The Court also finds that Defendants' First Amendment rights are not implicated by the current preliminary [4] injunction requiring the parties to maintain the status quo. In this regard, the Court finds the Supreme Court's decision in Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1945), particularly instructive. In that case, the Supreme Court held that:

The First Amendment, far from providing an argument against application of the Sherman Act, here provides powerful reasons to the contrary. That Amendment rests on the assumption that the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public, that a free press is a condition of a free society. Surely a command that the government itself shall not impede the free flow of ideas does not afford non-governmental combinations a refuge if they impose restraints upon that constitutionally guaranteed freedom. Freedom to publish means freedom for all and not for some. Freedom to publish is guaranteed by the Constitution, but freedom to combine to keep others from publishing is not. Freedom of the press from governmental interference under the First Amendment does not sanction repression of that freedom by private interests. [5]

Associated Press, 326 U.S. at 20. Thus, the Court finds that Defendants' First Amendment arguments do not shield them from antitrust scrutiny.

Moreover, the Court finds that the State has demonstrated a strong possibility of irreparable harm if the Termination Agreement is not enjoined and that the balance of hardships tilts sharply in favor of the State. Once the Star-Bulletin has been shut down it will be virtually impossible to reopen. The Court finds that Liberty will not suffer any serious economic loss because Liberty will continue to profit by the receipt of its guaranteed annual return under the JOA. Although GPC may lose money due to the Star-Bulletin's operating losses, Defendants did not present any evidence that GPC and HNA are not profitable overall. Thus, the Court finds that the balance of hardships sharply tilts in favor of the State.

Finally, the Court finds that the public interest weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief because of the pending shutdown of the Star-Bulletin and the concomitant loss of independent editorial and reportorial voices, as well as the loss of over 100 jobs and the loss of competition for advertisers and creators [6] of news, [*1245] editorial, and entertainment content. Taking all these factors into consideration, the Court finds it appropriate to issue a preliminary injunction.

BACKGROUND

On October 6, 1999, Plaintiff State of Hawaii (the "State") filed a complaint in federal court seeking to challenge the implementation of an agreement by Defendants Gannett Pacific Corporation ("GPC"),¹ [7] which owns the Honolulu Advertiser (the "Advertiser"), Liberty Newspapers Limited Partnership ("Liberty"), which owns the Honolulu Star-Bulletin (the "Star-Bulletin"), and the Hawaii Newspaper Agency, a Delaware limited partnership (collectively "Defendants"), to terminate the JOA and the resultant shutdown of the Star-Bulletin. The State contends that the closure of the Star-Bulletin under these circumstances violates the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, and state antitrust laws, H.R.S. § 480-1 et seq.. In the instant motion, the State seeks a preliminary injunction² to enjoin Defendants from taking any further steps to implement the Termination Agreement and close the Star-Bulletin, with the last announced date of publication being October 30, 1999.³

The Ninth Circuit recently summarized the origins of the present Joint Operating Agreement (JOA), which Defendants now seek to terminate.

In 1962, the Advertiser was experiencing [8] financial difficulty and was on the verge of failure. In order to prevent the newspaper's demise and preserve its editorial voice, the Advertiser entered into a Joint Operating Agreement ("JOA") with the Star Bulletin on May 31, 1962. Under the JOA, the newspapers merged their commercial, circulation, and advertising departments, but maintained separate and independent editorial voices. The newspapers formed the Hawaii Newspaper Agency to carry out the JOA.

Hawaii Newspaper Agency v. Bronster, 103 F.3d 742, 744 \(9th Cir. 1996\). At the time that the original JOA was entered into, GPC owned the Star-Bulletin, not the Advertiser. Sometime prior to January 30, 1993, GPC's parent (or subsidiary) stripped the Star-Bulletin of its operating equipment and assets by transferring them to the Advertiser. GPC's parent (or subsidiary) then sold its interest in the Star-Bulletin to Liberty and purchased the Advertiser. See State's Motion, Oct. 8, 1999, Exh. A, at 2.

In response to the Supreme Court's decision in Citizen Publishing Co. v. United States, 394 U.S. 131, 22 L. Ed. 2d 148, 89 S. Ct. 927 \(1969\), which held that a JOA between two newspapers [9] in Tucson, Arizona violated federal antitrust laws because neither newspaper could demonstrate that it was a "failing company," Congress enacted the Newspaper Preservation Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1801 - 1804. As summarized by the Ninth Circuit:

Congress explained that JOAs were necessary to maintain "a newspaper press editorially and reportorially independent and competitive in all parts of the United States." Congress found [*1246] that "economic conditions have created a situation in which a large majority of American communities have already become one owner newspaper communities." JOAs accomplished Congress's goal because they allowed newspapers "to reduce costs by combining the economic and business aspects of newspaper production, and at the same time, permitted the newspaper participants to maintain separate editorial and reportorial staffs and independent editorial and news policies."

Hawaii Newspaper Agency, 103 F.3d at 744 - 45 (citations omitted).⁴

¹ GPC was formerly known as Honolulu Advertiser, Inc. and Gannett Pacific Newspapers, Inc.

² The State originally sought a temporary restraining order. However, the parties agreed at the hearing to convert the State's motion to a motion for a preliminary injunction.

³ The Court observes that the State recently sought to eliminate the JOA when the legislature found that "the original justification for the monopoly granted by the public in 1962 may no longer be true," and ordered the Advertiser and Star-Bulletin to disclose their financial records to the state attorney general. See Hawaii Newspaper Agency v. Bronster, 103 F.3d 742, 745 \(9th Cir. 1996\). The Ninth Circuit held that Congress' passage of the Newspaper Preservation Act preempted the field. See generally Hawaii Newspaper Agency Ltd. Partnership v. Bronster, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1082 \(D. Haw. 1996\); City and County of Honolulu v. Hawaii Newspaper Agency, Inc., 559 F. Supp. 1021 \(D. Haw. 1983\).

⁴ Section 1803 of the Newspaper Preservation Act provides:

[10] The most recent amendment to the JOA between the Advertiser and the Star-Bulletin was entered into on January 30, 1993 and had a twenty-year term (until the last Sunday in December, 2012) with subsequent five-year extensions unless either party elected to cancel the JOA. It provides two sources of income for Liberty: a guaranteed annual return and a percentage of excess profits. See State's Motion, Oct. 8, 1999, Exh. A, at 23 - 25 (JOA). Specifically, the amount of guaranteed annual return for the remainder of the JOA exceeds $ 28 million. The JOA also provides that the Star-Bulletin shall receive 3% of any special profits, although none have been realized to date.

The instant case stems from Defendants' decision to terminate the current JOA as of October 30, 1999 and Liberty's decision to cease publishing the Star-Bulletin as of October 30, 1999. Both of these decisions, which were necessarily integrated, were announced on September 16, 1999. Since that time, no effort has been made by Liberty to sell the Star-Bulletin as a going concern.⁵ Under the Termination Agreement, which was signed on September 7, 1999, Liberty has agreed to an early termination of the JOA in exchange [11] for receiving an up-front payment of $ 26.5 million from GPC.⁶

[*1247] According to an affidavit given by Wayne Cahill, the [12] administrative officer of the Hawaii Newspaper Guild, he attended a meeting with the owner of Liberty, Rupert Phillips, and questioned him about the shutdown decision. At that meeting, Phillips stated that he was shutting down the Star-Bulletin not because it was losing money, but because he was not making as much profit as other comparable newspapers and wanted to invest his money elsewhere. Cahill also avers that Phillips told him that he had signed an agreement with GPC whereby GPC would pay him the guaranteed annual profit for the remaining years of the JOA. See State's Motion, Oct. 8, 1999, Declaration of Wayne E. Cahill.

Since the announcement that the Star-Bulletin would cease publication on October 30, 1999, the State maintains that Defendants have undertaken actions that, unless halted immediately, will result in the economic demise of the

(a) It shall not be unlawful under any antitrust law for any person to perform, enforce, renew, or amend any joint newspaper operating arrangement entered into prior to July 24, 1970, if at the time at which such arrangement was first entered into, regardless of ownership or affiliations, not more than one of the newspaper publications involved in the performance of such arrangement was likely to remain or become a financially sound publication: Provided, That the terms of a renewal or amendment to a joint operating arrangement must be filed with the Department of Justice and that the amendment does not add a newspaper publication or newspaper publications to such arrangement.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to enter into, perform, or enforce a joint operating arrangement, not already in effect, except with the prior written consent of the Attorney General of the United States. Prior to granting such approval, the Attorney General shall determine that not more than one of the newspaper publications involved in the arrangement is a publication other than a failing newspaper, and that approval of such arrangement would effectuate the policy and purpose of this chapter.

(c) Nothing contained in the chapter shall be construed to exempt from any antitrust law any predatory pricing, any predatory practice, or any other conduct in the otherwise lawful operations of a joint newspaper operating arrangement which would be unlawful under any antitrust law if engaged in by a single entity. Except as provided in this chapter, no joint newspaper operating arrangement or any party thereto shall be exempt from any antitrust law.

15 U.S.C. § 1803.

⁵ The Court also observes that the JOA provides that the Star-Bulletin must obtain the consent of the Advertiser before it can assign its interest in the JOA partnership or any controlling interest of its capital stock, and that the Advertiser's consent must not be unreasonably withheld. However, the Advertiser is not required to obtain the consent of the Star-Bulletin prior to taking the same actions. See State's Motion, Oct. 8, 1999, Exh. A, at 36 - 37.

⁶ Under the terms of the 1993 amendment to the JOA, if Liberty ceased publishing the Star-Bulletin, Liberty would not be entitled to receive the guaranteed annual profits. Instead, Liberty would receive the Star-Bulletin's name, its advertiser and subscriber lists, and $ 100. All other assets, including the printing and distributing infrastructure, would go to the Advertiser. See State's Motion, Oct. 8, 1999, Exh. A, at 31 - 32.

Star-Bulletin. Bulletin. Namely, the State argues that Defendants have taken steps to impair the circulation of the Star-Bulletin by mailing letters to current subscribers and calling current subscribers to inform them that their subscription will be converted over to the Advertiser on November 1, 1999 and that they can call to request [13] a refund. See State's Motion, Oct. 8, 1999, at Exh. B. The State also claims that Defendants are destroying the relationship between the Star-Bulletin and its advertisers by mailing letters to advertisers that will cause advertisers to seek alternative advertising mediums. Finally, the State maintains that Defendants are impairing public access to the Star-Bulletin by removing Star-Bulletin street vending racks so that they can be repainted and reused by the Advertiser.

In response to the State's October 8, 1999 motion, Defendants filed their opposition on October 12, 1999. The Court also considered GPC's memorandum attached to its Motion to Dismiss, which was filed on October 11, 1999, although that particular motion will be heard at a later date. On October 12, 1999, the State filed additional documents in support of its motion for a preliminary injunction. The Court held a hearing on October 13, 1999.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1[] The standards for granting a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction are identical. In Miller v. California Pacific Medical Ctr., 19 F.3d 449 \(9th Cir. 1994\), the Ninth Circuit set forth HN2[] the standard for granting [14] a preliminary injunction as follows:

Traditionally we consider (1) the likelihood of the moving party's success on the merits; (2) the possibility of irreparable injury to the moving party if relief is not granted; (3) the extent to which the balance of hardships favors the respective parties; and (4) in certain cases, whether the public interest will be advanced by granting the preliminary relief.

Id. at 456 (citing United States v. Odessa Union Warehouse Co-op, 833 F.2d 172, 174 \(9th Cir. 1987\)).

HN3[] The moving party must show 'either (1) a combination of probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable harm, or (2) the existence of serious questions going to the merits, the balance of hardships tipping sharply in its favor, and at least a fair chance of success on the merits.'

Miller, 19 F.3d at 456 (quoting Senate of California v. Mosbacher, 968 F.2d 974, 977 \(9th Cir. 1992\)). "These two formulations represent two points on a sliding scale in which the required degree of irreparable harm increases as the probability of success decreases." 19 F.3d at 456. These formulations [15] are not discrete tests, but the extremes of a single continuum. See Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm. v. National Football League, 634 F.2d 1197, 1201. Accordingly, "if HN4[] the balance of harm tips decidedly toward the plaintiff, then the plaintiff need not show as robust a likelihood of success on the merits as when the balance tips less decidedly." [1248] State of Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie, 856 F.2d 1384, 1389 \(9th Cir. 1988\). At an irreducible minimum, however, the plaintiff must demonstrate a fair chance of success on the merits or questions serious enough to require litigation. See Arcamuzi v. Continental Air Lines, Inc., 819 F.2d 935, 937 \(9th Cir. 1987\). Moreover, under any formulation of the test, the plaintiff must demonstrate a significant threat of irreparable injury. Oakland Tribune, Inc. v. Chronicle Publishing Co., Inc., 762 F.2d 1374, 1376 \(9th Cir. 1985\).

HN5[] The grant or denial of a temporary restraining order is reviewed for abuse of discretion. See Miss Universe, Inc. v. Flesher, 605 F.2d 1130, 1132-33 \(9th Cir. 1979\).

DISCUSSION

The State argues that a preliminary injunction [16] must be issued to preserve the status quo pending a final decision in this case. After carefully considering the arguments of both parties, the Court agrees and finds that it is appropriate to issue a preliminary injunction.

I LIKELIHOOD OF SUCCESS ON THE MERITS.

First, the Court finds that the State has demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits. The State's complaint alleges three violations of the Sherman Act -- restraint of trade, conspiracy to monopolize, and attempted monopolization -- and three similar violations of state antitrust laws. The Court will address each of the federal claims in turn.⁷

[17] A. RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . ." HN6[↑] 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN7[↑] In order to establish a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the State must establish (1) the existence of an agreement, conspiracy, or combination between two or more entities; (2) an unreasonable restraint of competition; and (3) an effect on interstate commerce. See American Ad Management, Inc. v. GTE Corp., 92 F.3d 781, 788 (9th Cir. 1996).

The Court agrees with the State that it is likely to prove these factors. The State is likely to establish the first and third factors fairly easily. As to the first factor, both GPC and Liberty have entered into the Termination Agreement whereby GPC has agreed to pay Liberty $ 26.5 million (apparently the discounted present value of the guaranteed annual profit called for in the JOA). In all likelihood, this constitutes the necessary agreement. With regard to the third factor, the Court finds that the State is likely to prove that the publication, printing, and distribution of daily newspapers in general circulation constitutes [18] and affects interstate trade and commerce. Specifically, both the Advertiser and the Star-Bulletin purchase newsprint and news content in interstate commerce and regularly use interstate wire and mail communications to operate their businesses.

As to the second factor, the Court finds that the State is likely to prove that the agreement constitutes an unreasonable restraint of competition. The editorial and reportorial competition between the Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser has been instrumental [*1249] in giving subscribers alternate news sources. The Court finds that the Termination Agreement, although it does not expressly require the closure of the Star-Bulletin, will lead to this outcome because the Star-Bulletin will not have access to the necessary infrastructure (currently held by the Hawaii Newspaper Agency and to be distributed to the Advertiser upon termination of the JOA) to continue publishing. Indeed, the interrelated decision by Liberty to terminate the JOA and cease publishing was announced simultaneously. Thus, the Advertiser will be the sole local newspaper and competition in this unique island community situate in the middle of the Pacific Ocean will be eliminated. The [19] Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser are by far the two largest daily newspapers published in the relevant market of the state of Hawaii. There will be no competition to attract advertisers and creators of news, editorial, and entertainment content.

There appears to be no lawful justification for GPC to, in essence, buy out Liberty's interest in the JOA so that the JOA may be terminated thirteen years before its scheduled expiration date (and only six years after its inception).⁸ In reaching this conclusion, the Court emphasizes that the intent of the Newspaper Preservation Act is to preserve the publication of newspapers and that the proposed Termination Agreement has the effect of paying the Star-Bulletin not to publish for the remaining thirteen years, as called for by the JOA. The Court notes that the stated purpose and intent of both parties to the JOA is to produce high quality newspapers, improve acceptance for their advertisers, subserve public interest by maintaining the separate identities, individuality and editorial and news freedom and integrity of the Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser. Moreover, the JOA further requires the Advertiser, as the general partner, to act "in [20] a manner which it believes, in the good faith exercise of business judgment, is in the best interest of the overall economic performance of the Partnership and the Newspapers considered together . . ." State's Motion, Oct. 8, 1999, Exh. A, at 9. For these reasons, the Court finds that the State is likely to establish an unreasonable restraint of competition.

⁷ The Court need not address the state law claims separately because they essentially mirror the federal claims, see, e.g., Robert's Hawaii School Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transp. Co., Inc., 91 Haw. 224, 247, 982 P.2d 853 (1999) (noting that the legislature followed the "federal paradigm" in fashioning Hawaii antitrust law and that the language of H.R.S. § 480-4 and § 480-9 traces the language of Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act). The Court notes that if the federal claims lack merit, then the state law claims would be preempted by the Newspaper Preservation Act. See Hawaii Newspaper Agency v. Bronster, 103 F.3d 742, 745 (9th Cir. 1996). However, the Court notes that daily newspapers are commodities within the meaning of H.R.S. § 480-1.

⁸ The Court recognizes that the Ninth Circuit held in Hawaii Newspaper Agency v. Bronster, 103 F.3d 742, 748 (9th Cir. 1996), that the Newspaper Preservation Act "contains no temporal limitation."

Defendants argue that there can be no antitrust violation because there is no economic competition at all in light of the Newspaper Preservation Act's antitrust exemptions. The Court recognizes that the Advertiser and Star-Bulletin operate to some extent as a single economic entity under the JOA. However, as discussed below, these actions receive antitrust exemption only so long as they are taken to preserve the independent editorial and reportorial [21] voices of competing newspapers. In the instant case, the Termination Agreement contravenes the stated purpose of the Newspaper Preservation Act because it will lead to the shutdown of the Star-Bulletin thirteen years sooner than otherwise would have occurred while, at the same time, the parties to the agreement will be put in the same position as though the JOA ran until 2012 and GPC will, in effect, have bought out its only competitor in this unique island community.

The Court is not persuaded by Defendants' argument that the instant Termination Agreement involves some "non-economic social goal" rather than trade or commerce. See Opposition, Oct. 11, 1999, at 8. The Court recognizes that "trade or commerce" within the meaning of the antitrust laws generally comprises "commercial competition in the marketing of goods and services." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 84 L. Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982 (1940). This Court finds that this case falls within the definition of trade or commerce:

[*1250]

[The purpose of the Sherman Act] was the prevention of restraints to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended to restrict production, [22] raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods and services, all of which had come to be regarded as a special form of public injury.

Apex Hosiery, 310 U.S. at 493 (emphasis added). The Court emphasizes that, if implemented, the Termination Agreement would deprive newspaper readers of free and open competition in the sale of daily newspapers and their differing editorial and reportorial voices, deprive advertisers of free and open competition in the market for the differentiated advertising audiences represented by the Advertiser and the Star-Bulletin, and would deprive creators of news, editorial, and entertainment content of free and open competition for their output. Thus, the Court concludes that the Termination Agreement is not protected by the Newspaper Preservation Act and, therefore, Defendants' actions can be subject to antitrust scrutiny on this limited basis.

B. CONSPIRACY TO MONOPOLIZE.

The Court also finds that the State is likely to succeed in proving that Defendants have conspired to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. To establish this claim, the State must [23] prove (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; and (3) specific intent to monopolize. See American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 809, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946). As with the Section 1 claim previously discussed, the Court finds that the State is likely to establish the necessary elements in support of its claim. First, the Termination Agreement is likely to constitute the necessary combination or conspiracy. Second, the announcement of the closure of the Star-Bulletin, the notices to subscribers and advertisers, and the removal of the street vending racks constitute the requisite overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy. Third, the Court finds that the State is likely to prove that Defendants' actions demonstrate a specific intent to monopolize. Although the form of the transaction is couched as an amendment to the existing JOA (which is expressly permitted by the Newspaper Preservation Act), the Court finds that the State has presented a strong argument that the intent of the agreement is for GPC to buy out Liberty so that Liberty may then shut down the Star-Bulletin while still [24] preserving the profits guaranteed to it under the JOA and GPC would be left without a competitor in this unique island community.

C. ATTEMPTED MONOPOLIZATION.

Finally, the Court finds that the State is likely to succeed in proving its claim of attempted monopolization. HN8 [↑] To establish a claim for attempt to monopolize, a plaintiff must prove: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury. See Movie 1 & 2 v. United Artists Communications, Inc., 909 F.2d 1245, 1254 (9th Cir. 1990) (citing Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. International Business Machines, 698 F.2d 1377 (9th Cir. 1983)).

The Court finds that the State is likely to establish the requisite elements. First, as discussed above, the requisite intent may be established by Defendants' actions. Second, the anticompetitive conduct is likely to be demonstrated by the fact that GPC is paying Liberty $ 26.5 million up-front, an amount that approximates the amount of money it would be required to pay Liberty for the life of the JOA, [25] in order to terminate the JOA now rather than in 2012. Although Liberty is not [*1251] required to cease publishing the Star-Bulletin, the closure of the Star-Bulletin will be virtually assured because it lacks the necessary infrastructure to continue publishing. The Court emphasizes that the decisions to terminate the JOA and to cease publishing the Star-Bulletin were integral to one another and were announced simultaneously. As stated earlier, this essentially constitutes a buyout of its sole competitor by GPC. Moreover, the Court recognizes that, in light of the fact that the Star-Bulletin was stripped of its operating equipment and assets in 1993 when it was owned by GPC's parent company (or subsidiary), it is unlikely to be a viable competitor if and when the JOA is terminated. Therefore, the Court finds that the State is likely to prove that this buyout constitutes anticompetitive conduct.

Third, the Court finds that the State will most likely be able to prove that, unless this agreement is enjoined, there is a dangerous probability that GPC will acquire monopoly power. As previously discussed, it appears with near certainty that the Star-Bulletin will have to shut down if the JOA is [26] terminated. Fourth, the Court finds that this outcome would result in antitrust injury because no other daily newspaper would be published on Oahu, a unique island community, to compete with the Advertiser. In addition, there would be the concomitant loss of competition for advertisers and creators of news, editorial, and entertainment content. The Court notes that GPC's parent company (or subsidiary) first purchased the Star-Bulletin when it was the healthier of the two local newspapers operating under the JOA and then in 1993 purchased the Advertiser because at that point in time it apparently had a more promising future. It then sold the Star-Bulletin to Liberty after first stripping the Star-Bulletin of its operating equipment and assets.

D. APPLICABILITY OF THE NEWSPAPER PRESERVATION ACT.

Defendants argue that the Newspaper Preservation Act exempts the Termination Agreement from antitrust laws. Although superficially appealing, the Court finds this argument ultimately unpersuasive. The Court recognizes that the JOA is exempt from antitrust laws, and that the Newspaper Preservation Act expressly permits the parties to amend an existing JOA simply by filing the amendment [27] with the Department of Justice so long as the amendment does not add a newspaper to the existing JOA. Thus, Defendants reason, they are exempt from antitrust laws and should not be enjoined from amending the JOA.

The Court finds that Defendants' arguments lose force when the purpose of the Act -- to preserve independent editorial and reportorial voices -- is considered. The statute expressly states that it is the "public policy of the United States to preserve the publication of newspapers in any city, community, or metropolitan area where a joint operating arrangement has been heretofore entered into . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1801. The Court finds that if Defendants are permitted to consummate the Termination Agreement as it now stands, the practical result would be that GPC would pay up-front to Liberty $ 26.5 million for the right to terminate the JOA thirteen years early -- without Liberty having to publish the Star-Bulletin for the next thirteen years. The Court is not persuaded by Defendants' arguments that the Termination Agreement actually increases competition. The Court recognizes that the terms of the agreement do not preclude Liberty, or anyone else, [28] from publishing the Star-Bulletin. However, the Court will not close its eyes to the practical effect of the agreement because the Star-Bulletin, which lacks the infrastructure to continue publishing the newspaper, would inevitably close. In fact, as discussed above, this decision was announced simultaneously with the interrelated decision to terminate the JOA and Liberty has made no effort to sell the Star-Bulletin as a going concern.

[*1252] The Court finds that it does have the power to enjoin the instant Termination Agreement. Any other outcome would be completely at odds with the congressional intent embodied in the Newspaper Preservation Act. The Court emphasizes that Defendants were not compelled to extend the JOA until 2012; yet having done so, and having benefitted from the antitrust exemptions created by the Newspaper Preservation Act, Defendants now propose that one party, in effect, buy out another while the public interest is deprived of an additional thirteen years of competing, independent editorial and reportorial voices, with the Star-Bulletin left in a denuded, inoperable condition.

E. FIRST AMENDMENT CLAIMS.

Defendants also claim that any injunctive relief will [29] necessarily violate their First Amendment rights to refrain from speaking or publishing. The Court finds the Supreme Court's decision in Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1945), particularly instructive. In Associated Press, the Government sought to enjoin members of the Associated Press from prohibiting its members from selling news to non-members and granting each member powers to block its non-member competitors from membership. The Supreme Court affirmed an injunction issued by a three-judge panel. In doing so, the Supreme Court rejected the argument that the press is immune from the antitrust laws by virtue of the First Amendment, stating:

The First Amendment, far from providing an argument against application of the Sherman Act, here provides powerful reasons to the contrary. That Amendment rests on the assumption that the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public, that a free press is a condition of a free society. Surely a command that the government itself shall not impede the free flow of ideas does not afford non-governmental [30] combinations a refuge if they impose restraints upon that constitutionally guaranteed freedom. Freedom to publish means freedom for all and not for some. Freedom to publish is guaranteed by the Constitution, but freedom to combine to keep others from publishing is not. Freedom of the press from governmental interference under the First Amendment does not sanction repression of that freedom by private interests.

Associated Press, 326 U.S. at 20. Thus, if the Court is correct that the State is likely to prove that Defendants have violated antitrust laws and that the Newspaper Preservation Act does not otherwise exempt them from antitrust scrutiny, then the Supreme Court's decision in Associated Press makes it clear that there is no First Amendment violation.

In support of their argument that the First Amendment precludes injunctive relief, Defendants cite Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714, 51 L. Ed. 2d 752, 97 S. Ct. 1428 (1977) (holding that the First Amendment prohibited Delaware from requiring its citizens to advertise the motto "Live Free or Die" on automobile license plates), and Miami Herald Publishing Co. v. Tornillo, 418 U.S. 241, 256, 41 L. Ed. 2d 730, 94 S. Ct. 2831 (1974) [31] (holding that Florida right-of-reply statute violated the First Amendment because it compelled newspaper editors or publishers to publish that which reason tells them should not be published and that this was a penalty based on the content of the newspaper). The Court finds this argument unpersuasive for several reasons.

First, the Court finds that these cases are distinguishable because here the Court is not compelling Defendants to publish any particular viewpoint. In Wooley, the Plaintiffs were compelled to advertise the motto "Live Free or Die" on their license plates, and in Tornillo the plaintiff was compelled to publish any reply by a political candidate to editorials criticizing that candidate. Conversely, here the Court [*1253] would merely enjoin Defendants to continue doing that which they are already doing under the terms of the JOA, namely publishing a newspaper with whatever editorial and reportorial content they deem appropriate. In reaching this conclusion, the Court notes that the Supreme Court addressed a similar claim in Associated Press:

It is argued that the decree interferes with freedom 'to print as and how one's reason or one's interest dictates'. [32] The decree does not compel AP or its members to permit publication of anything which their "reason" tells them should not be published. It only provides that after their 'reason' has permitted publication of news, they shall not, for their own financial advantage, unlawfully combine to limit its publication.

326 U.S. at 20 n.18.

Second, the Court is not convinced by Defendants' argument that any injunctive relief will infringe upon their First Amendment right of freedom of association. In support of this argument, Defendants rely on Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 623, 82 L. Ed. 2d 462, 104 S. Ct. 3244 (1984) (holding that a state may not require private organization to admit women as full voting members), for the proposition that "freedom of association . . . plainly presupposes a freedom not to associate." Defendants apparently argue that any order enjoining them from terminating the JOA necessarily implicates their freedom not to associate with each other. The Court finds otherwise. The Court observes that Defendants voluntarily entered into the JOA to gain the protection of the Newspaper Preservation Act. Although Defendants will be temporarily [33] enjoined from terminating the JOA, there is no element of compelled association because the Advertiser and Star-Bulletin constitute separate entities with independent editorial and reportorial functions. An outcome to the contrary would mean that every time the Court enjoined termination of a contract, this right would be implicated. Accordingly, the Court finds Defendants' First Amendment arguments unconvincing.

II POSSIBILITY OF IRREPARABLE INJURY TO THE MOVING PARTY.

The Court recognizes that Congress enacted Section 16 of the Clayton Act to encourage the grant of injunctive relief in order to prevent the threat of irreparable injury. HN9 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 26; see also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 112-13 & n.8, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986). Section 16 authorizes courts in private antitrust actions to grant injunctive relief "against threatened loss or damage" proximately resulting from an antitrust violation, and to issue a preliminary injunction upon "a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate." 15 U.S.C. § 26. In the instant case, the Court finds [34] that the State has made a strong showing that it will be irreparably injured if the Termination Agreement is not enjoined.

If the State is able to prove its claims, which the Court has previously concluded is likely, then the Court finds that it will be irreparably injured if a preliminary injunction is not granted. Specifically, the State has shown that Defendants have impaired the circulation of and access to the Star-Bulletin, undermined the relationship between the Star-Bulletin and its advertisers, and adversely affected public perception of the viability of the Star-Bulletin. If these actions are not enjoined now, and the State later prevails, any relief that this Court could afford would be inadequate because the Star-Bulletin would no longer be a viable newspaper. Once closed, the Star-Bulletin is unlikely to be reopened because it will have lost its subscriber and advertiser base. The Court finds that no monetary amount will be able to compensate for the loss of the Star-Bulletin's editorial and reportorial voice, the elimination of a significant forum for the airing of ideas and thoughts, the elimination of an important source of democratic expression, [1254] and the removal of [35] a significant facet by which news is disseminated in the community. See, e.g., Rent-A-Center, Inc. v. Canyon Television and Appliance Rental, Inc., 944 F.2d 597, 603 (9th Cir. 1991) ("We have also recognized that intangible injuries, such as damage to ongoing recruitment efforts and goodwill, qualify as irreparable harm.").

III BALANCE OF HARDSHIPS.

The Court finds that the balance of hardships tilts sharply in favor of the State. "For this factor, the Court must identify the harm which a TRO or preliminary injunction might cause the Defendants and weigh it against the Plaintiffs' threatened injury." Uarco Inc. v. Lam, 18 F. Supp. 2d 1116, 1126 (D. Haw. 1998) (citing Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 634 F.2d 1197, 1203 (9th Cir. 1980)). As explained above, the economic demise of the Star-Bulletin will impair the ability of this Court to provide the relief requested by the State and will result in the silencing of competing news and editorial voices as well as curtailing, if not eliminating, the competition for advertisers and creators of news, editorial, and entertainment content.

In [36] contrast, the Court finds relatively little cost to Defendants if it grants injunctive relief. Enjoining the Termination Agreement means that Defendants will be required to continue publishing the Star-Bulletin in the interim until the Ninth Circuit can rule on Defendants' appeal and, if the Court's decision is affirmed, until the parties can fully litigate this lawsuit. Liberty will not suffer any significant loss because it will continue to earn its guaranteed annual profit for its owners. Although GPC and the Hawaii Newspaper Agency may lose money due to the Star-Bulletin's operating losses, Defendants have presented no evidence that they are not profitable overall. The Court is cognizant of the fact that injunctive relief, no matter how short, will require an interim delay in Defendants' plans and that this delay is not costless. However, when weighed against the hardships that would be suffered by the State if injunctive relief was not granted, the Court finds that the hardship to Defendants pales.

IV ADVANCEMENT OF THE PUBLIC INTEREST.

In determining the propriety of granting injunctive relief, the Court must also consider whether the public interest will be advanced [37] by granting the preliminary relief. See Miller v. California Pacific Med. Center, 19 F.3d 449, 456 (9th Cir. 1994); Uarco Inc. v. Lam, 18 F. Supp. 2d 1116, 1126 (D. Haw. 1998). The Court finds that the State has demonstrated that the public interest strongly weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief. As shown by the Newspaper Preservation Act, there is a strong public interest in maintaining a newspaper press editorially and reportorially independent and competitive. See 15 U.S.C. § 1801. If the Termination Agreement is not enjoined, the Court finds that the loss of the Star-Bulletin's independent editorial and reportorial voices, the loss of competition to attract advertisers and creators of news, editorial, and entertainment content, and the loss of over 100 jobs would severely harm the public interest. Accordingly, the Court finds that this factor weighs in favor of granting injunctive relief.

CONCLUSION

After carefully weighing all four of these factors, the Court GRANTS the State's motion for a preliminary injunction. From the date hereof and for the duration of this lawsuit, Defendants are hereby enjoined [38] to preserve the status quo, including without limitation:

1. Defendants shall take no steps whatsoever to implement, or make any payments under, the Termination Agreement dated September 7, 1999, or any other agreement of like intent or effect;
2. Defendants shall take no steps that are contrary to, or inconsistent with, the stated purpose and intent of the Hawaii Joint Operating Agreement - Amendment [*1255] and Restatement of Mutual Publishing Plan Agreement of January 30, 1993 to produce high quality newspapers for their readers, improve acceptance for their advertisers, subserve public interest by maintaining the separate identities, individuality and editorial and news freedom and integrity of the Star-Bulletin and the Advertiser;
3. Defendants shall refrain from taking any actions that may cause any material adverse change in the business, including loss of subscribers and advertisers, or financial condition of the Star-Bulletin as a viable going concern.

Pursuant to Rule 65(c), the Court hereby requires the State to post a security. However, in light of the State's financial resources, the Court finds it appropriate to only require the State to post a nominal bond in the amount [39] of $ 10,000.⁹

⁹ At the hearing, counsel for Defendants expressed concern that any monetary recovery that his clients might have if they prove that the State has wrongly obtained injunctive relief is limited to the amount of the bond. In the event that the State does not confirm that any recovery by Defendants is not limited to the amount of the bond, and such confirmation is not filed within five (5) days of the date of this Order, the Court will reconsider the amount of the bond upon motion made by either party.

99 F. Supp. 2d 1241, *1255 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19069, 39

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: Honolulu, Hawaii, OCT 15 1999.

Alan C. Kay

United States District Judge

End of Document

Hingel v. Exxon Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

October 15, 1999, Decided ; October 15, 1999, Filed; October 18, 1999, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO: 99-2424 SECTION: "J"(5)

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16126 *; 1999 WL 893574

NICHOLAS J. HINGEL, ET AL VERSUS EXXON CORP., ET AL

Disposition: [*1] Plaintiffs' Motion to Remand GRANTED.

Core Terms

products, dealers, unfair, deceptive, retail, state court, plaintiffs', jobbers, unfair trade practice, anti trust law, service station, allegations, fraudulent, commerce, removal, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

HN1[Removal, Specific Cases Removed

28 U.S.C.S. § 1441(a) provides that any civil action brought in a state court of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction may be removed by the defendant. Removal jurisdiction must be strictly construed, however, because it implicates important federalism concerns.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

HN2[Removal, Specific Cases Removed

Any doubts concerning removal must be resolved against removal and in favor of remanding the case back to state court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Procedural Matters > General Overview

HN3 Removal, Procedural Matters

The party invoking the removal jurisdiction of federal courts bears the burden of establishing federal jurisdiction over the state court suit.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Specific Cases Removed > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Postremoval Remands > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Postremoval Remands > Jurisdictional Defects

HN4 Removal, Specific Cases Removed

If at any time before final judgment it appears that the district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, the case shall be remanded. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1447\(c\).

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Fraudulent Joinder

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > Diversity Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Misjoinder

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > Joinder of Claims

HN5 Joinder of Parties, Fraudulent Joinder

In determining the validity of a claim of fraudulent joinder, the district court must evaluate all of the factual allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, resolving all contested issues of substantive fact in favor of plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Fraudulent Joinder

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Misjoinder

HN6 Joinder of Parties, Fraudulent Joinder

If the plaintiff has any possibility of recovery under state law against the party whose joinder is questioned, then the joinder is not fraudulent in fact or law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Louisiana Antitrust Law, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. 51:121 et seq., makes illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

No person engaged in commerce shall, in the course of such commerce, sell or contract for the sale of goods or other commodities for use, consumption, or resale within the state, or fix a price on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser shall not use or deal in the goods or other commodities of a competitor of the vendor, where the effect of the sale, contract for sale, or condition, agreement, or understanding, is to substantially lessen competition or tends to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:124\(A\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Costs & Attorney Fees, Clayton Act

Any person who claims loss or damage by a violation of Louisiana antitrust provisions may sue for injunctive relief. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:129. In addition, treble damages and attorneys fees may be recovered. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:137.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN10 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In order to state a claim under the Louisiana Antitrust Law, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51.121 et seq., the plaintiff is required to allege that the defendant is a party to a contract which results in an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

HN11[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:1401 et seq., makes unlawful any unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce. La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:1405\(A\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN12[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51.1401 et seq., expressly allows for a private cause of action on behalf of any person who suffers any ascertainable loss of money as a result of the use or employment by another person of an unfair or deceptive method, act or practice declared unlawful by La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:1405.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

The Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51.1401 et seq., provides a cause of action both for trade practices that are unfair and those that are deceptive. It is not necessary that the alleged act be both unfair and deceptive. The statutory language is very broad and, as a result, Louisiana courts determine what constitutes an unfair or deceptive practice on a case by case basis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN14[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

In analyzing a claim under the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act, La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51.1401 et seq., Louisiana courts have used a two-prong test, finding a practice unfair when (1) it offends established public policy, or (2) it is unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN15[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Fraud, misrepresentation, deception and similar conduct are prohibited, but mere negligence is not. Otherwise legal actions can be found unfair or deceptive if they produce unfair or deceptive results.

Counsel: For NICHOLAS J HINGEL, GREMILLION ENTERPRISES, INC., GRAYSON ENTERPRISES, INC., KHAJA ALIUDDIN AHMED, KASA CORPORATION, THEODORE G ANDRESSEN, LITTLE FARMS EXXON, INC., GIOE ENTERPRISES INC, GSR ENTERPRISES INC, SUSAN HOFFER, HOFFER'S OF CHALMETTE, INC., JUNE ENTERPRISES INC, K SIMON INC, K D E INC, TAHIR ALI KHAN, KHAN INC, LAKE FOREST AUTOMOTIVE SERVICE, INC., POMES INC, SEVERN VENTURES, L.L.C., TERRACE CORPORATION, TRI G 1 INC, R N STARK INC, ABDUL SATTAR KHAN, NAYEEM INC, ASHFAQ A CHEEMA, SGR ENTERPRISES, L.L.C., plaintiffs: Walter C. Thompson, Jr., Mark Powell Seyler, James Monroe White, Barkley & Thompson, LC, New Orleans, LA.

For NICHOLAS J HINGEL, GREMILLION ENTERPRISES, INC., GRAYSON ENTERPRISES, INC., KHAJA ALIUDDIN AHMED, KASA CORPORATION, THEODORE G ANDRESSEN, LITTLE FARMS EXXON, INC., GIOE ENTERPRISES INC, GSR ENTERPRISES INC, SUSAN HOFFER, HOFFER'S OF CHALMETTE, INC., JUNE ENTERPRISES INC, K SIMON INC, K D E INC, TAHIR ALI KHAN, KHAN INC, LAKE FOREST AUTOMOTIVE SERVICE, INC., POMES INC, SEVERN VENTURES, L.L.C., TERRACE CORPORATION, TRI G 1 INC, R N STARK INC, ABDUL SATTAR KHAN, NAYEEM INC, ASHFAQ A CHEEMA, SGR ENTERPRISES, [*2] L.L.C., plaintiffs: Glen Alan Woods, Glen A. Woods, Attorney at Law, New Orleans, LA.

For EXXON CORPORATION, defendant: Robert B. McNeal, Edward F. Kohnke, IV, Frilot, Partridge, Kohnke & Clements, LC, New Orleans, LA.

For RETIF OIL & FUEL INC, defendant: George Pivach, II, Pivach & Pivach, Belle Chasse, LA.

For RETIF OIL & FUEL INC, defendant: Alphonse M. Alfano, Bassman, Mitchell & Alfano, Washington, DC.

Judges: Carl J. Barbier, Judge.

Opinion by: Carl J. Barbier

Opinion

This matter is before the Court on Plaintiffs' Motion to Remand. Plaintiffs assert this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction and this matter should be remanded to the state court from which it was removed. Defendants, Exxon Corporation, d/b/a Exxon Company, U.S.A. ("Exxon") and Retif Oil & Fuel, Inc. ("Retif") oppose remand. The motion, set for hearing on October 13, 1999, is before the Court on briefs without oral argument.

Background

Plaintiffs, a group of Exxon retail service station dealers, filed suit in state court against defendants Exxon and Retif, one of Exxon's jobbers or distributors, seeking injunctive relief, damages, and attorneys fees based upon alleged antitrust violations, [*3] unfair trade practices and price discrimination under Louisiana law. Plaintiffs expressly disavowed any federal claim. Nonetheless, defendants removed the matter to federal court, suggesting there is federal subject matter jurisdiction based upon diversity of citizenship and jurisdictional amount. 28 U.S.C. § 1332. Although Retif is a Louisiana citizen whose presence as a defendant would destroy diversity jurisdiction, defendants argue that removal is proper because Retif was "fraudulently joined". In other words, defendants contend that plaintiffs have not stated a viable cause of action against Retif and, therefore, Retif's citizenship must be disregarded for purposes of diversity jurisdiction.

Applicable Legal Standard

HN1[¹] Title 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\) provides that "any civil action brought in a State Court of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction may be removed by the defendant. . . ." Removal jurisdiction must be strictly construed, however, because it "implicates important federalism concerns." Frank v. Bear Stearns & Co., 128 F.3d 919, 922 \(5th Cir.1997\).

In addition, HN2[²] any [*4] doubts concerning removal must be resolved against removal and in favor of remanding the case back to state court. HN3[³] Vasquez v. Alto Bonito Gravel Plant Corporation, 56 F.3d 689 \(5th Cir. 1995\). The party invoking the removal jurisdiction of federal courts bears the burden of establishing federal jurisdiction over the state court suit. HN4[⁴] Frank, 128 F.3d at 922. If at any time before final judgment it appears that the district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, the case shall be remanded." 28 U.S.C. § 1447\(c\).

Defendants argue that jurisdiction is proper in federal court based on diversity of citizenship, 28 U.S.C. § 1332\(a\)\(4\), and that plaintiff's joinder of the nondiverse distributor, Retif, as a defendant is fraudulent. HN5[⁵] In determining the validity of a claim of fraudulent joinder, the district court "must evaluate all of the factual allegations in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, resolving all contested issues of substantive fact in favor of plaintiff." Burden v. General Dynamics Corporation, 60 F.3d 213 \(5th Cir. 1995\), citing B., Inc. v. Miller Brewing Co., 663 F.2d 545 \(5th Cir. 1981\). [*5] The court must resolve all ambiguities in the controlling state law in plaintiff's favor. 60 F.3d at 216; HN6[⁶] Dodson v. Spiliada Maritime Corp., 951 F.2d 40 \(5th Cir. 1992\). If the plaintiff has any possibility of recovery under state law against the party whose joinder is questioned, then the joinder is not fraudulent in fact or law. Dodson, 951 F.2d at 42.

Discussion

In order to determine whether plaintiffs have stated a possible claim against the non-diverse defendant, Retif, the Court has carefully reviewed the original Petition filed in state court. In that Petition, plaintiffs allege the following:

Plaintiffs are Louisiana citizens who operate, or who formerly operated, Exxon service stations in the greater New Orleans area. Defendant Exxon not only supplies its branded petroleum products to retail dealers such as plaintiffs, but also operates company-owned retail stations in direct competition with plaintiffs' stations. Exxon also owns many of the stations which are leased to retail dealers such as plaintiffs. Defendant Retif is an Exxon wholesale distributor or "jobber". Retif entered into a contract with Exxon to distribute certain petroleum products, [*6] including motor oil and gasoline, to independent dealers. Retif also operates its own retail service stations.

Exxon sells its products to Retif at a substantially lower price than the price at which the same products are sold to plaintiffs. Because of the contract between Exxon and Retif, plaintiffs cannot purchase their petroleum products from Retif or any other wholesaler or jobber. The differential between the price plaintiffs must pay to Exxon and the price at which Exxon sells to Retif is much greater than the cost of delivery or transportation. In fact, the price differential is so great that it allows Retif, even after its profit markup, to resell the products to other, independent retailers or to sell at its own retail stations, at a price less than that charged to plaintiffs by Exxon. As a consequence, defendants Exxon and Retif, by virtue of their contract, have acted and conspired to engage in unfair trade practices and to limit plaintiffs' ability to fairly compete with service stations operated by Exxon and Retif, or by independent dealers serviced by Retif. More specifically, Exxon and Retif allegedly have violated Louisiana law in several ways, including violations [*7] of the Louisiana Antitrust Law, La. R.S. 51:121 et seq.; the Louisiana Price Discrimination Act, La. R.S. 51:331, et seq.; and the Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act ("LUTPA"), La. R.S. 51:1401, et seq.. In addition, plaintiffs allege a claim for "unjust enrichment" under Louisiana law.

Defendants argue that these allegations do not amount to even a possible cause of action against Retif because it is Exxon, not Retif, which controls the distribution and pricing of Exxon petroleum products. Retif argues that it has no authority or control over the manner in which Exxon sets up its dealer arrangements or over the manner in which Exxon decides to price its product or control distribution of its products. In fact, Retif claims it was presented by

Exxon with a standard form, "take-it-or-leave-it" contract. The contract is non-negotiable and Retif had only two choices, accept the jobber contract or it will not be authorized to sell Exxon's products. Therefore, argues Retif, it could not sell or distribute Exxon products to retail dealers such as plaintiffs without breaching its contractual relationship with Exxon.¹

[*8] However, Retif's arguments beg the real question, which is whether or not the contract or agreement between Exxon and Retif violates Louisiana law. For Retif to suggest that it cannot be held liable for the reason that it is acting pursuant to its contract with Exxon is circular reasoning at best. No one compelled Retif to enter into an agreement in violation of Louisiana law.² Whether Retif has done so is at the very heart of this case.

(a) Louisiana Antitrust Law

HN7 The Louisiana Antitrust Law, La. R.S. 51:121 et seq., makes illegal "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . ." La. R.S. 51:122. The same law provides that "no HN8 person, engaged in commerce shall, in the course of such commerce, . . . sell, or contract for the sale of goods, [*9] . . . or other commodities, . . . for use, consumption, or resale within this state, or fix a price . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser . . . shall not use or deal in the goods . . . or other commodities of a competitor of the vendor . . . where the effect of the sale, contract for sale, . . . or condition, agreement, or understanding is to substantially lessen competition or tends to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." La. R.S. 51:124\(A\). HN9 Any person who claims loss or damage by a violation of these provisions may sue for injunctive relief. La. R.S. 51:129. In addition, treble damages and attorneys fees may be recovered. La. R.S. 51:137.

The Louisiana Antitrust Law is virtually identical to the federal Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq. Under the Sherman Act, not every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade is unlawful, but only those combinations or contracts which are unlawful or unreasonable. This is called the Rule of Reason. Continental T.V. Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 \(1977\). Similarly, Louisiana courts have recognized that the [*10] broad language of Louisiana's prohibition against every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade should not be taken literally, but must be interpreted to reach only those combinations or contracts which are unlawful. Louisiana Power & Light Co. v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 518 So. 2d 1050, 1053 \(La. App. 4th Cir. 1987\), writ denied, HN10 523 So. 2d 232 (La. 1988).

In order to state a claim under the Louisiana Antitrust Law, "the plaintiff is required to allege that the defendant is a party to a contract which results in an unreasonable restraint of trade." Jefferson v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc., 713 So. 2d 785, 790 \(La. App. 4th Cir. 1998\); Reppond v. City of Denham Springs, 572 So. 2d 224, 230 \(La. App. 1st Cir. 1990\).

In Jefferson, the plaintiffs were current or former Chevron service station dealers in the greater New Orleans area. Plaintiffs filed suit in state court against Chevron and several of its jobbers contending that by means of the contractual arrangements set up by Chevron with its dealers and jobbers, Chevron arbitrarily manipulated the price of the fuel it sold to independent dealers and [*11] unreasonably prohibited plaintiffs from purchasing fuel at lower prices from jobbers. The Louisiana Court of Appeal found that such allegations stated a viable cause of action under the state antitrust law. 713 So. 2d at 789-791.³

¹ Exxon has made essentially identical arguments in opposition to plaintiffs' motion to remand.

² To the extent defendants rely on their contract, the Court notes that the contract itself contains an explicit provision that any unlawful provision shall be considered inoperative. Distributor Sales Agreement, para. 24.

³ The Court recognizes that the issue on appeal involved only the trial court's denial of Chevron's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs' claims against the jobbers were not part of the appeal. 713 So. 2d at 788. However, if plaintiffs stated a cause of action against Chevron based upon its contract with its jobbers, then the Louisiana Antitrust Law would apply to all parties to the contract. The very nature of the antitrust claim alleges an agreement between these parties to restrain trade. La. R.S. 51:122. As

[*12] In this case plaintiffs' factual allegations practically mirror those by the plaintiffs in the Jefferson case. Plaintiffs have alleged a viable claim against defendant Retif. At the very least, it cannot be said that plaintiffs have "no possibility" of recovering against this non-diverse defendant. Although the Court has no doubt about its conclusion, if any such doubt existed it would necessarily be resolved in plaintiffs' favor.⁴

(b) Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act

Plaintiffs also allege claims against Retif and Exxon under the HN11 Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices [*13] Act, La. R.S. 51:1401 et seq. ("LUTPA").⁵ LUTPA makes unlawful any "unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce. . ." R.S. 51:1405(A). HN12 The statute expressly allows for a private cause of action on behalf of "any person who suffers any ascertainable loss of money . . . as a result of the use or employment by another person of an unfair or deceptive method, act or practice declared unlawful by La. R.S. 51:1405 . . . La. R.S. 51:1409\(A\). This language has been interpreted to confer the private right of action on both consumers and business competitors, such as the plaintiff dealers in this case. Jefferson, 713 So. 2d at 792. HN13 LUTPA provides a cause of action both for trade practices that are "unfair" and those that are "deceptive". It is not necessary that the alleged act be both unfair and deceptive. Id. The statutory language is very broad and, as a result, Louisiana courts determine what constitutes an unfair or deceptive practice on a case by case basis. Id. HN14 In analyzing a claim under the statute, Louisiana courts have used a two-prong test, finding a practice unfair when (1) it offends established [*14] public policy, or (2) it is unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious. HN15 Fraud, misrepresentation, deception and similar conduct are prohibited, but mere negligence is not. Otherwise legal actions can be found unfair or deceptive if they produce unfair or deceptive results. Comment, Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act: Broad Langauge And Generous Remedies Supplemented By A Confusing Body Of Case Law, 41 Loy. L. Rev. 759, 762 (1996).

Plaintiffs have alleged that because of the contract between Exxon and Retif, plaintiffs are being charged unreasonably high prices for the gasoline and other products which they are forced to purchase from Exxon directly. Plaintiffs allege this arrangement is unfair and violates LUTPA. While Exxon and Retif argue that their contractual relationship [*15] is nothing but an ordinary and lawful business arrangement, that issue must be decided by the ultimate fact finder at trial. Plaintiffs' allegations make out a viable claim against Retif under LUTPA. Jefferson, supra, 713 So. 2d at 793.⁶

For these reasons, this Court cannot say that the non-diverse defendant, Retif, was fraudulently joined. Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED that plaintiffs' Motion to Remand should be and is hereby GRANTED;

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1447\(c\), this case is hereby REMANDED to the Civil District Court for [*16] the Parish of Orleans.

* * * *

the Louisiana appellate court recognized, all that is required to state a claim under the antitrust law are factual allegations that "the defendant is a party to a contract" which unreasonably restrains trade. 713 So. 2d at 789.

⁴ Vasquez v. Alto Bonito Gravel Plant Corp., 56 F.3d 689 \(5th Cir. 1995\); Dodson v. Spiliada Maritime Corp., 951 F.2d 40 \(5th Cir. 1992\). The Court notes that the Jefferson v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc. lawsuit was removed from state court and then remanded by this Court despite Chevron's claim that its jobbers had been fraudulently joined. 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10334, 1994 WL 396326 (Berrigan, J., E.D.La. 1994).

⁵ For an overview of LUTPA, see: Comment, Louisiana Unfair Trade Practices Act: Broad Language And Generous Remedies Supplemented By A Confusing Body Of Case Law, 41 Loy. L. Rev. Review 759 (1996).

⁶ Plaintiffs have also alleged claims under the Louisiana Price Discrimination Act, La. R.S. 51:331 (apparently against Exxon only) and for "unjust enrichment" under Louisiana law. Because the Court has found that plaintiffs have alleged viable claims against the non-diverse defendant, Retif, under the Louisiana Antitrust Law and LUTPA, it is not necessary to discuss these remaining claims.

Carl J. Barbier

Judge

End of Document

Alabama Ambulance Serv. v. City of Phenix City

United States District Court for the Middle District of Alabama, Eastern Division

October 21, 1999, Decided ; October 21, 1999, Filed

Civil Action No. 98-A-921-E

Reporter

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,870

ALABAMA AMBULANCE SERVICE, INC., Plaintiff, v. CITY OF PHENIX CITY, ALABAMA, et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] CRHS's Motion for Summary Judgment GRANTED as to 15 U.S.C. § 2 claims. Judgment entered in favor of Defendant, CRHS Long Term and Home Care, Inc. and against Plaintiff, Alabama Ambulance Service, Inc.

Core Terms

interstate commerce, bid, summary judgment, monopolization, Sherman Act, subcontract, monopoly power, antitrust, emergency, ambulance service, alleges, prices, conspiracy to monopolize, material fact, monopoly, nonmoving, genuine, anticompetitive, competitors, conspiracy, terminated, pleadings, supplies

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1 [+] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), summary judgment is proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188, *1188 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763, 1

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

The party asking for summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The movant can meet this burden by presenting evidence showing there is no dispute of material fact, or by showing, or pointing out to, the district court that the nonmoving party has failed to present evidence in support of some element of its case on which it bears the ultimate burden of proof.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN3 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Once the moving party for summary judgment has met its burden, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings and by its own affidavits, or by the depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. To avoid summary judgment, the nonmoving party must do more than show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. On the other hand, the evidence of the nonmovant must be believed and all justifiable inferences must be drawn in its favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN4 Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

After the nonmoving party has responded to the motion for summary judgment, the court must grant summary judgment if there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188, *1188 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To determine whether a practice violates the antitrust laws, the court must look at the effect of the practice challenged on competition in the field as a whole.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. prohibits the formation of trusts to restrain trade, while section two of the Sherman Act prohibits the monopolization of markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

15 U.S.C.S. § 2 affords a basis for three distinct antitrust offenses: monopolization, attempt to monopolize, and conspiracy to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Real Property Law > Common Interest Communities > Condominiums > Management

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [down] Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188, *1188 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763, 1

When alleging a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., claim in the Eleventh Circuit, jurisdiction requires a focus on the interstate markets involved in the defendant's business activities. Jurisdiction can be met in two ways: the activities must either be in interstate commerce or the activities must affect interstate commerce. The latter test comes from the well-settled rule that the interstate commerce requirement can be satisfied even if the source or application of the business restraint is entirely local.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > State Court Review

HN10 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Local activity can satisfy the interstate commerce requirement of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., if the restraint has a substantial effect on interstate commerce, and stifles or restrains such commerce. Therefore, to establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must demonstrate by submission of evidence that the defendants' local activities have a substantial effect on some other appreciable activity in interstate commerce. A plaintiff is not required to show that the defendants' challenged conduct itself had a substantial effect on interstate commerce. The plaintiff must only establish that there exists a sufficient nexus between the challenged activity and interstate commerce so that it can be said as a matter of practical economics that there is a not insubstantial effect on the interstate commerce involved.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

When determining whether interstate commerce under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is affected by an alleged violation, courts will often examine both the defendant's relationship with interstate markets and the plaintiffs.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment may be particularly appropriate in an antitrust case because of the chill antitrust litigation can have on legitimate price competition. Consequently, when opposing a motion for summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff must present evidence that tends, when interpreted in a light most favorable to plaintiff, to exclude the possibility that defendant's conduct was as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188, *1188 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13 [↑] Sherman Act, Claims

A claim of monopoly under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 requires two elements: possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN14 [↑] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Conspiracy to monopolize has three elements: the existence of a combination or conspiracy, an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, and specific intent to monopolize.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: Deborah H. Biggers.

For Defendant: W. Donald Morgan, Jeffrey A. Brown.

Judges: W. HAROLD ALBRITTON, CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: W. HAROLD ALBRITTON

Opinion

[*1190] MEMORANDUM OPINION

I. INTRODUCTION

This case is before the court on a Motion for Summary Judgment filed by the Defendant, CRHS Long Term and Home Care, Inc. ("CRHS"), on July 27, 1999 (Doc. # 34). Also before this court is a Motion to Strike filed by CRHS (Doc. # 43).

Plaintiff, Alabama Ambulance Service, Inc. ("Alabama Ambulance"), filed its Complaint on August 19, 1998, against both CRHS and the City of Phenix City (the "City" or "Phenix City"). Alabama Ambulance and the City filed a joint Motion to Dismiss the City on September 17, 1999, after a settlement was reached (Doc. # 47).

Alabama Ambulance filed a Motion for Default Judgment against CRHS on September 25, 1998. On October 2, 1998, CRHS filed its Answer with the court. Consequently, on October 13, 1998, this [2] court entered a Consent Order finding that the Motion for Default Judgment was moot. On January 13, 1999, CRHS filed a Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. On February 25, 1999, this court denied CRHS's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings.

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

HN1 [↑] Under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." HN2 [↑] Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\).

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188, *1190 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763, 2

The party asking for summary judgment "always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for [*1191] its motion, and identifying those portions of the 'pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any,' which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Id. at 323. The movant can meet this burden by presenting evidence showing there [3] is no dispute of material fact, or by showing, or pointing out to, the district court that the nonmoving party has failed to present evidence in support of some element of its case on which it bears the ultimate burden of proof. See HN3 [↑] id. at 322-24.

Once the moving party has met its burden, Rule 56\(e\) "requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings and by [its] own affidavits, or by the 'depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file,' designate 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Id. at 324. To avoid summary judgment, the nonmoving party "must do more than show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). On the other hand, the evidence of the nonmovant must be believed and all justifiable inferences must be drawn in its favor. See HN4 [↑] Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\).

After the nonmoving party has responded to the motion for summary judgment, the court must grant summary judgment [4] if there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

III. FACTS

The submissions of the parties establish the following facts viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant:

Alabama Ambulance is an African-American owned and operated corporation. Alabama Ambulance has provided ambulance service in and around Phenix City, Alabama for thirty years. CRHS, a non-minority owned corporation, also has provided ambulance service in Phenix City.

On February 27, 1996, Phenix City issued a solicitation for bids to provide emergency medical services and transports in response to emergency 911 center notifications in Phenix City. Prior to the bid announcement by the City, Alabama Ambulance had shared the contract for emergency 911 medical services with other ambulance service providers, operating on a rotational basis. In response to the bid solicitation, CRHS and Alabama Ambulance each submitted a bid.

On September 9, 1996, Phenix City awarded the bid to CRHS and entered into a contract with CRHS under which CRHS became the exclusive provider of emergency 911 medical and transport services [5] in Phenix City. CRHS subsequently entered into a subcontract with Alabama Ambulance whereby the two companies agreed to handle the emergency 911 calls in Phenix City on a rotational basis beginning in November of 1996. On August 17, 1997, however, CRHS unilaterally canceled the subcontract with Alabama Ambulance.

Alabama Ambulance alleges that CRHS violated 15 U.S.C. § 2 by conspiring with Phenix City and entering into an exclusive contract with the City to provide emergency 911 ambulance service. See Complaint P13. Alabama Ambulance also alleges that CRHS has deprived Alabama Ambulance of the "rights to make and enforce contracts" as in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1981. See id. P14. Finally, Alabama Ambulance alleges that CRHS wrongfully canceled its subcontract to provide ambulance service. See id. P11.

IV. DISCUSSION

CRHS has challenged each of Alabama Ambulance's claims in its Motion for Summary Judgment. The court will address the antitrust claim in this opinion, but will defer ruling on the Motion as to the other claims and the Motion to Strike until after hearing from counsel at the pretrial hearing.

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188, *1191-1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763, 5

[*1192] The Sherman [6] Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. \(1997\), was enacted to protect competition and prevent monopolies. See Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U.S. 231, 95 L. Ed. 239, 71 S. Ct. 240 \(1951\). The Act rests on the theory that "the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of . . . economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of . . . democratic political and social institutions." Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). The Sherman Act was not enacted to protect competitors from competitive business practices. HN5[↑] Thus, to determine whether a practice violates the anti-trust laws, the court must look at the effect of the practice challenged on competition in the field as a whole. See Checker Motors Corp. v. Chrysler Corp., 283 F. Supp. 876 \(S.D.N.Y. 1968\) (explaining that competition, not competitors, is protected by the Sherman HN6[↑] Act). Section one of the Sherman Act prohibits [7] the formation of trusts to restrain trade, while section two of the Act prohibits the monopolization of markets.

Section two of the Sherman Act states,

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 35,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

HN7[↑] HN8[↑] 15 U.S.C. § 2. Section 2 affords a basis for three distinct antitrust offenses: monopolization, attempt to monopolize, conspiracy to monopolize. See Heattransfer Corp. v. Volkswagenwerk, 553 F.2d 964, 981 \(5th Cir. 1977\) (recognizing three claims)¹; see also Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Hearst/ABC Viacom Entertainment Servs., 746 F. Supp. 320, 326 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\). Alabama Ambulance contends that CRHS and the City are "conspiring to put minority owned [Alabama Ambulance] out of business [8] and have caused a monopoly to exist in the area of emergency medical services and ambulance services in Phenix City, Alabama, that substantially affects interstate commerce . . ." Complaint P13. From its Complaint, it appears that Alabama Ambulance is alleging a monopolization claim and a conspiracy to monopolize claim.

[9] Before addressing the two § 2 claims specifically, the court must find that the threshold jurisdictional requirement for a Sherman Act claim is met. When alleging a Sherman Act claim in the Eleventh Circuit "jurisdiction requires a focus on the interstate markets involved in the defendant's business activities." Shahawy v. Harrison, 778 F.2d 636, 640 \(11th Cir. 1985\). Jurisdiction can be met in two ways: the activities must either be "in interstate commerce" or the activities must "affect interstate commerce." See Burke v. Ford, 389 U.S. 320, 321, 19 L. Ed. 2d 554, 88 S. Ct. 443 \(1967\); see also Chatham Condominium Ass'n v. Century Village, [\[*1193\] et al., 597 F.2d 1002, 1007 \(11th Cir. 1979\)](#). The latter test comes from the well-settled rule that the interstate commerce

¹ In the case of Bonner v. City of Prichard, Alabama, 661 F.2d 1206, 1207 \(11th Cir. 1981\), the Eleventh Circuit adopted Fifth Circuit law prior to September 31, 1981, as binding on the Eleventh Circuit.

Other cases in the Eleventh Circuit have stated that only two claims exist under a § 2 claim, namely monopolization and attempted monopolization. See Ad-Vantage Tel. Dir. Consult. v. GTE Directories, 849 F.2d 1336, 1341 \(11th Cir. 1987\). However, Eleventh Circuit cases have addressed the conspiracy to monopolize claim as a separate claim. See Levine v. Central Florida Medical Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1555-56 \(11th Cir. 1996\) (giving elements of monopoly, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize). The statute includes monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. Consequently, this court finds that binding precedent indicates that there are three § 2 claims as stated in the statute.

requirement can be satisfied even if the "source or application of the business restraint is entirely local." Huelsman v. Civic Center Corp., 873 F.2d 1171, 1174 (8th Cir. 1989).²

[10] Local activity can satisfy the interstate commerce requirement "if the restraint has a 'substantial' effect on interstate commerce," and "stifle[s] or restrain[s]" such commerce. 873 F.2d at 1175. Therefore, to establish jurisdiction a plaintiff must demonstrate by submission of evidence that the defendants' local activities have a substantial effect on some other appreciable activity in interstate commerce. See McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, 444 U.S. 232, 242, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 (1980). A plaintiff is not required to show that the defendants' challenged conduct itself had a substantial effect on interstate commerce, as the Supreme Court has said: "If establishing jurisdiction required a showing that the unlawful conduct itself had an effect on interstate commerce, jurisdiction would be defeated by a demonstration that the alleged restraint failed to have its intended anticompetitive effect." Id. at 243.³ [12] The plaintiff must only establish that there exists a sufficient nexus between the challenged activity and interstate commerce so that it can be said "as a matter of practical economics" that there is "a not insubstantial [11] effect on the interstate commerce involved."⁴ Id. at 246.

There is some dispute as to whether a court can look at the activities of a plaintiff to determine whether a defendant's activities affect interstate commerce. See Construction Aggregate Transport, Inc. v. Florida Rock Industries, Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 766-68 (11th Cir. 1983) (hereinafter "CAT"). McLain, which has given the Eleventh Circuit guidance in this area, focused on the activities of the defendant, but as the CAT court pointed out, the McLain case "involved plaintiffs who were consumers rather than businesses." CAT, 710 F.2d at 766 n.31. The CAT court found that a court should initially look at the defendant's interstate commerce activities [13] but that often times a court will have to look at the plaintiff's activities as well to determine if jurisdiction exists. Consequently the CAT court found, HN11[↑] "when determining [*1194] whether interstate commerce is affected by an alleged violation courts will often examine both the defendant's relationship with interstate markets and the plaintiffs." Id. After all, the CAT court noted, this "approach makes good sense because injury to the plaintiff may result directly in injury to the market." Id.

Alabama Ambulance only addresses how its business operations allegedly have a substantial effect on interstate commerce. See Pl. Br. at 3. Alabama Ambulance contends that it spent "thousands of dollars each year" purchasing supplies from out of state suppliers. See id. To evidence these expenditures, Alabama Ambulance submitted over fifty invoice receipts for supplies purchased from companies located outside of the state of Alabama ²This "aggregation of affect" theory harks back to the Supreme Court's holding in Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 87 L. Ed. 122, 63 S. Ct. 82 (1942).

HN10[↑]

³The court recognizes that the circuits are split as to the interpretation of which activities of the defendant must affect interstate commerce. See ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 32-33 (4th ed. 1997). The Supreme Court announced in McLain, "To establish the jurisdictional element of a Sherman Act violation it would be sufficient for petitioners to demonstrate a substantial effect on interstate commerce generated by respondents' . . . activity." McLain, 444 U.S. at 242. Confusion arose, however, when the Court went on to say, "Petitioners need not make the more particularized showing of an effect on interstate commerce caused by the alleged conspiracy to fix commission rates, or by those other aspects of respondents' activity that are alleged to be unlawful." Id. These two comments by the Supreme Court have led to a circuit split over what activities must affect interstate commerce. Compare United States v. ORS, Inc., 997 F.2d 628, 629 n.4 (9th Cir. 1993) (noting that to meet the "effect on commerce test" the plaintiff had to allege that the defendant's business had a substantial effect on commerce) with Wells Real Estate, Inc. v. Greater Lowell Bd. of Realtors, 850 F.2d 803, 808-10 (1st Cir.) (finding that the defendant's "unlawful activity" must affect interstate commerce). The Eleventh Circuit has adopted the more lenient interpretation, requiring only that the defendant's general business affect interstate commerce. See Shahawy, 778 F.2d at 641.

⁴The Eleventh Circuit has found that "the reach of the Sherman Act is coextensive with Congress' power under the Commerce Clause." McLain, 444 U.S. at 241. Thus, the ultimate question for the court to ask when addressing a question of interstate commerce is whether Congress can prohibit the challenged conduct under the Commerce Clause. See Chatham, 597 F.2d at 1008.

and for services rendered by non-Alabama companies.⁵ See Pl. Br. Exhs. CRHS claims that the "contract and subcontract at issue which [Alabama Ambulance] alleges support its claim for damages based upon the violation of the [Sherman Act] deal [14] exclusively with the provision of emergency medical transport services within Phenix City, Russell County, Alabama." Def. Br. at 4. CRHS alleges that all of the activities challenged are local in nature and do not affect interstate commerce. See id.

The court notes that Alabama Ambulance does not address whether CRHS's activities affect interstate commerce.⁶ However, because the Eleventh Circuit has recognized that the defendant's activities are not the only activities to consider when deciding the jurisdictional issue, the court is willing to overlook this flaw [15] and consider Alabama Ambulance's evidence. At least one other court has found that an ambulance service provider in a single community may affect interstate commerce.⁷ Also, courts have found that "a plaintiff's purchase of supplies from out of state or its use of interstate financing has frequently been held to satisfy the interstate commerce requirement on the theory that if the plaintiff were competitively injured by the restraint, it would be forced to reduce its use of supplies or financing." Antitrust Law Developments 35-36 (citing CAT, 710 F.2d at 767-68). Because Alabama Ambulance has provided some evidence of interstate commerce and because this evidence was in the form of supplies bought out of state, the court finds that, although Alabama Ambulance's evidence on this point is not overwhelming, it is sufficient to meet the jurisdictional burden, and this court may consider its § 2 claims.

[16] Assuming that proper jurisdictional facts exist, however, the court concludes that the plaintiff has failed to present sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact to support Alabama Ambulance's monopoly or conspiracy to monopolize claims.

The Supreme Court has made clear that HN12 summary judgment may be particularly appropriate in an antitrust case because [*1195] of the chill antitrust litigation can have on legitimate price competition. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594. Consequently, "when opposing a motion for summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff must present evidence that tends, when interpreted in a light most favorable to plaintiff, to exclude the possibility that defendant's conduct was as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conduct." McGahee v. Northern Propane Gas Co., 858 F.2d 1487, 1493 (11th Cir. 1988) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588). Alabama Ambulance is unable to meet this burden.

HN13 A claim of monopoly under § 2 requires two elements: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development [17] as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); T. Harris Young & Assoc., Inc. v. Marquette Electronics, Inc., 931 F.2d 816, 823 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1013, 116 L. Ed. 2d 749, 112 S. Ct. 658 (1991). Having monopoly power is a key element of the monopolization claim. Monopoly power is defined as "the power to raise prices to supra-competitive levels or . . . the power to exclude competition in the relevant market either by restricting entry of new competitors or by driving existing competitors out of the market." US Anchor Mfg.,

⁵ The court notes that the evidence of interstate commerce submitted by Alabama Ambulance does not evidence expenditures during the time period of the subcontract or contract. The contract between the City and CRHS commenced on September 9, 1996, and was to run for 24 months. See Contract Exh. PP 1 & 8. The subcontract between CRHS and Alabama Ambulance commenced on November 18, 1996 and ended on August 17, 1997. See SubContract Exh. P 1.

⁶ The court does note, however, that CRHS is a Georgia company doing business in Alabama.

⁷ In Springs Ambulance Service, Inc. v. City of Rancho Mirage, et al., it was pled that "medical supplies, ambulances and gasoline, manufactured and/or processed outside the state of California, are purchased in connection with the ambulance services provided" by the parties to the suit. See 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13356, No. CV82-5917CBM, 1983 WL 1878, at *6 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 27, 1983), rev'd in part on other grounds, 745 F.2d 1270 (9th Cir. 1984). In addition, the plaintiff in Springs Ambulance alleged that the activities of the city and the other defendants "affect the likelihood that persons and business presently located outside of California [would] seek employment or start businesses for the purpose of rendering ambulance services . . ." Id. at *7. Judge Marshall found that there was "a sufficient nexus" between the ambulance service and interstate commerce to support an federal antitrust claim. See id.

71 F. Supp. 2d 1188, *1195 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16763, 17

Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 994 (11th Cir. 1993) (quoting American Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1581 (11th Cir. 1985)); see United States v. E.I. du Pont & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956) (noting that monopoly power is "the power to control prices or exclude competition").

In the present case, CRHS alleges that it does not have the requisite monopoly power. See [18] Def. Br. at 5-7. According to CRHS, the contract that was bid on by both Alabama Ambulance and CRHS was a contract for a fixed term at a fixed cost. See Def. Br. at 6. CRHS states that although it won the bid it was not able to "control prices or exclude competition" in the emergency 911 field. Id. CRHS alleges that it could not raise prices during the term of the contract and that it would have to submit another bid at the end of the contract to maintain its contract for providing emergency 911 services to Phenix City. See id. These facts are similar to the facts of Kirk-Mayer, Inc. v. Pac Ord, Inc., 626 F. Supp. 1168 (C.D. Cal. 1986).

The Kirk-Mayer court found that a successful bidder for a contract does not necessarily have monopoly power for purposes of the Sherman Act. See Kirk-Mayer, 626 F. Supp. at 1170. In Kirk-Mayer, the defendant successfully bid for "an exclusive 'blue collar' contract to repair and maintain electronics equipment for the Naval Electronics Systems Engineering Center at Vallejo, California." Id. at 1169. The contract was for a fixed term at a fixed price. See id. at 1170. [19] Other firms bid for the contract, including the plaintiff. See id. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant violated § 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing the market after it won the bid. See id. The Kirk-Mayer court found that "a government contractor who obtains the contract for a fixed term at a fixed price in open bidding against a number of other bidders . . . does not have the power to control prices or exclude competition." Id. at 1171. Consequently, because the bid winner did not have the power to control prices, the winner did not have monopoly power.

Alabama Ambulance argues that Kirk-Mayer is not applicable to the present case because CRHS entered into a subcontract with Alabama Ambulance. See Pl. Br. at 4. The court, however, disagrees. Simply because CRHS later sub-contracted with Alabama Ambulance does not mean that CRHS gained monopoly power over the emergency 911 market. CRHS, as Kirk-Mayer illustrates, did not have monopoly power over the 911 market when it contracted with Alabama Ambulance. Thus, [*1196] when CRHS terminated its subcontract with Alabama Ambulance it was not controlling the market in a way so as to have market power-it [20] was only exercising control over the contract it was awarded by the City.

The Eleventh Circuit, in Colsa Corp. v. Martin Marietta Services, Inc., 133 F.3d 853 (1998), also has addressed the monopoly power issue in a contract bidding situation. Colsa found that a subcontractor who was suing a government contractor under the Sherman Act for alleged anti-competitive conduct has a suit in contract not in antitrust law. This court finds this holding applicable in this case. In Colsa, the Eleventh Circuit reviewed the granting of summary judgment for the government contractor. Colsa had filed a suit against Martin Marietta for violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act. See Colsa, 133 F.3d 853. Martin Marietta had been awarded a contract with the United States Navy to provide "operation and maintenance" services for the Atlantic Fleet Weapons Training Facility in Puerto Rico. See id. at 854. The contract was for six months with four one-year options exercisable by the government. See id. In order to perform the contract, Martin Marietta entered into a subcontract with Colsa "whereby Colsa agreed to provide a limited number of personnel [21] to support Martin Marietta in performing" the government contract. Id. Colsa served as a subcontractor for the original term and three additional renewals. See id. Before the final option by the government was exercised, Martin Marietta terminated the subcontract with Colsa. See id. at 855.

Colsa argued that the alleged antitrust violation was Martin Marietta's "termination of [Colsa's] subcontract . . ." Id. at 856 (quoting Colsa Complaint). Colsa claimed that the termination of the subcontract was predatory and was an attempt to eliminate Colsa as a competitor. See id. The Eleventh Circuit stated, "We fail to see how this conduct can be characterized as anticompetitive. . . . It is not anticompetitive for Martin Marietta (a party to the [government contract]) to exclude Colsa (a non-party to the [government contract]) from performing services under the [government contract]." Id.

Although Colsa is a predatory pricing case, the monopoly power question is premised on similar facts to the present case. CRHS was awarded the emergency 911 service contract by Phenix City through a bidding process. CRHS subcontracted with [22] Alabama Ambulance in order to fulfill its contract with the City. CRHS then terminated its contract with Alabama Ambulance during the term of its contract with the City. This conduct, like the conduct in Colsa, can not be characterized as anti-competitive and is not actionable under § 2 of the Sherman Act. Consequently, Alabama Ambulance has not provided the court with evidence of a genuine issue of material fact to sustain a monopoly claim.⁸ As in Colsa, this court finds this case to sound in contract law and not in antitrust law.

Alabama Ambulance also alleges that CRHS conspired to monopolize. HN14 [+] Conspiracy to monopolize has three elements: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy, (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize. See United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 225, 91 L. Ed. 2010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 (1947), [23] overruled on other grounds by Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Co., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984); Hill Aircraft & Leasing Corp. v. Fulton County, 561 F. Supp. 667, 677 (N.D. Ga. 1982), aff'd mem., 729 F.2d 1467 (11th Cir. 1984). Because this court has found that the alleged activities of CRHS and Phenix City do not amount to an activity that can be considered illegal monopolization, CRHS can not be found liable for conspiracy to monopolize, either. See Antitrust Law Developments 305 (noting that "where the [*1197] alleged conspiracy, if successful, would not amount to illegal monopolization, there may be no liability for conspiracy to monopolize") (citing Phoenix Elec. Co. v. National Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 861 F. Supp. 1498, 1514 (D. Or. 1994) (finding that because a shared monopoly does not violate § 2, neither does conspiracy to create shared monopoly)). In this situation, even if there was a conspiracy to have a white owned company provide the emergency 911 services in Phenix City, the contract did not violate § 2; therefore, the conspiracy to monopolize claim cannot stand.

V. [24] CONCLUSION

CRHS's Motion for Summary Judgment is due to be GRANTED as to the 15 U.S.C. § 2 claims. A separate Order and Judgment will be entered in accordance with this Memorandum Opinion.

Done this 21st day of October, 1999.

W. HAROLD ALBRITTON

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER AND JUDGMENT

In accordance with the Memorandum Opinion entered in this case on this day, it is hereby ORDERED that the Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED as to the Plaintiff's antitrust claim, alleging violation of 15 U.S.C. § 2. Judgment is hereby entered in favor of the Defendant, CRHS Long Term and Home Care, Inc., and against the Plaintiff, Alabama Ambulance Service, Inc., on that claim. Ruling is deferred on the Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment as to the remaining claims.

DONE this 21st day of October, 1999.

W. HAROLD ALBRITTON

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

⁸ The court further notes that Alabama Ambulance does not address what the "relevant market" is in this case. Relevant market is an element of the monopoly claim.

Pickett v. HCA Hosp. Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

October 22, 1999, Decided

No. 98-40697, No. 98-40873

Reporter

1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 39318 *

BRIAN R. PICKETT, M.D., Plaintiff - Appellant-Cross-Appellee, versus HCA HOSPITAL CORPORATION, doing business as Woodland Heights Medical Center, also known as Woodland Heights Hospital, Lufkin, Texas, also known as HCA Hospital Corporation; ET AL., Defendants, HCA HOSPITAL CORPORATION, doing business as Woodland Heights Medical Center, also known as Woodland Heights Hospital, Lufkin, Texas, also known as HCA Hospital Corporation, Defendant - Appellee-Cross-Appellant. BRIAN R. PICKETT, M.D., Plaintiff-Appellee, versus HCA HOSPITAL CORPORATION, doing business as Woodland Heights Medical Center, also known as Woodland Heights Hospital, Lufkin, Texas, also known as HCA Hospital Corporation; ET AL., Defendants, HCA HOSPITAL CORPORATION, doing business as Woodland Heights Medical Center, also known as Woodland Heights Hospital, Lufkin, Texas, also known as HCA Hospital Corporation, Defendant-Appellant.

Notice: RULES OF THE FIFTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Prior History: [*1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas. (9:96-CV-175).

Pickett v. HCA Hosp. Corp., 199 F.3d 440, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31746 (5th Cir. Tex., 1999)

Pickett v. HCA Hosp. Corp., 199 F.3d 440, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31745 (5th Cir. Tex., 1999)

Core Terms

district court, tortious interference, entitled to immunity, peer review, cross-appeal, antitrust, damages

Judges: Before REYNALDO G. GARZA, JOLLY, and WIENER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

PER CURIAM:*

Dr. Pickett sued the defendant hospital alleging violations of federal and state antitrust law. He also alleged state claims based on tortious interference with his business relationships. We have now considered the record, the briefs, and the oral argument presented in this case, all of which lead us directly to the conclusion that the district court correctly ruled on all matters before it. We are convinced that Dr. Pickett produced no evidence that would create a material factual dispute to prevent the grant of summary judgment on each of the claims he asserted. We therefore affirm the district court and we hold: (1) that the defendant is entitled to immunity under the Health Care Quality Improvement Act (the "HCQIA") on all claims for damages based on activities arising out of the professional peer review action. The defendant is [*2] entitled to immunity because the evidence adduced by Dr. Pickett does not rebut the presumption, a presumption provided the hospital by the HCQIA, that the professional peer review action was based upon a reasonable belief that the defendant was acting in the best interest of quality health care; (2) that Dr. Pickett's federal and state antitrust claims fail for lack of satisfactory evidence of a relevant geographic market; and (3) that Dr. Pickett's tortious interference claims fail for lack of proof of damages.

* Pursuant to 5TH CIR. R. 47.5, the court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except under the limited circumstances set forth in 5TH CIR. R. 47.5.4.

With respect to the defendant's cross-appeal, the district court properly denied its motion for attorney's fees because it made no showing that Dr. Pickett's claims were unfounded. Additionally, there is no merit to the defendant's cross-appeal of the district court's denial of its motion to compel Pickett to return a privileged document.

In sum, the district court is in all respects

AFFIRMED.

End of Document

In re Baseball Bat Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the District of Kansas

October 28, 1999, Decided ; October 28, 1999, Filed; October 29, 1999, Entered on the Docket

No. 98-mc-1249-KHV

Reporter

75 F. Supp. 2d 1189 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18356 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,769

IN RE: BASEBALL BAT ANTITRUST LITIGATION (MDL No. 1249); This Document Applies To: Baum Research, et al. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., Inc., et al., (No. 99-2112-KHV)

Subsequent History: Later proceeding at Baum Research & Dev. Co. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co. \(In re Baseball Bat Antitrust Litig.\), 112 F. Supp. 2d 1175, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11150 \(J.P.M.L., 2000\)

Prior History: Baum Research & Dev. Co. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 31 F. Supp. 2d 1016, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21761 \(E.D. Mich., 1998\)

Disposition: [\[1\]](#) Baum plaintiffs' Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint (Doc. # 53) overruled in part and sustained in part. Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration OVERRULED. Plaintiffs' motion to amend the complaint SUSTAINED as to the claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage in violation of state law.

Core Terms

bat, amend, manufacturers, reconsideration motion, antitrust, antitrust claim, alleges, aluminum bat, baseball bat, defendants', composition, baseball, competitor, predicate, conspiracy, leave to amend, amateur, anti trust law, tortious interference, propose an amendment, district court, anticompetitive, amended complaint, antitrust violation, motion to dismiss, Hitting, Machine, coaches, futile, prospective economic advantage

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > Forum & Place

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

HN1 Choice of Law, Forum & Place

Although a transferee court must apply the substantive law of transferor, the transferee district court may apply its own rules governing the conduct and dispatch of cases in its court.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

75 F. Supp. 2d 1189, *1189 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18356, 1

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions to Reargue

HN2 Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

The court has discretion whether to grant or deny a motion to reconsider.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

HN3 Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

The court may recognize any one of three grounds justifying reconsideration: an intervening change in controlling law, availability of new evidence, or the need to correct clear error or prevent manifest injustice.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions to Reargue

HN4 Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

A motion to reconsider is appropriate when the court has obviously misapprehended a party's position, the facts, or the applicable law, or when a party introduces new evidence that could not have been obtained through exercise of due diligence.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions to Reargue

HN5 Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

A motion to reconsider is not a second chance for the losing party to make his strongest case or to dress up arguments that previously failed. Such motions are not appropriate if the movant only wants the court to revisit issues already addressed or to hear new arguments or supporting facts that could have been presented originally.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions to Reargue

HN6 Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not recognize motions for reconsideration. While the Rules of Practice and Procedure for the District of Kansas contain a provision entitled "Motions to Reconsider," U.S. Dist. Ct., D. Kan., R. 7.3, this provision is intended to apply only to non-dispositive judgments and orders. Nevertheless, a motion to alter or amend is essentially a motion for reconsideration.

75 F. Supp. 2d 1189, *1189 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18356, 1

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions to Reargue

HN7 [] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

Generally, and without restricting the discretion of the court, motions for rehearing or reconsideration which merely present the same issues ruled upon by the court, either expressly or by reasonable implication, shall not be granted. The movant shall not only demonstrate a palpable defect by which the court and the parties have been misled but also show that a different disposition of the case must result from a correction thereof. U.S. Dist. Ct., E.D. Mich., R. 7.1(g)(3).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN8 [] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\), a party may amend its pleading once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is served. Otherwise a party may amend its pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN9 [] Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

After the district court enters judgment on a motion to dismiss, plaintiff no longer may amend its complaint as of right, and may only do so with leave of the court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN10 [] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Notwithstanding the requirement in Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\) that leave to amend shall be given freely, a district court may deny leave to amend where amendment would be futile. A proposed amendment is futile if the amended complaint would be subject to dismissal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN11 [] Private Actions, Remedies

75 F. Supp. 2d 1189, *1189 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18356, 1

Whether or not a particular practice violates the antitrust laws is determined by its effect on competition, not its effect on a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN12 [+] Private Actions, Remedies

It is not intrinsically an antitrust violation for an organization to limit its endorsement to those who meet its published standards unless the standard itself is shown to be anticompetitive in purpose or effect.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN13 [+] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust injury doctrine bars recovery where the asserted injury, although linked to an alleged violation of the antitrust laws, flows directly from conduct that is not itself an antitrust violation.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

HN14 [+] Venue, Multidistrict Litigation

The transferee court should be free to decide a federal claim in the manner it views as correct without deferring to the interpretation of the transferor circuit.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

HN15 [+] Venue, Multidistrict Litigation

In multidistrict litigation a transferee court should normally use its own best judgment about the meaning of federal law when evaluating a federal claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

HN16 [blue document icon] Responses, Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections

After a motion to dismiss has been granted, a plaintiff must first reopen the case pursuant to a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 59\(e\) or 60\(b\) and then file a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15, and properly apply to the court for leave to amend by means of a motion which in turn complies with Fed. R. Civ. P. 7. In that event, in accordance with Rule 15, leave shall be freely given when justice so requires.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN17 [blue document icon] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

When a motion for leave to amend is not properly before it, district court does not abuse discretion in failing to address plaintiff's request for leave to cure deficiencies in her pleadings.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Business Relationships > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN18 [blue document icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

Under Michigan law, the elements of tortious interference with economic relations are (1) the existence of a valid business relationship or expectancy, (2) knowledge of the relationship or expectancy on the part of the interferor, (3) intentional interference inducing or causing a breach or termination of a relationship or expectancy, and (4) damages.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN19 [blue document icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

Although Michigan law governing tortious interference with prospective economic advantage requires the plaintiff to allege more than a mere hope for a future business opportunity or the innate optimism of the salesman, the plaintiff need not demonstrate a guaranteed relationship because anything that is prospective in nature is necessarily uncertain. The claim does not deal with certainties, but with reasonable likelihood or probability.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN20 [blue document icon] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

The tort of interference with business relationships and prospective economic advantage contemplates a relationship, prospective or existing, of some substance, some particularity, before an inference can arise as to its value to the plaintiff and the defendant's responsibility for its loss. To demonstrate such a realistic expectation, plaintiff must prove a business relationship with an identifiable class of third parties.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN21 [+] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

To establish whether an expectation of economic advantage was reasonable, plaintiff need not prove the existence of an enforceable contract; it is sufficient to show interference with specific third parties or an identifiable prospective class of third persons with whom plaintiff had a reasonable expectation of contracting.

Counsel: For EASTON SPORTS INC, plaintiff: Bruce Keplinger, Norris & Keplinger, L.L.C., Overland Park, KS.

For EASTON SPORTS INC, plaintiff: David A Ettinger, Honigan Miller Schwartz & Cohn, Detroit, MI.

For BAUM RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT CO., INC., STEVE BAUM, plaintiffs: David L Nelson, Patrick B McCauley, David J Szymanski, Sommers, Schwartz, Silver & Schwartz, P.C., Southfield, MI.

For BAUM RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT CO., INC., plaintiff: Christopher E Ondeck, Jenkens & Gilchrist, P.C., Washington, DC.

For STEVE BAUM, plaintiff: Salvatore A Romano, Christopher E Ondeck, Jenkens & Gilchrist, P.C., Washington, DC.

For NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION, defendant: Craig T. Kenworthy, James A. Durbin, Swanson Midgley, LLC, Kansas City, MO.

For NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION, defendant: Gregory L Curtner, Julie P Close, [2] Mark T Boonstra, Susan I Robbins, Miller, Canfield, Paddock & Stone, P.C., Ann Arbor, MI.

For HILLERICH & BRADSBY CO., defendant: John K. Power, Husch & Eppenberger, Kansas City, MO.

For HILLERICH & BRADSBY CO., defendant: John K Bush, Christie A Moore, Peggy B Lyndrup, Greenebaum, Doll & McDonald, PLLC, Louisville, KY.

For HILLERICH & BRADSBY CO., defendant: Barbara L Goldman, Dykema Gossett PLLC, Bloomfield Hills, MI.

For EASTON SPORTS INC, defendant: Bruce Keplinger, Norris & Keplinger, L.L.C., Overland Park, KS.

For SPORTING GOODS MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION, defendant: John M Peterson, Jonathan T Howe, Howe & Hutton, Ltd., Chicago, IL.

For WORTH INC, defendant: Frank M Northam, Arthur L Herold, Webster, Chamberlain & Bean, Washington, DC.

For WORTH INC, defendant: Dennis Barnes, Eugene Driker, Barris, Sott, Denn & Driker, PLC, Detroit, MI.

Judges: Kathryn H. Vratil, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Kathryn H. Vratil

Opinion

[*1191] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

75 F. Supp. 2d 1189, *1191 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18356, 2

Following a transfer order of the judicial panel on multidistrict litigation under 28 U.S.C. § 1407, the Court has jurisdiction over consolidated pretrial proceedings in these [3] actions. This matter comes before the Court on Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint (Doc. # 53) which the Baum plaintiffs filed December 4, 1998 in Baum Research & Dev. Co. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., Inc., Case No. Civ. A. 99-2112-KHV.

Pursuant to E.D. Mich. Local Rule 7.1(g)(3), plaintiffs seek reconsideration of the order of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan which dismissed their state and federal antitrust claims for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Pursuant to Rule 15\(a\), Fed. R. Civ. P., plaintiffs also seek leave to amend their antitrust claims and claims for tortious interference. For reasons stated below, plaintiffs' motion is sustained in part and overruled in part.¹

[4] Procedural Background

On July 13, 1998, Steve Baum and Baum Research and Development Company [collectively [\[*1192\]](#) "Baum"] filed a complaint against Hillerich & Bradsby Co., Inc. ["H&B"], Easton Sports, Inc. ["Easton"], Worth, Inc., the National Collegiate Athletic Association ["NCAA"], and the Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association ["SGMA"], claiming violations of state and federal antitrust laws and tortious interference with contractual relations and prospective economic advantage in violation of state law.² See Complaint (Doc. # 1) filed July 13, 1998 in Case No. Civ. A. 99-2112-KHV.

On November 19, 1998, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan dismissed Baum's state and federal antitrust claims for [5] failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Assuming that Baum had suffered injury as a result of defendants' antitrust violations, it held that Baum's injury was not the result of any anticompetitive effect on the market; rather, Baum's injury stemmed from competition itself. The Michigan court further held that Baum had not pleaded actionable claims for tortious interference, and directed Baum to amend the complaint to better describe the specific expectation of an economic relationship. The court held that if Baum should fail to sufficiently amend those claims, the court would dismiss them.

Baum filed the present motion on December 4, 1998. Five days later, on December 9, 1998, the judicial panel on multidistrict litigation transferred the Baum action to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1407.³

[6] Applicable Standards

¹ Because jurisdiction over consolidated pretrial proceedings lies in this transferee Court, we apply the Rules of Practice and Procedure of this district. See, e.g., Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 639 n.40, 11 L. Ed. 2d 945, 84 S. Ct. 805 (1964) (although HN1↑ transferee court must apply substantive law of transferor, "the transferee District Court may apply its own rules governing the conduct and dispatch of cases in its court."). As discussed below, however, the Court would reach the same result under the local rules of either court.

² Baum has abandoned the claim for tortious interference with contractual relations. See Memorandum In Support of [Baum's] Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint (Doc. # 52) filed December 4, 1998 in Case No. Civ. A. 99-2112-KHV, at 1 n.1.

³ Section 1407\(a\) provides:

When civil actions involving one or more common questions of fact are pending in different districts, such actions may be transferred [by the judicial panel on multidistrict litigation] to any district for coordinated or consolidated pretrial proceedings. Such transfers shall be made . . . for the convenience of parties and witnesses and [to] promote the just and efficient conduct of such actions. Each action so transferred shall be remanded by the panel at or before the conclusion of such pretrial proceedings to the district from which it was transferred unless it shall have been previously terminated: Provided, however, that the panel may separate any claim, cross-claim, counter-claim, or third-party claim and remand any of such claims before the remainder of the action is remanded.

1. Motion To Reconsider

HN2 The Court has discretion whether to grant or deny a motion to reconsider.⁴ 8 See HN3 Hancock v. City of Okla. City, 857 F.2d 1394, 1395 \(10th Cir. 1988\); Shinwari v. Raytheon Aircraft Co., 25 F. Supp. 2d 1206, 1208 \(D. Kan. 1998\). The Court may recognize any one of three grounds justifying reconsideration: an intervening change in controlling law, availability of new evidence, or the need to correct clear error or prevent manifest injustice. See Shinwari, 25 F. Supp. 2d at 1208. See also Anderson v. United Auto Workers, 738 F. Supp. 441, 442 \(D. Kan. 1990\) (motion HN4 to reconsider appropriate when court has obviously misapprehended party's position, facts, or applicable law, or when party introduces new evidence that could not have been obtained through exercise of due diligence). HN5 A motion to reconsider is not a second chance for the [\[*1193\]](#) losing party to make his strongest case or to dress up arguments that previously failed. See Shinwari, 25 F. Supp. 2d at 1208 (citing [Voelkel v. General Motors Corp., 846 F. Supp. 1482, 1483, \[7\] aff'd 43 F.3d 1484 \(10th Cir. 1994\)](#)). Such motions are not appropriate if the movant only wants the Court to revisit issues already addressed or to hear new arguments or supporting facts that could have been presented originally. See id. (citing Van Skiver v. United States, 952 F.2d 1241, 1243 \(10th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 828, 121 L. Ed. 2d 51, 113 S. Ct. 89 (1992)).⁵

2. Amendment Of Pleadings

HN8 Under Rule 15\(a\), Fed. R. Civ. P., a party may amend its pleading once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is served. Otherwise a party may amend its pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires. HN9 After the district court enters judgment on a motion to dismiss, plaintiff no longer may amend its complaint as of right, and may only do so with leave of the Court. See Glenn v. First Nat'l Bank in Grand Junction, 868 F.2d 368 \(10th Cir. 1989\) [\[*9\]](#) (after district court granted motion to dismiss, appellants could have amended their complaint only by leave of court or by written consent of adverse party). See also Smith v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 139 F.3d 180, 189 \(3d Cir. 1998\) ("after the district court enters judgment on a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff no longer may amend [its] complaint as of right," and may only do so with leave of court) (citations omitted), vacated on other grounds, 525 U.S. 459 \(1999\). The Court may refuse to grant leave to amend where, for example, the proposed amendment would be futile. See Jefferson County School Dist. No. R-1 v. Moody's Investor's Servs., Inc., 175 F.3d 848, 858-59 \(10th Cir. 1999\) (notwithstanding HN10 Rule 15\(a\) requirement that leave to amend shall be given freely, district court may deny leave to amend where amendment would be futile and proposed amendment is futile if amended complaint would be subject to dismissal).

Factual Background

⁴ HN6 The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not recognize motions for reconsideration. See Hatfield v. Board of County Comm'rs, 52 F.3d 858, 861 \(10th Cir. 1995\); Loum v. Houston's Restaurants, Inc., 177 F.R.D. 670, 671 \(D. Kan. 1998\). While the Rules of Practice and Procedure for the District of Kansas contain a provision entitled "Motions to Reconsider," D. Kan. Rule 7.3, this provision is intended to apply only to non-dispositive judgments and orders. See Loum, 177 F.R.D. at 671. Nevertheless, a motion to alter or amend is essentially a motion for reconsideration. See Hilst v. Bowen, 874 F.2d 725, 726 \(10th Cir. 1989\); Koch v. Shell Oil Co., 911 F. Supp. 487, 489 \(D. Kan. 1996\).

⁵ HN7 Eastern District of Michigan Rule 7.1(g)(3) sets forth a similar standard:

Generally, and without restricting the discretion of the Court, motions for rehearing or reconsideration which merely present the same issues ruled upon by the court, either expressly or by reasonable implication, shall not be granted. The movant shall not only demonstrate a palpable defect by which the court and the parties have been misled but also show that a different disposition of the case must result from a correction thereof.

[10] In this case, the relevant market is the market for amateur baseball bats, which includes but is not limited to college baseball. Baum manufactures wood composition baseball bats. H&B, Easton and Worth [collectively, "bat manufacturers"] manufacture aluminum baseball bats. The SGMA is a not-for-profit trade association of bat manufacturers. The NCAA is an association of colleges and universities that participate in intercollegiate athletics. Among other things, the NCAA adopts and promulgates playing rules.

Ninety percent of the market uses aluminum bats which defendant manufacturers [*1194] produce, and they have signed exclusive contracts to provide baseball bats to various college teams. Wood bats cost less, but Baum implicitly acknowledges that defendants' aluminum bats outperform wood bats. NCAA rules allow both wood and aluminum bats in NCAA-sanctioned baseball games. During the relevant period, NCAA rules did not restrict bat performance. According to Baum, the NCAA rules (or lack thereof) were the product of a conspiracy to squeeze its wood composition bat out of the market. In particular, Baum alleges that the bat manufacturers conspired to eliminate competition from the market [11] by (1) engaging in exclusive arrangements with colleges, universities and coaches to foreclose these teams from using competing products, and (2) cooperating with SGMA and the NCAA to manipulate and control the standard-setting function of the NCAA Baseball Rules Committee ["Rules Committee"] to establish unreasonable bat performance standards that excluded wood or wood composition bats from competition.

Analysis

Baum brings suit against the NCAA, the bat manufacturers and the SGMA, claiming violations of federal and state antitrust laws and tortious interference in violation of state law. The gravamen of Baum's complaint is that to perpetuate their dominance and exclude Baum from the market for amateur baseball bats, aluminum bat manufacturers conspired with the NCAA to manipulate the standard for baseball bats used in NCAA-sanctioned baseball games. In a nutshell, the theory is that because of lax NCAA standards which allowed aluminum bats, Baum could not sell wood composition baseball bats in the amateur baseball bat market. According to Baum, the lax standards stemmed from a conspiracy between the bat manufacturers, SGMA and the NCAA and the conspiracy violated federal [12] and state antitrust law.⁷

Baum's theory of tortious interference with business relationships and prospective economic advantage is that the bat manufacturers and the SGMA engaged in a concerted campaign to remove and destroy Baum's bats, "sideline" the Baum Hitting Machine, prevent Baum from establishing relationships with amateur baseball teams, and disrupt Baum's sales to minor league professional baseball teams.

Baum seeks reconsideration of the order which dismissed its antitrust claims as well as leave to amend those claims. Specifically, Baum seeks reconsideration of the Michigan court's dismissal of the state and federal antitrust claims on the ground that "additional events have taken place which directly bear [13] on and support" those claims. Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint at 2. Baum also seeks "to amend, clarify and streamline" its antitrust claims "based on the former rulings of [the Michigan] Court, the factual information set forth in Steve Baum's Affidavit, and the new facts that have taken place after the filing of the original Complaint and to more clearly set forth the nature of the antitrust violation and antitrust injuries Plaintiffs have sustained." Id. at 3.

⁶The Court derives this factual background from the Michigan court's opinion which dismissed the Baum complaint. See Baum Research and Dev. Co. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 31 F. Supp. 2d 1016 (E.D. Mich. 1998). Where appropriate, the Court notes additional factual allegations set forth in the Baum Complaint (Doc. # 1) filed July 13, 1998 in Case No. Civ. A. 99-2112-KHV and Baum's [Proposed] First Amended Complaint (Doc. # 50) filed March 8, 1999 in this consolidated action, In Re Baseball Bat Antitrust Litig., 75 F. Supp. 2d 1189, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18356.

⁷The analysis is the same for Baum's state antitrust claims and federal antitrust claims. See Mich. Comp. Laws 445.784(2) (in construing Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, courts shall give "due deference to interpretations given by federal courts to comparable antitrust statutes . . .").

I. Motion To Reconsider The Dismissal Of Baum's State And Federal Antitrust Claims

A. Antitrust Injury

The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan dismissed Baum's antitrust claims for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). The court held that the Baum [*1195] complaint failed to properly allege antitrust injury, in that Baum's injury did not result from any anticompetitive effect on the market; rather, Baum's injury stemmed from competition itself.

Baum argues that since the Michigan court dismissed its antitrust claims, "additional events have taken place which directly bear on and support" those claims. Motion For Reconsideration And [14] To Amend The Complaint at 2. In particular, Baum notes that the NCAA Rules Committee adopted a "new bat rule" on July 14, 1998. The new rule established off-the-bat ball speed limitations at "wood-like levels" and "had the market effect of permitting wood, wood composition and wood-like bats to compete." Id. Baum contends that the new rule has caused "a substantial increase in competition and now wood and wood composition bat manufacturers are competing with aluminum bat manufacturers," id. at 3, thus establishing that "the absence of the new performance standard changes did not foster competition; rather, it had the effect of stifling competition and limiting competition" to aluminum bat manufacturers. Memorandum In Support of [Baum's] Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint at 4.

Baum further notes that after the NCAA adopted the new rule, Easton sued the NCAA in this Court, claiming that the new rule violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act.⁸ According to Baum, the Easton complaint contains "a number of admissions which support" the Baum claims. The gist of Easton's complaint, says Baum, is that Easton has been injured by the new bat rule because Easton [15] "no longer controls and manipulates the NCAA rule-making process to its benefit." Id. at 5.

Likewise, Baum notes that the NCAA has filed a declaratory judgment complaint against Hillerich & Bradsby, Worth and Baum, and that it contains admissions which support Baum's claims. See National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Hillerich & Bradsby, Co., Inc., et al., No. 99-2367-KHV. Baum contends that the NCAA complaint makes it clear that the NCAA had the "duty and authority to promulgate rules or standards designed to insure player safety and the integrity of the game," and that defendants' conspiracy to obstruct the NCAA from enacting a rule "did not foster competition unless it can be found that the NCAA neither had the duty nor the authority to do so." Id. at 5.

Finally, Baum [16] contends that "Easton has now falsely disparaged the Baum Hitting Machine and has threatened to sue college teams or coaches who have signed exclusive use contracts with Baum if they switch to wood or wood composition bats or fail to use Easton's high performance aluminum bats." Id.

Even assuming that this "new evidence" was unavailable, the Court is not persuaded that it justifies a different outcome. Inclusion of the "new evidence" does not alter the flawed theory of antitrust injury which the evidence purports to support. This Court agrees with the Michigan court that "there is a logical inference that the absence of a rule regulating bat performance actually fosters competition." Baum Research & Dev. Co. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 31 F. Supp. 2d 1016, 1022 (E.D. Mich. 1998). The Michigan court properly pointed out that "the main purpose of the antitrust laws is to preserve and promote competition," and "whether HN11[ or not a particular practice violates the antitrust laws is determined by its effect on competition, not its effect on a competitor." Id. at 1021 n.7 (quoting Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Concrete Corp., 691 F.2d 818, 825 (6th Cir. 1982)) [17] (emphasis [*1196] added).⁹ See also Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (antitrust laws were enacted for protection of "competition not competitors"). The Michigan court therefore correctly concluded that "Baum has failed to state an antitrust claim upon which relief can be granted because it can prove no set of facts to show that it suffered an antitrust injury." Baum, 31 F. Supp. 2d at 1022.

⁸ On September 29, 1999, the Court dismissed the Easton Sports, Inc. v. National Collegiate Athletic Ass'n case, No. 98-2351-KHV. See Stipulation And Order Dismissing Case With Prejudice (Doc. # 144) filed Sept. 29, 1999.

Baum also uses an array of antitrust buzzwords to argue that its [18] "new evidence" establishes, e.g., "the onset of the conspiracy," "predatory" "exclusionary" and "overt acts" and control of the "cartel market," "dominant market power" by the NCAA, and "before and after market conditions." Taken as a whole, Baum's convoluted arguments essentially re-argue the issue which the Michigan court has already decided. A motion to reconsider is not a second chance for the losing party to make its strongest case or to dress up arguments that previously failed. See Shinwari, 25 F. Supp. 2d at 1208 (citing Voelkel v. General Motors Corp., 846 F. Supp. 1482, 1483, aff'd 43 F.3d 1484 (10th Cir. 1994)). Such motions are not appropriate if the movant only wants the Court to revisit issues already addressed or to hear new arguments or supporting facts that could have been presented originally. See id. (citing Van Skiver v. United States, 952 F.2d 1241, 1243 (10th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 828, 121 L. Ed. 2d 51, 113 S. Ct. 89, (1992)). See also E.D. Mich. Rule 7.1(g)(3) (motions for reconsideration which merely present same issues ruled upon by court, either expressly [19] or by reasonable implication, shall not be granted).

To the extent that Baum's motion for reconsideration implicitly claims the need to correct clear error or prevent manifest injustice, the foregoing analysis is equally applicable. As noted, the Michigan court's opinion was thoughtful, well-reasoned and -- in this Court's view -- entirely correct. None of the arguments which Baum has advanced in the present motion convince this Court otherwise.¹⁰

Baum has submitted a supplemental citation of authority which advances the conclusory argument that Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995 (6th Cir. 1999), [20] is "informative on the issue of antitrust injury and standing" and "should further clarify any confusion that somehow Sixth Circuit and Tenth Circuit holdings on antitrust injury" differ from this case. Baum's Supplemental Citation Of Authority (Doc. # 103) filed April 16, 1999 in Case No. Civ. A. 98MC1249-KHV, at 1-2. According to Baum, Re/Max confirms that "a direct competitor has standing and suffers antitrust injury when it is targeted and victimized by a conspiracy to exclude it from competition." Id. at 2.

In Re/Max, a national real estate brokerage franchisor, subfranchisor and franchisees sued two local real estate firms. Under defendants' adverse-splits policy, whenever Re/Max agents were involved in a transaction, defendants paid them only 25 or 30 percent of the commission, rather than the industry norm of a 50/50 split. Plaintiffs alleged that the adverse-splits [*1197] policy -- the means by which defendants chose to dominate the market for hiring real estate agents -- violated the antitrust laws. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants controlled the market for knowledgeable and experienced sales agents and that through the unfair adverse-splits policy, they prevented [21] Re/Max from recruiting those agents, thereby depriving Re/Max franchises of the information and expertise they needed to effectively serve buyers and sellers of homes.

In Re/Max, the Sixth Circuit rejected defendants' argument that the franchisor plaintiffs lacked standing to bring antitrust claims because they could not show antitrust injury. The court noted that "defendants admitted [that] they intended to thwart, through the implementation of adverse splits, Re/Max's attempt to recruit defendants' agents." The court further noted that

⁹ Nor does Baum's concern about the safety of aluminum bats alter the analysis whether an antitrust injury exists. See Baum Research and Dev. Co., 31 F. Supp. 2d at 1022 n. 9 (citing National Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 695, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978) (rejecting attempt to justify restraint on competition on basis that competition posed threat to public safety and ethics of profession, as contrary to policy of Sherman Act)).

¹⁰ The Court would reach the same result under E.D. Mich. Local Rule 7.1(g)(3). Baum has failed to demonstrate a palpable defect by which the Michigan court and the parties have been mislead. Also, the Court is in substantial agreement with the arguments which the bat manufacturers have proffered in opposition to Baum's motion, and the Court therefore adopts those arguments by reference.

Although the policy was aimed more directly at Re/Max franchises, the effect was to deter agents from defecting to Re/Max, thereby impeding an innovative competitor's access to the market. * * * Denying the franchisors standing would result in antitrust violations going "undetected or unremedied" if in fact Re/Max franchises were barred from [the] markets.

173 F.3d at 1023.

That situation is not analogous to this case. Here, defendants allegedly induced the NCAA not to pass a rule which restricted bat performance standards. As a result, bat manufacturers continued to produce and market different bat designs [22] and the amateur baseball market retained the right to choose which type of baseball bats to use. It was the consumers' unhindered preference for aluminum bats, then, which prevented Baum from selling composite wood bats. The Michigan court therefore properly concluded that "there is a logical inference that the absence of a rule regulating bat performance actually fosters competition." Baum, 31 F. Supp. 2d at 1022. See also Valley Products, 128 F.3d 398 at 403 (antitrust injury doctrine bars recovery where asserted injury, although linked to alleged violation of antitrust laws, flows directly from conduct that "is not itself an antitrust violation").

Baum also cites DM Research, Inc. v. College of Am. Pathologists, 170 F.3d 53 (1st Cir. 1999), for the proposition that the antitrust laws specifically prohibit defendants' "conspiratorial and biased standard setting activities" because defendants distorted and manipulated the standard setting process to prevent increased competition. In DM Research, the First Circuit Court of Appeals noted that in cases which involve anticompetitive quality standards, "the principal concern has been the [23] use of standards setting as a predatory device by some competitors to injure others" and that in such cases, there is normally "a showing that the standard was deliberately distorted by competitors of the injured party, sometimes through lies, bribes, or other improper forms of influence, in addition to a further showing of market foreclosure." 170 F.3d at 57-58 (footnote omitted). The First Circuit further opined that "it HN12[] is not intrinsically an antitrust violation for an organization to limit its endorsement to those who meet its published standards unless the standard itself is shown to be anticompetitive in purpose or effect." 170 F.3d at 58. In this case, however, Baum's complaint is not that the NCAA set an anticompetitive standard; its complaint is that the NCAA's failure to set a standard (albeit because of a distorted standard-setting process) injured its ability to compete. As the Michigan court noted, it is logical to infer from Baum's allegations that the absence of a bat performance rule actually enhanced competition. Therefore DM Research is clearly inapposite.

Finally, Baum cites Full Draw Productions v. Easton Sports, Inc., 182 F.3d 745, *11981 (10th Cir. 1999), [24] for the proposition that the proposed amended complaint properly alleges antitrust injury, in that Baum was the target of the conspiracy and was victimized by its anticompetitive consequences. Full Draw Productions is readily distinguished, however, on its facts. In that case an archery trade show promoter sued archery manufacturers and an archery trade association, alleging a group boycott of its trade show in violation of the antitrust laws. In concluding that plaintiff's injury reflected the anticompetitive effects of the group boycott, the Tenth Circuit noted that because plaintiff produced "one of only two archery trade shows in the United States, the purposeful and wrongful destruction of [plaintiff's] business by Defendants directly injured competition as well as injuring [plaintiff]." 182 F.3d at 754. The court further opined that "we have no doubt that alleging the loss of one of two competitors in this case alleges injury to competition" and therefore "the instant case is not one in which it is alleged that a competitor fell prey to competition; it is one in which it is alleged that competition fell prey to a competitor." Id. Finally, the court noted [25] that the effect of defendants' boycott "was not to increase competition," but rather to reduce competition through the elimination of one source of output, "thereby limiting consumer choice to the other source of output" and causing "the unnatural demise of [plaintiff's trade show] at the hands of defendants." Id. at 755.

This case involves several competitors, and Baum cannot allege the loss of one of only two competitors. More importantly, this is essentially a case in which plaintiff complains that a competitor fell prey to competition. Baum alleges that defendants induced the NCAA not to pass a rule which restricted baseball bats. As a result, amateur baseball retained the right to choose which types of bats to use, and in exercising that right did not choose Baum's wood composition bat. Thus, unlike Full Draw Productions, the elimination of a competitor was the direct result of "the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Id. (citations omitted).

For all of these reasons, the Court concludes that Baum has not alleged antitrust injury and that its motion for reconsideration of that issue should be overruled.

B. Necessary Predicate

[26] As an alternative basis for dismissing Baum's antitrust claims, the Michigan court held that "even if Baum could somehow establish that NCAA's failure to regulate bat performance had an anticompetitive effect on the market, Baum cannot show that its injury flowed from the purported violation of the antitrust laws." Baum, 31 F. Supp. 2d at 1023. Simply stated, the court held that Baum cannot establish that the antitrust violation was the "necessary predicate" to its injury because the NCAA had the lawful authority to refuse to change the baseball bat rules in Baum's favor. Id. See also Valley Prods. Co., Inc. v. Landmark, 128 F.3d 398, 403-04 \(6th Cir. 1997\) ("the Sixth Circuit, it is fair to say, has been reasonably aggressive in using HN13 [↑] the antitrust injury doctrine to bar recovery where the asserted injury, although linked to an alleged violation of the antitrust laws, flows directly from conduct that is not itself an antitrust violation.").

Baum briefly challenges this portion of the Michigan court's ruling, arguing that its exclusion from the amateur baseball bat market was the "direct and proximate consequence" of defendants' conspiracy, that [27] Baum's resulting injury was the "ineluctable result" thereof, and that "the violation was the necessary predicate to Baum's injury." [Memorandum In Support of \[Baum's\] Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint](#) at 9. Baum [*1199] further argues that its injury does not flow from the NCAA's lawful refusal to change the rules because the rule process is "rigged" by defendants' conspiracy. In the alternative, Baum claims since the recent rule change promotes competition and were it not for defendants' conspiracy, the change "would and should have taken place at least five years ago." Id. at 9-10.

The bat manufacturers note that the "necessary predicate" requirement was not the basis for their motion to dismiss Baum's original complaint. They argue that the Michigan court's discussion of the necessary predicate requirement was secondary to its holding that Baum had not suffered antitrust injury. The bat manufacturers also contend that the "necessary predicate" requirement is peculiar to the Sixth Circuit and has been widely criticized and rejected in other circuits, see, e.g., Lee-Moore Oil Co. v. Union Oil Co., 599 F.2d 1299, 1302 (4th Cir. 1979); Ostroff v. Crocker Co., Inc., 670 F.2d 1378, 1384-87 (9th Cir. 1982); [28] Irvin Indus. v. Goodyear Aerospace Corp., 974 F.2d 241, 245 (2d Cir. 1992), and that the doctrine is inconsistent with Tenth Circuit caselaw on antitrust injury. See, e.g., Reazin v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Kan., Inc., 899 F.2d 951, 960-63 (10th Cir. 1990) (upholding antitrust damage award despite defendant's right to refuse to deal with plaintiff absent anticompetitive behavior). Accordingly, the bat manufacturers argue that the Court need not address the Michigan court's analysis of the issue in ruling on Baum's motion for reconsideration.

Concurring with the reasoning of the Michigan court, the NCAA argues that any alleged injury that [Baum] suffered from the NCAA's promulgation of bat performance standards cannot be an "antitrust injury" because the NCAA's power to set those standards is derived from its own rulemaking authority, and not the alleged conspiracy[,] and thus the NCAA's alleged participation in this "conspiracy" was not a necessary predicate to Baum's alleged injury. See Hodges v. WSM, Inc., 26 F.3d 36 (6th Cir. 1994).

NCAA Response To Plaintiffs' Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The [29] Complaint (Doc. # 1) filed December 23, 1998, at 2. Because Baum cannot establish the necessary predicate requirement, the NCAA concludes that Baum's proposed amended complaint will suffer the same fate as Baum's original complaint: dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Accordingly, the NCAA argues that Baum's motion for reconsideration and to amend must be denied.

Unlike the bat manufacturers, however, the NCAA does not believe that this Court, in ruling on Baum's motion for reconsideration, should simply disregard the portion of the Michigan decision which addresses the "necessary predicate" requirement. The NCAA argues that the Michigan court order is "the law of the case." See, e.g., KCI Corp. v. Kinetic Concepts, Inc., 18 F. Supp. 2d 1212, 1214 (D. Kan. 1998) ("traditional principals of law of the case counsel against the transferee court reevaluating the rulings of the transferor court"). Therefore, the NCAA contends, the only proper basis upon which this Court may upset the Michigan court determination of the issue is one of the three grounds justifying reconsideration. See, e.g., Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Country Chrysler, Inc., 928 F.2d 1509, 1516 (10th Cir. 1991). [30]

75 F. Supp. 2d 1189, *1199 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18356, 29

The NCAA disputes the bat manufacturers' contention that the "necessary predicate" requirement is inconsistent with the Tenth Circuit approach to the question of antitrust injury. It also posits that even if the "necessary predicate" requirement is inconsistent with Tenth Circuit precedent, such inconsistency is irrelevant in this multidistrict litigation case because the Baum [*1200] action (should it be revived) will eventually return to Michigan for trial. See Lexecon v. Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, 523 U.S. 26, 140 L. Ed. 2d 62, 118 S. Ct. 956 (1998) (cases consolidated under Section 1407 must be remanded to transferor court for trial). The NCAA contends that reinstatement of Baum's antitrust claims on the ground that the Tenth Circuit does not follow the "necessary predicate" requirement would lead to a bizarre result, in that once the action returned to Michigan, it would again be subject to dismissal under Sixth Circuit precedent.

The Court agrees with the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia that "the HN14[[↑]] transferee court [should] be free to decide a federal claim in the manner it views as correct without deferring to the interpretation of the transferor [31] circuit." In re Korean Airlines Air Disaster, 265 U.S. App. D.C. 39, 829 F.2d 1171, 1174 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (quoting Marcus, Conflict Among Circuits and Transfers Within the Federal Judicial System, 93 Yale L.J. 677, 721 (1984); and citing Steinman, Law of the Case: A Judicial Puzzle in Consolidated and Transferred Cases and in Multidistrict Litigation, 135 U. Pa. L. Rev. 595, 662-706 (1987)). See also In re United Mine Workers of Am. Employee Benefit Plans Litig., 854 F. Supp. 914, 919 (D.D.C. 1994) (accepting basic principle that HN15[[↑]] in multidistrict litigation "a transferee court should normally use its own best judgment about the meaning of federal law when evaluating a federal claim") (citing In re Korean Airlines Air Disaster, 829 F.2d at 1174).

Although this Court is not bound by stare decisis to follow Sixth Circuit precedent simply by virtue of the fact that it is a transferee Court, nor is it obligated to ignore Sixth Circuit precedent. Unlike In re Independent Serv. Orgs. Antitrust Litig., 1998 WL 919125, at *2-3 (D. Kan. 1998), where this Court queried whether it was bound to [32] follow Ninth Circuit precedent in resolving motions for summary judgment, in the present case the Michigan court has already applied Sixth Circuit precedent in dismissing Baum's antitrust claims. As a transferee Court ruling on Baum's motion for reconsideration, it is clearly reasonable to follow Sixth Circuit precedent. Applying its own best judgment, In re Korean Airlines Air Disaster, 829 F.2d at 1174, the Court therefore concludes that Baum's motion for reconsideration should be analyzed under Sixth Circuit precedent.

That said, the Court concludes that Baum has failed to establish that the Michigan court erred in applying the "necessary predicate" issue. Baum's cursory and conclusory arguments do not establish, or even attempt to invoke, any of the grounds which justify reconsideration: an intervening change in controlling law, availability of new evidence, or the need to correct clear error or prevent manifest injustice. See Shinwari, 25 F. Supp. 2d at 1208; see also Anderson, 738 F. Supp. at 442. The Court agrees with the well-reasoned opinion of the Michigan court on this issue. Baum cannot establish that an antitrust violation [33] was the "necessary predicate" to its injury because the NCAA had the lawful authority to refuse to change the bat rules in Baum's favor. Nothing in Baum's motion persuades the Court of any error in the Michigan decision. Baum's motion for reconsideration on the necessary predicate issue is therefore overruled.

II. Motion For Leave to Amend The State And Federal Antitrust Claims

Baum argues that it "may have" a right to amend its antitrust claims without leave of court and that in any event, the Court should grant leave to amend to correct a palpable defect or prevent manifest injustice. See Rule 15(a), Fed. R. Civ. P.; see also Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182-83, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222, 83 S. Ct. 227 (1962); [*1201] Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. v. Farmers Bank, 178 F.2d 570 (6th Cir. 1949) (where no responsive pleading filed when appellant tendered first amendment to complaint, asserted untimeliness of amendment was not valid ground for rejecting amendment); Firchau v. Diamond Nat'l Corp., 345 F.2d 269, 270-71 (9th Cir. 1965) (plaintiff may amend one time as a matter of right even after motion to dismiss has been granted); Smith, 139 F.3d at 189 [34] (under Rule 15\(a\) plaintiff has absolute right to amend complaint once at any time before responsive pleading is served; thereafter, plaintiff must seek leave to amend, and although within its discretion, district court "should grant such requests freely when justice so requires").

Baum characterizes its motion as a request for "reconsideration of the [Michigan] Court's apparent refusal to permit amendment of the antitrust claims based on the erroneous and unsupported factual conclusion that under no set of facts could Baum ever show 'antitrust injury.'" Baum's Reply To Briefs In Opposition To Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend Complaint (Doc. # 6) filed January 8, 1999, in In Re Baseball Bat Antitrust Litig., 75 F. Supp. 2d 1189, Case No. 98MC1249-KHV, at 5-6.

Baum's argument that it is entitled to amend without leave of court is not well taken in light of Tenth Circuit authority. In Glenn v. First Nat'l Bank in Grand Junction, 868 F.2d 368 \(10th Cir. 1989\), plaintiffs did not exercise their right to amend before the trial court decided defendants' motion to dismiss. On appeal, the Tenth Circuit held that "after the court granted the motion to dismiss, Appellants could [\[35\]](#) have amended their complaint only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party." 868 F.2d at 370. The Tenth Circuit further rejected plaintiffs' argument that because they "requested" leave to amend before the trial court dismissed their complaint, they were entitled to formally amend as a matter of right. It reasoned:

If Appellants' theory were to be adopted, the pleading phase of a lawsuit would never end. Such a practice would undermine the distinctions in Fed. R. Civ. P. 15 between "right" to amend and "leave" to amend, and plaintiffs' counsel would then have the right to amend indefinitely simply by including a "request to amend" in their response to a motion to dismiss . . . HN16[¹⁵] After a motion to dismiss has been granted, plaintiffs must first reopen the case pursuant to a motion under Rule 59\(e\) or Rule 60\(b\) and then file a motion under Rule 15, and properly apply to the court for leave to amend by means of a motion which in turn complies with Rule 7. In that event, in accordance with Rule 15, "leave shall be freely given when justice so requires."

868 F.2d at 371 (emphasis added). Cf. Brever v. Rockwell Intern. Corp., 40 F.3d 1119, 1131 \(10th Cir. 1994\) [\[36\]](#) (where record clearly showed that plaintiff had repeatedly expressed willingness to amend and had demonstrated particular grounds, but district court misled her to believe that she should wait to amend until court disposed of motions to dismiss, court should have reserved to plaintiff right to amend upon dismissal of action); Tripplett v. Leflore County, 712 F.2d 444, 445 \(10th Cir. 1983\) (accepting plaintiff's motion to reconsider as request to amend despite its irregularity because motion to reconsider -- which included brief with bold captioned title reading "REQUEST FOR LEAVE TO AMEND COMPLAINT" -- unequivocally gave district court and opposing counsel clear notice of request to amend and grounds therefore).

In dismissing Baum's antitrust claims, the Michigan court made no mention of any proposed amendments to the antitrust claims. Indeed Baum has identified no pleadings which sought to amend those [\[*1202\]](#) claims. To the extent that Baum characterizes the present motion for leave to amend as a motion to "reconsider" the Michigan court's "apparent refusal to permit amendment of the antitrust claims," the motion must fail: Baum has not shown that it properly sought to amend [\[37\]](#) its complaint prior to the Michigan court's order of dismissal, and therefore it cannot establish that the Michigan court's apparent "refusal" to permit such amendment sua sponte constitutes clear error or results in manifest injustice. See, e.g., Calderon v. Kansas Dep't of Social and Rehab. Servs., 181 F.3d 1180, 1187 \(10th Cir. 1999\) (because HN17[¹⁵] motion for leave to amend was never properly before it, district court did not abuse discretion in failing to address plaintiff's request for leave to cure deficiencies in her pleadings) (citing Brannon v. Boatmen's First Nat'l Bank, 153 F.3d 1144, 1150 \(10th Cir. 1998\) (court need not address motion never placed before it); Dahn v. United States, 127 F.3d 1249, 1252 \(10th Cir. 1997\) (same)).

Addressing Baum's motion as one for leave to amend in the first instance, the Court briefly analyzes whether justice requires it to exercise its discretion in favor of the proposed amendment. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\). The Court may refuse to grant leave to amend where the proposed amendment would be futile. See Jefferson County School Dist. No. R-1, 175 F.3d at 858-59 (proposed amendment [\[38\]](#) futile if amended complaint would be subject to dismissal). Baum argues that its proposed amended complaint "streamlines and clarifies the antitrust claims," defines the onset of the conspiracy, avers that Baum was the specific target, details defendants' overt acts ("exclusionary and predatory conduct designed to prevent changes in the NCAA bat rules," obstruction of acceptance of the Baum Testing Machine, and use of exclusive dealing arrangements and gifts to keep Baum from competing), more clearly demonstrates the interrelatedness of the conspiratorial acts and how they adversely affected competition, sets forth more precisely the lack of any procompetitive or efficiency rationales, and more specifically articulates that defendants' conspiracy was designed to and did injure competition and specifically caused antitrust injury to Baum. Furthermore, in an apparent effort to address the Michigan court's conclusion that Baum has not alleged antitrust injury, 31 F. Supp. 2d at 1023, Baum proposes to amend its complaint to include allegations that, e.g., "the effect of the Defendants' conspiratorial conduct has been to systematically exclude and foreclose the manufacturers of wood or wood [39] composition bats, such as Plaintiffs, from the markets for amateur baseball bats," [\[Proposed\] First Amended Complaint](#) at 6, P15, and the "anticompetitive conduct of the [bat manufacturers] had the effect of foreclosing all other competing bat products, such as wood or wood composite bats from the amateur baseball [bat] markets." Id. at 2, P69.

Baum has proffered no grounds which justify leave to amend. None of the proposed amendments would alter the flawed theory which is the basis for Baum's antitrust claims. The Michigan court properly concluded that even if Baum suffered injury as a result of antitrust violations by defendants, Baum's injury was not the result of any anticompetitive effect on the market, but rather stemmed from competition itself. Baum's effort to evade the ruling by alleging that it claims injury to a competitor rather than to competition are to no avail. The assertion that defendants' conduct injured Baum and other wood and wood composition bat manufacturers and the liberal use of the word "competition," throughout the allegations of antitrust injury, do not alter the nub of Baum's case. The proposed complaint still alleges that non-restrictive [40] bat performance standards granted a competitive advantage to aluminum bat manufacturers, "which had the [*1203] effect in the markets of excluding competitors such as Baum," and that Baum was the "specific target" of the aluminum bat manufacturers. Id. at 23, P76. The gravamen of the proposed complaint remains the same as the original, legally insufficient, complaint.

The Court's analysis with respect to the motion for reconsideration is equally applicable here. It would be futile to grant leave to amend because the proposed amended complaint, like the original complaint, would be subject to dismissal for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Accordingly, Baum's motion for leave to file an amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\) is overruled.

III. Tortious Interference With Business Relationships And Prospective Economic Advantage

HN18 Under Michigan law, the elements of tortious interference with economic relations are (1) the existence of a valid business relationship or expectancy, (2) knowledge of the relationship or expectancy on the part of the interferor, (3) intentional interference inducing or causing a breach or termination of a relationship [41] or expectancy, and (4) damages. See Lifeline Ltd. v. Connecticut Gen. Life Ins. Co., 821 F. Supp. 1213, 1216 \(E.D. Mich. 1993\); Pryor v. Sloan Valve Co., 194 Mich. App. 556, 487 N.W.2d 846, 848-49 \(Mich. Ct. App. 1992\).

Defendants moved to dismiss Baum's claim for tortious interference in the original complaint, on the ground that Baum had alleged no reasonable expectation of a business relationship. The Michigan court agreed, holding that "the allegations supporting this count are sparse." It gave Baum an opportunity to amend the complaint to better describe those expectations, however, and cautioned that if Baum did not do so, the count would be dismissed. See Baum, 31 F. Supp. 2d at 1025. Accordingly, Baum now seeks to amend "to elaborate the nature of Defendant[s]' interference and state the nature of Baum's business expectation." [Memorandum In Support of \[Baum's\] Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint](#) at 1 n.1.

Defendants complain that the proposed amendment merely alleges that many people buy baseball bats; that professional baseball leagues prefer wood bats; that Baum "can think of reasons why people [42] might prefer its bats" and some customers have agreed with those reasons; and that Baum has sold 15,000 bats. The bat manufacturers argue that except for Baum's allegations concerning the Mid-American and Cape Cod Conferences, ¹¹ the proposed amendment does not identify specific business relationships or sales that Baum would have made and with which defendants interfered. Further, none of the allegations set forth facts necessary to establish a reasonable expectancy of business. Accordingly, the bat manufacturers argue that Baum's proposed amendment would be futile and that the Court should therefore deny its motion for leave to amend.

[43] These arguments are unpersuasive. HN19 [↑] Although Michigan law governing tortious interference with prospective economic advantage requires Baum to allege more than a mere hope for a future business opportunity or the innate optimism of the salesman, e.g., Bell Data Network Comms., Inc. v. Symbol Techs., Inc., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17523, 1995 WL 871222, at *5 (E.D. Mich. 1995); Schipani v. Ford Motor Co., 102 Mich. App. 606, *1204 302 N.W.2d 307, 314 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981), Baum need not demonstrate a guaranteed relationship, however, because "anything that is prospective in nature is necessarily uncertain," and "we are not here dealing with certainties, but with reasonable likelihood or probability." Schipani, 102 Mich. App. at 622, 302 N.W.2d at 314 (citing Behrend v. Bell Tel. Co., 242 Pa. Super. 47, 363 A.2d 1152, 1160 \(Pa. Ct. App. 1976\)).

"The HN20 [↑] tort contemplates a relationship, prospective or existing, of some substance, some particularity, before an inference can arise as to its value to the plaintiff and the defendant's responsibility for its loss." Id. "To demonstrate such a realistic expectation, [plaintiff] must prove a business relationship [44] with an identifiable class of third parties." Liberty Heating & Cooling, Inc. v. Builders Square, Inc., 788 F. Supp. 1438, 1451 (E.D. Mich.) (citing Schipani, 302 N.W.2d at 314), appeal dismissed, 968 F.2d 1215 (6th Cir. 1992); see also Hoffman v. Roberto, 85 B.R. 406, 416 (W.D. Mich. 1987) (to HN21 [↑] establish whether expectation of economic advantage was reasonable, plaintiff need not prove existence of enforceable contract; it is sufficient to show interference with specific third parties or identifiable prospective class of third persons with whom plaintiff had reasonable expectation of contracting) (citing Schipani, 102 Mich. App. at 621-22, 302 N.W.2d 307 and Wilkerson v. Carlo, 101 Mich. App. 629, 300 N.W.2d 658, 659 \(Mich. Ct. App. 1980\)).

The amendments which Baum proposes would rectify the defects in the original complaint. In its revised incarnation, the complaint alleges that the market for amateur baseball bats is huge, consisting of some 11,000 colleges and universities, 16,000 high schools, and 3,600,000 little league baseball players throughout the world; that Baum's wood [45] composition bats are durable and sell for half the price of aluminum bats; that professional baseball teams, players and coaches compliment Baum bats for durability, reliability, performance and value as compared to aluminum and traditional wood bats; that major professional baseball leagues purchase and use Baum bats for use in minor leagues; that major professional leagues prefer college and high school teams to use bats with woodlike speeds for training purposes; that since 1991 Baum has manufactured 15,000 bats, generating approximately $ 1,600,000.00 in total revenues; that representatives of H&B and Easton have admitted that Baum's bat is a marketable product; that the Baum hitting machine has wide approval among industry experts and is "the best hitting device available to test batted ball speeds"; and that if the NCAA had enforced its wood-like bat standards during the relevant period, the Baum bat "would have been extensively used in college, high school and amateur baseball since 1992, and the Baum Hitting Machine would have been used as a device to test baseball bat speeds since 1996." [Proposed] First Amended Complaint at 33-34, P100.

The proposed complaint further [46] alleges that defendants induced the NCAA Executive Committee to override decisions of the Rules Committee; induced the Mid-American and Cape Cod Conferences to terminate arrangements with Baum for the use of Baum bats, removed and destroyed Baum's bats and replaced them with free high performance aluminum bats; gave free aluminum bats, equipment and money to colleges, universities and coaches to "induce and coerce" the Rules Committee, the Executive Committee and NCAA member schools and coaches "to refrain from adopting any rules, standards or tests that curtailed the use of high performance aluminum bats" in order to exclude wood or wood composition bats; submitted information to the NCAA, the National Federation of State High School Associations, and college, high school and amateur baseball [*1205] coaches which falsely indicated that defendants' aluminum bats were safe and no faster than wood, that aluminum bats did not upset the offensive/defensive balance or affect the "integrity of the game," and that the "Brandt BPF standard" confirmed the safety of aluminum bats (when in fact it was an invalid test); and boycotted the Baum Hitting Machine. Id. at 34-35, P101.

¹¹ The proposed amended complaint alleges that the bat manufacturers and SGMA "interfered with Baum's business opportunity and expectancy" by inducing the Mid-American and Cape Cod Conferences "to terminate arrangements Baum had made for the use of Baum's bats" in the conferences and by "removing and destroying Baum's bats and replacing them with free high performance aluminum bats." [Proposed] First Amended Complaint at 34, P101.

Finally, the proposed [47] complaint alleges that in November 1998 Easton disseminated to the Rules Committee and to hundreds of college and high school baseball coaches false information regarding results of tests on the Baum Hitting Machine. Id. at 35-36, P101. The complaint alleges that defendants' misconduct interfered with Baum's business relationships and prospective economic advantage, in the form of lost profits on sales of Baum bats; loss of licensing fees for the Baum Hitting Machine; loss of time and expense incurred in developing the Baum bat and Baum Hitting Machine; and injury to Baum's business, good will, name and business reputation. See id. at 36, P102.

The proposed complaint sufficiently alleges the existence of a valid business expectancy. The allegations reveal that Baum had more than a mere hope for business opportunities or the innate optimism of a salesman. They indicate that Baum's composite wood bats were well received by baseball players and coaches and had previously enjoyed not insubstantial sales. The allegations also point to an identifiable class of prospects to whom Baum had a reasonable expectation of selling composite wood bats. If these revised allegations are true, [48] Baum realistically could have expected better sales and profits from the amateur baseball bat market.

The Court concludes that Baum's claim for tortious interference with business relationships and prospective economic advantage would not be subject to dismissal in its amended form and that the proposed amendments would not be futile. Accordingly, Baum's motion for leave to amend is sustained.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Baum plaintiffs' Motion For Reconsideration And To Amend The Complaint (Doc. # 53) filed December 4, 1998 in Baum Research and Dev. Co. v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., Case No. Civ. A. 99-2112-KHV, be and hereby is overruled in part and sustained in part. Plaintiffs' motion for reconsideration is OVERRULED. Plaintiffs' motion to amend the complaint is SUSTAINED as to the claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage in violation of state law. Baum shall file its first amended complaint on or before November 8, 1999.

Dated this 28th day of October, 1999, at Kansas City, Kansas.

Kathryn H. Vratil

United States District Judge

United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Delaware

October 4, 1999, Argued, Wilmington, Delaware ; October 29, 1999, Decided

Civil Action No. 99-5 MMS, Civil Action No. 99-255 MMS, Civil Action No. 99-343 MMS

Reporter

190 F.R.D. 140 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17169 ; 45 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 1380; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,731

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. DENTSPLY INTERNATIONAL, INC., Defendant. HOWARD HESS DENTAL LABORATORIES INCORPORATED and PHILIP GUTTIEREZ d/b/a DENTURES PLUS, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. DENTSPLY INTERNATIONAL, INC., Defendant. ROBERT B. RAIBER, DDS, P.C., individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, v. DENTSPLY INTERNATIONAL, INC., Defendant.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6925 \(D. Del., May 10, 2000\)

Related proceeding at Jersey Dental Labs. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 180 F. Supp. 2d 541, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22253 \(D. Del., 2001\)

Prior History: United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 187 F.R.D. 152, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10072 \(D. Del., 1999\)

Disposition: [1] Dentsply's motion to consolidate pretrial proceedings in Government action with Hess and Raiber actions denied.

Core Terms

consolidation, antitrust, discovery, cases, teeth, artificial, government's case, suits, pretrial proceedings, antitrust case, damages, parties, public policy, allegations, exemption, dealers, multidistrict litigation, manufacturers, witnesses, enforcement action, antitrust suit, articulated, duplicative, complaints, tag-along, overlap

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Trials > Consolidation of Actions

HN1 [down arrow] Trials, Consolidation of Actions

When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated; and it may make such orders concerning proceedings therein as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42\(a\).

Civil Procedure > Trials > Consolidation of Actions

HN2 [down] Trials, Consolidation of Actions

Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a) gives the court broad powers to consolidate actions involving common questions of law or fact if, in its discretion, such consolidation would facilitate the administration of justice.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Consolidation of Actions

HN3 [down] Trials, Consolidation of Actions

The mere existence of common issues, a prerequisite to consolidation, does not require consolidation.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Consolidation of Actions

HN4 [down] Trials, Consolidation of Actions

In determining whether to consolidate, the court balances the savings of time and effort gained through consolidation against the inconvenience, delay, or expense that it might cause.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Consolidation of Actions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

HN5 [down] Trials, Consolidation of Actions

28 U.S.C.S. § 1407 provides for transfer for consolidation or coordination of pretrial proceedings in most civil actions involving one or more common questions of fact pending in different districts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Multidistrict Litigation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN6 [down] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

Even in cases involving common questions of law or fact, the multidistrict litigation statute provides an explicit exemption for any action in which the United States is a complainant arising under the antitrust laws of the United States. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1407(g).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Standing

A finding in favor of the United States in an antitrust enforcement action is prima facie evidence of a violation for injured competitors or customers bringing a subsequent private suit. 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(a\) \(1994\).

Counsel: For United States of America, plaintiff (Civil Action No. 99-5): Carl Schnee, Esquire, United States Attorney, Judith M. Kinney, Esquire, Assistant United States Attorney, United States Department of Justice, Wilmington, Delaware.

For United States of America, plaintiff (Civil Action No. 99-5): Mark J. Botti, Esquire, William E. Berlin, Esquire, Frederick S. Young, Esquire, Michael S. Spector, Esquire, Of Counsel, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

For Howard Hess Dental Laboratories Incorporated, Philip Gutierrez, plaintiffs (Civil Action No. 99-255): Pamela S. Tikellis, Esquire, Robert J. Kriner, Jr., Esquire, Chimicles & Tikellis, LLP, Wilmington, Delaware.

For Howard Hess Dental Laboratories Incorporated, Philip Gutierrez, plaintiffs (Civil Action No. 99-255): Thomas A. Dubbs, Esquire, Hollis L. Salzman, Esquire, Of Counsel, Goodkind Labaton Rudoff & Sucharow LLP, New York, New York.

For Robert B. Raiber, DDS, P.C., plaintiff (Civil Action No. 99-343): Edward B. Rosenthal, Esquire, Rosenthal, Monhait, Gross & Goddess, P.A.

For [2] Robert B. Raiber, DDS, P.C., plaintiff (Civil Action No. 99-343): Stephen D. Oestreich, Esquire, Patricia I. Avery, Esquire, Of Counsel, Wolf Popper LLP, New York, New York.

For Dentsply International, Inc., defendant (Civil Action No. 99-5, Civil Action No. 99-255, Civil Action No. 99-343): James P. Hughes, Jr., Esquire, Young, Conaway, Stargatt & Taylor, Wilmington, Delaware.

For Dentsply International, Inc., defendant (Civil Action No. 99-5, Civil Action No. 99-255, Civil Action No. 99-343): Margaret M. Zwisler, Esquire, Richard A. Ripley, Esquire, Kelly A. Clement, Esquire, Eric J. McCarthy, Esquire, Of Counsel, Howrey & Simon, Washington, D.C.

Judges: Murray M. Schwartz, Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: Murray M. Schwartz

Opinion

OPINION

Argued: October 4, 1999

Dated: October 29, 1999

Wilmington, Delaware

SCHWARTZ, Senior District Judge

[*141] Dentsply International Inc. ("Dentsply") is the sole defendant in three antitrust actions currently pending before this court: an antitrust enforcement action brought by the United States Department of Justice and two "tag-along" private antitrust damages actions. Dentsply has moved to consolidate pretrial proceedings in all [3] three actions. If one ignores this is a nationwide government antitrust suit, the relevant considerations, such as commonality of factual and legal issues, identity of parties, and overlap in discovery typically dictate consolidation.

However, based on public policy considerations set forth in the multidistrict litigation statute ¹ and its legislative history, the motion to consolidate will be denied.

I. Factual and Procedural Background

The Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice ("Government") filed an antitrust suit against Dentsply on January 5, 1999, seeking to enjoin Dentsply's alleged violations of federal antitrust law. United States of America v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., C.A. No. 99-5 ("Government" action). The complaint alleges Dentsply has engaged in, and continues to engage in, various actions to unlawfully maintain its monopoly power in the market for prefabricated, artificial teeth and to deny competing manufacturers [4] of artificial teeth access to independent distributors (known in the industry as "dealers") of artificial teeth in the United States, in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act ² and § 3 of the Clayton Act. ³ The Government alleges the dealers are a necessary means for manufacturers of artificial teeth to effectively distribute their products in the United States ⁴ and that Dentsply has entered into restrictive agreements and taken other actions to induce and compel dealers not to carry certain competing lines of artificial teeth. As a result of Dentsply's actions, the Government contends rival manufacturers of artificial teeth have been foreclosed from selling their teeth through the large majority of outlets that carry artificial teeth, thereby reducing competition [*142] among artificial teeth manufacturers, resulting in higher prices, fewer choices, less market information, and lower quality artificial teeth. The Government seeks to enjoin Dentsply's alleged anticompetitive conduct.

[5] On January 8, 1999, Robert Raiber, DDS, P.C., filed a class action lawsuit against Dentsply in the Supreme Court of New York on behalf of all dentists who purchased artificial teeth manufactured by Dentsply, either directly or through a dealer or dental laboratory, in the preceding four years. Robert B. Raiber, DDS, P.C. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., C.A. No. 99-343 ("Raiber" action). Raiber's antitrust allegations are substantially identical to those in the Government action, although Raiber's claim is based upon New York state antitrust law, the Donnelly Act. ⁵ The complaint seeks damages and a jury trial in addition to enjoining Dentsply's alleged anticompetitive conduct.

Dentsply removed the Raiber case to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Raiber then moved to transfer to the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, and Dentsply cross-moved for transfer to this court. On May 24, 1999, the United [6] States District Court for the Southern District of New York granted Dentsply's cross-motion to transfer the Raiber case to this court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1404(a).

Before any ruling was made on the cross-motions for transfer in the Raiber case, Howard Hess Dental Laboratories, Inc. brought a class action suit against Dentsply in this court on behalf of all dental laboratories who purchased defendant's products from dealers since January 1, 1987. Howard Hess Dental Labs., Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., C.A. No. 99-255 ("Hess" action). The Hess complaint alleges violations of the same federal antitrust statutes as the Government complaint, and the antitrust allegations are nearly verbatim to those set forth in the Government complaint. Hess, like Raiber, seeks damages and a jury trial in addition to injunctive relief.

¹ 28 U.S.C. § 1407 \(1994\).

² 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 \(1994\).

³ 15 U.S.C. § 14 \(1994\).

⁴ The Government's complaint states that almost all artificial teeth sold in this country are used by dental laboratories to make dentures. Although some manufacturers of artificial teeth sell their product directly to dental laboratories, dealers (also referred to in the complaint as "dental laboratory dealers," "independent dealers," and "independent distributors") are the primary channel through which dental laboratories purchase artificial teeth.

⁵ N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340 (McKinney 1999).

On July 2, 1999, Dentsply moved to consolidate the three actions for purposes of pretrial proceedings under Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 42\(a\).⁶ It maintains that consolidation is warranted because the complaints in each case are virtually identical; there are common facts and law at issue; there is considerable overlap in discovery; and the defendant [7] is the same in each action. Dentsply also correctly asserts that consolidation will benefit Dentsply and third party witnesses and promote judicial efficiency by ensuring that discovery from one case can be used in all three cases, thereby avoiding duplicative discovery and motions practice. Finally, Dentsply vigorously contends that without consolidation there is no guarantee it can use discovery obtained in the Government case in its defense of the private class actions.

The plaintiffs in the Hess and Raiber actions have declined to take a position on consolidation. The Government opposes consolidation, arguing that Congress [8] and the courts have articulated a public policy against consolidating government antitrust suits with private antitrust actions. The Government further contends that consideration of the relevant factors demonstrates that consolidation is not warranted because it poses risks of delay in the government case; that the Government's situation is different from that of the class action plaintiffs in the Hess and Raiber actions; that consolidation will adversely affect the rights of the Government; and that informal coordination amongst the parties has largely avoided duplicative discovery and motions practice to date.

II. Discussion

"Rule HN2[] 42\(a\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure gives this Court broad powers to consolidate actions involving common questions of law or fact if, in its discretion, such consolidation would facilitate the administration [*143] of justice."⁷ [9] However, "the HN3[] mere existence of common issues, a prerequisite to consolidation, does not require consolidation."⁸ HN4[] In determining whether to consolidate, the court balances the savings of time and effort gained through consolidation against the inconvenience, delay, or expense that it might cause.⁹

A. Standard considerations under Rule 42\(a\) favor consolidation

Given the similarity of the allegations in the Government's complaint and the "tag-along" class suits, Rule 42\(a\)'s requirement of common factual or legal issues is met.¹⁰ Additionally, several factors in this case favor consolidation under Rule 42\(a\), including overlapping parties (Dentsply is the sole defendant in each case), similar claims based on common facts and transactions, and discovery overlap.¹¹

⁶ HN1[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 42\(a\) provides:

Consolidation. When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order a joint hearing or trial of any or all the matters in issue in the actions; it may order all the actions consolidated; and it may make such orders concerning proceedings therein as may tend to avoid unnecessary costs or delay.

⁷ Waste Distillation Tech., Inc. v. Pan Am Resources, Inc., 775 F. Supp. 759, 761 (D. Del. 1991) (citing Ellerman Lines, Ltd. v. Atlantic & Gulf Stevedores, Inc., 339 F.2d 673, 675 (3d Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 812, 15 L. Ed. 2d 60, 86 S. Ct. 23 (1965)).

⁸ Id. (citing Rohm & Haas Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 525 F. Supp. 1298, 1309 (D. Del. 1981)).

⁹ See id.; 9 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & ARTHUR R. MILLER, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2383, at 438-39 (2d ed. 1995).

¹⁰ The Government does not dispute the existence of common factual and legal issues.

¹¹ See 8 JAMES WM. MOORE, [MOORE'S FEDERAL PRACTICE § 42.10\[6\]](#) (3d ed. 1999); 9 WRIGHT & MILLER, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2384.

[10] First, the claims in each case are similar and arise from the same alleged conduct by Dentsply: that Dentsply has taken various actions to unlawfully maintain its monopoly power in the market for artificial teeth and to deny competing manufacturers of artificial teeth access to dealer distribution networks through its use of various restrictive dealer arrangements. The most apparent differences among the complaints are that Hess and Raiber request monetary damages and the Government does not,¹² [11] and that the Hess and Raiber suits are class actions seeking a jury trial. Neither of these differences alone would be sufficient to preclude consolidation.¹³ Moreover, discovery related to the damages and class issues is scheduled to take place in the Raiber and Hess cases after discovery has concluded in the Government case.

Second, the virtual correspondence of the substantive antitrust allegations in the three cases means there will be a substantial overlap in discovery. The three cases require discovery of many of the same witnesses and review of many of the same documents. Consolidated discovery would conserve Dentsply resources because it would not have to obtain agreement from all plaintiffs and involved third parties before it could use discovery obtained in one case in the others, and it could avoid issuing duplicative discovery process in each case. Moreover, burdens on third party witnesses would be reduced through avoidance of duplicative discovery. Most importantly, without consolidation, Dentsply will [12] not be guaranteed the use of discovery obtained in the Government case in the other two suits. Dentsply urges that foreign courts may be loath to grant it permission to depose witnesses again for the private cases if it has already deposed such witnesses on many of the same issues in the Government case.

From what has been said supra, an analysis of the standard factors under Rule 42\(a\) would counsel consolidation in this case. However, based on the public policy position articulated by the United States Congress, discussed infra, the pretrial proceedings in [*144] the Government case will not be consolidated with the other cases.¹⁴

B. For public policy reasons, the private damages suits will not [13] be consolidated with the Government antitrust case

Although Rule 42\(a\) does not expressly prohibit consolidation of pretrial proceedings in any particular type of case, Congress has articulated a strong public policy against combining antitrust complaints brought by the Government with private antitrust damages suits. This public policy is embodied in the multidistrict litigation statute, HN5 [↑] 28 U.S.C. § 1407, which provides for transfer for consolidation or coordination of pretrial proceedings in most civil actions involving one or more common questions of fact pending in different districts. HN6 [↑] Even in cases involving common questions of law or fact, the multidistrict litigation statute provides an explicit exemption for "any action in which the United States is a complainant arising under the antitrust laws [of the United States]."¹⁵

¹² The Government also points out that the Raiber claim is based not on the federal antitrust statutes but on New York's Donnelly Act. Nonetheless, there is still the potential for enormous overlap in discovery because the Raiber complaint's allegations are nearly verbatim to the allegations in the Government's complaint, indicating the claims are based on the same facts and transactions.

¹³ See, e.g., Waste Distillation Tech., 775 F. Supp. at 761 (consolidating cases where the "only appreciable difference between the two complaints is an additional claim for relief"); cf. Martinez v. Bechtel Corp., 1975 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15226, No. C-74-2402 SW, at *4-5 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 18, 1975) (ordering consolidation despite differences in proposed class composition).

¹⁴ Because the court bases its decision not to consolidate the Government action based on the public policy rationale discussed infra, there is no need to address in more detail the Government's arguments that other standard considerations relevant to the Rule 42\(a\) analysis militate against consolidation.

¹⁵ 28 U.S.C. § 1407\(g\).

The statute does not preclude consolidation of government cases brought under §§ 4A and 4C of the Clayton Act. See 28 U.S.C. § 1407\(g\)-\(h\). Because a government entity bringing suit under these sections seeks damages, not an injunction, and therefore stands in a position similar to a private litigant, consolidation may be appropriate. See H.R. Rep. No. 90-1130, at 5, 8 (1968), reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1898, 1903, 1905; In re Antibiotic Drugs, 309 F. Supp. 155 \(J.P.M.L. 1970\).

[14] The legislative history of § 1407\(g\) discloses the antitrust exemption was founded on congressional concern that "consolidation might induce private plaintiffs to file actions merely to ride along on the Government's cases," and that this would "almost certainly" cause delay in the resolution of the Government's cases.¹⁶ In this case, as indicated by the nearly identical allegations of the Government complaint and the Hess and Raiber complaints, the Hess and Raiber actions are the type of private tag-along actions Congress feared would delay the Government's cases. If consolidation were permitted with the Government antitrust case under Rule 42\(a\), it would encourage more private tag-along suits, which would likely delay future Government antitrust cases. Moreover, allowing defendants to consolidate private antitrust cases filed in the same district with Government antitrust cases would allow them to circumvent § 1407\(g\) by seeking transfer of individual cases to the same forum and then moving for consolidation under Rule 42\(a\).

