any, in the contract must be that portion which gives to the appellee the exclusive right to sell goods on the appellant's premises. If this is in violation of the anti-trust statute, then the assignment should be sustained, otherwise it should be overruled.

We do not think it was the purpose of the statute to prevent the making of exclusive contracts of any kind whatever. Such an inhibition would be productive of a greater evil than that which the law attempts [***8] to remedy. HN3 The business competition which can not be restricted is that which, under the "laws of the State, a person is permitted or authorized" to engage in. The privilege of selling goods upon the premises of another [*623] is not derived from the laws of the State, but from the consent of the owner. Fort Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. State, 99 Tex. 34; Lewis v. Weatherford, M. W. & N. W. Ry. Co., 36 Tex. Civ. App. 48. In the first case cited above a contract had been entered into between the railway company and the Pullman Company, by the terms of which the latter was given the exclusive right of furnishing the railway company sleeping cars on all of its lines for the term of fifteen years. In an opinion holding that this contract did not violate the anti-trust statute, the court said: "Waiving the fact that, at the time the law of 1903 was enacted, there was no other person or company engaged in the like business [**332] in Texas, we come to the question: Did the railroad company have the lawful right to make a contract with the Pullman Company whereby it excluded all other companies for fifteen years from furnishing to the railroad company sleeping cars for the use on all [***9] of its lines? That question suggests this: Did all sleeping-car companies have a right to demand of the railroad company to haul their coaches on its railroad? If yea, the contract restricted the free pursuit of a lawful business, and constitutes a trust under the Act of 1903; otherwise the law has not been violated by the agreement. . . . This contract in no way interfered with the rights of any other sleeping-car company, if any existed, to build or furnish its cars to other railroads. Neither the Pullman nor any other corporation or persons had a right to have sleeping cars attached to the passenger trains of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railroad Company. Therefore, to exclude them did not restrict 'the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by law,' because such business was not authorized to be pursued on a railroad without the consent of the owner; and, since no such business right existed, it could not be restricted."

In that opinion the case of Lewis v. Ry. Co. is cited with approval. In the latter case an attack was made on the contract entered into between the railway company and one Green, by which the latter was given the exclusive right to go upon the train [***10] of the railway company and solicit the transfer of baggage from passengers riding thereon. Lewis and his employes would purchase tickets, board the passenger train of the railway company, and also solicit such patronage from the railway passengers. The railway company sought to enjoin this conduct on the part of Lewis, and set up the fact that it had contracted with Green that he should have this exclusive privilege. This feature of the contract was assailed as being in violation of the anti-trust statute. The court held otherwise, and, in disposing of the question, used this language: "It is, we think, a sufficient answer to this contention that the rule or regulation of appellees by which Green was permitted to solicit the patronage of its passengers, to the exclusion of appellant, did not 'create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the law of this State,' because the only restriction imposed is with respect to the transaction of appellant's business on appellee's passenger trains, which he is nowhere authorized or permitted by the law of this State to engage in. It is, therefore, not a restriction upon the free pursuit of his [***11] lawful business. In the sense that the regulation prevents appellant from securing the patronage of appellant's passengers, it may be said to be a restriction upon its business. [*624] But the least reflection will show that, if this construction of the law were to be adopted, a very large percent of the everyday contracts in the business world, such as those of leasing, of agency, of service, and the like, would be reprobated--a result never dreamed of by the legislators who enacted the statute. If appellee is to be denied the relief prayed for it must be upon other grounds than that asserted in this assignment."

Applying the principles approved in the decisions quoted above, we may ask: Were any restrictions created or carried out in the contract under consideration against the free pursuit of any business which the law gave others the right to engage in? Did others have the right under the law to demand of the appellant that they be permitted to sell goods upon its premises? The right to sell upon the premises of another is not given by law, but by consent of the owner. The latter has the right to say who shall or who shall not use his premises for any such purpose. The right [**12] to give an exclusive contract for the purpose of any business is involved in every lease.

Our attention has been called to the case of the Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 89 Tex. 394. The appellant urges with much earnestness that the language used in that case is decisive of this. We do not agree with that contention. While there is some language used in the opinion rendered by Justice Denman in the case referred to which tends to support the appellant's construction, yet the facts are different, and that language is not in harmony with the latter decisions of our Supreme Court which we have cited. If we have departed from the ruling of the court in the Lawson case we think our action is justified, not only by the latter expressions of the Supreme Court, but by sound reason as well. In the Lawson case the contract which was held to be in violation of the anti-trust statute was more far-reaching than the one here under consideration. Among other things, the coal company, the owner of the premises, bound itself not to engage in a business in competition with that carried on by Lawson. It thus, by agreement, deprived itself of a right given by law, and in so doing restricted competition [***13] to that extent. In this case the contract is susceptible of no such construction.

51 Tex. Civ. App. 619, *6241<sup>13</sup> S.W. 330, **3321<sup>1908</sup> Tex. App. LEXIS 283, ***12

The second assignment of error is overruled because we do not think the pleadings were subject to the objections urged. They were sufficient to constitute a cause of action, however defectively this may have been stated.

The remaining assignments of error involve issues of fact which can not be considered because of the absence of a statement of facts such as is now required by law. The transcript contains what purports to be a copy of the statement of facts. Under the law as it now exists, in all appeals from the District Court, the original statement of facts must be sent up with the record. Laws of 1907, [**333] p. 509; Garrison v. Richards, 107 S.W. 861.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

Terr. v. Long Bell Lumber Co.

Supreme Court of Oklahoma

November, 1908, Decided ; December 21, 1908, Opinion Filed

No. 2099, 2100 and 2101, Okla T.

Reporter

1908 OK 263 *; 22 Okla. 890 **; 99 P. 911 ***; 1908 Okla. LEXIS 93 ****

TERRITORY v. LONG BELL LUMBER CO. et al. SAME v. OKLAHOMA MILL & ELEVATOR Co. et al. SAME v. HAINES et al.

Prior History: [****1] Error from District Court, Kingfisher County; C. F. Irwin, Judge.

Actions by the Territory of Oklahoma against the Long Bell Lumber Company and others, and against the Oklahoma Mill & Elevator Company and others, and against A. T. Haines and others. Judgments for defendants, and the territory brings error. Reversed and remanded.

The above-entitled cases were all brought in the district court of Kingfisher county, Okla., in the month of October, 1906, by the county attorney of the county, the petitions being signed by him as such official and verified as provided by the statute. Omitting the formal parts, the first cause of action stated in the petition of the case where the Long Bell Lumber Company, the A. H. Showalter Lumber Company, and Butts Bros. Lumber Company are defendants reads as follows:

"That said defendants have been engaged in said business for several years last past, and all of said time they have federated together, and have, by express agreement with each other, either written or oral, controlled all the business of buying and selling lumber at said point in such a manner as to create a monopoly for the benefit of said corporations, and greatly to the [****2] injury of the public and the people of the county of Kingfisher, and the territory of Oklahoma. That, by means of said confederation, combination, and monopoly, said defendants are enabled to and do keep other persons desiring to enter said business from doing so, and they not only fix the prices that said lumber shall be purchased at from the mills, but also arbitrarily fix the price for which said lumber shall be sold to the consumer and have for several years last past, do now, and will continue to, unless restrained by the court, completely shut out competition in the lumber business in said city of Kingfisher, and said defendants have for several years last past, and do now, and will continue to, if not restrained by the court, charge the public and the people of Kingfisher county, and the territory of Oklahoma, unjust, unreasonable, and exorbitant prices for lumber, and by reason of the monopoly of said defendants created by said defendants said public and the people of Kingfisher county and territory of Oklahoma cannot buy lumber elsewhere, but are compelled, by reason of said monopoly, to purchase their lumber from said defendants, and from no other person or corporations. [****3] That each of the above-named defendants are apparently conducting a separate business under the respective names of their corporations, but in truth and in fact, by reason of the combination and monopoly created by said defendants, there is no competition in the sale of lumber in said city, nor will said defendants permit any one else to engage in the business of lumber dealers therein. That said defendants have conducted the aforesaid combination and monopoly for a good many years last past, to the great loss and injury of the public and to the people of the county of Kingfisher and territory of Oklahoma, and threaten to, and will continue to, violate the anti-trust law of the territory of Oklahoma and the United States, unless restrained by the courts. That for these impositions the public and the people of Kingfisher county and Oklahoma Territory have no speedy and adequate remedy at law."

The second cause of action sets forth substantially that the defendants have by agreement between themselves combined to suppress evidence which will enable the officers to enforce the antitrust law. The prayer is for an injunction restraining the parties from carrying on and conducting the [****4] business combination and monopoly, and from further combining and federating together for the purpose of defeating the operation of said law. The language used in the petitions filed in the second and third cases, and the averments of the same, are identical with the petition in the first case, except that in the second case grain was the commodity which was alleged the combination operated upon, and in the third case it was coal which had thus been brought within the control of the contract made between the parties.

The cases all took identically the same course in the lower court, in that temporary injunctions were obtained in each from the judge of the probate court, and on motion in the district court the same were dissolved and the petitions dismissed. From this action the territory of Oklahoma took each of said cases to the Supreme Court by proceedings in error where they were pending at the time Oklahoma and Indian Territory were erected into a state. They have now been consolidated, and are before this court for consideration by virtue of our succession to the territorial Supreme Court under the terms of the Enabling Act (Act June 16, 1906, c. 3335, 34 Stat. 267) and the [****5] Schedule to the Constitution (Bunn's Ed. §§ 449-493).

Disposition: Judgment reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

territory, provisions, nuisance, commodity, legislate, rights, combinations, petitions, fine, territorial legislature, public nuisance, authorities, monopoly, comfortable, anti-trust, interfere, proceeded, Organic, courts, lumber, act of congress, civil action, price fixing, natural gas, obstruction, enjoyment, fish, restraint of trade, attorney general, attorney's fees

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Local Governments > Finance

Real Property Law > ... > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

Real Property Law > ... > Nuisance > Types of Nuisances > Public Nuisances

HN1 Local Governments, Finance

Okla. Stat. Ann. § 4440 (1903) provides: An injunction may be granted in the name of the territory to enjoin and suppress the keeping and maintaining of a common nuisance. The petition therefor shall be verified by the county attorney of the proper county, or by the attorney general, upon information and belief, and no bond shall be required.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

HN2 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The Sherman Anti-Trust Act (act), 26 U.S.C.S. § 209(3), specifically applies to territories, and § 4 vests the several Circuit Courts of the United States with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the act, and making it the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States under the direction of the Attorney General to institute suits in equity for such purpose. The statute against unlawful restraints and monopolies, 26 U.S.C.S. § 209, does not authorize the bringing of injunction suits or suits in equity by any parties except the government.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

HN3 [down arrow] State & Territorial Governments, Legislatures

Whenever Congress legislates upon any subject directly in relation to the government of the people of the territory, then it ceases to be a rightful subject of territorial legislation, and any law that the legislature of the territory has enacted or enacts upon the same subject which Congress has assumed to legislate upon, is inconsistent with such laws of the United States, and is, therefore, void.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

HN4 [down arrow] Conspiracy, Elements

Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any territory of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such territory and another, or between any such territory or territories, and any state or states or the District of Columbia or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any state or states or foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The territorial act on conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce provides, in part: Section 1. If any individual, firm, partnership or any association of persons whatsoever, shall create, enter into, become, a member of, or a party to, any pool, trust, agreement, combination or understanding with any other individual firm, partnership or association of persons whatsoever, to regulate or fix the price of, or prevent or restrict, the competition in the sale of provisions, feed, fuel, lumber, or other building materials, articles of merchandise or other commodity they shall be deemed guilty of (a) misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $ 50 nor more than $ 500.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Remedies > General Overview

**HN6** Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The territorial act on conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce provides, in part: Section 2. It shall not be lawful for any corporation organized under the laws of this territory, or organized under the laws of any other territory or state, and doing business in this territory, to enter into any combination, contract, trust, pool or agreement with any other corporation or corporations, or with any individual, firm, partnership or association of persons, whatsoever, for the purpose of regulating or fixing the price of, or preventing or restricting competition, in the sale of provisions, feed, fuel, lumber, or other building materials, articles of merchandise, or other commodity, including the fixing of the rate of interest. Any president, manager, director, agent, receiver or other officer of any such corporation, violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $ 50 nor more than $ 500 for the first offense, and upon a second conviction shall be fined a sum equal to twice the amount of the first fine, and such corporation shall forfeit its corporate right and franchise, and its corporate existence, in this territory, shall thereupon cease and determine.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

**HN7** Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The territorial act on conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce provides, in part: Section 3. Any person purchasing provisions, feed, material, articles of merchandise, or any commodity from any individual, firm, partnership, or corporation, transacting business in violation of the provisions of this act, such person so purchasing shall not be liable for the price or payment of any such article or commodity and may plead this act, as a defense in any suit for price or payment. In any civil action brought under the provisions of this section, the court before whom such suit shall be pending may compel the plaintiff to testify, but if the plaintiff be a corporation then the court may compel any officer, agent, or employe of such corporation to attend, appear, and testify, or compel the production of any contract, or papers in evidence in such civil action: Provided, the evidence so obtained shall not be used in any criminal prosecution against the person so testifying except in a criminal prosecution for perjury committed in giving such testimony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Remedies > General Overview

**HN8** Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The territorial act on conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce provides, in part: Section 4. Any person who shall have purchased from any individual, firm, partnership or corporation, doing business in violation of the provisions of this act, any provisions, feed, fuel, lumber or other building material, articles of merchandise, or other commodity and paid for the same, may maintain a civil action to recover the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this act, together with a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in such case. In any civil action brought under the provisions of this section, the court before whom such suit be pending may compel the defendant to testify, but if the defendant be a corporation, then the court may compel any officer, agent or employe of such corporation to attend, appear, and testify or compel the production of any contract or papers as evidence in such civil action: Provided, the evidence so obtained shall not be used in any criminal action against the person so testifying, except in a criminal prosecution for perjury committed in giving such testimony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

**HN9** [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The territorial act on conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce provides, in part: Section 5. It shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorneys in their respective counties, to enforce the foregoing provisions of this act, and any prosecuting attorney securing a conviction under provisions of this act, shall be entitled in addition to such fee or salary as by law he is allowed for such prosecution, to one-fifth of the fine received.

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

Governments > Federal Government > Property

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

**HN10** [blue download icon] Legislation, Enactment

Section 6 of the Organic Act, 26 U.S.C.S. § 84, provides as follows: That the legislative power of the territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed on the property of the United States, nor shall the lands or other property of nonresidents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents, nor shall any law be passed impairing the right to private property, nor shall any unequal discrimination be made in taxing different kinds of property, but all property subject to the taxation shall be taxed in proportion to its value. Section 4 of the Organic Act places the legislative power and authority of the territory of Oklahoma in the governor and legislative assembly. Section 6 of the Organic Act not only confers the authority subject to the reserved power mentioned, but contains specific limitations imposed upon the exercise of the authority. Within the limitations noticed, the legislative power for local self-government is quite as extensive in a territory as in a state. The policy of the government is to give to it the fullest opportunity to govern itself and prepare for statehood.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

**HN11** [blue download icon] Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Annulments of statutes by implication, like repeals by implication, are not favored by the courts. No statute of a territory will be declared void because it may indirectly or by a construction which is possible but not necessary be repugnant to an act of Congress annulling legislation of the territory; but such a result must be direct and proximate in order to invalidate the statute.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

HN12[ State & Territorial Governments, Legislatures

The territorial legislature, being the representatives of the people of the territory, have the right to legislate for the people upon all subjects which are not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and do not in any way interfere with the supreme right of the United States government to direct and control the governmental affairs of the territory.

Governments > Police Powers

Real Property Law > ... > Nuisance > Types of Nuisances > Public Nuisances

Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Waterways

Real Property Law > Torts > Nuisance > General Overview

HN13[ Governments, Police Powers

Oklahoma Statute tit. 56, § 1 (1903) provides as follows: A nuisance consists in unlawfully doing an act, or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission either: First. Annoys, injures or endangers the comfort, repose, health, or safety of others; or, Second. Offends decency; or, Third. Unlawfully interferes with, obstructs or tends to obstruct, or renders dangerous for passage, any lake or navigable river, bay, stream, canal or basin, or any public park, square, street or highway; or, Fourth. In any way renders other persons insecure in life, or in the use of property. Section 2 reads as follows: A public nuisance is one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon the individuals may be unequal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN14[ Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

It needs no extended statement to make it manifest that the right to carry on a business without interference, without fraud, and without obstruction, is one of the most valuable of all rights. Indeed, in the commercial world the right of greatest value is the right to freely carry on a lawful business without unlawful interruption. It is a substantial right, which may be protected by any remedy known to the court as fully as a constitutional or statutory right, and as fully as a right, in the ordinary forms of property.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. TERRITORIES--Status. A territory, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, is an inchoate state--a portion of the country not included within the limits of any state, and not yet admitted as a state into the Union, but organized under the laws of Congress, with a separate Legislature, under a territorial Governor, and other officers appointed by the President and Senate of the United States.

2. SAME--"Legislative Power." The legislative power of the territory of Oklahoma extended to all rightful subjects of legislation pertaining to local self-government when not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and when the exercise of such power did not in any way interfere with the supreme right of Congress to control its governmental affairs.

3. SAME--Legislative Power--Anti-Trust Legislation. Chapter 83, Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okla. 1903, being an enactment of the legislative assembly of the territory of Oklahoma passed December 25, 1890, entitled "An act to prevent combinations in restraint of trade," is not in conflict or inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of the United States nor with an act on the same subject applicable to territories, enforceable by the federal authorities, passed by Congress July 2, 1890 (Act Cong. July 2, 1890, c. 637, 26 Stat. 209 [U.S. Comp. St, 1901, p, 3200]) and was a valid statute of the territory of Oklahoma.

4. SAME. The fact that a prosecution for a violation of the terms of such territorial statute would also be a violation of and punishable under the federal act in no wise affects its validity.

5. MONOPOLIES -- Complaint -- Injunction -- "Public Nuisance." Where it is alleged that certain parties in violation of such act of the territorial Legislature had entered into and become members of a pool, trust, agreement, combination, and understanding with each other to create a monopoly in the business of buying and selling lumber, coal, and grain, and that, acting thereunder, they were enabled to and were charging the public unjust, unreasonable, and exorbitant prices for such commodities, and preventing others from engaging in such business, such acts constitute a public, common nuisance, and the parties thereto may be restrained as provided for in section 4440, Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okla. 1903, at the suit of the county attorney.

Counsel: Chas. J. West, Atty. Gen, George L. Bowman, Co. Atty., and Matthew John Kane, for the Territory.

F. L. Boynton, W. R. Cowley, and W. A. Ledbetter, for defendants in error.

Judges: DUNN, J. Williams, C. J., TURNER and HAYES, JJ., concur; KANE, J., being of counsel and not sitting.

Opinion by: DUNN

Opinion

---

[**893] [***913] DUNN, J. [*P1] (after stating the facts as above). HN1 Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okla. 1903, § 4440, provides:

"An injunction may be granted in the name of the territory to enjoin and suppress the keeping and maintaining of a common nuisance. The petition therefor shall be verified by the county attorney of the proper county, or by the attorney general, upon information and belief, and no bond shall be required."

[*P2] It was under the authority conferred on the county attorney by this section of the statute that he acted in bringing these suits, beginning them upon petitions which he verified on his information [*894] and belief, and securing injunctive relief in the name of the territory without bond. The position taken by him was that a monopoly or combination in restraint of trade [****6] such as is delineated and set forth in the petitions was a public or common nuisance, and as such that courts of equity at the instance of the public prosecutor had power to suppress the same.

[*P3] The consideration and determination of two propositions will in our judgment cover and dispose of all the controverted questions raised. These are: First, was the territorial anti-trust act a valid, existing law at the time of the institution of these suits; and, second, if so, did the violation of its terms as averted constitute and make the result of such acts a common and public nuisance?

[*P4] Incidental to the first proposition, there is argued in the briefs of defendants in error the proposition that the territorial authorities were without jurisdiction or power to proceed under the terms of what is generally known as HN2↑ the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act," passed by Congress on July 2, 1890 (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3201]), section 3 of which is made specifically applicable to territories, and section 4 thereof vesting the several Circuit Courts of the United States with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the act, and making it the duty of the [****7] several district attorneys of the United States under the direction of the Attorney General to institute suits in equity for such purpose. This question has been squarely passed upon in the case of Greer, Mills & Co. v. Stoller (C. C.) 77 F. 1, wherein it was held that the statute against unlawful restraints and monopolies (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200]) does not authorize the bringing of injunction suits or suits in equity by any parties except the government. Blindell et al. v. Hagan et al. (C. C.) 54 F. 40; Beach on Monopolies and Industrial Trusts, § 226. So that this theory may be disposed of on these authorities, and the question then arises: Was the anti-trust act passed by the Legislature of the territory of Oklahoma on December 25, 1890, contained in [**895] chapter 83, Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okla. 1903 (sections 67396743), a valid existing law of the territory of Oklahoma at the time of the institution of these suits? It will be noted that the federal anti-trust act was passed on the 2d day of July, 1890, while the act of the territorial Legislature was passed about six months thereafter, and [****8] plaintiffs in error contend that, Congress having legislated on the subject, its legislation was exclusive so far as the territorial Legislature was concerned, in that it could pass no act covering the same field which could stand concurrently with the federal legislation on the subject. The rule contended for is stated in the case of Allen v. Reed, 10 Okla. 105 at 105-111, 60 P. 782, 784, and is as follows:

HN3↑ "Whenever Congress legislates upon any subject directly in relation to the government of the people of the territory, then it ceases to be a rightful subject of territorial legislation, and any law that the Legislature of the territory has enacted or enacts upon the same subject which Congress has assumed to legislate upon, is inconsistent with such laws of the United States, and is, therefore, void."

[*P5] In order that the scope and purpose of the two acts brought to the attention of the court by reason of this controversy may be clearly before us, we quote that portion of the federal antitrust act relating to this subject, which is as follows:

HN4↑ "Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory [****9] of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory or Territories, and any State or States or the District of Columbia or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

[*P6] HN5↑ The territorial act on the same subject is as follows:

[**896] "Sec. 1. If any individual, firm, partnership [***914] or any association of persons whatsoever, shall create, enter into, become, a member of, or a party to, any pool, trust, agreement, combination or understanding with any other individual firm, partnership or association of persons whatsoever, to regulate or fix the price of, or prevent or restrict, the competition in the sale of provisions, feed, fuel, lumber, or other building [****10] materials, articles of merchandise or other commodity (they) shall be deemed guilty of (a) misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars.

HN6 "Sec. 2. It shall not be lawful for any corporation organized under the laws of this Territory, or organized under the laws of any other territory or state, and doing business in this Territory, to enter into any combination, contract, trust, pool or agreement with any other corporation or corporations, or with any individual, firm, partnership or association of persons, whatsoever, for the purpose of regulating or fixing the price of, or preventing or restricting competition, in the sale of provisions, feed, fuel, lumber, or other building materials, articles of merchandise, or other commodity, including the fixing of the rate of interest. (Any) president, manager, director, agent, receiver or other officer of any such corporation, violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, for the first offense, and upon a second conviction shall be fined a sum [****11] equal to twice the amount of the first fine, and such corporation shall forfeit its corporate right and franchise, and its corporate existence, in this Territory, shall thereupon cease and determine.

HN7 "Sec. 3. Any person purchasing provisions, feed, material, articles of merchandise, or any commodity from any individual, firm, partnership, or corporation, transacting business in violation of the provisions of this act, such person so purchasing shall not be liable for the price or payment of any such article or commodity and may plead this act, as a defense in any suit for price or payment. In any civil action brought under the provisions of this section, the court before whom such suit shall be pending may compel the plaintiff to testify, but if the plaintiff be a corporation then the court may compel any officer, agent, or employe of such corporation to attend, appear, and testify, or compel the production of any contract, or papers in evidence in such civil action: Provided, the evidence so obtained shall not be used in any criminal [**897] prosecution against the person so testifying except in a criminal prosecution for perjury committed in giving such testimony.

HN8 "Sec. 4. [****12] Any person who shall have purchased from any individual, firm, partnership or corporation, doing business in violation of the provisions of this act, any provisions, feed, fuel, lumber or other building material, articles of merchandise, or other commodity and paid for the same, may maintain a civil action to recover the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this act, together with a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in such case. In any civil action brought under the provisions of this section, the court before whom such suit be pending may compel the defendant to testify, but if the defendant be a corporation, then the court may compel any officer, agent or employe of such corporation to attend, appear, and testify or compel the production of any contract or papers as evidence in such civil action: Provided, the evidence so obtained shall not be used in any criminal action against the person so testifying, except in a criminal prosecution for perjury committed in giving such testimony.

HN9 "Sec. 5. It shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorneys [****13] in their respective counties, to enforce the foregoing provisions of this act, and any prosecuting attorney securing a conviction under provisions of this act, shall be entitled in addition to such fee or salary as by law he is allowed for such prosecution, to one-fifth of the fine received."

[*P7] The foregoing act of the territorial Legislature, while striking at the identical evil legislated against in the act of Congress, it will be seen contains numerous provisions not provided for under the former. Territories, being portions of the United States not yet created into states, and Congress having been given the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations therein, have just such authority to legislate as is conferred upon them by Congress, limited as both are by the Constitution. Congress not only may abrogate the laws of any of the territories, but it may itself, if it chooses, legislate directly for the entire local government. It may make a valid act of the Legislature void, and [**898] a void act valid. It has complete legislative authority over the people inhabiting the territories and all of the departments of the territorial government. It may restrict all [****14] legislation for a territory to itself or it may portion it out to subordinate bodies; but, when these bodies act, they act by virtue of federal authority, and their legislation is federal legislation applicable solely to their local conditions. This authority in the territory of Oklahoma is contained and set out in HN10 section 6 of the Organic Act (Act May 2, 1890, c. 182, 26 Stat. 84), as follows:

"That the legislative power of the territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, but no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed on the property of the United States, nor shall the lands or other [***915] property of nonresidents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents, nor shall any law be passed impairing the right to private property, nor shall any unequal discrimination be made in taxing different kinds of property, but all property subject to the taxation shall be taxed in proportion to its value."

[*P8] Section 4 of the Organic Act places the legislative power and authority of the territory of Oklahoma in the Governor and legislative [****15] assembly. Section 6 of the Organic Act, supra, not only confers the authority subject to the reserved power mentioned, but contains specific limitations imposed upon the exercise of the authority. Within the limitations noticed, the legislative power for local self-government is quite as extensive in a territory as in a state. The policy of the government is to give to it the fullest opportunity to govern itself and prepare for statehood.

[*P9] The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of *Clinton v. Englebrecht, 13 Wall. 434, 20 L. Ed. 659,* has specifically so held. The court said:

"The theory upon which the various governments for portions of the territory of the United States have been organized has ever been that of leaving to the inhabitants all the powers of self-government consistent with the supremacy and supervision [**899] of national authority, and with certain fundamental principles established by Congress."

[*P10] This in our judgment is a correct statement of the rule involved, and the determination of the extent to which Congress has granted the right to the territory of Oklahoma to legislate must be ascertained from a construction of the powers specifically [****16] granted in section 6 of the Organic Act, supra, taken in connection with the manifest policy of the government in granting the power of legislation upon all rightful subjects of legislation as set forth above. If the act of the territorial Legislature passed for the purpose of making effective and enforceable by its own authorities, an act to prevent combinations in restraint of trade, was not in conflict and in no wise interfered with or affected the enforcement by the federal authorities of the act of Congress, then it occurs to us that there is no good reason for saying that the same was annulled and rendered nugatory as soon as enacted by such previous act. There is nothing in the federal act prescribing or prohibiting to the legislative authority of the territory the right to legislate upon this identical subject, nor is the same contained in any act of Congress to which our attention has been called. The right to legislate upon this subject and to have its act enforced by its own authorities was a valuable one to the people inhabiting the territory, and it ought not to be taken away by any strained or arbitrary construction.

[*P11] Attention is particularly directed to the numerous [****17] provisions making certain its enforcement which are not contained in the federal act, and which perhaps are not available to the prosecutors under it. It will be noted that the punishment prescribed by the federal act is simply a fine and imprisonment of the persons who make such contract, while under section 2 of the local statute a second conviction of any corporation violating its provisions brings upon its corporate life a sentence of death, and its existence in the territory terminates. Section 3 provides that any person purchasing from such illegal organization shall not be liable for the price or payment for any article or commodity so [**900] purchased, and likewise contains a complete and effective provision for securing evidence of the offense. Section 4 provides that any person who shall have purchased from such organization and paid for the commodity is authorized to maintain an action to recover the full amount of damages sustained in addition to a reasonable attorney's fee. It likewise provides for the production of evidence to aid the court in the ascertainment of the facts. Section 5 makes it the duty of the prosecuting attorneys of the several counties to enforce [****18] the act, and, in order to insure vigilance on their part, offers to each who secures a conviction a fifth of the fine. These additional provisions in no wise conflict with the federal act, and the same rule, that repeals by implication are not favored, pertains to the annulment of statutes in cases of this character. The United States Supreme Court in the case of *Cope v. Cope, 137 U.S. 682, 11 S. Ct. 222, 34 L. Ed. 832,* says:

HN11 [↑] "Annulments of statutes by implication, like repeals by implication, are not favored by the courts. No statute of a territory will be declared void because it may indirectly or by a construction which is possible but not necessary be repugnant to an act of Congress annulling legislation of the territory; but such a result must be direct and proximate in order to invalidate the statute."

[*P12] The act under which these proceedings were brought had at that time been on the statute books of the territory of Oklahoma for nearly 16 years. It was passed almost immediately after the approval of the federal act. This at least was a construction on the part of the territorial Legislature that it was necessary and essential, and that its terms were not repugnant [****19] to the federal act. Furthermore, section 1850 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that "all laws passed by the legislative assembly and Governor of any territory (except certain territories not material here) shall be submitted to Congress, and, if disapproved, shall be null and of no effect." Section 3 of the Organic Act made it the specific duty of the Secretary of the territory of Oklahoma to transmit two copies of the laws of each legislative assembly [**901] within 30 days after its adjournment to the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States. This act doubtless in accordance [***916] therewith was presented to Congress and the fact that it was not disapproved is again a legislative construction making in favor of its validity.

[*P13] In the case of *Clinton v. Englebrecht, supra*, speaking of the controverted act passed by the territory in that case, and of this provision of the federal statutes, Mr. Chief Justice Chase, who delivered the opinion of the court, said:

"In the first place, we observe that the law has received the implied sanction of Congress. It was adopted in 1859. It has been upon the [****20] statute book for more than 12 years. It must have been transmitted to Congress soon after it was enacted, for it was the duty of the Secretary of the territory to transmit to that body copies of all laws on or before the 1st of the next December in each year. The simple disapproval by Congress at any time would have annulled it. It is no unreasonable inference, therefore, that it was approved by that body."

[*P14] In addition to the foregoing reasoning, which in our judgment tends to the conclusion that this was a valid act of the territorial Legislature when passed, a number of judges and courts have had occasion to pass upon the identical question which is here presented to us, and a rule substantially correct is, we believe, annunciated in an opinion prepared by Judge Irwin of the Supreme Court of the territory of Oklahoma in the case of *Territory ex rel. Ridings v. Neville et al., 10 Okla. 79, 60 P. 790*. This opinion, although not receiving the sanction of the majority of the members of that court, in our judgment expresses the law upon this proposition. He said:

HN12 [+] "The territorial Legislature, being the representatives of the people of the territory, have the right to [****21] legislate for the people upon all subjects which are not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and do not in any way interfere with the supreme right of the United States government to direct and control the governmental affairs of the territory."

[*P15] The foregoing in our judgment expresses the correct rule obtaining in reference to the power of the constituted legislative [**902] body of a territory to legislate in reference to matters with which Congress has likewise dealt. In this conclusion we are supported by a number of authorities. Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) p. 54, note 1; *State v. Norman, 16 Utah 457, 52 P. 986; Territory v. Guyott, 9 Mont. 46, 22 P. 134; Knudsen v. Hannberg et al., 8 Utah 203, 30 P. 749; In re Murphy, 5 Wyo. 297, 40 P. 398; Davis v. Beason, 133 U.S. 333, 10 S. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637; Cope v. Cope, 137 U.S. 682, 11 S. Ct. 222, 34 L. Ed. 832.*

[*P16] The law declared by the Supreme Court of Wyoming in the case of *In re Murphy, supra*, is as follows:

"The fact that the Congress of the United States had enacted a [****22] law defining and punishing the crime of bigamy in the territories and other places over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction did not restrict or impair the right of the Legislature of the territory of Wyoming to define and provide a punishment for bigamy as an offense against the territorial sovereignty and its laws."

[*P17] Such also is the holding of the Supreme Court of Utah in the case of *State v. Norman, supra*:

"The acts of Congress defining 'adultery,' and prescribing punishment therefor, in the territories, as a crime against the United States, were not exclusive of territorial legislation on the same subject, and did not prevent the territorial Legislature from punishing by statute the same act as an offense against the territorial government and its laws."

[*P18] To the same effect in a degree is the declaration of the Supreme Court of Montana in the case of Territory v. Guyott, supra:

"We are aware of the broad distinction between the government of a state and territory, but 'the legislative power of every territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. [****23] ' Rev. St. U.S. § 1851. In Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 18 Wall. 648, 21 L. Ed. 966, it is adjudged that, 'as a general thing, subject to the general scheme of local government chalked out by the Organic Act, and such special provisions as are contained therein, the local Legislature has been intrusted with the enactment of the entire system of municipal law, subject, also, however, to the right of [**903] Congress to revise, alter, and revoke at its discretion.' The powers thus exercised by the territorial Legislatures are nearly as extensive as those exercised by any state Legislature."

[*P19] Nor is it any argument against the validity of this act that a violator of it was liable to be prosecuted twice for the same offense. In re Murphy, 5 Wyo. 297, 40 P. 398; Harlan v. People, 1 Doug. \(Mich.\) 207; Miners' Bank v. State of Iowa, 12 How. 1, 13 L. Ed. 867. The rule in this respect is properly declared by the Supreme Court of Montana in the case of In re Murphy, supra, as follows:

"The contention that the law of the territory was not valid, because the same act was punishable as a crime under the laws of of [****24] the United States, and therefore, if both were in force, the person committing the crime would be subject to punishment twice for the same offense, is not sound, as the federal government could punish it as a crime against it while at the same time it might be a crime punishable under the laws of the territory. In this respect there is no distinction between a state and a territory in their respective relations to the general government."

[*P20] We therefore conclude that the anti-trust act of the Legislature of the territory of Oklahoma was not repugnant to or in conflict with the federal anti-trust act or any other constitutional or congressional limitation, and was a valid, existing statute of the territory of Oklahoma.

[*P21] [***917] This conclusion on our part brings us to by far the most serious question in the case; that is, whether or not the allegations contained in the petitions bring these defendants within the terms of the statute of the territory defining a public nuisance. HN13  Section 1, c. 56, Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. Okla. 1903, provides as follows:

"A nuisance consists in unlawfully doing an act, or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission either: First. Annoys, injures [****25] or endangers the comfort, repose, health, or safety of others; or, Second. Offends decency; or, Third. Unlawfully interferes with, obstructs or tends to obstruct, or renders dangerous for passage, any lake or navigable river, bay, stream, canal or basin, or any public park, square, street or highway; or, Fourth. In any [**904] way renders other persons insecure in life, or in the use of property."

[*P22] Section 2 thereof reads as follows:

"A public nuisance is one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon the individuals may be unequal."

[*P23] The county attorney, as first noted, began these actions under section 4440, supra. It will be noted that under this statute the term "common nuisance" is used, while the statute defining a nuisance violating the general rights of the public is under section 2, supra, denominated a "public nuisance." The meaning of these two phrases as generally understood by the courts, and the elements entering therein, is illustrated by the statement of the general rule contained in volume 21, p. 683, American and English Encyclopaedia [****26] of Law, as follows:

"A common or public nuisance is one that affects the people at large, and is a violation of a public right, either by a direct encroachment upon public property or by doing some act which tends to the common injury or by omitting to do, in the discharge of a legal duty, that which the common good requires. It does not necessarily mean one affecting the government or the whole community of the state. It is public if it affects the surrounding community generally, or the people of some local neighborhood, as, for instance, the inhabitants of a village. Nor is it necessary that all persons in the community, or in fact that any individual whatever, should be actually annoyed or injured, but it is sufficient if there is a tendency to the annoyance of the public by an invasion of a right which all are entitled to exercise if they see fit."

[*P24] It will be noted that the petitions allege that the defendants have become members of a pool, trust, agreement, combination, and understanding with each other to regulate and fix the price of lumber, coal, and grain and to prevent and restrict competition in the sale thereof, and that by virtue of being thus federated together, have [****27] so controlled all the business of buying and selling such commodities in the town of Kingfisher as to create a monopoly for their benefit, and, by charging unjust, unreasonable, exorbitant [**905] prices for these commodities, their acts have been and are greatly to the injury of the people of the county of Kingfisher and the territory of Oklahoma; that, by means of said confederation, combination, and monopoly, they are enabled to and do keep other persons desiring to enter said business from doing so, and arbitrarily fix the price which shall be paid for such commodities, and also the price at which they shall be sold to consumers, and that they have thereby completely excluded competition in these lines. Wood on Nuisance, § 51, says. "All monopolies were regarded as nuisances at common law"; and they have received the condemnation of Legislatures and courts from the earliest times. Forestalling and engrossing in the purchase of commodities in common use were at an early date condemned by the English Parliament, being made punishable by fine and imprisonment, and courts have uniformly denied to parties to contracts in restraint of trade their remedies and relief. Nearly all [****28] of the states of the Union, as well as the federal government, have provisions either in their Constitutions or statutes making them illegal and bringing them under the ban of prosecution on the part of the state. Where corporations are shown to have been involved, they have been proceeded against by quo warranto (People v. North River Sugar Refining Company, 22 Abb. N.C. 164, 3 N.Y.S. 401; State ex rel. Snyder v. Portland Natural Gas & Oil Company, 153 Ind. 483, 53 N.E. 1089, 53 L.R.A. 413, 74 Am. St. Rep. 314; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Company, 49 Ohio St. 137, 30 N.E. 279, 15 L.R.A. 145, 34 Am. St. Rep. 541; National Cotton Oil Company v. Texas, 197 U.S. 115, 25 S. Ct. 379, 49 L. Ed. 689), or they have been prosecuted under the criminal provisions of the statute (Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U.S. 447, 25 S. Ct. 289, 49 L. Ed. 546), or the state has proceeded against them by injunction to prevent a continuation of their illegal practices (Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Company et al. v. State of Texas, 72 Tex. 404, 10 S.W. 81, 1 L.R.A. 849, 13 Am. St. Rep. 815), or the parties [****29] thereto have been indicted and prosecuted for conspiracy (People v. Sheldon et al., 139 N.Y. 251, 34 N.E. 785, 906 23 L.R.A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690; People v. Duke, 19 Misc. 292, 44 N.Y.S. 336; State ex rel. Durner v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 189, 85 N.W. 1046, 62 L.R.A. 700; State v Eastern Coal Company et al. [R. I.] 70 A. 1.) The state of Connecticut proceeded by mandamus in one instance against a railway company compelling it to reinstate train service which it had ceased under contract made with a competing carrier. State v. Hartford & New Haven Railroad Company, 29 Conn. 538.

[*P25] The foregoing cases exemplify some of the different remedies which [***918] have heretofore been applied to relieve the public of the effect of unlawful combinations restrictive of free competition, and now we are called on to say whether or not combinations such as are delineated in the petitions herein may be proceeded against in yet an additional way, as for a nuisance; the question being: Do their acts produce such a condition as to bring them within the terms of our statute, to the end that their continuance [****30] may be restrained at the instance of a county attorney on a petition supported by his oath or affirmation, upon information and belief and without a bond? The light in which they are held by the courts is manifest from expressions contained in all of the cases where they have been before them. A few of the list and which might easily be extended are as follows: Butchers' Union Company v. Crescent City Company, 111 U.S. 746, 4 S. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 43 N.W. 1102, 6 L.R.A. 457; Craft et al. v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346, 22 Am. Rep. 171; Morris Run Coal Company v. Barclay Coal Company, 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159; Charles River Bridge Company v. Warren Bridge et al., 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Tuscaloosa Ice Manufacturing Co. v. Williams, 127 Ala. 110, 28 So. 669, 50 L.R.A. 175, 85 Am. St. Rep. 125.

[*P26] Mr. Justice Field of the Supreme Court of the United States in his concurring opinion in the case of Butchers' Union Company v. Crescent City Company, supra, said:

"As in our intercourse with our fellow men certain principles of morality [****31] are assumed to exist without which society would be [**907] impossible, so certain inherent rights lie at the fountain of all action, and upon a recognition of them alone can free institutions be maintained. These inherent rights have never been more happily expressed than in the Declaration of Independence, that new evangel of liberty to the people: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident' (that is, so plain that their truth is recognized upon their mere statement) 'that all men are endowed,' not by edicts of emperors, or decrees of Parliament, or acts of Congress, but 'by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, (that is rights which cannot be bartered away, or given away, or taken away, except in punishment of crime), 'and that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and to secure these' (not grant them, but secure them) 'governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.' Among these inalienable rights, as proclaimed in that great document, is the right of men to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity [****32] or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment The common business and callings of life, the ordinary trades and pursuits, which are innocuous in themselves, and have been followed in all communities from time immemorial, must, therefore, be free in this country to all alike, upon the same conditions. The right to pursue them, without let or hindrance, except that which is applied to all persons of the same age, sex, and condition, is a distinguishing privilege of citizens of the United States, and an essential element of that freedom which they claim as their birthright."

[*P27] Now the question presents itself: Do the allegations of these petitions bring the defendants within our statute, and constitute of their acts a public common nuisance? In other words, are their doings as set forth such as would annoy, injure, or endanger the comfort, repose, health, and safety, or in any way render at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, insecure in life or in the use of their property.

[*P28] An act of the state Legislature of Indiana, (Acts 1893, p. 300, c. 36, § 1) provides: "That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, [****33] or corporation [**908] having possession or control of any natural gas or oil well, whether as a contractor, owner, lessee, agent, or manager to allow or permit the flow of gas or oil from any such well to escape into the open air without being confined within such well or proper pipes, or other safe receptacle for a longer period than two (2) days next after gas or oil shall have been struck in such well. And thereafter all such gas or oil shall be safely and securely confined in such well, pipes, or other safe and proper receptacles."

[*P29] The penalty for a violation of this section was provided in the recovery of $ 200 for each violation, and a further penalty of $ 200 for each 10 days during which such violation should continue, to be recovered in a civil action in the name of the state, for the use of the county in which such well is located, with attorney's fees and costs of suit. In addition to this remedy, it was provided that persons in the vicinity were authorized to go upon the land where any such well is situated, close and pack the same, and were entitled to sue and recover the expenses thereof with attorney's fees and costs of suit. The Ohio Oil Company, it was alleged, [****34] was violating this section of the statute, and the Attorney General of the state and the prosecuting attorney for the Madison circuit court brought suit praying an injunction to restrain it from wasting natural gas. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the complaint for want of sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action. The plaintiff elected to abide the demurrer, refused to amend or plead further, and the court rendered judgment against the state, from which the state appealed, as did the territory in the case at bar. The complaint alleged that the defendant had "unlawfully permitted the gas produced therein to flow and escape into the open air, whereby many millions of cubic feet of natural gas have been wasted and lost, and whereby the state's supply of natural [***919] gas has been greatly diminished, and the property of its citizens within the said gas territory, dependent upon the continued supply of natural gas for fuel as aforesaid, has been greatly damaged and decreased in value." The action brought on the part of the state was, as is the one at bar, to enjoin and restrain a nuisance. The statute of the state of Indiana on nuisances reads: [**909] "Whatever [****35] is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as essentially to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property is a nuisance, and the subject of an action. * * * The nuisance may be enjoined or abated and damages recovered therefor."

[*P30] On the consideration of the allegations set forth in the petition of the state, and the terms of the statute on nuisances, the court held in the case of State v. Ohio Oil Company, 150 Ind. 21, 49 N.E. 809, 47 L.R.A. 627, as follows:

"The facts alleged in the complaint show that the acts of the appellee are such as to essentially interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life and the property of the citizens of the state. The Supreme Court of Kansas in State ex rel. Vance v. Crawford, 28 Kan. 726, 42 Am. Rep. 182, said: 'Every place where a public statute is openly, publicly, repeatedly, continuously, persistently, and intentionally violated is a public nuisance.' The demurrer to the complaint admits that the wells of the appellee are in this category. The Supreme Court of California in a suit by the Attorney General to enjoin the Truckee [****36] Lumber Company from discharging sawdust into the Truckee river with the effect of destroying the fish therein, in sustaining the action, which is closely analogous to this action, the court used the following language, which we adopt:

"It is alleged that the acts of the defendant have the effect of poisoning the waters of the river, and thereby killing and destroying the fish therein. Anything which is "an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property by an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons," is a public nuisance. * * * The fish within our waters constitute the most important constituent of that species of property commonly designated as wild game, the general right and ownership of which is in the people of the state ( Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 37 P. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129), as in England it was in the King, and the right and power to protect and preserve such property for the common use and benefit is one of the recognized prerogatives of the sovereign, coming to us from the common law, and preserved and expressly provided for by the statutes of this and [****37] every other state in the Union. The complaint shows that by the repeated and continuing acts of defendant this public property right is [**910] being and will continue to be greatly interfered with and impaired; and that such acts constitute a nuisance, both under our statute and at common law, is not open to serious question. People ex rel. Ricks Water Company v. Elk River Mill & Lumber Company, 107 Cal. 214, 40 P. 486, 48 Am. St. Rep. 121. * * * The dominion of the state for the purposes of protecting its sovereign rights in the fish within its waters and their preservation for the common enjoyment of its citizens is not confined within the narrow limits suggested by the defendant's argument. It is not restricted to their protection only when found within what may in strictness be held to be navigable or otherwise public waters. It extends to all waters within the state, public or private, wherein these animals are habited or accustomed to resort for spawning or other purposes, and through which they have freedom of passage to and from the public fishing grounds of the state. * * * While the right of fishery upon his own land is exclusively in the riparian proprietor, [****38] this does not imply or carry the right to destroy what he does not take. He does not own the fish in the stream. His right of property attaches only to those he reduces to actual possession, and he cannot lawfully kill or obstruct the free passage of those not taken. * * * The fact that acts of the character alleged are by the Penal Code made a misdemeanor, and punishable as such, does not make them less a nuisance, nor imply that the Legislature intended to make the criminal remedy exclusive of the civil. Nor is there anything in the objection that the Attorney General is not privileged to maintain the action upon his own information without the intervention of a private relator.' ( People v. Truckee Lumber Co., 116 Cal. 397, 48 P. 374, 39 L.R.A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183.)

"The same doctrine is laid down in People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351, 48 Am. Dec. 339; Commonwealth v. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co., 24 Pa. 159, 62 Am. Dec. 372; State ex rel. McCain v. Metschan, 32 Ore. 372, 46 P. 791, 53 P. 1071, 41 L.R.A. 692."

[*P31] It is true the foregoing case is not one wherein a monopoly is declared a nuisance, but it is one which recognizes [****39] the principle which we regard as controlling in all cases where the question is involved as to whether or not certain things constitute a public nuisance. In that case it was not alleged that any citizen of the state at that particular time by reason of the act of the [**911] defendant was being deprived of natural gas by virtue of the waste in which defendant was indulging, but merely that by virtue of the waste, they were invading the valuable public right of having that gas conserved, to the end that the people of the state in their communal capacity might not in the future be denied and deprived by virtue of such waste of the right to this common product. This waste, resulting in a diminution in the value of property, the court held interfered with the comfortable enjoyment of life [***920] and property of the citizens of the state.

[*P32] Now let us apply this principle to the facts as averted in the case at bar. The allegations in the petitions before us clearly show that lumber, fuel, and grain, three of the prime necessities of life, are in the community where these combinations are alleged to exist entirely monopolized and under the control of these defendants. The right [****40] of the citizens of that community to purchase or sell in an open and free market, shelter, warmth, or grain for food is by virtue of these combinations entirely denied by these defendants. This great and invaluable public right is not only invaded, but absolutely destroyed. The extent of the evil in the present case may be gathered when we consider that from lumber are constructed the houses and homes of nearly our entire population. The inclemencies of the season and the requirements of civilization require and compel men to purchase this commodity in order that they may survive. The same elements make it equally necessary to heat these houses and homes, and yet, under the aver-merits of these petitions, if true, two combinations of a small number of individuals have effectually gotten into their hands the power in this community to exact any price from the citizens thereof for these absolute necessities that they may choose, for in truth the citizens have no choice on the question as to whether they shall purchase or not, and if the law can afford them no relief, they have recourse to but two remedies: First, to yield; or, second, to move, and the extent of the detriment which they [****41] may thus be wrongfully compelled to bear is measured only by which of these alternatives presents the least burden. In reference to [**912] grain, which constitutes and makes up the greater portion of the food of the people, and of their domestic animals, a similar condition is alleged to exist, except that it is more far reaching in the evil effects. Here a combination, it is alleged, not only fixes the price which the producer who grows grain for a livelihood shall receive for it, limited only by the burden of taking it to another market, but within the same limitation it has arrogated to itself the right of fixing the price which those who require this necessity must pay for it. Under the operation of combinations of this character, competition which usually corrects inequalities in trade relations is stifled, and the people living there with their homes and establishments are by virtue of these circumstances compelled to patronize those who exploit them. Our population is made up of those who produce raw material, and who purchase goods from dealers. They each and all have a right under the laws of the land to a free and equal opportunity to conduct their daily business operations, [****42] unhampered by restrictions imposed by unlawful combinations. They have a right to have the current of their business affairs unobstructed and the atmosphere of their daily transactions unpolluted by monopolistic organizations destroying that free and open market to which all are entitled. The benefit of a free and open market, unhampered by secret combinations with the power by virtue of such to arbitrarily fix prices which those who enter it shall receive and shall be required to pay, is one of the most valuable rights which organized government offers a citizen, and it is a right not only of material value to the individual member in his personal capacity, but it is a right which he is entitled to enjoy as a member of the community in which he lives in common with all of his other rights. Any invasion of this right in the manner indicated by these Suits is an invasion of a public right, one which all the citizens of a community should be permitted to enjoy by reason of being law-abiding members of such community and loyal citizens of the state.

[*P33] That combinations such as are here proceeded against are invasions of this public right and of the interests of the public; and [**913] [****43] that such acts are so recognized is declared by numerous authorities. People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N.Y. 267, 39 N.E. 1062, 27 L.R.A. 437, 45 Am. St. Rep. 609; People ex rel. v. Chicago Gas Trust Company, 130 Ill. 268, 22 N.E. 798, 8 L.R.A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 43 N.W. 1102, 6 L.R.A. 457; Nester et al. v. Continental Brewing Company et al., 161 Pa. 473, 29 A. 102, 24 L.R.A. 247, 41 Am. St. Rep. 894; Tuscaloosa Ice Manufacturing Company v. Williams, 127 Ala. 110, 28 So. 669, 50 L.R.A. 175, 85 Am. St. Rep. 125; Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company v. McConnell \(C. C.\) 82 F. 65. This thought is well expressed by Judge Clark of the federal court for the middle district of Tennessee in the case of Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway Company v. McConnell, supra, wherein he said:

HN14 [↑] "It needs no extended statement to make it manifest that the right to carry on a business without interference, without fraud, and without obstruction, is one of the most valuable of all rights. Indeed, in the commercial world the right of [****44] greatest value is the right to freely carry on a lawful business without unlawful interruption. It is a substantial right, which may be protected by any remedy known to the court as fully as a constitutional or statutory right, and as fully as a right, in the ordinary forms of property."

[*P34] When we consider the terms of our statute, and find that the word "annoy" is by Webster defined as "to disturb or irritate, especially by continued or repeated acts," and that "insecure" means "not secure, not confident of safety or permanence, distrustful, suspicious; apprehensive of danger or loss," we are unable to come to any other conclusion than that the acts of these defendants as charged in the petitions constituted of their doings under our statute a public common nuisance, which annoyed, injured, and endangered [***921] the comfort and safety of others, and in many ways rendered at the same time the people residing in that community and neighborhood where they existed insecure in the use of their property.

[*P35] [**914] This holding on our part interferes in no particular whatever with any legitimate operation by the defendants of their different businesses. It simply prevents them from [****45] doing the identical things against which they are entitled to and should be protected on the part of others, and which is denounced by the law as a crime. The business which they are conducting and the service given by them to the community in which they live are indispensable, and those so engaged and rendering such service should be protected in every way in all their legitimate operations. Hence the writ issued in this case should in no wise and in no particular interfere with these defendants in conducting their affairs in a lawful manner. Its extreme scope should go no further than to restrain them from maintaining a monopoly and acting under the contracts charged against them, and on the trial hereof no permanent writ should issue except upon the production on the part of the plaintiff of evidence of high and convincing character.

[*P36] The record before us shows that the Oklahoma Elevators, one of the parties defendant in case No. 2,100, was not a party in the proceedings in error, that no service was made upon it, nor appearance made herein, and the judgment rendered will not run as against it. With this exception the judgment of the lower court is accordingly reversed, and the [****46] cases are remanded to the district court of Kingfisher county, with instructions to require the defendants herein to answer, and to set the same down for such early determination and trial by that court as the public service and convenience will permit.

[*P37] WILLIAMS, C. J., TURNER and HAYES, JJ., concur; KANE, J., being of counsel and not sitting.

---

End of Document

State v. Brady

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas

November 25, 1908, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

114 S.W. 895 *; 1908 Tex. App. LEXIS 743 **

STATE v. BRADY, County Attorney.†

Subsequent History: [**1] January 6, 1909, Rehearing Denied

Reversed by State v. Brady, 102 Tex. 408, 118 S.W. 128, 1909 Tex. LEXIS 167 \(Tex., Apr. 14, 1909\)

Prior History: Appeal from District Court, Williamson County; Chas. A. Wilcox, Judge.

Suit by the State against John W. Brady, County Attorney. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

anti-trust, percent, county attorney, suits, legal interest, violations, collected

Counsel: James R. Hamilton, Dist. Atty., and J. M. Patterson, for the State.

John W. Brady, Allen & Hart, Gregory & Batts, D. W. Doom, and D. H. Doom, for appellee.

Judges: FISHER, C. J.

Opinion by: FISHER

Opinion

---

[*896] FISHER, C. J.

This suit was brought by appellant against appellee to recover from him the following sums of money: $750, with legal interest from December 5, 1904; $2,350, with legal interest from November 11, 1905; $1,200, with legal interest from July 18, 1906; $3,480, with legal interest from October 4, 1907; and $1,750, with legal interest from November 8, 1907, upon the ground that appellee as county attorney represented appellant in as many anti-trust suits filed and prosecuted to final judgment for violations of the anti-trust law of 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 246, c. 146), after the passage and taking effect of the anti-trust law of 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94), and that appellee kept and retained as his fee or commission as county attorney 25 per cent. of the amount of each of the judgments so obtained [**2] and collected by him, instead of commission allowed him by article 297 of the Revised Statutes of 1895, the appellant's contention being that the anti-trust law of 1903 repealed the provision of the anti-trust law of 1899, giving district and county attorneys 25 per cent. of the penalties recovered by them for the state, and that, after the antitrust law of 1903 took effect, district and county attorneys were only entitled to the commissions on such recoveries as prescribed by article 297 of the Revised Statutes of 1895 — that is, 10 per cent. of the first $1,000 of each judgment and 5 per cent. of each judgment over $1,000. The appellee answered that the act of 1903 did not repeal the provision of the act of 1899 giving district and county attorneys 25 per cent. of the amount recovered in such suits, and also pleaded departmental construction of the act of 1903 in his favor by the Attorney General. The case was tried before the court upon an agreed statement of facts, and judgment rendered in appellee's favor.

---

† Writ of error granted by Supreme Court.

The trial court filed the following conclusions of fact and law:

"(1) It is agreed that the facts alleged and set out in plaintiff's petition are true and correct, and shall be [**3] taken as facts in the trial of this suit, especially as to the official acts of the said John W. Brady, the dates and amounts of the judgments recovered, and of the fees retained by the said Brady as county attorney under the antitrust laws of 1899 and 1903 of the state of Texas. However, it shall not be taken as admitted by the said Brady that the fee alleged in the motion to be the fee allowed by law is the fee allowed him by law. In this respect he only admits that he received as county attorney 25 per cent. of each respective judgment for penalties as alleged in plaintiff's motion, and claims that he was entitled to the same under the law.

"(2) It is agreed: That in all of the suits named in said motion, except that of J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company, and the facts as to that are correctly stated in defendant's answer, the said John W. Brady appeared and represented the state under the direction of the Attorney General of Texas.

"(3) That on March 31, 1903, C. K. Bell was Attorney General of Texas, and held that office until on or about January 2, 1905. That on July 14, 1904, the said John W. Brady as county attorney of Travis county, Tex., assisted by D. A. McFall and G. W. Allen, [**4] attorneys, brought suit in the district court of Travis county, Tex., in behalf of and in the name of the state of Texas, against the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company and the Beaumont Confederate Oil & Pipe Line Company for violations of chapter 146, p. 246, Gen. Laws Tex. 1899, and by agreement recovered a judgment in said suit for $5,000. That said judgment was collected in full by said John W. Brady on or about December 5, 1904, and that said Brady retained $1,250 as his official fee in said suit of the state of Texas against the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company and the Beaumont Confederate Oil & Pipe Line Company. That out of said fees he paid under contract to the said two attorneys two-thirds thereof for their services therein. That the settlement which resulted in said judgment and collection was at the time approved by said C. K. Bell, Attorney General, as the construction of the anti-trust laws of 1899 and 1903, by which the said John W. Brady retained one-fourth of said judgment as his official fees therein.

"(3½) It is agreed: That in all the judgments rendered in the cases in which collections were made, and in which penalties were assessed for violations of the act of 1899, [**5] such penalties were assessed for the [*897] minimum penalty of $200 per day for each day's violations as provided in said act of 1899, and collections made accordingly.

"(4) That the suit No. 21,046, State of Texas v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. et al., was filed while C. K. Bell was Attorney General, but was settled a short time after R. V. Davidson qualified as Attorney General.

"(5) That all the suits named in plaintiff's motion, including those filed and settled under the administration of Attorney General Bell, as well as under the administration of Attorney General Davidson, were settled by agreed judgments, approved in terms and amounts by the Attorney General. That all of the fees retained by the said John W. Brady in said suits were retained by him in good faith, believing that he was entitled thereto under the law. That in so retaining said fees he relied upon and followed the construction given to the anti-trust laws of 1899 and 1903 by Attorneys General Bell and Davidson, viz., that the repeal of the act of 1899 by the act of 1903, with the saving clause in the latter act, had the effect of keeping alive the act of 1899 as to all acts committed before the act of 1903 took effect, [**6] not only as to the penalties named in the former act, but also as to all its machinery and provisions for the enforcement of the same, including the compensation of 25 per cent. to county and district attorneys. That such construction is still adhered to by the Attorney General's department of this state.

"(6) That upon the faith of said construction by the Attorney General's department the said John W. Brady, with the knowledge and sanction of said department, employed attorneys and made contracts with them for contingent interest in said fees, based upon the construction that he was entitled to 25 per cent. of the recovery under the act of 1899, to assist him and the Attorney General in the prosecution of each of said suits. That said attorneys actively assisted in the work of preparing said cases for trial, and performed all legal services therein required of them by the said John W. Brady or by the Attorney General. That out of the fees received by him in said cases the said Brady has paid out to said attorneys and in expenses for procuring testimony and preparing the same for trial over two-thirds of the fees actually retained by him upon the faith of said construction.

"Conclusions [**7] of law.

"(1) That the saving clause of the antitrust act of 1903, when taken in connection with the language and provisions of the anti-trust acts of 1899 and 1903, is susceptible of the construction given to it by two administrations of the Attorney General's department, as set out in the agreed statement of facts, viz., that such saving clause in the latter act had the effect of keeping alive the act of 1899 as to all violations of such act committed before the act of 1903 took effect, not only as to the penalties named in the former act, but also as to all its machinery and provisions for the enforcement of same, including the compensation of 25 per cent. to the county and district attorneys.

"(2) That, applying the well-established rules with reference to the departmental construction of statutes to the facts in this case, I conclude that the construction given said statutes by the Attorney General's department as above set out, and upon the faith of which the defendant acted, should be adhered to by the courts.

"Therefore I conclude that the defendant was entitled to the fees sought to be recovered in this case, and that the state should not recover in this action."

We agree with [**8] the trial court in the conclusions and result reached.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

---

End of Document

Bigelow v. Calumet & H. Min. Co.

Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit

February 18, 1909

No. 1,897; No. 1,898

Reporter

167 F. 721 *; 1909 U.S. App. LEXIS 4375 **

BIGELOW v. CALUMET & HECLA MINING CO. et al. (two cases)

Prior History: [**1] Appeals from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan.

Core Terms

---

commerce, stock, monopoly, manufacture, copper, interstate commerce, sugar, external, cases, refining, shares, mining company, capital stock, ownership, combinations, interstate, Northern, mining, Lake, state act, percent, anti-trust, stream, restraint of trade, Consolidated, suppression, approached, properties, refineries, contracts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Finance > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Finance > Initial Capitalization & Stock Subscriptions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Formation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Powers > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Meetings & Voting > Voting Shares > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholders > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

HN1[] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

The act of 1905, No. 105, Pub. Acts Mich. 1905, pp. 153, 154 provides that corporations organized under the Michigan mining law or under any other laws for refining, smelting, or manufacturing ores, metals, or minerals may subscribe for, purchase, own or dispose of stock in any company organized under this act, or under any other laws, foreign or domestic, for the purpose of mining, refining, smelting or manufacturing any or all kinds of ores or minerals. The latter act does not so seriously interfere with the contract between the company and its shareholders as to require the shareholders' acceptance as an amendment of the charter powers. The amendment, while allowing a wide expansion of the business operations of such companies, is not so fundamental as to be beyond the power of the Legislature under the constitutional reservation of the power to alter or amend the general constating act under which corporations may be organized in Michigan. Use of the power conferred by the amendment is evidence of acceptance, if acceptance be necessary. The right to vote stock so lawfully acquired is, of course, an incident to ownership. Comp. Laws Mich. § 7002.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200), the validity of an alleged combination or contract in restraint of trade, interstate or foreign, is to be determined by the terms of the statute which forbids any such contract or combination without respect to its nature or beneficial results.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

International Trade Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Commerce With Other Nations

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN3[] Interstate Commerce, State Powers

The power of Congress to legislate upon trade, aside from the territories and the District of Columbia, is derived from its power to regulate commerce among the states and with foreign nations. It is therefore well settled that it does not apply to restraints or monopolies as such, but only to those which directly and immediately, or those which necessarily, affect commerce among the states or with foreign nations. If the law were held applicable to contracts or combinations indirectly or remotely affecting such commerce, it would substantially obliterate the distinction between interstate and intrastate commerce, the latter being as exclusively within the regulating power of the state as is the former within the power of Congress.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There must be some direct and immediate effect upon interstate commerce in order to come within the act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

HN5  Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An agreement may in a variety of ways affect interstate commerce, just as state legislation may, and yet, like it, be entirely valid, because the interference produced by the agreement or by the legislation would not be direct. The act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200) must have a reasonable construction, or else there would scarcely be an agreement or contract among business men that could not be said to have, indirectly or remotely, some bearing upon interstate commerce, and possibly restrain it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6  Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A mere combination between manufacturers only, by which a monopoly of a product results, is not, without other special circumstances, sufficient to justify an active intervention under the act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200) to undo a contract by which such monopoly has been brought about. That the product thus monopolized by such combination of mere manufacturers may ultimately find itself into the stream of interstate commerce is not such a special circumstance as to constitute the direct and immediate effect upon commerce among the states as to bring the agreement within the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7  Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Unless a monopoly of manufacture in a single state of a product which goes into interstate commerce directly and immediately or necessarily interferes with or restrains that commerce, the monopoly does not come under the act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8  Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

If there is a presumption, in respect to a question of restraint or monopoly under the act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200) that the power to determine the management of a competing corporation through ownership of a majority of shares constitutes a suppression of competition, the inquiry is whether such presumption is one of fact or law. If one of fact, as it evidently is, it is rebuttable. Purpose or motive is of no moment, provided the contract or agreement directly provided for the suppression of competition, or when such a result, as a matter, of law, must necessarily occur. But when the agreement or combination in question does not in its terms provide for the suppression of competition or the creation of a monopoly, nor bring about such a result as a necessary legal consequence, but requires further acts or conduct to bring about such an unlawful result, some evidence of an unlawful intent becomes essential, that a court may see that, if not stopped, a prohibited restraint is likely to be created.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN9** [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200) gives a proceeding against combinations in restraint of commerce among the states, and against attempts to monopolize the same. Intent is almost essential to such a combination, and is essential to such an attempt. Where acts are not sufficient in themselves to produce a result which the law seeks to prevent -- for instance, the monopoly -- but require further acts in addition to the mere forces of nature to bring that result to pass, an intent to bring it to pass is necessary in order to produce a dangerous probability that it will happen. But when the intent and the consequent dangerous probability exist, this statute, like many others and like the common law in some cases, directs itself against the dangerous probability as well as against the complete result.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

**HN10** [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In the absence of any express terms of an agreement providing for acts directly affecting interstate commerce, antitrust complainants must by facts and circumstances show that the direct and necessary result of what has been done and threatened is to restrain interstate commerce. The burden of showing acts and circumstances which establish the fact that an unlawful result is contemplated and will ensue, unless checked, is upon those asserting the illegality of the contract assailed.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

**HN11** [+] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

A contract is not to be assumed to contemplate unlawful results unless a fair construction requires it upon the established facts.

Counsel: H. E. Boynton and A. C. Denison, for appellant.

Otto Kirchner and A. F. Ress, for appellees.

Opinion by: LURTON

Opinion

---

[*722] Before LURTON and SEVERENS, Circuit Judges, and COCHRAN, District Judge.

LURTON, Circuit Judge. These cases have been heard together upon the same transcript. The solution of the questions presented by one will substantially determine the other. The first and principal bill is that of Albert S. Bigelow against the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company and the Osceola Consolidated Mining Company. The complainant, Bigelow, is a citizen of Boston, Mass. The defendants are copper mining companies created under the laws of the state of Michigan. The complainant is a large stockholder in and president of the Osceola Consolidated Mining Company. In his character as a stockholder of that company he has filed this bill to enjoin the Calumet & Hecla Company from voting shares of the capital stock of the Osceola Company owned by it, and also to enjoin it from voting certain proxies held in its interest, at the annual stockholders' meeting for the election of a board of directors [**2] which was about to occur when the bill was filed.

The bill in the second case was filed by Mr. Bigelow in his character as a small holder of shares of the capital stock of the Calumet & Hecla Company, acquired since the starting of the first suit, for the purpose of questioning the legality of the purchase by that company of some 50,000 acres of additional copper-producing lands in Michigan, and also for the purpose of questioning the power of that company under its charter, as well as under the federal and state legislation against monopolies and illegal restraints of trade and commerce, and to enjoin that corporation from acquiring other mining lands or shares of stock in other mining companies and from exercising the power of voting upon any such shares already acquired.

[*723] An injunction pendente lite was granted under the first bill. The grounds for this action are found in an opinion by Judge Knappen, 155 Fed. 869. No injunction was applied for under the second bill. Upon a final hearing the bills in both cases were dismissed. Pending this appeal the injunction, which operated to preserve the status quo by preventing the election of directors pending this suit, was [**3] continued.

The essential facts are these: Both companies are Michigan corporations engaged in mining and refining copper. The properties of the two companies are contiguous and situated in the copper district of the northern peninsula of Michigan. The Calumet & Hecla Company has bought outright 22,671 shares of the capital stock of the Osceola Company, and has obtained proxies, which are held in its interest, in part with options of purchase, in an amount sufficient with its holdings to make a majority of the 100,000 shares which constitute the total capital stock of the Osceola Company. There is no doubt but that the purpose of the acquisition was to enable the Calumet Company to elect a majority of the directors of the Osceola Company from the board of the Calumet Company. This was avowed in circular letters soliciting proxies from the shareholders of the former company. That such company was to continue its operations as an independent company is equally clear. No other course was possible, though one should eliminate the other so far as active competition might result from the control of a majority of the shares and the exercise of the power of selecting directors incident [**4] to such stock control.

We need not consider the power at common law of such corporations to own and vote shares in similar corporations, for the reason that in Michigan the Legislature has not deemed such restrictions wise or desirable, for there have been a series of enactments relaxing the common-law rule. Comp. St. Mich. § 7012, Pub. Acts Mich. 1903, pp. 382, 383, No. 233, culminating in HN1 the act of 1905, No. 105, Pub. Acts Mich. 1905, pp. 153, 154, which provides that corporations organized under the Michigan mining law or under any other laws for refining, smelting, or manufacturing ores, metals, or minerals may "subscribe for, purchase, own or dispose of stock in any company organized under this act, or under any other laws, foreign or domestic, for the purpose of mining, refining, smelting or manufacturing any or all kinds of ores or minerals." That the latter act does not so seriously interfere with the contract between the company and its shareholders as to require the shareholders' acceptance as an amendment of the charter powers, we think clear. The amendment, while allowing a wide expansion of the business operations of such companies, is not so fundamental as to be [**5] beyond the power of the Legislature under the constitutional reservation of the power to alter or amend the general constating act under which corporations may be organized in Michigan. Attorney General v. Looker, 111 Mich. 498, 69 N.W. 929; Looker v. Maynard, 179 U.S. 46, 21 Sup. Ct. 21, 45 L. Ed. 79; Louisville Trust Company v. Railroad Co., 75 Fed. 445, 448, 22 C.C.A. 378. Use of the [*724] power conferred by the amendment is evidence of acceptance, if acceptance be necessary. Miller v. Insurance Co., 92 Tenn. 167, 21 S.W. 39, 20 L.R.A. 765; Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mutual Ins. Co., 2 Doug. \(Mich.\) 124, 43 Am. Dec. 457. The right to vote stock so lawfully acquired is, of course, an incident to ownership. Comp. Laws Mich. § 7002. Rogers v. Railroad Co., 91 Fed. 299, 312, 33 C.C.A. 517; Taylor v. Southern Pacific R.R. Co. \(C.C.\) 122 Fed. 147, 151. There is nothing, therefore, in the laws of Michigan which forbids the holding or voting of these shares owned, or those for which proxies are held in the interest of the Calumet Company, unless such ownership or voting shall result in an illegal monopoly or combination in restraint of trade, either under the federal anti-trust act [**6] or the Michigan anti-monopoly act of 1899, p. 409, No. 255, and the Public Acts of Michigan of 1905, p. 507, No. 329. In view of the very broad powers expressly conferred by the state of Michigan to such corporations to buy and hold shares in similar companies, it is very clear that, if the incidental voting powers and the ownership of the shares in question is not an illegal monopoly in restraint of trade, the question of the effect upon interstate commerce aside, it was not forbidden by the laws of Michigan. We shall therefore deal with the case in its aspect under the federal act forbidding restraints and monopolies.

Laying on one side, therefore, many interesting questions which have been discussed by counsel as going to the possibility of relief under these bills, we come to the application of the act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200). The relevant sections are the first and second. They are as follows:

"Section 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make [**7] any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

We shall assume at the outset that the authoritative decisions of the Supreme Court have so construed this anti-trust act as to give it a broader application than the prohibition of contracts and agreements in restraint of trade at the common law. It is not essential that the restraint shall be unreasonable within the well-understood definition of an unlawful restraint before the statute. HN2[↑] Under this act the validity of an alleged combination [**8] or contract in restraint of trade, interstate or foreign, is to be determined by the terms of the statute which forbids any such contract or combination without respect to its nature or beneficial results. We need only cite the latest utterance of that court upon the subject. Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 297, [*725] 28 Sup. Ct. 201, 52 L. Ed. 488; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 331, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679. But HN3[↑] the power of Congress to legislate upon the subject, aside from the territories and the District of Columbia, is derived from its power to regulate commerce among the states and with foreign nations. It is therefore well settled that it does not apply to restraints or monopolies as such, but only to those which directly and immediately, or those which necessarily, affect commerce among the states or with foreign nations. If the law were held applicable to contracts or combinations indirectly or remotely affecting such commerce, it would substantially obliterate the distinction between interstate and intrastate commerce, the latter being as exclusively within the regulating power of the state as is the former within the power of Congress. [**9] In Hopkins v. United States, 171 U.S. 578, 594, 600, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 45, 46, 43 L. Ed. 290, Mr. Justice Peckham emphasizes this obvious limitation when, speaking for the court, he said:

HN4[↑] "There must be some direct and immediate effect upon interstate commerce in order to come within the act."

The same discriminating justice then adds:

HN5[↑] "An agreement may in a variety of ways affect interstate commerce, just as state legislation may, and yet, like it, be entirely valid, because the interference produced by the agreement or by the legislation would not be direct. * * * The act must have a reasonable construction, or else there would scarcely be an agreement or contract among business men that could not be said to have, indirectly or remotely, some bearing upon interstate commerce, and possibly restrain it."

This limitation of the act to those contracts and combinations which directly and immediately or necessarily affect commerce among the states is recognized in a long series of opinions. Among them are: United States v. E.C.

Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; Addystone Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 242, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136; Montague [\[\*\*10\]](#) & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 331, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 297, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488. The Knight Case, in its last analysis, is but a striking illustration of the rule that the monopoly or agreement to come within the act must directly and immediately affect interstate commerce. Confining the case to its facts, it establishes the proposition that HN6↑ a mere combination between manufacturers only, by which a monopoly of a product results, is not, without other special circumstances, sufficient to justify an active intervention under the act to undo a contract by which such monopoly has been brought about. That the product thus monopolized by such combination of mere manufacturers may ultimately find itself into the stream of interstate commerce is there held not to be such a special circumstance as to constitute the direct and immediate effect upon commerce among the states as to bring the agreement within the act. Subsequent cases have been distinguished from it, but it has never [\[\*726\]](#) been overruled. In Addystone Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 [\[\*\*11\]](#) U.S. 211, 240, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 107, 44 L. Ed. 136, it was said:

"The direct purpose of the combination in the Knight Case was the control of the manufacture of sugar. There was no combination or agreement, in terms, regarding the future disposition of the manufactured article; nothing looking to a transaction in the nature of interstate commerce. The probable intention on the part of the manufacturer of the sugar to thereafter dispose of it by sending it to some market in another state was held to be immaterial and not to alter the character of the combination. The various cases which have been decided in this court relating to the subject of interstate commerce, and to the difference between that and the manufacture of commodities, and also the police power of the states as affected by the commerce clause of the Constitution, were adverted to, and the case was decided upon the principle that a combination simply to control manufacture was not a violation of the act of Congress, because such a contract or combination did not directly control or affect interstate commerce, but that contracts for the sale and transportsations to other states of specific articles were proper subjects [\[\*\*12\]](#) for regulation because they did form part of such commerce."

Referring to the facts in the Addystone Case as taking it out of the Knight Case, the court said:

"We think the case now before us involves contracts of the nature last above mentioned, not incidentally or collaterally, but as a direct and immediate result of the combination engaged in by the defendants.

"While no particular contract regarding the furnishing of pipe and the price for which it should be furnished was in the contemplation of the parties to the combination at the time of its formation, yet it was their intention, as it was the purpose of the combination, to directly and by means of such combination increase the price for which all contracts for the delivery of pipe within the territory above described should be made, and the latter result was to be achieved by abolishing all competition between the parties to the combination. The direct and immediate result of the combination was therefore necessarily a restraint upon interstate commerce in respect of articles manufactured by any of the parties to it to be transported beyond the state in which they were made. The defendants, by reason of this combination [\[\*\*13\]](#) and agreement, could only send their goods out of the state in which they were manufactured, for sale and delivery in another state, upon the terms and pursuant to the provisions of such combination. As pertinently asked by the court below, was not this a direct restraint upon interstate commerce in those goods?"

In Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. 305, 52 L. Ed. 488, it was said of the combination involved in the Knight Case that "the purpose of the agreement was not to obstruct or restrain commerce. The object and intention determined its legality." Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, was a case of a combination between fresh meat dealers, dominating a large proportion of the trade in the United States, for the purpose of regulating prices, shipments, and freight rates to the exclusion of competition. The combination was, of course, invalid within the law. The court, in its opinion by Justice Holmes, in dealing with the effect of the combination as a restraint upon commerce among the states, said that restraint of that commerce was --

"a direct object; it is that for which the said several specific acts and courses of conduct [\[\*\*14\]](#) are done and adopted. Therefore the case is not like United States v. Knight Co., where the subject-matter of the combination was manufactories within a state. However likely monopoly of commerce among the states in the article manufactured was to follow from the agreement, it was not a [*727] necessary consequence nor a primary end. Here the subject-matter is sales, and the very point of the combination is to restrain and monopolize commerce among the states in respect to such sales."

The specific thing complained of in the case for decision is that one Michigan mining corporation has obtained by purchase or proxy a majority of the capital shares of another Michigan mining corporation, and purposes to exercise its voting power to place in the directory of the latter a majority of its own selection from its own board of officers. The specific relief sought is an injunction against the exercise of the voting power, and a decree compelling a disposition of the shares so held under purchase or proxy. What has the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company done or what does it threaten to do which is a violation of the anti-trust act of Congress? It has the legal right to purchase and vote [**15] shares of stock in the Osceola Company under the laws of Michigan. This we have already considered. Of course, if such stock ownership and such stock control is enough to constitute a direct and immediate or necessary restraint upon trade and commerce between the states, the sanction of the state act goes for nothing. This much is settled by the Northern Securities Case, for a state cannot give to a corporation the lawful right to do anything which is a direct restraint of commerce between the states. How, then, does the exercise of the power of stock control by one mining or manufacturing corporation over another in the same state directly and immediately or necessarily operate as a restraint of commerce among the states? Confessedly the products of these two companies are in competition in the markets, and confessedly the greater part of the product of each will, sooner or later, enter into the stream of interstate commerce, for the chief demand for the product is outside the state of production. But that is not enough. There was all this and more in the Knight Case. If, indeed, such stock control results in a monopoly, it is only a monopoly in manufacture in the same state, [**16] and we have again the conceded situation in the Knight Case. HNT↑ Unless that monopoly of manufacture in a single state of a product which goes into interstate commerce directly and immediately or necessarily interferes with or restrains that commerce, the monopoly does not come under the act of Congress. But we are unable to conclude upon this record that mere stock control of such a company by another in the same state either directly or necessarily destroys competition there, or, if it did, that it results in any such monopoly as to directly or necessarily and immediately affect commerce among the states.

The Calumet & Hecla Mining Company does not own a majority, nor anything like a majority, of the stock of the Osceola Consolidated Mining Company. If it has the power to cast a majority of votes at a stockholders' meeting, it is because there are enough of the stockholders of the latter company willing to co-operate with it in the selection of a board. But it does not follow, if we assume for the purposes of this case that the evil is the same whether its power of election is due to a combination of shares owned [*728] with proxies or by the ownership of a majority of all [**17] the stock, that the ownership constitutes a legal control, or that competition is thereby ended. A board elected by the owner of such a majority would not in any legal sense be the control of such majority owner, nor from such ownership could the legal inference be drawn that the Calumet & Hecla Company dominated the management of the Osceola Company. The two companies would still remain separate corporations, each managed presumably in its own interest. Pullman Co. v. Missouri Pacific Co., 115 U.S. 587, 596, 6 Sup. Ct. 194, 29 L. Ed. 499; Porter v. Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Co., 120 U.S. 649, 670, 7 Sup. Ct. 1206, 30 L. Ed. 830; Richmond Construction Co. v. Richmond, 68 Fed. 105, 15 C.C.A. 289, 34 L. Ed. 625. But HN8↑ if the presumption be, in respect to a question of restraint or monopoly under the act of Congress, that the power to determine the management of a competing corporation through ownership of a majority of shares constitutes a suppression of competition, we come to the inquiry as to whether such presumption is one of fact or law. If one of fact, as it evidently is, it is rebuttable. We quite agree that purpose or motive is of no moment, provided the contract or agreement [**18] directly provided for the suppression of competition, or when such a result, as a matter, of law, must necessarily occur. United States v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 291, 17, Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007; Chesapeake & Ohio Fuel Co. v. United States, 115 Fed. 610, 623, 53 C.C. 256. But when the agreement or combination in question does not in its terms provide for the suppression of competition or the creation of a monopoly, nor bring about such a result as a necessary legal consequence, but requires further acts or conduct to bring about such an unlawful result, some evidence of an unlawful intent becomes essential, that the court may see that, if not stopped, a prohibited restraint is likely to be created. In Swift Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, it was said by Mr. Justice Holmes that:

HNg [↑] "The statute gives this proceeding against combinations in restraint of commerce among the states, and against attempts to monopolize the same. Intent is almost essential to such a combination, and is essential to such an attempt. Where acts are not sufficient in themselves to produce a result which the law seeks to prevent -- for instance, the monopoly -- but require [**19] further acts in addition to the mere forces of nature to bring that result to pass, an intent to bring it to pass is necessary in order to produce a dangerous probability that it will happen. Commonwealth v. Peaslee, 177 Mass. 267, 272, 59 N.E. 55. But when the intent and the consequent dangerous probability exist, this statute, like many others and like the common law in some cases, directs itself against the dangerous probability as well as against the complete result."

The power of stock control which the Calumet Company has acquired may be exercised only in a legitimate and lawful way in the interest of an economical management of both companies. In that case, it has done nothing directly affecting commerce among the states.

On the other hand, that power may be a mere preparation for the doing of acts which will directly and necessarily interfere with the [*729] freedom of that kind of commerce which it is the purpose of Congress to protect. When this unlawful use of the power shall result in an unlawful restraint, or further steps shall point to results directly affecting such commerce, there may be interference by the courts.

The Calumet & Hecla Mining Company vigorously [**20] deny any purpose to either bring about a monopoly, restrain competition, or diminish production, and assert that their only object was to extend their industrial life by the acquirement of an interest in the oreproducing lands of the Osceola Company and the more economical management of their own property by a friendly and mutually advantageous use of the facilities of the two companies. The two properties are in large part contiguous. In a very convincing opinion, the judge who heard the case below states the leading facts which made it desirable and economical that there should be, to a certain extent, a co-operation in future mining operations by the two companies, in order that certain poorer lodes underlying the conglomerate lode of the Calumet Company, which has been worked to a point where exhaustion is in sight, may be worked to the best advantage of both companies. We shall not go into the details. We refer and adopt the conclusion stated by Judge Knappen, who thus sums up the evidence relating to the motive or purpose actuating the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company:

"I am convinced, from a careful consideration of the testimony, that the controlling motive and purpose [**21] of the Calumet & Hecla Company in acquiring its interest in the mining properties mentioned was to extend its industrial life, and keep up and increase, if possible, its production and net earnings, and that the evidence fairly negatives a design thereby to reduce the output of any of the companies or artificially to increase or maintain the price of the product, or to stifle competition between the related companies, or to prejudice other stockholders generally of either company associated, or to interfere with the integrity of either company, a common management with separate detailed organization being contemplated. The evidence does not indicate that any use of the facilities of the associated companies is contemplated, except upon terms and in manner mutually advantageous."

But it is said that the stock control of the Osceola Company will result in a monopoly. If this be so, and it be only a monopoly in mining and refining copper brought about by the combination of two companies of the same state conducting their operations side by side, it is not enough, under the Knight Case, to bring the agreement within the act, even though the fact be that the product will in large part [**22] pass ultimately into interstate commerce. In the Knight Case, the American Sugar Refining Company, if permitted to combine with the four independent refining companies at Philadelphia, would control 98 per cent. of all the sugar refining in the United States. Such a combination undoubtedly brought about a monopoly under the common law. But as it was only a monopoly in manufacture, it was held not to be a restraint of trade among the states, although the great bulk of the product was ultimately destined for commerce among the states, the effect upon such commerce being indirect. There is, in fact, no parallel between the facts of that case and this in respect to the probable results of the two combinations. In this case it is shown that the world's production of copper in [*730] 1896 was approximately 1,600 million pounds, of which amount about 900 million pounds was produced in the United States. The production of the copper called "Lake Copper" -- that is, copper produced in the Lake Superior region -- was about 224 million pounds, or one-fourth of the entire product of the United States and one-eighth of the world's product. The Calumet & Hecla Company produced, of this [**23] amount, about 95 million pounds, and the Osceola Company about 18

1/2 million pounds. So far from the "control" of the smaller company by the larger resulting in a monopoly, it is evident that the combined output would be less than one-half of the product of lake copper alone, or about one-ninth of the product of the United States and about one-fifteenth of the product of the world.

But the complainant has very seriously insisted that, in the determination of the question as to whether the stock control of the Osceola Company will result in a monopoly and an unlawful suppression of competition, every class or grade of copper should be eliminated except that particular class or grade made by the Calumet & Hecla Company and the Osceola Company and a few smaller producers, upon the contention that the product of these companies is a distinct commercial commodity, known in the market as "Best" or "Prime Lake Copper," as distinguished from Western or electrolytic copper. The great bulk of the copper of the world is treated electrically. The purpose is to free it from impurities, for the purer it is the greater its conductivity. Arsenic is an ordinary impurity, and the presence of [**24] this in small quantities adds, or is supposed to add, to the tensile strength of the copper, for which reason copper having this slight admixture of arsenic is preferred by some makers of copper wire. Hence some manufacturers of wire specify in their purchases of copper "Best" or "Prime Lake Copper," meaning copper not so electrically treated as to entirely eliminate this arsenical impurity. But it is demonstrated that electrolytic copper is capable of being used for every purpose for which "Best Lake Copper" can be used, and that they actively compete with each other in the markets of the world, though, as a rule, the quotations for "Best Lake" are slightly higher than Western or electrolytic copper. There is no material intrinsic difference between the two kinds. The court below, upon a full review of the evidence, expert and nonexpert, reached the conclusion that neither "Lake Copper" nor "Best Lake Copper" is so far a distinct commodity as to justify an elimination of the electrolytic copper as a factor in a case like this. In this we entirely concur.

When all is said which the facts justify, the acquisition of the voting power of a majority of the capital shares of the Osceola [**25] Consolidated Mining Company and its proposed exercise by the selection of a board, a majority of which to be composed of the members of the board of the Calumet & Hecla Company, is the main fact upon which the complainant must invoke the prohibition of the act of Congress. That fact is not enough. That the two companies are in a sense competitors, and that the product of their mines will ultimately go into interstate commerce, is far from making out a [*731] case of direct or necessary and immediate interference with that kind of commerce. They do not show that even a monopoly of the product will ever probably ensue, to say nothing of the utter absence of any material evidence indicating that such a monopoly in the product of two contiguous mining companies would directly or necessarily affect commerce among the states. No express agreement is shown by which anything is to be done or left undone from which an unlawful restraint must, or will, probably happen. The case differs from all of the cases appealed to by the learned counsel for appellants in this important particular. In the Addystone Pipe Case, the agreement specifically provided a scheme for the suppression of [**26] competition between the parties in the matter of sales of iron pipe in a large number of states through a division of territory and sham bids, the parties agreeing to divide among each other a share in the profits made by the mill to which, by their concerted effort, the particular sale was directed. In Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608, was involved an express agreement between manufacturers of tiles and dealers within a given territory by which the plaintiffs were unable, not being members of the combination, to procure titles without paying a great advance over those who were members of the combination. In the case of Swift & Company v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, the agreement involved a combination between packers and dealers in fresh meat throughout the United States for the express purpose of regulating prices, freights, and shipments and sales of live stock. Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488, involved a widespread combination among the union labor organizations to prevent the sale of hats anywhere within the United States made by a hat maker at Derby, Conn., until he should unionize his [**27] shops. In Chesapeake & Ohio Fuel Co. v. United States, 115 Fed. 610, 53 C.C.A. 256, there was an express agreement among 14 coal-mining companies engaged in interstate commerce for the purpose of fixing prices and regulating production and shipments. The cases of Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight, 148 Fed. 939, 78 C.C.A. 567, and John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman, 153 Fed. 24, 82 C.C.A. 158, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 135, both being decided by this court, were cases which involved systems of contract between producers, wholesale and retail, carrying on business in every state of the Union, for the express purpose of maintaining prices and stifling competition, and were obviously cases which directly affected freedom of commerce among the states.

HN10[] In the absence of any such express terms of the agreement providing for acts directly affecting interstate commerce, complainants must by facts and circumstances show that the direct and necessary result of what has been done and threatened is to restrain interstate commerce. The burden of showing acts and circumstances which establish the fact that an unlawful result is contemplated and will ensue, unless checked, is upon those asserting the [[**28]] illegality of the contract assailed.

[*732] In Cincinnati, P.B.S. & P. Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179, 184, 26 Sup. Ct. 208, 209, 50 L. Ed. 428, it is cogently said, in respect to the question as to whether a particular combination or agreement will operate to produce an unlawful result under the antitrust law, that HN11[] "a contract is not to be assumed to contemplate unlawful results unless a fair construction requires it upon the established facts."

No unlawful object has been shown, and no such facts established, as to convince us that the necessary consequence of the combination complained of will result in any direct, immediate, or necessary restraint of interstate commerce.

Finally, the facts of the case do not bring the conduct of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company under the condemnation of the Michigan statute against monopolies. The purchase of shares and the acquirement of the additional 50,000 acres of copper-producing lands has the sanction of the express law of Michigan, and, while the power to acquire shares or additional lands may be subject to the condition that such acquisition shall not result in monopoly or the unlawful suppression of competition, there are [[**29]] no such results to be feared from the acts and conduct attributable to the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company as to bring it within the Michigan act.

The decree dismissing the bill and discharging the injunction must be affirmed.

Concur by: COCHRAN

Concur

---

COCHRAN, District Judge. I concur with Judge LURTON'S statement of fact and in the conclusion he has reached, but think best to state the particular ground upon which I have come to that conclusion. The principal ground upon which it is claimed that the decrees of the lower court should be reversed is that the transaction complained of was in violation of the national anti-trust act. It is urged also that it is in violation of the Michigan anti-trust act. The stress of the argument is upon the application of the national act, and I will proceed at once to address myself to the question as to whether it affects the legality of the transaction complained of.

Here, we must first inquire whether this question is an open one. Is or not a consideration thereof foreclosed by any decision of the Supreme Court? I think that it is, and that by the first decision made by that court under that act. I refer to the case of United States v. E.C. [[**30]] Knight Company, 156 U.S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325. It is practically conceded that this is so, if the authority of that case has not been overthrown or weakened by subsequent decisions. It is earnestly contended that it has been substantially overruled by later decisions of the Supreme Court. The decisions relied on are those in the cases of Addystone Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136; Northern Securities Company v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488. It is claimed that the decision in the Addystone Pipe & Steel Company Case left not much, if any, force in it, and that in the Swift Case left nothing of it. But the decision [*733] in the Northern Securities Company Case is claimed to be more in point than either of the others, as its facts fit more closely the facts of the Knight Case, and it is said that these suits were brought on the basis of the decision in that case. It is further claimed that the majority of the court in the case of *United States v. American [[**31]] Tobacco Company (C.C.)* 164 Fed. 700, took the position that the Knight Case is no longer any proper foundation for the point decided in it. In answer to the possible suggestion that in no subsequent case has the Supreme Court expressed any doubt as to the correctness of the decision in that case, and that whenever it has referred thereto it has done so with seeming approval, it is said that the Supreme Court had in mind that the facts of the case were different from what they really were, and that what it so approved was this supposititious case and not the real case. This is shown, it is claimed, by the consideration that the points actually decided in these later cases are in direct conflict with that really decided in the Knight Case.

I think that the majority of the court in the American Tobacco Company Case hardly went as far as claimed, but at least two of the three judges constituting that majority did question the correctness of the decision in that case, and did intimate that it was overthrown by the later decisions. Judge Lacombe said that it seemed to him that subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court had modified the opinion in that case, and Judge Coxe that it was [**32] interesting to note that the Chief Justice, who wrote the opinion of the court therein, also wrote the unanimous opinion in Loewe v. Lawlor, that an examination of numerous decisions since that case leads to the conclusion that there has been constantly a tendency towards a broader and more liberal construction of the statute or wider scope therefor, and that the only distinction between that case and the Loewe-Lawlor Case is that in one the acts complained of related to the manufacture and sale of sugar and in the other to the manufacture and sale of hats. Both these judges seem to indicate a preference for the view taken by Justice Harlan in his dissenting opinion. I do not find that Judge Noyes, the other judge of the majority, questioned the authority of that decision to any extent. Judge Ward, who dissented, took the position that that decision had not been affected by any subsequent one and is still in full force. Counsel for appellant attacked that case in the lower court, the same as here, and possibly with some measure of success, as it seems to have been somewhat shy of basing the conclusion reached on the authority thereof.

The vital relation of the Knight Case to [**33] this case, and the attack made upon it in the American Tobacco Company Case and here, calls for a somewhat extended consideration thereof. The propriety of so doing is helped out by the fact that this seems to be the first case that has arisen since then involving the exact question involved therein. I do not understand that the American Tobacco Company Case hinges upon that case, as this one does. Besides, a true conception of what was decided therein and the reasoning upon which it was based is essential to a correct determination of the effect thereon of the later cases which are claimed to have overthrown it.

[*734] I may say at the outset that I think that that case not only fits this case, and has not been affected by the decision in any subsequent case, but that it was correctly decided; and, further, that it is not likely that it was incorrectly decided. The conclusion there reached represented not only the views of all the members of the Supreme Court except Justice Harlan, who dissented, and Justice Jackson, who did not sit therein because of illness, but of the Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, where the case originated, and of the Circuit [**34] Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, where it was first carried on appeal. And though Mr. Justice Jackson did not sit in the case, the conclusion reached accorded with his views as expressed in the case of In re Greene (C.C.) 52 Fed. 104, a case of like character, and those courts, in deciding as they did, simply followed in the path which he had theretofore clearly marked out.

In considering this case, I would direct the attention singly to three separate and distinct matters. They are, first, the condition of things before the doing of the thing complained of therein; second, the thing done that was complained of; and, third, the thing sought to have done. The condition of things referred to was this: The American Sugar Refining Company, a New Jersey corporation, in New York, New Jersey, and several other places, was engaged in the business of refining sugar thereat and selling the sugar so refined. The business which it so did was 65 per cent. of the business of that kind done in the United States. The E.C. Knight Company, the Franklin Sugar Company, the Spreckels Sugar Refining Company, and the Delaware Sugar House, each of which was a Pennsylvania corporation and had [**35] no connection with the others, owned like plants located at Philadelphia, and were engaged in the business of refining sugar at their respective refineries and selling the sugar so refined. The business done by all four was 33 per cent. of the whole. The business done by the five, therefore, constituted 98 per cent. thereof. The other 2 per cent. was done by a Massachusetts corporation, the Revere, whose plant was located at Boston. Each one of the five corporations was engaged in external commerce. They sold sugar for delivery in other states than where made and sold, and no doubt a great, if not the principal, part of the business done by them was so sold. The facts of the case will not allow this feature thereof to be minimized; and, as I view it, there is no occasion to minimize it.

Then, what was the thing done that was complained of? The American Company purchased the entire capital stock of the other four companies, and gave in exchange therefor shares of its own stock. It thus acquired control of 98 per cent. of the business of making and selling refined sugar in the United States. This control as to 65 per cent. was by virtue of its ownership of its own plant, and [**36] as to 33 per cent. by virtue of its ownership of the entire capital stock of the other four companies, enabling it to choose the boards of directors thereof, who would have control of the operation of their plants respectively. And the acquisition of such stock was for the purpose of obtaining such control. This feature of the case, also, is not to be blinked.

[*735] And finally, as to the thing sought to have done. It was simply an undoing of what had been done, and an injunction against attempting to do it again. It was held that the nation was not entitled to have this thing done. We are thus brought face to face with the reasoning upon which this conclusion was based. It was not that what had been done was not within the national act. The court went deeper than this. It was that the nation, through Congress, by the national act, had no right to attempt to prevent what had been done from being done, and hence had no right to complain of its being done. Of course, this being so, the presumption was that the nation, through Congress, had not by the national act attempted to prevent what had been done from being done, and hence that it was not within the act. But the [**37] court concerned itself with the deeper question -- with what was fundamental, and not with what was accidental. And, if I may be permitted to suggest it, I think that the confusion that has arisen as to the correctness and effect of the decision in the Knight Case and the effect thereon of the later decisions is due to the fact that it has been overlooked that concern was there had, not with what the act meant, but with what the nation, through Congress, had power to enact.

How, then, was it made out that the nation had no right, through Congress, by that act, to prevent what had been done from being done, and hence had no right to complain of its being done. It was in this way. What had been done was not external commerce, nor did it relate to or affect directly such commerce, and hence did not come within the commercial provision of the national Constitution, which was the only provision thereof that could be claimed to authorize the nation, through Congress, to prevent what had been done from being done. So far as it was commerce at all or was related to or directly affected commerce, it was internal commerce, and the doing of it was solely within the state's jurisdiction. [**38] Mr. Chief Justice Fuller emphasized the importance of respecting the boundary of each government's jurisdiction. It was "vital," he said, that "the delimitation between the two, however sometimes perplexing, should always be recognized and observed." And, further, he said that "acknowledged evils, however grave and urgent they may appear to be, had better be borne than the risk be run in the effort to suppress them of more serious consequences by resort to expedients of even doubtful constitutionality."

To complete the line of reasoning upon which the conclusion reached is based, it remains to indicate wherein what had been done was held not to be external commerce and not to relate thereto or affect it directly. It was essential both that it was not such commerce, and that it did not relate thereto or so affect it, in order that what had been done should have been beyond the national jurisdiction. The nation has jurisdiction of what relates to or affects directly external commerce as well as external commerce itself under the commercial provision. It is necessary to complete jurisdiction of such commerce. Jurisdiction of the thing itself would be of but little consequence [**39] if jurisdiction did not also cover that which related thereto or affected [*736] it directly. It is only of what is not external commerce and affects it only indirectly that it does not have jurisdiction. There was no room to claim that what had been done was itself external commerce. What had been done was simply the purchase by the one company of the entire capital stock of the other four, and the giving in exchange therefor shares of its own capital stock. If it be a fact that a sale of such stock for delivery in another state than that where the sale was made would have been external commerce, there was no such sale made. The most that can be claimed is that what had been done related to or affected directly such commerce. Did it do so?

Each corporation was a Pennsylvania corporation. The refineries and other property owned by each was internal. The operation of the refineries and manufacture of refined sugar thereat was internal. It was only when the corporations were engaged in selling the sugar so made that things took on an external hue, and then only in case sales for delivery outside of the state were made. Commerce has been likened to a stream, and sugar [**40] produced at those refineries did not become a part of external commerce until placed in the stream of external commerce, which would be when sold for delivery on the outside. Sales for delivery within the state were purely internal. Now, the purchase of the stock had no relation to and did not affect in any way the sugar that had been put into the stream of external commerce prior thereto. That was a matter of the past. Nor did it relate to or affect directly the sugar that might be placed therein thereafter. It depended entirely on whether thereafter the refineries were operated, and, if operated, on whether, if any of the sugar thereafter refined thereat were placed in said stream, such purchase would affect it at all. The mere fact that the intent and purpose was to place such sugar therein could not make such purchase relate to or affect directly external commerce. It may be said that it affected it, but only indirectly so. If it can be said that it affected it directly, then, whenever one, under any circumstances, intends and purposes to place property owned by him in the stream of external commerce, such commerce is affected directly, and he and that property pass within [**41] the national jurisdiction. But this cannot be. As well said by Mr. Justice Lamar in the case of Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U.S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346:

"If it be held that the term (commerce) includes the regulation of all such manufactures as are intended to be the subject of commercial transactions in the future, it is impossible to deny that it would also include the productive industries that contemplate the same thing. The result would be that Congress would be invested to the exclusion of the states with the power to regulate not only manufacturers, but also agriculture, horticulture, stock raising, domestic fisheries, mining -- in short, every branch of human industry."

In the Knight Case Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said:

"Slight reflection will show that if the national power extends to all contracts and combinations in manufacture, agriculture, mining, and other productive industries, whose ultimate result may affect external commerce, comparatively little of business operations and affairs would be left for state control."

The purchase of those stocks no more related to or affected directly external commerce than if the American Company, instead of purchasing [*737] [**42]* them, had purchased from those corporations themselves their refineries and other property. Purchase of the capital stock was but an indirect way of acquiring the properties themselves. By the purchase, instead of acquiring the properties of the corporations, they acquired an interest in the corporations that owned them. If the properties of the corporations had been owned and operated, not by the corporations, but by trustees for the benefit of the stockholders, a purchase from the cestuis que trustent of their beneficial interests would have had no more relation to or affected no differently external commerce than a purchase from the trustees.

Such, then, is the line of reasoning by which the Supreme Court reached its conclusion in the Knight Case. I have put it in a different and somewhat amplified form in an effort to make it plain, but a reading of Mr. Chief Justice Fuller's opinion will show that I am justified in claiming that such is the reasoning on which that conclusion is based.

Before passing from the consideration of this case, it is to be noted that it was not involved therein whether if, after the purchase, those corporations had entered into an agreement amongst [**43] themselves concerning the external commerce to be done by them, such an agreement would have related to and affected directly such commerce and been within the national jurisdiction. What was sought to have done was not the undoing of any such agreement, but the undoing of the purchase of the stock. Nor was it involved therein whether the nation, through its jurisdiction over commerce among the states and with foreign nations, could by appropriate legislation have excluded from such commercial stream any of the sugar that had been manufactured at the refineries of any of the five corporations. These two questions are entirely distinct from that which arose and was decided in that case. That question was whether the one corporation had the right, so far as the national act was concerned, to purchase the capital stock of the other four. It was held that it did, and it seems to me that there is no escape from that conclusion and the reasoning on which it is based.

We come, then, to the question whether this decision has been affected to any extent by the subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court. As heretofore stated, I do not think that it has; and I will now attempt to make [**44] this position good. The extended consideration of the Knight Case renders unnecessary any like consideration of the cases, the decisions in which are claimed to have affected that in that case. A very general reference thereto will be sufficient to show that they have in no wise affected it. Take, for instance, the Addystone Pipe & Steel Company and Swift Cases, which are somewhat alike in their essential characteristics. Each of these cases involved an agreement between several independent manufacturers or producers, the one of iron pipe and the other of meat, each of whom was engaged in interstate commerce, which agreement related to and directly affected that commerce so far as they were engaged in it in the way of restraining it, their independency being preserved except so far as affected by that agreement. It was held that the agreement [*738] in each case was a combination within the national act, and its further execution was enjoined. In the Swift Case the agreement related to and affected some matters that may be said to have been purely internal as well as to the external commerce of the parties thereto, and the execution of the agreement in those particulars [**45] was enjoined as well as in so far as it affected such commerce. The necessities of this case do not require a presentation of the line of reasoning by which Mr. Justice Holmes justifies this part of the decision. That portion thereof in no way concerns the Knight Case.

Then as to the case of Loewe v. Lawlor, sometimes referred to as the "Danbury Hat Case." That case involved the question whether a boycott on the part of the United Hatters and affiliated organizations of laborers against the external commerce of the manufacturers of those hats was a combination within the national act. It was held that it was and its continuation was enjoined.

Now, I fail to see how these three cases have any bearing whatever on the Knight Case. A decision that a combination that relates to and affects directly external commerce within the national act is certainly not antagonistic to one that decides that a transaction which does not relate thereto and affects it indirectly only is not within that act. Nor is a decision that an agreement between two or more corporations with reference to the external commerce done by them relates thereto and affects it directly antagonistic to one that decides [**46] that a purchase by one competitor of the property by which he carries on such business does not relate to external commerce and affects it indirectly only. Of similar character to these three cases is that of Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608.

Finally, how is it as to the Northern Securities Company Case? It must be conceded that this case is more like the Knight Case than either of the others. The minority judges in that case, as represented by the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice White, regarded that the Knight Case required a decision that the transaction there involved was not within the national act. Of course, if this position was correct, then the decision in that case does conflict with that in the Knight Case, and the latter case must be considered to have been overthrown by the former. The likeness between the two cases consists in the fact that in the later case, as in the earlier one, the validity of the purchase of the stock in a corporation was involved. But even here there was a difference. In the earlier case the purchasing corporation was engaged in the same business as that of the corporations whose stock it purchased, and those [**47] corporations were competitors of it, whereas in the later case the purchasing corporation was not engaged in the same business as that of the competing corporations whose stock it purchased. It was engaged in no business except that of purchasing and holding that stock. But in this case, as in that, the effect of the purchase was to put the control of the competing corporations in one and the same hand. There was, therefore, nothing in this difference to cause a difference of decision. If one of the competing corporations in the Northern Securities Company Case had purchased the capital stock of the other, we would have thus far [*739] exactly the same case as the Knight Case. And the purchase by the outside corporation of the capital stock of the two competing corporations was, in its legal significance, nowise different from a purchase by one of the two of the capital stock of the other.

But here the likeness between the two cases stops. In a striking particular they are different -- so different in this particular as to necessitate, in my judgment, a difference of decision. That particular was this: The property of each of the two competing corporations, to wit, the [**48] Great Northern Railway Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company, was interstate in its character, and the operation thereof was interstate. It follows that the purchase of the stock of the two corporations and combining them in one corporation was an interstate transaction. That transaction related to and affected directly interstate commerce. It did so as much as if the one corporation had purchased the property of the other. If that had been the nature of the transaction, it could not have been contended that it was not interstate in its character. How different this from what we have found to have been the case in the Knight Case. The properties of the four Pennsylvania corporations and their operation were not interstate in their character. They were purely internal to the state of Pennsylvania, and likewise would have been their purchase by the New Jersey corporation. Nowise different was the purchase by it of the capital stock of these corporations. It follows that there was no room to claim in the Northern Securities Company Case that the transaction there involved was not within the national jurisdiction. The question raised was solely as to whether that transaction [**49] was within the meaning of the national act. It is true that Mr. Justice White argued strenuously that it was not within that jurisdiction, but, with all due respect, I submit that he was in error here. The basis of his argument that the transaction attacked was not within the national jurisdiction was that the purchase by the Northern Securities Company of the capital stock of the two railway companies was not interstate commerce. That is undoubtedly true. But that circumstance was not sufficient to take the transaction out of such jurisdiction. If, though not itself interstate commerce, it related to and affected directly interstate commerce, then it was within that jurisdiction. That it did so is evident from the fact that it was a purchase of the stock of corporations whose property and the operation thereof was interstate. It was as much interstate as if one of the two competing corporations had purchased the capital stock or the property of the other.

I, therefore, conclude that, to no extent whatever, has the authority of the Knight Case been affected by any of the later decisions of the Supreme Court.

Before quitting this branch of the case, it may be proper to show [**50] that the Knight Case fits this case, though, as heretofore stated, it is practically conceded that it does. The Calumet & Hecla Company has not acquired the entire capital stock of the Osceola Company. It has not acquired the ownership of a majority of that stock. It has acquired the ownership of a portion, and the right to vote another [*740] portion, the two together being a majority thereof. The business here involved is that of mining instead of refining sugar. Otherwise there is no difference between that case and this. The property of the Osceola Company and its operation is internal to the state of Michigan, as that of the Pennsylvania corporations was to that state. The differences in detail referred to do not call for a difference of decision. The conclusion must be reached, then, that the transaction complained of herein is not within the national act. If the Calumet & Hecla Company had purchased the property of the Osceola, or if that property had been held by a trustee for the benefit of its stockholders and the Calumet & Hecla Company had purchased the beneficial interests of the cestuis que trustent, certainly the transaction would not in either case have [**51] been within that act. No more can it be said that a purchase by it of the capital stock, or a majority thereof, or of a portion thereof and the right to vote another portion, the two together constituting a majority, is within it.

It seems to me that the existence of any difficulty in determining how this case ought to be decided, so far as this question is concerned, is due to the manner in which it is approached. If it is approached in an effort to reach a conclusion as to whether the transaction involved is within the meaning of the national act, it may be hard to dispose of it correctly. But if it is approached as the Knight Case was approached by the judges of the different courts who rendered opinions, holding that the transaction attacked therein was not within that act, which was in an effort to reach a conclusion as to whether it was within the national jurisdiction, and consequently whether it could properly have been put within that act, no room for doubt as to how it ought to be decided will be left.

As indicated at the start, it is also claimed that the transaction involved here is within the state act. The claim that it is so is based largely, if not altogether, [**52] on the same line of reasoning upon which it is claimed to be within the national act. Indeed, on the one side, it seems to be claimed to be within the state act because it is within the national act, and, on the other hand, that is not within the state act because it is not within the national act. This, no doubt, is due to the fact that both sides of this case have approached it from the standpoint as to what is the true meaning of both acts, and not from the standpoint as to which jurisdiction -- national or state -- the transaction complained of is within. So approaching it, it was but natural to feel that the question whether that transaction was within the state act depended on whether it was within the national act. For the language of both acts is substantially similar, though that of the state act is somewhat more verbose. But approaching it from the proper standpoint, as I have claimed it to be, as soon as it is determined that the transaction in question is not within the national act, it is at once realized that it does not necessarily follow that because it is not within the one act it is not within the other. The transaction being within the state jurisdiction, and [**53] not within the national, it may well be within the state act, though not within the national. The question, then, as to whether it is within the state act hangs on whether [*741] it is within the words thereof, construed in the light of the circumstance that the state had power to put it there.

So construing these words, how does the matter stand? The Calumet & Hecla Company and the Osceola Company were created and organized, and have ever since continued, to transact business under a general act of the state of Michigan providing for the incorporation of companies for mining, smelting, and manufacturing copper and other metals. By that act, any two or more corporations existing thereunder may consolidate. This court in the case of Marbury v. Kentucky Union Land Co., 62 Fed. 335, 10 C.C.A. 393, held that an act authorizing two corporations to consolidate, also authorizes one to purchase the capital stock of the other, on the principle that the greater includes the less. But this was not the only authority that the Calumet & Hecla Company had to purchase the stock of the Osceola. By an amendment to that general act, approved May 10, 1905 (Pub. Acts 1905, p. 153, No. 105), [**54] a company organized thereunder was expressly authorized "to subscribe to, purchase, acquire and own" stock in any company organized thereunder. Neither the provision authorizing a consolidation or purchase of stock has ever been repealed or modified to any extent, unless it has been done by the anti-trust legislation. There are two anti-trust acts in Michigan, one approved June 23, 1899 (Pub. Acts 1899, p. 409, No. 255), and another, declared to be "supplementary to and declaratory of and in addition to" the earlier act, approved June 20, 1905 (Pub. Acts 1905, p. 507, No. 329). The original act was in existence at the time of the approval of said amendment of May 10, 1905, and the supplementary one was approved subsequent to its approval. The one is entitled "An act to prevent trusts, monopolies and combinations," etc., and the other "An act relative to agreements, contracts and combinations in restraint of trade or commerce." It is not necessary to quote from the body of either act. Each contains general language in the line of its title. There is no express reference to the legislation referred to as contained in said general act and the amendment thereto. It is not to be taken [**55] that it impliedly has reference thereto. That legislation and those acts can be construed together, and I think that within well-recognized principles they ought to be so construed. So construing them, it is not to be held that what the one expressly authorizes is denied by the other.

---

End of Document

State ex rel. Hadley v. Std. Oil Co.

Supreme Court of Missouri

March 9, 1909, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

218 Mo. 1 *; 116 S.W. 902 **; 1909 Mo. LEXIS 316 ***

THE STATE ex inf. HADLEY, Attorney-General, v. STANDARD OIL COMPANY, of Indiana, WATERS-PIERCE OIL COMPANY and REPUBLIC OIL COMPANY, Corporations.

Notice: [EDITOR'S NOTE: PART 3 OF 4. THIS DOCUMENT HAS BEEN SPLIT INTO MULTIPLE PARTS ON LEXIS TO ACCOMMODATE ITS LARGE SIZE. EACH PART CONTAINS THE SAME LEXIS CITE.]

Disposition: [***1] Writ of ouster awarded.

Core Terms

---

oil company, oils, prices, manufacturer, products, restraint of trade, territory, combinations, petroleum, pool, stock, commodities, cases, competitors, charter, rebates, rights, independent company, refined, sales, conspiracy, customers, sections, franchises, confederation, dealer, common law, contracts, selling, quo warranto

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Constitutional Sources

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

HN1[] Jurisdictional Sources, Constitutional Sources

The Constitution of Missouri, art. 6, § 3, gives the Supreme Court of Missouri power to issue the writ of quo warranto. It will issue against a corporation for the non-use or misuse of its corporate franchise, or for an infraction of its contract with the state by a violation of the anti-trust laws. And the jurisdiction of the court being conferred by the constitution, it is beyond the power of the legislature to take it away, and it will not be intended that a legislative enactment is designed to take such jurisdiction away, although such enactment should confer another and distinct remedy upon some inferior court or board.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > General Overview

HN2 Corporations, Dissolution & Receivership

The charter of a private corporation will be forfeited, in proper proceedings by the state, for any willful or fraudulent misuse or abuse of its franchises which injures or menaces the interests or welfare of the state or the community in which it transacts business, whether the misuse or abuse consists in the exercise of a franchise or power not conferred upon the corporation by its charter, or in the violation of prohibitions in its charter, or in the violations of prohibitions in general laws to which it is subject, or in the violation of established principles based upon the ground of public policy.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

HN3 Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

Both articles 1 and 2 of Mo. Rev. Stat. Ch. 143 declare pools, trusts, agreements, combinations, confederations and conspiracies, formed and entered into by corporations for the accomplishment of the purposes therein specified, to be illegal. These statutes are a declaration of the policy of Missouri, the violation of which by a corporation is a violation of its pact, entered into with the state when it was chartered as a domestic company, or licensed to do business as a foreign company, which violations give the state the right to withdraw such charter rights or cancel such license privileges.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Inchoate Crimes > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4 Conspiracy, Elements

Conspiracies may be formed to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. The rule of pleading in such cases, even in criminal proceedings, is that: If the act which the conspirators combine to perform is unlawful, it is unnecessary to set out in the indictment the means to be employed in accomplishing it. But if the end in view is lawful or indifferent, and the conspiracy only becomes criminal by reason of the unlawful means whereby it is to be accomplished, it becomes necessary to show the criminality by setting out such unlawful means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

The anti-trust laws of Missouri are penal in their nature and should be strictly construed. When a proceeding partakes of the nature of a criminal prosecution and severe penalties are imposed, it is not sufficient to warrant a finding adverse to respondent oil companies that the court may entertain strong suspicions, or even strong probabilities, of their guilt. Yet, both the information and the facts should be given a reasonable and sensible construction, one which, on the one hand, will give effect to the material and well-stated charges in the information, and on the other such a construction and application of the facts as will elicit the truth and not mere suspicions and probabilities.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

All laws should receive a reasonable construction, and general terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression or absurd consequence. It will, therefore, be presumed that the legislature intends exceptions to its language which would avoid results of that character. The reason of the law in such cases should prevail over its letter.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

HN7 Corporations, Dissolution & Receivership

Where the State charges an abuse or a misuse of the corporate franchise, or acts of corporations contrary to the constitution and laws of Missouri, relator attorney general must prove the charges as laid in the information or enough of them to warrant the finding that the respondent oil companies are guilty. If the state has failed to do this, then nothing remains but to so pronounce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN8 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Stockholdings showing a community of interest, while in some cases innocuous, might in given cases be the very root from which the trust agreement grows.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Finance > General Overview

HN9 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A corporation which owns a majority of the shares of the capital stock of another corporation controls it. The ownership of the stock of a corporation carries with it the control of the corporation. It is very true that the ownership of the stock does not carry with it the ownership by the stockholders of the property of the corporation. The property belongs to the corporation and is managed by the proper agents selected for that purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Existence > Distinct & Separate Legal Entity

HN10 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Every corporation is a person, artificial, it is true, but nevertheless a distinct legal entity. Neither a portion nor all of the natural persons who compose a corporation, or who own its stock and control its affairs, are the corporation itself; and when a single individual composes a corporation, he is not himself the corporation. In such case, the man is one person, created by the Almighty, and the corporation is another person, created by the law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN11 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The gravamen of the offense of conspiracy is the combination. Agreements to prevent competition in trade are, in contemplation of law, injurious to trade, because they are liable to be injuriously used. If the validity of such an agreement were made to depend upon actual proof of public prejudice or injury, it would be very difficult in any case to establish the invalidity. It is not essential that its results should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Rights of Partners > General Overview

HN12 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The statute contemplates the existence of at least two or more corporations, individuals or partnerships, so as to agree or combine with each other to do the prohibited acts mentioned in the statute. In other words, it is intended to operate upon two or more corporations or individuals, who, so far as the public are concerned, indicate that they are pursuing an independent business, legitimate competitors, when, in fact, there is a secret agreement by which the very things condemned by the statute are accomplished. The public has rights which the law contemplates shall be respected. Neither corporations, individuals, nor partnerships are permitted to deceive or mislead the public by an apparent competition, when in fact none exists.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN13 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In order to constitute a trust, there must be a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more. Combination means union or association. If there be no union or association by two or more of their capital, skill, or acts, there can be no combination and hence no trust.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN14 [blue document icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

If the act complained of, by its results, will restrict or stifle competition, the law will regard such act as incompatible with public policy, without any proof of evil intent on the part of the actor or actual injury to the public. The inquiry is not as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public; it is sufficient to know that the inevitable tendency of the act is injurious to the public.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN15 [blue document icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any person or persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, merchandise, commodity, etc., or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, contract, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, merchandise, commodity, etc., shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to penalties as provided in this article. Mo. Rev. Stat. Ch. 143, art. 1 and 2, § 8965.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

International Trade Law > Forfeitures & Penalties > General Overview

HN16 [blue document icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

All arrangements, contracts, agreements or combinations between two or more persons designated or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen full and free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article, product or commodity in Missouri, and all arrangements, combinations, contracts or agreements, whereby, or under the terms of which, it is proposed, stipulated, provided, agreed or understood that any person or persons doing business in this state, shall deal in, sell or offer for sale in this state any particular or specified article, product or commodity, and shall not during the continuance or existence of any such arrangement, combination, contract or agreement, deal in, sell or offer for sale any competing article, product or commodity, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void; and any person or persons becoming a party to any such arrangement, contract, agreement or combination, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to the penalties provided for in this article. Mo. Rev. Stat. Ch. 143, art. 1 and 2, § 8966.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

HN17 [blue document icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of Missouri, which shall violate any of the provisions of this article, shall thereby forfeit its corporate rights and franchises; and its corporate existence shall, upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this state, be by the court declared forfeited, void and of non-effect, and shall thereupon cease and determine; and any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any other state or country, which shall violate any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this article, shall thereby forfeit its right and privilege thereafter to do any business in this state. Mo. Rev. Stat. Ch. 143, art. 1 and 2, § 8971.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > Proceedings

Governments > Courts > Clerks of Court

Insurance Law > ... > Company Representatives > Agents > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Insurance Law > ... > Insurance Company Operations > Company Representatives > General Overview

HN18 [ ] Forfeitures, Proceedings

Upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this state, its right and privilege to do business in this state shall be declared forfeited; and in all proceedings to have such forfeiture declared, proof that any person who has been acting as agent of such foreign corporation in transacting its business in this state has been, while acting as such agent, in the name, behalf or interest of such foreign corporation, violating any provision of the preceding sections of this article, shall be received as prima-facie proof of the act of the corporation itself; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court to certify the decree thereof to the Secretary of State, and if it be an insurance company, also to the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, who shall take notice and be governed thereby as to the corporate powers and rights of said corporation. Mo. Rev. Stat. Ch. 143, art. 1 and 2, § 8971.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Readjustments > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Readjustments > Formation > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN19 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Every pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, understanding, or conspiracy entered into, or created, or organized by any person or persons, to regulate, control or fix the price of any article or articles of manufacture, merchandise, commodity, etc., or to maintain said price or prices when so regulated, determined or fixed, and all agreements, combinations, confederations, conspiracies or pools made, created, entered into or organized by any persons to fix the amount or limit the quantity of any article of manufacture, commodity, etc., are hereby declared illegal. If any two or more persons who are engaged in buying or selling any articles of commerce, merchandise, commodity, etc., shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing; or to limit competition in such trade, by refusing to buy from or sell to any other person or persons any such article or thing aforesaid, for the reason that such person is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, combination, confederation, association or understanding, shall be guilty of a violation of this article. Mo. Rev. Stat. Ch. 143, art. 1 and 2, § 8978.

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN20 [ ] Common Law Writs, Quo Warranto

The Mo. Const. art. 6, § 3, in express terms, confers power upon the Supreme Court of Missouri to issue, hear, and determine writs of quo warranto.

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Extraordinary Writs

HN21 [ ] Common Law Writs, Quo Warranto

Whatever the origin of the writ of quo warranto, whether civil or criminal, it is certain now at the present time and for a long period anterior to this, it has been and is but a civil suit.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Extraordinary Writs

HN22 [ ] Appellate Jurisdiction, State Court Review

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Missouri in this regard being conferred by the constitution, it is beyond the power of the legislature to take it away, and it will not be intended that a legislative enactment was designed to take such jurisdiction away, although such enactment should confer another and distinct remedy upon some inferior court or board.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > General Overview

HN23 [ ] Corporations, Dissolution & Receivership

The charter of a private corporation will be forfeited, in proper proceedings by the state, for any wilful or fraudulent misuse or abuse of its franchise which injures or menaces the interests or welfare of the state or of the community in which it transacts business, whether the misuse or abuse consists in the exercise of a franchise or power not conferred upon the corporation by its charter, or in the violations of prohibitions in its charter, or in violations of prohibitions in general laws to which it is subject, or in the violation of established principles based upon the ground of public policy. Where the facts disclose that a corporation has failed in the discharge of its corporate duties by uniting with others in carrying out an agreement, the performance of which is detrimental or injurious to the public, it thereby may be said to offend against the law of its creation, and consequently forfeits its right longer to exercise its franchises, and is subject to a judgment of ouster.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

HN24 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Corporations are recognized as creatures of the law and they certainly owe obedience thereto, and when they fail to perform duties which they were created to discharge, and in which the public have an interest, or where they do unauthorized or forbidden acts, the state unquestionably has the right, and it is its duty, to object, and it may interpose by information, and wrest from the offending corporations its franchises. If the act complained of, by its results, will restrict or stifle competition, the law will regard such act as incompatible with public policy, without any proof of evil intent on the part of the actor or actual injury to the public. The inquiry is not as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public; it is sufficient to know that the inevitable tendency of the act is injurious to the public.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN25 [ ] Corporations, Dissolution & Receivership

A corporation may be proceeded against by quo warranto for a misuse or perversion of the franchises conferred upon it by the state, notwithstanding its officers and agents may at the same time be amenable to the criminal law for offense committed by them in the perversion of such franchises. If a corporation, through its servants and agents, may be guilty of such abuses of its franchises as will subject it to ouster by quo warranto, a court can conceive of no reason why such servants and agents, if the acts and abuses committed by them be in violation of the criminal statutes, may not at the same time be prosecuted by indictment or information. The one is not a bar to the other proceeding.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN26 [ ] Corporations, Dissolution & Receivership

A private corporation created by the legislature may lose its franchises by a misuse or nonuse of them; and they may be resumed by the government under a judicial judgment upon quo warranto to ascertain and enforce the forfeiture. This is the common law of the land, and is a tacit condition annexed to the creation of every such corporation.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Breach of Contract

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > Involuntary Dissolution

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN27 [ ] Causes of Action & Remedies, Breach of Contract

The laws of the state authorize and direct the attorney-general to institute civil proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto against any corporation to annul its charter and forfeit its franchises whenever it has by misuse, nonuse, or usurpation of power so conducts itself as to violate the laws of its being or the criminal laws of the state. If, upon trial, the corporation is found guilty, a decree of forfeiture must go, and the court has the power, in addition, to impose penalties for such violations of the laws as it may deem proper. This, however, does not proceed upon the theory that the corporation has been guilty of a crime and that it is being punished therefor; but upon the idea that there is an implied or tacit agreement on the part of every corporation, by accepting its charter and corporate franchises, that it will perform its obligations and discharge all its duties to the public, and that by failing to do so it commits an act of forfeiture which may be enforced by the state in the manner before suggested. In addition thereto the legislature has the unquestionable power and authority to declare the acts which will work a forfeiture of the charter shall also constitute a crime, and subject the corporation and its agents and servants to punishment under the criminal laws of the state.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

HN28 [ ] Legislation, Interpretation

All consistent statutes relating to the same subject, and hence briefly called statutes in pari materia, are treated prospectively and construed together as though they constituted one act. This is true whether the acts relating to the same subject were passed at different dates, separated by long or short intervals, at the same session or on the same day. And, a statute must be construed with reference to the system of which it forms a part. And, statutes on cognate subjects may be referred to though not strictly in pari materia.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN29 [ ] Legislation, Interpretation

Where enactments separately made are read in pari materia, they are treated as having formed, in the minds of the enacting body, parts of a connected whole, though considered by such a body at different dates, and under distinct and varied aspects of the common subject. Such a principle is in harmony with the actual practice of legislative bodies, and is essential to give unity to the laws, and connect them in a symmetrical system. Such statutes are taken together and construed as one system, and the object is to carry into effect the intention. It is to be inferred that a code of statutes relating to one subject is governed by one spirit and policy, and is intended to be consistent and harmonious in its several parts and provisions. For the purpose of learning the intention, all statutes relating to the same subject are to be compared, and so far as still in force brought into harmony, if possible, by interpretation, though they may not refer to each other even after some of them have expired or been repealed.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN30 [blue] Legislation, Interpretation

There are few guides to construction more useful than that which directs attention to the prior condition of the law to aid in determining the full legislative meaning of any statutory change thereof. In construing any statute it is proper and often useful to consider the state of the law existing at its enactment as casting light on the intended scope of the change made by it.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN31 [blue] Legislation, Interpretation

A statute is not to be construed as if it stood solitary and alone, complete and perfect in itself, and isolated from all other laws. It is not to be expected that a statute which takes its place in a general system of jurisprudence shall be so perfect as to require no support from the rules and statutes of the system of which it becomes a part, or so clear in all its terms as to furnish in itself all the light needed for its construction. It is proper to look at other statutes, to the rules of the common law, to the source from which the statute was derived, to the general principles of equity, to the object of the statute, and to the condition of affairs existing when the statute is adopted. Construction has ever been a potent agency in harmonizing the operation of statutes, with equity and justice.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN32 [blue] Legislation, Interpretation

Statutes are to be so construed as to make the law an uniform system, not a collection of divers and disjointed fragments. A statute must be construed equally by itself and by the rest of the law. The mind of the interpreter, if narrow, will stumble. The complete doctrine, resulting from a bringing together of its parts, is, that all laws, written and unwritten, of whatever sorts and at whatever different dates established, are to be construed together, contracting, expanding, limiting, and extending one another into one system of jurisprudence, as nearly harmonious and rounded as it can be made without violating unyielding written or unwritten terms.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN33 [blue] Corporations, Dissolution & Receivership

The mere fact that heavy losses may be sustained by respondent oil companies in consequence of an adjudication of ouster should not influence or deter the court from declaring the intention of the legislature as contained in Mo. Rev. Stat. Ch. 143, art. 1 and 2.

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

**HN34** [blue] Courts, Common Law

Remedial and salutary statutes, though in derogation of the common law, should be construed and enforced according to the plain intention of the legislature, although heavy damages were prescribed and penalties imposed for their violation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice > Jurisdiction > Assimilation

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Fiduciary Duties > Duty of Loyalty

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Contracts for Service

**HN35** [blue] Common Law Writs, Quo Warranto

An information in the nature of quo warranto filed by relator attorney general is not of the character of a petition in an ordinary case either in law or equity; it is the official call of the law officer of the state on the corporation or individual to show by what authority it or he is assuming to exercise a particular franchise. The rules of pleading in such case are stated as follows: The office of an information in the nature of a quo warranto is not to tender an issue of fact, but simply to call upon respondent oil companies in general terms to show by what warrant or charter the privilege, franchise, or office is held or exercised. Where the state calls upon one to show cause by what authority he exercises a corporate franchise or public office, the allegation by the attorney general of intrusion or usurpation may be of the most general character, while the oil companies required to set forth particularly the grounds of his claim and the continued exercise of his right, except where by statute the pleadings are more nearly assimilated to those in other civil actions.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Answers

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

**HN36** [blue] Pleadings, Answers

When one is called upon by the state to show warrant or authority for the exercise of a franchise or office pertaining to the state, respondent oil companies must, by his plea, answer or return, disclaim all right to the franchise and deny its usurpation, or allege facts which, if true, will invest him with the legal title of pleading the charter or legislative grant of the franchise sought to be forfeited or seized, or by pleading directly and positively all the facts necessary to establish the title to the office which the oil companies called upon to justify; and in the absence of such an answer the state will be entitled to a judgment of ouster. There is no such plea as a general denial in a case of this kind.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

218 Mo. 1, *16 S.W. 902, **902 Mo. LEXIS 316, ***1

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN37 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

If the act with which the conspirators combine to perform is unlawful, it is unnecessary to set out in the indictment the means employed in accomplishing it. But if the end in view is lawful or indifferent, and the conspiracy only becomes criminal by reason of the unlawful means whereby it is to be accomplished, it becomes necessary to show the criminality by setting out such unlawful means.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Franchise Agreements

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Powers > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Articles of Incorporation & Bylaws > General Overview

HN38 Franchise Relationships, Franchise Agreements

A corporation is a legal fiction -- a creature of the law. It accepts its charter and corporate franchises with a tacit agreement or understanding that it will exercise the powers granted to it by the state, and none other; and that if it misuses those powers, or usurps powers not so granted, it will surrender or forfeit its charter, with all corporate franchises. An individual is a natural person, created by his Maker, and not by law, and, therefore, has no franchises to exercise or to forfeit, consequently the same punishment, if one so terms it, could not, in the very nature of things, be measured out to the individual which should be measured unto a corporation.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

HN39 Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

It is not the object or purpose of that the equal protection provision of the constitution to prevent legislation which embraces within its provisions all persons or things which naturally and reasonably belong to the same class and similarly situated and where the statute must operate equally and uniformly upon all such persons or things of that class. The purpose of that provision is to prevent legislation which embraces within its provisions persons or things which affect only a portion of the persons or things which rationally belong to the same class and who are similarly situated.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

HN40 Methods of Discovery, Inspection & Production Requests

A corporation, being a creature of the state, has no constitutional right to refuse to produce its books and papers in court for examination in the trial of a proceeding by the state against it; nor can the officer in charge of the corporation charged with a violation of the statutes plead the criminality of the corporation as a refusal to produce the books.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Formation > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > Involuntary Dissolution

HN41 [+] Corporations, Corporate Formation

The legislature has no power or authority to prevent respondent oil companies from carrying on interstate trade, for the reason that power is vested in and rests with Congress; but it does possess the power to authorize the courts to forfeit the charters of all corporations organized and existing under the laws of Missouri for the usurpation of powers not granted to them, or for misuse or nonuse of those granted; and it is wholly immaterial whether those corporations are engaged in interstate commerce or not.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > Qualifications

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN42 [+] Interstate Commerce, State Powers

The legislature possesses the undoubted authority to revoke or forfeit the license issued to any foreign corporation authorizing it to do an interstate business in Missouri. The revocation of such a license in no manner interferes with interstate commerce. The authority to conduct such business is obtained under the acts of Congress and not by virtue of the laws of the state. A license from the state can neither confer nor take away the authority or right of a foreign corporation to carry on interstate commerce; and, that being true, a court is unable to see in what possible manner the forfeiture of such a license, that is, a license which only authorizes a foreign corporation to do an interstate business, can possibly offend against the U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, which only applies to interstate commerce.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Dissolution & Receivership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Articles of Incorporation & Bylaws > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Contracts Clause > General Overview

**HN43** [L] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

The U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, has no application to a license issued by the state to a foreign corporation to do business therein, for the reason that when it accepts the license, it impliedly, at least, agrees to transact such business under and in obedience to the laws of the state in the same manner as a domestic corporation should transact similar business, and that if it violates the laws of the state, then it would thereby forfeit its rights to such license, in the same manner that the domestic corporations would forfeit their charter rights by offending against the laws.

Governments > Police Powers

**HN44** [L] Governments, Police Powers

The police power of the state is an inherent power of sovereignty and cannot be contracted away.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > Privileges & Immunities

Constitutional Law > Relations Among Governments > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Relations Among Governments > Privileges & Immunities

**HN45** [L] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Two or more parties may enter into any lawful contract regarding any matter, and if that otherwise legal contract only incidentally limits trade or fixes prices, then that legal contract will not be held void on the ground that it incidentally operates in restraint of trade. But if the primary purpose of the contract is to limit and restrain trade, then the contract would be void at common law, and would not be protected by the privileges and immunities clause of the U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1, however slight that interference or restraint might be.

Constitutional Law > Privileges & Immunities

Governments > Police Powers

**HN46** [L] Constitutional Law, Privileges & Immunities

While the Fourteenth Amendment prevents illegal infringements upon the liberty of the citizen to contract, and deprive him of his property and impose restraints and burdens upon him without due process of law, yet that amendment has never been held to prevent the legislature from the exercise of the general police power of the state. This power extends to many subjects, which need not here be enumerated, which affect the general welfare and public interest within the purview of that power. In the absence of such power, the citizen would have the absolute authority to contract and the power to hold property as he might deem proper; but under that power the state may enact valid laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself and so use his property as not to unnecessarily injure others. They are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty; that is to say, the power to govern men and things. Under these powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulations become necessary for the public good. The state can now, as before, prescribe regulations for the health, good order, and safety of society, and adopt such measures as will advance its interests and prosperity.

Contracts Law > ... > Perfections & Priorities > Perfection > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Police Power

Contracts Law > ... > Secured Transactions > Perfections & Priorities > General Overview

Governments > Police Powers

HN47[] Perfections & Priorities, Perfection

All property is held subject to the power of the state to regulate or control its use, to secure the general safety and the public welfare. Every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property is held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare. By this general police power of the state, persons and property are subject to all kinds of restrictions and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state; of the perfect right of the legislature to do which, no question ever was, or upon acknowledged general principles can be, made. The police power, so called, inheres in every sovereignty and is essential to the maintenance of public order and the preservation of mutual rights from disturbing conflicts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Police Powers

HN48[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The state in the exercise of power in the selection of remedies looking to the suppression of evils harmful to its people, may apply them to the most sacred contracts and to the uses of property of every description, not in the way of an arbitrary spoliation or confiscation under a capricious exercise of the police power, but a useful regulation in the interest of the public welfare. Manufacturing or trading companies may also affect prices by joining together in forming a trust or other combination, and by making agreements in restraint of trade and commerce which, when carried out, affect the interests of the public. This is certainly a just acknowledgment of the power, for there are few acts which individuals may engage in that are more harmful in their effects upon the interests of the people generally than trusts and combinations concerning the commodities useful to mankind. The rights of the individual must yield to the public wants, and his conduct and all property held by him is subject to the control of the state, to the end that he shall so demean himself and use his property with as little hurt and injury to the public as possible. While power does not exist with the whole people to control rights that are purely and exclusively private, government may require each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN49[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Legal regulations and restraints imposed upon the use of property and the authority to contract in reference thereto do not deprive the owner of his property or contract-rights without due process of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Police Powers

HN50 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

There is no such thing in civilized society as the unrestrained power to contract. Every man surrenders some of his individual rights when he associates with or becomes a part of any society or government, and the power of the government to legislate is complete, so that, while according to every man the fullest possible liberty to do what he pleases with his own, he must not interfere with the similar rights of others. This principle underlies and runs through all governments and societies, and it is the corner stone of the police power of the state.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN51 [ ] Legislation, Interpretation

Any strained or extreme construction placed upon a statute might lead to a holding that it was unconstitutional, but no statute should receive such a construction. Extreme cases can be readily suggested, but ordinarily such cases are not safe guides in the administration of the law. All laws should receive a sensible construction, and general terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression, or absurd consequence. It will, therefore, be presumed that the legislature intends exceptions to its language which would avoid results of that character. The reason of the law in such cases should prevail over its letter.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Dissolution & Receivership > Termination & Winding Up > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Place of Incorporation > Principal Office

HN52 [ ] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1018 is as follows: The president or secretary of every domestic incorporated company in Missouri, when it shall dissolve, and the principal officer of every foreign corporation when it shall retire from business in this state, is hereby required to file with the Secretary of State an affidavit to that effect, and any failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall subject such company or the officers thereof to a penalty of from $ 50 to $ 500, to be collected as is provided for the collection of penalties and remuneration of prosecuting officers in Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1017 of this article.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN53 [ ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

It may be admitted that under some circumstances corporations with no community of interest as holders of stock in each other, or even where the stock is not in the hands of a holding company as trustee, might be guilty of a violation of the anti-trust law. It might further be admitted that a trust or combination might be proved by the overt acts of the agents of respondent oil companies sufficiently distinctive and significant and of such long continuance as would tread back and tend to establish the obnoxious pact or trust agreement. Yet, experience has shown that stock holdings showing a community of interest, while in some cases innocuous, might in given cases be the very root from which the trust agreement grows.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN54 [+] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In an investigation intended to lead up to the establishment of a fraudulent conspiracy between individuals, taking for illustration a fraudulent disposition of property, it could not be denied that kinship or close business intimacy would be relevant matter, for what it was worth, be that worth much or little, and we can perceive no good reason why this investigation may not commence at the very groundwork of these corporations, showing, if fact it be, a close relationship in stock holdings and in the personnel of officers and agents, the use of the same instrumentalities and methods, simultaneous in time and originating in the same radiating center -- a sort of prenatal, natal or else postnatal disposition to combine, as it were -- to be followed, of course, by sufficient proof indicating that the community of stock interest, if any, had been used as a foundation upon which to build the illegal structure denounced by the antitrust statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN55 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The test of the validity of a contract, combination, or conspiracy challenged under the anti-trust law is the direct effect of such a contract or combination upon competition in commerce among the states. If its necessary effect is to stifle competition or to directly and substantially restrict it, it is void. But if it promotes, or only incidentally or indirectly restricts, competition in commerce among the states, while its main purpose and chief effects are to foster the trade and enhance the business of those who make it, it does not constitute a restraint of inter-state commerce within the meaning of that law, and is not obnoxious to its provisions. This act of Congress must have a reasonable construction. It is not its purpose to prohibit or to render illegal the ordinary contracts or combinations of manufacturers, merchants, and traders, or the usual devices to which they resort to promote the success of the business, to enhance their trade, and to make their occupations gainful, so long as those combinations and devices do not necessarily have a direct and substantial effect to restrict competition in commerce among the states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN56 [+] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

A stipulation by a vendee of any trade, business or establishment that the vendor shall not exercise the same trade or business, or erect a similar establishment within a reasonable distance, so as not to interfere with the value of the trade, business or thing purchased, is reasonable and valid. In like manner a stipulation by the vendor of an article to be used in a business or trade, in which he is himself engaged, that it shall not be used within a reasonable region or distance, so as not to interfere with his said business or trade, is also valid and binding.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN57 [ ] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

An attempt by each competitor to monopolize a part of interstate commerce is the very root of all competition therein. Eradicate it, and competition necessarily ceases -- dies. Every person engaged in interstate commerce necessarily attempts to draw to himself, and to exclude others from, a part of that trade; and, if he may not do this, he may not compete with his rivals, all other persons and corporations must cease to secure for themselves any part of the commerce among the states, and some single corporation or person must be permitted to receive and control it all in one huge monopoly. The purpose of the Sherman Act, is, however, to prevent the stifling of competition, not to destroy it or to foster monopoly, and any construction of any of its provisions which would give it such an effect is unreasonable and inconsistent with the object and spirit of the law. It is an interpretation which fosters the mischief it was passed to remedy, and destroys the remedy provided to abate the evil, while a sound construction would tend to abate the mischief and to promote the remedy. It cannot, therefore, be the true meaning of the second section of this law that every attempt to monopolize any part of interstate commerce is illegal. The act must, have a reasonable construction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN58 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The true construction of the first section of the Sherman Act is that no contract, combination, or conspiracy is denounced by it unless its necessary effect is to directly and substantially restrict competition in commerce among the states. By a parity of reasoning, the correct interpretation of the second section must be that no attempt to monopolize a part of the commerce among the states is made illegal or punishable by the provisions of that section unless the necessary effect of that attempt is to directly and substantially restrict commerce among the States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

HN59 [ ] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

It is not -- it could not be -- the purpose or the effect of the second section of the Sherman Act to prohibit or punish the customary and universal attempts of all manufacturers, merchants, and traders engaged in interstate commerce to monopolize a fair share of it in the necessary conduct and desired enlargement of their trade, while their attempts leave their competitors free to make successful endeavors of the same kind. An attempt to monopolize a part of interstate commerce, the necessary effect of which is to stifle or to directly and substantially restrict competition in commerce among the states, violates the second section of this act. But an attempt to monopolize a part of interstate commerce which promotes, or but indirectly or incidentally restricts, competition therein, while its main purpose and chief effect are to increase the trade and foster the business of those who make it, is not intended to be made, and is not made, illegal by the second section of the act under consideration, because such attempts are indispensable to the existence of any competition in commerce among the states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN60 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The phrase used in the Sherman Act, viz.: restraint of trade, is no new one. It has heretofore been used by courts applying the doctrines of common law in determining the validity of contracts. It is to be presumed that the lawmakers, when they choose this phrase, intend that it should have, when used in the statute, no other or different meaning from that which has always been given to it in judicial decisions and in the common understanding. The title indicates that the phrase is so used for the act is described as one to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; and, though the title to an act cannot control its words, it may furnish some aid in showing what was in the mind of the legislator. The restraint of trade which is obnoxious to the provisions of the first section must be of such kind as are, before the passage of the act, recognized as unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN61 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

An individual manufacturer or trader may surely buy from or sell to whom he pleases, and may equally refuse to buy from or sell to anyone with whom he thinks it will promote business interests to refuse to trade. That is entirely a matter of his private concern, with which governmental paternalism has not as yet sought to interfere, except when the property he owns is devoted to a use in which the public has an interest; and such public interest in the use has as yet been found to exist only in staple commodities of prime necessity. It is a business device, probably as old as business itself, to seek to increase the number of one's customers, and the extent of their purchases, by treating more favorably those who become exclusive customers. Certainly there is nothing unlawful or unfair in the statement to the trade by the maker of any kind of merchandise, My goods are for sale, only to those who will buy from me exclusively, not to others.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN62 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Each manufacturer has the right to refuse to sell to anyone if he sees fit. If he chooses to make his goods, and sell them, he has the right to fix any price he chooses upon them. Not only so, but he has the right to select his own customers. He may agree to dispose of all his goods to one person, or he may be willing to supply the whole trade except one person; and whatever he chooses to do is a matter with which the law has no concern, because the goods are his, to be kept or sold, as he pleases. So he may not only fix his own price, but he may impose such terms as he sees fit, or can exact from his customers. These matters are absolutely within his own control. If each manufacturer is at liberty thus to control the sale of his goods, undoubtedly all may, if they see fit, agree together to enforce conditions which each one seeks to impose upon the dealing with the article which he makes. The action of each manufacturer in fixing prices and imposing conditions of sale is undoubtedly legal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN63 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

The vendors are entitled to sell to the best advantage, and in so doing to exercise the right to preclude themselves from entering into competition with those who purchased, and to prevent competition between purchasers, and the purchasers were entitled to such protection as is reasonably necessary for their benefit. Agreements which have for their object the realization of a fair price for the product manufactured and sold are not against public policy, even though in some respects they operate in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

HN64 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Agreements which have for their purpose the realization of a fair price for the product manufactured and sold do not contravene any rule of public policy, even though in some respects they operate in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN65 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Traders have a right to push their lawful trade by all lawful means. They have a right to endeavor by lawful means to keep their trade in their own hands and by the same means to exclude others from its benefits, if they can. Amongst lawful means is certainly included the inducing by profitable offers customers to deal with them rather than with their rivals. It follows that they may, if they think fit, endeavor to induce customers to deal with them exclusively by giving notice that only to exclusive customers will they give the advantage of their profitable offers. It matters not that the withdrawal of the advantages is out of all proportion to the injury inflicted on those who withdraw them by the customers, who decline to deal exclusively with them, dealing with other traders. It is a bargain which persons have a right to make, and those who are parties to the bargain must take it or leave it as a whole.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN66 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

To say that a man is to trade freely, but that he is to stop short at any act which is calculated to harm other tradesmen, and which is designed to attract business to his own shop, would be a strange and impossible counsel of perfection. But competition ceases to be the lawful exercise of trade, and so to be a lawful excuse for what will harm another, if carried to a length which is not fair or reasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rebates

HN67 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

At common law, traders, manufacturers and common carriers have the right to give rebates to their patrons and customers in order to secure and retain their business. But the rebates were given in order to secure business and not for the purpose of stifling competition, or as a means by which to control, fix and maintain prices. It has not and cannot be seriously contended that the legislature does not possess the power to enact laws preventing all rebates being made the object of which is in restraint of trade or which tends to fix and maintain prices. If therefore rebates are used as a means in pursuance of a combine or agreement in restraint of trade, or for the purpose of fixing and maintaining prices, then such combination or agreement is prohibited by the statutes, and is, of course, void on that account.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. JURISDICTION: Quo Warranto: Supreme Court. The Constitution, in giving the Supreme Court power to issue, hear and determine "writs of quo warranto," included proceedings on information in the nature of a quo warranto, and thereby gave the said court jurisdiction to hear and determine such civil proceedings.

2. JURISDICTION: Quo Warranto: Criminal Action: Combinations in Restraint of Trade. The laws of the State authorize and direct the Attorney-General to institute civil proceedings in the Supreme Court by information in the nature of quo warranto against any corporation to annul its charter and forfeit its franchises whenever it has by misuser, non-user or usurpation of powers, so conducted itself as to violate the laws of its being, the anti-trust statutes or the criminal laws of the State; and the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine such civil proceedings, nor can the Supreme Court be ousted of its jurisdiction by the fact that the corporation's conduct is violative of the criminal laws of the State, nor can the corporation justify or defend upon any such plea. The court has no original jurisdiction over a proceeding that is essentially a criminal prosecution, but the proceeding upon information in the nature of a quo warranto to oust the company of its franchises for a violation of the anti-trust statutes, and to impose penalties on it if it is found guilty, is a civil one, and of that the Supreme Court has jurisdiction, and in determining it it is immaterial whether the corporation has also been guilty of a crime which would subject it to prosecution upon indictment before a court and jury.

3. JURISDICTION: Quo Warranto: Criminal Action: Combinations in Restraint of Trade: Abuse of Franchise: Statutory Construction. Articles 1 and 2 of chapter 143, Revised Statutes 1899, are to be read together, and as in pari materia, and section 8971 is to be treated prospectively and construed with section 8978, and when both articles and both sections are construed together, as one act, section 8978 is express authority for holding that corporations which enter into agreements to regulate prices or to control or limit trade are guilty of misuse, abuse and usurpation of power, notwithstanding that section fixes penalties and provides a mode of procedure for its violation. Those sections are not in derogation of the common law, but are intended to be in aid thereof, and remedial in their purpose; and although heavy losses may result to the corporation by a forfeiture of its charter and the imposition of penalties, yet they should be construed and enforced according to the plain intention of the Legislature.

4. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Misjoinder of Parties: Several Corporations. One corporation may be joined with another as defendants in a suit in the name of the State on information in the nature of a quo warranto to oust them of their franchises upon a charge of abuse or usurpation of corporate powers.

5. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Sufficiency of Information: To Maintain Prices. An information which does not charge defendants with forming a combination to maintain prices, but only with combining to regulate, control and fix prices, is sufficient. While sections 8965 and 8966, Revised Statutes 1899, prohibit a combination to maintain prices, and do not prohibit combinations to fix, regulate and control prices, section 8978 does in express terms prohibit such combinations, and all these statutes should be construed together, as one act, and when that is done there is no room for niceties of meaning between "to maintain prices" and "to fix, regulate and control prices."

6. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Sufficiency of Information: General Allegations. An information in quo warranto to oust a corporation which contains general allegations of the facts constituting the misuser, non-user or usurpation, is sufficient. The State is not required, as in an indictment in a criminal prosecution, to allege and prove in detail the facts constituting the mode and manner in which defendants have violated the law against combinations in restraint of trade or the usurpation of powers not granted by their charters.

7. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Different Punishment. The anti-trust statutes are not unconstitutional because they provide that an individual violating them may be punished by fine and imprisonment and a corporation by fine and forfeiture of its charter. There is no such difference in the punishments prescribed as renders them invalid.

8. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Equal Protection of the Laws. Nor are said statutes in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment in denying to corporations the equal protection of the laws. That provision of the Constitution does not prevent legislation which embraces all persons or things that naturally belong to the same class and are similarly situated and upon whom it must operate equally and uniformly. If the statute affects all corporations violating it alike it does not deny to any the equal protection of the laws.

9. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Equal Protection of the Laws: Discrimination Against Labor. The anti-trust statutes do not deny to corporations the equal protection of the laws for that they embrace commodities only and do not include labor, which may also become the subject of a combination. That is no such discrimination against property as makes the statutes unconstitutional.

10. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Due Process of Law: Production of Books: Or, Striking Out Pleadings. Section 8984, Revised Statutes 1899, providing that when corporations, charged to be in a combination in restraint of trade, do not produce their books and papers ordered produced by the court, the court, upon motion, shall strike out their pleadings and render judgment of ouster against those in default, does not deny to them due process of law, and is not unconstitutional. It gives them a right to a hearing according to the law of the land, and is in keeping with similar statutes applicable to all litigants.

11. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Production of Papers: Self-Incrimination. The corporations that have violated anti-trust statutes are not entitled to a discharge in the ouster proceeding because they were compelled by the process of the court to produce books, documents and other testimony against themselves. The statute grants immunity from prosecution to all witnesses who testify in compliance with the order of the court. Nor does the Constitution interfere with the power of the court to compel the production of documentary evidence under a subpoena duces tecum.

12. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Production of Papers: Self-Incrimination: Corporations. An individual may lawfully refuse to answer incriminating questions unless protected by an immunity statute, but there is a distinction between individuals and a corporation. A corporation is a creature of the State, which has a reserved right to investigate its contracts and find out whether it has misused its powers, and it has no constitutional right to refuse to produce its books and papers in court for an examination in the trial of a proceeding against it brought by the State; nor can an officer in charge of the corporation charged with a violation of the statute plead the criminality of the company as a refusal to produce its books.

13. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Interstate Commerce. The clause of the U.S. Constitution giving Congress power to regulate trade among the States, does not prohibit the State, through statutes forbidding pools, trusts and combinations in restraint of interstate trade and the decrees of its courts, from forfeiting the charter of a corporation organized under its laws, or from revoking the license to do business in this State of a corporation organized under the laws of another State, when such company violates those statutes. The State can forfeit the charter of a domestic corporation or revoke the license of a foreign corporation, for a misuser or non-user or abuse of the powers granted or an usurpation of powers not granted, whether the corporation is engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce.

14. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Impairment of Contracts. Nor are the anti-trust statutes void for that they violate the clause of the U.S. Constitution providing that no State shall enact any law that will impair the obligations of a contract. That law has no application to a license issued by the State to a foreign corporation to do business therein, for the reason that, when it accepted the license, it impliedly agreed to transact such business only as a domestic corporation might.

15. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Impairment of Contracts: License Antedating Statute. Nor are its legal rights affected by the fact that its license was issued before the anti-trust statutes were enacted, for these statutes are an exercise of the police powers of the State, and no State can contract away its police powers. The power to govern men and things is inherent in government, and the State always has the reserved right to compel all persons, whether natural or artificial, to so conduct themselves as not to injure others.

16. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Unreasonable Restraint of Trade. There is nothing in either the State or Federal Constitution that prevents the enactment of statutes prohibiting the making of all contracts in restraint of trade, whether reasonable or unreasonable. Anti-trust statutes are not unconstitutional because they prohibit the making of all contracts in restraint of trade, those that are reasonable, as well as those that are unreasonable and unjust; those of Missouri do that, but they in no manner denounce as illegal any trade contract which has a legitimate purpose for its object, and which only incidentally stifles trade.

17. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Constitutional Statutes: Unreasonable Restraint of Trade: Unrestrained Power to Contract. There is no such thing in civilized society as an unrestrained power to contract. Every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it shall not be injurious to others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. Statutes prohibiting pools, trusts and combinations in restraint of trade are bottomed upon those police powers which are inherent rights of sovereignty; and legal regulations and restraints imposed upon the use of property and the right to contract in reference thereto do not deprive the owner of his property or contract-rights without due process of law.

18. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Abatement of Suit: Corporation: Withdrawal from State. Under ordinary circumstances any defendant in a suit may abate the same as to him by voluntarily doing all the things which the pleadings in the cause pray the court to compel him to do; but the confession must be as broad as the charges and must not amount to a colorable dismissal. A judgment of ouster is only an incident to a suit brought by the State charging a foreign corporation licensed to do business in this State with entering into an unlawful pool, trust and combination with other corporations in restraint of trade and to fix and maintain prices on commodities handled by them, to the great damage of the people; and such foreign corporation cannot abate the suit as to it and avoid the penalty for an abuse of its franchise, by withdrawing from the State after the suit is instituted and filing an unaccepted withdrawal with the Secretary of State.

19. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Community of Interest: Stock Held by Trustee or Another Company: Control of Business: Evidence of Conspiracy. Where the information does not charge that a trustee was appointed or a holding corporation was organized for the purpose of taking over the stock of the three respondent corporations, and does not charge that the holding company was vested with power to and did conduct and carry on the business of the three respondents, it will not be held that such placement of stock and business management constituted, as a matter of law, a trust and combine in restraint of trade within the meaning of the anti-trust statutes; but evidence that such trustee or holding company held or owned the stock of the three respondents and controlled their business is competent as tending to establish the charge of the information that the three respondents unlawfully and fraudulently entered into a conspiracy, combine and agreement in restraint of trade in violation of the anti-trust statutes.

20. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Division of Territory: Between Dealers. The respondent Standard Oil Company of Indiana was a manufacturer of the products of petroleum, and also a large dealer, both at retail and at wholesale; and the respondent Waters-Pierce Oil Company was a dealer only. The two companies divided the State by a zigzag line running from the Mississippi River to Kansas and beyond, and agreed that the Indiana Company should sell oil only north of the line and the Waters-Pierce only south of it, and the Indiana Company bound itself to sell, as a refiner, exclusively to the Waters-Pierce in the territory south of the line and the Waters-Pierce bound itself to purchase exclusively from the Indiana Company, and that neither of said companies would sell to any other dealer except at retail prices. Held, that neither company is to be considered only as a manufacturer, but as dealers, and the agreement as to the division of territory and as to exclusive sales was in violation of the anti-trust statutes.

21. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Division of Territory: Breadth of Statutes: Articles of Necessity. The anti-trust statutes of Missouri declare that all contracts in restraint of trade are null and void; and they make no distinction between articles of prime necessity and other articles.

22. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Rebates: Stifling Competition: Power of Legislature. The Legislature possesses the power to enact laws to prevent the giving of rebates from the prices at which a commodity is sold by a dealer when the purpose of such rebates is to secure the trade of a competitor and to stifle competition and as a means by which to control, fix and maintain prices; and has done so in its anti-trust statutes, and the giving of rebates by a combination of dealers in the commodity, with that purpose as its object, is in restraint of trade, and the combination or pool is in violation of the statutes.

23. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Rebates: Stifling Competition: Purpose: How Shown. The evidence shows that the three respondent oil companies, all parts of another parent company, through their agents, acquired information from railroad agents of the amount of oil sold in the various towns of the State by independent companies, and to whom, and by this means and a persistent system of espionage over the business of the independent companies they acquired perfect knowledge of their business, and then by a system of rebates from the prices at which they sold oils to the customers of the independent companies they acquired and held from eighty-five to ninety-eight per cent of the aggregate oil business of the State, and by the same means they fixed and maintained the prices at which all oils were sold in the State. Held, that the rebate system was maintained for the purpose of stifling competition and to fix prices, and tends to show there was a combination between respondents which is violative of the anti-trust statutes.

24. COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE: Formed in Another State. Where the unlawful pool, trust or combination in restraint of trade was formed in a foreign State or country, the parties to it, if they attempt to do business in this State in pursuance thereof, can be punished under the laws of this State. It is wholly immaterial where the unlawful conspiracy was entered into, or by what means it was formed, if it concerns commodities which as a matter of fact are sold in this State by the conspirators. They are in that case punishable in this State, whether the unlawful combination was formed here or elsewhere.

By WOODSON, J., as to Compliance With Decree.

25. ORDER TO DISSOLVE COMBINATION: Proof: Resolution. Where by the decree of the court all three respondents were found guilty of entering into a combination and pool to fix, control and maintain the prices of oil in this State, and the domestic respondent was fined fifty thousand dollars, and in addition its charter was forfeited, but this was suspended upon condition that it immediately cease all connections with the other respondents and all other companies in maintaining said combination and that it furnish the court with satisfactory evidence of its compliance with this judgment and of its intention to cease all connections with its co-respondents and all other companies and persons and on or before a date named file the proofs of its willingness to comply with the judgment, sufficient proof of its compliance with the judgment is not made by its payment of the fine and the filing of a resolution adopted by its board of directors declaring that it "does hereby accept the terms and conditions" of the judgment "and does hereby express its willingness to abide by the same." The purpose of the suit was to break up the trust and the combination between the respondents and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which is not and could not be made a defendant, but which controls the business and policy of all of the respondents by its ownership of all the stock of the two respondent foreign corporations and a majority of the stock of the respondent domestic corporation; and that resolution does not show that the domestic corporation has dissolved its connection with this parent company, or that the pool and combination in restraint of trade of which it was found to be a party has been dissolved.

26. ORDER TO DISSOLVE COMBINATION: Effect of Decree. The decree forfeiting the charter of the domestic respondent took away its life and dissolved the relation between it and the parent company and its subsidiary corporations, the other respondents, and to permit the domestic respondent alone to do business in this State so long as a majority of its stock is owned by this parent company or so long as the parent company has the power to control and manage its business, is to fail to break up the "Oil Trust," and is to restore to the parent company the power to continue the unlawful trust and combination and to fix, control and maintain the prices of oils throughout the entire State; and the decree should be so modified as to permit the domestic respondent to show, within a time named, by indisputable proof, that all stock relations and business connections with it and the parent company and its subsidiary companies have been dissolved in good faith, and in default of such showing the writ of ouster should go.

Judges: WOODSON, J. Lamm, J., dissents as to certain portions of the decree as stated in a separate opinion; Graves, J., concurs in separate opinion.

Opinion by: WOODSON; GRAVES; LAMM

Opinion

---

The Republic Oil Company was placed in the State of Missouri without any authority anywhere in the State to make prices as against the other respondents. It was shown that at Kansas City prices on common oils at least sold by the Republic were made by the Standard Oil Company and communicated to the Republic agents by the Standard manager. Also, at St. Louis and in the Missouri division of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, managers and agents of the Republic were instructed, some say, to follow the market which was fixed by the Waters-Pierce, and others say they were instructed to be governed in fixing prices by the Waters-Pierce prices. It is a fact that in Standard Oil territory Standard prices were the prices of the Republic and in Waters-Pierce territory the prices fixed [***2] by that company were the prices of the Republic. It is not shown that either of the other respondents fixed the price of "palacine" or other high-grade oils of the Republic. These prices were furnished from Cleveland, and some discretion was given agents to vary prices in their competition with independents.

The Union Tank Line Company was a Standard Oil interest with its general office at 26 Broadway, New York City. It furnished tank cars for transporting [*301] oils of Standard interests only. No independent company used these cars. Oils from all the northern and eastern refineries of the Standard, including the refineries in Kansas, were shipped to all the respondents in these cars. They were also used by the Consolidated Tank Line Company of Kentucky.

The evidence shows that the respondents had control of and sold from eighty-five to ninety-per cent of all the refined oils sold in Missouri during the time laid in the information, and that practically all of this large percentage [**993] consisted of petroleum products obtained from, owned by and allied with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

The evidence establishes the fact that it was finally admitted that during [***3] the time laid in the information, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company would not sell oil in Standard territory nor would the Standard Oil Company sell in Waters-Pierce territory, and that orders sent to one company from merchants or jobbers doing business in the territory of the other were not filled by the company from which ordered, but were transmitted to the company in whose territory the customer lived, and were filled by that company.

It is now conceded that there was a dividing line in the State on one side of which the Waters-Pierce Oil Company distributed oil, and on the other side oil was distributed by the Standard Oil Company. Maps showing this division line were kept in the office of the Standard at Kansas City, in the office of the Waters-Pierce at St. Louis, and at 26 Broadway, the home of the Standard Oil interests. The line was first established and agreed on in 1878, between the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and Standard Oil Company of Ohio, and while the evidence does not disclose any special or express agreements made concerning it since yet it was accepted by the Consolidated Tank Line Company, the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, the respondents, and is still faithfully [***4] maintained. Joplin, [*302] in southwest Missouri, is only about six or eight miles from Galena, in Kansas, yet the Standard (respondent), which sells in Kansas, will not sell at Joplin, or in Missouri, nor will the Waters-Pierce sell at Galena, in Kansas. However, when the Standard runs out of oil at Galena it sends over its tank wagons and fills them from the tanks of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. Mr. Pierce says one reason he has not gone beyond the line is because he agreed not to do so.

During the time laid in the information, or from 1900 to the present time, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey has regularly drawn the dividends on 2,750 shares of the capital stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. Dividends on the whole amount of stock except, perhaps, four shares, were declared in the name of and paid to H. C. Pierce, the stock standing of record in his name, and he regularly paid out about two-thirds of the amount to the Seaboard National Bank, in New York City, or to some other representative of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

Reference has already been made to the trade of Republic Oil Company in the high-class grades of petroleum products. Its agents [***5] and managers were instructed to make such sales a special object. Sales in high-class goods were greatly increased, while in the beginning something like twenty-five or thirty per cent of its sales consisted of such grades of oils, later on the percentage of such sales reached from fifty to sixty per cent.

An important fact to be considered in arriving at a solution of this case is the ownership of capital stock of the respondents by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. Since the incorporation of the Republic Oil Company the New Jersey Company has owned all the stock of the Republic and Standard of Indiana, and sixty-eight and one-half per cent of the Waters-Pierce [*303] Oil Company. Four shares of stock of the latter company have been held by individuals acting as officers.

When a change would be made and a new officer put in, the share of stock held by the retiring officer would be assigned, thus indicating that these shares were held for the purpose of officering the company. The significant fact is to be drawn from all the evidence that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and H. Clay Pierce were the only real stockholders in the respondent companies. By an original [***6] agreement made in 1878 with Standard Oil Company of Ohio, and subsequently with trustees of Standard Oil Trust and Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, H. Clay Pierce was to have absolute control of Waters-Pierce Oil Company and its management and the fixing of its policies. Mr. Pierce claims that he exercised such control and management from 1878 to the spring of 1904, when the 2,747 shares of stock indorsed in blank by Pierce to the Standard of New Jersey were caused by the last named company to be assigned of record to M. M. Van-Buren, and are now held by him for that company.

A significant custom which prevailed among these respondents was what was called the "transfer" of men from one company to another. When the Republic Oil Company began business, its original incorporators were all Standard Oil employees, two of them being clerks at 26 Broadway, New York City, and one being a clerk in the office of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, at St. Joseph, Missouri. With the exception of the general manager, a number of field managers and quite a number of employees who had formerly been with Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle, who were retained by the Republic, its principal officers, accountants [***7] and other employees were "transfers" from the Standard Oil Company.

Such transfers were also made from 26 Broadway to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, at St. Louis, Oklahoma, Texas and other points. In most instances the [*304] men transferred from Standard Oil Company to the Republic or Waters-Pierce were instructed to say nothing about the fact that they came from the Standard Oil Company.

Prior to 1900, it is conceded that auditors working under Wade Hampton, general auditor of the Standard Oil Company, with offices at 26 Broadway, regularly audited the books of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, reported to Hampton and were on his pay-rolls. After 1900 he continued to send auditors to St. Louis to audit the Waters-Pierce Oil Company books, but they were placed on the pay-rolls of the latter company during the time [**994] they were engaged, at a salary invariably fixed by Hampton. These auditors reported to Waters-Pierce Oil Company, but a copy of their report was sent to 26 Broadway. Hampton's auditors also audited the accounts of the Republic Oil Company at Cleveland, Ohio, in the same way. After the services of these auditors had ended with the Waters-Pierce or Republic [***8] they at once became employees of Hampton.

Hampton says it was his understanding that Standard Oil Company should audit accounts of Waters-Pierce Oil Company. He personally audited the books of Standard Oil Company of Indiana, his men reporting to him and he paying them for their services. After 1900 a number of letters were written by Hampton to J. P. Gruett, secretary of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, introducing various auditors whom he sent to audit the books of that company and fixing the salaries of such auditors. The conduct of Hampton in keeping a strict supervision over the accounts of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, both before and after 1900 (the date of the new incorporation) was simply the exercise of good business judgment on the part of the majority stockholders in that company. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had the right and power (both of which were exercised) to do these things.

[*305] The Waters-Pierce Oil Company at all times made full reports regularly of its business transactions to 26 Broadway. Before 1900 these reports were sent to H. M. Tilford, at 26 Broadway. Tilford was an officer of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. After 1900 they were [***9] sent to R. H. McNall, at 75 New street, New York City, being an entrance to 26 Broadway, he being designated the commercial agent of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. These reports embraced, among other things, sales and deliveries of refined oils, deliveries of lubricating oils, etc., comparative sales, deliveries of specialty oils, deliveries of outside oils, deliveries of wax candles, etc., tank-wagon and milk-can deliveries, sales and deliveries of naphtha, etc., marine sales, total sales and net results, semi-annual statement showing costs of barrelling and marketing all kinds of oils and products of petroleum. This is the character of the reports made to 26 Broadway by Waters-Pierce Oil Company. A daily cash statement was sent. Also Consolidated Tank Line Company and Standard of Indiana made similar full reports to 26 Broadway. The daily cash statements sent by Waters-Pierce Oil Company were turned over to the comptroller of the Standard of New Jersey. While the reports were all, after 1900, addressed to McNall, they were distributed among the various officers at 26 Broadway and were passed on by a committee at that place, which has not been definitely identified, some calling it [***10] a Domestic Trades Committee, some an Executive Committee, some an Association of Gentlemen or Experts, and some claiming it to be the directors of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, who had their offices and held their meetings at that place. W. E. Bemis, an officer of Standard Oil Company, at 26 Broadway, in charge of the statistical department of Standard Oil interests, received reports from all Standard Oil interests.

[*306] R. H. McNall, who was commercial agent of Waters-Pierce Oil Company after 1900, succeeding H. M. Tilford in that capacity upon the reincorporation of that company in 1900, had been prior thereto and was afterwards an assistant to Tilford. Tilford knew of the reports coming to McNall and saw them. Mr. Pierce says his company reported regularly to Standard Oil Company at 26 Broadway prior to 1900, and that the same reports were sent afterwards through McNall instead of mailing them directly to the heads of departments. He says that it was through McNall that the business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was transacted with Standard Oil interests at 26 Broadway. Mr. Pierce further said: "McNall was furnished anything and everything that he asked for as the [***11] representative of the Standard Oil Company and its various heads." Andrew M. Finlay, who was vice-president and general manager of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, says he was instructed by Mr. Pierce to send any reports to 26 Broadway called for by McNall. James A. Moffett, president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, says that company made full reports of all its business to 26 Broadway.

Now the Republic Oil Company, through its general officers, managers, agents and salesmen, posed and represented the company to be independent of Standard Oil Interests, and Waters-Pierce Oil Company. This position was taken wherever it sold the products of petroleum. Yet shortly after its incorporation the two refineries purchased in the deal with Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle, the one at Cleveland and the one at Scio, Ohio, were dismantled and discontinued and oils purchased from Standard Oil Company. Reports of all the business of the company were regularly made to 26 Broadway through Nichols, the president, at 75 New street, New York City. It occupied and sold identically in the same territory as the Standard Oil Company, except at points where it sold in Waters-Pierce [*307] territory. Its ***12 principal officers and employees were from the Standard Oil Company and sent to it by that Company. Its stock books and certificates of stock were kept at 26 Broadway, and all its capital stock was owned by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. The general manager, W. C. Teagle, says it was an independent company and yet he assisted in making the sale of the property of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle to the Standard Oil Company at 26 Broadway. This same Teagle, as general manager, in circulars sent out to field managers, denied that the Standard **995 had bought out the firm of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle.

Mr. C. L. Nichols, president of Republic Oil Company, and at the same time assistant to L. J. Drake, sales-agent of Standard Oil Company of Indiana, at 26 Broadway, says it was necessary to conduct and represent the Republic as an independent company in order to control the trade in high-class brands of oil formerly controlled by Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle. The independent companies made heavy assaults on the Republic from the beginning, because it was specially pushing a class of trade which created more competition with them. The cheaper oils were sold by the Republic, says ***13 Nichols, only as a necessity and as a means of selling high grades. Nichols regularly consulted Drake and others at 26 Broadway about Republic reports. A part of the president's salary was paid by Republic Oil Company and part by Standard Oil Company, and all reports to him came addressed to 75 New street. Nichols says that after this action was brought it was necessary to dispose of the Republic because it had served its purpose and kept and maintained "palacine." The publicity of its ownership by the Standard Oil interests destroyed its usefulness and purposes. "Palacine" is now being sold by the Standard of Indiana.

In Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas the same conditions, so far as the relations between the Waters-Pierce [*308] Oil Company and Standard Oil Company were concerned, existed as in Missouri.

L. H. Turrell, who was the first secretary of Republic Oil Company, was requested by L. J. Drake, then general manager of Standard Oil Company of Indiana, to go to New York and become an incorporator in a sub rosa corporation. At New York he found that Moffett, who was connected with both the Standard of New Jersey and of Indiana, was the principal negotiator for the purchase ***14 of the property of the firm of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle, and he was told that the Standard Oil Company was making the purchase. He was also told that he had been agreed on as secretary, treasurer and a director. He was directed by Mr. Moffett to the office of Mr. Dodd, general counsel of Standard Oil interests, where he was asked to sign articles of incorporation by name F. A. Turrell, his correct name being L. H. Turrell. He was told that the mistake in name would make no difference and he signed by the initials "F. A." He was instructed by both Dodd and Moffett to use caution and not let it be known at Cleveland, where he went to work for the Republic, that he came from the Standard Oil Company. George B. Wilson, chief clerk of the Standard Oil Company of New York, became, as he expressed it, an accommodation president, and served for four months, when Nichols was elected. James R. Taylor, the other incorporator, was private secretary to H. M. Tilford. These three parties were the stockholders, officers and directors of the Republic Oil Company. They held meetings in the office of H. M. Tilford, director in the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and a member of some committee ***15 at 26 Broadway. All their proceedings were directed and dictated by Tilford.

Between 1903 and 1905 letters were written by various heads of departments at 26 Broadway, New York City, to Waters-Pierce Oil Company and Republic Oil Company. Those to the Waters-Pierce were ***16 sent to McNall, who signed them, and those to the Republic were signed by Nichols. These letters concerned all branches of oil business and called for various reports and numerous matters of information.

R. P. Tinsley, who, in 1904, became connected with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company at St. Louis, or was "transferred," had, prior to that time, been a general agent at 26 Broadway for all Standard Oil interests. Just what his exact duties were in that capacity has not been shown.

M. M. VanBuren, who holds 2,747 shares of the capital stock of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, is a son-in-law of John D. Archbold, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. John D. Rockefeller is the president of that company.

H. M. Tilford, a director in the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and a director in Waters-Pierce Oil Company prior to 1900, says that McNall, the commercial agent of Waters-Pierce Oil Company [***16] at 26 Broadway or 75 New street, was his assistant both before and after he became such commercial agent.

Quite a number of letters were introduced during the examination of Tilford which tend to throw light on the questions being considered, some of which are to the following effect: From McNall to J. P. Gruett, secretary of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, in 1903, giving the information that R. P. Tinsley had succeeded Walter Jennings as agent at 26 Broadway; from McNall to J. P. Gruett in 1903, relating to salaries of employees of Waters-Pierce Oil Company; from McNall to Gruett, in 1903, about Waters-Pierce Oil Company dividends, in which McNall states that he seldom sees the daily cash report sent to his office; from H. M. Tilford to J. P. Gruett, in 1903, relating to the transfer of oils; from McNall to S. Johnson, in charge of lubricating and specialty department of Waters-Pierce Oil Company at St. Louis, in 1904, fixing the price of wax; from H. M. Tilford to J. P. Gruett, in 1902, relating to [*310] sales' reports; from H. M. Tilford to J. P. Gruett, in 1902, relating to banks where funds of Waters-Pierce Oil Company are deposited; from McNall to A. M. Finlay, then president [***17] of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, that hereafter when letters were written him at 26 Broadway or 75 New street by Waters-Pierce Oil Company, to have a number of carbons made, without [**996] date, signature or address, for distribution to other offices; letter from H. C. Arnold, accountant at 26 Broadway, to R. P. Tinsley, then with Waters-Pierce Oil Company, relating to services of Preston, sent to audit for Waters-Pierce.

Mr. Pierce says that all the various brands of oil sold by Waters-Pierce Oil Company, although different in names to those used by Standard of Indiana, were manufactured by Standard Oil Company for his company. He also says that after stock held by Standard Oil Company of New Jersey in Waters-Pierce Oil Company was transferred to M. M. VanBuren on the books of the company in the spring of 1904, the Standard Oil Company then began in various ways, by discharging old employees and substituting their own, to interfere with and take the management from him. This continued until 1905, when he induced the Standard Oil authorities to again put the management into his hands; and his son, Clay Arthur Pierce, was elected president. Says he got both J. P. Gruett and R. P. [***18] Tinsley, the former had been secretary of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and who was succeeded by Tinsley, from the Standard Oil Company. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company communicated with the various heads of departments at 26 Broadway through McNall, commercial agent. A list of all salaries of Waters-Pierce employees was sent to 26 Broadway once a year.

James A. Moffett, president of Standard Oil Company of Indiana, established his office as such president at 26 Broadway in 1901, about the time of the organization of the Republic Oil Company. He assisted in [*311] the negotiations for the purchase of the property of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle, and did caution L. H. Turrell not to talk too much when Turrell became secretary of the Republic Oil Company. He says that the Standard of Indiana sold almost exclusively to Standard Oil interests. He is also a director of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and says that full reports come to 26 Broadway from the Standard of Indiana. He says unqualifiedly that the directors of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey control the companies in which it owns a majority of stock. In the State of Missouri the Standard of Indiana as a refiner and wholesaler [***19] sells only to Standard interests. He also says that Col. Dodd, general counsel of Standard Oil interests, with offices at 26 Broadway, had charge of the incorporation of the Republic Oil Company. "Eupion" oil, the high-grade of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and "Eocene," the high-grade of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana (both illuminating oils) were both manufactured by the latter company. At all times the general offices of the Republic Oil Company were located at 26 Broadway. He always considered the Waters-Pierce Oil Company a Standard Oil interest.

C. L. Nichols, who became president of the Republic Oil Company in the fall of 1901, and is still president, says that during all that time he has occupied an office with L. J. Drake, sales-agent of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, at 26 Broadway, as an assistant to Drake. As such, Drake had charge of certain territory, being the territory in which the Republic was doing business and carrying on a fierce competition with Mr. Drake's company. He says there was an association of gentlemen at 26 Broadway who would meet and discuss Standard Oil Interests in a general way. Nichols said he had consultations with Drake about reports he [***20] received from Republic Oil Company. His selection as president of the Republic was a surprise [*312] to him -- he was informed of his selection by J. R. Taylor, one of the stockholders.

The general officers of all the respondents either knew of their common ownership by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, or understood that they were Standard Oil interests and under the domination of the heads of departments at 26 Broadway. Most field managers and others occupying important positions and in direct touch with the trade and distribution of oils in the field had at least heard of the relationship of the respondents and surmised that they were all connected with Standard Oil interests.

All officers and employees who testified on the part of the respondents or either of them, say there was no agreement, or combination, or understanding between any or all of them to fix, maintain, or control prices of the products of petroleum, nor to control or limit the trade therein, nor to control, limit or prevent competition therein, in the State of Missouri. These denials are couched in general terms and go to all the charges contained in the information.

The Master made the following [***21] rulings regarding the admission and rejection of testimony:

RULING UPON OBJECTIONS TO TESTIMONY.

[References are to pages of "Printed Record of the Testimony."]

On pages 307 and 312 the witness Hatfield was asked to state in a general way with reference to the similarity of the division of trade territory on the map that he saw at 26 Broadway and the one he afterwards saw at the Waters-Pierce Oil Company office in St. Louis. An objection to this question was sustained. It should have been overruled and the witness permitted to state if the two maps disclosed a similar division line of territory.

On page 1071 a ruling on the objection to the introduction of a certified copy of the charter of the Consolidated [*313] Tank Line Company was reserved by the Commissioner. This objection is now overruled.

The objection to the testimony given by witness Wheelan in an answer to the second question on page 595 should have been sustained in so far as it attempted to elicit the relations between the [**997] Republic Oil Company and Standard Oil Company, but the testimony was competent to the extent that it showed knowledge on the part of Cochran of such relations.

On page 1075 a [***22] ruling on the objection to the introduction of a certified copy of the charter of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky was reserved by the Commissioner. The objection is now overruled.

The objection to the tabulated statement set out on page 2730 should have been sustained. It was not properly shown to have been correct and authoritative. The same information is given in a proper way by the witness Webster.

The objection to the compilation of prices of the National Oil Company set out on pages 2763 to 2765 should have been sustained.

The objection to the compilation of prices of St. Louis Oil Company set out on pages 2772 to 2773 should have been sustained.

All proper exceptions to the foregoing rulings by the Commissioner are now allowed.

The respondents requested the Master to declare the law as follows:

"Each respondent separately asks the Commissioner to make as a separate finding of fact each division and subdivision of the statement submitted with the brief of the Republic Oil Company and Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

"Each respondent separately asks the Commissioner to give each of the following declarations of law:

"1. On the pleadings and proofs the findings must [***23] be for the respondent.

[*314] "2. The information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or to entitle the State to any relief in this action.

"3. There is no jurisdiction in this proceeding to inquire into any question of any alleged violation of sections 8965, 8966 and 8978 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri.

"4. There is no jurisdiction in this proceeding to inquire into the question of any alleged violation of section 8978 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1899.

"5. Each of sections 8965, 8966, 8967, 8968, 8971, 8972 and 8978 is unconstitutional and void for each of the reasons mentioned in the second amended answers of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and the Republic Oil Company, filed February 11th, 1906.

"Each constitutional objection there made and presented is now separately made and presented the same as if separately written out as a separate declaration of law.

"6. This respondent was not a party to or part of any pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination or understanding to regulate, fix or control the price to be paid by the retail dealers and others in the State of Missouri for naphtha, benzine, gasoline, kerosene, [***24] lubricating oil or other products of petroleum offered for sale or sold in the State of Missouri.

"7. This respondent was not a party to or part of any pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination or understanding to control or limit the trade in the products of petroleum in the State of Missouri.

"8. This respondent was not a party to or part of any pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination or understanding to control, limit or prevent competition in the business of buying the products of petroleum in said State between themselves and others.

"9. This respondent was not a party to or part of any pool, trust, agreement, confederation, or understanding to deceive or mislead the public into the belief [*315] that respondents were separate and distinct corporations, each pursuing an independent business as legitimate competitors in the purchase or sale of the products of petroleum.

"10. The information charges that the three respondents have wilfully and flagrantly abused, perverted and misused their rights, authority and franchise and assumed and usurped authorities and privileges not granted by the law of Missouri in that they between the __ day of [***25] __, 1901, and March 29th, 1905, created, entered into and became members of a pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding among themselves and each other:

"(a). To regulate, fix and control the price to be paid by the retail dealers and others in the State of Missouri for naphtha, benzine, gasoline, kerosene, lubricating oil and other products of petroleum offered for sale and sold in the State of Missouri;

"(b). To control and limit the trade in the products of petroleum in the State of Missouri;

"(c). To control, limit and prevent competition in such business of buying the products of petroleum in said State between themselves and others;

"(d). To deceive and mislead the public into the belief that respondents were separate and distinct corporations each pursuing an independent business as legitimate competitors in the purchase and sale of the products of petroleum.

"These, and these alone, constitute the issues of fact made by the pleadings.

"11. After making the charges mentioned in the last request, the information alleges as overt acts that by said pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding respondents did certain [***26] things. These, however, are not substantive acts and are not necessary parts of the pleadings. They could be wholly rejected as surplusage, or, at most, treated [*316] as specific allegations of the specific acts constituting the general combination alleged.

"12. So far as concerns oil and oil products, section 8965 only prohibits combinations to regulate or fix prices and maintain them when so fixed or to fix or limit the amount or quantity thereof.

"13. So far as section 8966 attempts to prohibit combinations designated or made with a view to lessen or which tend to lessen free and full competition, it is limited to such combination whereby or under which [**998] it is stipulated, provided, agreed or understood that any person, association of persons or corporation doing business in the State shall not deal in, sell or offer for sale in this State any particular or specified article, product or commodity and shall not during the continuance or existence of any such arrangement, combination or agreement deal in, sell or offer for sale in this State any competing article, product or commodity.

"14. So far as concerns any pool, trust, combination, confederation or understanding [***27] to control or limit trade or competition in such trade, section 8978 only prohibits such pool, trust, combination, confederation or understanding by refusing to buy or sell to another for the reason that such other was not a member thereof.

"15. A plain remedy is provided for violation of section 8978 by the provisions found in sections 8979, 8980, 8981 and 8982, of the Revised Statutes of Missouri 1899, and for such a violation quo warranto will not lie.

"16. The fact that the majority of the stock of the three respondents was owned by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey will not justify a finding of a violation of sections 8965, 8966, or 8978.

"17. An arrangement for a territorial division, if made or maintained as between the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, was not a violation of section 8965, 8966 or 8978.

[*317] "18. Unless there was a combination or agreement among two or more of the respondents to deceive and mislead the public into the belief that they were competing companies when they were not in fact, then there would be no finding against the Republic Oil Company simply because it may be that such company pretended to be [***28] a competitor of the other respondents when it was not such in fact.

"19. The giving of rebates to purchasers of oil is not in violation of law."

The views taken by the Commissioner under the next sub-head which follows will answer all the propositions of law raised in the foregoing declarations.

The record fails to show whether these declarations of law were either given or refused, as asked.

The Master, however, made and returned the following:

FINAL CONCLUSIONS UPON THE LAW AND FACTS.

THE ISSUES.

It seems to be unnecessary to determine in this case whether the respondents have violated the common law of the State, or whether the common law in force in this State will sustain the charges in the information. The statutes, chapter one hundred and forty-three, Revised Statutes of 1899, are certainly broad enough to cover the facts and conditions shown to exist between these respondents. Therefore, the first task to perform will be to ascertain the issues by applying the allegations of the information to the statutes.

An analysis of the information setting forth the substantial allegations of a combination or trust formed between the respondents, together with certain overt [***29] acts done in pursuance thereof, will be [*318] given. The Commissioner finds that the information charges the respondents with the following violations of the various provisions of chapter 143, to which charges he will direct the evidence produced in this case.

It is charged that the respondents, between the -- day of __, 1901, and 29th day of March, 1905, created, entered into and became members of a pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding among themselves, and each other (following language in section 8965):

- (1). To regulate, fix and control the prices to be paid by retail dealers and others in the State of Missouri for the products of petroleum. [Sections 8965, 8978.]
- (2). To control and limit trade in the products of petroleum in the State of Missouri. [Section 8978.]
- (3). To control, limit and prevent competition in the business of buying and selling the products of petroleum in the State of Missouri, between themselves and others engaged in like business. [Section 8966, not the language of the statute.]

These three specifications, manifestly based on the statutes, constitute the alleged purposes for which the combination was [***30] formed. Then the information proceeds and alleges that the respondents have, by said pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding,

- (1). Fixed and maintained the prices of the products of petroleum sold and offered for sale by them in the State of Missouri. [Section 8978.]
  - (2). Have controlled and limited the trade in said products in this State. [Sections 8965, 8966.]
  - (3). Have prevented and destroyed competition in the purchase and sale of said products of petroleum in this State. [Sections 8965, 8966, 8978.]
- [*319] (4). Have deceived and misled the public into the belief that respondents were separate and distinct corporations.

What follows seems to be specifications of overt acts committed in pursuance to the purposes of the combination charged to have been entered into and existing between the respondents. It is alleged that in pursuance of said pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding, so entered into by said respondents as aforesaid, and for the accomplishment of the objects and purposes aforesaid,

- (1). The State of Missouri has been divided into two territories, in one of which the Standard Oil Company sells [***31] and Waters-Pierce Oil Company does not; in the other the Waters-Pierce Oil Company sells and the Standard does not, and that the Republic Oil Company sells in the territory of each of the other respondents to a class of trade who do not or will not buy [**999] of them.
- (2). The respondents appeared and represented themselves to be separate, independent and competing corporations, when they were not and when said secret combination existed between them, thereby deceiving and misleading the public into the belief that they are separate and distinct corporations.
- (3). The respondent, Standard Oil Company, as a refiner, sells the products of petroleum in Missouri only to itself and the other respondents.

(4). The respondents have controlled and supplied to the retail dealers and the general public in Missouri from eighty-five to ninety per cent of the products of petroleum sold in Missouri.

(5). They have controlled the prices of the petroleum, have prevented competition among themselves, have secured control of the oil business and the purchase and sale of oil, have limited the trade therein and driven out competition, and the public have been [*320] deprived of free, full [***32] and wholesome competition in the sale of the products of petroleum.

The language of the information, both in substance and words, embraces combinations formed to regulate, fix and control the prices to be paid by retail dealers and others in the State for the products of petroleum, and to control and limit the trade in such products as interdicted by section 8965 of article 1 and section 8978 of article 2, chapter 143, Revised Statutes 1899.

Also the language of the information is broad enough to embrace combinations formed for the purpose, or made with the view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, competition in the sale of petroleum, as prohibited by section 8966 of said chapter 143.

It is contended that a violation of section 8978 cannot be reached in this proceeding, because article 2, of which that section is a part, gives circuit courts jurisdiction and provides a special or additional remedy in those courts. The purpose of this article as provided in section 8982 is not to repeal any subsisting acts relating to combinations in restraint of trade, but to provide an additional remedy for the control and restraint of pools, trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade and unlawful [***33] combinations. The additional remedy provided is by injunction in courts which alone have jurisdiction in such cases, and is expressly made to reach, not only the provisions of article 2, but those of article 1 as well. HN1[] The Constitution of Missouri, section 3, article 6, gives the Supreme Court power to issue the writ of quo warranto. It must be conceded that it will issue against a corporation for the non-user or misuser of its corporate franchise, or for an infraction of its contract with the State by a violation of the anti-trust laws. As said by Judge Sherwood, in the case of State ex inf. v. Equitable Loan and Investment Co., 142 Mo. 325 (l. c. 337): "And the jurisdiction of this court being conferred by the Constitution, it is beyond the power of the Legislature [*321] to take it away, and it will not be intended that a legislative enactment was designed to take such jurisdiction away, although such enactment should confer another and distinct remedy upon some inferior court or board." Article 2 of chapter 143 does not confer or create a distinct and independent remedy, but simply an additional remedy to those created by article 1, and other remedies, which are conferred [***34] by the Constitution, or are inherent in the courts. The general principles governing such proceedings as this are well expressed by Clark and Marshall in their work on Private Corporations, vol. 2, sec. 314b, in this language: "As a general rule, however, HN2[] the charter of a private corporation will be forfeited, in proper proceedings by the State, for any willful or fraudulent misuser or abuse of its franchises which injures or menaces the interests or welfare of the State or the community in which it transacts business, whether the misuser or abuse consists in the exercise of a franchise or power not conferred upon the corporation by its charter, or in the violation of prohibitions in its charter, or in the violations of prohibitions in general laws to which it is subject, or in the violation of established principles based upon the ground of public policy." [High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies, secs. 647, 648; State ex rel v. Gas Company, 153 Ind. 483, 53 N.E. 1089; Terrett v. Taylor, 13 U.S. 43, 9 Cranch 43, 51, 3 L. Ed. 650; State ex inf. Hadley v. Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 92 S.W. 185, 98 S.W. 539.]

HN3[] Both articles 1 and 2 of chapter 143 declare pools, trusts, agreements, combinations, [***35] confederations and conspiracies, formed and entered into by corporations for the accomplishment of the purposes therein specified, to be illegal. These statutes are a declaration of the policy of the State, the violation of which by a corporation is a violation of its pact, entered into with the State when it was chartered as a domestic company, or licensed to do business as a foreign company, which [*322] violations give the State the right to withdraw such charter rights or cancel such license privileges.

Respondents maintain that inasmuch as chapter 143 denounces pools, combinations, etc., therein described as "conspiracies to defraud," the information should be tested by the rules of pleading relating to charging conspiracies, and that it is, therefore, insufficient and states no cause of action. This action, although it does partake of the nature of a criminal prosecution in that heavy penalties may be imposed, yet it is a civil action and the rules of pleading in civil cases appertain. While the corporate rights of the respondents may be taken from them or fines or suspensions imposed, yet these are not regarded as punishments for the commission of crime, but as results [***36] which may follow the failure of a corporation to live up to the implied contract between it and its [**1000] creator, the State. The respondents are charged with forming and entering into a combination or conspiracy to do an unlawful act. HN4↑ Conspiracies may be formed to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. The rule of pleading in such cases, even in criminal proceedings, is that: "If the act which the conspirators combined to perform is unlawful, it is unnecessary to set out in the indictment the means to be employed in accomplishing it. But if the end in view is lawful or indifferent, and the conspiracy only becomes criminal by reason of the unlawful means whereby it is to be accomplished, it becomes necessary to show the criminality by setting out such unlawful means." 4 Ency. Pl. & Pr., pp. 713, 714, 716, 717; [Coal Co. v. People, 214 Ill. 421, 73 N.E. 770.] Respondents say, "The information does not show how and by what manner the combination was formed. The overt acts pleaded do not sufficiently show these details. They show what was done under the combination, not how the combination was effected." This is a very general objection without specifying [***37] the exact deficiencies of the information. Neither [*323] in the printed nor oral arguments have any of the counsel for respondents pointed out what omitted matter or allegation would have supplied the defects. In view of the fact that the sufficiency of the information has not been brought to the attention of the court by proper plea, and that in this case reported in 194 Mo. 130, Judge Lamm said, "The information proceeds with due legal precision and particularity to inform this court of the scope and tenor of the trust scheme and of the specific methods claimed to have been employed therein, and thereby to rivet upon the people of this State, contrary to public policy and in the very teeth of express law, an alleged odious monopoly," the Commissioner might have passed this question without comment. It is very clear that the information is sufficient and it only remains to dispose of a few other questions of law in a brief way and then proceed to a consideration of the question of the guilt or innocence of the respondents under the facts proven.

It is urged that the provision of chapter 143, Revised Statutes 1899, are in conflict with the first section of the fourteenth Amendment [***38] to the Federal Constitution and other constitutional provisions. So far as the Commissioner is concerned all these constitutional objections are disposed of by the following cases: State ex. inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. 124, 91 S.W. 1062; State ex. inf. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595; State ex. inf. v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645; State ex. inf. v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737; Finck v. Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244, 86 S.W. 213.

HN5↑ The anti-trust laws of the State are penal in their nature and should be strictly construed. State ex. inf. v. [Insurance Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595.] As said by Judge Fox, "It must be remembered that this proceeding partakes of the nature of a criminal prosecution, severe penalties are imposed, hence it is not sufficient to warrant a finding adverse to respondents that we may entertain strong suspicions, or even strong probabilities, [*324] of their guilt." State ex. inf. v. [Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737.] Yet, both the information and the facts should be given a reasonable and sensible construction, one which, on the one hand, will give effect to the material and well-stated [***39] charges in the information, and on the other such a construction and application of the facts as will elicit the truth and not mere suspicions and probabilities. As said by Judge Lamm in this case, "We feel, at least, on solid ground on the proposition that statutes leveled against monopolies are buttressed upon the wisdom of the common law, and this court, constrained and enlightened by events of current history, is not required and does not deem itself invited to approach the interpretation of such statutes, with a hostile or sour disposition, or to drive a coach-and-six through them but, on the other hand, while sedulously protecting the rights and liberties of the individual from insidious approaches, under whatever artful guise, we should at the same time not lose sight of the rights of the community, and should endeavor to advance the beneficent purpose underlying such laws where it can be done without doing violence to constitutional provisions." [State ex. inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 194 I. c. 148.] In Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 49 L. Ed. 643, 25 S. Ct. 358, it was said by the Supreme Court of the United States that HN6↑ all laws should receive a reasonable construction, [***40] and general terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression or absurd consequence. It will, therefore, be presumed that the Legislature intended exceptions to its language which would avoid results of that character. The reason of the law in such cases should prevail over its letter."

CONCLUSIONS UPON THE FACTS.

As, in this case, HN7[] where the State charges an abuse or a misuse of the corporate franchise, or acts of corporations contrary to the Constitution and laws of the [\[\*325\]](#) State, the informant must prove the charges as laid in the information or enough of them to warrant the finding that the respondents are guilty. If the State has failed to do this, then nothing remains but to so pronounce. [State ex rel. Walker v. Talbot, 123 Mo. 69, 71, 27 S.W. 366.]

The charge is that the respondents, between the -- day of ___, 1901, and the 24th day of March, 1905, created, entered into and became members of a pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding, among themselves, and each other, to do certain things heretofore set out. The terms pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding, in [\[\*\*\*41\]](#) the sense used in the information and according to modern adjudications, are practically synonymous. [United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 54 U.S. App. I. c. 764; Cook on Trusts, p. 4.] They are also denounced by the statute as conspiracies.

The respondents during the time laid in the information were separate and distinct corporations or entities, one organized under the laws of New York, one under the laws of Indiana and the other under the laws of Missouri. In 1882 the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was organized and about that time the Standard Oil Trust was formed. In 1899 the capital stock of the New Jersey Company was increased from three to one hundred and ten million dollars. In 1878 the first Waters-Pierce Oil Company was organized with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars. In 1882 its capital stock was increased to four hundred thousand dollars. About this time the Standard Oil Trust became the holder for the Standard interests of 2,750 of the four thousand shares of this company. In about 1890, when the Standard Oil Trust was dissolved, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey became the owner of the 2,750 shares of Waters-Pierce stock formerly held [\[\*\*\*42\]](#) by the trustees [\[\*326\]](#) of the Standard Oil Trust and owned that number of shares up to May, 1900, when the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was again organized, the Standard of New Jersey continuing to own and control 2,750 shares of the four thousand shares of the new company. In 1889 the Standard Oil Company of Indiana was incorporated. Practically all of its stock from that time to the present was owned by the Standard of New Jersey. In 1901 the Republic Oil Company was incorporated and absolutely all its stock was owned then and continued to be owned ever since by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. The stock held by the New Jersey company in the respondent companies was held for it by individuals connected with Standard Oil interests at 26 Broadway. The management of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company by agreement was given to H. Clay Pierce, who was president or managing influence from 1878 to the spring of 1904, when the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey exercised its right and power as a majority stockholder and took the management from him for about a year. The business and affairs of the other two respondents were, at all times, absolutely managed and directed from 26 Broadway, [\[\*\*\*43\]](#) New York City, where their principal offices were located. As to the managerial acts and directions emanating from 26 Broadway, more will be said later on. Thus it will be seen that a motive for a combination between the respondents existed in the common ownership of their capital stock. Of the total capital stock of the three respondents, amounting to one million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, the New Jersey Company owned a little more than one million five hundred thousand dollars thereof.

Counsel for respondent Waters-Pierce Oil Company, says there was no motive for any combination among the companies as to price. "If," says counsel, "the conclusion of combination is to be drawn [\[\*327\]](#) from the fact that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey owned a controlling interest in all these companies, that inference is positively repelled by the fact that Mr. Pierce and his interests, which actually controlled the operations of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, would have enjoyed no benefits from any such combination." But is it not a fact that a combination of Pierce's interests with Standard Oil interests was of vast importance to him? It enabled the Waters-Pierce Oil Company [\[\*\*\*44\]](#) to control the trade and prices in the products of petroleum in one-half of the State of Missouri, a good portion of Louisiana, all of Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas and the Republic of Mexico. Otherwise, Mr. Pierce's one-third interest in the Waters-Pierce Company might not have been able to withstand competition from Standard Oil interests.

In State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Company, 194 Mo. 124, 91 S.W. 1062, Judge Lamm says: "Yet experience has shown that HN8[] stockholdings showing a community of interest, while in some cases innocuous, might in given cases be the very root from which the trust agreement grows."

In People ex rel. v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N.E. 798, it is said: "The control of the four companies by the appellee -- an outside and independent corporation -- suppresses competition between them, and destroys their diversity of interest and all motive for competition." Again, Noyes on Intercorporate Relations, sec. 294, says: "HN9[↑] A corporation which owns a majority of the shares of the capital stock of another corporation controls it." In Railroad v. Commonwealth, 7 A. 368, this plain and pointed language is used: "It is too plain to bear argument [***45] that the ownership of the stock of a corporation carries with it the control of the corporation." It is very true that the ownership of the stock does not carry with it the ownership by the stockholders of [*328] the property of the corporation. The property belongs to the corporation and is managed by the proper agents selected for that purpose. [Humphreys v. McKissick, 140 U.S. 304, 35 L. Ed. 473, 11 S. Ct. 779.] That principle of law distinguishes this case from the case of State ex inf. v. Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737. There the Continental Tobacco Company purchased the tangible assets of a number of tobacco companies and converted them into the assets of the tobacco company and proceeded to transact business in its own name and with its own assets and not by means of a number of subsidiary companies, organized at different times, in different States and under different names, as in the case of [**1002] the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. "HN10[↑] Every corporation is a person -- artificial, it is true, but nevertheless a distinct legal entity. Neither a portion nor all of the natural persons who compose a corporation, or who own its stock and control its affairs, [***46] are the corporation itself; and when a single individual composes a corporation, he is not himself the corporation. In such case, the man is one person, created by the Almighty, and the corporation is another person, created by the law." [Exchange Bank v. The Macon Construction Co., 97 Ga. 1, 25 S.E. 326.] The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, through the individuals at 26 Broadway, who held for it a large majority of the stock of all the respondents, had control by virtue of such ownership and did control. Even if Mr. Pierce did vote the stock of the New Jersey Company, elect the directors of and control the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from May, 1900, to February, 1904, no more can be said than that he was acting as the agent of the majority stockholder. That the New Jersey company had the power of control and that Pierce's authority was merely permissive, or that of an agent whose agency was subject to revocation at any time, was demonstrated in 1904 when his agency was revoked without consultation [*329] with him, and he was told by the general counsel of the company that the action was regular. The conclusion cannot be escaped that the common ownership of the stock of [***47] respondents by an outside corporation is a strong circumstance tending to show them guilty of an agreement, combination or conspiracy to effect the objects stated in the information.

There was a division of territory between the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, not only in Missouri, but the two companies did not sell the products of petroleum at the same place at any point in the United States. While it is true no formal agreement was produced showing a division of territory -- such was not necessary. The evidence shows clearly that an understanding was had, that divisions were made as far back as 1878, and faithfully kept by the two respondents to the present time. It is safe to say that except for the combination or understanding which has always existed between these companies, together with their common stock ownership, such agreement would have been annulled long ago. It will not do to say that one company sold oil in one part of the State and the other in another part, and that, therefore, there was no competition. The charge against them was that they did not compete. If these two companies had not combined their vast wealth, it is reasonable [***48] to believe that both would have established and maintained stations at all important commercial points in the State. If there had not been a close business and common stock-ownership existing between them, orders received from the territory of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to the Standard Oil Company would have been filled by the company receiving them. These orders were never transferred to other companies -- to independent or outside companies -- but they went from the one to the other of said respondents. Nor was the Waters-Pierce Oil Company a [*330] marketer of the brands of oil of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. It posed to the public as a marketer of its own special brands of oil, manufactured, it is true, for it by the Standard Oil Company and its allied interests. So far as the public knew the "Eocene" of the Standard and "Eupion" of the Waters-Pierce were entirely different oils, although as a matter of fact they may have been the same. If these two companies had been independent of each other, a division of trade alone might not be sufficient to convict them of a violation of the statute. But it is an important circumstance to be considered in this case in connection [***49] with all the other facts proven, and especially in conjunction with the fact that for all practical purposes the three respondents were ruled and controlled from 26 Broadway, New York City, the center from which Standard Oil interests draw inspiration from one end of the United States to the other.

The reserved dominating power of control over the respondents was at 26 Broadway. To that place all the companies made full reports of their entire transactions. Prior to 1900, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company communicated with the various heads of departments of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey at 26 Broadway, and gave any and all information called for. Matters of construction, salary lists and all questions concerning the expenditure of money by Waters-Pierce were passed on at that place. H. M. Tilford, a director in the Standard of New Jersey, was then the directing force of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. After 1900 -- after the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was re-organized for the purpose of enabling the company to resume business in Texas -- one R. H. McNall, a Standard Oil employee, and who continued as such afterwards, was appointed as commercial agent of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company. [***50] He continued in the office of H. M. Tilford. Letters, daily cash reports [*331] and many other reports covering the entire business of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, were mailed to him, and he in turn distributed them to the proper departments. The Standard Oil Company of Indiana had its central office, that of president, at 26 Broadway. He was also a director in the Standard of New Jersey. Reports of this company were sent to him and he distributed them to the various departments representing Standard Oil interests. The president of the Republic Oil Company also had his office at 26 Broadway. He was an employee of the Standard Oil Company at that place, part of his salary [**1003] being paid by each company. He occupied an office with L. J. Drake, sales-agent of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. He was assistant to Drake, and testified that they carried on an active competition between their companies. All communications to 26 Broadway from the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and Republic Oil Company were addressed to 75 New street. The evidence discloses a great many detailed communications, letters and business transactions between all the respondents and 26 Broadway. The [***51] accounts of all the respondents were regularly audited by Wade Hampton, the general auditor of Standard Oil interests. Prior to 1900 these auditors were in the pay of Hampton and reported to him directly. After 1900, he sent the auditors out from his office, but, so far as the Waters-Pierce Company was concerned, they were directed by him to be placed on its pay-rolls, he fixing their salary, which was done, and reports made to the Waters-Pierce Company, a copy of which was sent to 26 Broadway.

The Republic Oil Company was organized for the purpose of taking over the assets of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle. For a great many years this firm had been a thorn in the side of the Standard Oil Company. It was entirely independent of Standard Oil interests. It had built up large sales in the central and southwest portions of the country in high-grade illuminating [*332] oils and gasoline. Its special brand, the one which had gained the widest reputation of any other brands of illuminating oil on the market as the best burning oil was "palacine," a Pennsylvania product. That it was a better and higher grade of oil than any manufactured or sold by Standard Oil interests is conceded. At [***52] the same time all other independent companies procured their oils principally from Pennsylvania independent refineries, which fact enabled them to sell much oil in competition with the Standard and Waters-Pierce, because of its superior quality. Hence the purpose of the Standard Oil Company in buying the property, good will and brands of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle. It was necessary to create an independent company which could handle and sell Pennsylvania products in competition with independent companies. That was the purpose of the Republic Oil Company, which fact was conceded by Mr. Nichols, its president. Since this case was begun the Republic, except in Missouri, has sold all its assets and brands of oil to the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, which is entirely owned by the Standard of New Jersey, which, in turn, owned entirely the Republic Oil Company. It amounts to a sale by the Standard Oil Company to itself. The sale was made, so Mr. Nichols says, because of the disclosures made in this case, its purpose had been served -- it had maintained the "palacine" brand. The Republic Oil Company, while it claimed to be independent and its managers and agents were directed to so represent [***53] it, which they did, began a fierce contention for business between itself and the independent companies. It never sold to any extent the class of oils handled by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company. Such oils were handled by it as an incident to its main business, the sale of high-class oils, and were invariably sold at prices fixed by one or the other of the other respondents. While it was, so far as the public was concerned, an apparent [*333] independent company and made a show of competition with the Waters-Pierce Oil Company in isolated instances, yet, as a matter of fact, it greatly aided the other respondents in maintaining the prices of common oils which constituted the great bulk of their sales. If the Republic Oil Company had been a real independent company it would not have dismantled the two refineries purchased at the time of the sale of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle to the Standard Oil Company. One of these refineries was located at Cleveland and the other at Scio, Ohio, and had furnished to Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle a large amount of their common oils.

Another significant fact bearing on the question of a combination and understanding between [***54] respondents was what was termed the "transfer" of employees from one company to the other. The employees of the Republic Oil Company, except the old employees of Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle retained, were practically all men transferred from Standard Oil interests. Some of the principal officers and many of the subordinate employees of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company came from the Standard Oil Company.

All the dividends of the stock of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and Republic Oil Company, and the dividends on two-thirds of the stock of Waters-Pierce Oil Company, were paid into the treasury of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. The contention is made that Mr. Pierce derived no benefit from the dividends so paid, and as he was in control of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company that company should not be held responsible for this condition. Mr. Pierce as an individual might not have been responsible for this state of facts, yet the company, the corporate entity, through its controlling power, the majority stockholder, was undoubtedly responsible. And while the evidence does not show that Mr. Pierce participated in a division of the dividends paid to the Standard of New Jersey by [***55] respondents, yet it does show that by reason of [*334] such ownership of stock and understanding existing between respondents he was enabled to draw, according to his own statement, from six to seven hundred per cent per annum as dividends on 1,250 shares owned by him.

Another strong circumstance tending to show a combination between respondents for the purposes alleged in the information is the [**1004] fact that both the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and Waters-Pierce Oil Company purchased all the products of petroleum and brands of oil sold by them from the Standard Oil Company and its allied interests. The Republic Oil Company for the first year and a half purchased its highgrade oils from independent companies and its common oils from the Standard Oil Company. After that time and up to the present it purchased practically all its oils of all grades, including "palacine," from the Standard Oil interests. These oils were shipped in the tank cars of the Union Tank Line Company (a Standard Oil company), and it is a significant fact that no independent company got oils shipped in these cars. While there is testimony to the effect that the Standard Oil Company, as a refiner [***56] and wholesaler, would sell to any person who wanted to buy and pay their prices, yet the fact has been proven that it sold almost exclusively to companies allied and subsidiary to it.

Again the system in vogue throughout the territory of both the Standard Oil Company and Waters-Pierce Oil Company, since 1878, of espionage upon the shipments of outside or independent companies, and the efforts of their agents to head off and prevent such shipments being sold, tends to show an understanding between those respondents to monopolize the sale of products of petroleum.

The percentage of sales of refined oils by the respondents, amounting to at least ninety per cent of the whole amount of such oils sold in Missouri, was due to the power wielded by them, which, in turn, was [*335] due to a combination of their vast strength and wealth.

Therefore, did the respondents form a combination as charged in the information? A few quotations from the law will be given. "HN11[ The gravamen of the offense of conspiracy is the combination. Agreements to prevent competition in trade are, in contemplation of law, injurious to trade, because they are liable to be injuriously used. . . . If the validity [***57] of such an agreement was made to depend upon actual proof of public prejudice or injury, it would be very difficult in any case to establish the invalidity." State ex inf. v. [Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645.] In the same case it is further said: "It is not essential that its results should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." In the case of State ex inf. v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737, Judge Fox uses language very pertinent to the facts of this case, as follows: "HN12[ The statute contemplates the existence of at least two or more corporations, individuals or partnerships, so as to agree or combine with each other to do the prohibited acts mentioned in the statute. In other words, it is intended to operate upon two or more corporations or individuals, who, so far as the public are concerned, indicate that they are pursuing an independent business, legitimate competitors, when, in fact, there is a secret agreement by which the very things condemned by the statute are accomplished. The public has rights which the law contemplates shall be [***58] respected. Neither corporations, individuals, nor partnerships are permitted to deceive or mislead the public by an apparent competition, when in fact none exists." While it is true there was no competition between the respondents, Waters-Pierce Oil Company and Standard Oil Company, nor even apparent competition, yet they did pose to the public as separate and independent companies, while each was striving to enrich a common treasury, and by [*336] an indefinite agreement as to time divided trade territory and did not compete. Again Judge Fox says in the above-cited case, and quoting from the Supreme Court of Texas: "HN13" In order to constitute a trust, within the meaning of the statute, there must be a 'combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more.' 'Combination,' as here used, means union or association. If there be no union or association by two or more of their 'capital, skill or acts,' there can be no 'combination' and hence no 'trust.' The respondents constitute three separate and distinct corporate entities. That the capital stock of each was working to one common good, depositing their dividends in one common treasury, there is no question. The skill and acts of all [***59] three were employed to one main mutual purpose, the creation of earnings for the benefit of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. The Supreme Court of Ohio, speaking of the Standard Oil Trust which formerly held a majority of the stock of Waters-Pierce Oil Company and was succeeded in such holding by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, said: "Its object was to establish a virtual monopoly of the business of producing petroleum, and of manufacturing, refining and dealing in it and all its products, throughout the entire country, and by which it might not merely control the production, but the price, at its pleasure. All such associations are contrary to the policy of our State and void." [State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137, 30 N.E. 279.] In the case of State ex rel. v. Gas Co., 153 Ind. 483, 53 N.E. 1089, the Supreme Court of Indiana said: "The authorities affirm, as a general rule, that, HN14" if the act complained of, by its results, will restrict or stifle competition, the law will regard such act as incompatible with public policy, without any proof of evil intent on the part of the actor or actual injury to the public. The inquiry is not as to the degree of [***60] injury inflicted upon the public; it is sufficient to [*337] know that the inevitable tendency of the act is injurious to the public."

[**1005] The evidence shows that in the territory of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company it fixed, controlled and regulated prices. The Republic Oil Company, through its field agents and employees instructed by its officers to do so, followed the prices fixed by the Waters-Pierce. As shown before, no real competition between the Republic Oil Company and that company existed, although it posed as an independent company and competitor of the Waters-Pierce. Its mission as has been shown was to divert the independent companies into a fight on the sale of high-class goods and give the Waters-Pierce a freer field on the principal products it handles, the common class of goods. The independents, as intelligently explained by Mr. Wilhoit of Springfield, were powerless to undersell the Waters-Pierce Oil Company without taking chances of being driven entirely out of business. Anyway, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company dictated, maintained, regulated, fixed and controlled the prices to be paid by retail dealers in its territory. The same conditions existed in [***61] the territory of the Standard Oil Company in Missouri. While the Republic Oil Company made some show of competition against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, it made no such show as against the Standard, except, as in the other territory, it made the claim everywhere that it was independent of the other respondents, had no connection with them and was a competitor of them. Prices at which the Republic sold in Standard territory were invariably fixed at Kansas City by the Standard Oil Company. That the trade in the products of petroleum, that is, illuminating oils and gasoline, was controlled by the respondents is made clear by the evidence showing that they sold ninety per cent of such products sold in Missouri. This evidence justifies the statement of Mr. Wilhoit that his [*338] experience, both as an employee of the Standard Oil Company and as an independent dealer, was that the Standard Oil Company or Waters-Pierce Oil Company would suffer the independent to control about ten percent of the business, but if he attempted to go beyond and control more trade, prices were so reduced that the independent could not long exist. That prices were maintained is evident from the fact that [***62] during the last ten years they have tended upward, although large discoveries of oil fields have been made in States and territories bordering on Missouri. It is further clear from a consideration of all the evidence that a combination was formed between the respondents to control, limit and prevent competition in the business of buying and selling the products of petroleum in the State of Missouri.

Wherefore, after giving due and careful consideration to all the testimony, the Commissioner finds that the respondents, Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Waters-Pierce Oil Company and Republic Oil Company, on the 8th day of July, 1901, in the State of Missouri, created, entered into and became members of a pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding among themselves and each other, which pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding, created and entered into by respondents, as aforesaid, continued to exist and be maintained up to the date of filing the information in this case, and were created and entered into for the following purposes:

- (1). To regulate, fix and control the prices to be paid by retail dealers and others in the State of [***63] Missouri for the products of petroleum;
- (2). To control and limit trade in the products of petroleum in the State of Missouri;
- (3). To control, limit and prevent competition in the business of buying and selling the products of [*339] petroleum in the State of Missouri, between themselves and others engaged in like business.

That said respondents, Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Waters-Pierce Oil Company and Republic Oil Company, during the above specified time, under and by virtue of said pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding, so created and entered into have

- (1). Fixed and maintained the prices of the refined products of petroleum, sold and offered for sale by them and others in the State of Missouri;
- (2). Controlled and limited the trade in said refined products of petroleum in the State of Missouri;

That in pursuance to said pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding, so created and entered into by the respondents, they have controlled the prices of the refined products of petroleum, prevented competition among themselves, and among themselves and others therein, secured control of the principal part of the refined [***64] products of petroleum in the State of Missouri and of the purchase and sale of such oils, limited the trade therein, have driven competition out of the State, thereby depriving the people of the State of free, full and wholesome competition in the sale of the refined products of petroleum, and have under and in pursuance of said pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination and understanding, so created, entered into and maintained, deceived and misled the public into the belief that they were separate and distinct corporations pursuing an independent business.

All contrary to and in violation of the laws and public policy of the State of Missouri. Done this 24th day of May, 1907.

Upon the incoming of the report of the Master, the respondents Standard Oil Company and the Republic [*340] Oil Company filed seventy-five exceptions there-to, and the Waters-Pierce Oil Company filed thirty additional ones.

It will serve no useful purpose to set out [**1006] these exceptions in the statement of the case, for the reason that such of them as have been accentuated by discussion, in briefs of counsel, will be carefully considered under appropriate headings in the opinion.

OPINION.

[***65] I.

As elsewhere stated, this is an original proceeding, instituted in this court by the Attorney-General, on information, in the nature of quo warranto, against the respondents, to forfeit their charters and revoke their licenses to transact business in this State.

The contention of the informant is, that respondents are guilty of violations of the anti-trust laws of the State, as found in the common law and statutes.

The latter are found in articles 1 and 2 of chapter 143, Revised Statutes 1899, and the provisions thereof in so far as they are material to this controversy are sections 8965, 8966, 8971 and 8978.

Omitting such portions of the sections as are inapplicable to the questions involved in this case, and using the word "person" where the words "individual," "partnership," "corporation" or "association of persons" occur in the statute, those provisions are as follows:

"HN15[] Section 8965. Any person . . . who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any . . . person or persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, merchandise, commodity, etc., or to maintain [***66] said price when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or a party to any [*341] pool, trust, agreement, contract, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, merchandise, commodity, etc., shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to penalties as provided in this article.

"HN16[] Section 8966. All arrangements, contracts, agreements or combinations between two or more persons designated or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen full and free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article, product or commodity in this State, and all arrangements, combinations, contracts or agreements, whereby, or under the terms of which, it is proposed, stipulated, provided, agreed or understood that any person or persons doing business in this State, shall deal in, sell or offer for sale in this State any particular or specified article, product or commodity, and shall not during the continuance or existence of any such arrangement, combination, contract or agreement, deal in, sell or offer for sale any competing article, product or commodity, are hereby [***67] declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void; and any person or persons becoming a party to any such arrangement, contract, agreement or combination, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to the penalties provided for in this article.

"HN17[] Section 8971. Any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of this State, which shall violate any of the provisions of this article, shall thereby forfeit its corporate rights and franchises; and its corporate existence shall, upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State, be by the court declared forfeited, void and of non-effect, and shall thereupon cease and determine; and any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any other State or country, which shall violate any of the provisions [*342] of the preceding sections of this article, shall thereby forfeit its right and privilege thereafter to do any business in this State, and HN18[] upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State, its right and privilege to do business in this State shall be declared forfeited; and in all proceedings [***68] to have such forfeiture declared, proof that any person who has been acting as agent of such foreign corporation in transacting its business in this State has been, while acting as such agent, in the name, behalf or interest of such foreign corporation, violating any provision of the preceding sections of this article, shall be received as prima-facie proof of the act of the corporation itself; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court to certify the decree thereof to the Secretary of State, and if it be an insurance company, also to the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, who shall take notice and be governed thereby as to the corporate powers and rights of said corporation.

"HN19[] Section 8978. Every pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, understanding, or conspiracy entered into, or created, or organized by any . . . person or persons, to regulate, control or fix the price of any article or articles of manufacture, merchandise, commodity, etc., or to maintain said price or prices when so regulated, determined or fixed, and all agreements, combinations, confederations, conspiracies or pools made, created, entered into or organized by any . . . persons to [***69] fix the amount or limit the quantity of any article of manufacture, commodity, etc., are hereby declared illegal. If any two or more persons who are engaged in buying or selling any articles of commerce, merchandise, commodity, etc., shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article [*1007] or thing; or to limit competition in such trade, by refusing [*343] to buy from or sell to any other person or persons any such article or thing aforesaid, for the reason that such person is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, combination, confederation, association or understanding, . . . shall be guilty of a violation of this article."

The gist of the complaint against the respondents is thus stated in the language of the Attorney-General, to-wit:

"That the respondents had, between the -- day of ___, 1901, and the 29th day of March, 1905, created, entered into and become members of a pool, trust, agreement, confederation, combination, arrangement and understanding among themselves for the following purposes:

"First: To regulate, fix and control the prices to be paid [***70] by retail dealers and others in the State, of Missouri for the refined products of petroleum sold and offered for sale in this State.

"Second: To control and limit the trade in the refined products of petroleum in this State.

"Third: To control, limit and prevent competition in the business of buying and selling the refined products of petroleum in this State between themselves and others engaged in like business.

"Fourth: To deceive and mislead the public into the belief that said respondents were separate and distinct corporations, each pursuing an independent, business as legitimate competitors in the purchase and sale of the products of petroleum."

At the very threshold of this case, we are met with the contention of the respondents that this court has no jurisdiction of this cause by a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto.

They contend, first, that this is a criminal prosecution and that quo warranto cannot be used as a criminal procedure; and, second, that the statutes under which it is instituted provide the mode of procedure [*344] and designate the forum in which it is to be conducted, which is exclusive of all other modes of procedure.

If the respondents [***71] are correct in their contention that this is essentially a criminal prosecution within the meaning of the Constitution and criminal laws of the State, then there could be no escape from the conclusion that this court has no jurisdiction over the cause; and, if they are guilty of violating said statutes, then they are guilty of a crime; and should, first, be prosecuted upon an indictment or information, before a court and jury; and, if convicted, then, and not until then, could such a proceeding as this be maintained.

If respondents' major premise is correct, then, as before stated, this court is without jurisdiction over the cause.

In fact, we do not understand the Attorney-General to controvert that proposition; but, upon the other hand, he contends that this is not a criminal prosecution in any sense of the word, but is a civil proceeding on information in the nature of quo warranto to oust respondents from transacting business in this State, because of their alleged violation of the statutory and common law against combinations and trusts made in restraint of trade.

If this contention of the State is sound, then it cannot be successfully maintained that this court is without [***72] jurisdiction in the premises, for the reason that HN20 section 3 of article 6 of the Constitution of 1875, in express terms, confers power upon this court to issue, hear and determine writs of quo warranto.

This brings us to the point where we must determine whether or not this is a civil proceeding within the meaning of that section of the Constitution; if so, then, clearly, this court has jurisdiction of the cause; but, if not, then its jurisdiction should be denied.

[*345] The question of the proper procedure in this case and the nature of the complaint charged against respondents in the information are so closely allied and related to each other that it will be necessary to consider the two propositions somewhat together.

It would be useless and would serve no good purpose to go into the learning and distinctions between a proceeding by quo warranto and a proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto. The demarcation is well defined and has been long established. Resort, however, is rarely ever had to the former, while the latter has grown into almost universal use. Long before the organization of this State, the writ of quo warranto had become almost, [***73] if not quite, obsolete; and when our Constitution was adopted, proceedings on information in the nature of quo warranto were well understood by the bench and bar; and the jurisdiction conferred by said constitutional provision has been construed to mean and include jurisdiction of an information in the nature of quo warranto. [State ex rel. v. Stewart, 32 Mo. 379, State ex rel. v. Vail, 53 Mo. 97.]

In the discussion of this question, in the case of State ex inf. v. Equitable Loan & Inv. Co., 142 Mo. 325, this court, speaking through that great jurist, Sherwood, J., said, I. c. 335-337:

"At common law, 'the old writ of quo warranto is a civil writ, at the suit of the crown; it is not a criminal prosecution. . . This was the true old way of inquiring of usurpations upon the crown, by holding fairs or markets, viz: by writs of quo warranto. Then informations in the nature of a quo warranto came into use and supplied their place.' These observations fell from Mr. Justice Wilmot in Rex v. Marsden, 3 Burr. 1817, in the year 1765. [See High, Ex. Leg. Rem., sec. 603.] In Blackstone, written in 1758, some seven years before the last-mentioned period, it [***74] is asserted that the proceeding by quo warranto 'is [*346] properly a criminal method of prosecution.' [Cooley's Black., book 5, ch. 17, p. 262.] [**1008] But HN21[↑] whatever the origin of the writ, whether civil or criminal, it is certain now at the present time and for a long period anterior to this, it has been and is but a civil suit. There is a distinction, of course, to be taken, a distinction pointed out by Scott, J., in State v. Ins. Co., 8 Mo. 330, between a writ of quo warranto and an information in the nature of a quo warranto, but while this is true, yet it is also true, even in Blackstone's time, the issuance of the writ itself, owing to its cumbersome length, had long fallen into disuse, which resulted in the modern substitutionary and more speedy method of the filing of ex-officio informations by the Attorney-General. [Cooley's Black., book 3, chap. 17, p. 262.]

"Our Constitution provides, in the third section of its sixth article, that this court 'shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, quo warranto, certiorari and other original remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same.' Inasmuch as the issuance of a writ of quo warranto [***75] had not occurred in England for centuries; inasmuch as courts, lawers and text-writers had been accustomed for hundreds of years to use the expression 'writ of quo warranto' as the legal equivalent and synonym of 'information in the nature of quo warranto', it will be presumed that the framers of our Constitution were not unmindful or ignorant of such a common form of expression and the meaning which it bore, and, therefore, when they used the words 'writ of quo warranto' they intended thereby only to convey in abbreviated form the meaning that phrase had for so long a period and so continuously been employed to convey, to-wit, 'informations in the nature,' etc.

"Since writing the above it has been found that in other States possessing organic laws like our own, similar conclusions have been reached. [State v. Railroad, 34 Wis. 197, and cases cited; State v. Gleason, 1\*347 12 Fla. 190, and cases cited; High's Ex. Leg. Rem., secs. 610, 611.]"

Continuing, in the discussion of the proposition as to whether or not an information in the nature of a quo warranto could be sustained against a corporation for misuse and abuse of its franchise by reason of its failure [***76] to comply with a statute, when the Legislature had prescribed certain penalties to be imposed in other proceedings for such violation, he said:

"And HN22[↑] the jurisdiction of this court in this regard being conferred by the Constitution, it is beyond the power of the Legislature to take it away, and it will not be intended that a legislative enactment was designed to take such jurisdiction away, although such enactment should confer another and distinct remedy upon some inferior court or board. [State ex rel. v. Allen, 5 Kan. 213; State ex rel. v. Messmore, 14 Wis. 115; Kane v. People ex rel., 4 Neb. 509; 19 Am. and Eng. Ency. Law, 664; People ex rel. v. Bristol Co., 23 Wend. 222; People v. Hillsdale Turnp. Co., 1b. 254; State ex rel. v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71; High, Ex. Leg. Rem., sec. 615; 2 Spelling, Ex. Rlf., secs. 1772, 1873.] In consequence of this well-recognized principle, sections 7 and 8 of the Laws of 1895, pages 31 and 32 in relation to the duties of the supervisor of building and loan associations, to institute proceedings in the circuit court against a delinquent building and loan association, and that such proceeding shall be conducted by the Attorney-General, cannot abate [***77] the jurisdiction conferred on this court by the Constitution nor deprive the Attorney-General of his common law and inherent powers to file ex-officio informations, as in the present instance."

The statutes under which the respondent in the case just mentioned was organized and doing business imposed upon it certain penalties for violating such statutes; and also provided that if any such company should violate the provisions of its charter [*348] or laws of the State, the supervisor of building and loan associations "shall institute proceedings in the circuit court of the city or county in which such association has, or had, its principal office, to enjoin or restrain such association from the further prosecution of its business, either temporarily or perpetually, or for such injunction and dissolution of such association and the settling and winding up of its affairs, or for any and all of said remedies combined, as the supervisor may deem necessary." [R. S. 1899, secs. 1385, 1392, and 1393.]

It is thus seen that those sections of the statutes are just as full and explicit, in prescribing penalties, forfeitures and remedies for their violation and in designating the [***78] court in which those penalties and forfeitures are to be imposed and adjudged, as are the anti-trust laws now under consideration. But, notwithstanding those ample statutory provisions, this court, in that case, held that an information in the nature of quo warranto would lie to oust the respondent therein of its charter rights for violating its charter powers. It was also held therein that this court derived its jurisdiction from the Constitution, and that even though the Legislature had attempted to deprive it of that jurisdiction, by express enactment, it could not have done so, for the reason that such a statute would be unconstitutional and void.

Mr. High, in his consideration of this subject, uses the following language: "A corporate franchise is a species of incorporeal hereditament, in the nature of a special privilege or immunity, proceeding from the sovereign power and subsisting in the hands of a body politic, owing its origin either to an express grant, or to prescription which presupposes a grant. It follows, therefore, that the sovereign power has the right at all times to inquire into the method of user of such franchise, or the title by which it is held, and to [***79] declare a forfeiture for misuser [**1009] or non-user, [*349] if sufficient cause appears, or to render judgment of ouster if the parties assuming to exercise the franchise have no title thereto." [High, Ex. Leg. Rem., sec. 648.]

The same proposition is announced by Clark and Marshall in their work on Private Corporations, vol. 2, sec. 314b, in the following language: "As a general rule, however, HN23↑ the charter of a private corporation will be forfeited, in proper proceedings by the State, for any wilful or fraudulent misuser or abuse of its franchise which injures or menaces the interests or welfare of the State or of the community in which it transacts business, whether the misuser or abuse consists in the exercise of a franchise or power not conferred upon the corporation by its charter, or in the violations of prohibitions in its charter, or in violations of prohibitions in general laws to which it is subject, or in the violation of established principles based upon the ground of public policy."

And in State ex rel. v. Gas Co., 153 Ind. 483, 53 N.E. 1089, I. c. 486, 487, and 489, the right of the State to a forfeiture on account of the participation in a combination in [***80] restraint of trade, is announced in the following language:

"Where, however, the facts disclose that a corporation has failed in the discharge of its corporate duties by uniting with others in carrying out an agreement, the performance of which is detrimental or injurious to the public, it thereby may be said to offend against the law of its creation, and consequently forfeits its right longer to exercise its franchises, and is subject to a judgment of ouster. . . .

"HN24↑ Corporations are recognized as creatures of the law and they certainly owe obedience thereto, and when they fail to perform duties which they were created to discharge, and in which the public have an interest, or where they do unauthorized or forbidden acts, the State unquestionably has the right, and it is its duty, [*350] to object, and it may interpose by information, and wrest from the offending corporations its franchises. [Beach, Pr. Corp., secs. 840 and 841; Cook on Stock and Corp. Law, sec. 635; People ex rel. v. Dashaway Assn., 84 Cal. 114, 24 P. 277.] . . .

"The authorities affirm, as a general rule, that, if the act complained of, by its results, will restrict or stifle competition, the law will [***81] regard such act as incompatible with public policy, without any proof of evil intent on the part of the actor or actual injury to the public. The inquiry is not as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public; it is sufficient to know that the inevitable tendency of the act is injurious to the public. [Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666; Swan v. Chorpenning, 20 Cal. 182; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137, 30 N.E. 279; Gibbs v. Smith, 115 Mass. 592; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 43 N.W. 1102; Pacific Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 27 P. 36; Beach on Monop. and Ind. Trusts, sec. 82.]"

In the case of State ex inf. v. Delmar Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 92 S.W. 185, 98 S.W. 539, this same question came before this court. In that case a forfeiture of the charter was asked by the Attorney-General, because the club had so conducted its affairs as to violate the criminal laws of the State against book-making and pool-selling. In that case, as in the case at bar, counsel for respondent contended that in view of the fact that the statutes prescribed penalties for their violation, that constituted the sole remedy for their redress, or that there must be a conviction [***82] under the statute for its violation before a judgment of forfeiture could be declared against the corporation. In the discussion of that case this court said, l. c. 50, 51 and 55:

"It is apparent that this decision is not an authority for the contention that a corporation is not subject to an action of quo warranto to oust it of the franchises conferred upon it for a misuse or perversion of them, or that a corporation is exempt from the consequences [*351] of unlawful or wrongful acts committed by its agents in pursuance of the authority derived from its charter. The information charges that respondent, 'acting through its officers, agents, employees and representatives in charge of its business,' engaged in the acts of misuser charged against it in the information. It will thus be seen that the unlawful act charged is not against the officers, agents, employees and representatives of the corporation, but against the corporation itself. There can be no doubt that HN25 [↑] a corporation may be proceeded against by quo warranto for a misuse or perversion of the franchises conferred upon it by the State, notwithstanding its officers and agents may at the same time be amenable to [***83] the criminal law for offense committed by them in the perversion of such franchises. If a corporation, through its servants and agents, may be guilty of such abuses of its franchises as will subject it to ouster by quo warranto, we can conceive of no reason why such servants and agents, if the acts and abuses committed by them be in violation of the criminal statutes, may not at the same time be prosecuted by indictment or information. The one is not a bar to the other proceeding. Nor are we prepared to give assent to the contention that the defendant corporation could not be held to answer for such wrongful acts until its agents, guilty of the criminal offense, be tried and convicted.

"It is argued by defendant that forfeiture will not lie for an illegal act committed by a corporation. It is true that not for every illegal act will the charter of a corporation be forfeited; but the charter of the defendant is a contract with the State that it will use the franchise therein granted; that it will not misuse or pervert those franchises, and that it will not engage in the doing or carrying on any business which is [**1010] unlawful or immoral. . . .

"It is alleged in the information [***84] and admitted by the demurrer that during the time indicated defendant [*352] sold pools to and registered bets with minors, which was a violation of law, it having no authority to do so. To make and sell pools and book-bets to minors is expressly prohibited by statute, and any person doing so may be punished as for a misdemeanor. [Sec. 2193, R. S. 1899.] So that defendant was without authority from any source to sell pools to or register bets with minors, and in doing so it was exercising a power which it did not possess, the tendency of which was immoral and to encourage minors in dissipation and vicious habits. Defendant now contends that the portion of the petition which relates to such sales does not state violations of law, because it is not alleged that the respondent knew at the time that such persons were in fact minors. The statute is an absolute inhibition against selling pools or book-bets to minors, and it was entirely unnecessary that the petition should allege that such sales were made to minors, knowing such persons to be minors. It was the defendant's duty to know when sales were made that they were not made in violation of law."

So in the case of [Terrett \[\*\*\*85\] v. Taylor, 9 Cranch 43, 3 L. Ed. 650](#), Mr. Justice Story said: "HN26 [↑] A private corporation created by the Legislature may lose its franchises by a misuser or nonuser of them; and they may be resumed by the government under a judicial judgment upon quo warranto to ascertain and enforce the forfeiture. This is the common law of the land, and is a tacit condition annexed to the creation of every such corporation."

To the same effect are: High on Ex. Leg. Rem., secs. 648 and 649; 2 Spelling on Injunctions and other Ex. Rem., secs. 1812 to 1815; People v. Dispensary Co., 7 Lans. (N.Y.) 304; Bank v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 267; 5 Thompson on Corps., pp. 6615-16; 10 Cyc. p. 1281; Angell and Ames on Corps., sec. 774.

It is thus seen that a corporation can so offend against the laws of the State as to justify the Attorney-General [*353] in proceeding against it by information in the nature of quo warranto to forfeit its corporate franchise; and those offenses may be against the common law as well as against the statute laws of the State.

And it is wholly immaterial, and the corporation cannot justify or defend its conduct in that regard by a plea, that such conduct was a violation [***86] of the criminal laws of the State, by which it and its officers and agents are rendered amenable to the penalties and punishments thereof.

In other words, HN27↑ the laws of the State authorize and direct the Attorney-General to institute civil proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto against any corporation to annul its charter and forfeit its franchises whenever it has by misuser, nonuser or usurpation of power so conducted itself as to violate the laws of its being or the criminal laws of the State. If, upon trial, the corporation is found guilty, a decree of forfeiture must go, and the court has the power, in addition, to impose penalties for such violations of the laws as it may deem proper. This, however, does not proceed upon the theory that the corporation has been guilty of a crime and that it is being punished therefor; but upon the idea that there is an implied or tacit agreement on the part of every corporation, by accepting its charter and corporate franchises, that it will perform its obligations and discharge all its duties to the public, and that by failing to do so it commits an act of forfeiture which may be enforced by the State in the manner before \*\*\*87 suggested. State ex inf. v. [Delmar Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 92 S.W. 185, 98 S.W. 539.]

In addition thereto the Legislature has the unquestionable power and authority to declare the acts which will work a forfeiture of the charter shall also constitute a crime, and subject the corporation and its agents and servants to punishment under the criminal laws of the State. [Stockwell v. United States, 80 U.S. 531, 13 Wall. 531, 20 L. Ed. 491; [\[\*354\] Waters-Pierce Oil Company v. State of Texas \(Texas Court of Civil Appeals\), 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 106 S.W. 918](#); State ex inf. v. Delmar Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34 to 55, 92 S.W. 185, 98 S.W. 539.]

It must, therefore, follow from what has been said, that this is not a criminal prosecution as contended for by respondents; nor is the procedure provided for in section 8971, Revised Statutes 1899, the exclusive remedy available to the State to correct abuses and usurpation of powers by corporations doing business in this State.

We are, therefore, clearly of the opinion that this court has jurisdiction over the cause, and to hear and determine the same.

II.

It is insisted by the informant that a violation of section 8978 by a corporation \*\*\*88 constitutes a misuse, abuse or usurpation of franchises, notwithstanding the fact that the law fixes penalties and provides a mode of procedure for such violation.

This proposition is closely related in some respects to the one disposed of in paragraph one of this opinion, and much of what was there said applies with equal force in support of the proposition now in hand, especially that portion holding a corporation will forfeit its franchises by a continuous violation of any of the laws of the State.

But, independent of that holding, it is also clear from reading articles 1 and 2 of chapter 143, Revised Statutes 1899, together, that it was the intention of the Legislature to have the franchises of all corporations declared forfeited if they should violate either or both of said articles.

This court, in the case of Sales v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 166 Mo. 671, 66 S.W. 979 and 678, held, and quoted with approval the following language from Mr. Sutherland:

[\[\*355\] "HN28](#)↑ 'All consistent statutes relating to the same subject, and hence briefly called statutes in pari materia, are treated prospectively and [\[\*\*1011\]](#) construed together as though they constituted one act. [\[\*\*\*89\]](#) This is true whether the acts relating to the same subject were passed at different dates, separated by long or short intervals, at the same session or on the same day.' [Sutherland, Stat. Construct., sec. 283.]

"And 'A statute must be construed with reference to the system of which it forms a part. And statutes on cognate subjects may be referred to though not strictly in pari materia.' [Id., sec. 284.]

"Further on, the learned author discussing and discoursing upon the same subject, says: HN29↑ 'Where enactments separately made are read in pari materia, they are treated as having formed, in the minds of the enacting body, parts of a connected whole, though considered by such a body at different dates, and under distinct and varied aspects of the common subject. Such a principle is in harmony with the actual practice of legislative bodies, and is essential to give unity to the laws, and connect them in a symmetrical system. Such statutes are taken together and construed as one system, and the object is to carry into effect the intention. It is to be inferred that a code of statutes relating to one subject was governed by one spirit and policy, and was intended to be consistent [***90] and harmonious in its several parts and provisions. For the purpose of learning the intention, all statutes relating to the same subject are to be compared, and so far as still in force brought into harmony, if possible, by interpretation, though they may not refer to each other even after some of them have expired or been repealed.' [Ib., sec. 288.]"

This same canon of construction was approved and adopted by this court, In Banc, in the case of State ex rel. v. Patterson, 207 Mo. 129, 105 S.W. 1048, l. c. 143.

[*356] In Dowdy v. Wamble, 110 Mo. 280, 19 S.W. 489, it was said: "HN30 There are few guides to construction more useful than that which directs attention to the prior condition of the law to aid in determining the full legislative meaning of any statutory change thereof."

In Gabriel v. Mullen, 111 Mo. 110, 19 S.W. 1099, it was said: "In construing any statute it is proper and often useful to consider the state of the law existing at its enactment as casting light on the intended scope of the change made by it."

In the case of Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 274, it was said by Elliott, J.: "HN31 A statute is not to be construed as if it stood solitary and alone, complete [***91] and perfect in itself, and isolated from all other laws. It is not to be expected that a statute which takes its place in a general system of jurisprudence shall be so perfect as to require no support from the rules and statutes of the system of which it becomes a part, or so clear in all its terms as to furnish in itself all the light needed for its construction. It is proper to look at other statutes, to the rules of the common law, to the source from which the statute was derived, to the general principles of equity, to the object of the statute, and to the condition of affairs existing when the statute was adopted [Citing authorities.] As it was said in, . . . 'Construction has ever been a potent agency in harmonizing the operation of statutes, with equity and justice.' HN32 Statutes are to be so construed as to make the law an uniform system, not a collection of divers and disjointed fragments. When this principle of construction is adopted, 'an enactment of today had the benefit of judicial renderings extending back through centuries of past litigation.' [Bishop, Written Laws, sec. 242b.] 'A statute,' says the author just referred to, 'must be construed equally by itself and [***92] by the rest of the law. The mind of the interpreter, if narrow, will stumble.' 'The complete doctrine, resulting from a bringing together of its parts, is, that [*357] all laws, written and unwritten, of whatever sorts and at whatever different dates established, are to be construed together, contracting, expanding, limiting, and extending one another into one system of jurisprudence, as nearly harmonious and rounded as it can be made without violating unyielding written or unwritten terms.' [Bishop, Written Laws, secs. 113a, 86.]"

If we apply this rule of statutory construction to said articles one and two, then the legislative intent regarding this matter is made perfectly clear. Those two articles are two of the four articles which constitute chapter 143, Revised Statutes 1899, and the title is, "Pools, Trusts and Conspiracies," and the respective title of each article is as follows:

- I. "Pools, Trusts and Conspiracies."
- II. "Agreements to Regulate Prices and Limit Trade."
- III. "The Testimony in Proceedings Against Trusts, etc."
- IV. "Taking Testimony Before Institution of Proceedings."

All of these articles are germane to the title of said chapter 143, and each and [***93] every word, line and section thereof are directed against the formation and maintenance of pools and trusts and providing a mode for their destruction.

Section 8965 is intended to prohibit combinations to regulate or fix prices and to maintain them when so fixed; while section 8966 prohibits combinations to lessen competition by dealing in one article under an agreement that no competing article shall be dealt in.

Section 8971 prescribes a mode by which corporations created or doing business in this State shall forfeit their charters and licenses to do business herein by violating any of the provisions thereof, and is substantially as follows:

[*358] "Section 8971. Any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of this State, which shall violate any of the provisions of this article, shall thereby forfeit its corporate rights and franchises; and its corporate existence shall, upon proper proof being [**1012] made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State, be by the court declared forfeited, void and of non-effect and shall thereupon cease and determine; and any corporation created or organized by or under the laws of any other State or country, [***94] which shall violate any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this article, shall thereby forfeit its right and privilege thereafter to do any business in this State, and upon proper proof being made thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction in this State, its right and privilege to do business in this State shall be declared forfeited; and in all proceedings to have such forfeiture declared, proof that any person who has been acting as agent of such foreign corporation in transacting its business in this State has been, while acting as such agent, and in the name, behalf or interest of such foreign corporation, violating any provision of the preceding sections of this article, shall be received as prima-facie proof of the act of the corporation itself; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court to certify the decree thereof to the Secretary of State, and if it be an insurance company, also to the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, who shall take notice and be governed thereby as to the corporate powers and rights of said corporation."

And section 8978 declares every pool, trust and agreement made and entered into to fix and maintain prices to be illegal, [***95] and is substantially as follows:

"Section 8978. Every pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, understanding or conspiracy entered into, or created, or organized by any . . . person or persons to regulate, control or fix the price of any article or articles of manufacture, merchandise, [*359] commodity, etc., or to maintain said price or prices when so regulated, determined or fixed, and all agreements, combinations, confederations, conspiracies or pools made, created, entered into or organized by any . . . person to fix the amount or limit the quantity of any article of any kind whatsoever, or of any article of manufacture, commodity, etc., are hereby declared illegal. If any two or more persons who are engaged in buying or selling any articles of commerce, merchandise, commodity, etc., shall enter into any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing; or to limit competition in such trade, by refusing to buy from or sell to any other person or persons any such article or thing aforesaid, for the reason that such person or persons is not a member of or a party to such pool, [***96] trust, combination, confederation, association or understanding, shall be guilty of a violation of this article."

If, according to the rule of construction hereinbefore quoted, section 8971 is to be "treated prospectively" and construed together with section 8978, "as one act," then we must read the former section into the latter, and by so doing we have express statutory authority for holding that respondents would be guilty of misuse, abuse and usurpation of power, by entering into agreements to regulate prices, control or limit trade, as denounced by section 8978.

This construction is in harmony with a long and unbroken line of decisions in this and other States. [State ex rel. v. Patterson, supra.]

The respondents contend that the statutes under consideration are highly penal, and should for that reason be strictly construed, and that the contention of the informant should not be concurred in by the court; and they cite many authorities in support of their contention. While it is true these sections of the statute provide for forfeitures of charters and the revocation [*360] of licenses of corporations to do business in this State, yet they are not in derogation of [***97] the common law, as the authorities heretofore cited firmly establish, but are intended to be in aid of and supplementary thereto, highly salutary and remedial in their purpose; and HN33 the mere fact that heavy losses may be sustained by respondents in consequence of an adjudication of ouster should not influence or deter the court from declaring the intention of the Legislature as contained in those articles. [State v. Williams, 8 Tex. 255; In re Greene, 52 F. 104; State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. 124, 91 S.W. 1062; Railroad v.

Commonwealth, 35 So. 129; United States v. Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540; Heim Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 64, 71 S.W. 691; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679, 24 S. Ct. 436.]

This court and many others have held that HN34[<sup>1</sup>] remedial and salutary statutes, though in derogation of the common law, should be construed and enforced according to the plain intention of the Legislature, although heavy damages were prescribed and penalties imposed for their violation. [Yall v. Snow, 201 Mo. 511, 100 S.W. 1, and cases cited; Johnson v. Snow, 201 Mo. 450, 100 S.W. 5.]

And as said [***98] by Graves, J., in the Delmar Jockey Club case, supra, l. c. 70: "These proceedings are no longer recognized as criminal proceedings and have not been so recognized since the early days of the common law, but we have continually imposed what are called 'fines,' a term no doubt coming down from the time when the proceeding was looked upon as a criminal proceeding. The implied contract with the State, when the charter was given respondent, was that it would exercise and use the granted rights; that it would use none other, or, stated otherwise, that it would not usurp other rights; that it would rightfully use the powers granted, and not misuse them. A willful failure of either of these covenants with the State will authorize [**1013] a forfeiture, and why not a fine? We forfeit [*361] for nonuser, and why? Because there has been failure to perform the obligations to the State; because there has been a violation of the contract with the State. Misuser is likewise a violation of the implied agreement with the State. So is usurpation. Each are but violations of the implied contract with the State, and for these violations we declare forfeitures. Why not fix penalties and punishments [***99] in the one as in the other? The gist of each in quo warranto is the willful violation of the rights of the State under the implied contract, and not the violation of some criminal law, for we do not try criminal cases and affix criminal punishments in quo warranto proceedings. The violation of a corporation's contract with the State by misuser or usurpation may be evidenced by the fact of the violation of some statute, criminal in character, but in this kind of proceeding we try the right of the corporation to further hold its franchises, not the question of finding its guilt or innocence under the statute and fixing punishment permitted by the statute. It is the only way the State has of preventing the abuse of the confidences it has reposed in these corporate creatures which are of its own making. This abuse may be by nonuser, misuser, or usurpation, but, in our judgment, the State has the same rights in each event, both as to the forfeiture and the fine." [Also see State ex inf. v. Equitable Loan & Inv. Assn., 142 Mo. 325; State ex inf. v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State of Texas (Texas Civ. App.), 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 106 [**100] S.W. 918; Stockwell v. United States, 80 U.S. 531, 13 Wall. 531, 20 L. Ed. 491.]

The Texas case just cited was predicated upon statutory provisions very similar to the statutes of this State regarding pools, trusts and combines made in restraint of trade. There, a civil suit was instituted by the State against the Waters-Pierce Company, seeking to recover penalties prescribed for violating the statutes, and also praying for a forfeiture of the company's [*362] license to do business in the State. The defendant there, as in this case, contended that the violation of the statute constituted a crime and that it should be prosecuted therefor under an indictment or information, and that a civil action would not lie against it in the first instance for such violation. The court did not sustain that contention, but, upon the other hand, expressly held that the action was a civil suit, and assessed the penalties at $ 1,625,900, and rendered a judgment revoking defendant's license to do business in the State, as prayed.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that this is a civil suit and not a criminal proceeding, and that full force and effect should be given to the statutes and not emasculated [***101] by technical constructions placed upon them by the courts.

III.

Respondents contend that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant in this cause.

Their position is, that one corporation cannot be joined with another when charged in quo warranto proceedings with abuse or usurpation of corporate rights, for the reason that such a charge relates to the individual contract between it and the State.

That is no longer an open or debatable question in this State. It has been fully and firmly determined against respondents' contention in the following cases: State ex inf. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595; State ex inf. v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645; State ex inf. v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737.

IV.

The next contention of respondents is, that the information does not charge them with forming a combination to maintain prices of their commodities, but only charges them with combining to regulate, control and fix prices.

[*363] If we correctly understand respondents, their position is, that there is a difference between a combination to maintain prices and a combination to fix and control prices. They seem to [***102] concede the former is within the inhibition of the statute, and that such a combination would be unlawful, but deny that the latter is within its purview, and, therefore, such a combination is not prohibited by sections 8965 nor 8966.

While it is true neither of those sections prohibits combinations to fix, regulate or control prices, yet section 8978 does in express terms prohibit all such combinations and agreements; and, if we are correct in the conclusions reached in paragraph two of this opinion, wherein we held that all of these statutes must be construed together, as one act, then it is wholly immaterial whether the inhibition mentioned is contained in sections 8965, 8966 or in 8978. If contained in any one of the three, that would be sufficient; and if violated by the respondents, they would be subject to the forfeitures therein prescribed. This is so plainly the meaning of the statutes, it is not deemed necessary to review the number of authorities cited by opposing counsel in support of their respective positions.

The Legislature was dealing with a grave question of great importance, one that had challenged the minds of the ablest and best men of the country, both in and [***103] out of legislative halls, and one which affected the prosperity and welfare of the entire people; and, if unrestrained, might have threatened the very foundations of our form of government. With that aspect of the question before the minds of the law-makers, it is not to be presumed, in the absence of express legislation to the contrary, that they intended to enact laws which mean and are susceptible of the refined and technical construction which has been placed upon them by the able and learned counsel for respondents. [**1014] No fair-minded, unbiased man can read chapter 143 of Revised Statutes of 1899, without logically coming to [*364] the conclusion that it was the intention of the Legislature to smite with a mail hand all corporations and individuals doing business in this State which persistently or knowingly violated any of the provisions thereof; and pointed out to the courts in no uncertain terms what to do in case they found any such corporation or persons offending against the law.

It is also contended by counsel for respondents that the allegations of the information of the existence of the combination complained of are not sufficient to constitute a cause [***104] of action against them. If we correctly understand counsel, their contention is that the information in this case should be drawn with the same rules of strictness which are applicable to criminal indictments and informations. In other words, they contend that the information should state the facts which constitute the pool, trust or combination, and not make the charge in general terms.

It is the formation of and entering into the pool, trust or combination that constitutes the usurpation of corporate powers; and in such cases, according to the text-writers and adjudications, all that is necessary to be stated in the information is a general allegation of the facts constituting the misuser, non-user or usurpation.

When the State challenges the authority of a corporation to do certain things, it must either deny the charge, or, if it is exercising the authority complained of, then it must justify its conduct by showing that it possesses that power and authority under its charter; and the State is not required to allege and prove the facts in detail constituting the mode or manner in which it is violating the law and usurping powers not granted to it by its charter.

In the case of [***105] State ex inf. v. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co., 206 Mo. l. c. 40, 103 S.W. 936, this court said:

"In overruling the demurrers in these cases the court does not decide any of the questions touching [*365] the merits, which were discussed in the oral arguments. The only point decided is that these informations are sufficient to require the defendant to answer the charges made by the Attorney-General against them, either by specifically denying the charge or stating the facts which in the opinion of the defendants justify them in doing what they are charged with doing.

"The pleadings in a proceeding of this nature are not governed by the rules of pleading stated in the Code of Civil Procedure; the only provision of the code that is extended to a proceeding in quo warranto is contained in section 675, Revised Statutes 1899, relating to amendments.

"HN35↑ An information in the nature of quo warranto filed by the Attorney-General is not of the character of a petition in an ordinary case either in law or equity; it is the official call of the Law Officer of the State on the corporation or individual to show by what authority it or he is assuming to exercise a particular franchise. The rules [***106] of pleading in such case are thus stated in 17 Ency. Pl. and Pr., 457-8: 'The office of an information in the nature of a quo warranto is not to tender an issue of fact, but simply to call upon the defendant in general terms to show by what warrant or charter the privilege, franchise, or office is held or exercised. Where the State calls upon one to show cause by what authority he exercises a corporate franchise or public office, the allegation by the Attorney-General of intrusion or usurpation may be of the most general character, while the defendant is required to set forth particularly the grounds of his claim and the continued exercise of his right, except where by statute the pleadings are more nearly assimilated to those in other civil actions.' In this State we have no such statute. The same author, at page 467, says: HN36↑ 'When one is called upon by the State to show warrant or authority for the exercise of a franchise or office pertaining [*366] to the State, the defendant must, by his plea, answer or return, disclaim all right to the franchise and deny its usurpation, or allege facts which, if true, will invest him with the legal title of pleading the charter or legislative [***107] grant of the franchise sought to be forfeited or seized, or by pleading directly and positively all the facts necessary to establish the title to the office which the defendant is called upon to justify; and in the absence of such an answer the State will be entitled to a judgment of ouster.' There is no such plea as a general denial in a case of this kind.

"If these defendants are not doing what the Law Officer of the State, in a general way, charges them with doing, let them specifically deny the charge; if they are doing it or doing something like it and think they are justified in so doing, let them specifically state it in their answers.

"These demurrs go mainly on the idea that the informations are not sufficiently specific in detailing the facts which constitute the charge of usurpation; that idea is out of place in this kind of proceeding; the State calls on these corporations to answer, and the duty of pleading specifically the facts rests on them.

