The Commission's conclusion is unfounded. In the initial opinion the Commission found that Northern Transportation's costs were understated because: (1) it failed to add the additional $14,000,000 investment Northern would have to make in Minnesota in order to accommodate the Canadian gas; and (2) it failed to attribute to Northern Transportation any of the costs of transporting gas from its United States source to Ogden, Iowa, which the Commission alleged was necessary under its rolled-in-costs system of determining rates.

While it may be true that Northern would have to invest $14,000,000 to handle the Canadian gas, Northern also claimed that by utilizing the Canadian gas in Minnesota it would save an additional expenditure of $29,000,000 which was otherwise necessary to meet the Minnesota market demand with gas from United States sources. Since this claimed saving was not disputed by the Commission, it seems that Northern would in fact experience [60] a $15,000,000 saving in investment costs. [42]

As for allocating to Northern Transportation part of the transportation cost incurred by Northern in transporting the gas to Ogden, Iowa, this would not detract from the overall savings of petitioners' project. True, it would effect a rise in the costs of the Northern Transportation project which would be reflected in higher rates for its customers. But such a shift in costs would produce a corresponding decrease in costs allocable to Northern, thereby permitting lower rates for its customers. Since the public interest which the Commission is obliged to consider includes all natural [61] gas resources and consumers, this overall saving should have been treated as a beneficial aspect of petitioners' exchange-displacement project. [43]

The second aspect of the cost analysis which is faulty relates to the Commission's justification of the cost estimates of the joint venture. The staff's minimum [44] [63] [*976] [62] adjustments brought the total cost estimates for the joint venture project to $214,000,000 from the $211,000,000 estimated by the joint venture. $5,000,000 was

---

[42] The staff of the Commission, while recognizing many other drawbacks to petitioners' proposal, concluded:

> "Northern Natural, by including in its application a means whereby its customers could profit through an avoidance of construction costs, has injected that single instance in the combined applications which contemplates a positive benefit to United States consumers. * * *"

[43] The Commission contends that it would be fallacious reasoning to recognize this saving because "the Commission * * * would be burdened with the impossible task of determining to what service or customers the cost of any particular new facility should be attributed." We reject this contention. First, petitioners' claimed savings do not require such an allocation; rather, they merely ask the Commission to recognize a total saving, irrespective of whether it is enjoyed by the customers of Northern or Northern Transportation. Second, the "impossible task" of allocating the costs of a common service between petitioners is precisely what the Commission performed to defeat petitioners' proposals.

[44] The staff prefaced its adjustments with this statement:

> "* * * These adjustments were made only where the record fully supported the new figures. When certain cost estimates were the subject of contradictory statements, as between those of witnesses for Great Lakes and those of Northern Natural, the staff utilized the Great Lakes figures. * * *" added by the staff to reflect the cost of installing 36-inch pipe. [45] Great Lakes never made a detailed study of the costs of laying 36-inch pipe; rather its study related to 30-inch pipe and the costs so computed were later increased by a factor of 1.135, thereby adding 13.5 per cent to the costs arrived at for 30-inch pipe. The Commission staff, relying on a 1965 report of the Commission, said that "actual industry experience indicates a differential, between 30- and 36-inch laying costs, ranging from 32 to 39 percent." By using the minimum 32 per cent differential, the staff estimated the installation costs for Great Lakes to be $5,000,000 more than was estimated by the joint venture.

The Commission rejected this adjustment by its staff, saying that "the Great Lakes estimate * * * was not only substantiated by the testimony of Mr. David Williams, Jr., of the Williams Brothers Construction Co., but that company offered to complete the major construction effort within the Great Lakes estimate." Careful review of Mr. Williams' testimony in the joint appendix does not reveal any testimony attempting to justify a 13.5 per cent adjustment for raising cost figures to obtain an approximation of the costs of installing 36-inch pipe. Nor were we able to discover any "offer" by Williams to complete the Great Lakes project within his estimates. [46] The closest he came to making an "offer" was the following conditional statement:

> "Q. Does Williams Brothers intend to submit a bid to Great Lakes should they get certificated? A. Well, it depends upon the prior commitments that we may have. * * * We would be prepared to submit a proposal for the work [64] in 1967 -- that is, the remaining eight hundred-some-odd miles -- within our estimate, with possibly the contingency that applies strictly to the construction alone. * * * I doubt if we would submit on individual sections."

This statement does not foreclose Williams from declining to bid for the work altogether or, if a bid is made, from adjusting his costs; it is not an offer to complete the job within the previous cost estimates. We do not mean to suggest that the Commission could not have accepted a lower adjustment factor than was indicated by its 1965 study, but only that it was imprudent to do so for the reasons it has advanced.

Thus we believe that the Commission did not have sufficient evidence to accept the Great Lakes cost estimate in its entirety, and that the estimated cost saving of petitioners' proposal has not been adequately explored.

III

The final question raised [65] by petitioners is whether the corporate structure of Great Lakes, which gives each owner a veto power over the principal actions of the corporation, renders Great Lakes incapable of discharging its responsibilities as a regulated natural gas company. We find this contention without merit. As the Commission has noted, in most instances there would be a sufficient community of interest between [*977] the parties so that an agreement could be reached on policy issues. And in those few instances in which agreement would not be reached, the arbitration provisions of the corporate agreement seem sufficient to resolve any deadlocks. See Ringling v. Ringling Bros. -- Barnum & Bailey Com. Shows, 29 Del. Ch. 610, 53 A.2d 441, 447 (1947).

IV

To conclude, we find that the Commission failed to apply proper standards to determine relevant antitrust policy and consequently ignored significant anticompetitive effects of the joint venture. We therefore remand this case for further consideration in accord with this opinion. On reconsideration the Commission should weigh the foreseeable gains from limited competition along with other economic, social and political factors [66] encompassed within the "public interest" concept. [47] Furthermore, unless it is determined that other considerations, such as gas quality,

---

[45] Certain adjustments were made which were favorable to the joint venture so that the total upward adjustment was only $3,000,000.

[46] He did say that his firm would be willing to construct the Mackinac Straits crossing for the amount of his estimate.

[47] We note in passing that the Commission attached significant weight to the national security interests promoted by having a United States company participate in the management of the Great Lakes pipeline. Recognizing that in any event the supply for this pipeline will be controlled solely by Canadian interests and that Great Lakes will be a Delaware corporation subject to greater expansibility and convenience afforded by a new line running directly from western Canada through the upper Great Lakes region to eastern Canada, outweigh any cost advantages of an exchange-displacement project, then the Commission must also reconsider those elements of its cost analysis which we have found to be unsupported by sufficient evidence.

[67] In remanding this case, we are fully aware of the pressures under which the Commission was working. But, as Mr. Justice Holmes once noted, cases such as this often result in "bad law" because they "exercise a kind of hydraulic pressure which makes what previously was clear seem doubtful, and before which even well settled principles of law will bend." Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 400-401, 24 S. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904) (dissent). The judiciary and administrative agencies must strive to resist such pressures.

Remanded.

End of Document

Commission regulation, we find it less than obvious how national security is advanced. If the Commission again chooses to rely on this factor, the reasons should be explained more fully.

[Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp.]

Supreme Court of California

August 28, 1968

L. A. No. 29499

Reporter

69 Cal. 2d 305 *; 444 P.2d 481 ; 70 Cal. Rptr. 849 ; 1968 Cal. LEXIS 242 *; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,557

[*] CHICAGO TITLE INSURANCE COMPANY et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants, v. GREAT WESTERN FINANCIAL CORPORATION et al., Defendants and Respondents

Prior History: [1] APPEAL from an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County dismissing an action for unfair trade practices and combinations in restraint in trade after demurrers to fourth amended complaint were sustained without leave to amend. Shirley M. Hufstedler, Judge.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

conspiracy, allegations, antitrust, counts, cause of action, appellants', title company, Cartwright Act, damages, restraint of trade, title insurer, title insurance, constitutes, demurrers, policies, boycott, title policy, Sherman Act, conspired, general demurrer, escrow company, combinations, monopoly, cases, special demurrer, overt act, accomplished, customers, commerce, rebate

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Demurrers

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN1[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Demurrers

The court on appeal will not consider the sufficiency of a superseded complaint where plaintiff has amended it after demurrer sustained.

---

[*] Reporter's Note: This case was previously entitled, "Southern California Title Company et al. v. Great Western Financial Corporation et al."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The California law of antitrust, commonly known as the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700- 16800, is patterned upon the federal Sherman Act and both have their roots in the common law; hence federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable with respect to the Cartwright Act. In 1961 California incorporated in essence also § 3 of that federal legislation known as the Clayton Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §16727, which goes beyond common law and the Sherman Act to inhibit trade restraints at their inception, and federal interpretations thereof are similarly persuasive.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Within the present Sherman Act there is no place for a doctrine of intra-enterprise conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

There is substantial justification for intercorporate divisions and affiliated corporations to do business with one another so long as their very corporate existence and structure do not violate the antitrust laws per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

The gist of an action charging civil conspiracy is not the conspiracy but the damages suffered. A conspiracy, in and of itself, however atrocious, does not give rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage. The conspiracy may be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relations of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

To state a cause of action for conspiracy, the complaint must allege (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts. General allegations of agreement have been held sufficient and the conspiracy averment has even been held unnecessary, providing the unlawful acts or civil wrongs are otherwise sufficiently alleged. Significantly, however, the activities condemned by the antitrust law are contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce. Such contracts, combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce cannot be alleged generally in the words of the statute but the facts must be set forth which indicate the existence of such contracts, combinations or conspiracies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

While, in a criminal prosecution against persons for maintaining a trust or combination in restraint of commerce or trade, the gist of the offense is in the formation and maintenance of such trust or combination, and the fact of the existence of the combination for the purpose of doing some prohibited act is all that need be proved to support and sustain the charge, yet, in a civil action for damages based upon the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700- 16800, the California anti-trust statute, it is incumbent upon the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust or combination but also to allege and prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination. General allegations of the existence and purpose of the conspiracy are insufficient and appellants must allege specific overt acts in furtherance thereof.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN8[] Intentional Interference, Defenses