[15] The legislative history of § 1407\(g\) acknowledges that exempting Government antitrust complaints from pretrial transfer and consolidation with private antitrust actions imposes some burdens on defendants. However, in weighing the public interest in expedited resolution of government antitrust enforcement actions against the potential burdens of duplicative discovery on defendants, Congress chose to strike the balance in favor of the public's interest in expedited relief:

While exempting the Government from this legislation may occasionally burden defendants because they may have to answer [*145] similar questions posed by both the Government and by private parties, this is justified by the importance [to] the public of securing relief in antitrust cases as quickly as possible.¹⁷

This antitrust exemption is not capricious, but rather based on congressional recognition of the primacy of antitrust enforcement actions brought by the United States, and that such actions are of special urgency and serve a different purpose than private damages suits because they seek to enjoin ongoing anticompetitive conduct:

To treat the Government differently is not arbitrary, for [16] the purpose of the governmental suit normally differs from that of a private suit; the Government seeks to protect the public from competitive injury, while private parties are primarily interested in recovering damages for injuries already suffered. . . .¹⁸

Moreover, 15 U.S.C. § 16\(a\) also articulates the public policy of recognizing the priority of federal antitrust enforcement actions over private antitrust suits. HNT¹⁹ A finding in favor of the United States in an antitrust enforcement action is prima facie evidence of a violation for injured competitors or customers bringing a subsequent private suit.¹⁹ Permitting federal suits to go forward without being burdened by delays that consolidation may cause not only permits more expeditious relief to the public for conduct adjudged illegal, but also makes a judgment [17]

¹⁶ H.R. Rep. No. 90-1130, at 5, 8, reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 1902, 1905. The House Report for § 1407 states:

Subsection (g) excludes from the operation of the bill antitrust actions in which the United States is complainant. This limitation was requested by the Department of Justice and concurred in by the Coordinating Committee and the Judicial Conference of the United States, on the basis that consolidation might induce private plaintiffs to file actions merely to ride along on the government's cases. Government suits would then almost certainly be delayed, often to the disadvantage of those injured competitors who would predicate damages actions on the outcome of the Government's suit. Furthermore, since section 5(b) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. 16\(b\)) tolls the statute of limitations during the pendency of the Government's action, there is no need for injured competitors to join in the Government's suit.

H.R. Rep. No. 90-1130, at 5, reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 1902-03.

¹⁷ H.R. Rep. No. 90-1130, at 8, reprinted in 1968 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 1905 (letter of Deputy Attorney General Ramsey Clark, incorporated into the Report).

¹⁸ Id.

¹⁹ See 15 U.S.C. § 16\(a\) \(1994\).

in favor of the Government available for use in a private suit. In addition to providing private antitrust plaintiffs with a powerful weapon, it also promotes judicial efficiency by fostering settlement.²⁰

[18] The court holds that Congress, in 28 U.S.C. § 1407\(g\), has expressed a clear public policy of prioritizing prompt resolution of Government antitrust claims to provide expeditious relief to the public over possible efficiencies to be gained from consolidation with private antitrust damages actions. Because of the § 1407\(g\) antitrust exemption, Dentsply would not be able to successfully urge the panel on multidistrict litigation to transfer the Government's case for consolidated pretrial proceedings under the multidistrict litigation statute.²¹ Because the purpose of consolidating pretrial proceedings pending within one district under Rule 42\(a\) is analogous to the overarching purpose of 28 U.S.C. § 1407, the court concludes that the public policy underlying § 1407\(g\)'s exemption of Government antitrust cases from transfer and consolidation of pre-trial proceedings controls this case. This is not to say that there is a per se ban on consolidation of a Government antitrust case under Rule 42\(a\). However, in cases where the Government objects to consolidation, as in this case, public policy concerns underlying 28 U.S.C. § 1407 [19] \(g\) outweigh other considerations in favor of consolidation.²²

[*146] Dentsply insists that in this case permitting consolidation is consistent with Congress's goal of securing prompt relief for the public in Government antitrust actions.²³ It urges no delay will actually [20] result from consolidation because the parties in each of the three cases are committed to the exact same discovery schedule, with merits discovery scheduled to end on the same date.²⁴ The court will not accept Dentsply's reasoning because it would require consolidation every time a private class action suit is filed following a Government suit if the parties in the private suit initially adopt the discovery schedule of the Government's case.²⁵ Moreover, it is possible that third party witnesses who are also competitors of Dentsply might not object to Government discovery of their proprietary information. However, they would strenuously fight to avoid disclosure of that information to rivals, causing delay that would necessitate lengthening the discovery schedule. Finally, Congress, in carving out

²⁰ The Government also argues that the public policy against consolidating government antitrust enforcement suits with private suits is demonstrated by courts' refusal to permit private parties to intervene in government antitrust suits. See, e.g., Sam Fox Publishing Co. v. United States, 366 U.S. 683, 689, 693, 6 L. Ed. 2d 604, 81 S. Ct. 1309 (1961) (emphasizing the "unquestionably sound policy of not permitting private antitrust plaintiffs to press their claims against alleged violators in the same suit as the Government" even where the private litigants are aligned with the Government); United States v. International Business Machines Corp., 62 F.R.D. 530, 532 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 1974). While these cases and others discuss generally the different purposes behind antitrust enforcement suits brought by the government and private antitrust suits, they involve different issues and considerations and are otherwise inapposite to the instant consolidation.

²¹ See 28 U.S.C. § 1407\(g\).

²² Neither the court nor any of the parties was able to locate a case in which there was any discussion of this issue much less a case in which a Government antitrust enforcement suit was consolidated for pretrial proceedings, over the Government's objection, with one or more private antitrust suits under Rule 42\(a\). That there are no such cases is not entirely surprising because such cases would only arise in instances where the Government objects to consolidation. In cases where the Government does not object to consolidation, the court cannot imagine a scenario where the defendants or the plaintiffs in the private damages suit would have convincing reasons to oppose consolidation.

²³ At an October hearing, Dentsply also argued that the multidistrict litigation statute presents a different context than consolidation under Rule 42\(a\); that is, the multidistrict litigation statute is concerned with transferring cases, and that there is a sense that the concern was to protect the Government's choice of forum. The short answer is there is nothing in the statutory language to support this argument. Moreover, the legislative history regarding the exemption only articulates concerns that permitting transfer and consolidation would encourage private tag-along suits and cause delay to the Government's cases.

²⁴ Class and damages discovery will take place following the conclusion of merits discovery on February 1, 2000.

²⁵ The nature of these tag-along private suits is such that there will always be strong reasons for consolidation under Rule 42\(a\) because there will be common issues of law and fact and considerable overlap in discovery between the Government action and the private actions.

an exclusion of Government antitrust claims from the multidistrict litigation statute, explicitly excluded these cases from a case-by-case weighing of possible delays versus efficiencies to be gained from coordinating pretrial proceedings. Although there may be some cases in which consolidation would not in fact cause delay to the Government's antitrust case, due to the vagaries of the [21] discovery process there is no way to ensure ahead of time that delay will not occur.

[22] In this case, the United States filed its suit against Dentsply after substantial investigation in which Dentsply participated. The Hess and Raiber plaintiffs, not being involved in that investigation, have to catch up to the United States and Dentsply in their knowledge of the artificial teeth industry and the particulars of the alleged anticompetitive conduct. In fact, depositions in the Government's case were delayed by three weeks in order to permit counsel for Hess and Raiber to get "up to speed" to meaningfully participate in cross-noticed depositions in the Government's case. In sum, the court cannot ignore the reality that, although the parties are currently on the same ambitious discovery schedule, the potential for delay caused by discovery disputes in the private actions is omnipresent.²⁶

III. Conclusion

There is a strong articulated congressional public policy concern that [23] permitting consolidation of Government antitrust suits with private damages suits might encourage private plaintiffs to file tag-along damages suits. Congress has made the decision that inefficiencies and inconvenience to antitrust defendants are trumped by an unwillingness to countenance delay in the prosecution of Government antitrust litigation. An order will be entered denying Dentsply's motion to consolidate pretrial proceedings in the Government action with the Hess and Raiber actions.²⁷

End of Document

²⁶ While it did not result in any meaningful delay, one such dispute has already arisen between Hess and Dentsply.

²⁷ Dentsply did not move in the alternative to consolidate only the Hess and Raiber actions, and neither Hess nor Raiber has requested consolidation. The court assumes without knowing that the litigants concluded there was nothing to be gained by a partial consolidation.

Ess Tech. v. Pc-Tel, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

November 2, 1999, Decided ; November 4, 1999, Filed; November 9, 1999, Entered in Civil Docket

NO. C-99-20292 RMW

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23227 *; 1999 WL 33520483

ESS TECHNOLOGY, INC., a California Corporation, Plaintiff, v. PC-TEL, INC., a Delaware Corporation, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Motion denied by ESS Tech., Inc. v. PC-Tel, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26348 \(N.D. Cal., Nov. 27, 2001\)

Disposition: [*1] Defendant's motion to dismiss granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

patents, antitrust, license, modem, specific performance, declaratory relief, infringing, alleges, actual controversy, customers, antitrust violation, defense motion, non-discriminatory, facilities, argues, unfair

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN1 Private Actions, Standing

To be a proper antitrust plaintiff, a plaintiff must allege that it was actually harmed in some way by defendant's alleged antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2 Private Actions, Standing

An antitrust plaintiff must show injury to competition in the relevant market, not just injury to the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 Private Actions, Remedies

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit states that the essential facilities doctrine imposes liability when one firm, which controls an essential facility, denies a second firm reasonable access to a product or service that the second firm must obtain in order to compete with the first. There are four elements to the essential facilities doctrine: (1) control of an essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility. A facility is essential if it is controlled by one firm which also has the power to eliminate competition in the downstream market.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > General Overview

Contracts Law > Remedies > Specific Performance

HN4 [down arrow] Conveyances, Licenses

Under California law, a court can enforce a contract even if some of the terms are not provided. Moreover, courts should seek to uphold the enforcement of contracts and avoid finding that contracts are unenforceable due to uncertainty.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Actual Controversy

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > Remedies > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Judgments, Declaratory Judgments

In order to state a claim for declaratory relief under 28 U.S.C.S. § 2201, a plaintiff must show that an actual controversy exists based on the totality of the circumstances. The Federal Circuit has developed a two-part test to determine if an actual controversy exists as to a declaration of patent non-infringement or invalidity: (1) the accused infringer must show that it is prepared to produce or has actually produced the alleged infringing products; and (2) the patentee's conduct must create an objectively reasonable apprehension on the part of the accused infringer that the patentee will initiate suit if the allegedly infringing activity continues.

Counsel: For ESS Technology, Inc, PLAINTIFF: Ian N Feinberg, Gary, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich, Palo Alto, CA USA. Wayne P Sobon, Gray, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich, Palo Alto, CA USA. David R Stevens, Gary, Cary, Wary & Freidenrich, Palo Alto, CA USA. James Pooley, Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy, LLP, Palo Alto, CA USA.

For PC-Tel, Inc, DEFENDANT: Steven M Levitan, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Richard F Cauley, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Teague I Donahey, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Craig I Donahey, Skjerven, Morrison, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA, Philip L Judson, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Craig J Bristol, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA.

For PC-Tel, Inc, COUNTER-CLAIMANT: Steven M Levitan, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin, & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Richard F Cauley, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Teague I Donahey, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Craig I Donahey, Skjerven, Morrison, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA, Philip L Judson, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA. Craig J Bristol, Skjerven, Morrill, MacPherson, Franklin & Friel, LLP, San Jose, CA USA.

For ESS Technology, Inc, COUNTER-DEFENDANT: Ian N Feinberg, Gary, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich, Palo Alto, CA USA. Wayne P Sobon, Gray, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich, Palo Alto, CA USA. David R Stevens, Gary, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich, Palo Alto, CA USA. James Pooley, Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy, LLP, Palo Alto, CA USA.

Judges: RONALD M. WHYTE, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: RONALD M. WHYTE

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

[Docket No. 21]

Defendant's motion to dismiss pursuant to Rules 12\(b\)\(1\) and 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure was submitted on the papers without oral argument. The court has read the moving and responding papers. For the reasons set forth below, the court grants the motion as to Counts I and V and denies it as to Counts II, III and IV. Plaintiff is given twenty (20) days leave to amend.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff ESS Technology, Inc. manufactures and sells modem semiconductor chipsets and associated modem software drivers for use in personal computers. Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint ("FAC"), P8. ESS does not sell its modem chipsets or completed systems directly to end-users, but rather to intermediate manufacturers, original equipment manufacturers, systems integrators, and retail distributors who package complete modem boards. Id.

Defendant PC-TEL, Inc. holds patents that are necessary for modem producers [*2] to comply with the V.34 and V.90 standards established by the International Telecommunications Union ("ITU"). FAC, PP9 & 12. The V.34 and V.90 are the latest modem standards in wide use in the computer industry and allow for high speed communications. FAC, P10. Defendant acquired the patents at issue when it purchased and merged with General DataComm, Inc. ("GDC"), the original assignee of the patents. FAC, P12. Plaintiff claims that defendant, and formerly GDC, represented to the ITU that its patents claimed at least part of the V.34 and V.90 standards and they agreed to the ITU patent policy 2.2, which requires patentees of ITU standards to negotiate licenses to competitors on a non-discriminatory basis and on reasonable terms and conditions. FAC, P13.

Plaintiff alleges that in 1996, GDC offered plaintiff two license options for the V.34 patents. FAC, P15. Although the offers were reasonable at the time, plaintiff had not yet entered the V.34 market. In September 1997, GDC again offered plaintiff two license options. FAC, P16. However, while the proposed royalty payments may have been appropriate when chipsets sold for approximately $ 50 per unit, chipsets were selling for approximately [*3] $ 10 per unit by March 1998. FAC, P17. Accordingly, plaintiff alleges that due to the changed modem market, the proposed royalty payments were unreasonably expensive and did not allow for new market entrants to compete with existing market participants. FAC, PP16-18. Plaintiff and GDC continued to negotiate through much of 1998 and nearly reached an agreement. FAC, P19.

Before plaintiff and GDC could resolve all their differences, defendant PC-TEL acquired GDC toward the end of 1998. FAC, P20. Plaintiff alleges that defendant then reversed course and started demanding increasingly unreasonable and discriminatory terms for licensing the V.34 and V.90 patents. FAC, P20-22. Plaintiff further alleges that defendant sent plaintiff two proposed license agreements for the V.34 and V.90 patents which were more onerous than any other proposal, including the original 1997 offer from GDC. FAC, P23. Plaintiff asserts that defendant's agent, William Conway, represented to plaintiff that the proposal was a "take-it-or-leave-it-offer," that defendant's only recourse was to "go for a cease and desist order" and would have to "go to court and let them decide." FAC, P23. Plaintiff claims that defendant [*4] then began contacting plaintiff's customers and informing them that if they continued to purchase products from plaintiff without acquiring licenses for the V.34 and V.90 patents, they would face patent infringement actions. FAC, P26.

On April 9, 1999, plaintiff filed its original action in this court. On July 2, 1999, defendant moved to dismiss. Plaintiff then voluntarily dismissed its original action, and on July 20, 1999, filed the FAC. In the FAC, plaintiff sets forth five claims: (1) antitrust violation pursuant to section 2 of the Sherman Act; (2) declaratory judgment that defendant misused the patents at issue; (3) declaratory judgment that defendant is estopped from asserting the patents; (4) specific performance of defendant's agreement with the ITU; and (5) unfair competition violation pursuant to both the common law and section 17200 of the California Business and Professions Code.

On August 12, 1999, defendant filed the motion to dismiss currently before the court. In the motion, defendant asserts that plaintiff has failed to state an antitrust claim, an unfair competition claim, and a claim for specific performance. Defendant also argues that plaintiff has failed to [*5] show that an actual controversy exists for this court to exercise jurisdiction over the declaratory relief claims.

II. ANALYSIS

A. First Claim for Antitrust Violation Under Sherman Act Section 2

Defendant moves to dismiss plaintiff's first claim, the antitrust claim, on the grounds that plaintiff has failed to allege actual injury, that plaintiff lacks antitrust standing, and that plaintiff has failed to sufficiently plead an "essential facilities" antitrust claim.

1. Actual Injury

HN1To be a proper antitrust plaintiff, a plaintiff must allege that it was actually harmed in some way by defendant's alleged antitrust violation. See [Associated General Contractors of Cal. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\). Defendant argues that ESS has not alleged facts that it has lost business as a result of defendant's conduct. "ESS's general allegations, for example, do not state that ESS has lost sales or customers." Defendant's Motion to Dismiss, p.5:10-16. However, the court finds defendant's arguments unavailing. Plaintiff has clearly alleged that it has lost sales and customers as a result of [*6] defendant's alleged antitrust violations. "ESS, upon information and belief, has suffered or will suffer antitrust injury as a result of PC-TEL's actions in that ESS has lost or will lose sales and customers . . ." FAC, P37. Thus, the court finds that plaintiff has adequately alleged that it has suffered actual injury as a result of defendant's alleged antitrust violations.

2. Antitrust Standing and Essential Facilities Claim

Defendant also argues that plaintiff has failed to sufficiently allege that defendant caused an injury that the antitrust laws were designed to protect, i.e. antitrust injury. Specifically, HN2[] an antitrust plaintiff must show injury to competition in the relevant market, not just injury to plaintiff. See Metro Indus., Inc. v. Sammi Corp., 82 F.3d 839, 847 (9th Cir. 1996); and McGlinchy v. Shell Chemical Co., 845 F.2d 802, 811-13 (9th Cir. 1988).

The court finds that plaintiff has failed to sufficiently allege injury to competition beyond the impact on plaintiff. Plaintiff's allegations that defendant's "unfair business practices unfairly discriminate against latecomers to the V.34 and V.90 modem market, in favor of earlier [*7] market entrants" (FAC, P27) and that "market entry has been foreclosed and consumer choice has been diminished" (FAC, P36) does not show injury to competition. There is no allegation that consumers have been forced to pay higher prices or that the quality of the choices available to them has been adversely affected.

Plaintiff claims it has adequately alleged antitrust injury under the "essential facilities" doctrine. HN3[↑] The Ninth Circuit has stated that the "essential facilities doctrine imposes liability when one firm, which controls an essential facility, denies a second firm reasonable access to a product or service that the second firm must obtain in order to compete with the first." Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 542 (9th Cir. 1991). There are four elements to the essential facilities doctrine: (1) control of an essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility. See City of Anaheim v. Southern Cal. Edison, 955 F.2d 1373, 1380 (9th Cir. 1992). [*8] A facility is essential if it is controlled by one firm which also has the power to eliminate competition in the downstream market. Id. at 1380 n.5.

In the current case, plaintiff has alleged that defendant holds the patents that are essential to comply with the V.34 and V.90 standards, that plaintiff cannot produce modems that comply with the V.34 and V.90 standards without infringing defendant's patents, and that plaintiff cannot compete in the relevant market due to defendant's refusal to license its patents in a reasonable and non-discriminatory way. FAC, P29-37. However, these allegations are not enough to show anti-trust injury, actual harm to competition.

B. Fifth Claim for Unfair Competition

Defendant essentially argues that plaintiff fails to state a claim for unfair competition pursuant to California Business and Professions Code section 17200 because plaintiff fails to adequately set forth a violation of antitrust law or harm to competition. The court agrees. Plaintiff has not adequately alleged that defendant's conduct threatens the incipient violation of an anti-trust law or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws or otherwise significantly [*9] harms or threatens competition. See Cel-Tech Comm., Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 973 P.2d 527, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548 (1999).

C. Fourth Claim for Specific Performance

Defendant contends that even assuming that plaintiff is a third party beneficiary to defendant's agreement with the ITU to license its patents on a non-discriminatory basis and on reasonable terms and conditions, the agreement is too vague to support a claim for specific performance, since it does not provide any express terms of the contract. However, HN4[↑] under California law, a court can enforce a contract even if some of the terms are not provided. See Martin v. Baird, 124 Cal. App. 2d 598, 601, 269 P.2d 54 (1954) (holding that a court can imply terms from the usual and reasonable conditions of such a contract). Moreover, courts should seek to uphold the enforcement of contracts and avoid finding that contracts are unenforceable due to uncertainty. Goodwest Rubber Corp. v. Munoz, 170 Cal. App. 3d 919, 921, 216 Cal. Rptr. 604 (1985) (holding that "fair market value," "reasonable value," and "current market value" are sufficiently certain price terms to support [*10] specific performance).

At this stage of the proceedings, the court declines to hold as a matter of law that plaintiff cannot state a claim for specific performance under any circumstances. While none of the cases cited by the parties deal with a similar factual scenario, where no terms of the contract are expressly agreed upon, the court finds that if it is able to rely on defendant's other contracts to determine what is fair, reasonable and non-discriminatory, under California law it must try to enforce the contract. See Goodwest Rubber, 170 Cal. App. 3d at 921. Toward that end, the court can envision a scenario where a defendant has offered nearly identical licensing agreements to all other competitors. In such a situation, the court could easily determine what a fair and non-discriminatory contract would be. Additionally, the court observes that determining the customs and practices of defendant and the modem industry would appear to be factual matters outside the scope of the pleadings. Therefore, resolving any doubts in plaintiff's favor, the court finds plaintiff may be able to support a claim for specific performance. Accordingly, defendant's motion to dismiss [*11] the specific performance claim is denied.

D. Second and Third Claims for Declaratory Relief

Defendant argues that this court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over plaintiff's declaratory relief claims because no actual controversy exists as to these patent law claims. Alternatively, defendant asserts that even if an actual controversy exists, the court should exercise its discretion and dismiss the declaratory relief claims.

HN5 [↑] In order to state a claim for declaratory relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2201, a plaintiff must show that an actual controversy exists based on the totality of the circumstances. Spectronics Corp. v. H.B. Fuller Co., 940 F.2d 631, 633-34 \(Fed. Cir. 1991\). The Federal Circuit has developed a two-part test to determine if an actual controversy exists as to a declaration of patent non-infringement or invalidity: (1) the accused infringer must show that it is prepared to produce or has actually produced the alleged infringing products; and (2) the patentee's conduct must create an objectively reasonable apprehension on the part of the accused infringer that the patentee will initiate suit if the allegedly infringing [*12] activity continues. Id. at 634.¹

In the current case, defendant does not dispute that plaintiff has been producing allegedly infringing products. With respect to the second prong, the court finds that plaintiff has adequately alleged that it had an objectively reasonable apprehension that defendant would initiate a lawsuit. Plaintiff indicates that the final offer made by defendant was more onerous than the previously unacceptable offers and that defendant stated that it was a "take-it-or-leave-it offer." FAC, P23. Certainly, if true, such an offer leaves no room for [*13] further negotiations. Moreover, plaintiff alleges that defendant stated that defendant's only recourse was to "go for a cease and desist order" and to "go to the court and let them decide." Id. Plaintiff's apprehension of suit is also supported by the allegation that defendant contacted plaintiff's customers and warned them that if they did not acquire licenses for the V.34 and V.90 patents, they would face infringement actions. Taken together, defendant's actions establish an actual controversy which supports the court's jurisdiction to hear plaintiff's declaratory relief claims of patent misuse and estoppel.

Moreover, the court notes that plaintiff's declaratory relief claims arise from and are related to defendant's alleged improper conduct giving rise to plaintiff's other claims for relief. Therefore, judicial economy is best served by allowing plaintiff to pursue its declaratory relief claims together with its other claims for relief. Thus, the court currently declines to exercise its discretion and dismiss these claims.

III. ORDER

Based on the foregoing, the court grants defendant's motion to dismiss as to Counts I and V and denies it as to Counts II, III and IV. [*14] Plaintiff is given twenty (20) days leave to amend.

DATED: 11/2/99

RONALD M. WHYTE

¹ The court observes that plaintiff does not seek a declaration that the patents are invalid or that its products do not infringe defendant's patents. However, since at this stage of the proceedings the court finds that plaintiff did allege an objective apprehension of immediate suit by defendant, the court need not address whether such a finding is required for plaintiff's patent misuse and estoppel declaratory relief claims.

United States District Judge

End of Document

Caldera, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Utah, Central Division

November 3, 1999, Decided ; November 3, 1999, Filed

Case No. 2:96-CV-645 B

Reporter

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,703

CALDERA, INC., Plaintiff, vs. MICROSOFT CORP., Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Plaintiff's "Motion to Strike Microsoft's Partial Summary Judgment Briefs Relating to Substantive Antitrust Violations" DENIED, and defendant's Motions for Partial Summary Judgment on "Plaintiff's Claim of Predisclosure," "Plaintiff's Claim of Perceived Incompatibilities," "Plaintiff's Claim of Intentional Incompatibilities," and "Plaintiff's Claim of Technological Tying" DENIED.

Core Terms

Windows, MS-DOS, incompatibilities, technological, products, operating system, integrated, IBM, alleges, beta, anticompetitive, competitor, argues, users, plaintiff's claim, asserts, message, partial summary judgment, software, detected, license, monopolist, antitrust, tying arrangement, install, monopoly, Sherman Act, marketing, anticompetitive conduct, compatible

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Scope

Despite the broad language of 15 U.S.C.S. 1, the Sherman Act prohibits only those restraints of trade that are unreasonable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The doctrine of per se violations covers those business relationships that because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they cause or the business excuse for their use.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN5[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

The offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Antitrust laws are designed to protect and foster competition even when the competitor is a monopolist.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN7[] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

In general, a monopolist is free to market its products, engage in research and development to improve its products, and engage in any other business practice that is procompetitive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN8 [+] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

If smaller businesses find themselves unable to compete on the merits of their products against a procompetitive monopolist, there is nothing in the antitrust laws to protect them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN9 [+] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Antitrust laws protect the competitive process; they do not protect individual competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN10 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

15 U.S.C.S. § 2 proscribes a monopolist from engaging in business practices that are anticompetitive or exclusionary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > General Overview

HN11 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Anticompetitive conduct describes a wide variety of behavior including espionage, sabotage, predatory pricing, fraud, price discrimination, price-fixing, bid-rigging, illegal tying arrangements, product disparagement and a host of other activities that improperly stifle competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN12 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

15 U.S.C.S. § 2 prohibits a monopolist from engaging in anticompetitive practices that are designed to deter potential rivals from entering the market or from preventing existing rivals from increasing their output, no matter how flagrant or subtle the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN13 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A monopoly may not improperly wield its resulting power to tighten its hold on the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN14 [+] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

The clearest way to explain what a monopolist may legally do is to say that the monopolist may engage in all of the same procompetitive activities that allow it to become a legal monopolist in the first place. These would include building a better or less expensive product, engaging in better public relations, employing effective (and honest) advertising campaigns, and developing aggressive and effective marketing techniques. If these activities result in even more market share, and drive competitors out of the market, the monopolist is nevertheless fully entitled to such expansion, and its conduct is not a violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN15 [+] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Nothing in the relevant law that prevents a plaintiff from asserting one overarching claim of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 violation. Conversely, to allow defendant to carve plaintiff's complaint into seven discreet claims that plaintiff never intended to allege as independent claims not only appears to offend the purpose behind § 2, but also turns basic civil procedure principles on their head.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN16 [+] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

Summary judgment is proper if the moving party can demonstrate that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and, therefore, is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). The court is required to construe all facts and reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN17 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In considering whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, the court determines whether a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party in the face of all the evidence presented.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN18 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

While each separate fact used to support plaintiff's 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim may not by itself legally support the claim, the overall effect may be prohibited anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN19 Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Among the purposes of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is to encourage competition in the marketplace by prohibiting monopolists from acting in anticompetitive ways.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN20 Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Generally a corporation may keep its innovations secret from competitors. This may foster competition. However, this is not always the case and when a monopolist acts in an anticompetitive manner it is proscribed by 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN21 [down] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

A monopolist may not eradicate its competitors through anticompetitive means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN22 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product--the tying product--only on condition that the buyer also purchase a second product--the tied product--or at least agree not to buy that product from another supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN23 [down] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A tie-in constitutes a per se 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN24 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The law forbids a manufacturer who has market power in a certain area to gain advantage in another area by requiring consumers to buy another product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN25 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Every refusal to sell two products separately cannot be said to restrain competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

HN26 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Upon meeting certain criteria, a tying arrangement may constitute a per se 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated. In sum, tying arrangements need only be condemned if they restrain competition on the merits by forcing purchases that would not otherwise be made.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN28 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A company should be allowed to build a better mousetrap, and the courts should not deprive a company of the opportunity to do so by hindering technological innovation. Yet, antitrust law has developed for good reason, and just as courts have the potential to stifle technological advancements by second guessing product design, so too can product innovation be stifled if companies are allowed to dampen competition by unlawfully tying products together and escape antitrust liability by simply claiming a "plausible" technological advancement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

The following elements are necessary in order to find a per se tying violation: (1) two separate products, (2) a tie--or conditioning of the sale of one product on the purchase of another, (3) sufficient economic power in the tying product market, and (4) a substantial volume of commerce affected in the tied product market. In determining whether the first prong of its analysis is satisfied, the Tenth Circuit states that the Supreme Court makes clear that the test for determining whether two components are separate products turns not on their function, but on the nature of any consumer demand for them. In essence the Tenth Circuit requires an inquiry as to whether the market wants two separate products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN30 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

If the evidence shows that a valid, not insignificant, technological improvement is achieved by the integration of two products, then in essence a new product is created, and a defendant is insulated from 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 tying liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN31 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

A product improvement motivation--at least without something more, such as demonstrated efficiencies--will not save an otherwise illegal tying arrangement under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Accordingly, the technological improvements demonstrate efficiencies. This is more than just a plausible claim that brings some advantage.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN32 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In determining whether a technological advance essentially creates a new product through integration, the two products that are integrated must be joined for technological reasons. This analysis requires the integration to be driven by technology rather than by marketing. Evidence that consumers prefer an integrated product may not be enough, especially where the two previous products essentially cease to exist as separate commodities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN33 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Any inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact. Thus, the answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items. The alleged fact that defendant could have produced the products separately is not enough. There must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide separately its products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN34 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Illegal tie-ins under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 may also qualify as anticompetitive conduct for 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 purposes.

Counsel: For Plaintiff's: Stephen D. Susman, Charles R. Eskridge III, Harry P. Susman, James T. Southwick, SUSMAN GODFREY L.L.P, Houston, Texas.

For Plaintiff's: Ralph H. Palumbo, Matthew R. Harris, Lynn M. Engel, Philip S. McCune, Lawrence C. Locker, SUMMIT LAW GROUP PLLC, Seattle, Washington.

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1295 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 1

For Plaintiff's: Parker C. Folse III, Timothy K. Borchers, SUSMAN GODFREY L.L.P., Seattle, Washington.

For Plaintiff's: Max D. Wheeler, Stephen J. Hill, Ryan E. Tibbitts, SNOW, CHRISTENSEN & MARTINEAU, Salt Lake City, Utah.

For Microsoft Corporation, Defendant: Richard J. Urowsky, Richard H. Klapper, Steven L. Holley, Richard C. Pepperman, II, Jay Holtmeier, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, New York, New York.

For Microsoft Corporation, Defendant: Michael H. Steinberg, SULLIVAN & CROMWELL, Los Angeles, California.

[2] For Microsoft Corporation, Defendant: James S. Jardine, Mark M. Bettilyon, John W. Mackay, RAY, QUINNEY & NEBEKER, Salt Lake City, Utah.

For Microsoft Corporation, Defendant: William H. Neukom, Thomas W. Burt, David A. Heiner, Jr., Steven J. Aeschbacher, MICROSOFT CORPORATION, Redmond, Washington.

For Microsoft Corporation, Defendant: James R. Weiss, PRESTON GATES ELLIS & ROUVELAS MEEDS, Washington, D.C.

Judges: Dee Benson, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Dee Benson

Opinion

[*1296] MEMORANDUM OPINION & ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

Presently before the Court are four motions for partial summary judgment brought by defendant, Microsoft Corporation. In its complaint, plaintiff, Caldera, Inc., alleges that Microsoft engaged in anticompetitive conduct in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, as well as § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. Microsoft has attempted to separate what it believes are [*1297] Caldera's individual claims by filing the following nine motions for partial summary judgment on: (1) "Plaintiff's Preannouncement Claim," (2) "Plaintiff's Product Disparagement Claim," (3) "Plaintiff's [*3] Claim Regarding Microsoft's Licensing Practices," (4) "Plaintiff's Perceived Incompatibilities Claim," (5) "Plaintiff's Intentional Incompatibilities Claim," (6) "Plaintiff's 'Predisclosure' Claim," (7) "Plaintiff's Technological Tying Claim," (8) "Plaintiff's European & Japanese Claims," and (9) "Plaintiff's State Law Tortious Interference Claims." In addition to responding to each of Microsoft's motions for partial summary judgment, Caldera filed its own "Motion to Strike Microsoft's Partial Summary Judgment Briefs Relating to Substantive Antitrust Violations."

In its Memorandum Opinion and Order dated June 28, 1999, the Court denied three of Microsoft's motions for partial summary judgment. The motions denied were "Plaintiff's Product Preannouncement Claim," "Plaintiff's Product Disparagement Claim," and "Plaintiff's Claim Regarding Microsoft's Licensing Practices." Additionally, the Court denied from the bench defendant's motion for partial summary judgment on "Plaintiff's Japanese and European Claims," as memorialized in its Order dated July 27, 1999. With respect to "Plaintiff's State Law Tortious Interference Claims," the Court continues to take the matter under advisement. [4] This Opinion addresses defendant's motions for partial summary judgment on "Plaintiff's Claim of Intentional Incompatibilities," "Plaintiff's Claim of Predisclosure," "Plaintiff's Claim of Perceived Incompatibilities," and "Plaintiff's Claim of Technological Tying," as well as plaintiff's motion to strike.

The Court heard oral argument regarding defendant's present motions for partial summary judgment and plaintiff's motion to strike on June 8, 10, 29, and July 6, 8, 1999. Based on the motions presently before the Court, the memoranda, exhibits submitted by both parties, and the statements presented in oral argument, the Court makes the following findings and issues this Memorandum Opinion and Order.

II. BACKGROUND & DESCRIPTION OF PLAINTIFF'S CLAIMS

This case finds its genesis in the mid-1970s with the advent of the personal computer. Critical to the evolution of the personal computer was the development of the computer operating system. An operating system functions as the control center of the computer. It controls the computer's interaction with peripheral hardware such as keyboards, modems, and printers and also serves as the underlying support structure for software [5] applications. An operating system functions as the interface between the computer and the software applications. Independent software vendors (ISVs) write software application programs, such as games, spreadsheets, and wordprocessors, that rely for their operation on certain general functions written into the operating system.

As the computer age dawned, new and old companies alike scrambled to pioneer the emerging frontier. Founded in 1976 by Gary Kildall, Digital Research, Inc. (DRI) developed one of the first operating systems for personal computers, known as CP/M (Control Program for Microprocessors). According to plaintiff, CP/M was the dominant operating system for 8-bit personal computers in the late 1970s and early 1980s. CP/M operated much the same as a disc operating system (DOS) operates today. Both CP/M and DOS are character based, requiring the user to direct the computer to perform desired operations by using specific keystrokes.

At the same time DRI was making inroads into the operating systems market, a new start-up partnership called Microsoft was formed which focused on programming languages. In July 1980, IBM approached Microsoft about designing 16-bit versions [6] of its most popular products to be used with IBMs forthcoming personal computer, which at the time was still undisclosed [*1298] to the public. IBM was also looking for an operating system to install onto its personal computers. At that time, DRI had preliminary designs for a 16-bit version of CP/M. IBM contacted DRI about obtaining a license of this 16-bit version, known as CP/M-86, but the parties were unable to reach an agreement.

Microsoft also began exploring the possibility of developing or acquiring its own operating system. In 1981, Microsoft first licensed and later purchased for a reported $ 50,000 a 16-bit CP/M clone from Seattle Computer Products, a small original equipment manufacturer (OEM). This system, named QDOS (Quick and Dirty Operating System), mirrored the functionality of CP/M. Thereafter, IBM obtained a license from Microsoft for QDOS. When IBM launched its personal computer in August 1981, this operating system was installed on each computer, offered as PC-DOS 1.0 to IBM's direct customers, and offered by Microsoft as MS-DOS 1.0, to all other OEMs. IBM's personal computer incorporated the Intel x86 microprocessor. Other OEMs were able to use this same microprocessor [7] to essentially clone the IBM personal computer, and MS-DOS was compatible with all of these clones. Accordingly, literally millions of Microsoft's operating systems were installed worldwide. By 1985, MS-DOS was the prevalent operating system in the world for personal computers using Intel x86 microprocessors. As a result, Microsoft enjoyed enormous financial success. By 1988 Microsoft had obtained a monopoly position in the DOS market. For purposes of the present motions, Microsoft does not dispute the contention that it has such a monopoly in the operating systems market.

By the mid-1980s, the computer industry began exploring alternatives to DOS, which were considered by many to be difficult to use because they required the user to type in commands in order to operate the computer. As a result, graphical user interfaces (GUIs) were developed, which replaced some of the character-based commands of DOS with graphical commands that users could execute through the use of point-and-click technology. In using a GUI, the user operates a "mouse" that controls an arrow on the screen and enables the user to control the computer by pointing at screen icons and clicking on them. GUIs were initially [8] utilized by Apple Computer, Inc. In the early 1980s Apple developed the Macintosh microprocessor, which, unlike the IBM personal computer, ran on the Motorola 68000 microprocessor chip. However, unlike Microsoft's GUI, called Windows, Apple's GUI was a complete operating system. Windows had the appearance of running the computer as its own operating system, but it was in essence merely operating on top of DOS, unable to function without the underlying DOS program. Notwithstanding, Microsoft's Windows gained widespread popularity due to the dominance of the Intel x86 microprocessor chip. Since its inception in 1985, Windows has maintained a monopoly position in the GUI market.

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1298 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 8

Despite the dominant market position of MS-DOS, DRI continued development of its operating system. In 1987, DRI developed DR DOS, an operating system that competed directly with MS-DOS and was compatible with software written for use with MS-DOS. In May of 1988, DRI launched DR DOS 3.31. Plaintiff claims DR DOS was a better product than MS-DOS, as it included features MS-DOS did not have, operated at a faster speed, and was less expensive. Plaintiff contends that DR DOS's superiority over MS-DOS was due in part [9] to Microsoft's assumption that the new operating system it was developing with IBM, called OS/2, would replace DOS as the preferred operating system. Therefore, according to plaintiff, Microsoft spent little time in further developing or improving MS-DOS.

Contrary to Microsoft's and IBM's projections, computer users did not switch to OS/2 at the rate anticipated, and DOS continued to be the preferred operating system. In July 1990, DRI launched DR DOS 5.0, an updated and improved version [*1299] of DR DOS 3.31. Nicknamed "the Leopard," DR DOS 5.0 received positive reviews from several trade magazines as well as computer industry awards.¹ In an internal Microsoft e-mail sent to Phil Barrett, a Microsoft executive, from one of his subordinates, DR DOS 5.0 received similar high praise when compared to MS-DOS:

Last Thursday you asked me for a user's view of DR DOS 5.0. . . . I used DR DOS 5.0 with a HUGE number of apps. I found it INCREDIBLY superior to MS DOS 3.31 and IBM DOS 4.01.

1) DOS compatibility

The most important reason to use ANY version of DOS is to run DOS apps. DR DOS 5.0 runs every DOS app I know. DR DOS 5.0 works successfully with Windows (2.11, Win 386 2.11 and [10] Windows 3.0 and 3.0a).

....

CONCLUSION:

DR DOS is vastly superior to MS dos 5.0. Both have nearly identical features . . . I don't see any real 'cutting edge' advantage of one over the other.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 123).

[11] Caldera claims that Microsoft, alarmed at this positive reception of DR DOS 5.0 the computer industry and concerned about losing its DOS monopoly, began to engage in a series of practices to eliminate the threat DR DOS posed to Microsoft's market dominance. Initially, rather than competing with DRI, Microsoft attempted to bargain for DRI's exit out of the market. In essence, as plaintiff alleges, Microsoft offered DRI a certain amount of money for the use of DR DOS technology. Microsoft was proposing that DRI market MS-DOS instead of DR DOS and that each company license rights in the other's product. DRI, uninterested in a long-term relationship with Microsoft, offered DR DOS technology to Microsoft for $ 30 to $ 40 million. Microsoft refused.

¹ For example, in August 1990, BYTE magazine stated:

The latest incarnation of DR DOS, Digital Research's MS-DOS clone, is an innovative and intriguing operating system that's thoughtfully designed. Version 5.0 is also packed with the extra features that Microsoft's own operating system should have (and might eventually have if the long-rumored MS-DOS 5.0 becomes a reality). As the people at DRI make very clear, it's not pronounced Doctor DOS, although the analogy isn't far off the mark, since it indeed cures many (but not all) of MS-DOS's shortcomings.

Stan Miastkowski, A Cure for What Ails DOS, BYTE, Aug. 1990, at 107 (Pl.'s Exhibit 69). PC Magazine wrote on January 15, 1991:

Digital Research is the microcomputer operating system company that predates Microsoft. As if to prove it hasn't lost its touch, DR DOS 5.0 does all the things you wish MS-DOS did. Its features include . . . full compatibility with MS DOS. . . . Everybody's DOS should be this advanced.

Bill Machrone, 7th Annual Awards for Technical Excellence, PC Magazine, Jan. 15, 1991, at 100 (Pl.'s Exhibit 106).

Plaintiff alleges that beginning in approximately the latter half of 1990 with the introduction of DR DOS 5.0 into the marketplace, Microsoft began its improper campaign to eliminate DR DOS as a competitor and to illegally maintain its operating systems monopoly. By this time, DR DOS had captured approximately six percent of the operating systems worldwide market. Among the first of these allegedly improper actions was Microsoft's use of preemptive [12] false and misleading announcements of forthcoming, competitive MS-DOS and Windows products. This practice of preannouncing upcoming products is known in the industry as "vaporware." Caldera claims that beginning in April 1990, Microsoft began making knowingly false and misleading preannouncements relating to the forthcoming MS-DOS 5.0, an allegedly comparable product to DR DOS 5.0. Plaintiff claims Microsoft knowingly mislead the public by stating MS-DOS 5.0 would be available to OEMs by September 1990, a full nine months before it was actually on the market.

Following DRI's April 26, 1990 announcement at an England trade show that DR DOS 5.0 would be available in eight weeks, Microsoft immediately announced [*1300] to the trade press its development of MS-DOS 5.0. An e-mail sent by Mark Chestnut, then a product manager of MS-DOS 5.0, to a number of Microsoft executives on May 2, 1990, stated:

On the PR side, we have begun an "aggressive leak" campaign for MS-DOS 5.0. The goal is to build an anticipation for MS-DOS 5.0 and diffuse potential excitement/momentum from the DR DOS 5.0 announcement. At this point, we are telling the press that a major new release from Microsoft is coming [13] this year which will provide significant memory relief and other important features. This was picked up by the major weeklies in the U.S. and was the page 1 story in PC Week on 4/30.

Additionally, Chestnut himself flew to several countries, meeting with dozens of OEMs and telling them that they could expect MS-DOS 5.0 by September 1990. Plaintiff alleges that Chestnut's representations caused these OEMs to postpone any decision to switch to DR DOS.

Caldera argues that the purpose behind Microsoft's preannouncements was to prevent OEMs from entering into licensing agreements with DR DOS 5.0. and that Microsoft knew it could not possibly comply with the schedule it was announcing to the public. Caldera's expert states that such an aggressive schedule was objectively unattainable. For one thing, a release date of September 1990 would only allow for a three-month beta test cycle, which, according to Caldera, is an unacceptably short beta testing period.² Plaintiff argues that by the end of 1990, however, Microsoft was aware that its tactics were working. In a performance self-evaluation, Chestnut wrote "virtually all of our OEMs worldwide were informed about DOS 5, which diffused [14] DRI's ability to capitalize on a window of opportunity with these OEMs." (Pl.'s Exhibit 62).

[15] By mid-October 1990, the media became concerned about the veracity of Microsoft's preemptive remarks directed at DR DOS 5.0. Such media pressure was not taken lightly. Following an interview with PC Week, a trade magazine, regarding the release of MS-DOS 5.0, Chestnut wrote to other Microsoft employees on October 17, 1990:

I'm afraid that this guy [Paul Sherer of PC Week] is going to write that we are being open about DOS 5 beta because we are trying to pre-empt DR DOS 5 sales. I tried real hard to present a different point of view, but I don't think he bought it. I'm concerned that this article may make us look bad. Can you guys follow up and see if we need to do some damage control?

This was the toughest interview I've ever done, I felt like Richard Nixon giving his "I am not a crook" speech. (Pl.'s Exhibit 87).

² A "beta" or "beta version" refers to unreleased software still under development. Beta testing is both a common and necessary practice in the computer software industry. It involves allowing software users and manufacturers of other software that is compatible with the beta product to test the new product. Beta testers provide the software manufacturer with needed feedback on its product including potential problems with operating the software. It also allows the makers of compatible software the opportunity to work out any incompatibilities between their product and the beta version before its commercial release. Ordinarily, this is a mutually beneficial arrangement between the beta manufacturer and the maker of the compatible software. The arrangement allows the compatible software manufacturer to cure incompatibilities while making the beta product more marketable since upon its release it would be compatible with an assortment of software programs.

In addition to Microsoft's "vaporware" strategies, Caldera alleges that following the launch of DR DOS 5.0 Microsoft refined and dramatically expanded a campaign of "fear, uncertainty, and doubt" (FUD) against DRI and all of its forthcoming versions of DR DOS.³ Plaintiff alleges [*1301] that account managers were directed to share purported "serious [16] problems" with OEMs considering a switch to DR DOS 5.0. Caldera asserts that Microsoft deliberately withheld from these same OEMs independent tests confirming DR DOS 5.0 compatibility with MS-DOS and Windows, while creating its own tests to give the appearance of "incompatibility."

In addition to its improper vaporware and FUD campaigns, Caldera alleges that Microsoft also forced OEMs away from [17] DR DOS 5.0 by what plaintiff refers to as the "licensing triple-whammy," which refers to (1) per processor licenses, (2) minimum commitments subject to forfeiture, and (3) increased license duration. Per processor licensing agreements required an OEM to pay Microsoft a royalty on every machine the OEM shipped regardless whether the machine contained MS-DOS or a different operating system. This is in contrast to a per system licensing agreement, which required OEMs to pay a royalty on only those computers shipped with MS-DOS installed. The use of per processor agreements is argued by plaintiff to be Microsoft's most effective single weapon against DR DOS. Plaintiff alleges that DRI had no realistic chance to license DR DOS to OEMs under a per processor license with Microsoft. It would make no sense for an OEM to install DR DOS when it had already paid for MS-DOS on every machine. Microsoft contends that OEMs were free to depart from the per processor licensing scheme, and that price differentials between license types were "relatively minor." However, plaintiff points to the depositions of several OEM executives who testified that even slight price differentials between the per processor [18] and per system licenses meant that only the per processor license was financially viable.

Plaintiff also asserts that Microsoft's use of minimum commitments with prepaid balances raised the costs to OEMs who may have wanted to switch to an alternative operating system. As alleged, during the life of a Microsoft contract, OEMs could find themselves over-committed with respect to units of Microsoft products. Plaintiff claims that given the nature of Microsoft's mandatory, nonrefundable minimum commitment payments, OEMs faced the prospect of either forfeiting their prepaid balance or signing a new agreement with Microsoft to partially recoup the prepaid balance. The rationale, plaintiff asserts, behind Microsoft's minimum commitments policy was not just to provide an OEM an opportunity to recoup the prepaid balance, but rather to sign a new license agreement so that the OEM would continue to distribute only MS-DOS.

Microsoft's final licensing tactic aimed at DR DOS, as plaintiff alleges, was increased license duration. Microsoft began increasing its licensing agreements from two-year to three-year terms and gave OEMs a small price break for agreeing to the longer term. Caldera claims [*19] that the increased licensing time was implemented only after DR DOS became a threat to MS-DOS's monopoly position, and that Microsoft deliberately increased the term length as part of its illegal scheme to drive DRI from the market. The strategy, plaintiff alleges, foreclosed DR DOS from effectively competing for existing OEM business.

On July 17, 1991, DRI announced its intent to merge with Novell. The result of this announcement intensified the threat DR DOS posed to Microsoft. The potential merger was a concern on more than one level. One Microsoft executive, Jim Allchin, expressed: "I thought about it all night. Since I came here I said there were two things that concerned me related to Novell: one Novell partnering with IBM and two Novell coming to us at the [*1302] desktop. Both fears have now come true." (Pl.'s Exhibit 148). One of Microsoft's MS-DOS's product managers, Richard Freedman, expressed:

The offensive scenario presumes Novell is actively developing products to compete with Win Peer and NT, and ultimately plans to enter the standalone OEM DOS business. It is this worst-case scenario we're focusing on.

³ As alleged by plaintiff, a FUD campaign is meant to attack or alter perceptions regarding software compatibility. The purpose of a FUD campaign is to raise an artificial barrier to entry by a competitor. Caldera alleges that Microsoft knew of the effect an effective FUD campaign could have on a competitors and offers as evidence the following statement by a Microsoft official, Jeremy Butler, made in September 1989:

It only takes a couple of reports about non-compatibility to give the kiss of death to a PC: we've seen that on the hardware side as well as in the operating system area.

....

This scenario assumes Novell aims to own the [20] desktop, both server and workstation, and assumes they'll attempt to do this first by integrating Netware and DR DOS, and then, having legitimized DR DOS, by going after OEM business. IBM licensing DR DOS is a major X factor in this scenario.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 153). Plaintiff alleges that these and other excerpts indicate that Microsoft was alarmed at not only the prospect of Novell competing in the MS-DOS arena, but also that an alliance between IBM and Novell would make DR DOS a much larger threat. On September 23, 1991, IBM officially endorsed DR DOS 6.0, which was scheduled to be released to the public in September or October of the same year. Plaintiff alleges that in response to IBM's endorsement and in anticipation of an IBM/Novell alliance, Bill Gates publicly threatened retaliation against IBM should it choose DR DOS. Caldera claims that as a result of the threatened retaliation and intense FUD concerning DR DOS incompatibility with Windows, IBM withdrew its consideration of DR DOS.⁴

[21] In late September 1991, Novell released DR DOS 6.0. Plaintiff alleges with this release, Microsoft adhered to the same pattern of attack, vaporware, FUD, and per processor licensing agreements, but with more intensity. Microsoft executives were aware of the threat Novell/DRI and the new DR DOS 6.0 posed. Jim Allchin wrote on September 9, 1991:

We must slow down Novell. . . . As you said Bill, it has to be dramatic We need to slaughter Novell before they get stronger.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 175). On March 26, 1993, Allchin also wrote:

I still don't think we take them as serious as is required of us to win. This isn't IBM. These guys are really good; they have an installed base; they have a channel; they have marketing power; they have good products. AND they want our position. They want to control the APIs, middleware, and as many desktops as they can in addition to the server market they already own.

We need to start thinking about Novell as THE competitor to fight against--not in one area of our business, but all of them.

If you want to get serious bout stopping Novell, we need to start understanding this is war-nothing less. That's how Novell views [22] it. We better wake up and get serious about them or they will eventually find a way to hurt us badly.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 349). Plaintiff alleges that with this mind-set, Microsoft intensified its improper FUD campaign against DR DOS. Specifically, plaintiff asserts that Microsoft attempted to convince OEMs that DR DOS would be incompatible with the upcoming Windows 3.1, when in fact Microsoft knew that DR DOS was, or with minor adjustments could be, compatible with Windows. On April 6, 1992, Windows 3.1 was launched worldwide. Following this release, plaintiff claims users immediately bombarded Microsoft with requests regarding problems setting up Windows 3.1 over DR DOS. Microsoft's standard response, according to plaintiff, was to tell the users that Windows was only tested [*1303] with MS-DOS, not DR DOS, and that using a system other than MS-DOS puts the user at his own risk. When confronted with the issue of compatibility between Windows and DR DOS, Microsoft's marketing staff was instructed to respond, "we only test windows on Microsoft supported operating systems, so there's really no way to know in the future what will work and what will not." (Pl.'s Exhibit 176). Recognizing [23] the damage that its FUD campaign could have on DR DOS, Microsoft stated: "We need to create the reputation for problems and incompatibilities to undermine confidence to drdos6; so people will make judgments against it without knowing details or facts." (Pl.'s Exhibit 227).

To assure DR DOS's incompatibility with Windows, plaintiff alleges that Microsoft placed DRI on a "beta blacklist." According to plaintiff, Microsoft knew that if the DR DOS development team had access to a Windows 3.1 beta, it would allow them to make DR DOS compatible and consequently allay public fears of incompatibility. DRI submitted a formal request to become a beta site. The request was denied on August 2, 1991. Being placed on Microsoft's beta blacklist had an alleged direct effect on DR DOS sales.⁵ One corporation notifying DRI of its decision to reject DR DOS 6.0, stated that the most important factor, however, is the rift developing between Digital Research and Microsoft. By this I mean Microsoft not allowing you to beta test Windows 3.1. Since the users who would be most inclined to switch to DR DOS are also using Windows, this one factor is of particular concern.

⁴ During this same time period, and in response to the Novell/DRI merger plaintiff argues, Gates called Ray Noorda, Novell's CEO and Chairman, and proposed a merger between Novell and Microsoft. According to plaintiff, the only prerequisite for Gates was that "DRI's got to go." Plaintiff now asserts that Gates' proposal was "a ploy to hobble the development of DR DOS as a competitor." Microsoft asserts it was done in good faith.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 266). [24]

According to Caldera, Microsoft continued its attacks on DRI by intentionally making Windows 3.1 incompatible with DR DOS, not for any technologically significant reason, but for the sole purpose of eliminating DR DOS as a competitor. Caldera supports its claim with internal Microsoft statements, such as these written by David Cole and Phil Barrett on September 30, 1991, respectively: "It's pretty clear we need to make sure Windows 3.1 only runs on top of MS DOS or an OEM version of it," and "the approach we will take is to detect dr 6 and refuse to load. The error message should be something like 'Invalid device driver interface.'" (Pl.'s Exhibits 205 and 206). Microsoft developers discussed reliable DR DOS detection mechanisms, and allegedly incorporated "Bambi," Microsoft's code name for its updated disc cache utility, which among other things detects DR DOS and [25] refuses to load, in Windows 3.1.

In addition to Bambi, Microsoft added a version check known as the extended memory specifications (XMS) to the Windows 3.1 SETUP program. The XMS made it impossible for Windows to install on a DR DOS system. When it detected DR DOS the user was told:

The XMS driver you have installed is not compatible with Windows. You must remove it before SETUP can successfully install Windows.

Caldera alleges that there was no valid competitive purpose for this version check, and that this message was not just misleading, but wrong, and that the DR DOS XMS driver was compatible with Windows 3.1. Caldera further alleges that Microsoft introduced a computer "bug," known as the nested task flag, that would cause a fatal error when users tried to run Windows 3.1 with DR DOS. Additionally, it is alleged that Microsoft installed "software locks" in the Korean version of Windows causing Windows to malfunction when it operated with DR DOS. Caldera claims that Microsoft knew about these problems, knew the cause of the problems, knew how to fix them, yet did nothing. Finally, Caldera complains of Microsoft's insertion of a line of code in a beta version of [26] Windows 3.1. The code was designed to detect the presence of MS-DOS. In the [*1304] event that MS-DOS was not detected, the following message was displayed:

Non-fatal error detected: Error number [varied]. Please contact Windows 3.1 beta support. Press enter to exit or C to continue.

Through Microsoft's alleged use of vaporware, per processor licensing agreements, FUD, beta blacklisting, and the insertion of incompatibilities between Windows and DR DOS, Caldera claims that Microsoft was essentially forcing OEMs to purchase both MS-DOS and Windows. By this method Microsoft, Caldera asserts, was using its monopoly in the GUI (i.e. Windows) market, to illegally maintain its monopoly in the operating systems market. One OEM, an alleged leading proponent of DR DOS, stated: "[Microsoft] just said they had changed the way in which they market the product, instead of it being available as two separate packages it now came as an integrated package, which was DOS and Windows 3.11 or DOS and Windows for Workgroups 3.11, take it or leave it." (Harvey Depo. at 33).

According to plaintiff, Microsoft's desire to combine MS-DOS and Windows extended beyond simply forcing the sale of the two [27] products. Since September 1991, and as reflected in an e-mail sent by Jim Allchin, Microsoft had been exploring the possibility of integrating Windows with DOS, creating a "common install," and "making it so there is no reason to try DR DOS to get Windows." (Pl.'s Exhibit 175). Acting on this desire, Microsoft took steps to implement its combined product. By early 1992, Microsoft developed "Janus," which was designed to provide first-time Windows 3.1 purchasers who were using some older version of DOS, with an upgrade to MS-DOS 5.0. For the first time, Windows 3.1 and MS-DOS 5.0 were together in the same package. Each component, however, could still be purchased separately. Janus was not a success, and Microsoft estimated its failure to be the result of only providing an upgrade of one of the products. Therefore, Microsoft focused on the concept of releasing upgraded MS-DOS and Windows versions simultaneously. This project, labeled "Chicago," ultimately led to the creation of Windows 95. According to Caldera, one of Microsoft's stated objectives in developing Chicago was to block out Novell. In a June 16, 1992, strategy document Microsoft declared Novell as its biggest threat, and [28] stated that Microsoft "must respond in a strong way by making Chicago a complete Windows operating system, from boot-up to shut-down." (Pl.'s Exhibit 309). Microsoft continued, "there will be no place or need on a Chicago machine for DR-DOS (or any DOS)." (Id.).

⁵ Caldera further alleges that Microsoft's beta blacklist of Windows 3.1 extended to ISVs that expressed an interest in continuing to use DR DOS.

While Microsoft was developing Chicago, Novell continued to develop DR DOS. In December 1993, Novell introduced its final upgrade to DR DOS, Novell DOS 7.0, which, according to plaintiff, offered innovative features and received industry praise. Plaintiff claims that Microsoft illegally attempted to eliminate Novell's momentum by continuing its FUD campaign, beta-blacklisting, and spreading vaporware. For example, in August 1993, Microsoft announced the forthcoming release of MS-DOS 7.0 to coincide with Novell DOS 7.0. However, MS-DOS 7.0 was never released. Additionally, Caldera alleges that further vaporware and FUD was being spread in relation to Chicago. Specifically, Microsoft leaked information that Chicago would be released in 1993 or 1994, and that Novell's DOS would not run on Chicago. Finally, Caldera claims that shrouded in the fog of such vaporware and as a result of years of Microsoft's illegal anticompetitive [29] conduct, Novell announced in September 1994 that it would withdraw from active development and marketing of further versions of DOS. On the heels of Novell's exit from the market, Microsoft announced on December 20, 1994, that Chicago, now officially termed "Windows 95," may not be available until August 1995.

In August 1995, Microsoft released Windows 95. For ten years prior thereto, Microsoft had sold MS-DOS and Windows separately. However, Windows 95 combined [*1305] the functions of Windows and DOS into one product. Microsoft touts Windows 95 as one of the most popular software products in history, selling within four months after its release nearly eleven million copies through OEM channels and nearly five million copies through retail channels. After its release, virtually all new personal computers came with Windows 95 preinstalled by OEMs. With the release of Windows 95, users of the Intel-based personal computer had a totally integrated (from boot-up to shutdown) graphical operating system for the first time. Microsoft claims that Windows 95 offered many new features of functionality over that provided by the combination of MS-DOS 6.0 and Windows 3.0 when those products were installed [30] separately on a personal computer. Caldera, however, alleges that in reality Windows 95 is not an integrated software product, but rather two products--MS-DOS 7.0 and Windows 4.0, which Caldera asserts are merely updated versions of both MS-DOS 6.22 and Windows 3.1--packaged together using a common installation program with blue cloud graphics to make them appear to be a single product. Plaintiff claims that MS-DOS 7.0 and Windows 4.0 can be easily isolated and sold as separate products. Since the release of Windows 95, updated versions of Windows and MS-DOS were not sold separately. Plaintiff claims Novell would have been able to compete with Microsoft but for Microsoft's prior conduct and ultimately this illegal tying arrangement of Windows 95, which plaintiff argues was the coup de grace for DR DOS.

On July 23, 1996, Caldera acquired DRI from Novell. Included in the purchase was the right to bring this lawsuit against Microsoft. Based on the foregoing, Caldera filed its complaint against Microsoft, alleging the improper use and maintenance of monopoly power in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act and for the illegal restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. [31] Caldera supports its § 1 claim by arguing that Windows 95 constitutes an illegal tie of two separate products formerly sold as MS-DOS and Windows. Caldera supports its § 2 claim, as aforementioned, by alleging that Microsoft engaged in an anticompetitive scheme, the factual components of which consist of, improper licensing arrangements, improper preannouncements, improper intentional and perceived incompatibilities, beta blacklisting, the improper creation of fear, uncertainty, and doubt, and the illegal tying together of its products. Caldera acknowledges that each instance of alleged misconduct taken alone may not amount to a violation of § 2. However, when viewed in totality, Caldera asserts that Microsoft has engaged in an unlawful, anticompetitive scheme to illegally maintain its monopoly in the operating systems market.

III. DISCUSSION

In 1890, Congress passed the Sherman Antitrust Act in an effort to protect competition and prevent monopolies. Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." HN1 HN2 15 U.S.C. § 1. Despite this broad language, almost from its inception the [32] Sherman Act has been read to prohibit only those restraints of trade that are unreasonable. Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 62 L. Ed. 683, 38 S. Ct. 242 \(1918\) (recognizing that because every agreement involving trade is a restraint on trade in some form, the proper inquiry is whether the restraint suppresses or destroys competition). HN3 Courts have also developed a doctrine of per se violations to cover those business relationships that "because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use." Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). Section 2 of the Sherman Act condemns "every person who shall monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several [*1306] States or with foreign nations." HN4 HN5 15 U.S.C. § 2. The Supreme Court has determined that "the offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the [33] relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\).

Although by enacting the Sherman Act Congress expressed an inherent distrust of monopolies and their possible adverse effects on competition, it did not declare monopolies illegal per se. HN6 Antitrust laws are designed to protect and foster competition, even when the competitor is a monopolist. HN7 In general, a monopolist is free to market its products, engage in research and development to improve its products, and engage in any other business practice that is procompetitive. HN8 If smaller businesses find themselves unable to compete on the merits of their products against a procompetitive monopolist, there is nothing in the antitrust laws to protect them. HN9 Antitrust laws protect the competitive process; they do not protect individual competitors.

Notwithstanding, § HN10 2 does proscribe a monopolist from engaging in business practices that are anticompetitive or exclusionary. Congress, recognizing that "it is difficult [34] to define in legal language the precise line between lawful and unlawful combination[.]" left to the courts the responsibility of defining the parameters of anticompetitive conduct. 21 Cong. Rec. 2460 (1890). HN11 Anticompetitive conduct describes a wide variety of behavior including espionage, sabotage, predatory pricing, fraud, price discrimination, price-fixing, bid-rigging, illegal tying arrangements, product disparagement and a host of other activities that improperly stifle competition. HN12 Section 2 prohibits a monopolist from engaging in anticompetitive practices that are designed to deter potential rivals from entering the market or from preventing existing rivals from increasing their output, no matter how flagrant or subtle the violation. HN13 A monopoly may not improperly "wield [its] resulting power to tighten its hold on the market." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 275 \(2d Cir. 1979\). Perhaps HN14 the clearest way to explain what a monopolist may legally do is to say that the monopolist may engage in all of the same procompetitive activities that allowed it to become a legal monopolist in the first place. These would include building a better [35] or less expensive product, engaging in better public relations, employing effective (and honest) advertising campaigns, and developing aggressive and effective marketing techniques. If these activities result in even more market share, and drive competitors out of the market, the monopolist is nevertheless fully entitled to such expansion, and its conduct is not a violation of the Sherman Act. Conversely, a monopolist may not engage in any activities other than those that are procompetitive, as generally described above.

A. Plaintiff's Motion to Strike

As mentioned at the outset of this Opinion, in response to Caldera's allegations that Microsoft violated § 2 by willfully maintaining its monopoly position through anticompetitive means, Microsoft filed nine separate motions for partial summary judgment. Seven of the nine motions relate to specific conduct Caldera claims against Microsoft. Caldera objected to these motions by filing a motion to strike the partial summary judgment motions as improper.

Caldera argues that Microsoft has artificially created seven discreet claims out of Caldera's singular claim that Microsoft violated § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Caldera [36] requests that the Court strike the seven partial summary judgment motions as improper and allow Caldera to present evidence of Microsoft's alleged anticompetitive behavior to a jury. The jury would in turn consider whether, based on the aggregate effect of the anticompetitive [*1307] behavior presented, defendant unlawfully maintained a monopoly.

Microsoft objects to plaintiff's motion to strike for two reasons. First, Microsoft asserts that a motion to strike is a procedurally improper challenge to motions for summary judgment, and second, Microsoft contends that each allegation of anticompetitive conduct must be examined separately to determine if a § 2 violation has occurred. Defendant argues that if specific anticompetitive conduct fails by itself to support a § 2 claim then such conduct may not later be considered in determining whether a § 2 violation has occurred based on the totality of the circumstances.

Microsoft relies on Southern Pac. Communications Corp. v. AT&T, 556 F. Supp. 825 (D.D.C. 1982), in support of its position. Microsoft claims that in Southern Pacific the court considered and rejected the idea that a plaintiff can assert one overarching § 1 [37] 2 claim. However, a careful reading of that case shows that the court there found it unnecessary to decide the issue and considered it only in dicta. The D.C. district court wrote:

The Court is satisfied that nothing in Continental Ore requires a conclusion that a defendant that has not engaged in an unlawful conspiracy, and has committed no acts in themselves violative of the Sherman Act, could be found guilty of antitrust violations on some theory that the acts have "synergistic effects" that convert lawful conduct into violations of law. Such a doctrine, with its potential for converting entirely innocent conduct into violations of law, would at the very least demand careful and sparing application. . . . Fortunately, it is not necessary for the Court to decide whether plaintiffs' expansive reading of Continental Ore can be justified.

Id. at 888 (emphasis added).⁶ Moreover, the court in Southern Pacific did not reject the idea, as defendant claims, that plaintiff should not be allowed to present its antitrust case based on the totality of defendant's conduct when none of the conduct alone could support a separate and independent [38] antitrust claim. Rather, the court stated that such a theory would "at the very least demand careful and sparing application."

[39] Defendant also asserts that the Supreme Court "tacitly rejected" plaintiff's theory in Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-86, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\). In Matsushita, the Supreme Court addressed the issue of the appropriate standard for summary judgment in cases involving conspiracies to monopolize. However, defendant does not elaborate on how the Supreme Court tacitly rejected plaintiff's theory, nor can this Court, after its own reading of the case, find such a rejection. In fact, Matsushita seems to support plaintiff's synergy theory rather than reject it. On the same pages cited by defendant, the Supreme Court in Matsushita found that of the numerous conspiracies [*1308] to monopolize alleged, only the conspiracy to monopolize the American market through predatory pricing could support respondent's claim of antitrust injury. However, the Court noted that evidence of the other conspiracies would be considered if "in context

⁶ In Continental Ore, Co. v. Union Carbide and Carbon, Corp. et al., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 \(1962\) the plaintiff brought suit under § 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act alleging that the defendants had violated the Sherman Act "by conspiring to restrain, by monopolizing, and by attempting and conspiring to monopolize, trade and commerce" in various metals that both parties mined. Id. at 693. A jury trial was held in which a verdict was returned in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appealed the verdict to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

On appeal, instead of considering whether the defendants had illegally attempted or conspired to monopolize the industry, the Ninth Circuit considered each defendants conduct separately and affirmed the determination made in the district court. The Supreme Court granted certiorari and vacated the judgment of the court of appeals, remanding the case to the district court. The Court held, it is apparent . . . that the Court of Appeals approached Continental's claims as if they were five completely separate and unrelated lawsuits. We think this was improper. In cases such as this, plaintiffs should be given the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." Id. at 698-99.

evidence of these 'other' conspiracies raises a genuine issue concerning the existence of a predatory pricing conspiracy." Id. at 586. The Court found that although the "other" conspiracies could not [40] alone support an antitrust claim, they could be used to bolster the remaining conspiracy claim when viewed in context. This Court reads nothing in Matsushita that limits, either explicitly or tacitly, the aggregation of evidence to conspiracy to monopolize cases.

In support of its position, Caldera relies primarily on Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. v. Aspen Skiing Co., 738 F.2d 1509 (10th Cir. 1984), which was affirmed on appeal to the Supreme Court in Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp. v. Aspen Skiing Co., 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985). That case involved two owners of ski resorts in Aspen, Colorado. The plaintiff owned one of four ski resorts located in Aspen. The defendant owned the remaining three. From the 1962 ski season through the 1971 ski season, the parties offered a joint multi-day lift ticket which could be used at any one of the four ski resorts. After a one-year reprieve, the multi-day lift ticket was reinstated in 1973 through the end of the 1976 season. The revenues from the tickets were divided based on a percentage of the actual use of each facility. For the 1977-78 season, defendant offered to continue the multi-day lift ticket but only if [41] plaintiff agreed to a fixed percentage of the revenues. Plaintiff requested that the parties continue to base the revenue sharing on actual usage but ultimately agreed to 15% of the revenues. In the 1978-79 ski season defendant offered to continue the joint ticket if plaintiff would agree to accept 12.5% of the revenues from ticket sales. Plaintiff again requested that the parties return to their previous arrangement. However, because the parties were unable to agree on a method of dividing the revenues, the multi-day lift ticket was discontinued.

Plaintiff brought suit under the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act. After the close of evidence at trial, the defendant moved for a directed verdict. The district court granted the motion on all claims except the claims of unlawful monopolization and conspiracy to restrain trade. On both of the remaining claims, the jury found for the plaintiff. On appeal to the Tenth Circuit, defendant argued that "there was insufficient evidence to present a jury issue of monopolization because, as a matter of law, the conduct at issue was pro-competitive conduct that a monopolist could lawfully engage in." 738 F.2d at 1516-17 (citations omitted). [42] Defendant further argued that each of the six things the plaintiff relied on to support its § 2 claim must support the claim independent of each other and may not be considered in the aggregate to determine if a violation of § 2 has occurred.⁷ The Tenth Circuit rejected this argument, stating, "defendant's argument would require that we view each of the 'six things' in isolation. To do this, however, would be contrary to the Supreme Court's admonition that an antitrust plaintiff "should be given the full benefit of [its] proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny" [*1309] of each." Id. at 1522 n. 18 (citing Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962)). The Tenth Circuit continued by adding, "plaintiff's evidence should be viewed as a whole. Each of the 'six things' viewed in isolation need not be supported by sufficient evidence to amount to a § 2 violation. It is enough that taken together they are sufficient to prove the monopolization claim." Id.

[43] Microsoft attempts to distinguish this case by highlighting the fact that the Aspen Highlands court allowed the plaintiff the benefit of the synergistic effect of its evidence to prove that the defendant monopolist had refused to deal with the plaintiff in violation of § 2. Whereas here, Microsoft argues, Caldera is requesting that all the evidence be considered in determining whether defendant violated § 2 without alleging any specific claim other than the defendant engaged in anticompetitive behavior. However, this distinction is immaterial. The Supreme Court's directive in Continental Ore that a plaintiff should not be denied the "full benefit of its proof" is equally applicable here. The Court finds HN15 nothing in the relevant law that prevents a plaintiff from asserting one overarching claim of a § 2 violation. Conversely, to allow defendant to carve plaintiff's complaint into seven discreet claims that plaintiff never intended to allege as independent claims not only appears to offend the purpose behind § 2, but also turns basic civil procedure principles on their head.

⁷ The "six things" relied on by the plaintiff were:

(1) forcing plaintiff out of the four-area ticket by requiring that revenues be divided below plaintiff's market share; (2) substituting defendant's three area ticket for a four area ticket; (3) marketing and advertising its three mountains in a manner designed to convince consumers that Aspen had only three mountains, not mentioning Aspen Highlands; (4) making an agreement with a tour operator to sell defendant's tickets to the exclusion of plaintiff's; (5) refusing to accept plaintiff's coupons during the 1978-79 season; and (6) raising ticket prices for a single-day lift ticket thus eliminating plaintiff's ability to offer a multi-area ticket.

Caldera claims that Microsoft is a monopolist that engaged in anticompetitive conduct to preserve [\[44\]](#) its monopoly. The alleged anticompetitive conduct is set forth in general terms in the foregoing background portion of this opinion. Plaintiff's entire case is based on the synergy of all of this conduct to demonstrate anticompetitive intent and effect. Plaintiff has not averred a separate claim of product disparagement, or a "refusal to deal" claim, or any other independent claim in support of its overall § 2 claim. Consequently, the Court sees no reason why plaintiff should now be required to submit to Microsoft's reclassification of its claim and to independently support each of the seven "claims" as classified by Microsoft as an independent legal claim upon which relief could be granted and liability could be independently based, in order to survive summary judgment. Such an exercise is not appropriate as a matter of summary judgment, though it may have some value in allowing the parties and the Court to focus on the plaintiff's proposed evidence in an effort to minimize evidentiary problems at trial.

In full agreement with Aspen Highlands, the Court finds no bar to allowing Caldera to present all of its evidence of Microsoft's alleged anticompetitive conduct to a fact finder [\[45\]](#) in support of its § 2 claim. However, as a procedural matter, the Court agrees with the defendant that a motion to strike the partial summary judgment motions is improper. Therefore, the Court denies plaintiff's motion to strike, and entertains each of the remaining four motions in the following discussion. Consistent with the foregoing, however, what follows is generally more in the nature of evidentiary analysis.

B. Microsoft's Motions for Partial Summary Judgment

The Court now addresses Microsoft's motions for partial summary judgment regarding (1) "Plaintiff's Claim of Intentional Incompatibilities," (2) "Plaintiff's Claim of Predisclosure," (3) "Plaintiff's Claim of Perceived Incompatibilities," and (4) "Plaintiff's Claim of Technological Tying." HN16 Summary judgment is proper if the moving party can demonstrate that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and, therefore, is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56\(c\). The court is required to construe all facts and reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See HN17 Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. [\[*1310\]](#) 1348 (1986); [\[46\]](#) Wright v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 925 F.2d 1288, 1292 (10th Cir. 1991). In considering whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, the court determines whether a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party in the face of all the evidence presented. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Clifton v. Craig, 924 F.2d 182, 183 (10th Cir. 1991).

1. Intentional Incompatibilities

Caldera alleges that in an effort to eliminate competition in the operating systems market, Microsoft introduced intentional incompatibilities between Windows and DR DOS. Caldera maintains that these incompatibilities, in connection with other anticompetitive behavior such as Microsoft's exclusion of DRI from beta testing Windows 3.1 and Microsoft's campaign to spread fear, uncertainty, and doubt about Windows' compatibility with DR DOS, amounted to a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. In response to this allegation, Microsoft seeks summary judgment on Caldera's claims of intentional incompatibilities.

Caldera originally complained of seven technological incompatibilities existing between DR DOS [\[47\]](#) and Microsoft Windows: (1) Nested Task Flag, (2) XMS Version Check, (3) AARD Code, (4) Korean Incompatibilities, (5) PROTMAN.DOS in Windows for Workgroups, (6) VSERVER.386 in Windows for Workgroups, and (7) Windows 95. At oral argument, plaintiff stated that it would no longer pursue any claims relating to PROTMAN.DOS or VSERVER.386. At the same hearing, Microsoft objected to Caldera's introduction of yet another technological incompatibility, known as "Bambi" which Caldera raised for the first time in its opposition brief to defendant's motion for partial summary judgment on plaintiff's intentional incompatibilities claim. Defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence relating to Bambi based on the fact that discovery had closed and defendant did not have an opportunity to depose plaintiff's expert witness on the subject. The Court held a separate hearing on this matter at which time it determined that the Bambi incompatibility issue and that the declaration of Caldera's expert witness, Dr. Hollaar, would be allowed. Therefore, the Court will address incompatibilities relating to Bambi, nested task flag, XMS version check, and Korean incompatibilities. The Court will address [48] the AARD Code and Windows 95 in the "Perceived Incompatibilities" and "Technological Tying" portions of this Opinion. The Court will first briefly describe each technological incompatibility before turning to the applicable law.

Caldera asserts that Microsoft intentionally created a nested task flag incompatibility between DR DOS and Windows 3.1. A nested task flag allows a microprocessor to execute tasks that require several other tasks to be executed in order for a function to be performed. This layering of tasks is called "nesting." In order to determine if a specific task is nested or not, software is created to detect the numeric value assigned to the nested task flag. If the value assigned to the flag is incorrectly set, the computer may respond in unexpected or even detrimental ways. In the instant case DRI had set the nested task flag value in DR DOS to one. The Intel microprocessor used by Windows 3.1 was set at a default value of zero. Consequently, when Windows 3.1 operated in conjunction with DR DOS, a malfunction occurred. Shortly after Windows 3.1 was released publicly in early April 1992, DRI corrected the problem with a small two-byte modification to the IBMDOS. [49] COM file in DR DOS. Plaintiff claims that Microsoft intentionally created this unnecessary incompatibility between DR DOS and Windows as part of its illegal anticompetitive scheme. Microsoft was aware of the nested task flag error that occurred when the Windows 3.1 beta version operated with DR DOS and even contemplated a remedy for the problem. Ultimately, however, Microsoft abandoned plans to fix the malfunction. Microsoft [*1311] contends that the decision not to repair the malfunction was made because it required extensive testing to ensure that the remedy did not destabilize Windows.

Caldera next claims that Microsoft intentionally added code to the Windows 3.1 set-up program that operated as a check to determine if an appropriate version of extended memory specifications (XMS) was present. When the check found an unacceptable version of XMS, a message appeared on the monitor instructing the user "to remove the old XMS provider from a configuration file called CONFIG.SYS and to proceed with the installation of Windows 3.1." MS DOS passed the XMS version check. DR DOS did not. The Windows 3.1 set-up program runs in standard (or "protected") mode, which allows the program to be more user-friendly [50] by adding graphics and other features. In order for the Windows 3.1 set-up program to run in standard mode, Microsoft asserts that a dependable version of the XMS had to be present. However, Caldera asserts that the Windows set-up program never actually used the XMS, which required an internal revision number of 2.6. However, Windows 3.1 required at most an internal revision number of 2.4 to run. Furthermore, Windows 3.1 consists of smaller modules, each containing its own XMS version check. With an internal reversion number of 2.5 DR DOS passed the individual modules checks but failed the Windows set-up XMS check. Caldera asserts that the only purpose for the XMS check was to prevent DR DOS from loading with Windows 3.1.

Next Caldera alleges that Microsoft intentionally placed a detection device known as Bambi to detect DR DOS and refuse to load Windows 3.1 if DR DOS was detected. Bambi was Microsoft's code name for SMARTDRV, a Windows 3.1 module. Caldera claims that Microsoft included code located within the Bambi module in at least one beta release of Windows 3.1 that checked for DR DOS. Once DR DOS was detected, an error message appeared on the computer monitor and Windows refused [51] to run. Caldera claims that the incompatibility was intentionally inserted and that there was no technological reason or value to adding the error message. Caldera offers the declaration of its expert witness Dr. Hollaar, in support of its allegations.

Caldera finally asserts that somewhere between 1990 and 1991, Microsoft put "software locks" into three of its software programs produced for the Korean market. These software locks prevented users from operating Microsoft software with DR DOS. In support of its assertion, Caldera offers the testimony of Richard Dixon, DRI's vice-president for Far-Eastern OEM sales. Apparently, Mr. Dixon observed Korean versions of Microsoft Word, Works, and Excel being loaded onto DR DOS. When attempting to run these Microsoft software programs on DR DOS, an error message appeared which read, "application terminated." Mr. Dixon observed previous versions of these same Microsoft applications load onto DR DOS and function properly. Caldera also submits internal Microsoft e-mail which it argues shows that the software locks were intentionally inserted by Microsoft to prevent the software from operating with DR DOS. One e-mail concerns an inquiry by a [52] member of the Korean Windows 2.10 project who wanted to know how the U.S. version of Windows handled MS-DOS clones and how the Korean version should handle clones. Along the chain of responsive e-mails, the discussion noted that Bill Gates, the CEO of Microsoft Corp., wanted all business units to detect all MS-DOS clones and show a warning message indicating that the MS-DOS clone was not tested and that the program might not work correctly.⁸ The e-mail directed the [*1312] Korean Windows 2.1 project member to individuals who could provide code for a checking routine that would display a warning message when an operating system other than MS-DOS was detected. Caldera also asserts that the Korean version of Windows, known as "Hangeul Windows," contained diagnostic checks to determine if Windows was operating on a system other than MS-DOS. The diagnostic check was contained in both the 3.0 and 3.1 version of Windows and was coupled with a message located in the WIN.CNF file. In the 3.0 version the message read: "Hangeul Windows 3.0 should be executed on Hangeul MS-DOS. For correct execution, please run Hangeul MS-DOS." In the Hangeul Windows 3.1 version the message read, "Warning: Your DOS [53] is not compatible with MS-DOS. You may have some problems when you use Hangeul Windows 3.1."

Microsoft contends that in order for Caldera to succeed on its claim it must first show that each of the alleged incompatibilities between DR DOS and Windows "had no purpose other than to preclude competition from DRI." (Def's Reply Mem. at 12). In support of this heavy burden, Microsoft relies on Transamerica Computer Co., Inc. v. I.B.M. Corp., (In re IBM Peripheral EDP Devices Antitrust Litig.), 481 F. Supp. 965 (N.D. Cal. 1979). In Transamerica, the plaintiffs were [54] manufacturers of peripheral computer equipment such as key boards and printers that were compatible with IBM personal computers. The plaintiffs brought suit for antitrust violations when IBM redesigned its central processing unit (CPU) to make it incompatible with any peripheral product not made by IBM. Defendant IBM maintained that the redesign had technological value and therefore the resulting incompatibilities could not support a § 2 claim.

Microsoft asserts in its reply brief that the court in Transamerica "held that a plaintiff must prove, in addition to intent, that the design decision was devoid of technical merit and had a significant effect on competition." (Def's Reply Mem. at 11) (citation omitted). Microsoft also adds that "the court [in Transamerica] expressly stated that design conduct violates § 2 of the Sherman Act only if the 'design changes had no purpose and effect other than the preclusion of . . . competition.'" (Id. at 12) (citing Transamerica, 481 F. Supp. at 1002-03). Applying this standard to the instant case, Microsoft argues that Caldera cannot show that even one of the alleged incompatibilities had as its only purpose [55] the preclusion of competition or that the incompatibilities were devoid of technological merit. Therefore, defendant argues, plaintiff's claims fail as a matter of law.

Applying this standard, the Court may agree that plaintiff has not met its burden. However, Microsoft has grossly misrepresented the holding of Transamerica. Particularly offensive to the Court is the assertion that "the court [in Transamerica] expressly stated that design conduct violates § 2 of the Sherman Act only if the 'design changes had no purpose and effect other than the preclusion of . . . competition.'" (Id.) This is simply not true.

It appears that Microsoft scanned the Transamerica opinion for language favorable to its position and then quoted that language entirely out of context with the intent of leading this Court to believe that the court in Transamerica held something it did not. What the Transamerica court did say is had IBM responded to [the manufacturers of peripheral equipment's] inroads on its assumed monopoly by changing the System/360 interfaces with such frequency that [peripheral equipment manufacturers] would have been unable to attach and unable [56] to economically adapt their peripherals to the ever-changing interface designs, and if those interface changes had no purpose and effect other than the preclusion of [these manufacturers] from competition, this Court would not hesitate to find that such conduct was predatory.

⁸The e-mail reads: "Bill Gates ordered to all application business units to include checking routines of operating environments and if it is Microsoft DOS, nothing will happen. But if it is non MS-DOS (such as DR-DOS), application will display messages saying that 'This application has been developed and tested for MICROSOFT MS-DOS. Since you use a different environment, this application may not work correctly.'" (Pl.'s Exhibit 30).

72 F. Supp. 2d 1295, *1312 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18393, 56

Transamerica, 481 F. Supp. at 1002-03 (emphasis added). The Transamerica [*1313] court was attempting to provide a hypothetical illustration of what would undeniably be predatory conduct. The court did not maintain that IBM had engaged in such conduct let alone intend to announce a standard that a plaintiff must meet in order to succeed on a technological incompatibility claim. The Transamerica court went on to add, "it is more difficult to formulate a legal standard for design conduct than it is to imagine clearly illegal situations." Id. at 1003.

Finally, the Transamerica court stated the standard by which it would evaluate the changes IBM made to the CPU design:

A more generalized standard, one applicable to all types of otherwise legal conduct by a monopolist, and one recently adopted by the Ninth Circuit, must be applied to the technological design [57] activity here. If the design choice is unreasonably restrictive of competition, the monopolist's conduct violates the Sherman Act. This standard will allow the fact finder to consider the effects of the design on competitors; the effects of the design on consumers; the degree to which the design was the product of desirable technological creativity; and the monopolist's intent, since a contemporaneous evaluation by the actor should be helpful to the fact finder in determining the effects of a technological change.

Id. (citations omitted). The standard actually applied by the Transamerica court contemplates the effect the design choice has on competition. It does not impose the much heavier burden on a plaintiff of demonstrating that a design choice is entirely devoid of technological merit.

In addition, in the instant case plaintiff has not alleged a separate intentional incompatibility claim upon which a finding of liability is sought. As previously discussed, Caldera's claim of unlawful predatory conduct is based on the aggregate effect of all of Microsoft's anticompetitive behavior. HN18[¹⁸] While each separate fact used to support Caldera's § 2 claim may not by itself [58] legally support the claim, the overall effect may be prohibited anticompetitive conduct.

Accordingly, it would be inappropriate to view these alleged incompatibilities in isolation and out of the context in which they occurred. Contemporaneous with the appearance of these incompatibilities, several internal Microsoft memoranda were sent between Microsoft executives discussing possible plans to make Windows 3.1 incompatible with DR DOS. One such memorandum sent September 27, 1991 by Brad Silverberg, a top Microsoft executive, to Jim Allchin, another Microsoft executive, discussed the possible partnership between IBM and Novell involving DR DOS and how Microsoft would respond. The e-mail reads:

after IBM announces support for dr-dos at comdex, it's a small step for them to also announce they will be selling netware lite, maybe sometime soon thereafter. but count on it.

We don't know precisely what ibm is going to announce. my best hunch is that they will offer dr-dos as the preferred solution for 286, os 2 2.0 for 386. they will also probably continue to offer msdos at $ 165 (drdos for $ 99). drdos has problems running windows today, and I assume will have more problems [59] in the future Allchin responded, "You should make sure it has problems in the future.:-)" (Pl.'s Exhibit 197).

The same day this exchange occurred, Silverberg sent another e-mail to Phil Barrett, who was in charge of the Windows 3.1 project, inquiring:

can you tell me specifically what we're going to do to bind ourselves closer to ms dos? since you haven't been replying to my messages, I don't know how to interpret your silence. Let me emphasize the importance; ibm is going to announce the drdos deal at comdex (almost certain).

OK?

Barrett responded:

Sorry for the silence - don't interpret it as ignoring you. The approach that [*1314] ralph and I have discussed is to use a vxd to 'extend' dos by patching it. . . . We would not patch unknown OSs [operating systems] and, most likely, would only patch MS DOS 5.x. The big advantage here is that it provides a legitimate performance improvement. However, it wont prevent us from running on foreign OSs (unless we explicitly decide to refuse to run) - they just wont run as fast.

Is this the approach you want to take? Or would you prefer a simple check and refuse to run? Thats a lot easier but clearly quite [60] defeatable. I'll come talk to you about it.

Silverberg responded, "let's talk." (Pl.'s Exhibit 198).

Perhaps the most direct evidence offered by plaintiff that suggests the incompatibilities were intentionally placed by Microsoft for the purpose of eliminating DR DOS as a competitor, and not for procompetitive purposes, comes from a series of e-mails sent between Charles Stevens, Phil Barrett, and Brad Silverberg on September 29, and 30, 1991 relating to the Bambi incompatibility. Stevens writes:

I tracked down a serious incompatibility with DR-DOS 6 - They don't use the 'normal' device driver interface for >32M partitions. Instead of setting the regular *T SECTOR field to Offffh and then using a brand new 32-bit field the way MS-DOS has always done, they simply extended the start sector field by 16 bits.

This seems like a foolish oversight on their part and will likely result in extensive incompatibilities when they try to run with 3rd party device drivers.

I've patched a version of Bambi to work with DRD6, and it seems to run Win 3.1 without difficulty. This same problem may have caused other problems with Win 3.1 and swapfile under DRD6

It is possible [61] to make Bambi work, assuming we can come up with a reasonably safe method for detecting DRD6.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 208). The day after Barrett received this e-mail he responded: "The approach we will take is to detect dr 6 and refuse to load. The error message should be something like 'Invalid device driver interface.' mike, tom, mack - do you have a reliable dr6 detection mechanism?" That same day Barrett also sent an e-mail to Brad Silverberg which read: "heh, heh, heh . . . my proposal is to have bambi refuse to run on this alien os. comments?" (Pl.'s Exhibits 205 and 207).

Each of these incompatibilities arose at a time when Microsoft had excluded DRI from beta testing DR DOS with the new Windows version 3.1 before its public release. Consequently, any incompatibility which arose, intentionally placed there by Microsoft or not, could not be detected or remedied before Windows' public release. Moreover, it is alleged Microsoft was aware of both the Bambi and nested task flag incompatibilities and knew that DR DOS6 could be altered and made to work with Windows 3.1 with relatively minor modifications. However, Caldera asserts that Microsoft continued to create the illusion that [62] DR DOS was incompatible with Windows by inserting error messages conveying to the user that either DR DOS was incompatible with Windows or that MS-DOS was the only environment in which Windows could properly function. While technically this may not be false, a fact finder could reasonably conclude that laid against this backdrop there existed an anticompetitive campaign to eliminate competition in the DOS market in violation of § 2.

Caldera has presented sufficient evidence that the incompatibilities alleged were part of an anticompetitive scheme by Microsoft. Accordingly, defendant's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's Alleged Intentional Incompatibilities is denied.

2. Predisclosure

Before the release of Windows 3.1, Microsoft had always included DR DOS in its beta testing. However, in July 1991, Microsoft elected to exclude all competitors in the operating system market, including [*1315] DR DOS, from beta testing Windows 3.1. Plaintiff offers this fact as further evidence of Microsoft's anticompetitive conduct. Plaintiff asserts that by refusing to allow DR DOS to beta test Windows 3.1, which it had allowed previously, it created the impression that DR DOS [63] would not be compatible with Windows 3.1. Caldera argues that because Windows has monopoly power in the GUI (Windows) market, any operating system perceived as incompatible with Windows would suffer a serious disadvantage. Caldera also argues that the use of per processor licensing agreements by Microsoft, used in connection with excluding DR DOS from beta testing, had both the effect and purpose of eliminating DR DOS from competition in the operating systems market. Plaintiff maintains that by creating the impression that DR DOS was incompatible with Windows, OEMs were likely to sign licensing agreements with Microsoft to minimize the risk of incompatibility. With the use of two and three year per processor licensing agreements, it was extremely difficult and highly unlikely that an OEM could or would switch to a different operating system after the release of Windows. Thus, the cure of any incompatibilities between Windows and DR DOS, no matter how quickly the incompatibilities were remedied after Windows market release, would be ineffective. Caldera maintains that this conduct along with Microsoft's alleged campaign to cause fear, uncertainty, and doubt in the computer industry [64] about DR DOS' compatibility with Windows was anticompetitive conduct in violation of § 2.

In response to these allegations, Microsoft filed a motion for partial summary judgment which it styled, "Defendant's Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Plaintiff's 'Predisclosure' Claim." In its memorandum in support of the motion, Microsoft argues that a corporate decision not to allow DRI access to beta versions of Windows 3.1, does not constitute predatory conduct as contemplated by the Sherman Act. Defendant asserts that "[a] claim of unlawful monopolization under § 2 has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power through 'predatory conduct,' as distinguished from 'growth or development as a consequence of superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" (Def. Mem. Supp. at 1) (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966)). Microsoft contends that because failure to disclose technological information to a competitor prior to the market release of a new product is not anticompetitive as a matter of law, plaintiff fails to satisfy the second [65] prong of the Grinnell test.

The gravamen of defendant's position is that "antitrust laws impose no affirmative duty or obligation on a firm--even a firm with monopoly power--to assist its competitors by providing predisclosure of its technological innovations prior to market release." (Def. Mem. Supp. at 2) (citations omitted). Defendant further adds that "courts considering this issue have consistently refused to impose such a duty." (Id.). Microsoft lists several cases which it maintains stand for the proposition that defendant had no duty to predisclose its technological innovations to DRI.⁹ In particular, Microsoft relies heavily on Berkey Photo Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979). That case involved an antitrust action brought by Berkey Photo, Inc. (Berkey) against Eastman Kodak Company (Kodak). The two parties were competitors in camera, film and photofinishing markets in which Kodak possessed monopoly power. The dispute in question arose with the advent of 110 Instamatic [*1316] cameras first designed and marketed by Kodak in the early 1970's. Because the cameras were significantly smaller and took comparable photographs to the larger cameras [66] on the market, they were immediately popular among amateur photographers and a financial success for Kodak. However, because of the 110 system's diminished size, the film then on the market was unsuitable for use in connection with the new camera. Therefore, Kodak developed a film called Kodacolor II which was designed specifically for use with the 110 system.

Prior to the release of the [67] 110 system, "Kodak followed a checkered pattern of predisclosing innovations to various segments of the industry." 603 F.2d at 279. Kodak initially elected not to predisclose information relating to the 110 system. However, in an apparent effort to stave off litigation, Kodak agreed to prerelease information on its 110 system to photographic equipment manufacturers for a fee. Plaintiff Berkey did obtain the prerelease information but less than two months before Kodak released the 110 system to the public and in too little time to develop film that would be compatible with the new 110 system. As a result of this and other conduct, Berkey brought suit under the Sherman Antitrust Act, claiming that Kodak's willful maintenance of monopoly power caused Berkey "to lose sales in the camera and photofinishing markets and to pay excessive prices to Kodak for film, color print paper, and photofinishing equipment." Id. at 267-68. After a six-month trial on the issue of liability, a jury returned a verdict favorable to Berkey on virtually every allegation and awarded more than $ 87 million in damages.

⁹ Defendants cite to the following cases: Berkey Photo Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979); ILC Peripherals Leasing Corp. v. IBM Corp., 458 F. Supp. 423 (N.D. Cal. 1978); Memorex Corp. v. IBM Corp., 636 F.2d 1188 (9th Cir. 1980); California Computer Products, Inc. v. IBM Corp., 613 F.2d 727 (9th Cir. 1979); Telex Corp. v. IBM Corp., 510 F.2d 894 (10th Cir. 1975); The David L. Aldridge Co. v. Microsoft Corp., 995 F. Supp. 728 (S.D. Tex. 1998); GAF Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 519 F. Supp. 1203 (S.D.N.Y. 1981).

Kodak promptly appealed the decision on numerous grounds including the jury instruction concerning [68] the plaintiff's claim that Kodak's refusal to predisclose information concerning the 110 system was an exclusionary practice in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The challenged jury instruction read:

Standing alone, the fact that Kodak did not give advance warning of its new products to competitors would not entitle you to find that this conduct was exclusionary. Ordinarily a manufacturer has no duty to predispose its new products in this fashion. It is an ordinary and acceptable business practice to keep one's new developments a secret. However, if you find that Kodak had monopoly power in cameras or in film, and if you find that this power was so great as to make it impossible for a competitor to compete with Kodak in the camera market unless it could offer products similar to Kodak's, you may decide whether in the light of other conduct you determine to be anticompetitive, Kodak's failure to predisclose was on balance an exclusionary course of conduct.

Id. at 281. The Second Circuit held that the "instruction was error and that, as a matter of law, Kodak did not have a duty to predisclose information about the 110 system to competing camera manufacturers. [69] " Id.

Microsoft relies heavily upon the Second Circuit's invalidation of this jury instruction. First, Microsoft asserts that Berkey clearly establishes that Microsoft was under no duty to predisclose Windows 3.1 to Caldera. Second, Microsoft argues that Berkey precludes Caldera from presenting evidence of predisclosure to a jury in support of its claim that Microsoft engaged in an exclusionary course of conduct when considered in light of other anticompetitive behavior. The Court agrees with Microsoft and the general proposition that a corporation is under no obligation to predisclose its innovations to a competitor. As the court in Berkey commented, a firm may normally keep its innovations secret from its rivals as long as it wishes, forcing them to catch up on the strength of their own efforts after the new product is introduced. It is the possibility of success in the marketplace, attributable to superior performance, that provides the incentive on which the proper functioning of our competitive [*1317] economy rests. If a firm that has engaged in the risks and expenses of research and development were required in all circumstances to share with its rivals the benefits [70] of those endeavors, this incentive would very likely be vitiated.

Id.

However, the question currently before the Court is not whether Microsoft was under a duty to include DRI in beta testing, but rather whether excluding DRI from beta testing, in which it had previously been included, was predatory conduct under the attenuating circumstances. HN19[¹⁹] Among the purposes of § 2 of the Sherman Act is to encourage competition in the marketplace by prohibiting monopolists from acting in anticompetitive ways. Although Microsoft was under no duty to predisclose information to DRI, it could not do so as part of an overall anticompetitive plan to eliminate DRI from the DOS market. It is a very different thing to impose an affirmative duty on a monopolist to prerelease sensitive corporate information or innovations to a competitor under all circumstances than it is to prohibit a corporation from acting in an anticompetitive manner. As previously discussed, HN20[²⁰] generally a corporation may keep its innovations secret from competitors. This may foster competition. However, this is not always the case and when a monopolist acts in an anticompetitive manner it is proscribed by § 2. While this [71] Court does not intend to announce a new rule that monopolists have a duty to predisclose innovations to a competitor, the Court does intend to uphold the basic antitrust principle that HN21[²¹] a monopolist may not eradicate its competitors through anticompetitive means.

In Berkey, the plaintiff urged the court to find that a duty to predisclose existed and that failure to predisclose was exclusionary. Berkey argued that because Kodak had monopoly power in both the camera and film markets, Kodak had a duty to disclose the new format in which it was manufacturing film because failure to do so unlawfully enhanced its power in the camera market. In rejecting this argument the Second Circuit stated:

The first firm, even a monopolist, to design a new camera format has a right to the lead time that follows from its success. The mere fact that Kodak manufactured film in the new format as well, so that its customers would not be offered worthless cameras, could not deprive it of that reward. Nor is this conclusion altered because Kodak not only participated in but dominated the film market. Kodak's ability to pioneer formats does not depend on it possessing a film monopoly. Had the firm [72] possessed a much smaller share of the film market, it would nevertheless have been able to manufacture sufficient quantities of 110-size film either Kodacolor X or Kodacolor II to bring the new camera to market.

Id. at 283.

This Court is of a similar opinion. Had Microsoft simply desired to keep Windows 3.1 a secret from DOS competitors to gain the natural advantage of releasing a comparable DOS version with the release of Windows, the Court would find nothing anticompetitive about such conduct and would simply require that competitors "play catch up on the strength of their own endeavors." However, this is not the case Caldera alleges. Caldera asserts a single § 2 claim and offers as evidence multiple anticompetitive activities engaged in by Microsoft. Caldera claims as part of its anticompetitive scheme that Microsoft excluded DRI from beta testing. Caldera does not claim that Microsoft had a duty to predisclose Windows 3.1 to DRI or even that failure to disclose was exclusionary conduct which by itself amounts to an antitrust violation. Rather, Caldera claims that Microsoft engaged in a clandestine campaign to eliminate DR DOS from the market by a variety of tactics, [73] none of which alone supports a Sherman Act violation but the aggregation of which results in prohibited predatory conduct.

[*1318] Caldera asserts that the beta blacklisting of Novell/DRI was essential to the success of the falsely represented incompatibilities created by Microsoft as discussed in the previous section of this Opinion and in the section immediately following. Although standing alone, failure to include DRI in beta testing does not give rise to a violation of § 2, (and an appropriate limiting instruction to that effect may be necessary to give to the jury to avoid any misunderstanding at trial) but when viewed in context with Caldera's other anticompetitive allegations the fact that DRI was blacklisted may be considered by the fact finder along with other alleged predatory conduct to determine if a § 2 violation has occurred. Therefore, defendant's partial summary judgment motion relating to plaintiff's predisclosure claims is denied.

3. Perceived Incompatibilities

Microsoft also seeks partial summary judgment on Caldera's allegations of anticompetitive conduct relating to a routine, known as the AARD code, contained in one of the beta versions of Windows 3.1. [74] The AARD code was designed to detect the presence of MS-DOS in the computer onto which the Windows beta was loaded. When the AARD code detected a foreign DOS system, a message was displayed which read:

Non-fatal error detected: Error number [varied]. Please contact Windows 3.1 beta support. Press enter to exit or C to continue.

Caldera argues that this error message was false as no error had actually occurred. In fact, all that had occurred was that MS-DOS had not been detected and therefore, another operating system was present. Caldera further contends that the AARD code was an intentional incompatibility created by Microsoft and was part of Microsoft's campaign to create doubts about the compatibility between DR DOS and Windows.

Microsoft counters Caldera's allegations by asserting that because the AARD code was not technically an incompatibility between DR DOS and Windows, it is inappropriate to evaluate it under the rubric of an intentional incompatibility claim as previously discussed. Rather, Microsoft argues that because Caldera claims that the error message resulted in economic harm by making it appear as though DR DOS was incompatible with Windows, Caldera's [75] claim is really one of product disparagement.

Microsoft submits that in order to succeed on a product disparagement claim, Caldera must show as a preliminary matter that a "significant and more-than-temporary harmful effect[] on competition (and not merely upon a competitor or customer) before these practices can rise to the level of exclusionary conduct." (Def. Mem. Supp. at 2) (citing American Prof. Testing Serv., Inc. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal and Prof'l. Pub., Inc., 108 F.3d 1147, 1152 (9th Cir. 1997)). In the event that Caldera can make this preliminary showing, Microsoft argues Caldera must then demonstrate that the error message: "(1) was clearly false, (2) was clearly material, (3) was clearly likely to induce reasonable reliance, (4) was made to consumers having little understanding of the subject matter, (5) continued for extended time periods, and (6) was not readily susceptible to counter statement, explanation, or other neutralizing effort or offset." (Def. Mem. Supp. at 2) (citing David L. Aldridge Co. v. Microsoft Corp., 995 F. Supp. 728, 749 (S.D.Tex 1998) (internal quotations omitted). As to the requisite preliminary showing, [76] Microsoft claims that Caldera fails to demonstrate that there was a significant effect on competition. Microsoft further claims Caldera fails to establish any of the elements to succeed on a claim of product disparagement. Caldera objects to Microsoft's characterization of its claim as one of product disparagement but argues that even if the Court determines that the product disparagement standard is applicable, plaintiff has satisfied the test as outlined in Aldridge.

[*1319] The Court does not agree that Caldera has satisfied the test under Aldridge. The bulk of plaintiff's evidence relates to efforts by DR DOS to dissuade consumers from using DR DOS and not to disparagement of the product. In fact, plaintiff's evidence of disparagement appears extremely limited. This is not surprising as plaintiff did not assert a separate claim of product disparagement. In its complaint, Caldera uses evidence of the AARD code only in support its broad § 2 claim. The beta version containing the AARD code was sent out to over 12,000 test sites and was considered to be a beta that would preview the final commercial release of Windows 3.1. Caldera claims this final beta version was as much a marketing [77] tool to build demand for the product as it was an opportunity to further test Windows. While Microsoft claims that valid business reason existed for the code, Caldera presents evidence that casts doubt on the validity of the code. In an e-mail sent from Andy Hill, a Microsoft employee, to David Cole, the group manager of Windows 3.0, Mr. Hill writes:

Janine has brought up some good questions on how we handle the error messages that the users will get if they aren't using MS-DOS.

- The beta testers will ask questions. How should the techs respond: Ignorance, the truth, other?
- This will no doubt raise a stir on Compuserve. We should either be proactive and post something up there now, or have a response already constructed so we can flash it up there as soon as the issue arises so we can nip it in the bud before we have a typical CIS snow-ball mutiny.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 262). Mr. Cole responded: "Let's plead ignorance for a while. We need to figure out our overall strategy for this. I'm surprised people aren't flaming yet, maybe they won't." (Id.). Furthermore, Mr. Cole sent an e-mail to Brad Silverberg regarding the AARD code and the suggestion that a less severe [78] message be installed than the one currently under contemplation.

A kind-gentle message in setup would probably not offend anyone and probably won't get the press up in arms, but I don't think it serves much of a warning. BillP made an excellent point, what is the guy supposed to do?

With a TSR, the solution is to just remove it. With DR-DOS, or any others, I doubt the user is in a position of changing. He will no doubt continue to install. When he finds problems, he will call PSS. We will get a lot of calls from Dr DOS users. Perhaps a message in the phone system for Windows. It would say something like "if you are not using MS-DOS or an OEM version of MS-DOS, then press # # ". Then give them the message.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 277). Mr. Silverberg replied: "what the guy is supposed to do is feel uncomfortable, and when he has bugs, suspect that the problem is dr-dos and then go out to buy ms-dos. or decide to not take the risk for the other machines he has to buy for in the office." (Pl.'s Exhibit 278).

While it may very well be that Microsoft had a legitimate business reason to include the AARD code in its final beta version, a reasonable fact finder could conclude [79] that the code was inserted to make DR DOS appear incompatible with Windows. This may not give rise to a claim of product disparagement or, standing alone, a § 2 violation. However, inserting the code with such a purpose is certainly not competition on the merits and viewed in context with other alleged anticompetitive behavior may give rise to a § 2 violation. Plaintiff is entitled to present the AARD code as evidence of anticompetitive behavior in establishing its § 2 claim. Accordingly, defendant's motion for partial summary judgment on Plaintiff's Claim of Perceived Incompatibilities is denied.

4. Technological Tying

Caldera next alleges pursuant to §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act that Microsoft's development of Windows 95 as an integrated, graphical [*1320] operating system constitutes an illegal tying arrangement of products formerly sold as MS-DOS and Windows. Microsoft contends, however, that Windows 95 is far from a tied together version of MS-DOS and Windows, but rather a new product with vast technological improvements over the prior products. Accordingly, Microsoft argues that the requirements for an unlawful "technological tying" arrangement [80] have not been satisfied and should be dismissed as a matter of law.

"A HN22[[↑]] tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product--the 'tying product'--only on condition that the buyer also purchase a second product--the 'tied product'--or at least agree not to buy that product from another supplier." Multistate Legal Studies v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Pubs., Inc., 63 F.3d 1540, 1546 (10th Cir. 1995) (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461-462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992)). In the instant case, Caldera alleges that Microsoft is involved in an illegal tying arrangement by tying Windows 4.0, the tying product, and MS-DOS 7.0, the tied product, together and selling them as one product known as Windows 95. This allegation is based on the claim that Microsoft used its monopoly power in the Windows market to force consumers to use MS-DOS by tying these products together into one product. "A HN23[[↑]] tie-in constitutes a per se section 1 violation if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product." Id. For purposes [81] of this motion, Microsoft concedes that it has monopoly power in the personal computer operating system market.

Several economic reasons exist for outlawing anticompetitive tying. Indeed, HN24[[↑]] the law forbids a manufacturer who has market power in a certain area to gain advantage in another area by requiring consumers to buy another product. See Jefferson Parish Hospital v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). If market "power is used to impair competition on the merits in another market, a potentially inferior product may be insulated from competitive pressures. This impairment could either harm existing competitors or create barriers to entry of new competitors in the market for the tied product." Id. at 14. The Supreme Court captured Congress' concern about the anticompetitive character of tying arrangements when it recognized that tying arrangements have the power to "completely shut[] out competitors, not only from trade in which they are already engaged, but from the opportunities to build up trade in any community where these great and powerful combinations are operating under this system and practice." Id. at 10 n.14 (quoting H.R. Rep. No [82] 63-627, 63d Cong. 2d Sess., 12-13 (1914) and noting that congressional findings "concerning the competitive consequences of tying is illuminating, and must be respected").

The Supreme Court has recognized that "every HN25[[↑]] refusal to sell two products separately cannot be said to restrain competition." Id. at 11-12 (finding that "buyers often find package sales attractive; a seller's decision to offer such packages can merely be an attempt to compete effectively"). Nevertheless, the Supreme Court has established that HN26[[↑]] upon meeting certain criteria, a tying arrangement may constitute a per se § 1 violation. "The HN27[[↑]] essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." Id. at 12. The Court continued: "When such 'forcing' is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated." Id. at 12. In sum, "tying arrangements need only be condemned if they restrain competition on the merits by forcing purchases [83] that would not otherwise be made." Id. at 27.

[*1321] a. Caldera's Standing to Bring a Tying Claim

As a preliminary manner, the Court first addresses Microsoft's argument that Caldera lacks standing to raise any tying claim concerning Windows 95 because neither Caldera nor its predecessors, DRI or Novell, ever produced a substitute for the allegedly tied product that would have enabled Caldera to compete with Microsoft. Specifically, Microsoft contends that Caldera was not an actual or potential participant in the business from which Caldera alleges they were foreclosed from competition.

While acknowledging that Novell stopped its development work on DR DOS in 1994 and never developed a Windows-like (GUI) program, Caldera argues that it cannot be precluded from bringing a claim on the basis of standing. Caldera claims that it could not participate because Microsoft foreclosed the competition in the DOS market by tying together in Windows 95 two functionally distinct products, Windows 4.0 and MS-DOS 7.0. Through this tie, Caldera argues, Microsoft used its monopoly power in the Windows market to effectively prevent further competition in the DOS market by completely [84] closing that market to outside competition. Consequently, any further development of a DOS program would have been futile since Windows was no longer sold separately. Caldera's claim is based on the fact that after 1995 consumers could not buy Windows 4.0 alone. The fundamental premise of Caldera's tying claim is that it and its predecessors would have, and could have, made a version of DR DOS that would have been compatible with Windows 4.0 and fully competitive with MS-DOS 7.0.

Caldera alleges that Microsoft developed Windows 95 as an attempt to destroy its DOS competition. Such allegations are supported by internal Microsoft documents. For example, in a 1992 internal strategy document, Microsoft, referring to Windows 95 by its code name "Chicago," stated:

Novell is after the desktop. As you know, they have acquired Digital Research and are now working hard to tightly integrate DR-DOS with Netware. We should also assume they are working on a Windows clone and/or that they are working on a virtualized DOS environment which will run standard mode Windows as a client. This is perhaps our biggest threat. We must respond in a strong way by making Chicago a complete Windows operating [85] system, from boot-up to shut-down. There will be no place or need on a Chicago machine for DR-DOS (or any DOS).

(Pl.'s Exhibit 309). Caldera argues that Microsoft did exactly as it planned, and were it not for Microsoft's tying Windows to DOS, Caldera would still be a viable competitor in the DOS business. Indeed, as inferred from the following e-mail, Caldera asserts that but for Microsoft's deliberate anticompetitive conduct aimed at Novell, DR DOS would still be alive. In 1993, Microsoft executives further stated: "If you're going to kill someone there isn't much reason to get all worked up about it and angry--you just pull the trigger. . . . We need to smile at Novell while we pull the trigger." (Pl.'s Exhibit 384).

Caldera has alleged facts sufficient to persuade the Court that Caldera has standing as an actual and potential competitor to bring its tying claim. Novell was an actual competitor to Microsoft in the DOS market in 1994. Novell ceased its active development and marketing of its DOS product based on the imminent release of Windows 95, which eliminated the need for a separate DOS program. Additionally, Caldera has alleged sufficient facts that it had the financial [86] resources, the engineering talent, and the marketing capability to continue upgrading Novell DOS, as it had done in the past with DR DOS, so that it would continue to be a marketable component to Windows. See Curtis v. Campbell-Taggart, Inc., 687 F.2d 336, 338 (10th Cir. 1982) (holding that a [*1322] potential competitor may have standing under the antitrust laws "if he has manifested an intention to enter the business and has demonstrated his preparedness to do so"). Certainly Caldera has demonstrated that it was foreclosed from a market in which it would otherwise have competed. It is hard to imagine that Caldera does not have standing to sue under these alleged facts. Accordingly, the Court finds that as an actual competitor to MS-DOS 6.22, and as a potential competitor to the allegedly tied product, MS-DOS 7.0, Caldera has the requisite standing to pursue its tying claim against Microsoft.

b. Technological Tying Arrangements

Microsoft contends that so long as the integrated design of Windows 95 offers any technological benefit, its design is immune to judicial review under the antitrust laws. Because the tying cases that are binding upon this Court involve [87] nontechnical products such as bar review courses, Multistate Legal Studies v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Pubs., Inc., 63 F.3d 1540 (10th Cir. 1995), and medical services, Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), Microsoft argues that the Court should apply the reasoning used by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in United States v. Microsoft, Corp., 331 U.S. App. D.C. 121, 147 F.3d 935 (D.C. Cir. 1998). Microsoft relies heavily on this case in support of its present motion, premising its argument on the contention that technically integrated products are immune from per se § 1 liability. As with the case at bar, the case before the D.C. Circuit arose from Microsoft's practices in marketing Windows 95. In that case, the D.C. Circuit considered whether the district court erred in entering a preliminary injunction prohibiting Microsoft from requiring computer manufacturers who license its operating system software to license its internet browser, Internet Explorer, as well. 147 F.3d at 938. The preliminary injunction turned on the court's interpretation of a consent decree [88] between the Department of Justice (DOJ) and Microsoft, which in relevant part reads:

Microsoft shall not enter into any License Agreement in which the terms of that agreement are expressly or impliedly conditioned upon:

(i) the licensing of any other Covered Product, Operating System Software product or other product (provided, however, that this provision in and of itself shall not be construed to prohibit Microsoft from developing integrated products).

331 U.S. App. D.C. at 125 (quoting section IV(E) of the Consent Decree). Although both Microsoft and the DOJ characterize section IV(E) of the decree as an "anti-tying" provision, the court found that "the decree does not embody either the entirety of the Sherman Act or even all 'tying' law under the Act." 147 F.3d at 946. Nevertheless, the court stated that "the consent decree emerged from antitrust claims, unresolved as they were, so that we must keep procompetitive goals in mind in the interpretive task." Id. It is in this perspective that the court began its analysis in attempting to interpret the consent decree consistent with the antitrust laws. While the court stated that it would keep antitrust "goals in mind," in essence [\[89\]](#) the court's task was "to discern the bargain that the parties struck" in the consent decree. Id. at 946. Not only is the D.C. Circuit's opinion nonbinding on the proceedings before this Court, but also it is even less persuasive due to the context in which it arose. Nevertheless, due to Microsoft's heavy reliance on this case, the Court will review the D.C. Circuit's analysis as it may apply to the instant case.

After debating whether Windows 95 and its Internet Explorer were an "integrated product" under the consent decree, the D.C. Circuit determined that it should ask the question "not whether the integration is a net plus but merely whether there is a plausible claim that it brings some advantage." Id. at 950. Microsoft now urges [\[*1323\]](#) the Court to adopt this standard and reject Caldera's challenge to Microsoft's integrated product design of Windows 95 so long as Microsoft has a plausible claim of technological improvement that brings some advantage. Upon announcing this standard the D.C. Circuit acknowledged that "whether or not this is the appropriate test for antitrust law generally, we believe it is the only sensible reading of § IV(E)(i)." Id. This Court finds that [\[90\]](#) such a test is not the appropriate standard to determine whether an illegal tie has taken place under antitrust law. Simply determining whether a "facially plausible benefit" has been ascribed to justify an integrated product that is alleged to constitute an illegal tying arrangement falls short of satisfying the antitrust laws, as well as existing antitrust authority. This Court agrees with Judge Wald's dissenting opinion in Microsoft, that the majority's standard allows Microsoft "too safe a harbor with too easily navigable an entrance." Id. at 957. Just as the dissent recognized that Microsoft could require OEMs to install "integrated" software without fear of running aground on the main prohibition of section IV(E)(i) so long as Microsoft has created a design to combine functionality in a way that offers the ultimate user some "plausible" advantage otherwise unavailable, this Court finds that if the same standard were applied in the case at bar, Microsoft could similarly avoid § 1 violations and tie whatever products it wanted by simply pointing to some "plausible advantage." Furthermore, as Judge Wald stated: "It is difficult to imagine how Microsoft could not conjure [\[91\]](#) up some technological advantage for any currently separate software product it wished to 'integrate' into the operating system." Id. at 961. Were this Court to adopt in this case the standard the D.C. Circuit articulated in the narrow context of the D.C. case, the Court would be adopting a broad standard of allowing a showing of "plausible" product improvement functionality, whatever that means, as an absolute defense to a § 1 tying claim. The Court is not willing to do so and would find such a standard to be inconsistent with existing legal precedent. See, e.g., Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc. 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992); Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984); Multistate Legal Studies v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Publs., Inc., 63 F.3d 1540 (10th Cir. 1995).

This is a case dealing with technology, and the Court recognizes the need to promote pro-competitive conduct in the technology world. Indeed, technological innovation is an important defense in defending antitrust allegations. As the D.C. Circuit noted, "antitrust scholars have long recognized the undesirability of having [\[92\]](#) courts oversee product design, and any dampening of technological innovation would be at cross-purposes with antitrust law." Microsoft 147 F.3d at 948. Thus, acknowledging the importance of promoting technological innovation, the Court is cautious in completely relying on the analysis contained in cases such as Jefferson Parish and Multistate Legal Studies, which involved medical services and bar-review courses. However, the Court finds that the D.C. Circuit has given too much deference to the technology argument and not enough to current antitrust law. HN28  Certainly a company should be allowed to build a better mousetrap, and the courts should not deprive a company of the opportunity to do so by hindering technological innovation. Yet, antitrust law has developed for good reason, and just as courts have the potential to stifle technological advancements by second guessing product design, so too can product innovation be stifled if companies are allowed to dampen competition by unlawfully tying products together and escape antitrust liability by simply claiming a "plausible" technological advancement.

Microsoft requests the Court do as other courts have and apply [93] a more deferential [*1324] standard to technically integrated products. See, e.g., Response of California, Inc. v. Leasco Response, Inc., 537 F.2d 1307, 1330 (5th Cir. 1976) (holding that an antitrust "violation must be limited to those instances where the technological factor tying the hardware to the software has been designed for the purpose of tying the products, rather than to achieve some technologically beneficial result"); Data Processing, Inc. v. IBM, 585 F. Supp. 1470, 1476 (D.N.J. 1984) (finding that the integration of a "dump-restore" utility into mainframe operating system was a lawful package of technologically interrelated components); ILC Peripherals Leasing Corp. v. IBM, 448 F. Supp. 228 (N.D. Cal. 1978) (finding that disk drives and head/disk assembly combination were lawful), aff'd per curiam sub nom., Memorex Corp. v. IBM, 636 F.2d 1188 (9th Cir. 1980); Telex Corp. v. IBM, 367 F. Supp. 258, 347 (N.D. Okla. 1973) (denying a claim that IBM's integration of additional memory and control functions into its CPU constituted unlawful tying), rev'd on other grounds, 510 F.2d 894 (10th Cir. 1975). [94] These cases, upon which Microsoft relies, arose from an era when IBM was accused of tying its central processing unit to various peripheral devices such as disk drives. The courts addressing this issue generally concluded that IBM's integrations did not amount to illegal tying arrangements due to the fact that the computers were considered a single product, and the integration of related devices could not be regarded as predatory within the contemplation of antitrust policy. See Telex, 367 F. Supp. at 342. However, as noted by the D.C. District Court, on remand in the Internet Explorer case, Microsoft has taken an additional step beyond the defendants in the IBM cases by not only bundling two products together, but also by prohibiting the unbundling of the two. See United States v. Microsoft Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14231, No. Civ. A. 98-1232, 1998 WL 614485 at *8-*9 (D.D.C. Sept. 14 1998). In the instant case, unlike the IBM cases, Microsoft ceased selling Windows and DOS separately after the release of Windows 95. Furthermore, Caldera argues that the Court should not look to these cases because they were decided prior to the Supreme Court's decisions in Jefferson Parish [95] and Eastman Kodak and have been preempted by the Court's "separate product analysis."

Although not "technology" cases, Jefferson Parish and Eastman Kodak both involved integrated products and services where the defendants claimed that a functionally integrated package of services existed. In order to determine whether an unlawful tying arrangement had taken place, the Jefferson Parish Court considered whether anesthesiological services, which a hospital had required patients to take only from certain anesthesiologists, were in fact separate products from the other services provided by the hospital or, rather, were part of what the hospital claimed was a "functionally integrated package of services." Id. at 19. In its analysis the Court asked the fundamental question: Are there two separate products? This was not a question of function, but rather one assessing whether there was a market for two separate products. Id. at 21 (holding that "a tying arrangement cannot exist unless two separate product markets have been linked"). The Court found that no tying arrangement could exist unless there was sufficient demand for the purchase of anesthesiological [96] services separate from hospital services to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer anesthesiological services separately from hospital services. Id. at 21-22. The Jefferson Parish test is actually consistent with the IBM cases in that the market should determine whether an integration is desirable--not Microsoft. The market can only make that decision if the two integrated products are, as a practical matter, available individually, as they were in the IBM cases.

The Tenth Circuit has also applied the Jefferson Parish tying analysis in Multistate Legal Studies v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Pubs., Inc., 63 F.3d 1540 (10th Cir. 1995). The court was faced with the task of determining [*1325] whether an unlawful tying arrangement was created when a bar review provider bundled its multistate bar review workshop with its full-service bar review course and required customers to purchase the workshop if they wanted the full-service course. In making such a determination, the Tenth Circuit articulated that HN29 [+] the following elements were necessary in order to find a per se tying violation: "(1) two separate products, [97] (2) a tie-or conditioning of the sale of one product on the purchase of another, (3) sufficient economic power in the tying product market, and (4) a substantial volume of commerce affected in the tied product market."

Id. at 1546. In determining whether the first prong of its analysis was satisfied, the Tenth Circuit stated that "the Supreme Court has made clear that the test for determining whether two components are separate products turns not on their function, but on the nature of any consumer demand for them." Id. at 1547. In essence the Tenth Circuit requires an inquiry as to whether the market wants two separate products. In its analysis the court held "there must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide [one] separate from [the other]." Id. (quoting Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc. 504 U.S. 451, 462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992)).

It is against this backdrop of precedent that the Court must determine what standard should govern whether an unlawful "technological tying" arrangement has taken place from the alleged integration of Windows and DOS into Windows 95. Therefore, the Court embarks [*98] on its own analysis in applying a standard that is consistent with established antitrust tying authority, yet appropriate for cases involving technological innovations. The Court finds that HN30[[↑]] if the evidence shows that a valid, not insignificant, technological improvement has been achieved by the integration of two products, then in essence a new product has been created, and a defendant is insulated from § 1 tying liability. If Microsoft could meet such a standard with uncontested evidence, its present motion would be granted. Thus, the Court must determine whether the present state of the record support the proposition that Windows 95 consists of Microsoft's prior products simply upgraded and packaged together as illustrated below in Figure 1, or rather whether legitimate technological improvements were achieved, thereby technologically integrating the prior products into an entirely new product as illustrated below in Figure 2.

The Court's standard is consistent with what the Tenth Circuit said when it stated that "a HN31[[↑]] product improvement motivation--at least without something more, such as demonstrated efficiencies--will not save an otherwise illegal tying arrangement under § 1." [*99] Multistate, 63 F.3d at 1551 n.9 (citing Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 25 n.41). Accordingly, the technological improvements must have demonstrated efficiencies. This is more than just a "plausible claim that brings some advantage."

[SEE FIGURE 1 IN ORIGINAL]

[SEE FIGURE 2 IN ORIGINAL]

[*1326] Microsoft, 147 F.3d at 950. Any other standard would have the potential to allow illegal tying arrangement to deter, or even eliminate, effective competition, which in turn could hurt consumers not just because of higher prices, but because of a lack of technologically improved products.

HN32[[↑]] In determining whether a technological advance has essentially created a new product through integration, the two products that have been integrated must be joined for technological reasons. In other words, in the spirit of Jefferson Parish, this analysis requires the integration to be driven by technology rather than by marketing. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21. Evidence that consumers prefer an integrated product may not be enough, especially where the two previous products have essentially ceased to exist as separate commodities, [*100] as is the case here. Caldera asserts that the Windows 95 package consists of two separate products to which the link is no stronger than it was between the prior products and can be easily separated. (Pl.'s Expert, Dr. Hollaar's Report at 20-26). When asked about the integration of Windows and DOS in Windows 95, one of Microsoft's software engineers acknowledged that DOS and Windows were basically "stuck together with baling wire and bubble gum." (Barrett Depo. at 60-61). Based on this contention, Caldera argues that Microsoft's decision to combine them into Windows 95 turned on marketing decisions (and anticompetitive ones) rather than technological reasons. For example, Caldera again cites to the 1992 internal strategy document, where Microsoft, referring to Windows 95 by its code name "Chicago," stated:

While Chicago is being developed as a single integrated Windows operating system, it's being designed and built so that 3 specific retail products can be packaged up and sold separately. Which products actually ship other than full Chicago is a marketing issue.

(Pl.'s Exhibit 309). Microsoft never released separate updated versions of DOS or Windows subsequent to [*101] the release of Windows 95. Accordingly, this evidence supports Caldera's contention that Windows 95 consists of separate DOS and Windows products and was integrated not for technological reasons but rather for marketing reasons to gain market power. Such allegations, together with Dr. Hollaar's report, support Caldera's claim that genuine issues of material fact exist as to any alleged technological advantage of Windows 95.

Microsoft, however, responds with evidence that Windows 95 is more than two separate products tied together and that any integration was done for technological reasons and achieved legitimate technological advantages. Indeed, Microsoft argues that incorporating a real-mode DOS component into Windows 95 resulted in several significant benefits, including the benefit of integration itself, sparing users the uncertainties of combining two products from different companies and giving users more confidence in the product, as well as the benefit of a single installation program, requiring users to only install one software program rather than two. Additionally, Microsoft argues that the integration provided several technological benefits that were not present in MS-DOS [102] 6.22 or Windows 3.1, including the ability to (1) use long file names; (2) protect against incompatible utilities; (3) support plug-and-play devices so that notebook computers using docking stations will function properly; (4) use a "safe mode" boot-up process to determine if the boot-up process was completed properly, and if not, shift the computer into safe mode when the computer is restarted; (5) detect incompatible device drivers; and (6) obscure boot noise with an blue cloud image so users do not see the series of confusing messages that appear on the screen during the DOS boot-up sequence.

There appears to be no question that Windows 95, as Microsoft argues, is greater than the sum of Windows 3.1 and MS-DOS 6.22 and contains features that the previous products did not contain. However, [*1327] the question that must be addressed is whether the technological improvements were in reality improvements to the prior products, ultimately creating Windows 4.0 and MS-DOS 7.0, under the guise of a new technologically advanced product, Windows 95. Caldera claims that none of the improvements offered in Windows 95 required--or even resulted from--the MS-DOS/Windows integration. Caldera's expert, [103] Dr. Hollaar, argues this position. (Hollaar Report at 21-26). Dr. Hollaar claims that no shared software code exists between the underlying products in Windows 95 and that the two products can be easily separated and work properly once separated. See id. Thus, Caldera contends that the relationship between MS-DOS 7.0 and Windows 4.0 in Windows 95 is the same relationship that existed between Windows 3.1 and MS-DOS 6.22. Furthermore, Caldera alleges that but for Microsoft's anticompetitive conduct, Caldera would have and could have produced a DOS system that would support Windows 4.0, and thus would have all of the same technological benefits advanced by Windows 95.

The Supreme Court has instructed that "any HN33[] inquiry into the validity of a tying arrangement must focus on the market or markets in which the two products are sold, for that is where the anticompetitive forcing has its impact." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 18. Thus, the Court explained, "the answer to the question whether one or two products are involved turns not on the functional relation between them, but rather on the character of the demand for the two items." Id. at 19. The alleged [104] fact that Microsoft could have produced the products separately is not enough. "There must be sufficient consumer demand so that it is efficient for a firm to provide separately [its products]." Eastman Kodak v. Image Tech. Services, 504 U.S. 451, 462, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\). Caldera argues that there exists a demand for separate Windows and DOS products. Certainly a demand existed prior to the release of Windows 95, when for ten years DOS and Windows were marketed separately. Caldera claims that some OEMs would prefer Windows and DOS to still be offered separately. Indeed, in a 1991 PC User interview when asked about giving GUI users a single operating system, Microsoft executive Steve Ballmer stated:

we'll certainly be providing OEMs with an installation program that installs DOS and Windows as if they were one product. But not all hardware vendors want to sell Windows and not all end-users want to run Windows. And there is nothing we give up technically by offering Windows and DOS separately.

(Engel Declaration, Exhibit 3). Caldera's claim that there is a demand for separate products is further buttressed by the fact that Microsoft continued to sell old versions [105] of MS-DOS and Windows separately. While these sales are relatively small and relate largely to obsolete products, they illustrate that some level of consumer demand exists even after the introduction of Windows 95.

Based on the fact that Caldera's expert has opined that Windows 95 is in reality nothing more than updated versions of Windows and MS-DOS, that these products could be separated, that any improvements in Windows 95 did not result from the integration of its underlying products, and that but for the tying of Windows 95 a market would exist for other DOS products, this Court finds that drawing all inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, genuine issues of material fact exist as to whether a valid, not insignificant, technological improvement have been advanced by integrating Windows and DOS into what would constitute one superior technological product. While in the end Microsoft may be able to satisfy a jury that Windows 95 constitutes a significant technological improvement over the prior products, at this point, based on Caldera's expert testimony and on Microsoft's own admissions, the Court will allow these factual disputes to [*1328] be presented to a fact [106] finder. Indeed, this is not the time to assess the strength of Caldera's case, but the time to determine whether there is enough evidence to allow a jury to make such an assessment. Even the D.C. District Court upon remand from the D.C. Circuit found that under the D.C. Circuit's rigid standard there were enough disputed facts that summary judgment should be denied in relation to the alleged tie of Microsoft's Internet Explorer to Windows 98, the latest update of Windows 95. See United States v. Microsoft Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14231, No. Civ. A. 98-1232, 1998 WL 614485 at *10 (D.D.C. Sept. 14 1998). Based on these findings the Court concludes that Microsoft's motion for partial summary judgment on its "technological tying" claim must fail. Accordingly, Caldera will be allowed to present its § 1 tying claim to a jury.

c. Caldera's § 2 Tying Claim

Furthermore, in addition to presenting its § 1 tying claim to the jury, Caldera will be allowed to present to the jury Microsoft's alleged unlawful tying arrangement of Windows 4.0 and MS-DOS 7.0 as part of Caldera's evidence in support of its § 2 claim for anticompetitive conduct. "Illegal HN34[↑] tie-ins . . . under section 1 may also [107] qualify as anticompetitive conduct for section 2 purposes." Multistate Legal Studies v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Pubs., Inc., 63 F.3d 1540, 1550 \(10th Cir. 1995\).

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that plaintiff's "Motion to Strike Microsoft's Partial Summary Judgment Briefs Relating to Substantive Antitrust Violations" is DENIED, and defendant's Motions for Partial Summary Judgment on "Plaintiff's Claim of Predisclosure," "Plaintiff's Claim of Perceived Incompatibilities," "Plaintiff's Claim of Intentional Incompatibilities," and "Plaintiff's Claim of Technological Tying" are DENIED.

Dated this 3rd day of November 1999

Dee Benson

United States District Judge

Chawla v. Shell Oil Co.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Houston Division

November 3, 1999, Decided ; November 3, 1999, Entered

CIVIL ACTION NO. H-99-1711

Reporter

75 F. Supp. 2d 626 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,865

MARY CHAWLA, et al., Plaintiffs, v. SHELL OIL COMPANY, MOTIVA ENTERPRISES, L.L.C. and EQUILON ENTERPRISES, L.L.C., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs Tying and Price Discrimination Claims [Doc. # 11] GRANTED as to Plaintiffs' tying claims alleged in Counts I and II of the Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs Tying and Price Discrimination Claims [Doc. # 11] GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as to the Robinson-Patman Act claim alleged in Count III of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. Defendants' Supplemental Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Conspiracy Count [Doc. # 46] GRANTED.

Core Terms

gasoline, Plaintiffs', Defendants', jobbers, consumers, retail, Robinson-Patman Act, allegations, amended complaint, stations, dealers, Sherman Act, prices, tying product, tying arrangement, brand, price discrimination, sales, tied product, interstate commerce, market power, commerce, rule of reason, relevant market, lessee-dealers, Clayton Act, trademark, markets, competitors, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN1 Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fraudulent allegations must be pleaded with particularity in accordance with Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) is appropriate when, taking the facts alleged in the complaint as true, it appears certain that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief.

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim
Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

For purposes of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, a court must limit its inquiry to the facts stated in the complaint and the documents either attached to or incorporated into the complaint; however, courts may also consider matters of which they may take judicial notice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim
Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN4 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

In antitrust cases in particular, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly. Nonetheless, it is not proper to assume that the plaintiff can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Private Actions

In factually complex antitrust cases, district courts may require that facts be pleaded with reasonable particularity in order to permit an inference that a federal antitrust claim is cognizable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is one under which a seller agrees to sell one product, the tying product, only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a second product, the tied product, or that the seller sells the tying product only on the condition that the buyer agrees that he will not purchase the product from any other supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN7 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Not every tying arrangement is illegal. Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To show that a tying agreement is illegal, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the tie is either per se illegal or invalid under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

To establish per se illegality of a tying arrangement, a plaintiff must show: (1) two separate products, as opposed to components of a single product; (2) that are tied together or the customers are coerced into buying; (3) the supplier possesses substantial economic power over the tying product; (4) the tie has an anti-competitive effect on the tied market; and (5) the tie affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN10 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

If a plaintiff is unable to satisfy the per se illegality test, the plaintiff nevertheless may be able to show that a tying arrangement is invalid under the "rule of reason." Under this latter approach, a plaintiff has the burden of demonstrating that the tying arrangement unreasonably restrained competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN11 Private Actions, Remedies

A key element in most antitrust claims is ultimate harm to consumers.

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To analyze a tying claim, the relevant product market for both the tying and tied products must be identified.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Franchising & Marketing

HN13 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

There is nothing inherently anti-competitive about packaged sales. Only if buyers are forced to purchase the tied services as a result of the seller's market power would the arrangement have anti-competitive consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN14 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Economic power derived from contractual arrangements such as franchises has nothing to do with market power, ultimate consumers' welfare, or antitrust.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN15 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Market power is a necessary prerequisite to an illegal tie.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN16 [] Market Definition, Relevant Market

In order to show market power, a plaintiff first must define the relevant market. While the exact contours of the relevant market depend upon factual determinations, the antitrust plaintiff in a tying claim at a minimum must allege a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN17 [] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A key in determining the relevant market includes an analysis of the cross-elasticity of demand for the product in question and all of its potential substitutes. In other words, the outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN18 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A single product, rarely constitutes a market for antitrust purposes, even if that product is a trademarked product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > General Overview

HN19 Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A prestigious trademark is not itself persuasive evidence of economic power because a trademark, unlike a patent, protects only the name or symbol and not the product itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN20 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement must link two distinct markets for products that are distinguishable in the eyes of buyers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Processing & Refining > General Overview

HN21 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

There can be no tying arrangement unless there is a distinct demand for the tied product. One indicator of this distinct demand for the tied product is whether consumers make specific requests for it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN22 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Offering convenience to the consumer does not demonstrate an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN23 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Tying claims that do not state a per se violation are analyzed under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN24 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

In a case involving the rule of reason, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendants' behavior unreasonably restrained competition or suppressed competition. In a tying case, the rule of reason test requires an additional inquiry into the actual effect of the tying arrangement on competition in the market for the tied good.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN25 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 14.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN26 [] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, applies only when both the tying and tied products are goods. Tying arrangements that involve services are not governed by § 3.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN27 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Secondary & Tertiary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN28 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

In order to establish secondary-line price discrimination under § 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\), a plaintiff has the burden of establishing four facts: (1) that seller's sales were made in interstate commerce; (2) that the seller discriminated in price as between the two purchasers; (3) that the product or commodity sold to the competing purchasers was of the same grade and quality; and (4) that the price discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN29 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\) has a stringent interstate commerce requirement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN30 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Sales that merely affect interstate commerce do not meet the "in commerce" standard of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN31 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In contrast with the Sherman Act, in which Congress exercised the utmost extent of its Constitutional power in restraining trust and monopoly agreements, the distinct "in commerce" language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts denotes only persons or activities within the flow of interstate commerce, the practical, economic continuity in the generation of goods and services for interstate markets and their transport and distribution to the consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Boundaries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN32 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Claims under the Robinson-Patman Act must be predicated on the occurrence of an interstate sale of the relevant commodity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Rights of Buyers

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN33 Coverage, Commerce Requirement

Retail goods delivered from out of state to an in-state buyer who then re-sells the goods to retail customers generally cease to be in the flow of interstate commerce when the goods reach the in-state retailer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN34 Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

Retail goods remain part of the flow of commerce in only three situations: (1) the goods are purchased upon the order of a customer with the definite intention that the goods are to go at once to the customer; (2) the goods are purchased by the retailer to meet the needs of a specified customer pursuant to some understanding with the customer; and (3) the goods are purchased by the retailer based on the anticipated needs of a specific customer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN35 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Under the terms of section 13\(a\) of the Robinson-Patman Act at least one of the sales alleged to be discriminatory must actually be in interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN36 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In order to come within the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the discriminatory sales were in commerce. Thus, the Robinson-Patman Act is applicable only where the allegedly discriminatory transactions took place in interstate commerce. That is, at least one of the two transactions which, when compared, generate a discrimination must cross a state line.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Jurisdiction

HN37 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The mere interstate transportation of ingredients used to make a product that is sold intrastate does not satisfy the jurisdictional requirements of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN38 Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The primary purpose of the Robinson-Patman Act is to protect the competitive process, not individual competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Secondary & Tertiary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN39 [L] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

There are three types of violations actionable under the Robinson-Patman Act. First, in a primary-line case, the plaintiff must show that the defendant's price discrimination adversely affects the defendant's competition with its own competitors. In a secondary-line case, the plaintiff may demonstrate that the defendant's price discrimination injures competition among the defendant's customers, presumably, the plaintiff's competitors. Finally, a tertiary or third line violation occurs when the probable impact of the price discrimination is on the customers of either of the favored or disfavored buyers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Secondary & Tertiary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN40 [L] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A third or tertiary-line violation of the Robinson-Patman Act is explained as follows: Although the purchasers of the discriminating seller do not compete directly, their customers compete within a unified market region.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN41 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

As a prerequisite to establishing competitive injury in a secondary-line price discrimination case, a plaintiff must prove that it was engaged in actual competition with the favored purchasers as of the time of the price differential.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Secondary & Tertiary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN42 [L] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The existence of functional competition between competitors who may, at first blush, seem to compete on different levels is determined through a factual inquiry rather than a blanket legal rule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Cost Justification Defense

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

HN43 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act contains no express reference to functional discounts. It does contain two affirmative defenses that provide protection for two categories of discounts: those that are justified by savings in the seller's cost of manufacture, delivery, or sale, and those that represent a good faith response to the equally low prices of a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN44 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A Robinson-Patman Act plaintiff must allege, and eventually prove, that either it competed on the same functional level, i.e., as a wholesaler or retailer, with the allegedly favored buyer of the defendant's product or, if competing on a different functional level from the allegedly favored buyers, the plaintiff must prove that putative functional discounts offered by the defendant to the latter were in fact subterfuges to avoid the Robinson-Patman Act restrictions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN45 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

A Robinson-Patman Act plaintiff must allege facts that demonstrate a reasonable possibility that competition has been harmed as a result of the price differential.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

HN46 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

An injury to competition may be inferred from evidence that some purchasers had to pay their supplier substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN47 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Evidence of a price differential alone is insufficient to impose liability on the defendant on the primary-line price discrimination cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > Meeting Competition Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN48 [] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Under the Robinson-Patman Act, the plaintiff must allege facts to support the proposition that competitive injury has occurred. This pleading burden is met if a plaintiff alleges facts that demonstrate a reasonable possibility that a price difference may harm competition.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN49 [] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Allegations in a response to a motion are not sufficient to amend the complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN50 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN51 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to state a claim for a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must allege (1) the existence of a conspiracy (2) affecting interstate commerce (3) that imposes an unreasonable restraint of trade.

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN52 [] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

There are two possible theories for a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Per se violations of § 1 involve those agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable. Per se violations are held to be illegal without any inquiry into the actual effect on the relevant market. If a violation is not per se illegal, it is analyzed according to the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN53 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

In order to determine whether a particular conspiracy is illegal per se, the court must determine whether it represents a horizontal or a vertical restraint of trade. If the alleged conspiracy is horizontal, it is per se illegal and plaintiffs need not allege market effects. On the other hand, if the alleged conspiracy is vertical, then generally it should be analyzed under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN54 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

There is an exception to the general rule that vertical restraints be analyzed under the rule of reason. Vertical restraints involving price maintenance or price levels are per se illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN55 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A corporation cannot conspire or combine with its own officers, employees, or wholly owned sales divisions and outlets in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *626LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN56 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

When a manufacturer acts of its own, in pursuing its own marketing strategy, it is seeking to compete with other manufacturers by imposing what may be defended as reasonable vertical restraints. However, if the action of a manufacturer or other supplier is taken at the direction of its customer, the restraint becomes primarily horizontal in nature in that one customer is seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common supplier.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN57 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

When a producer elects to market its good through distributors, the latter are not, in an economic sense, competitors of the producer even though the producer also markets some of its goods itself; rather, the distributors are agents of the producer, employed because the producer has determined that it can supply its goods to consumers more efficiently by using distributors than it can by marketing them entirely by itself.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN58 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, to prove a conspiracy violation under rule of reason analysis, plaintiffs must show that defendants' activities caused an injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

HN59 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

A key element of any rule of reason analysis is a definition of the appropriate product and geographic markets.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN60 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Failure to define a legally cognizable market is usually fatal to a conspiracy claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN61[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Courts generally employ the cross-elasticity method of determining relevant product markets. Under this method, a product market is defined as the product at issue and all other commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN62[] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A single product brand generally cannot constitute a relevant market, even if that product bears a trademark.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN63[] Relevant Market, Product Market Definition

Generally, in order to define a relevant market under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must refer to the lack of product interchangeability.

Counsel: For MARY CHAWLA, STEPHEN A BOYER, HERMAN SCIENEAUX, KRISHANA SYAL, JOHN S PLATTS, NICK FRANTZESKAKIS, LAURA DIMAKOPOULOS, JACK J VARCADOS, KEN PEACOCK, MICHAEL G GRIVON, GEORGE VARCADOS, ISHAN ABDEL KHALIQ, THEOFILOS PAPAVASILIOU, FIVOS KAZILAS, JOHN MOROS, RAFAT N NEMRY, NAIM N NEMRY, HANNA KOBORSI, DIONYSSIOS MOUSTAKIS, MOSHE SHUMLAK, MARK AMBROZIAK, BRUCE J SIRCHIO, JAY PRAKASH PATEL, HASSAN A KHALEO, HAKAM A KHALEO, MUHSEN A KHALEQ, J T MCLEMORE, SAMIH ALSHAWA, STEVE DAOUD, STEVE KOUMOULOS, ABBOTT KHORDAJI, CARLOS DIAZ, KELLY GRAYSON, MARK CUMMING, TOM ZEBIS, MOHAMMED SALEEM KHATANI, ADAM KHORDAJI, MAGED M ABUZAID, DIAMANDI GRANNOUPOULOS, RIGOBERTO F SUAZO, GEORGE [2] EZANIDIS, RASHID MUSA, MUSTAFA RASOOL, MOHAMMED M BEHRANG, HUNG VO, A TONY EZANIDIS, GHANEM AKSHAR, NICK C ARGYRIOU, MICHAEL D PEARLMAN, GEORGE B PEREZOUS, JOHN A ORR, LLOYD CORSO, KIRIT C PATEL, ECONOMIDES INC, BRIAN D PORTER, plaintiffs: Michael L O'Brien, Attorney at Law, Bruce B Kemp, George M Fleming, Fleming & Associates, Russell Todd Abney, Fleming Hovenkamp & Grayson, Houston, TX.

For LOLA KERNAN, JOSEPH R EISERLOH, plaintiffs: Michael L O'Brien, Attorney at Law, Russell Todd Abney, Fleming Hovenkamp & Grayson, George M Fleming, Fleming & Associates, Houston, TX.

For MARY CHAWLA, LOLA KERNAN, JOSEPH R EISERLOH, STEPHEN A BOYER, HERMAN SCIENEAUX, KRISHANA SYAL, JOHN S PLATTS, NICK FRANTZESKAKIS, LAURA DIMAKOPOULOS, JACK J VARCADOS, KEN PEACOCK, MICHAEL G GRIVON, GEORGE VARCADOS, ISHAN ABDEL KHALIQ, THEOFILOS PAPAVASILIOU, FIVOS KAZILAS, JOHN MOROS, RAFAT N NEMRY, NAIM A NEMRY, HANNA KOBORSI, DIONYSSIOS MOUSTAKIS, MOSHE SHUMLAK, MARK AMBROZIAK, BRUCE J SIRCHIO, JAY PRAKASH PATEL, HASSAN A KHALEO, HAKAM A KHALEO, MUHSEN A KHALEQ, J T MCLEMORE, SAMIH ALSHAWA, STEVE DAOUD, STEVE KOUMOULOS, ABBOTT KHORDAJI, CARLOS DIAZ, KELLY GRAYSON, MARK CUMMING, TOM ZEBIS, MOHAMMED SALEEM KHATANI, ADAM KHORDAJI, MAGED M ABUZAID, DIAMANDI GRANNOUPOULOS, RIGOBERTO F SUAZO, GEORGE [2] EZANIDIS, RASHID MUSA, MUSTAFA RASOOL, MOHAMMED M BEHRANG, HUNG VO, A TONY EZANIDIS, GHANEM AKSHAR, NICK C ARGYRIOU, MICHAEL D PEARLMAN, GEORGE B PEREZOUS, JOHN A ORR, LLOYD CORSO, KIRIT C PATEL, ECONOMIDES INC, BRIAN D PORTER, plaintiffs: Michael L O'Brien, Attorney at Law, Bruce B Kemp, George M Fleming, Fleming & Associates, Russell Todd Abney, Fleming Hovenkamp & Grayson, Houston, TX.

CUMMING, TOM ZEBIS, MOHAMMED SALEEM [3] KHATANI, MAGED M ABUZAID, DIAMANDI GRANNOUPOULOS, RIGOBERTO F SUAZO, GEORGE EZANIDIS, RASHID MUSA, MUSTAFA RASOOL, MOHAMMED M BEHRANG, HUNG VO, A TONY EZANIDIS, GHANEM AKSHAR, NICK C ARGYRIOU, MICHAEL D PEARLMAN, GEORGE B PEREZOUS, JOHN A ORR, LLOYD CORSO, KIRIT C PATEL, ECONOMIDES INC, BRIAN D PORTER, plaintiffs: Jonathan S Massey, Attorney at Law, Washington, DC.

For SHELL OIL COMPANY, MOTIVA ENTERPRISES LLC, EQUILON ENTERPRISES L L C, defendants: J Gregory Copeland, J Michael Baldwin, Baker & Botts, Houston, TX.

Judges: NANCY F. ATLAS, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: NANCY F. ATLAS

Opinion

[*629] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Pending before the Court are the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Tying, Price Discrimination, and Fraud Counts of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint ("Defendants' Motion") [Doc. # 11] and Defendants' Supplemental Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Conspiracy Count [Doc. # 46]. The parties have fully briefed the issues.¹ The Court has considered all the parties' submissions, all matters of record, and the applicable authorities, and concludes that Defendants' Motion should be granted in part and denied in part, and the Defendants' Supplemental Motion [4] should be granted.

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Defendants in this case manufacture and distribute Shell brand gasoline. Defendants distribute this gasoline to consumers through three different channels. First, Defendants directly own and operate retail stations, otherwise known as "company-owned stations" or "Shell-owned stations." Second, Defendants sell their fuel to wholesale "jobbers," who supply it to Shell-brand stations owned either by the jobber ("jobber stations") or other individuals under a contractual relationship with [5] the jobber ("open dealers").² Third, Defendants [*630] own or lease certain real estate and then lease or sub-lease the property to independent business persons who become Shell brand "dealers," known as "lessee-dealers," who operate and run "lessee-dealer stations."

[6] Plaintiffs in this case consist of seventy-three individuals who, directly or indirectly, are lessee-dealers that now operate or have operated Shell-brand gasoline stations. Each Plaintiff has a contractual relationship contained in a standard "Dealer Agreement," whereby the lessee-dealer agrees to sell exclusively Shell brand gasoline through the gas station.³

¹ See Memorandum in Support of Plaintiff's Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss ("Plaintiffs' Response") [Doc. # 22]; Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Supplemental Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Conspiracy Count [Doc. # 51]; Reply by Shell Oil Company to Plaintiffs' Opposition ("Defendants' Reply") [Doc. # 26]; Defendants' Reply to Plaintiffs' Opposition to Defendants' Supplemental Motion to Dismiss ("Defendants' Supplemental Reply") [Doc. # 53].

² The term "jobber stations," as defined by Plaintiffs in the First Amended Complaint, at 10, P 85, is the definition the Court uses throughout this opinion; Plaintiffs are expected to use this definition in the future in this case. The reference to "retail jobber stations" in Count III (see id. at 22, P 155), is construed to mean "jobber stations" as defined in P 85. Specifically, "jobber stations" are stations owned and supplied by jobbers. Defendants supply these jobbers with Shell brand gasoline in bulk wholesale transactions. These jobbers and jobber stations therefore are different from Plaintiffs, who also obtain their gasoline directly from Defendants but lease their stations from Defendants and do not distribute to any other dealers. See id. at 10, P 85.

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' actions have violated federal antitrust laws, as well as state fraud, tort, and contract laws. In their First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs assert ten causes of action. First, Plaintiffs allege an illegal tying arrangement in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count I), and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14 (Count II), challenging Defendants' "pay at the pump" program whereby Defendants require Plaintiffs to enable retail consumers to pay for gasoline at the gasoline pump [7] by using equipment and services mandated by Defendants. Plaintiffs also allege that Defendants have engaged in illegal price discrimination between Plaintiffs and the jobbers with whom they compete in violation of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act amendment to § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a) (Count III). Plaintiffs also contend that Defendants' actions concerning the relative price charged to Plaintiffs and their retail competitors constitute a conspiracy affecting interstate commerce in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count IV). Plaintiffs also allege that Defendants fraudulently induced the Plaintiffs to enter into the Dealer Agreements or other agreements with Defendants (Count V). Last, Plaintiffs allege five other state law claims arising from the parties' business relationship.⁴ Defendants do not address Counts VI through X in their Motions. The claims in issue in the pending motions are described below in greater detail.

[8] A. Counts I and II: Alleged Illegal Tying Arrangement in Violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act

Plaintiffs challenge Defendants' "pay at the pump" program. Plaintiffs claim they are being coerced by Defendants to lease "Island Card Readers" ("ICRs") and to agree to utilize the bank chosen by Defendants to process the associated credit card transactions. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 17, PP 125, 127. ICRs are the credit card readers placed on the gasoline pumps which allow customers to "pay at the pump." The ICRs are separate from the credit card machines operated by Plaintiffs inside their stations or convenience stores. Id. at 16, P 124. The ICRs are operated in connection with banks selected by Defendants to process the transactions. Id. at 17, P 127. Thus, the ICRs and Defendants' chosen bank operate together as one credit card processing system. In addition, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' tying scheme was imposed on "most--if not all--Plaintiffs" only after Plaintiffs signed their Dealer Agreement. Id. at 16, P 124.

Plaintiffs complain first about being required to lease ICRs and pay a monthly fee based on [9] the number of ICRs at each station. Id. at 17-18, P 130. Second, Plaintiffs complain that Defendants' fee is higher than the fee allegedly available if Plaintiffs were allowed to obtain the ICRs from another source. Id. at 17, P 127. Third, as to the requirement that they use the bank chosen by Defendants to process ICR-related credit card transactions, Plaintiffs claim they could obtain less expensive [*631] financing elsewhere. Id. at 18, P 131.

Plaintiffs allege in Count I that Defendants' "practice of coercing Plaintiffs to agree to lease ICRs and forcing Plaintiffs to agree to utilize only Shell's chosen bank to process [these] credit card transactions" creates an illegal tying arrangement in violation of the Sherman Act, § 1. In this tying arrangement, the tying products are Shell brand gasoline and the Shell trademark, and the tied product is Defendants' selected bank for processing of transactions. Id. at 19, P 138. Plaintiffs alternatively contend that "Shell's practice of coercing Plaintiffs to effectuate gasoline sales through ICRs and forcing [the use of] only Shell's chosen bank to process [these] credit card transactions" is another illegal tying arrangement. [10] Id. at 19, P 139. Plaintiffs generally allege these tying arrangements affect interstate commerce, because all Shell brand lessee-dealers are required to abide by the same arrangements. Id. at 19-20, PP 139, 140. Plaintiffs allege that this tying arrangement harms both lessee-dealers and consumers. Plaintiffs contend that Shell gasoline has unique additives and there is no alternative for consumers of Defendants' gasoline. See Id. at 19, P 139. Defendants' tying arrangement thus harms consumers who bear the burden when the increased costs of Defendants' ICR policy is passed on to the consumer in higher priced Shell brand gasoline. Id. at 20, PP 139, 142. Plaintiffs deduce that Defendants thus have leverage power in "its branded gasoline and trademark" over Shell dealers because, from the independent lessee-dealers' perspective, there is no alternative to Shell gasoline. Id. at 20, P 141.