"In these cases the Attorney-General has (doubtless induced by a practice heretofore tolerated), made more statements of facts than necessary, but they are treated as surplusage." [2 Spelling on Extra Legal Rem., secs. 1851, [***108] 1853, 1855; People ex rel. v. Railroad, 12 Mich. 389; 17 Ency. Pl. and Pr., pp. 457, 458; Commonwealth v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 189; State v. Parker, 43 N.H. 83; State ex inf. v. Delmar Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 92 S.W. 185, 98 S.W. 539; United States v. Gardner, 42 F. 829; Landringham [**1015] v. State, 49 Ind. 186; Hazen v. Commonwealth, 23 Pa. 355; Cole v. People, 84 Ill. 216.]

And especially is this rule applicable in this State when such proceedings are civil in their nature; and [*367] which are not required to be stated with the same technical strictness with which crimes must be charged. [State ex inf. v. Equitable Loan & Inv. Co., 142 Mo. 325; State ex inf. v. Delmar Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 92 S.W. 185, 98 S.W. 539.] But waiving that point for the present and conceding that this proceeding is in the nature of a criminal prosecution, and that the pleader should be held to the same strict rules of pleading as is required in charging a criminal conspiracy, still we are of the opinion that the information states a good cause of action, for the reason that acts with which the respondents are charged are unlawful.

In such cases the rule is, that, "HN37↑ If the act with [***109] which the conspirators combine to perform is unlawful, it is unnecessary to set out in the indictment the means employed in accomplishing it. But if the end in view is lawful or indifferent, and the conspiracy only becomes criminal by reason of the unlawful means whereby it is to be accomplished, it becomes necessary to show the criminality by setting out such unlawful means." [4 Ency. Pl. and Pr., pp. 713, 714, 716, 717; Coal Co. v. People, 214 Ill. 421, 73 N.E. 770.]

Besides this, there are no specific objections made to the sufficiency of the information; all of them are general in their character, and leave the court in the dark to conjecture as to what are the infirmities. But after a careful reading and re-reading the information, and testing its sufficiency by all known rules of pleading, we have been unable to detect any defect in any of its charging parts.

The sufficiency of the information was sustained when the case was here before, 194 Mo. 130, and we have no reasons to change our minds upon the question.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the information states a good cause of action.

[*368] V.

The constitutionality of the statutes upon which this proceeding [***110] is predicated is challenged by counsel for respondents for several reasons, which will now receive consideration.

(a) Their position is that those sections are in violation of the first section of the fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that while they denounce the same acts, whether committed by individuals or individuals and corporations, they impose upon the latter a greater and different punishment from that imposed upon individuals.

In one sense that may be true, but it is not true in a legal sense.

HN38 [↑] A corporation is a legal fiction -- a creature of the law. It accepts its charter and corporate franchises with a tacit agreement or understanding that it will exercise the powers granted to it by the State, and none other; and that if it misuses those powers, or usurps powers not so granted, it will surrender or forfeit its charter, with all corporate franchises. That the State has the power to enforce this agreement, or law of forfeiture, is not questioned by respondents, but they insist that it is a different and greater punishment than is imposed upon an individual for the commission of the same offense. In answer to that, it may be said that an [***111] individual is a natural person, created by his Maker, and not by law, and, therefore, has no franchises to exercise or to forfeit, consequently the same punishment, if you so term it, could not, in the very nature of things, be measured out to the individual which should be measured unto a corporation.

While it is true, to forfeit the charter of a corporation for usurpation of power is equivalent to taking its life, as it were; but we suppose it will not be seriously argued that, because the statute does not demand the life of the individual, as it does that of the corporation, [*369] as a punishment for his violation of the law, the law should and must be declared unconstitutional and void upon that ground. And, upon the other hand, where a statute denounces certain acts, whether committed by individuals or corporations, or both, it should not be declared unconstitutional because it provides for imprisonment of the former and a fine, or forfeiture of the latter's charter, as punishments for their violation of the statute. But if the contention of counsel for respondents is sound, then any individual could form an unlawful combination in restraint of trade with any corporation, [***112] and when proceeded against for such unlawful conduct either one or both of them could interpose the unconstitutionality of the statute, because the punishment prescribed against each is not the same but different. And we might add that, if their position is tenable, then the Legislature would be powerless to provide for the imprisonment of the one because it could not imprison the other; nor could it provide for the forfeiture of the charter of the corporation, because the individual would have none to forfeit, ergo there is no punishment the Legislature could provide, excepting a fine against each. Such a contention regarding the proposition here involved if followed to its logical conclusion would lead to an absurdity, and, at the same time, shows the unsoundness of respondents' contention.

Nor do said sections of the statute deny respondents' equal protection of the law within the meaning of the fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

HN39 [↑] It is not the object or purpose of that provision of the Constitution to prevent legislation which embraces within its provisions all persons or things which naturally and reasonably belong to the same class and similarly situated and [***113] where the statute must [*370] operate equally and uniformly upon all such persons or things of that class. [Andrus v. Ins. Assn., 168 Mo. 151, 67 S.W. 582; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State of Texas, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 44 S.W. I**1016] 936; Railroad v. Mackey, 127 U.S. 205; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923, 5 S. Ct. 357; Railroad v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 1; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 16 S. Ct. 1138, 41 L. Ed. 256; Railroad v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150.]

The purpose of that provision was to prevent legislation which embraces within its provisions persons or things which affect only a portion of the persons or things which rationally belong to the same class and who are similarly situated. [Railroad v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150.]

Nor do we agree with respondents in their contention that those statutes are violative of that constitutional provision, in that they unjustly discriminate against property by embracing commodities only and not including labor, which, it is contended, may also become the subject of a pool or combination.

While it is true those statutes are limited in their scope and operation to persons and corporations dealing in commodities, [***114] and do not include combinations of persons engaged in labor pursuits, yet it must be borne in mind that the differentiation between labor and property is so great that they do not belong to the same general or natural classification of rights, or things, and have never been so recognized by the common law, or by legislative enactments. They stand upon entirely different footings, and the laws pertaining to the one are entirely different from those pertaining to the other.

Labor has always been considered in the nature of an attribute to man, and partakes more or less of his individuality, and personal liberty, and is inseparable from his person. Labor and labor organizations are controlled and protected by laws enacted to operate largely upon the individuals personally, and not so much as upon the products of their labor, called commodities; [*371] while, upon the other hand, commodities are nothing but property, and have no personal connection with the owner whatever.

Legislation affecting property and property rights will in no manner interfere with the personnel of the owner. But that is not true of laws regarding labor, for the reason that the moment you enact laws affecting [***115] labor, that moment and by that law you affect the personnel of the laborer. I am not speaking of those laws which are enacted to secure the wages due for labor, but I am referring to the laws that are applicable to labor itself; such as those guaranteeing to the person the right to labor, the right to contract to labor, and the right to agree upon prices to be paid therefor, as well as those which prevent involuntary servitude, etc.

This classification of the laws regarding labor and property has always been recognized, by all nations, in all ages; and those laws which apply to the one have never been considered or looked upon as being special and class-legislation, because they do not embrace both.

Mr. Blackstone, in his masterly treatise upon the common law, starts out by classifying the laws into the rights of persons and the rights of things, and then he treats the laws applicable to each class separately. Our laws are in this day based upon that same classification, and this is the first time I have ever heard it contended that the laws enacted for the one class must embrace the other, otherwise the act would be unconstitutional and void.

Respondents have cited no authority [***116] sustaining their contention, and we assume there is none.

In the very nature of things a law could not be enacted which would be equally applicable to persons and things without interfering with the personnel and liberty of the laborer.

The Legislature in enacting these anti-trust laws well knew of this natural classification of commodities [*372] and labor, and enacted laws only embracing the former, which in no manner deprives their owners of any of their legal or personal rights, while if they had also embraced labor combinations, they would have entrenched upon the personal rights of the labor.

While the Legislature might have included labor combinations, yet it did not do so, and the reason, above stated, alone was a sufficient justification for the omission to include labor combinations in the act; to say nothing regarding the general and natural classification of persons and things, which has always been recognized by the law-making powers.

There is nothing new that can be said upon this subject which would throw any additional light upon it. The authorities above cited are but a few of the many which support the conclusions above stated.

These sections of our statutes [***117] embrace all persons and corporations who naturally belong to the same class, and they do not arbitrarily and capriciously, without reason, divide classes or distinguish between classes existing under similar conditions.

(b) The constitutionality of sections 8983 and 8984 is also vigorously assailed by counsel for respondents.

In pursuance of those sections, respondents were required by this court to produce certain books and papers belonging to and in their care and custody, before the Master, to be used as evidence in this proceeding; and the latter provides that if the officers or agents of the corporation do not appear to testify and do not produce the books and papers ordered produced by the court, or by the officer authorized to take the evidence, then it shall be the duty of the court, upon proper motion, to strike out the answer, motion, reply, demurrer or other pleadings of said corporations whose officers or agents are in default, and proceed to render judgment by default against said corporations.

[*373] When the order was made upon said respondents to produce the books and papers, they then assailed the constitutionality of both of these sections of the statutes. [***118] In a very clear and able opinion written by Lamm, J., this [**1017] court ruled against the contentions of respondents as regards section 8983, and held it to be constitutional; but declined to pass upon the constitutionality of section 8984, because it was not properly before the court, because none of the respondents had disobeyed the order of the court. [State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. 124 to 150, 91 S.W. 1062.] We have re-examined the questions there presented and which are renewed here. In so far as what is there said regarding section 8983, it is sufficient to say that we are perfectly satisfied with the reasoning and conclusions there reached; but the objections urged against section 8984 demand further consideration.

In pursuance to the order above mentioned, the respondents produced the books and papers designated therein, and they were introduced and used as evidence in the case. They now renew their objections to the validity of that section, and say it is violative of both the State and Federal Constitutions, in that they produced the books and papers under the threatened penalty of having a judgment of ouster rendered against them.

Counsel for respondents [***119] have not pointed out or suggested in what manner, nor have we been able to see how, a threatened judgment of ouster could or did in any conceivable way deprive any of the respondents of their property without due process of law, either within or without the meaning of the State and Federal Constitutions. They were clearly served, and were in court, appeared and resisted the right and authority of the court to make the order. This was a "hearing," and due process of law within those constitutional provisions. And if, after such hearing, respondents had seen proper to disobey the order and thereby have [*374] suffered judgment by default to have been rendered against them, that would have been their privilege and fault, and not the fault of the law; and, if upon the other hand, they should obey the order, as they did in this case, then the trial would proceed in due course to final judgment upon the merits, as was done here.

In each case they had a trial according to due process of law, which means according to the laws of the land. [Naylor v. Harrisonville, 207 Mo. 341, 105 S.W. 1074.]

Similar statutes to the one under consideration are in force in this State and apply to [***120] all litigants, and they may thereby be compelled to testify as witnesses before the court or referee, and be required to produce books and papers in their charge or under their control relative to the issues involved, under penalty of having their pleadings stricken out and judgment rendered against them for disobeying any such order of the court. [R. S. 1899, secs. 709, 710, 737, 738, 739 and 740.]

These statutes were first enacted shortly after the organization of the State; and similar statutes exist in almost all the States of the Union, and our attention has not been called to any case which has held any such statute to be unconstitutional.

Independent of what we have here said, the reasons assigned by this court when this case was formerly here for holding section 8983 to be constitutional apply with equal force and logic to section 8984. If the former is valid and authorizes the court to make the order, then it must follow as a necessary corollary that the latter, which empowers the court to enforce its orders by striking out the pleadings, must also be valid. It would be a foolish thing to argue or hold that the court has the authority under the statutes to make the order [***121] and then hold that the court has no authority thereunder to enforce the obedience of such order after it is made. [State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., [\[\*375\]](#) 194 Mo. 124; State ex inf. v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737.]

(c) Respondents' next insistence is, that because they were compelled by the process of the court to produce testimony against themselves, they must be discharged in this proceeding. This contention is untenable.

(1) Section 8989, Revised Statutes 1899, granted immunity to all the witnesses who were produced by respondents and who testified in compliance with the order of the court. No witness can avail himself of section 23 of article 2 of the Constitution of 1875, nor of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, as to giving oral testimony, because said statute grants him immunity from prosecution; nor can he set those constitutional provisions up against an order for the production of books and papers, as the same statute would equally grant him immunity in respect to matters provided thereby. [Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43 to 73, 50 L. Ed. 652, 26 S. Ct. 370.]

(2) Nor was it intended by section 11 of article I [***122] of the Constitution, nor the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, known as the search-and-seizure clauses, to interfere with the power of courts to compel the production upon trial of documentary evidence under a subpoena duces tecum. [Hale v. Henkel, supra, l. c. 73.]

(3) While an individual may lawfully refuse to answer incriminating questions unless protected by an immunity statute, a corporation is a creature of the State, and there is a reserved right in the Legislature to investigate its contracts and find out whether it has exceeded its powers.

There is a distinction between an individual and HN40[↑] a corporation; the latter, being a creature of the State, has no constitutional right to refuse to produce its books and papers in court for examination in the trial of a proceeding by the State against it; nor can the [*376] officer in charge of the corporation charged with a violation of the statutes plead the criminality of [**1018] the corporation as a refusal to produce the books. [Hale v. Henkel, supra, pp. 74 to 76.] The rule above announced has the sanction of the highest court in the land and was applied in a criminal prosecution, and [***123] a fortiori should the same rule apply to a civil proceeding like the case at bar.

(d) It is also contended that these anti-trust statutes violate the provisions of section 8 of article I of the Constitution of the United States, which gives Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign countries and among the several States and Indian tribes.

It was not the intention of the Legislature, by the enactment of those statutes, to interfere with interstate commerce, but the clear intention was to prevent the formation and maintenance of pools, trusts and combinations in restraint of interstate commerce.

HN41[↑] The Legislature has no power or authority to prevent respondents from carrying on interstate trade, for the reason that power is vested in and rests with Congress; but it does possess the power to authorize the courts to forfeit the charters of all corporations organized and existing under the laws of this State for the usurpation of powers not granted to them, or for misuser or nonuser of those granted; and it is wholly immaterial whether those corporations are engaged in interstate commerce or not.

HN42[↑] The Legislature also possesses the undoubted authority to revoke or forfeit [***124] the license issued to any foreign corporation authorizing it to do an interstate business in this State. The revocation of such a license in no manner interferes with interstate commerce. The authority to conduct such business is obtained under the acts of Congress and not by virtue of the laws of the State. A license from the State can neither confer nor take away the authority or right of [*377] a foreign corporation to carry on interstate commerce; and, that being true, we are unable to see in what possible manner the forfeiture of such a license, that is, a license which only authorizes a foreign corporation to do an interstate business, can possibly offend against section 8 of article I of the Federal Constitution, which only applies to interstate commerce.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that this contention of respondents is not well founded.

(e) Nor are we able to concur with the learned counsel for respondents in their contention that sections 8965, 8966, 8967, 8971, 8972 and 8978, Revised Statutes 1899, are void for the reason that they violate section 10 of article I of the Constitution of the United States which provides that no State shall enact any law which [***125] will impair the obligations of a contract.

Clearly HN43[<sup>1</sup>] that section of the Constitution has no application to a license issued by the State to a foreign corporation to do business herein, for the reason that when it accepted the license, it impliedly, at least, agreed to transact such business under and in obedience to the laws of this State in the same manner as a domestic corporation should transact similar business, and that if it violated the laws of the State, then it would thereby forfeit its rights to such license, in the same manner that the domestic corporations would forfeit their charter rights by offending against the laws. [Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U.S. 557, 43 L. Ed. 552, 19 S. Ct. 281; Hooper v. California, 155 U.S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297, 15 S. Ct. 207.]

The mere fact that the licenses granted to the Indiana and Republic Companies were issued prior to the enactment of some or all of those sections does not change the legal aspect of the question, because the enactment of those statutes was but the exercise of the police power of the State, which cannot be contracted away or surrendered by legislation. As shown by the numerous authorities before cited, HN44[<sup>1</sup>] the police [***126] power of the State is an inherent power of sovereignty and cannot [*378] be contracted away. [Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 31 L. Ed. 205, 8 S. Ct. 273.]

(f) It is finally contended by respondents that sections 8965, 8966, 8971 and 8978 are all unconstitutional and void because they contravene section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in this, that they abridge the privileges and rights of respondents to make valid contracts with respect to their business and property.

In support of that contention learned counsel for respondents argue that under that section of the Federal Constitution they had the legal right to make contracts in reasonable restraint of trade, and that the sections of the statute mentioned prohibit the making of all contracts in restraint of trade, those that are reasonable as well as those that are unreasonable and unjust, consequently the statute must fail.

In answer to that contention it may be said that counsel do not correctly state the rule of law regarding such contracts. The universal rule is that HN45[<sup>1</sup>] two or more parties may enter into any lawful contract regarding any matter, and if that otherwise legal contract [***127] only incidentally limits trade or fixes prices, then that legal contract will not be held void on the ground that it incidentally operated in restraint of trade. [Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423, 434, 52 L. Ed. 865, 28 S. Ct. 572; Phillips v. Iola Cement Co., 61 C.C.A. 20; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 60 C.C.A. 299.] But if the primary purpose of the contract was to limit and restrain trade, then the contract would be void at common law, and would not be protected by the constitutional provision mentioned, however slight that interference or restraint might have been.

But even if that was not the common law, yet there is nothing in either the State or Federal Constitution which prevents the enactment of a statute prohibiting the making of all contracts in restraint of trade [**1019] whether reasonable or unreasonable. The Supreme Court of [*379] the United States in discussing that question in the case of Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423, 52 L. Ed. 865, 28 S. Ct. 572, used this language: "And it has been decided that not only unreasonable but all direct restraints of trade are prohibited, the law being thereby distinguished from the [***128] common law." Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. C.P. 735; [Northern Securities Co. v. U. S.,

193 U.S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679, 24 S. Ct. 436; United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271; State ex inf. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595.]

The same is true and may be said of the statutes under consideration. They prohibit the making of all contracts and combinations which have for their object and purpose the restraint of trade or the fixing and maintaining of prices; but those sections in no manner denounce as illegal any contract regarding trade which has for its object a legitimate purpose and which only incidentally stifles trade.

HN46 [↑] While the Fourteenth Amendment prevents illegal infringements upon the liberty of the citizen to contract, and deprive him of his property and impose restraints and burdens upon him without due process of law, yet that amendment has never been held to prevent the Legislature from the exercise of the general police power of the State. This power extends to many subjects, which need not here be enumerated, which affect the general welfare and public interest within the purview of that power. In the absence of such power, the citizen would [***129] have the absolute authority to contract and the power to hold property as he might deem proper; but under that power the State may enact valid laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself and so use his property as not to unnecessarily injure others. And as said by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, "This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas." Chief Justice [*380] Taney in discussing the scope of the police powers of the State, in the License Cases, 5 How. 504, said: "They are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty; . . . that is to say, . . . the power to govern men and things. Under these powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulations become necessary for the public good."

"The State can now, as before, prescribe regulations for the health, good order and safety of society, and adopt such measures as will advance its interests and prosperity." [Railroad v. Beckwith, [***130] 129 U.S. 26; State v. Moore, 104 N.C. 714, 10 S.E. 143.]

The Court of Appeals of New York, in the case of Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N.Y. 509, said: "HN47 [↑] All property is held subject to the power of the State to regulate or control its use, to secure the general safety and the public welfare. 'We think it is a settled principle,' says Chief Justice Shaw, in Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84, 'growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property is held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare.' Judge Redfield, in a passage often cited with approval, speaking of the police power, says: 'By this general police power of the State, persons and property are subject to all kinds of restrictions and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health and prosperity of the State; of the perfect right of the Legislature to do which, no question [***131] ever was, or upon acknowledged general principles can be, made.' [Thorpe v. Railroad, 27 Vt. 140.] [*381] The police power, so called, inheres in every sovereignty and is essential to the maintenance of public order and the preservation of mutual rights from disturbing conflicts."

And as said by the Supreme Court of Texas in the case of Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State of Texas, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 44 S.W. 936 and 12, "HN48 [↑] The State in the exercise of this power in the selection of remedies looking to the suppression of evils harmful to its people, may apply them to the most sacred contracts and to the uses of property of every description, not in the way of an arbitrary spoliation or confiscation under a capricious exercise of the police power, but a useful regulation in the interest of the public welfare. [Cooley, Const. Lim. (6 Ed.), 707-720.] In enumerating the subjects which may be acted upon by the State in the exercise of its police power, Mr. Tiedeman, in his valuable work on Limitations of Police Powers, names combinations in restraint of trade, section 96; and as said in United States v. Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540, 'Manufacturing [***132] or trading companies may also affect prices by joining together in forming a trust or other combination, and by making agreements in restraint of trade and commerce which, when carried out, affect the interests of the public.' This is certainly a just acknowledgment of the power, for there are few acts which individuals may engage in that are more harmful in their effects upon the interests of the people generally than trusts and combinations concerning the commodities useful to mankind. The rights of the individual must yield to the public wants, and his conduct and all property [**1020] held by him is subject to the control of the State, to the end that he shall so demean himself and use his property with as little hurt and injury to the public as possible. 'As said in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, while power does not exist with the whole people to control rights that are purely and exclusively private, government may require each citizen to so [*382] conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another.' [Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 31 L. Ed. 205, 8 S. Ct. 273.]'

The statutes in question are bottomed upon those police [***133] powers which are inherent rights of sovereignty; and in pursuance thereof the Legislature enacted them for the purpose of suppressing the many evils which had grown up under the widespread system of trusts and combinations extending over the entire country, including this State, and to the great injury and detriment of the people.

The necessity and wisdom of such statutes are vouched for by their enactment in almost every State in the Union, as well as by the Congress of the United States, and by the many decisions of the various courts throughout the country sustaining their constitutionality and giving force and efficacy thereto. Such statutes are enacted for the purpose of restraining the unbridled liberty of the citizen in his conduct and use of his property, and no such reasonable restraint imposed by statute has ever been held unconstitutional because it deprived the citizen of his life, liberty or property without due process of law; but, upon the other hand, the courts have uniformly held all such laws to be a wise, just and valid exercise of the police powers of the State.

In the case of Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 31 L. Ed. 205, 8 S. Ct. 273, the Supreme Court of the [***134] United States went so far as to hold a statute of that State valid which deprived the citizen of all rights to manufacture and sell intoxicating liquors in the State. In that case this question was reviewed at great length and discussed with great learning and ability, and it was there held that the statute was a reasonable and a valid exercise of the police power of the State, and that absolute prohibition did not deprive him of his rights without due process of law.HN49[

[*383] Legal regulations and restraints imposed upon the use of property and the authority to contract in reference thereto do not deprive the owner of his property or contract-rights without due process of law. [Railroad v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 1; Railroad v. Humes, 115 U.S. 512; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923, 5 S. Ct. 357; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U.S. 578, 32 L. Ed. 544, 9 S. Ct. 192; Railroad v. Gibbes, 142 U.S. 386; State ex inf. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595; State ex rel. v. Schlitz Brewing Co., 104 Tenn. 715, 59 S.W. 1033.]

It was contended in the case of State ex inf. v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595, that the antitrust law was unconstitutional [***135] because it prohibited "a reasonable adjustment and maintenance of rates of premium to be charged for insurance." The court, after discussing the purpose and object of such legislation, says, I. c. 46-7: "Such laws have not only been adjudged constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, but the principles they announce have been expressly sanctioned by the Supreme Courts of many other States." [Citing cases from most of the States of the Union.] In answer to the contention that such acts restrain the defendant's right of contract, the court said, I. c. 47: "HN50[ There is no such thing in civilized society as the unrestrained power to contract. Every man surrenders some of his individual rights when he associates with or becomes a part of any society or government, and the power of the government to legislate is complete, so that, while according to every man the fullest possible liberty to do what he pleases with his own, he must not interfere with the similar rights of others. This principle underlies and runs through all governments and societies, and it is the corner stone of the police power of the State."

The constitutionality of our anti-trust laws was further recognized [***136] in the Beef Trust case and was expressly affirmed in State ex inf. v. Continental Tobacco Company, 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737. [See also *State ex rel. v. [*384] Brew. Co.*, 104 Tenn. 715; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 44 S.W. 936.]

The construction of such statutes should be made in a liberal spirit. As is said by this court in the case of State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Company, 194 Mo. 124, 91 S.W. 1062: "We feel at least on solid ground on the proposition that statutes leveled against monopolies are buttressed upon the wisdom of the common law, and this court, constrained and enlightened by events of current history, is not required and does not deem itself invited to approach the interpretation of such statutes with a hostile or sour predisposition to drive a coach-and-six through them, but, on the other hand, while sedulously protecting the rights and liberties of the individual from insidious approaches under whatever artful guise, we should at the same time not lose sight of the rights of the community and should endeavor to advance the beneficent purpose underlying such laws ( State ex inf. v. Armour Packing Company, 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645) where [***137] it can be done without doing violence to constitutional provisions."

While there may be some provisions in said articles one and two of chapter 143, which, if considered alone, might lend color and plausibility to respondents' contention, that [**1021] they prohibit the making of certain contracts which are proper; but when all the sections of those articles are read and construed together, then that objection to their validity fades away and there is not a vestige of color remaining upon which to base such a contention.

HN51[] Any strained or extreme construction placed upon a statute might lead to a holding that it was unconstitutional, but no statute should receive such a construction. As is said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 49 L. Ed. 643, 25 S. Ct. 358, I. c. 38-9, in discussing a similar question: "Extreme cases can be readily suggested, but ordinarily such cases are not safe guides in the administration of [*385] the law. . . . 'All laws should receive a sensible construction, and general terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression or absurd consequence. It will, therefore, [***138] be presumed that the Legislature intended exceptions to its language which would avoid results of that character. The reason of the law in such cases should prevail over its letter.'"

The conclusions above reached are supported by the following cases: Heim Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 64, 71 S.W. 691; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, 43 L. Ed. 259, 19 S. Ct. 25; United States v. Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540; State ex inf. v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645; Finck v. Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244, 86 S.W. 213.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that none of the sections under consideration are vulnerable to any of the constitutional assaults made upon them.

VI.

On June 11, 1907, after the time for taking testimony had expired, the Republic Oil Company presented for filing in the office of the Secretary of State, the following affidavit:

"Whereas heretofore, to-wit, on the 8th day of July, A. D. 1901, the Republic Oil Company, being a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, did file in the office of the Secretary of State, of the State of Missouri, authenticated evidence [***139] of its incorporation, and in all respects complied with the requirements of the law of said State governing foreign corporations, and designating an agent or representative in said State on whom service of process against said corporation could be made; and

"Whereas, the said Republic Oil Company has disposed of all of its property and business interests in said State and ceased doing business therein:

"Now, therefore, the said Republic Oil Company does hereby abolish any and all offices or places of [*386] business it may have in said State and does hereby revoke and cancel the authority of its present agent, H. C. Cornforth, of Kansas City, in said State, and does hereby withdraw itself from the State of Missouri.

"In witness whereof the said Republic Oil Company does hereby, by its proper officers, cause its name to be signed and its corporate seal to be attached at the city of New York, State of New York, this 3d day of June, A. D. 1906.

"Republic Oil Company.

"By C. L. Nichols, President.

"(Corporate Seal.)

"Attest: Charles T. White, Asst. Secretary.

"State of New York, County of New York, ss.

On the 3d day of June, A. D. 1907, before me personally came C. [***140] L. Nichols to me known, who being by me duly sworn did depose and say that he is the president of the Republic Oil Company, the corporation described in and which executed the above instrument; that he knew the seal of said corporation; that the seal affixed to said instrument was said corporate seal; that he signed his name to the same for said corporation, and that all of the statements contained in said instrument are true.

"A. T. Doremus,

"Notary Public, Richmond County.

"[L. S.] Certificate filed in New York County."

The Secretary of State refused to file said affidavit of withdrawal for the following reasons, stated by him:

"I, John E. Swanger, Secretary of State, do hereby certify that the original affidavit of withdrawal of the Republic Oil Company, of which the attached is a copy, was presented to me and left at my office by Frank Hagerman, the attorney of said company, upon June 11th, 1907, with the request that the same be filed in my office, and the only reason that the same was not then [*387] actually filed was that I desired the advice of the Attorney-General as to whether in view of the pending litigation it should be permitted to be filed.

"Witness [***141] my hand and seal this 22d day of July, 1907.

John E. Swanger,

"Secretary of State."

Said company contends that, under and by authority of section 1018, Revised Statutes 1899, upon offering to file the affidavit, it had the legal right to retire from doing business in the State. HN52[] Said section is as follows:

"The president or secretary of every domestic incorporated company in this State, when it shall dissolve, and the principal officer of every foreign corporation when it shall retire from business in this State, is hereby required to file with the Secretary of State an affidavit to that effect, and any failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall subject such company or the officers thereof to a penalty of from fifty to five hundred dollars, to be collected as is provided for the collection of penalties and remuneration of prosecuting officers in section 1017 of this article."

Counsel, therefore, contend that when they presented the affidavit to the Secretary of State for filing, that act was equivalent to filing it within the meaning of the statute, and that when so filed it retired from the State and ceased to do business herein, and has [**1022] in all respects [***142] voluntarily performed all the matters and things which the informant prays this court to compel it to do by its judgment and decree, which, it is insisted, disposes of the subject-matter of the suit in so far as it is concerned, and for that reason this proceeding as to it is at an end, and the cause should be dismissed as to it.

The informant vigorously resists this contention upon two grounds: first, because, he says, there is no proper evidence in the record which shows that company has voluntarily retired from the State; and, second, [*388] because it is answerable to the court for offenses which are so closely interwoven with and forming a part of the compact or conspiracy charged in the information that it is not entitled to have the cause dismissed against it, but that the cause should proceed regularly to a final determination, and, at that time, a decree should be entered which will properly and justly dispose of the withdrawal question.

As to the first proposition, we have no hesitancy in saying that as an abstract legal proposition under ordinary circumstances any defendant in a suit may abate the same, by voluntarily doing all the things which the pleadings in the [***143] cause pray the court to compel him to do; and this may be done on motion at any stage of the litigation, before or after trial, or before or after an appeal is granted.

This question came before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of *In re Franklin Telegraph Co., 119 Mass. 447*, which was a proceeding to forfeit a charter because of an illegal lease of its telegraph line to another line. Prior to the trial the lease was canceled and the court dismissed the proceeding because "the only injury alleged as a sufficient reason for the dissolution has therefore ceased to exist by the abrogation of the lease."

In *State v. Centreville Bridge Co., 18 Ala. 678, 681*, the State instituted proceedings to forfeit a franchise because of a non-compliance with the statute. Pending the litigation the Legislature passed an act authorizing an assignee of the company to comply with the statute, but providing "that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to affect any suit or suits now pending in favor of or against said company." The court said: "Both plaintiff and defendant have united in vesting the subject-matter of the controversy in a third person; the suit must therefore end, [***144] for further prosecution would be vain and fruitless. It is said to be a rule that a title to an office will [*389] not be tried by quo warranto, when at the time of the trial the term of office is expired. [*State ex rel. v. Jacobs, 17 Ohio 143*; Ang. & Ames. on Corp., 626.] . . . We think the proviso was intended to apply only to suits brought by the company against individuals, or by individuals against the company. It could not have been the design of the Legislature to give to Maberry a privilege for the mere purpose of taking it from him by a suit then pending, and without regard to any act of his."

In *Hurd v. Beck \(Kan.\), 88 Kan. 11, 45 P. 92*, it was said: "If we had then decided, or should now decide, the case in favor of the plaintiff, it is evident he would obtain no substantial right thereby; and the time of this court ought not to be occupied by the consideration of abstract questions of law, however important and interesting they may be."

This rule of practice is not confined to this class of cases, but extends to and includes all kinds of litigation; and the court may make the order at any time, upon its own motion, as will appear from the following authorities: [***145] *Groves v. Richmond, 53 Iowa 570, 5 N.W. 763*; *Ditch v. Sennott, 116 Ill. 288, 5 N.E. 395*; *Hoskins v. Lord Berkeley, 4 Term R. 402*; *In Re Elsam, 3 Barn. & Cres. 597*; *Block v. Barton, 27 La. Ann. 89*; *York County v. Fewell, 21 S.C. 106*; *State v. Brown, 1 Mo. App. 449*; *State v. Railroad, 74 N.C. 287*; *Kidd v. Morrison, Phil. Eq. \(N. C.\) 31*; *Dakota County v. Glidden, 113 U.S. 222, 28 L. Ed. 981, 5 S. Ct. 428*; *Faucher v. Grass, 60 Iowa 505, 15 N.W. 302*; *San Mateo County v. Railroad, 116 U.S. 38*; *Atkinson v. Tabor, 7 Colo. 195, 197, 3 P. 64*; *Wood-Paper Co. v. Heft, 75 U.S. 333, 8 Wall. 333, 19 L. Ed. 379*; *Cleveland v. Chamberlain, 66 U.S. 419, 1 Black 419, 17 L. Ed. 93*.

We now approach the second proposition mentioned, and it is not so free of doubt, nor so easy of solution. In fact, the adjudications upon this question are very few and meager in so far as our attention has been called to them. But the case of *State ex rel. v. Philips, 97 Mo. 331*, bears closer resemblance as to the [*390] facts and law to the question now under consideration than any we have been able to find. In that case the relator brought a suit in the circuit court of Jackson county against William [***146] Taylor and the Armour Brothers Banking Company, asking for judgment declaring null and void two taxbills issued by the city engineer of the City of Kansas against property owned by relator to Taylor in payment for the construction of a district sewer, and held by the banking company as collateral security. Relator claimed in his suit that the taxbills were invalid because the city had no authority under its charter to cause the sewer to be built, but that they were nevertheless an apparent lien against the property and a cloud upon its title. The circuit court dismissed the petition upon a hearing of the case, and relator appealed to the Kansas City Court of Appeals. Errors were assigned and joined in by the parties, and the case was duly submitted to the court for its decision, and was taken under advisement. While the case was in that position, the respondents, Taylor and the banking company, filed in court, against the objections of relator, their suggestions and motion, stating that they had caused the taxbills, [**1023] regarding which complaint was made in the suit, to be cancelled by the engineer in his office and had deposited them, marked paid, with the clerk of the court [***147] for the use of relator, and had paid all the costs which had arisen or might arise in the suit, and moving the court to abate and strike from the docket relator's appeal. Relator resisted the motion, and showed by affidavits that he had not paid the taxbills, and that he rejected and refused to accept the proffered satisfaction; that he was prosecuting the suit in the interest of other property-owners against whose property similar bills had been issued, and who were contributing to the expenses of the suit, as well as in his own behalf, for the purpose of obtaining an adjudication upon the legality of the proceedings under which the sewer was built; [*391] that the object of his suit was to have the bills cancelled as void ab initio, and that he was entitled to an adjudication upon that issue, and that the recent offer of satisfaction was not equivalent to such adjudication, and that he had, during the pendency of the suit, conveyed the property, and covenanted generally that the same was subject to no incumbrance whatever, and he demanded that the court proceed and decide the case. The court, however, sustained the motion, and dismissed the appeal.

The relator then applied [***148] to this court for a writ of mandamus, by which it was sought to compel the Kansas City Court of Appeals to reinstate the cause and to proceed with the hearing thereof. After reviewing many of the authorities above cited in disposing of that case, this court, speaking through Sherwood, J., said: "None of them, however, are exactly parallel to the case under discussion. This is no colorable appeal, no moot case, no case which has been compromised or settled; but a case where an offer has been made to the plaintiff by parties defendant; an offer which does not go the whole length of the plaintiff's demand, but an offer which falls far short of that; an offer which virtually confesses that he is right in his contention, but which seeks to head him off, to preclude him from attaining all he demands. After great consideration of the subject, the conclusion has been reached that the offer made was insufficient, and did not, therefore, extinguish the plaintiff's ground of equitable relief. Nothing short of that will answer. The plaintiff had the right to have the full measure of the relief he claimed, or else, by a solemn adjudication of the court, to know the why and the wherefore of the [***149] refusal which denied him redress in full of his demand. He had the right to make the demand he did, and it was out of the power of the defendants to prevent adjudication of the matters demanded, except by a confession as broad as that demanded. In that event, and that event only, [*392] would the issues in the cause be dead. It would be making a precedent of most dangerous consequence to rule otherwise; in short, it would be sanctioning a colorable dismissal."

The same argument is equally applicable to the contention of the Republic Oil Company. This is not a colorable proceeding against it, no moot case, no case which has been compromised or settled; but a case where an offer has been made to the informant by respondent, an offer which has been rejected; an offer which does not go the whole length of the informant's demand, but an offer which falls far short of that; an offer which virtually confesses that he is right in his contention, but which seeks to head him off, to preclude him from attaining all he demands. The informant charges the Republic Oil Company with entering into an unlawful pool, trust or combination with its co-respondents in restraint of trade and to [***150] fix and maintain prices on commodities handled by them to the great damage and detriment of the public.

It is the formation of and entering into the pool, trust, or combination which constitute the usurpation and abuse of corporate power complained of, and which constitute the gist of this action, and the judgment of ouster is only the incident thereto; and the informant has the right to have the full measure of relief claimed, and the voluntary withdrawal of the respondent from the State does not determine the question of the existence of the pool, trust or combination it is charged with, nor satisfy the full demand of the informant. If it does, then all the other two respondents would have to do to get rid of this litigation would be to file similar affidavits with the Secretary of State, and move for a dismissal of the cause, and thereby prevent an adjudication of the questions involved, and, at the same time, escape the penalties of past sin, if guilty, and then, on the morrow, re-enter the State and continue the business as of yore in defiance of all law and good [*393] morals. No, the issues of this proceeding are not settled, and it is out of the power of the Republic [***151] Oil Company and beyond the power of all the respondents to prevent an adjudication of the matters demanded, except by a confession as broad as are the charges contained in the information. In that event, and in that event only, would the issues in the cause be dead. The State of Missouri and the entire people thereof are entitled to have the questions involved herein fully and finally settled. It would be making a precedent of most dangerous consequence to rule otherwise, and it would sanction not only a " colorable dismissal" but would afford an impenetrable retreat and perfect immunity for such corporations as might see fit to violate the laws of the State.

The prayer of the informant for a judgment of ouster against the Republic Oil Company is but one of the things asked for, but, since it has voluntarily offered to comply with that part of the [**1024] complaint, that fact should be duly considered in entering the decree should the judgment of ouster go against the respondents.

For the reasons above stated, we are of the opinion that the Republic Oil Company is not entitled to have the cause abated or dismissed as to it.

VII.

This brings us to the consideration of [***152] the main question involved in this proceeding, and that is, was there an unlawful combination or agreement existing between respondents in restraint of trade and in fixing and maintaining prices, as charged in the information? The State contends that such combination exists, while the respondents deny its existence. The Master found that issue for the State, and respondents except to that finding for various reasons.

The following facts are virtually undisputed:

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which will hereafter be called the New Jersey Company, is [*394] a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, with a capitalization of $ 110,000,000.

The Waters-Pierce Oil Company is a corporation organized under the laws of this State, with a capitalization of $ 400,000.

The Standard Oil Company of Indiana is a corporation organized under the laws of Indiana, capitalized at $ 1,500,000.

The Republic Oil Company is a corporation organized under the laws of New York, with a capital of $ 350,000.

The New Jersey Company owns practically all of the stock of the Indiana Company; sixty per cent of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Company, and all of the stock of the Republic [***153] Company. The New Jersey Company also owns practically all of the stock of several other oil companies, organized under the laws of various States. Mr. H. Clay Pierce owns the remaining forty per cent of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Company.

Practically all the officers and directors of the Indiana Company and of the Republic Oil Company are either officers, directors or employees of the New Jersey Company; and a majority of those of the Waters-Pierce Company bear the same relation to the New Jersey Company.

The main office of the New Jersey Company is located at 26 Broadway, New York City; that of the Indiana Company is located at the same place; that of the Republic Company is located in Cleveland, Ohio; and that of the Waters-Pierce Company is in St. Louis.

The three latter companies kept books, papers and records at their main offices, showing full and complete transactions of each day's business, and each of them made full and complete reports of all of their business transactions to the New Jersey Company, even to the smallest detail. The business, books and accounts of each of those three companies are regularly inspected [*395] and audited by an auditor of the New [***154] Jersey Company twice a year.

These reports embraced, among other things, the sales and delivery of refined oils, deliveries of lubricating oils, comparative sales, deliveries of special oils, deliveries of outside oils, deliveries of wax candles, tank, wagon and milk-can deliveries, sales and delivery of naphtha, marine sales, total sales and net results, semi-annual statements showing costs of barreling and making all kinds of oils and products of petroleum.

A daily cash statement was sent. These cash statements were turned over to the comptroller of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

All of said companies deal in petroleum and the various by-products thereof. The New Jersey and Indiana Companies are producers and refiners of oil and are manufacturers of the various by-products thereof. The Republic Company for a year or so after its organization was also a producer and refiner of petroleum and a manufacturer of various by-products thereof, but was not refining or manufacturing at the time this suit was instituted. The Waters-Pierce Company has never produced or refined oil in this country, but is doing so in the Republic of Mexico.

The Indiana Company owns and operates a [***155] large refinery in Indiana and one at Kansas City, Missouri, and a third in the State of Kansas.

The Indiana, Waters-Pierce and Republic Companies are all vendors of refined oils and the by-products of petroleum. The two latter procure all of their supplies from the former.

There are several other oil companies doing business in this State, called "independent companies."

In 1878, by agreement between the Standard Oil Company and Waters-Pierce Company, there was the following division of territory made between them: Beginning at a point on the Mississippi river on the southern boundary of Lincoln county; thence in a [*396] western direction along the southern boundaries of Lincoln, Pike, Ralls, Monroe and Randolph counties; thence in a southwest direction along the eastern boundaries of Howard, Cooper, Pettis, Benton, St. Clair and Barton counties; and thence west along the southern boundary of Barton county to the Kansas line.

Under that agreement the Indiana Company took the territory lying north of that dividing line, and Waters-Pierce took that lying south of it. The latter company was also given Arkansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana and the Republic of [***156] Mexico. This division of territory has been respected from the time it was made to the present, and neither the Waters-Pierce Company, upon the one hand, nor the New Jersey Company, upon the other hand, nor any of its subsidiary corporations, which include the Indiana Company, Standard Oil Company of Ohio, Consolidated Tank Line Company, Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and the Standard Oil Company of Iowa, have ever invaded each other's territory in quest of trade, except as will now be stated.

The Republic Company was the successor of the Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle Oil Company [**1025] of Cleveland, Ohio, which was one of the independent companies, and the most active competitor the Indiana and Waters-Pierce Company had in this State. It had its own refineries, and refined and sold high grades of oil in all parts of the State and throughout the Middle West generally. After the New Jersey Company acquired the Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle interests, it caused the Republic Company to be organized, which took over the assets and property of the former, and continued to refine oil for a short time, and sold it in the same territory its predecessor had done. Not long after the organization [***157] of the Republic Company it ceased to refine oil, and its refineries were dismantled, and, after [*397] that, it procured all of its oil and supplies from the Indiana Company and continued to sell oil in Missouri, as before, with this limitation -- it would compete vigorously for the trade of all of the independent companies but never competed for the trade of the Indiana company, nor for that of the Waters-Pierce Company, except upon three or four occasions, whereupon vigorous protests were entered by the Waters-Pierce Company to the New Jersey Company, which resulted in smothering out all competition between the Waters-Pierce and Republic companies. And it may not be out of place to here state that the latter company, from its organization up to the time of the institution of this suit, masqueraded under and sold oils as one of the independent companies, and thereby caused the public to believe that it was an independent company.

The Indiana Company sells in the territory lying north of the dividing line, and not south of it, while the Waters-Pierce Company sells south of that line, and not north of it. All orders for oil received by the Indiana Company to be delivered in the [***158] Waters-Pierce Company's territory are turned over to the latter and by it filed; and all orders received by Waters-Pierce for oil to be delivered in the territory of the Indiana Company are turned over to the latter, and by it filled. Whenever through mistake or design the agents of either of those companies sell oils within the territory of the other, the transaction is turned over to that company and it reaps the benefits thereof.

Neither the Indiana Company nor the Waters-Pierce Company will sell to the independent companies except at retail prices; and both of them have waged a most relentless war against the independents by a system of espionage and rebates given upon sales of goods.

The oil for the Indiana Company, and all other subsidiary companies of the New Jersey Company, is transported through pipe lines and tank cars belonging [*398] to the latter company; while the oil for the Waters-Pierce Company is transported in tank cars, about one-half of which are owned by it and the other half is owned by the New Jersey Company, which aggregate, if we correctly understand the record, about one hundred and thirty cars. But neither of the said companies will permit any of [***159] the independent companies to transport oil through the pipe lines or in their tank cars.

The Indiana Company, Waters-Pierce Company and the Republic Company all sell the same oils and grades of oil under different names or brands; each company having its own names or brands for the oils sold by it.

Prices for the products of petroleum, especially refined oils, illuminating and gasoline, are fixed by the Waters-Pierce Company.

It sends out to the trade card quotations, giving tank, wagon and barrel prices. As a rule those prices are followed by all other oil companies, including the independent companies, doing business in this State. As long as the independent companies do not reduce prices or increase the aggregate amount of their sales above ten or fifteen per cent of the entire amount of the sales made in the State, there is no war made upon them regarding prices; but whenever any independent company reduces prices below those fixed by Waters-Pierce or whenever their aggregate sales exceed fifteen per cent of all sales made in the State, a vigorous warfare is waged against them, chiefly through the Republic Company, by means of an elaborate system of espionage in their business [***160] and cutting prices or giving rebates until the independents are glad to throw up their hands and say "enough" and be contented to sell oil at the prices and in the quantities prescribed by the Waters-Pierce Company and acquiesced in by the Indiana and Republic Companies. And as a result of this method, the Waters-Pierce Company fixes the prices [*399] for which all such oils are sold in the State, by all dealers, including the independent companies, and at the same time and by the same means it controls and monopolizes for itself and the Indiana and Republic Oil Companies from eighty-five to ninety-five per cent of the entire oil business of the State.

The large capital, the means of transportation and the capacious and convenient storage capacity, taken in connection with the almost perfect and far-reaching delivery systems owned, possessed and controlled by the Indiana, Republic and Waters-Pierce Companies, enable them to carry out the business methods above mentioned.

All of the dividends of the Indiana, Republic and Waters-Pierce Companies were paid either directly or indirectly into the treasury of the New Jersey Company, except, however, those which were paid on the forty-per [***161] cent of the stock of the Waters-Pierce Company owned by Mr. Pierce -- those dividends were paid to Mr. Pierce, which were about seven hundred per cent per annum on the capitalization of $ 400,000. This $ 400,000, however, was not the entire assets of the Waters-Pierce Company. Its total assets amounted to about $ 12,000,000, which sum if added to the estimated value of the "name and good will" [**1026] of the concern, the total assets would be swollen to the sum of $ 45,000,000.

The record seems to be silent as to the value of the assets of the New Jersey, Indiana and Republic Companies; nor does it disclose the amount of the annual dividends which have been paid by those companies.

It was a common and frequent occurrence that officers, directors and employees of the New Jersey Company and all its allied corporations, including the Waters-Pierce Company, were transferred from one of said companies to another, either by election or contract of employment.

Auditors working under Mr. Wade Hampton, general auditor of the New Jersey Company, regularly [*400] audited the books and accounts of all these companies and reported results to him at 26 Broadway, New York City. The salaries [***162] of these auditors were fixed by Mr. Hampton, and charged to the Waters-Pierce Company by him, when auditing for that company, which were paid by it, including all of their expenses. Mr. Pierce, however, testified that he had no knowledge of that fact, and that if he had known of it he would not have permitted it. This only emphasizes the fact that the New Jersey Company exercised control over the Waters-Pierce Company without even consulting him.

Mr. H. M. Tilford, and succeeding him, Mr. R. H. McNall, was the commercial agent of the Waters-Pierce Company, in New York, and his office was in the same rooms with the New Jersey Company, and it was through him that the business of the former company was transacted with the latter.

Mr. C. L. Nichols, president of the Republic Company, was also assistant to Mr. L. J. Drake, sales-agent of the Indiana Company, both of whose offices were located at 26 Broadway, with the New Jersey Company. Mr. Nichols instructed all officers, agents and employees of the Republic Company to inform the trade that said company was an independent company and had no connection whatever with the New Jersey Company. This was done in order that it might sell oils [***163] to all persons who would not deal with the New Jersey, Waters-Pierce or other Standard Oil Companies. The bringing of this suit exposed the relations existing between the New Jersey and Republic Company, which destroyed its usefulness and necessitated its going out of business.

The same relations and conditions existing in this State between the Waters-Pierce Company and the New Jersey Company and its subsidiary corporations also existed between them in Texas, Oklahoma and [*401] Arkansas, with the exception that Waters-Pierce had those States as its exclusive territory.

The officers of all the respondents knew the stock of their respective companies was either owned or controlled by the New Jersey Company, as before stated.

We have thus stated the most salient facts of the case, as shown by the evidence and the Master's report, to be true. Those facts, with certain incidents thereto, taken in connection with certain inferences deduced therefrom, as shown by this report, constitute the reasons assigned by him for finding that the respondents are guilty of the combination and conspiracy charged against them in restraint of trade and in fixing and maintaining prices of commodities [***164] handled by them.

The respondents make a most vigorous assault upon that finding of the Master, and insist that those facts, taken in connection with all the reasonable deductions that may be drawn from them, do not establish their guilt.

The position of the Master is, that he had the legal right to and did consider all the facts and circumstances shown by the evidence, and the relation they bore to each other, in connection with the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, and, that, when so viewed and weighed, they pointed with an unerring finger to the guilt of the respondents. While, upon the other hand, counsel for respondents separate each factor of the alleged combination and trust, and each method of doing business in pursuance thereof, from each other. Then they proceed at great length to a consideration of the legality of each part and phase of the alleged combination and each of the different acts, agreements and things done in furtherance thereof, and, as found by the Master, for the purpose of showing the legality of all the transactions and methods employed by them in the conduct of their business.

[*402] In pursuance of that line of defense, the respondents, [***165] while conceding the New Jersey Company owns practically all of the stock of the Indiana and Republic Companies, and a majority of that of the Waters-Pierce Company, yet they advance the legal proposition that such ownership does not constitute an unlawful combination between them in restraint of trade, as charged in the information.

The position of counsel for informant upon that question is not entirely clear, yet they cite authorities which sustain the proposition, that where the stocks of several corporations engaged in the same line of business are placed in the hands of a trustee or in the possession of a holding company, with power and authority in the trustee or holding company to conduct and carry on the business of the several corporations, such placement of stocks and business management constitute, as a matter of law, a trust and combine in restraint of trade within the meaning of the statutes. Finck v. Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244, 86 S.W. 213; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137, 30 N.E. 279; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679, 24 S. Ct. 436.

But in each of those cases the information was predicated upon those facts, [***166] and when the evidence disclosed that those allegations [**1027] were true, then those courts held as a matter of law that they constituted a trust or combination within the meaning of the antitrust statutes. While in the case at bar the cause of action stated is that they, the three companies, have unlawfully and fraudulently entered into a conspiracy, combine or agreement in restraint of trade in violation of their corporate rights; and it is not alleged that a trustee was appointed or a holding corporation was organized for the purpose of taking over the stock of the respondent corporations, or that the stock and business management were turned over to such trustee or corporation for the purposes mentioned.

[*403] Under that state of the pleadings, we are not inclined to lend our assent to the proposition that the ownership of the stock alone, by the New Jersey Company, is conclusive evidence of an unlawful combination between the three respondents, as charged in the information.

But, notwithstanding the last mentioned proposition, counsel for informant insists that such ownership is admissible in evidence as a fact or circumstance tending to show the existence of the [***167] unlawful combination charged. That was one of the questions presented to this court for determination when the case was here on a former occasion; and in passing upon that question Lamm, J., speaking for the court, said: "HN53"↑ It may be admitted that under some circumstances corporations with no community of interest as holders of stock in each other, or even where the stock was not in the hands of a holding company as trustee, might be guilty of a violation of our anti-trust law. It might further be admitted that a trust or combination might be proved by the overt acts of the agents of respondent corporations sufficiently distinctive and significant and of such long continuance as would tread back and tend to establish the obnoxious pact or trust agreement. State ex inf. v. [Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595, et seq.] Yet, experience has shown that stock holdings showing a community of interest, while in some cases innocuous, might in given cases be the very root from which the trust agreement grows. On principle, why may not this root be got at? HN54↑ In an investigation intended to lead up to the establishment of a fraudulent conspiracy between individuals, taking for illustration [***168] a fraudulent disposition of property, it could not be denied that kinship or close business intimacy would be relevant matter, for what it was worth, be that worth much or little, and we can perceive no good reason why this investigation may not [*404] commence at the very groundwork of these corporations, showing, if fact it be, a close relationship in stock holdings and in the personnel of officers and agents, the use of the same instrumentalities and methods, simultaneous in time and originating in the same radiating center -- a sort of prenatal, natal or else postnatal disposition to combine, as it were -- to be followed, of course, by sufficient proof indicating that the community of stock interest, if any, had been used as a foundation upon which to build the illegal structure denounced by the statute." State ex inf. v. [Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. 124, 156, 91 S.W. 1062.] That was one of the main questions then presented to this court for determination, but since it has been so earnestly urged again upon our attention, we have re-examined it, and, after due consideration, we are unable to see any good reason for changing our views regarding the conclusions there reached.

[***169] It is next insisted by respondents that the division of territory between the Indiana and Waters Pierce Company is not a combination in restraint of trade, and, therefore, is not illegal. Their contention is that this division of territory is not like the case where two independent mercantile companies divide a State for selling purposes, each agreeing not to sell in the other's territory. They differentiate the two cases by saying that the Indiana Company was a producer, as well as a vendor of oils, and that it had a perfect legal right to divide the State into two or more divisions, and to enter into a contract with a dealer in each of said divisions, and thereby bind itself to sell oil exclusively to each of said dealers in each of said divisions, and thereby bind each of said dealers to purchase oil exclusively from it. In other words, the Indiana Company contends that if it had confined itself to refining oil, and if by contract it had bound itself to sell exclusively to one purchaser in the northern [*405] half of the State, and to another in the southern half, then there could have been no valid, legal objection urged against such contracts.

In the consideration of a [***170] similar question, arising under the Anti-trust Acts of Congress, Sanborn, J., in the case of Phillips v. Iola Cement Co., 61 C.C.A. 19, used the following language:

"It is now settled by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court that HN55↑ the test of the validity of a contract, combination, or conspiracy challenged under the anti-trust law is the direct effect of such a contract or combination upon competition in commerce among the States. If its necessary effect is to stifle competition or to directly and substantially restrict it, it is void. But if it promotes, or only incidentally or indirectly restricts, competition in commerce among the States, while its main purpose and chief effects are to foster the trade and enhance the business of those who make it, it does not constitute a restraint of inter-state commerce within the meaning of that law, and is not obnoxious to its provisions. This act of Congress must have a reasonable construction. It was not its purpose to prohibit or to render illegal the ordinary contracts or combinations of manufacturers, merchants, and traders, or [**1028] the usual devices to which they resort to promote the success of the business, to enhance their [***171] trade, and to make their occupations gainful, so long as those combinations and devices do not necessarily have a direct and substantial effect to restrict competition in commerce among the States. [Hopkins v. U. S., 171 U.S. 578, 592, 19 S. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290; Anderson v. U. S., 171 U.S. 604, 616, 19 S. Ct. 50, 43 L. Ed. 300; U.S. v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505, 568, 19 S. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. U. S., 175 U.S. 211, 245, 20 S. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136; U.S. v. Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 339, 340, 342, 17 S. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007; U.S. v. Northern Securities Co. \(C. C.\), 120 F. 721, 725.] The application of [*406] this rule to the facts of the case in hand leaves no doubt that there was nothing in the contract before us obnoxious to the provisions of the anti-trust law of 1890. The Iola Cement Company had no monopoly of the manufacture or sale of cement in the United States. It was surrounded by competing manufacturers, and the contract which it made with Parr & Co., of Galveston, had no direct or substantial effect upon competition in trade among the States. It left the manufacturers who were competing with the plaintiff for the [***172] trade of the country free to select their customers, to fix their prices and to dictate their terms for the sales of the commodities they offered, so that in this regard no restraint whatever was imposed. If it had the effect to restrain Parr & Co. from using the product which they purchased to compete with other jobbers or manufacturers in the country beyond the limits of the State of Texas, this restriction was not the chief purpose or the main effect of the contract of sale, but a mere indirect and immaterial incident of it. The agreement of sale imposed no direct restriction upon competition in commerce among the States, did not constitute a restraint of that commerce, and was not obnoxious to the provisions of the act of July 2, 1890. For a more extended consideration of the principles upon which this decision is based, for a citation, review and analysis of the authorities which sustain them and which compel the ultimate conclusion which we have reached in this case, reference is made to the opinion of this court in Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. (which is filed herewith), 125 F. 454. A repetition of the citation and review of authorities, and of the more exhaustive discussion [***173] of principles there indulged in, would be useless here, and it is omitted."

In Oregon Steam Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 87 U.S. 64, 20 Wall. 64, 22 L. Ed. 315, 318, the right of a territorial division was distinctly recognized, Mr. Justice Bradley saying: "In accordance with these principles, [*407] it is well settled that HN56 [↑] a stipulation by a vendee of any trade, business or establishment that the vendor shall not exercise the same trade or business, or erect a similar establishment within a reasonable distance, so as not to interfere with the value of the trade, business or thing purchased, is reasonable and valid. In like manner a stipulation by the vendor of an article to be used in a business or trade, in which he is himself engaged, that it shall not be used within a reasonable region or distance, so as not to interfere with his said business or trade, is also valid and binding." Again, he said: "Suppose the case of two persons associated in business as partners, and engaged in a manufacture by which they supply the country with a certain article, but the process of manufacture is a secret; and they agree to separate, and one of the terms of their separation is, that one [***174] of the parties shall not sell the manufactured article in Massachusetts, where the other resides and carries on business; and that the latter shall not sell the article in New York, where his associate is to reside and carry on business. Can there be any doubt that such an agreement would be valid and binding?"

In Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 60 C.C.A. 290, 125 F. 454, 459, 460-63, the facts were: "A manufacturer, a corporation, and its employee restricted the sales of its products to those who refrained from dealing in the commodities of its competitors by fixing the prices of its goods to those who did not thus refrain so high that their purchase was unprofitable, while it reduced the prices to those who declined to deal in the wares of its competitors so that the purchase of the goods was profitable to them." This was held not to be, within the meaning of the Sherman Act, an arrangement to lessen competition. Judge Sanborn said: "The right of each competitor to fix the prices of the commodities which he offers for sale, and to dictate the terms upon which he will dispose of [*408] them, is indispensable to the very existence of competition. Strike down or stipulate [***175] away that right, and competition is not only restricted, but destroyed. . . . In the contract, combination, or conspiracy which is charged against the defendants in this case there is nothing of this character. The tobacco company is a manufacturer and trader, and McHie is its employee. Conceding, for the purpose of the argument only, but not deciding, that there may be a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade between an employer and his employee, no such contract, combination, or conspiracy between them can be a violation of this law unless it is in restraint of interstate commerce; and the only combination charged against the defendants is in their combination to make sales of the commodities of the tobacco company profitable to purchasers to those persons only who refrain from dealing in the wares of their competitors. The two defendants in this case have never been and never intended to be competitors. There has never been any competition, actual or possible, between them, and hence no competition between them is or can [**1029] be restrained by their combination to conduct the trade of the tobacco company. The contract, combination, or conspiracy charged [***176] against them did not restrict competition between them and the independent manufacturers or dealers, who, according to the complaint, were their competitors, because it left the latter free to select their purchasers and to fix the prices of their goods and the terms at which they would dispose of them to all intending purchasers. The tobacco company and its competitors were not dealing in articles of prime necessity, like corn and coal, nor were they rendering public or quasi-public service, like railroad and gas corporations. Each of them, therefore, had the right to refuse to sell its commodities at any price. Each had the right to fix the prices at which it would dispose of them, and the terms [*409] upon which it would contract to sell them. Each of them had the right to determine with what person it would make its contracts of sale. [In Re Greene (C. C.), 52 F. 104, 115; In Re Grice (C. C.), 79 F. 627, 644; Walsh v. Dwight (Sup.), 40 A.D. 513, 58 N.Y.S. 91, 93; Brown v. Rounsvell, 78 Ill. 589; Com. v. Grinstead (Ky.), 111 Ky. 203, 63 S.W. 427; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U.S. 578, 589, 17 S. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832]. There is nothing in the Act of July 2, 1890, [***177] ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200), which deprived any of these competitors of these rights. If there had been, the law itself would have destroyed competition more effectually than any contract or combinations of persons or of corporations could possibly have stifled it. The exercise of these undoubted rights is essential to the very existence of free competition, and so long as their exercise by any person or corporation in no way deprives competitors of the same rights, or restricts them in the use of these rights, it is difficult to perceive how their exercise can constitute any restriction upon competition or any restraint upon interstate trade. The acts of the defendant which are alleged by the complaint in this action to constitute an unlawful restraint upon interstate commerce are nothing more than the lawful exercise of these unquestioned rights which are indispensable to the existence of competition or to the conduct of trade. The tobacco company and its employee fixed the prices of its commodities so high that the plaintiff could not profitably buy them. This was no restriction upon free competition, because it left the rivals of the company free to sell [***178] their competing commodities at any price which they elected to charge for them. It would have been no violation of the law under consideration if the tobacco company and its employee had combined to refuse to sell any of its commodities at any price, and to retire from the business in which they were engaged entirely. Much less could it be a violation [*410] of this act for them to fix their prices too high for profitable investment by the plaintiff. The tobacco company and its employee sold its products to customers who refrain from dealing in the goods of its competitors at prices which rendered their purchases profitable. But there was no restriction upon competition here, because this act left the rivals of the tobacco company free to sell their competing commodities to all other purchasers than those who bought of the defendants and free to compete for sales to the customers of the tobacco company by offering them goods at lower prices or on better terms than they secured from that company. The tobacco company and its employee were not required, like competitors engaged in public or quasi-public service, to sell to all applicants who sought to buy, or to sell to all intending [***179] purchasers at the same prices. They had the right to select their customers, to sell and refuse to sell to whomsoever they chose, and to fix different prices for sales of the same commodities to different persons. In the exercise of this right they selected those persons who would refrain from handling the goods of their competitors as their customers, by selling their products to them at lower prices than they offered them to others. There was nothing in this selection, or in the means employed to effect it, that was either illegal or immoral. It had no necessary effect to directly and substantially restrict free competition in any of the products of tobacco, and it did not unlawfully restrain interstate commerce, because it in no way restricted the exercise of the rights of the competitors of the tobacco company to fix the prices of their goods and the terms of their sales of similar products according to the dictates of their respective wills. It is contended, however, that this selection by the defendants of customers who refrained from selling the goods of their competitors violated section 2 of the Anti-Trust Act, because it was an 'attempt to monopolize . . . part of the trade [***180] or [*411] commerce among the several states.' It is admitted that the practice of the defendants was not only an attempt, but a successful attempt, to monopolize a part of this commerce. But is every attempt to monopolize any part of interstate commerce made unlawful and punishable by section 2 of the Act of July 2, 1890, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200)? If so, no interstate commerce has ever been lawfully conducted since that act became a law, because every sale and every transportation of an article which is the subject of interstate commerce is a successful attempt to monopolize that part of this commerce which concerns that sale or transportation. HN57↑] An attempt by each competitor to monopolize a part of interstate commerce is the very root of all competition therein. Eradicate it, and competition necessarily ceases -- dies. Every person engaged in interstate commerce necessarily attempts to draw to himself, and to exclude others from, a part of that trade; and, if he may not do this, he may not compete with his rivals, all other persons and corporations must cease to secure for themselves any part of the commerce among the States, and some single corporation \*\*\*181 or person must be permitted to receive and \*\*1030 control it all in one huge monopoly. The purpose of the Act of July 2, 1890, was, however, to prevent the stifling of competition, not to destroy it or to foster monopoly, and any construction of any of its provisions which would give it such an effect is unreasonable and inconsistent with the object and spirit of the law. It is an interpretation which fosters the mischief it was passed to remedy, and destroys the remedy provided to abate the evil, while a sound construction would tend to abate the mischief and to promote the remedy. It cannot, therefore, be the true meaning of the second section of this law that every attempt to monopolize any part of interstate commerce is illegal. The act must, as the Supreme Court has twice declared (Hopkins v. U. S., I<sup>\*412</sup> 171 U.S. 578, 600, 19 S. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290; U.S. v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U.S. 505, 568, 19 S. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259), have a reasonable construction. The purpose of the second section is the same as that of the first -- to prevent the restriction of competition -- and the two sections ought to receive similar interpretations. The Supreme Court has declared \*\*\*182 that HN58↑] the true construction of the first section is that no contract, combination, or conspiracy is denounced by it unless its necessary effect is to directly and substantially restrict competition in commerce among the States. By a parity of reasoning, the correct interpretation of the second section must be that no attempt to monopolize a part of the commerce among the States is made illegal or punishable by the provisions of that section unless the necessary effect of that attempt is to directly and substantially restrict commerce among the States. The acts of the defendants had no such effect. They evidenced nothing but the legitimate efforts of traders to secure for themselves as large a part of interstate trade as possible, while they left their competitors free to do the same. HN59↑] It was not -- it could not have been -- the purpose or the effect of the second section of this law to prohibit or punish the customary and universal attempts of all manufacturers, merchants, and traders engaged in interstate commerce to monopolize a fair share of it in the necessary conduct and desired enlargement of their trade, while their attempts leave their competitors free to make successful endeavors \*\*\*183 of the same kind. The acts of the defendants were of this nature, and they did not violate the second section of the law. An attempt to monopolize a part of interstate commerce, the necessary effect of which is to stifle or to directly and substantially restrict competition in commerce among the States, violates the second section of this act. But an attempt to monopolize a part of interstate commerce which promotes, or but indirectly or incidentally restricts, competition therein, while its \*413 main purpose and chief effect are to increase the trade and foster the business of those who make it, was not intended to be made, and was not made, illegal by the second section of the act under consideration, because such attempts are indispensable to the existence of any competition in commerce among the States."

In Dueber Mfg. Co. v. Watch and Clock Co., 14 C.C.A. 14, 66 F. 637, 643, 645, 652, Judge Lacombe said: "HN60↑] The phrase used in the Act of 1890, viz: 'restraint of trade,' is no new one. It had heretofore been used by courts applying the doctrines of common law in determining the validity of contracts. It is to be presumed that the lawmakers, when they chose this phrase, intended \*\*\*184 that it should have, when used in the statute, no other or different meaning from that which had always been given to it in judicial decisions and in the common understanding. The title indicates that the phrase is so used for the act is described as one 'to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies;' and, though the title to an act cannot control its words, it may furnish some aid in showing what was in the mind of the legislator. [U.S. v. Palmer, 16 U.S. 610, 3 Wheat. 610, 4 L. Ed. 471]. The 'restraint of trade' which is obnoxious to the provisions of the first section must be of such kind as was, before the passage of the act, recognized as unlawful. [In re Greene, 52 F. 104; U.S. v. Freight Ass'n, 58 F. 58, 7 C.C.A. 15.] It may be assumed that the total amount of any given commodity which will be purchased by a community is limited, and when several sellers of such commodity enter into a combination in the form of a partnership, and by ingenious advertising, or by the devices of business competition, or by the offer of favorable terms to buyers, enlarge their own trade in such commodity, they restrain to some extent trade of one or more of their \*\*\*185 competitors therein. But no one, not even the plaintiff in error, contends that the statute forbids any such acts, although, if the words be taken with absolute \*414 literalness, the phrase 'restraint of trade' is broad enough to cover them . . . HN61↑] An individual manufacturer or trader may surely buy from or sell to whom he pleases, and may equally refuse to buy from or sell to anyone with whom he thinks it will promote business interests to refuse to trade. That is entirely a matter of his private concern, with which governmental paternalism has not as yet sought to interfere, except when the property he owns is 'devoted to a use in which the public has an interest;' and such public interest in the use has as yet been found to exist only in staple commodities of prime necessity. [Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Budd v. New York, 143 U.S. 517, 12 S. Ct. 468, 36 L. Ed. 247.] It is a business device, probably as old as business itself, to seek to increase the number of one's customers, and the extent of their purchases, by treating more favorably those who become exclusive customers. Certainly there is nothing unlawful or unfair in the statement to the trade by [***186] the maker of any kind of merchandise, [**1031] 'My goods are for sale, only to those who will buy from me exclusively, not to others.'"

Judge Wallace also said: "I do not question the right of the defendants to combine for their own protection against unfair competition, and in that behalf, their commodity not being one of prime necessity, to agree not to sell to those who do not buy exclusively of them, or who buy of the complainant or some other obnoxious competitor." In Vandeweghe v. Brewing Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 61 S.W. 526, 527, it was said: "The only fact relied upon to show a trust is an agreement by the plaintiff not to sell beer to anyone else within a certain designated territory, contributory to the defendant's place of business. We think the case is distinguishable from the cases heretofore held to violate the anti-trust law, and within the doctrine announced in Gates v. Hooper, 90 Tex. 563, 39 S.W. 1079."

In Park & Sons Co. v. Nat. Druggists Ass'n, 54 A.D. 223, 66 N.Y.S. 615, it was said: "It [*415] cannot be denied that HN62[↑] each manufacturer has the right to refuse to sell to anyone if he sees fit. If he chooses to make his goods, and sell them, he has the right [***187] to fix any price he chooses upon them. Not only so, but he has the right to select his own customers. He may agree to dispose of all his goods to one person, or he may be willing to supply the whole trade except one person; and whatever he chooses to do is a matter with which the law has no concern, because the goods are his, to be kept or sold, as he pleases. So he may not only fix his own price, but he may impose such terms as he sees fit, or can exact from his customers. These matters are absolutely within his own control. If each manufacturer is at liberty thus to control the sale of his goods, undoubtedly all may, if they see fit, agree together to enforce conditions which each one seeks to impose upon the dealing with the article which he makes. The action of each manufacturer in fixing prices and imposing conditions of sale is undoubtedly legal."

In Fowle v. Park, 131 U.S. 88, 33 L. Ed. 67, 74, 9 S. Ct. 658, it was decided: "A contract, by which defendants, for a valuable consideration, agreed not to sell a certain medicinal preparation, within the territory which it was covenanted complainants should occupy exclusively, nor sell to others for sale there, nor promote such [***188] sales, is valid."

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said: "HN63[↑] The vendors were entitled to sell to the best advantage, and in so doing to exercise the right to preclude themselves from entering into competition with those who purchased, and to prevent competition between purchasers, and the purchasers were entitled to such protection as was reasonably necessary for their benefit."

In 1 Eddy on Combinations, section 224, it is said: "Agreements which have for their object the realization of a fair price for the product manufactured and sold are not against public policy, even though in some respects they operate in restraint of trade."

[*416] This rule was applied to the Anti-Trust Act of New York ( Cohen v. Envelope Co., 56 N.Y.S. 588, 589), in this language: "HN64[↑] Agreements which have for their purpose the realization of a fair price for the product manufactured and sold do not contravene any rule of public policy, even though in some respects they operate in restraint of trade."

So in Ontario Salt Co. v. Merchants Salt Co., 18 Grant's Ch. 540, it was said: "I think a distinction would be found in the consideration that here the article, the price of which was to be regulated, was not to [***189] be purchased in the market, but was actually to be produced by the parties themselves, and this product they could not be compelled to part with except on their own terms."

It will be observed by reading the foregoing cases, cited by respondents in support of their contention, that they refer to a manufacturer, and in each of said cases the manufacturer sold its merchandise to a dealer, and that manufacturer entered into a contract with that dealer, by which it bound itself to sell its goods and merchandise to him, and no one else within a designated territory, and by which the dealer also bound himself to purchase exclusively from that manufacturer during the lifetime of the contract. It is thus seen that the manufacturer and dealer only bound themselves to do that which they had a perfect legal right to do. The manufacturer had a perfect right to sell his wares to only one dealer in each town, if he saw proper to do so, or he could decline to sell to every one, in any or all of such towns, if he so chose; while, upon the other hand, the dealer also had a perfect legal right to purchase exclusively of the manufacturer, or the right to refuse to purchase from all manufacturers. It [***190] must be conceded that both of those propositions are true; and that being so, then we are unable to see any valid or legal objection that can be logically presented against such a contract as above supposed. It in no [*417] manner prevents other manufacturers from selling the same class of goods to other dealers in the same towns in competition with those sold under the supposed contract. There is nothing wrong legally or morally in such a contract and arrangements. No manufacturer, in the absence of express legislation to the contrary, should be required to place his own fabrics in competition with each other. The law is satisfied in that regard if the different manufacturers of goods are left in reasonable and fair competition with each other. It will also be observed by reading those cases, that there was no contract or agreement between different manufacturers by which they bound themselves not to sell their respective fabrics in the same towns or cities, and thereby prevent competition in the sale of their goods and wares.

But the contract involved in the case at bar, dividing the State [**1032] into the north and south territory, and assigning the north half to the Indiana [***191] Company and the south half to the Waters-Pierce Company, with an agreement that they were not to sell in each other's territory, presents quite a different proposition from that just considered.

In the case at bar, the Indiana Company was not only a manufacturer of the products of petroleum, but it was also a large dealer, as large if not larger than was the Waters-Pierce Company. Now, instead of eliminating the fact that the former was a dealer, as respondents contend we should and consider it only as a refiner of oils, we should consider it just as it is. It is both a refiner of and dealer in oils, both at retail and at wholesale; while the Waters-Pierce Company is a dealer and not a refiner. But when we consider the fact that both of those companies are dealers in oils, and that they have divided the State into two parts, with an agreement by which they bind themselves not to sell to the trade in each other's territory, [*418] coupled with the further fact that the Indiana Company bound itself to sell as a refiner to the Waters-Pierce Company exclusively, in that territory, with the corresponding agreement on the part of the Waters-Pierce Company to purchase exclusively from [***192] the former, presents quite a different question from that supposed by counsel for respondents, and from those considered by the courts in the cases before considered. And especially is this true when we consider the further fact that neither of said companies would sell to any other dealer except at retail prices.

In discussing a similar question which arose under the Sherman Act regarding restraint of interstate commerce, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 47, 48 L. Ed. 608, 24 S. Ct. 307, used this language: "It was not a combination or monopoly among manufacturers simply, but one between them and dealers in the manufactured article, which was an article of commerce between the States. United States v. E. C. Knight Company, 156 U.S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249, did not therefore cover it." This is a complete answer against the contention of counsel for respondents. To the same effect are the cases of Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U.S. 197, 329, 48 L. Ed. 679, 24 S. Ct. 436; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396, 49 L. Ed. 518, 25 S. Ct. 276; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 52 L. Ed. 488, 28 S. Ct. [***193] 301.

And in the consideration of this proposition we should not lose sight of the important position occupied by the Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle Oil Company in the oil market, and its sharp competition with respondents prior to the time it was acquired and taken over by the New Jersey Company, and the subordinate position it has occupied, and the almost total lack of competition that has existed between them since that time. These facts possess greater probative force tending to show a combination in restraint of trade when thus viewed than when considered separate and distinct from each other.

[*419] The only cases cited by counsel for respondents which, in our judgment, support their contention are the following:

In the case of Wickens v. Evans, 3 Younge & Jervis 327, the court said: "This question, as it appears to me, is confined within a narrow compass; and, as we have all formed the same opinion, I shall state my views of it very shortly. The principles upon which the decisions upon subjects of this nature are founded have been accurately stated; and, indeed, have so frequently and so long been acted upon that they are now indisputable. A general, universal restraint [***194] of trade, inasmuch as it affects the public property, and the interest of the community, is bad . . . . But it is submitted that there may be, upon a good consideration, a partial restraint of trade; and that an agreement for that purpose is sustainable and has been sustained. The legality of partial restraint of trade has been established in a variety of cases; and the general transactions of mankind furnish daily instances of its existence. Without resorting to the aid of black cotton lines in order to divide all England into districts, there is no man engaged in trade who does not, in effect, impose some restraint upon himself, in point of practice, by confining himself within a particular district and circumscribing his trade within certain bounds. It has been supposed that the public are interested in precluding the parties from entering into the agreements now in question; but I think it very doubtful whether the benefit of the public would be best consulted by these three persons continuing to travel over the whole country, or by each confining himself to the district marked out in the map. Let us see what is the case now presented. It appears, according to the recital in the [***195] agreement, that these three persons, in carrying on their business of box-makers, had traveled into various parts of the country to vend their boxes and [*420] trunks, and had sustained great loss and inconvenience by reason of exercising this trade in the same places. This is the mischief and evil recited in the agreement -- and what is the remedy they propose? Not a monopoly, except as between themselves, because every other man may come into their districts and vend his goods. All they propose is, that they shall not carry on rivalry, nor continue any longer to trade throughout the country. This, then, is only a partial restraint of trade. But it is said that, admitting that to be so, there is no consideration extrinsic of the agreement itself; and that agreement is illustrated by the cases of a master giving up his business to his apprentice or to his journeyman. It [***1033] strikes me, however, that in the present case there is as good a consideration as in either of those alluded to. Each party here, before the agreement entered into, has a trade in all the districts and he agrees to retire and to relinquish that trade in two of those districts, in order to secure the [***196] other in undisturbed possession. An objection is then made to that part of the agreement by which it is stipulated that, in case other persons shall begin to trade as boxmakers in any of the districts, the parties shall meet to devise means to promote their own views. What those means may be it is unnecessary to surmise, but we can not presume that they will be illegal; and, therefore, the stipulation does not affect the validity of the agreement."

In Hearn v. Griffin, 2 Chitty 407, the following colloquy took place between court and counsel:

"Abbott, for defendant, argued in support of a demurrer to a declaration which stated that plaintiff was the proprietor of the one coach and the defendant of another, and that an agreement was made between them that they should not run in opposition to each other, but should each charge the same price to passengers, and this stipulation, it was urged, was in restraint of that competition in trade which is so conducive [*421] to the interest of the public, and was consequently void.

"Ellenborough, C. J.: How can you contend that it is in restraint of trade? They are left at liberty to charge what they like, though not more than each other, [***197] and, by agreement, particular days and times for each to run in the week are fixed. This is merely a convenient mode of arranging two concerns which might otherwise ruin each other.

"Abbott then observed that there was a stipulation not to be engaged in other coach concerns or in any other coach. The whole deed upon oyer was before the court, and the court will not support this contract. There is no consideration but the mutual restraint. There is no averment that they continued to run their coach. There was no partnership interest between the plaintiff and the defendant, and they were proprietors of different coaches, and the covenant was in restraint of the other coach, though the parties covenanting might cease to run."

"Bailey, J.: If one cease to run, is not the contract then at an end? And if you do not perform your part of the contract, you should show your excuse. A general restraint is bad."

"Ellenborough, C. J.: If this argument could be sustained, then a covenant in an indenture of partnership, that neither of the parties should be engaged in any other business with any other persons would not be good, because it might prevent the public from having the industry in another [***198] business. Each contracting party here has one day to work his particular coach, nor is there any limitation as to the size of the coach; the defendant may have a long coach. This agreement does not preclude a third or more persons from starting in opposition to plaintiff and defendant."

Gale v. Reed, 8 East 80, was as follows:

[*422] Defendant made a contract with plaintiffs, by the terms of which, among other things, he agreed to transfer his business of cord-making to plaintiff -- he further agreed not to engage in such business during his lifetime, except for the government, or any public board. The breach assigned is: "That after the making of the indenture the defendant carried on the business of a rope-maker, and made cordage for divers persons other than by virtue of any contract which the defendant had entered into after the making of the said indenture, to make cordage, i. e., for government, contrary to his covenant."

"Ellenborough, C. J.: It has been contended on the part of the defendant, that the covenant on which the breaches have been assigned is void, as being a contract made in particular restraint of trade, without adequate consideration to the party restrained [***199] upon the authority of Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, and other cases . . . . Laying, therefore, this objection of form out of the case, it remains to be considered whether the covenant in question be void, upon the ground already mentioned, viz: as being a particular restraint of trade, without adequate consideration. And the object and intention of the parties to this indenture appears to have been to devolve upon and exclusively to appropriate to the Gales, the plaintiffs, all the beneficial private trade of the defendant in this business of rope-making; leaving him at liberty to make and execute on his own account such contracts for cordage as he had made or might enter into with the government or any of the public boards. The indenture uniformly contemplates this trade as a trade carried on upon credit only. The only compensation which the indenture provides for the defendant as the consideration for his restraint, and for the benefit to be derived for the plaintiffs in this respect, is a payment and allowance of two shillings on every hundred weight of cordge. . . .

[*423] "Supposing the former part of this covenant to be, for the reason given, properly narrowed by [***200] the terms of dealing to which it refers, it will hardly be contended that the more general words to be found in the latter part of the same covenant shall not be restrained and qualified by the same context. The words are 'and shall not nor will employ any other person or persons whomsoever to make any other cordage, or any part thereof, under any pretense whatsoever.' To construe them according to the strict letter would impose a restraint without compensation to the party restrained, and to the possible prejudice of the public. [**1034] Whereas to construe them with reference to the immediately antecedent words of the covenant in question, and the true scope and object of the whole indenture, renders the sense uniform and consistent throughout, makes the compensation and restraint commensurate with each other, and obviates the possible inconvenience, both public and private, which might result from a different construction. And this mode of construction is agreeable to the received rules and maxims, as well as to the authorities of law; for as is said in Plowd. 18: 'The scope and end of every matter is principally to be considered; and if the scope and end of the matter be satisfied, [***201] then is the matter itself and the intent thereof also accomplished.' . . .

"Feeling ourselves therefore warranted, by these and other authorities of law, in narrowing, according to the intention of the deed, the general words of the restrictive covenant to those cases of restraint only in which the party restrained can have the stipulated benefit for his restraint, and the party in whose favor the restraint is created, shall choose to avail himself of the restraint imposed upon the other, the covenant in question will stand clear of the objection made to it, as being a particular restraint of trade without adequate consideration, and that objection being removed out of the way (as for [*424] the reasons above stated we think it is), the plaintiff is entitled to judgment."

In Central Shade-Roller Co. v. Cushman (143 Mass. 353, 9 N.E. 629) 9 N.E. 629, it was held that where several parties, severally engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling balance shade-rollers, for the purpose of avoiding competition, organize themselves into a corporation, and severally enter into an agreement with the corporation, so organized, that all sales of the shade-roller shall be made [***202] in the name of the corporation, and at once reported to it; that, when either party shall establish an agency in any city for the sale of a roller made exclusively for that purpose, no other party shall take orders for the same roller in the same place; and that the prices for rollers of the same grade, made by different parties, shall be the same, and shall be, according to a schedule contained in the contract, subject to changes which may be made by the corporation upon recommendation of three-fourths of the stockholders, the agreement is valid, and not void as in restraint of trade.

These two last cases seem to fully support the contention of respondents; but there are two reasons why they are not controlling authorities in the case at bar:

First. Because they arose at a time when the industrial, commercial and transportation institutions of the country were not numerous, comparatively small, with limited means and restricted trade. Under those conditions the effects of such combinations as those mentioned in those cases were so small and insignificant, the common law seemed to have ignored them, the rules of which were not near so stringent as are the provisions of our anti-trust [**203] statutes. But the extraordinary growth of those institutions in modern times, with capitalizations and assets reaching up into the hundreds of millions of dollars, few in number, driving and consuming small competitors as the prairie fire consumed the dry grass, with business girdling the [*425] globe and extending from pole to pole, presents a totally different trade condition in this country from that which existed then. Let three or four of those gigantic institutions enter into such combinations as those mentioned in those cases, regarding any line of commodities, and the effect would be instantly felt by the entire country, monopolies would spring up, production and distribution would be curtailed, commerce would be restrained, prices would go up, and living expenses would increase; while, upon the other hand, the smaller industrial institutions would decrease in numbers; laborers would be thrown out of employment; the smaller producer and dealer would be crushed by sheer force of capital; and stagnation and starvation would befall all who were so unfortunate as not to belong to the combinations. Under these changed conditions, in my judgment, even the common law rules against [**204] restraint of trade are fully ample to abate and prohibit such combinations. Clearly those cases are not in harmony with the great mass of authority upon that subject in this country and in England.

Second. Because, conceding the common law was not ample to control such combination, yet our trust statutes were enacted for the purpose of aiding and supplementing the common law along those lines; but the common law rule as announced by those decisions is in direct conflict with our statutes upon that subject. It is perfectly apparent by reading those cases and then by reading our anti-trust statutes, that they are diametrically opposed to each other. Those cases sustain contracts made in restraint of trade, while the statutes declare all such contracts to be null and void. The Massachusetts case seems to have gone off on the ground that the shade-rollers were not articles of prime necessity; but our statutes make no distinctions as to the kind of goods affected by the trust agreement. But suppose it did, it cannot be contended [*426] that the products of petroleum are not articles of prime necessity for the people.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the Master properly considered [**205] all of these facts in connection with all the other facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence in the case.

It is next contended by counsel for respondents, that at common law they had the legal right to cut prices on sales of oils, or to give rebates from those prices, in order to secure the trade from their competitors. This contention calls for a review of the authorities [**1035] upon that question.

Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor ( L. R. 21 Q. B. D. 544), affirmed in the Court of Appeals ( L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 598), and in the House of Lords (L. R. App. Cas. [1892] 25), is the leading case upon the subject. The facts as stated in the syllabus were: "The defendants, who were firms of ship-owners trading between China and Europe, with a view of obtaining for themselves a monopoly of the homeward tea-trade and thereby keeping up the rate of freight, formed themselves into an association, and offered to such merchants and shippers in China as shipped their tea exclusively in vessels belonging to members of the association a rebate of five per cent on all freights paid by them."

Lord Coleridge, C. J. ( L. R. 21 Q. B. D. 544, 552, 553, 554), at nisi prius, said: [**206] "The defendants are traders with enormous sums of money embarked in their adventures, and naturally and allowably desirous to reap a profit from their trade. HN65↑ They have a right to push their lawful trade by all lawful means. They have a right to endeavor by lawful means to keep their trade in their own hands and by the same means to exclude others from its benefits, if they can. Amongst lawful means is certainly included the inducing by profitable offers customers to deal with them rather than with their rivals. It follows that they may, if they think fit, [*427] endeavor to induce customers to deal with them exclusively by giving notice that only to exclusive customers will they give the advantage of their profitable offers. I do not think it matters that the withdrawal of the advantages is out of all proportion to the injury inflicted on those who withdraw them by the customers, who decline to deal exclusively with them, dealing with other traders. It is a bargain which persons in the position of the defendants here had a right to make, and those who are parties to the bargain must take it or leave it as a whole. Of coercion, of bribing, I see no evidence; of inducing, in the [***207] sense in which the word is used in the class of cases to which Lumley v. Gye (2 E. & B. 216), belongs, I see none either. One word in passing only on the contention that this combination of the defendants was unlawful because it was in restraint of trade. It seems to me it was no more in restraint of trade, as that phrase is used for the purpose of avoiding contracts, than if two tailors in a village agreed to give their customers five per cent off their bills at Christmas on condition of their customers' dealing with them and with them only. Restraint of trade, with deference, has in its legal sense nothing to do with this question . . . . It must be remembered that all trade is and must be in a sense selfish; trade not being infinite, nay, the trade of a particular place or district being possibly very limited, what one man gains another loses. In the hand to hand war of commerce, as in the conflicts of public life, whether at the bar, in Parliament, in medicine, in engineering (I give examples only), men fight on without much thought of others, except a desire to excel or to defeat them. Very lofty minds, like Sir Philip Sidney with his cup of water, will not stoop to take an [***208] advantage, if they think another wants it more. Our age, in spite of high authority to the contrary, is not without its Sir Philip Sidneys; but these are counsels of perfection which it would be silly indeed to make [*428] the measure of the rough business of the world as pursued by ordinary men of business. The line is in words difficult to draw, but I cannot see that these defendants have in fact passed the line which separates the reasonable and legitimate selfishness of traders from wrong and malice. In 1884 they admitted the plaintiffs to their conference, in 1885 they excluded them, and they were determined, no doubt, if they could, to make the exclusion complete and effective, not from any personal malice or ill-will to the plaintiffs as individuals, but because they were determined, if they could, to keep the trade to themselves; and if they permitted persons in the position of the plaintiffs to come in and share it they thought, and honestly, and, as it turns out, correctly thought, that for a time at least there would be an end of their gains."

In affirming this view ( L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 598, 614, 616, 620, 625) in the court of appeal, Bowen, L. J., said: "They have [***209] done nothing more against the plaintiffs than to pursue to the bitter end a war of competition waged in the interest of their own trade. To the argument that a competition so pursued ceases to have a just cause or excuse when there is ill will or a personal intention to harm, it is sufficient to reply (as I have already pointed out) that there was here no personal intention to do any other or greater harm to the plaintiffs than such as was necessarily involved in the desire to attract to the defendants' ships the entire tea freights of the ports, a portion of which would otherwise have fallen to the plaintiff's share. I can find no authority for the doctrine that such a commercial motive deprives of 'just cause or excuse' acts done in the course of trade which would but for such a motive be justifiable. So to hold would be to convert into an illegal motive the instinct of self-advancement and self-protection, which is the very incentive to all trade. HN66↑ To say that a man is to trade freely, but that he is to stop short at any act which is calculated to harm other tradesmen, [*429] and which is designed to attract business to his own shop, would be a strange and impossible counsel [***210] of perfection. But we were told that competition ceases to be the lawful exercise of trade, and so to be a lawful excuse for what will harm another, if carried to a length which is not fair or reasonable. The offering of reduced rates by the defendants in [**1036] the present case is said to have been 'unfair.' This seems to assume that, apart from fraud, intimidation, molestation, or obstruction, of some other personal right in rem or in personam, there is some natural standard of 'fairness' or 'reasonableness' (to be determined by the internal consciousness of judges and juries) beyond which competition ought not in law to go. There seems to be no authority, and I think, with submission, that there is no sufficient reason for such a proposition. It would impose a novel fetter upon trade. The defendants, we are told by the plaintiffs' counsel, might lawfully lower rates provided they did not lower them beyond a 'fair freight,' whatever that may mean. But where is it established that there is any such restriction upon commerce? And what is to be the definition of a 'fair freight?' It is said that it ought to be normal rate of freight, such as is reasonably remunerative [***211] to the ship owner. But over what period of time is the average of this reasonable remunerativeness to be calculated? All commercial men with capital are acquainted with the ordinary expedient of sowing one year a crop of apparently unfruitful prices, in order by driving competition away to reap a fuller harvest of profit in the future; and until the present argument at the bar it may be doubted whether ship owners or merchants were ever deemed to be by law bound to conform to some imaginary 'normal' standard of freights or prices, or that Law Courts had a right to say to them in respect of their competitive tariffs, 'Thus far shalt thou go and no further.' To attempt to limit English competition [*430] in this way would probably be as hopeless an endeavor as the experiment of King Canute. But on ordinary principles of law no such fetter on freedom of trade can in my opinion be warranted. A man is bound not to use his property so as to infringe upon another's right. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. If engaged in actions which may involve danger to others, he ought, speaking generally, to take reasonable care to avoid endangering them. But there is surely no doctrine of [***212] law which compels him to use his property in a way that judges and juries may consider reasonable; see Chasemore v. Richards (7 H. L. C. 349). If there is no such fetter upon the use of property known to the English law, why should there be any such fetter upon trade? . . . In the result, I agree with Lord Coleridge, C. J., and differ, with regret, from the Master of the Rolls. The substance of my views is this, that competition, however severe and egotistical, if unattended by circumstances of dishonesty, intimidation, molestation, or such illegalities as I have above referred to, gives rise to no cause of action at common law. I, myself, would deem it to be a misfortune if we were to attempt to prescribe to the business world how honest and peaceable trade was to be carried on in a case where no such illegal elements as I have mentioned exist, or were to adopt some standard of judicial 'reasonableness' or of 'normal' prices, or 'fair freights,' to which commercial adventurers, otherwise innocent, were bound to conform."

Fry, L. J. said: "The defendants did not aim at any general injury of the plaintiffs' trade, or any reduction of them to poverty or insolvency; they only desired [***213] to drive them away from particular ports, where the defendants conceived that the plaintiffs' presence interfered with their own gain. The damage to be inflicted on the plaintiffs was to be strictly limited by the gain which the defendants desired to win for themselves."

[*431] In the House of Lords (L. R. App. Cas. (1892) 25, 40, 43, 48, 49, 50, 51, 54, 58-59), Lord Halsbury, L. C., said: "I am of opinion, therefore, that the whole matter comes round to the original proposition, whether a combination to trade, and to offer, in respect of prices, discounts, and other trade facilities, such terms as will win so large an amount of custom as to render it unprofitable for rival customers to pursue the same trade is unlawful, and I am clearly of the opinion that it is not."

Lord Watson said: "I cannot for a moment suppose that it is the proper function of English courts of law to fix the lowest prices at which traders can sell or hire, for the purpose of protecting or extending their business, without committing a legal wrong which will subject them in damages. Until that becomes the law of the land, it is, in my opinion, idle to suggest that the legality of mercantile competition [***214] ought to be gauged by the amount of the consideration for which a competing trader thinks fit to part with his goods or to accept employment . . . The only means by which they endeavored to obtain shipments for their vessels, to the exclusion of others, was the inducement of cheaper rates of freight than the appellants were willing to accept."

Lord Bramwell said: "If there were two shopkeepers in a village and one sold an article at cost price, not for profit therefore, but to attract customers or cause his rival to leave off selling the article only, it could not be said he was liable to an action. I cannot think that the defendants did more than they had a legal right to do. I adopt the vigorous language and opinion of Fry, L. J.: "To draw a line between fair and unfair competition, between what is reasonable and unreasonable, passes the power of the courts."

Lord Morris said: "It is not illegal for a trader to aim at driving a competitor out of trade, provided the motive be his own gain by appropriation of the [*432] trade, and the means he uses be lawful weapons. Of the first four of the means used by the defendants, the rebate to customers and the lowering of the freights [***215] are the same in principle, being a bonus by the defendants to customers to [**1037] come and deal exclusively with them. The sending of ships to compete, and the indemnifying other ships was 'the competition' entered on by the defendants with the plaintiffs. The fifth means used, viz., the dismissal of agents, might be questionable according to the circumstances; but in the present case, the agents filled an irreconcilable position in being agents for the two rivals, the plaintiffs and the defendants. Dismissal under such circumstances became, perhaps, a necessary incident of the warfare in trade. All the acts done, and the means used by the defendants were acts of competition for the trade. There was nothing in the defendants' acts to disturb any existing contract of the plaintiffs, or to induce any one to break such. Their action was aimed at making it unlikely that any one would enter into contracts with the plaintiffs, the defendants offering such competitive inducements as would probably prevent them. The use of rhetorical phrases in the correspondence cannot affect the real substance and meaning of it . . . I cannot see why judges should be considered specially gifted with [***216] prescience of what may hamper or what may increase trade, or of what is to be the test of adequate remuneration. In these days of instant communication with almost all parts of the world competition is the life of trade, and I am not aware of any stage of competition called 'fair' intermediate between lawful and unlawful. The question of 'fairness' would be relegated to the idiosyncrasies of individual judges. I can see no limit to competition, except that you shall not invade the rights of another."

Lord Field said: "It is absolutely unnecessary to consider whether these grounds were morally or commercially [*433] justifiable. They were not unlawful, and they were of a nature legitimately, if not necessarily, to be taken into account in carrying on the respondents' business with profit."

Lord Hannon said: "The object of every trader is to procure for himself as large a share of the trade he is engaged in as he can. If then the object of the defendants was legitimate, were the means adopted by them open to objection? I cannot see that they were. They sought to induce shippers to employ them rather than the plaintiffs by offering to such shippers as should, during a fixed period, [***217] deal exclusively with them the advantage of a rebate upon the freights they had paid. This is, in effect, nothing more than the ordinary form of competition between traders by offering goods or services at a cheaper rate than their rivals."

In Lough v. Outerbridge (143 N.Y. 271, 38 N.E. 292, 296) it was said of the right to grant rebates when not prohibited by statute:

"The monopoly which the law views with disfavor is the manipulation of a business in which the public are interested in such a way as to enable one or a few to control and regulate it in their own interest, and to the detriment of the public, by exacting unreasonable charges. But when an individual or a corporation has established a business of a special and limited character, such as the defendants in this case had, they have a right to retain it by the use of all lawful means. That was what the defendants attempted to do against a competitor that engaged in it, not regularly and permanently, but incidentally and occasionally. The means adopted for this purpose was to offer the service to the public at a loss to themselves whenever the competition was to be met, and, when it disappeared, to resume the standard rates, [***218] which, upon the record, did not at any time exceed a reasonable and fair charge. I cannot perceive anything unlawful or against the public good in seeking by such means to retain a business [*434] which it does not appear was of sufficient magnitude to furnish employment for both lines."

In Walsh v. Dwight (40 A.D. 513, 58 N.Y.S. 91, 92, 93, 94), it was, as stated in the syllabus, decided: "An agreement by a manufacturer with his customers to give them a rebate if they should refuse to sell his article, or other similar articles, at less than a certain price, is not a restraint of trade."

Ingraham, J., said: "The defendants simply offered to parties purchasing their goods to make a reduction in the prices of goods sold, in consideration of the purchasers agreeing not to sell the goods at a less price than that named, and not to sell the goods of other manufacturers at a less price than that at which they agreed to sell the defendants' goods. It is difficult to see upon what ground it can be claimed that such a contract is illegal. That the defendants would have the right to establish agencies for the sale of their goods, or to employ others to sell them, at such prices as [***219] the defendants should designate, cannot be disputed. Nor can it be that a manufacturer of merchandise cannot agree to sell to others upon condition that the vendees, in selling at retail, should charge a specified price for the goods sold, or should sell only the manufactured products of the manufacturer. If a dealer in articles of this kind, for his own advantage agrees to confine his business to a particular line of goods, or agrees with the manufacturer to charge a particular price for the articles which he sells in his business such an agreement is not illegal, as in restraint of trade or as tending to create a monopoly, as there is nothing in the agreement to prevent others from engaging in the business or the manufacturers of other articles from selling their products to anyone who is willing to buy. There is nothing to prevent an individual from selling any property that he has at any price which he can get for it . . . There is nothing in this contract that restrains or prevents [*435] competition in the supply or the price of any [**1038] article or commodity. The act is entitled, 'An Act to prevent monopolies in articles of general necessity,' and it makes illegal [***220] a contract or combination whereby competition in the State of New York in the supply or price of any article or commodity of common use may be restrained or prevented for the purpose of advancing prices. This act did not have the effect of preventing a manufacturer from fixing the price at which his articles should be sold, or from making an agreement with those persons who acted as the jobbers or retailers of his manufactured articles that they would deal exclusively in his merchandise, or would not sell the merchandise of other persons at a less price than that for which his product was sold. The act was evidently intended to prevent manufacturers or dealers in any article or commodity of common use from combining together to advance the price of such article or commodity, by which competition in the supply or price of the same would be restricted or regulated; but a contract by a single manufacturer as to the price at which his goods, when manufactured, should be sold by those selected by him for the purpose of sale or distribution, would not be a contract by which competition in the supply or price of the commodity would be restrained or prevented. All of the manufacturers could [***221] compete with these defendants in the sale of these goods, or the making of a contract such as was made by the defendants. The contract in question simply gave to such of their customers as chose to make the agreement with them an advantage as to price for which the goods were purchased which those who refused to come to such an understanding did not share. That such an agreement is not illegal has been settled by a long line of authorities."

In In Re Greene, 52 F. 104, 116, 117, 118, Mr. Justice Jackson said: "Was the arrangement with the Boston purchasers, as to making them a rebate upon [*436] the conditions stated, an attempt to monopolize any part of the trade and commerce among the States in distillery products? It is not alleged, nor is it to be inferred from anything that is set forth, that said purchasers bound themselves, or entered into any contractual obligations or understanding, to buy their distillery supplies exclusively from distributing agents of said Distilling & Cattle Feeding Company. They were left at perfect liberty to purchase when, where, or from whom they pleased. No contractual or other restraint was placed upon them. Upon certain conditions, which [***222] it was entirely optional with them to comply with or disregard, a rebate was promised by the seller. Such an arrangement does not amount to a contract to purchase exclusively from said distilling company or its distributing agents. But, suppose it did, there was nothing in such an agreement unlawful or in contravention of the statute. The promise of a rebate, as an inducement for exclusive trading, certainly does not constitute an 'attempt to monopolize,' when the purchaser is left at liberty to buy where he pleases, and when all other sellers of the article are left unrestrained in offering the same, or greater, inducements. As to the remaining condition upon which the rebate was to be payable, the same observation may be made. The purchasers were placed under no contractual or other restraint in respect to the price at which they should sell. They were simply offered a rebate, as an inducement not to undersell the vendor's distributing agents, two of whom were located at Boston, Mass. The arrangement relied on, considered either in detail or as a whole, involved no 'attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the States.' The rebate promised, upon condition of exclusive [***223] purchases and not underselling the vendor's distributing agents, was a legitimate method of inducing trade; but the means thus employed in no way operated to prevent or restrain others from offering the same, or greater, inducements. [*437] The condition as to not selling at lower prices than those of the distributing agents may have had a tendency to maintain prices, but that would not have been an attempt to monopolize trade. The inducements offered for the exclusive trade, and to sell at no lower prices than the price list of the distributing agents, was not prejudicial to the public. It was in no way contrary to public policy, or an unlawful restraint of trade, as will be seen from the authorities hereinafter referred to . . . The matter of the promised rebate upon the same conditions as set forth in the second count, which is charged to have been a contract in restraint of trade and commerce among the States, and between the State of Massachusetts and other states, does not constitute any offense against the United States, or in any way contravene the first section of the Act of July 2, 1890, because there was actually no contract which bound, or attempted to bind, the Massachusetts [***224] purchasers of alcohol, as to where or from whom they could make further purchases during the period stated, nor as to the price or prices at which they should sell. They were simply offered an inducement in respect to those matters, which they were at perfect liberty to comply with or decline. They were not restrained by any contractual obligation during the stipulated period. The agreement was wholly unilateral during that period. Upon compliance with the conditions as alleged in the fourth count, they were entitled to the rebate; but such compliance had no retroactive operation to create a valid and subsisting contract between the parties prior thereto, or during the period intervening between the date of the promise and the full compliance with [**1039] the conditions on which the rebate was to be paid. During that period there was between the parties no contract in restraint of trade. But suppose the arrangement could by any possibility be construed into a contract between the parties from the date of the promise, or during the stipulated period, [*438] it could not be held to be a contract in restraint of trade. It is not deemed necessary to review the authorities upon [***225] the subject of contracts in restraint of trade, nor would it be at all profitable."

In Re Corning, 51 F. 205, 211, involved the question, the Government contending that the granting of rebates was a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Judge Ricks, in denying the contention, said: "Such dealers were offered the rebate as an inducement to purchase exclusively from the defendants, and to sell at the prices defendants fixed; but there is no contract averred by which the dealers obligated themselves to do so. In what respects, then, are these acts charged different from the customary efforts of manufacturers or dealers to increase the sale of their products and push their business by the many artifices of trade? There are no contracts averred, as between the defendants and their customers, which are in restraint of trade. Their acts are rather intended to increase their trade, but not by restraining the liberty of the customer to deal with others, if he wishes to, or can do so, with advantage to himself. If these acts are illegal and in restraint of trade, and if they constitute a monopoly under this act, it may well be denominated an act to restrain legitimate enterprise, and limit [***226] and qualify the ownership in property. The acts charged are common and frequent to many branches of manufacture and trade, and if the defendants are guilty in the manner of making sales of their products as set forth in the indictment, the act is more sweeping in its provisions than ever contemplated by Congress, as manifestly appears from the debates in the Senate when the act was before it for consideration."

In Re Terrell, 51 F. 213, 215, was a like case. Judge Lacombe said: "The points of law arising upon this indictment were all carefully considered by Judge Ricks in his opinion (filed June 11, 1892, N. Dist. Ohio) on application for a removal in Re Corning, 51 F. 205. [*439] In that opinion I entirely concur . . . During that period they bought such products only from certain named dealers in a limited number of States, and sold only at prices fixed by the defendants; but they did so only because they chose to -- because the offer of a rebate to purchasers who would thus conduct their business was an inducement operating upon their self interest. No obligation of any kind constrained them to do so during that entire period, certainly, no contract restrained them, [***227] for there was no contract in existence. They were entirely free to buy from whom they pleased, and to sell at any price they chose. The statute does not prohibit the offering of special inducements to such purchasers as shall make all their purchases from a single concern, and shall sell only at the prices fixed by it, even though those inducements be so favorable as to accomplish their object."

In Ex Parte Benson & Co., 18 S.C. 38, 44 Am. Rep. 564, 567, 568, it was said: "Independent of statutes and provisions in their charters restricting corporations within certain limits, they stand in the community as other individuals invested with the power to contract and be contracted with, and the validity of their contracts depends upon the same principles which govern in contracts between natural persons. It is too vague to say, in general terms, that the contract is inequitable and against public policy, and therefore not enforceable. To be void on such grounds it must run counter to some known principle of equity or contravene some well established doctrine of public policy forbidding it. We do not know that this contract was obnoxious to any of these objections; nor in the face of [***228] the testimony of the experienced superintendent who gave it, can we say that it was unnecessary. The cotton which he brought to the head of his road at Anderson Court House was grown in the State of Georgia, at a distance from Anderson. The Savannah river, running between Anderson and Hartwell, was its [*440] natural outlet to market, and, no doubt, afforded cheaper transportation. With these obstacles in the way, it required some inducement to be held out so as to bring this cotton to the Greenville road. And so long as the charges against others were not unreasonable, and in no way increased by the rebate offered to it, what ground is there for the courts to interfere? It is the province of the court to enforce contracts, not to destroy them."

In dealing with this subject it was, in Cowden v. Pacific C. S. S. Co., 94 Cal. 470, 29 P. 873, 874, 875, said: "The fundamental and statute law of the various States upon this subject appears to have been founded upon the principles embodied in the early acts of parliament pertaining to the conduct and control of railways as common carriers, rather than upon the common law of England. Indeed, we have been able to obtain but few direct [***229] adjudications from English courts upon this question, owing to the fact that it would seem the business of inland common carriers in that country was not a matter of great concern until railroads were operated; and, immediately subsequent to that great epoch in the world's progress, statutory enactments followed, entirely taking away from the courts the necessity of any further application of the common law [**1040] rights and remedies. If the common law were as appellant here contends it to be, there would have been no necessity for parliament to have enacted these stringent 'equality clauses,' as they were termed. . . . During the progress of the argument in Baxendale v. Railroad, 4 C. B. (N. S.) 78, Justice Byles said: 'I know no common law reason why a carrier may not charge less than what is reasonable to one person, or even carry him free of all charge."

What has been said is peculiarly applicable to a private business as distinguished from a public employment. Thus, in Beale & Wyman on Railroad Rate Regulation, section 1, it is said: "In private businesses, [**441] one may sell or not, as one pleases, manufacture what qualities one chooses, demand any price that can [***230] be got, and give any rebates that are advantageous. But in public businesses one must serve all that apply without exclusive conditions, provide adequate facilities to meet all the demands of the consumer, exact only reasonable charges for the services that are rendered, and between customers under similar circumstances make no discriminations."

In Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 60 C.C.A. 290, c 125 F. 454, 461, Judge Sanborn said: "The tobacco company and its employee were not required, like competitors engaged in public or quasi-public service, to sell to all applicants who sought to buy, or to sell to all intending purchasers at the same prices. They had the right to select their customers, to sell and to refuse to sell to whomsoever they chose, and to fix different prices for sales of the same commodities to different persons. In the exercise of this right they selected those persons who would refrain from handling the goods of their competitors as their customers, by selling their products to them at lower prices than they offered them to others."

These authorities clearly sustain the proposition that, HN67↑ at common law, traders, manufacturers and common carriers have the [***231] right to give rebates to their patrons and customers in order to secure and retain their business. But it will be seen by reading those cases that the rebates were given in order to secure business and not for the purpose of stifling competition, or as a means by which to control, fix and maintain prices.

It has not and cannot be seriously contended that the Legislature does not possess the power to enact laws preventing all rebates being made the object of which is in restraint of trade or which tends to fix and maintain prices.

[*442] If therefore rebates are used as a means in pursuance of a combine or agreement in restraint of trade, or for the purpose of fixing and maintaining prices, then such combination or agreement is prohibited by the statutes, and is, of course, void on that account. State ex inf. v. [Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645.]

Respondents, however, contend that there is no evidence in this record which tends to show that the rebates were made for any such purposes. We are unable to lend our concurrence to that contention.

When we consider the system of espionage established and maintained by them, over the business of their competitors, [***232] the independent oil companies, and by which they acquired perfect knowledge of their business; and then, as the evidence tends to show, by the means of rebates, prevented all of them from doing more than ten to fifteen per cent of the aggregate oil business of the State, and by the same means fixed and maintained the prices at which all oils were sold in the State -- not only by themselves but also by all of the independent companies -- then it is difficult to see how it can be logically contended that the rebate system maintained by respondents does not tend to prove the unlawful conspiracy and combination, in restraint of trade, complained of in the information.

We are of the opinion that the rebates made in the manner disclosed by the evidence in this case tends to show there was a combination or agreement existing between respondents, which is violative of the antitrust statutes of this State.

When we view this case as an entirety, we are unable to see how the Master could have honestly reached any other conclusion than that found in his report filed herein.

Let us take a birds-eye view of this case.

The Standard Oil interests of this country are represented by some eight [***233] or ten subsidiary corporations, diffused throughout the States, and are matrixed [*443] in, if I may so use that word, and operated from the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, with a capitalization of $ 110,000,000. These minor companies, including the respondents, are but parts of, and derive their power, character and business policies and directions from, that mother company.

The New Jersey Company either owns all or the majority of the stock of all of said minor companies. It elects their officers and directors, and formulates and outlines their business policies. The officers and directors thus chosen carry out those policies to the letter, with daily, monthly and annual reports of their stewardship. The office of the New Jersey Company is located at 26 Broadway, New York City; and each and all of these minor companies have a representative located in that same office who conduct all business transactions which take place between them and that company. That company also has located in the office mentioned representatives who inspect and audit the books and papers of all of said companies and otherwise assist and participate in the arrangement and control of their business. [***234] In other words, the New Jersey Company keeps in touch with and is constantly informed of the business [**1041] policies and transactions to the minutest detail.

The New Jersey Company, either through itself or through some one of its subsidiary companies, furnishes to all of said companies all the oils and the products of petroleum handled by them; and neither it nor they will sell any of such commodities to any other, or independent company, except in a few instances where they have offered to make such sales at retail prices.

The New Jersey Company also furnishes the pipe lines and tank cars through which and in which all of the oil handled by those companies is transported, from one point to another, with the exception of the Waters-Pierce Company; it owns and uses about one-half of the tank cars required to transport its oils, and the [*444] New Jersey Company furnishes the remainder. The record also discloses the fact that none of these companies will transport or permit their cars to be used for the transportation of oils for any independent company.

This record also discloses the fact that there has never been any genuine competition for trade between any of these [***235] companies, nor cutting of prices; while, upon the other hand, they have waged the most relentless war and competition against each and all of the independent companies. In order to drive out all competitors and to monopolize the entire trade, they inaugurated and carried on a perfect system of espionage, by which they acquired complete knowledge of their competitors' business, and followed almost every barrel of independent oil shipped over a railroad to the very door of the dealer, and there, by means of cutting prices, offering rebates, misrepresentation and deception, attempted to have the sale countermanded and to prevent him from purchasing independent oil in the future. In furtherance of that system the New Jersey Company purchased the Schofield, Shurmer & Teagle Oil Company, and had it reorganized under the name of the Republic Oil Company, whose chief office was to follow up the business of the independent companies, and under the guise of being an independent company and by means of rebates, fraud and deception, waged a most vigorous competition against them, in all districts where they competed with the other respondents, while the latter refused to compete for business against [***236] each other, or to reduce prices to meet those made by the Republic Company, as a means of fighting the independents.

In other words, the Indiana Company and the Waters-Pierce Company maintained their territorial division of the State, and thereby indirectly agreed not to compete with each other for business herein, which was equivalent to entering into a contract in restraint [*445] of trade, and thereby enabled them to fix and maintain prices at which they sold oils in this State. If the independents encroached upon the business of either, and reduced the aggregate amount of its sales, or reduced the price of oils, then the Republic Company was set upon the offending independents, and practically drove them out of business by selling their customers oils at reduced prices or by giving rebates.

While this vigorous competition was going on between the independents and the Republic Company, the Indiana Company and Waters-Pierce Company were living up to their understanding and agreement and pursuing their fixed business policies in the even tenor of their way, maintaining prices at which they sold oils, and declining to compete with each other for business. And when the Republic [***237] Company had sufficiently chastised the independents, and thereby curbed their desire and ambition to increase the volume of their business, by the reduction of price of oils or otherwise, it would then practically retire from the field of operation and eagerly await the next combat with the independents, if, perchance, any one of them was so timorous as to challenge the monopoly of those two companies by seeking any portion of their trade. The office and the important part played by the Republic Company in the scheme is made more apparent by the declaration of one of its officers, to the effect that this suit exposed the ownership of the company, and it had to go out of business, because it had served its purpose, and there was nothing left for it to do; meaning, of course, that the Standard interest could no longer deceive and impose upon the public by the means of that company. And as a necessary sequence to that condition, the Republic Company attempted to voluntarily retire from the State, and moved the Master to dismiss the cause as to it, which he refused to do, and it has renewed that motion here, which has [*446] received consideration in another portion of this opinion.

[***238] When the foregoing facts are viewed in the light of the common ownership of the stock of all the Standard Oil companies, it does not require a very great stretch of the imagination to see why such close and intimate business schemes and relations have existed so long and harmoniously among them.

The common interest running through all of those companies is responsible for their formation and business schemes and policies, and lead up to and induce the Standard interest, including the respondents, to divide the State in twain; to furnish oil and transportation for each other; to decline to sell to or transport oils for the independents; and to fight them with the Republic Company by a system of espionage and rebates. The direct and inevitable effect of those facts, which are not seriously disputed, was to create, by indirection, a pool, trust and combination in restraint of trade, and to fix and maintain prices at which respondents sold the products of petroleum in this State. There is no logical escape from the conclusion that it was the [**1042] intention of respondents and of the other Standard Oil companies that those things agreed to among themselves should and would have [***239] the effect of producing a trust and combination among them in restraint of trade and in violation of our anti-trust statutes.

It stands out admitted in bold relief that the Indiana and Waters-Pierce Companies are both engaged in the sale and delivery of the same kind and grades of oils; that they are not competitors for business, notwithstanding the fact that both are well equipped and amply able financially to vigorously compete therefor. This lack of competition between these two gigantic institutions is not due to the fact that they are destitute of competitive instincts, or indifference as to the expansion of their trade, because they abundantly show both of [*447] those admirable qualities in their business contacts with the "independents"; but it is confessedly due to an agreement made and entered into between them, by which one sells in the north and the other in the south half of the State. If that agreement is not in restraint of trade and in violation of the letter and spirit of the anti-trust laws, then words have lost their meaning, contracts their potency, and the law its majesty. This combination confessedly was conceived in and born of the common interest of those [***240] two companies, and for the very purpose of preventing competition between them, and to maintain prices and enhance the profits of each, which it has done beyond the fondest dreams of either. Their business has grown from almost nothing in 1878 to gigantic proportions. The Waters-Pierce Company has assets worth $ 12,000,000, and the name and good will of the concern is valued at about $ 35,000,000, and is paying dividends of six or seven hundred per cent upon a capitalization of $ 400,000. It is clearly inferable from this record that the Indiana Company has fared equally as well if not better than has the Waters-Pierce Company.

Can it be supposed for a moment that such phenomenal results could have been accomplished by them if they had been engaged in open competition with each other? Certainly not. They knew that, and their object and purpose in entering into the combination was to monopolize the trade and maintain prices, which they did against all other competitors.

The Waters-Pierce Company fixed and maintained the prices not only for itself but also for the Republic Company and for all the independent dealers, and monopolized from eighty-five to ninety-five per cent of the volume [***241] of the oil business within its territory; while the Indiana Company did a little better in the north half of the State. It sold in that territory from ninety to ninety-eight per cent of the oil consumed therein, and fixed the prices for all dealers.

[*448] If the statutes were not intended to apply to this and similar combinations, then I would like to see a combination stated to which they do or could apply.

This combination is but one link in a chain of combinations, which include all of the Standard Oil interests, which control practically all of the crude oil of the country. That fact enabled it to fix the prices at which the Indiana and the Waters-Pierce Companies had to pay for refined oils; and upon those prices they based and fixed prices at which they and all others sold oils to the trade and consumers. Yet it is argued that they do not fix and maintain prices.

Not only that, but the record discloses the fact that within the last decade the production of crude oil has about doubled, caused by the discovery and development of new oil fields in Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma and Indian Territory; yet notwithstanding that fact, the price of refined oils has been upward during [***242] that period, and the price of crude oils has fallen more than fifty per cent.

And this record conclusively shows that the respondents absolutely fix and maintain the prices at which refined oils sell in this State, and that they and their allies control and fix the prices at which all crude oils are sold.

Their purpose in forming the combination by those means, rather than by an express contract, was clearly to escape the provisions of the common law and the statutes of the State in which they operated or conducted business.

Every contract made by them; their business policies and its management; their treatment of others; and the mode and manner of acquiring and holding trade, are but the footprints leading from the office of the New Jersey Company, No. 26 Broadway, New York City, through the various subsidiary companies, to the very hearthstone of the smallest consumers, throughout the country, including this State; and every imprint [*449] bears strong evidences of agreements and combines in restraint of trade.

No man can run faster than he makes tracks, and, in this case, as in all others, when carefully followed, the maker of them can be traced from his starting point [***243] to his place of destination.

In the case at bar we have traced every step and carefully considered every act of each and all of those companies, from the time of their organization down to the close of the evidence of this case, and they all point to guilt, and are inconsistent with all theories of innocence.

But it is finally insisted by counsel for respondents that Mr. Pierce of the Waters-Pierce Company had complete charge and control of that company, and directed its business independent of all other Standard influences. In one sense that is true. He does manage and control its business within the scope and bounds of the policies marked out by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, but no further. He and his company are but two of the many agents of the New Jersey Company in carrying out its monopolistic [***1043] schemes and combinations in restraint of trade throughout the entire country. When we lay aside the corporate guise of these companies, and view the interested parties, their objects and purposes, it is perfectly apparent that they have a common interest; all working in harmony to that end, and are not competing with each other in any sense of the word. Look at the [***244] Waters-Pierce Company from any viewpoint you may, and it is clearly seen that it is just as much a party to the trust and combine as is the Indiana Company or the Republic Company. What the one does the other does; they work hand in glove with each other, and for their mutual protection and benefit, and all of them work in harmony with the policies and for the best interest of the New Jersey Company.

[*450] In discussing a similar question this court said, in the case of State ex inf. v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, 73 S.W. 645: "It is quite too plain for doubt that persons or companies who are engaged in the same line of business, in the same place, do not . . . maintain an uniform selling price, etc . . . unless there has been an unlawful pool, trust or combination to fix and maintain prices. Such acts and circumstances and practices speak as loudly, as directly and as certainly, and tell as strong and conclusive a tale of wrongdoing in those regards as any witness could possibly testify to it or any resolution formally adopted by the directors or stockholders could prove it. Independent, therefore, of any admissions or statements of the managers of the coolers or [***245] of the solicitors, which, however, were clearly admissible, the State has made out a case against the respondents under the facts and circumstances of the case . . . So long as the law puts the stamp of condemnation on all arrangements, agreements, pools, trusts and conspiracies to fix and maintain the price of articles of prime necessity, the courts have no option but to enforce the law."

218 Mo. 1, *450LA 16 S.W. 902, **1043LA 909 Mo. LEXIS 316, ***245

---

End of Document

State v. General Fire Extinguisher Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Summit County, Ohio

January, 1910, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

20 Ohio Dec. 240 *; 1910 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 27 **; 9 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 438

STATE OF OHIO v. GENERAL FIRE EXTINGUISHER CO.

Disposition: [**1] Motion overruled.

Core Terms

---

indicted, imprisonment, provisions, antitrust, artificial, courts, fine, natural person, mischief, cases, legislative intent, criminal law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4427-4.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN2 [down arrow] Legislation, Interpretation

Criminal statutes must be construed strictly. That strict construction, however, must not be arbitrary, artificial or so narrow that the plain and obvious intendment of a statute is destroyed or diverted. It must be a reasonable construction, having due regard to the plain, ordinary, and natural meaning and scope of the language employed in the act.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Powers > Ultra Vires Doctrine

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Nuisances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

20 Ohio Dec. 240, *240L 1910 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 27, **1

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Powers > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > General Intent

HN3 Powers, Ultra Vires Doctrine

The later decisions, under English and American statutes, hold that a corporation is indictable and punishable if the plain and obvious provisions of a statute make it so. A corporation cannot in its corporate capacity commit a crime by an act in the fullest sense ultra vires and contrary to its nature. But within the sphere of its corporate capacity, and to an undefined extent beyond, whenever it assumes to act as a corporation it has the same capabilities of criminal intent and of act-in other words, of crime as an individual man sustaining to the thing the like relations. Corporations can commit criminal nuisance the same as individuals. When the law casts upon any corporation an obligation of such a nature that the neglect of it will be indictable in an individual, the corporation neglecting it may be indicted. No every misfeasance which will be indictable in an individual is so in a corporation. It must be within, or not too far outside of, the corporate duty.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4 Legislation, Interpretation

The fundamental rule of construction of all instruments is that the intention shall prevail, and for this purpose the whole of an instrument will be looked to. The real intention will always prevail over the literal use of terms. Legislative acts fall within the rule, and it has been well said that a thing, which is within the letter of a statute, is not within the statute unless it is within the intention of the lawmakers. A thing, which is within the intention of the makers of a statute, is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter. And a thing, which is within the letter of the statute, is not within the statute unless it is within the intention of the makers, and such a construction ought to be put upon it as does not suffer it to be included.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4427-12.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4427-12 must be read into every other section of the Valentine Antitrust Act of Ohio.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4427-9.

Constitutional Law > Separation of Powers

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 [down] Constitutional Law, Separation of Powers

It is not the province of judges and courts to defeat the obvious intention of a lawmaking body under the guise of judicial interpretation or construction; it is their business rather to give force and effect to the plain intent and provisions of a statute.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN9 [down] Justiciability, Standing

It is unusual for a complaint to be entered upon the ground of discrimination, when the discrimination is in favor of a complainant, and the rule is generally well settled that the complainant must leave such a grievance to a person actually aggrieved.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN10 [down] Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

No court has yet gone so far as to hold that in all cases the same duties, rights, or prerogatives that shall attach to persons must attach likewise to corporations, and vice versa. The corporation is in a class by itself, and courts have universally recognized such a class. They have gone much further, and recognized the right of the legislature to classify and subclassify corporations, and formulate one class of legislation applying to public corporations; another class of legislation applying to private corporations, subdividing the legislation as to private corporations, making a certain code apply to quasi-public, and another code apply to those that are wholly private corporations, and no court has so far declared such classification, so long as it is reasonable and founded upon substantial differences of condition and not mere arbitrary and artificial distinctions, unconstitutional and void.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW--CORPORATIONS--CRIMINAL LAW.

1. CORPORATION A PERSON UNDER VALENTINE LAW AND MAY BE PUNISHED.

A "corporation" is within the meaning the expression "any person" as used in Sec. 4 of the Valentine antitrust law and may be punished thereunder the same as a natural person.

2. THAT A CORPORATION CANNOT BE IMPRISONED UNDER CRIMINAL LAW IS NOT A DISCRIMINATION IN FAVOR OF CORPORATION.

That a corporation cannot be punished by imprisonment does not impair the constitutionality of Sec. 4 of the Valentine antitrust law, as being a discrimination in favor of corporations.

Counsel: F. J. Rockwell and S. G. Rogers, for plaintiff:

Grant, Sieber & Mather and Gillmer & Gillmer, for defendant:

Cited and commented upon the following authorities: 2 Sutherland, Stat. Constr. Sec. 577; State v. Fertilizer Co. 24 Ohio St. 611; Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618 [100 S.W. 705]; 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1015]; Dorn v. Cooper, 139 Iowa 742 [117 N.W. 1; 118 N.W. 35]; 8 Cyc. 1076; Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Morden, 159 Ind. 173 [64 N.E. 594]; State v. Railway, 23 Ind. 362; Southern Indiana Loan & Sav. Inst. v. Doyle, 26 Ind. App. 102 [59 N.E. 179]; Hughes v. State, 29 O. C. C. 237 (9 N.S. 369).

Judges: WANAMAKER, J.

Opinion by: WANAMAKER

Opinion

---

[*240] WANAMAKER, J.

The defendant, the General Fire Extinguisher Company, with [*241] others, was indicted by the grand jury of this county at the September, 1909, term of this court, under what is generally known as the Valentine antitrust law of Ohio.

To this indictment the defendant, the General Fire Extinguisher Company, filed its motion to quash, challenging the sufficiency of the indictment upon two grounds, to-wit: first, that Sec. 4 of said law does not include a "corporation"; second, [**2] that if it does include a corporation said law is unconstitutional and void by reason of the fact of there being a discrimination against natural persons, who are subject to both fine and imprisonment, and in favor of artificial persons, who, from the nature of the defendant, could be subject to fine only.

Other objections are raised by the motion but were not urged by counsel for defendant, and, therefore, will not be considered in this opinion.

Counsel for the state as well as the defendant advise the court that this question is an original one in Ohio, so far never having been raised in any of the numerous criminal prosecutions under the Valentine antitrust act, and that there is but little light in the adjudications of other states upon the questions herein raised. The importance of the question, as well as the diligence of counsel in the preparation of their briefs, justify the court in dealing at some length with the legal controversies involved.

Section 4 of this act (Sec. 4427-4 Rev. Stat.) reads as follows:

HN1 [↑] "Any violation of either or all of the provisions of this act shall be and is hereby declared a conspiracy against trade, and any person who may become engaged in any [**3] such conspiracy or take part therein, or aid or advise in its commission, or who shall as principal, manager, director, agent, servant or employer, or in any other capacity, knowingly carry out any of the stipulations, purposes, prices, rates, or furnish any information to assist in carrying out such purposes, or orders thereunder or in pursuance thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $ 50 nor more than $ 5,000, or be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Each day's violation of this provision shall constitute a separate offense."

HN2↑ Criminal statutes must be construed strictly. That strict construction, however, must not be arbitrary, artificial or so narrow that the plain and obvious intendment of the statute is destroyed or diverted. It must be a reasonable construction, having due regard to the plain, ordinary and natural meaning and scope of the language employed in the act.

The word "corporation" does not appear in this Sec. 4; and, [*242] therefore, it is claimed that the Valentine act finds its parallel in construction in the case of State v. Fertilizer Co. 24 Ohio St. 611. [**4] This was a prosecution brought under a statute to prevent nuisances, and that statute did not include the word "corporation," but simply used the words "any person." The Supreme Court of Ohio, in passing upon the exceptions taken by the prosecuting attorney to the ruling of the trial court on a motion to quash the indictment upon the ground that the words "any person" did not include corporation, overruled the exception in the following language, to wit, page 616:

"Criminal laws are to be construed strictly in favor of the accused. In its primary sense, the word "person" means a natural person only. I know of no criminal statute in Ohio where the word has been held to apply to a corporation; nor do I know of any case where an attempt has before been made in this state to indict a corporation. We have no common-law crimes in Ohio, and the whole theory and machinery of our administration of criminal law seem adapted only to the prosecution and punishment of natural persons. There is no provision of law for bringing an indicted party into court by summons, or otherwise than by actual arrest of his person. Under such a state of legislation and practice, the legislature could not have [**5] intended, in the use of the word "person," which is found in almost every criminal law of the state, to authorize an indictment against a corporation for this particular offense, without any special or further provision as to the liability of corporations, or the mode of proceeding against them."

It will be noted that the Supreme Court of Ohio is here construing a criminal statute that does not, by its express terms, or by clear implication, include a "corporation." At the time of the decision, 1857, the corporation occupied such a small field in our industrial life that it is unlikely the legislature had any intention of including the artificial person within the term "any person"; but the language of the Supreme Court in State v. Fertilizer Co. expressly recognized the right of the legislature to include a "corporation" within the persons indictable under such a criminal law, in the last sentence above quoted, where it refers to "special or further provision as to liability of corporations, or the mode of proceeding against them." In the Valentine act are there special or further provisions as to liability of corporations, or the mode of proceeding against them, clearly [**6] showing the intention of the legislature?

The old English cases, as well as the earlier decisions in many of the states, held that the invisible, intangible, artificial person, without body and without soul, was not within the reach of the criminal law, and, therefore, could not be indicted, prosecuted or punished. Having no soul, it could not be morally accountable; having no body, it could [*243] not be punished. These artificial, technical and arbitrary distinctions have been swept away by the exigencies and necessities of the times. HN3↑ The later decisions, under English and American statutes, hold that a corporation is indictable and punishable if the plain and obvious provisions of the statute make it so.

The doctrine of criminal liability of corporations is aptly stated in Bishop's New Crim. Law, Sec. 417, in the following language:

"A corporation cannot in its corporate capacity commit a crime by an act in the fullest sense ultra vires and contrary to its nature. But within the sphere of its corporate capacity, 'and to an undefined extent beyond, whenever it assumes to act as a corporation it has the same capabilities of criminal intent and of act--in other words, of [**7] crime--as an individual man sustaining to the thing the like relations.' * * * If, for example, the invisible, intangible essence of air, which we term a corporation, can level mountains, fill up valleys, lay down iron tracks, and run railroad cars on them,--it can intend to do it, and can act therein as well viciously as virtuously."

Section 419. "Corporations can commit criminal nuisance the same as individuals.

"When the law casts upon any corporation an obligation of such a nature that the neglect of it would be indictable in an individual, the corporation neglecting it may be indicted."

Section 422. "Not every misfeasance which would be indictable in an individual is so in a corporation. It must be within, or not too far outside of, the corporate duty."

Quoting Judge Denman, the author continues in the same section:

"A corporation which, as such, has no such duties, cannot be guilty in these cases; but it may be guilty, as a body corporate, of commanding acts to be done to the nuisance of the community at large."

Section 180, et seq., 1 McClain, Crim. Law, are to the same effect.

The prevailing opinions and decisions of state and federal courts for the last quarter of [**8] a century are to the effect that a corporation may be indicted.

Counsel for the defendant, in addition to State v. Fertilizer Co., supra, cite a case from the Supreme Court of Tennessee, Standard Oil Co. v. State [117 Tenn. 618; 100 S.W. 705; 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1015], which was a prosecution brought under the Tennessee antitrust act, which is very similar to the Ohio antitrust act. The opinion of the court, appearing in the syllabus, is as follows:

"No fine can be imposed upon a corporation under a statute making it unlawful for any person or corporation to contract in restraint of competition, and providing that in case of a guilty corporation its charter shall be forfeited or its right to do business annulled, that a [*244] guilty person or persons shall be fined or imprisoned, and that the guilty corporation or person shall return to the person injured the consideration received for property the sale of which is controlled by the combination."

Clearly the construction of any statute must be guided by the intention of the legislature in enacting the same. In Standard Oil Co. v. State, supra, the following language [**9] appears on page 1020:

HN4 [↑] "The fundamental rule * * * of construction of all instruments, is that the intention shall prevail, and for this purpose the whole of the instrument will be looked to. The real intention will always prevail over the literal use of terms. Legislative acts fall within the rule, and it has been well said that a thing which is within the letter of a statute is not within the statute unless it be within the intention of the lawmakers. * * * A thing which is within the intention of the makers of a statute is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter. And a thing which is within the letter of the statute is not within the statute unless it be within the intention of the makers, and such a construction ought to be put upon it as does not suffer it to be included."

Numerous cases are cited in support of this well known and universally regarded doctrine of construction.

The court, in construing the Tennessee code upon that proposition, used the following language, on page 1024:

"The question, then, is whether the word 'person' is used in this statute to include both natural persons and artificial persons, or corporations. It is conceded, as it must [**10] be, that the word 'person' in a statute may and oftentimes does include corporations. We think this must be held to be so, under Sec. 62 of Shannon's code, declaring that the word 'person' includes a corporation. The general provisions of Chap. 2 of the code, where this section is found, there declared to be applicable to the whole code, apply not only to the code as originally enacted, but to all amendments thereof, which include all statutes passed since its enactment, in the absence of a contrary purpose expressed in the statutes themselves."

And the Tennessee court, in construing their statute, held that it was the intention of the legislature not to visit a criminal penalty upon the corporation.

What was the intention of the legislature of Ohio in the enactment of this Valentine antitrust law? Manifestly a great mischief was to be legislated against, and that mischief was the control of production and prices of the commodities of life by combinations in illegal restraint of trade, whereby the rich and powerful might obtain unfair and iniquitous advantage over the poor and weak. It is notorious that [*245] the big business of the country in production and trade is in the [**11] hands of corporations--particularly the hands of big corporations. The individual to-day, as a natural person, does not produce and control to exceed 1 per cent of the world's commodities. His activity and efficiency as producer and transporter to the world's market, has been practically and substantially eliminated. He is simply the officer, agent, employe or servant of the corporation; and if the corporation is not amenable and responsible to and punishable by the state and nation for the doing of such mischief, the individual will, in addition thereto, become merely the slave of such corporation.

It is hardly to be presumed that the general assembly of Ohio, in enacting this law to provide against the mischief of trusts arbitrarily controlling production and prices, could have intended to relieve the corporation, doing 99 per cent of the mischief, from punishment by penalty of law, and legislate against only the individual doing 1 per cent of the mischief. However, the legislature has made its intention in that respect very clear in the last section of the act, which reads as follows:

Sec. 4427-12. Sec. 12. HN5 "The word 'person' or 'persons,' whenever used in this act, shall be deemed [**12] to include corporations, partnerships and associations existing under or authorized by the state of Ohio, or any other state, or any foreign country."

This Sec. 12 HN6 must be read into every other section of the Valentine antitrust act.

As bearing upon the intention of the legislature to exclude "corporations" from the provisions of this act, so far as Sec. 4 is concerned, it is urged that the Valentine antitrust act, having provided, under favor of Sec. 2 of that act, for a prosecution by the attorney-general or the prosecuting attorney of the county, of proper suits or quo warranto proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction where any such corporation or association exists or does business, or has a domicile, for the forfeiture of its charter, rights, franchises or privileges, and powers exercised by such corporation or association and for the dissolution of the same under the general statutes of the state for any violation of the provisions of this act by such corporation, that this penalty, being in effect a death penalty, is exclusive, and was all that the legislature intended to be visited upon any offending corporation.

The legislature, evidently, did not think this would [**13] in all cases be sufficient, and, hence, they provided for criminal prosecution, and in order that there might be no question about any one penalty excluding the visitation of any other penalty they incorporated the following section in the act, which reads:

Sec. 4427-9. Sec. 9. HN7 "The provisions hereof shall be held cumulative [*246] of each other and of all other laws in any way affecting them now in force in this state."

From which it must follow that the proper officer may institute such criminal actions as may be advisable under and by virtue of the antitrust law, and after suitable penalties shall have been imposed by our courts, the officer may further proceed, by action in quo warranto for the forfeiture and surrender of the charter and the dissolution of the corporation.

It will be noted that both the Supreme Court of Ohio, in State v. Fertilizer Co. supra, as well as the supreme court of Tennessee in the Standard Oil Co. v. State, supra, limit the term "person" to "natural person," unless or in the absence of a contrary purpose expressed in the statute itself; both courts implying that the legislature may provide that the "corporation" shall be included [**14] as well as the individual person.

HN8 It is not the province of judges and courts to defeat the obvious intention of the lawmaking body under the guise of judicial interpretation or construction; it is their business rather to give force and effect to the plain intent and provisions of the statute. There is too much judge-made law nowadays. When judges rightly understand and faithfully observe the law as it is, giving rightful force and effect to the plain, clear and complete terms and provisions of the act in accordance, not merely with the letter but the spirit of the act, they will add much to confidence in courts, the safety of society and the security of the state. Let them leave lawmaking, law modifying and law repealing to the legislative bodies, who are sworn to support the same constitution and laws that the judges are sworn to support.

Laws are made to be observed, not violated. The people generally do obey them, interpreting them according to their plain and clear intention and meaning. If this interpretation is generally accepted by the many who observe the law, why should courts not apply the same interpretation to the few who would defeat it?

The court therefore finds [**15] upon this question that the legislature clearly and unmistakably intended to include, and did expressly include, the "corporation" within the criminal penalties of the law; and, therefore, there is neither right nor room for judicial interpretation. The law is its own interpreter. It is free from doubt and ambiguity; and if the court should so construe it as to mean anything else than what the clear and obvious terms of the statute mean to the average man, it would be lawmaking and law repealing under the guise of judicial interpretation. Any other finding would be neither more nor less than legal legerdemain.

The second objection, that of unconstitutionality of Sec. 4 of this [*247] act, discriminating as to penalties by reason of the fact that imprisonment may be imposed upon the individual, but cannot, from the nature of the case, be imposed upon the corporation.

HN9[] It is unusual for complaint to be entered upon the ground of discrimination, when the discrimination is in favor of the complainant, and the rule is generally well settled that the complainant must leave such a grievance to a person actually aggrieved. The corporation finds itself in the situation of saying, in effect, [**16] I cannot be held to the provisions of this act because you cannot imprison me as you can imprison an individual; hence you cannot fine me. The statement of the proposition is its own best answer.

HN10[] No court has yet gone so far as to hold that in all cases the same duties, rights or prerogatives that shall attach to persons must attach likewise to corporations, and vice versa. The corporation is in a class by itself, and courts have universally recognized such a class. They have gone much further, and recognized the right of the legislature to classify and subclassify corporations, and formulate one class of legislation applying to public corporations; another class of legislation applying to private corporations, subdividing the legislation as to private corporations, making a certain code apply to quasi-public, and another code apply to those that are wholly private corporations, and no court has so far declared such classification, so long as it was reasonable and founded upon substantial differences of condition and not mere arbitrary and artificial distinctions, unconstitutional and void.

A case directly in point, to which the court has been referred since the hearing upon [**17] this motion is entitled the United States v. Union Supply Company, decided November 8, 1909, by the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court. Seldom it is that two cases so completely parallel to each other on all matters in controversy as the case last cited and the case at bar. The Supreme Court of the United States hold against the defendant company upon all contentions. Discrimination in punishment is here treated as a matter solely in the discretion of the court, and that discrimination is in no wise affected by the fact that imprisonment cannot be visited upon the corporation. This inability to visit imprisonment upon the corporation is not regarded with any favor by the court as any ground for impairing in any wise the validity or constitutionality of the law.

The motion is overruled.

People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Asso.

Court of Appeal of California, Third Appellate District

January 22, 1910, Decided

Crim. No. 96

Reporter

12 Cal. App. 471 *; 107 P. 712 **; 1910 Cal. App. LEXIS 332 ***

THE PEOPLE, Respondent, v. SACRAMENTO BUTCHERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION, WESTERN MEAT COMPANY et al., Defendants; J. O'KEEFE, Appellant

Subsequent History: [***1] A Petition to have the Cause Heard in the Supreme Court, after Judgment in the District Court of Appeal, was Denied by the Supreme Court on March 23, 1910.

Prior History: APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Sacramento County, and from an order denying a new trial. C. N. Post, Judge.

Core Terms

---

meats, conspiracy, Butchers', imprisonment, misdemeanor, courts, meat company, police court, superior court, depositions, retail, fine, member of the association, provisions, words, anti-trust, designate, prices, free competition, accomplish, charges, confer, felony, cases, jail, commitment order, constituting, exceeding, disclose, selling

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

HN1 Accusatory Instruments, Informations

Upon the filing of an information corresponding with the terms of the commitment as to the nature of the offense indicated in the latter, the presumption at once arises that the evidence of which said commitment is predicated was in all respects sufficient to justify the magistrate in making the order.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

HN2 Accusatory Instruments, Informations

If the evidence taken before the magistrate was not sufficient to warrant the order of commitment, that question should be inquired into and determined through some other proceeding than a motion to set aside the information.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

12 Cal. App. 471, *471A07 P. 712, **712A910 Cal. App. LEXIS 332, ***1

HN3 Accusatory Instruments, Informations

When, as a result of an examination, an order has in fact been made and entered upon the docket of the justice, no further action upon his part is necessary in order to authorize the district attorney to file an information against a defendant for the offense named in the order.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN4 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The gravamen of the offense of conspiracy is the combination. Agreements to prevent competition in trade are, in contemplation of law, injurious to trade, because they are liable to be injuriously used. If agreements and combinations to prevent competition in prices are, or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its result shall be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN6 Conspiracy, Elements

It is equally true that all the conspirators, whether known or unknown, need not be prosecuted at the same time, but an indictment charging a person known with having a conspiracy with other persons unknown or with other persons whose names are given, but who are not joined as defendants, is good.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN7 Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

Independent of statute, upon principle and in furtherance of sound public policy, both corporations and their officers and agents, who engage in the conspiracy, must be held to be parties to it, and be counted in computing the necessary number to constitute it.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Criminal Law--Violation of "Anti-trust Law"--Motion to Set Aside Information.--An information charging the violation of the anti-trust law (Stats. 1907, p. 294), cannot be set aside on the ground of an immaterial variance between the information and the offense charged in the complaint before the magistrate, nor on the ground that the complaint and evidence before the magistrate was insufficient to warrant the commitment.

Id.--Construction of Penal Code--Grounds for Setting Aside Information.--Under the familiar rule of construction, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, a trial court cannot set aside an information on any other grounds than those specified in section 995 of the Penal Code, viz.: "1. That before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed; 2. That it was not subscribed by the district attorney."

Id.--Insufficiency of Evidence--Presumption.--Assuming that the evidence before the magistrate was altogether insufficient to establish probable cause for believing that the offense for which the defendant moving to set aside the information was examined and held had been committed or that he committed it, that question cannot be urged and decided on such motion. But upon the filing of the information corresponding to the commitment, the presumption arises that the evidence on which the commitment was predicated was in all respects sufficient to justify the magistrate in making the order.

Id.--Commitment Based upon Depositions--Nature of Complaint.--The complaint is in the nature of a deposition on which the warrant of arrest is based, and not a complaint in the sense that it is a pleading. The commitment is based upon the depositions as such, and not upon the complaint only. If the commitment does not of itself describe the offense, but refers to the depositions, they must describe the commission of the offense to which the commitment refers, though the finding of the magistrate as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the offense is conclusive.

Id.--Complaint not a Part of Order of Commitment.--The complaint upon which the warrant of arrest is based cannot properly be deemed a part of the order of commitment which is based upon the depositions taken at the preliminary examination.

Id.--Absence of Variance Between Complaint and Information.--If the complaint be deemed a deposition to which the commitment refers, there is no material variance between the offense charged in the information and that stated in the complaint. That deposition states an offense under the provisions of the anti-trust law against the personal defendant. While the offense is more fully and clearly stated in the information--a requisite strictly applied to criminal pleading, but not to depositions taken before a magistrate--the offense charged in both documents is one and the same, and for the violation of precisely the same provisions of the law.

Id.--Order of Commitment--Indorsement upon Depositions not Essential to Information.--The order of commitment is not required to be indorsed upon the depositions, as a condition of the authority of the district attorney to file an information.

Id.--Entry of Order upon Docket Sufficient.--The order holding a defendant to answer is in fact and in law made when it is entered upon the docket of the justice, and the failure to indorse the same upon the complaint or depositions in no manner deprives the order of its validity or affects any substantial right of the defendant.

Id.--Sufficiency of Information--Violation of Anti-trust Law--Combination to Enhance Price of Meat.--An information substantially charging a violation of the anti-trust law in the language of the statute, and accusing the personal defendant and the Western Meat Company, of which he is the managing agent, of having entered into a combination and conspiracy with the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association and other persons, for the purpose of destroying free and full competition in the meat business, and in requiring a meat dealer named to pay a higher price for meat than was charged to members of the combination, states an offense under that law.

Id.--Averment and Proof of Control of Market not Essential.--It is not necessary either to allege or prove that the defendants or either of them, or any of the persons referred to in the information as being connected with the alleged combination, were in a position to control the market in the sale and purchase of the commodity to which the charge relates.

Id.--Purpose of Anti-trust Law.--The purpose of the anti-trust law is to prevent such business combinations as will result in restrictions in trade or commerce, or will prevent competition in the manufacture or sale of merchandise and other commodities for domestic use.

Id.--Identity of Members of Butchers' Protective Association.--Where the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, as such, is made a defendant in the information without reference to the members composing it, the information is not rendered defective by describing them as "certain and divers persons, firms, partnerships, corporations and associations of persons constituting and comprising the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, whose names are unknown, with whom it is alleged that the personal defendant entered into an unlawful combination and conspiracy. This was sufficient so to identify such persons as to apprise defendant appealing of the particular persons with whom he is charged with having been in league in the maintenance of an unlawful conspiracy.

Id.--Parties to Conspiracy.--Where conspiracy is charged, it is not necessary to make all the alleged conspirators defendants in order to maintain a prosecution against one.

Id.--Gist of Offense--Combination with Others--Persons Unknown.--The gist of the offense is in the formation of the combination with others to do some unlawful act, and where the information charges a party with having entered into a conspiracy with others not made defendants, it is sufficient to refer to the latter in the accusatory pleading as "persons unknown."

Id.--Pleading--Action of Manager and of Meat Company--Defense. Where the information with clearness charges that appellant, as manager and agent of the Western Meat Company, and said company itself entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy with the Butchers' Protective Association and the members thereof, for the purposes of the information, the showing therein is sufficient to connect both the company and its manager therewith. The alleged act of the agent must be deemed that of the company, and cannot be presumed to be without its knowledge or assent. If he in fact exceeded his authority in entering into the conspiracy, that would be matter of defense for the meat company.

Id.--Proper Joinder of Corporation and Manager.--Upon principle, and in furtherance of sound policy, both corporations and their officers and agents who engage in the conspiracy must be held to be parties thereto, and it was proper to join both the Western Meat Company and its manager in the information.

Id.--Dates of Execution of Conspiracy not Fixed--Probative Facts--Surplusage.--The information is not rendered insufficient because the dates upon which the acts of the alleged conspirators committed in the prosecution of such conspiracy occurred are not definitely stated and fixed in the information. The acts constituting the actual accomplishment of the object or purpose of the combination and conspiracy constitute mere probative facts of its existence, the dates of which would be matter of surplusage, and need not be alleged.

Id.--Nature of Offense Under Anti-trust Law--Misdemeanor--Limit of Penalty--Exclusive Jurisdiction of Superior Court.--If the nature of an offense under the anti-trust law be deemed a misdemeanor, the limit of imprisonment being one year, without prescribing the place of imprisonment, and the limits of the fine being not more than $ 5,000 and not less than fifty dollars in all county seats in which the police court has no jurisdiction of such maximum fine, the jurisdiction of the superior court under the constitution of all misdemeanors not otherwise provided for is exclusive under the anti-trust law.

Id.--Test of Character of Crime.--The test of the nature of a crime as a felony or misdemeanor is not the characterization of it as one or the other, but the nature and mode of punishment of the crime is the sole test. The question is not decided whether the superior court has power to imprison the defendant in the state prison for the year provided for in the statute, the supreme court having expressly limited its penalty to that of a misdemeanor.

Id.--Jurisdiction of Justices' Courts Excluded.--All justices' courts being expressly limited in their jurisdiction to misdemeanors not exceeding $ 500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months in the county jail, their jurisdiction under the anti-trust law is excluded.

Id.--Support of Verdict--Conflicting Evidence.--Where the evidence is conflicting, the verdict of the jury adjudging the appellant guilty of the crime charged against him cannot be disturbed where there was evidence tending to establish the truth of the charges against him.

Id.--Evidence--Absence of Discrimination as to Smoked Meats Harmless Ruling.--Where the sole charge was discrimination as to fresh meats against the Butchers' Protective Association, evidence that they made no discrimination as to smoked meats not under their control, if its object and purpose was to corroborate the charge, was not erroneous, but if such was not its object and its admission was erroneous, the error was not prejudicial.

Id.--By-laws of Butchers' Protective Association.--The court properly admitted the by-laws of the Butchers' Protective Association not only to disclose the identity of its members, but also to show the nature and purposes of the association, and the object of its connection with the Western Meat Company, and so far as tending to show the criminal conspiracy, and if there was no relevancy in either of these respects, their admission was harmless.

Id.--Proper Cross-examination of Members of Association--Contribution of Money for Counsel for Appellant.--The court properly allowed members of the association who testified for the defendant to answer questions by the cross-examiner as to whether they contributed money toward counsel for the defendant appealing.

Id.--Instructions--Circumstantial Evidence of Conspiracy.--Instructions by which the jury were told that the crime of conspiracy could be proved by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence were perfectly proper.

Id.--Formation of Conspiracy.--Held, that an instruction in regard to the formation of a conspiracy, which, in effect, and with reasonable clearness, declared to the jury that it is immaterial how or in what manner it is formed, so long as it sufficiently appears from the evidence to be formed for an unlawful purpose, is not erroneous.

Id.--Instruction as to Conviction Based on Evidence.--An instruction as to conviction based on evidence of discrimination in sale of fresh meats, to the effect that if the jury should find from the evidence in the case that there was a discrimination in the price charged for fresh meats, so as to charge a higher price to those not members of the combination, to which the defendant was a party, they should convict the defendant, was proper.

Id.--Untenable Objections to Anti-Trust Law.--The anti-trust law is not incompatible as to any provision of the constitution, nor with section 182 of the Penal Code relative to the subject of conspiracies. The unlawful combination here involved is made to apply to a different object from any mentioned in the code.

Syllabus

---

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Counsel: L. T. Hatfield, James B. Devine, and Jesse W. Lilienthal, for Appellant.

U. S. Webb, Attorney General, J. Charles Jones, Eugene S. Wachhorst, District Attorney of Sacramento County, and Frank F. Atkinson, Assistant District Attorney, for Respondent.

Judges: HART, J. Chipman, P. J., and Burnett, J., concurred.

Opinion by: HART

Opinion

---

[*475] [**715] HART, J. The defendant, O'Keefe, was convicted of violating certain provisions of an act of the legislature of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 984, c. 530), entitled: "An act to define trust and to provide criminal penalties and civil damages, and punishment of corporations, persons, firms and associations, or persons connected with them, and to promote full competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state."

This appeal is by O'Keefe from the judgment and the order of the trial court [***2] denying him a new trial.

The information charges that the appellant, as the managing agent of the Western Meat Company, and said company, in pursuance of a combination and conspiracy into which they had previously entered with the Sacramento Butchers' Protective [*476] Association and the individual members thereof, to execute and carry out certain contracts and agreements, the effect of the execution of which would be to destroy free competition in the retail meat business in said city of Sacramento, required and compelled one Albert Robinson, who was engaged in carrying on the retail meat business in said city, to pay to the appellant and said Western Meat Company higher prices for meats than the appellant and said company required the members of said Butchers' Protective Association, each of whom was likewise engaged in the retail meat business, to pay for the same class or character of meats.

The refusal of the court to grant appellant's motion to set aside the information, the order overruling the demurrer to the information, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, alleged errors in admitting and rejecting certain evidence, alleged erroneous instructions given [***3] to the jury, and want of jurisdiction in the superior courts of criminal prosecutions under the act upon the provisions of which the information here is based, are the general reasons upon which a reversal of the judgment and the order is urged.

The act concerned here is what is commonly known as the "Cartwright Anti-Trust Law," and, as its title and provisions clearly indicate, its purpose is to prevent such business combinations as will result in restrictions in trade or commerce, or, in other words, in the destruction of free competition in the manufacture, sale and purchase of merchandise and other commodities for domestic use.

Section 1 of said act reads, in part, as follows:

"Section 1. A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or by any two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes: 1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. . . . 3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity. . . ."

1. The order denying the motion to set aside the information was proper.

The [***4] grounds of the motion, stated in general language, are: That the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate; that the alleged offense set forth in the information [*477] is not the offense stated in the "complaint" filed in the magistrate's court, in that the offense sought to be charged in said complaint is a misdemeanor, while the information purports to charge a felony, and further, that the "complaint" does not charge the alleged offense to have been committed against any particular person, while the information charges that the purported offense alleged therein was against one Albert Robinson; "that no order has been indorsed on the complaint holding defendant, O'Keefe, to answer to the charge contained in said complaint"; that no evidence was adduced before the magistrate authorizing the order holding O'Keefe to answer to the charge alleged in the "complaint." In addition to these, the motion advances some other grounds upon which it is claimed the information should be set aside, but they are not, in our judgment, of sufficient importance to require special notice.

The only grounds specified by the code upon which, upon a proper showing, a trial court is [***5] authorized to set aside an information are the following: "1. That before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate; 2. That it was not subscribed by the district attorney of the county." (Pen. Code, sec. 995.)

Under the familiar rule of construction, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, a trial court is without jurisdiction to entertain or to grant a motion to set aside the information upon any ground other than those expressly specified in the designated section of the Penal Code. Assuming, therefore, that the evidence presented to the magistrate was altogether insufficient to establish probable cause for believing that the offense for which the defendant was examined and held had been committed, and that he committed it, that question could not properly be urged and decided on a motion of the character of the one under consideration. HN1↑ Upon the filing of an information corresponding with the terms of the commitment as to the nature of the offense indicated in the latter, the presumption at once arises that the evidence of which said commitment is predicated was in all respects sufficient to justify the magistrate [\[\*\*\*6\]](#) in making the order ([Western Meat Co. v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. App. 538, \[99 Pac. 976\]](#)), and, as the attorney general has very clearly pointed out in his brief, HN2↑ if the evidence taken before the magistrate [\[\*478\]](#) was not sufficient [\[\*\*716\]](#) to warrant the order of commitment, that question should have been inquired into and determined through some other proceeding than a motion to set aside the information. ([People v. Beach, 122 Cal. 37, \[54 Pac. 369\]](#); [People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, \[76 Pac. 1028\]](#); Redmond v. State, 12 Kan. 172; [People v. Cole, 127 Cal. 545, \[59 Pac. 984\]](#); [Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, \[15 Pac. 619\]](#).)

The point sought to be made by the appellant that there is a variance between the allegations of the "complaint," so-called, and those of the information, cannot be maintained. The instrument upon which the warrant of arrest is authorized to be issued by a magistrate in the case of an indictable offense is not a "complaint" in the sense that it is a pleading, but is practically a deposition only, setting forth the facts stated [\[\*\*\*7\]](#) by the informant, sufficiently showing the commission of an offense and its perpetration by the defendant to justify the issuance of a warrant of arrest by the magistrate. (Pen. Code, secs. 811, 812.) The commitment is based upon all the depositions and not alone upon the so-called complaint, and the information is in turn founded upon the order of commitment. It is true that the order of commitment in the case at bar does not itself specifically designate or describe the offense for which the defendant was held, declaring only "that the offense in the within depositions mentioned has been committed," and it is, of course, also true, in the absence of a specific description in the order of commitment itself of some offense of which the superior court has jurisdiction, referring therein to the alleged crime for which the accused is ordered held under its generic description only, that if the depositions do not show the commission of the offense to which the commitment refers, or, showing it, do not disclose probable reason for the defendant's connection with its commission, then the commitment is without a prop to uphold it. But, as stated, [\[\*\*\*8\]](#) the presumption prevails, on a motion to set aside an information, that the evidence or depositions taken by the magistrate sufficiently show that the offense mentioned in the commitment was committed by the defendant. In other words, as we have shown, upon such a motion as the one now under examination, the superior court cannot review and overrule [\[\*479\]](#) the finding of the magistrate that the evidence taken before him was sufficient. ([People v. Beach, 122 Cal. 37, \[54 Pac. 369\]](#); [People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, \[76 Pac. 1028\]](#); [People v. Sehorn, 116 Cal. 503, \[48 Pac. 495\]](#); [People v. Cole, 127 Cal. 545, \[59 Pac. 984\]](#).)

If, however, the contention is that the so-called "complaint" or the deposition upon which the warrant was issued is necessarily made a part of the order of commitment by appropriate and sufficient words of reference, and, as thus viewed, the commitment designates or describes a distinctly different offense from that alleged in the information, thereby vitiating the latter ([People v. Nogiri, 142 Cal. 596, \[76 Pac. 490\]](#)), it is clear that the point [\[\*\*\*9\]](#) is not well taken. Said deposition, in our opinion, states an offense under the provisions of the anti-trust law against the defendant, and, while perhaps such offense is more fully and clearly stated in the information--a requisite strictly applied to criminal pleadings but not to depositions before a magistrate--the offense charged in both documents is one and the same and for the violation of precisely the same provisions of the law. (Redmond v. State, 12 Kan. 172; [People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, \[76 Pac. 1028\]](#).) No authority has been cited, and, indeed, none can be found, holding, even where the commitment itself undertakes to describe the offense for which a defendant is held for trial upon a felony charge, that such offense must be stated therein with the technical nicety and precision required in an indictment or an information, and if the deposition upon which the warrant of arrest was issued in this case is to be treated as a part of the order of commitment (and certainly it cannot be so regarded), the inartificiality of its allegations or its insufficiency in stating with technical accuracy the offense for which the defendant [\[\*\*\*10\]](#) was ordered committed (if these shortcomings could truly be attributed to it), cannot be the basis of a motion to set aside the information, if the latter charges the same offense.

It is further claimed that the district attorney was without authority to file the information because the order of commitment was not indorsed on the "complaint" or upon any of the other depositions taken by the magistrate. But the point is without merit. ([People v. Wilson, 93 Cal. 377, \[28 Pac. 1061\]](#); [People v. Wallace, 94 Cal. 497, \[29 Pac. 950\]](#); [People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, \[46 Pac. 896\]](#).)

[*480] In People v. Wallace, supra, the court says: "HN3 [↑] When, as a result of an examination, such an order has in fact been made and entered upon the docket of the justice, it would seem that no further action upon his part is necessary in order to authorize the district attorney to file an information against a defendant for the offense named in the order; citing [People v. Wilson, 93 Cal. 377, \[28 Pac. 1061\]](#). The law requires the justice to keep a docket in which must be entered each action, and all [***11] proceedings therein (Pen. Code, sec. 1428); and we are of opinion that an order holding a defendant to answer is in fact and in law made when it is entered upon the docket of the justice, and the failure to indorse upon the complaint or the depositions taken in no manner deprives the order of its validity, or affects any substantial right of a defendant."

2. The information substantially follows the language of the statute, and clearly states an offense under said statute. Briefly stated, the information accuses the defendant and the Western Meat Company (a corporation), of which he is the managing agent in the city of Sacramento, of having entered into [**717] a combination and conspiracy with the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association and other persons, whose names are alleged to be unknown, for the purpose of destroying full and free competition in the retail meat business, by entering into and carrying out "contracts and understandings" made in furtherance of such combination and conspiracy, and as the result thereof, and in the execution of said combination and conspiracy, sold to one Albert Robinson, a dealer in meats in said city of Sacramento, [***12] certain meat at a higher price than said O'Keefe, as agent of and for said company, sold the same class of meat to other persons, composing said association, and that by reason of said "compacts and understandings, plans and schemes," so carried out by said alleged conspirators, said Robinson was compelled to, and did, pay to said company a higher price for meat purchased by him of the company than was paid by said other persons, constituting the said Butchers' Protective Association; that because of said agreement, compacts, plans and schemes, so executed and carried out by said company, said O'Keefe and said association, and the members of said association, said alleged conspirators did then and there create [*481] and carry out "restrictions in trade, and directly and indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among the persons, firms, partnerships and associations of persons constituting and composing the said Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association and other persons, purchasers, consumers and dealers in the buying and selling of such article and commodity of merchandise, produce and commerce, to wit, meat," etc.

It will thus be observed that the information [***13] is, as we have already stated, substantially in the language of the statute, and, while the rule that an offense may properly be stated in the language of the statute defining such offense cannot be uniformly followed, it is in our opinion applicable in this case. We cannot conceive of any other elements which could be required to be alleged in order to state an offense under the first and third subdivisions of section 1 of the anti-trust law than those involved in the allegations of the information here. If the evidence shows, as the information clearly charges, that the defendants had entered into and formed a combination by the terms of which members of the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association were privileged to purchase meat from the Western Meat Company at prices lower than those at which other persons engaged in the retail meat business were to be allowed to purchase such meat, thus practically confining the business of selling meat at retail to those only who were fortunate members of said association, then a plain and palpable violation of not only the spirit, but of the letter, of the statute is disclosed. It was not necessary, as counsel for appellant contend, to [***14] allege in the information that the meat company, the defendant O'Keefe and the Butchers' Protective Association were in a position to control the market with respect to meat. As we have stated, the object of the statute is to prevent such combinations or conspiracies between persons engaged in a particular line of business as will destroy free competition therein, and if the purpose of such combination is to restrict trade or destroy competition in the sale and purchase of "merchandise, produce, or any commodity," or if such combination tends to restrict trade or to prevent free competition therein, such combination is against the letter and paramount object of the law. It is, [*482] therefore, not necessary to prove, and much less to allege in the information in order to state the offense denounced by the statute, that the defendants or any of the persons referred to in the information as being connected with the alleged combination were in a position to control the market in the sale and purchase of the commodity to which the charge relates.

As is said by the supreme court of Missouri, in the case of State v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356, [96 Am. St. Rep. 515, 73 S.W. 645], [***15] "HN4"↑ the gravamen of the offense of conspiracy is the combination. Agreements to prevent competition in trade are, in contemplation of law, injurious to trade, because they are liable to be injuriously used. . . . If agreements and combinations to prevent competition in prices are, or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character."

In United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, [15 S. Ct. 249], Chief Justice Fuller, speaking for the court, says: "Again, all the authorities agree that, HN5"↑ in order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its result shall be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." (See State v. Slutz, 106 La. 182, [30 South. 298]; State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, [38 Atl. 868]; United States v. MacAndrews, 149 Fed. 836; Bailey v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 289, [59 S.W. 900].)

It is further objected that the information is deficient in that it fails to disclose the identity of the persons referred [***16] to therein as "certain and divers persons, firms, partnerships, corporations and associations of persons constituting and composing said Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, the names of whom are unknown except as herein stated," etc. The further contention is made that it does not appear from the information but that O'Keefe acted in the transactions with Robinson independently and without the knowledge and sanction of the Western Meat Company.

Neither of these propositions can be sustained. We have seen that the rule of criminal [**718] pleading is that the offense may be stated in the language of the statute if the latter fully and clearly describes the offense denounced as such by [*483] its provisions. There is nothing wanting in the language of the law under which the appellant was prosecuted and convicted to fully and accurately define the offense sought to be described therein. The information directly charges that the "persons, firms, partnerships," etc., whose names are alleged to be unknown, are members of the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, with which, it is further alleged, the appellant was connected in the inauguration and prosecution of [***17] the combination and conspiracy which the statute declares that it is unlawful to maintain. This was sufficient to so identify such persons as to apprise the appellant of the particular persons with whom he is charged with having been in league in the maintenance of an unlawful conspiracy.

In State v. Slutz, 106 La. 182, [30 South. 298], it is said: "HN6"↑ It is equally true that all the conspirators, whether known or unknown, need not be prosecuted at the same time, but an indictment charging a person known with having a conspiracy with other persons unknown or with other persons whose names are given, but who are not joined as defendants, is good." (See 4 Ency. of Pl. & Pr., 709, 710; 8 Cyc., p. 663, note 99; State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, [38 Atl. 868].)

In other words, where conspiracy is charged, it is manifestly not necessary to make all the alleged conspirators defendants in order to maintain a prosecution against one. The gist of the offense is in the formation of the combination with others to do some unlawful act, and where the information, as here, charges a party with having entered into such a conspiracy with others, not made [***18] defendants, it is sufficient to refer to the latter in the accusatory pleading as "persons unknown." The "persons, firms, partnerships," etc., thus referred to in the information in the present case are not made defendants as individual persons, but only so in so far as they constitute in the aggregate the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association.

The information with clearness charges that O'Keefe, as manager and agent of the Western Meat Company, and said company itself, entered into the alleged combination and conspiracy with the Butchers' Protective Association and the members of said association. There is, therefore, no merit [*484] in the contention that, for aught that appears to the contrary from the allegations of the information, O'Keefe's alleged part in the conspiracy charged was without the knowledge or indorsement or assent of the company of which he was agent. If, as agent of the company, he joined the conspiracy, then certainly his act was that of the company, for the company acted through him, and his act attached to and became that of the company, as the act of a person actually committing a murder necessarily attaches to another who had been in the conspiracy [***19] to commit the murder, but who himself did no physical act toward the consummation of the object of the conspiracy. For the purposes of the information, the showing therein was sufficient to connect both the company and O'Keefe. But if, by becoming a member of the conspiracy, O'Keefe acted in excess of his authority as such agent, it then became a matter of defense for the meat company that he had thus exceeded his authority or acted in the premises without its knowledge or sanction.

In the case of Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, [100 S. W. 705], where the company and its agent were jointly indicted under the anti-trust law of Tennessee, the supreme court of that state uses the following language: "We are of the opinion that, HNT independent of statute, upon principle and in furtherance of sound public policy, both corporations and their officers and agents, who engage in the conspiracy, must be held to be parties to it, and be counted in computing the necessary number to constitute it. There are respectable authorities which tend to this conclusion"; citing People v. Duke, 19 Misc. Rep. 292, [44 N. Y. Supp. 336]; Samuels v. Oliver, 130 Ill. 73, [22 N. E. 499]; [***20] Eddy on Corporations, sec. 362. (See, also, United States v. MacAndrews, 149 Fed. 823.)

There is no substantial ground upon which the information may be held to be insufficient because the dates upon which the acts of the alleged conspirators, committed in the prosecution of such conspiracy occurred are not definitely stated and fixed in the information. While in no manner vitiating the information, there was, in our opinion, no real necessity for alleging the acts constituting the actual accomplishment of the object or purpose of the combination or conspiracy. They constitute mere probative facts, since [*485] the gist of the crime of conspiracy is in its formation for an unlawful purpose, and, therefore, the averments of the information with reference to the times at which such acts were committed may be treated as surplusage. In other words, the legislative power of the government very properly treated combinations formed for the purpose of restricting trade or for any other unlawful purpose very much in the light in which a loaded gun is regarded--a dangerous instrument to be lying around loose--and upon the same principle which sustains local legislative [***21] measures declaring it to be a misdemeanor for one to have in his possession burglarious tools and instruments, deals with such combinations so that prevention may be accomplished before a cure becomes necessary. Therefore, the acts constituting the actual execution of the purpose of a criminal conspiracy are only evidence of the existence of [**719] such conspiracy, which is the ultimate fact to be proved in order to establish the wrong act against which the statute inveighs.

3. It is further contended and argued with much earnestness that the superior court is without jurisdiction of criminal cases arising under the anti-trust law, but that such cases are cognizable alone in the justice's or police court. This contention is untenable, as we think we can without difficulty show.

The argument upon this point arises out of the failure of the legislature to expressly declare, in the penal section of the statute, whether a violation of the provisions of the law constitutes a felony or a misdemeanor, or to expressly designate the jail or prison in which a party, upon conviction, may be imprisoned in the event the court, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it, elects to [***22] impose the penalty of imprisonment. The section referred to provides that any person, firm, partnership, etc., violating either or all of the provisions of "this act" shall be "punished by a fine of not less than fifty (50) dollars nor more than five thousand ($ 5,000) dollars, or be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment." It is clear, from the nature and extent of the penal punishment which is authorized to be inflicted by the section mentioned, that neither the justices' courts nor the "police court" of the city of Sacramento, if such a court as [*486] the latter exists, have jurisdiction to try criminal cases arising under the statute. That this is true will readily become obvious upon reading section 5 of article VI of the constitution, and from an examination of the statutes establishing the jurisdiction and powers of the inferior courts of the city of Sacramento as to misdemeanors.

The section of the constitution adverted to, after specifically outlining the jurisdiction of the superior courts as to numerous subjects, provides generally that those courts shall have jurisdiction "of cases of misdemeanor not otherwise [***23] provided for." The jurisdiction of the class of misdemeanors to which the one in the case at bar belongs is not, as seen, expressly fixed, and, as we have stated, the penalty authorized to be imposed therefor is beyond the power of the justices' courts or of the "police court" of the city of Sacramento to impose, as will presently more clearly be made to appear; hence, by the terms of the constitution itself, the superior court of the county of Sacramento has exclusive jurisdiction of the crimes defined in the statute involved here.

The criminal jurisdiction of justices' courts is expressly confined, by the provisions of section 1425 of the Penal Code, to "all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $ 500, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment." The jurisdiction thus in general language conferred in criminal cases on justices' courts is in addition to the jurisdiction vested in such courts of other expressly enumerated offenses, for none of which, however, does the penalty exceed a fine of $ 500 or imprisonment for six months, or both.

There is no distinct court known and designated as the "police court" of [***24] the city of Sacramento, exercising the jurisdiction ordinarily given to municipal police courts. The city justice's court of said city exercises the jurisdiction and performs all the functions of a police court under the authority and power vested in it by section 1425 of the Penal Code, supra, and not from any power which may be supposed to have been given it by the charter of the city of Sacramento, approved by the legislature of 1893. (Stats. 1893, p. 564.) But, even upon the assumption that there resided in the legislature at the time of its approval of said [*487] charter the power to create by such means or through such instrumentality municipal courts or judicial tribunals of any character, or to thus confer upon the city justices' courts judicial functions or duties in addition to those prescribed by statute--a power which it has been held did not exist in the legislature at that time (Ex parte Sparks, 120 Cal. 395, 152 Pac. 715)--the provision of said charter with respect to the jurisdiction of the court thus sought to be set up or upon which new judicial functions were thus attempted to be conferred would not confer upon [***25] such court jurisdiction of the offenses denounced by the statute concerned here. Said provision (article IV, subdivision 3, of said charter), substantially follows and copies all of section 1425 of the Penal Code, and includes the following general language of said section: "And all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $ 500, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Section 4426 of the Political Code can have no application here because, as we have seen, there does not exist in the city of Sacramento a police or any other municipal court, strictly speaking, and if there did exist there such a court the section referred to would clothe it with no more power as to misdemeanors than is conferred upon justices' courts generally by section 1425 of the Penal Code.

Counsel for appellant declare that they are sustained in the point now under review by the case of Union Ice Co. etc. et al. v. Rose, 11 Cal. App. 357, 104 Pac. 1006. But counsel cannot point out the remotest analogy between the case at bar and the one cited favorable to their contention upon the point [***26] under consideration.

The cited case involved an application to the district court of appeal of the second district, for a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent, a police court judge in the city of Los Angeles, from further attempting to entertain jurisdiction of a criminal prosecution inaugurated under the antitrust law, upon the [**720] ground that the trial of the case was not, under the provisions of said law, within the jurisdiction of said court, and the appellate court, upholding the constitutionality of an act of the legislature of 1901 creating police courts for cities of the one and one-half class, to which the city of Los Angeles belongs, merely holds that the police [*488] courts so created, having been given, by section 2 of said act, jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment, or by both such fine and imprisonment, committed in cities where such police courts are held, are thus invested with jurisdiction to try cases involving offenses created by the Cartwright law. No one will undertake to challenge the soundness of that conclusion. Nor will the proposition be disputed that the legislature has the right and the power [***27] to confer upon justices' and police courts jurisdiction of all misdemeanors, whatever may be the extent of the punishment authorized to be inflicted in the event of a conviction thereof, such courts being limited, of course, in the execution of their judgments of imprisonment to imprisonment in a local or county jail.

But it is at once perceivable upon reading the opinion in the cited case that it has no application here. There is, as we have shown, no police court in the city of Sacramento to which the provisions of the statute of 1901, supra, can apply. Besides, the court in that case in effect expresses the opinion that in those cities where the justices' and police courts are limited in their jurisdiction to the trial of misdemeanors for which no greater penalty than that prescribed by section 1425 of the Penal Code, and section 4426 of the Political Code, the jurisdiction of criminal prosecutions under the anti-trust law is exclusively in the superior courts.

Nor does the fact that the legislature omitted to specifically designate the jail or prison in which a sentence of imprisonment shall be executed under the statute here render any the less [***28] manifest the soundness of the proposition that jurisdiction of these cases is alone in the superior courts of those counties where jurisdiction thereof is not otherwise expressly apportioned or assigned. We are not called upon here to inquire whether the legislature contemplated, in the enactment of the anti-trust law, that more than a county jail sentence of imprisonment should, under any circumstances, be imposed for a violation of its provisions, or intended to give to the superior courts the power to determine in any case whether an infraction of the law shall, by the nature of the punishment inflicted therefor, operate as a felony or as a misdemeanor. ( Pen. Code, sec. 17; People v. Gray, 137 Cal. 267, 170 Pac. 20; In re Sullivan, 3 Cal. App. 193, 1\*4891 184 Pac. 781.) Nor (the court in the present case having treated the offense of the appellant as a misdemeanor by the nature of the punishment imposed), are we required to speculate as to what may be the effect, if any, upon the question of the validity of the penal section of the statute of a want of uniformity in the nature of the punishments imposed which [***29] may arise by reason of the jurisdiction in some instances being alone in the superior courts and in others exclusively in police courts. It is, nevertheless, true, as declared, that no proposition could be further removed from the realm of disputation than that, from the very nature and extent of the punishment prescribed, the justices' courts of the city of Sacramento are without jurisdiction of this class of misdemeanors. We judicially know that the judgments of imprisonment of justices' courts in criminal cases cannot be executed in any other than the county jail, except in those cases where, in certain cities, a justice's court performs the functions of a police court by taking cognizance of cases arising under city ordinances. We further know, judicially, that the judgments of the superior courts in criminal cases are, save in a few exceptional cases, executed either by imprisonment in a state prison or by the infliction of the death penalty. We can, therefore, judicially know, and thus readily determine, when a statutory offense is cognizable in the superior or the justice's court by reference to the nature and extent of the punishment prescribed, whether the statute designates [***30] such offense as a felony or a misdemeanor or as neither, or whether or not it specifies the jail or prison in which the judgment is to be executed. The truth is that, in the determination whether a certain offense is a felony or a misdemeanor, no material aid is necessarily afforded by the mere characterization of the prohibited and penalized act as either the one or the other, since the nature and extent and mode of the punishment prescribed (or inflicted, where the superior court is clothed with a discretion of determining whether the sentence shall be executed by imprisonment either in a state prison or the county jail), is the sole test. ( Pen. Code, sec. 17.) For illustration, if a statute should denounce a certain act as a felony, but limited the power of punishment therefor to imprisonment in the county jail for a term not exceeding six months [*490] or a fine not exceeding $ 500, or by both such fine and imprisonment, it would readily appear, notwithstanding its designation by the statute as a felony, that, from the nature of the punishment prescribed, the act so denounced and designated could be nothing more than an ordinary misdemeanor, of which [***31] justices' courts have exclusive jurisdiction. Therefore, in the case at bar the nature of the punishment prescribed, being in excess of the punishment which a justice's court possesses the power to impose, fixes the jurisdiction in the superior court of Sacramento [**721] county as clearly and as unquestionably as though such jurisdiction were conferred in express terms.

4. The contention that the evidence does not justify the verdict is not sustained by the record.

We shall not undertake an elaborate or detailed examination of the evidence as it is presented by the record and upon which the jury felt justified in adjudging the appellant guilty of the crime charged against him. It will suffice to say that the most that can be said of the evidence is that upon the question of the defendant's guilt, there exists therein a substantial conflict, and in that state of the record the verdict only represents the exercise of a power which resides exclusively within the province of the jury.

We may, however, point to these facts which not only stand undisputed, but some of which the appellant himself admitted at the trial: That there existed in the city of Sacramento at the time of the [***32] trial an organization known as the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association, which was composed of a large majority, if not all, with the exception of Albert Robinson, of the retail meat dealers in said city; that said Robinson was not a member of said association; that when he (Robinson) first applied to appellant to supply him with fresh meats to be sold in said city by retail, said appellant stated to him that, before he could give him a definite answer with regard to the proposition, he (appellant) would be required to first confer with the main office at San Francisco; that appellant did finally furnish Robinson with fresh meats, but uniformly charged him, variously, a cent and a cent and a half and two cents per pound more for meats than he charged the members of the association for the same kind of meats. Appellant was a witness for himself, and [*491] admitted charging Robinson more for meats than he required members of the association to pay for the same class of meats, and the only explanation he had to offer for thus discriminating against Robinson was that he had a right to do so, and had been so advised by his attorney.

There was other testimony received which [***33] tended to establish the truth of the charge against the appellant. It was, for instance, shown that numerous complaints involving protests against selling meats to Robinson by the meat company were made to appellant by certain members of the butchers' association, and these complainants, except in the case of one who claimed that Robinson's place of business was situated nearer his place of business than the rules of the association permitted, were usually satisfied after inspecting Robinson's bills, disclosing that he was paying higher prices for meats than they were compelled to pay. It was, moreover, shown by the witness, Brier, the stenographer who reported the testimony at the preliminary examination of the appellant, that at said examination O'Keefe was a witness, and as such stated, among other things, that he (O'Keefe) "did not wish to encourage Robinson's trade, and also in his testimony said that he consulted with members of the Sacramento Butchers' Association about selling Robinson meat"; that O'Keefe further testified at said examination that "Robinson paid more for his meat than was paid by anybody else purchasing beef from his corporation at that time . . ."; that the [***34] "defendant also testified in his examination that the prices on meat sold by him to Robinson from January 4th to 11th, inclusive, were higher than the prices on the meats sold by him during that time to members of the Sacramento Butchers' Protective Association"; that he stated that "he did not propose to give any satisfaction to Robinson; that he knew that Robinson was not a member of the association; that he knew the other dealers getting meat here were members of that association; stated that he talked with members of the association about selling Robinson meat prior to the time Robinson came to see him in reference to buying meat from the Western Meat Company, and prior to the time of selling Robinson meat; stated that it was his intention to consult as many of the members as he could before selling Robinson meats; that he would be governed [*492] by the desires of the association in dealing with Robinson, and that in his dealings with Robinson he was governed by the desires of the members of the association," etc. There is considerable more testimony shown by the record corroborative of that of which the foregoing is a mere synopsis, but we have referred sufficiently to the [***35] proof adduced by the people to show that the jury were justified in reaching the conclusion that the charge alleged in the information was established by the degree of proof required in criminal cases. As we have before stated, the gist or gravamen of the crime charged in the information is the formation by the parties named therein of the conspiracy for the purpose of destroying free competition in the retail meat business in the city of Sacramento, and, therefore, except in so far as it serves as evidence of the crime charged, the actual execution of the conspiracy is immaterial. It is enough, in other words, to show that the purpose of the combination into which the parties referred to in the information entered was to carry out contracts and agreements and understandings between them in restraint of trade. Therefore, while it is not for this court to analyze the evidence with the purpose of ascertaining and passing upon its probative force and effect, it may well be suggested that with the uncontradicted evidence of the appellant's admissions, considered with the other circumstances to which we have briefly referred, what possible ground is there presented here for holding, or [***36] even doubting, that the conclusion [**722] of the jury that the purpose of the combination was to circumvent legitimate competition in the business of retailing meats in the city of Sacramento is not justified. It is idle, and no answer to this position, to say, as is the fact, that the appellant and each of the members of the Butchers' Protective Association positively denied that there ever was any "understanding, compact or agreement" between the members of said association and the Western Meat Company or O'Keefe, as the manager of said company, "whereby it was understood or agreed in any manner, shape or form that the Western Meat Company was to charge persons who did not belong to that association a higher or a different price for fresh meats than would be charged members of the Butchers' Protective Association"; for thus there is, plainly, brought [*493] about that conflict only which, under our system, forecloses interference by reviewing courts with the verdict of a jury or the findings of a court.

5. There are many alleged errors assigned in the rulings of the court upon questions involving the admission and rejection of evidence. All these we shall not undertake [***37] to specially review, for it will be sufficient to say that we have been unable, after a careful examination of these assignments, to find in any of the rulings, even if it might well be conceded that some of them were erroneous, anything prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant. But most of the objections interposed by appellant to the admission of certain testimony, in their very nature bear upon the weight rather than upon the question of the competency or relevancy of such testimony.

We may, however, point out a few of the overruled objections interposed by the defendant, and of which advantage is sought to be taken by appellant on this appeal, as illustrating the nonprejudicial effect of the rulings generally of the trial court, assuming that they or some of them were not strictly correct.

Certain witnesses, introduced by the people, testified that Robinson bought smoked and cured meats from the company and was charged therefor prices at which the same kind and quality of such meats were sold to other retailers, including the members of the butchers' association. There was no complaint, nor was there any dispute upon the proposition that the company discriminated [***38] in prices against Robinson in the sale of smoked and cured meats. The charge was, as the evidence clearly discloses, that the discrimination complained of was made on the sale of fresh meats. The testimony with regard to smoked or cured meats was, in some measure, whether large or small is unimportant, corroborative of the evidence of the conspiracy charged, showing that the meat company discriminated in favor of the members of the butchers' association and against Robinson in the sale of fresh meats. In other words, it emphasized to some extent the direct proof of the existence of the conspiracy by showing that as to those meats in which the members of the association did not deal, the meat company did not discriminate against Robinson but sold him such [*494] meats at normal prices. If such were not the purpose and effect of the testimony concerning cured or smoked meats, then it had none at all, and therefore, if erroneously admitted, could not have been prejudicial.

Objection was also made and overruled to the introduction in evidence by the people of the by-laws of the Butchers' Protective Association. We think the ruling was proper. The by-laws were not only proper for [***39] the purpose of disclosing the identity of the members of the association, but also to show the nature and purposes of the association and the object of its connection, if any, with the Western Meat Company. Indeed, if the by-laws tended in any manner to disclose the criminal conspiracy charged in the information, they were competent evidence for that purpose. (Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 105, 134 N. E. 790; 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 863.) But if the by-laws failed to show, or contained nothing tending to disclose the conspiracy charged, then, clearly they were harmless as evidence, and their admission into the record could have had no prejudicial effect upon the rights of the appellant.

The further claim is made that the court erred to the detriment of the defendant by allowing the people to inquire of the members of the association, upon cross-examination, whether they contributed money toward the employment of counsel for the defense or otherwise aided the defendant in the preparation and maintenance of his defense. The object of this cross-examination was, of course, to show that the members of the association were more than ordinarily interested [***40] in the defense and were, therefore, partisans. It is not necessary to refer to authorities to show the manifest propriety of the cross-examination which appellant condemns. It is always proper for a party against whom a witness has given damaging testimony to show out of the mouth of the witness himself, if he can, or by other sources, if necessary, that such witness has an unusual interest in the outcome of the case, thus putting the jury in possession of a circumstance which may materially aid them in determining how much weight, if any, the testimony of such witness is entitled to.

Thus we have referred to some of the many objections against the validity of the judgment and order here based [*495] upon the rulings of the trial court upon the evidence, and, as suggested, they fairly represent the general character, in their effect upon the rights of the appellant, of those other objections to which we must forbear giving special attention.

[**723] 6. Many of the instructions of the court are assailed as involving erroneous statements of the law applicable to the case. We shall not specially review all these assignments. The charge of the court in its entirety is full, [***41] clear and fair upon all the vital points in the case.

The instructions by which the jury were told that the crime of conspiracy could be proved by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence were perfectly proper. No reason exists for requiring the proof of the crime of conspiracy to be by means of direct rather than by circumstantial evidence. No one has ever challenged the proposition that it is competent to prove any ultimate fact by circumstantial evidence. Indeed, it would be impossible to prove many cases of conspiracy or of any other crime without the aid of such evidence.

The italicized part of the following instruction is particularly criticized:

"The common design is the essence of the charge, and while it is necessary in order to establish a conspiracy, to prove a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish the criminal or unlawful purpose, it is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together, and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme was to be, and the detail of the plans or means by which [***42] the unlawful combination was to be made effective It is sufficient if two or more persons, in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. In other words, where an unlawful end is sought to be effected, and two or more persons, actuated by the common purpose of accomplishing that end, work together, in any way, in furtherance of the unlawful scheme, every one of said persons becomes a member of the conspiracy, although the part he was to take therein was a subordinate one, or [*496] was to be executed at a remote distance from the other conspirators."

The evident and rational meaning of the portion of the foregoing instruction put in italics, when read with the remainder of said instruction, is that "no explicit or formal agreement" need be proved, if it be otherwise satisfactorily proved that two or more persons, in any manner, come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. In other words, the instruction in effect, and with reasonable clearness, declared to the jury that it is immaterial how or in what manner a conspiracy may be formed, so long as it sufficiently [***43] appears from the evidence that it was formed for an unlawful purpose.

Several other instructions of similar import to the fore-going are complained of, but in view of what we have said with regard to the quoted instruction they need not be specially noticed.

The instruction to the effect that, if the jury should find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that, in pursuance of an understanding or agreement, either express or tacit, between one F. J. Salcedo, a member of the butchers' association and the defendant, whereby O'Keefe agreed to charge, and did charge, Albert Robinson more for the meat purchased by him of said defendant than was charged by said defendant to any member of said association, with the intent to lessen competition, it would be the duty of the jury to convict the defendant, was pertinent, and based upon the testimony of the witness Brier and that of said Salcedo. It is not disputed that Salcedo was, at the times mentioned in the information, a member of the butchers' association, and it further appears that on several different occasions he personally remonstrated with the defendant against the sale of fresh meats to Robinson.

It will be remembered that [***44] it was proved that the defendant himself admitted, while on the witness-stand at the preliminary hearing of the charge against him, that, in his dealings with Robinson "he was governed by the desires of the members of the association."

We have thus given attention to some of the more important objections to the charge of the court. As declared, the instructions as a whole with clearness correctly declared to [*497] the jury the rules by which they were to be governed in considering the evidence.

Some intimation is thrown out by counsel for the appellant that the law against trusts and unlawful combinations is out of joint with the constitution, and as well conflicts with the law on the subject of criminal conspiracies as defined by the Penal Code. The specific ground for the constitutional objection to the law is not pointed out, and we do not think any such objection can be shown. Nor can we perceive any incompatibility, if such an objection could be successfully urged against the anti-trust law, between the latter and the code section pertaining to the crime of conspiracy. The essence or gist of conspiracy here, as is true of the crime as it is defined by section 182 of the Penal Code [***45], is in the formation and maintenance of the conspiracy for the purpose of accomplishing some unlawful object, or, also under the code, for the purpose of accomplishing a lawful object by unlawful means. As we have before declared, in the case at bar the actual acts constituting the crystallization of the object of the conspiracy constitute evidence only of the unlawful combination or agreement to co-operate together for the purpose of destroying free competition in trade, and the only distinction, which is none at all, so far as the crime itself is concerned, between the conspiracy charged here and that with which the code section deals, is that the former is made to apply to a different object from any mentioned in the code.

[**724] We have found nothing in the record demanding a reversal of either the judgment or the order, and both are, therefore, affirmed.

Chipman, P. J., and Burnett, J., concurred.

A petition to have the cause heard in the supreme court, after judgment in the district court of appeal, was denied by the supreme court on March 23, 1910.

---

End of Document

Corn Products Refining Co. v. Roser-Runkle Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Hardin County, Ohio

April, 1910, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

22 Ohio Dec. 663 *; 1910 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 111 **; 10 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 596

CORN PRODUCTS REFINING CO. v. ROSER-RUNKLE CO.

Prior History: [**1] DEMURRER to answer.

Disposition: Demurrer to the second defense sustained.

Core Terms

---

glucose, cause of action, set-off, pounds

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN1[ Responses, Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections

Any new matter constituting a defense, counterclaim, or set-off may be set forth in the answer, Ohio Gen. Code §§ 11314, 11315. A "defense" in the sense used in these sections means that which may be offered to defeat a suit, by denying, justifying, or confessing and avoiding, the cause of action. It goes only to the plaintiff's right.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN2[ Pleadings, Crossclaims

A counterclaim is a cause of action existing in favor of a defendant, and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action. Ohio Gen. Code § 11317.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

**HN3** Pleadings, Crossclaims

A set-off is defined as a cause of action existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising on contract or ascertained by the decision of a court, and can only be pleaded in an action that is founded on contract. Ohio Gen. Code § 11319.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > General Overview

**HN4** Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The right to recover depends upon a violation of the Valentine Antitrust Law, Ohio Gen. Code §§ 6391 et. seq.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Rem Actions > True In Rem Actions

**HN5** Pleadings, Crossclaims

"Set-off" is the limit of the defendant's right to plead, and being statutory and unknown to the common law, the right to plead it is necessarily limited by Ohio Gen. Code § 11319, itself. The action should be a direct one.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

MONOPOLIES--PLEADING.

1. Elements of Good Answer.

A good answer under Gen. Code 11314 et seq. must set forth facts constituting a defense, set-off, or counterclaim.

2. That Seller is a Monopoly is no Defense to Action for Goods Sold by It.

In an action to recover for goods sold, it is no defense to say that the plaintiff is an unlawful trust and combination in restraint of trade.

3. Cause of Action for Injuries to Business under Valentine Act does not Arise on Contract.

The cause of action created in favor of one "injured in his business or property" under the Valentine antitrust law, Gen. Code 6391 et seq., does not arise upon contract and is not a counterclaim or set-off in an action to recover for goods sold.

4. Offering Premium for Exclusive Patronage of Buyer not In Restraint of Trade.

The offer of a premium or reward to a customer in the way of profit-sharing in one's business for exclusive patronage during a given future period is not in restraint of trade nor against public policy.

Counsel: Smick & Hoge, for plaintiff.

George E. Crane, for defendant.

Judges: DUNCAN, J.

Opinion by: DUNCAN

Opinion

---

[*663] DUNCAN, J.

This suit is brought to recover $ 416.50 as the balance due on an account for fifty-nine barrels of glucose sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant in the year 1908.

The first defense is a general denial.

For a second defense the defendant says that the plaintiff is a member of a trust and combination in restraint of trade and that at the time said sale was made said combination was the sole manufacturer of glucose in the United States, and that for the purpose of forestalling and preventing competition therein and to further give effect to their unlawful conspiracy against [*664] trade, the plaintiff and other members offered in advance to give their customers, respectively, a rebate on all glucose purchased by them in the year 1907, to be determined by the profits of the company at the close of that year, provided the customer would purchase all the glucose from that member exclusively, required for use in its establishment during said year 1907 and the year 1908, which [***2] the defendant accepted, and that the plaintiff thereafter raised the price of glucose twenty cents per hundred pounds and thereby created a fund for the purpose of and to be used to prevent threatened competition in the building of other glucose factories, and that as a result the defendant was compelled to buy said glucose of said trust and to pay therefor twenty cents more per hundred pounds than such glucose was reasonably worth, and that much more than it would have to pay but for said combination.

The defendant further says that during said year 1907, it purchased of the plaintiff 277,644 pounds of glucose and that under and pursuant to said offer and acceptance it is entitled to fifteen cents per hundred pounds thereof, amounting to $ 416.50, as its share of plaintiff's profits for said year, for which the defendant prays judgment and set-off against plaintiff's claim.

A general demurrer is filed to this second defense.

This demurrer does not call upon the court to decide whether the facts set forth in this second defense of the answer constitute a cause of action, but whether the facts there alleged are sufficient in law to defeat the plaintiff's claim.

The civil code provides [***3] that HN1 "any new matter constituting a defense, counterclaim or set-off" may be set forth in the answer (Gen. Code 11314, 11315). A "defense" in the sense used in these sections means that which may be offered to defeat a suit, by denying, justifying or confessing and avoiding, the cause of action. It goes only to the plaintiff's right. It is not a claim in any sense. It is not a sword, but simply a shield. This, as distinguished from the words "counterclaim" and "set-off," used in the same connection. HN2 A counterclaim as defined by the code is "a cause of action existing in favor of a defendant, and against a plaintiff * * * between whom a several judgment [*665] might be had in the action, and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action." Gen. Code 11317.

The fact that the plaintiff was a member of a trust and combination in restraint of trade is not a defense at common law nor by statute to an action for goods sold by it, even though the price of those goods was fixed by the trust agreement. The plaintiff's cause of action is in no sense dependent upon or affected by [***4] the alleged trust agreement. That agreement the defendant was not a party to and it is entirely collateral to the transaction sued upon. There is no allegation in the answer tending to show that the sale in question was tainted with any illegality or was contrary to public policy, and the court is not called upon to give effect to any such transaction. If the statute, Gen. Code 6931 et seq., made void all sales made by an unlawful trust, or authorized the purchaser of goods from a trust to plead its unlawful character as a defense, a different question would be presented. That the plaintiff is a member of an unlawful trust, etc., is no defense to an action for goods sold by it, has been decided many times. Jackson v. Brick Assn. 53 Ohio St. 303 [41 N.E. 257]; 35 L.R.A. 287; 53 Am. St. Rep. 637]; Kinner v. Railway, 69 Ohio St. 339 [69 N.E. 614]; Connolly v. Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U.S. 540, 545 [22 S. Ct. 431; 46 L. Ed. 679]; National Distilling Co. v. Importing Co. 86 Wis. 352 [56 N.W. 864]; 39 L.R.A. 902]; Dennehy v. McNulta, 86 F. 825 [**5] [30 C.C.A. 422; 41 L.R.A. 609]; Hadley Dean Plate Glass Co. v. Glass Co. 143 F. 242 [74 C.C.A. 462].

It is not alleged in the answer that the defendant purchased all of its glucose of the plaintiff during the year 1907 and 1908, so as to bring itself within the terms of the proposition as one entitled to the rebate offered. The action is not based upon any of the terms of the alleged contract set up as a defense, nor is it in furtherance of or connected with it in any way. The prices were not fixed by or with reference to the so-called contract, nor the rebate, and the only way the defendant could [*666] become a party to it was by doing something, not agreeing to do; that is to say, by purchasing all its glucose from the plaintiff during the years 1907 and 1908. It was simply the offer of a premium or reward in the way of profit sharing based upon the defendant's exclusive business in the purchase of glucose during those years, and even though "accepted," it did not bind or pretend to bind the defendant to purchase of the plaintiff a single pound of glucose, much less all it required in the prosecution of its business during said period. [**6] In these respects this case is distinguished from the case of Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight & Sons Co. 16 Ohio F. Dec. 216 [212 U.S. 227; 29 S. Ct. 280; 53 L. Ed. 486], where for the plaintiff to recover it was necessary for the court to give effect to the trust agreement. The same as to McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U.S. 639 [19 S. Ct. 839; 43 L. Ed. 1117]. Besides, the offer was legitimate. It tended to protect the trade and good will of the plaintiff and others making it, leaving the customer free to trade where he pleased. If there was an unlawful trust, it was outside and beyond and independent of the transaction sued on here. This so-called contract lacking the essential elements of a trust agreement, can not be set up as a counterclaim in this action.

If, then, the claim urged by the defendant by reason of the alleged excess of price charged it by the plaintiff for said glucose is not a set-off, it can not be pleaded as an answer in this case. The code defines HN3 [↑] a set-off as "a cause of action existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be [**7] had in the action, and arising on contract or ascertained by the decision of a court, and can only be pleaded in an action founded on contract." (Gen. Code 11319.) It may be conceded that this action is founded on contract, the sale of the glucose, but is the defendant's cause of action founded on contract? If it is not, it can not be pleaded as a set-off. The right of action is not known at common law. It was created by statute (the Valentine antitrust law, Gen. Code 6391 et seq.). HN4 [↑] The right to recover depends upon a violation of that statute. The recovery is not one of compensation [*667] or damages. The amount is twofold, the damages sustained by him "injured in his business or property." This being so, it can not be said that the defendant's cause of action is "founded on contract," but rather upon the statute for the collection of a penalty, the amount of which is thus fixed. The statute creates the right of action, fixes the amount of recovery and prescribes the remedy by suit to enforce it. HN5 [↑] "Set-off" is the limit of the defendant's right to plead, and being statutory and unknown to the common law, the right to plead it is necessarily limited by the statute itself, as [**8] already indicated. Maxwell, Code Plead. p. 546; Pomeroy, Rem. & Rem. Rights Sec. 765; Phillips, Code Plead. Sec. 254. The action should be a direct one.

Holding these views, it follows that the demurrer to the second defense must be sustained. Exceptions noted.

State v. Glenn Lumber Co.

Supreme Court of Kansas

July, 1910, Decided ; November 5, 1910, Filed

No. 17,085.

Reporter

83 Kan. 399 *; 111 P. 484 **; 1910 Kan. LEXIS 544 ***

THE STATE OF KANSAS, Appellant, v. THE GLENN LUMBER COMPANY, Appellee.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from Labette district court. Opinion filed November 5, 1910. Reversed.

Disposition: Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

Core Terms

---

counts, charging, cement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Appeals

HN1 Accusatory Instruments, Informations

It has been held in other jurisdictions that so long as any count of an information is held good the state can not appeal from an order quashing the others. But under the practice in Kansas the prosecution of several distinct offenses at the same time by means of an information containing several counts is a mere matter of convenience. For many purposes the proceeding under each count may be regarded as in effect a separate action. There is no reason why, where one count of an information has been quashed, a review of that ruling may not be had, even although the case proceeds to trial upon other counts charging other violations of the law. Where several counts are employed merely as different methods of describing the same illegal act the rule may be different.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Appeals

HN2 Accusatory Instruments, Informations

The statute does not in terms authorize an appeal from an order requiring the state to amend an information by making two or more counts out of matter contained in one. But such an order, when the state refuses compliance, necessarily ends the prosecution and in effect sets aside the information. It is therefore appealable under the statute authorizing an appeal "on quashing or setting aside an information." Crim. Code, § 283 (Kansas).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization

HN3  Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See Laws 1889, ch. 257, § 1, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 5185 (Kansas).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Miscellaneous Offenses > General Overview

HN4  Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See Laws 1889, ch. 257, § 3, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 5187 (Kansas).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

HN5  Accusatory Instruments, Informations

The real inquiry in each case must be whether the information sufficiently advises the defendant of the nature of the charge against him, so that he can properly prepare his defense and so that he is not placed at a disadvantage in the conduct of the trial on his part. If it accomplishes this the spirit of the law is complied with.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

HN6  Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

It is not necessary for the state to specify the precise nature of an antitrust agreement, or do more than to characterize it as one intended and adapted to accomplish the results described in the statute. Such a requirement would go far to render the law ineffective, since it would often be difficult or impossible for the prosecutor to ascertain with certainty the details of the combination complained of.

Syllabus

---

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT.

1. CRIMINAL LAW--Appeal by the State--Order Quashing Part of an Information. The state may appeal from an order quashing one count of an information, although another count charging a different act is held sufficient or is not attacked.
2. CRIMINAL LAW--Appeal by the State--Order Requiring Separate Statements of Matter Pleaded in One Count. Under the statute (Crim. Code, § 283) authorizing an appeal by the state in a criminal action "on quashing or setting aside an . . . information" an appeal may be had from an order requiring matter pleaded in one count to be separately stated in different counts.

3. CRIMINAL LAW--Right of Appeal--Rendition of Final Judgment. Where a motion to quash an information is sustained, and the state refuses to amend, the fact that no formal final judgment is entered discharging the defendant is not ground for dismissing the appeal.

4. INFORMATION--Statutory Offense--Agreement to Prevent Competition. In a prosecution under the statute (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 5185) forbidding agreements [***2] to prevent competition in the sale of articles, or to control their price, it is not necessary that the information describe the nature of the agreement complained of, further than to characterize it in the language of the statute as intended and adapted to accomplish certain results.

5. STATUTES--Repeal by Implication--Antitrust Law. The antitrust law of 1889 (Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 5185-5193) is not repealed by that of 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 5142-5152.)

6. INFORMATION--Duplicity. An information is not bad for duplicity which charges in one count acts which would constitute a misdemeanor under either of the antitrust laws referred to.

Counsel: Fred S. Jackson, attorney-general, John Marshall, assistant attorney-general, Charles D. Shukers, special assistant attorney-general, and M. E. Williams, county attorney, for the appellant.

Thurmond & Farrar, and Glasse & Burton, for the appellee.

Judges: MASON, J.

Opinion by: MASON

Opinion

---

[*400] [**485] The opinion of the court was delivered by

MASON, J.: An information was filed against the Glenn Lumber Company, a corporation, charging it in ten separate counts with violating the antitrust laws. The defendant filed a motion [***3] to quash the first eight, and to require the state to set out in separate counts the different offenses charged in each of the remaining two. The court sustained both motions and made an order giving the plaintiff thirty days to amend the information, if so desired, and the defendant twenty days in which to plead to such amended information. The state declined to amend, and appeals from the rulings upon the motions.

The defendant challenges the right of the plaintiff to be heard, upon the grounds that the state can not appeal from an order quashing a part of the counts of an [*401] information or from the sustaining of a motion for the separate statement of several offenses, and that if such an appeal lies at all it can be brought only after a final judgment for the defendant, which was not formally rendered in this case.

HN1 [↑] It has been held in other jurisdictions that so long as any count of an information is held good the state can not appeal from an order quashing the others. ( The State v. Stegman, 90 Mo. 486, 2 S.W. 798; The State v. Thompson, 41 Tex. 523.) But under the practice in this state the prosecution of several distinct offenses at [***4] the same time by means of an information containing several counts is a mere matter of convenience. For many purposes the proceeding under each count may be regarded as in effect a separate action. A defendant may procure a reversal as to a part of the counts on which he has been convicted, although the judgment is affirmed as to the rest. ( The State v. Guettler, 34 Kan. 582, 9 P. 200.) We see no reason why, where one count of an information has been quashed, a review of that ruling may not be had, even although the case proceeds to trial upon other counts charging other violations of the law. Where several counts are employed merely as different methods of describing the same illegal act the rule may be different.

HN2[] The statute does not in terms authorize an appeal from an order requiring the state to amend an information by making two or more counts out of matter contained in one. But such an order, when the state refuses compliance, necessarily ends the prosecution and in effect sets aside the information. It is therefore appealable under the statute authorizing an appeal "on quashing or setting aside an . . . information." (Crim. Code, § 283.)

The full language [***5] of the statute is that "appeals to the supreme court may be taken by the state in the following cases: . . . upon a judgment for the defendant [*402] on quashing or setting aside an indictment or information." (Crim. Code, § 283.) Under a somewhat similar statute, containing, however, other provisions possibly affecting the matter, the supreme court of Missouri held that an order quashing an indictment could not be reviewed on appeal until a final judgment for the defendant had been formally entered. (State v. Fraker, 141 Mo. 638, 43 S.W. 389.) We do not regard the omission to make a complete record, showing a technical final disposition of the case, as fatal to the right of review. The order sustaining the motion to quash by its own operation set aside the counts of the information so assailed, and left nothing pending in that respect against the defendant. True, the district court would for some purposes be regarded as retaining jurisdiction so long as an amendment might be contemplated, but when the state declined to amend it elected to treat the proceeding as [*486] at an end, and the practical effect was a discharge of the defendant as to the counts [***6] involved. The state's refusal to comply with the order requiring two of the counts to be recast created substantially the same situation with respect to them.

Upon the merits, the principal contention of the defendant is that the allegations of each of the first eight counts are too indefinite to advise it of the nature of the accusation against it. The statute under which they are drawn reads:

HN3[] "All arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation or sale of articles imported into this state, or in the product, manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or product of domestic raw material, or for the loan or use of money, or to fix attorneys' or doctors' fees, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts or combinations between persons or corporations, designed or which tend to advance, reduce or control the price or the cost to the producer or to the consumer of any such products or articles, or to control the cost or rate of insurance, [*403] or which tend to advance or control the rate of interest for the loan or [***7] use of money to the borrower, or any other services, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void." (Laws 1889, ch. 257, § 1, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 5185.)

HN4[] "All persons entering into any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust or combination, or who shall after the passage of this act attempt to carry out or act under such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust or combination . . . shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." (Laws 1889, ch. 257, § 3, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 5187.)

The first count, which, so far as concerns this question, is like the next seven, charges:

"That on the first day of July, 1909, at the county of Labette, in the state of Kansas, the said defendant, the Glenn Lumber Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas, did then and there wrongfully and unlawfully make and enter into an arrangement, contract, agreement and combination with the Monarch Portland Cement Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas, and others, whose names are to your informant now unknown, a more particular description of which arrangement, contract, agreement [***8] and combination your informant is now unable to give, which arrangement, contract, agreement and combination was made with a view to prevent and which tends to and does prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation and sale of cement, an article imported into and produced and manufactured and sold in the state of Kansas, and which arrangement, contract, agreement and combination was designed to and tends to and does advance and control the price and cost of cement to the consumer of such cement."

The state relies upon the familiar rule that in charging a purely statutory offense it is sufficient to employ the language of the statute. Of course, where a term is used which designates a common-law offense the pleader must allege the acts constituting it, but that is [*404] not the case here. Another exception, the benefit of which the defendant invokes, has been thus stated:

"If the statute does not sufficiently set out the facts which constitute the offense so that the defendant may have notice of that with which he is charged, then a more particular statement of the facts than is contained in the statute becomes necessary." (10 Encyc. Pl. & Pr. 487.)

[***9] (See, also, 22 Cyc. 339 et seq.; 27 Cyc. 909.)

A good illustration of a statute of the general character of that now under consideration to which this exception would obviously apply is that involved in People v. Sheldon et al., 139 N.Y. 251, 34 N.E. 785, which made it a misdemeanor to conspire "to commit any act injurious . . . to trade or commerce." (p. 261.) In a prosecution under such a statute it would plainly be insufficient merely to allege that the defendant conspired "to commit an act injurious to commerce." The federal act of 1890 denouncing monopolies and contracts in restraint of interstate commerce (26 U.S. Stat. at L. p. 209, ch. 647) has been held to belong to the class to which the exception applies. (In re Greene, 52 F. 104; United States v. Nelson, 52 F. 646; United States v. Patterson, 55 F. 605) The language of that act, however, is extremely general--much more so than that of the Kansas statute. Under statutory provisions quite similar to those here involved the general rule that the information need only charge an offense in the very words of the statute was applied in Commonwealth of Ky. v. Grinstead & Tinsley, 108 Ky. 59, 55 S.W. 720, [***10] but denied in State v. Witherspoon, 115 Tenn. 138, 90 S.W. 852.

HN5 [↑] The real inquiry in each case must be whether the information sufficiently advises the defendant of the nature of the charge against him, so that he can properly prepare his defense and so that he is not placed at a disadvantage in the conduct of the trial on his part. If it accomplishes this the spirit of the law is complied with. In the present instance the pleading goes [*405] somewhat beyond the bare letter of the statute. The information states the name of one of the other parties to the unlawful agreement, and mentions the specific commodity the cost of which is designed to be affected. What it lacks to make it sufficiently specific, if anything, is a statement of the character of the agreement to which the defendant is alleged to [**487] have been a party, or, what is perhaps the same thing, the means by which the control of the price of cement was sought to be accomplished. The omission of such a statement was one of the grounds upon which the Tennessee court held the indictment bad in the case cited. We can not agree, however, that HN6 [↑] it is necessary for the state to specify the precise [***11] nature of the agreement, or do more than to characterize it as one intended and adapted to accomplish the results described in the statute. Such a requirement would go far to render the law ineffective, since it would often be difficult or impossible for the prosecutor to ascertain with certainty the details of the combination complained of. On the other hand, a case could hardly arise under this statute in which an accused person could be seriously hampered in his defense by the omission of an information to describe with exactness the nature of the agreement forming the basis of the charge.

The eighth and ninth counts each contained allegations similar to those already quoted, coupled with further averments evidently framed under the antitrust law of 1897 (Laws 1897, ch. 265, Gen. Stat. 1909, §§ 5142-5152), charging the defendant, among other things, with having entered into an agreement the parties to which bound themselves not to sell cement below a common standard figure. This was the basis of the motion to require a separate statement. The charges evidently referred to the same act, and were therefore properly united in one count, the prosecution being for a misdemeanor. (The State v. Schweiter, 27 Kan. 499; [***12] 10 Encyc. Pl. & Pr. 532-534; 22 Cyc. 380.)

[*406] A final contention of the defendant is that the act of 1889, under which the first eight counts are drawn, is repealed by implication by the act of 1897 just referred to, on the theory that the later enactment is intended to cover the entire subject matter of the earlier one. A law forbidding combinations to prevent competition in buying and selling live stock, passed in 1891 (Laws 1891, ch. 158, Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2439-2441), has been held to have been so superseded, but for the reason that it treated but a single phase of a matter that was covered in every aspect by the law of 1897. (The State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 343, 84 P. 737.) The two statutes involved in this proceeding have much in common, but inasmuch as several subjects mentioned in the first are omitted from the second the legislature must be deemed to have intended them to stand together. A number of actions have been maintained since 1897 upon the statute of 1889. (The State v. Harvester Co., 79 Kan. 371, 99 P. 603; The State v. Harvester Co., 81 Kan. 610, 106 P. 1053.)

83 Kan. 399, *406¶11 P. 484, **487¶910 Kan. LEXIS 544, ***12

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded [***13] for further proceedings in accordance herewith.

---

End of Document

Malakoff Gin Co. v. Riddlesperger

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas

December 10, 1910, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

133 S.W. 519 *; 1910 Tex. App. LEXIS 888 **

MALAKOFF GIN CO. v. RIDDLESPERGER et al.

Subsequent History: [**1] Rehearing Denied January 14, 1911.

Prior History: Appeal from District Court, Henderson County; H. Gardner, Judge.

Action by the Malakoff Gin Company against Q. A. Riddlesperger and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

gin, copartnership, demurrsers, cotton, purchaser, good will, gristmill, skill, stockholders, parties

Counsel: Richardson, Watkins & Richardson, for appellant.

Faulk & Faulk, for appellees.

Judges: TALBOT, J.

Opinion by: TALBOT

Opinion

---

[*519] TALBOT, J. This suit was instituted by the appellant, Malakoff Gin Company, against the appellees, C. A. Riddlesperger and S. J. Riddlesperger, alleging, in substance, that on July 9, 1907, the plaintiff was a copartnership composed of Harry Flagg and others; that on said date the defendants sold and delivered to said copartnership their entire gin plant mill and machinery, consisting of a cotton gin, gristmill, and other machinery attached to the same situated in the town of Malakoff, Henderson county, Tex.; that as an inducement to the said purchase and sale the defendants also sold and conveyed to said copartnership, under its firm name of Malakoff Gin Company and their successors, their good will in the ginning business in the town of Malakoff, and obligated themselves in writing not to engage, either directly or indirectly, in the business of [**2] ginning or milling, nor become interested in any other gin and mill in the Malakoff community so long as the said purchasers might operate said gin or mill in the community of Malakoff; that thereafter, in the year 1908, the copartnership, Malakoff Gin Company, by that name, was duly incorporated under the laws of Texas, the same parties who composed the said copartnership firm becoming the stockholders and officers of the said corporation, the plaintiff herein; that the corporation Malakoff Gin Company succeeded to and had [*520] transferred to it all the gin and mill property and good will, purchased by the Malakoff Gin Company as a copartnership from the defendants, and has continued to run the same since the date of their said purchase; that, in violation of their agreement not to engage in the business of ginning or milling, the defendants, on the 15th day of August, 1908, procured the erection of another gin and mill in the Malakoff community, and from that date up to the time of the institution of this suit have engaged in the operation of said gin in said community, ginning much cotton, to plaintiff's damage $3,500, for which it prayed judgment. The defendants answered by general [**3] and special demurrs, a general denial and special plea. These demurrs were, among other things, to the effect: (1) That plaintiff's petition showed no cause of action; (2) that the agreement alleged by plaintiff to have been made by the defendants with the Malakoff Gin Company as a copartnership not to engage in the business of ginning in the Malakoff community so long as said copartnership operated the gin or mill purchased from defendants in said community, the breach of which is the basis of this suit, was void because in violation of section 7 of the anti-trust law of this state, passed in 1903 (Laws 1903, c. 94), prohibiting a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms, or corporations to abstain from engaging in or continuing business, etc., partially or entirely within this state or any portion thereof; (3) that said contract is void because it is contrary to the anti-trust law, in that it creates or tends to create and carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce, and creates and tends to create and carry out restrictions in the preparation of cotton and cotton seed for market or transportation, and creates or tends to create [**4] and carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of ginning and preparing cotton and cotton seed for market or transportation, a business permitted and authorized by law. These special demurrs, as well as the defendants' general demurrer, were overruled, a jury impaneled, and, at the conclusion of the evidence, the court directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendants, which was done, and judgment entered in accordance therewith. From this judgment the plaintiff appealed.

The record does not affirmatively disclose the ground upon which the court's action in directing a verdict for the defendants was based; but the appellant assumes in its assignments of error and complains that the court erroneously construed the contract upon which it relies for a recovery to mean that, in order to constitute a violation of the stipulation therein to the effect that defendants would not, so long as the Malakoff Gin Company, as a copartnership firm, operated the gin or mill in question in the Malakoff community, engage in or become interested in any other gin or mill in that community said firm must continue to run and operate said gin and mill, and that the change of the firm to a corporation [**5] and the succession and operation by it of said gin and mill, even though the members of said firm became the stockholders and officers of the corporation, would avoid that provision of the contract. This assumption on the part of the appellant is justified in view of the fact that the court overruled the defendants' exceptions to plaintiff's petition, and the question presented is: Was such construction of the contract erroneous? We have reached the conclusion that it was. There is practically no dispute about the facts. The Malakoff Gin Company was originally a copartnership composed of H. L. Flagg, J. A. Bartlett, and T. A. Bartlett As such copartnership, on July 9, 1907, they purchased from the appellees the gin and mill property described in the petition. The sale and purchase of the property is evidenced by a bill of sale executed by the appellees expressing a consideration of $4,000 cash, and reciting, in substance, that, as a further inducement to the purchase by the gin company, the appellees covenanted and agreed with said company that, "during the time they operated the said gin or mill in the community in which Malakoff is situated, they would not directly or indirectly [**6] engage in or be interested in any other gin or mill in said community." The Malakoff Gin Company as a copartnership took possession of the gin and mill and operated it during the fall and winter of 1907-08. In February or March, 1908, a Mr. Gilmore of Athens, Tex., bought a third interest in the copartnership business, and in April or May thereafter the copartnership was converted into a corporation under the laws of Texas; the corporate name being the same as the firm or copartnership name. The members of the copartnership became and were the stockholders of the corporation, and all the assets of the copartnership were transferred to the corporation. After the incorporation was perfected, the gin stand and boiler purchased from the appellees were moved to Ellis county, and another gin stand and boiler substituted therefor; but the gristmill and a part of the machinery or attachments used in operating the gin was retained at Malakoff, and the gristmill operated as it had been theretofore, and the ginning of cotton also continued. About six months after the incorporation of the company, the appellees put up a gin in Malakoff and have operated the same since that time in the ginning [**7] of cotton. It thus appears, we think, that the dominant thought and purpose of the parties, in consummating the sale and purchase of the property in question with the stipulation in the bill of sale, for the alleged breach of which on the part of the appellees appellant relies for a recovery, was that [*521] appellees should abstain from engaging in the operation of a cotton gin or gristmill in the Malakoff community during the time the purchasers of the gin or mill sold, or either of them, operated the same in that community, and that whether they operated as a copartnership or a corporation was of no concern to appellees. The appellees, it seems, had been engaged in ginning cotton and operating a gristmill in Malakoff for a long time, and their good will and the patronage of their numerous customers, was very valuable in the business to which the members of the Malakoff Gin Company as a copartnership and as stockholders of said company as a corporation succeeded. This fact was, of course, well understood to both parties to the transaction, giving rise to this litigation, and it seems clear that it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that either of them contemplated or understood that a [**8] change in the method or capacity of conducting said business from a copartnership to a corporation would, release the appellees from their obligation not to engage in a similar business for the term specified. Nor do we think it could be said, as a matter of law, that the taking in of a new partner in the copartnership or the increase of the members of stockholders in the corporation would work such a release. On the contrary, if it cannot be said that it conclusively appears that it was the intent of the appellees to obligate themselves to abstain from engaging in the business of ginning cotton and operating a gristmill in the Malakoff community, so long as the purchasers of their gin and mill, or any of them, either as members of the Malakoff Gin Company, as a copartnership or as a corporation, continued to operate said gin or mill in Malakoff, then whether such was their purpose and intention was a question of fact for the jury.

It would be a strained construction of the contract to say, as a matter of law arising upon the facts developed, that, if the members of the Malakoff Gin Company converted their copartnership into a corporation, that fact would absolve the appellees from [**9] their obligation. It would seem more in consonance with the spirit of their contract, and with fairness to both parties, to say that, so long as the members of the original Malakoff Gin Company were interested in running the gin or mill sold to them by the appellees, it did not matter whether they run it as a copartnership or as a corporation. No case directly in point has been cited, and we have found none; but the principle involved seems to be illustrated in the case of Lottman Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Houston Waterworks Co., decided by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth District, and reported in 38 S. W. 357. In that case the waterworks company had contracted with the manufacturing company, which was then a copartnership, to supply them for a specified time with water. After the execution of the contract and before its expiration, the manufacturing company incorporated the corporation succeeding to all the properties, interest, and rights of the firm. Thereupon the waterworks company claimed a release from the contract and refused to furnish the water in accordance with its terms. The court held that the incorporation of the manufacturing company's business by its members did not [**10] affect their rights under the contract. It follows that in our opinion the trial court was not justified in directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the appellees on the grounds discussed, if such action of the court was predicated upon said grounds.

But appellees contend, by appropriate cross-assignments of error presented, that the contract, upon which appellant bases its right to recover, was, for the reasons set forth in their demurrers, violative of the antitrust act of 1903, and the trial court's action should be upheld on that ground. In this contention we do not concur. We are of the opinion that said contract is not affected by that act of the Legislature. It was evidently the intention of the Legislature in the passage of the act of 1903, as well as in former enactments upon the subject, to prohibit the creation of trusts and the doing of the prohibitive acts specified in the act by them. Now, the first section of the act under consideration defines a trust to be "a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms or corporations or associations of persons; or either two or more of them for either, any, or all of the purposes named in said act." [**11] It follows that within the meaning of the statute there must be a "combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more," and it has been held by the Supreme Court of this state, in construing an identical definition of a trust as that quoted, that "combination," as so used, means union or association, and that, if there be no union or association by two or more of their "capital, skill, or acts," there can be no combination, and hence no trust. Gates v. Hooper, 90 Tex. 563, 39 S. W. 1079. In the case cited, Hooper, being a merchant doing business as such in the town of Batesville, entered into an agreement with Gates, who was likewise a merchant doing business as such in said town, by which Hooper agreed and bound himself for a valuable consideration moving from Gates to retire from the mercantile business in said town of Batesville for the period of 12 months and agreed to use his efforts to secure for Gates the patronage and customers that he himself had enjoyed in the mercantile trade at said place. It was alleged that said Hooper in disregard of his agreement, within less than a year resumed his mercantile business in Batesville to Gates' damage $1,500, for which he prayed judgment. [**12] A demurrer to Gates' petition on the ground that the contract set [*522] put in said petition was void as a restraint of trade, and as preventing competition in the sale and purchase of merchandise, was sustained, and the cause dismissed. In reversing and remanding the case, the Supreme Court further said: "In the case stated in the petition there is no combination. The plaintiff bought defendant's goods together with the good will of his business, both of which were subjects of purchase and sale, and, in order to render the sale of the good will effectual, the seller agreed that he would not for one year thereafter do a like business in that town. This was but a kind of covenant or warranty that the purchaser should have the use and benefit of such good will during that year, for it is clear that, if the seller had immediately engaged in a like business at the same place, the purchaser would have had no benefit therefrom. By this transaction neither the capital, skill, nor acts of the parties were brought into any kind of union, association, or co-operative action. The purchaser became the owner of the things sold, and the seller was by the terms of the contract restrained from doing a [**13] thing which, if done, would have defeated in part the effectiveness of the sale. The Agreement that the seller would exert himself to aid the purchaser in securing patronage but constituted the former the agent of the latter for that purpose, and in no wise contravened the statute. [Welch v. Windmill Co., 89 Tex. 653 \[36 S. W. 71\]](#). Since the allegations do not show a 'combination,' we are of opinion that the transaction did not constitute a 'trust,' and that therefore the demurrer should have been overruled."

Appellees' cross-assignments in the case at bar complain only of the court's action in overruling his demurrs to appellant's petition, the substance of which demurrs is stated in the former part of this opinion. The petition alleged that, as an inducement to the purchase and sale of the property conveyed to the Malakoff Gin Company, the appellees also sold and conveyed to said company and their successors their good will in the ginning business in said town of Malakoff and community and entered into an obligation in writing whereby they agreed and bound themselves to the said Malakoff Gin Company and their successors and assigns that they would not either directly or indirectly [**14] engage in the business of ginning or milling, or be interested in any other gin or mill in said Malakoff community, so long as said purchasers might operate said gin or mill in said community. For the purposes Of appellees' demurrs, these facts must be taken as true, and they present a case practically identical with the case of Gates v. Hooper, supra, and upon the authority of that case we hold that the allegations of the appellant's petition do not show a "combination," as contemplated by the statute, and hence the transaction In question did not constitute a trust, and appellees' demurrs were properly overruled. It is true that the act of 1903 prohibits, as perhaps the former statutes did not do, the "combination" of the capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons, firms, or corporations, etc., to abstain from engaging in or continuing business partially or entirely within this state or any portion of it; but unless there is a combination formed, such as to constitute the transaction a trust, the statute is not contravened. It may be further said that the present case is distinguishable in the facts from the case of Comer v. Burton-Lingo Co. et al., 24 Tex. Civ. App. 251, 58 S. W. 969, [**15] decided by this court. In that case three firms engaged in the lumber business bought the stock of another firm of lumber dealers in trade, together with the good will of the business; the members of the firm selling agreeing, for a valuable consideration paid by the purchasing firm, not to go back into the lumber business or engage to work for any one in said business for a period of 10 years. In holding that this transaction was void under the antitrust law then in force, the court said: "It is charged against appellees that they entered into a combination to buy, and did buy, the stock in trade and good will of Comer & Morton. Such combination required the union of the acts and of part of the capital of the appellees, and, if the purpose of the combination was to create or carry out restrictions in trade or in the free pursuit of business or to prevent competition, it was unlawful." The record does not disclose any such union of acts or capital in the case under consideration, and the case mentioned cannot be relied on as authority supporting the appellees' contention.

The judgment of the court below is reversed and the cause remanded.

State v. Racine Sattley Co.

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas

January 25, 1911, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

63 Tex. Civ. App. 663 *; 134 S.W. 400 **; 1911 Tex. App. LEXIS 1322 ***

State of Texas v. Racine Sattley Company.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from the District Court of McLennan County. Tried below before Hon. Marshall Surratt.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

parties, anti-trust, conspiracy, contracts, articles, interstate commerce, alleges, blank, written contract, co-conspirator, shipped, general demurrer, commodity, oils, exclusive contract, decisions, retail, sales, void

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Responses, Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections

A demurrer admits the truth of the facts alleged in the petition. In testing the sufficiency of the petition on general demurrer, the appellate court must indulge in its favor every reasonable intendment arising from the allegations therein.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Eminent Domain Proceedings

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Under the Texas Antitrust Law of 1903, the effect on the public of an agreement which is against public policy is not essential. The tendency is enough to bring it within the condemnation of the law. It is the policy of Texas to prevent restrictions in trade. The law does not intend to regulate restrictions in trade, but to prohibit them entirely, without regard to their immediate effect on trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Readjustments > Formation > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Readjustments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN3 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Texas Antitrust Law of 1903 prohibits conspiracies in restraint of trade. A conspiracy is a combination between two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful thing in an unlawful manner. The statute declares that the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade: Where two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or other commodity, enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons any article of merchandise, produce or commodity. A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons for either, any or all of the following purposes: To create, or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions in trade or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by law. To prevent or lessen competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise. To make, enter into, maintain or carry out any contract, obligation or agreement by which they shall affect or maintain the price of any commodity between themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in Texas of any commodity. 1903 Texas Acts, pp. 119-121.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Breach of Contract

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Contracts & Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Contracts & Conveyances > Formation & Negotiation

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Contracts & Conveyances > Liability of Principals

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Burdens of Proof

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Negligent Acts of Agents > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Negligent Acts of Agents > Joint & Several Liability

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > Criminal Activities

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN4 Causes of Action & Remedies, Breach of Contract

If two persons pursue by their acts the same object, by the same means, one performing one part of the act and the other another part of the act, so as to complete it, with a view to the attaining of the object which they were pursuing, this will be sufficient to constitute a conspiracy. It is sufficient if the evidence shows that they performed different parts. The act of a co-conspirator, done in furtherance of the common design, is the act of all, though executed at a remote distance from the other conspirators. Co-conspirators are joint tort feasors. An offense is deemed to have been committed where any overt act in pursuance of the unlawful combination is performed by any one of the co-conspirators. Co-conspirators are responsible for the acts of each other, for the same reason that a principal is responsible for the authorized acts of his agent. Facet per alium, facet per se. Where an agreement, in violation of the antitrust law, has been made, and one party pursues the course of conduct agreed on, the law will presume that the acts by him were the result of the agreement, and will hold all who entered into such agreement as instigators, aiders and abettors to the act and therefore responsible for the acts of each and all.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

HN5 Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Articles imported into a state and commingled with the common mass of property in the state are no longer articles of interstate commerce.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > Contract Ambiguities > Patent Ambiguities

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Education Law > Faculty & Staff > Employment Contracts

HN6 Conveyances, Assignments

A patent ambiguity can not be aided by oral evidence. Such is the law, and in such case, if the written instrument does not evidence a contract without the aid of oral evidence, it can not be enforced.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgments by Confession

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem > Contract Ambiguities > Patent Ambiguities

HN7 [down] Pretrial Judgments, Judgments by Confession

If there is a patent ambiguity in one clause of a contract which renders it void for uncertainty, the nullity of such clause will not affect the remainder of the instrument, if there is enough left to constitute a complete contract.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Demurrer.

A demurrer admits the facts alleged and every reasonable intendment arising from the allegations. See petition held to sufficiently charge defendants with a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the statute, Act of March 31, 1903, Laws, 28th Leg., p. 119.

Unlawful Contract -- Restraint of Trade.

An agreement between two firms or corporations engaged in buying or selling certain articles of merchandise that the one would not buy from nor the other sell to any other person or association any other makes of like goods during the period of the contract, created a conspiracy and combination in restraint of trade prohibited by the law against trusts, monopolies and conspiracies, Act of March 31, 1903, Laws, 28th Leg., p. 119.

Unlawful Contract -- Interstate Commerce.

A contract made in another State between a foreign corporation and a Texas dealer that, for one year, the one would sell its goods only to and the other buy only from the parties, respectively, if it contemplated future sales and purchases in Texas through traveling salesmen of the corporation (which the court can judicially recognize as the customary method of business) though the first purchase and sale was concluded outside of Texas and constituted interstate commerce, was not, as to such future sales to be made in Texas, an agreement in regard to interstate commerce nor beyond regulation by the laws of Texas prohibiting combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade.

Unlawful Contract -- Conspiracy.

The fact that the only part performed by the non-resident corporation under its contract consisted in selling and shipping from another State the goods made the subject of the agreement between it and the purchaser which was unlawful under the Texas statutes, would not relieve it from liability because the same were acts of interstate commerce. The non-resident was a co-conspirator with the local dealer, and liable for the acts of the latter in conducting a business in pursuance of their mutual agreement which violated the Texas law.

Interstate Commerce -- Shipment and Sale -- Original Packages.

Though goods shipped into the State in pursuance of a contract of sale outside it are subjects of interstate commerce while in the original packages, they lose that character when, the transportation being completed, they are unpacked and mingled with other goods for sale by the purchaser; and a contract by the seller with the purchaser with respect to the conduct of the business after they are so unpacked and mingled which was in unlawful restraint of trade was not protected from the operation of the State law so declaring it on the ground that the transaction was interstate commerce.

Contract -- Restriction of Trade -- Blank as to Place.

Though a contract restricting trade in certain articles at a place left blank in the instrument, the ambiguity being a patent one, be incapable of being made certain by parol evidence as to the place intended so as to be made the basis of an action on the contract, it seems that it might still be held unlawful as a general restriction of trade in the articles, in an action to recover penalties for such act.

Contract.

An action for penalties for unlawful conspiracy or combination in restraint of trade is not one upon the contract creating such combination or restriction, nor dependent upon the validity of such instrument as a contract. The instrument was only evidence of such combination, and if intended and acted upon by the parties to unlawfully restrict trade at a certain point, the fact that the point was left blank in the contract itself did not affect their liability.

Counsel: Pat M. Neff and S. R. Scott, for appellant.

A contract which, if entered into within the State of Texas, and to be performed in the State of Texas is in violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas, though in fact entered into in another State, but to be performed and in fact carried out and performed within the State of Texas, is not protected from the provisions of the anti-trust laws of Texas by any provisions of the Constitution of the United States, nor by reason of the fact that it relates in any way to an interstate transaction. Acts of 1903, p. 119; Crump v. Ligon, 37 Texas Civ. App., 172.

Allen D. Sanford and Etheridge & McCormick, for appellee.

This is a penal action, and the State must bring itself squarely within the statute. Schloss v. Railway Co., 85 Texas, 601.

The entire transaction, as is affirmatively disclosed by the pleadings of appellant, constituted interstate commerce, and as such was protected by article 1, section 8, clause 3, of the Constitution of the United States, and same did not, therefore, offend against the anti-trust [**2] laws of the State of Texas. Albertyte Co. v. Gust Feist Co., 102 Texas, 219.

The stipulation in the contract which, because of its supposed violation of the law, was made the basis of this suit, was entirely incomplete, and there existed no exclusive contract between appellee and the Bomar Hardware & Buggy Company. Morris v. Bank, 67 Texas, 602; Atkins v. V. B. School Township, 77 Ind., 447; Pepper v. Harris, 73 N. C., 365.

Judges: JENKINS, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: JENKINS

---

Opinion

[*665] [**401] JENKINS, Associate Justice.--This is a suit in behalf of the State of Texas, brought by the county attorney of McLennan County to recover the penalty provided by statute for the violation of the antitrust law of 1903. There were originally two suits, one alleging a contract of July 30, 1904, in violation of said statute, and one of December 19, 1904, to the same effect. Said suits were consolidated and tried as one. The appellant filed two trial amendments, after which the court sustained a general demurrer to the petition, and the appellant declining further to amend, judgment was rendered for the appellee, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted. Such being the case, the issue [**3] is, did the petition, when taken together with the trial amendments, state a cause of action as against a general demurrer?

The petition, as amended, contained, substantially, the following allegations:

1. The authority of the county attorney to institute and prosecute this suit.
2. That the appellee, which will hereafter be referred to as the Racine Co., at the times the contracts, subsequently [**402] alleged, were made, and prior thereto, was engaged in the business of selling at wholesale in the State of Texas, including Waco, Texas, farming implements, buggies, etc. It was also alleged that said Racine Co. was a manufacturer of such articles, and had a permit to do business in Texas and had an office at Dallas, Texas.
3. That at said dates and prior thereto, the Bomar Hardware and Buggy Company, which will hereafter be referred to as the Waco Company, was engaged in the hardware and implement business at Waco, Texas, selling articles of the kinds referred to in said contracts to the people of that city and vicinity, where there was a market for such articles, and where many citizens were engaged in the sale and purchase of such articles. That the Racine Company and the [***4] Waco Company, on July 30, 1904, entered into a contract whereby the Racine Company sold to the Waco Company certain farm implements, etc., and agreed to sell to said Waco Company thereafter as ordered, such implements [*666] as shown by their catalogue made a part of said contract, at the prices and upon terms therein named, to be shipped from Springfield, Illinois, to Waco, Texas, there to be distributed among and to become a part of the stock of said Waco Company to be by it sold at retail; and that it was known by said Racine Company and intended by them, that this should be done; that it was further provided in said contract that the Racine Company would not sell any of its said goods to anyone else at Waco, Texas, and that the Waco Company would not buy goods of like character from anyone else during the continuance of said contracts, to wit: from said July 3, 1904, to July 31, 1905, and that said parties entered into a like contract with each other on December 19, 1904, to remain in effect to July 1, 1905.

Said contract is attached as an exhibit to said petition, and the goods mentioned therein include plows, harrows, stalk cutters, listers, middle breakers, corn and cotton [***5] planters, cultivators, wagons, drills, hay tools, and plow shares. Said contracts also contain the following clause: "The Racine-Sattley Company agrees to give the party of the second part the exclusive sale of the goods of the class herein ordered in ___ for the season ending July 1, 1905. And the said second party hereby agrees not to buy or sell any other makes of like goods for the same period." Both contracts were alike in all respects, except as to the dates. The petition alleges that though this blank was left in the written contract that it was intended and agreed by both of said parties that said contract was to be performed and carried out at Waco, Texas, and that it was so carried out at Waco, Texas, in pursuance of said agreement and contract.

4. That it was the intention of both parties to said contract that it should be carried out and have effect in Waco, Texas, and to affect the market at Waco, Texas, and that if said articles were interstate traffic when shipped they lost such character when received at Waco, Texas, and the original packages were broken and mixed with the retail stock of the Waco Company and by it sold at retail, and that it was the purpose and intent [***6] of the Racine Company that this should be done.

5. That said contracts were in violation of the anti-trust laws of this State in that,

- (a) They are exclusive in character and constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade.
- (b) They prevented and lessened competition.
- (c) They created and tended to create a restriction in trade.
- (d) They created a trust and combination, prohibited by law.
- (e) They created and carried out a restriction in the free pursuit of business by each of said parties.
- (f) They regulated and limited the output in said articles.
- (g) They destroyed all competition in said articles. By either direct averment or by fair intendment, all of such purposes and effects of said contract are alleged to relate to the market at Waco, Texas.

6. That one of said contracts and all negotiations leading up to the same, was made at Racine, Wisconsin, and that the other was signed [*667] at Waco, Texas, by the Waco Company and the salesman of the Racine Company, subject to the approval of the Racine Company, and that the same was afterwards approved by said Racine Company at Racine, Wisconsin.

The court did not file its conclusions of law, and we are not advised, except [***7] inferentially from the propositions discussed by counsel in their briefs, upon what ground the court sustained the demurrer.

I. HN1[↑] The demurrer for the purposes thereof admits the truth of the facts alleged in the petition. In testing the sufficiency of the petition on general remurrer, we must indulge in its favor every reasonable intendment arising from the allegations therein. Wiggins v. Bisso, 92 Tex. 219, 47 S.W. 637; Comer v. Burton Lingo Co., 24 Tex. Civ. App. 251, 58 S.W. 969; State v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 99 Tex. 516, 91 S.W. 214; Raleigh v. Cook, 60 Tex. 438; San Antonio Gas Co. v. State, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 118, 54 S.W. 289. Upon the authority of the cases above cited and upon those hereinafter referred to, we are of the opinion that, aside from the issue of interstate commerce, and the blank left in said contract, which are the only propositions referred to in the briefs herein, the petition states a good cause of action, upon a general demurrer and we see no reason why it is not good, even on special demurrer. It undertakes to allege a conspiracy between the parties therein named to do, and that they did, the acts therein named, with the corrupt purpose and intent to [***8] effect that which is forbidden by the laws of this State; [**403] and while in civil actions great latitude is allowed in setting out the particular acts from which a conspiracy is to be inferred, the petition in this case sets out specifically the acts complained of, viz: the making and carrying into effect the exclusive contract of purchase and sale of the articles mentioned. Such articles being of prime necessity to the mass of the people, an exclusive contract in reference to the sale and purchase thereof, if made and carried out in a manner to injuriously affect the people of Waco and that vicinity, would have been indictable at common law. But our anti-trust statute has materially enlarged the doctrine of the common law as to monopolies and combines.

HN2[↑] Under our statute the effect on the public of an agreement which is against public policy is not essential; the tendency is enough to bring it within the condemnation of the law. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn. v. Houck, 27 S.W. 692; San Antonio Gas Co. v. State, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 118, 54 S.W. 289. In view of our anti-trust statutes and the decisions thereon, it can not be doubted that it is the settled policy of this State [***9] to prevent restrictions in trade. "The law did not intend to regulate restrictions in trade, but to prohibit them entirely, without regard to their immediate effect on trade." Comer v. Burton Lingo Co., 24 Tex. Civ. App. 251, 58 S.W. 969. HN3[↑] Our anti-trust statute, among other things, prohibits conspiracies in restraint of trade. A conspiracy is a combination between two or more persons to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful thing in an unlawful manner. The statute declares, among other things, that "the following acts shall [*668] constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade: Where two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or other commodity, enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons any article of merchandise, produce or commodity." Again the statute declares: "That a trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons for either, any or all of the following purposes: To create, or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions [***10] in trade . . . or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by law. 3. To prevent or lessen competition in the . . . sale or purchase of merchandise. 5. To make, enter into, maintain or carry out any contract, obligation or agreement . . . by which they shall, in any manner, affect or maintain the price of any commodity . . . between themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the State . . . of any commodity." Acts of 1903, pp. 119-121.

Had there been no decisions upon this subject, we should certainly think that the acts alleged in the petition herein violated this statute; in the light of the decisions, we think there can be no doubt of it. Texas Brewing Co. v. Templeman, 90 Tex. 277, 38 S.W. 27; Fuqua v. Pabst Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 298, 38 S.W. 29; Texas Brewing Co. v. Anderson, 40 S.W. 737 at 738; Texas Brewing Co. v. Durrum, 46 S.W. 880; Wiggins v. Bisso, 92 Tex. 219, 47 S.W. 637; San Antonio Gas Co. v. State, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 118, 54 S.W. 289; Pasteur Vaccine Co. v. Burkey, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 232, 54 S.W. 804; Troy Buggy Works Co. v. Fife and Miller, 74 S.W. 957; [Simmons \[\*\*\*11\] & Co. v. Terry, 79 S.W. 1103](#); Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 106 S.W. 918; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v.

State, 177 U.S. 28; State v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 99 Tex. 516, 91 S.W. 214; Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S.W. 705 at 714; Hastings Industrial Co. v. Baxter, 125 Mo. App. 494, 102 S.W. 1075 at 1076; State v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S.W. 902 and 1009.

II. It is contended that the demurrer should have been sustained because the contract is alleged to have been made in the State of Wisconsin, that the goods were to be shipped from appellee's factory at Springfield, Illinois, to Waco, Texas, and therefore, related to interstate commerce.

It is true that the purchase of goods in one State to be shipped into another is interstate commerce, and therefore not within the provisions of the anti-trust laws of this State. But we do not think that it appears from the petition that the sales, except the first one, were contemplated to be made under said contract in another State. The petition alleges that the Waco Company was doing business at Waco, Texas, where it would naturally be inferred, nothing appearing to the contrary, it would make [***12] its purchases. We are not to shut our eyes to such facts incident to commerce as are known to all men, among which is that [*669] wholesale dealers ordinarily make sales to their customers in this State by sending their traveling salesmen to their customers' place of business. The reason why the first sale can not be said to have been made at Waco is that it was made subject to the approval of the Racine Company, at Racine, Wisconsin; but it is apparent that the reason for this is that the first sale was made on condition of the approval by the Racine Company of the exclusive contract with the Waco Company. Having thus secured a satisfactory customer for a stated time, it is reasonable to infer that future sales were intended to be made in the ordinary manner, and if so, they would be made at Waco, Texas. It is alleged that the Racine Company had traveling salesmen soliciting and doing business throughout the State of Texas, and in McLennan County, Texas, and one of the contracts was signed by one of its salesmen. It is the business of a salesman [**404] to make sales, and it is not to be inferred that salesmen are traveling in Texas for the purpose of making sales in Wisconsin. [***13] It is alleged that the Racine Company was doing business in Texas, and in McLennan County, and that it had an office in Dallas, Texas, in charge of its agent and representative. It is alleged that its business was the wholesale of buggies, plows, farming implements, etc. We think that the petition sufficiently alleges, as against a general demurrer, that it was the purpose of the Racine Company to sell goods under said contract at Waco, Texas, and that it was its purpose and intent that said contract should be and was carried into effect in Waco, Texas.

III. It plainly appears that it was the purpose and intent of the Waco Company that it should and did carry out its part of said contract in Waco, Texas. The petition alleges a conspiracy between the parties to said contract, and the facts alleged constitute a conspiracy. If we are correct in holding that the agreement alleged in the petition was in violation of the laws of the State, if the same was intended to be, or was carried into effect in this State, then we have a conspiracy, a necessary part of which was to be, and in fact was, carried into effect by the Waco Company at Waco, Texas. But, says appellee, all of the acts done [***14] or contemplated to be done by it were to sell and ship goods, and these acts were to be performed outside of the State. As above stated, we do not so construe the contract, but, for the sake of argument, grant the correctness of this contention, still the Racine Company is no less guilty doing these unlawful acts in Texas, for the reason that the acts of its co-conspirator, the Waco Company, are, in law, its acts.

HN4 [↑] "If two persons pursue by their acts the same object, by the same means, one performing one part of the act and the other another part of the act, so as to complete it, with a view to the attaining of the object which they were pursuing, this will be sufficient to constitute a conspiracy." Cyc., vol. 8, p. 622. "It is sufficient if the evidence shows (in this case if the petition alleges) that they performed different parts." Hudson v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. 420, 66 S.W. 668. The act of a co-conspirator, done in furtherance of the common design, is [*670] the act of all. San Antonio Gas Co. v. State, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 118, 54 S.W. 289; Raleigh v. Cook, 60 Tex. 438; Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S.W. 705; 8 Cyc., 641, 657, though executed at a remote distance [***15] from the other conspirators." 8 Cyc., 683. "Co-conspirators are joint tort feasors. 8 Cyc., 847-848. "An offense is deemed to have been committed where any overt act in pursuance of the unlawful combination is performed by any one of the co-conspirators." Raleigh v. Cook, 60 Tex. 438; 8 Cyc., 687. Co-conspirators are responsible for the acts of each other, for the same reason that a principal is responsible for the authorized acts of his agent. "Facet per alium, facet per se." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 44 S.W. 936. Where an agreement, in violation of the antitrust law, has been made, and one party pursues the course of conduct agreed on, the law will presume that the acts by him were the result of the agreement, and will hold all who entered into such agreement as instigators, aiders and abettors to the act and therefore responsible for the acts of each and all. State v. Live Stock Exchange, 211 Mo. 181, 109 S.W. 675.

IV. But aside from the law as to co-conspirators and the matter discussed in subdivision No. II of this opinion, does the petition show an interstate transaction? We think not. It alleges that the goods sold and contemplated to be sold [***16] under said contract were to be shipped from Springfield, Illinois, to Waco, Texas, there to be mixed and mingled with other goods of the Waco Company, and to become a part of its stock to be there sold at retail, and that said contract was made with the knowledge, purpose and intent on the part of the Racine Company that this should be done. This same contention as to interstate commerce was made in the case of Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 106 S.W. 918. The Supreme Court of the United States (Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 212 U.S. 99, 53 L. Ed., p. 425 et seq.), quotes with approval the charge of the learned trial judge on this subject, as follows: "Oils and other products of petroleum, and goods, wares and merchandise of any character which the defendant or its agent may have purchased or acquired in any manner outside of the State of Texas, and caused to be transported to its agents or others within the State, are subjects of interstate commerce, when they enter this State, and so remain until such commodities are removed from the original tanks, vessels and other packages in which they are imported into the State, and become mixed with the common mass [***17] of property of similar character in this State. But . . . oil or other commodities purchased by defendant at points outside of the State, and transported into the State and removed from the original packages or vessels in which it was brought into the State, and mingled with property of similar character in the State, is not the subject of interstate commerce, but, on the contrary, is the subject of local commerce, and any agreement, or pool or arrangement entered into by the defendant with reference to such property, or the sale thereof, if any such sale there was, would be unlawful, if in violation of the anti-trust [*671] laws of this State." In the case of Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 44 S.W. 936, the same learned judge charged [**405] the jury, among other things, as follows: "You are further instructed that even though the contract may have reference to interstate shipments of oils, yet if the parties go further and contract that such oils, after being sold by said Waters-Pierce Oil Company to parties in this State shall be sold by said parties at a price to be fixed by the duly authorized agents of defendant company, then you are informed that [***18] such dealing with said oils, after its sale to parties in this State, is not protected by the interstate commerce laws, but such contracts if made, are subject to the laws of this State." The same result would follow if said contract, in being carried out in this State, would violate any other provision of the anti-trust laws of Texas. This charge was approved by this court and a writ of error was denied by the Supreme Court of this State. In Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S.W. 705, it was held that HNS articles imported into the State and commingled with the common mass of property in the State, were no longer articles of interstate commerce. As was said by the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the case above referred to: "If it were otherwise, neither the Federal nor the State laws could be enforced in any case." This is obviously true, except as to contracts made and carried out wholly within the borders of a single State. If such is the case then indeed have the anti-trust laws bound the octopus with a rope of sand, and predatory and oppressive combines, like Job's war horse, can say, "Ha! Ha!"

For additional decisions on the issue of interstate commerce, see Fuqua v. Pabst [***19] Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 298, 38 S.W. 29; State v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S.W. 902.

V. Appellee's third counter proposition is as follows: "The stipulation in the contract which, because of its supposed violation of the law, was made the basis of this suit was entirely incomplete, and there exists no exclusive contract between appellee and the Bomar Hardware & Buggy Company."

We presume that this assignment is based on the proposition that HNG a patent ambiguity can not be aided by oral evidence. Such is the law, and in such case, if the written instrument does not evidence a contract without the aid of oral evidence, it can not be enforced. Such is the effect of the decisions cited by appellee, viz: Morris v. Bank of Commerce, 67 Tex. 602; Pepper v. Harris, 73 N.C. 365; Atkins v. School Trustees, 77 Ind. 447. In the Indiana case, suit was brought on a written contract for the employment of a school teacher for the scholastic year, the trustees having refused to employ the teacher under said contract. The written contract provided that the teacher should be paid at the rate of $ 4.50 per day for the term of ___ weeks, and for his services should be paid the sum of ___ "the same [***20] being the amount of wages agreed upon." The court held that while the same might be treated as an employment for an indefinite term, entitling the party to nominal damages for the breach of same, yet as the blanks [*672] in said contract were left, not by mistake, but intentionally, for the reason that the parties did not know, when the same was made, what would be the length of the scholastic term, and as there was no averment that the blanks should be filled when such fact should be ascertained, it could not form the basis of a suit to recover a definite amount for a definite term. The North Carolina case was a suit upon a written contract, in which A promised to pay B ___ dollars upon conditions precedent, stated in said contract. Held, that as said contract was unintelligible without the aid of oral testimony, no recovery could be had upon the same. The Texas case was a suit upon a note signed by several parties, in which there was a clause authorizing any attorney, in case of default, to waive process, accept service and confess judgment against ___ for the amount of the note, interest and ten per cent attorney's fees. Under the supposed authority, an attorney appeared, accepted [***21] service and confessed judgment for the interest, principal and attorney's fees against all of the makers of the note. Held, that he was not authorized to do so. These cases are but applications of the well established rule of law as to patent ambiguities, above stated.

But there is another rule of law, and that is, HN7[↑] if there be a patent ambiguity in one clause of a contract which renders it void for uncertainty, the nullity of such clause will not affect the remainder of the instrument, if there be enough left to constitute a complete contract. For example, in the Texas case, supra, the void clause as to confessing judgment, did not render the note void, it being a complete contract without said clause. If this rule be applied to this case it is at least doubtful if the appellee would be benefited by said clause being treated as null and void. Without filling said blank, and treating the word "in" as surplusage, the instrument would show an exclusive contract for the sale of said goods everywhere for the season ending July 1, 1905. However, it is not necessary for us to so hold, and we do not pass upon this point. Again, in the Texas case, supra, Chief Justice Willie said that if it [***22] was absolutely necessary to fill the blank with the names of all of the makers of the note in order to give effect to the power conferred, there might be some reason for so doing. Perhaps, if it was necessary to decide the point in this case, it might well be said in view of the allegations, that the goods were to be shipped to Waco, Texas, where the Waco Company was in business, there to be mixed and [***406] mingled with their stock of goods of like character, and to be sold by them at retail, that the blank in said contract could not be consistently filled with any words except "Waco, Texas."

But we rest our decision upon another point; and that is, that this is not a suit upon a contract in which judgment is asked for the enforcement of such contract, or for damages on account of the breach of the same, as in the cases cited by appellee. This is a suit to recover a penalty on account of an alleged illegal agreement made and acted upon by the parties thereto. The written contract is but evidence tending to support the charge made by the petition, and it is wholly immaterial that it does not support the entire charge. If the written contract [*673] as plead would have [***23] tended to support any material part of the State's case, it would have been admissible in evidence on a trial of this cause. By way of illustration, suppose the charge was murder, and the defendant is alleged to be a co-conspirator with another party who did the killing. Upon the trial the State offers in evidence a letter written by the defendant to the murderer in which he stated that he will furnish arms, or otherwise aid the murderer in killing ___ at a certain time, the same being on or about the time the murder was committed, and in connection therewith the State offers to prove, by oral evidence, that the party referred to in said blank was the deceased, would not such letter be admissible in evidence? Undoubtedly so. And it would be equally admissible if, instead of being a letter, it was a written contract in which the defendant agreed for a valuable consideration, to furnish such aid, though, if a contract of this nature was enforceable at law, it would be void for uncertainty and, therefore, would be subject to general demurrer in a suit to recover the consideration therein agreed upon.

For the reasons hereinabove set out we think the court erred in sustaining the general [***24] demurrer to appellant's petition, and so holding, we reverse and remand this case.

Reversed and remanded.

Standard Oil Co. v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued March 14, 15, 16, 1910; restored to docket for reargument April 11, 1910; reargued January 12, 13, 16, 17, 1911. ; May 15, 1911, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

221 U.S. 1 *; 31 S. Ct. 502 **; 55 L. Ed. 619 ***; 1911 U.S. LEXIS 1725 ****

THE STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW JERSEY ET AL. v. THE UNITED STATES.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

THE facts, which involve the construction of the Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, and whether defendants had violated its provisions, are stated in the opinion.

Core Terms

---

Oil, commerce, restraint of trade, monopoly, monopolize, contracts, decree, interstate commerce, cases, restrain, stock, combinations, words, Freight, courts, subsidiary corporation, public policy, common law, prohibitions, conspiracy, engrossing, embraced, products, Traffic, attempt to monopolize, interstate, petroleum, parties, unreasonable restraint, proceedings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

HN2 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN3 Legislation, Interpretation

Although debates may not be used as a means for interpreting a statute, that rule is not violated by resorting to debates as a means of ascertaining the environment at the time of the enactment of a particular law, that is, the history of the period when it was adopted.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN4 Legislation, Interpretation

Where words are employed in a statute that had a well-known meaning at common law or in the law of this country, they are presumed to have been used in that sense unless the context compels to the contrary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is declared to be illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

By reference to the terms of § 8 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 8, it is certain that the word "person" clearly implies a corporation as well as an individual.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

One of the fundamental purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property.

Lawyers' Edition Display*Headnotes

Federal courts -- jurisdiction -- defendants of several districts. --

Headnote:

The presence of one of the defendants in the Federal district in which suit by the United States under the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3201), 4, is brought to restrain violations of that act, gives the circuit court jurisdiction, and justifies it in making an order under 5 for the service of process upon all the other defendants, wherever they may be found.