An action for interference with prospective business advantage lies on common law principles where the right to pursue a lawful business is intentionally interfered with either by unlawful means, or by means otherwise lawful when there is lack of sufficient justification, but only if it appears that the business advantage would otherwise have been realized. One with a financial interest in the business of another is privileged however, so long as he does not employ improper means but acts merely to protect his financial interest or promote the other's welfare, to induce the other not to enter a business relationship with a third party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

HN9[] Standing, Sherman Act

Private individuals, businesses or corporations have, in the absence of express statutory authority, no standing to enforce such regulatory statutes such as the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. §§ 16700- 16800. The Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17040- 17051, however, follows federal policy which expressly contemplates private civil litigation based upon statutes regulating antitrust and unfair trade practices, including illegitimate pricing practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Creditors & Debtors

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

The term "tying-in" contract has been applied judicially to those agreements whereby the seller or lessor of patented, or unpatented, equipment requires the purchaser or lessee to use only those unpatented accessory items manufactured or sold by the seller or lessor. A tying arrangement may be defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. A lending institution, however, has been traditionally entitled to require for its protection and as a condition of making the loan, a specific type of title policy from a particular source; the debtor-purchaser is free to obtain a policy to protect his equity from whatever source he chooses, though most frequently he relies upon the lender's policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Where complainants are unsuccessful in establishing an action for conduct which may tend to create a monopoly, they are a fortiori doomed to failure with respect to the full blown conduct they must allege to come within acts proscribed by statutes patterned on the Sherman Act. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Defects of Form

HN12[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Defects of Form

Defendants in an antitrust suit are entitled to know what acts constitute the alleged violations so that the time and expense involved in conducting an investigation and pursuing discovery may be reasonably limited, for the complaint might otherwise be construed as a blanket license to indulge in interrogatories, depositions, and motions to produce ad infinitum, ad nauseam.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Defects of Form

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Demurrers

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN13[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Defects of Form

Leave to amend further is properly denied when plaintiff fails to amend to correct defects on the basis of which special demurrers to a previous complaint were sustained, or as directed by the court when sustaining such demurrers.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Reversible Errors

HN14[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Abuse of discretion by the trial court is not shown where it is not indicated as to the manner in which it is proposed to amend nor the nature of the proposed amendment to pleadings.

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes
CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS HEADNOTES

CA(1)[] (1)

Pleading—Amendment—Effect—As Superseding Pleading.

--A court, on appeal, will not consider the sufficiency of a superseded complaint where the plaintiff has amended it after demurrer is sustained.

CA(2)[] (2)

Appeal—Determination—When Court Will Affirm.

--Unless at least one cause of action is clearly stated in a complaint, an appellate court will sustain an order of dismissal where the court below has sustained a general demurrer to the complaint and denied leave to amend after representation by plaintiff's counsel that no further facts could be alleged.

CA(3)[] (3)

Id.—Review—Scope—Demurrer.

--On appeal from an order of dismissal after the trial court has sustained general demurrers to the complaint, the appellate court will determine only whether plaintiffs state a cause of action, not whether they might have been able to do so.

CA(4)[] (4)

Id.—Determination—When Court Will Affirm.

--In granting an order of dismissal after sustaining general demurrers to a complaint alleging unfair trade practices and combinations in restraint of trade, and denying leave to amend, the trial court must be held, on appeal, not to have abused its discretion, where the complaint, evolved over a period of more than two years of argument through law and motion, was presented to the appellate court without a showing by brief that plaintiff could or would be willing to amend further, and where the pleadings were not susceptible to the construction that might have entitled plaintiffs either to injunctive relief or to damages.

CA(5)[] (5)

Monopolies—Under Cartwright Act: Sherman Act.

--The California antitrust law, commonly known as the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700-16800) is patterned upon the federal Sherman Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1-7), both having their roots in the common law; federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable with respect to the Cartwright Act.

CA(6)[] (6)

Id.—Under Cartwright Act.

--California has incorporated in essence, under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727, section 3 of the federal Clayton Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 12-27) which goes beyond common law and the Sherman Act to inhibit trade restraints at their inception, and federal interpretations of such section are persuasive.

CA(7)[] (7)

Id.—Particular Agreements and Combinations—Sherman Act.

--In the context of the present Sherman Act, there is substantial justification for intercorporate divisions and affiliated corporations doing business with one another so long as their very corporate existence and structure do not violate the antitrust laws per se.

CA(8)[] (8)

Conspiracy—When Action Will Lie—Damage as Gist of Action.

--A conspiracy, in and of itself, however atrocious, does not give rise to a cause of action. The gist of an action charging civil conspiracy is not the conspiracy itself but the damages suffered.

CA(9)[] (9)

Id.—Significance of Conspiracy—Liability of Parties.

--The advantage to the pleader in charging a conspiracy is to implicate all participating in the common design and thus fasten liability on him who agreed to the plan to commit the wrong as well as on him who actually carried it out.

CA(10)[] (10)

Id.—Evidence.

--A conspiracy may be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relations of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances.

CA(11)[] (11)

Id.—Pleading.

--To state a cause of action for civil conspiracy, the complaint may generally allege the formation and operation of the conspiracy, but must sufficiently allege the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and the damage resulting from such act or acts.

CA(12)[] (12)

Monopolies—Under Cartwright Act—Pleading and Proof.

--Activities condemned by the antitrust law are contracts, combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce, and in a civil action for damages based on the California antitrust statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16750), it is incumbent on the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust or combination, but also to allege and prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination.

CA(13a)[] (13a) CA(13b)[] (13b)

Conspiracy—Pleading: Interference—With Contract Relations: With Trade.

--Allegations to the general effect that one defendant corporation formed a second corporation at the instance of a third corporation in order to divert business from plaintiffs, and that a fourth corporation had prevailed on two other corporations to send their business to the third corporation which did business with yet another corporation, to plaintiffs' damage, were insufficient to constitute causes of action for conspiracy to interfere with plaintiffs' contractual relationships and prospective business advantages, where the conspiracy itself was insufficiently stated, and where, as to purported averments of specific overt acts, there was no allegation that plaintiffs had a contract with anyone which was breached as the result of the activities of defendants, or any of them, or that there was any interference by unlawful means.

CA(14)[] (14)

Interference—With Trade.

--One with a financial interest in the business of another is privileged to induce the other not to enter a business relationship with a third party, so long as he does not employ improper means but acts merely to protect his financial interest or promote the other's welfare.

CA(15)[] (15)

Escrows—Regulation of Escrow-holder Business.

--The owners of a corporate escrow company are authorized by statute to incorporate a separate title company which may then receive from the title insurer with which it does business a portion of the posted premium in exchange for its search and abstract services (Ins. Code, § 12396 et seq).

CA(16)[] (16)

Monopolies—Under Cartwright Act—Remedies of Individuals.

--While private individuals, businesses or corporations have in the absence of express authority no standing to enforce regulatory statutes, the Cartwright Act follows federal policy which expressly contemplates private civil litigation based on statutes regulating antitrust and unfair trade practices, including illegitimate pricing practices (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17040-17051).

CA(17)[] (17)

Id.—Under Cartwright Act: Insurance—Corporations—Regulation.

--The common law and the Cartwright Act which once constituted the protection of the public against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade have been expressly superseded and contravened by the specific provisions of the Insurance Code.

CA(18)[] (18)

Id.—Under Cartwright Act—Remedies of Individuals—Pleading.

--The pleading of a cause of action charging a title insurance company with transmitting secret rebates to an escrow company and based on a statute aimed at preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045), was defective, where it failed to allege facts from which a court might properly infer that prices charged differed from customer to customer.

CA(19)[] (19)

Insurance—Agents and Brokers—Unlawful Rebates.

--A court is not the appropriate initial arbiter of factors involved in insurance costs, and thus a cause of action was not stated by alleging that a title insurance company, by transmitting secret rebates to an escrow company, engaged in discriminatory pricing in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17043, 17049.

CA(20)[] (20)

Id.—Agents and Brokers—Unlawful Rebates.

--The statutory framework regulating title insurance specifically contemplates a division of fees between title insurers and title companies which shall be proper unless the method used renders such fee divisions illegal (Ins. Code, §§ 12412, 12404.5, 12405.7), and a complaint was insufficient, where, although it implied that an escrow company acted as agent for real property owners with whom title insurers and title companies were prohibited from splitting fees, and that because a title company was controlled by identical interests of the escrow company the receipt of a title policy from an interrelated title insurance company constituted an illegal rebate, it was not clear from the facts alleged that the discount rendered would or should be considered illegal by the insurance commissioner, or that the practice of extending secret rebates or engaging in an unreasonably low or discriminatory pricing policy was followed by the defendants or any of them.

CA(21)[] (21)

Monopolies—Under Cartwright Act—Agreements and Combinations Prohibited: Pleading.

--Vertical distribution agreements are contemplated by the Insurance Code, and vertical integration, as such without more, cannot be held violative of the Sherman Act; thus, a complaint alleging that the operations of defendant title insurance companies in association with their financial holding companies constituted a boycott of plaintiff title insurance company in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17046, was insufficient, where it failed to state that defendant companies or their superior interests had agreed on or accomplished by threat or violent means their alleged aim to coerce third parties not to deal with plaintiff.

CA(22a)[] (22a) CA(22b)[] (22b)

Id.—Under Cartwright Act—Pleading.

--A complaint by a title insurance company that the operations of defendant title insurance companies in association with their financial holding companies constituted exclusive sales agreements and "tying-in" contracts substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727) was insufficient, where it failed to state facts from which it might be inferred that defendants controlled the title insurance market in their county or that they could substantially exclude plaintiff from such market or limit the availability of title insurance to the public.

CA(23)[] (23)

Words and Phrases—"Tying Arrangement."

--A tying arrangement may be defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier.

CA(24)[] (24)

Monopolies—Under Cartwright Act—Pleading.

--Where allegations in a complaint were insufficient to establish a cause of action for conduct tending to create a monopoly (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727), the same allegations were a fortiori insufficient to support a cause of action for conduct creating a trust or combination in restraint of trade proscribed by statutes patterned on the Sherman Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720).

CA(25a)[] (25a) CA(25b)[] (25b)

Pleading—Demurrer to Complaint—Amendment After Demurrer Sustained—Refusal to Amend.