³ Plaintiffs each sue on their own; there are no class action allegations.

⁴ Specifically, Plaintiffs allege tortious interference (Count VI), breach of contract (Counts VII and VIII), breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing (Count IX), and unfair competition (Count X).

In Count II, Plaintiffs allege that the tying product is "Shell's unique branded gasoline product, in which Shell has market power, and the tied product is ICRs which travel in commerce. Id. at 21, P 147. Plaintiffs claim "Shell makes future sales of its branded gasoline contingent [11] upon Plaintiffs' use of Shell's ICRs." Id. at 21, P 148. Plaintiffs add that Shell has leverage power in its branded gasoline over independent Shell dealers, because from the independent Shell lessee-dealers' perspective, there is no alternative to Shell branded gasoline." Id. at 21, P 149. Plaintiffs add that "this harms the ultimate consumer who must endure higher prices to get unique Shell gasoline product . . . because the costs to Plaintiffs are increased. Id. at 21, P 150.

The net effect, Plaintiffs allege in Counts I and II, is that the "tying arrangement is forcing Plaintiffs out of business, as they lose money if they accept the higher lease amount without passing the increase on to their customers, or they lose money by making fewer sales as customers frequent competing Shell gasoline stations which have lower gasoline prices and which are not restrained by Shell's illegal tying arrangements." Id. at 20-21, P 145; at 22, P 153.

B. Count III: Price Discrimination in Violation of the Robinson-Patman Act

Plaintiffs allege that "beginning at least in 1995 and continuing to the present, Shell has engaged in the practice of giving jobbers a substantial [12] and preferential discount on the price of Shell gasoline." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 14, P 111. Jobbers purchase Shell brand gasoline from the Shell terminal at a predetermined "rack price." Id. The independent lessee-dealers, on the other hand, purchase Shell gasoline directly from Shell at a "dealer tank wagon" ("DTW") price, which is greater than Shell's rack price. Id. These jobbers, Plaintiffs allege, sell this gasoline to jobber stations at a discounted price, which is lower than the price Shell charges Plaintiffs' stations. Id. at 14, P 112. Plaintiffs allege that the difference constitutes a discriminatory sale within the meaning of the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act amendment to § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). Id. at 23, P 161. Plaintiffs further allege that these discriminatory pricing practices have caused the "substantial lessening of competition" in the retail gasoline market as [632] between Plaintiffs and Defendants' "favored buyers." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 23, P 159. Plaintiffs claim impairment of their "ability to compete with Shell jobbers at the retail level . . . resulting in [13] lost sales and profits, as well as other damages, including being forced out of the Shell-branded gasoline market." Id. at 23, P 160.

C. Count IV: Violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act

In Count IV, the last federal law claim, Plaintiffs contend the Defendants have conspired with unspecified jobbers to keep Plaintiffs from purchasing fuel at competitive wholesale prices. Plaintiffs' factual allegations regarding price discrimination are essentially the same as those outlined above in Count III of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. See Id. at 23-34, PP 163-165. In Count IV, however, Plaintiffs explicitly allege that the "relevant product market" is "Shell-branded gasoline." According to Plaintiffs, this product "is unique and defines its own relevant market due to the patented additives" included in this gasoline and due to Defendants' branded "credit cards that allow consumers holding those cards to charge gasoline at Shell stations." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 24, P 166. Plaintiffs alternatively argue that the "relevant product market for this cause of action is Shell-branded gasoline from the perspective of independent Shell lessee-dealers." Id. [14] at 24, P 167.

Plaintiffs then argue that the entire continental United States constitutes the relevant geographical market for their relevant product, Shell brand gasoline. Id. at 24, P 168. Plaintiffs allege that "other relevant geographic markets, or sub-markets, for this cause of action are the geographic markets of each of the individual Plaintiffs' stations . . ." Id. 5

⁵ Plaintiffs also allege that Defendants have "occupied a substantial share of the market and have demonstrated an ability to unreasonably control and unreasonably influence prices available to the consuming public for Shell-branded gasoline." Id. at 24,

Plaintiffs complain that Defendants have "sought to obtain or maintain monopoly market power within the U.S. Shell-branded gasoline market as well as each sub-market" (Id. at [15] 25, P 171), and have "used [their] market power to engage in discriminatory pricing of Shell-branded gasoline and to breach its duties owed to Plaintiffs under [their] contracts with Plaintiffs to quash competition and force independent dealers out of the Shell-brand gasoline market." Id. at 25, PP 172, 177. Plaintiffs in conclusory fashion allege that Defendants' conduct has "injured the relevant Shell-branded gasoline markets and each plaintiff" (Id. at 25, P 170), and have "unreasonably restrained trade in an anti-competitive manner" (Id. at 25, P 173). Plaintiffs further contend that Defendants' officers and agents have "conspired" or "acted in concert and have entered into agreements with Plaintiffs, which restrain trade in an anti-competitive manner" (Id. at 25, P 175), and have conspired with jobbers to restrain trade (Id. at 25, P 176). Plaintiffs' counsel, in oral argument, stated that they assert a horizontal boycott of the lessee-dealers by Shell and the jobbers and, as such, they allege a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

D. Count V: Fraudulent Inducement

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants failed to disclose several material [16] facts ⁶ which, if [*633] disclosed, would have resulted in the lessee-dealers not entering into relationships with the Defendants. See id. at 26, P 182. Plaintiffs claim Defendants either knew the assertions were false when made or that they were made recklessly without knowledge of the truth. Id. at 26-27, P 182. In addition, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants intended for Plaintiffs to rely on the misrepresentations to their detriment. As a result, Plaintiffs were fraudulently induced to sign the agreements that now govern Plaintiffs' relationships with Defendants. Id.

[17] Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' allegations are merely conclusory and do not satisfy the heightened pleading requirement for fraud allegations. HN1[] Fraudulent allegations must be pleaded with particularity in accordance with FED. R. CIV. P. 9\(b\). Defendants note that no specific Plaintiff has alleged what misrepresentations were made to him or her, or specify how any misrepresentation was relied upon by Plaintiff to his or her detriment. Defendants state the purpose of the particularity requirement is to avoid meritless complaints. Defendants claim Plaintiffs' allegations ignore this requirement and therefore the First Amended Complaint should be dismissed.

At the Court's September 17, 1999, pre-trial conference, Plaintiffs did not dispute the lack of specifics as to each Plaintiff but requested time to gather the necessary information. The Court orally ruled that Plaintiffs' fraud claim was insufficiently specific and therefore was legally insufficient as to each separate Plaintiff. Rather than require re-pleading in the complaint per se, the Court directed Defendants to serve interrogatories to which each Plaintiff must respond; these interrogatories are to elicit the necessary [18] details as to each Plaintiff's fraud claims, standing, and other matters. On reflection, and in light of other rulings on Defendants' motions, the Court now concludes that Plaintiffs shall be required to file a second amended complaint with an appendix that addresses the claims of each Plaintiff separately, including inter alia the particulars of his or her fraud claim. The Court will address the sufficiency of the fraud claims when and if challenged by summary judgment motion at a later date.

E. Plaintiffs Other State Law Claims

Plaintiffs also allege claims of tortious interference with a contract, breach of contract, breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing and unfair competition. Defendants have not filed motions concerning these claims and issues concerning their sufficiency are not currently before the Court.

P 169. Moreover, allegedly, "Shell uses its market power to illegally manipulate its contractual relationships with Plaintiffs, thereby preventing competition in the relevant market." Id.

⁶ Examples of the allegedly false statements or material omissions, material facts are (1) that lessee-dealers would be allowed to operate as independent business persons able to set up their own "pool margins"; (2) allowing lessee-dealers to purchase Defendants brand of their gasoline from sources other than Shell at a discount; (3) allowing Plaintiffs to seek their own financing for ICRs with lower processing fees than those of Defendants; (4) failing to inform Plaintiffs "that they would be competing with jobbers/OD's and Shell owned and operated stores who can purchase Shell gasoline at wholesale prices while requiring Plaintiffs to purchase the same Shell gasoline at retail prices"; and (5) failing to inform Plaintiffs of the high "pre-printed rent" and/or explain how rent obligations would be calculated. See First Amended Complaint, at 26, P 182.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS FOR MOTIONS TO DISMISS

HN2⁷ Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is appropriate when, taking the facts alleged in the complaint as true, it appears certain that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); ^{19} C.C. Port, Ltd. v. Davis-Penn Mortgage Co., 61 F.3d 288, 289 (5th Cir. 1995). ⁷ HN3⁸ A court must limit its inquiry to the facts stated in the complaint and the documents either attached to or incorporated into the complaint; however, courts may also consider matters of which they may take judicial notice. Lovelace v. Software Spectrum, Inc., 78 F.3d 1015, 1017-18 (5th Cir. 1996). "In HN4⁹ antitrust cases in particular, the Supreme Court has stated that 'dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.'" George Haug Co. v. Rolls Royce Motor Cars, Inc., 148 F.3d 136, 139 (2d Cir. 1998) (quoting Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976)). "Nonetheless, 'it is not . . . proper to assume that the [plaintiff] can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the antitrust laws in ways that have not been alleged.'" Id. (quoting Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983)). ^{20}

III. DISCUSSION

A. Illegal Tying Arrangements

1. Summary

Plaintiffs allege that, in order to continue to supply Shell gasoline to Plaintiffs, Defendants illegally (i) require the use of ICRs, (ii) require the use of Defendants' specified ICRs, and (iii) require the use of Defendants' specified credit processing services for ICR transactions, all of which impose added ^{21} costs on Plaintiffs (collectively, the "ICR policy"). Plaintiffs consistently allege that the tying products are Shell gasoline and the Shell trademark, and the tied products are Defendants' selected ICRs and/or credit processing services. See Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, at 19-20, PP 138, 139. The ICR policy, Plaintiffs argue, violates both § 1 of the Sherman Act (Count I) and § 3 of the Clayton Act (Count II).

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not alleged all of the necessary elements for an illegal tying claim. First, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs cannot show that Defendants have market power in the tying product, which Defendants contend is gasoline generally. Implicitly, Defendants contend that the "relevant market" is branded gasoline, rather than Shell brand gasoline. Second, Defendants emphasize that relationships arising from the Dealer Agreements at issue in this case do not create market power recognized under the antitrust law. Rather, Defendants contend they have contractual power over Plaintiffs. Last, Defendants contend that Plaintiffs have failed to allege an unreasonable restraint of competition in the tied product.

Plaintiffs respond to Defendants' ^{22} Motion by contending that they have alleged all the necessary elements of an illegal tying agreement. First, Plaintiffs contend that "Shell-branded gasoline" constitutes the relevant market. Plaintiffs support this contention first by arguing that Shell gasoline, a product protected by the Shell trademark, is a unique product for which consumers are willing to pay a higher price than other gasoline. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 19, P 139. ⁸ Alternatively, Plaintiffs argue that the individual lessee-dealers are "locked in" by the ICR policy. Plaintiffs point out that they were unaware of Defendants' plan to use ICRs when they entered into their Dealer Agreements, which by their nature are long term agreements. Id. at 16, P 124.

⁷ The Supreme Court has indicated that HN5⁹ in factually complex antitrust cases, district courts may require that facts be pleaded with reasonable particularity in order to permit an inference that a federal antitrust claim is cognizable. See Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526 n.17, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983) (finding that in a factually complex antitrust case, "a district court must retain the power to insist upon some specificity in the pleading before allowing a potentially massive factual controversy to proceed.").

[23] Plaintiffs complain that Defendants' ICR policy invokes antitrust liability under the Supreme Court's rule announced in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 ("Kodak") (1992). Last, Plaintiffs state generally that, if not [635] coerced by Defendants' tying arrangement, Plaintiffs would choose less expensive ICRs and processing services with more favorable rates. See e.g., Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 20, P 143. Plaintiffs contend they have sufficiently alleged an anti-competitive effect on the tied market.

The Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to state a legally cognizable claim of illegal tying. As to the alleged injury to Plaintiffs' lessee-dealers, the Court concludes that the tying arrangement arises from contractual provisions contained in Defendants' Dealer Agreement, and the Kodak doctrine is not applicable. Furthermore, the Court holds that Plaintiffs have failed to allege any anti-competitive effect on the market for the tied products, ICRs and related credit card processing services. As to the alleged injury to the retail gasoline consumers, the Court concludes that, [24] as a matter of law, Shell gasoline is not a legally cognizable "relevant market." Therefore, Plaintiffs have not alleged that Defendants have market power in the tying product, and cannot state a claim under either the Sherman or Clayton Acts. The Court last concludes that, as to the retail gasoline consumers, Plaintiffs have failed to allege either an anti-competitive effect on the tied market or an illegal tie.

2. Legal Standards Governing Tying Arrangements

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' ICR policy is an illegal tying arrangement. HN6 A "tying arrangement" is one under which "a seller agrees to sell one product (the 'tying product') only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a second product (the 'tied product')," Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. v. Diversified Packaging Corp., 549 F.2d 368, 373 (5th Cir. 1977), or that the seller sells the tying product only on the condition that the buyer "agrees that he will not purchase the product from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak Co., 504 U.S. at 461 (citation omitted). Thus, Defendants' ICR policy is a tie under federal law.

However, HN7 not every tying arrangement is illegal. See Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 11, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). [25] "Such an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying product market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462 (citation omitted). HN8 To show that a tying agreement is illegal, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the tie is either per se illegal or invalid under the rule of reason. See 9 PHILLIP E. AREEDA, ANTITRUST LAW § 1719a (1991) ("AREEDA"). HN9 To establish per se illegality, a plaintiff must show:

- (1) two separate products (as opposed to components of a single product);
- (2) that are tied together or the customers are coerced into buying;
- (3) the supplier possesses substantial economic power over the tying product;
- (4) the tie has an anti-competitive effect on the tied market; and
- (5) the tie affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce.

⁸ Plaintiffs appear to acknowledge that the case involves only branded gasoline, see Transcript of September 24, 1999 Conference, at 18-19. This concession is appropriate since it is clear that unbranded gasoline is a materially different product. See C.E. Services, Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241, 1246 (5th Cir. 1985) (quoting Brown Shoe v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1523-24, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)) (recognizing that "within [a] broad market, well-defined subdivisions may exist which . . . constitute product markets for antitrust purposes")).

United Farmers Agents Ass'n, Inc. v. Farmers Ins. Exchange, 89 F.3d 233, 236 n.2 (5th Cir. 1996) ("United Farmers") (citing AREEDA, § 1702; Kodak, 504 U.S. at 461-62; Hyde, 466 U.S. at 11-28). HN10[] If a plaintiff [26] is unable to satisfy this test, the plaintiff nevertheless may be able to show that a tying arrangement is invalid under the "rule of reason." Id. Under this latter approach, a plaintiff has the burden of demonstrating that "the tying arrangement 'unreasonably restrained competition.'" 89 F.3d at 236 n.2 (citing Hyde, 466 U.S. at 29).⁹

[*636] HN11[] A key element in most antitrust claims is ultimate harm to consumers. See Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 441 (3rd Cir. 1997) (Scirica, J.) ("Queen City Pizza") (recognizing that "the purpose of the Sherman Act is not to protect businesses from the working of the market; it is to protect the public from the failure of the market"); United Farmers, 89 F.3d at 236 [27] (rejecting plaintiff's antitrust claim because it "has nothing to do with . . . ultimate consumers . . ."); Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1382 (5th Cir. 1994) ("The antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors. Ultimately, the consumer is the beneficiary.").

3. Lessee-Dealers as Consumers

Plaintiff's Allegations.-- HN12[] To analyze a tying claim, the relevant product market for both the tying and tied products must be identified. See Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 479 (3rd Cir. 1992) ("To determine the existence of market power for purposes of the 'per se' test, then, we must first define the relevant tying product market"); Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 441 (holding that plaintiffs had failed to adequately allege a tied product market).

Plaintiffs' definitions of the relevant products and markets for Plaintiffs as consumers vary slightly in Counts I and II. As to the tying product and markets, Plaintiffs variously allege that Shell gasoline and the associated Shell trademark are the tying products and argue that the relevant market [28] is retail gasoline sales to the public, i.e. individual retail consumers, either in a national market or in the locale of each individual dealership. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 20, P 142; at 21, P 150. Plaintiffs also complain that in order to obtain continued supply of Shell gasoline, the necessary product for their Shell dealerships, Plaintiffs are locked in to the ICR policy, and have high costs of switching to a new product.¹⁰ See, e.g., id. at 9-10, P 84; at 17, P 128 ("All facts indicate that . . . Shell requires dealers to agree to use the single Shell-approved bank as a condition for continued purchase of Shell-branded gasoline and the use of the Shell trademark."); at 19-20, PP 131, 138, 139, 141; at 21, PP 147, 148, 149. These allegations are surrogates for the theory that Plaintiffs' Shell dealerships (the right to obtain Shell gasoline and use Shell's trademark) established by the Dealer Agreement are the relevant tying products for Plaintiffs as the consumers in issue. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 19, P 138; at 21, P 141; at 21-22, PP 148, 149, 152, 153.

[29] Plaintiffs allege various theories as to the tied products under Defendants' ICR policy. In Counts I and II Plaintiffs allege that the tied product is the ICRs per se, since Plaintiffs are required to make monthly payments to Defendants for this equipment which Defendants allegedly require. See First Amended Complaint, at 17, P 128; at 20, P 138; at 21, P 147. Plaintiffs also allege in Count I that the tied product is the bank credit card processing services which Defendants select and require in connection with all ICR transactions. See id. at 20, PP 139, 140.

⁹ Because of its inquiry into market power, this test is actually "located between a per se and a rule of reason inquiry." See Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corporation, 28 F.3d 1379, 1382 (5th Cir. 1994).

¹⁰ Plaintiffs' claim under this theory is exactly the same as the claim at issue in Ajir v. Exxon Corp., 1995 WL 429234 (N.D. Cal. 1995). In Ajir, independent Exxon dealers brought suit against the manufacturer Exxon alleging that Exxon illegally tied the use of Exxon-owned tanks, lines, and equipment to the purchase of Exxon brand gasoline. Id. at *4. The district court in that case found that the relevant market in that case was the market for gasoline franchises. Id. at *5; see also Wilson v. Mobil Oil Corp., 940 F. Supp. 944, 950 (E.D. La. 1996) (relevant market was fast lube franchises); Collins v. Int'l Dairy Queen, Inc., 939 F. Supp. 875, 880 (M.D. Ga. 1996) (relevant market was soft-serve ice cream franchises).

Sufficiency Under Tying Doctrines Generally.-- Plaintiffs' allegations are insufficient to state a tying claim in which the Shell trademark and right to receive gasoline are the tying products. Plaintiffs have not alleged that Defendants have [*637] market power in the gasoline trademark/franchise market generally. Nor do Plaintiffs allege that other gasoline franchises or branded gasoline are now or ever were available to them from other gasoline suppliers (e.g., Texaco, Mobil or Chevron) without similar constraints. Nor do Plaintiffs allege that selling a different brand of gasoline would cost [30] them less in general, or cost them less specifically because they could use different ICRs, could obtain different credit processing services, or could avoid ICRs at all.

Effect of Contractual Relationships on Antitrust Analysis.-- Plaintiffs complain as to the ICR policy that Defendants' "tying arrangement is forcing Plaintiffs out of business" because Plaintiffs are "locked in" to the ICR policy in order to continue their supply of Shell gasoline. See id. at 19-21, PP 138-153. Plaintiffs and Defendants entered into Dealer Agreements which establish contractual relationships akin to a franchisee/franchisor relationship. As a result of this contract, Plaintiffs are obligated to purchase only Shell gasoline.

The "lock in" theory, insofar as Plaintiffs allege harm to themselves, rests entirely on the Supreme Court's opinion in Kodak.¹¹ Plaintiffs contend that the Supreme Court in Kodak held that antitrust liability may exist when the purchasers of a unique product demonstrate that they are "locked in" to buying tied products. In Kodak, the seller, Eastman Kodak Co., sold both complex copiers (and other expensive equipment), as well as aftermarket parts [31] and repair services. 504 U.S. at 457. All the equipment and parts were unique to Kodak and could not be "interchanged with other manufacturers' goods." Id. at 456-57. In the early 1980s, independent entities ("independent service organizations" ("ISOs")) began to provide aftermarket repair services for Kodak equipment. The ISOs purchased parts both from Kodak and independent original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs"). In 1985 and 1986, Kodak instituted several policies in an attempt to destroy the ISOs. Id. at 458. First, Kodak agreed to sell its replacement parts only to those owners of its equipment who used Kodak repair services. Id. Second, Kodak entered into agreements with the OEMs to limit sales of aftermarket parts to the ISOs. Id. As a result, the cost of aftermarket servicing and repairs rose considerably. Id.

[32] The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff ISOs stated a viable Sherman Act § 1 claim in their allegations that Kodak's tie of aftermarket servicing and repairs to the purchase of Kodak equipment was illegal. 504 U.S. at 477.¹² The Supreme Court held that the ISOs § 1 claim could go to a jury even though defendant Kodak did not have market power over the tying product, complex copiers. The Court reasoned that the purchaser of a new Kodak copier in effect was "locked in" to the purchase of Kodak's unique replacement parts market, over which Kodak had a [*638] 100% monopoly. Through its total control of the replacement parts, Kodak had the power to manipulate the market for repair services of its copiers. Id. at 465. The Supreme Court thus held that plaintiffs had met their summary judgment burden to raise a fact question. The Court then addressed an alternative argument by Kodak, that it lacked market power in the copier market (an alternative tying product). The Court held that the lack of power in the tying product market was not dispositive of the tying claim because its prices for after-market goods were limited by the competitive market for the original equipment; Kodak contended [33] that the increase in profits it could earn from higher prices in the after-markets for parts and service "would be offset by a corresponding loss in profits from lower equipment sales as consumers began purchasing equipment with more attractive service costs."

¹¹ Plaintiffs do not make a serious attempt to make typical tying claim allegations, which include contentions about "cross-elasticity of demand between a given product and its substitutes." United Farmers, 89 F.3d at 235, n.3 (citing PHILLIP E. AREEDA & DONALD F. TURNER; ANTITRUST LAW P 519a (1991)).

¹² The Kodak opinion had two discrete segments that addressed different theories of liability by the plaintiffs as to whether Kodak possessed sufficient market power in the tying market to sustain a Sherman Act § 1 claim. These segments form alternative bases for the Court's ultimate holding that summary judgment should not have been granted in favor of defendant Kodak. Under the first theory, the tying products were the unique replacement parts for the previously purchased Kodak copiers and the tied product was repair services for the Kodak copiers. Id. at 462-63, 464-65. In the second theory, the Supreme Court addressed Kodak's argument that the Kodak copiers, expensive items that were not easily replaceable, were the tying products and the tied product again was the repair service. The Court rejected Kodak's contention that the § 1 claim should fail because the company lacked appreciable market power in the copier equipment market. Id. at 465-79.

Id. at 465-66. The Supreme Court rejected this argument because, at the time of the consumer's original equipment purchase, the consumer did not have the information necessary to determine the ultimate cost of the tying good, the purchase price of the complicated copiers plus all maintenance costs (service and repairs) over the life of that equipment. Id. at 476. In addition, the Court noted that evidence established that the cost of the ultimate consumer switching the tying product (the copiers) after the initial purchase was prohibitively high. Id. at 477. Thus, the Court held that it was possible that Kodak's attempt to increase overall profits by tying its monopolistic control of aftermarket parts and services to sales of its equipment could constitute an illegal tie, and that the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of Kodak was improper. Id. at 477-79.

[34] This Court concludes that the Kodak "lock in" theory does not govern Plaintiffs' tying claims in the case at bar. There are material distinctions between the circumstances of a Kodak copier purchaser and Plaintiff lessee-dealers in the instant case. In Kodak, there was no long term contractual relationship between the copier purchaser and Kodak. Rather, provision of repair services or parts was an independent transaction between the copier owner (the consumer) and the supplier of the repair services; customers of Kodak equipment did not enter into any contractual obligation to purchase aftermarket service and parts from Kodak. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 457-58. Indeed, the absence of a required service agreement with Kodak had provided the opportunity to the ISOs to thrive for years. Moreover, integral to the Court's analysis was Kodak's indisputable monopoly on the replacement parts market, one of the tying products, although the replacement parts were not included in the original copier purchase.

In contrast, Plaintiffs at bar have pre-existing and continuing contractual relationships with Defendants. Specifically, each Plaintiff signed a detailed Dealer Agreement [35] and is obligated to comply with requirements in related documents such as the "Image Excellence Book" that establish a marketing plan prescribed by Defendants. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 11-12, PP 90-93. Plaintiffs are "locked in" to Defendants' ICR policy because of their supply contracts and contractual marketing requirements. It is these agreements that dictate how Plaintiffs are to sell Shell gasoline and grant Defendants the power to dictate policy to Plaintiffs. See Hyde, 104 S. Ct. at 1565 ("There HN13[ is nothing inherently anti-competitive about packaged sales. Only if [buyers] are forced to purchase [the tied] services as a result of the [seller's] market power would the arrangement have anti-competitive consequences." (emphasis added); see also Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 441 (finding Kodak inapplicable where the plaintiffs were forced to purchase related products because of contractual requirements); see generally United Farmers, 89 F.3d 233 (5th Cir. 1996)). Plaintiffs' complaints about the ICR Policy challenge the way Defendants require their dealers (i.e., franchises) to market [*639] and sell [36] the supplier's franchised product. These allegations presume Plaintiffs have an entitlement to Shell gasoline outside the relationship created by the Dealer Agreement.

Plaintiffs arguments attack the essence of the parties' contractual relationship. Plaintiffs artificially attempt to separate the means of delivery of the Shell gasoline to retail customers from the franchise relationship. Receipt and processing of retail customers' payments for retail gasoline purchases is an integral part of a gasoline dealer's function. Plaintiffs' challenge to Defendants' ICR policy amounts to an attack on the scope of parties' franchise relationship, and thus sounds in contract, or conceivably tort, not antitrust. The relationship between Plaintiffs and Defendants here is materially different from the circumstances in Kodak and its progeny.¹³ Kodak does not resuscitate life into Plaintiffs' otherwise insufficient tying allegations.

[37] This conclusion is consistent with two circuit court rulings. First, in United Farmers, the Fifth Circuit indicated skepticism of antitrust claims arising solely from contractual relationships. In that case, the United Farmers Agents Association, Inc. ("UFAA") and insurance agents selling Farmers insurance sued Farmers, alleging that Farmers illegally tied the sale of specifically configured computers to its sale of electronic policyholder information. See United Farmers, 89 F.3d at 235. The Fifth Circuit held, in affirming a district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of Farmers, that the relevant market was insurance sales and that the UFAA did not present evidence that Farmers had market power in the insurance sales market. Id. at 237.¹⁴

¹³ Plaintiffs' theory that Shell gasoline is tied to the ICR policy arguably could be analogized to the Kodak parts/services tie; however, Plaintiffs' tying claim would not survive under this portion of the Kodak reasoning. In Kodak, the aftermarket parts (the tying product) were indisputably unique and Kodak had a monopoly in that market. Plaintiffs' contention that Shell gasoline per se (or even the Shell trademark) is a unique product lacks merit under antitrust doctrines. Neither Shell gasoline nor the Shell trademark are legally recognized unique products for antitrust purposes. See discussion infra, 75 F. Supp. 2d 626, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352 at *43-44. Plaintiff lessee-dealers are restricted to Shell gasoline and the Shell trademark because of their contractual relationships with Defendants, not because the product or trademark is unique under the law.

[38] The court of appeals in United Farmers further concluded that, even if it assumed the narrower tying product market advocated by the plaintiffs, UFAA had failed to offer any evidence concerning the supra-competitive price of the tied product, the specially configured computers. Id. The Fifth Circuit stated that:

This suit is essentially an intracompany dispute over how to run a computer system, not a valid claim under antitrust laws. HN14 Economic power derived from contractual arrangements such as franchises or in this case, the agents' contract with Farmers, has nothing to do [*640] with market power, ultimate consumers' welfare, or antitrust.

89 F.3d at 236-37 (emphasis added) (citation omitted).¹⁵

[39] The limitation that franchise agreements impose upon antitrust claims is also addressed by the Third Circuit in Queen City Pizza. In Queen City Pizza, the plaintiffs were eleven Domino's Pizza, Inc. franchisees and the International Franchise Advisory Council, Inc. (a corporation formed to protect Domino's franchisees' common interests). As franchisees of Domino's, plaintiffs were required to sign a franchise agreement which provided that Domino's "may in [Domino's] sole discretion require that ingredients, supplies, and materials . . . be purchased directly from us or from approved suppliers or distributors." 124 F.3d at 433. The plaintiffs contended that years after the inception of plaintiffs' franchise agreements, Domino's initiated policies designed to limit the plaintiffs' ability to purchase less expensive ingredients and supplies from independent sources. Id. at 434. In response to Domino's actions, plaintiffs asserted various antitrust causes of action, including a tying claim alleging that Domino's

¹⁴ Nothing in the United Farmers holding indicates that the Fifth Circuit would disagree that the relevant market in the case at bar is retail gasoline franchises generally or all branded gasoline, and not the markets as defined by Plaintiffs, the Shell trademark or Shell gasoline per se. In United Farmers, the Fifth Circuit pointed out that the plaintiffs had failed to allege that the Farmers' insurance products were unique or that consumers would pay more for that coverage. See 89 F.3d at 236. Since the plaintiffs had made no such allegations, there was no need for the court of appeals to analyze the next issue, namely, whether those allegations were legally sufficient to define a relevant market. There is no indication that the court of appeals intended to engage in this analysis. See and compare Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 479-80 \(3d Cir. 1990\). Therefore, this Court concludes that the passing comment concerning lack of evidence of uniqueness of Farmers' insurance products is not meaningful precedent or support for Plaintiffs' claims that the Shell brand gasoline or trademark is a relevant tying product or that Plaintiffs' bald allegations of uniqueness are legally sufficient.

¹⁵ The alternative holding in United Farmers also is consistent with the result reached here. The court of appeals, after rejecting the plaintiffs' proposed relevant market (electronic access to Farmers' policy information), assumed the validity of that proposed relevant market and held that Kodak did not apply. See 89 F.3d at 237. The court of appeals then decided, using for the sake of discussion the relevant product market of "electronic access," that there was insufficient evidence of Farmers' market power in the tying market because the insurance market was so competitive. Engaging in a fact specific inquiry, the court held that the plaintiffs had failed to produce evidence of meaningful price discrimination or other evidence of market power. See id. at 237.

The allegations in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint in the instant case command similar conclusions. Plaintiffs' proposed tying product relevant markets, i.e., Shell gasoline or trademark, are insufficient since a single brand of gasoline or a gasoline dealership franchise cannot constitute a relevant tying product. See infra 75 F. Supp. 2d 626, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352 at *43-44. Second, like in United Farmers, Kodak does not apply to the facts at bar. Third, the logical inference from Plaintiffs' own allegations is -- contrary to Plaintiffs' intentions -- that there is a very competitive market for branded gasoline, the primary alleged tying product. Finally, Plaintiffs have made no allegations as to the existence of other gasoline brand dealerships (the true competitors of Plaintiffs) being provided with more favorable terms vis a vis ICRs and related credit processing.

illegally required franchisees to buy supplies and ingredients as a condition of obtaining fresh dough from Domino's. *Id. at 436.*¹⁶

[40] The Third Circuit upheld the district court's Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal of plaintiffs antitrust claims. The court of appeals rejected the argument advanced by the plaintiffs that the relevant market was Domino's approved ingredients. Id. at 438. In so doing, the Third Circuit stated that "no court has defined a relevant product market with reference to the particular contractual restraints of the plaintiff." Id. (citing Mozart Co. v. Mercedes-Benz of North America, 833 F.2d 1342 \(9th Cir. 1987\)). The court of appeals explicitly found Kodak inapplicable and reiterated that the plaintiffs were involved in contractual franchise relationships with defendant: "Franchising is a bedrock of the American economy . . . we do not believe the antitrust laws were designed to erect a serious barrier to this form of business organization." Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 441. The appeals court concluded its distinction of Kodak by stating:

Unlike the plaintiffs in Kodak, plaintiffs here must purchase products from Domino's Pizza not because of Domino's market power over a unique product, but because they are bound by contract [*641] ... plaintiffs' [41] remedy, if any, is in contract, not under the antitrust laws.

Id. at 441.

The Third Circuit's rationale concerning contractual power and antitrust claims in Queen City Pizza is probative in the case at bar. Plaintiffs, by entering into their Dealer Agreements, were aware that Defendants would control the gasoline product and many aspects of the method of sales by Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs attempt to distinguish Kodak from Queen City Pizza on the grounds that the Domino's franchisee plaintiffs, unlike those in Kodak and the present case, were aware of the contractual provisions that necessitated purchase of the tied product when they entered the franchise contract. See Plaintiffs' Response, at 11 & n.5. The Court is unpersuaded. The Third Circuit squarely held that franchise agreements do not give rise to antitrust liability. Any discussion of the knowledge of the franchisees in Queen City Pizza is ancillary to this main point. Moreover, the ties in issue in Queen City Pizza were imposed after the parties had entered into the initial franchise agreements. See Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 434.

¹⁷

[42] As stated in United Farmers, "economic power derived from contractual arrangements such as franchisees . . . has nothing to do with market power, ultimate consumers' welfare, or antitrust." See United Farmers, 89 F.3d at 236-237. The only reason that Shell gasoline is "unique" for the Plaintiffs (lessee-dealers) is that they have contracted to sell Shell gasoline. Plaintiffs' tying claim complaining of injury to Plaintiffs as lessee-dealers therefore does not fit within the wrongs antitrust laws were designed to address.¹⁸

In summary, the Court holds that, in the case at bar, Plaintiffs' allegations [43] are insufficient to escape the constraints of the Dealer Agreements, Plaintiffs' voluntary contractual arrangements with Defendants.

¹⁶ The franchise contract did not specifically mandate that the plaintiffs purchase the "dough" from Domino's. Rather, defendant Domino's required the plaintiff franchisees to purchase various other ingredients. The plaintiffs contended that Domino's allegedly increased prices of items it controlled and thus rendered unprofitable plaintiffs' efforts to save costs by making their own dough.

¹⁷ There is one district court case in this circuit that has declined to apply the rationale of Queen City Pizza. See Wilson v. Mobil Oil Corp., 940 F. Supp. 944, 950 \(E.D. La. 1996\). Responding to the defendant's claims that Kodak was inapplicable in the franchise context, the district court rejected the Queen City Pizza district court's holding, 922 F. Supp. 1055 \(E.D. Pa. 1996\), held that Kodak was applicable in a franchise situation, and that there was no "principled distinction . . . between the franchise context and the durable equipment market involved in Kodak." Wilson, 940 F. Supp. at 950. This Court respectfully disagrees with the conclusions in Wilson.

¹⁸ There is a dearth of appellate analysis on the limits of Kodak or the effect of franchise agreements to antitrust claims. Plaintiffs have not proffered legal authorities that support their theories in light of longstanding antitrust principles. See Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 15-16, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551; Town Sound and Custom Tops, 959 F.2d 468 at 475; Breaux Brothers, 21 F.3d 83 at 86.

Lack of Allegations of Lessening of Competition in Tied Product's Market.-- Kodak also fails to assist Plaintiffs because Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint does not allege that Defendants' tying arrangement had an anti-competitive effect on the ICR market or the market for bank processing services of ICR transactions. Thus, Plaintiffs fail as a matter of law to allege an illegal tying claim. Kodak eliminates the need to plead market power in the tying product, but does not excuse failure of a plaintiff to allege an effect on competition in the tied product's market.

Examples of Plaintiffs' allegations are that "as a result of Shell's mandates regarding ICR financing, Plaintiffs have been forced to pay a higher lease amount for the ICR machines than they would have incurred had they been able to purchase them outright or lease them from another party." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 22, P 151. See also id. at 18, PP 130, 131. Plaintiffs in their Response state that "in the absence of a tie, plaintiffs would have selected [44] different banks with more favorable rates." Plaintiffs' Response, at 12. These allegations are legally insufficient.

Indeed, Plaintiffs' allegations have the unintended consequence of demonstrating [*642] that the markets for ICRs and credit card processing services have not been affected by Defendants' ICR policy. Plaintiffs believe they could find comparable ICR products and services at a lower price from third party sources. Plaintiffs thus indicate that the market for those products and services experiences competition. Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to allege an anti-competitive effect on the markets for the tied products.

5. Retail Consumers of Shell Gasoline

Insufficient Allegations Concerning Tying Product Market.-- Plaintiffs allege a second illegal tying theory: they allege that Defendants' policies harm retail gasoline purchasers, the ultimate gasoline consumer. In this context, Plaintiffs contend that the tying product is Shell gasoline.

"Market HN15[¹⁵] power is a necessary prerequisite to an illegal tie." See United Farmers, 89 F.3d at 235. HN16[¹⁶] In order to show market power, a plaintiff first must define the relevant market. [45] While the exact contours of the relevant market depend upon factual determinations, the antitrust plaintiff in a tying claim at a minimum must allege a relevant market. See Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 436 (there is no "per se prohibition against dismissal of antitrust claims for failure to plead a relevant market under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\)"). HN17[¹⁷] A key in determining the relevant market includes an analysis of the cross-elasticity of demand for the product in question and all of its potential substitutes. In other words, "the outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Id. (quoting Brown Shoe Co., 370 U.S. at 325).

Plaintiffs' allegations as to the retail gasoline consumer fail as a matter of law for two reasons. First, the only tying product as to which Plaintiffs plead a relevant market in which Shell has market power is Shell gasoline, which Plaintiffs allege is "unique" because of "special patented additives in which Shell has market power." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 19, P 139; at [46] 21, P 147. Plaintiffs claim that Defendants' actions "harm[] the ultimate consumer who must endure higher prices to get the unique Shell gasoline product." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 20, P 142; at 21, P150. In addition, Plaintiffs allege that the tying product is "Shell's trademark." Id. at 19, PP 138, 139.

Plaintiffs' definition of the tying product market makes no reference to cross-elasticity of demand. Plaintiffs' allegations amount only to the contention that consumers may prefer Shell brand gasoline. Plaintiffs do not allege that there are no close substitutes for Shell gasoline. HN18[¹⁸] A single product, rarely constitutes a market for antitrust purposes, even if that product is a trademarked product. See Town Sounds and Custom Tops, Inc., 959 F.2d at 479. In Town Sounds the Third Circuit held that "a HN19[¹⁹] prestigious trademark is not itself persuasive evidence of economic power because a trademark, unlike a patent, protects only the name or symbol and not the product itself." Id. In response to an attempt to define the relevant market in terms of a single trademarked product, the Seventh Circuit stated that:

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *642L¹999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 46

Not even the most zealous [47] antitrust hawk has ever argued that Amoco gasoline, Mobil gasoline, and Shell gasoline are three separate product markets, yet that absurd result would follow if we recognized Olympian trademarked generator sets as a separate market in this case.

Generac Corp. v. Caterpillar Inc., 172 F.3d 971, 977 \(7th Cir. 1999\).

Therefore, the Court concludes with respect to the retail consumer theory that Plaintiff has failed to plead a legally viable relevant market or to plead that Defendants possessed market power over a viable relevant product market.

No Effect on Tied Market.-- Plaintiffs' tying claim of alleged harm to retail consumers [*643] also is insufficient because Plaintiffs fail to allege that Defendants' ICR policy creates an adverse effect on a retail consumer market for any tied product. Plaintiffs, as noted above, do not make allegations concerning impact on the markets for ICRs and credit processing services.

Even if Plaintiffs alleged a legally cognizable market from the retail gasoline consumers' perspective, their theory fails since Plaintiffs do not allege that there is a tied product or any tying agreement as to these consumers. The Supreme [48] Court has stated that HN20 a tying arrangement must link "two distinct markets for products that [are] distinguishable in the eyes of buyers." Hyde, 466 U.S. at 20. HN21 There can be no tying arrangement unless there is a "distinct demand" for the tied product. See Collins v. Associated Pathologists, Ltd., 844 F.2d 473, 477 \(7th Cir. 1988\). One indicator of this distinct demand for the tied product is whether consumers make specific requests for it. Id. Plaintiffs have not alleged --and cannot allege -- that there is a distinct demand among retail gasoline buyers for a particular brand of ICR or for a certain bank's processing services separate from the gasoline purchase. Potential choices in ICRs or credit processing services are apparent only to the dealers.

Indeed, Plaintiffs' own allegations imply that for the gasoline consumer, there is only one product, Shell gasoline. Plaintiffs allege that the price of that gasoline is the dispositive factor for the retail consumer. Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 20, P 142; at 20-21, P 145; at 22, P 153. From the consumer's perspective, the tying product, gasoline, and the tied products, ICRs [49] and related credit processing services, are offered in the same transaction. Plaintiffs have not alleged that gasoline consumers make (or seek to make) a separate choice as to which ICR or related credit service to use. See Roy B. Taylor Sales, 28 F.3d at 1384 ("a foreclosure of choice to an ultimate consumer appears to be the principal key to a tie that is illegal per se").¹⁹

[50] The Court thus concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a per se unlawful tying arrangement for either Plaintiffs as the consumers, or for Plaintiffs' retail consumers. Therefore, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' per se illegal tying claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act in Count I of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint should be granted.

6. Rule of Reason Analysis on Tying Claims

HN23 Claims that do not state a per se violation are analyzed under the rule of reason. See United Farmers, 89 F.3d at 236 n.2 (citing Hyde, 466 U.S. at 29). Using a rule of reason analysis, this Court reaches the same conclusion as set forth above on the per se analysis; Plaintiffs have failed to state a viable tying claim.

HN24 In a case involving the rule of reason, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendants' behavior "unreasonably restrained competition" (See Hyde, 466 U.S. at 29), or "suppresses competition" (Nat'l Society of Prof'l Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 \(1978\)). In a tying case, the rule of reason test requires an additional "inquiry into the actual effect of the tying [51] arrangement] on competition in the market for the tied good." Breaux Brothers Farms Inc. v. Teche Sugar Co., 21 F.3d 83, 88 \(5th Cir. 1994\) (citing [Hyde, \[*644\] 466 U.S. at 29](#)). As explained in the foregoing analysis, Plaintiffs have not alleged any effect on the market for ICRs and credit processing services. Therefore, the Court concludes that under a rule of reason analysis, Plaintiffs have failed to state an illegal tying claim under the Sherman Act § 1.

¹⁹ Plaintiffs may attempt to bolster their contention that there is an unlawful tie because the two products (gasoline and ICR services) are offered together and therefore the consumer is induced to use them together for convenience. This argument however is futile. HN22 Offering convenience to the consumer does not demonstrate an unreasonable restraint on competition. See Roy B. Taylor Sales, 28 F.3d at 1385 (citing Hyde, 466 U.S. at 29-30) ("The fact that consumers might buy goods because of a convenience created by a tie does not suffice as evidence of an unreasonable restraint on competition.").

7. Clayton Act § 3 Analysis

Defendants' Motion seeks dismissal of Plaintiffs' Clayton Act § 3 tying claim alleged in Count II of their First Amended Complaint. Plaintiffs allege in Count II that § 3 is violated by the ICR policy generally, but they focus more specifically on the requirement that Plaintiffs lease ICRs of Defendants' choice. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 21-22, PP 147, 148, 151.²⁰ Plaintiffs allege that although Defendants may not produce the ICRs in question, they lease the ICRs "to Plaintiffs at inflated monthly fees." Plaintiffs Response at 14. Plaintiffs have not responded to the Motion with any briefing pertaining to § 3.

[\[52\]](#) The Clayton Act § 3 provides in pertinent part:

It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

15 U.S.C. § 14 (emphasis added). HN26 Clayton Act [§ 3 applies only when both the tying and tied products are goods. See Marts v. Xerox, 77 F.3d 1109, 1113 n.6 \(8th Cir. 1996\); Crossland v. Canteen Corp., 711 F.2d 714, 719 n.1 \(5th Cir. 1983\). Tying arrangements that involve services are not governed by § 3. See Advance Business Sys. and Supply Co. v. SCM Corp., 415 F.2d 55, 61 \(4th Cir. 1969\).

Plaintiffs [\[53\]](#) attempt to fit within the Clayton Act § 3 rubric by contending that the tied "goods" are Defendants' selection of ICRs. As a practical matter, however, the required lease of Defendants' choice of ICRs is part and parcel of the "pay at the pump" service that is mandated by Defendants for the retail customers at Shell gasoline stations. ICRs are merely the means to implement the credit purchases in issue. Indeed, Plaintiffs in Count II re-allege all prior allegations in the First Amended Complaint, and then state first and foremost that "Shell's practice of coercing Plaintiffs to agree to lease ICRs and forcing Plaintiffs to agree to utilize only Shell's chosen bank to process credit card transactions constitutes an illegal tying arrangement as is prohibited by § 3 of the Clayton Act." Id. at 21, P 147. When read in context, Plaintiffs' tying claim in Count II thus involves the coerced use of services, not merely the purchase or lease of goods. Plaintiffs' Count II tying claim is therefore outside the scope of the Clayton Act § 3.

In any event, analysis of the sufficiency of the pleadings under the Clayton Act § 3 is virtually the same as under § 1 of the Sherman Act. See [\[54\]](#) Southern Card & Novelty, Inc. v. Lawson Mardon Label, Inc., 138 F.3d 869 \(11th Cir. 1998\) ("As our predecessor court made clear, the two statutory theories of liability are substantively synonymous." (citing Bob Maxfield, Inc. v. American Motors Corp., 637 F.2d 1033, 1037 \(5th Cir. Unit A 1981\))). Thus, to the extent the tied product in Plaintiffs' Count [\[*645\]](#) II tying claim involves "goods" and therefore properly is governed by the Clayton Act § 3, the Court nevertheless concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to state a legally cognizable claim for the same reasons set forth above in regard to the Sherman Act § 1 tying claim.

²⁰ Except for isolated words, such as Plaintiffs' defining the tied product as ICRs, id. at 21, P 147, Plaintiffs' Clayton Act § 3 claim parrots Count I, their Sherman Act § 1, claim, which defines the tied product in part as the Defendants' mandated credit processing services.

Since Plaintiffs have failed to allege a viable illegal tying claim under either possible theory, Counts I and II of Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint must be dismissed.

B. Robinson-Patman Act Illegal Price Discrimination

Plaintiffs also allege that Defendants have engaged in illegal price discrimination under § 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\) (collectively, the "Robinson-Patman Act").²¹ [\[56\]](#) To establish a violation of the Robinson-Patman [\[55\]](#) Act, each Plaintiff must prove the following four elements:

- (1) that one or more of Defendants' sales of gasoline in issue as to that Plaintiff was made in interstate commerce;
- (2) that the gasoline supplied by Defendants directly or through jobbers to stations competing with the particular Plaintiff was of the same grade and quality as the gasoline sold to that Plaintiff;
- (3) that Defendants discriminated in price as between the identified jobber (or other competing buyer) and the Plaintiff in issue, and
- (4) that the discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition.

See Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 555, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990); 15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\). In addition, to recover damages, a Plaintiff must prove the extent of his actual injuries. *Id.*²²

Defendants basically contend that Plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claims fail because Plaintiffs' purchases of Shell gasoline do not take place "in commerce." Shell gasoline sold to each Plaintiff, Defendants argue, is produced in the same state in which that Plaintiff is located. The Court will address Plaintiffs' various responsive arguments in turn.

1. Interstate Commerce Requirement

Legal Standards [\[57\]](#) Governing Interstate Commerce Element-- Analysis of these arguments in context is necessary. HN29[↑] The Robinson-Patman Act has a stringent interstate commerce requirement. See McCallum v. City of Athens, Ga., 976 F.2d 649, 657-58 (11th Cir. 1992) (adopting the Fifth Circuit standards); Littlejohn v.

²¹ These claims allege violations of § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, which provides:

HN27[↑] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States . . . where the effect of such competition may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injury, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

15 U.S.C. § 13\(a\).

²² Plaintiffs argue that this is a "secondary-line" Robinson-Patman Act claim. "In HN28[↑] order to establish secondary-line price discrimination under section 2(a), a plaintiff has the burden of establishing four facts: (1) that seller's sales were made in interstate commerce; (2) that the seller discriminated in price as between the two purchasers; (3) that the product or commodity sold to the competing purchasers was of the same grade and quality; and (4) that the price discrimination had a prohibited effect on competition." George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 141(citing Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 556, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990)).

Shell Oil Co., 483 F.2d 1140, 1144 (5th Cir. 1973) (en banc) ("The language of the act -- requiring discriminatory sales be 'in commerce' -- is far narrower in scope than [*646] the 'effect on commerce' test applicable under the Sherman Antitrust Act."); Cliff Food Stores, Inc. v. Kroger, Inc., 417 F.2d 203, 208 (5th Cir. 1969) (same); Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. FTC, 348 F.2d 674 (5th Cir. 1965). HN30[¹⁸] Sales that merely "affect" interstate commerce do not meet the Robinson-Patman Act "in commerce" standard. See Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 195, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392 (1974) ("The jurisdictional requirements of [the Robinson-Patman Act] cannot be satisfied merely by showing that allegedly anti-competitive acquisitions and activities affect commerce.").

HN31[¹⁹] In contrast with the [*58] Sherman Act, in which Congress exercised "the utmost extent of its Constitutional power in restraining trust and monopoly agreements," United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533, 558, 64 S. Ct. 1162, 1176, 88 L. Ed. 1440 (1944), "the distinct 'in commerce' language of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Act[s] . . . denote[] only persons or activities within the flow of interstate commerce -- the practical, economic continuity in the generation of goods and services for interstate markets and their transport and distribution to the consumer," Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 195, 95 S. Ct. 392, 398, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378 (1974). HN32[²⁰] Claims under the Robinson-Patman Act must be predicated on the occurrence of an interstate sale of the relevant commodity. See S & M Materials Co. v. Southern Stone Co., 612 F.2d 198, 200 (5th Cir. 1980) ("the cases establish that the state of being 'in commerce' under § 2(a) [of the Clayton Act] requires physical movement of the relevant product across a state line") (emphasis added).

McCallum, 976 F.2d at 655-56 (footnote omitted); accord, [*59] Godfrey v. Pulitzer Publishing Co., 161 F.3d 1137, 1141 (8th Cir. 1998); Littlejohn, 483 F.2d at 1142, 1143-44; Bacon v. Texaco, Inc., 503 F.2d 946 (5th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 420 U.S. 1005, 43 L. Ed. 2d 763, 95 S. Ct. 1447 (1975); Scranton Construction Co. v. Litton Indus. Leasing Corp., 494 F.2d 778 (5th Cir. 1974).

Interstate Commerce Analysis.-- Defendants' argument is founded on the factual assertion that the gasoline each Plaintiff resells at its retail stations is manufactured in the same state in which that Plaintiff is located. The Court is restricted to a review of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. See Lovelace, 78 F.3d at 1017-18. None of the seventy-three Plaintiffs in this case has pleaded with specificity a source of supply of gasoline. Nor has any Plaintiff identified the jobber or other Shell gasoline station with which that Plaintiff competes, which that Plaintiff contends receives discriminatory gasoline prices from Defendants. The Court previously has directed Plaintiffs to address these factual matters through Defendants' interrogatories authorized [*60] by the Court at its pretrial conferences.

Nevertheless, since the parties have fully briefed their legal positions on the Robinson-Patman Act's jurisdictional "in commerce" element and this issue is a threshold matter, the Court will analyze the legal standards in light of the pending allegations.

The foregoing standards dictate that Plaintiffs who live in the same state in which Defendants refine the gasoline supplied to both those Plaintiffs and to the jobbers or others whom Plaintiffs contend receive favored pricing do not have a viable Robinson-Patman Act claim because they cannot meet the jurisdictional interstate commerce element.²³ These Plaintiffs, in recognition of this problem, assert several theories in an attempt to salvage their Robinson-Patman Act claims. The Court will address these arguments in turn.

[*61] [*647] Plaintiffs first contest Defendants' jurisdictional argument by contending that all Plaintiffs, regardless of their wholesale suppliers' locations, satisfy the interstate commerce element because Plaintiffs sell Shell gasoline to retail customers whose vehicles thereafter travel across state lines.²⁴ HN62[²⁵] This argument is rejected.

²³ Defendants do not dispute that the Robinson-Patman Act's "in commerce" requirement is met for a Plaintiff that purchases wholesale gasoline from a supplier located in a different state from that Plaintiff.

²⁴ Plaintiffs allege that:

Shell's sale of gasoline to jobbers and lessee-dealers occur "in commerce," or in the "uninterrupted flow of commerce" as the product, gasoline, crosses state lines either before arriving at the seller's location, or after leaving the buyer.

HN33[] Retail goods delivered from out of state to an in-state buyer who then re-sells the goods to retail customers generally "cease to be in the flow of interstate commerce" when the goods reach the in-state retailer. *Cliff Food Stores, Inc., 417 F.2d at 209.*²⁵ Plaintiffs' argument concerning Plaintiffs gasoline sales to retail customers therefore cannot satisfy the "in commerce" requirement of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Plaintiffs' "retail sales" jurisdictional argument fails also because the retail sales by Plaintiffs to consumers are not the transactions that Plaintiffs claim are discriminatory. The Fifth Circuit has held that "under HN35[] the terms of section 13(a) [of the Robinson-Patman Act] . . . at least one of the sales alleged to be discriminatory must actually be in interstate commerce." Cliff Food Stores, Inc. v. Kroger, Inc., 417 F.2d 203, 208 (5th Cir. 1969). [*63] In Cliff Food Stores, the court of appeals reaffirmed its observation in Hiram Walker, Inc. v. A & S Tropical, Inc., 407 F.2d 4 (5th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 901, 24 L. Ed. 2d 177, 90 S. Ct. 212 (1969),²⁶ that:

HN36[] In order to come within the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, the (plaintiff) must demonstrate that the discriminatory sales were "in commerce." . . . Thus, the Robinson-Patman Act is applicable only where the allegedly discriminatory transactions took place in interstate commerce. That is, ". . . at least one of the two transactions which, when compared, generate a discrimination must cross a state line."

Cliff Food Stores, Inc., 417 F.2d at 208-09. Plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claims center wholly on discriminatory wholesale sales by Defendants. In order to satisfy the jurisdictional requirement of the Robinson-Patman Act, Plaintiffs must allege an interstate wholesale sale of gasoline. Plaintiffs have not done so. Plaintiffs' attempt to satisfy the interstate commerce element of their Robinson-Patman Act claim by referring to Plaintiffs' own retail sales is futile.

[64] Plaintiffs secondarily attempt to satisfy the "in commerce" requirement by arguing that the additives in Shell gasoline travel through interstate commerce prior to being blended into Defendants' gasoline.²⁷ [*65] This argument ignores the Fifth Circuit's longstanding rule that HN37[] the mere interstate transportation of ingredients used to make a product that is sold intrastate does not satisfy the jurisdictional requirements of the Robinson-Patman Act. See *Bacon v. I*6481 Texaco, Inc., 503 F.2d 946, 948 (5th Cir. 1974)* (in a case where the sales of gasoline were in issue, the interstate movement of crude oil prior to being refined into the gasoline was held insufficient)²⁸; Scranton Construction Co., Inc. v. Litton Industries Leasing Corp.. 494 F.2d 778 (5th Cir. 1974)

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 10, P 86 (emphasis added).

²⁵ The Fifth Circuit noted that there are limited exceptions to this rule. HN34[] Retail goods remain part of the flow of commerce in only three situations:

- (1) The goods are purchased upon the order of a customer with the definite intention that the goods are to go at once to the customer;
- (2) The goods are purchased by the retailer to meet the needs of a specified customer pursuant to some understanding with the customer; and
- (3) The goods are purchased by the retailer based on the anticipated needs of a specific customer.

Cliff Food Stores, Inc., 417 F.2d at 210. None of these exceptions are alleged to apply in this case.

²⁶ The Hiram Walker case was cited with approval by the Supreme Court in Gulf Oil Corp. v. Copp Paving Co., 419 U.S. 186, 200 & n.17, 42 L. Ed. 2d 378, 95 S. Ct. 392 (1974).

²⁷ Plaintiffs state that "the additives are made and produced throughout the United States and added to the end product during refining . . ." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 10, P 86.

²⁸ The Fifth Circuit held:

The extensive process involved in refining crude oil into gasoline results in the alteration of the nature of the product. No 'flow of commerce' ever took place as to the gasoline which is the subject of this claimed wrong. Therefore, the prior travels of the atoms and molecules of crude oil from which it came are not determinative of the inter- versus intra-state nature of the end product refined therefrom.

(holding that the "interstate movement of mere ingredients" does not suffice to satisfy the "in commerce" requirement); accord McCallum, 976 F.2d at 657-58.

Plaintiffs' "ingredients" interstate commerce argument also fails because Plaintiffs focus on the wrong transactions. As discussed above, each Plaintiff, to state a legally viable claim, must allege that one of the discriminatory wholesale transactions involving refined Shell gasoline was in interstate commerce. See, e.g., Cliff Food Stores, Inc., 417 F.2d at 208.

Last, Plaintiffs vaguely assert that Defendants' interstate promotions and advertising of Shell gasoline satisfies the "in commerce" requirement. See Plaintiffs' Response, at 16. This argument is rejected for several reasons. [66] First, there is no such allegation in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint.²⁹ Even if Plaintiffs had included such an allegation in their First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs cite no case law for the proposition that interstate advertising and promotion somehow convert an intrastate sale of gasoline to an interstate transaction.

[67] Plaintiffs' reliance on Shreveport Macaroni Mfg. Co., v. Fed'l Trade Comm'n, 321 F.2d 404 \(5th Cir. 1963\), is misplaced. In that case, the Fifth Circuit held that the acts of advertising or promotion were part of the discrimination in issue (which actually were advertising or promotion allowances to two customers) and the allowances themselves were "in commerce." The court of appeals noted that the allowance payments could be said to have been derivative of the interstate sales. Id. at 408-09 (citing and discussing ROWE, PRICE DISCRIMINATION UNDER THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT (1962), at 393). See generally McCallum, 976 F.2d at 655-56 (footnote omitted); Littlejohn, 483 F.2d at 1142, 1143-44; Bacon, 503 F.2d at 948. In contrast, Plaintiffs at bar complain of Defendants' wholesale distribution practices. Therefore, Defendants' advertising efforts vis a vis retail sales of Shell gasoline are irrelevant to Plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claim.

Interstate Commerce Conclusion.-- Since the legal standards are clear, the Court directs the parties to apply this ruling in good faith to each Plaintiff's [68] claims as soon as the necessary factual information is available to the parties through the early discovery authorized by the Court. Plaintiffs presumably will agree to dismissal of individuals who do not meet the jurisdictional requirement. Disputes as to any particular Plaintiff's standing in connection with these jurisdictional principles will be resolved by the Court through a summary judgment motion by Defendants or at trial.

[*649] 2. Lessening of Competition Element of Plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Claim

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not, and cannot, allege a substantial lessening of competition in the gasoline market and, therefore, Plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claim must fail. Defendants' Motion, at 18 (citing M.C. Manufacturing Co. v. Texas Foundries, Inc., 517 F.2d 1059, 1066 \(5th Cir. 1975\), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 968, 47 L. Ed. 2d 736, 96 S. Ct. 1466 (1076); Oreman Sales, Inc. v. Matsushita Electric Corp., 768 F. Supp. 1174, 1184 \(E.D. La. 1991\). Defendants assert -- without citation of any legal authority or explicit reasoning -- that "Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint . . . is fatally defective because plaintiffs [69] have not, indeed cannot, allege facts which would show that Shell's sale of gasoline to 'jobbers' at a lower price than to plaintiffs has or is likely to have a substantial anti-competitive impact on the sale of gasoline to the public. . . . The most that plaintiffs' Section 2(a) claim alleges is that plaintiffs have been injured, not that there has been injury to competition." Defendants' Motion,

Bacon, 503 F.2d at 948.

²⁹ Plaintiffs refer to Defendants' advertising only in passing in their "Background Facts" allegations:

Consumers are generally willing to pay more for Shell brand gasoline because of Shell's image as conveyed through Shell's advertising campaigns and by the overall appearance of Shell-branded stations as well as Shell's purported superior gasoline product which includes Shell's additive package thereby creating a Shell gasoline market.

First Amended Complaint, at 11, P 88. Plaintiffs merely assert baldly in their Response that "interstate promotions and advertising demonstrate that Shell views the relevant markets as interstate in nature." Plaintiffs' Response, at 16. This allegations is not fleshed out and the Court can only surmise its meaning.

at 18-19. Defendants further assert that Plaintiffs' allegations demonstrate that the sale of gasoline is a "fiercely competitive business." *Id. at 19.*³⁰ Defendants' argument appears to be that Plaintiffs (independent retail gas stations who receive deliveries of gasoline directly from Defendants) are in a functionally different position (i.e., on a different level in the chain of distribution) from the jobbers (distributors/wholesalers) that Defendants supply with gasoline in bulk, and therefore any harm to Plaintiffs caused by Defendants' lower prices to the jobbers does not injure competition since Plaintiffs do not compete with the jobbers at the wholesale level of distribution.

[70] Analysis of the adequacy of the lessening of competition issue necessitates an understanding of the elements of a Robinson-Patman Act claim and a review of recent Supreme Court and appellate authority that has altered the legal landscape for these claims.

Legal Standards Applicable to Robinson-Patman Act Claims.-- It has been said that HN38[] the primary purpose of the Robinson-Patman Act is to protect the competitive process, not individual competitors. E.g., Black Gold, Ltd. v. Rockwool Indus., Inc., 729 F.2d 676, 680 (10th Cir. 1984).

HN39[] There are three types of violations actionable under the Robinson-Patman Act. See Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. 543, 558 n.15, 110 L. Ed. 2d 492, 110 S. Ct. 2535 (1990); Godfrey v. Pulitzer Publishing Co., 161 F.3d 1137, 1139 (8th Cir. 1998) (citing Best Brands Beverage, Inc. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 842 F.2d 578, 584 n.1 (2nd Cir. 1987)); George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 141 n.2 (citations omitted). First, in a "primary-line" case, the plaintiff must show that the defendant's price discrimination adversely affects the defendant's competition with its own [71] competitors.³¹ Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. at 558 n.15; Godfrey, 161 F.3d at 1139. In a "secondary-line" case, the plaintiff may demonstrate that the defendant's price discrimination injures competition among the defendant's customers, presumably, the plaintiff's competitors. Id. Finally, a "tertiary" or "third line" violation occurs when the "probable impact of the [price] discrimination . . . [is] on the customers of either of [the favored or disfavored buyers]." See Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. at 558 n.15.³²

[72] [*650] As a prerequisite to establishing "competitive injury" in a secondary-line price discrimination case, a plaintiff must prove that "it was engaged in actual competition with the favored purchaser(s) as of the time of the price differential." George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 141 (quoting Best Brands Beverage, Inc. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 842 F.2d 578, 584 (2d Cir. 1987)).

The Supreme Court issued a significant ruling in Texaco Inc. v. Hasbrouck in 1990 to clarify what constitutes "actual competition" under the Robinson-Patman Act in secondary-line cases.³³ [74] The Hasbrouck Court ruled that the ³⁰ Defendants appear to assume that "customers" in this context refer only to the purchasing public. This assumption appears unduly limited for reasons stated elsewhere. In summary, Plaintiffs also allege that they are "customers" under particular antitrust theories.

³¹ In the case at bar, to allege a primary-line violation, Plaintiffs would have to allege that Defendants' conduct harmed other producers of branded gasoline. Id. Plaintiffs do not do so.

³² HN40[] A third or tertiary-line violation was explained by the Eighth Circuit as follows: "Although the purchasers of the discriminating seller do not compete directly, their customers compete within a unified market region." Godfrey, 161 F.3d at 1139; see generally George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 141 n.2.

HN41[]

³³ Hasbrouck involved facts similar to those at bar and thus is instructive in considering Plaintiffs' secondary-line claim. In Hasbrouck, Texaco sold gasoline to two distributors, Gull Oil Company ("Gull") and Dompier Oil Company ("Dompier"). 496 U.S. at 549. Originally, Gull purchased gasoline at a lowest rate, because it sold unbranded Texaco gas under its own company label through various named stations. Dompier also received gasoline at a discounted price from Texaco, although not as low as Gull. Dompier re-sold its gasoline under the Texaco name. Id. at 549. Both Gull and Dompier picked up Texaco's product at the Texaco bulk plant and delivered directly to retail outlets. Id. at 550. Hasbrouck sold Texaco brand gasoline. The stations supplied by Dompier regularly sold at lower retail prices than independent stations supplied by Texaco directly, such as Hasbrouck. Id. at 550. Dompier later entered the retail gasoline business, allegedly at Texaco's urging. Id. The plaintiffs in notion that a seller's functional discounts (a discount to a particular category of buyer) are per se lawful is not tenable. See 496 U.S. at 563³⁴; George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 141-42. HN42[] The existence of functional competition between competitors who may, at first blush, seem to compete on different levels [*651] is determined through a factual inquiry rather than a blanket legal rule. See George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 141-42 (citing FTC v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 390 U.S. 341, 349, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1222, 88 S. Ct. 904 \(1968\)) (discussing [73] § 2(d) of the Robinson-Patman Act, which has been interpreted similarly to § 2(a)).

[75] Since Hasbrouck, HN44[] a Robinson-Patman Act plaintiff must allege, and eventually prove, that either it competed on the same functional level (i.e., as a wholesaler or retailer) with the allegedly favored buyer of the defendant's product or, if competing on a different functional level from the allegedly favored buyer(s), the plaintiff must prove that putative "functional discounts" offered by the defendant to the latter were in fact subterfuges to avoid the Robinson-Patman Act restrictions.³⁵ See George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 142.

[76] In addition, HN45[] a Robinson-Patman Act plaintiff must allege facts that "demonstrate a reasonable possibility that competition has been harmed as a result of the price differential." Id. (citing Falls City Indus. v. Vanco Beverage, Inc., 460 U.S. 428, 434-35, 75 L. Ed. 2d 174, 103 S. Ct. 1282 \(1986\), and Corn Products Refining

Hasbrouck were twelve independent Texaco retailers, who displayed the Texaco trademark, bought their gasoline directly from Texaco, and took delivery of their gasoline directly from Texaco. Id. at 548. Texaco always charged a higher price to the plaintiffs than it charged to Gull or Dompier. See id.

The independent retail dealers brought a Robinson-Patman Act suit. Texaco defended its pricing by arguing that the wholesalers, Gull and Dompier, deserved lower prices because they rendered services to Texaco, i.e., they earned "functional discounts." The Supreme Court analyzed "functional discounts" and ultimately affirmed the Ninth Circuit's endorsement of the district court's judgment based on a jury's finding that Texaco's differential pricing was illegal. The Supreme Court stated that:

HN43[] The [Robinson-Patman] Act contains no express reference to functional discounts. It does contain two affirmative defenses that provide protection for two categories of discounts -- those that are justified by savings in the seller's cost of manufacture, delivery, or sale, and those that represent a good faith response to the equally low prices of a competitor.

Id. at 555-56 (footnotes omitted). The Court held that neither of these defenses was available to Texaco on the factual record before it. Id.

³⁴ The Supreme Court adopted the explanation of the legal status of functional discounts set forth in the Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 208 (1955). See Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. at 560-61. The Committee's explanation in pertinent part was:

The Committee recommends, therefore, that suppliers granting functional discounts either to single-function or to integrated buyers should not be held responsible for any consequences of their customers' pricing tactics. . . . The price cutting of a customer who receives this type of differential results from his own independent decision to lower price and operate at a lower profit margin per unit. The legality or illegality of this price cutting must be judged by the usual legal tests. In any event, consequent injury or lack of injury should not be the supplier's legal concern.

On the other hand, the law should tolerate no subterfuge. For instance, where a wholesaler-retailer buys only part of his goods as a wholesaler, he must not claim a functional discount on all. Only to the extent that a buyer actually performs certain functions, assuming all the risk, investment, and costs involved, should he legally qualify for a functional discount. Hence a distributor should be eligible for a discount corresponding to any part of the function he actually performs on that part of the goods for which he performs it.

Id. (quoting Report, at 208) (footnotes omitted).

³⁵ Prior to Hasbrouck, the Second Circuit had held that in order to bring a secondary-line claim of price discrimination, a plaintiff must allege (and eventually show) that the defendant's price differential existed between entities competing "at the same functional level, i.e., all wholesalers or all retailers, and within the same geographic market. See Best Brands Beverage, Inc. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 842 F.2d 578, 585 \(2d Cir. 1987\). However, in Hasbrouck, the Supreme Court rejected the proposition that § 2(a) of the Clayton Act provided a safe harbor for any and all functional discounts. 496 U.S. at 563; see also George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 142.

Co. v. FTC, 324 U.S. 726, 742, 89 L. Ed. 1320, 65 S. Ct. 961 (1945)). There is a longstanding rule that "an HN46[¹] injury to competition may be inferred from evidence that some purchasers had to pay their supplier 'substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay.'" See Hasbrouck, 496 U.S. at 559 (quoting Fed'l Trade Comm'n v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46-47, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 (1948)). In the seminal case of Morton Salt Co., the Supreme Court held that "the competitive opportunities of certain merchants were injured when they had to pay respondent substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay. The findings are adequate [to support a claim of competitive harm]." Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. at 46-47 (emphasis added).

[77] The Supreme Court altered this rule for cases involving primary-line violations of the Robinson Patman Act. See Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (1993). In Brooke Group, the plaintiff, a cigarette manufacturer, alleged that the defendant's volume rebates to wholesalers of generic cigarettes "amounted to price discrimination that had a reasonable probability of injuring competition." Id. at 216-17. Plaintiff's theory in Brooke Group was that these volume discounts were nothing more than a predatory pricing scheme designed to eliminate plaintiff from the generic cigarette market. Id. at 217. In support of its claim, the plaintiff offered proof that the defendant's scheme resulted in net prices for generic cigarettes that were below average variable costs. Id. at 217.

The Supreme Court characterized the plaintiff's claim alleging harm to the seller's direct competitors to be a primary-line Robinson-Patman Act claim. Id. at 220. In affirming the district court's grant of judgment as a matter of law for the defendant after [78] a jury verdict for the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that HN47[¹] evidence of a price differential alone was insufficient to impose liability on the defendant on the primary-line price discrimination cause of action. Id. at 217. The Court reiterated its long-standing skepticism toward predatory pricing claims brought by one manufacturer against another. Id. at 227 [*652] (citing Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588-590, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) ("In Matsushita, we remarked on the general implausibility of predatory pricing."). The Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiff's price fixing claim should not have gone to the jury since the plaintiff's allegation of harm to competition depended upon "a complex chain of cause and effect" that was unsupported by the trial record. 509 U.S. at 231.

Several circuits have held that the Morton Salt inference is applicable in secondary-line price discrimination cases and limited the Brooke Group decision to primary-line cases. See George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 142-43; Chroma Lighting v. GTE Products Corp., 111 F.3d 653, 658 (9th Cir. 1997); [79] Coastal Fuels of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Caribbean Petroleum Corp., 79 F.3d 182 (1st Cir. 1996); Stelwagon Mfg. Co. v. Tarmac Roofing Systems, Inc., 63 F.3d 1267, 1271-75 (3d Cir. 1995); J.F. Feeser, Inc. v. Serv-A-Portion, Inc., 909 F.2d 1524, 1531 (3d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 921, 113 L. Ed. 2d 246, 111 S. Ct. 1313 (1991).³⁶ Defendants have not meaningfully challenged this proposition.

³⁶ The Second Circuit recently stated that in " FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 49, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 68 S. Ct. 822 (1948), a secondary-line price discrimination case, the Supreme Court determined that the Robinson-Patman Act was 'especially concerned with protecting small business' and that therefore section 2(a) 'was intended to justify a finding of injury to competition by a showing of injury to the competitor victimized by the discrimination.' (quoting S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 4)." George Haug Co., 148 F.3d at 142. The Fifth Circuit would appear to subscribe to this reasoning. In M.C. Manufacturing Co. Inc. v. Texas Foundries, Inc., 517 F.2d 1059 (5th Cir. 1975), the Fifth Circuit reversed a judgment awarded plaintiff on a secondary-line Robinson-Patman Act claim. Id. at 1061. The court of appeals held that the allegedly discriminatory sales were not made "in competition," and therefore, plaintiff's Robinson-Patman Act claim failed as a matter of law. Id. at 1066. The court went on, however, to state that:

Antitrust legislation is concerned primarily with the health of the competitive process, not with the individual competitor who must sink or swim in competitive enterprise. But as a necessary incident thereto, it is concerned with predatory price cutting which has the effect of eliminating or crippling a competitor. For surely there is no more effective means of lessening competition or creating monopolies than the debilitation of a competitor.

[80] For the reasons set forth by the Second Circuit in George Haug Co. and the cases cited therein, this Court concludes that the Fifth Circuit would follow the lead of the First, Second, Third and Ninth Circuits on this issue. The Court therefore holds that HN48³⁷ the instant Plaintiffs must allege facts to support the proposition that "competitive injury" has occurred. This pleading burden is met if a Plaintiff alleges facts that "demonstrate a reasonable possibility that a price difference may harm competition." J.F. Feeser, Inc., 909 F.2d at 1531.³⁷ "In keeping with the Act's prophylactic [*653] purpose, [designed to prevent the occurrence of price discrimination rather than to provide a remedy for its effects], section 2(a) does not require that the discrimination must in fact have harmed competition." Id. (citing Falls City Industries, 460 U.S. at 435 (quoting J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442, 101 S. Ct. 1923 \(1981\))).

[81] Analysis of Plaintiffs' Allegations-- Plaintiffs, according to their Response intend to allege a "secondary-line" Robinson-Patman Act claim. See Plaintiffs' Response, at 18.³⁸

As noted above, Plaintiffs in a secondary-line claim must allege the existence of a competitive relationship. Plaintiffs have generally alleged that Defendants have given unjustified and unlawful price differentials to Defendants' direct customers for Shell gasoline, viz., jobbers, jobber stations, and company-owned or operated stations.³⁹ Plaintiffs also generically allege that they suffer unlawful price discrimination because Defendants cannot justify a "functional

Id. at 1067-68 (quoting Atlas Building Products Co. v. Diamond Block & Gravel Co., 269 F.2d 950, 954 \(10th Cir. 1959\) (emphasis added)).

³⁷ The Court notes a superficial inconsistency between the longstanding Third Circuit rulings in J.F. Feeser, Inc., 909 F.2d at 1531, and Stelwagon Mfg. Co., 63 F.3d at 1272, on the one hand, and a recent opinion by another panel in that Circuit in Crossroads Cogeneration Corp. v. Orange & Rockland Utilities Inc., 159 F.3d 129, 141 \(3rd Cir. 1998\), on the other hand. In Crossroads Cogeneration, the panel held that to state a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act, a plaintiff must allege facts to demonstrate that (1) the defendant made at least two contemporary sales of the same commodity at different prices to different purchasers; and (2) the effect of such discrimination was to injure competition." See Crossroads Cogeneration Corp., 159 F.3d at 141. The panel stated that a plaintiff must demonstrate that "the effect of such discrimination was to injure competition," and rather than stating that the requirement was proof that there is a "reasonable possibility" that competition was harmed, as provided by Morton Salt. However, Crossroads Cogeneration does not represent the appellate panel's conscious rejection of the earlier Third Circuit rulings in J.F. Feeser, Inc. or Stelwagon Mfg. Co., that a Robinson-Patman Act claim is supportable upon proof of a substantial price discrimination between competitors over time and thus the application of Morton Salt. See, e.g., Stelwagon Mfg. Co., 63 F.3d at 1272. The Crossroads Cogeneration opinion addressed the Robinson Patman Act claim only in a cursory manner. It did not cite Stelwagon Mfg. (which gave detailed analysis to the issue of the applicability of the Brooke Group Ltd.). Indeed, Crossroads Cogeneration merely focused on the absence of any meaningful allegations by the plaintiff concerning the effect on competition.

Similarly, the Tenth Circuit's language in Black Gold, Ltd. v. Rockwool Indus., Inc., 729 F.2d 676, 680 \(10th Cir. 1984\), could be construed to conflict with the newer rulings cited in the text accompanying this footnote. However, the Tenth Circuit in Black Gold Ltd. emphasized that it had a unique circumstances before it (Id. at 681) and there was no need to address the effect on competition issues since they were not raised or implicated in the facts before that court. In any event, since the facts in Black Gold, Ltd. were materially different from those at bar, that holding is not persuasive authority in this case.

³⁸ However, HN49³⁸ allegations in a response to a motion are not sufficient to amend the complaint. See Shanahan v. City of Chicago, 82 F.3d 776, 781 \(7th Cir. 1996\). As indicated below, Plaintiffs are instructed that they must allege more precisely in a second amended complaint their theories of liability for each Plaintiff.

³⁹ Plaintiffs allege that these discriminatory pricing practices cannot be overcome and "result[] in the substantial lessening of competition in the retail gasoline market and the substantial lessening of competition between Plaintiffs and the favored buyers" in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act. Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 23, P 159. Plaintiffs contend that as a result of the discriminatory pricing, the Plaintiffs' "ability to compete with Shell jobbers at the retail level has been impaired, resulting in lost sales and profits, as well as other damages, including being forced out of the Shell-branded gasoline market." Id. at 23, P 160.

discount" [82] to the unnamed jobbers.⁴⁰ Plaintiffs thus apparently seek to attack the functional discounts that they believe Defendants grant to the jobbers who supply jobber stations or "open dealers".

[83] The Court concludes that the sweeping allegations in the Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, despite initial appearances of adequacy, do not state a claim under the Robinson-Patman Act. This is not a class action. It is a case in which seventy-three different lessee-dealers from various states have elected to proceed in a single suit. The case must be analyzed from the perspective [*654] of each Plaintiff separately. Plaintiffs have not even attempted to meet their individual pleading burden.

Since there are dozens of Plaintiffs, each must make individual allegations in order for the parties to join issue and the Court to assess the viability of any given Plaintiff's claim. Plaintiffs will be given an opportunity to amend their complaint one more time. To satisfy their pleading obligations as to the Robinson-Patman Act claim, each Plaintiff must allege facts pertaining to each of the elements of this claim. These allegations should address at a minimum:

- (i) the name and location of the source of the particular Plaintiff's Shell gasoline and, if known, the name and location of the source of gasoline acquired by the competing jobber, jobber-station, or company-owned station.
- (ii) [84] the type of Robinson-Patman Act violation that is alleged (i.e., primary, secondary, or tertiary, and whether there is a contention that Defendants use a functional discount as a subterfuge vis a vis the particular Plaintiff).
- (iii) the identity and location of the particular jobber(s) and/or other retail station(s) that received an allegedly unlawful favorable price, the approximate price that jobber received (if known), and the approximate time period of the allegedly unlawful favorable treatment,
- (iv) the geographic area in which the specific Plaintiff competes with each jobber or other station in issue as to that Plaintiff,
- (v) what or how competition has or may have been injured as a result of the price discrimination suffered by that Plaintiff, and

While notice pleading is acceptable in an antitrust case, it is important for the parties to join issue on the actual controversy, Plaintiff by Plaintiff. Plaintiffs may not achieve through generalized pleadings the benefits of a class action when no class allegations are made or appropriate.

3. Robinson-Patman Act Claim Conclusion

The Court will not dismiss the Robinson-Patman Act claim as to any [85] Plaintiff at this time. However, Plaintiffs shall file their second amended complaint on or before November 30, 1999, satisfying the foregoing pleading requirements and shall dismiss Plaintiffs who do not satisfy the jurisdictional requirement. Plaintiffs, in addition to any general allegations covering them as a group, must attach an appendix that includes -- for each Plaintiff -- the factual matters pertinent to that Plaintiff, as set forth in the preceding section of this opinion. Plaintiffs, in pleading their Robinson-Patman Act claims, may cross-reference as necessary new allegations included in their re-stated fraud and/or other causes of action as directed elsewhere in this opinion.

⁴⁰ Plaintiffs allege that the difference in price does not constitute a reasonable reimbursement for actual marketing functions performed by the jobbers. The jobbers are dual distributors, selling Shell gasoline both at the wholesale and retail levels, however, the substantially lower price given to jobbers greatly exceeds the value of the additional functions they perform. The added functions performed by the jobbers do not result in actual costs, legal risks and/or investments that would justify the deep discount enjoyed by the non-lessor retail stations.

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 15, P 119. Plaintiffs also allege that:

Shell has engaged in the practice of giving jobbers a substantial and preferential discount on the price of Shell gasoline. Shell jobbers purchase Shell gasoline at Shell terminals The rack price paid by Shell jobbers is substantially lower . . . than the dealer tank wagon ("DTW") price charge by Shell to Shell Dealers.

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 14, P 111.

Only after each Plaintiff's Robinson-Patman Act claim is set forth in the second amended complaint will the Court rule definitively on the sufficiency of the allegations as to any single Plaintiff. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Robinson-Patman Act claims therefore is granted in part and denied in part in accordance with this opinion.

C. Sherman Act § 1 Claim

1. Parties' Allegations and Contentions

In Count IV of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs [86] allege a contract, combination, and/or conspiracy affecting interstate commerce, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act.⁴¹ Plaintiffs allege that they have been forced by Defendants to pay a higher price for wholesale gasoline [*655] than certain jobbers who operate Shell brand⁴² stations and Shell-owned stations. This higher price allegedly is the result of a conspiracy between Defendants and jobbers to restrain trade in an anti-competitive manner.⁴³

[87] Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Defendants contend that Plaintiffs allege a vertical restraint on trade by a manufacturer that is governed by the rule of reason analysis. Plaintiffs' claim does not, Defendants emphasize, involve any horizontal restriction or any vertical agreement to set or maintain prices. Defendants' alleged conspiracy, therefore, is not per se unlawful. Defendants further argue that, under a rule of reason analysis, Plaintiffs have failed to define a legally cognizable product market for Plaintiffs' Sherman Act § 1 claims. Therefore, Defendants contend the Sherman Act § 1 claim must be dismissed.

2. Legal Framework

General Legal Principles.-- Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce ... is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. §

⁴¹ HN50 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1.

⁴² At the Court's September 24, 1999 hearing, counsel for Plaintiffs agreed with the Court's statement that Count IV of Plaintiffs' complaint alleged discrimination among retail sellers of Shell gasoline. See Transcript of September 24, 1999 conference [Doc. # 50], at 18-19.

⁴³ Plaintiffs allege a simple outline of a conspiracy. First, Plaintiffs allege:

Shell and certain "favored dealers" and jobbers have entered into agreements in which Shell uses discriminatory pricing practices to charge higher prices for gasoline to Plaintiffs than to these "favored" dealers and jobbers.

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 23, P 164; at 25 PP 175, 176. Plaintiffs also allege in their Amended Complaint that: "Beginning at least in 1995 and continuing to the present, Shell has engaged in the practice of giving jobbers a substantial and preferential discount on the price of Shell gasoline." Id. at 14, P 111. Plaintiffs then allege "on information and belief," that "Shell and its jobbers have entered into agreements regarding the price to be charged Plaintiffs, so as to exclude Plaintiffs from purchasing fuels at competitive wholesale prices." Id. at 23, P 165. Plaintiffs add that "jobbers consistently refuse to sell Shell branded gasoline to Plaintiffs, apparently either by agreement with Shell or upon fear of retaliation by Shell." Id. at 16, P 121. Thereafter, Plaintiffs allege that these alleged agreements between Shell and its jobbers "restrain trade in an anti-competitive manner." Id. at 25, P 176.

1. HN51 [↑] In order to state a claim for a violation of § 1, a plaintiff must allege (1) the existence of a conspiracy (2) affecting interstate commerce (3) that imposes an "unreasonable" restraint of trade. See C.G. Dillard v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner, & Smith Inc., 961 F.2d 1148, 1158 (5th Cir. 1992) [88] (citing White & White v. Am. Hosp. Supply Corp., 723 F.2d 495, 504 (6th Cir. 1983)).

HN52 [↑] There are two possible theories for a Sherman Act § 1 violation. Per se violations of § 1 involve those "agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable . . ." United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 146, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966). Per se violations are held to be illegal without any inquiry into the actual effect on the relevant market. Id.; see also Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 211, 79 S. Ct. 705, 709, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). If a violation is not per se illegal, it is analyzed according to the rule of reason. See Jayco Systems v. Savin Business Machines Corp., 777 F.2d 306, 317 (5th Cir. 1985); Red Diamond Supply, Inc. v. Liquid Carbonic Corp., 637 F.2d 1001, 1004 (5th Cir. 1981) (citing Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977)); accord Smalley & Co. v. Emerson & Cuming, Inc., 13 F.3d 366, 368 (10th Cir. 1993); [89] Illinois Corp. Travel, Inc. v. American Airlines, Inc., 889 F.2d 751, 753 (7th Cir. 1989).

HN53 [↑] In order to determine whether a particular conspiracy is illegal per se, the [*656] Court must determine whether it represents a horizontal or a vertical restraint of trade. See Red Diamond Supply, Inc., 637 F.2d at 1004. If the alleged conspiracy is horizontal, it is per se illegal and Plaintiffs need not allege market effects. Id. (citing GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. at 58 n.28). On the other hand, if the alleged conspiracy is vertical, then generally it should be analyzed under the rule of reason. Id.

HN54 [↑] There is an exception, however, to the general rule that vertical restraints be analyzed under the rule of reason. The Supreme Court has generally held that vertical restraints involving price maintenance or price levels are per se illegal. See NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 498, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998) (quoting Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988) ("vertical restraint is not illegal per se [90] unless it includes some agreement on price or price levels")); GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 52 n.18 ("we are concerned here only with nonprice vertical restrictions. The per se illegality of price restrictions has been established firmly for many years and involves significantly different questions of analysis and policy").⁴⁴

Vertical or Horizontal Restraint Analysis.-- Plaintiffs allege a conspiracy by Defendants and the jobbers to drive Plaintiffs out of the retail gasoline market [*91] through Defendants' discriminatory pricing between the jobbers and Plaintiffs.⁴⁵

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint contains no allegations of conspiratorial activity by Plaintiffs' retail competitors (jobber stations, open dealers or company-owned stations). See Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164 (3d Cir. 1979).⁴⁶ [93] Nor is there any allegation that the decisions to set allegedly discriminatory prices

⁴⁴ This per se rule does not extend to sellers' imposition of maximum prices on their distributors. See State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 118 S. Ct. 275, 282, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997) (overruling Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968), which held that vertical maximum price restrictions were per se illegal). Claims involving vertical maximum price restrictions are now analyzed under the rule of reason. 118 S. Ct. at 285.

⁴⁵ To the extent that Plaintiffs attempt to allege that agents and officers of Shell conspired with Shell, their claim fails as a matter of law. See Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 486 (5th Cir. 1984) ("a point well established in this circuit is that HN55 [↑] a corporation cannot conspire or combine with its own officers, employees, or wholly owned sales divisions and outlets in violation of section one"); accord Crosby v. Hosp. Authority of Valdosta and Lowndes, 93 F.3d 1515, 1526 (11th Cir. 1996).

⁴⁶ In Cernuto, a manufacturer of cabinets decided to discontinue its supply to plaintiff, a retail cabinet outlet (Cernuto). Id. at 165. Cernuto alleged that the manufacturers' decision was based on a request by one of its retail competitors. This competitor allegedly complained because plaintiff sold cabinets for a substantially lower price. In finding that the restraint fell under the per se rules, the Third Circuit stated that:

originated with [92] Plaintiffs' retail competitors, the jobbers or jobber stations. Plaintiffs do not allege that any of Plaintiffs' retail competitors were involved in the wholesale gasoline pricing decisions or had any agreements concerning Plaintiffs. Nor do Plaintiffs allege that jobbers have made agreements among themselves about pricing of gasoline at their retail stations. Throughout Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs refer to agreements between Shell and its "jobbers."⁴⁷ Accordingly, the Court concludes [*657] that Plaintiffs allege a vertical restraint concerning Defendants' pricing and distribution policies. Plaintiffs' claim thus must be analyzed under the rule of reason.⁴⁸

To the extent Plaintiffs also seek to allege that Defendants discriminate in price between the wholesale gasoline [94] prices offered to the company-owned stations as compared to the gasoline prices available to Plaintiffs, this too is a vertical price restraint. Plaintiffs have alleged that the Shell-owned stations must acquire the product and act as retailers. They thus indicate that there is a transfer of ownership of the gasoline between levels in the distribution chain.

Even if Plaintiffs do not intend to suggest that such a transfer occurs with respect to the company-owned dealers, the result is the same. The Fifth Circuit has held that "when the manufacturer is the source, the conspiracy is vertical," even if the manufacturer also sells directly to the consumer. Red Diamond Supply, Inc., 637 F.2d at 1004. The court of appeals stated:

HN57 When a producer elects to market its good through distributors, the latter are not, in an economic sense, competitors of the producer even though the producer also markets some of its goods itself; rather, the distributors are "agents" of the producer, employed because the producer has determined that it can supply its goods to consumers more efficiently by using distributors than it can by marketing them entirely by itself.

Id. at 1005. [95] Thus, Plaintiffs' allegations concerning Defendants' pricing to company-owned stations fall within the prior conclusion that Plaintiffs have failed to allege any horizontal conspiracy.⁴⁹

No Price-Fixing or Price Maintenance Allegations to Require Per Se Standard.-- Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts that would bring this case within the price fixing or price maintenance exception to the general rule that vertical restraints are analyzed under the rule of reason. Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint [96] does not allege a conspiracy to set prices. See Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp., 79 F.3d 1358, 1368 (3d Cir. 1996) (citing Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 724, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988)) ("The

HN56 When a manufacturer acts of its own, in pursuing its own marketing strategy, it is seeking to compete with other manufacturers by imposing what may be defended as reasonable vertical restraints However, if the action of a manufacturer or other supplier is taken at the direction of its customer, the restraint becomes primarily horizontal in nature in that one customer is seeking to suppress its competition by utilizing the power of a common supplier.

Id. at 168 (emphasis added).

⁴⁷ In fact, Plaintiffs' pleadings indicate that the pricing policy originated with Defendants, as Plaintiffs state that "jobbers consistently refuse to sell Shell brand gasoline to Plaintiffs, apparently either by agreement with Shell or upon fear of retaliation by Shell." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 16, P 121

⁴⁸ This lack of involvement by retail competitors distinguishes this case from those cases cited by Plaintiffs, Klor's and General Motors. In Klor's, the parties did not contest the fact that the boycott was brought at the suggestion of the plaintiff's retail competitor. See Klor's, 359 U.S. at 209 ("Broadway Hale [plaintiff's retail competitor] has used its 'monopolistic' buying power to bring about this situation."). Likewise, in General Motors, the competing retail dealers complained to the manufacturer about their competitor's use of discounted retail prices. See General Motors, 384 U.S. at 133.

⁴⁹ This conclusion is consistent with the maxim that "antitrust law shows more concern to protect inter rather than intrabrand competition." Bogan v. Hodgkins, 166 F.3d 509, 515 (2d Cir. 1999) (citing NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., U.S. 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 497-500, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998)). Accord Jayco Systems, Inc., 777 F.2d at 320 n.48 (finding that plaintiff failed to demonstrate an anti-competitive effect on interbrand competition).

Supreme Court has instructed that vertical restraints of trade, which do not present an express or implied agreement to set resale prices, are evaluated under the rule of reason.""). Plaintiffs, retail dealers, complain that there is an improper differential between the wholesale prices Defendants charge to jobbers as compared to the prices Defendants charge to Plaintiffs for their gasoline supply.⁵⁰ ^[97] There are no allegations ^[*658] that Defendants directly sought to influence the jobbers' resale prices or the retail price of gasoline at jobber stations.⁵¹ Plaintiffs have not alleged a claim of unlawful setting or maintaining of retail prices by a manufacturer, and therefore there is no legal basis for a per se analysis.⁵² The rule of reason must be applied in this case.

Application of the Rule of Reason.-- The Court further concludes that Plaintiffs have not made sufficient allegations to state a claim under the Sherman Act § 1 rule of reason analysis. HN58[↑] To prove a Sherman ^[98] Act § 1 conspiracy violation under rule of reason analysis, Plaintiffs must show that Defendants' activities caused an "injury to competition." See Doctor's Hosp. of Jefferson, Inc. v. Southeast Medical Alliance, Inc., 123 F.3d 301, 307 (5th Cir. 1997) (citing Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1385 (5th Cir.1994)); see also Red Diamond Supply, Inc., 637 F.2d at 1005 (holding that plaintiff must demonstrate that defendant's conduct "has an adverse effect on competition"). HN59[↑] A key element of any rule of reason analysis, therefore is a definition of the appropriate product and geographic markets. Cf. Doctor's Hosp. of Jefferson, 123 F.3d at 307.

HN60[↑] Failure to define a legally cognizable market is usually fatal to a § 1 conspiracy claim. See Bogan, 166 F.3d at 516; Jayco Systems, Inc., 777 F.2d at 320. Plaintiffs assert two theories in an effort to define a relevant product market. First, Plaintiffs argue that the relevant product market from the retail consumer's perspective is Shell gasoline. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 24, P 166. Alternatively, ^[99] Plaintiffs argue that the product market is Shell brand gasoline "from the perspective of independent Shell dealers." See id. at 24, P 167.

HN61[↑] Courts generally employ the cross-elasticity method of determining relevant product markets. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962); United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956); see also Jayco Systems, Inc., 777 F.2d at 319 (applying the Brown Shoe analysis to a § 1 conspiracy claim). Under this method, a product market is defined as the product at issue and all other "commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes." See Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 487 (5th Cir. 1984) (quoting E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 395); accord R. D. Imports Ryno Industries, Inc. v. Mazda Distributors (Gulf), Inc., 807 F.2d 1222, 1224 (5th Cir. 1987).

The Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a legally cognizable market. From the retail gasoline consumers' ^[100] perspective, HN62[↑] a single product brand generally cannot constitute a relevant market, even if that product bears a trademark. See Town Sounds and Custom Tops, 959 F.2d at 479. This is true of branded gasoline. See discussion supra 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352 at *45-47.

⁵⁰ Plaintiffs also complain in passing in their Sherman Act § 1 claim about the ICR policy. See Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 26, P 179. For this allegation to be consistent with the rest of Plaintiffs' claims in Count IV, Plaintiffs would have to allege that the retail stations with whom they compete are not saddled with this allegedly cumbersome tying agreement. Plaintiffs have not made any such allegations.

⁵¹ In fact, Plaintiffs allege that, "The jobber stations sell gasoline to the public at a lower price than the lessee-dealers can sell their gasoline because of the lower price jobber stations pay Shell for the gasoline." Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, at 14, P 112. Later, Plaintiffs state "Shell sells gasoline to the public at company-owned stations at retail prices which are at times lower than the dealers' 'break even' price." Id. at 16, P 122. If anything, the net effect of these allegations is that Defendants' scheme has resulted overall in a lowering of retail prices, not anti-competitive conduct resulting in the raising of prices.

⁵² If anything, Defendants' actions resemble an attempt to set the maximum retail price of Plaintiffs' retail competitors. Vertical agreements to set maximum prices are no longer per se illegal. See supra, note 47.

Plaintiffs' attempt to define a product market from their dealer perspective also lacks merit. HN63[↑] Generally, in order to define a relevant market under the Sherman Act § 1, a plaintiff must refer to the lack of product interchangeability. See Global Discount Travel Services, L.L.C. v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 960 F. Supp. 701, 704 I*6591 \(S.D. N.Y.1997\) ("Plaintiff's failure to define its market by reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability is, standing alone, valid grounds for dismissal."). In their First Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs argue that they cannot purchase brand name gasoline from any source other than Shell. Plaintiffs do not meaningfully allege, however, that the lack of alternatives results from the absence of close substitutes interchangeable with Shell gasoline. To the extent Plaintiffs do allege that Shell gasoline is a unique product, the uniqueness stems primarily from Plaintiffs' 101 contracts with Defendants to distribute Shell gasoline. Thus, Plaintiffs' proposed product market definition is a creation of contractual provisions, not market realities. Indeed, other than these contractual limits arising from Plaintiffs' status as Shell dealers, Plaintiffs' alternative definition of a relevant market -- Shell gasoline -- is no different from the retail consumer-based definition, and suffers from the same insufficiency. The Court therefore concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to allege a legally cognizable relevant product market to satisfy the standards set forth in Brown Shoe and Du Pont.

Plaintiffs thus do not allege a viable Sherman Act § 1 conspiracy; Plaintiffs have not alleged a legally cognizable relevant product market against which to measure the competitive effect of Defendant's alleged conspiracy. Plaintiffs' § 1 conspiracy claim accordingly fails as a matter of law.

D. Required Amendments by Plaintiffs to their Complaint

Based on the foregoing rulings, Plaintiffs are directed to file a second amended complaint. This pleading shall clarify Plaintiffs' claims as directed throughout this opinion. Specifically, but without limitation, 102 Plaintiffs' second amended complaint must contain, to the extent possible under Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the following:

- (i) the name and location of the source of the particular Plaintiff's Shell gasoline and, if known, the name and location of the source of gasoline acquired by the competing jobber, jobber-station, or company-owned station.
- (ii) the type of Robinson-Patman Act violation that is alleged (i.e., primary, secondary, or tertiary, and whether there is a contention that Defendants use a functional discount as a subterfuge vis a vis the particular Plaintiff),
- (iii) the identity and location of the particular jobber(s) and/or other retail station(s) that received an allegedly unlawful favorable price, the approximate price that jobber received (if known), and the approximate time period of the allegedly unlawful favorable treatment,
- (iv) the geographic area in which the specific Plaintiff competes with each jobber or other station in issue as to that Plaintiff,
- (v) what or how competition has or may have been injured as a result of the price discrimination suffered by that Plaintiff or other antitrust violation, 103 and
- (vi) for each Plaintiff separately, detailed allegations of the allegedly fraudulent statements or conduct by Defendants as to that Plaintiff.

IV. CONCLUSION

Based on the reasons discussed above, the Court concludes that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs Tying and Price Discrimination Claims [Doc. # 11] has merit concerning the Sherman Act § 1 and Clayton Act § 3 tying claims pleaded by Plaintiffs in Counts I and II of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, and these claims should be dismissed. The Court concludes that Defendants' Supplemental Motion [Doc. # 46] has merit as to the Sherman Act § 1 conspiracy claim pleaded by Plaintiffs in Count IV of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, and that claim also should be dismissed. Defendants' Motion *660 has merit as to the Robinson-Patman Act claim since Plaintiffs jointly have presently attempted to plead that claim. But, dismissal of the entire Robinson-Patman Act claim for all Plaintiffs is premature. Each Plaintiff is granted the right to re-plead this claim before the sufficiency of his or her allegations can be evaluated. It is therefore

75 F. Supp. 2d 626, *660LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 103

ORDERED that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs [104] Tying and Price Discrimination Claims [Doc. # 11] is GRANTED as to Plaintiffs' tying claims alleged in Counts I and II of the Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. It is further

ORDERED that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs Tying and Price Discrimination Claims [Doc. # 11] is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as to the Robinson-Patman Act claim alleged in Count III of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. Plaintiffs are granted leave to file a second amended complaint with the necessary appendix setting forth each Plaintiff's claim specifically as directed in this opinion. It is further

ORDERED that Defendants' Supplemental Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Conspiracy Count [Doc. # 46] is GRANTED. It is further

ORDERED that Plaintiffs are granted leave to re-plead their tying and conspiracy claims if feasible under Rule 11 in light of this opinion. It is finally ORDERED that Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint must be filed on or before November 30, 1999.

SIGNED at Houston, Texas this 3rd day of November, 1999.

NANCY F. ATLAS

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Rock-It, Inc. v. Futura Coatings, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Vermont

November 3, 1999, Decided ; November 4, 1999, Filed

No. 99-CV-44

Reporter

74 F. Supp. 2d 420 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17473 **

ROCK-IT, INC. and GREGORY J. and KIMBERLY BAHR, Plaintiff, v. FUTURA COATINGS, INC., RODNEY D. JARBOE and GENE J. BROCKLAND, Defendant, Disposition: [1] Defendants' Second Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings (paper 27) DENIED.

Core Terms

antitrust, Pleadings, anti-competitive, Defendants', allegations, employees

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) allows a party to move for a judgment on the pleadings at any point after the pleadings close and before the trial begins.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

In considering a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court applies the same standard as required in a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion. Under that test, a court must accept the allegations contained in the complaint as true, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-movant; it should not dismiss the complaint unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN3 [down arrow] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

The burden of proof in a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c) motion falls on the movant. The motion should be granted only if the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Employees are not categorically ineligible for standing under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. A narrow class of employees may, in certain circumstances, have standing to sue in antitrust.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The language of §§ 4, 16 of the Clayton Act further clarifies the Sherman Act by stating that any person may sue for injuries caused by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. Courts limit this broad language to a narrower class of persons and injuries. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN6 [down arrow] Clayton Act, Claims

A demonstration of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under § 4 or § 16 of the Clayton Act, because a party who has suffered or is threatened with antitrust injury may not be a proper plaintiff for other reasons. Among the other reasons that might limit a plaintiff's right to recover are the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; the speculativeness of the alleged injury; and the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries.

Counsel: ROCK-IT, INC., plaintiff, Pro se.

GREGORY J. BAHR, plaintiff, Pro se, Bethel, VT.

KIMBERLY BAHR, plaintiff, Pro se, Bethel, VT.

For FUTURA COATINGS, INC., RODNEY D. JARBOE, GENE J. BROCKLAND, defendants: Samuel Hoar, Jr., Esq., Dinse, Knapp & McAndrew, P.C., Burlington, VT.

For FUTURA COATINGS, INC., RODNEY D. JARBOE, GENE J. BROCKLAND, counter-claimants: Samuel Hoar, Jr., Esq., Dinse, Knapp & McAndrew, P.C., Burlington, VT.

KIMBERLY BAHR, counter-defendant, Pro se, Bethel, VT.

Judges: William K. Sessions, III, United States District Court Judge.

Opinion by: William K. Sessions, III

Opinion

[*422] OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiffs Rock-it, Gregory J. Bahr and Kimberly Bahr have sued Defendants Futura Coatings, Inc., et al., alleging anti-competitive behavior in the artificial urethane rock industry. Defendants have moved for a judgment on the pleadings, seeking an Order ruling that Plaintiff Kimberly Bahr's antitrust claims be dismissed due to lack of standing. For the reasons that follow, Defendants' Second Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings is DENIED.

I. Factual Background

On January 25, 1996, Futura [\[*2\]](#) Coatings, Inc. ("Futura") filed an action against Rock-it, Inc. ("Rock-it") and Gregory J. Bahr for patent infringement. On April 22, 1996, the Defendants filed an answer and counterclaim alleging harassment. The parties settled in August 1996. On September 10, 1996, pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, this Court issued a Consent Judgment and Injunction, enjoining Rock-it and Gregory J. Bahr from making, using or selling the artificial urethane rocks covered by the patents, unless licensed to do so by Futura. The counterclaims were dismissed with prejudice.

On February 5, 1999, Rock-it, Gregory, J. Bahr and Kimberley Bahr, pro se, filed an action for violations of 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 15 (the Sherman and Clayton Acts, respectively) and for "tortious [sic] interference," (paper 1), alleging that Futura committed unfair business practices and prevented Gregory J. Bahr from finding gainful employment in the urethane rock industry. Futura moved for a Judgment on the Pleadings (paper 11), and their motion was granted (paper 25) with respect to Rock-it and Gregory J. Bahr's claims, as those claims as raised in the first motion were foreclosed by the settlement [\[*3\]](#) agreement. Rock-it and Gregory J. Bahr's claims were dismissed without prejudice. The motion was denied with respect to the claims asserted by Rock-it employee Kimberly Bahr.

On September 1, 1999, Defendants filed its Second Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings (paper 27), arguing that Ms. Bahr lacks standing to bring an action in antitrust. Ms. Bahr characterizes herself as the director and "former employee who lost her job as a result of the anti-competitive acts of the Defendants." Ms. Bahr states that she was the sole and primary employee of Rock-it, a closely held corporation.

II. Legal Standards

HN1 Rule 12\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allows a party to move for a judgment on the pleadings at any point after the pleadings close and before the trial begins. HN2 In considering a motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, this Court applies the same standard as required in a 12(b)(6) motion. See Sheppard v. Beerman, 18 F.3d 147, 150 \(2d Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 816, 130 L. Ed. 2d 28, 115 S. Ct. 73 \(1994\). "Under that test, a court must accept the allegations contained in the complaint as true, and draw all reasonable inferences [\[*4\]](#) in favor of the non-movant; it should not dismiss the complaint 'unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'" Id. (quoting HN3 Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 101-02, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\)). The burden of proof falls on the movant Cavanaugh v. Abbott Laboratories, 145 Vt. 516, 496 A.2d 154 \(Vt. 1985\). The motion should be granted only if the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Burns v. Int'l Sec. Servs. V. International Union, 47 F.3d 14, 16 (2d Cir. 1994).

74 F. Supp. 2d 420, *422L 999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17473, 4

[*423]

III. Discussion

Defendants argue that Ms. Bahr lacks standing due to her status as an employee of Rock-it. However, HN4[↑] employees are not categorically ineligible for standing under the Sherman and Clayton Acts. A narrow class of employees may, in certain circumstances, have standing to sue in antitrust.

Congress enacted the Sherman Act to provide consumers with the assets of price competition in commercial markets. HN5[↑] The language of §§ 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act further clarifies the Sherman Act by stating that "any person" may sue for injuries caused [*5] by "by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." Over the years, courts have limited this broad language to a narrower class of persons and injuries. "Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful" Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc. 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986) (citations omitted).

However, HN6[↑] a "demonstration of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under § 4 or § 16, because a party who has suffered or is threatened with antitrust injury may not be a proper plaintiff for other reasons. Cargill, 107 S. Ct. at 489 nn. 5-6. Among the 'other reasons' that might limit a plaintiff's right to recover are the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; the existence of an identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement; the speculativeness of the alleged injury; and the difficulty of identifying damages and apportioning them among direct and indirect [*6] victims so as to avoid duplicative recoveries. See Associated Gen. Contractors v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 540-45, 103 S. Ct. 897, 909-12, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)." The National Association of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers, Inc. v. Ayerst Laboratories, 850 F.2d 904, 912 (2nd Cir. 1988).

"Employees have generally been denied standing to enforce competition laws" for many of the above reasons. Air Courier Conf. of Am. v. American Postal Workers Union, 498 U.S. 517, 528, 112 L. Ed. 2d 1125, 111 S. Ct. 913 (1991) (citations omitted). The above concerns do preclude standing for most corporate employees. However, none of these concerns are implicated with regard to Ms. Bahr's suit, due to her position as the principal employee of a closely held corporation.

If, as Plaintiff asserts, the fundamental cause of the demise of Rock-it was the illegal acts of the defendants, then Ms. Bahr's job loss is a direct consequence of the illegal activity. While indirect injury bars antitrust standing when "the chain of causation between the [...] injury and the alleged restraint in the market [...] contains several somewhat [*7] vaguely defined links," 459 U.S. at 540, Plaintiff's complaint alleges causation which is considerably more direct.

The Supreme Court has made clear that the narrowing of the language of the Clayton Act comports with Congressional intent. 459 U.S. at 531-34. However, they have made equally clear that broad language of the Acts remains in effect where the injury to the Plaintiff is direct. As the Supreme Court found in Associated Gen. Contractors,

"The statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. Nor does it immunize the outlawed acts because they are done by any of these. Cf. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575. The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be [*424] perpetrated.' 334 U.S. 219 at 236, 68 S. Ct. 996 at 1006, 92 L. Ed. 1328. Similarly broad language was used in later cases holding that actions could be maintained by consumers, Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 337-338, 99 S. Ct. 2326,

2330, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979), [8] by a foreign government, Pfizer Inc. v. India, 434 U.S. 308, 313-314, 98 S. Ct. 584, 588, 54 L. Ed. 2d 563 (1978), and by the direct victim of a boycott. Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, [...] 457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 2550-51, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982). In each of those cases, however, the actual plaintiff was directly harmed by the defendants' unlawful conduct."

459 U.S. at 530. If Ms. Bahr's claims are true, she fits squarely within this exception to the narrowing of standing under the acts.

Second, Ms. Bahr very well may be the sole "private attorney general" available to raise these claims. Gregory J. Bahr's eligibility to sue remains uncertain. Plaintiff also alleges that Futura has threatened competitors with lawsuits if they work with Gregory J. Bahr or Rock-it. If these allegations are true, any other "identifiable class of persons whose self-interest would normally motivate them to vindicate the public interest in antitrust enforcement" appears difficult to ascertain. Thus, denying a remedy on the basis of the allegations in this case may risk leaving an "antitrust violation undetected or unremedied." Id. at 542. [9]

Third, the injury to Rock-it's principal employee is not speculative; Plaintiff asserts that Rock-it fell into decline as a direct consequence of Futura's anti-competitive behavior. Defendants argue that "her continued employment by Plaintiff corporation, and any benefits therefrom, are obviously contingent upon so many factors exclusive of competition with Defendant corporation that it would be virtually impossible to determine [...] the effect of any anti-competitive behavior [...]" Brief at 4. Certainly there are always a variety of factors which effect the success or failure of a company. If the existence of such factors, regardless of how insignificant, necessarily barred claims as too speculative then the whole of antitrust law would be eviscerated. Given Ms. Bahr's status as the principal employee of this small organization, her job loss could be construed as directly attributable to the effect of the alleged anti-competitive behavior.

Finally, the small number of harmed individuals and the relative simplicity of the losses alleged in this case preclude manageability and duplicative recovery problems. Concerns of duplicative recovery and "keeping the scope of complex antitrust [10] trials within judicially manageable limits," Id. at 543, do not apply in litigation involving such closely held corporations. Apportioning damages in this case, where there are only two individuals directly affected, would neither unduly burden the courts nor "undermine the effectiveness of treble-damages suits." Id. at 545. Therefore, Plaintiff must not be barred from suit on the basis of these concerns.

Again, Ms. Bahr has asserted that she occupied a special role in a closely held corporation as the principal employee who suffered direct injury due to Defendants' allegedly anti-competitive behavior. Considering these assertions in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, Ms. Bahr falls within the narrow class of employees eligible for antitrust standing. If Defendants later discover that in fact Ms. Bahr's role as an employee was merely administrative and not fundamental to Rock-it's operation, they may again raise the issue of standing in a Motion for Summary Judgment.

IV. Order

For the forgoing reasons, the Court hereby DENIES Defendants' Second Motion [*425] for Judgment on the Pleadings (paper 27).

Dated at Burlington, Vermont [11] this 3rd day of November, 1999.

William K. Sessions, III

United States District Court Judge

Allegheny Gen. Hosp. v. Phillip Morris, Inc

United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania

November 4, 1999, Decided ; November 4, 1999, Date Filed

Civil Action No. 99-9

Reporter

116 F. Supp. 2d 610 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22344 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,783

ALLEGHENY GENERAL HOSPITAL, et al., Plaintiffs, -VS- PHILIP MORRIS, INC., et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Motion to Dismiss of Philip Morris Incorporated, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation (individually and as successor by merger to The American Tobacco Company), Lorillard Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Company, The Tobacco Institute, Incorporated, The Council for Tobacco Research-USA, Incorporated, Hill & Knowlton, Inc. (Docket No. 19) and the Motion to Dismiss the Liggett Group, Inc. (Docket No. 22) GRANTED and Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint against these named Defendants DISMISSED with prejudice.

Core Terms

Plaintiffs', Defendants', patients, injuries, smokers, medically indigent, non-paying, motion to dismiss, tobacco company, tobacco-related, products, smoking, tobacco, costs, illnesses, failure to state a claim, cigarettes, antitrust, indirect, remote, conspiracy, wrongdoing, damages, public nuisance, tobacco product, diseases, nicotine, safer, medical services, antitrust claim

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[

In deciding a motion to dismiss, all factual allegations and all reasonable inferences therefrom must be accepted as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. A court may dismiss a plaintiff's complaint only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claims which would entitle him to relief. In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court looks to whether sufficient facts are pleaded to determine that the complaint is not frivolous, and to provide defendants with adequate notice to frame an answer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN2[

116 F. Supp. 2d 610, *610 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22344, 1

Proximate cause is evaluated in an antitrust action as follows: (1) the physical and economic nexus between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and (2) more particularly, the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy under the antitrust laws. Where the injury alleged is an integral aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN3 Private Actions, Standing

There are a number of factors to consider in analyzing whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. These factors are (1) the causal connection between defendant's antitrust wrongdoing and plaintiff's harm; (2) the specific intent of defendant to harm plaintiff; (3) the nature of plaintiff's injury (and whether it relates to the purpose of the antitrust laws, i.e. ensuring competition within economic markets); (4) the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury; (5) whether the damages claim is highly speculative; and (6) keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits, i.e., avoiding either the risk of duplicate recoveries on the one hand, or the danger of complex apportionment of damages on the other.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Elements of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Remedies

HN4 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

In order to determine proximate causation in cases arising under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962, three factors must be considered: (1) the directness of the injury; (2) the difficulty of apportioning damages among potential plaintiffs; and (3) the possibility of other plaintiffs vindicating the goals of RICO.

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Negligent Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN5 Fraud & Misrepresentation, Negligent Misrepresentation

In order to prove a state law fraud and negligence claim against a defendant under Pennsylvania law, a plaintiff would have to be able to establish that their injuries were proximately caused by defendants' conduct.

Torts > Negligence > Elements

Torts > ... > Elements > Duty > General Overview

HN6 Negligence, Elements

A special duty claim is effectively a negligence cause of action, and therefore requires the element of proximate cause.

Real Property Law > ... > Nuisance > Types of Nuisances > Public Nuisances

Real Property Law > Torts > Nuisance > General Overview

HN7 Types of Nuisances, Public Nuisances

A public nuisance is an unreasonable interference with a right common to the general public.

Real Property Law > Torts > Nuisance > General Overview

HN8 Torts, Nuisance

Circumstances that may sustain a holding that an interference with a public right is unreasonable include the following: (a) whether the conduct involves a significant interference with the public health, the public safety, the public peace, the public comfort or the public convenience; (b) whether the conduct is proscribed by a statute, ordinance or administrative regulation; or (c) whether the conduct is of such a continuing nature or has produced a permanent or long-lasting effect, and, as the actor knows or has reason to know, has a significant effect upon the public right.

Real Property Law > ... > Nuisance > Types of Nuisances > Public Nuisances

Real Property Law > Torts > Nuisance > General Overview

HN9 Types of Nuisances, Public Nuisances

In order to recover damages in an individual action for a public nuisance, one must have suffered harm of a kind different from that suffered by other members of the public exercising the right common to the general public that was the subject of interference.

Real Property Law > ... > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Real Property Law > Torts > Nuisance > General Overview

Real Property Law > ... > Nuisance > Types of Nuisances > Public Nuisances

HN10 Remedies, Injunctions

A public nuisance may be enjoined at the behest of a private citizen or a group of citizens, if the latter, in either their property or civil rights, are specifically injured by the public nuisance over and above the injury suffered by the public generally. To constitute a public nuisance, the conduct must be an inconvenience or troublesome offense that annoys the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person.

116 F. Supp. 2d 610, *610 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22344, 1

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Civil Conspiracy, Elements

In Pennsylvania, to state cause of action for civil conspiracy, the following results are required: (1) a combination of two or more persons acting with a common purpose to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means or for an unlawful purpose; (2) an overt act in pursuance of the common purpose; and (3) actual damage.

Torts > ... > Multiple Defendants > Concerted Action > Civil Aiding & Abetting

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Multiple Defendants > Joint & Several Liability

HN12 [blue download icon] Concerted Action, Civil Aiding & Abetting

Under a concert of action theory, for harm resulting to a third person from the tortious conduct of another, one is subject to liability if he does a tortious act in concert with another or pursuant to a common design with him.

Torts > ... > Multiple Defendants > Contribution > General Overview

Torts > ... > Defenses > Comparative Fault > General Overview

HN13 [blue download icon] Multiple Defendants, Contribution

The right of indemnity rests upon a difference between the primary and secondary liability of two persons each of whom is made responsible by the law to an injured party. It is a right which enures to a person who, without active fault on his own part, has been compelled, by reason of some legal obligation, to pay damages occasioned by the initial negligence of another, and for which he himself is only secondarily liable. The difference between primary and secondary liability is not based on a difference in degrees of negligence or on any doctrine of comparative negligence, --a doctrine which, indeed, is not recognized by the common law. It depends on a difference in the character or kind of the wrongs which cause the injury and in the nature of the legal obligation owed by each of the wrongdoers to the injured party.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] Remedies, Equitable Relief

Quantum meruit is an implied contract remedy based on payment for services rendered and on prevention of unjust enrichment. A promise to pay for services may only be implied when such services are rendered in such circumstances where the performing party entertains a reasonable expectation of being paid by the party benefited.

Counsel: For PLAINTIFFS: M THERESA CREAGH ESQ, NASH & COMPANY, PITTSBURGH, PA.

For DEFENDANTS: ROBERT S GRIGSBY ESQ, COHEN & GRIGSBY, PITTSBURGH, PA.

For PHILIP MORRIS, DEFENDANT: MARY MC LAUGHLIN ESQ, DECHERT PRICE & RHOADS, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

116 F. Supp. 2d 610, *610 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22344, 1

For R.J. REYNOLDS, DEFENDANT: SCOTT D LIVINGSTON ESQ, MARCUS & SHAPIRA, PITTSBURGH, PA.

For B.A.T. INDUSTRIES, DEFENDANT: MARY E MCGARRY ESQ, SIMPSON THACHER & BARTLETT, NEW YORK, NY.

For LIGGETT GROUP, DEFENDANT: J KURT STRAUB ESQ, OBERMAYER REBMAN MAXWELL & HIPPEL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For LIGGETT GROUP, DEFENDANT: MARVIN S LIEBER ESQ, OBERMAYER REBMAN MAXWELL & HIPPEL, PITTSBURGH, [2] PA.

For SMOKELESS TOBACCO, DEFENDANT: JOHN K GISLESON ESQ, SCHNADER HARRISON SEGAL & LEWIS, PITTSBURGH, PA.

Judges: Donetta W. Ambrose.

Opinion by: Donetta W. Ambrose

Opinion

[*611] OPINION and ORDER OF COURT

Pending before the court are Motions of Philip Morris Incorporated, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation (individually and as successor by merger to The American Tobacco Company), Lorillard Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Company, The Tobacco Institute, incorporated, The Council for Tobacco Research-USA, Incorporated, Hill & Knowlton, Inc. and the Liggett Group, Inc. ("Defendants") to Dismiss the First Amended Complaint filed against them by Plaintiffs who own and operate hospitals and health care facilities and have provided and continue to provide medical services to Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients who suffered from tobacco-related illnesses. The Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint alleges federal claims under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1962, and the federal antitrust laws, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., as well as various state law [3] claims, and seeks monetary damages from Defendants. Because I have found that all of the Plaintiffs' claims against the Defendants must fail for [*612] failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss are granted.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN1 In deciding a motion to dismiss, all factual allegations and all reasonable inferences therefrom must be accepted as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Colburn v. Upper Darby Tp., 838 F.2d 663, 666 \(3d Cir. 1988\), cert. den'd, 489 U.S. 1065 (1989). A court may dismiss a plaintiff's complaint only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claims which would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court looks to "whether sufficient facts are pleaded to determine that the complaint is not frivolous, and to provide defendants with adequate notice to frame an answer." Colburn, 838 F.2d at 666.

LEGAL ANALYSIS

Although contained in a 103 page, [4] 387 paragraph, fifteen (15) count First Amended Complaint, in a nutshell, the Plaintiffs' claims against the Defendants are premised upon allegations that the Defendants conspired to conceal from and/or misrepresent to the Plaintiffs information in their possession about the health hazards of cigarette smoking and other tobacco products and also intentionally conspired not to compete in the development of a "safer" cigarette or other nicotine delivery products, all in order to cause the Plaintiffs not to reduce tobacco consumption in the Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients that they treated for tobacco-related illnesses and to continue paying the costs of health care to these patients. Plaintiffs contend that as a result of the above-described conduct by the Defendants, the Plaintiffs suffered injuries in the form of incurring significant financial costs and expenses attributable to tobacco-related diseases, being unable to participate in a health care market where there would have been alternative safer or less addictive cigarettes that would have reduced their costs and expenses related to tobacco-related diseases or where they could have advised, suggested, subsidized [5] or required their patients to use effective alternative products such as safer cigarettes or less addictive cigarettes or other nicotine products.

A. Proximate Causation/Standing.

Defendants first attack all of the Plaintiffs' claims against them on the basis that the Plaintiffs suffered no direct injury, but merely incurred the costs of injuries allegedly suffered directly by smokers who sought medical treatment from them and therefore, their injuries are too remote as a matter of law for them to have standing to sue the Defendants.¹ Memorandum in [*613] Support of Certain Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint For Failure to State A Claim ("Defendants' Supporting Brief"), pp. 4-5. Plaintiffs raise a number of arguments in response to Defendants' argument that all their claims must be dismissed because it is too remote from the alleged wrongdoing of the Defendants. Memorandum in Support of the Hospital Plaintiffs' Opposition to Certain Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint for Failure to State a Claim ("Plaintiffs' Opposition Brief"), pp. 1, 3-6, 9.

[6] Although Defendants do not utilize the terms, this argument in essence is that the Plaintiffs' claims against them must be dismissed for lack of proximate causation/lack of standing. In examining the issue of whether Defendants' alleged misconduct was the proximate cause of the Plaintiffs' injuries and therefore, the Plaintiffs have standing to bring suit or whether the alleged injuries are too remote from the alleged conduct and therefore, the Plaintiffs lack standing to bring suit, the applicable analysis is set forth by the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in Steamfitters, supra. In Steamfitters, the appellate court was reviewing the district court's dismissal of the Hospitals did not purchase or smoke cigarettes or suffer direct injury as a result of the defendants' alleged misconduct. Rather, the Hospitals allege that certain Medicaid and other indigent patients suffered "smoking-related" injuries from using defendants' products and that the Hospitals were indirectly injured when they provided medical services for those patients. The Complaint must be dismissed because as this Court explained less than four months ago, the law has been clear for more than 150 years that "[a] plaintiff who complaint[s] of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visiting upon a third person by the defendant's acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover." Williams & Drake, slip op. at 5-6 (quoting Holmes v. Sec Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268-69, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992)).

¹ More particularly, Defendants argue:

The Hospitals attempt to conjure up a direct injury by alleging that defendants' alleged misrepresentations misled the Hospitals, as well as the smokers, and that as a result the Hospitals "did not take, or would have taken sooner, actions to minimize the losses resulting from tobacco-related injuries and diseases and to discourage and reduce cigarette . . . use and costs associated therewith." Amended Compl. P 300; see also Amended Compl. PP 64, 66, 304, 311. But no matter how the Hospitals plead their claim, their alleged injury remains derivative because the Hospitals did not suffer any loss unless and until the smokers suffered an injury that required treatment.

Defendants' supporting Brief, p. 4, citing, Williams & Drake Co., Inc. v. American Tobacco Co., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21917, No. 98-553, slip op. (W.D. Pa. Dec. 21 1998) (J. Ambrose); Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912 (3d Cir. 1999) ("Steamfitters II"); Laborers Local 17 Health and Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 172 F.3d 223 (2d Cir. 1999), withdrawn at request of court, superseding opinion, 191 F.3d 229, 1999 WL 639865 (2d Cir. Aug. 18, 1999) ("Laborers Local II"); Regence Blueshield v. Philip Morris, Inc., 40 F. Supp. 2d 1179 (W.D. Wash. 1999). See also id. at p. 2, citing, Laborers Local II, supra. ("the Amended Complaint should be dismissed in its entirety because the Hospitals are in precisely the same position as the employer in Williams & Drake and the union trust funds in Steamfitters II and Laborers Local II - they suffered no direct injury, but merely incurred the costs of injuries allegedly suffered directly by smokers who sought medical treatment. As the Second Circuit succinctly concluded, because such 'economic injuries . . . are purely derivative of the physical injuries suffered by [individual smokers],' the plaintiffs' alleged injuries are 'too remote as a matter of law for them to have standing to sue defendants'.").

claims by union health and welfare funds against tobacco companies and tobacco industry organizations under antitrust law, the RICO statute and state common law to recover for the funds' costs of treating their participants' smoking-related illnesses.² The Steamfitters decision will be discussed infra in great detail with respect to many of the Plaintiffs' claims against the Defendants.

[7] 1. Plaintiffs' Antitrust Violation Claims (Counts IV and V).

Relevant to the Plaintiffs' antitrust violation claims against the Defendants, Plaintiffs allege:

Defendants have conspired: (1) to suppress innovation and competition in product quality by agreeing not to engage in research, development, manufacture and marketing of less harmful cigarettes and other nicotine products; (2) to suppress output in the market, and to engage in concerted refusal to deal, by agreeing to keep at zero the output of less harmful cigarettes and other nicotine products; and (3) to suppress competition in marketing by agreeing not to take business from one another by making claims as to the relative safety of [*614] particular brands, whether or not such claims would have been truthful.

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, P269. Plaintiffs also allege that they were consumers in the market for information related to the effects of tobacco use on health as well as for information related to alternative tobacco products which would reduce their expenditures for care provided to Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients. Id. at P 274. Plaintiffs further allege that the Defendants [8] are in the business of selling nicotine, a drug, and that but for the conspiracy alleged, a new submarket for less harmful cigarettes or other nicotine products would have been available to consumers. Plaintiffs aver that they are purchasers of such drugs, products and services used in the treatment of nicotine addiction and dependence and are potential customers in the market for less harmful cigarettes or other nicotine products.

Concerning the proximate cause requirement for antitrust claims, the Steamfitters court first discussed the primary factors for evaluating HN2[] proximate cause in an antitrust action as set forth by the United States Supreme Court in Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 478, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982), which are as follows: "(1) 'the physical and economic nexus between the alleged [antitrust] violation and the harm to the plaintiff' and (2) 'more particularly, . . . the relationship of the injury alleged with those forms of injury about which Congress was likely to have been concerned in making defendant's conduct unlawful and in providing a private remedy' under the antitrust laws." Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 922. [9] Notably, in making this inquiry, the McCready Court explained in relevant part: "where the injury alleged is so integral an aspect of the conspiracy alleged, there can be no question but that the loss was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause." McCready, 457 U.S. at 479.

Applying the McCready inquiry to the allegations relevant to the antitrust claims contained in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, I find, as did the Steamfitters court, that here:

the tobacco companies could have achieved their alleged aims without the existence of the [Plaintiffs] or the relationship between the [Plaintiffs] and smokers, . . . The tobacco companies would have had ample reason to engage in a conspiracy to prevent safer tobacco products from coming on the market, regardless of the relationship between the [Hospital Plaintiffs] and smokers. The very existence of smokers would be a sufficient reason for such an alleged conspiracy. The fact that the [Hospital Plaintiffs] provided unreimbursed medical the plaintiff funds allege that they were defrauded by the defendants -- tobacco companies and related industry organizations -- into paying for their participants smoking-related illnesses, as well as prevented by these defendants from informing the funds' participants about safer smoking and smoking cessation products. The defendants allegedly conspired to prevent the funds from obtaining and using information that would have reduced the incidence of smoking -- and therefore of illness -- among the funds' participants.

² The Steamfitters court summarized the allegations contained in the plaintiffs' complaint as follows:

services to Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients] for their smoking-related illnesses might have [10] made the conspiracy more profitable or allowed it to exist longer, but the relationship between the [Hospital Plaintiffs] and smokers was not a necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy".

Id. 171 F.3d at 923. Thus, under the McCready analysis, Plaintiffs have not alleged facts in their First Amended Complaint sufficient to establish the proximate cause requirement for their antitrust claims. The Steamfitters court then discussed the United States Supreme Court's decision in Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) ("AGC") wherein the court outlined HN3[¹] a number of factors to consider in analyzing whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing. These factors are:

(1) the causal connection between defendant's [antitrust] wrongdoing and plaintiff's harm; (2) the specific intent of defendant to harm plaintiff; (3) the nature of plaintiff's injury (and whether it relates to the purpose of the antitrust laws, i.e. ensuring competition within economic markets); (4) "the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury"; [11] (5) whether the "damages claim is . . . [*615] highly speculative"; and (6) "keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits," i.e., "avoiding either the risk of duplicate recoveries on the one hand, or the danger of complex apportionment of damages on the other."

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 924, quoting, AGC, 459 U.S. at 537-38.

Applying the AGC factors to the facts alleged in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, I find first that Plaintiffs have alleged a causal connection between the Defendants' alleged conspiratorial conduct and the Plaintiffs' injuries in that their allegations are that but for the alleged conspiratorial misconduct, Plaintiffs could have assisted their patients to stop smoking and/or one or more of the Defendants would have developed a less harmful cigarette or other nicotine delivery system which their Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients with tobacco-related illnesses would have used. Therefore, Plaintiffs argue, they would have been able to reduce their costs for caring for Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients with tobacco-related diseases.

Second, I find [12] that Plaintiffs have alleged that the Defendants' alleged conspiratorial conduct was specifically intended to harm the Plaintiffs in that Defendants allegedly acted as they did so that Plaintiffs, rather than Defendants, would incur the costs of treating Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients with tobacco-related diseases.

Third, concerning the nature of the Plaintiffs' injuries and whether they relate to the purpose of the antitrust laws, i.e. ensuring competition within economic markets, it is helpful to examine the discussion of the Steamfitters court on this issue. Specifically, the Steamfitters court first discussed the plaintiff funds' claims based upon indirect cost increases from smoking-related illnesses and concluded that because "the Funds are not consumers forced to pay higher prices for tobacco products or competitors harmed by defendants' ability to conceal the unsafe nature of their products," but rather, were "simply some of the many groups or individuals suffering the financial or medical repercussions of the decades-long marketing of a product we now know is demonstrably unsafe," this injury by the Fund did not relate to the purpose of the antitrust [13] laws. Id. 171 F.3d at 927. The Steamfitters court then went on to explain that:

the Funds' claims of direct injury include allegations that they were in the market for safer tobacco products or for products that would reduce or prevent people from smoking. Therefore, these claims might meet the third factor from AGC. If the Funds were consumers in a market for information and products that would have reduced their expenditures (because they allegedly would have provided the information and products to their participants, some of whom would have smoked less and become less ill), their asserted injuries as consumers -- may be of the appropriate type.

Id.

Turning to the nature of the Plaintiffs' claimed injuries and whether they relate to the purpose of the federal antitrust laws, i.e. ensuring competition within economic markets, I find that to the extent Plaintiffs' claimed injuries are based upon: (1) their status as potential customers in the market for safer cigarettes or other nicotine products that would reduce or prevent their Medicaid, medically indigent or non-paying patients with tobacco-related illnesses from smoking or (2) their status as consumers [14] in the market for information related to the effects of tobacco use on health and information related to alternative tobacco products which would have reduced their expenditures for care provided to the Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients they treated for tobacco-related diseases, said injuries "may be of the appropriate type" Id. at 927. To the extent, however, Plaintiffs' claims are premised "simply on indirect cost increases from [their providing medical services [*616] to their Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients with] smoking-related illnesses," said injuries are not the type sought to be protected by anti-trust laws because "the [Plaintiffs] are not consumers forced to pay higher prices for tobacco products or competitors harmed by defendants' ability to conceal the unsafe nature of their products. They are simply some of the many groups or individuals suffering the financial or medical repercussions of the decades-long marketing of a product that we know now is demonstrably unsafe." Id.

Turning next to the inquiry of "the directness or indirectness of the asserted injury," again the court's analysis in Steamfitters provides direction. [15] The court began its analysis on the question of the directness/indirectness of the plaintiff funds' injuries as follows: "the Funds' claims of direct injury might also meet the fourth factor from AGC, which focuses on the directness or indirectness of the alleged injury. Subsumed in the "directness" factor is also the issue of whether other, more directly injured parties could vindicate the policies underlying the antitrust laws While more direct injured parties existed in AGC . . . , this is not necessarily the case here. Smokers can sue for personal injuries arising from smoking, but they are unlikely (or unable) to press antitrust claims against the tobacco companies." Id. The court continued:

we question [however] whether these direct injuries are necessarily more direct than the indirect injuries on which much of our discussion has focused. Under plaintiffs' direct theory, the tobacco companies' conduct aimed at the Funds induced the Funds to not take certain actions, which led to a greater incidence of smoking (and of smokers using more dangerous products), which led to more illness, which led to increased health care expenditures being borne by the [16] plaintiffs. Although the alleged wrongdoing was more directly aimed at the Funds, the injury itself certainly was no more direct than the indirect injury that arose from the defendants' actions towards smokers.

Id.

Under the precedent set forth above in Steamfitters, clearly to the extent that the Plaintiffs' claims are based simply on indirect cost increases from smoking-related injuries, said injuries are not "direct." Further, as the Steamfitters court concluded, to the extent the Plaintiffs' antitrust claims relate to the Defendants' intentional conduct towards the Plaintiffs, while the conduct was allegedly directed at the Plaintiffs, the injuries allegedly suffered by the Plaintiffs as a result of said conduct were "no more direct than the indirect injuries that arose from the defendants' actions towards smokers." Id.

Turning next to the AGC inquiry of whether the "damages claim is . . . highly speculative," I find, as did the Steamfitters court, that "the [plaintiffs'] damages claims are quite speculative (and very difficult to measure)." Id. at 928-29. As explained by the Steamfitters court:

the [Plaintiffs'] alleged damages [17] are said to arise from the fact that the tobacco companies prevented them from providing smoking-cessation or safer smoking information [or safer tobacco products] to their [Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients], some of whom would have allegedly quit smoking or begun smoking safer products, reducing their smoking-related illnesses, and thereby lowering the [Plaintiffs'] costs for [providing unreimbursed medical services to said patients]. In order to calculate the damages-i.e., the costs not lowered due to the antitrust conspiracy-the [Plaintiffs] must demonstrate how many smokers would have stopped smoking if provided with smoking-cessation information, how many would have begun smoking less dangerous products, how much healthier these smokers would have been if they had taken these actions, and the savings the [Plaintiffs] would have realized by [having to provide fewer unreimbursed medical services to Medicaid, medically [*617] indigent and non-paying patients] for smoking-related illnesses.

Id. at 929.

Finally, concerning the goals of "keeping the scope of complex antitrust trials within judicially manageable limits," i.e., "avoiding either [18] the risk of duplicate recoveries on the one hand, or the danger of complex apportionment of damages on the other," I conclude that I am not overly concerned that there is any real risk of duplicate recoveries or complex apportionment of damages under the allegations underlying the antitrust claims set forth in the First Amended Complaint. I do, however, agree with the Steamfitters court's concern that to the extent the Plaintiffs' Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients have suffered some sort of pecuniary loss as a result of the Defendants' alleged conspiracy, for example, increased cigarette prices, then they too could bring antitrust and RICO (as well as personal injury claims) against the Defendants and "therefore, to some minimal extent at least, an apportionment of damages between health care payers and smokers might be necessary. Id. at 928, n. 10.

Thus, in conclusion, after review of all of the AGC factors in light of the allegations contained in the Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, I find that "however plaintiffs characterize their claims-as director indirect-they necessarily fail for being too remotely connected in the causal chain from any wrongdoing [19] on defendants' part." Id. at 928. Simply stated, "the tortured path that one must follow from the tobacco companies' alleged wrongdoing to the [Plaintiffs'] increased expenditures demonstrates that the plaintiffs' claims are precisely the type of indirect claims that the proximate cause requirement is intended to weed out . . ." Id. at 930. See also Id. at 932 ("the injuries that [Plaintiffs] allegedly suffered from defendants' wrongdoing are simply too remote from that wrongdoing to be cognizable under the antitrust laws. The causal links that plaintiffs must connect in order to make their case are just too numerous and too speculative . . ."). Plaintiffs' antitrust claims against Defendants are dismissed as a matter of law for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

2. Plaintiffs' RICO Claims (Counts I, II and III).

HN4 [↑] In order to determine proximate causation in RICO cases, three factors must be considered: (1) the directness of the injury; (2) the difficulty of apportioning damages among potential plaintiffs; and (3) the possibility of other plaintiffs vindicating the goals of RICO. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268-69, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992); [20] Callahan v. A.E.V., Inc., 182 F.3d 237, 242 (3d Cir. 1999); Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 932. These factors are critical because "(1) the more indirect the injury, 'the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to [defendant's wrongdoing] as distinct from other, independent, factors'; (2) allowing recovery by indirectly injured persons would require complicated rules for apportioning damages; and (3) direct victims could generally be counted on to vindicate the policies underlying the relevant law." Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 932, quoting, Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269-70.

Regarding the directness of the Plaintiffs' alleged injuries, as explained by the Steamfitters court: "applied to the present case, if the [Plaintiffs] are allowed to sue, the court would need to determine the extent to which their increased costs for smoking related illnesses resulted from the tobacco companies' conspiracy to suppress health and safety information [and safer tobacco products], as opposed to smokers' other health problems, smokers' independent (i.e., separate from the fraud and conspiracy) [21] decisions not to smoke, smokers' ignoring of health and safety warnings, etc. . . . This causation chain is much too speculative and attenuated to support a RICO claim." Id. 171 F.3d at 933 (internal footnote omitted).

Concerning the inquiry of the apportionment of damages, as stated by the Steamfitters court:

[*618] as we noted in our discussion of the [Plaintiffs'] antitrust claims, more directly injured parties, i.e., smokers, would be unlikely to bring federal claims against the tobacco companies for the same damages claimed by the Funds. Yet, as we also noted above, [smokers] who have not been fully reimbursed for their out-of-pocket costs that are traceable to defendants' alleged fraud and conspiracy might bring RICO or antitrust claims. Therefore, as in Holmes, a court adjudicating the [Plaintiffs'] RICO claims would need to consider the appropriate apportionment of damages between smokers and others such as the [Plaintiffs] who suffered economic losses as a result of the tobacco companies' alleged fraudulent acts.

Id.

Last, concerning the issue of whether others could generally be counted on to vindicate the Plaintiffs' RICO claims, I agree that this [22] factor weighs in favor of Plaintiffs being able to bring the instant RICO claims in that they are alleging to have suffered far greater economic damages than did the smokers themselves. However, "yet we are unconvinced that this distinction is sufficient to overcome the concerns about apportioning damages and, most fundamentally, the remoteness of the Funds' alleged RICO injuries from any wrongdoing on the part of the tobacco companies." Id. at 933-34.

Thus, for the reasons stated above, I find that the Plaintiffs' alleged injuries are too remote from the Defendants' alleged conduct to be able to state any RICO claims against the Defendants. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Plaintiffs' RICO claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted are granted.

3. Fraudulent Misrepresentation, Fraudulent Concealment, and Negligent Misrepresentation and Omission Claims (Counts VI, VII and VIII).

HN5 In order to prove their state law fraud and negligence claims against Defendants, Plaintiffs would have to be able to establish that their injuries were proximately caused by Defendants' conduct. Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 934-35, 937 n. 23 (fraudulent [23] misrepresentation and negligence claims); Scaife Co. v. Rockwell-Standard Corp., 446 Pa. 280, 285 A.2d 451, 454 \(1971\), cert. den'd, 407 U.S. 920 (1972) (fraudulent misrepresentation claim); Delahanty v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 318 Pa. Super. 90, 464 A.2d 1243, 1252 \(1983\) (fraud claim); Fort Washington Resources, Inc. v. Tannen, 858 F. Supp. 455, 459, 461 \(E.D. Pa. 1994\) (fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims). "Just as we have found the link between defendants' alleged fraud-providing false information regarding the safety of their products-and plaintiffs' alleged injuries too attenuated to support a RICO claim, we also find the link too remote to support a common-law fraud claim." Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 935, citing Gibbs v. Ernst, 538 Pa. 193, 647 A.2d 882, 889 \(1994\); Crawford v. Pituch, 368 Pa. 489, 84 A.2d 204 \(1951\). For the reasons set forth above with respect to Plaintiffs' antitrust and RICO claims, I find as a matter of law that in the instant case, the causal connection between the Defendants' alleged fraudulent and/or negligent misrepresentations [24] or omissions and the Plaintiffs' alleged injuries are too remote to support Plaintiffs' state law fraudulent misrepresentation, fraudulent concealment and negligent misrepresentation claims. Defendants' motions to dismiss said claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted are granted.

4. Breach of Special Duty Claim (Count IX).

In Steamfitters, the court explained with respect to breach of special duty claims that HN6 "a special duty claim is effectively a negligence cause of action, and therefore requires the element we have found missing from plaintiffs' case, proximate cause. . . ." Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 936. Given my conclusion that the element lacking [*619] from Plaintiffs' case against Defendants in general is proximate cause between Defendants' conduct and Plaintiffs' injuries, Plaintiff's breach of special duty claim, premised upon the Defendants' publication of information, representations to and omissions from the public, including the Plaintiffs, also must fail as a matter of law. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Plaintiffs' breach of special duty claim for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted are granted. [25]

5. Plaintiffs' Remaining State Law Claims.

While the Defendants argue that all of the Plaintiffs' claims against them must be dismissed based upon remoteness doctrine, a review of the elements of the Plaintiffs' remaining state law claims against the Defendants, public nuisance, aiding and abetting, civil conspiracy, restitution/unjust enrichment, indemnity, and quantum meruit, does not indicate that proximate causation is an element of said claims. Therefore, I find it necessary to turn to the Defendants' alternative arguments as to why said claims should be dismissed.

B. Plaintiffs' Remaining Claims Against Defendants.

1. Public Nuisance Claim (Count X).

HN7 [↑] "A public nuisance is 'an unreasonable interference with a right common to the general public'." Philadelphia Elec. Co. v. Hercules, Inc., 762 F.2d 303, 315 (3d Cir.), cert. den'd, 474 U.S. 980 (1985), quoting, Restatement (Second) of Torts § 821B(1). Further:

HN8 [↑] circumstances that may sustain a holding that an interference with a public right is unreasonable include the following:

- (a) whether the conduct involves a significant interference with [26] the public health, the public safety, the public peace, the public comfort or the public convenience;
- (b) whether the conduct is proscribed by a statute, ordinance or administrative regulation, or
- (c) whether the conduct is of such a continuing nature or has produced a permanent or long-lasting effect, and, as the actor knows or has reason to know, has a significant effect upon the public right.

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 821B. HN9 [↑] "In order to recover damages in an individual action for a public nuisance, one must have suffered harm of a kind different from that suffered by other members of the public exercising the right common to the general public that was the subject of interference." Id. at § 821C(1). See also Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals v. Bravo Enterprises, Inc., 428 Pa. 350, 360, 237 A.2d 342, 343 (1968) HN10 [↑] ("a public nuisance may be enjoined at the behest of a private citizen or a group of citizens, if the latter, in either their property or civil rights, are specifically injured by the public nuisance over and above the injury suffered by the public generally."). "To constitute a public nuisance, [27] the conduct must be an inconvenience or troublesome offense that annoys the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person." Feeley v. Borough of Ridley Park, 121 Pa. Commw. 564, 551 A.2d 373, 375 (1988).

Defendants first move to dismiss Plaintiffs' public nuisance claim on the basis that "the defendants' alleged conduct - failure to disseminate complete and truthful information about their cigarettes- cannot by its nature interfere with a 'public' right. Rather, . . . the persons affected by the defendants' alleged misconduct here are defendants' customers, the narrow subset of the general public that smokes. Because there was not interference with a public right, the nuisance claim must be dismissed." Defendants' Supporting Brief, pp. 15-16. Alternatively, Defendants argue that the Plaintiffs lack standing to assert a public nuisance claim because they have not alleged [*620] that they suffered "harm of a kind different from that suffered by other members of the public." Id. at p. 16, quoting, Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 821C(1). "The Hospitals have not alleged any special harm 'over and above' that caused to the general public. In [28] fact, the costs of medical services for which the Hospitals seek recovery are entirely coincident with, and derivative of, the harm allegedly caused to their patients, the smokers." Id. at p. 16.

In response, Plaintiffs first argue that the class of people affected by Defendants' alleged conduct consists of approximately 50 millions Americans, including millions of Pennsylvania residents and therefore, the alleged conduct affected the whole community in general. Plaintiffs' Opposition Brief, p. 22. They also argue that the Defendants ignore the direct harm they inflicted on the Hospitals and that as a result of the Defendants' conduct, they suffered a harm of greater magnitude than the general public. Id., citing, Philadelphia Elec. Co., supra.

After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties, I find that while arguably the Defendants' alleged conduct affected the whole community in general, the Plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged a harm suffered by them that was different from/of a greater magnitude than the harm suffered by other members of the general public exercising the right common to the general public that was the subject of interference. [29] Accordingly,

Defendants' motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' public nuisance claim for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted are granted.

2. Aiding and Abetting and Civil Conspiracy Claims (Counts XI and XV).

Defendants also move to dismiss Plaintiffs' aiding and abetting and civil conspiracy claims. In support of their motion, Defendants argue that dismissal is warranted because Plaintiffs have failed to plead any actionable tortious conduct by Defendants and because the Plaintiffs have failed to identify which alleged wrongdoers caused which alleged injuries, i.e. "the Hospitals therefore have not satisfied the strict standard for pleading proximate cause on a conspiracy or a concert of action theory. HN11[¹] In Pennsylvania, "to state cause of action for civil conspiracy, the following results are required: '(1) a combination of two or more persons acting with a common purpose to do an unlawful act or to do a lawful act by unlawful means or for an unlawful purpose; (2) an overt act in pursuance of the common purpose; and (3) actual damage'." Strickland v. University of Scranton, 700 A.2d 979, 987-88 (Pa. Super. 1997), quoting, Smith v. Wagner, 403 Pa. Super. 316, 320-24, 588 A.2d 1308, 1311-12 (1991). [30] Moreover, "[a] claim for civil conspiracy can only proceed when there is a cause of action for the underlying act." Caplan v. Fellheimer Eichen Braverman & Kaskey, 884 F. Supp. 181, 184 (E.D. Pa. 1995), citing, Nix v. Temple Univ. of Com. System of Higher Educ., 408 Pa. Super. 369, 596 A.2d 1132, 1137 (1991). See also Pelagatti v. Cohen, 370 Pa. Super. 422, 432, 536 A.2d 1337, 1342 (1987), appl den'd, 519 Pa. 667, 548 A.2d 256 (1988) ("absent a civil cause of action for a particular act, there can be no cause of action for civil conspiracy."). Similarly, HN12[¹] under a concert of action theory, "for harm resulting to a third person from the tortious conduct of another, one is subject to liability if he (a) does a tortious act in concert with another or pursuant to a common design with him. Skipworth by Williams v. Lead Industries Ass'n, Inc., 547 Pa. 224, 236, 690 A.2d 169, 174 (1997).

Given that Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently plead any actionable tortious conduct by Defendants, Plaintiffs' claims for civil conspiracy and aiding and abetting must be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon [31] which relief can be granted.

3. Restitution/Unjust Enrichment Claim (Count XIII).

As explained by the Steamfitters court in relevant part:

in the tort setting, an unjust enrichment claim is essentially another way of [*621] stating a traditional tort claim (i.e., if defendant is permitted to keep the benefit of his tortious conduct, he will be unjustly enriched). As the Restatement of Restitution puts it:

the desirability of permitting restitution in [tort] cases is ordinarily not so obvious as in the cases where there has been no tort since the tortfeasor is always subject to liability in an action for damages and . . . the right to maintain an action for restitution in such cases is largely the product of imperfections in the tort remedies, some of which imperfections have now been removed.

Restatement of Restitution, § 3 cmt. a (1937); see also id. at ch. 7 introductory note ("Actions of tort are ordinarily not restitutionary . . . They are based primarily upon wrongdoing and ordinarily, through the payment of money, compensate the injured person for the harm suffered by him as a result of the wrongful conduct, irrespective of the receipt of anything [32] by the defendant"). We can find no justification for permitting plaintiffs to proceed on their unjust enrichment claim once we have determined that the District Court properly dismissed the traditional tort claims because of the remoteness of plaintiffs' injuries from defendants' wrongdoing.

Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 936-37. I agree that it would be improper to allow Plaintiffs to proceed with their restitution/unjust enrichment claim against Defendants having determined that their traditional tort claims must be dismissed because of the remoteness of the Plaintiffs' alleged injuries from the Defendants' alleged conduct. Accordingly, Plaintiffs' claim for restitution/unjust enrichment against Defendants is dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

4. Indemnity Based On Intentional and/or Reckless Conduct Claim (Count XII).

In Count XII of their First Amended Complaint, Defendants move to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants should indemnify them for the unreimbursed costs of providing medically necessary care and services to Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients injured by use of Defendants' tobacco [33] products. Specifically, Defendants argue that "under Pennsylvania law, indemnity is only available: (1) where there is an express contract to indemnify; or (2) where the party seeking indemnification was secondarily liable for the indemnitor's acts," and neither scenario exists under the facts alleged in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint. Defendants' Supporting Brief, p. 17.

In response, Plaintiffs argue: (1) Defendants misconstrue indemnity case law when they argue that Plaintiffs cannot state a claim for indemnity because Plaintiffs are primarily liable for the costs of medical care for patients with tobacco-related disease; (2) Defendants are wrong when they argue that the Hospitals are primarily liable for the costs of medical care for Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients with tobacco-related disease; (3) Plaintiffs are not "liable" to these patients; and (4) Defendants are primarily liable for the injuries that the Defendants caused to the smokers who the Plaintiffs treated for tobacco-related diseases. Plaintiffs' Opposition Brief, p. 23.

In Builders Supply Co. v. McCabe, 366 Pa. 322, 77 A.2d 368 \(1951\), the Pennsylvania Supreme Court [34] explained the concept of indemnity claims:

HN13[¹³] the right of indemnity rests upon a difference between the primary and secondary liability of two persons each of whom is made responsible by the law to an injured party. It is a right which enures to a person who, without active fault on his own part, has been compelled, by reason of some legal obligation, to pay damages occasioned by the initial negligence of another, and for which he himself is only secondarily liable. The difference between primary and secondary liability is not based on a difference in degrees of negligence or on any doctrine of comparative negligence, -- [*622] a doctrine which, indeed, is not recognized by the common law. It depends on a difference in the character or kind of the wrongs which cause the injury and in the nature of the legal obligation owed by each of the wrongdoers to the injured party.

...

It is clear that the right of a person vicariously or secondarily liable for a tort to recover from one primarily liable has been universally recognized. But the important point to be noted in all the cases is that secondary as distinguished from primary liability rests upon a fault that is imputed or constructive [35] only, being based on some legal relation between the parties, or arising from some positive rule of common or statutory law or because of a failure to discover or correct a defect or remedy a dangerous condition caused by the act of the one primarily responsible.

McCabe, 366 Pa. at 325-28, 77 A.2d at 370-71 (internal citation omitted). Clearly, the facts pled in the Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, where Plaintiffs are neither vicariously nor secondarily liable for any torts committed upon their Medicaid, medically indigent or non-paying patients with tobacco-related diseases by Defendants, are not the type of facts which give rise to an indemnity action. Accordingly, Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Plaintiffs' indemnity action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted are granted.

5. Quantum Meruit Claim (Count XIV).

Finally, Defendants move to dismiss the Plaintiffs' quantum meruit claim against them. The Plaintiffs' quantum meruit claim is premised upon the theory that by paying for the medical services of its Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients with tobacco-related diseases, Plaintiffs satisfied the Defendants' [36] legal duties and saved them from initially bearing the costs for harm proximately caused by their fraudulent and wrongful conduct. Specifically, Defendants move to dismiss this claim on the basis that in order for the Plaintiffs to recover damages under a theory of quantum meruit, there must have been either "(1) an implied contract between the parties, or (2) plaintiff must have performed services for the defendant for which the plaintiffs had a reasonable expectation of compensation." Defendants' Supporting Brief, p. 20 (emphasis in original). "Plaintiffs certainly have not alleged that there was an implied contract between the Hospitals and the tobacco companies under which the tobacco industry was obligated to pay for the health care costs of smokers. Nor did the plaintiffs provide a service to the defendants for which they reasonably expected compensation. See Amended Compl., PP 373-79. Instead, plaintiffs provided services to smokers, from which they expected to be paid, if at all, by the smokers themselves, or by Medicaid." Id.