GGFÁNEÚÉAÍ FJÁLFÁUÉÓCAÍ EGÁHÉ EGLÁÍ ÁSÉOÁEA FJÁFHÉ FJLÁJFFÁNEÚÉSÓYÓUÁFI GÍ FÁHÉ

[For other cases, see Courts, V. c, 7, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal -- prejudicial error -- exceptions to pleadings. --

Headnote:

The overruling of the exceptions taken on the ground of impertinence to so much of the bill filed by the United States under the act of July 2, 1890, 4, to restrain violations of that act, as counted upon facts occurring prior to its enactment, cannot be regarded as prejudicial error, where the court gave no weight to the testimony adduced under the averments complained of, except in so far as it tended to throw light upon the acts done after the passage of the statute, the results of which, it was charged, were being participated in and enjoyed by the alleged combination at the time of the filing of the bill.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. m, 2, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Statutes -- construction -- congressional debates. --

Headnote:

The rule that congressional debates may not be used as a means to an interpretation of an act of Congress is not violated by resorting to them to ascertain the history of the period when the statute was adopted.

[For other cases, see Statutes, II. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- under anti-trust act -- undue restraint. --

Headnote:

Only undue restraints of interstate or foreign trade or commerce are prohibited by the provisions of the act of July 2, 1890, 1, 2, declaring illegal every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of such trade or commerce, and making guilty of a misdemeanor every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of such trade or commerce.

[For other cases, see Monopolies, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopolies -- undue restraints of trade or commerce -- reason as criterion. --

Headnote:

The standard of reason which had theretofore been applied at the common law and in the United States in dealing with subjects of the character, embraced by the prohibitions of the act of July 2, 1890, 1, 2, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce, was intended to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether, in a given case, a particular act had, or had not, brought about the wrong against which the statute provided.

[For other cases, see Monopolies, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Commerce -- power of Congress -- validity of anti-trust act. --

Headnote:

GOFÁNÉJÉFFAFLÁFÁJÉÓÉ ÉGÁÉ ÉGLÁ I ÁSÉDÁÉ FJÉÉÉ FJLÁFJFFÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁI G ÉÉÉ

The prohibitions of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, 1, 2, against restraints or monopolization of trade or commerce, do not exceed the authority of Congress to regulate commerce, as applied to undue restraints of interstate or foreign commerce in petroleum and its products, by contract, combination, or conspiracy, or monopolization, or attempts to monopolize any part of such commerce.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I.; Monopolies, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law -- delegation of legislative power. --

Headnote:

Legislative power is not unconstitutionally delegated to the courts by the provisions of the act of July 2, 1890, 1, 2, prohibiting combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or the monopolization or attempt to monopolize any part of such commerce, because the general language of these provisions leaves it to the judiciary to decide whether, in a given case, the particular acts come within the condemnation of the statute.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, III. b, 2.]

Evidence -- presumption -- intent. --

Headnote:

The unification of power and control over the oil industry which results from combining in the hands of a holding company the capital stock of the various corporations trading in petroleum and its products raises a presumption of an intent to exclude others from the trade, and thus centralize in the combination a perpetual control of the movement of these commodities in the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, in violation of the prohibitions of the act of July 2, 1890, 1, 2, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or monopolization or attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce.

[For other cases, see Evidence, II. e, 5, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopolies -- anti-trust act -- holding company. --

Headnote:

The combination of the stocks of the various corporations trading in petroleum and its products in the hands of a holding company, with the intent to exclude others from the trade, and thus centralize in the combination the perpetual control of the movement of these commodities in the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, constitutes a violation of the prohibitions of the act of July 2, 1890, 1, 2, against combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce, or the monopolization or attempt to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce.

[For other cases, see Monopolies, II. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Judgment -- dissolution of monopoly -- effect. --

Headnote:

Power to make normal and lawful contracts or agreements is not taken from the stockholders of the subsidiary corporations, or the corporations themselves, by a decree for the dissolution of a holding company found to offend against the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, which enjoins such stockholders and corporations from in any way conspiring to violate the statute, or from monopolizing or attempting to monopolize, in virtue of their stock ownership, and prohibits all agreements between them tending to produce or bring about further violations of the statute, but such decree merely restrains them from, by any device whatever, recreating, directly or indirectly, the illegal combination which the decree dissolves.

GOFÁNÉAÉFLÁFÁJÉDÉEGÁÉÉGLÁÍASÉDÁÉFJÉÉÉFJLÁFFÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁÉGÉÉÉ

[For other cases, see Judgment, III. a, 2, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Judgment -- dissolution of monopoly -- time for compliance. --

Headnote:

The magnitude of the interests involved and their complexity require that six months be given in which to execute a decree for the dissolution of a holding company controlling the oil industry in violation of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, and for the transfer back to the stockholders of the subsidiary corporations of the stock which had been turned over to the holding company in exchange for its own stock.

[For other cases, see Judgment, II. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Injunction -- against violating anti-trust act -- extent of relief. --

Headnote:

The possible serious injury to the public from an absolute cessation of interstate commerce in petroleum and its products by the agencies embraced in a holding company controlling the oil industry, in violation of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, requires that upon dissolving the holding company, the subsidiary corporations should not be enjoined from carrying on interstate commerce until the dissolution of the combination should be effected, in accordance with the decree, by the transfer back to the stockholders of the subsidiary corporations of the stock which had been turned over to the holding company in exchange for its own stock.

[For other cases, see Injunction, II. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Syllabus

---

The Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, should be construed in the light of reason; and, as so construed, it prohibits all contracts and combination which amount to an unreasonable or undue restraint of trade in interstate commerce.

The combination of the defendants in this case is an unreasonable and undue restraint of trade in petroleum and its products moving in interstate commerce, and falls within the prohibitions of the act as so construed.

Where one of the defendants in a suit, brought by the Government in a Circuit Court of the United States under the authority of § 4 of the Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, is within the district, the court, under the authority of § 5 of that act, can take jurisdiction and order notice to be served upon the non-resident defendants.

Allegations as to facts occurring prior to the passage of the Anti-trust Act may be considered solely to throw light on acts done [****2] after the passage of the act.

The debates in Congress on the Anti-trust Act of 1890 show that one of the influences leading to the enactment of the statute was doubt as to whether there is a common law of the United States governing the making of contracts in restraint of trade and the creation and maintenance of monopolies in the absence of legislation.

While debates of the body enacting it may not be used as means for interpreting a statute, they may be resorted to as a means of ascertaining the conditions under which it was enacted.

GOFÁNÉAÉFLÁFÁÉÓÉ ÉGÁÉ ÉGLÁ I ÁSÉDÁÉ FJÁÉ FJLÁFFÁÉSÓYÓÁFI G ÉHÉG

The terms "restraint of trade," and "attempts to monopolize," as used in the Anti-trust Act, took their origin in the common law and were familiar in the law of this country prior to and at the time of the adoption of the act, and their meaning should be sought from the conceptions of both English and American law prior to the passage of the act.

The original doctrine that all contracts in restraint of trade were illegal was long since so modified in the interest of freedom of individuals to contract that the contract was valid if the resulting restraint was only partial in its operation and was otherwise reasonable.

The early struggle in England [***3] against the power to create monopolies resulted in establishing that those institutions were incompatible with the English Constitution.

At common law monopolies were unlawful because of their restriction upon individual freedom of contract and their injury to the public and at common law; and contracts creating the same evils were brought within the prohibition as impeding the due course of, or being in restraint of, trade.

At the time of the passage of the Anti-trust Act the English rule was that the individual was free to contract and to abstain from contracting and to exercise every reasonable right in regard thereto, except only as he was restricted from voluntarily and unreasonably or for wrongful purposes restraining his right to carry on his trade. Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 1892, A.C. 25.

A decision of the House of Lords, although announced after an event, may serve reflexly to show the state of the law in England at the time of such event.

This country has followed the line of development of the law of England, and the public policy has been to prohibit, or treat as illegal, contracts, or acts entered into which intent to wrong the public and which unreasonably [***4] restrict competitive conditions, limit the right of individuals, restrain the free flow of commerce, or bring about public evils such as the enhancement of prices.

The Anti-trust Act of 1890 was enacted in the light of the then existing practical conception of the law against restraint of trade, and the intent of Congress was not to restrain the right to make and enforce contracts, whether resulting from combinations or otherwise, which do not unduly restrain interstate or foreign commerce, but to protect that commerce from contracts or combinations by methods, whether old or new, which would constitute an interference with, or an undue restraint upon, it.

The Anti-trust Act contemplated and required a standard of interpretation, and it was intended that the standard of reason which had been applied at the common law should be applied in determining whether particular acts were within its prohibitions.

The word "person" in § 2 of the Anti-trust Act, as construed by reference to § 8 thereof, implies a corporation as well as an individual.

The commerce referred to by the words "any part" in § 2 of the Anti-trust Act, as construed in the light of the manifest purpose of that [***5] act, includes geographically any part of the United States and also any of the classes of things forming a part of interstate or foreign commerce.

The words "to monopolize" and "monopolize" as used in § 2 of the Anti-trust Act reach every act bringing about the prohibited result.

Freedom to contract is the essence of freedom from undue restraint on the right to contract.

In prior cases where general language has been used, to the effect that reason could not be resorted to in determining whether a particular case was within the prohibitions of the Anti-trust Act, the unreasonableness of the acts under consideration was pointed out and those cases are only authoritative by the certitude that the rule of reason was applied; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, and United States v. Joint

GGFÁNEUÉFÉAFLAFÁUEÓDÉEGÁÉEGLÁÍÁSEÓaÉAFJÉAÉFJLÁFJFFÁNEJESÓYQAFIÍGÉAÉ

Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, limited and qualified so far as they conflict with the construction now given to the Anti-trust Act of 1890.

The application of the Anti-trust Act to combinations involving the production of commodities within the States does not so extend the power of Congress to subjects dehors its authority as to render the statute unconstitutional. [****6] United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, distinguished.

The Anti-trust Act generically enumerates the character of the acts prohibited and the wrongs which it intends to prevent and is susceptible of being enforced without any judicial exertion of legislative power.

The unification of power and control over a commodity such as petroleum, and its products, by combining in one corporation the stocks of many other corporations aggregating a vast capital gives rise, of itself, to the prima facie presumption of an intent and purpose to dominate the industry connected with, and gain perpetual control of the movement of, that commodity and its products in the channels of interstate commerce in violation of the Anti-trust Act of 1890, and that presumption is made conclusive by proof of specific acts such as those in the record of this case.

The fact that a combination over the products of a commodity such as petroleum does not include the crude article itself does not take the combination outside of the Anti-trust Act when it appears that the monopolization of the manufactured products necessarily controls the crude article.

Penalties which are not authorized by the law cannot [*****7] be inflicted by judicial authority.

The remedy to be administered in case of a combination violating the Anti-trust Act is two-fold: first, to forbid the continuance of the prohibited act, and second, to so dissolve the combination as to neutralize the force of the unlawful power.

The constituents of an unlawful combination under the Anti-trust Act should not be deprived of power to make normal and lawful contracts, but should be restrained from continuing or recreating the unlawful combination by any means whatever; and a dissolution of the offending combination should not deprive the constituents of the right to live under the law but should compel them to obey it.

In determining the remedy against an unlawful combination, the court must consider the result and not inflict serious injury on the public by causing a cessation of interstate commerce in a necessary commodity.

<sup>173</sup> Fed. Rep. 177, modified and affirmed.

Counsel: Mr. John G. Johnson and Mr. John G. Milburn, with whom Mr. Frank L. Crawford was on the brief, for appellants:

The acquisition in 1899 by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of the stocks of the other companies was not a combination of independent enterprises. [****8] All of the companies had the same stockholders who in the various corporate organizations were carrying on parts of the one business. The business as a whole belonged to this body of common stockholders who, commencing prior to 1870, had as its common owners gradually built it up and developed it. The properties used in the business, in so far as they had been acquired by purchase, were purchased from time to time with the common funds for account of the common owners. For the most part the plants and properties used in the business in 1899 had not been acquired by purchase but were the creation of the common owners. The majority of the companies, and the most important ones, had been created by the common owners for the convenient conduct of branches of the business. The stocks of these companies had always been held in common ownership. The business of the companies and their relations to each other were unchanged by the transfer of the stocks of the other companies to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

The Sherman Act has no application to the transfer to, or acquisition by, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of the stocks of the various manufacturing and producing [****9] corporations, for the reason that such transfer and acquisition were not acts of interstate or foreign commerce, nor direct and immediate in their effect on interstate and foreign commerce, nor within the power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. United States v. Knight, 156 U.S. 1; In re Greene, 52 Fed. Rep. 104.

GOFÁNÉÚÉÉÉFLÁFÁJÉÓÉÉGÁÉÉ ÉGLÁÍ ÁSÉDÁÉÉFJÉÉÉÉ FJLÁFFÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁÉGÉÉÉ

The contracts, combinations and conspiracies of § 1 of the Sherman Act are contracts and combinations which contractually restrict the freedom of one or more of the parties to them in the conduct of his or their trade, and combinations or conspiracies which restrict the freedom of others than the parties to them in the conduct of their business, when these restrictions directly affect interstate or foreign trade. Purchases or acquisitions of property are not in any sense such contracts, combinations or conspiracies. Contracts in restraint of trade are contracts with a stranger to the contractor's business, although in some cases carrying on a similar one, which wholly or partially restricts the freedom of the contractor in carrying on that business as otherwise he would. Holmes, J., in Northern Securities Case, 193 U.S. 404; Pollock on Contracts, [****10] 7th ed., p. 352. Such contracts are invalid because of the injury to the public in being deprived of the restricted party's industry and the injury to the party himself by being precluded from pursuing his occupation. Oregon Steam Navigation Co. v. Windsor, 20 Wall. 68; Alger v. Thacker, 19 Pick. 54. Combinations in restraint of trade are combinations between two or more persons whereby each party is restricted in his freedom in carrying on his business in his own way. Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 El. & Bl. 47.

The cases in which combinations have been held invalid at common law as being in restraint of trade deal with executory agreements between independent manufacturers and dealers whereby the freedom of each to conduct his business with respect to his own interest and judgment is restricted. Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 173; Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Oh. St. 666; Arnot v. Pittston and Elmira Coal Co., 68 N.Y. 558; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Illinois, 346; India Bagging Association v. Kock, 14 La. Ann. 168; Vulcan Powder Co. v. Hercules Powder Co., 96 California, 510; Oil Co. v. Adoue, 83 Texas, 650; Chapin v. Brown, 83 Iowa, 156.

The cases in which trusts and [****11] similar combinations have been held invalid as combinations in restraint of trade all deal with devices employed to secure the centralized control of separately owned concerns. People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 54 Hun, 354; S.C., 121 N.Y. 582; State v. Nebraska Distilling Co., 29 Nebraska, 700; Pocahontas Coke Co. v. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co., 60 W. Va. 508.

A conspiracy in restraint of trade is a combination of two or more to deprive others than its members of their freedom in conducting their business in their own way by acts having that effect. A combination to boycott is a sufficient illustration.

The Sherman Act did not enlarge the category of contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. United States v. Trans-Missouri Association, 166 U.S. 290; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211; Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38; Swift v. United States, 196 U.S. 375; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274; Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight & Sons, 212 U.S. 227, all involved combinations, either expressly by the terms of the agreements constituting them, restricting the freedom of each of the [****12] members in the conduct of his or its business, or in the nature of conspiracies to restrict the freedom of others than their members in the conduct of their business. The Northern Securities Case, 193 U.S. 197, was a combination which, through the device adopted, restricted the freedom of the stockholders of two independent railroad companies in the separate and independent control and management of their respective companies.

Purchases and acquisitions of property do not restrain trade. The freedom of a trader is not restricted by the sale of his property and business. The elimination of competition, so far as his property and business is concerned, is not a restraint of trade, but is merely an incidental effect of the exercise of the fundamental civil right to buy and sell property freely. The acquisition of property is not made illegal by the fact that the purchaser intends thereby to put an end to the use of such property in competition with him. Every purchase of property necessarily involves the elimination of that property from use in competition with the purchaser and, therefore, implies an intent to effect such elimination. Cincinnati Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179.

[****13] The transfer to, and acquisition by, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of the stocks of the various corporations in the year 1899 was not, and the continued ownership of those shares with the control which it confers is not, a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade declared to be illegal by the first section of the Sherman Act. Because of the common ownership of the different properties in interest they were not independent or competitive but they were the constituent elements of a single business organism. This situation was not affected by the transfer to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, who had the same body of stockholders and had controlled the separate companies and continued to control them through the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. These considerations differentiate the present case from the Northern Securities Case, 193 U.S. 197. The Northern Securities Case dealt with a combination of diverse owners of separate and diverse properties which were bound by the law of their being as quasi-public corporations invested with public franchises to continue separate, independent and competitive, creating through the instrumentality of the holding company [****14] a common control which would necessarily prevent competitive relations.

GGFÁNEÚÍÁ FÁFLA FÁEÓDA EGLÁ Í ÁSEÓDA ÉA FJÁEÁH FJLÁFJFFÁNEÚÍÉSÓYQÁFTÍ GÍ FÁEÁH

There is no warrant for the assumption that corporations engaged in the same business are naturally or potentially competitive regardless of their origin or ownership. If the same body of men create several corporations to carry on a large business for the economical advantages of location or for any other reason, and the stocks of these corporations are all in common ownership, it is a fiction to say that they are potentially competitive or that their natural relation is one of competition.

The common owners of the Standard Oil properties and business had the right to vest the properties and business in a single corporation, notwithstanding that such a transaction might tend to prevent the disintegration of the different properties into diverse ownerships. The Sherman Act does not impose restrictions upon the rights of joint owners.

The acquisitions prior to 1882 were lawful and their effect upon competition was incidental. The purpose of the trust of 1879 was to bring the scattered legal titles to the joint properties then vested in various individuals into a single trusteeship. The purpose of the Trust [****15] Agreement of 1882 was to provide a practicable trusteeship to hold the legal title to the joint properties, an effective executive management and a marketable symbol or evidence of the interest of each owner. The only question raised in the case of State v. Standard Oil Company, 49 Oh. St. 137, was whether it was Ultra vires for the Standard Oil Company of Ohio to permit its stock to be held by the trustees instead of by the real owners. The method of distribution adopted on the dissolution of the trust was the only feasible plan of distribution. Each certificate-holder was given an assignment of his proportionate interest in all the companies. All being parts of the common business there was no basis for separate valuations. The value of the interest of every owner was dependent upon its being kept together as an entirety. The transaction of 1899 was practically an incorporation of the entire business by the common owners through the ownership of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. That was the plain purpose, object and effect of the transaction.

The first section of the Sherman Act deals directly with contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. The [****16] second section deals directly with monopolizing and attempts to monopolize. Monopolizing does not enlarge the operation of the first section nor does its absence restrict the operation of that section.

The first section deals with entities, a contract, combination, a conspiracy; and the entities themselves are expressly declared to be illegal, and may be annulled or destroyed. The second section deals with acts.

At common law monopoly had a precise definition. Blackstone, Vol. 4, p. 160; Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U.S. 756. Monopoly imports the idea of exclusiveness and an exclusiveness existing by reason of the restraint of the liberty of others. With the commonlaw monopoly the restraint resulted from the grant of the exclusive right or privilege. Under the Sherman Act there must be some substitute for the grant as a source of the exclusiveness and restraint essential to monopolizing. The essential element is found in the statement of Judge Jackson (In re Greene, 52 Fed. Rep. 116) that monopolizing is securing or acquiring "the exclusive right in such trade or commerce by means which prevent or restrain others from engaging therein." Exclusion by competition [****17] is not monopolizing. Pollock on Torts, 8th ed., p. 152; Mogul Case, L.R. 23 Q.B.D. 615; (1892) App. Cas. 51. Monopolizing within the act is the appropriation of a trade by means of contracts, combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade or other unlawful or tortious acts, whereby "the subject in general is restrained from that liberty of . . . trading which he had before." In the absence of such means or agencies of exclusion, size, aggregated capital, power, and volume of business are not monopolizing in a legal sense.

GGFÁNEÜÉÄFFÁLÁFÁÜÖDEÄ€GZÄÉ€GLÁÍÅSEÖAÄÈFJÄÅHÉFJLÁFJFFÁNEÜÉSÓYQWÄIÍGÄÅHÉFÍ

Swift v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, was the case of a combination of corporations, firms and individuals separately and independently engaged in the business, together controlling nearly the whole of it, to monopolize it by certain acts and course of conduct effective to that end when done and pursued by such a combination.

Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Michigan, 632; People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 54 Hun, 354; State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Oh St. 137; State v. Distillery Co., 29 Nebraska, 700; Distilling Co. v. People, 156 Illinois, 448, and Anderson v. Shawnee Compress Co., 209 U.S. 423, rest upon special grounds and are not applicable to this case.

[****18] See on the other hand, In re Greene, 52 Fed. Rep. 104, Jackson, J.; Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 58 N.J. Eq. 507; Oakdale Co. v. Garst, 18 R.I. 484; State v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Missouri, 1; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N.Y. 473; Davis v. Booth & Co., 131 Fed. Rep. 31; Robinson v. Brick Co., 127 Fed. Rep. 804.

The acquisition of existing plants or properties however extensive, though made to obtain their trade and eliminate their competition, is not a monopoly at common law or monopolizing under the Sherman Act, in the absence of the exclusion of others from the trade by conspiracies to that end or contracts in restraint of trade on an elaborate and effective scale, or other systematic, wrongful, tortious or illegal acts. When such monopolizing is present the remedy of the act is to prohibit the offending conspiracies, contracts, and illegal acts or means of exclusion, leaving the individual or corporation to pursue his or its business with the properties and plants that have been acquired or created shorn of the monopolizing elements in the conduct of the business.

The acquisition of competing plants and properties cannot be rendered unlawful by imputing to [****19] such acquisitions an intent to monopolize. The acquisition of plants and properties does not exclude anyone from the trade and therefore the intent to monopolize cannot be attributed to such acquisitions. The proposition that an acquisition of property is rendered invalid because of a collateral intent to monopolize is not sustained by the authorities relied upon to support it. Addyston Pipe Case, 85 Fed. Rep. 291, and cases there cited. The substantial acquisitions made by the owners of the Standard Oil business antedated the Sherman Act and they resulted from separate transactions extending over a long period of years. They were in all cases accretions to an existing business. They formed an insignificant part of the business as it now exists. The Sherman Act is intended to prevent present monopolizing or attempts to monopolize. Whether acquisitions made many years ago were or were not associated with an attempt to monopolize has no relation with the present attempt at monopolizing.

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was not monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, or combining with anyone else to monopolize, interstate and foreign trade in petroleum and its products [****20] when this proceeding was instituted, or at any time.

The ownership of the pipe lines has not been a means of monopolizing. Substantially all of the pipe lines owned by the Standard Oil companies have been constructed by those companies. There has never been any exclusion of anyone from the oil fields either in the production of oil, or its purchase, or its storage, or its gathering or transportation by pipe lines. Ownership of the pipe lines does not give the Standard companies any advantages in dealing with the producers which are not open to others.

The decree erroneously includes and operates upon several of the appellant companies.

The sixth section of the decree is unwarranted and impracticable in various of its provisions.

It was error to deny the motion of the appellants to vacate the order permitting service upon them outside of the Eastern Division of the Eastern District of Missouri, and to set aside the service upon them of the writs of subpoena issued thereunder; and error to overrule the pleas of the appellants to the jurisdiction of the court over them. The appellants were not residents of the Eastern District of Missouri nor were they found therein when the [****21] order was made authorizing the service of process upon them outside of the district. There was no proceeding pending in that district involving a controversy for the determination of which the appellants were necessary parties.

Mr. D. T. Watson, also for appellants:

The Government has failed to maintain the affirmative of the issue made by the pleadings. Brent v. The Bank, 10 Pet. 614; The Siren, 7 Wall. 154; United States v. Stinson, 197 U.S. 200, 205.

GGFÁNEÚAÍ ÉAFÍLÁFAÚÉÓDEAÉEGLÁÍASÉOÀÉAFJÉAFÍFJLÁFFÁNEÚÉASÓYQÁFIÉG

The transfer in 1899 to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of the various non-competitive properties jointly used by them as one property was not a restriction of interstate trade, or an attempt to monopolize, or a violation of the Sherman Act.

The Sherman Act permits trusts, combines, corporations and individuals to enter into and compete for interstate trade so long as they act lawfully. It does not seek to regulate the methods nor forbid those who enter into trade from doing their business in the form of a trust, corporation or combine, provided they carry it on lawfully.

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey after 1899 might legitimately and properly compete for interstate trade, notwithstanding the combination [****22] of the group of properties gave it a great power, only provided it did not restrain such trade or by unlawful means seek to gain a monopoly contrary to the provisions of the Sherman Act.

There is nothing in this case to show that after 1899 the combination did unlawfully compete, restrict or seek to monopolize interstate trade; yet such evidence was indispensable to prove that the combination was violating the Sherman Act in 1906. See the Calumet & Hecla Case, Judge Kanappen, 167 Fed. Rep. 709, 715; Judge Lurton, 167 Fed. Rep. 727, 728; Judge Gray in United States v. Reading Co., decided December 8, 1910.

There is a great difference between the Northern Securities Case and the case at bar.

On the question of potential competition, the idea of competition between properties all owned by the same persons is a novelty. The idea that properties themselves compete, and that if one man owns two or more he must compete with himself, is startling. Competition between joint owners is also novel. Fairbanks v. Leary, 40 Wisconsin, 642, 643; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. Rep. 454.

Competition is the striving of two or more persons, or corporations, either individually [****23] or jointly, for one thing, i.e., trade; it is personal action; the strife between different persons. Properties do not compete. Their relative locations may more readily enable their owners to use them in competition, but of themselves and as against each other, they do not compete.

This idea makes the Sherman Act read that the same person or group of individuals shall not own and operate two or more sites for refineries or for stores or for any kind of manufactory which might be used by different owners in competition. Joint Traffic Association Case, 171 U.S. 505, 567.

The words "potential" or "naturally competitive" are not in the Sherman Act. Cascade Railroad Co. v. Superior Court, 51 Washington, 346. The rule of potential competition refers only to the ownership of the physical properties which produce the oil which goes into interstate commerce, and not to the oil itself. United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 407.

The Sherman Act is a highly penal one. In a criminal prosecution under the act the degree of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt. In a civil suit under it, the degree is not so great, but the proof [****24] must be direct, plain and convincing. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 58 Fed. Rep. 77; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 401; State v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mississippi, 1.

There is a distinction between private traders and railroad companies; and see also distinction under Sherman Act between quasi-public corporations and private traders. Trans-Missouri Case, 166 U.S. 290.

The mere method in which stocks are held is not prescribed by the Sherman Act; all methods are lawful if not used to restrict trade or gain an unlawful monopoly. Under the court's ruling the effectiveness of a large business organization may, by reason of that very fact, bring it under the Sherman Act.

The decree below was not justified by the facts found by the court; or by the Sherman Act; after the court in § 5 permitted the distribution among the shareholders of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of the stocks held by that company, it did without lawful authority so to do, define and limit the method of that distribution; restrict the distributees in the future sale, use and disposal of their stocks; restrict the distributees in the sale, use and disposal [****25] of their properties; and in the contract relations thereafter to exist, as well as the use and disposition of the different properties in such a drastic manner as to greatly injure and destroy the value of the same and render their future profitable use practically impossible. The decree disintegrates properties built with appellants' moneys for joint use so as to create units that never before existed and compels these units separately to carry on business and compete with other units, directly contrary to the purpose of their creation. It allows the future operation and use of the refineries, pipe lines, and other properties of the appellants only under the vague and indefinite, but broad and comprehensive, terms of § 6 of the decree, by subjecting those who in the future operate them to attachment for contempt for unwittingly violating vague and indefinite terms. It prohibits appellants from engaging in all interstate commerce until the discontinuance of the operation of the illegal combination, thus inflicting a new penalty for an indefinite and uncertain period.

OGFÁNEJÁ FÁFLÁF ÁUZÓ ÓA EGÁFH EGLÁ I ÁSEÓA EÍ FJ ÁFHÍ FJ LÁFFÁNÉJESÓYÓUÁFI G ÁFHÍG

All of such restrictions are unauthorized by the Sherman Act, are in violation of the settled rules governing [****26] injunctions, and are contrary to the provisions of the different decrees heretofore approved by this court under the Sherman Act, and especially the one in the Northern Securities Case.

The decree authorized by the Sherman Act is wholly negative, and one that merely enjoins -- stops an illegal thing in operation when the petition is filed or which then is foreseen. Lacassagne v. Chapius, 144 U.S. 124; E.C. Knight Co. Case, 156 U.S. 1, 17; Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U.S. 244, 289; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 402; United States v. Reading Co., decided by Circuit Court of the Third Circuit, December 8, 1910.

The Sherman Act prescribes certain specific methods of relief which are exclusive of all others. Noyes on Intercorporate Relations, 2d ed., 1909, § 406; Greer, Mills & Co. v. Stoller, 77 Fed. Rep. 1, 3; Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 194 U.S. 48, 71; Barnet v. National Bank, 98 U.S. 555, 558; East Tennessee R.R. Co. v. Southern Tel. Co., 112 U.S. 306, 310; Farmers' Bank v. Dearing, 91 U.S. 29, 35; United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 98 U.S. 569.

The decree hampers and greatly injures the value of the stock of the stockholders, [****27] though they are not parties to the bill.

A corporation, when party to a bill in equity, does represent its stockholders, but only within the scope of corporate power, and not as to the individual rights of the stockholder to do with his property as he chooses. Taylor & Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 122 Fed. Rep. 147, 153, 154. A corporation has no right to conclude or affect the right of any shareholder in respect of the ownership or incidents of his particular shares. Brown v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., Fed. Cas. No. 2025; 5 Blatch. 525; Morse v. Bay State Gas Co., 91 Fed. Rep. 944, 946; Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U.S. 244, 288-290.

The decree follows the appellants and their properties after the dissolution.

The Sherman Act closely limits and defines the power of the court on a petition filed to give equitable relief. The petition must pray that such violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited; and it is these violations of the act that the court may now enjoin, and only such violations. Past unlawful competition does not deprive parties of their right to conduct lawful competition. New Haven R.R. Case, 200 U.S. 361, 404.

The Sherman Act does not [****28] give power to the courts to strike down and disintegrate a non-competing group of physical properties used to manufacture an article of trade. These physical properties are bought and held and used under state laws; they do not enter into interstate commerce and hence are not under Federal control. New Haven R.R. Co. v. Interstate Com. Comm., 200 U.S. 361, 404; State v. Omaha Elevator Co., 75 Nebraska, 637.

The effect of the decree is ruinous. For instance, these companies jointly own 54,616 miles of pipe lines, of which the seven individual defendants and their associates built over 50,000 miles, in which they have an investment of over $61,000,000.

The decree splits up this pipe line system into eleven parts, takes away from the owners, who jointly built the pipe lines and who created the sub-companies, all control over the different sub-companies, and compels the eleven different parts to stand alone, independently of their principal and of each other, to be hostile to and to compete with their principal and with one another.

OGFÁNEÚÉÍ FÁFLÁ FÁUÉÓÉ Ó ÉGÁÍÉ ECLÁ Í ÁSÉÓá ÉA FJ FÁÍÉ FJLÁFJFFÁNEÚÉSÓY QÁFTÍ GÍ ÉAHEG

Pipe lines are never parallel but always continuous, and each line has a value which depends wholly upon its connection with other parts of the system, [****29] and whether all are used together as one whole. The carrying out of the decree would cut the pipe line system into isolated segments, prevent such use, and make the successful operation of the pipe lines impossible.

The decree would especially destroy the value of the stock of all shareholders who each had five shares or less. The stockholders on August 19, 1907, holding from one to four shares each numbered 1,157, and the stockholders owning five shares each numbered 439, out of a total number of 5,085 stockholders.

Considering the case de novo, and not on the findings of the court below, it is not true that when the petition in this case was filed in 1906, the seven individual appellants and their associates, private traders in oil, were, contrary to the provisions of the Sherman Act, carrying on a conspiracy to restrain interstate and foreign trade in oils, and to gain by illegal means a monopoly thereof.

The Federal law allowed and allows each of the individuals to compete freely for the interstate and foreign traffic in oil and its products. He may use all the weapons that his ingenuity and skill can suggest, to wage a successful warfare. His rights to compete are not [****30] limited to merely such means as are fair or reasonable, but are only limited to such as are unlawful and directly tend to the violation of the Sherman Act. The Federal law also allows and assures to each competitor whatever share, however large, of the interstate or foreign trade in oil he or they may win provided his means are not unlawful. The Sherman Act was passed to protect trade and further competition. It makes such restraint and monopoly a crime and inflicts, on conviction, severe penalties for such offense. It permits one set of competitors to purchase the property of other competitors solely to avoid further competition. The mere size of the competing corporations or combinations is immaterial.

The monopoly of a trade at common law was forbidden because, and only because, it excluded all others from practicing such trade, and seems to have been then limited to a royal grant, as, for example, giving the exclusive right to manufacture playing cards. It was and is a distinct thing from engrossing, regrating or forestalling the market, all of which were based on the prevention of artificial prices for the necessities of life. No one of these falls under Federal jurisdiction, [****31] but each is subject to state control only.

The present litigation is between the Federal Government and certain of its citizens. The questions involved are solely the rights of these Federal citizens and the effect upon those rights of the Sherman Act, and whether these Federal citizens have violated the provisions of that act.

There was and is no such thing as a Federal crime, aside from express congressional acts, and as no such act was in existence prior to 1890, as to the matters charged in the petition, all the matters and things done by the defendants prior thereto are immaterial.

This case involves, and only involves, the question of the restraint and monopolization of interstate and foreign trade in oil in November, 1906, when the petition was filed; it does not involve any alleged restraint or monopoly of the oil industry in any of the States.

The appellants were lawfully entitled to so hold and use in interstate trade all of its combined properties.

To succeed in this case, the Government must also show that the said Standard Oil Company was then in 1906 using its power to actually restrain interstate or foreign trade in oil, or was then in 1906 excluding or attempting [****32] to exclude by illegal means others from said trade and attempting to monopolize the same, or a part thereof.

The Sherman Act does not compel private traders, however organized, to compete with each other. The character of the oil business was and is such that a great corporation was and is an economic necessity for carrying on that industry. The growth and success of the Standard Oil Company was the result of individual enterprise and the natural laws of trade. It was not the result of unlawful means, but of skill, unremitting toil, denials and hardships, and is an instance of where the continuous use for forty years of skill, labor and capital reached a great success.

To prove a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act the Government must clearly show that when the petition was filed appellants were then actually restraining interstate trade in oil.

To prove a monopoly under §2 of the Sherman Act, the Government must show that the appellants were, when the petition was filed, then using unlawful means to maintain their control of the industry and that the appellants were then by unlawful means excluding others from said industry.

The Attorney General and Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, [****33] with whom Mr. Cordenio N. Severance was on the brief, for the United States:

It is immaterial that this conspiracy had its inception prior to the enactment of the Sherman Law, or that many of the rebates and discriminations granted by the railroads which enabled the defendants to monopolize the commerce in petroleum antedated the enactment of the Interstate Commerce Act; the principles of the common law applied to interstate as well as to intrastate commerce. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Call Pub. Co., 181 U.S. 92; Murray v. C. & N.W.R. Co., 62 Fed. Rep. 24; Interstate Com. Comm. v. B. & O.R. Co., 145 U.S. 263; Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Express Co., 93 U.S. 174; National Lead Co. v. Grote Paint Store Co., 80 Mo. App. 247; People v. Chicago Gas Trust, 130 Illinois, 268; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Michigan, 632; State v. Nebraska Distilling Co., 29 Nebraska, 700; Distilling & Cattle Feeding Co. v. People, 156 Illinois, 448.

From the earliest date these various corporations were held together by trust agreements which were void at common law. But whether they were void or not, the combination was a continuing one; there was no vested right by reason of the acquisition of these stocks [****34] by the trustees, and when the Sherman Act was passed the continuance of the combination became illegal. United States v. Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, cited and approved in Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U.S. 86; Thompson v. Union Castle Steamship Co., 166 Fed. Rep. 251; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. Rep. 700; Finck v. Schneider Granite Co., 86 S.W. Rep. 221; Ford v. Chicago Milk Assn., 155 Illinois, 166.

The Standard Oil Company, through various defendant subsidiary corporations is engaged in producing and purchasing crude petroleum in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Oklahoma, Kansas and California; in transporting the same by pipe lines from the States in which the same is produced into the various other States to the manufactoryes of the various defendants; in manufacturing the same into the products of petroleum and transporting those products, largely in the tank cars of the Union Tank Line Company (controlled by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey) to the various marketing places throughout the United States, and in selling and disposing of the same. This clearly makes the defendants engaged in interstate commerce.

Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375; Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274.

The amalgamation of the stocks of all these companies in 1899 in the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey as a holding corporation was a combination in restraint of trade within § 1 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Northern Securities Co., 193 U.S. 197; Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U.S. 244; Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274; Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight, 148 Fed. Rep. 939; 212 U.S. 227; Burrows v. Inter. Met. Co., 156 Fed. Rep. 389; Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38; Distilling & Cattle Feeding Co. v. People, 156 Illinois, 48; Harding v. Am. Glucose Co., 55 N.E. Rep. 577; Dunbar v. American Tel. & Teleg. Co., 79 N.E. Rep. 427; Missouri v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Missouri, 1; Merchants' Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Rohrman, 128 S.W. Rep. 599; State v. International Harvester Co., 79 Kansas, 371; International Harvester Co. v. Commonwealth, 124 Kentucky, 543; State v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 126 N.W. Rep. 126.

The Northern Securities Case and other authorities [****36] cited under this head are conclusive of the proposition that this is a combination in restraint of trade. The court held that the inhibitions of the Sherman Act were not limited to those direct restraints upon trade and commerce evidenced by contracts between independent lines of railway to fix rates or to maintain rates, or manufacturing or other corporations to limit the supply or control prices; that the power of suppression of competition and therefore of restraint of trade exercised or which could be exercised by reason of stock ownership and control of the various corporations, was as much in violation of the Anti-trust Act as direct restraint by contract. There is nothing in the act which can be construed to prohibit the suppression of competition by reason of stock control of railways and at the same time to permit it in manufacturing industries, pipe line companies, or car line companies engaged in the manufacture and transportation of oil. The contracts, combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracies in restraint of trade, which are inhibited by the first section of the act as applied to these classes of corporations cannot be distinguished from those [****37] contracts, combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracies in restraint of trade, when applied to railway companies. The thing inhibited is the restraint of interstate commerce. The thing to be accomplished is the maintenance of the freedom of trade. The inhibition against the suppression of competition by any instrumentality, scheme, plan or device, to evade the act, applies to all corporations and all devices. The real point is not the instrumentality or the scheme used to suppress the competition, but whether competition is thus suppressed and trade restrained and monopolized. Nowhere in the decisions of this court is there authority for the proposition that combinations by stock ownership or the purchase of competing properties is invalid as to railroads but valid as to trading and manufacturing companies. The act of Congress and the decisions of this court, so far as the principle goes, places them upon the same plane. In the argument of the Freight Association cases it was urged by counsel that the inhibitions of the Sherman Act in this regard did not apply to railroads, but only included trading companies. It is now urged that they apply to railroads [****38] and do not apply to manufacturing and trading companies. But this court in the Freight Association cases clearly laid down the rule that while there are points of difference existing between the two classes of corporations, yet they are all engaged in interstate commerce, that the injuries to the public have many common features, and that the inhibitions apply to all. 166 U.S. 322.

OGFÁNEJÁ FÁFLÁF ÁUZÓ Ó ÓGÁH EGLÁ I ÁSEÓA ÉÍ FJ ÁHÍ FJ LÁF FFÁNEJÉSÓY QUÁTFI G ÁHÍ

The transfer of the stocks of these companies in 1899 to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey had no greater legal sanctity than the transfer to the trustees in 1882, nor was it different from the transfer of the stocks of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railways to the Northern Securities Company in 1901, two years after the organization of the present corporate Standard Oil combination. It is the usual course of reasoning urged in all of these trust cases -- because a person has a right to purchase property, he may therefore purchase a competitor, and because he may purchase one competitor he may purchase all of his competitors, and what an individual may do a corporation may do. These were the identical arguments pressed with great ability by counsel in the Northern Securities Case and [****39] in the subsequent case of Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U.S. 291; but this court held to the contrary. The position is also contrary to the almost universal trend of the American decisions both Federal and state. The exercise of an individual right disconnected from all other circumstances may be legal, but when taken together with the other circumstances may accomplish the prohibited thing.

The second section of the act prohibits a person or a single corporation from monopolizing or attempting to monopolize any part of the commerce of the country by any means whatever, and also from conspiring with any other person or persons to accomplish the same object. The two sections of the act were manifestly not intended to cover the same thing; otherwise the second section would be useless. Any contract or combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade which tends to monopoly is prohibited by the first section.

Addyston Pipe Case, 175 U.S. 211; United States v. Northern Securities Co., 193 U.S. 334.

The question then is: What is the meaning of the word "monopoly," as used in the second section of the act? Of course Congress did not [****40] have in mind monopoly by legislative or executive grant. National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U.S. 129; Burrows v. Inter. Met. Co., 156 Fed. Rep. 389, opinion by Judge Holt. Such monopolies could not exist in this country except by grant of Congress or the States, and it has been held that exclusive grants to pursue an ordinary legitimate business are void. Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U.S. 754. Neither did Congress have in mind an absolute monopoly. This can only be obtained by legislative grant. In a country like ours, where everyone is free to enter the field of industry, no absolute monopoly is probable. It is sufficient to bring it within the act if the combination or the aggregation of capital "tends to monopoly . . . or are reasonably calculated to bring about the things forbidden." Waters-Pierce Co. v. Texas, 212 U.S. 86. Originally monopoly meant a grant by sovereign power of the exclusive right to carry on any employment. The only act of exclusion was the grant itself. If the grant was void, then there was no monopoly. These monopolies were common in all monarchial countries. Monopoly, however, came to have a broader meaning under the common law in [****41] the later days, and especially in the United States, and in order to arrive at what Congress intended by the act of 1890 it is important to understand the history of the times and the general understanding of monopoly as defined by the courts and the political economists, and the monopolies which were known to the people generally and against which Congress was legislating. Prior to the passage of this law, the various trust cases had been decided, in which trusts, like the

GGFÁNEÚAÍ ÉAFÍLÁFAÚÉÓDÁÉEGÁRÉÉGLÁÍÁSEÓáÉÉFJÁÉÉFJLÁÉFFÁNEÚÉSÓYÓÁFÍGÍÉÉÉÉÉF

Standard Oil of 1882, had been held illegal because they tended to create a monopoly. People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 54 Hun, 354; State v. Nebraska Distilling Co., 29 Nebraska, 700; State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Oh. St. 137. Various other decisions had defined monopoly as known in this country, -- such cases as Alger v. Thacher, 19 Pick. 51; People v. Chicago Gas Trust, 130 Illinois, 268; Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Oh. St. 666; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Illinois, 346; Central R.R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Georgia, 582.

These cases were decided before the Sherman Act was passed, and defined monopoly at common law as it was understood and existed in this country. They embrace trusts like the Standard Oil trust; [****42] agreements fixing prices, dividing territory, or limiting production, thereby tending to enhance or control the price of products; general agreements restraining individuals from engaging in any employment except as incident to the sale of property; purchases by corporations of all or a large proportion of competing manufacturing or mechanical plants; combinations of separate businesses in the form of partnership but really for the purpose of controlling the trade; and various other forms of acquiring monopoly. There was no unlawful exclusion of anyone else from doing business in these cases. They show that the term "monopoly" as applied in American jurisprudence meant monopoly acquired by mere individual acts, as distinguished from grant of government, although the individual act in and of itself was not illegal; the concentration of business in the hands of one combination, corporation, or person, so as to give control of the product or prices; as said by Mr. Justice McKenna, in the Cotton Oil Case, "all suppression of competition, by unification of interest or management."

The case of Craft v. McConoughy, supra, well illustrates this argument. The pretended copartnership formed [****43] between the dealers of the town of Rochelle, while carrying on the business separately, enabled them to control the prices to the detriment of the surrounding country. It was therefore a monopolizing or an attempt to monopolize a part of the commerce of the State; and the monopolization would have been just as effective had these separate business enterprises been stock corporations and the stock placed in the hands of a holding company. A similar illustration was the case of Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U.S. 447 (affirming 65 Kansas, 240), in which an attempt to control the grain trade of a particular station was held illegal under a state statute. The Standard combination is an attempt to control and monopolize a vast commerce of the entire country, as these people undertook to control and monopolize a local commerce.

The term "monopoly," therefore, as used in the Sherman Act was intended to cover such monopolies or attempts to monopolize as were known to exist in this country; those which were defined as illegal at common law by the States, when applied to intrastate commerce, and those which were known to Congress when the act was passed. The monopoly most commonly known in this [****44] country, and which the debates in Congress<sup>1</sup> show were intended to be prohibited by the act, were those acquired by combination (by purchase or otherwise) of competing concerns. The purchase of a competitor, as a separate transaction standing alone, was the exercise of a lawful privilege, not in and of itself unlawful at common law nor prohibited by statute, yet in the Northern Securities Case the purchase of stock in a railway was held to be illegal when done in pursuance of a scheme of monopoly.

It is not necessary in this case, and we doubt whether in any case it is possible, to make a comprehensive definition of monopoly which will cover every case that might arise. It is sufficient if the case at bar clearly comes within the provisions of the act. We believe that the defendants have acquired a monopoly by means of a combination of the principal manufacturing concerns through a holding company; that they have, by reason of the very size of the combination, been able to maintain this monopoly through unfair [****45] methods of competition, discriminatory freight rates, and other means set forth in the proofs. If this act did not mean this kind of monopoly, we doubt if there is such a thing in this country. The men who framed the Constitution of this country were familiar with the history of monopolies growing out of acts of the Government. They guarded the people against these by constitutional provisions, but they left open the widest field for the exercise of individual enterprise, and it was the abuse of these personal privileges, made easy by state laws permitting unlimited incorporation, which gave rise to the evils that convinced the people of the necessity for the passage of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. It was not monopolies as known to the English common law, but monopolies such as were commonly understood to exist in this country which that act prohibited.

<sup>1</sup> Cong. Rec., Vol. 21, part 3, pp. 2456-2460, 2562, 2645, 2726, 2728, 2791, 2928; Cong. Rec., Vol. 21, part 5, pp. 4089, 4093, 4098, 4101; Vol. 21, part 6, p. 5954.

As a natural conclusion from the foregoing definition of monopoly by appellants' counsel they claim that the inhibitions of the second section are against the unlawful means used to acquire the monopoly, but that acquired monopoly is not illegal; therefore that the court can only restrain the means by which the monopoly was acquired, [****46] leaving the monopoly to exist. We believe this to be an altogether too refined construction of the act. If such be the true interpretation, the result would be that one could combine all the separate manufactures in a given branch of industry in this country by use of unlawful means such as discriminatory freight rates, but, if not attacked by the Government before it had obtained complete control of the business, its very size, with its ramifications through all the States, would make it impossible for anyone else to compete, and it could control the price of products in the entire country and would be beyond the reach of the law. It could, by selling at a low price where a competitor was engaged in business and by raising the price where there was no attempt at competition, absolutely control the business without itself suffering any loss; and yet the Government would be powerless to destroy the monopoly because the unlawful means had been abandoned.

If the court finds this combination to be in restraint of trade and a monopoly, it is authorized by § 3 to enjoin the same and has plenary power to make such decree as is necessary to enforce the terms and provisions of the act. [****47] Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 336, 337, 344; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375; United States v. Marigold, 9 How. 560, 566; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U.S. 57; In re Rapier, 143 U.S. 110; The Lottery Case, 188 U.S. 321; United States v. General Paper Co., opinion of Judge Sanborn in settling the decree, not reported; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. Rep. 700; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific R.R. Co. v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 15, 26.

Evidence that the defendant companies obtained rebates and discriminatory rates in the transportation of their product as against their competitors, and engaged in unfair and oppressive methods of competition thereby destroying the smaller manufacturers and dealers throughout the country, is material in this case. State of Missouri v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Missouri, 1; State of Minnesota v. Standard Oil Co., 126 N.W. Rep. 527; Standard Oil Co. v. State of Tennessee, 117 Tennessee, 618; S.C., 120 Tennessee, 86; S.C., 217 U.S. 413; State of South Dakota v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N.W. Rep. 504; Citizens' Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Montgomery, 171 Fed. Rep. 553; State of Nebraska v. Drayton, 82 Nebraska, [****48] 254; S.C., 117 N.W. Rep. 769; People v. American Ice Co., 120 N.Y. Supp. 443.

A person or corporation joining a conspiracy after it is formed, and thereafter aiding in its execution, becomes from that time as much a conspirator as if he originally designed and put it into operation. United States v. Standard Oil Co., 152 Fed. Rep. 294; Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132; United States v. Babcock, 24 Fed. Cas. 915, No. 14,487; United States v. Cassidy, 67 Fed. Rep. 698, 702; The Anarchist Case, 122 Illinois, 1; United States v. Johnson, 26 Fed. Rep. 682, 684; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 230.

This conspiracy was a continuing offense. Every overt act committed in furtherance thereof was a renewal of the same as to all of the parties. The statute of limitations does not begin to run until the commission of the last overt act. Neither can the parties claim a vested right to violate the law. 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 2d ed, "Limitations of Actions;" United States v. Greene, 115 Fed. Rep. 343; Ochs v. People, 124 Illinois, 399; Spies v. People, 122 Illinois, 1; 8 Cyc. 678; State v. Pippin, 88 N. Car. 646; United States v. Bradford, 148 Fed. Rep. 413; Commonwealth v. Bartilson, 85 Pa. J****491 St. 489; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 261; State v. Kemp, 87 No. Car. 538; American Fire Ins. Co. v. State, 22 So. Rep. (Miss.) 99; Lorenz v. United States, 24 App. D.C. 337; People v. Willis, 23 Misc. (N.Y.) 568; Raleigh v. Cook, 60 Texas, 438; Commonwealth v. Gillespie, 10 Am. Dec. (Pa.) 480.

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

[*30] [*504] [***633] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the court.

GGFÁMEÚÉAÉPÁHÁLÁFÁUÉOGÁÉEGZÁÉÉIÍÁLÁÍÁSEÓaÉAÉFJÁÉAÉHÍÁJFFÁMEÚÉSÓYQAFÍGÍÉAÉJ

The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and 33 other corporations, John D. Rockefeller, William Rockefeller and five other individual defendants prosecute this appeal to reverse a decree of the court below. Such decree was entered upon a bill filed by the United States under authority of § 4, of the act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, p. 209, known as the Anti-trust Act, and had for its object the enforcement of the provisions of that act. The record is inordinately voluminous, consisting of twenty-three volumes of printed matter, aggregating about twelve thousand pages, containing a vast amount of confusing and conflicting testimony [*31] relating to innumerable, complex and varied business transactions, extending over a period of nearly forty years. In an effort to pave the way [****50] to reach the subjects which we are called upon to consider, we propose at the outset, following the order of the bill, to give the merest possible outline of its contents, to summarize the answer, to indicate the course of the trial, and point out briefly the decision below rendered.

The bill and exhibits, covering one hundred and seventy pages of the printed record, was filed on November 15, 1906. Corporations known as Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, Standard Oil Company of California, Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Standard Oil Company of Iowa, Standard Oil Company of Kansas, Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, Standard Oil Company of Nebraska, Standard Oil Company of New York, Standard Oil Company of Ohio and sixty-two other corporations and partnerships, as also seven individuals were named as defendants. The bill was divided into thirty numbered sections, and sought relief upon the theory that the various defendants were engaged in conspiring "to restrain the trade [***634] and commerce in petroleum, commonly called 'crude oil,' in refined oil, and in the other products of petroleum, among the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia [****51] and with foreign nations, and to monopolize the said commerce." The conspiracy was alleged to have been formed in or about the year 1870 by three of the individual defendants, viz: John D. Rockefeller, William Rockefeller and Henry M. Flagler. The detailed averments concerning the alleged conspiracy were arranged with reference to three periods, the first from 1870 to 1882, the second from 1882 to 1899, and the third from 1899 to the time of the filing of the bill.

The general charge concerning the period from 1870 to 1882 was as follows:

[*32] "That during said first period the said individual defendants, in connection with the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, purchased and obtained interests through stock ownership and otherwise in, and entered into agreements with, various persons, firms, corporations, and limited partnerships engaged in purchasing, shipping, refining, and selling petroleum and its products among the various States for the purpose of fixing the price of crude and refined oil and the products thereof, limiting the production thereof, and controlling the transportation therein, and thereby restraining trade and commerce among the several States, and monopolizing [***52] the said commerce."

To establish this charge it was averred that John D. and William Rockefeller and several other named individuals, who, prior to 1870, composed three separate partnerships engaged in the business of refining crude oil and shipping its products in interstate commerce, organized in the year 1870, a corporation known as the Standard Oil Company of Ohio and transferred to that company the business of the said partnerships, the members thereof becoming, in proportion to their prior ownership, stockholders in the corporation. It was averred that the other individual defendants soon afterwards became participants in the illegal combination and either transferred property to the corporation or to individuals to be held for the benefit of all parties [**505] in interest in proportion to their respective interests in the combination; that is, in proportion to their stock ownership in the Standard Oil Company of Ohio. By the means thus stated, it was charged that by the year 1872, the combination had acquired substantially all but three or four of the thirty-five or forty oil refineries located in Cleveland, Ohio. By reason of the power thus obtained and in further [***53] execution of the intent and purpose to restrain trade and to monopolize the commerce, interstate as well as intrastate, in petroleum and its products, the bill alleged that the combination and its members [*33] obtained large preferential rates and rebates in many and devious ways over their competitors from various railroad companies, and that by means of the advantage thus obtained many, if not virtually all, competitors were forced either to become members of the combination or were driven out of business; and thus, it was alleged, during the period in question the following results were brought about: a. That the combination, in addition to the refineries in Cleveland which it had acquired as previously stated, and which it had either dismantled to limit production or continued to operate, also from time to time acquired a large number of refineries of crude petroleum, situated in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and elsewhere. The properties thus acquired, like those previously obtained, although belonging to and being held for the benefit of the combination, were ostensibly divergently controlled, some of them being put in the name of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, some [****54] in the name of corporations or limited partnerships affiliated therewith, or some being left in the name of the original owners who had become stockholders in the Standard Oil Company of Ohio and thus members of the alleged illegal combination. b. That the combination had obtained control of the pipe lines available for transporting oil from the oil fields to the refineries in Cleveland, Pittsburg, Titusville, Philadelphia, New York and New Jersey.c. That the combination during the period named had obtained a complete mastery over the oil industry, controlling 90 per cent of the business of producing, shipping, refining and selling petroleum and its products, and thus was able to fix the price of crude and refined petroleum and to restrain and monopolize all interstate commerce in those products.

GCFÁMEÙÉÉÉÉHÁFÁÉÓÉÉÉGÉÉÉ É LÁ I ÁSEÓdÁÉ FJÉÉÉ H LÁFFÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁFÍ G ÉÉÉ H

The averments bearing upon the second period (1882 to 1899) had relation to the claim:

"That during the said second period of conspiracy the defendants entered into a contract and trust agreement, [*34] by which various independent firms, corporations, limited partnerships and individuals engaged in purchasing, transporting, refining, shipping and selling oil and the products thereof [****55] among the various States turned over the management of their said business, corporations and limited partnerships to nine trustees, composed chiefly of certain individuals defendant herein, which said [***635] trust agreement was in restraint of trade and commerce and in violation of law, as hereinafter more particularly alleged."

The trust agreement thus referred to was set out in the bill. It was made in January, 1882. By its terms the stock of forty corporations, including the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, and a large quantity of various properties which had been previously acquired by the alleged combination and which was held in diverse forms, as we have previously indicated, for the benefit of the members of the combination, was vested in the trustees and their successors, "to be held for all parties in interest jointly." In the body of the trust agreement was contained a list of the various individuals and corporations and limited partnerships whose stockholders and members, or a portion thereof, became parties to the agreement. This list is in the margin. <sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 1st. All the stockholders and members of the following corporations and limited partnerships, to wit:

Acme Oil Company, New York.

Acme Oil Company, Pennsylvania.

Atlantic Refining Company of Philadelphia.

Bush & Co. (Limited).

Camden Consolidated Oil Company.

Elizabethport Acid Works.

Imperial Refining Company (Limited).

Charles Pratt & Co.

Paine, Ablett & Co.

Standard Oil Company, Ohio.

Standard Oil Company, Pittsburg.

Smith's Ferry Oil Transportation Company.

Solar Oil Company (Limited).

Sone & Fleming Manufacturing Company (Limited).

Also all the stockholders and members of such other corporations and limited partnerships as may hereafter join in this agreement at the request of the trustees herein provided for.

2d. The following individuals, to wit:

CGFÁNUÉÉÉH LÁFÁUÉDÉ ÉGÁÉÉ É LÁ I ÁSÉDáÉÉ FJÉÉÉ HÍ LÁFFÁNÉÉSÓYQÁÉI GÉÉÉ I

[***56] [*35] [**506] The agreement made provision for the method of controlling and managing the property by the trustees, for the formation of additional manufacturing, etc., corporations [*36] in various States, and the trust, unless terminated by a mode specified, was to continue "during the lives of the survivors and survivor of the trustees named in the agreement and for twenty-one years thereafter." The agreement provided for the issue of

---

W. C. Andrews, John D. Archbold, Lide K. Arter, J. A. Bostwick, Benjamin Brewster, D. Bushnell, Thomas C. Bushnell, J. N. Camden, Henry L. Davis, H. M. Flagler, Mrs. H. M. Flagler, John Huntington, H. A. Hutchins, Charles F. G. Heye, A. B. Jennings, Charles Lockhart, A. M. McGregor, William H. Macy, William H. Macy, jr., estate of Josiah Macy, William H. Macy, jr., executor; O. H. Payne, A. J. Pouch, John D. Rockefeller, William Rockefeller, Henry H. Rogers, W. P. Thompson, J. J. Vandergrift, William T. Wardwell, W. G. Warden, Joseph L. Warden, Warden, Frew & Co., Louise C. Wheaton, H. M. Hanna, and George W. Chapin, D. M. Harkness, D. M. Harkness, trustee, S. V. Harkness, O. H. Payne, trustee; Charles Pratt, Horace A. Pratt, C. M. Pratt, Julia H. York, George H. Vilas, M. R. Keith, trustees, George F. Chester.

Also all such individuals as may hereafter join in the agreement at the request of the trustees herein provided for.

3d. A portion of the stockholders and members of the following corporations and limited partnerships, to wit:

American Lubricating Oil Company.

Baltimore United Oil Company.

Beacon Oil Company.

Bush & Denslow Manufacturing Company.

Central Refining Co. of Pittsburg.

Chesebrough Manufacturing Company.

Chess Carley Company.

Consolidated Tank Line Company.

Inland Oil Company.

Keystone Refining Company.

Maverick Oil Company.

National Transit Company.

Portland Kerosene Oil Company.

Producers' Consolidated Land and Petroleum Company.

Signal Oil Works (Limited).

Thompson & Bedford Company (Limited).

Devoe Manufacturing Company.

Eclipse Lubricating Oil Company (Limited).

Empire Refining Company (Limited).

Franklin Pipe Company (Limited).

Galena Oil Works (Limited).

Galena Farm Oil Company (Limited).

Germania Mining Company.

Vacuum Oil Company.

H.C. Van Tine & Company (Limited).

Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

Also stockholders and members (not being all thereof) of other corporations and limited partnerships who may hereafter join in this agreement at the request of the trustees herein provided for."

GGFÁNEÙÉÆFHÍ LÁFÁEØÓÐÆ ÆGÆRÉ Æ LÁ Í ÅSEØAðÆ FJÆFHÍ LÁJFFÁNEÙÆSØYØFAÍ GÆFHÍ

Standard Oil Trust certificates to represent the interest arising under the trust in the properties affected by the trust, which of course in view of the provisions of the agreement and the subject to which it related caused the interest in the certificates to be coincident with and the exact representative of the interest in the combination, that is, in the Standard Oil Company of Ohio. Soon afterwards it was alleged the trustees organized the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and the Standard Oil Company of New York, the former having a capital stock of $3,000,000 and the latter a capital stock of $5,000,000, subsequently increased to $10,000,000 and $15,000,000 [***636] respectively. The bill alleged "that pursuant to said trust [***57] agreement the said trustees caused to be transferred to themselves the stocks of all corporations and limited partnerships named in said trust agreement, and caused various of the individuals and copartnerships, who owned apparently independent refineries and other properties employed in the business of refining and transporting and selling oil in and among said various States and Territories [*37] of the United States as aforesaid, to transfer their property situated in said several States to the respective Standard Oil Companies of said States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and other corporations organized or acquired by said trustees from time to time. . . ." For the stocks and property so acquired the trustees issued trust certificates. It was alleged that in 1888 the trustees "unlawfully controlled the stock and ownership of various corporations and limited partnerships engaged in such purchase and transportation, refining, selling, and shipping of oil," as per a list which is excerpted in the margin. <sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> List of Corporations the Stocks of Which Were Wholly or Partially Held by the Trustees of Standard Oil Trust,

Capital

S.O. trust

Stock.

ownership.

New York State:

Acme Oil Company, manufacturers

$300,000

Entire.

of petroleum products.

Atlas Re

200,000

Do.

of petrole

American Wick Manufa

25,000

Do.

Company, manufacturers of lamp

wicks.

Bush & Denslow Manufacturing

300,000

50 per cent.

Company, manufacturers of petroleum products.

Chesebrough Manufacturing Com-

---

500,000
2,661-5,000
pany, manufacturers of petroleum.
Central Refining Company (Limited), manufacturers of petroleum products.
200,000
1-67.2 per ct.
Devoe Manufacturing Company,
300,000
Entire.
packers, manufacturers of petroleum.
Empire Refining Company (Lim-
100,000
80 per cent.
ited), manufacturers of petroleum
products.
Oswego Manufacturing Company,
100,000
Entire.
manufacturers of wood cases.
Pratt Manufacturing Company,
500,000
Do.
manufacturers of petroleum products.
Standard Oil Company of New 5,000,000
Do.
York, manufacturers of petroleum products.
Sone & Fleming Manufacturing
250,000
Do.
Company (Limited), manufacturers
of petroleum products.
Thompson & Bedford Company
250,000

80 per cent.

(Limited), manufacturers of petroleum products.

Vacuum Oil Company, manufac-

25,000

75 per cent

turers of petroleum products.

New Jersey:

Eagle Oil Company, manufacturers

350,000

Entire.

of petroleum products.

McKigan Oil Company, jobbers of 75,000

Do.

petroleum products.

Standard Oil Company of New

3,000,000

Do.

Jersey, manufacturers of petroleum products.

Pennsylvania:

Acme Oil Company, manufacturers

300,000

Do.

of petroleum products.

Atlantic Refining Company, manu-

400,000

Do.

facturers of petroleum products.

Galena Oil Works (Limited), manu-

150,000

86 1/4 per cent.

facturers of petroleum products.

Imperial Refining Company (Limited), manufacturers of petroleum products.

300,000

Entire.

---

Producers' Consolidated Land and 1,000,000
65/132 per cent.

Petroleum Company, producers of crude oil.

National Transit Company, trans-
25,455,200
94 per cent.
porters of crude oil.

Standard Oil Company, manufac-
400,000
Entire.

turers of petroleum products.

Signal Oil Works (Limited), manu-
100,000
38 3/4 per cent.
facturers of petroleum products.

Ohio:

Consolidated Tank-Line Company,
1,000,000
57 per cent.
jobbers of petroleum products.

Inland Oil Company, jobbers of petroleum products.
50,000
50 per cent.

Standard Oil Company, manufac-
3,500,000
Entire.
turers of petroleum products.

Solar Refining Company, manu-
500,000
Do.
facturers of petroleum products.

Kentucky:

---

Standard Oil Company, jobbers of 600,000

Do.

petroleum products.

Maryland:

Baltimore United Oil Company,

600,000

5,059-6,000

manufacturers of petroleum products.

West Virginia:

Camden Consolidated Oil Com-

200,000

51 per cent.

pany, manufacturers of petroleum products.

Minnesota:

Standard Oil Company, jobbers of 100,000

Entire.

petroleum products.

Missouri:

Waters-Pierce Oil Company, job-

400,000

50 per cent.

bers of petroleum products.

Massachusetts:

Beacon Oil Company, jobbers of 100,000

Entire.

petroleum products.

Maverick Oil Company, jobbers of 100,000

Do.

petroleum products.

Maine:

Portland Kerosene Oil Company,

200,000

GOFÁNEÙÉÉHÍ LÁFÁÉDÉ ÉGÁÉH Í LÁ I ÁSEÓaÉ FJÉÉH HÍ LÁFFFÁÉÉSÓYÓUÁFI GÉÉHÍ

---

Do.

jobbers of petroleum products.

Iowa:

Standard Oil Company, jobbers of 600,000

60 per cent.

petroleum products.

Continental Oil Company, jobbers

300,000

62 1/2 per cent.

of petroleum products.

GGFÁNÈJÉÉHÍ LÁFÀÉDÉA EGÉÉH Í LÁ I ÁSÉDÀÉA FJÉÉHÍ HÍ LÁJFFÁNÈJÉSÓYQÁFI GÉÉHÍ Í

---

CGFÁWÈJÉÉHÍ LÁFÁJÉDÉ ÉGÁÉH Í LÁ I ÁSÉDáÉ FJÉÉH HÍ LÁFJFFÁWÈJÉSÓYQÁFI GÉÉHÍ

[***58] [*38] [**507] The bill charged that during the second period quo warranto proceedings were commenced against the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, which resulted in the entry by the Supreme Court of Ohio, on March 2, 1892, of a decree [*39] adjudging the trust agreement to be void, not only because the Standard Oil Company of Ohio was a party to the same, but also because the agreement in and of itself [*40] was in restraint of trade and amounted to the creation of an unlawful monopoly. It was alleged that shortly after this decision, seemingly for the purpose of complying therewith, voluntary proceedings were had apparently to dissolve the trust, but that these proceedings were a subterfuge and a sham because they simply amounted to a transfer of the stock held by the trust in 64 of the companies which it controlled to some of the remaining 20 companies, it having controlled before the decree 84 in all, thereby, while seemingly in part giving up its dominion, yet in reality preserving the same by means of the control of the companies as to which it had retained complete authority. It was charged that especially was this the case, as the stock in the companies selected [****59] for transfer was [***637] virtually owned by the nine trustees or the members of their immediate families or associates. The bill further alleged that in 1897 the Attorney-General of Ohio instituted contempt proceedings in the quo warranto case based upon the claim that the trust had not been dissolved as required by the decree in that case. About the same time also proceedings in quo warranto were commenced to forfeit the charter of a pipe line known as the Buckeye Pipe Line Company, an [*41] Ohio corporation, whose stock, it was alleged, was owned by the members of the combination, on the ground of its connection with the trust which had been held to be illegal.

---

GGFÁMEÙÉÉÉÉ ÉLÁFÁJÉÓÉÉ EGÉÉÉ É LÁ I ÁSÉDÁÉÉ FJÉÉÉ HÍ LÁFFÁMÉÉÉSÓYÓUÁÉ GÉÉÉ I

The result of these proceedings, the bill charged, caused a resort to the alleged wrongful acts asserted to have been committed during the third period, as follows:

"That during the third period of said conspiracy and in pursuance thereof the said individual defendants operated through the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, as a holding corporation, which corporation [**508] obtained and acquired the majority of the stocks of the various corporations engaged in purchasing, transporting, refining, shipping, [****60] and selling oil into and among the various States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia and with foreign nations, and thereby managed and controlled the same, in violation of the laws of the United States, as hereinafter more particularly alleged."

It was alleged that in or about the month of January, 1899, the individual defendants caused the charter of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to be amended; "so that the business and objects of said [***638] company were stated as follows, to wit: 'To do all kinds of mining, manufacturing, and trading business; transporting goods and merchandise by land or water in any manner; to buy, sell, lease, and improve land; build houses, structures, vessels, cars, wharves, docks, and piers; to lay and operate pipe lines; to erect lines for conducting electricity; to enter into and carry out contracts of every kind pertaining to its business; to acquire, use, sell, and grant licenses under patent rights; to purchase or otherwise acquire, hold, sell, assign, and transfer shares of capital stock and bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of corporations, and to exercise all the privileges of ownership, including [****61] voting upon the stock so held; to carry on its business and have offices and agencies therefor in all parts of the world, and [*42] to hold, purchase, mortgage, and convey real estate and personal property outside the State of New Jersey.'"

The capital stock of the company -- which since March 19, 1892, had been $10,000,000 -- was increased to $110,000,000; and the individual defendants, as theretofore, continued to be a majority of the board of directors.

Without going into detail it suffices to say that it was alleged in the bill that shortly after these proceedings the trust came to an end, the stock of the various corporations which had been controlled by it being transferred by its holders to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which corporation issued therefor certificates of its common stock to the amount of $97,250,000. The bill contained allegations referring to the development of new oil fields, for example, in California, southeastern Kansas, northern Indian Territory, and northern Oklahoma, and made reference to the building or otherwise acquiring by the combination of refineries and pipe lines in the new fields for the purpose of restraining [**509] [****62] and monopolizing the interstate trade in petroleum and its products.

Reiterating in substance the averments that both the Standard Oil Trust from 1882 to 1899 and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey since 1899 had monopolized and restrained interstate commerce in petroleum and its products, the bill at great length additionally set forth various means by which during the second and third periods, in addition to the effect occasioned by the combination of alleged previously independent concerns, the monopoly and restraint complained of was continued. Without attempting to follow the elaborate averments on these subjects spread over fifty-seven pages of the printed record, it suffices to say that such averments may properly be grouped under the following heads: Rebates, preferences and other discriminatory practises in favor of the combination by railroad companies; restraint and monopolization by control of pipe lines, and unfair practises against competing [*43] pipe lines; contracts with competitors in restraint of trade; unfair methods of competition, such as local price cutting at the points where necessary to suppress competition; espionage of the business of competitors, [****63] the operation of bogus independent companies, and payment of rebates on oil, with the like intent; the division of the United States into districts and the limiting of the operations of the various subsidiary corporations as to such districts so that competition in the sale of petroleum products between such corporations had been entirely eliminated and destroyed; and finally reference was made to what was alleged to be the "enormous and unreasonable profits" earned by the Standard Oil Trust and the Standard Oil Company as a result of the alleged monopoly; which presumably was averred as a means of reflexly inferring the scope and power acquired by the alleged combination.

GOFÁMEÙÉÉÉÉ HÁFÁJÉÓÉ ÉGÉÉÉ ÉJLÁ I ÁSÉDÁÉ FJÉÉÉ HÌ LÁFFÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁÉ G ÉÉÉ H

Coming to the prayer of the bill, it suffices to say that in general terms the substantial relief asked was, first, that the combination in restraint of interstate trade and commerce and which had monopolized the same, as alleged in the bill, be found to have existence and that the parties thereto be perpetually enjoined from doing any further act to give effect to it; second, that the transfer of the stocks of the various corporations to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, as alleged in the bill, be held to [****64] be in violation of the first and second sections of the Anti-trust Act, and that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey be enjoined and restrained from in any manner continuing to exert control over the subsidiary corporations by means of ownership of said stock or otherwise; third, that specific relief by injunction be awarded against further violation of the statute by any of the acts specifically complained of in the bill. There was also a prayer for general relief.

Of the numerous defendants named in the bill, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company was the only resident of the [*44] district in which the suit was commenced and the only defendant served with process therein. Contemporaneous with the filing of the bill the court made an order, under § 5 of the Anti-trust Act, for the service of process upon all the other defendants, wherever they could be found. Thereafter the various defendants unsuccessfully moved to vacate the order for service on non-resident defendants [***639] or filed pleas to the jurisdiction. Joint exceptions were likewise unsuccessfully filed, upon the ground of impertinence, to many of the averments of the bill of complaint, particularly those which [****65] related to acts alleged to have been done by the combination prior to the passage of the Anti-trust Act and prior to the year 1899.

Certain of the defendants filed separate answers, and a joint answer was filed on behalf of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and numerous of the other defendants. The scope of the answers will be adequately indicated by quoting a summary on the subject made in the brief for the appellants.

"It is sufficient to say that, whilst admitting many of the alleged acquisitions of property, the formation of the so-called trust of 1882, its dissolution in 1892, and the acquisition by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey of the stocks of the various corporations in 1899, they deny all the allegations respecting combinations or conspiracies to restrain or monopolize the oil trade; and particularly that the so-called trust of 1882, or the acquisition of the shares of the defendant companies by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey in 1899, was a combination of independent or competing concerns or corporations. The averments of the petition respecting the means adopted to monopolize the oil trade are traversed either by a denial of the acts alleged or [****66] of their purpose, intent or effect."

On June 24, 1907, the cause being at issue, a special examiner was appointed to take the evidence, and his report was filed March 22, 1909. It was heard on April 5 [*45] to 10, 1909, under the expediting act of February 11, 1903, before a Circuit Court consisting of four judges.

The court decided in favor of the United [**510] States. In the opinion delivered, all the multitude of acts of wrongdoing charged in the bill were put aside, in so far as they were alleged to have been committed prior to the passage of the Anti-trust Act, "except as evidence of their (the defendants') purpose, of their continuing conduct and of its effect." (173 Fed. Rep. 177.)

By the decree which was entered it was adjudged that the combining of the stocks of various companies in the hands of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey in 1899 constituted a combination in restraint of trade and also an attempt to monopolize and a monopolization under S 2 of the Anti-trust Act. The decree was against seven individual defendants, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, thirty-six domestic companies and one foreign company which the Standard Oil Company of New [****67] Jersey controls by stock ownership; these 38 corporate defendants being held to be parties to the combination found to exist.<sup>1</sup>

GGFÁMEÙÉÉÉÉ É LÁFÁÉÉÓÉ ÉGÉÉÉÉ FÉLÁ É ÁSÉÓdÁÉ FJÉÉÉÉ HULÁFFÁÉÉÉSÓYÓUÁÉ GÉÉÉÉ É

The bill was dismissed as to all other corporate defendants, 33 in number, it being adjudged by § 3 of the decree that they "have not been proved to be engaged in the operation or carrying out of the combination."<sup>2</sup>

[*46] The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey was enjoined from voting the stocks or exerting any control [****68] over the said 37 subsidiary companies, and the subsidiary companies were enjoined from paying any dividends as to the Standard Oil Company or permitting it to exercise any control over them by virtue of the stock ownership or power acquired by means of the combination. The individuals and corporations were also enjoined from entering into or carrying into effect any like combination which would evade the decree. Further, the individual defendants, the Standard Oil Company, and the 37 subsidiary corporations were enjoined from engaging or continuing in interstate commerce in petroleum or its products during the continuance of the illegal combination.

At the outset a question of jurisdiction requires consideration, and we shall, also, as a preliminary, dispose of another question, to the end that our attention may be completely concentrated upon the merits of the controversy when we come to consider them.

First. We are of opinion that in consequence of the presence within the district of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, the court, under the authority of § 5 of the [***640] Anti-trust Act, rightly took jurisdiction over the cause and properly ordered notice to be served upon [****69] the non-resident defendants.

Second. The overruling of the exceptions taken to so much of the bill as counted upon facts occurring prior to the passage of the Anti-trust Act, -- whatever may be the view as an original question of the duty to restrict the controversy to a much narrower area than that propounded by the bill, -- we think by no possibility in the present stage of the case can the action of the court be treated as prejudicial error justifying reversal. We say this because the court, as we shall do, gave no weight to the testimony adduced under the averments complained of except in so far as it tended to throw light upon the acts done after the [*47] passage of the Anti-trust Act and the results of which it was charged were being participated in and enjoyed by the alleged combination at the time of the filing of the bill.

We are thus brought face to face with the merits of the controversy.

Both as to the law and as to the facts the opposing contentions pressed in the argument are numerous and in all their aspects are so irreconcilable that it is difficult to reduce them to some fundamental generalization, which by being disposed of would decide them all. For [****70] instance, as to the law. While both sides agree that the determination of the controversy rests upon the correct construction and application of the first and second sections of the Anti-trust Act, yet the views as to the meaning of the act are as wide apart as the poles, since there is no real point of agreement on any view of the act. And this also is the case as to the scope and effect of authorities relied upon, even although in some instances one and the same authority is asserted to be controlling.

So also is it as to the facts. Thus, on [**511] the one hand, with relentless pertinacity and minuteness of analysis, it is insisted that the facts establish that the assailed combination took its birth in a purpose to unlawfully acquire wealth by oppressing the public and destroying the just rights of others, and that its entire career exemplifies an inexorable carrying out of such wrongful intents, since, it is asserted, the pathway of the combination from the beginning to the time of the filing of the bill is marked with constant proofs of wrong inflicted upon the public and is strewn with the wrecks resulting from crushing out, without regard to law, the individual rights [****71] of others. Indeed, so conclusive, it is urged, is the proof on these subjects that it is asserted that the existence of the principal corporate defendant -- the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey -- with the vast accumulation of property which it owns or controls, because of its infinite potency [*48] for harm and the dangerous example which its continued existence affords, is an open and enduring menace to all freedom of trade and is a byword and reproach to modern economic methods. On the other hand, in a powerful analysis of the facts, it is insisted that they demonstrate that the origin and development of the vast business which the defendants control was but the result of lawful competitive methods, guided by economic genius of the highest order, sustained by courage, by a keen insight into commercial situations, resulting in the acquisition of great wealth, but at the same time serving to stimulate and increase production, to widely extend the distribution of the products of petroleum at a cost largely below that which would have otherwise prevailed, thus proving to be at one and the same time a benefaction to the general public as well as of enormous advantage to individuals. [****72] It is not denied that in the enormous volume of proof contained in the record in the period of almost a lifetime to which that proof is addressed, there may be found acts of wrongdoing, but the insistence is that they were rather the exception than the rule, and in most cases were either the result of too great individual zeal in the keen rivalries of business or of the methods and habits of dealing which, even if wrong, were commonly practised at the time. And to discover and state the truth concerning these contentions both arguments call for the analysis and weighing, as we have said at the outset, of a jungle of conflicting testimony covering a period of forty years, a duty difficult to rightly perform and, even if satisfactorily accomplished, almost impossible to state with any reasonable regard to brevity.

<sup>1</sup> Counsel for appellants says: "Of the 38 (37) corporate defendants named in section 2 of the decree and as to which the judgment of the court applies, four have not appealed, to wit: Corsicana Refining Co., Manhattan Oil Co., Security Oil Co., Waters-Pierce Oil Co., and one, the Standard Oil Co. of Iowa, has been liquidated and no longer exists."

<sup>2</sup> Of the dismissed defendants 16 were natural gas companies and 10 were companies which were liquidated and ceased to exist before the filing of the petition. The other dismissed defendants, 7 in number, were: Florence Oil Refining Co., United Oil Co., Tidewater Oil Co., Tide Water Pipe Co. (L't'd), Platt & Washburn Refining Co., Franklin Pipe Co. and Pennsylvania Oil Co.

GOFÁMEJÉBÉBÉ Í LÁFÁJÉDÉ EGÉBÉ FFLÁ Í ÁSÉDÁBÉ FJÉBÉ I CLÁFFÁMEJÉSÓYÓUAFÍ G ÉBÉBÉ €

Duly appreciating the situation just stated, it is certain that only one point of concord between the parties is discernable, which is, that the controversy in every aspect is controlled by a correct conception of the meaning of the first and second sections of the Anti-trust Act. We shall [*49] therefore -- departing from what otherwise would be the natural order [****73] of analysis -- make this one point of harmony the initial basis of our examination of the contentions, relying upon the conception that by doing so some harmonious resonance may result adequate to dominate and control the discord with which the case abounds. That is to say, we shall first come to consider the meaning of the first and second sections of the Anti-trust Act by the text, and after discerning [***641] what by that process appears to be its true meaning we shall proceed to consider the respective contentions of the parties concerning the act, the strength or weakness of those contentions, as well as the accuracy of the meaning of the act as deduced from the text in the light of the prior decisions of this court concerning it. When we have done this we shall then approach the facts. Following this course we shall make our investigation under four separate headings: First. The text of the first and second sections of the act originally considered and its meaning in the light of the common law and the law of this country at the time of its adoption. Second. The contentions of the parties concerning the act, and the scope and effect of the decisions of this court upon [****74] which they rely. Third. The application of the statute to facts, and, Fourth. The remedy, if any, to be afforded as the result of such application.

First. The text of the act and its meaning.

We quote the text of the first and second sections of the act, as follows:

"SECTION 1. HN1[↑] Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce, among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract, or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by [*50] imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 2. HN2[↑] Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty [*512] of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, [****75] or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

GGFÁMEÙÉÉÉÉ ÉLÁFÁJÉÓÉÉ EGÉÉÉ FGLÁ I ÁSÉOáÉÉ FJÉÉÉ I FLÁFFJFÁMEÙÉSÓYÓUÁI G ÉÉÉÉ I

The debates show that doubt as to whether there was a common law of the United States which governed the subject in the absence of legislation was among the influences leading to the passage of the act. They conclusively show, however, that the main cause which led to the legislation was the thought that it was required by the economic condition of the times, that is, the vast accumulation of wealth in the hands of corporations and individuals, the enormous development of corporate organization, the facility for combination which such organizations afforded, the fact that the facility was being used, and that combinations known as trusts were being multiplied, and the widespread impression that their power had been and would be exerted to oppress individuals and injure the public generally. HN3 [↑] Although debates may not be used as a means for interpreting a statute (*United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 318*, and cases cited) that rule in the nature of things is not violated by resorting to debates as a means of ascertaining the environment at the time of the [***76] enactment of a particular law, that is, the history of the period when it was adopted.

There can be no doubt that the sole subject with which the first section deals is restraint of trade as therein contemplated, and that the attempt to monopolize and monopolization is the subject with which the second section [*51] is concerned. It is certain that those terms, at least in their rudimentary meaning, took their origin in the common law, and were also familiar in the law of this country prior to and at the time of the adoption of the act in question.

We shall endeavor then, first to seek their meaning, not by indulging in an elaborate and learned analysis of the English law and of the law of this country, but by making a very brief reference to the elementary and indisputable conceptions of both the English and American law on the subject prior to the passage of the Anti-trust Act.

a. It is certain that at a very remote period the words "contract in restraint of trade" in England came to refer to some voluntary restraint put by contract by an individual on his right to carry on his trade or calling. Originally all such contracts were considered to be illegal, because it [***77] was deemed they were injurious to the public as well as to the individuals who made them. In the interest of the freedom of individuals to contract this doctrine was modified so that it was only when a restraint by contract was so general as to be coterminous with the kingdom that it was treated as void. That is to say, if the restraint was partial in its operation and was otherwise reasonable the contract was held to be valid:

b. Monopolies were defined by Lord Coke as follows:

"A monopoly is an institution, or allowance by the king by his grant, commission, or otherwise to any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, of or for the sole buying, selling, making, working, [***642] or using of anything, whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be restrained of any freedom or liberty that they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade.' (3 Inst. 181, c. 85.)"

Hawkins thus defined them:

"A monopoly is an allowance by the king to a particular person or persons of the sole buying, selling, making, [*52] working, or using of anything whereby the subject in general is restrained from the freedom of manufacturing or trading which [***78] he had before.' (Hawk. P.C. bk. 1, c. 29.)"

The frequent granting of monopolies and the struggle which led to a denial of the power to create them, that is to say, to the establishment that they were incompatible with the English constitution is known to all and need not be reviewed. The evils which led to the public outcry against monopolies and to the final denial of the power to make them may be thus summarily stated: 1. The power which the monopoly gave to the one who enjoyed it to fix the price and thereby injure the public; 2. The power which it engendered of enabling a limitation on production; and, 3. The danger of deterioration in quality of the monopolized article which it was deemed was the inevitable resultant of the monopolistic control over its production and sale. As monopoly as thus conceived embraced only a consequence arising from an exertion of sovereign power, no express restrictions or prohibitions obtained against the creation by an individual of a monopoly as such. But as it was considered, at least so far as the necessities of life were concerned, that individuals by the abuse of their right to contract might be able to usurp the power arbitrarily to enhance [***79] prices, one of the wrongs arising from monopoly, it came to be that laws were passed relating to offenses such as forestalling, regrating and engrossing by [**513] which prohibitions were placed upon the power of individuals to deal under such circumstances and conditions as, according to the conception of the times, created a presumption that the dealings were not simply the honest exertion of one's right to contract for his own benefit unaccompanied by a wrongful motive to injure others, but were the consequence of a contract or course of dealing of such a character as to give rise to the presumption of an intent to injure others through the means, for instance, of a monopolistic increase of prices. [*53] This is illustrated by the definition of engrossing found in the statute, 5 and 6 Edw. VI, ch. 14, as follows:

"Whatsoever person or persons . . . shall engross or get into his or their hands by buying, contracting, or promise-taking, other than by demise, grant, or lease of land, or tithe, any corn growing in the fields, or any other corn or grain, butter, cheese, fish, or other dead victual, whatsoever, within the realm of England, to the intent to sell the same again, [****80] shall be accepted, reputed, and taken an unlawful engrosser or engrossers."

As by the statutes providing against engrossing the quantity engrossed was not required to be the whole or a proximate part of the whole of an article, it is clear that there was a wide difference between monopoly and engrossing, etc. But as the principal wrong which it was deemed would result from monopoly, that is, an enhancement of the price, was the same wrong to which it was thought the prohibited engrossment would give rise, it came to pass that monopoly and engrossing were regarded as virtually one and the same thing. In other words, the prohibited act of engrossing because of its inevitable accomplishment of one of the evils deemed to be engendered by monopoly, came to be referred to as being a monopoly or constituting an attempt to monopolize. Thus Pollexfen, in his argument in East India Company v. Sandys, Skin. 165, 169, said:

"By common law, he said that trade is free, and for that cited 3 Inst. 81; F.B. 65; 1 Roll. 4; that the common law is as much against 'monopoly' as 'engrossing'; and that they differ only, that a 'monopoly' is by patent from the king, the other is by the act of the subject [****81] between party and party; but that the mischiefs are the same from both, and there is the same law against both. Moore, 673; 11 Rep. 84. The sole trade of anything is 'engrossing' ex rei natura, for whosoever hath the sole trade of buying and selling hath 'engrossed' that trade; and whosoever [*54] hath the sole trade to any country, hath the sole trade of buying and selling the produce of that country, at his own price, which is an 'engrossing'."

And by operation of the mental process which led to considering as a monopoly acts which although they did not constitute a monopoly were thought to produce some of its baneful effects, so also because of the impediment or burden to the due course of trade which they produced, such acts came to be referred to as in restraint of trade. This is shown by my Lord Coke's definition of monopoly as being "an institution or allowance . . . whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be restrained of any freedom or liberty that they had before or hindered in their lawful trade." It is [***643] illustrated also by the definition which Hawkins gives of monopoly wherein it is said that the effect of monopoly is [****82] to restrain the citizen "from the freedom of manufacturing or trading which he had before." And see especially the opinion of Parker, C.J., in Mitchel v. Reynolds (1711), 1 P. Williams, 181, where a classification is made of monopoly which brings it generically within the description of restraint of trade.

Generalizing these considerations, the situation is this: 1. That by the common law monopolies were unlawful because of their restriction upon individual freedom of contract and their injury to the public. 2. That as to necessities of life the freedom of the individual to deal was restricted where the nature and character of the dealing was such as to engender the presumption of intent to bring about at least one of the injuries which it was deemed would result from monopoly, that is an undue enhancement of price. 3. That to protect the freedom of contract of the individual not only in his own interest, but principally in the interest of the common weal, a contract of an individual by which he put an unreasonable restraint upon himself as to carrying on his trade or business [*55] was void. And that at common law the evils consequent upon engrossing, etc., caused those [****83] things to be treated as coming within monopoly and sometimes to be called monopoly and the same considerations caused monopoly because of its operation and effect, to be brought within and spoken of generally as impeding the due course of or being in restraint of trade.

From the development of more accurate economic conceptions and the changes in conditions of society it came to be recognized that the acts prohibited by the engrossing, forestalling, etc., statutes did not have the harmful tendency which they were presumed to have when the legislation concerning [*514] them was enacted, and therefore did not justify the presumption which had previously been deduced from them, but, on the contrary, such acts tended to fructify and develop trade. See the statutes of 12th George III, ch. 71, enacted in 1772, and statute of 7 and 8 Victoria, ch. 24, enacted in 1844, repealing the prohibitions against engrossing, forestalling, etc., upon the express ground that the prohibited acts had come to be considered as favorable to the development of and not in restraint of trade. It is remarkable that nowhere at common law can there be found a prohibition against the creation of monopoly [***84] by an individual. This would seem to manifest, either consciously or intuitively, a profound conception as to the inevitable operation of economic forces and the equipoise or balance in favor of the protection of the rights of individuals which resulted. That is to say, as it was deemed that monopoly in the concrete could only arise from an act of sovereign power, and, such sovereign power being restrained, prohibitions as to individuals were directed, not against the creation of monopoly, but were only applied to such acts in relation to particular subjects as to which it was deemed, if not restrained, some of the consequences of monopoly might result. After all, this was but an instinctive recognition [*56] of the truisms that the course of trade could not be made free by obstructing it, and that an individual's right to trade could not be protected by destroying such right.

From the review just made it clearly results that outside of the restrictions resulting from the want of power in an individual to voluntarily and unreasonably restrain his right to carry on his trade or business and outside of the want of right to restrain the free course of trade by contracts or acts [***85] which implied a wrongful purpose, freedom to contract and to abstain from contracting and to exercise every reasonable right incident thereto became the rule in the English law. The scope and effect of this freedom to trade and contract is clearly shown by the decision in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor (1892), A.C. 25. While it is true that the decision of the House of Lords in the case in question was announced shortly after the passage of the Anti-trust Act, it serves reflexly to show the exact state of the law in England at the time the Antitrust statute was enacted.

In this country also the acts from which it was deemed there resulted a part if not all of the injurious consequences ascribed to monopoly, came to be referred to as a monopoly itself. In other words, here as had been the case in England, practical common sense caused attention to be concentrated not upon the theoretically correct name to be given to the condition or acts which gave rise to a harmful result, but to the result itself and to the remedying of the evils which it produced. The statement just made is illustrated by an early statute of the Province of Massachusetts, that is, chap. 31 of the laws of 1778-1779, [***86] by which monopoly and forestalling were expressly treated as one and the same thing.

It is also true that while the principles concerning contracts in restraint of trade, that is, voluntary restraint put by a person [*644] on his right to pursue his calling, hence only operating subjectively, came generally to be recognized [*57] in accordance with the English rule, it came moreover to pass that contracts or acts which it was considered had a monopolistic tendency, especially those which were thought to unduly diminish competition and hence to enhance prices -- in other words, to monopolize -- came also in a generic sense to be spoken of and treated as they had been in England, as restricting the due course of trade, and therefore as being in restraint of trade. The dread of monopoly as an emanation of governmental power, while it passed at an early date out of mind in this country, as a result of the structure of our Government, did not serve to assuage the fear as to the evil consequences which might arise from the acts of individuals producing or tending to produce the consequences of monopoly. It resulted that treating such acts as we have said as amounting to monopoly, [***87] sometimes constitutional restrictions, again legislative enactments or judicial decisions, served to enforce and illustrate the purpose to prevent the occurrence of the evils recognized in the mother country as consequent upon monopoly, by providing against contracts or acts of individuals or combinations of individuals or corporations deemed to be conducive to such results. To refer to the constitutional or legislative provisions on the subject or many judicial decisions which illustrate it would unnecessarily prolong this opinion. We append in the margin a note to treatises,

GGFÁNEÙÉÆÆÍÍ LÁHÆÙÉÓÐÆÍ EGÆÆÍ FI LÁ Í ÅSEØðÆA FJÆÆÍÍ LÁFJFFÁNEÙÉSØYØFAÍ GÆÆÍÍ

&c., wherein are contained references to constitutional and statutory provisions and to numerous decisions, etc., relating to the subject.<sup>1</sup>

It will be found that as modern conditions [**515] arose the trend of legislation and judicial decision came more and more to adapt the recognized restrictions to new manifestations of conduct or of dealing which it was [****88] thought [*58] justified the inference of intent to do the wrongs which it had been the purpose to prevent from the beginning. The evolution is clearly pointed out in National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U.S. 115, and Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423; and, indeed, will be found to be illustrated in various aspects by the decisions of this court which have been concerned with the enforcement of the act we are now considering.

Without going into detail and but very briefly surveying the whole field, it may be with accuracy said that the dread of enhancement of prices and of other wrongs which it was thought would flow from the undue limitation on competitive conditions caused by contracts or other acts of individuals or corporations, led, as a matter of public policy, to the prohibition or treating as illegal all contracts or acts which were unreasonably restrictive of competitive conditions, either from the nature or character of the contract or act or where the surrounding circumstances were such as to justify the conclusion that they had not been entered into or performed with the legitimate purpose of reasonably forwarding personal interest and developing trade, [****89] but on the contrary were of such a character as to give rise to the inference or presumption that they had been entered into or done with the intent to do wrong to the general public and to limit the right of individuals, thus restraining the free flow of commerce and tending to bring about the evils, such as enhancement of prices, which were considered to be against public policy. It is equally true to say that the survey of the legislation in this country on this subject from the beginning will show, depending as it did upon the economic conceptions which obtained at the time when the legislation was adopted or judicial decision was rendered, that contracts or acts were at one time deemed to be of such a character as to justify the inference of wrongful intent which were at another period thought not to be [*59] of that character. But this again, as we have seen, simply followed the line of development of the law of England.

Let us consider the language of the first and second sections, guided by the principle that HN4 where words are employed in a statute which had at the time a well-known meaning at common law or in the law of this country they are presumed to have been used \*\*\*\*901 in that sense unless the context compels to the contrary.<sup>1</sup>

As to the first section, the words to be interpreted are: HN5 "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce . . . [***645] is hereby declared to be illegal." As there is no room for dispute that the statute was intended to formulate a rule for the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, the question is what was the rule which it adopted?

In view of the common law and the law in this country as to restraint of trade, which we have reviewed, and the illuminating effect which that history must have under the rule to which we have referred, we think it results:

a. That the context manifests that the statute was drawn in the light of the existing practical conception of the law of restraint of trade, because it groups as within that class, not only contracts which were in restraint of trade in the subjective sense, but all contracts or acts which theoretically were attempts [****91] to monopolize, yet which in practice had come to be considered as in restraint of trade in a broad sense.

b. That in view of the many new forms of contracts and combinations which were being evolved from existing economic conditions, it was deemed essential by an allembracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of [*60] interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation. The statute under this view evidenced the intent not to restrain the right to make and enforce contracts, whether resulting from combination or otherwise, which did not unduly restrain interstate or foreign commerce, but to protect that commerce from being restrained by methods, whether old or new, which would constitute an interference that is an undue restraint.

<sup>1</sup> Purdy's Beach on Private Corporations, vol. 2, pp. 1403, et seq., chapter on Trusts and Monopolies; Cooke on Trade and Labor Combinations, App. II, pp. 194-195; Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 2d ed., article "Monopolies and Trusts," pp. 844, et seq.

<sup>1</sup> Swearingen v. United States, 161 U.S. 446; United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649; Keck v. United States, 172 U.S. 446; Kepner v. United States, 195 U.S. 100, 126.

GCFÁMEÚÉÉÉÉ ÉLÁFÁJÉÓÉÉ EGÉÉÉ FÍ LÁ I ÁSÉOáÉÉ FJÉÉÉ I I LÁFFÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁI G ÉÉÉJF

c. And as the contracts or acts embraced in the provision were not expressly defined, since the enumeration addressed itself [**516] simply to classes of acts, those classes being broad enough to embrace every conceivable contract or combination which could be made concerning trade or commerce or the subjects of such commerce, and thus caused any [****92] act done by any of the enumerated methods anywhere in the whole field of human activity to be illegal if in restraint of trade, it inevitably follows that the provision necessarily called for the exercise of judgment which required that some standard should be resorted to for the purpose of determining whether the prohibitions contained in the statute had or had not in any given case been violated. Thus not specifying but indubitably contemplating and requiring a standard, it follows that it was intended that the standard of reason which had been applied at the common law and in this country in dealing with subjects of the character embraced by the statute, was intended to be the measure used for the purpose of determining whether in a given case a particular act had or had not brought about the wrong against which the statute provided.

And a consideration of the text of the second section serves to establish that it was intended to supplement the first and to make sure that by no possible guise could the public policy embodied in the first section be frustrated or evaded. The prohibitions of the second embrace [*61] "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, [****93] or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, . . ." HN6↑ By reference to the terms of § 8 it is certain that the word person clearly implies a corporation as well as an individual.

The commerce referred to by the words "any part" construed in the light of the manifest purpose of the statute has both a geographical and a distributive significance, that is it includes any portion of the United States and any one of the classes of things forming a part of interstate or foreign commerce.

Undoubtedly, the words "to monopolize" and "monopolize" as used in the section reach every act bringing about the prohibited results. The ambiguity, if any, is involved in determining what is intended by monopolize. But this ambiguity is readily dispelled in the light of the previous history of the law of restraint of trade to which we have referred and the indication which it gives of the practical evolution by which monopoly and the acts which produce the same result as monopoly, that is, an undue restraint of the course of trade, all came to be spoken of as, and to be indeed synonymous with, [****94] restraint of trade. In other words, having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade, that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc., the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section, that is, restraints of trade, by any attempt to monopolize, or monopolization thereof, even although the acts by which such results are attempted to be brought about or are brought about be not embraced within the general enumeration of the first section. And, of course, when the second section is thus harmonized with and made as it [*62] was intended to be the complement of the first, it becomes obvious that the criteria [**646] to be resorted to in any given case for the purpose of ascertaining whether violations of the section have been committed, is the rule of reason guided by the established law and by the plain duty to enforce the prohibitions of the act and thus the public policy which its restrictions were obviously enacted to subserve. And it is worthy of observation, as we have previously remarked [****95] concerning the common law, that although the statute by the comprehensiveness of the enumerations embodied in both the first and second sections makes it certain that its purpose was to prevent undue restraints of every kind or nature, nevertheless by the omission of any direct prohibition against monopoly in the concrete it indicates a consciousness that the freedom of the individual right to contract when not unduly or improperly exercised was the most efficient means for the prevention of monopoly, since the operation of the centrifugal and centripetal forces resulting from the right to freely contract was the means by which monopoly would be inevitably prevented if no extraneous or sovereign power imposed it and no right to make unlawful contracts having a monopolistic tendency were permitted. In other words that freedom to contract was the essence of freedom from undue restraint on the right to contract.

Clear as it seems to us is the meaning of the provisions of the statute in the light of the review which we have made, nevertheless before definitively applying that meaning it behooves us to consider the contentions urged on one side or the other concerning the meaning of [****96] the statute, which, if maintained, would give to it, in some aspects a much wider and in every view at least a somewhat different significance. And to do this brings us to the second question which, at the outset, we [**517] have stated it was our purpose to consider and dispose of.

GGÁWEJÉÉÉÉ GLÁFÁJÉDÉ ÉGÁÉÉ FÌ LÁ I ÁSÉOÀÉ FJÉÉÉ I Í LÁFFÁNÉÉSÓYÓUÁFÍ G ÉÉÉJÍ

[*63] Second. The contentions of the parties as to the meaning of the statute and the decisions of this court relied upon concerning those contentions.

In substance, the propositions urged by the Government are reducible to this: That the language of the statute embraces every contract, combination, etc., in restraint of trade, and hence its text leaves no room for the exercise of judgment, but simply imposes the plain duty of applying its prohibitions to every case within its literal language. The error involved lies in assuming the matter to be decided. This is true because as the acts which may come under the classes stated in the first section and the restraint of trade to which that section applies are not specifically enumerated or defined, it is obvious that judgment must in every case be called into play in order to determine whether a particular act is embraced within the statutory [****97] classes, and whether if the act is within such classes its nature or effect causes it to be a restraint of trade within the intendment of the act. To hold to the contrary would require the conclusion either that every contract, act or combination of any kind or nature, whether it operated a restraint on trade or not, was within the statute, and thus the statute would be destructive of all right to contract or agree or combine in any respect whatever as to subjects embraced in interstate trade or commerce, or if this conclusion were not reached, then the contention would require it to be held that as the statute did not define the things to which it related and excluded resort to the only means by which the acts to which it relates could be ascertained -- the light of reason -- the enforcement of the statute was impossible because of its uncertainty. The merely generic enumeration which the statute makes of the acts to which it refers and the absence of any definition of restraint of trade as used in the statute leaves room for but one conclusion, which is, that it was expressly designed not to unduly limit the application [*64] of the act by precise definition, but while clearly [****98] fixing a standard, that is, by defining the ulterior boundaries which could not be transgressed with impunity, to leave it to be determined by the light of reason, guided by the principles of law and the duty to apply and enforce the public policy embodied in the statute, in every given case whether any particular act or contract was within the contemplation of the statute.

But, it is said, persuasive as these views may be, they may not be here applied, because the previous decisions of this court have given to the statute a meaning which expressly excludes the construction which must result from the reasoning stated. The cases are United States v. Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, and United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505. Both the cases involved the legality of combinations or associations of railroads engaged in interstate commerce for the purpose of controlling the conduct of the parties to the association or combination in many particulars. The association or combination was assailed in each case as being in violation of the statute. It was held that they were. It is undoubted that in the opinion in each case general language was made use of, which, when [****99] separated from its [***647] context, would justify the conclusion that it was decided that reason could not be resorted to for the purpose of determining whether the acts complained of were within the statute. It is, however, also true that the nature and character of the contract or agreement in each case was fully referred to and suggestions as to their unreasonableness pointed out in order to indicate that they were within the prohibitions of the statute. As the cases cannot by any possible conception be treated as authoritative without the certitude that reason was resorted to for the purpose of deciding them, it follows as a matter of course that it must have been held by the light of reason, since the conclusion could not have been otherwise reached, that the assailed [*65] contracts or agreements were within the general enumeration of the statute, and that their operation and effect brought about the restraint of trade which the statute prohibited. This being inevitable, the deduction can in reason only be this: That in the cases relied upon it having been found that the acts complained of were within the statute and operated to produce the injuries which the statute [****100] forbade, that resort to reason was not permissible in order to allow that to be done which the statute prohibited. This being true, the rulings in the cases relied upon when rightly appreciated were therefore this and nothing more: That as considering the contracts or agreements, their necessary effect and the character of the parties by whom they were made, they were clearly restraints of trade within the purview of the statute, they could not be taken out of that category by indulging in general reasoning as to the expediency or non-expediency of having made the contracts or the wisdom or want of wisdom of the statute which prohibited their being made. That [**518] is to say, the cases but decided that the nature and character of the contracts, creating as they did a conclusive presumption which brought them within the statute, such result was not to be disregarded by the substitution of a judicial appreciation of what the law ought to be for the plain judicial duty of enforcing the law as it was made.

But aside from reasoning it is true to say that the cases relied upon do not when rightly construed sustain the doctrine contended for is established by all of the numerous decisions [****101] of this court which have applied and enforced the Anti-trust Act, since they all in the very nature of things rest upon the premise that reason was the guide by which the provisions of the act were in every case interpreted. Indeed intermediate the decision of the two cases, that is, after the decision in the Freight Association Case and before the decision in the Joint Traffic Case, the case of Hopkins v. United States, 171 U.S. 578, was decided, [*66] the opinion being delivered by Mr. Justice Peckham, who wrote both the opinions in the Freight Association and the Joint Traffic cases. And, referring in the Hopkins Case to the broad claim made as to the rule of interpretation announced in the Freight Association Case, it was said (p. 592): "To treat as condemned by the act all agreements under which, as a result, the cost of conducting an interstate commercial business may be increased would enlarge the application of the act far beyond the fair meaning of the language used. There must be some direct and immediate effect upon interstate commerce in order to come within the act." And in the Joint Traffic Case this statement was expressly reiterated and approved and illustrated [****102] by example; like limitation on the general language used in Freight Association and Joint Traffic Cases is also the clear result of Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 92, and especially of Cincinnati Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179.

If the criterion by which it is to be determined in all cases whether every contract, combination, etc., is a restraint of trade within the intendment of the law, is the direct or indirect effect of the acts involved, then of course the rule of reason becomes the guide, and the construction which we have given the statute, instead of being refuted by the cases relied upon, is by those cases demonstrated to be correct. This is true, because as the construction which we have deduced from the history of the act and the analysis of its text is simply that in every case where it is claimed that an act or acts are in violation of the statute the rule of reason, in the light of the principles of law and the public policy which the act embodies, must be applied. From this it follows, since that rule and the result of the test as to direct or indirect, in their ultimate aspect, come to one and the same thing, that the difference between the two is therefore [****103] only that which obtains between things which do not differ at all.

[*67] If it be true that there is this identity of result between the rule intended to be applied in the Freight Association Case, that is, the rule of direct and indirect, and the rule of reason which under the statute as we construe it should be here applied, it may be asked how was it that in the opinion in the Freight Association Case [***648] much consideration was given to the subject of whether the agreement or combination which was involved in that case could be taken out of the prohibitions of the statute upon the theory of its reasonableness. The question is pertinent and must be fully and frankly met, for if it be now deemed that the Freight Association Case was mistakenly decided or too broadly stated, the doctrine which it announced should be either expressly overruled or limited.

The confusion which gives rise to the question results from failing to distinguish between the want of power to take a case which by its terms or the circumstances which surrounded it, considering among such circumstances the character of the parties, is plainly within the statute, out of the operation of the statute [****104] by resort to reason in effect to establish that the contract ought not to be treated as within the statute, and the duty in every case where it becomes necessary from the nature and character of the parties to decide whether it was within the statute to pass upon that question by the light of reason. This distinction, we think, serves to point out what in its ultimate conception was the thought underlying the reference to the rule of reason made in the Freight Association Case, especially when such reference is interpreted by the context of the opinion and in the light of the subsequent opinion in the Hopkins Case and in Cincinnati Packet Company v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179.

And in order not in the slightest degree to be wanting in frankness, we say that in so far, however, as by separating the general language used in the opinions in the Freight Association and Joint Traffic cases from the context [*68] and the subject and parties with which the cases were concerned, it may be conceived that the language referred [**519] to conflicts with the construction which we give the statute, they are necessarily now limited and qualified.

GGFÁNEJÉFFÉKÍ LÁFHÁUÉDÉAEGÉRÉ FJLÁÍ ÁSEÓAÉN FJÉKÍ I LÁFFÁNEJÉSÓYQÁFI GÉÁFÉ

We see no possible escape from this conclusion [****105] if we are to adhere to the many cases decided in this court in which the Anti-trust Law has been applied and enforced and if the duty to apply and enforce that law in the future is to continue to exist. The first is true, because the construction which we now give the statute does not in the slightest degree conflict with a single previous case decided concerning the Anti-trust Law aside from the contention as to the Freight Association and Joint Traffic cases, and because every one of those cases applied the rule of reason for the purpose of determining whether the subject before the court was within the statute. The second is also true, since, as we have already pointed out, unaided by the light of reason it is impossible to understand how the statute may in the future be enforced and the public policy which it establishes be made efficacious.

So far as the objections of the defendants are concerned they are all embraced under two headings: --

a. That the act, even if the averments of the bill be true, cannot be constitutionally applied, because to do so would extend the power of Congress to subjects dehors the reach of its authority to regulate commerce, by enabling that body [****106] to deal with mere questions of production of commodities within the States. But all the structure upon which this argument proceeds is based upon the decision in United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1. The view, however, which the argument takes of that case and the arguments based upon that view have been so repeatedly pressed upon this court in connection with the interpretation and enforcement of the Anti-trust Act, and have been so necessarily and expressly decided to be unsound as to cause the contentions to be plainly foreclosed and to require no express [*69] notice. United States v. Northern Securities Co., 193 U.S. 197, 334; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375; Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38; Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423.

b. Many arguments are pressed in various forms of statement which in substance amount to contending that the statute cannot be applied under the facts of this case without impairing rights of property and destroying the freedom of contract or trade, which is essentially necessary to the well-being of society and which it is insisted is protected by the constitutional guaranty of due process [****107] of law. But the ultimate foundation of all these arguments is the assumption that reason may not be resorted to in interpreting and applying the statute, and therefore that the statute unreasonably restricts the right to contract and unreasonably operates upon the right to acquire and hold property. As the premise is demonstrated to be unsound by the construction we have given the statute, of course the propositions which rest upon that premise need not be further noticed.

So far as the arguments proceed upon the conception that in view of the generality of the statute it is not susceptible of [***649] being enforced by the courts because it cannot be carried out without a judicial exertion of legislative power, they are clearly unsound. The statute certainly generically enumerates the character of acts which it prohibits and the wrong which it was intended to prevent. The propositions therefore but insist that, consistently with the fundamental principles of due process of law, it never can be left to the judiciary to decide whether in a given case particular acts come within a generic statutory provision. But to reduce the propositions, however, to this their final meaning [****108] makes it clear that in substance they deny the existence of essential legislative authority and challenge the right of the judiciary to perform duties which that department of the government has exerted from [*70] the beginning. This is so clear as to require no elaboration. Yet, let us demonstrate that which needs no demonstration, by a few obvious examples. Take for instance the familiar cases where the judiciary is called upon to determine whether a particular act or acts are within a given prohibition, depending upon wrongful intent. Take questions of fraud. Consider the power which must be exercised in every case where the courts are called upon to determine whether particular acts are invalid which are, abstractly speaking, in and of themselves valid, but which are asserted to be invalid because of their direct effect upon interstate commerce.

We come then to the third proposition requiring consideration, viz:

Third. The facts and the application of the statute to them.

Beyond dispute the proofs establish substantially as alleged in the bill the following facts:

1. The creation of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio;

GGFÁNÉJÉÉÉÉ ÉLÁFAJÉÉÉÉ ÉGÁÉÉ FJLÁÍ ÅÉÉÉ FJÉÉÉÉ I JLÁFFÁNÉÉÉÓYÓAFÍ G ÉÉÉÉ

2. The organization of the Standard Oil [****109] [**520] Trust of 1882, and also a previous one of 1879, not referred to in the bill, and the proceedings in the Supreme Court of Ohio, culminating in a decree based upon the finding that the company was unlawfully a party to that trust; the transfer by the trustees of stocks in certain of the companies; the contempt proceedings; and, finally, the increase of the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and the acquisition by that company of the shares of the stock of the other corporations in exchange for its certificates.

The vast amount of property and the possibilities of far-reaching control which resulted from the facts last stated are shown by the statement which we have previously annexed concerning the parties to the trust agreement of 1882, and the corporations whose stock was held by the trustees under the trust and which came therefore to be held by the New Jersey corporation. But these statements do not with accuracy convey an appreciation of the [*71] situation as it existed at the time of the entry of the decree below, since during the more than ten years which elapsed between the acquiring by the New Jersey corporation of the stock and other property [****110] which was formerly held by the trustees under the trust agreement, the situation of course had somewhat changed, a change which when analyzed in the light of the proof, we think, establishes that the result of enlarging the capital stock of the New Jersey company and giving it the vast power to which we have referred produced its normal consequence, that is, it gave to the corporation, despite enormous dividends and despite the dropping out of certain corporations enumerated in the decree of the court below, an enlarged and more perfect sway and control over the trade and commerce in petroleum and its products. The ultimate situation referred to will be made manifest by an examination of §§ 2 and 4 of the decree below, which are excerpted in the margin. <sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> SECTION 2. That the defendants John D. Rockefeller, William Rockefeller, Henry H. Rogers, Henry M. Flagler, John D. Archbold, Oliver H. Payne, and Charles M. Pratt, hereafter called the seven individual defendants, united with the Standard Oil Company and other defendants to form and effectuate this combination, and since its formation have been and still are engaged in carrying it into effect and continuing it; that the defendants Anglo-American Oil Company (Limited), Atlantic Refining Company, Buckeye Pipe Line Company, Borne-Scrymser Company, Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, Consolidated, Cumberland Pipe Line Company, Colonial Oil Company, Continental Oil Company, Crescent Pipe Line Company, Henry C. Folger, Jr., and Calvin N. Payne, a copartnership doing business under the firm name and style of Corsicana Refining Company, Eureka Pipe Line Company, Galena Signal Oil Company, Indiana Pipe Line Company, Manhattan Oil Company, National Transit Company, New York Transit Company, Northern Pipe Line Company, Ohio Oil Company, Prairie Oil and Gas Company, Security Oil Company, Solar Refining Company, Southern Pipe Line Company, South Penn Oil Company, Southwest Pennsylvania Pipe Lines Company, Standard Oil Company, of California, Standard Oil Company, of Indiana, Standard Oil Company, of Iowa, Standard Oil Company, of Kansas, Standard Oil Company, of Kentucky, Standard Oil Company, of Nebraska, Standard Oil Company, of New York, Standard Oil Company, of Ohio, Swan and Finch Company, Union Tank Line Company, Vacuum Oil Company, Washington Oil Company, Waters-Pierce Oil Company, have entered into and became parties to this combination and are either actively operating or aiding in the operation of it; that by means of this combination the defendants named in this section have combined and conspired to monopolize, have monopolized, and are continuing to monopolize a substantial part of the commerce among the states, in the territories and with foreign nations, in violation of section 2 of the anti-trust act.

***

SECTION 4. That in the formation and execution of the combination or conspiracy the Standard Company has issued its stock to the amount of more than $90,000,000 in exchange for the stocks of other corporations which it holds, and it now owns and controls all of the capital stock of many corporations, a majority of the stock or controlling interests in some corporations and stock in other corporations as follows:

Total

Owned by

Name of company.

capital

Standard Oil

---

stock.

Company.

Anglo-American Oil Company, Limited

1,000,000

999,740

Atlantic Refining Company

$5,000,000

$5,000,000

Borne-Scrymser Company

200,000

199,700

Buckeye Pipe Line Company

10,000,000

9,999,700

Chesebrough Manufacturing Company,

Consolidated

500,000

277,700

Colonial Oil Company

250,000

249,300

Continental Oil Company

300,000

300,000

Crescent Pipe Line Company

3,000,000

3,000,000

Eureka Pipe Line Company

5,000,000

4,999,400

Galena-Signal Oil Company

10,000,000

7,079,500

Indiana Pipe Line Company

1,000,000

999,700

Lawrence Natural Gas Company

---

450,000

450,000

Mahoning Gas Fuel Company

150,000

149,900

Mountain State Gas Company

500,000

500,000

National Transit Company

25,455,200

25,451,650

New York Transit Company

5,000,000

5,000,000

Northern Pipe Line Company

4,000,000

4,000,000

Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Company

2,775,250

1,649,450

Ohio Oil Company

10,000,000

9,999,850

People's Natural Gas Company

1,000,000

1,000,000

Pittsburg Natural Gas Company

310,000

310,000

Solar Refining Company

500,000

499,400

Southern Pipe Line Company

10,000,000

10,000,000

South Penn Oil Company

2,500,000

---

2,500,000

Southwest Pennsylvania Pipe Lines

3,500,000

3,500,000

Standard Oil Company (of California)

17,000,000

16,999,500

Standard Oil Company (of Indiana)

1,000,000

999,000

Standard Oil Company (of Iowa)

1,000,000

1,000,000

Standard Oil Company (of Kansas)

1,000,000

999,300

Standard Oil Company (of Kentucky)

1,000,000

997,200

Standard Oil Company (of Nebraska)

600,000

599,500

Standard Oil Company (of New York)

15,000,000

15,000,000

Standard Oil Company (of Ohio)

3,500,000

3,499,400

Swan and Finch Company

100,000

100,000

Union Tank Line Company

3,500,000

3,499,400

Vacuum Oil Company

2,500,000

2,500,000

---

Washington Oil Company

100,000

71,480

Waters-Pierce Oil Company

400,000

274,700

---

That the defendant National Transit Company, which is owned and controlled by the Standard Oil Company as aforesaid, owns and controls the amounts of the capital stocks of the following-named corporations and limited partnerships stated opposite each, respectively, as follows:

Total*Owned by*Name of company.*capital*National Transit*stock.*Company.

Connecting Gas Company

$825,000

$412,000

Cumberland Pipe Line Company

1,000,000

998,500

East Ohio Gas Company

6,000,000

5,999,500

Franklin Pipe Company, Limited

50,000

19,500

Prairie Oil and Gas Company

10,000,000

9,999,500

GGFÁMEJÉFÉHÍ FLÁFÁMEJÉDÉAEGÉHE GELÁÍ ÁSEÓdaÉH FJÉHÉHÍ JLÁFFAMÉJÉSÓYÓJÁFI GÍPÁHÉFFÉ

[***111] [*72] Giving to the facts just stated, the weight which it was deemed they were entitled to, in the light afforded by the [*73] proof of other cognate facts and circumstances, the court below held that the acts and dealings established by the [*74] proof operated to destroy the "potentially of competition" which otherwise would have existed to such an extent as [***650] to cause the transfers of stock which were made to the New Jersey corporation and the control which resulted over the many and various subsidiary corporations to be a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the first section of the act, but also to be an attempt to monopolize and a monopolization bringing about a perennial violation of the second section.

We see no cause to doubt the correctness of these conclusions, considering the subject from every aspect, that is, both in view of the facts established by the record and the necessary operation and effect of the law as we have [*75] construed it upon the inferences deducible from the facts, for the following reasons:

- a. Because the unification of power and control over petroleum and its products which was the inevitable [****112] result of the combining in the New Jersey corporation by the increase of its stock and the transfer to it of the stocks of so many other corporations, aggregating so vast a capital, gives rise, in and of itself, in the absence of countervailing circumstances, to say the least, to the prima facie presumption of intent and purpose to maintain the dominancy over the oil industry, not as a result of normal methods of industrial development, but by new means of combination which were resorted to in order that greater power might be added than would otherwise have arisen had normal methods been followed, the whole with the purpose of excluding others from the trade and thus centralizing in the combination a perpetual control of the movements of petroleum and its products in the channels of interstate commerce.
  - b. Because the prima facie presumption [**521] [***651] of intent to restrain trade, to monopolize and to bring about monopolization resulting from the act of expanding the stock of the New Jersey corporation and vesting it with such vast control of the oil industry, is made conclusive by considering, 1, the conduct of the persons or corporations who were mainly instrumental [****113] in bringing about the extension of power in the New Jersey corporation before the consummation of that result and prior to the formation of the trust agreements of 1879 and 1882; 2, by considering the proof as to what was done under those agreements and the acts which immediately preceded the vesting of power in the New Jersey corporation as well as by weighing the modes in which the power vested in that corporation has been exerted and the results which have arisen from it.

That the Standard Company has also acquired the control by the ownership of its stock or otherwise of the Security Oil Company, a corporation created under the laws of Texas, which owns a refinery at Beaumont in that State, and the Manhattan Oil Company, a corporation, which owns a pipe line situated in the States of Indiana and Ohio; that the Standard Company, and the corporations and partnerships named in Section 2, are engaged in the various branches of the business of producing, purchasing and transporting petroleum in the principal oil-producing districts of the United States, in New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Texas, Colorado and California, in shipping and transporting the oil through pipe lines owned or controlled by these companies from the various oil-producing districts into and through other states, in refining the petroleum and manufacturing it into various products, in shipping the petroleum and the products thereof into the states and territories of the United States, the District of Columbia and to foreign nations, in shipping the petroleum and its products in tank cars owned or controlled by the subsidiary companies into various states and territories of the United States and into the District of Columbia, and in selling the petroleum and its products in various places in the states and territories of the United States, in the District of Columbia and in foreign countries; that the Standard Company controls the subsidiary companies and directs the management thereof so that none of the subsidiary companies competes with any other of those companies or with the Standard Company, but their trade is all managed as that of a single person.

GGFÁMEJÉFÉHÍLÁHFÁEÓDEAEGFÉHGFÁIÁSEÓdaÉHFJÉFHÍFLÁJFFÁMEJÉSÓYQÁFIÍGÉFHÍFFH

Recurring to the acts done by the individuals or corporations who were mainly instrumental in bringing about the [*76] expansion of the New Jersey corporation during the period prior to the formation of the trust agreements of 1879 and 1882, including those agreements, not for the purpose of weighing the substantial merit of the numerous charges of wrongdoing made during such period, but solely as an aid for discovering intent and purpose, we think no disinterested mind can survey the period in question without being irresistibly driven to the conclusion that the very genius for commercial development and organization which it would seem was manifested from the beginning soon begot an intent and purpose [****114] to exclude others which was frequently manifested by acts and dealings wholly inconsistent with the theory that they were made with the single conception of advancing the development of business [**522] [***652] power by usual methods, but which on the contrary necessarily involved the intent to drive others from the field and to exclude them from their right to trade and thus accomplish the mastery which was the end in view. And, considering the period from the date of the trust agreements of 1879 and 1882, up to the time of the expansion of the New Jersey corporation, the gradual extension of the power over the commerce in oil which ensued, the decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio, the tardiness or reluctance in conforming to the commands of that decision, the method first adopted and that which finally culminated in the plan of the New Jersey corporation, all additionally serve to make manifest the continued existence of the intent which we have previously indicated and which among other things impelled the expansion of the New Jersey corporation. The exercise of the power which resulted from that organization fortifies the foregoing conclusions, since the development [****115] which came, the acquisition here and there which ensued of every efficient means by which competition could have been asserted, the slow but resistless methods which followed by which means of transportation were absorbed and brought under control, [*77] the system of marketing which was adopted by which the country was divided into districts and the trade in each district in oil was turned over to a designated corporation within the combination and all others were excluded, all [**523] lead the mind up to a conviction of a purpose and intent which we think is so certain as practically to cause the subject not to be within the domain of reasonable contention.

The inference that no attempt to monopolize could have been intended, and that no monopolization resulted from the acts complained of, since it is established that a very small percentage of the crude oil produced was controlled by the combination, is unwarranted. As substantial power over the crude product was the inevitable result of the absolute control which existed over the refined product, the monopolization of the one carried with it the power to control the other, and if the inferences which this situation [****116] suggests were developed, which we deem it unnecessary to do, they might well serve to add additional cogency to the presumption of intent to monopolize which we have found arises from the unquestioned proof on other subjects.

We are thus brought to the last subject which we are called upon to consider, viz:

Fourth. The remedy to be administered.

It may be conceded that ordinarily where it was found that acts had been done in violation of the statute, adequate measure of relief would result from restraining the doing of such acts in the future. Swift v. United States, 196 U.S. 375. But in a case like this, where the condition which has been brought about in violation of the statute, in and of itself, is not only a continued attempt to monopolize, but also a monopolization, the duty to enforce the statute requires the application of broader and more controlling remedies. As penalties which are not authorized by law may not be inflicted by judicial authority, it follows that to meet the situation with which we are confronted [*78] the application of remedies two-fold in character becomes essential: 1st. To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which we have found [****117] to have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute. 2d. The exertion of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist in violation of the statute, and thus neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained has brought and will continue to bring about.

In applying remedies for this purpose, however, the fact must not be overlooked that injury to the public by the prevention of an undue restraint on, or the monopolization of trade or commerce is the foundation upon which the prohibitions of the statute rest, and moreover that HN7↑ one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property.

GGFÁNEJÉFÉÁÍ LÁFAUÉDÉAEGÉRÉGHÁÍÁSEÓaÉA FJÉÁÍ GLAFJFFÁNEJÉSÓYQJÁTÍGÉÁÍFÍ

Let us then, as a means of accurately determining what relief we are to afford, first come to consider what relief was afforded by the court below, in order to fix how far it is necessary to take from or add to that relief, to the end that the prohibitions of the statute may have complete and operative force.

The court below by virtue of §§ 1, 2, and 4 of its decree, which we have in part previously excerpted in the margin, adjudged that the New [****118] Jersey corporation in so far as it held the stock of the various corporations, recited in §§ 2 and 4 of the decree, or controlled the same was a combination in violation of the first section of the act, and an attempt to monopolize or a monopolization contrary to the second section of the act. It commanded the dissolution of the combination, and therefore in effect, directed the transfer by the New Jersey corporation back to the stockholders of the various subsidiary corporations entitled to the same of the stock which had been turned over to the New Jersey company [***653] in exchange for its stock. To [*79] make this command effective § 5 of the decree forbade the New Jersey corporation from in any form or manner exercising any ownership or exerting any power directly or indirectly in virtue of its apparent title to the stocks of the subsidiary corporations, and prohibited those subsidiary corporations from paying any dividends to the New Jersey corporation or doing any act which would recognize further power in that company, except to the extent that it was necessary to enable that company to transfer the stock. So far as the owners of the stock of the subsidiary corporations [****119] and the corporations themselves were concerned after the stock had been transferred, § 6 of the decree enjoined them from in any way conspiring or combining to violate the act or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize in virtue of their ownership of the stock transferred to them, and prohibited all agreements between the subsidiary corporations or other stockholders in the future, tending to produce or bring about further violations of the act.

By § 7, pending the accomplishment of the dissolution of the combination by the transfer of stock and until it was consummated, the defendants named in § 2, constituting all the corporations to which we have referred, were enjoined from engaging in or carrying on interstate commerce. And by § 9, among other things a delay of thirty days was granted for the [**524] carrying into effect of the directions of the decree.

So far as the decree held that the ownership of the stock of the New Jersey corporation constituted a combination in violation of the first section and an attempt to create a monopoly or to monopolize under the second section and commanded the dissolution of the combination, the decree was clearly appropriate. And [****120] this also is true of § 5 of the decree which restrained both the New Jersey corporation and the subsidiary corporations from doing anything which would recognize or give effect to further ownership [*80] in the New Jersey corporation of the stocks which were ordered to be retransferred.

But the contention is that, in so far as the relief by way of injunction which was awarded by § 6 against the stockholders of the subsidiary corporations or the subsidiary corporations themselves after the transfer of stock by the New Jersey corporation was completed in conformity to the decree, the relief awarded was too broad: a. Because it was not sufficiently specific and tended to cause those who were within the embrace of the order to cease to be under the protection of the law of the land and required them to thereafter conduct their business under the jeopardy of punishments for contempt for violating a general injunction. New Haven R.R. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U.S. 404. Besides it is said that the restraint imposed by § 6 -- even putting out of view the consideration just stated -- was moreover calculated to do injury to the public and it may be in and of itself to [****121] produce the very restraint on the due course of trade which it was intended to prevent. We say this since it does not necessarily follow because an illegal restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize or a monopolization resulted from the combination and the transfer of the stocks of the subsidiary corporations to the New Jersey corporation that a like restraint or attempt to monopolize or monopolization would necessarily arise from agreements between one or more of the subsidiary corporations after the transfer of the stock by the New Jersey corporation. For illustration, take the pipe lines. By the effect of the transfer of the stock the pipe lines would come under the control of various corporations instead of being subjected to a uniform control. If various corporations owning the lines determined in the public interests to so combine as to make a continuous line, such agreement or combination would not be repugnant to the act, and yet it might be restrained by the decree. As another example, take the [*81] Union Tank Line Company, one of the subsidiary corporations, the owner practically of all the tank cars in use by the combination. If no possibility existed of [****122] agreements for the distribution of these cars among the subsidiary corporations, the most serious detriment to the public interest might result. Conceding the merit, abstractly considered, of these contentions they are irrelevant. We so think, since we construe the sixth paragraph of the decree, not as depriving the stockholders or the corporations, after the dissolution of the combination, of the power to make normal and lawful contracts or agreements, but as restraining them from, by any device whatever, recreating directly or indirectly the illegal combination which the decree dissolved. In other words we construe the sixth paragraph of the decree, not as depriving the stockholders or corporations of the right to live under the law of the land, but as compelling obedience to that law. As therefore the sixth paragraph as thus construed is not amenable to the criticism directed against it and cannot produce the harmful results which the arguments suggest it was obviously right. We think [***654] that in view of the magnitude of the interests involved and their complexity that the delay of thirty days allowed for executing the decree was too short and should be extended so [***123] as to embrace a period of at least six months. So also, in view of the possible serious injury to result to the public from an absolute cessation of interstate commerce in petroleum and its products by such vast agencies as are embraced in the combination, a result which might arise from that portion of the decree which enjoined carrying on of interstate commerce not only by the New Jersey corporation but by all the subsidiary companies until the dissolution of the combination by the transfer of the stocks in accordance with the decree, the injunction provided for in § 7 thereof should not have been awarded.

GGFÁWÉJÉFFÍ FLÁFÁJÉDÁ ÉGÁRÍ GI LÁ I ÁSÉOÁA FJÉKÍ I HÁJFFÁWÉJÉSÓYÓÁFI GI ÉÁKÉFG

Our conclusion is that the decree below was right and [*82] should be affirmed, except as to the minor matters concerning which we have indicated the decree should be modified. Our order will therefore be one of affirmance with directions, however, to modify the decree in accordance with this opinion. The court below to retain jurisdiction to the extent necessary to compel compliance in every respect with its decree.

And it is so ordered.

Concur by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN concurring in part, and dissenting in part.

A sense of [***124] duty constrains me to express the objections which I have to certain [**525] declarations in the opinion just delivered on behalf of the court.

I concur in holding that the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and its subsidiary companies constitute a combination in restraint of interstate commerce, and that they have attempted to monopolize and have monopolized parts of such commerce -- all in violation of what is known as the Anti-trust Act of 1890. 26 Stat. 209, c. 647. The evidence in this case overwhelmingly sustained that view and led the Circuit Court, by its final decree, to order the dissolution of the New Jersey corporation and the discontinuance of the illegal combination between that corporation and its subsidiary companies.

In my judgment, the decree below should have been affirmed without qualification. But the court, while affirming the decree, directs some modifications in respect of what it characterizes as "minor matters." It is to be apprehended that those modifications may prove to be mischievous. In saying this, I have particularly in view the statement in the opinion that "it does not necessarily follow that because an illegal restraint of trade or an [***125] attempt to monopolize or a monopolization resulted from the combination and the transfer of the stocks of the subsidiary corporations to the New Jersey corporation, [*83] that a like restraint of trade or attempt to monopolize or monopolization would necessarily arise from agreements between one or more of the subsidiary corporations after the transfer of the stock by the New Jersey corporation." Taking this language, in connection with other parts of the opinion, the subsidiary companies are thus, in effect, informed -- unwisely, I think -- that although the New Jersey corporation, being an illegal combination, must go out of existence, they may join in an agreement to restrain commerce among the States if such restraint be not "undue."

GGFÁNEJÉFÉBÁ HÁFÁEDEA EGÉRÉ GÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓA ÉN FJÉBÁ I I LÁFJFFÁNEJÉSÓYQÁFI GÍ ÉAÉFÉ

In order that my objections to certain parts of the court's opinion may distinctly appear, I must state the circumstances under which Congress passed the Antitrust Act, and trace the course of judicial decisions as to its meaning and scope. This is the more necessary because the court by its decision, when interpreted by the language of its opinion, has not only upset the longsettled interpretation of the act, but has usurped the constitutional [****126] functions of the legislative branch of the Government. With all due respect for the opinions of others, I feel bound to say that what the court has said may well cause some alarm for the integrity of our institutions. Let us see how the matter stands.

All who recall the condition of the country in 1890 will remember that there was everywhere, among the people generally, a deep feeling of unrest. The Nation had been rid of human slavery -- fortunately, as all now feel -- but the conviction was universal that the country was in real danger from another kind of slavery sought to be fastened on the American people, namely, the slavery that would result from aggregations of capital in the hands of a few individuals and corporations controlling, for their own profit and advantage exclusively, the entire business of the country, including the production and sale of the necessities of life. Such a danger was thought to be then [*84] imminent, and all felt that it must be met firmly and by such statutory regulations as would adequately protect the people against oppression and wrong. Congress therefore took up the matter and gave the whole subject the fullest consideration. All [****127] agreed that the National Government could not, by legislation, regulate the domestic trade carried on wholly within the several States; for, power to regulate such trade remained with, because never surrendered by, the States. But, under authority expressly [***655] granted to it by the Constitution, Congress could regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign states. Its authority to regulate such commerce was and is paramount, due force being given to other provisions of the fundamental law devised by the fathers for the safety of the Government and for the protection and security of the essential rights inhering in life, liberty and property.

Guided by these considerations, and to the end that the people, so far as interstate commerce was concerned, might not be dominated by vast combinations and monopolies, having power to advance their own selfish ends, regardless of the general interests and welfare, Congress passed the Anti-trust Act of 1890 in these words (the italics here and elsewhere in this opinion are mine):

"SEC. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several [****128] States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. § 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, [*85] to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the [**526] several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court. § 3. Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in any Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory or Territories and any State [****129] or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." 26 Stat. 209, c. 647.

The important inquiry in the present case is as to the meaning and scope of that act in its application to interstate commerce.

In 1896 this court had occasion to determine the meaning and scope of the act in an important case known as the Trans-Missouri Freight Case. 166 U.S. 290. The question there was as to the validity under the Anti-trust Act of a certain agreement between numerous railroad companies, whereby they formed an association for the purpose of establishing and maintaining rates, rules and regulations in respect of freight traffic over specified routes. Two questions were involved: first, whether the act applied to railroad carriers; second, whether [****130] the agreement the annulment of which as illegal was the basis of the suit which the United States brought. The court [*86] held that railroad carriers were embraced by the act. In determining that question, the court, among other things, said:

GGFÁNEÙÉFÉÉÍ LÁFÁEÙÉDÉA ÉGÉAÉ GÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓa ÉA FJÉAÉÍ Í LÁFFÁNEÙÉSÓYÓAÉFÍ GÍ ÉAÉFFGJ

"The language of the act includes every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations. So far as the very terms of the statute go, they apply to any contract of the nature described. A contract therefore that is in restraint of trade or commerce is, by the strict language of the act prohibited, even though such contract is entered into between competing common carriers by railroad, and only for the purposes of thereby affecting traffic rates for the transportation of persons and property. If such an agreement restrains trade or commerce, it is prohibited by the statute, unless it can be said that an agreement, no matter what its terms, relating only to transportation cannot restrain trade or commerce. We see no escape from the conclusion that if an agreement of such a nature does restrain it, the agreement is condemned by [****131] this act. . . . Nor is it for the substantial interests of the country that any one commodity should be within the sole power and subject to the sole will of one powerful combination of capital. Congress has, so far as its jurisdiction extends, prohibited all contracts or combinations in the form of trusts entered into for the purpose of restraining trade and commerce. . . . While the statute prohibits all combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, the limitation is not confined to that form alone. All combinations which are in restraint of trade or commerce are prohibited, whether in the form of trusts or in any other form whatever." United States v. Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 312, 324, 326.

The court then proceeded to consider the second of the above questions, saying: "The [***656] next question to be discussed is as to what is the true construction of the statute, [*87] assuming that it applies to common carriers by railroad. What is the meaning of the language as used in the statute, that 'every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby [****132] declared to be illegal?' Is it confined to a contract or combination which is only in unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce, or does it include what the language of the act plainly and in terms covers, all contracts of that nature? It is now with much amplification of argument urged that the statute, in declaring illegal every combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, does not mean what the language used therein plainly imports, but that it only means to declare illegal any such contract which is in unreasonable restraint of trade, while leaving all others unaffected by the provisions of the act; that the common law meaning of the term 'contract in restraint of trade' includes only such contracts as are in unreasonable restraint of trade, and when that term is used in the Federal statute it is not intended to include all contracts in restraint of trade, but only those which are in unreasonable restraint thereof. . . . By the simple use of the term 'contract in restraint of trade,' all [**527] contracts of that nature, whether valid or otherwise, would be included, and not alone that kind of contract which was invalid and [****133] unenforceable as being in unreasonable restraint of trade. When, therefore, the body of an act pronounces as illegal every contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, etc., the plain and ordinary meaning of such language is not limited to that kind of contract alone which is in unreasonable restraint of trade, but all contracts are included in such language, and no exception or limitation can be added without placing in the act that which has been omitted by Congress. . . . If only that kind of contract [*88] which is in unreasonable restraint of trade be within the meaning of the statute, and declared therein to be illegal, it is at once apparent that the subject of what is a reasonable rate is attended with great uncertainty. . . . To say, therefore, that the act excludes agreements which are not in unreasonable restraint of trade, and which tend simply to keep up reasonable rates for transportation, is substantially to leave the question of unreasonableness to the companies themselves. . . . But assuming that agreements of this nature are not void at common law and that the various cases cited by the learned courts below show it, the [****134] answer to the statement of their validity now is to be found in the terms of the statute under consideration. . . . The arguments which have been addressed to us against the inclusion of all contracts in restraint of trade, as provided for by the language of the act, have been based upon the alleged presumption that Congress, notwithstanding the language of the act, could not have intended to embrace all contracts, but only such contracts as were in unreasonable restraint of trade. Under these circumstances we are, therefore, asked to hold that the act of Congress excepts contracts which are not in unreasonable restraint of trade, and which only keep rates up to a reasonable price, notwithstanding the language of the act makes no such exception. In other words, we are asked to read into the act by way of judicial legislation an exception that is not placed there by the lawmaking branch of the Government, and this is to be done upon the theory that the impolicy of such legislation is so clear that it cannot be supposed Congress intended the natural import of the language it used. This we cannot and ought not to do. . . .

GGFÁWÉÉSHÉÉH I LÁFFAÉÉDÁ ÉGÁHÉ GÍ LÁÍ ÁSÉOÁÁ FJÉÉH I I LÁFFAÉÉSÓYÓÁFI GÍ ÉÉÉÉFHÍ

"If the act ought to read, as contended for by defendants, [****135] Congress is the body to amend it and not this court, by a process of judicial legislation wholly unjustifiable. Large numbers do not agree that the view taken by defendants [*89] is sound or true in substance, and Congress may and very probably did share in that belief in passing the act. The public policy of the Government is to be found in its statutes, and when they have not directly spoken, then in the decisions of the courts and the constant practice of the government officials; but when the lawmaking power speaks upon a particular subject, over which it has constitutional power to legislate, public policy in such a case is what the statute enacts. If the law prohibit any contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce, a contract or combination made in violation of such law is void, whatever may have been theretofore decided by the courts to have been the public policy of the country on that subject. The conclusion which we have drawn from the examination above made into the question before us is that the Anti-trust Act applies to railroads, and that it renders illegal all agreements which are in restraint of trade or commerce as we have above defined that expression, [****136] and the question then arises whether the agreement before us is of that nature."

I have made these extended extracts from the opinion of the court in the Trans-Missouri Freight Case in order to show beyond [***657] question, that the point was there urged by counsel that the Anti-trust Act condemned only contracts, combinations, trusts and conspiracies that were in unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce, and that the court in clear and decisive language met that point. It adjudged that Congress had in unequivocal words declared that "every contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of commerce among the several States" shall be illegal, and that no distinction, so far as interstate commerce was concerned, was to be tolerated between restraints of such commerce as were undue or unreasonable, and restraints that were due or reasonable. With full knowledge of the then condition of the country and of its business, Congress determined [*90] to meet, and did meet, the situation by an absolute, statutory prohibition of "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, in restraint of trade or commerce." Still more; [****137] in response to the suggestion by able counsel that Congress intended only to strike down such contracts, combinations and monopolies as unreasonably restrained interstate commerce, this court, in words too clear to be misunderstood, said that to so hold was "to read into the act by way of judicial legislation, an exception not placed there by the law-making branch of the Government." "This," the court said, as we have seen, "we cannot and ought not to do."

[**528] It thus appears that fifteen years ago, when the purpose of Congress in passing the Anti-trust Act was fresh in the minds of courts, lawyers, statesmen and the general public, this court expressly declined to indulge in judicial legislation, by inserting in the act the word "unreasonable" or any other word of like import. It may be stated here that the country at large accepted this view of the act, and the Federal courts throughout the entire country enforced its provisions according to the interpretation given in the Freight Association Case. What, then, was to be done by those who questioned the soundness of the interpretation placed on the act by this court in that case? As the court had decided that to insert [****138] the word "unreasonable" in the act would be "judicial legislation" on its part, the only alternative left to those who opposed the decision in that case was to induce Congress to so amend the act as to recognize the right to restrain interstate commerce to a reasonable extent. The public press, magazines and law journals, the debates in Congress, speeches and addresses by public men and jurists, all contain abundant evidence of the general understanding that the meaning, extent and scope of the Anti-trust Act had been judicially determined by this court, and that the only question remaining open for discussion was the [*91] wisdom of the policy declared by the act -- a matter that was exclusively within the cognizance of Congress. But at every session of Congress since the decision of 1896, the lawmaking branch of the Government, with full knowledge of that decision, has refused to change the policy it had declared or to so amend the act of 1890 as to except from its operation contracts, combinations and trusts that reasonably restrain interstate commerce.

But those who were in combinations that were illegal did not despair. They at once set up the baseless claim that the [****139] decision of 1896 disturbed the "business interests of the country," and let it be known that they would never be content until the rule was established that would permit interstate commerce to be subjected to reasonable restraints. Finally, an opportunity came again to raise the same question which this court had, upon full consideration, determined in 1896. I now allude to the case of United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, decided in 1898. What was that case?

GGFÁNEUÉJ FÍLÁFÁÉDÉA ÉGÁÉB GÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓa ÉJ FJÁÉH Í Í LÁJFFÁNEUÉSÓYÓAÉF GÍ FÁHÉFHU

It was a suit by the United States against more than thirty railroad companies to have the court declare illegal, under the Anti-trust Act, a certain agreement between these companies. The relief asked was denied in the subordinate Federal courts and the Government brought the case here.

It is important to state the points urged in that case by the defendant companies charged with violating the Anti-trust Act, and to show that the court promptly met them. To that end I make a copious extract from the opinion in the Joint Traffic Case. Among other things, the court said: "Upon comparing that agreement [the one in the Joint Traffic Case, then under consideration, 171 U.S. 505] with the one set forth [****140] in the case of United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, the great similarity between them suggests that a similar result should be reached in the two cases" (p. 558). [*92] Learned counsel in the Joint Traffic Case urged a reconsideration of the question decided in the Trans-Missouri Case contending that "the decision in that case [the Trans-Missouri Freight Case] is quite plainly erroneous, and the consequences of such error are far reaching and disastrous, and clearly at war with justice and sound policy, and the construction placed upon the Anti-trust statute has been received by the public with surprise and alarm." They suggested that [***658] the point made in the Joint Traffic Case as to the meaning and scope of the act might have been but was not made in the previous case. The court said (171 U.S. 559) that "the report of the Trans-Missouri Case clearly shows not only that the point now taken was there urged upon the attention of the court, but it was then intentionally and necessarily decided."

The question whether the court should again consider the point decided in the Trans-Missouri Case, 171 U.S. 573, was disposed of in the most decisive [****141] language, as follows: "Finally, we are asked to reconsider the question decided in the Trans-Missouri Case, and to retrace the steps taken therein, because of the plain error contained in that decision and the widespread alarm with which it was received and the serious consequences which have resulted, or may soon result, from the law as interpreted in that case. It is proper to remark that an application for a reconsideration of a question but lately decided by this court is usually based upon a statement that some of the arguments employed on the original hearing of the question have been overlooked or misunderstood, or that some controlling authority has been either misapplied by the court or passed over without discussion or notice. While this is not strictly an application for a rehearing in the same case, yet in substance it is the same thing. The court is asked to reconsider a question but just decided after a careful investigation [**529] of the matter involved. There have heretofore been in effect two arguments of precisely the same [*93] questions now before the court, and the same arguments were addressed to us on both those occasions. The report of the Trans-Missouri [****142] Case shows a dissenting opinion delivered in that case, and that the opinion was concurred in by three other members of the court. That opinion, it will be seen, gives with great force and ability the arguments against the decision which was finally arrived at by the court. It was after a full discussion of the questions involved and with the knowledge of the views entertained by the minority as expressed in the dissenting opinion, that the majority of the court came to the conclusion it did. Soon after the decision a petition for a rehearing of the case was made, supported by a printed argument in its favor, and pressed with an earnestness and vigor and at a length which were certainly commensurate with the importance of the case. This court, with care and deliberation and also with a full appreciation of their importance, again considered the questions involved in its former decision. A majority of the court once more arrived at the conclusion it had first announced, and accordingly it denied the application. And now for the third time the same arguments are employed, and the court is again asked to recant its former opinion, and to decide the same question in direct opposition [****143] to the conclusion arrived at in the Trans-Missouri Case. The learned counsel while making the application frankly confess that the argument in opposition to the decision in the case above named has been so fully, so clearly and so forcibly presented in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice White [in the Freight Case] that it is hardly possible to add to it, nor is it necessary to repeat it. The fact that there was so close a division of opinion in this court when the matter was first under advisement, together with the different views taken by some of the judges of the lower courts, led us to the most careful and scrutinizing examination of the arguments advanced by both sides, and it was after such an examination that the majority of [*94] the court came to the conclusion it did. It is not now alleged that the court on the former occasion overlooked any argument for the respondents or misapplied any controlling authority. It is simply insisted that the court, notwithstanding the arguments for an opposite view, arrived at an erroneous result, which, for reasons already stated, ought to be reconsidered and reversed. As we have twice already deliberately and earnestly considered [****144] the same arguments which are now for a third time pressed upon our attention, it could hardly be expected that our opinion should now change from that already expressed."

These utterances, taken in connection with what was previously said in the Trans-Missouri Freight Case, show so clearly and affirmatively as to admit of no doubt that this court, many years ago, upon the fullest consideration, interpreted the Anti-trust Act as prohibiting and making illegal not only every contract or combination, in whatever form, which was in restraint of interstate commerce, without regard to its reasonableness or unreasonableness, but all monopolies or attempts to monopolize "any part" of such trade or commerce. Let me refer to a few other cases in which the scope of the decision in the Freight Association Case was referred to: In Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 92, the court said: "It is true that it has been held by this court that the act (Anti-trust Act) included any restraint of commerce, whether reasonable or unreasonable" -- citing United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso., 166 U.S. 290; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505; [***659] Addyston Pipe [****145] &c. Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211. In Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 46, which involved the validity, under the Anti-trust Act, of a certain association formed for the sale of tiles, mantels, and grates, the court referring to the contention that the sale of tiles in San Francisco was so small "as to be a negligible quantity," held that the association was nevertheless a combination in restraint of interstate trade or commerce [*95] in violation of the Anti-trust Act. In Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 297, all the members of this court concurred in saying that the Trans-Missouri, Joint Traffic and Northern Securities cases "hold in effect that the Antitrust Law has a broader application than the prohibition of restraints of trade unlawful at common law." In Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson (1907), 209 U.S. 423, 432, 434, all the members of the court again concurred in declaring that "it has been decided that not only unreasonable, but all direct restraints of trade are prohibited, the law being thereby distinguished from the common law." In United States v. Addyston Pipe Company, 85 Fed. Rep. 271, 278, Judge Taft, speaking for the Circuit [**530] Court of Appeals for [****146] the Sixth Circuit, said that according to the decision of this court in the Freight Association Case, "contracts in restraint of interstate transportation were within the statute, whether the restraints could be regarded as reasonable at common law or not." In Chesapeake & Ohio Fuel Co. v. United States (1902), 115 Fed. Rep. 610, 619, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, after referring to the right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, thus interpreted the prior decisions of this court in the Trans-Missouri, the Joint Traffic and the Addyston Pipe and Steel Co. cases: "In the exercise of this right, Congress has seen fit to prohibit all contracts in restraint of trade. It has not left to the courts the consideration of the question whether such restraint is reasonable or unreasonable, or whether the contract would have been illegal at the common law or not. The act leaves for consideration by judicial authority no question of this character, but all contracts and combinations are declared illegal if in restraint of trade or commerce among the States." As far back as Robbins v. Shelby Taxing District, 120 U.S. 489, 497, it was held that certain local regulations, [****147] subjecting drummers engaged in both interstate and domestic trade, could not be sustained by reason of the fact that no discrimination [*96] was made among citizens of the different States. The court observed that this did not meet the difficulty, for the reason that "interstate commerce cannot be taxed at all." Under this view Congress no doubt acted, when by the Antitrust Act it forbade any restraint whatever upon interstate commerce. It manifestly proceeded upon the theory that interstate commerce could not be restrained at all by combinations, trusts or monopolies, but must be allowed to flow in its accustomed channels, wholly unvexed and unobstructed by anything that would restrain its ordinary movement. See also Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U.S. 313, 326; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U.S. 78, 82, 83.

In the opinion delivered on behalf of the minority in the Northern Securities Case, 193 U.S. 197, our present Chief Justice referred to the contentions made by the defendants in the Freight Association Case, one of which was that the agreement there involved did not unreasonably restrain interstate commerce, and said: "Both these contentions were decided against the association, [****148] the court holding that the Anti-trust Act did embrace interstate carriage by railroad corporations, and as that act prohibited any contract in restraint of interstate commerce, it hence embraced all contracts of that character, whether they were reasonable or unreasonable." One of the Justices who dissented in the Northern Securities Case in a separate opinion, concurred in by the minority, thus referred to the Freight and Joint Traffic cases: "For it cannot be too carefully remembered that that clause applies to 'every' contract of the forbidden kind -- a consideration which was the turning point of the Trans-Missouri Freight

GGFÁNEÙÉFÉJÍLÁFÁÉDÉAÉEGFÁÉHELÁÍAŠÉOáÉAÉFJÉAÉÍJLÁFJFFÁNEÙÉSÓYQFÁTÍGÉAÉAÉÍ

Association case. . . . Size has nothing to do with the matter. A monopoly of 'any part' of commerce among the States is unlawful."

In this connection it may be well to refer to the adverse report made in 1909, by Senator Nelson, on behalf of the Senate Judiciary Committee, in reference to a certain bill [*97] offered in the Senate and which proposed to amend the Anti-trust Act in various particulars. That report contains a full, careful and able analysis of judicial decisions relating to combinations and monopolies in restraint of trade and commerce. [****149] Among other things said in it which bear on the questions involved in the present case are these: " [****60] The Anti-trust Act makes it a criminal offense to violate the law, and provides a punishment both by fine and imprisonment. To inject into the act the question of whether an agreement or combination is reasonable or unreasonable would render the act as a criminal or penal statute indefinite and uncertain, and hence, to that extent, utterly nugatory and void, and would practically amount to a repeal of that part of the act. . . . And while the same technical objection does not apply to civil prosecutions, the injection of the rule of reasonableness or unreasonableness would lead to the greatest variableness and uncertainty in the enforcement of the law. The defense of reasonable restraint would be made in every case and there would be as many different rules of reasonableness as cases, courts and juries. What one court or jury might deem unreasonable another court or jury might deem reasonable. A court or jury in Ohio might find a given agreement or combination reasonable, while a court and jury in Wisconsin might find the same agreement and combination unreasonable. In [****150] the case of People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 264, Chief Justice Andrews remarks: 'If agreements and combinations to prevent competition in prices are or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character. If the validity of such an agreement was made to depend upon actual proof of public [**531] prejudice or injury, it would be very difficult in any case to establish the invalidity, although the moral evidence might be very convincing.' . . . To amend the Anti-trust Act, as suggested by this bill, would be to entirely emasculate it, and for all practical purposes render it nugatory as a remedial [*98] statute. Criminal prosecutions would not lie and civil remedies would labor under the greatest doubt and uncertainty. The act as it exists is clear, comprehensive, certain and highly remedial. It practically covers the field of Federal jurisdiction, and is in every respect a model law. To destroy or undermine it at the present juncture, when combinations are on the increase, and appear to be as oblivious as ever of the rights of the public, would be a calamity." The result was the indefinite postponement by the Senate of any further [****151] consideration of the proposed amendments of the Anti-trust Act.

After what has been adjudged, upon full consideration, as to the meaning and scope of the Anti-trust Act, and in view of the usages of this court when attorneys for litigants have attempted to reopen questions that have been deliberately decided, I confess to no little surprise as to what has occurred in the present case. The court says that the previous cases, above cited, "cannot by any possible conception be treated as authoritative without the certitude that reason was resorted to for the purpose of deciding them." And its opinion is full of intimations that this court proceeded in those cases, so far as the present question is concerned, without being guided by the "rule of reason," or "the light of reason." It is more than once intimated, if not suggested, that if the Anti-trust Act is to be construed as prohibiting every contract or combination, of whatever nature, which is in fact in restraint of commerce, regardless of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such restraint, that fact would show that the court had not proceeded, in its decision, according to "the light of reason," but had disregarded the "rule [****152] of reason." If the court, in those cases, was wrong in its construction of the act, it is certain that it fully apprehended the views advanced by learned counsel in previous cases and pronounced them to be untenable. The published reports place this beyond all question. The opinion of the court [*99] was delivered by a Justice of wide experience as a judicial officer, and the court had before it the Attorney General of the United States and lawyers who were recognized, on all sides, as great leaders in their profession. The same eminent jurist who delivered the opinion in the Trans-Missouri Case delivered the opinion in the Joint Traffic Association Case, and the Association in that case was represented by lawyers whose ability was universally recognized. Is it to be supposed that any point escaped notice in those cases when we think of the sagacity of the Justice who expressed the views of the court, or of the ability of the profound, astute lawyers, who sought such an interpretation of the act as would compel the court to insert words in the statute which Congress had not put there, and the insertion of which words, would amount to "judicial legislation"? Now this court is [****153] asked to do that which it has distinctly declared it could not and would not do, and has now done what it then said it could not constitutionally do. It has, by mere interpretation, modified the act of Congress, and deprived it of practical value as a defensive measure against the evils to be remedied. On reading the opinion just delivered, the first inquiry will be, that as the court is unanimous in holding that the particular things done by the Standard Oil Company and its subsidiary companies, in this case, were illegal under the Anti-trust Act, whether those things were in reasonable or unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce, why was it necessary to [***661] make an elaborate argument, as is done in the opinion, to show that according to the "rule of reason" the act as passed by Congress should be interpreted as if it contained the word "unreasonable" or the word "undue"? The only answer which, in frankness, can be given to this question is, that the court intends to decide that its deliberate judgment, fifteen years ago, to the effect that the act permitted no restraint whatever of interstate commerce, whether reasonable or unreasonable, was not in accordance with [****154] [*100] the "rule of reason." In effect the court says, that it will now, for the first time, bring the discussion under the "light of reason" and apply the "rule of reason" to the questions to be decided. I have the authority of this court for saying that such a course of proceeding on its part would be "judicial legislation."

GGFÁMEJÉFÉEJLÁFÉAOÉAEGFÉHFLÁÍÅSEØaÉFJFÉHÍELÁJFFÁMEJÉSØYØAFÍGÍFÅHÍH

Still more, what is now done involves a serious departure from the settled usages of this court. Counsel have not ordinarily been allowed to discuss questions already settled by previous decisions. More than once at the present term, that rule has been applied. In St. Louis, I.M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U.S. 281, 295, the court had occasion to determine the meaning and scope of the original Safety Appliance Act of Congress passed for the protection of railroad employes and passengers on interstate trains. 27 Stat. 531, § 5, c. 196. A particular construction [**532] of that act was insisted upon by the interstate carrier which was sued under the Safety Appliance Act; and the contention was that a different construction, than the one insisted upon by the carrier, would be a harsh one. After quoting the words of the act, Mr. Justice Moody [****155] said for the court: "There is no escape from the meaning of these words. Explanation cannot clarify them, and ought not to be employed to confuse them or lessen their significance. The obvious purpose of the legislature was to supplant the qualified duty of the common law with an absolute duty deemed by it more just. If the railroad does, in point of fact, use cars which do not comply with the standard, it violates the plain prohibitions of the law, and there arises from that violation the liability to make compensation to one who is injured by it. It is urged that this is a harsh construction. To this we reply that, if it be the true construction, its harshness is no concern of the courts. They have no responsibility for the justice or wisdom of legislation, and no duty except to enforce the law as it is written, unless it is clearly beyond the constitutional power of the lawmaking [*101] body. . . . It is quite conceivable that Congress, contemplating the inevitable hardship of such injuries, and hoping to diminish the economic loss to the community resulting from them, should deem it wise to impose their burdens upon those who could measurably control their causes, instead [****156] of upon those who are in the main helpless in that regard. Such a policy would be intelligible, and, to say the least, not so unreasonable as to require us to doubt that it was intended, and to seek some unnatural interpretation of common words. We see no error in this part of the case." And at the present term of this court we were asked, in a case arising under the Safety Appliance Act, to reconsider the question decided in the Taylor Case. We declined to do so, saying in an opinion just now handed down: "In view of these facts, we are unwilling to regard the question as to the meaning and scope of the Safety Appliance Act, so far as it relates to automatic couplers on trains moving in interstate traffic, as open to further discussion here. If the court was wrong in the Taylor case the way is open for such an amendment of the statute as Congress may, in its discretion, deem proper. This court ought not now to disturb what has been so widely accepted and acted upon by the courts as having been decided in that case. A contrary course would cause infinite uncertainty, if not mischief, in the administration of the law in the Federal courts. To avoid misapprehension, it is appropriate [****157] to say that we are not to be understood as questioning the soundness of the interpretation heretofore placed by this court upon the Safety Appliance Act. We only mean to say that until Congress, by an amendment of the statute, changes the rule announced in the Taylor Case, this court will adhere to and apply that rule." C. B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. United States, 220 U.S. 559. When counsel in the present case insisted upon a reversal of the former rulings of this court, and asked such an interpretation of the Anti-trust Act as would allow reasonable restraints of interstate commerce, this [*102] court, in deference to established practice, should, I submit, have said to them: "That question, according to our practice, is not open for further discussion here. This court long ago deliberately held (1) that the act, interpreting its words in their ordinary acceptation, prohibits all restraints of interstate commerce by combinations in whatever form, and whether reasonable or unreasonable; (2) the question relates to matters of public policy in reference to commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and Congress alone can deal with the subject; (3) this court would encroach upon [****158] the authority [***662] of Congress if, under the guise of construction, it should assume to determine a matter of public policy; (4) the parties must go to Congress and obtain an amendment of the Anti-trust Act if they think this court was wrong in its former decisions; and (5) this court cannot and will not judicially legislate, since its function is to declare the law, while it belongs to the legislative department to make the law. Such a course, I am sure, would not have offended the "rule of reason."

GGFÁNEJÉAÉFEGLÁFÁEJÓDEAEGÉAÉHGLÁÍÅSEØðAÉAFJÆAÉÍGLÁFFÁNEJØSØYØAÉIÍGÆAÉFÍI

But my brethren, in their wisdom, have deemed it best to pursue a different course. They have now said to those who condemn our former decisions and who object to all legislative prohibitions of contracts, combinations and trusts in restraint of interstate commerce, "You may now restrain such commerce, provided you are reasonable about it; only take care that the restraint is not undue." The disposition of the case under consideration, according to the views of the defendants, will, it is claimed, quiet and give rest to "the business of the country." On the contrary, I have a strong conviction that it will throw the business of the country into confusion and invite widelyextended [****159] and harassing litigation, the injurious effects of which will be felt for many years to come. When Congress prohibited every contract, combination or monopoly, in restraint of commerce, it prescribed a simple, definite rule that all could understand, and which could be easily [**533] applied [*103] by everyone wishing to obey the law, and not to conduct their business in violation of law. But now, it is to be feared, we are to have, in cases without number, the constantly recurring inquiry -- difficult to solve by proof -- whether the particular contract, combination, or trust involved in each case is or is not an "unreasonable" or "undue" restraint of trade. Congress, in effect, said that there should be no restraint of trade, in any form, and this court solemnly adjudged many years ago that Congress meant what it thus said in clear and explicit words, and that it could not add to the words of the act. But those who condemn the action of Congress are now, in effect, informed that the courts will allow such restraints of interstate commerce as are shown not to be unreasonable or undue.

It remains for me to refer, more fully than I have heretofore done, to another, and, [****160] in my judgment -- if we look to the future -- the most important aspect of this case. That aspect concerns the usurpation by the judicial branch of the Government of the functions of the legislative department. The illustrious men who laid the foundations of our institutions, deemed no part of the National Constitution of more consequence or more essential to the permanancy of our form of government than the provisions under which were distributed the powers of Government among three separate, equal and coordinate departments -- legislative, executive, and judicial. This was at that time a new feature of governmental regulation among the nations of the earth, and it is deemed by the people of every section of our own country as most vital in the workings of a representative republic whose Constitution was ordained and established in order to accomplish the objects stated in its Preamble by the means, but only by the means, provided either expressly or by necessary implication, by the instrument itself. No department of that government can constitutionally exercise the [*104] powers committed strictly to another and separate department.

I said at the outset that the action [****161] of the court in this case might well alarm thoughtful men who revered the Constitution. I meant by this that many things are intimated and said in the court's opinion which will not be regarded otherwise than as sanctioning an invasion by the judiciary of the constitutional domain of Congress -- an attempt by interpretation to soften or modify what some regard as a harsh public policy. This court, let me repeat, solemnly adjudged many years ago that it could not, except by "judicial legislation," read words into the Antitrust Act not put there by Congress, and which, being inserted, give it a meaning which the words of the Act, as passed, if properly interpreted, would not justify. The court has decided that it could not thus change a public policy formulated and declared by Congress; that Congress has paramount authority to regulate interstate commerce, and that it alone can change a policy once inaugurated by legislation. The courts have nothing to do with the wisdom or policy of an act of Congress. Their duty is to ascertain the will of Congress, and if the statute embodying the expression of that will is constitutional, the courts must respect it. They have no function to declare [****162] a public policy, nor to amend legislative enactments. "What is termed the policy of Government with reference to any particular legislation," as this court has said, "is generally a very uncertain thing, upon which all sorts of opinions, each variant from the other, may be formed by different persons. It is a ground much too unstable upon which to rest the judgment of the court in the interpretation of statutes." Hadden v. Collector, 5 Wall. 107. Nevertheless, if [***663] I do not misapprehend its opinion, the court has now read into the act of Congress words which are not to be found there, and has thereby done that which it adjudged in 1896 and 1898 could not be done without violating [*105] the Constitution, namely, by interpretation of a statute, changed a public policy declared by the legislative department.

GOFÁNEÚÉAFÉLÁHFÁEÓDEAEGÆREHHÁÍASEDAAÉFJÉAÉIHFÁFFÁMEASÓYQWAFÍGÍÉAHTFÍG

After many years of public service at the National Capital, and after a somewhat close observation of the conduct of public affairs, I am impelled to say that there is abroad, in our land, a most harmful tendency to bring about the amending of constitutions and legislative enactments by means alone of judicial construction. As a public policy has been declared [****163] by the legislative department in respect of interstate commerce, over which Congress has entire control, under the Constitution, all concerned must patiently submit to what has been lawfully done, until the People of the United States -- the source of all National power -- shall, in their own time, upon reflection and through the legislative department of the Government, require a change of that policy. There are some who say that it is a part of one's liberty to conduct commerce among the States without being subject to governmental authority. But that would not be liberty, regulated by law, and liberty, which cannot be regulated by law, is not to be desired. The Supreme Law of the Land -- which is binding alike upon all -- [**534] upon Presidents, Congresses, the Courts and the People -- gives to Congress, and to Congress alone, authority to regulate interstate commerce, and when Congress forbids any restraint of such commerce, in any form, all must obey its mandate. To overreach the action of Congress merely by judicial construction, that is, by indirection, is a blow at the integrity of our governmental system, and in the end will prove most dangerous to all. Mr. Justice [****164] Bradley wisely said, when on this Bench, that illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of legal procedure. Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 635. We shall do well to heed the warnings of that great jurist.

[*106] I do not stop to discuss the merits of the policy embodied in the Anti-trust Act of 1890; for, as has been often adjudged, the courts, under our constitutional system, have no rightful concern with the wisdom or policy of legislation enacted by that branch of the Government which alone can make laws.

For the reasons stated, while concurring in the general affirmance of the decree of the Circuit Court, I dissent from that part of the judgment of this court which directs the modification of the decree of the Circuit Court, as well as from those parts of the opinion which, in effect, assert authority, in this court, to insert words in the Anti-trust Act which Congress did not put there, and which, being inserted, Congress is made to declare, as part of the public policy of the country, what it has not chosen to declare.

End of Document

United States v. Union P. R. Co.

Circuit Court, D. Utah

June 24, 1911

No. 993

Reporter

188 F. 102 *; 1911 U.S. App. LEXIS 5174 **

UNITED STATES v. UNION PAC. R. CO. et al.

Core Terms

---

traffic, route, tonnage, rates, railroad, lines, stock, percent, transportation, competitor, transcontinental, connections, commerce, roads, interstate, carriers, suppress, thence, anti-trust, railroad company, own line, sea, conspiracy, restrain, freight, ending, river, interstate commerce, one hand, intermediate

Opinion by: [**1] ADAMS

Opinion

---

[*109] Before SANBORN, VAN DEVANTER, HOOK, and ADAMS, Circuit Judges.

ADAMS, Circuit Judge. To bring any transaction within the condemnation of the first section of the anti-trust law, it must be a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or international commerce. This restraint [**110] must be substantial in character and the direct and immediate effect of the transaction complained of. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136, and cases cited. The most important feature of the complaint in this case, and the one chiefly relied upon by counsel for the government in support of their contentions, is the purchase in 1901 by the Union Pacific Company of a controlling interest in the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company. Its consequences are alleged to have been the destruction or restriction of free competition in transcontinental commerce. Whether such consequences followed depends upon whether these companies were or could have been independent and substantial competitors before the transaction in question occurred. Kimball v. Atchison, T. & S.F.R. Co. (C.C.) 46 Fed. 888. Most [**2] obviously, if they were not and could not then have been such competitors, the securing of control of both by one did not destroy or stifle competition. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 331, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679.

The question then is: Was the line of the Union Pacific Company, extending only from Omaha and Kansas City on the east to Ogden on the west a competing line prior to 1901 for transcontinental business with the Southern Pacific Company, whose line extended from New York on the east over the sea to New Orleans, and thence by rail to San Francisco and Portland on the west? The question is not whether it constituted a continuous line over which traffic might possibly be moved from the Atlantic seaboard or interior to the Pacific Coast, but whether it constituted a feasible route over which it could enter naturally and profitably into competition with the Southern Pacific route for that traffic.

Claim is not made that it was such a competitor for any business originating on or near to its main line, but only for business originating in New York or Pittsburg common points, 1,000 or more miles away from its line. Its traffic between New York [**3] and interior points, on the one hand, and Portland, Or., on the other, was of trifling importance, amounting for the fiscal year preceding the purchase of the Huntington stock to only 0.46 per cent. of its total tonnage. Accordingly its competitive relation to the Southern Pacific route with respect to traffic in and out of San Francisco, the chief gateway for transcontinental business, will first be considered.

It had a connection at Granger with its subsidiary lines, the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Line, extending to Portland, and there with a line of steamboats irregularly and infrequently running between that port and San Francisco. But this detour through Portland and over the sea was long, unreliable, and unsatisfactory, and afforded no opportunity for fair and remunerative competition with the Southern Pacific for San Francisco trade. It was about 1,700 miles in length, as against 800 miles in direct line from Ogden to San Francisco. In fact, prior to 1901 it had never been employed in any substantial way as an outlet for the Union Pacific's west-bound freight into San Francisco. It is inconceivable, therefore, that the Huntington stock was [**4] purchased to prevent, or had the [*111] effect of preventing, in any substantial way, free competition with so devious and impracticable a route.

We shall accordingly dismiss it from further consideration so far as transcontinental business is concerned, and pass to the important question upon which argument was concentrated: Whether the right, privilege, or practice, whatever it may have been, of connecting with the rails of the Southern Pacific at Ogden and of using that company's line between Ogden and San Francisco, together with the right, privilege, or practice of connecting at Omaha and Kansas City with the lines of other railroads, which by themselves and by successive connections led to the points of origin of the traffic, constituted the Union Pacific a competitor of the Southern Pacific for that traffic. It is certain the Union Pacific by itself could do none of that business. It extended neither to its origin nor destination. It depended for success upon its connections with other railroads at the east and with its alleged competitor at the west end of its own line.

Prior to the enactment of the provisions of the fourth section of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 [**5] Stat. pt. 1, p. 590 [U.S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1159]) known as the "Hepburn Act," there was no way of coercing railroad companies into establishing through routes or joint rates with each other. In Southern Pacific v. Interstate Com. Com., 200 U.S. 536, 553, 26 Sup. Ct. 330, 334, 50 L. Ed. 585, the Supreme Court speaking of a time antedating the Hepburn act, said:

"It is conceded that the different railroads forming a continuous line of road are free to adopt or refuse to adopt joint through tariff rates. The commerce act recognizes such right, and provides for the filing with the commission of the through tariff rates, as agreed upon between the companies. The whole question of joint through tariff rates, under the provisions of the act, is one of agreement between the companies, and they may, or may not, enter into it, as they may think their interests demand. And it is equally plain that an initial carrier may agree upon joint through rates with one or several connecting carriers, who between each other might be regarded as competing roads. It is also undoubted that the common carrier need not contract to carry beyond its own line, but may there deliver to the next [**6] succeeding carrier, and thus end its responsibility, and charge its local rate for the transportation. If it agree to transport beyond its own line, it may do so by such lines as it chooses."

Whether, therefore, the great Eastern lines and their connections, which gathered up the west-bound freight, should favor the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific, or the Santa Fe routes, as their final connection into San Francisco, was optional with them. If they favored the Union Pacific, the terms of their arrangement, whether for a reasonable participation by each in the through rates, or on the basis of local rates for the service of each, or otherwise, were not within the power of the Union Pacific itself to determine, or of the courts, in the absence of legislative authority, to enforce. If, perchance, the Union Pacific had for a time a voluntary arrangement with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Michigan Central, and the New York Central for a through route and joint rates on traffic destined from New York common points to Ogden and thence to San Francisco, can it be true that that fact by itself would have constituted the Michigan Central a competitor of the Southern Pacific for [**7] [*112] that traffic within the intent and meaning of the anti-trust law? If not, it does not seem to us that the Union Pacific Company, another intermediate link, like it, in the same temporary through route, could have been such a competitor. But we do not rest our conclusion on this feature of the case alone.

In view of the fact that the Southern Pacific owned and operated the road from Ogden to San Francisco, with which alone (except for the circuitous and impracticable route via Portland and the sea to San Francisco) the Union Pacific could have connected, and over which alone it could have carried its traffic into San Francisco, we are unable to understand how the Union Pacific could have been an independent competitor with the Southern Pacific for business over that road into San Francisco. While the Union Pacific was entirely dependent upon the Southern Pacific for its connection westward, the Southern Pacific was not at all dependent upon the Union Pacific for its connection eastward. The Denver & Rio Grande Company and its allied lines under one control had a through route extending from Ogden, through Denver, Kansas City, and St. Louis, to Chicago and other interior [**8] points, and thence by many available connections to New York and the seaboard. This was obviously a most attractive and powerful rival of the Union Pacific Company, and a constant menace to its success. The latter was in no position to coerce any action by the Southern Pacific. Its hands were tied.

But, it is argued, it could retaliate by using its influence to induce initial carriers or shippers to route transcontinental freight by way of Portland and the sea to San Francisco. This being such a long and unreliable route, little success could have been reasonably expected in such retaliation. If the Rio Grande should have been favored by the Southern Pacific as its Eastern connection, the Union Pacific, in the language of the witnesses, would have been practically bottled up at Ogden. With the advantage possessed by the Southern Pacific as an initial carrier to deflect all east-bound traffic to another line at Ogden, and with the right to exact on all east or west bound traffic local rates, instead of a fair and just proportion of an established through rate, the Southern Pacific would easily have put a quick and decisive ending to any hostile rivalry or competition, if such [**9] had been hazarded by the Union Pacific. This absolute dependence by the latter upon the Southern Pacific for a distance of 800 miles of its only through route, to say nothing of its dependence upon the voluntary action of its Eastern connections already pointed out, in our opinion, rendered any equal or profitable competition between them impossible. No real rivalry in the nature of things could have subsisted as long as the success of one was dependent upon the consent or favor of the other. Instead of the situation being competitive, the two roads really acted together and co-operated between themselves and with their connections in securing as much of the transcontinental traffic, each for the other, according to their respective facilities, as they could get, and participated in the total revenue on a basis of comparative service rendered. Their relations were like those of a limited partnership, rather than those of hostile competitorship.

[*113] But it is said the Pacific Railroad acts, supra, obligated the Union Pacific and Central Pacific (the predecessor in right of the Southern Pacific so far as the road from Ogden to San Francisco is concerned) to the establishment [**10] of through routes and maintenance of joint rates, and take these roads out of the operation of the rule announced in the case of Southern Pacific Company v. Interstate Com. Com., supra. But we do not so interpret them. Those acts required the two roads, the one from Ogden east to Omaha and Kansas City, and the other from Ogden west to San Francisco, or their predecessors, to be "operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation so far as the public and government are concerned, as one continuous line" (section 12, Act July 2, 1862, 12 Stat. 495), and also required them in such operation and use "to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others * * *" (section 15, Act July 2, 1864, 13 Stat. 362).

The act of 1862 not only provided for the continuous operation of the roads, but empowered them to consolidate (section 16); and so likewise did the act of 1864 (section 16). These acts were obviously intended to secure a permanent physical [**11] connection between the roads and to provide generally for equal accommodations to the public on the basis of independent carriers; but we discover in them no provisions or machinery by which the Southern Pacific, as successor to one of them, could have been compelled by the courts or otherwise to make agreements governing interchange of traffic or through rates, or fixing the division of such through rates between the two roads. Section 15 of the act of 1864 is not substantially different, so far as the matter under consideration is concerned, from section 3 of the interstate commerce act of 1887 (24 Stat. 380). They both forbid discrimination in rates between connecting lines. Section 3 has been held by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the Court of Appeals of this circuit not to invest the commission or the courts with power to compel carriers to make contracts or agreements for through billing of freight or for joint rates. On the contrary, it was held that such matters are left to the voluntary determination of the interested carriers. L.R. & Mem. R.R. Co. v. E. Tenn., etc., Co., 3 Interst. Com. R. 1; Little Rock & M.R. Co. v. St. Louis & S.W. Ry. Co., 63 Fed. 775, [***12] 11 C.C.A. 417. See, also, to the same effect, Oregon Short Line, etc., v. Northern Pacific R. Co. (C.C.) 51 Fed. 465, 474, and Chicago & N.W. Ry. Co. v. Osborne, 52 Fed. 912, 914, 3 C.C.A. 347.

The voluminous evidence of officers, agents, and shippers to the effect that active competition existed between the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific roads prior to 1901 must be considered in the light of the legal and physical relations of the roads to each other and of other related facts. Whether there was competition or not, in view of all these things, is a mixed question of law and fact, and not susceptible of determination by the preponderance of proof as an issue of fact only. Without doubt there was active competition, but [*114] it was chiefly in co-operation with initial lines, which had the routings of freight, and for the benefit of such initial lines and their connections to Omaha or Kansas City, as well as for the benefit of the Union Pacific Company itself. Even so far as it was for the benefit of the latter company, it operated necessarily for the benefit of the Southern Pacific to an extent of about eight-twentieths of the haul after the Union Pacific took it at [***13] Omaha or Kansas City. In this condition of things, the opinions of any number of witnesses as to whether the two were competing lines within the meaning of the law is of little aid, and the general statement of those witnesses that the two roads had separate soliciting agents throws little, if any, light upon the ultimate issue.

The immediate and actuating intent and purpose of the Union Pacific Company in acquiring the Huntington stock, and thereby the control of the operations of the Southern Pacific line, were, according to the proof, to secure a permanent working and reliable connection at Ogden over an existing road for its through traffic; a connection not dependent upon the grace of a dominant copartner, but one within its own control. We recognize the proposition that, if the necessary and direct result of the purchase of the Huntington stock was to destroy or substantially suppress free and natural competition, before then existing between the two companies, or if that purchase put it within the power of the Union Pacific Company to destroy or suppress such competition, the latter-named company would undoubtedly be held to have intended the natural and reasonable consequences [***14] of its act, and, notwithstanding the dominant purpose just mentioned, would have violated the anti-trust law. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 234, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 328, 332, 357, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679.

Our conclusion is that all the facts of this case, considered in their natural, reasonable, and practical aspect, and given their appropriate relative signification, do not make the Union Pacific a substantial competitor for transcontinental business with the Southern Pacific in or prior to the year 1901. We therefore pass to a consideration of some less important matters relied upon by the government to establish destruction of competition between those companies.

It is contended that it was destroyed or suppressed in transcontinental business between the Atlantic seaboard and Middle states, on the one hand, and Portland and Willamette Valley common points, on the other hand. The route of the Southern Pacific for this business was by its own line via New Orleans and San Francisco to Portland, and that of the Union Pacific was by its own line from Omaha and Kansas City to Ogden, [***15] together with its connections and subconnections eastward from Omaha and Kansas City, and its subsidiary lines, the Oregon Short Line and Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company running northwestwardly into Portland and the Valley. The geographical relation of these routes to each other, and the dependence of one of them, at least, upon voluntary arrangements with other lines, would seem to render natural and fair competition between them for the Portland trade impossible; but the [*115] slight volume of the traffic here involved affords a controlling and decisive consideration. For the year ending June 30, 1900, the tonnage of the Southern Pacific Company in this trade was only 0.10 per cent. of its total tonnage. For the same year the tonnage of the Union Pacific Company in this trade was only 0.46 per cent. of its total tonnage.

Again, it is contended that the control of the Southern Pacific Company acquired by the Union Pacific Company suppressed free competition between them for business between the Atlantic seaboard and Colorado and Utah common points. The route of the Southern Pacific available for this traffic was from New York to New Orleans or Galveston by sea; thence [***16] over its own line to Ft. Worth, Tex.; thence over its connection, the Colorado & Southern, to Denver; thence over another connection, the Denver & Rio Grande, into Utah.

The route of the Union Pacific Company available for it was its own line from Kansas City and Omaha to Denver and Ogden, with its numerous initial connections and subconnections, and also a line by sea from New York to Newport News and Savannah; thence by connections at those places with such railroads as would favor them through the interior of the country to the beginning of its own rails at Kansas City or Omaha.

Physically and practically speaking, in view of the circuity of the route of the Southern Pacific and of the necessary dependence of both companies upon volunteer connections, real rivalry between them for this traffic does not seem to have been possible; but here again the traffic itself was of little volume and comparatively unimportant. For the year ending January 30, 1900, the tonnage of the Southern Pacific in this business was only 0.19 per cent. of its total tonnage. For the same year the tonnage of the Union Pacific in this traffic was only 0.47 per cent. of its total tonnage.

A like contention [**17] is made concerning the traffic between San Francisco, on the one hand, and Portland and points in the Willamette Valley, on the other hand; but this traffic was also small. For the year ending June 30, 1901, the tonnage of the Southern Pacific in this traffic was only 0.36 per cent. of its total tonnage, and the tonnage of the Union Pacific Company in it for the same period was only 1.27 per cent. of its total tonnage.

A similar contention is made concerning the traffic from Portland and Willamette Valley common points, on the one hand, and Ogden and its common points, on the other. The route of the Southern Pacific Company for this business was by the so-called Shasta route from Portland to Sacramento, and thence via the old Central Pacific route to Ogden. This was a long and circuitous route, compared to that of the Union Pacific Company from Portland via Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company and Oregon Short Line to Ogden. Not only is this so, but the business was trifling. For the year ending June 30, 1901, the tonnage of the Southern Pacific in it was only 0.01 per cent. of its total tonnage, while that of the Union Pacific was only 0.35 per cent. of its total tonnage.

[**18] A like contention is made concerning traffic from San Francisco, on the one hand, and points in Montana, Idaho, Eastern Oregon, and [*116] Washington, on the other hand. Without commenting upon the uncompetitive character of those routes for this business, it suffices to call attention to the insignificance of the traffic itself. For the year ending June 30, 1900, the tonnage of the Southern Pacific Company in it was only 0.02 per cent. of its total tonnage, while that of the Union Pacific Company for the same time was only 0.23 per cent. of its total tonnage.

Claim is also made that the control which the Union Pacific Company acquired by the purchase of the Huntington stock suppressed free competition between them for the Oriental traffic. Many considerations arising out of the relations of the two roads to the transpacific steamship lines which carried the traffic from the coast have conducted to the conclusion reached; but bearing in mind that we are not considering this case in view of the present Oriental traffic, but in view of what it was 10 years ago, when the transaction complained of occurred, we find adequate reason for it in the small amount of this business also. [**19] For the year ending January 30, 1901, the tonnage of the Southern Pacific in handling it was only 0.20 per cent. of its total tonnage, while that of the Union Pacific both through San Francisco and Portland gateways was only 0.41 per cent. of its total tonnage.

The aggregate of all the business done by the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific Companies over all these routes for the years specified, which we believe fairly represent the general conditions prevailing at or before the Huntington stock was purchased, was for the Southern Pacific Company 0.88 per cent. of the entire tonnage of that system, and for the Union Pacific Company 3.10 per cent. of its aggregate tonnage. Tables in evidence also disclose that the total revenue derived from the traffic over these minor routes by the Southern Pacific Company for the year preceding the year of the Huntington purchase amounted to only 1.25 per cent. of the total revenue of that system.

Certainly the desire to appropriate the trifling business done by the Southern Pacific Company on these minor lines, or to suppress a competition in traffic which was in the aggregate of such small proportions, could not have been the inspiration [**20] of the vast outlay involved in the purchase of the Huntington stock. Neither was the suppression of competition in this infinitesimally small proportion of the business of both companies a substantial or natural consequence of that important transaction. It did not amount to a direct and substantial restraint of either interstate or international commerce. It was at best only contingently, incidentally, and infinitesimally affected by it.

This is not sufficient to bring it within the condemnation of the anti-trust law. United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, 19 Sup. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259; Anderson v. United States, 171 U.S. 604, 19 Sup. Ct. 50, 43 L. Ed. 300; Field v. Barber Asphalt Co., 194 U.S. 618, 24 Sup. Ct. 784, 48 L. Ed. 1142; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, supra; Cincinnati Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179, 26 Sup. Ct. 208, 50 L. Ed. 428; Phillips v. Iola Portland Cement Co., 61 C.C.A. 19, Fed. 593; Arkansas Brokerage Co. v. Dunn & Powell, 97 C.C.A. 454, 173 Fed. 899; United [*117] States v. Standard Oil Company (C.C.) 173 Fed. 177, and cases cited.

This concludes consideration of the effect of the transaction chiefly relied upon by the [**21] government in this case. But it is contended that the purchase by the Union Pacific of a controlling interest in the stock of the Northern Pacific Company was also violative of the anti-trust law. Without dwelling on the reason for the purchase of this stock, disclosed in the preceding statement of facts, it is sufficient to say that, if any controlling interest was thereby acquired, it was lost some time before this suit was instituted, and that none of that stock is now held by or for the Union Pacific Company. As there is no showing of any like ambitious project in this respect for the future, we fail to discover any opportunity or reason for the injunctive relief on this account.

The transaction of 1904, by which a syndicate of men interested in the Union Pacific Company purchased for their individual account $30,000,000 in face value of the stock of the Santa Fe Company, and the investment in 1906 of $10,000,000 by the Union Pacific in acquiring 5 per cent. of that stock are not claimed to have conferred any actual power of control upon the Union Pacific over operations of the Santa Fe Company. The proof does not disclose that any such control was acquired or attempted to [**22] be exercised. Even if the motive of the purchasers was to gain some inside information concerning the operations of the great competitor of the Union Pacific Company, they chose an entirely lawful way for doing it, and their acts afford no reason for judicial condemnation.

Much of the argument relating to the construction of the San Pedro route is addressed to the proposition that, because the San Pedro line was not completed at the time the Huntington stock was purchased, and because there was no competition then existing between the roads in question, there could have been no contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of it. The contention of the government in this particular, that a contract to strangle a threatened competition by preventing the construction of an immediately projected line of railway, which, if constructed, would naturally and substantially compete with an existing line for interstate traffic, would be in violation of the anti-trust law, may well be conceded. United States v. Patterson (C.C.) 59 Fed. 280; Interstate Com. Com. v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co. (C.C.) 123 Fed. 969; Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail S.S. Co., 92 C.C.A. 315, 166 Fed. 251; Pennsylvania [*23] R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 3 Sadler (Pa. Sup. Ct. Cases) 83, 91, 7 Atl. 374.

But this concession does not settle the question before us. The San Pedro line, as originally projected and as ultimately constructed, does not appear to have been naturally competitive with the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, or any of the subsidiary lines. It is practically a continuation of the Union Pacific or Oregon Short Line southwardly, and, generally speaking, its course is at right angles, rather than parallel with, either the Union Pacific or Southern Pacific line. If it, as an existing route, had been acquired by the Union Pacific, it would have served rather as a short cut from Los Angeles to [*118] Salt Lake City, to avoid the circuitous route between those points via San Francisco, than as a natural competitor for any of the business of that route. While it was calculated to deprive the Southern Pacific of a long haul on traffic destined between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City and beyond, it would be unfortunate indeed if that fact should have prevented its construction, especially when it was practically at right angles with the Southern line, and much shorter and much better adapted [**24] to serve the public. In these circumstances it, as projected and built, was not, in our opinion, naturally competitive with the Southern Pacific line, as alleged in the bill.

It is however, contended that in the adjustment of differences between the Union Pacific and its allied or subsidiary companies with the Clark interests, resulting in the construction of one line between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles, instead of two, as projected, there was a suppression of competition which would have existed between the two, if they had built separately. We, however, are unable to discover anything in the transaction except a laudable purpose to adjust differences and construct a line of railroad between the two points which would serve their joint interests as well as those of the public. The evidence discloses that it was not feasible to construct two lines of road over the only practicable route through the canyon in the mountains, known as "Meadow Valley Wash." This, with other reasons of a practical nature, fully justified the abandonment of the project of constructing two lines and the consolidation of them into one.

Some minor agreements fixing the relations between the new San [**25] Pedro line and the other lines composing the system of the Union Pacific, as well as the provisions for fixing through and local rates, were made; but there are so incidental to the main transaction, already found not to have violated the interstate commerce act, as to warrant no further consideration. If it be true, as already pointed out, that the San Pedro line was not naturally competitive with the Union Pacific or Southern Pacific lines, none of these incidental things would disturb legitimate competition within the purview of the antitrust law.

The evidence discloses certain transactions between the Southern Pacific Company, on the one hand, and the Phoenix & Eastern and the California & Northwestern Railroad Companies, on the other hand, which are claimed to have been in restraint of competition between them; but as they affect local transportation only, and are not complained of in the bill as substantive wrongs, and as neither of the two last-mentioned companies are made parties to this action, it is not perceived how any independent relief with respect to them can be granted. We therefore refrain from considering them, except in so far as they afford relevant evidence [**26] on issues joined in the case.

Having now found that the several contracts or transactions specifically complained of in this case did not offend against the antitrust law, it seems hardly necessary to discuss the claim, little debated by counsel, that they evidence a combination or conspiracy to do so. In determining whether a combination or conspiracy in violation of the first section of the anti-trust act, namely, to restrict competition and thereby restrain commerce, was entered into, the facts already [*119] found may properly be supplemented by reference to actual consequences and results. These often reflect the original meaning and purpose of preceding transactions. The proof shows that after 1901, as well as before, the rates for transcontinental traffic were the same over both the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific lines, and that there has since then been with respect to either of these lines no impairment of service, no deterioration of the physical properties, no discontinuance of efforts to satisfy the public, and no complaints of shippers of any inferior or inadequate service.

The large number of initial carriers striving for that traffic have continued their [**27] active solicitation for business over the line which assured them the longest haul or otherwise benefited them most, and although some agents of the two roads, which before 1901 were separate, are now joint, they have continued to exercise their influence to secure business for either road according to its availability, and always in opposition to other active competitors, like the Santa Fe and Denver & Rio Grande roads. A substantial majority of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company has been held by parties other than the Union Pacific Company; but we fail to find any complaint by such holders of any discrimination against their road or of any failure to properly promote its welfare. None of the minor points charged to have been deprived of competitive opportunities by the Huntington purchase are shown to have suffered as a result of that purchase. On the contrary, hundreds of millions of dollars have since 1901 been expended on these roads. Their physical condition has been vastly improved, and their efficiency for public service as well as for private profit has been greatly enhanced. The whole proof, taken together, we think, fails to disclose any conspiracy to restrain [**28] interstate or foreign commerce, in violation of the first section of the act.

The same consideration lead to the conclusion that no combination or conspiracy to monopolize or attempt to monopolize trade or commerce among the states or with foreign nations was entered into. Moreover, the fact that the Union Pacific Company did not secure or undertake to secure the control of the Santa Fe road, a thoroughly sufficient, well-equipped, and powerful rival for transcontinental business, or the Denver & Rio Grande road, a potential, and later an actual, powerful rival for the same business, affords additional and conclusive evidence of no such combination or conspiracy. The purchase by the Union Pacific Company, soon after acquiring the Huntington stock, of a majority of the capital stock of the Northern Pacific Company, tends to the opposite conclusion; but, in view of the main reason for its acquisition and its disposition by the Union Pacific Company, we are indisposed to give to that purchase alone any considerable significance.

The conclusions of fact already stated dispose of this case without the necessity of determining the question, much debated in brief and argument, whether [**29] securing control of the Southern Pacific Company by purchasing stock of individual owners could in any view of the case have contravened the anti-trust law. On the facts of this case, with all their reasonable and fair inferences, we conclude that the government has failed to substantiate the averments of its bill.

[*120] Mr. Justice VAN DEVANTER, while a Circuit Judge, participated in the hearing, deliberation, and conclusion in this case, and he now concurs in this opinion.

The bill must be dismissed, and a decree will be entered to that effect.

SANBORN, Circuit Judge, concurs.

Dissent by: HOOK

Dissent

---

HOOK, Circuit Judge (dissenting). Briefly stated, the decision of the court, in which I am unable to concur, is that the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific Railroads, universally regarded as parallel in a broad geographical and legal sense, for about 2,000 miles, were not competitors in 1901 for transcontinental or other traffic, and therefore their merger in that year was not contrary to the Sherman antitrust act. I agree with the court upon the minor features of the case, including, in a general way, that of the control of the San Pedro line by the Union Pacific Company.

[**30] The latter is much as if a railroad company, with a line from the west through Omaha or Kansas City to Chicago, should obtain control of a branch from Omaha or Kansas City to St. Louis. In the absence of a more direct competitive relation than appears here, the Sherman act should not be held to cover such tangential acquisitions.

But the chief complaint of the government is of an unlawful contract or combination in restraint of trade and commerce, by which the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific transportation systems are held under a single control, and competition between them is suppressed or destroyed. The combination was effected through the purchase by the Union Pacific of part of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific. Upon this two important questions arise. The first, which is one of law, is whether the purchase by one railroad company of corporate stock of another, less than the majority, but sufficient in amount according to the practical experience of men to enable the purchaser to dominate or control the policies and operations of the other, is a form of combination within the prohibitions of the Sherman act. The conclusion of the court being against the government [**31] on another ground, it was unnecessary to determine this question; but as I do not assent to the conclusion, and as the question lies at the threshold of the government's case, I should briefly express my view concerning it.

There is no substantial difference between the holding of the corporate stocks of two companies by a third, such as was condemned in the *Northern Securities Case*, 193 U.S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679, and the holding by one of those two of the stock of the other. The form is somewhat different, but the effect, which is the chief concern of the law, is the same. If prior competition disappears as a direct and natural result, trade and commerce are restrained. If it is unlawful in the one case, it must be so in the other. It would be idle to hold that, while two competing railroad companies cannot lawfully submit to a common control through a separate stockholding organization, they may do so by dispensing with that medium. That would be regarding shadows and letting the substance go. The [*121] language of the Sherman act in this particular is broad. It covers every contract and combination in restraint of interstate and foreign trade or commerce, [**32] whether in the form of trust or otherwise. The essential, effective character of the arrangement is to be regarded, rather than its casual vestiture; the substance, rather than the form. In *Harriman v. Northern Securities Co.*, 197 U.S. 244, 297, 25 Sup. Ct. 493, 49 L. Ed. 739, it was assumed that the act could be violated by the direct holding of stock of a competing corporation.

I grant it is a serious thing to disturb a great business transaction like that shown in the case at bar; but, given the power of Congress to legislate, and clear words to express what a judge conceives to have been its purpose, his duty is plain, whatever he may think of the wisdom of the law. Even if public regulation is believed to be a wiser solution of the important economic problem than enforced competition, with its necessary wastes and burdens, nevertheless his judgment of a law embodying the latter policy should proceed as with distinct approval of its selection. It is quite clear that, with the growth and development of governmental regulation of common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, there is decreasing reason for holding them subject to the Sherman act, and it may be that as [**33] regards rates of transportation the Interstate Commerce Commission could perform its duties with equal justice to the public and greater justice to the railroads if they were released. But certainly that is for Congress, not the courts. The judicial function is properly exercised when the Sherman act is construed and applied as though it were the only legislative remedy on the statute books.

The other question in the case is decided by the court against the government. It is whether the two great transportation systems, the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific, were in a substantial sense competitors in interstate and foreign commerce. This question involves the relative location of their lines on land and sea, and not only the parts they actually performed, but also those they were naturally capable of performing, in the movement of traffic. Albeit in part within the domain of judicial knowledge, this seems to me to be a pure question of fact. Some hundreds of witnesses, practical railroad men and shippers of wide experience, testified upon it, and a great mass of evidence was taken, showing almost without dispute that, using the term "competition" as business men understand [**34] and use it, there was active, vigorous, and substantial competition between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific before the former obtained control of the latter. But the court holds the question of competition to be one of mixed law and fact, not determinable by the evidence alone, and as such it is answered against the government.

Roughly stated, the situation was this: In 1901, when the stock purchase was made, the Union Pacific had lines of railroad from the Missouri river, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Kansas City, Mo., to Cheyenne, Wyo.; thence a line through Ogden, Utah, to Portland, Or., lines of steamers from Portland to San Francisco, Cal., and from San Francisco and Portland to Oriental ports; and certain rights under an act of Congress (13 Stat. 356) with respect to the Central Pacific Railroad, which was controlled by the Southern Pacific, from [*122] Ogden to San Francisco. At the Missouri river the Union Pacific had many connections with the principal cities of the country and the Atlantic seaboard by the roads of other companies directly interested in routing west-bound traffic by its line as against the Sunset Route, so-called, of the Southern Pacific. [**35] On the other hand, the Southern Pacific had a steamship line from New York to New Orleans, La., thence a railroad to Southern California and up through San Francisco to Portland, the above-mentioned railroad from Ogden to San Francisco, a steamship line from San Francisco to the Orient, and a steamship line from San Francisco to Panama, being the Pacific link of the Panama rail and water route from New York to San Francisco. The Southern Pacific also had at New Orleans connections similar to those of the Union Pacific by the roads of other companies directly interested in routing west-bound traffic by its line as against that of the Union Pacific. The most important competition, so termed by railroad men and shippers, between the two companies, was for transcontinental business. There was also active competition at intermediate points, where considerable traffic originated. The two companies were distinct in control, management, and operation, with separate officers, directors, traffic and operating officials, commercial agencies, and soliciting agents. Since the combination common officers and directors of traffic and operation were elected or appointed, competitive commercial [**36] agencies were consolidated or abolished, the activities of the two systems have been in close harmony, not in rivalry, and competition has disappeared.

Reduced to the simplest terms the conclusion of the court that the two companies were not competitors and the Sherman act was not violated is based on these two grounds: (1) Trade and commerce were not restrained, because before the combination the competitive interstate and foreign traffic of the two railroad companies was not a substantial percentage of their total traffic, including in such total the traffic entirely within the several states, over which Congress had no control. (2) Trade and commerce were not restrained because before the combination one of the lines of railroad, the Union Pacific, was an intermediate one in a through route, and depended for competitive traffic upon the business interests of connecting carriers, and therefore could not by itself alone, unaided by the concurrence of its natural allies, make a joint through rate over the entire route. In other words, each party to a contract or combination between railroad companies, which the government assails as being contrary to the Sherman act, must have [**37] owned or controlled an entire through route over which competitive traffic moved.

That it may have performed an essential part, or have been a necessary factor, in the transportation, is insufficient. That connecting carriers may have voluntarily joined it in making through rates for the traffic is immaterial.

With the greatest deference to my Brothers, I am so profoundly impressed with the conviction that these conditions are without substantial relevance to the question before us that I am constrained to dissent from the opinion of the court. Moreover, their introduction so greatly narrows the act of Congress, which, however it may be [*123] regarded, is the law of the land, that very little is left of it when applied to railroads. Under one or both of those tests, the Union Pacific could probably have lawfully purchased control of all the great parallel railroad systems in the United States. It could doubtless have been shown in most instances that the interstate and foreign traffic of each, for which it competed with the Union Pacific or with any of the others, was but a small percentage of its total traffic of all kinds, and we know that all of them depended upon [**38] connecting lines at least for transcontinental and much other traffic, and could not, unaided, have made joint through rates with respect to it. Nor is it clear that what could have been done in 1901 might not as well be done to-day. It is suggested that by the passage of the Hepburn act (June 29, 1906) Congress empowered the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe through routes and joint rates where connecting carriers have refused, and therefore a different rule respecting competition has since prevailed. I am wholly unable to perceive the material pertinence of that act, much less its controlling effect. The matter of compulsory joint rates is purely adventitious, except as business may be facilitated over a combined route. A joint through rate merely implies a single charge, less than the aggregate of the locals, for a continuity of transportation over two or more connecting lines. Carriers always had the power to make such rates, and commonly did so with allies of their own selection; but whether the traffic movement was under joint rates or combinations of local rates does not seem to me to determine the existence or nonexistence of competition. If rival lines or routes [**39] contended for the traffic, and it moved, by single line or by combination of connecting lines, there was competition. If not, if must be that until 1906, when the Hepburn act was passed, the Southern Pacific, with its through water and rail route from New York to San Francisco, never had a competitor for transcontinental traffic in any of the great railroad systems in the United States or in all combined.

The traffic for which the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific competed in 1901, and which one or the other secured, was of enormous volume when considered by itself. It ran into millions of dollars, and with the natural development of the country and the growth of commerce, reasonably to have been foreseen, it has since then greatly increased. The competition was direct, not incidental, and the business for which they strove was appreciable or substantial, not insignificant. But tables of figures are given by defendants from which it appears that the interstate and foreign traffic between competitive points secured by each was but a small percentage of the tonnage of its entire system, and it is therefore argued that the competition to which the act of Congress applies was relatively [**40] so small there could have been no restraint or suppression in a substantial sense, and hence no intent to restrain or suppress it. The comparisons being with the total tonnage of the railroads, obviously an element is included which is wholly beyond the power of Congress, namely, the traffic local to the states. The logical conclusion from this view must be that the Sherman act is not violated whenever the trade or commerce within its operation, affected by the contract or combination, however great in [*124] volume, is overshadowed by that exclusively within the jurisdiction of the states. In other words, though substantial competition in interstate or foreign commerce has been actually suppressed, it must be held there was no intention to suppress it. The magnitude of the traffic shown by the proofs was too great, and the competition for it too earnest and active, to dismiss it as merely incidental to the principal business of the companies, and as not furnishing a motive for the merger or combination. A contention somewhat similar was made by defendants in the Northern Securities Case. It was there argued (193 U.S. 261, 262, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679) that the entire [**41] interstate commerce of the two railroads, the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific, the rates on which could be controlled by them without other competition or consent of connecting lines, was less than 3 per cent. of their total interstate commerce, and that the restraint could not in any event affect more than that per cent. of their commerce of that character. The argument, however, was without avail.

In a broad and substantial sense, in the sense in which the terms are used in constitutions and statutes and in railroad and business circles, the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific lines were parallel and competing. That they were so regarded by practical men having to do with transportation in its various phases is shown, I think, by an overwhelming mass of evidence. But, had no witness testified regarding it, we should come to the same conclusion. There are occasions when courts in the exercise of their judicial functions are entitled to look out into the world of affairs to observe whether there is not a common knowledge of the subject before them, so universal and pervading as not to admit of testimonial controversy. That is termed "Judicial notice," and it proceeds [**42] upon the assumption that a judge should not be blind to what all others see and understand. It embraces the great currents of trade and commerce in his country -- the general movements of products and manufactures -- as completely as it does the important features of its physical geography, the location of the cities, the ports, the navigable waters, and the lines of railroad.

The question whether a combination of two transportation lines is contrary to the Sherman act is not always to be reduced to a close consideration of the number of tons of competitive freight they carried within a given period, much less the precise relation of the competitive tonnage to their total business of all kinds. Were they, at the time of the combination, in a substantial degree competitive factors in interstate and foreign commerce? Were they so laid upon land and sea as inherently to possess a substantial competitive capacity for the movement of such traffic? It is not merely the extent to which that capacity was utilized yesterday, but the extent to which the transportation facilities were naturally capable of being utilized; and reasonable, not speculative, regard should be had for the developments [**43] of to-morrow. Were it otherwise, Congress in the making of laws would be denied that ordinary foresight which men engaged in business commonly possess and practice. Competition, as the antithesis of monopoly, is the influence which those in the same line of business have on each other, and that influence may as well be manifested in [*125] an existing capacity and preparedness as in the degree of active exercise. A moment's reflection will show this is old doctrine in the judicial construction and application of laws against monopolies and restraint of trade. A railroad company may have great, if not controlling, influence on competition, regardless of the amount of the traffic it actually carries at the time. With a line of railroad scarcely less permanent than a navigable waterway, it stands equipped and ready to do the business when conditions arise, and the duty to do it comes from the very character of its corporate being and the source of its powers and franchises. It may at once be both a curb and a spur to other lines -- a curb as regards rates, and a spur as regards quality of service, which are the two great points at which transportation touches the public interest. [**44] The influence of the Mississippi river and its navigable tributaries upon the trade and commerce of St. Louis is well known, yet of the enormous freight tonnage into and out of that city, largely interstate, scarcely one-half of 1 per cent. moves by water. To be more exact, of the total rail and river traffic in 1910, nearly 52,000,000 tons, but thirty-six hundredths of 1 per cent., was transported by water; in 1909, but sixty-seven hundredths of 1 per cent. of that year's tonnage. But who would contend that if the rivers were the subject of private ownership, instead of being common highways for the use of all, their control by a railroad company could not restrain trade or commerce because, as measured by relative percentages, the competition appeared to be so slight?

When the argument was made at the hearing that, because the Union Pacific was an intermediate, not a through line, it was not a competitor for traffic moving over it and its connections for which it could not have made a joint through rate, counsel admitted that the rule contended for would have made it lawful under the Sherman act for all intermediate lines in transcontinental transportation, such as the Chicago, [**45] Rock Island & Pacific from Chicago to El Paso, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe from Chicago to Mojave (before it gained entrance to San Francisco), the Missouri, Kansas & Texas from St. Louis and Kansas City to Texas points, the St. Louis & San Francisco from St. Louis and Kansas City to the Southwest, the Missouri Pacific with the Denver & Rio Grande from St. Louis to Ogden, and the Union Pacific to have combined and agreed among themselves, as was done in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association Case, 166 U.S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, if they confined their combination to transcontinental traffic; in other words that those intermediate railroads could not be competitors for the traffic, and a confederation with respect thereto could not be unlawful. It seems to me that a statement of the contention shows its unsoundness. Anything that affects the rate over a substantial part of a transportation route is calculated to affect the charge as an entirety; and so of the other features of railroad competition. The competition of the all-water route by the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans with the all-rail transcontinental routes in the United States is so fully recognized that [**46] it is safe to say almost every car load rate to the Pacific coast from the territory between the Missouri river and the Atlantic seaboard exhibits a recognition of its influence. And yet it is contended that the [*126] Union Pacific in the direct line of traffic movement, with 1,000 miles of railroad from the Missouri river to Ogden, and nearly 900 miles thence to Portland, with its steamship lines, is not a competitor for transcontinental traffic.

The practical aspect of the question is shown by the cases in which railroad companies have asserted the existence of competition from rival lines or routes of transportation as evidencing conditions justifying discriminations and preferences under the interstate commerce act -- that the rates objected to as discriminative were controlled by competition, and if they abandoned the rates they would lose the business. An instance of this appears in Texas & Pacific Railway v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U.S. 197, 16 Sup. Ct. 666, 40 L. Ed. 940. The Texas & Pacific Railroad from New Orleans to El Paso, Tex., and the Southern Pacific Railroad thence to San Francisco, formed a through route over which traffic, both foreign \*\*47 and domestic, moved. The Texas & Pacific Company successfully defended its right to charge and receive more for its proportion of the through rate on traffic originating in New Orleans than it charged and received on import traffic originating in London and Liverpool and billed through New Orleans over the same route to San Francisco, and it did so on the ground asserted that the rate from the English cities to San Francisco was determined by competition with the following routes: By vessel around the Horn; by vessel and by rail across the Isthmus of Panama; and (162 U.S. 216, 16 Sup. Ct. 674, 40 L. Ed. 946) by vessel and by rail across Canada. Were all those transportation agencies subject to the laws of the United States, could it with reason be urged that a contract or combination between them, suppressing a competition which actually existed, would not contravene the Sherman act, because all but one of them were composed of connecting links severally owned or controlled? If that which men engaged in transportation recognize as substantial competition in shaping their policies and their conduct is not so regarded in the courts, the statute will not have the operation intended \*\*48 by its enactment. Laws are generally framed to apply to the everyday affairs of men, who are not given to the study of nice differences and distinctions, and that should always be borne in mind in determining their meaning.

But it is said there was no competition, because the Union Pacific depended upon the Southern Pacific line from Ogden to San Francisco. It is true that much of the transcontinental traffic of the Union Pacific went that way; but it is not unusual for railroad systems to connect at points and interchange business, though they are active competitors in other respects. In fact, a large proportion of them are so related. Competition, within the laws which seek to preserve it, does not imply absolute nonintercourse, as between hostile armies, which exchange no prisoners and give no quarter. Moreover, the use of the Ogden line was neither a necessity to the Union Pacific nor a pure favor or concession by the Southern Pacific. Aside from the mutual benefits from the interchange of traffic, the former had its own line from Ogden, by way of Portland, which, though not as desirable, was more than an important strategic advantage necessary to be reckoned with. But \*\*49 were all this otherwise, the undeniable fact remains, \*127 after stripping the case of all debatable considerations, that the Union Pacific secured this west-bound traffic by active competition, and had transported it as competitive for 1,000 miles before it reached Ogden.

I think that upon the main feature of the case the government is entitled to a decree.

Larabee Flour Mills Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co.

Supreme Court of Kansas

July, 1911, Decided ; July 7, 1911, Filed

No. 15,167.

Reporter

85 Kan. 214 *; 116 P. 901 **; 1911 Kan. LEXIS 47 ***

THE LARABEE FLOUR MILLS COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. THE MISSOURI PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Defendant.

Prior History: [***1] Original proceeding in mandamus. Opinion filed July 7, 1911. Judgment for the plaintiff for damages.

Core Terms

---

mill company, damages, corn, mandamus, allowance, expenses, profits, alternative writ, supersedeas, attorney's fees, writ of error, peremptory, witnesses, commerce, furnish, flour

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

HN1[] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

It is not always easy to draw the line between profits that are a legitimate element of compensation and those that are too remote, contingent or uncertain. The old idea that profits were never recoverable was long since exploded; and now, even in actions on contract, it is said that they may be recovered when proximate and certain. The general rule is that the party injured by a breach of contract is entitled to recover all his damages, including gains prevented as well as losses sustained, provided they are certain and such as might naturally be expected to follow the breach. It is only uncertain and contingent profits, therefore, which the law excludes.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN2[] Remedies, Writs

See Civ. Code, § 723 (Kansas).

85 Kan. 214, *214 P. 901, **901 911 Kan. LEXIS 47, ***1

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Constitutional Sources

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Statutory Sources

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Mandamus

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction on Certiorari > Considerations Governing Review > State Court Decisions

HN3 Jurisdictional Sources, Constitutional Sources

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Kansas in mandamus is the creation of the constitution and the statutes of the state of Kansas. The Supreme Court of Kansas is the sole judge of what that constitution and those statutes provide. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Kansas in mandamus over persons within its jurisdiction can not be affected by act of congress. The federal judiciary act does not and was not intended to affect the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Kansas. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Kansas in mandamus attaches upon the issuance of the alternative writ, and the subject matter of the proceeding being the awarding a peremptory mandamus, that jurisdiction continues unabated, not only until the writ is awarded, but also until the writ is issued and obedience to it enforced. The alternative writ is a command of the performance of specified and prescribed duties; and return to the writ is a refusal to perform the duties prescribed; the judgment awarding a peremptory mandamus is a conclusive adjudication that such refusal was wrongful, and the act of the court compelling compliance with the command of the alternative writ.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Stays of Judgments > Appellate Stays > Supersedeas Bonds

Civil Procedure > ... > Entry of Judgments > Stays of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Mandamus

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction on Certiorari > Considerations Governing Review > State Court Decisions

HN4 Judgments, Entry of Judgments

The damages comprehended by Kansas statutes governing writs of mandamus are the injuries sustained as the natural and probable consequences of the wrongful refusal to comply and the expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in compelling compliance with the command of the alternative writ. The allowance of a writ of error does not operate to remove a mandamus suit from the supreme court of the state into the supreme court of the United States; its only effect is to bring up the record for purposes of review. The allowance of a writ of error does not operate as a supersedeas; the taking the supersedeas bond brings about the supersedeas. The taking the bond, and the supersedeas itself, in so far as it can be conceived of as a substantial act, is the action of the state court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN5 Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

The opinions of expert witnesses in cases regarding attorney's fees are never conclusive upon the court and are not conclusive upon a commissioner.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN6 Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

The service performed, the character and importance of the litigation and the result obtained thereby must be considered by the court, and furnish a sufficient basis upon which to determine what are fair and reasonable amounts to be allowed as compensation for attorneys.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Damages

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Duty to Provide Service

HN7 Regulated Industries, Transportation

A plaintiff is entitled to recover whatever damages it has sustained by the wrongful suspension of the transfer service unless the service sought to be enforced was a necessary part of the purposes of some unlawful trust or combination, and unless some violation of the trust law entered into was a part of the cause of action in the original proceeding.

Syllabus

---

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT.

DAMAGES--Jurisdiction--Refusal to Transfer Cars--Mandamus--Supersedeas Bond--Measure of Damages--Loss of Profits--Attorneys' Fees--Antitrust Law as a Defense. In original proceedings in mandamus to compel a railway company to furnish transfer services to a shipper judgment was given for the plaintiff and the peremptory writ allowed. Thereupon the defendant sued out a writ of error to the supreme court of the United States, where the judgment was affirmed. The plaintiff then filed in this court a claim for damages. Held,

(1) The judiciary act (4 Fed. Stat. Anno., pp. 195-734) was not intended to affect and does not affect the jurisdiction of this court.

(2) The jurisdiction of this court in mandamus attaches upon the issuance of the alternative writ, and continues unabated, not only until the peremptory writ issues but until obedience thereto is enforced.

(3) The allowance of the writ of error did not operate to remove the suit from the supreme court of the state to the supreme court of the United States but merely operated to bring [***2] up the record for review.

(4) The allowance of the writ of error did not supersede the judgment; the taking of the bond brought about the supersedeas.

(5) The damages in mandamus proceedings comprehended by section 723 of the code are the injuries sustained as the natural and probable consequences of the wrongful refusal to comply and the expense reasonably and necessarily incurred in compelling compliance with the alternative writ, including reasonable attorneys' fees in this court and in the supreme court of the United States.

(6) Damages incurred prior to the issuance of the alternative writ cannot be recovered.

(7) Damages for loss of profits may be recovered where the amount of such loss and the fact that it resulted by defendant's refusal to comply with the alternative writ can be determined by the court with reasonable certainty.

(8) In such an action where the defendant claims in mitigation of damages that plaintiff might and should have compelled it to furnish cars by serving a written demand and making the cash deposit provided by the statute, the burden rested upon the defendant to show that it stood ready to furnish the service upon such demand.

(9) [***3] In view of the undisputed character and importance of the litigation, the services performed and the results obtained, the amounts allowed by the commissioner as attorneys' fees for plaintiff's attorneys are approved.

(10) The defendant claimed that plaintiff was not entitled to recover any damages because during the time the damages arose plaintiff was a member of an organization in violation of the antitrust laws. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover whatever damages it sustained by the wrongful suspension of the transfer service unless the service sought to be enforced by the mandamus was a necessary part of the purposes of such unlawful trust or combination.

Counsel: Joseph G. Waters, John C. Waters, Charles Blood Smith, and John F. Switzer, for the plaintiff.

B. P. Waggener, for the defendant.

Judges: PORTER, J.

Opinion by: PORTER

Opinion

---

[*216] [**902] The opinion of the court was delivered by

PORTER, J.: In this case judgment awarding a peremptory mandamus was rendered December 8, 1906, and the defendant railway company was ordered to resume the transfer service for the plaintiff. (Larabee v. Railway Co., 74 Kan. 808.) Thereafter defendant sued out a [***4] writ of error to the supreme court of the United States, where the judgment was affirmed. (Missouri Pacific Ry. v. Larabee Mills, 211 U.S. 612, 53 L. Ed. 352, 29 S. Ct. 214.) After the affirmance of the judgment by that court the plaintiff filed here a claim for damages arising out of the defendant's refusal to furnish transfer service covering the period from the suspension of such service, August 29, 1906, until it was resumed under the peremptory writ. The Hon. H. C. Sluss was appointed commissioner to take the testimony and report his findings of fact and conclusions of law. The report has been made, and a number of exceptions have been filed thereto by the plaintiff and by the defendant.

The plaintiff's principal objection arises over the disallowance of a claim for the loss of profits covering a period of 117 days, at $ 100 per day, and aggregating $ 11,700. The basis of this claim is the alleged inability of the mill company to grind corn and market corn products.

The commissioner's findings and his reasons for disallowing the claim are stated as follows:

"I find from the evidence that the mill company's mill is equipped for grinding corn and the production of corn products, [***5] and has a maximum capacity of 100,000 pounds of corn per day; that the mill company ground but little corn during the period of the suspension of the transfer service. There is no evidence of the price of corn or of corn products during that period, or of the cost of manufacture; nor evidence of the work and profits of other mills of similar character and similarly located as the mill company's; the only evidence being the estimate of witnesses based on the maximum capacity of the mill, and the fact that it was an unusually [*217] good corn year, and the fact that the mill company had made money in handling corn through their elevator located on the Santa Fe during the same period, and the belief of the witness that the mill company could have ground a large amount of corn, and that the [in] view of the conditions it would have yielded a profit of ten cents per hundred pounds. I conclude that the evidence is too indefinite and uncertain, based too largely upon estimate, opinion and assumption to justify a finding that there was a loss of profit by reason of inability to grind corn, or if there was a loss, how much it amounted to; and I find the claim not proven."

These conclusions [***6] are in harmony with settled rules respecting damages for loss of profits, and meet with our approval. It is true, as said by Judge Brewer in the opinion in Hoge v. Norton, 22 Kan. 374, cited by the plaintiff:

HN1[] "It is not always easy to draw the line between profits that are a legitimate element of compensation and those that are too remote, contingent or uncertain. The old idea that profits were never recoverable was long since exploded; and now, even in actions on contract, it is said that they may be recovered when proximate and certain. 'The general rule is that the party injured by a breach of contract is entitled to recover all his damages, including gains prevented as well as losses sustained, provided they are certain and such as might naturally be expected to follow the breach. It is only uncertain and contingent profits, therefore, which the law excludes.' (Griffin v. Colver, 16 N.Y. 489.)" (p. 379.)

The difficulty here is, that from the evidence presented the commissioner was not able, nor are we able, to determine with reasonable certainty that any loss of profits was occasioned by reason of plaintiff's inability to grind corn, or the amount of such loss, if any.

[***7] The commissioner rightly refused to allow any damages to the mill company for losses which it claimed to have sustained by the suspension of transfer service prior to the issuance of the alternative writ, holding that up to that time it was optional with the plaintiff to avail itself of mandamus or to pursue its remedy in [*218] an ordinary action for damages, and that the only power of this court to award damages is by virtue of its jurisdiction in the mandamus proceeding, and that such jurisdiction had its inception with the alternative writ. The provision of [**903] the code authorizing the allowance of damages in mandamus proceedings is:

HN2[] "If judgment be given for the plaintiff, he shall recover the damages which he shall have sustained, to be ascertained by the court or jury, or by referees, as in a civil action, and costs." (Civ. Code, § 723.)

( McClure v. Scates, 64 Kan. 282, 67 P. 856.)

Objection is made by the defendant to the allowance of certain claims for wages of men and teams in hauling flour, grain and mill stuffs to the Santa Fe tracks, and the contention is made that it was the duty of the plaintiff to mitigate its damages by all reasonable means within [***8] its reach, and that it was within its power to have compelled the defendant railway company to furnish all the cars needed to reach common points by serving a written demand and making the cash deposit provided by the statute. The commissioner held that the burden of proof was upon the defendant to show that to the knowledge of the mill company the defendant was prepared to furnish and ready and willing to furnish to the mill company promptly, on reasonable request, such cars as were needed to enable it to deliver its product to common points as promptly and satisfactorily as could be done by shipment over the Santa Fe in the manner the particular shipments were made, and that there was a failure of proof on the part of defendant to establish this contention. Upon the statement of the facts, the conclusions of the commissioner appear to be sound, and to require no elucidation or comment. The defendant objects to the allowance of this claim, aggregating $ 2386.86, on the further ground that the only evidence in support of it was incompetent. We have examined the evidence of the witness, Larabee, and agree with the [*219] commissioner's conclusion that it was not secondary or hearsay, [***9] that it was competent, and that the objections to its admission were properly overruled.

One of the main controversies is over the allowance of attorneys' fees for plaintiff's attorneys. The ninth claim, for the sum of $ 2500 for services of Waters & Waters in bringing and prosecuting the mandamus proceeding, was allowed, the commissioner finding that mandamus was a proper and necessary proceeding to be instituted by the mill company, that Waters & Waters were employed for that purpose, that they instituted and successfully conducted the same, and that their services were reasonably worth the amount claimed. It is sufficient to say that we approve the finding and the allowance of the claim.

The tenth, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth claims are for the professional services and expenses of attorneys employed by the mill company to represent it in the supreme court of the United States. The contentions of the defendant respecting these claims are so clearly stated and so fully met and answered by the commissioner that we quote from his report, as follows:

"Upon these claims I find, that, following the judgment of this court awarding the peremptory mandamus, the Pacific [***10] company caused a writ of error to be issued December 24, 1906, to the supreme court of the United States from said judgment, and on the same day filed a supersedeas bond in this court, which bond was approved by the court, and thereupon the Pacific company filed its petition in error in the supreme court of the United States, together with its transcript of the record and of the cause. The Pacific company presented the following assignments of error:

"That the supreme court of Kansas erred:

"(1) In deciding that the switching service required was not in any part interstate commerce.

"(2) In deciding that the subject matter of the suit was not governed by the acts of congress regulating commerce.

"(3) In deciding that the Pacific company was under [*220] obligation to perform the transfer service required of loaded cars destined to points without the state of Kansas.

"(5) In deciding that it had jurisdiction to compel the Pacific company to render the transfer service required in the carriage of property subjects of interstate commerce destined to points without the state of Kansas.

"(6) In assuming jurisdiction of the suit in so far as it involved the carriage of property [***11] the subject of interstate commerce.

"(7) In deciding that chapter 345, Laws of 1905, of Kansas, was not invalid in so far as it attempted to compel the transfer or carriage of property subject to interstate commerce destined to points without the state of Kansas."

The commissioner finds that these assignments of error and the propositions involved therein "were supported by a masterly and exhaustive analysis of the provisions of the constitution and the statutes and decisions" bearing upon the subject in the briefs of the defendant's counsel. The report then proceeds as follows:

"It was reasonably necessary for the mill company to employ counsel to represent it in the supreme court of the United States of professional standing, learning and experience to adequately combat the contentions and answer and arguments of counsel for the Pacific company. For this purpose the mill company employed, in addition to Waters & Waters, W. H. Rossington, Charles Blood Smith and John F. Switzer, who were well equipped and qualified to adequately present the case of the mill company to the supreme court of the United States. The compensation and expenses of these gentlemen under that employment [***12] constitute the ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth claims of damages filed by the mill company."

The contentions of the defendant are that these claims cover expenses incurred in [**904] the supreme court of the United States and not in this court, that the judiciary act of the United States (4 Fed. Stat. Anno., [*221] pp. 195-734) deprives this court of all power to allow in this proceeding any damages or expense incurred as a result of the proceeding in error, that the supersedeas bond taken at the time the writ of error was allowed was conditioned that the plaintiff in error should answer all damages, and that the only remedy of the mill company was to apply to the supreme court of the United States for the allowance of its claim for damages, and that upon the affirmance of the judgment in this case that court did allow to the mill company the sum of $ 20 as and for its counsel fees in that court.

Again, the conclusions of the learned commissioner are so clearly and forcibly stated that we adopt them as a part of our opinion. His language is:

"Upon this objection I conclude:

"(1) That the HN3[↑] jurisdiction of this court in mandamus is the [***13] creation of the constitution and the statutes of the state of Kansas.

"(2) That this court is the sole judge of what that constitution and those statutes provide.

"(3) That the jurisdiction of this court in mandamus over persons within its jurisdiction can not be affected by act of congress.

"(4) That the judiciary act does not and was not intended to affect the jurisdiction of this court.

"(5) That the jurisdiction of this court in mandamus attaches upon the issuance of the alternative writ, and the subject matter of the proceeding being the awarding a peremptory mandamus, that jurisdiction continues unabated, not only until the writ is awarded, but also until the writ is issued and obedience to it enforced.

"(6) That the alternative writ is a command of the performance of specified and prescribed duties; and return to the writ is a refusal to perform the duties prescribed; the judgment awarding a peremptory mandamus is a conclusive adjudication that such refusal was wrongful, and the act of the court compelling compliance with the command of the alternative writ.

"(7) That HN4[↑] the damages comprehended by the Kansas statutes are the injuries sustained as the natural and [*222] [***14] probable consequences of the wrongful refusal to comply and the expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in compelling compliance with the command of the alternative writ.

"(8) That the allowance of the writ of error did not operate to remove the suit from the supreme court of the state into the supreme court of the United States; its only effect was to bring up the record for purposes of review.

"(9) The allowance of the writ of error did not operate as a supersedeas; the taking the supersedeas bond brought about the supersedeas. The taking the bond, and the supersedeas itself, in so far as it can be conceived of as a substantial act, was the action of the supreme court of Kansas.

"I conclude that the objection should be disallowed, and a claim for the reasonable compensation of the attorneys mentioned for their services in the case in the supreme court of the United States, and their reasonable and necessary expenses, should be allowed as part of the damages sustained by the mill company."

The commissioner also finds that no agreement has ever been made between the mill company and any of its attorneys as to the amount of their compensation, and that the attorneys will claim [***15] and accept in full discharge of plaintiff's liability to them whatever amount the court shall determine to be reasonable and allowed as part of the plaintiff's damages. After reciting at some length the character of the service performed by the plaintiff's attorneys in the preparation of their briefs and arguments in answer to the defendant's contentions in the controversy the commissioner concludes from all the evidence that a reasonable allowance for the services of Waters & Waters in the supreme court of the United States is the sum of $ 5000, and a like sum was allowed for the services of W. H. Rossington and Charles Blood Smith. The attorneys were also allowed their expenses in attending court. To John F. Switzer was allowed $ 500 for services in the preparation of briefs.

[*223] A number of attorneys well known to the court were called as witnesses by both parties and gave their opinions as to what were reasonable attorneys' fees for the services in question. As usual in such cases there was a wide divergence of opinion expressed. The commissioner found that these opinions were given in answer to two sets of hypothetical questions, propounded by the plaintiff and defendant [***16] respectively, and without opportunity on the part of the witnesses to give the question of what was really involved in the case a thorough and careful study; and he concludes that none of the witnesses had given the elements of the case such study and consideration as would justify the court in adopting the opinions of any of them as a basis for its judgment. The commissioner, calling to his aid his own general knowledge and professional experience, and considering all the circumstances in evidence, "the character and the importance of the litigation, the labor and time necessarily involved therein and the result of the same" ( Noftzger v. Moffett, 63 Kan. 354, 359, 65 P. 670), proceeded to find the several amounts which he believed to be reasonable compensation for the services rendered. This he was warranted in doing. HN5↑ The opinions of expert witnesses in such cases are never conclusive upon the court and were not conclusive upon the commissioner. ( Noftzger v. Moffett, supra; Bentley v. Brown, 37 Kan. 14, \*905* 14 P. 43.) HN6↑ The service performed, the character and importance of the litigation and the result obtained thereby are all conceded; and these elements, as held [***17] in Noftzger v. Moffett, supra, must be considered by the court, and furnish a sufficient basis upon which to determine what are fair and reasonable amounts to be allowed as compensation for the attorneys. In view of these considerations we are not inclined to disturb the findings of the commissioner or to regard the allowances as excessive or unreasonable.

[*224] The claims allowed by the commissioner and approved by the court are as follows:

"First claim.--For expense of hauling flour, grain and mill stuffs from mill to Santa Fe tracks	$ 2,386 85
"Second and third claims.--Wages of men unloading flour transferred by teams	1,381 25
"Fourth claim.--Loss resulting from closing down of mill thirteen and one-half days	1,890 00
"Ninth claim.--Waters & Waters, attorneys' fees in this court	2,500 00
"Tenth, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth claims.--Attorneys' fees and expenses in supreme court of the United States	11,480 00
"Seventeenth claim.--Larabee's expenses to Topeka	186 00
"Eighteenth claim.--Expenses and per diem of plaintiff and counsel at St. Louis	160 00
"Twenty-first claim.--F. D. Larabee, attendance on commissioner	30 00
	$ 20,014 10

[***18] One further question remains to be considered. The defendant raised the point before the commissioner that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover any damages in this proceeding for the reason that the mill company "during the period in which the damages claimed arose, was a member of the Southern Kansas Millers' Commercial Club; that this club was an association of millers, and the object and purpose of it was to control the price of wheat and flour, and prevent competition in the purchase of wheat and in the sale of flour, and included in its membership and allied associations substantially all the persons engaged in the milling business throughout Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas; and was an organization in violation of the antitrust laws of Kansas."

A large amount of evidence was taken which tended strongly to prove this charge, although it was not sufficient to satisfy the commissioner that it had been established. It becomes unnecessary for us to weigh the evidence because of a further finding of the commissioner, which appears to be supported by the evidence, that the performance of the switching service, which [*225] was the subject matter of this action, was no part of the [***19] purpose of the organization of the Southern Kansas Millers' Commercial Club, and in no sense a part of or necessary to the carrying out of any of the purposes for which the club was organized. Under the authority of Barton v. Mulvane, 59 Kan. 313, 317, 52 P. 883, HN7 [↑] the plaintiff is entitled to recover whatever damages it has sustained by the wrongful suspension of the transfer service unless the service sought to be enforced was a necessary part of the purposes of some unlawful trust or combination, and unless some violation of the trust law entered into was a part of the cause of action in the original proceeding. To the same effect are: Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 46 L. Ed. 1058, 22 S. Ct. 747; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U.S. 540, 46 L. Ed. 679, 22 S. Ct. 431; Loeb v. Columbia Township Trustees, 179 U.S. 472, 479, 45 L. Ed. 280, 21 S. Ct. 174; Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U.S. 336, 348, 33 L. Ed. 172, 9 S. Ct. 776; National Distilling Co. v. Cream City Importing Co., 86 Wis. 352, 355, 56 N.W. 864.

It follows from what has been said that the report of the commissioner is approved and his findings and conclusions of law are confirmed.

WEST, [***20] J., not sitting.

Dissent by: BENSON

Dissent

---

BENSON, J. (dissenting as to one item): I concur in the foregoing opinion except that part confirming the report of the commissioner relative to attorneys' fees for services in the supreme court of the United States. The commissioner reports: "I find that the mill company has incurred a liability to __ (naming attorney) for professional services in the case on appeal . . . in the sum of __ dollars." A similar finding was made (stating name and amount) upon the claim of each of two firms, and one other attorney. Had the plaintiff employed other lawyers findings of a similar nature might have been made as to them also.

The question is not what liability the plaintiff incurred to any attorney or firm of attorneys, nor what [*226] number it retained, but the question is, What is a reasonable attorneys' fee for necessary services whether performed by one or many attorneys? In my opinion the commissioner should be requested to find and state the amount of a reasonable attorneys' fee for attending to the case for the plaintiff in the supreme court of the United States. The evidence reported shows that well-known attorneys of large practice [***21] differ in their estimates from $ 2500 to $ 50,000 for the services in question. In such a situation we should know what the commissioner, who has thoroughly examined every phase of the litigation, considers a reasonable fee.

Dukate v. Adams

Supreme Court of Mississippi

March, 1912, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

101 Miss. 433 *; 58 So. 475 **; 1912 Miss. LEXIS 12 ***

W. K. M. DUKATE ET AL. v. WIRT ADAMS, STATE REVENUE AGENT.

Prior History: [***1] APPEAL from the chancery court of Harrison county.

HON. T. A. WOODS, Chancellor.

Suit by Wirt Adams, state revenue agent against W. K. M. Dukate and others. From a judgment overruling a demurrer to the bill, defendants appeal.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Disposition: Decree affirmed and cause remanded.

Core Terms

---

revenue agent, forfeitures, past-due, district attorney, attorney-general, anti-trust, obligations, combine, decree

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judges

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [down arrow] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

In § 5004 of the Code (Mississippi), a violation of the anti-trust law is referred to as an "offense." Section 1589 of the Code (Mississippi) provides that the term "offense," when used in any statute, shall mean any violation of law liable to punishment by criminal prosecution. By the last sentence of § 5004 of the Code (Mississippi), it is made the duty of the several circuit judges of Mississippi to specially call attention of the grand jury of their respective districts to that provision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

101 Miss. 433, *433LA<sup>58</sup> So. 475, **475LA<sup>912</sup> Miss. LEXIS 12, ***1

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

**HN2** [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Section 5004 of the Code (Mississippi) imposes simply a civil liability. The language therein, "to be recovered by an action in the name of the state, at the relation of the attorney-general or district attorney," can be appropriately used only with reference to a civil case.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Capacity of Parties > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

**HN3** [down] Parties, Capacity of Parties

Civil suits brought by the attorney-general or district attorney in their official capacity for the benefit of other parties are always brought in the name of such parties on the relation of the attorney-general or district attorney, as the case may be.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

**HN4** [down] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

Criminal prosecutions, under § 27 of the Constitution (Mississippi), and the laws enacted pursuant thereto, must be commenced, if in the circuit court, by indictment, and, if in the court of a justice of the peace, by an affidavit. In neither of these instances is the action thereby begun a proceeding at the relation of the attorney-general or district attorney.

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

Governments > Courts > Court Personnel

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Administration & Procedure > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Local Governments, Duties & Powers

See § 4738 of the Code (Mississippi).

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN6** [down] Legislation, Interpretation

While punctuation is a valuable aid in the construction and interpretation of a statute, it cannot control the plain meaning thereof, and the courts will disregard the same and repunctuate the statute, if necessary, to give effect to what appears to be the plain meaning thereof.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Administration & Procedure > General Overview

HN7 State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

The true intention of § 4738 of the Code (Mississippi) is to confer upon a revenue agent the power to sue for all penalties and forfeitures of every character owing the state, and for all past-due obligations and indebtedness of any character whatever owing to the state.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Administration & Procedure > General Overview

HN8 State & Territorial Governments, Employees & Officials

Section 5004 of the Code (Mississippi) and § 4738 of the Code (Mississippi), are parts of the same Code, were adopted at the same time, and must be construed together, and, so construed, the authority granted to the attorney-general and district attorney by § 5004 of the Code (Mississippi) is not exclusive.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. APPEAL AND ERROR. Review. Constitutional questions. Matters not necessary to decision. Constitution 1890, Sec. 147. Code 1906, Sec. 5004. Laws 1908, Ch. 204. Interlocutory order. Civil Cause.

Under Constitution 1890, Sec. 147, providing that no judgment or decree in any chancery or circuit court rendered in a civil cause shall be reversed or annulled on the ground of want of jurisdiction to render said judgment or decree, etc., but that if the supreme court shall find error in the proceedings other than as to jurisdiction and it shall be necessary to remand the case, the supreme court may remand it to that court which in its opinion can best determine the controversy; the question of the constitutionality of the laws of 1908, chapter 204, conferring jurisdiction upon chancery courts of suits for penalties for violation of antitrust laws, will not be determined unless the supreme court should reverse the decree of the court below for some reason other than that the cause was not of equity jurisdiction.

2. SAME.

Sec. 147 of the Constitution of 1890, applies to appeals to settle the principles of the case as well as to appeals from final decrees.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR. Jurisdiction. "Civil cause." Code 1906, Secs. 5004-1589. Constitution 1890, Sec. 147.

Notwithstanding the fact that Sec. 5004, Code 1906, imposing a penalty for violation of the anti-trust laws, refers to the violation of such laws as an "offense" and requires the circuit judges to call the attention of the grand jury to this provision, and section 1589 provides that "offense" when used in the statutes shall mean any violation of law liable to punishment by criminal prosecution; still as the penalty is to be recovered in an action in the name of the state on the relation of the attorney-general or district attorney, such action is a "civil" rather than a "criminal" action within Sec. 147 of the Constitution of 1890, providing that no judgment shall be reversed for error in bringing the same in equity or law, and an action for the penalty will not be reversed because brought in the chancery court.

4. EQUITY. Action for penalty. Pleading. Multifariousness.

A bill is not multifarious when the only relief sought by it is the infliction of a penalty prescribed by Sec. 5004, Code of 1906, and which alleges that the trust and combine charged to have been entered into by defendant was unlawful, as such allegation was the foundation of the right to recover the penalty.

5. PENALTIES. Forfeitures. Actions to enforce. By whom brought. Code 1906, Sec. 4738.

Although in Sec. 4738, Code 1906, providing that it shall be the duty of the revenue agent to sue all corporations "for all penalties or forfeitures for all past due obligations and indebtedness of any character whatever owing to the state or any county etc.,," there is no comma between the words "forfeitures" and "for all past due" the statute will not be held to limit the right of the revenue agent to suits for penalties or forfeitures to those growing out of past due obligations of the state, but will be held to permit him to sue for any penalties or forfeitures.

6. STATUTES. Construction and operation. Mistake in punctuation.

While punctuation is a valuable aid in the construction and interpretation of a statute, it cannot control the plain meaning thereof, and the courts will disregard the same and repunctuate the statute if necessary, to give effect to what appears to be the plain meaning thereof.

7. ANTI-TRUST LAWS. Penalties. Actions to enforce. By whom brought. Code 1906, Secs. 4738-5004.

Sec. 4738 and 5004, Code 1906, are parts of the same Code, were adopted at the same time, and must be construed together, and so construed, the authority granted to the attorney-general and district attorney by Sec. 5004 is not exclusive.

Counsel: Jeff Truly, Ford, White & Ford and Edwin Thurrack, for appellant, filed an elaborate brief fully covering all the points in the case but too long for publication.

E. J. Gex and Flowers, Alexander and Whitfield, for appellee, filed an extended brief, too long for publication.

Argued orally by E. T. Merrick and Jeff Truly, for appellant.

Argued orally by J. N. Flowers, for appellee.

Judges: SMITH, J.

Opinion by: SMITH

Opinion

---

[**476] [*435] SMITH, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

Appellee filed his bill in the court below, alleging that appellants, under the guise of a limited partnership, had entered into a trust and combine for the purpose of controlling the trade in sea foods in Mississippi, and praying that this partnership be declared to be an unlawful trust and combine, and that appellants be decreed to pay to the state the statutory [***2] penalty for having entered into such trust and combine. To this bill a demurrer was interposed and overruled, and this appeal granted to settle the principles of law governing the case.

The points relied upon by appellants to obtain a reversal of the decree rendered in the court below may be [*436] reduced to three: First, that chapter 204 of the Laws of 1908 is unconstitutional, in so far as it attempts to confer jurisdiction upon the chancery court to hear and determine suits arising out of violations of the anti-trust law, for the reason that this anti-trust law makes the formation of a trust or combine a crime, and that under the Constitution the criminal laws cannot be enforced by the chancery court; second, that the bill is multifarious, for the reason that it unites two distinct and unconnected matters--that is, it seeks to have this limited partnership declared unlawful, and also to have penalties awarded for the violation of the anti-trust statute; third, that the revenue agent is without power to institute this suit.

Under section 147 of the Constitution, the question of the constitutionality of chapter 204 of the Laws of 1908 does not arise, unless we should reverse [***3] the decree of the court below for some reason other than that the cause was not of equity jurisdiction. It is true that this is an appeal to settle the principles of the case; but this section of the Constitution, nevertheless, applies, for it is not limited to appeals from final decrees. Cazeneuve v. Curell, 70 Miss. 521, 13 So. 32.

But it is said that this is a criminal and not a civil case, that, consequently, section 147 of the Constitution does not apply, and that the case of Grenada Lumber Co. v. State, 98 Miss. 536, 54 So. 8, which held to the contrary, was erroneously decided. Out of deference to counsel, we have re-examined this matter, in view of all of the arguments advanced by them, and see no reason to recede from the views expressed in the Grenada Lumber Co. case. In reaching this conclusion, we have not left out of view the fact that HN1↑ in section 5004 of the Code the violation of the anti-trust law is referred to as an "offense," that section 1589 of the Code provides that "the term 'offense,' when used in any statute, shall mean any violation of law liable to punishment by criminal [*437] prosecution," and that by the last [***4] sentence of section 5004 it is made "the duty of the several circuit judges of the state to specially call attention of the grand jury of their respective districts to this provision."

It may be that a person violating the anti-trust law is liable to punishment by criminal prosecution, as to which we express no opinion; but he certainly is not by reason of anything contained in HN2↑ section 5004, which imposes simply a civil liability. The language, "to be recovered by an action in the name of the state, at the relation of the attorney-general or district attorney," can be appropriately used only with reference to a civil case. HN3↑ Civil suits brought by the attorney-general [**477] or district attorney in their official capacity for the benefit of other parties are always brought in the name of such parties on the relation of the attorney-general or district attorney, as the case may be. HN4↑ Criminal prosecutions, under section 27 of the Constitution, and the laws enacted pursuant thereto, must be commenced, if in the circuit court, by indictment, and, if in the court of a justice of the peace, by an affidavit. In neither of these instances is the action thereby begun a proceeding "at the [***5] relation of the attorney-general or district attorney."

Prior to the adoption of the Code of 1906, there was no civil liability of the character now under discussion imposed for violations of the anti-trust law; such violations being punished by fine and imprisonment. When the Code of 1906 was adopted, the fine and imprisonment features of the statute were omitted, and the present civil liability substituted therefor. Section 5004 of the Code seems to have been adopted as a substitute for the latter part of Sec. 4, Ch. 88, of the Laws of 1900, which provided for a criminal prosecution, and directed the circuit judges to charge the grand juries relative thereto. Why this provision was brought forward in Section 5004 is not clear, for the grand jury has nothing [*438] to do with the collection of the penalty thereunder imposed. This may have occurred by an oversight, or out of a desire to retain as much of the phraseology of the old law as possible, and without due consideration of the effect thereof. But, be that as it may, this direction to the circuit judges cannot have the effect of converting into a criminal what was clearly intended to be a civil liability.

The bill is not [***6] multifarious. The only relief sought by it is the infliction of a penalty prescribed by section 5004 of the Code. In order that this may be done, the trust and combine alleged to have been entered into by appellants must be declared to be unlawful.

HN5↑ Section 4738 of the Code provides that the revenue agent "shall have power and it shall be his duty to proceed by suit in the proper court against all officers, county contractors, persons, corporations, companies, and associations of persons for all past-due and unpaid taxes of any kind whatever, for all penalties or forfeitures for all past-due obligations and indebtedness of any character whatever owing to the state or any county, municipality or levee board, and for damages growing out of the violation of any contract with the state or any county, municipality, or levee board, and shall have a right of action and may sue at law or in equity in all such cases where the state or any county, municipality or levee board has the right of action or may sue."

It is contended by counsel for appellants that under this section the revenue agent is not empowered to sue for all penalties and forfeitures owing to the state, but only for penalties [***7] and forfeitures for all past-due obligations, etc., owing to the state. This argument is based upon the absence of a comma between the words "or forfeitures" and the words "for all past-due" in the fifth line of the section. They seem to concede that, were this comma not absent, the revenue agent would have power to sue for all penalties and forfeitures. HN6[↑] While punctuation is a valuable aid in the construction and interpretation [*439] of a statute, it cannot control the plain meaning thereof, and the courts will disregard the same and repunctuate the statute, if necessary, to give effect to what appears to be the plain meaning thereof. If the contention of appellants is correct, the revenue agent would have no power to sue for penalties or forfeitures owing the state, except such as were incident to past-due obligations to the state; neither would he have any power to sue for past-due obligations, being limited to a suit for the recovery of the penalties and forfeitures incident thereto. It is manifest that HN7[↑] the true intention of the statute is to confer upon the revenue agent the power to sue for all penalties and forfeitures of every character owing the state, and for all past-due [***8] obligations and indebtedness of any character whatever owing to the state, and, consequently, the court, carrying out this plain intent, will insert the comma in the place hereinbefore indicated.

Counsel for appellants also contend that since section 5004, which imposes the penalty sued for, provides that it shall be recovered by an action in the name of the state at the relation of the attorney-general or district attorney, that the grant of power to sue to these officials excludes any power to sue therefor in any other officials, and that, consequently, the revenue agent is without authority to bring this suit. HN8[↑] This section, however, and section 4738, are parts of the same Code, were adopted at the same time, and must be construed together, and, so construed, the authority granted to the attorney-general and district attorney by section 5004 is not exclusive. To so hold would practically strip the revenue agent of all power, for in very few, if any, cases is he given the sole authority to collect or sue for money owing the state; such authority being generally also vested in other officials.

The decree of the court below, therefore, is affirmed, and the cause remanded for further [***9] proceedings.

Affirmed and remanded.

---

End of Document

Smith v. Morganton Ice Co.

Supreme Court of North Carolina

May 15, 1912, Filed

No Number in Original

Reporter

159 N.C. 151 *; 74 S.E. 961 **; 1912 N.C. LEXIS 247 ***

J. M. SMITH v. MORGANTON ICE COMPANY ET ALS.

Prior History: [***1] APPEAL by defendant from Long, J., at December Term, 1911, of BURKE.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the Court by MR. CHIEF JUSTICE CLARK.

Disposition: No error.

Core Terms

---

damages, ice company, ship, price fixing, punitive, injure

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN1 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Under 1907 N.C. Sess. Laws ch. 218, N.C. Revisal, § 3028a(b), any person, firm, corporation, or association to directly or indirectly destroy or willfully injure, or undertake to destroy or injure the business of any opponent or business rival in the state of North Carolina with the purpose or intention of attempting to fix the price of anything of value when the competition is removed. Chapter 167 of 1911 N.C. Sess. Laws amended the above section by interpolating the words "by circulating false reports" tending to damage the credit of said opponent or rival. The effect of the amendment is to narrow and restrict the forbidden conduct tending to interfere with the trade of an opponent or business rival with the purpose of attempting to fix the price of anything of value when the competition is removed to the single instance when it is done by circulating false reports.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages

HN2 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Punitive damages may be allowed or not, as the jury see proper; but they have no right to allow them unless they draw from the evidence the conclusion that the wrongful act was accomplished by fraud or malice, or recklessness or other unlawful and wanton aggravation on the part of the defendant. In such cases the matter is within the sound discretion of the jury, not only as to the allowance of damages, which is sometimes called smart money or punitive damages, not only as to the allowance, but as to the amount that is allowed.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. Antitrust Laws -- Interpretation of Statutes.

The anti-trust law of 1907, ch. 218 (Revisal, sec. 3028), since its amendment by chapter 167, Laws of 1911, restricts unlawful conduct "tending to interfere with the trade of an opponent or business rival with the purpose of attempting to fix the price of anything of value when the competition is removed" to the single instance when it is done "by circulating false reports."

2. Antitrust Laws -- Commencement of Action.

By express terms of the statute, the repeal of chapter 218, Laws of 1907 (Revisal, sec. 3028b), does not affect any action theretofore commenced. Revisal, sec. 2830.

3. Antitrust Laws -- Common Law.

By express provision, chapter 218, Laws of 1907 (Revisal, sec. 3028b), shall "not be construed so as to repeal or restrict the common-law doctrine preventing unlawful combinations in trade and commerce," and this provision is still effective, being reenacted by chapter 167, sec. 9, Laws of 1911.

4. Antitrust Laws -- Punitive Damages -- Instructions.

The plaintiff was a dealer in meats in M., and desirous of dealing in ice, also, made a contract with an ice plant at N., a nearby town, whereby he could sell ice in M. for a profit at 35 cents per hundred pounds. The defendant procured an agreement with the only other ice plant in the town of M. by which it would not sell ice there, and by threats of competition at N. deterred the Ice Manufacturing Company there from shipping ice to the plaintiff, and at least temporarily broke up his meat and ice business, whereupon the defendant put the minimum price of ice at M. at 50 cents per hundred pounds: Held, (1) the conduct of the defendant was violative of the common-law doctrine against monopolies; (2) conceding that the defendant did not know of plaintiff's contract, its unlawful conduct was the preventing plaintiff from obtaining the ice; (3) exemplary or punitive damages are recoverable in an amount to be allowed in the discretion of the jury, if the jury find that defendant's acts were maliciously done; (4) the defendant's acts if done without right or justifiable cause would constitute malice; (5) an instruction was not error when considered in connection with the charge as a whole, that the jury could "award exemplary damages for any injury they may find that the plaintiff suffered by the interference in his business by the defendant's attempt to fix the price of ice at M." for the illegal purposes, etc.

Counsel: John T. Perkins for plaintiff.

M. Silver and Avery & Ervin for defendants.

Judges: CLARK, C. J.

Opinion by: CLARK

Opinion

---

[*152] [**962] CLARK, C. J. Though this State enacted an antitrust law in 1891, this case is the first that has reached this Court in which it has been attempted to enforce such legislation by civil action, and none has so far come up on the criminal side of the docket.

The defendant ice company owned an ice plant in Morganton. The plaintiff had a fresh-meat market-which required ice, and he desired to deal in ice. The defendants procured an agreement with the Deaf and Dumb School in Morganton, the only other ice plant in that town, not to sell ice to any one. They then went to the neighboring towns that had ice plants and procured agreements from them not to ship ice to Morganton to plaintiff unless he would agree to sell at a minimum price in Morganton of 50 cents per 100 pounds. The plaintiff already had a contract with the ice company in Newton to ship him all the ice he wished at [***2] 17 1/2 cents per 100, which he was selling at 35 cents per 100 pounds, at a profit. The defendants by threats that they would ship ice to Newton and put wagons on the streets there to dispose of their ice and cause the Newton company to lose money, deterred the Newton company from shipping plaintiff any more ice, and for a time at least broke up both the plaintiff's ice business as well as his meat market, whereby the defendants obtained a monopoly and control of the ice business in Morganton and sold ice at the minimum price to the public of 50 cents per 100 pounds.

Laws 1907, ch. 218, now Pell's Revisal, 3028a, subsec. (b), made it unlawful for HN1 "any person, firm, corporation, or association to directly or indirectly destroy or willfully injure, or undertake to destroy or injure the business of any opponent or business rival in the State of [*153] North Carolina with the purpose or intention of attempting to fix the price of anything of value when the competition is removed."

This action was begun when the above section was in force, but chapter 167, Laws 1911, subsection (b), amended the above section by interpolating the words "by circulating false reports" tending to [***3] damage the credit of said opponent or rival. The effect of the amendment made in subsection (b) by the act of 1911 is to narrow and restrict the forbidden conduct "tending to interfere with the trade of an opponent or business rival with the purpose of attempting to fix the price of anything of value when the competition is removed" to the single instance when it is done "by circulating false reports." Under the act of 1907 all conduct of any nature done with such purpose or intention was made unlawful. Under the act of 1911 no conduct with that purpose or intention is unlawful save only that of "circulating false reports."

The other subsections in the act of 1911 apply only when the [**963] methods forbidden are: (a) Sales on condition that purchasers shall not deal with competitors. (c) Destruction or injury by reason of lowering price. (d) Lowering or raising price with purpose of increasing profit when rival is destroyed. (e) Differentiating prices with intent to injure business of another. (f) Agreements not to buy or sell in certain territory with intention of preventing competition. (g) Conspiracy to keep down or put up prices. (h) Solicitation [***4] of trade, patronage, or goodwill by means of false statements. The conduct alleged against the defendants in this case is therefore not prohibited by the antitrust act of 1911.

Section 11 of the act of 1911 specifically repealed the above act of 1907. This action was begun in 1909. Whatever the purpose in thus restricting the provisions of subsection (b) and in repealing the act of 1907, this action begun before its repeal is saved from its operation by Revisal, 2830, which provides: "The repeal of a statute shall not affect any action brought before the repeal for any forfeitures incurred or the recovery of any rights accruing under such statute." The act of 1907 contained the provision, now Pell's Revisal, 3028b, that it shall "not be construed so as to repeal or restrict the common law doctrine [*154] preventing unlawful combinations in trade and commerce, which is hereby reenacted and declared to be in full force in this State," except as inconsistent with that statute. This last provision is reenacted in the act of 1911, ch. 167, sec. 9.

Therefore this action is governed by the act of 1907, ch. 167, sec. 9; Pell's Revisal, 3028a, subsec. (b), or by the common law existing [***5] prior to the adoption of any statute on the subject. Under these the charge of the court and the verdict of the jury should be sustained.

The defendants' first exception is to evidence of the contract which the plaintiff had made with the Newton Ice Company, and the second is to the refusal of the issues tendered by the defendant. The third exception is to the refusal of a nonsuit. These exceptions are without merit, require no discussion, and indeed do not seem to be insisted upon by the defendants in their brief.

The fourth and fifth exceptions are because the court refused to charge that there was no evidence that the defendants at any time knew of the existence of a contract between the plaintiff and the Newton Ice Company by which the latter was to furnish the ice to the former. The witness, Wagoner, of the Newton Ice Company, testified that they could manufacture and sell ice to the plaintiff in any quantities he wished at 17 1/2 cents, and would have done so but for the interference of the defendant, and in fact that they had a contract with the plaintiff to furnish him what ice he needed and ordered and as often as he should order it during the season. The plaintiff's evidence [***6] was to the same effect. There was ample evidence to justify the jury to find that the defendants were aware of the contract. Besides, it is not material whether the defendants by threats induced the Newton Ice Company to break a contract to ship ice to the plaintiff or merely prevented them from shipping, if they otherwise would have done so.

Exception six is because the court refused to charge that the plaintiff could recover only actual damages. Exception seven is to the following charge: "It is made unlawful in this State for any person or persons to attempt to injure and break up the business of another for the [*155] purpose of fixing a rate at which any article of commerce shall be sold; and the court charges you that if you find from the greater weight of the evidence that the defendants attempted to break up the business of the plaintiff and did break up his business, as alleged, and did injure him therein in the selling of ice in Morganton, for the purpose of fixing minimum price at which ice should be sold when his competition was removed, and that, pursuant to this intention, the defendants tried to induce nearby manufacturers of ice not to sell to the plaintiff, and [***7] prevented the Newton Ice Company from fulfilling their contract and fixed the price at which ice should be sold at a minimum at retail in Morganton as 50 cents per hundred, when the plaintiff had arranged and was then and there able to sell ice at a less price, you may award exemplary damages for any injury you may find that the plaintiff suffered by the interference in his business in the attempt to fix the price of ice in Morganton and effectuating the illegal purposes aforesaid."