--In an action seeking injunctive relief and damages for unfair trade practices and combinations in restraint of trade, leave to amend the complaint further was properly denied, and there was no abuse of discretion in ordering a dismissal, where, in spite of special demurrers being sustained on the grounds that each count was ambiguous, unintelligible and uncertain, and that certain counts either united or failed to state separately the alleged causes of action, plaintiffs continued to deal solely in broad generalities, legal conclusions and unsupported speculation, and at no time showed that they were willing or even able to cure the defects specified.

CA(26)[] (26)

Id.—Demurrer to Complaint—Matters Not Admitted.

--A demurrer does not admit contentions, deductions or conclusions of facts or law which may be alleged in a complaint.

Counsel: Tremaine & Shenk and Jerrold A. Fadem for Plaintiffs and Appellants.

Hastings & Lasker, Edward Lasker, Milton Davis, McKenna & Fitting, Les Weinstein, Jones & Maupin, James C. Maupin, Milo V. Olson, H. Bradley Jones, Adams, Duque & Hazeltine, Lawrence T. Lydick, and Richard W. Luesebrink for Defendants and Respondents.

Thomas C. Lynch, Attorney General, Wallace Howland, Assistant Attorney General, Robert E. Murphy, Michael I. Spiegel and Harold J. Tomin, Deputy Attorneys General, as Amici Curiae.

Judges: In Bank. Sullivan, J. Traynor, C. J., McComb, J., Peters, J., Tobriner, J., and Burke, J., concurred. Mosk, J., dissents.

Opinion by: SULLIVAN

Opinion

[*310] [484] [852] In this action seeking injunctive relief and damages for unfair trade practices and combinations in restraint of trade, plaintiffs appeal from an order of dismissal entered after the court sustained without leave to amend [*2] defendants' several demurrers to plaintiffs' fourth amended complaint and granted defendants' motions to dismiss as to portions of said complaint.

The fourth amended complaint contains 11 counts and 78 paragraphs. Like its predecessors it has fallen to five separate general demurrers, each filed by a group of defendants jointly. Unlike the orders sustaining the previous demurrers, the last demurrers were sustained without leave to amend, the court noting in some instances that counsel for plaintiffs had represented that they could add nothing to the fourth amended complaint. Special demurrers, filed with the general demurrers in all cases, were not ruled upon by the court. Motions to dismiss all or portions of the complaint were variously granted in whole or in part as to defendants designated individually or by groups. [1]

[3] [*311] [485] [853] After decision by the Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division One, which affirmed the order of dismissal, this court on its own motion granted a hearing to give further study to the problems presented. After such study, we have concluded that the Court of Appeal has correctly disposed of the

[1] The "fourth amended complaint" was amended by plaintiffs prior to attack thereon. As denoted herein, the "fourth amended complaint" is the fourth amended complaint as amended. The general demurrers were sustained and motions to strike granted as to various groups of defendants as parenthetically indicated: (1) Great Western Financial Corporation, Great Western Savings and Loan Association and 25 individual escrow companies referred to herein as Liberty Escrow (general demurrer sustained without leave to amend as to each count alleged, motion to strike complaint granted); (2) Sherwood Escrow Co., and Summit Title Company (general demurrer sustained without leave to amend as to each count alleged upon representations that no further facts could be added, motion to strike granted as to 10 specifications and denied as to 5 specifications); (3) American Title Company (general demurrer sustained without leave to amend as to each count alleged); (4) Security Title Insurance Company and Financial Corp. of America (demurrer of Financial Corp. sustained without leave to amend, general demurrer of Security Title Insurance sustained without leave to amend as to each count alleged upon representations that no further facts can be added, motion to strike granted as to 17 of 78 paragraphs); (5) Lehman Brothers (general demurrer sustained without leave to amend as to each count, motion to strike granted).

cause. Accordingly the opinion of the Court of Appeal, authored by Justice Fourt and concurred in by Presiding Justice Wood and Justice McCoy, is adopted (with some minor deletions and additional discussions of our own) as and for the opinion of this court. Such portion of the opinion (with appropriate deletions and additions as indicated) is as follows: [2]

[4] CA(1)[] (1) We confine our attention herein to the most recently filed fourth amended complaint since "HN1[] The court on appeal will not consider the sufficiency of a superseded complaint where the plaintiff has amended it after demurrer sustained." (Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., 129 Cal.App.2d 844, 852 [278 P.2d 63, 282 P.2d 991].) We are, moreover, not concerned with the grounds for special demurrer urged upon the trial court since the general demurrer was [*312] sustained without leave to amend and the complaint was stricken upon appellants' representation that no further facts could be alleged. [[3]] CA(2)[] (2) We shall consider primarily the merits of that decision and, unless at least one cause [486] [854] of action is clearly stated, sustain the order of dismissal. (Southall v. Security Title Ins. etc. Co., 112 Cal.App.2d 321, 323 [246 P.2d 74]; Morris v. National Federation of the Blind, 192 Cal.App.2d 162, 164 [13 Cal.Rptr. 336].) CA(3)[] (3) We are constrained to determine only whether appellants state a cause of action, not whether they might have been able to do so. (Lemoge Elec. v. County of San Mateo, 46 Cal.2d 659, 664 [297 P.2d 638]; [*5] Levinson v. Bank of America, 126 Cal.App.2d 122, 125 [271 P.2d 632].) CA(4)[] (4) The unverified fourth amended complaint, evolved over a period of more than two years of argument through law and motion, is presented to us without showing by brief that appellants could or would be willing to amend further. We conclude that the court did not, by the action [*313] taken, abuse its discretion since the pleadings are not susceptible of a construction that might entitle appellants either to injunctive relief or to damages.

---

[2] Brackets together, in this manner [] without enclosing material, are used to indicate deletions from the opinion of the Court of Appeal; brackets enclosing material (other than editor's added parallel citations) are, unless otherwise indicated, used to denote insertions or additions by this court. We thus avoid the extension of quotation marks within quotation marks, which would be incident to the use of such conventional punctuation, and at the same time accurately indicate the matter quoted. In so doing, we adhere to a method of adoption employed by us in the past. (People v. Lyons (1956) 47 Cal.2d 311, 314, fn. 1 [303 P.2d 329]; Simmons v. Civil Service Emp. Ins. Co. (1962) 57 Cal.2d 381, 383, fn. 1 [19 Cal.Rptr. 662, 369 P.2d 262]; Eye Dog Foundation v. State Board of Guide Dogs for the Blind (1967) 67 Cal.2d 536, 540, fn. 1 [63 Cal.Rptr. 21, 432 P.2d 717]; Smith v. Anderson (1967) 67 Cal.2d 635, 637, fn. 1 [63 Cal.Rptr. 391, 433 P.2d 183]; Continental Baking Co. v. Katz (1968) 68 Cal.2d 512, 517, fn. 3 [67 Cal.Rptr. 761, 439 P.2d 889].)

[3] On the record presented we are unable to evaluate the motions to dismiss granted by the trial court as to various defendants. Our examination of the record available persuades us that in major part the motions were granted on the ground that plaintiffs had consistently failed to allege factual matters with the particularity required to sustain a cause of action under the Cartwright Act and other acts on which plaintiffs relied. Accordingly, motions to dismiss all or portions of plaintiffs' fourth amended complaint were granted as to various defendants on grounds which appear to be related to those for sustaining the general demurrers. Although the instant record does not fully advise us of matters identical to those in Lavine v. Jessup (1957) 48 Cal.2d 611 [311 P.2d 8], plaintiffs assert that a "duplicate situation" exists. The following observations from that case are pertinent here: "This case presents an unusual situation in that the court simultaneously sustained general demurrers without leave to amend and granted motions to strike the complaint as sham and to dismiss the action. The motions were not supported by affidavits setting up any extrinsic matters and obviously were made upon the assumption that the complaint failed to state a cause of action and was merely repetitious of prior complaints which had been ruled insufficient. Defendants thus made their challenge solely on the fact of the pleadings, and it seems clear that the questions presented by the motions were identically the same as those presented by the demurrers, i.e., did the complaint state a cause of action and, if not, could the defects be cured by amendment. The normal method of resolving such issues in favor of a defendant is by ruling upon a demurrer and thereafter rendering a judgment based upon the ruling. It is, of course, unnecessary for the court, in addition, to grant a motion to dismiss. As we have seen, the court subsequently signed and filed a judgment of dismissal which, after reciting that the demurrers had been sustained and the motions had been granted, adjudged that the action be dismissed." (48 Cal.2d at p. 614.) As indicated, the court equated the Lavine order granting the motion to dismiss with the order sustaining the general demurrer.

[For the foregoing reasons we do not pass upon the merits of the motions to dismiss or the propriety of the orders thereon as raising independent issues.]

[6] Appellants attempt by their complaint to impose upon respondents treble damages for asserted violations of the antitrust, price discrimination and unfair trade practices sections of the Business and Professions Code, and also accuse respondents of the common law tort of interference with advantageous business or contractual relations. The issues as framed by appellants' brief are (1) whether parties allegedly damaged by the wrongdoing of competitors in violation of the subject statutes are entitled to the civil remedies of injunction and/or indemnity, and (2) whether the allegedly injured parties are entitled to damages from certain competitors who, by a conspiracy to provide rebates, intentionally induce a prime customer to transfer its business to the wrongdoers. We must determine, more particularly, whether the superior court has jurisdiction to entertain an action based upon appellants' theories, or any of them, and, if so, whether appellants have stated a cause of action against any of the various named defendants. The latter finding, which is determinative, is in the negative.

The complaint alleges that Lehman Brothers, an investment firm and a partnership, owns a major [*7] or controlling interest in Great Western Financial Corporation (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Great Western) and in Financial Corporation of America (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Financial) both of which are financial holding companies. Great Western, in turn, owns Great Western Savings and Loan (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Great Western S&L) and a group of 25 individually named escrow companies hereinafter referred to collectively as Liberty. Financial owns title insurer Security Title Insurance Company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Security); Financial and Great Western together own American Title Company (sometimes hereinafter referred to as American). All of these interrelated businesses are named as defendants together with two other companies operating under the same, but distinct and independent, ownership known as Summit Title Company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Summit) and Sherwood Escrow Company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Sherwood).