In response, Plaintiffs contend that Defendants misread Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint and state: "at paragraph 377, the Hospitals [37] allege that 'Defendants impliedly promised to pay the Hospital Plaintiffs for their valuable services rendered as a result of their wrongful conduct . . .' At paragraph 376, the Hospitals allege that they "reasonably expected to be reimbursed their usual and customary fees to provide such services." See also FAC P 377 ("Defendants knew Hospitals incurred costs to treat tobacco-related illness caused by Defendants' wrongful conduct and that Hospitals would reasonably expect to be paid for their services."). Plaintiffs' Opposition Brief, pp. 24-25.

HN14  "Quantum meruit is an implied contract remedy based on payment for services rendered and on prevention of unjust enrichment. . . [A] promise to pay for services may only be implied when such services are rendered in such circumstances where the performing party entertains a reasonable expectation of being paid by the party benefited." Aloe Coal Co. v Department of Transp., 164 Pa. Commw. 453, 643 A.2d 757, 767 (1994), citing, *Martin I^{6231} V. Little, Brown and Co., 304 Pa. Super. 424, 450 A.2d 984 (1981). After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties on this issue and the factual allegations [38] pled in the Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, I find that under the facts pled in Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, see in particular PP 376 and 377 of the First Amended Complaint,³ contrary to Plaintiffs' contentions, it cannot be inferred from Defendants' alleged conduct that they impliedly promised to pay Plaintiffs for the medical services Plaintiffs provided to Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients with tobacco-related illnesses or that at the time Plaintiffs rendered said medical services, they did so reasonably expecting to be reimbursed by Defendants for their usual and customary fees to provide such services. Accordingly, Defendants' Motions to Dismiss Plaintiffs' quantum meruit claim for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted are granted.

[[39] C. Defendants' no cognizable injury argument.

Defendants also argue in support of their Motions to Dismiss that all of the Plaintiffs' claims against them must be dismissed because Plaintiffs' have suffered no cognizable injury. Given my above determinations with respect to the sufficiency of the Plaintiffs' federal and state law claims against Defendants, it is not necessary to address this argument and therefore, I elect not to do so.

³ In toto, PP 376 and 377 of Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint state:

376. The Hospital Plaintiffs acted unofficiously, were required by law and/or morality to provide such health care, did not volunteer to provide such health care free of charge, intended to charge for such services and reasonably expected to be reimbursed their usual and customary fees to provide such services.

377. The [Hospital Plaintiffs] have expended sums to diagnose and treat tobacco-related illnesses caused by Defendants' wrongful conduct and for which the Defendants had, and continue to have a duty to pay, but have avoided paying by deceit, mendacious lobbying efforts, propaganda, scorched-earth and illicit and deceptive litigation tactics and other means. The Defendant Tobacco Companies knew or reasonably should have known that the Hospital Plaintiffs would be required to bear health care costs attributable to Defendants' conduct. Defendants knew of and appreciated the benefits that the Hospital Plaintiffs' bearing of such health care costs conferred on Defendants. At no time did the Defendants, or any of them, inform the Hospital Plaintiffs that Defendants would not reimburse the Hospital Plaintiffs for the cost of treating the Hospital Plaintiffs' Medicaid, medically indigent and non-paying patients despite Defendants' knowledge that the health care expenses that the Hospital plaintiffs incurred to treat tobacco-related illnesses were caused by the Defendants' wrongful conduct and that the Hospital Plaintiffs would reasonably expect to be paid for their services. Under these circumstances, the Defendants impliedly promised to pay the hospital Plaintiffs for their valuable services rendered as a result of their wrongful conduct, and it would be inequitable, unconscionable and unjust not to enforce their implied promise.

ORDER OF COURT

AND NOW, this 4th day of November, 1999, after careful consideration and for the reasons set forth in the accompanying Opinion, it is ORDERED that the Motion to Dismiss of Phillip Morris Incorporated, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation (individually and as successor by merger to The American Tobacco Company), Lorillard Tobacco Company, United States Tobacco Company, The Tobacco Institute, Incorporated, The Council for Tobacco Research-USA, Incorporated, Hill & Knowlton, Inc. (Docket No. 19) and the Motion to Dismiss the Liggett Group, Inc. (Docket No. 22) are GRANTED and Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint against these named Defendants is DISMISSED [40] with prejudice.

BY THE COURT:

Donetta W. Ambrose,

End of Document

Intergraph Corp. v. Intel Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit

November 5, 1999, Decided

98-1308

Reporter

195 F.3d 1346 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 29199 ; 52 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1641 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,697; 40 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 107

INTERGRAPH CORPORATION, Plaintiff-Appellee, v. INTEL CORPORATION, Defendant-Appellant.

Prior History: [1]Appealed from: United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama. Judge Edwin L. Nelson.

Disposition: INJUNCTION VACATED

Core Terms

district court, Sherman Act, patent, products, monopolization, antitrust, customer, anti trust law, competitors, monopoly power, monopolist, Chips, microprocessors, non-disclosure, termination, leveraging, compete, license, injunction, monopoly, relevant market, manufacturer, anticompetitive, workstation, graphics, preliminary injunction, parties, benefits, terms, proprietary information

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN1[] Jurisdiction Over Actions, Exclusive Jurisdiction

On appellate review, except for issues within the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals' exclusive jurisdiction, a federal appeals court applies the discernable law of the regional circuit.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN2 [down] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

The criteria for grant of a preliminary injunction is: (1) the party seeking the injunction has shown a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, (2) there is a substantial threat of irreparable injury in absence of the injunction, (3) the balance of harms favors the party seeking the injunction, and (4) entry of the injunction does not disserve the public interest. These criteria apply to antitrust issues as to other areas of law. The burden of establishing entitlement to the injunction is on the movant.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN3 [down] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The grant of a preliminary injunction is reviewed on the standard of abuse of discretion. This standard requires plenary review of the correctness of the district court's rulings on matters of law, including the correctness of the legal criteria used in evaluating the likelihood of success on the merits.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN4 [down] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A district court necessarily abuses its discretion when it bases a ruling on an erroneous view of the law. Any legal determinations made by the district court in ruling on a preliminary injunction are reviewed de novo. A district court abuses its discretion when it misconstrues its proper role, ignores or misunderstands the relevant evidence, and bases its decision upon considerations having little factual support.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

HN5 [down] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals has consistently held that for preliminary relief a substantial likelihood of success on the merits must be shown. A party seeking a preliminary injunction must establish the following four factors: (1) a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, (2) a threat of irreparable injury, (3) that its own injury would outweigh the injury to the nonmovant, and (4) that the injunction would not disserve the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN6 Sherman Act, Remedies

Unlawful monopolization requires both the existence of monopoly power and anticompetitive conduct. Monopoly power is generally defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition in a relevant market; anticompetitive conduct is generally defined as conduct whose purpose is to acquire or preserve the power to control prices or exclude competition. The prohibited conduct must be directed toward competitors and must be intended to injure competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Monopolistic conduct must affect the relevant product market, that is, the area of effective competition between the defendant and plaintiff. The relevant market has two dimensions: first, the relevant product market, which identifies the products or services that compete with each other; and second, the geographic market, which may be relevant when the competition is geographically confined. Thus the market which one must study to determine when a producer has monopoly power will vary with the part of commerce under consideration.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN8 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The antitrust law has consistently recognized that a producer's advantageous or dominant market position based on superiority of a commercial product and ensuing market demand is not the illegal use of monopoly power prohibited by the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. the offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Product superiority and the ensuing market position, flowing from a company's research, talents, commercial efforts, and financial commitments, do not convert the successful enterprise into an illegal monopolist under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN9 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

The Sherman Antitrust Act (Sherman Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., does not convert all harsh commercial actions into antitrust violations. Unilateral conduct that may adversely affect another's business situation, but is not intended to monopolize that business, does not violate the Sherman Act. To establish a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show (1) an intent to bring about a monopoly and (2) a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

HN10 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Defining the relevant market is an indispensable element of any monopolization or attempt case, for it is the market in which competition is affected by the asserted predatory or anticompetitive acts. It is the market in which sellers compete, based on products that are in competition with each other. The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Abandonment & Forfeiture Bar > Abandonment

HN11 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

A patent grant is a legal right to exclude, not a commercial product in a competitive market. Firms do not compete in the same market unless, because of the reasonable interchangeability of their products, they have the actual or potential ability to take significant business away from each other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., is a law in the public, not private, interest. To constitute a violation, the monopolist's activities must tend to cause harm to competition; unrelated harm to an individual competitor or consumer is not sufficient.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN13 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The essential facility theory does not depart from the need for a competitive relationship in order to incur Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. liability and remedy. An antitrust claim on the essential facility theory requires that a monopolist who competes with the plaintiff in the monopolized market controls an essential facility, and refuses the plaintiff's request for access to the facility. Stated most generally, the essential facilities doctrine imposes liability when one firm, which controls an essential facility, denies a second firm reasonable access to a product or service that the second firm must obtain in order to compete with the first.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN14 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The elements of liability under the "essential facilities" theory are: (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN15 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A non-competitor's asserted need for a manufacturer's business information does not convert the withholding of that information into an antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN16 [] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Other than as a remedy for illegal acts, the antitrust laws do not compel a company to do business with anyone, customer, supplier, or competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN17 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

It is well established that in the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. does not restrict the long recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN18 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The relationship between a manufacturer and its customer should be reasonably harmonious; and the bringing of a lawsuit by the customer may provide a sound business reason for the manufacturer to terminate their relations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN19 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A "refusal to deal" may raise antitrust concerns when the refusal is directed against competition and the purpose is to create, maintain, or enlarge a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

HN20 Sherman Act, Claims

A monopolist's unilateral refusal to deal with its competitors (as long as the refusal harms the competitive process) may constitute prima facie evidence of exclusionary conduct in the context of a 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 claim. A monopolist may nevertheless rebut such evidence by establishing a valid business justification for its conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN21 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

A manufacturer is under no duty to help a plaintiff or other peripheral equipment manufacturers survive or expand. Absent a duty, the defense of business justification is unnecessary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN22 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

Antitrust liability based on leveraging of monopoly power is a concept of imprecise definition, for the courts have varied in their requirements of the nature of the advantage obtained in the assertedly leveraged market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN23 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. is violated if monopoly power in one market provides a "competitive advantage" in another market, whether or not there is an intent to create a monopoly in the second market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

To establish illegal leveraging of monopoly power the challenged conduct must threaten the second market with the higher prices or reduced output or quality associated with the kind of monopoly that is ordinarily accompanied by a large market share. Absent an adverse effect in the second market, the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. would serve to restrain competition rather than promote it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

The use of a position in one market to gain an advantage in another market is not an illegal market restraint unless a significant fraction of buyers or sellers are frozen out of a market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN26 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Coercive reciprocity is defined as a coerced reciprocal dealing in which two parties face each other as both buyer and seller and one party agrees to buy the other party's goods on condition that the second party buys other goods from it. Illegal tying is similarly defined: The essential characteristic of a invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Reciprocal Dealing

HN27 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To violate the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., the entity that coerces reciprocal dealing must be a monopolist in one product and thus be positioned to require dealing in the coerced product, which but for the monopolist's coercion could be acquired elsewhere.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN28 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Conspiracy is an essential element of all Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 violations, and specific intent to monopolize is a necessary element of a Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 offense of actual monopolization. To violate 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, conduct is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization. For both sections, harm to competition is a necessary element of all private antitrust suits under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2.

195 F.3d 1346, *1346LÁ1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 29199, 1LÁ52 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1641, 1641

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Reciprocal Dealing

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

HN29 [blue icon] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Reciprocal Dealing Commercial negotiations to trade patent property rights for other consideration in order to settle a patent dispute is neither tying nor coercive reciprocity in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

HN30 [blue icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The antitrust laws do not negate the patentee's right to exclude others from patent property. The patent and antitrust laws are complementary, the patent system serving to encourage invention and the bringing of new products to market by adjusting investment-based risk, and the antitrust laws serving to foster industrial competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Presumption of Validity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN31 [blue icon] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

While exclusionary conduct can include a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a patent or copyright, or to sell its patented or copyrighted work, a monopolist's desire to exclude others from its protected work is a presumptively valid business justification for any immediate harm to consumers.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > Indirect Infringement

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Remedies > General Overview

HN32 [blue] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

No patent owner otherwise entitled to relief for infringement or contributory infringement of a patent shall be denied relief or deemed guilty of misuse or illegal extension of the patent right by reason of his having refused to license or use any rights to the patent. A patent holder who lawfully acquires a patent cannot be held liable under § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2 for maintaining the market power he lawfully acquired by refusing to license the patent to others.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN33 [blue] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

To establish a boycott under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, there must be an illegal agreement in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN34 [blue icon] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, prevents persons from combining or conspiring with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce; such a claim requires deliberate concerted action with the specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, accompanied by acts in furtherance of the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > Remedies

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN35 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The federal antitrust laws do not create a federal law of unfair competition or purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN36 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The withdrawal of technical service is not a violation of the antitrust laws. Even when the parties are in competition with each other an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN37 [blue icon] Sherman Act, Claims

The court rejects the notion that if there is a fraction of validity to each of the basic claims and the sum of the fractions is one or more, the plaintiffs have proved a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 or 2.

Counsel: William L. Jaeger, Townsend and Townsend and Crew LLP, argued for plaintiff-appellee. Of counsel on the brief were David Vance Lucas, Senior Counsel, Intergraph Corporation, of Huntsville, Alabama; and John G. Roberts, Jr., Hogan & Hartson L.L.P., of Washington, DC.

Marc G. Schildkraut, Howrey & Simon, of Washington, DC, argued for defendant-appellant. With him on the brief was Joel M. Freed. Of counsel on the brief were Peter N. Detkin and Thomas C. Reynolds, Intel Corporation, of Santa Clara, California.

Lars H. Liebeler, Thaler & Liebeler, of Washington, DC, amicus curiae for Computing Technology Industry Association-Technology Access Action Coalition.

Judges: Before NEWMAN, Circuit Judge, SMITH, Senior Circuit Judge, * and PLAGER, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: NEWMAN

Opinion

[1642] [*1349] NEWMAN, Circuit Judge.

Intel Corporation appeals the grant of a preliminary injunction by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama. [2] ¹ We vacate the injunction.

Intel is a manufacturer of high performance computer microprocessors. The microprocessors are sold to producers of various computer-based devices, who adapt and integrate the microprocessors into products that are designed and sold for particular uses. These producers are called original equipment manufacturers, or OEMs. Intergraph Corporation is an OEM, and develops, makes, and sells computer workstations that are used in producing computer-aided graphics. From 1987 to 1993 Intergraph's workstations [*1350] were based on a high performance microprocessor developed by the Fairchild division of National Semiconductor, embodying what is called the "Clipper" technology. Intergraph owns the Clipper technology and patents thereon. In 1993 Intergraph discontinued use of Clipper microprocessors in its workstations and switched to Intel microprocessors. In 1994 Intel designated Intergraph a "strategic customer" [3] and provided Intergraph with various special benefits, including proprietary information and products, under non-disclosure agreements.

Starting in late 1996 Intergraph charged several Intel OEM customers with infringement of the Clipper patents based on their use of Intel microprocessors. The accused companies sought defense and indemnification from Intel. Negotiations ensued between Intel and Intergraph. Intel inquired about a license to the Clipper patents, but the proposed terms were rejected by Intergraph [1643] as inadequate. Intel then proposed certain patent cross-licenses, also rejected by Intergraph. Intel also proposed that the non-disclosure agreement relating to a new joint development project include a license to the Clipper patents; this too was rejected by Intergraph. As negotiations failed and threats continued the relationship deteriorated, and so did the technical assistance and other special benefits that Intel had been providing to Intergraph.

In November 1997 Intergraph sued Intel for infringement of the Clipper patents. Intergraph also charged Intel with other violations of law, including fraud, misappropriation of trade secrets, negligence, wantonness and willfulness, [4] breach of contract, intentional interference with business relations, breach of express and implied warranties, and violation of the Alabama Trade Secrets Act. Intergraph demanded that Intel be enjoined from infringement of the Clipper patents, and the award of compensatory and punitive damages and trebled damages.

Intergraph moved to enjoin Intel pendente lite from cutting off or delaying provision of the special benefits that Intel had previously provided to Intergraph. Following Intel's opposition to this motion Intergraph amended its complaint to charge Intel with violation of the antitrust laws. After a hearing, the district court held that Intel was a monopolist and had violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act or was likely to be so shown, and issued a preliminary injunction that included the following provisions:

- a. Intel shall supply Intergraph with all Intel product information, including but not limited to technical, design, development, defect, specification, support, supply, future product, product release or sample data, whether existing in product data books, "yellow backs," Confidential Information Transmittal Records, email or other mediums . . ., whether [5] it is on an advance basis for the development of motherboards, graphics

* SMITH, Senior Circuit Judge, participated in oral argument of this case but did not take part in the decision.

¹ Intergraph Corp. v. Intel Corp., 3 F. Supp. 2d 1255 (N.D. Ala. 1998).

subsystems or workstations utilizing Intel's existing, or future generation products (hereinafter "Product Development"), or current products as needed for support of such products. . . .

* * *

c. Intel shall supply Intergraph with an allocation, and set aside a supply of microprocessors, semiconductors, chips, and buses (hereinafter "Chips") on an advance basis for product development ("Chips Samples"), in such quantities as forecasted by Intergraph in the same manner and the same terms as is done by Intergraph's similarly situated Competitors,

d. Within eleven (11) days of the date on which Intergraph posts the bond, as required by subsection (h) of this order, Intel shall supply Intergraph with 25 sets of Deschutes Chips Samples, together with all technical data needed to permit Intergraph to develop, design, and manufacture its products. . . .

e. Intel shall supply Intergraph with an allocation, and set aside a supply, of Chips which have been manufactured by or on behalf of Intel for distribution (hereinafter "Production Chips"), as well [*1351] as all future chips proposed by, or available from Intel, [6] including but not limited to 333mhz Pentium II, BX, Deschutes and Merced Chips, in accordance with a forecast supplied by Intergraph. . . .

* * *

(ii) Intel shall supply Intergraph with Production Chips not yet available from Intel's authorized distributors ("Early Production Chips") in such quantities as forecasted by Intergraph, or in proportional quantities as supplied to Intergraph's similarly situated Competitors,

* * *

i. Intergraph shall maintain the confidentiality of all Information, Third Party Information, Chip Samples and Early Production Chips, in accordance with the terms, conditions and procedures of the applicable non-disclosure agreements as previously agreed to by the parties

Intel appeals, arguing that no law requires it to give such special benefits, including its trade secrets, proprietary information, intellectual property, pre-release products, allocation of new products, and other preferences, to an entity that is suing it on charges of multiple wrongdoing and is demanding damages and the shutdown of its core business. Intel states that its commercial response to Intergraph's suit is not an antitrust violation, and that this "garden-variety [7] patent dispute" does not warrant the antitrust remedy here imposed. Intel also states that the scope of the injunction far exceeds the special benefits that had previously been accorded to Intergraph, and that it is unworkable, as well as unfair to Intel's overall business relationships, for the court to promote [1644] Intergraph to a disproportionately favored position.

Intergraph's response is that it can not survive in its highly competitive graphics workstation business without these services and benefits from Intel, and that the district court simply acted to preserve Intergraph's prior commercial position while the parties litigate unrelated patent issues. Intergraph states that the national interest requires that patentees be free to enforce their patents without risk of retaliatory commercial response from the accused infringer. Intel disputes these premises, and also points out the incongruity of Intergraph's statement that it is essential to Intergraph's business that it have the products for which it is demanding the shutdown of Intel's production.

Standard of Review

HN1[] On appellate review, except for issues within the Federal Circuit's exclusive jurisdiction we apply [8] the discernable law of the regional circuit. See Mikohn Gaming Corp. v. Acres Gaming, Inc., 165 F.3d 891, 894, 49 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1308, 1310 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\) (applying regional circuit law to review of a preliminary injunction); Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1067, 46 U.S.P.Q.2D \(BNA\) 1097, 1103 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\) (en banc) (applying regional circuit law to antitrust issues except for issues concerning patents).

In Lucero v. Operation Rescue, 954 F.2d 624, 627 \(11th Cir. 1992\) the Eleventh Circuit summarized HN2[] the criteria for grant of a preliminary injunction as (1) the party seeking the injunction has shown a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, (2) there is a substantial threat of irreparable injury in absence of the injunction, (3) the balance of harms favors the party seeking the injunction, and (4) entry of the injunction does not disserve the public interest. These criteria apply to antitrust issues as to other areas of law. See DFW Metro Line Serv. v.

Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., 901 F.2d 1267, 1269 (5th Cir. 1990) ("The traditional prerequisites for injunctive relief are applicable [9] to antitrust cases.") The burden of establishing entitlement to the injunction is on the movant. HN3 [↑] Nnadi v. Richter, 976 F.2d 682, 690 (11th Cir. 1992).

The grant of a preliminary injunction is reviewed on the standard of abuse of discretion. This standard requires plenary review of the correctness of the district court's rulings on matters of law, including the correctness of the legal criteria [*1352] used in evaluating the likelihood of success on the merits. See Bah v. City of Atlanta, 103 F.3d 964, 966 (11th Cir. 1997) ("A HN4" [↑] district court necessarily abuses its discretion when it bases a ruling on an erroneous view of the law. Any legal determinations made by the district court in ruling on a preliminary injunction are reviewed de novo.") (citations omitted); Jove Engineering, Inc. v. IRS, 92 F.3d 1539, 1546 (11th Cir. 1996) ("A district court abuses its discretion when it misconstrues its proper role, ignores or misunderstands the relevant evidence, and bases its decision upon considerations having little factual support.") (quoting Arlook v. S. Lichtenberg & Co., 952 F.2d 367, 374 (11th Cir. 1992)).

While recognizing [10] that an appropriate range of discretionary authority is possessed by the trial court in weighing and balancing the criteria of relief pendente lite, the Eleventh Circuit has not generally used a "sliding scale" wherein the severity of the hardship may lessen the showing of likelihood of success on the merits. In Snook v. Trust Co. of Georgia Bank, N.A., 909 F.2d 480, 483 n.3 (11th Cir. 1990) the court stated that the sliding scale has not been adopted by the Eleventh Circuit. Intergraph disputes the validity of this Eleventh Circuit practice, suggesting that earlier Fifth Circuit decisions recognizing a sliding scale should be deemed in effect in the Eleventh Circuit because they were not overruled en banc. However, we take note that HN5 [↑] the Eleventh Circuit has consistently held that for preliminary relief a substantial likelihood of success on the merits must be shown. See, e.g., Tefel v. Reno, 180 F.3d 1286, 1295 (11th Cir. 1999) ("A party seeking a preliminary injunction must establish the following four factors: (1) a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, (2) a threat of irreparable injury, (3) that its own injury would [11] outweigh the injury to the nonmovant, and (4) that the injunction would not disserve the public interest."); McDonald's Corp. v. Robertson, 147 F.3d 1301, 1306 (11th Cir. 1998) (same). Thus we review whether, on the record before the district court, Intergraph established a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of its antitrust claims. See Warren Publ'g, Inc. v. Microdos Data Corp., 115 F.3d 1509, 1516 (11th Cir. 1997) (en banc) ("Because we conclude that Warren failed to establish a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, we need not address the additional elements required for a preliminary injunction.")

We conclude that the antitrust rulings of the district court are incorrect in law or are devoid of sufficient factual support to present a substantial likelihood of establishing [1645] an antitrust law violation with respect to the issues presented. We also conclude that the district court's alternate contract-based ground for the injunction is unsupported on the facts presented.

Intel as "Monopolist"

The district court ruled that Intergraph is likely to succeed in showing that Intel is a "monopolist," whereby Intel's [12] withdrawal of the benefits it had previously accorded to Intergraph and other actions were deemed to violate sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. "1,2. ² The [*1353] court relied on several legal theories,

² Section 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Section 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $ 10,000,000 if a corporation, or, if any other person, $ 350,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

viz.: (1) the essential facility theory and the corollary theory of refusal to deal, (2) leveraging and tying, (3) coercive reciprocity, (4) conspiracy and other acts in restraint of trade, (5) improper use of intellectual property, and (6) retaliatory enforcement of the non-disclosure agreements. The court alternatively ruled that Intergraph is likely to succeed on its contract claims, including the claim that the mutual at-will termination provision of the non-disclosure agreements is unconscionable. While the parties dispute some of the factual determinations of the district court, the court's dispositive rulings were made as a matter of law, and are subject to plenary review.

[13] Intel states that unlawful monopolization was not shown, as a matter of law, because Intergraph and Intel are not competitors. HN6 Unlawful monopolization requires both the existence of monopoly power and anticompetitive conduct. See 3 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, ¶650a, at 66 (1996) ("Unlawful monopolization under '2 of the Sherman Act requires both power and 'exclusionary' or anticompetitive conduct before any kind of relief is appropriate.") Monopoly power is generally defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition in a relevant market; anticompetitive conduct is generally defined as conduct whose purpose is to acquire or preserve the power to control prices or exclude competition. Id. at 67 ("The relevant conduct is often described as 'exclusionary' in the sense that it impairs the opportunities of rivals and is neither 'competition on the merits' nor more restrictive than reasonably necessary for such competition.") The prohibited conduct must be directed toward competitors and must be intended to injure competition. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993) [14] ("The law directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself.")

HN7 Such conduct must affect the relevant product market, that is, the "area of effective competition" between the defendant and plaintiff. See American Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1581 (11th Cir. 1985) ("The relevant market is the 'area of effective competition' in which competitors generally are willing to compete for the consumer potential.") (quoting Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 327-29, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580, 81 S. Ct. 623 (1961)); see also, e.g., AD/SAT, Div. of Skylight, Inc. v. Associated Press, 181 F.3d 216, 227 (2d Cir. 1999) ("The relevant market for purposes of antitrust litigation is the 'area of effective competition' within which the defendant operates.") In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 324, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) the Court summarized that the relevant market has two dimensions: first, the relevant product market, which identifies the products or services that compete [15] with each other; and second, the geographic market, which may be relevant when the competition is geographically confined. Thus "the 'market' which one must study to determine when a producer has monopoly power will vary with the part of commerce under consideration." HN8 United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

The antitrust law has consistently recognized that a producer's advantageous or dominant market position based on superiority of a commercial product and ensuing market demand is not the illegal use of monopoly power prohibited by the Sherman Act. In Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 596 n.19, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 (1985) the Court explained that "the offense [1646] of monopoly under '2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or [*1354] historic accident," quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-571, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). [16] Product superiority and the ensuing market position, flowing from a company's research, talents, commercial efforts, and financial commitments, do not convert the successful enterprise into an illegal monopolist under the Sherman Act.

Intel does not dispute the high market share achieved by its high performance microprocessors. However, that is not a violation of law. Intel stresses that it is not in competition with Intergraph in any relevant market; that its relationship with Intergraph is that of supplier and customer, not competitor. Although the district court found that Intel and Intergraph compete or will compete in the future in the "graphics subsystems" market, as we discuss post, Intel points out, and Intergraph does not dispute, that neither firm possesses monopoly power in this market. Intel stresses that violation of the Sherman Act requires the use of monopoly power to exclude competition or maintain prices, see Areeda, Antitrust Law, ¶650a at 66, none of which is here alleged.

Although the district court recognized that Intel's market power derives from the technological superiority of its products, the court found a prima facie case of market power [17] based on Intel's market share of high performance microprocessors, and concluded that Intel had willfully acquired and maintained monopoly power in the high-end microprocessor market, although the record did not show an effect on competition in any market in which Intergraph competes with Intel. The district court concluded that "[a] sixty to sixty-five percent market share establishes a prima facie case of market power and creates a genuine issue of dangerous probability of monopolization," 3 F. Supp. 2d at 1275, citing U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Industries, Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 999 \(11th Cir. 1993\). In U.S. Anchor the defendant was accused of attempting to monopolize the market for certain types of anchors that were also sold by the plaintiff, through predatory pricing and tying arrangements; the court held that a sixty to sixty-five percent share of the market was sufficient to present a jury question on the issue of attempted monopolization, thus precluding summary judgment for the defendant. However, the court did not eliminate the requirement that plaintiff and defendant compete in the relevant market; that fundamental premise underlies [18] U.S. Anchor.

Intel's market power in the microprocessor market is irrelevant to the issues of this case, all of which relate to the effect of Intel's actions on Intergraph's position in its own markets. There is substantial precedent discussing Sherman Act constraints with respect to a single firm's conduct toward another firm when there is no effect or threat of monopolization flowing from that conduct. In Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 774, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\) the Court explained that "because the Sherman Act does not prohibit unreasonable restraints of trade as such but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy it leaves untouched a single firm's anticompetitive conduct (short of threatened monopolization) that may be indistinguishable in economic effect from the conduct of two firms subject to '1 liability.' See Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 457 ("the notion that proof of unfair or predatory conduct alone is sufficient to make out the offense of attempted monopolization is contrary to the purpose and policy of the Sherman Act").

The conduct complained of is Intel's withdrawal [19] or reduction of technical assistance and special benefits, particularly pre-release access to Intel's new products, in reaction to Intergraph's suit for patent infringement. However, HN9 [↑] the Sherman Act does not convert all harsh commercial actions into antitrust violations. Unilateral conduct that may adversely affect another's business situation, but is not intended to monopolize that business, does not violate [*1355] the Sherman Act. See Levine v. Central Fla. Med. Affiliates, Inc., 72 F.3d 1538, 1555 \(11th Cir. 1996\) ("To establish a violation of section 2 for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show (1) an intent to bring about a monopoly and (2) a dangerous probability of success.") (quoting Norton Tire Co. v. Tire Kingdom Co., 858 F.2d 1533, 1535 \(11th Cir. 1988\)). Although Intergraph stresses the adverse effect on its business of Intel's proposed withdrawal of these special benefits, the record contains no analysis of the effect of such action on competition among manufacturers of graphics subsystems or high-end workstations. "The antitrust laws were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors,'" Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\) [20] (emphasis in original) (quoting Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 320). See, e.g., Levine, 72 F.3d at 1551 ("the antitrust laws are intended to protect competition, not competitors"). [1647]

HN10 [↑] Defining the relevant market is an indispensable element of any monopolization or attempt case, U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 994, for it is the market in which competition is affected by the asserted predatory or anticompetitive acts. It is the market in which sellers compete, based on products that are in competition with each other. See Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325 ("The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it."); Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 \(9th Cir. 1997\) ("The relevant market is the field in which meaningful competition is said to exist."); SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 \(3d Cir. 1978\) (the relevant market is the market wherein producers "have the ability actual or potential to take significant amounts [21] of business away from each other").

The district court found that Intel possessed monopoly power in two "relevant markets": (1) the market for high-end microprocessors, and (2) the submarket of Intel microprocessors. Neither one is a market in which Intergraph and Intel are in competition with each other. Intergraph states that it competes in the microprocessor market by virtue of its Clipper patents. However, HN11[↑] the patent grant is a legal right to exclude, not a commercial product in a competitive market. Intergraph abandoned the production of Clipper microprocessors in 1993, and states no intention to return to it. Firms do not compete in the same market unless, because of the reasonable interchangeability of their products, they have the actual or potential ability to take significant business away from each other. U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 995.

The district court also mentioned the graphics subsystems market as a relevant market, describing Intergraph and Intel as competitors in that market, and finding that Intel has plans to enter the workstation market. There was neither evidence nor suggestion of monopoly power by Intel in these markets, or the willful acquisition [\[22\]](#) or maintenance of monopoly power in Intergraph's market. We shall discuss the issue of Intel's entry into downstream markets in connection with the district court's finding of illegal "leveraging." However, the observation in Ad-Vantage Telephone Directory Consultants, Inc. v. GTE Directories Corp., 849 F.2d 1336, 1348 \(11th Cir. 1987\) is apt: "Here, where Ad-Vantage could prove that GTEDC and Ad-Vantage competed, i.e., in the sale of national advertising, it could not prove that GTEDC was a monopolist. Where Ad-Vantage could prove that GTEDC was a 'monopolist,' i.e. in the sale of local advertising in its own directory, it could not demonstrate that Ad-Vantage competed with GTEDC. In order to demonstrate 'an area of effective competition' one must establish a competitive relationship. Ad-Vantage failed to do so." Intergraph has similarly failed to establish a competitive relationship.

[\[*1356\]](#) Intel's conduct with respect to Intergraph does not constitute the offense of monopolization or the threat thereof in any market relevant to competition with Intergraph. HN12[↑] The Sherman Act is a law in the public, not private, interest. And even if the district court's view [\[23\]](#) of Intel as a monopolist were accepted, as stated in Mr. Furniture Warehouse, Inc. v. Barclays American/Commercial Inc., 919 F.2d 1517, 1522 \(11th Cir. 1990\), "to constitute a violation the monopolist's activities must tend to cause harm to competition; unrelated harm to an individual competitor or consumer is not sufficient."

We turn to consideration of the specific grounds on which the district court applied the Sherman Act to the relationship between these entities and, finding a likelihood of violation of the antitrust laws, awarded antitrust-type relief to Intergraph.

The "Essential Facility" Theory

The "essential facility" theory of Sherman Act violation stems from United States v. Terminal RR Ass'n, 224 U.S. 383, 56 L. Ed. 810, 32 S. Ct. 507 \(1912\), wherein a group of railroads formed an association that controlled the railroad terminals, bridges, and switching yards serving the City of St. Louis. The Court held that this association was formed for an anticompetitive purpose, that the railroad terminals, bridges, and yards were facilities essential to competing railroads, and that section 1 of the Sherman Act was violated. [\[24\]](#) See generally ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 276 (4th ed. 1997).

The district court found that "the Advance Chips Samples and advance design and technical information are essential products and information necessary for Intergraph to compete in its markets." Reasoning that "the antitrust laws impose on firms controlling an essential facility the obligation to make the facility available on non-discriminatory terms," the court held that Intel's action in withdrawing these benefits violated the Sherman Act. As authority the district court cited Otter Tail Power Co. v. United States, 410 U.S. 366, 35 L. Ed. 2d 359, 93 S. Ct. 1022 \(1973\); Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. 585, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847; and MCI Communications /16481 Corp. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 708 F.2d 1081, 1132 \(7th Cir. 1983\).

Intergraph argues that the essential facility theory provides it with the entitlement, in view of its dependence on Intel microprocessors, to Intel's technical assistance and other special customer benefits, because Intergraph needs those benefits in order to compete in its workstation market. However, [\[25\]](#) precedent is quite clear that HN13[↑] the essential facility theory does not depart from the need for a competitive relationship in order to incur Sherman Act liability and remedy. See, e.g., Caribbean Broadcasting Sys., Ltd. v. Cable & Wireless PLC, 331 U.S. App. D.C. 226, 148 F.3d 1080, 1088 \(D.C. Cir. 1998\) (an antitrust claim on the essential facility theory requires that a monopolist who competes with the plaintiff in the monopolized market controls an essential facility, and refuses the plaintiff's request for access to the facility); Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 542 \(9th

Cir. 1991) ("Stated most generally, the essential facilities doctrine imposes liability when one firm, which controls an essential facility, denies a second firm reasonable access to a product or service that the second firm must obtain in order to compete with the first."). In Otter Tail Power, Aspen Skiing, and MCI Communications the "essential facilities" denied to the plaintiffs were all controlled by competitors.

In Otter Tail Power an electric utility withheld access to its power transmission lines from municipalities that [26] wanted to establish their own municipal power distribution systems. Otter Tail Power's use of its monopoly power as a regulated utility, to refuse to "wheel" competitive electricity over its lines, along with its refusal to sell wholesale power to the municipal systems, was held to violate section 2 of the Sherman Act. The Court also noted that Otter [*1357] Tail Power had entered into a series of territorial allocation schemes with other electric utilities, which were held to be per se antitrust violations.

In Aspen Skiing the owner of three of the four major ski areas in Aspen raised its revenue demands for continuing a joint lift ticket arrangement with the fourth ski area, such that it was tantamount to refusal to continue the joint ticket program. The Court upheld the jury instruction to determine whether Aspen Skiing "willfully acquired, maintained, or used [monopoly] power by anti-competitive or exclusionary means or for anti-competitive or exclusionary purposes," as well as the instruction that "a firm possessing monopoly power has no duty to cooperate with its business rivals" unless the purpose is predatory or anticompetitive. Having approved these premises and statements [27] of law, the Court stated that it was "unnecessary to consider the possible relevance of the 'essential facilities' doctrine." 472 U.S. at 611 n.44.

In MCI Communications, 708 F.2d at 1132-33, the court enumerated HN14[ the elements of liability under the "essential facilities" theory as "(1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) a competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) the denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility." The courts have well understood that the essential facility theory is not an invitation to demand access to the property or privileges of another, on pain of antitrust penalties and compulsion; thus the courts have required anticompetitive action by a monopolist that is intended to "eliminate competition in the downstream market." Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 544-45. See MCI Communications, supra. This understanding is seriously strained by the district court's holding that "reasonable and timely access to critical business information that is necessary to compete is an essential facility," although [28] the asserted competition is in a different market. HN15[ A non-competitor's asserted need for a manufacturer's business information does not convert the withholding of that information into an antitrust violation.

Although the viability and scope of the essential facility theory has occasioned much scholarly commentary, no court has taken it beyond the situation of competition with the controller of the facility, whether the competition is in the field of the facility itself or in a vertically related market that is controlled by the facility. That is, there must be a market in which plaintiff and defendant compete, such that a monopolist extends its monopoly to the downstream market by refusing access to the facility it controls. See TV Communications Network, Inc. v. Turner Network Television, Inc., 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir. 1992) (relevant market must be proven for an essential facilities claim); Consul, Ltd. v. Transco Energy Co., 805 F.2d 490, 494 (4th Cir. 1986) ("The fact remains that a relevant market must be proven under any of these theories [including denial of access to an essential facility]"). Absent such a relevant market and competitive [29] relationship, the essential facility theory does not support a Sherman Act violation.

Ignoring this weight of jurisprudence, Intergraph argues that violation of the Sherman Act under the essential facility theory does not depend on whether Intel and Intergraph [1649] are competitors in any market. That is incorrect. As we have discussed, the presence of a competitive relationship is fundamental to invoking the Sherman Act to force access to the property of another. See Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958) ("the policy unequivocally laid down by the Act is competition"). HN16[ Other than as a remedy for illegal acts, the antitrust laws do not compel a company to do business with anyone customer, supplier, or competitor. See American Key Corp., 762 F.2d at 1578 (the "antitrust laws do not compel a company to do business with anyone"). The notion that withholding of technical information and samples of pre-release chips violates [*1358] the Sherman Act, based on essential facility jurisprudence, is an unwarranted extension of precedent and can not be supported on the premises presented. The district court erred in [30] holding that Intel's superior microprocessor product and Intergraph's dependency thereon converted Intel's special customer benefits into an "essential facility" under the Sherman Act. The court's ruling of antitrust violation can not be sustained on this ground.

Intergraph also phrases Intel's action in withholding access to its proprietary information, pre-release chip samples, and technical services as a "refusal to deal," and thus illegal whether or not the criteria are met of an "essential facility." However, HN17[↑] it is well established that "in the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the [Sherman] act does not restrict the long recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal." United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\). See also, e.g., Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 15, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 \(1945\); cf Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\) (an [31] adjudicated monopolist's practice of leasing and refusing to sell its machinery was an instrument in the maintenance of monopoly power as against actual and potential competition, and violated the Sherman Act). Intel states that it continued to sell its products to Intergraph, that it did not refuse to deal with Intergraph as with any regular customer, and that the antitrust laws do not require it to give preferred treatment to a customer that is suing it.

Courts have recognized that "the HN18[↑] relationship between a manufacturer and its customer should be reasonably harmonious; and the bringing of a lawsuit by the customer may provide a sound business reason for the manufacturer to terminate their relations." House of Materials, Inc. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 298 F.2d 867, 871 \(2d Cir. 1962\); see also Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 889-90 \(9th Cir. 1982\) (noting absence of any case where refusal to deal in response to a customer's suit against a manufacturer has been deemed an unreasonable restraint of trade); Corenswet, Inc. v. Amana Refrigeration, Inc., 594 F.2d 129, 134 n.3 \(5th Cir. 1979\) (court should not "be called [32] upon to weld together two business entities which have shown a propensity for disagreement, friction, and even adverse litigation"). Although we have observed a few rulings wherein a court has, for example, barred the termination of a distributor during litigation, no case has held that the divulgence of proprietary information and the provision of special or privileged treatment to a legal adversary can be compelled on a "refusal to deal" antitrust premise.

HN19[↑] A "refusal to deal" may raise antitrust concerns when the refusal is directed against competition and the purpose is to create, maintain, or enlarge a monopoly. For example, in Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 \(1951\) the only newspaper in town refused to sell newspaper advertising to persons who also advertised on a competing radio station; this was held to be an attempt to monopolize the mass dissemination of all news and advertising, and to violate the Sherman Act. See also, e.g., Data General Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1183-84 \(1st Cir. 1994\) ("[HN20[↑]] A monopolist's unilateral refusal to deal with its competitors (as [33] long as the refusal harms the competitive process) may constitute prima facie evidence of exclusionary conduct in the context of a section 2 claim. A monopolist may nevertheless rebut such evidence by establishing a valid business justification for its conduct.") (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 483 n.32, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\)).

[*1359] Intergraph provided no support for its charge that Intel's action in withholding "strategic customer" benefits from Intergraph was for the purpose of enhancing Intel's competitive position. Although the district court found that there was a lack of business justification for Intel's actions, there was no showing of harm to competition with Intel; thus the need did not arise to establish the defense of business justification. As stated in HN21[↑] California Computer Products, Inc. v. International Bus. Mach. Corp., 613 F.2d 727, 744 \(9th Cir. 1979\), a manufacturer is "under no duty to help [plaintiff] or other peripheral equipment manufacturers survive or expand." Absent a duty, justification is unnecessary. 1650]

To the extent that Intergraph has presented on this appeal, [34] or the district court relied on, a theory of refusal to deal based on Intel's withdrawal of the special customer benefits (Intel continued to sell to Intergraph as a regular customer), a basis for violation of the antitrust laws has not been established.

Leveraging

The district court held that Intel "has attempted to leverage its monopoly power in the 'X86' CPU market to prevent Intergraph from competing in the graphics subsystem and workstation markets and to control and dominate competition in these markets through discriminatory and favored agreements and understandings with some of Intergraph's competitors." The district court found that Intel was itself in the graphics subsystems market, for Intel "signed an agreement to purchase Chips & Technology Company, an experienced and successful producer of graphics chips and chip sets" and was in the process of developing a graphics chipset. The court held that these actions were an illegal leveraging of monopoly power in violation of the Sherman Act, and that this warranted the remedy imposed in the preliminary injunction.

HN22[] Antitrust liability based on leveraging of monopoly power is a concept of imprecise definition, [35] for the courts have varied in their requirements of the nature of the advantage obtained in the assertedly leveraged market. The district court relied on Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 275 (2d Cir. 1979) for the position that HN23[] the Sherman Act is violated if monopoly power in one market provides a "competitive advantage" in another market, whether or not there is an intent to create a monopoly in the second market. However, the district court appeared to view Intel's participation in, and planned entry into, the graphics workstation market as a per se Sherman Act violation, for there was no economic evidence or proffer concerning Intel's participation in the downstream market. As discussed by Professor Areeda, HN24[] to establish illegal leveraging of monopoly power the challenged conduct must "threaten[] the [second] market with the higher prices or reduced output or quality associated with the kind of monopoly that is ordinarily accompanied by a large market share." 3 Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law &652c, at 90 (1996). Absent an adverse effect in the second market, the Sherman Act would serve to restrain competition [36] rather than promote it.

The concept of illegal leveraging arose in United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100, 107-08, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948), wherein the Court explained that monopoly power can not be used "to beget monopoly" and "to gain a competitive advantage." The Second Circuit has rejected a broad reading of Berkey Photo, describing the statement quoted supra as "dictum" and holding in Twin Laboratories, Inc. v. Weider Health & Fitness, 900 F.2d 566 (2d Cir. 1990) that Sherman Act violation based on leveraging requires a showing of "tangible harm to competition" in the second market. See also AD/SAT, 181 F.3d at 230 ("Although a plaintiff alleging monopoly leveraging is not required to demonstrate a substantial market share by the defendant, application of the doctrine is limited to those circumstances where the challenged conduct actually injures competition, not just competitors, in the second, non-monopolized market.")

[*1360] Some circuits have explicitly rejected the standard stated in Berkey Photo. In Fineman v. Armstrong World Industries, Inc., 980 F.2d 171 (3d Cir. 1992) the court held [37] that a section 2 leverage claim requires the use of monopoly power in the second market, and that a mere attempt to gain a competitive advantage is insufficient as a matter of law. In Alaska Airlines, 948 F.2d at 548-49, the Ninth Circuit stated that "the elements of the established actions for 'monopolization' and 'attempted monopolization' are vital to differentiate between efficient and natural monopolies on the one hand, and unlawful monopolies on the other. Berkey Photo's monopoly leveraging doctrine fails to differentiate properly among monopolies." The Eleventh Circuit approached the issue in Aquatherm Indus., Inc. v. Florida Power & Light Co., 145 F.3d 1258, 1262 (11th Cir. 1998), declining to "extend Berkey Photo to a situation in which a monopolist projects its power into a market it not only does not seek to monopolize, but in which it does not even seek to compete." In Amey, Inc. v. Gulf Abstract & Title, Inc., 758 F.2d 1486, 1503-04 (11th Cir. 1985) the court, citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 45, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), stated that HN25[] the use of a position [38] in one market to gain an advantage in another market is not an illegal market restraint unless "a significant fraction of buyers or sellers are frozen out of a market." The district court's ruling herein is not in accord with Eleventh Circuit precedent, for Intel's action affected only Intergraph, in a heavily populated competitive market.

Intergraph made no proffer to show that Intel possessed market power in either the graphics subsystems market or the workstation market. A manufacturer's plan to enter [1651] a downstream market is not a per se antitrust violation based on a theory of leveraging. An integrated business does not offend the Sherman Act by drawing on its competitive advantages of efficiency, experience, or reduced transaction costs, in entering new fields. These advantages are not uses of monopoly power. See AD/SAT, 181 F.3d at 230. Intergraph provided no evidence or proffer tending to show that "a necessary and direct result" of Intel's planned entry into these markets would have a prohibited effect within the meaning of the Sherman Act. Although the district court stated that this and other rulings "are based on the evidence received to this point, [39]" there must be evidence that would support, or be likely to support, at least prima facie, the court's rulings when they are implemented by preliminary injunction based on a determination of antitrust violation or the substantial likelihood thereof.

The district court's ruling that Intel's expansion into the computer workstation and graphics subsystems markets constitutes illegal leveraging appears to be based on a per se theory of future Sherman Act violation. It is an enlargement of antitrust theory and policy to prohibit downstream integration by a "monopolist" into new markets. The specter of Intel's resources and talent is not evidence of future Sherman Act violation. As we have discussed, the purpose of the antitrust laws is to foster competition in the public interest, not to protect others from competition, in their private interest. Intergraph cites section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. '26, as authority for the district court's ruling. Section 16 authorizes action "against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws." The salutary purpose is to prevent antitrust injury before it happens. However, the conduct to be prevented must be such that [40] if it occurred would violate the antitrust laws. Section 16 authorizes prevention of the consequences of antitrust violation; it does not create the violation.

The injunction can not be supported on a theory of illegal leveraging.

Coercive Reciprocity and Tying

The district court found that Intel engaged in unlawful "coercive reciprocity," defined by the court as "the practice of using economic leverage in one market coercively to secure competitive advantage [*1361] in another," by its proposals to settle the patent dispute. The court referred to Intel's "overall course of conduct, including its tying of a continued supply to Intergraph of CPUs and technical information with its demand for Intergraph's relinquishment of its Clipper technology patents without costs to Intel." The court depicted Intel's proposals as a per se antitrust violation "because of its pernicious effect and economic similarity to illegal tying cases," in violation of both sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

The district court cited cases wherein economic leverage in one product was used to coerce dealing in another product. In Betaseed, Inc. v. U&I Inc., 681 F.2d 1203, 1216 \(9th Cir. 1982\) [41] the court defined HN26 coercive reciprocity as a coerced reciprocal dealing "in which two parties face each other as both buyer and seller and one party agrees to buy the other party's goods on condition that the second party buys other goods from it." Illegal tying is similarly defined: "The essential characteristic of a invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." HN27 Jefferson Parish Hosp., 466 U.S. at 12.

To violate the Sherman Act the entity that coerces reciprocal dealing must be a monopolist in one product and thus be positioned to require dealing in the coerced product, which but for the monopolist's coercion could be acquired elsewhere. Thus Betaseed, the only processor of sugar beets geographically accessible to the U&I company, conditioned the processing of U&I's beets on the purchase by U&I of Betaseed's beet seeds, thereby excluding competition in the market for beet seed. Similarly in Spartan Grain & Mill Co. v. Ayers, 581 F.2d 419, 424 \(5th Cir. 1978\), [42] also relied on by the district court, Spartan demanded that the producers of breeding chickens purchase Spartan chicken feed and chicks in order for Spartan to buy their eggs (the market in which it had power). These are classical examples of illegal coerced reciprocal dealing.

In contrast, Intel's various licensing proposals furthered no illegal relationship. It is Intergraph, not Intel, that owns the Clipper patents. To the extent that the record mentions these negotiations, it appears that Intergraph is interested in selling or licensing the Clipper patents, but has deemed Intel's various offers to be inadequate. Intel did not demand that Intergraph buy its products, and the record describes no market in which Intel's licensing proposals were shown to have distorted competition. See Betaseed, 681 F.2d at 1220 ("The Supreme Court has indicated that whether a court invokes a per se [1652] or rule of reason analysis, the purpose of the analysis is to form a judgment about the competitive significance of the restraint.") (citing National Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs v.

United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978)). Although the district court appeared to be concerned [43] that in the license negotiations the parties did not negotiate as equals, the elements of Sherman Act violation do not inhere in failed negotiations.

The district court provided no explanation of its terse holding that Intel's proposal to trade a license under the Clipper patents for continuation of the "strategic customer" program violated both sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. No conspiracy is identified, although "conspiracy HN28[¹] is an essential element of all Section 1 violations," American Key Corp., 762 F.2d at 1579 n.8, and "specific intent to monopolize is a necessary element of a Section 2 offense of actual monopolization." Id. And as we have discussed, to violate section 2, conduct "is unlawful only when it threatens actual monopolization." Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767-68. For both sections, "harm to competition is a necessary element of all private antitrust suits under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act." American Key Corp., supra, citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, [*1362] Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977).

No threat or actual monopolization is asserted to flow from the various [44] rejected patent license proposals. HN29[¹] Commercial negotiations to trade patent property rights for other consideration in order to settle a patent dispute is neither tying nor coercive reciprocity in violation of the Sherman Act. Although the district court calls Intel's actions "hardball," it is not the judicial role to readjust the risks in high-stakes commercial dealings. The district court erred in law in ruling that on the theories of coercive reciprocity and tying Intel per se violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The antitrust-based remedy here imposed can not be supported on these theories.

Use of Intellectual Property To Restrain Trade

In response to Intel's argument that its proprietary information and pre-release products are subject to copyright and patents, the district court observed that Intel's intellectual property "does not confer upon it a privilege or immunity to violate the antitrust laws." That is of course correct. But it is also correct that HN30[¹] the antitrust laws do not negate the patentee's right to exclude others from patent property. See Cygnus Therapeutic Sys. v. ALZA Corp, 92 F.3d 1153, 1160, 39 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1666, 1671 (Fed. Cir. 1996) [45] ("The patent statute grants a patentee the right to exclude others from making, using, or selling the patented invention.") The patent and antitrust laws are complementary, the patent system serving to encourage invention and the bringing of new products to market by adjusting investment-based risk, and the antitrust laws serving to foster industrial competition. See Loctite Corp. v. Ultraseal Ltd., 781 F.2d 861, 876-77, 228 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 90, 100-01 (Fed. Cir. 1985) (the purpose of the patent system is to "encourage innovation and its fruits"; the purpose of the antitrust laws is "to promote competition"). The patent and antitrust laws serve the public in different ways, both of importance to the nation.

The district court stated that "unlawful 'exclusionary conduct can include a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a [patent or] copyright or to sell a patented or copyrighted work,'" quoting from Image Technical Services. This quotation, however, is part of a longer passage which imparts a quite different meaning:

Under the fact-based approaches of Aspen Skiing and Kodak, some measure must guarantee that the jury account for the procompetitive effects [46] and statutory rights extended by the intellectual property laws. To assure such consideration, we adopt a modified version of the rebuttable presumption created by the First Circuit in Data General, and hold that "while HN31[¹] exclusionary conduct can include a monopolist's unilateral refusal to license a [patent or] copyright," or to sell its patented or copyrighted work, a monopolist's "desire to exclude others from its [protected] work is a presumptively valid business justification for any immediate harm to consumers."

Image Technical Servs., 125 F.3d at 1218 (alterations in original). In Image Technical Services the Ninth Circuit reported that it had found "no reported case in which a court had imposed antitrust liability for a unilateral refusal to sell or license a patent or copyright." 125 F.3d at 1216. Nor have we. In accord is the joint statement of the United States Department of Justice and Federal Trade Comm'n, Antitrust Guidelines for the Licensing of Intellectual Property 4 (1995) that market power does not "impose on the intellectual property owner an obligation to license the use of that property to others." Id. at [47] 4. See 35 U.S.C. '271(d)(4) ("No HN32[¹] patent owner otherwise entitled to relief for infringement or contributory infringement of a [1653] patent shall be denied relief or deemed guilty of misuse or illegal extension of the patent right by reason of his having done one or more of the following: . . . (4) refused to license or use any rights to the patent"). See also, e.g., Miller Insituform, Inc. v. Insituform of North Am., Inc., 830 F.2d 606, 609 (6th Cir. 1987) ("A patent [*1363] holder who lawfully acquires a patent cannot be held liable under section 2 of the Sherman Act for maintaining the [market] power he lawfully acquired by refusing to license the patent to others."); United States v. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 648 F.2d 642, 647-48 (9th Cir. 1981) (patent holder has the "untrammeled" right to license or not, exclusively or otherwise); SCM Corp. v. Xerox Corp., 645 F.2d 1195, 1206-07 (2d Cir. 1981)

Further, Intergraph is not seeking a license under Intel's patents and copyrights, but a preferred position as to the products that embody this intellectual property before they are commercially available, as well as access to trade [48] secrets. In Bonito Boats, Inc. v. Thunder Craft Boats, Inc., 489 U.S. 141, 161, 103 L. Ed. 2d 118, 109 S. Ct. 971 (1989) the Court recognized that trade secrets are of value only before the products embodying them are commercially available. Intergraph seeks technical information that is not generally known, samples of new products before they are available to the public, and individualized technical assistance. However, as we have stated, the owner of proprietary information has no obligation to provide it, whether to a competitor, customer, or supplier. Precedent makes clear that a customer who is dependent on a manufacturer's supply of a component can not on that ground force the producer to provide it; there must also be an anticompetitive aspect invoking the Sherman Act. In Eastman Kodak, for example, Kodak and the independent service organizations were in direct competition in the market for servicing Kodak's photocopiers and micrographic equipment; the Court assumed, for the purpose of reviewing a grant of summary judgment, that Kodak had the intent to limit competition in the service market and that it succeeded in doing so. 504 U.S. at 455, 458. [49] The district court herein recognized that there must be an anticompetitive intent, but ignored the absence of competition between Intel and Intergraph.

The district court's conclusory statement that Intel was using its intellectual property to restrain trade was devoid of evidence or elaboration or authority. A Sherman Act violation can not be so imprecisely invoked.

The Conspiracy Theory

The district court found that Intergraph was likely to prove that sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act were violated by Intel in conspiring with Intergraph's OEM competitors, by aiding them in customer presentations and assistance on the asserted condition that the customer would deal with the OEM that made the presentation, and not with Intergraph. The district court characterized this action as an effort to "persuade Intergraph's customers to boycott Intergraph."

Intel readily concedes that it participates in presentations with workstation producers, and apparently had done so in conjunction with Intergraph in the past. HN33[] To establish a boycott under section 1 there must be an illegal agreement in restraint of trade; we have been directed to no showing where a customer was required [50] to agree not to deal with Intergraph in order to receive Intel's presentation. See United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940) ("The essence of [a conspiracy to monopolize] is an agreement entered into with the specific intent of achieving monopoly")

HN34[] Section 2 prevents persons from "combining or conspiring with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce"; such a claim requires deliberate concerted action with the specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, accompanied by acts in furtherance of the conspiracy. Intel states, without challenge by Intergraph, that there is no evidence that its presentations had any effect on actual or potential monopolization in this field. On the evidence presented, a violation of section 2 was not supported. See Herbert Hovenkamp, Federal Antitrust Policy: The Law of Competition and its Practice 266 (1994) [*1364] ("If a monopoly manufacturer sells to fifty retailers, and then arbitrarily cuts one of them off, the retail market will remain competitive. There is no plausible way that such a refusal can result in a lower output or higher prices. [51] ")

HN35[] The federal antitrust laws "do not create a federal law of unfair competition or 'purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce.'" Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 225, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (1993) (quoting Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 826, 89 L. Ed. 1954, 65 S. Ct. 1545 (1945)). The record states that Intergraph's market contains many competitors, with no significant entry barriers. Absent illegal conduct or an adverse effect on competition, Intel's customer presentations are devoid of antitrust significance. See American Key Corp., 762 F.2d at 1654, 1579 (injury to competition, as distinguished from injury to a competitor, is essential to a Sherman Act claim).

The events here complained of do not state an antitrust claim, whether or not they may state a claim under some other theory. In NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 119 S. Ct. 493, 498, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998) the Court, on different facts, cautioned against judicial adoption of a per se rule of antitrust liability that would "transform cases [52] involving business behavior that is improper for various reasons . . . into treble-damages antitrust cases." Although undoubtedly judges would create a kinder and gentler world of commerce, it is inappropriate to place the judicial thumb on the scale of business disputes in order to rebalance the risk from that assumed by the parties.

The Non-Disclosure Agreements

In 1994 Intel and Intergraph entered into the first of a series of non-disclosure agreements concerning the protection of Confidential Information as defined therein. The Agreements provide that "Neither party has any obligation to disclose Confidential Information to the other," that there is no "obligation to buy or sell products," that both parties may "cease giving Confidential Information to the other party without liability," and that either party can "terminate this Agreement at any time without cause upon notice to the other party" with return of the Confidential Information. Under these agreements Intel provided Intergraph with the trade secret and proprietary information and pre-release products here at issue.

The district court ruled that "Intel's retaliatory lawsuits and the threatened and actual [53] termination of its non-disclosure agreements (NDAs) with Intergraph, under which Intel provided technical information to Intergraph, constitute unlawful restraints of trade." The court held that Intel could not terminate the agreements and the provision of Confidential Information thereunder, since there was no legitimate business justification for doing so. The court concluded that "Intel's enforcement of the at-will termination provisions through two retaliatory lawsuits and other threatened actions is unreasonably onerous and intended to restrain competition by Intergraph and others." However, onerous actions do not in themselves constitute antitrust violations, see Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 225 ("Even an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws.") As the Court stated in Hunt v. Crumboch, 325 U.S. 821, 826, 89 L. Ed. 1954, 65 S. Ct. 1545 (1945), "[The Sherman] Act does not purport to afford remedies for all torts committed by or against persons engaged in interstate commerce." See Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 459 ("The concern that '2 might [54] be applied so as to further anticompetitive ends is plainly not met by inquiring only whether the defendant has engaged in 'unfair' or 'predatory' tactics."

The district court also ruled that the at-will termination clause was "unconscionable" at the time the non-disclosure agreements were entered into, or at least would be unconscionable if Intel were now [*1365] permitted to terminate the agreements and discontinue the disclosures they had enabled. The district court rejected the argument that unconscionability as a ground of contract illegality was intended for consumer protection, and held that "the principle applies with equal force in the commercial field." We observe, however, that the Alabama courts, like others, have emphasized that "recission of a contract for unconscionability is an extraordinary remedy usually reserved for the protection of the unsophisticated and the uneducated." Wilson v. World Omni Leasing, Inc., 540 So. 2d 713, 717 (Ala. 1989). Although Intergraph is a much smaller company than Intel, it is one of the Fortune 1000, and does not plead inadequate legal advice in its commercial dealings. The Alabama Code comments that "The principle is one of [55] the prevention of oppression and unfair surprise and not of disturbance of allocation of risks because of superior bargaining power." Ala. Code '7-2-302 Comment (1) (1997). Applying this state law, the Alabama courts have recognized that "it is not the province of the court to make or remake a contract for the parties." Muscle Shoals Aviation, Inc. v. Muscle Shoals Airport Auth., 508 So. 2d 225, 228 (Ala. 1987).

Trade secrets and other proprietary information and products including pre-release samples of chips are commercial property, and the terms of their disclosure and use are traditional matters of commercial contract.

Intergraph does not state that it objected to the mutual at-will termination provision when the contract was entered. Indeed, the district court found that when Intergraph switched from the Clipper technology "Mr. [1655] Grove did not commit Intel to provide a perpetual supply of chips, pre-released chips, or confidential information [and] did not commit Intel to any continued or 'perpetual business relationship' with Intergraph."

In an agreement relating to confidential information, negotiated between commercial entities, it is not the judicial role [56] to rewrite the contract and impose terms that these parties did not make. Such intrusion into the integrity of contracts requires more than changed relationships. No fraud or deception is here alleged. Even on the district court's view of the mutual termination clause as unconscionable, the remedy would be rescission or imposition of a termination notice period, not the Sherman Act remedy of enforced disclosure of trade secrets and proprietary information and provision of pre-released products, none of which is required to be disclosed under any agreement. Neither the conclusion that the termination of the agreements violated the Sherman Act, nor the content of the injunction, can be supported on the ground that the non-disclosure agreements contained a termination at-will provision.

Alternatively, the district court held that since the non-disclosure agreements lacked a termination date, the court could impose one. The court ruled that "reasonable notification would take effect at the conclusion of the Deschutes and Merced Programs continuing through 1999." This reformation, adding some twenty months to the date of the court's injunction Order, is not accompanied by an analysis of [57] the original understanding of the parties or by evidence of objective termination parameters for similar agreements, and is without precedent. Although the weight of this aspect has been diluted by the passage of time and other events,³ this judicial revision of the parties' contract is without support.

Non-disclosure agreements were apparently also involved in connection with Intel's refusal to authorize help to Intergraph for removal of a "bug" or defect in a product, an event described by the district [*1366] court as "requiring Intergraph to spend substantial time and resources to solve the problem and delaying Intergraph's product entry into the market." HN36⁴ The withdrawal of technical [58] service is not a violation of the antitrust laws. As stated in Brooke Group, 509 U.S. at 225, even when the parties are in competition with each other "an act of pure malice by one business competitor against another does not, without more, state a claim under the federal antitrust laws."⁴

The March 1997 Letter

The district court also ruled that Intel had contractually committed itself to continue to provide Intergraph with preferred customer benefits. This ruling was based on a letter written by an Intel representative in March 1997, when Intergraph was beginning to inform the OEMs about the Clipper patents. The letter stated that Intergraph would be treated as "a strategic customer in present and future programs" that are "currently being managed under [59] Non-Disclosure Agreements." The district court considered this letter to be in conflict with and thus to supersede the non-disclosure agreements, rendering "illusory" the termination-at-will provision of the agreements and requiring Intel to provide strategic customer benefits into the future.

The district court found that this letter is likely to be established as an enforceable contract "of a sufficiently definite duration." Recognizing the absence from the letter of basic contract terms, for the letter contained no statement of obligations, duration, price, quantity, etc, the district court held that the Alabama UCC "gap-filler" rules could be used to create a binding contract. Thus the district court held that the duration was "at least through 1999, when the Merced program is publicly launched, and perhaps through the year 2000." However, the letter's broad usages, its lack of specificity, and its silence on virtually all of the elements of a contract, negate its interpretation as replacing the non-disclosure agreements with specific obligations, and separate it from the sort of document subject to a "gap-filler" expedient. Ala. Code "7-2-305 to 310. There is no gap-filling [60] exercise that can reasonably include all of the terms of the district court's injunction order.

³We take notice that a consent order, reported to provide some of the same relief as does the preliminary injunction, has been entered by the Federal Trade Commission. Intel Corp., Docket No. 9288 (FTC March 1999) (Agreement Containing Consent Order). That proceeding, under Section 5 of the FTC Act, 15 U.S.C. '45, is not before us.

⁴The district court also described this event as a breach of warranty. Evidence on this issue is not provided. Intergraph's claim in this suit, and the relief awarded, is not for breach of warranty, but for antitrust violation.

Thus we do not share the district court's view of this letter as changing and replacing the non-disclosure agreements as to major contractual provisions. Indeed, the letter refers [1656] to the terms of the current non-disclosure agreements as governing future relationships. Although the letter may be viewed as one of reassurance to Intergraph, the letter by its terms did not supersede the non-disclosure agreements. The judicial obligation in document interpretation is to attempt to determine the mutual intent at the time, but not to impose an interpretation that would be likely to have been rejected at the time. Whatever the correct reading of this letter, it can not be read as binding Intel to new substantive obligations that were not mentioned in the letter.

The preliminary injunction can not be sustained on the ground that it is simply implementing the Intel letter of March, 1997.

Everything Taken Together

Intergraph argues that the various theories of antitrust liability discussed by the district court should not be viewed separately but should be taken together, lest the [61] slate be "wiped clean" after each aspect fails to violate the Sherman Act, citing Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 \(1962\). In Continental Ore the Court held that the "factual components" of a case should be viewed together, not the pieces of legal theory. Id. at 699. Continental Ore did not hold, [*1367] as Intergraph proposes, that the degrees of support for each legal theory should be added up. Each legal theory must be examined for its sufficiency and applicability, on the entirety of the relevant facts. The proper analytical approach was explained in City of Groton v. Connecticut Light & Power Co., 662 F.2d 921, 928-29 \(2d Cir. 1981\): "Even though many of the issues the municipalities raise are interrelated and interdependent, however, we must, like the municipalities' briefs, analyze the various issues individually. Moreover, HN37 we reject the notion that if there is a fraction of validity to each of the basic claims and the sum of the fractions is one or more, the plaintiffs have proved a violation of section 1 or section 2 of the Sherman Act."

Conclusion

[62] Despite the district court's sensitive concern for Intergraph's well-being while it conducts its patent suit against Intel, there must be an adverse effect on competition in order to bring an antitrust remedy to bear. The remedy of compulsory disclosure of proprietary information and provision of pre-production chips and other commercial and intellectual property is a dramatic remedy for antitrust illegality, and requires violation of antitrust law or the likelihood that such violation would be established. In the proceedings whose record is before us, Intergraph has not shown a substantial likelihood of success in establishing that Intel violated the antitrust laws in its actions with respect to Intergraph, or that Intel agreed by contract to provide the benefits contained in the injunction. The preliminary injunction is vacated.

Costs

Costs to Intel, Fed. Cir. R. 39.

INJUNCTION VACATED

Bar Techs., Inc. v. Conemaugh & Black Lick R.R.

United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania

November 9, 1999, Decided

Civil Action No. 99-41J

Reporter

73 F. Supp. 2d 512 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17355 **

BAR TECHNOLOGIES INC., Plaintiff, v. CONEMAUGH & BLACK LICK R.R. CO., Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Motion to dismiss, dkt. no. 5, GRANTED; plaintiff's antitrust claims DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE; motion for hearing DENIED.

Core Terms

track, rail line, common carrier, carrier, antitrust, competitor, transportation, railroad, grade crossing, construct, industrial, damages, railroad line, spur, anti trust law, crossing, rates, motion to dismiss, facilities, interstate, tariff, antitrust claim, no jurisdiction, certificate, interfere, Terminal, asserts, argues, steel

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion to dismiss cannot be granted unless the allegations in the complaint taken as true fail to state any claim upon which relief can be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In ruling upon a motion to dismiss, a district court must accept as true all facts alleged in the complaint, and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. A court need not credit a complaint's bald assertions or legal conclusions.

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN3[Transportation Law, Rail Transportation

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 10901\(a\).

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Lands & Rights of Way

HN4[] Rail Transportation, Lands & Rights of Way

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 10901\(d\)\(1\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN5[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

49 U.S.C.S. § 10501 sets forth a grant of general jurisdiction to the Surface Transportation Board.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Surface Transportation Board

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN6[] Interstate Commerce, US Surface Transportation Board

49 U.S.C.S. § 10501\(a\)\(1\) provides that the Surface Transportation Board has jurisdiction over transportation by rail carrier that is by railroad. 49 U.S.C.S. § 10501\(a\)\(2\) then limits that jurisdiction to, for some purposes, transportation over the interstate rail network.

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Lands & Rights of Way

HN7[] Rail Transportation, Lands & Rights of Way

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 10501\(b\).

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Surface Transportation Board

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN8[] Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

73 F. Supp. 2d 512, *512LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17355, 1

The Surface Transportation Board's (Board) jurisdiction over the construction of spur or industrial track is exclusive only to the extent the Board has jurisdiction at all, that is, to the extent that the proposed tracks implicate transportation by rail carrier that is by railroad. 49 U.S.C.S. 10501\(a\)\(1\).

Torts > ... > Rail Transportation > Theories of Liability > Federal Employers' Liability Act

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Definitions

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN9[] Theories of Liability, Federal Employers' Liability Act

49 U.S.C.S. § 10102\(5\) defines a rail carrier as a person providing common carrier railroad transportation for compensation. Both judicial decisions and administrative adjudications have further defined a common carrier as an entity that offers its services for compensation to all members of the public that are in a position to use them.

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN10[] Transportation Law, Rail Transportation

Mere construction of track by a company on its own property does not, without more, turn that company into a common carrier.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Duty to Provide Service

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Definitions

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

HN11[] Common Carrier Duties & Liabilities, Duty to Provide Service

A common carrier has been defined generally as one who holds himself out to the public as engaged in the business of transportation of persons or property from place to place for compensation, offering his services to the public generally. The distinctive characteristic of a common carrier is that he undertakes to carry for all people indifferently, and hence is regarded in some respects as a public servant. The dominant and controlling factor in determining the status of one as a common carrier is his public profession as to the service offered or performed.

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN12[] Transportation Law, Rail Transportation

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 10906.

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > General Overview

73 F. Supp. 2d 512, *512LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17355, 1

HN13 [blue document icon] Transportation Law, Rail Transportation

See 49 C.F.R. § 1150.1\(a\).

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Lands & Rights of Way

HN14 [blue document icon] Rail Transportation, Lands & Rights of Way

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 10901 \(d\)\(1\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN15 [blue document icon] Regulated Industries, Transportation

A private antitrust action alleging anticompetitive rate fixing by motor carriers does not lie when those rates take the form of tariffs filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > Common Carriers

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN16 [blue document icon] Filed Rate Doctrine, Common Carriers

The filed rate doctrine merely prevents private shippers from sustaining an award of treble damages by claiming that Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC)-approved rates were the product of an antitrust violation. That does not preclude liability based on non-rate anticompetitive activity. The court recognizes that the success of anticompetitive non-rate activity would coincidentally implicate rates promulgated under the jurisdiction of the ICC. It is fully consistent with the filed rate doctrine, however, to accept these rates as lawful and nonetheless to conclude that through non-rate activities, particularly the refusal to deal with potential competitors, the defendants effectively retarded entry of lower-cost competitors to the market. The instrument of damage was the absence of the lower-cost combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN17 [blue document icon] Private Actions, Standing

73 F. Supp. 2d 512, *512LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17355, 1

Antitrust injury is a necessary condition of antitrust standing. It has been defined as an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN18 [] Private Actions, Remedies

An antitrust plaintiff must prove that challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality of goods or services, not just his own welfare.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN19 [] Private Actions, Standing

A supplier of a product does not become a competitor of the purchaser merely because the purchaser in turn sells the product to the ultimate user.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN20 [] Regulated Industries, Transportation

A purchaser of rail service does not become a competitor of the seller merely because the seller is the conduit between the purchaser and the interstate rail network.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN21 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

It requires a long stretch to call an individual refusal to deal "monopolizing" when it does nothing to increase the refuser's monopoly power and nothing to increase his position in any market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN22 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To state an essential facilities claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show: (1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN23 [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The essential facilities doctrine, as a matter of law, inures only to the benefit of potential or actual competitors of an antitrust defendant.

Counsel: For BAR TECHNOLOGIES INC., plaintiff: Ralph A. Finizio, Houston Harbaugh, Pittsburgh, PA.

For BAR TECHNOLOGIES INC., plaintiff: Michele Ann Smolin, R. Jeffrey Pollock, McDonald, Hopkins, Burke & Haber, Cleveland, OH.

For CONEMAUGH & BLACK LICK RAILROAD COMPANY, defendant: Sheila Smith DiNardo, Buchanan Ingersoll, Pittsburgh, PA.

Judges: D. Brooks Smith, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: D. Brooks Smith

Opinion

[*513] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

D. BROOKS SMITH, District Judge.

In this case, plaintiff, Bar Technologies, Inc. ("BarTech"), claims that the alleged refusal of defendant, Conemaugh & Black Lick Railroad Company ("C&BL"), to allow the proposed rail line of plaintiff to cross its existing line at grade, despite an easement requiring the C&BL to permit grade crossings, violates antitrust law. Defendant has filed a motion to dismiss, dkt. no. 5, which argues on the merits that BarTech has stated no valid claims, and also strenuously asserts that the issues presented in plaintiff's complaint are committed to the exclusive primary jurisdiction of [*2] the Surface Transportation Board ("STB") incident to its plenary power to regulate the construction, operation and abandonment of rail lines. For the following reasons, I will grant the motion.

I.

Stated in the light most favorable to plaintiff, the complaint reveals that BarTech is a manufacturer of "bar quality hot rolled steel" which it produces in a Johnstown, Pennsylvania factory it acquired from Bethlehem Steel in 1994. The C&BL, a wholly owned subsidiary of Bethlehem, provides the only rail link between the BarTech plant, on which it operates upon an easement, and the interstate rail transportation network. Believing that it could provide this link more cost-effectively than can the C&BL with its filed tariffs, BarTech sought to construct its own private rail line to the main line tracks. This, however, required BarTech's proposed trackage to cross the C&BL tracks at grade. BarTech was permitted to do this pursuant to its reserved rights in the C&BL easement, but the C&BL nevertheless refused its permission, citing operational and safety concerns.¹ To BarTech, however, this refusal was a naked attempt to restrain competition and force it to accept the C&BL's monopolistic [*3] tariff rates.

Accordingly, BarTech filed the instant suit, alleging in four counts that C&BL violated section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, breached its contract with BarTech and interfered with BarTech's "servient owner rights." BarTech seeks both compensatory and treble damages, as well as declaratory and injunctive relief. Defendant has filed a motion to dismiss, which is now fully briefed and [*4] ready for disposition.

II.

HN1 A motion to dismiss cannot be granted unless the allegations in the complaint taken as true fail to state any claim upon which relief can be granted. Angelastro v. Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc., 764 F.2d 939, 944 (3d Cir. 1985) (citing HN2 Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957)). In ruling upon a motion to dismiss, a district court must accept as true all facts alleged in the complaint, and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Markowitz v. Northeast Land Co., 906 F.2d 100, 103 (3d Cir. 1990). A court "need not credit a complaint's 'bald assertions' or 'legal conclusions.'" In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1429-30 (3d Cir. 1997) (quoting Glassman v. Computervision [*514] Corp., 90 F.3d 617, 628 (1st Cir. 1996)).

¹ A crossing at grade is not unlike a common intersection of two streets, except that the inherent limitations of track and rolling stock preclude turns and other maneuvers. If a BarTech train is using the grade crossing, C&BL's trains will be blocked from doing so until the BarTech train safely exits the crossing. Moreover, it is possible for one train to have a side-on collision with another railroad's train that happens to be in the crossing. Thus, the safety and operational concerns are not without basis. Nevertheless, grade crossings have been common in the railroad industry, probably from its earliest days.

III.

Defendant spends the bulk of its brief on its argument that the entire case must be dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. It asserts, first, that the construction and operation of rail lines and grade crossings is committed to the exclusive primary jurisdiction of the STB. [5] Because BarTech never sought STB approval to build its rail line and grade crossing, defendant contends essentially that BarTech's problems are solely of its own making and that any damages it suffered are not the C&BL's fault. Alternatively, defendant argues that even if BarTech had sought regulatory approval, the question of whether it can build its rail line and grade crossing can and must be decided only by the STB.

Defendant relies on HN3 [↑] 49 U.S.C. § 10901\(a\), which provides that:

A person may-

- (1) construct an extension to any of its railroad lines;
- (2) construct an additional railroad line;
- (3) provide transportation over, or by means of, an extended or additional railroad line; or
- (4) in the case of a person other than a rail carrier, acquire a railroad line or acquire or operate an extended or additional railroad line, only if the Board issues a certificate authorizing such activity under subsection (c).

It also relies on HN4 [↑] subsection (d)(1), which recites:

When a certificate has been issued by the Board under this section authorizing the construction or extension of a railroad line, no other rail carrier may block any [6] construction or extension authorized by such certificate by refusing to permit the carrier to cross its property if-

- (A) the construction does not unreasonably interfere with the operation of the crossed line;
- (B) the operation does not materially interfere with the operation of the crossed line; and
- (C) the owner of the crossing line compensates the owner of the crossed line.

Based on this statutory text, defendant argues that BarTech was and is forbidden from building either its rail line or crossing without STB approval. This contention, while initially plausible, is incomplete in its consideration and analysis of the statute.

HN5 [↑] Section 10501 sets forth a grant of general jurisdiction to the STB. HN6 [↑] Subsection (a)(1) provides that "the Board has jurisdiction over transportation by rail carrier that is . . . by railroad." (Emphasis added.) Subsection (a)(2) then limits that jurisdiction to, for present purposes, transportation over the interstate rail network. HN7 [↑] Subsection (b) then provides that:

The jurisdiction of the Board over-

- (1) transportation by rail carriers . . . ; and
- (2) the construction, acquisition, operation, abandonment, or discontinuance [7] of spur, industrial, team, switching, or side tracks, or facilities, even if the tracks are located, or intended to be located, entirely in one State, is exclusive. Except as otherwise provided in this part, the remedies provided under this part with respect to regulation of rail transportation are exclusive and preempt remedies provided under Federal or State law.

49 U.S.C. § 10501\(b\) (emphasis added).

Taken together, the exclusivity granted in subsection (b)-which would appear to encompass the "industrial" or "spur" track BarTech wishes to construct-must be read as subject to the limits of the general jurisdiction granted in subsection (a)(1). This means that HN8[↑] the STB's jurisdiction over the construction of spur or industrial track is exclusive only to the extent the Board has jurisdiction at all, that is, to the extent that the proposed tracks implicate "transportation by rail carrier that is . . . [\[*515\]](#) by railroad." 49 U.S.C. 10501\(a\)\(1\)(emphasis added).

HN9[↑] Section 10102\(5\) defines a "rail carrier" as "a person providing common carrier railroad transportation for compensation." Both judicial decisions and administrative [\[8\]](#) adjudications have further defined a "common carrier" "as an entity that offers its services for compensation to all members of the public that are in a position to use them." Chicago Terminal Corp., ICC Finance Docket No. 32495, 1994 WL 732863, p.6 (ICC, served Jan. 12, 1995) (citing agency decisions); see Lone Star Steel Co. v. McGee, 380 F.2d 640, 643 (5th Cir. 1967) (FELA case) (quoting Kelly v. General Elec. Co., 110 F. Supp. 4, 6 (E.D. Pa.) (FELA), aff'd as circuit precedent, 204 F.2d 692 (3d Cir. 1953) (per curiam)); Duffy v. Armco Steel Corp., 225 F. Supp. 737, 738 (W.D. Pa. 1964) (Willson, J.). HN10[↑] Mere construction of track by a company on its own property does not, without more, turn that company into a common carrier. Ciaccio v. New Orleans Public Belt R.R., 285 F. Supp. 373, 375 (E.D. La. 1968) (FELA, discussing Kelly). As the Kelly court put it:

HN11[↑] A common carrier has been defined generally as one who holds himself out to the public as engaged in the business of transportation of persons or property from place to place for compensation, offering his services to the [\[9\]](#) public generally. The distinctive characteristic of a common carrier is that he undertakes to carry for all people indifferently, and hence is regarded in some respects as a public servant. The dominant and controlling factor in determining the status of one as a common carrier is his public profession as to the service offered or performed.

110 F. Supp. at 6 (citation omitted).

Here, BarTech has no intention of operating its rail line as a common carrier for hire to shippers, but seeks only a means of transporting its own carloads of steel from its Johnstown plant onto the interstate rail network. As such, it is not a rail carrier and the jurisdictional prerequisite of § 10501\(a\)\(1\) is not satisfied. That being the case, the Board simply has no jurisdiction under § 10901\(a\) to either approve or disapprove BarTech's proposed construction of its rail line.

This construction is consistent with the former ICC's interpretation of the statute, before its amendment by the Interstate Commerce Commission Termination Act of 1995 ("ICCTA"), Pub. L. 108-88, 109 Stat. 807. In its Chicago Terminal opinion issued less than a year before the enactment of the ICCTA, the [\[10\]](#) Commission held:

The Commission may approve or exempt only a transaction that is within its jurisdiction. . . . The Commission's jurisdiction over railroads is limited to common carriers.

1994 WL 732863 at p.3; accord Hanson Natural Resources Co., ICC Finance Docket No. 32248, 1994 WL 673712 (ICC, served Dec. 5, 1994); Northern Plains R.R. Co., ICC Finance Docket No. 32077, 1992 WL 383329 (ICC, served Dec. 28, 1992); State of Maine, 8 I.C.C. 2d 835, 836-37, 1991 WL 84430 (ICC 1991).

Defendant cites two cases purportedly to the contrary, but both are inapposite. In CSX Transp., Inc. v. Georgia Pub. Serv. Comm., 944 F. Supp. 1573 (N.D. Ga. 1996), the issue was not whether the STB could regulate the construction of private industrial track, but "whether the ICC Termination Act of 1995 preempted the state's authority to regulate railroad agency closings in Georgia." Id. at 1580. In that case, the railroad—one of the nation's largest—was clearly a common carrier. To the same effect is Village of Ridgefield Pk. v. New York, S. & W. Ry. Corp., 318 N.J. Super. 385, 724 A.2d 267, 277 [\[11\]](#) (N.J. Super. Ct., App. Div.), cert. granted, 160 N.J. 476, 734 A.2d 791, 1999 N.J. LEXIS 716 (N.J. 1999), in which the question was whether local authorities could exercise general police powers to abate an alleged public nuisance arising from the operation of a locomotive refueling facility. In both cases, preemption was found, but as both railroads were common carriers, neither case provides support for defendant's argument.

[\[*516\]](#) Even if § 10501 did grant jurisdiction to the STB over a non-rail carrier like BarTech, § 10901 would still be unavailing to the C&BL's position. HN12[↑] Section 10906, formerly codified as § 10907(b)(1), states:

The Board does not have authority under this chapter² over construction, acquisition, operation, abandonment or discontinuance of spur, industrial, team, switching, or side tracks.

Under this section, the STB simply has no jurisdiction over BarTech's industrial track. Cf. Hughes v. Consol-Pa. Coal Co., 945 F.2d 594, 612 (3d Cir. 1991) (no jurisdiction over railroad-operated spur track connecting main railroad line only with a single company's coal mine).

[12] Defendant places great reliance on the language of § 10901 itself, correctly pointing out that nothing in the express language of that section limits its applicability to common carriers. Indeed, the prior version of that section referred specifically to "rail carriers" as the only parties which needed ICC approval to construct a rail line, while the present version refers instead to "persons." Dkt. no. 11, at 4. Defendant also cites to the administrative regulations promulgated under § 10901 in support of this argument. Specifically, it focuses upon HN13[↑] 49 C.F.R. § 1150.1\(a\), which states that "noncarriers require Board approval to construct, acquire or operate a rail line in interstate commerce." From this, and one ICC administrative decision, Kansas City S. Ry. Co., ICC Finance Docket No. 32547, 1995 WL 348732 (ICC, served June 2, 1995), it claims that "the Act includes no exemption for construction of a rail line on one's own property." Dkt. no. 11, at 5. Although defendant's argument may well hold true under different circumstances, it must fail under the facts of the case sub judice.

First, the legislative history of the ICCTA states explicitly that, as [13] to § 10901, no change was intended vis-a-vis existing law, and that "non-railroad companies who construct rail lines to serve their own facilities, whether or not such lines would be classified as a spur or other auxiliary track exempt from agency jurisdiction under [§ 10906], are not required to obtain agency approval to engage in such construction." H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 311, 104th Cong, 1st Sess. 179, reprinted in 1995 U.S.C.C.A.N. 793, 864. Indeed, the change from "rail carrier" to "person" must have been intended to correct the ambiguity concerning whether a non-carrier who acquires an active common carrier rail line is subject to STB jurisdiction. Many courts answered that question in the affirmative, see United Transp. Union v. ICC, 311 U.S. App. D.C. 229, 52 F.3d 1074, 1078 (D.C. Cir. 1995), and the amended statute, by referring to "persons" in § 10901\(a\) and "person other than a rail carrier" in § 10901\(a\)\(4\), merely codifies that result by requiring such a person to seek Board approval. This is also the obvious import of 49 C.F.R. § 1150.1\(a\), cited by defendant and quoted supra. Accordingly, I conclude that neither the 1995 amendment nor the [14] administrative regulation confers Board jurisdiction over BarTech.

As for Kansas City Southern, it is simply inappropriate to this proceeding. There, a railroad wished to construct what it considered to be an exempt spur track on its own property to serve an Exxon plastics plant that was already served by another railroad, and the Board held that the proposed track was an extension of its common carrier line, not a spur. 1995 WL 348732. Nowhere in that opinion did the Board hold that a customer's proposed construction of an industrial track to a common carrier rail line was within its jurisdiction.

Accordingly, I conclude that the STB has no jurisdiction over whether BarTech can construct its industrial track. That leaves defendant's related argument, which contends that STB approval is required [*517] before BarTech can build a grade crossing over the C&BL line, regardless of whether BarTech can simply construct track vel non.

Defendant relies exclusively upon HN14[↑] 49 U.S.C. § 10901 \(d\)\(1\), which states (emphasis added):

When a certificate has been issued by the Board under this section authorizing the construction or extension of a [15] railroad line, no other rail carrier may block any construction or extension authorized by such certificate by refusing to permit the carrier to cross its property if-

- (A) the construction does not unreasonably interfere with the operation of the crossed line;
- (B) the operation does not materially interfere with the operation of the crossed line; and
- (C) the owner of the crossing line compensates the owner of the crossed line.

This subsection of § 10901, like subsection (a) discussed supra, does not come to the aid of defendant's cause.

² "This chapter[.]" as used in § 10906, refers to chapter 109 of the statute, which includes §§ 10901-10907.

I must first note that any reliance on subsection (d)(1) suffers from the same deficiency as that on subsection (a), specifically, that § 10906 removes industrial track from the Board's jurisdiction, as do the common carrier limitations of §§ 10501\(a\)\(1\) and 10102\(5\). Beyond that, the language of subsection (d)(1) does not contain a jurisdictional grant over the construction of crossings, and merely recites the legal duties of the "crossed" railroad once the Board has authorized the construction. Defendant's citation to this subsection, then, merely begs the question of whether that authorization is required in the first instance. [\[16\]](#) For the reasons I have already set forth, no such authorization is needed and subsection (d)(1) is therefore inapposite.³

Because the STB has no jurisdiction over either the construction of the proposed BarTech track or the installation of the crossing, I reject defendant's jurisdictional arguments in their entirety and will deny that portion of its motion to dismiss.

IV.

A.

Defendant next argues that plaintiff's entire complaint fails because the actions of the C&BL were not the proximate cause of any damages to BarTech. In part, this contention rests on the theory that, because the STB has exclusive jurisdiction to approve BarTech's proposed rail line and BarTech has not even sought such approval, BarTech is not legally entitled to build the line in the first [\[17\]](#) instance. Accordingly, defendant asserts that "any damages allegedly sustained by BarTech from having to use the C&BL Railroad are the proximate result of BarTech's own conduct, not any conduct of C&BL." Dkt. no. 6, at 11-12. For the reasons already stated, I cannot accept this argument.

B.

The other part of defendant's no-damages argument requires further discussion. Defendant contends that because the C&BL's freight rates are set by tariffs filed with the STB, any "damages" BarTech has or will incur are barred under the filed rate doctrine, under which a court may not grant damages based upon, or otherwise interfere with, a tariff approved by an administrative agency charged with that duty. As defendant puts it, "a court is distinctly unqualified to determine in a highly regulated industry what a reasonable, fair (or in this case, 'competitive') rate might be." Id. at 13 (emphasis deleted); see generally Kentucky W. Va. Gas Co. v. Pennsylvania Pub. Util. Comm., 837 F.2d 600, 606 \(3d Cir. 1988\); Keogh v. Chicago & N.W. Ry. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 \(1922\). Thus, in Square D Co. v. Niagara Frontier Tariff Bureau, Inc., [476 U.S. 409, \[*518\] 90 L. Ed. 2d 413, 106 S. Ct. 1922 \(1986\)](#), [\[18\]](#) the Supreme Court held that HN15⁴ a private antitrust action alleging anticompetitive rate fixing by motor carriers would not lie when those rates took the form of tariffs filed with and approved by the ICC. Accord Wegoland, Ltd. v. Nynex Corp., 806 F. Supp. 1112, 1113-16, 1125 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\), aff'd, 27 F.3d 17, 18-22 \(2d Cir. 1994\).

Here, however, BarTech is not challenging the rates charged by the C&BL for the shipment of steel, at least not directly.⁴ It is simply proposing to construct its own rail line, in the hopes of meeting its steel shipping needs more cost-effectively, and the C&BL has blocked those efforts. Put simply, BarTech's attempt to avoid a monopoly price--and the litigation that has resulted from it--does not put this court in the position of second-guessing the tariff rates approved by the STB. As the Third Circuit has stated:

[\[HN16\]](#) The filed rate doctrine] merely prevents private shippers from sustaining an award of treble damages by claiming that ICC-approved rates were the product of an antitrust violation. That . . . does not preclude liability based on non-rate anticompetitive activity. . . . We recognize that the success [19] of anticompetitive non-rate activity would coincidentally implicate rates promulgated under the jurisdiction of the ICC. It is fully consistent with [the filed rate doctrine], however, to accept these rates as lawful and nonetheless to conclude that through non-rate activities, particularly the . . . refusal to deal with potential competitors, the [defendants] effectively retarded entry of lower-cost competitors to the market. The instrument of damage . . . was the absence of the lower-cost combination.

³This does not render subsection (d)(1) superfluous. In the more typical case, one common carrier railroad will be seeking to cross the line of another. In that scenario, Board approval will be required and subsection (d)(1) will come into play.

⁴I am mindful of the possibility that BarTech might not actually intend to construct its proposed rail line, but is using the threat of doing so to induce the C&BL to lower its tariff rates. Whether or not this is a feasible strategy (the C&BL would likely have to change its tariff for all shippers), it still is not the same as one shipper's direct, litigation-based attack on a carrier's rates that could result in price discrimination and implicate the filed rate doctrine.

In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1159 (3d Cir. 1993). Accordingly, the filed rate doctrine does not apply on the facts of this case.

[20] C.

Defendant's more substantial argument is that "BarTech's antitrust claim should . . . be dismissed because it has not . . . suffered a cognizable antitrust injury."⁵ Dkt. no. 6, at14. That is, while BarTech may have suffered some injury individually because of the CB&L's refusal to deal on a grade crossing, defendant contends that there was no injury to competition and hence no damage of the type the antitrust laws were designed to protect. After careful consideration, I conclude this assertion has merit.

"Antitrust HN17 injury is a necessary . . . condition of antitrust standing." Barton & Pittinos, Inc. v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 118 F.3d 178, 182 (3d Cir. 1997). It has been defined as "an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. [21]" Mathews v. Lancaster General Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 641 (3d Cir. 1996) (citations omitted).⁶ As the Third Circuit has said, [*519] because antitrust law aims to protect competition, not competitors, a court must analyze the antitrust injury question from the viewpoint of the consumer. HN18 An antitrust plaintiff must prove that challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality of goods or services, not just his own welfare.

Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). If an antitrust plaintiff is neither a consumer nor a competitor of the defendant in the relevant market, its damages cannot constitute "antitrust injury." Barton & Pittinos, Inc., 118 F.3d at 184.

[22] Defendant relies on two Third Circuit cases to argue that, when a market itself is by law not competitive, a plaintiff cannot claim antitrust injury by asserting that the defendant's practices (here, the refusal to permit the grade crossing) restrained competition. See City of Pittsburgh v. West Penn Power Comp., 147 F.3d 256, 265-68 (3d Cir. 1998); Schuylkill Energy Resources, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405 (3d Cir. 1997). In West Penn, plaintiff claimed that a proposed merger of two power companies restrained competition in the market, but the court pointed out that, at that time, the market was regulated and not competitive, dismissing plaintiff's claim. 147 F.3d at 266-68. Similarly, in Schuylkill, the court disagreed with a cogenerator's contention that a power company's refusal to purchase its power during periods of low demand was anticompetitive, again because the power market was, by regulatory design, not competitive. 113 F.3d at 415.

⁵ To the extent that defendant's antitrust arguments are meritorious, only the antitrust claim can be dismissed, leaving the pendent state law claims for further adjudication.

⁶ This standard applies regardless of whether treble damages are sought under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, or injunctive relief is requested under section 16, 15 U.S.C. § 26. Pennsylvania v. Milk Indus. Mgt. Corp., 812 F. Supp. 500, 506 (E.D. Pa. 1992); Remington Prods., Inc. v. North Am. Philips Corp., 717 F. Supp. 36, 44-45 (D. Conn. 1989) (citing Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 111, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986) (sec. 16); Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (sec. 4)), on reconsideration, 755 F. Supp. 52, 55 (D. Conn. 1991); Alaska Teamsters Local 959 v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 616 F. Supp. 593, 609 (D. Alaska 1985); Kelly v. General Motors Corp., 425 F. Supp. 13, 18 n.5 (E.D. Pa. 1976).

Here, it is evident that BarTech is not a present or potential competitor of the CB&L, but rather a customer. As the Schuylkill court stated, HN19 "[a] [23] supplier of a product does not become a competitor of the purchaser merely because the purchaser in turn sells the product to the ultimate user." Id. Conversely, HN20 a purchaser of rail service does not become a competitor of the seller merely because the seller is the conduit between the purchaser and the interstate rail network. Indeed, if BarTech were a competitor of the CB&L, I could not have reached the conclusion I did, supra, with respect to the jurisdiction of the STB. Accordingly, in the absence of any other competition, CB&L's present rail market must be deemed as lawfully non-competitive.

Nor can it be said that the C&BL's refusal to allow a grade crossing will expand its monopoly, because it currently has and will continue to have 100% of the common carrier freight market between the main line and its customers. This makes BarTech's antitrust damages problematic; as the Eleventh Circuit has aptly commented, "it HN21 requires a long stretch to call an individual refusal to deal 'monopolizing' when it does nothing to increase the refuser's monopoly power and nothing to increase his position in any market." Mr. Furniture Whse., Inc. v. Barclays Am./Comm'l Inc., 919 F.2d 1517, 1523 \(11th Cir. 1990\) [24] (quoting P. Areeda, Antitrust Law P 736, at 274 (1978) (internal quotation marks omitted)); accord Kenneth L. Glazer & Abbot B. Lipsky, Jr., Unilateral Refusals to Deal Under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 63 Antitrust L.J. 749, 783-84 (1995) (noting that most courts "have been quick to dismiss" such claims).

In Interface Group, Inc. v. Massachusetts Port Auth., 816 F.2d 9 \(1st Cir. 1987\), a charter airline sought access to services at Logan Airport's Terminal C. When Massport refused and required the airline to use another, less favorable terminal, plaintiff sued, claiming attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act. The First Circuit, speaking through then-circuit Judge Breyer, affirmed the dismissal of this claim, opining:

It is difficult to see how denying a facility to one who, like Interface, is not an actual or potential competitor could enhance or reinforce the monopolist's market power. . . . Thus, we do not see how the facts alleged could make out the actual or potential injury to the competitive [\[*520\]](#) process necessary to show a violation of Sherman Act § 2.

Id. at 12 (citing P. Areeda & H. [\[25\]](#) Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law PP 736.2d, 736.2e (Supp.1986)).

I agree with the reasoning of these cases. Because the C&BL's refusal to permit the grade crossing did not expand its market power beyond that which it already had, any injury to BarTech from that refusal was simply not "of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Accordingly, BarTech has not suffered antitrust injury as a matter of law.⁷

D.

Finally, defendant argues that, to the extent plaintiff premises its antitrust claim on the "essential facilities doctrine," the claim must also be dismissed. I agree. HN22 To state an essential facilities claim [\[26\]](#) under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must show:

(1) control of the essential facility by a monopolist; (2) the competitor's inability practically or reasonably to duplicate the essential facility; (3) denial of the use of the facility to a competitor; and (4) the feasibility of providing the facility.

Ideal Dairy Farms, Inc. v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 748 \(3d Cir. 1996\) (emphasis added). Here, plaintiff asserts that the grade crossing is the essential facility, that it is controlled by the CB&L, a monopolist, that BarTech cannot duplicate the crossing, as, for example by choosing an alternate route, and that the crossing can be feasibly provided. Yet, plaintiff ignores the fact that HN23 the essential facilities doctrine, as a matter of law, inures only to the benefit of potential or actual competitors of an antitrust defendant. See Garsman v. Universal Resources

⁷ I "recognize that the existence of antitrust injury is not typically resolved through motions to dismiss." Schuylkill, 113 F.3d at 417. But, as in that case, the issue truly is a pure question of law, and the construction of a factual record could not change the result. Hence, the court sees little reason to put the parties to the time and expense of discovery on this issue.

73 F. Supp. 2d 512, *520 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17355, 26

Holding Inc., 824 F.2d 223, 230 (3d Cir. 1987); accord Thomas v. Network Solutions, Inc., 176 F.3d 500, 509 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 145 L. Ed. 2d 813, 120 S. Ct. 934 (1999); see generally Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 376-77 (7th Cir. 1986) [27] (Posner, J.). As stated supra, BarTech is merely a customer of the CB&L, not its competitor. As such, its essential facilities claim fails. Id.

E.

Accordingly, for the foregoing reasons, I will dismiss plaintiff's antitrust claims with prejudice.

V.

Given my disposition of the antitrust claims and my denial of defendant's motion on the jurisdictional issue, plaintiff's pendent state law claims remain for adjudication. The parties have not briefed the question of supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1337, and hence I will direct them to file briefs within twenty days on whether I should retain supplemental jurisdiction.

An appropriate order follows.

ORDER

AND NOW, this ninth day of November 1999, upon consideration of defendant's motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), dkt. no. 5, plaintiff's unopposed motion for hearing, dkt. no. 14, and the parties' arguments relative thereto, it is hereby ORDERED AND DIRECTED that:

1. the aforesaid motion to dismiss, dkt. no. 5, is GRANTED;
2. plaintiff's antitrust claims are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE;
3. the parties shall submit briefs on or before November 29, 1999 on the question [28] of whether this court should, in its discretion, retain supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining pendent state law claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1337.
- [*521] 4. the aforesaid motion for hearing is DENIED.

BY THE COURT:

D. Brooks Smith

United States District Judge

End of Document

Park Ave. Radiology Assocs., P.C. v. Methodist Health Sys.

United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

November 10, 1999, Filed

No. 98-5668

Reporter

1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 29986 *; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,712

PARK AVENUE RADIOLOGY ASSOCIATES, P.C.; DR. IAN F. MURRAY; and DR. DANIEL K. WESTMORELAND, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. METHODIST HEALTH SYSTEMS, INC.; HEALTH CHOICE, INC.; METROCARE, INC.; MEMPHIS RADIOLOGICAL PROFESSIONAL CORP.; and METHODIST HOSPITALS OF MEMPHIS, Defendants-Appellees.

Notice: [*1] NOT RECOMMENDED FOR FULL-TEXT PUBLICATION. SIXTH CIRCUIT RULE 28(g) LIMITS CITATION TO SPECIFIC SITUATIONS. PLEASE SEE RULE 28(g) BEFORE CITING IN A PROCEEDING IN A COURT IN THE SIXTH CIRCUIT. IF CITED, A COPY MUST BE SERVED ON OTHER PARTIES AND THE COURT. THIS NOTICE IS TO BE PROMINENTLY DISPLAYED IF THIS DECISION IS REPRODUCED.

Subsequent History: Reported in Table Case Format at: 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 35494.

Prior History: ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE. 92-0288. Gibbons. 4-14-98.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

antitrust, patients, district court, Plaintiffs', radiology, anti trust law, providers, Defendants', third-party, consumers, referrals, staff privileges, contractors, non-Health, inasmuch, damages, parties, anticompetitive, violations, pain, amended complaint, Sherman Act, competitors, privileges, plans

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1 [?] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews a district court's decision to dismiss a lawsuit for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) de novo. In conducting its review, the court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept as true all of the plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations, and determine whether plaintiff can prove no set of facts supporting his claims which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

The test for antitrust standing includes five factors: (1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury, including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

Plaintiffs seeking to recover damages in a private action against a violator of antitrust laws must demonstrate more than that they are in a worse position than they would have been had the violator not committed the antitrust conduct. Specifically, private antitrust plaintiffs must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Private Actions, Remedies

Antitrust injury is necessary to sustain an antitrust cause of action because the antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Counsel: For PARK AVENUE RADIOLOGY ASSOCIATES, P.C., IAN F. MURRAY, Dr., DANIEL K. WESTMORELAND, Dr., Plaintiffs - Appellants: Janet L. McDavid, John G. Roberts, Jr., Sharis Arnold Pozen, Catherine E. Stetson, Hogan & Hartson, Washington, DC.

For METHODIST HEALTH SYSTEMS, INC., HEALTH CHOICE, INC. METROCARE, INC., METHODIST HOSPITAL OF MEMPHIS, Defendants - Appellees: Thomas R. Prewitt, Jr., Armstrong, Allen, Prewitt, Gentry, Johnstone & Holmes, Memphis, TN. S. Russell Headrick, Hale, Headrick Dewey & Wolf, Memphis, TN.

For METROCARE, INC., Defendant - Appellee: Robert K. Alvarez, Lancelot L. Minor, III, Bourland, Heflin, Alvarez, & Minor, Memphis, TN.

For MEMPHIS RADIOLOGICAL PROFESSIONAL CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellee: John I. Houseal, Jr., J. N. Raines, Glankler & Brown, Memphis, TN.

Judges: BEFORE: RYAN, BATCHELDER, and CLAY, Circuit Judges. * [*2]

Opinion by: CLAY

Opinion

CLAY, Circuit Judge. Plaintiffs, Dr. Ian Murray, Dr. Daniel Westmorland and their radiology business, Park Avenue Radiology Associates, P.C., appeal from the judgment dismissing Plaintiffs' claim for lack of antitrust standing, in this antitrust action brought against Defendants, Health Choice, Inc., Metrocare, Inc., Methodist Hospitals of Memphis, its parent corporation Methodist Health Systems, Inc., and Memphis Radiological Professional Corporation. For the reasons set forth below, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs provide outpatient radiology services for patients referred to them by primary care physicians in and around Shelby County, Tennessee. Plaintiffs directly compete with Memphis Radiological Professional Corporation ("Memphis") for physician referrals. Memphis is the exclusive provider of radiology services at five hospitals in Shelby County, collectively called the "Methodist Hospitals." All five Methodist Hospitals are owned by Methodist Hospitals of Memphis ("Methodist of Memphis"), a subsidiary of Methodist Health Systems ("Methodist Health" hereinafter referred to collectively with Methodist of Memphis [*3] as "Methodist"). A sixth hospital, Crittenden Memorial Hospital in West Memphis, Arkansas, is also affiliated with Methodist.

The physicians with staff privileges at Methodist Hospitals or Crittenden Memorial are members of Metrocare, Inc., a company which negotiates with third-party payors of managed health care programs on behalf of its member physicians. Along with Methodist Health, Metrocare is a member of Health Choice, Inc., which operates a preferred provider organization ("PPO"). Plaintiffs allege that Health Choice contracts with third-party payors -- employers, insurance companies, and the like -- to make Methodist Health's hospital services and Meterocare's physician services available at discounted rates to hundreds of thousands of beneficiaries in the relevant market group. Plaintiffs also allege that before Metrocare entered into a contract with Health Choice, its physicians referred patients to Plaintiffs, as well as to Memphis for radiology services, but after it entered into the Health Choice contract, Metrocare stopped making referrals to Plaintiffs inasmuch as Health Choice physicians are required to send all Health Choice enrollees, as well as those patients who [*4] are not members of Health Choice, to Memphis.

In October of 1992, Plaintiffs filed suit against Defendants alleging that based on their defined relevant market, Defendants' contractual agreements violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, because the contractual agreements amounted to a group boycott, and exclusive dealing arrangement, a tying arrangement and price fixing. Plaintiffs also alleged a § 2 violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, claiming that the Health Choice defendants possess or conspired to possess monopoly power in the relevant market. Finally, Plaintiffs alleged several state law claims. Defendants filed motions to dismiss or for summary judgment, and the district court -- while denying Plaintiffs' Rule 56(f) request for discovery -- granted summary judgment against Plaintiffs on all counts. Plaintiffs appealed the district court's order to this Court and, in January of 1995, this Court reversed the district court's decision. See Park Ave. Radiology Assoc. v. Methodist Health Sys., Inc., 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 957, No. 93-6458, 1995 WL 16844 (6th Cir. Jan. 17, 1996) (per curiam unpublished table decision). The Court [*5] also found the district court abused its discretion when it denied Plaintiffs' Rule 56(f) motion, and remanded the case. Id.

Upon remand, Plaintiffs filed a second amended complaint challenging Defendants' allegedly anticompetitive referral policies. First, the amended complaint alleged that Defendants coerce Metrocare physicians into referring Health Choice patients to Methodist -- and thus to Memphis -- for radiology services, despite contracts that would allow Health Choice beneficiaries to use Plaintiffs' radiology services. Second, the complaint alleged that Defendants coerce Metrocare physicians into referring not only Health Choice enrollees to Methodist and Memphis; they also coerce those doctors into steering a large percentage of patients who are not enrolled with Health Choice, but with other competing plans -- plans for which Plaintiffs are a provider -- to Methodist and Memphis. Plaintiffs alleged that the effect of Defendants' arrangement is twofold: (1) Health Choice enrollees who may have chosen Plaintiffs are precluded from doing so; and (2) non-Health Choice participants whose plan options include Plaintiffs are also precluded from choosing Plaintiffs.

* Honorable Alice M. Batchelder recused herself from this case after oral argument was heard.

Plaintiffs [*6] also challenged Defendants' market allocation in its second amended complaint, noting that Doctors Murray and Westmoreland provided radiology services at Crittenden Memorial Hospital, which had affiliated with Methodist in 1995. Although Crittenden's affiliation with Methodist enabled Murray and Westmoreland to serve Health Choice patients at Crittenden, Plaintiffs were completely prevented from receiving any referrals in Shelby County, despite Murray and Westmoreland's participation in Health Choice at Crittenden.

The amended complaint also charged Defendants with several violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Counts One through Six specifically dealt with the § 1 violations and claimed that Defendants' referral practices 1) constituted a group boycott; 2) were an unlawful exclusive dealing arrangement between the Defendants and the Metrocare physicians; 3 &4) unlawfully tied, in two respects, radiology services to non-radiology services the physicians provide; 5) unreasonably restrained trade and competition in the market for radiology services; and 6) reflected a per se unlawful geographic market allocation of competitors, in view of Murray and Westmoreland's inability [*7] to service Health Choice enrollees in Shelby County, Tennessee.

In Counts Seven through Nine, Plaintiffs brought claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act, alleging specifically that Defendants had monopolized, attempted to monopolize, and conspired to monopolize the market for radiology services. Count Ten of the complaint stated a common law claim for tortious interference with business relationships. Plaintiffs sought treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, and injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26.

Defendants filed a motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' amended complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). The district court granted Defendants' motion, and dismissed Plaintiffs' action for lack of antitrust standing, finding that Plaintiffs failed to allege an antitrust injury and that, moreover, Plaintiffs were not an "efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws." Because the district court found that Plaintiffs lacked standing to pursue their federal antitrust claims, the court declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining pendent state-law claims. Plaintiffs filed this timely appeal.

[*8] ANALYSIS

HN1 [↑] This Court reviews a district court's decision to dismiss a lawsuit for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) de novo. See Cline v. Rogers, 87 F.3d 176, 179 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1008, 117 S. Ct. 510, 136 L. Ed. 2d 400 (1996). In conducting its review, the Court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept as true all of the plaintiff's well-pleaded factual allegations, and determine whether plaintiff can prove no set of facts supporting his claims which would entitle him to relief. See id. (citing In re DeLorean Motor Co., 991 F.2d 1236, 1240 (6th Cir. 1993)).

In HyPoint Tech., Inc. v. Hewlett-Packard Co., this Court succinctly described antitrust standing as follows:

Antitrust standing to sue is at the center of all antitrust law and policy. It is not a mere technicality. It is the glue that cements each suit with the purposes of the antitrust laws, and prevents abuses of those laws. The requirement of antitrust standing ensures that antitrust litigants use the laws to prevent anticompetitive action and makes certain [*9] that they will not be able to recover under the antitrust laws when the action challenged would tend to promote competition in the economic sense. Antitrust laws reflect considered policies regulating economic matters. The antitrust standing requirement makes certain that the laws are used only to deal with the economic problems whose solutions these policies were intended to effect.

949 F.2d 874, 877 (6th Cir. 1991) (emphasis added). In Southaven Land Co. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 715 F.2d 1079 (6th Cir. 1983), this Court summarized HN2¹ the test for antitrust standing as set forth by the Supreme Court in Associated General Contractors of California v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983), by enunciating the following five-factor inquiry.

(1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff and whether that harm was intended to be caused; (2) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury including the status of the plaintiff as consumer or competitor in the relevant market; (3) the directness or indirectness of the injury, and the related inquiry [*10] of whether the damages are speculative; (4) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages; and (5) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violation.

Southhaven Land Co., Inc., 715 F.2d 1079 at 1085 (citing Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. 519 at 537-44, 103 S. Ct. 897 at 908-13, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723; see Re/Max Int'l, Inc. v. Realty One, Inc., 173 F.3d 995, 1022 (6th Cir. 1999)).

Here, as found by the district court, Plaintiffs have failed to allege that they have antitrust standing so as to survive Defendants' motion to dismiss. Under the first Southhaven factor, the causal connection between the non Health Choice patients -- the group of patients for which Plaintiffs take particularly exception -- being referred improperly to Memphis and Plaintiffs decrease in patients, is tenuous. If, as Plaintiffs allege, they provide a superior product for a more competitive price, the non-Health Choice patient, either by direction of their own third-party provider or at their own economic directive, will seek Plaintiffs' services.

Next, under the second Southhaven factor, Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently [*11] allege that they suffered an antitrust injury caused by Defendants' alleged anticompetitive conduct. The "antitrust injury" requirement was first explained by the Supreme Court in Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Matic, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977), where the Court found that HN3¹ plaintiffs seeking to recover damages in a private action against a violator of antitrust laws must demonstrate more than they are in a worse position than they would have been had the violator not committed the antitrust conduct. Specifically, the Court stated that private antitrust plaintiffs must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market. Plaintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be "the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause."

Id. at 489 (citation omitted). HN4¹ Antitrust injury [*12] is necessary to sustain such a cause of action because the "antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition not competitors.'" Id. (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962)).

The district court found that Plaintiffs failed to allege antitrust injury as a matter of law inasmuch as, reduced to its essence, plaintiffs' complaint challenges the fundamental structure of the modern PPO, in that requiring in-plan referrals for plan patients is one of the primary means by which a PPO is able to fulfill its promise of increased patient volume for the preferred providers. The district court therefore concluded that when Plaintiffs asked the court to declare Health Choice's in-plan referral requirement an antitrust violation, they asked the court to remove the primary bargaining tool by which PPOs are able to reduce health care providers' prices and, as a result, consumers would therefore suffer if Plaintiffs were to prevail in this litigation, which is contrary to the purpose of antitrust laws. Relying upon several cases from various circuit courts which found that doctors who were denied [*13] staff privileges at a hospital lacked antitrust standing to sue, the district court found the case at hand indistinguishable in that here Plaintiffs -- two doctors -- were denied staff privileges at a hospital and consequently denied membership in the PPO comprised of staff doctors at that hospital.¹

¹ See, e.g., Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 801-02 (2d Cir. 1994) (holding that anesthesiologist lacked antitrust standing to challenge exclusive contract awarded to competing group of anesthesiologists); Oksanen v. Page Mem'l Hosp., 945 F.2d 696,

One such case upon which the district court relied is Leak v. Grant Medical Center, 893 F. Supp. 757 (S.D. Ohio 1995), aff'd, 103 F.3d 129 (6th Cir. 1996) (affirming for the reasons set forth in the district court's [*14] decision); cert. denied 520 U.S. 1251, 117 S. Ct. 2408, 138 L. Ed. 2d 175 (1997). In Leak, the plaintiff physician specializing in pain medicine sued when he was denied medical staff privileges at the defendant hospital. 893 F. Supp. at 759. The district court found that the plaintiff lacked antitrust standing to sue inasmuch as he had staff privileges at two other area hospitals and was therefore able to fully compete with other doctors offering pain-related medical services in the area, and accordingly failed to allege antitrust injury. Id. at 763. The Leak court further found that even though some patients' managed care insurance plans may effectively limit them to services offered at the defendant hospital, this did not alter its conclusion. Id. The court reasoned that as follows:

If plaintiffs' practice of pain medicine is, as Dr. Leak avers, truly more cost effective than traditional pain management used by anesthesiologists, then both the hospitals at which plaintiffs have privileges and plaintiffs have a competitive advantage over the defendant anesthesiologists. If pain medicine is more cost-effective than traditional [*15] pain management, then in an open and competitive marketplace managed care insurance plans should eventually be more inclined to designate those hospitals at which pain medicine is practiced. In these circumstances, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have failed to allege, or adduce evidence of, the kind of injury that antitrust laws were designed to protect.

Id. (citations and footnotes omitted).

The district court in the case at hand found that, likewise, Plaintiffs should enjoy a competitive advantage if what they allege is true. On appeal, Plaintiffs claim that the district court's holding and reasoning was short-sighted in that the court failed to consider the "non-Health Choice" patients who were being referred to Defendants. Plaintiffs claim that while it may be true that Health Choice patients are part of the PPO system, non-Health Choice patients are not and these patients are suffering because they, too, are being referred to Defendants and away from Plaintiffs who offer a better product at a more competitive price. We disagree.

Whether the patients are members of the Health Choice PPO, or whether they are members of some other third-party provider for which [*16] Plaintiffs are participants, the fact remains that if Plaintiffs are providing a superior and more cost efficient product as they allege, then the third-party providers for which the non-Health Choice members are participants will direct their members to Plaintiffs, and those patients who may not have any third party coverage will do the same in a competitive market. This is particularly true in today's health care industry where third party providers are acutely aware of costs associated with physician's services, which is precisely the reason behind the advent of PPOs and HMOs (Health Maintenance Organizations). The competition between Plaintiffs and Defendants for members and the related services will ultimately keep costs down. See Leak, 893 F. Supp. at 763-64 (citing Capital Imaging Assoc., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., Inc., 725 F. Supp. 669, 673 (N.D. N.Y. 1989) (recognizing that the selective nature of managed care insurance plans is pro-competitive and reduces health care costs); see also Valley Prods. Co., Inc. v. Landmark, a Div. of Hospitality Franchise Sys., Inc., 128 F.3d 398 (6th Cir. 1997); Axis v. Micafil, Inc., 870 F.2d 1105 (6th Cir. 1989)). [*17] Plaintiffs are competitors in this action, not consumers and, accordingly, Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently allege antitrust injury.

Under the third Southaven factor, whether the injury was direct or indirect, Plaintiffs' claim fails. Plaintiffs in this case have alleged only indirect harm inasmuch as their claimed lost profits are derivative of the alleged harm inflicted on the third parties -- the healthcare consumers and their third-party providers, if any. In Associated General Contractors, two unions brought suit against an association of building and construction contractors who entered into contracts with nonunion subcontractors, claiming that as a result of these contracts, some general contractors, the union contractors, and the unions were harmed. 459 U.S. at 540-41. The Court noted that according to the plaintiffs' complaint, the defendants "applied coercion against certain landowners and other contracting parties in order to cause them to divert business from certain union contractors to nonunion contractors. As a result, the Union's complaint alleges, the Union suffered unspecified injuries in its 'business activities.'" Id. The Court concluded [*18] that such injuries were only an indirect result of whatever harm may have been suffered by "certain" construction contractors and subcontractors. Id.

Similarly, in this case, the parties directly harmed due to the alleged violations are the healthcare consumers -- both Health Choice members and nonmembers -- and their third-party providers. Although Plaintiffs may ultimately suffer from a loss of patients and profits, their lost profits are derivative of the alleged harm inflicted on the third parties, the harm is not sufficiently causally related to the violation, and their damages are speculative in that the number of lost referrals is not easy to measure. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 551-52; see also Southaven Land, 715 F.2d at 1085; compare ReMax Int'l, Inc., 173 F.3d at 1023.

We are not persuaded otherwise by Plaintiffs' reliance upon this Court's decision in Potters Medical Center v. City Hosp. Assoc., 800 F.2d 568 \(6th Cir. 1986\). Plaintiffs contend that the district court's holding in this case is contrary to Potters; however, we disagree with Plaintiff and find Potters distinguishable. [*19] Potters was a small hospital which brought an antitrust action against a larger hospital alleging that the defendant larger hospital had, among other things, refused to grant staff privileges to doctors with privileges at Potters and pressured doctors not to seek privileges at Potters. Id. at 575. Potters brought Sherman Act claims against the defendant hospital claiming as damages lost admissions and revenues. Id. The district court concluded that Potters lacked antitrust standing because the only competition directly restrained was between doctors; however, this Court reversed the district court. Id. In doing so, the Court specifically noted that the parties actually competed for physicians, not patients, inasmuch as the more physicians a hospital had on staff, the more admissions it would receive. Id. In this context, the Court stated, the parties were in direct competition for scarce resources -- physicians -- and that it was not unreasonable to assume that doctors, if they felt compelled to choose between Potters and the much larger defendant hospital, would likely opt for the latter. Id. The Court concluded that, under these facts, it was [*20] conceivable that the defendant hospital sought to restrict physicians' staff privileges in order to foreclose competition from Potters in the hospital inpatient services market. Id. The Court then found that, under the Southaven factor of directness of the injury, the district court erred in finding that Potters was not the party directly injured. Id. at 576. The Court reasoned that if, as the defendant hospital stated, patients could only be admitted by a doctor with staff privileges, then lost admissions and revenue could be a direct result of a policy which seeks to limit the number of doctors with privileges at Potters. Id.

However, in the instant case, unlike the hospitals in Potters, it is the health care patient -- both Health Choice and non-Health Choice -- who is the party most directly injured by the alleged harm. The Potters Court never considered patients -- or "consumers" if you will -- as being the party directly injured. We agree with the district court that a more analogous case to be applied here is Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438 \(11th Cir. 1991\). There, under analogous facts, the Court [*21] of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit found that the plaintiff, a radiologist, lacked antitrust standing to sue inasmuch as he did not allege an antitrust injury, and was not an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws. Id. at 1450-52. Focusing on the directness of the injury asserted, the Eleventh Circuit stated as follows:

Dr. Todorov is simply looking to increase his profits, like any competitor. As such, Dr. Todorov is a particularly poor representative of the patients; indeed, his interests in this case are so at odds with the patients' interests that it is unlikely that he would have standing under article III of the Constitution to present their claims. Dr. Todorov is thus no champion for the cause of consumers. If the radiologists or DCH are acting anti-competitively ... then the patients, their insurers or the government, all of whom are interested in ensuring that consumers pay a competitive price, may bring an action to enjoin such practice.

Id. at 1455 (emphasis added). Likewise, in the case at hand, the injury is directed to the patients, or third-party insurers as the case may be, as opposed to Plaintiffs. See id.

[*22] Next, under the fourth and fifth Southaven factors, as noted above, the direct victims, if any, are the healthcare consumers -- both Health Choice and non-Health Choice -- as well as their third-party providers who may not be receiving the best service for the best price. As such, the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages exists if Plaintiffs were allowed to go forward inasmuch as the parties directly harmed would also have a cause of action.

CONCLUSION

In summary, considering Plaintiffs antitrust claim under the Southaven factors, they have failed to allege antitrust standing. We therefore AFFIRM the judgment of the district court dismissing Plaintiffs' claim.

End of Document

Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Local 734 Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

September 21, 1999 *, Argued ; November 15, 1999, Decided

Nos. 99-1014, 99-1197, 99-3396 & 99-3397

Reporter

196 F.3d 818 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 29907 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,754; 23 Employee Benefits Cas. (BNA) 2405
International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Local 734 Health and Welfare Trust Fund and Central States Joint Board
Health and Welfare Trust Fund, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. Philip Morris Incorporated, et al., Defendants-Appellees.
Arkansas Blue Cross and Blue Shield, et al., Plaintiffs-Appellees, v. Philip Morris Incorporated, et al., Defendants-Appellants.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) Rehearing Denied (99-3396, 99-3397) December 26, 1999, Reported at: 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 33549.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.
Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. Nos. 97 C 8113 &
97 C 8114. Blanche M. Manning, Judge. No. 98 C 2612. Elaine E. Bucklo, Judge.

Disposition: Funds' case affirmed. Blues' order reversed and the case remanded with instructions.

Core Terms

insurers, smokers, Funds, cigarettes, tobacco, costs, antitrust, smoking, suits, products, anti trust law, damages, manufacturers, cancer, remote, safer, pack, medical care, effective, cigarette manufacturer, medical costs, medical bill, federal law, conspiracy, consumer, disease, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Subrogation

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Subrogation > General Overview

HN1 Third Parties, Subrogation

The victim of a tort is the proper plaintiff, and insurers or other third-party providers of assistance and medical care to the victim may recover only to the extent their contracts subrogate them to the victim's rights.

* Appeals No. 99-1014 and 99-1197 were orally argued. The other two appeals were submitted on the briefs on October 15, 1999, because the court concluded that a second oral argument on the same subject was unnecessary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN2 [down] Private Actions, Standing

Only the immediate purchaser of goods may sue under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN3 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

To recover under the antitrust laws, the plaintiff must show that its injury flows from that which makes the conduct an antitrust problem: higher prices and lower output.

Counsel: For CENTRAL STATES JOINT BOARD HEALTH AND WELFARE TRUST FUND, LOCAL 734 INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF TEAMSTERS HEALTH AND WELFARE TRUST FUND, Plaintiffs - Appellants (99-1197): Kathy Byrne, COONEY & CONWAY, Chicago, IL USA.

For PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Stuary Altschuler, WINSTON & STRAWN, Chicago, IL USA. Herbert M. Wachtell, WACHTELL, LIPTON, ROSEN & KATZ, New York, NY USA.

For R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Sydney B. McDole, JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE, Dallas, TX USA.

For BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO, CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Kenneth N. Bass, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, Washington, DC USA.

For B.A.T. INDUSTRIES P.L.C., Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Michael T. Hannafan, HANNAFAN & ASSOCIATES, Chicago, IL USA.

For LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): George R. Dougherty, GRIPPO & ELDON, Chicago, IL USA.

For LIGGETT & MYERS, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Harold C. Wheeler, BUTLER, RUBIN, SALTARELLI & BOYD, Chicago, IL.

For U.S. TOBACCO COMPANY, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Edward M. Crane, SKADDEN, ARPS, SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM, Chicago, IL USA.

For TOBACCO INSTITUTE, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Larry E. Hepler, BURROUGHS, HEPLER, BROOM, MACDONALD & HEBRANK, Edwardsville, IL USA.

For SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Frank L. Butler, SEYFARTH, SHAW, FAIRWEATHER & GERALDSON, Chicago, IL USA.

For HILL AND KNOWLTON, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Deborah L. Kuhn, ALTHEIMER & GRAY, Chicago, IL USA.

For ADAMS APPLE DISTRIBUTING MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellee (99-1197): Michael A. Pope, MCDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, IL USA.

For CENTRAL STATES JOINT BOARD HEALTH AND WELFARE TRUST FUND, LOCAL 734 INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF TEAMSTERS HEALTH AND WELFARE TRUT FUND, Plaintiffs - Appellants (99-1014): Kathy Byrne, COONEY & CONWAYS, Chicago, IL USA.

For PHILP MORRIS INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Stuart Altschuler, WINSTON & STRAWN, Chicago, IL USA. Herbert M. Wachtell, Herbert M. Wachtell, WACHTELL, LIPTON, ROSEN & KATZ, New York, NY USA.

For R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Sydney B. McDole, JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE, Dallas, TX USA.

For BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO, CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Kenneth N. Bass, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, Washington, DC USA.

For B.A.T. INDUSTRIES P.L.C., Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Michael T. Hannafan, HANNAFAN & ASSOCIATES, CHicago, IL USA.

For LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Dawn E. Gard, GRIPPO & ELDEN, Chicago, IL USA.

For LIGGETT & MYERS, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Harold C. Wheeler, BUTLER, RUBIN, SALTARELLI & BOYD, Chicago, IL.

For U.S. TOBACCO COMPANY, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Edward M. Crane, SKADDEN, ARPS, SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM, Chicago, IL USA.

For TOBACCO INSTITUTE, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Larry E. Hepler, BURROUGHS, HEPLER, BROOM, MACDONALD & HEBRANK, Edwardsville, IL USA.

For SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Frank L. Butler, SEYFARTH, SHAW, FAIRWEATHER & GERALDSON, Chicago, IL USA.

For HILL AND KNOWLTON, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Deborah L. Kuhn, ALTHEIMER & GRAY, Chicago, IL USA.

For ADAMS APPLE DISTRIBUTING MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Michael A. Pope, MCDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, IL USA.

For COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH-U.S.A., INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellee (99-1014): Royal B. Martin, Jr., MARTIN, BROWN & SULLIVAN, Chicago, IL USA.

For ARKANSAS BLUE CROSS BLUE SHIELD, VLUE CROSS BLUE SHILED OF MISSOURI, INCORPORATED, BLUE CROSS & BLUE SHIELD OF KANSAS CITY, HEALTH CARE SERVICE, ANTHEM INSURANCE COMPANIES, Plaintiffs - Appellees (99-3396): William R. Quinlan, QUINLAN & CRISHAM, LTD., Chicago, IL.

For BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO, CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Fred A. Smith, III, SEDGWICK, DETERT, MORAN & ARNOLD, Chicago, IL USA.

For B.A.T. INDISTRIES P.L.C., Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Michael T. Hannafan, HANNAFAN & ASSOCIATES, Chicago, IL USA.

For LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): George R. Dougherty, GRIPPO & ELDON, Chicago, IL USA.

For U.S. TOBACCO COMPANY, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Edward M. Crane, SKADDEN, ARPS, SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM, Chicago, IL USA.

For COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH-U.S.A., INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Royal B. Martin, Jr., MARTIN, BROWN & SULLIVAN, Chicago, IL USA.

For HILL & KNOWLTON, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Deborah L. Kuhn, ALTHEIMER & GRAY, Chicago, IL USA.

For SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Michael T. Trucco, STAMOS & TRUCCO, Chicago, IL USA.

For TOBACCO INSTITUTE, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Larry E. Helper, BURROUGHS, HELPER, BROOM, MACDONALD & HEBRANK, Edwardsville, IL.

For LIGGETT & MYERS, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Harold C. Wheeler, BUTLER, RUBIN, SALTARELLI & BOYD, Chicago, IL.

For PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Stuart Altschuler, WINSTON & STRAWN, Chicago, IL USA.

For R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, Defendant - Appellant (99-3396): Michael A. Pope, MCDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, IL USA.

For AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY, AMERICAN HEART ASSOCIATION, AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION, AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, AMERICAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION, NATIONAL CENTER FOR TOBACCO-FREE KIDS, AMERICAN COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS, AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNAL MEDICIN, Amicus Curiae (99-3396): Leonard A. Nelson, AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Office of the General Counsel, Chicago, IL USA.

For ARKANSAS BLUE CROSS BLUE SHIELD, BLUE CROSS BLUE SHILED OF MISSOURI, INCORPORATED, BLUE CROSS & BLUE SHIELD OF KANSAS CITY, HEALTH CARE SERVICE, ANTHEM INSURANCE COMPANIES, Plaintiffs - Appellees (99-3397): William R. Quinlan, QUINLAN & CRISHAM, LTD., Chicago, IL.

For BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO, CORPORATION, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Fred A. Smith, III, SEDGWICK, DETERT, MORAN & ARNOLD, Chicago, IL USA.

For B.A.T. INDISTRIES P.L.C., Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Michael T. Hannafan, HANNAFAN & ASSOCIATES, Chicago, IL USA.

For LORILLARD TOBACCO COMPANY, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): George R. Dougherty, GRIPPO & ELDON, Chicago, IL USA.

For U.S. TOBACCO COMPANY, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Edward M. Crane, SKADDEN, ARPS, SLATE, MEAGHER & FLOM, Chicago, IL USA.

For COUNCIL FOR TOBACCO RESEARCH-U.S.A., INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Royal B. Martin, Jr., MARTIN, BROWN & SULLIVAN, Chicago, IL USA.

For HILL & KNOWLTON, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Deborah L. Kuhn, ALTHEIMER & GRAY, Chicago, IL USA.

For SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Michael T. Trucco, STAMOS & TRUCCO, Chicago, IL USA.

For TOBACCO INSTITUTE, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Larry E. Helper, BURROUGHS, HELPER, BROOM, MACDONALD & HEBRANK, Edwardsville, IL.

For LIGGETT & MYERS, INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Harold C. Wheeler, BUTLER, RUBIN, SALTARELLI & BOYD, Chicago, IL.

For PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Stuart Altschuler, WINSTON & STRRAWN, Chicago, IL USA.

For R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, Defendant - Appellant (99-3397): Michael A. Pope, MCDERMOTT, WILL & EMERY, Chicago, IL USA.

For AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY, AMERICAN HEART ASSOCIATION, AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION, AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, AMERICAN PUBLIC HEALTH ASSOCIATION, NATIONAL CENTER FOR TOBACCO-FREE KIDS, AMERICAN COLLEGE OF PHYSICIANS, AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNAL MEDICIN, Amicus Curiae (99-3397): Leonard A. Nelson, AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Office of the General Counsel, Chicago, IL USA.

Judges: Before Easterbrook, Kanne, and Evans, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: EASTERBROOK

Opinion

[*820] Easterbrook, Circuit Judge. States that sued tobacco companies have been promised more than $ 200 billion in settlement over a 25-year period. Awed by this success, health insurers (including ERISA welfare benefit funds) have filed me-too suits, contending that the tobacco producers must compensate the insurers for the costs of smokers' health care. Defendants have been unwilling to settle these suits, however, and insurers have lost all three cases that have reached appellate courts. See Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., [*821] 171 F.3d 912 (3d Cir. 1999); Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris Inc., 185 F.3d 957 (9th Cir. 1999); [2] Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 191 F.3d 229, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19576 (2d Cir. Aug. 18, 1999). Each court held that the loss suffered by insurers is too remote from the activity of making and promoting cigarettes--for insurers do not buy cigarettes but are affected only indirectly, through reverberations from smokers' decisions. Insurers usually may elect to litigate tort claims on behalf of their insureds, using the proceeds first to cover medical costs, but they have disdained the option. They want to recover directly from tobacco producers precisely in order to bypass the elements of subrogation actions--principally, that the insurer demonstrate the existence of a tort and the lack of any defenses to liability. By suing directly, plaintiffs seek to recover even if none of their beneficiaries could prevail in tort litigation. The three appellate decisions disapprove this maneuver and hold that insurers may recover only to the extent that they can step into the shoes of their insureds. Plaintiffs in cases that we have consolidated for consideration want us to depart from these decisions.

Welfare benefit funds usually turn heaven and earth to ensure [3] that litigation against them proceeds in federal court. Funds appear to believe that state judges are more liberal than federal judges with other people's money. Demonstrating consistency in this belief, the Teamsters Health and Welfare Trust Fund and the Central States Joint Board Health and Welfare Trust Fund filed suit against the cigarette manufacturers in an Illinois court. None of the tobacco manufacturers is incorporated or has a principal place of business in Illinois, so to forestall removal under the diversity jurisdiction the Funds named as defendants several local distributors. Defendants removed the suit anyway, contending that the distributors should be ignored because they are not realistically exposed to liability. See Poulos v. Naas Foods, Inc., 959 F.2d 69 (7th Cir. 1992). The Funds submit that the manufacturers collusively suppressed research into the health effects of tobacco, lied to the public about these effects, and conspired to suppress the output (and increase the price) of safer cigarettes. District Judge Manning concluded that the distributors' presence is an instance of fraudulent joinder, that the claim comes within the federal court's [4] original jurisdiction, see 28 U.S.C. § 1332\(a\), and therefore that it was properly removed under 28 U.S.C. § 1441. 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6831. She added that the complaint also alleges claims under federal law, so that § 1331 likewise supplies original jurisdiction. Judge Manning then dismissed the complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), ruling that all of the Funds' alleged injuries are too remote from the manufacturers' supposed wrongdoing.

While the Funds were trying to avoid federal court, several health insurers were eagerly seeking it out. The Blue Cross and Blue Shield associations of Arkansas, Connecticut, Illinois, Kentucky, Missouri, and North Dakota, joined by affiliated insurers (collectively "the Blues"), filed suit in the Northern District of Illinois under § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68. Why federal court in Illinois as the venue for litigation against the tobacco industry? The answer appears to be Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wisconsin v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406 (7th Cir. 1995), [5] which the Blues read as holding that they are entitled to sue directly for wrongs done to their insureds. This suit was assigned to District Judge Bucklo, who shares the Blues' understanding of Marshfield Clinic and denied the cigarette manufacturers' motions to dismiss. 47 F. Supp. 2d 936. Judge Bucklo concluded that the issue is debatable, however, and certified the issue for interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\) so that we could resolve the [*822] question. 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12096. A motions panel accepted the appeals and consolidated the Blues' suit with the Funds' for appellate resolution. Although the rationale for certification was the desirability of obtaining a prompt answer to the question whether Marshfield Clinic commits this circuit to a position at variance with the other courts of appeals, our authority extends beyond this subject: we review the order, not the issue. Yamaha Motor Corp. v. Calhoun, 516 U.S. 199, 204-05, 133 L. Ed. 2d 578, 116 S. Ct. 619 (1996); Edwardsville National Bank & Trust Co. v. Marion Laboratories, Inc., 808 F.2d 648, 650-51 (7th Cir. 1987). Thus [6] both sides have briefed the appeals on the assumption that we will decide whether the Blues' complaint should be dismissed outright for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted.

Federal jurisdiction is the first order of business, but discussion does not take long. Because the Funds' complaint explicitly invokes federal law, their suit "arises under" federal law for purposes of § 1331 and therefore was properly removed under § 1441. For example, P261 of the lengthy complaint asserts that "unless enjoined from doing so, Defendants will continue to engage in a contract, combination, or conspiracy in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1". Paragraph 8 of the complaint asserts that the claim arises under "federal and state laws, including civil RICO". The reference to federal law and RICO is telling. So defendants were entitled to remove--and this without any need for us to consider either fraudulent joinder or the complex question whether a claim of this nature by an ERISA welfare benefit fund arises under ERISA itself. Cf. Health Cost Controls of Illinois, Inc. v. Washington, 187 F.3d 703 (7th Cir. 1999).

Because three other appellate courts [7] have issued comprehensive opinions on the merits of plaintiffs' claims, we just hit the highlights, mentioning only our principal reasons for agreeing with these decisions.

For more than 100 years state and federal courts have adhered to the principle (under both state and federal law) that HN1[] the victim of a tort is the proper plaintiff, and that insurers or other third-party providers of assistance and medical care to the victim may recover only to the extent their contracts subrogate them to the victim's rights. See, e.g., United States v. Standard Oil Co., 332 U.S. 301, 91 L. Ed. 2067, 67 S. Ct. 1604 (1947) (holding that only Congress can authorize a direct claim by the United States to recover the cost of medical care furnished to soldiers); Mobile Life Insurance Co. v. Brame, 95 U.S. 754, 24 L. Ed. 580 (1877) (federal common law); Rock Island Bank v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 692 F.2d 1100, 1106-07 (7th Cir. 1982) (Illinois law); Anthony v. Slaid, 52 Mass. 290 (1846). But plaintiffs forswear subrogation, denouncing that mechanism as inadequate because smokers' suits against cigarette manufacturers usually are [8] unsuccessful. Indeed they are; juries in these suits tend to believe that, although tobacco is an inherently dangerous product, the smokers knew and accepted the risks of their activity. See W. Kip Viscusi, Smoking: Making the Risky Decision 62-86 (1992) (finding that smokers overestimate the hazards); John Z. Ayanian & Paul D. Cleary, Perceived Risks of Heart Disease and Cancer Among Cigarette Smokers, 281 J. Am. Medical Ass'n 1019 (1999) (finding that smokers are substantially more likely than nonsmokers to predict health problems for themselves, but that a large portion of smokers view themselves as having an average likelihood of avoiding heart disease and cancer). The hazards of tobacco are today widely known, reflected in stern warnings on every package of cigarettes; the Surgeon General issued a public alert 35 years ago; many smokers who got into the habit before then were aware of tobacco's reputation as a dangerous product.

The outcome of smokers' suits is why the Funds and Blues want to sue in [*823] their own names; they choose antitrust and RICO because, in the Blues' words, "assumption of the risk, contributory negligence and similar defenses are not pertinent". [9] This is exactly why plaintiffs must lose. A third-party payor has no claim if its insured did not suffer a tort; no rule of law requires persons whose acts cause harm to cover all of the costs, unless these acts were legal wrongs. The food industry puts refined sugar in many products, making them more tasty; as a result some people eat too much (or eat the wrong things) and suffer health problems and early death. No one supposes, however, that sweet foods are defective products on this account; chocoholics can't recover in tort from Godiva Chocolatier; it follows that the Funds and the Blues can't recover from Godiva either. The same reasoning applies when the defendant is Philip Morris. If, as the Funds and the Blues say, the difference is that Philip Morris has committed civil wrongs while Godiva has not, then the way to establish this is through tort suits, rather than through litigation in which the plaintiffs seek to strip their adversaries of all defenses. Given the posture of these cases we must assume, as the complaints allege, that the cigarette manufacturers have lied to the public about the safety of their products. But lies matter only if customers are deceived. Whether [10] smokers relied to their detriment on tobacco producers' statements is a central question in tort litigation, a question that cannot be dodged by the device of an insurers' direct suit.

Multiple rules of antitrust law interdict plaintiffs' efforts to enlist the Sherman Act in their campaign. The most obvious is the direct-purchaser rule of Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), and Kansas v. Utilicorp United Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 (1990). These cases hold that HN2[¹] only the immediate purchaser of goods may sue under the antitrust laws. Any other approach, the Court concluded, poses a risk of double recovery and makes calculation of damages a nightmare. Just so here. Plaintiffs allege that the cigarette manufacturers conspired to keep safer products off the market. The direct purchaser--the consumer who either paid too much for the product, or did not have access to a better product at the same price--is the smoker. Insurers' injury arises only indirectly. Permitting the insurers to recover creates a risk of multiple recovery, for smokers could file antitrust actions on their 11 own behalf. Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931, 99 S. Ct. 2326 (1979). (Plaintiffs' contention that smokers could not recover under the antitrust laws because they are not injured in their "business or property", 15 U.S.C. § 15(a), is silly. Paying too much, or getting an inferior product for the same money, or getting a product that causes deferred injury and medical expenses, causes a loss of one's money, which is "property." That's the point of Reiter, a consumer suit.) Insurers' recovery also would create a horrible problem of damages calculation-and difficulty in calculating damages because the plaintiff's injury is remote from the antitrust violation is an independent obstacle to recovery. See Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983).

Plaintiffs say that they are injured by the amount they pay to provide medical care for smokers afflicted by lung cancer, heart disease, and other ailments. Put to one side the difficulty of determining what portion of these diseases is attributable to cigarettes. 12 Statistical methods could provide a decent answer--likely a more accurate answer than is possible when addressing the equivalent causation question in a single person's suit. No, the problem for insurers is determining what it means for a financial intermediary to be injured by paying for medical care. Everyone dies eventually, usually after illness. An insurer must cover these costs even if the cause is natural. To determine damages, therefore, it is essential to compare the costs *824 the insurers actually incurred against the costs they would have incurred had cigarettes been safer. Is death from lung cancer at age 60 more costly to an insurer than the same person's death from a different kind of cancer later in life? The longer an insured lives in good health, the more reserves an insurer accumulates to cover eventual illness; it is necessary to consider both the income and the expenditure sides of the insurer's balance sheet. The income side of the balance sheet includes higher premiums paid by smokers (or employers on smokers' behalf). Having collected extra money from the smokers (or groups of employees that comprise smokers) to cover the eventual illness, an insurer can't turn 13 around and collect from the tobacco manufacturer for the same outlay. Insurers have actuaries whose life work is making accurate estimates of the costs of smoking (and other risky activities) and enabling the insurer to collect these in advance from insureds. An auto insurer that charges male drivers under the age of 26 an extra premium to reflect the increased probability of dangerous driving can't also sue auto manufacturers for selling cars to these drivers and putting the youths in a position to cause accidents. Logically insurers could collect only for the net outlay produced by the risky activity; but there will be such a net outlay only if the insurers' actuaries are not calculating rates correctly. Difficulties in determining damages for our plaintiffs would dwarf the difficulties that the Court held in Associated General Contractors prevented unions from collecting damages from employers that promoted non-union firms and thus undercut the unions' "business."

We do not doubt that cigarette smoking causes heart disease, lung cancer, other medical problems, and early death--all of which are costly to smokers, employers, and society as a whole. Smokers lose years of their 14 lives; employers lose years of productivity; society loses not only this productivity but also the companionship and other benefits that the smokers provide to their families and loved ones. We may assume that at least in retrospect many smokers conclude that these costs exceed the pleasures of smoking. Our point is that smokers (and their employers) pay for the medical costs, in advance, through higher insurance rates (or, equivalently, lower wages in a medical-care-plus-wage compensation package). The Funds and the Blues are just financial intermediaries. They collect the premiums and spend them to provide the contracted-for care; their books balance whether the costs of care are high or low. Smokers, employers, and other purchasers of insurance, not the Funds and the Blues, foot the medical bill in the end.

Plaintiffs and a number of medical groups (such as the American Cancer Society) appearing on their behalf as amici curiae contend that this litigation will ensure that tobacco companies rather than smokers pay for the costs of illness. We very much doubt that courts have any ability to shift the costs of smoking in the long run. Original Great American Chocolate Chip Cookie Co. v. River Valley Cookies, Ltd., 970 F.2d 273, 282 (7th Cir. 1992). [15] If tobacco companies must supply insurance with every pack, then the price of cigarettes will rise by the cost of that insurance (plus the administrative costs of providing insurance via the tort system); smokers still bear the costs in the end. See R.H. Coase, The Problem of Social Cost, 3 J.L. & Econ. 1 (1960). The amicus brief views the higher price per pack as a benefit, because people smoke less as price rises. See Gary S. Becker, Michael Grossman & Kevin M. Murphy, An Empirical Analysis of Cigarette Addiction, 84 Am. Econ. Rev. 396 (1994); Jon D. Hanson & Kyle D. Logue, The Costs of Cigarettes: An Empirical Case for Ex Post Incentive-Based Regulation, 107 Yale L.J. 1163, 1213-14, 1218 (1998) (citing other studies of demand elasticities). But rational smokers respond to real prices, not nominal ones. A pack of cigarettes that costs $ 1 and carries a deferred medical bill [*825] with a present value of $ 2 costs the smoker $ 3 in all; changing the price to $ 3 with no medical bill (because the seller will cover medical costs) does not affect the real price and therefore will not alter behavior unless consumers misunderstand what they [16] are getting for their money. Plaintiffs, who accuse the defendants of deceiving smokers, can't argue that their proposed system is "good deceit" and therefore a social improvement. Anyway, the wisdom of a radical change in the payment system for medical services is for legislatures or markets to consider; it is no part of the judicial function (and not a reasonable interpretation of the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890) to decree a sudden, ex post shift in the financial consequences of selling a consumer product by attaching what would amount to a regressive excise tax. See Stephen Williams, The More Law, the Less Rule of Law, 2 Green Bag 2d 403, 406-09 (1999); Jeremy Bulow & Paul Klemperer, The Tobacco Deal, Brookings Papers on Economic Activity (1999).

Lack of antitrust injury is a further problem with plaintiffs' position. See HN3↑ Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977); Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986); Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990); [17] Ehredt Underground, Inc. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 90 F.3d 238 (7th Cir. 1996). To recover under the antitrust laws, the plaintiff must show that its injury flows from that which makes the conduct an antitrust problem: higher prices and lower output. But the Funds and the Blues do not say that the output of cigarettes is too low as a result of a conspiracy; they say that it is too high! A lower output (or a higher price) might injure the smokers, who want to get their immediate pleasure for less, but it would benefit whoever pays for the smokers' medical care. The conspiracy that plaintiffs allege is not one to raise prices directly; it is a conspiracy to suppress evidence of risks and to keep safer products off the market. Cast either way, however, the claim is that the conspiracy raises the effective price. Disclosures that raise the smokers' estimates of cigarettes' danger would make them less willing to pay; the information would reveal that cigarettes are lower-quality products, which must sell for lower prices. Suppose the cigarette producers had brought safer products to market, selling them for the same price as their current products. The demand for [18] these would have been higher (as consumers see them, the effective price is lower, because the deferred medical bill per pack is lower). Would total medical costs have gone up or down as a result, when each pack is safer but more packs are sold? That is a very complex question; some responsible students of the subject believe that the elasticity of demand is such that "safer" cigarettes are actually more dangerous in the aggregate (because nicotine per cigarette is down and the smoker needs more to get the same effect, because the medical cost per pack drops, or both). But no matter how this subject comes out, the debate is (a) at least as intractable as the elasticity questions in Illinois Brick and Associated General Contractors, and (b) unrelated to antitrust injury.

What we have said about antitrust carries over to RICO, because in Holmes v. SIPC, 503 U.S. 258, 112 S. Ct. 1311, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532 (1992), the Supreme Court applied to RICO the same approach to remote injuries that Associated General Contractors developed for antitrust. See also, e.g., Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange National Bank, 877 F.2d 1333 (7th Cir. 1989); Carter v. Berger, 777 F.2d 1173 (7th Cir. 1985). [19] The injury for which the plaintiffs seek compensation is remote indeed, the chain of causation long, the risk of double recovery palpable because smokers can file their own RICO suits, and the damages wickedly hard to calculate, so the claim therefore flunks Holmes just as [*826] it flunked Associated General Contractors. The "racketeering acts" of which the plaintiffs complain all concern alleged misstatements about the relation between smoking and health. These statements were not made to the Funds and the Blues; they were made to society as a whole, and affected the Funds and the Blues (if at all) only because they may have influenced smokers.

Insurers responded not to the statements but to the medical results (and costs) of smoking; for insurers it is outcomes, not words, that matter. To the extent the manufacturers' statements were designed to influence Congress--to get favorable laws and ward off unfavorable ones--they cannot be a source of liability directly under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. See Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965); [20] California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972); Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611, 113 S. Ct. 1920 (1993). (Although the Noerr-Pennington doctrine originated in antitrust law, its rationale is equally applicable to RICO suits.) We doubt that the collateral effects of the statements on smokers and derivatively on insurers is a better source of liability. Even if it is sound in principle, however, it risks double recovery (smokers could bring their own RICO suits), and the translation from principle to damages has too many intermediate steps.

Whether or not the activities of which plaintiffs complain gulled unsophisticated customers, they could not have deceived the insurers, who have on their staffs physicians with ready access not only to the Surgeon General's conclusions and medical databases but also direct access to information about health costs. Of all entities in society, insurers have the best information about the relation between smoking and health problems. Plaintiffs hint at an argument that they [21] were deceived by the tobacco companies and as a result did not conduct programs to educate their insureds about the dangers of smoking, which led to higher health expenses later on. The third circuit analyzes this variant of the argument in detail. 171 F.3d at 927-32. We agree with its conclusion that this contention is hopelessly speculative. Just what would the insurers have done, had they known more earlier? How effective would this campaign have been? Or: why should we think that insurers would succeed where the Surgeon General and warnings on the product failed? The insurers now have all the information they say they lacked years ago, but what reason have we to believe that this knowledge by insurers has affected cigarette consumption? How would any change have affected the receipt side of the insurers' ledger? Insurers have been offering lower rates to nonsmokers for a long time; what is the net effect of these rates on smoking, health, and profits?

According to the plaintiffs and the district judge in the Blues' suit, Marshfield Clinic establishes that in this circuit, at least, insurers that paid medical bills are entitled to recover for injuries to [22] patients. Unless we overrule Marshfield Clinic, they insist, we must depart from the views of the other circuits. But Marshfield Clinic does not countenance recovery by insurers whose balance sheets are affected by substances that made their insureds ill. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Wisconsin contended that the Marshfield Clinic and its physicians monopolized the market for certain kinds of medical services in northern Wisconsin. Many of the overpriced services were paid for directly by the Blues; our panel stressed that "the money went directly from Blue Cross to the Clinic, and although the two entities were not linked by any overarching contract, each payment and acceptance was a separate completed contract. We do not think [23] more is required to establish Blue Cross's right to sue to collect these overcharges." 65 F.3d at 1414. Direct payment of an overcharge to a monopolist satisfied both Illinois Brick and Associated General Contractors, we held. Although the Blues dealt directly with the accused monopolist in Wisconsin, neither the Blues nor the Funds have any direct dealings with the cigarette manufacturers. That makes all the difference, as we remarked [24] pointedly in Marshfield Clinic: "If the patients paid the entire fees to the Clinic and then were reimbursed in whole or part by Blue Cross, the Clinic would be right: only the patients could sue." 65 F.3d at 1414. Here, the smokers alone bought and used tobacco products; plaintiffs may pay the resulting bills directly to hospitals and physicians, but this does not produce a direct injury, for physicians and hospitals are not committing any wrong (or conspiring with anyone else who is) against either the smokers or their insurers. Nelson v. Monroe Regional Medical Center, 925 F.2d 1555 (7th Cir. 1991), and In re EDC, Inc., 930 F.2d 1275 (7th Cir. 1991), the other cases on which the Blues principally rely, are similarly inapposite.

Because we have assumed throughout this opinion that both the Funds and the Blues pay hospitals directly, rather than reimbursing smokers, the Blues' arguments that they are entitled to special treatment as "direct payors" gets them nowhere. The problem for both the Funds and the Blues is not that they deal with smokers rather than with providers of medical care (though per Illinois Brick that would [24] be a stopper) but that they do not deal with tobacco producers, the supposed wrongdoers. The Blues contend that they have a special role in the health care system, and in many respects this is true. But the differences do not affect analysis under antitrust laws or ERISA. The injury (if any) that the Blues sustain from the sale of tobacco products is no greater, no more direct, and no more easily ascertainable, than the injury suffered by ERISA welfare benefit funds or other kinds of insurers. To the extent that Blue Cross & Blue Shield of New Jersey, Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 36 F. Supp. 2d 560 (E.D. N.Y. 1999), as amended under the name National Asbestos Workers Medical Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 74 F. Supp. 2d 221, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14041 (1999), reaches a different conclusion, we disapprove it. (The district court's first decision in Blue Cross & Blue Shield of New Jersey fails to anticipate the second circuit's conclusion in Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund; the amended decision is a thinly disguised refusal to accept and follow the second circuit's holding.)