The eighth exception is because the court charged the jury: "If you find that such contract as the plaintiff claims did exist, then if the defendants knowingly and intentionally procured it to be violated, they may be held liable for the wrong, although it may have been done for the purpose of promoting their own business, but in order to justify the finding of punitive damages against the defendant, the act done must have been done with the unlawful purpose to cause such damage or loss without right or justifiable cause on the part of the defendant, which constitutes damage."

The ninth exception is because the court told the jury that under the decision in Haskins v. Royster, 70 N.C. 601, [***8] the Court had defined the word "malice" as follows: "The act done must have been done without right or justifiable cause on the part of the defendant, which constitutes malice."

The tenth and last exception is because the court charged that it was held in Hayes v. R. R., 141 N.C. 195, 53 S.E. 847, Brown, J.: "This Court has said, in many cases, that HN2[↑] punitive damages may be allowed [**964] or not, as the jury see proper; but they have no right to allow them unless they draw from the evidence the conclusion that the wrongful act was accomplished [*156] by fraud or malice, or recklessness or other unlawful and wanton aggravation on the part of the defendant. In such cases the matter is within the sound discretion of the jury, not only as to the allowance of damages, which is sometimes called smart money or punitive damages--not only as to the allowance, but as to the amount that is allowed."

Upon examination of the foregoing instructions they are found to be a correct exposition of the law on the subject.

The defendants insist that there was error in allowing the jury to consider the question of exemplary or punitive damages, and particularly urge that [***9] there was error in instructing the jury that they could "award exemplary damages for any injury you may find that the plaintiff suffered by the interference in his business in the attempt to fix the price of ice in Morganton and effectuating the illegal purposes aforesaid." But construed in connection with the context and with the whole charge, this exception is hypercritical. The conduct with which the defendants were charged and of which the jury, in response to the first three issues, find that they were guilty made them liable not only for the actual damages sustained, but also for punitive damages, if the jury found, as they must have done, that such conduct was willful and malicious as the latter word was construed in the charge and in the decisions of this Court which were quoted to them, to wit, that the act was done with the unlawful purpose, without right or justifiable cause on the part of the defendants, of interfering with the business of the plaintiff. If there was error, it was against the plaintiff, as the charge should have been that the jury could allow "exemplary damages in addition to the actual damages sustained" by the wrongful act of the defendants.

There [***10] is no error, and the defendants are not entitled to a new trial. It is, however, singular, that with numerous and glaring instances of the violation of law and right, in the manner herein shown by other parties and to a far vaster extent in the twenty-one years since this statute was passed, and indeed in violation of the common law, which punishes such offenses, that this case, in which a small infraction of the law is involved, is the only one that has come to this Court. The enforcement [*157] of the law and the protection of the plaintiff and the public in this instance is noteworthy when with a statute so widely known and discussed and when the evil has been so great and manifest there has been no attempt to enforce the law in other cases.

No error.

---

End of Document

United States v. Union P. R. Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued April 19, 22, 23, 1912. ; December 2, 1912, Decided

No. 446.

Reporter

226 U.S. 61 *; 33 S. Ct. 53 **; 57 L. Ed. 124 ***; 1912 U.S. LEXIS 2131 ****

UNITED STATES v. UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY. <sup>1</sup>

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF UTAH.

THE facts, which involve the validity under the Sherman Anti-trust Act of 1890 of the purchase by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of a dominant interest of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company, and whether the same was a combination in restraint of interstate commerce within the purview of the act, are stated in the opinion.

Core Terms

---

stock, railroad, Northern, interstate commerce, rates, roads, transportation, dominating, acquire, decree, destroying, connections, coast, restraint of trade, commerce, freight, traffic, route, effectually, Steamship, restrain, cases, act of congress, combinations, interstate, extending, carrying, effected, lines, interstate trade

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Lands & Rights of Way

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, applies to interstate railroads as carriers conducting interstate commerce, and one of the principal instrumentalities thereof. The act is intended to reach combinations and conspiracies which restrain freedom of action in interstate trade and commerce and unduly suppress or restrict the play of competition in the conduct thereof.

---

<sup>1</sup> See also p. 470, post.

CG ÁMÆÐA FEEÍ FLÁHÚEOÐA HEEÍ HLÁ Í ÁSEÐA EFG EEEFG LAFJFGÁNÆÐSÓYQAGFHÆFFF

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

**HN2** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, has been construed as forbidding any combination which by its necessary operation destroys or restricts free competition among those engaged in interstate commerce; in other words, to destroy or restrict free competition in interstate commerce is to restrain such commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

**HN3** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A combination which places railroads engaged in interstate commerce in such relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation, whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed, is within the condemnation of the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647. While the law may not be able to enforce competition, it can reach combinations which render competition impracticable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN4** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, in its terms embraces every contract or combination, in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce. This general phraseology embraces all forms of combination, old and new.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN5** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To preserve from undue restraint the free action of competition in interstate commerce was the purpose which controlled Congress in enacting the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, and the courts should construe the law with a view to effecting the object of its enactment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN6 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The consolidation of two great competing systems of railroad engaged in interstate commerce by a transfer to one of a dominating stock interest in the other creates a combination which restrains interstate commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, because, in destroying or greatly abridging the free operation of competition theretofore existing, it tends to higher rates. It directly tends to less activity in furnishing the public with prompt and efficient service in carrying and handling freight and in carrying passengers, and in attention to and prompt adjustment of the demands of patrons for losses, and in these respects puts interstate commerce under restraint. Nor does it make any difference that rates for the time being may not be raised and much money be spent in improvements after the combination is effected. It is the scope of such combinations and their power to suppress or stifle competition or create monopoly which determines the applicability of the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In determining the validity of a combination a court has a right to look also to the intent and purpose of those who conducted the transactions from which it arose and to the objects had in view.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Sherman Act, Remedies

The remedies provided in the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, generally speaking, are two-fold in character: 1st. To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which the court has found to have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute. 2nd. The exertion of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist in violation of the statute, and thus neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained has brought and will continue to bring about.

Lawyers' Edition Display*Headnotes

Monopoly -- combination by carriers -- stock control. --

Headnote:

A combination which places railroads engaged in interstate commerce in such a relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed constitutes a restraint of interstate commerce forbidden by the Sherman anti-trust act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200), whether accomplished through a holding company or through a direct transfer of a dominating stock interest from one company to the other.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- combination by carriers -- stock control. --

CG ÁMÉRÍKA FÉÉÍ FLÁHÚJÓ ÉÍ HÉÉÍ HLÁ Í ÁSÉOaÉFG ÉÍÍFG LÁJFGÁNÉÉSÓYQÁGFHÉÉÉÉ

Headnote:

A purchase by one railway company of a dominating stock interest in another, though legal in the state where made, and within corporate powers conferred by state authority, cannot escape condemnation under the Sherman anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, if it contravenes the prohibitions of that statute against combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, enacted by Congress in the exercise of its supreme authority over interstate commerce.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- combination by carriers -- stock control. --

Headnote:

The acquisition by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, then operating a line from Missouri river points to Portland, and thence to San Francisco by steamship connection, of 46 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company, with the intent and result, not only of securing the California connection at Ogden over the Central Pacific line, and thus effecting such a continuity of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines from the Missouri river to San Francisco, as was contemplated by the acts of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 489, chap. 120), July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 356, chap. 216), and June 20, 1874 (18 Stat. at L. 111, chap. 331, U. S. Comp Stat. 1901, p. 3577), but of obtaining the dominating control of the entire Southern Pacific system, consisting of lines by water and rail, together forming a transportation system from New York and other Atlantic ports to San Francisco and Portland and other Pacific coast points, with various branches and connections, besides a steamship line from San Francisco to Panama, and from San Francisco to the Orient, and a half interest in another line between the two latter points, which system was actively competing with the purchasing road for interstate business, large in volume, though small in comparison with the total traffic carried, creates, contrary to the act of July 2, 1890, a combination in restraint of interstate trade.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Injunction -- against monopolies -- scope of relief. --

Headnote:

The Federal district court, in relieving against a combination in restraint of interstate trade, created contrary to the act of July 2, 1890, by the acquisition by the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines from inant stock interest in the Southern Pacific Company, a competing railway system, should, by its decree, provide against the right to vote such stock while in the ownership or control of the Union Paeific Railroad Company, or any corporation owned by it, or while held for it by any corporation or person, and forbid any transfer or disposition thereof in such wise as to continue its control, and should enjoin the payment of dividends on the stock while so held, except to a receiver appointed by the court to collect and hold such dividends until disposed of by its decree.

[For other cases, see Injunction, I. g, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal -- remanding for further hearing -- dissolution of monopoly. --

Headnote:

Any plan for the disposition of the shares of stock of the Southern Pacific Company, found by the Federal Supreme Court to have been acquired by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, contrary to the act of July 2, 1890, prohibiting combinations in the restraint of interstate trade, must be such as effectively to dissolve the unlawful combination, and must be subject to the approval and decree of the district court, which shall proceed, upon the presentation of any plan, to hear the government and the defendants, and may bring in any additional parties whose presence may be necessary to a final disposition of the stock in conformity to the views of the Supreme Court.

CG ÁMEÑA FEE FLÁHÜÖÉ HEEÍ HÁ Í ÅSEoÅFG EEEFG LAFJFGÁNÆSÓYQAGFHÆFFF

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 5403-5406, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal -- remanding for further hearing -- dissolution of monopoly. --

Headnote:

Nothing in the decision of the Federal Supreme Court that the acquisition by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of a dominant stock interest in the Southern Pacific Company constitutes a restraint of interstate commerce forbidden by the act of July 2, 1890, should be construed as preventing the government or any party in interest, if so desiring, from presenting to the district court a plan for permitting the Union Pacific Company to retain the California connection at Ogden over the Central Pacific line, and thus effect such a continuity of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines from the Missouri river to San Francisco as was contemplated by the acts of July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and June 20, 1874, or as preventing the court from adopting and giving effect to any such plan so presented.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 5403-5406, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal -- remanding for further hearing -- dissolution of monopoly. --

Headnote:

Plans for dissolving a combination created by the purchase by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of a dominant stock interest in the Southern Pacific Company, which the Federal Supreme Court finds to constitute a restraint of interstate commerce forbidden by the act of July 2, 1890, should be presented to the Federal district court within three months from the receipt of the mandate of the Supreme Court, failing which, or upon the rejection by the court of plans submitted within that period, the court shall proceed by receivership and sale, if necessary, to dispose of such stock in such wise as to dissolve the unlawful combination.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 5403-5406, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Syllabus

---

The purchase by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of forty-six per cent of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company, with the resulting control of the latter's railway system by the former, is an illegal combination in restraint of interstate trade within the purview of the Sherman Anti-trust Act of 1890 and must be dissolved.

The Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, applies to interstate railroads which are among the principal instrumentalities of interstate commerce.

The Sherman Act is intended to reach and prevent all combinations which restrain freedom of interstate trade, and should be given a reasonable construction to this end.

The opinions in Standard Oil Co. v. United States and United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 1 and [***2] 106, contain no suggestion that the decisions of the court in the Trans-Missouri and Joint Traffic Cases were not correct in holding the combinations involved to be illegal while applying the rule that the statute should be reasonably construed.

The Sherman Law prohibits the creation of a single dominating control in one corporation whereby natural and existing competition in interstate trade is suppressed; such prohibition extends to the control of competing interstate railroads effected by a holding company as in the Northern Securities Case and to the purchase by one of two competing railroad companies of a controlling portion, even if not, as in this case, a majority of the stock of the other.

CG ÁMÆÐA FEE FLÁHÚÐÓÐA HÆÐÍ HÁ Í ÁSÐÓÐA FG ÆFFFGLAFJFGÁNÆÐÓÐA FG HÆÐÍ

The Sherman Law, in its terms, embraces every contract or combination in form of trust or otherwise or conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade.

Congress is supreme over interstate commerce, and a combination which contravenes the Sherman Law is illegal although it may be permissible under, and within corporate powers conferred by, the laws of the State where made.

Courts should construe the Sherman Law with a view to preserve free action of competition in interstate trade, which [****3] was the purpose of Congress in enacting the statute.

Competition is the striving for something which another is actively seeking and wishes to gain.

Competition between two transcontinental railway systems such as the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific includes not only making of rates but the character of service rendered and accommodation afforded; and the inducement to maintain points of advantage in these respects is greater when the systems are independent than when the corporation owning one of the systems also dominates and controls the other.

The Union Pacific and Southern Pacific are competing systems of interstate railways and their consolidation by the control of the latter by the former through a dominating stock interest does, as a matter of fact, abridge free competition, and is an illegal restraint of interstate trade under the Sherman Law.

In this case held, that while there was a great deal of non-competitive business, a sufficiently large amount of competitive business was affected to clearly bring the combination made within the purview of the Sherman Law.

In this case also held, that the necessity of the Union Pacific to obtain an entrance to San Francisco [****4] and other California points over the lines of the Southern Pacific was not such as to justify the combination complained of in this case in view of the provisions for a continuous railroad to the Pacific Coast and for interchange of traffic without discrimination contained in the acts of July 1, 1862, 12 Stat. 489, 495, § 12, c. 120, and of July 2, 1864, 13 Stat. 356, 362, § 15, c. 216.

Doubtless courts could restrain one railroad constructed under the acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, from making discriminations, contrary to the provisions of those acts in regard to interchange of traffic, against another railroad also constructed under those acts.

The obligation to keep faith with the Government in regard to management of railroads constructed under acts of Congress continues notwithstanding changed forms of ownership and organization, as does also continue the legislative power of Congress concerning such railroads.

Although a railroad corporation may lawfully acquire that portion of another railroad which connects, but does not compete, with any part of its own system, it may not acquire the entire system a substantial portion of which does compete with its lines.

[****5] The effect of such a purchase and its legality under the Sherman Law may be judged by what was actually accomplished, and the natural and probable consequences of that which was done.

In determining the validity of a combination the court may look to the intent and purpose of those conducting the transaction and to the objects had in view.

While in small corporations a majority of stock may be necessary for control, in large corporations, where the stock is distributed among many stockholders, a compact united ownership of less than half may be ample to control and amount to a dominant interest sufficient to effect a combination in restraint of trade within a reasonable construction of the Sherman Law.

In applying the general rules as to relief under the Sherman Law as declared in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 78, the court must deal with each case as it finds it; and where the combination has been effected by purchase by one corporation of a dominant amount of stock of its competitor the decree should provide an injunction against the right to vote stock so acquired, or payment of dividends thereon except to a receiver, and any plan for disposition of the [***6] stock should be such as to effectually dissolve the unlawful combination.

CG ÁMÉRÍKA FÉÉÍ FLÁHÚJÓ ÉÍ HÉÉÍ HLÁ Í ÁSÉOaÉFG ÉÍFFG LÁFJFGÁNÉÉSÓYQÁGFHFÉÉÍ

Whether the decree can provide for the purchase by the Union Pacific of such portions of the Southern Pacific as are only connecting and are not competitive and which effect a continuous line to San Francisco, not now determined; but leave granted to the District Court to consider any plan proposed to effect such results.

Unless plans for dissolution are presented to, and affirmed by, the District Court within a reasonable period, in this case three months, that court should proceed to dissolve the combination by receiver and sale.

The decree below, dismissing the bill generally, being affirmed by this court as to all matters other than the purchase of Southern Pacific stock, is reversed in part and the District Court retains its jurisdiction over the cause to see that the decree outlined by this court in this opinion is made effectual. (See also p. 470, post.)

188 Fed. Rep. 102, reversed in part.

Counsel: Mr. Cordenio A. Severance, The Attorney General and Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, for the United States, appellant:

The maintenance of free competition among railways has become the settled-policy of the Nation.

[***7] The Interstate Commerce Act, in its provisions against contracts, agreements, or combinations between common carriers for pooling, enforces the competitive principle.

The Sherman Law, as construed by the courts, is directed against all attempts to suppress competition among interstate carriers or to monopolize interstate commerce. National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U.S. 115; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. Rep. 177; United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U.S. 505; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290.

This policy has found expression in the constitutions and laws of thirty-seven States and two Territories.

The courts have recognized and enforced the policy, both under statutory and constitutional provisions, and also in the absence of such provisions. Central R.R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Georgia, 582; Clarke v. Central R. & B. Co., 50 Fed. Rep. 338; Commonwealth v. South Penn Road, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 214; Continental Securities Co. v. Interborough R.T. Co., 165 Fed. Rep. 945; Currier v. Ry. Co., 48 N.H. 322; East St. Louis Connecting Ry. v. Jarvis, 92 Fed. Rep. 735; East Line and Red [***8] River Co. v. Texas, 75 Texas, 434; Edwards v. Southern Ry. Co., 66 S. Car. 277; Gulf, Col. & S. Fe R.R. Co. v. Texas, 72 Texas, 404; Hamilton v. Savannah, &c. Ry., 49 Fed. Rep. 412; Langdon v. Branch, 37 Fed. Rep. 449; Louisville & Nash. R.R. Co. v. Kentucky, 97 Kentucky, 675; S.C., 161 U.S. 677; Morrill v. Railway Co., 55 N.H. 531; Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry., 161 U.S. 646; Penn. R.R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 7 Atl. Rep. 368, 374; State v. Vanderbilt, 37 Oh. St. 590; Stockton v. Central R.R. of N.J., 50 N.J. Eq. 52; Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. So. Pac. Ry., 41 La. Ann. 970; Yazoo &c. Ry. Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 83 Mississippi, 746.

It is immaterial that one of two competing roads may be organized under the laws of another State or situated beyond the borders of the State having the prohibition. Currier v. Ry. Co., 48 N.H. 322; Investigation into Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, 12 I.C.C. Rep. 347; Morrill v. Railway Co., 55 N.H. 531; Union Pacific v. Mason City & Ft. Dodge Ry. Co., 199 U.S. 160; United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 188 Fed. Rep. 121.

Prior to the acquisition of the stock of the Southern Pacific Company by the Union Pacific the lines of those two systems were [***9] competitive, and such acquisition, having eliminated such competition, was therefore in restraint of trade and in violation of the Anti-trust Act. East St. Louis Connecting Ry. v. Jarvis, 92 Fed. Rep. 735; East Line and Red River Co. v. Texas, 75 Texas, 434; East Line and Red River Co. v. Rushing, 69 Texas, 306; Gulf, Col. & S. Fe R.R. Co. v. Texas, 72 Texas, 404; Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U.S. 244; Kimball v. A., T. & S.F. Ry. Co., 46 Fed. Rep. 888; Louis. & Nash. R.R. Co. v. Kentucky, 97 Kentucky, 675; S.C., 161 U.S. 677; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry., 161 U.S. 646; Penna.

CG ÁMÆJÆA FÆJÆ FLÁHÆJÆ ÆA HÆJÆ HLÁ ÆSÆDÆ FG ÆJÆFG LÆJÆFGÁNÆJÆSÓYQÆAGFHÆJÆ

R.R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 7 Atl. Rep. 368, 374; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; State v. Montana Ry. Co., 21 Montana, 221; State v. Vanderbilt, 37 Oh. St. 590; Stockton v. Central R.R. of N.J., 50 N.J. Eq. 52; Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Southern Pacific Ry., 41 La. Ann. 970; United States v. Am. Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106; United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U.S. 505; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 302; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 58 Fed. Rep. 64; United States v. Union Pac. R.R. [****10] Co. et al., 188 Fed. Rep. 110.

The clause in the Pacific Railroad Act authorizing the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific to consolidate their lines gave the Union Pacific no right to buy the Southern Pacific. Louis. & Nash. R.R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U.S. 677; Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry., 161 U.S. 646; Un. Pac. v. Mason City & Ft. Dodge Ry. Co., 199 U.S. 160.

The acquisition of the controlling interest in the Southern Pacific system by the Union Pacific tended to suppress competition, and therefore was in restraint of trade; also tended to monopoly, and is in violation of the Sherman Act. Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U.S. 244; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; Penna. R.R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 7 Atl. Rep. 368, 374; Stockton v. Central R.R. of N.J., 50 N.J. Eq. 52; United States v. Am. Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106.

The ownership by the Union Pacific of less than a majority of the stock in the Southern Pacific, Santa Fe, Northern Pacific, Great Northern, and San Pedro lines tended to suppress competition and create a monopoly and is inhibited by the Sherman Act. Central R.R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Georgia, 582; Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co., 130 [****11] U.S. 408; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274; Louis. & Nash. R.R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U.S. 677; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry., 161 U.S. 646; Penna. R.R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 7 Atl. Rep. 368, 374; People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Illinois, 268; Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Oh. St. 666; Stockton v. Central R.R. of N.J., 50 N.J. Eq. 52; United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. Rep. 179; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290.

The fact that the Union Pacific has, since the commencement of this suit, sold the balance of its stock in the Great Northern and Northern Pacific and in the Santa Fe is no reason why an injunction should not be granted. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290.

The control of the San Pedro road under the circumstances of this case tended to suppress competition and is void, although that line was not completed at the time of the acquisition of the stock therein. Commonwealth v. Beech Creek R.R. Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 223; Farrington v. Stucky, 165 Fed. Rep. 325; Hamilton v. Savannah, Florida & W. Ry., 49 Fed. Rep. 412; [****12] Hartford & New Haven R.R. Co. v. N.Y. & New Haven R.R. Co., 3 Robertson (N.Y. Superior Court), 411; Inter. Com. Comm. v. Phila. & Reading R.R. Co., 123 Fed. Rep. 969; Langdon v. Branch, 37 Fed. Rep. 449; Penna. R.R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 7 Atl. Rep. 368, 374; State v. Hartford & New Haven R.R. Co., 29 Connecticut, 538; Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., 166 Fed. Rep. 251; United States v. Patterson, 59 Fed. Rep. 280; United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. Rep. 177; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1.

The combination of steamship lines between American and foreign ports for the purpose of suppressing competition is within the inhibitions of the Sherman Act. Thomsen v. Union Castle Mail S.S. Co., 166 Fed. Rep. 251.

The Government's brief contains a synopsis of the constitutional and statutory provisions of the several States and Territories on the subject of parallel and competing lines.

Mr. N. H. Loomis and Mr. P. F. Dunne for appellees:

The object which the Union Pacific had in view in acquiring an interest in the Southern Pacific, was not to suppress competition or to obtain a monopoly, but to secure a permanent relationship with the Southern Pacific [****13] which would insure for it a perpetual through line to San Francisco, as contemplated by Congress, and give to it as well, an entrance into all the traffic producing centers of California.

As to the conception which Congress and the public had, of a single, indivisible line of railroad extending from the Missouri River, with continuous rails to the Pacific Ocean, see act of July 1, 1862. Not only did Congress provide for the permanent physical continuity of the proposed railroads, but gave power to any two or more of them to consolidate and thus place themselves under a single management. §§ 10, 12, 16, act of July 1, 1862, 12 Stat. 497; § 16, act of July 2, 1864, 13 Stat. 362. See Ames v. Kansas, 111 U.S. 449.

GG ÁMÈJÀ FÉJÉ FLÁHÁJÉDÁ HÁRÉ HÁI ÁSÉO ÁFÉFG ÉÁFÉFG LÁFÉFG ÁFÉFG ÁFÉFG

The hope and expectation of a single, indivisible line of railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean could not be fully realized as long as the ownership was vested in separate corporations and the operation in different managements.

It is clear from the testimony that the officials of the Union Pacific regarded the Southern Pacific not as a competitive, but as a connecting line.

The testimony of the witnesses and the surrounding circumstances demonstrate [****14] that the object and intent of purchasing the stock of the Southern Pacific, was to protect the integrity of the through line from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast and to procure for the Union Pacific a permanent entrance into interior California points; it was not to obtain a competing line or to stifle competition.

This intent was shown by betterments. As to deducting intent from actions of the parties see United States v. American Tobacco Company, 221 U.S. 106.

The Southern Pacific was not bound to agree to joint tariffs under any law in force when the stock purchase was made.

There was no law in 1901 by which that company could be forced to grant other than local rates between Ogden and San Francisco on traffic tendered to it by the Union Pacific; nor did the Pacific Railroad Act of July 2, 1864, which required the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, as well as the other roads included therein, to be operated and used for all purposes of communication and travel so far as the public and Government are concerned as one continuous line extend to requiring joint tariffs. L.R. &c. R.R. Co. v. E.T. Va. & G., 2 I.C.C. Rep. 456, and 3 I.C.C. Rep. 1, 6.

This court has [****15] held that the fixing of rates is a legislative power which cannot be exercised by the courts. The Express Cases, 117 U.S. 1, 28; Central Stock Yards v. Louisville & C. Ry. Co., 192 U.S. 568, 571; Oregon Short Line & U.N. Ry. Co. v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 51 Fed. Rep. 465, 474; Little Rock & M.R. Co. v. St. Louis S.W. Ry. Co., 63 Fed. Rep. 775.

The want of power to compel railroads to enter into such agreements led to the adoption of the Hepburn Act, §§ 15, 34 Stat. 590, and the Interstate Commerce Commission was authorized to establish through routes, fix rates and to determine the division of the through rate between connecting carriers; but as to the law prior thereto, see Southern Pacific v. Int. Com. Comm., 200 U.S. 536, 553; Chicago & N.W. Ry. v. Osborne, 52 Fed. Rep. 915.

The want of legal power on the part of the Union Pacific to compel the Southern Pacific to recognize the usual incidents of a through route and the discretion possessed by the Southern Pacific to do as its own welfare might dictate with respect to through rates, gave to that company additional advantages, and made it possible for the Southern Pacific to more effectively control the situation.

The so-called [****16] Portland route to San Francisco is not a practicable one. Union Pacific officials had frequently considered the opening of the Portland gateway for San Francisco traffic, but had always concluded that it would be an unprofitable move and therefore it was not done. One serious objection was the length of the line. Portland is substantially the same distance from Omaha as San Francisco is, and the rate to San Francisco through Portland would have to be the same as the rate via the short, direct line through Ogden; and the rate to Portland was the same as the rate to San Francisco. The Union Pacific would receive no greater revenue for hauling freight through Portland to San Francisco than it would for the same freight delivered at Portland.

As a matter of fact the Portland route to San Francisco has never been used, although it has been open, physically, since 1884.

The most conclusive point, showing that the Portland route to San Francisco is and always has been, an impracticable one, is the fact that the Northern rail lines terminating at Seattle, Tacoma and Portland have never been able to carry any substantial amount of transcontinental traffic to or from San Francisco.

GG ÁNÈJÀ FÈH FLÁH JÚÉDÀ HÀÉ HÀÍ ÁSÉOÀÉFG ÈÉFG LÀJ FGÁWÈSÓY QÀGFHÈÉFG

[****17] The Government's argument is that the Portland route to San Francisco could have been used by the Union Pacific, in view of the successful operation of the Sunset line between New York and San Francisco via New Orleans by the Southern Pacific. The conditions surrounding the operation of the Sunset route are so dissimilar, however, that it cannot be regarded as a parallel case. In the first place it is operated under a single management from New York to San Francisco and California business is given preferred attention. The freight is carried by boat from New York to New Orleans without stop, the California freight quickly transferred to cars waiting upon the wharves and transported in trainload lots to Los Angeles and San Francisco. It is a service which cannot be duplicated by any other broken water and rail line.

The traffic upon which complainant mainly relies to establish competitive relations between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific in 1901, was traffic between the Atlantic seaboard and the middle west on the one hand and California points on the other. As to all this traffic the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific were not competitors, but connections, and in [****18] a sense, partners.

A railroad is not a competitor of its connections on business handled by them jointly under a through tariff.

Southern Pacific v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U.S. 536.

In the Standard Oil Case, 221 U.S. 1, 80, this court recognized the legality of combining various pipe lines, in order to make a continuous line, and declared that an agreement or combination so to do would not be repugnant to the Sherman Act.

Some of the reasons why Union Pacific was not a competitor of Southern Pacific's Sunset route are that it was a connection of the Southern Pacific, handling through business on a joint tariff, to which the Southern Pacific had voluntarily agreed. In entering upon this relationship and agreeing to the joint tariff, the Union Pacific knew that the Southern Pacific possessed another line via New Orleans and that it would endeavor to route traffic that way and get the long haul whenever circumstances permitted it. But notwithstanding that fact the Union Pacific was willing to continue the relationship. As a matter of fact it had no choice about the matter; it was compelled to submit to these conditions. The Southern Pacific was not only a partner [****19] but a dominant partner -- a partner with which the Union Pacific was required to associate or go out of business. With no rails of its own into California and no other railroad but the Southern Pacific to handle its California traffic, it was impossible for it to occupy the position of an independent, hostile competitor.

The same principle is also controlling when we consider that as between the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific, San Francisco is a local non-competitive point on the Southern Pacific, situated eight hundred miles distant from the western terminus of the Union Pacific.

In the next place, the Government's argument assumes that two parts of the same railroad can compete with each other; that is to say, that that portion of the Southern Pacific Railroad extending from San Francisco to Ogden can compete with that portion thereof extending from San Francisco to New York.

This assumption cannot be correct, as it is obvious that a railroad company cannot compete with itself.

Furthermore, the Union Pacific was a constituent member of the Ogden route before the purchase, and it continued as such thereafter. If the Ogden route, including the Union Pacific, competed [****20] with the Sunset route before the purchase, it still competes with it; if it did not compete with it before the purchase, it does not compete with it now. Competitive conditions between the two routes have not been changed by placing the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific under a common management.

As the Southern Pacific controlled the routing of California business, and the Union Pacific could obtain the business through the friendly interposition of that company only, it cannot be maintained that the Union Pacific was a competitor of the company it was dependent upon to get the business.

If the Southern Pacific was a competitor of the Union Pacific on California business, because of the Sunset route, and the Union Pacific cannot own the stock of the Southern Pacific, then it will be impossible for any of the large railroads of the country to extend their lines by purchase or consolidation. Every railroad with more than one gateway is in the same predicament. If the Government were devising a scheme to prevent the consolidation of all railroads, regardless of whether they were parallel or connecting lines, a better one could not have been concocted than the theory adopted [***21] in this case.

GG ÁMÈJÀ FÈÈ FLÁHÙÉDÀ HÀÉ HÀÍ ÁSÈoÁFG ÈÈFG LÀJFGÁÈSÓYQÁGFHÈÈFG

Another reason why the Union Pacific should not be considered as a competitor of the Southern Pacific on transcontinental business to and from California points is that it is but one link in the all-rail through line from the Atlantic seaboard to San Francisco, while the Southern Pacific has a continuous line from New York to San Francisco, under a single management. The Union Pacific is dependent not only on the Southern Pacific on the west, but on its eastern connections as well, to fix a through rate or to maintain a through service; in itself it could do nothing without the voluntary cooperation of the lines extending east from Omaha or Kansas City.

If one line is the competitor of another merely because both of them happen to be links in systems of through routes which compete with each other, practically every railroad in the United States is a competitor of every other railroad in the United States, and under those conditions not one line could purchase or consolidate with another line because of its being a competitor.

Complainant's testimony as to the existence of separate soliciting agencies and of the consolidation of certain of those agencies subsequent [***22] to 1901 does not prove that the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific were in competition with each other.

All the large railroad systems in the United States have several gateways, representing different routes, through which their traffic may be handled; for instance, the New York Central, Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio railroads have among others, their St. Louis and Chicago gateways; the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, its Omaha, Kansas City and St. Paul gateways; the Missouri Pacific, its Pueblo and El Paso gateways; the Southern Railway, its Memphis and New Orleans gateways; the Louisville & Nashville, its St. Louis, Memphis and New Orleans gateways.

It is the effort of soliciting agents to secure business through these different gateways, as varying circumstances require them to solicit in favor of the one or the other, which induces the belief that there is competition between the routes represented by them, even though the agents may be working in the interests of the same carrier. A brief consideration of the proposition will disclose its fallacy.

Complainant's witnesses who expressed the opinion that the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific were competing upon California [***23] business did so entirely upon the assumption that the rivalry of soliciting agents was the competition of railroads. The testimony shows, however, how fallacious such testimony is and demonstrates that the strife for business may merely be the competition which is constantly going on between agents in the service of the same principal.

As the work of soliciting agents against each other may be in pursuance of a common employment and the results of their labors for the benefit of the same railroad or combination of connecting railroads, testimony as to the rivalry of soliciting agents cannot be used to show the existence of competition between the routes which they represent.

The fact that two railroads have separate soliciting agents does not necessarily prove that the railroads they represent are competitors.

The Government itself asserts that the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific are not competing at the present time and yet it appears that there are separate soliciting agencies representing those companies at New York and San Francisco and other points.

The other alleged competitive routes of minor importance did not make the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific competitors [***24] in any direct and substantial sense.

In order to bring the competition within the inhibition of the Sherman Act, it must be direct and substantial. Competition which is indirect and remote is not competition within the meaning of the statute; traffic unsubstantial in amount is not included within the terms of the law. When the Government seeks to set aside transactions as in restraint of trade and commerce, the burden rests upon it not only to prove the restraint of commerce, but the restraint of a substantial volume of commerce. It must affirmatively show that the competition was of some practical importance and that the restraint of commerce involved was unreasonable.

GG ÁMÈJÀ FÉL FLÁH JÚÉDÁ HÁRÍ ÁSÉO ÁEFG ÉAÉFG LÁJFG ÁMÈJÉSÓY QÁGFH ÉAÉFG

The Sherman Act was not intended to apply to combinations whose effect upon interstate commerce was indirect or incidental only, or which might remotely affect that commerce. United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505, 568.

This court puts contracts which only indirectly and incidentally restrain interstate commerce upon the same basis with respect to validity as legislation of the States, of which there are numerous examples, which incidentally and indirectly affect interstate commerce and yet are [****25] valid because it is not a direct regulation of such commerce. Anderson v. United States, 171 U.S. 604, 615, and Addyston Pipe and Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 229.

This court held in one of the most important and farreaching decisions ever announced by it, that the Sherman Act does not prohibit every contract, combination, etc., in restraint of trade, but only those which unreasonably restrain trade and commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; United States v. Am. Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106; Cincinnati Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179; Phillips v. Cement Co., 125 Fed. Rep. 594; Kimball v. Atchison & C. Ry. Co., 46 Fed. Rep. 888; State v. Cent. of Ga. Ry., 109 Georgia, 716.

Treating all of the traffic over the various routes of minor importance as competitive and considering it in the aggregate, it is a mere bagatelle when compared with the entire traffic of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific. It amounts to only 0.88 per cent of the tonnage of the Southern Pacific and to only 3.10 per cent. of the tonnage of the Union Pacific, while the revenue of the Southern Pacific from this traffic aggregates only 1.25 per cent of its total revenue, an amount [****26] which it is not conceivable that the Union Pacific would have cared to invest millions in Southern Pacific stock to suppress. See Rogers v. Nashville &c. Ry. Co., 91 Fed. Rep. 299, and cases supra.

The purchase of the stock of the Northern Pacific and the Santa Fe by defendants, and the settlement of right of way controversies with the Clark interests, which resulted in the joint construction and ownership of the San Pedro road, were not acts performed with the object of suppressing competition or of acquiring a monopoly, nor did they have that effect.

A review of the entire record demonstrates that a monopoly has not been created, that there has been no suppression of competition, and that there was no conspiracy to effectuate either purpose. The record shows, on the other hand, that the interest which the Union Pacific acquired in the Southern Pacific has been of direct and substantial benefit to trade and commerce.

The Union Pacific ownership of Southern Pacific stock was not a control, and did not import, as a matter of law, the power in any view of the case to restrict competition. The Union Pacific merely became a minority stockholder, having by its first purchase acquired [****27] only about 37 1/2 per cent of the stock and never acquired a majority. While the Union Pacific may have been able to keep control with less than a majority of stock there was always a possibility that it could not do so. Stock control condemned by this court has been of an actual majority. Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry., 161 U.S. 671; Northern Securities Case, 120 Fed. Rep. 726; S.C., 193 U.S. 106; Noyes on Intercorporate Relations, § 294; and see Pullman Co. v. Mo. Pac. R.R., 115 U.S. 578.

The acquisition and ownership by the Union Pacific of the Huntington stock by out and out sale to it by a stockholder in the market, is not, as such, within the power of Congress to regulate, under the commerce clause of the Constitution. United States v. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1.

The acquisition and ownership of property by a corporation or citizen of a State is not interstate commerce. The Union Pacific is a Utah corporation and had power to purchase stock of the Southern Pacific Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U.S. 628; St. Louis R.R. v. Terre Haute R.R., 145 U.S. 407; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168.

A state corporation is subject to regulation by Congress only to the extent and by the measure [****28] of its engagement in interstate commerce. Employers' Liability Cases, 207 U.S. 463, 499. See Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U.S. 436, 442; Louisville & Nashville Case, 161 U.S. 677; Mobile &c. R.R. Co. v. Mississippi, 210 U.S. 187, 202.

GG ÁMÈJÀ FÉÉ FLÁHÁJÉÓDÁ HÁÉ HLA Í ÁSÉO ÁÉFG ÉÉÉFG LÁJFGÁMÈÉSÓY QÁGFHÉÉÉG

The authority of the several States to permit railroads within their respective territory to consolidate on terms prescribed by each is inconsistent with the assertion of a power of Congress to the same effect, as it could only prescribe a uniform rule.

The purchase by the Union Pacific of the Huntington stock by out and out sale is not within the purview of the Sherman Law. An out and out sale is quite distinguishable from a collateral stipulation or covenant running with the sale.

The combination or conspiracy prohibited by the Sherman Law is essentially a process terminable in future. It is not like a sale completed when made. Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181. For some of these collateral agreements to sales see Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N.Y. 473; Nordenfeldt v. Maxim, App. Cas., 1904, 535; Bancroft v. Embossing Co., 72 N.H. 407; Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179.

Something more than the acquisition of a competing property is necessary to [****29] bring the purchaser and seller within the Sherman Law. Shawnee Compress Co. Case, 209 U.S. 434; Chemical Co. v. Provident Co., 64 Fed. Rep. 950; The Greene Case, 52 Fed. Rep. 115; Roller Co. v. Cushman, 143 Massachusetts, 355, 364; Oakdale Co. v. Garst, 28 Atl. Rep. 973. See also Harriman v. Menzies, 115 California, 19; Collins v. Locke, L.R., 4 App. Cas. 674; Skrainka v. Scharring-Hausen, 8 Mo. App. 522; Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N.Y. 519; Cohen v. Berlin, 56 N.Y. Supp. 558; Kellog v. Larkin, 3 Pinney (Wis.), 123; Dolph v. Troy Co., 28 Fed. Rep. 554; Mathews v. Associated Press, 32 N.E. Rep. 981; Vinegar Co. v. Voehrbach, 148 N.Y. 58; Macaulay v. Tierney, 19 R.I. 255; Bohn v. Mfg. Co., 54 Minnesota, 233; Cote v. Murphy, 159 Pa. St. 420; Ins. Co. v. Bd. of Underwriters, 67 Fed. Rep. 317; Nat'l Ass'n v. Cumming, 170 N.Y. 315; Vogelen v. Ganter, 167 Massachusetts, 92, opinion of Holmes, J.

A competitor may be driven out by lawful competition, Mogul S.S. Co. v. McGregor, L.R., 23 Q.B.D. 612; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. Rep. 459; Bonsack v. Smith, 70 Fed. Rep. 388, and if so he may also lawfully be bought out by voluntary contract.

Mere size or aggregation by purchase [****30] does not necessarily amount to violations of the Sherman Law.

The same stockholders may lawfully own a controlling interest in each of two competing corporations. Bigelow v. Lcalumet Co., 167 Fed. Rep. 704, 727.

Opinion by: DAY

Opinion

---

[*79] [*54] [***130] MR. JUSTICE DAY delivered the opinion of the court.

The case was begun in the United States Circuit Court for the District of Utah to enforce the provisions of the so-called Sherman Anti-trust Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, against certain alleged conspiracies and combinations in restraint of interstate commerce. The case in its principal aspect grew out of the purchase by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in the month of February, 1901, of certain shares of the capital stock of the Southern Pacific Company from the devisees under the will of the late Collis P. Huntington, who had [**55] formerly owned the stock. Other shares of Southern Pacific stock were acquired at the same time, the holding of the Union Pacific amounting to 750,000 shares or about 37 1/2% (subsequently increased to 46%) of the outstanding stock of the Southern Pacific Company. The stock is held for the Union Pacific Company by one of its [****31] proprietary companies, The Oregon Short Line Railroad Company. The Government contends that the domination over and control of the Southern Pacific Company given to the Union Pacific Company by this purchase of stock brings the transaction within the terms of the Anti-trust Act. A large amount of testimony was taken and the case heard before four Circuit Judges of the Eighth Circuit, resulting in a decree dismissing the bill. 188 Fed. Rep. 102.

Prior to the stock purchase in 1901 the Union Pacific [*80] system may briefly be described as a line of railroad from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast, namely, from Omaha, Nebraska, or perhaps more strictly from Council

GG ÁMÈJÀ FÉBÉ ÉLÁHÚÉDÁ HÁRÉ I LÁ Í ÁSÓAÉFG ÉÁFHÉLÁJFGÁMÈJÉSÓYQÁGFHÉÁFH

Bluffs, Iowa, and from Kansas City, Missouri, to Ogden, [***131] Utah, and Portland, Oregon, with various branches and connections, and a line of steamships from Portland to San Francisco, California, and from Portland to the Orient; and a line of steamships from San Francisco to the Orient (the Occidental & Oriental Steamship Company), in which the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific each owned a half interest. The main line from Council Bluffs to Ogden, a little over 1,000 miles in length, with the [***32] branch from Kansas City, through Denver, Colorado, to Cheyenne, Wyoming, on the main line, was owned and operated by the Union Pacific; the line from Granger, Wyoming, on the main line of the Union Pacific, to Huntington, Oregon, was owned and operated by The Oregon Short Line Railroad Company, the capital stock of which was owned by the Union Pacific; and the line from Huntington to Portland was owned and operated by the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, the stock ownership of which was in the Oregon Short Line. The boat line from Portland to San Francisco and to the Orient, The Portland & Asiatic Steamship Company, was organized early in 1901, its stock being owned by the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company.

The Southern Pacific Company, a holding company of the State of Kentucky, also engaged in operating certain lines of railroad under lease, controlled a line of railroad extending from New Orleans through Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California and Oregon to Portland, reaching Los Angeles and San Francisco, with several branch lines and connections extending into tributary territory. A line of boats running between New York and New Orleans was also owned and [***33] operated by the Southern Pacific, and later the same ships entered the port of Galveston, [*81] where also the Southern Pacific reached tidewater, and it had branches extending to various points in northern Texas connecting with other lines of road. The Southern Pacific also operated, under lease, the railroad of The Central Pacific Railway Company, all the stock of which is owned by the Southern Pacific. The lines of the Central Pacific consisted of the road from San Francisco to Ogden, about 800 miles in length and connecting at the latter place with the Union Pacific and The Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company's line. It also had various branches in and about California aggregating in mileage about 500 miles. The Southern Pacific also owned a majority of the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which operated a line of steamships plying to ports in the Orient and running between San Francisco and Panama which, with the Panama Railroad and its boats, constituted the so-called Panama Route.

The contention of the Government is that, prior to the stock purchase, the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific were competing systems of railroad engaged in interstate commerce, [***34] and acted independently as to a large amount of such carrying trade, and that since the acquisition of the stock in question the dominating power of the Union Pacific has eliminated competition between these two systems, and that such domination makes the combination one in restraint of trade within the meaning of the first section of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, and the transaction an attempt to monopolize interstate trade within the provisions of the second section of the act.

In view of the recent consideration of the history and meaning of the act (Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases, 221 U.S. 1 and 106, respectively) it would be superfluous to enter upon any general consideration of its origin and scope. In certain aspects the law has been thoroughly considered and its construction authoritatively settled, and in determining the present controversy we need but [*82] briefly restate some of the conclusions reached. HN1↑ The act applies to interstate railroads as carriers conducting interstate commerce, and one of the principal instrumentalities thereof. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290; [United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. \[\*\*\*35\] 505](#). [**56] The act is intended to reach combinations and conspiracies which restrain freedom of action in interstate trade and commerce and unduly suppress or restrict the play of competition in the conduct thereof. United States v. Joint Traffic Association, supra. In that case an agreement between competing interstate railroads for the purpose of fixing and maintaining rates was condemned.

"It is," said the court (p. 571), "the combination of these large and powerful corporations, covering vast sections of territory and influencing trade throughout the whole extent thereof, and acting as one body in all the matters over which the combination extends, that constitutes the alleged evil, and in regard to which, so far as the combination operates upon and restrains interstate commerce, Congress has power to legislate and to prohibit."

In the Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, this court dealt with a combination differing in character from that considered in the Trans-Missouri and Joint [***132] Traffic Cases, and it was there held that the transfer to a holding company of the stock of two competing interstate railroads, thereby effectually destroying [****36] the power which had theretofore existed to compete in interstate commerce, was a restraint upon such commerce, and Mr. Justice Harlan, announcing the affirmance of the decree of the Circuit Court said (p. 337):

GG ÁMÈJÀ FÉB GLÁHÚÉDÁ HÁRÍ LÁÍ ÁSÓaÉFG ÉÉÉFHGLÁJFGÁMÈSÓYQÁGFHÉÉÉHÍ

"In all the prior cases in this court HN2 the Anti-Trust Act has been construed as forbidding any combination which by its necessary operation destroys or restricts free competition among those engaged in interstate commerce; in [*83] other words, that to destroy or restrict free competition in interstate commerce was to restrain such commerce. Now, can this court say that such a rule is prohibited by the Constitution or is not one that Congress could appropriately prescribe when exerting its power under the *commerce clause of the Constitution*? Whether the free operation of the normal laws of competition is a wise and wholesome rule for trade and commerce is an economic question which this court need not consider or determine."

Mr. Justice Brewer, who delivered a concurring opinion, while expressing the view that the former cases were rightly decided, said that they went too far in giving the reasons for the judgments, and declared his view that Congress only intended [****37] to reach and destroy those contracts which were in direct restraint of trade, unreasonable and against public policy. He was nevertheless emphatic in condemning the combination effected by the Northern Securities Company and the transfer of stocks to it, which policy, he declared, might be extended until a single corporation with stocks owned by three or four parties would be in practical control of both roads, or, viewing the possibilities of combination, the control of the whole transportation system of the country, and, in concluding his concurring opinion, said (p. 363):

"It must also be remembered that under present conditions a single railroad is, if not a legal, largely a practical, monopoly, and the arrangement by which the control of these two competing roads was merged in a single corporation broadens and extends such monopoly. I cannot look upon it as other than an unreasonable combination in restraint of interstate commerce -- one in conflict with state law and within the letter and spirit of the statute and the power of Congress."

Of the Sherman Act and kindred statutes, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice McKenna, said in *National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U.S. 1\*\*\*\*381 115, 129*:

[*84] "According to them, competition not combination, should be the law of trade. If there is evil in this it is accepted as less than that which may result from the unification of interest, and the power such unification gives. And that legislatures may so ordain this court has decided. *United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1*; *United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290*; *United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505*; *Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197*; *Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375*."

In the recent discussion of the history and meaning of the act in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases this court declared that the statute should be given a reasonable construction, with a view to reaching those undue restraints of interstate trade which are intended to be prohibited and punished, and in those cases it is clearly stated that the decisions in the former cases had been made upon an application of that rule and there was no suggestion that they had not been correctly decided. In the Tobacco Case, after referring to the previous decision in the Standard Oil Case and the decisions in the Trans-Missouri [****39] and Joint Traffic Cases, the doctrine was tersely summarized by the Chief Justice, speaking for the court, as follows (p. 179):

"Applying the rule of reason to the construction of the statute, it was held in the [**57] Standard Oil Case that as the words 'restraint of trade' at common law and in the law of this country at the time of the adoption of the Antitrust Act only embraced acts or contracts or agreements or combinations which operated to the prejudice of the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the due course of trade or which, either because of their inherent nature or effect or because of the evident purpose of the acts, etc., injuriously restrained trade, that the words as used in the statute were designed to have and did have but a like significance. It was therefore pointed out that the statute did not forbid or restrain [*85] the power to make normal and usual contracts to further trade by resorting to all normal methods, whether by agreement or otherwise, to accomplish such purpose. In other words, it was held, not that acts which the statute prohibited could be removed from the control of its prohibitions by a finding [****40] that they were reasonable, but that the duty to interpret which inevitably arose from the general character of the term restraint of trade [***133] required that the words restraint of trade should be given a meaning which would not destroy the individual right to contract and render difficult if not impossible any movement of trade in the channels of interstate commerce, -- the free movement of which it was the purpose of the statute to protect."

GG ÁMÈJÀ FÉB Í LÁHÁJÉODA HÁRÉ Í LÁ Í ÁSÉO Í FG ÉRÉFHGLÁJFGÁMÈJÉSÓYÓÁGFHÉRÉE €

We take it therefore that it may be regarded as settled, applying the statute as construed in the decisions of this court, that HN3↑] a combination which places railroads engaged in interstate commerce in such relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation, whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed, is within the condemnation of the act. While the law may not be able to enforce competition, it can reach combinations which render competition impracticable. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375.

Nor do we think it can make any difference that instead of resorting to a holding company, as was done in the Northern Securities Case, the controlling interest in [***41] the stock of one corporation is transferred to the other. The domination and control, and the power to suppress competition, are acquired in the one case no less than in the other, and the resulting mischief, at which the statute was aimed, is equally effective whichever form is adopted. HN4↑] The statute in its terms embraces every contract or combination, in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce. This court has repeatedly [*86] held this general phraseology embraces all forms of combination, old and new. "In view of the many new forms of contracts and combinations," said the Chief Justice in the Standard Oil Case (p. 59), "which were being evolved from existing economic conditions, it was deemed essential by an all-embracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation." A more effectual form of combination to secure the control of a competing railroad than for one road to acquire a dominating stock interest in the other, could hardly be conceived. If it is true, as contended by the Government, that [***42] a stock interest sufficient for the purpose was obtained in the Southern Pacific Company, with a view to securing the control of that company and thus destroying or restricting competition with the Union Pacific in interstate trade, the transaction was in our opinion within the terms of the statute.

That the purchase was legal in the State where made and within corporate powers conferred by state authority constitutes no defense, if it contravenes the provisions of the Anti-trust Act, enacted by Congress in the exercise of supreme authority over interstate commerce. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, supra, 334; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, supra, 68; United States v. American Tobacco Co., supra, 183.

It is said, however, and this was the view of the majority of the Circuit Judges, that these railroads were not competing, but were engaged in a partnership in interstate carriage as connecting railroads, and it was further said that the Southern Pacific, because of its control of the line from Ogden to San Francisco and other California points, was the dominating partner. A large amount of the testimony in this voluminous record was given by railroad men of wide experience, [***43] business men and shippers, who, with [*87] practical unanimity, expressed the view that prior to the stock purchase in question the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific systems were in competition, sharp, well-defined and vigorous, for interstate trade. To compete is to strive for something which another is actively seeking and wishes to gain. The Southern Pacific through its agents, advertisements and literature had undertaken to obtain transportation for its "Sunset" or southerly route across the continent, while the Union Pacific had endeavored in the same territory to have [**58] freight shipped by way of its own and connecting lines, thus securing for itself about 1,000 miles of the haul to the coast.

HN5↑] To preserve from undue restraint the free action of competition in interstate commerce was the purpose which controlled Congress in enacting this statute, and the courts should construe the law with a view to effecting the object of its enactment.

Competition between two such systems consists not only in making rates, which, so far as the shipper was concerned, the proof shows, were by agreement, fixed at the same figure whichever route was used and then apportioned [***44] among the connecting carriers upon a basis satisfactory to themselves, but includes the character of the service rendered, the accommodation of the shipper in handling and caring for freight and the prompt recognition and adjustment of the shipper's claims. Advantages in these respects were the subjects of representation and the basis of solicitation by many active, opposing agencies. The maintenance of these by the rival companies promoted their business and increased their revenues. [***134] The inducement to maintain these points of advantage -- low rates, superiority of service and accommodation -- did not remain the same in the hands of a single dominating and common ownership as it was when they were the subjects of active promotion by competing owners whose success depended upon their accomplishment.

GGÍ ÁNÆÐA FÆÐI LÁHÁÐÓÐA HÆÐA Í LÁ Í AÐEÐA EFG FÆÐI HÁÐÍ FGÁMÉÐA SÓY QUÁGFH FÆÐI |

[*88] HN6 The consolidation of two great competing systems of railroad engaged in interstate commerce by a transfer to one of a dominating stock interest in the other creates a combination which restrains interstate commerce within the meaning of the statute, because, in destroying or greatly abridging the free operation of competition theretofore existing, it tends to higher [****45] rates. United States v. Joint Traffic Association, supra, 577. It directly tends to less activity in furnishing the public with prompt and efficient service in carrying and handling freight and in carrying passengers, and in attention to and prompt adjustment of the demands of patrons for losses, and in these respects puts interstate commerce under restraint. Nor does it make any difference that rates for the time being may not be raised and much money be spent in improvements after the combination is effected. It is the scope of such combinations and their power to suppress or stifle competition or create monopoly which determines the applicability of the act. Pearsall v. Great Northern Railway Co., 161 U.S. 646, 676; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, supra.

It is urged that this competitive traffic was infinitesimal when compared with the gross amount of the business transacted by both roads, and so small as only to amount to that incidental restraint of trade which ought not to be held to be within the law; but we think the testimony amply shows that, while these roads did a great deal of business for which they did not compete and that the competitive business was [****46] a comparatively small part of the sum total of all traffic, state and interstate, carried over them, nevertheless such competing traffic was large in volume, amounting to many millions of dollars. Before the transfer of the stock this traffic was the subject of active competition between these systems, but by reason of the power arising from such transfer it has since been placed under a common control. It was by no means a [*89] negligible part, but a large and valuable part, of interstate commerce which was thus directly affected.

The fact that the Southern Pacific had a road of its own from the Gulf to the Pacific Coast did not prevent competition for this traffic. The Union Pacific and its connections were engaged in the same carrying trade, and as a matter of fact were competing for that trade, by all the usual means of competition resorted to by rival railroad systems. As this court said, speaking by Mr. Justice Holmes, in Swift & Co. v. United States, supra, 398: "Commerce among the States is not a technical legal conception, but a practical one, drawn from the course of business." That commerce, as conducted from the East to the Pacific Coast, was in a substantial [****47] part the subject matter of rivalry and competition between these two systems. Since the stock transfer the companies have common officers and the rival soliciting agencies have been for the most part abandoned.

It is contended that the Union Pacific was but a connecting road and really had no line to San Francisco, but was dependent upon the Southern Pacific for such terms as it could make over the old Central Pacific line from Ogden to San Francisco. The facts disclose, as we have already said, that the Union Pacific had a line to Portland by way of the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company, and thence to San Francisco by steamboat connection. It may be admitted that this was a much longer route than by way of the Ogden connection, and that as a practical matter nearly all of the freight intended for San Francisco and nearby points went over the Ogden route, nevertheless the Portland route was a factor in rate making to the coast, and the testimony shows that the Union Pacific and the Southern [**59] Pacific up to the time of the sale of the stock had been working for many years under a satisfactory arrangement as to rates. It is going too far to say [****48] that the Union Pacific was entirely at the [*90] mercy of the Southern Pacific in making rates for freight by way of the Ogden connection because the latter company controlled the old Central Pacific line to San Francisco. It certainly would have been very detrimental to the Southern Pacific to have declined an arrangement for the carriage of freight received from the Union Pacific and its connections for transportation to California by way of the Ogden route. The traffic manager of the Southern Pacific testified that the division of the through rate from Omaha to San Francisco has been the same since 1870; that he thought it unfair to the Southern Pacific, but that it was the best that could be obtained at the time. One of the reasons for the Central Pacific leasing its lines to the Southern Pacific, as set forth in the lease, was that the Union Pacific had secured control of the Oregon Short Line and thereby obtained an outlet to the [***135] Pacific, other than over the Central Pacific, "and thus in that respect placed itself in opposition to the interests of the Central Pacific," and that it was "not only to the best interests of, but absolutely necessary that, the Central [****49] Pacific Railroad Company, in order to maintain itself against these diversions (of the Union Pacific and others), should be operated in connection with a friendly through line to the waters of the Atlantic."

GG ÁNÈJÀ FÆECLÁHÆDÁ HÆRÍ JLÁÍ ÆSÓÆFG ÆFHFÍ LÁJFGÁÆSÓYQÁGFHFÆHÍ

Nor do we think it can be justly said that because of the connection with the Rio Grande road at Ogden the Southern Pacific was in position to discriminate at will against the Union Pacific in such wise as to greatly impair the latter road's carrying trade upon eastbound freight. In this connection it is said that since the consolidation, notwithstanding the former published rates are maintained, the favoring attitude of the Southern Pacific to the Union Pacific practically destroyed the carrying trade from Ogden to the East for the Rio Grande system and necessitated the construction by the latter road of a new connection for California points, and that [*91] such would have been the fate of the Union Pacific upon disagreement as to rates with the Southern Pacific. In reference to this point we think it is pertinent to consider the acts of Congress known as the Pacific Railroad Acts. These acts required the two roads, the Central Pacific and Union Pacific, to be "operated [***50] and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line" (12 Stat. 489, 495, act of July 1, 1862, c. 120, § 12), and in such operation and use "to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others . . ." (13 Stat. 356, 362, act of July 2, 1864, c. 216, § 15). They also authorized the consolidation of the roads. These acts, it is said, are only intended to secure the permanent physical connection of the roads and to provide for equal accommodations upon the basis of independent carriage, and outline no method by which the two roads can be compelled to make a joint through rate, and that at the time of the stock transfer there was no such provision in the Interstate Commerce Acts. Therefore, it is said that the Union Pacific, no less than the Rio Grande, would have been practically at the mercy of the Southern Pacific in the favorable or unfavorable treatment which [***51] might have been accorded to it in the matter of through business to be transported eastwardly. The purpose of Congress to secure one permanent road to the coast so far as physical continuity is concerned is apparent, but we do not think the acts stop with that requirement. It is provided that facilities as to rates, time and transportation shall be without any discrimination of any kind in favor of either of said companies or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others, and the purpose of Congress [*92] to secure a continuous line of road, operating from the Missouri River to the Pacific Coast as one road, is further emphasized in the act of Congress of June 20, 1874, c. 331, 18 Stat. 111, making it an offense for any officer or agent of the companies authorized to construct the roads or engaged in the operation thereof, to refuse to operate and use the same for all purposes of communication, travel and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and making it a misdemeanor to refuse, in such operation and use, to afford and secure to each of said roads equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time and transportation, [***52] without any discrimination of any kind in favor of or adverse to any or either of said companies. Such practices of systematic and preconcerted discrimination as are said to have destroyed the Rio Grande's carrying trade as a connection for the East for business at Ogden would have violated the statute as discriminations adverse to the Union Pacific and be equally violative of the letter [**60] and spirit of the acts of Congress. Certainly such discriminations could be restrained by the courts (Union Pacific Railway Co. v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., 163 U.S. 564, 603, 604), and might possibly have resulted in a forfeiture of all rights under the acts of Congress. The obligation to keep faith with the Government continued, as did the legislative power of Congress concerning these roads, notwithstanding changed forms of ownership and organization. Union Pacific Railroad Company v. Mason City &c. Railroad Co., 199 U.S. 160.

It is further contended that the real purpose in acquiring the stock was not to obtain the control of the Southern Pacific as a system, but to secure the California connection via Ogden and to avoid the situation which has been termed the [***53] "bottling up" of the Union Pacific at that point. That process, we have undertaken to show, might have been detrimental to the Southern Pacific business [*93] in California, as it is apparent that much of it would not have gone over the "Sunset" route of the Southern [***136] Pacific. It may be conceded, as is undoubtedly the fact, that the connection at Ogden was a valuable one, the one practically and largely, if not exclusively, used in the transportation of freight to and from the State of California, but this case is not be be decided upon the theory that only so much of the Southern Pacific system as operates between Ogden and San Francisco has been acquired. Conceding for this purpose that it might have been legitimate, had it been practicable, to acquire the California connection at Ogden over the old Central Pacific line, we must consider what was in fact done, and that was the purchase of the controlling interest in the entire Southern Pacific system, consisting of ocean and river lines with a mileage of about 3,500 miles and railroad lines aggregating over 8,000 miles, together forming a transportation system from New York and other Atlantic ports to San Francisco [****54] and Portland and other Pacific Coast points, with various branches and connections, besides a steamship line from San Francisco to Panama and from San Francisco to the Orient and a half interest in another line between the two latter points. The purchase may be judged by what it in fact accomplished, and the natural and probable consequences of that which was done. Because it would have been lawful to gain, by purchase or otherwise, an entrance into California over the old Central Pacific, does not render it legal to acquire the entire system, largely engaged in interstate commerce in competition with the purchasing road.

GG ÁNÈJÀ FÉEJHÁHÁÉDÁ HÁÉ ËLÁ Í ÁSÉOáÉFG ÉÁÉFH Í LÁJFGÁÉÉSÓY QÁGFHÉÁÉH

HN7 In determining the validity of this combination we have a right to look also to the intent and purpose of those who conducted the transactions from which it arose and to the objects had in view. Swift & Co. v. United States, supra, 396; United States v. St. Louis Terminal, 224 U.S. 383, 395. It appears that at the time the Union Pacific was [*94] about to raise the means to effect the Southern Pacific stock purchase it authorized the issuance of $100,000,000 of bonds "for the purpose of meeting present and future financial requirements of the Company," provision [****55] being made for the use of the proceeds from $40,000,000 of this amount in the purchase of the Southern Pacific stock, with no designation whatever as to the purpose to which the balance, $60,000,000, should be applied. It is said that the remaining $60,000,000 were intended to be used in the acquisition of a part interest in the railroad system of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company, in view of the imminent probability of the purchase of that system by the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the Great Northern Railway Company. As a matter of fact, the Northern Pacific and Great Northern having each secured a half interest in the Burlington, the Union Pacific did acquire a large amount of the Northern Pacific stock with this $60,000,000. The failure to secure control of the Northern Pacific by acquiring a majority of its common stock resulted in the formation of the Northern Securities Company, terminating in the litigation of the Northern Securities Case and the judgment of this court reported in 193 U.S. 197. When that combination was declared illegal the Union Pacific interests undertook to compel a return of the Northern Pacific stock which they had turned over [****56] to the Northern Securities Company and opposed a distribution among the stockholders of the latter company of the stock of the Northern Pacific Company and the Great Northern Company which had been put into the combination. That attempt was dealt with in Harriman v. Northern Securities Company, 197 U.S. 244, and of the effect of the return of the Northern Pacific stock to the Union Pacific interests instead of the distribution of the stock and assets of the Northern Securities Company among its stockholders this court said (p. 297):

[*95] "It is clear enough that the delivery to complainants of a majority of the total Northern Pacific stock and a ratable distribution of the remaining assets to the other Securities stockholders would not only be in itself inequitable, but would [**61] directly contravene the object of the Sherman Law and the purposes of the Government suit.

"The Northern Pacific system, taken in connection with the Burlington system, is competitive with the Union Pacific system, and it seems obvious to us, the entire record considered, that the decree sought by complainants would tend to smother that competition."

In view of the testimony we think the [****57] evident purpose of issuing the $100,000,000 of bonds was to acquire a fund to be used for the acquisition of the stock of the Southern Pacific, a great competitive system, and also of the stocks of other competing roads.

After acquiring the Southern Pacific stock, Mr. Harriman, who dominated in the affairs of the Union Pacific, became President and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Southern Pacific Company, with the same ample power which he had in like positions in the Union Pacific Company and the companies owned and controlled by it. These facts cannot be [***137] lost sight of in determining the object and scope of the transaction in question, which resulted, as we have said, in that unified control which has in its power the suppression of competition.

GG ÁNÈJÁ FÉEJÍ LÁHÁJÉÓDA HÁRÉ FLÁ Í ÁSÖA EFG ÉEEFHÍ LÁJFGÁWÉJÉSÓYQÁGFHÉEEÍ

But it is said that no such control was in fact obtained; that at no time did the Union Pacific acquire a majority of the stock of the Southern Pacific, and that at first it acquired but thirty-seven and a fraction per cent. Which was afterwards somewhat increased and diminished until about 46% of the stock is now held. In any event, this stock did prove sufficient to obtain the control of the Southern Pacific. [****58] It may be true that in small corporations the holding of less than a majority of the stock would not amount to control, but the testimony in this case is [*96] ample to show that, distributed as the stock is among many stockholders, a compact, united ownership of 46% is ample to control the operations of the corporation. This is frankly admitted in the testimony of Mr. Harriman, the prime mover in the purchase of the Southern Pacific. It was purchased, he declared, for the purpose of getting a dominating interest in the Southern Pacific Company, and, he added, the Union Pacific did thus acquire such interest.

Reaching the conclusion that the Union Pacific thus obtained the control of a competing railroad system and thereby effected a combination in restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act, the question remains, What should be the relief in such circumstances? HN8[<sup>1</sup>] The remedies provided in the statute, generally speaking, were said by this court in the Standard Oil Case, supra, to be two-fold in character (p. 78):

"1st. To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which we have found to have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute. [****59] 2nd. The exertion of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist in violation of the statute, and thus neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained has brought and will continue to bring about."

In applying this general rule of relief we must deal with each case as we find it, and in the present one the object to be attained is to restrain the operation of and effectually terminate the combination created by the transfer of the stock to the Union Pacific Company. In that view the decree to be entered in the District Court shall provide an injunction against the right to vote this stock while in the ownership or control of the Union Pacific Company, or any corporation owned by it, or while held by any corporation or person for the Union Pacific Company, and forbid any transfer or disposition thereof in such wise as [*97] to continue its control, and shall provide an injunction against the payment of dividends upon such stock while thus held, except to a receiver to be appointed by the District Court to collect and hold such dividends until disposed of by the decree of the [****60] court.

As the court below dismissed the Government's bill, it was unnecessary there to consider the disposition of the shares of stock acquired by the Union Pacific Company, which acquisition, we hold, constituted an unlawful combination in violation of the Anti-trust Act. In order to effectually conclude the operating force of the combination such disposition shall be made subject to the approval and decree of the District Court, and any plan for the disposition of this stock must be such as to effectually dissolve the unlawful combination thus created. The court shall proceed, upon the presentation of any plan, to hear the Government and defendants and may bring in any additional parties whose presence may be necessary to a final disposition of the stock in conformity to the views herein expressed.

As to the suggestion made at the oral argument by the Attorney General, in response to a query from the court as to the nature of the decree, that one might be entered which, while destroying the unlawful combination in so far as the Union Pacific secured control of the competing line of road extending from New Orleans and [**62] Galveston to San Francisco and Portland, would [****61] permit the Union Pacific to retain the Central Pacific connection from Ogden to San Francisco and thereby to control that line to the coast, thus effecting such a continuity of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific from the Missouri River to San Francisco as was contemplated by the acts of Congress under which they were constructed, it should be said that nothing herein shall be considered as preventing the Government or any party in interest, if so desiring, from presenting to the District Court a plan for accomplishing [*98] this result, or as preventing it from adopting and giving effect to any such plan so presented.

Any plan or plans shall be presented to the District Court within three months from the receipt of the mandate of this court, failing which, or, upon the rejection by the court of plans submitted within such time, the court shall proceed by receivership and sale, if necessary, to dispose of such stock in such wise as to dissolve such unlawful combination.

GG ÁNÈJÀ FÆJI LÁHÁÉÓdÁ HÆRÍ GLÁ Í ÁSÖaEFG ÆFFFÍ LÁJFGÁWÈÁSÓYQÁGFHFÆFFFÍ F

The Government has appealed from the [***138] decree which is a general one dismissing the bill. So far as concerns the attempt to acquire the Northern Pacific stock and the stock of The Atchison, Topeka [***62] & Santa Fe Railway Company, afterwards abandoned, and a certain interest in the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, and other features of the case which were dealt with and disposed of by the decree and opinion of the court below, it is sufficient, without going into these matters in detail, to say that as to them we find no reason to disturb the action of the court below, but for the reasons stated the decree should be reversed and one entered in conformity to the views herein expressed, so far as concerns the acquisition of the Southern Pacific stock.

Reversed in part, the District Court to retain its jurisdiction to see that the decree above outlined is made effectual.

MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER took no part in the hearing or determination of this case.

For opinion on motion to amend the mandate see p. 470, post.

---

End of Document

United States v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co.

District Court, S.D. Ohio, E.D.

December 28, 1912

No. 1,584

Reporter

203 F. 295 *; 1912 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 981 **

UNITED STATES v. LAKE SHORE & M.S. RY. CO. et al.

Core Terms

---

coal, Valley, traffic, stock, roads, railroads, Lake, Shore, coal company, shares, river, lines, shippers, fields, purchasing, rates, properties, trunk line, commerce, connections, conditions, railroad company, originating, ownership, freight, capital stock, bonds, joint ownership, transportation, continuation

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

Mere differences in locations of coal mines within the same general field, as well as differences in quality owing to differences in fields, cannot rightfully be made the basis for eliminating effective competition as between railroads traversing substantially the same territory along parallel lines from neighboring mines of the same coal field, or even of different coal fields, to the same general destinations; and the evil effects upon competition concerning rail roads and coal mines so related are accentuated wherever a union of interests is created and maintained between such producers and carriers of coal, particularly where producers and carriers through artificial methods become practically one and the same.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Freedom of competition is required in commerce among the states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

**HN3** Regulated Industries, Transportation

Ohio has a statutory policy respecting parallel and competing railroads. The policy of the United States and of Ohio, as expressed by legislation and judicial interpretation, is quite as distinctly opposed to any union of ownership and arrangement involving the power to control parallel railroads or the transportation of traffic that is tributary to and must pass over one or both of them, as it is to formal consolidation of such railroads.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

**HN4** Regulated Industries, Transportation

A mere instrumentality that separate railroad properties combined under one control is a combination as direct a restraint of trade by destroying competition as the appointment of a committee to regulate rates.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

**HN5** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

For purposes of antitrust law, the form given to a combination is of no consequence. The generic designation of the first and second sections of the Sherman Antitrust Act, when taken together, embraced every conceivable act which could possibly come within the spirit or purpose of the prohibitions of the law, without regard to the garb in which such acts were clothed.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

**HN6** Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

The commodities clause in § 1 of the Hepburn Act, as construed by the Supreme Court, has been held to be constitutional.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN7** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

As respects the power of the court to require such sales and distributions of illegally combined interests to be made, it is clearly given by § 4 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 26 U.S. Stat.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

International Trade Law > State Legislation > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN8 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To vitiate a combination, such as the Sherman Antitrust Act condemns, it need not be shown that the combination, in fact, results or will result in a total suppression of trade or in a complete monopoly, but it is only essential to show that by its necessary operation it tends to restrain interstate or international trade or commerce or tends to create a monopoly in such trade or commerce and to deprive the public of the advantages that flow from free competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN9 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In bringing a suit under the Sherman Antitrust Act, it is not necessary that the proofs should show that precisely similar methods were adopted to bring about the continuance averred, or that all the parties theretofore engaged continued as actors.

Opinion by: [**1] WARRINGTON

Opinion

---

[*297] Before WARRINGTON, KNAPPEN, and DENISON, Circuit Judges.

WARRINGTON, Circuit Judge. This suit was brought to enjoin further performance of certain agreements alleged to have been made in pursuance of combinations and conspiracies formed and carried out in restraint of trade among the several states, particularly trade in bituminous coal, in violation of Act Cong. July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200]); many of the acts alleged having been committed in whole and others in part within the Eastern Division of the Southern Judicial District of Ohio.

The defendants consist of six railroad companies and three coal companies, named in the margin.<sup>1</sup> The railroad companies are all [*298] Ohio corporations, except the Chesapeake & Ohio, which was organized in Virginia and all are engaged in transporting interstate commerce. The coal companies named were created as follows: The Sunday Creek under the laws of New Jersey, and the other two under the laws of West Virginia.

[**2] The Railroads. It is important to understand the geographical relations of the railroads, and similarly their relations to the coal fields involved. The Lake Shore extends from Buffalo to Chicago, passing through Ohio near the southerly shore of Lake Erie to Toledo, and thence across the northerly portion of the state, and has a number of intermediate branches. A large majority of its capital stock is owned by the New York Central. The Chesapeake & Ohio extends from Old Point Comfort to Cincinnati, running generally along the south side of the Ohio River from a point east of Huntington, W. Va., to and through Kentucky to Cincinnati, and also has a number of intermediate branch lines. It owns a great majority of the stock of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway of Indiana, and so reaches Chicago. Thus one of these east and west trunk lines passes through Ohio near its northerly boundary, and the other along the south shore of the Ohio river near the south boundary of Ohio. Two of the remaining defendant railroads are wholly within Ohio, running generally in a north and south direction, viz., the Hocking Valley from Toledo by way of Columbus, Lancaster, Logan, and Gallipolis to [**3] Pomeroy on the Ohio river (passing through Kanauga on the Ohio river opposite Point Pleasant, W. Va.), with a branch line running from Logan to Athens; and the Toledo & Ohio Central has two divisions running from Toledo, one by way of Fostoria, Bucyrus, and Thurston to Corning in Perry County, and the other by way of Findlay, Kenton, and Columbus to Thurston on the first division. The Kanawha & Michigan runs south from Corning to the Ohio river, crossing the river from Kanauga, Ohio, to Point Pleasant, W. Va., and continuing thence through Mason, Putnam, Kanawha, and Fayette counties by way of Charleston to Gauley Bridge, in that state, using the tracks of the Hocking Valley between Hobson and Gallipolis, by way of Kanauga; and the Zanesville & Western runs east and west from Thurston through the counties of Fairfield, Perry, and Muskingum to Zanesville, Ohio, although it seems to be part of an old road which formerly continued westwardly from Thurston to Columbus, parallel with the Hocking Valley.

---

<sup>1</sup> The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, the Hocking Valley Railway Company, the Toledo & Ohio Central Railway Company, the Kanawha & Michigan Railway Company, the Zanesville & Western Railway Company, the Sunday Creek Company, the Continental Coal Company, the Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Company.

The coal Fields. The Ohio coal fields directly in question are situated in Athens, Perry, Hocking, and Muskingum counties, and known as the Hocking Valley coal fields; and those in [**4] West Virginia are situated in the Kanawha coal district. The four railroads last named are connected with portions of these coal fields of Ohio, and the Kanawha & Michigan with the Kanawha coal fields. The principal coal mines along the Hocking Valley are located in Athens, Perry, and Hocking counties, those along the Toledo & Ohio Central are in Fairfield, Perry, Hocking, Athens, and Muskingum, those along the Zanesville & Western are in Muskingum and Perry counties, and those along the Kanawha & Michigan are in Putnam, Kanawha, and Fayette counties, [*299] W. Va., besides some that are located in Perry and Athens counties, Ohio; and the principal part of the freight traffic of all the defendant railroad companies, except the Lake Shore, is bituminous coal in car load shipments, the principal mines along the Chesapeake & Ohio being in Kanawha, New River, and Big Sandy districts of West Virginia and Kentucky. A large part of the freight traffic of the Lake Shore is bituminous coal in car load shipments derived from branch roads tapping the Appalachian coal fields. The coal of the various fields mentioned is shipped on these roads from the portions of coal fields with which [**5] they are severally connected as before pointed out, to lake ports and to points in the North and Northwest.

Competitive Conditions. The Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central, when the latter and the Kanawha & Michigan are operated as they were for a long time as a through line, are naturally competing roads. However, evidence was offered to show that the river division of the Hocking Valley, running from Logan to Kanauga (and thence to Pomeroy, as stated), cannot be treated as a competitor of the Kanawha & Michigan, because of difficult grades on such river division. The Hocking Valley, as far south as Athens, and the Toledo & Ohio Central, are naturally competing roads. It is to be noted, however, that claim is made that competing relations cannot be ascribed to roads connected as these all seem to be with different sets of coal mines, even where such mines are located in the same coal field. As it seems to us, a broader view than this must be taken. The destinations of the coal shipped from these coal fields and the effect on the prices to be exacted of the coal purchasing and consuming public located at points beyond the lake ports and the boundaries of Ohio must [**6] be taken into consideration; and not merely the producers of coal and the carriers transporting it. Manifestly it can make no difference to the coal purchaser or consumer whether coals of the same quality be derived from one particular mine or another of the same field, no matter how close together or how far removed from one another such mines may be, so long as the prices of the coals and the freight charges to be paid are influenced by natural competitive conditions both at the mines and in transportation; and the right to have such conditions maintained cannot be validly abridged through arbitrary or unusual methods. This is equally plain respecting coals of different qualities originating in different fields and requiring varying distances of transportation over lines naturally competing in material parts; for the purchaser or consumer will obviously select the coal according to his particular needs or ability to sell or to pay.

It must follow that HN1[<sup>7</sup>] mere differences in locations of coal mines within the same general field, as well as differences in quality owing to differences in fields, cannot rightfully be made the basis for eliminating effective competition as between railroads [<sup>**7</sup>] traversing substantially the same territory along parallel lines from neighboring mines of the same coal field, or even of different coal fields, to the same general destinations; and the evil effects upon competition concerning rail roads and coal mines so related are accentuated wherever a union of interests is created and maintained between such producers and carriers [<sup>*300</sup>] of coal, particularly where producers and carriers through artificial methods become practically one and the same. If these views are at all applicable to a case such as this, the Kanawha & Michigan, when employed as a carrier exclusively in connection with either the Toledo & Ohio Central or the Hocking Valley, may, we think, be safely treated as a natural competitor of the one or the other of such roads, according as the connection may exist; because the destinations of its coal in either event are, in any rational competitive sense, the same as those of the other road respecting the coal originating on its line. It results (1) that traffic originating on either the Hocking Valley or the Toledo & Ohio Central should be accorded the benefits of free competition; (2) that when coal originating on the [<sup>**8</sup>] line of the Kanawha & Michigan is carried in part over both of these other roads to destinations beyond Ohio, as also coal originating on that road in West Virginia and destined to common points within Ohio, it is to the interest of the Kanawha & Michigan actually to employ the legitimate advantages arising from its opportunity to forward such coal (and this forms the great bulk of its traffic) over either of the other roads. The issue in a general sense is whether these competitive conditions have been suppressed; and the situation is further complicated by uniting coal interests with the railroad interests proper.

Combination and Conspiracy -- Alleged Origin and Continuation. The combination and conspiracy averred originated in 1899 and have been continued in one form or another ever since. What happened between that time and the year 1909 resulted in a suit in quo warranto by the state of Ohio against the Hocking Valley. State ex rel. v. Railway, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. (N.S.) 49, 145. The first decision in that case was rendered April 24, 1909, and upon rehearing adhered to July 21st of that year; and on January 18, 1910, the court made a finding of facts, with separate conclusions [<sup>**9</sup>] of law thereon (set out in the present record), in terms ousting the Hocking Valley from the power of owning and holding shares of stock in the Kanawha & Michigan, the Buckeye Coal & Railroad Company, the Sunday Creek Coal Company, the Sunday Creek Company, and the Continental Coal Company; from exercising control or management of the Kanawha & Michigan, the Toledo & Ohio Central, the Zanesville & Western, and the coal companies before mentioned; and from performing a certain contract between it, the Toledo & Ohio Central, and the Continental Coal Company for division of freight between such railroads. It was adjudged, also, that the road of the Toledo & Ohio Central for its entire length is paralleled to and competitive with the road of the Hocking Valley from Toledo to Logan; that the roads of the Hocking Valley and the Kanawha & Michigan are parallel lines between Logan and Corning respectively and the Ohio river; and that the Kanawha & Michigan and Toledo & Ohio Central together are competitive with the entire line of the Hocking Valley. This judgment was allowed to become final.

In March following the Lake Shore and the Chesapeake & Ohio entered into an agreement (sometimes [<sup>**10</sup>] referred to by the parties as the [<sup>*301</sup>] Schaff-Stevens agreement and sometimes as the agreement of March 12th, and again of March 17th), which has become the subject of a controlling issue in the present cause. Indeed, the government's position is that the operation and effect of this agreement, with what has been done under it, have been to continue the scheme so condemned by the judgment of the Ohio Circuit Court; while that of the defendants is that the agreement is valid, and that the acts of the parties thereto and of all the other defendants, since the date of the agreement, have in to wise been repugnant to any federal statute. It is not claimed that the issues determined in the state quo warranto suit are decisive of issues concerning interstate commerce; but it is urged that, apart from the state case, interpretation of the March agreement and of the conduct of the parties to it and those directly affected by it is distinctly aided by looking into the conduct of those who were interested in the properties before the agreement. Stated otherwise, the contention is that a view of the situation existing before the agreement and of the situation that has since existed [<sup>**11</sup>] cannot but be helpful to a proper solution of the controversy.

We do not propose to recite or discuss all the details of either situation, for such a course would occupy far too much space, and, moreover, is not necessary. If the locations and connections of the railroads and their relations to the coal properties are recalled, as before pointed out, it will not be difficult to apply the controlling features of the evidence adduced on the one side to prove, and on the other to disprove, the alleged combination and conspiracy and continuation thereof. In 1899 a plan for the reorganization of the Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo Railway Company (predecessor of the Hocking Valley) was entered into under date of January 4th, and direction of J. P. Morgan & Co. After judicial sale of the railroad property of the company, the purchasing trustees at such sale conveyed this property to the Hocking Valley, and the title thereto is still in that company. It was part of this plan to have the Hocking Valley acquire interests in the Toledo & Ohio Central and the Columbus, Sandusky & Hocking Railroad Companies, or successor companies, and in February, 1899, the stockholders of the Hocking [**12] Valley adopted a regulation reserving 50,000 shares of its preferred and 50,000 shares of its common stock for the purpose of acquiring such interests. These reserved shares were from time to time listed on the New York Exchange at the instance of the Hocking Valley and for the express purpose of acquiring such interests. The purchases of the stock in the Toledo & Ohio Central were made in the name of a New Jersey corporation, called the Middle States Construction Company, which was organized in February, 1899, for that purpose. In 1899 and 1900 the Hocking Valley, through the issue of over $8,000,000 of its reserved preferred and common stock, purchased the bonded indebtedness of this construction company; and this indebtedness was secured by and convertible into the stock of the Toledo & Ohio Central, under a deed of trust of the Construction Company to the Central Trust Company of New York. Through the issue of the remainder of its reserved stock, the Hocking Valley, in 1902, purchased all the stock in [*302] and all the bonds of the Zanesville & Western, which through judicial sale had acquired the portion of the Columbus, Sandusky & Hocking Railroad extending from Thurston, [**13] in Fairfield county, to Zanesville, in Muskingum county, with certain branch lines. It is not definitely shown when and in what amounts the purchases of the stock in the Toledo & Ohio Central were made; but it appears by stipulation that the Construction Company, in the years 1899 and 1900, acquired 58,921 shares of such stock, and the listing papers before mentioned show that the total issue of stock of the Toledo & Ohio Central was 102,080 shares, preferred and common. Moreover, from 1902 to 1909 the president and general manager of the Hocking Valley, not to speak of other officers selected later, occupied corresponding positions in the Toledo & Ohio Central and the Zanesville & Western. The control thus signified in the Hocking Valley carried with it also the control of the Kanawha & Michigan. In 1890 the Toledo & Ohio Central acquired 45,000 shares, and in 1899 an additional 100 shares of the capital stock of the Kanawha & Michigan, constituting a majority of that company's outstanding capital stock, and these two roads were operated practically as a through line; and, further, as early as February, 1891, the former guaranteed the 100-year bonds of the latter at the rate of [**14] $10,000 a mile for 134 miles, or $1,340,000, and thereafter advanced it moneys from time to time. Further, in 1903, the Hocking Valley exchanged its holdings of stock and bonds in the Zanesville & Western for the shares held by the Toledo & Ohio Central in the Kanawha & Michigan. Thus the Hocking Valley attained practical control of the two parallel systems of railroad between Toledo and the Ohio river, including the Zanesville & Western; and, apart from influence exerted by certain trunk lines alluded to later, the Hocking Valley alone remained in control of this entire system of railroads until the execution of the agreement of March 12, 1910.

We shall gain a better knowledge of the situation as it existed prior to the March agreement, if at this point we look further into the coal fields, which were tributary to this system of roads and especially into certain portions of such fields that were under the practical control of the Hocking Valley. Much evidence was offered upon this subject, and some of it is clarified by admissions contained in some of the pleadings. By several methods the Hocking Valley procured control of large coal properties both in the Hocking and Kanawha [**15] fields. Pursuant to the plan of reorganization of 1899, that company and the Buckeye Coal & Railway Company were incorporated under the laws of Ohio, February 25, 1899, and thereafter they joined in the execution of a mortgage under date of March 1st following, providing for the issue of first-mortgage bonds in the sum of $20,000,000, and secured by the properties acquired by such companies. This coal company was organized for the purpose of acquiring the coal properties of the Hocking Coal & Railroad Company, and these properties were bid in and conveyed to the Buckeye Coal & Railway Company by the purchasing trustees at the judicial sale; and such trustees received from the new coal company 2,495 shares of its total capital stock of 2,500 shares, and thereupon entered into a traffic agreement with the Hocking [*303] Valley to secure rail connections between coal mines and the main railroad line and also coal transportation, and the trustees at the same time turned over the stock in the coal company to the Hocking Valley. Out of the sales proceeds of the first mortgage bonds mentioned the Hocking Valley acquired the stock and properties of the Ohio Land & Railway and the New [**16] York & Western Coal Companies, which had belonged to and been controlled by the Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo Railway Company; also all the stock in the Boston Coal, Dock & Wharf Company and the Rabould Coal Company; also a majority of the preferred and likewise of the common stock of the Sunday Creek Coal Company, and afterwards the Hocking Valley increased its holdings in that company to 12,963 shares of preferred and 19,400 shares of common out of a total issue of 15,000 shares of preferred and 22,500 of common.

A different method was adopted for securing control of the Kanawha Hocking Coal & Coke and the Continental Coal Companies, as also quite a number of other coal properties to which we shall refer in a moment. The Toledo & Ohio Central and the Hocking Valley entered into a contract to guarantee first-mortgage bonds of the coal companies last named, the details of which are not essential to an understanding of the case. It suffices to state that agreements were made under which syndicates were formed to underwrite bonds of the companies ($3,250,000 par value in all of the first company and $3,023,000 par value in all of the second company); the Toledo & Ohio Central [**17] and the Hocking Valley guaranteeing payment of such bonds, but the Hocking Valley assuming the entire obligation as between it and the other guarantor company. In connection with these guarantees the coal companies agreed to deliver all their coal to the Kanawha & Michigan for transportation, and by further agreement such coal was to be equally divided between the Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central and so carried northwardly and beyond the Ohio terminus of the Kanawha & Michigan, and the Kanawha & Michigan agreed to purchase all its fuel coal from the coal companies at a price at least 20 cents per ton above production cost. The stock of these two coal companies and certain beneficial certificates of the first company were issued to J.P. Morgan & Co. to secure performance of these contracts of guaranty. The bonds so guaranteed were sold and large portions of the proceeds were used to purchase coal properties of 28 owners (consisting mostly of companies) at prices varying from $8,875 to $541,125 and aggregating $5,194,940.04. The remainder, after paying organization expenses, was placed in the treasuries of the coal companies. Further, the Toledo & Ohio Central owned [**18] the entire capital stock of the Imperial Coal Company and also the National Coal Company; the former being $300,000 and the latter $160,000 par value.

We are unable to discover from the evidence the acreage of these coal lands or their precise locations. An estimate made by the vice president of the Sunday Creek Company, of its unmined coal acreage on December 31, 1910, showed that there were 42,710 acres in Athens, Perry, and Hocking counties of Ohio and 33,000 in Kanawha and Fayette counties of West Virginia. But in July, 1905, the Sunday [**304] Creek Company (not the Sunday Creek Coal Company, another subsidiary company of the Hocking Valley) was organized under the laws of New Jersey with an authorized capital stock of $4,000,000 for the purpose of engaging in business in the state of Ohio and owning and developing lands containing coal and other minerals. It is averred in the bill that the Sunday Creek Company controls more than 100,000 acres of land, including about 50 mines and about 350 coke ovens, and owns the beneficial certificates of the Continental Coal Company and the Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Company; and these averments are admitted in the answer of the [**19] Sunday Creek Company, as also in the joint answer of the Hocking Valley and the Chesapeake & Ohio, and the coal property held by the Sunday Creek Company seems to comprise all the coal properties so accumulated as before shown. At the time of the incorporation of the Sunday Creek Company the Hocking Valley exchanged $3,236,300 par value of the stock it held in the Sunday Creek Coal Company for the same amount of stock of the Sunday Creek Company; and the Toledo & Ohio Central exchanged 2,037 shares of the preferred and 3,100 shares of the common stock it held in the Sunday Creek Coal Company for a like amount of the stock of the Sunday Creek Company. Thus the Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central, in the proportions mentioned, acquired $3,750,000 par value of the total of $4,000,000 par value of the capital stock of the Sunday Creek Company; and on April 23, 1906, 2,488 shares were ordered to be issued in a single certificate in the name of the Central Trust Company of New York, to the end that they would not be issued except with its approval, the remaining 12 shares having apparently been issued as qualifying shares for directors.

*The Trunk Lines' Purchase of a Majority [**20] of the Hocking Valley Capital Stock.* Prior to the merger so made of the coal interests of the Hocking Valley, to wit, June 29, 1903, five of the trunk line railroads, viz., Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company, Erie Railroad Company, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, and the Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, entered into an agreement with J.P. Morgan & Co. to purchase from that company 69,242 shares of common capital stock of the Hocking Valley at a price and upon terms specified; Morgan & Co. having "arranged to borrow the moneys forthwith to make payment for said shares to the depositors under a syndicate agreement dated December 4, 1902." Morgan & Co. were to carry the loan for the benefit of the purchasing companies for three years; and such purchase was completed. The aggregate purchase price was $7,270,410, and each of the purchasing companies obtained one-sixth interest in the shares so purchased, except the Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cincinnati & St. Louis, which acquired two-sixths. As indicative of the effect of this upon the policy of the Hocking Valley, it is sufficient to state that an advisory committee [**21] (composed of representatives of the trunk lines) and the president of the Hocking Valley had frequent conferences relative to the financial affairs of the Hocking Valley and the coal companies in which it was interested, and the introduction or not of track connections between the lines [*305] of the Hocking Valley system and the independent coal mining operators and the like. Among the results of these conferences were the incorporation of the Sunday Creek Company for the purpose of handling the coal interests of the Hocking Valley, as before pointed out, and maintaining an operating system that was satisfactory to the trunk lines. One of the features of this operating system was to restrict rail connections with coal mines to such as were already in operation, and to refuse and by litigation to contest applications for rail connections with new mines. These conditions were in practical effect continued until the agreement of March, 1910.

Shares of Capital Stock in the Sunday Creek Company Placed in Names of Trustees. It should be stated here that, when the Sunday Creek Company was organized, the 5,137 shares of stock in that company, which belonged to the Toledo & Ohio [**22] Central, were issued in one certificate in the name of John H. Doyle, as trustee, who indorsed the certificate in blank and delivered it to the vice president and general manager of the Toledo & Ohio Central; and, further, in April, 1908, just before the commodities clause of the Hepburn Act was to take effect, it is testified that such stock was sold to him to be held as trustee for the stockholders of the Toledo & Ohio Central, in whose names its stock might from time to time be registered on the books of the company, and to whom any dividends should be paid. This arrangement was effected through the redelivery of the old stock certificate to the trustee, from which he at the time erased his original indorsement, and a contract executed by him and the Toledo & Ohio Central bearing date April 30, 1908; and this certificate and contract are still in his possession. After the date of this contract the trustee on two or three occasions issued a proxy to the president of the Sunday Creek Company, at his request, to vote the stock at annual meetings; but the trustee has not received any request or any suggestion from the Toledo & Ohio Central, or the officers of any other railroad company, [**23] with respect to the giving of proxies or the voting of the stock. On April 30, 1908, another contract, similar to the one so made between John H. Doyle and the Toledo & Ohio Central, was entered into between the Hocking Valley and the Central Trust Company of New York, respecting the shares of the Hocking Valley in the Sunday Creek Company. After reciting that the Hocking Valley is the owner of 32,375 shares of the Sunday Creek Company (also, among other things, that all these shares with others were pledged through a trustee as collateral security for the bonds issued under the first consolidated mortgage of the Hocking Valley and the Buckeye Coal & Railway Company, and that in view of the penalties imposed for violation of the Hepburn Act (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, 34 Stat. 584 [U.S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1288]) and of a desire to obey the law if constitutional, and at the same time to preserve to the owners of the capital stock of the railway the equity in such coal properties, which could not be disposed of by reason of such pledge), it was agreed that the railway company had sold and assigned to the trustee all its interest in such shares of stock, subject to the lien [**24] of the mortgage and the rights of the bondholders thereunder, in trust, for the proportionate benefit of the holders [*306] of record of the stock of the Hocking Valley and for any distribution of its assets; that the trustee should have the right to vote the shares of stock at all meetings of stockholders of the company, to collect dividends, and (if the Hocking Valley is not in default under its mortgage) to distribute them among the holders of the stock. The only other provisions of the contract so made with John H. Doyle and the Central Trust Company that need be noticed are set out in the margin.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> "In the event, however, that the said Supreme Court shall decide said commodity clause of said Hepburn Act unconstitutional, then said trustee shall dispose of the equity in said coal stocks sold and assigned to it in trust for the purposes of this agreement (subject, however, to the lien of the first consolidated mortgage, and its rights as pledgee trustee thereunder), when and as directed in writing by the persons, firms or corporations holding and owning of record a majority in amount of the stock of the Railway Company as hereinafter provided, and when such sale or distribution is made by the trustee hereunder, and the entire proceeds, whether of stocks, bonds, moneys, or other securities, shall have been actually paid to and received by the said trustee, then the said trustee shall distribute, less its proper charges and expenses, all such proceeds in kind received from the disposition of said stocks, among such persons, firms and corporations, their successors and assigns, as shall be stockholders

[**25] Nothing further has been done with the stock of the Sunday Creek Company, and no sale or other disposition of the coal properties has been made in pursuance of these trusts or otherwise. The railroad control of the coal interests remained practically the same, at least until the date of the March agreement, as it was before.

Conclusion Respecting Situation Prior to March Agreement of 1910. We are bound to hold that the situation described was indefensible under the anti-Trust Act; indeed, no attempt has been made here to justify it. It is quite plain that by the reorganization commenced in 1899 and the course pursued thereafter until the trunk lines obtained their interests in the Hocking Valley the purpose was to unite and hold the four railroads,<sup>3</sup> and their several coal interests under a single controlling power; and we are satisfied from the evidence that this design was consummated at the instance of such companies, and finally rendered more secure through the interests and indirect control of the trunk lines. One of the reasons offered to induce and defend the reorganization was the existence of "undue and bitter competition." After stating that the principal business [**26] of the Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo (the predecessor of the Hocking Valley) was the transportation of bituminous coal from mines on adjacent property, it was declared that the business was strictly and intensely competitive, [*307] and that the field in Ohio was covered by seven railroad lines (including in their number the lines of the present Hocking Valley, the Toledo & Ohio Central, and the Columbus, Sandusky & Hocking, the predecessor of the Zanesville & Western), and that of these seven lines three operated in one district and the other four lines in a field lying east of that district. The three lines so alluded to could have been no others than the exclusively Ohio lines now in question. It was further declared that, in addition to the competition above indicated, the situation was complicated by the fact that of late years the West Virginia coals were rapidly supplanting the Ohio coals in the markets reached by the latter. And, in short, the evidence fairly shows that the union of interests so induced was carefully developed, and that its inevitable tendency and effect were to combine and monopolize the stocks and interests of these railroad companies and coal [**27] companies, and so to stifle competition in restraint of trade among the states within the settled meaning of the Anti-Trust Act.

The Conditions Created by and Maintained Since the March Agreement. Has the situation described been so changed by or under the agreement of March 12, 1910, as to entitle defendants as they claim to a dismissal of the bill? They forcibly urge that what was done prior to the March agreement has nothing to do with what has been done since. Objections were continuously made to the introduction of evidence tending to show conditions existing before the agreement. Complainant insists that what followed the execution of the March agreement was but a continuation of what preceded it. The fact that we have considered the evidence shows, if course, that we regard it as admissible. It cannot escape notice that some of the defendants were parties to such earlier transactions, and that others acquiesced in and adopted such transactions before the March agreement was made. Lincoln v. Claflin, 74 U.S. \(7 Wall.\) 132, 138, 19 L. Ed. 106; United States v. Standard Oil Co. \(C.C.\) 152 Fed. 290, 294, per Sanborn, Circuit Judge, and Circuit Judges Van Devanter, Hook, and Adams concurring. The acts and transactions of the first period therefore ought to aid in some measure to elucidate the intent and effect of the March agreement, and of the acts and transaction of the parties since, no matter what conclusion may be reached touching the second period. Standard Oil Co. v. U.S., 221 U.S. 1, 76, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; Darius Cole Transp. Co. v. White Star Line, 186 Fed. 66, 108 C.C.A. 165 (C.C.A. 6th Cir.); U.S. v. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours Co. \(C.C.\) 188 Fed. 128, 134.

The March Agreement. The agreement was signed by the Lake Shore and the Chesapeake & Ohio, and, so far as now material in substance provided, that the Lake Shore would purchase from the Hocking Valley the bond it held of the Middle State Construction Company, which as stated was exchangeable for the entire capital stock of the Toledo & Ohio Central (such stock to carry with it, for the benefit of the Toledo & Ohio Central, the ownership of of record of the Railway Company on the first day of the months in which said proceeds and all of them shall have been finally received, pro rata in proportion to their said record holdings of stock of the Railway Company. Any such sale or disposition, however, it is understood shall be made subject to the lien of the first consolidated mortgage thereon and to all the terms and conditions of the said mortgage, and only in the event that said Railway Company is not then in default of any requirement of said mortgage."

<sup>3</sup> The Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo, the Toledo & Ohio Central, the Columbus, Sandusky & Hocking, and the Kanawha & Michigan Railway Companies.

45,100 shares of stock in the [**29] Kanawha & Michigan, 5, 137 shares of stock in the Sunday Creek Company, and the entire capital stock in and all the bonds of the [*308] Zanesville & Western) at an aggregate purchase price of $10,197,874.67; and would make provision for loaning to the Sunday Creek Company as needed and on its notes $1,143,110.50. Such purchase to be coupled with an agreement that a contract for 25 years would be made and should provide that the line of the Hocking Valley and the line of the western division of the Toledo & Ohio Central, between their terminals at Toledo and their connections with the Kanawha & Michigan at Chauncey, might (for cost alone of maintenance and operating expenses according to joint usage) be used at the option of either for the movement of its through freight trains; that an additional agreement should be made to protect the Toledo & Ohio Central and the Hocking Valley under their previous guaranty of bonds of coal companies, and given (as before stated) under an agreement for an equal division of the coal traffic derived from the properties of such coal companies; that an arrangement for distribution of the business, so far as could legally be made, should be effected [**30] to protect the interests of the Toledo & Ohio Central and the Hocking Valley respecting their guaranty of such coal bonds. Upon making such purchase, the Lake Shore was to sell to the Chesapeake & Ohio 22,550 shares of the Kanawha & Michigan for $1,623,600 and 11,540 shares of the Hocking Valley for $1,384,800 (which latter stock seems to have been the one-sixth interest that the Lake Shore acquired at the time of the purchase made by the trunk lines). Still another contract was to be made "for trusteeing or otherwise jointly handling" the 45,100 shares (a majority of the stock and called the "controlling interest then to be owned by the two companies") in the Kanawha & Michigan. In case the stock was so placed in trust, provision was to be made for such trackage agreements with the Kanawha & Michigan as would protect the purchasing companies against loss of control of the property. Privilege was to be given to make certain connections between the Kanawha & Michigan Railway with the Virginian Railway or with the Lake Shore or Chesapeake & Ohio, the intent being that the lines of the Kanawha & Michigan could be used to the fullest extent by either of the purchasing companies in [**31] building up its interest either in local territory on the Kanawha & Michigan or in making through routes and connections beyond it, protecting, however, all the stockholders of that company. Provision was also made for acquiring all or part of the outstanding stock of the Kanawha & Michigan; for having the Kanawha & Michigan purchase the securities of the Pomeroy Belt Railway Company and indemnifying the Hocking Valley against liability assumed by it in the purchase thereof and granting to it a trackage right over such belt road, etc., for securing to the Hocking Valley trackage between Athens and Hobson over the Kanawha & Michigan for Hocking Valley through business from or to its line between Gallipolis and Pomeroy. The whole agreement was made subject to a condition that the other roads embraced in the trunk line purchase, before pointed out, should sell their holdings in the stock of the Hocking Valley to the Chesapeake & Ohio.

The Chesapeake & Ohio thereupon acquired the holdings of the other trunk lines of Hocking Valley stock, which, with the one-sixth it had [*309] previously obtained through the trunk lines syndicate purchase and the one-sixth derived under the March [*32] agreement, gave to the Chesapeake & Ohio 69,240 shares of such stock. The preferred stock of the Hocking Valley was retired in April, 1910, leaving 110,000 shares of common, of which the Chesapeake & Ohio now owns (through increase of its holdings) 88,258 shares, and that company and the Lake Shore now each own 40,271 shares of the stock of the Kanawha & Michigan (being 80,542 of a total capital of 90,000 shares). The result is that, instead of five trunk lines holding as formerly, only two, to wit, the Lake Shore and the Chesapeake & Ohio, now hold the controlling power, it is true through independent ownerships, in the Hocking Valley, the Toledo & Ohio Central, the Kanawha & Michigan, the Zanesville & Western, and also (subject to the trusts and pledge before stated) the Sunday Creek Company. Their interests in the Sunday Creek Company cover its entire outstanding capital stock (included in this are the 12 qualifying shares belonging to the Hocking Valley).<sup>4</sup>

Now it is to be observed of the March agreement that its avowed purpose was not to avoid violation of any federal act, [**33] but to comply with the decree of the Ohio Circuit Court in the quo warranto case. Such a purpose might, it is true, be entirely consistent with the federal Anti-Trust Act; but whether this was so here must be tested by the intent to be inferred both from the agreement and the extent and nature of the control thereby secured over the railroads and the coal traffic and other commerce dependent on them ( United States v. St. Louis Terminal, 224

---

<sup>4</sup> Compare holding shown by stipulation (Rec. 572), with holding stated in Exhibit E, to bill.

U.S. 394, 395, 32 Sup. Ct. 507, 56 L. Ed. 810; and such intent and control may, we think, be further ascertained from comparison of important features of the situation existing before the agreement with some of those found in the situation created under it. In applying these tests, it should be stated in the outset that the government has failed in several respects to sustain the averment that there has been since the agreement a continuation of the same conditions as those existing before. Admittedly a change in the ownership of the stocks and bonds of the railroads has been made under the agreement, as before pointed out; and it must be conceded under the evidence adduced that the independent coal operators in the coal fields in question have [**34] received greater concern and accommodations at the hands of the railroads since the agreement than they were given before. But we are convinced that the changes so wrought in ownership of stocks have resulted in a concert of action and control of the railroads and coal interests secured by the agreement, which is inconsistent with HN2↑ the rule requiring freedom of competition in commerce among the states; and that rule is too firmly established to be shaken by argument against the beneficial results ascribed to it. United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 226 U.S. 61, 87, 88, 33 Sup. Ct. 53, 57 L. Ed. ; United States v. St. Louis Terminal, supra, 224 U.S. 401, 32 Sup. Ct. 507, 56 L. Ed. 810; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 293, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488, 13 Ann. Cas. 815; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 331, 332, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679; Pearsall v. Great Northern Railway, 161 U.S. 646, 676, 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 40 L. Ed. 838; United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 16, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; Chesapeake & O. Fuel Co. v. United States, 115 Fed. 619, 620, 53 C.C.A. 256 (C.C.A. 6th Cir.); United States v. Standard Oil Co. (C.C.) [**35] 173 Fed. 177, 188 (C.C.A. 8th Cir.).

Evidence was adduced to show that, owing to litigation and other causes, some of the provisions of the March agreement have not been carried out; and some of the evidence tends to show that, if all its provisions had been carried into effect, it would have resulted beneficially to the volume of traffic and those interested in it along the lines of the roads in question. This does not indicate a purpose not to carry out the March agreement ultimately; but it does show that a virtual consolidation of all these naturally competing roads (coupled with the division of the coal traffic provided for), so far as concerns the through traffic in coal to the lakes, is necessary to accomplish the result stated, although it does not purport to show how long such increase in volume would last. It is contended by learned counsel, however, that all the provisions of the agreement are valid and enforceable, so long at least as the interested stockholders themselves are satisfied with its performance.

Moreover, evidence was offered to show that the Ohio roads are controlled and operated independently of one another and of either the Lake Shore or the Chesapeake [**36] & Ohio or both; and similarly as respects the Sunday Creek Company, and all these roads either collectively or separately. It is true that the officers of the railroads and the railroad offices are distinct, and this is true of the Sunday Creek Company; also that the managerial officers of these subordinate companies have been instructed to exercise their own judgment respecting the interests they represent, and yet the natural and probable effect of all this needs but little consecutive thought. Such officials are at last dependent for their positions upon the will of the two trunk line companies controlling the stocks; and it is vain to say that such officers do not become sensitive to the interests and policies of the real masters of the situation. Illustrations of this, as also of the effect of the new regime upon interstate commerce and trade, are contained in the evidence relating to both the coal and railroad properties. We have seen that the Sunday Creek Company still holds the same title to the coal properties that it held before the execution of the agreement of March, 1910; and that the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Lake Shore together have been brought into the same relation [**37] to the entire capital stock of this coal company that the Hocking Valley alone previously bore to it.<sup>5</sup> In the March agreement no allusion was made to the trust agreements under which the stock of the Sunday Creek Company was on [*311] April 30, 1908, placed in the names of trustees. The shares placed (rather continued) in the name of John H. Doyle, as trustee, were in the March agreement treated as the property of the Toledo & Ohio Central; and the same general policy concerning the coal handled by the Sunday Creek Company that prevailed before the March agreement has been pursued since. This has resulted in the continuance of an equal division substantially of the coal traffic originating on the Kanawha & Michigan between the Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central. All the coal carried in Kanawha & Michigan equipment is so divided. While the coal that is carried in the equipment furnished by the other two companies respectively is divided according to such equipment, yet it would seem from the correspondence and testimony that the desire and effort are to equalize either the cars received or the advantages and consequent profit of transportation, say as between coal [**38] and coke, since coke appears to yield more freight revenue to the carrier than coal. Further, some of the evidence (concerning at least the conduct of the Lake Shore) discloses an apparently asserted right to demand, rather than a design simply to persuade, the allowance of such division; and seemingly the officers of the Kanawha & Michigan are disposed to yield it in the same spirit. This augments the similarity in purpose between the division now made of the coal traffic, and the division that was admittedly made prior to the March agreement in obedience to contract.

---

<sup>5</sup> It should be stated that as early as June, 1905, provision was made by the Sunday Creek Company for purchasing certain trust certificates representing the beneficial interests in the stock of the other two coal companies which are parties to this cause, and this arrangement seems to have been carried out.

We do not overlook the testimony to the effect that this additional agreement has not been executed; but it is not perceivable how the companies can in substance do the same thing that the agreement provided for, and escape its effect on the ground either that it has not been reduced to writing and signed, [**39] or that such a division is fair. In short, our interpretation of the evidence is that this division of traffic is not due alone to a desire to be fair to connecting companies; but that it is actuated also by a purpose practically to carry out the provision of the March agreement in this behalf, and so protect the Toledo & Ohio Central and the Hocking Valley as joint guarantors "on the bonds of certain coal companies for equal division of the coal from these coal properties." Such a provision or practice is inconsistent with the statutory right accorded to shippers since 1910, say along the Kanawha & Michigan, to secure the benefit of competitive through rates by routing their own traffic by way of either the Hocking Valley or Toledo & Ohio Central, according as they might be able through perfectly legitimate means to induce the one or the other company to file and publish lower rates. See amendment to section 15 of Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 384 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3165]), passed June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 12, 36 U.S. Stat. L. 552 (U.S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1301), striking from amended section 15 Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 4, 34 Stat. [**40] L. 590 (U.S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1301), the limitation: "Provided no reasonable or satisfactory through route exists." That it would be entirely practicable for shippers of coal to secure, with respect to through traffic, substantial competition with the Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central, but for the joint ownership and control [*312] of the Kanawha & Michigan, seems to us obvious. The president of the Kanawha & Michigan, and its general freight agent, testified, in substance, that they had made no effort to secure from the Hocking Valley or the Toledo & Ohio Central in favor of their own company a greater division of the freight rate charged for through traffic; in other words, the motive is lacking to bring about real competition between these parallel roads. Nor does it appear that the officers of either the Hocking Valley or the Toledo & Ohio Central have done anything respecting a greater or less division of the freight rate charged for through traffic. And we do not discover that the officers of the Sunday Creek Company have ever sought to induce any of these railroads to file or publish lower freight rates; and the president of the company (who has filled [**41] the office since June, 1910) testified:

"We do not do any routing * * * unless it is where coal must be delivered on one road or the other."

Further similarity between the course pursued before the March agreement and since is to be found in the "operating proposition" as it is characterized in the evidence, which "practically makes each road (the Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central) a double track railroad." The arrangement consists of moving the north-bound through freight trains of the Toledo & Ohio Central, over the Hocking Valley railroad from Hobson to Fostoria, and of returning the south bound freight trains of the Hocking Valley over the western division of the Toledo & Ohio Central from Hickox to Columbus; and this is a continuation of the same reciprocal use that was commenced in 1901. Stress is laid both in the evidence and argument upon the economy of this interchange of facilities, since it secures easier grades over the Hocking Valley, as compared with those of the Toledo & Ohio Central, and avoids the necessity of building double tracks and of operating opposing trains over single track roads with the usual sidings. These advantages may be conceded from [**42] an operating point of view; yet the logic of it all would in the end destroy competition between parallel roads generally. The reciprocal use in this instance developed only with the noncompetitive period of these railroads. It is not meant by this there may not be circumstances under which reciprocal trackage arrangements may to a certain extent be lawfully entered into and carried out. Nor is it meant that this trackage arrangement, standing alone disassociated from the joint ownership and control of the Kanawha & Michigan, would violate the federal Anti-Trust Act. What is meant is that this trackage arrangement, considered in connection with the other facts pointed out, tends to disclose a unity of purpose and concert of action on the part of the companies involved to maintain conditions that are inimical to effective competition. Testimony was offered to show that giving to the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Lake Shore equal interests in the Kanawha & Michigan and adding the advantages of this reciprocal use of tracks, operate to stimulate rather than to retard the transportation of coal, and, in fact, have resulted in substantial increase in volume of traffic; and, further, that, [**43] if these arrangements were broken up, the traffic in West Virginia coal would be monopolized by the Kanawha & Michigan and the Toledo & [*313] Ohio Central. This loses sight of the natural development of the coal fields tributary to the Kanawha & Michigan, which should occur under normal conditions. It also evades the obvious question whether, if the Kanawha & Michigan were owned and operated independently of both the Hocking Valley and Toledo & Ohio Central, and those roads were brought into competition for the traffic originating on the Kanawha & Michigan, there would not be a still greater stimulus given to interstate trade than has heretofore existed. There would, in that event, be neither reason nor opportunity for a monopoly of such traffic by the Kanawha & Michigan and Toledo & Ohio Central. The conceded easier grades of the Hocking Valley furnish adequate answer to the suggestions of such a monopoly. Pearsall v. Great Northern Railway, 161 U.S. 676, 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 40 L. Ed. 838; United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., supra.

Insistence is made that a number of the things complained of were in and of themselves lawful, and so, in effect we take it, their union [**44] or joint use could not become unlawful. For instance, it is urged that it would have been well within the power of the Lake Shore to purchase the entire stock of the Toledo & Ohio Central and the Kanawha & Michigan, because the Kanawha & Michigan is a continuation of the Toledo & Ohio Central. Likewise it is insisted in respect of the Chesapeake & Ohio that it possessed charter power to purchase the stock of the Hocking Valley, and that it was both its purpose and right to secure control of a railroad leading directly to the lake ports. Let these claims be conceded for sake of discussion; still, does it follow that the Lake Shore and the Chesapeake & Ohio could lawfully become joint and equal owners in the controlling portion of the stock in the Kanawha & Michigan? Could they at the same time add to this mutual control of that road the reciprocal trackage arrangement respecting the other roads, and so virtually consolidate these railroads as respects the through traffic in coal? These questions are stated, not merely with reference to the apparent violation involved of HN3 the statutory policy of Ohio respecting parallel and competing railroads ( State v. Hocking Valley, 12 Ohio Cir. [**45] Ct. R. [N.S.] 66, 67, before cited), but particularly with respect to the effect that such joint ownership and trackage arrangement must have upon interstate commerce. The policy of the United States and of Ohio, as expressed by legislation and judicial interpretation, is quite as distinctly opposed to any union of ownership and arrangement involving the power to control parallel railroads or the transportation of traffic that is tributary to and must pass over one or both of them, as it is to formal consolidation of such railroads. Northern Securities Case, supra, 193 U.S. 362, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679; United States v. St. Louis Terminal, supra, 224 U.S. 395, 32 sup. Ct. 507, 56 L. Ed. 810; United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., supra; State v. Hocking Valley, supra. We have seen that the Ohio Circuit Court ousted the Hocking Valley from the power of owning and holding shares of stock in the Kanawha & Michigan. The Hocking Valley, it is true, does not now own stock in the Kanawha & Michigan; but the Chesapeake & Ohio does, and it also owns the controlling interest in the Hocking Valley. [*314] The Chesapeake & Ohio thus holds stock in two roads, which are in substantial [**46] degree parallel and naturally competing. Can this result, or the results before pointed out as brought about since the March agreement was executed, be rightfully traceable to the charter powers of these two railroad companies, the one to reach the lake ports and the other the coal fields?

It cannot be that those companies can justify their separate stock purchases of the control of these roads, and also escape responsibility for the inevitable tendency of the present conditions to stifle free competition simply on the theory that the companies holding the legal titles to the roads are alone responsible for this result; for that would be to overlook, not only the manifest unity of purpose of the Lake Shore and the Chesapeake & Ohio, but also and especially their acquiescence, not to say concurrence, in the acts of the subordinate companies. This cannot be avoided on the ground that corporate ownership of stock in railroad corporations created by a state is not interstate commerce (considered in the Northern Securities Case); nor, in the present instance, by the fact that capital stock in two of the competing roads is held separately by two corporations instead of one corporation; [**47] for the other matters involved here, or anything like them, were not present in the Northern Securities Case. To ignore such matters would be to furnish an easy method to frustrate the statutory inhibitions in question. Indeed, if these two purchasing companies are not in effect equivalent to a committee to regulate rates, certainly the subordinate railroad companies under their control are, within the meaning of the concurring opinion of the late Justice Brewer, in the Northern Securities Case. When speaking of the single holding company in question there, the learned justice said (193 U.S. 362, 24 Sup. Ct. 467, 48 L. Ed. 679):

"In this case it HN4↑ was a mere instrumentality by which separate railroad properties were combined under one control. That combination is as direct a restraint of trade by destroying competition as the appointment of a committee to regulate rates."

If the intention of placing the ownership of the stocks in question in the Lake Shore and the Chesapeake & Ohio can be rightly inferred from what has actually been done since, "the purpose to combine and by combination destroy competition" ( Northern Securities Case, 193 U.S., at page 362, 24 Sup. Ct. 467, 48 \*\*48 L. E.d 679) existed when the March agreement was executed, quite as certainly as such purpose was held to exist in that case "before the organization of the corporation, the Securities Company." HN5↑ The form given to a combination is of no consequence. As the learned Chief Justice said in the Tobacco Case, 221 U.S. 181, 31 Sup. Ct. 648, 55 L. Ed. 663:

"* * * It was pointed out (in the Standard Oil Case) that the generic designation of the first and second sections of the law, when taken together, embraced every conceivable act which could possibly come within the spirit or purpose of the prohibitions of the law, without regard to the garb in which such acts were clothed."

It hardly need be said that the cases relied on by the defense, like Bigelow v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 167 Fed. 721, 728, 94 C.C.A. [\[\*315\]](#) 13, decided by the present Mr. Justice Lurton in this court, and by Judge Knappen in the court below, have no application.

There is to be added the apparent purpose of the Lake Shore and the Chesapeake & Ohio to retain their relations with the Sunday Creek Company. The feature of the trust agreements of present importance is quoted in the margin of an earlier portion \*\*49 of this opinion. It provided that, in case the Supreme Court should hold the commodities clause constitutional, each trustee was to dispose of the equity in the railroad companies in the Sunday Creek stock, as directed by the holders of a majority of the capital stock of the Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central respectively, and distribute the entire net sales proceeds among such holders. HN6↑ It need not be stated that the commodities clause, as construed by the Supreme Court, has been held to be constitutional. United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U.S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836; United States v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 220 U.S. 257, 31 Sup. Ct. 387, 55 L. Ed. 458. The first of these cases was decided May 3, 1909, about 10 months prior to the date of the March agreement, and considerably more than a year before the commencement of this suit. It is said that such sales cannot be enforced in this case, because of infirmities in the pleadings. If in the view we take of the evidence this objection can be regarded as material (Lockhart v. Leeds, 195 U.S. 427, 436, 25 Sup. Ct. 76, 49 L. Ed. 263), we perceive no sufficient reason why at this stage of the case the \*\*50 objection cannot be met by amendment. Neale v. Neale, 76 U.S. \(9 Wall.\) 8, 9, 19 L. Ed. 590; The Tremolo Patent, 90 U.S. \(23 Wall.\) 527, 23 L. Ed. 97. HN7↑ As respects the power of the court to require such sales and distributions to be made, we think it is clearly given by section 4 of the Anti-Trust Act (26 U.S. Stat. 209; Standard Oil Case, 221 U.S. 78, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; Union Pacific Case, supra); and, if the trustees or the absent stockholders, in the Hocking Valley are indispensable parties defendant, they may be brought in ([Hoe v. Wilson, 76 U.S. \[9 Wall.\] 501, 504, 19 L. Ed. 762](#); Rogers v. Penobscot Mining Co., 154 Fed. 606, 616, 83 C.C.A. 380). It is to be observed that there is no Ohio legislation authorizing railroad companies to hold shares of stock in coal companies. The Ohio Circuit Court held in the quo warranto suit before cited that the Hocking Valley was not a "kindred" corporation within the meaning of the statute empowering private corporations to hold shares of stock "in other kindred but not competing private corporations," etc. Section 8683, 4 Ohio Gen. Code, 239; 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. (N.S.) 59-63. If \*\*51 these companies are to be allowed potential control both of producing and transporting coals in 100,000 acres of coal lands, it is difficult to see why in spite of the commodities clause common carriers may not combine the benefits of transportation with the benefits arising from the control of any of the other necessities of life, no matter in what quantities. Attorney General v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 29 Law Journal (N.S. Equity) 798, 799; approved in New Haven R.R. v. Interstate Com., 200 U.S. 393, 26 Sup. Ct. 272, 50 L. Ed. 515.

[*316] The only remaining matter needing consideration is the testimony offered in open court tending to show that the grades of the southern division of the Hocking Valley are so difficult as to prevent successful movement over it of through coal trains; and, further, that by reason of the configuration of the territory adjacent to the Kanawha river there is no room for the construction of a track additional to that of the Kanawha & Michigan on the one side or to the tracks of the Chesapeake & Ohio on the other.

Decisions are cited to show that these physical conditions warrant alike disuse of the southern division for through coal service, [**52] and the joint control acquired of the stock in the Kanawha & Michigan. Among these is United States v. Union Pacific R. Co. (C.C.) 188 Fed. 102, reversed in part December 2, 1912 (226 U.S. 61, 33 Sup. Ct. 53, 57 L. Ed. , before cited). We think the undisturbed portion of the decision below is distinguishable, and what is said in this behalf will serve to indicate our views concerning the other cases cited in connection with it. The material points of distinction appear in certain facts: (a) The San Pedro line from Salt Lake to Los Angeles was found to be practically a continuation of the Union Pacific or (its subsidiary company) the Oregon Short Line, and not a natural competition of any other line in question; (b) the physical obstacles encountered on the San Pedro line find no analogy here, unless it be south of the Ohio river and adjacent to the Kanawha & Michigan or a portion of the Chesapeake & Ohio, but it is not shown that connection between the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Hocking Valley is not otherwise reasonably available; (c) there was nothing in the Union Pacific Case to correspond in any way with the combined coal interests here and the relations between them and [**53] the present railroad companies. In that case the failure to build two projected parallel lines of railway between Salt Lake City and Los Angeles was held not to be violative of the Anti-Trust Act; while here, without repeating what has been said before respecting the present railroads and coal properties, the resultant fact cannot be ignored that between Toledo and Kanauga, two actually existing parallel lines of railroad have practically been converted into one line so far as respects the through traffic in coal. The disuse of the southern division of the Hocking Valley is claimed to be justified in the face of several admitted facts. It was constructed as a substantial portion of the Hocking Valley system, and there is no showing that it was not projected by experienced railroad men. At the time the reorganization was commenced in 1899, the railroad agencies concerned found that there had been undue and bitter competition in the coal traffic dependent upon the railroads operating in the Hocking field. The suppression of competition worked out through that reorganization was obviously calculated to engender neglect of either the Kanawha & Michigan north of the Ohio river, or [**54] the southern division of the Hocking Valley, as respects the movement of heavier trains. The railroad defendants here were participants in the policy that succeeded that plan of reorganization. And yet it is in effect insisted that the original plan and construction of the road, as well as its continued maintenance, [*317] should be condemned as part of a through line and its practical abandonment for that purpose sanctioned by judicial decree.

There is a clear distinction between the power to grant relief respecting past failure to construct one of two projected parallel lines, as occurred in the Union Pacific Case along the course of the San Pedro division, and the power to prevent the elimination of one of two parallel roads in actual existence and operation. After all, the difficulty north of the Ohio river is due alone to differences in grades, and it may be judicially noticed that grades may be changed. Delavan v. New York, N.H. H.R. Co. (Sup.) 137 N.Y. Supp. 207, 212. It hardly would be contended, even apart from express statutory inhibition that such differences would warrant formal consolidation. It may be said of this situation as Mr. Justice Lurton said December [**55] 16, 1912, of a situation involved in the cases of the Reading Company concerning prices of coal at the seaboard, that "the situation is therefore one which invites concerted action and makes exceedingly easy the accomplishment of any purpose to dominate the supply and control the prices" of coal at the lake ports and beyond. The paramount evil here is the joint ownership of the Kanawha & Michigan, and, so long as that continues, effective competition will we think remain impossible. Effective competition is not limited alone to a matter of freight rates. It embraces a variety of other subjects, such as quality and promptness and sufficiency of service both as to equipment and roadbed, which are dependent above all upon separate and independent ownership or control alike of the competing roads and of the commerce under compulsion to use them. Surely the necessity to maintain such conditions as these is not affected, as claimed, by anything contained in the act to regulate commerce; for plainly that act was not intended to supplant either the settled rule respecting freedom of competition or the purpose of the Anti-Trust Act to deal with corporate ownerships or agreements that constitute [**56] barriers to such competition.

In the Northern Securities Case, after declaring the comprehensive character of the statute, Justice Harlan expressed the prevailing general rule, as we understand it, thus (193 U.S. 332, 24 Sup. Ct. 454, 48 L. Ed. 679):

"That HN8↑] to vitiate a combination, such as the act of Congress condemns, it need not be shown that the combination, in fact, results or will result in a total suppression of trade or in a complete monopoly, but it is only essential to show that by its necessary operation it tends to restrain interstate or international trade or commerce or tends to create a monopoly in such trade or commerce and to deprive the public of the advantages that flow from free competition."

Are the averments of the bill charging continuance in different form of the combination begun in 1899, so far supported by the proofs offered in that behalf as to justify the granting of relief touching the situation created by and under the March agreement? Comparison of that agreement and what has been done under it, with the first situation, cannot we think fail to show material identity between the two periods in dispute. True, combination by the March agreement [\*\*57] [\*318] or by anything done since then is denied by the answers, and testimony was introduced in support of the denial. We need not recapitulate either the terms of the agreement or the facts and conditions already stated. We cannot believe that the changes in ownership of stocks, in managerial officers and the like, have operated to relieve the railroads and coal interests in question from the influence in practical effect and consequence of a unified control. It cannot be that, in the absence of intent or design, substantially the same things of controlling importance could have been worked out during the later period that were before. HN9↑] It is not necessary that the proofs should show that precisely similar methods were adopted to bring about the continuance averred, or that all the parties theretofore engaged, like the withdrawing trunk lines, continued as actors. The results attained and remaining in the combination at and after the date of the March agreement are the true tests of the trend of the evidence as an entirety.

Upon the whole we conclude that the March agreement, and what has been and is being done under it, operate unreasonably to restrain and monopolize commerce [\*\*58] among the states, and consequently that complainant is entitled to relief; but the precise extent and nature of relief to be awarded cannot at this stage be determined. The case has been tried on the issue of continuance or not of the antecedent combination and restraint; and this has resulted in leaving the court unadvised of the claims of counsel for either side as to the nature and extent of relief, if any, that should be granted. However, we now hold (1) that the equity of the Lake Shore and of the Chesapeake & Ohio in the capital stock of the Sunday Creek Company shall be disposed of by absolute sale, and to this end the trustees in whose names such stock is held shall be made parties defendant to this suit (Bates Fed. Eq. Proc., § 639; [Perrin, Adm'r, v. Lepper \[C.C.\] 26 Fed. 545, 548](#); St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Wilson, 114 U.S. 60, 62, 5 Sup. Ct. 738, 29 L. Ed. 66; Woodward v. McConaughay, 106 Fed. 758, 45 C.C.A. 602 [C.C.A. 9th Cir.]); (2) that the joint ownership and control of the Kanawha & Michigan must be terminated. The questions not decided and upon which leave will be given for further argument are (a) whether the holders of capital stock in the Hocking Valley, [\*\*59] other than the Chesapeake & Ohio, are indispensable parties to the cause; (b) in what manner the termination of the joint ownership and control of the Kanawha & Michigan shall be effected; (c) whether in connection with the means adopted for the termination of such joint ownership and control of the Kanawha & Michigan the reciprocal trackage arrangement over the Hocking Valley and the Toledo & Ohio Central must be terminated; and (d) to what further extent and in what further respects, if any, relief shall be granted touching the control and operation of the other railroads mentioned.

Such further argument will be had at a date hereafter to be fixed between January 21st and 31st next.

KNAPPEN, Circuit Judge, concurs.

Dissent by: DENISON (dissenting in part and concurring in part)

Dissent

---

[*319] DENISON, Circuit Judge (dissenting in part and concurring in part). I quite agree that the present ownership of the Sunday Creek stock by or for the railroads is unlawful, and that the coal companies and the railroads should be separated. This conclusion must be tentative, until the other necessary parties can be heard, but it seems probable that all the facts have been developed. I would [***60] base this result on the commodities clause of the Hepburn Act and the "mere instrumentality" theory of the Lehigh Case, 220 U.S. 257, 31 Sup. Ct. 387, 55 L. Ed. 458, rather than upon the Sherman Act; but the use of either basis brings the same result. Beyond the matter of the coal companies, and in the mere present relation of the railroads to each other, I am unable to see any monopoly or restraint of commerce forbidden by the anti-trust law. Some of the considerations compelling me to this opinion are these:

1. It is true that the history of their former relations during the 1900-1910 period must be studied for whatever bearing it may have on their present intent; but this study discloses to me, not continuance but change, not identity but antithesis. The Hocking and the Central<sup>6</sup> were parallel roads with common termini and with other common points. They had competed bitterly for the Hocking coal district traffic to Columbus and to Toledo, as well as for all other traffic originating on their lines and destined to common points. In 1900, the Hocking bought the Central, and from then until March, 1910, this naturally and theretofore actually competing line was owned by the [***61] Hocking. The Hocking dictated the policy of both. Both had the same directors and managing officers. The merger was complete. Competition was not restrained; it was eliminated. No more perfect union and joinder in operation, while saving the former corporate identity of each, could be stated. After March, 1910, these two roads continued physically as before; but neither the Hocking nor its dominating stockholder had any ownership of the Central or had any interest, direct or indirect, in such ownership; nor did the Central or its dominating stockholder have any ownership of or direct or indirect interest in the Hocking. No director or officer of one road was director or officer in the other, or had any share in its management or operation. No more complete severance of the two roads could be formulated. There remained no connecting link (except the common control of the Kanawha, hereafter discussed).

[***62] 2. Since March, 1910, there has been full and complete competition between these two roads (save only for the Kanawha traffic). As to all the Hocking coal district traffic bound for Columbus or Toledo, and as to all other business originating on these roads, competition is unimpaired. So reads all the evidence; there is no proof to the contrary. The competitive conditions prevailing before the unlawful merger of 1900 have been restored -- excepting only that the rate-cutting [*320] war then in progress has not been resumed. Both roads maintain their rates against sudden or secret cuts, as they are bound to do by both state and federal law. To base the assumption that they are combining in restraint of trade solely upon their maintenance of the same rates between common points would, by the same token, convict every railroad in the United States which is obeying the law; yet such assumption is, to my mind, the only basis for believing that such combination has existed since March, 1910 (still excluding from our thought and reasoning the Kanawha traffic).

3. The conclusion just stated -- that there is no other basis for inferring a suppression of competition -- is not [***63] affected by observing the joint trackage contract. It is true this contract was made during the period of undue intimacy, and probably it would not have been made between roads actively competing as strangers to each other; but this does not determine its character or effect. In March, 1910, the two purchasers (the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Lake Shore) of these roads found this joint trackage contract in existence. They saw that the entire physical and traffic situations on both roads were accommodated to this contract. They saw that it served, in large measure, as a substitute for double tracking each road; that it enabled each road to haul more traffic and give better service and at a less cost, and so, presumably, at a less rate, than either could otherwise have done, except by expending vast amounts in double tracking; that it was an operating arrangement having no connection whatever with competitive traffic seeking; that of itself it was of great and undisputed benefit to both railroads and to the shipping public, and of itself did not and could not work any harm to any interest, public or private. Under these circumstances, the purchasers preserved and continued this public [**64] and private benefit, and I cannot see how such conduct has any bearing, even evidential, to convict them of suppressing competition in traffic getting.

---

<sup>6</sup>I will refer to the Hocking Valley Railway Company as "the Hocking"; to the Toledo & Ohio Central and the Zanesville & Western Railroads as "the Central"; to the Kanawha & Michigan Railway Company as "the Kanawha"; to the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company as "the Lake Shore"; and to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company as "the Chesapeake & Ohio" or "the C. & O."

4. The conclusion that since March, 1910, competition in traffic originating on these lines has not been restrained, is confirmed by the fact that there is no complaint by shippers of such traffic. Serious or long continued restraint of proper competition is a disease producing inevitable and well-known symptoms -- discrimination, excessive rates, poor service, unfair practices, and the like. The relations now said to be unlawful had been in existence for a year when this bill was filed, and for another year before the testimony was closed; and we did not have pointed out to us in the argument, nor have I seen in the record, any instance of any complaint by any shipper or consignee on any of these subjects.<sup>7</sup>

[**65] [*321] 5. If I am so far correct, there remains for consideration among the primary inquiries only the matter of joint control of the Kanawha by the other two roads; and the conclusion which we reach as to whether or not this joint ownership and control, as developed in this case, are violative of the law, must, I think, determine the whole case. I agree that the fact of the ownership of this stock by the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Lake Shore, instead of by the Hocking and the Central, is not of itself controlling. The presence of the former roads, instead of the latter, in the field of the problem, can affect only the question of the dominant intent in the whole transaction. The name in which they entered their Kanawha stock purchases means nothing. I agree, also, that the entire arrangement of March, 1910, was accompanied by, and in some degree depended upon, a clear understanding (and, therefore, an agreement) that the Kanawha should, as far as it could, divide its through north-bound traffic equally between the Hocking and the Central. This does not become less true because they never executed the contemplated written agreement, nor because their perfected understanding [**66] referred to a division that should be "fair" rather than to one that should be "equal." Under the anticipated conduct of all parties -- equal furnishing of cars, etc. -- no division which was not equal would be fair, and the two mean the same thing.

6. We are brought, then, to general question when and how far the purchase, by two parallel and competing roads, of a common connection and continuing road, under an agreement to divide the through traffic derived therefrom, violates the law, and then to the specific question of application to the facts of this case.

Purchase by one line of a connecting and continuing line has never been thought unlawful, although, if the purchasing line is one of two or more competing for the through traffic from the connecting line, such purchase, inevitably, strongly tends to destroy existing competition.<sup>8</sup> Such a joint purchase by two competing lines has never been held ipso facto unlawful. Indeed, the Supreme Court has said (by what is probably a dictum, Southern Pac. Co. v. Interstate Com. Com., 200 U.S. 559, 26 Sup. Ct. 330, 50 L. Ed. 585) that such competition is not the competition which an analogous statute was intended to preserve. In [**67] March, 1910, the first carrier had the right to select the continuing carrier. After June, 1910, this right belonged to the shipper, if he chose to exercise it; and it calls for a construction of the statute which has not yet been given to say that an agreement between carriers as to how they will divide and carry this kind of traffic (a very different [*322] thing from a pooling contract) or the carrying on of such division when this bill was filed is a monopolizing or restraint of trade or commerce contemplated by the act.<sup>9</sup> At the same time it is clear that competition between carriers for traffic from one

<sup>7</sup> I do not overlook the broad complaint that the rates from the Hocking district were too large in proportion to the rates from the Kanawha district; but, in fact, all rates were fixed with relation to the Pittsburgh-Ashtabula rate. This rate was not made by these defendants, but it was the "keystone of the arch." When the Commission reduced this Pittsburgh rate from 88 to 78 cents, the Hocking voluntarily reduced its Hocking-Toledo rate from 85 to 75 cents, and the 75-cent rate has been sustained by the Commission. See Interst. Com. Com'n R., opinion No. 1941, case No. 4274, New Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., vol. 24, p. 244.

<sup>8</sup> At one time, the New York Central, the Erie and the Lehigh competed at Buffalo for the east-bound through traffic from the Lake Shore, and the Michigan Central, Grand Trunk, and Lake Shore competed for the westbound through traffic from the New York Central. The purchase of the Lake Shore by the New York Central restricted, if it did not end, this competition, for not until June, 1910, could joint rates have been compelled, nor, if there had been through joint rates, did the shipper, until that time, have the right of reselection. See 36 Stat. at Large, 552, 553. Formerly, a through joint route could be compelled only as there was no existing "practicable" through route. And see note 14 as to joint through routes after June, 1910.

connecting line may affect the condition of the shipper upon the originating line, and I see no reason to doubt the proposition which, in this respect, must underlie the opinion of the court, viz., that the forbidden restraint may be found in this joint purchase of a common extension by two competing roads; but it seems clear that in a case of this class the criterion must consist in the principle stated by *Mr. Justice Lurton in the St. Louis Terminal Case, 224 U.S. 394, 32 Sup. Ct. 510, 56 L. Ed. 810:*

"Whether it (the transaction in question) is a facility in aid [**68] of interstate commerce or an unreasonable restraint forbidden by the act of Congress * * * will depend upon the intent to be inferred from the extent of the control thereby secured over the instrumentalities which such commerce is under compulsion to use, the method by which such control has been brought about and the manner in which that control has been exerted."

[**69] From this statement and from the very recent, familiar decisions of the Supreme Court, including the Union Pacific Merger Case, supra, and the *Reading Case, 226 U.S. 324, 33 Sup. Ct. 90, 57 L. Ed. 810,* it seems accurate to say that whether the situation created in March, 1910, operated in aid of interstate commerce or in the forbidden, unreasonable restraint thereof will depend upon (1) the extent of commerce restraining power inherent in the joint ownership of the Kanawha; (2) the characterizing intent and purpose of this joint ownership to be inferred not only from the power secured, but from all the proofs; in other words, whether such restraint of competition as was inherent in the joint ownership would amount to a primary, and therefore direct, restraint of trade, or would rather be incidental to ends primarily lawful; and (3) the amount of restraint, actual or potential, which did take place.

7. If this joint ownership has the prohibited effect, it must be found (a) in competition as to divisions; (b) in competition as to rates; or (c) in competition as to service.

(a) Clearly this joint ownership tends to prevent the Central and the Hocking from bidding up against [**70] each other in the divisions that they will offer to the Kanawha for this traffic, and so the other Kanawha stockholders might make less money. This is not the kind of competition which the statute desires to preserve. It serves no public interest. It tends, because of a disproportionate division to the initiating carrier, to poor service by the continuing carrier and to indifference by both to the interests of the shipper. It has long been recognized as a traffic evil. On its elimination we cannot predicate guilt.

(b) It is clear, too, that an agreement to divide traffic would, as a [*323] general proposition, have some tendency to prevent competition in rates; that is, the Hocking would not be so likely to name its lowest rate from the Ohio to the lake as if it was not sure of half the traffic any way, and so the through rate from the Kanawha district to the lake might not fall to the point where it would be brought by full competition.<sup>10</sup> This is, I think, as strongly as this feature can be stated. It is, of course, now perfectly well settled that free competition is the policy of the law, and it is none of our concern whether this is, as to railroads, the best economic [**71] policy; but, when we are trying to decide whether we are compelled to find a dominating intent to restrict trade merely because one inducement to compete in rates is removed, we cannot shut our eyes to the small part which rate competition now plays. These contracting parties knew, in 1910, as we all now know perfectly well, that under the thorough and efficient administration of the Interstate Commerce Law rate cutting, as a means of getting business, either from shippers or from connecting lines, has ceased. All rates, through as well as local, must be published, and cannot be cut until after 30 days' notice. A published cut is reasonably sure to be met by all who are competing without a differential. No contract for traffic in consideration of a cut can be made, and, as cutting rates will not get business away from a competitor, rates are not voluntarily cut. I do not mean to say that this disappearance of rate cutting makes lawful a contract to maintain rates -- not at all; but it does affect and minimize the evidential importance of a contract removing one

<sup>9</sup>Without doubt, two parallel roads might join in building, from a common terminus, and owning a new road connecting with and continuing both. Joining in buying an existing extension seems to stand, logically, on the same ground, unless, as matter of fact, the purchase was with the dominant purpose of stopping existing or normal competition.

<sup>10</sup>The actual effect of the (theoretical) rate sustaining interrelationship is minimized by the fact that coal rates go by districts, and a change in one district would affect all the others. (See note 2.)

inducement to cut rates, when we are determining the character of the entire transaction of which that removal is only [**72] one element.<sup>11</sup>

(c) Coming to competition in service, it is not to be denied that such a traffic-dividing agreement as here exists tends to discourage this kind of competition, and that there is here, in theory, some degree of restraint, more likely to have actual effect than is the restraint as to rates.<sup>12</sup>

[**73] We find, then, both as to rates and service, some impediment to ideally free competition; but that ideal is rare, if it exists at all. We must have a practical standard of comparison. That standard must be [*324] the lawful situation which would exist, except for the agreement said to be forbidden. This lawful situation is usually that which was displaced by the agreement under attack; but in this case the next earlier situation was itself unlawful, and to get on solid ground we must go back to 1899. The theoretically perfect remedy would be to restore the condition existing in 1899. The bill of complaint and the logic of the situation lead there and lead us nowhere else. When we get there, we find that the Central practically owned the Kanawha. For 10 years it had been the majority stockholder, and it was in absolute control. For the Kanawha traffic, the Kanawha and the Central formed one through unitary line from the mines to the lake. The Hocking could not compete for part of the haul, and, so far as concerns any benefit to the Kanawha shippers, the Hocking might as well have been out of existence.<sup>13</sup> As compared with this situation, I cannot doubt that the present [**74] arrangement is an aid, not a restraint, to competition.

This was in 1899. If we ought to look for a standard of comparison in 1910, that standard must be such other lawful arrangement as might naturally have resulted in the course of separating the two Ohio roads, if the contract for joint control of the Kanawha had not been made. This other arrangement would almost certainly have been the purchase of the Kanawha by or for either the Hocking or the Central exclusively in its own interest. The Kanawha had always been operated in connection with one or the other or both of these roads. It had little reason for existence, except as an extension of one or both of these roads. Except in co-operation with them, it could not get its coal to market. It is not impossible that a wholly independent purchaser for the Kanawha might have been found, but that there should be an independent purchaser who did not plan to resell to one of the other through lines, and who would pay anything like the price which the road was worth [**75] to either one of the Ohio lines as an extension, is highly improbable. Suppose, then, that it had been purchased in 1910, by or for the Central (and the government concedes this would have been lawful), it follows that all the Kanawha traffic would have gone through Ohio over the Central so far as the Kanawha and the Central, acting directly or indirectly, could have brought about this result. So long as a satisfactory through route was provided by the Kanawha-Central line, the Kanawha could not have been compelled to establish a through route or rate by way of the Hocking, and the Hocking could not have competed at all.<sup>14</sup> Even if the Kanawha could have been compelled to establish [*325] a <sup>11</sup> In the same way, when some tendency to maintain high rates is only an incident of the contract under attack, we may well remember that the shippers' meritorious grievance on this point is the maintenance of an unreasonable rate, and for that he has an effective remedy.

<sup>12</sup> While each road is content with half the Kanawha traffic, and the Kanawha has the power to equalize, the agreement to divide tends to make both Ohio roads careless as to good service. Now that the shipper has the absolute right of through routing, the Kanawha's power to equalize rests solely on its relations to the Sunday Creek mines, which originate a considerable part of the tonnage, available as an equalizing medium, so that here, too, the Sunday Creek ownership is the real evil. With this removed, the agreement to divide the Kanawha traffic becomes comparatively ineffective, and the shippers' right of through routing must bring the freight solicitors to them in competition.

<sup>13</sup> There was then (in 1899) no way of compelling the Kanawha to join the Hocking in a through route or joint rate; nor was there, indeed, in 1910. (See note 14.)

<sup>14</sup> In March, 1910, the Commission could direct two roads to join in a through rate and route only, "provided no reasonable or satisfactory through route exists." 34 S.L. 590. It seems clear that the Kanawha-Central route would have been made and kept a "reasonable and satisfactory through route" so that the power to compel the Kanawha to join with the Hocking never would have arisen. In June, 1910, this proviso was cut out, but its place was taken by the provision (36 S.L., 552): "And in establishing such through route, the commission shall not require any company, without its consent, to embrace in such route substantially through route and rate via the Hocking the same as via the Central, the Kanawha-Central could have made the part of the rate south of the Ohio river so high, and the part north of the river so low, that the Hocking could not make a competing local rate; or, even if this trouble was overcome, there would still remain the numerous practical obstacles which the Kanawha-Central management could oppose to a diversion of part of its through traffic. In any of these events, the Kanawha shippers [**76] would have no remedy from the law or from the Interstate Commerce Commission, excepting to compel a reasonable through rate; and that remedy has never been impaired.

[**77] These considerations lead me directly to the conclusion that the Kanawha-Hocking-Central relationship now attacked produced (inherently) for the Kanawha district shippers less monopoly and more competition and better service than would have followed from either of the alternative arrangements which would naturally have resulted in 1910, if this one had not been made. The other would have been concededly lawful. I cannot find unlawful monopoly, resulting from inherent power to restrain competition, where that power is less than it would be in the lawful alternative situations.

8. If the intent unlawfully to monopolize or restrain may not be inferred merely from the existence of the power, where that power is of the limited extent and of the peculiar nature which have been described, is that intent otherwise proved by this record?

The five trunk lines had been engaged in an unlawful combination and had been directed by the Ohio Supreme Court to dissolve such combination. It is their purported dissolution which is now under review. Where the only question is whether the defendants are in bad faith continuing a violation of the law after having pretended to quit, it seems to [**78] me reasoning in a circle to draw, from their former misconduct, any serious inference of their present bad faith.

If the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Lake Shore had purchased the Kanawha stock with no interest in the subject-matter, except to control its traffic for the Hocking and the Central, the question would be different; but that was not the sole interest of either purchaser. The Chesapeake & Ohio desired an outlet to Lake Erie for all of its own great [*326] traffic.<sup>15</sup> For this purpose, it desired to buy the Hocking. This purpose and this desire were beyond criticism; but to reach Gallipolis, the nearest point on the Hocking, it must build across the Ohio river and over 30 miles of difficult country, and it must then, for its traffic, either practically rebuild the Hocking river division, 75 miles, to Logan, or build, new, 50 miles, to Athens, in order, one way or the other, to reach the modernized lines of the Hocking. Why should it be required to do this, paralleling the Kanawha, when it could buy such an interest in the Kanawha as secured to it the indefeasible right to use the Kanawha as this connecting link? What rule of public policy required it to build this [**79] new road instead of buying the existing road?

Turning to the Lake Shore, we find that it desired to buy the Central for the purpose of reaching the coal fields and getting both coal traffic and fuel coal for itself and its allied New York Central lines, and to make connections for through traffic both ways, with the Coal & Coke and the Western Maryland roads. These were rightful and less than the entire length of its railroad and of any intermediate railroad operated in conjunction and under a common management or control therewith which lies between the termini of such proposed through route, unless to do so would make such through route unreasonably long as compared with another practicable through route which could otherwise be established." This is awkwardly expressed, because of the lack of definite antecedent for "to do so"; but it seems to mean that if the condition in 1899 was restored, and if the Hocking demanded from the Kanawha a joint through route, via either Athens or the river division, the Kanawha could not be required to comply, because such route would embrace substantially less than the entire length of the Kanawha to Corning, and less than the entire route between its termini, the Kanawha district and Toledo, over railroads "operated in conjunction and under a common management and control." So the Hocking solicitors, in the Kanawha district, would have been helpless.

<sup>15</sup> That this was real, not pretended, is shown by what happened. In 1909, the first full year before the change, the C. & O. delivered to the Kanawha for hauling over its line, 4,000 tons of coal and coke and 70,000 tons of other freight. In 1911, the first full year after the change, it so delivered 811,000 tons of coal and coke, and 168,000 tons of other freight. Between the same periods, southeasterly bound freight received by the C. & O. from the Kanawha increased from 122,000 tons to 199,000 tons. This enormous tonnage given by the C. & O. to the Kanawha was not merely diverted from the other connections of the C. & O., because there was no decrease in the tonnage given to these other connections.

legitimate objects, also beyond criticism. So was its desire to have this feeder reach [**80] the Kanawha district. Apparently, no one questions that it could rightfully have purchased the Kanawha outright, nor is there, to my mind, any reason for ascribing to the Lake Shore any moving purpose in the whole transaction of March, except that just mentioned.

We find, then, that the Chesapeake & Ohio had the legal right to buy the Kanawha and a strong and lawful motive for so doing, and that the Lake Shore had the same right and an equally strong and lawful motive, and that this underlying and justifying motive by each had nothing to do with the thought of suppressing competition between the Hocking and the Central; yet the Lake Shore knew that, if the Chesapeake & Ohio made the purchase, the Lake Shore would be defeated in its plan of reaching the Kanawha fields, and the Lake Shore's subsidiary, the Central, would get no Kanawha traffic which the Kanawha could divert; and the Chesapeake & Ohio knew that, if the Lake Shore made the purchase, not only would the former's subsidiary, the Hocking, get little through traffic, but the whole scheme for the Chesapeake & Ohio outlet to the lake would be defeated. Under these circumstances, what more natural than that they should join [**81] in buying the Kanawha, each secure against exclusion by the other, and what primary or characterizing unlawful purpose can be found in such a joint purchase? If this joint purchase was, for these reasons, rightful and lawful, as I believe it was, the arrangement for dividing between [*327] the Central and the Hocking the traffic originating on the Kanawha, though important in itself, becomes relatively a mere incident of the main transaction, and its real purpose was to prevent a monopoly of this traffic by either purchaser. It makes little difference how express the equal division agreement was. Such an agreement would be implied from such a situation. Nothing else would be fair or right. If a receiver should be appointed for the Kanawha, the court would direct him to do just what this division agreement called for and what these parties have been doing, viz., divide this traffic equally between the two Ohio lines, so far as he could do so and so far as they were equal in their furnishing of cars and other facilities; in other words, "to treat them fairly."

9. The remaining element of the assumed general criterion is the amount of restraint, actual or potential, which [**82] did take place.<sup>16</sup> Here, again, we find that the natural symptoms of a suppression of competition did not exist. No one complains of any suppression or of any practices resulting therefrom; and this for the very good reason that there never was any competition to suppress. It is difficult to prove that defendants have put a burden upon a thing which never existed. Not only is the record barren of any suggestion that the Kanawha shippers ever had the benefit of any competition between the Central and the Hocking, but it affirmatively shows that during the 10 years before 1910 competition was impossible, because the Hocking controlled everything; and that before 1900 it was impossible, because the Kanawha belonged to the Central.

It is certain, then, that the result which will condemn the [**83] agreement must be found in the suppression of "potential" competition, and we must ascertain what this means. In the Union Pacific Case the thought was applied with reference to undeveloped traffic from territories already reached by the two roads, and which traffic might grow into larger volume; but the same idea must extend to new and likely methods of competition and even, in some instances, to the building of new roads or branches to make competitive territory out of that which has been tributary to one road only. Whether competition, between the roads now existing, in cutting rates, etc., is probable enough or would be serious enough under the facts of this case to be that potential competition which must be preserved, has been discussed. It is still possible that the Ohio road which saw the Kanawha sold away from it would have built a new line to the Kanawha district even in spite of the great topographical difficulties. Such new road apparently could not have reached any mines now on the Kanawha, because there is room for no new track along the river next to these mines; but, treating the district and not the individual mines as the shipping unit, it could have reached other [**84] parts and developed new mines. That [*328] it would have done so is, however, the merest surmise. It is not even probable, so far as the record informs us; and I cannot condemn the joint Kanawha purchase because it has possibly prevented the building of another line in some unknown location at some vague future time. An arrangement which removes the motive for building a competing line cannot, for that reason alone, amount to an unlawful forestalling of potential competition, unless such forestalling was a substantial and moving purpose of the arrangement, and unless the building of such other line was at least reasonably probable -- indeed, the latter condition covers both, because it could not be the main and sufficient motive, unless the new road was foreseen as probable.

---

<sup>16</sup> The Kanawha traffic to be divided was about twenty-five per cent. of the total traffic of the two Ohio roads. This appears only as to the Hocking; I assume a similar ratio on the Central. I reach this result by taking the figures for 1911 (Ex. 138) and excluding the south-bound tonnage from the total of Kanawha and excluding the C. & O. tonnage from total Kanawha and total Hocking.

Finally, in testing the actual results, we must look to the Kanawha shippers. All this controversy is to protect their interests -- and, of course, the correlative interests of the public which buys from them. Have the shippers been injured? Are their rights in jeopardy? On one hand, it appears that there is somewhat less of motive on the part of the Central and the Hocking to compete on a part of [**85] the through haul than there would be under certain other circumstances which never did exist, which would not have been a probable alternative, but which perhaps might have come into existence. I find nothing else to put on this side of the scale. On the other hand, it appears that the great trouble in coal shipments is to get cars, and that the Kanawha, even when in combination with the Central and the Hocking, was poorly supplied with cars and served its shippers poorly. It was greatly interested in its own coal companies, and it would have supplied them if it could, even if it did not impartially distribute all the cars it could get. Under these conditions, coal shipments from the mines along the Kanawha amounted, in the last six months of 1909, to 36,000 cars. With the transfers in March, 1910, there came a new outlet to all the western C. & O. territory, and direct and close relations which made it to the interests of these two trunk lines to furnish cars to the Kanawha.<sup>17</sup> It seemingly must have been due, at least in a large part, to these greater facilities that the shipments by the mines along the Kanawha had increased in the last six months of 1911, to 42,000 cars. This [**86] does not seem to indicate a substantial restraint of trade and commerce. It seems to me clear that the Kanawha shippers and their dependent public have been benefited by the transaction of March, 1910, taken as a whole, and that interstate trade and commerce have been promoted thereby;<sup>18</sup> while the only restraint affecting such shippers or such commerce is theoretical rather than actual, and such as [*329] it is, arises out of a natural, if not necessary, incident of the main transaction.

10. There remain for consideration two further suggestions. It is [**87] said that the Hocking and the Kanawha are competing roads, and hence that the former cannot take part in managing the latter, either directly or through the instrumentality of the Hocking's chief stockholder. I am not satisfied that these two roads are in any fair sense competing. The portion of the Kanawha extending from Hobson north 40 miles to Corning, and that portion of the Hocking extending from Logan south 50 miles to the river, are substantially parallel and 20 miles apart. There is some traffic to and from two or three small towns, Pomeroy, Middleport, and Gallipolis, but the Kanawha does not reach these towns with its own track, and runs to them over the Hocking under a trackage contract which does not permit it to compete with the Hocking, except by the latter's sufferance. A small amount of coal is produced at some mines along the southern part of the Hocking river division. The Kanawha might, by building its own spurs and branches, reach these three towns and these mines, but the whole of the traffic so reachable and as to which, theoretically, there might be competition, is negligible both in percentages and in total volume; neither is any reason shown to anticipate [**88] increase.

The relative positions of the Hocking and the Kanawha are not those of parallel and competing roads, but those of connecting and continuing roads having an end overlap. It is, in principle, though not in degree, as if the New York Central ran from the east to Niagara Falls through Buffalo, and the Michigan Central, from the west, to Buffalo, through Niagara Falls. Here would be from Buffalo to Niagara Falls two parallel roads, and they might compete for the freight originating at those and intermediate points. This could hardly be thought sufficient to deprive these two roads of their substantially connecting, rather than competing, character. So here, one looking at the map must, I think, observe that the Hocking and the Kanawha form substantially a connecting and continuing line from Gauley

---

<sup>17</sup> Up to July, 1909, the Hocking, Central, and Kanawha cars were pooled and used interchangeably on these roads. During the nine months intermediate the end of this pooling arrangement and May 1, 1910, the date of full effect of the March contracts, the Central furnished to the Kanawha an average of 266 cars per month. During the same months of 1910 and 1911 it so furnished an average of 1,466 per month.

<sup>18</sup> In 1909 the New York Central lines were furnishing 1,600 cars per month to the Central; in 1911, 8,300 cars per month. Coal production at the mines on the Central increased 500,000 tons for 1911 over 1909.

Bridge to Lake Erie, and do not lose this character because a branch or spur of the Hocking Toledo-Athens main line branches off at Logan, parallels the north end of the Kanawha and strikes it at Kenauga.

It is true the Ohio court made a finding that these roads were parallel and competing, but the court was considering that portion of the Kanawha north of the river, and not, [**89] as we must do, the entire road; and also was treating the Kanawha as part of one system with the Central, a thing which we now cannot do. That court was also considering intrastate commerce, as to which the conclusion of fact might well be different from the proper conclusion regarding the immense volume of traffic involved under this record.

11. It is also said that the C. & O. and Kanawha are competing roads, and hence the former cannot take part in the management of the latter. The roads are parallel from Gauley Bridge to Charleston, a distance of 30 miles along opposite sides of the Kanawha river. The mines on one side ship over the Kanawha; on the other side, over the C. & O. On neither side can they practically reach the other railroad. [*330] The cost of crossing the river would be prohibitive. On neither side could another railroad track be built, the river valley being, at many places, a mere gorge. From Charleston to the Ohio river the courses are generally divergent, one tending north, the other west. Charleston is a common point, and there should be, at this point, competition for freight originating at Charleston or coming in over the Coal & Coke Railroad [**90] and destined for the Northwest. The interest of the C. & O. in the Kanawha would theoretically tend to restrict this competition, though the tendency would be imperfect, because over its own lines the C. & O. would get the entire haul to Chicago, while the other way it would be interested in half the profit on the haul from Charleston to Armitage, and half of the volume of the traffic from Armitage to Toledo. One common point, with the amount of traffic existing at Charleston, would, in any event, be hardly sufficient to give a competing character to these railroads, but, even if the theoretical but imperfect tendency to limit this competition could ever sufficiently invalidate and interest by one in the other, yet, in this case, such tendency must yield to the undisputed testimony, which is that the competition at Charleston between the soliciting agents has continued active and vigorous since March, 1910, as before.

The map also suggests that control of the Kanawha might be used to block the making of a through line from the seaboard to the lakes, by way of the Virginian, the Kanawha and the Central, which through line would, as a whole, compete with the C. & O. It is sufficient [**91] to say of this suggestion that no such issue is suggested by any pleading, and that the Lake Shore, in purchasing its interest in the Kanawha, guarded against interference by the C. & O. with such possible future plan. <sup>19</sup>

Upon the whole case I see two great shipping districts with interests involved -- the Hocking coal district and the Kanawha coal district. The Hocking shippers were subject to a monopolistic combination of all transportation facilities. They now have these facilities divided between two trunk lines, wholly independent of each other, as to competition between which there exists no obstacle which a court can remove. The Kanawha shippers were always subject to that monopoly [**92] which results from having only one railroad outlet. This has been neither increased nor diminished; but by the alliance between their railroad outlet and two strong lines the shippers can reach much new territory, and the outlet has its facilities and usefulness much increased. As to the one feature (joint Kanawha control), in which the position of the shippers might be better, we are asked, it seems to me, to create competition.

---

End of Document

<sup>19</sup> Indeed, the entire subject-matter of this numbered paragraph should be disregarded for the same reason. Paragraph 20 of the bill limits the issue to the charge of a continued combination between the Hocking, the Central, the Zanesville and the Kanawha. It is important to know what the C. & O., as owner of the Kanawha, is doing with the Kanawha; but, to the issue tendered and made, it is immaterial whether the C. & O. is under disability to become the owner of the Kanawha.

United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co.

District Court, N.D. Ohio, E.D.

February 11, 1913

No. 8,003

Reporter

208 F. 733 *; 1913 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1267 **

UNITED STATES v. GREAT LAKES TOWING CO. et al.

Core Terms

---

towing, tugs, towing company, Lakes, ports, wrecking, vessels, harbor, wrecking company, vessel owner, properties, terminal, rates, percent, monopoly, stock, do business, facilities, contracts, exclusive contract, unification, eliminated, tariff, interstate commerce, stockholders, practices, promoters, commerce, lighters, lumber

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, in terms declares illegal every combination, in whatever form and of whatever nature, which directly or necessarily operates in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Eminent Domain Proceedings

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Monopolization

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A combination formed for the express purpose and with the express intent of eliminating natural and existing competition in interstate commerce, and of monopolizing and restraining such interstate commerce, by the employment of unusual and abnormal methods of business, constitutes undue restraint or suppression, and so offends against the anti-trust act that a combination which places the direct instrumentalities of interstate commerce in such a relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation, whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed, is within the condemnation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3  Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

While the sale of a business and the surrender of the good will pertaining thereto, and an agreement thereunder, within reasonable limitations as to time and territory, not to enter into competition with the purchaser, when made as part of the sale of a business, and not as a device to control commerce, is not within the federal antitrust law, the imposition of a restraint greater than necessary to afford fair protection to the legitimate interests of the purchaser, or contractor, constitutes an unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4  Sherman Act, Defenses

Good motives furnish no defense to a violation of the Sherman antitrust act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN5  Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The evil of unification lies in the temptation to higher rates and lessened regard for the public interests; and the tendency to this evil result must be recognized, even though not in a given case yet realized in actual experience. Even competitive practices, of a nature which as between business rivals standing practically on equal terms may be normal and lawful, yet when employed by a powerful monopolistic combination with the ability to crush, and for the purpose of crushing, a weak rival, may become abnormal and unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

HN6  Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The general principles affecting the remedy to be applied for a Sherman Act violation are that the continuation of the prohibited acts should be forbidden, and that the combination should be so dissolved as to neutralize the force of the unlawful power; that this result should be accomplished with as little injury as possible to the interests of the general public, and with due regard to vested property interests innocently acquired. In cases where the illegality of the combination results alone from purely administrative conditions, which may be effectively eliminated, a prohibition of the offending practices may be sufficient to vindicate the statute.

---

Opinion

[**1] [*734] Before WARRINGTON, KNAPPEN, and DENISON, Circuit Judges.

PER CURIAM. The United States filed its petition in equity against the Great Lakes Towing Company, the Dunham Towing & Wrecking Company, the Union Towing & Wrecking Company, the Thompson Towing & Wrecking Association, the Hand & Johnson Tug Line, the Pittsburgh Steamship Company, and 46 other defendants, corporate and individual, charging the maintenance of a monopoly in transportation of persons and property in commerce between the States and with Canada, and a combination in restraint of such commerce, in violation of Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200), known as the "Sherman Act." The specific monopoly and restraint charged relate to the business of vessel towing on the Great Lakes; the proofs being specially directed to the [*735] harbors of Duluth, Sault Ste. Marie (Michigan), Port Huron, Detroit, Chicago (embracing South Chicago, Gary, Whiting, and Indiana Harbor), Toledo, Sandusky, Lorain, Cleveland, Fairport, Ashtabula, Conneaut, Erie, and Buffalo (including Tonawanda and Black Rock).

Previous to and in the year 1899 the towing into and out of the harbors mentioned [**2] of vessels engaged in commerce on the Great Lakes was done by independent tug or towing companies, or individuals operating each at only one port, or, at most, at two or three ports in the immediate vicinity of each other. These tug operators were, generally speaking, in active competition with other operators (if any) at the same port, although competition was sometimes and in some places suspended by arrangements for operation on joint account, or for division of business. At Chicago were the Dunham Towing & Wrecking Company, with 17 tugs and a wrecking outfit, the Barry Bros. Towing Line, with 10 tugs, and the Hauser & Lutz Towing & Dock Company, with 3 tugs; at Buffalo, the Hand & Johnson Tug Line and the Maytham Tug Line, each with 7 tugs and a one-half ownership in a fifteenth tug; at Tonawanda were Hartman and others, with 5 tugs; at Erie and Conneaut, Ash and his associates, with 3 tugs; at Duluth, the White Line Towing Company, with 8 tugs, one lighter, and one scow, and the Inman Tug Company, with 8 tugs; at Cleveland, the Vessel Owners' Towing Company, with 10 tugs, the Cleveland Tug Company, with 5 tugs, and J. C. Gilchrist, 1 tug; at Toledo, Sullivan, usually with [**3] at least 8 tugs, and Nagle, with usually 3 tugs; at Ashtabula, the Ashtabula Tug Company, with 8 tugs; at Port Huron, the Thompson Towing & Wrecking Association, with 12 tugs and 3 lighters; at Bay City, James Davidson, with 2 tugs; at Huron, Dewhirst and others, with 2 tugs; at Fairport, the American Transportation Company, with 2 tugs; at Escanaba, the Escanaba Towing & Wrecking Company, one tug and wrecking appliances; at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., the Soo River Lighter & Wrecking Company, with two lighters; at Detroit, the Westcott Wrecking Company, Limited, with one steamer, and the Isaac Watt Wrecking Company, Limited, with one steamer; at Cheboygan, the Swayne Wrecking Company, with one steamer. While the list above given is not absolutely complete, it is nearly so, and is sufficiently complete for present purposes.

In the spring of 1899 the Great Lakes Towing Syndicate was formed, for the purpose of acquiring towing and wrecking properties, a committee of this syndicate being sent out to inspect, appraise, and take options on such properties. The Great Lakes Towing Company was organized July 6, 1899, under the laws of New Jersey, with an authorized capital stock of $5,000,000, [**4] the first of the purposes stated in the certificate of incorporation being

--

"to do a general towing, wrecking, salvage, dredging and contracting business on the Great Lakes, in all the harbors thereof, and in all streams and waters tributary thereto, or connected therewith and elsewhere."

The promoters of this organization were largely, if not exclusively, persons heavily interested, directly or by representation, in transportation on the Great Lakes (notably of coal, oil, and ore); some being [*736] interested in producing as well as in vessel owning and operating, others being interested in docking facilities. Through this syndicate, and on or before August 22, 1899, the Great Lakes Towing Company purchased the properties (in case of corporate vendors, their entire capital stocks or properties, or both) of the various tug owners and operators mentioned in the margin of this opinion,<sup>1</sup> these purchases embracing 74 tugs, 6 lighters, and 1 scow. The aggregate net purchase price paid for these properties, as indicated by journal entries on the books of the Great Lakes Towing Company, was $3,112,930.92, the vendors receiving, in cash value, much less than the prices so indicated, <sup>[**5]</sup> in many cases receiving preferred stock in whole or in part payment, and not usually any considerable amount of common stock, which latter carried the voting power; the control being held by the promoters and those having like interests. Later in 1899 and in the early part of 1900, the Great Lakes Towing Company bought the properties of still other tug owners and operators, whose names are given in the margin,<sup>2</sup> such added purchases aggregating 34 tugs and 1 steamer. The Great Lakes Towing Company (which we shall hereafter call the Towing Company) thus immediately acquired all the properties of all the prominent towing operators at each of the 14 ports in question, except those of Nagle and Sullivan, at Toledo, and the two steamers of the Swayne and Isaac Watt Wrecking Companies, respectively. It will be seen that the control of these properties was soon afterwards acquired by the Towing Company, either by purchase or by contract.

<sup>[**6]</sup> The Union Towing & Wrecking Company was incorporated after the organization of the Great Lakes Towing Company, and was practically the successor of the Inman Tug Company and the White Line Tug Company, both of Duluth. It took over the properties of these two companies, as well as those of the Independent Towing Company, the Escanaba Towing & Wrecking Company, and the Soo River Righter & Wrecking Company. The property of Barry Bros. (Chicago) was ultimately conveyed to the Dunham Towing & Wrecking Company. The properties of the Maytham Tug Line and one or more other companies were conveyed to the Hand & Johnson Tug Line. The properties operated at the lower lake ports were, for the most part, conveyed to the Great Lakes Towing Company, which also took, and has always held, the entire of the capital stock of the Hand & Johnson Tug Line, the Thompson Towing & Wrecking Association, the Union Towing & Wrecking Company, the Dunham Towing & Wrecking Company, and the Great Lakes Towing Company, Limited. All five <sup>[*737]</sup> of these last-named companies have been kept alive, but the policy and activities of each of them, in all the ports in which they respectively do business, have <sup>[**7]</sup> at all times been absolutely controlled by the Great Lakes Towing Company, through boards of directors and otherwise. The other corporations whose stocks and properties were bought by the Towing Company have been treated as defunct, although they have not been formally wound up.

In connection with each of the purchases made by the Towing Company, whether in 1899 or subsequently, the vendors (and if corporate, usually their managers and principal stockholders as well) were required to and did agree in writing that during the succeeding five years they would "in all proper ways in their power, aid and assist the party of the second part (the Towing Company), its nominees, successors and assigns, in retaining, extending and successfully prosecuting the business" formerly conducted by the vendor; and that during the same period of five years they would not "directly or as shareholders, in or by or through any interest in any corporation, partnership or association, engage in or be interested, directly or indirectly, in the business of towing and wrecking or in any branch thereof, upon the Great Lakes, their harbors, connecting and tributary waters (except Lake Ontario and its <sup>[**8]</sup> harbors and the waters east thereof), excepting only and so far as they, or either of them, shall be interested in or with the party of the second part, as shareholder or employee." The Towing Company, at and within a few months following its organization, bought apparently more tugs than needed to do all the business required at the 14 ports, if properly distributed. Occasionally the Towing Company made sales of tugs, but always under agreement of the purchasers (and with attempt to make such agreement follow the title) that the tugs should not be used in vessel towing at any of the 14 ports in question; other ports as well being usually included in the restriction.

In 1900 Maytham's Towing & Wrecking Company was organized at Buffalo, and after a bitter and expensive competition with the Towing Company, its property, including 18 tugs, was in the following year bought by the Towing Company. Soon thereafter, and in 1901, the Independent Towing Company was organized at Buffalo, and after a long and aggressive competition (which in three months of 1903 cost the Towing Company $20,000, as compared with earnings in 1901) its property, likewise, was in 1903 bought by the Towing [**9] Company, and its manager taken into the latter's employ.

<sup>1</sup> The Maytham Tug Line, the Hand & Johnson Tug Line, Ash, and others, Ashtabula Tug Company, Vessel Owners' Towing Company, Thompson Towing & Wrecking Association, Soo River Lighter & Wrecking Company, James Davidson, White Line Towing Company, Inman Tug Company, and Barry Bros., Independent Tug Line.

<sup>2</sup> The Cleveland Tug Company, the American Transportation Company, the Westcott Wrecking Company, Ltd. (whose name was thereupon changed to the Great Lakes Towing Company, Ltd.), the Dunham Towing & Wrecking Company, the Escanaba Towing & Wrecking Company, Dewhurst, and others, Sault Ste. Marie Tug Company, Hartman, and others, and Gilchrist.

In connection with the purchase of the Independent Tug Company's property and business, an agreement was made with Sullivan for carrying on the towing business at Toledo and in the Detroit and St. Clair rivers on joint account, for a period of five years from January 1, 1904, each operator contributing an equal number of tugs, the business being conducted in the name of the Great Lakes Towing Company, with Sullivan as manager, under salary; the Towing Company agreeing not to do any other towing business at Toledo, and Sullivan agreeing not to do any towing except under the agreement in question, either alone or in association with others. This agreement was subsequently extended [*738] to January 1, 1910. In April, 1904, an agreement was made with Nagle whereby, in consideration of a fixed payment of $2,000 per year for five years, he agreed that none of his three tugs should, during that period, be used "in vessel towing business on the Great Lakes, their harbors, tributary and connecting waters" (there being, however, no restriction upon Nagle's use of the tugs for other than towing business), Nagle calling this [**10] annual payment "alimony," and an officer of the Towing Company characterizing it as "blackmail." This payment of $2,000 per year was made to Nagle solely to get rid of his competition (without buying his tugs), and without the requirement of any active service. In 1905 an agreement was made with the owners of three tugs, whereby one or the other of two tugs named was to be used on joint account with the Towing Company in wrecking and other work in the vicinity of Detroit, the owners agreeing that the third tug (which was not included in the joint account operation) should during the life of the contract do no wrecking work or vessel towing in Detroit river or elsewhere, with the same restrictions as to the first and second tugs (except upon request of the Towing Company), when not employed under the contract; the towing of dredges or scows and the towing of vessels in Canadian ports other than Anherstberg (where the Towing Company did business) being excepted. Other contracts for joint operation were made, but they are less significant than those to which we have called attention.

As early as 1900 the Towing Company adopted a tariff of service rates. For the first few years after [**11] 1899 there was occasional competition at various of the ports where the Towing Company operated. That at Buffalo has already been referred to. The Sullivan and Nagle arrangements grew out of competition at Toledo. At Duluth there was more or less competition as late as 1903, and at Chicago until 1905, and to a slight extent later. The record of correspondence between officers of the Towing Company and officers and managers of its subsidiaries, from 1899 on, abounds with expressions of determination to wipe out all injurious competition, and such policy was vigorously and aggressively pursued. Wherever rates were cut by competitors the cut was at least met. After competition ceased the rates were restored. We are not satisfied that the Towing Company started general rate cutting, and it may be that it did not cut below its competitors. Indeed, it would generally seem unnecessary that it should do so. Its policy, however, was "not to lose any business on account of not making the necessary rate to get it." Competitive practices were not limited to general rate cutting, but embraced special concessions in various forms, where necessary to get business away from the opposition.

[**12] The Towing Company adopted, as early as 1900, a system of exclusive contracts, by which, in consideration of the vessel owners employing throughout the entire season the Towing Company's tug and wrecking service at all ports covered by its tariffs (so far as the vessel owner had occasion for such service), a large discount was given from tariff rates. In 1910 a flat discount of 20 per cent. was given on all bills. The discount was at no time less than 20 per cent., and in later years [*739] it varied with the class of service, ranging in 1910 from 20 per cent. on lake towing, boiler work, wrecking service, harbor towing of line boats, and first-class coarse-freight carriers, to 30 per cent. on lumber boats. No discounts were allowed except under such exclusive contracts. The vessel owner, moreover, was guaranteed that his contract rates, taken together, should not exceed the sum of the "cut rates" made to meet competition. As expressed by the Towing Company's president:

"The advantage of the contract to the vessel owner is that it saves him 20 per cent. on the tariff at all points, and even though there may be competition at some, and they cut rates, on the [**13] whole he would make a saving by doing business with us. And, again, should he be of opinion that there will be competition all along the line and the cut rates less than our contract rates, our contract protects him against that."

The Towing Company has long had a practical monopoly of harbor towing at the 14 ports. In May, 1900, its president advised the Buffalo manager that:

"Notwithstanding the heroic efforts made by the opposition company, we have secured practically all of the package freight boats, all of the ore and grain boats, and many of the lumber carriers, in all something like 500 boats, which we estimate represent fully 75 per cent. of the towing in dollars and cents which will be done on the Lakes this season. * * * As near as we can figure, if all the uncontracted towing was done by the opposition, they still would not earn sufficient money to pay their operating expenses."

As written by the Towing Company's secretary in April of the same year:

"I believe we now have about enough of the ore boats pledged to us so that the opposition could not put a tug into Lorain, or any other Lake Erie points between Cleveland and Buffalo, and half make living expenses."

[**14] In the same month the Towing Company's president wrote the president of the Union Towing & Wrecking Company, at Duluth:

"It seems to us now that there will be no occasion to make a general cut in rates unless it is for the lumber trade, and if we can fix it so that we do not have to open up the rates in the lumber business, I think we can put the other fellows to sleep and not impair our own revenue."

In June of the same year the Towing Company's secretary wrote a Canadian vessel owner, in soliciting him to make an exclusive contract:

"We have contracts now with about 80 per cent. or 90 per cent. of all the boats using tugs on the Great Lakes, for all their service."

The lumber carrying vessels were the hardest to secure. To this end an aggressive campaign was made through the Lumber Carriers' Association. In July, 1903, the president of the Towing Company was claiming that "over 90 per cent. of the entire lumber tonnage has contracted with us to do all of their work for from one to five years"; and in November, 1903, upon the purchase of the Independent Towing Company at Buffalo, and the making of the contract with Sullivan respecting the Toledo situation, the Towing Company's [**15] president reported to its executive committee that "this eliminates all the opposition the Great Lakes Towing Company has that looks at all dangerous." It is entirely safe to say that since 1904 the Great Lakes Towing Company [*740] has had no real competition in harbor towing at either of the 14 ports, except to a limited extent at Chicago for a little later period, and that it now controls 95 per cent. of the harbor towing on the Great Lakes at the 14 ports concerned.

The Towing Company does not monopolize the wrecking business as completely as that of harbor towing. There are several wrecking companies doing an active business, especially under employment by underwriters, who, having no need of towing service, are of course unaffected by the exclusive contracts employed by the Towing Company. The Towing Company's port to port towing business amounts to but about 2 per cent. of its total business, although in dollars and cents aggregating a substantial amount.

The Towing Company contends that the combination represented by it does not constitute an unreasonable restraint upon or monopoly over commerce, and thus is not within the condemnation of the Sherman act; that it [**16] is in effect merely a protective association organized for the mutual benefit of its members and promoters, whose principal expectation of gain lay in the benefits expected to accrue from improvement of the towing and wrecking service rendered their vessels, and whose purpose was not to create a monopoly nor to restrain commerce, but to facilitate it. It is shown that the size of steam vessels carrying bulk freight on the Great Lakes increased, during the five-year period preceding 1900, from 300 to 500 feet in length, and from 3,000 to 4,000 tons to 7,000 or 8,000 tons carrying capacity (a further increase having taken place since); that a similar increase took place with respect to the size and capacity of passenger steamers; that the increase in the size of freighters was accompanied by a corresponding increase in facilities for loading and unloading, through the substitution of the clam shell (and its predecessor, the scoop bucket) for the former slow method, of raising by crane or derrick buckets filled by hand in the vessel's hold. Defendants contend that the towing and wrecking facilities furnished at the important ports on the Great Lakes were totally inadequate to meet this [**17] increase in the size and number of vessels; that while there were frequently tugs enough in commission, if they could be utilized, to meet the demands for harbor towing, at many of the ports a ruinous system of cut-throat competition existed, whereby the larger tugs were used for "scout service" in meeting vessels many miles from the harbor, leaving small and insufficient tugs to do the actual harbor towing, this resulting in lack of system for furnishing tugs, absence of system of delivering orders to ships, and of uniform system for notifying incoming vessels where they belonged, accompanied by graft, lack of fixed tariffs, and by other demoralizing incidents; that at times competing concerns made arrangements for division of business, whereby each tug line was to do all the towing of vessels belonging to certain owners, the latter having nothing to say as to what tugs should serve them; that many of the tug companies were financially irresponsible, and vessel owners were thus left without adequate remedy for negligent or unskillful towing; that before the formation of the Great Lakes Towing Company some of the larger vessel interests were considering forming individual tug lines [**18] for their own [*741] service. It is also contended that the ice breaking tug service at the great grain ports of Duluth, Chicago, and Buffalo was inadequate. It is shown that, in the organization of the Great Lakes Towing Company, vessel owners contributed allotted amounts and took corresponding portions of stock, the vessel owners being expected to give their business to the new association; that the promoters tried first to buy out all tug operators at ports where bulk freighters did much business, instead of driving such operators out of business. It is also shown that the Towing Company has so increased the power and changed the construction of ice breaking tugs as to lengthen the navigation period at the great grain ports by three weeks each year; that harbor towing service has been improved, delays largely eliminated, the delivering of orders systematized, and a responsible concern substituted for a number of concerns, some of whom were not responsible. Finally, it is urged that in the towing service a natural monopoly is impossible; that the organization of the Towing Company is practically a mere unification of the system of harbor towing, analogous to railway terminal [**19] service, and that in the absence of a natural monopoly such mere unification is not objectionable, the language of the decision in the St. Louis Terminal Case being invoked as decisive of the legality of the Towing Company's status.

The general propositions applicable to the facts presented are too well settled to justify much discussion. HN1↑
The Sherman act in terms declares illegal every combination, in whatever form and of whatever nature, which directly or necessarily operates in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 331, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679, and cases there cited. While by its later decisions the Supreme Court has interpreted the statute as not restraining the "power to make normal and usual contracts to further trade by resorting to all normal methods, whether by agreement or otherwise, to accomplish such purpose," and has declared that the words "restraint of trade" should be given a meaning which would not destroy the individual right of contract and render difficult, if not impossible, any movement of trade in interstate commerce, the free movement of which it was [**20] the purpose of the statute to protect ( Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. [N.S.] 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 179, 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 55 L. Ed. 663; United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324, 33 Sup. Ct. 90, 57 L. Ed. 243, it may yet be regarded as well settled that HN2↑ a combination formed for the express purpose and with the express intent of eliminating natural and existing competition in interstate commerce, and of monopolizing and restraining such interstate commerce, by the employment of unusual and abnormal methods of business, constitutes undue restraint or suppression, and so offends against the anti-trust act ( Standard Oil Co., supra; American Tobacco Co., supra; Reading Case, supra); and that a combination which places the direct instrumentalities of interstate commerce in such a relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation, whereby natural and existing competition in interstate [*742] commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed, is within the condemnation of the act (Standard Oil Co. Case, supra; American Tobacco Co. Case, supra).

We entertain [**21] no doubt that tugs employed in the business of towing, into and out of harbors and between ports, of vessels engaged in interstate commerce, and in the lightering and wrecking of vessels so engaged, are themselves instrumentalities of interstate commerce. Foster v. Davenport, 63 U.S. \(22 How.\) 244, 16 L. Ed. 248; Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U.S. 69, 5 Sup. Ct. 38, 28 L. Ed. 653; Harmon v. Chicago, 147 U.S. 396, 13 Sup. Ct. 306, 37 L. Ed. 216. It inevitably follows that any undue restraint upon such business of towing and wrecking offends against the Sherman act.

The intention of the Great Lakes Towing Company and its promoters to obtain complete control of the towing and wrecking service in at least the 14 ports mentioned is, we think, clearly established by the considerations to which we have referred. Referring to the more prominent of those considerations:

HN3 While the sale of a business and the surrender of the good will pertaining thereto, and an agreement thereunder, within reasonable limitations as to time and territory, not to enter into competition with the purchaser, when made as part of the sale of a business, and not as a device to control commerce, is not within the federal [**22] Anti-Trust Law (see authorities cited in Darius Cole Transp. Co. v. White Star Line [C.C.A. 6] 186 Fed. 63, 65, 108 C.C.A. 165), the imposition of a restraint greater than necessary to afford fair protection to the legitimate interests of the purchaser, or contractor, constitutes an unreasonable restraint under the Sherman act. Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423, 28 Sup. Ct. 572, 52 L. Ed. 865. The fact that the restraint of competition was not limited to the locality where the seller was doing business, but was made to extend to all harbors upon the Great Lakes (except Lake Ontario), tends to show an intention on the part of the Towing Company to get more than reasonable protection incidental to the good will of the business sold. Likewise the restrictions upon competition imposed in the case of all the joint operating contracts referred to were greater than necessary for the protection of the Towing Company's legitimate business interests at the local service points covered by such contracts. No more effective method could well be devised for unifying the towing interests in question than by combining in one corporation the stocks of a large number of other [**23] corporations creating such a comparatively vast capitalization and influence. Such unification, unexplained, justified a presumption of an intent to dominate and control the towing facilities. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734. The fact that the policy of the Towing Company's promoters was to buy out competitors, rather than to buy new tugs, and by competition compel the loss to other tug owners of their property, does not tend to negative an intent to create a monopoly. Such course, as avoiding expensive competition, was entirely consistent with an intent exclusively to occupy the field. A [*743] wicked purpose to wreck the property and business of those then engaged in towing is not essential to a violation of the statute.

The Towing Company's object in employing the system of customers' exclusive contracts was clearly to make successful competition impossible. As written by the Towing Company's president during the competition at Buffalo in 1903:

"Some of the line managers, and a very large per cent. of the vessel owners, have been induced to contract with this company, with the [**24] understanding that those who remained outside when the opposition was destroyed would have to pay the full tariff rates."

That these contracts greatly contributed to the suppression of competition is likewise clear. They enabled the Towing Company to do each year a profitable business, despite competition at certain localities which would have been ruinous to an operator in that one locality, for rate cutting at one port did not affect the regular tariff rates at any of the other ports. As expressed by the Towing Company's secretary in 1900:

"As a matter of fact * * * these contracts are what are saving us from having the business entirely demoralized at all points."

It is true that the Towing Company has not attempted to do business on Lake Ontario or at any of the nearly 40 other harbors on the Great Lakes enumerated in the margin.<sup>3</sup> But this fact has nothing to do with the question of defendants' attempt to monopolize business at the 14 ports in question. It is not necessary to a violation of the federal statute that a complete monopoly of all towing on the Great Lakes be effected. *Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 332, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. [**25] 679*. A monopoly in 14 ports is as offensive against the act as a monopoly in 50 ports. We may remark, in passing, that we are satisfied that the business at none of the ports outside the 14 in question (unless it be Milwaukee) was such as to be attractive to the Towing Company.

---

<sup>3</sup> Two Harbors, Minnesota; Ft. William, Port Arthur, Michipicoten, Parry Sound, Depot Harbor, Midland, Collingwood, Owen Sound, Kincardine, Goderich, Port Dalhousie, Canada; Ontonagon, Houghton and Hancock, Manistique, Gladstone, Cheboygan, Petoskey, Traverse City, Manistee, Ludington, Muskegon, Grand Haven, Holland, South Haven, Benton Harbor, Alpena, Saginaw, Bay City, Harbor Beach, Mich.; Menominee, Green Bay, Two Rivers, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, Waukegan, Wis.

We do not doubt that in 1899 the tug service, both towing and wrecking, at certain of the lake ports in question was unsatisfactory, although from the fact that no new tugs were built by the Towing Company for 7 years thereafter (and but four in 10 years) and no new lighters or wrecking appliances acquired during the first four years, it would appear that there was in 1899 no great dearth of tugs, or even of tugs of [*<sup>26</sup>] sufficient size, if properly employed. The question is whether the unsatisfactory towing facilities, including their practical operation, justified the making of this combination. Of the claim that the towing Company was merely a mutual protective association, it is enough to say that defendants' contentions in this regard are not sustained. Not all, or even nearly all, vessel owners needing the service [*<sup>744</sup>] in question were included as (or even invited to become) members of the association. Nor can we assent to the suggestion that the combination was not organized for profit. The betterment of the service was unquestionably one of its attractive features, and probably the leading one; but we are satisfied the promoters confidently anticipated a profitable operation, and that but for such anticipation the combination would not have been formed. Cogent evidence of this conclusion is found in the declaration of the Towing Company's directors on August 16, 1899, that the properties proposed to be taken by the syndicate --

"had made net earnings which in the aggregate would pay a fair interest on $3,500,000 [much more than was proposed to be paid for the properties], which [*<sup>27</sup>] net earnings will undoubtedly be largely increased as a result of single management and of combined operation of the properties."

It is also to be noted that the officers reported to the stockholders in 1901 that the company had earned during the season of 1900, "in spite of a bitter competition" (principally the Maytham competition, it would seem), a net undivided profit of over $90,000, after paying 7 per cent. on the preferred stock. The dividend was passed, however, so as to leave the company strong to meet such competition the next season. We are satisfied that the Towing Company's operations have proved financially profitable to its stockholders.

The fact that the towing and wrecking service has been improved under the Towing Company's administration cannot legalize the combination if otherwise unlawful. Not only do HN4[↑] good motives furnish no defense to a violation of the anti-trust act ( Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U.S. 20, 33 Sup. Ct. 9, 57 L. Ed. 107), but we have no right to assume that the unsatisfactory conditions existing in 1899 could not have been eliminated by lawful and normal methods.

Has the Towing Company acquired this domination of the [*<sup>28</sup>] towing and wrecking service by normal methods alone; or, as otherwise stated, has it unduly restrained or suppressed competition? We think it clear that the Towing Company's domination does not result from normal methods alone. Whatever may be the views of individual economists, under the federal statutory policy normal and healthy competition is the law of trade; and such evils as may result from such competition must be considered less than those liable to follow a complete unification of interests and the power such unification gives. HN5[↑] The evil of unification lies in the temptation to higher rates and lessened regard for the public interests; and the tendency to this evil result must be recognized, even though not in a given case yet realized in actual experience. United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 226 U.S. 61, 33 Sup. Ct. 53, 57 L. Ed. 124; Joint Traffic Association Case, 171 U.S. 505, 576, 19 Sup. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, supra. Even competitive practices, of a nature which as between business rivals standing practically on equal terms may be normal and lawful, yet when employed by a powerful monopolistic combination with the [*<sup>29</sup>] ability to crush, and for the purpose of crushing, a weak rival, may become abnormal and unlawful. It needs no discussion to demonstrate that complete unification of the [*<sup>745</sup>] towing and wrecking facilities at 14 principal ports, accompanied by restraints with respect to competition imposed upon the sellers of towing properties in excess of the legitimate protection necessary to the preservation of the business purchased, excessive restrictions against competition under joint operating contracts and on sales of tugs, bitter rate wars, and a system of exclusive contracts with customers such as is found here, all adopted or engaged in for the purpose of effectuating monopolistic control, are abnormal methods of doing business and eliminating competition, and that a restraint of natural competition by such means is undue restraint. We think the St. Louis Terminal Case (224 U.S. 383, 32 Sup. Ct. 507, 56 L. Ed. 810), so far from sustaining the legality of the combination maintained by the Towing Company, contains a direct denial of such legality. It was there held that the unification of substantially every terminal railroad facility by which the traffic of St. Louis is served [**30] constituted a combination in restraint of trade. It is true that the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Lurton, there said:

"It cannot be controverted that, in ordinary circumstances, a number of independent companies might combine for the purpose of controlling or acquiring terminals for their common but exclusive use. In such cases other companies might be admitted upon terms or excluded altogether. If such terms were too onerous, there would ordinarily remain the right and power to construct their own terminals. But the situation at St. Louis is most extraordinary, and we base our conclusion in this case, in a large measure, upon that fact" the fact referred to being the "physical or topographical conditions peculiar to the locality"; the route exclusively occupied by the combination being the only practical route for entering the city. It was also held that the terminal was not under a "common control and ownership," because all needing its use were not admitted to an "equal control and management upon an equal basis with the present proprietary companies." To our minds there is a strong analogy between the "physical or topographical conditions" existing in the St. [**31] Louis Terminal Case and the artificial condition created by the Towing Company. A prominent vice of the situation before us is that there are here involved 14 separate "terminals," no one "terminal" being allowed to stand by itself; that the towing facilities furnished at each "terminal" (speaking more especially with respect to prices) are not furnished to all on equal terms as respects the service at that "terminal," but discrimination is made for or against a customer according to whether he does or does not give the Towing Company all his business (not merely towing, but wrecking as well) at each of the other "terminals" covered by the Towing Company's tariffs. No more effective obstacle to successful competition could well be devised than is found in this exclusive contract system. It is manifest that no competitor doing business at less than all 14 of the ports could compete with the Towing Company on anything like equal terms. With the field already occupied by a strong combination, with a large patronage fixedly secured through stockholding interests, the formation of another company equipped to do business at all 14 ports would seem a commercial and financial impossibility. [**32] The Towing Company seems to have appreciated [*746] this condition, for as early as April, 1900, its president wrote the local manager at Buffalo:

"I think you can safely assert that there is no one concern or combination of concerns that can carry out promises and take care of the vessel towing at all the ports all the time without at least 60 tugs. Taking all the tugs, outside our own, engaged in the vessel towing business, there is not one third of this number, including the poor ones, which are in a majority" and in August of that year, during the Maytham competition at Buffalo, the Towing Company's president did not believe that the Maythams, "notwithstanding their good reputation and conservative business principles," could "possibly induce capital to invest to the extent of $200,000." Yet several times that sum was paid on the very first purchase of towing facilities made by the Towing Company.

It is urged that all vessel owners already enjoy all the rights which by the decree in the St. Louis Terminal Case were given outside railroads, in that all such vessel owners are at liberty to buy stock in the Towing Company, upon the market, and thereby participate [**33] in the ownership and management of that company's business. But all may not be able to acquire large stock interests, and the rights of minority stockholders may well fail to assure that "equal control and management upon an equal basis" with all other vessel owners, including the stockholders in the Towing Company, which would be necessary to make the relief analogous to that required in the Terminal Case. We see, however, no substantial analogy in this respect between the vessel owners here and the railroads in the Terminal Case. The analogy is rather between the railroads there and the tug companies here.

We conclude that the Towing Company and the corporations controlled by it constitute a combination denounced by the anti-trust act. We thus come to the question of the remedy to be applied. HNG [↑] The general principles affecting this subject are that the continuation of the prohibited acts should be forbidden, and that the combination should be so dissolved as to neutralize the force of the unlawful power; that this result should be accomplished with as little injury as possible to the interests of the general public, and with due regard to vested property interests innocently [**34] acquired. In cases where the illegality of the combination results alone from purely administrative conditions, which may be effectively eliminated, a prohibition of the offending practices may be sufficient to vindicate the statute. Standard Oil Case, supra; St. Louis Terminal Case, supra; Union Pacific R.R. Case, supra.

The complete elimination of the offending administrative practices to which attention has been called, including (as the more prominent) customers' exclusive contracts and destructive rate competition (especially as applied to temporary rate reductions in particular harbors), and including all unfair advantages possessed by the Towing Company by reason of its size, financial strength or connections, accompanied by the according of equal and "most favored" treatment to all vessel owners, regardless of the amount of their business, and whether or not they are stockholders in the Towing Company, and whether or not they in fact exclusively patronize that company wherever it does [*747] business (thus, and in all other ways, safeguarding the rights of all others engaged or wishing to engage in towing), would greatly lessen the presently existing evils, and possibly [**35] might substantially remove them. But, having in mind the magnitude of the combination and the extent of its activities, and the fact that it was organized to secure a monopoly, as well as for the benefit and profit of its members, together with its present practical occupancy of the territory, thereby placing all would-be competitors at such great disadvantage as practically to deter them, in large measure, from entering the field; together with the further fact that the decree of this court commanding the cessation of purely administrative practices would not be self-executing -- it seems unlikely that a decree merely enjoining administrative practices would give complete relief, in the absence of radical change in fundamental principles upon which the Towing Company is organized and operated.

If the Towing Company shall present a feasible and satisfactory plan whereby its service shall be given for the equal benefit of all requiring the same (accompanied by a complete elimination of the offending administrative practices mentioned), so that the company becomes in truth "the bona fide agent and servant" of every vessel owner who shall use or need its facilities, and so that the [**36] rights of competitors are completely safeguarded, the injunction need only forbid continued operation except in full compliance with the terms of such plan; and the Towing Company is given 30 days for presenting such plan, if it cares to do so. Otherwise, the parties will be heard upon a plan for the dissolution of the combination, and upon the form of a decree for injunction, and receivership if necessary, to effectuate such dissolution. The question against what ones of the defendants injunction should issue is reserved until the precise form of relief is determined.

The proof does not show that the Pittsburgh Steamship Company has been a party to the combination charged, and counsel for complainant so concedes. As to that defendant the bill of complaint should be dismissed with costs.

No decree or order under this opinion will be entered until further directions.

Robert H. Ingersoll & Bro. v. McColl

District Court, D. Minnesota, Third Division

March 17, 1913

No Number in Original

Reporter

204 F. 147 *; 1913 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1652 **

ROBERT H. INGERSOLL & BRO. v. MCCOLL

Core Terms

---

watch, patent, Dollar, license, trade-mark, advertising, retail, prices, patented article, dealers, jobbers, contractual relationship, merchants, benefits, monopoly

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

Although the owner of a patent may control the price of the patented article, it does not follow that the owner of a trademark can do so. No such power is vested in the owner of a copyright. The owner of an unpatented medicine cannot control the price in the hands of retail dealers with whom he has no contractual relations. An attempt to do so would be a violation of the antitrust law. It is very clear that the owner of a trademark is in no better position than the owner of a copyright.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Franchise Agreements

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > Machines

HN2[ Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The Sherman Act clearly does not refer to that kind of a restraint of interstate commerce which may arise from reasonable and legal conditions imposed upon the assignee or licensee of a patent by the owner thereof, restricting the terms upon which the article may be used and the price to be demanded therefor. Such a construction of the act was never contemplated by its framers. If the stipulation in an agreement between patentees and dealers in patented articles, which, among other things, fixed a price below which the patented articles should not be sold, would be a reasonable and valid condition, it must follow that any other reasonable stipulation, not inherently violative of some substantive law, imposed by a patentee as part of a sale of a patented machine, would be equally valid and enforceable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

HN3[ Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

If a license restriction is imposed, not for the purpose of protecting the patent or for securing its benefits, but for the purpose of evading the provisions of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., then it is void, because such restriction is not a reasonable condition imposed upon the licensee of a patent by the owner thereof, nor is it a condition suitable to protect the use of a patent and secure its benefits.

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

Patent Law > Utility Requirement > Proof of Utility

HN4[ Patent Law, Anticipation & Novelty

There is a presumption of novelty and utility created by the issuance of patents.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

HN5[ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The right of a patentee to do what he may please to do with the patented article is not unrestricted. He cannot impose upon a purchaser a condition which is unreasonable. He cannot impose an unreasonable condition, for the purpose of enabling him to violate the Sherman Act. If it appears that a license restriction so imposed on the sale of a product is not for the purpose of securing the benefits of the patented improvements therein, but in order that the patentee may protect the trademark or trade name under which it sells the product, such a condition is not imposed to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law conferred upon it. It is an unreasonable one that is beyond the power of the patentee to impose upon a purchaser and is void as to him.

Opinion by: [**1] WILLARD

Opinion

---

[*147] WILLARD, District Judge. This is a suit for the infringement of patent No. 787,041, granted April 11, 1905, for improvements in lantern pinions used in watches; patent No. 855,950, granted June 4, 1907, for improvements in lever escapements used in watches; patent No. 926,329, granted June 29, 1909, for improvements in watches relating to stem-winding and setting; and patent No. 958,987, granted May 24, 1910, for improvements in center frictions in watches. The infringement is said to consist in this:

The plaintiffs are owners of the patents. They cause to be manufactured for them a watch known under three names, "Ingersoll Dollar Watch," "Yankee Dollar Watch," and "Yankee." This they sell to jobbers, who sell to retail merchants. Each watch is packed in a box, on the outside cover of which is pasted the following notice:

"License.

"Robt. H. Ingersoll & Bro., Makers, New York, Chicago, London, San Francisco.

"Mechanism in this watch is covered by United States patents, and the watch is licensed and sold under and subject to the following conditions, assented to by purchase and controlling all sales and uses thereof, any violation [*148] [**2] of which license conditions revokes and terminates all rights and license as to this and all other watches of makers in violator's possession, and subjects the violator to suit for infringement of said letters patent:

"(1) Jobbers may sell only to retail dealers, may not sell to any one designated by makers as objectionable, may not detach or sell without this notice, and may sell only at rates specified in schedules furnished by makers.

"(2) Retailers may advertise and sell only to buyers for use at ONE DOLLAR.

"(3) No donation, discount, rebate, premium, or bonus may be allowed or given in connection with any sale at wholesale or retail.

"(4) Guarantee, with date of sale indorsed thereon, to accompany each watch."

The defendant, a retail druggist in St. Paul, never bought any watches from the plaintiffs, and never had any contractual relations with them. He did, however, buy from a jobber in Duluth several of the Yankee watches, advertised them for sale in his store at 83 cents each, and sold them at that price. He knew at the time of so advertising and selling them of the license restriction imposed by the plaintiffs in regard to the price. The prayer of the bill is [**3] that he be enjoined from selling a Yankee watch for less than $1, and for damages and profits.

The real question in the case is whether this is a suit to protect a trade-mark, or one to protect a patent.

The Supreme Court of the United States has not yet directly decided that such a price restriction upon a patented article is binding upon a person who has entered into no contractual relation with the patentee. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U.S. 339, 345, 28 Sup. Ct. 722, 52 L. Ed. 1086; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 402, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502. Nor has the Circuit Court of Appeals of this circuit so decided, but that court in the case of National Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 128 Fed. 733, 64 C.C.A. 594, did hold that such a price restriction could be enforced against a person who had entered into contractual relations with the owner of the patent.

But HN1 although the owner of a patent may control the price of the patented article, it does not follow that the owner of a trade-mark can do so. No such power is vested in the owner of a copyright. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U.S. 339, 28 Sup. Ct. 722, 52 L. Ed. 1086. The owner of an unpatented [\[\*\*4\]](#) medicine cannot control the price in the hands of retail dealers with whom he has no contractual relations. An attempt to do so would be a violation of the Anti-Trust Law. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 Sup. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502. It is very clear that the owner of a trade-mark is in no better position than the owner of a copyright. If this suit is really for the protection of a trade-mark, it cannot be maintained. Nor can it be maintained on the ground of any contractual relation between the plaintiffs and the defendant, because there was none.

Can it be maintained on the ground that the purpose is to protect a patent? In E. Bement & Sons v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, on page 756 \(46 L. Ed. 1058\), the court said:

[\[\*149\] HN2](#) "But that statute clearly does not refer to that kind of a restraint of interstate commerce which may arise from reasonable and legal conditions imposed upon the assignee or licensee of a patent by the owner thereof, restricting the terms upon which the article may be used and the price to be demanded therefor. Such a construction of the act (Sherman Act) we have no doubt was never contemplated [\[\*\*5\]](#) by its framers."

In Henry v. Dick Co., 224 U.S. 1, 31, 32 Sup. Ct. 364, on page 372 \(56 L. Ed. 645\), the court said:

"If the stipulation in an agreement between patentees and dealers in patented articles, which, among other things, fixed a price below which the patented articles should not be sold, would be a reasonable and valid condition, it must follow that any other reasonable stipulation, not inherently violative of some substantive law, imposed by a patentee as part of a sale of a patented machine, would be equally valid and enforceable."

In Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U.S. 20, 33 Sup. Ct. 9, 57 L. Ed. , decided by the Supreme Court November 18, 1912, the court said:

"The agreements clearly, therefore, transcended what was necessary to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law conferred upon it. They passed to the purpose and accomplished a restraint of trade condemned by the Sherman Law. It had, therefore, a purpose and accomplished a result not shown in the Bement Case. There was a contention in that case that the contract of the National Harrow Company with Bement & Sons was a part of a contract and combination [\[\*\*6\]](#) with many other companies, and constituted a violation of the Sherman Law; but the fact was not established, and the case was treated as one between the particular parties, the one granting and the other receiving a right to use a patented article with conditions suitable to protect such use and secure its benefits. And there is nothing in [Henry v. A.B. Dick Co., 224 U.S. 1 \[32 Sup. Ct. 364, 56 L. Ed. 645\]](#), which contravenes the views herein expressed."

From these authorities the rule to be deduced is this: HN3 If the license restriction is imposed, not for the purpose of protecting the patent or for securing its benefits, but for the purpose of evading the provisions of the Anti-Trust Act, then it is void, because such restriction is not "a reasonable condition imposed upon the licensee of a patent by the owner thereof," nor is it "a condition suitable to protect the use of a patent and secure its benefits."

It is necessary, therefore, to examine the evidence to see what the real purpose of the license restriction is in this case. Putnam, a witness for the plaintiffs, has been connected with their business for 15 or 16 years, and is, and for more than 10 years has been, their general [\[\*\*7\]](#) sales manager. He testified, among other things, as follows:

"Q. Please state what the fact has been, and is, in reference to the use of the complainant during this period of trade-marks and brand names in connection with the manufacture and sale of its products, and if trade-marks or brand names have been used thereon, please give some of the principal names employed. A. The general name under which its principal watch products have been sold is 'Ingersoll.' Different classes or grades of watches have been given identifying names, each of which has been largely advertised and has become a trade-mark for such particular watch. These names as now and recently used are 'Yankee,' 'Eclipse,' 'Midget,' and 'Junior.' There are and have been other names, but they are not in such common or large use.

"Q. Please state whether these names 'Ingersoll,' or the universal general trade-mark name for the product, and the names 'Yankee,' 'Eclipse,' 'Junior,' 'Midget,' and other names, have been in any way advertised as trade-mark [*150] or brand names of the product? A. Each of such names has been largely advertised; the name 'Yankee' has been very largely advertised.

"Q. Of these [**8] different trade-mark names, 'Yankee,' 'Eclipse,' 'Junior,' 'Midget,' which has been the most extensively advertised? A. 'Yankee,' or, as it has been commonly known and advertised, the 'Dollar Watch.'

"Q. About when was the name 'Yankee' adopted by the complainant as a trade-mark name for a part of its product? A. Some time prior to 1897.

"Q. At the time of its adoption, and since, has this name 'Yankee' been applied to a watch of particular construction? By that I mean distinctive construction, although it may have varied at different times? A. Yes.

"Q. At the time that the word 'Yankee' was adopted as a trade-mark name, and during the period that it was so adopted by the complainant, has there been a retail selling price for such Yankee watch, designated and requested to be employed and used by retailers? If so, please state what this retail selling price was. A. Since 1897 or thereabouts, there has been such retail selling price, and it was at that time and ever since one dollar.

"Q. How has this fact of one dollar being indicated and requested as the retail selling price been employed in connection with the Yankee watch in advertising it to the trade and public? [**9] By that I mean has this term 'Dollar Watch' come to be associated with the Ingersoll Yankee watch as a trademark name or phrase? A. It has.

"Q. Please explain to what extent, if any, the term 'Dollar Watch' has become associated with and is now used, if at all, as a trade-mark name or phrase for the Ingersoll Yankee watch in advertising by the plaintiff, by the trade, and by the public. A. It is my opinion, based upon observations and knowledge, that the term 'Dollar Watch,' as applied to the Yankee watch, has lost, if it ever had, a monetary significance to the trade or to the public, and it is my belief that the two terms interchangeably used -- 'Dollar Watch' and 'Yankee Watch' -- as trade-marks are associated definitely in the public mind with the same watch, the principal Ingersoll product in watches.

"Q. Please state to what extent, if any, the term 'Dollar Watch' has been employed since 1897 in advertising the Ingersoll Dollar watch. A. In almost every advertisement and show card the term 'Dollar Watch' has been used, and usually in such advertising and show cards the picture of a watch has been shown, on which watch has appeared the trade-mark 'Yankee.' During the [**10] period referred to in the question, much more than a million dollars has been expended in the various ways referred to in my answer to question 17, and the largest part of such sum has been directed to the advertising of the Yankee or Dollar watch.

"Q. During this period, has the newspaper or magazine advertising of the Ingersoll Watch contained the term 'Dollar Watch,' and, if so, in a general way to what extent? A. Almost always.

***

"Q. Referring to the license shown upon the box marked 'Exhibit F,' containing the watch marked 'Exhibit G,' referred to Saturday in the testimony of Arthur H. Brown, please state, if you know, the date at which this license system was adopted, connected with the manufacture or sale of the Ingersoll Yankee or Dollar watch. A. In this particular form, this license system was adopted about six years ago.

***

"Q. Please state the fact as to whether, prior to the adoption of this license system some six years since, in connection with the Yankee or Dollar watch, this watch, under the name 'Ingersoll Yankee,' 'Yankee,' 'Ingersoll Dollar Watch,' or 'Dollar Watch,' had obtained any reputation, either in the trade or with the public. A. [**11] I can perhaps best answer this question by stating that in the year 1899 about one-half million Ingersoll Yankee watches were sold, and that the sale thereof increased yearly until in 1905 or thereabouts the sale had reached at least a million of these Ingersoll Yankee or Ingersoll Dollar watches. They were handled by many thousands of merchants throughout the United States and foreign countries.

"Q. About what is the annual output of the Ingersoll Yankee or Dollar watch at present? A. About 2,000,000 per year."

[*151] He further testified that the Yankee or Dollar watch, since it was put upon the market in about 1897, contained mechanism covered by letters patent of the United States, in that connection he also said:

"Q. Have any notices of the dates or numbers of the patents covering the mechanism embodied therein been placed upon the watches? If so, please state where. A. For a great many years past, and I believe always, each Yankee watch has had stamped upon it the word 'patented' and the dates of such patents as from time to time they existed in such watch. Such notice has usually been stamped upon that part of watch known as the barrel bridge, which is, [**12] commonly speaking, a part of the rear movement plate or rear of the watch movement."

He further said:

"Q. What was the occasion or reason, if any, for the adoption by the complainant of this license system for the Ingersoll Yankee or Dollar watch, if you know? A. About 1899, or possibly 1900, when the sale of this Ingersoll Yankee watch or Ingersoll Dollar watch had reached into may hundreds of thousands, a few merchants, both retailers and jobbers, sought to take advantage of the reputation of this watch, established by large advertising and large sale, by offering it to the public or to the trade, as the case might be, at less than the prices which the complainant had fixed upon for such watches. This caused protests from merchants, both retailers and jobbers, throughout the country, who threatened, if such cut prices were allowed to continue, that they would cease handling and dealing in and buying from the complainant this Ingersoll Yankee watch. Thereupon complainant, knowing that its continuance as a business organization for the manufacture and sale of watches depended upon the good will of these merchants, both jobbers and retailers, and the continued and continuous [**13] buying, handling, and selling by them of this watch, cast about for a plan by which it could properly and lawfully fix, determine, and control the price at which this Yankee watch might be sold by the merchants, both retailers and wholesalers, and, having found what, in their opinion was a proper means, determined upon and did adopt such means, out of which this present license system later grew.

"Q. Prior to the adoption of the license system in its present or original form, did the complainant have a means of controlling the prices of the Ingersoll Yankee or Dollar watch in the hand of dealers, or did it simply indicate the prices at which it desired the dealers to sell, without any means of enforcing such prices? A. While always indicating the price, it knew of no means, and believed it had no means, of controlling such prices.

"Q. And until the license system was adopted, it was simply optional with the dealers to observe these prices, I understand? A. If you mean by 'license system' any system which the complainant had adopted, including the system adopted about 1899 or 1900, the answer is 'Yes.'

"Q. I understand that a license system was adopted about 1899 or 1900, [**14] which after various modifications about six years since took the present form? A. That is correct."

This testimony strongly indicates that the purpose of the plaintiffs was to protect the trade-mark, and that the patented improvements placed in the watch were of little or no consequence. There were always in the watch such patented improvements, but they were not always the same. The dates of patents placed upon the interior mechanism of the watch varied from time to time. The license system was adopted in 1900, but the earliest one of the patents in suit was not granted until 1905. The case of these same plaintiffs against Snellenberg (C.C.) 147 Fed. 522, indicates that further evidence in support of the inference drawn from the testimony already in the case might [*152] have been obtained. The purpose of that suit was the same as the purpose of this suit. One of the patents there involved was for an improvement in escapement mechanism, and was issued in December, 1890; that patent expired in 1907. The escapement patent here in suit was granted on June 4, 1907. The other patent in that suit was for an improved clock pinion, and was granted in January, 1891. That patent [**15] expired in 1908.

The lantern pinion patent in this suit was granted on April 11, 1905. The plaintiffs make a high-grade watch, which contains none of the mechanism covered by the patents in suit.

There has been no judicial determination of the validity of any one of them. There has been no litigation concerning any one of them. No testimony was presented by the plaintiffs to show that any one of the patents was of any value. The defendant produced as a witness a watchmaker of 30 years' experience, who testified that there was nothing new in any of them. The plaintiffs presented no evidence in rebuttal. There is nothing in the case to show what patents relating to the subject-matter of these improvements were granted prior to the patents in suit. While the defendant's watchmaker testified that he understood the scope of the claims of two of the patents, yet it appeared that one at least of the other two he had never read. His evidence probably is not sufficient to overcome the HN4[<sup>15</sup>] presumption of novelty and utility created by the issuance of the patents.

The most important evidence, however, remains to be stated. In addition to the Yankee, Eclipse, Midget, and Junior, the **16 plaintiffs sell other watches, one of which is called the Defiance. These watches, according to Putnam, have probably hundreds of special names. One of the watches offered in evidence was called the McColl, and was so named at the request of the defendant. He bought 27 dozen Yankee watches and 18 dozen of the other kind. He paid 65 cents each for the Yankee and 55 cents each for the McColl watches. The Defiance and the McColl contain the same mechanism as the Yankee. The parts of the Yankee and the parts of the McColl and the Defiance are interchangeable. In fact, it is the same watch under three different names. The barrel plates of the Defiance and the McColl contain the dates of all the patents in suit. There is nothing on either of these watches to indicate that the plaintiffs are in any way connected with them. They are sold without any license restriction, such as it attached to the sale of the Yankee. While the purchaser of the Yankee is required to seal it for not less than $1, a purchaser of identically the same watch, if it is called the Defiance or the McColl, can sell it for any price he chooses.

If the purpose of the license restriction were to secure the **17 benefits of the patents, no sound reason can be given why it should not have been applied to the watch when it is called the Defiance, as well as when it is called the Yankee. It is very evident that the plaintiffs care nothing for the patents. They say in one of their briefs:

"A point was made at the argument that complainant makes three watches under different names and embodies in them the same patents, and that only one of them, the Yankee watch, is sold under the license restriction. What inference it is sought to draw from this fact is not apparent. Complainant, having a complete monopoly under the statute, is not bound to *153 exercise all of it. It may release any part of it that it sees fit and reserve the rest. If it wishes to release the 'Defiance' and the 'McColl' watches entirely from the patent monopoly by unrestricted sale, and retain a portion of its monopoly of sale with respect to the Yankee watch, it may do so."

HN5[<sup>16</sup>] The right of a patentee to do what he may please to do with the patented article is not unrestricted. It is limited in the manner indicated by the cases hereinbefore cited. He cannot impose upon a purchaser a condition which is unreasonable. **18 He cannot impose an unreasonable condition, for the purpose of enabling him to violate the Anti-Trust Act. It appears from the evidence in this case that the license restriction so imposed on the sale of the Yankee watch is not for the purpose of securing the benefits of the patented improvements therein, but in order that the plaintiffs may protect the trade-mark or trade-name under which they sell the watch. Such a condition was not imposed "to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law conferred upon it." It is an unreasonable one, is beyond the power of the plaintiffs to impose upon the defendant, and is void as to him. Whether or not it would be valid if the defendant had made a contract directly with the plaintiffs, and thereby bound himself not to sell the Yankee watch for less than $1, it is not necessary to decide.

Let the bill be dismissed, with costs

State ex rel. Jones v. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works

Supreme Court of Missouri

April 28, 1913, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

249 Mo. 702 *; 156 S.W. 967 **; 1913 Mo. LEXIS 97 ***

THE STATE ex rel. SEEBERT G. JONES, Circuit Attorney of City of St. Louis, v. MALLINCKRODT CHEMICAL WORKS, Appellant.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from St. Louis City Circuit Court. -- Hon. James E. Withrow, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

forfeiture, prescribed, provisions, charter, forfeit, fines, pools, do business, insistence, sections, cases, trusts, blank, prosecuting attorney, immunity, trial court, conspiracies, instituted, printed, papers, criminal prosecution, managing officer, no person, combinations, anti-trust, mailing, certificate of incorporation, circuit court, thirty days, innocence

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Formation > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Corporations, Corporate Formation

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10322 (1909) states: It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, on or about the first day of July of each year, to address to the president, secretary or managing officer of each incorporated company in this state, a letter of inquiry as to whether the said corporation has all or any part of its business or interest in or with any trust, combination or association of persons or stockholders, as named in the preceding provisions of article one of this chapter, and to require an answer, under oath, of the president, secretary or managing officer of said company. A form of affidavit shall be inclosed in said letter of inquiry.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Obstruction of Administration of Justice > Perjury > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Miscellaneous Offenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Obstruction of Administration of Justice > Perjury > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Obstruction of Administration of Justice > Perjury > Penalties

**HN2** [down] Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10323 (1909) states: The affidavit required by this article shall be made by the president, secretary, treasurer or managing officer of such corporation in this state, and shall be made before some person authorized to administer oaths in this state. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10324 states: Every person who shall make, or cause to be made, and file or cause to be filed, said affidavit, knowing the facts stated therein to be false, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding seven years.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10325 states in part: It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, at any time upon satisfactory evidence that any company or association of persons duly incorporated under the laws of this or any other state, doing business in this state, has entered into any trust, combination or association, in violation of the preceding sections of this article, to demand that it shall make the affidavit as above set forth in this article as to the conduct of its business. In case of a failure of compliance on the part of the corporation, then the same procedure shall ensue as is provided in Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10322 (1909).

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 3026 to 3034, inclusive, provide what shall be stated in reply to an inquiry by said stock companies and associations, and when the same shall be filed with the Secretary of State. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3026 states: That every incorporated company, organized under the laws of this state whose capital stock is divided into shares, shall annually, on the 1st day of July, report to the Secretary of State, the location of its principal business office, the name of its president and secretary, the amount of its capital stock, the par value thereof and its actual value at the time of making the report, the cash value of all of its real and personal property situated in this state, on the 1st day of June, immediately preceding the date of the report, and the amount of city, county and state taxes, paid by any such company for the year last preceding the report.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Corporate Governance > Record Inspection & Maintenance > Recordkeeping

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > Qualifications

**HN5** [down] Corporations, Recordkeeping

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3028 requires all corporations doing business in this state, both domestic and foreign, to keep their books and accounts in such manner as to enable them accurately and promptly to comply with the requirements of said Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 3025 to 3034, both inclusive; also that no such company shall be exempt from the duty of making such report, because perchance it may not have received the blanks, which Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3025 requires the Secretary of State to send to it and all such companies. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3029 prescribes by what officer of the company the report shall be signed and sworn to.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

**HN6** Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3030 states in part: Every incorporation to which Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 3025 to 3034, inclusive, apply, failing, within 60 days from July the 1st in each year to make the report herein provided for, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $ 50 nor more than $ 1,000, for each offense, and each succeeding 30 days of such failure shall constitute a separate offense and be subject to a like fine, which said fines shall be cumulative, and one action may be maintained to recover one or more such fines, to be recovered before any court of competent jurisdiction. No suit shall be maintained for any such offense unless brought within six months from September 1st of the year in which the report is due, which date shall be the time when such right of action accrues.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Finance

**HN7** Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10325 states in part: It is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of State, as soon as practicable after the first day of September in each year, to report to the prosecuting attorney of the county in which any such delinquent corporation may be located, the fact of its failure to make the required report, and the prosecuting attorney shall, at the first court term after he receives the report from the Secretary of State, institute proceedings in the name of the state, at the relation of the county, to recover the fine or fines herein provided for, which shall be applied to the county revenue fund, except that for instituting and prosecuting said suits the prosecuting attorney shall receive as his compensation one-fourth of the penalty collected; and in case any such suit shall be taken to either of the courts of appeals or the supreme court, then the attorney-general is hereby required to assist the prosecuting attorney, and the attorney-general shall also be entitled to one-fourth of the amount recovered from the corporation violating the law. The Secretary of State shall, whenever a corporation makes its report after the time provided by law for the making of such report, certify that fact to the prosecuting attorney.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Finance

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

**HN8** Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3032 requires the assessor of each county in the state, and the president of the board of assessors of the city of St. Louis, to report to the Secretary of State all corporations, domestic and foreign, doing business therein, etc. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3033 requires the Secretary of State to refer all such reports to the legislature, etc. And Mo. Rev. Stat. § 3034 confers upon the circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis, the same duties that said Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 3025 to 3033 confer upon the prosecuting attorneys of the various counties of the state.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Capacity of Parties > General Overview

**HN9** [] Parties, Capacity of Parties

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10322 (1909) requires a suit under that statute to be brought in the name of the state and at the relation of the circuit attorney.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN10** [] Legislation, Interpretation

All statutes standing in pari materia should be read and construed together in order to get at the full and clear design of the legislature.

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Governance > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > Proceedings

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

**HN11** [] Corporations, Corporate Governance

The penalties and forfeitures prescribed by Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10322 (1909) consist of a forfeiture of its charter or certificate of incorporation, or its right or privilege to do business in this state. And by Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10327, it is provided: In all suits instituted under this article to forfeit the charter of corporations, or to forfeit the right of a corporation to do business in this state where a judgment of forfeiture is obtained the court shall allow the circuit attorney a fee of not less than $ 25 nor more than $ 500.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Bills of Attainder & Ex Post Facto Clause > General Overview

**HN12** [] Congressional Duties & Powers, Bills of Attainder & Ex Post Facto Clause

An "ex post facto law" is one that makes an action done before the passage of the law, criminal, that was innocent when committed and that punishes the individual who committed it; or that aggravates a crime and makes it greater than it was when committed; or that changes the punishment and inflicts greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Franchise Relationships > Franchise Agreements

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Formation > General Overview

HN13 [ ] Franchise Relationships, Franchise Agreements

A corporation is a legal fiction, a creature of the law. It accepts its charter and corporate franchises with a tacit agreement or understanding that it will exercise the powers granted to it by the state, and none other; and that if it misuses those powers, or usurps powers not so granted, it will surrender or forfeit its charter, with all corporate franchises.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10325 provides that no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit mentioned in Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10322 (1909).

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

HN15 [ ] Procedural Due Process, Self-Incrimination Privilege

There is a distinction between an individual and a corporation; the latter, being a creature of the state, has no constitutional right to refuse to produce its books and papers in court for examination in the trial of a proceeding by the state against it; nor can the officer in charge of the corporation charged with a violation of the statutes plead the criminality of the corporation as a refusal to produce the books.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

HN16 [ ] Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10325 states in part: In case of a failure of compliance on the part of the corporation, then the same procedure shall ensue as is provided in Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10322 (1909): Provided, that no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit required by this article; and provided further, that in any prosecution or proceeding brought to enforce the provisions of this article, no witness shall be permitted to refuse to answer any question material to the matter in controversy, nor shall be permitted to refuse to produce any books or papers material to such inquiry upon the ground that to produce such books and papers or to answer such question might tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or a forfeiture; but no person shall be subject to prosecution or to any action for a penalty or a forfeiture on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning that he may testify or produce books or papers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Governance > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

**HN17** [blue download icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

The first proviso of Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10325, namely, that no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit required by this article, is the immunity that is granted to the officer of the corporation making it and which presupposes that he had thereby disclosed some matter or thing that he and the company had previously done in violation of said chapter 98, commonly known as the "Anti-Trust Laws" of the state; while the second refers to the immunity that is granted to any and all officers, agents, employees and others who may be witnesses in any proceeding, which might be brought against any such corporation to forfeit its charter or certificate of incorporation or its right or privilege to do business in this state, for any reason known to said laws.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Corporations > Articles of Incorporation & Bylaws > Minimum Formal Requirements

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

**HN18** [blue download icon] Articles of Incorporation & Bylaws, Minimum Formal Requirements

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10322 (1909) states in part: Provided, however, that if such corporation shall file the affidavit required by the provisions of this article prior to the rendition of final judgment in said action, the court may assess against such corporation in lieu of a judgment forfeiting its charter or certificate of incorporation, or its right or privilege to do business in this state, a fine not to exceed $ 5,000 and not less than $ 100: Provided, however, that any time before final judgment, if such corporation shall file or cause to be filed with the Secretary of State the affidavit herein prescribed, the trial court may, in its discretion, and for good cause shown, upon the payment of all costs together with the attorneys' fees of $ 10, to be paid to the prosecuting attorney or the circuit attorney in the city of St. Louis, remit the penalty herein prescribed.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. DEFECT OF PARTIES: Waiver. A defect of parties, apparent on the face of the petition, should be raised by demurrer; and even if so raised, defendant waives the defect by answering to the merits.

2. PROPER PLAINTIFF: In Name of State: Defect of Parties. A suit to oust a corporation of its charter and franchises for failure to make the affidavit required by the statute (Sec. 10322, R.S. 1909) concerning its relation to trusts, should be brought in the name of the State at the relation of the prosecuting or circuit attorney. And even were it admitted that a petition entitled, "The State of Missouri, at the Relation of Seebert G. Jones, Circuit Attorney of the City of St. Louis, Relator, v. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, a Corporation, Respondent," and beginning: "Comes now Seebert G. Jones, circuit attorney within and for the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and states that the respondent is," etc., is not a suit brought in the name of the State, but solely in the name of the circuit attorney, yet the defect is apparent on the face of the petition, and should have been raised by demurrer, and that not having been done it was waived by answering over on the merits. [Overruling State to Use of Tapley v. Matson, 38 Mo. 489; Higgins v. Railroad, 36 Mo. 418; Proctor v. Railroad, 42 Mo. App. 124; Headlee v. Cloud, 51 Mo. 301.]

3. PROPER PLAINTIFF: In Name of State: To Use of City: Fines and Forfeitures. The petition will not be held defective on the ground that, the ultimatum of the suit being to impose a fine and forfeiture, the suit should have been brought "for the use of the city, in accord with the Constitution, requiring all such fines and penalties to go direct to the school fund," for several reasons: First, if it was a defect to bring the suit in the name of the State at the relation of the circuit attorney, that was a defect apparent on the face of the petition, and should have been raised by demurrer, and was waived by answer; second, even though the statute (Sec. 10304, R.S. 1909) which requires all fines and penalties collected under the provisions of chapter 98 to be paid into the State Treasury were unconstitutional and void, the rest is not, for that section is separable from the rest of the act; and, third, whatever disposition is to be made of the fines hereafter collected is a matter of future determination when different persons make claim to them.

4. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Forfeiture of Charter: No Allegation of Trust Agreement: Statutes in Pari Materia. Articles one and three of Chapter 98, R.S. 1909, are not in pari materia. Each is an independent statute, prescribing different penalties for its violation. Article three requires a corporation to file an annual affidavit showing whether it has entered into any combination or agreement with any other corporation, and prescribing a forfeiture of its charter and the imposition of fines if it fails to file such affidavit within a designated time; and in a procedure brought thereunder it is not necessary either to allege or prove that the corporation has entered into a pool, combination or trust. Article one has for its aim a different purpose, namely, to prosecute and punish a corporation for entering into such a combination or trust.

5. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Ex Post Facto Law. A statute enacted in 1907, under which the Secretary of State in 1910 required a corporation organized and existing prior to 1907, to make and file an affidavit that it had not within the year next preceding July 1, 1910, entered into any combination or agreement of trust with any other, is not ex post facto in its operation as to such corporation. It in no wise attempts to make criminal an act which had been committed prior to its enactment.

6. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Procedure: Quo Warranto Unnecessary. The statute requiring a corporation to make and file with the Secretary of State an affidavit showing that within the last preceding year it has not entered into any combination or agreement of trust with any other corporation, prescribes in detail the procedure for its own violation, and therefore it is wholly unnecessary for the circuit or prosecuting attorney to resort to the writ of quo warranto or an information in the nature of a quo warranto, and hence the petition is not defective for failure to meet the necessary requirements of either.

7. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: County Includes City of St. Louis. The statute (Sec. 10322, R.S. 1909) requiring a corporation to make an affidavit showing it has not within one year violated the antitrust laws, and prescribing the form of the affidavit, beginning with the words, "State of Missouri, County of __," does not mean that the affidavit could be made only in a county, and that no alteration in the affidavit could be made by the officers of a corporation in the city of St. Louis. Another statute (Sec. 8057, R.S. 1909) provides that where the word "county" is "used in any law, general in its character to the whole State, the same shall be construed to include the city of St. Louis, unless such construction be inconsistent with the evident intent of such law, or of some law specially applicable to such city;" and that statute authorizes such an alteration in the affidavit as makes it applicable to that city.

8. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Constitutionality of Statute: Equal Protection: Different Punishment for Partnerships. The statute which requires a corporation to make and file an affidavit showing it has not entered into combinations and trust arrangements with other corporations or their officials, and subjecting it to a fine and a forfeiture of its charter for a failure to make such affidavit, while exempting partnerships, individuals and associations of individuals from such duty and penalty, does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, in denying to such corporation and its officers the equal protection of the laws. The State may impose a different or greater punishment upon a corporation than that imposed on an individual or partnership for the same offense, without denying to it that equal protection guaranteed by that amendment -- one reason being that corporations derive all their powers from the State, and individuals and partnerships have no charters which can be forfeited by the State.

9. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Inadequate Remedy: Fine as Only Punishment. Experience has taught the courts, both State and Federal, that fines alone are ineffectual to destroy pools, trusts, conspiracies and combinations in restraint of trade, and in limiting production and fixing and maintaining prices.

10. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Self-incrimination. The statute (Sec. 10322, R.S. 1909) requiring the president, secretary or managing officer of a corporation to make and file an affidavit showing it has not entered into any of the trusts, pools or other combinations denounced by article one of the same chapter, is not violative of that part of the Constitution which provides that no person shall be compelled to testify against himself, for section 10325 provides that "no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit" required by said section 10322, and that section, when read in connection with said section 10322, includes all matters and things prohibited by article one of the chapter, among other things, penalties and forfeitures.

11. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Two Affidavits on Same Paper. The fact that the two affidavits required by Sec. 10322, and by Secs. 3025-3034, R.S. 1909, respectively, were printed on the same piece of paper, the one on the front side and the other on the back, where both were received by respondent on June 14th, and the one was executed, but the other was not, and the excuse for refusing to execute it was, not that they were not sent separately, but that respondent's officers did not believe they were obliged to execute or answer it, will not save the respondent, who knowingly elected to violate it, from an enforcement of the penalties and forfeiture prescribed by the statute.

12. CORPORATION: Annual Affidavit: Filing Permitted After Final Judgment. The leniency extended to a corporation which has failed to file the affidavit required by Sec. 10322, R.S. 1909, to file such affidavit before final judgment, is irrevocably withdrawn after final judgment of forfeiture has been entered by the trial court. The provisions of the statutes of this and other States and of Congress may seem severe, but their purpose is to put an end to illegal combinations in restraint of trade; and a corporation, which knowingly and intentionally refused to obey the law, and which in its brief in the Supreme Court made no request to be permitted to file the affidavit, but only made it in oral argument and upon the condition that the court find the statute valid and it guilty of its violation, is not entitled to leniency.

Held, by BOND, J., dissenting, that, the failure of defendant's officer to file the affidavit being due to advice of counsel that the inquiries made by the blank affidavit were inquisitorial and unconstitutional, the extreme penalty of forfeiture should not go, but defendant should be permitted to file the affidavit and the judgment of forfeiture should be modified.

Counsel: Barclay, Fauntleroy & Cullen and Schnurmacher & Rassieur for appellant.

(1) The trial court erred in overruling the demurrer because of the defect of parties plaintiff. The State would be the only authorized plaintiff, yet the petition in no manner alleges that the State brings the suit or is plaintiff. R.S. 1909, sec. 10322; Patterson v. Temple, 27 Ark. 202; U. S. v. Dougherty, 7 Blatchf. 424. (2) The trial court erred in not sustaining the demurrer, for defects in not alleging the necessary party plaintiff to be the State, and the body of the petition alone demonstrates the party moving. State v. Matson, 38 Mo. 489; Higgins v. Railroad, 36 Mo. 418; Proctor v. Railroad, 42 Mo. App. 124; Headlee v. Cloud, 51 Mo. 301. (3) The demurrer should have been sustained because of defect of parties plaintiff, in that the action should be "for the use" of the city of St. Louis, in accord with the Constitution, since all such fines and penalties go direct to the school fund. The provision (Sec. 10304) in this law for payment into the State Treasury is unconstitutional. Constitution of Missouri, art. [**2] 11, sec. 8; In re Stead, 116 Mo. 537; R.S. 1909, sec. 3030; State v. Land Co., 97 Mo. App. 226. (4) The trial court erred in overruling the demurrer because there is no allegation in the petition that defendant ever had any connection with any contract or understanding or other agreement illegal under the law against pools, trusts and monopolies. The omission to file the affidavit of innocence, without such allegations and proof, is no ground to forfeit the charter of defendant. R.S. 1909, sec. 10304. While the terms of section 10322 may appear at first glance to warrant forfeiture, they are to be read along with section 10304 in pari materia, and together the paramount intent is to forfeit for breach of the law. Want of affidavit warrants beginning of suit (if the requirement be valid) but that alone is not sufficient to forfeit the charter. R.S. 1909, sec. 10298; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107; Edelstein v. U. S., 149 Fed. 636. The entire chapter on pools, trusts and conspiracies should be included and considered in reaching the intent of section 10322, and the literal terms of the latter (or rather its implication) as to forfeiture should be narrowed in order to harmonize with section [***3] 10304, which defines the controlling purpose of the whole enactment. That is necessary according to established rules for interpretation of statutes. State v. Emerson, 39 Mo. 89; State v. King, 44 Mo. 283; State v. Diving, 66 Mo. 375; State v. Hemen, 70 Mo. 441; Cole v. Skranka, 105 Mo. 303; Kane v. Railroad, 112 Mo. 34. (5) The trial court erred in not sustaining the demurrer (on the last ground thereof) because the required statutory affidavit of innocence (recited in the petition) cannot lawfully be demanded of any officer or defendant, in that the statement exacted therein that the company has not, "at any time within one year" from the date of the affidavit, participated in any of the forbidden agreements, is ex post facto and makes the requirement inconsistent with section 10304, as well as unconstitutional and void. Constitution of Mo., art. 2, sec. 15; State ex rel. v. Hardware Co., 109 Mo. 118. (6) The trial court erred in not sustaining the demurrer because the petition does not state a cause of action, in that a proceeding by quo warranto, either ancient, original, or by information of that nature, is essential to obtain forfeiture of franchise of a business corporation. [***4] R.S. 1909, sec. 2631. Section 10322 does not conflict with or repeal section 2631, nor authorize any other proceeding than by quo warranto to forfeit such a charter. (7) The trial court erred in not sustaining the demurrer to the petition because the form of the affidavit demanded of innocence by the officers of defendant could only be made in a county, and no authority to alter the form in any respect is given by the law to company officers in St. Louis City. Hence, they could not swear to same in its procrustean form without being penalized under section 10324. R.S. 1909, sec. 10322. (8) The trial court, by refusing the peremptory instruction for defendant, denied to defendant and its officers the equal protection of the laws guaranteed to them by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and denied to defendant and its officers their rights and immunities thereby secured, in that it is unreasonable and oppressive to require corporate officers to make such an affidavit of innocence, and yet to leave every "partnership, individual or association of individuals" (also within the law against monopolies, sections 10299, 10303) in the same situation and circumstances immune from [***5] such requirement. Railroad v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150; Paddock v. Railroad, 155 Mo. 524. (9) The trial court erred in not finding for defendant because the requirement of the affidavit of innocence is not validated by the supposed immunity defined in section 10325, because as to the affidavit the immunity is not complete and not commensurate with the constitutional guaranty to the officers of the defendant against the giving of a self-incriminating affidavit. State ex rel. v. Hardware Co., 109 Mo. 118; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U.S. 547; Glickstein v. U. S., 222 U.S. 141; Edelstein v. U. S., 149 Fed. 642.

Elliott W. Major, Attorney-General, and Charles G. Revelle, Assistant Attorney-General, for respondent; Seebert G. Jones and Forrest G. Ferris of counsel.

(1) The requirement in Sec. 10322, R.S. 1909, that an affidavit be made is not void as violative of the Constitution which provides that "no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal cause," because that section provides that "no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit." The immunity afforded by the statute is coextensive [***6] with the constitutional privilege of silence, and it is sufficient. R.S. 1909, sec. 10325; People ex rel. v. Foundry and Iron Co., 201 Ill. 236; State v. Jacks, 69 Kan. 387; Jack v. Kansas, 199 U.S. 272; State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 375; Brown v. Walker, 161 U.S. 596; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43. (2) Section 10322 does not deny to appellant corporation the "equal protection of the laws," although it applies only to corporations and exempts individuals and partnerships. People ex rel. v. Foundry Co., 201 Ill. 236; State ex inf. v. Oil Co., 218 Mo. 368; Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 103 Pac. (Cal.) 341; Constitution, art. 12, sec. 5. (3) The Legislature had the power by this statute to require the affidavit to be filed, and to provide that a failure in that regard should subject the offending party to a penalty to be adjudged against it by the courts. People ex rel. v. Foundry Co., 201 Ill. 236; Kaiser Land Co. v. Curry, 103 Pac. 341. This is a proceeding under article 3 of chapter 98, R.S. 1909, not under article 1 of said chapter. Section 10304, by its terms, applies only to violations of the provisions of article 1, and section 10322 does not refer to section 10304. (4) [***7] This is a proceeding authorized and provided by statute (section 10322) to enforce a statutory requirement. A statement of the facts under the statute is all that is required of the pleading. (5) This proceeding was brought by the circuit attorney "in the name of the State and at the relation of the circuit attorney," as required by statute, and the petition is sufficient in its allegations as to parties. R.S. 1909, secs. 10322, 1794, 1813; Bliss on Code Pleading (1 Ed.), secs. 145, 150; Phillips on Code Pleading, secs. 175, 177; State ex inf. v.

Evans, 166 Mo. 349; State ex inf. v. Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 6. It was not a requirement of law that this proceeding be brought "for the use of the city of St. Louis." State v. Newell, 140 Mo. 282; Cunningham v. Railroad, 165 Mo. 270, 276. (6) The form of the affidavit required is not unreasonable. To enforce the requirement is not to deny "due process of law." (7) The word "county" in section 10322 includes the "city of St. Louis." R.S. 1909, sec. 8057, rule 19; Kansas City v. Neal, 122 Mo. 234.

Judges: WOODSON, J. Bond, J., dissents in separate opinion.

Opinion by: WOODSON

Opinion

---

[*710] [**969] In Banc.

WOODSON, J. -- This was a suit instituted [***8] in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, by the respondent against the appellant, to have its charter forfeited for failure to make and file with the Secretary of State, an anti-trust affidavit, as required by sections 10322 and 10323, Revised Statutes 1909, regarding pools, trusts, conspiracies and discriminations.

A trial was had before the court without the intervention of a jury, which resulted in a decree in favor of the respondent forfeiting the charter of the appellant as prayed.

In proper time all necessary steps for an appeal were duly taken, and thereafter the cause was appealed to this court.

The petition filed in the cause was as follows:

"State of Missouri, City of St. Louis, ss.

"In the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis, October Term, 1910.

[*711] "The State of Missouri, at the Relation of Seebert G. Jones, Circuit Attorney of the City of St. Louis, Relator, v.

Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, a Corporation, Respondent.

"Comes now Seebert G. Jones, circuit attorney within and for the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and states that the respondent is, and at all times hereinafter mentioned was, a corporation duly organized, incorporated [***9] and existing, under and by virtue of the laws of Missouri, located and transacting and conducting business in the city of St. Louis and State of Missouri, and as such corporation, respondent is amenable to the provisions of chapter 98 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1909, entitled 'Pools, trusts, conspiracies and discriminations.'

"Relator states that on or about the first day of July, A. D. 1910, the Secretary of State of the State of Missouri, in obedience to the requirements of section 10322 of said Revised Statutes, duly addressed and mailed to the president of Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, 3600 North Second street, St. Louis, Missouri, the respondent incorporated company, a letter of inquiry as to whether the said respondent corporation had all or any of its business or interest in or with any trust, combination or association of persons or stockholders, as named in the provisions of article 1 of said chapter 98 of said Revised Statutes, and requiring an answer, under oath, of the president, secretary, or managing officer of said respondent company, and said Secretary of State duly inclosed in said letter of inquiry a form of affidavit, being the same form required by the [***10] laws of the State of Missouri and prescribed and set forth in said section 10322 of said Revised Statutes and being in words and figures as follows, to-wit:

[*712] (Here the petition sets forth a full copy of the form of affidavit prescribed in section 10322.)

"And thereupon it became the duty of said respondent corporation to make answer to such inquiry by filing or causing to be filed with the said Secretary of State the affidavit prescribed in and required by sections 10322 and 10323 of said Revised Statutes, but respondent corporation, unmindful of its said duty, in disregard of the statutes and laws of this State in respect to pools, trusts and conspiracies and discriminations and in violation of said sections 10322 and 10323, has failed and refused, and still fails and refuses, to make answer to such inquiry, under oath of its president, secretary, treasurer or managing officer, as required by said sections, and has failed, neglected and refused, and still fails, neglects and refuses to file or cause to be filed with the said Secretary of State such affidavit, described and required by said sections to be made and filed, although more than thirty days have elapsed since [***11] the date of the mailing of such inquiry to respondent corporation by said Secretary of State, as aforesaid.

"And relator further states that the fact of such failure of respondent corporation and its officers to make such answer and file such affidavit in response to said letter of inquiry, within thirty days from the mailing thereof, has been by said Secretary of State duly certified to relator, the said circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis.

"Relator states that by reason of the premises respondent has forfeited its charter and subjected itself to the forfeitures and penalties imposed by sections 10322 and 10327 of said Revised Statutes.

"Wherefore, relator prays that respondent's charter and its certificate of incorporation be declared and adjudged forfeited, void and of no effect, and that the [*713] costs of this proceeding be adjudged against respondent.

"Seebert G. Jones,

"Circuit Attorney of the city of St. Louis.

"Forest G. Ferris,

"Assistant Circuit Attorney."

The appellant filed a demurrer to the petition and assigned numerous grounds therefor, which was by the court overruled; and thereupon the defendant answered, the substance of which is as follows:

[***12] 1. Plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue in manner and form as in said petition attempted;

2. There is a defect of parties plaintiff;

[***970] 3. This defendant cites the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States as a bar to the allegations of said petition;

4. This defendant cites section 23 of the second article of the Constitution of the State of Missouri as a bar to the allegations of the petition;

5. Defendant for further defense admits that, on the first day of June, 1910, and from that day to the present time, defendant was and still is a corporation duly organized and existing according to law, and that at the said time mentioned defendant was and is doing business and had and has an office in the city of St. Louis, Missouri.

For further answer defendant denies generally each and every allegation of the petition herein, except as above admitted.

By answering over, counsel for appellant waived the demurrer and the attending rulings thereon, which relieves this court of the duty to review the same.

The facts of the case are few and undisputed.

The evidence showed that on the 13th day of June, 1910, the Secretary of State inclosed in an envelope, [***13] properly addressed to the appellant, postage prepaid, the letter and the contents thereof mentioned in the petition, which was duly registered by the postal authorities, [*714] and was on the following day, June 14, 1910, delivered to and received by the appellant. The contents of said letter consisted of a sheet of paper, on the one side of which was printed a blank form of the affidavit, required by sections 10322 and 10323, Revised Statutes 1909, to be made by the president, secretary or other managing officer of the appellant company, and by him filed in the office of the Secretary of State, within thirty days from the date of the mailing of said blank by the Secretary of State to the company.

In order to have a clear conception of this case, it will be necessary for us to copy some of the most important statutes involved in the case, and to state the substance of the provisions of certain others, which are incidentally or collaterally involved.

Sections 10322, 10323, 10324 and 10325 read as follows:

HN1 Sec. 10322. Secretary of State to make inquiry -- form of affidavit. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, on or about the first day of July of each year, to [***14] address to the president, secretary or managing officer of each incorporated company in this State, a letter of inquiry as to whether the said corporation has all or any part of its business or interest in or with any trust, combination or association of persons or stockholders, as named in the preceding provisions of article one of this chapter, and to require an answer, under oath, of the president, secretary or managing officer of said company. A form of affidavit shall be inclosed in said letter of inquiry, as follows:

"AFFIDAVIT.

State of Missouri, )
                            )
                            ) ss.
                            )
County of ___.         )

"I, ___, do solemnly swear that I am the __ (president, secretary or managing officer) of the corporation known and styled __, duly incorporated under the laws of __, on the __ day of __, 19 __, and now transacting or conducting business in the State of Missouri, [*715] and that I am duly authorized to represent said corporation in the making of this affidavit, and I do further swear that the said __, known and styled as aforesaid, is not now, and has not at any time within one year from the date of this [***15] affidavit, created, entered into, become a member of or participated in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual, or any other person or association of persons to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm; and that it has not entered into or become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, contract, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm; and that it has not issued and does not own any trust certificates, and for any corporation, agent, officer or employee, or for the directors or stockholders of any corporation, has not entered into and is not now in any combination, contract, [***16] or agreement with any person or persons, corporation or corporations, or with any stockholder or director thereof, the purpose and effect of which said combination, contract or agreement would be to place the management or control of such combination, or combinations, or the manufactured product thereof, in the hands of any trustee or trustees, with the intent to limit or fix the price or lessen the production and sale of any article of commerce, use or consumption, or prevent, restrict or diminish the manufacture or output of any article; and that it has not made or entered into any arrangement, contract or agreement with any person, association of persons or corporation designed to lessen or which tends to lessen full and free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article, product or commodity in this State, or under the terms of which it is proposed, stipulated, provided, agreed or understood that any particular or specified article, product or commodity shall be dealt in, sold or offered for sale in this State to the exclusion, in whole [**971] or in part, of any competing article, product or commodity.

—

"(President, secretary or managing officer.) [***17]

"Subscribed and sworn to before me, a __ within and for the county of __, this __, day of __, 19 __.

"(Seal) __.

[*716] "And thereupon it shall become the duty of such corporation to make answer to such inquiry by filing or causing to be filed the affidavit prescribed herein. And on refusal to make oath in answer to said inquiry, or on failure to do so within thirty days from the mailing thereof, the Secretary of State shall certify said fact to the prosecuting attorney of the county or the circuit attorney in the city of St. Louis, wherein said corporation is located, and it shall be the duty of such prosecuting attorney or circuit attorney, at the earliest practicable moment, in the name of the State, and at the relation of said prosecuting or circuit attorney, to proceed against such corporation for the forfeiture of its charter or certificate of incorporation, or its right or privilege to do business in this State: Provided, however, that if such corporation shall file the affidavit required by the provisions of this article prior to the rendition of final judgment in said action, the court may assess against such corporation, [***18] in lieu of a judgment forfeiting its charter or certificate of incorporation, or its right or privilege to do business in this State, a fine not to exceed five thousand dollars and not less than one hundred dollars; Provided, however, that any time before final judgment, if such corporation shall file or cause to be filed with the Secretary of State the affidavit herein prescribed, the trial court may, in his discretion, and for good cause shown, upon the payment of all costs, together with the attorney's fees of ten dollars, to be paid to the prosecuting attorney or the circuit attorney in the city of St. Louis, remit the penalty herein prescribed.

HN2 [T] "Sec. 10323. Affidavit, by and before whom made. The affidavit required by this article shall be made by the president, secretary, treasurer or managing officer of such corporation in this State, and shall be made before some person authorized to administer oaths in this State.

[*717] "Sec. 10324. Penalty for false affidavit. Every person who shall make, or cause to be made, and file or cause to be filed, said affidavit, knowing the facts stated therein to be false, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of perjury, and [***19] shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding seven years.

HN3 [T] "Sec. 10325. Duty of Secretary of State -- production of books. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, at any time upon satisfactory evidence that any company or association of persons duly incorporated under the laws of this or any other State, doing business in this State, has entered into any trust, combination or association, in violation of the preceding sections of this article, to demand that it shall make the affidavit as above set forth in this article as to the conduct of its business. In case of a failure of compliance on the part of the corporation, then the same procedure shall ensue as is provided in section 10322 of this article. Provided, that no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit required by this article; and provided further, that in any prosecution or proceeding brought to enforce the provisions of this article, no witness shall be permitted to refuse to answer any question material to the matter in controversy, nor shall be permitted to refuse to produce any books or [***20] papers material to such inquiry upon the ground that to produce such books and papers or to answer such question might tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or a forfeiture; but no person shall be subject to prosecution or to any action for a penalty or a forfeiture on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may testify or produce books or papers."

Upon the reverse side of the sheet of paper previously mentioned, there was printed a blank form of the inquiry, which section 3025, Revised Statutes 1909, [*718] requires the Secretary of State, on or before June 15th of each year, "to send by mail to every stock company or association, . . . which is organized for purposes of gain, or to hold property within this State."

HN4 [↑] Sections 3026 to 3034, inclusive, provide what shall be stated in reply to said inquiry by said stock companies and associations, and when the same shall be filed with the Secretary of State. Said sections in so far as the appellant is concerned, provide, either literally or substantially as follows:

Section 3026. That every incorporated company, . . . organized under the laws of this State whose capital stock is divided into [***21] shares, shall annually, on the 1st day of July, report to the Secretary of State, the location of its principal business office, the name of its president and secretary, the amount of its capital stock, . . . the par value thereof and its actual value at the time of making the report, the cash value of all of its real and personal property situated in this State, on the 1st day of June, immediately preceding the date of the report, and the amount of city, county and State taxes, paid by any such company for the year last preceding the report.

Section 3027 relates to foreign corporations doing business in this State; and consequently it is immaterial to the propositions involved in this case.

HN5 [↑] Section 3028 requires all corporations doing [**972] business in this State, both domestic and foreign, to keep their books and accounts in such manner as to enable them accurately and promptly to comply with the requirements of said section 3025 to 3034, both inclusive; also that no such company shall be exempt from the duty of making such report, because perchance it may not have received the blanks, which section 3025 requires the Secretary of State to send to it and all such companies.

[***22] Section 3029 prescribes by what officer of the company the report shall be signed and sworn to.

[*719] Since several provisions of section 3030 require consideration at the hands of this court, we will for that reason, and here, copy it in full, which is as follows:

HN6 [↑] "Sec. 3030. Every incorporation to which sections 3025 to 3034, inclusive, apply, failing, within sixty days from July the 1st in each year to make the report herein provided for, shall be subject to a fine of not less than fifty nor more than one thousand dollars, for each offense, and each succeeding thirty days of such failure shall constitute a separate offense and be subject to a like fine, which said fines shall be cumulative, and one action may be maintained to recover one or more such fines, to be recovered before any court of competent jurisdiction. No suit shall be maintained for any such offense unless brought within six months from September 1st of the year in which the report is due, which date shall be the time when such right of action accrues; HN7 [↑] and it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of State, as soon as practicable after the first day of September in each year, to report to the prosecuting [***23] attorney of the county in which any such delinquent corporation may be located, the fact of its failure to make the required report, and the prosecuting attorney shall, at the first court term after he receives the report from the Secretary of State, institute proceedings in the name of the State, at the relation of the county, to recover the fine or fines herein provided for, which shall be applied to the county revenue fund, except that for instituting and prosecuting said suits the prosecuting attorney shall receive as his compensation one-fourth of the penalty collected; and in case any such suit shall be taken to either of the Courts of Appeals or the Supreme Court, then the Attorney-General is hereby required to assist the prosecuting attorney, and the Attorney-General shall also be entitled to one-fourth of the amount recovered from the corporation violating the law. The Secretary of State shall, [*720] whenever a corporation makes its report after the time provided by law for the making of such report, certify that fact to the prosecuting attorney."

Section 3031 has reference to the dissolution of domestic corporations, and the retirement of foreign corporations from [***24] the State. Neither of those provisions are material to this case.

HN8 [↑] Section 3032 requires the assessor of each county in the State, and the president of the board of assessors of the city of St. Louis, to report to the Secretary of State all corporations, domestic and foreign, doing business therein, etc.

Section 3033 requires the Secretary of State to refer all such reports to the Legislature, etc.

And section 3034 confers upon the circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis, the same duties that said sections 3025 to 3033 confer upon the prosecuting attorneys of the various counties of the State.

It was also shown that the appellant in due time and in proper form, made out, swore to and filed with the Secretary of State, the report required by said sections 3025 to 3034, which as previously stated, was printed on the reverse side of the sheet of paper upon which was printed the blank affidavit of innocence of all pools, trusts, combinations, conspiracies, etc., required of said companies by said sections 10322 and 10323; also that appellant declined or refused to make, sign, swear to or file with the Secretary of State, said affidavit of innocence, or as it is sometimes termed the [***25] "anti-trust affidavit," required by said last two sections to be made, signed and sworn to by the president or other officer of the company mentioned therein.

The evidence also showed that the Secretary of State, in compliance with the requirements of said section 10322, notified the circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis that the appellant had not, within thirty days from the date of his mailing said inquiry to it or at [*721] any other time, answered the same under oath or otherwise, as was required by said section 10322.

I. Counsel for appellant, in this court, have assigned twenty-five errors; they have, however, apparently abandoned about one-half of them; and we will devote our time to the consideration of the remainder of them.

Attending the first, it is insisted by counsel for appellant that the suit should be dismissed, because the petition shows upon its face a defect of parties plaintiff.

If that were true, then counsel should have demurred to it for that reason. In fact, that was one of the grounds stated in the demurrer, [**973] as disclosed by the record, which was by the trial court overruled.

If counsel for appellant intended or wished to rely upon that [***26] point, they should have declined to plead further and should have stood upon the demurrer, but instead of so doing, they filed an answer to the merits. That action of counsel waived whatever merit there may have been in the question, which cannot be again raised by answer, as was here attempted. This is elementary. [Roberts v. Walker, 82 Mo. 200.]

All objections appearing upon the face of the petition are waived by answering, except first, that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and second, that the court has no jurisdiction to try the cause. Sec. 1804, R.S. 1909; [Elfrank v. Seiler, 54 Mo. 134.]

We, therefore, rule this question against appellant.

II. It is next insisted by counsel that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the appellant, for the reason that the [*722] suit is brought in the name of Seebert G. Jones, circuit attorney within and for the city of St. Louis, and not in the name of the State of Missouri, which it is claimed is the only party authorized by section 10322, Revised Statutes 1909, to bring the suit. In other words, they insist that the suit should have been instituted [***27] in the name of the State and at the relation of the circuit attorney.

By reading said HN9[] section 10322 it will be seen that it requires the suit to be brought in the name of the State and at the relation of the circuit attorney.