[*314] The complaint further alleges that appellants are corporations, each qualified to do business in California as an "underwritten title company." The "underwritten title company" [*8] (hereinafter sometimes called "title company") is described by code as a "person engaged in the business of preparing title searches, title examinations, certificates or abstracts of title upon the basis of which a title insurer regularly writes title policies . . . ." (Ins. Code, § 12402.) Title insurance, which is a customary incident of practically every [487] [855] California real estate transaction, may be sold either by a title insurer or a title company, and both are regulated by the Insurance Commissioner, must be licensed, meet certain minimum capital requirements, submit to examination and audit, and may have licenses seized or revoked for financial instability or other regulatory infractions. (Ins. Code, §§ 12396 and 12411.) The title insurer is entitled to perform the search and abstract functions, as well as to issue the policy. The title company, which performs only search and abstract work, may engage in the escrow business within statutory limitations. It is specifically contemplated that the title company shall contract to do the preliminary work for a title insurer and then distribute the policy of insurance, the risk of which is underwritten by the [*9] title insurer, in return for an appropriate division of fees. (Ins. Code, § 12412.)

Appellant title companies, therefore, compete directly with both Summit and American in Los Angeles County. All three either must do business with or compete with Security, and it is common knowledge that all compete with the long dominant Title Insurance and Trust Company and every other concern qualified to transact title business in this county.

It is appellants' theory that all respondents, including the powerful Lehman Brothers investment banking company, have conspired under the impetus of common interest to violate statutory prohibitions and intentionally interfere with appellants' business to their financial damage. Appellants contend that by virtue of this combination respondents, all and variously, have interfered with their business relationships, violated the California law of antitrust and unfair trade practices, and the Insurance Code. In appellants' words, they charge that defendants "conspired to pay an illegal rebate to lure away customers of the Plaintiffs, and to boycott the Plaintiffs, along with a battery of other acts forbidden by statute." It is the thrust of these allegations [*10] that [*315] the acts of the various respondents constitute a fraud on appellants which justifies and, indeed, compels the piercing of corporate veils to disclose an identity of interests between the Lehman-owned companies on the one hand and the Sherwood and Summit shareholders on the other. The facts, however, are sparse and incomplete.

CA(5)[] (5) HN2[] The California law of antitrust, commonly known as the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700- 16800) is patterned upon the federal Sherman Act and both have their roots in the common law; hence federal cases interpreting the Sherman Act are applicable with respect to the Cartwright Act. (Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp., 152 Cal.App.2d 418 [313 P.2d 936]; Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 844.) CA(6)[] (6) In 1961 California incorporated in essence also section 3 of that federal legislation known as the Clayton Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727) which goes beyond common law and the Sherman Act to inhibit trade restraints at their inception, and federal interpretations thereof are similarly persuasive. (Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp., supra.) We are persuaded by California and federal authorities [*11] that appellants' vague and conclusionary pleadings fail to allege facts which might reasonably be construed to reveal a wrongful combination.

Indeed, as to Lehman Brothers, the only ultimate facts alleged are that Lehman Brothers is a partnership, that it owns stock in Great Western and Financial and that at times it has had two or more directors concurrently on the boards of Great Western and Financial, respectively. Thus, Lehman Brothers stands at the investment apex of a pyramid of control which can be reached only by means of factual allegations of conduct on the part of related defendants from which a conspiracy or combination with the intent to jeopardize appellants' business may be inferred. The same analysis applies to Great Western and Financial in their passive administrative role as holding companies, [488] [856] Great Western S & L as a lender relatively remote from the scene, and even Security which, as title insurer, merely issues title policies which constitute the subject matter of appellants' claims.

The corporate interrelationship alleged is not a wrong per se. CA(7)[] (7) HN3[] "Within the present Sherman Act there is no place for a doctrine of intra-enterprise conspiracy. [*12] No logical stopping point exists short of giving a prosecutor carte blanche to attack virtually all multicorporate enterprises." McQuade, [*316] Conspiracy, Multicorporate Enterprises, and Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 1955, 41 Va.L.Rev. 183, 216.) HN4[] There is substantial justification for intercorporate divisions and affiliated corporations to do business with one another so long as their very corporate existence and structure do not violate the antitrust laws per se (United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 338 U.S. 338 [94 L.Ed. 150, 70 S.Ct. 177]; United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 523, 527 [92 L.Ed. 1533, 1551, 1554, 68 S.Ct. 1107].) Since the mere existence of the Lehman power complex is not the evil under attack, nor its proper subject, we must require that appellants allege [] [the specific facts] constituting unfair competition or a conspiracy to engage in such unfair practices and the [] nature of the damages inflicted.

CA(8)[] (8) "HN5[] The gist of an action charging civil conspiracy is not the conspiracy but the damages suffered. [Citations.] It is the long established rule that a conspiracy, in and of itself, however atrocious, does not give [*13] rise to a cause of action unless a civil wrong has been committed resulting in damage. [Citations.] . . . CA(9)[] (9) The advantage to the pleader in charging a conspiracy is to implicate all participating in the common design and thus fasten liability on him who agreed to the plan to commit the wrong as well as on him who actually carried it out. [Citations.] CA(10)[] (10) The conspiracy 'may be inferred from the nature of the acts done, the relations of the parties, the interests of the alleged conspirators, and other circumstances.' [Citations.]

CA(11)[] (11) "HN6[] To state a cause of action for conspiracy, the complaint must allege (1) the formation and operation of the conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts. [Citations.]" (Wise v. Southern Pac. Co., 223 Cal.App.2d 50, 64-65 [35 Cal.Rptr. 652].) General allegations of agreement have been held sufficient (Farr v. Bramblett, 132 Cal.App.2d 36, 47 [281 P.2d 372]), and the conspiracy averment has even been held unnecessary, providing the unlawful acts or civil wrongs are otherwise sufficiently alleged. (*Hege v. Worthington, Park & Worthington, 209 Cal.App.2d 670, [14] 678 [26 Cal.Rptr. 132].) CA(12)[] (12) Significantly, however, "[the] activities condemned by the anti-trust law are contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of . . . trade or commerce. Such contracts, combinations or conspiracies in restraint of . . . trade or commerce cannot be alleged generally in the words of [*317] the statute but the facts must be set forth which indicate the existence of such contracts, combinations or conspiracies." (Westor Theatres v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., 41 F.Supp. 757, 762.) [General allegations of a conspiracy, without a statement of the facts constituting the conspiracy, its object and accomplishment in the restraint of trade in civil actions are held by the federal courts to be but allegations of legal conclusions, insufficient to constitute a cause of action under the federal statutes. (Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola, Inc. (1952) 200 F.2d 911, 913, 914; Floyd v. Gage (1951) 192 F.2d 137, 138-139; Feddersen Motors v. Ward (1950) 180 F.2d 519, 522; Beegle v. Thomson (1943) 138 F.2d 875, 880; Black & Yates v. Mahogany Assn. (1941) 129 F.2d 227, 231-232 [148 A.L.R. 841]; Encore [*15] Stores, Inc. v. May Dept. Stores Co. (1958) 164 F.Supp. 82, 84-85; Leonard v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. (1942) 42 F.Supp. 369, 370; Bader v. Zurich General Acc. & Liab. Ins. Co. (1952) 12 F.R.D. 437, 438-439; 1 Toulmin, Anti-trust [489] [857] Laws (1949), § 2019, p. 850; 1968 Supplement, § 20.7, pp. 42, 43, 44.)]

Appellants themselves concede that they have not alleged facts but contend by reference to Business and Professions Code, section 16756 [4] and a criminal decision (People v. Sacramento Butchers' etc. Assn., 12 Cal.App. 471, 481 [107 P. 712]), that general allegations of statutory violations are sufficient. The California and federal authorities, however, are contrary where plaintiffs base a civil action for damages upon antitrust legislation. HN7[] "While, in a criminal prosecution against persons for maintaining a trust or combination in restraint of commerce or trade, the gist of the offense is in the formation and maintenance of such trust or combination, and the fact of the existence of the combination for the purpose of doing some prohibited act is all that need be proved to support and sustain the charge, yet, in a civil action [*16] for damages based upon our anti-trust statute, it is incumbent upon the complaining party, not only to allege and prove the existence of an unlawful trust or combination but also to allege and [*318] prove that his business or property has been injured by the very fact of the existence and prosecution of such unlawful trust or combination." (Munter v. Eastman Kodak Co., 28 Cal.App. 660, 664-665 [153 P. 737].) General allegations of the existence and purpose of the conspiracy are insufficient and appellants must allege specific overt acts in furtherance thereof. "Conceding the formation of a conspiracy is charged, having for its object a common design and purpose, still we find no statement in the bill as to any specific overt acts done by defendants in pursuance of that design and purpose." (Davitt v. American Bakers' Union, 124 Cal. 99, 101 [56 P. 775].)

[17] CA(13a)[] (13a) Since the conspiracy allegations are insufficient in and of themselves, we turn to the purported averments of specific acts contained in the complaint and find them similarly lacking. The first count is directed primarily against Summit and Sherwood (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Sherwood group), but the opening paragraphs allege appellants' corporate existence, Lehman Brothers' ownership of certain respondents and the conspiracy of those defendants to carry out the acts therein described for the purpose of unlawfully restraining trade and destroying competitors. There follow allegations that title insurance policies are customarily procured to insure buyer or lender upon the "transfer and encumbrancing" of real property; that title insurance business in Los Angeles County originates primarily with lenders or buyers of real property and those who perform escrow services; that Liberty is first and Sherwood second in volume of title activity generated by independent escrow companies; and that "[all] title companies and title insurance companies . . . compete for title insurance orders from lenders and escrow companies in Los Angeles County." Appellants then aver further [*18] that after American "approached" Sherwood, its stockholders incorporated Summit and competition has been lessened because all of Sherwood's title insurance business now goes to Summit; that Security furnishes Summit "all search data needed to insure title" and that Summit issues only Security title policies; that Summit pays one-half the posted rates for such policies to Security but charges Sherwood and its customers the full rates; that Summit performs no substantial function in the issuance of title policies and was created to "'mask' the illegality of the acts herein described." Finally, it is [490] [858] alleged that all the above was [*319] accomplished "with the intent and with the result of interfering with [appellants'] business relationship with Sherwood," that actual damages resulted, and that Security and American currently seek others "with whom to extend the scope of the kinds of activity described herein" which will further injure appellants so that "the remedy at law will thereby be inadequate." The second count merely incorporates the first and alleges that appellants used to receive most of Sherwood's business

---

[4] The following footnote appears in the opinion of the Court of Appeal as footnote No. 1.] Section 16756 of the Business and Professions Code provides as follows:

"[] Statements declared sufficient. In any indictment, information or complaint for any offense named in this chapter, it is sufficient to state the purpose or effects of the trust or combination, and that the accused is a member of, acted with, or in pursuance of it, or aided or assisted in carrying out its purposes, without giving its name or description, or how, when and where it was created."

but that now it all goes to Summit [*19] "which issues only Security's policies." The gravamen of these two counts is that Sherwood formed Summit at the instance of American in order to divert to Summit and Security business which formerly went to appellants.