Finally, a brief mention of state law. Both the Funds and the Blues advance [25] claims under state law. The Funds rely on Illinois law; we cannot tell whose law the Blues want us to apply. Their brief is a pastiche, turning from Texas's version of RICO to South Dakota's antitrust law to a decision of the Supreme Court of Minnesota, State v. Philip Morris Inc., 551 N.W.2d 490 (Minn. 1996), but not informing us what law the choice-of-law principles of Illinois (the forum state) would select for this suit. Minnesota is an outlier with respect to suits by remotely affected persons, and we cannot imagine any argument for the application of Minnesota law to the disputes between these plaintiffs and the defendants. Florida is a second outlier, having enacted a statute authorizing direct actions without regard to defenses that would be available when payors are subrogated to smokers' rights. Fla. Stat. § 409.910(1). No one contends that Florida law governs our disputes, however, and at all events the Florida statute is limited to suits seeking to recover Medicaid outlays. Maryland has a weaker version of this law. 1998 Md. Laws 122. As far as we can see, the remaining 47 states enforce the normal rule that a third-party payor may recover as subrogee [26] or not at all. Illinois, in particular, follows this rule. Adler v. William Blair & Co., 271 Ill. App. 3d 117, 648 N.E.2d 226, 207 Ill. Dec. 770 (1st Dist. 1995); Kraft Chemical Co. v. Illinois Bell Telephone Co., 240 Ill. App. 3d 192, 608 N.E.2d 243, 181 Ill. Dec. 170 (1st [*828] Dist. 1992). Illinois does not follow the Illinois Brick doctrine. 740 ILCS 10/7(2). But in other respects Illinois antitrust law uses the federal approach, see O'Regan v. Arbitration Forums, Inc., 121 F.3d 1060, 1066 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that Illinois would apply the federal remoteness approach to a claim under state antitrust laws), and, as we have observed, the Illinois Brick doctrine is only one of several obstacles to insurers' recovery on an antitrust claim. The direct-purchaser doctrine of Illinois Brick and the direct-injury doctrine of Associated General Contractors are analytically distinct. Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 476, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982); Mid-State Fertilizer, 877 F.2d at 1336. Because Illinois' statutory alteration of the Illinois Brick doctrine appears [27] to be the only potentially important difference between Illinois law and the law of the other states that has been thoroughly canvassed by our colleagues in other circuits, it is unnecessary to offer an extended treatment of Illinois law here.

In the Funds' case the judgment is affirmed. In the Blues' case the order is reversed, and the case is remanded with instructions to dismiss the complaint.

Randall v. Buena Vista County Hosp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Iowa, Central Division

November 19, 1999, Decided ; November 19, 1999, Filed

No. C 98-3018-MWB

Reporter

75 F. Supp. 2d 946 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439 **

DAN RANDALL, Plaintiff, vs. BUENA VISTA COUNTY HOSPITAL, JAMES O. NELSON, Individually and as Administrator of the Buena Vista County Hospital, BUENA VISTA CLINIC FOUNDATION, and DARRELL PRITCHARD, Individually and as Administrator of the Buena Vista Clinic Foundation, Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendants' motion for summary judgment granted in part and denied in part.

Core Terms

Clinic, termination, anesthesia, handbook, defendants', privileges, provider, asserts, summary judgment motion, Sherman Act, patients, boycott, liberty interest, summary judgment, rule of reason, group boycott, conspiracy, genuine issue of material fact, public policy, provisions, market power, effective, terms, restraint of trade, property interest, anticompetitive, notice, staff, anesthesiologists, exclusive contract

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

On a defendants' motion for summary judgment, the undisputed facts as well as the parties' factual disputes must be viewed through the lens of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

A party against whom a claim is asserted may, at any time, move for summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part thereof. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(b\). Thereon the judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

The trial judge's function at the summary judgment stage of the proceedings is not to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter, but to determine whether there are genuine issues for trial. An issue of material fact is genuine if it has a real basis in the record. As to whether a factual dispute is material, the United States Supreme Court has explained, only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment.

Administrative Law > ... > Hearings > Right to Hearing > Due Process

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

HN4 Right to Hearing, Due Process

To set forth a procedural due process violation, a plaintiff, first, must establish that his protected liberty or property interest is at stake. A state employee is entitled to a hearing or some related form of due process before being deprived of a constitutionally protected property or liberty interest. The Due Process Clause requires the government to provide an employee with procedural due process if the employee stands to lose a constitutionally protected property or liberty interest.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Duration of Employment

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Public Employees

HN5 Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

When a public employee asserts a protected property interest in his or her employment, the public employee must show that the protected property interest is derived from a source such as state law, which requires a showing that the employee could have been fired only for good cause. For a property interest to exist, the public employee must have a legitimate claim of entitlement to continued employment. While a public employee with a protected property interest in continued employment is entitled to due process before termination, where the claimant can show only that he or she was an at-will employee, the claimant lacks the necessary property interest in his or her employment.

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN6 Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

A public employee with a protected property interest in continued employment receives due process if there is notice and an opportunity to respond to charges of misconduct before her termination and if post-termination administrative review procedures are available.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Contracts > Conditions & Terms > Discharges

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Duration of Employment

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Breach of Contract > For Cause Standard

HN7 Conditions & Terms, Discharges

A property interest in employment requires a showing that the employee could only be terminated for cause.

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Breach of Contract > For Cause Standard

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN8 Breach of Contract, For Cause Standard

A protected property interest in employment requires a showing that the employee could have been fired only for good cause. For a property interest to exist, the public employee must have a legitimate claim of entitlement to continued employment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN9 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

To set forth a procedural due process violation, a plaintiff, first, must establish that his protected liberty or property interest is at stake.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Labor & Employment Law > Employee Privacy > Disclosure of Employee Information > Public Employees

HN10 Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

An employee's liberty interests are implicated when, in connection with the employee's discharge, a government official makes accusations that seriously damage the employee's standing in the community or foreclose other employment opportunities. A public employee is therefore entitled to notice and a name-clearing hearing when fired under circumstances imposing a stigma on her professional reputation. However, no liberty interest is implicated if there are no public accusations that would stigmatize the employee.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Labor & Employment Law > Employee Privacy > Disclosure of Employee Information > Public Employees

HN11[] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

There is a line of public employee cases holding that a public body may not discharge anyone, even an employee without a contractual or property right in his job, and make public reasons for the discharge involving stigma or obloquy, without giving the employee a right to clear his or her name at some kind of a due-process hearing. However, such a liberty theory fails if the defendant never made public any stigmatizing reasons for its action.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Labor & Employment Law > Employee Privacy > Disclosure of Employee Information > Public Employees

HN12[] Procedural Due Process, Scope of Protection

An employee's liberty interests are implicated when, in connection with the employee's discharge, a government official makes accusations that seriously damage the employee's standing in the community or foreclose other employment opportunities. Absent such a liberty interest, his due process claim must fail.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN13[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust act makes it unlawful to form a conspiracy in restraint of trade. 15 U.S.C.S. §1. Thus, to demonstrate a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. §1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must provide proof of an illegal contract, combination, or conspiracy which results in an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

A conspiracy in restraint of trade may be either per se illegal or subject to a rule of reason. Restraints which have a pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are illegal per se under 15 U.S.C.S. §1 without inquiry into the reasonableness of the restraint or the harm caused. Analysis of whether a restriction's harm to competition outweighs any pro-competitive effects is necessary if the anticompetitive impact of a restraint is less clear or the restraint is necessary for a product to exist at all.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN15 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

While certain types of restraint are so inherently anticompetitive that they are illegal per se, without inquiry into the reasonableness of the restraint or the harm caused, the rule of reason analysis involves an inquiry into the market structure and the defendant's market power in order to assess the actual effect of the restraint. It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act. Therefore, per se treatment is appropriate once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN16 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The elements of a claim of conspiracy in restraint of trade are the following: (1) there was an agreement among the defendants in restraint of trade; (2) the plaintiff was injured as a direct and proximate result; and (3) the plaintiff's damages are capable of ascertainment and not speculative. The first element is established by proof that there was an agreement in restraint of trade and that the challenged action was 'part of or pursuant to that agreement. Furthermore, in order to prove that 15 U.S.C.S. §1 defendants were acting pursuant to a conspiracy, a plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged coconspirators acted independently, because conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN17 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to satisfy the causation element of a 15 U.S.C.S. §1 case, the plaintiff must show that the defendants' anticompetitive acts were an actual, material cause of the alleged harm to competition. A material cause is a substantially contributing factor. Furthermore, antitrust injury is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and flows from that which makes defendants acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN18 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such forcing is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN19 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Courts condemn tying arrangements only when the seller has some special ability, usually called "market power," to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN20 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Per se condemnation, condemnation without inquiry into actual market conditions, is only appropriate if the existence of forcing is probable. Thus, application of the per se rule focuses on the probability of anticompetitive consequences. Courts refuse to condemn tying arrangements unless a substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed thereby. Once this threshold is surmounted, per se prohibition is appropriate if anticompetitive forcing is likely. The strict rule is appropriate in situations in which the existence of market power is probable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN21 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The "rule of reason" analysis involves an inquiry into the market structure and the defendant's market power in order to assess the actual effect of the restraint.

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN22 [] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

There is nothing obviously anticompetitive about a hospital choosing one staffing pattern over another or in restricting the staffing to some rather than many, or all. A hospital has an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and number to whom it accords staff privileges. Malpractice concerns, quality of care, market perceptions, cost, and administrative considerations may all impact those decisions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN23 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Those cases involving staffing at a single hospital invariably analyze those circumstances under the "rule of reason". Conspiracies in restraint of trade may be per se illegal, but most antitrust claims are analyzed under a "rule of reason," according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN24 [] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

The United States Supreme Court has held that the means used to restrain competition are irrelevant. What is important is that an anticompetitive motive propel the actions. It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the statute condemns.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN25 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A group boycott results in impermissible harm even if it results in lower prices or temporarily stimulates competition because such boycotts have, by their nature and character, a monopolistic tendency to restrain free trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN26 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Classic boycotts include those in which a group of business competitors seeks to benefit economically by excluding other competitors from the market place.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN27 [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

"Group boycotts" are generally per se illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN28 [] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The market definition and market power analysis is not necessarily required where there is evidence of actual detrimental effects. If either market power or actual detrimental effects are shown, the burden shifts to the defendant to demonstrate pro-competitive effects. If that demonstration is made, the plaintiff must then try to show that any legitimate objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner.

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Unilateral Contracts > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Duration of Employment

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > At Will Employment > Exceptions > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Exceptions > Tort Exceptions > Public Policy Violations

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Breach of Contract > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Breach of Contract > Employer Handbooks

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Public Policy

HN29 [] Types of Contracts, Unilateral Contracts

Under Iowa law, employment relationships in Iowa are presumed to be at-will. In the absence of a valid employment contract, an employer may discharge an employee at any time, for any reason, or no reason at all. Courts recognize only two narrow exceptions to this general rule: (1) where the discharge clearly violates a well-recognized and defined public policy of the state; and (2) where a unilateral contract is created by an employer's handbook or policy manual.

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Breach of Contract > Employer Handbooks

Healthcare Law > ... > Employment Issues > Wrongful Termination > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > At Will Employment > Exceptions > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Exceptions > Tort Exceptions > Public Policy Violations

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Public Policy

HN30[] Breach of Contract, Employer Handbooks

The public policy and handbook exceptions to Iowa's at-will employment policy apply in the absence of a valid employment contract.

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN31[] Employment Relationships, At Will Employment

See Iowa Code § 20.7\(3\).

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Public Employees

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN32[] At Will Employment, Public Employees

Iowa Code § 20.7\(3\) does not negate the presumption of at-will employment for all public employees covered under this provision of the Iowa Public Employment Relations Act.

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > Public Employees

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Exceptions > Tort Exceptions > Public Policy Violations

HN33[] At Will Employment, Public Employees

Iowa Code § 20.7\(3\) does not itself establish any public policy against at-will termination of a public employee.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination

HN34 [] Sherman Act, Claims

Where claims depend upon proof of the same elements, they are duplicative, and only one may be submitted to the jury. Alternative theories may be submitted to the jury, but duplicative damages awards compensating for the same loss are not permitted. Therefore, a wrongful discharge claim premised on the same violation of the Sherman Act asserted in a separate Sherman Act conspiracy claim is merely duplicative of the Sherman Act claim.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Quasi Contracts

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Contracts > Conditions & Terms > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN35 [] Types of Contracts, Quasi Contracts

Under Iowa law, an implied contract of employment can arise from an employee handbook if the following conditions are met: (1) the handbook is sufficiently definite in its terms to create an offer; (2) the handbook is communicated to and accepted by the employee so as to create an acceptance; and (3) the employee provides consideration.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > At Will Employment > Exceptions > Implied Contracts

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN36 [] Exceptions, Implied Contracts

To determine whether the first requirement of an implied contract of employment has been met, that is, to determine whether the language of the employee handbook creates a contract, the Iowa Supreme Court looks at the following factors: (1) Is the handbook in general and the progressive disciplinary procedures in particular mere guidelines or statement of policy, or are they directives?; (2) Is the language of the disciplinary procedures detailed and definite or general and vague?; (3) Does the employer have the power to alter the procedures at will or are they invariable?

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN37 [] Employment Relationships, At Will Employment

The key to determining whether a contract has been created is whether a reasonable employee upon reading the handbook would believe they had been guaranteed certain protections by their employer. An appropriate disclaimer, rather than mere reservation of the right to alter provisions, will more likely ensure that no implied contract is created by the terms of the handbook. Whether a handbook binds the parties in a contract is a question of law for the court.

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *946LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 1

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Breach of Contract > Employer Handbooks

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN38 [] Breach of Contract, Employer Handbooks

Whether an employee handbook binds the parties in a contract is a question of law for the court.

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > At Will Employment > General Overview

HN39 [] Labor & Employment Law, Wrongful Termination

An effective disclaimer may prevent creation of employment rights by a handbook.

Counsel: For Dan Randall, Plaintiff: Blake Parker, Blaker Parker Law Office, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

For defendants: Michael W. Ellwanger, Rawlings, Nieland, Probasco, Killinger, Ellwanger, Jacobs & Mohrhauser, L.L.P.

Judges: MARK W. BENNETT, U. S. DISTRICT COURT JUDGE.

Opinion by: MARK W. BENNETT

Opinion

[*948] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER REGARDING DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Procedural Background

B. Factual Background

[*949] II. LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. Standards For Summary Judgment

B. The Constitutional Claim

1. The parties' arguments

2. A protected interest

a. Property interest

b. Liberty interestC. The Sherman Act Claim

- 1. The parties' arguments
- 2. Prohibitions of the Sherman Act
- 3. Elements of the claim
- 4. Exclusive contracts and "tying"
- 5. "Group boycott"

D. Wrongful Discharge

- 1. The parties' arguments
- 2. Contract employee
- [2] 3. Public policy exception
- 4. Handbook exception

III. CONCLUSION

Was the plaintiff discharged from his contracts with a public hospital and a medical clinic in violation of his constitutional and common-law rights and the prohibitions of federal antitrust law? The plaintiff's wide-ranging assertions that he was wrongfully discharged are challenged in the defendants' motion for summary judgment presently before the court.

I. INTRODUCTIONA. Procedural Background

Plaintiff Dan Randall, a Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetist (CRNA), filed this lawsuit on February 19, 1998, against defendants Buena Vista County Hospital (the Hospital) and Buena Vista Clinic Foundation (the Clinic Foundation), alleging that his contract with each institution had been wrongfully terminated in mid-1996. Randall named as additional defendants James O. Nelson, the Administrator of the Hospital, and Darrell Pritchard, the Administrator of the Clinic Foundation.

In his Complaint, Randall asserts three claims arising from the termination of his contracts with the two institutions. In his first cause of action, Randall asserts a claim pursuant to [3] 42 U.S.C. § 1983 that the Hospital, "by and through James O. Nelson," discharged Randall as a CRNA "without cause" in violation of his rights to equal protection and due process, as guaranteed by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Specifically, Randall alleges that the Hospital deprived him of his property interest in his public employment position without due process. In his second cause of action, Randall alleges that "all defendants" conspired to create an agreement or contract in restraint of trade that would preclude Randall from practicing as a CRNA at the Buena Vista County Hospital in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. For his third cause of action, Randall asserts a common-law claim that the "defendants" wrongfully discharged him contrary to the stated public policy of IOWA CODE § 20.7(3) and/or the rights guaranteed him by the personnel policies of the Hospital and Clinic Foundation. Randall seeks compensatory and punitive damages, costs, and attorneys fees.

The defendants answered the Complaint on May 19, 1998, asserting, inter alia, an affirmative defense that Randall [4] was improperly splitting his cause of action between the present lawsuit and an action filed in Iowa District Court for Buena Vista County. On September 14, 1998, however, this court granted Randall's motion to strike the defendants' affirmative defense. The court concluded that the acts complained of, and the recovery demanded, [*950] in Randall's federal lawsuit were not the same as those found in Randall's state-court action.

On August 23, 1999, the defendants mounted another challenge to Randall's claims by filing the motion for summary judgment that is presently before the court. In that motion, the defendants seek summary judgment on all three of Randall's claims on various grounds. Randall resisted the motion on October 8, 1999. Neither party requested oral arguments on the motion for summary judgment and the court has therefore considered the motion on the record and written arguments presented.

B. Factual Background

The court will discuss here only the nucleus of undisputed facts pertinent to the present motion for summary judgment. In its legal analysis, the court will address where necessary Randall's assertion of genuine issues of material fact that may preclude summary [5] judgment on his claims.

Mr. Randall, a Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetist (CRNA), originally provided anesthesia services at the Hospital pursuant to an Anesthesia Services Agreement, which became effective July 15, 1991. The contract provided that Randall was an "independent provider of professional anesthesia services, and nothing in this Agreement shall constitute or be construed in any manner so as to create an employment relationship or an agency, partnership or joint venture relationship between Hospital and Anesthetist." Appendix To Defendants' Motion For Summary Judgment, Deposition Exhibit No. 3, Anesthesia Services Agreement of July 15, 1991 (Randall's Anesthesia Services Agreement), Art. VI. Randall was also admitted as an Allied Health Professional (AHP) with clinical privileges at the Hospital.

Randall originally practiced with another CRNA, Jerry McMichael, in a business named Anesthesia Associates. McMichael and Randall shared the work at the Hospital and split the fees evenly between them. An entity called the Buena Vista Clinic provided billing services for McMichael and Randall and was paid 15% of fees billed for doing so. The Buena Vista Clinic, which operated [6] a family practice office in Storm Lake, Iowa, was a separate entity from the Hospital. The Buena Vista Clinic later incorporated as the defendant Buena Vista Clinic Foundation (the Clinic Foundation).

In August of 1995, Randall and McMichael became employees of the Clinic Foundation. Randall entered into a Professional Employment Contract with the Clinic Foundation, effective August 21, 1995. This Professional Employment Contract required, inter alia, that Randall obtain and maintain good standing membership on the AHP staff at the Hospital with appropriate clinical privileges. Mr. Randall understood that the change in employment status would mean that the CRNAs would be better able to set up retirement plans and to obtain access to other employment benefits. However, Randall did not terminate his independent contract with the Hospital at the time he became an employee of the Clinic Foundation.

Randall's professional and personal relationship with McMichael became strained during 1995 and 1996. Each apparently made complaints about the professional competence of the other to the Clinic Foundation and the Hospital. Various meetings were held involving Mr. Nelson, Mr. Pritchard, [7] McMichael, and Randall during the summer of 1995. Randall was apparently informed at about this time that he would not have a leadership role in the anesthesia department of the Hospital. In August of 1995, another CRNA, John Peters, also began providing anesthesia services at the Hospital, also as an independent service provider. Mr. Peters also expressed personal and professional concerns about working with Randall.

At some time in 1995 or 1996, the Hospital and Clinic Foundation began negotiating, and possibly operating under, an agreement pursuant to which the Clinic [*951] Foundation would provide services of CRNAs to the Hospital. A formal, written Anesthesia Services Agreement to that effect was eventually executed on July 1, 1996. Pursuant to the July 1, 1996, agreement, the Clinic Foundation was to provide professional anesthesia services "on an exclusive basis." On April 30, 1996, prior to execution of the exclusive provider agreement between the Clinic Foundation and the Hospital, the Hospital sent all three CRNAs--Randall, McMichael, and Peters--official 60-day notices of the termination of their individual Anesthesia Services Agreements. On April 28, 1996, two days prior to [8] the date on which the Hospital sent the three CRNAs notice of the termination of their individual Anesthesia Services Agreements, Mr. McMichael, who was suffering from cancer, advised Mr. Nelson by letter that he was terminating his contract to provide anesthesia services to the Hospital effective that day, stating that his "reasons for termination are health related - and in my best interest."

On May 28, 1996, at a meeting in Mr. Nelson's office, at which Nelson, Pritchard, Peters, and Randall were present, Nelson reiterated that Randall's contract would not be renewed and informed Randall that his AHP privileges would also be withdrawn. Nelson confirmed these decisions in a letter dated May 30, 1996, which again stated that Randall's anesthesia contract with the Hospital would not be renewed, effective July 1, 1996, "without cause," that "a business decision had been made to make a change," and that Randall's AHP privileges "would be null and void by contract terms." At the same meeting on May 28, 1996, Pritchard also informed Randall that his employment contract with the Clinic Foundation would be terminated effective August 21, 1996. Randall later received a written Notice of [9] Nonrenewal of Professional Employment Agreement from Pritchard, dated May 29, 1996, which officially notified Randall that his contract with the Clinic Foundation would not be renewed and would accordingly expire on August 21, 1996.

On June 23, 1996, Randall filed an application with the Hospital for "Allied Health Credentialing Temporary Privileges." On July 16, 1996, Nelson notified Randall in writing that his application for temporary privileges would not be submitted for credentialing, because his Anesthesia Services Agreement indicated that AHP privileges would not survive termination of the Agreement. In his letter of July 16, 1996, Nelson also cited the agreement the Hospital had entered into with the Clinic Foundation for exclusive provision of professional anesthesia services at the Hospital as the basis for no longer granting CRNAs privileges on an independent-contractor basis.

Randall subsequently obtained employment as a CRNA in Fort Dodge, Iowa, although he was terminated from that position in 1998 after approximately two-and-one-half years.

II. LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. Standards For Summary Judgment

HN1[] On the defendants' motion for summary judgment, the [10] undisputed facts recounted above as well as the parties' factual disputes must be viewed through the lens of Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. This court has considered in some detail the standards applicable to motions for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 in a number of prior decisions. See, e.g., Swanson v. Van Otterloo, 993 F. Supp. 1224, 1230-31 (N.D. Iowa 1998); Dirks v. J.C. Robinson Seed Co., 980 F. Supp. 1303, 1305-07 (N.D. Iowa 1997); Laird v. Stilwill, 969 F. Supp. 1167, 1172-74 (N.D. Iowa 1997); Rural Water Sys. # 1 v. City of Sioux Ctr., 967 F. Supp. 1483, 1499-1501 (N.D. Iowa 1997); Tralon Corp. v. Cedar Rapids, Inc., 966 F. Supp. 812, 817-18 (N.D. Iowa 1997); Security State Bank v. Firststar Bank Milwaukee, N.A., 965 F. Supp. 1237, 1239-40 (N.D. Iowa 1997); Lockhart v. Cedar Rapids Community Sch. Dist., 963 F. Supp. 805 (N.D. Iowa 1997). Thus, the court will not consider those standards in detail here. Suffice it [952] to say that Rule 56 itself provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

HN2[] Rule 56. Summary Judgment

(b) For Defending Party. [11] A party against whom a claim . . . is asserted . . . may, at any time, move for summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part thereof.

(c) Motions and Proceedings Thereon. . . . The judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

FED. R. CIV. P. 56(b) & (c) (emphasis added). Applying these standards, HN3[¹²] the trial judge's function at the summary judgment stage of the proceedings is not to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matter, but to determine whether there are genuine issues for trial. Quick v. Donaldson Co., 90 F.3d 1372, 1376-77 (8th Cir. 1996); Johnson v. Enron Corp., 906 F.2d 1234, 1237 (8th Cir. 1990). An issue of material fact is genuine if it has a real basis in the record. Hartnagel v. Norman, 953 F.2d 394 (8th Cir. 1992) (citing Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986)). [^{12}] As to whether a factual dispute is "material," the Supreme Court has explained, "Only disputes over facts that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary judgment." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986); Beyerbach v. Sears, 49 F.3d 1324, 1326 (8th Cir. 1995); Hartnagel, 953 F.2d at 394.

With these standards in mind, the court turns to consideration of the parties' arguments for and against summary judgment in this case.

B. The Constitutional Claim

1. The parties' arguments

In the defendants' motion, the Hospital asserts that it is entitled to summary judgment on Randall's first cause of action on several grounds.¹ First, the Hospital argues that the undisputed record shows that Randall was never an employee of the Hospital, but was instead an independent contractor. Consequently, the Hospital argues that Hospital personnel policies have no relation to the termination of Randall's contract with the Hospital, because [*953] the only rules governing termination of the contract are in the contract itself. [^{13}] The contract, the Hospital argues further, could be terminated without cause, either before automatic renewal, or at will during its term, upon sixty days' written notice. The Hospital asserts that it gave Randall timely notice of the termination of the contract more than sixty days before the end of its term. Consequently, the Hospital asserts that Randall had no property or liberty interest in his contract with the Hospital to which due process protections could apply.

[^{14}] Randall counters that his AHP privileges were terminated in violation of the Hospital's Bylaws of the Medical Staff and that his contract was terminated without any notice or meaningful opportunity to be heard prior to the adverse action. He asserts that, in the circumstances, he was "clearly" entitled to a pre-termination "name-clearing"

¹ To the extent Randall has attempted to name Nelson as a defendant on this cause of action--because he alleged that the Hospital, "by and through James O. Nelson," discharged Randall as a CRNA "without cause" in violation of his rights to equal protection and due process, see Complaint, P 20--the court finds that the grounds for summary judgment asserted by the Hospital apply equally to Nelson. However, the court cannot find that Randall has asserted any constitutional claim against the other defendants, the Clinic Foundation and Pritchard. The allegations of elements of the claim in Randall's first cause of action all identify "Defendant Buena Vista County Hospital" or "the hospital" as the actor. See Complaint, PP 20 (discharge of Randall by the Hospital "by and through" Nelson), 21 (the Hospital acted under color of state law), 22 (the Hospital had no proper reason for discharge and acted "contrary to the notion of due process"), 23 (the Hospital failed to provide Randall with equal protection and due process), 24 (the Hospital discharged Randall without due process thus depriving him of his property interest in public employment), and 25 (the Hospital acted with malice and reckless disregard to Randall's civil rights). There is no specific reference in this count to conduct of the Clinic Foundation or Pritchard. The reallegation in this cause of action of facts stated in paragraphs one through eighteen of the Complaint, see id. at P 19, also does not indicate that Randall is attempting to assert a constitutional claim against either Pritchard or the Clinic Foundation, when the only defendant specifically asserted to have violated Randall's constitutional rights is the Hospital. Instead, paragraph 19 simply reiterates the factual context for the constitutional claim against the Hospital and/or Nelson. Therefore, the court will not address the defendants' arguments for summary judgment on the constitutional claim against Pritchard and the Clinic Foundation, because there is no such claim against those defendants.

hearing. He points out that, although he was told at the time that the termination of his contract and his AHP privileges was a "business decision," the first "whisper" he had that the decision was based on his professional competence was in the course of this litigation. He also contends that he was entitled to a post-termination grievance procedure as outlined in the Bylaws, but that he was never given forms or a forum for any grievance. Furthermore, he points out that his application for temporary AHP privileges was summarily denied. Finally, he contends that, as a public employee, he had a liberty interest in his good name, reputation, and integrity, which has now been impinged upon by the Hospital's assertions that his termination was on the basis of professional competence.²

[15] 2. A protected interest

As the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals recently explained, "To HN4 set forth a procedural due process violation, a plaintiff, first, must establish that his protected liberty or property interest is at stake." Spitzmiller v. Hawkins, 183 F.3d 912, 915 \(8th Cir. 1999\) (quoting Gordon v. Hansen, 168 F.3d 1109, 1114 \(8th Cir. 1999\) (per curiam)); accord Board of Regents of State Colleges v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 569, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548, 92 S. Ct. 2701 \(1972\); Graning v. Sherburne County, 172 F.3d 611, 616 \(8th Cir. 1999\) ("A state employee is entitled to a hearing or some related form of due process before being deprived of a constitutionally protected property or liberty interest.") (citing Cleveland Bd. of Educ. v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 84 L. Ed. 2d 494, 105 S. Ct. 1487 \(1985\)); Johnson v. City of West Memphis, 113 F.3d 842, 843 \(8th Cir. 1997\) ("The Due Process Clause requires the government to provide an employee with procedural due process if the employee stands to lose a constitutionally protected property or liberty interest.") (also citing [\[16\] Roth, 408 U.S. at 569-70](#)). In his resistance to the defendants' motion for summary judgment, Randall asserts that he has both a protected property interest in his employment and a protected liberty interest in his professional reputation upon which his due process claim is based.

a. Property interest

HN5 When a public employee asserts a protected property interest in his or her employment, the public employee must show that the protected property interest is derived from a source such as state law, which requires a showing that the employee [\[*954\]](#) could have been fired only for good cause. Spitzmiller, 183 F.3d at 915-16; Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843 ("For a property interest to exist, the public employee must have a legitimate claim of entitlement to continued employment."). While a public employee with a protected property interest in continued employment is entitled to due process before termination, see Graning, 172 F.3d at 616; Wallin v. Minnesota Dep't of Corrections, 153 F.3d 681, 690 \(8th Cir. 1998\), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1004, 143 L. Ed. 2d 209, 119 S. Ct. 1141 (1999), [\[17\]](#)³ where the claimant can show only that he or she was an at-will employee, the claimant lacks the

² Randall does not argue in his resistance to the summary judgment motion that he was deprived of equal protection of the law, i.e., that he was treated differently from similarly situated individuals owing to a racial or other class-based animus, although he makes a passing reference to deprivation of equal protection in his Complaint. See Complaint, P 23 ("Defendant Buena Vista County Hospital failed to provide plaintiff the equal protection and due process as guaranteed by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution; and 42 U.S.C. § 1983."). Because Randall has ignored any "equal protection" claim, while arguing strenuously for the sufficiency of his "due process" claim, the court understands Randall to be asserting only a "due process" constitutional claim in his first cause of action in this litigation.

³ In Graning, the court explained that HN6 "[a] public employee with a protected property interest in continued employment receives due process if there is notice and an opportunity to respond to charges of misconduct before her termination and if posttermination administrative review procedures are available." Graning, 172 F.3d at 616. The purpose of the pretermination hearing is to provide "an initial check against mistaken decisions--essentially, a determination of whether there are reasonable grounds to believe that the charges against the employee are true and support the proposed action." Wallin, 153 F.3d at 690 (quoting Loudermill, 470 U.S. at 545-46). However, "the pretermination process need not be elaborate, especially if there are meaningful postdeprivation procedures." Graning, 172 F.3d at 616 (citing Loudermill, 470 U.S. at 542-47). Furthermore, the hearing need not precede the decision to terminate the employee; rather, it must only precede the termination of the employee's necessary property interest in his or her employment. Spitzmiller, 183 F.3d at 916; Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843 (the plaintiff "lacked a property interest because he was not entitled to continued employment as the utility commission's general manager," but instead "was an at-will employee who could be terminated at any time without cause").

[18] It cannot be disputed that Randall's Anesthesia Services Agreement, which became effective July 15, 1991, clearly provided that he was an independent contractor, not an employee of the Hospital. The contract provided that Randall was an "independent provider of professional anesthesia services, and nothing in this Agreement shall constitute or be construed in any manner so as to create an employment relationship or an agency, partnership or joint venture relationship between Hospital and Anesthetist." Randall's Anesthesia Services Agreement, Art. VI. However, leaving aside the question of whether or not Randall can establish that he was an employee of the Hospital notwithstanding this term of his contract, and the alternative question of whether an independent contractor can have a property interest in continuing employment, it is clear that Randall's Anesthesia Services Agreement was terminable at-will, and thus could provide him with no property interest in continued employment. See Spitzmiller, 183 F.3d at 915-16 (a HN7[↑] property interest in employment requires a showing that the employee could only be terminated for cause); Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843 [19] (same). Although his agreement with the Hospital provided that it renewed automatically for successive one year terms, in the absence of notice to terminate at least sixty days prior to the end of the term, see Anesthesia Services Agreement, Art. VII(1), Randall's Anesthesia Services Agreement also expressly provided for termination at will during its term as follows:

VII. TERM AND TERMINATION

* * *

2. This Agreement may be terminated without cause by either party at any time during the term of this Agreement by providing written notice to the other party at least sixty (60) days prior to the effective date of the intended termination. The notice of termination provision in the preceding sentence shall not apply, however, in the event of termination "for cause."

Id. at Art. VII(2) (emphasis added). Because it is undisputed that the contract [*955] was terminable without cause upon sixty days notice at any time during its term, Randall's contract with the Hospital does not provide the basis for any protected property interest in continued employment to which due process rights could attach. Compare Spitzmiller, 183 F.3d at 915-16 (a HN8[↑] protected [20] property interest in employment requires a showing that the employee could have been fired only for good cause); Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843 ("For a property interest to exist, the public employee must have a legitimate claim of entitlement to continued employment.").

Nor can the court find that Randall has generated a genuine issue of material fact that he had a property interest in continued employment arising from the terms of his AHP Agreement with the Hospital. Randall argues that his AHP privileges were terminated in violation of the Hospital's Bylaws of the Medical Staff, because those Bylaws provide, in Article 5.7, for a written grievance procedure for review of actions taken against a member of the AHP staff, see Plaintiff's Statement Of Contested Facts In Response To Defendants' Motion For Summary Judgment, Exhibit A, Bylaws Of The Medical Staff Of Buena Vista County Hospital (Bylaws), p. 22, yet he was denied access to such a grievance procedure.

However, as a matter of law, Randall cannot rely on the grievance provisions for AHPs in the Bylaws as establishing a property right in continued employment. Randall's Anesthesia Services Agreement specifically [21] states the following in the article concerning termination:

4. In no case shall clinical privileges or staff appointment survive the termination of this Agreement, nor shall termination of privileges pursuant to termination of the contract entitle Anesthetist to any hearing and appeal procedure not specifically provided for herein. Specific contractual terms shall in all cases be controlling in the event that they conflict with provisions in the hospital bylaws or medical staff bylaws.

Randall's Anesthesia Services Agreement, Art. VII(4) (emphasis added). Thus, under this term of his Agreement, the provisions of the Bylaws on which Randall relies are inapplicable to him and his AHP privileges could not "survive" the termination of his Anesthesia Services Agreement. Id. Furthermore, the "appeal" provisions of the Agreement are controlling over the grievance provisions of the Bylaws upon which Randall relies. Id. The Agreement provides no appeal provisions for a "without cause" termination.

Thus, Randall has failed to generate any genuine issue of material fact that he has a protected property interest in his "employment" with the Hospital. See [22] FED. R. CIV. P. 56\(c\) (summary judgment is appropriate if there is no genuine issue of material fact). Lacking such a protected property interest, his due process claim based on a protected property interest must fail. See Spitzmiller, 183 F.3d at 915 ("To HN9 set forth a procedural due process violation, a plaintiff, first, must establish that his protected liberty or property interest is at stake.") (quoting Gordon, 168 F.3d at 1114); accord Roth, 408 U.S. at 569; Graning, 172 F.3d at 616; Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843. The Hospital is therefore entitled to summary judgment on that part of Randall's due process claim founded on a protected property interest.

b. Liberty interest

Randall also contends that he had a protected liberty interest that was violated by the Hospital. HN10 "An employee's liberty interests are implicated when, in connection with the employee's discharge, a government official makes accusations that seriously damage the employee's standing in the community or foreclose other employment opportunities." Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843. "A public employee is [therefore] [23] entitled to notice and a name-clearing hearing when fired under circumstances imposing a stigma on her professional reputation." Graning, 172 F.3d at 616. However, no liberty interest is implicated [*956] if there are no public accusations that would "stigmatize" the employee. See Johnson, 113 F.3d at 844 (there had been no public accusations stigmatizing the employee, and hence no liberty interest was implicated, when the public comment of a councilwoman simply expressed her view that it was inappropriate for the utility commission to do construction work on private property).

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals acknowledged some time ago that HN11 there is "a line of public employee cases holding that a public body may not discharge anyone--even an employee without a contractual or property right in his job--and make public reasons for the discharge involving stigma or obloquy, without giving the employee a right to clear his or her name at some kind of a due-process hearing." Bell v. Sellevold, 713 F.2d 1396, 1401 \(8th Cir. 1983\), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1070, 79 L. Ed. 2d 215, 104 S. Ct. 978 (1984). However, such a "liberty [24] theory" fails if the "defendant never made public any stigmatizing reasons for [its] action." See id.; accord Johnson, 113 F.3d at 844 (no public accusations concerning the plaintiff's competence were made by the defendants). In Bell, which actually applied these principles to the due process claims of a physician arising from the actions of county commissioners to remove him from space he had been using in a medical clinic owned by the county, 713 F.2d at 1398, the court found that no reasons for termination of the physician's lease on the clinic space had been given to the public; rather, "accusations that Dr. Bell was responsible for 'turmoil' came in a letter written to him at his own lawyer's request," which letter became public only because the plaintiff introduced it as an exhibit at the hearing on his motion for a preliminary injunction. Id. at 1401. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals found that "Bishop v. Wood, 426 U.S. 341, 347-50, 96 S. Ct. 2074, 2078-80, 48 L. Ed. 2d 684 \(1976\), holds that there is no deprivation of constitutionally protected liberty in such a situation." Id.

Similarly, here, none of the official notices [25] of termination of Randall's contract or AHP status with the Hospital indicates that the termination was other than "without cause." See Appendix To Defendants' Motion For Summary Judgment, Deposition Exhibit No. 10 (notice of termination of Anesthesia Services Agreement, dated April 30, 1996); Appendix To Defendants' Motion For Summary Judgment, Deposition Exhibit No. 11 (reiterated notice of termination of contract with Hospital and notice of termination of AHP privileges, dated May 30, 1996). Furthermore, there are no indications that any of these termination notices was ever disseminated to the public in any way. Indeed, Randall asserts the following in his brief in resistance to the defendants' motion for summary judgment:

What is interesting and important to this case is that the only information ever given to Dan Randall concerning the termination is that it was a "business decision." Ex. 11. This was given to him after a meeting which took place the day before, where his AHP privileges were removed. The first time that any whisper has been made that the decision was based on his professional competence is in this forum, and when affidavits were prepared for the Defendants [26] [sic] Motion for Summary Judgment. Clearly, no notice was ever given of the now asserted reason (or any other reason) and thus there was never an opportunity for Randall to address the allegations. The Defendant does not assert that they [sic] gave notice to the Plaintiff at the time of the meeting, and the Plaintiff asserts that they gave no notice. In fact, they simple [sic] told him of the termination.

Plaintiff's Brief In Support Of Resistance To Motion For Summary Judgment (Plaintiff's Brief), pp. 4-5. Thus, as in Bell, Randall concedes that the issue' of professional competence was first raised as an issue in response to Randall's lawsuit; professional competence was not asserted as the reason for Randall's dismissal at the [*957] time he was dismissed and no publication of any accusation concerning his professional competence was ever made by the defendants except "in this forum." Id. at 4; and compare Bell, 713 F.2d at 1401 ("accusations that Dr. Bell was responsible for 'turmoil' came in a letter written to him at his own lawyer's request," which letter became public only because the plaintiff introduced it as an exhibit at the hearing on his [27] motion for a preliminary injunction).

The court concludes that this record is insufficient to generate a genuine issue of material fact that Randall has a liberty interest that was implicated by his dismissal, such that a due process right could attach. See HN12[¹²] Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843 ("An employee's liberty interests are implicated when, in connection with the employee's discharge, a government official makes accusations that seriously damage the employee's standing in the community or foreclose other employment opportunities."); Bell, 713 F.2d at 1401 (no liberty interest is implicated when accusations impugning the plaintiff's reputation are not published at the time of dismissal but only in response to plaintiff's post-termination actions). Absent such a liberty interest, his due process claim must fail. See generally Spitzmiller, 183 F.3d at 915 ("To set forth a procedural due process violation, a plaintiff, first, must establish that his protected liberty or property interest is at stake.") (quoting Gordon, 168 F.3d at 1114); accord Roth, 408 U.S. at 569; Graning, 172 F.3d at 616; [28] Johnson, 113 F.3d at 843. The Hospital is therefore entitled to summary judgment on that part of Randall's due process claim founded on a protected liberty interest, and consequently, on the entirety of Randall's first cause of action.

C. The Sherman Act Claim

1. The parties' arguments

Randall's second cause of action alleges that "all defendants" conspired to create an agreement or contract in restraint of trade that would preclude Randall from practicing as a CRNA at the Buena Vista County Hospital in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. The defendants argue that they are entitled to summary judgment on this claim on various grounds. They note that, in the only case in which the Supreme Court has considered an exclusive contract between a hospital and a provider of medical services, Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), the Court likened the exclusive contract to a "tying" arrangement, in which a patient who purchased hospital services was required also to purchase the services of a specific anesthesia group. The defendants [29] argue that the Court did not find such a tying arrangement per se illegal, because the hospital did not exercise the degree or kind of market power that enabled it to force customers to purchase a second product. They argue that, in this case, if a patient preferred a different CRNA, that patient could go to one of eight nearby county hospitals. They argue that the Court in Jefferson Parish Hospital also rejected a violation based on the "rule of reason," because in that case, as here, there was no "separate market" for anesthesia services. The defendants contend that courts have consistently upheld the types of contractual arrangements between hospitals and "hospital based" medical professionals at issue here, and that there is no evidence here of the Hospital conspiring with another group of providers to force Randall out of the Hospital by means of an exclusive contract with the other providers.

Randall, however, argues that there is evidence of a conspiracy between the Hospital and the Clinic Foundation, in the persons of their administrators, Nelson and Pritchard, to prevent him from practicing at the Hospital. Randall argues that only by terminating his contract with [30] the Clinic Foundation, as well as his contract with the Hospital, could he be precluded from practicing at the Hospital; otherwise, he would have been able to practice at the Hospital, notwithstanding the termination of his independent contract, as a Clinic Foundation employee under [31] the Clinic Foundation's exclusive provider contract with the Hospital. Randall also points out that, unlike the situation in the Jefferson Parish Hospital case, the Hospital is the exclusive provider of hospital services in the Storm Lake area, so that patients have no practical choice but to accept the services of anesthetists "tied" to the services of the hospital. Randall relies on the holding in Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440 (9th Cir. 1988), in which the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals recognized an antitrust claim could be based on exclusive provider contracts where the hospital was the "only game in town." He therefore asserts that genuine issues of material fact should preclude summary judgment on this claim.

2. Prohibitions of the Sherman Act

HN13 [↑] "Section 1" of the Sherman Antitrust act makes it unlawful to form a conspiracy in restraint of trade. [31] "St. Louis Convention & Visitors Comm'n v. N.F.L., 154 F.3d 851, 861 (8th Cir. 1998); Double D Spotting Serv., Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554, 558 (8th Cir. 1998) (section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act "declares it unlawful to contract or form a conspiracy 'in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States'"). Thus, "to demonstrate a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must provide proof of an illegal contract, combination, or conspiracy which results in an unreasonable restraint of trade." HN14 [↑] Double D Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 558.

A conspiracy in restraint of trade may be either per se illegal or subject to a rule of reason:

Restraints which have [a] "pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue" are illegal per se under Section 1 without inquiry into the reasonableness of the restraint or the harm caused. Northern Pac. Ry v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958); see also Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 [(1984)]; United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607-08, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972). [32] Analysis of whether a restriction's harm to competition outweighs any procompetitive effects is necessary if the anticompetitive impact of a restraint is less clear or the restraint is necessary for a product to exist at all. See Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 [(1918)]; Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9-10, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979).

St. Louis Convention & Visitors Comm'n, 154 F.3d at 861; accord Double D Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 558 (noting that conspiracies in restraint of trade may be per se illegal, but "'most antitrust claims are analyzed under a 'rule of reason,' according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition'" (quoting State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 118 S. Ct. 275, 279, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997)). To put it another way, HN15 [↑] while "certain types of restraint are so inherently anticompetitive that they are illegal per se, without inquiry into the reasonableness of the restraint or [33] the harm caused," the "'rule of reason' analysis involves an inquiry into the market structure and the defendant's market power in order to assess the actual effect of the restraint." Double D Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 558. "It is only after considerable experience with certain business relationships that courts classify them as per se violations of the Sherman Act." Id. (quoting United States v. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. 596, 607-08, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972)). Therefore, "'per se' treatment is appropriate once experience with a particular kind of restraint enables the Court to predict with confidence that the rule of reason will condemn it." Id. (quoting Khan, 522 U.S. at __, 118 S. Ct. at 279).

3. Elements of the claim

HN16[¹] The elements of a claim of conspiracy in restraint of trade are the following: [*959] (1) there was an agreement among the defendants in restraint of trade; (2) the plaintiff was injured as a direct and proximate result; and (3) the plaintiff's damages are capable of ascertainment and not speculative. St. Louis Convention & Visitors Comm'n, 154 F.3d at 861; see also Read v. Medical X-Ray Ctr., P.C., 110 F.3d 543, 545 (8th Cir. 1997) [34] (stating one element of the claim to be that the defendant's "allegedly anticompetitive conduct was 'a material cause' of [the plaintiff's] injury") (citations omitted), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 914, 118 S. Ct. 299, 139 L. Ed. 2d 230 (1997). "The first element is established by proof that there was an agreement in restraint of trade and that the challenged action was 'part of or pursuant to that agreement.'" Id. (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 767, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984)). Furthermore, "in order to prove that Section 1 defendants were acting pursuant to a conspiracy, a plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged coconspirators acted independently, because conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). As to element two, HN17[¹] "in order to satisfy the causation element of a Section 1 case, [the plaintiff must] show that the [defendants'] anticompetitive acts were an actual, material cause [35] of the alleged harm to competition." 154 F.3d at 862; Read, 110 F.3d at 545 (requiring that the plaintiff show the defendant's anticompetitive conduct was "a material cause" of his injury). "A material cause is a 'substantially contributing factor.'" Read, 110 F.3d at 545 (quoting National Ass'n of Review Appraisers & Mortgage Underwriters, Inc. v. The Appraisal Found., 64 F.3d 1130, 1135 (8th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1189, 134 L. Ed. 2d 779, 116 S. Ct. 1676 (1996)). Furthermore, "antitrust injury is 'injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.'" 154 F.3d at 864 (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977)).

The defendants' challenge to the adequacy of Randall's antitrust claim focuses only on the first of these elements, proof of an agreement in restraint of trade. See St. Louis Convention & Visitors Comm'n, 154 F.3d at 861. Although the defendants acknowledge that there was an "agreement," the exclusive provider contract for anesthesia [36] services between the Hospital and the Clinic Foundation, they argue, in essence, that the agreement was not one "in restraint of trade."

4. Exclusive contracts and "tying"

The defendants contend that, as the Supreme Court concluded in Jefferson Parish Hospital, an exclusive provider contract between a hospital and certain providers of anesthesia services is not an illegal "tying" arrangement. In Jefferson Parish Hospital, the Supreme Court framed the issue before it as follows:

At issue in this case is the validity of an exclusive contract between a hospital and a firm of anesthesiologists. We must decide whether the contract gives rise to a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act because every patient undergoing surgery at the hospital must use the services of one firm of anesthesiologists, and, if not, whether the contract is nevertheless illegal because it unreasonably restrains competition among anesthesiologists.

Jefferson Parish Hospital, 466 U.S. at 45. The Court likened the exclusive provider contract to a "tying" arrangement, noting, HN18[¹] The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's [37] exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such 'forcing' is present, competition on the merits in the [*960] market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

Id. at 12. In other words, the Court in Jefferson Parish Hospital considered whether exploitation of the defendants' control over hospital services, the tying product, forced the buyer into the purchase of a tied product, anesthesiological services from a particular group of anesthesiologists, that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. The Court reiterated that it had HN19[¹]

"condemned tying arrangements [only] when the seller has some special ability--usually called 'market power'--to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." Id. at 13-14.

The Court then considered when a tying arrangement constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act:

HN20[] Per se condemnation--condemnation without inquiry [38] into actual market conditions--is only appropriate if the existence of forcing is probable. Thus, application of the per se rule focuses on the probability of anticompetitive consequences. . . . We have refused to condemn tying arrangements unless a substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed thereby. . . .

Once this threshold is surmounted, per se prohibition is appropriate if anticompetitive forcing is likely. . . . The . . . strict rule is appropriate in . . . situations in which the existence of market power is probable.

Id. at 16-18 (footnotes and citations omitted).

In the case before it in Jefferson Parish Hospital, the Court found that the hospital "had provided its patients with a package that included the range of facilities and services required for a variety of surgical operations," and that the package included "the services of the anesthesiologist." Id. at 18. The hospital argued that it was simply providing "an integrated package of services," not a tying arrangement. Id. at 18-19. The Court found that "a tying arrangement cannot exist unless two separate product markets have been linked." Id. at 21. [39] Consequently, the Court concluded that "in this case no tying arrangement can exist unless there is a sufficient demand for the purchase of anesthesiological services separate from hospital services to identify a distinct product market in which it is efficient to offer anesthesiological services separately from hospital services." Id. at 21-22.

Examining the record before it in Jefferson Parish Hospital in light of these requirements, the Court concluded that "the record amply supports the conclusion that consumers differentiate between anesthesiological services and the other hospital services provided by [the hospital]." Id. at 23. Therefore, "the hospital's requirement that its patients obtain necessary anesthesiological services from [one provider] combined the purchase of two distinguishable services in a single transaction." Id. at 24. However, this fact did not make the arrangement per se illegal, if the hospital had no market power to "force" the purchase of the two separate items together. Id. The Court found the hospital's "dominance" over persons residing in the parish was "far from overwhelming" where [40] seventy percent of the patients residing in the parish actually entered other hospitals. Id. at 26. The Court found no evidence that patients were "forced" to obtain anesthesiological services they would not otherwise have purchased, because presumably every patient undergoing surgery required such services. Id. at 28. On the record before it, the Court found no basis for applying the per se rule against tying to the arrangement in question. Id. at 29.

The Court also found that the evidence did not support a finding that the arrangement violated the Sherman Act under a "rule of reason" analysis, which "involves an inquiry into the actual effect of the [*961] exclusive contract on competition among anesthesiologists." Id. The Court's "rule of reason" analysis consisted of the following:

This competition takes place in a market that has not been defined. The market is not necessarily the same as the market in which hospitals compete in offering services to patients; it may encompass competition among anesthesiologists for exclusive contracts such as the Roux contract and might be statewide or merely local. There is, however, insufficient [41] evidence in this record to provide a basis for finding that the Roux contract, as it actually operates in the market, has unreasonably restrained competition. The record sheds little light on how this arrangement affected consumer demand for separate arrangements with a specific anesthesiologist. The evidence indicates that some surgeons and patients preferred respondent's services to those of Roux, but there is no evidence that any patient who was sophisticated enough to know the difference between two anesthesiologists was not also able to go to a hospital that would provide him with the anesthesiologist of his choice.

In sum, all that the record establishes is that the choice of anesthesiologists at East Jefferson has been limited to one of the four doctors who are associated with Roux and therefore have staff privileges. Even if Roux did not have an exclusive contract, the range of alternatives open to the patient would be severely limited by the nature of the transaction and the hospital's unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and the number of doctors to whom it accords staff privileges. If respondent is admitted to the staff of East Jefferson, the range [42] of choice will be enlarged from four to five doctors, but the most significant restraints on the patient's freedom to select a specific anesthesiologist will nevertheless remain. Without a showing of actual adverse effect on competition, respondent cannot make out a case under the antitrust laws, and no such showing has been made.

Jefferson Parish Hosp., 466 U.S. at 29-31 (footnotes omitted); accord Double D Spinning Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 558 (the HN21[[↑]] "rule of reason" analysis involves an inquiry into the market structure and the defendant's market power in order to assess the actual effect of the restraint").

A number of courts have more recently considered whether exclusive provider contracts between hospitals and medical professionals pose antitrust violations. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals summarized the conclusions of many of these courts:

This case involves one hospital's decisions about staff privileges and staffing patterns. The cases involving staffing at a single hospital are legion. Hundreds, perhaps thousands of pages in West publications are devoted to the issues those circumstances present. Those cases invariably analyze [43] those circumstances under the rule of HN22[[↑]] reason--there is nothing obviously anticompetitive about a hospital choosing one staffing pattern over another or in restricting the staffing to some rather than many, or all. Bhan v. NME Hospitals, 929 F.2d 1404, 1412 (9th Cir. 1991). A hospital has an unquestioned right to exercise some control over the identity and number to whom it accords staff privileges. Jefferson Parish Hospital, 466 U.S. at 30, 104 S. Ct. at 1567-68. Malpractice concerns, quality of care, market perceptions, cost, and administrative considerations may all impact those decisions.

Those hundreds or thousands of pages almost always come to the same conclusion: the staffing decision at a single hospital was not a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act.

BCB Anesthesia Care v. Passavant Mem. Area Hosp. Ass'n, 36 F.3d 664, 667 (7th Cir. 1994) (citing cases).

Randall nonetheless asserts that his case is distinguishable from Jefferson Parish [*962] Hospital and other such cases, because in this case the exclusive contract was not already in existence, but was instead introduced and "orchestrated" for the purpose of excluding [44] him from practice at the Hospital and to ensure that CRNAs for whom the defendants were billing (and from whom they were earning a fee) would not have to compete with an independent anesthetist. He also argues that, unlike the hospital in Jefferson Parish Hospital, which was one of twenty hospitals in the New Orleans area, the Hospital here is the only hospital in the market area, which Randall asserts is the Storm Lake area. He likens his case to that before the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440 (9th Cir. 1988), in which the defendant hospital enjoyed an eighty-four percent share of the patient market in Helena, Montana.

Here, the court finds, first, that there is no dispute that "tied" products were created by the Hospital's exclusive contract for anesthesia services with the Clinic Foundation, because, under that agreement, the Clinic Foundation had the exclusive right to provide anesthesia services at the Hospital. What remains to be seen, inter alia, is whether there are genuine issues of material fact concerning exploitation of the Hospital's control over its services to force patients to purchase the [45] "tied" anesthesia services. Cf. Jefferson Parish Hosp., 466 U.S. at 12. On that question, the court finds the barest suggestion from the record that consumers actually differentiated between the anesthesia services provided by the Clinic Foundation and other providers, and thus, by the barest of margins, there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the exclusive provider contract "ties" two distinguishable services in a single transaction, as required by Jefferson Parish Hospital. See id. at 23-24. Although the Hospital contends that there was no separate market for anesthesia services outside of the Hospital, the record suggests that both doctors and patients might from time to time request the services of a specific anesthetist, indicating, as in Jefferson Parish Hospital, that such consumers differentiated between Hospital and anesthesia services. Cf. id. at 23.

As in Jefferson Parish Hospital, this court finds that the circumstances here are not sufficient to establish that the exclusive provider contract is so clearly anticompetitive as to be per se illegal. See id. at 16-18. There is no [46] evidence that patients of the Hospital were "forced" to obtain anesthesia services they would not otherwise have purchased, because presumably every patient undergoing surgery at the Hospital required such services. Id. at 28. Furthermore, because a hospital has an "unquestioned right" to exercise some control over the identity and number of staff with practice privileges, a "rule of reason" analysis is appropriate. See id. at 29-30; BCB Anesthesia Care, 36 F.3d at 667 ("Those HN23[↑] cases [involving staffing at a single hospital] invariably analyze those circumstances under the rule of reason"); accord Double D Spotting Serv., Inc., 136 F.3d at 558 (noting that conspiracies in restraint of trade may be per se illegal, but "most antitrust claims are analyzed under a "rule of reason," according to which the finder of fact must decide whether the questioned practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition") (quoting Khan, 522 U.S. at __, 118 S. Ct. at 279).

There is a significant difference in the record between this case and Jefferson Parish Hospital concerning the "market power" of the Hospital-- [47] i. e., there are genuine issues of material fact on the present record lacking in Jefferson Parish Hospital. Although Randall has not articulated what share of the consumer market the Hospital holds, compare Jefferson Parish Hospital, 466 U.S. at 24 (evidence that seventy percent of parish residents actually entered other hospitals was "far from overwhelming" evidence of market power), Randall has pointed out that the Hospital is the only such entity in the relevant geographic market for consumers, [*963] which he contends is the Storm Lake, Iowa, area. Compare id. at 29 (finding insufficient evidence in the record for determining geographic market). The Hospital has argued that it is not "the only game in town," because there are eight surrounding counties with hospitals approximately fifty miles or less from Storm Lake. See Affidavit of James O. Nelson, p. 1. However, this evidence serves only to establish the opposite pole of the dispute of fact, because neither party has pointed to undisputed evidence demonstrating what percentage of consumers in Storm Lake, or some other appropriately defined market area, actually enter the Buena Vista County [48] Hospital or other hospitals, or even what percentage of doctors with practice privileges at the Hospital also enjoy such privileges at other nearby county hospitals, which would suggest a larger market area beyond Storm Lake itself. See Jefferson Parish Hospital, 466 U.S. at 26 (no evidence of share of consumers actually using the defendant hospital's services); and compare Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446-47 (the defendant hospital "enjoyed the overwhelming majority of the market for general surgery").

These genuine issues of material fact preclude summary judgment in the defendants' favor on Randall's conspiracy claim pursuant to section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, founded on a "tying" arrangement resulting from the exclusive anesthesia services provider contract between the Hospital and the Clinic Foundation. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c) (summary judgment is only appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law").

5. "Group boycott"

Although the defendants challenged the adequacy of Randall's conspiracy claim [49] only on the basis that the exclusive provider contract is the agreement that is allegedly in restraint of trade, it is apparent from Randall's complaint and his resistance to the motion for summary judgment that he asserts, either instead or in the alternative, that the "agreement" in question is an agreement between the Hospital and the Clinic Foundation, in the persons of their administrators, defendants Nelson and Pritchard, to preclude Randall from practicing at the Hospital. Randall specifically argues that only by terminating his contract with the Clinic Foundation, as well as his contract and AHP privileges with the Hospital, could he be precluded from practicing at the Hospital; otherwise, he would have been able to practice at the Hospital, notwithstanding the termination of his independent contract, as a Clinic Foundation employee under the Clinic Foundation's exclusive provider contract with the Hospital. Thus, although he never used the appropriate "catch phrase," it is apparent that in addition to an anticompetitive "tying" arrangement, Randall is asserting that he was subjected to a "group boycott" by the defendants.

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has explained [50] the fundamental aspects of a "group boycott" as follows:

The term boycott has a long tradition of usage. As stated in an early case: "Courts differ as to what constitutes a boycott that may be enjoined. All hold that there must be a conspiracy causing irreparable damage to the business or property of the complainant." Gompers v. Bucks Stove & Range Co., 221 U.S. 418, 437, 31 S. Ct. 492, 496, 55 L. Ed. 797 (1911). The First Circuit has said: "The classic anticompetitive 'group boycott' is a concerted action by competitors at one level to protect themselves from competition by non-group members who seek to compete at that level." Allied Int'l, Inc. v. International Longshoremen's Ass'n, 640 F.2d 1368, 1380 (1st Cir. 1981), aff'd, 456 U.S. 212, 102 S. Ct. 1656, 72 L. Ed. 2d 21 (1982) (citation omitted). The Third Circuit has provided another description: "'Classic' boycotts [include those] in which a group of business competitors seek[s] to benefit [*964] economically by excluding other competitors from the market place. 'The crucial element' in such boycotts, according to Professor Sullivan, 'is an effort to exclude or cause disadvantage [51] to one or more competitors by cutting them off from trade relationships which are necessary to any firm trying to compete.'" Larry V. Muko, Inc. v. Southwestern Pa. Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 670 F.2d 421, 429-30 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, HN24[¹] 459 U.S. 916, 103 S. Ct. 229, 74 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1982).

75 F. Supp. 2d 946, *963L^{1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18439, 50}

The Supreme Court has held that the means used to restrain competition were irrelevant. See Gompers, 221 U.S. at 438, 31 S. Ct. at 496. See also American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 809, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 1138, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946). What is important is that an anticompetitive motive propel the actions. "In each of [the] cases [finding an illegal boycott] the aim and purpose of the group boycott or refusal to deal was either to compel the object of the boycott to adopt a certain standard of trade practice, or to exclude him from competition." M & H Tire Co. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 733 F.2d 973, 979 (1st Cir. 1984) (citation omitted). See also American Tobacco, 328 U.S. at 809, 66 S. Ct. at 1138 ("It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used [52] but the result to be achieved that the statute condemns.").

In re Workers' Compensation Ins. Antitrust Litig., 867 F.2d 1552, 1561 n.14 (8th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 492 U.S. 920, and cert. denied, 493 U.S. 818 (1989). "A HN25[¹] group boycott results in impermissible harm even if it results in lower prices or temporarily stimulates competition because such boycotts have, by their 'nature and character, a monopolistic tendency' to restrain free trade." National Ass'n of Review Appraisers and Mortgage Underwriters, Inc., 64 F.3d at 1134 (quoting Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 213, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959)).

The "group boycott" Randall alleges here is a boycott by the Hospital and the Clinic Foundation, acting through their respective administrators, to keep him from practicing in the Storm Lake area. The Hospital and Clinic Foundation are not necessarily competitors joining to keep out another competitor, Randall, the "classic" boycott scenario. See In re Workers' Compensation Ins. Antitrust Litig., 867 F.2d at 1561 n.14 ("Classic' HN26[¹] boycotts [53] [include those] in which a group of business competitors seek[s] to benefit economically by excluding other competitors from the market place.") (quoting Larry V. Muko, Inc., 670 F.2d at 429-30). They are, however, potential competitors, as the Hospital could supply its own need for CRNAs by hiring in-house staff, instead of contracting with the Clinic Foundation for CRNA services. More importantly, "It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the statute condemns." American Tobacco, 328 U.S. at 809; accord In re Workers' Compensation Ins. Antitrust Litig., 867 F.2d at 1561 n.14 (quoting American Tobacco). In one "group boycott" case considered by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals involving staff privileges at a hospital, all of the members of the alleged boycott were members of the staff of one hospital and that hospital itself, which is comparable to the scenario here, which is a boycott allegedly involving the Hospital and the entity providing is anesthesia staff. Flegel v. Christian Hosp., Northeast-Northwest, 4 F.3d 682, 684 (8th Cir. 1993). The [54] result of the alleged boycott here is certainly the "classic" exclusion of the boycotted party from competing in the relevant market, here allegedly the Hospital or Storm Lake area anesthesia services market. In re Workers' Compensation Ins. Antitrust Litig., 867 F.2d at 1561 n.14 ("Classic' boycotts [include those] in which a group of business competitors seek[s] to benefit economically by excluding other competitors from the market [*965] place.") (quoting Larry V. Muko, Inc., 670 F.2d at 429-30); accord American Tobacco, 328 U.S. at 809 (the result allegedly achieved is the identifying feature of an illegal boycott).

HN27[¹] "Group boycotts" are generally per se illegal. See id. However, in Flegel v. Christian Hosp., Northeast-Northwest, 4 F.3d 682 (8th Cir. 1993), the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals held that a group boycott similar to the one asserted here is subject to the rule of reason. See Flegel, 4 F.3d at 685-87; accord Angelico v. Lehigh Valley

Hosp., Inc., 184 F.3d 268, 275 n.3 (3d Cir. 1999) (rejecting per se analysis of a group boycott against a doctor by a hospital [55] and groups of surgeons); All Care Nursing Serv., Inc. v. High Tech Staffing Servs., Inc., 135 F.3d 740, 748-49 (11th Cir. 1998) (also rejecting per se analysis of a similar group boycott claim), cert. denied sub nom. Quality Prof'l Nursing, Inc. v. Bethesda Mem. Hosp., Inc., 526 U.S. 1016, 143 L. Ed. 2d 347, 119 S. Ct. 1250 (1999). In Flegel, the plaintiff doctors of osteopathy asserted that the defendant hospital and its staff conspired in a group boycott to exclude them from practice privileges at the hospital. 4 F.3d at 684-85. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals noted that "the courts of appeals have generally examined the denial or revocation of hospital privileges under the rule of reason." Id. at 686 (citing cases). The court also relied on the decision of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Bhan v. NME Hosp., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 994, 116 L. Ed. 2d 639, 112 S. Ct. 617 (1991), for the proposition that "only certain boycotts are unlawful per se," although "the distinction between those that are and those that must be tested under the rule of reason [56] is less than crystal clear." Flegel, 4 F.3d at 687 (quoting Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1412). The court relied on "rule of reason" treatment of the matter as the boycott was purportedly an example of "industry self-regulation." Id. (citing Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985)).

Turning to the legality of the boycott in Flegel under the rule of reason, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals looked for evidence of "detrimental effects to competition, often [determined] by defining the relevant market and considering the evidence of the defendant's power within that market." 4 F.3d at 688. However, the court observed that HN28[¹] the market definition and market power analysis was not necessarily required where there was evidence of "actual detrimental effects." Id. (quoting FTC v. Indiana Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 460-61, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445, 106 S. Ct. 2009 (1986)). If either market power or actual detrimental effects are shown, the court noted that the burden shifts to the defendant to "demonstrate pro-competitive [57] effects." Id. If that demonstration is made, the plaintiff must "then try to show that any legitimate objectives can be achieved in a substantially less restrictive manner." Id. (quoting Bhan, 929 F.2d at 1413).

Randall has not, at this point, asserted actual anticompetitive effects, apart from his own exclusion from practice in the Storm Lake area, and the defendants' principal challenge to Randall's antitrust claims has been the lack of market power of the Hospital owing to the availability of other county hospitals within a reasonable distance. Therefore, the court returns to the question of market power of the defendants, which the court considered above in reference to Randall's "tying" claim. Although evidence of market power was lacking in Flegel, see Flegel, 4 F.3d at 689-91, as it had been in the "tying" case of Jefferson Parish Hospital, see Jefferson Parish Hosp., 466 U.S. at 26, there is a genuine issue of material fact as to the Hospital's market power here, arising from Randall's assertion that the Hospital is the "only game in town."

These genuine issues of material fact preclude summary judgment in the defendants' [58] favor on Randall's conspiracy claim pursuant to section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, founded on a "group boycott" [*966] of Randall by the Hospital and the Clinic Foundation. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c) (summary judgment is only appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law"). Therefore, the defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on Randall's antitrust claim.

D. Wrongful Discharge

1. The parties' arguments

Finally, the court turns to the defendants' arguments for summary judgment on Randall's "wrongful discharge" claim. HN29[¹] Under Iowa law, Employment relationships in Iowa are presumed to be at-will. Anderson v. Douglas & Lomason Co., 540 N.W.2d 277, 281 (Iowa 1995). In the absence of a valid employment contract, an employer may discharge an employee at any time, for any reason, or no reason at all. Huegerich v. IBP, Inc., 547 N.W.2d 216, 219 (Iowa 1996); Anderson, 540 N.W.2d at 281. We have recognized only two narrow exceptions to this general rule: (1) where the [59] discharge clearly violates a "well-recognized and defined public policy of the state"; and (2) where a unilateral contract is created by an employer's handbook or policy manual. Huegerich, 547 N.W.2d at 220 (quoting Springer v. Weeks & Leo Co., 429 N.W.2d 558, 560 (Iowa 1988)).

Phipps v. IASD Health Servs. Corp., 558 N.W.2d 198, 202-03 (Iowa 1997); accord Below v. Skarr, 569 N.W.2d 510, 511 (Iowa 1997) (quoting Phipps). In his wrongful discharge claim, Randall asserts both violation of public policy and violation of an employer's handbook or policy manual. He alleges that the "defendants" wrongfully discharged him contrary to the stated public policy of IOWA CODE § 20.7(3) and/or the rights guaranteed him by the personnel policies of the Hospital and Clinic Foundation.

The Hospital contends that its employee manual has no application to AHPs who, like Randall, were independent contractors. The Clinic Foundation contends that its "Benefits and Policies Handbook" has nothing to do with the termination of CRNAs, because the provisions regarding termination of CRNAs are set forth in the employment contract [60] between the Clinic Foundation and the individual CRNA. The Clinic Foundation argues further that, if its policies handbook applies, it provides no support for Randall's claim, because it only requires less notice than Randall actually got of his termination without cause.

Randall claims that the problem-solving procedure called for in the Clinic Foundation's Handbook was never used, and thus his termination by the Clinic Foundation was wrongful. However, he also contends that the "real issue" is that his contract with the Clinic Foundation was breached in violation of the Sherman Act, and that the Hospital had no reason for termination of his Anesthesia Services Agreement except that Nelson and Pritchard were conspiring to end his CRNA career at the Hospital. Randall does not reiterate any "public policy" argument.

2. Contract employee

Both the Hospital and the Clinic Foundation argue, in the first instance, that Randall's contracts are controlling on the question of whether his termination was "wrongful." As noted above, HN30 [↑] the public policy and handbook exceptions to Iowa's at-will employment policy apply "in the absence of a valid employment contract." Phipps, 558 N.W.2d at 202-03; 61 accord Below, 569 N.W.2d at 511 (quoting Phipps); Huegerich, 547 N.W.2d at 219. Randall had a contract with each institution; thus, his wrongful discharge claim would appear to be governed by the terms of those contracts, not by the "public policy" or "handbook" exceptions to at-will employment.

The court held above, in Section II.B.2.a., beginning on page 11, in reference to Randall's due process claim, that the provisions of Randall's Anesthesia Services Contract with the Hospital governed the [*967] termination of that contract and the termination of Randall's AHP privileges, and that neither termination violated the terms of the contract. Randall also cannot generate a genuine issue of material fact that his termination by the Clinic Foundation was in violation of the terms of his contract with that institution, because he was given sufficient notice of a "without cause" termination pursuant to Section 6 of the contract. See Appendix To Defendants' Motion For Summary Judgment, Deposition Exhibit No. 4, Buena Vista Clinic Foundation Professional Employment Agreement (Clinic Employment Agreement), § 6. The provision of the Clinic Employment Agreement [62] provides, in pertinent part, that the agreement would renew automatically "if neither party gives written notice to the other party of intent not to renew at least sixty (60) days prior to the scheduled expiration of the then current term." Id. Randall was notified by a written Notice of Nonrenewal of Professional Employment Agreement from Pritchard, dated May 29, 1996, more than sixty days prior to the end of the first term of his contract, that his contract with the Clinic Foundation would not be renewed and would accordingly expire on August 21, 1996.

Thus, Randall cannot assert a wrongful discharge claim based on violation of his contracts with the two institutional defendants and the defendants are entitled to summary judgment on Randall's wrongful discharge claim to the extent it is based on violation of the terms of his employment contracts. The defendants are also entitled to summary judgment on this claim to the extent it is based on violation of public policy or an employment handbook, because Randall cannot invoke such exceptions to at-will employment in the face of the existence of a valid employment contract.

3. Public policy exception

In the alternative, [63] assuming that Randall can assert a "public policy" discharge claim, despite controlling contracts, Randall cannot base such a claim on violation of IOWA CODE § 20.7\(3\), the "public policy" ground he pleaded in his Complaint. HN31[[↑]] The statutory provision in question states that "public employers shall have . . . the right to . . . suspend or discharge public employees for proper cause." IOWA CODE § 20.7\(3\). In Lockhart v. Cedar Rapids Community Sch. Dist., 577 N.W.2d 845 (Iowa 1998), the Iowa Supreme Court responded to the following question certified to it by this court: "Does HN32[[↑]] Iowa Code § 20.7\(3\) negate the presumption of at-will employment for all public employees covered under this provision of the Iowa Public Employment Relations Act?" See Lockhart, 577 N.W.2d at 845; see also Lockhart v. Cedar Rapids Community Sch. Dist., 963 F. Supp. 805 (N.D. Iowa 1997) (certifying the question). The Iowa Supreme Court answered the certified question "no." Lockhart, 577 N.W.2d at 849. More specifically, the Iowa Supreme Court held as follows:

In examining the context in which the "proper cause" language appears, we conclude [64] the legislature did not intend to establish a just-cause limitation on the right of a public employer to discharge an employee. The legislature's intent in section 20.7\(3\) was merely to restate the public employer's common law right to terminate an employee at will for any lawful reason, in other words, one not violative of public policy.

Id. at 848. Thus, HN33[[↑]] IOWA CODE § 20.7\(3\) does not itself establish any public policy against at-will termination of a public employee.

Nor can Randall properly base a claim of discharge in violation of public policy upon a violation of the Sherman Act, the position he asserts in his resistance to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. Such a claim is fully comprehended within Randall's separate Sherman Act claim, as both claims rely on an identical theory of wrongful conduct, not alternative theories, and the Sherman Act contains its own enforcement provisions. See Olson v. Prosoco, Inc., 522 N.W.2d 284, 287 (Iowa [*968] 1994) (where HN34[[↑]] claims depend upon proof of the same elements, they are duplicative, and only one may be submitted to the jury); and compare Revere Transducers, Inc. v. Deere & Co., 595 N.W.2d 751, 770-71 (Iowa 1999) [65] (alternative theories may be submitted to the jury, but duplicative damages awards compensating for the same loss are not permitted). Therefore, a wrongful discharge claim premised on the same violation of the Sherman Act asserted in a separate Sherman Act conspiracy claim is merely duplicative of the Sherman Act claim.

Consequently, the defendants are entitled to summary judgment on Randall's wrongful discharge claim, to the extent that claim is premised on discharge in violation of public policy.

4. Handbook exception

In the alternative, again assuming that Randall can assert a wrongful discharge claim based on violation of an employment handbook where his employment is subject to controlling contracts, Randall cannot base such a claim on the language of any handbook at issue here. Randall has not pointed to any "handbook" of the Hospital; rather, he points to a "handbook" of the Clinic Foundation as the basis for this part of his claim.

HN35[[↑]] Under Iowa law, an implied contract of employment can arise from an employee handbook if the following conditions are met: (1) the handbook is sufficiently definite in its terms to create an offer; (2) the handbook is communicated to [66] and accepted by the employee so as to create an acceptance; and (3) the employee provides consideration. HN36[[↑]] Jones v. Lake Park Care Ctr., Inc., 569 N.W.2d 369, 375 (Iowa 1997); Thompson v. City of Des Moines, 564 N.W.2d 839, 844 (Iowa 1997).

To determine whether the first requirement has been met, that is, to determine whether the language of the handbook creates a contract, the Iowa Supreme Court looks at the following factors:

- (1) Is the handbook in general and the progressive disciplinary procedures in particular mere guidelines or statement of policy, or are they directives?

- (2) Is the language of the disciplinary procedures detailed and definite or general and vague?
- (3) Does the employer have the power to alter the procedures at will or are they invariable?

Anderson v. Douglas & Lomason Co., 540 N.W.2d 277, 286 \(Iowa 1995\); accord Jones, 569 N.W.2d at 375 (quoting Anderson). "The HN37[¹] key to determining whether a contract has been created is whether a reasonable employee upon reading the handbook would believe they had been guaranteed certain protections by their employer." Jones, 569 N.W.2d at 375. [67] An appropriate disclaimer, rather than mere reservation of the right to alter provisions, will more likely ensure that no implied contract is created by the terms of the handbook. Id. at 376. Whether a handbook binds the parties in a contract is a question of law for the court. See Thompson, 564 N.W.2d at 844; Yockey v. Iowa, 540 N.W.2d 418, 422 \(Iowa 1995\).

Randall relies on the following provisions of the Buena Vista Clinic Foundation Benefits & Policies Handbook:

PROBLEM SOLVING PROCEDURE: Misunderstandings or conflicts can arise in any organization. To ensure positive and effective working relations, it is important that concerns be resolved before serious problems develop. Although most incidents resolve themselves, in the event a situation persists that you believe is not fair, or has not been explained adequately, you should follow the procedure below:

Step One: Meet with Unit Leader: Discuss the problem with your immediate supervisor. If you believe a discussion with your supervisor would not be appropriate, you may go to Step Two.

Step Two: Meet with Department Supervisor: Should you and your unit [68] leader be unable to settle the problem or if a discussion with your unit leader is inappropriate, you may arrange a discussion [*969] with your department manager. The manager shall thoroughly review the situation, including your supervisor's efforts to resolve the problem and will respond to you ordinarily within three working days.

Step Three: Meet with Clinic Manager: If you are not satisfied with previous measures, you may present your case in writing to the manager. The Manager shall observe proper methods to address your concern. The manager shall respond to you in writing ordinarily within three working days. The manager [sic] decision is final unless an appeal is accepted for review by the Grievance Board of the Clinic Affairs Committee.

* The proper forms for completing a written report may be obtained from the Clinic Manager.

Plaintiff's Statement of Contested Facts, Exhibit E, Buena Vista Clinic Foundation Benefits & Policies Handbook (Clinic Policies Handbook), p. 3. As a matter of law, these provisions of the Clinic Foundation's handbook do not create a contract of employment terminable only for cause.

First, the provision in question does not establish progressive [69] disciplinary procedures at all. Anderson, 540 N.W.2d at 286 (step one of analysis is to consider whether the handbook in general and the progressive disciplinary procedures in particular are mere guidelines or statement of policy, or are directives); accord Jones, 569 N.W.2d at 375 (quoting Anderson). Rather, it suggests a procedure for employees to pursue when they encounter some "conflict" or "confusion." The court concludes that no reasonable employee, upon reading this provision of the handbook, would believe he or she had been guaranteed such procedures would be followed prior to termination by his or her employer. Jones, 569 N.W.2d at 375.

Furthermore, the procedures, such as they are, are not directives, but are cast in terms of guidelines or a preferred approach as a matter of policy. See Anderson, 540 N.W.2d at 286. These procedures place the onus upon the employee to pursue the procedure the employee deems appropriate to address his or her "concern." They do not require the employer to do anything, except respond to a complaint from an employee. Again, the court concludes that no reasonable employee, [70] upon reading this provision of the handbook, would believe he or she had been guaranteed such procedures would be followed prior to termination by his or her employer. Jones, 569 N.W.2d at 375.

Third, even if the procedures established progressive disciplinary procedures, they could not establish a contract for "for cause" employment in the face of a specific disclaimer in the policy manual or handbook. See Jones, 569 N.W.2d at 376 (an appropriate disclaimer, rather than mere reservation of the right to alter provisions, will more likely ensure that no implied contract is created by the terms of the handbook). Here, above the employee's acknowledgment of receipt of the handbook, headed by a caption that reads, "AN IMPORTANT NOTE," the Clinic Policies Handbook states that the Clinic Foundation "reserves the right to make any change in policies or benefit plans without notice"; that "this handbook is intended as a guide for your questions. It is not a guarantee of employment, benefits, or eligibility for benefits"; and specifically states that "no contract of employment exists between the employee and the Buena Vista Clinic Foundation for [71] a specific or definite period. The Buena Vista Clinic Foundation may terminate an employee at any time for any reason." Clinic Policies Handbook, unnumbered preface. As a matter of law, see Thompson, 564 N.W.2d at 844 (whether HN38[[↑]] a handbook binds the parties in a contract is a question of law for the court); Yockey, 540 N.W.2d at 422 (same), Randall's assertions of violation of a right to continued employment based on the provisions of the Handbook cannot stand in the face of this disclaimer. Jones, 569 N.W.2d at 376 (an HN39[[↑]] effective disclaimer may prevent creation of employment rights by a handbook). [*970]

Therefore, on these grounds, the defendants are entitled to summary judgment on that part of Randall's wrongful discharge claim founded on violation of the provisions of an employment handbook, and consequently on the entirety of Randall's wrongful discharge claim.

III. CONCLUSION

Defendants' motion for summary judgment must be granted in part and denied in part. Defendants' motion for summary judgment on Randall's "due process" claim is granted, because Randall has failed to generate a genuine issue of material fact that [72] he has either a property or liberty interest on which such a claim can be founded. The defendants' motion for summary judgment is also granted on Randall's wrongful discharge claim, because his discharge was not in violation of the terms of the pertinent contracts, and he has pointed to no adequate basis in the public policy of this state or the terms of employment handbooks for a requirement that termination must be "for cause."

However, the defendants' motion for summary judgment must be denied as to Randall's Sherman Act claim. The court finds that there are genuine issues of material fact as to the "market power" of the Hospital precluding summary judgment on a Sherman Act claim founded on either an illegal "tying" arrangement or "group boycott."

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED this 19th day of November, 1999.

MARK W. BENNETT

U. S. DISTRICT COURT JUDGE

Ports Auth. v. Compania Panamena de Aviacion (Copa), S.A.

United States District Court for the District of Puerto Rico

November 22, 1999, Decided ; November 22, 1999, Filed

CIVIL NO. 99-1336 (JP)

Reporter

77 F. Supp. 2d 227 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18988 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,903

THE PORTS AUTHORITY OF PUERTO RICO, et al., Plaintiffs vs. COMPANIA PANAMENA DE AVIACION (COPA), S.A., Defendant

Disposition: [1] American's Motion to Dismiss GRANTED, and JUDGMENT ENTERED, DISMISSING COPA's antitrust counterclaims against American.

Core Terms

Airport, passengers, facilities, supervision, tariffs, competitors, Terminal, airlines, immunity, transportation, antitrust, Authority Act, charges, prong, motion to dismiss, conferred, formula, annual, antitrust immunity, Sherman Act, inbound, air, state action, counterclaim, flights, invoice, rates, private party, alleges, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a party may, in response to an initial pleading, file a motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. It is well-settled, however, that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual averments and indulge all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

77 F. Supp. 2d 227, *227LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18988, 1

A complaint must set forth factual allegations, either direct or inferential, regarding each material element necessary to sustain recovery under some actionable theory. The court, however, need not accept a complaint's bald assertions or legal conclusions when assessing a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Immunity

HN3 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

State action immunity is in the nature of an affirmative defense; the party claiming immunity has the burden of proof.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The "state action" doctrine, in the context of antitrust law, confers antitrust immunity on states, municipalities, and agents or instrumentalities of states or municipalities in certain circumstances. The United States Supreme Court has cautioned, however, that state-action immunity is disfavored.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

77 F. Supp. 2d 227, *227LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18988, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act is not intended to reach activities directed by a state legislature. Municipalities also enjoy antitrust immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN8 Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

A two-prong test governs antitrust immunity when the actions of private parties are challenged. First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself. The first prong is satisfied where the legislative policy is forthrightly stated and clear in its purpose to permit activities that would otherwise run afoul of the Sherman Act.

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airline Deregulation Act > General Overview

HN9 Air & Space Transportation, Airline Deregulation Act

See P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, § 336(l).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The active supervision prong of the two-prong test governing antitrust immunity mandates that the state exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct. The active supervision prong requires that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy. The mere presence of some state involvement or monitoring is insufficient. Rather, the touchstone is whether the anticompetitive scheme is the state's own, such that the details of the rates or prices have been established by deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among private parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN11 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Where prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if the state chooses to exercise it, the party claiming the immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price-setting or ratesetting scheme.

Counsel: For Plaintiffs: Francisco Fernandez Alvarez, Esq., Hato Rey, P.R.

For Plaintiffs: Diego A. Ramos Cayon, Esq., Fiddler, Gonzalez & Rodriguez, San Juan, P.R.

For Defendant: Francisco M. Troncoso Cortes, Esq., Troncoso & Becker, San Juan, P.R.

Judges: JAIME PIERAS, JR., U.S. SENIOR DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: JAIME PIERAS, JR.

Opinion

[*227] OPINION AND ORDER

Before the Court is co-Plaintiff American Airlines, Inc.'s ("American") Motion to [*228] Dismiss COPA's Counterclaim (docket No. 16), Defendant Compania Panamena de Aviacion, S.A.'s ("COPA") Opposition to American's Motion to Dismiss COPA's Antitrust Claims (docket No. 45), and American's Reply thereto (docket No. 56).

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs American and The Ports Authority of Puerto Rico ("Ports Authority") have brought this action against COPA for unjust enrichment and declaratory relief arising from COPA's non-payment of a fee for the use of the Federal Inspection Service Facility ("FIS Facility") located at the Luis Munoz Marin International Airport ("LMM Airport") in San Juan, Puerto Rico. COPA [2] filed a counterclaim alleging antitrust violations.

More specifically, COPA alleges in its counterclaim that (1) the Ports Authority had abdicated its regulatory duties and powers conferred by the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act over the FIS Facility at the LMM Airport in favor of American, without retaining any regulatory oversight, thus constituting an unreasonable "hybrid" restraint of trade in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act; (2) American's contractual demands, whereby it conditioned the building of a new FIS Facility at the LMM Airport on the Ports Authority's closing of the old FIS Facility and granting to American the exclusive right to set the fees for the use of the new FIS Facility, constitute illegal "tying," also in violation of the Sherman Act; and (3) the Ports Authority illegally granted American "monopoly power" to exclude its competitors from the LMM Airport in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act.

In its Motion to Dismiss, American argues that (1) American and Ports Authority are entitled to immunity from antitrust liability under the state action doctrine; (2) the "Noerr-Pennington Doctrine" immunizes American's outsourcing arrangement with the Ports [3] Authority; and (3) COPA has failed to state an antitrust claim because there is no antitrust injury.

In its counterclaim, COPA first requests that pursuant to the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201, the Court enter a declaratory judgment holding that the provisions of the agreement between the Ports Authority and American on June 12, 1996, and American's attempts to set, charge, and collect tariffs for the use of its FIS Facility as well as the tariffs enacted by the Ports Authority pursuant to its contractual obligations with American are illegal under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7; 49 U.S.C. §§ 40116-40117, 47101, and the federal regulations enacted thereunder; and the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, §§ 331-354. Second, COPA requests that the contract entered into by American and the Ports Authority be declared null and void under Articles 1227 and 1252 of the Puerto Rico Civil Code, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, §§ 3432 and 3511. Third, COPA requests injunctive relief enjoining American from attempting to set, charge, and collect tariffs for the use of the FIS Facility, [4] as well as from threatening COPA that it will bar the entry of its passengers. Finally, COPA seeks reimbursement for the costs incurred in filing its counterclaim.

II. LEGAL STANDARD AND FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

A. Standard for Motion to Dismiss

HN1[¹] Under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may, in response to an initial pleading, file a motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. It is well-settled, however, that "a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\); see also Miranda v. Ponce Fed. Bank, 948 F.2d 41 \(1st Cir. 1991\). The Court must accept as true "all well-pleaded factual averments and indulge [²²⁹] all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor." Aulson v. Blanchard, 83 F.3d 1, 3 \(1st Cir. 1996\) (citations omitted); see also Berrios v. Bristol Myers Squibb Caribbean Corp., 51 F. Supp. 2d 61, 1999 WL 312159 \(51\) \(D. Puerto Rico 1999\) (Pieras, J.). HN2[²] A Complaint must set forth "factual allegations, either direct or inferential, regarding each material element necessary to sustain recovery under some actionable theory." Romero-Barcelo v. Hernandez-Agosto, 75 F.3d 23, 28 n. 2 \(1st Cir. 1996\) (quoting Gooley v. Mobil Oil Corp., 851 F.2d 513, 514 \(1st Cir. 1988\)). The Court, however, need not accept a complaint's "bald assertions' or legal conclusions" when assessing a motion to dismiss. Abbott, III v. United States, 144 F.3d 1, 2 \(1st Cir. 1998\) (citing Shaw v. Digital Equip. Corp., 82 F.3d 1194, 1216 \(1st Cir. 1996\)). It is with this framework in mind that the Court will assess the motion before it.

B. COPA's Allegations

Pursuant to the legal standard set forth above, the following facts are taken as true for purposes of this motion to dismiss. COPA is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Republic of Panama and is engaged in the transportation of passengers for hire to and from Puerto Rico and other foreign destinations, among other routes it operates throughout the world. American and COPA [^{6}] are direct competitors in the air travel industry. At the LMM Airport, American's share of the air travel market is approximately 70%, while COPA's share is negligible.

Under the authority conferred by the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, § 331, and the regulatory Tariffs issued pursuant to this authority, the Ports Authority leased certain premises to COPA at the LMM Airport for the operation of scheduled flights between Puerto Rico and various international destinations. The sums paid by COPA for the use of the facilities at LMM Airport were to be established by the Tariffs enacted by the Ports Authority under the regulatory duties conferred by the Ports Authority Act.

At the time of the agreement between the Ports Authority and COPA, there were two FIS Facilities at the LMM Airport. One was located at Terminal B and used by COPA and other airlines. The second FIS Facility was located at Terminal C and used by American. The Ports Authority charged COPA $ 2.41 per inbound passenger for the use of the facilities at Terminal B, including the FIS Facility.

In May 1997, the Ports Authority notified COPA and the other international airlines that effective June 1, 1997, the [^{7}] FIS Facilities at Terminal B would be closed, and that all international airlines would be required to use the FIS Facility at Terminal C. At the time, the Ports Authority did not advise COPA of any changes in its regulatory Tariffs that would entail an increase in the fees charged for the use of FIS Facilities at the LMM Airport.

By letter dated March 27, 1998, the Ports Authority informed COPA that in addition to the Tariffs that Port Authority had been charging for inbound passengers, American would charge a fee of $ 5.66 inbound passenger. The letter indicated that the $ 5.66 per passenger fee was retroactive to June 1, 1997. The Ports Authority acknowledged that the $ 5.66 figure was different from that which American had demanded. Further, if the payment was not made, the letter indicated that American would bar COPA's passengers from access to the FIS Facility. This in turn would essentially bar COPA's passengers from entry into the United States. The $ 5.66 fee demanded by American is in addition to the fees already charged by the Ports Authority, U.S. Customs Service, U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, and U.S. Department of Agriculture.

COPA asserts that the Ports [8] Authority has abdicated its regulatory duties and powers conferred by the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act over the FIS facilities at the LMM International Airport in favor of [*230] American, without retaining any regulatory oversights. The Ports Authority does not have the authority to review the reasonableness of the fees set by American before they go into effect or the terms of the contract American insists its competitors sign. American has been exempted from the charges. Thus, the Ports Authority has granted American the ability to control and regulate the international air travel market at the LMM Airport.

C. Uncontested Facts

In addition to the facts alleged by COPA, the Court takes notice of the following facts, to which the parties previously stipulated:

1. The Authority is an instrumentality of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, created by virtue of the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, §§ 331-354.
2. American is a corporation organized in Delaware, with its principal place of business in Fort Worth, Texas. American transports passengers to and from Puerto Rico by aircraft from and to airports in the United States and foreign countries.
3. [9] COPA is a corporation organized in Panama. COPA transports passengers to and from Puerto Rico and other foreign countries.
4. To the extent American and COPA fly and serve the same markets for foreign passengers, or could expand their operations to serve those same markets, American and COPA are competitors or could be competitors in those markets.
5. COPA is a significant competitor of American in international air travel in the routes to and from San Juan and Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, and San Juan and Central America.
6. According to public statistics kept by the Ports Authority and other federal regulatory agencies, airlines other than American and its affiliate, Executive Airlines, Inc., d/b/a American Eagle, transport about 30% of the passengers traveling in and out of LMM Airport. In other words, American transports approximately 70% of the passengers in and out of LMM Airport.
7. The Ports Authority owns, regulates and administers all the facilities and services related to the transportation of goods and passengers to and from Puerto Rico, including the LMM Airport, by operation of state law, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, §§ 331-354.
8. Pursuant to [10] its enabling Act, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, §§ 331-354, the Ports Authority has adopted regulations, contracts and tariffs regulating the use of all the facilities at the LMM International Airport; who has to pay for the use of those facilities; who can build, operate and maintain those facilities; and how much has to be paid for the use of those facilities.
9. Under the authority conferred by the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, §§ 331-354, and the regulatory tariffs issued pursuant thereto, on December 14, 1995, the Ports Authority leased counter space to COPA in order to sell tickets and service clients. The amounts to be paid by COPA for the use of the above-mentioned facilities at the LMM Airport, were those to be established by the tariffs enacted by the Ports Authority under the regulatory duties conferred by the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act.
10. As an operator of scheduled flights to and from Puerto Rico and international destinations and Puerto Rico being the point of entry into the United States of COPA's flights, the Ports Authority facility used by COPA at the LMM Airport as of 1995 for its passengers to [*231] enter the United States was the [11] Federal Inspection Service facilities located at the International Terminal (formerly known as the Eastern Airlines terminal or Terminal B).

11. At the time of the agreement between the Ports Authority and COPA, there were two FIS facilities at the LMM Airport, one at the International Terminal (Terminal B) used by COPA and other airlines, and another at Terminal C used by American.

12. Until June 1997, the Ports Authority operated and allowed American Airlines to operate two FIS facilities at the LMM Airport.

13. One of those FIS facilities was built by the former Eastern Airlines and it was operated and maintained by the Authority. The other FIS facility was built, operated and maintained by American.

14. COPA passengers were processed by federal authorities through the old FIS facilities operated by the Authority until June 1997.

15. American has charged $ 5.66 per arriving international passenger for the use of its FIS facilities during the second half of 1997 and throughout 1998.

16. On numerous occasions, American has threatened that it would bar the entry of COPA's passengers to the United States unless COPA agrees to pay American the sum of $ 5.66 [12] per inbound passenger.

17. Pursuant to the authority conferred on American by the Ports Authority under the June 12, 1996 agreement, American has demanded payment from its competitors that operate international flights and are required to use the FIS facilities of the LMM Airport to enter the United States, that they sign an agreement with American wherein they consent to the payment of the $ 5.66 per inbound tariff to American.

18. American has demanded from COPA and its other competitors information on the actual number of passengers arriving on each flight, that COPA name American as an additional named insured in its liability insurance policy and that it hold harmless American from any liability for the use of the FIS facilities at the LMM Airport.

19. Beginning January 1, 1999, the fee for using its FIS facility at LMM Airport increased by 22 cents per person.

20. All information about the number of passengers deplaning from an international flight at any airport of the United States is public information kept by operation of law by several federal agencies.

21. The Ports Authority enacted public resolutions and tariffs for the fees for use of its facilities [13] during 1997.

22. The Ports Authority enacted Tariff A-3-2, effective during 1997, prohibiting anyone at the LMM Airport to collect any different tariff "unless a specific contract has been signed with the Authority and/or prior written consent has been obtained from the Authority."

23. On February 19, 1997, the Ports Authority adopted Emergency Resolution No. 97-12.

24. The following list includes the number of COPA passengers processed through the American FIS facility from June 1997 through February 1999.

1997
June	6,644
July	7,756
August	7,047
September	5,562
October	6,149
November	6,199

	December	5,596
--	----------	-------

	1998
--	------

	January	6,776
	February	5,682
	March	6,472
	April	5,810
	May	5,057
	June	7,969
	July	9,596
	August	8,092
	September	4,975
	October	4,694
	November	4,937
	December	4,704

	1999
--	------

	January	6,880
	February	5,258

[*232] 25. During the months of March, April and May 1999, COPA processed more than 15,000 passengers through the FIS facility in LMM Airport.

26. On or about March 31, 1998, American delivered to COPA invoice number 1800009358 in the amount of $ 279,145.54 for the use of the FIS facilities in LMM Airport.

[14] 27. On or about July 28, 1998, American delivered to COPA invoice number 9900083543 in the amount of $ 175,324.16 for the use of the FIS facilities in LMM Airport.

28. On or about November 16, 1998, American delivered to COPA invoice number 9900120906 in the amount of $ 161,530.74 for the use of the FIS facilities in LMM Airport.

29. On or about January 15, 1999, American delivered to COPA invoice number 9900138702 in the amount of $ 26,839.72 for the use of the FIS facilities in LMM Airport.

30. On or about March 16, 1999, American delivered to COPA invoice number 9900155008 in the amount of $ 41,561.38 for the use of the FIS facilities in LMM Airport.

31. COPA has not paid any of the invoices delivered by American for the use by COPA's passengers of the new FIS facilities built and operated by American because it understands the fee is illegal.

32. From January 1, 1999 until May 31, 1999, more than 27,000 COPA passengers used the new FIS facilities built and operated by American.

33. On March 27, 1998, the Ports Authority sent a letter to COPA regarding the payment of FIS facility usage fees.

34. The FIS fee charged by American is to be paid [15] by FIS users in addition to any unrelated Authority charges for the use of airport gates and premises as well as another unrelated charges by United States governmental authorities.

35. American entered into an agreement with the Ports Authority dated June 12, 1996, under which American agreed to build a new FIS facility.

36. The agreement that American has requested that its competitors sign for the use of the FIS facilities at the LMM Airport included the following provision:

FIS Fee. American and the User [the competitor] acknowledge that the initial estimated Cost Per Passenger (as defined on Exhibit "A") shall be $ 5.66 through December 31, 1997 and will be adjusted by American on annual basis as of the first day of each year thereafter commencing on January 1, 1998 according to the formula presented in Exhibit "A."

III. "STATE ACTION" DOCTRINE

American contends that it enjoys antitrust immunity under the "state action" doctrine. HN3[↑] State action immunity is in the nature of an affirmative defense; the party claiming immunity has the burden of proof. See Ticor II, 504 U.S. 621, 112 S. Ct. 2169 at 2172, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410; Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 37-39, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 1716, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 \(1985\); 16 Federal Maritime Comm'n v. Seatrain Lines, Inc., 411 U.S. 726, 731-33, 93 S. Ct. 1773, 1778, 36 L. Ed. 2d 620 \(1973\); Yeager's Fuel v. Pennsylvania Power & Light, 22 F.3d 1260, 1267 \(3d Cir. 1994\). American argues that it is entitled to state action immunity because the conduct challenged by COPA is undertaken pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy that is actively supervised by the state itself. See California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 943, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 \(1980\).

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States" shall be unlawful. HN4[↑] 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1997\). HN5[↑] Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." Id., § 2.

HN6[↑] The "state action" doctrine, in the context of antitrust law, confers antitrust immunity on states, municipalities, and agents or instrumentalities of states 17 or municipalities in certain circumstances. The United States Supreme Court has cautioned, however, that "state-action immunity is disfavored . . ." Federal Trade Comm'n v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 2178, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 \(1992\). The doctrine is rooted in the case of Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 \(1943\), which established that HN7[↑] the Sherman Act was not intended to reach activities directed by a state legislature. Parker, 317 U.S. at 350-51, 63 S. Ct. at 313. The Supreme Court later expanded the scope of Parker, finding that municipalities also enjoyed antitrust immunity. See Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 \(1978\) (opinion of Brennan, J.).

HN8[↑] A two-prong test governs antitrust immunity under Parker when the actions of private parties are challenged. "First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself." Ticor, 504 U.S. at 633, 112 S. Ct. at 2176 (quoting 18 California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 943, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 \(1980\)). The first prong is satisfied where the legislative policy is "forthrightly stated and clear in its purpose" to permit activities that would otherwise run afoul of the Sherman Act. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105, 100 S. Ct. at 943.

The Puerto Rico Legislative Assembly has clearly articulated a state policy to displace competition in the operation and management of air transportation facilities. In creating the Ports Authority, the Legislative Assembly vested it with the authority "to develop and improve, own, operate, and manage any and all types of air . . . transportation facilities and services, . . . and make available the benefits thereof in the most extensive and least costly manner . . ." P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, § 336 (1995). To this end, the Legislative Assembly granted the Ports Authority the power "to determine, fix, alter, charge and collect rates, fees, rentals and other charges for the use of the facilities or services of the Authority, or other commodities sold, rendered, or furnished by the Authority, which shall 19 be fair and reasonable." Id. at § HN9[↑] 336(l). The legislative policy to entrust to the Ports Authority the exclusive power to manage Puerto Rico's air transportation facilities has been forthrightly stated, in satisfaction of the first prong of the state action doctrine. See Town of Hallie v. Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 43, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 1718, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985).

HN10 [↑] The active supervision prong, on the other hand, "mandates that the State exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct. . . . The active supervision [*234] prong of the Midcal test requires that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy." Ticor, 504 U.S. at 634, 112 S. Ct. at 2177 (quoting Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100-01, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 1666, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1988)). The Supreme Court has made clear that the mere presence of some state involvement or monitoring is insufficient. See id. Rather, the touchstone is "whether the anticompetitive scheme is the State's own," such that the details of the rates or prices have been [*20] established by "deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among private parties." 504 U.S. at 634-35, 112 S. Ct. at 2177. The Supreme Court elaborated that HN11 [↑] where "prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if the State chooses to exercise it, the party claiming the immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price-setting or ratesetting scheme." Id. at 638, 112 S. Ct. at 2179.

American argues that the active supervision prong is satisfied in this case because the Ports Authority has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of American's operating policies. In particular, American points to the June 12, 1996 agreement ("Agreement") between the Ports Authority and American which provides for the construction and operation of a new FIS Facility by American, and authorizes American to charge other airlines a "reasonable, nondiscriminatory fee" for use of the Facility. See American's Motion to Dismiss, Exh. A, §§ 7.01, 9.08.

The Ports Authority set the initial FIS Facilities fee at $ 5.66 per passenger. The Agreement permits American to adjust [*21] the FIS fee on a yearly basis, and details a formula for calculating the fee. The formula requires American to charge a fee equal to the cost per passenger multiplied by the number of passengers using the FIS Facility each year. See id., § 9.08(b). The cost per passenger is determined by taking the sum of (1) the annual debt service payments made by American on account of the FIS Facility; (2) the annual maintenance cost for the FIS Facility, including baggage system maintenance costs; (3) the annual operating expenses for the FIS Facilities, such as utilities and cleaning expenses; (4) annual rent or other payments made by American to the Authority with respect to the FIS Facility; and (5) any and all other payments made or costs or taxes incurred by American in connection with the ownership, use or operation of the FIS Facility. See id.

In addition to establishing the initial FIS Facilities fee and detailing a formula for the yearly adjustment of the FIS fee, the Ports Authority built a supervisory mechanism into the Agreement. Section 6.01 of the agreement requires American to submit a monthly report to the Authority, setting forth "passenger, traffic and cargo data as [*22] may reasonably be requested by the Authority to determine the amount of any rental, fees or charges hereunder." Id., § 6.01. Further, section 6.03 of the agreement provides that the Authority has the right to require the preparation of an annual independent audit, which might include a review of the passenger, traffic and cargo data supplied by American during the previous fiscal year. See id., § 6.03. And in each year since American began managing the FIS Facility and charging a user fee, the Ports Authority has enacted public resolutions confirming American's power to collect a fee for each arriving international passenger using the Facility. See id.

COPA contends that the Ports Authority has failed to exercise active supervision over the setting of the FIS Facility fee. While the Ports Authority determined the initial FIS fee of $ 5.66 per inbound passenger, by contract it gave American the authority to unilaterally raise this fee each year without first submitting the change to Ports Authority for approval. On January 1, 1999, American raised the FIS fee from [*235] $ 5.66 to $ 5.88 per inbound passenger without pre-approval or scrutiny by the Ports Authority. COPA concedes [*23] that Article 6(l) of the Puerto Rico Ports Authority Act provides that the Ports Authority shall conduct an economic study of its tariffs each year to determine if the fees being charged are reasonable. See P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, § 336(l). It argues, however, that while the Ports Authority annually conducts a detailed economic study of the reasonableness of the fees charged at the LMM Airport, these studies have not encompassed the FIS Facility fee that American charges its competitors. COPA further contends that other aspects of the supervisory scheme do not afford the Ports Authority any real supervisory powers over the setting, raising, and collection of the FIS fee by American.

In Ticor, the U.S. Supreme Court held that "the mere potential for state supervision" is not enough to constitute active state supervision as required by Midcal. See Ticor, 504 U.S. at 638, 112 S. Ct. at 2179. Ticor involved a suit against six of the country's largest title insurance companies for price fixing in their fees for title searches and title examinations through rate bureaus. Each title insurance rate bureau was licensed by the State and authorized to establish [24] rates for its member insurance companies. The rates set by these private parties went into effect automatically unless the regulatory agency chose to exercise a veto within a specified period of time. The findings of fact demonstrated that although a mechanism for regulatory review existed on a theoretical level, the agency failed to check many of the rate filings, and rates remained in effect despite the failure of the rating bureaus to provide additional information requested by the agency. See id. at 638, 112 S. Ct. at 2179. Thus, the agency did not in fact engage in active state supervision. See id. As a result, the Supreme Court held that the title insurance companies did not enjoy antitrust immunity. See id.

As in Ticor, the FIS Facility Fee established by American goes into effect automatically. A scheme exists for the Ports Authority to review the reasonableness of the FIS Fee, but that scheme neither subjects the determination of the FIS Fee to prior Ports Authority approval nor specifically grants Ports Authority veto power over the setting of the FIS Fee.

The present case, however, is distinguishable from Ticor. A detailed contractual formula [25] leaves American virtually no discretion in the setting of the FIS Fee. In 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 \(1987\), the Supreme Court struck down a New York statute providing that liquor retailers must charge at least 112% of the wholesaler's "posted" bottle price in effect at the time the retailer sells or offers to sell an item. Because each wholesaler set its own "posted" prices without supervision by the State, and New York did not engage in any monitoring of the price schedules, the Court held that the scheme did not satisfy the active supervision prong. See id. at 345-45, 107 S. Ct. 725-26.

The Court noted, however, that a simple "minimum markup" statute requiring retailers to charge 112 percent of their actual wholesale cost may satisfy the "active supervision" requirement, presumably because it does away with the discretionary component present in the New York statute. See id. at 344 n.6, 107 S. Ct. at 725. In that vein, the Court cited favorably Morgan v. Division of Liquor Control, 664 F.2d 353 \(2d Cir. 1981\), in which the Second Circuit found that the active supervision [26] requirement was satisfied where Connecticut had structured "a detailed mechanism for determining prices," which required that prices not be below wholesaler's cost, and cost was defined to include actual cost, transportation charges, insurance and a minimum markup. Morgan, 664 F.2d at 354, 355. Similarly, in Woolen v. Surtran Taxicabs, Inc., 801 F.2d 159 \(5th Cir. 1986\), the Fifth Circuit found the active supervision prong satisfied [236] where the details of an exclusive contract for taxicab service at the Dallas/Fort Worth Regional Airport were set forth comprehensively in contracts between the airport board and the taxicab company to whom the board granted exclusive rights. See Woolen, 801 F.2d at 164; cf. Zimomra v. Alamo Rent-A-Car, Inc., 111 F.3d 1495 \(10th Cir.\), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 948, 139 L. Ed. 2d 284, 118 S. Ct. 365 \(1997\) (holding that active supervision unnecessary where challenged ordinance left defendants, car rental companies at Denver International Airport, virtually no discretionary authority in setting and collecting usage fees from their customers because usage fee determined by detailed [27] formula).

This Court finds that, as in Morgan, Woolen, and Zimomra, a detailed structure governs the challenged anticompetitive conduct. The Agreement between American and the Ports Authority sets forth a detailed formula for annually adjusting the FIS Facility fee. Pursuant to this formula, American has virtually no discretion in the establishment of the fee. Moreover, a mechanism exists by which the Ports Authority can monitor the data used by American in fixing the fee. Even if the Ports Authority has not reviewed the reasonableness of the FIS Facility fee pursuant to P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 23, § 336(l), the Agreement itself specifies two additional mechanisms for reviewing the reasonableness of the FIS fee. COPA has not alleged that the Ports Authority failed to pursue those mechanisms set forth in the Agreement for reviewing the reasonableness of the FIS fee. Thus, the active supervision prong is satisfied in this case.

Both prongs of the Midcal test for antitrust immunity have been satisfied. It therefore follows that American enjoys antitrust immunity. The Court notes, however, that the Ports Authority has the responsibility to exercise oversight in American's levying [28] of the FIS Facility fee by, for example, examining the data submitted in the monthly reports and periodically ordering an independent audit. COPA does not contend that the Ports Authority has failed to exercise its supervisory responsibility; rather, it contends that it lacks sufficient powers to exercise real supervision over the adjustment of the FIS fee. Because the Court finds that the Agreement belies COPA's contention, it finds for American.

IV. THE NOERR-PENNINGTON DOCTRINE

American raises the defense of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to the extent that COPA alleges that American engaged in unlawful monopolistic conduct by obtaining or influencing legislative, executive, judicial or administrative action. COPA assures the Court, however, that it does not allege the type of unlawful monopolistic conduct for which the Noerr-Pennington doctrine can provide immunity. "The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine is clearly inapplicable to the facts of the case at bar, inasmuch as this case does not have anything to do with efforts, bona fide or otherwise, by American to obtain or influence legislative, executive, judicial or administrative action . . ." Id. at 21. Thus, by COPA's [29] own admission, it does not allege unlawful monopolistic conduct for any attempts that American may have made to obtain or influence legislative, executive, judicial or administrative action. American's defense of Noerr-Pennington immunity is therefore inapposite.

The Court's holding on the issue of state action immunity and COPA's admission with respect to Noerr-Pennington immunity disposes of COPA's antitrust claims. It is unnecessary, therefore, to address the remaining antitrust defenses raised by American.

V. CONCLUSION

In view of the foregoing, the Court hereby GRANTS American's Motion to Dismiss, and ENTERS JUDGMENT, DISMISSING [*237] COPA's antitrust counterclaims against American.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

In San Juan, Puerto Rico, this 22nd day of November, 1999.

JAIME PIERAS, JR.

U.S. SENIOR DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Chromalloy Gas Turbine Corp. v. United Techs. Corp.

Court of Appeals of Texas, Fourth District, San Antonio

November 24, 1999, Delivered ; November 24, 1999, Filed

No. 04-97-00674-CV

Reporter

9 S.W.3d 324 *; 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 8791 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,718

CHROMALLOY GAS TURBINE CORPORATION, Appellant v. UNITED TECHNOLOGIES CORPORATION, Appellee

Subsequent History: [1] Petition for Review Denied December 7, 2000. Motion for Rehearing Denied November 24, 1999.

Petition for review denied by, 12/07/2000

Rehearing denied by, 03/01/2001

Prior History: From the 225th Judicial District Court, Bexar County, Texas. Trial Court No. 95-CI-12541. Honorable John J. Specia, Jr., Judge Presiding.

This Opinion Substituted on Overrule of Rehearing for Withdrawn Opinions of November 17, 1999, Previously Reported at: 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 8572 and October 14, 1998, Previously Reported at: 1998 Tex. App. LEXIS 6325.

Chromalloy Gas Turbine Corp. v. United Techs. Corp., 1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 8572, 1999 WL 1036583 \(Tex. App. San Antonio, Nov. 17, 1999\)

Disposition: MOTION FOR REHEARING OVERRULED.

Core Terms

injunctive relief, antitrust, illegal conduct, trial court, monopoly, monopolistic, monopoly power, injunction, ongoing, repairs, probability

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

[HN1\[\] Attempts to Monopolize, State Regulation](#)

The Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act prohibits monopolies or attempts to monopolize. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05\(b\) (Vernon 1987). However, the mere possession of monopoly or market power is not forbidden.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN2 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The prohibition against attempted monopoly does not encompass all efforts to acquire market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05\(b\) (Vernon 1987), was not intended, for example, to protect against increasing competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN4 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To establish an illegal monopoly, a plaintiff must show (1) the defendant's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To prove attempted monopoly, a plaintiff must show (1) the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The difference between actual monopoly and attempted monopoly rests in the requisite intent and the necessary level of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

HN7 Private Actions, Remedies

Once a monopoly or attempted monopoly is established, the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act (the Act), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05\(b\) (Vernon 1987), permits recovery of damages as well as injunctive relief. Injunctive relief is available to a plaintiff if a violation of the Act threatens it with injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > State Regulation

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 [down] Private Actions, State Regulation

Any person whose business or property is threatened with injury by reason of anything declared unlawful in the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act (Act), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05\(b\) (Vernon 1987), may sue any person to enjoin the unlawful practice temporarily or permanently. In any such suit, the court shall apply the same principles as those generally applied by courts of equity in suits for injunctive relief against threatened conduct that would cause injury to business or property. Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.21\(b\) (Vernon 1987).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

A jury may determine whether the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act (the Act), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 15.05\(b\) (Vernon 1987), has been violated, but the trial court determines the propriety of injunctive relief; that is, whether the illegal conduct threatens the plaintiff with injury. To make its determination, the trial court must consider the ultimate facts found by the jury and may consider that a settled course of conduct will continue, absent clear proof to the contrary. Thus, the trial court's ruling is a mixed question of law and fact.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

HN10 [down] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

As with other mixed questions of law and fact, an appellate court reviews the trial court's decision to issue an injunction with the abuse of discretion standard.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

HN11 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

There are different proof requirements for injunctive relief between government and private antitrust actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Public Interest

9 S.W.3d 324, *324L999 Tex. App. LEXIS 8791, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

HN12 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In a government antitrust action, injunctive relief is available upon a finding that a defendant has engaged in monopolistic conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN13 [L] Private Actions, Standing

In a private action, a general threat to the public is insufficient to establish a plaintiff's right to an injunction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

HN14 [L] Private Actions, Remedies

In a private anti-trust action, the burden rests with the plaintiff to establish that its private interests are threatened with harm due to the impending or ongoing illegal conduct of the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN15 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Attempt to engage in monopolistic conduct means (1) a party has engaged in exclusionary conduct (2) with the specific intent to acquire or maintain monopoly power and (3) there is a dangerous probability of the party achieving monopoly power in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN16 [L] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

The elements of attempted monopoly must be contemporaneous; that is, the dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power must exist while a party has engaged in exclusionary conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN17 [L] Private Actions, Remedies

To obtain injunctive relief, a private antitrust plaintiff is required to show it is threatened with injury due to an antitrust violation.

Counsel: ATTORNEYS FOR APPELLANT: Timothy Patton, POZZA & PATTON, John W. Davidson, Lea A. Ream, DAVIDSON & TROILO, P.C., San Antonio, TX. Salem M. Katsh, P. Michael Jung, STRASBURGER & PRICE, L.L.P., Dallas, TX. Richard P. Hogan, Jr., Roger Townsend, HOGAN, DUBOSE & TOWNSEND, L.L.P., Houston, TX. Staci B. Barber, David Lender, WEIL, GOTSHAL & MANGES, L.L.P., Stuart N. Krinsky, Ira Schreger, Steven R. Lowson, New York, NY.

ATTORNEYS FOR APPELLEE: Paul A. Drummond, Zachary B. Aoki, JENKENS & GILCHRIST, GROCE, LOCKE & HEBDON, P.C., San Antonio, TX. Fred H. Bartlit, Jr., Donald E. Scott, Mark L. Levine, Ryan D. Downs, BARTLIT, BECK, HERMAN, PALENCHAR & SCOTT, Chicago, IL. Ricardo G. Cedillo, DAVIS, ADAMI & CEDILLO, INC., San Antonio, TX. David E. Keltner, Karen S. Precella, JOSE, HENRY, BRANTLEY & KELTNER, L.L.P., Fort Worth, TX. Thomas H. Crofts, Jr., Ellen B. Mitchell, CROFTS, CALLAWAY & JEFFERSON, P.C., San Antonio, TX.

Judges: Opinion by: Paul W. Green, Justice. Sitting: Phil Hardberger, Chief Justice, Alma L. Lopez, Justice, Paul W. Green, Justice.

Opinion by: PAUL W. GREEN

Opinion

[*326] ON MOTION FOR REHEARING

The opinions of the court dated October 14, 1998, and November 17, 1999, are withdrawn and the following is substituted. The motion for rehearing is overruled.

The question is whether a private plaintiff in an antitrust action is entitled to injunctive relief when the defendant attempted to engage in monopolistic conduct, but the illegal conduct caused the plaintiff neither damage nor irreparable injury. Under the antitrust statute, a plaintiff who is threatened with injury because of the monopolistic conduct of a defendant may enjoin the illegal conduct. In this case, [2] because the evidence is inconclusive that the plaintiff is threatened with injury, we hold it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny injunctive relief. Accordingly, we affirm the judgment of the trial court.

Background

Chromalloy Gas Turbine Corporation ("Chromalloy") repairs commercial jet engines, including those made and sold by the Pratt & Whitney Aircraft Division of United Technologies Corporation ("Pratt"). In 1995, Chromalloy sued Pratt for violations of the state antitrust law. Specifically, Chromalloy alleged that Pratt offset its losses from the sale of new engines with monopolistic profits from the sale of spare parts. According to Chromalloy, Pratt increased the spare parts market by restricting the repaired parts market through a variety of anticompetitive activities, including withholding technical data, denying "approved status" to independent repairs, and advising airlines to reject repaired parts.

Pratt counterclaimed for declaratory and injunctive relief, alleging Chromalloy engaged in unfair competition. According to Pratt, Chromalloy possessed both the technical ability and the legal authority to develop and sell its own repairs, [3] without Pratt intervention. Essentially, Pratt characterized Chromalloy's complaints as "sour grapes" about its own increasing competition and decreasing quality.

After a three-month trial, the parties' claims were submitted to a jury, which found that Pratt "willfully or flagrantly" attempted to engage in monopolistic conduct, but that Chromalloy was not damaged by the illegal conduct. The jury further found that Pratt's conduct would not cause irreparable injury to Chromalloy. Lastly, the jury found against Pratt on its claims against Chromalloy. The trial court rendered a take-nothing judgment against both parties. Pratt did not appeal. Chromalloy's appeal is limited to the trial court's refusal to grant injunctive relief.

[*327] The Texas Antitrust Act

HN1 The Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act ("the Act") prohibits monopolies or attempts to monopolize. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.05(b) (Vernon 1987). However, the mere "possession of monopoly or market power is not forbidden." E. THOMAS SULLIVAN & JEFFREY L. HARRISON, UNDERSTANDING ANTITRUST & ITS ECONOMIC IMPLICATIONS 244 (1988). HN2 Likewise, the prohibition against attempted monopoly does not encompass "all efforts to acquire market power." Id. HN3 The Act was not intended, for example, to protect against increasing competition. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 122, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986).

To establish an illegal monopoly, a plaintiff must show (1) the defendant's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident. HN5 Caller-Times Pub. Co., Inc. v. Triad Communications, Inc., 826 S.W.2d 576, 580 (Tex. 1992). To prove attempted monopoly, a plaintiff must show (1) the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 (1993).¹ HN6 The difference between actual monopoly and attempted monopoly rests in the requisite intent and the necessary level of monopoly power. Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 1997), *5 cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1094, 118 S. Ct. 1560, 140 L. Ed. 2d 792 (1998).

HN7 Once a monopoly or attempted monopoly is established, the Act permits recovery of damages as well as injunctive relief. Injunctive relief is available to a plaintiff if a violation of the Act threatens it with injury.

HN8 Any person . . . whose business or property is threatened with injury by reason of anything declared unlawful in . . . this Act may sue any person . . . to enjoin the unlawful practice temporarily or permanently. In any such suit, the court shall apply the same principles as those generally applied by courts of equity in suits for injunctive relief against threatened conduct that would cause injury to business or property.

TEX. 61 BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.21(b) (Vernon 1987) (emphasis added), and see Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 130, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 (1969) (injunction authorized on demonstration of significant threat of injury from impending or ongoing violation).

Standard and Scope of Review

HN9 A jury may determine whether the Act has been violated, but the trial court determines the propriety of injunctive relief; that is, whether the illegal conduct threatens the plaintiff with injury. See Valenzuela v. Aquino, 853 S.W.2d 512, 514 n.2 (Tex. 1992); State v. Texas Pet Foods, Inc., 591 S.W.2d 800, 803 (Tex. 1979). To make its determination, the trial court must consider the ultimate facts found by the jury and may consider that a settled course of conduct "will continue, absent clear proof to the contrary." See Texas Pet Foods, 591 S.W.2d at 804.

¹ Because the Texas Antitrust Act is derived from federal law, it should be construed in harmony with federal authority. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.04 (Vernon 1987); De Santis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 687 (Tex. 1990).

Thus, the trial court's ruling is a mixed question of law and fact. Alamo Title Co. v. San Antonio Bar Ass'n, 360 S.W.2d 814, 816 (Tex. Civ. App.--Waco 1962, writ ref'd n.r.e.).²

[7] [*328]

HN10[↑] As with other mixed questions of law and fact, we review the trial court's decision to issue an injunction with the abuse of discretion standard. See Priest v. Texas Animal Health Comm'n, 780 S.W.2d 874, 875 (Tex. App.-Dallas 1989, no writ). Under this standard, we defer to the trial court's ruling on factual matters while reviewing legal questions de novo. Pony Express Courier Corp. v. Morris, 921 S.W.2d 817, 820 (Tex. App.--San Antonio 1996, no writ). The trial court abuses its discretion when it fails to properly apply the law to the undisputed facts, when it acts arbitrarily or unreasonably, or when it bases its ruling on factual assertions unsupported by the record. Remington Arms Co., Inc. v. Luna, 966 S.W.2d 641, 643 (Tex. App.--San Antonio 1998, pet. denied).

Discussion

Chromalloy contends the trial court erred in refusing to grant an injunction because the verdict and record conclusively establish that Pratt's illegal conduct constitutes a threat of injury. Conversely, Pratt argues that Chromalloy failed to establish either a threat of injury or ongoing illegal conduct. We agree with Pratt and, by doing [*8] so, reject Chromalloy's contention that in a private action the finding of an antitrust violation, standing alone, automatically entitles the plaintiff to injunctive relief unless the defendant proves it has ended its anticompetitive practices.

HN11[↑] There are different proof requirements for injunctive relief between government and private antitrust actions. HN12[↑] In a government antitrust action, injunctive relief is available upon a finding that a defendant has engaged in monopolistic conduct. The inherent threat to the public interest is deemed sufficient to entitle the government to injunctive relief. HN13[↑] But in a private action, a general threat to the public is insufficient to establish a plaintiff's right to an injunction. See Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 122, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\) (private plaintiff must show injury or threatened injury to its own interests); Credit Bureau Reports, Inc. v. Retail Credit Co., 476 F.2d 989, 992 \(5th Cir. 1973\) (mere showing by private plaintiff of antitrust violation has no actionable significance because, while government action need only show antitrust violation, private litigant [*9] must show violation together with injury or threatened injury to its own interests caused by the violation). HN14[↑] Therefore, as in any suit for injunctive relief, the burden rests with the plaintiff to establish that its private interests are threatened with harm due to the impending or ongoing illegal conduct of the defendant.

The trial court did not give a reason for its refusal to grant an injunction except to say that it based its decision on the jury verdict and the record. The jury found Chromalloy was not damaged or irreparably injured as a result of Pratt's illegal conduct, and the evidence tending to show Chromalloy is threatened with injury is both disputed and inconclusive.

Chromalloy relies on the jury's affirmative answer to the attempted monopoly question to show that it was threatened with harm. Specifically, it focuses on the question's definition of "attempted monopoly" and its reference to "dangerous probability":

Did Pratt & Whitney attempt to engage in monopolistic conduct which was a material cause of injury to Chromalloy?

² The Supreme Court has characterized "imminent harm" as a legal question for the court. Operation Rescue- Nat'l v. Planned Parenthood, Inc., 975 S.W.2d 546, 554 \(Tex. 1998\). Legal questions may involve factual determinations. See EI Paso Natural Gas Co. v. Minco Oil & Gas Co., 964 S.W.2d 54, 60-61 (Tex. App.--Amarillo 1998, pet. filed).

HN15[] "Attempt to engage in monopolistic conduct" means (1) a party has engaged in exclusionary conduct (2) with the specific intent to acquire or [10] maintain monopoly power and (3) there is a dangerous [*329] probability of the party achieving monopoly power in a relevant market.³

According to Chromalloy, because the jury found there is a "dangerous probability" of Pratt achieving monopoly power in the replacement parts market, we must infer that Chromalloy is threatened by Pratt's ongoing illegal conduct. We disagree.

HN16[] The elements [11] of attempted monopoly must be contemporaneous; that is, the "dangerous probability" of achieving monopoly power must exist while "a party has engaged in exclusionary conduct." See Spectrum Sports, Inc., 506 U.S. at 456 (requiring coexisting elements); United States v. American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114, 1118 (5th Cir. 1984) (same). The answer to the jury question establishes that Pratt engaged in attempted monopolistic conduct at some indeterminate time in the past, but it does not imply a finding of continuing illegal activity that threatens Chromalloy with injury. The trial court was obliged to consider this when deciding whether or not to issue an injunction. See Alamo Title Co., 360 S.W.2d at 816. Given the limited nature of the finding, the trial court was not required to conclude that ongoing illegal conduct threatened Chromalloy with injury. See Kneip v. Unitedbank-Victoria, 734 S.W.2d 130, 138 (Tex. App.--Corpus Christi 1987, no writ) (Dorsey, J., concurring) (stating "no findings of fact [made by the jury] can mandate an injunction"). Thus, we turn to Chromalloy's assertion that Pratt's threatening, [12] illegal conduct was established by the evidence as a matter of law.

Chromalloy asserted a number of separate acts for which it claimed damages and upon which it based its claim for injunctive relief. According to Chromalloy, these acts, taken together, constituted a settled course of conduct that violated the antitrust law. However, the evidence characterizing these events was hotly contested. For example, Chromalloy complained that Pratt failed to approve repairs as early as 1989 and as late as 1995. Pratt claimed it denied the approvals for various legitimate business reasons. In short, the record is subject to differing, but reasonable, interpretations on the question of whether there was ongoing illegal conduct that threatened Chromalloy with injury. Consequently, the trial court, in exercising its discretion, could conclude that Chromalloy was not threatened by Pratt.

Conclusion

HN17[] To obtain injunctive relief, a private antitrust plaintiff is required to show it is threatened with injury due to an antitrust violation. In this case, neither the jury findings nor the record conclusively establish that Chromalloy is threatened with injury as a result of Pratt's illegal [13] conduct.⁴ Accordingly, it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny Chromalloy injunctive relief. The judgment is affirmed.

PAUL W. GREEN

Justice

End of Document

³ Several terms from the definition of "attempted monopoly" were defined in the present tense, including the terms "exclusionary conduct," "monopoly power," and "relevant market." The definition of "exclusionary conduct" included the phrase "legitimate business justification," which, in turn, was also defined in the present tense. During jury deliberations, the jury asked whether the three elements of attempted monopoly were "independent or dependent of each other." The trial court referred the jury to the charge, but when the court received a second question asking whether "all 3 factors have to apply," the court responded, "Yes."

⁴ Because threat of injury was not established, we need not address whether, under the Texas Antitrust Act, Chromalloy was required to also demonstrate irreparable injury.

Dauro Adver., Inc. v. GMC

United States District Court for the District of Colorado

November 24, 1999, Decided ; November 24, 1999, Filed

Civil Action No. 99 - D - 1263

Reporter

75 F. Supp. 2d 1165 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18802 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,747

DAURO ADVERTISING, INC, Plaintiff, v. GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION, a Delaware Corporation, Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Defendant's Motion to Dismiss filed September 8, 1999, DENIED.

Core Terms

advertising, dealers, alleges, antitrust, cars and trucks, illegal restraint, anti trust law, percent, manufacturer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 [blue icon] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

If, accepting all well-pleaded allegations as true and drawing all reasonable references in favor of the plaintiff, it appears beyond doubt that no set of facts entitle plaintiffs to relief, then the court should grant a motion to dismiss. A complaint must be dismissed if, accepting the allegations as true, it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 [blue icon] Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A complaint may be dismissed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) only if the plaintiff can prove no set of facts to support a claim for relief. The court must accept all the well-pleaded allegations as true and must construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

75 F. Supp. 2d 1165, *1165 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18802, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN3 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

To maintain standing to bring an antitrust claim under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, a plaintiff must show (1) an "antitrust injury" and (2) a direct causal connection between that injury and defendant's violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

To meet the first prong to maintain standing to bring an antitrust claim under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, the plaintiff must allege a business or property injury, an antitrust injury, as defined by the Sherman Act. An antitrust injury is defined as an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. A violation of the Sherman Act without resultant injury to the plaintiffs is insufficient to confer standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN5 [down] Private Actions, Standing

When evaluating antitrust standing, factors to consider include: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm; (2) improper motive or intent of defendants; (3) whether the claimed injury is one sought to be redressed by antitrust damages; (4) the directness between the injury and the market restraint resulting from the alleged violation; (5) the speculative nature of the damages claimed; and (6) the risk of duplicative recoveries or complex damage apportionment. These factors are not black letter rules, however, but merely give more specificity to the inquiry mandated by the two-part test to evaluate antitrust standing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The Sherman Act ultimately must protect competition, not a competitor, and were the court tempted to collapse the distinction, the court would distort its continuing viability to safeguard consumer welfare.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7 [down arrow] Private Actions, Purchasers

The Supreme Court has consistently held that only direct purchasers suffer injury within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN8 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

In antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissal prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 [down arrow] Sherman Act, Scope

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Generally, a tying arrangement is illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act if the following can be shown: (1) two separate products or services are involved; (2) the sale or agreement to sell one product or service is conditioned on the purchase of another; (3) the seller has sufficient economic power in the tying product market to enable it to restrain trade in the tied product market; and (4) a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied product is affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN10 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Market definition is a question of fact. The Supreme Court has noted a retail seller may have in one sense a monopoly on certain trade because of location, as an isolated country store or filling station, or because no one else makes a product of just the quality or attractiveness of his product, as for example in cigarettes. Thus one can theorize that monopolistic competition exists in every nonstandardized commodity with each manufacturer having power over the price and production of his own product. However, this power that automobile or soft-drink manufacturers have over their trademarked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Illegal power must be appraised in terms of the competitive market for the product.

75 F. Supp. 2d 1165, *1165 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18802, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN11 [L] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

Defining the relevant market first necessitates an examination of which commodities are reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN12 [L] Private Actions, Remedies

An antitrust injury is defined as an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN13 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The language of Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-104 is virtually identical to § 1 of the Sherman Act. Consequently, because both the case law and the legislative history suggest that the federal statutes should be construed together, analysis on a plaintiff's federal antitrust claims applies equally to state law antitrust claims.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN14 [L] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

In determining whether an actor's conduct is wrongful, the Colorado courts consider the following factors: (a) the nature of the actor's conduct, (b) the actor's motive, (c) the interests of the other with which the actor's conduct interferes, (d) the interests sought to be advanced by the actor, (e) the social interests in protecting the freedom of action of the actor and the contractual interests of the other, (f) the proximity or remoteness of the actor's conduct to the interference and (g) the relations between the parties.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: Jeffrey A. Chase, Esq., Elizabeth L. Smith, Esq., Jacobs, Chase, Frick, Kleinkopp & Kelley, L.L.C., Denver, CO.

For Defendant: Gale T. Miller, Esq., Davis, Graham & Stubbs, L.L.P., Denver, CO.

For Defendant: William B. Slowey, Esq., Dennis A. White, Esq., General Motors Corporation, Detroit, MI.

Judges: Wiley Y. Daniel, U.S. District Judge.

Opinion by: Wiley Y. Daniel

Opinion

[*1166] ORDER

DANIEL, Judge

THIS MATTER is before the Court on the Defendant's Motion to Dismiss filed September 8, 1999. The Court has fully considered the motion, heard argument from the Plaintiff's and Defendant's counsel on November 17, 1999, and concludes, for the reasons stated herein, that the Defendant's motion should be denied.

BACKGROUND

The Plaintiff, Dauro Advertising, Inc. ("Dauro"), is an advertising agency incorporated in Colorado. The Defendant, General Motors Corporation ("GM"), is incorporated under the laws of Delaware. The Plaintiff services the advertising interests of a variety of businesses and clientele throughout the United States. The bulk of Dauro's work, and its primary source of revenue [*2] has been derived from the advertising work it performs for GM dealers and the various GM Dealer Marketing Groups ("DMGs") which service the advertising needs of GM's dealers. The DMGs were funded by voluntary assessments that member dealers agreed to pay when purchasing new automobiles from GM. By the late 1980's, the dealers' voluntary assessments generally equaled or exceeded one percent of the manufacturer's suggested retail price of new cars purchased. In the late 1980's and early 1990's dealer participation was entirely optional. The GM dealers could elect to contribute the one percent per vehicle, with GM distributing those funds to the dealers' DMG for advertising in the local market, or the dealers could elect to participate and advertise on their own.

In early 1990, Dauro began to service the advertising needs of various GM dealers and GM DMGs throughout the country. The Complaint alleges that by 1997 Dauro had billings in connection with GM clients in excess of $ 9,000,000.00, and that, at times relevant to this lawsuit, over 90 [*1167] percent of Dauro's annual gross revenues were derived from GM dealers and DMGs.

In 1993, GM announced its objective to have all advertisements [*3] for GM cars and trucks speak in "one voice." The Complaint alleges that GM's implementation of the "one voice" initiative was a sham operation designed to foreclose competition for advertising services for GM cars and trucks. GM implemented a process by which several "key" or select advertising agencies would be chosen to do the majority of the advertising work for GM's respective divisions. Under the new "key" or "select" agency program, the GM dealers were encouraged to utilize the identified agencies for their advertising needs. As a result of this process, Dauro alleges that it lost all of its Cadillac accounts and its Oklahoma Buick account.

On April 1, 1999, GM implemented a new Field Market Strategy Program. Under the Strategy Program, GM still collects the one percent per vehicle contribution that was formerly returned to either the Dealers or their respective DMGs for advertising in their local markets. Instead of returning the contribution, however, the contribution is retained by GM and spent on national advertising for GM products. The GM dealers are required to participate in the Strategy Program. Dauro alleges that as a result of the implementation of the Strategy Program, [*4] it has lost all but one of the remaining accounts that it had with the various GM DMGs.

The Complaint alleges that GM's Strategy Program implicates the tying of a distinct product (GM cars and trucks) to a distinct service (advertising for GM cars and trucks). The Complaint also alleges that the market for the tying product (GM cars and trucks) is separate and distinct from the market for the tying item (advertising for GM cars and trucks), and that GM has sufficient market power with respect to the tying product to force GM dealers to purchase the tying item. Consequently, the Complaint pleads three claims of relief: (1) Illegal Restraint of Trade in

75 F. Supp. 2d 1165, *1167 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18802, 4

Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1; (2) Illegal Restraint of Trade in Violation of C.R.S. § 6-4-104; and (3) Tortious Interference With Ongoing and Business Relations.

ANALYSIS

I. Defendant's Motion to Dismiss.

A. Standard.

HN1 If, accepting all well-pleaded allegations as true and drawing all reasonable references in favor of the plaintiff, it appears beyond doubt that no set of facts entitle plaintiffs to relief, then the court should grant a motion to dismiss. See Tri-Crown, Inc. v. American Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 908 F.2d 578, 582 \(10th Cir. 1990\). [5] A complaint must be dismissed if, accepting the allegations as true, it appears beyond doubt that Plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief. Meade v. Grubbs, 841 F.2d 1512, 1526 \(10th Cir. 1988\).

"A HN2 complaint may be dismissed pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(b\)\(6\) only 'if the plaintiff can prove no set of facts to support a claim for relief.'" Trierweiler, 90 F.3d 1523 at 1533. (quoting Jojola v. Chavez, 55 F.3d 488, 490 \(10th Cir. 1995\)). The court "'must accept all the well-pleaded allegations as true and must construe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.'" David v. City and County of Denver, 101 F.3d 1344, 1352 \(10th Cir. 1996\) (quoting Gagan v. Norton, 35 F.3d 1473, 1474 n. 1 \(10th Cir. 1994\)).

B. Antitrust Standing.

"To HN3 maintain standing to bring an antitrust claim under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, a plaintiff must show (1) an 'antitrust injury;' and (2) a direct causal connection between that injury and defendant's violation of the antitrust laws." Sports Racing Services, Inc. v. Sports Car Club of America, 131 F.3d 874, 882 \(10th Cir. 1997\). [6] HN4 To meet the first prong, the plaintiff must allege a business or property injury, an antitrust injury, as defined by [*1168] the Sherman Act. Id. "An antitrust injury is defined as an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. A violation of the Act without resultant injury to the plaintiffs is insufficient to confer standing." Id. (citation omitted). To satisfy the second prong, the plaintiff must show the antitrust injury resulted directly from the defendant's violation of antitrust law. Id. (citation omitted).

HN5 When evaluating antitrust standing, factors to consider include:

- (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and the harm;
- (2) improper motive or intent of defendants;
- (3) whether the claimed injury is one sought to be redressed by antitrust damages;
- (4) the directness between the injury and the market restraint resulting from the alleged violation;
- (5) the speculative nature of the damages claimed; and
- (6) the risk of duplicative recoveries or complex damage apportionment.

Id. (internal citations omitted). These factors are not black letter rules, [7] however, "but merely 'give more specificity to the inquiry mandated by the two part test.'" Id. (citing Sharp v. United Airlines, Inc., 967 F.2d 404, 406 n.2 \(10th Cir. 1992\)).

An analysis of the standing issue in the instant case in light of the two part antitrust standing test and the six enumerated factors leads me to the conclusion that the Plaintiff has standing to bring this antitrust case.

In terms of the first prong of the standing test, Dauro alleges that as a result of the implementation of the Strategy Program, it has lost all but one of the remaining accounts that it had with the various GM DMGs. Although the Plaintiff was not the party that would be required to pay the incremental costs of the price increase, the Complaint alleges that "Dauro Advertising alone will lose over $ 1,000,000.00 in commissions this year as a result of the implementation of the Strategy Program." Complaint at 10, P 50. Construing the facts alleged in the Complaint in the light most favorable to the Plaintiff, this is a business or property injury resulting directly from the Defendant's alleged violation of antitrust law. Therefore, the Plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts [8] to establish standing in its Complaint. Consequently, the Motion to Dismiss must be denied on this basis.

75 F. Supp. 2d 1165, *1168-1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18802, 7

"The HN6 Sherman Act ultimately must protect competition, not a competitor, and were we tempted to collapse the distinction, we would distort its continuing viability to safeguard consumer welfare." SCFC ILC, Inc. v. Visa USA, Inc., 36 F.3d 958, 972 (10th Cir. 1994). Also, "the HN7 Supreme Court has consistently held that only direct purchasers suffer injury within the meaning of § 4 of the Clayton Act." Sports Racing Services, Inc., 131 F.3d at 883. Here, the Defendant asserts that the loss of income suffered by the Plaintiff was only tangentially related to the GM implementation of the Strategy Program and that this is not an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. I disagree.

HN8 In antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, "dismissal prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly." Hospital Building Co. v. Trustees of the Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976). Applying this rigorous standard, [9] although the Defendant's argument may have credence at the summary judgment stage, this case is not one in which dismissal should be granted on the basis of a lack of standing. Consequently, the Defendant's motion with respect to the Plaintiff's federal illegal restraint of trade claim still must be denied on the basis of standing.

C. Unlawful Tying Claim.

"A HN9 tying arrangement 'is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or [*1169] at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Sports Racing Services, Inc., 131 F.3d at 886 (citing Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992)). Generally, a tying arrangement is illegal under Section 1 of the Sherman Act if the following can be shown: (1) two separate products or services are involved; (2) the sale or agreement to sell one product or service is conditioned on the purchase of another; (3) the seller has sufficient economic power in the tying product market to enable it to restrain trade in the tied product market; and (4) [10] a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce in the tied product is affected. Id. (citations omitted).

In this case, the Complaint alleges that GM's Strategy Program implicates the tying of a distinct product (GM cars and trucks) to a distinct service (advertising for GM cars and trucks). Thus, two separate products or services are involved. Additionally, the Complaint alleges that prior to GM's implementation of the Strategy Program, the GM dealers purchased cars and trucks from GM and advertising services separately and that GM is charging a one percent contribution per vehicle for advertising services. Therefore, the sale or agreement to sell one product or service is conditioned on the purchase of another. Finally, the Complaint alleges that GM has sufficient market power in the alleged relevant market, the market for GM cars and trucks, to require the GM dealers to pay higher prices to cover the national advertising. As a result, GM has sufficient economic power in the tying product market to enable it to restrain trade in the tied product market. Consequently, the Complaint alleges sufficient facts to satisfy the requirements for an unlawful tying claim with respect [11] to the Plaintiff's federal illegal restraint of trade claim.

D. Proper Relevant Product Market.

HN10 Market definition is a question of fact. Westin Comm. Co. v. Hobart Int'l, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1220 (10th Cir. 1986). As the Supreme Court has noted:

A retail seller may have in one sense a monopoly on certain trade because of location, as an isolated country store or filling station, or because no one else makes a product of just the quality or attractiveness of his product, as for example in cigarettes. Thus one can theorize that we have monopolistic competition in every nonstandardized commodity with each manufacturer having power over the price and production of his own product. However, this power that, let us say, automobile or soft-drink manufacturers have over their trademarked products is not the power that makes an illegal monopoly. Illegal power must be appraised in terms of the competitive market for the product.

75 F. Supp. 2d 1165, *1169 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18802, 11

United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 392-93, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

HN11 Defining the relevant market first necessitates an examination of which commodities are "reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the [12] same purposes." 796 F.2d at 1221 (citing E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. at 395). Here, the GM dealers are the consumers adversely affected by the Strategy Program. GM dealers have no interest in purchasing cars or trucks from any other manufacturer. Therefore, cars and trucks from manufacturers other than GM are not reasonably interchangeable. Thus, the Plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts in its Complaint to define a relevant market. Consequently, the Complaint's federal illegal restraint of trade claim should not be dismissed on this basis.

E. Type of Injury That the Antitrust Laws Were Intended to Prevent.

As previously noted, "an HN12 antitrust injury is defined as an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Sports Racing Services, Inc., 131 F.3d at 882. Although [*1170] the Plaintiff was not the party that would be required to pay the incremental costs of the price increase, the Complaint alleges that "Dauro Advertising alone will lose over $ 1,000,000.00 in commissions this year as a result of the implementation of the Strategy Program." Complaint at 10, [13] P 50. Construing the facts alleged in the Complaint in the light most favorable to the Plaintiff, this is a business or property injury resulting directly from the Defendant's alleged violation of antitrust law. Consequently, the Complaint's federal illegal restraint of trade claim should not be dismissed on this basis.

F. The Colorado Antitrust Act.

HN13 The language of C.R.S. § 6-4-104 is virtually identical to Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See C.R.S. § 6-4-104. Consequently, because both the case law and the legislative history suggest that the federal statutes should be construed together, analysis on a plaintiff's federal antitrust claims applies equally to state law antitrust claims. See Smalley & Co. v. Emerson & Cuming, Inc., 808 F. Supp. 1503, 1516 (D. Colo. 1992). As a result, my analysis above with respect to the federal illegal restraint of trade claim is equally applicable to the Colorado illegal restraint of trade claim. Consequently, dismissal of the Complaint's Colorado illegal restraint of trade claim is not appropriate.

G. Tortious Interference Claim.

HN14 In determining whether an actor's conduct is wrongful, the Colorado courts consider [14] the following factors:

- (a) the nature of the actor's conduct, (b) the actor's motive, (c) the interests of the other with which the actor's conduct interferes, (d) the interests sought to be advanced by the actor, (e) the social interests in protecting the freedom of action of the actor and the contractual interests of the other, (f) the proximity or remoteness of the actor's conduct to the interference and (g) the relations between the parties.

Westfield Dev. Co. v. Rifle Inv. Assoc., 786 P.2d 1112, 1118 (Colo. 1990). In this case, the Complaint alleges that GM sold advertising services to its dealers, through the one percent contribution, as a condition of the GM dealers ability to purchase GM cars and trucks. This is an unlawful tying claim. Therefore, construing the facts alleged in the Complaint in the light most favorable to the Plaintiff, GM engaged in improper conduct. Consequently, granting the Defendant's motion to dismiss as to the Plaintiff's Tortious Interference Claim is not appropriate. Accordingly, it is ORDERED that the Defendant's Motion to Dismiss filed September 8, 1999 is DENIED.

Dated: November 24, 1999.

BY THE COURT:

[15] Wiley Y. Daniel

U.S. District Judge

End of Document

Jeffers Vet Supply, Inc. v. Rose Am. Corp.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Alabama, Southern Division

November 24, 1999, Decided ; November 24, 1999, Filed; November 24, 1999, Entered

Civil Action No.98-A-1329-S

Reporter

75 F. Supp. 2d 1332 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18692 ; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,770

JEFFERS VET SUPPLY, INC., Plaintiff, v. ROSE AMERICA CORP., d/b/a BMB, a division of Rose America Corporation, Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment GRANTED and Motion to Preclude Plaintiff from Presenting Damages Evidence DENIED as MOOT. Judgment entered in favor of Defendant, Rose America Corp., d/b/a BMB, division of Rose America Corporation and against Plaintiff, Jeffers Vet Supply, Inc.

Core Terms

dealers, pricing policy, prices, terminated, manufacturer, distributor, Sherman Act, Helicopter, summary judgment, conspiracy, depositions, customer, announced, argues, resale price, calculate, products, alleges, sheets, present case, retail, per se violation, material fact, communications, antitrust, assurance, employees, brand, logs, summary judgment motion

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1 [] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), summary judgment is generally proper if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

75 F. Supp. 2d 1332, *1332 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18692, 1

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 [down] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

The party asking for summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. The movant can meet this burden by presenting evidence showing there is no dispute of material fact, or by showing, or pointing out to, the district court that the nonmoving party has failed to present evidence in support of some element of its case on which it bears the ultimate burden of proof.

Civil Procedure > ... > Methods of Discovery > Interrogatories > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3 [down] Methods of Discovery, Interrogatories

Once the moving party has met its burden, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings, and by its own affidavits, or by the depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, designate specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN4 [down] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

To avoid summary judgment, the nonmoving party must do more than show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN5 [down] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In summary judgment, the evidence of the nonmovant must be believed and all justifiable inferences must be drawn in its favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

75 F. Supp. 2d 1332, *1332 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18692, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN6 Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

After the nonmoving party has responded to the motion for summary judgment, the court must grant summary judgment if there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN7 Distributorships & Franchises, Antitrust Issues

The Eleventh Circuit has modified the summary judgment standard for antitrust violations arising out of allegations that a distributor was terminated because it failed to adhere to an illegal resale price agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1997\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal; and, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN10 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Materiality of Facts

75 F. Supp. 2d 1332, *1332 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18692, 1

The issues of material fact which must exist in order to survive summary judgment in a price-fixing case are whether a conspiracy to fix prices existed and whether the dealer was terminated pursuant to that conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

According to the Helicopter test, in order to establish that fact issues exist, the plaintiff must: (a) satisfy the court that the conspiracy which he alleges is objectively an economically reasonable one, and (b) produce evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer was operating independently in making his determination to terminate the distributor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

To prove an agreement to restrain trade in a dealer termination case, the plaintiff must produce direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

Under the Helicopter test, there are two things that plaintiff needs to show to exclude the possibility that defendant was acting independently: (1) defendant sought an agreement from its dealers to adhere to a resale price, and (2) the dealers communicated their acceptance of the proposed agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §1 et seq., does not restrict the right of a manufacturer to freely choose which parties it will deal with and a manufacturer can announce in advance the circumstances under which it intends to deal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

HN15 [+] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

That a manufacturer may give preferential pricing and delivery terms to one distributor does not establish a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., even though other distributors suffer losses in sales.

Counsel: For Plaintiff: James F. Hinton, Jr., Ellen E. Henderson.

For Defendant: Jackson R. Sharman, Anne Sikes Hornsby, Ken M. Peterson, William B. Sorensen.

Judges: W. HAROLD ALBRITTON, CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: W. HAROLD ALBRITTON

Opinion

[*1332] MEMORANDUM OPINION

I. INTRODUCTION

This action is brought under Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act alleging that the Defendant engaged in price fixing and terminated the Plaintiff as one of its dealers in furtherance of a price fixing conspiracy, [*1333] in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. The case is before the court on a Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. # 12) filed by the Defendant, Rose America Corporation, d/b/a BMB ("BMB"), on August 23, 1999. Also before this court is Defendant's Motion to Preclude Plaintiff from Presenting Damages Evidence (Doc. # 31) filed on November 12, 1999.

On September 17, 1999, the Plaintiff, [2] Jeffers Vet Supply, Inc. ("Jeffers Vet") requested an extension of time to respond to the Motion for Summary Judgment so that it could take additional depositions, including depositions of other dealers. The court granted the request and extended the response time to November 5, 1999. No further extension was requested. The court has considered all evidence submitted, and oral argument was heard in this case on November 18, 1999.

For the reasons to be discussed, BMB's Motion for Summary Judgment is due to be GRANTED.

II. SUMMARY JUDGMENT STANDARD

HN1 [+] Under Rule 56\(c\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment is generally proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

HN2 [↑] The party asking for summary judgment "always bears the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion, and identifying those portions of the 'pleadings, [3] depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any,' which it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." Id. at 323. The movant can meet this burden by presenting evidence showing there is no dispute of material fact, or by showing, or pointing out to, the district court that the nonmoving party has failed to present evidence in support of some element of its case on which it bears the ultimate burden of proof. See id. at 322-24.

HN3 [↑] Once the moving party has met its burden, Rule 56(e) "requires the nonmoving party to go beyond the pleadings and by [its] own affidavits, or by the 'depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file,' designate 'specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Id. at 324. HN4 [↑] To avoid summary judgment, the nonmoving party "must do more than show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). HN5 [↑] On the other hand, the evidence of the nonmovant must be believed [4] and all justifiable inferences must be drawn in its favor. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

HN6 [↑] After the nonmoving party has responded to the motion for summary judgment, the court must grant summary judgment if there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

HN7 [↑] The Eleventh Circuit has modified this summary judgment standard for "antitrust violations arising out of allegations that a distributor was terminated because it failed to adhere to an illegal resale price agreement." See Helicopter Support Systems, Inc. v. Hughes Helicopter, Inc., 818 F.2d 1530, 1532 (11th Cir. 1987). The modifications will be discussed below.

III. FACTS

The submissions of the parties establish the following facts:

[*1334] Jeffers Vet is a distributor of animal care supplies, with stores in Dothan, Alabama, and West Plains, Missouri. BMB is a division of Rose America Corporation and manufactures equine products. Among the products that BMB sells are horse blankets and sheets. In fact, BMB's total revenues for 1998 totaled $ 7,864,372, of [5] which $ 3,783,501 was from the sale of horse blankets and sheets. See Barnhard Aff.

On or about February 12, 1996, Jeffers Vet became an authorized dealer of BMB. BMB would sell horse blankets and sheets at wholesale price to Jeffers Vet, which in turn sold these products to its customers through its catalogs and at its stores.

On June 1, 1998, BMB sent a letter to all of its dealers outlining a new pricing policy BMB was implementing. Jeffers Vet received the letter. The letter stated in pertinent part:

As of October 1, 1998 our policy will be to terminate the dealer status of any dealer who sells or offers to sell BMB brand products at a price less than 90% of the retail prices established, and as modified from time to time, in our catalog. Our decision in this regard is completely unilateral and nonnegotiable. BMB does not seek either your approval or your agreement or other assurance of compliance. In the event of your failure to comply, you will simply be terminated as one of our dealers. Please do not report to us about the pricing behavior of other dealers. We have adopted this policy to maintain the brand integrity of BMB.

Pl. Br. Letter Exh.2.

Jeffers [6] Vet issued its fall catalog containing prices for BMB horse blankets and sheets in August of 1998. The prices in the catalog did not conform with BMB's new price policy. On or about October 16, 1998, BMB notified Jeffers Vet that it was terminating Jeffers Vet's dealership. The letter succinctly stated: "For failure to comply with our pricing policies, which we have unilaterally established, we regret to inform you that we are terminating your dealership." Pl. Br. Letter Exh.9.

As a result of this termination letter, Dr. Keith Jeffers, the president of Jeffers Vet, called BMB in an attempt to "work out something." Jeffers Depo., p.52, line 17-18. Then, in November of 1998, Jeffers Vet had its counsel send a letter to BMB demanding to be reinstated as a BMB dealer. BMB has refused to reinstate Jeffers Vet as a dealer. Jeffers Vet has had to find another wholesaler from which to purchase horse blankets and sheets.

Jeffers Vet has filed a Complaint alleging that BMB has engaged in price fixing, a per se violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1. See Complaint P8. Jeffers Vet further alleges that "BMB's termination of Jeffers [Vet] in furtherance of a price-fixing conspiracy [\[7\]](#) is a per se violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1." Complaint P10.

IV. DISCUSSION

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("Sherman Act") states, "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." HN8 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(1997\). In 1919, however, the Supreme Court, in the case of United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465, held that HN9 the Sherman Act "[did] not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal; and, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell." Colgate, 250 U.S. at 307. Case law over the years has developed a fine line between permissible manufacturer dealing [\[*1335\]](#) and illegal pricing activity. The present case illustrates permissible contact between manufacturers and dealers under Colgate.

A. The Modified Summary Judgment Standard

[\[8\]](#) According to the Eleventh Circuit, summary judgment in cases claiming "antitrust violations arising out of allegations that a distributor was terminated because it failed to adhere to an illegal resale price agreement" requires a modified standard. Helicopter Support Systems, Inc. v. Hughes Helicopter, Inc., 818 F.2d 1530, 1532 \(11th Cir. 1987\) ("Helicopter"). The Eleventh Circuit, in the Helicopter case, incorporated the Supreme Court holdings of Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\), and Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\), and created what is known as the "Helicopter test" for summary judgment. This test was followed in the DeLong Equipment Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1508-09 \(11th Cir. 1989\) ("The summary judgment standard in vertical restraint cases is more stringent than in other areas of antitrust law because a higher possibility of capturing and invalidating legitimate business conduct exists."), and has remained the test used to analyze [\[9\]](#) summary judgment in manufacturer and dealer claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act in the Eleventh Circuit.