If I correctly understand counsel they do not differ as to what the law is governing this question, but they differ as to the facts. Counsel for appellant insists that the suit is brought in the name of Jones as circuit attorney, and counsel for respondent contend that the record shows that it was brought in the name of the State and at the relation of the prosecuting attorney, as required by said statute.

In stating the case, we copied the petition in full, including caption. The latter reads as follows:

"The State of Missouri, at the Relation of Seebert G. Jones, Circuit Attorney of St. Louis, Relator. v. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, a Corporation, Respondent."

The petition proper, begins by stating: "Comes now Seebert G. Jones, circuit attorney within and for the city of St. Louis in the State of Missouri, and states that the respondent is," etc.

Counsel for appellant insist that the caption of the petition constitutes no part thereof; and that the character [***28] of the suit must be determined from the allegations contained in the body thereof, which determines the parties thereto.

In support of this insistence we are cited to the following cases: State to use of [J. D. Tapley v. Matson, \[\*723\] 38 Mo. 489](#); Higgins v. Railroad, 36 Mo. 418; Proctor v. Railroad, 42 Mo. App. 124; Headlee v. Cloud, 51 Mo. 301.

The first case mentioned was a suit instituted in the name of the State to the use of the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Joseph Tapley, deceased, against the securities on the bond of the former administrator. In the caption of the petition the plaintiff was designated as the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Tapley, deceased, but no allegation of that character was stated in the body of the petition. In other words, the petition failed to state that Tapley had departed this life intestate, that an administrator of his estate had been duly appointed, qualified and took charge of his estate, that said administratorship had ceased and that plaintiff had been appointed administrator de bonis non as his successor in office. The insufficiency of the petition was for the first time raised in this court; and [***29] after considering the question, the court held that the petition was bad and that because the error appeared upon the face of the record, the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed.

In the case of Higgins v. Railroad, supra, the suit was instituted by an infant through its guardians, to recover the statutory penalty of $ 5000, for the negligent killing of her father. The caption of the petition was stated in the following language: "Hatty Higgins, Infant, by Eliza Higgins, her Guardian, Plaintiff, v. Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad Company, Defendant," but no allegation of that character was stated in the body of the petition. On appeal, this court held the petition insufficient for the failure to state in the body of the petition that the plaintiff was the duly appointed, qualified and acting guardian of the infant plaintiff.

In Headlee, Admr., v. Cloud, supra, the plaintiff in the caption of the petition described himself as the [*724] public administrator, but failed to state in the body thereof that he was the duly elected, qualified and acting administrator of the estate of the deceased, etc. The defendants demurred to the petition, which was by the circuit court [***30] sustained; and upon appeal, this court held the petition was insufficient and affirmed the judgment.

In the case of Proctor v. Railroad, supra, the railroad was in the hands of the defendants, receivers. In both the caption and the body of the petition, it was stated that they were receivers thereof, that they had been duly appointed as such by Judge Brewer, and that they were in charge of, and were operating the railroad at the times complained of, etc. Service was had upon the station agent, and the receivers moved to dismiss for the reason that service was not had upon them personally. While this case has no special bearing upon the case at bar, yet it recognizes the doctrine announced by this court in the cases previously cited and considered; and if we are to be controlled by the rule therein announced, then the judgment of forfeiture rendered by [**974] the circuit court against the appellant will have to be reversed for they are directly in point.

While I have not found any case overruling the cases mentioned in terms, yet the later reports are full of cases holding to the contrary. The later cases hold that even though it be conceded that a suit was brought in the name [***31] of the wrong party, nevertheless, the defendant would be in no position to question that error in this court, for the reason it was apparent upon the face of the petition, and it should have been raised by demurrer, and having failed to do so the error was waived by answering to the merits.

This question was before this court in the case of State ex rel. v. Fidelity and Guaranty Co., 236 Mo. 352, 139 S.W. 163, l.c. 365, where many of the authorities are reviewed, and the contrary rule announced.

[*725] The same rule is announced by this court in the case of Ashton v. Penfield, 233 Mo. 391, 135 S.W. 938, l.c. 417.

These cases are in harmony with section 1794, Revised Statutes 1909.

The petitions in the case of State ex inf. v. Evans, 166 Mo. 347, 66 S.W. 355, and State ex inf. v. Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S.W. 737, are substantially the same in form as this one.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the earlier cases cited are erroneous, and should be overruled; also that this insistence of counsel for appellant is not well founded.

III. It is next contended that the petition is defective because the suit should have been brought "for the use of the city of St. Louis, in [***32] accord with the Constitution (section 8, article 11 thereof) since all such fines and penalties go direct to the school fund. The provision (section 10304) in this law for payment into the State Treasury is unconstitutional."

This contention is untenable for two reasons: first, because this error, if error it is, was waived by answering to the merits; and what has been stated in paragraph two of the opinion regarding a kindred question is equally applicable and controlling here; and, second, even though it be conceded that the provision of section 10304, which directs all fines and penalties collected under and in pursuance to chapter 98 of the Revised Statutes of 1909, shall be paid into the State Treasury, is unconstitutional, null and void, and that it should be paid to city of St. Louis, for the use of the school fund, as provided for by said section 8 of the Constitution, still it would not necessarily follow therefrom that this suit should abate or be dismissed for that reason. That provision of the section might well be declared unconstitutional, and in no manner would [*726] it affect or nullify the remaining provisions thereof, or any other section of that chapter.

[***33] But independent of that, whatever disposition will be made of the fines and penalties that may be collected from appellant, is a matter for future consideration by those who may make claim to them.

However, in passing, it may not be out of place to state that this court has in a number of cases of this character ordered fines of this character paid into the State Treasury, and has thereby recognized the constitutionality of said section of the statute.

IV. The fourth assignment of error is stated in this language:

"The trial court erred in overruling the demurrer because there is no allegation in the petition that defendant ever had any connection with any contract or understanding or other agreement illegal under the law against pools, trusts and monopolies. The omission to file the affidavit of innocence, without such allegations and proof, is no ground to forfeit the charter of defendant. [R.S. 1909, sec. 10304.] While the terms of section 10322 may appear at first glance to warrant forfeiture, they are to be read along with sections 10304 in pari materia, and together the paramount intent is to forfeit for breach of the law. Want of affidavit warrants beginning of suit [***34] (if the requirement be valid) but that alone is not sufficient to forfeit the charter."

There is no question but what counsel for appellant are correct in the contention that HN10 [↑] all statutes standing in pari materia should be read and construed together in order to get at the full and clear design of the Legislature. We have so held in numerous cases, and especially in the following: State ex rel. v. Patterson, 207 Mo. 129, 105 S.W. 1048, I.c. 144; State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S.W. 902, I.c. 354 to 357.

[*727] With that rule of statutory construction in mind, we have carefully considered all of chapter 98, Revised Statutes 1909, consisting of five articles; and after doing so we are fully satisfied that article three thereof, the one governing this case, is complete within itself, in so far as this case is concerned, and that it was the design of the Legislature, as therein expressed, to discourage the formation of pools, trusts and combines; also to compel them to disclose the existence of all such pools, trusts and combines, if such existed, the knowledge of which would lie peculiarly within the minds of the officers thereof mentioned in the statute, [***35] by requiring such companies to make and file the annual affidavits, and the imposition of the penalties and forfeitures therein mentioned, which are independent of the sworn reports, penalties and forfeitures mentioned in the first article of this chapter.

The penalties and forfeitures mentioned in the first articles have reference to those which are imposed for the actual formation of pools, trusts, conspiracies and combinations in restraint of trade, etc., while those mentioned in article three refer to those imposed for failure to file the affidavit, and are enforceable even though the company may never have entered into any such pool, trust, conspiracy or combination mentioned in the first article.

[**975] If the contention of counsel for appellant is correct, namely, that article three imposes no penalties, then there would be no penalty enforceable against a company for a failure to make and file the affidavit required thereby, for the reason that the penalties and forfeitures prescribed by article one, in so many terms, are imposed for the unlawful formations of pools, trusts, etc., and for failure to make and file the report required thereby with the Secretary of State.

[***36] This article like all other statutes, in order to make it effectual, the Legislature prescribed by sections 10322 and 10327 contain penalties which should [*728] be adjudged against any such company for its failure to make and file the affidavit required.

HN11[] The penalties and forfeitures prescribed by section 10322 consist of "a forfeiture of its charter or certificate of incorporation, or its right or privilege to do business in this State." And by section 10327, it is provided, "In all suits instituted under this article to forfeit the charter of corporations, or to forfeit the right of a corporation to do business in this State where a judgment of forfeiture is obtained . . . the court shall allow the circuit attorney . . . a fee of not less than $ 25 nor more than $ 500."

From the foregoing observations it is perfectly clear, as previously stated, that this article is complete within itself; that is, it imposes certain duties named therein, upon all domestic and foreign corporations doing business in this State, and prescribes the manner in which those duties must be discharged, the mode of prosecution in case they fail to do so, and the punishment to be inflicted in case [***37] they are convicted of such failure.

We have also considered said section 10304, cited by counsel, which is one of the sections of the statute composing article 1 of said chapter 98. That chapter is entitled "Pools, Trusts, Conspiracies and Discriminations," and said article is entitled, "Definitions, Procedure and Penalties." Sections 10298 to 10301, inclusive, thereof, clearly define each and all of said terms. Section 10302 makes it a felony for any person to violate any of the provisions of those sections. Section 10303 designates the courts in which the prosecutions shall be brought and by what officers they shall be instituted, etc., and section 10304 prescribes the fines and forfeitures which shall be imposed against all domestic and foreign corporations doing business in this State, for having violated the provisions of any of the sections of that article.

[*729] From this, it is also seen that this article is complete in itself and resort to other provisions of the statutes is not necessary for a successful prosecution and punishment of any such company which may be adjudged guilty of violating any of the provisions of said article.

From this consideration of articles [***38] one and three, of said chapter 98, it is obvious that each is complete in itself and independent of each other as to penalties and forfeitures, and consequently said section 10323 of article 3, is not modified or controlled by section 10304 of article 1 as insisted by counsel for appellant.

Moreover, by reading the two sections it will be seen that the punishment prescribed by each widely differ, and neither is made to depend upon the other, nor is it provided that the one shall be added to or subtracted from the other. But as previously stated, by each are separate punishments imposed for separate offenses.

We, therefore, decide this question against the appellant.

V. It is next insisted that said section 10322 requiring the appellant to file with the Secretary of State the anti-trust affidavit mentioned in the petition is an ex post facto law, and violative of section 15 of article 2, of the Constitution of this State.

Counsel have not indicated in what manner this section of the statute violates said section of the Constitution, and I have been unable to detect any conflict between them.

The record shows that the appellant was organized and had existed under the laws of [***39] this State for many years prior to the date it was required to make the affidavit in question and file it with the Secretary of State, and upon investigation I find that said section 10322 was enacted in the year 1907, some three [*730] years prior to the date when the appellant was required to make and file said affidavit; and by reading said section 10322, it will be seen that it only required the affidavit to state that the company had not at any time within one year from the date thereof (which if filed, should have been dated about August 1, 1910) participated in any of the forbidden matters stated in said article three. From this it appears that the said statute was in force for some two or three years prior to the period of one year which the affidavit would have covered, had it been made and filed as required by law.

HN12 [+] An "ex post facto law" is "one which makes an action done before the passage of the law, criminal, which was innocent when committed and which punishes the individual who committed it; or which aggravates a crime and makes it greater than it was when committed; or which changes the punishment and inflicts greater [**976] punishment than the law annexed [***40] to the crime when committed." [Calder v. Bull, 3 Dallas (U.S.) 386; Ex parte Bethurum, 66 Mo. 545, l.c. 548.]

If we test this statute by this definition of an ex post facto law, it will be seen that it does no violence to said section of the Constitution, for it neither makes an act done prior to its passage criminal, which was innocent when committed, nor does it aggravate a crime or make it greater than it was when committed, nor does it change the punishment or inflict greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime at the time it was committed. I say this for the reason that the wrong complained of in the petition was the failure of appellant to state under oath, as required by said section 10322, that it had not done any of the things therein prohibited, and declared to be unlawful, within one year immediately preceding the date of the affidavit required thereby to be filed, which would have been for the year beginning on or about August 1, 1909, and ending on or about August 1, 1910, the first [*731] day of which was about two years subsequent to the passage of the statute in question, and therefore the statute was passed two years prior to the date of the wrong [***41] complained of in the petition.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that section 10322 in no manner violates said section 15 of the Constitution.

VI. Counsel next insist that the petition does not state a cause of action against the appellant for the reason that it is neither a proceeding by quo warranto, ancient or original, or by information in the nature of quo warranto, which it is claimed was essential to obtain a forfeiture of the franchise of a corporation organized under the laws of this State.

There would have been much force in this insistence had the Legislature simply declared the matters complained of to be unlawful, without prescribing the remedy therefor, for in that case there would have been no remedy known to our law by which that result could have been obtained, except by quo warranto or by an information in the nature thereof; but the Legislature did not stop at the point suggested. It proceeded further and prescribed in detail the remedy, even the courts in which such prosecutions should be brought, the officers by whom they should be instituted, the name of the plaintiff and at whose relation they should be instituted, the acts which should constitute [***42] the offense as well as the kind of judgment that should be rendered, and the fines and forfeitures that should be imposed upon the offending parties. Also what steps the guilty company might take if it saw proper to take any, after the institution of the prosecution, and before final judgment was rendered to appease the law and be restored to its former legal status.

[*732] Under these ample provisions of the statute, it was wholly unnecessary for the circuit attorney to have resorted to a writ of quo warranto, or to an information in the nature thereof. The majesty of the law could have been, and was, as completely vindicated under the provisions of this article, as if resort had been had to quo warranto or to an information in the nature thereof.

This insistence is without merit and is ruled against appellant.

VII. Counsel also insist that the petition does not state a cause of action against the appellant, for the reason that it was a physical impossibility for it to have made the affidavit mentioned therein.

This insistence is predicated upon the further contention that according to the provisions of said section 10322, the affidavit "could only be made in a [***43] county, and no authority to alter the form in any respect is given by the law to company officers in St. Louis City."

This insistence is untenable, for the reason that paragraph nineteen of section 8057, Revised Statutes 1909, provides that where the word "county" is "used in any law, general in its character to the whole State, the same shall be construed to include the city of St. Louis, unless such construction be inconsistent with the evident intent of such law, or of some law specially applicable to such city."

The application of this statute to the question in hand can in no manner be considered as being inconsistent with the meaning of, and the object to be accomplished by, article three of chapter 98 of the statutes, nor with any law which is specially applicable to the city of St. Louis.

This court has recognized and given force to this rule of construction in so many cases, that it can no longer be considered an open question.

[*733] VIII. Counsel for appellant challenge the constitutionality of said section 10322, the contention being that it violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that it denies to the appellant and [***44] its officers the equal protection of the laws by requiring them to make the affidavit mentioned therein, and at the same time exempting therefrom all "partnerships, individuals or association of individuals who may be engaged in the same character of business."

This precise question was presented and ruled on adversely to the contention of appellant in the case of State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1. At page 368, 116 S.W. 902, we said:

"Their position is that those sections are in violation of the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that while they denounce the same acts, whether committed by individuals or individuals and corporations, they impose upon the latter a greater and different punishment from that imposed upon individuals.

"In one sense that may be true, but it is not true in a legal sense.

HN13[] "A corporation is a legal fiction -- a creature of the law. It accepts its charter and corporate franchises with a tacit agreement or understanding that it will exercise the powers granted to it by the State, and none other; and that if it misuses those powers, or usurps powers not so granted, it will surrender or forfeit [***45] its charter, with all corporate franchises. That the State has the power to enforce this agreement, or law of forfeiture, is not questioned by respondents, but they insist that it is a different and greater punishment than is imposed upon an individual for the commission of the same offense. In answer to that, it may be said that an individual is a natural person, created [**977] by his Maker, and not by law, and, therefore, has no franchise to exercise or to forfeit, consequently [*734] the same punishment, if you so term it, could not, in the very nature of things, be measured out to the individual which should be measured unto a corporation.

"While it is true, to forfeit the charter of a corporation for usurpation of power is equivalent to taking its life, as it were; but we suppose it will not be seriously argued that, because the statute does not demand the life of the individual, as it does of the corporation, as a punishment for his violation of the law, the law should and must be declared unconstitutional and void upon that ground. And, upon the other hand, where a statute denounces certain acts, whether committed by individuals or corporations, or both, it should [***46] not be declared unconstitutional because it provides for imprisonment of the former and a fine, or forfeiture of the latter's charter, as punishments for their violation of the statute. But if the contention of counsel for respondents is sound, then any individual could form an unlawful combination in restraint of trade with any corporation, and when proceeded against for such unlawful conduct either one or both of them could interpose the unconstitutionality of the statute, because the punishment prescribed against each is not the same but different. And we might add that, if their position is tenable, then the Legislature would be powerless to provide for the imprisonment of the one because it could not imprison the other; nor could it provide for the forfeiture of the charter of the corporation, because the individual would have none to forfeit, ergo, there is no punishment the Legislature could provide, excepting a fine against each. Such a contention regarding the proposition here involved if followed to its logical conclusion would lead to an absurdity, and, at the same time, shows the unsoundness of respondents' contention."

249 Mo. 702, *734<sup>1</sup> 56 S.W. 967, **977<sup>1</sup> 913 Mo. LEXIS 97, ***46

And in passing, we might state that experience [***47] has taught the courts, both State and Federal, that [*735] fines alone are ineffectual to destroy pools, trusts, conspiracies and combinations in restraint of trade in limiting production and in fixing and maintaining prices.

In order to accomplish that end, the strong arm of the criminal law will have to be resorted to, and the guilty be incarcerated.

That case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was by that court affirmed.

Those cases, as previously stated, decide this question against appellant's contention here, and we see no reason for changing our views of the law regarding the same.

IX. Counsel for appellant also contend that said section 10322 is unconstitutional, null and void, for the reason that it violates that section of the Constitution which provides that "no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal case."

Their position is stated in this language:

"The trial court erred in not finding for defendant because the requirement of the affidavit of innocence is not validated by the supposed immunity defined in section 10325, because as to the affidavit the immunity is not complete and not commensurate with the constitutional [***48] guaranty to the officers of the defendant against the giving of a self-incriminating affidavit." In support of this contention counsel cite: State ex rel. v. Hardware Co., 109 Mo. 118, 18 S.W. 1125; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U.S. 547, 35 L. Ed. 1110, 12 S. Ct. 195, followed and approved in Glickstein v. United States, 222 U.S. 139, 56 L. Ed. 128, 32 S. Ct. 71; and Edelstein v. United States, 149 F. 636.

We have carefully considered these cases and are of the opinion that they are not controlling in this case.

In the first case cited, there was no statute of immunity whatever exempting the officer of the corporation [*736] from prosecution for any crime the affidavit might disclose he was guilty of. In that case, this court very properly held, that the section requiring the affidavit to be made, and prescribing a punishment for a failure to do so, was violative of that provision of the Constitution which provides that no person shall be compelled to testify against himself. It was in consequence of that decision that the Legislature enacted HN14<sup>1</sup> section 10325, which provides that "no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully [***49] disclosed by the affidavit" mentioned in section 10322.

We held in the Standard Oil case, supra, that the immune statute there under consideration was valid and sufficiently broad and comprehensive to exempt from prosecution the parties therein mentioned, from all crimes they may have disclosed by the proceedings had in that case. In discussing that question (p. 375), the court used this language:

"Section 8989, Revised Statutes 1899, granted immunity to all the witnesses who were produced by respondents and who testified in compliance with the order of the court. No witness can avail himself of section 23 of article 2 of the Constitution of 1875, nor of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, as to giving oral testimony, because said statute grants him immunity from prosecution; nor can he set those constitutional provisions up against an order for the production of books and papers, as the same statute would equally grant him immunity in respect to matters provided thereby. [Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43 to 73, 50 L. Ed. 652, 26 S. Ct. 370.]

"Nor was it intended by section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution, nor the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, known as the search-and-seizure clauses, to interfere with the power of courts to compel the production upon trial of documentary [*737] evidence under a subpoena duces tecum. [Hale v. Henkel, supra, l.c. 73.]

"While an individual may [**978] lawfully refuse to answer incriminating questions unless protected by an immunity statute, a corporation is a creature of the State, and there is a reserved right in the Legislature to investigate its contracts and find out whether it has exceeded its powers.

HN15 [↑] "There is a distinction between an individual and a corporation; the latter, being a creature of the State, has no constitutional right to refuse to produce its books and papers in court for examination in the trial of a proceeding by the State against it; nor can the officer in charge of the corporation charged with a violation of the statutes plead the criminality of the corporation as a refusal to produce the books. [Hale v. Henkel, supra, pp. 74 to 76.] The rule above announced has the sanction of the highest court in the land and was applied in a criminal prosecution, and a fortiori should the same rule apply to a civil proceeding like the case [***51] at bar."

If we correctly understand counsel, they do not challenge the validity of section 10325, but insist that its provisions are not as broad as is the constitutional guaranty against self-incrimination, or to exempt the officer of appellant from prosecution for every crime the affidavit in question might disclose he might be guilty of. In our opinion this insistence is not well founded. The material part of that section is as follows:

HN16 [↑] "Section 10325 . . . . In case of a failure of compliance on the part of the corporation, then the same procedure shall ensue as is provided in section 10322 of this article: Provided, that no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit required by this article; and provided further, [*738] that in any prosecution or proceeding brought to enforce the provisions of this article, no witness shall be permitted to refuse to answer any question material to the matter in controversy, nor shall be permitted to refuse to produce any books or papers material to such inquiry upon the ground that to produce such books and papers or to answer such question might tend to incriminate [***52] him or subject him to a penalty or a forfeiture; but no person shall be subject to prosecution or to any action for a penalty or a forfeiture on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may testify or produce books or papers."

HN17 [↑] The first proviso of this section, namely, that no person shall be subject to any criminal prosecution on account of any matter or thing truthfully disclosed by the affidavit required by this article, is the immunity that is granted to the officer of the corporation making it and which of course presupposes that he had thereby disclosed some matter or thing that he and the company had previously done in violation of said chapter 98, commonly known as the "Anti-Trust Laws" of the State; while the second refers to the immunity that is granted to any and all officers, agents, employees and others who may be witnesses in any proceeding, which might be brought against any such "corporation to forfeit its charter or certificate of incorporation or its right or privilege to do business in this State," for any reason known to said laws.

If we bear in mind the different crimes to which these two immunities refer, much light will be shed upon the [***53] apparent confusion that seems to rest in the minds of the learned counsel for appellant. Their position is thus stated: "The immunity extended to a witness in testifying or producing books or papers, in a prosecution or proceeding to enforce the provisions of this article reaches anything which might tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; [*739] whereas, in the first proviso [referring to disclosures by such an affidavit of innocence as is our immediate concern at present] the immunity extends only to any criminal prosecution and does not even preclude the use of such affidavit in a proceeding to recover a penalty or forfeiture, as in the second proviso ordained." In other words, their contention is, that the words "criminal prosecution," as used in the statute, have a much more restricted meaning than the words "criminal case" or "criminal cause" of the Constitution.

The inference drawn therefrom is, that the affidavit required by section 10322 might disclose some possible crime, which the immunity granted by section 10325 would not cover, and they suggest, for instance, that the affidavit might disclose some crime which might not be covered by [***54] the immunity granted under the first proviso which extends only to "criminal prosecutions," which would not preclude its use in a proceeding to recover a "penalty or forfeiture" mentioned in the second.

This position is untenable, for the reason previously stated, that the first proviso grants immunity from prosecution for all matters and things which might be "disclosed by the affidavit required [to be made] by this article," and if we turn to section 10322, the section requiring the affidavit to be made, it will be seen that it prescribes what the affidavit shall contain, namely, all the matters and things which "article one of this chapter" prohibits corporations and certain others from doing, and which, by turning to sections 10302 and 10304, it will be seen include penalties and forfeitures therein, and being so included by express words, the affidavit therefore could not (if otherwise competent, which I seriously doubt) be used either under the first or second proviso. So says the statute, and so say we.

[*740] X. The last insistence presented by counsel, and supported by argument, is that the finding of the trial court should have been for the appellant for the reason [***55] that the Secretary of State did not serve upon it [**979] two separate and distinct blank affidavits or reports, the one required by section 3025 to 3034, both inclusive, and the other by section 10322, all Revised Statutes 1909.

The record shows that both of said blanks were printed upon one piece or sheet of paper; one of which was printed upon one side thereof, and the other upon the other side.

Section 3025 required the Secretary of State to send the one mentioned therein, on or before June 15th of each year; and section 10322, required him to send the one therein mentioned on or about July 1st of each year.

The record shows that said sheet of paper, with those blank affidavits or reports so printed thereon was by the Secretary of State, sent to the appellant by registered letter, on June 13, 1910, and that it was by the latter received on June 14th, the following day.

The law required the appellant to execute and return this annual report to the Secretary of State with in sixty days from July 1st of each year, and the antitrust affidavit within thirty days from the date the Secretary of State mailed the blank to it.

The record also shows that the appellant, by its properly [***56] constituted officer, duly executed the former and returned the same to the Secretary of State on the 22nd day of July, 1910, with the blank affidavit printed on the reverse side thereof, as previously stated, unexecuted.

Upon the receipt of said paper the Secretary of State filed said corporation report on said 22nd day of July, and noted said facts upon the records kept in his office for that purpose; and thereupon, the same day, the Secretary of State remailed said paper, with [*741] the said executed report on the one side and the blank anti-trust affidavit on the other, back to the appellant for execution. Said paper was placed in an envelope, properly addressed to appellant, postage prepaid and deposited in the United States post office at Jefferson City, Missouri.

Appellant declined to execute this affidavit as required by said section 10322, and assigned as a reason therefor, that it did not believe that it was obliged to so do.

In our opinion there is no merit in this contention.

The blanks were in proper form and were sent to appellant in due time, and were by it accepted the next day, which gave it ample time to execute and return them to the Secretary of State, [***57] as provided for by said statutes.

Appellant knowingly and intentionally refused to make the anti-trust affidavit, and its secretary, Mr. Oscar L. Biebinger, testified that the reason for not making it was, that, "I did not believe we were obliged to answer it."

Appellant having knowingly elected to violate the law, there remains nothing to be done, except to enforce the penalties and forfeitures prescribed by the statute for such conduct.

XI. If I correctly understand counsel for appellant, they requested, in oral argument of the cause in this court, that, in case we should hold that the company was guilty of the charges made in the petition, this court now permit it to make the affidavit required of it by section 10322, upon such terms as we might deem just and proper under the circumstances. But counsel have made no such request in their brief or printed argument, nor have we been cited to any statute or other law which authorizes any such procedure.

[*742] After some investigation we find that section 10322 prohibits any such procedure. That section of the statute after providing "for the forfeiture of its charter or certificate of incorporation, or its right or privilege [***58] to do business in this State," contains this provision:

HN18 [+] "Provided, however, that if such corporation shall file the affidavit required by the provisions of this article prior to the rendition of final judgment in said action, the court may assess against such corporation in lieu of a judgment forfeiting its charter or certificate of incorporation, or its right or privilege to do business in this State, a fine not to exceed five thousand dollars and not less than one hundred dollars: Provided, however, that any time before final judgment, if such corporation shall file or cause to be filed with the Secretary of State the affidavit herein prescribed, the trial court may, in its discretion, and for good cause shown, upon the payment of all costs together with the attorneys' fees of ten dollars, to be paid to the prosecuting attorney or the circuit attorney in the city of St. Louis, remit the penalty herein prescribed."

The only leniency this statute extends to a corporation which has violated the provisions thereof, is irrevocably withdrawn after the final judgment of forfeiture has been rendered by the trial court. This is in keeping with the strenuous legislation that has [***59] been enacted by the Legislature of this and practically of all the other States of the Union; also by the Congress of the United States.

They seem to be determined to put an end to all pools, trusts, conspiracies and combinations in restraint of trade, limiting production and in fixing and maintaining prices.

While some of those provisions seem to be rather severe, yet they have not, so far, been sufficient to [*743] break up those combinations; and when one of them knowingly and intentionally refused to obey the law of its creation, I am not prepared, under present conditions, to say that it is entitled to much consideration.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed. All concur except Bond, J., who dissents in separate opinion.

Dissent by: BOND

Dissent

---

DISSENTING OPINION.

BOND, J. -- I am constrained to dissent to the opinion of the majority of the court in this case. As I understand the opinion it concedes that unless certain cases cited therein are overruled, the petition in this case states no cause of action; and, hence, would not warrant the judgment of the trial [*980] court. I doubt the wisdom of repudiating these rulings. If the [***60] theory can obtain, after a full consideration of all the applicatory statutes, that the simple omission to file a prescribed affidavit is sufficient ground for forfeiting the charter of the defendant, then this court, under its statutory power (R.S. 1909, sec. 2083) to render such judgment as ought to have been rendered in the trial court, should permit the appellant, as requested in its reply brief, to comply with the formality of filing the affidavit under the authority of section 10322, Revised Statutes 1909.

There is not the faintest suggestion in this record that the charter or business of the defendant corporation exists or is conducted in violation of the antitrust law of this State. Nor is there any proof, even arising to the dignity of an inference, to be found in the record which discloses that the failure of the officer of the defendant company to make the affidavit prescribed was caused by any other motive than a declination to answer inquiries which his learned counsel [*744] (as stated on the argument) advised him were inquisitorial and unconstitutional.

Under these circumstances I think the case should be reversed and remanded to the circuit court with directions [***61] to permit the filing of the affidavit and to enter judgment in the matter according to the provisions of section 10322, Revised Statutes 1909.

---

End of Document

Continental Sec. Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co.

District Court, S.D. New York

June 2, 1913

No. 2-214; No. 4-5

Reporter

207 F. 467 *; 1913 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1324 **

CONTINENTAL SECURITIES CO. v. INTERBOROUGH RAPID TRANSIT CO. et al. (two cases)

Core Terms

---

mortgage, monopoly, Railway, demurrer, subways, stock, shareholder, lines, obnoxious

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Demurrs

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Demurrs

Where a demurrer was argued before one judge, and nothing has occurred to change the rule that such decision is the law in the case, that is, if the facts appear on final hearing to be the same as previously inferred by the court from the bill of complaint, it is the trial judge's duty to adopt the view of law approved on demurrer, without regard to his own opinion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2[] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

Competition means more than an opportunity for selection. Competitors are persons endeavoring to do the same thing and each offering to perform the act, furnish the merchandise, or render the service better or cheaper than his rival. Unity of object with diversity of method is the essence of competition; but, if methods become too widely separated, competition usually disappears, because the superiority of one must be admitted. Competition between sail and steam may still exist as to freight, but there is none as to passenger traffic.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Under the New York antitrust law, defendants' doings, to be obnoxious to N.Y. Consol. Laws ch. 20, §§ 340-46 (1909), must amount to either an unlawful restraint of trade, the prevention of competition in a necessary of life, or a monopoly.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

HN4 Preliminary Considerations, Equity

Equity acts in the present tense.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN5 Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York is foreign to the state of New York; though it is bound to take judicial cognizance of state law, yet that law remains a fact to be ascertained as carefully, though in a different way, as any other fact in a case. The evidences of the law are not only statutes but decisions certainly of the highest state court. A new statute or a new decision is new fact evidence, and the federal court is bound to consider it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

HN6 Energy & Utilities, State Regulation

The New York Public Service Commission statutes mean what they suggest; and in New York a monopoly regulated by law and subject to visitation is preferred in respect of public utilities over unrestricted competition.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

HN7 [down] Judges, Discretionary Powers

Although a complainant's motives are of great moment when he asks for relief resting in grace or discretion, when he insists on a legal right, his morality or honor are not material.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

HN8 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

It is not the rule in New York that, in the absence of pecuniary damage, a single shareholder can take upon himself the pleasure or duty of vindicating the rights of the people of the state.

Opinion by: [**1] HOUGH

Opinion

---

[*468] HOUGH, District Judge. Some time is saved by settling the terminology to be used in considering these causes.

Interborough Rapid Transit Company is a corporation formed in 1902 for the purpose of taking over and operating the underground railway system then building under what was known as the McDonald contract with the city of New York. It is hereinafter called "the Interborough" and its railway system the "Subway."

Manhattan Railway Company is a corporation which before and at the formation of the Interborough was in control of and operated the railway system in Manhattan and Bronx, commonly known as (and hereinafter called) the "Elevated." The corporation is hereinafter called "the Manhattan."

Metropolitan Street Railway Company is a corporation which prior to February, 1902, controlled and operated very numerous street or surface car lines in Bronx and Manhattan, commonly known as and hereinafter called the "Metropolitan System"; the company itself is hereinafter called the "Metropolitan."

Metropolitan Securities Company is a corporation (hereinafter called "Securities Company") formed principally for the purpose of holding all the stock of the [**2] New York City Railway (hereinafter called "City Company"), to which concern the Metropolitan System was leased in 1902 for a very long term.

The individual defendants are divers persons who in and just before 1906 were interested and prominently concerned in the management of the affairs of the Interborough and Metropolitan System. Of them August Belmont is averred to be the chief actor in Interborough affairs and Thomas F. Ryan to hold a like position of influence if not control in Metropolitan matters.

The Interborough-Metropolitan Company (hereinafter called the "Inter-Met") is a corporation formed in early 1906 for the purpose of aiding "financially or otherwise any corporation engaged in the transportation of passengers in the city of New York or its suburbs or territory adjacent thereto," and with the widest possible powers of acquisition, retention, and disposition of the securities of other corporations.

The Windsor Trust Company is hereinafter called "Windsor Company"; the Morton Trust Company has been absorbed in or merged with the Guaranty Trust Company; but, as these trust companies are concerned in these causes only as trustees under certain mortgages, the phrase [**3] "Morton Company" will be understood to refer as well to the original trustee as to its successor.

These shortened names cover sufficiently all the defendants in both cases.

[*469] Jurisdiction depends wholly on diversity of citizenship, and complainant is a New Jersey corporation, owned by the Venner family, and in my judgment amply proven to be but one of the names under which Mr. Clarence H. Venner conducts some branch or branches of his business.

HN1[] In action No. 1 (begun April, 1908) a demurrer was argued in the following December before Ray, J., whose opinion is reported in (C.C.) 165 Fed. 945. Nothing has occurred to change the rule that such decision is the law in this case, so far as proof has sustained allegation. That is, if the facts appear on final hearing to be the same as inferred by the court from the bill of complaint, it is my duty to adopt the view of law approved on demurrer, without regard to my own opinion. Judge Ray's analysis of the bill is most exhaustive and obviates the necessity of now stating facts except in so far as the evidence requires change.

Action No. 2 admittedly presupposes success in action No. 1. As No. 1 asserts the Inter-Met to [**4] be in essence a violation of the New York "Anti-Trust" Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 20, §§ 340-346) and demands therefore its shackling if not destruction, so No. 2 seeks to set aside a certain mortgage made November 1, 1907, to Morton Company by Interborough under the baleful and unlawful influence of Inter-Met. If the latter company be not the illegal thing asserted in No. 1, then the mortgage complained of in No. 2 cannot be touched, but Morton Company defends not only on the ground asserted by the defendants in No. 1 but by declaring that, even if all the allegations of the bill in No. 1 be true, the property rights created by the mortgage in question are protected and the mortgage itself a valid obligation in favor of the bondholders for whom Morton Company, as trustee, defends.

By supplemental bills in No. 2, complainant seeks to prevent the consummation of the so-called "Dual-Subway" scheme, by which the city of New York has recently contracted with the Interborough and Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company to permit and assist in the creation of new underground railways. The method of attack in these supplemental bills is to try to prevent the Inter-Met from voting Interborough [**5] stock, for without such vote the enormous mortgage necessary for the "Dual-Subway" scheme and approved by the Public Service Commission, over the complainant's protest, cannot legally be executed. Complicated as are these bills, the position of complainant may be simply stated thus: owing to the original, intentional, and inherent illegality of Inter-Met, every act done by it, or through its influence, to support and perpetuate said illegality is null and void and should now by this court, and at the single instance of one small shareholder in Interborough, be utterly set aside. Before considering these demands of complainant, the evidence may be reviewed only so far as it varies, enlarges, or explains the allegata of the bill as stated by Judge Ray. At page 950 of 165 Fed., it is stated that down to the time of formation of the Inter-Met the Interborough was engaged in "actual competition" with the Metropolitan System in the business of transporting passengers. In the sense that travelers could choose whether to go to many places by one route rather than the other, this needs no proof; [*470] it is matter of common knowledge. But HN2[] competition means [**6] more than such an opportunity for selection.

Competitors are persons endeavoring to do the same thing and each offering to perform the act, furnish the merchandise, or render the service better or cheaper than his rival. Unity of object with diversity of method is the essence of competition; but, if methods become too widely separated, competition usually disappears, because the superiority of one must be admitted. Competition between sail and steam may still exist as to freight, but there is none as to passenger traffic. In this view of the word-meaning, the record contains no proof of competition between Interborough and Metropolitan.

HN3 [↑] Under the law as quoted at page 956 of 165 Fed., defendants' doings, to be obnoxious to the statute, must amount to either an unlawful restraint of trade, the prevention of competition in a necessary of life, or a monopoly. With which of these three epithets did Judge Ray brand the Inter-Met? Plainly, I think, it was declared a monopoly (pages 956, 957 of 165 Fed.), so that my inability to find any competition to suppress, actually existing in 1906, does not change the law of this case, as imposed by the demurrer decision. But in what does [**7] the monopoly consist? Evidently (page 957 of 165 Fed.) in "practically owning all the railroad lines * * * between the Bronx and the Battery, subject only to such control as the Public Service Commission may exercise." If, however, there was no actually existing competition to suppress, why should the Inter-Met have been formed (page 953 of 165 Fed.) "with the intent and purpose of acquiring * * * a large majority of the shares of" Interborough, Metropolitan, and Securities Company? The answer to this query is in my opinion plainly found in the testimony of Messrs. Ryan and Belmont (action No. 1, Ryan, Q. 38 et seq., Belmont, especially Q. 219 et seq. and Q. 465). The Metropolitan had exhausted the possibilities of surface transportation and with its enormous fixed charges could not earn dividends; but subways were new and of unknown capacity both as money-raisers and money-earners. It was a bold and ingenious move for the Metropolitan to put forward, as a possible addition to its system, connecting subways. This was done to the detriment of Interborough, whose managers saw plainly enough that subways must be extended, if successful, not only for financial but political reasons; [**8] and to have a bold rival in any plan for such extension seemed intolerable. This is shown by the evidence as the reason for Inter-Met, not the suppression of existing competition, as alleged in the bill. What was wished was elimination of a rival in any future bargaining with the city for subway additions and extensions. Whether the threatened rivalry was real, whether there was any substance in the threat of future competition, not in operating railways, but getting the chance to build them, is immaterial. From that motive resulted the "practical ownership" of all railways between Bronx and Battery (page 957 of 165 Fed.) which must be held monopoly in this case.

The demurrer decision at page 961 of 165 Fed. considers the allegations of the bill in respect of equity rule 94. The evidence shows that after Mr. Venner and the rest of the world knew what was proposed in respect of forming Inter-Met, but before it was done, he [*471] caused to be bought in the name of and for complainant 300 shares of Interborough. The proofs show that since suit begun the Second and Third avenue street car lines, "Belt Line," and Union Railway Company have become separated from the Metropolitan [**9] System, as well as several cross-town lines. The dropping of cross-town lines seems to me immaterial, but it is obvious that, if there was any competition between Bronx and Battery in 1905, there is a great deal more in 1913. On the other hand, the prevention of competition in building new subways in Manhattan and Bronx continues, and the recent contracts for the "Dual System," considered in connection with Mr. Belmont's testimony, seem to show that "wisdom is justified of her children," for what was planned for in 1906 seems to have arrived in 1913, but to have so arrived in consonance with legislation passed since 1906 and, with the approval of the Public Service Commission, a creation of 1907.

With respect of the Windsor Company's mortgage (Inter-Met, 4 1/2's), the method of bond issue is shown, and every holder of Interborough stock could do just what he pleased, he could take the 4 1/2's as an overwhelming majority of shareholders did or take dividends as this complainant has done. As to Morton Company's mortgage, it is plain that every dollar of proceeds was expended for benefit of Interborough alone.

The result of the demurrer decision is that in December, 1908, and from [**10] a reading of the bill in action No. 1 only, it was decided, that (page 966 of 165 Fed.) "the rights of the public and of many stockholders" had been invaded, wherefore the action would lie.

Reverting now to my attempted summary of complainant's position in 1913, the first inquiry is whether the original illegality of Inter-Met has continued; is it still an obnoxious monopoly under the law of New York? This is vital, for HN4 equity acts in the present tense.

The citation of decisions such as the Trans-Missouri Case are not in point. That obnoxious association was dead, and the Supreme Court wrote its epitaph; but, if it had been alive under conditions wholly different from those obtaining when bill filed, it would have been necessary to mold the decree to actualities not history.

The only monopoly declared from the allegata was "practical ownership" of all transportation lines from Battery to Bronx; that has been broken; it no longer exists. But what the evidence shows to have been the real object of Inter-Met (i.e., a monopoly of subway building) has been attained and retained nearly as fully in 1913 as in 1908. I conclude that the corporation constituted a monopoly in both years, [\[\*\*11\]](#) if it was one at the earlier date.

But is such monopoly obnoxious? It was so held five years ago. Since then much has happened, and complainant insists that even if the law of New York has changed, or if it has been better ascertained, I am still bound by the demurrer decision. This doctrine is denied.

HN5 This court is foreign to the state of New York; though it is bound to take judicial cognizance of state law, yet that law remains a fact to be ascertained as carefully (though in a different way) as any other [\[\*472\]](#) fact in the case. The evidences of the law are not only statutes but decisions certainly of the highest state court. A new statute or a new decision is new fact evidence, and I am bound to consider it.

In my opinion People v. Willcox, 207 N.Y. at 98, 100 N.E. 705, is the best evidence yet available; that HN6 the Public Service Commission statutes mean what they suggest; and that in New York a monopoly regulated by law and subject to visitation is preferred in respect of public utilities over unrestricted competition. The Inter-Met therefore is not an obnoxious monopoly. Nor do I find [*Central N.Y., etc., Co. v. Averill*, 199 N.Y. 128, 92 N.E. 206, 32 L.R.A. \[\*\*12\] \(N.S.\) 494, 139 Am. St. Rep. 878](#), inconsistent with the case last cited. That relates to contracts in restraint of trade; no such question is here presented.

The next query is whether even an admitted or proven infringement of the law by Inter-Met so far nullified its acts as to render void either the Windsor or Morton Company's mortgages. The Windsor Company took title to Interborough stock by the voluntary act of the several stockholders; it is well said that each shareholder took back a purchase-money mortgage on the same by accepting his 4 1/2 per cent. bonds. The Windsor title to the stock rests on no act of the Inter-Met, and, no matter how illegal was the object of forming that corporation, the Windsor mortgage is valid. As to the Morton mortgage, it cannot be pretended that the act of Interborough shareholders in furthering by their deposit of stock a scheme of monopoly rendered it impossible for them to mortgage their corporate property for legitimate and nonmonopolistic purposes. This they did by the Morton mortgage, so that, even if to some extent action No. 1 could prevail, the main bill in action No. 2 must fail.

Finally, is there any defect in these proceedings [\[\*\*13\]](#) owing to the fact that they are brought by one shareholder who has shown no personal loss, damage, or injury whatever? Much time has been devoted to picturing the evil results of monopoly, but nothing has been done toward showing that complainant has lost a dollar by exactly what Mr. Venner knew was going to be done when he caused the stock to be purchased.

Rule 94 has, I think, been complied with; and HN7 although a complainant's motives are of great moment when he asks for relief resting in grace or discretion, when he insists on a legal right, his morality or honor are not material. The demurrer decision held that the rights of the public and of stockholders had apparently been invaded. It now appears that no stockholders' pecuniary rights have been lessened. It was not held that, HN8 in the absence of pecuniary damage, a single shareholder could take upon himself the pleasure or duty of vindicating the rights of the people of the state. That such is not the rule in New York is amply held in *Thomas v. Musical, etc., Union*, 121 N.Y. 45, 24 N.E. 24, 8 L.R.A. 175, and intimated by the Circuit Court of Appeals, in respect of the statute here involved, in [*National, etc., Co. v. Mason-Builders' \[\*\*14\] Ass'n*, 169 Fed. 259](#), 94 C.C.A. 535, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 148.

[*473] Because, therefore, complainant has shown no right to maintain these actions, because the existing mortgages attacked are valid hypothecations, even if assented to by the Inter-Met, and finally because the Inter-Met itself as it stands to-day is not shown to be an illegal monopoly, the bills are severally dismissed, with costs.

---

End of Document

Standard Oil Co. v. State

Supreme Court of Mississippi

March, 1914, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

107 Miss. 377 *; 65 So. 468 **; 1914 Miss. LEXIS 95 ***

STANDARD OIL CO. OF KENTUCKY et al. v. STATE ex rel., ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Prior History: [***1] APPEAL from the chancery court of Lauderdale county.

HON. SAM WHITMAN, Chancellor.

Suit for penalties for the violation of the anti-trust laws of the state of Mississippi, on the relation of the attorney-general against the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky and others. From an order overruling their demurrer, defendants appeal.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Disposition: Affirmed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

commerce, conspiracy, monopoly, petroleum product, manufacture, monopolize, pipe, general government, decree, interstate, intrastate, delivery, parties, interstate commerce, intrastate commerce, amended bill, anti-trust, do business, transportation, territories, injunction, commodity, demurrer, cause of action, federal court, trade in, attorney-general, transactions, appearance, petroleum

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN1  Interstate Commerce, State Powers

107 Miss. 377, *377LA<sup>65</sup> So. 468, **468LA<sup>1914</sup> Miss. LEXIS 95, ***1

Where the sales and distributions were made after the petroleum products had been received by it in this state and had become incorporated into the general mass of property therein, they constitute intrastate commerce and are governed by the state's laws, for an article which is one of interstate commerce by reason of the fact that it is the subject of a sale by a citizen of one state to a citizen of another, and it being transported from one state to the other, loses its character as such when the transportation has been completed and it is mingled with and becomes a part of the general mass of property in the state of its destination. It then becomes, in so far as the power of the general and state governments to regulate commerce is concerned, subject exclusively to the operation of the state laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN2 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A conspiracy that has for its object the creation of a monopoly only in that part of the commerce in a commodity which is interstate is subject only to the laws of the general government, and one which has for its object the creation of a monopoly only in that part of the commerce in a commodity which is intrastate is subject only to the laws of the states affected thereby; but one having for its object the creation of a monopoly in both the inter and intrastate commerce in a commodity is necessarily subject to the laws both of the general government and of the states affected thereby.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 [] Conspiracy, Penalties

A conspiracy and acts done in furtherance thereof may violate both the laws of a state and of the general government, but be punishable only under the laws of the latter, and it may be that a conspiracy to monopolize both inter and intrastate commerce in a commodity, but to be consummated by dealing with the commodity only while it is the subject of an interstate transaction, would be punishable only under the laws of the general government. However, if, with the intent to monopolize commerce in petroleum products throughout the United States, the corporations had agreed to do and had actually done only such things as relate to that portion of the commerce therein which is intrastate, they would have been punishable only under the laws of the general government, even though they intended to, and in fact did thereby, monopolize also that portion of the commerce therein that is wholly intrastate. In other words, a conspiracy to monopolize trade in any commodity to be punishable under state laws must have as one of its objects a monopoly in the intrastate trade therein to be accomplished in part at least by transactions which are also wholly intrastate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN4 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Although the jurisdiction of Congress over commerce among the states is full and complete, it is not questioned that it has none over that which is wholly within a state, and therefore none over combinations or agreements so far as they relate to a restraint of such trade or commerce. It does not acquire any jurisdiction over that part of a combination or agreement which relates to commerce wholly within a state, by reason of the fact that the combination also covers and regulates commerce which is interstate. The latter it can regulate, while the former is subject alone to the jurisdiction of the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The federal statute has no application where the sale, transportation, and delivery of an article all takes place within a state.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN6 [down] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

Where a summons or citation or the service thereof is quashed on motion of a defendant he gains a continuance of the cause, but nothing else, since, as provided by Miss. Code Ann. § 3946 (1906), his appearance for the purpose of the motion gives the court jurisdiction of his person for all purposes of the case.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. MONOPOLIES. Trust and combinations in restraint of trade. Action for penalty. Jurisdiction. Commerce. Intrastate commerce. Imports. Commerce. Concurrent power to govern. Inter-state Commerce. Anti-trust laws. Offenses. Statutes Pleading. Appearance. Waiver of objection. Jurisdiction acquired. Special Appearance.

Where several oil companies formed a combination whereby the stock of each was transferred to the Standard Oil Company, the purpose being to destroy competition and monopolize the trade in petroleum throughout the United States, and each of the subsidiary companies was assigned certain territory in which to do business, the state of Mississippi being assigned to the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and such company, in furtherance of the conspiracy and to destroy competition, on numerous occasions offered petroleum for sale on the same day, in different localities of the state at different prices. In such case the conspiracy being one having as one of its objects a monopoly of that portion of the trade lying wholly in Mississippi, to be accomplished, in part at least, by transactions lying wholly within the state, was punishable under the laws of the state.

2. TRANSACTIONS CONSTITUTING INTRASTATE COMMERCE. Imports.

Sales and distributions of petroleum where made by a company after the petroleum had been received by it in this state and had become incorporated into the general Map of property therein, constituted intrastate commerce, and are governed by state's laws.

3. INTERSTATE AND INTRASTATE COMMERCE. Concurrent power to govern.

107 Miss. 377, *377LA<sup>65</sup> So. 468, **468LA<sup>1914</sup> Miss. LEXIS 95, ***1

A conspiracy which has for its object the creation of monopoly only in that part of the commerce in a commodity which is intrastate is subject only to the laws of the state affected thereby; but one having for its object the creation of a monopoly in both interstate and intrastate commerce in a commodity is necessarily subject to the laws both of the general government and of the state affected thereby.

4. INTERSTATE COMMERCE. *Concurrent power to punish.

A conspiracy to monopolize both inter and intrastate commerce in a commodity but to be consummated by dealing with the commodity only while it is the subject of an interstate transaction is punishable only under the laws of the general government.

5. INTRASTATE COMMERCE. *What law governs.

A conspiracy to monopolize trade in any commodity, to be punishable under state laws, must have as one of its objects a monopoly in the intrastate trade, to be accomplished in part at least by transactions which are also wholly intrastate.

6. MONOPOLIES. *Anti-trust laws. Action for penalty. Pleading.

The fact that in a suit by the state against several oil companies for the penalty for violating the anti-trust statute, the bill prayed for the imposition of separate and joint penalties was immaterial, since each is liable for the full penalty.

7. MONOPOLIES. *Anti-trust law. Action for penalty. Pleading.

Where a bill was filed by the state against several oil companies for the penalty for the violation of the anti-trust law of the state, it was not error for the court to refuse to eliminate from the bill, facts which also disclosed a violation of the federal antitrust law. When the two offenses against the federal and the state law are part and parcel of the same conspiracy.

8. ENTERING APPEARANCES. *Waiver of objection.

Where in an action against two foreign corporations, their attorney entered into a written agreement with plaintiff's attorney agreeing that the two companies would appear in the case without further process and continued; "It is however expressly understood that this agreement is merely to facilitate the progress of the case and defendants are not to be understood thereby as waiving any of their defenses, or as waiving their right to object to the jurisdiction of this court to entertain this suit because of their nonresidence." Such an agreement was a waiver of process and an entering of appearance by the corporations.

9. APPEARANCE. *Jurisdiction acquired. Special appearance.

Where a summons or citation or the service thereof is quashed on motion of a defendant, he gains a continuance of the cause, but nothing else, since, as provided by Code 1906, section 3946, his appearance for the purpose of the motion gives the court jurisdiction of his person for all purposes of the case.

Counsel: Hunter C. Leak, Humphrey, Middleton & Humphrey, and Mayes & Mayes, for appellants.

Ross A. Collins, Frank Johnston and Geo. H. Ethridge, for appellee.

Judges: SMITH, J.

Opinion by: SMITH

---

Opinion

[*379] [**469] SMITH, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a suit instituted by the attorney-general to recover from appellants the penalties prescribed by our [*380] anti-trust statute for an alleged violation of the statute by them. This is its second appearance in this court. When here before, the only defendant to the bill was the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and we then held that the bill failed to state a cause of action, because of the failure to allege that the sales made on the same day in different localities at different prices were made [***2] for the purpose of destroying competition. On the return of the cause to the court below an amended bill was filed, bringing in new parties defendant, to wit, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana, and alleging, with great wealth of detail, a conspiracy made for the purpose of monopolizing the trade in petroleum and its products. Afterwards a supplemental bill was filed making the Galena Signal Oil Company a party defendant. To these bills general and special demurrs were interposed by the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and the other defendants appeared specially and excepted to the jurisdiction of the court. These demurrs and exceptions were overruled, and an appeal granted by this court to settle the principles of the case.

The grounds of the general demurrer filed by the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky here relied on are: First, "the said amended bill shows no cause of action against this defendant which is cognizable by this court or by any state court of Mississippi;" second, "the said amended bill does not follow up and amend the original bill, but is a departure therefrom, and from the judgment and decree of the supreme court [***3] heretofore rendered in this cause, and is an attempt to state another and a wholly different cause of action from that attempted to be stated in the original bill;" and third, "the said amended bill is multifarious." These will be taken up and disposed of in the order here set forth.

Under the first ground of this demurrer the contention of counsel for appellants is that the amended [*381] bill presents a case of a conspiracy to destroy competition, and to monopolize interstate commerce, in petroleum products, and therefore a violation of the federal anti-trust law, cognizable only in the federal courts. The amended bill set forth at great length the formation of the original Standard Oil Trust of 1882 by a large number of persons and corporations engaged in the petroleum industry, followed later by the incorporation of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, the name of which corporation was afterwards changed to the Standard Oil Company, which company acquired all of the stock of the corporations then parties to the trust agreement, and thereby practically took the place of the trustees provided for therein, all of which was for the purpose of enabling the parties to the original [***4] agreement, and afterwards the Standard Oil Company and its subsidiary corporations, to destroy competition and monopolize the trade in petroleum and its products throughout the United States and its territories, including the state of Mississippi; that in furtherance of this conspiracy in which all of the parties defendant to the bill participated, the territory in which each of the subsidiary corporations was to do business was assigned to it, and no other corporation was permitted to do business therein; that the prices at which petroleum products were to be sold were, after its organization, fixed by the Standard Oil Company, which company controlled and directed all of the operations of the subsidiary companies; that, in furtherance of the design of this trust and combination to monopolize the trade in petroleum products, the state of Mississippi was set apart to the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, which company was given the exclusive privilege of making sales and distribution of petroleum products therein; that this company has been continuously from the 1st day of January, 1906, engaged in the sale [***470] and distribution of petroleum products in this state, maintaining [***5] for that [*382] purpose depots in the various counties thereof, from which sales and distributions are made by means of tank wagons; that other persons, firms, and corporations are engaged in Mississippi in the sale and distribution of petroleum products who are not acting with appellants and have no connection with the combination and conspiracy complained of; that in furtherance of this conspiracy the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky on numerous occasions offered for sale petroleum products on the same day in different localities of the state at different prices, the difference of freight and other necessary expenses of sale and delivery considered, for the purpose of enabling the conspirators to monopolize the trade therein in Mississippi and throughout the United States and its territories. The bill further set forth that the combination here complained of was ordered to be dissolved into its several component parts by the supreme court of the United States in the case of Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734, but that notwithstanding the conspiracy had remained in effect, [***6] and that the conspirators had continued to act in concert as theretofore in the same manner and for the same purpose. The prayer was for the imposition of the penalties provided by our anti-trust law and for the exclusion of appellants from doing business in the state. From this general statement of the allegations of the bill it appears that the conspiracy here complained of is one that has for its object the monopolizing of both the inter and intrastate commerce in petroleum products, that portion of this commerce which is wholly within the state of Mississippi being monopolized, or attempted to be monopolized, by the exclusion therefrom of all of the corporations included in this conspiracy, and permitting the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky alone to deal in petroleum products therein, and by that company's selling such [*383] products, within the state at different places on the same day at different prices, whenever it becomes necessary so to do, in order to destroy competition at such places.

It is true that no petroleum is produced in the state of Mississippi, and all petroleum sold and distributed by the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky in this state must necessarily [***7] have been imported from another state. HN1 These sales and distributions, however, as we understand the bill, were made by this company after the petroleum products had been received by it in this state and had become incorporated into the general mass of property therein; they therefore constituted intrastate commerce, and are governed by the state's laws, for an article which is one of interstate commerce by reason of the fact that it is the subject of a sale by a citizen of one state to a citizen of another, and it being transported from one state to the other, loses its character as such when the transportation has been completed and it is mingled with and becomes a part of the general mass of property in the state of its destination. It then becomes, in so far as the power of the general and state governments to regulate commerce is concerned, subject exclusively to the operation of the state laws. Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U.S. 100, 10 S. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128. The bill, therefore, presents a case of the violation of the laws both of the general government and of the state of Mississippi. This seems not to be disputed by counsel for appellant, their contention being [***8] that under the allegations of the bill the principal object of this conspiracy was to enable the conspirators to monopolize interstate commerce, and that the intent there alleged to monopolize intrastate commerce is a mere incident to the principal object, and that the two intents are so inseparably connected that the jurisdiction of the federal courts to punish therefor must be exclusive. In this we think counsel are in error. The [*384] monopoly of intrastate commerce is one of the material objects of this conspiracy, and such a monopoly is not necessary, if such fact be material, to the maintenance of a monopoly of interstate commerce, the monopoly of the commerce of one character simply constituting a powerful factor in bringing about a monopoly of the other.

HN2 A conspiracy which has for its object the creation of a monopoly only in that part of the commerce in a commodity which is interstate is subject only to the laws of the general government, and one which has for its object the creation of a monopoly only in that part of the commerce in a commodity which is intrastate is subject only to the laws of the states affected thereby; but one having for its object the creation [***9] of a monopoly in both the inter and intrastate commerce in a commodity is necessarily subject to the laws both of the general government and of the states affected thereby.

It is true that under our form of government HN3 a conspiracy and acts done in furtherance thereof may violate both the laws of a state and of the general government, but be punishable only under the laws of the latter, and it may be that a conspiracy to monopolize both inter and intrastate commerce in a commodity, but to be consummated by dealing with the commodity only while it is the subject of an interstate transaction, would be punishable only under the laws of the general government.

In the case at bar, if, with the intent to monopolize commerce in petroleum products throughout the United States, appellants had agreed to do and had actually done only such things as relate to that portion of the commerce therein which is intrastate, they would have been punishable only under [*471] the laws of the general government, even though they intended to, and in fact did thereby, monopolize also that portion of the commerce therein that is wholly intrastate. In other words, a conspiracy to monopolize trade in any [***10] commodity to [*385] be punishable under state laws must have as one of its objects a monopoly in the intrastate trade therein to be accomplished in part at least by transactions which are also wholly intrastate. The controversy here complained of, having as one of its objects a monopoly of that portion of the trade in petroleum products which lies wholly within the state of Mississippi, to be accomplished in part at least by transactions lying wholly within the state, is punishable under the laws thereof. Whether or not this conspiracy is punishable under the laws of the general government is immaterial, and has no real bearing on this controversy, for it is beyond the power of that government to regulate commerce which lies wholly within the state, and its laws can have no effect thereon, except in so far as it is necessarily affected thereby by reason of its intimate connection with interstate commerce.

107 Miss. 377, *385 L<sup>65</sup> So. 468, **471 L<sup>914</sup> Miss. LEXIS 95, ***10

The foregoing views find support in, and the question here under consideration seems to have been fully answered by, the case of Addyston Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 S. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136. In that case a proceeding was commenced in behalf [***11] of the United States, under the so-called anti-trust act of Congress, passed July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, ch. 647 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200). It was undertaken for the purpose of obtaining an injunction perpetually enjoining the six corporations, who were made defendants, and who were engaged in the manufacture, sale, and transportation of iron pipe at their respective places of business in the states of their residence, from further acting under or carrying on the combination alleged in the petition to have been entered into between them, and which was stated to be an illegal and unlawful one, under the act above mentioned, because it was in restraint of trade and commerce among the states, etc.

"The trial court dismissed the petition ( United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. (C. C.) 78 F. 712), but [*386] upon appeal to the circuit court of appeals the judgment of the court below was reversed, with instructions to enter a decree for the United States perpetually enjoining defendants from maintaining the combination in cast-iron pipe as described in the petition, and from doing any business under such combination."

The six corporations defendant to [***12] the petition were domiciled, one in Ohio, one in Kentucky, two in Alabama, and two in Tennessee.

"It was charged in the petition that on the 28th of December, 1894, the defendants entered into a combination and conspiracy among themselves, by which they agreed that there should be no competition between them in any of the states or territories mentioned in the agreement (comprising some thirty-six in all), in regard to the manufacture and sale of cast-iron pipe, and that in obedience to such agreement and combination, and to carry out the same, the defendants had, since that time, operated their shops, and had been selling and shipping the pipe manufactured by them into other states and territories, under contracts for the manufacture and sale of such pipe with citizens of such other states and territories."

One of the means by which this monopoly was to be maintained was that certain cities were assigned to each corporation in which none of the other conspirators would bid against it for sale of pipe, or, rather, the bids of the other members of the conspiracy would always be higher than that made by the corporation to which the cities had been assigned. A sale made by one of these [***13] corporations was an interstate one, and therefore interstate commerce, when the city in which the sale was made was situated in a state other than the one of the corporation's factory, and was intrastate when the factory and the city wherein the sale was made were both in the same state. The judgment of the circuit court of appeals, reversing the decree of the trial court [*387] and directing that a decree be entered enjoining the defendants to the petition from maintaining the combination in cast-iron pipe and from doing business under such combination, was modified by the supreme court so as to exclude therefrom that portion of the combination which affected intrastate commerce and be limited to that portion thereof which affected interstate commerce.

It will be observed that this conspiracy or combination had for its object a monopoly of both the inter and intrastate commerce within states and territories mentioned in the agreement, thirty-six in number, the monopoly of the commerce of each character to be brought about and maintained, as in the case at bar, by transactions both interstate and intrastate.

In its opinion modifying the decree of the lower court the supreme [***14] court, through Mr. Justice PECKHAM, said:

"The views above expressed lead generally to an affirmance of the judgment of the court of appeals. In one aspect, however, that judgment is too broad in its terms--the injunction is too absolute in its directions--as it may be construed as applying equally to commerce wholly within a state as well as to that which is interstate or international only. This was probably an inadvertence merely. HN4↑ Although the jurisdiction of Congress over commerce among the states is full and complete, it is not questioned that it has none over that which is wholly within a state, and therefore none over combinations or agreements so far as they relate to a restraint of such trade or commerce. It does not acquire any jurisdiction over that part of a combination or agreement which relates to commerce wholly within a state, by reason of the fact that the combination also covers and regulates commerce which is interstate. The latter it can regulate, while the former is subject alone to the jurisdiction of the state. The combination herein described covers both commerce which is wholly within a state and also that which is interstate.

[*388] "In regard to such [*15] of these defendants as might reside and carry on business in the same [**472] state where the pipe provided for in any particular contract was to be delivered, the sale, transportation, and delivery of the pipe by them under that contract would be a transaction wholly within the state, and the statute would not be applicable to them in that case. They might make any combination they chose with reference to the proposed contract, although it should happen that some nonresident of the state eventually obtained it.

"The fact that the proposal called for the delivery of pipe in the same state where some of the defendants resided and carried on their business would be sufficient, so far as the act of Congress is concerned, to permit those defendants to combine as they might choose, in regard to the proposed contract for the delivery of the pipe, and that right would not be affected by the fact that the contract might be subsequently awarded to some one outside of the state as the lowest bidder. In brief, their right to combine in regard to a proposal for pipe deliverable in their own state could not be reached by the federal power derived from the commerce clause in the Constitution.

[***16] "To the extent that the present decree includes in its scope the enjoining of defendants thus situated from combining in regard to contracts for selling pipe in their own state, it is modified and limited to that portion of the combination or agreement which is interstate in its character. As thus modified the decree is affirmed."

But it is said by counsel for appellants that the federal anti-trust law as construed in United States v. E. C. Knight Company, 156 U.S. 1, 15 S. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325, does not include agreements to manufacture, and that in modifying this injunction which was a mere minor feature of the decision, the court pointed out that the injunction was too broad--

"because, said they, inasmuch as these people who were engaged in these transactions were manufacturers, and [*389] consequently might contract about the manufacture of an article, the sale of that article, and the delivery of that article, and because the whole process of manufacture, sale, and delivery might take place within the limits of one state, to such a transaction the act of Congress could not extend; and, therefore, the injunction by its terms should not be broad [***17] enough to include a transaction of that sort. That feature of the decision has no application whatever to the case at bar, and that for the reason that this amended bill shows clearly that the Standard Oil Company is not occupying Mississippi with an article produced in Mississippi, to be vended and delivered within the limits of the state of Mississippi; but, on the contrary, the whole case made in the bill is to the effect that the article dealt with, and about which this suit is brought, was not produced by the Kentucky company, but by another company. Neither was it produced by any agency whatever within the limits of the state of Mississippi; it was not a Mississippi manufacture or production; the bill shows all through that it was an article introduced by transportation and commerce across the state line; it was a foreign production as to the state of Mississippi; the subject of commerce, alone, so far as the state of Mississippi is concerned, and nothing else. Wherefore, as we have shown, this bill does not fall within the qualified reservation made in the Addyston pipe case, but clearly falls under the rule expounded in the three cases which we have cited and relied on above. [***18]"

Counsel, we think, misconceive the ground of this decision. It is true that the parties to the combination were manufacturers, but the court pointed out that, although a combination simply to control manufacture was not a violation of the act of Congress, because such a contract or combination did not directly control or affect interstate commerce, but that contracts for the sale and transportation to other states of specific [*390] articles were proper subjects for regulation because they did form part of such commerce, and that the combination then under consideration related, not to the manufacture, but to the sale and delivery of specific articles. The decision in all of its aspects proceeds altogether on the theory that the combination there complained of, both in its interstate and intrastate character, was one relating to the sale and delivery of a commodity, and the court nowhere gives as a reason for the modification of the injunction that the parties to the combination were manufacturers, but places it solely upon the ground that the HN5<sup>15</sup> federal statute has no application where the sale, transportation, and delivery of an article all takes place within a state. Had the [***19] court proceeded on the theory that the combination had for its purpose a monopoly in the manufacture and not in the sale and delivery of articles, the injunction, under the authority of the Knight Case, must necessarily have been dissolved in toto instead of partially.

In support of their contention that the jurisdiction of the federal courts over this alleged conspiracy is exclusive, counsel for the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky have called our attention to the following language contained in the opinion of the supreme court of the United States in the case of Standard Oil Co. v. United States, beginning at page 81 of 221 U.S., at page 524 of 31 Sup. Ct., at page 653 of 55 L. Ed. (34 L. R. A. [N. S.] 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734):

"We think that, in view of the magnitude of the interests involved and their complexity, the delay of thirty days allowed for executing the decree was too short, and should be extended so as to embrace a period of at least six months."

"During these six months, therefore," say counsel, "it was lawful to continue the then existing combination," and if the state be now permitted to recover from appellants [***20] the penalties alleged to have been incurred by [*391] them for maintaining the combination during that time, they will thereby be punished for doing what the supreme court of the United States has adjudged lawful. "This but illustrates," they say, "in another way the confusion that must inevitably result where there is a proceeding taken under the Sherman anti-trust law and a proceeding taken under a state trust law growing out of exactly the same facts. One or the other must necessarily be exclusive; otherwise confusion will inevitably result; that is, one court may, for reasons which seem equitable, permit a combination to exist for a limited period, in the interest of the public, while the other court may be visiting the same corporation with enormous penalties for continuing the same combination during exactly the same period."

We think counsel misconceive the effect of this modification which the supreme court directed the trial court to make in its decree. The combination which was and had been [**473] adjudged to be in violation of law was not thereby made lawful during the six months given it in which to dissolve, nor was it thereby relieved from any penalties incurred [***21] under any statute, or from liability to damage inflicted upon any one by continuing in existence for that time. The court did not so intend; but, even if it had, it would thereby have exceeded its jurisdiction, for the reason that under our form of government no court, unless specially authorized by law, has the power to grant permission to do unlawful acts.

In order to dissolve the combination as it then existed, it was necessary for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to dispose of the stock owned by it in the other corporations, by means of which it controlled their operations. This could not be done on the instant. It was therefore necessary to grant it time in which to do so, and the granting of this time in which the decree should be complied with simply meant that the parties to the combination would not be in contempt of court by [*392] not complying with its decree before the expiration thereof. But even if we concede that the existence of this combination during these six months was lawful, it was lawful only in so far as the laws of the general government are concerned, and the parties thereto were not, by reason of this decree, licensed to engage in commerce lying [***22] wholly within a state in violation of the laws thereof; for, as we have heretofore pointed out, and as the supreme court of the United States has more than once decided, the general government can exercise no control over commerce that is wholly intrastate. The confusion which counsel say if the result of permitting the courts, both of the general government and of the states, to deal with causes of this character, if confusion in fact it can be called, is only such as will necessarily arise in all cases where the laws both of the general government and of the states have been violated.

We have not left out of view the line of cases cited by counsel, of which Standard Oil Company v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734, Swift v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 25 S. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, and Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 24 S. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608, are a type, holding that a case is stated under the federal anti-trust laws of which the federal courts have jurisdiction, although the combination and agreement complained of includes both interstate [***23] and intrastate transactions. The views herein expressed are not in conflict with these cases, but rather are in accordance therewith, for, as we have pointed out, the combination and agreement of the character here under consideration may violate the laws both of a state and of a general government and be punished in the courts of each.

There is no merit in the remaining grounds of the general demurrer, for the amended bill does not "state another and wholly different cause of action from that attempted to be stated in the original bill"; it simply [*393] states the same cause of action, attempted to be stated in the original bill, more fully and probably in unnecessary detail, and the new defendants, being parties to the conspiracy alleged in the bill, were properly made defendants thereto. The fact that the bill prays for the imposition of separate and not joint penalties is immaterial. The course here pursued with reference to the joinder of defendants is the same as that pursued in the cases of Grenada Lumber Co. v. State, 98 Miss. 536, 54 So. 8, and Dukate v. Adams, 101 Miss. 433, 58 So. 475.

The special demurrs which seek to [***24] eliminate from the bill all of the allegations which set forth facts which disclose a violation of the federal anti-trust law were properly overruled, conceding without deciding that this question can be thus presented. The intent to violate the federal statute is so intimately connected with the intent to violate the statute, in fact being a part and parcel of the same conspiracy, that one cannot be intelligently set forth without disclosing the other; or, to be more accurate, the one can be more intelligently set forth in language which also discloses the other. Moreover, the facts thereby disclosed may be necessary in order to connect the other defendants with the acts of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, and to enable the court to determine the true intent with which the various sales of petroleum products set forth in the bill were made by this company. The allegation contained in paragraph 24 of the bill setting forth the dissolution by the federal courts in 1911 of the combination here complained of, as it then existed, simply explains why the methods alleged to have been pursued by appellants in order to continue to maintain a monopoly in petroleum products after this dissolution [***25] was ordered were different from those alleged to have been pursued by them prior thereto, and therefore the allegation is proper, though probably not a necessary one.

This brings us to the exceptions filed by the other defendants to the jurisdiction of the court. There can be [*394] no question of the court's jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and if it had jurisdiction of the person of the defendants, its jurisdiction was complete. These other defendants have no local agent in this state upon whom service of process could be had, so that they were summoned by publication in a newspaper. They appeared specially and excepted to the jurisdiction of the court. The ground of these exceptions was that the service of process by publication was void for the reason that:

"Foreign corporations can be served with process in a state only when doing business therein, and such service must be upon an agent who represents the corporation in such business."

[**474] The court overruled these exceptions and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana joined in this appeal. After publication for these defendants had been made, the following written agreement [***26] was entered into between the attorney-general and Mr. Hunter C. Leake, attorney of record for the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana, and was by the attorney-general filed in the court below among the papers in this cause:

"In this cause it is agreed between the attorney-general, representing the state, and Hunter C. Leake, representing the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, that the two companies named will appear in this cause without further process, making such appearance to the November term, 1913, and plead, answer or demur to the bill then.

"It is, however, expressly understood, that this agreement is merely to facilitate the progress of this cause, and the two companies named herein are not to be understood thereby as waiving any of their defenses, or as waiving their right, if any they have, to object to the jurisdiction of this court to entertain this suit as to them or either of them because of their nonresidence of the [*395] state of Mississippi, and the fact claimed by them that they are not doing business in this state, or any other defensive point which they may desire to make.

[***27] "This September 6, 1913.

"[Signed]

ROSS A. COLLINS,

"Attorney-General, State of Mississippi.

"HUNTER C. LEAKE."

This agreement, which is altogether ignored by these exceptions, constitutes in plain and unambiguous language a waiver of process and the entering of an appearance by the defendants in the cause. The reservation of all defenses to the bill contained in this agreement was unnecessary, and added nothing thereto, and the reservation of the right to object to the jurisdiction of the court "to entertain this suit as to them, or either of them, because of their nonresidence in the state of Mississippi, and the fact claimed by them that they are not doing business in this state," cannot be construed to be the reservation of a right to object on the ground that no process had been served, for the occasion of the making of the agreement was that "further process" might be waived.

This question, however, is of no material importance, for the reason that, had the agreement not been made, or, conceding that appellant had the right under the agreement to appear specially for the purpose of filing the motion requesting the court to quash the citation, and conceding, further, [***28] that the citation should have been quashed in response to appellant's request, the issuance of further process for them would not have been necessary, for:

HN6 [↑] "Where a summons or citation or the service thereof is quashed on motion of a defendant he gains a continuance of the cause, but nothing else, since, as provided by Code 1906, section 3946, his appearance for the purpose of the motion gives the court jurisdiction of his person for all purposes of the case." Illinois Central R<sup>3961</sup> Railroad Company v. Ann Swanson, 92 Miss. 485, 46 So. 83.

Affirmed and remanded, with leave to appellants to answer within sixty days after mandate is filed in court below.

Affirmed and remanded.

---

End of Document

International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued April 24, 1914 ; June 22, 1914

No. 298

Reporter

234 U.S. 589 *; 34 S. Ct. 947 **; 58 L. Ed. 1484 ***; 1914 U.S. LEXIS 1110 ****

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY OF AMERICA v. COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY

Prior History: [****1] ERROR TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF KENTUCKY

Core Terms

---

anti-trust, previous case, do business, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Methods of Service > General Overview

Civil Procedure > US Supreme Court Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction on Certiorari > Considerations Governing Review > State Court Decisions

HN1[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

If a federal question involving the validity of a state anti-trust act is considered and decided adversely in a state court, it, as well as the question of due service, is properly before the United States Supreme Court on review.

Syllabus

---

Where the state court has denied a motion to quash the service of process on a foreign corporation, and has also held that the statute on which the action is based is not unconstitutional, both the question of validity of the service and that of the constitutionality of the act are before this court for review.

International Harvester Company v. Kentucky, ante, p. 579, followed to effect that the plaintiff in error was doing business in the State in which process was served.

GH ÁMÉJÉN Í JÉN Í JLÁH ÁMÉOÉN Í ÉEJÍ Í LÁ Í ÁSÉOáÉN Í I ÉEJÉN Í LÁFJFI ÁMÉJÉSÓYQÁFFÉN

International Harvester Company v. Kentucky, ante, p. 216, followed to the effect that the provision of the anti-trust statute of Kentucky under which this suit was brought is unconstitutional under the due process provision of the Fourteenth Amendment.

149 Kentucky, 41, reversed.

THE facts, which involve the sufficiency of service of process upon a foreign corporation doing business in the State of Kentucky and also the constitutionality of the anti-trust act of Kentucky, are stated in the opinion.

Counsel: Mr. Alexander Pope Humphrey and Mr. Edgar A. Bancroft, with whom Mr. Victor A. Remy was on the brief, for plaintiff [****2] in error in this case and in No. 297. <sup>1</sup>

Mr. Charles Carroll, with whom Mr. James Garnett, Attorney General of the State of Kentucky, Mr. Frank E. Daugherty, Mr. J. R. Mallory, Mr. J. C. Dedman, Mr. C. R. Hill and Mr. C. D. Florence, were on the brief, for defendant in error in this case and in No. 297. <sup>1</sup>

Judges: White, McKenna, Holmes, Day, Lurton, Hughes, Van Devanter, Lamar, Pitney

Opinion by: DAY

Opinion

---

[*590] [**947] [***1484] MR. JUSTICE DAY delivered the opinion of the court.

A penal action was instituted by the defendant in error against the plaintiff in error in the Boyle Circuit Court of Kentucky under the anti-trust laws of that State. Summons having been served upon an alleged agent of the plaintiff in error, it filed a motion to quash the return for the reason, as alleged, that the person upon whom service had been made was not the authorized agent of the plaintiff in error and that it was not doing business in Kentucky. The facts in this case which are identical with those set out in the previous case, International Harvester [***3] Company of America v. The Commonwealth of [**948] Kentucky, just decided, ante, p. 579, show that the plaintiff in error had prior to the commencement of this action revoked the authority of an agent designated by it in compliance [*591] with the laws of Kentucky and had removed its office from the State, but that it had continued through its agents, the party served in this case being one of them, to solicit orders to be accepted outside of the State for the sale of machines which were to be delivered in Kentucky, and that its agents were authorized to receive money, checks and drafts in payment therefor, or take the notes of purchasers payable at any bank in Kentucky.

There are two questions in this case. The Court of Appeals, deciding that this case was governed by the previous case from Breckenridge County (147 Kentucky, 655), held that the service was good and that the antitrust act was not unconstitutional and violative of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. 149 Kentucky, 41. HN1 [↑] Since the Federal question involving the validity of the anti-trust act was considered and decided adversely in the Court of Appeals, it, as well as the [****4] question of due service, is properly before us. Miedreich v. Lauenstein, 232 U.S. 236, 243, and cases there cited.

As we have just dealt with the sufficiency of service in the previous case, involving the same question, it may be disposed of here by merely referring to that decision. And as the constitutional validity of the anti-trust act was

---

<sup>1</sup> For abstracts of arguments see ante, p. 579.

<sup>1</sup> For abstracts of arguments see ante, p. 579.

GHÍ ÁNÉÜÉÁÍ JÉÁÍ JFLÁÍ ÁUÉAOÓÁÍ Í ÉÁEJÍ Í LÁÍ ÁSÉÓaÉÁÍ Í FÁÉFÍ Í LÁFJFÍ ÁNÉÜÉSÓYÓÁFFÉAÍHÍ

specifically determined in cases Nos. 276, 291 and 292, entitled International Harvester Company of America v. The Commonwealth of Kentucky, decided June 8, 1914, ante, p. 216, that question is also concluded.

We therefore reach the conclusion that the plaintiff in error was doing business in Kentucky and that the service was sufficient, but that the law under which the action was brought is unconstitutional and that the judgment of the Court of Appeals must be reversed, and accordingly remand the case to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

End of Document

Co-operative Live Stock Com. Co. v. Browning

Supreme Court of Missouri

July 2, 1914, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

260 Mo. 324 *; 168 S.W. 934 **; 1914 Mo. LEXIS 120 ***

CO-OPERATIVE LIVE STOCK COMMISSION COMPANY v. JAMES A. BROWNING et al., Appellants.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from Jackson Circuit Court. -- Hon. Thomas J. Seehorn, Judge.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

livestock, feeders, Traders, stockers, stockyards, commission merchant, pool, customers, patrons, buying and selling, buy, conspiracy, combinations, restraint of trade, transportation, prices, confederation, damages, stock, cattle, manufacture, speculators, large number, commerce, importation, selling, lessen, bought and sold, commodity, packers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10298 (1909) provides: Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any person or persons in restraint of trade or competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity in the State of Missouri or any article or thing bought or sold whatsoever, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and shall be punished as provided in this Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10300 provides. Any two or more persons engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce, manufacture, mechanism, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing of any class or kind whatsoever, who shall create, enter into, become members of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing, or to limit competition in such trade, by refusing to buy from or sell to any other person any such article or thing aforesaid, for the reason that such other person is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, combination, confederation, association or understanding, or shall boycott or threaten any person from buying or selling to any other person who is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding in such article or thing aforesaid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and punished as provided for in this Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10301 provides in part: All arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations or understandings made or entered into between any two or more persons, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, lawful trade, or full and free competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture or sale in the State of Missouri of any product, commodity or article, and any person or persons creating, entering into, becoming a member of or participating in such arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and punished as provided for in this act.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Management Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multiparty Litigation

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > Proceedings

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 Management Duties & Liabilities, Causes of Action

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10305 provides: Any person injured in his business or property by any other person or persons by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this Act may sue therefor in any circuit court of the State of Missouri in which the defendant or defendants, or any of them, reside, or have any officer, agent or representative, or in which any such defendant or any agent, officer or representative may be found, without regard to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damage by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10313 provides: The enactment and taking effect of this law shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture or liability incurred by any corporation or person on account of the violation of any law of the State of Missouri prior to the taking effect of this Act.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN5 Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

In order to properly appreciate the meaning of all remedial statutes, it is the duty of the court to investigate and ascertain the evil that existed, which the legislature intended to abolish by the enactment, as well as the inducements offered and instrumentalities created for the abolition of said evil.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. CAUSE OF ACTION: Conspiracy Between Commission Merchants Not to Buy from or Sell to Another Commission Merchant: Damages. Sections 10298-10305, Revised Statutes 1909, forbidding a combination "in restraint of trade or competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity in this State or any article or thing bought or sold whatsoever," and giving to "any person injured in his business or property" by such combination the right to "recover threefold the damages by him sustained," do not give to a commission merchant a cause of action against other commission merchants engaged in buying and selling live stock for entering into a pool and combination to neither sell to nor buy from him live stock, nor to permit any other commission merchant to remain a member of their live-stock exchange who either sells to or buys from him. Such commission merchant is not engaged in trade, but is simply the agent of those who are. Nor could a combination between the other commission merchants result in "restraint of competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity in this State." Nor are such other commission merchants purchasers within the meaning of the statute, since the combination was not entered into for the purpose of doing the things prohibited by the statute, but solely to injure the said merchant's commission business. In order that such commission merchant may have a cause of action under such statutes against the other commission merchants composing the association or exchange, it is necessary both to allege and prove that as a result of such combination injury resulted to plaintiff's patrons or customers, or to stock raisers or shippers, or to the trade in live stock at the particular stock yards, or that importation of live stock thereto or transportation of live stock therefrom was lessened.

2. HISTORY OF STATUTE: Combinations in Restraint of Trade. To properly ascertain the meaning of a remedial statute it is the duty of courts to read it in the light of its historical setting, to hold in view the existing evils it was intended to abolish, and to examine the instrumentalities provided by the Legislature for their destruction; and if the antitrust statutes are so viewed, it is apparent that their purpose was to prohibit pools and combinations that would restrict commerce or increase the prices of the necessities of life, either by limiting competition or the supply, or by "boycotts" or rebates to drive small dealers out of business. They never were intended to give to a mere agent engaged in the purchase and sale of any such necessary for others the right to recover damages from other such agents for the mere refusal to buy from or sell to him.

Counsel: Edward J. White, Martin L. Clardy, J. Walter Farrar, Ball & Ryland, Kinley & Kinley and R. W. Goldsby for appellants.

(1) The petition is insufficient. State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307; Cooley, Const. Lim. (6 Ed.), 484; 2 Story on Const. (5 Ed.), 1950; Gladdish v. Live Stock Exch., 113 Mo. App. 725; Anderson v. United States, 171 U.S. 604; United States v. Greenhut, 51 F. 210; In re Greene, 52 F. 104; Rice v. Oil Co., 134 F. 464. (2) The verdict and judgment were against the law. R. S. 1899, secs. 8981, 8978. (3) The acts of 1899 and 1907 are unconstitutional, insofar as they or either of them purport or may be construed to give an action against defendants. State ex rel. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 461; State v. Coffee Co., 171 Mo. 634; Shiveley v. Lankford, 174 Mo. 535; State ex rel. v. Vandiver, 222 Mo. 206; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163; In re Goode, 3 Mo. App. 230; State ex rel. v. Lafayette Co. Ct., 41 Mo. 39; State v. Persinger, 76 Mo. 346; Witzman v. Railroad, 131 Mo. 612.

Gage, Ladd & Small for respondent.

(1) "We would seem to lack perception of the true nature of things [***2] were we to be deceived or blinded by the screen or pretense which the conspirators raised to mask their operations. Courts should be as astute to discover and discern the truth as the guilty are to conceal it." Foot-Race Case, 147 F. 327. (2) There is abundant evidence tending to prove that the defendants and all other members of the traders' exchange boycotted and threatened others not members of their exchange for and from doing business with the plaintiff. (3) In order to constitute a boycott or threaten to boycott, it was not necessary to use or threaten violence to the person or property of anyone.

It is sufficient if there was an injury or threat to cause a loss to another's business. Door Co. v. Fuelle, 215 Mo. 4221. \(4\) "The rule of reason" is excluded by our statutes, and any combination which tends to limit or control or lessen trade or competition, no matter how little, falls within the condemnation of the antitrust laws of this State. State v. People's Ice Co., 246 Mo. 221. \(5\) As a matter of law an agreement between defendants or between them and other members of the traders exchange not to buy from or sell to the plaintiff's customers through the plaintiff, was a combination, [\[\*\*\*3\]](#) agreement, trust, pool, association and conspiracy, etc., to restrain and limit trade and competition at this great cattle market at the stockyards in Kansas City, and whether such limitation or restraint of trade was "great or small," the law was violated. State ex rel. v. People's Ice Co., 246 Mo. 221. \(6\) "It is the combination or agreement that results in restraint of trade that the statute denounces, whether the result is accomplished by the act of each individual on his own account, doing as he agreed to do, or by the joint action of all. . . . It is the combination to accomplish that result that the statute is aimed to prevent." State ex rel. v. Live Stock Exchange, 211 Mo. 193; State ex rel. Barker v. Assurance Co., 158 S. W. 644. \(7\) All the sections and articles of our antitrust statutes are in pari materia and must be construed as if contained in one act. Hence it follows that section 8981 in article 2 of chapter 143, relating to pools, trusts and conspiracies, Revised Statutes 1899, which gives triple damages to any person injured in his property or business arising from any violation of that article, also gives such triple damages arising from any violation of any provisions [\[\*\*\*4\]](#) of article 1 of said chapter 143. State v. Oil Co., 218 Mo. 354; State v. Elevator Co., 106 N. W. 983; Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 64. \(8\) It is too late to challenge the constitutionality of our antitrust statutes for the alleged reason that they interfere with the right to contract or take property without compensation, or due process of law, or deny any person the equal protection of the law. All these questions have long since been foreclosed and settled by this court. Standard Oil Case, 218 Mo. 378. \(9\) The case of Anderson v. United States, 171 U.S. 604, so much relied on by the defendants, is not in point. All that case decided, as has been held by the Court of Appeals of this State and the Supreme Court of Kansas, was that the members of the traders exchange were not engaged in interstate commerce; and therefore the Sherman Act did not apply. Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 64; State v. Wilson, 84 Pac. 737. Furthermore as pointed out in State ex rel. v. Live Stock Exchange, 211 Mo. 197, and State v. Aikens, 83 Kan. 792, all the rules of the traders exchange were not before the court in the Anderson case, especially the rule requiring the payment of a thousand [\[\*\*\*5\]](#) dollar entrance fee, and the approval of two-thirds of the members before any person could enter the portals of the exchange and be a trader on the yards with none to molest or make him afraid. Besides, it may be said that when the Anderson case was decided this antitrust legislation was a sort of a "Mysterious Stranger" -- to be kept at a dignified and perfectly proper distance -- and did not meet with the cordial reception and hearty welcome which its great virtues entitled it to, and which it has since, upon better acquaintance, been accorded, especially by the Supreme Court of this State. \(10\) The statutes so far as they provide for a civil suit to recover triple damages are not penal. Atlanta v. Foundry & Pipe Works, 127 F. 23; Casey v. Transit Co., 116 Mo. App. 250. \(11\) It is settled in this State that the enforcement and construction of these antitrust statutes is not to be "approached with a sour face," but these statutes are remedial and must be liberally construed, so as to advance the remedy for the great wrongs therein denounced. It is the policy and purpose of the law that these statutes shall be rigidly enforced against all wrongdoers, and that the guilty shall not escape [\[\*\*\*6\]](#) through any astute or artificial construction which subverts the general intent of the lawmakers -- which was to destroy the whole brood of trusts and combines against trade in this State, from the least unto the greatest. State v. Oil Co., 218 Mo. 359; State ex inf. v. Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 43. \(12\) The antitrust laws apply to commission merchants. The learned counsel for the appellants, neither at the trial of the case below nor in their briefs in this court, made any claim or point that the antitrust statutes did not apply to combines or boycotts against commission merchants, and therefore we did not argue that point or submit any authorities. In State ex rel. v. Live Stock Exchange, 211 Mo. 181, this court passed upon the very question, and held that the statute did apply to commission merchants, members of the Kanass City Live Stock Exchange. See, also, State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 334. So the record in this case shows that all the live stock -- cattle, hogs and sheep -- which comes to Kansas City is sent to commission merchants and sold by them. It is true that they sell on commission and do not own the stock, but they are the parties who actually sell it on the market, and for the most [\[\*\*\*7\]](#) part the owners never know for what the stock is sold until after a report of the sales is made. The commission men represent the owners, stand in the place of the owners and they are certainly bound and controlled by the antitrust laws of this State. And they can enter into an agreement and combine for the purpose of restraining trade and competition, or of lessening or raising prices, or doing anything which the owner himself could do in violation of the antitrust law. The antitrust law was primarily enacted for the purpose of protecting the producers and the consumers of farm products and other necessities of life from combinations or monopolies which affect the prices or which tend to lessen competition in the trade. It is well known that nearly all of the food products, both raw material and finished, are for the most part handled by commission men, who, of all others, are in a position to enter into combines affecting the prices and trade and competition in the same. Butter, eggs, cheese, potatoes, flour, sugar, apples, oranges, lemons, fruits of all kinds, live stock -- cattle, hogs, sheep, goats -- poultry are bought and sold, and the prices are fixed, as a matter of fact, [***8] by commission merchants. And this antitrust statute was passed mainly, for the very purpose of protecting the producers and consumers of these food stuffs -- the farmers and the town people -- from combines and trusts formed by commission men. Therefore, to read them out of the benefits or the penalties of these statutes, would be to defeat the primary purpose of the law. There is nothing in the statutes saying that the combines or contracts or agreements in restraint of trade, condemned by the statutes, can only be or must be made by the owners of the products. But the statute says, "If any two or more persons or corporations who are engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce," Sec. 8978, R. S. 1899; that "all arrangements, contracts, agreements or combination between persons or corporations, or between persons or any association of persons or corporations, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, full and free competition," Sec. 8966, R. S. 1899; and "Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any person or persons in restraint of trade [***9] or competition," Sec. 8965. The same language is used in the revised law of 1907. So that it is nowhere suggested or implied in any section of the statute, or in any of the language used, that a vicious agreement in restraint of trade can only be made by the owners of the produce; but it is assumed that such agreements may be made by others, to-wit, by their agents and other persons engaged in the actual business of buying or selling or fixing the prices, such as commission merchants. To hold otherwise would be to expose the producers of food stuffs (the farmers) and the consumers (the town people) to all the evils which the statute so clearly intended to prevent. This cannot be the law. The section of the statute providing the remedy says that "any person injured in his business" by a violation of the statute shall have a cause of action. He does not have to be the owner of anything, but if his business is injured or destroyed by an illegal combine, he can recover his damages. These statutes are highly salutary and remedial in their purpose, and are not to be destroyed or repealed by a strict or hostile construction. State v. Oil Co., 218 Mo. 359, 384, 460; State ex inf. v. Ins. Co., [\[\*\*\*10\] 152 Mo. 43](#); State ex inf. v. Oil Co., 194 Mo. 148; State ex inf. v. Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356. All who are engaged in trade must be embraced in these antitrust laws, otherwise they are void as discriminatory and invading the equal protection of the law provisions of the Federal Constitution. The first Illinois antitrust law was declared void because it exempted "live stock while in the hands of the raiser." Connolly v. Pipe Co., 184 U.S. 554.

Judges: WOODSON, J. Brown, Bond and Walker, JJ., concur; Graves and Faris, JJ., concur in result; Lamm, C. J., dissents.

Opinion by: WOODSON

Opinion

---

[*331] [**934] In Banc

WOODSON, J. -- The plaintiff instituted this suit November 5, 1907, in the circuit court of Jackson county against the defendants, to recover $ 96,000, actual and treble damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of a pool, trust, combination and agreement made and entered into by and between them and others, to destroy the plaintiff's business -- live stock commission business -- at Kansas City, Missouri, in violation of the statutes hereinafter mentioned.

A trial was had which resulted in a [**935] verdict of $ 19,500, in favor of the plaintiff, and under the statute [***11] the court trebled that sum and rendered judgment for the plaintiff and against the defendants for the sum of $ 57,500.

This suit is novel, in that it differs from all others growing out of pools, trusts and combines, with which I am familiar, and is a fight between agents or the so-called middle men, and not between the State or her officers against manufacturers and carriers or financial or industrial institutions for conspiring to control commerce, prices, etc., except in an incidental manner, if at all, which will be presently stated, coupled with the earnest insistence of counsel for defendants that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendants, and these facts necessitate a reproduction of it here, formal parts being omitted:

[*332] PETITION.

"Plaintiff states that it is, and at all the times hereinafter mentioned, was a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Colorado, and duly authorized and licensed to do business in the State of Missouri.

"That at all such times the plaintiff was and still is empowered and authorized to carry on, and actually engaged in, the business of a live stock commission [***12] merchant, buying and selling cattle, hogs, sheep and live stock of all kinds, on commission, for its patrons and customers, at the Kansas City stockyards, in Kansas City, Jackson county, Missouri; and that the defendants and others are and were at all such times traders and speculators engaged in buying and selling cattle, hogs, sheep and other live stock, and especially live stock known as 'stockers' and 'feeders' hereinafter mentioned, at said stockyards, and were and are members of a voluntary association known as the Traders Live Stock Exchange.

"The Kansas City Stockyards Company is and for many years has been a corporation owning and conducting said stockyards at said Kansas City, for the purpose of affording a market for the buying and selling of live stock produced in the State of Missouri, and other States and Territories; and that by its charter said company is required to keep said market open and free for the use of all persons and corporations desiring to trade thereat, and for that purpose it has at all times owned and maintained large yards and pens, together with the necessary driveways, troughs, buildings and equipment for the care, handling and sale of such live [***13] stock.

"That at all such times and at the present time large numbers of cattle, hogs, sheep and other live stock have been and are daily shipped and transported from said State of Missouri, and other States and Territories [*333] to said Kansas City stockyards, and are bought and sold upon said market. That said market is the second largest live stock market in the United States.

"That the live stock so sold upon said market is divided into two general classes; fat stock, or stock fit to be slaughtered, which is nearly all purchased by the packers and order buyers (said order buyers being persons who purchase such stock on orders for dealers at other localities), and 'stockers' or 'feeders,' which, for the most part, consist of cattle not fitted or ready for slaughter, and which are bought at said market by the defendants and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange, who, as aforesaid, are and were traders and speculators upon said market, and who, in turn, resell the same to farmers and cattle feeders, to be taken to the country to be fed and fattened, and ultimately returned to the market as fat cattle, to be sold for slaughter.

"That a greater number of such stockers [***14] and feeders are and have, for many years past, been bought and sold in said Kansas City stockyards than at any other market in the United States; and that such stockers and feeders constitute a very large part of the cattle received at said market, more than seven hundred thousand such stockers and feeders being annually received and sold thereat.

"That besides the plaintiff, there are and at all such times were a large number of other persons and corporations doing business at said Kansas City stockyards, as live stock commission merchants, all, or practically all, of whom, except the plaintiff, are and were at all such times members of a voluntary association known as the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange. That the plaintiff never was a member of said association, and during the times herein mentioned has been the only commission merchant doing business at said stockyards not a member of said Kansas City Live Stock Exchange. That at all such times the plaintiff has [*334] charged less commissions for buying and selling cattle, hogs, sheep and other live stock for its patrons and customers, than were charged and collected for buying and selling such live stock by the other commission [***15] merchants at said stockyards, who, as aforesaid, were and are all members of said Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, and that plaintiff has sold large numbers of fat cattle for its patrons and customers.

"That at all times herein mentioned the plaintiff has had and still has a very large number of patrons and customers, raisers and feeders of live stock, who were and are desirous of buying and selling their stockers and feeders through the plaintiff, as such commission merchant, and would have done so and would do so now but for the combination and conspiracy against the plaintiff entered into and maintained by the defendants, as hereinafter stated.

"Plaintiff states that it commenced its said business as a commission merchant at said stockyards on the first day of September, 1906, and ever since said time has been and still is engaged in such business at said stockyards, as hereinbefore stated.

"Plaintiff further states that at the time of and immediately before the date of the commencement of business by the plaintiff, the defendants, as such traders and speculators, buyers and sellers, of live stock, and especially of stockers and feeders at said stockyards in Kansas City, Jackson [***16] county, Missouri, created, entered into and became members of and participated in a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding among and between themselves and each other and between themselves and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange, in restraint of trade and competition in the importation, transportation, purchase and sale of such stockers and feeders at said Kansas City stockyards, in this State, by agreeing among and between themselves and with each other, and between themselves [*335] and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange and the members of said Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, to refuse to buy from or sell to any of the plaintiff's patrons or customers through the plaintiff as such commission merchant, any such stockers and feeders at said stockyards, and in pursuance of such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding, have ever since then refused and still refuse to so buy or sell through the plaintiff, any such stockers or feeders at said Kansas City stockyards.

"Plaintiff further states that at the time and immediately before the date of the commencement of business by the plaintiff, the [***17] defendants as such traders and speculators, buyers and sellers of live stock, and especially of stockers and feeders at said stockyards in Kansas City, Jackson county, Missouri, created, entered into and became members of and participated in a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding among and between themselves and with each other, and between [**936] themselves and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange and the members of said Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, to regulate, control and fix the price of such stockers and feeders, so bought and sold at said Kansas City stockyards, by agreeing among and between themselves and with each other, and between themselves and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange, and the members of said Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, not to buy from or sell to any of the patrons or customers of the plaintiff through the plaintiff as such commission merchant, any such stockers or feeders, and ever since then, in pursuance of such unlawful combination and understanding, refusing, and still refusing to so sell to or buy from the patrons or customers of the plaintiff any such stockers or feeders at said Kansas [***18] City stockyards.

[*336] "And plaintiff states that at the time and immediately before the date of the commencement of business by the plaintiff, the defendants, and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange, as such traders and speculators, buyers and sellers of live stock, and especially of stockers and feeders, at said stockyards in Kansas City, Jackson county, Missouri, created, entered into and became members of and participated in a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association and understanding to control and limit the trade in such stockers and feeders and to limit competition in such trade by refusing to buy from or sell to any of the patrons or customers of the plaintiff through the plaintiff as such commission merchant, any such stockers and feeders, for the reason that plaintiff was not a member of or party to such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association and understanding, and boycotted and threatened and ever since then have boycotted and threatened, and still boycott and threaten any and all persons from so buying or selling any such stockers or feeders to the plaintiff's patrons or customers through the plaintiff [***19] as such commission merchant; and that plaintiff is not and never has been a member of or party to said pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association and understanding in reference to such stockers and feeders aforesaid.

"Plaintiff says that the defendants, ever since the plaintiff commenced business as aforesaid, have maintained and continued and still maintain and continue such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association and understanding and conspiracy in restraint of trade aforesaid. That at all the dates and times herein mentioned, the defendants have entered into, among and between themselves and with each other, and between themselves and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange, and the members of said Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, arrangements, [*337] contracts, agreements, combinations and understandings designed and made with a view to lessen, and which tend to lessen lawful trade and full and free competition in the importation, transportation and sale in this State of such stockers and feeders at said Kansas City stockyards in Kansas City, Jackson county, Missouri, in this, that at the time aforesaid when plaintiff [***20] commenced business, ever since then and still, the defendants, by an arrangement, contract, agreement, combination, understanding and conspiracy in restraint of trade, among and between themselves and with each other and between themselves and other members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange and the members of said Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, at all such times have refused and still refuse to buy from any of the patrons or customers of the plaintiff through the plaintiff, as such commission merchant, any such stockers and feeders, and have at all such times refused and still refuse to sell to any of the customers or patrons of plaintiff, through the plaintiff as such commission merchant, any such stockers or feeders.

"Plaintiff further states that defendants, and said other traders and speculators at said stockyards, also bought and sold thereat, large numbers of cows, calves and other live stock, and that all the above agreements, combinations, pools, trusts, arrangements, conspiracies and acts of defendants and others, hereinbefore set forth, against the plaintiff and its customers and patrons, also related to, embraced and included cows, calves, and all other live stock so [***21] dealt in by said defendants and other traders and speculators, as well as stockers and feeders as hereinbefore set forth.

"And plaintiff states that by reason of the unlawful and illegal acts and conspiracies of the defendants, aforesaid, the plaintiff has been wholly prevented from buying or selling or doing any business as such commission [*338] merchant, in such stockers and feeders, cows, calves and other live stock bought and sold and dealt in by the defendants and said other traders and speculators and members of said Traders Live Stock Exchange, at said stockyards, as aforesaid, and is still so prevented and disabled from doing any such business. That but for the said unlawful acts and conspiracies of the defendants, as aforesaid, the plaintiff, owing to its large number of patrons and customers, would have done a large business at said stockyards in buying and selling such stockers and feeders, cows, calves and other live stock on commission, from which it would have realized a profit of twenty thousand dollars in the aggregate, from the date when it commenced business as aforesaid up to the date of the filing of the petition herein.

"Plaintiff states that before it [***22] commenced business as aforesaid, as such commission merchant, Blanchard & Ehrke and Burnside-Jardon Company were and for a long time had been engaged in the live-stock commission business at said stockyards, and had a large number of customers and patrons, for whom said commission merchants did a large business, in handling such stockers, feeders, cows, calves and other live stock dealt in by the defendants and said other traders and speculators; that for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to start its said business with a large number of customers for the class of live stock last above mentioned, at great expense, it purchased from said Blanchard & Ehrke and said Burnside-Jardon Company, their said live-stock commission business, including the good will and patronage thereof, and also entered into contracts, employing agents and salesman for the purpose of carrying on said business, and paid out large sums of money as salaries to such agents and salesmen, in endeavoring to carry on said business, but that plaintiff was wholly unable to do any such business whatever, on account of the unlawful and illegal acts [*339] and conspiracies of the defendants, as aforesaid, and was [***23] obliged, at great cost and expense to itself, to cancel said contracts of employment; by reason of all of which the plaintiff was damaged and actually lost the sum of twelve thousand dollars.

"Plaintiff further states that the defendants, at the time they entered into the unlawful trusts, agreements, combinations and conspiracies hereinbefore set forth, knew that the necessary inevitable result thereof, and of their acts aforesaid, in pursuance thereof, would be to prevent the plaintiff from deriving the profits aforesaid, and to cause it the actual loss and damage aforesaid.

"That the plaintiff has been injured in its business by the defendants, by reason of the unlawful acts and conspiracies of the defendants aforesaid, and thereby sustained damages in the sum of at least thirty-two thousand dollars.

"Wherefore, plaintiff prays judgment against the defendants for the sum of ninety-six thousand dollars, being three-fold damages sustained by it, for costs of suit, and for reasonable attorneys' fees, all as required and allowed by the statutes in such case made and provided."

ANSWER.

[**937] The answer was:

"First: That the defendants deny each and every allegation in said [***24] petition contained.

"Second: That section 1 of the Laws of 1899 (page 316), being section 8978, Revised Statutes 1899, and section 4 of said act being section 8981, Revised Statutes 1899, are unconstitutional in that, said enactment (a) violates section 28 of article 4 of the Constitution of Missouri, by containing more than one subject, and by failing to express in the title of said act, as being within the object and scope thereof, a private personal right of action in damages for its violation; [*340] and (b) in so far as said act and each section thereof undertakes to prohibit and make unlawful a refusal to buy from, sell to or deal with any person or corporation for any reason whatever or for the reason stated in said act, it is unconstitutional and in violation of section 30 of article 2 of the Constitution of Missouri, and Amendment Fourteen of the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives persons of liberty and property without due process of law; and (c) said act violates said provisions of the Constitution of the State of Missouri and of the United States by depriving persons of liberty and property without due process of law, in so far as said act undertakes [***25] to prohibit and make unlawful any agreement between two or more persons to refrain from or refuse to do business with any other person for any reason or for the reason mentioned in said act.

"Third: The act of March 19, 1907 (Laws 1907, page 377), is unconstitutional in that:

(a) Its title contains more than one subject in violation of section 28 of article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Missouri:

(b) It violates section 30 of article 2 of the Constitution of Missouri, and Amendment Fourteen of the Constitution of the United States, in so far as it undertakes to make unlawful an agreement between two or more persons to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person for the reason mentioned in said act, and in so far as it undertakes to prohibit individuals from separately or together refusing to have dealings with any other persons in the conduct of their individual business it undertakes to deprive them of liberty and property without due process of law within the meaning of the State and Federal Constitutions aforesaid.

"Wherefore, the defendants pray judgment."

I. It is earnestly insisted by counsel for appellants that the petition filed in the cause does not state [***26] [*341] facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against their clients.

This insistence is predicated upon many grounds stated; but from the view we take of the case it will not be necessary to follow counsel through their long and able arguments made in support thereof.

I am satisfied that the statutes under which this suit was brought and prosecuted, do not give the plaintiff a cause of action against the defendants, even though it should be conceded that everything charged in the petition be true.

In passing upon the sufficiency of the petition we must first get a clear conception of the principal facts charged therein before we can intelligently apply the law thereto.

(a) The petition charges that the plaintiff is a corporation organized for the purpose of buying and selling live stock on commission, at the Kansas City Stock Yards; (b) that the Kansas City Stock Yards is a corporation, organized for the purpose of affording a market for buying and selling live stock, and that its charter requires it to keep said market open and free for the use of all persons desiring to trade thereat; (c) that the live stock bought and sold on that market consisted of two classes, [***27] fat stock purchased by packers, and stockers or feeders, which are not fit for slaughter and are sold to feeders, and after being fattened are then sold to the packers; (d) that the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange is a voluntary association, composed of individuals and corporations each engaged in buying and selling in said yards, live stock on commission -- the fat stock to the packers, and the thin or stockers, to the traders, who will be specially noticed later; (e) that the Traders Live Stock Exchange, of Kansas City, was a voluntary association, composed of individuals and corporations, each engaged in buying and selling [*342] live stock of all kinds on their own account. Their principal business, however, was to purchase feeders and stockers, which they then sold to farmers and feeders; (f) that defendants were members of the latter exchange; (g) and the plaintiff, as previously stated, was a commission merchant, or agency pure and simple, engaged in buying and selling live stock of all kinds, for a commission, for its various patrons; but it was not a member of the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange or of the Traders Live Stock Exchange, previously mentioned.

Now, the gravamen [***28] of the plaintiff's charge is, that the defendants, who were traders, as previously mentioned, and members of the Traders Live Stock Exchange, entered into a pool, trust and combination, among themselves, and the other members of the Traders Live Stock Exchange, whereby it was agreed and understood that none of them would buy of or sell to plaintiff, any kind of live stock; also that they would not buy from or sell to any member of the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, who bought or sold live stock to the plaintiff, and thereby forced the plaintiff out of business, to its great damage, etc.

In other words, the plaintiff charges that in violation of an act of the Legislature approved March 19, 1907, Laws 1907, pp. 377 to 382, being same as sections 10298, 10300, 10301, 10305 and 10313, Revised Statutes 1909, defendants entered into a pool, trust and combine, by which they agreed among themselves and with others, that they would not trade with the plaintiff; also by which they agreed not to trade with anyone who did trade with it and thereby drove the plaintiff out of business, to its damage, etc.

Those sections of the statute, in so far as here material, read as follows:

HN1 [↑] "Section 10298. [***29] Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding [*343] with any person or persons in restraint of trade or competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity [**938] in this State or any article or thing bought or sold whatsoever, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and shall be punished as provided in this act.

HN2 [↑] "Section 10300. Any two or more persons engaged in buying or selling any article of commerce, manufacture, mechanism, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing of any class or kind whatsoever, who shall create, enter into, become members of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding to control or limit the trade in any such article or thing, or to limit competition in such trade, by refusing to buy from or sell to any other person any such article or thing aforesaid, for the reason that such other person is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, combination, confederation, [***30] association or understanding, or shall boycott or threaten any person from buying or selling to any other person who is not a member of or a party to such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, association or understanding in such article or thing aforesaid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and punished as provided for in this act.

HN3 [↑] "Section 10301. All arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations or understandings made or entered into between any two or more persons, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, lawful trade, or full and free competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture or sale in this State of any product, commodity or article, . . . and any person or persons creating, entering into, becoming a member of or participating in such arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings [*344] shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and punished as provided for in this act.

HN4 [↑] "Section 10305. Any person injured in his business or property by any other person or persons by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful [***31] by this act may sue therefor in any circuit court of this State in which the defendant or defendants, or any of them, reside, or have any officer, agent or representative, or in which any such defendant or any agent, officer or representative may be found, without regard to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damage by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

"Section 10313. The enactment and taking effect of this law shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture or liability incurred by any corporation or person on account of the violation of any law of this State prior to the taking effect of this act."

In approaching the construction of these statutes two things should be borne in mind: first, what object did the Legislature intend to accomplish by said enactment? and, second, in what manner were the rights of the plaintiff affected by the economy thereof? I say economy, because the rights of the plaintiff, if any, are secondary and incidentally flow from the principal object of the act.

HN5↑ In order to properly appreciate the meaning of all remedial statutes, to which these belong, it is the [***32] duty of the court to investigate and ascertain the evil that existed, which the Legislature intended to abolish by the enactment, as well as the inducements offered and instrumentalities created for the abolition of said evil.

If we look back of the year 1899 (when this class of legislation was first enacted in this State, of which the present statutes are amendatory), which it is our duty to do, it will be seen from the current literature [*345] of the day, and especially in the great daily papers of the country, that those who were engaged in almost all classes of production, manufacture, transportation and financial business, were organizing their respective businesses into pools, trusts and combines, for the purpose of limiting competition, reducing expenses and increasing their profits, with no intention, however, at that time, if I am correctly informed, to restrict commerce or to increase the prices of the necessities of life. But as time passed, the survivors of the new regime, becoming more avaricious and expert in combinations, conceived the idea that, since the law of supply and demand governed both the buying and selling prices of all articles of commerce, they could [***33] respectively extend the pools, trusts and combines, so as to limit not only competition, and lessen expenses, but also limit the supply of practically all of the necessities of life, and thereby increase the demand and correspondingly increase the prices to be paid therefor, by the public. Not only that, but by a system of boycotts, rebates, etc., the "big business" drove the little fellows out of business entirely, and thereby established pools, trusts and monopolies among themselves, and thereby, as previously stated, enabled them to not only limit production and restrain trade, but also to fix and maintain both buying and selling prices of all articles of commerce.

By that cold-blooded, avaricious and narrow business policy which so limited production, stifled trade and increased prices, an outraged and long-suffering public, through its Legislature, in 1907, enacted, among others, the statutes previously set out, for the purpose of destroying said pools, trust and combinations, and thereby restore competition and left the regulation of prices to be governed according to the old law of supply and demand, and to protect the weak against the strong, or the individual against the [***34] combinations.

[*346] I think that this is a true brief history of our legislation upon this subject.

It goes without saying that the plaintiff contends that it belongs to the weak and individual class mentioned, and that the statutes under consideration were intended for its protection, and the punishment of the strong.

Is this contention of plaintiff sound? I think not; for the reasons to be presently stated.

By looking at said section 10298, previously copied, it will be seen that it is leveled at all persons who enter into any pool, trust or combination for the purpose of limiting trade and competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity in this State, etc.

[**939] The plaintiff, as previously stated, was simply a commission merchant or agency, engaged in buying and selling live stock for others, on the Kansas City stockyards, for a commission. The plaintiff neither produced, manufactured, owned or carried any article of commerce, nor was it authorized to so do by its charter. That being true, as stated in the petition, it would be illogical and we would be unwarranted under the language of these statutes to [***35] hold that the pool, trust or combine formed against the plaintiff could in any manner result in "restraint of trade or competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity in this State." This is true for the reason that the plaintiff, as stated, was not engaged in trade, within the meaning of the statute, but was the agent of those who were so engaged, and as such it could not lessen competition, importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity of this State.

The questions of competition in transportation, restraint of trade and the purchase and sale of live stock shipped to Kansas City, are controlled by the transportation [*347] companies, the owners of the stock, and the purchasers thereof, and not by the commission man or sales agent, at Kansas City.

But it might be suggested that the defendants were purchasers within the meaning of the language used. In answer to that suggestion, it is sufficient to state that while they are purchasers, yet it is not stated, nor is it a fact, that the combination charged against them was entered into for the purpose of doing the things prohibited [***36] by the statutes, but that it was formed solely to injure the plaintiff's commission business, and that by reason thereof, it, and not the public, was damaged.

There is no allegation contained in the petition that the unlawful pool, trust and combination formed by the defendants and other members of the Traders Exchange was formed for the purpose of doing injury to the plaintiff's patrons or customers, or to damage any other stock raiser, shipper, buyer or seller, but the charge is that they simply agreed among themselves not to buy or sell live stock through the plaintiff as a commission merchant.

For these reasons the patrons of the plaintiff should be entirely eliminated from the consideration of the case; all references to them but before the legal propositions involved in the case.

There is no pretense that the combination charged against the defendants was intended to or did have any effect upon competition in the transportation of live stock to Kansas City; that it resulted or could in any manner have resulted in the restraint of trade, or was intended to or could have fixed or maintained prices within the meaning of the antitrust statutes; but as charged in the petition, was [***37] entered into for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff in its business as a commission merchant.

But independent of that, it is common knowledge, which the Legislature knew, as well as all others do, [*348] that the live stock business of Kansas City does not depend upon any one or more commission merchants, but upon the broad territories of rich land in the center of which that city is located -- blessed with copious rainfalls and deep floods of warm sunshine, producing the finest quality and greatest quantity of grain and grass that grow upon God's footstool, the food of man and beast. Recognizing these natural conditions favorable to a great live stock market, the Legislature enacted the laws in question for the use and benefit of the public, and not for the benefit of the commission men who sell the stock on the market.

That being true, and the further fact appearing from the petition that the plaintiff is not a member of the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, and not a member of or eligible to membership in the Traders Exchange, and having no authority under its charter to purchase or sell live stock on its own account, but upon commission only, I see no legal objection to [***38] the right of the defendants, individually or collectively, to determine with whom they will or will not deal, so long as that agreement does not limit commerce or control prices.

I am now speaking of the plaintiff's rights and duties under the statutes, and not at common law, which I presume would afford redress for a wrong of this character if proven to the satisfaction of the jury.

If I correctly understand the meaning of the petition, the right of recovery is not predicated solely upon the facts that the conspiracy charged to have been made and entered into by and between the defendants and the members of the Traders Exchange, would entitle it to a recovery, if it were not for the further fact charged, that some agreement and the enforcement thereof not only damaged the plaintiff, but that it also, in a degree, destroyed competition in the live stock business at Kansas City, and tended to fix and maintain prices. That is to say, there being at the time [*349] complained of, say two hundred live stock commission merchants in Kansas City and the plaintiff being one of them, then the unlawful conspiracy of the defendants against the plaintiff thereby destroyed competition in [***39] that business to the extent of one two-hundredths part thereof, by forcing it, one of the sales' competitors, out of the market.

I must confess that this is a novel proposition and probably would be more forceful had the plaintiff been engaged in the buying and selling of live stock upon its own account and not for others upon commission, as the petition charges. Should such an agreement be carried into execution it would reduce the number of commission merchants in Kansas City from two hundred to one hundred and ninety-nine, but would that in any manner result in restraint of trade in the [**940] live stock business or tend to increase the prices to be paid therefor upon that market?

A commission merchant, as such, neither produces nor ships live stock to any market, but his business is, as charged in the petition, confined to selling live stock to packers, order men and traders, raised and shipped to market by third parties. In other words, the commission man is simply an agent engaged in the business of selling one man's cattle to another for an agreed or a reasonable fee. That being unquestionably true, then can it be said that this petition charges or could truthfully charge [***40] that the live stock owner, the packer, trader or the consuming public was or could be damaged by the agreement complained of in this case?

It seems to me that the most damaging conclusion that could be drawn from the statements is that by forcing the plaintiff from the Kansas City market, the number and possibly the efficiency of the sales' agencies of the market were diminished to that extent; but can it be declared as a matter of law that the natural result of that diminution of agency would necessarily [*350] lessen competition or increase the price of live stock in Kansas City, within the meaning of the statutes? I think not. No authority is cited in support of or against this proposition, and I have been unable to find any bearing upon the subject.

In order to accomplish such an effect under the statutes, if possible, which I deny, the petition should have charged and the evidence should have shown that by thus driving plaintiff out of business, the selling agencies of live stock on the Kansas City stockyards were so diminished and impaired that they were unable to handle the live stock consigned to that market, and that by reason thereof the market became glutted and the [***41] demands of the public could not be supplied, although there was a superfluity of live stock on the market for sale.

In construing these statutes, can it be seriously contended that the Legislature, when enacting them, had in mind this remote, if possible, condition of affairs, which had never existed and in all probabilities never will? This is one of the instances where the asking of the question answers it in the negative.

But by way of illustration: Suppose some member of this court and I had been trading with The Peck Dry Goods Company of Kansas City; that this afternoon we should step into that store and request one of the clerks therein to show us certain articles of merchandise; that in response thereto the clerk should say to us he would not do so because he considered us undesirable customers; that thereupon we should walk out of the store and agree between ourselves not to trade with The Peck Dry Goods Company any more, through that clerk; and that we should notify said company of that fact, could it be seriously contended that our said agreement would be a violation of the antitrust statutes of this State and that we would be liable to Peck & Company for treble [***42] damages or for any other kind of damages for that matter? I think, clearly, not; [*351] and that being unquestionably true, then how can it be logically said that the defendants in this case are liable to the plaintiff, the commission man or sales' agent of the stock growers mentioned in this case? There is not one whit of difference in principle between the two cases. Neither could or would interfere in the remotest degree with commerce, tend to stifle trade, create a monopoly or to fix or maintain prices. It might damage the individual commission man or sales' agent, but no one else.

Entertaining these views of the petition and the statutes upon which it is bottomed, I am clearly of the opinion that no cause of action is stated against the defendants.

The judgment of the circuit court is, therefore, reversed and the cause remanded.

PER CURIAM. -- The foregoing opinion of Woodson, J., written in division, with the illustration added near the end thereof, is adopted as the views of the Court in Banc.

260 Mo. 324, *351A68 S.W. 934, **940A914 Mo. LEXIS 120, ***42

The judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded.

Brown, Bond and Walker, JJ., concur; Graves and Faris, JJ., concur in result; Lamm, C. J., dissents. [***43]

---

End of Document

State ex rel. Moose v. Frank

Supreme Court of Arkansas

July 13, 1914, Opinion Delivered

No Number in Original

Reporter

114 Ark. 47 *; 169 S.W. 333 **; 1914 Ark. LEXIS 578 ***

STATE ex. rel. WM. L. MOOSE, ATTORNEY GENERAL, v. FRANK.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from Pulaski Circuit Court, Third Division; G. W. Hendricks, Judge; affirmed.

STATEMENT BY THE COURT.

The complaint in this cause alleged that appellees were engaged in the laundering business in the city of Little Rock, some of the appellees being corporations, others being a copartnership and still others the individual business of the proprietors of the defendant laundries mentioned in the complaint. It was alleged in the complaint that appellees, in violation of the anti-trust law, have agreed with each other to fix prices to be charged their customers and that they carried on their business under said agreement, the effect of the agreement being to stifle competition and increase the prices of laundering. The second paragraph of the complaint alleged that the appellees, for the purpose of driving out competition in the city of Malvern, in this State, had unlawfully combined with each other to do laundering for the people of that city at prices less than those charged the people of Little Rock and other places. A large sum of money was demanded in each paragraph of the complaint as a penalty, against appellees, because of their alleged unlawful combination.

Separate [***2] demurrers were filed for appellees, and among other grounds of demurster the act of the General Assembly of this State, under which the proceeding was brought, was attacked as unconstitutional; and in all the demurrers it was alleged that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The circuit court held that the complaint did not state a cause of action and sustained the demurster and the State has prosecuted this appeal from that judgment of the court.

The suit was instituted under the authority of section 1 of the anti-trust act passed at the 1905 session of the General Assembly of this State (Acts 1905, page 1), as amended by Act No. 161 of the Acts of 1913. Section 1 of the act of 1905 reads as follows:

"Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State, or country, and transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State, or any partnership or individual, or other association or persons whatsoever, who are now, or who shall hereafter, create, enter into, become a member of, or a party to, any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding, whether the same is made in this State or elsewhere, [***3] with any other corporation, partnership, individual, or any other person or association of persons, to regulate or fix either in this State or elsewhere the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or tornado, or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed, or who are now, or shall hereafter enter into, become a member of, or a party to any pool, agreement, contract, combination, association or confederation, whether made in this State or elsewhere, to fix or limit in this State or elsewhere, the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, storm, cyclone, tornado, or any other kind of policy issued by any corporation, partnership, individual or association of persons aforesaid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud and be subject [***4] to the penalties as provided by this act."

Disposition: Judgment affirmed.

Core Terms

---

manufacture, commodity, price fixing, anti-trust, laundry, repair, laundering, article of merchandise, convenience, merchandise, words

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN1 Legislation, Interpretation

When general words follow an enumeration of particular things, such words must be held to include only such things or objects as are of the same kind as those specifically enumerated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN2 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In construing Arkansas's antitrust act, the court must bear in mind that it is highly penal, and as such must receive a strict construction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

A study of its terms makes the fact plain that the legislature has not included within the inhibition of Arkansas's antitrust act agreements relating to the price of labor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In the context of determining whether a laundry is violating an antitrust act, it has been uniformly held that a laundry is not a manufacturing establishment. In the common understanding, the function of a laundry is to make clothes clean, rather than to make clean clothes. A laundry's principal business is washing and ironing, and in carrying on the business it needs soaps and dyes. Even if a laundry does manufacture these two articles for its own use, instead of buying them, such manufacture does not make the "washing and ironing" concern a manufacturing plant and business as defined by statute, lexicon or judicial utterance.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Legislation, Interpretation

In the interpretation of criminal statutes different rules apply from those which obtain in civil matters, or where contracts are involved. Nothing is to be added to criminal statutes by intendment, and, as a rule, they are to have a strict construction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In the context of interpreting an antitrust act, the word "commodity" has two significations. In its most comprehensive sense it means convenience, accommodation, benefit, advantage, interest, commodiousness; but the use of the word in this sense is obsolete. The word is ordinarily used in the commercial sense of any movable or tangible thing that is ordinarily produced or used as the subject of barter or sale.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The business of laundering is a mere service done, whether performed by hand or by machinery, and an agreement to regulate the price to be charged therefor is in its last analysis merely an agreement to fix the price of labor, or services, and the legislature of the State of Arkansas has not made such an agreement unlawful.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. MONOPOLIES--UNLAWFUL COMBINATIONS.--An agreement fixing the price for laundering, is not unlawful under section 1, Acts of 1905, p. 1, prohibiting combinations to fix the price of any commodity, convenience or repair.
2. MONOPOLIES--UNLAWFUL COMBINATIONS.--An agreement fixing the price of laundering is not included within the terms "any article or thing whatsoever," as used in section 1, Act 1905, p. 1.
3. STATUTES--PENAL STATUTES--CONSTRUCTION.--Act of 1905, p. 1, § 1, known as the anti-trust act, is highly penal in its nature, and therefore will be strictly construed.

Counsel: Wm. L. Moose, Attorney General, Bradshaw, Rhoton & Helm and E. L. McHaney, for appellant.

1. The act is constitutional. 76 Ark. 303; 81 Id. 519; 212 U.S. 322, L. Ed. 530.
2. Our contention is that the agreement violates the anti-trust act by fixing the price of a "commodity," or an article of "convenience" or "repair." As to the doctrine of ejusdem generis, see 95 Ark. 114. Words are given their obvious and natural meaning. 67 Ark. 566; 71 Id. 561. Words judicially interpreted are presumed to have been used by the

114 Ark. 47, *47 L.A. 69 S.W. 333, **333 L.A. 914 Ark. LEXIS 578, ***4

Legislature in that sense. 84 Ark. 316; 123 Mass. 493; 12 Id. 252; 73 U.S. \(16 Wall.\) 632; 18 L. Ed. 904. A privilege is a commodity. 87 Mass. 428; 134 Mass. 419; 102 Ia. 602; 70 N. W. 107.

Morris M. & Louis M. Cohn, for appellees.

1. A combination to regulate the price of laundering does not come within the terms of the act. 95 Ark. 114; 159 Mo. 410; 81 Am. St. 368; 60 S. W. 91; 51 L. R. A. 151; 215 Mo. 421; 114 S. W. 997; 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607; 23 Id. 1284; 56 Neb. 386; 76 N. W. 900; 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260; 45 Id. 355; 117 Fed. 570; 52 Atl. 326; 62 S. W. 481; 59 S. W. 916.
2. [***5] The act is unconstitutional. 58 Ark. 421; 29 L. R. A. 79; 22 Id. 340; 210 Fed. 173; 165 U.S. 578; 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361; 231 Ill. 340.
3. Laundering is not a "commodity." Cases, supra. 95 Ark. 114; 118 N. W. 276; 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1284; 86 Tex. 250; 22 L. R. A. 483; 24 S. W. 398; 231 U.S. 495-503; 52 Atl. 326.

Judges: SMITH, J.

Opinion by: SMITH

Opinion

---

[*50] [**334] SMITH, J., (after stating the facts). It is conceded by the State that an agreement to fix the price of laundering is not an agreement to fix the price of "any article of manufacture, mechanism or merchandise;" but it is contended that the facts here alleged constitute an agreement to fix the price of a commodity, convenience or repair. And it is not contended by the State that the business of laundering is included in the terms "any article or thing whatsoever." This last contention could not be sustained, because if the business of laundering is not a commodity, convenience or repair, then it would [*51] not be embraced in the words "article or thing whatsoever." Such a construction would be precluded by the decision of this court in the case of State v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 95 Ark. 114. [**6] That case was a proceeding against [**335] that railroad for a violation of the anti-trust act of 1905 for entering into a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, and understanding with certain domestic corporations, all owning and operating certain lines of railroads within the State, for the purpose of fixing rates to be charged for the service of carrying freight and passengers. In the opinion in that case, it was said: "Counsel for the State do not contend that freight or passenger rates are articles of merchandise, manufacture, mechanism, commodity, convenience or repair, or that they are products of mining; but they do contend that the words "or any article or thing whatsoever" include passenger and freight rates. We can not agree with their contention. This is a plain case for the application of the doctrine of ejusdem generis.

"The rule is HN1 [↑] 'when general words follow an enumeration of particular things, such words must be held to include only such things or objects as are of the same kind as those specifically enumerated.' 2 Lewis Sutherland on Statutory Construction (2 ed.), § 422."

(1-2) And it was there further said: "Our 'antitrust act' does not in [**7] express terms attempt to deal with the questions of transportation by railroads or other carriers, or the fixing of rates therefor. It would be a violent presumption, indeed, to say that the Legislature in this vague and indefinite manner attempted to deal with a subject which so vitally affects the welfare of the people, and a proper solution of which has ever been one of the greatest concern and complexity. It seems evident to us that the framers of the act intended that the words 'or any article or thing whatsoever' should take their meaning from the things specifically mentioned before, and that, when so construed, the allegations of the complaint do not constitute a violation of the terms of the act."

[*52] (3) HN2 [↑] In construing this act, we must bear in mind that it is highly penal, and as such must receive a strict construction. Hughes v. State, 6 Ark. 131; Grace v. State, 40 Ark. 97; Stout v. State, 43 Ark. 413.

114 Ark. 47, *521<sup>69</sup> S.W. 333, **335<sup>14</sup> Ark. LEXIS 578, ***7

Discussing the original anti-trust act of the General Assembly of 1899, Mr. Justice RIDDICK, in State v. Lancashire Fire Insurance Co., 66 Ark. 466, 51 S.W. 633, said: "Whatever the [***8] Legislature may have intended, such intention can have no effect unless expressed in the statute; for this, being a penal statute, can not be extended by implication. It would be in the highest degree unjust to punish conduct not clearly forbidden by the law itself."

Nor are we concerned with any consideration of the economic questions involved in this act. HN3↑ A study of its terms makes the fact plain that the Legislature has not included within the inhibition of this act agreements relating to the price of labor.

The question has several times been before the courts of various States as to whether a laundry was a manufacturing establishment or not, and so far as we are advised HN4↑ it has been uniformly held that it is not. In the case of Downing v. Lewis et al., 76 N.W. 900, 56 Neb. 386, it was contended the sale of a laundry and an agreement entered into between the parties with reference thereto violated the anti-trust law of that State which prohibited any combinations or agreements where persons are engaged in the manufacture or sale of any article of commerce or consumption, or for any persons so engaged to enter into any combination or agreement relating to the [***9] price of any article or product of such manufacture, and the court there decided that a laundry was not a manufacturing establishment, and in so deciding that question it was there said: "It seems perfectly plain that a laundry, the business of which is to wash and iron linen, and other articles of wearing apparel and domestic use, which have become soiled in the service for which they were fabricated, is not a manufacturing establishment, within the meaning of the section quoted. In the [*53] common understanding, the function of a laundry is to make clothes clean, rather than to make clean clothes."

In Commonwealth v. Keystone Laundry Co., 203 Pa. 289, 52 A. 326, where a law of the State of Pennsylvania which exempted from taxation so much of the capital stock of a manufacturing corporation as was invested in the carrying on of manufacturing was under construction, a laundry company claimed the exemption of that act. It was held that the laundry company was not a manufacturing company, even though it manufactured soaps and dyes as incidental to its business; the court there used the following language: "Its principal business, as properly stated by the [***10] court below, is washing and ironing, and in carrying on the business it needs soaps and dyes, and even if it does manufacture these two articles for its own use, instead of buying them, such manufacture does not make the 'washing and ironing' concern a manufacturing plant and business as defined by statute, lexicon or judicial utterance."

Other cases to the same effect are Muir v. Samuels, 110 Ky. 605, 62 S.W. 481; In re White Star Laundry Co., 117 F. 570.

In the case of State ex rel. Star Publishing Co. v. The Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 60 S.W. 91, which was a suit by mandamus to compel respondent, a press association, whose business it was to gather news to furnish relator with its service, relator, among other things, claimed that respondent was a member of a combination and monopoly consisting of an association of newspapers organized to fix the price for news service and so coming within the scope of the anti-trust law. The writ was denied, and it was there said: "The business is merely one of personal service; an occupation. Unless there is a 'property' to be 'affected with a public interest,' there is no basis [***11] laid for the fact or charge of a monopoly. (Citing authorities.) * * * There is one remaining point to be considered, and that relates to the antitrust laws. * * * The law on the subject in this State prohibits 'any pool, trust, agreement, combination,' etc., 'to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, [*54] mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair; any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever; or the price or premium to be paid for the insurance of property,' or to fix or limit the production of the things whose price may not be regulated or fixed. Nothing is discoverable in this section which is at all applicable to the business in which respondent is engaged. Whether we apply [**336] to the words of the statute the rule of noscitur a sociis, or that of ejusdem generis, the result must be the same, and there is a special reason why the ruling in this regard should be a strict one, and this is because the statute is highly penal."

The case of Rohlf v. Kasemeier, 140 Iowa 182, 118 N.W. 276, was a prosecution against a number of physicians for entering into an agreement to fix and maintain fees to be [***12] charged for their services. The section of the statute of that State under which the indictment was returned reads as follows: "Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State or county for transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State, or any partnership, association or individual, creating, entering into or becoming a member of, or party to, any pool, trust, agreement, contract, combination, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, association or individual, to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, commodity or merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced or sold in this State, shall be guilty of a conspiracy."

In its opinion the Supreme Court of that State said: "The first point to be decided is, do the acts charged constitute a crime under this section of the Code? It will be noticed that it forbids a combination, agreement or understanding to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or of merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced or sold in this State. The primary inquiry is, Are the charges [***13] of a physician or surgeon for his medical skill or ability an article of merchandise or commodity to be produced or sold in this [*55] State? For appellant it is contended that the word 'commodity' is broad enough to cover the charge made for professional services or skill, and that the trial court was in error in holding to the contrary.

"It must be remembered that the word is found in a criminal statute, and that HN5↑ in the interpretation of such statutes different rules apply from those which obtain in civil matters, or where contracts are involved. Nothing is to be added to such statutes by intendment, and, as a rule, they are to have a strict construction. * * * As already indicated, the word must be taken in connection with the others used in the statute, and it is manifest that the commodity referred to must have been such as could be manufactured, mined, produced or sold in the State, and the price was to be of an article of merchandise or commodity. If the contention of appellant be correct, the statute covers all kinds of personal labor, both skilled and unskilled, under the term 'commodity.' * * *

"The statute before us has nothing to do with commerce; nor does it have [***14] to do with restraint of trade, or commerce, as does the Sherman act. It has to do with pools and trusts organized in this State to fix or regulate the price of any particular commodity or to fix or limit the amount or quality of any article, commodity or merchandise to be produced or sold in the State. Surely, it has no reference to the amount or quality of labor to be produced or sold. Such a construction would be ridiculous. And, if it will not bear that interpretation, it follows that the word 'commodity,' when used with reference to prices, should not be held to include labor. No case has been cited which supports appellant's contention, and we have not been able to find any."

The Supreme Court of Texas, in the case of Queen Insurance Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 24 S.W. 397, defined the word "commodity" as used in the anti-trust law of that State as follows: HN6↑ "The word 'commodity' has two significations. In its most comprehensive sense it means convenience, accommodation, benefit, advantage, interest, [*56] commodiousness; but according to Webster's International Dictionary, the use of the word in this sense is obsolete. Page 286. The word is ordinarily [***15] used in the commercial sense of any movable or tangible thing that is ordinarily produced or used as the subject of barter or sale; and we think this was the meaning intended to be given to it by the Legislature in the statute in question."

If the business of laundering is not a commodity, then an agreement fixing prices for the performance of that service is not within the inhibition of the anti-trust act. No other word or term in that act could include that business. The act does use the word "repair," but it can not be seriously contended that this word is sufficient to embrace the business of laundering. It may be true, that to some extent laundries do repair the clothes which they wash; but it does this as a mere incident to that business; and by such service they merely "repair" the damage which they have done in performing their service of making the clothes clean. HN7↑ The business of laundering is a mere service done, whether performed by hand or by machinery, and an agreement to regulate the price to be charged therefor is in its last analysis merely an agreement to fix the price of labor, or services, and the Legislature of this State has not made such an agreement unlawful. [***16] Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 215 Mo. 421, 114 S.W. 997; Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 252, 92 N.W. 306; State v. Duluth Board of Trade, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1260.

The judgment of the court below sustaining the demurrer is, therefore, affirmed.

McCall Co. v. O'Neil

Court of Common Pleas of Franklin County, Ohio

November 12, 1914, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

25 Ohio Dec. 591 *; 1914 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 49 **; 17 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 17

MCCALL CO. v. PATRICK J. O'NEIL.

Prior History: [**1] AGREED statement of facts.

Core Terms

---

patterns, patentee, purchaser, terms, patent law, prices, illegal contract, patented article, obligations, liquidated damages, public policy, provisions, antitrust, discard, patent, manufacturers, articles, monthly, notice, retail, stock, transportation, thirty-one, amounting, catalogue, commodity, shipment, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

**HN1** [ Defenses, Illegal Bargains

It is a well settled principle of law that courts will not lend their aid to the enforcement of illegal contracts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN2** [ Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Gen. Code § 6391.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

**HN3** [ Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The right to make, use and sell an invented article existed without and before the passage of the patent law. The act secured to the inventor the exclusive right to make, use and vend the thing patented. While the patent law should be fairly and liberally construed to affect the purpose of congress to encourage useful inventions, the rights and privileges which it bestows should not be extended by judicial construction beyond what congress intended. In framing the patent act and defining the rights and privileges of patentees thereunder congress did not use occult phrases, but in simple terms gave the patentee the exclusive right to make, use and vend his invention for a definite term of years, and a patentee may not by notice limit the price at which future retail sales may be made, such articles being in the hands of a retailer by purchase from a jobber who has paid to the agent of the patentee the full price asked for the article sold.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN4 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

When the transfer of a patented article is full and complete, an attempt to reserve the right to fix the price at which it shall be resold by the vendee is futile under the statute. It is not a license for qualified use, but an attempt to unduly extend the right to vend. While the patent law creates to a certain extent a monopoly by the inventor in the patented article, a patentee who has parted with the article patented by passing title to the purchaser has placed the article beyond the limits of the monopoly secured by the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Patentees are not immune by virtue of the patent law from the provisions of the antitrust statute.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

HN6 Defenses, Illegal Bargains

It is undoubtedly true that the mere fact that a vendor may be engaged in a combination in restraint of trade or tending to the establishment of a monopoly will not constitute a defense to a vendee who has purchased an article manufactured and sold by the illegal trust or combination. If the contract of sale is collateral to and in no wise connected with the illegal agreement effecting the unlawful combination or trust, the unlawful character of the combination or trust from which the article is purchased is no defense. The rule is, however, different where the vendor relies upon the illegal contract for recovery.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Illegality

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > General Overview

HN7 Contracts, Sales of Goods

While a voluntary purchaser of goods at stipulated prices under a collateral independent contract cannot avoid payment merely on the ground that a vendor was an illegal combination, a vendee of goods purchased from an illegal combination in pursuance of an illegal agreement can plead such illegality as a defense.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

HN8 Defenses, Illegal Bargains

The court cannot lend its aid in any way to a party seeking to realize the fruits of an illegal contract; and while this may at times result in relieving a purchaser from paying for what he has had, public policy demands that a court deny its aid to carry out illegal contracts, without regard to individual interests or knowledge of the parties.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

HN9 Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

The sole object and purpose of the patent law is to enable a patentee to prevent others from using his patented article without his consent, but that his own right of using the patented article was not enlarged by the patent law. The right of a patentee to the use of his patent was subservient to the paramount claims and interests of society at large, just as the right of any other owner in and to the use of his property is subservient to such paramount rights of the public. The right of property in a patented invention or discovery and a right of property in any other article or thing which is the subject of ownership are the same.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

CONTRACTS--MONOPOLIES.

1. Contract Fixing Price for Resale of Goods Sold Violates State Anti-trust Law.

A contract undertaking to fix the price at which goods sold may be resold by the purchaser, with a provision that for a breach of any of the terms or conditions thereof the other party shall have the right to exercise the option to be relieved from its obligations and to recover the sum therein provided as liquidated damages, is clearly within the inhibition of Sec. 6391 G. C., the anti-trust statute, and is therefore void; hence a court will not lend its aid to a party relying on such a contract and seeking to recover its fruits, notwithstanding the purchaser may, as a consequence, be relieved from paying for goods he has received.

2. Rule applies to Patented Articles.

This rule with reference to contracts in violation of the anti-trust law applies with the same force in cases where the goods so sold are covered by a patent.

Counsel: Watson, Stouffer, Davis & Gearhart, for plaintiff.

Ralph Henney and M. L. Bigger, for defendant.

Judges: BIGGER, J.

Opinion by: BIGGER

Opinion

---

[*591] BIGGER, J.

The action is upon an account. By agreement of the parties a jury was waived and the case is submitted to the court upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"The plaintiff is a corporation and on or about May 13, 1910, it entered into a contract with the Davis Pennell Company, a corporation of Columbus, Ohio, which contract is hereto attached; that said contract continued to be and remained in force as between said parties until about February 13, 1912, when said The Davis Pennell Company, having sold and transferred its business, including its right and interest to and in said contract, to the defendant, said defendant assumed all the obligations of said contract on the part of said The Davis Pennell Company to be performed including a standing credit of $ 100; and the plaintiff consented in writing to the said transfer [*592] of said contract and obligations to defendant. That between February 1, 1912, and December 8, 1912, both dates inclusive, plaintiff sold and delivered to the [**2] defendant under said contract, goods and merchandise of the amount and value of $ 379.25; that during said period defendant paid and was given credit for goods returned in the sum of $ 234.38, leaving a balance unpaid of $ 144.87. That in the month of January, 1913, defendant failed and refused to pay said sum of $ 144.87 and has never since paid the same or any part thereof; that upon defendant's failure to pay said sum, plaintiff exercised what it alleges as its right and option provided in said contract to be released therefrom and all future obligations arising out of the same and gave to defendant two weeks' notice in writing to make said payments and of its intention to exercise its option to be released from the obligations of said contract and of its intention to claim liquidated damages as therein provided; that there then remained an unexpired term of said contract of thirty-one months during which, according to its terms, defendant had agreed to order thirty-one monthly issues of patterns of not less than $ 15, per month, amounting during said term to $ 465; also thirty-one monthly issues of fashion sheets consisting of 13,000 fashion sheets at $ 7.50 per thousand, amounting [**3] to $ 97.50; also thirty-one monthly issues of McCall's large catalogues, consisting of 167 numbers at 17 1-2 cents each, amounting in all to $ 12.53; also thirty-one monthly issues of magazines consisting of 310 numbers at three cents each amounting in all to $ 9.30, making the total amount of goods to be ordered by defendant and delivered by plaintiff for said unexpired term of said contract, the sum of $ 484.33. Plaintiff claims under the provisions of said contract and the exercise of the alleged right of option aforesaid and the giving of said notice, that there then became due and owing to the plaintiff two-thirds of said sum of $ 494.33 or a total of $ 389.55; that no part of said $ 389.55 has been paid; that no part of said $ 144.87 as balance due for merchandise or no part of said $ 100 as a standing credit, has been paid and that plaintiff claims against the defendant $ 634.32, with interest from February 1, 1913.

[*593] It is further stipulated and agreed that the McCall Company have sold all of their goods and their customers have sold all of the goods purchased from the McCall Company at catalogue retail prices, as stipulated and provided in the contract referred [**4] to herein; that defendant, O'Neil, by virtue of the contract herein sued upon could sell the patterns to be purchased under said contract at such uniform catalogue retail prices and at no other price; that the McCall Company has customers selling these patterns in every city of the United States of 10,000 inhabitants or more, at such uniform catalogue prices and at no other price."

The contract attached is as follows:

"Columbus, Ohio, 4-29, 1910.

"The McCall Company,

"New York City, N. Y.

"Please deliver to freight at New York City, addressed to us a stock of McCall Patterns, at the uniform price of seven and one-half cents for each pattern (excepting those retailed for ten cents, the price of which is five cents each), amounting to $ 200 net, including the June issue, to be paid ten days after date of shipment; also ship us each month by cheapest route not exceeding an average of $ 15 per month of your selection of the new monthly patterns, at same prices as above, commencing with July issue; also fashion sheets and other publications in quantities, and at prices specified on the reverse side of this form, during the term of this contract, commencing with June issue.

"We will [**5] re-order at the prices above named, once each week, or oftener, patterns sold, thus keeping patterns on hand as above specified. The patterns are not to be sold for other than catalogue retail prices, and the stock of patterns is to be kept and offered for sale on the first (main) floor. We will send you an inventory of our stock of patterns on hand at your request, not exceeding twice each year.

[*594] "All goods ordered for delivery after the first stock are to be paid for on or before the fifth day of the month succeeding date of shipment; if not then paid, subject to sight draft. All prices quoted are net.

Discarded Patterns.

"All patterns purchased from you under this contract-order that are reported discarded by you semiannually -- January and July--can be returned by us at contract price, in exchange for other patterns at full contract price, at any time within sixty days from the date such discarded patterns are respectively reported by you, provided this contract shall be in force at the time of such return. All patterns returned by us under any such discard report are to be credited to a special account, to be known as our discard exchange account, the credit [**6] to same to continue for a period of six months from the date of such discard report unless this contract shall be sooner terminated; and all patterns ordered by us within such period of six months and while this contract is in force, excepting our monthly standing order, shall be charged to such discard exchange account unless our credit to the same is earlier exhausted.

"If either of us shall intentionally break any of the above terms or conditions of this contract, and refuse or fail, after two weeks' notice in writing given by the other, promptly to perform any of said terms or conditions, then the other of us shall have the right to exercise the option of being released from all future obligations under this contract, and to recover and receive, as liquidated damages and not as a penalty, a sum equal to two-thirds of the agreed charge for all goods the contract provides shall be delivered during the remaining term of the contract after the breach is committed. Failure to require compliance with the strict letter of this contract-order shall not forfeit nor prejudice any right thereunder, not constitute a waiver thereof. Failure to pay for any shipment under this agreement for [**7] three months after the same shall become due and thereafter for two weeks subsequent to notice from you, [*595] in writing, shall be deemed an abandonment and total breach of this contract on our part, and shall entitle you to exercise the option of being released from all future obligations under this contract and to recover, as liquidated damages and not as a penalty, the sum hereinabove agreed to be paid as liquidated damages for any breach of the above terms or conditions of this contract.

"We will not transfer the stock of McCall Patterns from No. 454 E. Long Street without your written consent, and will pay all transportation charges to and from your New York office.

25 Ohio Dec. 591, *595 L 1914 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 49, **7

"We will not sell any other patterns than the McCall Patterns received from you during the term of this contract-order.

"This contract is to remain in force from date, and for five years after first shipment of patterns, and thereafter until the expiration of three months' notice given by either party in writing, subsequent to the expiration of such five years.

"All terms are herein printed or written. Signed in duplicate after being read.

Date 4-29, 1910.

"Purchaser's Signature:

"The Davis Pennell [**8] Co.

"Per Earl J. Pennell Sec., Treas.

Guarantee Against Loss In Patterns.

"It is agreed that at the end of five years and three months from date of first shipment of patterns, provided this contract shall have continued in force so long, the above purchaser may take an invoice of the stock of patterns on hand, purchased under this contract, and if the result of the business shows that the above purchaser has paid us more cash for patterns purchased under this contract than has been received for them, we will, upon demand made by such purchaser and receipt of the patterns in good salable condition at our New York Office within thirty days after the expiration of such five years and three months, pay such loss in cash, provided all terms of this contract have been complied with.

[*596] "The above contract-order is accepted subject to the approval of the home office.

Date 4, 29, 1910.

"THE MCCALL COMPANY,

'By O. L. Travis."

There are some other provisions supplemental to these, but they do not in any way vary or affect the terms of the contract here recited or their legal effect.

Briefs have been submitted in which counsel have discussed at considerable length the [**9] provisions of this contract with reference to what is denominated liquidated damages; the plaintiff contending that the provision therein is really one for liquidated damages, while the defendant's counsel contends that construing the contract as a whole this provision should be held to be only in the nature of a penalty, inserted for the purpose of compelling compliance with the provisions of the contract, and therefore not enforceable.

Counsel for the defendant also presents another question, which is that this contract is one which is contrary to public policy and in contravention of the antitrust law of this state. This question is logically first in order; for if the contract is unenforceable there will be no occasion to consider and determine the other questions presented in argument.

HN1 [↑] It is a well settled principle of law that courts will not lend their aid to the enforcement of illegal contracts. Is this an illegal contract?

Section 6391 G. C. provides that:

HN2 [↑] A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, first, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons for any or all of the following purposes: * * *

"4. To fix at a standard or figure [**10] whereby its price to the public or consumer is in any manner controlled or established, an article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state.

"5. To make, enter into, execute or carry our contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description by which they bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or [*597] transport an article or commodity or an article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of an article, commodity or transportation between themselves and others so as to directly or indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of such article or commodity," etc.

Such combinations are declared to be unlawful, against public policy, and void.

Now, this contract by its terms undertakes to fix the price at which the articles sold shall be re-sold by the purchaser. [**11] The contract then provides that for a breach of any of its terms and conditions the other party should have the right to exercise the option to be released from its obligations and to recover the sum therein provided as liquidated damages.

That such an agreement falls clearly within the inhibition of the antitrust statute seems too clear to admit of any doubt. In its terms the price at which these articles are to be sold to the public is fixed and determined by the agreement, and they are to be sold at that price and at no other price. Clearly, this provision of the contract is unlawful under the statute of this state, contrary to public policy, and void. Unquestionably the plaintiff could not upon the agreed statement of facts call upon the court to enforce this provision of the contract. There is nothing in the agreed statement of facts to show that these articles are patented articles; but counsel for the plaintiff in argument makes the statement that the articles sold to the defendant were in fact patented articles, and asks that the plaintiff may be permitted to show that fact. After careful consideration, however, I have reached the conclusion that even if that were established [**12] it would not change the situation insofar as the right of the plaintiff to recover is concerned. It was long a mooted question as to what extent, if at all, a patentee might by agreement control the price at which the vendee [*598] might resell a patented article. This question was, however, finally settled by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. That court first decided in the case of Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U.S. 339 [28 S. Ct. 722; 52 L. Ed. 1086], that this right did not exist under the copyright statute, but expressly reserved its decision as to whether or not it existed under the patent law. This question was, however, finally presented for decision in the case of Bauer v. O'Donnell, 229 U.S. 1 [33 S. Ct. 616; 57 L. Ed. 1041].

The following is the syllabus in that case:

HN3 [↑] "The right to make, use and sell an invented article existed without and before the passage of the patent law. The act secured to the inventor the exclusive right to make, use and vend the thing patented.

"While the patent law should be fairly and liberally construed to affect the purpose of congress to encourage [**13] useful inventions, the rights and privileges which it bestows should not be extended by judicial construction beyond what congress intended.

"In framing the patent act and defining the rights and privileges of patentees thereunder congress did not use occult phrases, but in simple terms gave the patentee the exclusive right to make, use and vend his invention for a definite term of years, and a patentee may not by notice limit the price at which future retail sales may be made, such articles being in the hands of a retailer by purchase from a jobber who has paid to the agent of the patentee the full price asked for the article sold. * * *

HN4 [↑] "When the transfer of a patented article is full and complete, an attempt to reserve the right to fix the price at which it shall be resold by the vendee is futile under the statute. It is not a license for qualified use, but an attempt to unduly extend the right to vend.

"While the patent law creates to a certain extent a monopoly by the inventor in the patented article, a patentee who has parted with the article patented by passing title to the purchaser has placed the article beyond the limits of the monopoly secured by the act."

[*599] [**14] This decision puts at rest the hitherto mooted question of the right of a patentee to control the price at which the patented article may be sold where it is sold outright to a purchaser, as in the case at bar. It being established, therefore, by this decision that the patent law of the United States does not confer this right upon patentees, it follows that such HN5↑ patentees are not immune by virtue of the patent law from the provisions of the antitrust statute.

As I understand the argument of plaintiff's counsel, it is claimed that even if the court should conclude that this provision of the contract is illegal, that notwithstanding that, since the defendant obtained the goods he should not be permitted to escape payment by reason of this provision of the contract, and that it should have no effect upon the right to recover upon the account here sued upon. But I cannot concur in this view of the effect of this provision; having reached the conclusion that it is unlawful, contrary to public policy and void. HN6↑ It is undoubtedly true that the mere fact that a vendor may be engaged in a combination in restraint of trade or tending to the establishment of a monopoly will not constitute a defense [*15] to a vendee who has purchased an article manufactured and sold by the illegal trust or combination. If the contract of sale is collateral to and in no wise connected with the illegal agreement effecting the unlawful combination or trust, the unlawful character of the combination or trust from which the article is purchased is no defense. The rule is, however, different where the vendor relies upon the illegal contract for recovery, as in this case.

Authorities upon this proposition might be multiplied, at great length, but the principle is nowhere more clearly decided than in the case of Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight, 212 U.S. 227 [29 S. Ct. 280; 53 L. Ed. 486]. This case is in principle a parallel to the one at bar upon this question in as much as it is a suit upon an account for goods sold and delivered, and the court refused its aid to enforce the contract for the purchase price of the goods for the reason that the [*600] contract itself contained provisions which were a violation of the federal antitrust law. The syllabus in that case is as follows:

"Where a number of manufacturers situated in different states engaged in manufacturing [*16] an article sold in different states organize a selling company through which their entire output is sold in accordance with an agreement between themselves to such persons only as enter into a purchasing agreement by which their sales are restricted, the effect is to restrain and monopolize interstate and foreign trade and commerce, and is illegal under the antitrust act of July 2, 1890", C. 647, 26 Stat. 209; and so held in regard to a combination of wall paper manufacturers.

HN7↑ While a voluntary purchaser of goods at stipulated prices under a collateral independent contract cannot avoid payment merely on the ground that a vendor was an illegal combination Connolly v. Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U.S. 540 [22 S. Ct. 431; 46 L. Ed. 679], a vendee of goods purchased from an illegal combination in pursuance of an illegal agreement can plead such illegality as a defense.

HN8↑ The court cannot lend its aid in any way to a party seeking to realize the fruits of an illegal contract; and while this may at times result in relieving a purchaser from paying for what he has had, public policy demands that a court deny its aid to carry out illegal contracts, without regard [*17] to individual interests or knowledge of the parties.

A refusal of judicial aid to enforce illegal contracts tends to reduce such transactions. A case reported in Freeman v. Miller, 21 Ohio Dec. 766 (9 Ohio N.P. (N.S.) 26), decided by Judge Hoffheimer of the superior court of Cincinnati, is an interesting case. Judge Hoffheimer in that case intimates that the rule which he states might be different in the case of patentees; but the case of Bauer v. O'Donnell, supra, was not decided at that time. The only rights which a patentee has in the manufacture and sale of the articles covered by his patent which are different from the rights of other manufacturers and sellers are derived from the patent law. If immunity be not found in the terms of the patent [*601] law, then he is amenable to the provisions of the antitrust law, and can no more enforce such a contract than can any other vendor.

In the case of Bauer v. O'Donnell, supra, Justice Harlan in distinguishing the case of Conolly v. Sewer Pipe Co. supra, from the case at bar, says at page 250:

"The present case is plainly distinguishable from the Conolly case. In that case the defendant [**18] who sought to avoid payment for the goods purchased by him under contract had no connection with the general business or operation of the alleged illegal corporation that sold the goods. He had nothing whatever to do with the formation of that corporation, and could not participate in the profits of its business. His contract was to take certain goods at an agreed price, nothing more, and was not in itself illegal, nor a part of, nor in execution of any general plan or scheme that the law condemns. * * * The case before us is an entirely different one. The Continental Wall Paper Company seeks in legal effect the aid of the court to enforce a contract for the sale and purchase of goods, which it is admitted by the demurrer was in fact and was intended by the parties to be based upon agreements that were and are essential parts of an illegal scheme."

Neither the Supreme Court of the United States nor the Supreme Court of Ohio ever decided that a patentee had a right by virtue of his patent to enter into a contract of this character. On the contrary, the Supreme Court of this state in the early case of Jordan v. Overseers, 4 Ohio 294, decided, as did the Supreme [**19] Court of the United States, that HN9↑ the sole object and purpose of the patent law was to enable a patentee to prevent others from using his patented article without his consent, but that his own right of using the patented article was not enlarged by the patent law. And the court further decided in that case that the right of a patentee to the use of his patent was subservient to the paramount claims and interests of society at large, just as the right of any other owner in and to the use of his property is subservient to such paramount rights of the public. That decision has never been overruled in Ohio; [*602] but on the contrary the same doctrine has been since substantially announced in the cases of State v. Telephone Co. 36 Ohio St. 296 /38 Am. Rep. 583 and Tod v. Wick, 36 Ohio St. 370; the court in the latter case saying that "the right of property in a patented invention or discovery and a right of property in any other article or thing which is the subject of ownership are the same."

The antitrust law of this state had been on the statute books for many years before this contract was entered into, and by the terms of that statute [**20] such contracts were declared to be unlawful in this state, against public policy, and void.

For the reasons stated, I have reached the conclusion that the court cannot lend its aid to the enforcement of this contract. As is said in Wall Paper Co. v. Voight, supra, "The court cannot lend its aid in any way to a party seeking to realize the fruits of an illegal contract; and while this may at times result in relieving a purchaser from paying for what he has had, public policy demands that the court deny its aid to carry out illegal contracts, without regard to individual interests or knowledge of the parties."

An entry may be drawn in accordance with this finding and judgment.

Guyton v. Eastern Electric Co.

Supreme Court of Ohio

November 24, 1914, Decided

No. 13916

Reporter

91 Ohio St. 106 *; 110 N.E. 189 **; 1914 Ohio LEXIS 169 ***

GUYTON v. THE EASTERN ELECTRIC CO.

Prior History: [***1] ERROR to the Circuit Court of Montgomery county.

Disposition: Judgment reversed.

Core Terms

---

unlawful combination, damages, lamps, cause of action, set-off, counterclaim, anti-trust, parties, appears, claim for damages, plaintiff's claim, injured person, heavy loss, four year, cross-petition, allegations, provisions, connected, entailing, pleaded, twofold, reside, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

HN1[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Under the Valentine Anti-Trust Law, Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 6391 et seq., damages are allowed to a person injured in his business or property by reason of an unlawful combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 6397.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN3[] Pleadings, Crossclaims

See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 11317.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

HN4 Pleadings, Crossclaims

See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 11319.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Unlawful combinations -- Action under Section 6391, General Code -- Counterclaim or set-off by defendant -- Under Section 6397, General Code -- Valentine anti-trust law.

Syllabus

---

[*106] In an action on an account by a member of an unlawful combination under Section 6391, General Code, for goods sold the price of which is advanced as a result of the unlawful combination, a defendant injured in his business by reason of the advance in price of the goods purchased by him from such member, may set up by way of counterclaim or set-off the damages allowed by Section 6397, General Code.

Defendant in error filed a petition in the court of common pleas of Montgomery county asking judgment against the plaintiff in error in the sum of $ 189.99 on an account for lamps furnished plaintiff in error by defendant in error.

In the first defense in the amended answer and cross-petition of plaintiff in error, by way of crosspetition, it was alleged that defendant in error, during the time covered by the items in the account attached to the petition and for a long time prior thereto, was a member of a combination of manufacturers of electric lamps operated under the name and style of The National Electric Lamp Association, and that the association as constituted by [*107] defendant in error and others was a combination formed for the purpose of fixing at an enhanced figure the price of electric lamps as manufactured by the members of said combination among themselves by which dealers and consumers of said lamps should be compelled to purchase the same at such enhanced price and to destroy as between the members of said association all competition in price; that said association, since its formation by defendant in error and others, [***2] has so far advanced and maintained the price of lamps and has effected and perfected a monopoly of the sale and distribution of the same; that as a result of such combination the price of lamps to plaintiff in error and other consumers thereof was advanced to the extent of twenty-five per cent., and for a term of four years prior to the filing of said amended answer and cross-petition plaintiff in error had been compelled to purchase of the defendant in error lamps for his trade at such advanced figure, entailing upon plaintiff in error a heavy loss in trade and profit on account thereof; and that during said period plaintiff in error had purchased of defendant in error lamps at a cost aggregating approximately $ 541.98, of which one-fifth, $ 108.39 in cost, was due to the illegal combination and which was a damage to plaintiff in error.

It was further alleged that, in accordance with the act of the general assembly of the state of Ohio of April 19, 1898, recorded in volume 93, Ohio Laws, at page 146 (Section 6397, General Code), he was entitled to twofold the amount of damage sustained by him by reason of the premises.

[*108] Plaintiff in error further averred that there was nothing due [***3] to defendant in error on the claim sued on and that he was entitled to recover from defendant in error damages in the sum of $ 17.78.

In the third defense of the answer, by way of cross-petition, plaintiff in error adopted all the allegations of the first defense and averred further that the account sued upon in the petition was for a portion of the lamps purchased by plaintiff of the defendant subsequently to the advance in price due to said illegal combination. There was a prayer for judgment against the defendant in error in the sum of $ 17.78.

To these two defenses, as well as to a second defense, a demurrer was filed by defendant in error upon the ground that facts sufficient to constitute a defense were not stated therein. This demurrer was sustained to each of the three defenses and cross-petition, and plaintiff in error not desiring to amend or plead further judgment was rendered against him in the sum of $ 203.08, with interest from May 28, 1912, together with costs.

Error was prosecuted to the circuit court and the judgment of the court of common pleas affirmed.

Plaintiff in error makes no objection to the sustaining of the demurrer to the second defense, but asks for [***4] a reversal of the judgment of the circuit court upon the ground that that court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the first and third defenses and cross-petition.

Counsel: Mr. Lee Warren James, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. VanDeman, Burkhart & Smith, for defendant in error.

Judges: NEWMAN, J. NICHOLS, C. J., SHAUCK, JOHNSON, DONAHUE, WANAMAKER and WILKIN, JJ., concur.

Opinion by: NEWMAN

Opinion

---

[*109] [**189] It appears from the allegations of the amended answer and cross-petition that defendant in error was a member of an unlawful combination, as defined by Section 6391 [***5] et seq., General Code, known as the Valentine anti-trust law. No claim is made here that plaintiff in error can avoid payment of the account sued on upon the ground that defendant in error was a member of this unlawful combination, although this point was made in the lower courts. It is insisted, however, that plaintiff in error may set up by way of counterclaim the damages he sustained [**190] in the purchase of the lamps mentioned in the account sued on by reason of this unlawful combination and, by way of set-off, the damages he sustained during the four years in which he dealt with defendant in error.

HN1 Under the Valentine anti-trust law damages are allowed to a person injured in his business or property by reason of an unlawful combination, Section 6397 providing: HN2 "In addition to the civil and criminal penalties provided in this chapter, the person injured in his business or property by another person, or by a corporation, association or partnership, by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful in this chapter, may sue therefor in any court having jurisdiction thereof in the county where the defendant or his agent resides or is [*110] found, or where [***6] service may be obtained, without respect to the amount in controversy, and recover twofold the damages sustained by him and his costs of suit. When it appears to the court, before which a proceeding under this chapter is pending, that the ends of justice require other parties to be brought before such court, the court may cause them to be made parties defendant and summoned whether they reside in the county where such action is pending, or not."

The contention of counsel for defendant in error is that the action which this statute authorizes must be a direct one.

It appears from the answer and cross-petition that plaintiff in error was compelled to purchase from defendant in error, a member of the unlawful combination, lamps for his trade at an advanced figure, entailing upon him a heavy loss in trade and profit on account thereof, and that the account sued on is for a portion of the lamps so purchased by him, and a claim is made for damages under the provisions of the Valentine anti-trust law.

HN3 [↑] The question presented, then, is whether such a claim for damages is a counterclaim under Section 11317, General Code, where it is defined to be "a cause of action existing in favor of a [***7] defendant against a plaintiff or another defendant, or both, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the petition as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action."

[*111] The account sued on was for lamps purchased at the advanced price fixed by the unlawful combination. The sale of these lamps at this price gave rise to a cause of action in favor of plaintiff in error and was referable to the transaction had between the parties when the sale was made, and, in the language used in Section 11317, it was "connected with the subject of the action." As we view it, the claim of plaintiff in error answers the statutory requirement of a counterclaim and it was error to sustain the demurrer to the third defense.

As to the first defense, in which plaintiff in error alleges the existence of the unlawful combination -- that by reason thereof the price of lamps to him was advanced and for a term of four years prior to the bringing of the action he was compelled to purchase of defendant in error lamps for his trade at such advanced figure, entailing upon him a heavy loss [***8] in trade and profit on account thereof, and that under the provisions of the Valentine antitrust law he is entitled to twofold damages -- the court of common pleas took the view that this claim for damages was upon a liability created by statute and therefore could not be pleaded as a set-off under Section 11319, General Code, which is as follows: HN4 [↑] "A set-off is a cause of action existing in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising on contract or ascertained by the decision of a court. It can be pleaded only in an action founded on contract."

The action of defendant in error, being one on a book account, was founded on contract. It is true [*112] that the liability of defendant in error to pay damages is fixed by Section 6397, supra, but the cause of action in favor of plaintiff in error grows out of his contract of purchase. Had there been no contractual relation between these parties no cause of action would have arisen in favor of defendant in error. This being true, plaintiff in error had the right to plead this cause of action as a set-off to the claim of defendant in error.

In the cases of [***9] Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U.S., 540, and Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight, 212 U.S., 228, to which our attention is called, the question we are considering in the present case was not decided. The Ohio statutes relating to counterclaims and set-offs were not before the court in the two federal cases, and the part of the opinion of the court in the Connolly case quoted and relied on by counsel for defendant in error is, therefore, not in point.

Judgment reversed.

United States v. Rockefeller

District Court, S.D. New York

April 16, 1915

No Number in Original

Reporter

222 F. 534 *; 1915 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1539 **

UNITED STATES v. ROCKEFELLER et al.

Core Terms

---

railroad company, stock, acquire

Opinion by: [**1] HUNT

Opinion

---

[*534] HUNT, Circuit Judge. The several applications made by the defendants Baker, Milligan, Maxwell, Cuyler, and Vail for a severance are granted. None of the five moving defendants was a director of the New Haven Company prior to May 22, 1908. Defendant Baker was elected a director on February 11, 1910. Defendant Cuyler was elected on October 26, 1910, and defendants Vail, Maxwell, and Milligan on May 18, 1911.

It appears that upon May 22, 1908, the Attorney General of the United States filed a bill in the United States Circuit Court in Massachusetts against the New Haven Company and others, charging violations of the Anti-Trust Law of the United States, and that on June 26, 1909, by direction of the Attorney General, the above referred to suit was discontinued. On June 25, 1909, the Senate of the United [*535] States passed a resolution, and on the same day the Attorney General made a reply thereto. Copies of such resolution and the reply thereto are referred to by counsel who have presented these motions. The substance of the resolution of the Senate was a direction that the Attorney General inform the Senate whether the legal proceedings against [**2] the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company and the Boston & Maine Railroad Company for violation of the Anti-Trust Law had been dismissed, and, if any statement had been given out by the Attorney General, that he attach a copy of such statement to his reply to the resolution, and to inform the Senate when such proceedings were begun and instituted. The Attorney General, under date of June 25, 1909, replied that he had directed the United States Attorney for the district of Massachusetts to dismiss the legal proceeding brought by the United States against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company and the Boston & Maine Railroad Company for violation of the Anti-Trust Law and that he had given out a statement touching the matter, copy of which statement he inclosed with his communication to the Senate. He advised the Senate that the proceedings were begun by the filing of a bill in equity in the Circuit Court for the District of Massachusetts on May 22, 1908.

The copy of statement which accompanied the letter of the Attorney General was dated June 24, 1909. It referred to an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts just theretofore approved, creating the Boston [**3] & Maine Railroad Holding Company, and giving authority to the new corporation to acquire and hold the stock and bonds of the Boston & Maine Railroad Company, and authorizing any railroad corporation theretofore incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts to acquire and hold the stock and bonds of the Boston Holding Company. Further substance of the statement was that the purpose and effect of the Massachusetts statute, as publicly announced and contemplated by its terms, was to authorize the consolidation of the Boston & Maine and New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company by the Boston Holding Company first acquiring control of the Boston & Maine Railroad Company, and then by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Company acquiring the control of the Boston Holding Company; that the Massachusetts statute also provided that the stock of the Boston & Maine to be acquired by the Holding Company should not afterwards be sold without express authority from the Legislature; that the stock of the Holding Company, if acquired by the New Haven road, should not be sold without authority of the Legislature; that the commonwealth of Massachusetts might, by legislative action, upon one year's [**4] notice, take for its own use, by purchase or otherwise, all the stock and bonds of the Holding Company upon certain terms designed to protect creditors and secure just compensation, the whole plan and purpose being to promote the consolidation of the Boston & Maine with the New Haven Company and to provide for their operation hereafter under one management, with safeguards to protect the interests of the people of Massachusetts; that in view of the fact that the suit of the government then pending against the New Haven and the Boston & Maine Companies for violation of the Anti-Trust Act rested almost [*536] entirely upon a claim that those companies had already consolidated by means of stock ownership, and since the state of Massachusetts was most directly affected, and since the laws of that state now expressly authorize such consolidation, the Attorney General had determined to dismiss the suit by the government. The statement then went on to say that in the suit brought complaint had been made that the New Haven Railroad had acquired a number of trolley lines in Massachusetts and adjoining states, and that this was a combination in restraint of interstate commerce, but that, [**5] since the suit by the government had been determined upon, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in a case involving the right of the New Haven to acquire trolley properties in Massachusetts, had decided that that railroad company had no such power, and that the company had been parting with such trolley properties. The Attorney General in the statement expressed his conviction that, whatever might have been the merit of the claim when the suit was begun, there was not, at the time he made the statement, any such element of competition in interstate commerce by reason of such ownership of trolley lines as would justify a further prosecution of the suit by the government. The statement concluded by saying that the Attorney General had directed that the case of the government against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company and the Boston & Maine Company should be dismissed at once.

There is no dispute, at present, at least, of the statements made by counsel for these defendants that each defendant believed that, at the time he entered the board of the New Haven Company, all controversies with the government of the United States, and all questions of violations of the Anti-Trust [**6] Law, had been finally disposed of; and it would seem that no investigation or controversy concerning the subject was pending at that time. Such a situation may well have induced the belief that the board of directors would be, to a great extent, engaged in working through whatsoever complications had arisen in connection with the concerns of the New Haven Company resulting from transactions and causes which had arisen prior to the election of any one of these defendants, and it may be that each of these defendants went upon the board with the purpose of protecting the interests of the stockholders and of the corporation itself. At all events, enough appears to justify the view that the questions to be presented on the trial of these several defendants will probably be materially different from those which will be involved in the trial of the other defendants, with whom they have been jointly charged. Nor is it difficult to foresee possible serious antagonism between the positions of defense to be taken by these defendants and others charged jointly. Indeed, counsel for the United States frankly state that such a situation may arise, and that they do not oppose the severance applied [**7] for.

I therefore think these defendants ought not to be required to go to the inconvenience and expense incidental to the preparation for a long trial, which will probably extend to many matters in no way related to any one of themselves.

State ex rel. Barker v. Armour Packing Co.

Supreme Court of Missouri

May 3, 1915, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

265 Mo. 121 *; 176 S.W. 382 **; 1915 Mo. LEXIS 9 ***

THE STATE ex inf. JOHN T. BARKER, Attorney-General, v. ARMOUR PACKING COMPANY, MORRIS & COMPANY and SWIFT & COMPANY. THE STATE ex inf. JOHN T. BARKER, Attorney-General, v. HAMMOND PACKING COMPANY and ST. LOUIS DRESSED BEEF & PROVISION COMPANY.

Disposition: [***1] For judgment see post, page 151.

Core Terms

---

packing company, cases, products, prices, stock, Beef, properties, quo warranto, pleadings, purchases, Dressed, meats, proceedings, allegations, conspiracy, parties, fine, circuit court, pool, cause of action, livestock, packing, courts, packing house, quantity, subsidiary corporation, restraint of trade, capital stock, lessen, majority opinion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Formation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN1[] General Partnerships, Management Duties & Liabilities

Although the sufficiency of an information in a quo warranto proceeding of an antitrust action may generally be measured by the rules applicable to civil cases, courts use in such cases primarily the statute that modifies the general rule in antitrust proceedings. It is as follows: In any suit in which it is charged that any person, corporation, partnership or association of persons has created, entered into, become a member of or participated in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding in restraint of trade or competition with any other person, corporation, partnership or association of persons, it shall not be necessary to allege or plead the manner in which, or when or where such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding was made or effected. Mo. Rev. Stat. § 10310 (1909). This statute, the terms of which are unambiguous, simplifies the information, in dispensing with the necessity of specific allegations in regard to the manner in which, the time when and the place where the pool or trust was effected, and is applicable not only to cases where the offenses charged to have been committed are wrong in themselves, but also to those in which a misuser of a lawful right is charged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN2 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Although the pleadings in an antitrust proceeding viewed by the ordinary rules of procedure are vague, uncertain and indefinite, if, when measured by the terms of the antitrust statutes, they directly charge a violation of same in the language of these statutes, their sufficiency is not questioned, especially when the fact appears that no timely objections were interposed calling the court's attention to the defective pleadings or in any manner preserving such objections for consideration.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN3 Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

If a pleading sets forth sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, plaintiff's right of redress is not prejudiced by the fact that unnecessary statements are added, but they may be disregarded.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN4 Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

Offenses that savor of crime and the judgments sought thereon should be rendered only upon clear and convincing proof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Although the separate elements of a scheme may be lawful if found to be bound together by a common intent as parts of an unlawful scheme to effect a monopoly, the plan may make the parts unlawful. The liability of respondents for violations of the statutes in question, if committed in Missouri, will not be affected by the fact that the instrumentality through which they operated in violating the law was a corporation which had been organized for ostensibly legitimate purposes in another state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

265 Mo. 121, *121 A 76 S.W. 382, **382 A 915 Mo. LEXIS 9, ***1

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > Proceedings

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The three years' statute of limitations provided in Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1890 (1909) does not apply in an antitrust proceeding where the pleadings allege that at the time they were filed, and the testimony shows that, not only at the time of the institution of a suit but thereafter, that respondents were members of and participated in the unlawful pool, trust and combination.

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Quo Warranto

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN7 Common Law Writs, Quo Warranto

Informations in quo warranto are governed by the rules of pleadings in civil cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

HN8 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Where respondents in an antitrust proceeding are charged not only with the same offenses, but such offenses are alleged to have been joined and to have been committed in an abuse and misuse of their franchises growing out of the connection of their transactions with each other, if guilty the state is entitled to only one satisfaction, if it may be so designated, to-wit: A forfeiture of the corporation's franchises, or in the case of foreign corporations, a revocation of their licenses and such penalties as may be adjudged in addition thereto. Mo. Rev. Stat. 10304 (1909).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Reviewability > Preservation for Review > General Overview

HN9 Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

Where in an antitrust proceeding a defense of former acquittal or prior adjudication of the matters involved was urged by counsel for respondents in oral argument, but was in no manner pleaded or otherwise preserved for review, whether the rule in criminal or civil procedure be applied, this question is not for appellate consideration.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Sufficiency: In Language of Statute. In a quo warranto brought against corporations charged with having entered into a combination in restraint of trade, the statute (Sec. 10310, R. S. 1909) dispenses with the necessity of specific allegations in the petition, either as to the time, the manner or the place the trust was effected; and such statute is applicable both to cases wherein the offenses committed were wrong in themselves, and those in which a lawful right has been misused.

Held, by WOODSON, C. J., concurring, that the Legislature has the same power to control pleadings and procedure in the Supreme Court that it has to control those of the circuit court, and it is wholly immaterial whether the case be a proceeding in quo warranto brought by the Attorney-General ex officio in the Supreme Court to oust corporations of their franchises, or a proceeding for other original writs intrusted to the keeping of the Supreme Court.

Held, by BOND, J., dissenting, that the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction conferred upon it by the Constitution to issue an original writ in quo warranto upon the information of the Attorney-General ex officio, acts in virtue of the jurisdiction as conferred, and that jurisdiction cannot be regulated by the Legislature any further than the court sees fit to adopt such regulation as a reasonable rule of procedure; and that the statute (Sec. 10310, R. S. 1909) declaring it shall be unnecessary to "allege or plead the manner in which, or when or where" a combination in restraint of trade "was made or effected," cannot be held to be decisive of the sufficiency of the information in such case.

2. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Sufficient Specification. An information charging that defendant corporations entered into a pool, trust and combination among themselves and with other corporations to regulate, fix and control prices of certain products for sale and to be sold in this State; to maintain such prices when so regulated and fixed; to regulate, fix and limit the quantity of such commodities sold and to be offered for sale in this State, etc., is sufficient in its specification of facts showing a violation of the anti-trust statutes, even though the statute making it unnecessary to plead the time, manner and place of such combination be disregarded.

Held, by WOODSON, C. J., concurring, that where the information in a quo warranto charges that the conspiracy in restraint of trade was formed by defendants for an unlawful purpose, it is unnecessary to state the facts constituting the conspiracy; but where the conspiracy was formed for the purpose of doing a lawful act in an unlawful way then the facts constituting the conspiracy should be pleaded.

Held, by BOND, J., dissenting, that an information in quo warranto brought by the Attorney-General to oust corporations of their franchises for that they have entered into a combination in restraint of trade in violation of the antitrust statutes, is insufficient unless it definitely and specifically states the facts and circumstances showing guilt under those statutes.

3. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Sufficient Specification: Answering Over: Waiver. Answering over by the defendants charged with having entered into a combination in restraint of trade is equivalent to a waiver of objection to the general allegations and lack of specification of facts of the information; and demurrers incorporated in the return or answer, do not call for a ruling thereon, but place defendant in the attitude of having answered over.

Held, by BOND, J., dissenting, that an information which charges in general terms a violation of the statute, in the language of the statute, without any specification of the facts which constitute its violation, does not state a cause of action, and is not an imperfect statement of a cause of action, and hence the objection that it totally fails to state a cause of action is open to respondents at all times, with or without demurrer.

4. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Unnecessary Allegations. If the information in quo warranto sets forth sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action against the defendant corporations, plaintiff's right of redress is not to be prejudiced by the facts that unnecessary statements are added, but they will be regarded as surplusage.

5. QUO WARRANTO: Information: General Rules of Pleading. An information in a quo warranto against corporations charged with having entered into combination in restraint of trade, is to be governed by the general rules of civil procedure. [BOND, J., dissenting.]

6. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Sufficiency of Evidence. The evidence in this case is clear and convincing that three powerful packing companies entered into a combination in restraint of trade, by organizing another company in New Jersey, with a capital stock of fifteen million dollars, organized ostensibly as a packing company, but in fact as a holding company, whose capital stock consisted of eighty per cent of the stock of the three companies and the properties of other competing companies, bought with money borrowed on these properties as security, and, by using said company as their instrumentality, perfected a plan, between themselves and such other subsidiary companies, that resulted in a common management, a community of stock interest, an arbitrary fixing of the purchasing and selling prices of live stock and the dressed products thereof, and the restriction of the quantity of live stock to be bought or sold, all of which resulted in the destruction or lessening of competition in this State between them and the other corporations whose stock were acquired by said New Jersey company.

7. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Lawful Elements: Combined Into Unlawful Scheme. Although the separate elements of a scheme may be lawful, if bound together by a common intent as parts of an unlawful scheme to effect a monopoly, the plan will make the parts unlawful. The combination in restraint of trade is not rendered lawful, or its unlawful character affected, by the fact that the articles of association of the holding corporation organized by defendants bore on their face evidence that it was an organization for a lawful purpose, if it was in fact one of the instrumentalities used by them to carry out the unlawful combination and agreements to prevent competition, restrict the quantity of products and fix their prices.

8. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Limitations. A quo warranto against corporations for penalties and forfeiture is not barred by limitations if brought within three years after the unlawful combination in restraint of trade was formed.

9. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Misjoinder of Defendants. It is not a misjoinder of defendants to join in one action of quo warranto all corporations, domestic and foreign, licensed to do business in this State, which have misused and abused their franchises by entering into a combination in restraint of trade. If guilty, there is but one satisfaction: a forfeiture of the domestic corporations' franchises, and the revocation of the foreign companies' licenses, and in addition the assessment of appropriate penalties. The rules of civil procedure as to joining of causes of action and of defendants apply, though each respondent has a separate contract with the State.

10. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Repeal of Statutes. The Act of 1913 (Laws 1913, pp. 549-555) did not repeal the existing anti-trust statutes, but simply made additions to the acts declared in those statutes to be necessary to constitute an unlawful combination in restraint of trade.

11. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Res Adjudicata. A defense of former acquittal or prior adjudication, in either a criminal or civil proceeding, to be available, must be pleaded.

12. QUO WARRANTO: Information: Statutes Constitutional. The anti-trust statutes of Missouri violate neither the Federal nor State Constitution.

Counsel: John T. Barker, Attorney-General, and Ernest A. Green, Assistant Attorney-General, for relator; Frank H. Farris of counsel.

(1) The information in this cause is sufficient and specifically charges facts which show, if true, that respondents have violated the antitrust statutes of this State. There is no misjoinder of parties respondent. State ex inf. v. Railroad, 240 Mo. 35; State ex rel. v. Grimm, 220 Mo. 483; State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1; Sec. 10310, R. S. 1909. (2) This action is not barred by the Statutes of Limitation. In this State we have no Statute of Limitations against the State instituting suits by the Attorney-General by information, in the nature of quo warranto, such as the suit at bar. Besides, at the time of filing this information respondents were still members of and participating in the unlawful pool and combination. High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies (3 Ed.), sec. 621; State ex rel. v. Westport, 116 Mo. 595; State ex rel. v. Huff, 105 Mo. App. 634; State ex rel. v. Vandalia, 119 Mo. App. 424; Commonwealth v. Birchett, 2 Va. Cas. 51; State ex rel. v. Turnpike Co., 8 R. I. 521. (3) The commissioner who heard [***2] the testimony and had the witnesses before him reports that from the evidence adduced the National Packing Company was organized for the express purpose of limiting and destroying free competition, and that respondents have been and are maintained by the National Packing Company solely in furtherance of that unlawful purpose. Unless the findings of a commissioner appointed by the court to report on the facts are affirmatively and clearly shown to be wrong, the court will accept same as correct. State ex rel. v. Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 38; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. 164; Tufts v. Latshaw, 172 Mo. 371; Bank v. Donnell, 172 Mo. 402. (4) The National Packing Company was organized as a means and instrumentality through which to continue and perpetuate the various methods of combination which existed prior to its organization and through which methods the large packing interests of the United States were brought into an unlawful combine. This being true, various decisions of appellate courts herein cited, condemn respondents herein as being members of an unlawful pool. Sections 10298, 10299, 10300, 10301, 10304, 10322, R. S. 1909; Harding v. Glucose Co., 182 Ill. 551; Richardson [***3] v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632; Distillery & Cattle Feed Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 448; State v. Distilling Co., 29 Neb. 719; Lead Co. v. Store Co., 80 Mo. App. 266; Eustis v. Edgar, 207 Mo. 289; Finck v. Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244; United States v. Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. 700; Biscuit Co. v. Klotz, 44 Fed. 721; Strait v. Harrow Co., 18 N. Y. Supp. 224; Harrow Co. v. Hench, 76 Fed. 667; Harrow Co. v. Hench, 83 Fed. 36; Securities Co. v. Transit Co., 166 Fed. 945; Attorney-General v. A. Booth & Co., 143 Mich. 89; Capsule Co. v. Capsule Co., 67 Fed. 414; Wall Paper Co. v. Lewis Voight Sons & Co., 148 Fed. 939; Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U.S. 129; Clancey v. Salt Mfg. Co., 62 Barb. 395; United States v. Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 279; Pittsburg Co. v. McMillin, 119 N. Y. 46; Noyes on Corporate Relations (2 Ed.), secs. 307, 310; Beach on Monopolies and Industrial Trusts, sec. 159, pp. 505, 507, pr. 167, p. 543, pr. 165, p. 536; 1 Eddy on Trusts and Monopolies, p. 550, prs. 617, 620, 621, 622; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Oh. St. 137; People v. Refining Co., 54 Hun, 356; People v. Refining Co., 121 N. Y. 582; Bishop v. Preserves Co., 157 Ill. 284; Dunbar v. Tel. & Tel. Co., 224 Ill. 9; Securities [***4] Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197; United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. 177; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1; 2 Cook on Corporations (6 Ed.), pr. 503a; State ex rel. v. Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1; State ex rel. v. Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356; Froelich v. Benefit Assn., 93 Mo. App. 383; Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 64; State v. Board of Trade, 107 Minn. 506; Railroad v. Closser, 126 Ind. 348; Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 173; Joint Traffic Assn. v. U. S., 171 U.S. 338; Clark v. Railroad, 50 Fed. 346; Harvester Co. v. Commonwealth, 99 S. W. 637; Harvester Co. v. State, 99 Pac. 603; Cohen v. Envelope Co., 166 N. Y. 298; Hooker v. Vandewater, 4 Denio, 349; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio, 434; Railroad v. Railroad, 41 La. Ann. 970; U. S. v. Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290; Standard Oil Co. v. Missouri, 224 U.S. 270; State ex rel. v. Harvester Co., 237 Mo. 369. (5) Independent of whether the National Packing Company was organized as a part and in pursuance of a former pool and combine, it was organized for the purpose, or, at least, provides a means through which the Armour Packing interests, the Swift Packing interests, the Morris Packing interests and the various subsidiary [***5] concerns, including the respondents, can and do lessen competition. Respondents are therefore guilty of the charges contained in the information. Cases cited under Point 4; United States v. Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. 700; United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. 177; People v. Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268; Securities Co. v. Transit Co., 165 Fed. 945; Wall Paper Co. v. Lewis Voight & Sons Co., 148 Fed. 939; Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 173; Strait v. Harvester Co., 18 N. Y. Supp. 224; Biscuit Co. v. Klotz, 44 Fed. 721; Lead Co. v. Store Co., 80 Mo. App. 266; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632; Froelich v. Mutual Benefit Assn., 93 Mo. App. 383; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137. (6) Independent of the means which the National Packing Company affords, the Armour interest, the Morris interests, and the Swift interests meeting together with the representatives of respondents and jointly agreeing upon the affairs of these various interests, it is an unlawful combine, to which respondents are parties, in that it effectively destroys all competition and removes all incentive for competition among the various corporations, including the respondents, owned and controlled by the [***6] National Packing Company. Cases cited under Points 4 and 5, supra; State ex rel. v. Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 32; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 51; Commonwealth v. Bank, 28 Pa. St. 389; People v. Refining Co., 54 Hun, 354. (7) The various objections of unconstitutionality raised by respondents in their answer to these statutes are untenable, having all been foreclosed by prior decisions of this court and the United States Supreme Court. They are no longer open questions in this State. State ex inf. v. Ins. Co., 150 Mo. 113; State ex inf. v. Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1; State ex inf. v. Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1; Finck v. Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244; State ex inf. v. Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1; Standard Oil Co. v. Missouri, 224 U.S. 270.

H. S. Priest, Morton Jourdan and Frank Hagerman for respondents; A. R. Urion, Henry Veeder, M. W. Borders and Ralph Crews of counsel.

(A) The information is in nowise supported by the proofs. (1) Where, as here, quo warranto proceeds against a corporation for a violation of the antitrust law, the information must charge the specific wrong-doing, and the proofs must show that which is thus specifically pleaded. State ex rel. v. Talbot, 123 Mo. 71; State ex rel. v. Grimm, I***71 220 Mo. 490; State ex rel. v. Railroad, 240 Mo. 35; State ex rel. v. Railroad, 241 Mo. 11. If the evidence does not show the specific wrong-doing so alleged, there is not simply a variance but a complete failure of proof. Waldhier v. Railroad, 71 Mo. 514; Reed v. Bott, 100 Mo. 62; McManamee v. Railroad, 135 Mo. 440; Huston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 263; Chitty v. Railroad, 148 Mo. 75; Richardson v. Busch, 198 Mo. 174. (2) If a material fact be pleaded as unknown to the pleader, there is a complete failure of proof if it appear that such fact was either known or could have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence. State v. Stowe, 132 Mo. 208; State v. Thompson, 137 Mo. 623; State v. Moses, 139 Mo. 217; State v. Burke, 151 Mo. 145; State v. Nunley, 185 Mo. 109; Naftzger v. United States, 118 C. C. A., 200 Fed. 501. (3) The specific charge in the information was this: Respondents, not as passive instruments, but as active conspirators, with unknown parties, conspired to take over, own and control all the packing companies in Missouri and the United States, the names of which were unknown, and pursuant to the scheme the National Company acquired the stock and assets of corporations [***8] whose names were likewise unknown. Both the proofs and the commissioner's report clearly showed: (a) There was never any purpose of obtaining control of all of such packing houses; (b) the alleged conspirators were Swift & Company, Armour & Company, Morris & Company and the companies actually acquired by the National Company, and (c) the names of these companies were actually disclosed at a preliminary hearing had under the statute (R. S. 1909, secs. 10332-10338) by the Attorney-General to see whether there was any reason for filing the information. Moreover, if such examination did not disclose the facts in every detail, they could have been ascertained by his asking for the production of the officers and directors and the books and papers of the companies doing business in Missouri. (B) The proofs were insufficient to make a case. (1) The commissioner's mere conclusion, in the teeth of findings to the contrary and his statement that there was no direct evidence to that effect, was that respondents were in a combination with Swift & Company, Armour & Company and the National Company. (2) Such a conclusion cannot be warranted by strong suspicions or probabilities, but can only be drawn [***9] upon a clear showing of (a) either a criminal intent to violate the law, or (b) a combination of such magnitude as to create a monopoly. State ex inf. v. Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 37; United States v. Naval Stores Co., 172 Fed. 460; Bigelow v. Mining Co., 167 Fed. 709, 94 C. C. A. 13. (3) Here, both the findings and proofs clearly show there was no monopoly, while the facts do not warrant a finding of bad intent. (4) There not being a monopoly guilt cannot be found from the size of the business unaccompanied by improper acts or oppressive methods towards competitors. United States v. Naval Stores Co., 172 Fed. 458; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; Tobacco Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 106; State ex inf. v. Harvester Co., 237 Mo. 394. (5) There was individual ownership of the stock of the National Company by G. F. Swift, J. O. Armour and Edward Morris, heads of Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company. The National Company in turn owned the stock of respondents. From this alone the commissioner concluded not that there was any, but that there might be an abuse of the power flowing from such ownership, hence guilt. This was contrary to the law. State ex inf. v. [***10] Tobacco Co., 117 Mo. 37; State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. 155, 218 Mo. 403; State ex inf. v. Railroad, 241 Mo. 1, 11; Bigelow v. Mining Co., 167 Fed. 721, 94 C. C. A. 13; U. S. v. Reading Co., 183 Fed. 427. (6) The proposed but abandoned consolidation of 1902 would have controlled not more than fifty-two per cent of the packing business. Its size alone, regardless of its abuse of its power, would not have made it illegal. United States v. Naval Stores Co., 172 Fed. 458; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; Tobacco Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 106; State ex inf. v. Harvester Co., 237 Mo. 369, 394. The plan having been abandoned, it was not evidence of a combination thereafter. U. S. v. Reading Co., 183 Fed. 427. (7) The conclusions of the commissioner are not only contrary to the proofs, but they are inconsistent with the specific facts found. (8) The claim of violation of law is too stale to warrant a prosecution. A State, by lapse of time, wholly irrespective of any Statute of Limitation, loses its right to proceed in quo warranto, not only as against municipal (State ex rel. v. Westport, 116 Mo. 582; People ex rel. v. Alturas Co., 6 Idaho, 418; State v. School [***11] District, 85 Minn. 230; Cooley, Const. Lim. [5 Ed.] 311), but also private corporations. State v. Carr, 112 C. C. A. 477, 191 Fed. 266; Commonwealth v. Turnpike Co., 153 Pa. St. 47; State v. Water Co., 92 Wis. 496; State v. Railroad, 80 Neb. 333.

Judges: WALKER, J. Woodson, C. J., and Brown and Faris, JJ., concur, Woodson, C. J., in separate opinion; Faris, J., dubitante as to what is said concerning section 10310, Revised Statutes 1909; Graves, J., concurs in result of the opinion as to judgment of guilt as found in majority opinion, but thinks that under the peculiar facts in this case the fines are excessive and dissents as to the amount of the fines; Bond, J., dissents in part and concurs in part in separate opinion; Blair, J., having been of counsel, not sitting.

Opinion by: WALKER

Opinion

---

[*131] [**383] In Banc

Quo Warranto.

WALKER, J. -- In June, 1910, the State of Missouri, upon the information of the Attorney-General, instituted a proceeding in quo warranto in the Supreme Court against the Hammond Packing Company, an Illinois corporation doing business under the authority of the laws of this State, at St. Joseph, Missouri, and the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision [***12] Company, a Missouri corporation engaged in business at the city of St. Louis.

On the same date a like proceeding was commenced in this court by the Attorney-General against the Armour Packing Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey; Swift & Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, and Morris & Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maine, each authorized to do business in this State.

The business of these corporations was the buying, slaughtering and marketing of live stock used for food, and in addition the dealing in cured meats, eggs, poultry, game, butter and other agricultural and dairy products, and the preparation and selling of the various by-products derived from the slaughtering of live stock.

The information in these cases was identical, barring names, dates and formal allegations particularly applicable to the corporations proceeded against, and each charged violations of the antitrust statutes of Missouri (Secs. 10298-10301, R. S. 1909).

Answers were filed in due time, and in January, 1911, an order was made referring the case against the Hammond Packing Company and the St. [***13] Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company to the Hon. Daniel Dillon, as special commissioner, to hear and rule on the competency of all testimony offered, and return same into this court with his findings of facts thereon. An abstract of the voluminous testimony agreed upon by the Attorney-General and respondents' counsel was [*132] used before the commissioner as the record in these cases, and is filed here as the "Joint Abstract of the Record," and will be referred to in the discussion of the issues submitted.

Although these proceedings were commenced separately, after the testimony had been taken before the commissioner in the suit against the Hammond Packing Company and the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company, counsel for these parties, as well as for the other corporations named, stipulated that the testimony thus taken, as well as the report of the commissioner, who was limited to a finding of facts, should be taken as the evidence in all of the cases, the stipulation being in these words: "It is hereby stipulated: That this case shall be submitted upon the evidence taken and the report of the commissioner made in case No. 16090, State ex rel. Attorney-General v. Hammond [***14] Packing Company et al., herein pending."

The informations are substantially as follows:

That respondents have entered into a pool, trust and combination among themselves and with other corporations and persons to relator unknown, with the purpose and design to (1) regulate, fix and control prices to be paid for beef and beef products, etc., for sale and sold in this State; (2) to maintain such prices when so regulated and fixed; (3) to regulate, fix and limit the amount and quantity of beef and beef products sold and offered for sale in this State; (4) to control and limit the trade in beef and beef products, etc., in this State; and (5) to limit and lessen competition in the purchase and sale of beef and beef products in this State. That by reason of said trust and combination formed as aforesaid respondents have (1) regulated, fixed and limited the amount and quantity of such products sold and offered for sale; (2) that they have fixed and maintained the price of such products bought and sold in this State; (3) that they have lessened lawful trade and full and free competition in [*133] the purchase and sale of such products; (4) that they are now unlawfully and illegally [***15] fixing the price of said articles in this State; and (5) that they are restraining and limiting full and free competition in the purchase and sale of such products in this State. That there was in September, 1902, up to which time respondents were legitimate competitors of all others in the same business, formed under the laws of [**384] New Jersey the National Packing Company, herein called the "National Company," with power to do a packing business and own and control the stock of other corporations. That the National Company was not organized in good faith for the purpose of engaging in the business authorized by its charter, but as a corporate scheme and device to effect an unlawful arrangement between respondents and others engaged in business in Missouri and the United States, whose names were to the relator unknown, to lessen, restrict and destroy lawful trade and full and free competition, and to regulate, fix and maintain prices, and to control and limit the amount and quantity of things to be sold and offered for sale in Missouri and in the United States; that the scheme was to have the National Company as a holding corporation to acquire the stock and assets of all corporations [***16] and the plants of all individuals and partnerships, who, as competitors, did a packing business in Missouri and the United States, so that through the sole control of the National Company it could pursue such policy as would remove all inducement for competition among such parties; that pursuant to the scheme thus concocted the National Company acquired, and has since owned and used, in aid of the said scheme, the stock of respondents, previously engaged in business in Missouri as legitimate competitors, and has since wrongfully operated them ostensibly as separate and competitive companies, whereby the public has been misled and deceived; that it acquired, and has ever since owned, the stock and assets of the corporations, [*134] whose names were unknown to informant, engaged in the same business in Missouri, and the United States, and used the same to carry out the said scheme; that by this method and scheme, lawful trade and full and free competition was lessened, restricted and destroyed, and the quantity and amount of meat products to be offered for sale was controlled and limited.

The answer admitted the legality of the incorporation of respondents, their authority to do [***17] business in this State, and that as alleged in the informations they were at least until 1902 lawfully engaged in a competitive business with every other like concern in Missouri. Every other averment of the information was put in issue. The defenses presented by the answers were: (1) That the informations failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) That there was a misjoinder of parties defendant; (3) That the actions were barred by the Statute of Limitations; (4) That the statute creating the offenses charged had been repealed; (5) That the statute for the alleged violation of which forfeiture was sought was violative of the Federal Constitution; (6) That this court in an original proceeding has no jurisdiction to enforce the antitrust statutes. The commissioner being limited under the order of his appointment to a finding of the facts did not consider the above defenses, as they presented only questions of law.

Before the commencement of these proceedings the Attorney-General under the provision of sections 10332-10338, Revised Statutes 1909, caused an inquiry to be made to ascertain whether informations should be filed against respondents. This inquiry [***18] was had before the same commissioner who subsequently took the entire testimony but who was then acting under the appointment of this court solely for the purposes of the preliminary inquiry.

[*135] The testimony taken at this preliminary inquiry and which was thereafter introduced in evidence at the regular hearing before the commissioner, consisted of the articles of incorporation and licenses to do business in this State, of the Armour Packing Company, Armour & Company, Swift & Company, Morris & Company, Schwartzchild & Sulzberger, Cudahy Packing Company, Hammond Packing Company and St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company; a statement showing the total number of cattle, hogs and sheep sold at the Kansas City stockyards in 1909, and the testimony of a number of witnesses interested in or connected in a business way with the respondents.

Much of the testimony taken before the commissioner in regard to matters antedating the formation of the National Company is irrelevant, and its consideration is not necessary to a determination of the issues involved. The record shows that whatever organization existed prior to the formation of the National Company was at its creation then [***19] terminated and the affairs of the preceding organizations closed up in July, 1902. To effectuate the organization of the National Company fifteen million dollars was borrowed by representatives of Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company, the contract in regard thereto being signed by J. Ogden Armour, G. F. Swift and Edward Morris, heads of Armour & Company, Swift & Company and Morris & Company respectively. The agreement between these parties upon which was based the organization of the National Company provided that there should be formed a corporation with a bonded indebtedness and preferred and common stock, which should acquire the capital stock, plants, properties and business of Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company, G. F. Swift, J. Ogden Armour and Edward Morris each agreeing that he would have conveyed to the new company at least eighty per cent of the capital stock of the [*136] company of which he was the head. It was provided that the tangible properties of the three companies should be appraised and payments in bonds and stocks made to each company therefor in such proportion as the value of the assets of each company bore to the value [***20] of the three.

[**385] Each party was to deposit one million dollars with a trust company to secure the performance of his part of the contract.

Any party thereto might purchase for the new corporation when formed, the capital stock and the properties and assets of other corporations engaged in the packing business upon the joint account of all of the parties, each of whom was to pay to the one making such purchase such proportion of all payments so made as the actual appraised value of the tangible property agreed to be conveyed by his company bore to the aggregate appraised valuation of all property of Armour & Company, Swift & Company and Morris & Company to be conveyed to the new corporation.

Pursuant to said contract purchases were made of the stock of the Omaha Packing Company, Hammond Packing Company, United Dressed Beef Company, Anglo-American Provision Company and its subsidiary companies, and the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company. These purchases were made at a cost of ten millions of dollars. J. O. Armour, G. F. Swift and Edward Morris borrowed eight million dollars to pay on account of these purchases, securing same by the properties purchased for the proposed [***21] consolidation, held by trustees and afterwards conveyed to the National Company. The organized capital of the National Company was fifteen million dollars; the purpose of its organization as declared by its articles of association, was to engage generally in the packing business, but the evidence discloses that it has been operated only as a holding company and as a means of enabling Armour, Swift and Morris to meet together [*137] weekly and direct the corporations whose stock the National owned, as well as an instrumentality to enable the three packing companies, of which these parties were the heads, to form a substantial union of interests.

The directors of the National Company are all parties interested in or connected with the Armour, Swift and Morris interests. After the organization of the National Company weekly meetings were held by the representatives of Swift, Morris and Armour, in Chicago, and have been continued since the organization of the National Company. The National Company maintained an auditing department with general traveling auditors who were sent out to audit the books of the various subsidiary corporations. These auditors reported regularly to the general [***22] auditor of the National Company. It also maintained various forces to look after the respective departments of the packing business, and reports were daily and weekly made by each subsidiary concern to the National Company in relation to all the business transacted by them. Daily reports were made of the amount of purchases of live stock, the prices paid therefor, the prices paid by Armour, Swift and Morris, and the prices they have paid, and also the amount of stock to be on the market during the day.

The National Company had head buyers who went on the market to aid the local buyers of the subsidiary concerns. Information was given each of such concerns as to the amount of purchases to be made by it and the prices at which these purchases should be made; the said concerns made their purchases of finished products through the National Company; they transmitted their wants and orders to it and it placed such orders with whichever company it saw fit. The National Company each day advised them as to prices at which it could purchase for them, and in some instances [*138] the subsidiary concerns were permitted to buy directly if it was found to their advantage.

A private wire connected [***23] all of the subsidiary corporations with the National Company, and daily information and reports relative to market conditions and the packing business were transmitted over this wire. The National Company charged no commissions on purchases made for the various corporations, but placed orders for each subsidiary corporation.

The profits and dividends declared by the National Company were derived from the dividends and profits of the subsidiary corporations, it having no other means of making profits. After the National Company received daily reports as to the purchases made and prices paid by each subsidiary corporation, this information was sent collectively to each of them to inform them what each of the other companies was purchasing and the prices being paid. The National Company also had a system of estimating costs which was substantially the same system adopted by Swift, Morris and Armour. This system and method was largely arbitrary and its basis was seldom changed. The selling price was determined by the estimated cost. The testimony is to the effect that the actual cost was usually less than the estimated cost, and that in St. Louis and at other points the price at which [***24] meat was sold by subsidiary concerns of the National and by Armour, Swift and Morris, was substantially the same.

At the weekly meetings of the National Company statistical statements as to all of the subsidiary concerns of the National, as well as those of Armour, Swift and Morris, were submitted. These statements disclosed the number of cattle purchased by each subsidiary company of the National Company, as well as the Armour, Swift and Morris companies, the volume of shipments made by each subsidiary corporation to the various parts of the United States, and the prices at which packing products had been sold, together with the [*139] working marginal price. After such meetings, the president of the National Company, through its employees in charge of the various departments, communicated with the heads [**386] of the subsidiary corporations, advising them as to the amount of purchases to be made of live stock and the volume of shipments to be made to the various sections of the country. These matters were decided and determined upon at the weekly meeting of the National Company. Representatives of the subsidiary corporations of the National communicated with the representatives [***25] of Armour, Swift and Morris relative to market conditions, prices to be paid and prices at which packing products were sold. The affairs of the National Company and its subsidiary corporations were guided and managed by Swift, Armour and Morris. The uniformity of prices at which live stock was purchased and packing products were sold by Armour, Swift and Morris, and the subsidiary corporations of the National Company, discloses the manner in which the affairs of the subsidiary corporations of the National were controlled and the course pursued by the Armour, Morris and Swift interests. These weekly meetings attended by Swift, Morris and Armour afforded the means and constituted the instrumentality by which these parties agreed upon the affairs and directed the business of each of said concerns.

Upon the facts as above set forth the special commissioner found substantially as follows: That there was an agreement and understanding between Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company and the National Packing Company and the respondents herein, and the other companies whose properties and assets had been transferred to the National Packing Company, as aforesaid, as to the conduct [***26] of their business made and entered into, with a view to lessen, restrict, limit and destroy free competition between said parties to said agreement in the purchase of cattle, [*140] sheep and hogs, and in the sale of fresh meats and other packing house products in Missouri and in the United States, and that said agreement and understanding was made for the purpose of fixing and maintaining the prices of cattle, sheep and hogs and the prices of fresh meats and other packing house products in the State of Missouri and in the United States, and for the purpose of controlling and limiting the amount and quantity of fresh meats and other packing house products sold and offered for sale in the State of Missouri and in the United States. And that pursuant to said agreement and understanding Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company and the National Packing Company, and respondents herein, and said other companies whose stock and properties had been conveyed to the National Packing Company as aforesaid, from the time said National Packing Company was incorporated until after the filing of the information in this case, did regulate and fix and maintain the prices of cattle, [***27] sheep and hogs and the prices of fresh meats and other packing house products in the State of Missouri and in the United States, and did control and limit the amount and quantity of fresh meats and other packing house products, sold and offered for sale in the State of Missouri and throughout the United States.

Formal written exceptions to the report of the commissioner were filed, and these cases are for hearing thereon; they will be considered in the order of their presentation by respondents.

I. Respondents contend that the informations are insufficient in not specifically charging facts which show, if true, that respondents have violated the antitrust statutes. Before comparing or contrasting authorities pro and con on this subject, it is well, as was said by Mr. Webster on a memorable occasion, that we "glance [*141] at the sun and take our latitude" lest in a general discussion of cases we are diverted from our true course and fail to readily reach the harbor of right conclusions.

HN1 [↑] Although the sufficiency of an information in a quo warranto proceeding of the particular class of these under review may generally be measured by the rules applicable to civil cases, [***28] as Brown, J., has clearly said in State ex rel. v. Railroad, 240 Mo. 35, our sun, if we may be permitted to continue the figure, in these cases is primarily the statute, which modifies the general rule in antitrust proceedings. It is as follows: "In any suit that is now pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in which it is charged that any person, corporation, partnership or association of persons has created, entered into, become a member of or participated in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding in restraint of trade or competition with any other person, corporation, partnership or association of persons, it shall not be necessary to allege or plead the manner in which, or when or where such pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding was made or effected." [Sec. 10310, R. S. 1909.] This statute, the terms of which are unambiguous, simplifies the information, in dispensing with the necessity of specific allegations in regard to the manner in which, the time when and the place where the pool or trust was effected, and is applicable not only to cases where the offenses charged to have been committed are wrong in themselves, [***29] but also to those in which a misuser of a lawful right is charged. As to the distinction to be made in the pleadings in these two classes of cases, see State ex rel. v. Railroad, 240 Mo. 35, and especially the concurring opinion of Woodson, J., therein, I. c. 56, and State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. I. c. 367.

An analysis of the information under review, the material allegations of which have heretofore been set [*142] forth, will disclose, although we disregard the statute (Section 10310, supra) and determine the sufficiency of the pleadings by the rule applicable alike to either of the class of cases above referred [**387] to, viz., those charging acts wrong in themselves or those involving the unlawful exercise of a right, that they are not only sufficient in containing plain and concise statements of the causes of action (Sec. 1794, R. S. 1909) but in specifically alleging all the facts necessary to properly charge violations of the antitrust statutes. The matter of the sufficiency of informations in quo warranto proceedings of this character was elaborately and learnedly discussed by Faris, J., in State ex inf. v. Arkansas Lumber Co., 260 Mo. 212, 169 S.W. [***301] 145, in which it was held that HN2 [↑] although the pleadings viewed by the ordinary rules of procedure were vague, uncertain and indefinite, if, when measured by the terms of the antitrust statutes, they directly charged a violation of same in the language of these statutes, their sufficiency would not be questioned, especially when the fact appeared, as it did in that case, that no timely objections were interposed calling the court's attention to the defective pleadings or in any manner preserving such objections for consideration. In the cases at bar the demurrs to the informations, if they can be so considered, were incorporated into and made a part of the returns or answers; no rulings were demanded or made thereon and respondents are in the attitude of having answered over, which effects an abandonment of their demurrs. [State ex rel. v. Bright, 224 Mo. 514, 135 Am. St. 552.] If, therefore, the informations were not sufficient, measured by the rule applicable to this class of cases, and we disregard the literal terms of the statute (Section 10310, supra) which obviates special allegations, they may still be held sufficient under the carefully considered rule announced in the Lumber [***31] case, supra, especially in view of the fact that here as in that case no objections were made or preserved in such a [*143] manner as to entitle them to consideration by this court.

In the analysis of these informations to determine their sufficiency we have not overlooked the fact that they contain allegations unnecessary to a proper and precise averment of the offenses complained of; to illustrate: following the allegation that respondents were guilty of entering into and consummating the unlawful combination "among themselves and with each other" it is averred that like offenses were committed by them with "other corporations, partnerships and individuals engaged in the same business (whose names are to informant unknown)." Of this more at length later. It may be said generally, without hypercriticism, that the informations are inartificially drawn and do not as they should, in unnecessary verbiage, point directly and clearly to the material matters in issue; nevertheless, although obscured with words, they are sufficient to charge the respondents with the creation and consummation of a monopoly, or, in other words, a conspiracy in restraint of trade. This being true, the statements [***32] of unnecessary matter above set forth may be treated as surplusage. It was so ruled by this court in State ex inf. Hadley v. Railroad, 206 Mo. l. c. 42, which held unnecessary allegations in quo warranto proceedings to be surplusage. In passing, it may be pertinently said that the Hadley case, supra, in its further ruling in regard to this class of pleadings, announced that they were not governed by the general rules of civil procedure, a doctrine since clearly repudiated in State ex rel. v. Grimm, 220 Mo. 483, 119 S.W. 626, as noted by Brown, J., in State ex rel. v. Railroad, 240 Mo. l. c. 35. This is relevant only so far as it goes to show that the general rules governing the procedure in civil cases are applicable in quo warranto cases, and as a consequence that it was unnecessary to specify in the informations the other corporations or individuals which by reason of the unlawful combination came under [*144] the control of the National Company, because proof of such fact was not necessary to establish respondent's guilt.

The general rule in civil cases is that HN3[↑] if a pleading sets forth sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, plaintiff's right of redress is [***33] not prejudiced by the fact that unnecessary statements are added, but they may be disregarded. [Emmons v. Quade, 176 Mo. 22, 75 S.W. 103; Dunlap v. Kelly, 105 Mo. App. 1, 78 S.W. 664; Sumner v. Tuck, 10 Mo. App. 269; Van Raalte v. Epstein, 202 Mo. 173, 99 S.W. 1077.]

In harmony with the rule announced in the Hadley case, supra, in regard to unnecessary allegations being regarded as surplusage, see also, Murray v. McGarigle, 69 Wis. l. c. 491; Swift & Co. v. U. S., 196 U.S. l. c. 395; State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, 38 A. 868, and cases cited in 8 Cyc. 663, under note 9.

II. It is not necessary in these cases to enter into a discussion of the character and limitations of the power of the commissioner to take the testimony herein and report his findings thereon. This has been done in State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. l. c. 124, 91 S.W. 1062, and the Lumber Company case, supra, and the correctness of the conclusions there reached is not questioned. We have, therefore, taken and considered the testimony in these cases as preserved in the joint abstract, as well as the commissioner's findings thereon, regarding the latter as persuasive and to be accepted as correct where same, [***34] which we did not find to be the case, was not affirmatively wrong. Without repeating the testimony at length, the relevant parts of which we have set forth in the statement with such succinctness as its prolixity will permit, it is disclosed that the National Company, organized [**388] as shown by its articles as a packing company, but utilized entirely as a holding company to direct, regulate and control other corporations, became after its organization the owner by purchase of the [*145] stock of the respondents, the Hammond Packing Company, the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company and of eighty per cent of the Swift, Armour and Morris companies and of the stock of other packing companies not necessary to be further referred to here. The prime purpose of the organization of the National Company was to enable the heads of the great packing companies, to-wit, Swift, Armour and Morris, who were instrumental in its creation, to form a substantial and effective union of interests and thereby control, not only the supply of live stock furnished to packing houses, but its output as a dressed product, as well as its distribution and the prices to be paid for or received for [***35] same. In consummation of this scheme note the successive steps taken by the directory of the National Company not only to effectuate a union of interests but to completely control such interest when united: first, we find that the directors of the National Company were all interested in or directly connected with the Swift, Armour and Morris interests. When organized, the National Company, although its directory made no pretense of transacting any business authorized by its charter, held weekly meetings to direct and control the business of the various corporations whose stock it had acquired. At these meetings reports from all of the corporations whose stock was owned by the National were received in relation to all business transactions by them; these reports included daily reports of the amounts of live stock purchased, prices paid for same, prices made for live stock by the Swift, Armour and Morris Companies, and the amount of live stock to be on the market each day. Head buyers went on the markets at the various stockyards and aided the buyers of the various packing industries in purchasing stock for their respective companies. In addition, corrections were regularly given by [***36] the National Company to each of the other corporations as to the amount of [*146] purchases to be made by them respectively and the prices authorized to be paid; they were required to make their purchases of dressed or finished products through the National Company if made on another company, and if such order was not satisfactory to the National it was authorized to place the order elsewhere. Each day the National advised the various other corporations as to prices to be paid by them for stock, and at times permitted them to buy directly if found to their advantage. A system of telegraphic intercommunication was in operation between the National and the other corporations, by which the former was enabled to know each day exactly what the other companies were doing in a business way. Much of the other testimony consists of a detailed account of the multiform methods adopted and pursued by the management of the National Company, in not only rendering itself at all times familiar with the business of each of the other corporations, but in practically controlling such business by regulating not only the amount of their purchases and the prices paid for stock, but in the sale of their [***37] finished product and the price at which it was to be sold.

A careful survey of the foregoing facts amply sustain the finding of the commissioner that the property and assets of respondents were transferred to the National Company to enable it to conduct, and that it did conduct, their business with their approval and co-operation, which they were powerless to prevent after a sale of a majority of their stock, so as to lessen, restrict, limit and destroy free competition between said companies in the purchase of live stock for food and in the distribution and sale of fresh meats and packing house products, and that said transfers and agreements were made for the purpose of fixing and maintaining the prices of live stock used for food and the prices of fresh meats and other packing house products, and for the purpose of controlling and limiting the quantity [*147] of such meats and other packing house products in the markets sold or offered for sale in this State, and that said respondents, as disclosed by the testimony, from the time said National Company was incorporated and until after the filing of the information in these cases, did regulate, fix and maintain the prices of [***38] live stock for food and the prices of fresh meats and other packing house products and did control and limit the amount and quantity of fresh meats and other packing house products sold and offered for sale in this State.

This view of the fulness and force of the said testimony will, in the event of no prejudicial error being found in the proceedings, suffice to authorize an ouster under the statutes prohibiting unlawful combinations (Secs. 10298-10309, supra) and the general statute (Sec. 2635, R. S. 1909) authorizing judgments in cases of this character.

In reaching this conclusion we have not been unmindful of the rulings of this court ( State ex rel. v. Asso. Press, 159 Mo. 410, 467, 60 S.W. 91; State ex inf. v. Cont. Tobac. Co., 177 Mo. 1, 37, 75 S.W. 737) that HN4[<sup>14</sup>] offenses such as are here charged, savor of crime and the judgments sought thereon should be rendered only upon clear and convincing proof. In the review of this evidence we have, therefore, considered the intent and purpose of the acts complained of, which if construed most liberally for the respondents, may not show an affirmative purpose to violate the law, but nevertheless the evidence is amply clear and convincing [***39] to show not only a specific intent to restrain legitimate competition in [*389] the articles and products involved and the consequent creation of a monopoly, but that by the creation of such a monopoly, trade was, in fact, unlawfully controlled and restrained. This conclusion is sustained by many authorities here and elsewhere construing the statute invoked as well as others of a similar character. [Nor. Secu. Co. v. U. S., 193 U.S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679, 24 S. Ct. 436; State ex rel. v. Inter. Harv. Co., 237 Mo. I. c. 369, 141 S.W. 672; State ex inf. v. Armour [*148] Pack. Co., 173 Mo. 356; State ex inf. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595; People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 251, 34 N.E. 785; People v. North Riv. S. R. Co., 121 N.Y. 582, 24 N.E. 834; People v. Gas. Tr. Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N.E. 798; Heim Brew. Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 64, 71 S.W. 691.]

The force and effect of this testimony is not weakened by the fact that on their face the articles of incorporation of the National Company, the instrumentality through which respondents affected the unlawful combination and agreement, which prevented competition and restrained trade bore evidence of the organization [***40] of said company for legal purposes, if, as we hold it has been shown here, such organization grew out of and was a part of an unlawful conspiracy between respondents to control the output, price and distribution of the articles and products in which they dealt and thus practically render impossible all legitimate competition ( Finck v. Schneider Gr. Co., 187 Mo. I. c. 244, 86 S.W. 213). The general rule in regard to combinations of the character here under review as announced in Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 49 L. Ed. 518, 25 S. Ct. 276, is not inappropriate in this connection; that HN5[<sup>15</sup>] although the separate elements of a scheme may be lawful if found to be bound together by a common intent as parts of an unlawful scheme to effect a monopoly, the plan may make the parts unlawful. The liability of respondents for violations of the statutes in question, if committed in this State, as we hold them to have been, will not be affected by the fact that the instrumentality through which they operated in violating the law was a corporation which had been organized for ostensibly legitimate purposes in another State. [Euston v. Edgar, 207 Mo. 287, 105 S.W. 773.]

From all the foregoing [***41] we find that the combination of respondents under the direction and management of the National Company resulted in a common management, a community of stock interests, an arbitrary fixing of the purchase and selling prices of live [*149] stock for food and the dressed product thereof and a limiting at the will of the management of the quantity or amount of live stock to be bought or sold, all of which resulted in the lessening or destruction of competition in this State between respondents and the other corporations whose stock was acquired by the National Company.

III. The contention that these proceedings are barred by the Statute of Limitations might be entitled to serious consideration under the statute (Sec. 1914, R. S. 1909) which subjects actions brought by the State or for its benefit to a like bar to that applicable to actions between private parties; and as these proceedings are for penalties or forfeitures HN6[↑] the three years' Statute of Limitations (Sec. 1890, R. S. 1909) would apply were it not for the fact that the pleadings allege that at the time they were filed, and the testimony shows that, not only at the time of the institution of these suits but thereafter respondents [***42] were members of and participated in the unlawful pool, trust and combination. The contention of the bar by limitations or from laches is, therefore, without merit.

IV. Respondents further contend that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant; that one corporation cannot be joined with others in a quo warranto proceeding for an abuse or misuse of corporate rights, because such a charge has relation to the individual contract of each of such corporations with the State, and that there is no such joinder of rights or interests as to authorize one proceeding against all. As has been heretofore shown, HN7[↑] informations in quo warranto are governed by the rules of pleadings in civil cases. The HN8[↑] respondents are charged not only with the same offenses, but such offenses are alleged to have been joined and to have [*150] been committed in an abuse and misuse of their franchises growing out of the connection of their transactions with each other. Under this state of facts, if guilty, the State is entitled to only one satisfaction, if it may be so designated, to-wit: A forfeiture of the corporation's franchises, or in the case of foreign corporations, a revocation of their licenses [***43] and such penalties as may be adjudged in addition thereto. [Sec. 10304, R. S. 1909.] This being true, the joint proceedings of the State against the respondents, in the two actions, which might well have been brought as one, is in conformity with the Code of Civil Procedure (See Secs. 1734 and 1795, R. S. 1909) prescribing in the one instance who may be joined as defendants, and in the other what causes of action may be united in one petition. The invoking of the authorities of these civil procedure statutes to sustain a joinder in the cases under review, finds confirmation in State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. I. c. 362, where the matter was ruled upon in conformity with the conclusion reached herein, and a number of Missouri cases cited in support thereof.

V. If the contention of respondents as to the repeal of the statutes under which these proceedings were brought was seriously made, it has been abandoned in [**390] their brief and arguments. It will suffice to say that these statutes were repealed and a new act was passed in relation to the entire subject-matter of pools, trusts and discriminations at the session of the Forty-seventh General Assembly (Laws 1913, [***44] pp. 549-555), but this act in no manner changed the burden of the offenses necessary to authorize the proceedings herein, but simply made additions to the acts declared in the former statute to be necessary to constitute an unlawful combination in restraint of trade. Respondents [*151] are, therefore, in nowise materially affected by this legislation and their contention is lacking in merit.

VI. HN9[↑] A defense of former acquittal or prior adjudication of the matters here involved was urged by counsel for respondents in the oral argument, but was in no manner pleaded or otherwise preserved for review. Therefore, whether the rule in criminal or civil procedure be applied, this question is not here for our consideration.

VII. The contention that the antitrust statutes are violative of the Constitution of the United States, urged by respondents in their answer, but seemingly abandoned in their briefs, is so completely foreclosed against respondents' contention by the ruling of this court in State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. I. c. 376, which was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States (224 U.S. I. c. 290), that time and space need not be taken in discussing this question. [***45] The validity of these statutes under the Constitution of this State has also been settled. [Finck v. Schneider Gr. Co., 187 Mo. 244, 271, 86 S.W. 213.]

Finding no error in these proceedings, a judgment of forfeiture of the franchises of the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company should be entered, dissolving and ousting it from all corporate rights under the laws of this State, and in addition that a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars be imposed against it; and it appearing that the other respondents, to-wit: the Hammond Packing Company, the Armour Packing Company, the Morris Company and Swift & Company are foreign corporations authorized to do business in this State, it is ordered, for the violations of the law aforesaid in their abuse and misuse of the authority conferred on them, that their licenses to do business in [*152] this State be revoked, and in addition that a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars be imposed against each of said corporations; and that each of said fines so imposed be paid into the State Treasury for the use and benefit of the State of Missouri, on or before the 15th day of June, 1915.

St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company, ouster and [***46] a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars;

Hammond Packing Company, revocation of license and a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars;

Armour Packing Company, revocation of license and a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars;

Morris & Company, revocation of license and a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars;

Swift & Company, revocation of license and a fine of twenty-five thousand dollars.

Upon the payment of the fines severally assessed against each of said corporations, within the time above limited, the forfeiture of the franchises of the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company, and the revocation of the licenses to do business in this State of the other corporations herein named as respondents, will be stayed pending the further order of this court, upon the conditions hereafter to be set forth by this court in its order and judgment in regard hereto. All of which is so ordered.

*Woodson, C. J., and Brown and Faris, JJ., concur, Woodson, C. J., in separate opinion; Faris, J., dubitante as to what is said concerning section 10310, Revised Statutes 1909; Graves, J., concurs in result of the opinion as to judgment of guilt as found in majority opinion, but [***47] thinks that under the peculiar facts in this case the fines are excessive and dissents as to the amount of the fines; Bond, J., dissents in part and concurs in part in separate opinion; Blair, J., having been of counsel, not sitting.*

Concur by: WOODSON; BOND (In Part)

Concur

---

[*153] WOODSON, C. J. (concurring). -- In my opinion the Legislature has the power and authority to control all the pleadings and procedure in this court the same as it has in the circuit courts, and it is wholly immaterial whether it pertains to proceedings in quo warranto, other original writs, or any other matters intrusted to the keeping of this court by the founders thereof.

The cases cited by Brother Bond on page 10 of his dissenting opinion (p. 168, post) do not, in my opinion, announce a contrary doctrine, and therefore, do not support the proposition that the Legislature has no such authority.

No such question was involved, considered or discussed in any of those cases, except by way of illustration, and that was against my learned brother's contention.

The question there decided was whether or not the statutes mentioned in those cases applied to the pleadings and practice in the Supreme [***48] Court, and not that the Legislature had no authority to enact laws governing those matters, if in its wisdom it deemed it wise to so do.

In the discussion of this subject, Judge Napton, in the case of State ex rel. v. Stewart, 32 Mo. 379, l. c. 383, by way of obiter, expressly declares the law to be contrary to the doctrine announced by my learned associate, Judge Bond. The ruling of this court, as announced in that case by Judge Napton is expressed in the following language:

"There is no doubt that this court is mainly intended by the Constitution as an appellate tribunal. In some instances original jurisdiction has been given to it, but chiefly with a view to enable it to exercise more effectually its superintending control over inferior courts. [**391] Its power in proceedings in quo warranto seems to be a departure from the general policy [*154] evinced in the construction of the court. Whether this jurisdiction was designed to extend to that class of informations which, under the English Statutes, had become essentially civil actions, commenced and conducted in the name of a public officer, but really for the mere ascertainment and settlement of private rights, [***49] is a question which might justify some hesitation and consideration, if it were necessary now to determine it. The Legislature, it is certain, has furnished this court with none of the machinery for trying issues in fact, and in practice such trials are altogether without precedent. These informations are attended with all the forms and must progress through all the stages incident to any other writ. There are pleas and demurrers, issues in law and in fact, trials by jury, motions for new trials in arrest of judgment, and writs of error. The issue of fact by the common law must be tried in the county where the franchise is situated. [Tancred, p. 3; Ang. & A. on Corp., p. 870, sec. 762.] If such a proceeding is entertained by this court, it must be conducted solely according to the forms of the common law, for neither the statute of W. & M. nor of Anne is in force here; nor does our own statute apply to the Supreme Court, but is exclusively confined to the circuit courts."

This language clearly recognizes the power of the Legislature to control the pleadings and practice of this court in proceedings of this character, should it deem it wise to do so.

The Stewart case just mentioned [***50] was cited with approval by this court in the case of State ex rel. v. Job, 205 Mo. 1, 103 S.W. 493, l. c. 25, 103 S.W. 493, where the court, in speaking through Fox, P. J., said:

"It is insisted by learned counsel for appellants that the relators were entitled to judgment of ouster by reason of the failure of respondents to answer on October 3, 1903, and it is urged that no sufficient answer or return was made to this proceeding until January [*155] 25, 1904. In support of this insistence our attention is directed to State ex inf. v. Vallins, 140 Mo. 523, 41 S.W. 887. In response to this contention it is sufficient to say that a complete answer to the contention is found in State ex inf. v. Beechner, 160 Mo. l. c. 78, 60 S.W. 1110. That case clearly marks the distinction between informations in the nature of quo warranto at the relation of a private person by leave, and proceedings by quo warranto instituted by the Attorney-General by virtue of his office. It was there expressly ruled that since 1855 there has been no difference in the rules applicable to filing of amended returns and answers in proceedings of this character in the circuit court, and the right to amend [***51] an answer in any kind of a civil suit. In pointing out the distinction it was there said: 'The plaintiffs rely upon State ex informatione Crow, Attorney-General, v. Vallins, 140 Mo. 523, 41 S.W. 887, and argue that it was there held that no amendment in a quo warranto proceeding was allowable. But the case at bar is very different from the Vallins case. This is a proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto at the relation of a private citizen, begun in the circuit court, whereas the Vallins case was a proceeding by quo warranto instituted by the Attorney-General ex officio in this court. This case could only be filed by leave of court, is controlled by the quo warranto statute, and the statute relating to the amendments in civil cases in a circuit court. The Vallins case was filed by the Attorney-General ex officio in this court, without leave, as he had a right to do, was a proceeding by quo warranto, which this court had a right under the Constitution to issue, was controlled by the common law practice in ex officio cases of quo warranto, was not affected by the statute in relation to amendments, for as was shown in the Stewart case (State ex rel. v. Stewart, 32 Mo. 379) that statute applies only to circuit courts and not to this court, and therefore no amendment was permissible in that case.'"

[*156] The other cases cited in the dissenting opinion, as previously stated, have no application to the proposition in hand.

From these observations it is clearly to be seen that the cases cited do not support the doctrine that the Legislature is powerless to control the pleadings and procedure in this court.

But upon principle, the mere fact that this court has authority to issue original writs, as I understand Judge Bond to contend, does not prohibit the Legislature from legislating upon and controlling those matters.

If that is true then by parity of reasoning the Legislature has no authority over the pleadings and practice in the circuit courts, in that or any other regard, for their authority is also derived from the Constitution, sections 1 and 23 of Article 6.

"Section 1. The judicial power of the State, as to matters of law and equity except as in this Constitution otherwise provided, shall be vested in a Supreme Court, the St. Louis Court of Appeals, circuit courts, criminal courts, probate courts, county [***53] courts and municipal corporation courts."

"Section 23. The circuit court shall exercise a superintending control over criminal courts, probate courts, county courts, municipal corporation courts, justices of the peace and all inferior tribunals in each county in their respective circuits."

As previously stated, the cases cited by Judge Bond simply hold that the statutes there cited only applied to the circuit courts and not to the Supreme Court.

Now, if the Constitution contains no inhibition against the authority of the Legislature to control the pleadings and practice in the circuit courts, then how can it be logically contended that it cannot control those matters in this court?

[*157] The authority of this and those courts to issue such writs is derived from the same authority -- the Constitution -- and the authority of the one is in no manner enlarged over or restricted as compared to the other; nor is the authority of the Legislature restricted in controlling the pleadings in the one any more than in the other.

If there is any difference in that regard, the authority of the circuit courts is broader because the authority conferred upon those courts to issue such writs [***54] is granted in general terms, while that of this court and the various courts of appeals is granted in specific or limited terms.

So, in my opinion, the cases cited by Judge Bond, instead of holding that the Legislature has no power to prescribe the rules of pleadings and practice in this court, are, upon the other hand, authorities to the contrary; and upon principle, as I have tried to point out, the Legislature does possess that power and authority, for the reason that this [**392] and those courts stand upon the same bottom and possess exactly the same power and authority in issuing writs of quo warranto and all other original writs.

It would be a most dangerous doctrine for this court to announce that the Legislature had no power to control the rules of pleading and practice herein.

While it is true, and it must be conceded, that the Legislature has no power to shear this court of its jurisdiction over the issuance and trial of such writs, yet there is nothing in the letter or spirit of the Constitution even remotely indicating that the Legislature may not, in its wisdom, control the pleading and procedure in this court in such matters.

With these observations in view [***55] I now return to the statutes in question. The most casual reading of them will show upon their faces that they apply to this court as well as to the circuit courts, and no sound reason can be advanced for holding they are not binding [*158] upon this court as well as upon those courts. All are creatures of the Constitution, and derive their authority in that regard from the same instrument.

II. The doctrine in the Williams case, 221 Mo. 227, is not sound, and was not followed by this Court in Banc in the case of State ex inf. v. Arkansas Lumber Co., 260 Mo. 212, 169 S.W. 145. The information in that case is in all respects substantially the same as is the information in this case; and also in that of the case of State ex inf. v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S.W. 902, where the same ruling was had.

In both of those cases it was held that where the information or petition for the writ charged that the conspiracy was formed for an illegal or unlawful purpose, then the facts constituting the conspiracy need not be stated, but upon the other hand, that where the conspiracy was formed for doing a lawful act in an unlawful manner, then the petition should state the facts constituting [***56] the conspiracy. This is elementary and is recognized by all of the courts on both sides of the Atlantic.

In the consideration of this question, this Court in Banc, speaking through Faris, J., in the case of State ex inf. v. Arkansas Lumber Co., 260 Mo. 212, 169 S.W. 145, l. c. 279, 169 S.W. 145, in clear and terse terms stated that rule in the following language:

"It is urged by learned counsel for respondents that the above case is decisive of their contentions upon this question in the instant case. Respondents, however, lose sight of the distinction which ought to be drawn under the law between the Missouri Pacific case, 240 Mo. 35, and the one at bar. In the Missouri Pacific case respondents were charged, in substance, with entering into an unlawful combination to do a lawful act; that is to say, an unlawful combination to fix a rate for carrying passengers not exceeding the statutory [*159] rate which they were permitted by law to charge. Since by statute they might charge a maximum rate of three cents per mile for carrying a passenger, and since even pursuant to the alleged unlawful conspiracy into which it was charged they had entered, they were not seeking or conspiring [***57] to charge a rate beyond the maximum rate allowed by statute, they were endeavoring only to do a lawful act by an unlawful means. This distinction is clearly drawn in the Standard Oil case, supra, 218 Mo. l. c. 366."

All pools, trusts and combinations mentioned in the statutes in question, in restraint of trade, etc., are unlawful, both at common law and under the statutes mentioned, and the rules of pleading prescribed in sections 10298 to 10301, Revised Statutes 1909, are in conformity with the common-law rule before stated, as has been held in this State in numerous cases.

III. Since reading the dissenting opinion, I have been convinced thereby that the penalties imposed by the majority opinion upon the respondents are excessive.

As I understand the policy of the State, it is not to unjustly or oppressively penalize the business interests of its citizens, but is to protect and encourage people to come into this State, establish and conduct legitimate business herein. Of course, that does not include business transacted in violation of the laws of the State of Missouri and good morals, whether transacted by citizens of this or any other State.

In the case at bar the record [***58] shows that prior to the filing the amended information in this case, the respondents voluntarily dissolved the National Packing Company and ceased to transact business through that medium, which was the heart of the unlawful conspiracy complained of in this case and the means through which that conspiracy was carried into execution. This shows that the respondents had in good [*160] faith, prior to the filing of the amended informations in these cases, deserted the path of sin and thereby opened up the business avenues to the equal competition of all; and also enabled the consumer of this country to purchase the products of the packing house from the cheapest vendor.

Since these facts appear from the record, and that such institutions are absolutely necessary for the well being of the State and citizens thereof, I can see no valid reason for placing the heavy fines mentioned upon them; and so believing, I am in favor of reducing the fines imposed by the majority opinion to at least one-half of the sums stated therein.

Since the foregoing paragraph III was written, and before the majority opinion was concurred in, the fine in each case of fifty thousand dollars was reduced to [***59] twenty-five thousand dollars against each defendant, in accordance with my suggestion. I therefore concur in the majority opinion.

Dissent by: BOND (In Part)

Dissent

---

I.

BOND, J. (dissenting in part and concurring in part). -- Being unable to agree to all the recitals of facts contained in the majority opinion or to its discussion of the law, I have prepared this statement of my views of both in this case.

The evidence shows that on May 31, 1902, a contract was made between Messrs. Armour, Swift and Morris for the formation of a New Jersey corporation, with a capital stock of ninety millions of dollars, to which should be conveyed [**393] the shares of stock of other corporations then owned or to be acquired by the parties. At the time of entering into this agreement the parties thereto owned or controlled large corporations bearing their respective names and engaged in the packing business. A forfeit of one million dollars was put up by each of them to secure the performance of this contract. [*161] Shortly thereafter Messrs. Sulzberger and Cudahy, who are also owners of or control large packing corporations, were admitted as parties to such contract on the terms therein specified.

[***60] Thereupon certain New York bankers were requested to provide the money for the capital of the proposed corporation. After negotiations to that end these bankers, anticipating the panic of 1903, declined to finance the project, and Sulzberger and Cudahy withdrew from the contract and took down their deposits. In the meantime, the original contracting parties had purchased the stock and assets of certain other corporations engaged in the packing industry, including the Hammond Packing Company and the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company and borrowing for that purpose eight millions of dollars from a New York bank and expending two millions additional in the making of such purchase.

Upon the debacle of their scheme of mammoth consolidation the purchasers of these properties found themselves involved to the extent of their outlays and in possession of assets which could not be devoted to the purpose had in view when they were acquired. The matter was submitted to their counsel and it was determined to obtain a loan of fifteen millions of dollars by putting up the properties so purchased and other securities as collateral, and to organize a holding and operating company with a capital [***61] stock of fifteen millions of dollars, the shares of which should be issued to the co-owners of the properties so purchased, in proportion to their respective interests. This was done by the issuance of the stock of that company into the following proportions, to-wit: Sixty thousand, one hundred and sixty shares to J. O. Armour; seventy thousand and forty-seven shares to G. F. Swift; twenty thousand, seven hundred and eighty-three shares to Edward Morris, and one share each to qualify certain [*162] directors. The company was duly organized under the corporate name of the National Packing Company under a charter issued in New Jersey in March, 1903.

Neither Armour, Swift nor Morris conveyed to the National Packing Company any of the stock or assets of the large corporations bearing their respective names and which they had contracted to put into the "big merger" which had collapsed. Neither the joint abstract nor the report of the commissioner sustains the recital in the majority opinion, that eighty per cent or any part of the assets of said corporations were conveyed to the National Packing Company. The capital stock and assets of the National Packing Company bore a very inconsiderable [***62] relation to the value of the outside properties owned or controlled by Messrs. Armour, Swift and Morris. The total meat and slaughtering business of the National Packing Company done in the year 1909 throughout the United States was seven per cent of the entire business of that kind done during that year. The total business done by the large corporations bearing the names of Armour, Swift and Morris for the same time was about twenty-nine per cent of the entire business carried on in the United States.

The commissioner appointed to take testimony in this case reported that the evidence did not show a monopoly of the meat and packing business if all of that which was done by the Armour, Swift and Morris concerns was added to that done by the National Packing Company.

The facts and the conclusions therefrom of the commissioner as to the formation of the National Packing Company are thus set out in his report:

"G. F. Swift, J. O. Armour and Edward Morris were, respectively, large owners of the stock of their respective companies, each standing at the head of the management of his company. These three men in the summer of 1902 formed a plan to consolidate the [*163] large packing [***63] companies of the country and entered into a written agreement setting out in detail the plan of the proposed consolidation which embraced the formation of a new corporation to which should be transferred the plants and properties of these three companies, thereby showing that these three companies had intended to consolidate themselves into a large corporation even if no other company joined them. They agreed to buy up other concerns with a view of embracing them in the consolidation, and with that end in view did actually buy the plants and properties and capital stock of the respondents and of the various other companies hereinbefore named. When, owing to the financial panic, it was found impossible to make the consolidation that had been contemplated, these three men organized the National Company and conveyed to it the capital stock and properties of respondents herein and of the other companies which had been bought. These properties were transferred to the National Company in full payment of its $ 15,000,000 capital stock, and the whole of it was issued to Swift, Armour and Morris in proportion to the interests which each had held in the properties conveyed and turned over to [***64] the National Company. The latter owned the capital stock and properties of respondents and said other companies, its entire capital stock was owned by the individuals, Swift, Armour and Morris in certain proportions and large amounts. They stood at the head of Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company respectively. What followed after that was what naturally would be expected: Swift, Armour and Morris elected the entire board of directors of the National Company, which was composed of these three and others who are officers and employees of the companies which they headed. That board of directors, of course, controlled the National Company, which established its general offices in Chicago where those of the other three companies were [*164] located. The directors of the National Company met every week at its offices. At that same time many of these directors were also members of the board of directors of Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company. Those who were not such members were connected with and held responsible positions in these same three companies. Of course, there came before the directors of the National Company all important information as [***65] to how the company was conducting its [**394] business, what cattle it was purchasing, how its meats and other products were selling, and what prices they were obtaining. This board, of course, from week to week, gave directions as to how the business of the National Company should be conducted in view of conditions which existed from time to time. Reports were sent to the office of the National Company from all of its subsidiaries, and from its branch houses and consignees all over the country, by private wire and otherwise, and among those reports were received statements of the prices at which Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company were selling their fresh meats in New York, Boston and other points. These statements were received by the agents of the National Company from the representatives of Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company at the selling points, and transmitted by the agents of the National Company to its main offices in Chicago. This condition of things existed harmoniously from the time of the incorporation of the National Company in 1903 until after the filing of the information in this case. It is very hard to believe that the directors [***66] of the National Company would so conduct that company as to injure the business of either Swift & Company, Armour & Company or Morris & Company, and it is equally hard to believe that the directors of either of these last three companies would conduct its business so as to injure the business of the National Company. There is no [*165] direct evidence that either Swift & Company, Armour & Company or Morris & Company had any agreement or understanding of any kind with the National Company as to the conduct and management of business. While some of the witnesses testified that they never knew of any arrangement, agreement or understanding of any kind between any of these companies, yet there is no hesitancy in finding that there was an unlawful agreement and understanding as to the conduct of business between Swift & Company, Armour & Company and Morris & Company and the National Company and the respondents herein and the other companies whose property and assets had been transferred to the National Company."

In addition, the commissioner reported that the Hammond Packing Company and the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company, who are the only defendants in the quo warranto [***67] filed by the Attorney-General, No. 16090, were engaged in business in this State, the former as an Illinois corporation under a State license and through a plant established at St. Joseph, Missouri, the latter under a Missouri charter and through a plant established at St. Louis, and had been so engaged since 1891. The second information filed by the same officer at the same time (June 20, 1910) was directed against three foreign corporations bearing the names of "Armour Packing Company," "Swift & Company," and "Morris & Company," and also licensed to do business in this State. That quo warranto is number 16089. As originally filed the information therein did not refer to the formation of the National Packing Company. The three defendants in the information were indicted and tried and acquitted in the Federal court at Chicago for an alleged violation of the Federal Antitrust Act. As to what took place at and after that trial the joint abstract shows, to-wit:

"W. E. Weber, called as a witness by the defendants, and being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

[*166] "I am, and have been for about seven years, general auditor of the National Packing Company, and as such general [***68] auditor have had general supervision and control of all branches of the accounting of the National Packing Company and its subsidiary companies.

"On July 17, 1912, the National Packing Company sold and transferred all packing house properties and branch houses owned or controlled by it, and delivered same on that day, for a cash consideration. At the same time, there was likewise sold all of the property of the various companies, the stock of which was held by the National Packing Company. The properties so sold were actually delivered to the purchasers on that date, and since then the National Packing Company has been in actual liquidation, and had done no business whatsoever, except business incident to such liquidation. These sales and these dispositions of its properties, as well as those of the companies the stock of which was owned by it, were made in good faith and for a valuable consideration. The property of the Hammond Packing Company, located at South St. Joseph, Missouri, was sold and delivered to the Armour interests, and the property of the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company, located at St. Louis, Missouri, was sold and delivered to the Swift interests. Since [***69] the sale and delivery of said properties to the Armour and Swift interests, respectively, the National Packing Company has had no interest whatsoever either directly or indirectly, in the operation of the business conducted on said properties, and the same has been owned, managed, controlled and directed solely by the Armour interests with respect to the Hammond Packing Company properties, and by the Swift interests with respect to the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company properties.

"I was a witness, and in constant attendance, at the trial in the case of the United States v. Swift et al., tried at Chicago, Illinois, in the United States District [*167] Court, which resulted in an acquittal of defendants and a judgment thereon upon the 26th day of March, 1912. In that case there was charged a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act in the formation and operation of the National Packing Company and its various alleged subsidiaries, the defendants being officers and directors of that company. Copies of the indictment, verdict and judgment in that case are herewith presented as exhibits.

"The testimony offered by the State here, is a portion of the transcript of the evidence [***70] in that case."

About one year after these events, to-wit, on November 6, 1913, the succeeding Attorney-General filed amended quo warrantos against the Armour, Swift and Morris Companies, charging them with complicity in the organization of the National Packing Company and making the same allegations with reference to the violations of the antitrust laws of this State, which are contained in the quo warranto filed against the Hammond and St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Companies.

When this information was filed the testimony had been fully taken by the commissioner, who made a preliminary examination before the proceedings were begun, and who had been reappointed after the filing of the quo warranto.

The two causes were submitted on the same joint abstract, after oral arguments by counsel for both parties, upon the evidence taken in No. 16090, and upon the pleadings and report of the commissioner and exceptions thereto filed by the respective respondents.

II.

When the original informations were filed in this court the respective respondents [***395] therein made their returns or answers, in which, first, they challenged the [*168] sufficiency of the information [***71] to charge any offense under the laws of this State; secondly, a general denial; thirdly, a plea of laches; fourthly, a plea that the statutes under which the proceedings purported to have been begun had been repealed.

Upon the presentations of these pleadings the court reappointed the former commissioner to report the facts only, but gave him no power to report or pass upon any question of law. The whole question in this case turns on two propositions: Did the information charge any offense under the antitrust laws of this State? Second, was there any evidence to sustain the report of the commissioner that such laws had been violated?

Taking these in order:

In issuing a quo warranto upon the information given to it by the Attorney-General ex officio, this court acts in virtue of its original jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution. The exercise of that jurisdiction cannot be controlled by the legislative body, nor can the pleadings in such actions be regulated by statute any further than this court permits or sees fit to adopt such regulation, as a reasonable rule for administering its jurisdiction as a court of the first instance. The Legislature cannot limit the original [***72] jurisdiction granted to this court, nor (what would be the same thing) limit the exercise of that jurisdiction. This has been repeatedly ruled in quo warranto when brought in this court by the Attorney-General ex officio as in the cases under submission. State ex rel. v. Stewart, 32 Mo. 379; State ex inf. v. Beechner, 160 Mo. I. c. 78, [60 S.W. 1110; State ex rel. v. Job, 205 Mo. I. c. 1, 103 S.W. 493; State ex rel. v. Vallins, 140 Mo. 523, 41 S.W. 887; State ex rel. v. Eby, 170 Mo. I. c. 497, 71 S.W. 521.]

It necessarily follows that the statute, Revised Statutes 1909, sec. 10310, quoted in the majority opinion, [*169] which dispenses with any pleading of "the manner in which," or when or where such pool, etc., was made or effected, if it applies in civil suits in the circuit court, as also the succeeding statute, Revised Statutes 1909, sec. 10312, dispensing with the same allegations in an indictment for a felony under the antitrust act, if either be valid or constitutional, are not decisive of the information under review, for under the settled law of this State neither of these statutes can control the pleadings in the two cases at bar.

The correct rule as to the [***73] allegations in quo warranto to forfeit a corporate charter is thus expressed: "In other words, whenever the information in quo warranto avers that the respondent has a corporate existence, and the evident purpose of the proceeding is to have its charter forfeited for nonuser, misuser, or usurpation of powers, then the pleader must plead specifically the acts of nonuser, the acts of misuser, or of usurpation relied upon for grounds of forfeiture, so that the corporation may know what it is called upon to meet and defend." State ex rel. v. Grimm, 220 Mo. I. c. 483, [119 S.W. 626.]

The above rule was to establish the necessary averments in a proceeding for quo warranto brought in the circuit court. It was approved in express terms in a recent case in Banc where it was also ruled that an information filed here by the Attorney-General, charging respondents with making an agreement to "lessen and destroy competition" in the carriage of passengers and freight and to "fix and regulate rates" without specifying what rates had been agreed upon, or the time fixed for their continuance, was insufficient to state a misuse, abuse or perversion of the corporate powers of respondent. [***74] The court added: "The allegation by the Attorney-General that the agreement or combination entered into by respondents is an illegal usurpation and an abuse and perversion of corporate power, is merely a conclusion or presumption of law on [*170] the part of the pleader, and not being predicated upon facts set forth in the information, does not supply the lack of such definite facts as should have been specifically pleaded." Schiffman v. Schmidt, 154 Mo. 204, [55 S.W. 451; Mallinckrodt Chemical Works v. Nernich, 169 Mo. 388, 69 S.W. 355; Gibson v. Railroad, 225 Mo. 473; Lackawanna Coal & Iron Co. v. Long, 231 Mo. 605, 133 S.W. 35.] It was accordingly ruled that the demurrs to the information in question must be sustained and the cause was dismissed. [State ex rel. v. Railroad, 240 Mo. I. c. 35 and 50.]

The conclusion above stated is clearly correct, and it is peculiarly pertinent in this case, in view of the fact that the court quoted in its opinion in that case the statute (section 10310, supra) so strongly relied upon in the majority opinion, its attention not being called to the fact that the information in the case was one ex officio on the part of the Attorney-General [***75] in this court, and hence the statute in question was inapplicable.

Under the authority of these two cases in Banc the rule must be considered as settled in this State that an information of the character of the present states no cause of action if it alleges in effect merely a violation of sections 10298 to 10301 inclusive of the present revision without definitely and specifically stating the facts and circumstances showing guilt under those sections. Such general allegations when made in a pleading, contain no more of the elements of an offense under the antitrust statutes, than would be embodied in a general accusation of violating that statute. In other words, allegations of the information which simply quoted the statutory terms forbidding agreements to lessen competition, fix, regulate and maintain prices or to regulate quantity and amount of output, had no legal efficacy whatever in stating any cause of action against the respondents charged with violating such section, or at least no greater potency in stating a cause of action than if the pleader had named the respondents [*171] and merely added that they were violating the statutes in question -- [*396] [***76] setting them out in his pleading. It follows therefore that the objections to such of the causes of action as were attempted to be stated in the informations by general averments that the respondents had violated the provisions of the antitrust statutes, must be sustained. These attacks upon the information are explicitly set forth in the returns in proceedings falling within the original jurisdiction of this court. Having power in such cases to prescribe the forms of pleading and judge of the sufficiency of the pleadings, and not having delegated that function to its commissioner, it is the duty of this court to render its judgment in the matter. In so doing, it is fully supported by the recent decision of Faris, J., in State ex rel. v. Arkansas Lumber Co., 260 Mo. I. c. 212, 169 S.W. 145, where an imperfect pleading, not a totally defective one, was sustained against an ore tenus objection argued after the finding of the commissioner, who in that case, unlike the present, was empowered to pass upon questions of law. In the case at bar, the objection was made in limine in the return of respondents; besides the omission of a pleading to state any cause of action whatever [***77] may be objected to without any formal pleading and at any time. As to the causes of action stated in the present information by averring in general terms that respondents violated the several antitrust acts, there was a total failure to state any legal cause of action against them. In such cases, the rule is essentially different from that applicable to a pleading which makes an imperfect statement of a cause of action. The latter can only be reached by a seasonable and suitable objection. The former is always open for review with or without a formal pleading.

III.

After eliminating from the present informations the causes of action based solely on the defective allegations [*172] contained therein, there still remains for consideration so much of the information as may allege any other cause of complaint. The portion of the information relied upon for that purpose states in substance that respondents, the Hammond Packing Company and the St. Louis Dressed Beef Company, organized the National Packing Company as a trust instrumentality and by means of the practices of that corporation in Missouri and in the United States conducted a non-competitive and pooling business through [***78] a unified corporate management and user of their assets and corporate powers in aid of the unlawful purpose for which said holding company was created. That previous to the organization of the National Packing Company its subsequently purchased corporations had been "legitimate competitors" in the cattle and meat business in Missouri and in the United States; that to carry out its unlawful purpose said corporation voted the stock, collected the dividends, and made use of the assets of the respondents and other "individuals and partnerships whose names are to informant unknown . . . with a view to lessen, restrict and destroy lawful trade and full and free competition . . . in products dealt in by respondents, and to regulate, fix and manage the prices thereof and to limit the quantity sold in Missouri and the United States . . . and have fixed and regulated such prices and are now from time to time unlawfully so doing," with a prayer for the forfeiture of the charter and license of respondents and the imposition of a fine.

The antitrust acts of Missouri were first enacted in 1889. Shortly thereafter a practical counterpart of them was enacted by the National Congress and known as [***79] the Sherman Act. Congress has not amended its first enactment. The Legislature of Missouri has amplified and broadened its antitrust law by successive amendments (1891, 1895, 1901, 1907), but without altering [*173] their essential character and nature in any material respect. One of the earliest cases in this State arose in the St. Louis Court of Appeals in a suit brought by the National Lead Company to collect a bill for sales of its goods made in this State, the defense being that the plaintiff in that case, a holding corporation, was engaged in a violation of the antitrust laws of this State then in force, and therefore amenable to the statute depriving it of the power to collect the price agreed to be paid for its products. The evidence in that case conclusively showed that the plaintiff corporation was created to take over the assets and property in the hands of certain trustees of an unlawful combine with a capitalization of ninety million dollars and engage in the actual violation throughout the United States and in Missouri of the provisions of the Sherman Act and the laws of this State prohibiting agreements, pools, trusts, combines and conspiracies in restraint of trade. [***80] The only defense by the plaintiff in that action to these charges was the fact of its corporate entity. The first question determined in that case was that the original trust agreement under which the predecessor of the plaintiff was organized, disclosed by its terms and the methods and practices of the parties thereto that it was entered into and carried on "to suppress competition, fix the price of commodities and limit their production and restrain trade." After making this finding the court added: "But the illegality of the organization and operation of the National Lead Trust, does not involve the conclusion that the purchaser of its assets, whether a natural or artificial person, succeeded also to the status of that illegal combination under the laws enacted in this State for the punishment of pools, trusts and conspiracies. For the mere purchase by one of the assets which another has employed for an illegal purpose, does not of itself imply that they will be used by the purchaser for the purpose of effectuating the objects [*174] to which they had been devoted by the seller. Such an intent on the part of the purchaser, if inferable, must be gathered from proof of [*81] all the circumstances [*397] characterizing the transaction, as well as his subsequent conduct."