Each of these counts fails to state a cause of action for interference with contractual relationships because there is no allegation alleged that appellants had a contract with anyone which was breached as a result of the activities of defendants or any of them. (Allen v. Powell, 248 Cal.App.2d 502, 505-506 [56 Cal.Rptr. 715].)

Appellants similarly fail in either count to state HN8[] an action for interference with prospective business advantage which will lie on common law principles where the right to pursue a lawful business is intentionally interfered with either by unlawful means, or by means otherwise lawful when there is lack of sufficient justification (Willis v. Santa Ana etc. Hospital Assn., 58 Cal.2d 806 [26 Cal.Rptr. 640, 376 P.2d 568]), but only if it appears that the business advantage would otherwise have been realized. (Perati v. Atkinson, 213 Cal.App.2d 472 [28 Cal.Rptr. 898].) CA(14)[] (14) One with a financial interest in the business [*20] of another is privileged however, so long as he does not employ improper means but acts merely to protect his financial interest or promote the other's welfare, to induce the other not to enter a business relationship with a third party. (Rest., Torts, §§ 769, 770, 771.) The conduct of Sherwood and Summit is patently justified.

Appellants compete with Summit; Sherwood which owns Summit naturally sends it business there. Summit buys policies from Security and since appellants are not title insurers the business Security receives in this manner presumably does them no damage. CA(15)[] (15) We reiterate that the owners of a corporate escrow company, such as Sherwood, are authorized by statute to incorporate a separate title company which may then receive from the title insurer with which it does business [*320] a portion of the posted premium in exchange for its search and abstract services. (Ins. Code, § 12396 et seq.)

CA(13b)[] (13b) While it is difficult to isolate from the complaint the specific elements of any given legal action and virtually impossible to determine from each count the nature of the purported cause of action, a second category of circumstances is described in count eight. The gist [*21] of this count is that Great Western Financial has prevailed upon Great Western Savings & Loan and the Liberty escrow companies to send their title business to American, which buys policies from Security, and this has damaged appellants. This count realleges the Lehman ownership and control of various defendants, the existence of their conspiracy, and the nature of the title insurance business in Los Angeles County. Thereafter, the complaint alleges generally that savings and loan associations are substantial sources of title business resulting from purchase money loans, refinancing, and the financing of their direct sales of real estate; that buyers of real property frequently select the title company before they know who their lender will be; that when Great Western makes purchase money loans it refuses appellants' policies and favors Security or American; that for this reason escrow officers, when uncertain as to who the lender ultimately may be, are reluctant to deal with appellants; that escrow officers influence buyers who have no preferences; that the Liberty escrow companies, which formerly requested title policies from appellants, now conspire with Great Western to refuse [*22] to deal with appellants; [491] [859] that these companies instead divert business to American; that as a result, only in exceptional cases when the buyer demands appellants' services and the loan is not by Great Western, do appellants receive this business; and that Great Western prohibits the use of appellants' policies when it refinances or engages in direct sales of real estate. Count eight further alleges that "competition within Los Angeles County has thereby been substantially reduced"; that "refusal to accept the policies of . . . [appellants] constitutes a boycott," that "this was done" with the intent and result of interfering with appellants' business relationship with Liberty, and this "concerted refusal" violates Business and Professions Code section 17046. Count nine incorporates all allegations of counts one and eight and further alleges that "until the acts of Financial" appellants received Liberty's title business which now goes to Security.

[*321] Insofar as appellants attempt to state an action against the Lehman-controlled defendants for interference with contract, they fail, by reference to authorities previously cited, because they allege [*23] no prior existing contract. The action for interference with prospective business advantage fails because they do not disclose wherein it is wrongful for Great Western, Great Western S&L, or Liberty to send business to American, any more than it is wrongful for Sherwood to purchase policies through Summit, since appellants had no reasonable assurance that their advantageous relations with Liberty would otherwise continue. They relate no facts from which we might find it improper for Summit or American to purchase title policies from Security. Since Great Western and Financial allegedly own various interests in Great Western S&L, Security, American and Liberty, it is merely prudent business practice for the other companies to request title policies from American and Security just as we heretofore established that the common ownership of Sherwood and Summit justifies a similar business practice. (Rest., Torts, §§ 769, 770, 771, and cases cited, supra.)

While Security, Summit and American all compete with appellants for title business, only Summit and American compete on precisely the same business plane and, by purchasing Security's title insurance, these companies do not inhibit [*24] appellants' access to the market. Appellants fail to join or allege the identity of the title insurer or insurers with whom they do business, and since they do not complain that they have been denied similar privileges or that Security refuses to sell them policies on terms equivalent to those tendered American and Summit, we must assume that appellants are not deprived of a competitive commodity. The only respondents, therefore, who might be accused of directly diverting business from appellants are Sherwood and Liberty, while the other defendants can be involved only by way of conspiracy. Appellants allude to no reasonable basis for assuming they enjoyed any prior right to do business with the customers of these escrow companies. Since the overt acts alleged are inadequate to establish an action for business interference against Sherwood and Liberty, respectively, the conspiracy allegations also fail.

The remaining counts incorporate successively the principal allegations of the first two counts, and final counts ten and eleven incorporate those of counts eight and nine as well. [*322] These miscellaneous counts charge defendants with various allegedly unfair competitive [*25] business practices. All except count seven, which deals with unlawful rebates (Ins. Code, § 12404), refer to the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700-16800). Count three charges that Security transmitted to Sherwood through Summit a secret rebate (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045). Count four suggests Security and Summit engaged in unreasonably low or discriminatory pricing (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17043 and 17049). Counts five and ten charge defendants, acting through the Sherwood and [492] [860] Great Western groups, respectively, with tying-in contracts which lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727). Counts six and eight charge a boycott or concerted refusal to deal with appellants on the parts of the Sherwood and the Great Western groups, respectively (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17046). Count eleven incorporates the allegations of all prior counts and alleges that thus defendants entered an illegal combination (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720) with the intention to (1) restrict commerce, (2) prevent competition in the sale of a commodity, (3) establish prices which prevent free competition in Los Angeles County, and (4) reduce prices [*26] to Sherwood by one-half.

CA(16)[] (16) The Cartwright Act, as previously mentioned, is similar in spirit and substance to that federal legislation encompassed by the Sherman (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1-7) and Clayton Acts (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 12-27). HN9[] Private individuals, businesses or corporations have, in the absence of express statutory authority, no standing to enforce such regulatory statutes. (Cf. Show Management v. Hearst Publishing Co., 196 Cal.App.2d 606, 612-616 [16 Cal.Rptr. 731]; West Coast Poultry Co. v. Glasner, 231 Cal.App.2d 747 [42 Cal.Rptr. 297]; Hudson v. Craft, 33 Cal.2d 654 [204 P.2d 1, 7 A.L.R.2d 696].) The Cartwright Act however follows federal policy which expressly contemplates private civil litigation based upon statutes regulating antitrust and unfair trade practices, including illegitimate pricing practices. (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17040- 17051.)

CA(17)[] (17) These statutes and the common law which once constituted the "protection of the public against combinations in restraint of the insurance trade" (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal.2d 34, 45 [172 P.2d 867]) are now expressly superseded and contravened by the specific provisions of the Insurance [*27] Code. Counts three (secret rebate), four (discriminatory pricing) and seven (unlawful rebate) [*323] clearly concern the regulation of rates charged by title insurers and title companies, and rate regulation has traditionally commanded administrative expertise applied to controlled industries. (Ins. Code, §§ 12404- 12412; County of Placer v. Aetna Cas. etc. Co., 50 Cal.2d 182 [323 P.2d 753]; Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Moroney, 28 Cal.2d 344 [170 P.2d 3].) CA(18)[] (18) Count three, for instance, is based upon a statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17045) aimed at preventing a distributor from discriminating between customers, but fails to allege facts from which a court might properly infer that the prices charged by Security or Summit differ from customer to customer, and is thus defective. (Federal Automotive Services v. Lane Buick Co., 204 Cal.App.2d 689 [22 Cal.Rptr. 603].) CA(19)[] (19) Count four, presumably based on the same facts, charges that the discount constitutes a sale of title insurance below cost which is an infraction only if done "for the purpose of injuring competitors" (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17043, 17049), but a court is not the appropriate initial [*28] arbiter of factors involved in insurance costs. CA(20)[] (20) Count seven implies that Sherwood (an escrow company) acts as "agent" for real property owners with whom title insurers and title companies are prohibited from splitting fees and that because Summit is controlled by identical interests, the receipt of a title policy from Security at a discount constitutes an illegal rebate (Ins. Code, § 12404) to Sherwood. The statutory framework, however, specifically contemplates a division of fees between title insurers and title companies which shall be proper unless the method used constitutes such fee divisions "illegal." (Ins. Code, §§ 12412, 12404.5, 12405.7.) It is not clear from the facts alleged that the discount rendered would or should be considered illegal by the insurance commissioner, or that the practice of extending secret rebates, or engaging in unreasonably low or discriminatory pricing policy is followed by the defendants, or any of them. []

[The] factual allegations, as illustrated, fail in each instance to support the charge. Just as the earlier counts state [493] [861] facts insufficient to establish proscribed conduct on the parts of the alleged actors and [*29] thus cannot reach their purported conspirators, so the final counts charging antitrust infringements fall for similar reasons. []