HN10 The issues of material fact which must exist in order to survive summary judgment are whether a conspiracy to fix prices existed and whether the dealer was terminated pursuant to that conspiracy. DeLong, 887 F.2d at 1508.

HN11 According to the Helicopter test, in order to establish that such fact issues exist the plaintiff must (a) "satisfy the court that the conspiracy which he alleges is, objectively, an economically reasonable one" and (b) produce "evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer was operating independently in making his determination to terminate the distributor." Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1534. The Supreme Court had stated earlier that HN12 to prove an agreement to restrain trade in a dealer termination case the plaintiff must produce "direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 768.

The first prong of the Helicopter test does not require [10] much discussion.¹ In the present case it is economically reasonable to exclude dealers who sell at lower prices than recommended. BMB, as stated in its pricing letter, wanted to maintain brand integrity by keeping prices at a specific level. See Pl. Br. Letter Exh.2. If customers recognize BMB as a quality brand, they will be willing to pay more for the product. Thus, it would be economically reasonable for BMB to conspire with its other dealers to keep low price selling dealers out of the BMB product market.

The second prong of the Helicopter test requires a deeper analysis. In order for Jeffers Vet to survive a summary judgment motion, Jeffers Vet must produce "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility" that BMB was acting independently. See Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1534. [11] HN13[↑] Under the Helicopter test, there are two things that Jeffers Vet needs to show to exclude the possibility that BMB was acting independently: (1) BMB sought an agreement from its dealers to adhere to a resale price, and (2) the dealers communicated their acceptance of BMB's proposed [*1336] agreement. See Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1533. In order to fully discuss the agreement requirements of the second prong of the Helicopter test, the court must address the Colgate case and its progeny.

B. Colgate and its Progeny

Colgate was the first case that illustrated legal activity for a manufacturer to engage in when setting a pricing policy. See United States v. Colgate, 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919).² [13] In Colgate, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant manufacturer "knowingly and unlawfully created and engaged in a combination with . . . wholesale and retail dealers . . . for the purpose and with the effect of procuring adherence on the part of such dealers . . . to resale prices fixed by the defendant . . ." Id. at 302. There was a list of acts allegedly performed by the defendant in [12] order to carry out the conspiracy, among which were "distribution among dealers of letters, telegrams, circulars and lists showing uniform prices to be charged; . . . uniform refusals to sell to any who failed to give the [assurances to adhere to prices] . . ." Id. at 303. The Court found that there was no allegation that the manufacturer did anything other than refuse to deal with dealers who would not resell at a specified price. See id. at 305. Ultimately, the Court held that HN14[↑] the Sherman Act did not restrict the right of a manufacturer to freely choose which parties it would deal with and that a manufacturer could announce in advance the circumstances under which it intended to deal. See id. at 307. The Colgate doctrine remains good law today.³

[14] BMB denies that there was any conspiracy and argues that it acted independently when it established its price policy. See Def. Br. at 11-16. According to BMB, the letter it sent out on June 1, 1998, detailing its new pricing policy, complied with the Colgate holding and its progeny. See Def. Br. at 11 & Pl. Br. Letter Exh.2. BMB argues that the letter merely announced the prices that would be effective October 1, 1998, and "set forth the circumstances (failure to follow pricing policy) which would result in dealer termination." Def. Br. at 11. BMB also alleges that the letter clearly indicated that its new policy was "completely unilateral" and that no approval, agreement or assurance of compliance were sought from its dealers. See Pl. Br. Letter Exh.2. BMB notes that because it did not seek assurance of compliance with its new price policy, as the defendant [*1337] did in United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 80 S. Ct. 503, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505 (1960), its actions remained unilateral.⁴ See id. At oral argument, Jeffers Vet conceded that the letter itself sent out on June 1, announcing the pricing policy complied with the Colgate requirements.

¹ The court notes that neither party even addresses this prong of the test in brief. At oral argument, the Defendant argued that there were too many dealers to make an agreement possible or economically reasonable.

² Prior to Colgate, the leading case on price maintenance was Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911). Dr. Miles held that minimum resale price maintenance was per se unlawful. See id. In Dr. Miles, the court was concerned that price maintenance restricted "the freedom of trade on the part of dealers who own what they sell." Id. at 407-08.

³ The Supreme Court has frequently narrowed the Colgate doctrine, but has never overruled the precedent. See, e.g., Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977) (White, J., concurring); United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Simpson v. Union, Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503; FTC v. Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc., 360 U.S. 55, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1079, 79 S. Ct. 1005 (1959); Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953); Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 (1951); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 88 L. Ed. 1024, 64 S. Ct. 805 (1944); Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 84 L. Ed. 852, 60 S. Ct. 618 (1940); FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 (1922); Frey & Son, Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 256 U.S. 208, 65 L. Ed. 892, 41 S. Ct. 451 (1921); United States v. A. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U.S. 85, 64 L. Ed. 471, 40 S. Ct. 251 (1920). Despite this narrowing, many courts believe that the Monsanto case revitalized Colgate.

[15] The court finds that the letter sent out by BMB on June 1 closely tracked the language of the Colgate doctrine. The letter, therefore, standing alone is not a violation of the Sherman Act. Consequently, the court must turn its attention to the other evidence submitted by Jeffers Vet alleging an agreement between BMB and its dealers. Jeffers relies primarily on two other types of evidence to support its theory that BMB's implementation of its pricing policy violated the Colgate doctrine and the Sherman Act. The first type of evidence is the customer contact logs and the deposition testimony that William "Barney" Barnhard ("Barnhard") and Ruth Bush ("Bush") helped calculate the prices for some dealers. The second type of evidence is evidence indicating that BMB did not terminate all dealers who did not comply with its pricing policy.

Jeffers Vet submitted customer reply logs to evidence BMB's policy of discussing the operation and enforcement of its pricing policy. See Pl. Br. Exh. A & Pl. Supp. Br. Exh. C. These customer contact logs are records of when a dealer called in with a question or complaint about the pricing policy set out by BMB. See generally Pl. Supp. [16] Br. Exh. C. Also included with these contact sheets is a document entitled "Price Policy Calls." See id. This document is undated but instructs employees to "fill out a blue sheet" customer contact log when a customer calls regarding the "new pricing policy." Id. Employees were instructed to allow dealers to complain about the policy, but to say, "My role is to listen to your concerns and pass them on. But, I can't debate the policy with you." Id. Employees were also instructed to notify Bush or Barnhard if a dealer wanted someone to call them back about the pricing policy. See id. Jeffers Vet argues that these customer contact logs illustrate that "BMB was engaged in an illegal price maintenance scheme" when BMB contacted the dealers. See Pl. Br. at 7.

Further, the focus of Jeffers Vet's additional discovery was on whether or not BMB had a policy of discussing its pricing policy with its dealers. Barnhard testified at his deposition that he "felt like that [BMB] would be able to clarify for a dealer the computational method that would be used to determine the 90 percent." Barnhard Depo. at 57. Bush also testified that she would clarify prices with dealers in [17] relation to the math required to calculate the prices. See Bush Depo. at 33, 49, 50, 51, 58, 59. In fact, Bush "clarified" the "90 percent calculation" with several dealers. [*1338] See id. She stated that, "We'd have our calculators out and we would calculate it." Bush Depo. at 149. According to Jeffers Vet at oral argument, these contacts with dealers to help them calculate their prices are a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Citing to the Monsanto case, BMB argues that evidence that BMB sought agreement from its dealers as to the new prices has not been produced. See Def. Br. at 12. BMB alleges that the pricing letter specifically illustrated that no assurances of agreement were ever sought. See id. BMB avers that Jeffers Vet has "admitted that it has no evidence of what communications, if any, existed between BMB and its non-terminated dealers." Def. Br. at 14.

⁴ Parke Davis involves an action against a drug manufacturer alleging that the drug manufacturer conspired with retail and wholesale druggists to maintain wholesale and retail prices of the manufacturer's pharmaceutical products. Parke Davis would send out a catalog with a "Net Price Selling Schedule" listing suggested minimum resale prices. Parke Davis, 362 U.S. at 32. The catalog also stated that it was Parke Davis' "continuing policy to deal only with drug wholesalers who observed that schedule . . ." Id. The government argued that Parke Davis by "entwining the wholesalers and retailers in a program to promote general compliance with its price maintenance policy went beyond mere customer selection and created combinations . . . to enforce resale price maintenance . . ." Id. at 37-38. The court found that the Parke Davis program "clearly exceeded the limitations of the Colgate doctrine . . ." Id. at 45. Parke Davis used the "refusal to deal with the wholesalers in order to elicit their willingness to deny Parke Davis products to retailers and thereby gain the retailers' adherence to its suggested minimum retail prices." Id. Parke Davis also violated the Colgate doctrine by discussing the policy with its wholesalers and retailers before implementing it. Id. at 46.

BMB points out that even after the extended discovery period granted by this court, no dealers were deposed and no dealers submitted affidavits saying they discussed the pricing policy with BMB. See Oral Argument.

BMB further argues that its dealings with Jeffers Vet illustrate its unwillingness to discuss [18] its pricing policy. When Dr. Jeffers contacted BMB after Jeffers Vet was terminated Barney Barnhard refused to discuss the pricing policy and refused to reinstate Jeffers Vet as a dealer. See Def. Br. at 12. This refusal to discuss the policy, according to BMB, is precisely what Colgate dictates. BMB argued that if it complied with Jeffers Vet's demands it would then have been in violation of the Sherman Act.

Moreover, after the extended discovery period, BMB argues that all of the new depositions only strengthen its argument that BMB has not violated the Sherman Act. See Def. Supp. Br. at 1. According to the deposition of Barnhard, the pricing policy "centered on methods to maintain [BMB's] brand integrity and create value in the customer's mind for the BMB brand." See Barnhard Depo. at 17. Barnhard testified that he had no conversation with dealers prior to or after implementation of the pricing policy about the policy itself. See id. at 48. Ruth Bush, the Vice President of Sales for Rose America, stated in her deposition that she told dealers who wanted to discuss the pricing policy that, "I could not discuss it." Bush Depo. at 148-49. Finally, [19] Kim Walker, Director of Customer Services, noted that BMB employees were "directed that they 'can't debate' and 'cannot discuss' the retail pricing policy with dealers." Def. Supp. Br. at 5 (citing Walker Depo. at 13).

The Monsanto court addresses the question of how much contact a manufacturer could have with its dealers in light of the Colgate doctrine. In Monsanto, a distributor of agricultural herbicides, Spray-Rite, brought suit against the manufacturer, Monsanto, alleging an antitrust violation after Spray-Rite was terminated. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 755-56. Other distributors were complaining about Spray-Rite's price-cutting practices. See id. at 758-59. There was also some testimony that indicated Monsanto officials terminated Spray-Rite because of price complaints. See id. at 759. Moreover, there was testimony from a Monsanto district manager that Monsanto told price-cutting distributors that if they did not maintain the suggested resale price, "they would not receive adequate supplies of Monsanto's new corn herbicide." Id. at 765. There was also evidence of a newsletter that discusses Monsanto's [20] pricing and assured distributors that outlets would not sell the Monsanto products for less than the suggested retail price. See id. at 766. The Court found that it was "reasonable to interpret this newsletter as referring to an agreement or understanding that distributors and retailers would maintain prices . . ." Id.

The Court in Monsanto reaffirmed the holding of Colgate: "Under Colgate, the manufacturer can announce its resale [*1339] prices in advance and refuse to deal with those who fail to comply. And a distributor is free to acquiesce in the manufacturer's demand in order to avoid termination." Id. at 761. The Court did not find the evidence of complaints from other distributors of no probative value, but rather found that the burden was on the plaintiff to produce "additional evidence sufficient to support a finding of an unlawful contract, combination, or conspiracy." Id. at 764 n.8. The Court stated that some contact between manufacturer and dealer had to be allowed: "To bar a manufacturer from acting solely because the information upon which it acts originated as a price complaint would create an irrational [21] dislocation in the market." Id. at 764.

In the present case, Jeffers Vet submits the contact logs and the deposition testimony concerning the calculation of the prices for dealers as a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Jeffers Vet does not cite any law to support its proposition that such contact was in violation of the Colgate doctrine and the court finds none. In fact, the Monsanto case illustrates that there can be some contact between a manufacturer and a dealer without violating the Colgate doctrine. See Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764-65. The Court says, "In order to assure an efficient distribution system, manufacturers and distributors constantly must coordinate their activities to assure that their product will reach the consumer persuasively and efficiently." Id. BMB was not going beyond a mere announcement and refusal to deal, as proscribed by Colgate, when it answered dealer questions concerning the specific calculation of prices in order to comply with the pricing policy. BMB's actions fall within Monsanto's acceptable communications between manufacturers and dealers.

The Eleventh Circuit embraced the Colgate [22] and Monsanto line of cases in Helicopter. In Helicopter, Hughes manufactured helicopters and helicopter parts. See Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1531. HSS was a franchised Hughes service center, often providing support services for Hughes helicopters at a significant discount. See id. HHS argues it was terminated as a Hughes distributor "because it undersold other Hughes distributors in the sale of Hughes parts overseas." Id. at 1532. HHS brought a § 1 Sherman Act claim against Hughes for allegedly engaging in a price fixing conspiracy. See id.

As discussed above, the Eleventh Circuit applied a "revised standard of proof" for summary judgment in this case. Id. Among the evidence reviewed by the district court was a series of communications from an overseas distributor. See id. at 1535. The Eleventh Circuit found that these communications could be read as more than complaints. Other evidence included Hughes' international distributorship agreement which said amendments to the "suggested price lists . . . will be binding on Distributor upon notification in writing." Id. at 1536. Further, there was [23] evidence of threats of termination, a direct request by Hughes to HHS to stop its discounting tactics, and evidence that Hughes retaliated against HHS by franchising another service center in Florida. See id. at 1536 n.10. The court found this evidence convincing of a "conscious commitment to a common scheme to achieve an unlawful objective." Id. at 1535. Accordingly, the court held that "HHS has both alleged an economically reasonable conspiracy, and adduced evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that Hughes was acting independently." Id. at 1534.

The present case is distinguishable from Helicopter because there is no evidence of a "conscious commitment" to a common scheme. Unlike in Helicopter, in the present case there is no evidence of continued communications between BMB and its [*1340] dealers about the pricing policy or others violating the pricing policy. In fact, no evidence that other dealers discussed the pricing policy with BMB prior to the enactment of the policy has been submitted to the court. Fewer than ten customer call sheets have been submitted, out of over 1000 dealers, where dealers even called with questions [24] about the pricing policy after it was enacted. See Supp. Pl. Br. Exh. D, G, & H. The depositions illustrate that BMB employees were only willing to explain to the dealers how to calculate prices to conform to the pricing policy. Thus, the court finds that this evidence of dealer contact does not "tend to exclude the possibility" that BMB was "operating independently" as required by the Helicopter standard.

Jeffers Vet also argues that BMB has violated the Sherman Act because BMB did not follow its pricing policy with every dealer. Jeffers Vet argues that at least one document shows that dealers were reporting other non-conforming BMB dealers to BMB (see Pl. Supp.2 Br. Exh. J) and that BMB was not uniformly enforcing its pricing policy. For example, Jeffers Vet alleges that Offut's West, another BMB dealer, notified BMB that it would be selling some BMB products below the 90% requirement at a Christmas sale. See Pl. Supp.2 Br. at 8. Offut's West has not been terminated as a dealer. See id.

BMB conceded at oral argument that it was notified of the Christmas sale held by Offut's West, where BMB products were sold below the prices permitted by the pricing policy. BMB [25] also conceded that Offut's West was not terminated as a dealer. BMB argued, however, that BMB's dealing with Offut's West has no impact on whether BMB violated the Sherman Act. According to BMB, BMB not following its pricing policy in one instance with one dealer does not evidence a Section 1 violation of the Sherman Act.

The court agrees with BMB. The evidence that Jeffers Vet has submitted to illustrate that BMB did not enforce its pricing policy does not "tend[] to exclude the possibility" that BMB and Offut's West were "acting independently." Evidence that BMB did not follow its pricing policy in the one instance of Offut's West's Christmas sale does not suggest a price fixing agreement between BMB and its dealers. Section 1 of the Sherman Act was enacted to prevent concerted action from unreasonably restraining trade. See ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 3 (4th ed. 1997). By not complying with its pricing policy, BMB cannot have a "conscious commitment to a common scheme" to fix prices. Cf. Alliance Shippers v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co., 858 F.2d 567, 570 \(9th Cir. 1988\) (noting that vertical arrangements resulting in price discrimination [26] are not per se violations); Seaboard Supply co. v. Congoleum Corp., 770 F.2d 367, 375 \(3d Cir. 1985\) ("Moreover, HN15 that a manufacturer may give preferential pricing and delivery terms to one distributor does not establish a per se violation of the section 1 of the Sherman Act even though other distributors suffer losses in sales."). In other words, by not holding Offut's West to the prices set out by BMB, BMB cannot be said to be unlawfully maintaining its resale prices.

C. Coercion

Jeffers Vet argues that it can establish that BMB engaged in an illegal pricing scheme because BMB used coercive means to force dealers to comply with the suggested pricing. See Pl. Br. at 8. First, Jeffers Vet cites to Belk-Avery, Inc. v. Henry I. Siegel Co., 457 F. Supp. 1330, 1334 (M.D. Ala. 1978), to argue that a dealer must agree to the prices set by the manufacturer through free choice, prompted only the desirability of the product. Quoting from Carlson Machine Tools, Inc. v. American Tool, 678 F.2d 1253 (5th Cir. 1982), Jeffers Vet alleges: "Resale price maintenance occurs, 'when a price is announced [*1341] and some course of action is [27] undertaken or threatened contingent on the willingness or unwillingness of the retailer to adopt the price . . . [resale price maintenance] must involve making a meaningful event depend on compliance or non-compliance with the 'suggested' or 'stated price'." Carlson, 678 F.2d at 1261. Jeffers Vet submits the letter from BMB to all of its dealers on June 1, stating, "In the event of your failure to comply . . . , you will be terminated as one of our dealers." Id. According to Jeffers Vet, the impending termination for failure to comply with the October price list "makes it unlikely that dealers were prompted solely by a desire to market BMB products when they followed BMB's suggested retail prices." Id.

Jeffers Vet's reliance on Belk-Avery and Carlson is misplaced. The proposition that Jeffers Vet relies on from Belk-Avery is a true statement. However, in the present case there is no coercion. Dealers must decide whether they want BMB products and if they do they must conform to BMB's pricing policy.⁵ [29] The threatened action referred to by the Carlson court is to action by the manufacturer after it has agreed to deal with a dealer. Carlson [28] says that a manufacturer's threats of termination and other coercive actions taken after a dealer fails to conform to the manufacturer's predetermined prices are "other means" and therefore the actions are in violation of the Sherman Act. Carlson, 678 F.2d at 1261. In the present case, BMB announced its terms of dealing before it implemented the price Policy.⁶ Another Georgia court agrees with Carlson. See Ben Sheftall Distributing Co., Inc. v. Mirta De Perales, Inc., 791 F. Supp. 1575 (S.D. Ga. 1992). This court found: "Where the actions involved are announcement and termination; monitoring of dealer performance through one's own employees or otherwise; or the use of third parties--to carry the message or to contact customers or replacement dealers--to effect a termination, no agreement is shown." Id. at 1583. Consequently, the court finds Jeffers Vet's arguments unpersuasive and finds that the evidence cannot establish that BMB illegally coerced its dealers into compliance with its announced pricing.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgement is due to be GRANTED. There is simply no evidence before the court from which a reasonable jury could conclude the BMB illegally fixed prices through a conspiracy with dealers and that it terminated Jeffers Vet as a dealer in furtherance of such a conspiracy. The Defendant's Motion to Preclude Plaintiff from Presenting Damages Evidence is due to be DENIED as MOOT.⁷ A separate order will be entered in accordance with this memorandum opinion.

[30] Done this 24th day of November, 1999.

W. HAROLD ALBRITTON

⁵ Citing Belk-Avery for any other proposition in this case would be fruitless as Belk-Avery is so factually dissimilar from the present case.

⁶ The court notes that even in Carlson the court did not determine that the activity of the manufacturer rose to the level of illegal activity. The court found that the dispute between the parties was not related to the pricing policy. See Carlson, 678 F.2d at 1261.

⁷ Because Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment is due to be granted, no trial will be held in this case. Consequently, the Defendant's Motion to preclude Damages Evidence at trial is MOOT.

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER AND JUDGMENT

In accordance with the Memorandum Opinion entered on this day, it is hereby ORDERED as follows:

1. Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. # 12) is GRANTED.
2. Defendant's Motion to Preclude Plaintiff from Presenting Damages Evidence (Doc. # 31) is DENIED as MOOT.
- [*1342] 3. Judgment is entered in favor of the Defendant, Rose America Corp., d/b/a BMB, a division of Rose America Corporation, and against the Plaintiff, Jeffers Vet Supply, Inc.

4. Costs are taxed against the Plaintiff.

Done this 24th day of November, 1999.

W. HAROLD ALBRITTON

CHIEF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

Bourns, Inc. v. Raychem Corp.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

November 30, 1999, Decided; November 30, 1999, Filed; December 2, 1999, Entered

Case No. CV 98-1765 CM (Mcx)

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23679 *

BOURNS, INC., a California corporation, Plaintiffs, v. RAYCHEM CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Bourns, Inc. v. Raychem Corp., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23676 \(C.D. Cal., Dec. 28, 1999\)

Prior History: Bourns, Inc. v. Raychem Corp., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13361 \(C.D. Cal., June 1, 1998\)

Core Terms

Phase, antitrust, summary judgment, res judicata, manufacture

Counsel: [*1] For Bourns Inc, a Calif corp, Plaintiff: Kenneth R O'Rourke, Mark Alan Samuels, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA.

For Raychem Corporation, a Delaware corp, Defendant: Daniel J Kroll, Heather A Young, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Legal Strategies Group, Emeryville, CA; Gregory S Gilchrist, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kilpatrick Townsend & Stockton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mark Alan Flagel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Latham and Watkins LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Richard J Mooney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Holme Roberts & Owen LLP, San Francisco, CA; Thomas G Scavone, LEAD ATTORNEY, Niro Scavone Haller & Niro, Chicago, IL.

For Thermacon Inc, Counter Claimant: Heather A Young, LEAD ATTORNEY, Legal Strategies Group, Emeryville, CA; Mark Alan Flagel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Latham and Watkins LLP, Los Angeles, CA; Peter Harry Goldsmith, LEAD ATTORNEY, Townsend Townsend and Crew, San Francisco, CA; Richard J Mooney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Holme Roberts & Owen LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Raychem Corporation, Counter Claimant: Daniel J Kroll, LEAD ATTORNEY, Legal Strategies Group, Emeryville, CA; Gregory S Gilchrist, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kilpatrick Townsend & Stockton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Mark Alan Flagel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Latham and Watkins LLP, Los Angeles, CA. [*2]

For Bourns Inc, Counter Defendant: Kenneth R O'Rourke, LEAD ATTORNEY, Mark Alan Samuels, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA.

For Bourns Multifuse Taiwan Ltd, Defendant: Kenneth R O'Rourke, Mark Alan Samuels, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA.

For Raychem Corporation, Counter Claimant: Daniel J Kroll, LEAD ATTORNEY, Legal Strategies Group, Emeryville, CA; Gregory S Gilchrist, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kilpatrick Townsend & Stockton LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For Bourns Inc, Counter Defendant: Mark Alan Samuels, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA.

For Steven D Hogge, doing business as New Market Consultants, Polymer Protection Technologies Inc, Counter Defendants: Albert J Tumpson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Albert J Tumpson Law Offices, Beverly Hills, CA; Allan Gabriel, LEAD ATTORNEY, Dykema Gossett, LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Bourns Multifse Hong Kong Ltd, Counter Defendant: Kenneth R O'Rourke, Mark Alan Samuels, LEAD ATTORNEYS, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA.

For Raychem Corporation, Counter Claimant: Daniel J Kroll, Heather A Young, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Legal Strategies Group, Emeryville, CA; Gregory S Gilchrist, LEAD ATTORNEY, Kilpatrick Townsend & Stockton LLP, San Francisco, CA; Richard [*3] J Mooney, LEAD ATTORNEY, Holme Roberts & Owen LLP, San Francisco, CA; Thomas G Scavone, LEAD ATTORNEY, Niro Scavone Haller & Niro, Chicago, IL.

For Bourns Inc, Counter Defendant: Mark Alan Samuels, LEAD ATTORNEY, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA.

Judges: Carlos R. Moreno, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Carlos R. Moreno

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO EXCLUDE THE REPORT OF BOURNS' EXPERT JOHN BRIGGS

On October 25, 1999, Raychem filed a motion to exclude the expert report of John Briggs. On November 22, 1999, the Court heard oral argument on this matter. Having read and considered the moving papers, opposition, and reply, and all admissible evidence and argument offered in relation to this motion, the Court grants Raychem's motion to exclude the expert report of John Briggs.

Factual and Procedural Background

Raychem Corporation ("Raychem") is a Menlo Park, California based manufacturer of electronic and other high-technology products. During the late 1970s and early 1980s, Raychem developed a Polymeric Positive Temperature Coefficient ("PPTC") device that protects electronic circuits from excessive electric current. Beginning in the late 1970s, Raychem had applied for and received more than 80 patents relating [*4] to its PPTC technology.

Bourns, Inc. is a manufacturer of electronic components based in Riverside, California. In 1994, Bourns hired as a consultant Steve Hogge, who had been employed by Raychem from September 1986 until 1993. While at Raychem, Hogge had managed a strategic planning processing related to the manufacture and sale of PPTCs.

In June 1994, Hogge presented a business plan to Bourns' Business Development Committee regarding the manufacture and sale of PPTCs. Bourns subsequently hired Hogge in September 1994, and opened a research and development center in Hong Kong dedicated to the development of a PPTC product by January 1995. It released its first PPTC product in October 1996.

From 1988 through 1995, a Bourns' subsidiary distributed Raychem PPTCs pursuant to a private label agreement ("PLA") to certain end users in Europe and Israel. In 1994, Raychem gave Bourns notice that the PLA would terminate in August 1995. During several months in 1994, before Raychem gave notice of the termination, Raychem and Bourns negotiated the possible renewal of the PLA. During these negotiations, Bourns sought to extend the agreement to include a worldwide license that would have entitled [*5] it to sell more PPTC products.

In December 1994, Raychem brought suit against Bourns and Hogge in San Mateo Superior Court on grounds that Hogge had misappropriated trade secrets and other confidential, proprietary information concerning PPTCs. In May 1995, Bourns filed a countersuit in federal court accusing Raychem of violating anti-trust laws. The two actions subsequently were consolidated.

The Court originally planned to try the antitrust and trade secret claims together over one year ago. During the first proceeding, however, the Court bifurcated the trial into "phases" due to time constraints. In the first trial, Phase One, the Court tried the antitrust claims. In February 1998, during Phase One, Raychem moved for summary judgment on several of Bourns' antitrust claims. The motion, summary judgment #3, was partially granted and partially denied on May 27, 1998.

During the Phase Two proceeding, the Court will adjudicate the trade secret claims and antitrust damages. The Phase Two trial on this matter is scheduled to begin on January 4, 2000.

On October 11, 1999, Bourns served on Raychem the report of expert witness, Mr. John Briggs ("Briggs"), a Howley & Simon antitrust lawyer [*6] from Washington D.C. Briggs intends to offer expert testimony at the Phase Two damages trial on issues of law. Specifically, Briggs intends to testify that if Duracell, one of four principal primary lithium battery customers, to whom Raychem sells PPTC products, had come to him and sought his advice in late 1994 he probably would have told Duracell that (1) the exclusive supply contract between Raychem and Duracell was most likely unenforceable; (2) Duracell should regard itself as free to purchase PPTCs from other vendors, like Bourns; (3) Raychem would not likely seek to enforce the contract; and (4) if Raychem did seek to enforce the contract, it likely would be held enforceable.

Briggs addresses a 10-year exclusive supply contract ("Duracell-Raychem contract"), entered into in 1994. The contract obligated Duracell to purchase from Raychem for a period of ten years, all of the PPTCs that Duracell required for the manufacture of its primary lithium batteries. In exchange, Raychem was required to (1) provide Duracell with all of its PPTC requirements; (2) pay Duracell $700,00 for certain capital equipment that had been developed by Thermocon and paid for by Duracell; (3) provide Duracell [*7] with an immediate reduction in the prices paid for PPTCs; and (4) provide Duracell with specific further price reductions at various stages, over the life of the contract.

Discussion

A. The Briggs report is barred by Res Judicata

The Court, in its May 27, 1999, summary judgment order, did not hold that the Duracell-Raychem contract was legal as a matter of law. Rather, the Court held that Joyin's contract with Raychem was legal and granted summary judgment on the issue. Summary Judgment Order #3, p. 15. The Court labeled this section of the order, "Raychem's Deal with Joyin" and held that "Exclusive dealing is an unreasonable restraint on trade only when a significant fraction of buyers or sellers are frozen out of a market by the exclusive deal." Id. (quoting Jefferson Parish Hosp. v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 45, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\) (Brennan, J., concurring)). However, the Court's ruling was plainly limited to the Joyin contract. The Court did not rule that Raychem's exclusive dealing contract with Duracell was legal.

Moreover, Bourns' complaint and its opposition papers for Summary Judgment #3 and referred to Duracell only in reference to confidentiality agreements and not exclusive dealing. Bourns alleged,

Raychem [*8] also engaged in a decade-long practice of trading valuable concessions for the silence of those who had uncovered its patent fraud, to keep this information from potential competitors who might use it to compete. Beneficiaries included . . . a customer, Duracell, which received from Raychem valuable price concessions.

Bourns Opposition to Summary Judgment #3. The Court denied Raychem's motion for summary judgment on this issue and did not address the Duracell-Raychem contract. Thus, the Court has not ruled on the legality of the Duracell-Raychem contract.

However, the trial for antitrust liability has been completed, and Bourns cannot now litigate liability issues during the trial on damages. Res judicata bars "relitigation of all grounds of recovery that were asserted, or could have been asserted, in a previous action between the parties, where the previous action was resolved on the merits. It is immaterial whether the claims asserted subsequent to the judgment were actually pursued in the action that led to the judgment; rather, the relevant inquiry is whether they could have been brought." United States v. Northrop Corp., 147 F.3d 905, 909 \(9th Cir. 1998\).

Here, Bourns is asserting [*9] through Briggs that the Duracell-Raychem contract was an illegal exclusive dealing contract under antitrust law. However, Bourns certainly had the opportunity to litigate this issue in the previous trial. Bourns challenged the legality of another exclusive dealing contract in Phase One, the Joyin contract, and even placed the confidentiality provisions of the Duracell-Raychem contract at issue in Phase One. Bourns could have addressed the legality of Duracell's exclusive dealing contract with Raychem with the other antitrust liability issues in Phase One.

In response, Bourns asserts that the Briggs testimony is relevant as to damages, not antitrust liability. However, the Briggs testimony is not so easily confined, even with a limiting instruction, and would require revisiting a liability issue. Bourns' failure to address this liability issue in Phase One means it is precluded by res judicata from entering expert testimony as the claims "could have been asserted" in the first trial. Id.

Normally, "For res judicata to apply, there must be . . . a final judgment on the merits . . ." Cabrera v. City of Huntington Park, 159 F.3d 374, 381 \(9th Cir. 1998\). However, under the peculiar circumstances [*10] of the bifurcated trials, the Court must apply res judicata to those issues decided in Phase One even though there is no final judgment on the merits. The parties cannot be allowed to relitigate issues that were decided or that should have been decided in Phase One.

B. The Briggs Report is Timely

The Court has not established a scheduling order for Phase Two expert reports. Although the parties agreed to exchange some expert witness reports in August 1999, there was no agreement that August 1999 would be a binding deadline. Therefore, the report is timely.

Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the Court grants Raychem's motion to exclude the expert report of Briggs.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: November 30, 1999

/s/ Carlos R. Moreno

Carlos R. Moreno

United States District Judge

Hewlett-Packard Co. v. Boston Sci. Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts

November 30, 1999, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO. 99-10244-PBS

Reporter

77 F. Supp. 2d 189 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19089 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,732

HEWLETT-PACKARD COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. BOSTON SCIENTIFIC CORPORATION, Defendant.

Disposition: [1] Defendant's motion to dismiss state claims DENIED.

Core Terms

catheters, consoles, allegations, license agreement, market share, monopolize, Products, technology, antitrust, Licensed, patent, monopoly power, acquisition, manufacture, customers, interface, monopoly, anti trust law, competitor, acquiring, pullback, markets, exclusionary, imaging, specifications, ultrasound, consent order, introducing, probability, Discovery

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In determining whether to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the court must accept as true the well-pleaded facts as they appear in the complaint, extending the plaintiff every reasonable inference in his favor. The complaint may not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN2[Regulated Practices, Private Actions

In antitrust cases where the proof is largely in the hands of the defendant, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted sparingly. However, sparingly does not mean never. A plaintiff must allege sufficient facts in order to state each element of the antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN3 Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The federal antitrust law, § 2 of the Sherman Act, makes it unlawful for a firm to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several states. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2(a). To state a claim of monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: 1) that the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; and 2) that the defendant willfully acquired, maintained or used that power by exclusionary means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN4 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopoly power is often defined as the power to raise prices and exclude competition. The existence of such power ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market. For pleading purposes, an allegation of market share of 70 percent has been held to be an adequate basis for an inference of power in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 Sherman Act, Claims

The second element of a § 2 of the Sherman Act claim for monopolization is the acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power by other than such legitimate means as patents, superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. The complaint must allege that the monopolist acquired or maintained that monopoly through exclusionary conduct. Exclusionary conduct is conduct, other than competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining a monopoly. Conduct is exclusionary if it exceeds the needs of ordinary business dealings and unnecessarily excludes competition from the relevant market. The First Circuit succinctly framed the question: Was defendant's conduct reasonable in light of its business needs or did it unreasonably restrict competition?

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Contract > Licensing Agreements

77 F. Supp. 2d 189, *189LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19089, 1

HN6 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

An agreement which purports to license trade secrets, but in reality, is no more than a sham, or device designed to restrict competition, may violate antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: 1) that the defendant engaged in exclusionary conduct; 2) with the specific intent to obtain monopoly power; and 3) a dangerous probability exists that the attempt will succeed. A specific intent to monopolize or restrain competition can often be inferred from a finding of bad faith.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN8 [down] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To satisfy the last element of a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege facts to show that there was a dangerous probability that defendant would achieve a monopoly as a result of the alleged actions. The probability of successfully monopolizing a market is usually assessed through market share. The greater share a defendant initially controls, the greater the probability of achieving monopoly status. However, proximity to monopoly status is not enough; the defendant must also have the ability to propel itself to monopolistic control over the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

Antitrust plaintiffs face an additional requirement to allege an "antitrust injury." Failure to make such a pleading is a fatal defect. The U.S. Supreme Court defined this term as an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' conduct unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN10 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The presumptive "proper" plaintiff in an antitrust action is a customer who obtains services in the threatened market or a competitor who seeks to serve that market. When a defendant engages in anticompetitive acts in an attempt to gain a monopoly, the competitor who is being driven out of the market has standing.

Counsel: For HEWLETT-PACKARD COMPANY, Plaintiff: Robert M. Buchanan, Jr., Kevin P. Light, Joshua Engel, Choate, Hall & Stewart, Boston, MA.

For BOSTON SCIENTIFIC CORPORATION, Defendant: Robert F. Ruyak, P. Todd Mullins, Howrey & Simon, Washington, DC.

For BOSTON SCIENTIFIC CORPORATION, Defendant: Steven M. Bauer, Kurt W. Lockwood, Testa, Hurwitz & Thibeault, Boston, MA.

Judges: PATTI B. SARIS, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: PATTI B. SARIS

Opinion

[*191] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

November 30, 1999

Saris, U.S.D.J.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Hewlett-Packard Company ("HP") brings this action ¹ against defendant Boston Scientific Corporation ("BSC") alleging that BSC unlawfully monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, the intravascular ultrasound ("IVUS") catheter and console markets in the United States, in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and state law. An IVUS catheter is a flexible tube-like device used in conjunction with a console to obtain sonographic images of arteries. HP also seeks a declaratory judgment that it is no longer obligated to make payments under a licensing [*2] agreement which the two companies entered into pursuant to a consent decree required by the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") as a condition to allowing BSC's merger with two other medical technology companies.

BSC has filed a motion to dismiss all counts pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) on the grounds, inter alia, that the antitrust claim is facially deficient because [*3] HP failed to allege: (1) that BSC has current monopoly power in the catheter or console markets in the United States; or (2) that BSC committed predatory acts that could reasonably be interpreted as causing antitrust injury to competition. After hearing and a review of the excellent briefing by both sides, the motion is DENIED.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

When all reasonable inferences are drawn in the non-movant's favor, HP's complaint alleges the following facts:

[*192] A. The Products: Catheters and Consoles

IVUS catheters are medical devices that are used to diagnose and treat cardiovascular ailments. They are flexible tube-shaped objects that are inserted into a blood vessel. A transducer, located at the forward end of the catheter, generates and transmits ultrasound waves. These waves reflect off the arterial walls, and a receiver measures the amount of returned energy. The catheter compares the transmitted and received energy and sends a signal to a console that displays a 360 degree image of the blood vessel. The image allows physicians to assess the amount of plaque deposits in blood vessels.

¹ The complaint (corrected) alleges that BSC has unlawfully monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, the market for IVUS catheters and consoles in the United States in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Count I); violated Mass. Gen. L. ch. 93A (Count II); breached the licensing agreement (Count III); breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (Count IV); and has been unjustly enriched (Count V). The complaint seeks a declaratory judgment that HP is no longer required to make payments under the licensing agreement (Count VI), as well as treble damages and attorneys fees.

There are two types of IVUS catheters. Phased array catheters [4] use several stationary transducers to create a 360 degree image of the blood vessel. Mechanical catheters also create a 360 degree image, but do so with a single transducer that is spun by an external motor drive unit. This case centers around mechanical catheters.

B. Market Conditions Prior to 1995

BSC, headquartered in Natick, Massachusetts, develops and manufactures medical products. HP's headquarters is in Palo Alto, California, and its Medical Products Group is located in Andover, Massachusetts. Both companies have long been participants in IVUS markets -- BSC sold catheters and HP sold consoles. Until 1995, they had a cooperative history and on occasion have engaged in joint ventures to design BSC catheters specifically to operate on HP consoles. As of mid-1994, BSC and Cardiovascular Imaging Systems, Inc. ("CVIS") were the market leaders with respect to the development, manufacture, and sale of IVUS catheters. BSC held 40% of that market, and CVIS held 50%. The market for IVUS consoles was equally concentrated -- CVIS controlled 40% and HP controlled 50%.

In August 1994, BSC dramatically shifted the balance of power by seeking to acquire CVIS. Three months later, [5] BSC took steps to acquire SCIMED Life Systems, Inc. ("SCIMED"), which was preparing to enter the IVUS catheter market within the next two to three years.

Believing that BSC's acquisitions would lessen competition and create monopoly power in the IVUS catheter market, in January 1995 the Federal Trade Commission filed suit against BSC for violation of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 18 & 21. The FTC sought an injunction to prevent the CVIS acquisition.

C. The Licensing Agreement

As part of settlement negotiations with the FTC, BSC sought a suitable competitor in the IVUS catheter market. On February 21, 1995, the company entered into a licensing agreement granting HP the right to use BSC's IVUS technology ("Licensed Technology") in conjunction with the manufacture and sale of certain products ("Licensed Products").

The licensing agreement defined Licensed Technology as all BSC, SCIMED, and CVIS patents used for the "development, manufacture and sale of Licensed Products . . . and all existing know-how" relating to the manufacture, sale, and distribution of those products. [6] Licensed Products included "ultrasound imaging catheters, imaging cores and imaging guide wires which are designed for diagnostic or therapeutic use, or both, in the human heart and/or in the human coronary and peripheral vascular system."

The Licensed Products definition also referenced Exhibit A, stating that it "includes and is no narrower than the collective claims of the patents . . . listed on Exhibit A." Among several patents listed on Exhibit A was BSC's "pullback patent." ² This technology allows physicians [*193] to retrieve an inserted catheter at a fixed rate of speed, enabling the physician to measure plaque accumulations more accurately.

The licensing agreement also included an "open interface" provision that required both parties to ensure that their consoles were able to be used with the other party's existing catheters. Each party assumed a responsibility to [7] "cooperate . . . in furthering this open interface objective," but retained the option of upgrading its consoles. To facilitate this provision, prior to introducing a new IVUS product, the parties agreed to share technical information relating to new products.

The licensing agreement also contained an "interim supply commitment," which was designed to allow HP to compete in the catheter market while developing its own line of catheters. BSC agreed to supply HP with all BSC catheters at a below market price (average manufacturing cost plus 40%) for resale by HP. The agreement also required BSC, immediately after acquiring CVIS, to introduce its new "Spy" catheter, which was specifically developed for use with HP consoles.

² U.S. Patent No. 5,361,768. Patents for related technologies, U.S. Patent Nos. 5,485,846; 5,592,942; and 5,759,153, have since been issued.

In exchange for the right to use BSC's technology, HP agreed to pay a substantial fee. The parties agreed that one-third of the total fee was to be paid within 30 days of the agreement's effective date. The remaining fee was to be paid in three equal installments payable in May 1998, 2000, and 2002. To date, HP has made the initial payment and the May 1998 installment.

D. The FTC Consent Order

The FTC agreed to withdraw its suit and allow the CVIS [8] acquisition only after BSC entered into the licensing agreement with HP. On February 23, 1995, the FTC and BSC entered into a Consent Order, requiring BSC to license its IVUS technology portfolio to HP "pursuant to, and in accordance with, the February 21, 1995 agreement" between BSC and HP "which agreement is appended to this Order in Confidential Appendix II." (Pl. Exh. B at 12.) The order's stated purpose was to create an "independent competitor in the development, production and sale of IVUS catheters and to remedy the lessening of competition resulting from the CVIS acquisition and the SCIMED acquisition as alleged in the Commission's Complaint." (Id. at 5.) IVUS catheters were defined as "intravascular ultrasound catheters, intracardiac ultrasound catheters, removable imaging cores used in intravascular or intracardiac ultrasound imaging, and intravascular imaging guidewires." (Id. at 3)

The FTC's order contained four primary provisions. First, it required BSC to license its "IVUS Technology Portfolio" to HP or another suitable company. It defined IVUS technology portfolio to include: a) all rights to BSC, CVIS, and SCIMED United States and foreign IVUS catheter patents; [9] b) all CVIS and SCIMED trade secrets, technology and know-how relating to IVUS catheters; and c) all IVUS catheter customer lists. Second, it required BSC to provide technical assistance to the licensee in manufacturing the catheters and obtaining regulatory approval. Third, BSC was required to provide HP with a supply of catheters for resale. Finally, the order prohibited BSC from entering into any arrangement that would make BSC's catheters compatible with only certain consoles.

In exchange for these commitments, the FTC withdrew its suit and request for an injunction. BSC acquired CVIS and SCIMED.

E. Alleged Unlawful Acts

HP claims that BSC "consciously and willfully thwarted the purposes of the Consent Order and the License Agreement," and by doing so secured a "monopoly over IVUS catheters and acquired or attempted to acquire a monopoly over IVUS consoles." [*194] HP alleges the following predatory conduct:

1. Refusal to Provide Complete and Accurate Interface Specifications

Prior to acquiring CVIS, BSC produced a line of catheters named "Sonicath." These catheters were designed to operate on HP consoles. At the same time, CVIS produced a line of catheters [10] named "Microline" that were designed to operate on CVIS consoles. After the merger, BSC replaced these catheters with a new line called "Ultracross" that combined the features of the Microline and Sonicath catheters.

Customers advised HP that the Ultracross catheters did not spin properly when used with HP consoles. Similar problems were reported with BSC's Microview, Microrail, and Discovery catheters. HP claims this is a violation of the licensing agreement which required BSC to disclose "all necessary technical specifications, regulatory information and the like" for HP to ensure its consoles were compatible with BSC catheters. (Pl. Exh. C. at 8.) HP further alleges that BSC sales representatives exploited these problems to discourage customers from purchasing consoles or catheters from HP.

2. BSC Threatened to Sue HP and HP's Customers for Patent Infringement

HP marketed a catheter with an automatic pullback device that was based on the pullback patent listed in Exhibit A of the licensing agreement, which was referenced in the Licensed Products definition. The HP catheter directly competed with a BSC catheter that had a pullback device. BSC claimed that HP was not [11] authorized to use the pullback patent and threatened to sue HP for patent infringement. BSC also told customers that HP's pullback device infringed on a BSC patent and threatened to sue customers who continued to use the HP automatic pullback device. HP alleges that the BSC's threats caused some potential customers to decide not to purchase HP catheters or consoles. HP claims BSC's actions violated its agreement not to assert any of its patent rights in "a way that would prevent HP from practicing any of the Licensed Technology to manufacture, use, or sell Licensed Products." (Pl. Exh. C at 2-3.)

3. BSC Refused to Create a Console Interface for the HP Scout Catheter

HP designed and developed a new catheter called "Scout" and provided its technical specifications to BSC so that BSC could ensure that the catheter would operate with BSC consoles. BSC did not create the requested interface. HP alleges that by not making a meaningful effort to do so, BSC sought to make the catheter commercially unsuccessful in furtherance of BSC's objective to monopolize the catheter and console markets. HP claims this refusal violated BSC's obligation to "provide on all its IVUS consoles . [12] . . . open interfaces to the IVUS products of the other party." (Pl. Exh. C at 7.)

4. BSC Discontinued the Sonicath Catheter, Refused to Provide HP with BSC's Discovery Catheter, and Failed to Sell its Spy Catheters

In 1992, BSC and HP entered into a joint development agreement to design and market BSC's Sonicath catheters which were intended to be used exclusively with HP consoles. After the CVIS acquisition, BSC developed a new line of catheters called "Discovery" and decided to discontinue the Sonicath line. BSC did not supply HP with the Discovery catheter for resale, and decided not to introduce the Spy catheter line. HP claims this violates BSC's obligation to "make available to HP all BSC IVUS Catheters," (Pl. Exh. C. at 8), and "to begin sales of the 'Spy' catheter immediately upon consummation of the CVIS acquisition," (Id. at 11).

[*195] HP alleges that these decisions dramatically reduced the number of catheters that were compatible with HP consoles and discouraged customers from purchasing HP consoles.

5. BSC Failed to Provide HP With the Required Notice of Its Redesign of an IVUS Catheter Hub

A hub is the fitting that connects the catheter to the console. [13] It allows the console to spin the catheter at a fixed rate of speed. After acquiring CVIS, BSC redesigned the Sonicath hub to fit its (formerly CVIS's) consoles. BSC did not provide the technical specifications of the redesigned hub to HP prior to introducing it into the market. HP claims that BSC willfully breached the licensing agreement which required a party introducing a new product to provide the product's technical specifications to the other party "no later than 180 days prior to . . . commercial introduction" of that product. (Pl. Exh. C at 8.)

III. DISCUSSION

HN1[↑] In determining whether to dismiss a complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the Court must accept as true "the well-pleaded facts as they appear in the complaint, extending [the] plaintiff every reasonable inference in his favor." Coyne v. City of Somerville, 972 F.2d 440, 442-43 (1st Cir. 1992) (citing Correa-Martinez v. Arrillaga-Belendez, 903 F.2d 49, 51 (1st Cir. 1990)); see also Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 740, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976). The complaint [14] may not be dismissed unless "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Roeder v. Alpha Indus., Inc., 814 F.2d 22, 25 (1st Cir. 1987) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957)).

77 F. Supp. 2d 189, *195 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19089, 14

This standard applies to an antitrust claim. See Caribe BMW, Inc. v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft, 19 F.3d 745, 748 \(1st Cir. 1994\). HN2[↑] In antitrust cases "where the proof is largely in the hands of the defendant], dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted sparingly." Hospital Bldg. Co., 425 U.S. at 746. However, sparingly does not mean never. A plaintiff must allege sufficient facts in order to state each element of the antitrust violation. See C.R. Bard, Inc. v. Medical Elecs. Corp., 529 F. Supp. 1382, 1389 \(D.Mass. 1982\).

A. Monopoly Power

BSC argues that the complaint fails to allege its current market power or define the market conditions during the relevant time period. HN3[↑] The antitrust law makes it unlawful for a firm [\[15\]](#) to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, . . . any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2\(a\). To state a claim of monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: 1) that the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; and 2) that the defendant willfully acquired, maintained or used that power by exclusionary means. See United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\); Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17, 21 \(1st Cir. 1990\). The two elements will be discussed separately.

1. Monopoly Power

HN4[↑] Monopoly power is often defined as "the power to raise prices and exclude competition." United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\); see also Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Skiing Highlands Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 596 n.20, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\) (same). "The existence of such power ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market." Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 571. For pleading purposes, [\[*196\]](#) an allegation of market share of 70 [\[16\]](#) percent has been held to be an adequate basis for an inference of power in a relevant market. International Audiotext Network, Inc. v. AT&T, 893 F. Supp. 1207, 1217 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\) (suggesting that a conclusory allegation of predominant market share, without more, would support dismissal, but dismissing on other grounds), aff'd, 62 F.3d 69 \(2d Cir. 1995\).

With respect to the IVUS catheter market, HP asserts that, once BSC acquired CVIS, BSC controlled 90% of the IVUS catheter market. (Compl. at PP 2, 38.) Now that HP has left that market supposedly because of BSC's anti-competitive behavior, HP alleges that BSC currently accounts for "substantially all" of the IVUS catheters sold in the market. (Id. P107).

Defendant argues that the market share prior to the licensing agreement is irrelevant because it is outdated, and that these allegations concerning today's market shares are insufficient. It asserts that the four year old market no longer exists, that the agreement substantially changed the competitive landscape, and that a third party (EndoSonics Corporation) has developed into a stronger competitor. Because BSC's allegations that its market [\[17\]](#) share is declining and EndoSonics' share is growing are beyond the four corners of the complaint, they cannot be considered in resolving this motion -- although they will certainly be relevant at another stage of the litigation. See Data Gen. Corp. v. Grumman Sys. Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1184 \(1st Cir. 1994\) ("Antitrust law generally seeks to punish and prevent harm to consumers in particular markets, with a focus on relatively specific time periods."); United States v. Sargent, 785 F.2d 1123, 1127 \(3d Cir. 1986\) (discussing changes in market share between an indictment and trial); and Richter Concrete Corp. v. Hilltop Concrete Corp., 691 F.2d 818, 826 \(6th Cir. 1982\) (stating that a decline in an antitrust defendant's market share during the relevant period "belies whatever inference of capacity to monopolize that may be drawn from the size of its market share").

In light of the allegations concerning the pre-agreement market share, the high barriers to entry in the marketplace posed by the patents, the regulatory clearance requirements, the need for technological expertise, and HP's precipitous withdrawal, these allegations [\[18\]](#) that BSC controls "substantially all" the catheter market are more than ample to meet pleading requirements with respect to monopoly power in the IVUS catheter market in the United States. See International Audiotext, 893 F. Supp. at 1217; C. R. Swaney Co. v. Atlas Copco N. Am., Inc., 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12470, CIV.A. No. 85-587- N, 1987 WL 33025, *13 (D.Mass. 1987) ("While it may have been preferable to make more specific allegations as to market share, at this early stage of the litigation an allegation of 'market dominance' is sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss." (citation omitted)); but cf. Walker Distrib. Co. v. Lucky Lager Brewing Co., 323 F.2d 1, 9 (9th Cir. 1963) (finding the allegation that defendant "was one of the largest manufacturers of beer in the west" was deficient because nothing was said about its position in the market in question).

A somewhat closer issue involves the console market. The complaint states that as of 1995, HP controlled 50% of the console market, making it the market share leader, and CVIS controlled 40%. There were no other significant competitors. (Compl. PP 33-34.) Once BSC merged with CVIS, it gained control over [19] 40% of this market. (Id.) The complaint alleges that HP was prevented from competing in that console market, and that BSC now accounts for "substantially all of the IVUS consoles sold in the United States." (Id. P 107). Because HP was the market leader in the manufacture of IVUS consoles, it is less clear whether its withdrawal from the market now catapults BSC into the current position of having monopoly power [*197] in that market. For example, nothing is alleged with respect to BSC's current activities in manufacturing IVUS consoles. However, the Court need not determine whether the complaint edges over the low pleading barrier with respect to the monopolization claim because plaintiff also asserts a claim of attempted monopolization, which easily salvages this claim.

2. Willful Acquisition and Maintenance of Monopoly Power

HN5 [↑] The second element of a Section 2 claim is the acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power by other than such legitimate means as patents, "superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Barry Wright Corp. v. ITT Grinnell Corp., 724 F.2d 227, 230 (1st Cir. 1983) (citing Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71). [20] The complaint must allege that the monopolist acquired or maintained that monopoly through exclusionary conduct. See id. "Exclusionary conduct is conduct, other than competition on the merits, that reasonably appears capable of making a significant contribution to creating or maintaining a monopoly." Id. (quoting 3 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P 626, at 83 (1978)). Conduct is exclusionary if it exceeds the needs of ordinary business dealings and unnecessarily excludes competition from the relevant market. Id. The First Circuit succinctly framed the question: "Was [defendant's] conduct reasonable in light of its business needs or did it unreasonably restrict competition?" Id.

HP claims that BSC willfully acquired a monopoly by acquiring CVIS and SCIMED, and violating in bad faith the FTC's consent decree imposed as a condition of the merger. HP contends that BSC duped the FTC into allowing the acquisitions by licensing its technology to HP, and then, by systematically breaching the licensing agreement, BSC completely undercut any possible remedial effect of the consent decree. The complaint sets forth a litany of alleged breaches that HP contends were [21] done with the calculated desire to exclude HP from the IVUS console and catheter markets. The alleged breaches are that BSC: unreasonably and in bad faith refused to provide accurate interface specifications for its catheters; threatened to sue customers who used HP's pullback device; refused to create an interface for an HP catheter; reduced the number of catheters that are compatible with HP consoles; and failed to provide notice of the re-design of a catheter hub.

Defendant argues that by entering into the licensing agreement it released its monopoly position. However, the licensing agreement is a shield only if defendant acts in good faith to comply with its terms. See CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 851 (1st Cir. 1985) ("It is well established that HN6 [↑] an agreement which purports to license trade secrets, but in reality, is no more than a sham, or device designed to restrict competition, may violate antitrust laws.").

BSC argues that HP has presented a laundry list of minor contract skirmishes under provisions of the licensing agreement which are not specifically mandated by the consent order, and do not rise to the level of predatory contract. It relies [22] on Olympia Equip. Leasing Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 797 F.2d 370, 374-76 (7th Cir. 1986), which provides false consolation, although it provides a useful comparison. In Olympia, a federal regulatory agency (the Federal Communications Commission) had required defendant to allow competition, and defendant voluntarily undertook acts to "foster competition by subsidizing its competitors' selling costs." Id. at 375. The Seventh Circuit rejected an antitrust claim generated when defendant stopped these affirmative steps not required by any antitrust obligation, stating: "A firm that voluntarily encourages new competition in a tributary market should not be penalized by being made to pay damages under the antitrust laws." Id.

[*198] In contrast to Olympia, the steps to promote competition here were not voluntary. They were contractual obligations which were incorporated into a FTC Consent Order as a remedy for the lessening of competition caused by the acquisitions. At this pleading stage, the allegation of a bad faith violation of the licensing agreement, specifically designed to promote a viable, independent competitor in the catheter market, permits an inference [23] of exclusionary conduct.

BSC makes the fair point that the FTC's order was not designed to promote competition in the console market. It hints that HP's design of the Scout catheter was unreasonable because it had a new console interface that would not run on either party's installed base of consoles, and therefore, the breach of the agreement was not unreasonably restrictive. Again, BSC's argument that its refusal to provide an open interface was based on legitimate business reasoning might be a fair defense on an expanded record. The allegations of an unreasonable refusal to cooperate on the console interface are sufficient to support an inference of exclusionary conduct in the console market. See Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 603 (affirming the jury finding that defendant's refusal to cooperate, where some cooperation was indispensable to effective competition, was not based on legitimate business reasons and supported an "inference that the monopolist made a deliberate effort to discourage its customers from doing business with its smaller rival.").

B. Attempted Monopolization

HN7 To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: [24] 1) that the defendant engaged in exclusionary conduct; 2) with the specific intent to obtain monopoly power; and 3) a dangerous probability exists that the attempt will succeed. See Spectrum Sports v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884 \(1993\); CVD, Inc., 769 F.2d at 851 ("[A] specific intent to monopolize or restrain competition can often be inferred from a finding of bad faith."). As shown above, allegations concerning the first two elements are sufficient.

HN8 To satisfy the last element of this claim, plaintiff must allege facts to show that there was a dangerous probability that BSC would achieve a monopoly as a result of the alleged actions. See Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America, 885 F.2d 683, 693 \(10th Cir. 1989\). The probability of successfully monopolizing a market is usually assessed through market share. See id. at 694. The greater share a defendant initially controls, the greater the probability of achieving monopoly status. See id. ("[A] 41% market share typically indicates that a firm has substantial economic power in the market, and, therefore, [25] has the tools at its disposal to elevate its market share to monopolistic levels."). However, "proximity to monopoly status is not enough; the defendant must also have the ability to propel itself to monopolistic control over the market." Id. at 694.

HP alleges that after acquiring CVIS, BSC purposely leveraged its IVUS catheter monopoly and engaged in anti-competitive conduct to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the IVUS console business as well. BSC's alleged 90 percent market share of catheters and 40 percent market share of consoles, together with the other allegations, are sufficient to demonstrate a dangerous probability that an attempted monopolization would succeed in either the catheter or console markets.

C. Antitrust Injury

HN9 Antitrust plaintiffs face an additional requirement to allege an "antitrust injury." See SAS of Puerto Rico v. Puerto Rico Tel. Co., 48 F.3d 39, 43-44 \(1st Cir. 1995\); Caribe BMW v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft, 19 F.3d 745, 752 \(1st Cir. 1994\). Failure to make such a pleading is a fatal defect. See SAS [*199] Puerto Rico, 48 F.3d at 46 (affirming the dismissal [26] of a complaint that failed to allege an antitrust injury). The Supreme Court defined this term as an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes the defendants' conduct unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\).

Antitrust laws were designed to protect the "competitive process that brings to consumers the benefits of lower prices, better products, and more efficient production methods." Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Inst., 851 F.2d 478, 486 (1st Cir. 1988). Based on this objective, the HN10 [↑] "presumptive[] 'proper' plaintiff is a customer who obtains services in the threatened market or a competitor who seeks to serve that market." SAS Puerto Rico, 48 F.3d at 44. When a defendant engages in anticompetitive acts in an attempt to gain a monopoly, the competitor who is being driven out of the market has standing. See Wojcieszek v. New England Tel. & Tel. Co., 977 F. Supp. 527, 535 (D.Mass. 1997).

HP claims that BSC injured the competitive process by engaging in predatory acts which drove [27] HP out of the market for both consoles and catheters, depriving consumers of a meaningful choice of competing innovative products. If proven, these allegations are sufficient to show that BSC injured competition, which is exactly the type of injury the antitrust laws were designed to prevent.

D. State Claims

The motion to dismiss the state claims is DENIED.

IV. ORDER

For the reasons discussed herein, the Court DENIES the motion to dismiss (Docket No. 10).

PATTI B. SARIS

United States District Judge

End of Document

Access Telecom, Inc. v. MCI Telecomms. Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

December 1, 1999, Decided

No. 98-50881

Reporter

197 F.3d 694 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31538 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,735; 45 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 1089

ACCESS TELECOM, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant versus MCI TELECOMMUNICATIONS CORPORATION; MCI INTERNATIONAL, INC.; SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC.; SBC INTERNATIONAL, INC.; SBC INTERNATIONAL LATIN AMERICA; TELEFONOS DE MEXICO, Defendants-Appellees

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) As Amended December 23, 1999. Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied February 15, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 4356. Certiorari Denied October 2, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 6512, 2000 U.S. LEXIS 6511, 2000 U.S. LEXIS 6510.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas. SA-96-CV-1064. D W Suttle, US District Judge.

Disposition: REVERSED AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

contracts, customers, tortious interference, foreign law, provider, reseller, lines, contacts, summary judgment, parties, numbers, resale, district court, monopoly, personal jurisdiction, telecommunications, export, choice of law, discovery, domestic, import, leg, telecommunications service, phone service, provisions, antitrust claim, call-back, shipping, comity, do business

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Procedural Matters > Conflict of Law > General Overview

HN1 Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

To properly decide tortious interference issues, courts must make three choice of law decisions: first, which law governs plaintiff's tort cause of action; second, which law governs the validity of the contracts and prospective business relations which form the basis of the tortious interference claims; and third, whether any foreign law invalidates the contracts for other reasons. A federal district court must follow the choice-of-law rules of the state in which it sits.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > Significant Relationships

Torts > Procedural Matters > Conflict of Law > Significant Relationships

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

Torts > Procedural Matters > Conflict of Law > General Overview

HN2 Choice of Law, Significant Relationships

Texas follows the most significant relationship test for deciding which law governs a plaintiff's tort cause of action. Under the modern most significant relationship test, courts consider: (1) the place where the injury occurred; (2) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred; (3) the domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation, and place of business of the parties; and (4) the place where the relationship between the parties, if any, is centered.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN3 Defenses, Illegal Bargains

Under Texas law, the existence of a valid contract (or the potential for one in claims for interference with prospective contracts) is an element of a claim for tortious interference. There is no remedy for interference with illegal contracts.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > Significant Relationships

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN4 [down] Choice of Law, Significant Relationships

Validity of a contract is determined by the law which governs the contract. Texas adopts the most significant relationship test as applied to contracts.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN5 [down] Appeals, Standards of Review

In Texas, contractual choice-of-law provisions are ordinarily enforced if the chosen forum has a substantial relationship to the parties and the transaction. However, a choice-of-law provision will not be applied if another jurisdiction has a more significant relationship with the parties and their transaction than the state they choose, that jurisdiction has a materially greater interest than the chosen state, and the jurisdiction's fundamental policy would be contravened by the application of the law of the chosen state.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN6 [down] Preliminary Considerations, Federal & State Interrelationships

Contractual choice of law clauses are construed narrowly.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN7 [down] Appeals, Standards of Review

In the absence of an effective choice of law by the parties the contacts to be taken into account to determine the law applicable to an issue include: (a) the place of contracting; (b) the place of negotiation of the contract; (c) the place of performance; (d) the location of the subject matter of the contract; (e) the domicil, residence, nationality, place of incorporation and place of business of the parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > General Overview

HN8 [down] Regulated Industries, Communications

The U.S. favors competition in telecommunications.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN9 [blue download icon] Defenses, Illegal Bargains

Under Texas contract law, it is well settled that a contract made with a view of violating the laws of another country, though not otherwise obnoxious to the laws either of the forum or of the place where the contract is made, is illegal and will not be enforced.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Federal & State Interrelationships, Choice of Law

To determine state substantive law, courts look to final decisions of the state's highest court. When there is no ruling by the state's highest court, it is the duty of the federal court to determine as best it can, what the highest court of the state would decide. Thus, Texas courts must make a guess as to how the Texas Supreme Court would interpret a rule.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Dispute Resolution > Conflict of Law > Choice of Law

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > Forum & Place

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Conflict of Law, Choice of Law

Under modern choice of law analysis, place of performance or place of contract formation is not always determinative.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

International Law > Dispute Resolution > Comity Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

HN12 [blue download icon] Courts, Judicial Comity

Comity must yield to domestic policy and cannot compel a domestic court to uphold foreign interests at the expense of the public policies of the forum state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications

HN13 [blue download icon] Regulated Industries, Communications

47 U.S.C.S. § 214 requires authorization before a carrier shall undertake the construction of a new line or of an extension of any line, or shall acquire or operate any line, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transmission over or by means of such additional or extended line.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications

HN14 [] Regulated Industries, Communications

47 U.S.C.S. § 214 applies only to the construction of facilities and does not prevent telecommunications carriers from offering new services.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defenses > Necessity

HN15 [] Commercial Interference, Contracts

Under the defense of legal justification or excuse, one is privileged to interfere with another's contractual relations (1) if it is done in a bona fide exercise of his own rights, or (2) if he has an equal or superior right in the subject matter to that of the other party. One may be privileged to assert a claim even though that claim may be doubtful, so long as it asserted a colorable legal right. However, the defense of legal justification or excuse only protects good faith assertions of legal rights.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defenses > Necessity

HN16 [] Defenses, Necessity

The defense of legal justification or excuse protects the actor only when (1) he has a legally protected interest, and (2) in good faith asserts or threatens to protect it, and (3) the threat is to protect it by appropriate means.

Evidence > Privileges > General Overview

Torts > ... > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defenses > Necessity

HN17 [] Evidence, Privileges

Release of nonconfidential information may be a basis for privilege. The release of confidential information, however, is not an appropriate means to protect other interests.

Communications Law > ... > Telephone Services > Long Distance Telephone Services > Tariffs

Torts > Procedural Matters > Preemption > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Filed Rate Doctrine > General Overview

197 F.3d 694, *694L 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31538, 1

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN18 [] Long Distance Telephone Services, Tariffs

Under the filed-rate doctrine, federal law preempts claims concerning the price at which service is to be offered, and the United States Supreme Court ruled that it also preempts claims concerning the services that are offered.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN19 [] Commercial Interference, Contracts

The right to halt one contract does not grant the right to interfere with another by any conceivable means.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Punitive Damages

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN20 [] Damages, Punitive Damages

Under Texas law, the general law is that where a defendant's conduct breaches an agreement between the parties and does not breach an affirmative duty imposed outside the contract, the plaintiff ordinarily may not recover on a tort claim if the damages are economic losses to the subject matter of the contract. However, this does not mean tort damages cannot be measured by economic losses from the contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications

HN21 [] Regulated Industries, Communications

In order to support an antitrust claim, there must be actions which have a reasonably foreseeable effect in a defined United States market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN22 [] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 6a.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Trade Law > International Commerce & Trade > Exports & Imports > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

American antitrust laws do not regulate the competitive conditions of other nations' economies. In other words, foreign countries may make laws or create monopolies that effectively and completely exclude United States (U.S.) import competition. That does not then mean that U.S. companies can enter the market anyway and make antitrust claims when things do not work out. Even in the U.S., the existence of a legitimate government granted monopoly precludes claims of antitrust violation when a plaintiff wants to compete in the regulated market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN24 [blue icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

The content of foreign law is a question of law and is subject to de novo review. Fed. R. Civ. P. 44.1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

The court, in determining foreign law, may consider any relevant material or source, including testimony, whether or not submitted by a party or admissible under Fed. R. Civ. P. 43. Fed. R. Civ. P. 44.1. Under this rule, expert testimony accompanied by extracts from foreign legal material is the basic method by which foreign law is determined. It is not, however, an invariable necessity in establishing foreign law, and indeed, federal judges may reject even the uncontradicted conclusions of an expert witness and reach their own decisions on the basis of independent examination of foreign legal authorities.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN26 [blue icon] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Genuine Disputes

Differences of opinion among experts on the content, applicability, or interpretation of foreign law do not create a genuine issue as to any material fact under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. In general, summary judgment is appropriate to determine the content of foreign law.

197 F.3d 694, *694LÁ 999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31538, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN27 [] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

Recognizing the difficulty of interpreting foreign law, courts may defer to foreign government interpretations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications

HN28 [] Regulated Industries, Communications

Article 75 of the Telecommunications Rulings of Mexico reads that the exploitation of the telecommunications network given in concession must be carried out directly by its holder and its commercialization may be made through agents in accordance with the provisions approved by the Ministry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications

HN29 [] Regulated Industries, Communications

Courts read Article 75 of the Telecommunications Rulings of Mexico to mean that the direct operation of the network must be accomplished by the actual provider, and that the provider may designate others to commercialize the network. It does not say commercialization must be made through those channels, however.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Purposeful Availment

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Rem Actions > True In Rem Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

HN30 [] In Personam Actions, Minimum Contacts

A federal district court has personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant to the same extent as a state court in the state in which the district court is located. The Texas long-arm statute extends to the limits of the Due Process Clause of the Constitution. Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 17.042. The exercise of personal jurisdiction thus can be maintained if the nonresident defendant has purposefully availed itself of the benefits and protections of the forum state by establishing "minimum contacts" with the forum state, and if the exercise of jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

197 F.3d 694, *694LÁ 999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31538, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN31 [blue download icon] Clayton Act, Jurisdiction

Minimum contacts can be established either through contacts giving rise to general jurisdiction, or those giving rise to specific jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN32 [blue download icon] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

Conflicting evidence must be resolved in favor of the plaintiff in determining personal jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN33 [blue download icon] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

General jurisdiction can be assessed by evaluating contacts of the defendant with the forum over a reasonable number of years, up to the date the suit was filed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN34 [blue download icon] Jurisdiction Over Actions, General Jurisdiction

Even if a number of different contacts are independent of one another, if they occur with such frequency that the contacts in general are continuous and systematic, there is general jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN35 [blue icon] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

To demonstrate a business presence sufficient to confer general jurisdiction, the mere renting or ownership of property in a forum is not enough when that property is not used to conduct business in the forum.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

HN36 [blue icon] Clayton Act, Claims

15 U.S.C.S. § 22 of the Clayton Act allows for jurisdiction over any federal antitrust suit in any district in which a defendant transacts business, and provides that all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found. When jurisdiction is invoked under the Clayton Act, the court examines the defendant's contacts with the United States as a whole to determine whether the requirements of due process have been met.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN37 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Specific jurisdiction over a nonresident exists when the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, and the plaintiff's cause of action arises out of or relates to that act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN38 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

The issue of relevant market is a fact question.

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN39 [blue icon] Pretrial Matters, Continuances

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f), the appropriate way to raise the issue of inadequate discovery is for the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to file a motion for a continuance with an attached affidavit stating why the party cannot present by affidavit facts essential to justify the party's opposition.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Continuances

HN40 [] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

To obtain a continuance of a motion for summary judgment, a party must specifically explain both why it is currently unable to present evidence creating a genuine issue of fact and how a continuance would enable the party to present such evidence. The non-moving party may not simply rely on vague assertions that additional discovery will produce needed, but unspecified, facts in opposition to summary judgment. If it appears that further discovery will not provide evidence creating a genuine issue of material fact, the district court may grant summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Reversible Errors

HN41 [] Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

When a party is not given a full and fair opportunity to discover information essential to its opposition to summary judgment, the limitation on discovery is reversible error.

Counsel: For ACCESS TELECOMMUNICATIONS INC, Plaintiff - Appellant: Luther H Soules, III, Elizabeth Joan Lindell, Soules & Wallace, San Antonio, TX. Clyde Reece McCormick, Law Office of Clyde R McCormick, San Antonio, TX.

For MCI TELECOMMUNICATIONS CORP, MCI INTERNATIONAL, Defendant - Appellee: Judith R Blakeway, Charles J Fitzpatrick, Strasburger & Price, San Antonio, TX.

For SBC COMMUNICATIONS INCORPORATED, SBC INTERNATIONAL INC, SBC INTERNATIONAL LATIN AMERICA, Defendants - Appellees: Javier Aguilar, SBC Communications, San Antonio, TX. Hubert W Green, Daniel Webb Lanfear, The Kleberg Law Firm, San Antonio, TX.

For TELEFONOS DE MEXICO, Defendant - Appellee: Jeffrey I Kavy, George H Spencer, Jr, Clemens & Spencer, San Antonio, TX.

Judges: Before REYNALDO G. GARZA, HIGGINBOTHAM, and DAVIS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: HIGGINBOTHAM

Opinion

[*701] HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judge:

I.

During 1993 and 1994, Access Telecom, Inc. (ATI), a corporation based in Texas, exported U.S. phone services to customers in Mexico. These services allowed Mexican customers to place U.S.-based phone calls directly from Mexico. Customers first called ATI in Texas and then entered the new phone number they wanted to call. ATI dialed that new number from the U.S. and effectively spliced the customer's first call to the new call, enabling the customer to communicate with the new destination. As a result, each call had two legs: the Mexican leg from Mexico to Texas and the U.S. leg from Texas to the final destination.¹

The benefit to ATI's customers from this arrangement was that the cost of the two-legged [*2] call was less than the cost of a normal call from Mexico through Telefonos de Mexico (Telmex). The price discrepancy existed because Telmex had a government granted monopoly until 1996. Thus, the rate on a typical call from Mexico to California was controlled by Telmex for its entire length. Under ATI's setup, Telmex controlled only the rate for the Mexican leg of the call. The applicable rate for the U.S. leg of the call was a U.S. rate.

The Mexican leg of each call was carried on toll free numbers that ATI received from MCI. MCI in turn leased the lines for these numbers from Telmex. In other words, MCI leased the Telmex lines that connected Mexico to Texas. Telmex's lines crossed the border into Texas where they interconnected with U.S. lines. Telmex's contracts with MCI apparently neither foresaw nor forbid the subsequent "reorigination" as practiced by ATI or other companies, and in fact, MCI offered similar reorigination services of its own.

ATI's contracts with MCI incorporated the terms and conditions of MCI's U.S. "filed tariff" which provided that MCI calls may not be acquired and used for resale in foreign jurisdictions once MCI's foreign partners have blocked or interrupted [*3] MCI or have threatened to do so for such reasons. The tariff also stated that MCI was not liable for acts or omissions of other companies who furnished a portion of MCI's 800 service. Finally, the tariff prohibited the use of MCI services for unlawful purposes.

[*702] Mexican law required a permit to be a provider of telecommunications services in Mexico. ATI never obtained such a permit, maintaining it did not need to do so because it was not a provider. Under ATI's interpretation of Mexican law, a provider was an entity that both owned and operated telecommunications infrastructure within Mexico, which ATI did not do (as opposed to reselling service directly or indirectly, which ATI perhaps did do). Subsequent to the time period relevant in this lawsuit, Mexico revamped its telecommunications laws and now explicitly requires a permit to engage in resale activity.

In October 1993, Jose Rivas Moncayo of the office of the Mexican Secretary of Communications and Transportation (SCT), sent MCI a letter requesting that MCI halt the services of companies offering "call-back services." Call-back involved a procedure whereby a customer called a U.S. company, and the U.S. company did not answer [4] the call. Instead, the company would use a form of caller-id to locate the customer and then call the customer back. Under call-back services, Telmex received no revenue for the initial outbound call because that call was never "answered." Such services used Telmex phone lines to communicate location information without paying Telmex anything for that privilege. ATI's service, however, paid Telmex exactly what Telmex had contracted with MCI to receive for outbound calls using the lines from Mexico to Texas. ATI's service did not operate through call-back, and MCI did not terminate ATI's service. Subsequent to the time period relevant in this lawsuit, the SCT issued further communications condemning practices that achieve similar results as "call-back" services.

¹ At some point, ATI also employed switching services in New York.

On April 19, 1994, Telmex notified MCI of its intention to disconnect customers who were using its service for resale. The list of 85 customers that it provided, however, did not include ATI. On April 29, 1994, MCI received another letter, requesting a list of customers in the resale business, but MCI refused to provide such a list. The letter requesting customers was written on Telmex letterhead by an employee of SBC International, [5] a subsidiary of Southwestern Bell. Southwestern Bell is part of a consortium that owns a controlling stake in Telmex.

Telmex allegedly began disconnecting 800 numbers on July 21, 1994, without warning. Previously it had assured MCI that it would give notice of disconnection so MCI could warn MCI's customers. On September 28, 1994, Telmex sent MCI a list of prohibitions on the use of MCI's numbers, threatening to terminate all of MCI's Mexican business without notice if MCI did not cooperate. ATI's numbers, save three, were disconnected on October 19, 1994; the rest were disconnected soon thereafter. At this time, ATI was earning approximately $ 3 million a year.

There is disagreement whether MCI provided Telmex with ATI's numbers. According to the deposition of Carol Ansley, an SBC employee, Ansley sent Rafael Perez Aguilar of Telmex a list of ATI's numbers, and Ansley testified that as far as she knew, MCI had not provided SBC with ATI's numbers. ATI, however, discovered a cover memo written by Ansley, stating that "attached you will find a list of I-800 numbers MCI has identified as being with Access Telecom." ATI also notes that John Bachman, an MCI manager, sent an e-mail on [6] October 18, to an MCI employee, Laura Alvarado, instructing her to "take down" ATI's numbers. In Alvarado's deposition, however, she insists that she did not provide the numbers to Telmex. Even MCI has stated that the provision of ATI's numbers to third parties without permission would be in violation of U.S. law.

In an effort to continue providing service to its customers, ATI sought alternative service from AT&T. According to ATI, MCI immediately informed SBC and Telmex of ATI's attempt to obtain service from AT&T. Telmex allegedly assured MCI that ATI would not be able to reestablish [*703] the numbers through AT&T. ATI ultimately could not obtain alternate service through AT&T. ATI's business collapsed, along with approximately 80 other similar U.S. companies.

II.

In June 1995, MCI commenced arbitration proceedings seeking to recover payment of ATI's phone bill, ultimately receiving an award for nearly $ 1.2 million. In July 1995, ATI sued Telmex, SBC, and MCI in Texas state court, alleging claims of breach of contract, tortious interference with contract, negligent misrepresentation, promissory estoppel and federal and state antitrust violations. The case was removed and transferred [7] to the Western District of Texas. The federal court granted Telmex's motion to dismiss all claims against it for lack of personal jurisdiction.

ATI moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of the lawfulness of its activities, which the district court denied. MCI and SBC moved for summary judgment on all of ATI's claims, which the district court granted. The court held that the filed tariff doctrine barred ATI's claims for negligent misrepresentation and breach of contract. The district court granted summary judgment on a promissory estoppel claim, holding that ATI could not justifiably rely on representations by MCI as to Mexican law.

The district court also held that ATI could not recover on its claim alleging that MCI tortiously interfered with ATI's customer contracts because this was essentially a breach of contract claim and was barred by limitation of liability provisions in MCI's tariff. In addition, the court rejected ATI's claim that MCI conspired with Telmex and SBC to block ATI from contracting with AT&T for service because ATI never sought or obtained a permit from the SCT and thus ATI's prospective relations with AT&T would have been illegal. Finally, the district [8] court rejected ATI's antitrust claims on the ground that the conduct of which ATI complained did not have a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on U.S. domestic or import commerce or export business.

On appeal, ATI challenges the dismissal of its tortious interference and antitrust claims, the denial of summary judgment in ATI's favor with respect to the lawfulness of ATI's activities, and the dismissal of Telmex on personal jurisdiction grounds. ATI separately complains that merits discovery was improperly limited.

III.

A. Characterization of ATI's Business

The proper resolution of many issues in this case depends on the characterization of ATI's business. ATI characterizes its business as exporting U.S. reorigination services to Mexican customers. The defendants characterize ATI's business as providing a Mexican telecommunications service in Mexico. At first glance, the defendant's characterization has appeal. No matter how ATI's business is described, the end result enabled Mexican customers to make long distance phone calls in Mexico for prices less than those generally charged by the Telmex monopoly. This characterization, however, confuses the ends with [9] the means.

In the past, phone calls may have been seen as indivisible commodities. Today, that is too simple a view. Admittedly, by selling the "U.S. leg" of a call to Mexican customers, ATI enabled cheaper long distance communication. That is not the same as being a Mexican telecommunications provider. A distinction exists between "provider" and "reseller," which is easier to see in a more familiar context.

If ATI and Telmex were shipping companies, ATI might transport goods solely between U.S. cities. If Mexican customers shipped their goods to ATI in Texas, ATI could then transport them to another destination in the U.S. Alternatively, Mexican customers could ship directly to their final [*704] destination using Telmex alone. Shipping to New York via ATI might be cheaper, however, than shipping via Telmex. To say that ATI is a Mexican shipping provider would be imprecise. No matter which company the customer uses, Telmex, as a monopoly, is the only provider of shipping service from Mexico to Texas, and in every instance Telmex receives the previously agreed rate for its services. Thus, in Mexico, ATI is at most a reseller of Telmex's shipping service, although even the label of "reseller" [10] is debatable.

To equate resale with provision, however, entails that every business is a provider if that business ships goods to its customers via Telmex and charges the customer for the shipping cost. In our case it would entail that every business which has a toll free number, yet which charges the cost of the phone service back to the customers, is a telecommunications provider because it technically is "reselling" phone service. This ignores the crucial difference between resellers and providers, which is that a reseller cannot compete with a monopoly provider because the provider is the reseller's only supplier. The reseller can only undersell the provider if the provider sells its services to the reseller for less than they are worth. That is not the same kind of competition a provider faces against another provider. Competition between the provider and the reseller is at the mercy of the provider and the provider's knowledge or ignorance of the market.

Because of this difference, it is more appropriate to characterize ATI as an exporter of U.S. phone services who incidentally and indirectly resold Mexican telecommunications services. In a real sense, ATI was not even the [11] primary reseller of Mexican telecommunications services. MCI was the reseller, under contract from Telmex. ATI purchased MCI's services and MCI billed ATI for the calls made to ATI's numbers by ATI's customers who were purchasing U.S. service. ATI may have recouped the cost of the Mexican leg of the call from its customers just as any other business may recoup the cost of toll free phone service through its service fees. ATI's setup is thus the same as any American business which contracted to offer toll free 800 numbers to Mexican customers in order to provide service across the phones, such as touch tone brokerage service or even $ 3.95/minute astrological advice. The only difference is that ATI offered U.S. phone service rather than another service delivered by phone. While this may make ATI appear to be a Mexican "provider," this ignores the foregoing distinctions. To not distinguish between direct providers, direct resellers, and indirect resellers ignores the competitive reality that it is the providers who determine whether subsequent resales are profitable; it also leads to the illogical result that all businesses are telecommunications providers. This characterization of ATI's [12] business is compatible with one interpretation of the laws which were in place in Mexico at the time, requiring permits only for the joint installation, operation, and exploitation of infrastructure. ATI's claim that the "and" has its normal conjunctive meaning agrees with these distinctions, because this reading separates true providers from mere resellers. With these distinctions in mind, we now address the tortious interference issues.

B. Tortious Interference

1. Choice of Law

HN1[] To properly decide the tortious interference issues, we must make three choice of law decisions: first, which law governs ATI's tort cause of action; second, which law governs the validity of the contracts and prospective business relations which form the basis of the tortious interference claims; and third, whether any foreign law invalidates the contracts for other reasons. A federal district court must follow the choice-of-law rules of the state in which it sits. See, e.g., St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Lexington Ins. Co., 78 F.3d 202, 205 (5th Cir. 1996).

[*705] (a) Tort Choice of Law

The first choice is which law governs ATI's tort cause of action. HN2[] Texas follows the most significant [13] relationship test of the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 145, for these decisions. See Gutierrez v. Collins, 583 S.W.2d 312, 318 (Tex. 1979). Under the modern "most significant relationship" test, courts consider: (1) the place where the injury occurred; (2) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred; (3) the domicile, residence, nationality, place of incorporation, and place of business of the parties; and (4) the place where the relationship between the parties, if any, is centered. See SnyderGeneral Corp. v. Great Am. Ins., 928 F. Supp. 674, 677 (N.D. Tex. 1996), aff'd, 133 F.3d 373 (5th Cir. 1998). Since Texas was the site of injury, home to the injured business, and place of export of the U.S. portion of the business, it would be reasonable to apply Texas law; however, the parties appear to assume without argument that Texas law governs, and so, without deciding, shall we.

Thus, we examine Texas law to determine the requirements for a tortious interference claim. HN3[] Under Texas law, the existence of a valid contract (or the potential for one in claims for interference with prospective contracts) is an element [14] of a claim for tortious interference. See Juliette Fowler Homes, Inc. v. Welch Associates, Inc., 793 S.W.2d 660, 665 (Tex. 1990). There is no remedy for interference with illegal contracts, see Ben E. Keith Co. v. Lisle Todd Leasing, Inc., 734 S.W.2d 725, 727 (Tex. App.-Dallas 1987, writ ref'd n.r.e.).

(b) Contract Choice of Law

The ATI contracts at issue in this case include ATI's contracts with its Mexican customers, ATI's contracts with MCI, and ATI's attempted contracts with AT&T. The second choice of law question arises because we must determine whether these contracts were valid. HN4[] Validity of a contract, however, is determined by the law which governs the contract, which calls for another choice of law analysis, this time using the modern "most significant relationship" test of the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws as applied to contracts, which Texas has adopted. See Duncan v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 665 S.W.2d 414, 420-21 (Tex. 1984).

ATI, based in Texas, exported Texas reorigination services to Mexican customers and resold Mexican telecommunications service. These customer contracts had choice of law provisions identifying [15] Texas as the applicable law and place of formation. HN5[] In Texas, contractual choice-of-law provisions are ordinarily enforced if the chosen forum has a substantial relationship to the parties and the transaction. See De Santis v. Wackenhet, 793 S.W.2d 670, 677-78 (Tex. 1990). However, a choice-of-law provision will not be applied if another jurisdiction has a more significant relationship with the parties and their transaction than the state they choose, that jurisdiction has a materially greater interest than the chosen state, and the jurisdiction's fundamental policy would be contravened by the application of the law of the chosen state. See Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 187.

The defendants argue that the choice of law clauses in the ATI customer contracts are not determinative, because these contracts concerned issues of payment and formation, mostly stating that the contracts were formed in Texas and would be payable in Texas in U.S. dollars. The contracts did not concern the terms of ATI's actual provision of service. It is true that HN6¹⁵ contractual choice of law clauses are construed narrowly. See Thompson and Wallace of Memphis, Inc. v. Falconwood Corp., 100 F.3d 429 \(5th Cir. 1996\). 16 However, the defendants' argument cuts both ways. To the degree that these contracts do not concern the services allegedly illegal in Mexico, it becomes harder to argue illegality of those contracts under [\[*706\]](#) Mexican or Texas law; furthermore, so long as these contracts were interfered with, the fact that a separate service agreement was not interfered with does not matter, since the interference claim only needs one contract as its basis.

Without deciding how determinative the choice of law clauses are, however, it appears that there is no demand to choose Mexican over Texas law under a most significant relationship test. The Restatement § 188 states that HN7¹⁶ in the absence of an effective choice of law by the parties . . . the contacts to be taken into account . . . to determine the law applicable to an issue include: (a) the place of contracting; (b) the place of negotiation of the contract; (c) the place of performance; (d) the location of the subject matter of the contract; (e) the domicil, residence, nationality, place of incorporation and place of business of the parties.

In this case, we have a very symmetric relationship between the parties and the services provided. 17 Each forum is home to one of the parties, one forum's business is exporting services, the other forum's resident is receiving services, HN8¹⁷ the U.S. favors competition in telecommunications, Mexico at the time did not. ATI's indirect resale of the Mexican leg of the service may center in Mexico, but even a portion of that service occurs in Texas, since Telmex's lines cross into Texas and interconnect at the border. Further, that service was provided by MCI under agreements with Telmex and ATI, and the ATI-MCI agreements were entered into in Texas. Even assuming the Mexican leg of the calls implicates Mexican interests more than Texas interests, the remaining contacts that ATI's contracts had with Texas, including the choice of law clause which is of some weight, is at least a deciding factor in such a close case.

This makes sense if one looks at the fundamental policies involved, which include Mexico's interest in a domestic telephone monopoly. Mexico would not have a fundamental policy contravened by the application of Texas law in this case. The export of U.S. telecommunication services and even the resale of Mexican services does not contravene Mexico's legitimate monopoly over its 18 domestic lines. Telmex can charge whatever it likes for incoming and outgoing calls on its lines. The resale of the Mexican leg either directly by MCI or indirectly by ATI is only profitable if Telmex allows it to be. If Telmex sets a monopoly price for its initial service, Telmex recoups all potential monopoly revenues from that fee. Telmex may wish to use its monopoly as leverage in order to gain higher revenues from the U.S. leg of calls, but attempts to tie domestic monopoly power into the international market is not within the scope of the domestic monopoly. As such, it is not a Mexican interest which tips the scale in Mexico's favor.

Texas, on the other hand, would have a fundamental policy contravened by the choice of Mexican law (assuming Mexican law is different on the question of contract validity), namely the ability of Texas companies to make valid export contracts in Texas for the sale of U.S. services.

The remaining contracts and prospective contracts are more obviously governed by Texas law. ATI's contracts with MCI were negotiated and entered into in Texas, between Texas businesses. ATI's potential contracts with AT&T presumably would have been similar. In this case, 19 Mexico's only connection with these contracts is the fact that the contracts involve the use of Mexican lines for a portion of the calls. Given the fact that the parties are in the U.S., the contracts were made in the U.S., and that there is no claim that these contracts were illegal under Mexican law, there seems to be no reason to choose Mexican law to determine the validity of these contracts, despite the fact that part of their subject matter existed in Mexico.

We hold, then that Texas law determines the validity of the contracts and prospective contracts at issue in this case. [\[*707\]](#) However, this is still not the end of the analysis.

(c) Foreign Law Which Invalidates Contract Under Texas Law

HN9[] Under Texas contract law, it is "well settled" that "[a] contract made 'with a view of violating the laws of another country, though not otherwise obnoxious to the laws either of the forum or of the place where the contract is made,' is illegal and 'will not be enforced.'" See Ralston Purina Co. v. McKendrick, 850 S.W.2d 629, 639 (Tex. App. - San Antonio 1993, writ denied) (quoting San Benito Bank & Trust Co. v. Rio Grande Music Co., 686 S.W.2d 635, 638 [*20] (Tex. App. -- Corpus Christi 1984, writ ref'd n.r.e.)).

This rule has not been analyzed by the Texas appellate courts which have relied on it, and the Texas Supreme Court has not adopted this rule expressly.² HN10[] "To determine state substantive law, we look to final decisions of the state's highest court." Shanks v. AlliedSignal, Inc., 169 F.3d 988, 993 (5th Cir. 1999) (citing Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. v. Transportation Ins. Co., 953 F.2d 985, 988 (5th Cir. 1992))). "When there is no ruling by the state's highest court, it is the duty of the federal court to determine as best it can, what the highest court of the state would decide." See id. (quoting Transcontinental, 953 F.2d at 988). Thus, we must make a guess as to how the Texas Supreme Court would interpret this rule. Because the Texas Supreme Court has chosen to follow modern choice of analysis, we proceed with that background assumption. As such, there are two aspects to this rule that must be discussed before it can be applied.

[21] The first aspect is the rule's tacit assumption that foreign law is relevant to the contract in question. For example, there is no reason to suspect Texas courts would deem void a contract between Texans for the sale of cheese in Texas, even if Mexican law purported to make all sales of cheese illegal, even those occurring in Texas. Mexican law would be inapplicable to the contract in question because Mexico has no legitimate interest in the contract. The second aspect to consider is the meaning of "with a view." First, we discuss the rule's assumption that foreign law is relevant.

Historically, the assumption that the laws of a foreign country were relevant or applicable to a contract was justified if the contract was to be performed in the other country because place of performance or place of contract decided the choice of law question. See 6 Williston on Contracts § 1749 (1938). Moreover, "good morals and the obligations of international comity demand denial of judicial sanction to the intentional breach of . . . the general laws of a friendly state." Id. HN11[] Under modern choice of law analysis, however, place of performance or place of contract formation is not always determinative. [22] Furthermore, principles of comity only extend so far. See Republic of Philippines v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 43 F.3d 65, 75 (3d Cir. 1994) (noting that HN12[] comity "must yield to domestic policy" and "cannot compel a domestic court to uphold foreign interests at the expense of the public policies of the forum state").

As stated, modern choice of law analysis in Texas applies the law of the forum with the "most significant relationship" to the contract in question. Duncan v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 665 S.W.2d 414, 420-21 (Tex. 1984). Thus, a contract legal in the U.S. may be illegal in Mexico, yet under choice of law analysis, Mexican law might not be chosen to apply. If Mexican law does not apply to determine validity, then to say the contract is illegal in Texas because it violates Mexican law reverts too quickly back to a discarded conclusion, a conclusion [708] rooted in the traditional assumption that Mexican law always has an interest in the contract if some aspect of the contract is illegal under Mexican law.

There are at least two reasons to defer to foreign law, however, even if that law would not be chosen to govern the contract. First, a contract legal [*23] in the U.S. and illegal in Mexico may places parties in a dilemma. They can either perform the contract and face Mexican liability (Mexico, after all, may have personal jurisdiction over the parties). On the other hand, the parties can breach the contract, but then face U.S. liability for contract damages. This dilemma, however, is not implicated in tortious interference claims, because by definition, the defendant is not a party to the original contract and thus need not choose between breaking foreign law or facing U.S. liability. A dilemma only exists to the third party if foreign law gives the third party a duty or right to interfere. No duty is alleged in this case with respect to MCI and SBC and the right to interfere (privilege) is addressed below.

² "Writ refused, n.r.e." is not the same as "writ refused," in the writ history of Texas appellate cases. Only an unqualified "writ refused" must be treated as on equal footing with other Texas Supreme Court precedent. See Texas Jurisprudence, 3d § 145.

A second, but more important, reason to defer to foreign law even if it does not apply to the contract is the mentioned principle of comity, which suggests that the U.S. should respect Mexican law on a kind of "golden rule" basis. The leading Texas case demonstrates this situation although without this explicit reasoning. See Ralston Purina Co. v. McKendrick, 850 S.W.2d 629 (Tex.App.-San Antonio, 1993). In Purina, 24 a contract to export goods into Mexico was found illegal in Texas because the parties were smugglers who did not have the necessary Mexican licenses. Id. at 639. Even if Texas law applied to that contract under a most significant relationship test, the principle of comity would be a strong basis to hold the Texas contract illegal under Texas law, and thus not a basis for a tortious interference claim. If there is no dilemma and there is no basis for comity, however, the old rule makes no sense under modern choice of law analysis which already takes into account the interests of the various fora. To allow foreign law to jump back in and change the conclusion circumvents the principles behind the original choice of law.

The second aspect of the rule that must be analyzed is what "with a view" means. The language implies the existence of an intention on the part of at least one of the parties to violate foreign law. It is unclear whether the rule requires both parties to have illegal intentions, as it has been remarked that one party's mere knowledge of the other's illegal intentions is insufficient to void a contract. See International Aircraft Sales, Inc. v. Betancourt, 582 S.W.2d 632, 635 25 (Tex.Civ.App.-Corpus Christi May 31, 1979, writ refused n.r.e.). If intention did not matter, the rule could merely state that contracts which violate foreign law are illegal. The policy behind this part of the rule appears to be that it is against the public policy of the domestic forum to encourage willful attempts to break foreign law. Given these considerations, however, it makes no sense to apply the rule if there is no intention of either party to violate foreign law. More importantly, however, if foreign law is sufficiently unclear as to the legality of certain actions, then it is unreasonable to say the parties entered the contract with a view to violate anything.

Because the Texas Supreme Court has not addressed these issues, we consider how the court might decide the first issue, and we decide that when a contract governed by Texas law violates the laws of a foreign country, that violation does not void the contract for purposes of tortious interference claims if the foreign policies at issue do not demand comity. In this case, if Mexican law banned the import of U.S. switching services or the incidental resale of Mexican capacity by a non-provider, it would be a policy 26 designed to increase the monopoly power of a domestic company outside the territorial boundaries of that country. Such policies do not demand comity. It would not be the case of a country banning an import which is arguably *709 injurious to the health or morals of its citizens, such as toxic waste or pornography. Instead, if ATI's activities were illegal in Mexico, then it would be an example of a country banning the import of a competitive service for which no legitimate monopoly exists. While it is fine for a country to take a protectionist position, the legality of U.S. contracts need not turn on it.

Because there is no "dilemma" alleged in the current case with respect to third parties being forced to choose between U.S. contract damages and Mexican liability, we do not decide the effect of such a dilemma on the rule.

Thus, even if Mexican law prohibited the resale of already resold telecommunications services or prohibited the importing of U.S. telecommunications services, these facts do not serve as a defense to a claim of tortious interference with such contracts in situations when the alleged tortfeasor is not forced to choose between violating foreign law or suffering U.S. liability, 27 when Texas law otherwise governs the underlying contracts and torts.³

An alternative basis to decide this issue, of course, would be that contracts entered "with a view" to violate foreign law are not void for the purposes of tortious interference claim if neither party to the contract had illegal intentions. An illegal intention is not shown in this case, at least for the purposes of summary judgment. As shown below, Mexican law at the time was sufficiently unclear and capable of multiple interpretations as to what was or was not legal. Such difficulty in interpreting foreign law makes it unreasonable [28] to conclude any contract was entered with a view to violate foreign law. The fact that ATI attempted to get a permit "just in case," does not prevent them from successfully arguing that their service was legal and they believed it was legal. While the content of foreign law is a legal question, the question of ATI's intention is not, and there is sufficient evidence to permit a jury to conclude ATI was acting with the view that their services were legal; as such, summary judgment against ATI on the tortious interference claims would be improper unless ATI's activities were illegal under U.S. law or subject to another defense, as discussed below.

³ For the purposes of this analysis, it is assumed that the SCT's refusal of a permit to ATI suffices to show exclusion from the Mexican market. This assumption is made without deciding that such a refusal shows a permit was legally required, but only that one was not readily available. Had one been easily available and a mere "formality," then it would not make sense to characterize Mexican law as protectionist.

2. Validity Under U.S. Law

It remains to determine whether ATI's contracts and services were illegal with respect to U.S. law. The defendants assert that ATI's activities were contrary to HN13 [↑] 47 U.S.C. § 214, which requires authorization before a carrier "shall undertake the construction of a new line or of an extension of any line, or shall acquire or operate any line, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transmission over or by means of such additional or extended line." ATI, however, merely provided a service that [29] connected different lines and did not itself construct any new lines. HN14 [↑] Section 214 applies only to the construction of facilities and does not prevent carriers from offering new services. See MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. FCC, 182 U.S. App. D.C. 367, 561 F.2d 365 \(D.C. Cir. 1977\).

Furthermore, even with respect to call-back, a practice truly hostile to a legitimate domestic monopoly, the FCC decided in 1995 that even call-back did not violate U.S. or international telecommunications law and only prohibited the service on comity grounds where "expressly prohibited" in the foreign country. In re VIA USA, Ltd., 10 FCC Rcd 9540 PP 50-51 \(1995\). Thus, during 1993 and 1994, there was no basis to deem call-back, let alone reorigination, illegal under U.S. law.

[*710] 3. Other Tortious Interference Defenses

The defendants also support the entry of summary judgment in their favor on a number of alternative legal grounds, including federal preemption, the terms of MCI's tariff, Texas tortious interference doctrine, and privilege.

(a) Privilege

First, the defendants assert that they are protected by the common law defense of privilege. The Texas Supreme Court [30] has explained this defense thus:

HN15 [↑] Under the defense of legal justification or excuse, one is privileged to interfere with another's contractual relations (1) if it is done in a bona fide exercise of his own rights, or (2) if he has an equal or superior right in the subject matter to that of the other party. One may be privileged to assert a claim even though that claim may be doubtful, so long as it asserted a colorable legal right. However, the defense of legal justification or excuse only protects good faith assertions of legal rights.

Victoria Bank & Trust v. Brady, 811 S.W.2d 931, 939-40 \(Tex. 1991\).

The Restatement, cited as authority in Victoria Bank, explains that HN16 [↑] the defense "protects the actor only when (1) he has a legally protected interest, and (2) in good faith asserts or threatens to protect it, and (3) the threat is to protect it by appropriate means." Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 773.

MCI did have a legal right to halt MCI's service with ATI if Telmex threatened to cut off MCI's service. That right was based on the MCI's contract with ATI. But ATI's tortious interference claim is not based on MCI halting ATI's service; it is based [31] on MCI giving away ATI's confidential information. As such, ATI's claims concern actions which cannot be traced to legal rights stemming from a contract or domestic or foreign law. If MCI "disclosed the business or application(s) of [its] customers," it was in violation of U.S. law, according to MCI's correspondence with Telmex.⁴ MCI maintains that it was trying to protect its interest in its contract with Telmex, and to ensure that AT&T was not receiving illegal preferential treatment from Telmex. The problem with MCI's argument is that the tortious interference was allegedly accomplished through improper release of confidential information. HN17[] Release of nonconfidential information may be a basis for privilege. See Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 773 illus. 1. The release of confidential information, however, is not an "appropriate means" to protect other interests.

[32] If Telmex cut off ATI's service as alleged, it might have been against Mexican law, but whether or not it was, Telmex's privilege is not before us, except insofar as SBC attempts to claim it by virtue of SBC's part ownership of Telmex. SBC maintains that it was protecting the interests of its affiliated company Telmex. However, SBC is only a 10% owner of Telmex and there is evidence which a factfinder could find that SBC's actions in helping Telmex and MCI shut down ATI were as much for SBC's benefit as its own entity rather than as an agent of Telmex, given that SBC intended to independently enter ATI's market. Because there is not a completely obvious "unity of interest" between SBC and Telmex, summary judgment on SBC's privilege defense is inappropriate. Thus, there is no basis on which to rest a defense of privilege for SBC and MCI at the summary judgment stage.

(b) Preemption

MCI argues that its filed tariff preempts ATI's Texas tort claims because of the federal "filed-rate doctrine." Many cases speak about federal preemption of state [*711] claims when there are filed tariffs. See, e.g., Marcus v. AT & T Corp., 938 F. Supp. 1158 (S.D.N.Y. Aug 21, 1996), [33] aff'd, 138 F.3d 46 \(2d Cir. 1998\) (holding the following claims preempted: deceptive acts and practices, false advertising, fraud and deceit, negligent misrepresentation, breach of warranty, and unjust enrichment by failing to disclose that customers were billed per minute rounded up to the next higher full minute for long distance services). The leading and controlling case in this area for our purposes is AT&T v. Central Office Telephone, Inc., 524 U.S. 214, 118 S. Ct. 1956, 141 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1998), in which the Supreme Court expounded on the filed-rate doctrine.

Central Telephone, a bulk reseller of long distance services purchased from AT&T, sued AT&T, alleging breach-of-contract and tortious interference claims. HN18[] Under the filed-rate doctrine, federal law preempts claims concerning the price at which service is to be offered, and the Supreme Court ruled that it also preempts claims concerning the services that are offered. See 118 S. Ct. at 1962-64. The Court thus found the breach-of-contract claims preempted. The Court also found the tortious interference claim preempted, but only because that claim was "wholly derivative of the contract claim [34] for additional and better services." Id. at 1964. The tortious interference claim alleged that AT&T's refusal to provide certain types of service led to interference of Central Telephone's contracts with its customers. See id. at 1964-65. It was thus not protected by the saving clause of the Communications Act. See id. at 1965 ("A claim for services that constitute unlawful preferences or that directly conflict with the tariff--the basis for both the tort and contract claims here--cannot be 'saved' under § 414.").

ATI's tortious interference claims are different. It does not allege that MCI stopped providing service, resulting in ATI being unable to meet customer demand. Rather, ATI alleges that MCI released confidential information, first to Telmex and then to AT&T. This information ultimately led those parties to deny service to ATI. This claim is not derivative of a contract claim. It does not concern the provision of services which are covered by the filed tariff, but rather it concerns illegal actions outside the scope of the tariff and not derivative of any phone services. Therefore, the filed rate doctrine does not preempt ATI's tortious interference claims.

(c) [35] Filed Tariff

MCI argues that its filed tariff precludes liability because there is a contractual provision stating that MCI may halt service if a situation arose involving threats from the third party partner. This only goes to whether MCI breached its contract with ATI, not whether MCI breached duties imposed outside of the contract, as alleged by ATI, and thus this argument fails as a defense to tortious interference. HN19[] The right to halt one contract does not grant the right to interfere with another by any conceivable means. MCI may well have been entitled to cut off service to ATI once Telmex threatened it with cutting off international 800 service. But the provision did not authorize MCI to respond to such threats by helping Telmex cut off ATI, or by preventing ATI from having a contractual relationship with AT&T.

⁴ Neither side cites the regulation that such disclosure violates; however, no party disputes that such disclosure is illegal without permission.

(d) Breach of Contract

MCI argues that ATI's tortious interference claims are nothing more than claims that MCI breached its contract with ATI, and as such are precluded from serving as the basis of tortious interference claims. HN20⁵ Under Texas law, "the general law is that where a defendant's conduct breaches an agreement between the parties and does not breach an 36 affirmative duty imposed outside the contract, the plaintiff ordinarily may not recover on a tort claim if the damages are economic losses to the subject matter of the contract." [\[*712\] National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Care Flight Air Ambulance Serv., Inc., 18 F.3d 323, 327 \(5th Cir. 1994\)](#). However, this does not mean tort damages cannot be measured by economic losses from the contract. See American National Petroleum Co. v. Transcontinental Gas Pipeline Corp., 798 S.W.2d 274 \(Tex. 1990\) (allowing recovery for exemplary damages for tortious interference claim when damages from the tort were the same as economic damages from breach of contract). Furthermore, it is obvious that ATI's claims are not breach of contract claims, but rather are allegations that MCI breached duties imposed affirmatively outside the context of the ATI-MCI contracts. Thus, this defense fails as well.

(e) No Issue of Material Fact

Finally, MCI argues that there is no evidence that MCI actually gave ATI's numbers to Telmex. There is at least a material issue as to this fact, however, and summary judgment is inappropriate. The fact that MCI and MCI's employees say they did not give 37 away the numbers flies square in the face of the memoranda and communications discovered by ATI which suggest that MCI planned to and did do just that.

C. Federal and State Antitrust Claims

1. Prima Facie Showing

The district court dismissed ATI's federal and state antitrust claims because the court failed to find a relevant U.S. market. HN21⁵ In order to support an antitrust claim, there must be actions which have a reasonably foreseeable effect in a defined U.S. market. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a; Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 796, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 \(1993\) (allowing Sherman act recovery for foreign conduct that produces "some substantial effect in the United States").

ATI asserts that there was a direct and substantial effect on trade or commerce, and second that it was engaged in export trade. The substantial effect that ATI identifies is that its own business, as well as that of other companies, failed, "resulting in an inability to sell its U.S. telephone switching services to all Mexican customers." The alleged actions by Telmex and the other defendants were aimed at shutting down this market. It is 38 clear that the U.S. export market for reorigination services was a definite and sizable export market, and the failure of these 80 businesses is clearly an effect on export trade from the United States. The market is significant, with ATI's annual revenues alone reaching $ 3 million/year at the time the events occurred. HN22⁵ Under 15 U.S.C. § 6a, the antitrust laws do "not apply to conduct involving trade or commerce (other than import trade or import commerce) with foreign nations unless . . . such conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect . . . on trade or commerce which is not trade or commerce with foreign nations, or on import trade or . . . export trade . . . with foreign nations." By showing a significant effect on a U.S. export market, ATI meets the export trade exception.

⁵ This is not to say that the factfinder could not ultimately conclude that the relevant market for antitrust liability is the Mexican long-distance market. Our characterization of Telmex's business and our determination that the actions of Telmex and the other defendants had a "direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect" on the U.S. export market for switching services does

[39] For the purposes of the antitrust inquiry, however, it matters whether the importation of these U.S. services was legal under Mexican law. If the importation of these services was illegal, there is no legal export market to Mexico. If there is no legal U.S. export market to Mexico and the only U.S. export market [*713] affected is the Mexican market, then there is no antitrust injury. Cf. Matsushita Elec. Ind. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\) ("American HN23[↑]] antitrust laws do not regulate the competitive conditions of other nations' economies."). In other words, foreign countries may make laws or create monopolies that effectively and completely exclude U.S. import competition. That does not then mean that U.S. companies can enter the market anyway and make antitrust claims when things do not work out. Even in the U.S., the existence of a legitimate government granted monopoly precludes claims of antitrust violation when a plaintiff wants to compete in the regulated market. See Almeda Mall, Inc. v. Houston Lighting & Power Co., 615 F.2d 343 \(5th Cir. 1980\).

This is not inconsistent with our holding that contracts [40] for reorigination services may still serve as the basis for tortious interference claims. For the purposes of antitrust law, the threshold choice of law determination always validates a foreign government's right to determine whether outsiders can compete. As we have held, however, this choice of law is not mandated by the law of tortious interference. Admittedly, this is a "conflict" within U.S. law, but not one we need to resolve.

ATI challenges the district court's award of summary judgment against it on its antitrust claims against SBC and MCI. Because we find that ATI's services were legal under the law of Mexico at the relevant time, anticompetitive means of stopping such service may violate U.S. antitrust laws.

2. Legality of ATI's Operations Under Mexican Law

HN24[↑]] The content of foreign law is a question of law and is subject to de novo review. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 44.1; HN25[↑]] Perez & Compania v. M/V Mexico I, 826 F.2d 1449 (5th Cir. 1997). "The court, in determining foreign law, may consider any relevant material or source, including testimony, whether or not submitted by a party or admissible under Rule 43." Fed. R. Civ. P. 44.1. Under this rule, expert testimony [41] accompanied by extracts from foreign legal material is the basic method by which foreign law is determined. Republic of Turkey v. OKS Partners, 146 F.R.D. 24, 27 \(D. Mass. 1993\). It is not, however, "an invariable necessity in establishing foreign law, and indeed, federal judges may reject even the uncontradicted conclusions of an expert witness and reach their own decisions on the basis of independent examination of foreign legal authorities." Curtis v. Beatrice Foods Co., 481 F. Supp. 1275, 1285 \(S.D.N.Y.\), aff'd mem., HN26[↑]] 633 F.2d 203 (2d Cir. 1980). Likewise, differences of opinion among experts on the content, applicability, or interpretation of foreign law do not create a genuine issue as to any material fact under Rule 56. Banco de Credito Indus., S.A. v. Tesoreria General, 990 F.2d 827, 838 (5th Cir. 1993). In general, summary judgment is appropriate to determine the content of foreign law. See 9 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure Civ.2d § 2444.

At issue is the legality of ATI's business under Mexico law. Under Mexican law at the time in question, a government concession or permit was required [42] in order to provide telecommunications services in Mexico. It is undisputed that ATI had no permit or concession from the Mexican government. What is disputed is whether ATI's business was within the scope of this law. ATI makes the argument that at the time in question, the relevant regulatory provisions envisioned the concession requirement to only apply to entities who were providers of telecommunications services in that they owned, installed, operated, and exploited telecommunications infrastructure in Mexico, with emphasis on the "and." The defendants argue that a permit is required to install, operate, "or" exploit telecommunications infrastructure in Mexico, with emphasis on the "or," and because ATI exploited the infrastructure, they needed a permit. The defendants [*714] also argue that all "resellers" needed permits.

ATI rests primarily on the deposition of Miguel Orrico Alarcon, who was head of SCT legal counsel for 33 years. Orrico, who is said to have drafted, applied, interpreted and enforced the provisions at issue, explained that Mexico's statutory definitions of a "provider" of telecommunications service is limited to those that install, operate, and exploit the network. [43] Because ATI did not install a network, and because special significance is attached to the conjunctive language of the statute, ATI was not a provider and therefore was not regulated under these provisions. Mexican law changed subsequent to the time at issue in this case, and now resellers explicitly are required to obtain permits.

The defendants focus on Moncayo's letter and on the Secretary of Communications and Transportation's Official Circular Letter 119-1900. Moncayo's letter is of little value, because it directly discusses only "call-back" services, which ATI's was not. The Official Circular, however, condemns such services in addition to "other similar or equivalent procedures with the same purpose." The Circular concludes that such services are "rendered outside the legal provisions established by the Federal Law on Telecommunications, in view of the exclusive nature of the right granted to Telefonos de Mexico until August 1996 for rendering basic national and international long distance service."

The defendants maintain that the Official Circular is entitled to deference by this court as an agency's interpretation of the laws which it administers and enforces, citing [44] Chevron U.S.A., Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694, 104 S. Ct. 2778 \(1984\). ATI counters that the official circulars in fact have no legal effect, and that in Mexico, only federal courts have the power to issue resolutions determining the legality or illegality of acts. Moreover, ATI emphasizes, only the General Bureau of Judicial Matters has the sole power to "establish and systematize" the legal criteria concerning the application of legal and regulatory provisions, not Mr. Moncayo's office.

HN27 Recognizing the difficulty of interpreting foreign law, courts may defer to foreign government interpretations. The Seventh Circuit reached this conclusion in deferring to an administrative agency in France, a civil law country. See In re Oil Spill by the Amoco Cadiz, 954 F.2d 1279, 1312 \(7th Cir. 1992\) ("A court of the United States owes deference to the construction France places upon its domestic law Giving the conclusions of a sovereign nation less respect than those of [a U.S.] administrative agency is unacceptable.").)

In Amoco Cadiz, the court was faced with conflicting interpretations of French law. [45] The court noted that had the litigants been private parties, it would have had to resolve the conflicts. See id. at 1312. Because the Republic of France was before the court, however, the Seventh Circuit accepted its interpretation of the law. See id. The Republic of Mexico is not a litigant before this court and neither is the SCT. And while the evidence shows that the SCT was empowered to enforce Mexican law, it does not persuasively show that the SCT was empowered to interpret Mexican law. The fact that U.S. courts routinely give deference to U.S. agencies empowered to interpret U.S. law and U.S. courts may give deference to foreign governments before the court does not entail that U.S. courts must give deference to all agency determinations made by all foreign agencies not before the court. More importantly, the most relevant official circular at issue is dated 1996, after the new laws went into effect; thus, it is unclear whether the SCT position was that such activities were currently illegal or had always been illegal. For these reasons, we do not feel compelled to credit the SCT's determinations without analysis.

The defendants also argue that the relevant [46] regulations required a permit to be a [*715] reseller. The statute in question, however is not without question. Our English translation of Article 75 of the Telecommunications Rulings of Mexico reads as follows:

HN28 The exploitation of the telecommunications network given in concession must be carried out directly by its holder and its commercialization may be made through agents in accordance with the provisions approved by the Ministry.

HN29 We read this to mean that the direct operation of the network must be accomplished by the actual provider, and that the provider may designate others to commercialize the network. It does not say commercialization "must" be made through those channels, however. Furthermore, this court has not been apprised of the content of any "Ministry provisions," and the defendants have not identified any regulation in place at the time which defines or regulates "resale" or explicitly requires a permit for anything except provision, which we have already decided ATI was not doing. Instead, we find convincing the argument that before the new laws took effect, only the direct provision of telecommunications services required a concession from the Mexican government, [47] for several reasons.

First, because ATI's method was novel, it is unrealistic to read the older Mexican law as covering the service. The new laws explicitly regulate resale and pointedly are not retroactive; this is at least some evidence supporting the notion that permits were not previously envisioned.

Second, Mexico's concession to Telmex specifically authorized Telmex to resell any excess capacity, even before 1996, although it did not require it to do so. Thus, what appears to be the case is that Telmex resold capacity to MCI not realizing the boon it would be for others to use that capacity with additional U.S. services attached.

Third, a conclusion that any Mexican resale is covered by the older, vague provisions would entail that every U.S. or Mexican business with a toll free number would have been required to have a permit because they "resell" Mexican phone service as much as ATI did whenever they charge the cost of call-back to the caller through their service fees. The fact that laws could try to distinguish between resellers "primarily" engaged in resale versus those "incidentally" engaged in resale does not change the fact that the relevant laws are not so explicit.

[48] Fourth, to say that any Mexican resale required a permit would have invalidated MCI's contracts with Telmex insofar as neither MCI nor Telmex has indicated that MCI had a permit. While it is not necessary for either defendant to show its own conformity with Mexican law, it adds skepticism to their argument that a permit was required or even envisioned and lends credibility to the view that what happened in this case is that Telmex made a bad bargain with MCI and wanted to get out of it. Telmex's contract with MCI might have purported to restrict MCI's subsequent use of the lines, but ostensibly did not. Our view is further supported by the fact that the SCT did nothing to instigate enforcement proceedings against any business during the relevant time period. The evidence indicates that by law the SCT was required to institute such enforcement if there was evidence of illegality. Instead, the precatory language of even the 1993 SCT letters, stating that the SCT would be "grateful" if MCI suspended the service of its customers, suggests that even to the SCT the services in question were not clearly illegal.

Fifth, because Telmex has no legitimate interest in tying a monopoly over domestic [49] lines to the use of lines outside of Mexico, we will not construe Mexican law as requiring a permit for the importing of U.S. switching service unless explicitly authorized. No one contends that the relevant laws are this explicit, however. Furthermore, this interpretation conforms with [*716] the FCC's extension of comity to foreign law when foreign law is unambiguous.

For all of these reasons, we find ATI's activity in Mexico to be legal during the time in question. Thus it was improper to dismiss ATI's state and federal antitrust claims against SBC and MCI. It is argued that this application of the export exception circumvents the principle that antitrust laws do not extend to other nations' competitive rules. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio, 475 U.S. 574, 582, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). This would only be true if the legality of the export-import business were not taken into consideration, which it has been. The fact that we find ATI's business to be legal in Mexico is not irreconcilable with Mexican policy designed to protect Telmex from domestic competition, since such a policy is not furthered by banning the import of U.S. reorigination [50] services. Furthermore, Mexican law could have explicitly protected Telmex from even international competition by making it illegal to import U.S. services, which would have been a basis to defeat these antitrust claims.

D. Personal Jurisdiction over Telmex

HN30  A federal district court has personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant to the same extent as a state court in the state in which the district court is located. See, e.g., Bullion v. Gillespie, 895 F.2d 213, 215 (5th Cir. 1990). The Texas long-arm statute extends to the limits of the Due Process Clause of the Constitution. See Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann. § 17.042. The exercise of personal jurisdiction thus can be maintained if the nonresident defendant has purposefully availed itself of the benefits and protections of the forum state by establishing "minimum contacts" with the forum state, see, e.g., International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 90 L. Ed. 95, 66 S. Ct. 154 (1945), and if the exercise of jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant does not offend "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Court, 480 U.S. 102, 113, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92, 107 S. Ct. 1026 (1987). [51]

Telmex claims both that it did not have sufficient contacts with the forum state, and that the exercise of jurisdiction over it would be improper because the procedural and substantive policies of Mexico would be affected. Asahi noted that "great care and reserve should be exercised when extending our notions of personal jurisdiction into the international field." Id. at 115 (internal quotation marks omitted). Asahi, however, was concerned with "the unique burdens placed upon one who must defend oneself in a foreign legal system." Id. at 114. For Telmex, a company that indisputably has engaged in numerous business dealings in the United States, these concerns are de minimis, and even if Mexican policy is relevant on the merits, it is not relevant to the initial determination of personal jurisdiction. If Telmex has broken U.S. law, then requiring Telmex to answer for that would be "fair play."

Thus, there was no personal jurisdiction over Telmex only if Telmex did not have sufficient contacts with Texas and the United States. HN31[] Minimum contacts can be established either through contacts giving rise to general jurisdiction, or those giving rise [52] to specific jurisdiction. We shall consider these as well as ATI's alternative claim that jurisdiction is authorized under a special provision of the Clayton Act.

1. General Jurisdiction

The lower court dismissed the claims against Telmex on personal jurisdiction without an evidentiary hearing. In such instances, the plaintiff satisfies his burden by presenting a prima facie showing of jurisdiction. See HN32[] Felch v. Transportes Lar-Mex, S.A. de C.V., 92 F.3d 320, 326 (5th Cir. 1996). Conflicting evidence must be resolved in favor of the plaintiff. See id. (quoting HN33[] Bullion v. Gillespie, 895 F.2d 213, 217 (5th Cir. 1990)).

[*717] General jurisdiction can be assessed by evaluating contacts of the defendant with the forum over a reasonable number of years, up to the date the suit was filed. See Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Robertson CECO Corp., 84 F.3d 560, 569 (2d Cir. 1996). Telmex's contacts with Texas over the time period from 1990 to 1996 were numerous; the major ones are highlighted here. Up until 1990, Telmex leased telephone circuits between Arizona and Texas. Telmex's current lines interconnect with Texas at the border in McAllen [53] and El Paso. Telmex leased real property in Texas in 1995 and paid taxes to Texas that same year. Telmex contracted to warehouse 75,000 telephone poles in Laredo around 1990-1991. Telmex had correspondent agreements with a number of US carriers. Settlement revenues from these agreements totaled approximately $ 1 billion a year in 1994-1995. The total revenues derived from Texas residents totaled millions of dollars a month. Telmex also solicited ads for yellow page ads in border cities of U.S., although it is unclear exactly where. Additionally, SBC is alleged to be a Texas contact of Telmex, since SBC owns a portion of a controlling interest in Telmex and thus exerts some control over Telmex.⁶

[54] The district court examined each Telmex contact and in isolation from the others, rather than examining the contacts "in toto" as required. See Holt Oil & Gas Corp. v. Harvey, 801 F.2d 773, 779 (5th Cir. 1986). In other words, HN34[] even if a number of different contacts are independent of one another, if they occur with such frequency that the contacts in general are "continuous and systematic," there is general jurisdiction.

The question, then, is whether Telmex's contacts with Texas demonstrate a business presence in Texas sufficient to confer general jurisdiction. HN35[] The mere renting or ownership of property in a forum is not enough when that property is not used to conduct business in the forum. Cf. Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 53 L. Ed. 2d 683, 97 S. Ct. 2569 (1977). And while Telmex's other contacts may be continuous and systematic contacts which constitute doing business with Texas, Telmex has virtually no contacts which constitute doing business in Texas. Primarily, Telmex interconnects its Mexican lines with American lines, enabling long distance communication. The money U.S. companies pay Telmex is for service on the Mexican leg of [55] the call; the money the U.S. carriers receive is for the U.S. leg of a call. As such, Mexican and U.S. telecommunications companies do business with each other in these situations, but neither is doing business in the other country for jurisdictional purposes.

⁶A number of other contacts are also put forward, mostly involving Telmex paying for services that were provided by corporations in Texas or the U.S. Such services included consulting and finance services. To the degree these contacts involve Texas, they add little to the issue; to the degree they are with other states, they are irrelevant at this juncture. Other contacts, such as Telmex being listed on the NYSE, or designating a NY agent for service of process are also not very informative.

The lines Telmex leased from Texas to Arizona also were for the purpose of connecting two points in Mexico and do not constitute doing business in Texas. The fact that SBC owns a portion of a controlling interest in Telmex also adds little to the mix. SBC's 10% interest is not a controlling interest, and typically, the corporate independence of companies defeats the assertion of jurisdiction over one by using contacts with the other. See Hargrave v. Fibreboard Corp., 710 F.2d 1154, 1159 (5th Cir. 1983) ("Generally, our cases demand proof of control by the parent over the internal business operations and affairs of the subsidiary in order to fuse the two for jurisdictional purposes.").

The one contact that could constitute doing business in Texas would be the yellow page ads. However, the evidence on the yellow page ads consists of nothing more than a comment that Telmex solicited [*718] yellow page ads in [56] border cities in the U.S. without naming which cities, when this occurred, whether such ads actually were actually placed, or for how long. Without more, such evidence does not help establish continuous and systematic contacts.

It is alleged that MCI sells regular phone service, international 800 service, and private line service for Telmex in Texas. This would imply a principal/agent relationship from which jurisdiction might arise. There is no evidence, however, that the provision of service by MCI was on behalf of Telmex but instead it appears to be in the nature of the resale of capacity in Mexico by MCI and the independent provision of capacity in the U.S. by MCI, as explained above with respect to the general interconnection agreements.

The strongest argument for general jurisdiction is that Telmex had arrangements with American carriers to accept telephone signals from Texas, and in order to serve this purpose, Telmex's telecommunications lines crossed into Texas, terminating across the border. The termination of Telmex's telephone lines in Texas allows for continuous and systematic transfer of calls. However, despite the apparent force of the argument that such a contact [57] demonstrates a presence in Texas for business purposes, we are bound by Applewhite v. Metro Aviation, Inc., 875 F.2d 491 (5th Cir. 1989), in which such interconnections, even though crossing the border into a forum, were held insufficient to confer general jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause.

In sum, the totality of the contacts suggests that Telmex conducted a great deal of business with Texas, but virtually none in Texas, as such general jurisdiction cannot be shown, even on a prima facie basis.

2. Clayton Act Jurisdiction

Because we find that ATI has shown potential U.S. antitrust injury, jurisdiction over Telmex may be obtainable based on nationwide contacts rather than just Texas contacts under the jurisdictional provision of the Clayton Act, HN36 [↑] 15 U.S.C. § 22. This provision allows for jurisdiction over any federal antitrust suit in any district in which a defendant transacts business, and provides that "all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found." When jurisdiction is invoked under the Clayton Act, the court examines the defendant's contacts with the United States [58] as a whole to determine whether the requirements of due process have been met. See Go Video, Inc. v. Akai Electric Co., Ltd., 885 F.2d 1406 (9th Cir. 1989).

However, while there may be some additional evidence of Telmex doing business with the U.S., there is no evidence qualitatively difference on the subject of doing business in the U.S. for what we deem to be a relevant time period from 1990 to 1996. Thus, Clayton Act personal jurisdiction over the antitrust claims is also unavailable.

3. Specific Jurisdiction

ATI maintains that specific jurisdiction over Telmex arises because Telmex "purposefully directed its activities to residents of Texas (ATI and over 80 other resellers)." As ATI recognizes, HN37 [↑] specific jurisdiction over a nonresident exists when the defendant "purposefully avails" itself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, and the plaintiff's cause of action arises out of or relates to that act. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528, 105 S. Ct. 2174 (1985). By working through SBC and MCI to obtain the numbers of resellers, ATI maintains, Telmex purposefully availed itself of the [59] forum.

While Telmex did not conduct much business in Texas, it conducted a high volume of business with Texas and Texas corporations. It was this business with which Telmex was concerned when Telmex allegedly canceled ATI's numbers. [*719] Such actions, if done without a legal right, may amount to violation of U.S. law. The issue of whether they were legally privileged, however, is not before us, and such a defense would not defeat personal jurisdiction. Thus, if the allegations against Telmex are true, then Telmex may have violated U.S. antitrust law by harming a Texas business through the willful cancellation of a necessary portion of that business's service. Such actions would have reasonably foreseeable consequences in Texas.

It is no use to say that ATI's location in Texas was "fortuitous." ATI had to be located somewhere and Telmex knew where that was and directed its actions toward Texas by canceling phone service linked to Texas. Telmex's lines ran right up and into Texas for the express purpose of serving Texas residents with Mexican phone service, a service which it received millions of dollars a month in revenue. The allegation that Telmex shut down these lines in order to harm [60] a Texas business whose services were legal in Mexico suffices to confer personal jurisdiction over Telmex for the injuries suffered in Texas. The equivalent result would hold if an electric company sent an electric spike through its lines, damaging computers on the other end, even if that company's lines did not carry the spike all of the way to its destination.

By conducting a large volume of business with Texas through contracts carefully drafted to avoid subjecting Telmex to general personal jurisdiction in Texas, Telmex may have avoided doing business in Texas, but it made sufficient contacts with Texas and received sufficient benefits that personal jurisdiction in Texas is proper to answer for the consequences of the actions it allegedly took, directed toward Texas, to protect its business with Texas.

E. Discovery

ATI complains discovery was improperly limited. The district court stayed discovery on everything except jurisdictional issues and never lifted the stay. ATI contends that it was reversible error for the district court to grant summary judgment for SBC and MCI on all of ATI's causes of action without allowing discovery on substantive issues.

ATI points to SBC's assertion [61] of the Copperweld doctrine, which requires a factual determination as to whether a monopolistic conspiracy occurred between economic competitors. This doctrine was asserted for the first time in SBC's motion for summary judgment. ATI complains that it was unable to investigate the relationship between SBC and Telmex for the purpose of this doctrine. ATI also complains it was unable to investigate the anticompetitive effect in the United States of the defendants' conduct. In particular, ATI points to the fact that the district court ruled against ATI on the issue of relevant market, without affording ATI the opportunity to pursue the issue through discovery. HN38↑ The issue of relevant market is a fact question. See, e.g., C.G. Services, Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241 \(5th Cir. 1985\); Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480 \(5th Cir. 1984\).

ATI has waived the issue of inadequate discovery with respect to SBC. HN39↑ Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(f\), the appropriate way to raise the issue is for the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to file a motion for a continuance with an attached affidavit stating [62] why the party cannot present by affidavit facts essential to justify the party's opposition. ATI did not do this with respect to SBC.

MCI made such a motion, but the district court denied it. HN40↑ To obtain a continuance of a motion for summary judgment, a party must "specifically explain both why it is currently unable to present evidence creating a genuine issue of fact and how a continuance would enable the party to present such evidence." Liquid Drill, Inc. v. U.S. Turnkey Exploration, Inc., 48 F.3d 927, 930 \(5th Cir. 1995\). The non-moving party may not simply rely on vague assertions that additional discovery will produce needed, but unspecified, facts in opposition to summary judgment. See Daboub v. Gibbons, 42 F.3d 285, 288 \(5th Cir. 1995\). If it appears that further discovery will not provide evidence creating a genuine issue of material fact, the district court may grant summary judgment. See Resolution Trust Corp. v. Marshall, 939 F.2d 274, 278 \(5th Cir. 1991\).

ATI failed to specify its intended discovery or how such discovery would assist it in opposing summary judgment in favor of MCI. ATI failed to identify who could provide [63] information relevant to the issues other than witnesses who had already been deposed one or more times before.

HN41[] When a party is not given a full and fair opportunity to discover information essential to its opposition to summary judgment, the limitation on discovery is reversible error. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 250, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). ATI, however, has not persuasively indicated that it was deprived of any relevant information with respect to MCI. Cf. RTC v. Marshall, 939 F.2d 274, 278 (5th Cir. 1991) (requiring the nonmovant to show how additional discovery would lead to unresolved issues of fact). For these reasons, it was proper for the district court to deny additional discovery.

IV.

For the forgoing reasons, we REVERSE the district court's grant of summary judgment to MCI and SBC on the substantive issues in this case, we REVERSE the dismissal of Telmex on personal jurisdiction, and we REVERSE the denial of partial summary judgment to ATI on the issue of the lawfulness of its activities in Mexico. We REMAND this case to the district court for additional proceedings consistent with this opinion.

REVERSED [64] AND REMANDED.

End of Document

Roniger v. McCall

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

December 1, 1999, Decided ; December 3, 1999, Filed

97 Civ. 8009 (RWS)

Reporter

72 F. Supp. 2d 433 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18702 **

GEORGE P. RONIGER, Plaintiff, - against - H. CARL McCALL, individually and as Comptroller of the State of New York, and ROSEMARY SCANLON, individually and as State Deputy Comptroller for the City of New York, Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendants' motion for partial summary judgment denied.

Core Terms

conspiracy, personal interest, intraenterprise, terminated, entity, employees, intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, reelection, summary judgment, Defendants', conspire, Lawsuit, reasons, retaliate, courts, deposition, budget, fired, bias

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(b\), a party against whom a claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim is asserted may, at any time, move for a summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part thereof. Summary judgment is appropriate, however, only where the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could not return a verdict in favor of the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

72 F. Supp. 2d 433, *433LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18702, 1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN2 Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\), summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN3 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

As a general rule, all ambiguities and inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts should be resolved in favor of the party opposing the motion for summary judgment, and all doubts as to the existence of a genuine issue for trial should be resolved against the moving party. However, where the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 permits the moving party to point to an absence of evidence to support an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4 Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

See 42 U.S.C.S. § 1985\(2\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine is drawn from § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, which prohibits contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The statutory requirement under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, of a plurality of actors is not satisfied by joint action of wholly owned subsidiaries of a single entity, unincorporated divisions of a company, or employees of a single entity acting within the scope of their employment.

Counsel: JOHN A. BERANBAUM, ESQ., Of Counsel, BERANBAUM MENKEN BEN-ASHER & FISHEL, New York, NY, for Plaintiff.

DEBO P. ADEGBILE, ESQ., ROBERT S. SMITH, ESQ., MARIA H. KEANE, ESQ., Of Counsel, PAUL, WEISS, RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON, New York, NY, for Defendants.

Judges: ROBERT W. SWEET, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: ROBERT W. SWEET

Opinion

[*434] Sweet, D.J.

Defendants H. Carl McCall ("McCall"), Comptroller of the State of New York, and Rosemary Scanlon ("Scanlon") (collectively the "Defendants") have moved, pursuant to Rule 56\(b\), Fed. R. Civ. P., for partial summary judgment dismissing the conspiracy claim brought by plaintiff George P. Roniger ("Roniger") under 42 U.S.C. § 1985\(2\). For the reasons set forth below, the motion is denied.

Facts and Prior Proceedings

The facts, parties, and prior proceedings in this case have been set forth more fully in a prior opinion of the Court, familiarity with which is assumed. See Roniger v. McCall, 22 F. Supp. 2d 156 \(S.D.N.Y. 1998\) \(Roniger I\).

On October 29, 1997, Roniger filed his original complaint in this action, asserting causes of action [*2] under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and § 1985\(2\). Roniger's First Amended Complaint (the "Complaint") was filed on May 8, 1998.

From May of 1993 until approximately December 1, 1994, Roniger was employed in the Office of the State Deputy Comptroller for the City of New York ("OSDC") -- a division of the Office of the State Comptroller ("OSC"). As was set forth in more detail in Roniger I, Roniger has alleged in this action that he was terminated from his position at the OSDC as a result of his politically embarrassing statements in deposition testimony concerning a June 29, 1993 letter (the "June 1993 letter") that Comptroller McCall sent to then-Mayor Dinkins in connection with the City's efforts to prevent a downgrading of its bond rating. In that letter, McCall made a variety of representations to Dinkins concerning the state of the City's budget. The City ultimately utilized the Comptroller's positive statements in that letter in remonstrating for the maintenance of its "A-" bond rating by Standard & Poors.

The lawsuit in which Roniger had been called to testify involved accusations by former OSDC personnel that they had been improperly fired because of McCall's [*3] alleged politicization of the OSC, and because of their pointed criticism of the City's budget in a draft OSC report. Several fired employees filed suit against McCall in federal court for wrongful termination and retaliation, claiming that they had been discharged for truthfully assessing the fiscal position of New York City at a time when McCall had political reasons to downplay the City's financial difficulties.

[*435] See Westmeyer v. McCall, No. 93 Civ. 8226 (JSM) (hereinafter the "Westmeyer Lawsuit"); see also Fry v. McCall, No. 95 Civ. 1915 (JFK). The plaintiffs in the Westmeyer Lawsuit claimed that they had been discharged for political reasons, and that McCall had sought to influence their reports in order to help Dinkins' reelection chances.

On August 12, 1994, approximately three months before McCall faced reelection for Comptroller, the plaintiffs in the Westmeyer Lawsuit deposed Roniger. Roniger was questioned at length about the June 1993 Letter, and it was during this questioning that his only criticism of McCall was voiced. As the deposition transcript reveals, Roniger expressed the view that the Comptroller's June 1993 letter was too soft on the City:

Q: [4] Do you know whether the portions of the letter that you saw conformed to the statements contained in the various reports sent out by the Comptroller's office concerning the City financial plan?

A: As I recall from a distance, it was my view that the letter took too soft a position vis-a-vis the City.

Q: In what respect?

A: I can't answer that question because I don't remember the language. It's been too long.

Q: I don't want to put words in your mouth. You are here to testify, not me. But do you mean it was not critical enough of the City's financial plan?

A: In my view, the City's position was somewhat more difficult than what I recall the letter suggested.

Shortly thereafter, on September 14, 1994, the Bond Buyer, a newspaper serving the New York financial community, published an article headlined, "State Comptroller Downplayed Plight of N.Y.C. Budget Woes, Top Aide Says." The Bond Buyer story stated, in relevant part:

George Roniger ... recently said he had misgivings about the letter's content, and specifically, its description of the city's fiscal situation Several fiscal analysts interviewed for this article said the letter is [5] unusual because it soft-pedals many of the city's fiscal woes, and because it was written with the assistance of city officials. Parts of the letter even run counter to the tone and substance of reports produced by McCall's New York City Budget Office In his testimony, McCall said Roniger was responsible for "validity of any document that we produced that he was involved in."

The Bond Buyer story was picked up by other newspapers, and the New York Post severely criticized both the substance of the June 1993 letter and the process by which the letter was allegedly produced -- the submission of a draft letter by the City. The June 1993 Letter became the source of criticism of McCall in his successful 1994 campaign for Comptroller.

According to Roniger, in the wake of the negative publicity surrounding his testimony in the Westmeyer Lawsuit, McCall and Scanlon -- who was then head of the OSDC -- conspired to humiliate Roniger and to remove him from the Comptroller's Office. Though the record appears somewhat unclear concerning the specifics of Roniger's discharge, it is not disputed that he was notified of his dismissal from his position on December 1, 1994. The "effective [6] date" of his termination was February 10, 1995. Both Scanlon and McCall were employees of the OSC at the time Roniger was terminated, though Scanlon has since left her position at that office.

In Roniger I, it was held that Roniger's § 1983 claims against both McCall and Scanlon in their individual capacities would be dismissed under the doctrine of "qualified immunity," given that, as a policymaker, Roniger's asserted First Amendment right was not clearly established in 1994. 22 F. Supp. 2d at 166. Roniger I also held, [*436] however, that Roniger had stated a claim against McCall under § 1983 in his official capacity, though the official-capacity claim against Scanlon was dismissed since she had ceased to be employed by the OSC in 1997. See id. at 161.

More importantly for the purposes of the instant motion, Roniger I left open the question of whether Roniger could maintain his § 1985(2) claim against McCall and Scanlon, given that both were employed by OSC at the time Roniger suffered an adverse employment action. See id. at 169.

The Defendants filed their motion for partial summary judgment on June 21, 1999. Oral argument [7] was heard on September 15, at which time the motion was deemed fully submitted.

Discussion

I. Rule 56(b)

HN1 Under Rule 56(b), Fed. R. Civ. P., a "party against whom a claim, counterclaim, or cross-claim is asserted . . . may, at any time, move . . . for a summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part thereof." Summary judgment is appropriate, however, only where the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could not return a verdict in favor of the non-moving party. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250-51, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106

72 F. Supp. 2d 433, *436LÁ999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18702, 7

S. Ct. 2505 (1986). HN2[] Under Rule 56(c), Fed. R. Civ. P., it shall be rendered "forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits . . . show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." As the Second Circuit has explained:

HN3[] "As a general rule, all ambiguities and inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts should be resolved in favor of the party opposing the motion, and all doubts as to the existence of a genuine issue for trial should [8] be resolved against the moving party." However, where the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, Rule 56 permits the moving party to point to an absence of evidence to support an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim.

Bay v. Times Mirror Magazines, Inc., 936 F.2d 112, 116 (2d Cir. 1991) (quoting Brady v. Town of Colchester, 863 F.2d 205, 210 (2d Cir. 1988) (internal citations omitted).

II. Summary Judgment Shall Not Be Granted In Favor of Defendants Concerning Roniger's § 1985(2) Claim

At the outset, it is important to emphasize the discrete nature of the matter under consideration in connection with Defendants' present motion. Roniger's remaining § 1983 claim against McCall in his official capacity is not at issue. The only matter presently before the Court is Roniger's § 1985 claim. Thus, while the parties have submitted a significant amount of material that would appear to refer to the vitality of Roniger's underlying § 1983 claims, it is the question of conspiracy that is addressed herein.

HN4[] 42 U.S.C. § 1985(2) provides in pertinent part:

If two or more persons in [9] any State or territory conspire to deter, by force, intimidation or threat, any party or witness in any court of the United States from attending such court, or from testifying to any matter pending therein, freely, fully, and truthfully, or to injure such party or witness in his person or property on account of his having so attended or testified . . . the party so injured or deprived may have an action for the recovery of damages, occasioned by such injury or deprivation against any one or more of the conspirators.

[*437] As was discussed in detail in Roniger I, the Defendants contend that Roniger's claim under this section must be dismissed pursuant to the "intraenterprise" or "intracorporate" conspiracy doctrine, as the conduct complained of was really that of a single entity -- the OSC.

As was stated by the court in Johnson v. Nyack Hospital, 954 F. Supp. 717 (S.D.N.Y. 1997):

HN5[] the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine is drawn from Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, which prohibits contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. The evil to which that statute is directed is concerted decisions of two or more [10] business entities to take action "that, in a competitive world, each would take separately." In consequence, HN6[] the statutory requirement of a plurality of actors is not satisfied by joint action of wholly owned subsidiaries of a single entity, unincorporated divisions of a company, or employees of a single entity acting within the scope of their employment.

Id. at 722 (quoting Stathos v. Bowden, 728 F.2d 15, 21 (1st Cir. 1984)). Though this doctrine had its genesis in antitrust law, and in lawsuits concerning anticompetitive conspiracies between and among corporate actors, it has since been imported into § 1985 jurisprudence. See Herrmann v. Moore, 576 F.2d 453, 458 (2d Cir. 1978) (holding that plaintiff could not maintain § 1985(2) claim, despite the fact that one of the reasons for his discharge was that he had attended and testified in court, because "every one of the defendants who was involved in the so-called conspiracy was either a trustee or faculty member of the Brooklyn Law School which is admittedly an educational corporation and was acting in that capacity in connection with the discharge."); Girard v. 94th Street & Fifth Avenue Corp., 530 F.2d 66, 71 (2d Cir. 1976) [11] (finding that plaintiff's § 1985(3) claim must be dismissed, given that "conspiracy" alleged involved actions by individual defendants in corporate capacities); Gatling v. The Fashion Ass'n, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12967, No. 98 Civ. 2251 (LMM), 1999 WL 637232, at 2-3 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 20, 1999) (finding plaintiff's proposed § 1985 claim to be futile based on intracorporate conspiracy doctrine). The doctrine has been extended to apply to public entities, and to alleged conspiracies involving public employees. See Rini v. Zwirn, 886 F. Supp. 270, 292 (E.D.N.Y. 1995) (collecting cases); see also Allen v. City of Chicago, 828 F. Supp. 543, 564 (N.D. Ill. 1993) (holding, in context of § 1985(3) suit against City of Chicago and various officials, that "while we believe that plaintiffs have alleged facts indicating that these individuals came to a meeting of the minds concerning unconstitutional conduct, we agree with defendants that the 'intra-corporate conspiracy' theory bars this claim").

The Defendants claim, as they did in connection with Roniger I, that Roniger's § 1985 claim cannot lie because, for the purposes of § 1985, both McCall and Scanlon were employees [12] of OSC and therefore one-in-the-same. Just as it takes two to tango, they press, it takes at least two distinct individuals or entities to conspire, and given the context in which Roniger was discharged the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine does not allow one to consider McCall and Scanlon separately.

As in Roniger I, Roniger seizes on the so-called "personal interest" exception to the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine to ward off dismissal. See Bond v. Board of Education, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3164, No. 97 CV 1337, 1999 WL 151702, at *2 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 17, 1999); Quinn v. Nassau Cty. Police Dep't, 53 F. Supp. 2d 347, 360 (E.D.N.Y. 1999); Geiger v. E.I. DuPont Nemours & Co., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2049, No. 96 Civ. 2757, 1997 WL 83291, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 1997); Rini, 886 F. Supp. at 293; see also Perkins v. Gregg County, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22125, No. 6:94 CV 328, 1995 WL 836051, at *6 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 6, 1995) (finding that intracorporate conspiracy doctrine does not apply, given plaintiff's pleadings in action against County, its commissioners and other defendants, where Gregg County Commissioner was alleged to have been motivated to retaliate against plaintiff [13] because of plaintiff's cooperation with federal investigators and implication of Commissioner in criminal activity); Brever v. Rockwell Int'l Corp., 40 F.3d 1119, 1127 (10th Cir. 1994) (noting, in case where former Rocky [*438] Flats worker sued employer and former coworkers for engaging in conspiracy to deter her from testifying and to retaliate for her testimony, that personal interest exception would apply where whistleblower plaintiff implicated defendants in criminal activity and statements allegedly made by defendants indicated that "they feared plaintiffs' testimony would lead to the plant's closing and the loss of defendants' jobs"). According to Roniger, his discharge was motivated by personal reasons, not reasons connected to OSC official business. McCall's interest in being reelected Comptroller, in downplaying his allegedly compromised political independence, in vindicating his reputation, and in punishing Roniger for his testimony are asserted to be personal interests distinct from the interests of either Scanlon or the "corporate" objectives of the Comptroller's Office. According to Roniger, the OSC was intended to be non-partisan, and therefore any politically-motivated [14] termination would reflect distinctly personal interests belonging to McCall alone.

By contrast, according to Defendants, even if Roniger's discharge was attributable to the fallout surrounding Roniger's testimony,¹ McCall simply had a personal stake in keeping his job, and in appearing in a favorable light -- the same "interest" every employee of every entity has. Moreover, to the extent that any of the evidence submitted by Roniger could allow one to conclude that McCall approved of his discharge because of McCall's personal interest in reelection, Defendants suggest that the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine could never apply to elected officials if Roniger's position were correct -- as all officials facing reelection make decisions, in some way or another, to satisfy the voting public and to increase their chances of reelection.

[15] In Roniger I, resolution of this issue was put off to another day, as it was "not clear that Roniger could prove no set of facts supporting the notion that McCall acted upon some personal motive or in furtherance of a personal -- maybe even economic -- interest outside of the objectives of the Comptroller's Office in terminating Roniger." 22 F. Supp. 2d at 169.

¹ It is worth noting that the Defendants do not concede this point, and have submitted a significant amount of evidence from which it could be concluded that Roniger's situation at OSDC had become precarious well before he was ever deposed -- as the result of deterioration of the working relationship between him and Scanlon. Indeed, "vent" notes dutifully recorded by Roniger detail his growing dissatisfaction with Scanlon's managerial tactics and travails, and with the marginalization of his own role at OSDC, many months before he testified in the Westmeyer Lawsuit.

Based on the record presently before the Court, disputed issues of material fact exist concerning the extent to which McCall was motivated by exclusively personal interests when he authorized Roniger's dismissal. While Roniger has not supplied evidence concerning any independent economic interest that McCall might have had in terminating Roniger, the record contains evidence from which a reasonable jury might conclude that Roniger was terminated based on personal interests unconnected with the official interests of the OSC.

A review of the decisions applying the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine reveals a degree of uncertainty in the law. Some courts have appeared to apply the doctrine in strict fashion, whenever the defendants' activities were undertaken within the scope of their official duties. Other courts [16] have either sought to parse the true scope of a defendant's official duties, or determined that a defendant's acts were undertaken for essentially personal reasons -- such that the acts about which a plaintiff complains should not be considered merely the acts of a corporate entity acting through its agents or officers. A few other courts have, like this Court, forestalled a decision about the applicability of the doctrine. See Northen v. City of Chicago, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7897, No. 93 C 7013, 1999 WL 342441, at *3 [*439] (N.D. Ill. May 17, 1999) (denying defendants' motion to dismiss premised upon intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, as plaintiff had alleged that he was falsely arrested in retaliation for criticizing Chicago Police Department; noting that "based on [plaintiff's] allegations, this court cannot determine whether the officers were pursuing lawful police business"); Yeadon v. New York City Transit Auth., 719 F. Supp. 204, 211-12 \(S.D.N.Y. 1989\) (holding that plaintiffs' § 1985 and § 1986 claims could not be dismissed upon 12(b)(6) motion, as they had adequately alleged "independent, personal conspiratorial purposes."). Whether the applicability of the intracorporate [17] conspiracy doctrine is a question of fact or of law is an issue that continues to divide the circuits, and one that also does not appear to have been conclusively resolved within this Circuit. See Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Serv., 651 F.2d 122, 126 \(2d Cir. 1981\); Geiger, 1997 WL 83291, at *10 n.3.; Martin Process Co. v. Lee Co., 1983 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13785, No. 81 Civ. 3775 (HEW), 1983 WL 1907, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 14, 1983); see also Nanavati v. Burdette Tomlin Memorial Inst., 645 F. Supp. 1217, 1231 \(D.N.J. 1986\) (discussing trial court's instructions to jury concerning intracorporate conspiracy doctrine, including instruction that a conspiracy may properly be found where alleged conspirator had "private economic motives").

In Herrmann v. Moore, the Second Circuit applied the "familiar doctrine" that "there is no conspiracy if the conspiratorial conduct challenged is essentially a single act by a single corporation acting exclusively through its own directors, officers, and employees, each acting within the scope of his employment." 576 F.2d at 459. In pressing his claims, Roniger asserts that, to apply the [18] intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine whenever a particular set of defendants acted within the scope of their official duties would be to graft an "ill-advised" exception upon the "personal stake" exception that already exists to the doctrine. While this assertion mischaracterizes the specifics of Defendants' position, there is some truth to Roniger's general position that whether or not a particular individual was operating in the scope of his employment is not the only determinative question to be raised when considering the application of the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine. After all, a wide range of conspiracies may result in adverse employment actions -- demotions, terminations, pay reductions, and the like -- that are properly within the power of a set of defendants to take. Moreover, if the scope of a Defendant's employment were the only relevant criterion, it is doubtful that the courts would have ever fashioned the so-called "personal interest" exception to the doctrine.²

[19] By the same token, however, it should be observed that a promiscuous use of the "personal interest" exception to the doctrine would eviscerate the doctrine as a whole. In Johnson v. Nyack, the court responded as follows to a plaintiff's claim that personal racial bias constitutes a personal interest sufficient to block application of the doctrine:

If personal racial bias were sufficient to defeat the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine, the exception would swallow the rule, and Girard and Herrmann would be meaningless. Accordingly, this Court holds that personal bias is not the sort of individual interest that takes a defendant out of the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine where, as here, the action complained of arguably served a legitimate interest of Nyack Hospital.

² Of course, it might be observed that application of such an "exception" is merely another way of finding that the employee or officer of a corporate entity was not truly operating in the "scope" of his or her employment, but rather went beyond the scope of his or her employment by making decisions based on exclusively personal interests.

954 F. Supp. at 723; see Bond, 1999 WL 151702, at *2 ("Although the complaint includes an allegation that Rodriguez-Torres wanted to 'get rid of' plaintiff, personal bias does not constitute personal interest [*440] and is not sufficient to defeat the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine."). In the context of § 1985(3) claims based on racial or other discrimination, other courts [20] have observed that the necessity of demonstrating discriminatory animus would render the doctrine meaningless unless the personal stake exception is applied carefully. See Hartman v. Board of Trustees, 4 F.3d 465, 470 (7th Cir. 1993); Markham v. White, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16656, No 95 C 2065, 1995 WL 669643, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 8, 1995). By definition, for example, racial discrimination or other types of unconstitutional activity are seldom within a conspiracy defendant's job description.³ Similarly, an officer or agent's personal financial interests in a matter, distinct from the financial interests of the corporate entity, may constitute a sufficient personal stake in a matter to merit suspension of the doctrine. To some degree or another, however, all individuals have a financial stake in the positions they occupy or the sinecures they hope to obtain. It is for this reason, perhaps, that courts have at times held that an employee must have been motivated "solely" by personal bias or exclusively personal interests in order for the personal interest exception to apply. See Hartman, 4 F.3d at 470.

[21] In his submissions, Roniger asserts that, because a New York State agency such as the OSC is proscribed from engaging in partisan politics, and because the State Comptroller is "obliged by the State Constitution to function as [an] independent auditing official for the affairs of the State," any interests McCall might have had in "protecting his political image and settling a political score" were not only distinct from, but inimical to, the business of the Comptroller's office. However, this begs the very question presented, and Roniger's efforts to resolve a complex matter by way of mere definition are unhelpful -- given that the Comptroller, however independent and "nonpartisan," occupies an elected position, and given that even non-elected officials and non-partisan governmental entities can reasonably be expected to react to public criticism based on "corporate" interests. One might just as easily say that the interests of a law school's trustees or faculty members are in running the law school and teaching, not in punishing a fellow faculty member for attending and testifying in court, but see Herrmann, 576 F.2d at 458, that the interests of employees of the [22] Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) are properly in protecting the welfare of children, but not in retaliating against a DCFS caseworker for retaining a lawyer and filing a federal lawsuit, but see Wright v. Illinois Dep't of Children & Family Services, 40 F.3d 1492, 1508-09 (7th Cir. 1994) (holding that conspiracy alleged "had a rather limited object -- stifling [plaintiff's] efforts to air her personal and professional grievances," and finding that doctrine therefore applied), or that the interests of municipal employees do not lie in conspiring to eliminate other employees' positions based on their political affiliation, but rather in doing their assigned tasks with singleminded determination. But see Rini, 886 F. Supp. at 291 ("Here it is alleged that the Municipal defendants conspired to develop and approve a budget reduction plan which eliminated plaintiffs' positions [because they were registered Republicans]. Regardless [*441] of the motive or intent supporting the legislation, these are acts within the scope of their official duties. Therefore, the § 1985 claims against the Municipal defendants in their individual capacities must [23] be dismissed, as a matter of law, as the allegation that their acts in furtherance of the conspiracy were solely within the scope of their duties as officials or employees of the Town."). Thorny questions about the application of the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine are not so easily dispatched.