The court then found that the original Lead Trust, after assuming its corporate form, engaged in the same business in this State and elsewhere which it had carried on before that metamorphosis took place. Hence there was nothing in such change which could exempt its transaction in this State from the application thereto of our antitrust laws, and added: "Hence it must follow that if the stockholders and governing officers of the plaintiff corporation combined with each other to violate any of the provisions of the section under review through the instrumentality of their corporate entity, then the corporation composed by them was a party to such illegal combination within both the letter and the spirit of the above section of the Act of 1891. Or concretely stated, that a combination which is illegal under the antitrust law, cannot be operated under the cloak of a corporation by its constituent members of governing bodies." Citing authorities. [National Lead Co. v. Grote Paint Co., 80 Mo. App. I. c. 247 at 267, 270.]

The doctrine of that case has been affirmed in this State [*82] in the exhaustive opinion in the Standard Oil case, 218 Mo. I. c. 452, and elsewhere. [To the same effect Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. I. c. 75, paragraphs A and B; United States v. Am. Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. I. c. 176.]

While it is true the corporation known as the National Packing Company was not preceded by an illegal combination of the corporations whose property it took over, for the informations explicitly stated that prior to the formation of the National Packing Company all the corporations, including respondents, whose assets and stock it acquired, were legitimate competitors, [*175] and that fact distinguishes it from the facts in judgment in the case of the National Lead Company v. Grote Paint Co., supra, yet the allegations of the information do in effect charge that the National Packing Company was contrived and incorporated for the specific purpose of enabling the two respondents and other unknown persons and corporations to enter into a trust or combine in violation of the laws of this State, and they go further and allege that the subsequent operation of the National Packing Company in this State and elsewhere was in contravention of such statutes. [*83] Under these allegations, showing the unlawful practices of that corporation, to all of which the two respondents were charged to be participants, a case was stated against them under the decisions cited. For if these allegations were shown to be true by the evidence adduced by the commissioner, then a prima-facie case was made. I therefore think that the information did state a cause of action against respondents, based on the allegations of the unlawful purpose and practices of the National Packing Company.

IV.

As to the sufficiency of the evidence to make a prima-facie case against the two respondents, I also think the proof, though not positive nor direct, affords a basis clearly justifying the deductions of the commissioner that there was no competition in this State between the two respondents whose plants were respectively located at St. Louis and St. Joseph, nor between them and any of the agencies representing the three corporations mentioned in the second information, since the three persons who controlled these also owned the National Packing Company. But the evidence wholly fails to show any specific instances of the fixing or regulating of the prices of cattle products, [*84] meats and other commodities dealt in by the respondents [*176] in the two informations. And it shows beyond question as found by the commissioner, that there was no actual monopoly obtained by the instrumentality of the National Packing Company, for its business bore a wholly insignificant relation to the mass of slaughtering business done at Kansas City. Neither is there any substantial evidence that the beef, hog and cattle business in this State was limited as to its quantity or the sale of its products by the operations of the National Packing Company, nor is there any evidence in the record that the prices of any of the commodities dealt in by the five respondents to the two informations were enhanced beyond the standard fixed by a fair market, on account of the existence of the National Packing Company and the business done by it in this State, or that the consumer or producer of such products or outside dealers have been injured by the operations of the National Packing Company. The most that can be said of the testimony contained in the joint abstract is that it discloses the basis of a legitimate inference that the five defendants did not compete with one another, and [*85] that this happened solely from the existence of the holding corporation owned by Messrs. Armour, Swift and Morris. The unification of a relatively small proportion of their interests in that form, the properties they bought for the abandoned project, and the control thereby exercised over business of the two other defendants, the Hammond Company and the Dressed Beef Company, precluded the possibility of independent competition on the part of the two latter companies in the commodities dealt in by them. I am convinced that the necessary consequence, acts and deeds of the defendants in organizing the National Packing Company and in conducting through it for their joint interest a non-competitive business in this State was to contravene the first of the following sections of the statute in force at the time these informations were filed. Those sections are to-wit:

[*177] "Sec. 10298. Combination in Restraint of Trade Declared a Conspiracy. Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any person or persons in restraint of trade or competition in the importation, transportation, [***86] manufacture, [**398] purchase or sale of any product or commodity in this State; or any article or thing bought or sold whatsoever, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and shall be punished as provided in this article. [R. S. 1899, sec. 8965, amended Laws 1907, p. 377.]

"Sec. 10299. Pool and Trust Agreements Defined. Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any other person or persons to regulate, control or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience or repair, or any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, of any class or kind bought and sold, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, contract, combination, confederation or understanding, to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, [***87] repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever of any class or kind bought and sold, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, shall be punished as provided for in this article. [Laws 1907, p. 377.]"

[*178] It has become the settled policy of the country that trade shall be competitive. Whether that is the true ideal of society as a philosophic principle need not be discussed, since all judicial inquiry has been foreclosed by the national and state antitrust laws. To enforce these is the simple duty of the court, and it is no answer to this to say that a particular combination created in contravention of the statute should be exempt from its penalties because its business operations have not been injurious to the consumer of its products. The statute was designed to forbid the making of a combination having the potentiality to injure the public, and denounces such as conspiracies in restraint of trade. Even at common law, an unlawful conspiracy was indictable without proof of any overt act. The statute has embodied [***88] that idea in the first section quoted above and the offense thereunder was technically complete when the National Packing Company was put into operation under an agreement of its creators that it should conduct the business of certain corporations owned by them and turned over to it without competition.

These statutes must be given a reasonable interpretation. This method of construing such statutes was established in a great judgment recently delivered, when the Supreme Court of the United States held that similar Federal statutes must be interpreted by the exercise of reason. That decision, when made, met a downpour of rant and was assailed by blasts of flatulent criticism, but, being founded on the rock of reason, it withstood both the rain and wind of verbosity, and emerged from the storm, in the serene light of correct thinking, as an enduring canon of legal science.

The judgment of the Chief Justice of the United States in these cases has been quoted and adopted by the Supreme Court of Missouri in the recent case in Banc. [State ex inf. v. International Harvester Co., 237 Mo. l. c. 369, 141 S.W. 672.]

[*179] In the nature of things there could be no competition [***89] between the two subsidiary corporations (respondents in the first information) for their capital stock was owned by the National Packing Company and they were operated by its direction and through its representatives, and this undisputed fact warranted the commissioner in finding that these two respondents under the mask of a holding company were violating the antitrust act (R. S.

1909, sec. 10298) which forbade agreements to lessen competition. But neither this fact nor any other evidence in the record tended to show that the two respondents were not competing with other corporations not owned or controlled by the National Packing Company. Nor that absence of competition between the two respondents had affected in any degree the market prices of meat and its products in this State, or regulated its standard, or diminished the output of such products in this State.

Neither was there any evidence in the record that a producer or consumer or a competitive dealer, was injured by the unification of ownership created in the formation of the National Packing Company. The bare fact that a single ownership was in contravention of the letter of a section of the antitrust laws, is all that [***90] can be deduced from the evidence in this case. These facts in my opinion are determinative of the proper judgment to be rendered herein.

In considering that question, attention must be given to the further fact that this holding company was voluntarily dissolved and its property sold to purchasers for cash before the second information was filed and about two years before the submission of the case. It is therefore apparent that the law will be fully vindicated and the antitrust act wholesomely administered by ordering ouster of the charter of the one and revocation of the licenses of the others. Such orders to be suspended upon a showing by respondents that their present business operations are not conducted [*180] by non-competitive methods, and will not be so carried on hereafter. Such ouster and revocation to be enforced in the absence of such showing or whenever it may be made to appear in the future that the respondents have violated the antitrust laws of this State, and to enforce such penalty jurisdiction should be retained.

This in substance has been our method of dealing with other cases when the respondents, though acting theretofore in violation of the law, have [***91] after judgment made such amends. Here the law has been seemingly complied with before judgment and after an acquittal of the officers of the corporation under an indictment for forming such corporation.

When the respondents dissolved the National [**399] Packing Company in advance of the decision of this case, they gave up the only thing upon whose existence any infraction of the laws of this State was predictable in the averments of the information. Necessarily therefore when the National Packing Company ceased, the non-competitive methods of respondents under that agency also ceased.

The informations admit that prior to the National Packing Company all of the respondents were "legitimate competitors." Seemingly, therefore, that status has been now regained. At least, there is nothing in this record that shows to the contrary. This record is a transcript of the one made on the trial of the three individuals who incorporated the National Packing Company for violation of the Federal antitrust law. They were acquitted in that proceeding.

The national and State idea on this subject is to foster the growth and expansion of business by normal and fair methods and through honest [***92] instrumentalities. It was not designed to check the development of industrialism in any of its forms or departments. Its only object is to prevent by the national and State law on this subject injury to the producer, or to the consumer, [*181] or a destruction of the rights of independent dealers. It is not the purpose of these acts in any way to limit or control the combinations of capital which are essential to the conduct of enterprises beyond the ability of single projectors. Those ends in my opinion will be completely achieved by the judgment heretofore indicated. For that reason, I dissent to the aggregate fine suggested in the majority opinion of a quarter of a million dollars, believing that the record affords no just basis for such a punishment or for any moneyed judgment beyond a taxation of costs against all the defendants except the Morris Company, of Maine, which had no existence at the date of the conspiracy alleged; hence the proceeding should be dismissed as to it.

Munter v. Eastman Kodak Co.

Court of Appeal of California, Third Appellate District

October 26, 1915, Decided

Civ. No. 1349

Reporter

28 Cal. App. 660 *; 153 P. 737 **; 1915 Cal. App. LEXIS 389 ***

HARRY MUNTER, Appellant, v. EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY, (a Corporation), Respondent

Prior History: [***1] APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Disposition: The judgment is affirmed.

Core Terms

---

dealers, articles, prices, retail dealer, retail, commerce, manufacture, anti-trust, terms, purchaser, restrictions, conditions, commodity, trade discount, combinations, customers, selling, coal, tobacco company, coal company, merchandise, wholesale, supplies, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN1 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

The Cartwright Antitrust Law, 1907 Cal. Acts, pp. 984-987, at § 11, provides that in addition to the criminal and civil penalties herein provided, any person who shall be injured in his person or property by any other person or corporation or association or partnership, by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any court having jurisdiction thereof in the county where the defendant resides or is found, or any agent resides or is found, or where service may be obtained, without respect to the amount in controversy, and to recover two-fold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceedings under this act may be pending, that the ends of justice require that other parties shall be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be made parties defendant and summoned, whether they reside in the county where such action is pending, or not.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN2 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

In a civil action for damages based upon the Cartwright Antitrust Law (Act), 1907 Cal. Acts, pp. 984-987, it is incumbent upon the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust or combination but also to allege and prove that his business or property is injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination. To be "injured in business or property," within the contemplation of said Act, is where the injury directly results from the fact of the existence of the trust. That is, where the business or property directly sustains injury solely by reason of the restrictions in trade or commerce which are fostered by such trust or combination. While one whose business or property is injured solely because of the restrictions in trade carried out by a trust organized and maintained for that purpose may maintain an action under the provisions of the Act for double the damages he actually suffers from the injury so inflicted, yet he cannot maintain an action based upon the Act if the injury, although directly the result of the wrongful acts of the trust or the constituent members thereof, does not arise by reason of the restrictions in trade or commerce carried out by such trust or combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

There is no violation of the Cartwright Antitrust Law, 1907 Cal. Acts, pp. 984-987 in the mere act of a person purchasing or otherwise securing control of a number of different concerns engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling the same article or commodity. The control by one person or corporation of a number of other concerns engaged in its line of business can only become unlawful when the effect of such combination is to establish and foster a monopoly which affects or injures the public welfare.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

It is within the legitimate province of a manufacturer and wholesale vendor to select its own customers, and to sell at higher prices to one than to another, provided, that such discrimination in prices is not the result of a combination, agreement, or conspiracy between it and others, the object of which is to monopolize or restrict trade or commerce or to prevent legitimate competition, or otherwise to injure the public.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Cartwright Anti-trust Law--Action for Damages--Refusal to Sell Goods--Pleading--Insufficient Complaint.--A complaint in an action for damages based upon the provisions of section 11 of the Cartwright anti-trust law (Stats. 1907, pp. 984, 987), fails to state a cause of action, where the gist of the charge against the defendant is that it is the owner or in control of a large number of different establishments engaged in the manufacture and sale as a wholesaler of certain articles mentioned in the complaint, and that it has refused to sell any of its goods to plaintiff at the prices at which and upon the conditions upon which it sees fit to sell the same kind of articles or goods to other retail dealers.

Id.--Damage--Essential to Show.--While in a criminal prosecution against persons for maintaining a trust or combination in restraint of commerce or trade, the gist of the offense is in the formation and maintenance of such trust or combination, and the fact of the existence of the combination for the purpose of doing some prohibited act is all that need be proved to support and sustain the charge, yet, in a civil action for damages based upon the Cartwright anti-trust law, it is incumbent upon the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust and combination, but also to allege and prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination.

Id.--Business Combination--When Unlawful--Monopoly.--There is no violation of the statute in the mere act of a person purchasing or otherwise securing control of a number of different concerns engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling the same article or commodity, and the control by one person or corporation of a number of other concerns engaged in its line of business can only become unlawful when the effect of such combination is to establish and foster a monopoly which affects or injures the public welfare.

Id.--Fixing of Prices of Manufactured Goods--Selection of Customers--Right of Manufacturer.--A manufacturer or wholesaler has not only the right to fix the prices for his goods, but he has the right to establish the prices at which such goods shall be sold by retailers, so long as such acts are not the direct effect or result of a combination formed and maintained by him and others to create restrictions in trade or commerce; and he has also the right to select his own customers, and to sell at higher prices to one than to another, provided that such discrimination is not the result of a combination, agreement, or conspiracy between him and others to monopolize or restrict trade or commerce or to prevent legitimate competition.

Syllabus

---

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Counsel: James L. Nagle, for Appellant.

Samuel Knight, for Respondent.

Judges: HART, J. Chipman, P. J., and Ellison, J., pro tem., concurred.

Opinion by: HART

Opinion

---

[*661] [**738] HART, J. The defendant demurred to the second amended complaint in this action on both general and special grounds and the same was allowed, without leave to amend. Thereupon judgment was entered in favor of the defendant.

From the judgment so entered, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The action is for damages and purports to be based upon the provisions of section 11 of the so-called Cartwright antitrust law. (Stats. 1907, pp. 984, 987.) Said section reads as follows:

HN1 [↑] "In addition to the criminal and civil penalties herein provided, any person who shall be injured in his person or property by any other person or corporation or association or partnership, by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any court having jurisdiction thereof in the county where [***2] the defendant resides or is found, or any agent resides or is found, or where service may be obtained, without respect to the amount in controversy, and to recover two-fold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceedings under this act may be pending, that the ends of justice require that other parties shall be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be made parties defendant and summoned, whether they reside in the county where such action is pending, or not."

The defendant, a corporation, is and had been for some time prior to the commencement of this action engaged, in the city of San Francisco, in the business of wholesale dealing in [*662] photographic supplies, kodaks, cameras, and the usual or essential equipments thereof.

The plaintiff was for more than two years prior to the seventeenth day of January, 1911, (the alleged time at which the alleged cause of action against the defendant accrued to the plaintiff) engaged at No. 716 Clement Street, in the said city of San Francisco, in the business of selling, exclusively at retail, "kodaks, cameras, photographers' supplies and other articles [***3] furnished and supplied exclusively by defendant to the dealers in said goods."

The complaint in substance alleges: That the defendant, as a wholesale dealer, has at all times mentioned in the complaint furnished and "continues to furnish" to the trade in the city of San Francisco and elsewhere the articles above mentioned at a certain trade discount to enable the retail dealers "to carry on the said business and annually issued a circular in which they fixed the price at which various dealers (retail) could sell the said articles"; that (upon information and belief) there are certain retail dealers to whom the defendant will sell said articles "at what the defendant terms 'dealer rates' under and by virtue of an agreement between said defendant and said dealers, and refuses to sell to any other person, although engaged in the business of dealers, unless the said defendant recognizes the said dealer as a dealer and refuses to said dealer the trade discount granted to other dealers in the same general business of dealers in said articles." It is further alleged that the defendant has made and entered into an agreement with dealers to whom it furnishes and sells said articles whereby [***4] the latter "bound themselves for one year, commencing on the 1st day of January, 1911, not to sell or dispose of said articles to any person engaged in said business as a retail dealer but the person who was as such dealer recognized by the defendant as a retail purchaser and not as a dealer and did agree and combine to pool and directly and indirectly did unite their said several interests so that the price that they should secure said articles for, and which were to be furnished by said defendant, and the companies, persons and associations under the defendant's control would be cheaper and less so that they could, as dealers, sell to the general public, and in pursuance of said conspiracy and combination the said plaintiff was prevented from obtaining said articles herein alleged on [*663] dealers' terms and prices"; that the defendant, for the purpose of obtaining the exclusive privilege of supplying the dealers of the city of San Francisco and elsewhere with the said articles and so controlling the market with respect thereto has, "by means of purchase and otherwise, obtained control of a large number of corporations, copartnerships, and other associations engaged in the [***5] manufacture of said articles so that persons engaged in the purchase and sale of said articles to the general public cannot obtain the said articles from any other person than defendant, and said dealer, in order to obtain said articles at a trade discount, the same as other dealers, must be first recognized by the said defendant."

It is averred that, up to the seventeenth day of January, 1911, the plaintiff was known to and recognized by the defendant as a retail dealer in kodaks, cameras, and photographers' supplies, and up to said date sold said articles to the plaintiff, as a retail dealer, at a trade discount, "so that he could again sell the same to the general public at the retail price fixed by the said defendant in the aforesaid annual circular"; that up to the time mentioned the plaintiff could as a retail dealer purchase said articles from the defendant or any of the corporations, companies, and manufactories owned and controlled by it; that, on the said seventeenth day of January, 1911, the defendant, "unlawfully, fraudulently, and knowingly, for the purpose of injuring, depriving, cheating and defrauding plaintiff of said business, notified plaintiff that it would refuse [***6] to sell, to deal any longer with, or recognize plaintiff as a dealer in the said articles and goods, and refused to sell to him at the prices with a trade discount for which they sell to other dealers in the city of San [**739] Francisco or to recognize plaintiff as a retail dealer in said goods or allow the plaintiff to order from them or purchase at prices for which they sold the same articles to other dealers at retail"; that the plaintiff, since said date, has been unable to purchase as a retail dealer any of the articles or goods mentioned from the defendant; that the defendant has by means of threats "and other acts" prevented other companies it controls from selling the said articles or goods to the plaintiff at the prices at which the defendant and its confederates sell the same goods to the different dealers recognized by them in the city of San Francisco, [*664] "and has compelled said dealers to aid and assist them in preventing the plaintiff from obtaining or purchasing said articles or goods from any of them under the penalty of refusing to receive any further orders from them as dealers or to recognize or deal with them as dealers or to sell to them at the prices [***7] sold to dealers recognized by them."

It is further alleged that the plaintiff, on the seventeenth day of January, 1911, had on hand or in stock and undisposed of a large quantity of the said goods and articles which he had previously purchased from the defendant, the latter then recognizing him as a dealer, and that said stock was of the value of eight hundred dollars, "which in ordinary course of trade would sell at retail for the sum of $ 1200.00, providing the plaintiff should be treated as a dealer by defendant and permitted thereafter to purchase at a trade discount"; that the plaintiff, having been engaged in the said business for a great number of years, had established a large and lucrative business from which he derived a profit of $ 3.50 per day, and that in building up said business he had expended a large sum of money and became widely known as a dealer in the goods and articles "of the defendant and its many confederates aforesaid, all of which was well known to the defendant, and the good-will on said day was of the value of $ 1,200.00." The plaintiff further declares that he would not have engaged in said business of handling the defendant's goods "but for the false [***8] and deceitful pretenses of said defendant that it would recognize the plaintiff as theretofore as a dealer and would treat him as such and permit the purchase of said articles and goods as such dealer for the purpose of sale, the same as other dealers."

The complaint proceeds: "That in the terms of sale issued to retail dealers in the defendant's goods and articles, all goods are sold to dealers at dealers' rates, upon the express condition that they may be resold in strict accordance with the conditions set forth in the notice of terms of sale and among the said conditions was that said dealers could not sell to any person for a price less than the retail prices fixed by defendant."

The demurrer was properly sustained.

While, in a criminal prosecution against persons for maintaining a trust or combination in restraint of commerce or trade, the gist of the offense is in the formation and maintenance [*665] of such trust or combination, and the fact of the existence of the combination for the purpose of doing some prohibited act is all that need be proved to support and sustain the charge, yet, HN2↑ in a civil action for damages based upon our anti-trust statute, it is incumbent [***9] upon the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust or combination but also to allege and prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination. Or, as was said by this court in Krigbaum v. Sbarbaro, 23 Cal. App. 427, 433, [138 Pac. 364]: "To be 'injured in business or property,' within the contemplation of said law, as we understand it, is where the injury has directly resulted from the fact of the existence of the trust--that is to say, where the business or property has directly sustained injury solely by reason of the restrictions in trade or commerce which are fostered by such trust or combination. In other words, while one whose business or property has been injured solely because of the restrictions in trade carried out by a trust organized and maintained for that purpose may maintain an action under the provisions of the antitrust law for double the damages he has actually suffered from the injury so inflicted, yet he could not maintain an action based upon said law if the injury, although directly the result of the wrongful [***10] acts of the trust or the constituent members thereof, did not arise by reason of the restrictions in trade or commerce carried out by such trust or combination."

It must at once become manifest, upon reading the complaint in this action, that, boiling its averments down to their simplest statement, the limit of the intendments thereof does not extend beyond the mere assertion of a claim that the defendant, for some reason not divulged by that pleading, refused to recognize the plaintiff as a retail dealer within the purview of the terms and conditions of its annual circular and so has refused to sell to him its goods and wares.

There is, as will readily be noted, no statement in the complaint that a combination has been formed and is being maintained by and between the defendant and its alleged allied companies to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce," (Stats. 1907, p. 984, sec. 1, subd. 1); or "to limit or reduce the production, or increase or reduce the price of merchandise [*666] or of any commodity" (Id., subd. 2); or "to prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity" (Id., subd. 3); [***11] or "to fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in the state" (Id., subd. 4); or to violate any of the provisions of subdivision 5 of section 1 of said act.

There is no averment from which it may be concluded or even inferred that the prices at which the defendant and others connected [**740] with it sell the articles named to retail dealers or the prices at which the defendant requires the retail dealers to sell said goods to the public are in excess of what ought to afford only a fair and reasonable return or profit on the manufacture and retail sale of the same, and consequently there is a failure to disclose that the public is or will be injured by the prices so fixed.

HN3[↑] There is no violation of the statute in the mere act of a person purchasing or otherwise securing control of a number of different concerns engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling the same article or commodity. The control by one person or corporation of a number of other concerns engaged in its line of business [***12] can only become unlawful when the effect of such combination is to establish and foster a monopoly which affects or injures the public welfare. In other words, the statute against predatory trusts or business combinations is violated only where a combination has been formed and is maintained for the purpose and having the effect of creating and fostering restrictions in trade or commerce or preventing legitimate competition in the manufacture and sale or purchase of merchandise, produce, or any commodity. No such combination is charged in the complaint. As before stated, the gist of the charge against the defendant is that it is the owner or in control of a number of different establishments engaged in the manufacture and the sale as a wholesaler of the articles mentioned and that it has refused to sell any of its goods and wares to the plaintiff at the prices at which and upon the conditions upon which it sees fit to sell the same kind of articles or goods to other retail dealers.

[*667] The defendant not only has the right to fix its own prices as a manufacturer or wholesaler, but also the right to establish the prices at which its goods are to be sold by retail dealers therein [***13] to whom it sells such goods for retail sale, so long as those acts are not the direct effect or result of a combination formed and maintained by it and others to create restrictions in trade or commerce, or, in short, to maintain a monopoly of the trade, and, as stated, nowhere does the complaint directly declare that this was the fact here. The defendant has the further right to sell its goods to whomsoever it pleases and to refuse to sell to particular persons. HN4[↑] In other words, it was and is within its legitimate province as a manufacturer and wholesale vendor to select its own customers, and, moreover, to sell at higher prices to one than to another, provided, of course, that such discrimination in prices is not the result of a combination, agreement, or conspiracy between it and others, the object of which was or is to monopolize or restrict trade or commerce or to prevent legitimate competition, or otherwise to injure the public, the protection of whose welfare is the first consideration of all anti-trust legislation. (Grogan v. Chaffee, 156 Cal. 611, [27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395, 105 Pac. 745]; D. Ghirardelli Co. v. Hunsicker, 164 Cal. 355, [128 Pac. 1041]; [***14] Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. 454, [60 C. C. A. 290, 64 L. R. A. 689]; Union Pacific Coal Co. v. United States, 173 Fed. 737, [97 C. C. A. 578].)

In Grogan v. Chaffee, it is said: "There is nothing either unreasonable or unlawful in the effort by a manufacturer to maintain a standard price for his goods. It is simply a means of securing the legitimate benefits of the reputation which his product may have attained." Again, the court in that case said: "It is not every limitation on absolute freedom of dealing that is prohibited, and it is the tendency of the modern decisions to view with greater liberality contracts claimed to be in restraint of trade."

The Continental Tobacco case, above cited, involved an action wherein the plaintiff sued for damages under the provisions of the federal anti-trust law. It was alleged in the complaint that the defendant, Tobacco Company, and its agent had refused to sell to or supply the plaintiff with the goods of the company at as low a figure as it sold to others and that the result was that he was forced out of business. The [*668] federal court, affirming the judgment [***15] entered upon an order by the court below sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, said: "The tobacco company and its employee sold its products to customers who refrained from dealing in the goods of its competitors at prices which rendered their purchases profitable. But there was no restriction upon competition here, because this act left the rivals of the tobacco company free to sell their competing commodities to all other purchasers than those who bought of the defendants, and free to compete for sales to the customers of the tobacco company by offering to them goods at lower prices or on better terms than they secured from that company. The tobacco company and its employee were not required, like competitors engaged in public or quasi public service, to sell to all applicants who sought to buy, or to sell to all intending purchasers at the same prices. They had the right to select their customers, to sell and to refuse to sell to whomsoever they chose, and to fix different prices for sales of the same commodities to different persons. In the exercise of this right they selected those persons who would refrain from handling the goods of their competitors as their customers, [***16] by selling their products to them at lower prices than they offered them to others. There was nothing in this selection, or in the means employed to effect it, that was either illegal or immoral."

In the case of Union Pacific Coal Co. v. United States, 173 Fed. 737, [97 C. C. A. 578], the defendant was prosecuted for the violation of the federal anti-trust act, the gist of the indictment being that the defendant with other defendants named in the indictment had combined to force one Sharp, a retail dealer in coal, and a purchaser of that article from the defendant, coal company, out of business by refusing to sell and transport to him any of the coal mined by said company. The court held that the evidence did not show a combination, and, among other things, said: " [**741] The gist of the offense charged in the indictment was not the refusal of the coal company and Moore to sell coal on the purchaser's terms, or of the railroad companies and Buckingham to transport it. It was the combination so to do, and if there was no combination there was no offense. There was no law which forbade the coal company to prescribe the terms on which it would sell its product [***17] to Sharp, or to any other purchaser. There was no law which required the coal company to sell its coal [*669] to Sharp on the terms which he prescribed, or to sell it to him at all. It had the undoubted right to refuse to sell its coal at any price. It had the right to fix the prices and the terms on which it would sell it, to select its customers, to sell to some and to refuse to sell to others, to sell to some at one price and on one set of terms and to sell to others at another price and on a different set of terms. There is nothing in the act of July 2, 1890, which deprived the coal company of any of these common rights of the owners and vendors of merchandise, and if it did not combine with some other person or persons so to do its refusal to sell its coal to Sharp unless he would withdraw his advertisement of a reduction in his retail price of it was not a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act charged in the indictment. ( Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173, [8 Am. Rep. 159]; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. 454, 460, 461, 463, [60 C. C. A. 290, 296, 297, 299, 64 L. R. A. 689]; 1 Eddy on Combinations, [***18] sec. 292; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U.S. 578, 589, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, [41 L. Ed. 832]; In re Greene, [C. C.], 52 Fed. 104, 115; In re Grice, [C. C.], 79 Fed. 627, 644; Walsh v. Dwight, 40 App. Div. 513, [58 N. Y. Supp. 91, 93]; Brown v. Rounsvell, 78 Ill. 589.)"

Thus it is clear that the defendant was entirely within its rights in fixing reasonable terms and conditions upon which alone the retail trade might handle its goods. There is nothing in the complaint which indicates or tends to disclose that the terms and conditions established and published by the defendant were or are unreasonable or, as before stated, that their effect is or will be to create restrictions in trade or commerce or of preventing or in any way circumventing free and unhampered competition to the detriment of the public. And it may with no impropriety be further suggested in this connection that the complaint does not show that the plaintiff was willing or able to accept and abide by those terms and conditions.

It is clear to our minds that the complaint utterly fails to make out a case of injury to [***19] property or business under the provisions of the state anti-trust act. In other words, it is plain that the plaintiff has not by the averments of his complaint shown that the defendant by the acts alleged against it has violated the inhibitions against the maintenance of [*670] trusts or combinations whose object is to restrict trade or commerce or to destroy legitimate competition within the meaning and intent of the so-called Cartwright anti-trust law.

The judgment is affirmed.

Chipman, P. J., and Ellison, J., pro tem., concurred.

Frey & Son, Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co.

District Court, D. Maryland

December 9, 1915

No Number in Original

Reporter

228 F. 209 *; 1915 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 983 **

FREY & SON, Inc., v. CUDAHY PACKING CO.

Core Terms

---

do business, cases, Warehouse, nonresident corporation, transaction of business, customers, Clayton Act, orders

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 Clayton Act, Jurisdiction

Section 12 of the Clayton Act provides for the bringing of a corporation into the court of any district in which, under that Act, it may be sued, by service of process upon it in any district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherein it may be found.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN2 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that suit may be brought in the district in which the defendant resides, or is found, or has an agent. Section 12 states that such suit, when against a corporation, may be brought, not only in the judicial district in which it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

A corporation may be sued under the Clayton Act where it transacts business. It cannot escape the obligation to respond because no agent of it, of the rank and character qualified to be served for it, can be there found. Suit may be there brought and process may issue to a district in which it cannot deny its liability to service.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

Whether a nonresident corporation is doing business specially, so as to subject it to suit at the instance of a particular defendant, may depend in part upon the relation of the things it is doing to the cause of action asserted.

Opinion by: [**1] ROSE

Opinion

---

[*209] ROSE, District Judge. The plaintiff is a Maryland corporation, carrying on business in the city of Baltimore. It claims that the defendant has, by doing a thing forbidden by the anti-trust laws of the United States, injured it in its business. To recover for the damage so brought about this suit was instituted.

The defendant is an Illinois corporation. It appears specially for the sole purpose of moving to quash the marshal's return of service. It says that (1) it is not liable to suit in this district, because it neither resides, is found, transacts business, or has an agent herein; and (2) if liable herein, it cannot be brought into court by service upon the individuals actually served by the marshal.

The first contention alone raises any vital issue. It is true that there are high authorities for the rule that a nonresident corporation can ordinarily be sued only (1) in the district in which it is carrying [*210] on business; (2) by service upon some agent or officer appointed by and representing it; and (3) in which some state law makes it amenable to suit as a condition of doing business therein. United States v. American Bell Telephone [**2] Co. (C.C.) 29 Fed. 17.

The third of these requirements is obviously inapplicable here. This is a suit brought in a federal court, to recover for a wrong done in contravention of a federal law, which law specifies the district in which such suit may be prosecuted.

Nor in this case is the second of much greater real importance. Ordinarily, process either of a state court or of a District Court of the United States cannot be served beyond the territorial limits of the state or of the district, as the case may be. A nonresident corporation may be doing business in a district, and therefore theoretically be liable to suit therein; but if it is not represented therein by an agent, upon whom process against it may be legally served, it cannot, against its will, be brought into court. The framers of the Clayton Act, however, have taken care that suits authorized by it shall not be so obstructed. The twelfth section of that statute HN1 [up arrow] provides for the bringing of a corporation into the court of any district in which, under that act, it may be sued, by service of process upon it in any district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherein it may be found. If the defendant is properly suable [**3] in this district, the objection to the representative character of the so-called agent, upon whom the process herein was served, would not end the suit here. It could have no other effect than to delay the progress of the case until process could be served upon the defendant in the district of which it is an inhabitant.

The first requirement remains of binding force, except in so far as, if at all, it has been modified by the provisions of the Clayton Act. The fourth section of that act HN2 [up arrow] provides that such suit as this may be brought in the district in which the defendant resides, or is found, or has an agent, and section 12, that such suit, when against a corporation, may be brought, not only in the judicial district in which it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business.

Plaintiff contends that both these sections are applicable to corporate defendants, although section 12 obviously has nothing to do with noncorporate. Assuming, without deciding, that defendant's contention in this respect is sound, there is nothing in the history of this legislation, or of the needs, or supposed needs, which gave rise to it, to suggest that Congress [**4] intended to say that a defendant corporation could be sued in any district in which an agent of it happened to be on business other than its own. Clearer language than that used would be required to show that Congress intended to change the rule that an officer, agent, or employee of a corporation cannot carry it into any jurisdiction in which he is not acting for it. But, when he is so acting, the corporation is, through him, doing something there, and, if it is through him regularly doing something, it is in the broadest sense, at least, doing business.

The language used, viz. "has an agent residing," does not suggest that the mere casual presence of an agent would be sufficient. It seems as [*211] if Congress, in using it, had in mind those cases which have held that a corporation is not doing business generally in a district, unless it is there carrying on a fairly continuous series of transactions. Into many of these questions it is not here necessary to go.

Congress doubtless meant to facilitate the redress of wrongs done in violation of the anti-trust acts. It wanted to let a plaintiff sue wherever it was most convenient to him, provided injustice was not thereby [**5] done a defendant. The provision in section 12, for serving process in another district from that in which the suit was instituted, itself took out of a plaintiff's way most, if not all, the purely technical obstacles which had formerly obstructed it. Congress, in designating the district in which the suit against a corporation might be brought, did not materially, if at all, change the rule which had been laid down in a long line of well-considered cases. Probably in the nature of things it could not. The intangible thing, a corporate aggregate, can fairly be supposed to be always found in the state which gave it being. It may, without obvious unfairness, be made suable wherever it chooses to carry on some part of its business. But it cannot be said to be anywhere else. Persons connected with it may be; but, if it is not acting through them at the time, they cannot carry it with them. But, so far as corporate defendants are concerned, does not the act go as far as there is any reason any one should want it to go? HN3 A corporation may be sued under this statute where it transacts business. It cannot escape the obligation to respond because no agent of it, of the rank and character [**6] qualified to be served for it, can be there found. Suit may be there brought and process may issue to a district in which it cannot deny its liability to service.

The act so construed will for practical purposes usually make it unimportant to consider, in connection with liability to suit and to service, any question except whether the defendant is doing or transacting business in a particular district, for, unless it is, it cannot possibly have any agent who, as agent, is therein.

Last May, when this suit was brought, was the defendant doing business in this district? The relevant facts are not in dispute. For some years previous it had a number of customers in this state. Most of these were jobbers, handling wholesale groceries and like goods. They bought defendant's products for the purpose of reselling them to retailers in the ordinary course of business. For some reason or other it preferred to call them "distributing agents." In some instances defendant sold some of its products directly to ultimate consumers. They were usually institutions or owners of large buildings, who bought in fairly considerable quantities. It had drummers, who regularly visited the jobbing [**7] trade, in order to secure orders for its wares.

As is the usual business custom, when these orders were received at one or the other of defendant's principal offices outside of Maryland, reserved to itself the right of accepting or rejecting them. It further stimulated a demand for certain of its products by sending an agent to the retail grocers. It was his business to show how the appearance of the corner grocery could be made more attractive by displaying the advertising matter which the defendant was ready to furnish to those [*212] who kept its "Old Dutch Cleanser" for sale. If this agent was able to interest the grocer, he would ask him with what jobber he dealt, and if one who handled defendant's goods was named the agent would get an order from the grocer on such jobber for as much of defendant's goods as the grocer could be induced to buy. Whether the order was or was not filled, of course, rested with the jobber. In these ways, in addition doubtless to the usual advertising through the mails and otherwise, the defendant sought here to create and maintain a demand for its wares.

To facilitate the supply of that demand, when the goods were, as usual, called for [**8] in less than carload lots, and for the purpose of rendering easier the work of its retail demonstrator, it had, some years ago, entered into an arrangement with the Fidelity Warehouse Company. The latter operates several large warehouses in this city. As such arrangement worked out in actual practice, the defendant kept always at such warehouses a stock of its goods, the value of which at any one time might be as much as $10,000. These goods were shipped in carload lots to the Warehouse Company, which unloaded them from the car and stored them. Upon orders from the defendant, sent from one of its officers outside the district, the Warehouse Company would deliver cases of these goods to persons to whom the defendant, upon the orders in part secured by its drummers, had sold them, or it would, upon like orders, ship portions of them by rail or water in intra or inter state commerce. The Warehouse Company itself made no sales. The contract between it and the defendant provided for the collection in some cases of money due on goods sold C.O.D.; but in point of fact such transactions were so extremely rare as to be almost unknown. It was authorized to deliver goods up to a certain [**9] aggregate quantity to certain named customers of the defendant, upon the request of such customers, and without receiving any specific authority so to do from the defendant. Such customers were, however, seldom or never dealers, but were the large ultimate consumers before mentioned. Moreover, the defendant kept at the warehouses quantities of its advertising matter, which were used by its demonstrator in decorating retail grocery stores.

For its services the Warehouse Company was compensated by certain agreed storage and hauling charges. Under the circumstances, was the defendant doing business in Maryland? Many cases have been referred to by one or the other party. It is believed all have been examined. A great many of them are beside the question here to be passed on. Quite a number turn, not so much upon whether a nonresident corporation or individual is doing business of some kind in a particular state, as upon whether what the state has done, or attempted to do, amounts to a direct burden upon interstate commerce. As, for example, there is no question that, in transporting interstate freight into, out of, or through a state, the carrier transacts business therein; but [**10] it is not business upon which a state can impose a direct burden.

Other cases cited have their origin in state statutes, which prohibit a nonresident corporation doing business in the state, suing in the state [*213] courts, unless it has complied with certain requirements as to the appointment of agents, etc. Here the courts are disposed to construe the phrase "doing business" in the light of the policy which dictated such enactments.

As the Supreme Court itself has pointed out, it is not possible, in cases in which the sole issue involved is the liability of a nonresident corporation to be sued, to formulate any general rule of universal application. Each of such cases must depend upon its own facts. International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U.S. 579, 583, 34 Sup. Ct. 944, 58 L. Ed. 1479. HN4↑ Whether a nonresident corporation is doing business specially, so as to subject it to suit at the instance of a particular defendant, may depend in part upon the relation of the things it is doing to the cause of action asserted. Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Spratley, 172 U.S. 602, 618, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569.

In the case at bar the gravamen of the plaintiff's declaration [**11] is that the defendant, in order to coerce it to become a party to an alleged agreement, which was to be carried out chiefly in Maryland, refused to sell to plaintiff its goods; that is to say, refused, for this alleged illegal purpose, to let plaintiff share in any of the facilities, to furnish which was the purpose of the business activities, which, as before set forth, the defendant carried on in Maryland, or caused others to carry on for it. There is no reason under such circumstances to interpret the phrase "doing business" as if it was a term of an art or a mystery. The average man, whether intelligent or unintelligent, would suppose that a concern which kept steadily on hand in Maryland perhaps $10,000 of goods to facilities their prompt delivery to numerous customers in that and neighboring states, so soon as the company at one of its outside offices had accepted offers which it kept men busy in Maryland soliciting, was doing business in the state. Whatever may sometimes be the case, there is no occasion here to assume that the reason of the law is not a man's natural reason.

It follows that, when this suit was instituted, the defendant was doing business [**12] in this district, within the meaning of the Clayton Act. The defendant says, nevertheless, that the return should be quashed because served upon persons who were not its agents of a character or rank upon whom such service could lawfully be made. Such an issue may often be delicate and difficult. A corporate defendant who is enough in the state or district there to wrong some one should be held to be enough in the state or district to be there answerable for what it has there wrought, provided such holding can be made without giving sanction to practices which in other cases would work injustice. On the other hand, no corporate defendant should be compulsorily brought into court by service upon one who, although connected with it in some sense, bears no such relation to it as to make it fair to presume that either it or any other reasonable and prudent person in like case would care to run the risk of being served by service upon him.

To subject the nonresident to suit in favor of the resident is often, although not always, a result which may justly be thought desirable. [*214] State legislation and state decisions show how the anxiety to attain that end has led to holding [**13] good the service of process upon so-called agents, who have little connection with, responsibility to, or concern for the absent defendant. On the other hand, to insure, so far as is humanly possible so to do, that no one shall be judged without having a real opportunity to be heard, is perhaps the most fundamental of all the rights involved in due process of law.

In suits under the Clayton Act is there any reason even to attempt a solution of such problems, or to make decisions which in some other cases may lead to injustice? Provided the defendant is suable at all in the district, why not see to it that it shall be summoned in a way to which no possible objections can be made, and which cannot create a dangerous precedent. Whenever upon grounds not obviously frivolous the question is raised as to the authority of the agent upon whom process was served, why cannot the court suspend its answer until the plaintiff has had due process served, as the Clayton Act authorizes, in the home district of the defendant, upon some of its officers whose right to accept service for it cannot be gainsaid. When such service has been made, the question as to whether the earlier one was or was [**14] not good will have become so purely academic that there will seldom be an occasion to answer it at all.

Such course will be allowed in this case, provided plaintiff acts with reasonable diligence in causing process to be served upon the defendant in the district of its residence.

---

End of Document

Bogata Mercantile Co. v. Outcault Advertising Co.

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, Texarkana

January 13, 1916, Decided

No. 1528.

Reporter

184 S.W. 333 *; 1916 Tex. App. LEXIS 272 **

BOGATA MERCANTILE CO. v. OUTCAULT ADVERTISING CO.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from Red River County Court; George Morrison, Judge.

Action by the Outcault Advertising Company against the Bogata Mercantile Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Appellant, a Texas corporation, carried on its mercantile business at Bogata, in this state. Appellee, an Illinois corporation, carried on its advertising business at Chicago, in that state. September 24, 1913, appellant, through one of appellee's traveling agents in this state, sent it an order as follows:

"Order No. 151.

"To Outcault Advertising Co., 508 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.:

"Date Sept. 24, 1913.

"Ship us, at our expense, as per samples shown you, Outcault Service De Luxe to cover a period of one year, beginning Oct. 10, 1913. This service to consist of

"40 Outcault Service De Luxe (4 Column) cuts.

"12 Outcault Service De Luxe (6 Column) cuts.

"One font of type. (9 lbs. in font).

"We agree to pay you net cash monthly, at the rate of $ 3.50 per week, for one year, we to have exclusive right to use the above Outcault Service De Luxe in our city only, and to hold type and cuts subject to your order when this contract expires.

"Failure [**2] to pay any installment when due renders full amount of this contract due.

"This contract cannot be canceled. Ship all at one time if possible.

"Lines of goods we carry,

"Fill in 'Yes' or 'No.'

"Dry Goods, Yes. Millinery, Yes.

"Ladies' Made Wear, Yes.

"White Goods Sale When .

"Fur Sale When? No.

"Anniversary Sale When? Sept.

"Men's Clothing, Yes.

"Men's Shoes, Yes.

"Ladies' Shoes, Yes.

"Furniture, No. Groceries, Yes.

"Rugs, Yes. Carpets, No.

"M. O. Cuts, Yes.

"Bogata Mercantile Co.,

"Per B. C. Peyton.

"[Write plainly.]

"Town, Bogata.

"State, Tex.

"J. M. Wyatt, Salesman."

The order was received and accepted by appellee on September 27, 1913. On that day appellant telegraphed appellee as follows:

"Withhold shipment adv. matter. Will advise by letter"

--and on the same day wrote appellee as follows:

"Bogata, Texas, 9/27, 1913.

"Outcault Adv. Co., Chicago.--Gentlemen: We wired you to-day:

"Withhold shipment of adv. matter. Want to make change.' Which we now confirm.

"Owing to the limited circulation of our little paper here we have decided that [**3] your proposition is too large for us. We realize the importance of advertising, and are now, and intend to contribute to adv., yet your proposition is too large for us. Consequently we would ask that you cancel our order. It is quite probable that we will take up your line for the fall of 1914.

"Yours, Bogata Mercantile Co.,

"Per B. C. Peyton."

The telegram was received by appellee the day it was sent, but, as found by the court, after appellee had received and accepted the order. The letter was not received by appellee until September 29, 1913. Appellant's president, Peyton, testified:

"Mr. Wyatt, salesman for the Outcault Advertising Company, came into the store of his own accord and told me about this advertising. I didn't know what the Outcault Service De Luxe was, but Mr. Wyatt explained that they would furnish special cuts and special advertising matter for our store, and that the cuts would have to be fixed with our name and address, and picture cuts specially designed for us would be furnished each week, 52 of them. I understand from Mr. Wyatt that this material would have to be specially prepared for our use after our order was accepted by the company. [**4] I don't know how long it would take."

The witness Hadden, who seems to have been the manager of appellee's business at Chicago, testified:

"We kept no record of when the goods in question on this contract were manufactured, and consequently I cannot recall the exact datings and cannot give them and cannot say what of them were manufactured prior to September 27, 1913, and what prior to receipt by our company of letter from the Bogata Mercantile Company dated September 27, 1913."

Part of the material constituting the advertising service appellant contracted for was shipped to it by appellee October 2, 1913, and the remainder thereof October 3, 1913. Appellant declined to receive either shipment, claiming that it had countermanded the order therefor by its telegram and letter of September 27, 1913, and that it therefore was not liable to appellee on the contract, and, further claiming it was not liable because, it alleged: (1) The contract was in violation of the antitrust law of this state, in that it was for an exclusive right to use appellee's advertising "service de luxe"; and (2) was first breached by appellee, in that it entered into a similar contract with the Bogata [**5] Drug Company on or about September 24, 1913. Appellee thereupon commenced this suit in a justice court. On appeal to the county court judgment was rendered in appellee's favor against appellant for $ 182, the sum sued for, and appellant appealed.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

countermanding, agree to pay, advertising, witness testimony, use of materials, fair inference, prima facie, purposes, telegram, furnish

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Preemption

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

HN1 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Where a transaction evidenced by a contract is interstate commerce, it is not subject to the antitrust laws of the State of Texas.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Damages > Avoidable Consequences

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Damages, Avoidable Consequences

In a breach of contract case, the burden is on a defendant to show that when the defendant breached the contract, the plaintiff might have pursued, but did not, a course which would have mitigated the damage it suffered.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Commerce -- "Interstate Commerce" -- Application of State Laws.

Where a mercantile corporation in Texas signed an order directing an advertising corporation in Chicago to ship certain advertising cuts and type, the transaction was interstate commerce, and not subject to the anti-trust laws of Texas.

Contracts -- Countermanding Order after Acceptance -- Effect.

Where defendant signed an order, directing plaintiff to ship it certain advertising cuts and type, defendant's acceptance of the order completed the contract between the parties, and the subsequent countermanding of the order did not relieve defendant of the legal consequences of its breach of contract.

Contracts -- Breach -- Exclusive Privileges.

Where a contract by which plaintiff agreed to furnish defendant certain advertising service, consisting of certain advertising cuts and type, provided that defendant was to have the exclusive right to use such service in its city, plaintiff did not break the contract by furnishing another party in the same city a different advertising service.

Damages -- Mitigation of Damages -- Burden of Proof.

An order, signed by defendant, for certain advertising cuts and type, provided that defendant was to hold the type and cuts, subject to plaintiff's order, when the contract expired. Defendant countermanded the order, and plaintiff sued for the amount agreed to be paid. There was evidence warranting the inference that the advertising material prepared for defendant could be used only by it, and would have been of no value to any one else, and that it had been fully prepared before plaintiff's receipt of the letter countermanding the order. Held, that the contract was not one for the sale of the material, but for its hire to defendant, and it appeared prima facie that plaintiff's damage was the sum defendant agreed to pay for the use thereof, and the burden was on defendant to show that plaintiff might have pursued a course which would have mitigated the damages.

Counsel: Long & Wortham, of Paris, for appellant.

Austin S. Dodd, of Clarksville, for appellee.

Judges: WILLSON, C. J.

Opinion by: WILLSON

Opinion

---

[*334] WILLSON, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). The HN1 transaction between appellant and appellee evidenced by the contract was interstate commerce, and hence not subject to the anti-trust laws of this state. *Albertype Co. v. Gust Feist Co.*, 102 Tex. 219, 114 S.W. 791; *Eclipse Paint & Mfg. Co. v. New Process Roofing & Supply Co.*, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 553, 120 S.W. 532; *Moroney Hardware Co. v. Goodwin Pottery Co.*, 120 S.W. 1088;

McCall Co. v. Stiff Dry Goods Co., 142 S.W. 661; Koch Vegetable Tea Co. v. Malone, 163 S.W. 662, 663.
Therefore the first and second assignments are overruled.

There was evidence to support the finding [*335] involved in the judgment that appellee had received and accepted appellant's order at the time it received the latter's telegram of September 27, 1913. [**6] If, therefore, that telegram should be construed as one countermanding the order--and we think it should not be so construed--it did not have the effect appellant claims it had. Appellee's acceptance of the order completed the contract between the parties, and countermanding the order thereafterwards did not relieve appellant of the consequences the law attached to its breach of its contract. Therefore the fourth assignment is overruled.

There was testimony to support a finding that the "little druggist advertising service," which appellee bound itself to furnish to the Bogata Drug Company, was not the same as the "service de luxe," which it bound itself to furnish to appellant. Therefore the fifth assignment, in which appellant complains that it appeared that appellee violated its contract with it by entering into a similar one with the Bogata Drug Company, is overruled.

What has been said disposes of all the assignments except the third, in support of which appellant contends that the measure of appellee's damages was not the sum it agreed to pay for the use of the advertising material, as determined by the court, but was the difference between that sum and the value of the material [**7] in the condition it was in at the time the order for same was countermanded. The fair inference from the testimony of the witness Hadden, set out in the statement above, was that appellee had done all it was to do to prepare the material for the use appellant was to make of same before it received appellant's letter of September 27, 1913, countermanding the order. The fair inference from the testimony of the witness Peyton was that the material as so prepared could have been used only by appellant for advertising purposes, and therefore was of no value for such purposes to any one else. Therefore, it seems to us, it prima facie appeared that appellee was entitled to recover as damages for the breach by appellant of its contract the sum it had agreed to pay for the use of the material. The contract was not one for the sale of the material, as appellant treats it. It was for the hire thereof to appellant for a period of one year. What appellant was entitled to was the use of the material during that period. What appellee was entitled to was the material at the expiration of that period and the sum appellant agreed to pay for its use to that time. As appellee was entitled to the material [**8] after it had been used by appellant during the time agreed upon, it prima facie appeared, we think, that what it lost as a result of appellant's refusal to receive and use the material as agreed upon was the sum appellant undertook by its contract to pay for the use thereof. It so appearing, as we understand the rule, HN2[<sup>1916</sup>] the burden was on appellant to show, and it did not, that, when it breached the contract appellee might have pursued, but did not, a course which would have mitigated the damage it suffered.

Jefferson & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Dresson, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 282, 96 S.W. 63; Porter v. Burkett, 65 Tex. 383.

The judgment is affirmed.

Woods v. Am. Brewing Ass'n

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, Beaumont

January 20, 1916, Decided

No. 57.

Reporter

183 S.W. 127 *; 1916 Tex. App. LEXIS 144 **

WOODS v. AMERICAN BREWING ASS'N.

Subsequent History: [**1] Rehearing Denied February 10, 1916.

Prior History: Appeal from District Court, Orange County; A. E. Davis, Judge.

Action by W. C. Woods against the American Brewing Association. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

beer, Brewing, buying, selling, commodity, manufactured, shipped, transportation, parties, association of persons, anti-trust, products, purchasing, territory, tickets, restraint of trade, sell beer, merchandise, preparation, breweries, saloon, sales, void, barrels, dealers, bottle, article of merchandise, handle, firms, conspiracy

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Under Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796, trusts are defined as a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for any or all of the following purposes: (1) To create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions of trade or commerce or aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state. (2) To fix, maintain, increase, or reduce the prices of merchandise, produce, or commodities or the cost of insurance, or of the preparation of any produce for market or transportation. (3) To prevent or lessen competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale, or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities or the business of insurance, or to prevent or lessen competition or aids to commerce or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation.

(4) To fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the price of any article or commodity, merchandise, produce, or commerce, or the cost of transportation or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, shall be in any manner affected, controlled, or established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Transportation Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

HN2 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Under Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796, trusts are further defined as (5) To make, enter into, maintain, execute, or carry out any contract, obligation, or agreement, by which the parties thereto bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose, or transport or prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity, or to make any contract of insurance at a price below a common standard or figure, or by which they shall in any manner agree to keep the price of such article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of preparation of any product for market or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they in any manner affect or maintain the prices of any commodity or article or the cost of transportation insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool, impede, or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article or commodity, or charge of transportation or insurance, or charge for the preparation of any product for market or transportation, whereby the price or such charge might be in any manner affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Under Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796, trusts are further defined (6) To regulate, fix, or limit the output of any article or commodity which may be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold, or the amount of insurance which may be undertaken or the amount of work that may be done in the preparation of any product for market or transportation. (7) To abstain from engaging in or continuing business or from purchasing and selling merchandise, produce, or commerce, partially within the state of Texas or any portion thereof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > State Regulation

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Finance > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN4[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, State Regulation

By Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Art. 7797 a monopoly is defined as being a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations, when effected in either of the following methods: (1) When a direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing or where such common management or control tends to create a trust, as defined in the first article of this chapter. (2) Where any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock or bonds, franchise, or other rights, or the physical property or any part thereof of any other corporation or corporations for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to effect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished direct or through the instrumentality of trustees, or otherwise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Breach of Contract

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Under Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7797, it has been held that a monopoly is not only an exclusive right granted by the State to a few of something which was before a common right, but embraces a combination, regardless of form; the tendency of which is to prevent competition and control prices, to the detriment of the public. That where neither party to a contract giving an exclusive selling agency in a specified territory was a corporation, and there being no evidence of the combination or consolidation, the agreement is not in violation of this article.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7798 provides that either or any of the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in the restraint of trade: (1) Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or any commodity, enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons, any article of merchandise, produce or commodity. (2) Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons shall agree to boycott or threaten to refuse to buy from or to sell to any person, firm, corporation or association of persons for buying from or selling to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In order to constitute a trust, within the meaning of the statute, there must be a "combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more." "Combination," as here used, means union or association. If there be no union or association by two or more of their capital, skill, or acts, there can be no combination, and hence no trust. When the purposes for which the combination must be formed are considered, to come within the statute, the essential meaning of the word "combination," and the fact that a punishment is prescribed for each day that the trust continues in existence, it leads to the conclusion that the union or association of capital, skill or acts, denounced is where the parties in the particular case designed the united co-operation of such agencies, which might have been otherwise independent and competing, for the accomplishment of one or more of such purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7798.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The purpose as indicated by the scope of the antitrust statute and the language used is to denounce as illegal, without reference to the intent of the parties and without reference to its actual effect, every agreement or understanding between parties engaged in buying any commodity, whereby they, or either of them, was to refrain from buying such commodity from any one having same for sale.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN10 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

By the statute it is unlawful for two persons to agree that one of them will buy from the other exclusively of a given commodity as it is in like manner unlawful for one of them to agree to sell exclusively to the other a given commodity.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Monopolies -- Combinations in Restraint of Trade -- Exclusive Right to Sell Beer -- Statute -- "Monopoly."

A contract whereby a brewing company, in consideration of plaintiff's payment of a $ 2,400 debt owing to it by its agent, agreed to give plaintiff the exclusive right to sell its beer in Orange county, plaintiff to pay a fixed price, ordering the beer as he sold it and paying storage and selling expenses, there being no limitation upon the price he might charge his customers, not the retail consumer but saloon men, nor any prohibition upon his purchasing and selling the product of other breweries, was not violative, as a conspiracy in restraint of trade, of the Texas Anti-Trust Act (Vernon's Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1914, arts. 7796, 7797, and 7798), defining trusts, a "monopoly" as a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations, and providing what acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Frauds, Statute of -- Agreement Not to be Performed Within One Year -- Agency Contract.

An oral contract whereby a brewing company, in consideration of plaintiff's assumption of a debt to it, agreed to give him the exclusive right to sell its beer in Orange county, there being no express agreement as to the length of time the agreement should run, though for plaintiff to reimburse himself it would have to run for two or three years, was not invalid under the statute of frauds as a contract not to be performed within a year.

Counsel: Holland & Holland, of Orange, for appellant.

Fisher, Campbell & Amerman, of Houston, for appellee.

Judges: BROOKE, J.

Opinion by: BROOKE

Opinion

---

[*128] BROOKE, J. This is an action for damages for breach of contract brought by appellant against appellee, and the cause has been properly appealed.

Plaintiff's cause of action, as stated in his petition, is as follows:

Plaintiff is a private citizen, residing in Orange county, Tex. Defendant is a corporation incorporated under the laws of Texas, its principal office and place of business being at Houston, Harris county, Tex.

"That heretofore, to wit, on or about March 28, 1908, the defendant was engaged in the business of manufacturing beer in Houston, Harris county, Tex., and as a part of its said business, and for the purpose of conducting and carrying on profitably its said business, it maintained an agency for the sale of its product at Orange, in Orange county, Tex.; that at said time it [**2] made the sales of its product in Orange county, Tex., through its said agent in Orange county, Tex., and for said purpose it had at said place an agent, through whom it conducted its business; that in the conduct of its business at said place, it consigned to its said agent at a certain price, the agent in turn selling said product to dealers at a profit remunerative to said agent, and justifying said agent to engage in said business; that defendant during said time made no sales of its product in Orange county, Tex., except through its duly authorized agent, as hereinbefore shown, and it consigned no portion of its product direct to the consumer, and all sales of its product in Orange county entitled said agent, by virtue of the arrangement between them to a certain profit; that on or about said date the agent of the defendant company, being in arrears with it, to the extent of approximately the sum of $ 2,400, and being indebted to it in approximately said sum, which indebtedness had extended over a considerable period of time, and the business of defendant suffered on account thereof, and it faced on account thereof financial loss, approached this plaintiff, and made with him the [**3] following verbal agreement, to wit:

"If plaintiff would accept the agency of the sale of defendant's products in Orange county in such manner as to represent the interests of the defendant company, said agent purchasing direct the product of the defendant from the defendant company and making sales thereof himself to the dealers in Orange county, said product to be invoiced to plaintiff by the defendant company at a price then and there agreed upon, and to be sold by the plaintiff to the dealers thereof at a profit, and would pay to the defendant company for such business and agency said amount owing to it by its former agent or its then agent, and amounting approximately to the sum of $ 2,400, that the defendant company would execute a contract with the plaintiff for the conduct by him of their business in Orange, Tex., and appoint plaintiff its exclusive agent at said place, and would continue permanently to sell him and no other person, except through him, goods of its manufacture or its product, thereby entitling plaintiff to the profits arising from the sale of said product, so long as the defendant conducted its business in Orange, Texas, or held or kept an agent at said place, [**4] all of which was consented to and agreed upon by the plaintiff, and said contract between the parties became mutual and binding, and plaintiff in good faith entered upon the duties of said business and agency.

"That under said agreement and agency plaintiff conducted said business of the defendant company and handled its product in Orange, Texas, for a considerable period of time, both parties recognizing said contract as valid and binding, and as permanent, and as to continue in force so long as the defendant company maintained its said business or agency in said place; that after the conduct of said business by the plaintiff to a period when plaintiff had repaid to the defendant company said full sum of money owing to it, by its former agent, and assumed by plaintiff, and amounting to approximately the sum of $ 2,400, and on, to wit, about May 1, 1914, the defendant company, ignoring its contract, terminated said business and agency with plaintiff and immediately commenced the sale of its products, through other persons than the plaintiff, and thereby willfully, knowingly, and arbitrarily destroyed the business of plaintiff, which, through a considerable period of time he had built [**5] up and from which, through his exertions, he had earned a sufficient amount to make the defendant whole, and pay to the defendant company the sum of money owing to it by its former agent; that the business of plaintiff and the agency established by the contract hereinbefore referred to was valuable, and was reasonably worth on the market the sum of $ 10,000, and by the arbitrary acts of the defendant company in destroying said business, and annulling said agency, this plaintiff was without fault on his part deprived of the value thereof, to his damage in said sum of $ 10,000; that the payment of the $ 2,400 hereinbefore referred to by the plaintiff to the defendant was obtained by the defendant from plaintiff upon a fraudulent, false, and wrongful agreement that it would maintain permanently so long as it was in business, a local business at Orange with plaintiff as its agent, for the sale of its products, and would through no other channels sell the same at Orange in Orange county, Tex., and upon such agreement said sum of money was so paid by plaintiff to defendant, and the defendant having breached said agreement and violated the same, thereby obtained said sum of money from plaintiff [**6] fraudulently and without warrant in law, and is entitled to repay the same to plaintiff, with legal interest thereon, and thereby has damaged plaintiff in said additional sum of $ 2,400, with legal interest thereon from the date of its payment."

Defendant company filed its plea of privilege to be sued in the county of its residence, filed general and special demurrers and general denial, and further set up that the contract, as alleged, was within and contrary to the statute of frauds, and further alleged that the contract was not for any definite period of time, and was a contract which the defendant had a legal right to terminate at any time, and further alleged in said answer that if it was shown that the defendant company made any contract with plaintiff, that said contract did not provide that the defendant should sell its product in the city of Orange or Orange county exclusively, with the plaintiff, and with no one else during the continuation of said contract, and that therefore this defendant had a right at any time to sell its products to any other person or persons within the city of Orange, without liability to the plaintiff.

For further answer the defendant company alleged [**7] by its pleadings that if it was shown that any contract was made between it and the plaintiff, that it was necessarily contemplated and implied by said contract that the plaintiff use reasonable diligence in attending to his business and in supplying the produce of defendant to those who were in [*129] the habit of purchasing, using, and selling such products, but the defendant company says that the plaintiff negligently and willfully failed and refused to attend to his said business, and to use diligence and care in looking after the same, and failed and refused to order and pay for and receive from the railroad company and deliver the product of this defendant to those who desired to purchase the same, and gave orders to plaintiff for the purchase thereof, to the extent that often for several days at a time those persons desiring to purchase were not able to obtain the product of this defendant in using and selling to their customers, greatly to the damage of the defendant company, and by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to use care and diligence, and attention to his said business in selling and delivery of the goods and products of the defendant, and in ordering said [**8] goods from the defendant, he breached and violated the terms and provisions of any contract it may be shown he had with the defendant; therefore defendant was compelled to sell and was justified in selling its product to other persons within the city of Orange and Orange county.

The court, after instructing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, approved and ordered filed plaintiff's bill of exceptions, as follows, with the following qualification:

"Be it remembered that upon the trial of the above-entitled cause, and after the plaintiff had rested in said trial, the defendant moved the court, by written motion, to instruct the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant, which said motion was resisted and objected to by the plaintiff, but the court overruled plaintiff's objection, and sustained said motion, upon the grounds urged and presented to the court that said contract, as pleaded and proven, was in violation of the anti-trust laws of the state of Texas, and for that reason unenforceable and void, and upon said ground instructed the jury by a written instruction, to return a verdict in favor of the defendant, which instruction was read by the jury, and a verdict [**9] in favor of the defendant, in obedience thereto was returned, to which plaintiff at the time in open court excepted, and now here tenders this, its bill of exception, and prays that the same be allowed and ordered filed, which is accordingly done.

"Holland & Holland,

"Attorneys for Plaintiff.

"The foregoing bill of exceptions hereby approved and ordered filed, this May 17, 1915, with the following qualification: That the proof showed that the contract was in violation of the anti-trust laws of the state of Texas.

"[Signed] A. E. Davis, Judge Presiding."

The testimony was entirely the testimony of the plaintiff, save and except letters that were written by plaintiff to the defendant company, and letters written by the defendant company to the plaintiff. The evidence will be practically set out in full.

Plaintiff testified:

"My name is W. C. Woods. I am acquainted with the American Brewing Association. About January 1, 1911, they were engaged in the business of making and brewing beer at Houston, Tex. They were at that time doing business at Orange through an agent, and were selling beer that they had manufactured. I was their agent here at one time, and Capt. Boland was their [**10] agent before me. This company has been doing business in Orange in that way for about 12 or 14 years. Their manner of doing business was: They would bill the shipment to the agent, and the agent would sell it to the saloons, and that is the way they sold it through Capt. Boland. There was a certain price that they sold it to Capt. Boland for, and then he would sell it for more than that. * * * The American Brewing Association did not sell through any other agency here. As to whether or not at that time I knew Capt. Boland was indebted to them, I will say he was indebted to them about $ 2,400. I made an agreement with reference to the agency and the payment of this indebtedness. I agreed that, if they would turn the agency over to me, I would pay them the $ 2,400 that Boland owed them. They were to give me the entire agency that Capt. Boland had. He had the agency of American Brewing Association. * * * I was to get the beer, and sell it to the saloon men, and then collect for it. The agreement was to last as long as they had an agency here, and I was to pay them the $ 2,400 that Boland owed them, and I did pay them that amount. They shipped me beer according to that agreement for 5 [**11] or 6 years, I guess, on this same agreement. I guess I was 4 or 5 years paying back the $ 2,400 that Mr. Boland owed them. I paid back the entire amount. I was in no way responsible for that debt, except by this agreement. I would order this beer direct from the American Brewing Association at Houston, Tex., and would purchase the beer at $ 7 and would sell it at $ 9 to the saloon men. They recognized this agreement for 4 or 5 years, I guess. They ceased to recognize it about the 28th day of January, 1914. At that time I had some beer consigned to me here in accordance with the contract that I had with them at that time. They turned the beer over to Mr. Seastrunk, and have never shipped me any beer since that time. With reference to further shipments, they told me that they had turned the agency over to Mr. Seastrunk. Mr. Sass, the representative of the brewery, who attended to their business over here, told me that they had canceled their contract with me. They destroyed my agency or business over here, and since that time I have not been able to handle any other beer, and they haven't shipped me any. I think, the year before they ceased to ship me beer, my business or the profit [**12] on my business was about $ 5,000 for keg and bottle beer together. They handled the American beer; that was the bottle beer. I think it was 30 cars of keg that I have sold and bought under this agreement in 1913. There was some 60-odd of half cars. My profit was $ 115 per car. I had to pay for help and feed for the horse out of that. The business that I had in 1914, compared to that in 1913, was getting better. The business I had in 1912 was not as good as that in 1913. The year 1913 showed a net profit, not deducting expenses, of about $ 5,000, and 1914 was a better year than 1913. I don't know how 1915 is up to the present time. There is more beer sold in 1915 than in 1914. It shows a similar increase during this year, and the probability is that the business of 1915 will be better than that of 1913.

The profit was $ 115 on a barrel, and a barrel is two kegs, which makes a profit of about $ 115 per car, which amounted, in connection with the bottle beer, to at least a profit of $ 5,000. The company has not repaid me any part of that $ 2,400. I did all I could for them."

Upon cross-examination he testified:

"I made this contract with American Brewing Association before January, [**13] 1915. * * * It was about that time, it might have been a year or so before that. * * * I will say it might have been 1908. I did not get with Capt. Boland and discuss the matter before I made the arrangement with the association. The association did not make me a proposition, and I then [**130] made a proposition to Capt. Boland. Capt. Boland owed the American Brewing Association, and he told me that he was up against it, and wanted me to help him get his car out. The agent had an office here, and I was pretty well familiar with his business. I was selling the Schlitz bottle beer at that time to the saloons at Orange. I had been selling Schlitz beer about 9 years before I made the agreement with the American Brewing Association. I had been selling beer at that time about 8 years, and was engaged in that business at the time I made the agreement with the association. I did not make any trade with Capt. Boland before I made the agreement with the association. I was acting as agent for the Magnolia Company, and he for the American, and I helped him get his car out some time. As to whether Capt. Boland would sign an order to the association for such as he wanted shipped to him, I will [**14] say that we got a car together, Capt. Boland and I. I got mine from the Magnolia Company and he got his from the American. I would buy from the Magnolia and he from the American. * * * He owed them the $ 2,400 for beer that he got years before that. He never got in debt to them after I went in with him. During the time I was connected with him, he would put in his orders for the beer, and they sent the beer to him with draft attached to the bill of lading, and he had to pay for the beer before he got it out, and after he got it out it was his property, and he sold it to the saloon men; that is his part of it. In Capt. Boland's business with the American Brewing Association, he paid for the beer when he received it from the railroad company. I had the agreement with the American Brewing Association at their office in Houston. I had discussed the matter with Capt. Boland before I went to Houston, but not the question of buying his part over. No; I had not talked that part over. He got so he couldn't take out his car, and he told me that I would have to do the best I could, and I went and talked to Mr. Autrey about it. He represented the association. I talked the matter over with Capt. [**15] Boland about taking the car out before I went down to see Mr. Autrey. * * * I did not talk to him about taking the agency before I went to Houston. He said: 'You will have to do the best you can. You will have to go and see them and do the best you can.' And I told him I would go and try to make some arrangement. * * * I already had the Magnolia agency, and I didn't know that Capt. Boland owed them that amount, and they said, if I would pay the $ 2,400 that he owed them, I could take the agency. They made me the proposition that if I would assume the payment of Capt. Boland's indebtedness of $ 2,400, they would give me the agency for their beer. It was the understanding that, instead of shipping the beer to Capt. Boland, they would thereafter ship it to me. It was the understanding that I would send in my orders for such beer that I desired. If I wanted keg beer, I would send in my order for so much keg beer; and if I wanted bottle beer, I would send in my order for so much, and they would not send any except what I ordered, and when they would send that they would bill it direct to me. The agreement as to how I would pay for that beer was that they would give me a car's credit on [**16] the start, and I was to pay for the beer as the cars were sent after that. Following that, the understanding was that they were to draw a draft against me with bill of lading attached for each shipment of beer, and I was not to get that beer until I paid for it, until I paid that draft. Then, when I paid that draft, of course, the beer became mine, and I sold it. I got out in town and sold my own beer, and I sold it to whoever I pleased, for cash or credit, and how I pleased. That was the understanding. The agreement that was entered into between me and the American Brewing Association was, as alleged in this pleading here, that if I would accept the agency for the American Brewing Company's products in Orange county in such manner as to represent the interests of the defendant company, said agent purchasing direct the products of the defendant from the defendant company, and making sales thereof myself to the dealers, in Orange county, and said products to be invoiced to me by the defendant company at a price then and there agreed upon, and to be sold by me to the dealers thereof at a profit, and would pay to the defendant company for such business and agency said amount owing to [**17] it by its former agent, Mr. Boland, and amounting approximately to the sum of $ 2,400, the defendant company would exclusively contract with me for the conduct by me of their business in Orange, Tex., and appoint me its exclusive agent at said place, and, would continue permanently to sell me and no other person, except through me, goods of its manufacture or its products, thereby entitling me to the profits arising from the sale of said products, so long as the defendant conducted its business in Orange, Tex., or held or kept an agent at said place, all of which was consented to and agreed upon by the plaintiff, and said contract between the parties became mutual and binding. That the payment of $ 2,400 hereinbefore referred to by the plaintiff to the defendant was obtained by the defendant from plaintiff upon a fraudulent, false, and wrongful agreement. That it would maintain permanently, so long as it was in business, a local business at Orange, Tex., with me as its agent, for the sale of its products, and would, through no other channels, sell the same at Orange, in Orange county, Tex., and upon such agreement said sum of money was so paid, and the defendant having breached said [**18] agreement, and violated same, thereby obtained the said money from me fraudulently and without warrant in law, and is entitled to repay the same to me, with legal interest thereon, and thereby has damaged me in said additional sum of $ 2,400, with legal interest thereon from the date of its payment. It is my understanding that they did agree to do the things that I there say they did. It was agreed that I should pay them $ 7 per barrel for the beer, and, after I paid them for it, it became my property, and I sold it to whoever I pleased, and on any terms I pleased. After I got back from Houston, after I made the deal with them, I did not make any arrangements of any kind with Capt. Boland for taking over his business. I had taken the car that was sent to him, and sold it to his customers. I did not submit to Mr. Boland any proposition. I didn't recognize that Mr. Boland had any rights in the matter. I told him of the arrangements I had made with the association, and I told him I had agreed to pay his indebtedness to the association. As to whether or not he agreed to turn over what interest he had to me, I will say that he didn't have any interest in the business. He asked me to buy [**19] his safe and desk. * * * I agreed to pay this $ 2,400 debt at the rate of $ 75 per month. I guess I was 4 or 5 years altogether in paying off that indebtedness. I got pretty near out once, and borrowed $ 600, and then borrowed $ 400 again. I don't know exactly how long I was in paying off that $ 2,400. I will say that I paid one or two of the $ 75 payments, and then I went to paying their cold storage for them. I don't know how much I had paid before February, 1909. * * * I will say that I told Capt. Boland what I had done, and that I had agreed to pay that $ 2,400, and he said the same was satisfactory to him."

Witness being shown a letter signed "Woods per Boland" to the American Brewing Association, and asked whether it was an order for beer sent to the association, or a letter in reference to beer, replied:

"That is a letter that Mr. Boland wrote to them. He wrote it. It is signed Woods per [*131] Boland. He wrote that under my direction, and this is the billhead I was using. After I was buying from the American Brewing Association, I was also buying from the Houston Ice & Brewing Company and Pilsener Company. * * * The association did not pay me any salary. The only profit [**20] I got out of the transaction was the difference between what I paid for the beer and what I sold it for. If I sold a bad account, that came out of my profit; and if I lost on the collections, I had to stand the loss. In my agreement to pay the $ 2,400 of Boland's account, I was induced to pay that or assume that amount by them agreeing to give me the exclusive purchase of their beer, and I couldn't have been induced to pay that indebtedness without them giving me the exclusive sale of their beer. I don't know exactly how long they had been selling beer to one person in Orange, but it was about 10 or 12 years or something like that. It was the understanding between us that this contract that we have been discussing would extend over several years' time. I couldn't hope to pay that $ 2,400 and make a profit, unless I should continue that contract over 4 or 5 years. It was the understanding that it would extend a sufficient length of time after I had paid this amount that I would get back that money; that I would pay that Boland account out of the profits made in the sale of the beer. It wasn't paid exactly out of that either. I had two more agencies; but I got the assurance that I could [**21] keep the agency long enough to pay it out of the sales of their beer alone, and it would take about 3 or 4 years at least to pay that Boland account. I maintain an office here, and rented a building. I keep one wagon and one horse. I owned the horse and they sent me the wagon. I work one man and paid him a salary. About the latter part of January last, they began to sell beer to Mr. Seastrunk, and turned over a part of a car to him. I don't know exactly how long that car had been on the track here, that was sold to Mr. Seastrunk, but it was about a day or two, I guess. It might have been here 3 or 4 days. I hadn't taken up the bill of lading, but I had beer on hand. I ran out of beer the day they turned it over to Mr. Seastrunk. I have not placed any orders with them since that time."

There were offered in evidence letters from the American Brewing Association to W. C. Woods, on the following dates: April 11, 1911, May 27, 1913, August 6, 1913, and May 17, 1913.

Said witness further testified:

"Beginning with the date of this first letter of April, 1911, and extending on down to and including January, 1914, there were days when my customers couldn't get American beer for several [**22] days at a time, when they couldn't get it from me, and I was the only one that sold American beer here. At these times when they couldn't get this beer from me, and they would demand American beer particularly and I had run out, I would order it from Beaumont. It is a fact that there were times between these dates when I was out of beer, and the people were in the habit of demanding American beer and they were not getting it. I didn't order any beer from Louisiana, but I got some from Beaumont. Since the Brewing Association has quit selling beer to me, I haven't been selling any beer; I do not still handle beer for the Houston Ice & Brewing Association, nor for the Schlitz Company. I haven't sold any beer from anybody, or purchased beer from anybody, manufactured by any beer concern, since the American Brewing Association began selling to Mr. Seastrunk, except that I sold for the Magnolia and Schlitz beer for a month or two--a couple of months, I think. The Magnolia people sold draft beer and bottled beer, and the Schlitz Company sold the bottled beer alone. During 1913 I was handling beer both from the Magnolia Company and the American Brewing Association. The Magnolia Company is [**23] owned by the Houston Ice & Brewing Company--it is the Brewing Association now, I think. When I would order out a car, I would have them ship generally about half a car by the association and half from the Magnolia Company. That was the way that it was shipped out in 1913 and up to the time that they began selling to Mr. Seastrunk. The Houston Ice & Brewing Company agreed that they wouldn't sell to anybody except me; I had the same agreement with them that I had with the American Brewing Association; when I agreed to take that indebtedness over, I took it from both of them. I know something about the Galveston Brewing Company; I have been there, and know that there is a concern that manufactures beer known as the Galveston Brewing Company, and also know that there is a brewery in San Antonio by the name of the Lone Star Brewing Company, and another by the name of the San Antonio Brewing Association that manufactures beer. I have heard of one in Dallas known as the Dallas brewery. I think there are two breweries in New Orleans, and I know there is one. These breweries were all in the business of manufacturing and selling beer during the years 1913 and 1914. It is 200 and some odd miles [**24] from here to New Orleans, and 105 miles from here to Houston; this isn't quite half way from Houston to New Orleans. L. T. Grubbs handles the Houston Ice & Brewing Company's beer here; I am not connected with him in any way. If the American Brewing Association had kept on with me and hadn't begun to sell beer to Mr. Seastrunk, I wouldn't have brought this suit."

"The reason that I didn't order any more beer out from the association, after they had turned the agency over to Mr. Seastrunk, was because they had gotten another agency, and had taken Mr. Seastrunk as their agent, and they had taken the half car that I had ordered, and got the railroad company to release it, and gave it to Mr. Seastrunk. I think it was Mr. Sass that notified me that he had given the agency to Mr. Seastrunk, and the railroad company turned the car over to him; and that was my reason--because the agency was turned over to Mr. Seastrunk. There were several times when I was out of the association beer, Mike Grubbs went to driving for me on the 12th day of May, 1913, and continuously drove the wagon for me up to the time that the agency was taken from me, and it was taken from me on the 28th of January, 1914. [**25] He drove for me from May until the following January. I think it was four or five times that I was out of association beer during that time; I took it down yesterday, and I can tell you for how long in a minute. I can tell you how many times I was out since Grubbs went to work for me. Beginning with May--he went to work on the 12th of May--I was not out of beer any during May, June, July, August, or September; the only day I was out in October was on the 29th; and I was out for two days in November, on the 26th and 27th; none in December; then I was out on Monday, the 19th of January. That is four days and three occasions in which I was out of beer during that time. The cause of me being out of beer on November 26th and 27th was that I had ordered a car of beer on the 21st and the brewery owed me for bottles and freight to the amount of $ 178.20 for the freight and bottles that I had sent in. There was no dispute about them owing that. I have got their statement now. I wrote them to give me credit for the bottles, and the balance due me on the car. The car was ordered out on the 21st and got here on the 24th; and they notified me they had sent the bill of lading with the car. I phoned [**26] them, and it was on the 26th, I think, [*132] that they notified the bank to give me credit for the amount and release the car, and on the 27th they sent Mr. Sass over here, and on the 28th it seems that they released the car to me. The car was here at the time I was out, and they sent it out without giving me credit for this amount. At one time the cause of me being out of beer was on account of the Magnolia Company making the mistake, and instead of shipping it over the S. P. they routed it over the Frisco, and made it a day late; that was in October, I think; it was one of those days that I have mentioned. It was not customary for them to ship it that way; they had never done it before. I did not order it shipped that way; it was done through some error of the shipping clerk; and it would have been here on time if they had shipped it the regular way. These are the only times that I was out during the 10 months. There was no complaint that I know of during that time from my customers of me being out of beer or their wanting beer. Prior to that time I was out of beer sometimes; lots of times it was because when I would send in the order they would be short of cooperage--that [**27] is, short of kegs--it was both of the breweries that didn't have them; and then you take in August they can't get the cars when they ought to be shipped. Part of the time, if not all of the time, my being out of beer was not my fault, and part of it was the fault of the breweries. I can't tell how often it occurred that the shipments were delayed by them being out of cooperage, but it was several times, and several times it was their failing to ship on account of car shortage. I was asked the question if I had made the same kind of a contract with reference to the exclusive agency with the Magnolia people--the Magnolia people complied with their contract with me. From the time that I made the contract for the exclusive agency with the Magnolia people--the Magnolia people complied with their contract with me. From the time that I made the contract for the exclusive agency and sale of beer with the American Brewing Association up to the time that they canceled that agency, they sold to no other person except through me, and up to that time they complied with their agreement. After being shown a letter from me here, I state now that according to that letter the contract that I entered [**28] into must have been on March 28, 1908; that letter was written after I came back from Houston. That is the same contract that I am suing on, and I have never made but one contract with them. I stated that when I was out of beer I would order it from Beaumont, and sometimes I would pay for it, and sometimes they did; I paid the freight and express, or I paid them back if they paid it."

Being asked who paid the loss to the trade, if anybody, when he ordered beer to supply them when he was short, he answered:

"I paid it myself, except to Mr. Futch, and he wouldn't take it. I lost a dollar profit and he would not let me pay the freight. When I ordered beer in this way I lost a dollar profit and 60 cents expressage. I made this loss each and every time that I failed to get the beer from the association when the trade wanted it, whether it was through their fault or mine. I never at any time failed or refused, when short of beer, to try to get it as soon as possible. I couldn't ascertain the number of times that I was short prior to the time that I have a record here."

Article 7796, Vernon's Sayles' Statutes, HN1[<sup>1</sup>] defines trusts as a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, [**29] firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for any or all of the following purposes:

- (1) To create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions of trade or commerce or aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state.
- (2) To fix, maintain, increase, or reduce the prices of merchandise, produce, or commodities or the cost of insurance, or of the preparation of any produce for market or transportation.
- (3) To prevent or lessen competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale, or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities or the business of insurance, or to prevent or lessen competition or aids to commerce or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation.
- (4) To fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the price of any article or commodity, merchandise, produce, or commerce, or the cost of transportation or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, shall be in any manner affected, controlled, or established.

[**30] HN2[<sup>1</sup>] (5) To make, enter into, maintain, execute, or carry out any contract, obligation, or agreement, by which the parties thereto bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose, or transport or prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity, or to make any contract of insurance at a price below a common standard or figure, or by which they shall in any manner agree to keep the price of such article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of preparation of any product for market or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they in any manner affect or maintain the prices of any commodity or article or the cost of transportation insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale, or transportation of any such article or commodity, or the business of transportation or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool, impede, or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article [**31] or commodity, or charge of transportation or insurance, or charge for the preparation of any product for market or transportation, whereby the price or such charge might be in any manner affected.

(HN3↑) 6) To regulate, fix, or limit the output of any article or commodity which may be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold, or the amount of insurance which may be undertaken or the amount of work that may be done in the preparation of any product for market or transportation.

[*133] (7) To abstain from engaging in or continuing business or from purchasing and selling merchandise, produce, or commerce, partially within the state of Texas or any portion thereof.

It has been held under the above article: That the promise by a merchant to the purchaser of his stock to retire from business in the town for one year does not constitute a trust. Gates v. Hooper, 90 Tex. 563, 39 S.W. 1079. That an agreement not to engage in a particular business for 2 years is not in violation of the trust law, or against trade. Erwin v. Hayden, 43 S.W. 610. That an agreement that if defendant ceased to teach music in plaintiff's school that he would not teach in a certain town, is a binding contract, and [**32] not in violation of the foregoing article. Patterson v. Crabb, 51 S.W. 870. That a contract of the seller on the sale of merchandise and goods to refrain from such business for 20 years within the county in which the sale is made, is not invalid, as an unreasonable restraint of trade. Tobler v. Austin, 53 S.W. 706. That an agreement by a doctor not to practice his profession within 10 miles of a certain town for 10 years is not void as against public policy, and is not in conflict with the law to prevent a combination or restraint of trade. Wolff v. Hirschfeld, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 670, 57 S.W. 572. That an agreement by an owner on the sale of his business and good will not to re-enter said business until a specified time at a specified place, is not void as in restraint of trade. Comer v. Burton-Lingo Co., 58 S.W. 969. That a promise by a partner to a copartner purchasing the business of the firm, not to engage in such business in that town so long as the copartner remained in business in the town, is not void as in restraint of trade. Crump v. Ligon, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 172, 84 S.W. 250. That an agreement by the seller of a cotton gin and gristmill not to engage in that business so long [**33] as the purchaser operated there, was not in violation of this article. Malakoff Gin Co. v. Riddleberger, 133 S.W. 519. That a contract with a railroad company to ship 66 per cent. of the output of salt of a company at as low rate as any other company, was not void as against public policy. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Shortline Ry. Co., 35 Tex. Civ. App. 387, 80 S.W. 567. That a contract between a railroad company and a sleeping car company, whereby the former grants to the latter the exclusive right to furnish sleeping cars to be used on a railway company, and on all lines controlled by it, and all roads which it might subsequently acquire or operate, is not in restraint of trade, and does not violate the anti-trust law. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. State, 99 Tex. 34, 87 S.W. 336, 70 L. R. A. 950. That under this article a petition which alleges that a manufacturer of foreign implements and vehicles entered into a contract with a dealer therein, whereby the manufacturer agreed to give the dealer the exclusive sale of its product, and whereby the dealer agreed not to buy or sell any other makes of like goods (italics ours), and that the manufacturer and dealer carried the contract into [**34] execution, to the injury of the people (italics ours), charges a violation. State v. Racine Sattley Company, 134 S.W. 400.

Article 7797 HN4↑ defines a monopoly as being a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations, when effected in either of the following methods:

(1) When a direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing or where such common management or control tends to create a trust, as defined in the first article of this chapter.

(2) Where any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock or bonds, franchise, or other rights, or the physical property or any part thereof of any other corporation or corporations for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to effect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished direct or through the instrumentality of trustees, or otherwise.

HN5[↑] Under this article it has been held that a monopoly is not only an exclusive right granted by the state to a few of something which was before a common right, but embraces a combination, regardless of form; the tendency of [**35] which is to prevent competition and control prices, to the detriment of the public. Jones v. Carter, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 450, 101 S.W. 514. That where neither party to a contract giving an exclusive selling agency in a specified territory was a corporation, and there being no evidence of the combination or consolidation, the agreement was not in violation of this article. Nickels v. Prewitt Auto Company, 149 S.W. 1094.

Article 7798 HN6[↑] provides that either or any of the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in the restraint of trade:

- (1) Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or any commodity, enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons, any article of merchandise, produce or commodity.
- (2) Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons shall agree to boycott or threaten to refuse to buy from or to sell to any person, firm, corporation or association of persons for buying from or selling to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons.

[**36] A brief review of the authorities might be beneficial:

In the case of Gates v. Hooper, decided by [*134] our Supreme Court, and reported in 90 Tex. 563, 39 S.W. page 1080, the court says:

"This suit was instituted by appellant against appellee on the 2d day of May, A. D. 1896. The allegations in the original petition are as follows: That on the 14th of June, 1895, defendant [appellee], being then a merchant, and doing business as such merchant in the town of Batesville, in said county [Zavalla], entered into an agreement, partly verbal and partly in writing, with plaintiff [appellant], then and there also a merchant, and doing business in said town as such merchant, by which defendant agreed, bound, and obligated himself, for a valuable consideration moving from plaintiff, to retire from the mercantile business in said town of Batesville for the period of 12 months, and further agreed to use every effort to secure for the plaintiff all the patronage and custom that he had himself enjoyed in the trade of merchandise at said place, including his individual patronage and custom. That at said time defendant enjoyed a large and profitable trade in merchandise in and around [**37] Batesville. That at said time defendant did retire from business as he had agreed and covenanted to do. That in consideration therefor this plaintiff did purchase from defendant, at his earnest request, his stock of goods, wares, and merchandise then and there being, and assumed to pay for him outstanding bills for goods, and purchased large amounts of notes and accounts pertaining to defendant's mercantile enterprise, at his urgent request, all upon the faith of defendant's said covenant that he would not engage in any mercantile enterprise or business for the space of time aforesaid in the territory aforesaid. * * * Appellee demurred generally, on the ground that the contract set out in plaintiff's petition was illegal and void, as a restraint on trade, and, second, as preventing competition in the sale and purchase of merchandise. The general demurrer was by the trial court sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, the cause was dismissed. * * * It is not contended that the contract would be void if tested by the common law, but that it is a 'trust,' under our statute (Rev. St. 1895, art. 5313), as construed by this court in Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 24 S.W. 397 [**38] [22 L. R. A. 483]; Coal Co. v. Lawson, 89 Tex. 394 [32 S.W. 871] 34 S.W. 919; Welch v. Windmill Co., 89 Tex. 653, 36 S.W. 71; Brewing Co. v. Templeman, 90 Tex. 277, 38 S.W. 27; and Fuqua v. Brewing Company [90 Tex. 298] 38 S.W. 29, 750 [35 L. R. A. 241]. HNT[↑] In order to constitute a trust, within the meaning of the statute, there must be a 'combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more.' 'Combination,' as here used, means union or association. If there be no union or association by two or more of their 'capital, skill, or acts,' there can be no 'combination,' and hence no 'trust.' When we consider the purposes for which the 'combination' must be formed, to come within the statute, the essential meaning of the word 'combination,' and the fact that a punishment is prescribed for each day that the trust continues in existence, we are led to the conclusion that the union or association of 'capital, skill or acts,' denounced is where the parties in the particular case designed the united co-operation of such agencies, which might have been otherwise independent and competing, for the accomplishment of one or more of such purposes. In the case stated in the petition there is no [**39] 'combination.'"

In the case of Vandeweghe v. American Brewing Company, 61 S.W. 526, Judge Key says:

"This is a suit on a contract for the sale of beer. The only defense relied on in this court is that the contract violates the anti-trust statute of this state. The only fact relied upon to show a trust is an agreement by the plaintiff not to sell beer to any one else within a certain designated territory, contributory to the defendant's place of business. We think the case is distinguishable from the cases heretofore held to violate the anti-trust law, and within the doctrine announced in Gates v. Hooper, supra."

In the case of Norton v. W. H. Thomas & Sons Company, decided by our Supreme Court, reported in 99 Tex. 578, 91 S.W. 780, which came up on certified question, Judge Williams, rendering the opinion, said:

"The record on this appeal shows that in 1902, W. H. Thomas & Sons Co., incorporated under the laws of Kentucky, entered into a contract with H. N. Norton, resident of Galveston, Tex., whereby it agreed to sell to Norton 50 barrels of whisky of a named brand and age at a stipulated price per gallon. Under the agreement the corporation was to ship 100 barrels from Germany [**40] to Galveston, the first 50 above named to be a credit sale and Norton to have the option to take the second 50 barrels at the same price for cash. In pursuance of this agreement the whisky was shipped to Galveston and Norton took and * * * paid for the first 50 barrels according to the contract. The president of the corporation being in Galveston sought to induce him to take the other 50 barrels, but Norton declined to exercise his option, giving business reasons. Thereupon the president of the corporation offered the whisky on a credit, the debt to be evidenced by Norton's notes. As a further inducement the company agreed that it would not sell in Galveston, Beaumont, or Houston, * * * any liquor of that brand and age until Norton had closed out his purchase. * * * One of his defenses in the court below was that the contract of sale was within the provisions of the anti-trust law of 1899 and therefore void, and the question has arisen for our decision. 'In view of the holding [said the Court of Civil Appeals of the First District] in Troy Buggy Company v. Fife & Miller, 74 S.W. 956, the soundness of which we doubt, we respectfully certify for your decision: Was the contract void [**41] and the notes uncollectable by reason of the anti-trust law of 1899?'"

The court, after reviewing the sections of the act, among other things, said:

"Section 6, page 248, makes it unlawful for a person engaged in buying or selling articles, etc., [either] to enter into any pool, trust, agreement, etc., * * * 'or to limit competition in such trade by refusing to buy from or sell to any other person or corporation any such article,' etc."

The court further says:

"The sixth section might apply to the case but for the requirement that the pool, agreement, etc., to limit trade, or competition therein, by refusal to sell to others besides the parties to the arrangement, must be for the reason that such others are not parties to it. By this it is made clear that the offense denounced does not consist simply of an agreement between two that one of them will not sell to others, but of an association which seeks to limit trade or competition in trade in some article by confining the buying and selling thereof to the members of such pool, trust, agreement, etc., and by refusing to sell to or buy from others for the reason that they have not become such members."

In Forrest Photo. Co. v. [\[\*\*42\] Hutchinson Grocer Co.](#), reported in 108 S.W. 768, the San Antonio court, through its Chief Justice, says:

"Appellant sought to recover the sum of $ 2,850 from the Hutchinson Grocery Company alleged to have accrued to plaintiff on account of the failure and refusal of defendant to pay said sum to plaintiff under the terms of the following contract: * * * 'In consideration of 15,000 [*135] photo calendar trading tickets delivered to me by the Forrest Photographic Company, of San Antonio, Tex., each of said trading tickets entitling its holder to a photo art calendar, with his or her picture copied thereon, at the Forrest Photo. Co. studio at San Antonio, Tex., when traded out, and countersigned by me at my place of business, at Houston, Tex., etc., and it is agreed that, in consideration of this, the Forrest Photo. Co. will not sell to any other grocery company, after this date, the above-mentioned photo calendar trading tickets, without our consent. It is further understood that the only merchant grocery companies to which the Forrest Photo. Co. of San Antonio, Tex., have sold such photo calendar trading tickets to, in the city of Houston, Tex., are as follows: [Naming the parties.]"

[**43] To the petition defendant filed a general demurrer and special demurrer. "The court entered an order sustaining the general demurrer, for the reason that the contract contravenes the statutes prohibiting trusts and combinations in restraint of trade. * * * Appellant's propositions, as regards the contract being in contravention of the statute, are in substance as follows:

"First. The petition does not disclose a combination of capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons, firms, corporations, or association of persons, or either two or more of them, for any of the purposes enumerated in the statute of 1903.

"Second. Appellee under said contract could purchase similar tickets from any firm engaged in the business of selling such tickets, and appellee was not bound to buy tickets exclusively from the appellant.

"Third. Appellant had the right to contract not to deal with any grocery company in Houston, Tex., except appellee, while the latter was disposing of his tickets; the business of no other such photographic company was interfered with.

"This proposition signifies that a corporation has a right to manage its own business to suit its pleasure, and advance its interests, no [**44] other business being interfered with.

"Fourth. Appellee was, in legal effect, appellant's agent."

The court, in passing on the matter, says:

"The question, then, is whether or not it is one which is declared void by the anti-trust statute of 1903, which was in force at the time the contract in question was made. We think not. That act defines trusts, monopolies, and conspiracies in restraint of trade. What would constitute a trust--that is, a 'combination of capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons, firms, corporations, or association of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any, or all of the following purposes'--is the same in the act of 1903 as it was in the statute of 1895, being the act of 1889, under which latter statute the case of Gates v. Hooper arose, 90 Tex. 563, 39 S.W. 1079, wherein the Supreme Court held that a transaction of the nature of the one in question was not a union or combination of persons within the meaning of the act. In Norton v. Thomas & Sons Company, 99 Tex. 578, 91 S.W. 780, the Supreme Court points out that contracts such as the one we have here belong to a class usually treated as contracts in restraint of or imposing restrictions [**45] upon trade or competition. The statute of 1903 deals with conspiracies in restraint of trade, defining such to be: 'Where two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or any commodity, enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons, any article of merchandise, produce or commodity,' or, 'when any two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons shall agree to boycott or threaten to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons, * * * any article, merchandise, produce or commodity.' If the transaction in question contravenes any of the provisions just referred to it is the first one, it clearly not falling within the second one. * * * In the first place, aids to commerce are not included, and the tickets issued by plaintiff, together with its obligation, to give to each holder of tickets an art calendar with his photograph upon it, embodies what is, in substance, a mere aid to defendant's business. * * * In the second place we think that [**46] the tickets, and the obligation of plaintiff to give the holders thereof calendars * * * was essentially a contract for service, to be rendered the defendant, rather than the sale of an article of merchandise, produce, or commodity. The transaction does not come within the class defined in the statute as 'monopolies.'"

In the case of Nickels v. Prewitt Auto Company, 149 S.W. 1094, Chief Justice Key says:

"The appeal involves but two questions, and these are: First, that the note sued on is part of a contract which contravenes the antitrust statute of this state, and therefore the note is not enforceable, etc. The contract referred to shows that the note sued upon was executed in part payment for certain automobiles; and, among others, it contains this stipulation: 'And the said Prewitt Auto Company hereby gives the said J. A. Nickels the exclusive and sole right to sell the Moon Motoring Car Company's automobiles and supplies in the counties of Falls, * * * McLennan county, and the trade territory of Mart, and this right shall be in force until the 1st of October, 1911.'

"It is upon that stipulation that appellant bases the proposition that the contract is in conflict with the anti-trust [**47] statute, and therefore not enforceable. We overrule that contention, and hold the stipulation referred to does not require or authorize anything to be done that is prohibited by said statute. It merely conferred upon appellant an exclusive agency, in a restricted territory, and for a short period of time. It did not prohibit the other party from making sales elsewhere, nor did it attempt to fix prices or prohibit appellant from purchasing or selling other articles of the same kind obtained elsewhere [citing authorities]."

"After due consideration," says the court upon motion for rehearing, "we have reached the conclusion that appellant's motion for rehearing in this case should be overruled. However, we are now satisfied that this court fell into error when it held that the stipulation in the contract set out in our former opinion merely 'conferred upon appellant an exclusive agency in a restricted territory and for a short period of time.' We now hold that the stipulation in question attempted to confer upon appellant the sole right to sell the Moon Motoring Car Company's automobiles and supplies in the territory mentioned; and the effect of it was to prohibit the Prewitt Auto [**48] Company, the other party to the contract, from making any sales of such property in that territory within the time prescribed, but we hold that neither appellant's answer, nor the proof submitted thereunder, showed any violation of the anti-trust statute of this state."

After setting out several of the articles, the court says:

HN8 [↑] "Article 7798. Conspiracies Against Trade, What Constitutes. Either or any of the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade:

"(1) Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations or association of persons, who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce or any commodity, enter [*136] into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation or association of persons, any article of merchandise, produce or commodity," etc.

"That the agreement of the Prewitt Auto Company not to sell the Moon autos and supplies in the territory designated did not constitute such a combination of capital, skill, or acts as is necessary to constitute a trust, as defined by the statute referred to, is settled by the decision of our Supreme Court in Gates v. Hooper, 90 Tex. <sup>I</sup>**491 563, 39 S.W. 1079. Both the pleadings and evidence fail to show that either of the parties to the contract was a corporation, and failed to show any combination or consolidation; and therefore it is neither claimed that the defense of monopoly was not sustained, nor did appellant's answer or the proof submitted thereunder show conspiracy against trade, as defined by the statute, because it was not alleged or proved that both or either of the parties to the contract were engaged in buying or selling automobiles, or any other article of merchandise. If it had been alleged and proved that the Prewitt Auto Company and appellant, Nickels, were each and both engaged in the business of buying and selling automobiles, a different question would be presented, and we might hold that the contract was in violation of the first subdivision of article 7798; but no such allegation or proof was made. That is the provision of the statute which appellant seems to contend was violated, but we hold that his pleading and the proof does not go far enough to show such violation. The language 'who are engaged in buying or selling,' etc., was evidently placed in the statute for the purpose of limiting that [**50] provision to merchants and others engaged in some particular business, and therefore, in order to show a violation of that provision, it is necessary to allege and prove that the parties to the alleged illegal contract were engaged in the business of buying or selling such articles as the contract relates to."

The court, in Star Mill & E. Co. v. Ft. Worth Grain & E. Co., says (146 S.W. 604):

HN9 [↑] "The purpose, we think, as indicated by the scope of the statute and the language used, was to denounce as illegal, without reference to the intent of the parties and without reference to its actual effect, every agreement or understanding between parties engaged in buying any commodity, whereby they, or either of them, was to refrain from buying such commodity from any one having same for sale."

If we grant this to be the intent of the statute, yet in the instant case there was no such agreement. On the contrary, appellant was buying beer from two other parties at the time, and was selling same commodity to the saloon men of Orange.

In the case of Wood v. Ice & Cold Storage Co., 171 S.W. 497, it was said by the court, after giving the definition of the law in the statute:

"Such being the [**51] literal language of the statute, the contract in question, in our opinion, comes precisely within the statutory definition of the acts denounced thereby, since the declared purpose of the contract is to prevent appellant from buying ice from any other person, firm," etc.

In the instant case, neither party to the contract agreed that appellant would not buy beer from any one else; in fact, as stated heretofore, the appellant was buying and continued to buy beer from two other manufacturers.

The court, continuing in the case last cited, says:

HN10 [+] "By the statute it is unlawful for two persons to agree that one of them will buy from the other exclusively of a given commodity as it is in like manner unlawful for one of them to agree to sell exclusively to the other a given commodity."

No such state of facts exists in the instant case. A multitude of persons and corporations are engaged in the manufacture of beer, the same being a commodity.

In the two cases last cited, the grain and ice cases, the agreement affected both commodities and the parties to the contract, the purchaser and seller. In the present case, the commodity was not affected, and was being sold under various other [**52] brands by appellant and others to the saloon men of Orange, both before and after the making of the contract.

The case of Nickels v. Prewitt Auto Company, supra, is very similar to the instant case. The fact is that the stipulation in the contract in that case is almost identical with the one now before us. Upon that stipulation was based the proposition that the contract was in conflict with the anti-trust statute, and therefore not enforceable. As the court said in that case, it did not prohibit the Prewitt Auto Company from making sales elsewhere; neither in the case before us did the contract prohibit the American Brewing Association from making sales of its beer elsewhere. In the Prewitt Case there was no attempt to fix prices or prohibit appellant from purchasing or selling other articles of the same kind obtained elsewhere, and in the instant case the contract did not attempt to fix prices or prohibit the appellant, Woods, from purchasing or selling the commodity of other breweries obtained elsewhere. In fact, appellant was, at that very time, handling beer for the Magnolia Brewery of Houston, and from Pilsener people.

It was held in the Prewitt Case, on motion for rehearing, [**53] that the stipulation in question attempted to confer upon the appellant the sole right to sell the Moon Motoring Car Company's automobiles and supplies in the territory mentioned, and that the effect of it was to prohibit the Prewitt Auto Company, the other party to the contract, from making any sales of such property in that territory within the time prescribed.

In this case Woods, the appellant, according to the undisputed testimony, was not engaged in selling beer to the consumer or at retail, but his business was exclusively with the saloon men, and the terms of the contract were substantially that appellant would pay appellee the $ 2,400 debt owing to it by Mr. Boland, and that appellant would give to appellee the exclusive right to sell beer manufactured by it in Orange, Tex. The business was conducted between the parties by appellant ordering of appellee such beer as he desired. This beer was consigned to [*137] appellant to be paid for when received. When received, it was stored in cold storage, which was paid for by appellee, until in the course of sales made thereof by appellant to the various persons, his customers, engaged in the sale of beer in Orange at retail, [**54] the shipment was exhausted. Appellant paid for the beer at $ 7, and sold it for $ 9 per barrel; the difference being his profit out of the business.

We do not believe that a contract such as the present is in violation of the state antitrust law. The statutes with reference to trusts are aimed primarily at a protection of the public welfare. We do not believe that such a business arrangement as obtained in this case is inhibited by said statute. Only one of the parties in the present case is a corporation. That party is the manufacturer. It sends its manufactured product to the city of Orange, bill of lading attached, to a party then engaged in selling other articles of like character, manufactured by other persons or corporations, to the saloon men in the city of Orange. There is no price fixed or agreed upon at which the said manufactured article is to be sold to the saloon men of the city of Orange. The only price fixed is the price agreed upon by the parties to be paid by the appellant upon the delivery of the consignment of beer. The facts show that appellee has been making the same contracts, that is with reference to having one person handle its article in the city of Orange, [**55] 10 or 12 years prior to the making of this contract.

We have examined carefully all the authorities presented by appellee, some of which seem to be somewhat similar to the case in hand. We are persuaded to believe that it was not the intention of the Legislature to prohibit the making of such a contract as is shown to have been made in this case, and that the said contract is not in violation of the state anti-trust law, or any section of same. In other words, we can see no fact in this case which would indicate a conspiracy in restraint of trade, but it appears, to our minds, simply a method by which the manufacturer of an article supplies said article to the trade, and is not an effort, in our judgment, to stifle competition.

Appellee contends that inasmuch as the contract was not to be performed within a year, and the same being oral, that it was contrary to the statute of frauds. We do not believe that the contention is sound. Railway Co. v. Wood, 88 Tex. 191, 30 S.W. 859, 28 L. R. A. 526; Warner v. Railway Co., 164 U.S. 418, 17 S. Ct. 147, 41 L. Ed. 495.

It follows from what has been said that in our opinion the lower court was in error in instructing a verdict for appellee, [**56] and we so hold.

The cause is therefore reversed and remanded for a new trial.

---

End of Document

Henry Gildehaus Co. v. Busse & Borgman Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Hamilton County, Ohio

November, 1916, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

27 Ohio Dec. 111 *; 1916 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 39 **

HENRY GILDEHAUS CO. v. BUSSE & BORGMAN CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [**1] REHEARING.

Disposition: Motion overruled. Order modified.

Core Terms

---

commerce, union labor, labor organization, interstate trade, anti trust law, carry out, manufacturer, restrictions, circulated, antitrust, boycott, unfair

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN1** [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Gen. Code § 6391(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

**HN2** [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A combination of persons for the purpose of boycotting a person who will not become a member of their organization and a further combination by these persons with a union labor organization in furtherance of this boycott, whereby an attempt is made to have persons refuse to deal with him on account of an alleged unfairness to union labor, is a combination to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce within the view of the act known as the Valentine Antitrust Law (Ohio).

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes*RESTRAINT OF TRADE.*Acts Constituting Combination in Restraint of Trade.

A combination of persons formed for the purpose of boycotting those who refuse to become members of their organization and the further combining of such organization with a labor union in furtherance of said boycott, whereby an attempt is made to prevent the public from dealing with nonmembers on account of their alleged unfairness toward union labor, is a combination to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce within the meaning of Sec. 6397 G. C., the Valentine antitrust law.

Counsel: Sherman T. McPherson, for plaintiff.

Dempsey & Nieberding and Dinsmore & Shohl, for defendants.

Judges: GEOGHEGAN, J.

Opinion by: GEOGHEGAN

Opinion

---

[*111] GEOGHEGAN, J.

This matter came on again for a rehearing of the court's ruling striking from the petition herein the averment reading as follows:

"That the defendants circulated and caused to be circulated in Cincinnati, Hamilton county, Ohio, in furtherance of said agreement and conspiracy above set forth that plaintiff was unfair to union labor, knowing the same to be untrue, to the great damage and injury of its business."

The court, at the time of ruling upon said motion, expressed the opinion that the act known in Ohio as the Valentine antitrust law Sec. 6390, et seq., G. C., did not by its terms expressly prohibit the doing of the act complained of in the allegation above set forth, and that as this action was brought to recover the penalty provided for in said act, only such things might be pleaded as were expressly prohibited by said act. At that time the court's attention had not been directed to the various cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States [<sup>**2</sup>] in which the Sherman antitrust law was discussed and construed, especially [*112] the case of Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 52 L. Ed. 488, 28 S. Ct. 301, wherein the Supreme Court of the United States held as follows:

"A combination of labor organizations and the members thereof, to compel a manufacturer whose goods are almost entirely sold in other states, to unionize his shops and on his refusal so to do to boycott his goods and prevent their sale in states other than his own until such time as the resulting damage forces him to comply with their demands, is, under the conditions of this case, a combination in restraint of interstate trade or commerce within the meaning of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, and the manufacturer may maintain an action for three-fold damages under Sec. 7 of that act."

Now, the only theory upon which the combination of labor organizations was held to be a combination within the purview of the Sherman antitrust act was that it was a combination in restraint of interstate trade or interstate commerce.

Section 6391 G. C. provides as follows:

27 Ohio Dec. 111, *112 | 916 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 39, **2

HN1 [↑] "A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms, [**3] partnerships, corporations or associations of persons for any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce. * * *"

It seems, therefore, that by a parity of reasoning HN2 [↑] a combination of persons for the purpose of boycotting a person who will not become a member of their organization and a further combination by these persons with a union labor organization in furtherance of this boycott, whereby an attempt is made to have persons refuse to deal with him on account of an alleged unfairness to union labor, is a combination to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce within the view of this act.

Therefore, I have reconsidered my opinion heretofore rendered and now hold that in so far as the matter above sought to be stricken out is concerned the motion should be overruled.

An order will therefore be prepared in conformity with this ruling and the ruling heretofore made is modified by this ruling.

---

End of Document

Orebaugh v. Neu

Court of Appeals of Ohio, Fourth Appellate District, Adams County

January 24, 1917, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

6 Ohio App. 404 *; 1917 Ohio App. LEXIS 381 **; 28 Ohio C.A. 161

OREBAUGH v. NEU

Prior History: [**1] The parties stand in this court as they stood in the court below. The plaintiff filed his amended petition in the court of common pleas alleging that on the 3d day of October, 1913, and for a long time prior thereto, the Ford Motor Company, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Michigan, and having its place of business in the city of Detroit, in the state of Michigan, was engaged in the manufacture and sale of a certain line of automobiles, and accessories thereto, known as the Ford automobile, of which it was the sole manufacturer; that the automobiles and accessories were manufactured under letters patent of the United States, of which the Ford Motor Company was the sole and exclusive owner; that on said third day of October, 1913, the plaintiff made application to the said Ford Motor Company to be its agent in the following territory, viz., Winchester, Ohio, and Adams county, all in the state of Ohio; and that said Ford Motor Company accepted said application and entered into a written contract.

A copy of the contract is incorporated in the petition.

On the 9th day of March, 1914, the plaintiff and defendant, having full notice and knowledge of the [**2] existence, terms, provisions and conditions of said contract of plaintiff with the Ford Motor Company, entered into a partnership in the business of selling automobiles. The partnership took over and assumed all the rights, powers and privileges contained in the contract between plaintiff and the Ford Motor Company. Prior to said 9th day of March, 1914, plaintiff and defendant, as such partners, ordered and requested a consignment to plaintiff from said Ford Motor Company, under said contract between plaintiff and said Ford Motor Company, of a large number of said Ford automobiles, to be sold under the provisions of said contract, plaintiff and defendant, as such partners, advancing to said Ford Motor Company eighty-five per cent. of the full advertised list price of the consignment. The cars so ordered were duly shipped by the Ford Motor Company.

On the 9th day of March, 1914, while plaintiff and defendant, as such partners, had in their possession a large number of such cars belonging to said Ford Motor Company, they dissolved said partnership and entered into a contract of dissolution. Parts of said contract are as follows:

"W. C. Neu is to have as his share in the division [**3] of the property eleven new motor cars in good condition; Orebaugh is to have all the balance of the machines * * *.

"The said W. C. Neu is to sell all his cars in accordance with the terms of the contract between the Ford Motor Company and W. H. Orebaugh and the said W. H. Orebaugh agrees to sell on the same conditions, and neither of them is to interfere with the other's sales."

Plaintiff says that the defendant, in violation of said written agreement of defendant with plaintiff, and with full knowledge of said contract between plaintiff and the Ford Motor Company, between the 9th day of March, 1914, and the 30th day of September, 1914, and while both contracts were in full force and effect, which defendant well knew, sold a large number of said Ford motor cars so received by defendant under his written agreement with plaintiff, to-wit, six of said new Ford motor cars, outside of the specified territory mentioned in said contract of limited agency between this plaintiff and the said Ford Motor Company, knowingly selling the same to persons who are, and then were, residents of Scioto county, Ohio. Thereupon said Ford Motor Company, through one W. J. Friel, its limited agent in said [**4] Scioto county, called upon the plaintiff, and plaintiff under his said contract with the said Ford Motor Company was compelled to and did pay at the order of the Ford Motor Company to its limited agent at Portsmouth, Ohio, the sum of $ 400 damages, by reason of such sales so made by defendant in violation of said contract between plaintiff and defendant.

Plaintiff therefore claims a judgment against the defendant for the sum of $ 400.

To this amended petition the defendant filed a general demurrer on the ground of insufficiency.

The demurrer was sustained in the court of common pleas.

Disposition: Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

Core Terms

---

second party, first party, purchaser, machines, bill of sale, patents, dissolution, provisions, territory, selling, list price, consignment, sales, terms

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Monopoly -- Public policy -- Restraint of trade -- Limited agency contract -- Sherman anti-trust law -- Effect of withholding title -- No violation of law where agent has right only to solicit purchasers.

Syllabus

---

The Ford Motor Company in its limited-agency contract withholds to itself the title in the machine, and the agent has the right only to solicit purchasers, and no right to give complete title to the purchaser except by bill of sale signed by the Ford Motor Company, and its sales are made through its own agents under the contract, and it [**5] is protected in so directly selling by its patents, and its contract is not monopolistic, in restraint of trade, or in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, or against public policy.

Counsel: Messrs. Blair & Kimble, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Joseph W. Bagby and Mr. C. E. Roebuck, for defendant in error.

Judges: WALTERS, J. SAYRE and MIDDLETON, JJ., concur.

Opinion by: WALTERS

Opinion

---

[*407] The question raised is whether or not the contract between Orebaugh and the Ford Motor Company is against public policy, monopolistic in its tendencies, and in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

The former contract of the Ford Motor Company was under consideration by the district court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio, western division, in cause No. 2174, Ford Motor Company v. The Union Motor Sales Company et al., * and Judge Hollister held in the opinion that the contract of the Ford Motor Company then existing and under consideration by the court was monopolistic, against public policy, and came within the provisions of the Sherman anti-trust law.

[**6] Whether or not the contract now under consideration, or the contract under consideration by Judge Hollister, is a contract which the Ford Motor [*408] Company had a right to make with its agents depends upon whether or not the contract provides for the sale of the machines to the agents -- whether or not the title to the machines vests in the agent.

After the above decision the attorneys for the Ford Motor Company drew up another contract, which they attempted to take out of the provisions of the decision of Judge Hollister. As to whether or not they have done so is the principal question in this case.

Judge Hollister held that a patentee, when he sold his machines to a vendee and received the full purchase price therefor as such patentee and manufacturer, could not dictate the price at which his agent or vendee should sell the article; that under the patent laws of the United States when a man receives a patent, the object is to give him a monopoly, he may manufacture and sell direct for such price as he may fix, and is protected by the law and his patents, but that when he sells to an agent or other person and receives the full price he asks for the article and all he expects [**7] to receive, he can not say to the vendee or agent that he must sell it for a certain price. That is the limit of the protection afforded him by the patent laws of the United States.

Mr. Orebaugh's contract was under the new form of contract provided by the Ford Motor Company, and if its terms withhold the title in the Ford Motor Company, and the agent has the right only to solicit purchasers for the Ford Motor Company and has no right to give complete title to the purchaser except by bill of sale signed by the Ford [*409] Motor Company, it seems to us the Ford Motor Company is selling the machine direct through its agent, that Orebaugh was simply a soliciting agent for the Ford Motor Company, and that no title passed when Orebaugh secured a purchaser for one of the machines, until the Ford Motor Company executed a bill of sale.

Let us examine some of the provisions of this new contract.

The preamble states: "Whereas the second party has applied to the first party to be the agent in certain territory hereinafter described, for the sale of said Ford automobiles and parts, and the first party is willing to appoint second party, with certain limited authority and upon the following [**8] terms and conditions only:" etc.

Condition No. 1 recites: "That first party hereby appoints the second party its 'Limited Agent', with certain authority as herein expressly stated only, for the purpose of negotiating sales of first party's products to users only in the methods and upon the terms and within the territory herein specifically set forth."

Condition No. 2 is as follows: "That second party shall have no authority or power or duty whatsoever, except as herein expressly conferred."

Condition No. 3 is as follows: "That first party will consign its Ford automobiles to second party to be sold to users only, and not for re-sale upon bills of sale to be executed by the first party only, as hereinafter provided."

Condition No. 6 states: "Second party shall arrange for sales of Ford automobiles * * *." [*410] And in condition No. 7 we find the term: "Second party shall arrange all sales * * *."

Condition No. 9 provides: "The first party may change the list price of any of its products at any time it may choose * * *."

---

* 225 F. 373. -- REPORTER.

Condition No. 10 sets forth the second party's lien, stating that he shall advance in cash 85 per cent. of the full list price of cars at the time of the [**9] consignment; and in condition No. 11 the word "consignment" is also used.

Condition No. 13 is as follows: "First party shall retain all and complete title to each automobile until actual bill of sale, signed and executed by first party, or one of its factory branch managers, has been delivered to the vendee, who shall be only a user; that is, one who has purchased for immediate use and not for re-sale the Ford automobile, at full advertised list price, plus freight and delivery charges, and without rebate, donation or drawback of any character whatsoever. And any attempt to sell or dispose of or deliver any Ford automobile at less than such price shall be utterly void and shall pass no title whatsoever."

Condition No. 14 specifically gives the second party a lien on each Ford automobile consigned to him, for the 85 per cent. advanced by him on the sale.

The consignee or limited agent could have no lien upon his own property.

Condition No. 15 states: "Second party will make no arrangements for the sale of a Ford automobile without taking such written signed order * * *."

[*411] Condition No. 17 is as follows: "The dealings of the second party with a proposed purchaser of [**10] an automobile or the taking of a signed order blank as herein required or a deposit or both, shall not constitute a sale, nor shall first party be bound to accept such order, * * *."

Condition No. 19 states: "Second party shall have no authority to make any warranty whatsoever of Ford automobiles * * *."

Warranty is an incident of ownership.

Condition No. 21 provides: "In case of damages to automobiles by carriers in transit to second party collection from the carrier shall be made in the name of the first party as the owner of such automobiles * * *."

In condition No. 23 second party guarantees to save first party harmless from theft and damage of any kind to Ford automobiles while in his possession under consignment.

In condition No. 25 second party agrees to display signs and otherwise advertise as a limited agent for Ford cars, and thus establish himself with the public as being simply an intermediate agent between the seller and buyer, or, in other words, a means of communication.

Condition No. 32 is as follows: "The first party hereby expressly reserves to itself the right to make direct sales to customers in the territory above described, and in such case will pay to the [**11] second party five per cent (5%) of the list price of the automobile or automobiles so sold, after it shall have received the full purchase price in cash. This shall not include sales of parts or accessories, which are otherwise provided for herein."

[*412] Condition No. 43 again reserves the right in the first party to change the price of the car at any time, and even after requisitions and deposits are accepted.

All of these provisions, and each and every one of them, are made in this contract with the intent on the part of the contracting parties that the first party shall retain the title and ownership of all automobiles until the limited agent has secured a purchaser, and, then, not until the first party executes a bill of sale to the purchaser is the sale complete.

The first party reserves to itself the right to make sales in the territory, and provides that the second party shall not warrant any of the automobiles. If he owned them he could do as he pleased with them. The second party can make all the arrangements he pleases for a sale, but, in the contract, the Ford Motor Company reserves the right to make the sale by executing a bill of sale. The contract speaks [**12] of the second party making arrangements for the sale. Condition No. 13 provides that the Ford Motor Company "shall retain all and complete title to each automobile until actual bill of sale [is] signed and executed by first party * * *." Condition No. 9 gives the right to the first party to change the list price of any of the products. That is an index of ownership.

We do not decide whether the relation between the automobile company and the limited agent is that of bailor or bailee. But whatever the relation is, as evidenced by this contract, it may be [*413] termed, as it is in the contract, one of limited agency.

We are constrained to believe that what we have quoted of this new contract steers clear of the objections in the old contract pointed out in the opinion of Judge Hollister, as each of the paragraphs quoted from the new contract shows distinctly that the Ford Motor Company has simply given the right to its limited agents to procure purchasers; in other words, as is said in the contract, to arrange for the sale. The company really makes the sale itself after the agent acts as a solicitor in procuring a purchaser. The Ford Motor Company manufactures these automobiles [**13] under its different patents issued by the United States, and under this contract it sells them directly through an agent. That it has a right to do, and is protected by its patents in fixing whatever price it chooses so long as the title is not vested in the limited agent.

Having concluded the main issue in this case, and having found that the contract is a valid one, is not against public policy, is not monopolistic, and is not within the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law, and that the patentee of these articles was discharging only his own legal rights protected by the patents, we now come to the question of the liability of the defendant to plaintiff under the contract of dissolution between them.

It is stated in the amended petition, and in the language used in the contract of dissolution, that Neu had explicit knowledge of all the clauses in the contract of Orebaugh with the Ford Motor Company, and that he agreed in the contract of dissolution [*414] that he would sell all cars in accordance with the terms of the contract between the Ford Motor Company and W. H. Orebaugh. Now neither Orebaugh nor his partner, according to our finding, had any title to any of the [**14] cars. Therefore, Orebaugh could confer no title by selling the cars to Neu, and in fact there was not a sale -- there was a dissolution of the partnership and a division of the assets of the partnership between them upon amicable terms. But Neu, in violation of his contract of dissolution and in violation of the Ford Motor Company contract, of which he knew, as is alleged in the amended petition, sold machines in Scioto county, which he well knew he had no right to do, and he knew at the time that selling machines outside of the territory limited in the Ford Motor Company contract would make Orebaugh liable for $ 250 for each machine so sold. Orebaugh says he has paid the damages to the agent of Scioto county, through the Ford Motor Company, and he now asks that Neu, for a flagrant violation of his contract, pay to him the damages he has sustained thereby. If this was not fraud on the part of Neu, when he had knowledge of the Ford Motor Company's contract, and its provisions against selling outside of certain territory, and the penalty attached to Orebaugh for so doing, it certainly nearly amounts to fraud. For such a violation of the terms of the partnership contract of dissolution [**15] and the Ford Motor Company's contract, knowing of the damage that would result to Orebaugh, it seems to us that Orebaugh can maintain an action against Neu.

[*415] The judgment of the court below is reversed, cause remanded, and the court instructed to overrule the demurrer to the amended petition.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

People v. Baff

Court of General Sessions of the Peace, In and for the County of New York

April, 1917

No Number in Original

Reporter

99 Misc. 684 *; 166 N.Y.S. 136 **; 1917 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 871 ***

The People of the State of New York, Plaintiff, v. Harry Baff, Louis Warner, Max Sekeleff, Charles S. Frank, Goodman Levy, and Paul Abelson, Defendants

Prior History: [***1] Motion to set aside indictment.

Disposition: Ordered accordingly.

Core Terms

---

indictment, poultry, grand jury, forty-one, witnesses, competitors, incompetent

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Procedures > Return of Indictments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN1[] Procedures, Return of Indictments

Convenience and expedition in the administration of the criminal law suggest not to condemn the course pursued by a grand jury in failing to re-examine the witnesses, particularly where an indictment is filed for the same crime.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Procedures > Return of Indictments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN2[] Procedures, Return of Indictments

There is no substantial reason why the procedure, where a motion to set aside an indictment is granted with leave to resubmit the charge to a grand jury, should not be followed where a demurrer is laid to an indictment with leave to resubmit the charge.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The law does not affix the brand of condemnation upon any contract, agreement, or arrangement unless it unreasonably or unduly restricts trade or commerce or unduly or unreasonably restricts competition in the supply or price of an article or commodity of common use or tends to produce such results. In other words, it must be shown that the parties who seek to control or monopolize the avenues of industry, in order to prevent free and unrestricted competition in business pursuits, have sufficient power to control or possess effective means to dominate the particular business in which they are engaged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Governments > Agriculture & Food > Animal Protection

HN4 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Mere numbers do not ordinarily affect the quality of an act allegedly attempting to control an industry. Whatever one man may do alone, he may do in combination with others, provided they have no unlawful object in view.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Grand Juries > Evidence Before Grand Jury > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Procedures > Return of Indictments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN5 [down] Grand Juries, Evidence Before Grand Jury

Where witnesses are accomplices, as a matter of law, it is necessary, therefore, to sustain a grand jury indictment that their testimony should be corroborated by other evidence tending to implicate the defendants.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Directors & Officers > Scope of Authority > General Overview

Evidence > Authentication > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > General Overview

HN6 [down] Directors & Officers, Scope of Authority

The testimony of a bookkeeper of the corporation with which the defendants are connected as corporate officers, that he had prepared from books of the corporation a summary showing the volume of business transacted, the expenses of the business, the gross profits, the net profits, and the balance in the treasury of the corporation, is clearly incompetent. Upon no conceivable theory is such testimony admissible against the officers of the corporation, where no proper foundation is laid, establishing that the entries in the books were made with the knowledge of the defendants, or that they authorized or caused such entries to be made, or that they had some connection with the entries therein.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Indictment -- when motion to set aside, will be granted -- pleading -- grand jury -- evidence -- criminal law -- General Business Law, §§ 340, 341.

On granting a motion to set aside an indictment with leave to resubmit the charge to the grand jury the same procedure should be followed as where a demurrer is sustained with like leave.

Where, upon sustaining a demurrer to an indictment under the "Donnelly-Anti-Trust Law" (General Business Law, §§ 340, 341) upon the ground that the acts charged in the indictment to have been committed by defendants did not constitute a crime, an order was entered granting leave for the resubmission of the charge to the same grand jury and a new indictment is returned without the taking of any additional testimony, a motion to set aside the new indictment for failure of the grand jury to examine the witnesses anew before finding the new indictment will be denied.

Where, however, in the record of the proceedings before the grand jury which returned the new indictment, which charged in substance that defendants organized a corporation as a medium to monopolize the sale of live [***2] and slaughtered poultry and to fix the prices thereof in certain designated sections of the city of New York, there is an absence of legal evidence to support the allegations that four of the defendants together with other persons mentioned in the indictment controlled seventy-five per cent or upwards of the poultry business in the designated locality or that they had sufficient control therein of such business so as to bring their conduct within the condemnation of the statutes relating to illegal combinations, and the record does not disclose what part of said business was controlled by the defendants and the other persons mentioned in the indictment and although incompetent testimony was received there was no competent evidence before the grand jury to connect defendants with the commission of the crime charged, a motion to set aside the indictment on the grounds that the evidence before the grand jury fails to show that defendants committed the crime charged in the indictment and that incompetent testimony was received in support thereof, will be granted.

Counsel: Samuel Markewich, deputy assistant district attorney, for People.

Kohnig, Goldsmith & Sitterfield, for defendants.

Judges: [***3] Mulqueen, J.

Opinion by: MULQUEEN

Opinion

---

[*685] [**137] On December 5, 1916, the grand jury filed an indictment against the defendants charging them with the crime of making and entering into a contract, agreement and combination whereby a monopoly in the sale in this state of an article and commodity of common use was and might be created, established and maintained, and whereby competition in the supply and price of such article and commodity was and might be established and prevented.

The indictment was drawn under sections 340 and 341 of the General Business Law, popularly known as the Donnelly Anti-Trust Law. In substance it alleged that the five defendants organized a corporation as a medium to monopolize the sale of live and slaughtered poultry and to fix the prices thereof in Harlem and the [*686] Bronx of the city of New York, and that live and slaughtered poultry was an article and commodity of common use.

A demurrer was filed to this indictment upon the ground that the facts therein stated did not constitute a crime. My learned associate, Judge Nott, in a very able opinion held that the indictment was bad, and sustained the demurrer. People v. Baff, 98 Misc. [***4] Rep. 547. Among other things he said:

"It is not alleged that part or a percentage of the trade in poultry was controlled by these defendants. It does appear by the indictment that the business of the defendants, plus the business of the forty-one other individuals and firms not concerned in the commission of the crime, amounted to seventy-five per cent of the total business in poultry sought to be controlled. There is no allegation in the indictment that after the agreement of July 28, 1916, was entered into the defendants took any steps to persuade the other forty-one competitors to submit their business to the corporation or to submit to prices fixed by the defendants, much less that the forty-one other competitors did so agree. There is no allegation in the indictment that the defendants were in any position to influence by persuasion or coercion the forty-one other competitors to assent to the proposed contract. For aught that appears to the contrary, on the face of the indictment, the defendants may have been without any influence in the trade.

"The indictment does not predicate the criminality of the defendants upon their agreement with each other of July 19th, 1916; in [**5] fact the indictment itself shows that the six defendants could not, by an agreement among themselves only, have effected a monopoly or an undue restraint of trade as it appears that they, together with forty-one other competitors, controlled but seventy-five per cent of [**138] the business. Therefore, [*687] their agreement with each other would not in and of itself be deemed an infraction of the statute within the doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, in United States v. Standard Oil Company (221 U.S. 1) and United States v. American Tobacco Company (id. 106). * * *

"There is no allegation contained in the indictment showing, or tending to show, that the defendants had any influence or control whatever over the forty-one competitors whom the defendants agreed should submit their business to them To paraphrase certain language used by the court in United States v. Whiting (212 Fed. Rep. 466), as it does not appear from the indictment that the defendants had any power or control over the poultry trade, they could not create a monopoly or restrain trade within the spirit of the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Company [***6] Cases, supra."

On January 19, 1917, the very day that the order was entered granting leave to the district attorney to resubmit the charge to the same grand jury, a new indictment meeting the defects pointed out in the opinion of Judge Nott was filed by that body without taking any additional testimony.

The defendants attack the validity of the indictment under review by two separate motions, the first of which is based upon the ground that the same was found without any legal evidence to sustain it, in that the grand jury did not hear any witnesses, but relied upon the testimony given by the witnesses in the first proceeding; the second of which is based upon the grounds, among others:

- A. That the facts are insufficient to constitute a crime;
- B. That the indictment was found upon illegal and incompetent evidence.

[*688] To sustain the point made in the first motion, counsel rely on the case of State v. Ivey, 100 N. C. 532, which supports their contention. I am, however, not inclined to follow that decision for the reason that it is too technical. It seems to me that it would be an idle ceremony for the same grand jury to rehear the same witnesses where it is [***7] of opinion that sufficient evidence was taken in the first proceeding to meet the objections which resulted in a demurrer being allowed to a defective indictment. I do not think it is an invasion of any of the constitutional rights of a defendant to permit the practice which was followed by the grand jury in this case.

My view of the matter is that HN1[<sup>A</sup>] convenience and expedition in the administration of the criminal law suggest not to condemn the course pursued by the grand jury in failing to re-examine the witnesses, particularly where an indictment is filed for the same crime.

HN2[<sup>A</sup>] There is no substantial reason why the procedure, where a motion to set aside an indictment is granted with leave to resubmit the charge to a grand jury, should not be followed where a demurrer is laid to an indictment with leave to resubmit the charge. Commonwealth v. Clune, 162 Mass. 206; Commonwealth v. Woods, 10 Gray, 447; State v. Peterson, 28 L. R. A. 324; Nordlinger v. U. S., 24 App. D. C. 406.

If the minutes disclose that the record is destitute of sufficient proof to sustain the additional allegations of the new indictment or that the indictment was based upon illegal [***8] and incompetent testimony, a more serious question is presented.

In support of the second motion, it is urged by defendants that the indictment cannot be upheld for the reason that there is a total [**139] failure of legal proof to sustain the allegation in the indictment that the [*689] four defendants, above named, exclusive of the defendant Abelson, together with forty-one other individuals and firms mentioned therein, controlled seventy-five per cent and upwards of the poultry bought, slaughtered and sold in Harlem and the Bronx of this city.

It is well settled, by the leading authorities, both federal and state, that HN3[<sup>A</sup>] the law does not affix the brand of condemnation upon any contract, agreement or arrangement unless it unreasonably or unduly restricts trade or commerce or unduly or unreasonably restricts competition in the supply or price of an article or commodity of common use or tends to produce such results. In other words, it must be shown that the parties who seek to control or monopolize the avenues of industry, in order to prevent free and unrestricted competition in business pursuits, have sufficient power to control or possess effective means to dominate the [***9] particular business in which they are engaged. Standard Oil Company v. U. S., 221 U.S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., Id. 106; People v. Baff, 98 Misc. Rep. 547, opinion by Judge Nott; United States v. Whiting, 212 Fed. Repr. 466; State v. Eastern Coal Co., 29 R. I. 254; Marienelli v. United Booking Offices of America, 227 Fed. Repr. 165; People v. Dwyer, 160 App. Div. 542; affd, 215 N. Y. 46; People v. Sheldon, 139 id. 251; Cummings v. Union Blue Stone Co., 164 id. 401.

I have carefully read the record of the proceedings before the grand jury and I fail to find any legal proof which supports the allegations of the indictment that the persons mentioned therein controlled seventy-five per cent or upwards of the poultry business in the Harlem and The Bronx, or that they had sufficient control of the poultry business in that section of the city so as to bring their conduct within the condemnation of the law in relation to illegal combinations.

[*690] There is absolutely nothing in the record to show what part of the poultry business was controlled by the defendants and the other persons mentioned [***10] in the indictment. The percentage of business controlled by the defendant and the other persons is based upon conjecture and speculation, rather than upon facts.

The testimony of Mr. Morrison, one of the attorneys, who assisted in the organization of the Harlem Live Poultry Association, to the effect that a vast majority of the live poultry dealers in the section of the city hereinbefore referred to joined the association, is no legal proof that these persons controlled the poultry business in this vicinity. He evidently must have referred to a majority in number. As was said in Nat. Protective Assn. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 321: HN4[<sup>A</sup>] "Mere numbers do not ordinarily affect the quality of the act. Whatever one man may do alone, he may do in combination with others, provided they have no unlawful object in view." It is possible that the parties to the present arrangement may have constituted a small proportion of the live poultry business and the minority [**140] who did not join the association may have controlled a greater percentage or proportion of this business.

In United States v. Whiting, supra, the court said: "This indictment charges a conspiracy in restraint [***11] of trade. It does not contain the allegations of indictment No. 454 as to the percentage of milk sold in the country districts for shipment to the Boston and Worcester markets, which was brought by the defendants, nor any allegations from which it can be inferred that the defendants either controlled or were dominating factors in the buying market in the country or selling markets in those cities. For aught that appears, they may have been unimportant factors in each one."

[*691] The testimony of Mr. Gordon, another attorney who assisted in the organization of the association above mentioned, in relation to the magnitude of the business controlled by it, was purely hearsay and should have been rejected by the grand jury, for the reason that Gordon specifically testified in answer to a question propounded by a grand juror as follows: "Now, gentlemen, what I have testified to was with respect to what happened every week. Of course, I don't know of my own knowledge. I am assuming that everything happened in accordance with the plan laid out. Whether it did or not, I don't know. I don't presume to know personally as to the principles of this operation."

Furthermore, if [***12] the acts of the defendants were to constitute a violation of the law, then Gordon and Morrison were clearly accomplices in the commission of a crime. Gordon testified that he conceived the scheme of the organization above mentioned and that he counselled and advised the defendants in their business affairs, and Morrison testified that he co-operated and was associated with him in the plan which brought the association into existence and that he also advised the defendants with reference to the management of their business. Likewise Nathan Neuman was an accomplice, for according to his testimony he became one of the agents of the association and aided and assisted it in carrying out the plan which resulted in the indictment of the defendants.

These three HN5 witnesses, being accomplices, as a matter of law, it is necessary, therefore, to sustain the indictment that their testimony should be corroborated by other evidence tending to implicate the defendants in the unlawful combination.

After a most careful examination of the record, I am forced to the conclusion that there is no competent [*692] testimony to connect the defendants with the commission of the crime (if any crime was [***13] committed). People v. O'Farrell, 175 N. Y. 323; People v. Becker, 215 id. 126.

HN6 The testimony of Altman, a bookkeeper of the corporation with which the defendants were connected, that he had prepared from books of said corporation a summary showing the volume of business transacted, the expenses of the business, the gross profits, the net profits, and the balance in the treasury of the corporation, was clearly incompetent and upon no conceivable theory was such testimony admissible against the defendants who were the officers of the corporation, for the reason that no proper foundation was laid, establishing that the entries in the books were made with the knowledge of the defendants, [**141] or that they authorized or caused such entries to be made, or that they had some connection with the entries therein. People v. Levis, 96 Misc. Rep. 513; Rudd v. Robinson, 126 N. Y. 113; People v. Burnham, 119 App. Div. 302; People v. Burnham, 120 id. 388. It is, therefore, clear that in the absence of proper proof, not only are the book entries of a corporation not evidence against a director or stockholder thereof, but likewise a summary [***14] prepared from the books of a corporation is also incompetent evidence against an officer thereof.

For the reasons herein stated the motion to set aside the indictment for failure of the grand jury to examine the witnesses anew before finding the present indictment is denied, but the motion to set aside the indictment upon the grounds that the evidence before the grand jury fails to show that the defendants committed the crime charged therein, and that incompetent testimony was received in support thereof, is granted.

Ordered accordingly.

United States v. Colgate & Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued March 10, 1919. ; June 2, 1919, Decided

No. 828.

Reporter

250 U.S. 300 *; 39 S. Ct. 465 **; 63 L. Ed. 992 ***; 1919 U.S. LEXIS 1748 ****; 7 A.L.R. 443

UNITED STATES v. COLGATE & COMPANY.

Prior History: [****1] ERROR TO THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Disposition: The Court affirmed the trial court's judgment sustaining an objection to petitioner's indictment because the indictment did not charge respondent with violating antitrust law by fixing prices with wholesale and retail dealers.

Core Terms

---

prices, products, indictment, manufacturer, dealers, retail dealer, retail, customers, resell, wholesale dealer, wholesale, sales, adherence, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Right to Appeal > Defendants

Civil Procedure > ... > Other Jurisdiction > Direct Appeals & Three Judge Courts > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN1[] Right to Appeal, Defendants

Under the Act of March 2, 1907, 34 Stat. 1246, writs of error from the district courts directly to the United States Supreme Court may be taken by the United States from a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to, any indictment, or any count thereof, where such decision or judgment is based upon the invalidity, construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded. Upon such a writ, the Court has no authority to revise the mere interpretation of an indictment and is confined to ascertaining whether the court in a case under review erroneously construed the statute. The Court must accept the district court's interpretation of the indictments and confine its review to the question of the construction of the statute involved in its decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman Act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell. The trader or manufacturer carries on an entirely private business, and can sell to whom he pleases. A retail dealer has the unquestioned right to stop dealing with a wholesaler for reasons sufficient to himself, and may do so because he thinks such dealer is acting unfairly in trying to undermine his trade.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Headnotes

---

Appeal -- by government in criminal case -- scope of review. --

Headnote:

The Federal district court's interpretation of the indictment must be accepted by the Federal Supreme Court on a direct writ of error sued out under the Act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. at L. 1246, chap. 2564, Comp. Stat. 1916, 1704), to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the indictment, which is based upon the construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded. Review in such case is confined to the question of the construction of the statute involved in the decision below.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, I. e., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- unlawful combination -- maintaining resale prices. --

Headnote:

Conduct of a manufacturer which, as intended, has the effect of procuring adherence on the part of its wholesale and retail customers to resale prices fixed by it, does not offend against the unlawful combination provisions of the Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, Comp. Stat. 1916, 8820), where there was no agreement which obligated any dealer not to resell except at the fixed prices, his course in this respect being affected only by the fact that he might, by his action, incur the displeasure of the manufacturer, who could refuse to make further sales to him.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- combination -- right to select customers. --

GI ÉÁNEÚÉHEÉÉHÉELÁUÁUEÓGÁIÍÉAÍIÍLÁHÄSÉÖAÉJGÄEJJGLÁFJFJÁMEÜÉSÓYÖÄFTÍÍÉAÍIÍ

Headnote:

In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman Anti-trust Act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, Comp. Stat. 1916, 8820), does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer, engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to the parties with whom he will deal, and to announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Syllabus

On a writ of error under the Criminal Appeals Act, this court must confine itself to the question of the construction of the statute involved in the decision of the District Court, accepting that court's interpretation of the indictment. P. 301.

In the absence of any intent to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman Act does not prevent a manufacturer engaged in a private business from announcing in advance the prices at which his goods may be resold and refusing to deal with wholesalers and retailers who do not conform to such prices. P. 307.

As the court interprets the District Court's opinion, the indictment in this case was interpreted as not charging the defendant with selling to dealers under agreements obligating them not to resell at prices other than those fixed by defendant. P. 306. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, distinguished.

253 Fed. Rep. 522, affirmed.

Counsel: Mr. Assistant to the Attorney General Todd, with whom Mr. Henry S. Mitchell, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, was on the brief, for the [****2] United States.

Mr. Charles E. Hughes, with whom Mr. Charles Wesley Dunn and Mr. Mason Trowbridge were on the brief, for defendant in error.

Opinion by: McREYNOLDS

Opinion

[*301] [*466] [***994] MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS delivered the opinion of the court.

HN1 [↑] Writs of error from District Courts directly here may be taken by the United States "From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to, any indictment, or any count thereof, where such decision or judgment is based upon the invalidity, construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded." (Act of March 2, 1907, c. 2564, 34 Stat. 1246.) Upon such a writ "we have no authority to revise the mere interpretation of an indictment and are confined to ascertaining whether the court in a case under review erroneously construed the statute." "We must accept that court's interpretation of the indictments and confine our review to the question of the construction of the statute involved in its [*302] decision." United States v. Carter, 231 U.S. 492, 493; United States v. Miller, 223 U.S. 599, 602.

Being of opinion that "The indictment should set forth such a state of facts as [***995] [****3] to make it clear that a manufacturer, engaged in what was believed to be the lawful conduct of its business, has violated some known law, before it is haled into court to answer the charge of the commission of a crime" and holding that it "fails to charge any offense under the Sherman Act or any other law of the United States, that is to say, as to the substance of the indictment and the conduct and acts charged therein" the trial court sustained a demurrer to the one before us. Its reasoning and conclusions are set out in a written opinion. 253 Fed. Rep. 522.

Gl€ ÁM€UÍT€ HEEFTH€ CLÁU ÁU ÚAODAÍ I Í ÉAÍL I I LÁ HÄSEÓA ÆL JGÄTT€JÍ LÁFJF ÁM€UÍSØY QUAFÍ I I ÉAÍL

We are confronted by an uncertain interpretation of an indictment itself couched in rather vague and general language. Counsel differ radically concerning the meaning of the opinion below and there is much room for the controversy between them.

The indictment runs only against Colgate & Company, a corporation engaged in manufacturing soap and toilet articles and selling them throughout the Union. It makes no reference to monopoly, and proceeds solely upon the theory of an unlawful combination. After setting out defendant's organization, place and character of business and general methods of selling and distributing products [****4] through wholesale and retail merchants, it alleges --

"During the aforesaid period of time, within the said eastern district of Virginia and throughout the United States, the defendant knowingly and unlawfully created and engaged in a combination with said wholesale and retail dealers, in the eastern district of Virginia and throughout the United States, for the purpose and with the effect of procuring adherence on the part of such dealers (in reselling such products sold to them as aforesaid) to resale prices fixed by the defendant, and of preventing [*303] such dealers from reselling such products at lower prices, thus suppressing competition amongst such wholesale dealers, and amongst such retail dealers, in restraint of the aforesaid trade and commerce among the several States, in violation of the act entitled 'An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' approved July 2, 1890."

Following this is a summary of things done to carry out the purposes of the combination: Distribution among dealers of letters, telegrams, circulars and lists showing uniform prices to be charged; urging them to adhere to such prices and notices, stating that [****5] no sales would be made to those who did not; requests, often complied with, for information concerning dealers who had departed from specified prices; investigation and discovery of those not adhering thereto and placing their names upon "suspended lists"; requests to offending dealers for assurances and promises of future adherence to prices, which were often given; uniform refusals to sell to any who failed to give the same; sales to those who did; similar assurances and promises required of, and given by, other dealers followed by sales to them; unrestricted sales to dealers with established accounts who had observed specified prices, etc.

[**467] Immediately thereafter comes this paragraph:

"By reason of the foregoing, wholesale dealers in the aforesaid products of the defendant in the eastern district of Virginia and throughout the United States, with few exceptions, resold, at uniform prices fixed by the defendant, the aforesaid products, sold to them by the defendant, and refused to resell such products at lower prices to retail dealers in the States where the respective wholesale dealers did business and in other States. For the same reason retail dealers in the aforesaid [****6] products of the defendant in the eastern district of Virginia and throughout the United States resold, at uniform prices fixed by [*304] the defendant, the aforesaid products, sold to them by the defendant and by the aforesaid wholesale dealers, and refused to sell such products at lower prices to the consuming public in the States where the respective retail dealers did business and in other States. Thus competition in the sale of such products, by wholesale dealers to retail dealers, and by retail dealers to the consuming public, was suppressed, and the prices of such products to the retail dealers and to the consuming public in the eastern district of Virginia and throughout the United States were maintained and enhanced."

In the course of its opinion the trial court said:

"No charge is made that any contract was entered into by and on the part of the defendant, and any of its retail customers, in restraint of interstate trade and commerce -- the averment being, in effect, that it knowingly and unlawfully created and engaged in a combination with certain of its wholesale and retail customers, to procure [***996] adherence on their part, in the sale of its products sold [****7] to them, to resale prices fixed by the defendant, and that, in connection therewith, such wholesale and retail customers gave assurances and promises, which resulted in the enhancement and maintenance of such prices, and in the suppression of competition by wholesale dealers and retail dealers, and by the latter to the consuming public."

GÉÁNEÚÍ É HECFÁHÉ LÁU ÁUÉDÓGÁÍ Í ÉAÍ Í Í LÁ HASEOÁDÁÍ JÉGHEEJÍ LÁFJ FJÁNÉUESESÓY QJAFÍ Í ÉAÍ

"In the view taken by the court, the indictment here fairly presents the question of whether a manufacturer of products shipped in interstate trade, is subject to criminal prosecution under the Sherman Act, for entering into a combination in restraint of such trade and commerce, because he agrees with his wholesale and retail customers, upon prices claimed by them to be fair and reasonable, at which the same may be resold, and [**305] declines to sell his products to those who will not thus stipulate as to prices. This, at the threshold, presents for the determination of the court how far one may control and dispose of his own property; that is to say, whether there is any limitation thereon, if he proceeds in respect thereto in a lawful and bona fide manner. That he may not do so fraudulently, collusively, and in unlawful combination [****8] with others, may be conceded. Eastern States Lumber Association v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 614. But it by no means follows that, being a manufacturer of a given article, he may not, without incurring any criminal liability, refuse absolutely to sell the same at any price, or to sell at a named sum to a customer, with the understanding that such customer will resell only at an agreed price between them, and, should the customer not observe the understanding as to retail prices, exercise his undoubted right to decline further to deal with such person."

* * *

"The pregnant fact should never be lost sight of that no averment is made of any contract or agreement having been entered into whereby the defendant, the manufacturer, and his customers, bound themselves to enhance and maintain prices, further than is involved in the circumstances that the manufacturer, the defendant here, refused to sell to persons who would not resell at indicated prices, and that certain retailers made purchases on this condition, whereas, inferentially, others declined so to do. No suggestion is made that the defendant, the manufacturer, attempted to reserve or retain any interest in the goods sold, [***9] or to restrain the vendee in his right to barter and sell the same without restriction. The retailer, after buying, could, if he chose, give away his purchase, or sell it at any price he saw fit, or not sell it at all; his course in these respects being affected only by [*306] the fact that he might by his action incur the displeasure of the manufacturer, who could refuse to make further sales to him, as he had the undoubted right to do. There is no charge that the retailers themselves entered into any combination or agreement with each other, or that the defendant acted other than with his customers individually."

Our problem is to ascertain, as accurately as may be, what interpretation the trial court placed upon the indictment - - not to interpret it ourselves; and then to determine whether, so construed, it fairly charges violation of the Sherman Act. Counsel for the Government maintain, in effect, that, as so interpreted, the indictment adequately charges an unlawful combination (within the doctrine of Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373) resulting from restrictive agreements between defendant and sundry dealers whereby the latter obligated themselves [****10] not to resell except at agreed prices; and to support this position they specifically rely upon the above-quoted sentence in the opinion which begins "In the view taken by the court," etc. On the other hand, defendant maintains that looking at the whole opinion it plainly construes the indictment as alleging only recognition of the manufacturer's undoubted right to specify resale prices and refuse to deal with anyone who failed to maintain the same.

Considering all said in the opinion (notwithstanding some serious doubts) we are unable to accept the construction placed upon it by the Government. We cannot, e.g., wholly disregard the statement that "The retailer, after buying, could, if he chose, give away his purchase, or sell it at any price ["**468"] he saw fit, or not sell it at all; his course in these respects being affected only by the fact that he might by his action incur the displeasure of the manufacturer, who could refuse to make further sales to him, as he had the undoubted right to do." And we ["*307"] must conclude that, as interpreted below, the indictment ["**997"] does not charge Colgate & Company with selling its products to dealers under agreements which ["****11"] obligated the latter not to resell except at prices fixed by the company.

The position of the defendant is more nearly in accord with the whole opinion and must be accepted. And as counsel for the Government were careful to state on the argument that this conclusion would require affirmation of the judgment below, an extended discussion of the principles involved is unnecessary.

The purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit monopolies, contracts and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage, in trade and commerce -- in a word to preserve the right of freedom to trade. HN2 In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell. "The trader or manufacturer, on the other hand, carries on an entirely private business, and can sell to whom he pleases." United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight [****121] Association, 166 U.S. 290, 320. "A retail dealer has the unquestioned right to stop dealing with a wholesaler for reasons sufficient to himself, and may do so because he thinks such dealer is acting unfairly in trying to undermine his trade." Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Association v. United States, 234 U.S. 600 614. See also Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 56; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 180; Boston Store of Chicago v. American Graphophone Co., 246 U.S. 8. In Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., supra, the unlawful [*308] combination was effected through contracts which undertook to prevent dealers from freely exercising the right to sell.

GÍ €ÁMÌÉÄHÉ LÁUÀÉODÁ Í Í ÉÉ Í Í LÀ HÀSÓAÉ JGÄEJÍ LÁFJÁWÉSÓYQÁFÍ I Í ÄFFF

The judgment of the District Court must be

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

United States v. United States Steel Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued March 9, 12-14, 1917; restored to docket for reargument May 21, 1917; reargued October 7-10, 1919 ;
March 1, 1920

No. 6

Reporter

251 U.S. 417 *; 40 S. Ct. 293 **; 64 L. Ed. 343 ***; 1920 U.S. LEXIS 1630 ****; 8 A.L.R. 1121

UNITED STATES v. UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

Core Terms

---

combinations, Steel, competitors, prices, conditions, monopoly, decree, exerted, organizations, formation, restrain, dissolution, customers, restraint of trade, Sherman Act, illegality, cases, stock, dissolving, monopolize, subsidiary, offending, attained, words, Oil, public interest, foreign trade, instrumentality, manufacturers, effectually

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN1 [blue download icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Federal antitrust law does not make mere size an offence or the existence of unexerted power an offence. It requires overt acts and trusts to its prohibition of them and its power to repress or punish them. It does not compel competition nor require all that is possible.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Headnotes

---

Monopoly -- under Anti-trust Act -- dissolution -- past and present corporate powers and acts. --

Headnote:

A court, when asked to dissolve a corporation as an alleged violator of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, should consider, not what the corporation had power to do or did, but what it now has power to do and is doing.

Í FÁMEÙÄ FI ÆÄ FI LÁ €ÙÉÖÉGJHEEGJHÄ I ÅSEØAÄH HÄEEH HAFJGEÄNEÙESØYØAÄH HÄEEH

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- under Anti-trust Act -- expectation or realization. --

Headnote:

The Sherman Anti-trust Act is directed against monopoly; not against an expectation of it, but against its realization.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- under Anti-trust Act -- size of corporation -- unexerted powers. --

Headnote:

The mere size of a corporation, or the existence of unexerted power unlawfully to restrain competition, does not of itself make such a corporation a violator of the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- steel trust -- intent -- past practices -- dissolution -- public interest. --

Headnote:

A holding corporation which by its formation united under one control competing companies in the steel industry, but which did not achieve monopoly, and only attempted to fix prices through occasional appeals to and confederation with competitors, whatever there was of wrongful intent not having been executed, and whatever there was of evil effect having been discontinued before suit was brought, should not be dissolved nor be separated from some of its subsidiaries at the suit of the government, asserting violations of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, especially where the court cannot see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the government's demand, and does see in so yielding a risk of injury to the public interest, including a material disturbance of, and, perhaps, serious detriment to, the foreign trade.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Syllabus

---

That an industrial combination is formed with the expectation of achieving a monopoly is not enough to make it a monopoly within the meaning of the Anti-Trust Act. P. 444.

Held, that the power attained by the United States Steel Corporation, much greater than that of any one competitor, but not greater than that possessed by them all, did not constitute it a monopoly. Id.

The fact that a corporation, alleged to be an illegal combination, during a long period after its formation persuaded and joined with its competitors in efforts, at times successful and at times not, to fix and maintain prices in violation of the Anti-Trust Act, does not warrant present relief against it, if the illegal practices were transient in purpose and effect, were abandoned before the suit was begun because of their futility and not for fear of prosecution, and have not since been resumed; and if no intention to resume them or dangerous probability of their resumption is shown by the evidence. Pp. 444 et seq.

Purpose and effect of the Steel Corporation's acquisition of control of the Tennessee Coal [****2] & Iron Company, considered, in the light of President Roosevelt's prior approval of the transaction and his testimony concerning it. P. 446.

GI FÁMEÙÄ FI ËE FÍ LÁ €ÙÉÖÉGJ HÉÉGJ HÀ I ÅSEØAÄH HÄEEH HAFJ GÉANEÜESÓY ØAÍ HÉÉG

Upon the question whether the power possessed by the Steel Corporation operated per se as an illegal restraint, held that testimony of its officers, its competitors, and hundreds of its customers, to the effect that competition was not restrained and that prices varied or remained constant according to natural conditions, must be accepted as clearly outweighing a generalization advanced by government experts that constancy of prices during certain periods evinced an artificial interference. P. 447.

An industrial combination, short of a monopoly, is not objectionable under the act merely because of its size its capital and power of production -- or merely because of a power to restrain competition, if not exerted. Pp. 447, 450 et seq.

The act prohibits overt acts, and trusts to their repression and punishment. P. 451.

The fact that competitors of a combination voluntarily follow its prices does not establish an unlawful restraint; the act does not compel competition. Pp. 449-451.

In commanding the courts to "prevent and [***3] restrain violations" of it, the Anti-Trust Law has regard to conditions as they may exist when relief is invoked and to the usual powers of a court of equity to adapt its remedies to those conditions. P. 452.

The act does not expect the courts to enforce abstractions to the subversion of its own purposes, but leaves to them to determine, in each instance, the relief appropriate for the execution of its policy. Id.

Therefore, admitting that the Steel Corporation was in origin a combination of competing companies actuated by an unlawful purpose, yet it being proved and found in this case that that purpose, and illegal practices which followed the combination, were abandoned as futile months before this suit was begun, and that the combination, viewed as of today, is not in itself or by its conduct offensive to the statute, the policy of the statute, which respects the public interest as paramount, would be defeated rather than subserved were the court, for retrospective reasons merely, to destroy the combination, or separate some of its subsidiaries as suggested, and thereby destroy or impair the investments invited of the public, and the foreign trade and other large developments [***4] made during the ten years that intervened before the Government began any legal attack. Pp. 452 et seq. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; and United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, distinguished.

No feasible way of dissolving the combination and yet protecting its foreign trade, under the Webb Act, c. 50, § 2, 40 Stat. 516, or otherwise, has been suggested. P. 453.

223 Fed. Rep. 55, affirmed.

THE case is stated in the opinion.

Counsel: Mr. Assistant to the Attorney General Ames and Mr. Henry E. Colton, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, for the United States:<sup>1</sup>

In comprehensive terms the substance of the charge is: (1) That between 1898 and 1900 combinations were formed in various branches of the iron and steel trade, not as an incident of normal growth, but with the purpose and effect of unduly restricting competition, and that they still exist, contrary to the Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890. (2) That in 1901, by means of a holding company, these several illegal combinations, each dominant in its respective field, and other powerful units, were all brought together in one super-combination of overwhelming power, [***5] which, augmented by further acquisitions, still exists, unduly restricting competition in the iron and steel trade as a whole and in practically every important branch thereof, contrary to the same act of Congress.

<sup>1</sup> At the former hearing the case was argued by Mr. Solicitor General Davis, Mr. Assistant to the Attorney General Todd and Mr. Henry E. Colton, Special Assistant to the Attorney General. Mr. Attorney General Gregory and Mr. Robert Szold also were on the brief, from which the argument is abstracted.

GI FÁMEÙÄ FI ËE FÍ LÁ €ÙÉOÉGJHEEGJHÄ I ÅSEØAÄH HÄEEH HAFJGEÄNEÙESÓYØAÄH HÄEEH

The several combinations formed during the period 1898-1900 greatly increased prices in almost every instance, especially the combinations affecting the lighter finished products, such as tubes, wire nails, tin plates, etc. Prices of pig iron, semi-finished products and rails also were increased. But notwithstanding the concentration of control in particular lines resulting from these combinations, competition was still able to make itself felt, taking the industry as [***6] a whole, and as the year 1900 drew to a close was threatening to become very active, and, with the revival of active competition, prices, which had been enormously increased, underwent substantial declines. Then was formed the present corporation -- a holding company, which controls the important acts and policies of the constituent combinations, and, among other things, generally determines the prices which they may charge for their finished products. As the proposal for the super-combination began to take form, prices, which had receded with the revival of competition in the latter half of 1900, began to rise again. The upward movement became marked as the organization of the combination was perfected. While some have since fallen, these prices have nevertheless been maintained by the combination at a substantially higher level than prevailed during competitive periods prior to its formation.

Except for the internal alterations and further acquisitions, which increased the control, the several combinations above described and the super-combination in which they were all united have continued down to the present time without change of substance. Their proportion of the trade, [***7] whilst not quite so great as at first, is still overwhelmingly preponderant.

Congress was moved to pass the Anti-Trust Act by two main considerations: (1) The desire to preserve the competitive system of industry. (2) The conviction that that system was threatened by the undue concentration of commercial power resulting chiefly from the unrestricted exercise of the right of combination.

Every combination which by its necessary effect or because of the character of the means employed threatens the normal operation of the law of competition, in other words, unduly restricts competition, is therefore within the purview of the act.

It was not intended, however, to set a limit to the enlargement of a business by normal growth, the competitive system being in no danger from that quarter.

The purpose of the parties is important in determining the question of normal growth, but, that out of the way, it is of no further consequence where the necessary effect of the combination is unduly to restrict competition.

Except as throwing light on the purpose of the parties, it is immaterial how the combination is created, whether through simple agreement, through the old form of trust, through [***8] a holding company, or through the actual purchase and consolidation of plants.

Competition may be unduly restricted through voluntary combinations of competitive traders and trade units no less than by combinations to exclude one or more such from their right to trade.

Whether restriction of competition through voluntary combinations is undue depends primarily upon the extent of the restriction. Without attempting to draw the exact line, the restriction is certainly undue where the combination embraces units which together occupy a preponderant position in a given industry.

What constitutes a preponderant position must be determined in the light of conditions in the particular branch of trade affected. The principal factors to be considered are (1) the portion of the trade engrossed by the combination as compared with the portion possessed by each of its competitors as well as with the whole, and (2) the extent of the control, if any, acquired by the combination over raw materials or over the agencies of transportation and of distribution or over the reserve supply where the article of trade is one the supply of which is limited by nature.

At the time they were combined under [***9] the control of the United States Steel Corporation the American Steel & Wire Company, the American Tin Plate Company, the American Sheet Steel Company, the American Steel Hoop Company, the National Tube Company and the American Bridge Company were severally combinations in restraint of trade, each being a combination of formerly competitive units together occupying an overwhelmingly preponderant position in a distinct branch of the iron and steel trade and each having been organized for the purpose of suppressing competition and increasing prices.

GI FÁMEÚA FI ÓÓ FÍ LÁ ÉÙÉÓ ÓEGJ HÉEGJ HÀ I ÁSEÓ ÓAÉH HÁEEH HÁFJ GÉÁMEÚE SÓY ÓAÉH HÉEEH

It has never been doubted that combinations of this type, embracing a dominant proportion of those engaged in a particular industry and formed for the express purpose of suppressing competition between them, are combinations in restraint of trade. Addyston Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 394; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co.; 220 U.S. 273, 408. Nor is it material, their purpose and effect being what they were, that the combinations here assailed were created in corporate form instead of by loose agreement. United States v. American Tobacco Co. [****101], 221 U.S. 106, 176, 181. Indeed, where, as here, corporations simply exchange their plants and businesses for stock in a consolidated corporation, the resulting combination is in no respect different in principle from a combination in the form of trust which the statute specifically prohibits.

Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 326, 327; United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324, 352-363; s.c. 183 Fed. Rep. 427, 470; Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed. Rep. 599, 619, 620 Noyes, Intercorporate Relations, § 354; Eddy, combinations, § 622. Wherefore we submit that the illegality of these combinations is not merely debatable, as the defendants themselves admit as to some, but is conclusive as to all. They were still occupying the illegal position thus acquired in various branches of the steel trade when united under the control of the United States Steel Corporation in 1901.

The Steel Corporation is a combination in restraint of trade, because it is not the result of natural trade growth but is a mere instrumentality for combining competing corporations which together occupy an overwhelmingly preponderant position in trade and [****11] commerce in iron and steel products generally. The group of independent plants and businesses combined under one control through the corporation included the largest and most powerful competitors in practically every branch of the iron and steel industry in rails; plates; structural shapes; wire rods and wire products; hoops, bands, and cotton ties; skelp; wrought pipe and tubular goods; seamless tubes; bars; billets and sheet bars. And not only were the competitors united under the control of the Corporation the largest and most powerful units in practically every branch of the iron and steel industry, but generally speaking they were splendidly grounded as regards the production of the basic products -- ore, pig iron, ingots. This is sustained by the findings of Woolley and Hunt, JJ., in the court below and by the investigation made by the Bureau of Corporations.

The preponderant position and the dominance of this combination is manifested by its capital as compared with that of competitors; its proportion of the total production; its proportion of the total production as compared with that of each of its principal competitors; its proportion of ore reserves; its control over [****12] transportation of ore; its effect upon prices; concerted maintenance of prices under its leadership; and opinion evidence as to its power.

Whilst in our view of the law a combination of able competitors occupying an overwhelmingly preponderant position in a given trade, such as the combination embodied in the Corporation, unduly restricts competition by its necessary effect, and therefore is unlawful regardless of purpose, nevertheless it is appropriate to show a wrongful purpose as a matter of aggravation. It is elementary, of course, that the purposes of illegal combinations are seldom capable of proof by direct testimony, but must be inferred from circumstances. Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 612; Reilley v. United States, 106 Fed. Rep. 896; United States v. Sacia, 2 Fed. Rep. 754, 757; Regina v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 397, 404. The considerations going to show that the controlling purpose of this super-combination was not the legitimate development of trade, but suppression of competition and exploitation of the public, are: the form of the combination -- a holding company not itself engaged in trade at [****13] all; the union of so many competitors controlling so large a proportion of the trade; the general competitive situation, falling prices, etc., immediately before the formation of the combination; increase in prices immediately following formation of the combination; gross overcapitalization of the combination in anticipation of excessive profits; enormous promoters' profits; cancellation by the combination of contracts for extensions, etc., previously entered into by constituent companies; and subsequent acquisitions. (See the findings of Woolley and Hunt, JJ., and of the bureau of Corporations.)

We are dealing here with a combination of competitors in the truest sense and not with the mere purchase by one competitor of the business of another as an incident of normal development. The distinction between a mere purchase of a competing business and a combination of competing businesses clothed in the form of purchases is sharply drawn in Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423. See Noyes, Intercorporate Relations, § 354. If the vast aggregation of competing businesses here involved occupying an overwhelmingly preponderant position in practically every branch of [****14] the iron and steel industry had been combined by executory agreement or in the old form of trust there would be none to dispute the illegality of the transaction. The legal situation is not changed by substituting a holding company as the instrument of combination. The vesting in such a company of the capital stocks of a group of able competitors for the purpose of centralizing control is no more lawful, is no more a normal method of business development, than the similar centralization of control in common trustees under the old form of trust. In such case, indeed, the holding company is but the old trust in corporate form. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, supra; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; Temple Iron Co. v. United States, 226 U.S. 324; s. c. 183 Fed. Rep. 427. It is literally a case, therefore, of the stockholders of a group of competing corporations transferring the control of each into the hands of a committee of trustees -- a form of combination in restraint of trade which has ever been regarded as peculiarly obnoxious. If competitors controlling half the trade not alone in one product or in two but in an entire series [****15] of products constituting one of the grand divisions of industry may thus combine through a holding company, to what lengths can the process go without offending the law?? If one-half of the steel industry may be thus combined through one holding company, certainly those controlling the other half would have the right to combine through another holding company. And of course if it be lawful to centralize control of the steel industry in two holding companies it would be equally lawful to centralize control of every other industry in two holding companies. Such undue concentration of control over industry was the very evil which the act was intended to prevent. United States v. Reading Co., 226 Fed. Rep. 229, 272.

Í FÁNI Í FÍ Í LÁ É ÁJÉÓ Í AGJ HÁEGJ HLÁ I ÁSÓ Í HÁEGJ HÁJGÉ ÁSÓ YÓAÍ HÉAIFI

The Corporation is also an instrumentality for uniting and enlarging the power of a group of combinations of competitive units in particular branches of the iron and steel trade, each in and of itself unlawful. There is no likeness between this case and United States v. Winslow, 227 U.S. 202, 217. This case presents a parallel to the American Tobacco Case, supra, where there was a combination in restraint of trade not in cigarettes alone, nor in smoking [****16] tobacco alone, nor in chewing tobacco alone, but in the whole tobacco industry.

This is not a case where the purpose was "integration." Integration consists in combining supplementary, noncompetitive trade units. An illustrative case is United States v. Winslow, supra. If, therefore, we were successful in showing that the corporations combined in this case through the holding company are either competitors themselves or illegal combinations of competitive businesses, the idea of integration is at once excluded. You can not centralize control of an entire industry by first separately combining competitors in the various branches thereof and then uniting them in one super-combination and hope to escape the prohibitions of the law by calling what was done "integration." Moreover, the units combined in 1901 through the Corporation were already, for the most part, highly integrated. No one, of course, denies the advantage of concentrating under one management the various stages of steel manufacture from the ore mine to the finishing mill. This can be done, however, and can be best done, just as economical size can be attained, without setting up in every branch of trade a combination [****17] of competitors with power to exercise substantial dominance over the rest.

The contention that a combination of such size and power was a necessary means to attain efficiency and to promote foreign trade is irrelevant in law. It is but another way of saying that good intentions can save the combination from illegality. Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U.S. 66; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 341; Addyston Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 234, 243; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396. The intent to violate the law implied from doing what the law prohibits renders immaterial every other intent, purpose, or motive. Bishop, New Criminal Law, § 343; Holmes, The Common Law, p. 52. Applying this principle, this court from the very beginning has held that a contract or combination by its own "inherent nature or effect," without more may "restrain trade within the purview of the statute." Any other construction would require courts to decide not only whether a given combination prevents the existence of effective competition or constitutes a virtual monopoly, but whether in their opinion monopoly would not be, on the [****18] whole, a better policy than competition -- i.e., would compel them to act on frankly legislative grounds. Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman, 153 Fed. Rep. 24, 46. Congress rightly believed that the advantages of large business units, in so far as they are real and substantial, would inevitably assert themselves by normal growth. It closed the short cut to those advantages -- monopolistic combination -- because danger lies that way. "If there is evil in this it is accepted as less than that which may result from the unification of interest, and the power such unification gives." National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U.S. 115, 129. "Competition is worth more to society than it costs." Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Massachusetts, 92, 106. Furthermore, even if it would have been lawful for the many independent businesses combined through this holding company to unite to some extent to develop foreign trade -- by joint selling agencies, for example -- that can not justify the complete and permanent suppression of competition between them in domestic trade. United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 Fed. Rep. 964, 1016; United States v. Union Pacific [****19] R. R. Co., 226 U.S. 61, 93.

Í FÁILIÚA FI ÓB FÍ LÁ €ÁJÉÓDÁGJ HÁEGJHLÁ I ÁSÓAÉH HÁÉH HÁJGÉÁMÉSÓYÓÁFÍ HÉÁH

The contention that such was the purpose is also unfounded in fact.

As for the contention that competition has increased while the combination's proportion of the trade has decreased, it is true that as regards the proportion of the trade in steel products possessed by the combination there has been some decline from the highwater mark reached shortly after its formation, but there has been no such decline as to curtail the power of the combination.

It is rather the usual thing in such cases for the combination to be able to show some relative decline in its proportion of the trade. It was so held with the Standard Oil Company and with the American Tobacco Company. In fact, it is so uniformly the case as to excite the suspicion that combinations of this character, having found they can dominate the trade with a smaller proportion of it than they started with, voluntarily yield a part in the belief that they thereby put themselves in a better position to face the law. But be this as it may, where, as here, the decline still leaves the combination in an overwhelmingly preponderant position, it is of no legal consequence whatever. In such a case [****20] the original vice persists and the combination is a "continually operating force," restraining trade within the meaning of the first section of the act, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, supra; United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U.S. 61, 96; United States v. Kissel, 218 U.S. 601; and a "perennial violation of the second section" prohibiting monopoly, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, supra, 74; Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed. Rep. 599, 625; United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 Fed. Rep. 964, 1018.

The present bill charges a combination to suppress competition between the parties to the combination themselves. In such a case the only question is whether the combination embraces competitors in sufficient number and of sufficient importance to make the resulting restriction of competition a substantial or undue restriction. Whether such a combination is also attempting to hinder the competition of those outside the combination is of no weight except as a matter of aggravation.

The contention that the combination is not unlawful because its power though great is yet not great enough to enable it alone to [****21] fix and maintain prices would require a combination of competitors to amount to a monopoly to fall within the prohibition. This theory was rejected by this court in the first case under the Anti-Trust Act which came before it. United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 16. To the same effect is the language of Mr. Justice Day, then a circuit judge, in Chesapeake & Ohio Fuel Co. v. United States, 115 Fed. Rep. 610, 624.

Furthermore, neither the circumstance that the Corporation combined with competitors to maintain the higher prices established by the combinations whose stocks it acquired, nor that in ten years while increasing its trade enormously its relative proportion suffered a small decline, justifies the inference that the Corporation could not have maintained the higher prices by the exertion of its own power alone. It would be a strange result if the combination of competitors embodied in the Corporation should escape condemnation because of their illegal conduct in agreeing upon prices with outside manufacturers.

The contention that the case must fail because the combinations have not increased prices, or limited production, or degraded the [****22] quality of product, or decreased wages, or decreased the price of raw materials, or oppressed competitors, loses sight of the broader policy of the act, which was, not to wait until the evils enumerated are already upon us, but to prevent their occurrence by striking at their underlying cause -- undue concentration of commercial power through the process of combination. The test of the legality of a combination, therefore, is not its present effect upon prices, wages, etc., nor its present conduct toward the remaining competitors, but its effect upon competition. If its effect is unduly to restrict competition, then it is immaterial that for the time being the combination may exercise its power benevolently. This defense of good conduct has been interposed in many cases of this character, and as many times rejected. Nor is forbearance by a combination from the exercise of its power to drive the remaining competitors from the field, or to prevent new ones from entering, on any different footing from good conduct of any other sort. The cases make no such distinction. Obviously, where a combination takes in so large a proportion of the competitors or competitive units that effective [****23] competition no longer exists, it can be no defense to say that the combination is doing nothing to prevent the restoration of competitive conditions.

Í FÁILIÚA FI ÓB FÍ LÁ €ÙÉDÉGJ HÆEGJHLÀ I ÁSÓAÉH HÆFHÍ HAFJGEÁMÉSÓYQÁFÍ HÆFHÍ

This contention is based on a construction of the law impracticable in execution.

Mr. Richard V. Lindabury, Mr. David A. Reed and Mr. Cordenio A. Severance, with whom Mr. Raynal C. Bolling was on the brief, for United States Steel Corporation et al., appellees, cited and discussed the following, as revealing what the Anti-Trust Act means by "restraint of trade": Senator Hoar, Autobiography of Seventy Years, vol. II, p. 364; United States v. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 188 Fed. Rep. 127, 150; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290; Gibbs v. Baltimore Gas Co., 130 U.S. 396, 408; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 337, 361; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 58, 60, 61; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 179; United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn., 224 U.S. 383, 394; Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 376.

Whether, or to what extent, the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases modify the [****24] rule laid down by Mr. Justice Peckham in the Freight Association Case as applicable to public service corporations is not of account in the present case. That they do make a distinction between restraint of competition and restraint of trade in the case of private trading and manufacturing companies, and do hold that as to such companies the restraint of competition in order to amount to restraint of trade must be undue or unreasonable, is entirely clear, and is recognized in the subsequent cases. These cases also hold, as pointed out by Judge Lanning in the Du Pont Case, that whether the restraint of competition in the case of such companies amounts to restraint of trade must be determined upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case.

Applying these principles, the direct and necessary effect of the organization of the Steel Corporation was neither to restrain trade nor create a monopoly, viewed either from the standpoint of competition suppressed or from that of the extent of control acquired over production or raw materials. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375; United States v. Standard Oil Co., 173 Fed. Rep. 177, 183; United States [****25] v. American Tobacco Co., 164 Fed. Rep. 700, 719; 221 U.S. 157, 182; United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324, 370.

Notwithstanding the foregoing cases, the Government insists that, as a matter of law, the suppression of competition is undue whenever the combination controls units which together occupy a preponderant position in a given industry, and this without regard to the intentions of those who form it or the after conduct of the combination. We submit that no such test is warranted either by the language of the Anti-Trust Act or by the decisions of this court. Whether restraint is unreasonable, and therefore undue, is declared in United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn., supra, to depend upon three things: (1) the extent of such control; (2) the method by which such control was brought about; and (3) the manner in which such control has been exercised. This is but a formulation of the rule laid down in the Tobacco Case. But we submit that a priori reasoning as to the direct or necessary effect of the organization of the Steel Corporation or as to the result produced by its preponderant position in the industry, if it has such a position, is uncalled [****26] for in the present case. When the evidence in the case was closed, thirteen years of the active life of the Corporation had passed. If restraint of trade or monopoly necessarily resulted from its formation or from its so-called preponderant position in the industry, evidence of such restraint or monopoly would appear somewhere in its history; and if such evidence does not appear, it is reasonably safe to conclude that no such result inhered in its organization or position. That the organization did not so result at any time or as to any article of steel production, is, we submit, conclusively shown by the testimony in the case, as pointed out in both opinions of the court below. And not only is this shown by the testimony, but it is also shown that the Corporation never acquired the power either to monopolize or to restrain trade. And this too was found by all the judges of the court below.

No intent to monopolize or to restrain trade is shown by the circumstances which led up to and surrounded the organization of the Corporation. The organization was but a natural and normal development from existing trade and manufacturing conditions and was only notable because of the largeness [****27] of the conception which underlay it and the courage exhibited in undertaking to carry it out. But ability to think large and courage to execute the thought are not condemned by the law. Indeed, the future prosperity of our country must depend in large measure upon the encouragement given to these attributes of the American business man.

GI FÁWIÉA FI ÉE FI LÁ €UÉDÉGJ HÉEGJHLÀ I ASÓAÉH HÉEH HAFJGEÁWÉSÓYQÁF HÉEH

Nor is an intent to monopolize or restrain trade evinced by the after-conduct of the Corporation. Throughout its whole career the Corporation has pursued the objects declared by its founders at the time of its formation, decreasing the cost of production, increasing wages, decreasing prices, and greatly extending trade in steel products both at home and abroad. Its treatment of both competitors and consumers has been fair and just; it has neither attempted to oppress the one nor to coerce the other. The few plants which it has purchased were offered to it, and with a single exception they were purchased only because they were needed in the development of the Corporation's business. That exception was the plant of the Tennessee Company, and this was purchased with the approval of the Government for the purpose of preventing the spread of a dangerous [****28] financial panic. Instead of promoting pools and combinations, the Corporation destroyed them as early as 1904. Although the manufacturers met together from time to time after the breaking up of the pools, they went no further at their meetings than to mutually exchange information and make declarations of purpose which the petition admits they had a lawful right to do. The Gary dinner movement amounted to nothing more than an endeavor to prevent reckless price-cutting and general demoralization at a time of great industrial peril, and this was sought to be accomplished simply by an appeal to reason and the establishment of a relation of mutual respect and confidence, by which it was hoped to secure open and fair dealing and prevent the misunderstandings out of which nearly all the trade wars of the past had grown. Instead of monopolizing the manufacture of steel, the Corporation's percentage of the country's production has steadily decreased; instead of monopolizing the supply of ore, the Corporation has confined its purchases to two or three localities, and in the locality where its holdings are largest it has relatively less than many of its competitors and less than its own [****29] experts and the experts of its competitors testify that it ought to have. We respectfully submit that by this record the Corporation has proved the bona fides of the claim made for it at the time of its organization, that its purpose was the development of a great business along legitimate and permissible lines, and not monopoly or restraint of trade. If, however, the circumstances surrounding the organization left the matter of intent in doubt to be established by the after-conduct of the parties, we now have such after-conduct extending over the long period of thirteen years, and we submit that it completely rebuts any presumption (if any there was) of intent to restrain trade or to acquire a monopoly, and as completely establishes the contrary intent.

Whatever, therefore, may have been the purpose or immediate effect of the organization of the Steel Corporation, it goes for nothing unless it be found that at the time the petition was filed the Corporation was offending or threatening to offend against the Anti-Trust Act. This results from the fact that the action is brought under the third section of that act which authorizes the Attorney General to institute proceedings [****30] in equity to prevent or restrain violations of the act. The appeal is to the injunctive power of the court which is never exercised to redress alleged wrongs which have been committed already, but only to restrain those which are still existing or are threatened. High on Injunctions, § 23; Pomeroy's Equitable Remedies, vol. I, § 262.

The Corporation had no monopoly and was not restraining trade when the petition was filed, nor was it threatening to acquire a monopoly or to restrain trade. It has not the power to do either.

We insist that the acquisition of a preponderant position in a trade or manufacture (whether this means size or power) without unlawful intent and without excluding practices, does not constitute restraint of trade or monopoly either at common law or under the Federal Anti-Trust Act when no actual monopoly or actual restraint of trade results therefrom. How could it? Size in itself is nothing as we have already shown. And power to do wrong cannot be confounded with wrongdoing itself without leading to hopeless confusion. We are dealing with a criminal statute. If the acquisition of power to violate a statute is the equivalent of its violation, then [****31] all men are guilty, for all have acquired the power to violate not one but many statutes. In the opinions in some of the railroad cases (United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 334; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 373; United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 226 U.S. 61, 88) are to be found expressions to the effect that it is the scope of combinations of the kind there under consideration and the power to suppress competition and create monopoly which results therefrom that determines the applicability of the Anti-Trust Act. In those cases, however, the corporations combining were under a duty to compete, and any substantial suppression of competition between them was, therefore, illegal -- the scope of the combinations (i. e., what they embraced) alone determining their illegality. No such rule has ever been applied to private trading or manufacturing companies, and this for the obvious reason that such companies are under no duty to compete. Meredith v. N.J.Zinc & Iron Co., 55 N.J. Eq. 212, 221. In the Tobacco Case the combination was condemned because the court thought the conclusion of wrongful [****32] purposes and illegal combination was overwhelmingly established by the circumstances surrounding the organization and the after-conduct of the company, showing an ever present intent to drive competitors out of the field and to monopolize the tobacco trade. Nothing, we submit, could be more unreasonable than to condemn every corporation, without regard to its purposes or practices, which happens to exceed in size or trade power any other competitor in the field. A rule which would lead to that result, instead of protecting commerce -- which was the object of the Anti-Trust Act -- would tend to throttle and destroy it by driving or keeping out of the competitive field all but the incompetents and inefficients.

Í FÁILIÚA FÍ ÓB FÍ LÁ €ÁJÉÓDÁGJ HÆEGJHLÁ I ÁSÍÓAÉH HÆFHÍ HAFJGEÁMÉJSÓYÓÁFÍ HÆFHÍ

International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U.S. 199, was decided under the Missouri statute which prohibited any combination that lessened or tended to lessen competition.

The elimination of competition between the units combined by the Steel Corporation did not amount to an undue restriction of competition in the steel trade and so produce a restraint thereof.

Mr. George Welwood Murray for John D. Rockefeller and Jhon D. Rockefeller, Jr., appellees.

Judges: [****33] White, McKenna, Holmes, Day, Van Devanter, Pitney, Clarke; McReynolds, Brandeis took no part in the consideration or decision of the case

Opinion by: McKENNA

Opinion

---

[*436] [**294] [***347] MR. JUSTICE MCKENNA delivered the opinion of the court.

Suit against the Steel Corporation and certain other companies which it directs and controls by reason of the ownership of their stock, it and they being separately and collectively charged as violators of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

It is prayed that it and they be dissolved because engaged in illegal restraint of trade and the exercise of monopoly.

Special charges of illegality and monopoly are made and special redresses and remedies are prayed, among others, that there be a prohibition of stock ownership and exercise [*437] of rights under such ownership, and that there shall be such orders and distribution of the stock and other properties as shall be in accordance with equity and good [***348] conscience and "shall effectuate the purpose of the Anti-Trust Act." (General relief is also prayed.

The Steel Corporation is a holding company only; the other companies are the operating ones, manufacturers in the iron and steel [***34] industry, twelve in number. There are, besides, other corporations and individuals more or less connected with the activities of the other defendants that are alleged to be instruments or accomplices in their activities and offendings; and that these activities and offendings (speaking in general terms) extend from 1901 to 1911, when the bill was filed, and have illustrative periods of significant and demonstrated illegality.

Issue is taken upon all these charges, and we see at a glance what detail of circumstances may be demanded, and we may find ourselves puzzled to compress them into an opinion that will not be of fatiguing prolixity.

The case was heard in the District Court by four judges. They agreed that the bill should be dismissed; they disagreed as to the reasons for it. 223 Fed. Rep. 55. One opinion (written by Judge Buffington and concurred in by Judge McPherson) expressed the view that the Steel Corporation was not formed with the intention or purpose to monopolize or restrain trade, and did not have the motive or effect "to prejudice the public interest by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade." The corporation, in the view of [****35] the opinion, was an evolution, a natural consummation of the tendencies of the industry on account of changing conditions, practically a compulsion from "the metallurgical method of making steel and the physical method of handling it," this method, and the conditions consequent upon it, tending to combinations of capital and energies rather than diffusion in independent action. And the [*438] concentration of powers (we are still representing the opinion) was only such as was deemed necessary, and immediately manifested itself in improved methods and products and in an increase of domestic and foreign trade. Indeed an important purpose of the organization of the corporation was the building up of the export trade in steel and iron which at that time was sporadic, the mere dumping of the products upon foreign markets.

GI FÁMÉA FÍ ÓÓ HÍ LÁ €ÚJEÓDÁGJ HÉEGJI LÀ I ÁSÓAÉH HÁÉH I LÁFJOÉMÉLÉSÓYÓÁFÍ HÉÉH

Not monopoly, therefore, was the purpose of the organization of the corporation but concentration of efforts with resultant economies and benefits.

The tendency of the industry and the purpose of the corporation in yielding to it were expressed in comprehensive condensation by the word "integration," which signifies continuity in the processes of the industry [****36] from ore mines to the finished product.

All considerations deemed pertinent were expressed and their influence was attempted to be assigned and, while conceding that the Steel Corporation, after its formation in times of financial disturbance, entered into informal agreements or understandings with its competitors to maintain prices, they terminated with their occasions, and, as they had ceased to exist, the court was not justified in dissolving the corporation.

The other opinion (by Judge Woolley and concurred in by Judge Hunt, 223 Fed. Rep. 161) was in some particulars, in antithesis to Judge Buffington's. The view was expressed that neither the Steel Corporation nor the preceding combinations, which were in a [**295] sense its antetypes, had the justification of industrial conditions, nor were they or it impelled by the necessity for integration, or compelled to unite in comprehensive enterprise because such had become a condition of success under the new order of things. On the contrary, that the organizers of the corporation and the preceding companies had illegal purpose from the very beginning, and the corporation [*439] became "a combination of combinations, [****37] by which, directly or indirectly, approximately 180 independent concerns were brought under one business control," which, measured by the amount of production, extended to 80% or 90% of the entire output of the country, and that its purpose was to secure great profits which were thought possible in the light of the history of its constituent combinations, and to accomplish permanently what those combinations had demonstrated could be accomplished temporarily, and thereby monopolize and restrain trade.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> As bearing upon the power obtained and what the Corporation did we give other citations from Judge Woolley's opinion as follows:

"The ore reserves acquired by the corporation at and subsequent to its organization, the relation which such reserves bear to ore bodies then existing and subsequently discovered, and their bearing upon the question of monopoly of raw materials, are matters which have been discussed in the preceding opinion, and with the reasoning as well as with the conclusion that the corporation has not a monopoly of the raw materials of the steel industry, I am in entire accord."

"Further inquiring whether the corporation inherently possesses monopolistic power attention is next given to its proportion of the manufacture and sale of finished iron and steel products of the industry. Upon This subject there is a great volume of testimony, a detailed consideration of which in an opinion would be quite inexcusable. As a last analysis of this testimony, it is sufficient to say it shows that, large as was the corporation, and substantial as was its proportion of the business of the industry, the corporation was not able in the first ten years of its history to maintain its position in the increase of trade. During that period, its proportion of the domestic business decreased from 50.1 per cent. to 40.9 per cent. and its increase of business during that period was but 40.6 per cent. of its original volume. Its increase of business, measured by percentage, was exceeded by eight of its competitors, whose increase of business, likewise measured by percentage, ranged from 63 to 3779. This disparity in the increase of production indicates that the power of the corporation is not commensurate with its size, and that the size and the consequent power of the corporation are not sufficient to retard prosperous growth of efficient competitors.

"from the vast amount of testimony, it is conclusively shown that the Steel Corporation did not attempt to exert a power, if such it possessed, to oppress and destroy its competitors, and it is likewise disclosed by the history of the industry subsequent to the

Í FÁNUA FI ÓÓ HULÁ ÉÚÉÓDÁGJ HÉEGJÍ LÀ I ÁSÓAÉH HÁÉH I LÁJGÉÁLÉSÓYÓÁFÍ HÉÁH

[***38] [*440] The organizers, however (we are still representing the opinion), underestimated [***349] the opposing conditions and at the very beginning the Corporation instead of relying upon its own power sought and obtained the assistance and the cooperation of its competitors (the independent companies). In other words the view was expressed that the testimony did "not show that the corporation in and of itself ever possessed or exerted sufficient power when acting alone to control prices of the products of the industry." Its power was efficient only when in cooperation with its competitors, and hence it concerted with them in the expedients of pools, associations, trade meetings, and finally in a system of dinners inaugurated in 1907 by the president of the company, E. H. Gary, and called "the Gary Dinners." The dinners were congregations of producers and "were nothing but trade meetings," successors of the other means of associated action and control through such action. They were instituted first in "stress of panic," but, their potency being demonstrated, they were afterwards called to control prices "in periods of industrial calm." "They were pools without penalties" and [***39] more efficient in stabilizing prices. But it was the further declaration that "when joint action was either refused or withdrawn the Corporation's prices were controlled by competition."

The Corporation, it was said, did not at any time abuse the power or ascendancy it possessed. It resorted to none of the brutalities or tyrannies that the cases illustrate of [*441] other combinations. It did not secure freight rebates; it did not increase its profits by reducing the wages of its employees -- whatever it did was not at the expense of labor; it did not increase its profits by lowering the quality of its products, nor create an artificial scarcity of them; it did not oppress or coerce its competitors -- its competition, though vigorous, was fair; it did not undersell its competitors in some localities by reducing its prices there below those maintained elsewhere, or require its customers to enter into contracts limiting their purchases or restricting them in resale prices; it did not obtain customers by secret rebates or departures from its published prices; there was no evidence that it attempted to crush its competitors or drive them out of the market, nor did it take customers [***40] from its competitors by unfair means, and in its competition it seemed to make no difference between large and small competitors. Indeed it is said in many ways and illustrated that "instead of relying upon its own power to fix and maintain prices, the corporation, at its very beginning sought and obtained the assistance of others." It combined its power with that of its competitors. It did not have power in and of itself, and the control it exerted was only in and by association with its competitors. Its offense, therefore, such as it was, was not [**296] different from theirs and was distinguished from theirs "only in the leadership it assumed in promulgating and perfecting the policy." This leadership it gave up, and it had ceased to offend against the law before this suit was [***350] brought. It was hence concluded that it should be distinguished from its organizers and that their intent and unsuccessful attempt should not be attributed to it, that it "in and of itself is not now and has never been a monopoly or a combination in restraint of trade," and a decree of dissolution should not be entered against it.

This summary of the opinions, given necessarily in paraphrase, [***41] does not adequately represent their ability [*442] and strength, but it has value as indicating the contentions of the parties, and the ultimate propositions to which the contentions are addressed. The opinions indicate that the evidence admits of different deductions as to the genesis of the Corporation and the purpose of its organizers, but only of a single deduction as to the power it attained and could exercise. Both opinions were clear and confident that the power of the Corporation never did and does not now reach to monopoly, and their review of the evidence, and our independent examination of it, enable us to elect between their respective estimates of it, and we concur in the main with that of Judges Woolley and Hunt. And we add no comment except, it may be, that they underestimated the influence of the tendency and movement to integration, the appreciation of the necessity or value of the continuity of manufacture from the ore to the finished product. And there was such a tendency; and though it cannot be asserted it had become a necessity, it had certainly become a facility of industrial progress. There was, therefore, much to urge it and give incentive to conduct [***42] that could accomplish it. From the nature and properties of the industry, the processes of production were something more than the stage and setting of the human activities. They determined to an extent organization of the corporation that if it had made such an attempt it would have failed. It is also shown by the testimony that, acting independently and relying alone upon its power and wealth, great as they were, the corporation has never been able to dominate the steel industry by controlling the supply of raw materials, restraining production of finished products, or enhancing and maintaining the prices of either."

GI FÁMEÁ FÍ ÓÓ I GLÁ €ÚÉÓ DÁGJ HÉEGJ Í LÁ I ÁSÓÁH HÉÉHÍ ELÁJ GÉÁMÉÉSÓYÓÁFÍ HÉÉHÍ G

those activities, furnished their motives, and gave test of their quality -- not, of course, that the activities could get any immunity from size, or resources, or energies, whether exerted in integrated plants or diversified ones.

The contentions of the case, therefore, must be judged by the requirements of the law, not by accidental or adventitious circumstances. But what are such circumstances? We have seen that it was the view of the District Court that size was such a circumstance and had no accusing or excusing influence. The contention of the Government is to the contrary. Its assertion is that the size of the Corporation being the result of a "combination [*443] of powerful and able competitors" had become "substantially dominant" in the industry and illegal. And that this was determined. The companies combined, is the further assertion, had already reached a high degree of efficiency, and in their independence were factors in production and competition, but ceased [****43] to be such when brought under the regulating control of the Corporation, which by uniting them offended the law; and that the organizers of the Corporation "had in mind the specific purposes of the restraint of trade and the enormous profits resulting from that restraint."

It is the contention of the Corporation opposing those of the Government and denying the illegal purposes charged against it, that the industry demanded qualities and an enterprise that lesser industries do not demand and must have a corresponding latitude and facility. Indeed, it is insisted that the industry and practically, (to quote the words of Judge Buffington, he quoting those of a witness,) "reached the limit, or very nearly so, at which economies from a metallurgical or mechanical standpoint could be made effective," and "that instead, as was then the practice, of having one mill to make 10 or 20 or 50 products, the greatest economy would result from having one mill make one product, and make that product continuously." In other words, that there was a necessity for integration, and rescue from the old conditions -- from their improvidence and waste of effort; and that, in redress of the conditions, the [****44] Corporation was formed, its purpose and effect being "salvage not monopoly," to quote the words of counsel. It was, is the insistence, the conception of ability, "a vision of a great business which should embrace all lines of steel and all processes of manufacture from the ore to the finished product and which by reason of the economies thus to be effected and the diversity of products it would be able to offer, could successfully compete in all the markets of the world." [*444] It is urged further that to the discernment of that great possibility was added a courage that dared attempt its accomplishment, and the conception and the courage made the formation of the Corporation notable but did not make it illegal.

We state the contentions, we do not have to discuss them, or review the arguments advanced for their acceptance or repulsion. That is done in the opinions of the district judges, and we may [***351] well despair to supplement the force of their representation of the conditions antecedent to the formation of the Corporation and in what respect and extent its formation changed them. Of course in that representation and its details there is guidance to decision, [****45] but they must be rightly estimated to judge of what they persuade. Our present purpose is not retrospect for itself, however instructive, but practical decision upon existing conditions, that we may not by their disturbance produce, or even risk, consequences of a concern that cannot now be computed. In other words, our consideration [**297] should be of not what the Corporation had power to do or did, but what it has now power to do and is doing, and what judgment shall be now pronounced -- whether its dissolution, as the Government prays, or the dismissal of the suit, as the Corporation insists?

The alternatives are perplexing -- involve conflicting considerations, which, regarded in isolation, have diverse tendencies. We have seen that the judges of the District Court unanimously concurred in the view that the Corporation did not achieve monopoly, and such is our deduction, and it is against monopoly that the statute is directed, not against an expectation of it, but against its realization, and it is certain that it was not realized. The opposing conditions were underestimated. The power attained was much greater than that possessed by any one competitor -- its was not [****46] greater than that possessed by all of them. Monopoly, therefore, was not achieved, and [*445] competitors had to be persuaded by pools, associations, trade meetings, and through the social form of dinners, all of them, it may be, violations of the law, but transient in their purpose and effect. They were scattered through the years from 1901 (the year of the formation of the Corporation), until 1911, but, after instances of success and failure, were abandoned nine months before this suit was brought. There is no evidence that the abandonment was in prophecy of or dread of suit; and the illegal practices have not been resumed, nor is there any evidence of an intention to resume them, and certainly no "dangerous probability" of their resumption, the test for which Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396, is cited. It is our conclusion, therefore, as it was that of the judges below, that the practices were abandoned from a conviction of their futility, from the operation of forces that were not understood or were underestimated, and the case is not peculiar. And we may say in passing that the Government cannot fear their resumption for it did not avail itself [****47] of the offer of the District Court to retain jurisdiction of the cause in order that if illegal acts should be attempted they could be restrained.

Í FÁMEÐA FÍ ÆÐI I Í LÁ ÆÐEÐAGJHEEGJÍ LÀ I ÆÐAÐH ÆÐH FLÁFJOÆÐEÐSÓYQÁÐI HEÐAÐH Í

What then can now be urged against the Corporation? Can comparisons in other regards be made with its competitors and by such comparisons guilty or innocent existence be assigned it? It is greater in size and productive power than any of its competitors, equal or nearly equal to them all, but its power over prices was not and is not commensurate with its power to produce.

It is true there is some testimony tending to show that the Corporation had such power, but there was also testimony and a course of action tending strongly to the contrary. The conflict was by the judges of the District Court unanimously resolved against the existence of that power, and in doing so they but gave effect to the greater weight of the evidence. It is certain that no such power [*446] was exerted. On the contrary, the only attempt at a fixation of prices was, as already said, through an appeal to and confederation with competitors, and the record shows besides that when competition occurred it was not in pretence, and the Corporation declined in [****48] productive powers -- the competitors growing either against or in consequence of the competition. If against the competition we have an instance of movement against what the Government insists was an irresistible force; if in consequence of competition, we have an illustration of the adage that "competition is the life of trade" and is not easily repressed. The power of monopoly in the Corporation under either illustration is an untenable accusation.

We may pause here for a moment to notice illustrations of the Government of the purpose of the Corporation, instancing its acquisition after its formation of control over the Shelby Steel Tube Company, the Union Steel Company, and, subsequently, the Tennessee Company. There is dispute over the reasons for these acquisitions which we shall not detail. There is, however, an important circumstance in connection with that of the Tennessee Company which is worthy to be noted. It was submitted to President Roosevelt and he gave it his approval. His approval, of course, did not make it legal, but it gives assurance of its legality, and we know from his earnestness [***352] in the public welfare he would have approved of nothing that [***49] had even a tendency to its detriment. And he testified he was not deceived and that he believed that "the Tennessee Coal and Iron people had a property which was almost worthless in their hands, nearly worthless to them, nearly worthless to the communities in which it was situated, and entirely worthless to any financial institution that had the securities the minute that any panic came, and that the only way to give value to it was to put it in the hands of people whose possession of it [*447] would be a guarantee that there was value to it." Such being the emergency it seems like an extreme accusation to say that the Corporation which relieved it, and, perhaps, rescued the company and the communities dependent upon it from disaster, was urged by unworthy motives. Did illegality attach afterwards and how? And what was the Corporation to do with the property? Let it decay in desuetude or develop its capabilities and resources? In the development, of course, there would be profit to the Corporation, but there would be profit as well to the world. For this reason President Roosevelt sanctioned the purchase, and it would seem a distempered view of purchase and result to regard [***50] them as violations of law.

From this digression we return to the [**298] consideration of the conduct of the Corporation towards its competitors. Besides the circumstances which we have mentioned there are others of probative strength. The company's officers and, as well, its competitors and customers, testified that its competition was genuine, direct and vigorous, and was reflected in prices and production. No practical witness was produced by the Government in opposition. Its contention is based on the size and asserted dominance of the Corporation -- alleged power for evil, not the exertion of the power in evil. Or as counsel put it, "a combination may be illegal because of its purpose; it may be illegal because it acquires a dominating power, not as a result of normal growth and development, but as a result of a combination of competitors." Such composition and its resulting power constitute, in the view of the Government, the offence against the law, and yet it is admitted "no competitor came forward and said he had to accept the Steel Corporation's prices." But this absence of complaint counsel urge against the Corporation. Competitors, it is said, followed the Corporation's [***51] prices because they made money by the imitation. Indeed the imitation is urged as [*448] an evidence of the Corporation's power. "Universal limitation," counsel assert, is "an evidence of power." In this concord of action, the contention is, there is the sinister dominance of the Corporation -- "its extensive control of the industry is such that the others [independent companies] follow." Counsel, however, admit that there was "occasionally" some competition, but reject the suggestion that it extended practically to a war between the Corporation and the independents. Counsel say, "They [the Corporation is made a plural] called a few -- they called 200 witnesses out of some forty thousand customers, and they expect with that customer evidence to overcome the whole train of price movement shown since the Corporation was formed." And "movement of prices" counsel explained "as shown by the published prices . . . they were the ones that the competitors were maintaining all during the interval."

Í FÁMEÁ FÍ Í LÁ ÉÁÉDÁGJ HÁEGJÌ LÁ I ÁSÓÁH HÁÉHÍ GÁJGEÁMÉSÓYÓÁÍ HÉÁHÍ F

It would seem that "200 witnesses" would be fairly representative. Besides the balance of the "forty thousand customers" was open to the Government to draw upon. Not having done so, [****52] is it not permissible to infer that none would testify to the existence of the influence that the Government asserts? At any rate, not one was called, but instead the opinion of an editor of a trade journal is adduced, and that of an author and teacher of economics whose philosophical deductions had, perhaps, fortification from experience as Deputy Commissioner of Corporations and as an employee in the Bureau of Corporations. His deduction was that when prices are constant through a definite period an artificial influence is indicated; if they vary during such a period it is a consequence of competitive conditions. It has become an aphorism that there is danger of deception in generalities, and in a case of this importance we should have something surer for judgment than speculation, something more than a deduction equivocal of itself even though the [*449] facts it rests on or asserts were not contradicted. If the phenomena of production and prices were as easily resolved as the witness implied, much discussion and much literature have been wasted, and some of the problems that are now distracting the world would be given composing solution. Of course competition affects [****53] prices but it is only one among other influences and [***353] does not more than they, register itself in definite and legible effect.

We magnify the testimony by its consideration. Against it competitors, dealers and customers of the Corporation testify in multitude that no adventitious interference was employed to either fix or maintain prices and that they were constant or varied according to natural conditions. Can this testimony be minimized or dismissed by inferring that, as intimated, it is an evidence of power not of weakness; and power exerted not only to suppress competition but to compel testimony, is the necessary inference, shading into perjury to deny its exertion? The situation is indeed singular, and we may wonder at it, wonder that the despotism of the Corporation, so baneful to the world in the representation of the Government, did not produce protesting victims.

But there are other paradoxes. The Government does not hesitate to present contradictions, though only one can be true, such being we were told in our school books the "principle of contradiction." In one competitors (the independents) are represented as oppressed by the superior power of the Corporation; [****54] in the other they are represented as ascending to opulence by imitating that power's prices which they could not do if at disadvantage from the other conditions of competition; and yet confederated action is not asserted. If it were this suit would take on another cast. The competitors would cease to be the victims of the Corporation and would become its accomplices. And there is no other alternative. The suggestion [*450] that lurks in the Government's contention that the acceptance of the Corporation's prices is the submission of impotence to irresistible power is, in view of the testimony of the competitors, untenable. They, as we have seen, deny restraint in any measure or illegal influence of any kind. The Government, therefore, is reduced to the assertion that the size of the Corporation, the power it may have, not the exertion of the power, is an abhorrence to the law, or as the Government says, "the combination embodied in the Corporation unduly restrains competition by its necessary effect, [the italics are the emphasis of the Government] and therefore is unlawful regardless [**299] of purpose." "A wrongful purpose," the Government adds, is "matter of aggravation." [****55] The illegality is statical, purpose or movement of any kind only its emphasis. To assent to that, to what extremes should we be led? Competition consists of business activities and ability -- they make its life; but there may be fatalities in it. Are the activities to be encouraged when militant, and suppressed or regulated when triumphant because of the dominance attained? To such paternalism the Government's contention, which regards power rather than its use the determining consideration, seems to conduct. Certainly conducts we may say, for it is the inevitable logic of the Government's contention that competition must not only be free, but that it must not be pressed to the ascendancy of a competitor, for in ascendancy there is the menace of monopoly.

Í FÁMEÁ FÍ Í ÉLA ÉUÉDÉGJ HÉEGJLÁ I ÁSÓAÉH HÉEHÍ HÁJGEÁMÉSÓYÓÁFÍ HÉAHÍ I

We have pointed out that there are several of the Government's contentions which are difficult to represent or measure, and, the one we are now considering, that is the power is "unlawful regardless of purpose," is another of them. It seems to us that it has for its ultimate principle and justification that strength in any producer or seller is a menace to the public interest and illegal because there is potency in it for mischief. [***56] The regression is extreme, but [*451] short of it the Government cannot stop. The fallacy it conveys is manifest.

The Corporation was formed in 1901, no act of aggression upon its competitors is charged against it, it confederated with them at times in offence against the law, but abandoned that before this suit was brought, and since 1911 no act in violation of law can be established against it except its existence be such an act. This is urged, as we have seen, and that the interest of the public is involved, and that such interest is paramount to corporation or competitors. Granted -- though it is difficult to see how there can be restraint of trade when there is no restraint of competitors in the trade nor complaints by customers -- how can it be worked out of the situation and through what proposition of law? Of course it calls for nothing other than a right application of the law and to repeat what we have said above, shall we declare the law to be that size is an offence even though it minds its own business because what it does is imitated? The Corporation is undoubtedly of impressive size and it takes an effort of resolution not to be affected by it or to exaggerate [***57] its influence. But we must adhere to the law and the HN1[↑] law does not make mere size an offence or the existence of unexerted power an offence. It, we repeat, requires overt acts and trusts to its prohibition of them and its power to repress or punish them. It does not [***354] compel competition nor require all that is possible.

Admitting, however, that there is pertinent strength in the propositions of the Government, and in connection with them, we recall the distinction we made in the Standard Oil Case (221 U.S. 1, 77) between acts done in violation of the statute and a condition brought about which "in and of itself, is not only a continued attempt to monopolize, but also a monopolization." In such case, we declared, "the duty to enforce the statute" required "the application of broader and more controlling" remedies [*452] than in the other. And the remedies applied conformed to the declaration; there was prohibition of future acts and there was dissolution of "the combination found to exist in violation of the statute" in order to "neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained" had "brought" and would [***58] "continue to bring about."

Are the case and its precepts applicable here? The Steel Corporation by its formation united under one control competing companies and thus, it is urged, a condition was brought about in violation of the statute, and therefore illegal and became a "continually operating force" with the "possession of power unlawfully obtained."

But there are countervailing considerations. We have seen whatever there was of wrong intent could not be executed, whatever there was of evil effect, was discontinued before this suit was brought; and this, we think, determines the decree. We say this in full realization of the requirements of the law. It is clear in its denunciation of monopolies and equally clear in its direction that the courts of the Nation shall prevent and restrain them (its language is "to prevent and restrain violations of" the act), but the command is necessarily submissive to the conditions which may exist and the usual powers of a court of equity to adapt its remedies to those conditions. In other words, it is not expected to enforce abstractions and do injury thereby, it may be, to the purpose of the law. It is this flexibility of discretion -- [***59] indeed essential function -- that makes its value in our jurisprudence -- value in this case as in others. We do not mean to say that the law is not its own measure and that it can be disregarded, but only that the appropriate relief in each instance is remitted to a court of equity to determine, not, and let us be explicit in this, to advance a policy contrary to that of the law, but in submission to the law and its policy, and in execution of both. And it is certainly a [*453] matter for consideration that there was no legal attack on the Corporation until 1911, ten years after its formation and the commencement of its career. We do not, however speak of the delay simply as to its time -- that there is estoppel in it because of its time -- but on account of what was done during that time -- the many millions of dollars spent, the development made, and the enterprises undertaken, the investments by the public that have been invited and are not to be ignored. And what of the foreign [*300] trade that has been developed and exists? The Government, with some inconsistency, it seems to us, would remove this from the decree of dissolution. Indeed, it is pointed out that [***60] under congressional legislation in the Webb Act the foreign trade of the Corporation is reserved to it. And further, it is said, that the Corporation has constructed a company called the Proucts Company which can be "very easily preserved as a medium through which the steel business might reach the balance of the world," and that in the decree of "dissolution that could be provided." This is supplemented by the suggestion that not only the Steel Corporation, "but other steel makers of the country, could function through an instrumentality created under the Webb Act." [C. 50, § 2, 40 Stat. 516.]

Í HÁ É ÜE Ó EAGU HÉE CELÁ I ASÓA ÉH HÉE HÉE I LÁJGÉ ÁE LÉSÓYÓÁF HÉE

The propositions and suggestions do not commend themselves. We do not see how the Steel Corporation can be such a beneficial instrumentality in the trade of the world and its beneficence be preserved, and yet be such an evil instrumentality in the trade of the United States that it must be destroyed. And by whom and how shall all the adjustments of preservation or destruction be made? How can the Corporation be sustained and its power of control over its subsidiary companies be retained and exercised in the foreign trade and given up in the domestic trade? The Government presents no [****61] solution of the problem. Counsel realize the difficulty and seem to think that its solution or its evasion is in the suggestion [*454] that the Steel Corporation and "other steel makers could function through an instrumentality created under the Webb Act." But we are confronted with the necessity of immediate judicial action [***355] under existing laws, not action under conceptions which may never be capable of legal execution. We must now decide and we see no guide to decision in the propositions of the Government.

The Government, however, tentatively presents a proposition which has some tangibility. It submits that certain of the subsidiary companies are so mechanically equipped and so officially directed as to be released and remitted to independent action and individual interests and the competition to which such interests prompt, without any disturbance to business. The companies are enumerated. They are the Carnegie Steel Company (a combination of the old Carnegie Company, the National Steel Company, and the American Steel Company), the Federal Steel Company, the Tennessee Company and the Union Steel Company (a combination of the Union Steel Company of Donora, [****62] Pa., Sharon Steel Company of Sharon, Pa., and Sharon Tin Plate Company). They are fully integrated, it is said, possess their own supplies, facilities of transportation and distribution. They are subject only to the Steel Corporation is, in effect, the declaration, in nothing but its control of their prices. We may say parenthetically that they are defendants in the suit and charged as offenders, and we have the strange circumstance of violators of the law being urged to be used as expedients of the law.

But let us see what guide to a procedure of dissolution of the Corporation and the dispersion as well of its subsidiary companies, for they are asserted to be illegal combinations, is prayed. And the fact must not be overlooked or underestimated. The prayer of the Government calls for not only a disruption of present conditions but the restoration of the conditions of twenty years ago, if [*455] not literally, substantially. Is there guidance to this in the Standard Oil Case and the Tobacco Case [221 U.S. 1, 106]? As an element in determining the answer we shall have to compare the cases with that at bar, but this can only be done in a general way. And the law [****63] necessarily must be kept in mind. No other comment of it is necessary. It has received so much exposition that it and all it prescribes and proscribes should be considered as a consciously directing presence.

The Standard Oil Company had its origin in 1882 and through successive forms of combinations and agencies it progressed in illegal power to the day of the decree, even attempting to circumvent by one of its forms the decision of a court against it. And its methods in using its power was of the kind that Judge Woolley described as "brutal," and of which practices, he said, the Steel Corporation was absolutely guiltless. We have enumerated them and this reference to them is enough. And of the practices this court said no disinterested mind could doubt that the purpose was "to drive others from the field and to exclude them from their right to trade and thus accomplish the mastery which was the end in view." It was further said that what was done and the final culmination "in the plan of the New Jersey corporation" made "manifest the continued existance of the intent . . . and . . . impelled the expansion of the New Jersey corporation." It was to this corporation, which represented [****64] the power and purpose of all that preceded, that the suit was addressed and the decree of the court was to apply. What we have quoted contrasts that case with this. The contrast is further emphasized by pointing out how in the case of the New Jersey corporation the original wrong was reflected in and manifested by the acts which followed the organization, as described by the court. It said: "The exercise of the power which resulted from that organization fortifies the foregoing conclusions [as to monopoly, etc.], since the [*456] development which came, the acquisition here and there which ensued of every efficient means by which competition could have been asserted, the slow but resistless methods which followed by which means of transportation were absorbed [**301] and brought under control, the system of marketing which was adopted by which the country was divided into districts and the trade in each district in oil was turned over to a designated corporation within the combination and all others were excluded, all lead the mind up to a conviction of a purpose and intent which we think is so certain as practically to cause the subject not to be within the domain of [****65] reasonable contention."

Í LÁ É ÁJÉÓ DÁG J H E F L Á I Á S Ó A É H Á E H I L Á J G É Á N É S Ó Y Q Á I H E Á E H I

The Tobacco Case has the same bad distinctions as the Standard Oil Case. The illegality in which it was formed (there were two American Tobacco Companies, but we use the name as designating the new company as representing the combinations of the suit) continued, indeed progressed in intensity and defiance to [***356] the moment of decree. And it is the intimation of the opinion if not its direct assertion that the formation of the company (the word "combination" is used) was preceded by the intimidation of a trade war "inspired by one or more of the minds which brought about and became parties to that combination." In other words the purpose of the combination was signalled to competitors and the choice presented to them was submission or ruin, to become parties to the illegal enterprise or be driven "out of the business." This was the purpose and the achievement, and the processes by which achieved this court enumerated to be the formation of new companies, taking stock in others to obscure the result actually attained, but always to monopolize and retain power in the hands of the few and mastery of the trade; putting control in the hands of seemingly [****66] independent corporations as barriers to the entry of others into the trade; the expenditure of millions upon millions in buying out plants not to utilize them but to close them; by constantly [*457] recurring stipulations by which numbers of persons, whether manufacturers, stockholders or employees, were required to bind themselves, generally for long periods, not to compete in the future. In the Tobacco Case, therefore, as in the Standard Oil Case, the court had to deal with a persistent and systematic lawbreaker masquerading under legal forms, and which not only had to be stripped of its disguises but arrested in its illegality. A decree of dissolution was the manifest instrumentality and inevitable. We think it would be a work of sheer supererogation to point out that a decree in that case or in the Standard Oil Case furnishes no example for a decree in this.

In conclusion we are unable to see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the contention of the Government respecting the dissolution of the company or the separation from it of some of its subsidiaries; and we do see in a contrary conclusion a risk of injury to the public interest, including [***67] a material disturbance of, and, it may be serious detriment to, the foreign trade. And in submission to the policy of the law and its fortifying prohibitions the public interest is of paramount regard.

We think, therefore, that the decree of the District Court should be affirmed.

So ordered.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS and MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Dissent by: DAY

Dissent

---

MR. JUSTICE DAY dissenting.

This record seems to me to leave no fair room for a doubt that the defendants, the United States Steel Corporation and the several subsidiary corporations which make up that organization, were formed in violation of the Sherman Act. I am unable to accept the conclusion [*458] which directs a dismissal of the bill instead of following the well-settled practice, sanctioned by previous decisions of this court, requiring the dissolution of combinations made in direct violation of the law.

It appears to be thoroughly established that the formation of the corporations, here under consideration, constituted combinations between competitors, in violation of law, and intended to remove competition and to directly restrain trade. I agree [****68] with the conclusions of Judges Woolley and Hunt, expressed in the court below (223 Fed. Rep. 161, et. seq.), that the combinations were not submissions to business conditions but were designed to control them for illegal purposes, regardless of other consequences, and "were made upon a scale that was huge and in a manner that was wild," and "properties were assembled and combined with less regard to their importance as integral parts of an integrated whole than to the advantages expected from the elimination of the competition which theretofore existed between them." Those judges found that the constituent companies of the United States Steel Corporation, nine in number, were themselves combinations of steel manufacturers, and the effect of the organization of these combinations was to give a control over the industry at least equal to that theretofore possessed by the constituent companies and their subsidiaries; that the Steel Corporation was a combination of combinations by which directly or indirectly 180 independent concerns were brought under one control, and in the language of Judge Woolley (p. 167):

GI FÁMEÉA FÍ Í Í LÁ ÉUÉDÉGJ HÉEFLÁ I ASÓdÉH HÉEHLÍ Í LAFJÉAMÉSÓYQÁFÍ HÉEHLÍ

"Without referring to the great mass of figures which bears upon this [****69] aspect of the case, it is clear to me that combinations were created by acquiring competing producing concerns at figures not based upon their physical or their business values, as independent and separate [***357] producers, but upon their values in combination; that is, upon their values as manufacturing plants and business [*459] concerns with competition eliminated. In many instances, capital stock was issued for amounts vastly in excess [**302] of the values of the properties purchased, thereby capitalizing the anticipated fruits of combination. The control acquired over the branches of the industry to which the combinations particularly related, measured by the amount of production, extended in some instances from 80 per cent. to 95 per cent. of the entire output of the country, resulting in the immediate increase in prices, in some cases double and in others treble what they were before, yielding large dividends upon greatly inflated capital.

"The immediate, as well as the normal effect of such combinations, was in all instances a complete elimination of competition between the concerns absorbed, and a corresponding restraint of trade."

The enormous overcapitalization [****70] of companies and the appropriation of $ 100,000,000 in stock to promotion expenses were represented in the stock issues of the new organizations thus formed, and were the basis upon which large dividends have been declared from the profits of the business. This record shows that the power obtained by the corporation brought under its control large competing companies which were of themselves illegal combinations, and succeeded to their power; that some of the organizers of the Steel Corporation were parties to the preceding combinations, participated in their illegality, and by uniting them under a common direction intended to augment and perpetuate their power. It is the irresistible conclusion from these premises that great profits to be derived from unified control were the object of these organizations.

The contention must be rejected that the combination was an inevitable evolution of industrial tendencies compelling union of endeavor. Nothing could add to the vivid accuracy with which Judge Woolley, speaking for himself [*460] and Judge Hunt, has stated the illegality of the organization, and its purpose to combine in one great corporation the previous combinations by [****71] a direct violation of the purposes and terms of the Sherman Act.

For many years, as the record discloses, this unlawful organization exerted its power to control and maintain prices by pools, associations, trade meetings, and as the result of discussion and agreements at the so-called "Gary Dinners," where the assembled trade opponents secured cooperation and joint action through the machinery of special committees of competing concerns, and by prudent provision took into account the possibility of defection, and the means of controlling and perpetuating that industrial harmony which arose from the control and maintenance of prices.

It inevitably follows that the corporation violated the law in its formation and by its immediate practices. The power, thus obtained from the combination of resources almost unlimited in the aggregation of competing organizations, had within its control the domination of the trade, and the ability to fix prices and restrain the free flow of commerce upon a scale heretofore unapproached in the history of corporate organization in this country.

These facts established, as it seems to me they are by the record, it follows that, if the Sherman Act is [****72] to be given efficacy, there must be a decree undoing so far as is possible that which has been achieved in open, notorious, and continued violation of its provisions.

Í FÁWIÉA FI ÉBÁ Í ÉLÁ ÉUÉDÉGJ HÆHÉGLÁ I ÁSÓAÉH HÆHÉHÍ Í LAFJÉAÉLÉSÓYÓÁFÍ HÆHÉHÍ G

I agree that the act offers no objection to the mere size of a corporation, nor to the continued exertion of its lawful power, when that size and power have been obtained by lawful means and developed by natural growth, although its resources, capital and strength may give to such corporation a dominating place in the business and industry with which it is concerned. It is entitled to maintain its size and the power that legitimately goes with it, provided [*461] no law has been transgressed in obtaining it. But I understand the reiterated decisions of this court construing the Sherman Act to hold that this power may not legally be derived from conspiracies, combinations, or contracts in restraint of trade. To permit this would be to practically annul the Sherman Law by judicial decree. This principle has been so often declared by the decisions that it is only necessary to refer to some of them. It is the scope of such combinations, and their power to suppress and stifle competition and create or tend to create [****73] monopolies, which, as we have declared so often as to make its reiteration monotonous, it was the purpose of the Sherman Act to condemn, including all combinations and conspiracies to restrain the free and natural flow of trade [***358] in the channels of interstate commerce. Pearsall v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 161 U.S. 646, 676, 677; Trans-Missouri Freight Assn. Case, 166 U.S. 290, 324; Northern Securities Case, 193 U.S. 197; Addyston Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 238; Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U.S. 244, 291; Union Pacific Case, 226 U.S. 61, 88. While it was not the purpose of the act to condemn normal and usual contracts to lawfully expand business and further legitimate trade, it did intend to effectively reach and control all conspiracies and combinations or contracts of whatever form which unduly restrain competition and unduly obstruct the natural course of trade, or which from their nature, or effect, have proved effectual to restrain interstate commerce. [Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106; \*\*303 United States v. Reading \[\*\*\*\*74\] Co., 226 U.S. 324; Straus v. American Publishers' Assn., 231 U.S. 222; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600.](#)

This statute has been in force for nearly thirty years. It has been frequently before this court for consideration, and the nature and character of the relief to be granted [*462] against combinations found guilty of violations of it have been the subject of much consideration. Its interpretation has become a part of the law itself, and, if changes are to be made now in its construction or operation, it seems to me that the exertion of such authority rests with Congress and not with the courts.

The fourth section is intended to give to courts of equity of the United States the power to effectively control and restrain violations of the act. In none of the cases which have been before the courts was the character of the relief to be granted, where organizations were found to be within the condemnation of the act, more thoroughly considered than in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Company Cases, reported in 221 U.S. In the former case, considering the measure of relief to be granted in the case of a combination, [****75] certainly not more obnoxious to the Sherman Act than the court now finds the one under consideration to be, this court declared that it must be two-fold in character (221 U.S. 78): "1st. To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which we have found to have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute. 2d. The exertion of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist in violation of the statute, and thus neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained has brought and will continue to bring about."

In the American Tobacco Company Case the nature of the relief to be granted was again given consideration, and it was there concluded that the only effectual remedy was to dissolve the combination and the companies comprising it, and for that purpose the cause was remanded to the District Court to hear the parties and determine a method of dissolution and of recreating from the elements composing it "a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law." In that [*463] case the corporations dissolved had long been in existence, [****76] and the offending companies were organized years before the suit was brought and before the decree of dissolution was finally made. Such facts were considered no valid objection to the dissolution of these powerful organizations as the only effective means of enforcing the purposes of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. These cases have been frequently followed in this court, and in the lower federal courts, in determining the nature of the relief to be granted, and I see no occasion to depart from them now.

As I understand the conclusions of the court, affirming the decree directing dismissal of the bill, they amount to this: that these combinations, both the holding company and the subsidiaries which comprise it, although organized in plain violation and bold defiance of the provisions of the act, nevertheless are immune from a decree effectually ending the combinations and putting it out of their power to attain the unlawful purposes sought, because of some reasons of public policy requiring such conclusion. I know of no public policy which sanctions a violation of the law, nor of any [***359] inconvenience to trade, domestic or foreign, which should have the effect of placing combinations, [****77] which have been able thus to organize one of the greatest industries of the country in defiance of law, in an impregnable position above the control of the law forbidding such combinations. Such a conclusion does violence to the policy which the law was intended to enforce, runs counter to the decisions of the court, and necessarily results in a practical nullification of the act itself.

GI FÁWIÉA FI ÊB Ì HÁ €ÙÉOÉAGJ HÆEHÀI ASÓAÉH HÆEHÍ Ì LÆJOÉWÉSÓYQÁF HÆEHÍ Ì

There is no mistaking the terms of the act as they have hitherto been interpreted by this court. It was not intended to merely suppress unfair practices, but, as its history and terms amply show, it was intended to make it criminal to form combinations or engage in conspiracies or contracts in restraint of interstate trade. The remedy by injunction, at the instance of the Attorney General, was [*464] given for the purpose of enabling the courts, as the statute states, to prohibit such conspiracies, combinations and contracts, and this court interpreting its provisions has held that the proper enforcement of the act requires decrees to end combinations by dissolving them and restoring as far as possible the competitive conditions which the combinations have destroyed. I am unable to see force [****78] in the suggestion that public policy, or the assumed disastrous effect upon foreign trade of dissolving the unlawful combination, is sufficient to entitle it to immunity from the enforcement of the statute.

Nor can I yield assent to the proposition that this combination has not acquired a dominant position in the trade which enables it to control prices and production when it sees fit to exert its power. Its total assets on December 31, 1913, were in excess of $ 1,800,000,000; its outstanding capital stock was $ 868,583,600; its surplus $ 151,798,428. Its cash on hand ordinarily was $ 75,000,000; this sum alone exceeded the total capitalization of any of its competitors, and with a single exception, the total capitalization and [**304] surplus of any one of them. That such an organization thus fortified and equipped could if it saw fit dominate the trade and control competition would seem to be a business proposition too plain to require extended argument to support it. Its resources, strength and comprehensive ownership of the means of production enable it to adopt measures to do again as it has done in the past, that is, to effectually dominate and control the steel business [****79] of the country. From the earliest decisions of this court it has been declared that it was the effective power of such organizations to control and restrain competition and the freedom of trade that Congress intended to limit and control. That the exercise of the power may be withheld, or exerted with forbearing benevolence, does not place such combinations beyond the authority of the statute which was intended to prohibit their formation, [*465] and when formed to deprive them of the power unlawfully attained.

It is said that a complete monopolization of the steel business was never attained by the offending combinations. To insist upon such result would be beyond the requirements of the statute and in most cases practicably impossible. As we said in dealing with the Packers' combination in Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396: "Where acts are not sufficient in themselves to produce a result which the law seeks to prevent -- for instance, the monopoly -- but require further acts in addition to the mere forces of nature to bring that result to pass, an intent to bring it to pass is necessary in order to produce a dangerous probability that it will happen. [****80] Commonwealth v. Peaslee, 177 Massachusetts, 267, 272. But when that intent and the consequent dangerous probability exist, this statute [Sherman Act], like many others and like the common law in some cases, directs itself against that dangerous probability as well as against the completed result."

It is affirmed that to grant the Government's request for a remand to the District Court for a decree of dissolution would not result in a change in the conditions of the steel trade. Such is not the theory of the Sherman Act. That act was framed in the belief that attempted or accomplished monopolization, or combinations which suppress free competition, were hurtful to the public interest, and that a restoration of competitive conditions would benefit the public. We have here a combination in control of one-half of the steel business of the country. If the plan were followed, as in the American Tobacco Case, of remanding the case to the District Court, a decree might be framed restoring competitive conditions as far as practicable. See United States v. American Tobacco Co., 191 Fed. Rep. 371. In that case the subject of reconstruction so as to restore such conditions [****81] was elaborated and carefully [*466] considered. [***360] In my judgment the principles there laid down if followed now would make a very material difference in the steel industry. Instead of one dominating corporation, with scattered competitors, there would be competitive conditions throughout the whole trade which would carry into effect the policy of the law.

Í FÁILIÚA FÍ ÓL Í LÁ É ÁUÉODÉAGH HÉI LÁ I ÁSÓAÉH HÉI ÉLÁJGÉÁNÉSÓYÓÁFÍ HÉI

It seems to me that if this act is to be given effect, the bill, under the findings of fact made by the court, should not be dismissed, and the cause should be remanded to the District Court, where a plan of effective and final dissolution of the corporations should be enforced by a decree framed for that purpose.

MR. JUSTICE PITNEY and MR. JUSTICE CLARKE concur in this dissent.

---

End of Document

United States v. American Column & Lumber Co.

District Court, W.D. Tennessee, W.D.

March 16, 1920

No. 751

Reporter

263 F. 147 *; 1920 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1241 **

UNITED STATES v. AMERICAN COLUMN & LUMBER CO. and 332 other defendants

Core Terms

---

prices, lumber, hardwood, manufacturers, stock, sales, open competition, conspiracy, statistics, interstate commerce, amongst, co-operation, distributed, shortage, suppress, restraint of trade, monthly, meetings, enhance, levels, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN1[

U.S. Comp Stat. § 8823 provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN2[

A combination or conspiracy consists only in a mere meeting of the minds of two or more persons to accomplish a common purpose.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN3[

A combination or conspiracy is not necessarily unlawful, but if unlawful, then anything done or said by a party thereto to consummate the unlawful purpose need not in itself be unlawful. So, also, a combination or conspiracy in itself lawful may be made unlawful by acts in furtherance thereof which the themselves unlawful. An unlawful conspiracy, when proven, may be brought under condemnation of law by proof of facts and circumstances done in furtherance thereof which are not in themselves unlawful. So a conspiracy which has for its object the accomplishment of a lawful purpose may be brought into condemnation of the law by doing unlawful things to consummate that purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Each case under the Sherman Act must be determined upon its own facts, and if these facts establish the proposition that the combination entered into unreasonably restrains trade in interstate commerce, by suppressing competition in prices, it falls within the condemnation of the act.

Opinion by: [**1] McCALL

Opinion

---

[*148] McCALL, District Judge. This is an application for preliminary injunction. The bill of complaint is brought under section 4 of an Act of Congress (26 Stat. 209 [Comp. St. § 8823]), by the United States of America against the American Column & Lumber Company and 332 other manufacturers of hardwood lumber, residents and citizens of some 16 different states, charging the defendants with combining and conspiring together to suppress competition amongst themselves, and to enhance their selling prices for such lumber, in restraint of interstate commerce, in violation of section 1 of said act of Congress (section 8820), which is as follows:

HN1[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal."

It is alleged that the defendant companies comprise the most important manufacturers of hardwood lumber in the United States, and have been so engaged for a long time in the states and at the places indicated in the bill of complaint, in cutting down trees of the hardwood varieties and converting them into logs, in moving [**2] such logs to sawmills and lumber factories, in manufacturing them into lumber, and in the selling and shipping of such lumber, in interstate commerce, to manufacturers of sashes, doors, flooring, mill work, etc., and to other manufacturers and to wholesale and retail dealers for the purposes of resale, and that at the beginning of the year 1919 the defendant companies were still demanding for their lumber approximately the same prices that had prevailed before the signing of the armistice in the war with Germany, and that manufacturers and wholesale and [*149] retail dealers were buying from the defendants only in small quantities, for the purposes of immediate necessities, in the belief that the prices demanded were too high, and they were intending to largely increase their purchases of such lumber from the defendants, in interstate commerce, as soon as the prices should be reduced by competition among the defendants to more reasonable levels.

Under these circumstances, in January, 1919, and continuously thereafter to the present time, it is further alleged that the defendant companies and individual defendants unlawfully combined and conspired together, in restraint of interstate [**3] commerce in hardwood lumber manufactured by them, to maintain the prices demanded in said month of January, 1919, for their lumber and to double and treble the prices, in violation of the said act of Congress and against the public policy of the United States, by suppressing competition in prices amongst the defendants, by substituting therefor co-operation and agreements among themselves having the purpose and effect of maintaining and increasing prices.

The bill then proceeds to state the means resorted to by defendants to accomplish the purpose of the alleged combination and conspiracy, which are in substance as follows (hereinafter referred to as overt acts): By joining together as members of a so-called "open competition plan" under the slogan "Co-operation, not Competition, is the Life of Trade," and by providing and financially supporting at Memphis, Tenn., a suite of offices, clerical force, and the defendant F. R. Gadd as manager of statistics, for the successful operation of said plan; by dividing the members of the plan into four geographical groups, and holding meetings of each group each month; by printing and causing to be distributed amongst the defendants recommendations [**4] to make oral agreements at such meetings to eliminate competition amongst these defendants who had been competing, and by this means to suppress "evil practices," meaning thereby the practice of competing in prices so as to secure business, by requiring each member of the plan to make monthly "stock reports" to the manager of statistics, showing the normal stock, the entire actual stock, the unsold stock, of each defendant company, and also to make to said manager "production reports," showing the normal monthly production, the actual monthly production, and the estimated future production of each defendant company, and also "sales reports" showing separately each actual sale of hardwood lumber made by each defendant company, giving the name of the buyer, the kind of lumber sold, the destination, and the selling price; by having these reports tabulated by the manager of statistics and distributed amongst the members of the plan; by distributing amongst the defendants printed recommendations to discuss prices at their monthly meetings, and orally discussing at such monthly meetings said stock reports, production reports, and sales reports, so as to produce at each of such meetings a [**5] mutual exchange of oral statements of approval of high prices reported in the sales reports, as assurances that the defendants would further sustain such prices by maintaining prices as high as or higher than such prices; by mutually exchanging each month through the manager of statistics, in connection with the production [*150] reports, written predictions by the several defendants that high prices reported in the sales reports would continue to be maintained and enhanced, so as to thus furnish further assurance that the action of each defendant in maintaining and enhancing such price would be supported by like action on the part of other members of the plan; by having distributed by the manager of statistics amongst the defendants printed expositions of the theory of each defendant, to be observed as a guide to prices reported as received by other defendants, to the effect that knowledge regarding prices actually received is all that is necessary to keep prices at reasonably stable and normal levels, there being no agreement to follow the practices of others, although members do naturally follow their most intelligent competitors, if they know what their competitors have been [**6] actually doing, this being the theoretical proposition at the basis of the open competition plan; by having questionnaires sent out by the manager of statistics to each member of the plan, asking for information showing how the theory of the open competition plan worked in practice, and that the manager of statistics edited these answers and caused to be distributed amongst the members such parts of them as tended to show that it was successful in producing a steady advance in the prices of their products; by printing and causing to be distributed among the defendants arguments against low prices, on the ground of shortage of lumber disclosed by the stock reports, and explaining how the disclosure of such shortage in the stock reports prevented prices from being lowered, followed by arguments for still higher prices on the ground of the shortage disclosed; the continued co-operation to secure higher prices on the ground of shortage in stocks, and the elimination of competition; by causing to be reprinted with approval, and distributed amongst themselves, statements emphasizing the advance of prices following the shortage of lumber, and urging the defendants against increasing production [**7] by night work, which would in effect "kill the goose that laid the golden eggs" and would be criminal folly, coupled with the suggestion made in the sales report that their combination or association, called the "open competition plan," to maintain and enhance prices would not be prosecuted, that prices would continue to advance so long as the shortage of lumber was maintained, and that the Sherman Law, designed to prevent the restraint of trade, should be repealed.

It is further alleged that similar means are still being employed and are about to be further employed by the defendants, at Memphis and elsewhere, in consummation of their alleged unlawful combination and conspiracy to maintain the prices of hardwood lumber at, and enhance it beyond, the present high levels, in restraint of interstate commerce in such lumber. It is the doing of these things by the defendants, characterized as overt acts, that the court is asked to enjoin.

The defendants file a sworn answer, in which they substantially admit doing the things charged in the bill, characterized as overt acts. They deny that they were wrongful acts, and assert that the defendants were clearly within their rights under [**8] the law in the course which has been pursued, and especially do they deny every charge or [*151] intimation in the bill of any unlawful combination or conspiracy, and that the doing of those things did not and does not restrain trade in interstate commerce; but, on the other hand, it is asserted that the open competition plan promotes competition in interstate commerce, and especially among the members of the plan, in that it furnishes them with information by which they can more intelligently and effectively conduct the management of their business as manufacturers of hardwood lumber. They deny that the defendants, by their course of conduct as charged in the bill, curtailed production or suppressed competition in, or maintained and increased prices of, manufactured hardwood lumber.

Much documentary evidence and many affidavits were introduced in support of the contention of the respective parties, all of which were documents coming from the office of the manager of statistics, or affidavits of the defendants themselves, except a certain line of affidavits by parties who were not members of the plan, but who were dealers in hardwood lumber, or furnished supplies to the defendants [**9] for the manufacture thereof. In the view the court has taken of the case these latter affidavits, in so far as they are material to the question to be decided, are but expressions of opinion of the party making the affidavit. It should be said that the affidavits made and filed by the defendants do not controvert the allegations made in the bill of overt acts, but they do deny that affiants were parties to any combination or conspiracy or agreement to restrain trade in interstate commerce in the hardwood manufacturing business, by suppressing competition in prices among themselves or otherwise.

As the court understands this record, there is no conflicting evidence to reconcile, since it comes entirely from the defendants and, whatever the case is for the government, it is made such by the acts and words of the defendants, or some of them, themselves. It therefore remains for the court to determine whether the conclusions drawn from the evidence of the government, as stated in the bill of complaint, are in its judgment warranted.

The first question arising is whether the defendants in associating themselves together under the so-called "open competition plan" thereby formed a [**10] combination or conspiracy. In other words, was there in the minds of two or more of the defendants a design to accomplish by and through the plan a common purpose? If so, there was a combination or conspiracy, HN2[↑] since a combination or conspiracy consists only in a mere meeting of the minds of two or more persons to accomplish a common purpose. Pettibone v. United States, 148 U.S. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419; Bouvier's Law Dictionary, vol. 1, p. 621.

HN3[↑] A combination or conspiracy is not necessarily unlawful, but if unlawful, then anything done or said by a party thereto to consummate the unlawful purpose need not in itself be unlawful. So, also, a combination or conspiracy in itself lawful may be made unlawful by acts in furtherance thereof which the themselves unlawful. An unlawful conspiracy, when proven, may be brought under condemnation of law by proof of facts and circumstances done in furtherance thereof [*152] which are not in themselves unlawful. So a conspiracy which has for its object the accomplishment of a lawful purpose may be brought into condemnation of the law by doing unlawful things to consummate that purpose. It cannot be with reason denied, nor [**11] indeed do I understand that it is denied, by the defendants, that they formed an association, a combination, or an agreement, to promote the interests of the members of the plan who were engaged in the manufacture of hardwood lumber.

The second and more difficult question is: Did and does this combination or association restrain trade in interstate commerce, within the meaning of the law? If so, it is unlawful, and any act done or anything said or written by any member of the plan in furtherance of its object was the act of all and the injunction should issue.

The evidence shows that the defendants were members of the American Hardwood Manufacturers' Association (hereinafter called the association), but that all the members of said association are not members of the "open competition plan." Query: What benefits did those members of the association who joined the plan expect to derive from it which were not equally available in the association alone? There must have been some additional advantage contemplated and expected. That purpose, I think, can best be determined from the evidence tending to show what the members of the plan said and did from the time of its formation and [*12] on up through the months until this suit was filed.

As has been seen, this evidence was created by the defendants themselves, and it is uncontroverted. We come now to consider it. Before doing so, however, it is well to dispose of the insistence by counsel for the defendants that the members of the plan should not be held responsible for what F. R. Gadd, the manager of statistics, did, wrote, or said in conducting the business of the plan. I cannot agree with that contention. Mr. Gadd was employed by the members of the plan; he was furnished quarters and clerical assistance at Memphis, Tenn.; he it was that gathered information from the individual members; he it was that tabulated, it, and, thus tabulated, he it was that sent it back to each of the members; he it was that advised the members or suggested the manner of conducting the business; he advised the members of all that he knew or gathered from the individual members through their monthly reports as to the condition of the trade. The members of the plan thus knew what he was doing. He was the agent employed by them to conduct the business of the plan, and, judging from this record, he did it successfully and to the satisfaction [**13] of its members. His office was the clearing house of the plan's business. Under such circumstances, when the members of the plan are summoned into court to show cause why they should not be enjoined from further prosecuting the business of the plan as perfected and practiced by their agent, Mr. Gadd, for them, the wrongs done should not, either in law, equity, or good conscience, be shifted to the shoulders of Mr. Gadd and those for whom he acted, with their knowledge, consent, and approval, be permitted to go hence without blame.

Recurring now to the evidence: It appears that in the early months of 1919 the stock of hardwood lumber on hand was low, the demand was light, and prices at a comparatively high level. The [*153] first sales report by Mr. Gadd, as manager of statistics, was issued on January 25, 1919, and issued weekly thereafter. Quoting from the first one we read:

"Co-operation, not competition, is the life of trade. Membership in the plan is not compulsory, but members who enter into the plan and practice the idea of a fair deal for all, eliminating suspicion and acting with good will toward each other, will find that returns come back to them with added [**14] interest in dollars and cents."

February 3:

"Before the organization of this plan, while some of the members knew some of the other members, in a majority of cases they were competing with each other, even when neighbors without a personal acquaintance."

February 8:

"The matter of price is the principal point at issue between the buyer and seller. Buyers who have been looking for a downward revision of prices are going to be disappointed. * * * It is no longer merely a question of who can, or will, hold out the longest -- that condition no longer exists. Buying has been resumed after a period of waiting and uncertainty, and it is confidently expected that the move in this direction will long be continued. The tendency to buy only for current needs is less apparent than at any time since the armistice was signed. * * * Stocks remain below normal. Total stocks on hand in the Southern territory are two million feet less, all grades combined, as compared with last month. * * * Production in the Eastern territory, however, is not more than sixty per cent. of normal at the present time. * * * The car supply is ample. * * * It must be apparent that the outlook on the whole [**15] is favorable for a strong market for all the lumber that can be produced during the coming months."

February 15:

"There's a reason for everything, and the reason of an association is more than good fellowship, though getting to know the other fellow is usually the first step in the direction of correcting trade abuses."

March 1:

"The report of stocks on hand sold and unsold as of February 1, 1919, develops a situation that we believe is unparalleled in hardwood lumber industry. In no single month within our recollection has there been such a large and general decrease in stocks on hand as shown by this report."

"The chief factors contributing to this situation are curtailed production and increased volume of sales. * * * At this rate, it will not be long before there is a famine of hardwood lumber. We hear a great deal about the waiting attitude of the buyer, with the expectation of price recession; but with such conditions as are above recited it is difficult to understand why holders of hardwood lumber need worry as to the future. * * * With stocks low and ill-assorted, and with no prospect for restoring them to even last year's meager quantities, the outlook for strong [**16] prices on all hardwoods could not be better."

March 8, quoting with approval an article from the Southern Lumberman, the report says:

"For instance, at the recent meeting of the open competition plan of the American Hardwood Manufacturers' Association in Memphis, the fact was developed that the production of mills embraced in that group of manufacturers is at the present time only fifty-six per cent. of normal, and that practically [*154] the same situation exists throughout the hardwood producing territory. * * * Certainly in any other industry the buyers could never expect anything but an advance in price when the supply is below normal, the production is far below normal, and the demand is improving."

March 22:

"It is one thing for men in a meeting to say, one after another, 'My price is so and so,' with the result that after the meeting all their prices prove substantially the same as the figures mentioned.

"It is quite a different thing for the same men to come to a meeting and each report, 'My actual sales for the past month have been so and so, and I have reported the details of each transaction to the Association.'

"In that statement there is no direct or [**17] implied agreement to maintain prices, no obligation of any kind to refrain from cutting.

"The theoretical proposition at the basis of the open competition plan is that knowledge regarding prices actually made is all that is necessary to keep prices at reasonably stable and normal levels."

March 29:

"Naturally the situation ought to have an important bearing on the plans of every hardwood lumberman if the facts were better understood; offers of business now at shaded prices would get scant consideration, and there would not only be no good reason to cut prices, but there would be every reason why they should be held at reasonably profit-making levels."

With the low stock of hardwood lumber on hand and the reduced production during the first few months of the year, as indicated by these sales reports, the plan, through its manager of statistics, on April 5th, began a propaganda to encourage home building, for the purpose of creating a greater demand for hardwood lumber. On the first page of the report of that date there appears in bold letters the words "BUILD NOW," from which I quote:

"Start the big idea now, the whole country is thinking and talking home building; the [**18] government is urging it. Call a meeting to-day; ask every man in your community who is interested in building or building material to attend; then --

"Start something!

"Organize!

"Get the editorial support of all newspapers.

"Appoint a publicity committee which will use every avenue of publicity.

"Ask merchants to put a 'Build Now' slip in packages they deliver.

"Do everything possible to get the old town talking 'Build Now.'

"Don't delay -- simply call the men together in your town to do things -- you may be assured they will be interested.

"Don't permit your town to be a slacker in the nation-wide movement."

Thereafter on June 7th, following this propaganda, the weekly sales report begins:

"The open competition plan to the American Hardwood Manufacturers' Association has arrived; it is an unqualified success, and any member or any manufacturer who does not think so is simply overlooking the most important of our several association activities. * * * Read the following excerpts from letters written by members."

I only quote a few:

"We believe we have profited from $500 to $1,000 during the past 30 days by being correctly informed relative to the prices stock [**19] is really being sold it."

[*155] "When a manufacturer situated as ourselves sells stock below the market price, it not only hurts his own business, but it hurts the other fellow who has similar stock to dispose of."

"The very first report which we received under this plan enabled us to increase our price $6 per thousand on a special item in oak."

"At a recent Memphis meeting it developed our company was carrying an unusually large stock in thoroughly dried gum, and seemed to be the only one among those present who had it. Within two weeks from date of this meeting, where it developed there was a big shortage of red gum items, we found a most unusual at prices we had not hoped for."

"We were a little hard to persuade to come into the plan; now that we are in and have seen the inside workings of it, we do not see how we could get along without it."

"Since we became members we have been selling out lumber at several dollars per thousand more than formerly."

"Any manufacturer who is trying to do without the help of the association is making a wonderful mistake."

"We find the weekly report of sales a very positive index to the trend of the market on all grades of lumber."

[**20] "I consider the report of actual sales of great help in determining the market value of hardwood lumber and believe that the plan is a stabilizing influence, which tends to raise the prices of those who are inclined to cut their prices to the top market prices."

"It is obvious that no one wants to sell his lumber for less than the other fellow is actually getting, and your reports of actual sales enable the manufacturer to see what his neighbors are getting for their lumber, and through this course of education, I might say, all those who have access to your reports bring their prices to the top."

"Our experience has been that the open competition plan has been absolutely accurate, but instead of apparently stabilizing the market, it has caused a runaway market."

"There seems to be a friendly rivalry between members to see who can get the best prices, whereas under the old plan it was cut-throat competition. Now it is a pleasure to sell because we know what we are doing and have information at our finger tips that enables us to know these things before the other fellow does."

There is much other documentary evidence to like effect, but this is enough to indicate the common [**21] note running through it all, and that common note is "increase of prices." It is difficult, if not impossible, on this record, to escape the conclusion that the purpose and intention of the plan was to suppress competition among its members, and create and perpetuate a condition in the hardwood lumber manufacturing business, wherein the production of hardwood lumber was to be kept low enough to maintain prices on an ascending scale, but not so low as to drive prices to such heights, under the stimulating influence produced by the propaganda to "Build Now," that consumers would be induced to use substitutes. These two objectives mark the margins of the channel through which the members of the plan conducted by its manager of statistics, Mr. Gadd, were to steer interstate commerce in hardwood lumber, and through which it was successfully steered, on up to the filing of this bill, until prices of hardwood lumber had increased from 150 to 250 per cent. within a period of 12 months. I do not doubt that some of the defendants, if not all of them, were advised that the plan was lawful, and that their participation in its operation was lawful; but their conduct must be here considered in [**22] the light of results.

[*156] It would serve no useful purpose to analyze the evidence, or to enter into a discussion of the decided cases, which have heretofore arisen under the Sherman Act; HN4[<sup>1</sup>] each case must be determined upon its own facts, and if these facts establish the proposition that the combination entered into unreasonably restrains trade in interstate commerce, by suppressing competition in prices, it falls within the condemnation of the act. Competition and co-operation by and with those engaged in the same business is not necessarily inconsistent. Successful business will likely result from a proper balance of the two, but too much of either may lead to disaster. Competition without co-operation means destructive competition. Co-operation without competition means the destruction of competition -- price fixing.<sup>1</sup> The latter is the state of the open competition plan, as disclosed on this record.

It results, from what has been said, that temporary injunction will issue as prayed for in the bill of complaint.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>1</sup> Hurley's, Awakening of Business.

United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co.

District Court, E.D. Missouri

March 31, 1920

No. 4489

Reporter

264 F. 138 *; 1920 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1177 **

UNITED STATES v. UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CO. et al.

Core Terms

---

machines, leases, patent, manufacturers, contracts, Clayton Act, shoe, lessees, commerce, clauses, cases, monopoly, patentee, Sherman Act, conditions, competitors, invention, rights, exemption, courts, words, parties, lessor, provisions, machinery, unduly, shoe machinery, carrier, decree, rates

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN1[] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

The patentee receives nothing from the law which he did not have before, and that the only effect of his patent is to restrain others from manufacturing, using, or selling that which he had invented. The patent law simply protects him in the monopoly of that which he has invented and has described in the claims of his patent.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN2[] Conveyances, Licenses

There is nothing in the laws relating to patents which in any wise affects contracts for license, use, sale, or lease of patented articles. They are subject to the same governmental and legislative control as other contracts.

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Limited Use Rights > Licenses

264 F. 138, *138U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1177, **1177

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Real Property Law > Ownership & Transfer > Public Entities

HN3 Legislation, Types of Statutes

The property right of the patentee is, after all, but a property right, and subject, as is all other property, to the general law of the land. Neither the patentee, nor the machine involving his invention, nor a license for use, can be exempted from the liabilities and regulations which, in the public interest, attach to all persons and property under the general law of the land. Neither is the right to make and sell or use a patented invention or process free from the restraints imposed by the police power of the states.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN4 Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

If a business is subject to regulation, the contracts made in its conduct are subject to regulation.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Reserved Powers

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Employee Inventions

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN5 Interstate Commerce, Prohibition of Commerce

As the Constitution vested in Congress the exclusive power to regulate commerce among the states and grant patents, it possesses what is akin to the police power of the states, the right to regulate acts relating to them, including licenses, sales, contracts, and leases of patented articles, especially when employed in commerce among the states or foreign states.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

HN6 [down] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

Decisions of courts do not create rights which become vested to the extent that they may not be impaired by subsequent legislation, except as they become res judicata between the parties to the action and their privies. They are rules of property which will not, for slight reasons, be changed by later decisions, but even such decisions may and have been overruled frequently.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Governments > Police Powers

HN7 [down] Courts, Judicial Precedent

No person has a vested right, under the common law or decisions of courts, entitling him to insist that it shall remain unchanged for his benefit, although in the opinion of the legislature it is injurious to the public welfare, and therefore subject to the police power. Of course, this does not apply to vested rights under a statute or contract based on a valuable consideration, and not subject to the police power.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Sales Taxes > Exempt Sales

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Sales Taxes > General Overview

HN8 [down] Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

A statute addressed to no particular person does not constitute a contract, and therefore creates no vested right, and may be repealed at any time.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

HN9 [down] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

The patent laws of the United States are addressed to no one in particular, but dictated by public policy, restrained only by the Constitution, that the patent secure for limited time to inventors the exclusive right to their discovery.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Contracts Clause > General Overview

HN10 [down] Congressional Duties & Powers, Contracts Clause

There is nothing in the national Constitution which prohibits Congress or a state from nullifying existing contracts, if, in the opinion of the legislative department, based on substantial grounds, they are injurious to the public. All contracts for a definite period must be taken to have been made subject to a possible change by law, under the police power, if the public welfare demands it, and this is to be determined by the lawmakers.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN11[ Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

The essential conditions under which the exception of res judicata becomes applicable are the identity of the thing demanded, the identity of the cause of the demand, and of the parties in the character in which they are litigants.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN12[ Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Estoppel by judgment does not extend to matters that were only collaterally involved in the former litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[ Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

There is nothing in the Sherman Act, or any other act of Congress, making the acts enumerated in § 3 of the Clayton Act unlawful, where the effect of them may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN14[ Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The second section of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of such trade, while the Clayton Act makes every contract, etc., which tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > General Overview

**HN15** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act is intended as a preventive act, to arrest the creation of trusts, etc., in their incipiency and before consummation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN16** [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Part of § 3 of the Clayton Act makes unlawful to allow a discount from, or rebate upon, a price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

**HN17** [blue icon] Effect & Operation, Prospective Operation

A legislative act will not be construed as retroactive or retrospective, unless the language clearly shows that this was the intention of the lawmakers, and that no other construction will make the act effective. Even if an act is remedial, the same rule of construction will be adopted, although such acts are always liberally construed. If the statute, by giving it a retrospective construction, will deprive one of a contractual right or interfere with antecedent rights, this rule of strict construction will never be departed from.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

**HN18** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Ordinarily the word "shall" indicates that the act is to be prospective, and not retrospective.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN19** [blue icon] Legislation, Interpretation

The probative value of the rejection of an amendment will be considered by the courts in construing an act, if the language is at all doubtful.

Opinion by: [\[\*\*1\]](#) TRIEBER

Opinion

---

[*145] TRIEBER, District Judge. The evidence adduced by the parties is very voluminous. It consists of 26 printed volumes of oral testimony, and in addition thereto 4 large volumes of copies of leases, leases used before as well as since the enactment of the Clayton Act; copies of the record of the former action between the same parties under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (Comp. St. §§ 8820-8823, 8827-8830), reported in 222 Fed. 349, and 247 U.S. 32, 38 Sup. Ct. 473, 62 L. Ed. 968, pleaded as res adjudicata; numerous exhibits of shoes in their various stages of manufacture, some of them made on machines leased from the defendants and others on machines of competitors; duplicate parts for defendants' machines, and many other articles connected with them, which it is needless to mention. Several weeks have been spent in reading the evidence and comparing it with the evidence in the former case between the same parties under the Sherman Act, and it shows but slight differences and warrants the findings made in that case that the defendants have not acted oppressively in the enforcement of the forfeiture clauses complained of; that their machines are of excellent quality; [*2] that the services rendered by them in the installment of the machines, instructions to operators, promptness in furnishing them when desired by shoe manufacturers, and making repairs and replacements of broken and worn-out parts expeditiously -- these are no doubt of great value to their lessees. It is also shown that, when improvements in any of the leased machines are made, they are furnished in place of the older machines without extra charge. All these claims are satisfactorily established by the evidence, and the court so finds. It is therefore unnecessary to review the testimony or make any further special findings of fact on these issues.