CA(21)[] (21) Appellants contend in counts six and eight that the conduct of the Sherwood and Great Western groups, respectively, [*324] infringes Business and Professions Code section 17046. The attempted application of this section to the facts evidences appellants' misinterpretation of the nature of a boycott. The allegation of boycott cannot be supported in this instance because everyone has the unrestricted right to select customers and sources of supply. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17042; A.B.C. Distributing Co. v. Distillers Distributing Corp., 154 Cal.App.2d 175, 189 [316 P.2d 71].) There is not, and could not be an allegation that it is unreasonable for Sherwood to buy through Summit, or for Great Western Financial to require its subsidiaries in the savings and loan or escrow business to engage the services of the title company in which it likewise has an interest. Not only are vertical distribution agreements in this instance contemplated by the Insurance Code, but "[it] seems clear to us that vertical integration, as such without more, [*30] cannot be held violative of the Sherman Act." (United States v. Columbia Steel Co., supra, 334 U.S. 495, 525 [92 L.Ed. 1533, 1553, 68 S.Ct. 1107].) Neither do exclusive dealing arrangements constitute boycotts (Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 844), which consist, instead, of horizontal alliances between persons at the same level of distribution, who agree not to deal with some third person (Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207 [3 L.Ed.2d 741, 79 S.Ct. 705]; Eastern States etc. Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600 [58 L.Ed. 1490, 34 S.Ct. 951, L.R.A. 1915A 788].) [] [No impropriety is alleged in the agreement of Sherwood to purchase from Summit and of Liberty to purchase from American.] An agreement between and among Sherwood and Liberty not to deal with appellants might, under proper circumstances, constitute a boycott, but there is no allegation that these parties or their superior interests agreed or accomplished by threat or violent means their alleged aim to coerce third parties not to deal with appellants. [(Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17046.)] [] Once again, the claimed statutory [*31] infraction is vague, conclusionary, and factually unsupported by the complaint.

[We have heretofore concluded that because plaintiffs' vague and conclusionary pleadings fail to allege sufficient facts, the complaint fails to state a violation of the Cartwright Act based on conduct, including boycotts, prohibited thereunder. (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16720, 16727.)] CA(22a)[] (22a) While the boycott statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17046) referred to in count eight makes it unlawful to use threats, [*325] intimidation or boycott to effect a violation of the unfair trade practices laws, the complaint implies rather that respondents used the boycott to effect a restraint of trade (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727). Counts five and ten allege that the facts of count one as to the activities of Sherwood and Summit, and of count eight with respect to the Lehman enterprises, respectively, constitute exclusive sales agreements and "tying-in" contracts which "may . . . substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. . . . (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727.)

Again the allegations are inadequate. HN10[] The term "tying-in" contract has been applied judicially to those agreements whereby the seller or [*32] lessor of patented, or unpatented, equipment requires the purchaser or lessee to use only those unpatented accessory items manufactured or sold by the seller or lessor. (International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 [92 L.Ed. 20, 68 S.Ct. 12]; International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U.S. 131 [80 L.Ed. 1085, 56 S.Ct. 701].)

CA(23)[] (23) "[A] tying arrangement may be defined as an agreement by a party to sell [494] [862] one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." (Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6 [2 L.Ed.2d 545, 549-550, 78 S.Ct. 514].) A lending institution, however, has been traditionally entitled to require for its protection and as a condition of making the loan, a specific type of title policy from a particular source; the debtor-purchaser is free to obtain a policy to protect his equity from whatever source he chooses, though most frequently he relies upon the lender's policy.

CA(22b)[] (22b) Appellants fail to define the market by subject matter, total volume, proportion [*33] controlled by defendants, availability to appellants of the subject matter or a competing subject matter, and availability to the public of the subject matter or a competing subject matter. (Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469 [84 L.Ed. 1311, 60 S.Ct. 982, 128 A.L.R. 1044]; Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 844, 851-852.) They fail to state facts from which it may be inferred that respondents control the title insurance market in Los Angeles County and can substantially exclude appellants from such market or limit the availability of title insurance to the public, and these matters are [*326] essential to antitrust actions in which either monopoly or the attempt to create a monopoly in restraint of trade is charged. (A.B.C. Distributing Co. v. Distillers Distributing Corp., supra, 154 Cal.App.2d 175, 180, 190; Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp., supra, 152 Cal.App.2d 418, 443-444; Rolley. Inc., v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 844.) We find no allegation that Security enjoys such a dominant position in the title industry that it can or does tie the sale of any other commodity to [*34] the policies it sells. Presumably this the appellants cannot allege in view of the dominant position long occupied by Title Insurance and Trust Company in Los Angeles County, of which we may take judicial notice. Hence, there can be no unlawful tying agreement, and appellants do not allege that their rights to purchase freely on the open market have been thus infringed.

CA(24)[] (24) Finally, count eleven in grand finale incorporates all prior counts and concludes that by reason of everything so stated respondents have formed a trust or combination in restraint of trade (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720), again a mere legal conclusion drawn from generalities. (Abouaf v. J. D. & A. B. Spreckels Co., 26 F.Supp. 830, 834; Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., 72 F.2d 885, 887.) HN11[] Where complainants are unsuccessful in establishing an action for conduct which "may . . . tend to create a monopoly" (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16727), they are a fortiori doomed to failure with respect to the full blown conduct they must allege to come within acts proscribed by statutes patterned on the Sherman Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720); Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 335 [*35] [5 L.Ed.2d 580, 591, 81 S.Ct. 623]; cf. Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics, Inc., supra, 129 Cal.App.2d 844.) There is a dangerous vice inherent in the complaint with which we are herein presented because it is ambiguous and investigatory in nature. HN12[] Respondents are entitled to know [] what acts constitute the alleged violations so that the time and expense involved in conducting an investigation and pursuing discovery may be reasonably limited, for the complaint might otherwise be construed as a blanket license to indulge in interrogatories, depositions, and motions to produce ad infinitum, ad nauseam. (Beegle v. Thompson, supra, 138 F.2d 875; Leonard v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra, 42 F.Supp. 369; See: Yankwich, Leon R., "Short Cuts" in Long Cases, 13 F.R.D. 41, and Committee Report of the Judicial Conference of the United States, "Procedure in Antitrust [*327] and Other Protracted Cases" 13 F.R.D. 62.) This count which fails because of inadequate allegations of [495] [863] monopoly or monopoly power and lack of factual allegations of specific conduct in furtherance of a conspiracy or combination, is therefore insufficient as [*36] to each of the defendants charged with conspiracy.

CA(25a)[] (25a) Appellants, by their conduct, demonstrate that they are unable or unwilling to amend to cure the defects specified in various special demurrers to their complaint which were sustained on similar grounds designated by two different trial judges. These include the ground that certain counts unite and fail to separately state several causes of action, that certain counts improperly unite several causes of action, and that each count is ambiguous, unintelligible and uncertain. We find each of these grounds well taken. HN13[] Leave to amend further is properly denied when a plaintiff fails to amend to correct defects on the basis of which special demurrers to a previous complaint were sustained, or as directed by the court when sustaining such demurrers. (Aitken v. Southwest Finance Corp., 131 Cal.App. 95, 106 [20 P.2d 1000]; Spencer v. Crocker First Nat. Bank, 86 Cal.App.2d 397, 401 [194 P.2d 775].)

By irresponsible pleading containing unrestrained and unverified allegations, appellants attempt to secure the right by discovery to explore at random and at enormous expense to respondents, several large and important businesses [*37] and their relationships with one another, namely, the savings and loan, escrow, title insurance and title businesses. The method used by appellants has been aptly characterized by Judge Kaus as a "shotgun" technique where plaintiffs deal solely in broad generalities and otherwise indulge in factual and legal conclusions, unsupported speculation and argumentative allegations. (Lesperance v. North American Aviation, Inc., 217 Cal.App.2d 336, 342-343 [31 Cal.Rptr. 873].) CA(26)[] (26) "A demurrer does not . . . admit contentions, deductions or conclusions of facts or law which may be alleged in a complaint [citation]." (Marin v. Jacuzzi, 224 Cal.App.2d 549, 552 [36 Cal.Rptr. 880].) As earlier signified by Judge Kaus, where the complaint is thus devoid of facts to support its legal conclusions of conspiracy "it is just as possible that the difficulty of the pleader arises from the fact that the events and relationships which would give rise to a cause of action never took place, as it is that they did take place but that the defendants did not tell plaintiffs about them" and the conclusion is inescapable [*328] that "[the] failure to make a good pleading probably arises [*38] in a lack of facts rather than in the fault of the pleader." (Dukes v. Kellogg, 127 Cal. 563, 565 [60 P. 44].)

CA(25b)[] (25b) "HN14[] Abuse of discretion [by the trial court] is not shown where it is not indicated as to the manner in which it is proposed to amend nor the nature of the proposed amendment. [Citations.] Neither before the trial court nor before this court has plaintiff indicated the nature of a proposed amendment or the manner in which he would amend his complaint. Plaintiff has therefore failed to establish reversible error in the dismissal of the action. . . ." (Starbird v. Lane, 203 Cal.App.2d 247, 262 [21 Cal.Rptr. 280].) []

The order is affirmed.

Dissent by: MOSK

Dissent

MOSK, J. I dissent.

This case should not be decided on the pleadings; plaintiffs are entitled to a day in court in which to prove, if they can, the economic loss they allegedly suffered and continue to suffer as a result of the purported illegal acts of defendants. The court below, and now a majority of this court, impose upon plaintiffs a pleading straitjacket neither compelled by precedent nor consistent with the design of antitrust statutes.

After two demurrers were sustained, plaintiffs [*39] filed a third amended complaint [496] [864] in which they comprehensively described the conduct of the defendants asserted to be unlawful. The complaint in essence charged that all of the activities were part of a single combination designed to injure plaintiffs. The trial court again sustained a demurrer, on the special ground that several causes of action were not separately stated.

Attempting to comply with the trial court's directions, plaintiffs divided their fourth amended complaint into 11 counts, and it is those counts which the trial court and the Court of Appeal dissected on general demurrer with the deft touch of a scalpel ordinarily reserved for a special demurrer or motion to strike. An order of dismissal was subsequently entered, and this appeal follows.