Nevertheless, there is truth to Roniger's observation that McCall may, on certain occasions, act as Comptroller McCall, and on other occasions act as either private citizen McCall or candidate McCall. The Comptroller's personal interests in his reelection and in his reputation, for example, may be distinct from his official interests in managing ³Indeed, many of the cases in which the intraenterprise conspiracy doctrine has been found not to apply are cases involving claims of racial or other invidious discrimination. See Quinn, 53 F. Supp. 2d at 360 (finding that police officer who abused plaintiff officer based on his sexual orientation pursued "personal interests wholly separate and apart from the entity," and that "personal interest" exception to doctrine therefore applied); McCraven v. City of Chicago, 18 F. Supp. 2d 877, 884 (N.D. Ill. 1998) (holding that police department's race-based treatment of plaintiff was "sufficient to take this case outside the intracorporate immunity doctrine"); Salto v. Mercado, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5796, *6, No. 96 C 7168, 1997 WL 222874, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 24, 1997) ("Here, Salto alleges that defendants conspired to physically abuse and falsely arrest him in retaliation for complaining of police misconduct and for filing a civil lawsuit. These allegations, if true . . . would demonstrate that the defendants were motivated solely by personal bias.").

OSDC's personnel, defending the institutional integrity of the OSC, or even in retaliating for public criticism of that Office. In practice, it may be rather difficult to determine whether an elected official was acting as an official or as a candidate, pursuant to personal or public interests. However, this does not mean that the inquiry should be abandoned, and the intracorporate conspiracy doctrine applied automatically.

Given the record before the Court, it cannot be said that no material issues of fact exist as to whether the Comptroller's [24] decision to fire Roniger was motivated solely by personal interests distinct from those of the OSC. To the extent that Roniger has contended that McCall had a distinctly personal interest in firing Roniger because of the "damage done to his reputation as a trustworthy person," the lion's share of evidence Roniger has offered in support of this proposition concerns alleged discrepancies in deposition testimony that would only have become apparent well after the decision to terminate Roniger had been made. Furthermore, much of the evidence submitted would be consistent with a determination that McCall was not motivated by personal interests, but rather by the interests of the OSC itself. Nevertheless, the record contains enough evidence concerning the political fallout following Roniger's deposition testimony, the timing of Roniger's firing, and McCall's handling of Roniger's discharge from which it could be inferred that Roniger was ultimately fired because of McCall's own personal interests in his reelection and reputation, and to obtain retribution against Roniger as a result of personal embarrassment over the publicity surrounding Roniger's testimony. Such disputed factual issues [25] do not lend themselves to easy resolution by a court upon a motion for summary judgment, but rather are best left to a jury.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the Defendants' motion for partial summary judgment shall be denied.

It is so ordered.

New York, N. Y.

December 1, 1999

ROBERT W. SWEET

U.S.D.J.

End of Document

Massachusetts Food Ass'n v. Massachusetts Alcoholic Bevs. Control Comm'n

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

December 2, 1999, Decided

No. 99-1277, No. 99-1280

Reporter

197 F.3d 560 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31966 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,723; 45 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (Callaghan) 1270

MASSACHUSETTS FOOD ASSOCIATION, ET AL., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. MASSACHUSETTS ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES CONTROL COMMISSION, ET AL., Defendants, Appellees. MASSACHUSETTS FOOD ASSOCIATION, ET AL., Plaintiffs, Appellees, v. MASSACHUSETTS ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES CONTROL COMMISSION, ET AL., Defendants, Appellees, and WINE & SPIRIT WHOLESALERS OF MASSACHUSETTS, INC., ET AL., Appellants.

Subsequent History: [1] As Modified December 27, 1999.

Certiorari Denied May 1, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 3128.

Prior History: APPEALS FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. Douglas P. Woodlock, U.S. District Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

regulation, district court, private party, intervenors, licenses, anti trust law, supervision, intervene, retail, Sherman Act, would-be, Wholesalers, trade association, amicus brief, anticompetitive, authorize, liquor

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN1 Legislation, Types of Statutes

Massachusetts, like many other states, extensively regulates the sale of alcoholic beverages. Among other restrictions, retail outlets must be licensed, each license embraces only a single location, and no firm or person is allowed "more than three such licenses in the commonwealth." Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 138, § 15 (1998).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court of appeals' review of a judgment of dismissal is de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Prohibition

HN3 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Putting aside the special status of state liquor regulation under the U.S. Const. amend. XXI, § 2, one of the best settled rules in antitrust law is that the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., was not intended to "apply" to the states so as to foreclose otherwise valid state regulation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > Federal Preemption

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [+] Scope, Exemptions

The immunity from the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, et seq., afforded to "state action" has been hedged by a concern with state laws deemed merely to authorize or direct conduct by private parties that, absent such state legislation, would violate the antitrust laws. It is one thing to say that a state may itself regulate in an "anticompetitive" fashion; it is quite another to say that the state can effectively exempt private parties from obeying the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under certain conditions, the states have been allowed to authorize or direct private conduct otherwise inconsistent with the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. The main conditions are that the state do so as part of a deliberate policy to displace competition and that the state provide an alternative regime that provides "active supervision" of the conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Real Property Law > Landlord & Tenant > Rent Regulation > General Overview

HN6 [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is evident that one must be careful in parsing general statements to the effect that states may not compel "private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior." What is centrally forbidden is state licensing of arrangements between private parties that suppress competition, not state directives that by themselves limit or reduce competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted-action within the meaning of the statute simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > Intervention of Right

Civil Procedure > Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

HN8 [down] Intervention, Intervention of Right

The standard for intervention as of right is set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 24\(a\)\(2\) as follows: Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action when the applicant claims an interest relating to the property or transaction which is the subject matter of the action and the applicant is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties. In such cases, the timeliness of intervention and the practical impact on the would-be intervenor are rarely in dispute: it is the "interest" and "adequately represented" criteria that are usually decisive.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > Intervention of Right

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

HN9 [down] Intervention, Intervention of Right

Fed. R. Civ. P. 24\(a\)\(2\)'s reference to "an interest relating to the property or transaction" suggests that the drafters had in mind something narrower and more akin to property or contract interests in conventional private litigation as the necessary stake; but this narrow reading has not been accepted in practice.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Intervention > General Overview

HN10 [down] Parties, Intervention

Courts have been quite ready to presume that a government defendant will "adequately represent" the interests of all private defenders of the statute or regulation unless there is a showing to the contrary. While there are various ways to show that state representation is not adequate, the burden of overcoming the presumption is upon the would-be intervenor. The trial court, in applying a general rule to specific facts, is usually accorded a measure of deference in making the adequate-representation determination, so long as the court applies the proper legal standards.

Counsel: J. Mark Gidley with whom Robert D. Paul, J. Christian Word, White & Case LLP, Alan L. Kovacs, Howard J. Wayne, Eugene R. Richard and Wayne, Richard, Hurwitz & McAloon were on brief for plaintiffs.

Jane L. Willoughby, Assistant Attorney General, with whom Thomas F. Reilly, Attorney General, and Thomas A. Barnico, Assistant Attorney General, were on brief for defendants.

Bruce A. Singal with whom William C. Athanas, Donoghue, Barrett & Singal, P.C., Louis A. Cassis, Cassis, Arena & Cayer and Ernest Gellhorn were on brief for intervenor, appellants Wine & Spirit Wholesalers of Massachusetts, Inc., et al.

Bruce A. Singal, William C. Athanas, Donoghue, Barrett & Singal, P.C., Louis A. Cassis, Cassis, Arena & Cayer and Ernest Gellhorn on brief for Massachusetts Package Stores Association, Inc., Wine & Spirits Wholesalers of Massachusetts, and Massachusetts Wholesalers of Malt Beverages, Inc., Amici Curiae.

Judges: Before Boudin, Circuit Judge, Bownes, Senior Circuit Judge, and Lipez, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: BOUDIN

Opinion

[*562] BOUDIN, Circuit [*2] Judge. HN1 Massachusetts, like many other states, extensively regulates the sale of alcoholic beverages. Among other restrictions, retail outlets must be licensed, each license embraces only a single location, and no firm or person is allowed "more than three such licenses in the commonwealth . . ." Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 138, § 15 (1998). Thus, no one can own more than three retail liquor stores in the Commonwealth. Although some state regulations also impinge on retail prices, e.g., Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 138, § 25C, they are not at issue here.

The plaintiffs in this case--who include several supermarket chains--brought this action in the district court to enjoin enforcement [*563] of the three-store limit. The complaint charged that this statutory restriction conflicted with the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq., because it would be a per se violation of the Sherman Act for private competitors to agree with each other to impose such a limitation. The complaint further alleged that the defendants, the members of the Massachusetts Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission, lacked power to supervise, and did not in fact supervise, the anticompetitive consequences [*3] of this limitation (i.e., less competition and higher prices).¹

Several organizations moved to intervene to defend the statute. One of them, the Massachusetts Package Stores Association ("MPSA"), is a trade association primarily representing retail liquor stores. The other two organizations--The Wine & Spirits Wholesalers of Massachusetts and the Massachusetts Wholesalers of Malt Beverages--are trade associations for alcoholic beverage wholesalers in Massachusetts. All three entities sought to intervene as of right or, in the alternative, as permissive intervenors. Fed. R. Civ. P. 24\(a\)\(2\), \(b\)\(2\). The Commission and its members moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). After briefing and argument, the district court, on January 6, 1999, denied intervention to the trade associations but granted [*4] the defendants' motion to dismiss. Massachusetts Food Ass'n v. Sullivan, 184 F.R.D. 217, 228 \(D. Mass 1999\).

The plaintiffs in the district court now appeal from the dismissal of their complaint. The trade associations that sought to intervene appeal from the denial of intervention (but in an amicus brief support the dismissal of the complaint). HN2 Our review of the judgment of dismissal is de novo. Rogan v. Menino, 175 F.3d 75, 77 \(1st Cir. 1999\), cert. denied, 120 S. Ct. 616, 145 L. Ed. 2d 511 (U.S. 1999). Since we affirm the judgment of dismissal, the intervention issue is largely (although not entirely) academic, and we return to it only after addressing the merits.

¹ The complaint originally named the Commission itself as a defendant but, in response to an Eleventh Amendment objection, the members were substituted as defendants.

At first blush, one might think this a strange complaint. The state statute limiting retail liquor outlets looks like a garden-variety act of local legislation limiting the number of licenses that the state will grant, and the statute neither authorizes nor directs private parties to engage in anticompetitive agreements among themselves. HN3¹ Putting aside the special status of state liquor regulation under the Twenty-First Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. [5] XXI, § 2, one of the best settled rules in antitrust law is that the Sherman Act was not intended to "apply" to the states so as to foreclose otherwise valid state regulation. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 350-52, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\); see also Neo Gen Screening, Inc. v. New England Newborn Screening Program, 187 F.3d 24, 28 \(1st Cir. 1999\), cert. denied, 120 S. Ct. 615, 145 L. Ed. 2d 510 (U.S. 1999); Tri-State Rubbish, Inc. v. Waste Management, Inc., 998 F.2d 1073, 1076 \(1st Cir. 1993\). But, as we shall see, there are qualifications on this general rule, and the case law is not entirely coherent. See generally I Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 221 (1997). With some ingenuity, the plaintiffs in this case have sought to make the most of the resulting ambiguities.

Almost from the outset, HN4¹ the immunity from the Sherman Act afforded to "state action" has been hedged by a concern with state laws deemed merely to authorize or direct conduct by private parties that--absent such state legislation--would violate the antitrust laws. Cf. Parker, 317 U.S. at 351-52. [6] It is one thing to say that a state may itself regulate in an "anticompetitive" fashion; it is quite another to say that the state can effectively exempt private parties from obeying the antitrust laws. Thus, a state [*564] cannot shield private parties from the federal antitrust laws by enacting a statute saying no more than that competing grocery stores may agree to fix prices; through the Supremacy Clause, the Sherman Act would preempt such a law.

This qualification is itself qualified. HN5¹ Under certain conditions, the states have been allowed to authorize or direct private conduct otherwise inconsistent with the Sherman Act. The main conditions are that the state do so as part of a deliberate policy to displace competition and that the state provide an alternative regime that provides "active supervision" of the conduct, Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83, 108 S. Ct. 1658 \(1988\); an example would be a specific authorization for joint ratemaking by intrastate carriers coupled with state agency authority to require that the resulting rates be just and reasonable. Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 \(1985\); [7] see I Areeda, supra, P 226.

What state entities can adopt such a policy (state executives? local municipalities?), how clearly the policy must be articulated, and (above all) what kind of supervision will suffice are among the issues that have provoked endless litigation. See I Areeda, supra, P 226. For example, supervision may be a proxy for competition, designed to protect consumers (e.g., utility regulation); but supervision is not clearly limited to cases of this character. See, e.g., Patrick, 486 U.S. at 100-01 (suggesting that state supervision reinforces requirement that anticompetitive behavior at issue be consistent with the state's deliberate policy).

But our facts do not require an examination of clear articulation, active supervision or other conditions for immunity. It is only where state legislation "would otherwise" be preempted by the Sherman Act that these further inquiries are required. Fisher v. City of Berkeley, California, 475 U.S. 260, 265, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, 106 S. Ct. 1045 \(1986\). In this case, the state has not ordered or authorized private parties to engage in conduct that, absent immunity, would [8] even arguably violate the antitrust laws; there is no private agreement or arrangement between retailers as to the number of retail outlets and therefore no violation to be shielded. The state simply insists upon licensing retail liquor stores--as it does for many businesses or professions--and limits the number of licenses to three per owner.

Despite disclaimers, the plaintiffs' case rests in the end on the implicit proposition that the Massachusetts statute is preempted because it produces an effect that could not be produced by agreement of private parties without violating the antitrust laws. Admittedly, private parties could not agree that each of them would operate only three such outlets. United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 \(1972\); Addamax Corp. v. Open Software Found., Inc., 152 F.3d 48, 51 \(1st Cir. 1998\).² This resemblance in effects is the gist of the plaintiffs' position, although it is narrowed by the suggestion that preemption may be confined to statutes that produce the same effect as a per se violation (rather than a non-per se one); and, of course, plaintiffs concede [9] that even a per se violation would be all right if the requisite state policy and active supervision existed.

² Topco may no longer be good law for its broader proposition that such a restraint is condemned per se even where it is ancillary to a productive joint venture. Cf. Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, 441 U.S. 1, 20-24, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\); Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210, 224-29 \(D.C. Cir. 1986\),

The difficulty with this "similar effects" argument is that much direct government regulation prohibiting one form of economic activity or requiring another involves [10] [*565] directives that private parties could not themselves implement without violating the antitrust laws. For example, competing shoe stores could not agree on closing hours or holidays without committing per se violations of the antitrust laws; nor could competing taxi companies agree on the number of taxicabs to be operated; nor could cable companies agree that only one or two of them should serve a locality. Yet all of these results are examples of commonplace state or local regulation, sometimes accompanied by local price regulation but sometimes not.

To allow federal judges to decide which of these legislative enactments should survive and which should be condemned comes close to reintroducing the kind of judgments that got the Supreme Court into so much trouble in the Lochner era. The result might well be more competition and greater consumer welfare. But it would come at the cost of second-guessing the democratically elected legislature's decisions about the proper balance between competition and other social policies that are commonly reflected in such legislation. The Sherman Act is a "charter of economic liberty," Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\), [11] but only as against private restraints.

From these examples, HN6 it is evident that one must be careful in parsing general statements to the effect that states may not compel "private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior." 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 345-46 n.8, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, 107 S. Ct. 720 \(1987\). What is centrally forbidden is state licensing of arrangements between private parties that suppress competition--not state directives that by themselves limit or reduce competition. This is the very distinction stressed by the Supreme Court in Fisher where it sustained the City of Berkeley's rent control ordinance (rent control being a classic constraint on competitive pricing). As the Court there explained, [\[HN7\]](#) a] restraint imposed unilaterally by government does not become concerted-action within the meaning of the statute simply because it has a coercive effect upon parties who must obey the law. The ordinary relationship between the government and those who must obey its regulatory commands whether they wish to or not is not enough to establish a conspiracy.

Fisher, 475 U.S. at 267.

The only fact patterns [12] that give the plaintiffs any purchase is a set of Supreme Court decisions that struck down state statutes that were deemed to direct and implement private conduct replicating resale price maintenance schemes.³ The schemes were structured to allow one party (manufacturer or wholesaler) to set the resale price to be charged by purchasers at the next level. The resemblance in form and function to traditional private resale price maintenance, see Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons, Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 \(1911\), was so close that the Supreme Court treated the arrangements as if they were nothing other than private resale price maintenance schemes licensed and abetted by the state.

[13] There are no private restraints in this case, whether operating alone or in conjunction with state action. Cf. Duffy, 479 U.S. at 345 n.8. The Massachusetts statute limiting licenses to three per company does not authorize or direct any private agreements or permit any competitor to determine the price or location of another. The three-store limit is no more an agreement among competitors, or subordination of one competitor to the dictates of another, than a state electrical code that prescribes safety standards for [*566] contractors who wire buildings for electricity. As in Fisher, the restrictions have been "unilaterally imposed by government . . . to the exclusion of private control." Fisher, 475 U.S. at 266.

^{cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1033, 93 L. Ed. 2d 834, 107 S. Ct. 880 (1987)}. But no one doubts that an independent agreement between private parties to limit output or divide markets is to be condemned per se. See Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 \(1990\).

³ Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, 107 S. Ct. 720; California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980); Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 71 S. Ct. 745 (1951).

Our conclusion in no way depends on the premise that the Massachusetts three-store limit serves the public interest or on the amici's dubious suggestion that the limit has no effect on price or output.⁴ Whatever its purported or actual purpose, cf. Johnson v. Martignetti, 374 Mass. 784, 375 N.E.2d 290, 297 \(Mass. 1978\), it is common knowledge that many statutes regulate private activities to protect the narrow economic [14] interests of other companies, often to the detriment of the public. See Frank H. Easterbrook, Antitrust and the Economics of Federalism, 26 J.L. & Econ. 23, 23-24 (1983). But unless such a statute licenses or commands a private restraint, this is a matter for the voters and not for the federal courts--at least so far as the Sherman Act is concerned. Of course, such state statutes remain subject to the constraints of the Commerce Clause and other constitutional provisions.

This brings us to the separate question whether MPSA and the two wholesaler trade associations [15] should have been allowed to intervene. The district court held that the wholesalers' interests were too general and contingent to justify intervention; in the case of MPSA, whose members were subject to the very three-store regulation challenged by plaintiffs, the court said that its members did have a direct and concrete interest in defending the statute but that they were adequately represented by the Commonwealth. As for permissive intervention, the court found that all three trade associations could adequately express their views through amicus briefs.

The problem presented in this case is a common one: a private party attacks a regulatory statute or administrative rule; the state or its regulators are its defendants; and other parties having an economic interest in the validity or invalidity of the statute or regulation seek to intervene. HN8[[↑]] The standard for intervention as of right is set forth in Rule 24\(a\)\(2\) as follows:

Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action: . . . when the applicant claims an interest relating to the property or transaction which is the subject matter of the action and the applicant is so situated that the disposition [16] of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties.

In such cases, the timeliness of intervention and the practical impact on the would-be intervenor are rarely in dispute: it is the "interest" and "adequately represented" criteria that are usually decisive.

HN9[[↑]] Rule 24\(a\)\(2\)'s reference to "an interest relating to the property or transaction" suggests that the drafters had in mind something narrower and more akin to property or contract interests in conventional private litigation as the necessary stake; but this narrow reading has not been accepted in practice. See Daggett v. Commission on Governmental Ethics and Election Practices, 172 F.3d 104, 110 \(1st Cir. 1999\). We will therefore assume that the district court was right in holding that MPSA satisfied the "interest" requirement and assume arguendo (and solely to shorten the opinion) that the district court was wrong in holding that the wholesalers lacked such an interest.

But, perhaps as a counterweight to the broad reading of "interest," [*567] the HN10[[↑]] courts have been quite ready [17] to presume that a government defendant will "adequately represent" the interests of all private defenders of the statute or regulation unless there is a showing to the contrary. See Public Serv. Co. v. Patch, 136 F.3d 197, 207 \(1st Cir. 1998\). And while there are various ways to show that state representation is not adequate, the burden of overcoming the presumption is upon the would-be intervenor, Daggett, 172 F.3d at 111. The trial court, in applying a general rule to specific facts, is usually accorded a measure of deference in making the adequate-representation determination, so long as the court applies the proper legal standards.⁵ Id. at 111-12.

⁴ In theory, the three-store limit might or might not affect price, depending on the extent of existing competition in specific local retail markets where (absent the limit) those who have three stores elsewhere in the Commonwealth might choose to operate. But energetic defense of the statute by MPSA is some indication that its members fear that more competition from larger chains would drive down price, improve service, or both.

[18] The would-be intervenors argue that the Commonwealth cannot be an adequate representative of their interests while it also regulates them. In support of this position, they point to Conservation Law Found. v. Mosbacher, 966 F.2d 39 (1st Cir. 1992), and the district court opinion in Patch, 173 F.R.D. 17 (D.N.H. 1997). In Mosbacher, we held that commercial fishing groups could intervene as of right to oppose a challenge to a state agency's approval of a fishery plan, noting that the fishing groups were regulated by the agency. Mosbacher, 966 F.2d at 44. In Patch, the district court allowed intervention by several electric utilities who were largely aligned with state regulators in defending a major state reform plan that restructured retail power regulation in the state. Patch, 173 F.R.D. at 27-28. From these decisions, MPSA infers a general rule that the state defendant's representation is inadequate as a matter of course whenever it is also the regulator of the entity that seeks to intervene.

The cases do not support such a per se rule. We certainly did not adopt such a rule in Mosbacher, where [19] the intervenors overcame the presumption of adequate representation by the government defendant because, inter alia, the agency had not filed an answer to the complaint but had instead accepted a consent decree providing for virtually all the relief sought and subjecting the fishing groups to more stringent rules than had previously been in effect. 966 F.2d at 44. It is not clear whether the district court was applying a per se rule in Patch; but in any event that part of its decision was not appealed to us.

Here, there is no doubt that the Commonwealth was zealously interested in upholding the validity of the statute. The only difference between it and the would-be intervenors was their interest in offering other legal arguments (for example, based on the Twenty-First Amendment) to sustain the statute. But these arguments were easily presented in amicus briefs. This is not a case where the complaint was framed so as to require an evidentiary determination and where the would-be intervenors had information that could only be presented by their participation as parties. See generally Daggett, 172 F.3d at 112.

The would-be intervenors point [20] out that an amicus does not enjoy the same opportunities as a full-fledged litigant even to offer legal argument; for example, in this court, amicus briefs are shorter than regular briefs and oral argument is at the court's discretion. Fed. R. App. P. 29(d),(g). But a court is usually delighted to hear additional arguments from able amici that will help the court toward right answers, and the amici can easily seek a larger allotment of pages or time to participate in oral argument. See id.

[*568] The more interesting claim is that the Commonwealth might refuse to appeal if it lost; or—if it won and plaintiffs sought certiorari—the Supreme Court might limit the questions to be considered to those set forth in the certiorari petition. But amici, like respondents, can advise the Supreme Court of missing arguments. Davis v. United States, 512 U.S. 452, 457, 129 L. Ed. 2d 362, 114 S. Ct. 2350, n. * (1994) (citing Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 300, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 109 S. Ct. 1060 (1989) (plurality opinion)). And if the Commonwealth refused to appeal from a defeat, a would-be intervenor could then seek to intervene. 7C Wright, Miller & Kane, [21] Federal Practice and Procedure § 1909, at 345 & n.38 (1986); see also Daggett, 172 F.3d at 112.

As for permissive intervention, the would-be intervenors likely met the low threshold set by Rule 24(b)—that their defenses included questions of law common to the defenses offered by the state. Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(b). But even where this necessary condition is present, the rule merely permits intervention at the discretion of the district court. Daggett, 172 F.3d at 112-13. The district court reasonably concluded that the Commonwealth was adequately representing the interests of everyone concerned to defend the statute and that any variations of legal argument could adequately be presented in amicus briefs. We see no abuse of discretion in this ruling.

⁵ In Daggett we were concerned that the district court might possibly have been misled by our own language in Moosehead Sanitary Dist. v. S.G. Phillips Corp. 610 F.2d 49, 54 (1st Cir. 1979), suggesting that only a limited number of "cubbyholes" existed for claims of inadequate representation. See Daggett, 172 F.3d at 113. In the present case, while the district court's decision cites Moosehead, it also makes clear that the court did not impose any artificial limitation on the way in which parties may show inadequate representation. Massachusetts Food Ass'n, 184 F.R.D. at 222-23.

197 F.3d 560, *568LÁ999 U.S. App. LEXIS 31966, 21

Affirmed.

End of Document

Serpa Corp. v. McWane, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

December 8, 1999, Decided

No. 99-1256

Reporter

199 F.3d 6 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 32109 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,724

THE SERPA CORPORATION, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. MCWANE, INC., ANACO, f/k/a ANAHEIM FOUNDRY COMPANY AND TYLER PIPE INDUSTRIES, Defendants, Appellees.

Prior History: [\[1\]](#) APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS. Hon. Nancy J. Gertner, U.S. District Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

termination, antitrust, distributors, notice, competitor, anti trust law, antitrust claim, acquisition, couplings, summary judgment, district court, consumers, fair dealing, good faith, manufactured, defendants', regional, pricing, monopoly, antitrust violation, anticompetitive, Airlines, covenant, plumbing, products, damages, complaint alleges, cause of action, no evidence, Clayton Act

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 [\[down arrow\]](#) Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The court of appeals reviews a dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) de novo, accepting all well-pleaded facts as true and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the party dismissed. The court does not, however, accept a plaintiff's unsupported conclusions or interpretations of law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

199 F.3d 6, *6L^A 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 32109, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN2 [down] Standing, Clayton Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, which provides a private cause of action for violations of the federal antitrust laws, states any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

HN3 [down] Clayton Act, Claims

Despite its broad language, the Supreme Court has held that § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, does not allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property. Instead, the Supreme Court has created a comprehensive antitrust standing doctrine to determine which persons are entitled to bring suit under the federal antitrust statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN4 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The Supreme Court set forth six factors that must be evaluated on a case-by-case basis to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action. These factors are: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN5 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The Supreme Court has defined "antitrust injury" as an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The harm should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be the type of loss that the claimed violations would be likely to cause. Consequently, a proper plaintiff must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN6 Private Actions, Standing

Competitors and consumers in the market where trade is allegedly restrained are presumptively the proper plaintiffs to allege antitrust injury. In contrast, a commercial intermediary, such as a distributor or sales representative, generally lacks standing because its antitrust injury is too remote.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Standing

Clearly lacking antitrust injury, and thus having no standing, is the firm whose injury is caused merely by the efficiency effects of a vertical merger. For example, once a firm has integrated vertically into distribution by acquiring one or more existing distributors, it may reduce costs by dealing only with its wholly-owned distributors. A distributor terminated for this reason might certainly suffer injury-in-fact, but it would not suffer antitrust injury as long as there were alternative sources of the product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Standing

There may be some instances where presumptively disfavored plaintiffs do have standing to bring an antitrust action. Although competitors and consumers are presumptively favored, "presumptively" does not mean always; there can be exceptions, for good cause shown.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN9 Private Actions, Standing

The most obvious reason for conferring standing on a second-best plaintiff is that, in some general category of cases, there may be no first best with the incentive to sue.

199 F.3d 6, *6L^A 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 32109, 1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Discharge & Termination

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Notice Requirement

HN10 [] Standards of Performance, Discharge & Termination

Under Massachusetts law, a contract without a durational term is terminable at will by either party upon reasonable notice.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Discharge & Termination

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > Notice Requirement

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN11 [] Standards of Performance, Discharge & Termination

A breach of contract claim for inadequate notice of termination may be disposed of by motion for summary judgment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Discharge & Termination

HN12 [] Standards of Performance, Discharge & Termination

Reasonableness of notice is measured in terms of the ability of the party affected by the termination to obtain a substitute arrangement. If that party is able to obtain another supplier before the performance of the party effecting termination becomes due, then it necessarily follows that the terminating party has furnished reasonable notice and will not be responsible for damages. Put another way, the adequacy of the notice is generally coextensive with the amount of harm that can be proved by the party who has incurred the loss of a supplier.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Discharge & Termination

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

HN13 [] Standards of Performance, Discharge & Termination

Every contract implies good faith and fair dealing between the parties to it.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Business Relationships > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN14 [] Commercial Interference, Business Relationships

Under Massachusetts law, to state a cause of action for intentional interference with an advantageous business relationship, plaintiff must plead and prove that the defendants (1) engaged in intentional and willful acts (2) calculated to cause damage to the plaintiff's lawful business (3) with an unlawful purpose and without right or justification, (4) thereby causing actual damage or loss.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN15[] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

For conduct to violate Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93(A) it must (1) fall within the penumbra of some common-law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) be immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; and (3) cause substantial injury to other businessman.

Counsel: Mitchell A. Kramer, with whom Kramer & Friedman was on brief, for appellant.

Margaret A. Lange, with whom Lawrence G. Green, and Perkins, Smith & Cohen, LLP were on brief, for appellees.

Judges: Before Torruella, Chief Judge, Lynch and Lipez, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: TORRUELLA

Opinion

[*8] TORRUELLA, Chief Judge. Plaintiff The Serpa Corporation brings this suit against defendant corporations McWane, Inc., Anaco, and Tyler Pipe Industries, alleging violations of the federal antitrust laws and various state law causes of action. The district court dismissed plaintiff's antitrust claims on June 10, 1998, and granted summary judgment for defendants on the remaining state law claims on January 12, 1999. This appeal followed. After carefully examining the record and the law, we affirm.

BACKGROUND

The Serpa Corporation is a distributor of plumbing supplies. Between 1976 and 1996, Serpa was the exclusive sales representative in New England for certain plumbing supply products manufactured by defendant Anaco.

Anaco manufactures cast iron soil [2] pipes ("CISPs") and stainless steel no-hub joints known as fittings and couplings. CISPs, fittings, and couplings are used to transport human waste from buildings to sewer lines. Because the products are manufactured in accordance with industry standards, they are virtually identical across [*9] companies. Historically, the products were sold through exclusive sales representatives, like Serpa, who sold the products to plumbing supply wholesalers on the basis of price. In this case, Serpa sold couplings and fittings manufactured by Anaco and used its position as a regional sales representative to offer price discounts to wholesalers within guidelines set by Anaco.

Serpa's complaint alleges that between November 1995 and August 1996, defendant McWane acquired both Tyler and Anaco. Prior to being acquired by McWane, Tyler was a competitor of Anaco's. Plaintiff further alleges that the acquisitions of Tyler and Anaco gave McWane control of more than eighty-five percent (85%) of the couplings and fittings market in New England.

After acquiring Anaco, McWane placed the marketing of Anaco products under the direction of Tyler and subsequently terminated Serpa as a sales representative for Anaco [3] products. The November 19, 1996 termination letter stated that Anaco would pay Serpa a duplicate commission for all orders received and invoiced for one month, rather than have Serpa serve as a "lame duck" sales representative for that time.

Serpa filed this suit on July 7, 1997, alleging that defendants' consolidation lessened competition and constituted an attempt to monopolize the New England market for CISPs, fittings, and couplings in violation of the federal antitrust statutes. Serpa also alleged state law causes of action for breach of contract, interference with advantageous business relations, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and violation of the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act, M.G.L.A. c. 93A.

The district court dismissed plaintiff's antitrust claims on June 10, 1998, and granted summary judgment for defendants on the remaining state law claims on January 12, 1999.

DISCUSSION

I. Plaintiff's Antitrust Claims

Plaintiff argues that the district court erred in dismissing its antitrust claims for lack of standing. HN1[] We review a dismissal for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) de novo, accepting [4] all well-pleaded facts as true and drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the party dismissed. See Carreiro v. Rhodes Gill and Co., Ltd., 68 F.3d 1443, 1446 (1st Cir. 1995); Washington Legal Found. v. Massachusetts Bar Found., 993 F.2d 962, 971 (1st Cir. 1993). We do not, however, accept a plaintiff's unsupported conclusions or interpretations of law. Id. For the reasons stated below, we affirm the ruling of the district court.

Plaintiff's complaint alleges that McWane's acquisition of Anaco and Tyler has had and will have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in the New England market for CISPs, fittings, and couplings in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. Before reaching the merits of the federal antitrust claim, defendants moved the district court to dismiss on the grounds that the plaintiff lacks standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act.

HN2[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides a private cause of action for violations of the federal antitrust laws. The statute states:

Any person who shall [5] be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

15 U.S.C. § 15. HN3[] Despite the broad language of § 4, the Supreme Court has held that § 4 of the Clayton Act does not "allow every person tangentially affected by an antitrust violation to maintain an action to recover threefold damages for the injury to his business or property." Blue Shield [*10] of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982); see also Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 263, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184, 92 S. Ct. 885 (1972) ("Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation."). Instead, the Court has created a comprehensive antitrust standing doctrine to determine which persons are entitled to bring suit under the federal antitrust statutes. See Associated General Contractors of Cal., Inc., v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 529-35, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983); [6] Sullivan v. Tagliabue, 25 F.3d 43, 45 (1st Cir. 1994).

Standing is restricted in antitrust cases to avoid over deterrence. By limiting the availability of private antitrust actions to certain parties, federal courts "ensure that suits inappropriate to the goals of the antitrust laws are not litigated and that persons operating in the market do not restrict procompetitive behavior because of a fear of antitrust liability." Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1449 (11th Cir. 1991); see also Greater Rockford Energy & Tech. Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 394 (7th Cir. 1993) ("Given the potential scope of antitrust violations and the availability of treble damages, an overbroad reading of § 4 could result in 'overdeterrence,' imposing ruinous costs on antitrust defendants, severely burdening the judicial system, and possibly chilling economically efficient behavior."). The result is that standing in an antitrust case is "not simply a search for an injury in fact; it involves an analysis of prudential considerations aimed at preserving the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws." Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1448 [7] (citing Associated General, 459 U.S. at 535).

In Associated General, HN4 [↑] the Supreme Court set forth six factors that must be evaluated on a case-by-case basis to determine whether a plaintiff has standing to bring an antitrust action. See Sullivan, 25 F.3d at 46 (citing Associated General, 459 U.S. at 537-45). These factors are: (1) the causal connection between the alleged antitrust violation and harm to the plaintiff; (2) an improper motive; (3) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury and whether the injury was of a type that Congress sought to redress with the antitrust laws ("antitrust injury"); (4) the directness with which the alleged market restraint caused the asserted injury; (5) the speculative nature of the damages; and (6) the risk of duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages. See id.

Although courts must "consider the balance of factors in each case in an effort to guard against 'engrafting artificial limitations on the § 4 remedy,'" Sullivan, 25 F.3d at 46 (quoting McCready, 457 U.S. at 472), we can dispose of this case on the antitrust injury factor since [8] distributors, like Serpa, presumptively lack antitrust standing. Cf. SAS of Puerto Rico, Inc. v. Puerto Rico Tel. Co., 48 F.3d 39, 44-45 \(1st Cir. 1995\).

HN5 [↑] The Supreme Court has defined "antitrust injury" as an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\). The harm "should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be 'the type of loss that the claimed violations . . . would be likely to cause.'" Id. (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100, 125, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129, 89 S. Ct. 1562 \(1969\)). Consequently, a proper plaintiff "must prove more than injury causally linked to an illegal presence in the market." Id.

HN6 [↑] Competitors and consumers in the market where trade is allegedly restrained are presumptively the proper plaintiffs to allege antitrust injury. See [*11] SAS, 48 F.3d at 44-45. ("The presumptively 'proper' plaintiff [9] is a customer who obtains services in the threatened market or a competitor who seeks to serve that market."). In contrast, a commercial intermediary, such as a distributor or sales representative, generally lacks standing because its antitrust injury is too remote. See, e.g., G.K.A. Beverage Corp., 55 F.3d 762 at 767; SAS, 48 F.3d at 44; Fischer v. NWA, Inc., 883 F.2d 594, 600 \(8th Cir. 1989\); John Lenore & Co. v. Olympia Brewing Co., 550 F.2d 495, 500 \(9th Cir. 1977\); Universal Brands, Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 546 F.2d 30, 33 \(5th Cir. 1977\). A leading antitrust treatise explains:

HN7 [↑] Clearly lacking antitrust injury, and thus having no standing, is the firm whose injury is caused merely by the efficiency effects of a vertical merger. For example, once a firm has integrated vertically into distribution by acquiring one or more existing distributors, it may reduce costs by dealing only with its wholly-owned distributors. A distributor terminated for this reason might certainly suffer injury-in-fact, but it would not suffer antitrust injury as long as there were alternative sources of the product. [10]

Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 381'c, at 114 (Supp. 1999).

Fischer is indicative of the case law concerning antitrust injury. In Fischer, former stockholders of a regional airline, Fischer Bros. Aviation, filed an antitrust suit against Northwest Airlines. The complaint stated that on December 23, 1995 Northwest and Fischer signed an exclusive regional airline service agreement for all flights originating in Detroit. On January 23, 1986, one month after the Northwest/Fischer agreement was signed, Northwest announced that it was acquiring Republic Airlines. At that time, Republic had an ongoing, exclusive service contract for the Detroit market with Simmons Airlines. Unlike the Northwest/Fischer agreement, however, the Republic/Simmons agreement had no subsidization arrangement and was not terminable at will with six months notice.

On August 12, 1986, the Department of Transportation approved Northwest's acquisition of Republic. Although the acquisition created a conflict between the Fischer and Simmons regional service agreements, Northwest believed that a compromise could be reached, accommodating the contractual rights of both regional carriers and permitting [11] them to share the Detroit market. However, all attempts to resolve the Fischer/Simmons conflict failed, and Northwest was forced to terminate the Fischer contract.

Fischer subsequently filed suit in federal court, asserting antitrust claims against both Northwest and Simmons. Defendants moved for summary judgment, and the district court granted the motion. The Eighth Circuit concluded that Fischer had not suffered antitrust injury and therefore lacked antitrust standing. The court reasoned:

Our review of the record convinces us that Fischer failed to prove that it has suffered an antitrust injury. Fischer does not contend that it was a customer of Northwest forced to pay increased prices. Nor was Fischer a competitor injured by Northwest's acquisition of monopoly power (roughly 75% of the Detroit market). Rather, Fischer asserts that it suffered damage when it was terminated as Northwest's exclusive regional carrier in Detroit. We conclude that Fischer's termination was not caused by anticompetitive conduct or an anticompetitive effect of such conduct; rather, it was caused by Northwest's need to avoid employing two regional airlines where only one was required. We are convinced [12] that even in a city in which Northwest had far less than monopoly power, it would have been reluctant to waste resources on overlapping contractual agreements providing twice [*12] the regional connecting flight service required.

Fischer, 883 F.2d at 600.

Olympia Brewing Co. is also illustrative. The defendant, Olympia, acquired Hamm's Brewing Co. and terminated Hamm's distributors, including the plaintiff, John Lenore & Co. Lenore sued Olympia, alleging that the acquisition violated § 7 of the Clayton Act because it substantially lessened competition. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of Olympia, and the Ninth Circuit affirmed.

Citing Brunswick, the Ninth Circuit held that Lenore did not have standing to sue because it had not suffered antitrust injury. See Olympia Brewing Co., 550 F.2d at 500. The court reasoned that the acquisition of Hamm's violated the antitrust laws, if at all, because competition was reduced in the manufacture of beer, a market in which Lenore was neither a competitor nor a consumer.

Even though Lenore's injury may have ". . . occurred 'by reason of' the unlawful acquisitions, it did not occur [13] 'by reason of' that which made the acquisition unlawful." The terminations were an incidental matter which the merger may have made possible, but certainly did not cause. All Lenore really alleges is that because Olympia purchased the Hamm's brand, Lenore was replaced in favor of other distributors. This is insufficient to make out a case under § 7 which is concerned with competition, not competitors.

Id. (internal citations omitted).

Here, Serpa does not bring its claim as either a competitor or a consumer but as a distributor whose injuries resulted from the loss of its position as Anaco's exclusive sales representative in the New England market. This loss is neither connected with, nor resulted from, defendant's market power in the CISPs, fittings, and couplings industry. Therefore, plaintiff's injuries do not flow "from that which makes the defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 489. Because Serpa's injuries flow from the termination of its distributorship, and not from any anticompetitive effects of defendants' acquisition of Anaco, we find that Serpa has not suffered an antitrust injury. See G.K.A. Beverage Corp., 55 F.3d at 767; [14] SAS, 48 F.3d at 44; Fischer, 883 F.2d at 600; Olympia Brewing Co., 550 F.2d at 500.

In reaching this conclusion, we recognize that HN8 there may be some instances where presumptively disfavored plaintiffs do have standing to bring an antitrust action. See SAS, 48 F.3d at 45. In SAS, this court stated that although competitors and consumers are presumptively favored, "presumptively" does not mean always; there can be exceptions, for good cause shown." Id. Here, Serpa alleges that it is the "only truly viable plaintiff" because (1) "there is no real competitor on the manufacturing level," and (2) plumbing wholesalers, contractors, and home buyers have no incentive to file an antitrust suit because monopoly pricing in this market increases the costs to individual consumers by a relatively small margin. This Court has stated that HN9 the "most obvious reason for conferring standing on a second-best plaintiff is that, in some general category of cases, there may be no first best with the incentive to sue." Id. (citing Associated General, 459 U.S. at 542). In this case, however, we are satisfied that [15] at least some consumers, as well as defendants' competitors, have ample incentive to bring an antitrust claim.

The complaint alleges:

Shortly after the termination of Serpa as the representative for Anaco Couplings and Fittings, Anaco began to increase its prices for Couplings by announcing a wholesale list price increase of approximately seven percent (7%) and reducing the amount of discounts commonly provided to wholesalers.

A seven-plus percent increase in the cost of major plumbing components is not de minimus. Although the individual home [*13] buyer may be hindered by imperfect information, there is ample reason to believe that large contractors and commercial entities involved in the construction of "multi-unit residential and commercial buildings" have the necessary information, incentive, and resources to resist monopoly pricing by defendants.

As for defendants' competitors, the complaint indicates that they account for approximately fifteen percent (15%) of the New England market. We need look no further to rebut plaintiff's assertion that "there is no real competitor on the manufacturing level." The complaint, however, contains two additional allegations that we [16] believe are significant. First, the complaint states that in 1992 Anaco instituted an antitrust action in federal court against Tyler for engaging in predatory pricing. Second, the complaint alleges that defendants have acted in concert to "eliminate competition in the sale of Couplings and Fittings in the New England market." Although competitors are not necessarily injured by monopoly pricing, they are clearly injured by an abuse of monopoly power such as predatory pricing. Where, as here, the complaint alleges that defendants have an intent to eliminate competition in the New England market and have been sued for engaging in anticompetitive conduct in the recent past, there is every reason to believe that defendants' competitors have ample incentive to bring an antitrust claim. Accordingly, there is no reason to extend antitrust standing to Serpa, a distributor incidentally connected to the alleged antitrust violation in this case.

Finally, plaintiff's reliance on Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982), is misplaced. In McCready, the court held that a consumer of health services could sue under the antitrust [17] laws to redress an alleged conspiracy between her insurance plan and Virginia psychiatrists. The terms of the plan precluded participants from receiving reimbursements for treatment given by psychologists. Although McCready was not the immediate target of the alleged boycott, she was a plan beneficiary who had used a psychologist and had been denied reimbursement. The Supreme Court granted McCready standing, stating that her injury "was inextricably intertwined with the injury the conspirators sought to inflict on psychologists and the psychotherapy market." Id. at 484. The Court further stated that McCready was the "necessary step in effecting the ends of the alleged illegal conspiracy." Id. at 479.

Serpa urges the Court to apply the "inextricably intertwined" language of McCready to this case. We decline. First, this Court has already stated that "it is doubtful that this language -- if taken as a physical image -- was ever intended as a legal test of standing." SAS, 48 F.3d at 46. Second, while standing in McCready was conferred to a plaintiff who was only derivatively injured, the plaintiff was a consumer in the market [18] directly affected by the antitrust violation. Accordingly, subsequent Supreme Court jurisprudence has interpreted the McCready language as a legal conclusion; i.e., applying the "inextricably intertwined" standard to consumers and competitors. See Atlantic Richfield v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 345, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990); Associated General, 459 U.S. at 539; SAS, 48 F.3d at 46. Moreover, even if we thought "inextricably intertwined" was a proper test for standing, the facts do not support its application in this case. Specifically, Serpa's marginal pricing discretion belies plaintiff's assertion that defendants necessarily had to terminate Serpa to eliminate competition in the New England plumbing supply market. Therefore, under the circumstances of this case, we decline to interpret McCready broadly, believing that such an approach would needlessly expand the limits of antitrust standing currently in place in this Circuit.

[*14] II. Plaintiff's State Law Causes of Action

Following the district court's dismissal of the antitrust claims, the parties commenced discovery on plaintiff's remaining [19] state law claims. The complaint alleged (1) breach of contract; (2) interference with advantageous business relations; (3) breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and (4) violation of the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act, M.G.L.A. c. 93A. At the conclusion of the scheduled discovery period, defendants moved for summary judgment on these remaining counts, and the district court granted the motion on January 12, 1999.

A. Breach of Contract

Anaco informed Serpa of its intent to terminate Serpa as its exclusive sales representative by letter dated November 19, 1996. The letter indicated that Serpa's termination was effective immediately, but stated that Anaco would pay Serpa a duplicate commission for all orders received and invoiced for one month, rather than have Serpa serve as a "lame duck" sales representative for that time.

HN10[] Under Massachusetts law, a contract without a durational term is terminable at will by either party upon reasonable notice. See Teitelbaum v. Hallmark Cards Inc., 25 Mass. App. Ct. 555, 520 N.E.2d 1333, 1336 (Mass. App. Ct. 1988). Plaintiff argues that whether Anaco provided reasonable notice of termination [20] is a question of fact, and therefore summary judgment was inappropriate. We disagree.

In Teitelbaum, the court determined that HN11[] a breach of contract claim for inadequate notice of termination may be disposed of by motion for summary judgment. See 520 N.E.2d at 1336. In reaching this conclusion, the court stated that HN12[] reasonableness of notice "is measured in terms of the ability of the party affected by the termination to obtain a substitute arrangement." Id.

If that party is able to obtain another supplier before the performance of the party effecting termination becomes due, then it necessarily follows that the terminating party has furnished reasonable notice and will not be responsible for damages. Put another way, the adequacy of the notice is generally coextensive with the amount of harm that can be proved by the party who has incurred the loss of a supplier.

Id. Here, there is no evidence in the record that Serpa's injuries resulted from inadequate notice of termination. Serpa merely states that following its termination by Anaco it was deprived of its commissions on Anaco products. This is an inevitable loss and does not arise from the manner in which the [21] contract was terminated.

Plaintiff's reliance on Cherick Distributors, Inc. v. Polar Corporation, 41 Mass. App. Ct. 125, 669 N.E.2d 218 (Mass. App. Ct. 1996), is misplaced. In Cherick, the plaintiff's exclusive distributorship agreement was terminated by defendant on four days notice in retaliation for a letter plaintiff sent to other distributors urging the distributors to collectively negotiate with the defendant. The court determined that "whether the four-day termination notice constituted reasonable notice under commercial standards of good faith and fair dealing was a question properly put to the jury in this case." 669 N.E.2d at 220. The court reasoned:

The evidence indicated that the four-day notice left Cherick with no time to secure another supplier, make adjustments in its equipment and warehouse, and maintain its staff. Accordingly, there was adequate support for the jury's finding that four days' notice was unreasonable and that it constituted a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

Id. Here, in contrast, plaintiff did not present any evidence that a month was insufficient time to secure another supplier, [22] to make adjustments to its operations, or that it provided Serpa with an inadequate opportunity to maintain its staff. Accordingly, [*15] Cherick does not require reversal of the district court's ruling.

B. Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Plaintiff argues that its abrupt termination constitutes a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that is implicit in every contract. See Anthony's Pier Four, Inc. v. HBC Assocs., 411 Mass. 451, 583 N.E.2d 806, 820 (Mass. 1991) ("Every HN13[] contract implies good faith and fair dealing between the parties to it."). Plaintiff's argument is unavailing. The notice of termination was reasonable and there is nothing per se unreasonable about terminating an exclusive distributorship contract.

Plaintiff's reliance on Cherick is once again misplaced. The Cherick plaintiff was terminated by defendant on four days notice, in retaliation for its suggestion to similarly situated distributors that they band together and collectively bargain with the defendant manufacturer. In this case, there is no evidence that Anaco's termination of Serpa had a retaliatory motive, was undertaken in bad [23] faith, or otherwise violated public policy. Additionally, Serpa was paid commissions for a period of thirty days following its termination. Under these circumstances, we find that Serpa cannot show a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

C. Intentional Interference With Advantageous Business Relationship

HN14 [↑] Under Massachusetts law, to state a cause of action for intentional interference with an advantageous business relationship, plaintiff "must plead and prove that the defendants (1) engaged in intentional and willful acts (2) calculated to cause damage to the plaintiffs' lawful business (3) with an unlawful purpose and without right or justification, (4) thereby causing actual damage or loss." Doyle v. Hasbro, Inc., 884 F. Supp. 35, 40 (D. Mass. 1995); Chemawa Country Golf, Inc. v. Wnuk, 9 Mass. App. Ct. 506, 402 N.E.2d 1069, 1072 (Mass. App. Ct. 1980).

In this case, Serpa argues that "defendants acted in stealthy haste to terminate Serpa's contract to prevent it from acquiring competing product lines to sell to its former Anaco customers." As with its other contractual claims, Serpa relies on Cherick in [24] support of its argument. Again, however, we find that Cherick is inapposite. In Cherick, the court held "the jury could have found that the abrupt termination of Cherick's distributorship agreement, coinciding as it did with the planned meeting of Polar distributors, was calculated to put Cherick out of business and thereby discourage other distributors from meeting." 669 N.E.2d at 220. Here, in contrast, defendants made a legitimate business decision based on obvious efficiency concerns to eliminate one of two overlapping distributors. There is no evidence in the record of an unlawful or improper motive, and nothing in the record indicates that defendants' conduct was calculated to injure Serpa. Further, there is no evidence that a month is insufficient notice of termination. Accordingly, we find that summary judgment on this claim was proper.

D. Massachusetts General Laws ("Chapter 93A")

HN15 [↑] For conduct to violate Chapter 93(A) it must (1) fall within "the penumbra of some common-law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness"; (2) be "immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous"; and (3) "cause[] substantial injury to [other businessman]. [25] " Linkage Corp. v. Trustees of Boston Univ., 425 Mass. 1, 679 N.E.2d 191, 209 (Mass. 1997) (quoting PMP Assocs., Inc. v. Globe Newspaper Co., 366 Mass. 593, 321 N.E.2d 915, 917 (Mass. 1975)).

Here, Serpa relies on the "same facts underlying its federal antitrust claims to support its Massachusetts statutory claim."

[*16] Having carefully reviewed the record, we conclude there is no evidence of "immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous" conduct sufficient to state a Chapter 93A claim. See Bradley v. Dean Witter Realty, Inc., 967 F. Supp. 19, 29 (D. Mass. 1997). As a matter of law, "a refusal to deal, without a showing of monopolistic purpose or concerted effort to hinder free trade, is not an unfair trade practice under G.L.C. 93A, and is therefore not actionable." PMP Assocs., 321 N.E.2d at 919. Accordingly, summary judgment on this claim was proper.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, we affirm the judgment of the district court.

Ford Motor Co. v. Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc.

Court of Appeals of Texas, Fifth District, Dallas

December 9, 1999, Opinion Issued

No. 05-99-00031-CV

Reporter

1999 Tex. App. LEXIS 9187 *; 1999 WL 1126280

FORD MOTOR COMPANY, Appellant v. METRO FORD TRUCK SALES, INC., and DANIEL H. FOLEY, JR., Appellees

Notice: [*1] PURSUANT TO THE TEXAS RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE, UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS SHALL NOT BE CITED AS AUTHORITY BY COUNSEL OR BY A COURT.

Subsequent History: Petition for Review Denied April 5, 2001.

Related proceeding at Ford Motor Co. v. Motor Vehicle Bd. of the Texas DOT, 2000 Tex. App. LEXIS 2713 \(Tex. App. Austin, Apr. 27, 2000\)

Petition for review denied by, 04/05/2001

Appeal after remand at Ford Motor Co. v. Metro Ford Truck Sales, 2002 Tex. App. LEXIS 7318, 2002 WL 31296626 \(Tex. App. Dallas, Oct. 14, 2002\)

Prior History: On Appeal from the 44th Judicial District Court. Dallas County, Texas. Trial Court Cause No. 94-7174-B.

Metro Ford Truck Sales v. Ford Motor Co., 145 F.3d 320, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 14509 \(5th Cir. Tex., June 26, 1998\)

Disposition: AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED in part, REVERSED and REMANDED in part.

Core Terms

damages, summary judgment, dealers, trial court, trucks, matter of law, partial summary judgment, antitrust claim, attorney's fees, Antitrust, breach of contract, sales and service, zero damages, violations, nominal damages, federal court, customers, breached, discount, prices, summary judgment motion, cause of action, breach of contract claim, collateral estoppel, anti trust law, retail price, misrepresentations, charge-back, contractual, purchasers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN1 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Collateral estoppel, also known as issue preclusion, bars relitigation of any ultimate issue of fact actually litigated and essential to the judgment in a prior suit, regardless of whether the second suit is based upon the same cause of action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN2 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

When a party raises collateral estoppel as an affirmative defense to state antitrust claims, it must conclusively prove all of the elements of the defense as a matter of law to establish its entitlement to summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN3 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

Federal collateral estoppel rules apply when the doctrine is raised in state court proceeding following the conclusion of a related federal proceeding.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

HN4 [down] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

A movant has the burden of conclusively establishing that (1) the prior federal decision resulted in a judgment on the merits; (2) the same fact issues sought to be precluded must have been actually litigated in federal court; and (3) the disposition of those issues must have been necessary to the outcome of the prior federal litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless the plaintiff establishes that there is an express or implied agreement to set resale prices at some level.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN6 Summary Judgment, Appellate Review

A reviewing court may not reverse and render summary judgment to a party on a ground on which it did not move for summary judgment. See Tex. R. Civ. P. 166a\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Harmless & Invited Errors > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Reversible Errors

HN7 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

If a zero damage jury award is appropriate, any trial court error in granting a summary judgment on liability would be harmless.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN8 Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

Bare assertions of error without argument or authority waive error. See Tex. R. App. P. 38.1\(h\).

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review

HN9 Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

When an appellant challenges the denial of its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court reviews the record to determine if it contains more than a scintilla of evidence to support the jury's verdict.

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN10 [L] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

In an action for breach of contract, actual damages may be recovered when the loss is the natural, probable, and foreseeable consequence of the defendant's conduct.

Contracts Law > ... > Types of Damages > Compensatory Damages > General Overview

HN11 [L] Types of Damages, Compensatory Damages

Nominal damages are merely a vehicle to tax costs against the defendant. It is not the type of valid claim contemplated by the legislature which will entitle a litigant to the additional relief of attorney's fees. Generally, where the record shows as a matter of law that the plaintiff is entitled only to nominal damages, the appellate court will not reverse merely to enable him to recover such damages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN12 [L] Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

A movant for summary judgment has the burden of conclusively negating at least one element of each of the non-movant's causes of action or pleading and conclusively establishing each element of an affirmative defense.

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Waivers > General Overview

HN13 [L] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Waivers

Waiver is generally defined as the intentional relinquishment of a known right or conduct which warrants the inference of relinquishment of a known right. The elements of waiver include: (1) an existing right, benefit, or advantage; (2) knowledge, actual or constructive, of its existence; and (3) actual intent to relinquish the right, which can be inferred by conduct.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN14 [L] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

A defendant does not satisfy its burden with respect to a traditional motion for summary judgment by showing a plaintiff lacks evidence to support an element of its cause of action. This is because a showing that a plaintiff lacks evidence of an essential element of its cause of action does not conclusively prove the element does not exist.

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Liquidated Damages

HN15 [blue icon] Types of Damages, Liquidated Damages

To determine the enforceability of a contractual damages provision, the court must consider whether (1) the harm caused by the breach is incapable or difficult of estimation and (2) the amount of liquidated damages called for is a reasonable forecast of just compensation.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Types of Damages > Liquidated Damages

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

The question of whether a contractual provision is an enforceable liquidated damages provision or an unenforceable penalty is a question of law for the court to decide. However, where the summary judgment evidence does not conclusively establish the damage provision is unreasonable as matter of law, summary judgment is unsupportable on this ground.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN17 [blue icon] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 4413(36) § 5.02(b)(14) (1976 & Supp. 1999) precludes a manufacturer from requiring a dealer to pay or assume any part of any refund, rebate, discount, or other financial adjustment made by the manufacturer to, or in favor of, any customer of a dealer, unless the dealer voluntarily agrees.

Judges: Before Justices Lagarde, James, and Roach. Opinion By Justice Roach.

Opinion by: JOHN R. ROACH

Opinion

Opinion By Justice Roach

This matter arises out of a dispute between Ford Motor Company (Ford) and one of its franchisees, Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc. (Metro),¹ over Ford's Competitive Price Assistance (CPA) program. After the trial court granted partial summary judgments (1) establishing Ford's liability on Metro's claims for breach of contract and antitrust violations and (2) dismissing Ford's affirmative claims, a jury trial was held on the issues of Metro's damages and attorney's fees. The jury awarded zero damages on Metro's breach of contract and antitrust claims, but awarded Metro $ 800,000 in attorney's fees. The trial court thereafter entered judgment on the verdict.

¹ At all relevant times, appellee Daniel H. Foley, Jr. was the dealer-principal of Metro.

[*2] On appeal, Ford challenges the award of attorney's fees and the trial court's partial summary judgment rulings. Additionally, Ford contends the trial court erred in failing to grant Ford's motion for summary judgment on its claims for fraud, breach of contract, and RICO violations. In a cross-appeal, Metro challenges the jury's zero damage award and other issues related to damages.

For the reasons set forth below, we reverse and render judgment that Metro take-nothing on its antitrust claim. We affirm the jury's finding of no damages and reverse the attorney's fees award. We reverse the summary judgment on Ford's affirmative claims and remand those claims for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

At all times relevant to this appeal, Metro was a licensed motor vehicle dealership authorized to sell Ford trucks. Ford's CPA program, the focus of this appeal, was a pricing system that reduced the dealer's cost of a medium- or heavy-duty truck based on information the dealer provided to Ford. There were different levels of CPA. "Sales Advantage CPA" was the base level discount available to all dealers on every truck simply by providing [*3] Ford with the customer's name, the vehicle specifications, and desired options. Further wholesale price reductions were available under "Appeal Level CPA." To request Appeal Level CPA, the dealer provided Ford with details of the competitive situation surrounding the prospective purchase, in addition to the basic information above. Ford would analyze the situation and determine what additional amount of CPA, if any, would be granted. Ford also maintained standardized CPA allowances above the basic Sales Advantage CPA for a schedule of large volume purchasers. These standardized allowances were available to any dealer selling to a purchaser listed on the schedule without demonstrating individualized competitive need. CPA "packages," which locked in a specific CPA amount for all trucks ordered by a specific customer during a particular period of time, also avoided the regular CPA appeal process.

It is uncontested that, in order to get increased CPA on particular transactions, Metro provided Ford with incorrect names of the customers who were purchasing certain trucks. Metro asserted Ford representatives instructed it to use the names of customers eligible for standardized CPA allowances [*4] or CPA packages to get more CPA while circumventing the regular CPA appeal process. When Ford discovered Metro's misrepresentations, it threatened to terminate Metro's franchise. Metro responded by filing this lawsuit in state district court in Dallas. Additionally, Metro filed a protest with the Texas Motor Vehicle Board (TMVB) contesting Ford's proposed franchise termination and charge-back.² Ford counterclaimed in state court, seeking actual and punitive damages based on Metro's alleged misrepresentations.

[*5] Various motions for summary judgment were filed by both parties. Ultimately, the trial court granted Metro's motion for partial summary judgment on Ford's affirmative claims and denied Ford's motion. Further, the trial court granted Metro's motion for partial summary judgment on its breach of contract and state antitrust claims, leaving only the issues of Metro's damages and attorney's fees to be decided by a jury. The jury found Metro suffered no damages but awarded Metro $ 800,000 in attorney's fees. Both Ford and Metro appealed.

METRO'S CLAIMS AGAINST FORD

In its second and third issues, Ford urges the trial court erred in granting Metro's partial summary judgment motion on its breach of contract and antitrust claims and in denying its motion on these claims. If Ford was entitled to summary judgment on either of these claims, we need not address many of the other issues presented by Ford and ² After an audit of Metro's books, Ford sought to charge back to Metro $ 3.1 million of allegedly improperly obtained CPA pursuant to a provision in Ford's Sales and Service Agreement with Metro. While this lawsuit was pending in the trial court, the TMVB case proceeded. On March 5, 1998, a final order was signed prohibiting Ford's proposed CPA charge-back for the 317 trucks on which Ford claimed Metro misrepresented the name of the purchaser and dismissing Metro's protest of unreasonable discrimination under the motor vehicle code. The order further provided that Metro's franchise agreement with Ford be terminated after Metro's business was sold for an amount to be determined by an appraisal as described in the order. The order is currently on appeal before the Austin Court of Appeals.

Metro. We therefore begin our discussion by analyzing the merits of Metro's breach of contract and antitrust claims to determine whether Ford conclusively established its entitlement to summary judgment on these claims.

A. Antitrust Violations

At one point in this litigation, Ford [*6] had this case removed to federal court, and Metro added federal antitrust claims.³ Ultimately, the federal trial judge granted Ford summary judgment on all of Metro's federal claims and remanded Metro's remaining state law claims and Ford's counterclaims to state court for resolution. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed. Metro Ford Truck Sales, Inc., v. Ford Motor Co., 145 F.3d 320 (5th Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1068, 142 L. Ed. 2d 660, 119 S. Ct. 798 (1999). Ford argues the federal court judgment collaterally estops Metro from pursuing its state antitrust claims for price discrimination under the Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act of 1983.⁴ We agree with Ford.

[*7] Collateral estoppel, also known as issue preclusion, bars relitigation of any ultimate issue of fact actually litigated and essential to the judgment in a prior suit, regardless of whether the second suit is based upon the same cause of action. See Bonniwell v. Beech Aircraft Corp., 663 S.W.2d 816, 818 (Tex. 1984). HN2[] Because Ford raised collateral estoppel as an affirmative defense to Metro's state antitrust claims, it must conclusively prove all of the elements of the defense as a matter of law to establish its entitlement to summary judgment. See Swilley v. Hughes, 488 S.W.2d 64, 67 (Tex. 1972). HN3[] Federal collateral estoppel rules apply when the doctrine is raised in state court proceeding following the conclusion of a related federal proceeding. Shell Pipeline v. Coastal States Trading, 788 S.W.2d 837, 843 (Tex. App.-Houston [1st Dist.]1990, writ denied). Accordingly, HN4[] Ford had the burden of conclusively establishing that (1) the prior federal decision resulted in a judgment on the merits; (2) the same fact issues sought to be precluded must have been actually litigated in federal court; and (3) the disposition of those issues must [*8] have been necessary to the outcome of the prior federal litigation. See id.

The record reflects Metro's federal antitrust claims and state antitrust claims⁵ were both based on the same underlying facts - that Ford used the CPA program to control indirectly the retail price of the trucks sold by Ford dealers. Metro claimed that by setting extremely high wholesale prices, Ford required Metro to request CPA for every transaction, thereby controlling the retail price. In granting summary judgment to Ford on Metro's vertical price fixing claims under federal law, the federal trial court noted that Metro did not allege an agreement between itself and Ford and it did not submit evidence of an express agreement between itself and Ford to fix retail prices. The federal trial court also determined that because the summary judgment evidence established Ford only set wholesale prices, and the CPA program increased interbrand competition, Metro could not prevail on its vertical price fixing claim under section one of the Sherman Act.

[*9] The purpose of the Texas Antitrust Act is to maintain and promote economic competition and its provisions must be construed in harmony with federal antitrust laws to the extent consistent with this purpose. TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.04 (Vernon 1987). Because section 15.05(a) of the Texas Antitrust Act tracks the language and, in fact, is taken from section one of the Sherman Antitrust Act, we look to federal judicial interpretations of this section of the federal act in applying section 15.05(a). See DeSantis v. Wackenhut Corp., 793 S.W.2d 670, 687 (Tex. 1990). HN5[] Under section one of the Sherman Act, a vertical restraint is not illegal per se unless the plaintiff establishes that there is an express or implied agreement to set resale prices at some level. Business Elecs. v. Sharp Elecs., 485 U.S. 717, 735-36, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988). Because there

³ Metro brought the federal antitrust claims under section one of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a).

⁴ TEX. BUS. & COM. CODE ANN. § 15.01, et. seq. (Vernon 1987 & Supp. 1999).

HN1[

⁵ Although Metro has not identified the particular section of the Texas Antitrust Act under which it brings its claims, the only section that is arguably applicable to Metro's claims is section 15.05 (a).

was no allegation or proof of an agreement between Ford and Metro allowing Ford to dictate retail prices, the federal court found the summary judgment evidence established Metro was free to set its own resale prices.

Metro asserts that unlike its federal [*10] counterpart, the Texas Antitrust Act merely requires Metro to establish that Ford (1) has engaged in a general policy of determining the prices at which its dealers can sell Ford trucks and (2) accomplished that result by a course of conduct designed and intended for that purpose and calculated to accomplish it. See Ford Motor Co. v. State of Tex., 142 Tex. 5, 175 S.W.2d 230 (Tex. 1943). Although the Ford decision has never been overruled, we cannot overlook the fact that it was decided forty years before the current antitrust laws were enacted. In Ford, the supreme court addressed the question of whether the state attorney general had successfully pleaded a viable cause of action against Ford under the former state antitrust laws. Noting that it was a violation of state antitrust laws for one party to enter into a contract with another party whereby it is agreed that goods or products sold by the one party to the other party for resale shall be resold at prices to be determined by the original seller, the court stated any intentional course of conduct by the parties to a contract which accomplishes that result also violates the state antitrust act. [*11] Ford, 175 S.W.2d at 233. Because Ford made a contract which suggested it desired to fix prices to the extent lawful, furnished dealers with suggested retail prices and provided termination of the contract at will, the Ford court found a fact issue as to the control of resale prices. Ford, 175 S.W.2d at 235.

In the present case, the federal court has already determined that Ford merely sets wholesale prices and that Metro is free to determine the retail price of trucks its sells. Such a finding precludes Metro's state antitrust action even under the standards of Ford. Moreover, nothing shows that construing section 15.05(a) of the Texas Antitrust Statute in harmony with section one of the Sherman Act would be inconsistent with the intent of the Texas antitrust laws. On the contrary, to hold that Metro's evidence establishes a question of fact as to Ford's liability under the state antitrust act when the record before the federal court conclusively established Ford did not control retail pricing either directly or indirectly and increased interbrand competition, would fly in the face of the purpose of the Texas Antitrust Act. Accordingly, the trial court erred in granting Metro's motion for summary [*12] judgment on Ford's liability under state antitrust law. Instead, it should have rendered summary judgment to Ford based on collateral estoppel.

B. Breach of Contract

Ford also moved for summary judgment on Metro's breach of contract claim, asserting there was no evidence that Ford breached its contract with Metro. Ford asserted Metro's claims based on Ford's proposed termination and charge-back were barred as a matter of law because the uncontested evidence of Metro's misrepresentations in connection with Ford's CPA program conclusively established Ford's contractual right to terminate and charge back these excess amounts based on Section 17(b) and 12(b) of the Sales and Service Agreement. Metro likewise moved for partial summary judgment on its breach of contract claim arguing Ford's failure to publish appeal level CPA constituted a breach of paragraph ten of the sales and service agreement as a matter of law.

On appeal, Ford argues Metro's misrepresentations in connection with its CPA requests constitute a material breach of the sales and service agreement barring Metro's breach of contract claim as a matter of law. A review of the record reveals that Ford never moved for [*13] summary judgment on Metro's claim that Ford breached the provisions of paragraph ten of the sales and service agreement. To the extent that Ford now asserts Metro's misrepresentations and other alleged breaches of the sales and service contract bar Metro's breach of contract against Ford as a matter of law, these claims have not been preserved for appeal. HN6[] We may not reverse and render summary judgment to Ford on a ground on which it did not move for summary judgment. See TEX. R. CIV. P. 166a(c).

In any event, even assuming this argument was properly preserved for review, Ford has failed to present any compelling argument or authority as to how Metro's alleged breaches of the sales and service agreement precluded Metro from pursuing a breach of contract action based on paragraph ten of the sales and service agreement. Ford has not asserted its obligations under paragraph ten were contingent upon the provisions Metro is alleged to have violated. We therefore conclude Ford failed to establish its entitlement to summary judgment on Metro's breach of contract claim as a matter of law.

Having concluded that Ford was not entitled to summary judgment on Metro's breach of contract claim, [*14] we now turn to whether the trial court erred in granting Metro's motion for partial summary judgment on this cause of action. However, we must address Ford's contention that the trial court erred in this respect only if we conclude there is reversible error in connection with the jury's zero damage award. HN7[] In other words, if the record reveals the zero damage award was appropriate, any trial court error in granting the summary judgment on liability would be harmless. Accordingly, we begin our review with Metro's challenge to the jury finding on damages.

In the second, fourth, and sixth issues presented in its cross-appeal, Metro generally complains the trial court erred in entering judgment on the jury's damage award.⁶ [*15] Metro contends that the jury's failure to award damages is contrary to the great weight and preponderance of the evidence and that Metro established its damages as a matter of law. We first address Metro's contentions that the trial court erred in failing to award Metro a judgment notwithstanding the verdict for actual or nominal damages.⁷

HN9[] When an appellant challenges the denial of its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, we review the record to determine if it contains more than a scintilla of evidence to support the jury's verdict. Brush v. Reata Oil & Gas Corp., 984 S.W.2d 720, 724 (Tex. App.-Waco 1998, pet. denied). Metro claims that the uncontested evidence in this case established that if Ford had not breached the sales and service agreement and instead offered Metro published prices and discounts equal to those offered other dealers, Metro would have been entitled to purchase its trucks for the same price Ford sold comparable trucks to any of Ford's other dealers. Metro further argues that it conclusively established, through the testimony of computer expert and database engineer Fred A. Kinder, Jr., the amount of its damages from Ford's breach at $ 4,967,485.

Kinder [*16] testified that he went through Ford's records and calculated Metro's damages based on the difference between the amount of CPA Ford gave Metro for a particular truck purchase and the highest CPA Ford gave another dealer on a "comparable" truck for purchases made from 1991-1997. Metro claims Kinder's testimony with respect to the total amount of Ford's overcharges conclusively established the amount of money that would place Metro in the same position it would have been in if Ford had not breached the contract and, therefore, requires us to reverse the trial court's judgment and render judgment for Metro in the amount $ 4,967,485 in actual damages. Ford asserts the underlying basis for Metro's damage calculation was called into question by Ford's expert Dr. Thomas Saving. Dr. Saving testified that Metro's method of determining comparable trucks was invalid because it did not consider different market factors such as the time of the sale, geographic location of the sale, and the number of trucks purchased, all of which would dramatically effect the price of trucks sold to different dealers.

HN10[] In an action for breach of contract, actual damages may be recovered when the loss is the natural, [*17] probable, and foreseeable consequence of the defendant's conduct. Mead v. Johnson Group, Inc., 615 S.W.2d 685, 687 \(Tex. 1981\). Although Metro claimed it would have been entitled to the Appeal Level CPA given to other dealers for certain truck purchasers had these figures been published, Metro presented no evidence that its truck purchases matched all the relevant criteria Ford considered when giving out Appeal Level CPA to other dealers for a particular purchase. In other words, the jury was free to find that even if Ford had breached its contract with Metro by not publishing Appeal Level CPA it had given to other dealers on all other truck sales, Metro did not establish that it met all of the criteria Ford used to determine entitlement to Appeal Level CPA in a given transaction. Accordingly, we conclude the trial court did not err in denying Metro's request for JNOV for damages. For the same reasons, we also conclude that the jury verdict awarding Metro zero damages is not against the great weight of the evidence.

⁶ In its fifth issue presented, Metro complains about the trial court's restriction on Metro's argument and evidence with respect to Ford's liability and the proper measure of damages. It also complains about the trial court's failure to limit Ford's evidence and argument relating to Metro's profits. Although Metro generally contends these alleged errors contributed to the jury's improper damage award, Metro does not provide any argument or authority with respect to why these particular trial court rulings were error and how these alleged errors resulted in an improper verdict. HN8[] Bare assertions of error without argument or authority waive error. See TEX. R. APP. P. 38.1\(h\).

⁷ Having concluded that Metro was collaterally estopped as a matter of law from pursuing its state antitrust claims, we need not address Metro's third issue requesting a JNOV for punitive damages under that cause of action.

Presumably in response to Ford's contention that the $ 800,000 attorney's fees award must be reversed because the jury found Metro sustained zero damages, [*18] Metro also claims the trial court erred in failing to award a judgment notwithstanding the verdict for nominal damages. Specifically, Metro argues that because Ford was found to have breached paragraph ten of the sales and service agreement as a matter of law, the trial court should have awarded Metro nominal damages for violating Metro's contractual rights, even if Metro failed to prove actual damages. Ford, on the other hand, contends that nominal damages alone, even if Metro were entitled to them as a matter of law, would not support a recovery of attorney's fees under section 38.001 of the Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code.⁸ See ITT Commercial Fin. Corp. v. Riehn, 796 S.W.2d 248, 256 (Tex. App.-Dallas 1990, no writ). We agree with Ford.

HN11[] Nominal damages [*19] are merely a vehicle to tax costs against the defendant. See id. at 257. "[It] is not the type of 'valid' claim contemplated by the Legislature which will entitle a litigant to the 'additional' relief of attorney's fees." Id. Generally, where the record shows as a matter of law that the plaintiff is entitled only to nominal damages, the appellate court will not reverse merely to enable him to recover such damages. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Employers Cas. Co., 380 S.W.2d 610, 614 (Tex. 1964). The record before us reveals no reason to deviate from this general rule. Because the jury's finding of zero damages is legally and factually sufficient, and nominal damages were an insufficient basis for the recovery of attorney's fees, we reverse the judgment awarding Metro $ 800,000 in attorney's fees and hold that Metro is not entitled to recover an award of attorney's fees under the facts of this case.

FORD'S CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

Ford's fourth and fifth issues address Ford's affirmative claims against Metro and Daniel H. Foley. Ford asserts the trial court erred in granting summary judgment for Metro on these claims and should have granted its motion [*20] for partial summary judgment holding Metro and Foley liable for fraud, breach of contract, and RICO violations. We begin our analysis by addressing the propriety of the trial court's ruling on Metro's motion.

In its motion, Metro asserted Ford could not establish damages on any of its causes of action as a matter of law because Ford's damages were: (1) nothing more than lost profits and Ford stipulated in federal court it was not seeking lost profits; (2) barred by section 5.02(b) (14) of the Texas Motor Vehicle Commission Code; (3) barred as a penalty; and (4) speculative.⁹ HN12[] As movant for summary judgment, Metro had the burden of conclusively negating at least one element of each of Ford's causes of action or pleading and conclusively establishing each element of an affirmative defense. Science Spectrum, Inc. v. Martinez, 941 S.W.2d 910, 911 (Tex. 1997).

[*21] Initially, Ford claims its stipulation that it was not seeking lost profits, made during a discovery hearing in federal court, did not waive its right to recover any and all damages from Metro's misrepresentations with respect to Ford's CPA program. After reviewing the summary judgment record, we agree.

HN13[] Waiver is generally defined as the intentional relinquishment of a known right or conduct which warrants the inference of relinquishment of a known right. FDIC v. Attayi, 745 S.W.2d 939, 946 (Tex. App.-Houston [1st Dist.] 1988, no writ). The elements of waiver include: (1) an existing right, benefit, or advantage; (2) knowledge, actual or constructive, of its existence; and (3) actual intent to relinquish the right, which can be inferred by conduct. Id.

⁸ Section 38.001 permits the recovery of reasonable attorney's fees in addition to the amount of a valid claim based on an oral or written contract. TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 38.001\(8\) (1997).

⁹ Additionally, Metro claimed it was entitled to summary judgment on Ford's claim for breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing asserting Texas does not recognize such a tort. On appeal, Ford does not address this ground for summary judgment and instead focuses on Metro's arguments relating to Ford's damages. The failure to present any argument on Metro's alternative ground for summary judgment on Ford's claim for breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing results in waiver. See Martin v. Cohen, 804 S.W.2d 201, 202 (Tex. App.-Houston [14th Dist.] 1991, no writ). Accordingly the trial court's judgment with respect to this cause of action will not be disturbed.

Here, Metro's attempt to equate Ford's request for the return of CPA Metro allegedly obtained by fraud with a claim for lost profits is unconvincing. Irrespective of how the parties now try to characterize Ford's measure of damages, the summary judgment evidence does not conclusively establish that Ford waived its right to recover the measure of damages it now seeks. Accordingly, Metro was not entitled [*22] to summary judgment on this ground.

Metro next claimed Ford is unable to ascertain its damages within a reasonable degree of certainty because Ford cannot prove that Metro would have ordered and purchased the trucks if it had not been given the CPA discount it actually received. HN14 A defendant does not satisfy its burden with respect to a traditional motion for summary judgment by showing a plaintiff lacks evidence to support an element of its cause of action. Wochner v. Johnson, 875 S.W.2d 470, 473 (Tex. App.-Waco 1994, no writ); State v. Seventeen Thousand and No/100 Dollars U.S. Currency, 809 S.W.2d 637, 640 (Tex. App.-Corpus Christi 1991, no writ); Christensen v. Sherwood Ins. Servs., 758 S.W.2d 801, 804 (Tex. App.-Texarkana 1988, writ denied). This is because a showing that a plaintiff lacks evidence of an essential element of its cause of action does not conclusively prove the element does not exist. Christensen, 758 S.W.2d at 804. Accordingly, we conclude summary judgment was not proper on this ground.

Metro's summary judgment motion additionally claimed Ford's contractual damages under paragraph 12(b) of the [*23] franchise agreement was in actuality a penalty clause and therefore unenforceable. Ford counters that the clause is a reasonable forecast of just compensation. Paragraph 12(b) of the franchise agreement provides:

The Company may charge back to the Dealer all payments or credits made by the Company to the Dealer pursuant to [warranty and repair] claims or otherwise which were improperly claimed or paid.

HN15 To determine the enforceability of a contractual damages provision, we must consider whether (1) the harm caused by the breach is incapable or difficult of estimation and (2) the amount of liquidated damages called for is a reasonable forecast of just compensation. Phillips v. Phillips, 820 S.W.2d 785, 788 (Tex. 1991). In support of its claim that this contractual provision was a penalty, Metro submitted summary judgment evidence that Ford considered the charge-back a penalty. It also claimed the provision was not carefully drawn because it would allow Ford to charge back all discounts granted even if a dealer merely reported an incorrect zip code. We disagree with Metro.

The provision in question permits charge-backs only for payments or credits improperly made. [*24] Consequently, if the incorrect zip code had no effect on the payment or credit to be given, Ford would not be entitled to a charge-back. Moreover, Metro presented no summary judgment evidence that the amount of charge-backs was an unreasonable forecast of just compensation. In so concluding, we recognize HN16 the question of whether a contractual provision is an enforceable liquidated damages provision or an unenforceable penalty is a question of law for the court to decide. Id. However, where, as here, the summary judgment evidence did not conclusively establish the damage provision was unreasonable as matter of law, summary judgment is unsupportable on this ground.

Finally, Metro sought summary judgment on the ground that section 5.02(b)(14) of the Texas Motor Vehicle Commission Code barred all of Ford's damage claims as a matter of law. Ford asserts summary judgment could not have been granted on this ground because the section does not apply to Ford's right to recover damages for discounts Metro received from Ford by fraud.

HN17 Section 5.02(b)(14) precludes a manufacturer from requiring a dealer to pay or assume any part of any refund, rebate, discount, or other financial adjustment [*25] made by the manufacturer to, or in favor of, any customer of a dealer, unless the dealer voluntarily agrees. TEX. REV. CIV. STAT. ANN. art. 4413(36) § 5.02(b)(14) (Vernon 1976 & Supp. 1999).

Although Metro submitted deposition testimony from Ford representatives and Dr. Saving stating CPA was a discount program designed to benefit a dealer's customers, other summary judgment evidence indicated CPA was a discount Ford gives to dealers on the wholesale price charged for a truck. The evidence suggested it was the dealer who ultimately decided if and what amount of CPA would be passed on to the retail customer. Because the summary judgment evidence did not conclusively establish Ford's CPA program provided a benefit to or in favor of Metro's customers, Metro was not entitled to summary judgment on this basis. Having determined that Metro was not entitled to summary judgment on any of the grounds it raised relating to Ford's claims for breach of contract, fraud and RICO violations, we conclude the trial court erred in granting Metro's motion for summary judgment on these claims and turn next to Ford's motion.

Ford claims it was entitled to partial summary [*26] judgment holding Metro liable for breach of contract, fraud, and RICO violations. As a general rule, when both sides move for summary judgment and the trial court grants one motion and denies the other, we should review the summary judgment evidence presented by both sides and determine all issues presented. See Jones v. Strauss, 745 S.W.2d 898, 900 (Tex. 1988). However, after reviewing the record in this case, we question whether the trial court ever considered the merits of Ford's motion. There is no written order expressly denying Ford's motion for partial summary judgment. Moreover, Ford's motion does not appear to have been heard at the same time as Metro's defensive motion for summary judgment on the same claims. Because the trial court concluded Ford could not establish damages on any of its causes of action as matter of law, it is likely the trial court never considered the merits of Ford motion, which addressed liability issues only. Consequently, the granting of Metro's summary judgment did not necessarily imply a denial of Ford's motion for partial summary judgment, but instead made the motion moot. There being no indication in the record that the trial [*27] court ever ruled on the merits of Ford's motion for partial summary judgment, we conclude Ford has failed to preserve for appellate review the trial court's error in failing to grant the motion. See Tex. R. App. P. 33.1(a).

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, we sustain Ford's complaints regarding the trial court's error in connection with Metro's state antitrust claims and hold that these claims were barred as a matter of law by collateral estoppel. We also conclude the evidence was legally and factually sufficient to support the jury's zero damage award and the trial court did not err in refusing to grant Metro judgment notwithstanding the verdict for actual damages. Additionally, we conclude that because nominal damages cannot support the jury's attorney's fees pursuant to section 38.001 of the Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code, the trial court erred in entering judgment on that portion of the jury's verdict. With respect to Ford's affirmative claims against Metro and Foley, we conclude that Metro failed to conclusively establish Ford's damages were unrecoverable as a matter of law. Whether Ford was entitled to partial summary judgment on Metro's and Foley's liability for fraud, [*28] breach of contract and RICO violations has not been preserved for review.

We affirm the trial court's judgment that Metro recover zero damages on its breach of contract claim. We reverse the trial court's judgment as to Metro's state antitrust claims and render judgment that Metro take nothing on these claims. We also reverse that part of the judgment awarding Metro $ 800,000 in attorney's fees. Finally, we reverse the trial court's judgment in favor of Metro and Foley on Ford's breach of contract, fraud and RICO claims and remand these causes to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

JOHN R. ROACH

JUSTICE

Ass'n of Wash. Pub. Hosp. Dists. v. Philip Morris, Inc.

United States District Court for the Western District of Washington

December 13, 1999, Decided ; December 13, 1999, Filed; December 14, 1999, Entered

NO. C98-1675Z

Reporter

79 F. Supp. 2d 1219 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19408 **

ASSOCIATION OF WASHINGTON PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICTS, a Washington unincorporated association, et al., Plaintiffs, vs. PHILIP MORRIS INCORPORATED, et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [1] Defendants' motion to dismiss GRANTED.

Core Terms

plaintiffs', patients, smokers, antitrust, defendants', injuries, costs, tobacco company, damages, proximate cause, unreimbursed, tobacco, anti trust law, special duty, conspiracy, smoking, unjust enrichment, products, public hospital, derivative, illnesses, nicotine, tobacco product, public health, allegations, fraudulent, addiction, treating, remote, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), the court must accept as true all plaintiffs' allegations and construe those allegations in the light most favorable to plaintiffs. Thus, the complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim only if plaintiffs can prove no set of facts which would entitle them to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Both the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and RICO, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), provide a private right of action only to those plaintiffs injured in their business or property by reason of a violation of the laws substantive provisions.

79 F. Supp. 2d 1219, *1219 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19408, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Securities Law > RICO Actions > Standing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Both the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, and RICO, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), require that the alleged violation be a proximate cause of the injury suffered. Proximate cause means that the injury to business and property must be directly caused by the conduct alleged. Thus, plaintiffs asserting antitrust or RICO claims must establish both "standing" or "proximate cause" as well as an "antitrust injury" to recover. Each requirement must be analyzed separately.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN4 [down] Private Actions, Standing

The concept of antitrust standing requires the court to evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them. The Supreme Court identifies several factors to be considered in determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: (1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws are intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN5 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust laws protect competition, not competitors. The corollary is that the injured party must be a participant in the same market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6 [down] Private Actions, Remedies

A direct relationship between the injury and the alleged wrongdoing is one of the central elements of proximate causation in antitrust claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN7 [down] Private Actions, Standing

A direct relationship between the injury and the alleged wrongdoing, although not the sole requirement of RICO and antitrust proximate causation, is one of its central elements. Thus, a plaintiff who complains of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts is generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover.

79 F. Supp. 2d 1219, *1219 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19408, 1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Even if plaintiffs could demonstrate standing, they must also demonstrate an antitrust injury. An "antitrust injury" is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Plaintiffs must have suffered their alleged antitrust injury in the market where competition is being restrained.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN9 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Parties whose injuries, though flowing from that which makes the defendant's conduct unlawful, are experienced in another market do not suffer antitrust injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN10 [] Private Actions, Remedies

Because the plaintiffs and defendants are in different markets, no "antitrust injury" occurs.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 [] Justiciability, Standing

Plaintiffs must have standing to assert their RICO claims against the defendants. The standing requirements under RICO are similar to those under antitrust law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN12 [] Justiciability, Standing

At the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss courts presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim. Nothing more is needed to confer standing.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

79 F. Supp. 2d 1219, *1219 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19408, 1

HN13 [L] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The RICO statute also requires that the alleged violation of the law be a "proximate cause" of the injury suffered.

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN14 [L] Elements, Causation

An essential element of any claim for fraud is proximate cause.

Torts > ... > Elements > Duty > General Overview

HN15 [L] Elements, Duty

The existence of a special duty is an issue of law in Washington.

Torts > ... > Elements > Duty > General Overview

HN16 [L] Elements, Duty

Proximate cause is required for a claim of breach of special duty.

Torts > ... > Elements > Duty > General Overview

HN17 [L] Elements, Duty

A claim of a breach of a special duty requires "physical harm" to plaintiffs.

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Choses in Action

Contracts Law > Remedies > Restitution

HN18 [L] Personal Property, Choses in Action

A person confers a benefit upon another if he gives to the other possession of or some interest in money, land, chattels, or choses in action, performs services beneficial to or at the request of the other, satisfies a debt or duty of the other, or in any way adds to the others' security or advantage. He confers a benefit not only where he adds to the property of another, but also where he saves the other from expense or loss. The word benefit, therefore, denotes any form of advantage.

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN19 [L] Business Torts, Unfair Business Practices

79 F. Supp. 2d 1219, *1219 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19408, 1

In order to recover under a claim stated under the Washington Consumer Protection Act, Wash. Rev. Code §§ 19.86.020-030, plaintiffs must allege an injury to their business or property causally related to the alleged unfair act or practice.

Torts > Remedies > Damages

HN20 [] Remedies, Damages

Expenses for personal injuries are not injuries to business or property under the Washington Consumer Protection Act.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN21 [] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

In Washington, a civil conspiracy claim must be based on underlying "actionable wrongs," "overt acts," or a tort working damage to the plaintiffs. A conspiracy claim fails if the underlying act or claim is not actionable.

Counsel: For ASSOCIATION OF WASHINGTON PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICTS, GRAYS HARBOR COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, KING COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, OKANOGAN COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 4, plaintiffs: Bradley J. Berg, Christopher Kane, Roger D. Mellem, Michael K Vaska, FOSTER PEPPER & SHEFELMAN, SEATTLE, WA.

For ADAMS COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, ADAMS COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 3, AFFILIATED HEALTH SERVICES, CHELAN COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, CLALLAM COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, CLALLAM COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, DOUGLAS GRANT LINCOLN OKANOGAN COUNTIES PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 6, FERRY COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, GARFIELD COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT, GRANT COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, GRANT COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, JEFFERSON COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, KENNEWICK PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT, KING COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, KITTITAS COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, LEWIS COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, MASON COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, OKANOGAN COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 3, OKANOGAN AND DOUGLAS COUNTIES [2] PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, PACIFIC COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, PACIFIC COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 3, PEND OREILLE COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, SKAGIT CO PUBLIC HOS, SKAGIT COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, SKAGIT AND WHATCOM COUNTIES PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 304, SNOHOMISH COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1, SNOHOMISH COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 2, SNOHOMISH COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 3, WHITMAN COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 1-A, WHITMAN COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 3, plaintiffs: Christopher Kane, FOSTER PEPPER & SHEFELMAN, SEATTLE, WA.

For GRANT COUNTY PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT NO 3, PROSSER PUBLIC HOSPITAL DISTRICT, plaintiffs: Michael K Vaska, FOSTER PEPPER & SHEFELMAN, SEATTLE, WA.

For PHILIP MORRIS INC, defendant: John Wentworth Phillips, HELLER EHRMAN WHITE & MCAULIFFE, SEATTLE, WA.

For R J REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, defendant: Bradley S. Keller, BYRNES & KELLER, SEATTLE, WA.

For R J REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY, defendant: Peter J Busch, HOWARD, RICE, NEMEROVSKI, CANADY, FALK & RABKIN, SAN FRANCISCO, CA.

79 F. Supp. 2d 1219, *1219 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19408, 2

For BROWN & WILLIAMSON TOBACCO CORP, defendant: John Arthur Tondini, BYRNES & KELLER, SEATTLE, [3] WA.

For BAT INDUSTRIES PLC, defendant: Stephen Murray Todd, Mark Robert Koenig, TODD & WAKEFIELD, SEATTLE, WA.

For UNITED STATES TOBACCO CO, defendant: Delbert D Miller, MILLER BATEMAN LLP, SEATTLE, WA.

For TOBACCO INSTITUTE INC, defendant: Patrick S Davies, COVINGTON & BURLING, WASHINGTON, DC.

For SMOKELESS TOBACCO COUNCIL INC, defendant: John D. Wilson, Jr., WILSON, SMITH, COCHRAN & DICKERSON, SEATTLE, WA.

For LIGGETT GROUP INC, LIGGETT & MYERS INC, defendants: John G. Bergmann, Robert N Gellatly, Jr., HELSELL FETTERMAN LLP, SEATTLE, WA.

Judges: THOMAS S. ZILLY, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: THOMAS S. ZILLY

Opinion

[*1221] ORDER

Plaintiffs are Public Hospital Districts in counties throughout Washington State, and the trade association of these hospital districts (collectively, the "plaintiffs"). Defendants are tobacco companies and related entities associated with the tobacco manufacturers (collectively, the "defendants"). Plaintiffs have brought federal and state claims against defendants for the unreimbursed health care costs associated with treating patients with smoking-related illnesses. This matter comes before the Court on the defendants' motion to dismiss [4] pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(b\)\(6\), docket no. 34. The Court heard oral argument on October 15, 1999, and took the matter under advisement. The Court has considered the briefs of the parties and the oral argument of counsel and now GRANTS defendants' motion to dismiss for the reasons stated in this order.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs, political subdivisions of the State of Washington, are required by law to provide medical care and services for the residents of their districts. RCW 70.44.003. Each plaintiff alleges that it was required by law to provide unreimbursed health care services to patients who have suffered from tobacco-related diseases. Second Amended Complaint ("SAC"), PP 1 and 17; RCW 70.170.060. Plaintiffs allege that defendants engaged in deceptive acts and conspired to perpetuate smoking and nicotine addiction in the United States. Plaintiffs further allege that the tobacco companies have forced the public hospitals and others to bear the cost of such care. Plaintiffs seek to recover the unreimbursed portion of this cost, SAC at PP 1-10, as well as other equitable and injunctive relief.

Plaintiffs seek recovery under various legal theories including federal [5] antitrust violations, RICO violations, fraudulent misrepresentation, fraudulent concealment, breach of a special duty to disclose health hazards, unjust enrichment, conspiracy, violations of the Washington Consumer Protection Act, and public nuisance. Defendants have moved pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) to dismiss plaintiffs' claims for several reasons, including, but [*1222] not limited to: (1) plaintiffs' claims are too remote and wholly derivative of injuries to unnamed smoker-patients; and (2) plaintiffs' losses are in fact expenses which the plaintiffs had a duty to incur. Defendants' memo in supp., docket no. 35, at 1.

Plaintiffs here bring claims similar to other plaintiffs who have unsuccessfully sought recovery for injuries that derive from the treatment of smokers' illnesses. In Oregon Laborers-Employers Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 185 F.3d 957 (9th Cir. 1999), petition for cert. filed, 68 U.S.L.W. 3274 (U.S. Oct. 12, 1999)(No. 99-642) the Ninth Circuit affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiff union trusts' claims for failure to state a claim. In that case, the Court concluded that plaintiffs' claims were "too remote" [6] from defendants' alleged wrongdoing to allow recovery. Id. at 964. In other words, there was no showing of a direct link between the alleged misconduct of many of the same defendant tobacco companies and the alleged damage to the union trusts. Three other Circuits have reached the same result. See Laborers Local 17 Health and Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 191 F.3d 229, 1999 WL 639865 (2d Cir. 1999), petition for cert. filed, 68 U.S.L.W. 3327 (U.S. Nov. 4, 1999)(No. 99-791); Steamfitters Local Union No. 420 Welfare Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 171 F.3d 912 (3d Cir. 1999), petition for cert. filed, 68 U.S.L.W. 3251; Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Local 734 Health & Welfare Trust Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 196 F.3d 818, 1999 WL 1034711 (7th Cir. 1999). This Court has dismissed similar derivative actions by third party payors of medical costs. Regence Blueshield v. Philip Morris, Inc., 40 F. Supp. 2d 1179 (W.D. Wash. 1999), appeal docketed, No. 99-35204 (9th Cir. March 1, 1999); see also Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 196 F.3d 818, 1999 WL 1034711 [7] (dismissing claims by Blue Cross and Blue Shield, consolidated with trust fund suits). Plaintiffs in these cases asserted the same federal, state statutory, and common law claims now alleged in the present case.

The issue presented in this case is whether plaintiffs' claims are different than the previous unsuccessful claims of the union trusts and third party insurance providers. For the reasons stated in this order, the Court concludes that they are not; the rationale of Oregon Laborers is fatal to plaintiffs' claims and this case must be dismissed. As in Oregon Laborers, plaintiffs' claims in this case are derivative of the harm suffered by non-party smokers and the defendants did not proximately cause the injuries alleged.

ANALYSIS

(A) Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

HN1[] On a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) the Court must accept as true all plaintiffs' allegations and construe those allegations in the light most favorable to plaintiffs. NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L. Ed. 2d 99, 114 S. Ct. 798 (1994); Nelson v. City of Irvine, 143 F.3d 1196, 1200 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 981, 119 S. Ct. 444, 142 L. Ed. 2d 399 (1998). [8] Thus, the complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim only if plaintiffs can prove no set of facts which would entitle them to relief.

For purposes of this motion, the Court assumes that the following facts alleged by plaintiffs are true. Tobacco use is harmful to the user's health. See SAC PP 73-82. The defendants had evidence of this fact for many years and have conspired to withhold this information from the public, including the public health care industry. See id. PP 87-163. This lack of information prevented plaintiffs from properly informing its patients about the dangers of tobacco use and delayed the implementation of programs to reduce tobacco use. See id. PP 17-18, 317-319. The defendants conspired to suppress the research and development of less harmful tobacco products. See id. PP 204-234, 304-310. The absence of less harmful tobacco products prevented public health officials from encouraging patients to utilize safer products. See id. PP 317-319, 401. Plaintiffs have incurred costs associated with the unreimbursed health care treatment of tobacco-related illnesses. See id. PP 1-3. Had the defendants [*1223] not withheld information and [9] suppressed research into less harmful products, fewer patients would have used the more harmful products. See id. PP 4-10. Consequently, fewer patients would have developed a tobacco-related illness and the public hospitals' costs for providing medical treatment for such illnesses would have been reduced. See id. P 10. Based on these alleged facts, plaintiffs argue that injury to their business and property arose as a direct result of the defendants' conduct.

(B) Antitrust Claims

Plaintiffs allege violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 and RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). HN2[] Both statutes provide a private right of action only to those plaintiffs "injured in [their] business or property by reason of" a violation of the laws' substantive provisions. Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 963; 18 U.S.C. § 1964 (RICO); 15 U.S.C. § 15(9) (antitrust). HN3[] Both statutes also require that the alleged violation be a "proximate cause" of the injury suffered. Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 477, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149, 102 S. Ct. 2540 (1982) (antitrust); Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 258, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992) [10] (RICO). Proximate cause means that the injury to business and property must be directly caused by the conduct alleged. Thus, plaintiffs asserting antitrust or RICO claims must establish both "standing" or "proximate cause" as well as an "antitrust injury" to recover. Each requirement must be analyzed separately.

(1) Antitrust Standing and Proximate Cause

"The antitrust laws do not provide a remedy to every party injured by unlawful economic conduct." American Ad Management Inc. v. GTE of California, 190 F.3d 1051, 1055 \(9th Cir. 1999\). Antitrust laws are only intended to preserve competition for the benefit of consumers. Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 538, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\). HN4[] The concept of antitrust standing requires the Court to "evaluate the plaintiff's harm, the alleged wrongdoing by the defendants, and the relationship between them." Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535. The Supreme Court has identified several factors to be considered in determining whether a plaintiff has antitrust standing: "(1) the nature of the [11] plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the complexity in apportioning damages." Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494, 1507 \(9th Cir. 1997\), citing Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 535.

(a) Nature of the injury

"The HN5[] antitrust laws . . . were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\) (citations and quotations omitted). The corollary is that the injured party must be a participant in the same market. Bhan v. NME Hospitals, Inc., 772 F.2d 1467, 1470 \(9th Cir. 1985\). Plaintiffs' contention, that they are "direct purchasers of . . . nicotine delivery products for the treatment of nicotine addition," and thus "consumers in the same market," SAC P 10, is without merit. It cannot be said that plaintiffs either compete with the tobacco companies in the manufacture or sale of cigarettes or that they directly [12] consume these products. To the extent plaintiffs have suffered damages, their claims are derivative of the injuries suffered by the smoker patients.

(b) Directness of injury

Plaintiffs allege both a "direct" and an "indirect" injury as a result of defendants' conduct, specifically that defendants conspired to withhold information from plaintiffs [*1224] that was necessary to properly diagnose and treat smoking as an addiction. Plaintiffs argue that "the tobacco defendants' conspiracy made the plaintiffs unwitting accomplices in increasing their own injuries." Plaintiffs' memo in opp., docket no. 84, at 2. Thus, plaintiffs contend, the defendants' conspiracy resulted in a direct injury to plaintiffs' business and property. Plaintiffs also allege indirect injury in the form of excessive costs necessary to treat their smoker-patients.

HN6[] A direct relationship between the injury and the alleged wrongdoing is "one of [the] central elements" of proximate causation in antitrust claims. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269, citing Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 540; see also Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 963. Smokers that have become ill [13] as a result of using tobacco products are the direct victims of the misconduct asserted in this litigation. These smokers can bring claims directly against the tobacco companies for their injuries. The existence of these more direct victims of the alleged wrongful conduct weighs in favor of barring plaintiffs' claims.

In Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 961, six Oregon-based employee health and welfare trust plans filed suit against various tobacco companies based upon federal antitrust, RICO and other state law claims. The case was dismissed on motion for summary judgment and affirmed by the Ninth Circuit. The plaintiffs in Oregon Laborers alleged claims against the tobacco defendants very similar to those presented in this case. The Ninth Circuit, following the Supreme Court's lead in Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269, held that the claims were too remote to allow recovery under RICO and antitrust laws, reasoning:

HN7[] A direct relationship between the injury and the alleged wrongdoing, although not the sole requirement of RICO and antitrust proximate causation, has been one of its central elements. Thus, a plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely [14] from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover. (citations and quotations omitted)

Like the plaintiffs in Oregon Laborers, plaintiffs' alleged injuries are derivative by nature. The injuries to plaintiffs occur only if there is first an injury to smoking patients. Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 963. Without any injury to smokers, plaintiffs would not have incurred the additional expenses in paying for the medical expenses of those smokers. Id. There is therefore no direct link between the alleged misconduct of the tobacco companies and the claimed damage to plaintiffs. See Id.; Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d at 239 (dismissing RICO claims because trust funds' damages "are entirely derivative of the harm suffered by plan participants as a result of using tobacco products"); Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 928 (holding that regardless of plaintiffs' characterization as direct or indirect, claims "fail for being too remotely connected in the causal chain from any wrongdoing on defendants' part.")

(c) Speculative nature of harm

Plaintiffs allege [15] that but for the defendants' conspiracy, they would have "many years earlier" diagnosed smoking as an addiction, banned or limited the sale of cigarettes on their premises, and taken other steps to ensure their patients were properly diagnosed and treated. SAC, P 371. Plaintiffs contend that these steps "would have reduced [their] damages from treating smoking-related diseases." Plaintiffs' memo in supp., docket no. 84, at 4. In order to calculate damages, plaintiffs would be required to prove how many smokers would have stopped smoking with more information, how many would have smoked less dangerous products, how much healthier these hypothetical reformed smokers would have been, and how much less unreimbursed care and services would have been incurred by the plaintiffs. These damage claims are highly speculative in light of the multitude of factors that might affect damages. "The difficulty of [1225] ascertaining the damages attributable to defendants' alleged wrongful conduct and the complexity involved in calculating these damages weigh heavily, if not dispositively, in favor of barring plaintiffs' actions." Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 965.

(d) Risk of duplicative [16] recovery and complexity in apportioning damages

Plaintiffs have already been reimbursed, in part, for services under Medicare and Medicaid and have accepted reimbursement "as payment in full." 42 CFR § 447.15; WAC 388-550-3000(6). Other litigation pursued directly by smokers or by the State of Washington has resulted or will result in substantial recoveries or settlements. The Court would be forced to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages to eliminate the risk of multiple recoveries. This factor also weighs in favor of barring plaintiffs' action.

(e) Standing and proximate cause precedents

Several other courts have held that third party insurers and trusts funds lacked standing to sue tobacco companies for medical care costs of smoking-related illness. See, e.g., Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d at 239; Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 969; Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 927; Regence Blueshield, 40 F. Supp. 2d at 1185. In each case, plaintiffs could not demonstrate that the defendants proximately caused their injuries.

Plaintiffs attempt to distinguish these cases by demonstrating the differences between insurance [17] providers and health and welfare trust funds, on the one hand, and the Public Hospital Districts, on the other. Unlike the insurance providers and union trusts funds, plaintiffs argue they have a duty to safeguard public health, an obligation to provide care even if smokers cannot pay, and no subrogation rights. Thus, plaintiffs directly incur the costs of treating smoking-related illness through unreimbursed medical treatment of patients, unlike insurers who pass such costs on to their insureds. Plaintiffs also claim to provide advice about smoking and health, and directly purchase nicotine products to treat those addicted to tobacco. Plaintiffs rely on these alleged differences to argue that they have standing to bring their claims in this litigation. The Court is unconvinced; these claimed differences in the structure and functions of the Public Hospital Districts do not support standing to bring these antitrust and RICO claims. Plaintiffs bring claims which are almost identical to the claims of the third party insurers and health and welfare trust funds. "No amount of semantic gymnastics can detract from the conclusion that [plaintiffs'] claims are completely derivative of the [18] personal injuries to [smokers] allegedly caused by the defendants' conduct." Regence Blueshield, 40 F. Supp. 2d at 1184.

Plaintiffs further allege that their special relationship with patients confers standing, relying in part upon the decisions in Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 112-13, 49 L. Ed. 2d 826, 96 S. Ct. 2868 (1976) (ruling that respondent-physicians suffered concrete injury from an anti-abortion statute that denied physicians Medicaid reimbursement for abortions not "medically indicated"); and Lee v. State of Oregon, 869 F. Supp. 1491, 1494-95 (D. Or. 1994) (holding doctors had third party standing to challenge physician-assisted suicide based on showing of direct financial impact on their practices). These cases have allowed doctors to challenge laws that directly impacted their medical practice. However, these cases do not provide support for granting plaintiffs standing under the antitrust laws.

Plaintiffs also base standing on the duty owed by hospitals to their patients. See Niece v. Elmview Group Home, 131 Wn.2d 39, 48, 929 P.2d 420 (1997) (holding Courts have held that hospitals have a "duty [19] to protect its patients from the tortious or criminal actions of third parties" due to "the special relationship between the hospital and the patient."); Douglas v. Freeman, 117 Wn.2d 242, 248, 814 P.2d 1160 (1991) (ruling that hospitals owe non-delegable [*1226] duty directly to their patients). Public hospitals must provide care for their patients regardless of their ability to pay. RCW 70.170.060. Plaintiffs allege that this duty distinguishes the cases of third party payors, who had merely a contractual relationship with the injured smokers.

Unquestionably hospitals have a duty to protect their patients. But hospitals may not generally sue companies who have caused their patients' illnesses. Could plaintiffs sue an auto manufacturer for the unreimbursed costs of treating a patient injured as a result of a defective car? Could plaintiffs sue food manufacturers for the unreimbursed costs of treating persons injured as a result of food poisoning? In these hypothetical cases, plaintiffs could not show that the defendant's actions proximately caused their injuries. The same is true here. Thus, plaintiffs do not have standing to sue the tobacco companies for the unreimbursed [20] costs of treating smokers.

(f) Conclusion: plaintiffs do not have standing

Each of the factors identified in Associated General Contractors weigh against antitrust standing in this case. Plaintiffs alleged damages were not the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall. The claimed damages are highly speculative and uncertain. Allowing the case to proceed could result in duplicative and complex damages. Plaintiffs' damages are derivative of injuries to others and they cannot demonstrate proximate cause.

(2) Antitrust Injury

HN8[¹] Even if plaintiffs could demonstrate standing, they must also demonstrate an antitrust injury. An "antitrust injury" is an injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Associated General Contractors, 459 U.S. at 540. Plaintiffs must have suffered their alleged antitrust injury in the market where competition is being restrained. American Ad Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1057.

Defendants are in the market of selling cigarettes and tobacco products, while plaintiffs are in the health care market. Plaintiffs attempt to stretch the definition of market by labeling the tobacco companies "sellers in the [21] broad U.S. market for drugs." SAC, P 80. Plaintiffs assert that they are purchasers of drugs, including "nicotine delivery products" used to treat nicotine addiction. However, plaintiffs' alleged injuries did not arise from their purchase of nicotine products but from their patients' consumption of tobacco products. Plaintiffs and tobacco companies are not in the same market; they are neither consumers, competitors, suppliers, or dealers, nor do they have a sufficiently close tie with the tobacco market.

"Parties HN9[¹] whose injuries, though flowing from that which makes the defendant's conduct unlawful, are experienced in another market do not suffer antitrust injury." American Ad Mgmt., 190 F.3d at 1057. HN10[¹] Because the plaintiffs and defendants are in different markets, no "antitrust injury" occurred. See Bhan, 772 F.2d at 1470; see also Steamfitters, 171 F.3d at 926. Interpreting the definition of market as broadly as plaintiffs suggest would enable dentists to sue candy makers for their unreimbursed cost of treating their patients' cavities. The Court declines to so extend the scope of the antitrust laws.¹

[22] [*1227] (C) RICO Claims

(1) RICO Standing

HN11 Plaintiffs must have standing to assert their RICO claims against the defendants. The standing requirements under RICO are similar to those under antitrust law. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268; Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 963. Thus, the Court's analysis for antitrust standing is applicable for RICO.

Plaintiffs rely heavily on NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L. Ed. 2d 99, 114 S. Ct. 798 (1994) in support of RICO standing. In Scheidler, the Court allowed abortion clinics to pursue RICO claims against anti-abortion protesters who allegedly conspired to use or threaten violence against clinic employees, doctors and patients. The conspiracy was actively directed at the clinics and their employees, and the injuries to clinic business were directly caused by the defendants' alleged activities. The Supreme Court held that "at HN12 the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant's conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim . . . Nothing more is [23] needed to confer standing." Id. (citations omitted). Plaintiffs allege that "as in Scheidler, the PHDs are health care providers who have alleged injuries to business and property as a result of the Tobacco defendants' predicate RICO acts." Plaintiffs' memo in opp., docket no. 64, at 11. However, the activities of the tobacco companies in this case were not directly aimed at causing injury to plaintiffs. Rather, plaintiffs suffered incidental damage as a result of the injuries to smokers who were the direct target of the defendants' activities. Plaintiffs have alleged no specific facts that could overcome the proximate cause and standing concerns of the Court.

Plaintiffs also rely on Pharmacare v. Caremark, 965 F. Supp. 1411 (D. Haw. 1996). In that case, the court denied a motion to dismiss RICO claims brought by a healthcare provider against a competitor who had illegally paid doctors for patient referrals. The Court held that plaintiffs had standing to pursue their RICO claims because the alleged fraud could foreseeably affect the plaintiffs. There, the plaintiffs were the direct target of the defendants' scheme to obtain an unfair competitive advantage [24] by fraudulently soliciting these referrals. Here, however, the tobacco companies would not stand to benefit competitively by harming plaintiffs, and plaintiffs were not the direct target of the defendant's activities. Therefore, plaintiffs lack standing for their RICO claims.

(2) RICO Injury

HN13 The RICO statute also requires that the alleged violation of the law be a "proximate cause" of the injury suffered. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268. Plaintiffs claims in this action are too remote to allow recovery under RICO. Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 963; see also Imagineering, Inc. v. Kiewit Pacific Co., 976 F.2d 1303 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1004, 123 L. Ed. 2d 266, 113 S. Ct. 1644 (1993) (holding that subcontractors lacked standing to bring RICO claim against defendant, whose fraud allegedly caused their prime contractor to lose bid); Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro v. Lerner, 31 F.3d 924, 929 (9th Cir. 1994) (affirming dismissal of subtenant's RICO claim that defendant's fraudulent acts raised master tenant's rent, which was passed on to plaintiff). Here again, plaintiffs cannot get beyond [25] the fact that any injuries they might have suffered occurred only as a result of injuries suffered first by individual consumers of the defendant's product. Plaintiffs cannot therefore show that their injuries were proximately caused by defendant's conduct.

D. State Law Claims

¹ One narrow exception to this market participant requirement is for parties whose injuries are "inextricably intertwined" with the injuries of market participants. See McCready, 457 U.S. at 484 (granting standing to psychologists to challenge restrictions for psychotherapeutic services). This test requires that the plaintiffs are a "necessary means to achieve the conspirators' illegal end as well as an integral and inextricable part of the anticompetitive scheme." Ostroff v. H.S. Crocker Co., 740 F.2d 739, 746 (9th Cir. 1984). The injury to plaintiffs is not "inextricably intertwined" with the tobacco companies' unlawful activities. The injuries sustained by plaintiffs were incidental to the alleged scheme of the defendants, and occurred in a completely distinct market.

1. Fraudulent Concealment and Misrepresentation

Plaintiffs' fifth and sixth claims are for fraudulent misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment under Washington [*1228] State law. HN14[] An essential element of any claim for fraud is proximate cause. Amtruck Factors v. International Forest Products, 59 Wn. App. 8, 14, 795 P.2d 742 \(1990\), rev. denied, 116 Wn.2d 1003, 803 P.2d 1310 \(1991\). For the reasons heretofore stated, plaintiffs cannot establish proximate cause in this case as a matter of law. Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 964.

2. Breach of Special Duty

Count 7 of plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the defendants breached a special duty owed by defendants to the plaintiffs under Washington State law. Plaintiffs allege that defendants voluntarily assumed a special duty to protect public health by making statements to the public, beginning with the "Frank [26] Statement to Cigarette Smokers" in 1954. SAC, P 375. Plaintiffs allege that the defendants breached that duty by suppressing information vital to the public health, such as the addictiveness of nicotine and the relationship between disease and tobacco use. According to plaintiffs, the breach of this duty caused more smokers to smoke, and the public hospitals to bear increased health costs.

HN15[] The existence of a special duty is an issue of law in Washington. Hansen v. Friend, 118 Wn.2d 476, 479, 824 P.2d 483 \(1992\). Even assuming the "Frank Statement to Cigarette Smokers" created a special duty to the public health community, plaintiffs cannot establish that any breach proximately caused the damages claimed. State of Washington v. American Tobacco Co., 1996 WL 931316, *8, No. 96-2-15056-8 SEA, (Wash. Sup. Ct. Nov. 19, 1996) (rejecting similar special duty claim under Washington law against Tobacco defendants); Herskovits v. Group Health Cooperative, 99 Wn.2d 609, 617, 664 P.2d 474 \(1983\) (holding HN16[] proximate cause required for claim of breach of special duty).

In addition, HN17[] a claim of a breach of a special duty requires "physical harm" [27] to plaintiffs. Restatement \(Second\) of Torts § 323; Herskovits, 99 Wn.2d at 615; American Tobacco, Co., 1996 WL 931316 at *7 (dismissing claim of breach of special duty for lack of physical harm). This element is also missing in the present case.

3. Unjust Enrichment

Plaintiffs allege in Count 8 that defendants have been unjustly enriched by their treatment of smokers. Plaintiffs contend that the defendants owe a duty to the public (including the plaintiffs) not to deceive people about the dangers of smoking. SAC, P 382. They claim that the tobacco companies owed a duty to plaintiffs to research the dangers of smoking and disclose the results. Id. However, plaintiffs do not assert that defendants actually had an obligation to pay the medical costs of the smoker-patients treated by the plaintiffs. Without such an allegation, plaintiffs cannot maintain their claim for unjust enrichment. American Tobacco, 1996 WL 931316 at *6 (dismissing similar unjust enrichment claim).

Plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim turns on whether their treatment of smokers benefitted defendants. Washington courts have defined a benefit as any form [28] of advantage:

HN18[] A person confers a benefit upon another if he gives to the other possession of or some interest in money, land, chattels, or choses in action, performs services beneficial to or at the request of the other, satisfies a debt or duty of the other, or in any way adds to the others' security or advantage. He confers a benefit not only where he adds to the property of another, but also where he saves the other from expense or loss. The word benefit, therefore, denotes any form of advantage.

American Tobacco Co., 1996 WL 931316 at *8 quoting Chemical Bank v. Washington Public Power Supply Sys., 102 Wn.2d 874, 910, 691 P.2d 524 \(1984\), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1065, 85 L. Ed. 2d 497, 105 S. Ct. 2140 (1985) (citations and quotations omitted).

Plaintiffs do not claim to have given the tobacco companies possession of or an interest [*1229] in services rendered. Plaintiffs provided medical treatment to smokers, and the benefits of that treatment went to the patients, not the defendants. Without alleging that the defendants are responsible for the medical costs of their patients, the alleged benefits that plaintiffs conferred [29] on the defendants are too indirect and speculative to support its unjust enrichment claim under Washington law. See American Tobacco Co., 1996 WL 931316 at *9; see also Chemical Bank, 102 Wn.2d at 910-11. Plaintiffs cannot maintain an action for unjust enrichment against defendants merely because defendants were incidentally benefitted by their treatment of smokers. See Oregon Laborers, 185 F.3d at 968. Without a legal obligation on the part of defendants to pay, the treatment by plaintiffs did not "benefit" the defendants, and the unjust enrichment claim fails. See id.

4. Consumer Protection Act

Plaintiffs also seek recovery under HN19 the Washington Consumer Protection Act, RCW 19.86.020-030. In order to recover under this claim plaintiffs must allege an injury to their business or property causally related to the alleged unfair act or practice. Washington State Physicians Ins. Exchange & Ass'n. v. Fisons Corp., 122 Wn.2d 299, 312, 858 P.2d 1054 (1993).

The alleged injuries to plaintiffs are based on personal injuries to smokers. Plaintiffs allege that the defendants' conspiracy to restrict trade suppressed [30] the development, manufacture, and sale of safer tobacco products. Plaintiffs further allege that the lack of safer tobacco increased the number of smokers seeking treatment at public hospitals, thereby increasing their costs. HN20 Expenses for personal injuries are not injuries to business or property under the Washington Consumer Protection Act. See Northwest Laborers, 58 F. Supp. 2d 1211 at 1215; Fisons, 122 Wn.2d at 318; Stevens v. Hyde Athletic Industries, Inc., 54 Wn. App. 366, 370, 773 P.2d 871 (1989). Judge Dwyer explained in Northwest Laborers, 58 F. Supp. 2d at 1215, that this general rule "cannot change when the injured person's medical expenses are paid by someone else." The costs derived from these personal injuries do not become less "personal" when borne by plaintiffs in the form of unreimbursed health care services. Thus, these costs cannot be recovered under the Washington Consumer Protection Act.²

[31] 5. Nuisance

Plaintiffs' twelfth claim alleges that defendants perpetrated a public nuisance. Plaintiffs contend that the defendants' actions endangered the public health, causing the public hospitals (and others) to bear the costs of unreimbursed health care services for tobacco-related diseases. Plaintiffs claim for nuisance fails because plaintiffs cannot demonstrate proximate cause. Northwest Laborers, 58 F. Supp. 2d at 1215.

6. Conspiracy

Finally, plaintiffs' conspiracy claim fails because there are no underlying illegal acts. HN21 In Washington, a civil conspiracy claim must be based on underlying "actionable wrongs," "overt acts," or a "tort working damage to the plaintiffs." Northwest Laborers, 58 F. Supp. 2d at 1216, citing W.G. Platts, Inc. v. Platts, 73 Wn.2d 434, 438-40, 438 P.2d 867 (1968). A conspiracy claim fails if the underlying act or claim is not actionable. See id.; Wilson v. State, 84 Wn. App. 332, 350-51, 929 P.2d 448 (1996).

E. Conclusion

The injuries alleged in this litigation may be recovered by the persons who [*1230] were directly harmed by defendants' conduct. Plaintiffs' claims are [32] derivative of the claims of smokers and, under long-standing judicial precedent, cannot be allowed to proceed.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

² The Fisons decision does not require a contrary result. In Fisons, a physician whose reputation was injured had standing to sue a drug company for unfair and deceptive practices by failing to warn the physician of known dangers of its drug. In Fisons, the Court relied on the unique relationship between drug company and physician. Plaintiffs have no similar relationship with the defendants.

79 F. Supp. 2d 1219, *1230 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19408, 32

DATED this 13th day of December, 1999.

THOMAS S. ZILLY

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

End of Document

George Lussier Enters. v. Subaru of New Eng., Inc.

United States District Court for the District of New Hampshire

December 13, 1999, Decided

Civil No. C-99-109-B

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19769 *

George Lussier Enterprises, Inc., d/b/a Lussier Subaru, et al. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., et al.

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Disposition: SNE's motion to dismiss the dealers' antitrust claim denied.

Core Terms

dealers, costs, tying product, accessories, switching, tying arrangement, discretionary, aftermarkets, lock-in, tied product, dealerships, franchises, replacement part, allegations, market power, manufacturer's, derivative, franchise agreement, seller

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Documentary Evidence > Writings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Motion to dismiss is not converted into a motion for summary judgment when court reviews document referred to in the complaint if the plaintiff's cause of action depends on the document and the document's authenticity is not in dispute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A tying arrangement violates the Sherman and Clayton Acts under "rule of reason" analysis even if it is not per se unlawful if it unreasonably restrains competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN3 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

In antitrust cases, where the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators, dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement ordinarily will be deemed per se unlawful if: (1) it involves a "tying" product and a distinct "tied" product; (2) the seller conditions the right to purchase the tying product on the purchase of the tied product; (3) the seller has sufficient market power in the market for the tying product to appreciably restrain trade in the market for the tied product; and (4) as a result, the seller is able to foreclose a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Antitrust plaintiffs are provided with a framework for bringing a per se tying arrangement claim in cases where a plaintiff argues that the defendant has substantial market power in a product aftermarket even though it lacks power in the market for the primary product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

An antitrust plaintiff cannot succeed on a Kodak-type theory tying arrangement claim when the defendant has not changed its policy after locking-in some of its customers.

Counsel: For GEORGE LUSSIER ENTERPRISES, INC., SULLIVAN COUNTY MOTORS, INC., SUBARU OF WAKEFIELD, INC., CAMILLERI BROTHERS, INC., BALD HILL REALTY, INC., KINNEY MOTORS, LTD., REYNOLDS' GARAGE & MARINE, INC., plaintiffs: Richard B. McNamara, Esq., Wiggin & Nourie, Manchester, NH.

For SUBARU OF NEW ENGLAND, INC., ERNEST J. BOCH, JR., defendants: Michael C. Harvell, Esq., Sheehan, Phinney, Bass & Green, P.A., Manchester, NH.

For SUBARU OF NEW ENGLAND, INC., defendant: William A. Kershaw, Esq., Kronick, Moskovitz, Tiedemann & Girard, Sacramento, CA.

For SUBARU OF NEW ENGLAND, INC., defendant: Howard M. Cooper, Esq., Todd & Weld, Boston, MA.

For ERNEST J. BOCH, JR., defendant: Robert J. Cordy, Esq., McDermott, Will & Emery, Boston, MA.

Judges: Paul Barbadoro, Chief Judge.

Opinion by: PAUL BARBADORO

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Seven current and former New England Subaru dealers have filed a class action complaint against their distributor, Subaru of New England, Inc. ("SNE"). The dealers contend that SNE withholds approximately 10% of the new Subaru vehicles destined for the New England market and illegally requires dealers to purchase vehicles with expensive accessories such as leather seats and keyless entry systems in order to obtain any of the withheld vehicles. The dealers argue that this practice constitutes a tying arrangement prohibited by section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 14.¹ SNE has responded with a motion to dismiss arguing that the dealers have failed to allege that SNE has sufficient power in the market for new Subaru vehicles to restrain competition in the automobile accessory market. I disagree and accordingly deny the motion.

[*2] I.

SNE is the exclusive distributor of Subaru vehicles in New England.² In this capacity, it has entered into franchise agreements with all of the region's Subaru dealers. SNE's franchise agreements contain or incorporate by reference certain standard provisions dictated by Subaru's national distributor. One such provision states that "It is understood and agreed that [SNE] will allocate all affected Subaru products equitably, using appropriate factors such as the respective inventory levels and sales performance of [its] dealers during a representative period of time immediately prior to such allocation." Dealership Agreement and Standard Provisions, Defendants' Joint Appendix, Tab A(1) at 9.³

[*3] SNE implemented a vehicle distribution plan on February 1, 1987, dubbed "Fair Share II." Under the plan, SNE allocates 90% of its vehicles to dealerships based upon a formula tied to the number of vehicles each dealership sells during a given allocation period. The plan specifies that the remaining discretionary vehicles may be withheld by SNE and used for "executive vehicles and discretionary purposes such as market action vehicles."⁴ Fair Share II Distribution System, Defendants' Joint Appendix, Tab B(2).

¹ The dealers also assert that SNE breached its dealership agreements and violated various state dealer protection statutes, and that both SNE and its sole shareholder, Ernest Boch, violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 et seq. I confine my analysis to the sufficiency of the dealers' antitrust claim.

² I take the facts from the complaint and describe them in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs. See Miranda v. Ponce Fed. Bank, 948 F.2d 41, 43 \(1st Cir. 1991\).

³ The dealers paraphrase certain provisions in SNE's dealership agreement and other related documents. I quote from the documents, which were supplied by the defendants in support of their motion. See Beddall v. State Street Bank and Trust Co., 137 F.3d 12, 16-17 \(1st Cir. 1998\) (motion HN1 to dismiss is not converted into a motion for summary judgment when court reviews document referred to in the complaint if the plaintiff's cause of action depends on the document and the document's authenticity is not in dispute).

At some point not specified in the complaint but after the dealers signed their franchise agreements and incurred substantial costs to acquire [*4] and develop their dealerships, SNE began to condition a dealer's right to obtain discretionary vehicles on an agreement to purchase vehicles with a variety of pre-installed accessories such as leather seats, CD players, air filtration systems, and keyless entry systems. The dealers claim that this practice is particularly burdensome because SNE withholds as discretionary vehicles a disproportionate number of Subaru's most popular models.

The accessories SNE requires dealers to purchase in order to obtain discretionary vehicles are installed by a contractor working for SNE. Although a distinct market exists for the sale and installation of automobile accessories, SNE is able to force the dealers to pay higher than market rates for accessories by exploiting the demand among the dealers for discretionary vehicles. As a result, the complaint alleges, SNE is able to foreclose a substantial amount of the accessory business that otherwise would have gone to SNE's competitors.

The dealers allege that SNE's practice of conditioning a dealer's right to acquire discretionary vehicles on an agreement to purchase accessories violates its franchise agreements with the dealers. They also allege [*5] that SNE intentionally prevented the dealers from learning of the tying arrangement until after they had signed their franchise agreements and incurred substantial costs to develop their dealerships. Finally, they claim that they would incur substantial switching costs if they were to replace their demand for discretionary vehicles with a competing manufacturer's models.

II.

The dealers argue both that SNE's tying arrangement is "per se" unlawful⁵ [*6] and that it is unlawful under "rule of reason" analysis.⁶ Because SNE challenges only the dealers' per se tying claim, I focus my analysis on the sufficiency of this claim.⁷

⁴ The plan elsewhere defines "discretionary vehicles" as "vehicles to be used as demonstrators by Subaru of New England; vehicles to be used for major auto shows; vehicles set aside to assist dealers who, at the sole discretion of Subaru of New England, need assistance and vehicles delivered to VIPs." Defendants' Joint Appendix, Tab B(3) (emphasis in original).

⁵ While some courts have suggested that a per se tying violation is a misnomer because "some element of [market] power must be shown and defenses are effectively available," U.S. Healthcare, Inc. v. Healthsource, Inc., 986 F.2d 589, 593 n.2 \(1st Cir. 1993\); see also Town Sound and Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 477 & n.8 \(3d Cir. 1992\) (en banc), the Supreme Court has continued to endorse a per se rule in the tying context. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 9, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\) ("It is far too late in the history of our antitrust jurisprudence to question the proposition that certain tying arrangements pose an unacceptable risk of stifling competition and therefore are unreasonable 'per se.'").

⁶ HN2 A tying arrangement violates the Sherman and Clayton Acts under "rule of reason" analysis even if it is not per se unlawful if it unreasonably restrains competition. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29-31; Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 799 \(1st Cir. 1988\).

⁷ I review the dealers' antitrust claims under the particularly liberal standard articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Hospital Building Company v. Trustees of Rex Hospital, 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 \(1976\) ("In HN3 antitrust cases, where 'the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators,' dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.") (internal citation omitted). Accordingly, I must deny SNE's motion to dismiss unless the dealers could not prevail even if all of their allegations prove to be true and they are given the benefit of all reasonable inferences. See Cooperman v. Individual, Inc., 171 F.3d 43, 46 \(1st Cir. 1999\).

[*7] A tying arrangement ordinarily will be deemed per se unlawful if: (1) it involves a "tying" product and a distinct "tied" product; (2) the seller conditions the right to purchase the tying product on the purchase of the tied product; (3) the seller has sufficient market power in the market for the tying product to appreciably restrain trade in the market for the tied product; and (4) as a result, the seller is able to foreclose a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the tied product. See ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Antitrust Law Developments 177-78 (4th ed. 1997). SNE argues here that the dealers' tying claim must be dismissed because it does not adequately allege that SNE has sufficient power in the market for the tying product (in this case new Subaru vehicles) to restrain trade in the market for the tied product (in this case automobile accessories).

SNE bases its argument on the First Circuit's opinion in Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792 (1st Cir. 1988). In Grappone, a Subaru dealer brought a tying claim against SNE, alleging that it had conditioned vehicle allocations on the dealer's purchase of spare [*8] parts. See id. at 793. The court rejected the dealer's attempt to define the relevant market for the tying product narrowly, in terms of the Subaru brand of automobile, and thereby to assert that SNE wielded power over that market. Rather, because SNE competed with other automobile manufacturers and distributors, the court concluded that "Subaru's market share, whether measured in terms of sales of all autos or of imports or in any other reasonable way, is minuscule." Id. at 797. Because SNE had an insubstantial share of the market for the tying product, and in the absence of any evidence that Subaru automobiles "had any special or unique features, such as patents or copyrights," id. at 798, the court concluded that SNE lacked the market power necessary to force the dealer to purchase the spare parts. See id. at 797. The First Circuit accordingly held that the dealer had "failed to prove that the per se anti-tying rules apply in this case." Id. at 800.

SNE argues here that the court's ruling in Grappone necessarily precludes the dealers' claims that SNE has market power in the market for Subaru [*9] vehicles. Certainly nothing in the dealers' complaint suggests that SNE's share of the New England automobile market has grown from minuscule to dominant since the First Circuit's decision in Grappone. Accordingly, I agree that Grappone dictates that the dealers in this case cannot successfully plead a traditional per se tying violation. This conclusion does not, however, necessarily doom the dealers' claim because they base their right to recovery on the Supreme Court's more recent analysis of the issue in Eastman Kodak Company v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992).

HN5  Kodak provides antitrust plaintiffs with a framework for bringing a per se tying claim in cases where a plaintiff argues that the defendant has substantial market power in a product aftermarket even though it lacks power in the market for the primary product. Kodak manufactured and sold photocopiers and micrographic equipment. See 504 U.S. at 455, 456. It also sold two aftermarket products related to the equipment: replacement parts and service. See id. at 455, 457. After many customers had already purchased [*10] Kodak equipment, numerous independent service organizations (ISOs) began to offer service for the machines at a lower price than that charged by Kodak. See id. at 455, 457. Kodak reacted by tying the availability of Kodak replacement parts, which were the only parts that could be used in servicing the machines, to the purchase of service from Kodak. See id. at 457, 458. As a result, the ISOs were no longer able to compete with Kodak in the market for equipment servicing. See id. at 458.

A group of ISOs sued Kodak, claiming, inter alia, that Kodak had tied the sale of service to the sale of replacement parts, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. See id. at 459. In response, Kodak insisted that it was entitled to judgment as a matter of law because the existence of competition in the market for equipment, which was conceded, necessarily meant that there must be competition in the derivative aftermarket for replacement parts. See id. at 465-66. Therefore, Kodak argued, it lacked sufficient power over the market for replacement parts (the "tying product") to commit a per se tying violation. See [*11] id. Kodak's proposed legal rule -- that "equipment competition precludes any finding of monopoly power in derivative aftermarkets," id. at 466 (internal quotation marks omitted) -stemmed from an assumption about the perfect operation of the "cross-elasticity of demand" between the primary equipment market and the derivative aftermarkets. Id. at 469 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The Court rejected Kodak's contention, concluding instead that "there is no immutable physical law -- no 'basic economic reality' -- insisting that competition in the equipment market cannot coexist with market power in the aftermarkets." Id. at 471. Rather, the court held that the ISOs were entitled to the opportunity to prove that two factors -- "information costs" and "switching costs" -- "foiled the simple assumption that the equipment and service markets act as pure complements to one another." Id. at 477. The Court determined that information costs could undermine the "cross-elasticity of demand" between the equipment market and derivative aftermarkets if consumers who purchased Kodak equipment lacked the information necessary [*12] to calculate the total "life-cycle" cost of the equipment, including the cost of tied parts and service, at the time that they decided which manufacturer's machines to purchase. See id. at 473-76. The Court also reasoned that consumers who purchased Kodak equipment might be willing to pay supra-competitive prices for Kodak service (the tied product) in order to get the replacement parts (the tying product) they needed to maintain their original investment in the equipment (the "lock-in product"), particularly if their only alternative was to switch to another manufacturer's machines and thereby abandon the substantial investment already made in the Kodak equipment. See id. at 476-77.

The First Circuit applied the Kodak framework in the context of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion in Lee v. Life Insurance Company of North America, 23 F.3d 14 \(1st Cir. 1994\). In Lee, the plaintiffs were University of Rhode Island (URI) students who brought antitrust and other claims against the university, university officials, and the university's student-health insurer. See id. at 15. The crux of the students' antitrust claim was that [*13] URI had committed unlawful tying in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act by requiring all full-time undergraduate students to pay a health-services fee and to carry supplemental health insurance. See id. at 15-16. Among various tying theories, the students advanced a Kodak "lock-in" claim in which first semester matriculation at URI was identified as the "lock-in product," subsequent semesters at URI were the "tying product," and the health-services fee and supplemental insurance coverage were the "tied product." See id. at 18.

The First Circuit assumed that Kodak potentially applied to the students' tying claim but ultimately rejected the claim because the students failed to allege either the information costs or the switching costs discussed by the Supreme Court in Kodak. The students were unable to allege information costs, according to the court, because it was evident that prior to enrolling at URI, students were informed that continued enrollment was conditioned on paying the health-services fee and obtaining supplemental insurance. See id. at 19. The court found that the students "made no allegations sufficient [*14] to give rise to a reasonable inference that the health-care and insurance-cost information needed to make an informed decision whether to accept the preconditions to continued matriculation at URI is either difficult or expensive to obtain or correlate." Id. (emphasis in original). The court also observed that the students failed to plead the switching costs necessary for a "lock-in," i.e., they failed to allege "actual costs associated with switching from URI after their first semester." Id. The court emphasized that "the timing of the 'lock-in' at issue in Kodak was central to the Supreme Court's decision," id. at 20 (emphasis in original), and noted that the students could not mirror the claim in Kodak that the tying arrangement was instituted only after many customers had already purchased the equipment and then applied retroactively to the "locked-in" customers. See *id.*⁸ Finally, the court distinguished the context of its case from Kodak by pointing out that the students' claims did not involve a "derivative aftermarket" or "complex durable goods." id. at 19-20.

[*15] Accepting all of the allegations pleaded in the dealers' complaint as true and drawing all reasonable inferences in their favor, I conclude that the dealers have stated a cognizable tying claim under Kodak. In the present case, the "lock-in products" are the Subaru franchises (analogous to the Kodak equipment), the "tying products" are the Subaru vehicles (analogous to the Kodak replacement parts), and the "tied products" are the accessories (analogous to the Kodak service). The dealers' complaint, unlike the students' complaint in Lee, includes allegations of information costs, switching costs, and the timing of the "lock-in" effect that bring it within the framework created by Kodak. Moreover, unlike the students' claim in Lee, the dealers' claim arises in the context of derivative aftermarkets in complex durable goods, e.g., automobiles and automobile accessories.

⁸ Other Circuits have agreed with the First Circuit that the timing of the tying arrangement was crucial to the result in Kodak. See, e.g., PSI Repair Servs., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811, 820 (6th Cir.) (holding that "an HN6 antitrust plaintiff cannot succeed on a Kodak-type theory when the defendant has not changed its policy after locking-in some of its customers"), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1265, 138 L. Ed. 2d 195, 117 S. Ct. 2434 \(1997\); Digital Equip. Corp. v. Uniq Digital Techs., Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 763 \(7th Cir. 1996\) (stating that "the Court in Kodak did not doubt that if spare parts had been bundled with Kodak's copiers from the outset, or Kodak had informed customers about its policies before they bought its machines, purchasers could have shopped around for competitive life-cycle prices").

The dealers have adequately alleged that they did not have access to the information necessary to accurately assess the life-cycle cost of their dealership franchises, including the actual cost of vehicles and accessories, because Subaru of New England concealed the tying arrangement until after [*16] they became locked into their dealerships. See First Am. Compl. (Doc. # 31) P 147 at 43. Without the knowledge that they would be required to purchase accessories as a condition of obtaining discretionary vehicles, the dealers could not have accurately calculated the costs of a franchise at the time that they were deciding whether to sign dealership agreements with Subaru of New England.⁹

The dealers [*17] have also alleged the timing and switching costs necessary to give rise to a "lock-in" tying claim. The dealers claim that they did not discover the tie between discretionary vehicles and accessories until after they were "locked in" (financially committed) to the franchise relationship." Id. P 147 at 43. While this allegation is general in nature, it provides a sufficient basis for inferring that the tying arrangement was instituted only after a significant number of dealers had signed agreements with Subaru of New England. It also supports an inference that the dealers could not abandon their franchises and switch to another automobile manufacturer without accruing significant costs and losing their substantial investments in the franchises. Further, the complaint alleges that SNE has succeeded in exploiting its power in the tying product to foreclose sales in the tied product by competing suppliers. See id. P 149 at 44. These allegations are sufficient to support a per se tying claim under Kodak.

This reasoning is consistent not only with Kodak and Lee, but also with the opinions of other federal courts considering analogous claims. In the years since the Supreme [*18] Court decided Kodak, federal courts have entertained a spate of Kodak-based tying claims. Some of these claims have been dismissed, either for failure to state a claim or on summary judgment, due to the plaintiffs' failure to provide factual allegations or produce evidence of information and switching costs.¹⁰ [*19] However, in other cases where the plaintiffs have alleged or produced admissible evidence of substantial information costs, switching costs, and the timing necessary to create a "lock-in effect," courts have recognized a cognizable claim under Kodak.¹¹

[*20] SNE implicitly challenges the applicability of Kodak and Lee to most franchise tying claims where the tying product is not unique. Although it confines its argument on this point to a single footnote in a 25-page

⁹ In Lee, the First Circuit noted that the students did not "suggest that URI had any incentive to conceal the scope of past . . . increases" in the health-services fee and the cost of supplemental insurance. Lee, 23 F.3d at 19 n.10. In the present case, by contrast, the dealers have alleged that Subaru of New England had a strong economic incentive to conceal (and did in fact conceal) the tying arrangement -- and thus the true cost of a Subaru dealership franchise -- until after the dealers had signed their agreements. See First Am. Compl. (Doc. # 31) PP 147, 150, 153 at 43, 44, 45.

¹⁰ See, e.g., Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 440, 441 (3d Cir. 1997) (affirming dismissal of plaintiffs' Kodak-based tying claim where tying arrangement was spelled out in franchise agreement, and thus life-cycle cost information was available to plaintiffs before they were "locked-in"), cert. denied, 118 S. Ct. 1385 (1998); United Farmers Agents Ass'n, Inc. v. Farmers Ins. Exchange, 89 F.3d 233, 237-39 (5th Cir. 1996) (affirming grant of summary judgment to defendant where plaintiffs failed to produce evidence of significant information or switching costs), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1116, 136 L. Ed. 2d 846, 117 S. Ct. 960 (1997).

¹¹ See, e.g., Virtual Maintenance, Inc. v. Prime Computer, Inc., 11 F.3d 660, 666-67 (6th Cir. 1993) (holding that plaintiff had stated valid tying claim under Kodak by producing, among other evidence, expert testimony concerning lock-in and switching costs); Red Lion Med. Safety, Inc. v. Ohmeda, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 2d 1218, 1232 (E.D. Ca. 1999) (denying defendant's motion for summary judgment on plaintiff's Kodak-based tying claim because plaintiffs presented sufficient evidence of information costs and "lock-in"); Subsolutions, Inc. v. Doctor's Assoc., Inc., 62 F. Supp. 2d 616, 626 (D. Conn. 1999) (concluding that plaintiff franchisees had stated a Kodak lock-in claim based on factual allegations relating to information costs and timing); Collins v. Int'l Dairy Queen, Inc., 939 F. Supp. 875, 883 (M.D. Ga. 1996) (denying summary judgment to defendants because, inter alia, plaintiff-franchisees had produced evidence of switching costs and resultant lock-in effect); Wilson v. Mobil Oil Corp., 940 F. Supp. 944, 947-48, 953-54 (E.D. La. 1996) (denying motion to dismiss and concluding that plaintiff-franchisees had stated a Kodak lock-in claim based on allegations of information and switching costs).

memorandum, see Def. Subaru of New England, Inc.'s Mot. to Dismiss (Doc. # 34) at 17 n.12, SNE appears to assert that a franchisor cannot be deemed to have achieved market power in a market for a tying product with otherwise interchangeable substitutes by concealing the tying arrangement from the franchisees until after it has locked the franchisees into contractual commitments and substantial "sunk" costs. Instead, SNE suggests that a seller may achieve power in a tying product market in such circumstances only if the tying product is unique.

I decline to address this difficult argument at the present time because it has not been adequately briefed. While there is some support for SNE's position in both the case law¹² and the academic literature,¹³ contrary views also abound.¹⁴ [*22] Moreover, it is difficult to reconcile SNE's position with the First Circuit's opinion in Lee, which assumes that the existence of substantial information and switching costs [*21] can give a seller power in the market for an otherwise interchangeable tying product. See 23 F.3d at 18. In light of the complexity of this issue and SNE's failure to properly brief it, I decline to address the merits of the argument.¹⁵

SNE also asserts that the dealers' tying claim must be dismissed even if SNE was able to lock the dealers into their franchises before disclosing the tying arrangement because it imposed the arrangement on only 10% of the vehicles it released into the New England market. I reject this argument. If the dealers have correctly characterized the tying product market as the market for new Subaru vehicles, it is undisputed that SNE has a monopoly in the New England market. The fact that it has been successful in exploiting that monopoly to foreclose substantial commerce in the automobile accessories market by imposing the tying arrangement on only 10% of its vehicles is hardly a viable defense to the dealers' claim.

III.

The dealers have stated a cognizable per se tying claim under the Kodak framework. Accordingly, SNE's motion to dismiss the dealers' antitrust claim is denied.

SO ORDERED.

Paul Barbadoro

Chief Judge

December 13, 1999

End of Document

¹² See Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 440-41 (3rd Cir. 1997); United Farmers Agents Ass'n v. Farmers Ins. Exchange, 89 F.3d 233, 236-37 (5th Cir. 1996); Chawla v. Shell Oil Co., 75 F. Supp. 2d 626, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20352, 1999 WL 1081002, at *10-12 (S.D. Tex. 1999).

¹³ See P. Areeda and H. Hovencamp, Antitrust Law, P 510b at 111 (Supp. 1998); T. Lin, Distinguishing Kodak Lock-In and Franchise Contractual Lock-In, 23 S. Ill. U. L.J. 87, 120 \(1998\); A. Silberman, The Myths of Franchise Market Power, 65 Antitrust L.J. 181 (1996).

¹⁴ See cases cited at note 11; B. Klein, Market Power in Franchise Cases in the Wake of Kodak: Applying Post-Contract Hold-Up Analysis to Vertical Relationships, 67 Antitrust L.J. 283 (1999); W. Grimes, Market Definition in Franchise Antitrust Claims: Relational Market Power and the Franchisor's Conflict of Interest, 67 Antitrust L.J. 243 (1999).

¹⁵ SNE may renew its argument later in a properly supported motion for summary judgment.

Covad Communs. Co. v. Pac. Bell

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

December 14, 1999, Decided ; December 14, 1999, Filed

No. C 98-1887 SI

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22789 *; 1999 WL 33757058

COVAD COMMUNICATIONS COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. PACIFIC BELL, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: [*1] Reconsideration Denied May 8, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21267.

Disposition: Defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction DENIED and defendant Southwestern Bell's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction GRANTED. Defendant Pacific Bell's motion to dismiss the monopolization and attempted monopolization claims DENIED, and Pacific Bell's motion to dismiss plaintiff's tying claim GRANTED. Defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss plaintiff's intentional and negligent misrepresentation claims GRANTED, with leave to amend. Defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss plaintiff's claim for violation the Telecommunications Act of 1996 and for interference with prospective economic advantage DENIED. Defendant SBC-TRI's motion to dismiss GRANTED with leave to amend.

Core Terms

SBC, collocation, alleges, motion to dismiss, loop, interconnection, Telecommunications, asserts, competitors, personal jurisdiction, monopolization, arbitration, incumbents, subsidiary, antitrust, prices, cages, technology, squeeze, lack of personal jurisdiction, district court, leave to amend, Sherman Act, misrepresentation, network, space, amended complaint, monopoly power, regulation, contacts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Communications Law > ... > Regulated Practices > Introducing Competition > Duties of Incumbent Carriers & Resellers

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Communications Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Telecommunications Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Introducing Competition, Duties of Incumbent Carriers & Resellers

Under the Telecommunications Act of 1996, incumbent exchange carriers (incumbents) are required provide their new competitors with access to both their facilities for interconnection and to unbundled network elements. 47 U.S.C.S. § 251\(c\)\(2\)-\(3\). Section 251\(c\)\(6\) of the Act requires incumbents to provide for physical collocation of equipment necessary for interconnection or access to unbundled network elements at its premises. 47 U.S.C.S. § 251\(c\)\(6\). Physical collocation allows an interconnecting competitor to lease segregated space at the incumbent's premises and to set up a mini-facility comprised of its own interconnection equipment in the leased space. An alternative to physical collocation is virtual collocation, in which the interconnecting equipment is placed among the incumbent's equipment and operated and maintained by the incumbent.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2 [down] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

In a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the plaintiff bears the burden of proof on the necessary jurisdictional facts. When a court rules on the basis of affidavits and discovery materials without holding an evidentiary hearing, plaintiff's burden is met with a simple prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction. In determining whether a plaintiff has met this burden, uncontested allegations in the plaintiff's complaint must be taken.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Consent

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Statutory Sources

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Domicile

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

HN3 [down] In Personam Actions, Consent

Personal jurisdiction must comport with the state long-arm statute, and with the constitutional requirements of due process. California's long-arm statute permits a court to exercise personal jurisdiction over nonresident defendants on any basis not inconsistent with the California or United States Constitution. Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 410.10. Absent traditional bases for personal jurisdiction (physical presence, domicile or consent), due process requires that the defendant have certain minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN4 Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

A court must determine whether sufficient minimum contacts between the moving defendants and the forum state exist to allow the exercise of personal jurisdiction over them. In this regard, courts may exercise either general or specific jurisdiction over nonresident defendants. General jurisdiction exists when the nonresident has substantial or systematic and continuous contacts with the forum state, and the exercise of jurisdiction satisfies traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. In order to support an exercise of specific personal jurisdiction, plaintiffs must demonstrate that defendants had purposeful contacts with the forum state, that the present cause of action arose out of those contacts, and that exercising jurisdiction over defendants would not be unreasonable.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

HN5 Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Specific jurisdiction exists when the nonresident has purposeful contacts with California that are directly related to the subject matter of the litigation, and the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable. Courts have established a three-step test to determine whether the court may exercise specific jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. First, specific jurisdiction requires a showing that the out-of-state defendant purposefully directed its activities toward residents of the forum state or purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. Second, the controversy must be related to or arise out of defendant's contact with the forum. Third, the exercise of jurisdiction must comport with fair play and substantial justice, i.e., it must be reasonable. Generally, the relationship between the defendant, the forum and the litigation is the essential foundation of personal jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN6 Jurisdiction, In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction

On a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, plaintiff must make a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN7[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

A court must resolve disputed jurisdictional facts found in affidavits and declarations regarding jurisdictional issues in favor of plaintiff.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > General Overview

HN8[] Establishment, Elements

A parent company must exercise substantial day-to-day control of its subsidiary in order for its subsidiary to be viewed as its agent.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Legal Services Marketing > Advertising

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > General Overview

HN9[] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

The agency test is satisfied by a showing that the subsidiary functions as the parent corporation's representative, that it performs services that are sufficiently important to the foreign corporation that if it did not have a representative to perform them, the corporations own officials would undertake to perform substantially similar services. Moreover, neither confusing or misleading brand advertising nor shared legal counsel is sufficient to show agency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN10[] Clayton Act, Jurisdiction

The Clayton Act provides for nationwide service of process in antitrust actions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN11[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Even when a party has purposefully interjected itself into the forum state, any assertion of jurisdiction must conform with due process. To determine whether assertion of jurisdiction over non-resident defendants is reasonable, five factors are considered: the burden on the defendant; the extent of conflict with sovereignty of the defendant's state; the forum state's interest in adjudicating the suit; the most efficient judicial resolution of the dispute; and the convenience and effectiveness of relief for the plaintiff. While the court must balance these five factors, the application of these factors is not mechanical.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

HN12 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a district court must dismiss a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The question presented by a motion to dismiss is not whether the plaintiff will prevail in the action, but whether the plaintiff is entitled to offer evidence in support of the claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN13 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In the context of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss, a court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. Even if the pleadings suggest that the chance of recovery is remote, the court must allow the plaintiff to develop the case at this stage of the proceedings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN14 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

If a court chooses to dismiss the complaint, it must decide whether to grant leave to amend. In general, leave to amend is only denied if it is clear that amendment would be futile and that the deficiencies of the complaint could not be cured by amendment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to state a claim for monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege that: (1) the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) the defendant has willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) the defendant's conduct has caused antitrust injury. In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

HN16 [L] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), an antitrust complaint need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, to show injury a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anti-competitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition. If the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury, even if the defendant's conduct is illegal per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

HN18 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, governmental regulation does not prevent an allegation or finding of monopoly power. A plaintiff does not need to make a showing that market entry is completely impeded.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN19 [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under the Sherman Act, under certain circumstances, an assessment of market power may provide a basis to survive a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

HN20 [L] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Price regulation dramatically alters the calculus of antitrust harms and benefits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > Predatory Hiring & Price Squeezes

HN21 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Normally a price squeeze standing alone in a regulated industry would not equal exclusionary practices under the Sherman Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. These allegations must be specific enough to give defendant notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that it can defend against the charge and not just deny that it has done anything wrong.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

The five elements for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are: (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 requires that plaintiff set forth a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.

Counsel: For COVAD COMMUNICATIONS COMPANY, Plaintiff: Alfred C. Pfeiffer, Jr., Nora Cregan, Laura Mazzarella, McCutchen Doyle Brown & Enersen LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For COVAD COMMUNICATIONS COMPANY, Plaintiff: Bernard Chao, Covad Communications Company, Santa Clara, CA.

For PACIFIC BELL, SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC., SBC TECHNOLOGY RESOURCES, INC., SBC TELECOMMUNICATIONS, INC., defendants: Jeffrey H. Howard, David M. Schnorrebnerg, Crowell & Moring, [*2] Washington, DC.

For SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE CO., defendant: Jeffrey H. Howard, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC.

For PACIFIC BELL, SBC TECHNOLOGY RESOURCES, INC., defendants: Robert A. Mittelstaedt, Pillsbury Winthrop LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For PACIFIC BELL, defendant: Caroline N. Mitchell, Pillsbury Winthrop LLP, Bobby C. Lawyer, Marlin D. Ard, Eric V. Berg, Pacific Telesis Group, San Francisco, CA.

For PACIFIC BELL, SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC., SBC TECHNOLOGY RESOURCES, INC., SBC TELECOMMUNICATIONS, INC., defendants: Patrick W. Lee, Pillsbury Winthrop LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For PACIFIC BELL, SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC., SBC TECHNOLOGY RESOURCES, INC., defendants: Donald L. Flexner, Amy J. Mauser, Alfred P. Levitt, Kevin R. Anthony, Boies Schiller & Flexner LLP, Washington, DC.

For SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC., SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE CO., defendants: Donald L. Flexner, Wm. Randolph Smith, Amy J. Mauser, David M. Schnorrenberg, Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC.

For SBC COMMUNICATIONS, INC., SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE CO., defendants: Mark D. Plevin, Crowell & Moring, Irvine, CA.

For SBC TECHNOLOGY RESOURCES, INC., defendant: Paul R. Griffin, [*3] Mark D. Weideman, Pillsbury Winthrop LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For VERIZON SELECT SERVICES, INC., Miscellaneous: Thomas M. Riordan, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA.

For ALBERT O. STEIN, Intervenor: Willem F. Jonckheer, Schubert & Reed LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For ALBERT O. STEIN, Intervenor: Roy A. Katriel, Finkelstein Thompson & Loughran, Washington, DC.