It is also shown that all their machines are protected by patents granted prior to October 15, 1914, and the validity of none of these patents is questioned. The only additional findings of fact necessary to make are that lessees, using machines of competitors in violation of the terms of any of the leases, had their attention called to the forfeiture provisions in the leases, which was understood by many of the lessees as warnings, in the nature of threats, that unless discontinued these covenants of the leases would be enforced. If [*3] these warnings were not promptly heeded, and machines of competitors discarded, defendants would refuse to supply shoe manufacturers with additional machines, except on the unrestricted or initial payment plans hereinafter more fully referred to, and payment of the full royalties as provided in the leases would be exacted, as if the shoes had been manufactured wholly on defendants' machines. The opinion will therefore be confined to the other issues raised by the pleadings, mostly issues of law.

Before passing on these issues, a motion of defendants to strike certain evidence of witnesses for the plaintiff should be disposed of.

I. Objections to Testimony.

The testimony objected to was that of several witnesses introduced by the plaintiff, who were officers and salesmen of competitors of [*146] the defendants in the manufacture of some shoe machinery. Their testimony was to the effect that a number of shoe manufacturers, whom they named, informed them, when solicited to purchase machinery of their principals, that they were anxious to purchase them, but were unable to do so, as they had to use some of the defendants' patented machines, and they had been threatened that [*4] they would be compelled, and in some instances had been forced, to pay the full royalties stipulated in the defendants' leases for all shoes, on which some operations were made on machines leased from them, although a great deal of the work was performed on machines of competitors; that other shoe manufacturers had previously purchased machines of witnesses' manufacture, but declined to purchase additional ones, although they stated that they found them more economical than those of the defendants. The reasons they gave were that, if they used any machines not leased from the defendants, they could not obtain additional machines from them as they needed them, except upon initial payments under the unrestricted leases; that such payments required large sums of money, and would not reduce the royalties to the same extent as if they used exclusively machines leased from the defendants.

To sustain the objection, counsel for defendants relied on Buckeye Powder Co. v. Du Pont Powder Co., 248 U.S. 55, 39 Sup. Ct. 38, 63 L. Ed. 123, while counsel for plaintiff cited Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U.S. 522, 35 Sup. Ct. 170,

59 L. Ed. 341. The conclusions reached make it unnecessary to rule on these [**5] objections. Their testimony on that issue is merely cumulative. The same facts were testified to by a number of shoe manufacturers -- Milton Adler, of Julian & Kolenge Company; Fred H. Dow, of the Plant & Butler Shoe Company; Milton S. Florsheim, of the Florsheim Shoe Company; William W. Gates, of the Irving-Drew Company; Joseph E. Groat, of the B. A. Corbin & Sons Company; Fred J. Mayer, of the F. Mayer Boot & Shoe Company; F. C. Rand, of the Interantional Shoe Company; Joseph F. Gardella, of the Wingate Shoe Corporation; Charles H. Jones, of the Commonwealth Shoe & Leather Company; Henry L. Nunn, of the Nunn & Bush Shoe Company; Pearl E. Selby, of the Drew-Selby Company; Emanuel F. Selz, of Selz-Schwab & Company; Thomas H. Shinn, of Curtis, Jones & Co.; John E. Williams, of the Excelsior Shoe Company.

II. Is the Act Unconstitutional as to Patents Secured Prior Thereto?

It is claimed on behalf of defendants that section 3 of the Clayton Act, so far as it applies to the tying clauses in the leases of machines, which are protected by patents in force at the time of its enactment, is unconstitutional, as it tends to deprive the patentees of a vested right, in violation of [**6] the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution. In determining this question it must not be lost sight of that this act was enacted under the commerce clause of the Constitution, and is limited to interstate commerce, as shown by section 1. How broad the powers of Congress under the commerce clause are has [*147] been determined so many times that it will serve no useful purpose to cite authorities, except some few later referred to.

The contention on behalf of defendants is that, prior to and at the time of the enactment of the Clayton Act, it was the law, as had been uniformly held by the courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, that terms and restrictions such as are contained in the leases and attacked in this action --

"were not offensive to the letter or policy of the law and were entitled to the sanction of the law; * * * that, if construed to apply to leases of machines protected by existing patents, it destroys a large part of the value of the patents, as both patents, leases, and contracts are property, and entitled to the protection of the guarantees of the Constitution."

It is true that patents are property, but it is equally true that --

HN1 [↑] "the patentee [**7] receives nothing from the law which he did not have before, and that the only effect of his patent is to restrain others from manufacturing, using, or selling that which he had invented. The patent law simply protects him in the monopoly of that which he has invented and has described in the claims of his patent." Motion Picture Co. v. Universal Film Co., 243 U.S. 502, 510, 37 Sup. Ct. 416, 418 (61 L. Ed. 871), L.R.A. 1917E, 1187, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 959) and authorities there cited.

HN2 [↑] There is nothing in the laws relating to patents which in any wise affects contracts for license, use, sale, or lease of patented articles. They are subject to the same governmental and legislative control as other contracts. In United States v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. (C.C.) 191 Fed. 172, 190, it was held:

"A patentee is as much subject to the laws of the land as is any other man. * * * It does not give a right * * * to sell indulgences to violate the law of the land, be it the Sherman Law or another."

Upon appeal this decree was affirmed. 226 U.S. 20, 48, 49, 33 Sup. Ct. 9, 14, 15 (57 L. Ed. 107). Mr. Justice McKenna, who delivered the unanimous opinion of the court, said:

"The agreements [**8] clearly, therefore, transcend what was necessary to protect the use of the patent or the monopoly which the law conferred upon it. * * * Rights conferred by patents are indeed very definite and extensive, but they do not give, any more than other rights, a universal license against positive prohibitions. The Sherman Law is a limitation of rights -- Rights which may be pushed to evil consequences, and therefore restrained."

In Boston Store v. American Graphophone Co., 246 U.S. 25, 38 Sup. Ct. 261, 62 L. Ed. 551, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 447, the court said:

"There can be equally no doubt that the power to make it [price fixing after sale] in derogation of the general law was not within the monopoly conferred by the patent law, and that the attempt to enforce its apparent obligations, under the guise of a patent infringement, was not embraced within the remedies given for the protection of the rights which the patent law conferred."

See, also, Virtue v. Creamery Package Co., 227 U.S. 8, 32, 33 Sup. Ct. 202, 57 L. Ed. 393 and Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U.S. 66, 85, 37 Sup. Ct. 353, 61 L. Ed. 597, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 322.

[*148] Mr. Justice Clarke, in the Motion Picture Case, said:

[**9] "In interpreting this language of the statute it will be of service to keep in mind three rules long established by this court, applicable to the patent law and to the construction of patents, viz.:"

"(1) The scope of every patent is limited to the invention described in the claims contained in it, read in the light of the specification. These so mark where the progress claimed by the patent begins and where it ends that they have been aptly likened to the description in a deed, which sets the bounds to the grant which it contains. It is to the claims of every patent, therefore, that we must turn when we are seeking to determine what the invention is, the exclusive use of which is given to the inventor by the grant provided for by the statute. 'He can claim nothing beyond them.'"

In referring to the Button Fastener Case, 77 Fed. 288, 25 C.C.A. 267, 35 L.R.A. 728, which applies also to Henry v. Dick Co., 224 U.S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 364, 56 L. Ed. 645, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 880, the learned Justice, on page 514 of the opinion in 243 U.S. (37 Sup. Ct. 420, 61 L. Ed. 871, L.R.A. 1917E, 1187, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 959), said:

"This decision proceeds upon the argument that, since the patentee [<**10] may withhold his patent altogether from public use, he must logically and necessarily be permitted to impose any conditions which he chooses upon any use which he may allow of it. The defect in this thinking springs from the substituting of inference and argument for the language of the statute, and from failure to distinguish between the rights which are given to the inventor by the patent law, and which he may assert against all the world through an infringement proceeding, and rights which he may create for himself by private contract, which, however, are subject to the rules of general, as distinguished from those of the patent, law."

In Heaton-Peninsular, etc., Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co. (the Button Fastener Case), 77 Fed. 288, 293, 25 C.C.A. 267, 272 (35 L.R.A. 728) Judge Lurton, who delivered the opinion of the court, said:

HN3 [↑] "The property right of the patentee is, after all, but a property right, and subject, as is all other property, to the general law of the land. * * * Neither the patentee, nor the machine involving his invention, nor a license for use, can be exempted from the liabilities and regulations which, in the public interest, attach to all persons and property [<**11] under the general law of the land. Neither is the right to make and sell or use a patented invention or process free from the restraints imposed by the police power of the states."

To the same effect are State of Missouri v. Bell Telephone Co. (C.C.) 23 Fed. 539, 540, decided by Judge (later Mr. Justice) Brewer; State of Delaware v. D. & A. Tel. & Tel. Co. (C.C.) 47 Fed. 633, affirmed 50 Fed. 677, 2 C.C.A. 1.

Judge Brewer, in the Missouri Case, said:

"The moment he puts that property [the patented] into what I perhaps may, for lack of a better expression, define as the channels of commerce, that moment he subjects that property to the laws which control commercial transactions."

In short, individual rights, whether claimed under patents or otherwise, must be subordinated to the public good, and, unless clearly arbitrary and unreasonable, courts will respect the acts of the legislative persons of rights theretofore enjoyed. As abuses, harmful to the public, are found to exist, new laws are enacted to prevent [*149] them, and they necessarily deprive those who practiced them of the right to continue them.

HN4 [↑] If a business is subject to regulation, the contracts made in [**12] its conduct are subject to regulation. Rast v. Van Deman & Lewis, 240 U.S. 342, 363, 36 Sup. Ct. 370, 60 L. Ed. 679, L.R.A. 1917A, 421, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 455.

Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058, relied on by defendants, was an action between a licensor and licensee, and on that ground was distinguished in Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U.S. 339, 343, 28 Sup. Ct. 722, 52 L. Ed. 1086, as it must be in this action. This also applies to the Paper Bag Patent Case, 210 U.S. 405, 28 Sup. Ct. 748, 52 L. Ed. 1122, cited for defendants. That was an action for infringement of a patent. In response to the claim that the patentee had been guilty of nonuse for the full period of 17 years, the life of the patent, the court held that a patentee may do so without losing the monopoly granted by the patent laws. Its inapplicability is therefore too clear to require comment.

If the act involved herein had attempted to nullify patents or deprive patentees of the exclusive right to own and control them, counsel's contention would find support in the authorities cited, but neither the act, nor the complaint herein, attempt that.

Conceding that the courts [**13] had previously sustained the right to make such leases and contracts as are attacked in this cause, it does not follow that the patentee has a vested right in them of which the Legislature may not deprive him, if in its opinion they are detrimental to the public welfare. While it is true, as claimed by counsel, that by the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution the police power is reserved to the states, it is now well settled that, HNS [↑] as the Constitution vested in Congress the exclusive power to regulate commerce among the states and grant patents, it possesses what is akin to the police power of the states, the right to regulate acts relating to them, including licenses, sales, contracts, and leases of patented articles, especially when employed in commerce among the states or foreign states. Among the many authorities recognizing that rule of law, the following are cited: Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136; The Lottery Cases, 188 U.S. 321, 23 Sup. Ct. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492; Hippolite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U.S. 45, 31 Sup. Ct. 364, 55 L. Ed. 364; Hoke v. United States, 227 U.S. 308, 33 Sup. Ct. 281, 57 L. Ed. 523, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) [**14] 906, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 905; Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U.S. 366, 38 Sup. Ct. 159, 62 L. Ed. 349, L.R.A. 1918C, 361, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 856; McKinley v. United States, 249 U.S. 397, 39 Sup. Ct. 324, 63 L. Ed. 668; Hamilton v. Kentucky, D. & W. Co., 251 U.S. 146, 40 Sup. Ct. 106, 64 L. Ed. (decided December 15, 1919).

In the last-cited case this same claim was made, and Mr. Justice Brandeis, in disposing of it, said:

"That the United States lacks the police power, and that this was reserved to the states by the Tenth Amendment, is true. But it is none the less true that, when the United States exerts any of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, no valid objection can be based upon the fact that such exercise [**150] may be attended by the same incidents which attend the exercise by a state of its police power, or that it may tend to accomplish a similar purpose. * * * But the Fifth Amendment imposes in this respect no greater limitation upon the national power than does the Fourteenth Amendment upon state power."

So, even if the claim that the former decisions relied on constitute a vested right in the patentee, it would still be subject to regulation [**15] by Congress, under the commerce as well as the patent clauses of the Constitution, and in some matters to the police power of the states. Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501, 24 L. Ed. 1115; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U.S. 344, 347, 26 L. Ed. 565; Allen v. Riley, 203 U.S. 347, 27 Sup. Ct. 95, 51 L. Ed. 216, 8 Ann. Cas. 137; John Woods & Sons v. Carl, 203 U.S. 358, 27 Sup. Ct. 99, 51 L. Ed. 219; Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County National Bank, 207 U.S. 251, 28 Sup. Ct. 89, 52 L. Ed. 195; Opinions of Justices, 193 Mass. 605, 609, 611, 81 N.E. 142. In Webber v. Virginia, supra, the court said:

"The legislation respecting the articles which the state may adopt after the patents have expired it may equally adopt during their continuance. It is only the right to the invention or discovery -- the incorporeal right -- which the state cannot interfere with. Congress never intended that the patent laws should displace the police powers of the states, meaning by that term those powers by which the health, good order, peace, and general welfare of the community are promoted. Whatever rights are reserved to inventors must be enjoyed in subordination to this general authority of the state over all [**16] property within its limits."

Can it be said that Congress may not do what the states can, in relation to matters expressly granted to it by the Constitution? It is true, as stated by counsel, that the power to regulate, as that of taxation, may result in destruction; but, as stated by Mr. Justice Holmes in Ft. Smith Lumber Co. v. State of Arkansas, 251 U.S. 532, 40 Sup. Ct. 304, 64 L. Ed. (opinion filed March 1, 1920):

"If the state of Arkansas wished to discourage, but not forbid, the holding of stock in one corporation by another, and sought to attain the result by this tax, or if it simply saw fit to make corporations pay for the privilege, there would be nothing in the Constitution to hinder."

This was in reply to the contention that the statute was in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. See, also, Veasie Bank v. Feno, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 533, 19 L. Ed. 482; Tanner v. Little, 240 U.S. 369, 386, 36 Sup. Ct. 379, 60 L. Ed. 691.

Besides, HN6 decisions of courts do not create rights which become vested to the extent that they may not be impaired by subsequent legislation, except as they become res judicata between the parties to the action and their privies. They are **17 rules of property which will not, for slight reasons, be changed by later decisions, but even such decisions may and have been overruled frequently. Sauer v. New York, 206 U.S. 536, 27 Sup. Ct. 686, 51 L. Ed. 1176; Moore-Mansfield Co. v. Electrical Co., 234 U.S. 619, 624, 34 Sup. Ct. 941, 58 L. Ed. 1503; Willoughby v. Chicago, 235 U.S. 45, 50, 35 Sup. Ct. 23, 59 L. Ed. 123; Ross v. Oregon, 227 U.S. 150, 161, 33 Sup. Ct. 220, 57 L. Ed. 458, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 224. In the Motion Picture Case the right upheld in Henry v. Dick Co., 224 U.S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 364, 56 L. Ed. 645, Ann. [*151] Cas. 1913D, 880, was denied, and that case overruled. Can it be said that the Legislature is powerless to do what the courts are frequently doing, when they overrule former decisions?

HN7 No person has a vested right, under the common law or decisions of courts, entitling him to insist that it shall remain unchanged for his benefit, although in the opinion of the Legislature it is injurious to the public welfare, and therefore subject to the police power. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 134, 24 L. Ed. 77; Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U.S. 1, 50, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) [**181] 44; New York Central R.R. v. White, 243 U.S. 188, 198, 37 Sup. Ct. 247, 61 L. Ed. 667, L.R.A. 1917D, 1, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629, reaffirmed in Arizona Employers' Liability Cases, 250 U.S. 400, 39 Sup. Ct. 553, 63 L. Ed. 1058, and Chicago, Rock Island, etc., Ry. v. Cole, 251 U.S. 54, 40 Sup. Ct. 68, 64 L. Ed. (opinion filed December 8, 1919).

Of course, this does not apply to vested rights under a statute or contract based on a valuable consideration, and not subject to the police power. In Satterlee v. Mathewson, 27 U.S. (2 Pet.) 380, 413 (7 L. Ed. 458), the court said:

"It is true that the Supreme Court of the state decided, in the year 1825, that this contract, being entered into with a person claiming under a Connecticut title, was void; so that the principle of law which has been mentioned did not apply to it. But the Legislature afterwards declared, by the act under examination, that contracts of that nature were valid, and that the relation of landlord and tenant should exist and be held effectual, as well in contracts of that description as in those between other citizens of the state. * * * The objection, however, which was most pressed upon the court, and relied [**19] upon by the counsel for the plaintiff in error, was that the effect of this act was to divest rights which were vested by law in Satterlee. There is certainly no part of the Constitution of the United States which applies to a state law of this description; nor are we aware of any decision of this, or of any circuit court, which has condemned such a law, upon this ground, provided its effect be not to impair the obligation of a contract, and it has been shown that the act in question has no such effect upon either of the contracts which have been before mentioned."

This was reaffirmed in Charles River Bridge Co. v. Warren Bridge Co., 36 U.S. (11 Pet.) 420, 539, 9 L. Ed. 773. In that case it was said:

"It is well settled by the decisions of this court that a state law may be retrospective in its character, and may divest vested rights, and yet not violate the Constitution of the United States, unless it also impairs the obligation of a contract."

Another ground which makes this claim untenable is that HN8 a statute addressed to no particular person does not constitute a contract, and therefore creates no vested right, and may be repealed at any time. In Salt Co. v. East Saginaw [*20] Co., 80 U.S. \(13 Wall.\) 373, 20 L. Ed. 611, the state of Michigan, for the purpose of encouraging the manufacture of salt, by a general statute addressed to no particular person or corporation, offered a bounty upon salt produced in the state, and exempted from taxation the property engaged in the business. After a time the act was repealed. The claim was that the exemption constituted a contract, and could not be repealed without impairing the obligation of the contract. But the court denied this [*152] claim, and held that the exemption did not constitute a contract, but was nothing more or less than a law dictated by public policy for the encouragement of an industry. So long as the law was in force the state promised the exemption and bounty; but there was no pledge that it should not be repealed at any time. In Wisconsin & Michigan Ry. v. Powers, 191 U.S. 379, 385, 387, 24 Sup. Ct. 107, 108 \(48 L. Ed. 229\), the court, referring to the Salt Company Case said, "It pointed out the distinction between an exemption in a special charter and a general encouragement to all persons to engage in a certain enterprise," and again held that an exemption addressed to no one in particular [*21] constitutes a mere announcement of policy, not constituting a contract, and therefore subject to repeal at any time. See, also, Banning Co. v. California, 240 U.S. 142, 153, 36 Sup. Ct. 338, 60 L. Ed. 569. HN9 The patent laws of the United States are addressed to no one in particular, but dictated by public policy, restrained only by the Constitution, that the patent "secure for limited time to inventors the exclusive right to their discovery."

Besides, HN10 there is nothing in the national Constitution which prohibits Congress or a state from nullifying existing contracts, if, in the opinion of the legislative department, based on substantial grounds, they are injurious to the public. All contracts for a definite period must be taken to have been made subject to a possible change by law, under the police power, if the public welfare demands it, and this is to be determined by the lawmakers. Legal Tender Cases, 79 U.S. \(12 Wall.\) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U.S. 56, 82, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681; Louisville & Nashville R.R. v. Mottley, 219 U.S. 467, 478, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 671; [Mondou v. N.Y., N.H. & H.R.R.R., 223 U.S. \[\*\*22\] 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 44](#); Chicago, B. & Q.R.R. v. McGuire, 219 U.S. 549, 567, 31 Sup. Ct. 259, 55 L. Ed. 328; Chicago & Alton R.R. v. Tranbarger, 238 U.S. 67, 74, 35 Sup. Ct. 678, 59 L. Ed. 1204; Union Dry Goods Co. v. Georgia P.S. Corporation, 248 U.S. 372, 376, 39 Sup. Ct. 117, 63 L. Ed. 309; [Producers' Transportation Co. v. Railroad Commission, 251 U.S. 228, 40 Sup. Ct. 131, 64 L. Ed. \(opinion filed Jan. 5, 1920\); Manigault v. Ward \(C.C.\) 123 Fed. 707, 719, affirmed \[Manigault v. Springs, 199 U.S. 473, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 50 L. Ed. 274.\]\(#\)](#)

In the Mottley Case it was said:

"It is said, however, that, as the contract of Mottley and wife with the railroad company was originally valid, it cannot be supposed that Congress intended by the act of 1906 to annul or prevent its enforcement. But the purpose of Congress was to cut up by the roots every form of discrimination, favoritism, and inequality, except in the cases of certain excepted classes, to which Mottley and his wife did not belong, and which exceptions rested upon peculiar grounds."

In the Union Dry Goods Co. Case the court quotes with approval what was said in the Legal Tender Cases, that --

[**23] "Contracts must be understood as made in reference to the possible exercise of the rightful authority of the government, and no obligation of contract can extend to defeat the legitimate governmental authority."

[*153] In the McGuire Case it was held:

"The right to make contracts is subject to the exercise of the powers granted to Congress for the suitable conduct of matters of national concern."

McClurg v. Kingsland, 42 U.S. \(1 How.\) 202, 11 L. Ed. 102, cited by defendants, fails to sustain their contention; in fact, in the court's opinion, it is against it. One of the exceptions assigned as error in that case was the part of the charge of the trial judge that --

"The facts of the case which were not controverted brought it within the provisions of the seventh section of the act of Congress of March 3, 1839 (5 Stat. 354), by the unmolested, notorious use of the invention before the application for the patent."

When the patent was granted and the action instituted, the acts of February 21, 1793 (1 Stat. 318), and of April 17, 1800 (2 Stat. 37), were in force, but were repealed by section 21 of the act of July 4, 1836 (5 Stat. 125). The seventh section of the act [**24] of March 3, 1839, was in these words:

"That every person or corporation who has, or shall have, purchased or constructed any newly invented machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, prior to the application by the inventor or discoverer for a patent, shall be held to possess the right to use, and vend to others to be used, the specific machine, manufacture, or composition of matter so made or purchased, without liability therefor to the inventor, or any other person interested in such invention; and no patent shall be held to be invalid by reason of such purchase, sale, or use prior to the application for a patent as aforesaid, except on proof of abandonment of such invention to the public; or that such purchase, sale, or prior use has been for more than two years prior to such application for a patent."

The court, after holding that the repeal of the acts of 1793 and 1800 by the act of 1836 could not impair the right of property then existing in the patentee, sustained the construction by the trial judge of the seventh section of the act of 1839, and affirmed the judgment, saying:

"The object of this provision is evidently twofold: First, to protect the person who has [**25] used the thing patented, by having purchased, constructed, or made the machine, etc., to which the invention is applied, from any liability to the patentee or his assignee; second, to protect the rights, granted to the patentee, against any infringement by any other persons. This relieved him from the effects of former laws and their constructions by this court, unless in case of an abandonment of the invention, or a continued prior use for more than two years before the application for a patent, while it puts the person who has had such prior use on the same footing as if he had a special license from the inventor to use his invention, which, if given before the application for a patent, would justify the continued use after it issued without liability."

Choate v. Trapp, 224 U.S. 665, 32 Sup. Ct. 565, 56 L. Ed. 941, is another authority relied on by the defendants as conclusive. The part of the act of Congress (Curtis Act June 28, 1898, 30 Stat. 495, 507) which was repealed before the expiration of the time for which the lands of these Indians were exempted from all taxation (Act May 27, 1908, 35 Stat. 312), provided for allotting to them some of the lands owned by the tribe in [**26] severalty, and which, for the period of 21 years, were to be exempted from taxation. It was held that the Indians had [*154] a vested right in the exemptions for the period specified in the act, of which they could not be divested by later acts. But the reasons given by the court for the conclusion reached show conclusively its inapplicability to the case at bar. The court held that the Indians had an equitable interest in the lands which it was desired to have satisfied and extinguished. The Curtis Act was framed with a view to having these claims satisfactorily settled. The offer by Congress, to make the lands allotted nontaxable upon relinquishment by them to the government of some of their lands, was accepted by them, and this relinquishment was a part of the consideration for the exemption from taxation of the allotted lands. The acceptance of the terms, it was held, was a consideration sufficient to entitle the Indians to enforce whatever rights were conferred. In distinguishing other cases, the court, after referring to the facts in those cases, said:

"There was no consideration moving from one to the other. Such exemption was a mere bounty, valuable as long as [**27] the state chose to concede it; but, as tax exemptions are strictly construed, it could be withdrawn at any time the state saw fit. But in the government's dealings with the Indians the rule is exactly the contrary. The construction, instead of being strict, is liberal; doubtful expressions, instead of being resolved in favor of the United States, are to be resolved in favor of a weak and defenseless people, who are wards of the nation, and dependent wholly upon its protection and good faith. This rule of construction has been recognized, without exception, for more than 100 years and has been applied in tax cases."

Other cases cited by defendants are to the effect that a patentee may not be deprived of the exclusive right to the monopoly of his invention by infringers, including the government. Paper Bag Patent Case, 210 U.S. 405, 28 Sup.

Ct. 748, 52 L. Ed. 1122; Cramp & Sons v. Cutris Turbine Co., 246 U.S. 48, 38 Sup. Ct. 271, 62 L. Ed. 560; and other cases cited by defendants. No such issue is involved in this action. Counsel confound the right to the exclusive use of the invention with the right to make contracts for its use.

The conclusion reached is that, while Congress [**28] cannot deprive a patentee of the exclusive use of the patent, or reduce the time for which it is granted by existing law, without violating the Fifth Amendment, a patentee has no vested right in conditions of contracts for use, license, or lease of his patented invention, which Congress may not prohibit, if in its judgment they are injurious to the public welfare, though he may have possessed that right under the common or municipal law, as theretofore construed by the courts. A patentee may exclude all others from the use of it; he may withhold it entirely from the public, if he so desires; but, when he enters into contracts for the use of it, his contracts are subject to regulation by legislative act, if deemed necessary for the protection of the public, though subject to judicial review. But this review by the courts is limited to only one matter; i.e., is there any reasonably substantial ground for the regulation, or is it arbitrary and without any substantial reason? The wisdom of the act is beyond the power of the courts to question. No citation of authorities is required to these propositions, as they are firmly established and beyond question.

[*155] III. Is the [**29] Plea of Res Adjudicata Good?

The plea raises the issue whether the decree in the former action under the Sherman Act, between the same parties, owing to the fact that the provisions in the leases, now sought to have declared void as being in violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act, were in the complaint in that cause set out and relied on in part to obtain the relief asked, is res adjudicata in this action?

The opinions in that case are reported in 222 Fed. 349, and 247 U.S. 32, 38 Sup. Ct. 473, 62 L. Ed. 968. That action was instituted December 12, 1911, nearly three years before the enactment of the Clayton Act, and finally heard before, although decided by the trial court after, the Clayton Act had become a law. Judge Putnam, the presiding judge at the hearing of that case in the District Court, which was heard by three judges under the Expedition Act (Comp. St. §§ 8824, 8825), in referring to the Clayton Act, said (222 Fed. on page 361):

"In this connection we make no special reference, and have come to no conclusions, in regard to the effect on the pending case of the legislation of Congress enacted since this case was submitted to us, nor with reference to the question [**30] whether or not the rights of the parties affected by this legislation would require supplemental pleadings."

Judge Brown, another of the judges sitting in that case in the District Court, referring to the leases complained of in this action, said:

"It is also alleged that certain lease and license agreements constitute steps in carrying out such project."

Judge Dodge, another judge sitting in the District Court, in his concurring opinion in that case (222 Fed. 391), referring to the tying clauses in the leases, said:

"The complaints made regarding the leases embodying the clauses [the tying clauses] referred to are not directed against those pertaining to any particular kind or kinds of machines, as more objectionable than others. It is their entire combined effect which is attacked."

Mr. Justice McKenna, who delivered the opinion of the majority of the court, in the beginning of the opinion (247 U.S. 35, 38 Sup. Ct. 474, 62 L. Ed. 968) states the object of the bill to be:

"The charge of the bill is that defendants, not being satisfied with the monopoly of their patents and determined to extend it, conceived the idea of acquiring the ownership or control of all concerns [**31] engaged in the manufacture of all kinds of shoe machinery. This purpose was achieved, it is charged, and a monopoly acquired, and commerce, interstate and foreign, restrained by the union of competing companies and the acquisition of others; and that leases were exacted which completed and assured the control and monopoly thus acquired."

What the defendants understood to be the issue in that action is clearly and concisely stated by their counsel in their brief (the same counsel representing them in the case at bar), when the cause was heard in the Supreme Court on reargument. On page 11, under the caption "The Issues in the Present Case," they say:

[*156] "The issue presented in the District Court was whether the defendants formed a plan, as charged in the petition: (1) To acquire all concerns engaged in manufacturing shoe machinery, or (if the limitation insisted on by the United States be accepted) to acquire all concerns engaged in manufacturing certain specified classes of shoe machinery; and (2) thereupon to refuse to lease any essential machines, unless the shoe manufacturer took practically all his other machines from them; and, if they did form such a plan, whether [*32] or not such a plan was unlawful, and whether they carried out the plan and thereby acquired an unlawful monopoly."

But it is claimed on behalf of the defendants that, as in the complaint in that case, although an action under the Sherman Act, the tying clauses complained of in the instant case were specifically charged to be unlawful and put in issue, the decree in that action is res adjudicata.

A careful reading of the complaint and the opinions in that case convinces that they were set out solely for the purpose of maintaining the charge that by their use, in connection with the other acts charged, the defendants had conspired in restraint of trade or commerce and monopolized it. The government certainly could not have pleaded in its complaint the invalidity of these clauses in the leases under the Clayton Act, which was not a law at that time.

To obtain the relief in that case the complaint charged that the defendants, by combinations with other shoe machinery manufacturers and the acquisition of the business of competitors, had obtained a monopoly of the foreign trade and commerce in shoe machinery, in restraint of trade, in violation of the Sherman Act, and that they had [*33] succeeded in that object. Among the numerous alleged unlawful acts charged, which made it possible for them to achieve that object, was the insertion of these tying clauses in the leases. But this was only one of the acts charged, to accomplish the result complained of. This allegation was therefore collateral to the main issue, and could only have been incidentally considered by the court. In this action no attack is made on any of the acts complained of, and which were the basis of the former suit, except the tying clauses. Nor is the object of the suit the same. The only relief now asked is against those acts of the defendants which are claimed to be in violation of section 3 of the Clayton Act. In the complaint it is alleged:

"The bill does not complain of the leases as a whole, but only parts thereof, which are described in the bill as 'tying clauses' and 'discounts and rebates.'"

The object of the former suit was, as appears from the prayer for relief in the complaint, that --

"the defendants be declared a combination in restraint of interstate and foreign trade and commerce, and attempting, in combination and conspiracy with other persons and corporations, to monopolize [*34] and have monopolized part of the trade and commerce among the several states of the United States and with foreign nations, * * * and that each of them be dissolved and separated into such parts that no one of them will constitute a monopoly, or can become a monopoly, of the shoe machinery business," etc.

When a judgment or decree has the effect of res adjudicata in a later action between the same parties is well settled by numerous decisions of the English and American courts. The principle established [*157] in the Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 Howell's State Trials, 355, 538, 2 Smith's Lead. Cases, 424 (decided in 1776), has been generally followed by the American courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States. Leading cases of that court are Washington, A. & G. Co. v. Sickles, 65 U.S. (24 How.) 333, 16 L. Ed. 650; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 95 U.S. 351, 24 L. Ed. 195; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U.S. 254, 270, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464.

In the Sickles Case it was held:

HN11 [+] "The essential conditions under which the exception of res judicata becomes applicable are the identity of the thing demanded, the identity of the cause of the demand, and of the parties [*35] in the character in which they are litigants."

It is equally well settled that HN12[<sup>1</sup>] estoppel by judgment does not extend to matters which were only collaterally involved in the former litigation. Duchess of Kingston's Case, supra; Hopkins v. Lee, 19 U.S. \(6 Wheat.\) 109, 114, 5 L. Ed. 218; Gaines v. Hennen, 65 U.S. \(24 How.\) 553, 579, 16 L. Ed. 770; Bluefield S.S. Co. v. United Fruit Co., 243 Fed. 1, 11, 155 C.C.A. 531; Smith v. Town of Ontario \(C.C.\) 4 Fed. 386, 390; Cavanaugh v. Buehler, 120 Pa. 441, 14 Atl. 391; Belden v. State, 103 N.Y. 1, 8 N.E. 363; Waterhouse v. Levine, 182 Mass. 407, 65 N.E. 822. In the Duchess of Kingston's Case the court, after stating when a former judgment will sustain the plea, said:

"But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter, which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment."

In Hopkins v. Lee it was held:

"To points which came only collaterally under consideration, or were only incidentally under cognizance, or could only be inferred by arguing from the decree, it is admitted [**36] that the rule does not apply."

Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co., 206 U.S. 496, 506, 508, 27 Sup. Ct. 762, 51 L. Ed. 1155, is much in point. There was a plea of res adjudicata based on the decree affirmed in 202 U.S. 453, 26 Sup. Ct. 660, 50 L. Ed. 1102, 6 Ann. Cas. 253. The issues involved in that action are set out in 206 U.S. 506, 507, 27 Sup. Ct. 762, 51 L. Ed. 1155. The court, in disposing of the plea, said:

"But a decree must be read in the light of the issues involved in the pleadings and the relief sought, and we are of the opinion that the matters now litigated were not involved in or disposed of in the former case, and that, when properly construed, the decree does not finally dispose of the right of the city to regulate rates under a law passed after the contract went into effect and long after the bill was filed in the case."

This was reaffirmed in Vicksburg v. Henson, 231 U.S. 259, 273, 34 Sup. Ct. 95, 100 \(58 L. Ed. 209\), where it was said:

"The nature and extent of the former decree is not to be determined by seizing upon isolated parts of it, or passages in the opinion considering the rights of the parties, but upon an examination of the issues made and [**37] intended to be submitted, and what the decree was really designed to accomplish. We cannot agree with the court below, or with the majority of the Circuit [<sup>158</sup>] Court of Appeals, that the effect of the former adjudication was to preclude the rights of the parties in the present controversy."

All that was and could be determined on the pleadings in the former action under the Sherman Act, was that, applying the rule laid down in the Standard Oil Co. Case, 221 U.S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734, and American Tobacco Co. Case, 221 U.S. 106, 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 55 L. Ed. 663, for the construction of the Sherman Act, the evidence failed to sustain the charge that the Shoe Machinery Company had violated that act, and therefore the alleged combination should not be dissolved.

The plea cannot be sustained.

IV. Were the Defendants, in Making the Leases Attacked, Engaged in Interstate Commerce?

That leases may constitute interstate commerce was determined by this court on the motion to dismiss the complaint. 234 Fed. 127, 143, 144. Of course, this does not apply to leases of machines in the state of Massachusetts, when the machines [**38] were made and delivered in that state. Witherell & Dobbins Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Co. (First Circuit, opinion filed June 18, 1919, not published, as motion for rehearing granted). As to leases made with manufacturers in states other than the state of Massachusetts, the claim of defendants that they are not in the course of interstate trade is sought to be sustained upon the ground that all leases, made prior to the enactment of the Clayton Act, were only presented to the lessee for signature and executed by him after the machines had been set up and were in operation, regardless of the fact from what state the defendants shipped them. The custom then prevailing was: The shoe manufacturer would notify the local representative of the defendants that he desired to lease certain machines, whereupon a blank printed order, prepared and furnished by the defendants, would be handed to him. He would then insert in a blank left for that purpose the kind of machine or machines he desired and sign the application. The order is:

"Please deliver to the undersigned, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter stated, for use in the factory of the undersigned at (insert St. Louis, Mo., or [**39] wherever the factory is located) the machines," etc.

It also contains an obligation that he will hold the machines at his sole risk from injury, loss, or destruction by fire or otherwise, pay all taxes assessed and levied on them, will render full and accurate reports of the use of the machines, pay the rental and royalty established by the defendants, and pay all shipping and transportation charges, both to and from the factory of the Machinery Company. The order would then be sent to the home office of the defendant Maine company in the state of Massachusetts, and, if accepted, the machines would be shipped from Massachusetts, consigned to itself. Upon their arrival at the destination, they would be taken from the carrier by defendants' agent and installed in the shoe factory, and, when set up and put in operation, the lease would be executed. This, it is claimed, makes the transaction intrastate, and therefore not subject [*159] to the Clayton Act. The court is unable to sustain this contention, as it has been uniformly held that acts of this nature constitute interstate commerce. Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U.S. 289, 14 Sup. Ct. 829, 38 L. Ed. 719; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U.S. 622, 23 Sup. Ct. 229, 47 L. Ed. 336; Rearick v. Pennsylvania, 203 U.S. 507, 27 Sup. Ct. 159, 51 L. Ed. 295; Dozier v. Alabama, 218 U.S. 124, 30 Sup. Ct. 649, 54 L. Ed. 965, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 264; Crenshaw v. Arkansas, 227 U.S. 389, 33 Sup. Ct. 294, 57 L. Ed. 565; Western Oil Refining Co. v. Lipscomb, 244 U.S. 346, 37 Sup. Ct. 623, 61 L. Ed. 1181.

The cases cited and relied on by the defendants are clearly inapplicable. Banker Bros. v. Pennsylvania, 222 U.S. 210, 32 Sup. Ct. 38, 56 L. Ed. 168, was an action involving the right of the state to tax the defendants on sales of automobiles made in Pittsburgh, Pa. The facts were that the defendants kept no machiens in stock, but would obtain them from the manufacturers in another state. A purchaser would order the machine from the defendants in Pennsylvania; the order being addressed to the defendants, the manufacturer's name (the Pierce Company) not appearing on the order. The defendants would forward the order to the Pierce Company, who would ship it to the defendants, at Pittsburgh, Pa., with draft on defendants attached to the bill of lading, less the commission. On paying the draft, the Banker Bros. would take [*41] up the bill of lading, receive the car from the carrier, and then deliver it to the buyer on his paying the balance of the purchase money. It was held that the Banker Bros. had the title and the shipment had become at rest in the state of Pennsylvania, though shipped in interstate commerce, and therefore subject to the tax imposed by the state. The court said:

"This is one of the common cases in which parties find it to their interest to occupy the position of vendor and vendee for some purposes under a contract containing terms which, for the purpose of restricting sales and securing payment, come near to creating the relation of principal and agent. But as between Banker Bros. Company and the Pittsburgh purchaser, there can be no doubt that it occupied the position of vendor. As such it was bound by its contract to him and under the duty of paying to the state a tax on the sale. The name of the Pierce Company was not mentioned in the order signed by the purchaser. Had there been a breach of its terms, he would have had a cause of action against the Banker Bros. Company, with whom alone he dealt. If he had failed to complete the purchase, the Pierce Company would have no [*42] right to sue him on the contract."

In Browning v. Waycross, 233 U.S. 16, 34 Sup. Ct. 578, 58 L. Ed. 828, it was held that a city or state may impose an occupation tax on lightning rod agents, not for taking orders to be filled in another state and delivered in the state where the order was taken, but "on persons engaged in putting up or erecting lightning rods." In Bacon v. Illinois, 227 U.S. 504, 33 Sup. Ct. 299, 57 L. Ed. 615, what the court held was:

"Property brought from another state, and withdrawn from the carrier, and held by the owner with full power of disposition, becomes subject to the local taxing power, notwithstanding the owner may intend to ultimately forward it to" another state.

[*160] Mr. Justice Hughes, who delivered the opinion of the court, said:

"The purpose of the withdrawal did not alter the fact that it had ceased to be transported and had been placed in his hands. He had the privilege of continuing the transportation under the shipping contracts, but of this he might avail himself or not, as he chose. He might sell the grain in Illinois, or forward it, as he saw fit. It was in his possession, with the control of absolute ownership. He intended [**43] to forward the grain after it had been inspected, graded, etc.; but this intention, while the grain remained in his keeping and before it had been actually committed to the carriers for transportation, did not make it immune from local taxation. He had established a local facility in Chicago for his own benefit, and while, through its employment, the grain was there at rest, there was no reason why it should not be included with his other property within the state in an assessment for taxation, which was made in the usual way, without discrimination."

Singer Sewing Machine Co. v. Brickell, 233 U.S. 304, 34 Sup. Ct. 493, 58 L. Ed. 974, is clearly against defendants' contention, reaffirming Crenshaw v. Arkansas, 227 U.S. 389, 33 Sup. Ct. 294, 57 L. Ed. 565. Without reviewing the other authorities cited, it is sufficient to say that none is applicable to the facts in the instant case.

The mode of operation since the enactment of the Clayton Act differs from that pursued theretofore. The blank forms furnished by the defendants to shoe manufacturers desiring to lease machines from them are headed: "Order and Temporary Loan Agreement." The applicant for the lease applies to the company, [**44] by inserting in a blank left for that purpose in the order blank furnished by the defendants, the machines wanted. The application contains all the conditions upon which the machines are to be leased, and is signed by the applicant. Below the signature of the applicant is the following:

"We accept your order as above, and are shipping to you the machines designated in the above schedule of machines, in accordance with and subject to the foregoing terms and conditions.

"[Signed] United Shoe Machinery Company, By ."

This would indicate that the machines are shipped from the state of Massachusetts direct to the shoe manufacturer; but the evidence shows that the machines are not consigned to the applicant, but are shipped in the same manner as under the former leases, and the acceptance of the application is only delivered, when they are set up and ready for operation. Construing the leases as they are printed they are clearly contracts in commerce among the states. Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U.S. 691, 702, 26 L. Ed. 238, and authorities cited supra.

But the evidence also established that when the machines reach the place of destination they are not stored or held [**45] subject to the defendants' order or disposal, but are immediately taken to the applicant's factory and there installed. Whether the installation is a part of the interstate transaction is not in issue in this action but see Swift v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 395, 396, 398, 25 Sup. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274, 301, 28 Sup. Ct. 301, 52 L. Ed. 488, 13 Ann. Cas. 815; Boyle v. United States, 259 Fed. 803, 806, C.C.A. .

The conclusion of the court is that the leases, except when made with manufacturers located in the state of Massachusetts and [*161] delivered there, are in commerce or trade among the states. The exception also applies to machines taken from one lessee and delivered to another in the same state, which the evidence shows is occasionally done, when a lessee refuses a machine and another manufacturer in that city or state leases it.

V. The Distinction Between the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

The first and second sections of the Sherman Act were construed by Mr. Chief Justice White in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734. Without quoting [**46] from the opinion, reference is made to what is said in that opinion on pages 50, 51, 59, 60, 62-64 of 221 U.S., on pages 512, 515-517 of 31 Sup. Ct. (55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. [N.S.] 834), Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734). The same construction was given to that act in United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 179, 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 55 L. Ed. 663. In Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 376, 33 Sup. Ct. 780, 781 (57 L. Ed. 1232) referring to these cases, it is said:

"Those cases may be taken to have established that only such contracts and combinations are within the act as, by reason of intent or the inherent nature of the contemplated acts, prejudice the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade."

Again in United States v. Colgate Co., 250 U.S. 300, 39 Sup. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, it is said:

"The purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit monopolies, contracts, and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or wish to engage, in trade and commerce -- in a word, the right of freedom to trade."

HN13 [↑] There is nothing in the Sherman Act, or any other act of Congress, [**47] making the acts enumerated in section 3 of the Clayton Act unlawful, "where the effect" of them "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Comp. St. § 8820) makes unlawful "contract * * * in restraint of trade or commerce," and as construed by the Supreme Court in the above-cited cases, they mean "contracts which unduly restrain trade and commerce." This language differs materially from the language used in section 3 of the Clayton Act. That contracts or leases may substantially lessen competition was not sufficient to make them unlawful under the Sherman Act, if not unduly or oppressively enforced, as was held in the cases hereinbefore cited.

HN14 [↑] The second section of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of such trade, while the Clayton Act makes every contract, etc., which "tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce," unlawful.

The bill for the Clayton Act was introduced in Congress some time after the opinions in the Standard Oil Company and American Tobacco Company Cases had been announced, and Congress, therefore, was familiar with the [**48] construction of the Sherman Act by the Supreme Court. As stated in the former opinion of this court (234 Fed. 127):

[*162] "Evidently Congress was not satisfied to only prohibit actual lessening of competition, or monopolizing, but to make it unlawful for any person to do those acts, which may put it in his power to do so."

The same conclusion was reached by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, in Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane & Houston Co., 259 Fed. 793, 796, C.C.A. . The reports of the House and Senate Committees, when reporting the act to their respective bodies, show that the object of this section of the act was to make unlawful acts not included in the Sherman Act. In the report of the Senate committee the purpose of this section is stated to be:

"Briefly stated, the bill, in its treatment of unlawful restraints and monopolies, seeks to prohibit and make unlawful certain trade practices which, as a rule, singly and in themselves, are not covered by the act of July 2, 1890, or other existing anti-trust acts, and thus, by making these practices illegal, to arrest the creation of trusts, conspiracies, and monopolies in their incipiency and [**49] before consummation."

If it was not intended to change the law from what it was under the then existing act, its enactment was meaningless and a vain thing, a presumption courts will not indulge in when construing legislative acts. Wisconsin Central R.R. v. United States, 164 U.S. 190, 202, 17 Sup. Ct. 45, 41 L. Ed. 399.

HN15 [↑] The Clayton Act, as the court construes it, is intended as a preventive act, to arrest the creation of trusts, etc., in their incipiency and before consummation, as expressed in the President's message of January 20, 1914, urging the enactment of supplemental anti-trust legislation, and the report of the Senate Committee on the bill, while the Sherman Act, as construed, only makes unlawful, "acts, contracts and combinations, which unduly or injuriously restrain competition, or unduly or injuriously create monopolies in trade." Under that act it has been held by the Supreme Court that --

"applying the rule of reason, * * * the words 'restraint of trade' at common law and in the law of this country at the time of the adoption of the Anti-Trust Act only embraced acts or contracts or agreements or combinations which operated to the prejudice of the public interests [**50] by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the due course of trade, or which, either because of their inherent nature or effect, or because of the evident purpose of the acts, etc., injuriously restrain trade, that the words as used in the statute were designed to have and did have but a like significance." 221 U.S. 179, 31 Sup. Ct. 648, 55 L. Ed. 663.

That the acts, etc., if not unduly or injuriously exercised, may tend to have that effect, was not sufficient to make them violations of the Sherman act; or, in other words, a violation of that act depended on the manner in which it was exercised, whether unduly and injuriously or nonprejudicially.

It is therefore unnecessary to determine whether the defendants, by the tying clauses and the discounts and rebates, have succeeded in unduly monopolizing or attempted to monopolize unduly any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or have unduly restrained competition in that part of commerce. The question to be decided is: Do the clauses complained of, or any of them, put it in their power, or have the effect, or tend, if enforced, as the defendants [*163] would have the right to do, if they are not [**51] unlawful under the Clayton Act -- and that is their intention -- "to substantially lessen competition" or "establish a monopoly in trade"?

In the opinion of the court there can be no doubt that the enforcement of some of the provisions hereinafter mentioned will have that effect. If shoe manufacturers are not permitted to use machines manufactured by competitors without being penalized, such prohibition tends to lessen competition, and eventually will result in giving the defendants a monopoly in that part of trade or commerce. Who will invest the millions necessary to establish such manufacturing plants, and the evidence convinces that it will require these large sums to establish them, when the produce cannot be sold, or at best can find but a very limited market. It is true, there are some competitors; but they are few, and they manufacture only some of the machines required. Some have been obliged to go out of business for lack of trade, caused by these tying clauses, and eventually all will have to discontinue, if shoe manufacturers are prevented from purchasing, leasing, or using their machines, by reason of a strict enforcement of the tying clauses and the rebates and [**52] discounts, or those which, in the opinion of the court, are in violation of the Clayton Act. To what extent the defendants had obtained control of the business of shoe machinery at the time the former action was instituted is shown by the tabulation made by Mr. Justice Clarke in his dissenting opinion (247 U.S. 89, 38 Sup. Ct. 473, 62 L. Ed. 968). At the present time their control is much greater as will be seen from the following statement made from the evidence:

	By Defendants	By All
	Others.
Clicking machines	5,595	17
Eyeleting machines	4,431	659
Pulling-over machines	2,441
Lasting machines	8,499	48
Standard screw machines	280
Pegging machines	23	1
Tacking machines	7,937	11
McKay sewing machines	711	326
Welt sewing machines	2,609	135
Outsole stitching machines	2,906	689
Loose nailing machines	2,026	6
Heeling machines	2,086	110
Slugging machines	1,718	12

From this it is established that the defendants now control more than 95 per cent. of the entire business of shoe machinery in the United States.

VI. Choice of Independent or Unrestricted Leases.

It is next claimed that lessees have the choice of independent or [**53] unrestricted leases, which do not contain the tying clauses complained of. But lessees under these leases, in addition to the fact that lessees are not relieved of royalties and are not entitled to rebates on some of the leased machines and material, as lessees under the restricted leases, nor to the benefit of the same discounts, are also required [*164] to make initial payments on each machine leased. Many of these initial payments are over 100 per cent. greater than the payments required under the restricted leases. The schedule of these initial payments, furnished the court by counsel for the defendants, shows that the average increase is about 50 per cent., although on some machines it is over 200 per cent., while on others it is less than 50 per cent., thereby reducing the average to that percentage.

In addition, lessees under the unrestricted leases are required to make the payments when the machines are furnished, while under the restricted leases they are not required to make payments until the expiration of the leases and the return of the machines. The amounts required to be paid by such lessees amount to tens of thousands of dollars, and for some factories hundreds [**54] of thousands. The statement furnished the court by counsel for defendants shows that the initial payments for a complete group of machines necessary to operate a factory amount to $9,810 for every 1,000 pairs of shoes to be made daily. Many factories manufacture over 10,000 pairs daily. The Plant Shoe Company has in one factory a capacity of 12,000 pairs daily; another, the International Shoe Company, of 52,000 pairs daily, which would require over a half million dollars as initial payments. From this it will be readily seen that to lease all the machines on the initial payment or unrestricted plan would require an outlay which is practically prohibitive, and of course no manufacturer ever chooses the unrestricted leases.

The choice is limited to paying, not only royalties of which, under the restricted leases, the lessee is to some extent relieved, but large sums as initial payments. The loss of the use of the money required for the initial payments for a period of 17 years, the life of the leases, is an item of no small consideration, as the interest would exceed by far the principal, if calculated at 6 per cent. annually compounded. This cannot be termed "freedom of choice." [**55] United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 39 Sup. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, relied on by the defendants is clearly inapplicable to this case. See United States v. A. Schrader's Son (opinion filed March 1, 1920) 251 U.S. 85, 40 Sup. Ct. 251, 64 L. Ed. .

VII. Wholesale and Group Rates.

It is claimed that the lower rates offered to manufacturers, who lease all machines used by them from the defendants, and the discounts allowed to them, are wholesale rates, permissible by section 2 of the Clayton Act (Comp. St. § 8835b). If it be assumed that section 2 applies to section 3, which latter is the only section in controversy in this action, this claim would still be untenable. There are no wholesale or retail transactions. Each department, it is claimed by the defendants, is separate and distinct from the others. But, even if this claim were true, although denied by the plaintiff, still the provision in the leases set out in Exhibit 8 to the complaint:

"But if any breach or default shall be made in the observance of any one or more of the conditions herein contained, or contained in any other lease or license agreement, * * * the lessor shall have the right by notice [**56] in [*165] writing to the lessee to terminate forthwith any and all leases or licenses * * * then in force between the lessor and lessee" applies to all leased machines, and not only to those in one department.

In the opinion of the court, section 2 of the act is limited to sales, and not leases, and therefore does not apply to any of the acts prohibited by section 3.

But it is claimed that it is an economic advantage to shoe manufacturers to operate defendants' machines in teams. The preponderance of the evidence tends to support this contention. But if manufacturers are convinced that this is true, they will lease them in teams or groups without the restrictions in the leases. On the other hand, if any of them believe that they can manufacture more economically and obtain the same or better results at less expense by the use of competitors' machines, although mistakenly, these negative covenants, with the penalties attached, tend to deprive them of freedom of choice, based on their own judgment. It is hardly to be supposed that shoe manufacturers are less anxious to use the best and most economical machines than other manufacturers, or that they will use machines [**57] which will result in inferior products and less profitable results. Quoting from the opinion of Mr. Justice McKenna in the former case, referring to patents (247 U.S. 65, 38 Sup. Ct. 485, 62 L. Ed. 968):

"If the world buy it or use it, the world will do so upon a voluntary judgment of its utility, demonstrated, it may be, at great cost to the patentee. If its price is too high, whether in dollars or conditions, the world will refuse it; if it be worth the price, whether of dollars or conditions, the world will seek it."

To enable manufacturers to use their own judgment, and exercise their choice based on that judgment, was beyond doubt one reason for the enactment of section 3 of the Clayton Act.

VIII. Clauses Never Enforced.

That no leases of machines have ever been declared forfeited by defendants for a breach of any of these clauses is not conclusive that they never will be. If it is not intended to enforce them, why insert them? The fact that they are inserted places it in their power, whenever they see proper to do so, and that fact is sufficient to deter lessees from violating them, as is fully established by the evidence. Although the forfeiture clauses have never [**58] been enforced, except in some few instances, and then for good cause, lessees, who have violated them, have had their attention called to these provisions in the leases, which in itself was in the nature of a threat to enforce them, if the violations are continued; at least, it was so understood by them. Some have been penalized by the refusal of the defendants to lease them additional machines, except on the initial payment plan. Full royalties have been exacted for shoes made in part on machines other than those leased from defendants, as if wholly made on their leased machines. Witherell & Dobbins Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., supra, was an action to recover such royalties. The evidence also shows a number of other instances of such demands by defendants.

[*166] For these reasons this claim cannot be sustained in an action under the Clayton Act, although in a proceeding under the Sherman Act the conclusion may be otherwise.

IX. Leases Since the Clayton Act.

The leases required to be executed since the enactment of the Clayton Act do not contain the tying clauses complained of, but they are only "temporary leases," as is printed in large letters at the top of [**59] every lease made by the defendants since then. These leases contain the following clause:

"At any time prior to the redelivery by the licensee to the United Company as hereinafter provided of all of said machinery, the United Company may present to the licensee a lease and license agreement setting forth the terms and conditions upon which the United Company is willing that the said machinery may continue to be held and used by the licensee, and within a period of ten (10) days after such presentation the licensee shall either (a) execute such agreement in duplicate, and deliver the same to the United Company, making such payment, if any, as may be provided by such new agreement to be made upon the execution thereof, or (b) within said period of ten (10) days, pay to the United Company in respect to each machine the amount set opposite the name thereof in said column II, and within twenty (20) days thereafter surrender and redeliver the said machines to the United Company as hereinafter provided, whereupon the lease thereof shall terminate."

In addition to this provision in the leases, lessees are required to enter into an "additional agreement," which, after reciting the pendency [**60] of this action, contains the following provision:

"Now, therefore, in addition to and independently of all agreements and obligations set forth in said order and temporary loan agreement, the licensee hereby agrees that, in case his said order shall be accepted and the machines referred to in said order and temporary agreement be supplied to the licensee, the United Company shall have the right at any time or times thereafter to present to the licensee a new or additional agreement or agreements for execution by the licensee, establishing the terms and conditions upon which said machines shall thereafter be held, used and paid for by him, and containing such provisions, in substitution for and in addition to those set forth in the attached order and temporary loan agreement, as the United Company may decide upon as necessary or desirable, for the proper protection of its property, interests, and rights, and the assurance to it of a proper return of the use of its property during the further continuance of the use thereof by the licensees; and, if not, when such new and additional agreement or agreements are presented, the licensee agrees that within five days after the presentation [**61] thereof he will either execute the same (in which case the machinery referred to in the order and temporary loan agreement hereto attached shall thereafter be held by the licensee in accordance with the terms of said new agreement or agreements), or if he does not so execute will within said period of five days exercise his right as provided in article 13 of said order and temporary loan agreement to terminate the same on 30 days' notice, and will return the machinery therein named within said 30 days, all as provided in said article 13, and in such case failure so to exercise his right of terminating said order and temporary loan agreement, or to return the machines therein referred to, shall constitute a default for which, under the provisions of article 14 of said order and temporary loan agreement, the United Company shall be entitled to exercise its right of terminating the same as therein provided."

This establishes beyond question that these leases are intended for temporary use, to avoid the prohibitions of section 3 of the Clayton Act, pending the litigation affecting their legality. But, should the contention [*167] of the defendants be sustained that these conditions [**62] are not unlawful, the right reserved would no doubt be promptly exercised, and new leases containing these clauses demanded; at least, the power to do so is reserved. To prevent this a court of equity is justified in extending its protecting arm, so far as, in its opinion, any of the clauses are unlawful under this statute.

X. Invalidity of Clauses.

The clauses set out in Exhibits 2 and 7 to the complaint are not obnoxious, for reasons stated in the former opinion. 234 Fed. 127.

Exhibit 4 contains two distinct covenants. The first is:

"The lessee shall obtain from the lessor exclusively, and shall pay therefor at the regular prices from time to time established by the lessor, all duplicate parts, extras, mechanisms, and devices of every kind needed or used in operating, repairing, or renewing the leased machinery, and the same shall form part of the leased machinery, and the lessee shall not otherwise make or allow to be made any addition, subtraction, or alteration to, from, or in the leased machinery without the consent in writing of the lessor, nor interfere with the proper operation of the same."

In the opinion of the court there is nothing unreasonable in this provision. [**63] The evidence shows that most, if not all, parts of these machines, are very delicate, and unless perfectly adjusted will, if not entirely, at least very seriously, prevent the proper operations of the machine, and in some instances prove ruinous, necessitating costly repairs, thus depriving the lessee of a full output, and the lessor of royalties. They may also cause dissatisfaction with the machines, owing to the decreased and unsatisfactory output. The parts furnished by the defendants are all standardized and fit perfectly, so that by replacing broken or worn-out parts with the parts made by defendants, the machines will perform the work in as satisfactory manner as a new machine. As testified by a witness:

"Many of the machines are necessarily of a very complicated nature. Many of them have very many moving parts, which must be so made, arranged, correlated, and adjusted that they will not interfere with each other in the operation of the machine. Many of the machines operate at very high speed, so that the size of the parts and the adjustments must be accurate to the finest degree. The parts must be made of proper materials, with proper attention to temper, hardness, wearing [**64] qualities, as well as made with the utmost accuracy as to fit. The parts, when placed in the machine, become constituent parts of the machine itself, which is the United Company's own property."

The evidence also establishes that all repairs of leased machines are made by the defendants' skilled mechanics, which, of course, would only be done if the parts to be replaced are purchased from them.

The second part of this clause is:

"The lessee shall also purchase from the lessor exclusively, at the prices from time to time established by the lessor, all supplies, including string nail, tack strips, and other fastening material used in connection with the leased machinery."

This part is objectionable as tending to substantially lessen competition and create a monopoly in these articles. It is true the evidence establishes that the prices charged for them by defendants are reasonable; [*168] that they have not been advanced in years, not even since the outbreak of the European War, although the prices of similar articles, manufactured by competitors, have been advanced materially since then; and that at the present time the defendants offer them at lower prices than any of [**65] their competitors in that line. But by this part of the clause they reserve the right to raise the prices at any time, and the lessees would be compelled by the terms of the leases to purchase them from the defendants "at the prices from time to time established by the lessor." This places it in the power of the lessor to substantially lessen competition in these lines of trade, and therefore is obnoxious to the statute. As said in Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed. 599, 620, 138 C.C.A. 123, 144:

"But, though but one competitor can make a sale, all competitors can enjoy the free opportunity of approaching each and every prospective purchaser on equal terms, with the chance of making a sale, if he can persuade him to buy. For one competitor to exclude all, or substantially all, other competitors from such opportunity -- i.e., drive them from the field of freely offering their goods, so as to have that field to himself -- is to monopolize, according to the legal and accurate sense of the word."

This also applies to the condition in Exhibit 12.

The clause set out in Exhibit 8, so far as it relates to the 17-year term of the leases, is not prohibited by the statute, nor is there [**66] any reason for the courts to interfere with the freedom of contract by the parties, in the absence of a statute forbidding it, assuming that the Legislature has that power, which it is unnecessary to determine in this action.

Aside from this, the leases contain a provision that --

"The lessee or lessor may terminate the contract at any time upon 60 days' notice to the other party."

The part of this clause which gives the lessor the right to terminate the lease for the breach of any of the conditions contained in the lease is also proper, provided the conditions found by the court to be unlawful are eliminated. There is no reason why a lessor may not stipulate for the forfeiture of a lease for a breach of lawful conditions. There are few leases made which do not contain such a provision. As the decree in this cause will enjoin the enforcement of the provisions found to be unlawful, and also from inserting them in new leases, this clause will be unobjectionable. The other provisions in that exhibit, relating to forfeitures of leases, are clearly in violation of the statute.

The provisions in Exhibit 10 are unobjectionable, except the proviso, which is in the nature of [**67] a rebate. This proviso and the last clause, beginning with the words, "In respect to all footwear," should be eliminated, as being objectionable to that HN16 part of section 3 of the act which makes unlawful to allow --

"a discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller." Commonwealth v. Strauss, 191 Mass. 545, 78 N.E. 136, 11 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 968, 6 Ann. Cas. 842.

[*169] The part of the clause set out in Exhibit 9 to the complaint, which states the schedule of payments for shoes welted "in whole or in part, or the soles of which shall have been in whole or in part attached to welts by the use of any welting or stitching or sewing machinery * * * in respect to each pair of 'turned' boots, shoes, or other footwear, or portions thereof, manufactured or prepared by or for the lessee, the soles of which shall have been sewed or attached to their uppers in whole or in part by the use of any sewing or stitching machinery," can only be sustained [**68] after striking out the words "in whole or in part" and the word "any," wherever they occur in this clause, as in the opinion of the court they are in violation of the statute.

Counsel for defendants claimed that the object of these provisions is to enable them to collect from the lessors all the royalties to which they are entitled, and without them dishonest lessees may defraud them by claiming that other machines were used for part of the manufacture. But unlawful conditions may not be imposed to prevent probable unlawful or fraudulent acts. The law is ample to protect parties against them, without resorting to unlawful means.

That part of the clause set out in Exhibit 11 to the complaint, which requires the payments set out in the schedule of payments, "whether performed by the machinery of the United Company or by other machines," is unlawful, and should be eliminated.

This also applies to the rebate provided in that exhibit as an exception.

The conditions set out in Exhibit 1, 3, 5, and 6 are all in violation of the statute, and therefore should be enjoined.

XI. Is Section 3 of the Clayton Act to be Given a Retrospective Construction, so as to Effect Leases and Contracts Entered into Before Its Enactment?

[**69] That Congress may enact a statute having a retrospective effect is undoubted, but the question is, has it done so? The general rule is well established that HN17 a legislative act will not be construed as retroactive or retrospective, unless the language clearly shows that this was the intention of the lawmakers, and that no other construction will make the act effective. United States v. Heth, 7 U.S. \(3 Cranch\) 399, 413, 2 L. Ed. 479; Twenty Per Cent. Cases, 87 U.S. \(20 Wall.\) 179, 187, 22 L. Ed. 339; Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U.S. 536, 559, 5 Sup. Ct. 255, 28 L. Ed. 770; United States v. Burr, 159 U.S. 78, 15 Sup. Ct. 1002, 40 L. Ed. 82; United States v. American Sugar Co., 202 U.S. 563, 573, 26 Sup. Ct. 717, 50 L. Ed. 1149; Union Pacific R.R. v. Laramie Stock Yards, 231 U.S. 190, 199, 34 Sup. Ct. 101, 58 L. Ed. 179; Holt v. Henley, 232 U.S. 637, 34 Sup. Ct. 459, 58 L. Ed. 767; Waugh v. Mississippi University, 237 U.S. 589, 595, 35 Sup. Ct. 720, 59 L. Ed. 1131. In the Heth Case the court said:

"Words in a statute ought not be have a retrospective operation, unless they are so clear, strong, and imperative that no other meaning can [**70] be annexed to them, or unless the intention of the Legislature cannot otherwise be satisfied."

[*170] This is quoted and followed in Chew Heong v. United States, supra; the court adding:

"And such is the settled doctrine of this court."

Even if an act is remedial, the same rule of construction will be adopted, although such acts are always liberally construed. Winfree v. Northern Pacific Ry., 173 Fed. 65, 97 C.C.A. 392, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 841, affirmed 227 U.S. 296, 301, 33 Sup. Ct. 273, 57 L. Ed. 518. If the statute, by giving it a retrospective construction, will deprive one of a contractual right or interfere with antecedent rights, this rule of strict construction will never be departed from. Twenty Per Cent. Cases, supra; Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U.S. 536, 559, 5 Sup. Ct. 255, 28 L. Ed. 770; City Railway v. Citizens' street R.R., 166 U.S. 557, 565, 17 Sup. Ct. 653, 41 L. Ed. 1114; Knights Templar Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 187 U.S. 197, 205, 23 Sup. Ct. 108, 47 L. Ed. 139; Union Pacific R.R. v. Laramie Stockyards, 231 U.S. 190, 199, 34 Sup. Ct. 101, 58 L. Ed. 179; Atoka Coal Mining Co. v. Adams, 104 Fed. 471, 473, 43 C.C.A. 651. The reasoning of the court in this [**71] case was adopted in Southwestern Coal Co. v. McBride, 185 U.S. 499, 503, 22 Sup. Ct. 763, 46 L. Ed. 1010, and Jaedicke v. United States, 85 Fed. 372, 375, 29 C.C.A. 199.

Does the language of section 3 of the Clayton Act require a retroactive construction under these well-established rules of law? Four national courts of high standing, one of them a Circuit Court of Appeals, have held that this section should be given the retrospective construction claimed on behalf of the government. Elliott Machine Co. v. Center \(D.C.\) 227 Fed. 124, decided by Judge Sessions. It was so construed by Judge Dyer in the instant case, when the application for a temporary injunction was heard by him. 227 Fed. 507. In Motion Pictures Patent Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co. the same conclusion was reached at nisi prius, and this ruling was expressly affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. 235 Fed. 398, 148 C.C.A. 660. This case was affirmed by the Supreme Court, without passing upon this question, or the effect of the Clayton Act \(243 U.S. 502, 37 Sup. Ct. 416, 61 L. Ed. 871\), L.R.A. 1917E, 1187, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 959), the court saying:

"Our conclusion renders it unnecessary [**72] to make the application of the statute [referring to the Clayton Act] to the case at bar which the Circuit Court of Appeals made of it, but it must be accepted by us as a most persuasive expression of the public policy of our country with respect to the question before us."

In Elliott Machine Co. v. Center it was unnecessary to pass on that question, and what is there said may well be treated as obiter, and but for the other authorities cited would be so treated. The court bases this conclusion on the fact that the motion of defendants to dismiss was denied on the ground that to sustain it would result in injustice to the plaintiff, regardless of the provisions in section 3 of the Clayton Act, and it was unnecessary to determine the effect of the Clayton Act.

[*171] The authorities relied on by the learned judges in all these cases are Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U.S. 56, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681; Louisville & Nashville R.R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U.S. 467, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 671, and kindred cases arising under the Interstate Commerce Act; Philadelphia, etc., R.R. v. Schubert, 224 U.S. 603, 32 Sup. Ct. 589, 56 L. Ed 911, and [**73] others arising under the Employers' Liability Act; and Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136, involving the Sherman Act. In the last-cited case no question of retrospective construction of the act was involved. The unlawful combinations charged by the government in that action were begun on December 28, 1894, more than four years after the passage of the Sherman Act. It is therefore inapplicable to this issue.

A comparison of the provisions of those acts with that now under consideration will show how materially the language in the Clayton Act differs from that employed in those acts. Section 5 of the Employers' Liability Act (Comp. St. § 8661), the section construed in the Schubert Case, declares:

"Any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void."

The Supreme Court, construing this provision of the act, held the language to be sufficiently comprehensive to nullify all such contracts, saying:

"But that the provisions of section 5 were intended to apply as well [**74] to existing as to future contracts and regulations of the described character cannot be doubted. The words, 'the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act,' do not refer simply to an actual intent of the parties to circumvent the statute. The 'purpose or intent' of the contracts and regulations, within the meaning of the section, is to be found in their necessary operation and effect in defeating the liability which the statute was designed to enforce. Only by such general application could the statute accomplish the object which it is plain that Congress had in view."

Section 3 of the Clayton Act does not declare "any contracts and leases [prohibited by that section] to be void," but that "it shall be unlawful for any person," etc., "to make such contracts," etc. HN18 Ordinarily the word "shall" indicates that the act is to be prospective, and not retrospective. In United States v. Burr, 159 U.S. 78, 87, 15 Sup. Ct. 1002, 1006 \(40 L. Ed. 82\), the court, in construing a tariff act, said:

"The language of section 1 was that on and after the 1st of August there shall be levied, and of the second [**75] section, that on and after the 1st day of August certain enumerated articles, when imported, shall be exempt from duty. In our judgment, the word 'shall' spoke for the future, and was not intended to apply to transactions completed when the act became a law."

In the Armour Packing Company Case Act March 2, 1889, c. 382 (25 Stat. 857) was under consideration. That act makes it unlawful "to charge, demand, collect, or receive * * * a greater or less compensation," [*172] etc., "than is specified in the schedule filed" with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and then in force. The court said:

"There is no provision excepting special contracts from the operation of the law. One rate is to be charged, and that the one fixed and published in the manner pointed out in the statute, and subject to change in the only way open by the statute. There is no provision for the filing of contracts with shippers, and no method of making them public defined in the statute. If the rates are subject to secret alteration by special agreement, then the statute will fail of its purpose to establish a rate duly published, known to all, and from which neither shipper nor carrier may [**76] depart."

In the Mottley Case the question before the court was whether a contract made by the railroad company and the Mottleys in 1871, in compromise of claims for damages for injuries sustained by them, while passengers on one of the railroad's trains, caused by its negligence whereby the railroad company obligated itself to issue annually free passes to them on its railroad and branches during the lives of either of them, was enforceable after the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906 (chapter 3591, 34 Stat. 584, 586), became a law. The sections of the act construed were sections 1 and 2 (Comp. St. §§ 8563, 8569); the latter amending section 6 of the Interstate Commerce Act. The court, after referring to the original Interstate Commerce Act of 1887 (24 Stat. 379), said:

"But the act of June 29, 1906, made a material addition to the words of the act of 1887; for it expressly prohibited any carrier, unless otherwise provided, to demand, collect or receive 'a greater or less or different compensation' for the transportation of persons or property, or for any service in connection therewith, than the rates, fares, and charges specified in the tariff filed and in effect at the time. We [**77] cannot suppose that this change was without a distinct purpose on the part of Congress. The words 'or different,' looking at the context, cannot be regarded as superfluous or meaningless. We must have regard to all the words used by Congress, and as far as possible give effect to them. Washington Market Co. v. Hoffman, 101 U.S. 112, 115, 25 L. Ed. 782. The history of the acts relating to commerce shows that Congress, when introducing into the act of 1906 the word 'different,' had in mind the purpose of curing a defect in the law and of suppressing evil practices under it, by prohibiting the carrier from charging or receiving compensation, except as indicated in its published tariff. 11 Ann. Rep. Interstate Com. Com. 141; 19 Id. 78, 15; 40 Cong. Rec. pt. 7, p. 6608; Id. 6617; Id. 7428, 7434; Rept. of Confer. Com. 40 Cong. Rec. 9522; 42 Cong. Rec. pt. 2, p. 1746.

"In our opinion, after the passage of the Commerce Act, the railroad company could not lawfully accept from Mottley and wife any compensation 'different' in kind from that mentioned in its published schedule of rates. And it cannot be doubted that the rates or charges specified in such schedule were payable only in [**78] money. They could not be paid in any other way, without producing the utmost confusion and defeating the policy established by the acts regulating commerce. The evident purpose of Congress was to establish uniform rates for transportation, to give all the same opportunity to know what the rates were, as well as to have the equal benefit of them. To that end the carrier was required to print, post, and file its schedules, and to keep them open to public inspection. No change could be made in the rates embraced by the schedules, except upon notice to the Commission and to the public. But an examination of the schedules would be of no avail, and would not ordinarily be of any practical value, if the published rates could be disregarded in special or particular cases by the acceptance of property of various kinds, and of such value as the parties immediately concerned chose to put upon it, in place of money for the services performed by the carrier."

[*173] In disposing of the contention that the contract, being originally valid, is not affected by the act of 1906, the court said:

"It solved the question when, without making any exceptions of existing contracts, it forbade [**79] by broad, explicit words any carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive a 'greater or less or different compensation,' for any services in connection with the transportation of passengers or property, than was specified in its published schedules of rates. The court cannot add an exception based on equitable grounds when Congress forbore to make such an exception. Yturbide v. United States, 22 How. 290, 293 [16 L. Ed. 342]. The words of the act, therefore, must be taken to mean that a carrier, engaged in interstate commerce, cannot charge, collect, or receive for transportation on its road anything but money."

Had Congress, when enacting the Clayton Act, intended to apply the prohibitions in section 3 to existing contracts, it would have used language similar to that found in the Hepburn Act of 1906 or the Employers' Liability Act (Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665).

In Peters v. Veasey, 251 U.S. 121, 40 Sup. Ct. 65, 64 L. Ed. (opinion filed December 8, 1919), the effect of the amendments of October 6, 1917 (chapter 97, 40 Stat. 395 [Comp. St. 1918, Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, § 991(3)]), to clause 3 of section 24 and clause 3 of section 256 of the Judicial Code (Comp. [**80] St. § 1233), was before the court. The facts in that case were:

In Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, 244 U.S. 205, 37 Sup. Ct. 524, 61 L. Ed. 1086, L.R.A. 1918C, 451, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900 (opinion filed May 21, 1917), it had been decided that one sustaining an injury while engaged in work, maritime in its nature, is not entitled to the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Laws of the state where the injury was sustained. Almost immediately thereafter the bill to remedy this was introduced in Congress, to amend these sections of the Judicial Code by adding to each, after the words "saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it," the words, "and to claimants the rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation Law of any state," and promptly enacted as a law. The interstate of the plaintiff had been employed by the defendants, as a longshoreman, on board of a ship at the port of New Orleans, in the state of Louisiana, and while engaged in that work, on August 6, 1915, accidentally fell through a hatchway; death resulting therefrom. At the time of his injury and death the Compensation Law of the state of Louisiana [**81] (Act No. 20 of 1914) was in force. The administratrix of the deceased instituted an action in a court of that state, claiming compensation under that statute, and recovered a judgment, after the amendatory act of 1917 had become a law. This judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Louisiana. 142 La. 1012, 77 South. 948. On error to that court the Supreme Court reversed this judgment. Mr. Justice McReynolds, who delivered the unanimous opinion of the court, said:

"The court below erroneously concluded that this act [Act Oct. 6, 1917] should be given retroactive effect and applied in the present controversy. There is nothing in the language employed, nor is there any circumstance known to us, which indicates a purpose to make the act applicable when the [*174] cause of action arose before its passage, and we think it must not be so construed."

In Missouri, Kansas & Texas Ry. v. Sealy, 248 U.S. 363, 365, 39 Sup. Ct. 97, 63 L. Ed. 296, it was held that the Carmack Amendment to the Interstate, Commerce Act (Comp. St. §§ 8604a, 8604aa) was not retroactive, and does not apply to causes of action which arose before the passage of that act.

If there is room for doubt as [**82] to the intention of Congress, it is removed by reference to the proceedings in Congress when the bill was pending in the Senate. Senator Lee moved to amend the section, which, in the bill as passed by the House of Representatives, was section 4, and in the act as finally passed is section 3, the section under consideration, by inserting, after the word "condition," the words "whether heretofore or hereafter made," so that the clause would read as follows:

"And any such conditions whether heretofore or hereafter made shall be null and void, as being in restraint of trade and contrary to public policy."

The amendment was defeated. Cong. Record, Aug. 26, 1914, pp. 15575, 15576. Senator White offered an amendment:

"And that any agreement embracing any such requirement or prohibition is hereby declared illegal."

This was also rejected. Cong. Record, Sept. 2, 1914, pp. 15959, 15961.

Nor were either of these amendments, or words of similar import, inserted in the bill, when reported from the conference committee of the two houses and as finally enacted.

That HN19 the probative value of the rejection of an amendment will be considered by the courts in construing an act, if the language [**83] is at all doubtful, has been frequently decided. Lapina v. Williams, 232 U.S. 78, 89,

34 Sup. Ct. 196, 58 L. Ed. 515; Pennsylvania R.R. Co. v. International Coal Co., 230 U.S. 184, 198, 33 Sup. Ct. 893, 57 L. Ed. 1446, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 315; Carey v. Donohue, 240 U.S. 430, 437, 36 Sup. Ct. 386, 60 L. Ed. 726, L.R.A. 1917A, 295; United States v. St. Paul, etc., Ry. Co., 247 U.S. 310, 318, 38 Sup. Ct. 525, 62 L. Ed. 1130; McDonald & Johnson v. Southern Express Co. (C.C.) 134 Fed. 282, 288, and inferentially in Boyd v. Thayer, 143 U.S. 135, 167, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103. In the Pennsylvania R.R. Co. Case the court said:

"The fact that this provision measuring the amount of recovery by rebate was omitted from the act, as finally reported to both houses and passed, is not only significant, but so conclusive against the contention of the plaintiff that it quotes, not the report of the conference committee, but a statement made by a member of the conference committee, to support the present argument that section 8 means the same thing as the omitted clause."

In Carey v. Donohue, the court, speaking of the effect of an amendment striking out a part, said:

"We cannot but regard [**84] the action of Congress as a deliberate refusal to conform the requirements of section 60 to those of section 3b, and we are not at liberty to supply by construction what Congress has clearly shown its intention to omit."

[*175] In United States v. St. Paul, etc., by Ry. Co., the latest expression on that subject, it was said:

"It is not our purpose to relax the rule that debates in Congress are not appropriate, or even reliable, guides to the meaning of the language of an enactment. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290, 318 [17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007]. But the reports to a committee, including the bill as introduced, changes made in the frame of the bill in the course of its passage, and statements made by the committee chairman in charge of it, stand upon a different footing, and may be resorted to under proper qualifications."

The conclusion of the court is that the act should not be given a retroactive construction, declaring these clauses in leases made before its enactment void.

This result has not been reached without the most careful consideration of the opinions of the learned judges in the cases hereinbefore referred to. If this [**85] court were at all in doubt as to the construction of the act on this question, it would consider it its duty to follow the decisions of the learned judges in construing the act as retroactive, upon the ground that courts should always lean toward uniformity of decisions. But in the absence of a decision by a court, whose judgment is authoritative on the court trying the case, every judge must exercise his best judgment, and decide legal questions submitted to him in accordance with his own views, when, after a most careful consideration of the law, he reaches the conclusion that to follow such precedents would result in misconstruction of the law and a miscarriage of justice.

A decree in conformity with the views expressed may be prepared, and, if counsel are unable to agree on any provisions, the court will hear them and determine what the decree shall be.

United States v. Reading Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued October 10, 11, 1916; restored to docket for reargument May 21, 1917; reargued November 20, 21, 1917; restored to docket for reargument June 10, 1918; reargued October 7, 1919 ; April 26, 1920

Nos. 3, 4

Reporter

253 U.S. 26 *; 40 S. Ct. 425 **; 64 L. Ed. 760 ***; 1920 U.S. LEXIS 1488 ****; 3 A.F.T.R. (P-H) 3067

UNITED STATES v. READING COMPANY ET AL.; READING COMPANY ET AL. v. UNITED STATES

Prior History: [****1] APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Core Terms

---

coal, coal company, railroad company, holding company, Railroad, Railway, transportation, stock, carriers, interstate commerce, anthracite, anthracite coal, capital stock, decree, leased, bonds, commodities, ship, combined, covenant, interstate, producing, commerce, lines, reorganization, monopolize, properties, tidewater, carrying, suppress

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A dominating power, not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control, regardless of the use made of it, constitutes a menace to and an undue restraint upon interstate commerce within the meaning of the Anti-Trust Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

GI HÀM ỦNG HỘ LÀ GIÁM ĐỐC GIÁM SÁT GIÁM KHẨU TÙNG MỌI QUỐC GIA TÌM KIẾM

While the ownership by a railroad company of shares of the capital stock of a mining company does not necessarily create an identity of corporate interest between the two such as to render it unlawful under the commodities clause for the railroad company to transport in interstate commerce the products of such mining company, yet where such ownership of stock is resorted to, not for the purpose of participating in the affairs of the corporation in which it is held in a manner normal and usual with stockholders, but for the purpose of making it a mere agent, or instrumentality or department of another company, the courts will look through the forms to the realities of the relation between the companies as if the corporate agency did not exist and will deal with them as the justice of the case may require.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Headnotes

---

Monopoly -- unlawful combination -- lease of railroad -- lessor's covenant as to shipments. --

Headnote:

A covenant in a lease by a coal company of a railway owned by it to another railway company, which may be construed to require the coal company to ship to market over the leased line three fourths of all the coal it produces, cannot be said to impose an undue restriction upon the coal company in selecting its markets and in shipping its coal, in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, where the lines of the two railway companies are in no sense competitive, the leased line serving as a natural extension of the lessee railway company's lines to the great tonnage-producing coal districts, and where the rental to be paid is one third of the gross earnings of the railway.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Injunction -- against enforcement of monopolistic contract -- covenant in lease of coal lands. --

Headnote:

Attempts to enforce a covenant in leases for the operation of coal-producing lands that the lessee shall ship all coal mined by rail routes which are named, or which are to be designated, are properly enjoined where such covenant was resorted to as part of a scheme in contravention of the Sherman Anti-trust Act to control the mining and transportation of coal.

[For other cases, see Injunction, I. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal -- judgment -- dismissal without prejudice. --

Headnote:

Where a majority of the individual defendants in a suit to dissolve a combination found to contravene the Sherman Anti-trust Act have died since the suit was instituted, and their successors in office have not been made parties, and the conclusion to be announced can be given full effect by an appropriate decree against the corporate defendants, the case as against the remaining individual defendants need not be considered, and as to them the bill will be dismissed without prejudice.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, IX. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Monopoly -- unlawful combination -- carriers and coal companies -- dissolution. --

GI HÀM ỦY TÙNG GIÁM LÃ CỦA ỦY ĐỘA TÀU GIÁM LÃ I SĘDZIĘ DŁĘGOWĄ I ŚLĄSKIEJ GĘDZIĘSÓWĄ WŁAŚCIWĄ I I ŚLĄSKIEJ

Headnote:

An undue and unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce in anthracite coal, and an attempt to monopolize and a monopolization of such trade and commerce, forbidden by the Sherman Anti-trust Act, and calling for dissolution of the combination, results from a scheme whereby a holding company was created and placed by stock control in a position to dominate, not only two great competing interstate railway carriers, but also two great competing coal companies engaged extensively in mining and selling anthracite coal which must be transported to interstate markets over the controlled interstate railway lines, which power of control was actually used, once successfully, to suppress the building of a prospective competitive railway line, and a second time successfully, until the Federal Supreme Court condemned certain percentage coal contracts as illegal, to suppress the last prospect of competition in anthracite production and transportation, the holding company continuing, up to the time the present dissolution suit was begun, in active dominating control of the carriers and coal companies, thus effectually suppressing all competition between the four companies and pooling their earnings.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Carriers -- association with commodity carried -- stock ownership. --

Headnote:

The combination in a single corporation of the ownership of all of the stock of a carrier and of all of the stock of a coal company violates the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906, making it unlawful for any railway company to transport in interstate commerce any article mined or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, where all three companies have the same officers and directors, and it is under their authority that the coal mines are worked and the railway operated, and they exercise that authority in the one case in precisely the same character as in the other; viz., as officials of the holding company, the manner in which the stock of the three is held resulting, as intended, in the abdication of all independent corporate action by both the railway company and the coal company, involving, as it does, the surrender to the holding company of the entire conduct of their affairs.

[For other cases, see Carriers, III. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Carriers -- association with commodity carried -- stock ownership. --

Headnote:

While the ownership by a railway company of shares of the capital stock of a mining company does not necessarily create an identity of corporate interest between the two such as to render it unlawful, under the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906, for the railway company to transport in interstate commerce the products of such mining company, yet, where such ownership of stock is resorted to, not for the purpose of participating in the affairs of the corporation in which it is held in a manner normal and usual with stockholders, but for the purpose of making it a mere agent, or instrumentality, or department of another company, the courts will look through the forms to the realities of the relation between the companies as if the corporate agency did not exist, and will deal with them as the justice of the case may require.

[For other cases, see Carriers, III. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Judgment -- dissolution -- monopoly -- extent of relief. --

Headnote:

A combination of competing interstate railway carriers and competing coal companies, found to violate both the Sherman Anti-trust Act and the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906, must be so dissolved as to give each of such companies its entire independence, free from stock or other control.

GI HÀM VỀ CÁC QUYỀN LÃI CỦA ĐÓ GÌ KỂ GIÀU I SỰ QUẢN LÝ CỦA ĐÓ I GIÁM SÁT VÀ QUẢN LÝ CỦA ĐÓ

[For other cases, see Judgment, II. in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Syllabus

---

Regardless of the use made of it, a power resulting, not from normal expansion and legitimate business enterprise, but from deliberate calculated purchase for control, which enables a holding company to dominate two great competing interstate railroad carriers and two great competing coal companies, engaged extensively in mining and selling anthracite coal that must be transported to interstate markets over those railroads, is a menace to and an undue restraint upon interstate commerce within the meaning of the Anti-Trust Act. P. 57.

By a scheme of reorganization executed after the enactment of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, all the property of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company, a large producer of anthracite coal controlling about two-fifths of the supply in the largest of the three fields in Pennsylvania where substantially all of the anthracite of the country is found, and all the property of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company, owner of all the capital stock of the Coal Company and of an extensive railroad system over which that company's large output found [****2] its way to interstate markets, was delivered into the complete control of the Reading Company. That company became the owner of all the stock of the Coal Company, with additional control over it through fiscal provisions of the reorganization; of all the stock of a new railroad company, the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, to which the main railroad was transferred; of all the equipment for operating the railroad, and of ships, terminals, short lines and other property which formed part of the railroad system. Besides entering into two schemes with other carriers and coal companies for suppressing competition, which were declared violations of the Anti-Trust Act in United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324 (see infra, p. 49), the Reading Company purchased a controlling interest in the capital stock of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey -- a large carrier of anthracite in competition with the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, and owner of over eleven-twelfths of the capital stock of the defendant Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, which in turn owned or had leased a very large acreage in another of the Pennsylvania anthracite fields, and was a competitor [****3] of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company; and thereby, and through common officers and directors, the Reading Company acquired and exercised active dominating control over the last two-mentioned companies, its power thus including two of the principal competing producers and two of the principal competing initial carriers, of anthracite, in interstate commerce. There was evidence also of its combining with other carriers to fix excessive flat rates to tidewater, and of special privileges extended by it to the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company in the way of financial assistance and forbearance, and of similar dealing between the Central Railroad and Wilkes-Barre Companies.

Held, that the combination both before and after the induction of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and that the relations between the Reading Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company and the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey must be so dissolved as to give to each of them a position in all respects independent and free from stock or other control of any of the others. Pp. 43-59.

[****4] The combination between the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company and the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company through the Reading Company must also be dissolved, because the transportation thereunder by the Railway of the coal produced by the Coal Company, violates the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906. P. 60.

While the ownership by a railroad company of shares of the capital stock of a mining company does not necessarily create an identity of corporate interest between the two such as to render it unlawful under the commodities clause for the railroad company to transport in interstate commerce the products of such mining company, yet where such ownership of stock is resorted to, not for the purpose of participating in the affairs of the corporation in which it is held in a manner normal and usual with stockholders, but for the purpose of making it a mere agent, or instrumentality or department of another company, the courts will look through the forms to the realities of the relation between the companies as if the corporate agency did not exist and will deal with them as the justice of the case may require. P. 62.

Gl HAWAIIAG EAG LÀ EUÈDÉA GÍ EAG GÍ LÀ I ASÉOÀEÀ Í EÀKÌI Í EAFJGEÀEÀSÓYQÀFI Ì I EÀKÌI

Applying this rule, held, that the [****5] relation between the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, with the former owning over eleven-twelfths of the capital stock of the latter and using the latter as the coal mining department of its organization, violates the commodities clause, and for that reason must be dissolved. Id.

In 1871, the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company, owner of extensive coal-producing properties and of the Lehigh & Susquehanna Railroad, leased the railroad for a rental of one-third of its gross earnings to the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, the line leased and the line of the lessee not being in competition but the one forming a natural extension of the other into the coal fields. Held, that a covenant in the lease, assumed to require the lessor to ship to market over the leased line three-fourths of all the coal which it should produce in the future, was not designed to suppress interstate commerce, did not have that effect, and does not violate the Anti-Trust Act. P. 54.

Covenants in leases of coal lands by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company and Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, obliging the lessees to ship all coal mined [****6] by rail routes designated or to be designated, are held unlawful as part of the scheme to control the mining and transportation of coal herein condemned, and their enforcement is enjoined. P. 55.

As to other charges against the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company, and as respects the Wilmington & Northern Railroad Company, the Lehigh & Hudson River Railway Company, the Lehigh & New England Railroad Company, and the surviving individual defendants, the bill is dismissed without prejudice. Id.

226 Fed. Rep. 229, affirmed in part, reversed in part.

THE case is stated in the opinion. Motions to modify the decree were made and denied at this term. Post, 478.

Counsel: The Solicitor General, with whom The Attorney General and Mr. A. F. Myers were on the brief, for the United States.<sup>1</sup>

[****7] Mr. Jackson E. Reynolds, with whom Mr. Charles Heebner and Mr. John G. Johnson were on the brief, for Reading Company, Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, and the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company.<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Robert W. De Forest, with whom Mr. Charles E. Miller was on the brief, for Central Railroad Company of New Jersey.

Mr. Henry S. Drinker, Jr., and Mr. Abraham M. Beittler filed a brief on behalf of the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company.

Mr. John J. Beattie filed a brief on behalf of the Lehigh & Hudson River Railway Company.

Mr. Wm. Jay Turner filed a brief on behalf of the Lehigh & New England Railroad Company.

The following is a summary of the oral argument for the Reading Company et al.

<sup>1</sup> At the first and second hearings the case was argued by Mr. Solicitor General Davis and Mr. Assistant to the Attorney General Todd. Mr. Attorney General Gregory and Mr. Thurlow M. Gordon, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, also were on the brief.

<sup>2</sup> At the first hearing Mr. John G. Johnson argued the case for the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company.

Glá hárteagáig lá eáiseodáig fíláig lá i aséadáig i eáistí i eláj geamharasoy quáifi i páistí.

The appellees are not accused of fixing prices by contract with competitors, bringing about any deterioration in product, acquiring additional [****8] coal deposits since 1890, dismantling or abandoning properties, limiting output, exclusive or price controlling sales contracts, monopolization of local dealers, espionage over the business of competitors, partitioning the country into non-competitive districts, discriminating in prices to destroy competitors, adopting unfair business policies, exacting unreasonable prices, deriving excessive profits from the coal business, unfair treatment of employees, or unfair treatment of competitors. Their prices for transportation and for coal have been reasonable, not excessive, "monopoly" prices.

There are in the case three charges: alleged violation of the commodities clause; alleged monopoly in the Schuylkill region; alleged combination in restraint of trade resulting in the Reading's purchase of control of the Jersey Central.

The tests to be applied to determine whether the Reading Railway Company is violating the commodities clause in transporting coal owned by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company at the time of transportation are those laid down in United States v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 220 U.S. 257, and *United States v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R.R. [***91] Co., 238 U.S. 516*. These tests are also buttressed by the court's declaration of the general object of the statute to have been to put an end to the carrier's "opportunity to discriminate in favor of itself against other shippers in the rate charged, the facility furnished or the quality of the service rendered." Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R.R. Co. v. United States, 231 U.S. 363.

The court is not concerned with the question of who ultimately receives the profit from the sale of the commodity, because it has repeatedly held that the carrier might legally own all of the stock of the corporation which owned the commodity at the time of transportation and thereby receive all the profits from the sale of the same. United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U.S. 366, 413, 414.

Furthermore, this court, recognizing the fact that in the legislative progress of the commodities clause in the Senate, where it originated, an amendment in specific terms providing that the enactment should embrace common ownership of stock in railroad companies and coal companies by the same stockholders, was rejected (40 Cong. Rec., pt. 7, pp. 7011-7014), has also unequivocally held that [****10] such common ownership "cannot be used as a test by which to determine the legality of the transportation of such [a coal] company's coal by the interstate carrier." United States v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R.R. Co., 238 U.S. 516, 526.

The Reading Companies were in existence long prior to the time the commodities clause went into effect -- two of them for 37 years and the third for 12 years. The Reading Railway has never had any title to coal lands, has never undertaken any mining operations and has never been engaged in merchandising coal; and the Reading Railway and the Reading Coal Company have never been parties to any sales agency contract of the kind condemned in the Lackawanna Case. These factors, which are the converse of those presented in the Lackawanna Case, differentiate the two cases completely.

The present state of the law places upon the Government the burden of showing, by a preponderance of the proof, that the affairs of the Railway Company and the Coal Company have been so commingled and the distinctions between them so obliterated, as to disregard the fact that they were separate juridical beings; cause them to be one and inseparable, [****11] making their affairs indistinguishable; destroy the entity of the Coal Company; and make it a mere puppet subject to the control of the Railway Company and a mere department thereof.

The origin of the holding of the capital stocks of the Coal Company and the Railway Company by the Reading Company cannot be treated as a "mere subterfuge and sham to defeat the commodities clause." The lower court was correct in finding that the reorganization was carried out with scrupulous regard for the law, in entire good faith, and without subterfuge or sham. It was right in its conclusion that the validity of the charter powers of the Reading Companies cannot be impeached; that their right to exist cannot be denied; that complete legislative authority to do the acts they have done cannot be gainsaid, and never has been questioned by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and that the charters of the three companies gave the undoubted right to issue the securities and make the conveyances described.

The ownership of railroad equipment by the Reading Company and the lease thereof to the Railway Company have not been shown to have resulted in giving the latter as a corporation, for its own corporate [****12] purposes,

GI HÀM VỀ CÁC QUYỀN LÃI CỦA ĐIỀU KHOẢN GIỮ QUYỀN CỦA CÔNG TY THAN VÀ CÔNG TY TÀU HÀNG

"complete power over the affairs of the Coal Company, as if the Coal Company were a mere department of the railroad."

The purchase money mortgage of the Railway Company scrupulously observes the fact that the Railway Company and the Reading Company are separate juridical beings and in no manner commingles the affairs of the Railway and Coal Companies so as to cause both such corporations to be one for all purposes.

The general mortgage of the Reading Company does not obliterate the distinctions between the Railway Company and the Coal Company and cause them to be one and inseparable.

The Government's evidence and arguments on the extent to which the Coal Company and the Railway Company have officers and offices in common are largely iteration in the past tense of conditions existing more than a decade ago, not only prior to this court's illuminating decision in 1911 in United States v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 220 U.S. 257, but even before the commodities clause itself went into effect on May 1, 1908. That evidence is clearly immaterial and irrelevant as to conditions now existing. Equitable decrees normally speak in the present tense and are applied to remedy [****13] existing evils and not to characterize or condemn past wrongs. Even in an action under the Sherman Act an opportunity might well be afforded for a locus poenitentiae. United States v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 225 Fed. Rep. 399, 403, 404.

The foregoing facts fully justified the court below in finding that there was a bona fide separate administration of the affairs of the Coal Company. United States v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 220 U.S. 257, 274.

Attention is directed to the fact that the two companies employ the same counsel and treasurer, and also have the majority of directors in common. Probably no two employees of modern industrial organizations could do less toward the commingling of the administrative and other affairs of two corporations than the counsel and the treasurer. These incidents are of minor importance and do not affect the question of whether the businesses of the companies are rendered indistinguishable. That was an issue of fact and the record conclusively establishes that no such result has followed from the joint employment of these two individuals. It is repeatedly shown that the funds and accounts of the two companies are scrupulously [****14] kept distinct, and there is no evidence whatever of a commingling of the affairs of the two corporations by their counsel.

The proof of the complete autonomy of the Coal Company and the Railway Company was uncontested, and conclusive. An excellent summary of the salient features of the testimony appears in Judge McPherson's opinion below.

In view of the entire autonomy of the three Reading Companies, there is no ground for the contention that the Railway Company is transporting in interstate commerce anthracite coal mined or produced by it, or under its authority, or which it owns in whole or in part, or in which it has any interest, direct, or indirect.

As to the alleged monopoly in the Schuylkill Region:

The Government does not raise the issue as to whether the Coal Company in and of itself is a combination in restraint of interstate commerce or a monopolization thereof. That company was created May 18, 1871, and by its charter it was lawful for any railroad company existing under the laws of the State to subscribe for or purchase its stock, or to purchase or guarantee its bonds. The corporation then owning the Reading Railroad properties immediately purchased all the [****15] stock of the Coal Company. The latter then immediately set about the purchase and lease of coal lands, acquiring 80,000 acres before the end of 1872. By the year 1881 the Coal Company controlled 98,500 acres of coal land (or slightly in excess of the acreage alleged in the petition). Shortly afterwards, in 1885, the stockholders deliberately adopted a policy opposed to all further acquisition. Thus on the government theory the close relations alleged to exist between the mining and transportation properties and their owners have existed for almost half a century (or 20 years before the passage of the Anti-Trust Act); and the Coal Company's title to its present holdings of coal lands was vested in it almost 40 years ago, or 9 years antecedent to the passage of that act. The mining and marketing of coal on the one hand and its transportation on the other are not competitive businesses. The court below, with these factors before it, dismissed the petition in respect of this branch of the case, and this court, on its precedents, we believe, will affirm this action because it holds "the disintegration aimed at by the statute does not extend to reducing all manufacture to isolated [****16] units of the lowest degree. The combination was not unlawful so far as it did no more than put the different groups of non-competing [enterprises] into one control." United States v. Winslow, 227 U.S. 202, 217, 218.

GI HÀM VỀ GIÁ CỦA QUỐC GIA LÀ GIÁ TỐT NHẤT GIÁ TỐT NHẤT TRONG QUỐC GIA

The Government does not contend that the Coal Company is an unlawful combination or a monopoly, and it cannot be contended that the transportation is competitive with the mining and marketing; the transportation is intermediate between the two and supplements them.

This court, like the court below, will be repelled by the consequences of holding with the Government's contentions. United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U.S. 32, 45, 46.

There was no secrecy indicating a guilty plan or conspiracy. It was all done pursuant to notices to investors all over the world, in the open, and to meet the financial exigencies of the situation. The plan was adopted by Edward M. Paxson, the receiver, who had just resigned as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and the writer of that court's decision in Commonwealth v. New York, Lake Erie & Western R.R. Co., 132 Pa. St. 591. The resulting reorganization was declared valid by the [****17] Attorney General of the Commonwealth, January 2, 1897. The legality of the plan was approved by eleven eminent counsel. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by its statutory policy from 1818, had declared to be normal, and affirmatively encouraged, the close inter-relation of mining, transporting and selling anthracite coal. (Const. 1874, Art. XVII, § 5, adopted in convention, of which Judge Dallas was a member.) It was approved by Judge Dallas and Judge Acheson, of the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, contemporaneously with the reorganization. It was regarded as entirely legal by Judges Gray, Lanning and Buffington ten years later. United States v. Reading Co., 183 Fed. Rep. 427, 457, 459, 490. It was declared to be lawful by Judges McPherson, Hunt and Buffington twenty years later. United States v. Reading Co., 226 Fed. Rep. 229, 266-276.

The facts do not indicate monopoly or combination in restraint of trade. The Coal Company is not charged with such guilt. It produces less than 15 per cent. of tonnage. In the Schuylkill region it has 35 operations and one-half the tonnage. Other producers have 53. On the Reading Railway it does [****18] not monopolize production or sales. Of production it has only 65 per cent. In sales it must compete with 116 other shippers on 8 other railroads and 60,000,000 tons of competitive tonnage because the Pennsylvania Railroad reaches every community reached by the Reading Railway and makes joint rates with every other anthracite railroad. At tidewater and all distant points it meets the competition of the entire production. The court below unanimously supports the foregoing conclusion. 226 Fed. Rep. 270-271.

The Reading Railway cannot be treated as a monopoly. Its transportation status in the Schuylkill region has been practically the same for 50 years. The Government alleges no acquisition of other carriers there since 1870. Its share of total anthracite transportation is less than 19 per cent; the Lehigh Valley Railroad's is greater. It does not monopolize the Schuylkill region. It serves 63 collieries, 11,500,000 tons; other railroads serve 34 collieries, 7,000,000 tons. It does not monopolize the collieries it serves. Built in 1833, it has the natural advantages of a pioneer -- occupation of passes, and possession of best grades. It serves the region admirably. It encounters [****19] the competition of the total tonnage in all markets as does the Coal Company.

The Reading Company is not a monopoly or combination in restraint of trade. It merely coordinates and integrates the non-competitive and complementary businesses of mining, transporting and merchandising anthracite coal, thereby promoting and stimulating interstate trade and commerce. No vice exists in including transportation, because its chief competitors enjoy a like advantage, and government regulations preclude abuse in employing transportation facilities.

There is no basis for the decree requested by the Government, tearing down an investment of $ 300,000,000, made originally 50 years ago, when the titles vested, and upon the stability of which investors have justifiably relied for a generation, -- authorized by state statutes, approved by state officers and courts, reorganized under supervision of federal courts 23 years ago, and approved unanimously by circuit judges in 1915.

The purchase of the Jersey Central stock was a normal industrial development -- a defensive measure with no intent to unduly suppress competition.

GI HÀM VỀ CÁC TÌNH THẾ CỦA HÀNG HÓA VÀ CÁC QUY ĐỊNH CỦA HỘI ĐỒNG TỔ CHỨC HÀNG HÓA

The railroads combined were not competing in the sense of Mr. Justice [****20] Day's definition in the Union Pacific Case. One was never striving for traffic which the other was seeking to gain. 226 U.S. 87. They did not render service to the same shipper, id. 87, nor cater to demands of identical patrons. Id. 88. They were not engaged in the same carrying trade from the same point of origin to the same destination. Id. 99. They were, on the contrary, complementary and supplementary, one to the other, in the sense described in this court's opinion respecting the form of decree permitting the combination of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific. If, as a fact, they are thus supplementary the Government concedes the propriety of their combination.

Even if the Government's theory, that the two roads are competitive because both transport anthracite, be indulged; nevertheless their unification was valid because "the extent of the control thereby secured over instrumentalities which commerce is under compulsion to use," under the tests laid down in United States v. St. Louis Terminal, 224 U.S. 383, 394, 395, "left the competitive conditions in the coal carrying business very slightly affected by the elimination of competition between [****21] the Central and the Philadelphia and Reading." 183 Fed. Rep. 488, 490.

The Government's theory of competition is unsound. It makes all carriers competitive, and is contrary to the settlement in the Union Pacific Case. Its theory of competition is impossible of application. No court can discover the necessary directness of relationship of cause and effect to enable it to say that the abatement of competition of such an intangible character necessarily results in a case of unlawful restraint. This impossibility arises from the factors of uncertainty, speculation and remoteness, illustrated by the extent of competition of anthracite coal with other fuels; by the situation in the New England market, where 70,000,000 tons are in potential competition, and there are numerous uncontrolled rail and water routes, the Reading handling only 3 1/2 per cent. of the potential supply; and by similar conditions at New York and elsewhere -- even on the Reading Railway itself.

But even according to the government theory, competition was unaffected. The Central did not reach the Reading territory, and competition was continued by eight other lines in close proximity to the Central and Reading. [****22] See 183 Fed. Rep. 457, 488, 490. The vital question is not the amount of competition suppressed, but the amount remaining. If, as here, the competitors remaining are numerous, large, and powerful the restriction of competition cannot be deemed undue. The issue is one of fact and not of law and must be decided on the evidence, not on theory or speculation. The evidence covering the period since 1901 when this combination was formed shows the facts to be that the Reading's powerful competitors have increased their anthracite traffic by much greater percentages than has the Reading; that any diminution of the Reading's service to the public or attempted restraint on interstate trade would be frustrated immediately by the preponderant competitive power of its eight powerful rivals; that the public has been benefited for any loss of competition resulting from the combination by the more than compensating advantage derived from the upbuilding of the half dozen through routes for freight and passenger traffic competing with the Pennsylvania Railroad. This court would not be justified in destroying these routes and their advantage to the public merely to guard against a speculative possibility [****23] of injury which the evidence shows cannot ensue. In view of its decision in the St. Louis Terminal Case, this court should hold the lower court's view of the evidence, -- considering the lessons of the war as to what restrains trade, the joint operation of railroads, and the provisions of impending railroad legislation.

As for the Coal Companies, the Reading Company's influence over the Wilkes-Barre Company was only incidental and negligible. There is no evidence of a motive to control production. Competition was practically unaffected, and the management of the two companies was not amalgamated.

The Reading Company did not create a monopoly or combination in restraint of the anthracite trade in 1901. The trade as a whole has expanded; the number of employees, their employment and earnings have increased; and production has kept pace with population.

The Reading did not acquire in 1901 sufficient power to monopolize or restrain the trade had it sought to do so. The combined business of the two coal companies was then only one-fourth of the total business, and in the interim has shrunk until now it is only one-fifth. It does not now possess the power to monopolize or [****24] restrain the trade even if it wished to do so.

Í HÁWEAG ÓRG LÁ ÉUÉDÁG ÓRÓG LÁ I ÁSÓAÍ ÓRÓG ÓRÓG ÓRÓG

If the Government's most extravagant contention had been sustained by proof, their criticism of the coal land holdings makes no case presently calling for the interposition of the action of this court. It will be time enough to destroy such a monopoly when it appears and when it has gained power to injure the public. Now the court should deal only with the present actualities. By the time that such a monopoly arises, if it ever does, it may be that the public policy will foster it, or we may have a nationalization of all mines.

Finally, the Government's contentions now are inconsistent with its attitude in the Harvester Case. On November 2, 1918, the Department of Justice consented to a decree in that case in and by which, in order to "restore competitive conditions and bring about a situation in harmony with law," the company was only required to sell such of its lines of harvesting machines as would leave it at least 66 per cent. of the industry.

Judges: White. McKenna, Holmes, Day, Van Devanter, Pitney, McReynolds, Brandeis, Clarke

Opinion by: CLARKE

Opinion

---

[*40] [**426] [***772] Mr. JUSTICE CLARKE delivered the opinion [****25] of the court.

These are appeals from a decree entered in a suit instituted by the Government to dissolve the intercorporate relations existing between the corporation defendants, for the alleged reason that through such relations they [*41] constitute a combination in restraint of interstate commerce in anthracite coal, and an attempt to monopolize or a monopolization of such trade and commerce in violation of the first and second sections of the Anti-Trust Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209; and also for the alleged reason that the defendants, Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company and Central Railroad Company of New Jersey are violating the commodities clause of the Act of Congress of June 29, 1906, c. 3591, 34 Stat. 585, by transporting over their lines of railroad, in interstate commerce, coal mined or purchased by coal companies with which they are associated by stock ownership.

[**427] It will contribute to brevity and clearness to designate the defendant corporations as follows: Reading Company, as the Holding Company; Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, as Reading Railway Company; Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company, as Reading Coal [****26] Company; Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, as Central Railroad Company; Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, as Wilkes-Barre Company; Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company, as Navigation Company.

Practically all of the anthracite coal in this country is found in northeastern Pennsylvania, in three limited and substantially parallel deposits, located in valleys which are separated by mountainous country. For trade purposes these coal areas are designated: the most northerly, as the Wyoming field, estimated to contain about 176 square miles of coal; the next southerly, as the Middle or Lehigh field, estimated to contain about 45 square miles, and the most southerly, as the Schuylkill field, estimated to contain about 263 square miles of coal.

The annual production of the mines in these three fields in 1896 was about 43,640,000 tons and in 1913 it slightly exceeded 71,000,000 tons. The chief marketing centers for this great tonnage of coal are New York, distant by rail from the fields about 140 miles, and Philadelphia, distant [*42] about 90 miles. From these cities it is widely distributed by rail and water throughout New York and New England, and to some extent, through [****27] the South.

Such a large tonnage was naturally attractive to railroad carriers, with the result that the Wyoming field has six outlets by rail to New York Harbor, viz: The Central Railroad of New Jersey and five others, known as initial anthracite carriers. The Lehigh field has three such rail outlets, but the largest, the Schuylkill field, has only two direct rail connections with Philadelphia and New York, viz: The Reading and the Pennsylvania [***773] Railroads. Outlets by canal to Philadelphia and tidewater, at one time important, may here be neglected.

GI HÀM VỀ GIÁ CỦA ĐẤT GIÁ LÀI SẢN XUẤT HÀNG HÓA TÙY QUÝ QUỐC TẾ

This description of the subject-matter and of its relation to the interstate transportation system of the country will suffice for the purposes of this opinion. It may be found in much greater detail in the cases cited in the margin.<sup>1</sup>

[****28] The essential claims of the Government in the case have become narrowed to these, viz:

First: That the ownership by the Holding Company of controlling interests in the shares of the capital stocks of the Reading Railway Company, of the Reading Coal Company and of the Central Railroad Company, constitutes a combination in restraint of interstate trade and commerce and an attempt to monopolize and a monopolization of a part of the same in violation of the Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890.

Second: That the Holding Company in itself constitutes a like violation of the act.

Third: That certain covenants and agreements between the Central Railroad Company and the Navigation Company [*43] contained in a lease, by the latter to the former, of the Lehigh & Susquehanna Railroad, constitute a like violation of the act.

Fourth: That the transportation in interstate commerce by the Reading Railway Company and by the Central Railroad Company, of coal mined or purchased by the coal companies affiliated with each of them constitutes a violation of the commodities clause of the Act to Regulate Commerce.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Act of June 25, 1910, c. 428, 36 Stat. 854, [****29] the case was heard by three Circuit Judges of the Third Circuit, who while holding against the contention of the Government on many of the prayers for relief in the bill, some generally and some without prejudice, also held that the Reading Coal Company and the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company were naturally competitive producers and sellers of anthracite coal and that their union through the Holding Company and the Central Company constituted a combination in restraint of trade within the Anti-Trust Act, and for this reason the Central Company was ordered to dispose of all the stock, bonds and other securities of the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company owned by it and was enjoined from requiring the Coal Company to ship its coal over the lines of the Central Company.

The court also held that clauses in mining leases by the Reading Coal Company and by the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, and their subsidiaries, requiring the lessees to ship all coal produced, over roads, named or to be designated, were unlawful and void.

The case has been appealed by both parties and is before us for review on all of the issues as we have thus stated them.

Reference to the history of the properties now controlled by [****30] the Holding Company will be of value for the assistance it will be in determining the intent and purpose [*44] with which the combinations here assailed were formed. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 46, 76.

The Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company was chartered by special act of the Pennsylvania General Assembly in 1833, and it conducted the business of a [*428] railroad carrier prosperously for about thirty years, when, as its annual reports show, it embarked upon the policy of attempting to control the anthracite tonnage of the Schuylkill field by acquiring extensive ownership of coal lands. Thus, the report of the Company for 1871 contains the following:

"Up to this time about 70,000 acres of the best anthracite coal lands in Pennsylvania have been acquired and will be held by an auxiliary company, known as the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, of which the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company is the only stockholder. The result of this action has been to secure -- and attach to the company's railroad -- a body of coal land capable of supplying all the coal-tonnage that can possibly be transported over the [***31] road for centuries."

<sup>1</sup> United States v. Reading Co., 183 Fed. Rep. 427; United States v. Reading Co., 226 Fed. Rep. 229; United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U.S. 366; United States v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 220 U.S. 257; United States v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R.R. Co., 238 U.S. 516; United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324.

GI HÀM ĐẤT LÀ MỘT KHÔNG GIAN LÀ MỘT KHÔNG GIAN HÀM ĐẤT HÀM ĐẤT

And this is from the report for 1880:

"The transportation of coal has always been a source of great profit to the railroad company, and the only doubt in the past about the permanency of the earning power of the company as a transporter was due to the fear that rival companies [***774] would tap the Schuylkill region, and divert the coal tonnage to their own lines. This danger was happily averted by the purchase of the coal lands."

And this from the report of 1881:

"The coal estates of the Philadelphia and Reading Company . . . consist of 91,149 acres (142 square miles) of coal lands, which is sixty per cent of all the anthracite lands in the Schuylkill district, and thirty per cent of all in Pennsylvania."

This area of coal lands had increased by 1891 to 102,573 acres, of which the report said:

[*45] "The coal lands comprise in extent about 33 per cent of the entire anthracite coal fields of the State, and taking into account the aggregate thickness of the veins on the company's lands, and the greater proportionate depletion of the estates in the other regions which has been going on for many years, it must be conceded that [***32] we have at least 50 per cent of the entire deposit remaining unmined."

As if in further pursuit of this now settled purpose, in the following year, 1892, the Reading Railroad Company leased the Lehigh Valley Railroad and the Central Railroad of New Jersey for 999 years. These were both anthracite carriers, competing with the Reading and each had an important coal mining subsidiary company. But the lease by the Central Railroad Company was assailed in the New Jersey courts and all operations under it were enjoined, with the result that both leases were abandoned.

It is obvious that these reports show an avowed and consistently pursued purpose (not then prohibited by statute) to secure by purchase a dominating control over the coal of the Schuylkill field and over the transportation of it to market.

In the large financial operations incident to the expansion policy thus described, bonds were issued, secured by a mortgage on all of the property of the Reading Railroad Company and of the Reading Coal Company. In 1893 there was default in the payment of interest on these bonds and receivers were appointed who operated both properties until 1896 when they were sold to representatives [***33] of the creditors and stockholders of the two companies, and under a scheme of reorganization, the validity of which is assailed in this suit, both properties were transferred to three corporations in the manner now to be described:

1st. To the Reading Railway Company, a corporation newly organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, were allotted about 1,000 miles of the railroad (but none of [*46] the equipment) which had been owned or leased by the former Reading Railroad Company. The capital stock of this company was fixed at $ 20,000,000 and it issued $ 20,000,000 of bonds, all of which were given to the Holding Company. The property thus transferred was valued, in the representations made at the time to the New York Stock Exchange, at $ 90,000,000. In 1896 this railroad carried in excess of 9,000,000 tons of anthracite, -- more than one-fifth of the then total production of the country. But by the plan of reorganization adopted it was disabled from performing its functions as a carrier, except with the aid of the Holding Company, for all of the equipment, engines, cars and ships, owned by the former Railroad Company, and its tidewater terminals at Philadelphia [***34] and on New York Harbor, were allotted to the Holding Company.

2nd. By the decree of sale the Reading Coal and Iron Company was released from its former obligations and to it thus freed the principal part of the property (coal and other), owned by it before the sale, was allotted and retransferred upon condition, that it would deliver all of its capital stock to the Holding Company, would become co-obligor with that company on bonds to be issued, and would join with it in executing a mortgage for $ 135,000,000 on all of its property to secure such bonds. This company thus came into possession of 102,573 acres of anthracite lands, owned and leased, -- almost two-thirds of the entire acreage of the Schuylkill coal field, -- stocks and bonds in other coal companies, coal in storage and other property, all of the estimated value of $ 95,000,000.

GI HÀM VỀ GIÁM SÁT TỔNG CỦA ỦY BAN TỔNG KHOÁNG KHỐI QUỐC GIA

3rd. To serve the purposes of the intended Holding Company, a charter granted in 1871 by special act of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, but unused for twenty years, was utilized. This charter was of the class denominated "omnibus" by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, [*47] and in terms it authorized the company to engage in, [***35] or control, almost any business other than that of a bank of issue, -- this broad charter was the occasion for making use of the company in this enterprise. The corporate name was changed [*429] to "Reading Company," its capital stock was increased from $ 100,000 to $ 140,000,000, and the purchasers at the receivers' sale allotted and transferred to it railroad equipment, real estate, colliers and barges, formerly owned by the Reading Railroad Company, together with stocks which gave [***775] it control of more than thirty short line railroads, aggregating 275 miles of track, and other property of large value, in addition to all of the bonds and stock of the new Reading Railway Company and all of the stock of the Reading Coal Company.

The result of this intercorporate transfer of the property, owned before the reorganization by the Reading Railroad Company and the Reading Coal and Iron Company, was that the Holding Company without any outlay -- solely because the creditors and stockholders of the former Reading Railroad Company and of the Reading Coal Company desired to establish the proposed scheme for control of the properties formerly owned by the two companies [***36] -- became the owner of the title to railway equipment, real estate, colliers and barges of an estimated value of $ 34,400,000; plus all of the capital stock and bonds of the new Railway Company, $ 40,000,000; plus all of the capital stock of the Coal Company, $ 8,000,000, and a contract by that company to mortgage, for the use of the Holding Company, its entire property; plus other stocks, bonds and mortgages owned by the former Railroad Company of the estimated value of over $ 38,000,000, -- making a total value, as represented at the time to the New York Stock Exchange, of $193,613,000.

Thus, this scheme of reorganization, adopted and executed [*48] six years after the enactment of the Anti-Trust Act, combined and delivered into the complete control of the board of directors of the Holding Company all of the property of much the largest single coal company operating in the Schuylkill anthracite field, and almost one thousand miles of railway over which its coal must find its access to interstate markets. This board of directors, obviously, thus acquired power: to increase or decrease the output of coal from very extensive mines, the supply of it in the market, and the cost [***37] of it to the consumer; to increase or lower the charge for transporting such coal to market; and to regulate car supply and other shipping conveniences, and thereby to help or hinder the operations of independent miners and shippers of coal. This constituted a combination to unduly restrain interstate commerce within the meaning of the act. United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 226 U.S. 61.

Obviously, also, it made the Coal Company and the Railway Company mere agents or instrumentalities of the Holding Company -- the mining and transportation departments of its business -- for producing, purchasing, and selling coal and for transporting it to market. The Reading Railway Company and the Reading Coal Company each had thereafter but one stockholder, -- the Holding Company -- and their earnings were to be distributed not in proportion to the shares of their capital stocks, aggregating $ 28,000,000, but were to go to the creditors and shareholders of the Holding Company, with its mortgage debt of $ 135,000,000 and its capital stock of $ 140,000,000. The Holding Company thus served to pool the property, the activities and the profits of the three companies. Northern [***38] Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 327, 362.

It will be profitable to consider next what use was made of the great power thus gathered into the one Holding Company.

[*49] In 1898 this Holding Company entered into a combination with five other anthracite carrying railroad companies to prevent the then contemplated construction of an additional line of railway from the Wyoming field to tidewater, which independent miners and shippers of coal were promoting for the purpose of securing better rates on their coal to the seaboard. In a mere holding company, the Temple Iron Company, all six carriers combined, as stockholders for the purpose of providing $ 5,000,000 with which the properties of the chief independent operators, Simpson and Watkins, were purchased and thereby the new railroad project was defeated. The president of the

GI HÀM VỀ GIÁM SÁT TỔNG CÔNG TY XÂY DỰNG VÀ THƯƠNG MẠI VIỆT NAM

Holding Company was active in the enterprise and that company, although only one of six, became responsible for thirty per cent. of the required financing. In United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324, 351, this court characterized what was done by this combination, under the leadership of the Holding Company, in these terms: [****39]

"The New York, Wyoming & Western Railroad Company was successfully strangled, and the monopoly of transportation collectively held by the six defendant carrier companies was maintained."

And, again, at p. 355:

"We are in entire accord with the view of the court below in holding that the transaction involved a concerted scheme and combination for the purpose of restraining commerce among the States in plain violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890."

About the year 1900 the Holding Company and many other initial anthracite [***776] carriers and their controlled coal companies, pursuant to an agreement with each other, made separate agreements with nearly all of the independent producers of coal along their lines, to purchase at the mines "all the anthracite coal thereafter mined from any of their mines now opened or operated or which might thereafter be opened and operated," and to pay [**430] therefor [*50] 65% of the average price of coal prevailing at tidewater points at or near New York, computed from month to month. In the case above cited, this court discussed these contracts and declared: that they were made for the purpose of eliminating the competition [****40] of independent operators from the markets and thus removing "a menace to the monopoly of transportation to tidewater which the defendants collectively possessed"; that before these contracts, there existed not only the power to compete but actual competition between the coal of the independents and that produced by the buying defendants, but that after the contracts were made "such competition was impracticable"; that the case fell well within not only the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases, 221 U.S. 1, 106, but was of such an unreasonable character as to be "within the authority of a long line of cases decided by this court;" and finally that the defendants had combined, by and through the instrumentality of the 65% contracts with the purpose and design of unlawfully controlling the sale of the independent output of coal at tidewater.

Thus, this court held that once within two years and again within four years after it was organized, this Holding Company used the great power which we have seen was centered in its board of directors, by adroit division of property and of corporate agency, for the purpose of violating, in a flagrant manner, the Anti-Trust Act of 1890.

Almost [****41] immediately after the two attempts to monopolize the trade in anthracite thus condemned by this court, the Holding Company, in January, 1901, purchased a controlling interest in the capital stock of the Central Railroad Company. When this suit was commenced that company was operating 675 miles of track, over which it carried in 1913, 10,783,000 tons of anthracite, -- almost one-half of its total freight traffic. Its capital stock was then $ 27,436,000 and its funded debt was $ 46,881,000.

This Central Company owned, at the time, in excess of [*51] eleven-twelfths of the capital stock of the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, with a capital stock of over $ 9,000,000 and a funded debt of about $ 17,000,000. And that company owned or had leased in excess of 14,000 acres of coal bearing lands -- 13,000 acres in the Wyoming field -- and in the year ending June 30, 1913, it shipped from its lands thus owned or controlled, 6,243,000 tons of coal, which was sold for over $ 20,000,000.

Immediately after this purchase, the president of the Holding Company, Mr. Baer, was made president of the Central Railroad Company and of the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, and remained such until his death, [****42] after the commencement of this suit, and from one-third to one-half of the directors of each company were thereafter chosen from the board of the Holding Company. Thus from the time of this purchase both companies have been actively dominated by the Holding Company management.

Í G HÁWEJEG ÍÍ FLÁ €AUÉODÁG G ÍÍ HELÁ I ÁSEÓdAÍ Í ÉÍÍÍ I Í LAFJCEÁWEJESÓYQÁFI ÍÍ ÁÍÍÍ G

It is argued that the Central Railroad, thus acquired, and the Reading system were not competitors, but this question is put beyond discussion by the testimony of Mr. Baer, the president of the Reading Company, and his immediate predecessor in office, Mr. Harris. The former testified:

"Q. You are president of the defendants, the Reading Company, Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company, Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company and the Temple Iron Company?"

"A. I am. . . ."

"Q. What do you regard as the competitors of the Philadelphia and Reading now in New York Harbor, as to anthracite coal? . . .

"A. All the companies that ship to New York. They would be the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Lehigh Valley, the Delaware and Lackawanna, the Delaware and Hudson, [*52] the Erie, Ontario and Western. I guess [****43] those are all the roads leading to New York directly or indirectly. [He did not name the Central Company because it was a part of the Reading system when he testified.]"

"Q. Those roads are all carrying anthracite coal to the New York harbor?

"A. Yes, sir."

"Q. And you regard them as competitors [***777] who must be considered in fixing rates?

"A. Yes, sir; unquestionably." Mr. Harris testified:

"Q. During the time that you were president of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company, from 1893 to 1901, what were the competitive roads in the coal trade with which you came in competition?

"A. We came in competition with all the roads that were carrying coal from Pennsylvania."

"Q. Name the principal ones in reference to carrying coal from the coal mines to New York harbor.

"A. The Reading, the Lehigh Valley, the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, the Erie, and the Pennsylvania Railroad."

That the Reading Coal Company and the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company were competitors before the latter passed under the control of the Holding Company is obvious, but Mr. Baer pur this also beyond dispute by testifying:

"Q. Prior to 1901 [****44] were the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company and the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Company competitors as sellers of coal in New York harbor?"

"A. Yes; and they are today."

"Q. And generally throughout the eastern territory they were competitors at that time?"

"A. Yes, sir; through that northern territory. Not in this territory, nor in the southern."

[**431] Thus, by this purchase, the Reading Holding Company [*53] acquired complete control, not only of one of the largest competitive anthracite carriers, but also of one of the largest competitive coal producing and selling companies, in the country. The anthracite tonnage of the Central and Reading Railway Companies thus combined, exceeded, at the time, 18,000,000 tons, -- over one-third of the then total production of the country, -- and the revenue derived from it was more than one-third of the total earnings of the two railroad companies.

In 1915 the Interstate Commerce Commission concluded an investigation of the "Rates, practices, rules and regulations governing the transportation of anthracite coal," which had been in progress for three years. The eleven initial anthracite carriers which have lines [***45] penetrating the coal producing region were required to furnish special reports as to their anthracite coal transportation operations, and they appeared and participated in the hearing. The result of this exhaustive investigation was that the Commission found: that since about 1901, with variations and exceptions which are negligible here, the carriers have had the same fixed and flat rates to tidewater, regardless of the distance and character of the haul; that these rates were the result of cooperation or combination among the carriers; and that they were excessive to such an extent that material reductions by all of the carriers were ordered, including, of course, those of the Central and Reading companies. The Commission also found, and this appears in the record of this case, that the Reading Coal Company had never paid any dividends on its stock, and that, while the books of the Holding Company showed the Coal Company to have been indebted to it in a sum exceeding $ 68,000,000 for advances of capital made by the Reading Railroad Company before the reorganization in 1896, it has paid interest thereon only occasionally and in such small amounts that up to 1913 it fell short [***46] by more than $ 30,000,000 of equaling 4% per [*54] annum on the indebtedness. In the meantime advances of large sums had been made by the Holding Company to the Coal Company and unusual credits had been allowed the latter in the payment of its freight bills. This dealing of the Holding Company with the Reading Coal Company, and similar dealing of the Central Company with the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company and the Navigation Company are denounced by the Commission as unlawful discrimination against other shippers of coal over the rails of these two companies, and, obviously, such favoritism tends to discourage competition and to unduly restrain interstate commerce.

Í HÁWEAG ÍÍ HLÁ ÉUÉDÁG ÍÍ HFLÁ I ÁSÓAÍ Í ÉÍÍÍ IÍ LÁJGEÁWÉSÓYÓÁFI IÍ ÁÍÍÍ I

Upon this history of the transactions involved, not controverted save as to some findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we must proceed to judgment, and very certainly it makes a case calling for the application of repeated decisions of this court, which clearly rule it.

It will be convenient to first dispose of several minor contentions.

In 1871 the Navigation Company leased the Lehigh & Susquehanna Railroad, which it owned, to the Central Railroad Company, by an instrument containing a covenant which the [***47] Government [***778] claims requires the Navigation Company to ship to market over the leased line three-fourths of all of the coal which it should produce in the future. This covenant has been amended and supplemented by several agreements but not so as to essentially modify it with respect to the contention we are to consider.

It is argued that this covenant necessarily imposed an undue restriction upon the Navigation Company in selecting its markets and in shipping its coal, in violation of the Anti-Trust Act.

It is not entirely clear that the covenant will bear the restrictive interpretation as to shipments which the [*55] Government puts upon it, but, assuming that it may be so interpreted, nevertheless, the conditions and circumstances of the case considered, the result contended for cannot be allowed.

When the lease was made, in 1871, the Central Railroad extended from Jersey City to its western terminus at Phillipsburg, New Jersey, and it was without access to the coal fields. The Lehigh and Susquehanna Railroad was about 100 miles in length and extended from Phillipsburg into the Wyoming field, where the Navigation Company owned extensive coal producing properties [***48] and mines. The lines of the two companies were in no sense competitive, but, on the contrary, the Lehigh and Susquehanna line served as a natural extension of the Central Company's lines to the great tonnage producing coal districts. The rental to be paid was one-third of the gross earnings of the railroad and it was natural and "normal" that the lessor should desire that the traffic should continue to be as large as possible. Plainly this covenant was not written with the purpose of suppressing interstate commerce and the history of its operation shows that, instead of suppressing it, it has greatly promoted it. The claim is quite too insubstantial to be entertained and the decree of the District Court with respect to it will be affirmed and the bill, as to it, dismissed.

In many leases for the operation of coal producing lands the Reading Coal Company and the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company incorporated a covenant that the lessee should ship all coal mined by rail routes, which were named or which were to be designated. Since this covenant was resorted to as a part of the scheme to control the mining and transportation of coal, which is condemned [**432] as unlawful in this [***49] opinion, the decree of the

Í LÁ É Ü Ó DÁ G Í HGLÁ I Á SE Ó A É I É TÉ I Í LÁ J G É Á N É Ü SÓ Y Q Á F I Í I É TÉ J

District Court enjoining the lessors and the other defendants herein from attempting to enforce such covenants will be affirmed.

The other charges against the Lehigh Coal and Navigation [*56] Company and the case stated in the bill with respect to the Wilmington & Northern Railroad Company, the Lehigh & Hudson River Railway Company, and the Lehigh & New England Railroad Company are substantially abandoned in the Government's brief and, having regard to the results arrived at with respect to the principal defendants, the ends of justice will be best served by dismissing the bill as to all of these defendants, without prejudice, as was done by the District Court as to all but the Wilmington and Northern Railroad Company, as to which the dismissal was unqualified. A majority of the individual defendants have died since the suit was instituted and their successors in office have not been made parties, and, since the conclusion to be announced can be given full effect by an appropriate decree against the corporation defendants, the case as against the remaining individual defendants need not be considered, and as to them the bill will be dismissed without [****50] prejudice.

We are thus brought to the consideration of what the decree shall be with respect to the really important defendants in the case, the three Reading companies, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company.

Before the reorganization of 1896 the gathering of more than two-thirds of the acreage of the Schuylkill field into the control of the two Reading Companies was, as their reports show, for the frankly avowed purpose, then not forbidden by statute, of monopolizing the production, transportation and sale of the anthracite coal of the largest of the three sources of supply.

When in 1896 the problem was presented of reorganizing the financial affairs of the two companies, it was not solved, as it might have been, by creating separate coal and railroad companies to conduct independently interstate commerce in the two departments to which their railroad and coal properties were adapted, but, on the [*57] contrary, and very obviously for the purpose of evading the provision of the constitution of Pennsylvania prohibiting any incorporated common carrier from, directly or indirectly, engaging in mining "articles" for transportation over [***51] its lines (Constitution of Pennsylvania, 1874, Art. 17, § 5), and also of evading [***779] the provisions of the Federal Anti-Trust Act against restraining and monopolizing interstate commerce, resort was had to the holding company device, by which one company was given unrestricted control over the other two, with the power, inherent in that from of organization, of continuing and carrying forward the restraint and monopoly which had previously been acquired over that large volume of interstate commerce which was to be conducted by the coal and railroad companies.

Again, when in 1901 a rivalry, imaginary or real, arose for the control of the Central Railroad Company, the Holding Company, regardless of the law, did not hesitate to purchase control of that great competing anthracite coal carrying system, with its extensive coal owning and mining subsidiary. This acquisition placed the Holding Company in a position of dominating control not only over two great competing interstate railroad carriers but also over two great competing coal companies, engaged extensively in mining and selling anthracite coal, which must be transported to interstate markets over the controlled interstate [***52] lines of railway.

Again, and obviously, HN1[ this dominating power was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management, but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control.

That such a power, so obtained, regardless of the use made of it, constitutes a menace to and an undue restraint upon interstate commerce within the meaning of the Anti-Trust Act, has been frequently held by this court.

[*58] Thus, in Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 327, when dealing with a holding company, such as we have here, this court, in 1903, held:

"No scheme or device could more certainly come within the words of the act -- 'combination in the form of a trust or otherwise . . . in restraint of commerce among the several States or with foreign nations,' -- or could more effectively and certainly suppress free competition between the constituent companies. . . . *The mere existence of such a combination and the power acquired by the holding company as its trustee, constitute a menace to, and a restraint upon, that freedom of commerce which Congress intended to recognize and protect, and [****53] which the public is entitled to have protected."*

GI HÀM VỀ GIÁM SÁT TÙNG MÃI VÀ GIÁM SÁT HÀNG HÓA TÙNG MÃI

And again, in United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 226 U.S. 61, 88, decided nine years later, in 1912, this court held:

"The consolidation of two great competing systems of railroad engaged in interstate commerce by transfer to one of a dominating stock interest in the other creates a combination which restrains interstate commerce within the meaning of the statute, because, in destroying or greatly abridging the free operation of competition theretofore existing, it tends to higher rates. . . . Nor does it make any difference that rates for the time being may not be raised and much money be spent in improvements after [**433] the combination is effected. It is the scope of such combinations and their power to suppress or stifle competition or create monopoly which determines the applicability of the act."

It will suffice to add that this doctrine was referred to as the settled conclusion of this court, in 1914, when discussing a similar state Anti-Trust Act in International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U.S. 199, 209, it was said:

"The specification under this head is that the Supreme Court [of ****54] Missouri found, it is contended, benefit -- not [*59] injury -- to the public had resulted from the alleged combination. Granting that this is not an overstatement of the opinion the answer is immediate. It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intention and has had some good effect. . . . The purpose of such statutes is to secure competition and preclude combinations which tend to defeat it."

Thus, this record clearly shows a group of men selecting the Holding Company with an "omnibus" charter and not only investing it by stock control with such complete dominion over two great competing interstate carriers and over two great competing coal companies extensively engaged in interstate commerce in anthracite coal as to bring it, without more, within the condemnation of the Anti-Trust Act, but it also shows that this power of control was actually used, once successfully, to suppress the building of a prospective competitive railway line, and a second time, successfully until this court condemned the 65% contracts as illegal, to suppress the last prospect of competition [****55] in anthracite production and transportation. To this it must be added that up to the time when this suit was commenced [***780] this Holding Company had continued in active, dominating control of the Reading Railway Company and of the competing Central Railroad system, and also of the two coal companies, thus effectually suppressing all competition between the four companies and pooling their earnings. It is difficult to imagine a clearer case and in all essential particulars it rests on undisputed conduct and upon perfectly established law. It is ruled by many decisions of this court, but specifically and clearly by United States v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., supra.

For flagrant violation of the first and second sections of the Anti-Trust Act, the relations between the Reading [*60] Company, the Reading Railway Company and the Reading Coal Company and between these companies and the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey must be so dissolved as to give to each of them a position in all respects independent and free from stock or other control of either of the other corporations.

With respect to the contention that the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906, [****56] 34 Stat. 584, 585, is being violated by the Reading Railway Company and the Central Railroad Company:

The Circuit Judges centering their attention: upon the fact that the Reading Railway Company did not own any of the stock of the Reading Coal Company; that the two companies had separate forces of operative and separate accounting systems; and upon the importance of maintaining "the theory of separate corporate entity" as a legal doctrine, concluded, upon the authority of United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U.S. 366, 413, that the evidence did not justify holding that in transporting the products of the Reading Coal Company's mines to market the Reading Railway Company was carrying a commodity "mined, or produced by it, or under its authority" or which it owned "in whole, or in part," or in which it had "any interest direct or indirect."

GI HÀM VỀ GIÁM SÁT CỦA ỦY ĐỘNG GIÁ TRONG HỘI KỶ LÃM TỔ QUỐC MỸ VÀ NHỮNG QUYỀN LỰA CHỌN CỦA ỦY ĐỘNG GIÁ

But the question which we have presented by this branch of the case is not the technical one of whether ownership by a railroad company of stock in a coal company renders it unlawful for the former to carry the product of the latter, for here the railroad company did not own any of the stock of the coal company. The real question [****57] is whether combining in a single corporation the ownership of all of the stock of a carrier and of all of the stock of a coal company results in such community of interest or title in the product of the latter as to bring the case within the scope of the provisions of the act.

The purpose of the commodity clause was to put an [*61] end to the injustice to the shipping public, which experience had shown to result from discriminations of various kinds, which inevitably grew up where a railroad company occupied the inconsistent positions of carrier and shipper. Plainly in such a case as we have here this evil would be present as fully as if the title to both the coal lands and the railroads were in the Holding Company, for all of the profits realized from the operations of the two must find their way ultimately into its treasury, -- any discriminating practice which would harm the general shipper would profit the Holding Company. Being thus clearly within the evil to be remedied, there remains the question whether such a controlling stock ownership in a corporation is fairly within the scope of the language of the statute.

In terms the act declares that it shall be unlawful [****58] for any railroad company to transport in interstate commerce "any article or commodity . . . mined, or produced by it, or under its authority, or which it may [**434] own in whole, or in part, or in which it may have any interest direct or indirect."

Accepting the risk of obscuring the obvious by discussing it, and without splitting hairs as to where the naked legal title to the coal would be when in transit, we may be sure that it was mined and produced under the same "authority" that transported it over the railroad. All three of the Reading companies had the same officers and directors and it was under their authority that the mines were worked and the railroad operated, and they exercised that authority in the one case in precisely the same character as in the other -- as officials of the Holding Company. The manner in which the stock of the three was held resulted, and was intended to result, in the abdication of all independent corporate action by both the Railway Company and the Coal Company, involving as it did the surrender to the Holding Company of the entire [*62] conduct of their affairs. It would be to subordinate reality to legal form to hold that the coal [****59] mined by the Coal Company, under direction of the Holding Company's officials, was not produced by the same "authority" that operated the Reading Railway lines. [***781] The case falls clearly within the scope of the act, and for the violation of this commodity clause, as well as for its violation of the Anti-Trust Act, the combination between the Reading Railway Company and the Reading Coal Company must be dissolved.

The relation between the Central Railroad Company and the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company presents a different question, for here the Railroad Company owns over eleven-twelfths of the stock of the Coal Company, and therefore the holding in 213 U.S. 366, supra, is especially pressed in argument, -- that the ownership of stock by a railroad company in a coal company does not cause the former to have such an interest in a legal or equitable sense in the product of the latter as to bring it within the prohibition of the act. But this holding was considered in United States v. Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 220 U.S. 257, 272, and it was there held not applicable where a railroad company used its stock ownership for the purpose of securing a complete control over the [****60] affairs of a coal company, and of treating it as a mere agency or department of the owning company. This rule was repeated and applied in United States v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R.R. Co., 238 U.S. 516, 529. It results that it may confidently be stated that the law upon this subject now is, that HN2[↑] while the ownership by a railroad company of shares of the capital stock of a mining company does not necessarily create an identity of corporate interest between the two such as to render it unlawful under the commodities clause for the railroad company to transport in interstate commerce the products of such mining company, yet where such ownership of stock is resorted to, not for [*63] the purpose of participating in the affairs of the corporation in which it is held in a manner normal and usual with stockholders, but for the purpose of making it a mere agent, or instrumentality or department of another company, the courts will look through the forms to the realities of the relation between the companies as if the corporate agency did not exist and will deal with them as the justice of the case may require. United States v.

GI HÀM VỀ GIÁM SÁT HÀNG HÓA VÀ THỦ TỤC QUỐC TẾ TẠI VIỆT NAM

Lehigh Valley R.R. Co., 220 U.S. 257, [****61] 272, 273; United States v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R.R. Co., 238 U.S. 516, 529; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. Co. v. Minneapolis Civic & Commerce Association, 247 U.S. 490, 501.

Applying this rule of law to the relation between the Central Railroad Company and the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, with the former owning over eleven-twelfths of the capital stock of the latter and using it as the coal mining department of its organization, we cannot doubt that it falls within the condemnation of the commodities clause and that this relation must also, for this reason, be dissolved.

It results that the decree of the District Court will be affirmed, as to the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, the Lehigh and New England Railroad Company, the Lehigh and Hudson River Railway Company, as to the restrictive covenants in the mining leases with respect to the shipping of coal, as to the dissolution of the combination between the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company and the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, maintained through the Reading Company and the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey. As to the Wilmington and Northern Railroad Company and as to [****62] the individual defendants, the bill will be dismissed without prejudice. As to the Reading Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company and the [*64] Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, the decree of the District Court will be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to enter a decree in conformity with this opinion, dissolving the combination of the Reading Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, existing and maintained through the Reading Company, with such provision for the disposition of the shares of stock and bonds and other property [**435] of the various companies, held by the Reading Company, as may be necessary to establish the entire independence from that company and form each other, of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, and also that such disposition shall be made by the decree of the stocks [****63] and bonds of the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, held by the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, as may be necessary to establish entire independence between these two companies to the end that the affairs of all of these now combined companies may be conducted in harmony with the law.

[***782] Affirmed in part; reversed in part, and remanded with direction to enter a decree in conformity with this opinion.

Dissent by: WHITE

Dissent

---

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE, MR. JUSTICE HOLMES and MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER, dissenting.

Except in so far as the decree below commanded a separation of interest between the Central Railroad of New Jersey and the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, the court below dismissed, for want of equity, the bill of the United States brought to sever the existing relations [*65] between the Reading Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company, the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, and other corporations, on the ground that the relations between those companies resulted in a monopoly or combination in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act and gave [****64] rise to a disregard of the commodities clause of the act of Congress.

By the opinion now announced, this action of the court below, in so far as it directed a dismissal, is reversed and virtually the full relief prayed by the Government is therefore granted. We are unable to concur in this conclusion because in our opinion neither the contentions as to the Sherman Act, nor the reliance upon the commodities clause, except to the extent that in the particulars stated they were sustained by the court below, have any foundation to rest upon. We do not state at any length the reasons which lead us to this view because the court below, composed of three circuit judges, in a comprehensive and clear opinion announced by McPherson, Judge, sustains the correctness of the action which it took and also demonstrates the error involved in the decree of this court reversing its action. United States v. Reading Co., 226 Fed. Rep. 229. To that opinion we therefore refer as stating the reasons for our dissent.

GI HÁWEÉG ÉÉH Í LÁ EÜÉODA G ÉÉH HÍ LÀ I ASÉOaÉA Í ÉÉH Í GLÁJCEÁWEÉSOYQÁFI Ì Í ÉÉH Í

---

End of Document

McMaster v. Ford Motor Co.

Supreme Court of South Carolina

May 19, 1920, Decided

19267

Reporter

114 S.C. 100 *; 103 S.E. 87 **; 1920 S.C. LEXIS 90 ***

MCMASTER v. FORD MOTOR COMPANY ET AL.

Prior History: [***1] Before MEMMINGER, J., Richland, Spring term, 1918. Reversed.

Action by Samuel B. McMaster against the Ford Motor Company and others. From an order overruling a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, defendants appeal.

Disposition: Reversed.

Core Terms

---

cause of action, gauge, invention

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN1[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

The State Courts have no jurisdiction of an original action brought under the act of Congress to obtain the relief therein provided for. No binding decision directly in point is cited, but the conclusion stated is in harmony with the general principles that where a statute creates a new offense and denounces the penalty, or gives a new right and declares the remedy, the punishment or the remedy can be only that which the statute prescribes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Statutory Sources

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN2 [blue square icon] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

The Antitrust Act of Congress, U. S. Comp. St., §§ 8820-8823, 8827-8830, provides for the administration of the remedies therein prescribed by the Federal Courts. While there are no words expressly excluding the jurisdiction of the State Courts, such exclusion is implied, on the principle of, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." The reasoning of the United States Supreme Court strongly favors the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Courts to administer the remedies provided by the statute. It does not mean that the State Courts would not have jurisdiction to give effect to the statute in some circumstances, as where the validity of contracts in violation thereof is drawn in question in actions of which they have jurisdiction to give relief other than that provided by the statute.

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes

1. MONOPOLIES -- ACTS OF AUTOMOBILE COMPANY AND AGENTS IN ATTEMPTING TO RESTRICT USE OF DEVICE HELD NOT ACTIONABLE UNDER ANTITRUST LAW. -- A complaint against an automobile manufacturing company alleging that plaintiff had invented a device to increase the axle distance between wheels of narrow gauge motor vehicles, that the company had forbidden its agents, who were plaintiff's natural customers, to handle plaintiff's device on pain of forfeiting their agency, and that the agents had agreed to comply with such requirement and had advised their customers not to use the device, and had threatened the guaranty under which their cars were sold if plaintiff's device should be attached thereto, held insufficient to show a cause of action under the Federal Antitrust Law (U. S. Comp. St., secs. 8820-8823, 8827-8830); the restraint of commerce being an incidental, and not the dominant, purpose of defendants' actions.

2. COURTS -- STATE COURTS HAVE NO JURISDICTION OF ACTION UNDER FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAW. -- State Courts have no jurisdiction of an original action under the Federal Antitrust Law (U. S. Comp. St., secs. 8820-8823, 8827-8830) to obtain the relief therein provided for under the rule, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius."

Counsel: Messrs. Wm. Elliott, W. C. McLain and C. S. Monteith, for appellants, submit: The complaint herein states a cause of action entirely within the purview of the act of Congress of July 2, known as the Sherman Act: 208 U.S. 274; 131 F. 82; 193 U.S. 38; 175 U.S. 211; 226 U.S. 20; 120 U.S. 120; 187 U.S. 622; 106 F. 38; 221 U.S. 418; 226 U.S. 525; 234 U.S. 500; 241 U.S. 257; 76 S.E. 513; 218 U.S. 601; 166 F. 251; 221 U.S. 1; 226 U.S. 61; 108 F. 909. A cause of action arising under, or entirely within the purview of, the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States Courts: 130 F. 633; 221 U.S. 1; 82 Federalist 4 Wall. \(U. S.\) 535; 93 U.S. 136; 204 U.S. 426; 202 U.S. 243; 215 U.S. 481; 222 U.S. 506; 222 U.S. 424; 164 N.Y. S. 626, and cases cited; 236 U.S. 165; 73 Ala. 390; 51 L. R. A. 151; 12 L. R. A. 725.

Messrs. E. L. Craig, H. N. Edmunds and Mendel L. Smith, for respondent. Mr. Craig submits: The unlawful [***2] interference with the business of another is actionable at common law: 43 L. R. A. 801 (Ill. Sup. Ct.); 175 U.S. 241; 208 U.S., pp. 294-6; 8 Cyc., p. 650; 176 Ill. 608, 614; 8 Cyc., p. 651; 10 L. R. A. 184; 31 Neb. 411; 75 N.Y. App. Div. 145; 8 Cyc., p. 652; 25 S.W. 428; 8 Cyc. 653; (N. J.) 10 L. R. A. 184; 25 Cyc., p. 558; (Cal.) 13 L. R. A. 707. The Sherman Act did not supersede the common law, but supplemented it: 208 U.S. 294; 123 Minn. 47; L. R. A.

1915b, 1182 (Syllabus). The Sherman Act has not the remotest applicability to the case at bar: 171 U.S. 518; 213 L. Ed. 290; 19 S. Ct. 40; 200 U.S. 179; 175 U.S. 211; 44 L. Ed. 136; 20 Supt. Ct. Rep. 25.

Mr. Edmunds submits: The action is a common law action: 162 F. 803, 817-20; 83 F. 912; 176 Ill. 608; 68 Am. Stat. Rep. 213; 52 N. J. Law 284; 10 L. R. A. 184; 111 U.S. 762; 165 U.S. 589; 221 U.S. 1-52-56. The Federal statute does not take from one rights which he has at common law or under the statute law of the several States: 221 U.S. 106; 87 S.C. 18. The statute is in aid of common law: Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes, secs. 3141-2 (Edition 1888). Plaintiff did not invoke the benefits of the Sherman Act: 152 U.S. 454; [***3] 155 U.S. 102; 155 U.S. 482; 155 U.S. 488; 16 L. R. A. 593. As to the right of respondent to maintain this action: 241 257; 177 Mass. 485, 487; 528 L. R. A. 115; 83 Am. St. Rep. 28; 59 N.E. 125. Where a violent or malicious act is done to a man's occupation, profession or way of getting a livelihood, then an action lies in all cases: Addison on Torts, sec. 22 (Wood's Edition).

Messrs. Craig, Edmunds and M. L. Smith, submit (on the motion for a rehearing, or a modification of the opinion filed): That the opinion of the Court should be confined to the question raised by the appeal, and the decision limited to the question raised by the exceptions: 90 S.C. 222; 110 S.C. 122. The plaintiff would have the right to apply for leave to amend his complaint at any time before trial, to remedy any deficit in his pleading: 81 S.C. 574; 80 S.C. 1; 80 S.C. 213; 82 S.C. 1; 85 S.C. 259; 90 S.C. 229; 91 S.C. 51; 101 S.C. 86.

Judges: MR. JUSTICE HYDRICK.

Opinion by: HYDRICK

Opinion

[**87] [**102] The opinion of the Court was delivered by MR. JUSTICE HYDRICK.

Defendants appeal from an order overruling their demurer to plaintiff's complaint. Plaintiff attempted to set up two causes of action for damages: [***4] In the first he alleges a [*103] conspiracy to deprive him of his right to trade with the customary tradesmen (the agents of Ford Motor Company) for the marketing of his patented device for use on Ford cars. In the second he charges defendants with slandering said device. The complaint is too long and prolix in statement and contains too much unnecessary repetition to be reported. We state the substance of it sufficiently to elucidate the points decided.

The action is against Ford Motor Company, a corporation of the State of Michigan, engaged in manufacturing and selling Ford cars throughout the United States, by and through its agents, each of whom is given exclusive rights in certain territory, and four of its agents so engaged in their respective States, to wit, Cuthbert Motor Company, a corporation of the State of Georgia; Universal Auto Company, a corporation of the State of North Carolina, and DuPre Auto Company, a corporation, and Shifley & Frith, a copartnership of this State.

Plaintiff alleges that he invented and patented a device by which the axle distance [**88] between the wheels of narrow gauge motor vehicles, which is 56 inches, can be increased so as to make [***5] it the same as that of broad gauge vehicles, which is 60 inches, and make the wheels of the former track in the ruts made in the roads by the latter, and thereby save much strain on the steering gears and machinery of cars to which it is attached, without interfering with any part thereof, and add much to the safety and comfort of the driver and occupants thereof; that it is especially valuable and useful to the owners of narrow gauge cars in this and nine other Southern States named, in which the vehicles most used are broad gauge, and where, therefore, the ruts made by them in the roads are too wide apart for narrow gauge vehicles to follow in them; that Ford Motor Company manufactures narrow gauge cars exclusively, and sells a great number of them in this and the nine other States [*104] named, by and through its agents, who are the natural and customary dealers to whom the owners of such cars apply for parts and devices suitable thereto, and, therefore, these agents afford the natural and practically the exclusive market for the sale of his invention, which is peculiarly suitable to Ford cars, and is known to the trade as "McMaster's broad gauge attachment for Ford cars;" [***6] that Ford Motor Company and the other defendants combined and conspired to deprive him of that market for his device, and did so, by the company requiring its agents to agree not to buy, sell, handle, or install his device on any of its cars, on pain of forfeiting their agencies, and by the agents agreeing to and complying with such requirement, and by their advising their customers against the use of it and condemning it, by threatening to cancel the guaranty under which said cars are sold if his device should be attached thereto.

The gist of the second cause of action that defendants combined and conspired to deprive plaintiff of the right to sell his invention to the individual owners of Ford cars who would have purchased it and accomplished that purpose by advising the purchasers of Ford cars not to install it thereon, and by threatening to cancel the warranty of said cars if it should be installed thereon; that they thereby condemned his invention as unfit for the purpose for which it was designed, and held him out as the manufacturer of a thing unfit for the purpose for which it was intended, which amounted to a slander of his invention and of himself as the manufacturer thereof; [***7] that all this was done with the malicious intent to injure him.

Defendants demurred on two grounds: First, that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action under the Antitrust Act of Congress (U. S. Comp. St., secs. 8820-8823, 8827-8830) or at common law; and, second, because, if any cause of action is stated, it is [*105] one solely under the act of Congress of which the State Courts have no jurisdiction.

The Court held that sufficient facts are alleged to constitute a cause of action under the Federal statute, and also at common law, and that the State Courts have jurisdiction of an action brought under the Federal statute, and overruled the demurrer.

The defendants' exceptions question only so much of the decision as holds that the facts alleged are sufficient to constitute a cause of action under the Federal statute, and that the State Courts have jurisdiction of such an action.

On hearing the appeal, we considered and decided all the grounds made by the demurrer. But the plaintiff filed a petition for a rehearing, or a modification of the opinion filed, on the ground that the question whether the complaint is sufficient to make out a [***8] cause of action at common law was not before us. That position is well taken, and our decision must be limited to the questions made by the exceptions. Therefore we have stricken out all of it, except so much as disposes of the two questions raised by the exceptions.

The facts alleged do not constitute a cause of action under the Federal statute. The contracts and combinations alleged and the conduct of defendants in pursuance thereof may remotely and indirectly interfere with, and incidentally result in restraining, plaintiff's trade in interstate commerce to some extent, but they do not come within the purview of the act of Congress, because such restraint is not the dominant purpose thereof, nor is it direct and substantial, nor is it unreasonable in law, since it is merely an incidental result of contracts and conduct which appear from the allegations of the complaint to be outside the scope of the act. We cite only a few of many cases in point. Hopkins v. United States, 171 U.S. 578, 19 S. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290; Bement v. National Harrow Co., <sup>1</sup>*1061 186 U.S. 70, 22 S. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058; Cincinnati Packing Co. v. Bay, 200 U.S. 179, 26 S. Ct. 208, 50 L. Ed. 428; [***9] Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ann. Cas. 1912d, 734; Virtue v. Creamery Package Co., 227 U.S. 8, 33 S. Ct. 202, 57 L. Ed. 393; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 125 F. 454, 60 C. C. A. 290, 64 L. R. A. 689.

HN1 [↑] The State Courts have no jurisdiction of an original action brought under the act of Congress to obtain the relief therein provided for. No binding decision directly in point has been cited, but the conclusion stated is in harmony with the general principles that "Where a statute creates a new offense and denounces the penalty, or gives a new right and declares the remedy, the punishment or the remedy can be only that which the statute [**89] prescribes." Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Dearing, 91 U.S. 29, 35, 23 L. Ed. 196.

HN2 [↑] The act provides for the administration of the remedies therein prescribed by the Federal Courts. While there are no words expressly excluding the jurisdiction of the State Courts, such exclusion is implied, on the principle of, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." In Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Co., 236 U.S. 165, 174, 35 S. Ct. 398, 59 L. Ed. 520, [***10] Ann. Cas. 1916a, 118, the reasoning of the Court strongly favors the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Courts to administer the remedies provided by the statute. We do not mean that the State

FFI AUDEEEAE LAFHUADEA I EAE JIAFJOEADESOYQAAEAE

Courts would not have jurisdiction to give effect to the statute in some circumstances, as where the validity of contracts in violation thereof is drawn in question in actions of which they have jurisdiction to give relief other than that provided by the statute.

The judgment of this Court is that so much of the order appealed from as holding that the facts alleged in the complaint [*107] are sufficient to constitute a cause of action under the Federal statute and that the State Courts have jurisdiction of such an action be reversed. The order staying the remittitur is revoked.

Reversed.

---

End of Document

Coca-Cola Co. v. Vivian Ice, Light & Water Co.

Supreme Court of Louisiana

May 31, 1920, Decided

No. 22686

Reporter

150 La. 445 *; 90 So. 755 **; 1920 La. LEXIS 1875 ***

COCA-COLA CO. et al. v. VIVIAN ICE, LIGHT & WATER CO.

Subsequent History: [***1] On Rehearing, January 30, 1922

Prior History: Appeal from First Judicial District Court, Parish of Caddo; T. F. Bell, Judge.

Action by the Coca-Cola Company and others against the Vivian Ice, Light & Water Company in damages and for an injunction to restrain illegal use of trademark. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Disposition: Modified and affirmed on rehearing.

Core Terms

---

trade-mark, syrup, bottling, beverage, manufacturer, contracts, damages, injunction, fountains, packages, patented, monopoly, purposes, bottler, selling, drink

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Civil Actions > Remedies > Injunctions

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Registration Procedures > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Registration Procedures > State Registration

Trademark Law > ... > Counterfeiting > Trademark Counterfeiting Act > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Civil Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN1 [] Civil Actions, Injunctions

1898 La. Acts 49, § 3, after providing for the registration of a trademark and the description of the merchandise to be covered by it, provides that no other person, etc., has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as may be calculated to deceive. 1898 La. Acts 49, § 5 provides that every such person (the owner) may proceed by suit to enjoin the manufacture, use, display or sale of any counterfeits or imitations thereof, and the courts shall have the right to grant injunctions restraining such use, etc.

Trademark Law > ... > Counterfeiting > Trademark Counterfeiting Act > General Overview

HN2 Counterfeiting, Trademark Counterfeiting Act

A trademark is designed, not only for the protection of the owner of same, but as well for the protection of the purchasing public; it is a guaranty that the buyer is getting the very article signified by the trademark; it is a guaranty by the manufacturer himself that the receptacle contains the very contents intended to be covered by that trademark.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The owner of a trademark has the right to maintain the integrity of his product by controlling the use of his basic ingredient, to the extent of granting exclusive licenses and maintaining a system of inspection of the final product as sold to the consumer, and such contracts were not in violation of the Sherman Law or the Clayton Law, 26 Stat. 209; 38 Stat. 730.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Distribution, Processing & Storage

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Labels, Packaging & Trade Dress

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Commercial Use > Affixation Required

Trademark Law > ... > Counterfeiting > Trademark Counterfeiting Act > General Overview

HN4 Agriculture & Food, Distribution, Processing & Storage of Food & Agricultural Products

When a manufacturer of an article of food or drink sells it in bulk, and also puts it up in bottles bearing a distinctive trademark, the purchaser of the article in bulk cannot legally bottle it and affix the manufacturer's label to the bottle.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

150 La. 445, *445La. So. 755, **755La. 920 La. LEXIS 1875, ***1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

HN5 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The invalidity, under Sherman Anti-Trust, Act July 2, 1890, c. 647; 26 Stat. 209; Comp. St. 1913, §§ 8820-8830, of contracts by which the owner of a trademark covering both a syrup and the beverage made therefrom granted the exclusive right to bottle the beverage, does not affect the owner's right to prevent the sale of the beverage under the trademark by one who bottled it without consent.

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > General Overview

HN6 Trademark Law, Trademark Cancellation & Establishment

A trademark gives the owner of it something in the nature of a monopoly; a monopoly not in the article sold under the trademark, perhaps, but a monopoly of that article as sold under the trademark. It does not give such a monopoly as does a patent, but it is a monopoly nevertheless, and one that cannot be taken away by any anti-trust law.

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN7 Remedies, Equitable Relief

See 1898 La. Acts 49, § 5.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 Judges, Discretionary Powers

The exact extent of the damages in a trademark infringement case is hard to ascertain, and it is the evident purpose of the legislature to allow a reasonable amount of discretion to the court in determining the amount to be awarded.

Counsel: Wise, Randolph, Rendall & Freyer, of Shreveport, for appellant.

Blanchard, Goldstein & Walker, of Shreveport, and Candler, Thompson & Hirsch, of Atlanta, Ga., for appellees.

Judges: DAWKINS, J. O'NIELL, J. dissents.

Opinion by: DAWKINS

Opinion

[*446] [**755] DAWKINS, J. This is an action in damages and for injunction to restrain the alleged illegal use of a trade-mark.

Defendant admits substantially the allegations of fact charged against it, but denies the conclusions of law drawn therefrom by the plaintiff.

There was judgment below in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $ 1,000, under the trade-mark statute of this state, enjoining the defendant from using the trade-name of the plaintiff, ordering it to account to the plaintiffs for the profits derived from the same, and that it deliver up to plaintiffs, or some [***2] one designated by them, "any and all bottles, crowns, labels, boxes, or advertising matter in its possession upon which appears the name 'Coco-Cola,' or in association with any other words, and also all of the products in a form sufficiently similar to the product of the plaintiffs to cause deception," and that plaintiffs be decreed to have the sole and exclusive use of the trade mark or name "Coca-Cola," in connection with any drink or beverage.

Defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[**756] Opinion.

The plaintiffs are the Coca-Cola Company, a Georgia corporation, the Coca-Cola Bottling Company, incorporated under the laws of [*447] Tennessee, and the Star Bottling Works, Limited, a Louisiana corporation. The Georgia corporation is what might be termed the parent company, owner and possessor of the trade-mark "Coca-Cola," and under which it manufactures two kinds of syrup bearing that name; one to be used in the preparation of a soft drink of the same name by soda fountains, which is sold to the trade generally, and the other to be used in putting up the beverage for distribution in bottles. The second syrup is distributed exclusively through the Tennessee corporation, which [***3] is required to make definite and specific contracts with those to whom the syrup is sold for bottling purposes, and under which certain well-defined restrictions are imposed as to the quantity and proportions of the syrup to be used, and as to the right of inspection by representatives of the Coca-Cola Company, in order to determine the sanitary conditions under which the bottled drink is to be made; the purpose being, it is alleged, to maintain a particular standard of purity and cleanliness to sustain the reputation of the beverage.

The formula for making the syrup is a secret one, but the record discloses that the kind furnished to soda fountains is not as strong as that intended for bottling purposes; the proportions of ingredients used being considerably dissimilar.

Defendant purchased a considerable quantity of the syrup intended for use at fountains, and by the use of a larger proportion than that intended for bottling, and adding some caramel syrup for coloring purposes, had been and was manufacturing, putting up, and selling in bottles to the trade generally a beverage with the name "Coca-Cola" stamped on the caps and blown into the bottles, and with the name Vivian Ice [***4] Company stamped thereon as the manufacturer or bottler.

The lower court has covered the case so [*448] admirably in its written opinion that we adopt and quote from the same at length as follows:

"There can be no dispute about plaintiffs being the owners of this trade-mark, both under the laws of the United States and of the state of Louisiana. Under the United States registration, it covered, not only the syrup, but the beverage or drink to be made from the syrup.

"Section 3 of Act 49 of 1898, HN1[] after providing for the registration of the trade-mark and the description of the merchandise to be covered by it, provides that 'No other person,' etc., 'has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as may be calculated to deceive.' Section 5 of this same act provides that 'Every such person [the owner] may proceed by suit to enjoin the manufacture, use, display or sale of any counterfeits or imitations thereof,' and the courts shall have the right to grant injunctions restraining such use, etc.

150 La. 445, *448L<sup>90</sup> So. 755, **756L<sup>920</sup> La. LEXIS 1875, ***4

"Defendant has undoubtedly used the trade-mark of plaintiffs without their consent, and under this act we do not think it makes any difference [***5] whether the article contained in the bottle was genuine Coca-Cola or not.

"But, irrespective of this state law, we shall discuss the case from the standpoint of the federal law.

HN2[] "A trade-mark is designed, not only for the protection of the owner of same, but as well for the protection of the purchasing public; it is a guaranty that the buyer is getting the very article signified by the trade-mark; it is a guaranty by the manufacturer himself that the receptacle contains the very contents intended to be covered by that trade-mark.

"We shall first take up for discussion the authorities cited by counsel for defendant, which authorities, it is contended, bear out the contention that these contracts are in violation of the anti-trust laws, and the equitable writ of injunction does not lie to maintain them.

"The first case is that of Adams v. Burke, 84 U.S. 453, 17 Wall. 453, 21 L. Ed. 700. All that was held in that case was that when a patented article was once sold the purchaser of same had the right to use it wherever he pleased, and that the right of use stood on a different footing from the right to make and sell.

"The next case is that of [Keeler v. Folding Bed Co., 157 U.S. 659, \[\*\*\*6\] 15 S. Ct. 738, 39 L. Ed. 848](#), in which the court said: 'One who buys patented articles of manufacture from one authorized to sell them within the territory of [*449] the purchase becomes possessed of an absolute property in such articles, unrestricted in time or place, and may sell them in other territory of other assignees of the patent, although he purchased them for the purpose of selling them in such other territory.' We do not think this case has any bearing; if the defendant had been selling the syrup in the original package under the original trade-mark, having purchased same and becoming the absolute owner thereof, then there would be some similarity of cases, and the defendant would have the right to so sell.

"The next case is that of Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U.S. 339, 28 S. Ct. 722, 52 L. Ed. 1086. In that case the plaintiff was attempting to fix the price of the copyrighted book by contract with the retailer, and the court held the same to be in restraint of trade: there was no question involved in that case of trade-mark, or the protection of the integrity of the goods represented by that trade-mark, but merely a price-fixing scheme, something that is not [***7] attempted in this case.

"The case of Miles Medicine Co. v. Park, 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502, was also nothing but a price-fixing scheme, which was held to be in restraint of trade.

"In the case of Park v. Hartman, 153 Feb. 24, 82 C. C. A. 158, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135, known as the Peruna Case, the question of infringement of a trade-mark or unfair competition did not arise; it was merely another attempt to fix prices for retailers by means of contracts with the retailers.

"In the Appollinaris Case \(C. C.\) 23 Blatchf. 459, 27 F. 18, it was the genuine 'Hunyadi-Janos' water as [**757] put out by the original bottler and owner of the trade-mark, and as bottled by the owner of the trade-mark.

"The case of Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co. (decided by the Supreme Court of the United States on April 9, 1917) 243 U.S. 502, 37 S. Ct. 416, 61 L. Ed. 871, L. R. A. 1917E, 1187, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 959, the attempt was made by way of a licensed patented machine, and notices stamped thereon, to limit the use of such machine to a certain class of pictures, and no other. The court held such contracts to be in restraint of trade. While that case shows the trend [***8] of the court, the case did not involve the vital principle involved in the present case.

"Practically the same principle in the last-quoted case was also involved in the case of Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U.S. 490, 37 S. Ct. 412, 61 L. Ed. 866, L. R. A. 1917E, 1196, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 955, also decided on April 9, 1917.

"Counsel for defendant also quotes the case [*450] of Coca-Cola Co. v. Bennett \(D. C.\) 225 F. 429, refusing an injunction on the ground that these contracts were in restraint of trade; counsel saying in the brief filed herein: "This contention as to the right to confine the sale to licensees for purposes of inspection, etc., was exploded by the federal court in the Bennett Case refusing injunction, which virtually denied the proposition dismissing the Coca-Cola claim, in which decree the Coca-Cola Company virtually agreed and took no appeal therefrom.<sup>1</sup> We shall discuss this case later on, but counsel is mistaken about the appeal, for an appeal was taken to the United States Court of Appeals, and the case reversed; the case on appeal being 238 F. 513, 151 C. C. A. 449.

"In the case of Krauss v. Peebles \(D. C.\) 58 F. 585, Judge Taft used the following [***9] significant and almost prophetic language: 'It is doubtful whether the sale of merchandise in bulk under a trade-mark of the maker carries with it as incident thereto the right in the vendee to use the same trade-mark as a trade-mark on smaller and retail packages. It is true that the vendee cannot be prevented from stating the truth in reference to his wares, and that he may place upon his packages the statement that their contents were made by the real maker, and that they were sold by him under his trade-mark, but it seems to me that it is a different thing for the vendee to use the trade-mark as such. Such use might be characterized as the use of the maker's sign manual to guarantee that the contents of the smaller packages are his manufacture, whereas the truth of the assertion depends wholly on the good faith of the vendee.' In this case the goods put out in the smaller packages were not exactly the same as the original goods, and not exactly the same as the smaller packages put out by the owner of the trade-mark, and it was held that the owner of the trade-mark had the right to protect the integrity of his goods, and that it made no difference whether the other goods were better [***10] or worse than those put out by the owner of the trade-mark, that it was a violation of the trade-mark and could be enjoined. See, also, the case of Hires v. Xepapas \(C. C.\) 180 F. 952, which was also a case of two syrups, one intended for bottling and one for fountain use, and the infringer attempted to use the fountain syrup for bottling, and it was held that the owner of the trade-mark had the right to protect the integrity of his goods.

"In the case of Coca-Cola Co. v. Butler \(D. C.\) 229 F. 224, exactly the same defense was made as in this case, and it was held that HN3<sup>1</sup> the owner of the trade-mark had the right to maintain [*451] the integrity of his product by controlling the use of his basic ingredient, to the extent of granting exclusive licenses and maintaining a system of inspection of the final product as sold to the consumer, and that such contracts were not in violation of the Sherman Law or the Clayton Law (26 Stat. 209; 38 Stat. 730). This decision was handed down by a United States District Judge, and so far as we can find, was never appealed, but it was quoted with approval by the United States Court of Appeals in the Bennett Case.

"In the Bennett Case, as it was [***11] decided by the lower court, it was the genuine bottler's syrup used, and this syrup was sold to Bennett for the very purpose for which he was using it. His right to bottle being revoked as regular licensed bottler (the company) took up the territory. Further, as the lower court stated, there was no question presented of the right of plaintiff to protect its business against unfair competition in the palming off by defendants of a spurious or inferior article for the goods manufactured from plaintiff's product, and there was, furthermore, no contention in that case as to the proper syrup for bottling purposes.

"In the same case on appeal (238 F. 513, 151 C. C. A. 449), the syllabus is as follows:

"A manufacturer of a syrup used with carbonated water to produce a beverage which was sold either at soda fountains or in bottles, whose registered trade-mark covered both the syrup and the beverages, but who bottled none of the beverage, having contracted with others therefor under contracts requiring the purchase of syrup from the manufacturer and its preparation under regulations to protect the quality, can prevent one who has not the manufacturer's consent from bottling the syrup with [***12] carbonated water, even in accordance with the regulations, and selling it under the trade-mark, since otherwise the manufacturer would have no means of protecting the quality of the goods sold under his trade-mark.

HN4<sup>1</sup> "When a manufacturer of an article of food or drink sells it in bulk, and also puts it up in bottles bearing a distinctive trade-mark, the purchaser of the article in bulk cannot legally bottle it and affix the manufacturer's label to the bottle.

HN5<sup>1</sup> "The invalidity, under Sherman Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (Comp. St. 1913, §§ 8820-8830), of contracts by which the owner of a trade-mark covering both a syrup and the beverage made therefrom

150 La. 445, *451 La. So. 755, **757 La. 920 La. LEXIS 1875, ***12

granted the exclusive right to bottle the beverage, does not affect the owner's right to prevent [*452] the sale of the beverage under the trade-mark by one who bottled it without consent.' * * *

"If the owner of a trade-mark covering both the syrup and the beverages made from the syrup can prevent the purchaser of the syrup in bulk from making a beverage out of the syrup and putting it on the market under the distinctive trade-mark of the seller, then we can see no good reason why any distinctive system of [***13] inspection between the owner of [**758] the trade-mark and the bottler of the syrup as a beverage, the same to be placed on the market under the distinctive trade-mark, would be invalid as in violation of the anti-trust laws, and likewise any reasonable contract to that effect, and other reasonable stipulations to protect the integrity of that trade-mark.

HN6 "A trade-mark gives the owner of same something in the nature of a monopoly; a monopoly not in the article sold under the trade-mark, perhaps, but a monopoly of that article as sold under the trade-mark. It does not give such a monopoly as does a patent, but it is a monopoly nevertheless, and one that cannot be taken away by any anti-trust law."

See, also, American Tobacco Co. v. Polacsek (C. C.) 170 F. 117; Bulte v. Igleheart, 137 F. 492, 70 C. C. A. 76; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U.S. 514, 9 S. Ct. 143, 32 L. Ed. 526; Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat Co. (D. C.) 224 F. 566.

The lower court also found that, while defendant was putting out as good a quality of goods as its knowledge of the matter would permit, the difference between its product and that produced by the duly authorized representatives of the Coca-Cola [***14] Company was marked, and we think this finding is amply supported by the record. However, under the manner and form in which the beverage was put to the trade, the difference from the standpoint of appearance could not be easily detected by the consumer, and the case falls clearly within the doctrine announced in Cusimano & Co. v. Olive Oil Importing Co., Ltd., 114 La. 312, 38 So. 200.

Defendant complains that the court below allowed the plaintiffs to recover the sum of $ 1,000 damages, and also ordered defendant to account for the profits which had been [*453] realized on the sales of the beverage; it being contended that there was no prayer to support such a recovery, in the first place, nor any provision of law under which it could be allowed, if claimed. However, paragraph C of the prayer is as follows:

"That the damages sustained by your petitioners, and each of them, by reason of the defendant's aforesaid unlawful acts, be ascertained, and that your petitioners, and each of them, have judgment therefor against the defendant, and that the said defendant be decreed to pay over to your petitioners, and each of them, the amount of said profits, together with all damages sustained."

[***15] The statute provides that --

HN7 "All courts of competent jurisdiction shall grant injunctions * * * and may award the complaint in any such suit damages resulting from such manufacture, use, sale or display as may be by the said court deemed just and reasonable, and shall require the defendants to pay to such person * * * all profits derived," etc. Act No. 49 of 1898, § 5.

As stated in the case of Cusimano & Co. v. Olive Oil Importing Co., Ltd., supra, HN8 the exact extent of the damages in such cases is hard to ascertain, and it was the evident purpose of the Legislature to allow a reasonable amount of discretion to the court in determining the amount to be awarded. In view of the facts and circumstances of the present case, we do not think that authority has been abused.

For the reasons assigned, the judgment appealed from is affirmed, at the cost of the appellant.

O'NIELL, J., dissents from the decree allowing damages, and otherwise concurs.

Washington Cranberry Growers Ass'n v. Moore

Supreme Court of Washington, Department Two

November 5, 1921

No. 16418

Reporter

117 Wash. 430 *; 201 P. 773 **; 1921 Wash. LEXIS 881 ***; 25 A.L.R. 1077

Washington Cranberry Growers Association, Respondent, v. A. B. Moore, Appellant

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from a judgment of the superior court for Pacific county, Hewen, J., entered December 18, 1920, in favor of the plaintiff, in an action for an injunction, tried to the court.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

grower, Cranberry, berries, parties, injunction, damages, void, associations, selling, fruit, restrain, agrees, cases, circumstances, contracts, marketing, specific performance, accomplish, notice

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Contracts fixing prices as incidental to some main contract, and involving less than a controlling part of a given commodity in a given market, not proceeding from, nor tending to create or to maintain a monopoly, will be sustained when the restriction is, under the circumstances of the particular case, reasonable in reference to the interests of the parties, and reasonable in reference to the interests of the public; that is to say, when the price fixed is fairly necessary to the protection of the covenantee, and fair to the public in that it furnishes only a reasonable profit to the contracting parties. Lacking these elements, such contracts are invalid as contrary to public policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

In determining the validity at common law of a combination claiming to be in restraint of trade, the true test is whether they afford fair and just protection to the parties thereto or whether they are so broad as to interfere with the interests of the public.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Common Law

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Considering whether the restraint is such only as a broad and fair protection of the interests of the public in favor of whom it is given and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the party. Whatever restraint is larger than the necessary protection of the public requires can be of no benefit to either. It can only be oppressive which is, in the eye of the law, unreasonable. Whatever is injurious to the interests of the public is void on the ground of public policy.

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Contracts Law > Remedies > Specific Performance

HN4 Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

If a contract, by its terms, shows an intent to rely upon damages, or if there is an adequate remedy at law, injunctive relief cannot be had.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN5 Injunctions, Permanent Injunctions

The fact that a contract is one which cannot be specifically enforced in a court of equity by reason of the fact that it requires the performance of continuous duties does not prevent the court from entering an injunction restraining its breach, which indirectly accomplishes the same result.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Types of Contracts, Covenants

The fact that a contract provides that, in case of breach, the damage shall be as there admitted, does not of itself conclusively establish that the parties contemplate that, upon the breach thereof, damages would be an adequate remedy. It is a question of intention in each case, to be deduced from the whole instrument and the circumstances, and if it appear that the performance of the covenant is intended, and not merely the payment of damages in case of breach, the contract will be enforced.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

WASHINGTON OFFICIAL REPORTS HEADNOTES

Contracts (45) -- Monopolies -- Validity -- Restraint of Trade -- Controlling Production and Price of Commodity. A contract requiring a grower of cranberries to ship all the crop grown by him to an association for the purpose of marketing and sale with the object of enabling the growers to obtain a uniform price for their product, but which does not operate to limit production or control the price in any particular locality, is not void as against public policy, nor as contravening art. 12, § 22, of the state constitution against monopolies, nor the Federal anti-trust act.

Injunction (24) -- Contracts -- Restraining Breach -- Damages as Adequate Remedy. Injunction will lie to restrain the breach of a contract, thereby indirectly effecting its specific performance, where the intent was to rely on performance and the contract is one which could not be specifically enforced in a court of equity by reason of the fact that it would require the performance of continuous [***2] duties.

Same(24). A breach of a contract may be properly restrained, where it provides for damages in case of a grower's failure to deliver his crops to an association for marketing, merely as an estimate, but recites it is impossible to fix the actual damages sustained in case of a grower's failure to abide by the agreement, and the purport of the whole contract shows that the parties intended to rely upon the performance of the covenant and not merely on the payment of damages for the breach thereof.

Counsel: Welsh & Welsh, for appellant.

John J. Langenbach, for respondent.

Judges: Main, J. Parker, C.J., Mitchell, Tolman, and Bridges, JJ., concur.

Opinion by: MAIN

Opinion

---

[*430] [**773] The purpose of this action was to restrain the breach of a contract. The trial resulted in a permanent injunction, from which the defendant appeals.

[*431] The Washington Cranberry Association is a corporation organized under the laws of this state and is engaged in the business of marketing cranberries for those with whom it has contracts, and in some instances for independent growers. The appellant had entered into a contract with the corporation by which he agreed to deliver [***3] to it all the cranberries grown by him in Pacific county on land owned by him. The contract provides as follows:

"Witnesseth: That the grower, for and in consideration of one dollar paid him by the association, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and of the covenants and agreements herein contained, hereby nominates, appoints and agrees to employ the association as exclusive sales agents for the purpose of selling and marketing the entire crop of cranberries now growing or which shall be grown for shipment by the grower or for him, or in which he may have any interest as landlord or tenant, upon all those certain tracts of land situated in Pacific county, Washington, described as follows: Metes and bounds in section 27, township 16, north of range 11, west of Willamette Meridian, during the year 1916 and every year thereafter continually, provided, however that the grower may cancel this contract on the 15th day of January in any year by giving notice in writing to the association in writing at least 15 days prior to that date. Upon giving notice the grower shall, prior to said 15th day of January, pay any and all indebtedness due from him to the association and deliver his [***4] copy of the said contract to the manager of the association, and the same shall thereupon be cancelled.

"[**774] The grower agrees at his own expense to cultivate, care for and harvest said crops. All fruit to be delivered by the grower at the warehouse of packing station of the association, at such place and at such time and in such manner as may be designated by the said association, which shall give notice to the grower for such delivery.

[*432] "In the event that grower shall fail to fulfill any or all of the requirements set forth in the foregoing paragraph, the association through its manager shall give to the grower written notice setting forth the default of the grower, and in event the default so specified shall not have been overcome or corrected within ten (10) days following delivery of such written notice to grower, it is mutually agreed that the association may consider this contract as cancelled, and shall be relieved from further responsibility with regard to marketing the grower's fruit hereunder.

"The grower fully understands that the purpose, among others, of this agreement, is to maintain and increase to its greatest efficiency the association as well [***5] as the Central Selling Agency with which it is now or hereafter may be affiliated, and to accomplish this purpose it is necessary that he shall strictly and fully comply with and perform the stipulations and agreements on his part agreed herein to be performed, and therefore he hereby stipulates and agrees that he will not sell or otherwise dispose his said fruit to any other firm, person or corporation other than the aforesaid association; and it is hereby further mutually agreed that inasmuch as it is impossible at this time to fix and estimate the actual damage which will be sustained by the association in the event that the grower shall fail to abide by his agreement to market his said fruit through the association, such damages are hereby estimated and agreed upon as one dollar per box for each box of cranberries grown or sold by the grower, which sum shall be allowed in any action brought by the second party to recover damages for the breach of this agreement by the grower should the association elect, as it may elect, to bring such action.

"In consideration of its appointment as exclusive sales agent of growers' fruit crop, as above set forth, and in further consideration of [***6] the agreements made by the grower with the association as hereinbefore set forth, the association agrees to receive, ship and sell all of said fruit to the best possible advantage. To promptly remit returns therefor, less its regular charge for aforesaid services and for any other deduction, [*433] including money, due for advances for supplies furnished by the association to the grower, which indebtedness grower agrees may be treated by the association as a first lien on the proceeds from his fruit, and payment therefor to be deducted accordingly.

"In witness whereof the association has caused this contract to be signed and sealed in its name and behalf by its president and its secretary, and all other parties have hereto affixed their individual signatures. Washington Cranberry Growers' Association, C. K. Cooper, President. Attest: W. M. Rounds, Secretary. A. B. Moore."

The Columbia River Cranberry Association is a corporation engaged in the same business as that of the Washington Cranberry Association, as is also the Oregon Cranberry Association, a corporation. After the contract above referred to was made, the three corporations named entered into a contract whereby [***7] there was created what is referred to as the Pacific Cranberry Exchange, and appointed one L. S. Martin as the exclusive agent for the sale of all berries controlled by the three corporations. The cranberry exchange was composed of three members, a representative of each of the corporations. In the contract they are referred to as "the associations." It is provided that the cranberries shall be delivered f. o. b. cars at points designated by Martin, and that he agrees that "he will immediately upon acceptance by his representative of cranberries, upon surrender of bill of lading, advance to the Pacific Cranberry Exchange, the agent of said associations, the sum of $ 2.00 per box of the size heretofore indicated, said bill of lading hereinabove mentioned shall be forwarded by said Pacific Cranberry Exchange, with draft attached to the Bank of California, of Portland, Oregon.

"The representatives of the said L. S. Martin shall have access to the warehouses of the associations and to the warehouses or store-rooms of the individual [*434] members of the associations, to determine the quantity, conditions and quality of berries available at any given time. A representative of [***8] the Pacific Cranberry Exchange may at any reasonable time, have access to the books of the said L. S. Martin, at his offices in Portland, Oregon, for the purpose of checking sales and returns made by the said L. S. Martin.

"All returns shall be made to the Pacific Cranberry Exchange, the agent of said associations, on or before thirty days after the expiration of the month in which the berries are shipped to the said L. S. Martin.

"The associations agree that the said L. S. Martin shall receive a five per cent commission on all gross sales of all berries sold by it to jobbers in the states of Oregon and Washington, and six and one-half per cent on all other berries sold by the said L. S. Martin and the said L. S. Martin hereby agrees to accept said commissions in full settlement for his services in the sale of said berries.

"The said L. S. Martin shall only be liable for actual negligence on his part, and no liability shall be attached to him by reason of damages caused to the associations or to individual members thereof, by strikes, embargo, shortage of equipment, or any other cause beyond the control of said L. S. Martin by use of reasonable diligence.

"It is understood and [***9] agreed that the fullest cooperation of the associations and of the Pacific Cranberry Exchange will be extended to the said L. S. Martin in the handling and marketing of said berries.

"All sales shall be made at the market price, or at a price to be mutually agreed upon by said L. S. Martin and the Pacific Cranberry Exchange."

[**775] In Pacific county there were approximately eighty cranberry growers, and sixty of these had contracts with the respondent similar to the one set out. After the contract was entered into and during the year 1920, the appellant produced 1,300 boxes of cranberries, and five hundred of these were sold to parties other than the contract provided. As above stated, [*435] this action was brought to restrain the appellant from selling cranberries to parties other than the respondent. The appellant makes three principal contentions. First, that the contract is void at common law as against public policy; second, that it is contrary to art. 12, § 22, of the constitution of this state, which is a section covering the matter of monopolies and trusts; and third, that the contract is void as being in contravention of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act passed [***10] by the Federal Congress on July 2, 1890 (U.S. Stat. at Large, vol. 26, p. 209, ch. 647).

To determine whether the contract is void for any of the reasons stated it is necessary to read the contract in connection with the procedure under it and the result which was produced thereby. The appellant contends that a monopoly is created, trade restrained, the output of cranberries limited and prices are controlled. It may be admitted that, if this is the effect of the contract and the business transacted under it, it would be void and unenforceable. The contract required the appellant to deliver all cranberries grown by him to the respondent for marketing until it should be terminated in accordance with the terms therein stated. The purposes of the contract, among others as stated therein, are to maintain to its greatest efficiency the association, as well as the central selling agency with which it is now or may be hereafter affiliated. The corporation is made the exclusive sales agent for the growers' fruit crop. The evidence shows that the purpose of entering into the contracts, of which the one above set out is one, was as follows:

Before the corporation was organized, certain [***11] growers at times put upon the market cranberries of an inferior grade and this caused merchants to refuse to buy berries from Pacific county. In order to [*436] avoid this situation it was necessary to enter upon an advertising campaign to stimulate the use of berries and to cause berries of uniform grade to be placed upon the market. Another purpose was to secure a uniform price and avoid flooding any one market, as would be done if a large quantity of berries was shipped to a particular point at one time. Under the selling agency, the quantity of berries going to any one market was regulated, and in this way tended to maintain, or "hold up," as the evidence shows, the price. It was also for the purpose of enabling all growers to receive for their berries a uniform price. There is nothing in the contract or the operation under it that limits the production or controls the price in any particular locality. While the selling agency was located in Portland, the berries handled through the cranberry exchange representing the three corporations came in direct competition with eastern berries as well as with the berries of independent growers. The cranberry association controlled [***12] about two per cent of the berries produced in the United States, the independent growers, thirty-two per cent, and the American Cranberry Exchange, which was an organization operating in New York and Chicago, sixty-five per cent. The berries sold through the selling agency in Portland created by the three corporations sold at the market price and the berries were shipped by the corporations to such points as Martin, the selling agent, designated. The evidence is that the price of the berries in the various markets was fixed and controlled by the American Cranberry Exchange. If the Pacific berries could not be sold for the same price as the eastern berries the selling agent, after conferring with the members of the exchange, would sell for a lesser price. The contract and the delivery of berries [*437] under it not resulting in limiting the production, controlling or fixing of the price in any particular market, cannot be said to be void as against public policy, or under the constitutional provision above referred to, or under the anti-trust act.

The question as to when a contract is a restraint of trade was fully discussed in Fisher Flouring Mills Co. v. Swanson, 76 [***13] Wash. 649, 137 Pac. 144, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 522. It was there recognized that it was difficult to state the rule which would cover all cases, and that the circumstances of each particular case and the situation of the parties, in addition to the effect on the public welfare, must be considered in determining the validity of a contract. It was there said:

"The fact that the circumstances of each particular case and the situation of the parties, in addition to the effect on the public welfare must be considered, and that of all circumstances, the dominant consideration is the welfare of the public, makes it difficult to state by definition, except in the broadest way, any rule for determining the validity of any such contract as that here involved. Perhaps the following is as near a complete definition as we can formulate from the adjudicated cases: HN1[<sup>1</sup>] Contracts fixing prices as incidental to some main contract, and involving less than a controlling part of a given commodity in a given market, not proceeding from, nor tending to create or to maintain a monopoly, will be sustained when the restriction is, under the circumstances of the particular case, reasonable in reference to the interests [***14] of the parties, and reasonable in reference to the interests of the public; that is to say, when the price fixed is fairly necessary to the protection of the covenantee, and [*776] fair to the public in that it furnishes only a reasonable profit to the contracting parties. Lacking these elements, such contracts are invalid as contrary to public policy."

In Finck v. Schneider Granite Co., 187 Mo. 244, 86 S.W. 213, 106 Am. St. 452, it was stated that, HN2[<sup>1</sup>] in determining [*438] the validity at common law of a combination claiming to be in restraint of trade, the true test is "whether they afford fair and just protection to the parties thereto or whether they are so broad as to interfere with the interests of the public." In United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271, in determining whether a contract was void at common law or under the anti-trust act, the test applied was whether there was a reasonable restraint of trade,

"HN3[<sup>1</sup>] considering whether the restraint is such only as a broad and fair protection of the interests of the public in favor of whom it is given and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the party. Whatever restraint is larger than [***15] the necessary protection of the public requires can be of no benefit to either. It can only be oppressive which is, in the eye of the law, unreasonable. Whatever is injurious to the interests of the public is void on the ground of public policy."

A large number of cases are cited in the briefs where contracts have been held void as being a restraint of trade, but it does not seem necessary to review these in detail. So far as we are informed, no case holds that a contract is void which does not limit the production or control or fix the price in a particular market. As above pointed out, the contract here under consideration, considered in connection with the evidence showing the operation under it, neither limits the production or fixes the price. The cases of Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387, 18 P. 391, 9 Am. St. 211, and Cravens v. Carter-Crume Co., 92 F. 479, are cases where the combinations there in question limited the production and increased the price, and are therefore not in point in this case.

The next question which arises is whether the respondent is entitled to injunctive relief. The appellant contends that there should be recourse [***16] only for damages. [*439] The purpose of the action was not to enforce specific performance directly, but to accomplish that indirect result by restraining the appellant from selling berries to any other person than the respondent. It will be admitted that HN4[<sup>1</sup>] if the contract, by its terms, shows an intent to rely upon damages, or if there is an adequate remedy at law, injunctive relief cannot be had. The contract provides that, to accomplish its purpose, it is necessary that the appellant strictly and fully comply with and perform the stipulations and agreements on his part. While the contract provides for damages, it also recites that it is impossible to fix and estimate the actual damage sustained in event the grower shall fail to abide by the agreement, and the damages are only estimated. The contract, we think, fails to show an intent of the parties that, in the event of breach, the only recourse would be an action for damages. There was not an adequate remedy at law because an action for damages would not be sufficient to protect the respondent and the other growers which it represented in accomplishing the purposes of the undertaking. Those purposes are fully set out above [***17] and need not here be repeated. HN5[<sup>1</sup>] The fact that the contract is one which could not be specifically enforced in a court of equity by reason of the fact that it would require the performance of continuous duties does not prevent the court from entering an injunction restraining its breach, which indirectly accomplishes the same result. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Union Pacific R. Co., 1 McCrary's Cir. Ct. Rpts 558, 3 Fed. 423; Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. New York, L. E. & W.R. Co., 24 Fed. 516; American Electrical Works v. Varley Duplex Marget Co., 26 R.I. 295, 58 Atl. 977. In the case last cited, upon this question it was said:

"The respondent, however, contends that the injunction should not be granted, because it would result [*440] in compelling indirectly a specific performance of the contract in the case, where the court would not directly order such performance.

"We do not think that this contention is in accord with the best and most modern authorities. The following cases, amongst others which might be cited, sustain the complainant's position. (Citing numerous authorities.)

"A very clear and well-considered statement of the law upon the question under [***18] consideration according to the most modern authorities is to be found in the opinion of Judge Lowell in Singer Sewing Machine Co. v. Union But. & Em. Co., supra, in which he says: 'The two points of law are not without difficulty. The relief asked is specific performance and injunction. It is argued with great ability by the defendants, that the complainant is not entitled to specific performance, and that, therefore, it can not have an injunction which is merely auxiliary. Granting the premises, I am not prepared to concede the conclusion. If the court can not order a contract for the making of button-hole machines to be specifically performed by reason of the impossibility of superintending the details of such a business, it does not follow that the bill may not be retained as an injunction bill. It was formerly thought that an injunction would not be granted to restrain the breach of any contract unless the contract were of such a character that the court could fully enforce the performance of it on both sides.' Judge Lowell here examines the authorities and the development of the modern rule, and then proceeds: 'I think the fair result of the later cases may be thus [***19] expressed: If the case is one in which the negative remedy of injunction will do substantial justice between [**777] the parties by obliging the defendant either to carry out his contract or lose all benefit of the breach, and the remedy at law is inadequate and there is no reason of policy against it, the court will interfere to restrain conduct which is contrary to the contract, although it may be unable to enforce a specific performance of it.'"

[*441] HN6[<sup>1</sup>] The fact that the contract provides that, in case of breach, the damage shall be as there admitted, does not of itself conclusively establish that the parties contemplated that, upon the breach thereof, damages would be an adequate remedy. It is a question of intention in each case, to be deduced from the whole instrument and the circumstances, and if it appear that the performance of the covenant was intended, and not merely the payment of damages in case of breach, the contract will be enforced. Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N.Y. 473, 13 N.E.

117 Wash. 430, *441 P.2d 773, **777 P.2d 921 Wash. LEXIS 881, ***19

419, 60 Am. Rep. 464; Harris v. Theus, 149 Ala. 133, 43 So. 131, 123 Am. St. 17, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 204; Wilkinson v. Colley, 164 Pa. 35, 30 A. 286, 26 L.R.A. 114; [***20] Heinz v. Roberts, 135 Iowa 748, 110 N.W. 1034; Ropes v. Upton, 125 Mass. 258; Zimmermann v. Gerzog, 13 A.D. 210, 43 N.Y.S. 339.

Considering the terms of the contract and all the attendant circumstances, we are of the opinion that it was not intended by the parties thereto that the damages claimed therein should be the only price of the appellant's breach of the agreement, and that the remedy at law would not be adequate.

The judgment will be affirmed.

---

End of Document

Griffin v. Palatine Ins. Co.

Court of Appeals of Texas

March 8, 1922, Decided

No. 187-3232.

Reporter

238 S.W. 637 *; 1922 Tex. App. LEXIS 440 **

GRIFFIN v. PALATINE INS. CO. et al. *

Prior History: [**1] Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Seventh Supreme Judicial District.

On rehearing. Former opinion 235 S.W. 202 set aside.

See, also, 202 S.W. 1014.

Disposition: Judgment of Court of Civil Appeals affirmed, and cause remanded to the district court for new trial.

Core Terms

---

commerce, transportation, combinations, commodity, insurance company, preparation, insurance business, Subdivision, insure, merchandise, anti-trust, prohibits

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

**HN1** Appeals, Standards of Review

It is the province of a court of civil appeals to pass finally upon the facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Readjustments > Formation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Readjustments > General Overview

**HN2** Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

---

* Rehearing denied April 12, 1922.

1903 Tex. Gen. Laws 94, § 1(1)-(4), Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796, provides in part that a "trust" is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes: 1) to create, or which may tend to create, or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of the State of Texas; 2) to fix, maintain, increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce or commodities, or the cost of insurance, or of the preparation of any product for market or transportation; 3) to prevent or lessen competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, or the business of insurance, or to prevent or lessen competition in aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation; and 4) to fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the price of any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce, or the cost of transportation, or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, shall be in any manner affected, controlled or established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Transportation Law > General Overview

HN3 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

1903 Tex. Gen. Laws 94, § 1(5), Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796, provides in part that to execute any contract or obligation by which the parties thereto bind, or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, transport or to prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity or to make any insurance contract at a price below a common standard or figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation, at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner affect the price of any commodity or article or the cost of transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others, to preclude free competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or business of transportation or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article or commodity, or charge for transportation or insurance or charge for the preparation of any product for market or transportation, whereby its price or such charge may be in any manner affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN4 [down] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

An agreement or combination among insurance companies not to write insurance for any individual or class of individuals comes both within the letter and the spirit of Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Monopolies -- Agreement of insurance companies not to write insurance for persons held illegal.

Under Rev. St. arts. 7796-7809, and Pen. Code 1911, arts. 1454-1479, subds. 1, 3, 5, prohibiting combinations to create restrictions in trade or commerce, and making such acts illegal, the refusal of insurance companies to write insurance for an individual is illegal.

Counsel: W. H. Kimbrough, of Amarillo, for plaintiff in error.

Andrews, Streetman, Burns & Logue, of Houston, and Thompson, Knight, Baker & Harris, of Dallas, for defendants in error.

Judges: McCLENDON, P. J. CURETON, C. J.

Opinion by: McCLENDON; CURETON

Opinion

---

[*637] McCLENDON, P. J. The Court of Civil Appeals, after a general statement of the case, concluded that a combination or agreement not to have business dealings with another was not an unlawful or actionable conspiracy unless others not party to the agreement were actively induced not to deal with such person, or false statements were circulated concerning him in furtherance of such combination. The court then held that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a finding of conspiracy. Our construction of that finding was that it related, not to an agreement not to insure plaintiff but to an actionable conspiracy as defined by that court, and therefore that there was no finding [**2] by that court inconsistent with the judgment of the trial court upon our holding upon the law of the case. A more mature study of the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals has led us to conclude that that opinion must be construed as a finding of fact against the existence of any agreement among defendants not to insure plaintiff. Regardless of our holding upon the law of the case, HN1↑ it is the province of the Court of Civil Appeals to pass finally upon the facts, and, in view of this construction of the findings of that court, it follows that under the previous holdings of the Supreme Court the case must be remanded to the trial court for a new trial.

Under the holding in our former opinion that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed, it was unnecessary to pass upon certain questions therein specified. Since, however, the case is to be remanded, we think those questions become material as a guide to the trial court.

The holding of the Court of Civil Appeals that there was no evidence to go to the jury upon the issues of whether defendants had actively induced or persuaded other insurance companies not to deal with plaintiff or had circulated false reports concerning him [**3] is, in our opinion, erroneous. The evidence in this regard is in large measure circumstantial, as is usually true in cases of this character. It would not be proper for us to discuss the evidence in detail. It is sufficient to say that in our opinion there is ample support in the evidence upon both of those issues, as well as upon the issue of agreement among defendants not to insure plaintiff.

The other question which we think becomes material in view of a new trial, is whether an agreement between two or more insurance companies not to insure plaintiff comes within the inhibitions of our antitrust law. The original anti-trust act passed in 1889 (Acts 1889, c. 117) did not mention insurance or aids to commerce, and in Queen Insurance Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 24 S.W. 397, 22 L. R. A. 483, it was held that that act did not relate to the business of insurance. The combination sought to be held illegal in that case was an agreement among insurance companies fixing rates. It was also held that such agreement was not criminal under the common law. In reaching these conclusions the Supreme Court held that, while insurance was a very material aid to commerce, it was not the business of [**4] "commerce" as that term is commonly understood. It was further held that, if the first subdivision of the first section of that act, which prohibits combinations "to create or carry out restrictions in trade," should be construed as broad enough in its language to include insurance, that provision was inoperative as not sufficiently definite to support a prosecution under the criminal law. That decision was rendered in December, 1893. At the regular session of the Legislature in 1895 (Acts 24th Leg. c. 83) the act was amended so as to include aids to commerce. Insurance was not specifically mentioned in that act. In 1902, in the case of State v. Shippers'

Compress Co., 95 Tex. 603, 69 S.W. 58, the Supreme Court, following the Supreme Court of the United States in Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U.S. 540, 22 S. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679, held that the 1895 act was, except in certain limited respects, violative of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States because it exempted from its operation agricultural products, etc., in the hands of the producers.

The act of 1903 (Acts 1903, c. 94), which is now chapter 1 of title 130 of the Revised [*638] Civil [**5] Statutes, and chapter 6 of title 18 of the Penal Code, recites in its emergency clause the fact that the 1895 act had been held unconstitutional. There are a number of material differences between the 1895 and 1903 acts. The former has but one section (section 1) which defines illegal combinations. This section is divided into five subdivisions. The act of 1903 has three sections which deal with illegal combinations. These are section 1, article 7796), which defines trusts and corresponds to section 1 of the 1895 act, and which has seven subdivisions; section 2 (article 7797), which defines monopoly; and section 3 (article 7798), which defines conspiracies against trade.

The holding of the Court of Civil Appeals that the acts complained of in this case are not prohibited by the 1903 act are based upon the conclusion that article 7796 deals with those combinations in which the public are interested, and article 7798 alone deals with those combinations which affect the individual, and not the public, and that, since that article does not mention insurance or aids to commerce, and since article 7796 does not specifically prohibit agreements among insurance companies not to insure, and [**6] since the public are not interested in a combination of this sort which affects only the individual, the acts here complained of are not within the inhibitions of that act. For convenience we copy the first section of the acts of 1895 and 1903, omitting subdivisions 5 and 6 of the latter act. The words in ordinary type appear in both acts; those in parentheses appear only in the 1895 act; and those underscored appear only in the 1903 act:

HN2↑ "That a 'trust' is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create, or which may tend to create, or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or to create or carry out restrictions in the (full and) free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State.

"2. To fix, maintain, increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce or commodities, or the cost of insurance, or of the preparation of any product for market or transportation.

"3. To prevent or lessen [**7] competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, or the business of insurance, or to prevent or lessen competition in aids to commerce, or in the preparation of any product for market or transportation.

"4. To fix or maintain (at) any standard or figure (,) whereby the (its) price (to the public) of any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce, or the cost of transportation, or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, shall be in any manner affected, controlled or established, (any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, use or consumption in this state)."

HN3↑ "5. To make (or) enter into, maintain (or) execute or carry out any contract, obligation, or agreement (of any kind or description) by which (they) the parties thereto (shall) bind, or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, (or) transport or to prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity (or article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption) or to make any contract of insurance at a price below a common [**8] standard or figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article (,) or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation, at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner affect or maintain (establish or settle) the price of any commodity or article (or commodity) or the cost of transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or business of transportation or insurance, or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article or *commodity, or charge for transportation or insurance or charge for the preparation of any (such article or commodity that) product for market or transportation, whereby its price or such charge might be in [**9] any manner (be) affected."*

If we concede that article 7798 does not embrace insurance, still we think there can be no serious question but that HN4[<sup>1</sup>] an agreement or combination among insurance companies not to write insurance for any individual or class of individuals does come both within the letter and the spirit of article 7796. It was clearly the purpose of the Legislature in passing the 1895 act to bring the business of insurance, in so far as it affects trade and commerce, as much within the provisions of the anti-trust law as any other business or trade. There is nothing in that act which limits its effect to any particular character of combination such as rate making as applied to aids to commerce, and there can be no question, we think, that the language in section 3 of that act, which prohibits combinations "to prevent competition in aids to commerce," was intended to embrace the business of insurance in so far as it affects commerce. Any other construction of that act would render it entirely ineffective as to insurance or other aids to commerce. That act was passed at the next session of the Legislature after the Queen Insurance Co. Case was decided. Its emergency clause recites [**10] that the people of Texas are without an adequate remedy against trusts, and the Legislature must necessarily have had in mind the Queen Insurance Co. Case, and [<sup>1</sup>*639] must have intended to place insurance within the purview of the anti-trust act.

If we take the view that subdivision 1 of the 1903 act should be given the same construction with reference to the generality of the language used that was given in the Queen Insurance Co. Case to the first subdivision of the act of 1889, still we think that a combination of insurance companies not to write a particular individual or set of individuals clearly comes with the inhibitions of subdivisions 3 and 5 of the 1903 act. Subdivision 3, stripped of impertinent matter, prohibits combinations "to prevent or lessen competition in * * * the business of insurance, or to prevent or lessen competition in aids to commerce." Subdivision 5 prevents combinations "to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the * * * business * * * of insurance." The statute nowhere says that article 7796 inhibits only such combinations as affect the public generally. Subdivision 4 of the 1895 act used the language "price to [**11] the public," but that language was eliminated in the 1903 act. That act defines what a trust is, and article 7799 prohibits and declares illegal all trusts. But, even conceding that the combinations which are declared to be trusts under article 7796 do fall within the class in which the public generally are interested, it cannot be said that a combination among insurance companies not to write an individual or set of individuals is a matter in which the public have no concern. Under modern business methods commerce and trade would be very materially hampered and restricted but for the business of insurance. Credits are largely extended in view of the security afforded by it, and the hazards of business enterprises without its protection would be too great to warrant engaging therein by large classes of capital, especially the smaller capital of private individuals who could not afford to carry their own risks. If two or more insurance companies may lawfully combine to prevent competition among themselves in insuring a particular individual, then they may make such combination with reference to a number of individuals or class of individuals. If the 1903 act does not cover the case [**12] of Griffin, a grocery merchant in Amarillo, who refused to abide by the judgment of an insurance adjuster as to the amount of his loss, but threatened to take the matter into the courts, then it would be perfectly lawful for any number of or all insurance companies doing business in Texas to prescribe a rule by which any individual in any business who should refuse to accept the judgment of their adjusters as to amount of loss should be blacklisted by them. Subdivision 5 of article 7796 specifically prohibits agreements which preclude a free and unrestricted competition among the parties to such agreement in the business of insurance. There can be no question but that an agreement between defendants not to write Griffin precluded any competition between themselves in regard to Griffin's business as an applicant for insurance. The purpose of this agreement, if plaintiff's theory of the case is correct, was to put Griffin out of business by making it impossible for him to get insurance. The jury found that the combination was effective as injuring Griffin's business to the extent of $ 7,500 actual damages. If the 1903 act is to be construed away in so far as Griffin or any other particular [**13] individual is concerned, then it would be competent for the insurance companies to force adjustments of losses in accordance with their own views or desires as outlined above. We are unable to give the statute this construction. We think clearly that the combination, if the jury upon another trial should find that it existed, was in violation both of the spirit and letter of the anti-trust act of 1903.

We therefore conclude that the former judgment of the Supreme Court (235 S.W. 202) adopting our recommendation that the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals be reversed, and that of the district court affirmed, should be set aside, that judgment should be entered affirming the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals, and that the cause be remanded to the district court for a new trial in accordance with the views expressed in our original opinion and in this opinion.

CURETON, C. J. Judgment of November 30, 1921, set aside. Judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirmed, and cause remanded to the district court for new trial.

---

End of Document

Overland Publishing Co. v. Union Lithograph Co.

Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, Division Two

April 18, 1922, Decided

Civ. No. 4127

Reporter

57 Cal. App. 366 *; 207 P. 412 **; 1922 Cal. App. LEXIS 329 ***

OVERLAND PUBLISHING COMPANY (a Corporation), Appellant, v. UNION LITHOGRAPH COMPANY (a Corporation), et al., Respondents

Subsequent History: [***1] A Petition to have the Cause Heard in the Supreme Court, after Judgment in the District Court of Appeal, was Denied by the Supreme Court on June 15, 1922.

Prior History: APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. H. M. Owens, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Printers', printing, allegations, damages, contracts, practices, city and county, do business, restrictions, commerce, compose, dollars, join

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Cartwright Act, 1907 Cal. Stat. 984, as amended by 1909 Cal. Stat. 594, contains a provision that labor, whether skilled or unskilled, is not a commodity within the meaning of the Act.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN2 [down arrow] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Strikes & Work Stoppages

It is the right of every man to engage to work for or to deal with, or to refuse to work for or to deal with, any man or class of men as he sees fit, whatever his motive or whatever the resulting injury, without being held in any way accountable therefor. These rights may be exercised in association with others so long as they have no unlawful object in view. Thus, where building contractors and a group of workmen make an agreement which restricts the opportunities of a contractor not a party thereto, though the business of the third party is interfered with, a court can give no relief, since the law can only make it possible for the complainant to do business in the way he chooses by compelling a defendants to do business in the way they does not choose. When equal rights clash, the law cannot interfere.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN3 Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Strikes & Work Stoppages

The direct object or purpose of a combination furnishes the primary test of its legality. It is not every injury inflicted upon third persons in its operation that renders the combination unlawful. It is not enough to establish illegality in an agreement between certain persons to show that it works harm to others. An agreement entered into for the primary purpose of promoting the interests of the parties is not rendered illegal by the fact that it may, incidentally, injure third persons. A laborer as well as a builder, trader, or manufacturer has the right to conduct his affairs in any lawful manner even though he may thereby injure others. So several laborers and builders may combine for mutual advantage, and, so long as the motive is not malicious, the object not unlawful, nor oppressive and the means neither deceitful nor fraudulent, the result is not a conspiracy although it may necessarily work injury to other persons. The damage to such persons may be serious, it may even extend to their ruin, but if it is inflicted by a combination in the legitimate pursuit of its own affairs, it is damnum absque injuria.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN4 Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Strikes & Work Stoppages

An association of individuals may determine that its members shall not work for specified employers of labor. The question ever is as to its purpose in reaching such determination. If the determination is reached in good faith for the purpose of bettering the condition of its members and not through malice or otherwise to injure an employer, the fact that such action may result in incidental injury to the employer does not constitute a justification for issuing an injunction against enforcing such action. In case of a peaceable and ordinary strike, without breach of contract, and conducted without violence, threats, or intimidation, a court will not inquire into the motives of the strikers, their acts being entirely lawful, their motives are immaterial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

An action by a private corporation, and, as such, is governed by the provisions of § 11 of the Cartwright Act, 1907 Cal. Stat. 984, as amended by 1909 Cal. Stat. 594. In § 11, it is provided that an action may be brought by any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden in the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

While in a criminal prosecution against persons for maintaining a trust or combination in restraint of commerce or trade, the gist of the offense is in the formation and maintenance of such trust or combination, and the fact of the existence of the combination for the purpose of doing some prohibited act is all that need be proved to support and sustain the charge, yet in a civil action for damages based upon our anti-trust statute, it is incumbent upon the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust or combination, but also to allege and prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination. While one whose business or property is injured solely because of the restrictions in trade carried out by a trust organized and maintained for that purpose may maintain an action under the provisions of the anti-trust law for double the damages he has actually suffered from the injury so inflicted, yet he can not maintain an action based upon said law if the injury, although directly the result of the wrongful acts of the trust or the constituent members thereof, does not arise by reason of the restrictions in trade or commerce carried out by such trust or combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN7** [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Section 11 of the Cartwright Act, 1907 Cal. Stat. 984, as amended by 1909 Cal. Stat. 594 gives no right to injunctive relief to a private person in a case of violation of the provisions of the Act, but such a person is merely given a right to recover double damages.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS HEADNOTES

**CA\(1\)** [] (1)

Labor Unions — Agreement to Sell Labor Only to Special Class—Validity of.

--An agreement between an employers' association and a labor union whereby the latter agrees to sell the labor of its members only to members of such employers' association is legal and involves no restraint of trade.

**CA\(2\)** [] (2)

Id.—Exercise of Right to Work.

--It is the right of every man to engage to work for or to deal with, or to refuse to work for or to deal with, any man or class of men as he sees fit, whatever his motive or whatever the resulting injury, without being held in any way accountable therefor; and these rights may be exercised in association with others so long as they have no unlawful object in view.

**CA\(3\)** [] (3)

Id.—Boycott of Employer—Inability to Secure Union Labor—Damages—Injunction.

--The fact that a publishing house, because of its refusal to become a member of an employers' association, is prevented from securing union labor to continue its business does not entitle it to either injunctive relief or damages.

CA(4) [ ] (4)*Monopolies—Violation of Cartwright Act—Action by Private Person—Damage—Pleading.

--A private corporation cannot maintain an action against an association of employers because of alleged price-fixing practices engaged in by the latter, under section 11 of the Cartwright Act, without pleading and proving special damage to its business or property by reason thereof.

CA(5) [ ] (5)*Id. — Relief Accorded by Act to Private Persons.

-- Under the Cartwright Act, a private person is given no right to injunctive relief in case of a violation of the provisions of the act, but such a person is merely given a right to recover double damages.

Counsel: Hoefler, Cook & Snyder for Appellant.

Harry G. McKannay and Heidelberg & Murasky for Respondents.

Judges: LANGDON, P. J. Nourse, J., and Sturtevant, J., concurred.

Opinion by: LANGDON

---

Opinion

[*367] [**413] LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against it entered after general demurrers to the complaint had been sustained. The complaint asks for injunctive relief and for damages; its allegations are lengthy and complex. In substance, they are as follows:

Plaintiff is a corporation doing business under the laws of California. Certain named defendants and some two hundred others, whose names are unknown to plaintiff, composed an organization known as the "Printers' Board of Trade." Said association is formed for the purpose, among others (as set forth in its by-laws) "to investigate and check injurious trade practices, and encourage the opposite" in the business of printing and publishing, [***2] which is the business carried on by the several members of the association. Certain of the named defendants, together with about thirteen hundred others whose names are unknown to plaintiff, composed an association known as [*368] "S. F. Typographical Union No. 21." Certain named defendants and five hundred other persons whose names are unknown to plaintiff compose an association of persons engaged in the business of printing pressmen and assistants known as the "S. F. Printing Pressmen & Assistants Union No. 24." Certain named defendants, with numerous other persons whose names are unknown to plaintiff, compose an association of persons engaged in the printing trades in the city and county of San Francisco under the name of "Franklin Printing Trades Association." The executive officers of each of these associations are also joined as defendants.

The complaint continues with allegations, in effect, as follows: That on or about March 1, 1920, plaintiff was engaged in the city and county of San Francisco in carrying on and doing business as a printer and publisher in said city and county and had invested in its business capital in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars and had [***3] built up an established trade and employed on the average more than twenty-five persons in said business; that in the month of March, 1920, the said association known as "Printers' Board of Trade of San Francisco" caused an agent or representative of said association to approach the managing officers of plaintiff and to demand that plaintiff become a member of said Board of Trade; that plaintiff, for its own good reasons, declined to join said Board of Trade. On January 17, 1921, plaintiff received from said Board of Trade a written communication signed by the secretary thereof, inviting plaintiff to become a member of said Board of Trade and reciting that the monthly dues of members would amount to two dollars, plus one dollar for each employee in plaintiff's composing-room and press-room. Plaintiff again advised the said Board of Trade that it did not desire to become a member thereof.

It is alleged that on November 23, 1920, a written agreement was entered into by and between the defendant association, "Franklin Printing Trades Association," and the association known as the "Printers' Board of Trade" (in said agreement referred to as the "Employers' Association") and the association [***4] known as the "S. F. Typographical Union No. 21." Said agreement is referred to [*369] as the "Typographical Agreement" and it is alleged that it provides, in paragraph fifth thereof, as follows:

"In order that the Union may secure the adoption and carrying out by all commercial printing concerns within its jurisdiction of the scale of wages and working conditions herein specified, and have the responsibility of the Employers for their observance and performance, the Union requests and the Employers hereby agree that the Employers will admit to membership in their association all reputable printing concerns; and in consideration hereof, and of the assumption of the responsibility by the Employers for any and all violations of said scale of wages and working conditions by every member of the Employers, the Union agrees that its members will work only for such printing concerns as are members of the Employers, provided that the Employers shall not arbitrarily, or for any but good cause, refuse admission to or deny retention of membership in the Employers' Association."

The complaint sets forth that during the years 1919 and 1920, the representatives of the Printers' Board of Trade [***5] sought to induce plaintiff to join said Board of Trade and threatened to enforce the provisions of said Typographical Agreement above set forth and compel the members of said unions who were working for plaintiff to leave such employment. Plaintiff was also visited by representatives of the union involved, who stated that if plaintiff did not join the association known as Printers' Board of Trade of San Francisco, the said two union associations would be compelled and would, in pursuance of paragraph V of said Typographical Agreement, order the withdrawal from the employ of plaintiff of all members of said two union associations.

Plaintiff refused to join the Printers' Board of Trade and the union employees left plaintiff's employ.

It is alleged that if plaintiff persists in its refusal to become a member of the Printers' Board of Trade, the persons alleged to have quitted its employ will "refuse to resume work and refuse to longer continue in the employ of plaintiff"; "that without the co-operation of the aforesaid quitting members of said S. F. Typographical Union No. 21, it will be impossible, within a period of three or four days, for plaintiff to continue its printing [*370] [***6] and publishing operations." It is then alleged that plaintiff has on hand important large contracts for printing and is under written contract to publish certain magazines and periodicals and that time is of the essence of such contracts, and that [**414] by reason of the acts and things charged against the defendants, plaintiff will be prevented from carrying out said contracts and will become liable in damages thereon.

There are also allegations to the effect that the unions involved here are members of the American Federation of Labor Unions, which controls a magazine with a wide circulation among its members and affords "a ready, convenient, powerful and effective vehicle for the dissemination of information as to persons, products and manufacturers boycotted or to be boycotted"; that "if the defendants . . . continue in the course which they have consummated and threatened of boycotting this plaintiff and advising others to boycott plaintiff, it will result in the very great injury of plaintiff."

CA(1) (1) We shall pause here in our enumeration of the allegations of the complaint so as to consider the effect of those already set forth. The Typographical Agreement, in so far as it is set forth [***7] in the complaint, is one which is perfectly legal and involves no restraint of trade. Provisions substantially the same as those pleaded herein were considered in the case of People v. Epstein, 102 Misc. 476 [170 N.Y.S. 68, 70]. The agreement in that case was between the Photo-Engravers' Board of Trade of New York and members of a Photo-Engravers' Union. The reasoning of the court in that case is applicable in considering the portion of the Typographical Agreement before this court in the present case. HN1 The so-called Cartwright Act (Stats. 1907, p. 984, as amended by Stats. 1909, p. 594), upon which plaintiff relies in bringing this action, contains a provision that labor, whether skilled or unskilled, is not a commodity within the meaning of this act. The portion of the Typographical Agreement pleaded by plaintiff is a contract concerning labor. It is an agreement by the unions to sell their labor only to persons coming within a designated class.

CA(2)[↑] (2) HN2[↑] It is the right of every man to engage to work for or to deal with, or to refuse to work for or to deal [*371] with, any man or class of men as he sees fit, whatever his motive or whatever the resulting injury, without [***8] being held in any way accountable therefor. ( [Parkinson v. Building Trades, 154 Cal. 581, 599 \[16 Ann. Cas. 1165, 21 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 550, 98 P. 1027\]](#); [Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 75 \[103 P. 324\]](#).) These rights may be exercised in association with others so long as they have no unlawful object in view. ( Parkinson v. Building Trades, supra, at p. 599.) Thus, where building contractors and a group of workmen made an agreement which restricted the opportunities of a contractor not a party thereto, it was said, that though the business of the third party was interfered with, the courts could give no relief, since "the law could only make it possible for the complainant to do business in the way he chooses by compelling the defendants to do business in the way they did not choose. When equal rights clash, the law cannot interfere." ( [National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders' Assn., 169 F. 259 \[26 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 148\]](#), 94 C. C. A. 535].)

In the case of [Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70 \[103 P. 324\]](#), it was said: "We think that to-day no court would question the right of an organized union of employees, by concerted [***9] action, to cease their employment (no contractual obligation standing in the way) and this action constitutes a 'strike.' We think, moreover, that no court questions the right of these men to cease dealing by concerted action, either socially or by way of business, with their former employer, and this latter act, in its essence constitutes the primary boycott."

HN3[↑] "The direct object or purpose of a combination furnishes the primary test of its legality. It is not every injury inflicted upon third persons in its operation that renders the combination unlawful. It is not enough to establish illegality in an agreement between certain persons to show that it works harm to others. An agreement entered into for the primary purpose of promoting the interests of the parties is not rendered illegal by the fact that it may, incidentally, injure third persons. . . . A laborer as well as a builder, trader, or manufacturer has the right to conduct his affairs in any lawful manner even though he may thereby injure others. So several laborers and builders may combine for mutual advantage, and, so long as the motive is not malicious, [*372] the object not unlawful, nor oppressive and the means [***10] neither deceitful nor fraudulent, the result is not a conspiracy although it may necessarily work injury to other persons. The damage to such persons may be serious -- it may even extend to their ruin -- but if it is inflicted by a combination in the legitimate pursuit of its own affairs, it is damnum absque injuria." ( [National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders' Assn., 169 F. 259, 265 \[26 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 148\]](#), 94 C. C. A. 535].)

HN4[↑] "An association of individuals may determine that its members shall not work for specified employers of labor. The question ever is as to its purpose in reaching such determination. If the determination is reached in good faith for the purpose of bettering the condition of its members and not through malice or otherwise to injure an employer, the fact that such action may result in incidental injury to the employer does not constitute a justification for issuing an injunction against enforcing such action." ( Bossert v. Dhuy, 221 N.Y. 342, 359 Ann. Cas. 1918D, 661, [117 N.E. 582].)

In this state, the doctrine has been announced even more broadly. In the case of [Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council, 154 Cal. 581, at page \[\*\*\*11\]](#) [599 \[16 Ann. Cas. 1165, 21 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 550, 98 P. 1027, 1034\]](#), it is said: "In case of a peaceable and ordinary strike, without breach of contract, and conducted without violence, threats, or intimidation, this court would not inquire into the motives of the strikers -- their [*415] acts being entirely lawful, their motives would be held immaterial."

CA(3)[↑] (3) In the light of the foregoing cases, we think it clear that in so far as the allegations of the complaint so far enumerated are concerned, they state no ground for either injunctive relief or for the recovery of damages.

But the complaint continues, in another section thereof, with allegations concerning the practices of the Printers' Board of Trade. There are no allegations establishing a causal connection between the plaintiff's grievance, i. e., the withdrawal of the union printers and these averments regarding the methods of the Printers' Board of Trade. The latter are made upon information and belief and are, substantially, as follows: That said board now is, and for more than three years last past has been, engaged in "a combined [*373] scheme and effort to violate the laws of the State of California and of the United States of [***12] America in such case made and provided, by causing the prices of articles and services made and furnished by various members of the said Printers' Board of Trade of San Francisco, to be fixed grossly in excess of an amount that would yield to the persons making the charge and collecting said prices, a fair and reasonable profit"; that in pursuance of said scheme and effort various members composing the said Printers' Board of Trade meet daily in the office of the said Printers' Board of Trade in the city and county of San Francisco and said Board of Trade requires that all of the new contracts and proposals for business involving an amount in excess of fifteen dollars, then under submission to members of said Printers' Board of Trade of San Francisco, be reported and submitted at such meetings, and that thereupon, by lot or agreement, tentative prices are fixed upon said new contracts, and it is likewise determined which member of the Printers' Board of Trade shall perform the services or furnish the materials contemplated by such proposals or contracts; that, thereupon, all of the members, other than the member so decided upon, refrain from bidding for the doing of said work or the [***13] furnishing of said material except in an amount above the amount so fixed. It is alleged that by reason of these facts a person seeking to have work done or materials furnished is compelled to pay the price fixed as aforesaid by said members of said Printers' Board of Trade; that said price so fixed is arrived at through corrupt, unjust, and illegal methods as aforesaid, practiced by said Printers' Board of Trade of San Francisco, and the person desiring the work or materials believes that the price so fixed is obtained as a result of competitive bidding; that as the result of said unjust and illegal practices aforesaid, competition between the members of said Printers' Board of Trade of San Francisco (which board embraces practically ninety-five per cent of the concerns engaged in the printing trade in the city and county of San Francisco) is destroyed and rendered impossible, and that said acts constitute an unjust, discriminating, and unlawful restraint upon trade and commerce, both intrastate and interstate.

Appellant contends that these allegations, if proven, constitute the Printers' Board of Trade a trust within the meaning [*374] of the so-called Cartwright Act. (Act [***14] 4166, General Laws of California [1915] Deering; Stats. 1907, p. 984, as amended by Stats. 1909, p. 594.) Conceding, for the purposes of this opinion, that this be true, the said association would, in consequence, be subject to forfeiture of its charter rights, franchises, and privileges, and to dissolution upon proceedings taken by the attorney-general or the district attorney. (Sec. 2, Stats. 1907, p. 984.) But this is not such a proceeding. This is HN5 [↑] an action by a private corporation, and, as such, is governed by the provisions of section 11 of said act. In that section it is provided that an action may be brought by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation . . . by reason of anything forbidden" in said act.

In the present case the plaintiff makes no allegations of any such injury or damage. The general allegation of its complaint: "That by means of each and all of said acts done and threatened by the defendants aforesaid, respectively, as hereinbefore set forth, the trade and commerce of the plaintiff with its patrons and customers . . . has been and will continue to be forcibly suspended and unless the relief hereinafter [***15] prayed shall be granted . . . plaintiff will lose valuable copyrights because of its inability to continue its usual operations; and that plaintiff by reason of the premises has suffered, and will suffer in an increasing degree, damages . . . in excess of seventy-five thousand dollars," is insufficient. There is no allegation of the particulars in which the plaintiff has been or will be damaged by the restraint of competition among the members of the Printers' Board of Trade. The only damage to plaintiff which is alleged, i. e., the loss of contracts, copyrights, etc., arises from the alleged inability of plaintiff to continue its operations, due to the fact that it cannot secure union labor. This matter we have disposed of in the first part of this opinion. We consider it damnum absque injuria. There is no allegation of loss to plaintiff arising because of the alleged practices of the Printers' Board of Trade in restricting competition among its own members. On the contrary, it is perfectly apparent that plaintiff's business could not be injured by such practice, but must be benefited thereby. If, as plaintiff alleges, ninety-five per cent of the persons engaged in the printing [***16] business voluntarily form an association and restrain themselves [*375] [**416] from competing with one another, plaintiff, being free from such restraint, has the fewer competitors with whom to contend. Indeed, plaintiff does not complain of loss or damage because of the want of competition among the members of the Printers' Board of Trade, of which plaintiff is not a member. If plaintiff could secure union labor and continue to operate its business, the activities of the Printers' Board of Trade in restricting competition among its own members would not injure plaintiff in the least. It is alleged that these practices have continued for three years. Apparently they have not injured plaintiff, but have probably meant to it a business opportunity. It is the withdrawal of the union labor and the consequent inability of plaintiff to operate its business in competition with the members of the Printers' Board of Trade which is its real complaint.

CA(4)[] (4) Plaintiff cannot maintain an action against the Printers' Board of Trade because of these alleged practices without pleading and proving special damage to his business or property by reason thereof. There are no facts alleged in the complaint showing [***17] damage to plaintiff because of said defendant's methods of doing business.

In the case of [Munter v. Eastman Kodak Co., 28 Cal. App. 660, at page 664 \[153 P. 737, 739\]](#), it is said: HN6[] "While in a criminal prosecution against persons for maintaining a trust or combination in restraint of commerce or trade, the gist of the offense is in the formation and maintenance of such trust or combination, and the fact of the existence of the combination for the purpose of doing some prohibited act is all that need be proved to support and sustain the charge, yet in a civil action for damages based upon our anti-trust statute, it is incumbent upon the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust or combination, but also to allege and prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination. Or, as was said by this court in [Krigbaum v. Sbarbaro, 23 Cal. App. 427, 433 \[138 P. 364\]](#): 'To be 'injured in business or property,' within the contemplation of said law, as we understand it, is where the injury has directly resulted from the fact of the existence of the trust [***18] -- that is to say, where the business or property has directly sustained injury solely by reason of the restrictions in trade or commerce [*376] which are fostered by such trust or combination. In other words, while one whose business or property has been injured solely because of the restrictions in trade carried out by a trust organized and maintained for that purpose may maintain an action under the provisions of the anti-trust law for double the damages he has actually suffered from the injury so inflicted, yet he could not maintain an action based upon said law if the injury, although directly the result of the wrongful acts of the trust or the constituent members thereof, did not arise by reason of the restrictions in trade or commerce carried out by such trust or combination.'"

CA(5)[] (5) Furthermore, HN7[] the statute gives no right to injunctive relief to a private person in a case of violation of the provisions of the act, but such a person is merely given a right to recover double damages. (Sec. 11, Stats. 1907, p. 984, as amended Stats. 1909, p. 594. See, also, [National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders' Assn., 169 F. 259 \[26 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 148, 94 C. C. A. 525\]](#).)

[***19] The demurrers were properly sustained; the judgment is affirmed.

Nourse, J., and Sturtevant, J., concurred.

A petition to have the cause heard in the supreme court, after judgment in the district court of appeal, was denied by the supreme court on June 15, 1922.

All the Justices concurred, except Shurtleff, J., and Waste, J., who were absent.

Federal Baseball Club, Inc. v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued April 19, 1922. ; May 29, 1922, Decided

No. 204.

Reporter

259 U.S. 200 *; 42 S. Ct. 465 **; 66 L. Ed. 898 ***; 1922 U.S. LEXIS 2475 ****; 26 A.L.R. 357

FEDERAL BASEBALL CLUB OF BALTIMORE, INC. v. NATIONAL LEAGUE OF PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL CLUBS, ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] ERROR TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

ERROR to a judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia reversing a judgment for triple damages under the Anti-Trust Acts recovered by the plaintiff in error in the Supreme Court of the District and directing that judgment be entered for the defendants.

Core Terms

---

commerce, ball club, exhibitions, lecture, repeat, state line, organizations, elaborate, transport, composed, arrange, pennant, sending, induce, powers, ball, won

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Constitutional Law > State Sovereign Immunity > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN1[] Constitutional Law, State Sovereign Immunity

The business of giving exhibitions of baseball is purely a state affair. The fact that in order to give the exhibitions the baseball leagues must induce free persons to cross state lines and must arrange and pay for their doing so is not enough to change the character of the business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Personal effort, not related to production, is not a subject of commerce.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Headnotes

Monopolies -- organized baseball -- not interstate commerce. --

Headnote:

The organized business of giving exhibitions of baseball between clubs representing different cities, for the most part in different states, is not interstate commerce within the meaning of the Anti-trust Acts of July 2, 1890, and October 15, 1914, although the scheme requires constantly repeated interstate traveling on the part of the clubs.

[For other cases, see Monopoly, II. a; Commerce, I. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Syllabus

1. The business of providing public baseball games for profit between clubs of professional baseball players in a league and between clubs of rival leagues, although necessarily involving the constantly repeated traveling of the players from one State to another, provided for, controlled and disciplined by the organizations employing them, is not interstate commerce. P. 208.
  2. Held that an action for triple damages under the Anti-Trust Acts could not be maintained by a baseball club against baseball leagues and their constituent clubs, joined with individuals, for an alleged conspiracy to monopolize the baseball business resulting injuriously to the plaintiff. P. 209.

269 Fed. 681; 50 App. D.C. 165, affirmed.

Counsel: Mr. Charles A. Douglas and Mr. William L. Marbury, with whom Mr. L. Edwin Goldman and Mr. William L. Rawls were on the briefs, for [***2] plaintiff in error.

Defendants are voluntary associations and corporations engaged upon a vast scale, involving the investment of millions of dollars, in the business of providing, by the transportation from State to State of baseball teams and their necessary attendants and equipment, exhibitions of professional baseball. The court is not concerned with whether the mere playing of baseball, that is the act of the individual player, upon a baseball field in a particular city, is by itself interstate commerce. That act, it is true, is related to the business of the defendants, but it can no more be said to be the business than can any other single act in any other business forming a part of interstate commerce.

The question with which the court is here concerned is whether the business in which the defendants were engaged when the wrongs complained of occurred, taken as an entirety, was interstate commerce, or more accurately, whether the monopoly which they had established or attempted to establish was a monopoly of any part of interstate commerce.

At the foundation of the business of one of these leagues -- in its primary conception -- is a circuit embracing seven different [****3] States. No single club in that circuit could operate without the other members of the circuit, and accordingly in the very beginning of its business the matter of interstate relationship is not only important but predominant and indispensable.

Each game symbolizes a contest of skill between the two cities that have been brought together by means of interstate communication and travel. Each team of each club in the league carries with it, and it is essential to the profit of the enterprise that it should carry with it, its representative character; it symbolizes the great city that it represents to those assembled to witness the contest.

GÍ JÁNEÙ PÄGÉ ÈR PEEELÁ GÀÙ ÈO ÉA Í ÈÅÅ Í LÀ Í ÅSE Ù ÆA ÈJ Í ÈÅÅ JÌ LÀF GGÀWÉU ÈSÓY ØA Á Í ÈÅÅ

In addition to this representative city and state aspect, there is also the element of intersectional rivalry. Experience has shown that the game is most largely patronized when clubs are so located as to provide a contest for supremacy between the Eastern and Western sections of the country.

It is necessary to distinguish between baseball as a sport, that is, where it is played merely as a means of physical exercise and diversion, and this business of providing exhibitions of professional baseball. The business of Organized Baseball represents [****4] and has represented for many years, an investment of colossal wealth. Defendants who dominate Organized Baseball are not engaged in a sport. They are engaged in a money-making business enterprise in which all of the features of any large commercial undertaking are to be found. When the teams of the National or American Leagues or of any other league are sent around the circuit of the league, they go at the direction of employers whose business it is to send them, and whose profits are made as a result of that business operation.

When the profit-making aspect of the business is examined, it will be found that the interstate element is still further magnified. The vast investment of capital which has been made in it is required, among other things, in order to provide a place at which the teams in the league may play their contests. Each club has a ball park, with stands erected upon them, sometimes, as in the case of a major league club, costing several millions of dollars. Every club in the league earns its profit not only by the drawing capacity of its team at home, but also by that of the teams of the clubs which its team visits in the various cities in the league. The gate [****5] receipts in all of the cities in which the clubs are located are divided according to a definite proportion, fixed by agreement between the club of the city in which the game is played and the club employing the visiting team.

In no other business that can now be recalled is there such a close interrelationship and interdependence between persons in one State and persons in another. The personality, so to speak, of each club in a league is actually projected over state lines and becomes mingled with that of the clubs in all the other States. The continuous interstate activity of each is essential to all the others. The clubs of each league constitute a business unit embracing territorially a number of different States. While each club has, of course, a local legal habitat, yet from a practical business standpoint it is primarily an ambulatory organization.

It is difficult to perceive the relevancy of any discussion about an article of commerce in this case. Commerce may be carried on in one of its forms by traffic in articles of merchandise, but there are countless forms in which it may be carried on without traffic in such articles. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 189.

It is [****6] also difficult to discern the relevancy of the contention that personal effort is not an article of commerce. Personal effort, while it may not be an article of commerce, is often commerce itself, but we are not concerned with any such question here. It may be passed by saying that it has been adjudicated by this court in the Hoke Case, 227 U.S. 308, that interstate commerce may be created by the mere act of a person in allowing himself to be transported from one State to another, without any personal effort; and further that it is very difficult to see how International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U.S. 91, could have been decided as it was, except upon the principle that the mere exchange of instruction and information, which is about as purely a matter of personal effort as anything that can be imagined, may be a subject of interstate commerce.

If transactions in interstate commerce were to be judged by their isolated ultimate results, as the defendants seek to separate the act of a player in throwing a ball upon a ball field from all the steps which are taken to bring the ball player in the due course of business from other States, of course their interstate character could be [****7] plausibly argued away. By such a process of reasoning the American Tobacco Company, for instance, might have removed its gigantic monopoly from the operation of the Sherman Act. See United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 184; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 68; Swift & Co v. United States, 196 U.S. 375.

In the business now under consideration throughout the playing season the ball teams, their attendants and paraphernalia, are in constant revolution around a preestablished circuit. Their movement is only interrupted to the extent of permitting exhibitions of baseball to be given in the various cities. When exhibitions in one city are completed the clubs resume, according to the agreement made, and plan of business long established, their course of travel on to another city, and thus on and on until the schedule of exhibitions is completed. The interruption in

G J Á N E U J E G E C F A R G E E L Á G U E Ó G Á I I É A I I L A I A S E Ó A È J I È A I I J I L A F G G Á N E U J E S O Y Q A G I I É A I I interstate movement is nothing like as great as that in the Swift Case, supra. The constant movement of the teams from State to State during a period of over five months each year, is under a single direction and control and in pursuance of one object.

See Champion v. Ames, 188 U.S. 321; *Pensacola [****8] Telegraph Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co.*, 96 U.S. 1; United States v. Patten, 226 U.S. 525; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U.S. 274; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Foster, 247 U.S. 105. See particularly Marienelli v. United Booking Offices, 227 Fed. 165, where the question was presented as to whether a company engaged in booking vaudeville performers for a circuit embracing theatres in cities in different States was engaged in interstate commerce within the Sherman Act. Also, Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 235 Fed. 401.

It is common knowledge that baseball is the preeminent American sport. Millions of people follow the daily reports of the results of the games in the press, and in the large cities gather in the afternoons around the newspaper offices to see the bulletin reports of the scores. Not only so, but vast numbers of people travel from one city to another for the purpose of witnessing the games. Telegraph facilities are installed at all the ball parks in the Major Leagues, and in those of the more important Minor Leagues, where reports of the games are sent out and are received throughout the country.

Each league contracts for a uniform type of baseball, [****9] which is used in tremendous numbers and shipped by the manufacturer from time to time as they are needed by the various clubs.

These incidents, while in themselves not determinative of the question of whether or not the business is interstate in character, yet, when considered in connection with its main features, emphasize the truth of what has before been said, that there is scarcely any business which can be named in which the element of interstate commerce is as predominant as that in which defendants are engaged.

The agreement and combination entered into and maintained by defendants whereby the entire business in the United States of providing exhibitions of professional baseball was brought under the control of defendants and their confederates in Organized Baseball, amounted in law to a conspiracy in restraint of trade among the several States and a monopoly or an attempt to monopolize a part of commerce among the several States within the meaning of the Sherman Act.

There is no testimony in this case legally sufficient to show that the plaintiff has waived its right to recover damages under the Sherman Act.

Mr. George Wharton Pepper, with whom Mr. Benjamin S. Minor [****10] and Mr. Samuel M. Clement, Jr., were on the brief, for defendants in error.

Organized Baseball is not interstate commerce and does not constitute an attempt to monopolize within the Sherman Act.

Personal effort, not related to production, is not a subject of commerce; and the attempt to secure all the skilled service needed for professional baseball contests is not an attempt to monopolize commerce or any part of it. Clayton Act, § 6; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168; Hooper v. California, 155 U.S. 648; Metropolitan Opera Co. v. Hammerstein, 147 N.Y.S. 532; In re Duff, 4 Fed. 519; In re Oriental Society, 104 Fed. 975; People v. Klaw, 106 N.Y.S. 341. The Department of Justice has ruled that the business conducted by Organized Baseball was not in violation of the Sherman Act; and also that the business of presenting theatrical entertainments is not commerce. Distinguishing: International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U.S. 91; and Marienelli v. United Booking Offices, 227 Fed. 165. The only case in which the question whether Organized Baseball is within the Sherman Act has been directly passed upon is that of American Baseball Club of Chicago v. Chase, 149 N.Y.S. 6; in which the court [****11] answered the question in the negative.

Congress has not imposed a penalty upon the transportation of players for baseball purposes, and therefore Hoke v. United States, 227 U.S. 308, is not point. While Congress may regulate the movement of persons in interstate commerce, when it has not regulated movement as such, the doing of an act essentially local is not converted into an interstate act merely because people came from another State to do it.

Opinion by: HOLMES

Opinion

---

[*207] [**465] [***899] MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a suit for threefold damages brought by the plaintiff in error under the Anti-Trust Acts of July 2, 1890, c. 647, § 7, 26 Stat. 209, 210, and of October 15, 1914, c. 323, § 4, 38 Stat. 730, 731. The defendants are The National League of Professional Base Ball Clubs and The American League of Professional Base Ball Clubs, unincorporated associations, composed respectively of groups of eight incorporated base ball clubs, joined as defendants; the presidents of the two Leagues and a third person, constituting what is known as the National Commission, having considerable powers in carrying out an agreement between the two [****12] Leagues; and three other persons having powers in the Federal League of Professional Base Ball Clubs, the relation of which to this case will be explained. It is alleged that these defendants conspired to monopolize the base ball business, the means adopted being set forth with a detail which, in the view that we take, it is unnecessary to repeat.

The plaintiff is a base ball club incorporated in Maryland, and with seven other corporations was a member of the Federal League of Professional Base Ball Clubs, a corporation under the laws of Indiana, that attempted to compete with the combined defendants. It alleges that the defendants destroyed the Federal League by buying up some of the constituent clubs and in one way or another inducing all those clubs except the plaintiff to leave their League, and that the three persons connected with the Federal League and named as defendants, one of them being the President of the League, took part in the conspiracy. Great damage to the plaintiff is alleged. The [*208] plaintiff obtained a verdict for $80,000 in the Supreme Court and a judgment for treble the amount was entered, but the Court of Appeals, after an elaborate discussion, [****13] held that the defendants were not within the Sherman Act. The appellee, the plaintiff, elected to stand on the record in order to bring the case to this Court at once, and thereupon judgment was ordered for the defendants. 50 App. D.C. 165; 269 Fed. 681, 688. It is not argued that the plaintiff waived any [***900] rights by its course. Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U.S. 66.

The decision of the Court of Appeals went to the root of the case and if correct makes it unnecessary to consider other serious difficulties in the way of the plaintiff's recovery. A summary statement of the nature of the business involved will be enough to present the point. The clubs composing the Leagues are in different cities and for the most part in different States. The end of the elaborate organizations and sub-organizations that are described in the pleadings and evidence is that these clubs shall play against one another in public exhibitions for money, one or the other club crossing a state line in order to make the meeting possible. When as the result of these contests one club has won the pennant of its League and another club has won the pennant of the other League, there is a final competition [****14] for the world's championship between these two. Of course the scheme requires constantly repeated travelling on the part of the clubs, which is provided for, controlled and disciplined by the organizations, and this it is said means [**466] commerce among the States. But we are of opinion that the Court of Appeals was right.

HN1 [↑] The business is giving exhibitions of base ball, which are purely state affairs. It is true that, in order to attain for these exhibitions the great popularity that they have achieved, competitions must be arranged between clubs from different cities and States. But the fact that in order [*209] to give the exhibitions the Leagues must induce free persons to cross state lines and must arrange and pay for their doing so is not enough to change the character of the business. According to the distinction insisted upon in Hooper v. California, 155 U.S. 648, 655, the transport is a mere incident, not the essential thing. That to which it is incident, the exhibition, although made for money would not be called trade or commerce in the commonly accepted use of those words. As it is put by the defendants, HN2 [↑] personal effort, nor related to production, is [****15] not a subject of commerce. That which in its consummation is not commerce does not become commerce among the States because the transportation that we have mentioned takes place. To repeat the illustrations given by the Court below, a firm of lawyers sending out a member to argue a case, or the Chautauqual lecture bureau sending out lecturers, does not engage in such commerce because the lawyer or lecturer goes to another State.

GI JÁMÌÈGÉCÉRÉLÀ GÀJÉDÀ ÌÍ ÈÈ ÌÌ LÀÌ ASÉDÀ JÌ ÈÈÈÈLÀJOGGÀÈSÓYÓQÀ ÌÍ ÈÈÈÈ

If we are right the plaintiff's business is to be described in the same way ant the restrictions by contract that prevented the plaintiff from getting players to break their bargains and the other conduct charged against the defendants were not an interference with commerce among the States.

Judgment affirmed.

---

End of Document

Federal Trade Com. v. P. Lorillard Co.

District Court, S.D. New York

October 3, 1922

No Number in Original

Reporter

283 F. 999 *; 1922 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1386 **

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. P. LORILLARD CO.; SAME v. AMERICAN TOBACCO CO., Inc.

Core Terms

---

papers, commerce, investigate, inspection, tobacco, correspondence, unlimited, interstate commerce, interstate, documentary evidence, copies, powers, unreasonable search and seizure, anti-trust, intrastate, purposes, letters, jobber

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

See § 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, Comp. St. § 8836i.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Investigations > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HN2[] Investigations, Federal Trade Commission Act

See § 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, Comp. St. § 8836f.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Trade Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

283 F. 999, *999L<sup>1922 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1386, **1386</sup>

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Commerce With Other Nations

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN3 Interstate Commerce, Prohibition of Commerce

The U.S. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3 provides that congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN4 Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

The commerce clause of the United States Constitution granting power to the congress to legislate as to commerce permits only of legislation which has to do with interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

The Federal Trade Act forbids unfair practices in reference to commerce of an interstate character only.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN6 Interstate Commerce, Prohibition of Commerce

The commerce clause of the United States Constitution vested in the congress a full and complete power to regulate commerce among the several states, for the strong arm of the national government may be put forth to brush away all obstacles to interstate commerce.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Stimulation of Commerce

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

283 F. 999, *999L<sup>1922 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1386, **1386</sup>

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Interstate Commerce, Stimulation of Commerce

The power of congress to legislate embraces power not only to regulate and control that which is wholly interstate, but also that which even though intrastate affects the free flow of interstate commerce.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Constitutional Controls > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

**HN8** [down] Separation of Powers, Legislative Controls

The United States Constitution, having granted to the congress plenary power to regulate or control commerce among the states, congress may delegate such duties to investigate and learn conditions to a permanent administrative body.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Writs > Common Law Writs > Mandamus

**HN9** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act (Act), Comp. St. § 8836i, wherein jurisdiction is granted to the district courts of the United States, provides authority to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person or corporation to comply with the provisions of the Act or any order of the FTC made in pursuance thereof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

**HN10** [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

Under § 6 of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act, Comp. St. § 8836f, power is conferred upon the FTC upon the direction of the President or either house of congress to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation, but the language of the statute makes it necessary for one of the houses of congress to adopt a resolution for a direction to investigate, and the reporting of such investigation must be for alleged violations of the antitrust acts.

283 F. 999, *999L<sup>A</sup> 1922 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1386, **1386

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN11 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

The power of the Federal Trade Commission cannot be broader than what congress did or could delegate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

Any person may be compelled to appear and depose and produce documentary evidence, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence, before the Federal Trade Commission (FTC). The FTC is required to make findings in proceedings before them and the findings must be based upon the testimony given.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Investigations > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Investigations > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Investigations, Federal Trade Commission Act

The right to procure information in its investigations under the provisions of section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, Comp. St. § 8836f, would not grant the unlimited search and inspection of correspondence with the right to copy the same in the absence of some specific complaint which would point out the materiality to that complaint of the particular correspondence and papers sought to be obtained.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

Reading together sections 5, 6, and 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, Comp. St. §§ 8836e, 8836f, 8836i, the court does not think that congress intended, at the time of the enactment of the law, to go beyond the well recognized principles of limitations with reference to searches and seizures guarded against by the U.S. Const. amend. IV. It is better extracted by the procedure long established in the courts in conformity with the constitutional guaranty against unlawful and unreasonable searches and seizures and the right of people to be secure in their papers and effects to deduce the intention that information should only be therefrom.

283 F. 999, *999 1922 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1386, **1386

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Search Warrants > Probable Cause > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Search Warrants > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Search Warrants > Affirmations & Oaths > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

See U.S. Const. amend. IV.

Administrative Law > Agency Investigations > Constitutional Rights > Search & Seizure

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Investigations > Federal Trade Commission Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Investigations > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN16 [blue icon] Constitutional Rights, Search & Seizure

This command of the United States Constitution, properly interpreted, is a prohibition against congress granting powers to the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) for unlimited searches and seizures of letters and documents. The FTC Act makes plain the duty of the FTC to gather, compile, and publish for use in its proceedings what may be voluntarily offered or submitted in response to request or demand. It may also make investigation independently, but the exercise of visitorial power over private corporations must keep within restrictions of the U.S. Const. amend. IV. Neither branch of the legislative department, still less any merely administrative body, established by the congress, possesses, or can be invested with, a general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

HN17 [blue icon] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

There is no doubt that congress may authorize a commission to obtain information upon any subject which, in its judgment, it may be important to possess. But in its inquiries it is controlled by the same guards against the invasion of private rights which limit the investigations of private parties into similar matters.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN18 [blue icon] Legislation, Interpretation

It is the duty of the court to so construe an act as to save the statute from constitutional infirmity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

HN19 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

Section 6(b) of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Act, Comp. St. § 8836f, grants the FTC the right to require corporations coming within its jurisdiction to make reports concerning their affairs and thus to furnish to the FTC such information as it may require. And subdivision (a) of section 6 calls upon the corporations in question to report upon specific matters as provided in subdivision (b). If the corporations fail in reporting or the reports are false, the FTC is entitled, upon properly showing the probable cause, to demand due disclosures and access to the inspection of any specific, necessary, and relevant papers, excluding such papers as may be privileged. There must appear to be some reasonable cause for a search such as a definite complaint charging a specific wrong and thus presenting an inquiry which would have reasonable and readily ascertainable limits.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

A corporation is entitled to invoke the guarantees of the U.S. Const. amend. IV against unreasonable searches and seizures in as full a measure as would a person or partnership.

Opinion by: [**1] MANTON

Opinion

---

[*1000] MANTON, Circuit Judge. These case were argued together and will be considered in one opinion.

The petitioner in each of the above-named proceedings was granted an alternative writ of mandamus commanding the respondent to show cause why a peremptory writ should not issue directing that immediately it forthwith deliver into possession of the Federal Trade Commission the accounts, books, records, documents, memoranda, papers, and correspondence of the respondent for inspection and examination and for the purpose of making copies thereof. The petition upon which the alternative writ was granted sets forth that on the 16th Of September, 1921, a complaint was filed with the Federal Trade Commission against the respondent. The complaint alleged that the respondent in the conduct of its interstate commerce was indulging in practices which were in violation of the provisions of the Act of Congress of September 26, 1914 (38 Stat. 717 [Comp. St. §§ 8836a-8836k]), in that the respondent was using certain methods of business [*1001] practices resulting in unfair competition, in that it was regulating and fixing or attempting to regulate and fix the prices [**2] at which the commodities sold by it should be resold by those to whom it had sold them, and was co-operating, aiding, and abetting others to successfully formulate and carry out a scheme or combination pursuant to which the resale prices of respondent's commodities should be fixed and maintained by those to whom respondent had previously sold its products or commodities. Further, that the Senate of the Congress of the United States by a resolution directed the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the tobacco situation in the United States as to the domestic and export trade, with particular reference as to the market price to producers of tobacco and the market price for manufacturing tobacco and the price of leaf tobacco exported, and to report to the Senate as soon as possible the result of such investigation. Petitioner then sets forth that at various times between September 29, 1921, and November 5, 1921, authorized agents of the petitioner, in its behalf, demanded of the respondent to produce and furnish to them at respondent's offices certain specified documentary evidence or written data, correspondence, and other paper writings which were then and there in the possession, [**3] custody and control of the respondent so that copies thereof or parts thereof might be made. And the respondent, complying with the demands and pursuant to its duty, under the provisions of the Federal Trade Act, did produce for inspection and examination of petitioner's agents certain of the data commanded; but, in violation of provisions of the Federal Trade Act, it refused to produce for inspection and examination "certain documentary evidence, records, correspondence, and writings herein specified which were then and there in respondent's possession, custody, and control, and it refused to permit copies thereof to be made by petitioner." And it sets forth that it in necessary in the prosecution of its duty that such inspection and examination be granted to the petitioner's agents and that it is hindered in the performance of its duty and in the exercise of its power by the refusal of the respondent to grant such examination and inspection. Its prayer for relief is that "all papers and telegrams received by the American Tobacco Company (or P. Lorillard Company) from all of its jobber customers located at different points throughout the United States and also copies of all letters [**4] and telegrams sent by the American Tobacco Company (or P. Lorillard Company) to such jobbers during the period of January 1, 1921, to December 31, 1921, inclusive," be turned over for examination and inspection. Each respondent resists the application for a peremptory writ contending that the Federal Trade Commission is asserting authority which it does not possess in seeking to make an unlimited and unrestricted inspection with the right to copy all of the correspondence with its jobber customers, and that the Senate resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to make the investigation referred to grants no authority for unlimited and unrestricted search with the right to copy the correspondence. It further contends that sections 5, 6, and 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (Comp. St. §§ 8836e, 8836f, 8836i) give no such authority of unlimited and unrestricted search and examination, and it is said that any [*1002] such construction or interpretation of the Federal Trade Commission Act would be in contravention of the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution guaranteeing the right of the people to be secure in their papers and effects against unreasonable searches and [**5] seizures, and that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation. Thus the question is presented whether Congress can delegate visitorial powers under the commerce clause of the Constitution over private corporations engaged in interstate commerce to the extent of granting unlimited and unrestricted examination and inspection with the right to copy.