It is elementary that if a complaint can withstand a general demurrer, an order sustaining demurrers without leave to amend is erroneous even though special demurrers should be sustained and motions to strike granted. (*Wennerholm v. [329] Stanford University School of Medicine (1942) 20 Cal.2d 713, 718-719 [128 P.2d 522, 141

A.L.R. 1358].) I am convinced the complaint here states a cause [*40] of action under the Cartwright Act and that regardless of infirmities in form revealed by the special demurrers, the general demurrer should not have been sustained without leave to amend. Even if all others failed, counts 1, 5, 10 and 11 effectively charge violations of the Cartwright Act when the complaint is viewed pursuant to the rules of liberal pleading permissible thereunder.

The Cartwright Act, generally proscribing combinations in restraint of trade, is patterned after the federal Sherman and Clayton Acts, and California decisions consistently rely on federal decisions in interpreting our act. (People v. Building Maintenance etc. Assn. (1953) 41 Cal.2d 719, 724 et seq. [264 P.2d 31]; Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters (1946) 29 Cal.2d 34, 43 et seq. [172 P.2d 867]; People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn. (1965) 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 232 [47 Cal.Rptr. 570]; People v. Inlaid Bid Depository (1965) 233 Cal.App.2d 851, 860-861 [44 Cal.Rptr. 206]; Shasta Douglas Oil Co. v. Work (1963) 212 Cal.App.2d 618, 625 [28 Cal.Rptr. 190].) Although Cartwright is couched in terms of prohibited conduct with criminal sanctions and [*41] the Attorney General is charged with its public enforcement, private enforcement is also authorized, deemed in the public interest, and encouraged. (Radovich v. National Football League (1957) 352 U.S. 445, 453-454 [1 L.Ed.2d 456, 462-463, 77 S.Ct. 390]; Lawlor v. National Screen Service (1955) 349 U.S. 322, 329 [99 L.Ed. 1122, 1128, 75 S.Ct. 865]; Mach-Tronics, Inc. v. Zirpoli (9th Cir. 1963) 316 F.2d 820, 828.) Thus in Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co. (1947) 330 U.S. 743, 751-752 [91 L.Ed. 1219, 1225-1226, 67 S.Ct. 1015]. Justice Jackson emphasized the desirability of private enforcement of antitrust laws: "Where the interests of individuals or private groups or those who bear a special relation to the prohibition of a statute are identical with the public interest in having a statute enforced, it is not uncommon to permit them to invoke sanctions. This stimulates one set of private interest to combat transgressions by another without resort to governmental enforcement agencies. Such remedies have the advantage of putting back of such statutes a strong and reliable motive for enforcement which relieves the Government of cost of enforcement. [*42] . . . It is clear Congress intended to use private self-interest as a means of enforcement and to arm injured persons with private [*330] means to retribution when it gave to any injured party a private cause of action in which his damages are to be made good threefold, with costs of suit and reasonable attorney's fees." As in the federal acts, the California statute provides that a private party injured because of an antitrust violation may recover treble damages and attorney fees, as well as costs. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16750, subd. (a).)

Pleading poses no unique problems under the Cartwright Act. By its express provisions, violations under the act may be [497] [865] pleaded in general terms: "In any indictment, information or complaint for any offense named in this chapter, it is sufficient to state the purpose or effects of the trust or combination, and that the accused is a member of, acted with, or in pursuance of it, or aided or assisted in carrying out its purposes, without giving its name or description, or how, when and where it was created." (Italics added.) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16756.) In reviewing the sufficiency of an information in People [*43] v. Sacramento Butchers' etc. Assn. (1910) 12 Cal.App. 471, 484-485 [107 P. 712], the court said: "While in no manner vitiating the information, there was, in our opinion, no real necessity for alleging the acts constituting the actual accomplishment of the object or purpose of the combination or conspiracy. They constitute mere probative facts, since the gist of the crime of conspiracy is in its formation for an unlawful purpose, . . . Therefore, the acts constituting the actual execution of the purpose of a criminal conspiracy are only evidence of the existence of such conspiracy, which is the ultimate fact to be proved in order to establish the wrongful act against which the statute inveighs." (See also United States v. Patten (1913) 226 U.S. 525 [57 L.Ed. 333, 33 S.Ct. 141, 44 L.R.A. N.S. 325].)

Although the code section does not qualify the word "complaint" as civil or criminal, defendants urge that the provisions for general pleading relate only to criminal charges and that one seeking treble damages in a civil action must allege with specificity the particular conduct constituting the claimed conspiracy in restraint of trade, the overt acts thereunder, and [*44] the precise nature of the damages resulting therefrom. Thus, it is asserted, the instant complaint fails to allege a violation of the Cartwright Act because it avers only generally that the defendants conspired with the intent of unlawfully restraining trade and competition, without describing with particularity or clarity facts which are [*331] descriptive of the claimed times, places, and other circumstances of the formation of the alleged illegal combinations, the role played therein by each defendant, or the specific overt acts committed in furtherance thereof.

I find no justification to hold that a private plaintiff, in seeking to assert an antitrust violation, must plead his cause with greater particularity than the state in an enforcement action. Although some earlier federal decisions held to a contrary view (Beegle v. Thomson (7th Cir. 1943) 138 F.2d 875, 881; Leonard v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. (W.D. Wis. 1942) 42 F.Supp. 369, 370-371; Westor Theatres v. Warner Bros. Pictures (D.N.J. 1941) 41 F.Supp. 757, 762), the more recent and prevailing federal cases hold that a private plaintiff need state no more than ultimate facts which, if true, would [*45] entitle him to recovery. (Niagara of Buffalo, Inc. v. Niagara Mfg. & Distributing Corp. (2d Cir. 1958) 262 F.2d 106, 107; New Home Appliance Center, Inc. v. Thompson (10th Cir. 1957) 250 F.2d 881, 883-884.) The question was considered in detail in Nagler v. Admiral Corp. (2d Cir. 1957) 248 F.2d 319. In rejecting the contention that an antitrust complaint must set out a detailed factual exposition, the court stated (at p. 325): "In testing whether this is a sufficient statement of claim upon which to base a lawsuit, we ought practically to consider the alternatives, both what can be expected and asked of antitrust plaintiffs and what can be accomplished by compulsive orders. Here seems to be the rock upon which attempts below to achieve more particularized pleading have definitely foundered; for the judges' directions double the bulk without increasing enlightenment, while they delay the cause and exhaust the time of several judges. . . ."

There is no basis for distinguishing between the nature of the prohibited conduct on the ground that the act is enforced in civil rather than criminal proceedings. The Sacramento Butchers case (1910) supra, *12 [46] Cal.App. 471, has been relied upon in support of the proposition in civil cases that "The gravamen of the offense [498] [866] against the Cartwright Act is the mere formation of the combination or conspiracy for the unlawful purpose of restraining trade. . . ." (Italics in original.) (People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn. (1965) supra, 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 238; cf. Alfred M. Lewis, Inc. v. Warehousemen etc. Local No. 542 (1958) 163 Cal.App.2d 771, 783-784 [330 P.2d 53].) It is clear that the precise nature of the combination or conspiracy need not be alleged [*332] or ultimately proved with particularity. "It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the statute condemns. It is not of importance whether the means used to accomplish the unlawful objective are in themselves lawful or unlawful." (American Tobacco Co. v. United States (1946) 328 U.S. 781, 809 [90 L.Ed. 1575, 1594, 66 S.Ct. 1125]; see also Eastern States Lbr. Assn. v. United States (1914) 234 U.S. 600, 614 [58 L.Ed. 1490, 1500, 34 S.Ct. 951, L.R.A. 1915A 788].) Federal decisions, like the state [*47] cases of Santa Clara Valley and Alfred M. Lewis, Inc., make it abundantly clear that the conspiracy alone constitutes the actionable conduct. (United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. (1940) 310 U.S. 150, 225, fn. 59 [84 L.Ed. 1129, 1168-1170, 60 S.Ct. 811].)

Defendant's contention that the complaint is insufficient because it fails to allege public injury resulting from the alleged restraints is not meritorious. "Congress [has] determined its own criteria of public harm and it [is] not for the courts to decide whether in an individual case injury [has] actually occurred. . . . Congress having thus prescribed the criteria of the prohibitions, the courts may not expand them. Therefore, to state a claim upon which relief can be granted . . . allegations adequate to show a violation and, in a private treble damage action, that plaintiff was damaged thereby are all the law requires." (Radiant Burners v. Peoples Gas Co. (1961) 364 U.S. 656, 660 [5 L.Ed.2d 358, 361, 81 S.Ct. 365].) A contention similar to that of defendants here was rejected in Klor's v. Broadway Hale Stores (1959) 359 U.S. 207, 213-214 [3 L.Ed.2d 741, 745-746, 79 S.Ct. 705], [*48] as follows: "Monopoly can as surely thrive by the elimination of such small businessmen, one at the time, as it can be driving them out in large groups. In recognition of this fact the Sherman Act has consistently been read to forbid all contracts and combinations which 'tend to create a monopoly,' whether 'the tendency is a creeping one' or 'one that proceeds at full gallop.' International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 396 [92 L.Ed. 20, 26, 68 S.Ct. 12]." (See also People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn. (1965) supra, 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 235; People v. Inland Bid Depository (1965) supra, 233 Cal.App.2d 851, 860.)

In requiring specificity of allegations, the majority are apparently adapting classic conspiracy and fraud concepts to the Cartwright Act. In so doing, they improvidently muddy [*333] the antitrust waters. While section 1 of the Sherman Act outlaws every "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy" in restraint of trade (15 U.S.C., § 1), the Cartwright Act makes no reference whatever to conspiracy. It outlaws, rather, every "trust" (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16726); and the term "trust" [*49] is defined as "a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons" for a number of specified purposes deemed by the Legislature to be detrimental to the economy of the state (Bus & Prof. Code, § 16720).