Judges: SUSAN ILLSTON, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: SUSAN ILLSTON

Opinion

ORDER GRANTING DISMISSAL IN PART AND DENYING DISMISSAL IN PART

On December 10, 1999, this Court heard argument on defendants' motions to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction or for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Having carefully considered the arguments of the parties and the papers submitted, the Court DENIES defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and GRANTS defendant Southwestern Bell Telecommunications' motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. Defendant Pacific Bell's motion to dismiss the monopolization and attempted monopolization claims is DENIED, and Pacific Bell's motion to dismiss plaintiff's tying claim is GRANTED. The Court GRANTS, with leave [*4] to amend, defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss plaintiff's intentional and negligent misrepresentation claims, but DENIES defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss plaintiff's claim for violation of the Telecommunications Act of 1996 and for interference with prospective economic advantage. Defendant SBC-TRI's motion to dismiss is GRANTED with leave to amend.

BACKGROUND

1. Procedural Background

Covad Communications Company ("Covad") is a competitive local exchange carrier ("competitor" or "CLEC") founded as a result of the Telecommunications Act of 1996. On April 21, 1997, Covad and Pacific Bell ("Pacific") entered into a written interconnection agreement delineating the terms and conditions under which Pacific would provide Covad access to Pacific's local exchange network. Covad did not seek arbitration of the interconnection agreement, and the agreement was reviewed and approved by the California Public Utilities Commission ("CPUC"). The interconnection agreement provides for binding arbitration before the American Arbitration Association. In March 1998, Covad submitted a demand for AAA arbitration. Pursuant to Pacific's response, Covad agreed that only [*5] its contract claim was proper for arbitration.

Covad also attempted to negotiate an interconnection agreement for telecommunications services in Texas with Southwestern Bell Telecommunications ("SWBT"), a Missouri corporation with its principal place of business in Texas, which provides local telecommunications services in Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Texas. Unable to reach an agreement, the parties submitted the disputed issues to arbitration before the Texas Public Utilities Commission ("TPUC"). In the meantime, the parties performed pursuant to an interim agreement. The Arbitrators issued a decision on or about November 30, 1999. See Attachment to Cregan Letter (December 6, 1999).

On May 8, 1998, Covad filed a complaint alleging monopolization and attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, common law and statutory unfair competition, breach of the Telecommunications Act of 1996, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and negligent misrepresentation. On June 12, 1998, Covad filed its First Amended Complaint against defendants Pacific and SBC Technology Resources, Inc. ("SBC-TRI"). On November 18, 1998, the Court granted defendant's [*6] motion to dismiss plaintiff's third cause of action, and granted in part defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's fifth cause of action. Subsequently, on August 30, 1999, this Court granted plaintiff's motion for leave to file a Second Amended Complaint ("SAC"). One month later on September 29, 1999, plaintiff filed its Second Amended Complaint, adding defendants SBC Communications, Inc. ("SBC") and Southwestern Bell Telecommunications ("SWBT"). Covad alleges several causes of action: (1) monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act against Pacific and SWBT; (2) attempted monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act against Pacific and SWBT; (3) illegal tying in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act against Pacific and SWBT; (4) breach of the statutory duty to negotiate in good faith in violation of the Telecommunications Act of 1996 against SBC and SWBT; (5) illegal restraint of trade under the Cartwright Act against Pacific; (6) intentional misrepresentation against Pacific and SBC; (7) negligent misrepresentation against Pacific and SBC; (8) statutory unfair competition against Pacific, SBC, SBC-TRI; (9) interference with contractual relations against SBC [*7] and SBC-TRI; (10) common law unfair competition against Pacific, SBC, and SBC-TRI; and (11) interference with prospective economic advantage against Pacific, SBC, SBC-TRI, and SWBT.

Defendants now bring a motion to dismiss based upon lack of personal jurisdiction and failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted. Alternatively, defendant SWBT requests that the Covad's claims against it be transferred to a Texas district court. Defendants also request that plaintiff's state law claims be dismissed, should this Court grant dismissal of plaintiff's federal claims.

II. Factual Background

Plaintiff Covad alleges that defendants Pacific, SBC, SBC-TRI and SWBT have engaged in unlawful and monopolistic maneuvers to exclude Covad from the local telecommunications market. Covad is a Santa Clara, California corporation that provides a specific type of local telecommunications service: widespread, high-speed connections to Internet service providers ("ISP"s), business, and residential end-users through Digital Subscriber Line technology, or "DSL." See SAC P 14. Covad alleges that Pacific¹ has refused to provide Covad with access to

¹ Pacific is a California company and wholly-owned subsidiary of Nevada-incorporated Pacific Telesis, which is in turn a wholly-owned subsidiary of defendant SBC, a Delaware holding company.

Pacific's local telephone network [*8] which Covad needs in order to provide DSL service. Covad further claims that Pacific is imposing unnecessary and unreasonable requirements, as well as falsely asserting that collocation space is unavailable at Pacific's facilities -- all in an attempt to disadvantage Covad and to promote Pacific's own DSL service. Moreover, Covad states that Pacific has done so at the direction of SBC-TRI (a research and development company) and their common parent company, SBC.

Covad also alleges that SWBT participated in anti-competitive activities in an attempt to maintain its monopoly in its local telecommunications market in Texas. Specifically Covad complains that SWBT (1) refused to provide Covad with SDSL, a kind of DSL service and (2) offered unreasonable deadlines for price quotes, thereby delaying Covad's entry into the market. [*9] See SAC P 39. Covad further claims that SWBT wrongly withheld information, creating greater delay. See id. P 40.

A. Collocation

HN1[] Under the Telecommunications Act of 1996 ("Act"), incumbent exchange carriers ("incumbents" or "ILEC"s) are required provide their new competitors with access to both their facilities for interconnection and to unbundled network elements. See 47 U.S.C. § 251\(c\)\(2\)-\(3\). Section 251\(c\)\(6\) of the Act requires incumbents "to provide . . . for physical collocation of equipment necessary for interconnection or access to unbundled network elements at [its] premises." 47 U.S.C. § 251\(c\)\(6\). "Physical collocation" allows an interconnecting competitor to lease segregated space at the incumbent's premises and to set up a mini-facility comprised of its own interconnection equipment in the leased space. The equipment is maintained and operated by the competitor. An alternative to physical collocation is "virtual collocation," in which the interconnecting equipment is placed among the incumbent's equipment and operated and maintained by the incumbent. The Act expresses a clear preference for physical collocation [*10] over virtual collocation, allowing virtual collocation only if the incumbent "demonstrates to the State commission that physical collocation is not practical for technical reasons or because of space limitations." Id.

Covad alleges (1) that Pacific's system for processing collocation requests is unreasonably slow and serves to delay competition; and (2) that Pacific has unreasonably denied Covad's requests for physical collocation, stating that there was no space for collocation at certain sites, and later installing its own DSL equipment at those same sites. Pacific requires the installation of a "collocation cage," a fenced-in space in which the competitor's equipment is housed inside the central office. SAC P 47. Covad's specific complaint regarding the collocation cages is that Pacific's collocation request process is unreasonably slow. One reason for the lengthy process is the time required to construct the cages. See SAC P 48. Furthermore, Covad claims that Pacific routinely fails to meet the deadlines to deliver cages and items required to be delivered with the cages. See SAC P 53. Covad contends that in order to provide immediate physical collocation, Pacific should [*11] be required to collocate Covad's equipment without cages, because it argues (1) the cages are not necessary to ensure security, (2) the cages take up an inordinate amount of space which could otherwise be used for collocation equipment, (3) the cages are prohibitively expensive ($ 8,000 to more than $ 100,000), and (4) they are not required by the Act. See SAC PP 47 - 52. Covad also alleges that because Pacific allows competitors to order "transport" to make the collocated equipment usable only after the cage is completed, Pacific effectively delays Covad's competitive entry into the market. Covad argues that by denying its requests for physical collocation, Pacific has severely damaged Covad's speed of entry into the geographic markets serviced by these central offices. See SAC P 49. Covad asserts that Pacific has performed all of the alleged acts at the behest of its parent company, SBC. See SAC PP 43 - 50.

B. Local Loop Failures and DSL Technology

Covad alleges that Pacific Bell routinely fails to deliver timely and properly installed local "loops" (telephone lines connecting end-users to central offices). See SAC P 55. According to Covad, the loops that [*12] Pacific delivers are either extremely late, do not work, are improperly installed, or all of the above, thereby forcing Covad to wait months and further delaying its market entry. See id. P P 55 - 56.

Additionally, Covad claims that SBC, SBC-TRI, and SWBT (the "SBC entities") collectively have attempted to spread doubt throughout the market about Covad's ability to offer adequate DSL services. Specifically Covad claims that the SBC entities (1) have announced, without sound technological reason, that all competitors must conform with SBC's chosen DSL technology; (2) have restricted Covad's access to necessary planning and implementation data; and (3) have used their control over operations support systems ("OSS") to gain an unfair competitive advantage. See id. P 56.

C. Price Squeeze

Covad claims that Pacific and SWBT have created an anti-competitive scheme when allocating the costs of loops sold to Covad and other competitors, thereby creating a "price squeeze" between wholesale and retail loop prices. See SAC P 59. Specifically, Covad alleges that Pacific and SWBT set loop prices to Covad above wholesale, while setting retail prices for its services at or below [*13] wholesale prices. Additionally, Covad charges that the SBC entities charge excessive one-time fees to "condition" the loops, then set retail prices for services that use the loops at or near wholesale prices. See id. P 59.

D. Tying

Covad also alleges tying claims under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. Covad asserts that both Pacific and SWBT attribute most costs of local loops to analog voice service. However, Pacific and SWBT "line share," that is, they provide DSL service over already-installed loops used for both analog voice and data service. However, any competitor who provides solely DSL service (or solely voice service), must purchase an entirely new loop. Covad asserts that compelling it to purchase a full loop, when it only desires access to the data service, constitutes the tying of two products: data service and voice service. Therefore, Covad claims, Pacific and SWBT's ability to use a single, already-installed loop for both analog voice and DSL service, while forcing Covad to purchase new loops to provide only DSL service, places Covad and other CLEC's at a competitive disadvantage. See id. P 60 - 62.

E. Spectral Interference Requirements

According [*14] to Covad, Pacific and SWBT announced that all competitors providing DSL services must conform to a specific type of DSL technology chosen by Pacific and SWBT. The reason for the specific technology, Pacific and SWBT explained, was to reduce the risk of "spectral interference" or "cross talk," the phenomenon of stronger signals bleeding over to weaker ones and disrupting service in adjoining cables. Covad claims that this requirement is unnecessary because it has been deploying different DSL technology for months without complaint, and another incumbent has used and permits the use of other DSL technologies. See SAC PP 65-66.

DISCUSSION

I. Personal Jurisdiction

HN2 In a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the plaintiff bears the burden of proof on the necessary jurisdictional facts. See Ziegler v. Indian River County, 64 F.3d 470, 473 (9th Cir. 1995). When a court rules on the basis of affidavits and discovery materials without holding an evidentiary hearing, plaintiff's burden is met with a simple prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction. See Fields v. Sedgwick Associated Risks, Ltd., 796 F.2d 299, 301 (9th Cir. 1986). [*15] In determining whether a plaintiff has met this burden, uncontested allegations in the plaintiff's complaint must be taken as true, and "conflicts between the facts contained in the parties' affidavits must be resolved in the plaintiff's favor." AT&T Co. v. Compagnie Bruxelles Lambert, 94 F.3d 586, 588 (9th Cir. 1996) (internal citations and quotations omitted).

HN3 Personal jurisdiction must comport with the state long-arm statute, and with the constitutional requirements of due process. See Omeluk v. Langsten Slip and Batbyggeri A/S, 52 F.3d 267 (9th Cir. 1995) (citing Chan v.

Society Expeditions, Inc., 39 F.3d 1398 (9th Cir. 1994). California's long-arm statute permits this Court to exercise personal jurisdiction over nonresident defendants on any basis not inconsistent with the California or United States Constitution. See Cal. Code Civ. Proc., § 410.10. Absent traditional bases for personal jurisdiction (physical presence, domicile or consent), due process requires that the defendant have certain minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and [*16] substantial justice. See International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (1945).

HN4 [↑] The Court must determine whether sufficient minimum contacts between the moving defendants and the forum state exist to allow the exercise of personal jurisdiction over them. In this regard, courts may exercise either general or specific jurisdiction over nonresident defendants. See FDIC v. British-American Ins. Co., LTD., 828 F.2d 1439, 1442 (9th Cir. 1987). General jurisdiction exists when the nonresident has substantial or systematic and continuous contacts with the forum state, and the exercise of jurisdiction satisfies traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. See Ziegler, 64 F.3d 470 (9th Cir. 1995). In order to support an exercise of specific personal jurisdiction, plaintiffs must demonstrate that defendants had purposeful contacts with California, that the present cause of action arose out of those contacts, and that exercising jurisdiction over defendants would not be unreasonable. HN5 [↑] Specific jurisdiction exists when the nonresident has purposeful contacts with California that are directly related [*17] to the subject matter of the litigation, and the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable. Id. The Ninth Circuit has established a three-step test to determine whether the court may exercise specific jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. See British-American, 828 F.2d at 1442; Ziegler, 64 F.3d at 473. First, specific jurisdiction requires a showing that the out-of-state defendant purposefully directed its activities toward residents of the forum state or purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 474-475, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528, 105 S. Ct. 2174 (1985). Second, the controversy must be related to or "arise out of" defendant's contact with the forum. Ziegler, 64 F.3d at 473. Third, the exercise of jurisdiction must comport with fair play and substantial justice, i.e., it must be reasonable. See British-American, 828 F.2d at 1442. Generally, the relationship between the defendant, the forum and the litigation is the essential foundation of personal jurisdiction. [*18] See Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 414, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404, 104 S. Ct. 1868 (1984) (citing Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 53 L. Ed. 2d 683, 97 S. Ct. 2569 (1977)).

A. SBC

HN6 [↑] On a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, plaintiff must make a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction. See Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Technology Assocs., Inc., 557 F.2d 1280, 1285 (9th Cir. 1977). Plaintiff asserts that SBC is amenable to general jurisdiction because it has substantial and systematic and continuous contacts with California. Covad has introduced evidence that SBC maintains offices in California and has recruited for employment positions in California. See Nissen Decl., Exhs. 5, 6, 21. Covad further alleges that the Court has general jurisdiction of SBC by virtue of SBC's "agency" relationship with Pacific, its subsidiary. Plaintiff essentially asserts that for jurisdictional purposes, SBC is Pacific. Covad states that SBC issues directives to Pacific regarding its interconnection policies; maintains a competitor online website which provides a critical interface for all competitors [*19] doing business with Pacific (<http://clec.sbc.com>); created an "ASDL Business case" for Pacific, Nevada Bell and SWBT; encourages a marketing image which does not distinguish between SBC and its "brands"; and shares legal counsel with its subsidiaries. See, e.g., Chao Decl., Exh. E; Nissen Decl., Exh. 8-21. Covad further alleges that SBC played a critical role in the negotiation and arbitration of the Covad/Pacific interconnection agreement, maintains an office in San Francisco, and has interjected itself into the California market through its CPUC application for acquisition of Pacific Bell.

SBC counters that SBC and Pacific are distinct entities. SBC states that it is merely a holding company; it maintains no offices, employees, real or personal property in California; it is not licensed to do business in California; and it has never done business in California.² SBC further responds that it does not control its subsidiaries' day-to-day operations, and that the policy decisions it makes are "nothing more than the typical minimal involvement of a holding company parent in the affairs of its subsidiary, which is inadequate to confer jurisdiction over a parent." SBC and SWBT Reply [*20] in Supp. of Mtn. to Dismiss, at 8. Finally, SBC states that the officials to whom Covad refers are not SBC employees, and that any confusion on Covad's part cannot be attributed to SBC.

The jurisdictional facts are highly disputed. However, plaintiff has presented a powerful case that SBC may conduct a variety of activities. For example, plaintiff [*21] directs the Court's attention to several exhibits in which SBC repeatedly states that it does much more than simply hold stock in its regional companies. See, e.g., Nissen Decl., Exhs.8-21; see also id. Exh. 10 (displaying SBC news release representing that "SBC has signed 554 interconnection agreements -- agreements that open the door for these companies to use our network to compete" and "spent $ 1.3 billion to open its local phone markets"). HN7[↑] The Court must resolve disputed jurisdictional facts found in affidavits and declarations regarding jurisdictional issues in favor of plaintiff. See AT&T v. Compagnie Bruxelles Lambert, 94 F.3d 586, 588 (9th Cir. 1996). Given the wide array of documents presented to the Court, representing either that SBC is present in California or is, in fact, more than a simple holding company, the Court finds that plaintiff has stated a prima facie case of personal jurisdiction over SBC.

The Court does not agree, however, that personal jurisdiction may be exercised under an "agency" theory. HN8[↑] A parent company must exercise substantial day-to-day control of its subsidiary in order for its subsidiary to be viewed as its agent. The facts [*22] that plaintiff alleges in its complaint are insufficient to establish such control. HN9[↑] The "agency test is satisfied by a showing that the subsidiary functions as the parent corporation's representative, that it performs services that are 'sufficiently important to the foreign corporation that if it did not have a representative to perform them, the corporations' own officials would undertake to perform substantially similar services.' Doe I v. Unocal Corp., 27 F. Supp. 2d 1174 (C.D. Cal 1998) (quoting Chan v. Society Expeditions, Inc., 39 F.3d 1398, 1405 (9th Cir. 1994)); see also Kramer v. British Leyland, Ltd., 628 F.2d 1175, 1177 (9th Cir. 1980) (finding that the facts that the parent company was generally responsible for the sale the subsidiaries' products outside, had general executive responsibility for the operation of a subsidiary, reviewed and approved major policy decisions, guaranteed its subsidiary's obligations, worked closely with executives regarding product pricing, and approved proposals for consolidating distribution were insufficient to make the subsidiary an agent of the parent for jurisdictional purposes). Moreover, [*23] neither confusing or misleading brand advertising nor shared legal counsel is sufficient to show agency. See Ameritec Corp. v. Ameritech Corp., 1986 WL 10702 (C.D. Cal. Apr. 29, 1986); Calvert v. Huckins, 875 F. Supp. 674, 677-78 (E.D. Cal. 1995).

B. SWBT

Covad served defendant SWBT under HN10[↑] the Clayton Act, which provides for nationwide service of process in antitrust actions. Covad asserts that, because SWBT traveled to the forum to negotiate and sign the Texas interconnection agreement and has an employee based in San Francisco, the Court may properly exercise personal jurisdiction. SWBT counters that it is a Missouri corporation with its principal place of business in Texas. Moreover, all of the activities alleged by Covad occurred outside of California. Therefore, SWBT contends, assertion of jurisdiction over it would offend due process. This Court previously stated that the Second Amended Complaint contained "no allegations that would provide a basis for the Court's assertion of personal jurisdiction over SWBT." Order Denying Defendant's Mtn to Extend Stay and Granting Plff's Mtn for Leave to File Amended Complaint, at 4 n.1 (November 18, 1998). [*24] Having once again reviewed the Second Amended Complaint, the Court finds that it is unreasonable to assert jurisdiction over SWBT.

² SBC asserts that the Dunn & Bradstreet listing and the Internet job postings, reflecting ongoing presence in California, were mistakes. See SBC and SWBT Reply in Supp. of Mtn. to Dismiss, at 10-11. At oral argument SBC counsel responded to the assertion that SBC actively recruits for employment positions in California, see Nissen Decl., Exh. 4-6, by stating that "an HR person in San Ramon [California]" had made the mistake, which was corrected when plaintiff called it to SBC's attention. While no clarification was provided regarding by whom the human resources staff member was employed, the reference suggests that the employee worked at the behest of SBC.

HN11 Even when a party has purposefully interjected itself into the forum state, any assertion of jurisdiction must conform with due process. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 477-78, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528, 105 S. Ct. 2174 (1985). To determine whether assertion of jurisdiction over non-resident defendants is reasonable, five factors are considered: the burden on the defendant; the extent of conflict with sovereignty of the defendant's state; the forum state's interest in adjudicating the suit; the most efficient judicial resolution of the dispute; and the convenience and effectiveness of relief for the plaintiff. See Pilgrim Tel. v. Southwestern Bell Tel., Civ. No. 93-2001 (D.D.C. Dec. 6, 1995)(unpublished case) (citing Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Court, 480 U.S. 102, 113, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92, 107 S. Ct. 1026 (1987)); see also Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc., 854 F.2d 1191, 1198-99 (9th Cir. 1988)(seven factor test to determine same issue). While the court must balance these five factors, [*25] the application of these factors is not mechanical.

1. Burden on the Defendant. There is a definite burden on defendant SWBT in defending a case in California. Though SWBT employees have previously traveled to California for negotiations, it was for a limited time period. Conversely, Covad has also traveled to Texas to participate in extensive arbitrations before the TPUC, and has offices in Texas. There is little burden in asking plaintiff to return to that forum in order to bring a suit which relates to actions taken while implementing a Texas interconnection agreement. Moreover, the majority of witnesses necessary to plaintiff's suit are located in Texas. Therefore, although both parties have traveled to the others' forums, the balance tips sharply in favor of dismissal.

2. California's Interest in Adjudicating the Suit. Covad, a California corporation, is a party to this suit; therefore California does have a limited interest in this action. However, Covad has chosen to enter the telecommunications market in Texas. Congress has placed the interconnection agreement between Covad and SWBT under the auspices of the home state's PUC and has provided review by that state's [*26] federal court. Therefore, Texas has a much stronger interest in adjudicating this matter. Though Covad's claims are independent of the interconnection agreement, they are nonetheless inextricably integrated with the relationship established by that agreement. Because the TPUC and the Texas district courts have jurisdiction over most disputes concerning the performance of Texas interconnection agreements, Texas has a distinct interest in consistent adjudication of all controversies (breach of contract or antitrust) arising from the agreements that the TPUC and district courts are charged with supervising. Moreover, any conclusion made by this Court could potentially conflict with the findings and jurisdiction of the TPUC or the Texas district court. Accordingly, this factor weighs heavily in favor of dismissal.

3. Convenience and Effectiveness of Relief for the Plaintiff. Though Texas may not be the most convenient forum for plaintiff, plaintiff has spent several months in Texas arbitrating its interconnection agreement before the TPUC. As stated above, plaintiff has failed to show that California is more convenient forum. Moreover, Covad has demonstrated neither that its [*27] action cannot be adjudicated fairly nor that it would be unable to obtain appropriate relief in a Texas federal court. Therefore, requiring plaintiff to also file its lawsuit in Texas is not unreasonable. Accordingly, this factor weighs in favor of dismissal.

4. Efficient Judicial Resolution. Covad also asserts that, because its claims against SWBT are similar to those against SBC and Pacific, one action will promote judicial economy. However, the Court finds that it is more expedient for a Texas court, which is more familiar with the TPUC and its policy concerns, to review all issues regarding performance of the agreements that Congress has specifically placed under that court's jurisdiction. Resolution of these disputes by the Texas district court will prevent any potential conflicts between decisions of this Court and the TPUC.

5. Several States' Interest in Furthering Fundamental Social Policies. Texas, which approves and supervises interconnection agreements in that state, has a substantial interest in also determining whether the actions taken pursuant to those contracts constitute anti-competitive behavior. Texas' substantial knowledge of and interest in the proper [*28] regulation of its local telephone markets outweighs any concern California may have regarding the litigation between the Covad and SWBT.

Accordingly, all claims against defendant SWBT are dismissed without prejudice.³

II. Failure to State a Claim Upon Which Relief Can Be Granted

HN12[] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\), a district court must dismiss a complaint if it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The question presented [*29] by a motion to dismiss is not whether the plaintiff will prevail in the action, but whether the plaintiff is entitled to offer evidence in support of the claim. See Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90, 94 S. Ct. 1683 (1974).

HN13[] The Court must assume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and must draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff's favor. See Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 (9th Cir. 1987). Even if the pleadings suggest that the chance of recovery is remote, the Court must allow the plaintiff to develop the case at this stage of the proceedings. See United States v. City of Redwood City, 640 F.2d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 1981).

HN14[] If the Court chooses to dismiss the complaint, it must decide whether to grant leave to amend. In general, leave to amend is only denied if it is clear that amendment would be futile and "that the deficiencies of the complaint could not be cured by amendment." Noll v. Carlson, 809 F.2d 1446, 1448 (9th Cir. 1987) (quoting Broughton v. Cutter Laboratories, 622 F.2d 458, 460 (9th Cir. 1980) (per curiam)); see Poling v. Morgan, 829 F.2d 882, 886 (9th Cir. 1987) [*30] (citing Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222, 83 S. Ct. 227 (1962)) (futility is basis for denying amendment under Rule 15).

A. Antitrust Claims against Pacific Bell

1. Monopolization and Attempted Monopolization

HN15[] In order to state a claim for monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege that: (1) the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) the defendant has willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) the defendant's conduct has caused antitrust injury. In order to state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must show: (1) specific intent to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anti-competitive conduct to accomplish the monopolization; (3) dangerous probability of success; and (4) causal antitrust injury.⁴ See Cost Management Servs. v. Washington Natural Gas, 99 F.3d 937, 949 (9th Cir. 1996) (citations omitted). HN16[] To survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), an antitrust complaint "need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws. [*31]" Id. (citations omitted).

³ Defendant SWBT argued in its papers that "if the Court does not dismiss Covad's claims against SWBT, at a minimum, the Court should transfer them to Texas for the convenience of the parties and witnesses, and in the interest of justice. 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\)." SBT and SWBT Memo in Supp. of Mtn. to Dismiss, at 20 n.19. Were this Court to find that it had jurisdiction over SWBT, for the same reasons as are articulated above it would also find transfer to Texas under 28 U.S.C. § 1404\(a\) to be appropriate.

⁴ The Ninth Circuit in Cost Management stated that HN17[] to show injury, a plaintiff must prove that his loss flows from an anti-competitive aspect or effect of the defendant's behavior, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from acts that do not hurt competition. If the injury flows from aspects of the defendant's conduct that are beneficial or neutral to competition, there is no antitrust injury, even if the defendant's conduct is illegal per se.

Cost Management, 99 F.3d at 949 n.13 (quoting Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1433 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 987, 133 L. Ed. 2d 424, 116 S. Ct. 515 (1995)).

Pacific asserts that Covad's antitrust claims should be dismissed with prejudice. Specifically, Pacific argues that, because it has neither the power to control prices nor to exclude competitors from the market, as a matter of law, it does not possess [*32] monopoly power. Pacific claims that because its prices are state- and FCC-regulated, it cannot possibly wield monopolistic power. Pacific further points out that statistical market share is neither an adequate nor reliable indicator of monopoly power. The Court disagrees.

Pacific essentially argues that, because it is a regulated entity and because Covad has indeed entered the market, it cannot exercise monopoly power. However, HN18 governmental regulation does not prevent an allegation or finding of monopoly power. See Cost Management, 99 F.3d at 950. Moreover, plaintiff is correct in the assertion that it does not need to make a showing that market entry is completely impeded. See Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605 n.32, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467, 105 S. Ct. 2847 \(1985\) (stating that "exclusionary" behavior includes acts that "tend[] to impair the opportunities of rivals . . . [or] either does not further competition on the merits or does so in an unnecessarily restrictive way"). Here, plaintiff has sufficiently alleged that Pacific has imposed costly and unnecessary conditions upon access to its network, and intentionally delayed performance [*33] of obligations under the agreement, in an effort to prevent it from entering the market.

Pacific further points to Metro Mobile CTS, Inc. v. NewVector Communications, Inc., 892 F.2d 62 \(9th Cir. 1989\) in support of its argument that it holds no monopoly power. The Court in Metro stated both that reliance upon statistics was foolish and that courts should look to the reality of the market. See id. at 62-63. However, the market reality which the Metro court faced was quite different from the reality with which this Court is faced.⁵ Moreover, the Ninth Circuit has stated that HN19 under certain circumstances, an assessment of market power may provide a basis to survive a motion to dismiss. See Cost Management, 99 F.3d at 951. Covad has alleged that Pacific controls over 85% of the relevant local telecommunications market, and that Pacific's practices (e.g., requiring collocation cages, refusing to service ASDL, providing defective loops) present a barrier to competition. These allegations are adequate to survive a motion to dismiss.

[*34] 2. Price Squeeze

Pacific asserts that the Court must also dismiss Covad's price squeeze claims, because, as a matter of law, Pacific's actions were not a violation of antitrust law. Pacific cites to such cases as City of Anaheim v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 955 F.2d 1373, 1377 \(9th Cir. 1992\) and Town of Concord v. Boston Edison Co., 915 F.2d 17 \(1st Cir. 1990\), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 931, 113 L. Ed. 2d 268, 111 S. Ct. 1337 (1991) (discussed extensively by City of Anaheim) to support its position that a plaintiff may not state a price squeeze claim against Pacific, because Pacific's prices are regulated both by the FCC and the CPUC. See Town of Concord, 915 F.2d at 18 (stating that HN20 price regulation "dramatically alters the calculus of antitrust harms and benefits"); City of Anaheim, 955 F.2d at 1378 (asserting that "we, too, would be reluctant to hold that a mere showing that a squeeze developed would suffice to cause antitrust liability").

The Court in City of Anaheim stated that "HN21 normally" a price squeeze standing alone in a regulated industry would not equal exclusionary practices [*35] under the Sherman Act. See id. at 1377. The Court insisted that "something more" was necessary. See id. at 1378. Here, plaintiff has alleged more than a price squeeze. See SAC P 41-78, 82-160. Specifically against Pacific, Covad asserts various forms of anti-competitive conduct, illegal restraint of trade, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, statutory and common law unfair competition, and interference with prospective economic advantage. See id. Plaintiff also alleges that Pacific performed these actions with the ⁵ The relevant market in Metro was the cellular telephone market -- a new market in which defendant NewVector had neither a years-long monopoly nor owned the only physical facilities by which the product could be supplied to all consumers. Rather defendant had managed to gain a seventeen-month "headstart" over other competitors. See Metro, 892 F.2d at 63. Pacific cites to other cases which are also distinguishable upon the facts or the posture of the case. See, e.g., United States v. Syufy Enterprises, 903 F.2d 659, 664 \(9th Cir. 1990\) (finding, after significant findings of fact and a trial, that plaintiff who bought out competitors had committed no antitrust violations); Adaptive Power Solutions v. Hughes Missile Sys. Co., 141 F.3d 947, 951 \(9th Cir. 1998\) (reviewing a grant of summary judgment).

"intent to preserve and extend its monopoly power and position." SAC P 29. Furthermore, because Pacific is no longer a lawful monopoly, this Court need not "tread" as lightly as the Court in City of Anaheim. See 955 F.2d at 1378 (stating that "given the fact that the parties operate in an area where . . . monopoly is legal, courts should tread carefully").⁶ Finally, both City of Anaheim and Town of Concord were decided, not upon a motion to dismiss, but after a trial on the merits. Therefore, Pacific's motion to dismiss plaintiff's price squeeze claim is DENIED.

[*36] 3. Tying

Defendant Pacific argues that the Court should dismiss Covad's tying claims because, during the periods in question, the FCC did not permit Pacific to "line share," that is to offer voice analog and digital (data) services over the same local loop. Covad counters that neither the FCC nor the CPUC has ever issued a regulation or order prohibiting line sharing. Rather, the FCC has given state PUCs the ability to offer additional unbundled network elements ("UNEs") at their discretion. Covad further states that other incumbents have allowed line sharing at their facilities. Because Covad has not shown that voice and data service constitute two separate and distinct products under the Act, Covad's tying claim (fifth cause of action) hereby is DISMISSED.

In early 1999, the CPUC affirmed an arbitrator's decision regarding an interconnection agreement. See In the Matter of the Petition of PDO Communications, Inc., Decision No. 99-01-009. No. A. 98-06-052 (Cal. P.U.C., Jan. 7, 1999), 1999 WL 116230 (Cal. P.U.C.), Exh. 1 to Appendix of Unpublished Authorities in Supp. of Defendant Pacific's Mtn. to Dismiss SAC. In that opinion, the CPUC found that Pacific [*37] was not required to "line share" with PDO Communications, Inc., because such line sharing was not permitted by the FCC. See id. at *8. The CPUC specifically relied upon the FCC's refusal "to define a loop element in functional terms, rather than in terms of the facility itself." Id. at *10 (quoting In the Matter of Implementation of the Local Competition Provisions in the Telecommunications Act of 1996, First Report and Order, CC Docket Nos. 96-98 and 95-185, FCC 96-325 (August 9, 1996) P 385 ("First Report and Order")). Accordingly, the local loop is itself defined as an unbundled network element ("UNE"), which need not be further broken down. See 47 C.F.R. P 51.319.⁷

[*38] The Court acknowledges that, before the FCC issued its recent order requiring line sharing, the obligations and rights of incumbents and competitors respectively was unclear. As plaintiff points out, other incumbents had provided line sharing and the FCC had not by regulation prohibited the practice. However, the FCC defined the loop element in terms of the physical component (i.e., the loop), rather than in terms of the functions the loop can perform (i.e., voice service and data service). See In the Matter of PDO, at *10 (citing First Report and Order P 385). Covad maintains that this Court should find that voice and data services are two distinct products. However, to find in favor of what Covad requests would be to do that which the FCC (prior to its new rule) had refused to do -- to define the loop in reference to its function. The Court declines to do so. The Court, therefore, concludes that plaintiff has not stated a claim for tying under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and this claim is DISMISSED.

B. Claims against SBC

⁶The FCC in In re Applications of Ameritech and SBC, CC Docket No. 98-141 (October 8, 1999), at 107, asserted that, because of "existing regulatory safeguards, [incumbents] do not have a significant ability to act" on the incentive to conduct a price squeeze. Nonetheless, the FCC noted that incumbents do have an incentive to perform such a squeeze and did not definitively conclude that a price squeeze could not happen.

⁷The FCC had also issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM) addressing line sharing. See In the Matters of Deployment of Wireline Services Offering Advances Telecommunications Capability, et al., CC Docket No. 98-147, et al. Memorandum and Order, and Notice of Proposed Rulemaking, FCC 98-188 (August 7, 1998) (hereinafter NPRM). After reviewing the text of the document, the CPUC agreed with the conclusion that, "the clear import of the NPRM is that different service providers are not currently permitted to offer services over the same loop." In the Matter of PDO, at *8. The Commission agreed with the arbitrator's assessment that it was difficult to explain "how an FCC question asking whether [line sharing] 'should be allowed,'" could be interpreted as stating that line sharing is required. See In the Matter of PDO, at 9.

1. Intentional and Negligent Misrepresentation

SBC contends that Covad has failed to meet the heightened pleading standard under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9\(b\) for both its intentional and negligent misrepresentation claims. Defendant SBC claims that plaintiff has not come close to stating the "time, place, and specific content of the false representations as well as the identities of the parties to the misrepresentation." Silicon Knights, Inc. v. Crystal Dynamics, Inc., 983 F. Supp. 1303, 1315 \(N.D. Cal. 1997\), nor providing the circumstances surrounding the misrepresentation.⁸

HN22 [Rule 9(b)] requires that "in all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." These allegations must be specific enough to give SBC notice of the particular misconduct which is alleged to constitute the fraud charged so that it can defend against the charge and not just deny that it has done anything wrong. See Neubronner v. Milken, 6 F.3d 666, 671 \(9th Cir. 1993\).

Covad alleges misrepresentation, based upon the fact that Pacific denied that collocation space was available for DSL collocation but thereafter set up DSL collocation in the same central offices to which it had denied Covad access.⁹ Covad further alleges that Pacific "and SBC" stated that they would perform their obligations under the interconnection agreements fully and timely, but failed to do, by not performing by February 1998.

[*41] The complaint's allegations of intentional and negligent misrepresentation by SBC neither state the time, place and manner of the alleged misrepresentations, nor identify the SBC official who made the statement. The Court concludes that plaintiff has not offered sufficient facts as to SBC to state a claim on which relief can be granted. Therefore, this claim is dismissed with leave to amend.

2. Claim under the Telecommunications Act

SBC asserts that Covad cannot state a claim for failure to negotiate in good faith in violation of § 251\(c\)\(1\) of the Telecommunications Act, because that section does not create a private right of action. SBC further maintains that this Court may not imply a right of action, because (1) there is a general presumption against implied private rights of action and (2) to imply a private right of action would dismantle the intricate statutory dispute resolution scheme established by Congress. Covad counters that § 207 allows it to pursue its § 206 claim for violation of § 251 before the FCC or the district court. Covad alleges that because DSL is an interstate service, its claims fall within § 207's jurisdiction.

Defendant SBC cites to Maydak v. Bonded Credit Co., 96 F.3d 1332 \(9th Cir. 1997\) [*42] to support its contention that there is no private right of action under the Act. Plaintiff contends that, though Maydak does state that courts should be reluctant to imply rights under the Act, Maydak also made clear that if a plaintiff alleges a violation of another section of the Act (rather than simply suing defendant under § 206), there is jurisdiction under § 207. See id. at 1334 (stating that if plaintiff "sued [a carrier] for a violation of a stated statutory provision, the district court would clearly have had subject matter jurisdiction under § 207"). Furthermore, the court in AT&T v. Pacific Bell, 60 F. Supp. 2d 997, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12623 \(N.D. Cal. June 24, 1999\), stated that "defendant contends that Section 207 applies only if the dispute involves interstate communications. . . . This contention appears to be correct." 60 F. Supp. 2d 997, 999, Id. at *7.

⁸ Defendant Pacific did not move to dismiss these causes of action for failure to state a claim, but relied on its contention that because the federal claims should be dismissed, the state claims should likewise be dismissed as a discretionary matter. The essential flaw in the state claims as they are currently framed is that they do not identify the actions taken or statements made by SBC, as contrasted with Pacific, which form the basis for the charges.

⁹ Nine of 20 central offices which Pacific represented were without space in November 1997 and August 1998, were later found to have space. See SAC P 124. Covad claims that Pacific and SBC had represented that these denials were taken after careful evaluation. See id. P 123.

SBC argues that the complaint by its own terms states that the DSL market is extremely local in nature. See SAC P 25. However, despite Covad's characterization of the consumers and market as local, in at least one order, the FCC has concluded that DSL is an interstate service. See Memorandum Opinion and Order, [*43] In the Matter of GTE Telephone Operating Cos., GTOC Tariff No. 1, GTOC Transmittal No. 1148, CC Docket No. 98-79, October 30, 1999, at P 1. Because DSL is an interstate service, § 207 is applicable to this action. Therefore, plaintiff may assert its claim for violation of § 251 of the Act.

3. Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

HN23 [↑] The five elements for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are: "(1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third party, with the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's knowledge of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) economic harm to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant." Youst v. Longo, 43 Cal. 3d 64, 71, 233 Cal. Rptr. 294, 729 P.2d 728 \(1987\).

Covad has claimed that its relationships with its present customers were damaged by and economic harm resulted from defendant's alleged attempt to disparage Covad's reputation and goodwill by, for example, announcing that competitors would be forced to [*44] use a specific type of DSL technology, by delaying collocation, and delivering defective products. These allegations, taken as true, are sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss.

C. Claims against SBC-TRI

HN24 [↑] Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires that plaintiff set forth a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Defendant SBC-TRI asserts that the claims against it fail to meet this standard, because they are conclusory and give neither proper notice of the nature of the allegations against it nor of their relationship to the actions at issue in this case. Covad asserts that its allegations that SBC-TRI "actively directed the collocation and spectrum management policies of both Pacific and SWBT, policies that have anticompetitively and unreasonably restricted Covad's deployment of telecommunications services" are sufficient. Plff's Oppo. to Mtn to Dismiss, at 12.

The Court agrees that the allegations contained in the complaint do not offer sufficient information to place defendant SBC-TRI on notice of the specific conduct it asserts is relevant to the claims against it. See SAC P 13, P 39. The claims against [*45] SBC-TRI are therefore dismissed with leave to amend.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and GRANTS defendant Southwestern Bell's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. Defendant Pacific Bell's motion to dismiss the monopolization and attempted monopolization claims is DENIED, and Pacific Bell's motion to dismiss plaintiff's tying claim is GRANTED. The Court GRANTS, with leave to amend, defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss plaintiff's intentional and negligent misrepresentation claims, but DENIES defendant SBC Communication's motion to dismiss plaintiff's claim for violation the Telecommunications Act of 1996 and for interference with prospective economic advantage. Defendant SBC-TRI's motion to dismiss is GRANTED with leave to amend.

Any amended complaint in accordance with this Order must be filed no later than January 7, 2000.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: December 14, 1999

SUSAN ILLSTON

United States District Judge

End of Document

Stucky v. City of San Antonio

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

December 14, 1999, Decided

No. 98-50934

Reporter

1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 38905 *

BRENDA L. STUCKY, d/b/a Bill's Wrecker Service; RICHARD VILLANEVA, d/b/a Creswells 24 Hr. Wrecker Service, Plaintiffs - Counter-Defendants Appellees-Cross-Appellants versus CITY OF SAN ANTONIO, Defendant-Appellant - Cross-Appellee. TEXAS TOWING CORPORATION, Intervenor Defendant - Counter-Plaintiff-Appellant-Cross-Appellee

Notice: RULES OF THE FIFTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS MAY LIMIT CITATION TO UNPUBLISHED OPINIONS. PLEASE REFER TO THE RULES OF THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THIS CIRCUIT.

Prior History: [*1] Appeals from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas. (SA-96-CV-1285).

Stucky v. City of San Antonio, 204 F.3d 1115, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 35046 (5th Cir. Tex., 1999)

Core Terms

towing, Ordinance, bid, partial summary judgment, district court, nonconsent, VACATE, void, summary judgment motion, final judgment, declare null, permanently, antitrust, enjoined, renewing, dismissal with prejudice, interlocutory appeal, permanent injunction, claim for damages, injunctive relief, summary judgment, anti trust law, federal law, compliance, portions, preempts, certify, abated, orders

Judges: Before KING, Chief Judge, and REYNALDO G. GARZA and EMILIO M. GARZA, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

PER CURIAM:^{*}

The district court has issued two purportedly dispositive "orders" and a separate final judgment in this case. On August 25, 1998, the district court "ordered," in relevant part, that: 1) Plaintiffs Stucky and Villaneva ("Stucky")'s motion for partial summary judgment was granted, such that Ordinances 82744 and 87775 were declared null and void; 2) Defendant City of San Antonio ("City") was permanently enjoined from renewing its nonconsent towing contract with any party without allowing open bids on the contract; 3) City's and Intervenor Texas Towing ("Texas Towing")'s motions for summary judgment were granted in part, such that Stucky's claims for relief under 42 U.S.C.

* Pursuant to 5TH CIR. R. 47.5, the court has determined that this opinion should not be published and is not precedent except under the limited circumstances set forth in 5TH CIR. R. 47.5.4.

§ 1983 and for violations of federal antitrust law were dismissed with prejudice; 4) City's and Texas Towing's motions for summary judgment [*2] were denied as to Stucky's claims for injunctive relief under antitrust law.¹

On September 21, 1998, the district court granted Texas Towing's unopposed motion to enter final judgment as to certain claims and to certify certain issues for interlocutory appeal. In its "order" granting Texas Towing's motion, the court "directed the clerk to enter a final judgment that", in relevant part: 1) Stucky's motion for partial summary judgment was granted, such that Ordinance 82744 and Ordinance 87775 were declared null and void; 2) City was permanently enjoined from renewing its nonconsent towing contract with any party without allowing open bids on the contract; and 3) City's and Texas Towing's motions for summary judgment were granted in part, such that Stucky's § 1983 and antitrust damage claims were dismissed with prejudice. The court also ordered, without further comment, that Texas Towing's motion to certify issues for interlocutory appeal was granted.² Finally, the court abated the remainder of the case pending appellate review.

On October 13, 1998, the district court issued a "judgment" by which it was "ordered, adjudged, and decreed" that, in relevant part: 1) Stucky's motion for partial summary judgment was granted, as 49 U.S.C. § 14501(c) preempts Ordinance 82744 and Ordinance 87775, and those ordinances were declared null and void; 2) Stucky's request for a permanent injunction against City was granted, and City was ordered either to put its nonconsent towing contract up for bid or to adopt some other measure to bring the system into compliance with federal law; 3) the portion of Stucky's partial summary judgment motion requesting that the court find that 49 U.S.C. § 14501(c) preempts municipalities from adopting single-vendor open bid towing systems was denied; 4) summary judgment for City and Texas Towing was granted on Stucky's § 1983 and antitrust damage [*4] claims; 5) summary judgment for City and Texas Towing was denied on Stucky's claim for antitrust injunctive relief.

After closely reviewing the record, we hereby VACATE the portions of the August 25 Order, the September 21 Order, and the October 13 Judgment which grant Stucky's motion for partial summary judgment and declare Ordinances 82744 and 87775 null and void. We also VACATE the portions of the August 25 Order and the September 21 Order which permanently enjoin City from renewing its single vendor towing contract with any party without conducting open bidding, as well as the portion of the October 13 Judgment which grants a permanent injunction against City and orders it either to put its nonconsent towing contract up for bid or to otherwise bring its system into compliance with federal law. We also VACATE the abatement declared by the September 21 Order and REMAND these vacated holdings for further consideration in light of Cardinal Towing and Auto Repair, Inc. v. City of Bedford, Texas, 180 F.3d 686 (5th Cir. 1999).³⁴

¹ City and Texas Towing filed their notices of appeal to this court from the August 25, 1998 order.

² We find the district court's grant of Texas Towing's motion to [*3] certify issues for interlocutory appeal, without explanation, an insufficient basis on which to certify any aspect of this case for interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). The certification order, and Texas Towing's underlying motion, insufficiently delineate the exact issues to be certified, given the unusual procedural posture of this case.

³ We note that none of the parties urged summary judgment on Ordinances 82744 and 87775. We therefore question whether the district court's grant of partial summary [*5] judgment as to those Ordinances was permissible under FRCP 56.

⁴ The district court's dismissals of Stucky's § 1983 and antitrust damage claims are not challenged on appeal. Those dismissals therefore are unaffected by this opinion.

We also lack jurisdiction over the district court's denials of summary judgment. A denial of summary judgment is not a final order and thus does not confer appellate jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. See Landry v. G.B.A., 762 F.2d 462, 464 (5th Cir. 1985). Therefore, 1) the holding of the August 25 Order and the October 13 Judgment denying City's and Texas Towing's summary judgment motions as to Stucky's claims for injunctive relief under antitrust law, and 2) the holding of the October 13 Judgment denying Stucky's partial summary judgment motion in and so far as it claimed that § 14501(c) preempted municipalities from adopting single-vendor open-bid towing systems, are not properly before us. The district court is nevertheless free on remand to reconsider these holdings, or not, as it sees fit.

End of Document

Ocean View Capital, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp. of Am.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

December 15, 1999, Decided ; December 15, 1999, Filed

98 Civ. 4067 (LAP)

Reporter

1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19194 *; 2000-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,756

OCEAN VIEW CAPITAL, INC., f/k/a TRIANGLE WIRE & CABLE, INC., Plaintiff, -against- SUMITOMO CORPORATION OF AMERICA, SUMITOMO CORPORATION, SUMITOMO FUTURES CORPORATION, YASUO HAMANAKA, GLOBAL MINERALS AND METALS CORPORATION, DAVID CAMPBELL, ASHLEY LEVETT CHARLES VINCENT, and CREDIT LYONNAIS ROUSE, Defendants.

Prior History: Ocean View Capital, Inc. v. Sumitomo Corp. of Am. \(In re Copper Antitrust Litig.\), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19199 \(J.P.M.L., Dec. 13, 1999\)

Disposition: [*1] Defendants' motion to dismiss granted and amended complaint dismissed.

Core Terms

copper, defendants', cash market, prices, futures market, Clayton Act, alleges, contracts, damages, anti trust law, antitrust, factors, amended complaint, plaintiff's claim, conspiracy, motion to dismiss, manipulation, consumers, refined, indirect, markets, traded, general contractor, speculative, inflated, soybean, causal, scrap, antitrust violation, direct victim

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > General Overview

HN1 Civil Procedure, Dismissal

In deciding a motion to dismiss, a court must view the complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiff. A court must accept as true the factual allegations stated in the complaint, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff. A motion to dismiss can only be granted if it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief. Plaintiff's failure to meet even this liberal standard, however, mandated the dismissal of its amended complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN2 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust law may sue therefor and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1999\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Despite the broad language of 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1999\), the Supreme Court of the United States has placed limits on those who may recover for antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN4 Clayton Act, Claims

The two types of limitations constrain those who can recover under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. First, the risk of duplicative recovery dictates that indirect purchasers do not have standing to sue for an antitrust violation. Second, those who have sustained injuries too remote from the illegal behavior do not have a cause of action. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1999\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Five factors are articulated for determining whether a particular plaintiff has standing. These factors are: (1) the causal connection between an antitrust violation and the harm suffered by the plaintiff, and the intent of the defendant to cause that harm; (2) the nature of plaintiff's injury and whether the antitrust law was designed to provide redress for such an injury; (3) the directness of the asserted injury; (4) the existence of more direct victims who can assert a claim against the wrongdoer; and (5) the risk of duplicate recoveries or complex apportionment of damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6 Clayton Act, Claims

The mere fact that a claim is literally encompassed by the Clayton Act does not end inquiry. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) \(1999\).

Counsel: For OCEAN VIEW CAPITAL, INC., plaintiff: Sanford P. Dumain, Joseph Opper, Melvin I. Weiss, Clifford S. Goodstein, Azra Z. Mehdi, Milberg, Weiss, Bershad, Hynes & Lerach, L.L.P., New York, NY.

Judges: LORETTA A. PRESKA, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: LORETTA A. PRESKA

Opinion

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

LORETTA A. PRESKA, United States District Judge:

This is an action brought by plaintiff, Ocean View, formally known as Triangle Wire & Cable, Inc., against defendants Sumitomo Corporation with its affiliates, Sumitomo Corporation of America and Sumitomo Futures Corporation, Yasuo Hamanaka, who headed Sumitomo's copper trading operations from August 1987 to about June 1996, Global Minerals and Metals Corporation, David Campell, a principal of Global during the relevant time period, Ashley Levett and Charles Vincent, the principals of the Winchester Commodities Group and Winchester Asset management, and Credit Lyonnais Rouse. Plaintiff alleges federal claims under the Clayton Act, Sections 15, 22, and 21 for violations of the Sherman Act Section 1 and state law claims under Rhode Island Antitrust Law Section 6-36-4. On June 9, 1998, Ocean View filed the original complaint. Defendants moved to dismiss on November 2, 1998. In response, on December 18, 1998, plaintiff amended the complaint. Defendants Sumitomo, joined by Global [*2] Minerals and Metals,¹ Ashley Levett and Charles Vincent and Credit Lyonnais Rouse each responded with a motion to dismiss the amended complaint. For the reasons discussed below, defendants' motion is granted, and the amended complaint is dismissed.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff, a corporation that until October 31, 1996, was engaged in the manufacture of copper wire and cable for which it purchased substantial amounts of refined copper, (See Amended Compl., P 8), alleges that defendants conspired to manipulate, and succeeded in manipulating, the market for copper futures and physical copper. (See Amended Compl., P 22). Plaintiff alleges that defendants achieved this goal by engaging in futures and options transactions predominately on the London Metals Exchange (the "LME") and on the Commodity Exchange, Inc. (the "COMEX"). Plaintiff [*3] also alleges that defendants entered into a series of unusual copper purchase contracts. (See id., P 27). These actions, plaintiff claims, caused the price of copper on the United States cash market to reach artificially inflated prices, (See id., P 31), and, as a major purchaser of copper, plaintiff was damaged. (See id., P 46).

DISCUSSION

I. Standard Applicable to a Motion to Dismiss

HN1[] In deciding a motion to dismiss, I must view the complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiff. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 237, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 \(1974\); Yoder v. Orthomolecular Nutrition Inst., Inc., 751 F.2d 555, 562 \(2d Cir. 1985\). I must accept as true the factual allegations stated in the complaint, Zinermon v. Burch, 494 U.S. 113, 118, 110 S. Ct. 975, 108 L. Ed. 2d 100 \(1990\), and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff. Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 520-21, 92 S. Ct. 594, 30 L. Ed. 2d 652 \(1972\); Hertz Corp. v. City of New York, 1 F.3d 121, 125 \(2d Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1111, 127 L. Ed. 2d 375, 114 S. Ct. 1054, 114 S. Ct. 1055 (1994). [*4] A motion to dismiss can only be granted if it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claim which would entitle it to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957). Plaintiff's failure to meet even this liberal standard, however, mandated the dismissal of its amended complaint.

¹ In addition to joining Sumitomo's Memorandum of Law and Reply Memorandum in Support of its Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint, Global submitted its own Reply Memorandum.

II. Plaintiff Does not Have Standing to Assert a Claim under Antitrust Laws

HN2[⁵] Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust law may sue therefor . . . and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained . . ." 15 U.S.C.A. § 15(a) (1999). HN3[⁶] Despite this broad language, the Supreme Court of the United States has placed limits on those who may recover for antitrust violations. See Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983); Blue Shield of Va. v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982); Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977). [*5] HN4[⁷] In McCready, the Court explained that two types of limitations constrain those who can recover under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. See McCready, 457 U.S. at 473, 102 S. Ct. at 2545. First, the risk of duplicative recovery dictates that indirect purchasers do not have standing to sue for an antitrust violation. See id. at 473-74. Second, those who have sustained injuries too remote from the illegal behavior do not have a cause of action. See id. at 476.

In light of these two limitations, the Court HN5[⁸] articulated five factors for determining whether a particular plaintiff has standing. These factors are:

- (1) the causal connection between an antitrust violation and the harm suffered by the plaintiff, and the intent of the defendant to cause that harm;
- (2) the nature of plaintiff's injury and whether the antitrust law was designed to provide redress for such an injury;
- (3) the directness of the asserted injury;
- (4) the existence of more direct victims who can assert a claim against the wrongdoer; and
- (5) the risk of duplicate recoveries or complex apportionment of damages.

See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537-46, 103 S. Ct. at 908-12. [*6]

In Associated General Contractors, plaintiffs, unions representing individual workers employed by defendants, asserted that defendants coerced landowners and general contractors to direct some of their business to nonunionized firms. This coercion, plaintiffs argued, adversely affected the unionized firms and thereby restrained the unions' business activities. The Supreme Court, considering the five-factor test, concluded that the unions were not injured by an antitrust violation as defined by Section 4 of the Clayton Act. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 545, 103 S. Ct. at 912.

The Court first noted that the unions did allege a connection between its harm and the alleged antitrust behavior and therefore satisfied the first factor. See id. at 537, 103 S. Ct. at 908. The first factor, however, was the only one in plaintiff's favor.

Continuing with the second factor, the Court observed that because the "Union was neither a consumer nor a competitor in the market in which trade was restrained," plaintiff's injury was not of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. See id. at 538-39, 103 S. Ct. at 908-09. [*7] Considering the third factor, the Court reasoned that the causal chain between the unions' injury and defendants' behavior contained "several somewhat vaguely defined links." See id. at 540, 103 S. Ct. at 910. In light of the third factor, the Court observed that there were immediate victims of defendants' actions that would have a right to maintain an action against defendants. See id. at 541-42, 103 S. Ct. at 910-11. Finally, in considering the last factor, the Court noted that "partly because it is indirect, and partly because the alleged effects on the Union may have been produced by independent factors, the Union's damages claim is also highly speculative." Id. at 542; 103 S. Ct. at 911.

Although decided before the Supreme Court delineated the five factors, the Court of Appeals, in Reading Industrial, Inc. v. Kennecott Copper Corp., et al., 631 F.2d 10 (2nd Cir. 1980), dismissed plaintiff's antitrust claim, considering the third and fifth Associated Contractors factors.² In Reading, plaintiff, a refiner of copper scrap and a manufacturer of copper tubing, alleged that defendants' conspiracy [*8] to fix the price of domestically refined copper resulted in higher prices in the copper scrap market. Plaintiff purchased copper from this allegedly overpriced market and argued that it paid inflated prices for copper scrap. The Court reasoned that the causal relationship between defendants' actions and plaintiff's injury was too attenuated to support an antitrust claim. In so holding, the Court stated, Reading's theory of antitrust injury depends upon a complicated series of market interactions between the two sources of copper: the refined copper market in which defendants acted and the copper scrap market in which Reading allegedly sustained injuries. . . . To find antitrust damages in this case would engage the court in hopeless speculation concerning the relative effect of an alleged conspiracy in the market for refined copper on the price of copper scrap, where countless other market variables could have intervened to affect those pricing decisions.

Id. at 13-14. Moreover, the Court held that "to find antitrust damages in this case would engage the court in hopeless speculation concerning the relative effect of an alleged conspiracy in the market [*9] for refined copper on the price of copper scrap, where countless other market variables could have intervened to affect those pricing decisions." Id. at 13-14.

Applying the Associated General Contractors factors to the case at bar, it becomes evident that plaintiff's claim is not cognizable under the Clayton Act.

Plaintiff does satisfy the first factor. The complaint alleges a causal connection between defendants' behavior and plaintiff's injury. However, as the Supreme Court noted, "the HN6[[↑]] mere fact that the claim is literally encompassed by the Clayton Act does not end inquiry. [*10]" Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 537, 103 S. Ct. at 908.

The second factor is in defendant's favor, although only slightly. Congress enacted the Sherman Act "to assure customers the benefit of price competition" and to protect "the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Id. at 538, 103 S. Ct. at 908. Plaintiff is a consumer of copper, and therefore the Sherman Act was designed to protect its interest in its capacity as a customer. However, in this case, plaintiff alleges that the defendants violated the antitrust laws through their actions on the LME futures market. Plaintiff did not participate in the LME futures market. Hence, plaintiff is not a participant in the "relevant market," and the Sherman Act was not designed to protect plaintiff's interests with respect to defendants' activity on the LME.

The third factor strongly favors defendants. Similar to both Associated General Contractors and Reading, Ocean View's theory of liability is based on a tenuous causal chain of events. Defendants' allegedly unlawful activity principally involved a conspiracy to corner the futures market on the LME. (See Amended [*11] Compl., P 1; Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law in Opposition to the Sumitomo Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint at 1) (hereinafter "Plaintiff's Memorandum"). Ocean View does not allege that it trades on the LME or in the futures market. However, Ocean View maintains that the LME and the COMEX function as a single market. "COMEX and the LME function from an economic standpoint as a single market, and prices on one market vary with prices on the other." (Amended Compl., P 17). Plaintiff further asserts that prices on the cash market are set by reference to the price (or in some cases, a monthly average price) of copper futures on the COMEX and, plus a "basis" price (a premium factor), determined at the time of contracting. Therefore, a manipulation of the price of copper futures on the COMEX and/or the LME would directly and predictably correlate with a manipulation of copper prices on the cash market.

²I recognize that Reading predates the Supreme Court rulings Associated Gen. Contractors and McCready. However, the Second Circuit's analysis in Reading is in line with the Supreme Court's remoteness analysis in the aforementioned cases and therefore provides valid precedential assistance in this case. See De Atucha v. Commodity Exch., Inc., 608 F. Supp. 510, 515 n.18 (S.D.N.Y. 1985).

(Id., P 20). Ocean View made sizeable purchases of refined copper during the years of the alleged conspiracy, (see id., P 8), but does not allege that any of those purchases were from Sumitomo or its alleged co-conspirators. Rather, Ocean View alleges [*12] that because the United States copper cash market is affected by the LME futures market, defendants' actions on the LME futures market had an adverse effect on it.

Even assuming the truth of the allegations of the amended complaint, this chain of events leading from defendants' alleged misconduct to plaintiff's harm is not cognizable under antitrust law. Ocean View did not suffer a harm directly flowing from defendants' alleged restraint of competition. On the contrary, plaintiff alleges that defendants caused it harm through a complex "master plan" of "manipulating copper exchange prices." (Id. P 23). It is possible that the increased refined copper prices for the specified period of time were due to factors wholly unrelated to defendants' transactions on the LME futures market. Indeed, plaintiff concedes that the copper cash price is partially based on a "premium factor" and not solely dependent on the COMEX futures price. (Id., P 18, 20).

The facts alleged by plaintiff are remarkably similar to those in DeAtucha v. Commodity Exchange, Inc., 608 F. Supp. 510 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), where plaintiff's claim was dismissed for lack of standing because of the attenuated [*13] relationship between defendant's alleged misconduct and plaintiff's injury. See id. at 518. De Atucha, a citizen and resident of Argentina, purchased three silver contracts on January 18, 1980 on the LME which he sold on April 16, 1980 at a substantial loss. He alleged that defendants' conspiracy to manipulate the price of the silver futures on the COMEX caused the silver contracts on the LME to be artificially inflated. See id. at 511, 516. De Atucha further alleged that "'because of the fungibility of silver and silver futures, the United States market represented by the Comex and CBOT and the London Exchange [the LME] function from an economic standpoint as a single market'" Id. at 512 (quoting Compl., P 28). The Court concluded that this "indirect relationship between de Atucha's claim and the alleged violation is a factor which strongly supports the inapplicability of the antitrust laws to de Atucha's claim." See id. at 516.

Dismissal of Ocean View's complaint is also supported by the fourth factor, the existence of more direct victims. Since defendants allege that the illegal behavior principally [*14] occurred on the LME futures market, those who traded on this market are more direct victims of defendants' behavior. Furthermore, because plaintiff alleges that the LME prices affect the COMEX copper future prices, which in turn affect the copper cash prices, those who trade on the COMEX futures market also are more direct victims than plaintiff. Therefore, this factor also suggests to the court that plaintiff's claim should be dismissed.

The last factor, the nature of plaintiff's damages, also favors dismissal of plaintiff's claim. Not only would a calculation of alleged damages require a determination of the relationship between the prices on the LME and the prices on the COMEX, but it also would require a determination of the effect of the COMEX on the cash market. This speculative nature of damages further supports the dismissal of plaintiff's claims. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 542, 103 S. Ct. at 911; Reading Indus., Inc., 631 F.2d at 13-14. Indeed in de Atucha, in which plaintiff's damages claim involved the prices on related international markets, the court remarked that other courts have rejected as too speculative and [*15] indirect damages involving "equilibration of prices on related domestic markets" and held that the nature of de Atucha's damages was another factor dictating dismissal. De Atucha, 608 F. Supp. at 516.

Ocean View attempts to distinguish its claims from those of de Atucha by explaining that the de Atucha court granted defendants' motion to dismiss because the Clayton Act does not protect consumers such as de Atucha, who are consumers in foreign markets, and not because the link between the LME and the American markets was tenuous. (See Plaintiff's Memorandum at 18). In dismissing de Atucha's complaint, the court did consider plaintiff's nationality and concluded that Congress did not intend for the Clayton Act to provide redress for foreign consumers. See de Atucha, 608 F. Supp. at 517-18. However, this was just one of the Associated General Contractors factors that the court considered. As explained above, the court concluded that the indirect relationship between plaintiff's alleged harm and defendants' alleged wrongdoing "strongly supports the inapplicability of the antitrust laws to de Atucha's claim." Id. at 516. [*16]

Plaintiff analogizes its amended complaint to the complaint in Sanner v. Board of Trade, 62 F.3d 918 (7th Cir. 1995), in which the Seventh Circuit denied defendants' motion to dismiss. (See Plaintiff's Memorandum at 9-12). Plaintiffs in Sanner, soybean farmers, alleged that defendants' actions on the Chicago Board of Trade's soybean futures market resulted in a proportional decline in the soybean cash market. Defendants argued that the cash market for soybeans was distinct from the futures market for soybeans and that, therefore, plaintiffs did not have standing to sue for defendants' actions in the futures market. The Seventh Circuit rejected that argument. It held that the futures and cash markets move in "lockstep" and thus the two markets are "so closely related" that the distinction between them is of no consequence to antitrust standing analysis." Id. at 929.

The present case is distinguishable from Sanner. In Sanner, the alleged antitrust activity occurred in a domestic market, and the claimed injury occurred in a closely related domestic market. Ocean View, on the contrary, alleged that defendants' activity in London affected [*17] the United States' copper cash market. Furthermore, Ocean View's theory of liability requires an additional step that the Sanner plaintiffs' theory did not require; Ocean View contends that defendants' trading on the LME affected the COMEX which in turn affect the cash market for copper. The Sanner plaintiffs alleged a more direct relationship: defendants' manipulation of future contracts on the Chicago board of Trade affected the soybean cash market. Moreover, in this Circuit, courts consistently have held that in cases involving commodity exchange markets, only those who actually participate in the same market as the defendant have standing under the Clayton Act. See, e.g., de Atucha, 608 F. Supp. 510 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (holding standing did not exist where plaintiff traded in different market than defendant); Pollock v. Citrus Assoc. of the N.Y. Cotton Exch., 512 F. Supp. 711 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (finding plaintiffs who traded in orange juice futures market had standing to sue defendants who allegedly conspired on same market); Strax v. Commodity Exch., Inc., 524 F. Supp. 936 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (holding plaintiffs who traded in same [*18] market as defendants had standing to sue for antitrust behavior). For these reasons I do not find Sanner controlling.

Plaintiff does allege that although defendants operated in the futures market, they intended to affect adversely the cash market. (See Amended Compl., P 42). Although this buttresses plaintiff's antitrust claim, it is insufficient to render plaintiff's claim cognizable under the Clayton Act. See Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 545; 103 S. Ct. at 912 (dismissing plaintiff's complaint despite that plaintiff claimed defendant intended it harm).

Ocean View does make one reference to defendants' transactions on the cash market. Plaintiff alleges that Defendants Sumitomo and Global entered into a series of contracts "for the purchase and sale of physical copper which contained unusual minimum price and price participation provisions." (Amended Compl., P 27b). However, beyond asserting that these transactions gave the appearance of an increase demand for copper, plaintiff does not allege how the contracts caused it harm.

In Gross v. New Balance Athletic Shoe, Inc., 955 F. Supp. 242 (S.D.N.Y. 1997), plaintiff [*19] consumers alleged that a conspiracy between New Balance, an athletic footwear manufacturer, and several retail shoe dealers caused them harm. The plaintiff class included consumers who purchased New Balance shoes but not from the allegedly conspiring retailers. Plaintiffs contended that all New Balance purchasers were injured by the alleged price-fixing "because the conspiracy, if successful, stifled price competition for, and raised the price of, all New Balance shoes." Id. at 245. The Court held that the plaintiff class did not have standing under the Clayton Act. In so holding, the Court reasoned that the alleged injury at best was an indirect result of the general price and could have been caused by independent factors. See id. at 246-47.

Similar to the Gross plaintiffs, Ocean View does not allege that it purchased copper from either Sumitomo or Global. Nor does Ocean View allege that it purchased the copper subject to the unusual contracts between defendants Sumitomo and Global. Rather, Ocean View alleges that the contracts inflated the price of copper generally. Harm from general price increases, as exhibited in Gross, is not actionable. [*20] ³ See id.

Additionally, plaintiff's claim based on the alleged unconventional transactions in the cash market would fail the Associated General Contractor five-factor test. As with defendants' futures market conspiracy, plaintiff satisfies the first factor. Accepting [*21] as true plaintiff's allegations, "but for" defendants' allegedly illegal behavior on the cash market, the price for copper on the cash market paid by plaintiff would not have been inflated. The second factor also is in plaintiff's favor. As explained above, Congress enacted the antitrust laws "to assure customers the benefit of price competition" and to protect "the economic freedom of participants in the relevant market." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 538, 103 S. Ct. at 908. In the present case, plaintiff is a consumer in the relevant market, namely the copper cash market. The other factors, however, suggest that plaintiff's claim is not cognizable under the Clayton Act.

First, the injury suffered by plaintiff is not a direct result of defendants' contracts. Rather, it is an indirect result of a general price increase caused by the copper contracts between defendants. See Gross, 955 F. Supp. at 246-47. Additionally, there may be intervening causative factors rendering attenuated the link between defendants' conduct and plaintiff's injury. See id. at 247. Considering the third factor, there are more direct victims than [*22] plaintiff, such as those who purchased copper directly from the defendants or those who purchased the copper that was subject to the unusual contracts. See id. Finally, the determination of damages would be complex because plaintiff would have to show what portion of the inflated copper price was a result of defendants' conspiracy and not the result of some other factor. See id. at 246. Considering the five factors in total, plaintiff's claim based on defendants' cash-market copper contracts should be dismissed.

Moreover, the corner stone of Ocean View's amended complaint is defendants' manipulation of the LME futures market, not the United States cash market. In its Memorandum of Law in Opposition to the Sumitomo Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, plaintiff fails to discuss the alleged cash transaction between Sumitomo and Global. Rather, it states that "Sumitomo acted principally on the [LME] and that its action were coordinated with other LME participants." (Plaintiff's Memorandum at 1). Indeed, plaintiff acknowledges that in order to succeed in this case, it must show the causal link between the LME futures market and the copper cash market. (See *id. at [23] 4). And, as explained above, this claim is too attenuated to afford Ocean View standing under the Clayton Act.

As for plaintiff's claims under state law, I dismiss this action as well since Rhode Island's antitrust statute expressly provides that it "shall be construed in harmony with judicial interpretations of comparable federal antitrust statutes . . ." R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-2(b) (1998).

III. The Amended Complaint is Dismissed with Respect to all the Defendants

As mentioned above, several of the named defendants filed motions to dismiss the amended complaint. Only defendants Sumitomo and Global raised the issue of standing. Standing, however, affects jurisdiction, and therefore the Court must consider whether plaintiff has standing sua sponte. See Ramos, et al. v. Patrician Equities Corp., et al., 765 F. Supp. 1196, 1199 (S.D.N.Y. 1991). Hence, the amended complaint is dismissed as to all defendants.

Conclusion

³ I do note that courts in this circuit have found standing for plaintiffs who trade in the same exchange market as defendants but who do not allege that they interacted directly with defendants. See, e.g., Strax, 524 F. Supp. at 938-40. These courts explain that application of the antitrust laws to the exchange system would be precluded if plaintiffs were required to allege direct interaction with defendants since "it is impossible to show that a particular purchaser bought from a particular seller in such a context." Id. at 940. These cases are inapposite to Ocean View's claim regarding defendants' cash market transactions because in the cash market context, it can be determined who purchased from whom.

Although accepting as true all the facts alleged in the complaint plaintiff suffered an injury due to defendants' unlawful actions, plaintiff does not have standing under the Clayton Act. "Congress did not intend the antitrust laws to provide [*24] a remedy in damages for all injuries that might conceivably be traced to an antitrust violation." Associated Gen. Contractors, 459 U.S. at 534, 103 S. Ct. at 906 (quoting Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co., 405 U.S. 251, 263 n.14, 92 S. Ct. 885, 891 n.14, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972)). The antitrust laws are not designed to provide a remedy for those, such as plaintiff in this case, whose harm is related indirectly to anti-competitive behavior and whose damages are too speculative. Accordingly, the amended complaint is dismissed. The Clerk of the Court shall mark this action "closed" and all pending motions denied as moot.

SO ORDERED:

DATED: New York, New York

December 15, 1999

LORETTA A. PRESKA, U.S.D.J.

End of Document

Morton's Mkt., Inc. v. Gustafson's Dairy, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

December 20, 1999, Decided ; December 20, 1999, Filed

No. 98-2498.

Reporter

198 F.3d 823 *; 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 32873 ; 1999-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,738; 13 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 257

MORTON'S MARKET, INC.; J & J Produce and Deli, Inc., Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. GUSTAFSON'S DAIRY, INC., Defendant, Borden, Inc.; T.G. Lee Foods, Inc., et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [\[1\]](#) Correction Order of May 5, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 8953.

Certiorari Denied May 22, 2000, Reported at: 2000 U.S. LEXIS 3442.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida. (Nos. 93-1077-CIV-T-23b, 93-1264-CIV-23A, 94-1437-CIV-T23A, 95-35-CIV-23B). DISTRICT JUDGE: STEVEN D. MERRYDAY.

Disposition: AFFIRM IN PART, REVERSE IN PART and REMAND.

Core Terms

Dairies, conspiracy, price-fixing, milk, conspirator, notice, withdrawal, statute of limitations, tolled, diligence, limitations period, bids, bid-rigging, antitrust, summary judgment, fraudulent concealment, district court, investigate, prices, private plaintiff, rigging, tolling statute, plaintiffs', proceedings, concealed, damages, limitations, wholesale, lawsuit, matter of law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Under the antitrust laws, a cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiffs' business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

198 F.3d 823, *823LÁ1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 32873, 1

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

An antitrust plaintiff must file his claim within four years following defendant's injurious act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(b\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Suit may be brought more than four years after the events that initially created the antitrust cause of action only if the action is commenced within four years after the defendant commits (1) an overt act in furtherance of the antitrust conspiracy or (2) an act that by its very nature constitutes a continuing antitrust violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

An act constitutes a "continuing violation" of antitrust laws if it injures the plaintiff over a period of time. Even though the illegal act occurs at a specific point in time, if it inflicts "continuing and accumulating harm" on a plaintiff, an antitrust violation occurs each time the plaintiff is injured by the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Antitrust law provides that, in the case of a "continuing violation," say a price fixing conspiracy that brings about a series of unlawfully high priced sales over a period of years, each overt act that is part of the violation and that injures the plaintiff, e.g., each sale to the plaintiff, starts the statutory period running again, regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN6 [down] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

The commencement of the statute of limitations is a question of fact. It cannot be determined upon motion for summary judgment if there is a genuine question as to when it began to run.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN7 Conspiracy, Elements

Where there is evidence of the continuing nature of an agreement to eliminate competition, absent an affirmative showing of the termination of that agreement, the conspiracy must be presumed to have continued.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

HN8 Public Enforcement, US Department of Justice Actions

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(i\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(i\) applies if there is a "real relationship" between the government proceeding and the subsequent private actions. Generally, courts look for this relationship by comparing the allegations of the two complaints.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN10 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(i\) applies to toll the limitations period during the pendency of the government proceeding even when the subsequent private plaintiff claims a different statutory violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(i\) applies even if, after the government proceeding, the private plaintiff alleges that the defendants used different means to achieve different objectives so long as there is a real relationship between the activities complained of in each proceeding. The conspiratorial acts alleged by the private plaintiff must be intertwined with and fundamentally the same as those alleged in the government action. If there is a significant, although incomplete, overlap of subject matter, the statute is tolled even as to the differences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(i\) applies if the private plaintiffs allege substantially the same sort of conspiracy against a similar cast of characters who relied at least in part on the same means for effecting their conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Reliance by the private plaintiff on the same documentary and oral proof to establish the conspiracy bolsters the decision that 15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(i\) applies.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN14[] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

15 U.S.C.S. § 16\(i\) applies when the private plaintiff alleges a conspiracy that includes the objectives, means, time span, and geographic scope of the conspiracy alleged in the government suit, and the evidence adduced in the government suit is of practical assistance to plaintiffs in proving their own complaint.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN15[] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

Fraudulent concealment tolls the Clayton Act's statute of limitations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Pleadings & Proof

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraud

To avail themselves of tolling of the Clayton Act's statute of limitations because of fraudulent concealment, plaintiffs have the burden of proving at trial that the defendants concealed the conduct complained of, and that plaintiffs failed, despite the exercise of due diligence on their part, to discover the facts that form the basis of their claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

On motion for summary judgment, the moving party always bears the initial burden of pointing out the undisputed facts which entitle it to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

The issue of when a plaintiff is on "notice" of his claim is a question of fact for the jury.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

As a general rule, the issue of when a plaintiff in the exercise of due diligence should have known of the basis for his claims is not an appropriate question for summary judgment.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN20 [blue icon] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

Under inquiry notice, when defendants are guilty of concealing their anti-competitive activities, the plaintiff is not charged with knowledge of his claim until he should have discovered the basis for his claims.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN21 [blue icon] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

Although a plaintiff has an obligation of diligence, the plaintiff need not show the actual exercise of diligence in order to "toll" the limitations period. Rather in deciding whether the statute should be tolled, it must be determined whether a "reasonably diligent plaintiff" would have discovered the fraud.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN22 [blue icon] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

The law recognizes that a conspirator may withdraw from the conspiracy.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN23 [blue icon] Conspiracy, Elements

Withdrawal marks a conspirator's disavowal or abandonment of the conspiratorial agreement.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN24 [blue icon] Conspiracy, Elements

A conspirator who withdraws from the conspiracy is no longer a member of the conspiracy and the subsequent acts of the conspirators usually do not bind him. The ex-conspirator remains liable, however, for his previous agreement and all damages inflicted by the acts he committed prior to his withdrawal.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

Withdrawal is not a complete defense to the charge of conspiracy. It becomes a complete defense only when coupled with the defense of the statute of limitations. The statute of limitations begins to run upon the conspirator's withdrawal from the conspiracy. If he is not sued within the limitations period, all claims against him are time-barred. He cannot be held liable for the acts of the other conspirators after he withdrew because his withdrawal effectively ended his membership in the conspiracy. Nor can he be sued for the damages caused by his previous participation because the limitations period has elapsed. Thus, the interaction of the two defenses of withdrawal and statute of limitations operates to shield the ex-conspirator of all liability.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN26 [blue icon] Conspiracy, Elements

Affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Conspiracy, Elements

Although mere cessation of activity is not sufficient to establish withdrawal, a conspirator may avoid further liability for his actions if he affirmatively and completely disassociates himself from the continued operation of the conspiracy.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Abandonment & Withdrawal

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN28 [blue icon] Defenses, Abandonment & Withdrawal

A conspirator must demonstrate that he undertook affirmative steps, inconsistent with the objects of the conspiracy, to disavow or to defeat the conspiratorial objectives. Merely ending one's activity in a conspiracy may not constitute withdrawal. The defense of withdrawal is not available to one who merely ceases to participate and does not affirmatively withdraw.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

In the context of a business conspiracy, one in which the conspiracy is carried out through the regular activities of an otherwise legitimate business enterprise, the law has given effect to a conspirator's abandonment of the conspiracy only where the conspirator can demonstrate that he retired from the business, severed all ties to the business, and deprived the remaining conspirator group of the services which he provided to the conspiracy.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN30 [blue icon] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

In order to effectively withdraw, it is not necessary for the conspirator to disclose the illegal scheme to the authorities. Nor is it necessary that the conspirator notify each co-conspirator of the abandonment.

Counsel: ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLANT(S) (J&J): Joel C. Meredith, Daniel B. Allanoff, Philadelphia, PA.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLANT(S) (Morton's): Leonard Egan, William C. Buckhold, Washington, DC.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLANT(S) (J&J): Edith F. Canter, Michael J. Freed, Chicago, IL.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S) (Gustafson's): John A. DeVault, Jacksonville, FL.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S) (Borden): Morris Weinberg, Tampa, FL. Teresa T. Bonder, Atlanta, GA.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S) (Pet): Carey DeDyn, Patricia B. Cunningham, Atlanta, GA.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S) [2] (Flav-Rich): Ronald Gaffney, Louisville, KY. David Hanlon, Tampa. Teresa T. Bonder, Atlanta, GA.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S) (Southland): William McGowen, William Cary. Wright, D. Matthew Allen, Tampa, FL.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S) (TG Lee): Douglas Titus, Jr., Tampa, FL.

Judges: Before ANDERSON, Chief Judge, HILL, Senior Circuit Judge, and COOK *, Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: HILL

Opinion

[*826] HILL, Senior Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs brought these consolidated antitrust actions against most of the large dairy producers in Florida. The district court held the actions time-barred and granted summary judgment for the defendants. Both plaintiffs appeal.

I.

J & J Produce & Deli, Inc. and Morton's Market, Inc. are retailers of milk. Gustafson's Dairy, Inc., Borden, Inc., Pet, Inc., Flav-O-Rich, Inc., the [3] Southland Corporation, T.G. Lee Foods, Inc., and McArthur Dairy, Inc. (the Dairies) engaged in the production and sale of milk in Florida. The parties agree on the following facts.

Beginning in the early 1970s, the Dairies conspired and combined to rig their bids for contracts to supply milk to the public school districts in Florida. The Dairies submitted artificial bids and effectively divided the school milk market among themselves.

* Honorable Julian Abele Cook, Jr., Senior U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Michigan, sitting by designation.

In mid-1987, the United States and the State of Florida began investigating anti-competitive activities in the dairy industry. During July and August of 1987, Florida's Attorney General subpoenaed documents from and deposed employees of many dairies operating in Florida. On February 16, 1988, Florida filed a civil lawsuit against ten dairies, many individuals, and certain milk distributors. The complaint alleged that the Dairies violated federal antitrust laws. Florida also alleged that the defendants fraudulently concealed their activities by secretly conducting meetings and confining to key individuals information regarding the Dairies' efforts unreasonably to restrain trade.

The investigations, criminal charges, and civil action were reported in [\[4\]](#) February 1988, by the major newspapers in Florida. The newspaper articles discussed the Dairies' agreements among themselves to rig bids for school milk and revealed that the federal government was also scrutinizing the industry. Edmund Morton, the president of Morton's Market, read at least some of these articles. The principal of J & J Produce and Deli heard from her spouse that Florida had sued the Dairies. The plaintiffs did not, however, undertake any investigation into whether the Dairies were also fixing the price of milk to retailers.

During late 1987 and early 1988, the United States Department of Justice charged the Dairies and some of their employees with criminal antitrust violations. Several individuals pled guilty to rigging bids for school milk contracts. Between 1990 and 1992, all of the Dairies, except Gustafson's, pled guilty to conspiring to rig bids for school milk contracts. Information regarding price-fixing of wholesale milk prices was contained in each of these guilty pleas, the first of which occurred in December of 1990. Gustafson's was charged with price-fixing in May of 1992, and pled guilty in August to conspiring to fix the prices of milk in [\[*827\]](#) Florida and [\[5\]](#) Georgia between the early 1970s through at least August of 1988.

On July 1, 1993, subsequent to the government proceedings, plaintiffs each filed an antitrust action under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (the Act), on behalf of itself and a class of direct purchasers of dairy products in Florida. Both actions assert that the Dairies fixed, raised and maintained the wholesale prices of dairy products to commercial customers by collusive agreements in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

The Dairies moved for summary judgment, contending that these actions are time-barred by the Act's four-year statute of limitations. 15 U.S.C. § 15\(b\). They assert that their price-fixing activities, if any, terminated in 1987 or 1988, with their school bid-rigging prosecutions, more than four years before these actions were filed in 1993. Plaintiffs countered that the price-fixing conspiracy continued until 1992, when Gustafson's pled guilty to fixing the price of milk in Florida. Plaintiffs also contended that the statute of limitations was tolled in this case by the Dairies' fraudulent concealment of their price-fixing [\[6\]](#) activities,¹ and by the Clayton Act itself, which tolls the running of the statute during government proceedings concerning related violations. 15 U.S.C. § 16\(i\). Additionally, Pet and Southland claimed that they withdrew from the alleged conspiracy in 1985 and 1988 respectively, and that plaintiffs did not timely file as to them.

[\[7\]](#) The district court granted the Dairies' motions for summary judgment. We review this grant of summary judgment de novo applying the same standards as the district court. Industrial Partners, Ltd. v. CSX Transp., Inc. 974 F.2d 153 \(11th Cir.1992\). For the following reasons, we reverse those judgments.

II.

There has been considerable confusion in this case over the application of the statute of limitations and the impact of equitable or statutory tolling of it. Some of this confusion has been created by the failure of both parties to distinguish between the accrual of an antitrust cause of action and the scope of damages available in such an action. We cannot know whether plaintiffs' actions are time-barred unless we know when the statute began to run. Once we know when the statute began to run, we can determine whether and how it was tolled in this case and what impact that tolling has on the scope of plaintiffs' damages.

¹ The district judge who originally presided in the J & J Produce case denied Gustafson's motion to dismiss on the statute of limitations issue, specifically holding that the price-fixing conspiracy "had been continuous at least until 1992" and that plaintiff's fraudulent concealment claim "has merit." In December of 1994, plaintiffs in both cases settled with Gustafson's. Upon court approval of the settlement, Gustafson's was to pay $ 1.5 million to the class and provide cooperation in the action against the remaining dairies. In January, plaintiffs moved for approval of the settlement, but, before it could be granted, the J & J Produce case was transferred to the district judge who had the Morton's Market case, and the two cases were consolidated. After much delay, on October 30, 1997, the district judge, without oral argument, granted the Dairies' motions for summary judgment on the statute of limitations issue. Almost a year later, the district court granted preliminary approval of the settlement with Gustafson's.

A. The Commencement of the Statute of Limitations

HN1 Under the antitrust laws, "a cause of action accrues and the statute [of limitations] begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures the plaintiffs' business." Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971). [8] HN2 A plaintiff must file his claim within four years following defendant's injurious act. 15 U.S.C. § 15(b). HN3 Suit may be brought more than four years after the events that initially created the cause of action only if the action is commenced within four years [*828] after the defendant commits (1) an overt act in furtherance of the antitrust conspiracy or (2) an act that by its very nature constitutes a "continuing antitrust violation." Zenith, 401 U.S. at 338, 91 S. Ct. 795.²

HN4 An act constitutes a "continuing violation," if it injures the plaintiff over a period of time. Even though the illegal act occurs at a specific point in time, if it inflicts "continuing and accumulating harm" on a plaintiff, an antitrust violation occurs each time the plaintiff is injured by the act. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 502 n. 15, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). [9] For example, when sellers conspire to fix the price of a product, each time a customer purchases that product at the artificially inflated price, an antitrust violation occurs and a cause of action accrues. Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997). As a cause of action accrues with each sale, the statute of limitations begins to run anew.

HN5 Antitrust law provides that, in the case of a "continuing violation," say a price fixing conspiracy that brings about a series of unlawfully high priced sales over a period of years, "each overt act that is part of the violation and that injures the plaintiff," e.g., each sale to the plaintiff, "starts the statutory period running again, regardless of the plaintiff's knowledge of the alleged illegality at much earlier times."

521 U.S. at 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984 (quoting 2 Areeda, P 338b, at 145).

Plaintiffs allege such a continuing price-fixing conspiracy. Plaintiffs claim that the Dairies conspired to fix the retail prices of milk in Florida over a twenty-year period, and that sales at these fixed prices continued at least until 1992, when Gustafson's [10] pled guilty to price-fixing. Thus, even if there were no price-fixing conversations after 1987, as the Dairies contend,³ if plaintiffs purchased milk at a fixed price after that date, the purchase would constitute an overt act that injured it. A cause of action would accrue with each purchase and a new statutory period would begin to run. See Zenith, 401 U.S. at 338, 91 S. Ct. 795.

HN6 The commencement of the statute of limitations is a question of fact. In re Beef Indust. Antitrust Litig., 600 F.2d 1148, 1169-70 (5th Cir. 1979). It cannot be determined upon motion for summary judgment if there is a genuine question as to when it began to run. Id. Upon motion for summary judgment, the district court's task was simply [11] to determine whether a genuine question was presented for trial. The district court held there was not. The court found that "the record reveals that any price-fixing activity occurred concurrently with the bid-rigging"⁴

² Of course, suit may also be brought more than four years after accrual of the antitrust cause of action if the statute is tolled for some reason.

³ The district court also found that there were none, characterizing evidence of a price-fixing conversation in 1988 as "isolated and ambiguous." In weighing the evidence, the district court found a fact against plaintiffs in violation of Rule 56(c), Fed.R.Civ.P.

⁴ The court, however, did not point out what this evidence was.

and "the record lacks any competent evidence that the defendants unlawfully contrived the prices they charged commercial customers after 1987."

Even if this were so, these facts would not require a finding that these actions are time-barred. There is evidence in this record, including the Dairies' bid-rigging guilty pleas and Gustafson's price-fixing guilty plea and the factual bases therefor, from which a jury could find that the Dairies participated in a price-fixing conspiracy which resulted in a series of unlawfully high priced sales to plaintiffs over a period of years, continuing into the limitations period. HN7 Where there is evidence of the continuing nature of an agreement to eliminate competition, absent an [\[*829\]](#) affirmative [\[12\]](#) showing of the termination of that agreement, the conspiracy must be presumed to have continued. United States v. Portsmouth Paving Corp., 694 F.2d 312, 318 \(4th Cir.1982\). The Dairies do not point to any evidence that they reduced their artificially high prices or returned to competitive pricing prior to 1992. Therefore, whether the conspiracy continued into the limitations period by virtue of continued sales at fixed prices is a genuine question for trial.⁵ Should the jury find that plaintiffs purchased milk at fixed prices beyond 1989, even though plaintiffs could have sued in the 1970s, they were equally entitled to sue in 1993. Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 502, 88 S. Ct. 2224.

If at trial, however, the jury finds that this conspiracy did not continue into the four-year limitations period immediately preceding July 1, 1993, when plaintiffs filed these claims, then these actions [\[13\]](#) are time-barred unless the statute was tolled.

B. Tolling the Statute of Limitations

Plaintiffs advance both statutory and equitable grounds for tolling the statute of limitations in this case. We consider each in turn.

1. Statutory Tolling

Congress has provided for the tolling of statutes of limitations in private antitrust actions which are based in some part on prior government proceedings. HN8 15 U.S.C. § 16\(i\) provides:

(i) Suspension of limitations. Whenever any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws ... the running of the statute of limitations in respect of every private or State right of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter.

The government commenced its antitrust proceedings against these defendants on March 1, 1990. Those proceedings concluded on August 7, 1992, when Gustafson's pled guilty to price-fixing.⁶ Therefore, should it be found that the statute of limitations began to run in 1988, as [\[14\]](#) the Dairies contend, if Section 16\(i\) applies, it tolled the statute in 1990, prior to its expiration, and these actions were timely-filed in 1993 (within one year of the termination of the last proceeding in 1992).⁷

The district court held, however, that Section 16\(i\) does not apply. The district court based its conclusion on its observation that "[bid-rigging] is not the same violation as price-fixing," and its assumption [\[15\]](#) that such a "direct correlation" between the two causes of action is required. Plaintiffs contend this was error.

⁵ Of course, after the development of the evidence, the jury will ultimately determine these facts.

⁶ Defendants concede plaintiffs may tack together the periods during which the statute was tolled by the various government proceedings against each of these defendants.

⁷ This issue is only relevant to plaintiffs' claims against T.G. Lee Foods, Inc., Borden, Inc., Flav-O-Rich, Inc., and the Southland Corporation. Gustafson's pled guilty to fixing commercial prices so the tolling effect of Section 16\(i\) is not at issue. Plaintiffs do not contend that Section 16\(i\) tolls the statute of limitations with respect to Pet Inc. or McArthur Dairy, Inc., both of which were not sued until 1994.

HN9 [↑] Section 16\(i\) applies if there is a "real relationship" between the government proceeding and the subsequent private actions. Leh v. General Petroleum Corp., 382 U.S. 54, 65-66, 86 S. Ct. 203, 15 L. Ed. 2d 134 \(1965\).⁸ Generally, we look [*830] for this relationship by comparing the allegations of the two complaints. Id. In Leh, the Supreme Court was asked whether Section 16\(i\) applies when the allegations in the subsequent private action are different with respect to time period, geographic scope, and alleged wrongdoers. The Court held that it does, minimizing those distinctions:

The private plaintiff is not required to allege that the same means were used to achieve the same objectives of the same conspiracies by the same defendants. Rather, effect must be given to the broad terms of the statute itself--"based in whole or in part on any matter complained of"--read in light of Congress' belief that private antitrust litigation is one of the surest weapons for effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. Doubtlessly, care must be exercised to insure [16] that reliance upon the government proceeding is not mere sham and that the matters complained of in the government suit bear a real relation to the private plaintiff's claim for relief.

Id. The Court made very clear that the courts must not allow a legitimate concern that invocation of Section 16\(i\) be made in good faith to lead them into a miserly or stingy construction of the statutory language. Id.

In a companion [17] case, Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 85 S. Ct. 1473, 14 L. Ed. 2d 405 \(1965\), the Court extended Leh to hold that HN10 [↑] Section 16\(i\) applies to toll the limitations period during the pendency of the government proceeding even when the subsequent private plaintiff claims a different statutory violation.

HN11 [↑] Section 16\(i\) applies, therefore, even if, after the government proceeding, the private plaintiff alleges that the defendants used different means to achieve different objectives so long as there is a real relationship between the activities complained of in each proceeding. Id.; Leh, 382 U.S. at 59-60, 86 S. Ct. 203. The conspiratorial acts alleged by the private plaintiff must be "intertwined with and fundamentally the same" as those alleged in the government action. Maricopa County v. American Pipe and Const. Co., 303 F. Supp. 77 \(D.Ariz.1969\). If there is a significant, although incomplete, overlap of subject matter, the statute is tolled even as to the differences. Leh, 382 U.S. at 54, 86 S. Ct. 203.

The Tenth Circuit has found this standard to be met where the private [18] action alleges similarity in proof, means of carrying out the conspiracy, and subject matter. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. Nisley, 300 F.2d 561, 570 \(10th Cir.1961\). HN12 [↑] Section 16\(i\) applies, the court held, if the private plaintiffs allege substantially the same sort of conspiracy against a similar cast of characters who relied at least in part on the same means for effecting their conspiracy. Id. HN13 [↑] Reliance by the private plaintiff on the same documentary and oral proof to establish the conspiracy bolsters the decision that Section 16\(i\) applies. Id. Similarly, the Ninth Circuit has held that HN14 [↑] Section 16\(i\) applies when the private plaintiff alleges a conspiracy that includes the objectives, means, time span, and geographic scope of the conspiracy alleged in the government suit, and the evidence adduced in the government suit is of practical assistance to plaintiffs in proving their own complaint. Chipanno v. Champion Int'l Corp., 702 F.2d 827, 832 \(9th Cir.1983\).

In this case, the private plaintiffs allege a conspiracy that is similar to the government prosecution in terms of defendants, geographical scope, and time frame. There is also a [19] "real relationship" between the objectives of both conspiracies. In both the bid-rigging and price-fixing conspiracies, the Dairies engaged in collusive behavior designed to eliminate competition [*831] in the wholesale marketplace in Florida during the 1970s, 1980s, and possibly into the 1990s.

⁸ It is at this point that the parties exchange positions. Plaintiffs, who argued that they didn't learn about the price-fixing because price-fixing is nothing like bid-rigging, now assert that "the link between the conspirators' school milk bid-rigging and commercial milk price-fixing is manifest." The Dairies, who contended that bid-rigging was just one form of price-fixing, and that the bid-rigging publicity notified plaintiffs that the Dairies were fixing prices, now argue that the bid-rigging charges involved "an entirely different cause of action" from the price-fixing claims.

The only significant difference between the allegations of the government prosecution and these actions concern the means involved--bid-rigging and price-fixing. Their purpose was the same--to eliminate competition in the wholesale marketplace in Florida. In rigging their bids to school districts, the Dairies sought to divide the wholesale market to schools amongst themselves. Similarly, in fixing their prices to plaintiffs, the Dairies sought to divide the wholesale market to groceries amongst themselves. Although bid-rigging and price-fixing are not the same means, there appears to be a "real relation" between them in the context of this case.⁹

[20] This same conclusion was reached in a similar set of circumstances in Arizona. In that case, the federal government brought both criminal and civil actions against several Arizona dairies, including one of the defendants in this case, alleging a wholesale price-fixing conspiracy. Subsequently, the state of Arizona and a private plaintiff sued the dairies as well as several grocery stores alleging a retail price-fixing conspiracy. In re Arizona Dairy Products Litig., 1984 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22199, 1984-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,284 (D. Ariz 1984). In holding that the retail price-fixing conspiracy allegations were based in part on matters complained of by the federal government and bore a "real relation" to the prior proceeding, the court disregarded the difference in the markets. Instead, the court concluded that the conspiracy alleged by the private plaintiff was "at least in part the same conspiracy as was the object of the Government's suit." Id.

We too believe that these actions bear a real relation to the prior government proceedings because they are, at least, a part of the Dairies' conspiracy to avoid competition in their sales of milk in Florida during this time period. The Dairies are [21] alleged, just as in the government's proceedings, to have eliminated competition among themselves by agreeing to divide the wholesale milk market instead of competing for it through the vehicle of price. In the government's proceedings, the Dairies eliminated price competition and divided the market by agreeing on the price of a successful bid to a school district. In these actions, they are alleged to have eliminated price competition and divided the market by agreeing on the price of milk to retailers. Accordingly, these latter price-fixing activities bear a real relationship to the prior price-fixing activities.

In addition, there may be substantial reliance by the plaintiffs on the oral and documentary proof contained in the government's cases because the Dairies' plea agreements all contain uncontradicted statements that they engaged in commercial price-fixing. These statements provide an evidentiary basis for plaintiffs' present claims.

Therefore, because these actions are based in part on the government's proceedings, both factually and in the proof on which these plaintiffs will rely, we conclude that Section 16(i) tolled the statute of limitations on plaintiffs' claims from [22] March 1, 1990 until August 7, 1992. These claims, therefore, were timely filed.¹⁰ Even [*832] though they timely-filed, however, plaintiffs may recover damages for only the four-year period immediately preceding the filing of their claims unless the statute was tolled for some other reason prior to that time. Zenith, 401 U.S. at 338, 91 S. Ct. 795. Plaintiffs assert there was another reason.

2. Equitable Tolling by Fraudulent Concealment

HN15 [↑] Fraudulent concealment also tolls the Clayton Act's statute of limitations. In re Beef Indust. Litig., 600 F.2d at 1169. If the Dairies fraudulently concealed their price-fixing activities beginning in the 1970s, [23] then

⁹ The Dairies cite only two cases in support of their contention that there is no real relationship between their bid-rigging activities and their price-fixing activities. Neither case is helpful. In Peto v. Madison Square Garden Corp., 384 F.2d 682, 683 (2d Cir.1967), a conspiracy to monopolize boxing was not related to a conspiracy to monopolize hockey, especially since the "only similarity between the two actions is found in the fact that some of the defendants are the same." In Charley's Tour & Transp., Inc. v. Interisland Resorts, Ltd., 618 F. Supp. 84, 86 (D.Haw. 1985), Section (i) did not apply because the two complaints alleged different markets, different defendants, different means of proof and "wholly different actions on the part of the defendants as the basis for establishing liability."

¹⁰ This holding does not extend to Pet and McArthur. As to Pet's liability, see Section II. C. McArthur may be liable only on a theory of continuing conspiracy or fraudulent concealment, and then only if it was sued within four years of either the last purchase at a fixed price or plaintiffs' discovery of their claim against it.

the statute of limitations was tolled during the time of the concealment. If so, plaintiffs may recover damages for all the years during which the conspiracy was fraudulently concealed and the statute was tolled. Id.

HN16[¹] To avail themselves of this doctrine, plaintiffs have the burden of proving at trial that "the defendants concealed the conduct complained of, and that [plaintiffs] failed, despite the exercise of due diligence on [their] part, to discover the facts that form the basis of [their] claim." Id.

HN17[¹] On motion for summary judgment, however, the moving party always bears the initial burden of pointing out the undisputed facts which entitle it to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). In re Beef Indust. Litig., 600 F.2d at 1170. To be entitled to judgment on this issue, then, the Dairies must show that plaintiffs either knew of their claim or had notice sufficient to prompt them to investigate and that, had they done so diligently, they would have discovered the basis for their claims. If the Dairies point to such facts in the record, [^{24}] then plaintiffs must demonstrate that these facts are in dispute. Id.

In determining whether there is an issue of fact for trial regarding plaintiffs claim of fraudulent concealment, we must resolve all doubt against the moving party. Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548. This standard is applied with particular stringency where it is claimed that the defendant's conduct prevented the plaintiff from discovering his claim prior to the expiration of the limitations period. In re Carbon Dioxide Antitrust Litig., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19898, 1993-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,436 at 5 (M.D.Fla.1993).

In fact, we have held, along with a majority of the circuits, that HN18[¹] the issue of when a plaintiff is on "notice" of his claim is a question of fact for the jury. Ballew v. A.H. Robins Co., 688 F.2d 1325 (11th Cir.1982); Maughan v. SW Servicing, Inc., 758 F.2d 1381, 1387 (10th Cir.1985); Lundy v. Union Carbide Corp., 695 F.2d 394 (9th Cir.1982); Renfroe v. Eli Lilly & Co., 686 F.2d 642 (8th Cir.1982).

We have also held on numerous occasions that, HN19[¹] as a general rule, the issue of when a plaintiff in the exercise of due [^{25}] diligence should have known of the basis for his claims is not an appropriate question for summary judgment. Smith v. Duff and Phelps, Inc., 891 F.2d 1567, 1572 (11th Cir.1990) (due diligence is jury issue); Durham v. Business Management Assocs., 847 F.2d 1505, 1509 (11th Cir.1988) (factual issue of due diligence involves state of mind not resolvable by summary judgment).

In order to be entitled to judgment as a matter of law on these issues, then, the Dairies have the burden, as the moving parties, to point to undisputed facts in the record which demonstrate conclusively that plaintiffs had notice of their claims, and, that, had they exercised reasonable diligence, they would have discovered adequate grounds for filing this antitrust lawsuit during the limitations period. In re Beef Indust. Litig., 600 F.2d at 1171. It is not enough for summary judgment to [^{*833}] point to facts which might have caused a plaintiff to inquire, or could have led to evidence supporting his claim. A defendant who does this has succeeded in demonstrating only that there is a jury question regarding the tolling of the statute of limitations by fraudulent [^{26}] concealment. To award summary judgment on such a showing is error.

The grant of summary judgment in this case was such an error. The district court held that the newspaper articles regarding the Dairies' bid-rigging put plaintiffs on notice in early 1988 that "defendants were accused of acting jointly to the detriment of other substantial commercial customers," and that "had the plaintiffs exercised due diligence during the statutory period, they would have discovered most, if not all, of the facts upon which they now base their claims." The Dairies, however, have shown only that there was information in 1988 that might have led plaintiffs to inquire, and have made virtually no showing at all regarding what plaintiffs would have discovered had they done so. This is not enough to entitle the Dairies to summary judgment.

In holding that notice of bid-rigging constituted notice to plaintiffs of possible price-fixing, the district court resolved a question of fact against them in violation of Rule 56.¹¹ The best the evidence can be said to show is that:

[27] Mr. Morton admitted that he read several articles in The Sarasota Herald Tribune about a lawsuit by the Attorney General accusing Defendants in this case of a vast conspiracy to [rig the bids for] milk products sold to Florida schools. These articles were published as early as February of 1988, and Morton was aware from that time forward of problems the dairy industry was having with the authorities.

We know of no case, however, in which information regarding one sort of antitrust violation by a defendant has been held, as a matter of law, to constitute notice of all other possible violations. The cases cited by the Dairies for this proposition are all "same violation" cases. In these cases, widely publicized earlier investigations of exactly the same antitrust violations were held to constitute adequate notice to others of their possible claims. For example, in the Beef Industry Antitrust Litigation case, the prior publicized lawsuit "involved allegations essentially identical to those of the [present lawsuit]." 600 F.2d at 1169. In Ohio ex. rel. Montgomery v. Louis Trauth Dairy, Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9176, 1996-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P71,396 \(S.D.Ohio 1996\), [28] press reports of bid-rigging of school milk contracts in Florida put Ohio on inquiry notice regarding Ohio school milk contracts.¹² In Dayco Corp. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 523 F.2d 389, 394 \(6th Cir.1975\), widely-publicized congressional hearings concerned the very same violations sued upon after the expiration of the limitations period by Dayco. Notice that the Dairies were rigging bids to one customer, then, supplies notice that they might be rigging bids to you and triggers a duty to inquire. In re Beef Indust. Litig., 600 F.2d at 1171 ("Those who have learned of facts 'calculated to excite inquiry' must inquire"). The Dairies were not, however, selling to the plaintiffs by a bidding process.

[29] [*834] None of these cases, however, holds that notice of one wrong by a defendant triggers a duty for potential plaintiffs to investigate all other potential wrongs the defendant might be committing, and we are unwilling to say that it does as a matter of law. Notice that sellers have come up with a method of extracting undeserved profit from the government does not, as a matter of law, supply notice to the private buyer that the sellers have come up with another method to get into his pocket. Whether notice of rigging bids to schools for milk contracts should have excited these plaintiffs to inquire about possible price-fixing as to milk retailers is a question for the jury and may ultimately depend on credibility choices.¹³

[30] Furthermore, even if it were undisputed that plaintiffs had notice regarding the possibility that Dairies might be fixing their prices, this does not mean that plaintiffs had either actual or constructive knowledge of their claim.

The plaintiffs' knowledge of [circumstances which did or should have excited them to inquire] is not as a matter of law tantamount to actual or constructive knowledge of their claim. Although the statute of limitations is not tolled simply because the plaintiffs lack much of the evidence supporting their potential claim, they cannot have notice of a potential claim unless they are aware of some evidence tending to support it. The filing by others of a similar lawsuit against the same defendants may in some circumstances suffice to give notice, but to rule that it does so as a matter of law is to compel a person situated like these plaintiffs to file suit, on the pain of forfeiting his rights,

¹¹ Similarly, there are factual disputes on the issue of affirmative acts of concealment. One defendant's brief, for example, claims that there were no acts of concealment because the alleged false statements to customers regarding why milk prices were going up "were, in fact, true." This is a fact question that only a jury should resolve.

¹² The other cases cited by the Dairies are factually dissimilar but they also involve a plaintiff's earlier knowledge of the same wrong later sued upon. Friedman v. Estate of Presser, 929 F.2d 1151, 1159-60 \(6th Cir.1991\) (later knowledge of role of informant known to plaintiff earlier); United Klans of America v. McGovern, 621 F.2d 152, 154 \(5th Cir.1980\) (statute of limitations not tolled in action for illegal investigation where Justice Department held a press conference to announce investigation of Klan and notified Klan of investigation prior to termination of statute).

¹³ We find no inconsistency between this holding and our earlier determination that the price-fixing allegations bear a "real relationship" to the prior bid-rigging allegations. Even though there was a real relationship between the Dairies' bid-rigging activities and their price-fixing activities, the newspaper stories were not sufficient, as a matter of law, to reveal this relationship to plaintiffs.

regardless of whether his attorney believes that there is "good ground to support it." Rule 11, F.R. Civ. P. The mere filing of a similar lawsuit, without more, does not necessarily give "good ground" because that suit might well be frivolous or baseless. [\[31\]](#)¹⁴

In re Beef Indust. Litig., 600 F.2d at 1171 (citations omitted).

The Dairies "had the burden, as the moving parties, to demonstrate conclusively that the plaintiffs, through the exercise of reasonable diligence, would have discovered adequate ground for filing suit." Id. They did not, [\[32\]](#) however, address this issue at all in their briefs. Their summary judgment motion refers us only to the newspaper articles and to the fact that plaintiffs did business with some of the individuals criminally charged with bid-rigging. They point to no evidence in this record suggesting that the bid-rigging investigations verified or even publicized any information regarding commercial price fixing prior to Gustafson's guilty plea in 1992. Neither do they point to evidence that plaintiffs had independent access before that time to any information, beyond the newspaper articles, that would have tended to verify their suspicions had they had any.¹⁵ In similar circumstances, we have said:

[\[*835\]](#) At best, the materials on file might support an inference that the plaintiffs would have discovered adequate support before [the expiration of the limitations period] had they been reasonably diligent. The inference, however, is not so compelling as to entitle the defendants to summary judgment. Because the defendants failed to demonstrate the absence of genuine issues of fact ... summary judgment must be reversed.

In re Beef Indust. Litig., 600 F.2d at 1171.

[\[33\]](#) Dairies' position is that such evidence is unnecessary because plaintiffs conducted no investigation.¹⁶ They contend that the doctrine of fraudulent concealment is unavailable to a plaintiff who, in fact, exercises no diligence at all.

Although there is some authority for this proposition,¹⁷ the overwhelming weight of authority treats "inquiry notice" as an objective standard.¹⁸ Under this standard, HN20[] when defendants are guilty of concealing their anti-competitive activities, the plaintiff is not charged with knowledge of his claim until he should have discovered the basis for his claims. In re Beef Indust. Litig., 600 F.2d at 1171 (no actual or constructive notice of claim until

¹⁴ Since the publicized facts underlying the bid-rigging charges were not relevant to plaintiffs' price-fixing claims, and the court pointed to no other facts available to plaintiffs at that time, it appears that the district court's ruling was predicated on its belief that "had they filed suit at any time between February, 1988, and February, 1992, the plaintiffs could have issued subpoenas, conducted depositions, and propounded interrogatories, as they did after 1993. The plaintiffs could have then formulated the basis for their current action." Thus, the district court's suggestion in this case that plaintiffs should have "filed first and investigated later" seems contrary to Rule 11, Fed.R.Civ.P.

¹⁵ In fact, in arguing that their denials of price-fixing to the Florida Attorney General do not amount to affirmative acts of concealment because that investigation was required by law to be secret, the Dairies assert that "the information never entered the public domain."

¹⁶ Plaintiffs readily admit they did nothing to investigate their claims prior to the 1992 guilty plea by Gustafson's, because, they argue, they had no reason to suspect that they too had been victimized.

¹⁷ See Dodds v. Cigna Securities, Inc., 12 F.3d 346, 350 \(2d Cir.1993\) ("equitable tolling will stay the running of the statute of limitations only so long as the plaintiff has exercised reasonable care and diligence in seeking to learn the facts which would disclose fraud").

¹⁸ Such a "discovery" accrual rule is commonly applied by the Circuits in securities fraud cases where the plaintiff's cause of action is held to accrue only when he reasonably should have discovered the fraud. Klehr, 521 U.S. at 191, 117 S. Ct. 1984. plaintiffs, through the exercise of reasonable diligence, would have discovered adequate ground for filing [34] suit). See also Great Rivers Coop. v. Farmland Industries, Inc., 120 F.3d 893, 896 \(8th Cir.1997\) ("inquiry notice exists when the victim is aware of facts that would lead a reasonable person to investigate and consequently acquire actual knowledge of the defendant's misrepresentations"); Maggio v. Gerard Freezer & Ice Co., 824 F.2d 123, 128 \(1st Cir.1987\) (" 'storm warnings' of the possibility of fraud trigger a plaintiff's duty to investigate in a reasonably diligent manner ... [and] his cause of action is deemed to accrue on the date when he should have discovered the alleged fraud").

[35] Furthermore, the statute of limitations is tolled until this time. Duff and Phelps, 5 F.3d 488 at 492 n. 9. See also Sterlin v. Biomune Systems, 154 F.3d 1191, 1201 \(10th Cir.1998\) (statute of limitations does not begin to run until plaintiff should have discovered the facts underlying the fraud); Law v. Medco Research, Inc., 113 F.3d 781, 785 \(7th Cir.1997\) (statute runs from time plaintiff learns of facts supporting claim).

The scope of the plaintiffs' damages, therefore, depends upon when they should have discovered the facts supporting their claims. This is true regardless of whether they actually investigated. Marks v. CDW Computer Ctrs., Inc., 122 F.3d 363, 368 \(7th Cir.1997\). "Inquiry notice does not begin to run unless and until the investor is able, with the exercise of due diligence (whether or nor actually exercised), to ascertain the information needed to file suit." Id. (emphasis added); Caviness v. Derand Resources Corp., 983 F.2d 1295, 1303 \(4th Cir.1993\) (the limitations period commences "when the plaintiff knows of the facts on which the action is based or has such knowledge [36] as would put a reasonably prudent purchaser on notice to inquire, so long as that inquiry would reveal the facts on which a claim is ultimately based"). In a price-fixing case involving some of these same defendants, the Fourth Circuit concluded that:

With regard to the third element of [the fraudulent concealment] test, the [*836] due diligence requirement, it is possible for a plaintiff to satisfy that element without demonstrating that it engaged in any specific inquiry.... Furthermore, if reasonable further investigation would not have revealed the basis for the antitrust claim, the plaintiff's claim is not time barred. (citations omitted)

Supermarket of Marlinton, Inc. v. Meadow Gold Dairies, Inc. 71 F.3d 119, 128 \(4th Cir.1995\)

The actual exercise of diligence is irrelevant because the standard is an objective one. As the Tenth Circuit recently explained:

HN21 [↑] Although a plaintiff has an "obligation of diligence," the plaintiff need not show the actual exercise of diligence in order to "toll" the limitations period. Rather in deciding whether the statute should be tolled, it must be determined whether a "reasonably diligent plaintiff" would have discovered [37] the fraud. (citations omitted)

Sterlin, 154 F.3d at 1201. See also Ohio v. Peterson, Lowry, Rall, Barber & Ross, 651 F.2d 687, 694-95 n. 16 \(10th Cir.1981\) (while equity required actual diligence, modern federal test requires "hypothetical diligence"). See also Klehr, 521 U.S. at 195-96, 117 S. Ct. 1984 (in Civil Rico, the concealment requirement is satisfied if the plaintiff shows that he neither knew nor, in the exercise of due diligence, could reasonably have known of the offense).

Both the diligent and the non-diligent plaintiff are protected from the expiration of claims the factual basis for which was shrouded by the veil of fraudulent concealment. Neither, however, is protected from the expiration of claims the factual basis for which they could and should have discovered through the exercise of due diligence.¹⁹ As the Seventh Circuit has observed:

[38] Is mere suspicion discovery? Or, at the other extreme, must the investor have learned (or been in a position where he should have learned) all the facts he needs in order to file suit? ... The plaintiff gets [the] period of the statute of limitations after he learned or should have learned the facts that he must know to know that he has a claim.

¹⁹ This objective standard accommodates the federal antitrust interest in expediting enforcement of economic competition with the federal judicial interest in avoiding groundless or premature suits. See Sterlin, 154 F.3d at 1202.

Medco Research, 113 F.3d at 785.

In finding that plaintiffs did not act diligently, the district court did not refer to undisputed facts which support a conclusion that a reasonable investigation would have provided plaintiffs with a basis to sue in 1989. Apparently, however, the court relied ²⁰ upon the affidavit of Jay Gurmankin, an attorney who represented Albertson's Supermarkets. Gurmankin's first affidavit states that, prompted by news of the government investigations into bid rigging in Florida in 1988, he conducted an investigation of commercial price fixing, took two sworn statements from bid-riggers, and ultimately negotiated a settlement with one of Albertson's dairy suppliers in 1989. The district court inferred from this affidavit that, if plaintiffs had also investigated in 1988, they too could have [39] discovered the facts which led to Albertson's settlement of their antitrust claims in 1989.

In later testimony, however, Gurmankin conceded that he did not actually take the bid-riggers' statements until 1990 and early 1991. Therefore, they could not possibly have informed Albertson's of the basis for its 1989 settlement. In fact, he acknowledged that the 1989 settlement was in connection with an antitrust lawsuit in Utah, totally unrelated to Albertson's later-discovered antitrust claims in Florida, [*837] and that the Florida claims were settled only in the summer of 1991. He also testified that the Florida settlement was achieved during a period when Albertson's was represented not only by himself, but by the same attorneys who, on behalf of the State of Florida, had conducted the investigation into the Dairies bid-rigging activities.

Reliance on these affidavits, which [40] the district court characterized as uncontradicted, is error. They are internally inconsistent and do not establish that Albertson's learned of its Florida claims prior to 1990 or 1991. The Dairies did not, therefore, meet their burden of establishing that there is undisputed evidence in this record which conclusively shows that plaintiffs could have discovered the basis for their claims in 1989, if only they had been duly diligent. The Dairies are not, therefore, entitled to summary judgment on the issue of fraudulent concealment.²¹ If plaintiffs prove fraudulent concealment of price-fixing at trial, they may recover damages co-extensive with the concealment and into the limitations period.

C. Abandonment of the Conspiracy

HN22[↑] The law recognizes that a conspirator may withdraw from the conspiracy. Hyde v. United States, 225 U.S. 347, 369, 32 S. Ct. 793, 56 L. Ed. 1114 (1912). [41] HN23[↑] Withdrawal marks a conspirator's disavowal or abandonment of the conspiratorial agreement. United States v. Read, 658 F.2d 1225, 1233 (7th Cir.1981). HN24[↑] A conspirator who withdraws from the conspiracy is no longer a member of the conspiracy and the subsequent acts of the conspirators usually do not bind him.²² Id. See also United States v. Borelli, 336 F.2d 376, 388 (2d Cir.1964). The ex-conspirator remains liable, however, for his previous agreement and all damages inflicted by the acts he committed prior to his withdrawal. Id.

HN25[↑] Withdrawal, therefore, is not a complete defense to the charge of conspiracy. It becomes a complete defense only when coupled with the defense of the statute of limitations. The statute [42] of limitations begins to run upon the conspirator's withdrawal from the conspiracy. United States v. Antar, 53 F.3d 568, 584 (3d Cir. 1995). If he is not sued within the limitations period, all claims against him are time-barred. He cannot be held liable for the acts of the other conspirators after he withdrew because his withdrawal effectively ended his membership in the conspiracy.²³ Nor can he be sued for the damages caused by his previous participation because the limitations period has elapsed. Thus, the interaction of the two defenses of withdrawal and statute of limitations operates to shield the ex-conspirator of all liability. Read, 658 F.2d at 1233.

²⁰ The district court did rely on these affidavits for its conclusion that plaintiffs were on notice that "where there's smoke, there's fire."

²¹ Of course, the jury will ultimately determine what these plaintiffs should have known and when they should have known it.

²² The exception is where a continuing conspiracy is alleged. Since a continuing conspiracy is alleged as one crime, a conspirator is still liable for the crimes of his co-conspirators even after his withdrawal, so long as he is sued during the limitations period.

Pet and Southland sold their dairies in 1985 and 1988 respectively. They contend that these sales constituted an abandonment of the alleged price-fixing conspiracy. If so, the statute of limitations began to run as to plaintiffs' claims against them in 1985 and 1988. We have [\[43\]](#) already decided that Section 16\(i\) tolled the statute in 1990. Plaintiffs, therefore, timely filed as to Southland. Even if it withdrew in 1988, it remains liable to plaintiffs since they filed during the limitations period. If Pet withdrew in 1985, however, these actions would not be timely filed.²⁴

[*838] The standard for effective withdrawal has been articulated by the Supreme Court:

HN26 Affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment.

United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 464-65, 98 S. Ct. 2864, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854 \(1978\). [\[44\]](#)

HN27 Although mere cessation of activity is not sufficient to establish withdrawal, United States v. Hogan, 986 F.2d 1364, 1375 \(11th Cir.1993\), a conspirator may avoid further liability for his actions if he affirmatively and completely disassociates himself from the continued operation of the conspiracy. United States v. Lowell, 649 F.2d 950, 955 \(3d Cir. 1981\).

In this circuit, however, it has long been necessary that HN28 the conspirator demonstrate that he "undertook affirmative steps, inconsistent with the objects of the conspiracy, to disavow or to defeat the conspiratorial objectives." United States v. Finestone, 816 F.2d 583 589 \(11th Cir.1987\) (emphasis added). "Merely ending one's activity in a conspiracy may not constitute withdrawal." United States v. Pippin, 903 F.2d 1478, 1481 \(11th Cir.1990\) (citing Finestone, id.). The defense of withdrawal is not available to one who merely ceases to participate and does not affirmatively withdraw. United States v. Young, 39 F.3d 1561, 1571 \(11th Cir. 1994\); United States v. Hogan, 986 F.2d 1364, 1375 \(11th Cir.1993\); United States v. LeQuire, 943 F.2d 1554, 1564 \(11th Cir.1991\). [\[45\]](#)

Pet asserts that its exit from the dairy business constituted an affirmative step sufficient to effectively withdraw it from the conspiracy, and that this act was communicated to the other Dairies by the extensive publicity regarding the sale at the time. Plaintiffs contend that Pet did nothing more than cease its participation in the conspiracy and did nothing to disavow or defeat the purposes of the conspiracy. Furthermore, they contend that Pet did not communicate its withdrawal to the other conspirators.

There is merit to plaintiffs' contentions. The sale of Pet's dairy was not a disavowal of the conspiracy so much as a business decision not to produce milk anymore. Nor did it do anything to defeat the continuation of the other dairies price-fixing.²⁵ It simply sold its dairy and walked away.

Plaintiffs argue that we should adopt the time-bomb theory [\[46\]](#) of conspiratorial liability. This theory holds that, having set in motion a criminal scheme, a conspirator will not be permitted by the law to limit his responsibility for its consequences by ceasing, however, definitively, to participate.

Such cessation may or may not be effective withdrawal in a lay sense, but this is one of those places where the law uses a word in a special sense. You do not absolve yourself of guilt of bombing by walking away from the ²³ The continuing conspiracy is the exception.

²⁴ These actions may also be timely-filed against both Pet and Southland on a theory of fraudulent concealment. Under this theory, they would be liable for all damages inflicted by the conspiracy so long as plaintiffs timely filed after they discovered or should have discovered their claims.

²⁵ In fact, as we have noted above, plaintiffs allege that Pet left in place the principal conspirators who continued to fix milk prices for the new owners.

ticking bomb. And similarly the law will not let you wash your hands of a dangerous scheme that you have set in motion and that can continue to operate and cause great harm without your continued participation.

United States v. Patel, 879 F.2d 292, 294 \(7th Cir. 1989\).

In an alleged price-fixing conspiracy such as this one, the requirement for affirmative steps to defeat the objectives of the conspiracy is especially relevant. Once prices have been set at an artificially high level, no further action by the conspirators is required to effect the objectives of the conspiracy. In such a continuing conspiracy, each sale at the fixed price continues to benefit the conspirators, regardless of whether some [47] members of the conspiracy drop out.

[*839] The issue, then, is whether Pet's sale of its dairy, without more, effectively withdrew it from the milk price-fixing conspiracy, or whether some further affirmative step was required to end its liability.

HN29 In the context of a business conspiracy, one in which the conspiracy is carried out through the regular activities of an otherwise legitimate business enterprise, the law has given effect to a conspirator's abandonment of the conspiracy only where the conspirator can demonstrate that he retired from the business, severed all ties to the business, and deprived the remaining conspirator group of the services which he provided to the conspiracy. Lowell, 649 F.2d at 955. Resignation from the conspiring business has frequently been held to constitute effective withdrawal. United States v. Nerlinger, 862 F.2d 967, 974 \(2d Cir. 1988\). A conspirator "unquestionably disavows the conspiracy" to fraudulently divert the proceeds of customers' stock trades when he resigns his employment and closes the illicit account. Id. Similarly, an employee of a corporation involved in bribery conspiracy effectively withdrew from conspiracy [48] when he resigned and permanently severed his employment relationship with the corporation. United States v. Steele, 685 F.2d 793 \(3d Cir. 1982\).

The conspirator's break with the other conspirators, however, must be both clean and permanent. United States v. Pippin, 903 F.2d 1478 \(11th Cir. 1990\). For example, a Borden manager involved in the same school milk bidding conspiracy involved in this case, told the other dairies he would no longer participate in that conspiracy, but, nonetheless, honored the prior agreement not to bid for the school milk contracts that remained. Id. at 1481. We held that these actions did not constitute an effective withdrawal. Id. at 1482. See also United States v. Eisen, 974 F.2d 246, 269 \(2d Cir. 1992\) (attorney who, despite resigning from the conspiratorial enterprise, continued to be entitled to a percentage of the conspiratorial proceeds did not effectively withdraw).

HN30 In order to effectively withdraw, however, it is not necessary for the conspirator to disclose the illegal scheme to the authorities. Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 464-65, 98 S. Ct. 2864.²⁶ [49] Nor is it necessary that the conspirator notify each co-conspirator of the abandonment. Nerlinger, 862 F.2d at 974 ("nothing in Borelli or any other case requires the hiring of a calligrapher to print formal notices of withdrawal to be served upon co-conspirators").

Did Pet effectively withdraw? With the sale of its dairy, Pet certainly "retired" and totally severed its ties to the milk price-fixing conspiracy. It did nothing more to assist or participate in the price-fixing activities of the other dairies. This retirement was communicated to the other dairies by the media. They knew that from that time on, Pet would not lend its services to the conspiracy. Thus, the purposes of the conspiracy were defeated at least as to Pet. We conclude, therefore, that Pet did effectively withdraw from the price-fixing conspiracy upon [50] the sale of its dairy.

III.

We hold that 15 U.S.C. § 16\(i\) tolled the statute of limitations prior to its expiration and thereafter plaintiffs timely filed these actions as to all defendants except Pet and McArthur. As to Pet, we hold that it effectively withdrew from the conspiracy in 1985 and, as to it, these actions are not timely-filed. McArthur may be liable only on a theory of continuing conspiracy or fraudulent concealment. As to damages, we hold that there remain genuine issues of material fact as to whether defendants fraudulently concealed their price-fixing activities, thereby tolling the statute at an earlier date and expanding the limitations [*840] period. Therefore, defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on this issue.

²⁶ Such a requirement would militate against withdrawal in some cases, thereby undermining the mitigation of danger to society which the defense is designed to encourage.

Accordingly, we AFFIRM IN PART, REVERSE IN PART and REMAND.

End of Document

Santana Prods. v. Sylvester & Assocs.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

December 29, 1999, Decided

98 CV 6721

Reporter

121 F. Supp. 2d 729 *; 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22550 ; 2001-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73,147

SANTANA PRODUCTS, INC., Plaintiff, -against- SYLVESTER & ASSOCIATES, LTD. and FREDERICK E. SYLVESTER, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Reconsideration denied by, Motion denied by Santana Prods. v. Sylvester & Assocs., 121 F. Supp. 2d 729, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20213 (E.D.N.Y., 2000)

Prior History: Santana Prods., Inc. v. Bobrick Washroom Equip., Inc., 69 F. Supp. 2d 678, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13500 \(M.D. Pa., 1999\)

Disposition: [1] Defendants' Motion for Judgement on Pleadings DENIED. Defendants' Motion for More Definite Statement pursuant to Rule 12\(e\) DENIED. Defendants' Motion for Partial Judgement on Pleadings dismissing Plaintiff's claim under Section 2 of Sherman Act GRANTED.

Core Terms

partitions, toilet, monopolize, Sherman Act, monopoly, alleges, competitors, conspiracy, pleadings, plaintiff's claim, conspired, conspiracy to monopolize, Lanham Act, partial judgment, overt act, co-conspirators, manufacturers, antitrust, statute of limitations, restraint of trade, market power, polyethylene, misleading, non-party, videotape, interstate commerce, definite statement, distributed

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1 Responses, Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections

The standard for obtaining a judgment on the pleadings under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(c\) is the same as that applicable to a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Under this test, the court must accept the allegations contained in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-movant; it should not dismiss the complaint unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN2 [↓] Remedies, Damages

Damages are recoverable under the Sherman Act only if the suit is commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN3 [↓] Consumer Protection, False Advertising

Though the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125 et seq., does not provide a statute of limitations period, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit applies a six-year statute of limitations to Lanham Act claims.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4 [↓] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A cause of action under the Sherman Act is not barred simply because anti-competitive conduct began outside the statutory period, so long as some overt act injuring the plaintiff is committed within the limitations period. Under these circumstances, a plaintiff generally is entitled to recover damages for post-limitations but not pre-limitations overt acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 [↓] Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

121 F. Supp. 2d 729, *729 (1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22550, 1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN6 [PDF] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A claim of conspiracy to monopolize requires proof of (1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN7 [PDF] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

The offense of conspiracy to monopolize proscribed by § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires proof of the existence of a conspiracy, a specific intent to monopolize, and an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. Unlike the offense of attempted monopolization, it is not necessary to establish the existence of market power in a relevant market or a dangerous probability of success in achieving a monopoly in such market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [PDF] Sherman Act, Claims

Unlike a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, which is aimed at restraint of trade and does not require proof of a fundamental alteration of market structure, a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is aimed primarily not at improper conduct but at a pernicious market structure in which the concentration of power saps the salubrious influence of competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN9 [PDF] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The essence of monopoly is the power to effect the exclusion of competition generally in a field for the benefit of a particular person or class. The exclusion of a single person from competition is not monopoly. Thus, where only one competitor is alleged to be targeted, as opposed to an entire market, a conspiracy to monopolize claim must fail.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10 [blue] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

To allege a conspiracy to monopolize an entire market, the plaintiff must allege more than unfair trade practices directed at one competitor. The plaintiff must allege overt acts by which the defendants intended to gain sufficient market power to raise prices or exclude competition when it desired to do so. If intent to restrain trade was synonymous with intent to monopolize, §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1 and 2, would be redundant. There must be an area between the two provisions in which a plaintiff alleges a conspiracy in restraint of trade that may stop short of monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN11 [blue] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Traditionally, the offense of monopolization occurs where one firm possesses monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN12 [blue] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The idea that a monopoly is composed of a single economic entity is reflected in the requirement in an actual monopolization claim that the requisite market power be held by a single defendant. This idea in no way precludes the possibility of a group of firms conspiring to monopolize, if the aim of the conspiracy is to form a single entity to possess the illegal market power. When, however, two or more competitors conspire to create a market environment in which competition and market entry is improperly restricted, but in which market power continues to be shared among these otherwise unrelated entities, there is no conspiracy to monopolize claim stated under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, and the claim must therefore be dismissed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Defects of Form

HN13 [blue] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Defects of Form

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e) provides that a motion for a more definite statement of the plaintiff's claims must be made before interposing a responsive pleading.

Counsel: For Defendants: FREDERICK A. NICOLL, ESQ., Law Offices of Frederick A. Nicol, New York, NY.

For Plaintiff: PAUL J. ESATTO JR., ESQ., PETER I. BERNSTEIN, ESQ., Scully, Scott, Murphy & Presser, Garden City, NY.

Judges: JACOB MISHLER, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: JACOB MISHLER

Opinion

[*731] Memorandum of Decision and Order

December 29, 1999

MISHLER, District Judge:

This action was brought pursuant to Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2, the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125 et seq. and the Donnelly Antitrust Act, New York Gen. Bus. L. § 340. Plaintiff Santana Products, Inc. ("Santana") alleges that Defendants Sylvester & Associates and Frederick E. Sylvester ("Sylvester") (collectively, "Defendants") have contracted and conspired to unreasonably restrain trade in and monopolize a portion of the toilet partition market. Plaintiff further alleges that Defendants have published, distributed [*2] and disseminated advertising brochures and other advertising statements which include false and/or misleading representations and disparaging accusations regarding Plaintiff's product.

Defendants move for judgment on the pleadings or, in the alternative, for partial judgment on the pleadings or, in the alternative, for a more definite statement. For the reasons below, we grant Defendants' motion for partial judgment on the pleadings and deny the remainder of Defendants' motions.

BACKGROUND

Santana manufactures and sells restroom and toilet partitions made of high density polyethylene ("HDPE"). According to the Complaint, HDPE is more durable and cost-effective than conventional materials such as metal, marble and solid phenolic. Plaintiff claims that as demand for HDPE grew, efforts were initiated to exclude HDPE from the field of materials used for toilet partitions. Specifically, "Sylvester, Sylvester & Associates, and the non-party co-conspirators conspired to use scare tactics to discourage specification and acceptance of Santana's HDPE partitions in lieu of or as a replacement material for conventional materials by falsely alleging that Santana's partitions posed a dangerous [*3] fire hazard." (Complaint P 23.) As a result of these allegedly false allegations, HDPE toilet partitions were often misclassified by specifiers and building code officials as "interior wall finish" which are required to meet additional fire safety standards.

In late 1989, several alleged non-party co-conspirators formed the Toilet Partitions Manufacturer's Council ("TPMC") but excluded Plaintiff from membership. According to a memorandum from the Formica Corporation, a TPMC member, the TPMC met in November 1989 to "address the competitive threat of HD Polyethylene (Santana) against our thick stock for construction of toilet partitions". (Ex. B to Complaint.) Plaintiff alleges that Sylvester, while employed by Metpar Corporation in 1989, assisted in the creation of a videotape for the Formica Corporation wherein small samples of Santana's HDPE product were ignited and burned. (Complaint P 32.)

The Complaint further alleges, inter alia:

[*732] . In November 1989, Sylvester, while employed by Metpar, exhibited a portion of what was later incorporated into the Formica videotape at a meeting held at the New York Office of General Services ("OGS") in an effort to have the OGS switch [4] from HDPE to phenolic partitions. (Complaint P 34.)

. In November 1989, Sylvester sent a letter to the Nassau County Fire Marshall stating that HDPE toilet partitions previously provided at the Nassau Coliseum did not meet the proper fire code standards. (Complaint P 37.)

In 1992, Sylvester & Associates was formed. Between 1992 and 1994, Defendants were local architectural representatives of Bobrick Corporation and Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc. (collectively, "Bobrick"). During that time, Defendants allegedly sold Bobrick's plastic laminate toilet partitions without obtaining the required approval for such sales from the Materials and Equipment Acceptance Division of the City of New York Department of Buildings. (Complaint PP 44, 45.) The Complaint specifically alleges:

49. "On information and belief, since at least 1992, [Defendants] have received and distributed Bobrick's "Advisory Bulletin TB-73" to specifiers and architects providing a comparison of the results of an ASTM E-84 test performed on its 1080 Duraline Series toilet partitions and on HDPE toilet partitions without fire retardant additives. Advisory Bulletin TB-73 falsely and/or misleadingly states among [5] other things: 'Polyethylene paneling without fire retardant additives should not be used in buildings where Class B Interior Wall and Ceiling Finish is required.'

50. On information and belief, [Defendants] distributed a "Fact Sheet" (containing false and/or misleading statements relating to Santana's product) to prospective purchasers of Bobrick toilet partitions within the time period of November 1992 to present. . . . The "Fact Sheet" compared characteristics of solid phenolic toilet partitions to Santana's HDPE toilet partitions. On information and belief, the "Fact Sheet" falsely and/or misleadingly stated that HDPE had a smoke developed rating greatly exceeding National Fire Protection limit

51. On information and belief, [Defendants] conducted "box-lunch presentations" between 1992 and 1997 [which included the showing of a slide which] falsely and/or misleadingly illustrates the characteristics of Santana's HDPE toilet partitions."

(Complaint PP 49-51.)

Aside from the Formica videotape, Plaintiffs allege that Bobrick created a videotape comparing its phenolic toilet partitions with the polyethylene partitions made by Santana. The narrator [6] on the tape states that the polyethylene partitions generate excessive smoke when lit and conducts a flame exposure test presented in time-lapse photography, giving the impression that the polyethylene partitions burn quickly. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants and non-party co-conspirators have shown the Bobrick videotape to building code officials and other administrative officers on numerous occasions to prevent contractors from specifying use of Santana's HDPE partitions. (Complaint P 62.)

In support of its antitrust claim, Plaintiff alleges that beginning in the 1980's and continuing to the present time, Defendants and non-party co-conspirators have "contracted, combined and conspired to unreasonably restrain trade in the relevant market for toilet partitions in interstate commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." (Complaint P 67.) The alleged illegal conduct includes:

- . Knowingly acting in concert with co-conspirators to exclude HDPE toilet [*733] partition manufacturers and sellers from the toilet partition market;
 - . Knowingly making false statements regarding the flammability of Plaintiff's product;
 - . Knowingly making false statements regarding the [7] flame and smoke protection standards HDPE must meet, thereby frightening and misleading architects and other specifiers for toilet partitions and discouraging the inclusion of Santana in the competitive bidding process;
 - . Knowingly making false and/or misleading statements to municipalities and other governmental agencies in an effort to influence them to adopt or modify regulations relating to HDPE partitions and to preclude use of HDPE partitions in government contracts.
- (Complaint P67(a-d).)

Plaintiff further alleges that based on conduct from 1992 to the present time, Defendants and non-party co-conspirators have "conspired to monopolize at least a part of the trade in interstate commerce for toilet partitions and to maintain power to exclude or restrain manufacturers of HDPE partitions from marketing and selling their goods in interstate commerce in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act." (Complaint P 72.) The alleged illegal conduct is similar to that underlying the claims under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Finally, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants violated the Lanham Act by publishing videotapes and distributing advertising brochures and other materials [\[8\]](#) which included false and/or misleading representations and disparaging accusations with regard to the alleged flammability of Santana's HDPE product. These promotional materials are alleged to have been designed to deceive potential purchasers and discourage them from purchasing Santana's HDPE product. (Complaint P 77.)

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

This is the third action filed by Plaintiff alleging antitrust and Lanham Act violations by its competitors in the toilet partition industry. In November 1994, Plaintiff filed an action against the TPMC, eleven toilet compartment manufacturers and the Formica Corporation in the Middle District of Pennsylvania (the "1994 Litigation"). The 1994 litigation was settled with a confidential release and covenant not to sue dated January 27, 1995 which released and forever discharged the signatory entities and their respective officers, directors, parents, subsidiaries, employees, agents and attorneys from any and all claims up to that date.

On October 1, 1996, Plaintiff filed another complaint in the Middle District of Pennsylvania with the caption Santana Products, Inc. v. Bobrick Washroom Equipment, Inc., 3:CV:96-1794 (the "Pennsylvania action"). [\[9\]](#) The complaint in that action alleged, inter alia, a conspiracy among Plaintiff's competitors in violation of the antitrust laws. Among those named in the suit were Sylvester & Associates and Frederick E. Sylvester, Defendants here. On July 24, 1998, the court in that action dismissed Plaintiff's claims against Sylvester & Associates and Frederick E. Sylvester for lack of personal jurisdiction. The remaining parties to the Pennsylvania action are still engaged in extensive discovery.

On October 30, 1998, Plaintiff filed the instant Complaint against Defendants only, reiterating many of the same antitrust and Lanham Act claims alleged in the first two actions. Plaintiff also alleged the violation of the Donnelly Antitrust Act (N.Y. Gen Bus. Law § 340) and included several factual allegations specific to Defendants. On June 1, 1999, Defendants filed that instant motion as well as a motion to stay discovery. On October 19, 1999, we stayed discovery pending resolution of this motion.

[*734] JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

HN1 [↑] The standard for obtaining a judgment on the pleadings under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(c\) is the same as that applicable to a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). [\[10\]](#) Sheppard v. Beerman, 18 F.3d 147, 150 (2d Cir. 1994). Under this test "the Court must accept the allegations contained in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-movant; it should not dismiss the complaint unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief". Sheppard, 18 F.3d at 150 (quoting Ad-Hoc Comm. of Baruch Black and Hispanic Alumni Ass'n v. Bernard M. Baruch College, 835 F.2d 980, 982 (2d Cir. 1987)) (citations omitted).

Defendants assert that all of Plaintiff's claims (1) were previously released by Plaintiff, (2) are time-barred, and/or (3) are pleaded too conclusorily to state an adequate claim.

As part of the settlement in the 1994 Litigation, Plaintiff co-executed a confidential release and covenant not to sue with, among others, Metpar Corporation, the company with which Frederick Sylvester was employed until November 1989. That agreement released and forever discharged Metpar and its employees from any and all claims up to January 27, 1995, the date of execution. (Ex. B to Answer, attached to Def. [\[11\]](#)'s Mem.) Because this release would, at most, only affect actions taken by Sylvester prior to November 1989, which would fall outside all applicable statutes of limitations (see below), we need not address the applicability of the release to the claims asserted herein.

Defendants next assert that Plaintiff does not adequately allege specific acts committed within the applicable statutes of limitations. Plaintiff alleges violations of two federal statutes -- the Sherman Act and the Lanham Act. HN2[↑] Damages are recoverable under the Sherman Act only if the suit is "commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." 15 U.S.C. § 15b. HN3[↑] Though the Lanham Act does not provide a statute of limitations period, this circuit has applied a six-year statute of limitations to Lanham Act claims. See Conopco, Inc. v. Campbell Soup Co., 95 F.3d 187, 191 \(2d Cir. 1996\). Plaintiff filed its Complaint on October 30, 1998. It may therefore recover for injury caused by any antitrust violation committed after October 30, 1994 and for any Lanham Act violation committed after October 30, 1992.

Defendants spend much time in their brief pointing out that most of [\[12\]](#) the facts alleged in Plaintiff's Complaint took place before the four year period. (Def.'s Mem. at 17-20.) HN4[↑] A cause of action is not barred, however, simply because anti-competitive conduct began outside the statutory period, so long as some overt act injuring the plaintiff is committed within the limitations period.¹ [\[13\]](#) Under these circumstances, a plaintiff generally is entitled to recover damages for post-limitations but not pre-limitations overt acts.² This issue may be moot, however, as Plaintiff concedes that it is only "entitled to rely on facts occurring outside the statute of limitations as background to demonstrate the state of mind of Defendants". (Pl.'s Mem. at 2.)

[\[*735\]](#) We find that Plaintiff has adequately pled overt acts in violation of both the Sherman Act and the Lanham Act within the statutory periods. For example, Plaintiff alleges that between 1992 and the present, Defendants have distributed the "Advisory Bulletin TB-73" and Fact Sheets and conducted box-lunch presentations in which false and misleading statements were made regarding Plaintiff's product. (Complaint PP 49-51.) We further find that these allegations are stated with sufficient particularity to satisfy the notice pleading requirement of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8\(a\).

Accordingly, Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings is denied.

PARTIAL JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

Defendants move, in the alternative, for partial judgment on the pleadings dismissing Count II for failure to state a claim [\[14\]](#) under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Count II alleges that "Defendants and the non-party co-conspirators have conspired to monopolize at least a part of the trade in interstate commerce for toilet partitions . . .". (Complaint P 72.)

Section 2 of the Sherman Act states in pertinent part:

HN5[↑] Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

¹ Plaintiff alleges a continuing violation of the antitrust laws dating back to 1989. The Supreme Court in Zenith Radio Corporation v. Hazeltine Research, Inc. explained how continuing violations are treated under the statute of limitations:

Each time a plaintiff is injured by an act of the Defendants a cause of action accrues to him to recover the damages caused by that act and . . . as to those damages, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the act. 401 U.S. 321, 339, 91 S. Ct. 795, 806, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 \(1971\) (citations omitted).

² The exception to this is if the Plaintiff were injured during the statutory period as a result of conduct outside the statutory period where damages were speculative or uncertain at the time the act was committed. Zenith Radio Corp., 401 U.S. at 339, 91 S. Ct. at 806.

15. U.S.C. § 2.

HN6 [↑] A claim of conspiracy to monopolize requires proof of (1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize. See, e.g., The Sample Inc. v. Pendleton Woolen Mills, Inc., 704 F. Supp. 498, 505 (S.D.N.Y. 1989).

In their supporting Memorandum of Law, Defendants assert that Plaintiff's claim under Section 2 should fail because Plaintiffs fail to allege that Defendants possesses the requisite market share to threaten a "dangerous probability" of monopolization. (Def.'s Mem. at 23.) Plaintiff correctly responded that it asserted only a claim for "conspiracy [15] to monopolize" and not "attempt to monopolize" under Section 2 and that proof of a "dangerous probability" of success at monopolization is not required to state a claim for conspiracy. (Pl.'s Mem. at 15.) Defendants, in their Reply brief, dismiss Plaintiff's response and maintain that "whether plaintiff's claim is for conspiracy to monopolize or attempt to monopolize, market share remains a necessary element of a claim under Section Two of the Sherman Act, and plaintiff can point to no authority to the contrary." (Def.'s Reply at 4 n. 2.) In response to Defendants' call for authority on this point, the Court offers the following excerpt from American Jurisprudence:

HN7 [↑] "The offense of conspiracy to monopolize proscribed by Section 2 of the Sherman Act requires proof of the existence of a conspiracy, a specific intent to monopolize and an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. Unlike the offense of attempted monopolization, it is not necessary to establish the existence of market power in a relevant market or a dangerous probability of success in achieving a monopoly in such market."

54 Am.Jur.2d Monopolies, Restraints of Trade and Unfair Trade Practices § 69 (1996) (citations [16] omitted); accord, H.L. Hayden Co. of New York, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1019 (2d Cir. 1989).

While it is clear that proof of market power is not a necessary element in a conspiracy to monopolize claim, the most troubling question for the Court is whether Plaintiff has adequately asserted Defendants' "" "intent to monopolize", an issue addressed only briefly in Defendants' Reply brief.

[*736] Plaintiff claims that by several overt acts falling within the four year statute of limitations, Defendants have conspired with their fellow competitors in the toilet partition industry to disseminate false information regarding Plaintiff's product. By doing so, Defendants "conspired to monopolize at least a part of the trade in interstate commerce for toilet partitions." This argument appears to be a novel one in this district. Plaintiff, in essence, argues that by their actions Defendants intended to affect the general market structure of the toilet partition industry and that as a matter of law a large number of competitors may band together to monopolize an industry. Both questions deserve greater review than they were granted in the parties' briefs.

[17] First, the Court is not convinced that Plaintiff adequately alleged Defendants' intent to affect competition in the toilet partition market generally, as opposed to competition with Plaintiff alone. HN8 [↑] Unlike a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act which is aimed at restraint of trade and does not require proof of a fundamental alteration of market structure, a claim under Section 2 is "aimed primarily not at improper conduct but at a pernicious market structure in which the concentration of power saps the salubrious influence of competition." Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263, 272 (2d Cir. 1979).

HN9 [↑] The essence of monopoly is the power to effect the exclusion of competition generally in a field for the benefit of a particular person or class. Interborough News Co. v. Curtis Publishing Co., 127 F. Supp. 286, 298 (S.D.N.Y. 1954) (citing American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 784-787, 809, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)). The "exclusion of a single person from competition is not monopoly". Id.; Los Angeles Land Co. v.

121 F. Supp. 2d 729, *736 (U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22550, 17

Brunswick Corp., 6 F.3d 1422, 1426-7 (9th Cir. 1993)(same). Thus, where only one [18] competitor is alleged to be targeted,³ as opposed to an entire market, a conspiracy to monopolize claim must fail. See, e.g., Interborough News Co., 127 F. Supp. at 298 (finding no violation of Section 2 where the most the evidence showed was a refusal to deal with one competitor due to real or imagined deficiencies in its operation).

Here, the only actions alleged in support of Plaintiff's Section 2 claims relate to Defendants' efforts to disseminate allegedly false information regarding Plaintiff's product. HN10[¹] To allege a conspiracy to monopolize an entire market, Plaintiff [19] must allege more than unfair trade practices directed at one competitor. Plaintiff must allege overt acts by which Defendants intended to gain sufficient market power to "raise prices or exclude competition when it desired to do so." American Tobacco, 328 U.S. at 811, 66 S. Ct. at 1140. If intent to restrain trade was synonymous with intent to monopolize, sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act would be redundant. There must be an area between these two provisions in which a plaintiff alleges "a conspiracy in restraint of trade that may stop short of monopoly". American Tobacco, 328 U.S. at 788, 66 S. Ct. at 1128 (noting the "reciprocally distinguishable" proof required for claims under Section 1 and Section 2). The actions alleged in the Complaint, if true, would fall in this area.

In H.L. Hayden, a distributor of dental x-ray equipment sued a manufacturer and two other dealers under the Sherman Act alleging, inter alia, conspiracy in restraint of trade and conspiracy to monopolize. The second circuit broke down plaintiff's claims as follows:

"... plaintiff's claim of a section one conspiracy is directed primarily to the [*737] elimination of [20] Hayden ... as a competitor, whereas its claim of a section two conspiracy is directed to attaining 'a monopoly over the sale of dental equipment and dental x-ray equipment to dentists in the United States'."

H.L. Hayden, 879 F.2d at 1019 (affirming district court finding that plaintiff did not proffer adequate evidence to withstand summary judgment on the conspiracy to monopolize claim).

We find that Plaintiff has failed adequately to allege that Defendants' actions were aimed at monopolizing a portion of the toilet partition market in general and not merely at the elimination of plaintiff as a competitor. Accordingly, Defendants' motion for partial judgment on the pleadings as to Plaintiff's section 2 claim is granted.

The second issue presents one of first impression in this district and an alternative basis for granting Defendants' motion for partial judgment on the pleadings on Plaintiff's section 2 claim. Plaintiff appears to argue that Defendants intended to monopolize the toilet partition market not alone, but rather in concert with their fellow competitors. (Complaint P 72.) Without mention, Plaintiff has alleged a conspiracy to form a "shared monopoly" [21] - a theory of liability that has not been addressed by the second circuit and that has been rejected by several other courts. Like the issue above, the "shared monopoly" theory requires further review.

HN11[¹] Traditionally, the offense of monopolization occurs where one firm possesses monopoly power. See 15 U.S.C. § 2 (stating that "Every person who shall monopolize . . . shall be deemed guilty..."); see also, e.g., Oksanen v. Page Memorial Hospital, 945 F.2d 696, 709 (4th Cir. 1991)("Section 2 involves the actions of a single firm to control a market"). Some commentators, however, have posited that Section 2 may be invoked against shared monopolies in which "no single firm possesses sufficient power to be considered a 'monopolist' but nevertheless a relatively few firms achieve monopoly-like" results. P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law 810 (1996). Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp admit, however, that "courts and the Federal Trade Commission have universally rejected claims that Section 2 condemns 'shared' monopoly". P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, at P 810g.

³ Though Plaintiff does allege that Defendants' conduct harmed "Plaintiff and other HDPE manufacturers" (Complaint PP 68, 73), Plaintiff does not identify these other manufacturers or even specify how many there are. The Court, therefore, does not consider Plaintiff to be a representative of a large group of manufacturers, but rather understands Plaintiff's claim to be that Defendant has targeted Plaintiff's product specifically.

121 F. Supp. 2d 729, *737 (U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22550, 21

We are cognizant that the Supreme Court in American Tobacco affirmed the [22] conviction of horizontal competitors for conspiracy to monopolize, but the issue of whether competitors are capable of conspiring to monopolize was never squarely presented to or addressed by the Court. 328 U.S. 781, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575; see also H.L. Hayden Co. of New York, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 672 F. Supp. 724, 742 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (discussing the "discreet question" addressed in American Tobacco), aff'd on other grounds, 879 F.2d 1005 (2d Cir. 1989). The only circuit court to have addressed the issue is the ninth circuit in Harkins Amusement Enterprises, Inc. v. General Cinema Corp., 850 F.2d 477 (9th Cir. 1988). The court there refused to hold that the shared monopoly theory can never be viable, but rejected the theory in that case holding that because the market at issue was small with numerous sellers, the shared monopoly theory could not support a claim under Section 2. Id. at 490.

Most district courts that have addressed the viability of a shared monopoly theory under Section 2 have rejected it as contrary to the plain language and legislative intent of the Sherman Act. See, e. [23] g., Consolidated Terminal Systems, Inc. v. ITT World Communications, Inc., 535 F. Supp. 225, 229 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) (holding that shared monopoly does not violate § 2 of the Sherman Act absent an allegation that a particular Defendant, as opposed to all Defendants, monopolized or attempted to monopolize the market); Phoenix Elec. Co. v. Nat'l Elec. Contractors Ass'n, Inc., 867 F. Supp. 925, 941 (D. Or. 1994) (where many competitors are alleged to form a shared [*738] monopoly, claim under § 2 fails); see also H.L. Hayden, 672 F. Supp. at 741 (expressing "considerable discomfort" with shared monopoly theory and noting that the "notion that two competitors could conspire to monopolize is, seemingly, antithetical").

A district court in Maryland stated the issue as follows:

HN12[↑] "The idea that a monopoly is composed of a single economic entity is also reflected in the requirement in an actual monopolization claim that the requisite market power be held by a single defendant. This idea in no way precludes the possibility of a group of firms conspiring to monopolize, if the aim of the conspiracy is to form a single entity to possess the illegal market [24] power. When, however, two or more competitors conspire to create a market environment in which competition and market entry is improperly restricted, but in which market power continues to be shared among these otherwise unrelated entities, this Court holds that there is no conspiracy to monopolize claim stated under Section 2, and the claim must therefore be dismissed."

Sun Dun. Inc. of Washington v. Coca-Cola Company, 740 F. Supp. 381, 391-92 (D. Md. 1990).

Similarly, under the facts presented here, Plaintiff cannot assert a claim for conspiracy to form a shared monopoly under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Assuming Plaintiff's allegations are true, the result of Defendants' actions would be the elimination of Plaintiff as a competitor in the toilet partition market. Plaintiff has not alleged, however, that competition among the many remaining manufacturers of toilet partitions would be diminished in any way. Absent such an allegation, Plaintiff's conspiracy to monopolize claim must fail. Thus, as an alternative basis to the one mentioned above, Defendants' motion for partial judgment on the pleadings on Plaintiff's Section 2 conspiracy claim is granted.

[25] MOTION FOR A MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT

Lastly, Defendants seek an order from the Court requiring Plaintiff to submit "a more definite statement with regard to its allegations after October 30, 1992 on the Lanham Act claim and after October 30, 1994 on the Sherman Act claims" pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(e). HN13[↑] Rule 12(e), however, provides that such motion must be made "before interposing a responsive pleading". Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(e). Defendants interposed their Answer on March 12, 1999. Accordingly, Defendants' motion for a more definite statement is denied.

CONCLUSION

Defendants' Motion for Judgement on the Pleadings is DENIED.

Defendants' Motion for a More Definite Statement pursuant to Rule 12\(e\) is DENIED.

Defendants' Motion for Partial Judgement on the Pleadings dismissing Plaintiff's claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act is GRANTED. There being no just cause for delay, the Clerk of the Court is directed to enter judgment dismissing Plaintiff's claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Because the instant Order involves "a controlling question of law as to "which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and . . . an immediate appeal [26] from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation", 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\), we hereby certify the order for immediate appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\).

SO ORDERED.

JACOB MISHLER, U.S.D.J.

End of Document