By the Act of Congress of September 26, 1914, the Federal Trade Commission was created a body corporate. Its purposes were defined by the statute creating it, and its duties and powers and administration are referred to in sections 5, 6, and 9. It is provided by section 9 of the act (Comp. St. § 8836i) that --

HN1 [↑] "For the purposes of this act, the Commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against."

And section 6 of the act (section 8836f) provides:

HN2 [↑] "That the Commission shall also have power -- (a) To gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, [**6] practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships."

HN3 [↑] The Constitution provides (article 1, § 8, cl. 3) that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states.

Each respondent is conceded to be a private corporation engaged in selling tobacco and its products and is engaged in interstate and intrastate commerce. This investigation was commenced "for the purpose of ascertaining the facts relating to respondent's business." The business of each of the respondents is very extensive; its letters, papers, and other documents making it a business of thousands of letters per month. The affidavits submitted by the respondents set forth a mass of correspondence and other documentary evidence which, if the petitioner prevails in its alleged right to "full and complete access to any and all documentary evidence in the possession and control of the respondent," would, it is alleged, handicap the respondent in its business and entail considerable expense and difficulties. [**7] Much of the correspondence relates to transactions bearing upon intrastate commerce only. As to such of the correspondence as bears upon intrastate commerce, the petitioner is not entitled to examination, inspection, or copying any part thereof. HN4[↑] The commerce clause of the Constitution granting power to the Congress to legislate as to the commerce permits only of legislation which has to do with interstate commerce. HN5[↑] The Federal Trade Act forbids unfair practices in reference to the commerce of an interstate character only. Ward Baking Co. v. Federal Trade Comm. \(C.C.A.\) 264 Fed. 330. HN6[↑] The commerce clause of the Constitution [*1003] vested in the Congress "a full and complete power to regulate commerce among the several states, for the strong arm of the national government may be put forth to brush away all obstacles to interstate commerce." In re Debs, 158 U.S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092. And "constitutional privileges do not change but their operation extends to new matters as modes of business and the habits of life of the peoples very with each succeeding generation. The power is the same put it operates to-day upon modes of interstate commerce unknown to the [**8] fathers and will operate with equal force upon any new modes of such commerce which the future may develop." Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. \(22 U.S.\) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23. HN7[↑] The power of Congress to legislate embraces power not only to regulate and control that which is wholly interstate, but also that which even though intrastate affects the free flow of interstate commerce. Minn. Rate Cases, 230 U.S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18. To regulate is the power to enact legislation directly affecting interstate commerce. United States v. Adair \(D.C.\) 152 Fed. 737. HN8[↑] The Constitution having granted to the Congress plenary power to regulate or control commerce among the states, Congress may delegate such duties to investigate and learn conditions to a permanent administrative body.

The validity of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act granting to that Commission that power to investigate facts relating to interstate transportation was considered in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047. It has been held that the visitorial power of the federal government provided for in the act, over private corporations, [**9] must be restricted to activities of an interstate commerce character. Hale v. Henkel, 201 U.S. 43, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652; Interstate Commerce Comm. v. Goodrich Co., 224 U.S. 194, 32 Sup. Ct. 436, 56 L. Ed. 729; United States v. Basic Products Co. \(D.C.\) 260 Fed. 472. We must presume that the Congress did not intend by this legislation to invade the field reserved under the Constitution to the several states by interfering with transactions in intrastate commerce. "The statute must be construed, if fairly possible, so as to avoid not only the conclusion that it is unconstitutional, but also grave doubts upon that score." United States v. Jin Fuey Moy, 241 U.S. 394, 36 Sup. Ct. 658, 60 L. Ed. 1061, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 854. See, also, United States v. D. & H. Co., 213 U.S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836.

The resolution of the Senate provided that --

"The Federal Trade Commission be and is hereby directed to investigate the tobacco situation in the United States as to the domestic and export trade, with particular reference to the market price to producers for tobacco and the market price for manufactured tobacco and the price of leaf tobacco exported, and report to the [**10] Senate as soon as possible the result of such investigation."

This resolution has not the mandatory effect of statutory enactment with reference to the commerce clause of the Constitution, and the present application for the writ must rest upon the command of HN9[↑] section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (Comp. St. § 8836i), wherein [*1004] jurisdiction is granted to the District Courts of the United States "to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person or corporation to comply with the provisions of this act or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof." The resolution of the Senate does not come within the terms of the authority conferred by the statute in question. HN10[↑] Under section 6 (section 8836f), power is conferred upon the Commission "upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the anti-trust acts by any corporation," but the language of this statute makes it necessary for one of the Houses of Congress to adopt a resolution for a direction to investigate, and the reporting of such investigation must be for alleged violations of the anti-trust acts. The quotation [**11] from the resolution of the Senate fails to indicate that it is founded upon any violation or alleged violation of the antitrust law (Comp. St. § 8820 et seq.). It does not indicate that the Senate intended that any anti-trust law violation should be investigated by the Commission. If so, and apt expression to that effect could have been used. It cannot, therefore, be concluded that it was intended, in the language used, to investigate any violations of the anti-trust acts by any corporation. In any case, HN11[] the power of the Federal Trade Commission cannot be broader than what Congress did or could delegate. The analogy of the cases arising under the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission with that of the Federal Trade Commission's powers is pertinent. This was referred to an *Beechnut Packing Co. v. Federal Trade Comm. \(C.C.A.\) 264 Fed. 885.* A comparison of the statutes particularly setting forth the procedure under the two acts shows the similarity. in HN12[] each any person may be compelled to appear and depose and produce documentary evidence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the Commission. Both Commissions [**12] are required to make findings in proceedings before them and the findings must be based upon the testimony given.

In the *Harriman Case, 211 U.S. 407, 29 Sup. Ct. 115, 53 L. Ed. 253,* Justice Holmes said:

"The Commission * * * is given power to require the testimony of witnesses 'for the purposes of this act.' The argument for the Commission is that the purposes of the act embrace all the duties that the act imposes and the powers that it gives the Commission; that one of the purposes is that the Commission shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the business of carriers is conducted, as required by section 12; that another is that it shall recommend additional legislation * * * and that for either of these general objects it may call on the courts to require any one whom it may point out to attend and testify if he would avoid the penalties for contempt.

"We are of the opinion, on the contrary, that the purposes of the act for which the Commission may exact evidence embrace only complaints for violation of the act, and investigations by the Commission upon matters that might have been made the object of complaint. As we have already implied the main purpose [**13] of the act was to regulate the interstate business of carriers, and the secondary purpose, that for which the Commission was established, was to enforce the regulations enacted. These in our opinion are the purposes referred to; in other words the power to require testimony is limited, as it usually is in English speaking countries at least, to the only [\*1005] cases where the sacrifice of privacy is necessary -- those where the investigations concern a specific breach of the law. * * *

"If we felt more hesitation than we do, we still should feel bound to construe the statute not merely so as to sustain its constitutionality but so as to avoid a succession of constitutional doubts, so far as candor permits."

The Interstate Commerce Commission deals with quasi public corporations. But the phrase of the Federal Trade Commission Act considered, in view of the language in the Harriman Case, would indicate that HN13[] the right to procure information in its investigations under the provisions of *section 6* would not grant the unlimited search and inspection of correspondence with the right to copy the same in the absence of some specific complaint which would point out the materiality [**14] to that complaint of the particular correspondence and papers sought to be obtained.

HN14[] Reading sections 5, 6, and 9, I do not think that Congress intended, at the time of the enactment of this law, to go beyond the well-recognized principles of limitations with reference to searches and seizures guarded against by the *Fourth Amendment of the Constitution*. It is better extracted by the procedure long established in the courts in conformity with the constitutional guaranty against unlawful and unreasonable searches and seizures and the right of people to be secure in their papers and effects to deduce the intention that information should only be therefrom. The *Fourth Amendment* provides:

HN15[] "The right of the people to be secure in their * * * papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

HN16[] This command of the Constitution properly interpreted, is a prohibition against Congress granting powers to the Commission for unlimited searches and seizures of letters and documents. [**15] The act makes plain the duty of the Commission to gather, compile, and publish for use in its proceedings what may be voluntarily offered or submitted in response to request or demand. It may also make investigation independently, but the exercise of visitorial power over private corporations must keep within restrictions of the Fourth Amendment. "Neither branch of the legislative department, still less any merely administrative body, established by the Congress, possesses, or can be invested with, a general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen." Interstate Commerce Comm. v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 478, 14 Sup. Ct. 1134, 38 L. Ed. 1047.

As was said by Mr. Justice Brewer in Re Pacific Ry. Comm. \(C.C.\) 32 Fed. 241:

HN17 [↑] "There is no doubt that Congress may authorize a commission to obtain information upon any subject which, in its judgment, it may be important to possess. * * * But in its inquiries it is controlled by the same guards against the invasion of private rights which limit the investigations of private parties into similar matters."

HN18 [↑] It is the duty of the court to so construe the act as to save the statute from constitutional infirmity. [Knights Templars' \[\*161 & Masons' Life \[\*1006\] Indemnity Co. v. Jarman](#), 187 U.S. 197, 23 Sup. Ct. 108, 47 L. Ed. 139; U.S. v. D. & H. Co., 213 U.S. 407, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836; Harriman v. Interstate Commerce Comm., 211 U.S. 407, 29 Sup. Ct. 115, 53 L. Ed. 253.

HN19 [↑] Section 6\(b\) grants to the Commission the right to require corporations coming within its jurisdiction to make reports concerning their affairs and thus to furnish to the Commission such information as it may require. And subdivision (a) of section 6 calls upon the corporations in question to report upon specific matters as provided in subdivision (b). If the corporations fail in reporting or the reports are false, the Commission is entitled, upon properly showing the probable cause, to demand due disclosures and access to the inspection of any specific, necessary, and relevant papers, excluding such papers as may be privileged. In other words, there must appear to be some reasonable cause for a search such as a definite complaint charging a specific wrong and thus presenting an inquiry which would have reasonable and readily ascertainable limits. Such a construction of subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 6 would effectuate the intent [\[\*\*17\]](#) of Congress and the procedure can be kept within constitutional limits. United States v. L. & N.R. Co., 236 U.S. 318, 35 Sup. Ct. 363, 59 L. Ed. 598; Veeder v. United States, 252 Fed. 414, 164 C.C.A. 338. Such a construction would seem to be in accord with the discussions in the Senate when this legislation was enacted. See 51 Congressional Records, pt. 13, 63d Cong., Second Session, pp. 12747, 12800, 12806-11, 12918, 12927. It was not intended to grant an unlimited power of inquisition or an unlimited right of access to books and papers of private parties not engaged in any public service or a search without basis of some facts tending to establish a charge of wrongdoing.

HN20 [↑] It is now well established that a corporation is entitled to invoke the guaranties of the Fourth Amendment against unreasonable searches and seizures in as full a measure as would a person or partnership. Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States, 251 U.S. 385, 40 Sup. Ct. 182, 64 L. Ed. 319; Coastwise Lumber Co. v. United States, 259 Fed. 847, 170 C.C.A. 647.

In the papers submitted on this application, there is no showing of the existence of probable cause. The relief prayed for is in general terms and [\[\*\*18\]](#) includes all papers and telegrams received by each respondent from its jobber customers located in different points throughout the United States and copies of all letters and telegrams sent by each respondent to such jobbers during the period from January 1, 1921, to December 31, 1921, inclusive. Such general demands made in other warrants of law, such as a subpoena duces tecum, have been condemned as not giving a reasonably accurate description of the papers wanted, either by date, title, substance, or subject to which they relate. Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426; Carson v. Hawley, 82 Minn. 204, 84 N.W. 746.

In Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746, the court quoted with approval Judge Camden's language in Entick v. Carrington and Three Other King's Messengers, 19 Howell's State Trials, 1029, wherein he said:

[\[\*1007\]](#) "Papers are the owner's goods and chattels; they are his dearest property; and are far from enduring a seizure, that they will hardly bear an inspection; and though the eye cannot be the laws of England be guilty of a trespass, yet where private papers are removed and carried away the secret nature of those goods will [\[\*\*19\]](#) be an aggravation of the trespass, and demand more considerable damages in that respect. Where is the written law that gives any magistrate such a power? I can safely answer, there is none; and, therefore, it is too much for us, without such authority, to pronounce a practice legal which would be subversive of all the comforts of society."

To grant the relief prayed for by the petitioner would be to permit an unreasonable search and seizure of papers in violation of the Fourth Amendment. It was not the intention of Congress to grant such unlimited examination and inspection by the legislation in question, nor, indeed, did Congress have authority to do so under the commerce clause of the Constitution. It would be unreasonable and unjust to accede to the demands of the petitioner, and the application for the peremptory writ of mandamus against the respondents American Tobacco Company and P. Lorillard Company is denied.

---

End of Document

Columbus Packing Co. v. State

Supreme Court of Ohio

December 29, 1922, Decided

No. 17445

Reporter

106 Ohio St. 469 *; 140 N.E. 376 **; 1922 Ohio LEXIS 235 ***; 1 Ohio L. Abs. 100; 37 A.L.R. 1525

THE COLUMBUS PACKING CO. v. THE STATE, EX REL. SCHLESINGER, PROS. ATTY., ET AL.

Prior History: [***1] ERROR to the Court of Appeals of Franklin county.

Disposition: Judgment reversed.

Core Terms

---

Storage, pork, loins, provisional, injunction, trial court, joined, seized

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Distribution, Processing & Storage

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

The Cold Storage Act, Ohio Gen. Code § 1155-1 et seq., 107 Ohio Laws 594, and the Valentine Anti-trust Law Act, 93 Ohio Laws 143, are not in pari materia.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Distribution, Processing & Storage

HN2[] Agriculture & Food, Distribution, Processing & Storage of Food & Agricultural Products

The Cold Storage Act was a health statute, pure and simple, as an examination of that act in its entirety discloses. This is evidenced by the different periods of time various food products were allowed to remain in storage before sale.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 [down] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

The purpose of the Valentine Anti-trust Law is to prevent hoarding, and restraint of trade, evincing that purpose in its title, and to provide for the punishment of persons restraining free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state. The remedies employed by the Valentine Act did not contemplate their use for the violation of the Storage Act. The Valentine Act, specifically, in §6400, Ohio Gen. Code, confines the operation of its civil remedy to violations of any provision of this chapter. Furthermore, § 6400, Ohio Gen. Code, provides for drastic action against corporations that violate the act, all of which tends to show that the specific remedies provided in the Valentine Act are to control solely the violations of that act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Time Limitations > General Overview

HN4 [down] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Ohio's code provides a time when answers and replies shall be filed, and the issues joined. In the ordinary course of procedure, either party has a right to amend his pleading. Litigants are entitled to a trial, which § 11376, Ohio Gen. Code, defines as a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or of fact. Section 11378, Ohio Gen. Code, requires the issues to be made by the pleadings.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Distribution, Processing & Storage

HN5 [down] Agriculture & Food, Distribution, Processing & Storage of Food & Agricultural Products

Section 1155-13, Ohio Gen. Code, relates only to those who shall sell, or offer, or expose for sale, the product held in cold storage for a period of more than six months.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Cold storage law -- Section 1155-1, General Code (107 O. L., 594) -- Storing foods not violation per se, when -- Valentine antitrust law -- Distinguished, and not in pari materia -- Facts necessary to prove violation -- Power to seize and sell property stored.

Syllabus

---

[*469] 1. The mere storage of pork loins by a storage company for a period of more than six months, under the provisions of the cold-storage act, Sections 1155-1 to 1155-19, General Code (107 O. L., 594), is not per se a violation of Section 13 of that act.

2. The cold-storage act and the Valentine anti-trust law, Section 6390 et seq., General Code, are distinct in purpose, employ different remedies and provide different penalties for offenses committed. They should not be so construed in pari materia as to employ the remedies of one for the prosecution of the other. The storage of food products by a cold-storage company for a period of six months does not ipso facto violate the Valentine act, without other proof of some combination or acts or unlawful agreement entered into by two or more. (Columbus Packing Co. v. State, ex rel. Schlesinger, Pros. Atty., 100 Ohio St., 285, overruled.)

[*470] 3. Under the facts presented, where the action and controversy involved the res, or right of property, it was error for the court, on application of the plaintiff and before trial on the merits, to order the seizure and sale of such property by provisional orders, where such seizure and sale would render ineffectual a judgment thereafter obtained after trial.

The present case is a sequel to the case of Columbus Packing Co. v. State, ex rel. Schlesinger, Pros. Atty., reported in 100 Ohio St., 285. In that case the question arose upon the rights of property, and the violation of law in respect thereto, adjudicated by the lower courts before the parties went to final trial upon the issues joined upon the merits of the action. Many of the facts relating to that disposition are found in the reported opinion. However, the following facts appear in the record, all of which were not disclosed in the opinion in the former case. The original action was brought by the state of Ohio through the prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, asking for an injunction, the appointment of a receiver and other relief. The petition was filed in the court of common pleas on August 6, 1919. Summons was issued, returnable August 18, 1919, answer day being September 6 following.

On the day the petition was filed, application was made for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, all without notice to the two parties defendant; also, without notice, a receiver was appointed the same day, and on [*471] further application to the court counsel was appointed for the receiver. On the next day, August 7, the receiver filed his application to sell the pork loins in controversy. On the following day, August 8, the Columbus Packing Company and the Fairmount Creamery Company, having answered, moved the court to dissolve the injunction and discharge the receiver. The application of the receiver to sell and the motions to dissolve were heard by the trial court at the same time, and on August 9 that court overruled the motion to dissolve and sustained the application of the receiver to sell the property without delay "at such place or places, and in a manner and at a price conducive to the benefit of the general public."

The only evidence offered by the plaintiff in support of the application to sell the property was the petition, verified, and on file. The defendants in support of their motion to dissolve offered in evidence their answers then on file, together with the affidavits of five persons. One, Fuhrer, managing agent of the Creamery Company, made affidavit that his company never did business with the Packing Company prior to this time, but had solicited this storage in the usual [*472] course of business and held the same subject to the orders of the owners, and that it, the Creamery Company, had been at all times ready to release such property from storage upon payment of charges; that it had no other agreement with the Packing Company than one to provide the desired temperature for the goods stored, which might be removed by the owner upon request at any time. The affidavits specifically denied the allegation in the petition to the effect that "said companies entered into an illegal or corrupt agreement as more fully stated in the petition."

[*472] Lamb, secretary of the Packing Company, tendered an affidavit in connection with the answer of that company, wherein he stated that on January 22, 1919, he had tendered to the United States Food Administration all the frozen pork loins in cold storage at that time, which included the pork loins in the hands of the receiver, but that the United States Food Administration did not accept the tender and refused to order any portion thereof. Three other affidavits were offered by the defendants to the effect that on the 8th or 9th day of July, 1919, the several affiants had entered into a contract with the Packing Company for [*473] various amounts of frozen pork loins, and that in said contract the pork loins were to be delivered in quantities as needed by the purchasers. The answers of both defendants denied that either had ever entered into any agreement for the purposes and objects set forth in the petition, especially denying that they had entered into any agreement that created any restrictions in trade or commerce.

In this situation of direct conflict appearing in the pleadings and affidavits offered, on August 9, 1919, the trial court ordered all the property in controversy to be sold as aforesaid, and within a week, on August 14, 1919, the court of appeals had disposed of the case by final judgment, which was reviewed and affirmed by us in Packing Co. v. State, supra. The case not having been tried upon the merits assumed the second phase which is now being considered by this court. In the meantime the receiver had sold the product, he and counsel had been awarded fees to the amount of $ 6,500, and the receiver had been discharged.

[*473] On October 16, 1920, the Creamery Company filed its amended answer, containing two defenses. In its first defense, as in the former answer, it admitted the delivery [**5] at its cold storage warehouse of the pork loins, which were received and stored for hire, and that they were in the possession of the Creamery Company in the warehouse at the time of the filing of the petition, and that unless restrained it would have delivered the product to the Columbus Packing Company upon its order and upon the payment of storage charges. Every other allegation in the petition was denied. As a second defense, it is specifically alleged that it was operating a coldstorage warehouse in pursuance of an act of congress, approved April [August] 10, 1917 (40 Stat. at L., 276; Section 10186, Barnes' Fed. Code); that it was licensed as a cold-storage warehouseman by the United States government, under an act known as the United States Food Administration Act; and that at all the times in controversy the coldstorage business of the defendant "was conducted under and pursuant to the rules, directions and orders" of such department of food administration, which regulates and permits the storage in its cold-storage warehouse for a period of twelve months of the product described in the petition.

Plaintiff in its reply to the amended answer of the Creamery Company denied [***6] every allegation contained in the second defense. The pleadings before the trial court at the time of its final judgment, on August 30, 1921, consisted of the petition of the plaintiff, the answer of the Packing Company, the amended answer of the Creamery Company, and the reply of the plaintiff, which was a general denial. [*474] Thereupon, on August 30, 1921, the plaintiff, relator, moved for judgment in its favor on the pleadings. The trial court sustained the motion and rendered judgment on the pleadings in favor of the relator, which judgment was affirmed by the court of appeals. Whereupon plaintiff in error instituted proceedings in this court to reverse the judgments below.

Counsel: Messrs. Bennett, Westfall & Bennett, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John R. King, prosecuting attorney; Mr. [***8] Wilbur E. Benoy, assistant prosecuting attorney; Mr. Oscar W. Newman; Mr. T. S. Hogan and Messrs. Wilson & Rector, for defendants in error.

Judges: JONES, J. MARSHALL, C. J., HOUGH, ROBINSON and CLARK, JJ., concur. WANAMAKER, J., dissents.

Opinion by: JONES

Opinion

---

[**378] We are confronted, at the outset, with the decision of this court upon important features of this controversy, reported in Columbus Packing Co. v. State, ex rel. Schlesinger, 100 Ohio St. 285. The judgment in that case was based upon the conclusion that Section 1155-1 et seq., General Code (107 O. L., 594), commonly called the Cold Storage Act, should be read in pari materia with what is known as the Valentine Anti-trust Law, Section 6390 et seq., General Code (93 O. L., 143), and that the state might avail itself of equitable remedies therein implied in order to uphold the former judgment of the trial court in seizing upon and selling the pork loins in controversy before a final hearing upon the merits.

HN1[] The Storage Act and the Valentine Act are not in pari materia. They were not enacted at the same time and each had a separate and distinct purpose [*475] in view, [***9] as shown by their several titles when enacted. HN2[] The storage act was a health statute, pure and simple, as an examination of that act in its entirety discloses. This is evidenced by the different periods of time various food products were allowed to remain in storage before sale. HN3[] The purpose of the Valentine Law is to prevent hoarding, and restraint of trade, evincing that purpose in its title, and to provide for the punishment of persons restraining "free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state." The remedies employed by the Valentine Act did not contemplate their use for the violation of the Storage Act. The Valentine Act, specifically, in Section 6400, General Code, confines the operation of its civil remedy to violations of "any provision of this chapter." Furthermore, Section 6400, General Code, provides for drastic action against corporations that violate the act, all of which tends to show that the specific remedies provided in the Valentine Act are to control solely the violations of that act. However, were this not so, the judgments of the lower courts should be reversed for the obvious reason that the defendants in the trial court did not have [***10] their rights determined by due course of law. Orderly procedure lies at the foundation of our state jurisprudence. Developments at the former hearing disclose that the defendant Packing Company's property was seized by the court through the instrumentality of a receiver on the same day the petition was filed, and without notice to its owner. The record discloses that counsel was appointed on the same day, and without notice, the appointment entailing the sum of $ 6500 in counsel fees. Three days after the [*476] filing of the petition a hearing was had upon the affidavits and pleadings filed, and an order made by the trial court to sell the property in controversy, before the issues were finally determined by the court. While the action was nominally one in personam it was actually a proceeding in rem against the property seized and finally disposed of. The effect of the judgment below was to determine the rights of property in a preliminary hearing, leaving the contested issues made by the pleadings to be later determined. The query naturally arises, what boots it should the defendants win on the issues finally joined if in the meantime the res in controversy [***11] before the court has been seized by judicial process and ordered to be sold, during which process costs and fees would inevitably attach? We are of the opinion that such a judgment is a deprivation of property without the due process guaranteed by Section 16, Article I, of our Constitution, and conserved by our laws of procedure. HN4[] Our code provides a time when answers and replies shall be filed, and the issues joined. In the ordinary course of procedure, either party has a right to amend his pleading. The litigants were entitled to a trial, which Section 11376, General Code, defines as a "judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or of fact." Section 11378, General Code, requires the issues to be made by the pleadings. The original or preliminary judgment did not purport to rest upon the merits, but was a disposition of the property before that stage was reached. That judgment was a provisional judgment, of which Williams, J., in Trustees v. McClannahan, 53 Ohio St., 403, 409, says: "The proper office of the provisional [*477] injunction is to prevent threatened irreparable injury, which should be averted, until opportunity is afforded for a full and deliberate [***12] investigation of the case at the trial, and, to preserve until that time, as far as possible, the [*379] condition of things existing when the injunction is obtained, to the end that the rights of the parties as established by the final judgment rendered on the trial, may be secured to them by the enforcement of the judgment. * * * The hearing upon the motion is not the mode provided by law for the trial of the issues joined in the action, and neither party can be deprived of the lawful mode of trial by the decision on the motion, whatever it may be. * * * A hearing upon a motion was not designed to take the place of a trial. It may be had upon affidavits taken without opportunity for cross-examination, and is not in any proper sense a trial. Therefore, upon the overruling of a motion to vacate a provisional injunction, the court is not authorized, without a trial of the issues, to enter final judgment for the plaintiff; nor can the petition be properly dismissed, without such trial, upon the dissolution of the injunction."

No opportunity was given to the defendants to rest their case upon the issues which should finally determine the case. This is evident from the fact [***13] that long after the case was determined in the preliminary proceeding, on August 9, 1919, one of the defendants, the Creamery Company, filed its amended answer, containing a new and distinct defense, which the trial court did not have before it for consideration, and the validity of which was not determined by it. This defense alleged that the Creamery Company was at all the times mentioned [*478] in the petition, and when its storage products were seized by the receiver, acting in pursuance of the rules and regulations of the United States Food Administration, which permitted it to hold the pork product in storage for a period of twelve months. In our opinion the litigants should obtain the judgment of the lower courts upon the legal phase of the controversy.

In the reported case, supra, this court seems to have attached considerable importance to the fact that the pork loins had been in storage for a period exceeding six months. It is true that the answer of the Packing Company admitted, in effect, that this was so, but alleged that the product had been sold prior to that time to purchasers to be delivered in quantities as needed. However, there is no proof of the violation [***14] of the Storage Act by the Creamery Company. HN5 [Section 1155-13, General Code, relates only to those who "shall sell, or offer, or expose for sale," the pork loins held in cold storage for a period of more than six months. There is no proof that the Creamery Company offended against the act, even though it be conceded that the Packing Company did so by delivering after the six months had expired. Mere storing of pork loins for a period of six months was not per se a violation of the Storage Act; that is violated only by one who "shall sell, or offer, or expose for sale" pork loins held longer than six months. Neither was the mere storing for more than six months, ipso facto, a violation of the Valentine Act. In a proper case the length of the storage may be considered in connection with other acts, or proof showing "combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more" (Section 6391, General Code) [*479] for the purposes indicated by the act. Therefore the prior judgment against the defendants was evidently erroneous, unless proof was offered that they had entered into an unlawful agreement within the purview of the Valentine Law. The only proof offered in that respect [***15] was the petition on file in the case. However, the answer of both defendants, the Packing Company and the Creamery Company, explicitly denied any such purpose or agreement, so that upon that phase of the case there was a lack of proper proof sustaining it. That feature of the controversy being out of the case, for lack of proof, the only civil remedy available prior to final hearing would be obtaining a provisional injunction to prevent the further threatened violation of the Storage Act.

If defendants were threatening to sell, since the Storage Act does not provide for seizure and sale of the food products, the only civil remedy available prior to a final hearing would be a provisional injunction authorized by Section 11876, General Code, restraining the defendants from committing an act, which, if committed, would make the final judgment ineffectual; or, upon proper showing, a provisional order for a receiver might be obtained under sanction of Section 11894, General Code, as auxiliary to the main action.

No pretense was made that these pork loins deposited in the cold-storage warehouse were of such perishable character as to depreciate in value, or would become so contaminated [***16] as to be unsalable. In fact the court ordered the same pork loins to be sold "at such place or places as the receiver shall deem proper." It may be assumed that such a judicial [*480] order would not have been made had not the product been fit for public consumption. Were it shown to the court that these pork loins were of such a nature as to become in the immediate future perishable or so contaminated as to be unfit for public consumption, no doubt, in that event, and in the exercise of judicial discretion, the court would order a sale thereof.

In our judgment, prior to the action of the court upon the issues joined between the parties, as shown by this record, the only ancillary relief plaintiff was entitled to was that of a provisional injunction should it be shown that the Packing Company proposed to sell its product in violation of state and federal law. So far as *Packing Co. v. State, supra*, conflicts with the conclusions here announced, that case is overruled.

The judgment of the trial court against defendants upon the pleadings was erroneous, as was the judgment of the court of appeals in its affirmance. However, since the [**380] parties have not had [***17] a trial upon the issues as they may be finally joined, we content ourselves with reversing the judgments of the lower courts and remanding the cause to the court of common pleas for further proceedings according to law.

Judgment reversed.

People v. Apostolos

Supreme Court of Colorado

March 5, 1923, Decided

No. 10,289, No. 10,290.

Reporter

73 Colo. 71 *; 213 P. 331 **; 1923 Colo. LEXIS 293 ***

THE PEOPLE v. APOSTOLOS, ET AL., THE PEOPLE v. CRISSEY & FOWLER LUMBER COMPANY, ET AL.

Prior History: [***1] Error by the people to review a ruling of the trial court quashing a criminal information.

Granting of the Motion to Quash, Held Error.

Error to the District Court of El Paso County, Hon. Arthur Cornforth, Judge.

Core Terms

---

commodities, indictment, reasonable profit, combinations, merchandise, provisions, repairing, marketed, provisos, shoe

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN1  Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

See 1913 Colo. Sess. Laws ch. 161.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN2  Accusatory Instruments, Indictments

An indictment is good if from it the nature of the crime may be readily understood by the jury. Provisos are not a part of the definition of the crime, but exceptions thereto, and it is not necessary to notice them in the indictment.

Counsel: Mr. VICTOR E. KEYES, attorney general, Mr. SAMUEL CHUTKOW, assistant, Mr. JOHN A. CARRUTHERS, Mr. T. C. TURNER, Mr. WILLIS L. STRACHAN, for the people.

No appearance for defendants in error.

Judges: Before MR. JUSTICE DENISON. MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TELLER, MR. JUSTICE CAMPBELL and MR. JUSTICE SHEAFOR, not participating.

Opinion by: DENISON

Opinion

---

En Banc

[*72] [**331] MR. JUSTICE DENISON delivered the opinion of the court.

CERTAIN persons were indicted under the so-called antitrust act, chapter 161, S.L. 1913. A motion to quash was sustained and the people bring the case here for review under R.S. 1908, § 1997. It will suffice to consider one count of one indictment. It alleges that the accused,

"Did then and there wilfully and unlawfully combine to increase the price of certain merchandise and commodities in the city of Colorado Springs, to-wit, the price of shoe repairs, sole leather and other commodities used in the making and repairing of shoes." * * [***2] *

The statute provides that HN1 "a trust is a combination * * * to increase or reduce the price of merchandise * * * or commodities," or to do any of certain other defined acts, and then proceeds as follows:

"And all such combinations are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void; provided that no agreement or association shall be deemed to be unlawful or within the provisions of this act, the object and purposes of which are to conduct operations at a reasonable [*73] profit or to market at a reasonable profit those products which cannot otherwise be so marketed; provided further that it shall not be deemed to be unlawful, or within the provisions of this act, for persons, firms, or corporations engaged in the business of selling or manufacturing commodities of a similar or like character to employ, form, organize or [**332] own any interest in any association, firm or corporation having as its object or purpose the transportation, marketing or delivering of such commodities; and provided further that labor, whether skilled or unskilled, is not a commodity within the meaning of this act."

The objection to the indictment according to the brief [***3] before us was that it did not negative the provisos. The Attorney General's brief is not answered, so we are compelled to conjecture what other objection there might have been, but we perceive no other that would be valid. Nor is that objection sound. HN2 An indictment is good if from it the nature of the crime may be readily understood by the jury. Campbell v. People, 72 Colo. 213, 210 Pac. 841, Johnson v. People, 72 Colo. 218, 210 Pac. 843, Tracy v. People, 65 Colo. 226, 176 Pac. 280, and cases there cited. The provisos are not a part of the definition of the crime, but exceptions thereto, and it is not necessary to notice them in the indictment. Packer v. People, 26 Colo. 306, 57 Pac. 1087; Hill v. People, 1 Colo. 453; Kent v. People, 8 Colo. 563, 583-4, 9 Pac. 852; Harding v. People, 10 Colo. 387, 394, 15 Pac. 727; Smith v. People, 51 Colo. 270, 277, 117 Pac. 612, 36 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 158; Stoltz v. People, 59 Colo. 342, 148 Pac. 865.

The granting of the motion to quash was error.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TELLER, MR. JUSTICE CAMPBELL and [***4] MR. JUSTICE SHEAFOR, not participating.

Hurt v. Brandt

Supreme Court of Idaho

May 24, 1923, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

37 Idaho 186 *; 215 P. 842 **; 1923 Ida. LEXIS 124 ***

BRADFORD HURT, Appellant, v. H. H. A. BRANDT et al., Respondents.

Prior History: [***1] APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, for Ada County. Hon. Charles F. Reddoch, Judge.

Appeal from a judgment of dismissal. Affirmed.

Disposition: Judgment affirmed. Costs to respondents.

Core Terms

---

stock, anti-trust, motion to strike, cause of action, second amended complaint, amended complaint, allegations, pooling, restraint of trade, declaration, forbidden

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

ANTI-TRUST LAW--THREEFOLD DAMAGES--COMPLAINT--SUFFICIENCY OF.

In an action to recover threefold damages sustained by him for a violation of the anti-trust law, plaintiff must not only allege sufficient facts to show a violation of the law by the defendants, but it must appear that, by reason of such violation of the law by the defendants, plaintiff has been injured in his business or property.

Counsel: S. T. Schreiber, for Appellant.

Pending the trial of an action, the court has power, upon such terms as may be just, to permit a second amended complaint to be filed, which embodies substantially the same allegations as the original complaint. ( Riverside Land Co. v. Jensen, 73 Cal. 550, 15 P. 131.)

Where the facts stated in the complaint constitute a sufficient cause of action, other unnecessary matter may be stricken, but an entire pleading cannot be stricken out as irrelevant or redundant. ( Benedict v. Dake, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 352; Jackson v. Lebar, 53 Cal. 255.)

C.S., secs. 2531 and 2532, describe the scope of the act, and this action being for damages to the plaintiff by reason of the violation of the act by the defendant, it is only necessary to support an action under the act that complainant's business or property has in some way been injured by reason of defendant's illegal scheme. ( Monarch Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 165 F. 774.)

37 Idaho 186, *186 L 215 P. 842, **842 L 1923 Ida. LEXIS 124, ***1

Plaintiff [***2] must be given liberal latitude under the act. ( Ware Kreamer Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 178 F. 117; Buckeye Powder Co. v. Dupont Powder Co., 196 F. 514.)

The contracts, combinations, etc., in restraint of trade or commerce which are declared to be illegal by the act, include all contracts, etc., operating to restrain trade or commerce whether legal or illegal at common law or whether the restraint is reasonable or unreasonable. ( United States v. Trans-Missouri F. Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 17 S. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007, and note; United States v. United States Steel Co., 223 F. 55.)

The system and scheme established and put in force by the defendants controlled the entire issue of stock in the Monumental Mercury Mining Company, and is necessarily a general restraint of trade in the stock of said corporation and therefore illegal. ( Oliver v. Gidmore, 52 F. 562; Miles Medical Co. v. John Parks & Son, 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502.)

The second amended complaint stated a cause of action under the law and the court had no right to strike it from the files by reason of any pleading, motion or suggestions made by the respondents. They not having filed a demurrer, [***3] the complaint to be had must be wholly insufficient; if to any extent, on any reasonable theory, it presents facts sufficient to justify a recovery, it will be sustained. (21 R. C. L. 466.)

S. L. Tipton and Gustave Kroeger, for Respondents.

The pooling of stock is not unlawful. ( Weber v. Della Mountain Mining Co., 14 Idaho 404, 94 P. 441.)

Under the anti-trust act it is not sufficient to frame the declaration in the words of the statute, but it is essential that the substance of the contract in restraint of trade or the substantial facts which constitute the attempt to monopolize should be set forth therein. ( Cilley v. United Shoe Machine Co., 152 F. 726.)

Under the statute, in order to recover damages, a plaintiff must have been injured in his person or property and the injury sustained must be charged in the complaint by proper averment. ( Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 162 F. 354; Rice v. Standard Oil Co., 134 F. 464; Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390, 27 S. Ct. 65, 51 L. Ed. 241.)

Judges: WM. E. LEE, J. Budge, C. J., and Dunn, J., concur.

Opinion by: WM. E. LEE

Opinion

---

[*188] [**842] WM. E. LEE, J.--This action was commenced [***4] in the district court for Ada county, in December, 1920. Plaintiff alleged conversion of certain mining stock, and also attempted to allege certain violations of the state anti-trust law. (C. S., c. 116.) The allegations concerning the alleged violation of the anti-trust law were so mingled with the allegations regarding conversion as to make it very difficult to separate them. Respondents filed a general demurrer and motion to [**843] require appellant to separately state his causes of action. The court overruled the demurrer and motion, but [*189] indicated that a proper motion should be filed. Thereafter, respondents served and filed a motion to strike from the complaint the matters relating to the alleged violation of the anti-trust law. Appellant served and filed a motion to strike respondents' motion to strike, which motion was denied; the court sustained respondent's motion to strike, and gave appellant certain time within which to file an amended complaint. Appellant thereafter served and filed a motion "for rehearing of motion to strike certain allegations from the complaint." This motion was denied. Appellant there after filed his first amended complaint. The first [***5] amended complaint contains a substantial restatement of the allegations of the original complaint, stated in somewhat different order and in somewhat different language.

To the first amended complaint, respondents interposed a general demurrer and a motion to strike a paragraph relating to the alleged violations of the anti-trust law which had been ordered stricken from the original complaint.

The court again ordered said paragraph stricken, and further ordered the entire amended complaint stricken "unless the plaintiff, within five days, filed an amended complaint in harmony with the former ruling of the court." Thereafter, appellant filed a second amended complaint. This was almost word for word a copy of the first amended complaint. Respondents thereupon moved that the second amended complaint be stricken, and that the action be dismissed "on the ground that the second amended complaint is not in accordance with the ruling of the court." The court sustained the motion to strike the second amended complaint and denied the motion to dismiss the action. The plaintiff, thereafter, refusing to plead further, judgment of dismissal was entered.

From the judgment of dismissal, the plaintiff [***6] has appealed to this court, and assigns as error the striking of the complaint and the dismissal of the action.

The court was not justified in striking the second amended complaint if it stated a cause of action. And since the motion to strike was directed at the entire pleading, rather [*190] than specified parts thereof, inasmuch as appellant bases his whole argument on the theory that the complaint states a cause of action, the motion to strike the second amended complaint will be considered in the nature of a general demurrer. Appellant was attempting in his three complaints to state a cause of action for treble damages for a violation by respondents of the anti-trust law; and, if the second amended complaint stated a cause of action, it was for the violation of that law. Appellant, in his brief, repudiates any suggestion that his cause of action was in conversion. In his brief he says:

"It is very patent that the defendants-respondents were aiming, by their motions to strike, to disarm plaintiff-appellant, of his real cause of action, and the gist of his entire case. It may be urged as it was in the court below, that it is the conversion of the stock that appellant is contending [***7] for--this is not the cause here. That was the cause in the suit against the corporation, but this is decidedly different."

The question for our determination, therefore, is whether appellant has alleged sufficient facts, in the first place, to show a violation of C. S., sec. 2531; and, in the second place, to show that he has been injured in his business or property on account of any act declared illegal in said section 2531.

Among other things, chapter 116 of the Compiled Statutes provides:

"Sec. 2531: Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, within this state, is hereby declared illegal. . . ."

"Sec. 2544: Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or persons by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this chapter may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

The following is a brief summary of the second amended complaint, hereafter referred to as the complaint:

[*191] That plaintiff was engaged in the business of mining; that he, together with [***8] the defendants, became the owners of an interest in a mining property; that they organized a corporation that took over the ownership of the property, that each of the incorporators was entitled, under their agreement, to certain shares of stock, plaintiff being entitled to 60,000 shares; that, for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff and injuring him in his business, defendants conspired, etc., to and did violate the anti-trust law of this state, by entering into a pooling agreement, pooling the stock of the company, including that belonging to plaintiff without his knowledge or consent; that defendants issued and distributed printed matter, made fictitious prices, and deceived the public; that they prevented plaintiff from engaging in trade and selling his stock, to his loss and damage in the sum of $ 5,170, the par and market value of his stock; and that plaintiff was prevented from selling his stock in the open market. Plaintiff claims that he was further damaged in a sum of "over $ 400 resulting from his failure to deliver stock he had contracted to sell and because of the expenditure of sums of money in his efforts to procure the stock for delivery to his purchasers."

Plaintiff [***9] did not allege the things forbidden and declared by said section 2531 to be unlawful. He alleged the ultimate conclusions. [**844] The allegations are of the most general character. For instance: "That the defendants . . . the exact time unknown to plaintiff, acting in concert together jointly contriving, conspiring and confederating to do an unlawful act, consisting of a violation of the law and statute so made and provided in the state of Idaho and for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff and injuring him in his business entered into a pooling agreement, pooling certain stock of said mining corporation . . . and including the stock, of plaintiff without his knowledge or consent, but of which defendants were in full and absolute control. . . ." The forgoing is a fair sample of the material allegations. Under our very liberal rules of pleading, the complaint is too indefinite. It is clearly insufficient.

[*192] It is settled in this state by statute that a complaint shall contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language. In other words, the plaintiff should set forth his cause of action by alleging the facts as distinguished [***10] from alleging mere conclusions. As tested by the foregoing, it is apparent that the complaint consists of conclusions instead of facts. Nothing is alleged in ordinary and concise language. The allegations do not apprise respondents of what they are charged with having done; and they would not be expected to know what proof they would have to meet.

The federal courts have frequently passed upon the question of the sufficiency of a complaint under the federal anti-trust law, which is practically identical with the foregoing quoted portions of our anti-trust law. As tested by such federal decisions, the complaint is manifestly in sufficient.

In the case of Buckeye Powder Co. v. Dupont Powder Co., 196 F. 514, it is said:

"In the pleading, plaintiff must declare the forbidden acts and consequent injuries in such clear and unambiguous language, and with such reasonable certainty, that the defendants and the court may be apprised of the alleged cause of action, that it may be apprised of the alleged cause of action, that it may be known by the former how to answer and prepare for trial, and by the latter what is the nature of the issue, and, if it be one of fact, to control [***11] the character of the proofs offered at the trial, and to pronounce and enforce a judgment that will settle the rights involved in such issues."

In Cilley v. United Shoe Mach. Co., 152 F. 726, it is said:

"Under the act of July 2, 1890, it is not sufficient to frame the declaration in the words of the statute. The statute does not set forth the elements of the offenses which are forbidden; and, further, there may be contracts in restraint of trade between the states or with foreign countries, and attempts to monopolize such trade or commerce, which are not within the statute. These circumstances make it imperative [*193] that the substance of the contracts in restraint of trade, or the substantial facts which constitute the attempt to monopolize, should be set forth in the declaration.

"These principles are well settled by the authorities."

"The petition or declaration in an action for threefold damages need not state the facts showing a right of action with all the fullness and particularity required in an indictment, but the sufficiency of such pleading must be tested by the local practice obtaining in civil actions. It must, however, describe with definiteness [***12] and certainty the alleged combination or conspiracy entered into by the defendant, and the acts done in pursuance thereof, which resulted in damage to the business or property of the plaintiff. It is not sufficient to frame the declaration in the words of the statute, but the substance of the contracts in restraint of trade, or the substantial facts which constitute the attempt to monopoly, must be set forth." (19 R. C. L., p. 87.)

In such an action, under the anti-trust law of this state, it is necessary that plaintiff not only allege sufficient facts to show a violation of the law by the defendants, but it must also appear that, by reason of such violation of the law by the defendants, plaintiff has been injured in his business or property. It is not sufficient to allege facts showing a mere injury to his business or property by the defendants, but it must appear from the complaint that plaintiff was injured in his business or property by reason of the violation of the law by the defendants. From the complaint, we gather that upon the creation of the corporation plaintiff became and was "entitled to the immediate delivery of the 60,000 shares . . .". The defendants did not [***13] deliver the stock to him, but, in the language of the plaintiff, they "entered into a pooling agreement and combination, pooling certain stock of said mining corporation . . . and including said stock of plaintiff without his knowledge or consent . . . ." and plaintiff says he "had expended and been compelled to pay out "upward of $ 400 in his efforts to procure the stock . . . , " etc.

[*194] According to the complaint, if plaintiff was damaged, it was not because defendants violated the provision of the anti-trust law, but it was because defendants had plaintiff's stock and would not let him have it. They took plaintiff's stock, exercised a certain dominion and control over it, which, according to the complaint, was both wrongful and illegal, but which did not constitute a violation of the antitrust law. It was not the pooling that injured plaintiff; it was the taking of the stock into defendants' control and their failure to deliver it to plaintiff that injured him. (Noyes v. Parsons, 245 F. 689, 158 C. C. A. 91.)

On page 21 of appellant's brief appears the following: "*It cannot be questioned that appellant was injured when his property was absolutely [***14] and deliberately taken by respondents.*" [**845] If appellant has suffered an injury, it arose from the "taking" of "his property." But the "taking," referred to by appellant, is not prohibited or declared unlawful by the anti-trust law. The following is made illegal by that law: "Every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy is restraint of trade or commerce, within this state . . . ." (C. S., sec. 2531.)

Plaintiff's complaint is not only too indefinite and uncertain to comply with our very liberal rules of pleading, but his complaint is insufficient in that it is not alleged that he was "injured in his business or property by any other person or persons (the defendants) by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by" the anti-trust law of this state.

Judgment affirmed. Costs to respondents.

Budge, C. J., and Dunn, J., concur.

---

End of Document

State v. P. Lorillard Co.

Supreme Court of Wisconsin

April 6, 1923, Argued ; October 16, 1923, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

181 Wis. 347 *; 193 N.W. 613 **; 1923 Wisc. LEXIS 168 ***

STATE, Respondent, v. P. LORILLARD COMPANY and others, Appellants.

Prior History: [***1] APPEALS from an order of the circuit court for Milwaukee county: W. B. QUINLAN, Judge. Reversed.

Disposition: Order reversed and cause remanded.

Core Terms

---

cause of action, tobacco, attorney general, sub-jobbers, licenses, conspiracy, charters, restraint of trade, combinations, jobbers, prices, primary right, restrain, cigarettes, do business, manufacturers, provisions, commerce, demurrer, sections, parties, cancel, cases, retailers, misjoinder of causes, injunction, proceedings, forfeiture, Wholesale, bring an action

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Wis. Stat. § 1747e (1921).

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Pleading & Practice, Joinder of Claims & Remedies

See Wis. Stat. § 2647.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN3 [blue download icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Wis. Stat. § 1791j and Wis. Stat. § 1791i make provision for annulment of charters of domestic corporations where they are found to have united into such conspiracies as are described in the complaint in this action. Wis. Stat. § 1770g and Wis. Stat. § 1770i make similar provision for revoking the licenses for doing business in the state of foreign corporations.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Permissive Joinder

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN4 [blue download icon] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

When actions are brought to prevent such combinations, the consequences to different defendants, for example foreign and domestic corporations, are different in some respects. Does it follow from this that in order to enforce the provisions of the act a separate suit must be brought against every individual and every corporation joining in the conspiracy for penalties, and that a separate suit must be brought against every member of the combination if a cancellation of its license or charter is contemplated? The appellate court does not think so. The appellate court is disposed to the view that the primary right of the state is to prevent the continued violation of the statute by means of the combination alleged to be unlawful. This is a matter of far greater importance than the collection of the penalties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 [blue download icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Wis. Stat. § 1747f.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 [blue download icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Wis. Stat. § 1747e(2) declares it to be the duty of the attorney general to enforce the provisions of the act. It is further declared to be his duty to bring an action for the recovery of the forfeitures whenever complaint shall be made to him and evidence produced which shall satisfy him that there has been any violation thereof. The statute then proceeds to require district attorneys on the advice of the attorney general, as in Wis. Stat. § 1747f, to institute actions to recover forfeitures for violation of the act. The statute seems to show the legislative intent that there shall be no failure to institute proceedings for the violation of the act. It is first made the duty of the attorney general to enforce its provisions. If he should neglect that duty, the appellate court sees no reason why he could not be compelled by a proper legal proceeding to perform it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN7 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Wis. Stat. § 1791j and Wis. Stat. § 1770g deals respectively with such corporations and provide that, if they enter into any combination or conspiracy to restrain trade and competition or fix prices of articles in common use in the state, their charter shall be revoked or their license to do business in the state shall be canceled.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

HN8 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Wis. Stat. § 1791l and Wis. Stat. § 1770i relate to the mode of bringing proceedings for forfeiture of charters or cancellation of licenses. In substantially the same language they provide that on complaint being made to the attorney general and evidence produced to him which shall satisfy him that the corporation has violated any of the conditions specified in the several sections, he shall forthwith bring an action in the name of the state to have the charter revoked or the license canceled as the case may be.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN9 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Wis. Stat. § 1791k makes it the duty of the attorney general under the conditions specified to make inquiry of domestic corporations as to facts which may have a bearing on the question whether there has been a violation of the anti-trust laws.

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

HN10 [down arrow] Evidence, Judicial Notice

The court may take judicial notice of the journals of the legislature to determine whether the requirements for the enactment of statutes have been complied with.

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

HN11 [down arrow] Legislation, Enactment

See Wis. Stat. § 13.06.

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

HN12 [down] Legislation, Enactment

See Wis. Const. art. VIII, § 8.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN13 [down] Legislation, Interpretation

The court should give effect to the intent when that is clear rather than to the letter of the act; that the intent is to be gathered from the whole statute taken together, and not from words and phrases separate from the context. In arriving at the intent the object and purpose of the statute are to be considered.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN14 [down] Legislation, Interpretation

When a statute contains provisions which are void the entire statute may be declared illegal if the valid and the void portions are so connected or interwoven that they cannot be separated and it is plain that the objectionable parts of the statute were an inducement to the legislature to enact the other parts of the same statute.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Monopolies: Statutes relating to trusts and conspiracies: Constitutionality: Action: To enjoin conspiracy and to obtain incidental relief: Misjoinder: Authority of attorney general to bring action: Statutes: Presumption of validity: Complaint: Failure to allege continuance of unlawful acts: Amendment.

1. There is no misjoinder of causes of action in a complaint by the state to restrain the formation or execution of contracts in restraint of trade by all of the defendants, to recover of each the forfeiture imposed by statute, to cancel the charters of the defendant state corporations for the violation of sec. 1791j, Stats., and the licenses of the defendant foreign corporations for the violation of sec. 1770g, there being but one cause of action; the primary right of the state being to prevent the continued violation of sec. 1747e, and it being immaterial that as incidental to it there may be different forms of relief as against different defendants.

2. That an action to restrain a combination in restraint of trade, in violation of sec. 1747e, Stats., was brought by the district attorney "on the advice of the attorney general, who may appear as counsel," as provided by sec. 1747f, sufficiently appears by the summons and complaint being signed by both, though the name of the attorney general appeared first and was not followed by the words "of counsel."

3. Under secs. 1791j and 1770g, Stats. (dealing respectively with domestic and foreign corporations, and providing that, if they enter into a combination to restrain trade, the charters of the former shall be revoked and the licenses of the latter to do business in the state be canceled), secs. 1771i and 1791l (providing that, on complaint to the attorney general and evidence produced to him satisfying him that they had so combined, he shall bring an action in the name of the state for revocation of charter or cancellation of license, as the case may be), and sec. 1791k (making it his duty, under specified conditions, to make inquiry of domestic corporations as to violation of the anti-trust laws), he may, of his own motion, on obtaining knowledge from any source of such a violation, bring such an action; and the mere fact of his doing so and charging such a violation in the complaint is all that is necessary, and is of itself sufficient evidence of his being satisfied there was a violation, without any allegation in the complaint to that effect.

4. Judicial notice may be taken of the journals of the legislature to determine whether there has been a compliance with the requirements for the enactment of a statute.

5. Sec. 13.06, Stats., providing that bills introduced in either house for the appropriation of money shall be referred to the committee on finance before being passed or allowed, does not require a reference by each house to such committee (which is a joint committee composed of members of both houses) before final vote is taken by it.

6. Ch. 458 of the Laws of 1921 (sec. 1747e, Stats.), entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful trusts and monopolies," considered as a whole and in view of the presumption of its constitutionality, does not prohibit any legitimate contract, but only those tainted by an unlawful combination tending to the public detriment.

7. The rule that a statute will be held void as a whole where it contains void portions so connected or interwoven with the valid parts that they cannot be separated, and it is plain that the objectionable parts were an inducement to the enacting of the valid parts, has no application to ch. 458, Laws 1921, declaring invalid every contract or combination in the nature of a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade, even if secs. 1747h, 1747h-1, 1747h-3, and 1747h-4, declaring certain exemptions from the anti-trust laws, are unconstitutional, those sections having been enacted in previous years and not being re-enacted or referred to by the Laws of 1921.

8. A complaint states no cause of action for injunctive relief by way of prevention against an unlawful combination in restraint of trade where it is not alleged that defendants are continuing or threatening to continue such combination, all its allegations being in the past tense and relating to completed transactions.

9. A complaint which, proceeding on the theory that an equitable cause of action for injunction against a combination in restraint of trade is stated, prays that the court retain jurisdiction to annul the charters and licenses of defendants and grant a judgment for money forfeitures against them, fails to state a cause of action for injunction because its allegations are only as to the past; it is, however, subject to amendment.

ROSENBERRY, J., dissents. ESCHWEILER, J., dissents in part.

Counsel: For the appellant P. Lorillard Company there were briefs by Olin, Butler, Thomas, Stebbins & Stroud of Madison, and oral argument by Byron H. Stebbins.

For the appellant American Tobacco Company there were briefs by Olwell, Durant & Brady and James T. Drought, all of Milwaukee, and oral argument by Mr. Lawrence A. Olwell and Mr. Drought.

George E. Ballhorn, attorney, and George H. Katz, of counsel, both of Milwaukee, for appellants other than the P. Lorillard Company, American Tobacco Company, and M. L. Annenberg.

For the appellant Annenberg there was a brief by Theodore Kronshage, Jr., and Otto Dorner, both of Milwaukee.

For the respondent there was a brief by the Attorney General, Daniel H. Grady of Portage, special counsel, and George A. Shaughnessy, district attorney of Milwaukee county, and oral argument by Mr. Grady.

Judges: BURR W. JONES, J. MARVIN B. ROSENBERRY, J., dissented. FRANZ C. ESCHWEILER, J., dissents in part.

Opinion by: JONES

Opinion

---

[*350] [**615] The following opinions were filed May 1, 1923:

JONES, J. This is [***2] an appeal from an order overruling defendants' demurrers to the complaint. The complaint alleged:

"1. That the American Tobacco Company is a duly organized corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of New Jersey, and that on the 18th day of May, 1912, said corporation was duly licensed to do business in the state of Wisconsin, which license is still in effect; that since the 18th day of May, 1912, it has been and now is doing business in the state of Wisconsin and maintains a factory and warehouses in the city of Milwaukee, Milwaukee county, Wisconsin, having agents and salesmen within the state of Wisconsin.

"2. That the P. Lorillard Company is a duly organized corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of New Jersey, and that on the 14th day of December, 1911, the said P. Lorillard Company was duly licensed to do business in the state of Wisconsin, which license is still in effect; that since the 14th day of December, 1911, the said P. Lorillard Company has been and is now doing business in the state of Wisconsin, maintaining a warehouse at Madison, Wisconsin, and having agents and salesmen in this state."

3-7. That [***3] the Schneider Tobacco Company, Badger Tobacco Company, A. S. Goodrich Company, Lewis-Leidersdorf Company, and Peckarsky Brothers Company are duly organized Wisconsin corporations existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Wisconsin, engaged in the wholesale jobbing business in cigarettes and tobacco, having their principal place of business in Milwaukee, Milwaukee county, Wisconsin.

8-13. That certain persons are engaged in the wholesale jobbing business in cigarettes and tobacco in Milwaukee and surrounding territory, either as individuals or members of copartnerships.

"14. That the Association of Wholesale Tobacconists is a corporation purporting to be organized under the laws of [*351] the state of Wisconsin, for which articles of incorporation were issued on the 17th day of May, 1920, which organization will be more particularly referred to herein.

"15. That the said P. Lorillard Company and the American Tobacco Company were formerly members of a combination in restraint of trade which attempted to monopolize the tobacco business of the United States and which was dissolved by a decree of the federal court; that the said P. Lorillard [***4] Company and the American Tobacco Company manufacture about seventy per cent. of the tobacco products sold in the state of Wisconsin; that each of said companies has published a certain list price for their products, which list price does not purport to be the price at which the said respective companies shall sell their products, but is a price sought by said companies to be maintained after their products are in other hands in the course of trade.

"16. That the tobacco-distribution business and the sale of tobacco, other than by manufacturers, is in the hands of jobbers, sub-jobbers, and retailers; that the jobbers consist of wholesalers who are placed upon an accredited list of the manufacturers and are permitted to buy direct from the manufacturers; that the sub-jobbers are wholesalers who are not placed upon the accredited lists of the manufacturers, nor are they permitted by said manufacturers to buy direct from the manufacturers, nor to receive jobbers' discounts; that the retailers, in turn, who sell to the consuming public, are permitted only to buy from said sub-jobbers or jobbers.

"17. That the transactions hereinafter referred to relate solely to intrastate commerce, [***5] consisting of sales by jobbers to sub-jobbers and sales by jobbers to retailers, or sub-jobbers to retailers, entirely within the limits of the state of Wisconsin.

"18. That the tobacco and cigarettes referred to herein are commodities and articles in general use in this state, and sold generally to the public.

"19. That between the 6th day of July, 1921, and the 20th day of October, 1921, in the city of Milwaukee, Milwaukee county, Wisconsin, the defendants above named unlawfully conspired, combined, and agreed to prevent competition in the supply and price of tobacco and cigarettes, which articles are in general use in this state and were intended to be sold herein as a subject of commerce or trade; that said combination and conspiracy did control and fix [*352] the price of said articles and commodities and did illegally restrain commerce and trade within the state of Wisconsin, contrary to the provisions of chapter 458, Laws of 1921.

"20. That for the purpose of more easily accomplishing their aims and purposes, the defendants organized and created an association among said defendants for the purpose of regulating prices and controlling competition, establishing rules and [***6] regulations; that said association at first was not incorporated, but consisted of a trade association among the wholesale jobbers, but for the purpose of more easily accomplishing their designs the said jobbers incorporated and formed the Association of Wholesale Tobacconists.

"21. That said defendants, conspiring, combining, and agreeing among themselves with the intention of restraining trade and preventing competition, with the purpose of driving out of business the sub-jobbers in the city of Milwaukee and the surrounding territory in the state of Wisconsin, did restrain commerce and prevent competition and did control the price of the articles hereinbefore mentioned (a) by refusing to sell to sub-jobbers other than were on the jobbers list; (b) by agreeing not to increase the number of the sub-jobbers who might buy from the jobbers at sub-jobbers' rates; (c) by systematically increasing the price at which said sub-jobbers might purchase tobacco and cigarettes from the jobbers to such an extent that it would be impossible for said sub-jobbers to do business; (d) by preventing said sub-jobbers from becoming jobbers and buying supplies from manufacturers direct; (e) by systematically [***7] cutting off the supply of tobacco and cigarettes which said sub-jobbers might purchase, unless the sub-jobbers became parties to price-fixing and maintenance agreements; (f) by limiting and attempting to limit the persons with which said sub-jobbers might deal; (g) by collectively threatening the said sub-jobbers with cutting off their entire supply of tobacco and cigarettes; (h) by collectively threatening to drive the sub-jobbers out of [**616] business unless they agreed to the demands of the said jobbing association.

"22. That said defendants further restrained trade and controlled prices by agreeing to fix the price at which tobacco would be sold by members of the jobbing association to retailers outside of the city of Milwaukee and in the state of Wisconsin, and on or about the 1st day of September, 1921, [*353] increased the price by collectively refusing discounts at which said tobacco and cigarettes were formerly sold by said jobbers to retailers.

"23. That said defendants further fixed prices and controlled the sale of the commodities hereinbefore referred to and restrained trade by meeting every two weeks at either the Wisconsin Hotel or the Chamber of Commerce [***8] building, at which meetings trade arrangements and understandings were had and made affecting competition and prices, and knowledge communicated to members of the association, with the idea and purpose of eliminating competition between the various members of the association.

"24. That said defendants further controlled prices and restrained trade, as hereinbefore alleged, by collectively urging and coercing retailers in the maintenance of certain prices, to the detriment of the consuming public.

"25. That said defendants further restrained trade, controlled the price, and eliminated competition by collectively agreeing and fixing the price at which retailers in the city of Milwaukee might purchase tobacco from said jobbers or sub-jobbers.

"26. That said defendants further restrained trade and competition by threatening sub-jobbers with the false statement that Liggett & Myers Company and R. J. Reynolds Company would join with these defendants in cutting off the supply of said sub-jobbers unless they became parties to this price-fixing combination and agreement and would maintain the price agreed upon.

"27. That each of the defendants, respectively, became indebted to the state [***9] of Wisconsin, and on the 20th day of October, 1921, were indebted to the state of Wisconsin in the amount of $ 5,000, whereby an action accrues according to the provisions of chapter 458, Laws of 1921.

"Wherefore the state of Wisconsin demands judgment against each of said defendants in the sum of $ 5,000, and for such relief as the state may be entitled to in the premises."

The P. Lorillard Company demurred to the complaint:

"1. For the reason that it appears upon the face thereof that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

"2. And for the reason that it appears upon the face [*354] thereof that several causes of action have been improperly united."

A like demurrer was filed by the American Tobacco Company.

Defendant Schneider Tobacco Company demurred to the complaint on the following grounds:

"That the court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant and has no jurisdiction of the subject of said action.

"That several causes of action have been improperly united.

"That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

The demurrers of the remaining defendants are like that of [***10] the Schneider Tobacco Company.

On December 16, 1921, there was filed an amendment to the complaint, and motion was made to strike out that part of the original complaint demanding judgment against each of the defendants in the sum of $ 5,000, and to substitute therefor the following:

"I. That the defendants in the above described combination and conspiracy, and servants, employees, agents, and all persons acting in their behalf be perpetually enjoined, restrained, and prohibited from combining, agreeing, or conspiring to restrain trade or competition in the sale of tobacco or cigarettes in the state of Wisconsin, and more particularly that they be enjoined and restrained from collectively agreeing to fixing or establishing in any manner whatsoever by agreement, understanding, or otherwise among themselves the prices at which tobacco or cigarettes may be sold by said defendants to jobbers, retailers, or other members of the consuming public, and further from maintaining, using, or continuing to use collectively minimum prices or minimum discounts by said defendants in the sale of cigarettes and tobacco or agreeing among themselves to establish or adopt terms, conditions, and policies [*355] [***11] which would tend to fix prices at which cigarettes or tobacco should be sold by said defendants or their customers; from collectively agreeing upon the maintenance of resale prices by either retailers or wholesalers.

"(1) From collectively threatening sub-jobbers with cutting off their supply of tobacco or threatening them in any manner for the purpose of compelling said sub-jobbers or retailers to sell tobacco and cigarettes at prices fixed or suggested by said defendants.

"(2) From aiding, abetting, or assisting individually or collectively others to do all or any of the matters herein set forth in this complaint.

"II. Demands further that the court retain jurisdiction herein, and that upon such jurisdiction so retained the state have judgment (a) annulling and canceling the corporate charters of the Schneider Tobacco Company, the Badger Tobacco Company, the A. S. Goodrich Tobacco Company, the Lewis-Leidersdorf Company, Peckarsky Brothers Company, and the Association of Wholesale Tobacconists, all domestic Wisconsin corporations; and (b) annulling and canceling the authority and license to do business in the state of Wisconsin of the P. Lorillard [***12] Company, a foreign corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, as hereinbefore alleged, and the license and authority of the American Tobacco Company, licensed to do business in the state of Wisconsin, as hereinbefore alleged.

"III. That the court retain jurisdiction herein, and upon such jurisdiction the state of Wisconsin demands judgment further against each of said defendants in the sum of $ 5,000, and for such other relief, legal or equitable, as the state may be entitled to in the premises and as may seem just and equitable to the court.

[**617] "IV. And for its costs and disbursements in this action."

It was stipulated that the demurrs to the original complaint should stand as and for the demurrs to the amended complaint.

The trial court overruled the demurrs, to which order appropriate exceptions were taken.

Among other statutes relied on by the state is ch. 458, [*356] Laws of 1921, now numbered sec. 1747e, Stats., which is as follows:

HN1[] "1. Every contract or combination in the nature of a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is hereby declared illegal. Every combination, conspiracy, trust, pool, agreement or contract intended [***13] to restrain or prevent competition in the supply or price of any article or commodity in general use in this state, to be produced or sold therein or constituting a subject of trade or commerce therein, or which combination, conspiracy, trust, pool, agreement or contract shall in any manner control the price of any such article or commodity, fix the price thereof, limit or fix the amount or quantity thereof to be manufactured, mined, produced or sold in this state, or fix any standard or figure in which its price to the public shall be in any manner controlled or established, is hereby declared an illegal restraint of trade. Every person, corporation, copartnership, trustee or association who shall either as principal or agent become a party to any contract, combination, conspiracy, trust, pool or agreement herein declared unlawful or declared to be in restraint of trade, or who shall combine or conspire with any other person, corporation, copartnership, association or trustee to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in this state shall forfeit for each such offense not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars. Any such person, [***14] corporation, copartnership, trustee or association shall also be liable to any person transacting or doing business in this state for all damages he may sustain by reason of the doing of anything forbidden by this section.

"2. It shall be the duty of the attorney general to enforce the provisions of this act and to bring an action for the recovery of the forfeiture herein provided for, whenever complaint shall be made to him and evidence produced which shall satisfy him that there has been any violation thereof. The several district attorneys shall, upon the advice of the attorney general, who may appear as counsel in any such case, institute such actions or proceedings as he shall deem necessary to recover any forfeiture incurred on account of the violation of any of the provisions of this act."

[*357] *The demurrer as to misjoinder of causes of action.

It is contended by the defendants that the complaint sets forth four different kinds of causes of action, each created by a separate statute as follows:

1. A cause of action, involving all the defendants, to prevent or restrain the formation of contracts in restraint of trade, or the execution of the purposes thereof.

[***15] 2. Causes of action, involving the five Wisconsin corporations only, to cancel their charters for violation of sec. 1791j, Stats.

3. Causes of action involving the two foreign corporations only, to cancel their licenses to do business in this state for violation of sec. 1770g, Stats.

4. Causes of action, involving each defendant separately, to recover the forfeiture of $ 100 to $ 5,000 imposed for violation of sec. 1747e, Stats.

It is argued that the complaint states no single primary right constituting a single cause of action, and that the test whether there is more than one cause of action stated is whether there is more than one primary right sought to be enforced.

Counsel for defendants place great reliance on the case of Hawarden v. Youghiogheny & L. C. Co. 111 Wis. 545, 87 N.W. 472. In this action plaintiff was a coal dealer. The complaint was in two counts. The first was a cause of action at law to recover damages against defendants by reason of a malicious destruction of his business resulting from an alleged conspiracy on the part of the defendants. The second was a cause of action in equity by the plaintiff on his own behalf and on behalf [***16] of many others similarly situated to restrain the further enforcement of the conspiracy.

It was held that since it was alleged in the first count that there was a conspiracy and a combination to drive the plaintiff [*358] out of business, which was an unlawful purpose constituting malice in contemplation of law, and injury resulted, there was a good cause of action. It was also held that there was a cause of action stated in the second count, since courts of equity have jurisdiction to restrain such conspiracies when irreparable injury will result and legal remedies will prove inadequate or a multiplicity of suits will be necessary. But the court held that the two causes were improperly united, using the following language:

"The statute provides that causes of action, in order to be united in one complaint, 'must affect all the parties to the action.' Stats. 1898, sec. 2647. It is clear that this limitation would be violated if the two causes of action in this complaint are allowed to be united in one complaint. The first cause of action is a straight action at law for damages to the plaintiff alone. No one else has any interest in the judgment in that action, whatever it be. [***17] But the second cause of action is a cause of action in favor of a large number of persons, constituting a class represented by the plaintiff. Potentially all of the class are parties. They are invited to become formal parties plaintiff, and presumably will accept the invitation. Thus the first cause of action affects but one party plaintiff, whereas the second cause of action affects numerous parties plaintiff. The doctrine is frequently stated that the several causes of action for or against a person must affect him in the same capacity in order to [**618] make them capable of being joined." Hawarden v. Youghiogheny & L. C. Co. 111 Wis. 545, 552, 87 N.W. 472.

Undoubtedly this case gives stronger support to the contention made by defendants on this ground of demurrer than any other which has been cited. But we think it may be distinguished from the instant case. In that case in one cause of action plaintiff was suing alone merely for damages to himself in which no other person had any interest. In the other there was a large number of persons and the remedy prayed was injunction only. In that case no one but the plaintiff had any interest in the judgment for damages, [***18] if secured, and no other of the plaintiffs to be joined would be in any way affected by that judgment.

[*359] In the case at bar there is only one plaintiff, and if the plaintiff should prevail every defendant would be directly affected by the injunction, although as to the other questions involved each might be affected in a different manner.

Counsel also cite on this point the following decisions of this court: Grand Rapids W. P. Co. v. Bensley, 75 Wis. 399, 44 N.W. 640; Younkin v. Milwaukee L., H. & T. Co. 112 Wis. 15, 87 N.W. 861; Draper v. Brown, 115 Wis. 361, 91 N.W. 1001; Boyd v. Mutual Fire Asso. 116 Wis. 155, 90 N.W. 1086, 94 N.W. 171; Luther v. C. J. Luther Co. 118 Wis. 112, 94 N.W. 69; Barnes v. Beloit, 19 Wis. 93; Shanahan v. Madison, 57 Wis. 276, 15 N.W. 154; Midland T. C. Co. v. Edward Schuster & Co., 163 Wis. 190, 157 N.W. 785.

For the most part they are cases brought by several plaintiffs or against several defendants having a common interest where injunction and damages were sought, and where it was held that there was a misjoinder [***19] of causes of action. This was in accordance with the rule early declared by Chancellor WALWORTH in Murray v. Hay, 1 Barb. Ch. 59:

"There is no inflexible rule as to joinder of parties in the court of chancery. Yet, as a general principle, several complainants, having distinct and independent claims to relief against a defendant, cannot join in a suit for the separate relief of each. Nor can a single complainant, having distinct and independent claims to relief against two or more defendants severally, join them in the same bill. But there are many exceptions to this rule; and the court exercises a sound discretion in determining whether there is a misjoinder of parties under the particular circumstances of each case."

In none of these cases does the bill or complaint base the claim for relief on any such concert of action or conspiracy as is set forth in the present complaint, and they are not inconsistent with cases which will be later referred to in this opinion where different kinds of relief were granted against various defendants.

[*360] Counsel argue that several different statutes are relied on by the plaintiff to sustain the action; that several different [***20] causes of action are stated in reliance on these different statutes; and that for this reason there is misjoinder. To this proposition the following cases are cited: State ex rel. Mylrea v. Janesville W. Co. 92 Wis. 496, 66 N.W. 512; Superior v. Douglas Co. Tel. Co. 141 Wis. 363, 122 N.W. 1023; Knapp v. Deer Creek, 162 Wis. 168, 155 N.W. 940.

The first of these cases was an application under sec. 3241, Stats., for leave to forfeit the charter of the defendant, and it was expressly held that the proceeding was not in the nature of a bill in equity. The second case was an action by the city of Superior to enjoin the defendant from removing from the city and library buildings, telephones installed under a special contract made prior to the passage of the public utility law. The state railroad commission was joined as a defendant, and the complaint prayed for nullification of its order requiring discontinuance of the service. It was held by a majority of the court:

"That the statutory action created to enable a party aggrieved by an order of the railroad commission, by action against such commission to challenge the validity of such [***21] order, is not joinable with another action of primary import against some other party, to prevent the latter from complying with such order." Superior v. Douglas Co. Tel. Co. 141 Wis. 363, 372, 122 N.W. 1023.

Mr. Justice MARSHALL and Mr. Justice BARNES dissented and Mr. Chief Justice WINSLOW took no part in the decision.

The third of these cases was for an injunction to compel the construction of ditches as required by sec. 1388b, Stats. It was held that the statute gave a new right to adjacent landowners against municipalities and prescribed the remedy: a remedy at law for damages, and excluded the right to resort to equity.

[*361] It is the claim of counsel for the state that the action is brought by the state for the invasion of one primary right, namely, that of the state to have trade and commerce free from the unlawful combination alleged. There is no doubt that such combinations as are described in the complaint, to fix prices, restrain trade, prevent competition, and create monopolies, are illegal. They were unlawful at common law, and would be unlawful in this state even if there were no statute on the subject. They were held illegal in this state [***22] before sec. 1747e was enacted. They have been declared illegal in many of the states, and by Congress so far as relates to interstate commerce. Nor is there any doubt that the state is charged with the [*619] right and duty to protect the public from the burden of excessive prices when caused by such combinations.

There is much discussion in the briefs of the meaning of the terms "cause of action" and "primary right" and "subject of the action." In two very elaborate opinions, one by Mr. Justice MARSHALL and the other by Mr. Chief Justice WINSLOW, there was a very full discussion of the meaning of these terms ( Emerson v. Nash, 124 Wis. 369, 102 N.W. 921; McArthur v. Moffet, 143 Wis. 564, 128 N.W. 445); and it would serve no useful purpose to attempt to make clear a subject which confessedly is involved in much confusion. There are a few propositions relevant to the present discussion which are generally recognized as sustained by the authorities. One of these propositions is thus stated by Mr. Pomeroy:

"Every judicial action must therefore involve the following elements: a primary right possessed by the plaintiff, and a corresponding primary [***23] duty devolving upon the defendant; a delict or wrong done by the defendant which consisted in a breach of such primary right and duty; a remedial right in favor of the plaintiff, and a remedial duty resting on the defendant springing from this delict; and finally the remedy or relief itself. Every action, however complicated or however simple, must contain these essential elements. Of [*362] these elements, the primary right and duty and the delict or wrong combined constitute the cause of action in the legal sense of the term, and as it is used in the codes of the several states."

"From one cause of action, that is, from one primary right and one delict being a breach thereof, it is possible, and not at all uncommon, that two or more remedial rights may arise, and therefore two or more different kinds of relief answering to these separate remedial rights." Pomeroy, Code Remedies (4th ed.) pp. 460, 461, 464.

It is another rule that in determining whether a complaint states more than one cause of action the whole pleading is to be examined to ascertain when there is more than one primary right sought to be established, and this is the test to be applied.

Observing this test, [***24] there may be in equitable actions many kinds of relief prayed for without causing a misjoinder of causes of action. There is not necessarily a misjoinder of causes of action although the rights of some of the parties in respect to the general subject of the action may be different from those of others. Again, there is the very familiar rule thus stated by Mr. Pomeroy:

"The rule has already been stated, as one of the foundations of the concurrent jurisdiction, that where a court of equity has obtained jurisdiction over some portion or feature of a controversy, it may, and will in general, proceed to decide the whole issues, and to award complete relief, although the rights of the parties are strictly legal, and the final remedy granted is of the kind which might be conferred by a court of law." 1 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. (3d ed.) § 231.

A very good illustration of some of the rules above stated will be found in the case of Zinc C. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 103 Wis. 125, 79 N.W. 229. The complaint alleged an elaborate scheme by some of the officers of the bank and others to defraud the plaintiff. Different kinds of relief were prayed for against the different defendants, and [***25] among other forms of relief was the prayer to set aside a judgment [*363] fraudulently obtained by the bank against the plaintiff. In discussing the question of misjoinder, in the opinion of Mr. Justice MARSHALL it was said (p. 139):

"There is but one subject of action--the conspiracy to defraud and its consummation to the damage of plaintiff. All the allegations of fact are parts of the presentation of that one subject. The test of whether there is more than one cause of action stated or attempted to be stated in a complaint is not whether there are different kinds of relief or objects sought, but whether there is more than one primary right sought to be enforced or one subject of controversy presented for adjudication."

In Gager v. Marsden, 101 Wis. 598, 77 N.W. 922, in a winding-up proceeding to settle the affairs of a bank, creditors appeared as plaintiffs; many fraudulent practices on the part of directors were alleged, and the officers and stockholders were made parties. It was urged by counsel who demurred for misjoinder that five different causes of action were joined, viz.: one to enforce stockholders' and directors' liability as to stock dividends; [***26] one against the directors for paying dividends before the stock was paid up; one for publishing false reports; one for various neglects of officers and directors; and one for winding up of the affairs of the bank.

It was held that there was but one cause of action--the closing up of the business of the bank; that the other matters were germane to that cause and necessary incidents of it. The following are among the decisions of this court which further illustrate the rules above stated: Level Land Co. v. Sivyer, 112 Wis. 442, 88 N.W. 317; Blake v. Van Tilborg, 21 Wis. 672; Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 121 Wis. 127, 99 N.W. 909; Ellis v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 77 Wis. 114, 45 N.W. 811; Cole v. Getzinger, 96 Wis. 559, 71 N.W. 75; Draper v. Brown, 115 Wis. 361, 91 N.W. 1001; St. Croix T. Co. v. Joseph, 142 Wis. 55, 124 N.W. 1049.

The cases we have cited indicate that when a primary [*364] right has been invaded the complaint may relate to many minor subjects, [**620] and facts may be stated constituting independent grounds for relief differing as to different defendants [***27] and still the complaint may not be subject to objection for misjoinder of causes of action.

Sec. 2647, Stats., provides:

HN2 [↑] "The plaintiff may unite in the same complaint several causes of action, whether they be such as were formerly denominated legal or equitable or both."

"But the causes of action so united must affect all the parties to the action and not require different places of trial, and must be stated separately."

No objection is made that the action for injunctive relief requires different places of trial for the several defendants and it is very clear that it affects all the parties to the action. But it is claimed that since a penalty is demanded of each defendant, no other defendant is affected by such claim and that every one of such demands is a separate cause of action.

Sec. 1747e, enacted in 1921, prohibited combinations of the character described in the complaint and provides for forfeitures for violation of the statute. It does not prescribe the methods of procedure in actions to be brought, but does declare in very broad terms that it shall be the duty of the attorney general "to enforce the provisions of this act and to bring an action for the recovery of [***28] the forfeiture herein provided for." It was unnecessary to include the procedure for enforcing the provisions of the statute by injunction because statutes then existing made such provision.

It is argued by counsel for defendants that the prayer for relief as to the annulment of charters of domestic corporations and the revocation of licenses of foreign corporations to do business in this state indicates that separate causes of action are united; that such proceedings are authorized by different statutes in which the modes of procedure are prescribed; that those methods must be followed; and that there [*365] cannot be granted in a single action injunctive relief and the revocation of charters and licenses.

Secs. 1791j and 1791l, Stats., HN3 [↑] make provision for annulment of charters of domestic corporations where they are found to have united into such conspiracies as are described in the complaint in this action. Secs. 1770g and 1770i make similar provision for revoking the licenses for doing business in this state of foreign corporations. These sections as to domestic and foreign companies have been in substantially their present form since 1907.

No precedent has [***29] been cited where, in the same action, relief has been sought to enjoin an illegal combination of this character and to recover penalties and revoke and cancel charters and licenses of the offending corporations. In this respect this seems to be a case of first impression.

It is undoubtedly true as argued that all of the defendants are not affected alike. Some of them would not be affected by the revocation of charters and licenses of other defendants. All would be affected if forfeitures are enforced. It is important that the statute already quoted does not require that all defendants shall be affected in the same manner, and the cases referred to show that this is wholly unnecessary. Undoubtedly all the defendants are affected by the charge that they have successfully conspired and combined to violate the statute.

We have then this situation: A statute declares illegal such combinations as are described in the complaint, provides penalties for its violation, and requires the attorney general to enforce the provisions of the act. Another statute, sec. 1747f, makes provision for restraining by injunctions violations of the law forbidding unlawful combinations of the character [***30] described in the complaint. Other statutes provide for the cancellation of charters and licenses of offending corporations which conspire and combine to prevent competition, or control prices of articles in general use.

[*366] HN4 [↑] When actions are brought to prevent such combinations, the consequences to different defendants, for example foreign and domestic corporations, are different in some respects. Does it follow from this that in order to enforce the provisions of the act a separate suit must be brought against every individual and every corporation joining in the conspiracy for penalties, and that a separate suit must be brought against every member of the combination if a cancellation of its license or charter is contemplated? We do not think so. We are disposed to the view that the primary right of the state is to prevent the continued violation of the statute by means of the combination alleged to be unlawful. This is a matter of far greater importance than the collection of the penalties.

The delict of the defendants is the conspiracy alleged and their acts in its execution. The primary right and duty of the state and the wrong of the defendants constitute the cause of [***31] action, and we regard it as one cause of action, although as incidental to it there may be different forms of relief as against the different defendants.

Hence it is our conclusion that there is no misjoinder of causes of action.

Was the commencement of the action duly authorized?

It is contended by counsel for defendants that the complaint is defective in failing to show that the attorney general has authority to bring the action; that his powers are limited by statute; and that he must find authority in the statute when he brings an action in the name of the state. Several decisions of this court are cited to this proposition. [\[\*\*621\] State v. Milwaukee E. R. & L. Co.](#) 136 Wis. 179, 116 N.W. 900; State ex rel. Haven v. Sayle, 168 Wis. 159, 169 N.W. 310; State v. Industrial Com., 172 Wis. 415, 179 N.W. 579.

There is no allegation in the complaint that the action is brought pursuant to a request of the governor or either branch of the legislature pursuant to sec. 14.53 of the [\[\*367\] Statutes](#). It is argued that the statute authorizing actions against illegal combinations for injunctive relief has not been complied [\[\*\*\*32\]](#) with. That statute, so far as material, is as follows:

HN5 "The several circuit courts may prevent or restrain, by injunction or otherwise, the formation of any such contract or combination or the execution of the purposes thereof. The several district attorneys shall, upon the advice of the attorney general, who may appear as counsel in any such case, institute such actions or proceedings as he shall deem necessary to prevent or restrain a violation of the provisions of the preceding section, which shall be begun by way of information or complaint as in ordinary actions, setting forth the cause and grounds for the intervention of the court and praying that such violation, whether intended or continuing, shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited." Sec. 1747f, Stats.

The action was brought in Milwaukee county and the summons and complaint were signed by the attorney general, the special assistant attorney general, and by the district attorney of that county. The argument is that this shows that the action was not brought by the district attorney on the advice of the attorney general but by the attorney general.

It is clear that under the express language of the statute, on the advice [\[\*\*\*33\]](#) of the attorney general, the district attorney had the right to institute the action and that the attorney general had the right to appear as counsel. We attach little importance to the order in which the attorneys for the state signed the complaint and summons or to the fact that the attorney general omitted to sign his name as "of counsel." We find no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the statute was complied with; that the suit was instituted by the proper officers with the sanction and advice of the attorney general.

In the same way objection is made to the complaint on the ground of failure to show authority of the attorney [\[\*368\]](#) general to institute any proceeding for the collection of penalties incurred. Sub. 2, sec. 1747e, quoted in the early part of this opinion, HN6 declares it to be the duty of the attorney general to enforce the provisions of the act. It is further declared to be his duty to bring an action for the recovery of the forfeitures "whenever complaint shall be made to him and evidence produced which shall satisfy him that there has been any violation thereof." The statute then proceeds to require district attorneys on the advice of the attorney [\[\*\*\*34\]](#) general, as in sec. 1747f, to institute actions to recover forfeitures for violation of the act.

The statute seems to show the legislative intent that there shall be no failure to institute proceedings for the violation of the act. It is first made the duty of the attorney general to enforce its provisions. If he should neglect that duty, we see no reason why he could not be compelled by a proper legal proceeding to perform it.

Then there is the same provision for bringing the action by district attorneys for injunctive relief which has already been discussed, and the same reasoning applies.

The objection is further made that there is no statute authorizing the attorney general to institute any proceeding for the purpose of revoking or canceling the charters and licenses of domestic and foreign corporations. Secs. 1791*j* and 1770*g* HNT↑ deal respectively with such corporations and provide that, if they enter into any combination or conspiracy to restrain trade and competition or fix prices of articles in common use in this state, their charter shall be revoked or their license to do business in this state shall be canceled.

Secs. 1791*i* and 1770*i* HN8↑ relate to the mode [***35] of bringing proceedings for forfeiture of charters or cancellation of licenses. In substantially the same language they provide that on complaint being made to the attorney general and evidence produced to him which shall satisfy him that the [*369] corporation has violated any of the conditions specified in the several sections, he shall forthwith bring an action in the name of the state to have the charter revoked or the license canceled as the case may be. The complaint does not state that complaint was made to the attorney general or evidence produced to him, and this is urged as a necessary allegation.

Another section, 1791*k*, HN9↑ makes it the duty of the attorney general under the conditions specified to make inquiry of domestic corporations as to facts which may have a bearing on the question whether there has been a violation of the anti-trust laws. The following paragraph in the elaborate and very able opinion of the trial judge expresses the view we take as to the construction of these statutes:

"I think what the legislature intended was that any person having knowledge of the violation of these sections might make complaint, either written or oral, to the attorney [***36] general, and produce evidence before him for the purpose of having him act, but if the attorney general obtains knowledge from any source whatsoever without any complaint having been made to him he may, upon his own motion, act under sec. 1791*i*, and the mere fact of his charging a violation of these sections in his complaint and instituting the action is all that is necessary, as that of itself is sufficient evidence of his being satisfied that such corporation has violated the conditions of these sections."

[**622] We believe that it was the intention of the legislature to confer power on the attorney general to institute proceedings to revoke charters or licenses for violation of these statutes; that the various modes provided for obtaining information were for the benefit of the state and not for that of offenders. The clause in the statutes that the attorney general should act upon complaint made to him and evidence produced which satisfied him that an offense had been committed gave notice to the public of the manner in which proceedings could be commenced. It may have been the intent [*370] that if the attorney general failed to institute proceedings he could be [***37] compelled by mandamus to perform the duty which was commanded.

We are convinced that the statutes we have referred to authorized the commencement of the action in the manner in which it was brought.

There is very elaborate argument in the various briefs on other phases of this subject. It is claimed by counsel for the state that sec. 1747*e* gave the attorney general absolute power in his own discretion to bring the action; that the right is also conferred by sec. 3236, Stats.; that when public interests are involved and positive duties are imposed there is the implied power. All of these subjects have been carefully and ably argued by the respective counsel, but in view of the conclusion we have reached it seems unnecessary to discuss the questions thus raised.

*As to the mode of enactment of ch. 458, Laws 1921 (secs. 1747*e*, 1747*f*, Stats.).*

Sub. 3 of this act made an appropriation "to the attorney general a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act, not exceeding the sum of $ 10,000 annually."

Counsel for defendants argue that this statute, containing an appropriation, was not legally passed because it was not referred by the assembly to the joint finance [***38] committee before the final vote was taken.

No authority need be cited to the familiar rule that HN10↑ the court may take judicial notice of the journals of the legislature to determine whether the requirements for the enactment of statutes have been complied with. The bill in question had passed the usual pilgrimages as to introduction, references, hearings in committee, reports of committees, but although it was referred to the joint finance committee by the senate it was not so referred by the assembly, and the passage of the bill by that body preceded reference to the [*371] finance committee by the senate. Sec. 13.06 of the Statutes provides:

HN11[] "All bills introduced in either house for the appropriation of money by the legislature; all accounts or claims presented in either house; and all bills provided for revenue or relating to taxation, shall be referred to the committee on finance before being passed or allowed."

Sec. 8, art. VIII, of the constitution provides:

HN12[] "On the passage in either house of the legislature of any law which imposes, continues or renews a tax, or creates a debt or charge, or makes, continues or renews an appropriation of public or trust money, or releases, [***39] discharges or commutes a claim or demand of the state, the question shall be taken by yeas and nays, which shall be duly entered on the journal; and three fifths of all the members elected to such house shall in all such cases be required to constitute a quorum therein."

Counsel for defendants argue that sec. 13.06 of the Statutes means that a bill calling for the appropriation of money must be referred by each house to the finance committee before the final vote is taken by that house; that this is necessary to prevent hasty and inconsiderate action. It is contended that since this is the proper construction of the act the requirement cannot be disregarded until the statute is changed, and that ignoring the statute by the legislature does not amount to a repeal.

Counsel for the state argue that the section in question is a mere rule of procedure provided by the legislature, which it may dispense with or disregard. It is also argued that since the journals were silent as to any such reference, compliance with the statute will be presumed until the contrary appears, and that even if the statute was not complied with the appropriation clause was not an inducement for the passage of [***40] other sections and they were not thereby invalidated.

Many cases are cited by the respective counsel on these [*372] propositions which it becomes not necessary to discuss in view of the conclusion we have reached. There is no constitutional requirement involved. The committee referred to in the statute is a joint committee composed of members of both houses. In the senate the bill was referred to that committee.

It will be observed that sec. 13.06 does not state that the bill shall be referred to the finance committee by each house before final passage. The language is that it "shall be referred to the committee on finance before being passed or allowed."

It may be that it would be desirable, as argued by defendants' counsel, that each house should refer bills for the appropriation of money to the finance committee before it takes final action, but as we construe the statute it does not make any such requirement. This is a question of policy for legislative, not judicial, determination.

As to the constitutionality of ch. 458, Laws 1921 (sec. 1747e, Stats.).

A very elaborate and ingenious argument is made by defendants' counsel urging that the legal effect of the [***41] act is to declare unlawful every contract for the manufacture or sale of any commodity if such contract provides for a fixed price or fixes the amount or quantity of the commodity to be [**623] manufactured or sold.

For the purpose of the argument counsel separate sec. 1747e into different paragraphs; discuss the several paragraphs; and arrive at the conclusion that there are two classes of contracts declared unlawful by the act: (1) those intended to restrain competition, and (2) those which in any manner control or fix prices or limit or fix the amount or quantity to be manufactured or sold, or fix or control the price to the public. It is contended that the acts prohibited in the second group cannot be qualified by any words of limitation found in the clause describing the first group.

[*373] It is hardly necessary to cite authorities for the familiar rule for construing statutes that HN13 [↑] the court should give effect to the intent when that is clear rather than to the letter of the act; that the intent is to be gathered from the whole statute taken together, and not from words and phrases separate from the context. In arriving at the intent the object and purpose of [*374] the statute are to be considered.

Here we have a statute entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful trusts and monopolies." The argument of counsel disconnects that part of the statute which relates to controlling and fixing the price and limiting the quantity, and fixing the standard, from the preceding language. It also disconnects the preceding portions from the words near the middle of the section, "to the public."

Counsel also lay great stress on the fact that the word "or" precedes the words "fix any standard," etc., as separating the final prohibitory clause from the other parts of the section. In our opinion the attempt to separate the different clauses, giving to each a meaning apart from what precedes and follows, does not greatly help in arriving at the true meaning of the statute.

In the beginning of the statute, combinations and conspiracies intended to restrain or prevent competition in the supply or price of articles in general use in the state are named as the subject of the legislation. In the same sentence the acts of the conspiracy or combination which constitute a restraint of trade are briefly described or defined. In the closing part of [*374] the sentence the "price to the public" is connected with what precedes.

It seems very clear to us that the whole object of the statute was to prohibit combinations and conspiracies from illegally restraining trade and commerce. This may be accomplished by conspiring to prevent competition, by conspiring to control, or fix or limit the amount to be produced. We do not think this section can be fairly construed as prohibiting any legitimate contracts, but only those which [*374] are tainted by an unlawful combination tending to the public detriment.

Applying the rule that in determining the meaning of the section of a statute it should be considered as a whole and not in piecemeal, and the other rule that in passing on the constitutionality of a statute we must presume in favor of its validity until the violation is shown beyond reasonable doubt, we hold that this objection is not well taken.

The constitutionality of the statute is attacked on another ground. Counsel for defendants invoke the well known rule that HN14 [↑] when a statute contains provisions which are void the entire statute may be declared illegal if the valid and the void portions are so connected or interwoven that they [*374] cannot be separated and it is plain that the objectionable parts of the statute were an inducement to the legislature to enact the other parts of the same statute.

In making this argument they claim that secs. 1747h, 1747h-1, 1747h-3, and 1747h-4 are unconstitutional, and that in considering the validity of the act of 1921 the court should apply the test of constitutionality as if the anti-trust laws as they now exist had been originally enacted in their present form.

These sections were enacted at different times. They relate to exemptions from the provisions of the anti-trust laws, under certain conditions, of labor unions or other associations of laborers, associations of farmers, and those engaged in like employment, and they permit collective bargaining by associations of producers of agricultural products, and employees, when done for their individual benefit. The latest of these sections as they now appear in the Wisconsin Statutes was enacted in 1919.

Secs. 1747e and 1747f were enacted as ch. 458, Laws of 1921. That statute makes no reference to any other and contains none of the exceptions objected to. The exemption statutes above referred to [*375] were collected by the revisers of the Statutes and placed in the same chapter of the Statutes [*375] of 1921 as secs. 1747e and 1747f, but were not enacted or re-enacted by the legislature of that year.

This raises the question whether we would be justified in holding that these sections, enacted, some of them, in substance many years ago, were, even if void, the inducement for the enactment of the statute of 1921. To so hold would seem to be an extension of the rule above referred to, and no authority is cited for such a ruling. We are inclined to the view that the statute under consideration should not be condemned as unconstitutional on this ground and that we are not called upon to decide whether the various sections objected to are constitutional or not.

An examination of the complaint will show that it contains no averments that the defendants are continuing the alleged unlawful combination, or that they threaten to continue it in the future. All the allegations are in the past tense and relate to transactions which were completed. The objection [**624] was made in the oral argument and in the briefs that for this reason the complaint stated no cause of action [***46] for injunctive or equitable relief.

The objection has been but little discussed in the oral argument or the briefs, possibly because the defendants may have thought that the defect could be easily remedied by amendment. Nevertheless the objection is squarely presented and we cannot disregard it.

It is the basis of plaintiff's claim that the action is in equity to prevent an unlawful combination from continuing wrongful acts to the detriment of the public, and that the other relief is incidental to their purpose. Proceeding on the theory that an equitable cause of action is stated, it is prayed that the court retain jurisdiction to annul and cancel certain charters and licenses and grant judgment for money damages against the defendants. The relief prayed is not mandatory in its nature, but preventive.

It is elementary that in such cases there should be allegations of threatened wrong doing, or at least that the defendants [*376] are continuing the mischief sought to be remedied. 1 Joyce, Injunctions, §§ 40, 41a; 1 High, Injunctions (3d ed.) § 628; 22 Cyc. 927; 10 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 947, 948; Diedrichs v. N.W. U. R. Co. 33 Wis. 219; Church v. Joint School Dist. 55 Wis. 399, 13 N.W. 272; [***47] 2 Beach, Eq. Jur. § 645.

We regard the rule as so well settled that injunctive relief of the kind here sought cannot be given in the absence of such allegations as have been pointed out that we must hold that the complaint fails to state a cause of action for injunctive relief. To hold otherwise would reverse former decisions of this court and set a precedent we are unwilling to establish. If the facts which are necessary to supply the defect exist, they could be stated in a single short paragraph and the complaint amended if counsel for the plaintiff so elect.

It might be urged that although the complaint fails to state a cause of action in equity it does state causes of action at law and therefore is not subject to a general demurrer. If the demurrer were to be overruled on this theory it would be necessary to sustain it on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action, since it is only on the ground that the action is equitable in its nature, stating a single cause of action, that we hold that there is no misjoinder of causes of action.

Including reply briefs, six different briefs have been filed, for the most part relating to other objections than the one last discussed. Under [***48] all the circumstances it has seemed best to consider these other objections so that if the litigation should be continued it would not be unnecessarily delayed.

The result of the decision is that there is no misjoinder of causes of action; that the action was brought under proper authority; that the statute in question was legally enacted; that it is constitutional; that for the reasons stated the complaint fails to state a cause of action for injunctive relief, but is subject to amendment.

By the Court.--The order appealed from is reversed, and [*377] cause remanded with directions to sustain the demurrer and for further proceedings according to law.

Dissent by: ROSENBERY

Dissent

---

ROSENBERY, J. (dissenting). I cannot concur in the view that there is no misjoinder of causes of action. It is my opinion that secs. 1791j to 1791m, Stats., inclusive, create a new right and prescribe the remedy therefor. By a long line of decisions it is held that where a new right is created and the statute creating the right prescribes the remedy, the remedy so prescribed is exclusive. Chicago & N.W. R. Co. v. Railroad Comm. 162 Wis. 91, 155 N.W. 941; State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 122 Wis. 534, 100 N.W. 964, ***49] and cases cited.

Conceding, as the court holds, that the plaintiff's main primary right is that created by sec. 1747e, and that in an action to restrain the continuation of an unlawful combination as defined in that section the court may award judgment visiting upon the guilty parties the legal consequences of their guilt as defined in that section and provided in succeeding sections, the right to forfeit the charter of a Wisconsin corporation does not arise under sec. 1747e or the succeeding sections, but under secs. 1791j to 1791m, inclusive, so that while a single unlawful act may give rise to two distinct causes of action arising under different laws, it does not warrant the joinder of those causes of action. If the provisions relating to ouster contained in secs. 1791j to 1791m, inclusive, were included in secs. 1747e and 1747f, a different result might follow, but the legislature has seen fit not to include these provisions in a single act and it has seen fit to prescribe a specific remedy for the right created by secs. 1797j to 1797m, inclusive.

ESCHWEILER, J. (dissenting in part). Because the complaint sets forth facts and relies ***50 upon statutory provisions upon which are sought several, distinct, and separate forms of relief such as would support and require separate and independent [*378] causes of action, I am convinced that the demurrer on the ground of improper joinder of several causes of action should have been sustained.

A motion for a rehearing was denied, with $ 25 costs, on October 16, 1923.

---

End of Document

State ex rel. Thompson v. Nashville R. & L. Co.

Supreme Court of Tennessee, Nashville

December, 1924, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

151 Tenn. 77 *; 268 S.W. 120 **; 1924 Tenn. LEXIS 46 ***; 24 Thompson 77

STATE ex rel. THOMPSON, ATTY. GEN., v. NASHVILLE RY. & LIGHT CO. et al. *

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from the Chancery Court of Davidson County.--HON. JAMES B. NEWMAN, Chancellor.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

electricity, plant, power company, Railway, public utility, manufacture, contracts, domestic, Railroad, raw material, regulation, lines, common law, combinations, franchises, consumers, River, steam, consolidation, distribute, monopoly, lessen, street railway, Anti-Trust, demurrer, public service corporation, public policy, authorizes, articles, abandon

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electricity Distribution & Transmission > General Overview

International Trade Law > Forfeitures & Penalties > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN1[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

1903 Tenn. Acts 140, which is constitutional, provides that all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view to lessen or which tend to lessen full and free competition in the importation or sale of articles imported into Tennessee or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or of domestic raw material and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed or which tend to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

---

* Headnote. Monopolies, 27 Cyc., p. 902 (1926 Anno).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

1903 Tenn. Acts 140 forbids combinations that lessen or tend to lessen competition in the importation or sale of articles brought into Tennessee or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or domestic raw material, and all arrangements tending to control or reduce the cost to the producer or consumer of any such product or article are declared to be void.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

1887 Tenn. Acts 198 confers power on corporations other than competing railroads to lease and dispose of their property and franchises to others engaged in the same general business and to make any contract for the use, enjoyment, and operation of their property and franchises or any part thereof with any such other corporation of Tennessee or any other state on such terms and conditions as may be agreed on between the contracting corporations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

1907 Tenn. Acts 437 empowers corporations to sell and convey their property and franchises to other corporations engaged in the same general business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Transportation Law > Public Transportation

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

1895 Tenn. Acts 29, § 2 authorizes street-railway companies to purchase the capital stock and bonds of other street railways and to dispose of the same.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

151 Tenn. 77, *77L<sup>2</sup>68 S.W. 120, **120L<sup>1</sup>924 Tenn. LEXIS 46, ***1

1903 Tenn. Acts 406, § 1 empowers railroads and street railway companies to manufacture and distribute electricity from their own plants and from plants acquired by lease or other lawful contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > State Regulation > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

1909 Tenn. Acts 127 authorizes the incorporation of hydroelectric power plants to produce electricity, and § 4 of ch. 127 empowers them to contract with cities and villages, persons, firms, or corporations for supplying them with water, light, heat, electricity, electrical and mechanical power, and any other article or thing that it may produce or handle.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Railroad Commissions

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Contractual Relations & Housing > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Communications Law > Regulators > US Federal Communications Commission > Jurisdiction

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN8 Railroads & Rail Transportation, Railroad Commissions

1919 Tenn. Acts 49 enlarges the powers of the Railroad Commission and changes the name to Railroad and Public Utilities Commission. This amendatory act gives the commission general supervision and regulation of, jurisdiction, and control over, all public utilities and also over their property, property rights, facilities, and franchises including the power to fix just and reasonable individual rates, joint rates, tolls, fares, charges, or schedules thereof as well as commutation, mileage, and other special rates that are imposed, observed, and followed thereafter by any public utility as defined in ch. 49 whenever the commission shall determine any existing individual rate, joint rate, toll, fare, charge, or schedule thereof or commutation, mileage, or other special rates to be unjust, unreasonable, excessive, insufficient, or unjustly discriminatory or preferential howsoever the same may have heretofore been fixed or established. 1919 Tenn. Acts 49 §§ 3, 4.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

HN9 Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

By the terms of 1919 Tenn. Acts 49 no public service corporation can lease its property, rights, and franchises or merge or consolidate with any other utility without the approval of the Public Utilities Commission.

Bankruptcy Law > Procedural Matters > State Insolvency Laws

Energy & Utilities Law > Pipelines & Transportation > Certification & Licenses

Real Property Law > ... > Transfer Not By Deed > Dedication > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Real Property Law > ... > Transfer Not By Deed > Dedication > General Overview

HN10[] Procedural Matters, State Insolvency Laws

1919 Tenn. Acts 49, § 3 declares that the term "public utility" is hereby defined to include every individual, copartnership, association, corporation, or joint-stock company, their lessees, trustees, or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever that now or may hereafter own, operate, manage, or control within Tennessee any street railway, interurban electric railway, traction company, all other common carriers, express, gas, electric light, heat, power, water, telephone, telegraph, or any other like system, plant, or equipment affected by and dedicated to the public use under privileges, franchises, licenses, or agreements heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted by Tennessee or by any political subdivision of it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Rates > General Overview

HN11[] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

1919 Tenn. Acts 49, § 6 provides that no public utility as herein defined shall (a) make, impose, or exact any unjust or unreasonable unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential individual or joint rate or special rate, toll, fare, charge or schedule for any product or service supplied or rendered by it within Tennessee, (b) adopt or impose any unjust or unreasonable classification in the making, or as the basis of, any rate, toll, charge, fare or schedule for any product or service rendered by it within Tennessee, (c) adopt, maintain, or enforce any regulation, practice, or measurement that is unjust, unreasonable, unduly preferential, or discriminatory, and no public utility as herein defined shall provide or maintain any service that is unsafe, improper, or inadequate or withhold or refuse any service that can reasonably be demanded and furnished when ordered by said Commission.

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

Torts > Transportation Torts > Rail Transportation > General Overview

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Certificates of Public Convenience > Issuance

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Certificates of Public Convenience > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Railroad Commissions

**HN12** [+] Governments, Public Improvements

1923 Tenn. Acts 87 enacts that no public utility shall henceforth establish or begin the construction of, or thereafter operate, any line, plant, or system or route in or into a municipality or other territory already receiving a like service from another public utility or establish service therein without first having obtained from the Railroad Commission or the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission or such other commission or board as may be invested with the general powers and duties now exercised by the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission after written application and hearing a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require such construction, establishment, and operation, and no person, firm, or corporation not at the time a public utility shall henceforth commence the construction of any plant, line, system, or route to be operated as a public utility or the operation of which would constitute the same or the owner or operator thereof a public utility as defined by law without having first obtained in like manner a similar certificate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Contracts Law > Remedies > Ratification

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

**HN13** [+] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

1923 Tenn. Acts 87, § 2 provides that the said Commission shall not grant a certificate for a proposed route, plant, line or system or extension thereof which will be in competition with any other route, plant, line, or system unless it shall first determine that the facilities of the existing route, plant, line, or system are inadequate to meet the reasonable needs of the public, or the public utility operating the same refuses or neglects or is unable, or has refused or neglected after reasonable opportunity after notice, to make such additions and extensions thereto as may reasonably be required pursuant to the provisions of 1923 Tenn. Acts 87.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electricity Distribution & Transmission > General Overview

**HN14** [+] Regulated Industries, Energy & Utilities

Water companies organized to distribute water through pipes to consumers, telephone and telegraph companies, which disseminate messages among the people, transportation lines such as railways and trolley lines, which carry passengers, gas companies, electric power companies, and all like concerns do not fall within the purview of the Anti-Trust Act, 1903 Tenn. Acts 140, relating to the production and distribution of articles made from domestic raw material.

Energy & Utilities Law > Regulators > Public Utility Commissions > Authorities & Powers

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > Constructive Trusts

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Energy & Utilities > Utility Companies

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > Resulting Trusts

HN15 [+] Public Utility Commissions, Authorities & Powers

The Anti-Trust Act, 1903 Tenn. Acts 140, does not apply to service rendered by public utilities operating under franchises held in implied trust for the benefit of the community at large pursuant to a grant from the State subject to the power of regulation and control.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

MONOPOLIES. Anti-Trust Act held inapplicable to public utility companies.

Anti-Trust Act (Acts 1903, chapter 140) held inapplicable to public utilities such as electric power companies, in view of Acts 1887, chapter 198, Acts 1895, chapter 29, Acts 1903, chapter 406, Acts 1907, chapter 437, and Acts 1909, chapter 127, relating to and specifying powers of corporations, and Pub. Acts 1919, chapter 49, sections 3, 6, authorizing consolidation of such public utilities companies with approval of the Public Utilities Commission.

Acts cited and construed: Acts 1903, chs. 140, 406; Acts 1887, ch. 198; Acts 1895, ch. 29; Acts 1907, ch. 437; Acts 1897, ch. 10; Acts 1909, ch. 127; Acts 1919, ch. 49, secs. 3, 6.

Cases cited and approved: Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 620; State v. Standard Oil Co., 120 Tenn. 86; Coal Creek, etc., Co. v. Tenn. Coal, etc., Co., 106 Tenn. 651; Knapp v. Golden Cross, 121 Tenn. 212.

Constitution cited and construed: Art. 1, sec. 8; Art. 11, sec. 8.

Counsel: F. M. THOMPSON and JOE V. WILLIAMS, for the State.

BROWN & SPURLOCK, J. M. ANDERSON, W. E. NOWELL, JR., PERCY H. CLARK and J. A. FOWLER, for Power Co.

Judges: MR. JUSTICE COOK, delivered the opinion of the Court.

Opinion by: COOK

Opinion

---

[**120] [*78] MR. JUSTICE COOK delivered the opinion of the Court.

This action is prosecuted by the attorney general on behalf of the State to annul contracts and arrangements of the corporations hereinafter named, upon the charge that they constitute a monopoly in the production, distribution, and sale of commercial electricity contrary to public policy, the common law and the Anti-Trust Act, Chapter 140, Acts of 1903.

The bill seeks a forfeiture of the charters of the defendants who are domestic corporations, and the expulsion from the State of the foreign corporations, because of their conduct. It appears that in 1912 the plan was initiated, which culminated in the monopoly alleged to be in violation of law. About that time the Chattanooga Railway & Light Company, a Tennessee corporation, operating in and about Chattanooga, owned a steam plant [***2] from which it distributed current to consumers, and produced power to operate its street railway system.

Tennessee Power Company, a Tennessee [**121] corporation, constructed hydroelectric power plants, and an auxiliary steam power plant for use in emergency, on the Ocoee river, and a hydroelectric plant on the Caney Fork river [*79] at Rock Island. This company ran its lines into Chattanooga, and was competing with Chattanooga Railway & Light Company.

The Tennessee Railway Light & Power Company, a Maine corporation, was organized as a holding company by persons interested in the two companies named above, and was given control by lodgement of a majority of their voting stock, and by this means the management of both became united under one control, although each maintained a separate identity. The Chattanooga Railway & Light Company then entered into contracts with the Tennessee Power Company to abandon the use of its steam power plant and use power supplied by the Tennessee Power Company. It is charged that the Chattanooga Railway & Light Company abandoned its powers and functions as a public service corporation in respect to its generating plants, when it agreed to abandon [***3] the use of its power plant and let the Tennessee Power Company produce the electricity, and the power company abandoned in part its functions when it agreed that the Chattanooga Railway & Light Company should be left to the exclusive distribution of electricity.

It is further charged that this arrangement eliminated competition in the Chattanooga territory until the construction of a power plant at Hale's Bar, by the Chattanooga & Tennessee River Power Company, a Tennessee corporation. The Hale's Bar plant was completed in 1913, and the Chattanooga & Tennessee River Power Company was engaged in the erection of power lines into Chattanooga when, it is alleged, that for the purpose of suppressing competition, Tennessee Power Company leased the Hale's Bar plant at an annual rental [*80] of $ 600,000, on April 1, 1914. It is charged that in order to present an appearance of competition it was agreed that Chattanooga & Tennessee River Power Company should sell and distribute electricity to consumers in its own name, the Tennessee Power Company agreeing to pay operating expenses incurred by the Chattanooga & Tennessee River Power Company.

The Tennessee Power Company constructed lines [***4] into middle Tennessee, and, on February 1, 1915, Nashville Railway & Light Company, a Tennessee corporation, which owned a steam power plant at Nashville from which energy was distributed to its street railway system, and for lights and power to consumers, agreed to buy electricity from Tennessee Power Company. The Nashville Railway & Light Company agreed to abandon the use of its steam plant, which was to be kept in condition and used as an auxiliary plant under direction of the Tennessee Power Company.

It is charged that this left the distribution of power in exclusive control of the Nashville Railway & Light Company at Nashville under the arrangement to use power supplied from the hydroelectric plants of the Tennessee Power Company for the operation of the street railway and the interurban lines out of Nashville, and for the distribution of current to customers wanting lights and power within this territory; and that the Tennessee Power Company, under these arrangements, was given exclusive control over the production of electricity thereby removing the Nashville Railway & Light Company as a competitor.

Tennessee Railway Light & Power Company, which had voting control of the Chattanooga [***5] Railway & Light Company, [*81] acquired a majority of the stock in the Nashville Railway & Light Company, so that, through the holding company, common interests controlled Tennessee Power Company (which owned the plants on the Ocoee, and the plant on the Caney Fork) and controlled the Chattanooga Railway & Light Company (which owned the Street Railway Lighting & Power System in Chattanooga), and the Nashville Railway & Light Company (which owned the system about Nashville), and, by the lease to the Tennessee Power Company of the Hale's Bar plant, controlled that plant.

In 1922 a new holding company, the Tennessee Electric Power Company of Maryland, was organized, and arrangements were made for it to take over the voting stock or control of Tennessee Power Company, Chattanooga Railway & Light Company, Chattanooga & Tennessee River Power Company, and Nashville Railway & Light Company for the purpose of uniting them under one control. This arrangement gave to the consolidated companies exclusive control over the distribution of electricity in all the cities, towns, and villages within the area covered by their transmission lines. The bill was filed to restrain the consummation of [***6] the plan.

It is insisted on behalf of the State that electricity generated by steam and water power is an article manufactured of domestic raw material, within the terms of chapter 140, Acts of 1903, and that the foregoing arrangements constitute a monopoly in violation of the statute and the common law.

Demurrers were filed by the defendants named above, which challenge the sufficiency of the bill, upon the grounds that the matters therein set forth do not constitute [*82] a violation of either the statute or common law relating to combinations in restraint of trade; that the anti-trust statutes of the State do not relate to public utilities which render service to the public; that no illegal act or agreement of the defendants is shown; that [**122] no reason is given for the long delay in bringing the suit; and that chapter 140, Acts of 1903, is unconstitutional, because violative of article 1, section 8, and article 11, section 8 of the constitution of Tennessee, and the Fourteenth Amendment and other provisions of the federal constitution. Answers coupled with demurrers were filed, proof was taken, and the cause was heard upon a stipulation that the questions raised [***7] by the demurrers should be disposed of first.

The chancellor sustained two grounds of demurrer holding that: (1) The contracts and arrangements set forth in the bill do not constitute a violation of either the statutes or common law of the State relating to monopolies and trusts; (2) that our antitrust laws do not embrace public utilities such as the defendants are shown in the bill to be, and dismissed the bill. The entire record was brought up on appeal. A discussion of all the grounds of demurrer would serve no purpose. The inquiry may well be limited to questions presented by the assignments of error that the chancellor erred:

"(1) In construing Acts of Tennessee for 1903, chapter 140, as not applicable to contracts and combinations entered into for the purpose of and having the effect of, suppressing or lessening competition in the manufacture and sale of electricity generated by steam and water power.

[*83] "(2) In holding (a) that electricity, the manufacture of which requires the consumption of a large amount of coal, is not an article manufactured from domestic raw materials within the terms of chapter 140, Acts of 1903; and (b) that electricity, the manufacture of [***8] which requires the use of water, is not an article manufactured from raw materials within the terms of said statute.

"(3) In holding that Acts Tennessee, 1903, chapter 140, does not apply to public utilities engaged in the manufacture, distribution and sale of electricity manufactured from steam and water power.

"(4) In not holding that on the facts shown of record the contracts arrangements and combinations entered into between the defendants had for their purpose or effect the suppressing or lessening of competition (a) in violation of Acts Tennessee, 1903, chapter 140; (b) the common law of Tennessee; and (c) the declared public policy of Tennessee.

"(5) In holding (a) that the contracts, arrangements, and combinations assailed in the bill were legally approved by the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of Tennessee, and (b) that said Commission could legally approve said acts, all of which violated said chapter 140, Act of 1903.

"(6) In holding that approval by the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, even if validly given, would legalize the contracts, arrangements, and combinations assailed in the bill.

"(7) In failing and refusing to decree the forfeiture of the [***9] corporate charters of defendants Tennessee Power Company, Chattanooga Railway & Light Company, Chattanooga [*84] and Tennessee River Power Company, and Nashville Railway & Light Company, and to revoke the right of defendants Tennessee Railway, Light & Power Company and Tennessee Electric Power Company to do business in Tennessee for their several violations of the Acts of Tennessee, 1903, chapter 140, and the common law and public policy of Tennessee."

The assignments of error present the inquiry of whether electricity and energy distributed in the form of service to the public is an article manufactured of domestic raw material within the meaning of chapter 140, Acts of 1903, and whether the act of 1903 embraces within its terms public service corporations.

Unquestionably the result of the contracts and arrangements above referred to was unity of control in the distribution of electricity within the territory covered by the lines of the Tennessee Power Company, which tended to lessen free competition. HN1↑ Chapter 140, Acts of 1903, which was sustained against attacks upon its constitutionality in Standard Oil Co. v. State, 117 Tenn. 618, 100 S.W. 705, 10 L.R.A.\(N.S.\) 1015; [\[\*\*\*10\] State v. Standard Oil Co., 120 Tenn. 86, 110 S.W. 565, Id., 217 U.S. 413, 30 S.Ct. 543, 54 L.Ed. 817](#) provides:

"All arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, full and free competition in the importation or sale of articles imported into this State, or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or of domestic raw material, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations designed, [*85] or which tend to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void."

This act HN2↑ forbids combinations which lessen or tend to lessen competition in the importation or sale of articles brought into the State or in the manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth, or domestic raw material, and all arrangements tending to control or reduce the cost to the producer or consumer of any such product or article are declared to be void.

The chancellor was of opinion [\[\*\*\*11\]](#) that electricity was not an article of domestic growth, nor an article of domestic raw material such as is contemplated by the act. If it is an article manufactured from domestic raw material the inquiry is presented of whether or not the act of 1903 relates to public utilities; that is, public service corporations or persons engaged in the production and distribution of electricity or other public service. In relation to the matter of public utilities the legislature has declared a policy which does not forbid consolidation of their enterprises, but, on the contrary, authorizes consolidation under strict regulation [\[\*\*123\]](#) and control. This purpose is evinced by chapter 198, Acts of 1887, chapter 29, Acts of 1895, chapter 406, Acts of 1903, chapter 437, Acts of 1907, chapter 127, Acts of 1909, and the acts hereafter referred to establishing the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission.

HN3↑ Chapter 198, Acts of 1887, confers power upon corporations, other than competing railroads, to lease and dispose of their property and franchises to others engaged [\[\*86\]](#) in the same general business, and to make any contract for the use, enjoyment, and operation of their property and franchises, [\[\*\*\*12\]](#) or any part thereof, with any such other corporation of this or any other State, on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between the contracting corporations. Coal Creek, etc., Co. v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 106 Tenn. 651, 62 S.W. 162; Knapp v. Golden Cross, 121 Tenn. 212, 118 S.W. 390.

HN4↑ Chapter 437, Acts of 1907, empowers corporations to sell and convey their property and franchises to other corporations engaged in the same general business.

HN5↑ Chapter 29, section 2, Acts of 1895, authorizes street railway companies to purchase the capital stock and bonds of other street railways and to dispose of the same.

HN6↑ Chapter 406 of the Acts of 1903, section 1, empowers railroads and street railway companies to manufacture and distribute electricity from their own plants and from plants acquired by lease or other lawful contract.

HN7↑ Chapter 127, Acts of 1909, authorizes the incorporation of hydroelectric power plants to produce electricity, and section 4 of the act empowers them to contract with cities and villages, persons, firms, or corporations, for supplying them with water, light, heat, electricity, electrical and mechanical power, and [***13] any other article or thing which it may produce or handle.

When the Anti-Trust Act of 1903 was enacted, public service corporations distributing electric energy, gas, water supply, or those rendering any other public service where a municipality was interested, were subject to some measure of regulation under franchise ordinances of such municipalities. The first now existing legislation [*87] tending toward State regulation and control of a public utility was chapter 10, Acts of 1897, creating the Railroad Commission with power to prohibit unjust discrimination by railroads for service in carrying freight and passengers.

HN8 Chapter 49 of the Acts of 1919 enlarged the powers of the Railroad Commission and changed the name to Railroad and Public Utilities Commission. This amendatory act gave the Public Utilities Commission general supervision and regulation of, jurisdiction, and control over, all public utilities, and also over their property, property rights, facilities, and franchises, including the power to fix just and reasonable individual rates, joint rates, tolls, fares, charges, or schedules thereof, as well as commutation, mileage, and other special rates which shall be [***14] imposed, observed, and followed thereafter by any public utility as herein defined, whenever the Commission shall determine any existing individual rate, joint rate, toll, fare, charge, or schedule thereof or commutation, mileage, or other special rates to be unjust, unreasonable, excessive, insufficient, or unjustly discriminatory or preferential, howsoever the same may have heretofore been fixed or established. Sections 3, 4.

HN9 By the terms of the act no public service corporation can lease its property, rights, and franchises, or merge or consolidate with any other utility, without the approval of the Commission.

HN10 Section 3 of the act declares: "The term 'public utility' is hereby defined to include every individual, copartnership, association, corporation, or joint-stock company, their lessees, trustees, or receivers, appointed by [*88] any court whatsoever, that now or may hereafter own, operate, manage or control, within the State of Tennessee, any street railway, interurban electric railway, traction company, all other common carriers, express, gas, electric light, heat, power, water, telephone, telegraph, or any other like system, plant, or equipment, affected by and dedicated [***15] to the public use, under privileges, franchises, licenses, or agreements, heretofore granted, or hereafter to be granted, by the State of Tennessee or by any political subdivision thereof."

HN11 Section 6 provides: "That no public utility as herein defined shall:

"(a) Make, impose, or exact any unjust or unreasonable unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential individual or joint rate, or special rate, toll, fare, charge or schedule for any product or service supplied or rendered by it within this State.

"(b) Adopt or impose any unjust or unreasonable classification in the making or as the basis of any rate, toll, charge, fare, or schedule for any product or service rendered by it within this State.

"(c) Adopt, maintain, or enforce any regulation, practice or measurement which shall be unjust, unreasonable, unduly preferential, or discriminatory, nor shall any public utility as herein defined provide or maintain any service that is unsafe, improper or inadequate, or withhold or refuse any service which can reasonably be demanded and furnished when ordered by said Commission."

It will be observed that the public policy of the State in so far as it may be ascertained from legislative [***16] declaration, [*89] has been to permit unity of control subject to regulation by the State. This regulation extends to such details as approving contracts and arrangements for the consolidation of public utilities engaged in the same general business.

HN12 Chapter 87 of the Acts of 1923 enacts:

[**124] "That no public utility shall henceforth establish or begin the construction of, or thereafter operate any line, plant, or system or route in or into a municipality or other territory already receiving a like service from another public utility, or establish service therein without first having obtained from the Railroad Commission or the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, or such other commission or board as may be invested with the general powers and duties now exercised by the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, after written application and hearing, a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require such construction, establishment and operation, and no person, firm or corporation not at the time a public utility shall henceforth commence the construction of any plant, line, system or route to be operated as a public [***17] utility, or the operation of which would constitute the same, or the owner or operator, thereof, a public utility as defined by law, without having first obtained; in like manner, a similar certificate."

HN13[<sup>18</sup>] Section 2 of the act provides:

"That the said Commission shall not grant a certificate for a proposed route, plant, line or system or extension thereof which will be in competition with any other route, plant, line or system, unless it shall first [*90] determine that the facilities of the existing route, plant, line or system are inadequate to meet the reasonable needs of the public or the public utility operating the same refuses or neglects or is unable to or has refused or neglected, after reasonable opportunity after notice, to make such additions and extensions thereto as may reasonably be required under the provisions of this act."

The record shows that the recent arrangements and agreements assailed by the bill were approved and ratified by the Public Utilities Commission in conformity with section 6, chapter 49, Acts 1919. It is insisted by the appellant that the Public Utilities Commission had no authority to approve the consolidation of these companies, and that [***18] the chancellor erroneously held that the Commission could, by such approval, authorize the violation of the Anti-Trust Law of 1903, and the common law which forbids monopoly.

In determining this and the other questions presented by the assignments of error we must look to the provisions of chapter 140, Acts of 1903, enacted to prevent monopolies in the production and distribution of articles which pass through processes of barter and trade to the consuming public; and we must consider the legislative declaration relating to persons and corporations engaged in rendering service to the public. HN14[<sup>19</sup>] Water companies, organized to distribute water through pipes to consumers, telephone and telegraph companies which disseminate messages among the people, transportation lines such as railways and trolley lines, which carry passengers, gas companies, electric power companies, and all like concerns do not fall within the purview of the [*91] Anti-Trust Act, chapter 140, Acts of 1903, relating to the production and distribution of articles made from domestic raw material.

It is unnecessary to discuss the question of whether or not electricity is an article of manufacture within the meaning [***19] of a taxing law, or otherwise, when we consider that it is also a power devoted to public service, and that defendants who generate and distribute it are public utilities. It is impossible to reconcile chapter 140, Acts of 1903, which forbids monopolies in articles manufactured from domestic raw material, with those statutes which authorize public utility companies to consolidate their activities under regulation by the State. These divergent lines of legislation cannot be brought together so as to bring the contracts and arrangements of the defendant public utility companies assailed by the bill within the prohibition of chapter 140, Acts of 1903.

Chapter 140, Acts of 1903, comprehends the commonlaw offenses of "forestalling" and "engrossing" directed against conduct that unfairly raises the price of commodities that pass in the channels of commerce to the consuming public. HN15[<sup>20</sup>] It does not apply to service rendered by public utilities operating under franchises held in implied trust for the benefit of the community at large, under grant from the State, subject to the power of regulation and control. The general assembly has committed to the Public Utilities Commission absolute power [***20] of regulation and control over all public utilities such as the companies involved, and, by the express and implied provisions of the statutes above referred to, any principle of the common law that might have otherwise been [*92] invoked is superseded by these legislative declarations.

We find no error in the action of the Chancellor sustaining the two grounds of demurrer set forth above and in dismissing the bill upon the answer of the Nashville Trust Company.

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

State ex rel. Griffith v. Anthony Wholesale Grocery Co.

Supreme Court of Kansas

January, 1925, Decided ; April 11, 1925, Filed

No. 23,098.

Reporter

118 Kan. 394 *; 234 P. 992 **; 1925 Kan. LEXIS 194 ***

THE STATE OF KANSAS, ex rel. CHARLES B. GRIFFITH (substituted for Richard J. Hopkins), Attorney-general, Plaintiff, v. THE ANTHONY WHOLESALE GROCERY COMPANY et al., including THE H. D. LEE MERCANTILE COMPANY, and THE SAMUEL E. LUX, JR., MERCANTILE COMPANY, and THE PITTSBURG WHOLESALE GROCERY COMPANY, Defendants.

Prior History: [***1] Original proceeding in quo warranto; JOHN A. HALL. commissioner. Opinion filed April 11, 1925. Finding for plaintiff; judgment reserved.

Disposition: Judgment reversed.

Core Terms

---

bulletins, prices, wholesale, groceries, attended, meetings, purposes, jobbers, sugar, discounts, percent, salary, member of the association, carrying, selling, grocers, harmony, bonus, food, grocery business, manufacturers, outstanding, customer, letters, prevail, handle, houses, plans, restraint of trade, competitors

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Claims By & Against

Governments > Federal Government > Employees & Officials

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Good motives, or that some good resulted from the action of a combination, do not serve to exonerate parties who do acts prohibited by the statute.

Syllabus

---

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT.

MONOPOLIES--Combinations in Restraint of Trade--Evidence. In a proceeding in quo warranto in which the state alleged that certain wholesale grocery companies had entered into and promoted an unlawful combination to fix and maintain prices of merchandise, restrain trade and prevent competition, evidence was taken before a commissioner, who, after hearings, made findings of fact and conclusions of law to the effect that the charges made by the state had been sustained. On exceptions of defendants that the evidence does not sustain the findings and conclusions made and upon an examination of the evidence, it is determined that defendants entered into an unlawful combination and that their acts in furtherance of the purposes of the combination amounted to a violation of the antitrust statute, which renders them subject to the penalties of the statute.

Counsel: Charles B. Griffith, attorney-general, and John G. Egan, assistant attorney-general, for the plaintiff.

D. R. Hite, T. M. Lillard, Bruce C. Hurd, [***2] O. B. Eidson, John S. Dean, Harry W. Colmery, all of Topeka, Thomas L. Bond, of Salina, and C. O. Pingry, of Pittsburg, for the defendants.

Judges: Johnston, C. J. Burch, J. dissenting. Hopkins, J., not sitting.

Opinion by: JOHNSTON

Opinion

---

[*394] [**992] The opinion of the court was delivered by

JOHNSTON, C. J.: This was an original proceeding in quo warranto brought in the name of the state by the attorney-general, in which he alleged that the Anthony Wholesale Grocery Company and 37 other corporations and partnerships engaged in the [**993] wholesale grocery business in Kansas have maintained and are maintaining an unlawful trust and combination to prevent competition and control the prices, terms and conditions for the sale of groceries in violation of the laws of the state, and asking that each be ousted and prevented from carrying on such unlawful business, and for the imposition of appropriate penalties. Upon an agreement as to the payment of penalties, a judgment has been rendered against thirty-five of the corporations and firms sued, but the H. D. Lee Mercantile [*395] Company, the Samuel E. Lux, Jr., Mercantile Company and the Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Company, still [***3] contending with the state, the action has been continued as to them. Hon. John A. Hall was appointed as a commissioner of the court to hear evidence on the issues formed by the pleadings and make findings of fact and conclusions of law. Evidence was taken and the commissioner has filed his report, in which he finds that the contesting defendants and each of them had joined in forming and maintaining an illegal combination of capital, skill, and of doing acts alleged by plaintiff which are condemned by the antitrust statute, and hence each is subject to penalties to be determined by this court. Each of the defendants excepts to the findings and conclusions of the commissioner, insisting that the evidence does not warrant the findings of fact or the conclusions of law. Much of the testimony offered to sustain the charges of wrongdoing by the defendants centered about an organization designated as the Missouri and Kansas Wholesale Grocery Association, organized about May 20, 1913. This association included in its membership and supporters the thirty-eight defendants sued, and a few others whose places of business were outside of the state and who were not sued because summons could not [***4] be served upon them within the state. The association had no constitution or by-laws, but had a secretary and treasurer, Harry E. Sloan, who was directly in control of the organization. The expense of maintaining the organization with its various activities was met by assessments upon its members and those deriving benefit from its existence and operations. The secretary gathered information from the members of the business done and methods employed, he issued many bulletins and circulated them among the members and contributors, wrote letters to them giving advice as to cooperation, customs, practices and prices, and kept the members in touch with each other. With other officers, he called meetings of the association, where these subjects were discussed and courses of action determined. The ostensible purposes of the association were:

"First. To foster and promote a feeling of fellowship and good will among its members and on broad and equitable lines to advance the welfare of the wholesale grocery trade of the United States.

"Second. To oppose improper methods and illegitimate practices inimical to the right conduct of business that honest and open competition may prevail.

[**5] "Third. To promote harmonious relations among manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers in order that food products may be placed in the hands of consumers at the lowest possible cost.

[*396] "Fourth. To assist in the enactment and enforcement of federal and state pure-food laws that in their operation shall deal justly with the rights of consumers and the trade, and of effective weights and measures statutes for the protection of the public.

"Fifth. To promote the adoption and enforcement throughout the United States of uniform laws upon commercial subjects.

"Sixth. To disseminate useful information and maintain high standards of education among members with respect to the scientific and practical features of their business.

"Seventh. To have business conducted upon lawful and proper lines, and to correct evils, including 'schemes,' 'deals,' 'lotteries,' 'premiums,' and the subsidizing of jobbers' salesmen.

"Provided, That in the efforts of the association to accomplish these ends, no action shall be taken that will tend in any manner whatsoever to fix or regulate prices or in any way operate in restraint of trade."

The avowed purposes of the association [**6] were unobjectionable. They included purposes to foster and promote a feeling of fellowship and good will among its members; to oppose improper methods and illegitimate practices inimical to the right conduct of business, in order that honest and open competition may prevail and that food products may be placed in the hands of consumers at the lowest possible cost; to assist in the enforcement of federal and state pure-food laws, disseminate useful information and maintain high standards of education among members with respect to the scientific features of their business, and also added, as we have seen:

"That in the efforts of the association to accomplish these ends no action shall be taken that will tend in any manner whatsoever to fix or regulate prices or in any way operate in restraint of trade."

The testimony which related mainly to transactions and practices occurring in 1918 and afterwards, to and including 1920, covered a wide range of activities, including bulletins, letters, speeches, discussions, reports, and from it all the commissioner concluded that the three defendants during a named period in 1920 were in a trust and composed a combination of capital, skill and acts [**7] for the following purposes:

"1. To create and carry out restrictions in trade and commerce within the state of Kansas.

"2. To carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of the business of buying and selling groceries within the state of Kansas.

[**994] "3. To increase the price of groceries and merchandise to the public within the state of Kansas.

"4. To prevent competition among the members of the Missouri-Kansas Wholesale Grocers Association and the H. D. Lee Mercantile Company in [*397] the purchase and sale of groceries and merchandise within the state of Kansas.

"5. To fix standards and figures whereby the price to the public should be controlled and established as to groceries and merchandise within the state of Kansas.

"6. To make, enter into, execute and carry out obligations through meetings, reports and bulletins to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves in the sale of groceries and merchandise within the state of Kansas."

These findings were followed by others with reference to the connection of the defendants with the association, the contributions made by them towards its maintenance and the conduct and participation of each.

[***8] We will first consider the purposes of the association as an organization as shown by bulletins, letters, statements and the conduct of officers, and those taking a more or less active part in promoting its plans and purposes. The bulletins of Secretary Sloan were sent to members and contributors at irregular intervals of from one to three weeks. These covered a great variety of subjects, including market conditions; necessity for harmony and cooperation among the members; suggestions of prices to be charged for several articles; admonitions as to keeping prices up so as to secure profits and against the cutting of prices; excoriations of the actions of the food administration and fair-price committees acting for the federal government; calls for and reports of meetings of the association; appreciation of his advance of salary from $ 7,500 per year to $ 12,500, with a bonus of $ 5,000 for the preceding year, designed to be collected by increased assessments of members and contributors to the association. A few of the excerpts from his bulletins, letters and reports, as well as statements of other participants, follow. In a call for a meeting he said:

"I think this is a very important [***9] meeting, and I think that all of the jobbers of Missouri and Kansas should attend it. We are not calling a general meeting, because it is by nature a zone meeting of those who are interested in general conditions as pertain to the Missouri river. I think that everybody should attend. Somebody must establish a life-saving station for the wholesale grocer. It goes without saying that some have been disposed to unload canned tomatoes, canned salmon, and even canned corn, and are urging sales upon free deals, freight allowance, and following the gamut of general demoralization."

In another bulletin reference is made to the sale of tobacco, and of salesmen whose strength lies in price alone, and he follows:

"Now it is an obvious fact that one man's Star tobacco is as good as another's, and price will take the business. It is also equally obvious that no [*398] house or salesman can make a sou markee in net profit by selling listed goods at a cut price. Therefore the salesman who is building for the future will doubtless face the time when he will be compelled to yield a certain volume of business to be the cutter. It has been so in the past and will be so in the future."

In another [***10] he said:

"Milk fever is accompanied with severe pains and throbbing in the head, flushing in the face, thirst, heat and dryness of skin. There seems to be an epidemic of it among the wholesale grocers in Kansas City. The severe pains are caused chiefly by the matter of price. Carnation milk, for instance, is being sold at $ 7 per case. That causes the pains to prevail both among those who have it and those who are liable to catch it, because it is very contagious. The flushing of the face occurs when you ask a sufferer wotenell he does it for. Thirst prevails because there isn't anything any more to quench it with except a little water. The pulse is full (lucky pulse), the tongue furred, bowels costive, and light and sound are painful. It is indeed true that the sound of the price is extremely painful. The best treatment consists in cooling saline purgatives and good ventilation."

A member of the association asked the secretary to send certain classifications showing what items should be one per cent and what ones two per cent. The secretary responded, saying:

"Complying with your request of the 19th, I am sending you twenty-five copies of the latest classification, and upon which [***11] all jobbers in this territory are working."

Speaking of sugar and a resentment of the actions of federal attorneys and fair-price committees in telling them how to run their business, as to sugar he said:

"The only well-established market cost which seems at this writing to prevail is that of the cane refiner's; namely, $ 15 f. o. b. refinery. On this basis granulated sugar is sold to the retail trade at $ 16.75 f. o. b. It would be easy to get 20c. for it, but it is sold on a 'reasonable' basis. The retailer is selling it at 19c. to 20c. to the consumer. Where jobbers were driven in desperation to pay 16c., 17c. and 18c. for sugar, they have simply added a fair profit to the cost."

In another part of the bulletin he said:

"Based upon the cost to-day of granulated sugars, actual sales of which are booked by refiners at $ 15 f. o. b., the market is as follows: Based on granulated $ 16.75 Missouri river, the difference in freight rates figures as follows: Salina, Arkansas City, Emporia, Fredonia, Hutchinson, Junction City, Manhattan, McPherson, Topeka, Wichita, Winfield and all points taking a rate of 65.8--granulated, $ 16.85. Missouri river points and all markets taking a rate [***12] of 57.3--granulated, $ 16.75. Dodge City--granulated, $ 17.00. Concordia--granulated, $ 16.90. [**995] This price is based upon the margins set by the [*399] fair-price committee. Straggling lots of southern and other higher-cost sugars must be figured on their own basis."

He further tells the members that a certain company has pinched off the jobber's profit on Jello and advises them that they do not allow this to pass without protest.

As to Cream of Wheat he suggested:

"You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink. You can suggest, but your suggestions may fail to carry conviction. An article which may be designed to be forced through your hands on a margin less than the cost of handling is apt to meet a barrier. A manufacturer must feel ashamed of his brand if he doesn't feel that it should pay its fair proportion of the cost of distribution. Either that or he is afraid of it in competition. Cream of Wheat costs $ 8.10. The least it should bring is $ 9.25. Suggestions seem to be in order."

In another bulletin reference is made to canned goods and the sixty-day guaranty against swells. He tells them that the sixty-day limit should be enforced, and that:

[***13] "Nothing which was ever adopted has served so well its purpose as the sixty-day limit, and if you have any inclination toward cold feet or carelessness on this proposition, I advise you to tighten up and make the rule rigid. Use the sticker."

In the sticker it is stated that no credits will be given after the expiration of sixty days, and no goods returned without written authority from the dealer.

In reference to the action of the federal authorities he calls attention to a cartoon in the Saturday Evening Post, in which he says that:

"Honest business' is there represented by a splendid milk cow stampeded and bawling in terror while pursued in frenzy by demagogues, red agitators, tax collectors, radical press and parlor Bolshevik relentlessly driving her as she plunged over the hill to certain doom and destruction, while the cunning fox representing the 'profiteering business' lies snug behind a protecting rock slyly winking his eye as he feasts on a big fat goose. I hope the head price-fixer and all the little price-fixers, as well as all the pallbearers who are restlessly wandering around with corpse of the Lever act to instill fear in the hearts of honest business and break [***14] down the morals of the commercial world, will see that cartoon and profit thereby."

In a call for a meeting the secretary stated:

"You will find enclosed a blank for return of your outstanding accounts for January business. I would consider it a personal compliment if every house receiving this request would comply. Please pass the blank on to your credit department with instructions to fill it out and mail it to this office. Our Monthly Financial Bulletin, under the caption of 'Dry Figures,' we find is [*400] eagerly sought and carefully read, and each house can make it more complete and of greater value by sending in their figures. Comment and suggestions are also solicited. I am asking, further, on this blank, for your stock turnover during the year of 1919. I hope to hear from all."

One of the defendants responded, stating that--

"Enclosed you will find financial report as per your request."

That company was written by the secretary, stating:

"Last month you failed to send a report of your outstanding accounts. Would it be asking too much to have you fill out the enclosed blank and mail it to me, covering January business? You understand that I am not trying to mix [***15] in your private affairs, and I don't think you think so, but I do find these comparative reports are of great interest all over the country and I am anxious to have a report 100 per cent pure on January."

In reply the company stated in a letter:

"This is in reply to your letter of February 3 asking for our report. Now, I sent you this report yesterday and wish to say that we are always willing to cooperate with you. We are taking a great deal of interest in this and want to tell you that we will be at the meeting February 12 and get better acquainted."

In a report of an address made by the secretary of a meeting, the method of dealing with outstanding accounts was treated. It was said:

"The method we pursue in our credit men's meetings is to take up the names of offending customers who are chronic infringers on the discount limit. If we find that some house is selling a certain customer we are having trouble with, we bring up the name of that customer, find out who are selling him. If we find three or four houses selling him we will stop this customer from taking excess discount or excess time."

With reference to the method of allowing discounts, the speaker further said:

"After [***16] talking the matter over it was considered best to bring this before the general meeting and to ask of you a reaffirmation of the principles with regard to the terms and discounts that had been previously adopted by this association, to the end that if there had been any slipping that we should go back to our sane basis."

In respect to the price fixing of federal authorities, the president remarked at a meeting:

"It seems to me, gentlemen, we can't get any definite basis on this sugar proposition. The best thing to do is to do what we have been doing--go along and do the best we can--let each one interpret these rules for himself. If anybody has more sugar than he can handle at a profit his neighbor will doubtless be willing to take it off his hands."

[*401] In respect to handling corn products, reference was made by a speaker to the fact that the jobbers in the states of Texas, Arkansas [**996] and Oklahoma sold without restrictions when they came into Kansas. The reply of the secretary was:

The Oklahoma jobbers tell me they handle corn products which they buy on the old scale list and they don't realize over 7 per cent profit on it. The line between Arkansas and Oklahoma, [***17] and Missouri and Kansas divides two selling departments of the corn products company; one is handled by one man, one handled by the other. The system is different. In this northern territory we buy on the zone system. We buy at a list price. Jobbers up in this territory take the profit that is allowed on the list; that makes 10 per cent and 3 1/2 per cent where you are making 7. This is one thing I have up in correspondence now, suggesting that if it is good for the North it must be good for the South.

"MR. CRANE: Are Missouri and Kansas satisfied?

"THE SECRETARY: Absolutely."

In another bulletin the members were told:

"Cane sugar cannot be sold at less than a 15c. cost basis, and your Eastern sugars must of course be sold on 16c. cost basis. Ain't it L? Each jobber, therefore, at the present time must figure out his selling price and see that he makes a reasonable profit. Uniformity cannot prevail when the situation changes with the arrival of each car of sugar."

In reference to sugar, a bulletin referred to a zone meeting to be held which members were invited to attend. In it the secretary stated:

"That in case you were unable to attend, I will issue a bulletin following the [***18] meeting which you will understand will give an outline of the decision arrived at there. I thought I would advise you of this so that if anything may come to you the latter part of the week you will understand it is based upon this conference, although of course it would be better if you could personally attend."

Smithmeyer, president of the association, was president of the Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company, and in a letter addressed to the managers of branch houses of the Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company at Emporia and Topeka he referred to a meeting which had been held the day before, in which he said:

"So many different prices from various sections were reported that it was impossible to satisfy everybody in regard to selling prices. So it was deemed best to try and make a uniform price, at least in this particular zone, of $ 18 per bag, f. o. b. Missouri river basis, and we believe that most of the jobbers interested in this particular territory will be billing sugar on this basis. . . . In this mail we are inclosing copies of suggested selling prices on canned fruits and vegetables; also on a few dried fruit and bean items. You will note that [*402] we will have to change [***19] a few items on which we are either too high or too low, and we expect to go over our books to-day and to-morrow and make the necessary changes in order to be in line with our competitors."

The president stated in another letter, in respect to the secretary's salary, that:

"In view of the fact that this past year Harry has enabled us, through his efforts and advice, to realize some handsome profits on several important items, it seems to, me that we should show our appreciation by giving him a bonus, for the current year, of $ 5,000. I also believe that for next year he should be put on a salary basis of $ 15,000 per year."

In a letter to another grocer the president stated in relation to the compensation of the secretary:

"I am quite sure that you know enough about association work to understand that if we are working in harmony and everything is going along nicely that all of us will be much better off than if the opinions are divided. I cannot help but think that the assessments for association expense are, after all, but a slight matter. As long as we are able to work together we can accomplish a good deal."

In the same letter he stated:

"While one or two of the larger houses [***20] at Kansas City have not enrolled as members, I find that they are all contributing toward the expense of the association. In fact, I know positively that two of them pay regularly $ 50 every time that there is an assessment made. So I thought I would tell you this so that you may know all of the Kansas City houses that amount to anything are affiliated anyway with our Missouri-Kansas Association."

In another letter the president, speaking of the increase of salary for the secretary, said:

"There is no denying the fact that through his efforts and advice we have been able to secure a much better margin on quite a number of items--and the principal one of which, of course, is sugar--than we would have if he had not almost insisted on our asking a profit over replacement values. Of course you know all about this, and there is no need of my going into this matter with you in a letter. . . . Now, Brad., you know what we must strive for and try to maintain is harmony in our organization, for, after all, the salary proposition and possibly a few extra assessments during the year do not amount to much. As long as we can maintain a good and harmonious feeling among all of our members and [***21] also have our secretary feeling that he is appreciated, we can accomplish something. So I feel quite sure that unless you object very strongly that we will have no trouble in convincing them that they are getting this association service on a mighty cheap basis. The expense will not amount to 1c. per bag on sugar, and I do not anticipate great objections from anyone regarding a few extra assessments."

In a letter by one of the managers of the Theo. Poehler Mercantile [*403] Company to another manager of a branch house of the same [**997] company, with reference to putting new prices into effect, he wrote:

"Don't you think we are making a mistake, however, in not getting our pineapple prices in line with what our competitors are getting? Fred will recall that we practically promised these other fellows at the time that we would line up with these pineapple prices, and it looks to the writer that we are apt to get in bad with these friendly competitors if we break faith with them by not lining up. There were some other items also on which we agreed at the Kansas City meeting to put up our prices, but on which it seems Lawrence decided afterwards not to raise its prices."

[***22] In another letter of the same writer, with reference to a meeting which had been attended by him and the president, he stated:

"At that time we had occasion to 'compare notes' with some of these other jobbers, and we found that our prices on pineapple were way too low as compared with those being quoted by our competitors. Mr. Smithmeyer and the writer made a note of these differences and decided to raise our prices in line with those shown by the new Topeka price-book pages."

In a bulletin of the secretary, reference is made to a pancake flour and the discounts to be allowed on it. Reference was made to a letter which expresses appreciation for the discount of 15 per cent to be deducted at the time the invoice was paid:

"All pancake manufacturers are allowing 2 per cent with the exception of the manufacturers of 'Aunt Jemima.' . . . If you recede from your former discount terms it will simply mean that every institution will do likewise, and the wholesale grocery trade will be penalized the exact difference in discount terms."

There was also in the bulletin a statement with reference to price cutters. It was said:

"The customer who is unreasonable in his views is of course an [***23] undesirable one. The sooner he is eliminated from the calling list of the salesman the better. Those making unjust claims, abusing their credit, or those who are not fair in their purchases, continually playing one jobber against another, are all undesirable. While there will always be some jobbers willing to gamble a little on these, yet as time goes on their numbers will grow less."

The president stated, in a meeting, that the secretary had succeeded in cutting down the percentage of outstandings very materially. He said:

"The monthly reports are a great help and ought to be an inspiration to all of us to do still better in way of prompt collections. The retailers will be benefited if they are advised to settle two or three times each month and take advantage of discounts. In former years some of the houses have allowed so-called 'harvest terms.' I think this practice tends to demoralization [*404] and should not be started this season. You will all sell just as many goods on regular terms."

In a report of a meeting, resolutions passed, among other things, declared:

"That this association records itself in favor of the following allowances:

No. 2 labels	$ 2.00 per M.
No. 2 1/2 and No. 3 labels	2.50 per M.
No. 10 short length labels	2.50 per M.
No. 10 full length labels	4.50 per M."

[***24] At a meeting held, one of the speakers, it is reported, stated with reference to tobacco:

"Just now there is a scourge of the tobacco bug. Why it is so the most eminent doctors of business disagree. No sovereign remedy has as yet been discovered, and it continues to blight and kill the profit account. Those who contract this disease suffer fearfully, and the more so because it is in a measure self-inflicted. While there seems to be no permanent cure, yet there is a sure preventive. That preventive is to simply stick to list. Those who adopt it are happy, healthy, wealthy and wise. There was one little thing which came into universal favor the past year and which I have been told saved a great deal in time and trouble and money. I refer to the little sticker 'Guarantee Against Swells,' which has done so much to curb the return of outlawed canned goods and limited liability to sixty days."

In another report reference was made to the monthly comparison of outstandings published. It was said:

"It is a feature well worthy your support, and I hope that every house will respond to the call and fill out the necessary blank each month. These reports and the bulletins carrying them are widely [***25] read throughout the country, and the local associations of many states are engaged in exactly similar work as are we. Thus it brings to bear an enormous country-wide pressure on the wholesale grocery business to establish its transactions and terms of payment closer and closer to a cash basis, and as time goes on this feature of your association work will prove to be of recognized value to you all."

In a bulletin report was made of an annual meeting at which upwards of 85 per cent of the membership was present, and where it was unanimously voted--

"That as a testimonial of his services the past year, a cash bonus of $ 5,000 be given to our secretary, Harry E. Sloan, and that his salary for the present fiscal year be increased to $ 12,500."

It was further ordered that a distinct assessment be made upon each member for the purpose of raising the bonus.

Some effort was apparently made to conceal any action which might be considered as a violation of the antitrust law. The president [*405] asked one of the speakers in respect to taking individual action in communications that passed between the different jobbers. The speaker responded:

"One man can't conspire, and two can. Two [***26] or more people together asking a certain manufacturer for anything might be considered in restraint of trade and as coercion. Individually [**998] you can do anything you want to, collectively you can't."

The president responded:

"It seems to me, then, to be a clear case of doing the necessary thing at the proper time, and unnecessary as well as unwise to pass a resolution or take any concerted action. We ought to all understand the matter sufficiently now to take proper action at the proper time."

In a bulletin relating to sugar and of the action taken at a meeting it was said:

"The future looks none too bright to me, although I am not as well posted as others. The full discussion we deem best not to reproduce, nor take up your time or the space in this report. Most of you heard it and the balance have good imagination."

In another report made by the secretary of an annual meeting he said:

"Policies are launched and ideas are reduced to concrete form. Individual action for the benefit of the whole is crystallized into harmony simply from the fact that men grow to understand each other. . . . There is still some important aftermath which will be passed on to you in due time, [***27] and of course those who were deprived of the privilege of personal presence will understand that there was much discussion which could not be covered in this report, and I would suggest to those that they take the opportunity of interviewing their neighbors who did attend."

The president, in writing a letter relating to the action of the association, stated:

"I do not care to go into details in a letter, and of course you will understand my reasons for not doing so, but I suggest that you refer this matter to your son Lee. I suggest doing this, inasmuch as Lee has attended a number of the meetings and is probably more familiar with what has occurred during the last six or eight months in the way of the activities of our association."

In a letter to another the president, after discussing what had been accomplished through the effort and advice of the secretary, said:

"Of course you know all about this and there is no need of my going into this manner with you in a letter."

[*406] At a meeting the president stated:

"Any further questions? If not, we will now go into executive session, and I would request that all nonmembers retire for the time being."

Among other things, [***28] it was shown that the association took concerted action to drive five packing companies out of the grocery business. It appears that an action was brought by the United States in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against these companies to enjoin them from doing a number of things, including the carrying on of the wholesale grocery business. By consent of the parties, a decree was entered which recited that the defendants asserted innocence of any violation of the law, but not desiring to be in a position of antagonism to the government, stipulated that the decree might be entered enjoining the carrying on of the wholesale grocery business on condition that their consent should not be considered as an adjudication that the defendants had in fact violated any law of the United States. After the rendition of the consent decree the packing companies withdrew from the wholesale grocery business. While steps taken to eliminate competitors and limit competition generally should be regarded as contrary to law, not much can be built on this feature of the case, since the judgment enjoining the companies from selling groceries has been rendered. To some extent it carries the implication [***29] that they were wrongfully engaged in that business and that the association should not be condemned for opposing a wrong, even though it might result in benefit to its members. Its efforts in that behalf did tend to show concerted action among the members of the association. There was considerable more evidence of like import to that stated, but enough has been quoted to show beyond cavil that the association was a combination, that its plan and purpose was designed to and did operate to restrict trade, it did operate to fix and maintain prices of merchandise, and prevent competition, to the prejudice of the public interest and in violation of the antitrust statute. (R. S. 50-101 and succeeding sections.) The validity of this statute has been considered and upheld. (The State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 69 P. 199; The State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 334, 80 P. 639, 84 P. 737.)

It is argued that some of the purposes of the association, as well as those advocated in the bulletins, were wholesome and useful. It is said that the association aided the government food administration, [*407] in that its rulings were given publicity and were promulgated through the bulletins of the secretary, [***30] and that this aid so given was acknowledged by federal officers. The avowed purposes of the association were legitimate, and doubtless some of its plans and practices tended to correct trade abuses and in others the members may have been actuated by good motives. However, HN1 good motives, or that some good resulted from the action of the combination, do not serve to exonerate parties who do acts prohibited by the statute. In International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U.S. 199, 58 L. Ed. 1276, 34 S. Ct. 859, it was said:

"It is too late in the day to assert against statutes which forbid combinations of competing companies that a particular combination was induced by good intentions and has had some good effect." (p. 209. [**999] See, also, Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U.S. 56, 52 L. Ed. 681, 28 S. Ct. 428; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. U. S., 226 U.S. 20, 57 L. Ed. 107, 33 S. Ct. 9; Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U.S. 66, 61 L. Ed. 597, 37 S. Ct. 353.)

In regard to cooperation with and help rendered to the United States food administration, the commissioner has found, and not without evidence, that activities of the association were not in harmony with the federal authorities [***31] nor designed to aid in enforcing their regulations or to assist in the protection of the public; but, on the other hand, they constituted concerted unlawful action on the part of those supporting the association, including the three defendants, to circumvent the plans of the United States food administration and defeat the aims of the fair-price committees.

There remains the question whether the three contesting defendants were so connected with the association or participated in the unlawful combination and acts to such an extent as to subject them to the penalties of the statute. The commissioner found that the letters of the president, Smithmyer, relating to salary and bonus of the secretary of the association, and also the correspondence between officers and managers of the defendant houses maintained by the Theo. Poehler Mercantile Company, did not come into the possession of the defendants, and that they had no actual knowledge of the letters.

First, as to the Samuel E. Lux, Jr., Mercantile Company: It appears to have been a member of the association, paid the assessments for maintaining it, the president attended meetings, took and read the bulletins of the secretary, as well [***32] as the reports made of the meetings. It appears further that President Lux wrote to secretary Sloan for two dozen of the percentage classifications made [*408] by the association, and on the following day the secretary forwarded them to him, saying that they were the latest and the ones upon which all the jobbers in the territory were working. Upon request of the secretary, the president of the company sent to the association a financial report as to the condition of his company. When checked up by the secretary for not sending a report of his out-standings for a certain month, President Lux wrote that he had sent it yesterday, and he also assured the secretary that his company was always willing to cooperate. Through the bulletins, the action taken in meetings of the association which the president of the company attended, and the published reports of action taken at meetings he did not attend, the company was informed as to the purposes of the association and the scope of its operations. It combined with other members in carrying out the illegal purposes of the association and contributed money to further its plans and policies. The commissioner's findings as to the liability [***33] of that defendant is approved.

The Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Company was a member of the association for more than two years, and during that time paid assessments for its maintenance, making payments which aggregated $ 286. It appears that the president of the company attended a number of meetings of the association and received bulletins sent out by Secretary Sloan. He knew of the increase of the salary awarded to the secretary in consideration of the benefits that he had secured for the members, and the company paid it knowing the purpose for which it was being raised. The president of the Pittsburg company denied knowledge of the bonus awarded the secretary for past services and denied combining or conspiring with anyone to restrain or monopolize trade. His company was a member of the association from the beginning, and the evidence shows that he and other officers of his company must have known of the illegal purposes of the association and that they knowingly aided in carrying out those purposes contrary to public welfare and in violation of the statute.

The case of the H. D. Lee Mercantile Company differs from that of the other defendants, as it did not formally become a [***34] member of the association. It received the bulletins of the association and necessarily learned of its plans and to some extent of the scope of its operations. Assessments were paid by the company from time to time for a period of more than two years ending April 27, 1920, [*409] and these amounted in all to $ 375. The payments were made at or about the time that assessments were paid by wholesale grocers that were regularly enrolled as members of the association. It is evident from the amounts paid that the Lee company did not pay assessments on the basis of the business done, and the amounts were not proportionate with those paid by some other grocers. A vice president and manager of the company attended one of the meetings of the association, and the testimony is that no representative of the company attended any other meeting. The vice president stated that he attended the meeting because he desired to hear a report that was to be made there by an officer of the federal food administration. In his testimony H. D. Lee said that he took the bulletins and paid for them, the same as he purchased and paid for other bulletins which conveyed information as to the state of the market, [***35] the conditions of business, and also because they contained information about the rulings of the federal authorities. He expressly denied that his company had intended to or in fact had ever joined with anyone in fixing a uniform standard of prices or the terms and conditions of sales [**1000] of grocers or had done any act tending to restrain trade. He further stated that he did not receive the reports of meetings, but the bulletins contained reports of some of the meetings and also contained notices of future meetings, which indicated the business to be considered at such meetings. These bulletins revealed the purposes and operations of the association, and one reading them would be blind, indeed, that did not see that the design was to procure concert of action as to maintaining standard prices, obtaining certain discounts from manufacturers, fix uniform rates of discounts for cash on sales of groceries to retailers, and to stifle competition. With this knowledge the Lee company contributed money for the maintenance of the association and the carrying out of these purposes. The means for maintaining the association and promoting its purposes were derived from the assessments [***36] paid. Although the company did not subscribe its name on the membership roll or formally become a member, it actually became a part of the combination by its contribution and the help it rendered in furthering the plans of the combination. There is a claim that the contributions were personal to Secretary Sloan and were merely paid for the editorials contained in the bulletins; but it appears that when the association voted a bonus to the secretary and made a large increase in his salary, the Lee company increased [*410] the amounts of its assessment as did the members and other supporters of the combination. The assessment paid by the Lee company at that time was double the amounts which it had previously paid. The fact that one of the unlawful combination which took part in the wrongful acts was not as active in furthering the unlawful scheme as others in the combination does not relieve that one from the consequences of the violation of the statute, nor will the fact that the combination did not effect a complete monopoly excuse the conspirators if that which was done tends to restrain trade and deprive the public of the benefits of free competition. ( [The State v. Smiley, \[\*\*\*37\] supra; The State v. Aikins, 83 Kan. 792, 112 P. 605.](#))

Upon the testimony we conclude that while the H. D. Lee Mercantile Company did not enroll as a member of the association, it did form a part of the unlawful combination and substantially aided in furthering the prohibited acts which constitute a violation of the statute. No findings or conclusions were made by the commissioner as to the relative responsibilities of the several defendants or the penalties to be imposed and judgment to be rendered against these defendants, nor was any consideration given to this feature of the case in the briefs of counsel. It is now determined that the findings of the commissioner that each defendant acted in violation of the antitrust statute are approved, and the case is reserved for later consideration after the views of counsel have been presented as to what the ultimate judgment fixing the liabilities of the several defendants shall be.

Dissent by: BURCH

Dissent

---

BURCH, J. (dissenting): I dissent from the findings so far as they affect the H. D. Lee Mercantile Company and the Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Company.

HOPKINS, J., not sitting.

A. B. Small Co. v. Lamborn & Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

October 21, 22, 1924, Argued ; March 2, 1925, Decided

No. 100

Reporter

267 U.S. 248 *; 45 S. Ct. 300 **; 69 L. Ed. 597 ***; 1925 U.S. LEXIS 371 ****

A. B. SMALL COMPANY v. LAMBORN & COMPANY

Prior History: [****1] ERROR TO THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

ERROR to a judgment of the District Court in favor of the plaintiff, Lamborn & Co., in an action brought to recover the difference between the contract price of sugar sold by plaintiff to defendant, and the amount obtained by the plaintiff on resale, the defendant having refused to accept delivery.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

seller, buyer, delivery, sugar, contracts, resales, quantities, refinery, dealers, pounds, resold

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Demurrsers

Transportation Law > Intrastate Commerce

HN1[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, prohibits restraints and monopolies in interstate and foreign commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

There is nothing in the Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, which invalidates a collateral contract or relieves the buyer from his obligation under it. It is only where the invalidity is inherent in the contract that the Act may be interposed as a defense. With that exception the remedies which the Act provides for violations of it are exclusive.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

The rule for testing the direction of a verdict is that where the evidence is undisputed, or of such conclusive character that if a verdict is returned for one party, whether plaintiff or defendant, it will have to be set aside in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, a verdict may and should be directed for the other party. The view that a scintilla or modicum of conflicting evidence, irrespective of the character and measure of that to which it is opposed, necessarily requires a submission to the jury has met with express disapproval in Georgia, as in many other jurisdictions.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Headnotes

---

Contract -- mutuality -- terms subject to seller's approval. --

Headnote:

A provision in a contract for sale of sugar, "Terms and withdrawal subject to the approval of seller's credit department," does not destroy mutuality of the contract, where it follows provisions that buyer might require deliveries or withdrawals prior to the time fixed by the contract, if seller was in a position reasonably to make them, and payment was to be cash before delivery, or cash in seven days, with a discount in either case.

Contract -- mutuality -- provision for interruption by war. --

Headnote:

A provision in a contract for sale of sugar that if the supply of raw material to the refinery manufacturing the sugar should be interrupted by war conditions, embargoes, strikes, or other like causes, and if delivery was thereby prevented, seller should not be responsible, does not make delivery optional with seller, so as to destroy the mutuality of the contract.

Monopoly -- application of Anti-trust Act to intrastate transaction. --

Headnote:

The Federal Anti-trust Act does not apply to transactions between contracting parties located in the same state, which required shipment from and delivery to points so located.

Monopoly -- effect of purchase from one violating Anti-trust Act. --

Headnote:

That a seller of sugar is a member of a combination to raise the price of such commodity in interstate commerce does not render invalid a purchase from him at the fixed price by one not a party to the combination, nor other than a stranger to it.

Evidence -- sales of sugar -- effect on fairness of resale. --

G ī ÁNĘĘĘG İ FĘG İ LÁ ÁUĘĘĘDĘĘĘHÉEELA J ÁSĘĘĘA JÍ FĘĘĘ JÍ LAFJG ÁNĘĘĘSÓYQAHÍ FĘĘĘ

Headnote:

In an action to hold a buyer of sugar who breached his contract liable for the difference between the contract and resale prices, evidence is not admissible of particular sales effected about the time of the resale, which were in relatively small quantities, and have no bearing on the fairness of the resale.

Trial -- when verdict directed. --

Headnote:

When the evidence is undisputed, or of such conclusive character that, if a verdict was returned for one party, it would have to be set aside, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, the court should direct a verdict for the other party.

Sale -- reasonableness of time for resale. --

Headnote:

A delay of eleven and thirty-three days before effecting resales of 300 barrels of sugar upon buyer's refusal to accept them is reasonable as matter of law, where the market was unsettled, with few buyers, and diligent efforts were made to effect sales, while the buyer, although notified, failed to afford assistance.

Syllabus

1. Contracts for the sale of sugar considered and held free from the objection that they made delivery optional with the seller and therefore lacked mutuality. P. 250.
  2. In an action by the seller on an intrastate contract for the sale and delivery of goods owned by the seller and title to which passed to the buyer unrestricted under the contract, the buyer can not defend upon the ground that the seller was party to a combination to manipulate interstate trade in goods of that kind in violation of the Anti-Trust Act and made the contract during the life of the combination and in conformity with standards sanctioned by it. It is only when the invalidity is inherent in the contract itself that the Act may be interposed as a defense to it. P. 251.
  3. Defenses based on §§ 4, 5 and 6 of the Lever Act, held insufficient on grounds stated in Small Co. v. Am. Sugar Co. ante, 233. P. 252.
  4. The duty of a seller of goods, in reselling on account of the buyer, is to sell fairly in a reasonably diligent effort to obtain a good price; the test is not whether he got the highest possible [****2] price or as much as others got in particular instances. P. 253.
  5. Evidence of particular sales held rightly rejected in the circumstances. Id.
  6. Where the evidence is undisputed, or of such conclusive character that if a verdict were returned for one party, whether plaintiff or defendant, it would have to be set aside in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, a verdict should be directed for the other party. P. 254.
  7. The view that a scintilla or modicum of conflicting evidence, irrespective of the character and measure of that to which it is opposed, necessarily requires a submission to the jury, has met with express disapproval by this Court and by many others. Id.
  8. Evidence held to establish conclusively that resales of goods, made by the vendor, were made fairly and within a reasonable time. P. 254.

GUÍ ÁMEÉG Í FÉG Í LÁÍ ÁUÉDÁHEÉHÉLÁ JASÓAÉ JÍ FÉH JÍ LAFJGÍ ÁMEÉSÓYÓÁÍ FÉH

Counsel: Mr. Edgar Watkins, with whom [***3] Mr. Frederick T. Saussy, Mr. Mac Asbill and Mr. Horace Russell were on the brief, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Orville A. Park, with whom Mr. Archibald B. Lovett was on the brief, for defendant in error.

Judges: Taft, Holmes, Van Devanter, Brandeis, Sutherland, Butler, Sanford

Opinion by: VAN DEVANTER

Opinion

---

[*249] [**301] [***598] MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

On April 30 and May 7, 1920, the parties to this case entered into contracts for the sale by one and purchase by the other of 450 barrels of refined sugar, to be shipped by the seller from a refinery at Port Wentworth, Georgia, to the buyer at Macon, in the same State, between July 15 and October 1. Late in July, 150 barrels were shipped, accepted and paid for. About that time the market price began to decline and continued downward for the rest of the year. Late in August the seller shipped 150 barrels more, but when it reached Macon the buyer refused to accept it, suggested that it be stored "for the benefit of whom it may concern," which was done, and notified the seller that any further shipment would be similarly refused. Correspondence followed in which the seller sought to persuade the buyer to adhere to [***4] the contracts. Late in September, before the expiration of the time for completing delivery, the seller notified the buyer that, if [*250] [***599] the refusal to conform to the contracts was continued, the remaining 300 barrels, which included the 150 stored at Macon, would be resold for the account of the buyer and the latter would be held for the difference between the contract price and what was realized on the resale. The buyer persisted in the refusal and the sugar was resold.

This action was brought by the seller to recover from the buyer the difference between the contract price and the amount obtained on the resale. In the District Court a verdict and judgment were given to the seller; and the buyer brought the case here on direct writ of error, a constitutional question being involved.

One defense interposed by the answer was that the contracts were wanting in mutuality and therefore void. A demurrer to the defense was sustained, and this is assigned as error. Two clauses in the contracts are cited as making delivery optional with the seller, and therefore showing a want of mutuality. But in our opinion the clauses are not open to that construction. The contracts, signed [***5] by both parties, evidenced an agreement by the seller to deliver the sugar within a designated period at a fixed price, as well as an agreement by the buyer to take the sugar and to pay the price. They contemplated that the buyer might be accorded the privilege of calling for special deliveries, known as "withdrawals," during the prescribed period, if the seller was in a position reasonably to make them. And they contained alternative "terms" of payment -- "Cash before delivery less 2%, or cash in seven days less 2%." The clauses in question then followed. One was, "Terms and withdrawal subject to the approval of the seller's credit department." Read in the light of established practices in the sugar trade, this clause meant that, when a shipment was made, the seller's credit department was to elect which of the alternative terms of payment should apply, and also that, if the buyer called for special deliveries, known as "withdrawals," [*251] that department was to determine whether such deliveries reasonably could be made and was to approve or disapprove them accordingly. The clause was essentially subsidiary and entirely consistent with the seller's definite agreement to [***6] make delivery within the period prescribed. The other clause was to the effect that, "if the supply of raw material of the refinery manufacturing the sugar" should [**302] be interrupted by war conditions, embargoes, strikes, or other like cause, and if delivery was thereby prevented, the seller should "not be responsible." There is nothing in this clause which affords any basis for saying that delivery was to be optional with the seller. On the contrary, it recognizes that he was obligating himself to make delivery. Its evident and only purpose was to relieve him from liability in the event that performance of the obligation was prevented by particular circumstances, in their nature beyond his control. It is idle to suggest, as was done in argument, that the clause would permit him to avoid delivery by merely selecting a refinery which by reason of war conditions, embargoes or strikes was already cut off from a supply of raw material. That would not be within either the letter or the spirit of the clause, but would be a palpable fraud and unavailing. Slater v. Savannah Sugar Refining Corporation, 28 Ga. App. 280, 284.

GUÍ ÁMÉRÍG Í FLÁÍ ÁMÉRÍG HECÍTÉ HECÍA JASÓAÉ JÍ JJLÁFJGÍ ÁMÉRÍSÓYÓAÍ FÁAÍ

The answer set up a special defense based on HN1 the Anti-Trust [****7] Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, prohibiting restraints and monopolies in interstate and foreign commerce. A demurrer to the defense was sustained and the ruling is assigned as error. But it was plainly right. In the first place, the contracts pertained only to intrastate commerce. They were negotiated in Georgia; the sugar was to be delivered from a refinery at Port Wentworth and shipped to Macon, both in Georgia; and no facts were alleged showing that interstate or foreign commerce was [*252] affected. In the next place, and independently of the character of commerce involved, it was not shown that the contracts were in themselves invalid under the Anti-Trust Act, but only that they were collateral to a combination prohibited by it. In substance, the defense was that the seller and others had entered into a combination to manipulate interstate trade in refined sugar with a view to increasing the price; that the contracts were made during the life of the combination; and that the seller conformed the terms of sale to standards sanctioned by the combination. There was no allegation that it was not the owner of the sugar; nor any allegation that the buyer was a [****8] party to the combination or other than a stranger to it. The contracts disclosed the full transaction between the [***600] seller and buyer and contemplated that the sale should pass the title without any restriction on the right of the buyer to resell as it might choose. As has been pointed out in prior cases, HN2 there is nothing in the Anti-Trust Act which invalidates such a collateral contract or relieves the buyer from his obligation under it. Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U.S. 540, 550-552; Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight, 212 U.S. 227, 257-259; Wilder Manufacturing Co. v. Corn Products Co., 236 U.S. 165, 177. It is only where the invalidity is inherent in the contract that the Act may be interposed as a defense. With that exception the remedies which the Act provides for violations of it are exclusive. Wilder Manufacturing Co. v. Corn Products Co., supra, 172, 175; Paine Lumber Co. v. Neal, 244 U.S. 459, 471; Geddes v. Anaconda Mining Co., 254 U.S. 590, 593.

The answer also interposed a number of special defenses based on sections 4, 5 and 6 of the Lever Act, c. 53, 40 Stat. 276; c. 80, 41 Stat. 297, and on particular orders [****9] and regulations issued under it. These defenses were held insufficient on demurrer -- some on the ground that a part of the Lever Act was in conflict with the due [*253] process of law clause of the Fifth Amendment. Some of the defenses were like those considered and rejected in Small Co. v. American Sugar Refining Company, just decided, ante, p. 233; and what was said of them there suffices to dispose of them here. The want of merit in the others is so obvious that they do not call for special notice. While the ruling on them is assigned as error, no attempt to support them is made in the brief.

The sugar which was resold by the seller for the account of the buyer consisted of 105,000 pounds -- the 52,500 pounds stored at Macon and a like quantity remaining at the refinery. The market at that time was unsettled. Wholesale dealers had an oversupply, and retail dealers were buying cautiously and in small quantities. Nevertheless the prices realized on the resales equaled the full market price for that general region for quantities such as were resold. The 52,500 pounds stored at Macon was resold October 11th and that at the refinery November 3d. In both instances [****10] the defendant was advised of the price offered by the intending purchaser and was given an opportunity to secure a purchaser at a better price, but none was brought in. A resale of the 52,500 pounds at the refinery was negotiated October 15th, but through some delay in transportation it was not consummated. Another sale was then negotiated and was completed November 3d at a little higher price.

The defendant offered to prove by wholesale dealers in Macon the prices received by them on particular sales to retail dealers about the time of the resales; but the testimony was rejected, and we are asked to say that this was error. We think the ruling was right. The particular sales were in relatively small quantities, many of them under 300 pounds, and had no probative bearing [*303] on the fairness of the resales. The real question, as stated in Small Co. v. American Sugar Refining Company, supra, was whether the resales were fairly made in a reasonably [*254] diligent effort to obtain a good price, and not whether the plaintiff got the best possible price, or as much as others got in particular instances. The unsettled state of the market and the difference between selling [****11] small quantities to retail dealers to satisfy immediate needs and selling large quantities to wholesale dealers who had an oversupply made is necessary to confine the evidence to the real question.

G Ì ÁMÈÉG I ÉEG I LÁ I ÁUÉÓÉHEÉÉHCHÀ JÁSÉDÀÉ JÌ ÉÉÉÉ ÉELÁJGÍ ÁMÈÉSÓYQÁH FÉÉÉFF

On the conclusion of the evidence the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff; and the remaining question is whether this was error. The defendant insists that it was, because it took from the jury the question whether the resales were made within a reasonable time. The period for delivery under the contracts expired September 30th, and the court ruled that the duty to resell within a reasonable time arose at that time, which was practically conceded. One of the resales was made October 11th. Another was negotiated October 15th but fell through, and an effective one was made November 3d.

HN3 [↑] The rule for testing the direction of a verdict, as often has been held, is that where the evidence is undisputed, or of such conclusive character that if a verdict [***601] were returned for one party, whether plaintiff or defendant, it would have to be set aside in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, a verdict may and should be directed for the other party. The view that a scintilla or modicum [***12] of conflicting evidence, irrespective of the character and measure of that to which it is opposed, necessarily requires a submission to the jury has met with express disapproval in this jurisdiction, as in many others. Improvement Company v. Munson, 14 Wall. 442, 448; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall. 116, 122; Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U.S. 16, 18; Anderson County Commissioners v. Beal, 113 U.S. 227, 241; Delaware, etc. R. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U.S. 469, 472.

We are of opinion that the evidence as set forth in the record conclusively established that the resales were [*255] made within a reasonable time. The state of the market was such that it was difficult to make any sales; and the quantities to be sold enhanced that difficulty and also the need for care. The witnesses for the plaintiff described with much detail the efforts which were made, and the evidence as a whole reasonably admitted of no other conclusion than that the efforts were timely, well directed and persistent. Many bids were received, but almost all were so low that their acceptance would have meant a great sacrifice. The defendant was notified of the purpose to resell, [***13] but made no effort to advance it in point of time or to bring in a purchaser at an acceptable price. Considering the state of the market, the outcome appears to have justified both the time and care taken by the plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

---

End of Document

Vandell v. United States

Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit

March 2, 1925

No. 100

Reporter

6 F.2d 188 *; 1925 U.S. App. LEXIS 1989 **

VANDELL et al. v. UNITED STATES

Prior History: [**1] In Error to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of New York.

Core Terms

---

conspiracy, dynamite, passengers, explosion, commerce, railway company, indictment, interstate, tracks, transportation, warned

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Double Jeopardy

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Double Jeopardy > Attachment Jeopardy

Criminal Law & Procedure > Commencement of Criminal Proceedings > Double Jeopardy > Collateral Estoppel

HN1[] Procedural Due Process, Double Jeopardy

It often happens that a defendant can be punished in both the United States and the state courts, and a conviction in one is not a bar to prosecution in another.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

A conspiracy under the Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, remains a conspiracy punishable under the laws of the United States, without regard to the position or status of the offenders. A conspiracy by striking employees becomes a federal offense under the law, whenever that conspiracy necessarily and directly impedes the channels of interstate commerce. The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, makes the conspiracy an offense against the national law.

Opinion by: MANTON

Opinion

---

[*189] Before HOUGH, MANTON, and HAND, Circuit Judges.

MANTON, Circuit Judge. The indictment charged that the International Railway Company was engaged in interstate commerce in its operation of an electric railway between the city of Buffalo, state of New York and the city of Niagara Falls, in the province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada, and that it was engaged in carrying freight and passengers in such interstate and foreign commerce. It set forth that the plaintiffs in error, with others, in violation of the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies (26 Stat. 209 [Comp. St. § 8820 et seq.]) did willfully and feloniously engage in a conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states and with foreign nations, to unreasonably obstruct, retard, restrain and impede, and interfere with and stop transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of such freight and passenger service. It alleges that it was part of the conspiracy to, on the 17th of August, 1922, obstruct, wreck, and destroy the track, roadbed, and [*2] roadway of the said International Railway Company at the village of Elwood, county of Erie, N.Y., by means of exploding dynamite, whereby the electric trains thus employed in transporting passengers and baggage traveling from states of the United States to the province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada, was interfered with, because the tracks were damaged and demolished. It was further alleged that it was part of the conspiracy to intimidate employees of the said International Railway Company, so that by intimidation and coercion they would not continue working for the railway company, and thereby prevent them from performing their duties to this common carrier so engaged in interstate and foreign commerce.

Six overt acts were set forth, the principal among them being the theft of dynamite from an arsenal in the city of Lockport; the storing and keeping of it in the city of Buffalo; placing it upon the tracks of the railway company in the village of Elwood and causing the explosion. In support of the indictment, there was evidence sufficient for the jury's consideration and supporting the verdict of guilty, showing that in the months of June, July, and August, 1922, excursionists from [*3] various states of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, Washington, and Maryland passed over this railway, going to Niagara Falls, N.Y., and into the Dominion of Canada, upon through tickets. At this time there was a strike of the railroad employees. In August, 1922, 20 boxes of dynamite, of 50 pounds each, were stolen by a defendant (who was not on trial) and transported by Reilley from the city of Lockport to the city of Buffalo, N.Y., and Reilley and Breese placed the dynamite upon the tracks in the village of Elwood. On August 17, 1922, passengers boarded the cars of the International Railway Company at Buffalo on their way to Niagara Falls, and when passing through Elwood, N.Y., the cars were derailed by reason of an explosion of the dynamite, which had taken place on the tracks on which the cars were running. The evidence shows that Reilley, Smith, Vandell, and others were parties to the theft of this dynamite; that it was transported in automobiles by them and other defendants named in the indictment, who were not on trial, to the scene of this explosion. After the dynamiting, Reilley, in the presence of Breese, stated to witnesses that they had just dynamited [*4] the High Speed Line, saying: "We pulled off a job and we pretty near got caught. The motorcycle cop got after us."

There is evidence that an officer did pursue the plaintiffs in error, who were in an automobile, after leaving the scene of this explosion, having placed the dynamite on the tracks. Breese admitted to a witness that he took part in this dynamiting, and said that the strikers could win if the people were kept from riding on the cars and they had "a few more blow-ups like the one on the High Speed Line." When told that people were hurt on the night of the explosion, he replied: "Yes; there were. They were warned before they got on those cars, and if they had all been killed it would have served them right." It appears that, at the time some of the passengers boarded the cars, unidentified persons passed among the passengers and warned them against riding on the cars. There was testimony that in July, 1923, Reilley and Breese were passing the scene of the explosion in an automobile, and when one of the passengers remarked that "there is where the accident happened," Reilley replied, "Yes," and the speaker said, "What was your idea for doing it?" to which Reilley replied, [**5] "They had no proof that I done it;" and further, "Why, didn't you realize that human bodies was on that car? Did you figure your own folks being on it, your own mother?" to which Reilley replied, "I didn't give a God damn." There was sufficient to circumstantially establish a conspiracy as charged and the overt acts in carrying [*190] out its purposes. The theft of the dynamite, its transportation to Buffalo, its concealment, the explosion, flight on the part of the defendants from the scene of the explosion, and the various admissions referred to, fully warranted the trial court in submitting this question to the jury. Each of the defendants who stand convicted are sufficiently connected by the proofs with the commission of the crime.

Various errors are assigned. We shall note those which have been argued. The International Railway Company is a common carrier and engaged in interstate commerce. International R. C3. v. Davidson, 257 U.S. 506, 42 S. Ct. 179, 66 L. Ed. 341; International R. Co. v. United States, 238 F. 317, 151 C.C.A. 333. It is argued, however, that the indictment sets forth a substantive offense, which, by the laws of the state of New York, is a felony, [**6] and that the lesser offense of conspiracy is merged in the greater, and it is submitted that therefore the indictment is bad, because the offense of conspiracy is merged in the felony as set forth in the overt acts of the indictment, and that there may be no prosecution in the national courts. This argument may not prevail. The defense of conspiracy to violate the federal statute is in no way affected by the fact that what was done in furtherance of that conspiracy was an offense against the state sovereignty. Conspiracy may be a crime in one jurisdiction and a complete offense in another. The District Court of the United States is not ousted of jurisdiction because the defendants may also have violated a law of the state of New York. HN1[↑] It often happens that a defendant can be punished in both the United States and the state courts, and a conviction in one not a bar to prosecution in another. United States v. Lanza, 260 U.S. 377, 43 S. Ct. 141, 67 L. Ed. 314.

It is next argued that there is not sufficient set forth in the indictment to constitute a violation of the statute. But the provisions of the Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, apply to all classes without exception. [**7] It is intended to punish alike monopolies of capital and acts of labor, whenever interstate trade is thereby directly restrained. HN2[↑] A conspiracy under the act remains a conspiracy punishable under the laws of the United States, without regard to the position or status of the offenders. Gompers v. Buck's Stove Co., 221 U.S. 418, 31 S. Ct. 492, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L.R.A. \(N.S.\) 874; Duplex Printing Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 41 S. Ct. 172, 65 L. Ed. 349, 16 A.L.R. 196; United States v. Railway Employees' etc. \(D.C.\) 283 F. 479. A conspiracy by striking employees becomes a federal offense under the law, whenever that conspiracy necessarily and directly impedes the channels of interstate commerce. In re Debs, 158 U.S. 564, 15 S. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092; United States v. Cassidy \(D.C.\) 67 F. 698; United States v. Elliott \(C.C.\) 64 F. 27. Indeed, the Sherman Act makes the conspiracy an offense against the national law. Knauer v. United States, 237 F. 8, 150 C.C.A. 210; Ryan v. United States, 216 F. 13, 132 C.C.A. 257.

Two witnesses testified that, before the train started, they saw a man walking around among the passengers, and heard him say something would happen to the train, and warned [**8] passengers not to board the cars. This testimony was admitted, subject to connection. It was subsequently connected sufficiently by the testimony of a witness who said that the plaintiff in error Breese stated: "They were warned before they got on those cars, and if they had all been killed it would have served them right." It thus appears that this plaintiff in error had knowledge of the giving of the warning, and that made the circumstance of its having been given competent evidence in the establishing of the conspiracy. The order of proof was discretionary with the trial court. Spencer v. Read, 217 F. 508, 133 C.C.A. 360.

Complaint is made of the latitude given to counsel for the government in his examination. One of the witnesses was permitted to testify on his cross-examination whether he had ever heard the union officials advise violence, and on redirect examination he was asked if he had ever heard the same officials condemn this explosion after it had taken place. In view of the question asked on cross-examination, it was proper to permit this question on redirect. Mahoning Ore Co. v. Blomfelt, 163 F. 827, 91 C.C.A. 390.

6 F.2d 188, *190LÁ925 U.S. App. LEXIS 1989, **8

A careful examination of this record satisfies [**9] us that, of all the errors assigned, there is none warranting our reversing the judgment of conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

---

End of Document

Mission v. Richards

Court of Appeals of Texas

June 10, 1925, Decided

No. 7379

Reporter

274 S.W. 269 *; 1925 Tex. App. LEXIS 604 **

CITY OF MISSION v. RICHARDS.

Subsequent History: [**1] Writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction November 11, 1925.

Writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction

Core Terms

---

rent, rental contract, city hall, purposes, premises, moving picture, rental, lease, fire equipment, monthly installments, ultra vires

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

HN1 Exemptions & Immunities, Exempt Cartels & Joint Ventures

In order to constitute a trust, within the meaning of the antitrust statute, there must be a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more.

Counsel: Miss Zac Drummond and Dawson, Henry & Walker, all of Mission, for appellant.

McDaniel & Bounds, of McAllen, for appellee.

Judges: COBBS, J.

Opinion

---

[*269] Appellee sued appellant, in the district court of Hidalgo county, to recover the balance due on a rental contract. The cause of action was based upon an alleged rental contract claimed to have been entered into by and between appellee, Richards, and appellant, city of Mission, acting through its mayor, H. F. Bishop, on or about the 2d day of July, A. D. 1921., and to begin on the 18th day of July, A. D. 1921, and to continue in force up to and including July 17, A. D. 1923, for a certain building then owned by appellee, Richards, and used by him as a moving picture theater, and located on lot No. 6 and the east 5 feet of lot No. 5, all in block 159, as per map of the city of Mission. Said alleged rental contract further stipulated that, as consideration for the rental of said building, the city of Mission should pay to the appellee, Richards, the sum of $ 2,400, payable in 24 monthly installments of $ 100 each, on the 18th day of each month, from [**2] July, A. D. 1921, to July, A. D. 1923.

Appellee, Richards, admitted that all monthly installments provided in said alleged rental contract had been paid up to and including the installment due and payable on the 18th day of April, A. D. 1922, but alleged that on the 18th day of May, A. D. 1922, appellant, city of Mission, breached said alleged rental contract by refusing to pay the remaining monthly installments, aggregating the sum of $ 1,400, and appellee in this suit sought to recover of appellant this sum.

Appellant, city of Mission, answered by general demurrer, special exceptions, and general denial, and especially answered that said alleged rental contract was void by reason of being onerous, burdensome, unreasonable, and unilateral; was an attempt on the part of the city of Mission to lend its credit to private individuals for private purposes, and in behalf of private enterprise; that it was an attempt on the part of the city of Mission [*270] to appropriate from the funds of said city and expend said funds in the interest of private persons and on behalf of private enterprise; that it is in conflict with the antitrust laws of this state, in that it is a contract [**3] in restraint of trade; and that said alleged rental contract is ultra vires, in that the city of Mission, by and under its charter powers, had no authority to expend the moneys from the treasury of the city for the purpose of owning or the renting of a moving picture theater or show, or other place of amusement, as provided by the terms of said alleged rental contract.

The cause was tried before the court without the aid of a jury, and on the 10th day of November, A. D. 1924, judgment was rendered by the court in favor of appellee, Richards, and against the appellant, city of Mission, for the sum of $ 1,268.34, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. thereon from date of judgment until paid, and for all costs of suit.

At the request of appellant the court made and filed the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

"I find as a fact:

"(1) That on the 2d day of July, A. D. 1921, E. G. Richards, plaintiff in this cause, and the city of Mission, a municipal corporation, defendant, entered into a valid rental contract for the rental of all of lot 6 and the east 5 feet of lot No. 5 in block No. 159, city of Mission, Hidalgo county, Tex., excepting two certain dressing [**4] rooms reserved by E. G. Richards for storage, and the building thereon. That said rental contract was for the lease of said premises by the said E. G. Richards to the city of Mission for a period of time from July 18, 1921, to July 17, 1923. That by the terms of said contract the city of Mission agreed to pay the said E. G. Richards, as rental for said premises, $ 2,400 in 24 monthly installments of $ 100 each.

"(2) That said premises were suitable for and were rented by the city of Mission for the purpose of a city hall and the storage of its fire equipment, and that same were used by the said city of Mission for said purposes until the same were abandoned by it.

"(3) That the city of Mission abandoned the said premises on May 18, 1922, having paid 10 monthly installments of the rental therefor up to said time, and thereafter failed to pay any further installments upon said premises, and that it failed to pay 14 of said installments, amounting to $ 1,400.

"(4) That the city of Mission notified the said E. G. Richards that it would not use said premises further, and by reasonable diligence the said E. G. Richards afterwards received $ 251.05 as rental upon said premises.

"(5) That [**5] $ 2,400 for said period was a reasonable rental for said premises.

"(6) That said city of Mission did not rent said premises for moving picture show purposes, but that it did rent same for a city hall and to store its fire equipment.

"(7) That the consideration for said contract between the city of Mission and the plaintiff, E. G. Richards, was not that the said E. G. Richards would not enter the moving picture show business.

"Conclusions of Law.

"The plaintiff, E. G. Richards, ought to recover of the defendant, city of Mission, $ 1,400, as same matured in monthly installments on June 18, 1922, and each month thereafter up to July 18, 1923, together with interest on each installment from maturity thereof to the date of judgment at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and that there should be deducted and credited thereon the sum of $ 251.05, together with interest thereon from May 18, 1922, to date of judgment at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum; that the said city of Mission had full power to make said contract, and that same was for a valuable consideration and valid in every particular."

There was no further request made or bill of exceptions filed attacking same. It [**6] will be presumed that appellant is satisfied with the truth of the findings made.

The contract having provided for a 2 years' lease, with the payment of $ 100 per month by the city, it was not error for the court to hold under the evidence that the $ 2,400, provided for in the written contract for the entire period, was a reasonable rent. We overrule the proposition.

If the city had the right to lease the property for its city hall, municipal and other governmental purposes, the benefits to arise therefrom were a matter for its determination. It was proper for the city, if it saw proper and in its interest, to sublet parts to other tenants for private business purposes which in no way interfered with the orderly and free and independent use thereof in the administration of its affairs, and no one can be heard to complain. The finding of the court, that the city of Mission rented said property for a city hall and to store its fire equipment and other things in a part thereof, and not to engage in the moving picture show business, will not be disturbed because it is justified by the evidence.

It would not affect the question in the least that the property had been theretofore used [**7] for exhibiting moving pictures, because the effect was to stop one movie show and permit another to go ahead with its shows without any competition. If, as claimed, the mayor would not have rented the property for municipal purposes at all, had it not been his purpose to cut down competition in the movie business by getting rid of all but one competitor for the time being, still that would not of itself render the contract illegal. This is a simple rental contract for the city's necessary use of property for governmental purposes, and the city, just like any person, could sublet the property for a revenue, with the consent of the lessor, for lawful purposes. Suppose it was the purpose of the city in renting the property, to put one movie show out of business, it would not follow that a trust was created thereby.

While there are several parties and several [*271] matters contained in the one contract with appellee and Smith, it in no way affected appellant's rights based upon separate consideration from that of the city of Mission and Richards, the contract between Richards and Smith related to certain matters pertaining to the moving picture show business; while the part [**8] relating to the city of Mission and Richards was merely in respect to a contract for the rental of a building to the city of Mission.

It was understood at the time the lease was made that the city of Mission intended to lease a part of the building to Nick D. Polemanakos, and that Nick D. Polemanakos would pay to the city of Mission the sum of $ 50 per month. The testimony of Mr. Bishop, former mayor, was that they did enter into a contract with Mr. Polemanakos. He was shown a contract or some paper by the attorney for the city of Mission, and he recognized it as the contract that the city of Mission entered into with Polemanakos on the same day. Mr. Bishop also testified that he did not, and it was not their intention, to spend any of the city's money for the benefit of some private enterprise or for the benefit of Polemanakos or H. E. Smith. Bishop also testified that this property was rented for the purpose of having a city hall and fire house for the city of Mission.

It is not ultra vires for the city of Mission to rent a city hall and place to store its fire equipment; it is not ultra vires for the city of Mission, for the purpose of securing such hall, to rent a building, [**9] although said building might be larger than was necessary for said purpose; and it is not ultra vires for said city of Mission to sublet a part of same; and it is not ultra vires for the city of Mission to have in contemplation at the time of such lease that it would sublet a part of same, for the reason that all those things were done for the legitimate and proper purpose of enabling the city to secure a proper and desirable city hall and place to store its fire equipment. The city is not shown to have paid anything with reference to the moving picture show business. It did not lease any moving picture equipment. That was all excepted from the lease. It did not operate a moving picture show nor contemplate doing so.

The city of Mission had a very undesirable place in a tin shop for its city hall and needed a better place. H. E. Smith and others seem to have, according to the contract, gone out and suggested to the city of Mission that it could get this building for a city hall and a place to store its fire equipment, and it seems that the said Smith must have made some agreement with the city of Mission, not with the appellee (and it is not shown that the appellee was connected [**10] therewith), that, if the city of Mission would rent this building, a contract would be entered into whereby Polemanakos or H. E. Smith would pay the city of Mission $ 50 per month, and such contract was entered into, that all being done. The city of Mission was already paying $ 35 per month for city hall and fire equipment, and had a very undesirable place. By the increase of $ 15 per month they got a desirable place, and this court must presume that they made a good contract with their subtenant, who was to pay them $ 50 per month, according to the testimony.

Such an agreement violates no antitrust law of this state. Gates v. Hooper, 90 Tex. 563, 39 S.W. 1079:

HN1 [↑] "In order to constitute a trust, within the meaning of the statute, there must be a "combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more.' 'Combination,' as here used, means union or association. If there be no union or association by two or more of their "capital, skill or acts,' there can be no "combination,' and hence no "trust.' When we consider the purposes for which the "combination' must be formed, to come within the statute, the essential meaning of the word "combination,' and the fact that a punishment is prescribed [**11] for each day that the trust continues in existence, we are led to the conclusion that the union or association of "capital, skill or acts' denounced is where the parties in the particular case designed the united co-operation of such agencies, which might have been otherwise independent and competing, for the accomplishment of one or more of such purposes."

See Dannel v. Sherman Transfer Co. \(Tex. Civ. App.\) 211 S.W. 297.

The obligation of the city to pay rental is not within the inhibition of article 11, §§5 and 7, of the Constitution of Texas, because it is an ordinary current expense. Dallas Electric Co. v. City of Dallas et al., 23 Tex. Civ. App. 323, 58 S.W. 153; City of Tyler v. Jester & Co., 97 Tex. 344, 78 S.W. 1058.

We cannot agree with counsel for appellant that the city was acting beyond the scope of its authority or that it comes within the rule of ultra vires. Nor do we see any element therein that makes it violate the anti-trust laws.

Seeing no reversible error assigned, the judgment is affirmed.

McConnon & Co. v. Ralston

Court of Appeals of Texas

June 18, 1925, Decided

No. 3098

Reporter

275 S.W. 165 *; 1925 Tex. App. LEXIS 677 **

MCCONNON & CO. v. RALSTON ET AL.

Core Terms

---

territory, dealer, products, trial court, anti-trust, outright, belongs, selling, prices, agency contract, good will, privileged, encroach, depends, sales, words

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Breach of Contract

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Business Transactions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Whether a contract establishes a sales or agency contract, not violative of the Texas antitrust statutes, Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796 et seq., depends largely upon the circumstances of the case and, therefore, becomes one of fact to be decided by the trial court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Covenants not to Compete

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The elimination of competition in a given territory in the sale of goods sold outright to a dealer results in a violation of the Texas antitrust statutes, Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796 et seq.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > General Overview

HN3 [↓] Establishment, Elements

If an agreement is a naked sale outright of products, then is negated any intention of a mere agency agreement.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Reversible Errors

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN4 [↓] Contracts, Sales of Goods

Whether a contract violates the Texas antitrust statutes, Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796 et seq., depends upon the special circumstances of the case; and where a given case shows a mere agency to sell goods, the giving of exclusive territory for selling at the prices fixed by the principal is not a violation of the Texas antitrust law, Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 7796 et seq.

Counsel: [**1] Bulloch, Ramey & Story, of Tyler, for appellant.

Allen, Sellers & Beasley, of Sulphur Springs, and Clark & Clark, of Greenville, for appellees.

Judges: LEVY, J.

Opinion

---

[*165] R. Q. Ralston was sued as principal debtor, and the other appellees as guarantors of the payment, in the sum of $ 915.80 on account of the shipment and delivery of certain goods by virtue of an agreement between the parties. The defendants opposed recovery on the ground that the transaction was in contravention of the anti-trust statutes (Rev. St. art. 7796 et seq.). The trial court decided that the defense should prevail, being sustained by the evidence.

[*166] The question presented is: Do the facts establish a sales or agency contract, not violative of the anti-trust act? It is believed that HN1 [↑] the question depends largely upon the circumstances of the case, and therefore became one fact, to be decided by the trial court. We cannot say as a pure matter of law, in view of the evidence, that the court erred. The evidence warrants the conclusion of the trial court, as we must assume, in support of the judgment, that Ralston agreed, expressly or impliedly, to do two things in order to get the goods [**2] or products. One was to pay the purchase price, and the other to sell the products so purchased only in an allotted territory at retail prices listed to him. Further, the company was not to sell similar products to any other person in that territory while Ralston occupied it.

The effect of such findings, as the trial court was authorized to say, was HN2 [↑] to eliminate competition in a given territory in the sale of goods sold outright to a dealer. In such finding there results a violation of the anti-trust statute. Whisenant v. Shores-Mueller Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 194 S.W. 1175; W. T. Rawleigh Medical Co. v. Fitzpatrick (Tex. Civ. App.) 184 S.W. 549. The evidence, considered as a whole, does not show that the agreement was a mere sales or agency contract. While it is true Ralston was privileged to cancel "the agreement" and "to return the goods, and received credit for them at the same prices which were paid for them," yet in the further facts, the products being sold outright to him, he was privileged to have that method of paying for them, not as an agent or employee, but as "an independent merchant." As affirmatively shown by the letter of appellant to appellee Ralston:

"You are [**3] undertaking the sale of our line for yourself, not for us. In other words, you are not our employee or agent. You are a dealer, very much like a grocer or general storekeeper. We sell our goods at certain prices, and the goods we ship to you belong to you, and not to us. You make on the goods the difference between the price you pay us and the price at which you sell them. In other words, we do not share in the profits on your goods. When you have paid us the price at which we bill the goods, that is all we ask you-all we are entitled to. Likewise we do not share any losses with you."

Further:

"We sell our goods only through our regular dealers. We, of course, ask him not to encroach upon the territory of other dealers, just as we ask other dealers not to encroach upon his territory. We assign each dealer to a certain territory, usually about one county, dependent on size and population. * * * After the dealer has worked up the business in a territory, this territory in a measure belongs to him, and the "good will" of the territory is often valuable, and sells from $ 500 up, dependent on the income it is producing. The good will belongs to the dealer."

HN3[] If the agreement was [**4] a naked sale outright of the products, then is negatived any intention of a mere agency agreement. The facts distinguished the case from McConnon & Co. v Powell (Tex. Civ. App.) 248 S.W. 428. The evidence there authorized the conclusion, and the case turned upon that point, that Powell was merely to do personal service for the company in the selling of its products for it in that locality, receiving one-half of the selling price of the products as his pay. He was merely a sales agent. HN4[] Each case depends upon the special circumstances of the case; and where the given case shows a mere agency to sell goods, the giving of exclusive territory for selling at the prices fixed by the principal is not a violation of the anti-trust law. Brenard Mfg. Co. v. Crowley Mercantile Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 260 S.W. 246; Falls Rubber Co. v. La Fon (Tex. Com. App.) 256 S.W. 577.

We have considered all the assignments of error, and find no reversible error. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

---

End of Document

Gano v. Delmas

Supreme Court of Mississippi, Division B

October 19, 1925, Decided

No. 25035.

Reporter

140 Miss. 323 *; 105 So. 535 **; 1925 Miss. LEXIS 265 ***

GANO v. DELMAS. *

Prior History: [***1] APPEAL from circuit court of Jackson county.

HON. D. M. GRAHAM, Judge.

Action by Claude Delmas against S. A. Gano. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

cement, restraint of trade, market price, barrels, dealer, manufacturer, anti-trust, evidence show, territory, dollars, per barrel, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

All contracts and agreements in restraint of trade are not violative of the Mississippi anti-trust statute; it is only those which are inimical to the public welfare.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Trusts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 [] Sherman Act, Scope

---

* Headnotes 1. Contracts, 13 C. J., Section 427; 2. Sales, 35 Cyc., p. 600.

In the absence of any purpose to create a monopoly the Sherman Anti-trust Act does not restrict the long-recognized right of a trader or a manufacturer engaged in private business freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he would deal, and to announce in advance the circumstances under which he would refuse to sell.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. MONOPOLIES. Provision in contract that, if buyer sold cement purchased, or used any part of it in work other than that described, seller could decline to make further deliveries, held not to violate anti-trust statute.

Plaintiff sold defendant thirty thousand barrels of a certain brand of cement to be used by defendant in performing a public road construction contract, which contract provided, among other things, that the cement "is sold and delivered for use in the work described, and if buyer shall sell or otherwise dispose of any portion of said cement, or use any portion thereof in any work other than that described," the seller should have the right to decline further deliveries of cement. Defendant claimed that the contract was unenforceable, because its operation was to restrain trade in violation of anti-trust statute (sections 5002, 5003, Code of 1906; sections 3281-3285 inclusive, Hemingway's Code). Held: That the contract was not violative of the statute, because its effect was not to unduly and unreasonably restrain trade; that its enforcement was not inimical to the public welfare.

2. SALES. Evidence held to sustain directed verdict for seller of cement suing for breach of contract to buy cement.

Evidence examined, and held, that there was no error in the trial court directing a verdict for plaintiff.

Counsel: Denny & Heidelberg and Harry Gamble, for appellant.

The question raised is whether the contract as sued on was "In violation of the provisions of chapter 88 and chapter 119 of the Laws of Mississippi, 1908, on trusts and combines, and particularly in violation of sections 3281-3283, Hemingway's Code as contrary to the public policy of the state of Mississippi."

I. The appellant's contention is that the contract here sued on is in violation of the provisions of the Anti-Trust Statutes, as shown by the terms of said contract, and expressed in the following language: "The quantity of 'Royal Cement' mentioned on the reverse side hereof is sold and delivered for use in the work described, and if buyer shall sell or otherwise dispose of any portion of said cement, or use any portion thereof in any work other than that described, or assign this contract or any part thereof, or fail to comply with the terms of payment, or any of the conditions and limitations of this contract, or if the [***2] buyer's credit becomes impaired, then in any such event or events, seller may, at his option, decline to make further deliveries hereunder, buyer remaining liable for all unpaid accounts."

If such a contract as this is not in restraint of trade; if it does not hinder and prevent the selling and exchanging of personal property, or an article or commodity of trade that is in every day use, and in this day a necessary and indispensable article of commerce, we are at a loss to understand what kind of an agreement or contract would be in restraint of trade. If said contract, we submit in candor and frankness, is not for the fixing, maintaining and restricting of prices unlawfully and arbitrarily, we cannot conceive of one that would be. 24 R. C. L., sec. 655, page 364; McCall v. Pearson-May-Pberschmidt Co., 107 Miss. 865, 66 So. 274; McCall v. Hughes, 102 Miss. 375, 59 So. 794, 42 L. R. A. \(N. S.\) 63.

So far as we have been able to find there is an unbroken line of decisions from Coke, cited above, to this day, both in England and this country, that any attempted restriction as to the use of personal property bought and paid for, will not be recognized by the court, unless it [***3] be with reference to some particular item or article of personal property of which the intrinsic value thereof is not the real consideration, but refers specifically to heirlooms and articles akin to them. Elijah & Winne v. Mottinger, 142 N.W. 1030, 161 Iowa 361; Brown v. Staple Cotton Co-Op.

Association, 96 So. 849; Kosciusko Oil Mill Co. v. Wilson Cotton Oil Co., 43 So. 435; Y. & M. V. R. R. Co. v. Scales, 85 Miss. 528, 37 So. 942.

Under the common law and the expressed terms of the statute and under the decisions cited above, as to the construction and applicability, it is manifest that the contract here sued on is within the rule as announced by the common law, and in violation of the anti-trust statute. It is in violation of each of the sub-divisions of the statute enumerated in the demurrer. It is in restraint of trade in that it requires the public work to be constructed with but one specified brand of cement, furnished by a specified person and from a specified manufacturer, and prohibits the appellant from procuring cement of equal quality from other sources than through the buyer, the appellee herein, even though the shipper, the Dixie-Portland Cement Company, could [***4] not supply same according to the requirements of appellant, whereby the public work would suffer and the business of the county and the appellant. As further authorities on this point, see Universal Film Co. v. Copperman, 218 F. 577, and Waltham Watch Co. v. Keene, 212 F. 225.

II. It is stipulated in the contract that the cement should be furnished by the Dixie Portland Cement Company, subject to contingencies of manufacturing and shipping and other causes beyond control of shipper and seller, and cement to be delivered as nearly as practicable to meet the necessities of the work upon reasonable notice of time for deliveries; and that shipments are to be at "the market price of Royal cement at the date of shipment." "But not higher than the price named therein;" that prices quoted are "based on freight rates in effect on date of quotation and are subject to revision if freight rates are changed."

In Hart v. Gardner, 74 Miss. 153, 20 So. 877, it is stated that the purpose of all rules of construction is to effect the intention of the parties to the instrument. In Wall v. DeJet, 76 Miss. 104, 23 So. 437, it is held that it is the duty of the court in construing a contract to [***5] place itself in the situation of the parties at the time the contract was made, and to ascertain their intention from the contract, in the light of the situation and looking also to the subject-matter. See also Pratt v. Canton Cotton Oil Co., 51 Miss. 470; Tufts v. Greenwald, 66 Miss. 360, 6 So. 156.

Manifestly the intention of the parties was that the market price of the cement to be shipped under the contract would be such as would prevail at the plant of the Dixie Portland Cement Company, the point of shipment, plus freight to the point of delivery. It is in the testimony and undisputed that the price of Royal Cement in New Orleans, La., at the time that appellant refused to accept cement from the appellee, was two dollars and eighty-two cents per barrel, and that said cement was shipped from the point of manufacture, a point near Chattanooga, Tenn., to New Orleans, by way of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., through the very points or by the very stations where three dollars and thirty cents and later three dollars and twenty cents per barrel was demanded.

It is further shown by the undisputed testimony of the appellant that he did go into the open market and buy [***6] cement of a quality and grade equal to the Royal Cement for the price of two dollars and eighty-two cents per barrel, delivered at the points called for in the contract, and that the price of two dollars and eighty-two cents which the appellant paid for the cement delivered to him at points mentioned in the contract here sued on was the same price that prevailed at New Orleans, for the cement. 16 Cyc. 1143. See Paxton v. Myer, Weis & Company, 58 Miss. 445.

If, however, we should be in error in our contention that "market price" in this case is price at the manufactory plus freight to the point of delivery, then we earnestly beg to submit that the determination of "market price" of Royal Cement at points of delivery is not to be settled by the arbitrary fiat of the Dixie Portland Cement Company to its exclusive dealer, Delmas, but by what was its market value. That is to say, when "market price" is not discoverable by proof of free sales of the commodity in the open market, then its "market value," if discoverable, becomes its "market price." See especially McGarry v. Superior Portland Cement Company, et al. (1917), 95 Wash. 412, 163 P. 928, American and English Annotated Cases, [***7] Vo. 1918A, p. 578 and note. This case holds that justice can be done only by interpreting the phrase. in this contract, "market price," by its true meaning, which is "market value," the facts of the case considered.

It is our contention, therefore, that the term "market price" used in the Delmas-Gano contract was not in the intention of the parties and cannot be held in law, a price such as the manufacturers chose to maintain at the points mentioned in the contract, under a contract already made by his exclusive dealer, and with which the manufacturer was familiar; but was intended by the parties, and will be held in law, to be the price such as that quality of cement could actually be purchased and delivered for. This view is fully sustained by a note to the foregoing case, in Ann. Cas. 1918 A at 575.

We now sum up our contentions, as follows: The demurrer should have been sustained, holding that the contract was in restraint of trade in violation of the statutes of Mississippi and the Sherman Anti-Trust Law; or the contract had been breached by the plaintiff in that he refused to reduce the price of Royal Cement to keep pace with the reduction of cements of similar quality. [***8] Wherefore, we submit that the judgment of the lower court should be reversed, and this case dismissed.

White & Ford, for appellee.

The question presented is whether Delmas is entitled to recover profits he would have made had the contract been carried out. The proof fixed it at ten cents per barrel. The authorities generally hold that profits may be recovered where definite. Delta, etc., v. Yazoo, etc., 105 Miss. 861; Ice Company v. Holliday, 106 Miss. 714; Stevenson v. Morris, 69 Miss. 234.

While our friends on the other side have cited no case holding or tending to hold that Delmas' contract with Gano would have been met by his furnishing cement other than Royal, yet that was one of the principal contentions in the court below, and out of an abundance of precaution, we cite a few cases showing the fallacy of this contention.

Shackelford v. Sloss Iron & Steel Co., 36 So. 1005, 140 Ala. 329; Daggy v. Cox, 19 Ind. 142; Hiatt v. Harris, 28 Ind. 379; King v. City of Rochester, 38 A. 256, 67 N. H. 310; Lowry v. Cooper, 21 Ind. 269; Clark v. Wright, 5 Phila. 432.

Looking at the contract to get the intention of the parties as to what market price was contemplated, manifestly [***9] market price at points of delivery was intended. There is nothing whatever in the contract to warrant the conclusion that New Orleans price was thought of. Furthermore, Gano knew how and where Delmas was to get his supply of cement, because the contract between them gave notice that Delmas had a contract with the Dixie Portland Cement Company for the furnishing of the contract supply, and this contract is also in evidence. The law on market price in a case of this sort is clear, and the following may be noted: Gray Harbor v. Turnbull, 163 Ill. App. 231; Pugh v. Porter & Co., 50 P. 772; Parish & Co. v. Y. & M. V. R. R. Co., 103 Miss. 288.

Applying the reasoning of the above cases to the facts here, we find that in the testimony of Delmas that Royal cement was sold at Pascagoula to other persons other than Gano at the same price that Gano was charged, and, furthermore, that this commodity was largely used at Pascagoula, other cements having been sold there, as well as Royal. Manifestly, the New Orleans price was not thought of, as it is not mentioned in the contract. Even if Delmas had sought to obtain his supply of Royal cement in New Orleans, the proof is that it would have cost [***10] him about two dollars and eighty-two cents plus forty cents freight to Pascagoula, and this would have been in line with the price that Gano charged. It follows from the foregoing, we submit, that Delmas' right to recover was abundantly clear. The contract must be enforced as the parties made it.

Defendant complains of what he conceives to be monopolistic or trust features of the contract. While there has been much loose talk about the provisions of the state and federal anti-trust laws, fortunately the courts have set at rest some of the leading phases of the subject. The authorities generally hold that a contract is not invalidated, which is in reasonable restraint of trade. In Houck v. Wright, 77 Miss. 476, this court held that a wholesaler can confine his sale of goods to one dealer in any given territory, and not thereby violate the antitrust law. The Dixie Portland Cement Company had the right to select Delmas as its exclusive dealer in Jackson county territory, according to that decision. In Telephone Co. v. State, 100 Miss. 102, the court held: "That contracts in reasonable restraint of trade are valid, and are not void unless unreasonable and inimical to public welfare. [***11]"

The same is held in Brown v. Staple Cotton Oil Co., 132 Miss. 859. The supreme court of the United States has frequently passed on this anti-trust question. While authorities might be multiplied, the following cases dispose of the contentions made by appellant in this regard: United States v. Colgate & Co., 63 L. Ed. 993; United States v. Schrader, 64 L. Ed. 471; R. R. v. Pullman Car Co., 35 L. Ed. 97, 139 U.S. Sup. Court Rep. 79.

In Cotton Oil Co. v. State, 121 Miss. 615, the court held that it was not unlawful for a ginning company to attempt to destroy competition by putting the price of ginning cotton below the actual cost. There is nothing invalid about the contract here.

Judges: ANDERSON, J.

Opinion by: ANDERSON

Opinion

---

[*330] [**536] ANDERSON, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

Appellee, Claude Delmas, brought this action in the circuit court of Jackson county against appellant, S. A. Gano, for damages claimed to have been suffered by appellee, because of an alleged breach of contract of purchase by appellant from appellee of about thirty thousand barrels of Royal cement, and recovered a judgment for two thousand five hundred and thirty-three [*331] dollars [***12] and sixteen cents, from which appellant prosecutes this appeal.

There was no real conflict in the material evidence. The case, therefore, was one for a directed verdict for one party or the other. Appellee was a dealer in cement, having his residence and place of business in the city of Pascagoula. Appellant was a road contractor. He had a contract with the state highway commission and Jackson county to construct a concrete road along a part of the "Old Spanish Trail," that part between Moss Point in this state, and the Alabama state line. The construction of the road required the use of a large quantity of cement. Appellee handled Royal cement, and perhaps other brands. This cement was manufactured by the Dixie Portland Cement Company of Chattanooga, Tenn. Appellant and appellee entered into a written contract covering the sale and purchase of the required cement for said road project. The material provisions in the contract, so far as the rights of the parties to this cause are concerned, are substantially as follows.

Appellant agreed to purchase from appellee thirty thousand barrels of Royal cement, or so much thereof as might be necessary in the construction of said road. Appellee [***13] was the sole dealer in that territory on the products of the Dixie Portland Cement Company of Chattanooga, Tenn. One of these products was Royal cement, the brand purchased by appellant. The price fixed in the contract was three dollars and thirty-two cents per barrel, which carried a profit, as the evidence shows, of ten cents per barrel to the appellee as dealer. The contract provided that three dollars and thirty-two cents should be the maximum price, and that appellant, during the process of the construction of the road as he needed the cement, should have the advantage of any decline in the market price of Royal cement. After appellee had delivered the appellant something like five thousand barrels of Royal cement, appellant claimed that there had been a decline in the market price of that brand of [*332] cement, and called upon appellee to give him the benefit of this alleged reduction. After some negotiations, a reduction of twelve cents per barrel was made, but appellant declined to take any more cement, claiming that the market price was only two dollars and eighty-two cents per barrel, at which price the evidence showed it was selling at that time in the city of New [***14] Orleans.

The contract provides further:

"The quality of Royal cement mentioned on the reverse side thereof is sold and delivered for use in the work described, and if buyer shall sell or otherwise dispose of any portion of said cement or use any portion thereof in any work other than that described," appellee at his option shall have the right to decline further deliveries, etc.

It is this provision in the contract which is the basis of the main contest between the parties. By this suit, appellee sought to enforce that contract. Appellant urges upon the court that the contract is not enforceable, because it violates our anti-trust statute (sections 5002 and 5003, Code of 1906; sections 3281 to 3285, inclusive, Hemingway's Code). Appellant raised this question, first, by demurrer to appellee's declaration which was overruled, again during the trial by objecting to the introduction of the contract by appellee, and then again at the conclusion of the evidence by asking the court to direct a verdict in his favor. In fact both parties requested directed verdicts at the conclusion of the evidence, and the request of appellee was granted.

The principal ground, upon which appellant urges [***15] that the contract is void, is because he contends it is in restraint of trade; that the provision therein which bound appellant not to sell or otherwise dispose of any portion of the cement bought by him from appellee, or use any portion thereof in work other than the "Spanish Trail" road project, is violative of our anti-trust statute. To sustain his position, appellant cites the following from 24 R. C. L., p. 364, section 655:

[*333] "At common law, it was established at an early date, and has since been generally recognized, that a general restraint on the alienation of chattels, except when a very special kind of property is involved, such as a slave or an heirloom, is void. 'If a man,' says Coke, 'be possessed . . . of a horse or of any other chattel, real or personal, and give or sell his whole interest or property therein, upon condition that the donee or vendee shall not alien the same, the same is void, because the whole interest and property is out of him, so as he hath no possibility of a reverter; and it is [**537] against the trade and traffic and bargaining and contracting between man and man.'"

It will be observed from the terms of the contract that the amount [***16] of cement purchased by appellant was limited to the requirements of this particular road project, estimated to be about thirty thousand barrels. The question is whether or not the provision in the contract, by which appellant agreed not to sell or otherwise dispose of any portion of the cement so bought, or use any portion thereof on any other work than the "Spanish Trail" project, was such a restraint of trade as is violative of our anti-trust statute. Certainly it was a partial restraint of trade. The contract, if carried out, would operate to restrain trade to some extent. But that is not the criterion. It was held in Telephone Co. v. State, 100 Miss. 102, 54 So. 670, 39 L. R. A. \(N. S.\) 277; Sivley v. Cramer, 105 Miss. 13, 61 So. 653, and Pearson v. Harry Price and wife, the opinion in which latter case is handed down with this opinion, that HN1 all contracts and agreements in restraint of trade are not violative of our anti-trust statute; that it is only those which are inimical to the public welfare. Conceding that the contract involved is in restraint of trade, the question therefore is whether it is such a restraint of trade as [***17] is inimical to the public welfare.

It was held in Houck v. Wright, 77 Miss. 476, 27 So. 616, that a wholesale merchant could confine his sale of [*334] goods to one dealer in a given territory, without violating our anti-trust statute. The supreme court of the United States, whose construction of the federal Anti-trust Act is substantially the same as that given our statute by this court, held in U. S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 7 A. L. R. 443, that HN2 in the absence of any purpose to create a monopoly the Sherman Anti-trust Act did not restrict the long-recognized right of a trader or a manufacturer engaged in private business freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he would deal, and to announce in advance the circumstances under which he would refuse to sell. In Railroad Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 139 U.S. 79, 11 S. Ct. 490, 35 L. Ed. 97, it was held that an agreement that the Pullman Southern Car Co. should have exclusive right for fifteen years to furnish drawing rooms and sleeping cars for the use of a railroad company, and that the railroad [***18] company should not, during that period, contract for cars of that kind with any other party or parties, was not void as against public policy or in restraint of trade.

The restraint of trade involved under this contract consisted simply in this. That appellant should take the thirty thousand barrels of Royal cement, the estimated requirements for the construction of the road project he had under contract, and use it exclusively on that road construction; that he would use no other cement, and would not dispose of any part of the cement so purchased by him to any other person or for use on any other work. To begin with, appellant had all the cement dealers in the country to purchase from. After he refused further deliveries from appellee, he went out into the open market and bought another brand of cement with which to finish his contract. The same markets were open to him before he contracted with appellee. We are of opinion that the restraint of trade resulting from this contract was reasonable, and therefore not inimical to the public welfare.

[*335] Another question in the case is, whether or not appellant was entitled to a directed verdict, because of an alleged violation [***19] of the contract by appellee in refusing to give appellant the benefit of the decline in the market price of Royal cement, which appellant contends took place as the road work progressed. As stated above, there was no conflict as to the material facts. The facts out of which this question arises, in addition to what has been stated, were as follows: Appellee had no authority or power as a dealer in Royal cement, to fix the market price; he was not the manufacturer of it; the manufacturer was the Royal Portland Cement Company of Chattanooga, Tenn. Appellee was a mere dealer in their product, in Pascagoula, and added to the market price in that territory enough to net him ten cents a barrel for each barrel handled. Appellant's evidence showed, it is true, that Royal cement was sold in New Orleans at the time this road was being constructed, at two dollars and eighty-two cents per barrel, but it showed further, that the manufacturer fixed that price to meet the price of cement in the New Orleans territory fixed by foreign importers. The manufacturer, not appellee, refused to reduced the price in the territory in which appellee handled Royal cement. And the evidence showed without conflict, [***20] that appellee could not have gotten Royal cement in New Orleans or elsewhere in the country, for less than the price at which he offered it to appellant; that if he had bought it in New Orleans, for illustration, from the dealer there at two dollars and eighty-two cents a barrel the freight from New Orleans to Pascagoula would have made the same price exactly in the latter city as that appellee made appellant. There is no evidence whatever tending to show that appellee entered into conspiracy or understanding with the manufacturers of Royal cement by which the price was fixed. On the contrary, the evidence showed, as stated, that appellee had nothing whatever to do with the fixing of the price of Royal cement in his territory or elsewhere. Furthermore, [*336] the evidence showed either directly or by necessary inference, that the market price contemplated in the contract [**538] was the market price delivered at Pascagoula.

We find no merit in the other questions argued.

We are of the opinion that the court committed no error in directing a verdict for appellee for the amount sued for, there being no controversy as to the amount.

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

United States v. GE Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

October 13, 1926, Argued ; November 23, 1926, Decided

No. 113

Reporter

272 U.S. 476 *; 47 S. Ct. 192 **; 71 L. Ed. 362 ***; 1926 U.S. LEXIS 974 ****

UNITED STATES v. GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY ET AL.

Prior History: [****1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

APPEAL from a decree of the District Court dismissing, for want of equity, a bill brought by the United States to enjoin the General Electric Company, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, and Westinghouse Lamp Company, appellees herein, from prosecuting a plan for the distribution and sale of patented electric lamps, which was alleged to be a restraint and monopoly of interstate commerce.

Disposition: 15 F.2d 715, affirmed.

Core Terms

---

lamps, patent, Electric, license, purchasers, manufactured, patentee, prices, sales, licensee, machine, stock, consigned, patented article, consumers, monopoly, selling, so-called, contracts, articles, delivery, vend, fasteners, dealers, jobbers, Harrow, ink, agency contract, resale price, infringement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

**HN1** Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

Under the Antitrust Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647, the circumstance that the combination effected secures domination of so large a part of the business affected as to control prices is usually most important in proof of a monopoly violating the Act. But under the patent law the patentee is given by statute a monopoly of making, using and selling the patented article. The extent of his monopoly in the articles sold and in the territory of the United States where sold is not limited in the grant of his patent, and the comprehensiveness of his control of the business in the sale of the patented article is not necessarily an indication of illegality of his method. As long as he makes no effort to fasten upon ownership of the articles he sells control of the prices at which his purchaser shall sell, it makes no difference how widespread his monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN2 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The owner of movables cannot sell the movables and lawfully by contract fix a price at which the product should afterwards be sold, because to do so would be at one and the same time to sell and retain, to part with and yet to hold, to project the will of the seller so as to cause it to control the movable parted with when it was not subject to his will because owned by another, and thus to make the will of the seller unwarrantedly take the place of the law of the land as to such movables. The power to make the limitation as to price for the future cannot be exerted consistently with the prohibitions against restraint of trade and monopoly contained in the Antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Causes of Action & Remedies > Breach of Contract

HN3 [] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

There is nothing as a matter of principle, or in the authorities, which requires the Supreme Court to hold that genuine contracts of agency, however comprehensive as a mass or whole in their effect, are violations of the Antitrust Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, c. 647. The owner of an article, patented or otherwise, is not violating the common law, or the Antitrust law, by seeking to dispose of his article directly to the consumer and fixing the price by which his agents transfer the title from him directly to such consumer.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

HN4 [] Conveyances, Licenses

The owner of a patent may assign it to another and convey, (1) the exclusive right to make, use and vend the invention throughout the United States, or, (2) an undivided part or share of that exclusive right, or (3) the exclusive right under the patent within and through a specific part of the United States. But any assignment or transfer short of one of these is a license, giving the licensee no title in the patent and no right to sue at law in his own name for an infringement. Conveying less than title to the patent, or part of it, the patentee may grant a license to make, use and vend articles under the specifications of his patent for any royalty or upon any condition the performance of which is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure. Where a patentee makes the patented article and sells it, he can exercise no future control over what the purchaser may wish to do with the article after his purchase. It has passed beyond the scope of the patentee's rights.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN5 Contracts, Sales of Goods

A patentee does not thereby sell outright to the licensee the articles the latter may make and sell, or vest absolute ownership in them. He restricts the property and interest the licensee has in the goods he makes and proposes to sell.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN6 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

Any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices does not render them illegal.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN7 Conveyances, Assignments

The owner of a patented article can, of course, charge such price as he may choose, and the owner of a patent may assign it or sell the right to manufacture and sell the article patented upon the condition that the assignee shall charge a certain amount for such article.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

HN8 Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

The price at which a patented article sells is certainly a circumstance having a more direct relation, and is more germane to the rights of the patentee, than the unpatented material with which the patented article may be used. Price-fixing is usually the essence of that which secures proper reward to the patentee.

Lawyers' Edition Display*Headnotes

Monopoly -- appointing agent for sale of goods at fixed prices -- validity. --

Headnote:

An arrangement between a manufacturer of a patented article and merchants by which the latter become agents for the sale of his goods at prices fixed by him, under which the title is retained by him until the goods are sold and the sales are under his control, is not invalid under the Anti-trust Acts, notwithstanding the system of distribution extends over the entire country, embraces a large number of agents who are required to guarantee the accounts when sales are made, are made responsible for all stock lost, missing, or damaged, and agree to pay the expenses of storage, cartage, local transportation, handling, sale, and distribution.

Monopoly -- fixing price to consumer. --

Headnote:

A manufacturer does not violate the common law or the Anti-trust Acts by seeking to dispose of his product directly to the consumer and fixing the price by which his agents transfer the title from him directly to such consumer.

Patent -- scope of assignment. --

Headnote:

The owner of a patent may assign it to another and convey the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention throughout the United States, or any undivided part or share of that exclusive right, or the exclusive right under the patent within and through a specified part of the United States.

Patents -- license -- construction. --

Headnote:

Conveying less than title to the patent, or part of it, a patentee may grant a license to make, use, and vend articles under the specifications of the patent, for any royalty, or upon any condition the performance of which is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by grant of the patent is entitled to secure.

Patent -- right to exercise control over purchaser. --

Headnote:

After a patentee sells the patented article he can exercise no further control over what the purchaser may wish to do with the article.

GIÁM SÁU VĨA TĨA LÃI ÁU ĐÔNG JAGA JGLA FASOÀEN GÃI HÌ GLAJG ÁM UESÓY QÁI Í ÁA

Patent -- right to limit sales by licensee. --

Headnote:

A patentee in granting a license to another to make and sell the patented article may limit the method of sale and the price, provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly.

Syllabus

---

1. Through a system of contracts between a company, which owned the patents for electric lamps with tungsten filaments and manufactured most of those sold, and a large number of wholesale and retail dealers in electrical supplies, the dealers were appointed agents of the company to sell, on commission, the lamps, which were to be consigned to them by the company, transportation prepaid; the sales were to be at prices fixed by the company; the dealers to pay all expenses except the original transportation, and to account to the company periodically for the amount, less commission, [****2] of all sales, cash or credit; and all the stock entrusted to the dealers was to remain the property of the company until sold, and to be accounted for by the dealers.

Held, that the dealers were genuine agents, not purchasers in disguise; and that the plan was not a device to fix prices after sale and to restrain trade and exercise monopoly in the lamps, in violation of the Anti-Trust Act. P. 484.

2. The circumstance that the agents were in their regular business merchants and under a prior arrangement had bought the lamps and sold them as their own, did not prevent this change in their relation to the company. P. 484.

3. Nor did the size and comprehensiveness of the scheme bring it within the Anti-Trust Law. P. 485.

4. As a patentee has a statutory monopoly of the right to make, use, and sell the patented articles, the comprehensiveness of his control of the business of selling is not necessarily an evidence of illegality in method. P. 485.

5. As long as a patentee makes no effort to fasten upon ownership of the articles he sells control of the prices at which his purchaser shall sell, it makes no difference how widespread his monopoly. P. 485.

6. The owner of articles, [****3] patented or otherwise, is not violating the common law or the Anti-Trust law by seeking to dispose of his articles directly to the consumer and fixing the price by which his agents transfer the title from him directly to such consumer. P. 488.

7. A patentee, in licensing another person to make, use, and vend, may lawfully impose the condition that sales by the licensee shall be at prices fixed by the licensor and subject to change at his discretion. P. 488.

Counsel: Mr. James A. Fowler, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, with whom Solicitor General Mitchell, Assistant to the Attorney General Donovan, and Mr. Abram F. Myers, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, were on the brief, for the United States.

Mr. Charles Neave, with whom Messrs. Frederick P. Fish, Newton D. Baker, Charles W. Appleton, and Howard A. Couse were on the brief, for the General Electric Company.

Mr. Frederick H. Wood, with whom Messrs. Paul D. Cravath, F. Harold Smith, and Donald C. Swatland were on the brief, for the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company.

Judges: Taft, Holmes, Van Devanter, McReynolds, Brandeis, Sutherland, Butler, Sanford, Stone

Opinion by: TAFT

Opinion

---

[*478] [**192] [****4] [***366] MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a bill in equity brought by the United States in the District Court for the Northern District of Ohio to enjoin the General Electric Company, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, and the Westinghouse Lamp Company from further violation of the Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890. 26 Stat. 209, c. 647. The bill made two charges, one that the General Electric Company in its business of making and selling incandescent electric lights had devised and was carrying out a plan for their distribution throughout [**193] the United States by a number of so-called agents, exceeding 21,000, to restrain interstate trade in such lamps and to exercise a monopoly of the sale thereof; and, second, that it was achieving the same illegal purpose through a contract of license with the defendants, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company and the Westinghouse Lamp Company. As the Westinghouse Lamp Company is a corporation all of whose stock is owned by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, and is but its selling agent, we may treat the two as one, and reference hereafter will be only [****5] to the defendants the General Electric [*479] Company, which we shall call the Electric Company, and the Westinghouse Company.

The Government alleged that the system of distribution adopted was merely a device to enable the Electric Company to fix the resale prices of lamps in the hands of purchasers, that the so-called agents were in fact wholesale and retail merchants, and the lamps passed through the ordinary channels of commerce in the ordinary way, and that the restraint was the same and just as unlawful as if the so-called agents were avowed purchasers handling the lamps under resale price agreements. The Electric Company answered that its distributors were bona fide agents, that it had the legal right to market its lamps and pass them directly to the consumer by such agents, and at prices and by a system prescribed by it and agreed upon between it and its agents, there being no limitation sought as to resale prices upon those who purchased from such agents.

The second question in the case involves the validity of a license granted March 1, 1912, by the Electric Company to the Westinghouse Company to make, use and sell lamps under the patents owned by the former. [****6] It was charged that the license in effect provided that the Westinghouse Company would follow prices and terms of sales from time to time fixed by the Electric Company and observed by it, and that the Westinghouse Company would, with regard to lamps manufactured by it under the license, adopt and maintain the same conditions of sale as observed by the Electric Company in the distribution of lamps manufactured by it.

The District Court upon a full hearing dismissed the bill for want of equity and this is an appeal under § 2 of the Act of February 11, 1903, known as the Expediting Act. 32 Stat. 823, c. 544, § 2.

There had been a prior litigation between the United States and the three defendants and thirty-two other corporations, [*480] in which the Government sued to dissolve an illegal combination in restraint of interstate commerce in electric lamps, in violation of the Anti-Trust Act, and to enjoin further violation. A consent decree was entered in that cause by which the combination was dissolved, the subsidiary corporations surrendered their charters, and their properties were taken over by the General Electric Company. The defendants were all enjoined from fixing [****7] resale prices for purchasers, except that the owner of the patents was permitted to fix the prices at which a licensee should sell lamps manufactured by it under the patent. After the decree was entered, a new sales plan, which was the one here complained of, was submitted to the Attorney General. The Attorney General declined to express an opinion as to its legality. The plan was adopted and has been in operation since 1912.

The Government insists that these circumstances tend to support the Government's view that the new plan was a mere evasion of the restrictions of the decree and was intended to carry out the same evil result that had been condemned in the prior litigation. There is really no conflict of testimony, in the sense of a variation as to the facts, but only a difference as to the inference to be drawn therefrom. The evidence is all included in a stipulation as to certain facts, as to what certain witnesses for the defendants would testify, and as to the written contracts of license and [***367] agency made by the Electric Company and the Westinghouse Company.

GI GÁVEJÁÍÍ ÉBÉ I ÉLÁÍ ÁUÉDÉFJGÁÉFJHLÁ FÁSÓAÉHÍ GÁTHÍ I LÉJGÍ ÁWEJASÓYÓÁÍÍ I ÉAÉHÍ

The Electric Company is the owner of three patents -- one of 1912 to Just & Hanaman, the basic patent [****8] for the use of Tungsten filaments in the manufacture of electric lamps; the Coolidge patent of 1913, covering a process of manufacturing tungsten filaments by which their tensile strength and endurance are greatly increased; and, third, the Langmuir patent of 1916, which is for the use of gas in the bulb by which the intensity of the [*481] light is substantially heightened. These three patents cover completely the making of the modern electric lights with the tungsten filaments, and secure to the Electric Company the monopoly of their making, using and vending.

The total business in electric lights for the year 1921 was $ 68,300,000, and the relative percentages of business done by the companies were, Electric 69 per cent., Westinghouse, 16 per cent., other licensees, 8 per cent., and manufacturers not licensed, 7 per cent. The plan of distribution by the Electric Company divides the trade into three classes. The first class is that of sales to large consumers readily reached by the Electric Company, negotiated by its own salaried employees and the deliveries made from its own factories and warehouses. The second class is of sales to large consumers under contracts with [****9] the Electric Company, negotiated by agents, the deliveries being made from stock in the custody of the agents; and [*194] the third is of the sales to general consumers by agents under similar contracts. The agents under the second class are called B agents, and the agents under the third class are called A agents. Each B agent is appointed by the Electric Company by the execution and delivery of a contract for the appointment, which lasts a year from a stated date, unless sooner terminated. It provides that the company is to maintain on consignment in the custody of the agent a stock of lamps, the sizes, types, classes and quantity of which, and the length of time which they are to remain in stock, to be determined by the company. The lamps consigned to the agents are to be kept in their respective places of business where they may be readily inspected and identified by the company. The consigned stock or any part of it is to be returned to the company as it may direct. The agent is to keep account books and records giving the complete information as to his dealings for the inspection [*482] of the company. All of the lamps in such consigned stock are to be and remain [****10] the property of the company until the lamps are sold, and the proceeds of all lamps are to be held in trust for the benefit and for the account of the company until fully accounted for. The B agent is authorized to deal with the lamps on consignment with him in three ways -- first to distribute the lamps to the company's A agents as authorized by the company; second, to sell lamps from the stock to any consumer to the extent of his requirements for immediate delivery at prices specified by the company; third, to deliver lamps from the stock to any purchaser under written contract with the company to whom the B agent may be authorized by the company to deliver lamps at the prices and on the terms stated in the contract. The B agent has no authority to dispose of any of the lamps except as above provided and is not to control or attempt to control prices at which any purchaser shall sell any of such lamps. The agent is to pay all expenses in the storage, cartage, transportation, handling, sale and distribution of lamps, and all expenses incident thereto and to the accounting therefor and to the collection of accounts created. This transportation does not include the freight for the [****11] lamps in the consignment from the company to the agent. The agent guarantees the return to the company of all unsold lamps in the custody of the agent within a certain time after the termination of his agency. The agent is to pay over to the company, not later than the 15th of each month, an amount equal to the total sales value, less the agent's compensation, of all of the company's lamps sold by him, -- that is, first, of the collections that have been made, second of those customers' accounts which are past due. This is to comply with the guaranty of the agent of due and prompt payment for all lamps sold by him from his stock. Third, the agent is to pay to the company the value of all of the company's [*483] lamps lost or missing from or damaged in the stock in his custody. There is a basic rate of commission payable to the agent, and there are certain special supplemental and additional compensations for prompt and efficient service. If the agent becomes insolvent, or fails to make reports and remittances, or fails in any of his obligations, the appointment may be terminated; and, when terminated, either at the end of the year or otherwise, [***368] the consigned [****12] lamps remaining unsold are to be delivered to the manufacturer. It appears in the evidence that since 1915, although there is no specific agreement to this effect, the company has assumed all risk of fire, flood, obsolescence, and price decline, and carries whatever insurance is carried on the stocks of lamps in the hands of its agents, and pays whatever taxes are assessed. This is relevant as a circumstance to confirm the view that the so-called relation of agent to the company is the real one. There are 400 of the B agents, the large distributors. They recommend to the company efficient and reliable distributors, in the localities with which they are respectively familiar, to act as A agents whom the company appoints. There are 21,000 or more of the A agents. They are usually retail electrical supply dealers in smaller places. The only sales which the A agent is authorized to make are to consumers for immediate delivery and to purchasers under written contract with the manufacturer, just as in the case of the B agents. The plan was of course devised for the purpose of enabling the company to deal directly with consumers and purchasers, and doubtless was intended to avoid [****13] selling the lamps owned by the company to jobbers or dealers, and prevent sale by these middle men to consumers at different and competing prices. The question is whether, in view of the arrangements, made by the company with those who ordinarily and usually would be merchants buying from the manufacturer and selling to the public, -- such persons [*484] are to be treated as agents, or as owners of the lamps consigned to them under such contracts. If they are to be regarded really as purchasers, then the restriction as to the prices at which the sales are to be made is a restraint of trade and a violation of the Anti-Trust law.

GI CÁMÈJÀ Ï Ì ÁA Ì HÁ Í ÁUÉÓÉFJGÉFJI LÀ FASEDÀÄH GÄEHI Ì LAFJG ÁNÈJESÓYQÁJÍ I FÄEFG

We find nothing in the form of the contracts and the practice under them which makes the so-called B and A agents anything more than genuine agents of the company, or the delivery of the stock to each agent anything more than a consignment to the agent for his custody and sale as such. He is not obliged to pay over money for the stock held by him until it is sold. As he [**195] guarantees the account when made, he must turn over what should have been paid whether he gets it or not. This term occurs in a frequent form of pure agency known as sale [****14] by del credere commission. There is no conflict in the agent's obligation to account for all lamps lost, missing or damaged in the stock. It is only a reasonable provision to secure his careful handling of the goods entrusted to him. We find nothing in his agreement to pay the expense of storage, cartage, transportation (except the freight on the original consignment), handling and the sale and distribution of the lamps, inconsistent with his relation as agent. The expense of this is of course covered in the amount of his fixed commission. The agent has no power to deal with the lamps in any way inconsistent with the ownership of the lamps retained by the company. When they are delivered by him to the purchasers, the title passes directly from the company to those purchasers. There is no evidence that any purchaser from the company, or any of its agents, is put under any obligation to sell at any price or to deal with the lamps purchased except as an independent owner. The circumstance that the agents were in their regular business wholesale or retail merchants, and under a prior arrangement had bought the lamps, and sold them as [*485] their owners, did not prevent [****15] a change in their relation to the company. We find no reason in this record to hold that the change in this case was not in good faith and actually maintained.

But it is said that the system of distribution is so complicated and involves such a very large number of agents, distributed throughout the entire country, that the very size and comprehensiveness of the scheme brings it within the Anti-Trust law. We do not question that in a suit HN1 under the Anti-Trust Act the circumstance that the combination effected secures domination of so large a part of the business affected as to control prices is usually most important in proof of a monopoly violating the Act. But under the patent law the patentee is given by statute a monopoly of making, using and selling the patented article. The extent of his monopoly in the articles sold and in the territory of the United States where sold is not limited in the grant of his patent, and the comprehensiveness of his control of the business in the sale of the patented article is not necessarily an indication of illegality of his method. As long as he makes [****16] no effort to fasten upon ownership of the articles he sells control of the prices at which his purchaser shall sell, it makes no difference how widespread his monopoly. It is only when he adopts a combination with others, by which he steps out of the scope of his patent rights and seeks to [***369] control and restrain those to whom he has sold his patented articles in their subsequent disposition of what is theirs, that he comes within the operation of the Anti-Trust Act. The validity of the Electric Company's scheme of distribution of its electric lamps turns, therefore, on the question whether the sales are by the company through its agents to the consumer, or are in fact by the company to the so-called agents at the time of consignment. The distinction in law and fact between an agency and a sale is clear. For the reasons already stated, we find no [*486] ground for inference that the contracts made between the company and its agents are, or were intended to be, other than what their language makes them.

The Government relies in its contention for a different conclusion on the case of Dr. Miles Medical Company v. John D. Park & Sons Company, 220 U.S. 373. [****17] That case was a bill in equity brought by the Miles Medical Company to enjoin Park & Sons Company from continuing an alleged conspiracy with a number of wholesale and retail dealers in proprietary medicines, to induce the persons who had entered into certain agency contracts, to the number of 21,000 through the country, to break their contracts of agency with the Medical Company, to the great injury of that company. The agency concerned the sale of proprietary medicines prepared by secret methods and formulas and identified by distinctive packages and trade-marks. The company had an extensive trade throughout the United States and certain foreign countries. It had been its practice to sell its medicines to jobbers and wholesale druggists, who in turn sold to retail druggists for sale to the customer. It had fixed not only the price of its own sales to jobbers and wholesale dealers but also the prices of jobbers and small dealers. The defendants had inaugurated a cut-rate or cut-price system which had caused great damage to the complainant's business, injuriously affected its reputation and depleted the sales of its remedies. The bill was demurred to, on the ground that the methods [****18] set forth in the bill, by which attempt was made to control the sales or prices to consumers, was illegal both at common law and under the Anti-Trust Act, and deprived the bill of any equity. This was the issue considered by the Court.

GI CÁMÈJÀ Ï Ï ÁA Ì LÁ Í ÁUËÓ ËF JÍ LÀ FÄSE ÒA ËA Ì GÄE Ì JIÄFJG ÁNÈJESÖYQÁJÍ I ÄEIFI

The plan of distribution of the Miles Medical Company resembled in many details the plan of distribution in the present case, except that the subject matter there was medicine by a secret formula, and not a patented article. [*487] But there were certain vital differences. These led the Circuit Court of Appeals (164 Fed. 803) to declare that the language of the so-called contracts of agency was false in its purport, and merely used to conceal what were really sales to the so-called agents. This conclusion was sustained by certain allegations in [**196] the bill inconsistent with the contracts of agency, to the effect that the Medical Company did sell to these so-called agents the medical packages consigned. This Court, however, without reference to these telltale allegations of the bill, found in the contracts themselves and their operation plain provision for purchases by the so-called agents, which necessarily made the contracts, [****19] as to an indefinite amount of the consignments to them, contracts of sale rather than of agency. The Court therefore held that the showing made was of an attempt by the Miles Medical Company, through its plan of distribution, to hold its purchasers, after the purchase at full price, to an obligation to maintain prices on a resale by them. This is the whole effect of the Miles Medical case. That such it was is made plain in the case of Boston Store v. American Graphophone Company, 246 U.S. 8, 21, in which then Chief Justice White reviewed the various cases on this general subject and spoke of the Miles Medical case as follows:

"In Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S., 373, it was decided that under the general law HN2[] the owner of movables (in that case, proprietary medicines compounded by a secret formula) could not sell the movables and lawfully by contract fix a price at which the product should afterwards be sold, because to do so would be at one and the same time to sell and retain, to part with and yet to hold, to project [****20] the will of the seller so as to cause it to control the movable parted with when it was not subject to his will because owned by another, and thus to make the will of the seller unwarrantedly take the place of the law of the land as to such movables. [*488] It was decided that the power to make the limitation as to price for the future could not be exerted consistently with the prohibitions against restraint of trade and monopoly contained in the Anti-Trust Law."

[***370] Nor does the case of the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company v. United States, 226 U.S. 20, sustain the contention of the Government on the first question. There a number of manufacturers, one of whom owned a patent for enameled iron ware for plumbing fixtures, made a combination to accept licenses to make the patented commodities and to sell them in interstate trade to jobbers, and to refuse to sell to jobbers who would not agree to maintain fixed prices in sales to plumbers. This was an attempt just like that in the Miles Medical Company case, to control the trade in the articles sold and fasten upon purchasers, who had bought at full price and were complete owners, an obligation [****21] to maintain resale prices.

We are of opinion, therefore, that HN3[] there is nothing as a matter of principle, or in the authorities, which requires us to hold that genuine contracts of agency like those before us, however comprehensive as a mass or whole in their effect, are violations of the Anti-Trust Act. The owner of an article, patented or otherwise, is not violating the common law, or the Anti-Trust law, by seeking to dispose of his article directly to the consumer and fixing the price by which his agents transfer the title from him directly to such consumer. The first charge in the bill can not be sustained.

Second. Had the Electric Company, as the owner of the patents entirely controlling the manufacture, use and sale of the tungsten incandescent lamps, in its license to the Westinghouse Company, the right to impose the condition that its sales should be at prices fixed by the licensor and subject to change according to its discretion? The contention is also made that the license required the Westinghouse Company not only to conform in the matter [*489] of the prices at which [****22] it might vend the patented articles, but also to follow the same plan as that which we have already explained the Electric Company adopted in its distribution. It does not appear that this provision was express in the license, because no such plan was set out therein; but even if the construction urged by the Government is correct, we think the result must be the same.

GÍ GÁNEJÆN Í Í ÆA Í JÁ Í ÁUÆÓCAFÍGÁEFÍJÍ LÁ FÁSEÓðAÉHÍ GÆTHÍ ELAFÍJGÍ ÁNEUÆSÓYQJÁÍ Í FÁHEFG

HN4 [↑] The owner of a patent may assign it to another and convey, (1) the exclusive right to make, use and vend the invention throughout the United States, or, (2) an undivided part or share of that exclusive right, or (3) the exclusive right under the patent within and through a specific part of the United States. But any assignment or transfer short of one of these is a license, giving the licensee no title in the patent and no right to sue at law in his own name for an infringement. Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U.S. 252, 255; Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. 477, 494, 495; Moore v. Marsh, 7 Wall. 515, and Crown Company v. Nye Tool Works, 261 U.S. 24, 30. [****23] Conveying less than title to the patent, or part of it, the patentee may grant a license to make, use and vend articles under the specifications of his patent for any royalty or upon any condition the performance of which is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure. It is well settled, as already said, that where a patentee makes the patented article and sells it, he can exercise no future control over what the purchaser may wish to do with the article after his purchase. It has passed beyond the scope of the patentee's rights. Adams v. Burke, 17 Wall. 453; Bloomer v. McQuewan, 14 How. 539; Mitchell v. Hawley, 16 Wall. 544; Hobbie v. Jennison, 149 U.S. 355; Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Co., 157 U.S. 659. [**197] But the question is a different one which arises when we consider what a patentee who grants a license to one to make and vend the patented article may do in limiting the licensee in the [*490] exercise of the right to sell. The patentee may make and grant a license to another to make and use the [****24] patented articles, but withhold his right to sell them. The licensee in such a case acquires an interest in the articles made. He owns the material of them and may use them. But if he sells them, he infringes the right of the patentee, and may be held for damages and enjoined. If the patentee goes further, and licenses the selling of the articles, may he limit the selling by limiting the method of sale and the price? We think he may do so, provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly. One of the valuable elements of the exclusive right of a patentee is to acquire profit by the price at which the article is sold. The higher the price, the greater the profit, unless it is prohibitory. When the patentee licenses another to make and vend, and retains [***371] the right to continue to make and vend on his own account, the price at which his licensee will sell will necessarily affect the price at which he can sell his own patented goods. It would seem entirely reasonable that he should say to the licensee, "Yes, you may make and sell articles under my patent, but not so as to destroy the profit that I [****25] wish to obtain by making them and selling them myself." HN5 [↑] He does not thereby sell outright to the licensee the articles the latter may make and sell, or vest absolute ownership in them. He restricts the property and interest the licensee has in the goods he makes and proposes to sell.

This question was considered by this Court in the case of Bement v. National Harrow Company, 186 U.S. 70. A combination of manufacturers owning a patent to make float spring tool harrows, licensed others to make and sell the products under the patent, on condition that they would not during the continuance of the license sell the products at a less price, or on more favorable terms of payment and delivery to purchasers, than were set forth [*491] in a schedule made part of the license. That was held to be a valid use of the patent rights of the owners of the patent. It was objected that this made for a monopoly. The Court, speaking by Mr. Justice Peckham, said (p. 91):

"The very object of these laws is monopoly, and the rule is, with few exceptions, that [****26] HNC any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices does not render them illegal."

Speaking of the contract, he said (p. 93):

"The provision in regard to the price at which the licensee would sell the article manufactured under the license was also an appropriate and reasonable condition. It tended to keep up the price of the implements manufactured and sold, but that was only recognizing the nature of the property dealt in, and providing for its value so far as possible. This the parties were legally entitled to do. HN7 The owner of a patented article can, of course, charge such price as he may choose, and the owner of a patent may assign it or sell the right to manufacture and sell the article patented upon the condition that the assignee shall charge a certain amount for such [****27] article."

GI CÁMÚAÍ Í Í ÁJFLÁÍ ÁJÉÓÉÁJGÁÉFJÍ LÁ FÁSEÓAÉÁM GÁÉHÍ FLÁFJG ÁNÉJÉSÓYÓÁJÍ I ÉÁÉÉG

The question which the Court had before it in that case came to it on a writ of error to the Court of Appeals of New York, and raised the federal issue whether a contract of license of this kind, having a wide operation in the sales of the harrows, was invalid because a violation of the Anti-Trust law. This Court held that it was not.

It is argued, however, that Bement v. National Harrow Company has been in effect overruled. The claim is based on the fact that one of the cases cited by Mr. Justice Peckham in that case was Heaton-Peninsula Button-Fastener Company v. Eureka Specialty Company, 77 Fed. 288. [*492] This was a decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Sixth Circuit, the opinion being written by Circuit Judge Lurton, afterwards a Justice of this Court. The question there considered was whether the owner of a patent for a machine for fastening buttons to shoes with metallic fasteners might sell such machines subject to the condition that they should be used only with fasteners manufactured by the seller, the patented machine to revert on the breach of the condition. The purchaser of the machine was held to be a licensee [****28] and the use by him of the unpatented fasteners contrary to the condition to be a breach of contract of the license and an infringement of the patent monopoly.

A similar case came before this Court and is reported in Henry v. Dick Company, 224 U.S. 1, the opinion in which was also delivered by Mr. Justice Lurton. In that case, a complainant sold his patented machine embodying his invention. It was called the "Rotary Mimeograph." The claims of the patent did not embrace ink or other materials used in working it. Upon the machine, however, was inscribed a notice, styled a License Restriction, reciting that the machine might be used only with the stencil paper, ink and other supplies made by the A. B. Dick Company. The Henry Company, dealers in ink, [**198] sold to the purchaser, for use in working her machine, ink not made by the Dick Company. This Court held by a majority that the use of such ink by the purchaser was a prohibited use and rendered her liable to an action under the patent law for infringement, and that the seller of the ink was liable as a contributory infringer.

[***372] The case was overruled by this Court in the Motion Picture Patents Company v. Universal Film Company, 243 U.S. 502. [***29] The patent in that case covered a part of the mechanism used in motion picture exhibiting machines for feeding a film through the machine with a regular, uniform and accurate movement, so as not to expose [*493] the film to excessive strain or wear. The license agreement contained a covenant on the part of the licensee, that every machine sold by it should be sold under the restriction and condition that such exhibiting or projecting machines should be used solely for exhibiting or projecting motion pictures of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The overruling of the Dick case was based on the ground that the grant of the patent was of the exclusive right to use the mechanism and produce the result with any appropriate material, and that the materials or pictures upon which the machine was operated were no part of the patented machine, or of the combination which produced the patented result.

The overruling of the Dick case and the disapproval of the Button-Fastener case by the Motion Picture Film case did not carry with it the overruling of Bement v. Harrow Company. The Button-Fastener case was cited in the case of Bement v. Harrow Company [***30] to sustain the decision there by what was an a fortiori argument. The ruling in the former case was much broader than was needed for the decision in the latter. HNS↑ The price at which a patented article sells is certainly a circumstance having a more direct relation, and is more germane to the rights of the patentee, than the unpatented material with which the patented article may be used. Indeed, as already said, price fixing is usually the essence of that which secures proper reward to the patentee.

Nor do we think that the decisions of this Court holding restrictions as to price of patented articles invalid, apply to a contract of license like the one in this case. Those cases are: Boston Store v. American Graphophone Company, 246 U.S. 8; Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Company, 243 U.S. 490; Bauer v. O'Donnell, 229 U.S. 1; Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company v. United States, 226 U.S. 20; Bobbs-Merrill Company v. Straus, 210 U.S. 339.

These cases really are only instances [***31] of [*494] the application of the principle of Adams v. Burke, 17 Wall. 453, 456, already referred to, that a patentee may not attach to the article made by him, or with his consent, a condition running with the article in the hands of purchasers, limiting the price at which one who becomes its owner for full consideration shall part with it. They do not consider or condemn a restriction put by a patentee upon his licensee as to the prices at which the latter shall sell articles which he makes and only can make legally under the license. The authority of Bement v. Harrow Company has not been shaken by the cases we have reviewed.

GI CÁMÈRÀ Ì Ì JI LÁ Ì ÀJÈÓ Ó Ì JÀ Ì FÌ JÌ LÀ FÀSE ÒÀ Ì GÀ Ì HÌ GLÀFJGÌ ÁNÈ Ì SÒY Ó Ì Á Ì I Ì HÌ F

For the reasons given, we sustain the validity of the license granted by the Electric Company to the Westinghouse Company. The decree of the District Court dismissing the bill is

Affirmed.

---

End of Document