Unstudied use of the term "conspiracy" in numerous Cartwright Act pleadings (see, e.g., Willis v. Santa Ana etc. Hospital Assn. (1962) 58 Cal.2d 806, 808 [26 Cal.Rptr. 640, 376 P.2d 568]; People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn. (1965) supra, 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 227) may be the cause of misleading the defendants here and the courts below into insisting upon the pleading elements of an ordinary conspiracy charge in an antitrust complaint. Thus while [499] [867] such cases as Wise v. Southern Pac. Co. (1963) 223 Cal.App.2d 50, 65 [35 Cal.Rptr. 652], demand not merely a conspiracy but also a "civil wrong producing damage to the plaintiff," the United States Supreme Court has made it abundantly clear that in reality no such requirement exists in the antitrust field: "It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the [antitrust] statute condemns. It is not of importance [*50] whether the means used to accomplish the unlawful objective are in themselves lawful or unlawful. Acts done to give effect to the conspiracy may be in themselves wholly innocent acts. Yet, if they are part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy which the statute forbids, they come within its prohibition. . . ." (American Tobacco Co. v. United States (1946) 328 U.S. 781, 809 [90 L.Ed. 1575, 1594, 66 S.Ct. 1125].)

Such has always been the law of antitrust, in both public and private actions. Justice Day spoke for the Supreme Court to the same effect years ago in what is now the leading case on this question: "'An act harmless when done by one may become a public wrong when done by many acting in concert, for it then takes on the form of a conspiracy, and may be prohibited or punished if the result be hurtful to the public or to the individual against whom the concerted action is directed.'

[*334] "When the retailer goes beyond his personal right, and, conspiring and combining with others of like purpose, seeks to obstruct the free course of interstate trade and commerce . . . he exceeds his lawful rights, and such action brings [*51] him and those acting with him within the condemnation of the act of Congress. . ." (Eastern States Lbr. Assn. v. United States (1914) supra, 234 U.S. 600, 614 [58 L.Ed. 1490, 1500].)

Any act, be it legal or illegal, when done pursuant to an agreement or combination the purpose or effect of which is to restrain trade in violation of the statute, is an act upon which relief can be granted to a private plaintiff as well as to a public agency. (Simpson v. Union Oil Co. (1964) 377 U.S. 13 [12 L.Ed.2d 98, 84 S.Ct. 1051]; Lessig v. Tidewater Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1964) 327 F.2d 459, 466.)

The distinction which the courts below failed to grasp is that, regardless of any need to allege overt acts in stating a cause of action for conspiracy under other statutes (cf. Pen. Code, §§ 182, 184, 1104), there is no such requirement in alleging an actionable antitrust violation. Fully applicable to a combination violative of the Cartwright Act is this summary of significant characteristics of federal requirements: "And it is likewise well settled that conspiracies under the Sherman Act are not dependent upon an overt act other than the act of conspiring. [Citations.] [*52] It is the 'contract, combination . . . or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce' which § 1 of the Act strikes down, whether the concerted action be wholly nascent or abortive on the one hand, or successful on the other. [Citations.] And the amount of interstate or foreign trade involved is not material [citation] since § 1 of the Act brands as illegal the character of the restraint not the amount of commerce affected. [Citations.] In view of these considerations a conspiracy to fix prices violates § 1 of the Act though no overt act is shown, though it is not established that the conspirators had the means available for accomplishment of their objective, and though the conspiracy embraced but a part of the interstate or foreign commerce in the commodity." (United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. (1940) supra, 310 U.S. 150, fn. 59, at p. 225 [84 L.Ed. at p. 1169].)

California practice unquestionably conforms to the foregoing rule, as indicated in Alfred M. Lewis, Inc. v. Warehousemen etc. Local No. 542 (1958) supra, 163 Cal.App.2d 771, 783-784: [*335] "Under the Cartwright Act and similar antitrust [500] [868] legislation, [*53] the combination for a particular purpose constitutes the unlawful act. [Citations.] The prohibited combination comes into being through an agreement of two or more persons for the purpose of restraining trade or preventing competition. Conduct used to effect such an agreement may result in actionable damages or be the subject of an injunction, even though such conduct if not used to effect the agreement would be lawful."

In construing application of the federal Clayton Act, Justice Stone wrote in Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Co. v. Commissioners (1934) 291 U.S. 587, 607 [78 L.Ed. 1007, 1018, 54 S.Ct. 532] (dissenting opinion), "there must be a balance between the general and the particular. When the courts are faced with interpretation of the particular, administration breaks down and the manifest purpose of the legislature is defeated unless it is recognized that, surrounding granted powers, there must be a penumbra which will give scope for practical operation. In carrying such schemes into operation the function of courts is constructive, not destructive, to make them, wherever reasonably possible, effective agencies for law enforcement and not to destroy them."

For the [*54] foregoing reasons, and in order to provide an effective means for implementing the state Cartwright Act, neither a private plaintiff nor the state need plead a cause of action thereunder with the particularity required in a conspiracy or fraud action. (People v. Sacramento Butchers' etc. Assn. (1910) supra, 12 Cal.App. 471, 484-485.)

The instant complaint alleges in count 1, and incorporates into all the remaining counts, the following: "Defendants have jointly conspired to and in the execution of the goals of the conspiracy carried out the acts herein set forth with the intent and result of unlawfully restraining trade and competition by preventing [plaintiffs] from selling their title policies, with the intent and result of unlawfully injuring competitors and destroying competition and which constitute unfair methods of competition." While perhaps it could be phrased more artfully, this allegation, under settled rules of liberal construction (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters (1946) supra, 29 Cal.2d 34, 42) sufficiently states the "purpose or effects of the trust or combination," and avers that each defendant "is a member of, acted with, or in pursuance [*55] of" the combination. (Bus. & Prof. Code, [*336] § 16756.) Although the allegation may be conclusionary in nature, the inclusion of such conclusionary matters with ultimate facts is permissible in certain situations Burks v. Poppy Constr. Co. (1962) 57 Cal.2d 463, 473-474 [20 Cal.Rptr. 609, 370 P.2d 313]).

It thus appears that plaintiffs have stated a cause of action under the Cartwright Act, a cause which has been incorporated into each of the 11 counts. The complaint may be specially demurrable, but it states at least one cause of action beyond the reach of a general demurrer. The sustaining of the general demurrers without leave to amend was therefore error. (Wennerholm v. Stanford University School of Medicine (1942) supra, 20 Cal.2d 713, 718-719; Eustace v. Dechter (1938) 28 Cal.App.2d 706, 710-711 [83 P.2d 523].)

I would reverse the judgment with directions to the trial court to vacate the orders sustaining the demurrers and granting the motions to strike, to overrule the general demurrers, and to rule on the points presented by the special demurrers and the motions [*56] to strike.

End of Document

Premier Electrical Constr. Co. v. Miller-Davis Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 16, 1968

No. 68 C 407

Reporter

292 F. Supp. 213 *; 1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12560 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,710

Premier Electrical Construction Company , Plaintiff, v. Miller-Davis Company and St. Arnaud Electric Co. , Defendants bid, antitrust, treble damages, electrical, general contractor, res judicata, pari delicto, sub-contract, competitors, illegal scheme, allegations, illegality, pleadings

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

HN1[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

It is the facts in each case, not the theories, which are crucial in determining the applicability of res judicata.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN2[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

A litigant may not split his claim and have two trials on the same alleged breach of duty.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN3[] Pleading & Practice, Joinder of Claims & Remedies

A plaintiff must plead his entire case on all theories at one time.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

HN4[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

Nor will a change in parties necessarily affect the applicability of res judicata.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN5[] Preclusion of Judgments, Res Judicata

A new charge of conspiracy in a second suit brought by plaintiff against defendant was not sufficient to preclude the application of res judicata in the second case.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Comity

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN6[] Pleading & Practice, Joinder of Claims & Remedies

Concurrent duplicate litigation is no less undesirable than successive duplicate litigation. In either situation, a second suit violates principles of comity between judges, creates administrative inefficiencies in the federal courts, and imposes an unfair burden on the defendant. Thus, the public policies in favor of a single suit in a single controversy and against contentious litigation remain viable. The pendency of a prior action in the same jurisdiction, between the same parties, and arising out of the same transaction constitutes good grounds for abating the subsequent suit.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Public Contracts Law > Bids & Formation > Mutual Obligation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

Public Contracts Law > Bids & Formation > General Overview

HN7[] Defenses, Illegal Bargains

A bargain not to bid at any public competition for a contract, having as its primary object to stifle competition, is illegal. The falsification of a bid, in itself and by effectively excluding others from competition, stifles the unfettered operation of the market place. A restraint on price competition and on meaningful access to the market is illegal per se. Rigging competition on a public contract, whether done directly or indirectly, is simply a restraint of trade in violation of public policy and void.

Judges: [1] Marovitz, District Judge.

Opinion by: MAROVITZ

Opinion

[*215] Memorandum Opinion

MAROVITZ, District Judge.

This is a civil antitrust action in which plaintiffs seek to recover treble damages for injuries resulting from an alleged violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7, 15.

Plaintiff, Premier Electrical Construction Company and defendant St. Arnaud Electrical Company are direct corporate competitors engaged in the electrical construction business. Defendant Miller-Davis is in the general contracting business. On February 3, 1966, the Atomic Energy Commission sent invitations to various general contractors, including defendant Miller-Davis, to submit bids for an addition to the Argonne National Laboratory, Argonne, Illinois. The project was known as the Accelerator Improvement ZGS, FY-65 Meson Building Addition. In order to prepare their bids, the general contractors, including Miller-Davis, then sent invitations to various electrical sub-contractors, including Premier Electrical Construction Company, requesting bids on the electrical work to be performed on the Argonne project.

Plaintiff alleges that sometime between January 15, 1966, and March 3, 1966, a conspiracy [2] arose between Miller-Davis and St. Arnaud such that Miller-Davis would induce St. Arnaud's competitors, including plaintiff, to submit inflated bids to the competitors of Miller-Davis, thereby insuring a successful bid by Miller-Davis and a sub-contract for St. Arnaud. Plaintiff claims that on March 3, 1966, it submitted its bid by telephone to Miller-Davis, was advised that it was the low bidder and, assuming that Miller-Davis was awarded the prime contract, that it, Premier, would be awarded the electrical sub-contract on the condition that it would "protect" Miller-Davis by submitting artificially inflated bids to other general contractors.

In its complaint (para. 12), plaintiff acknowledges that it agreed to "protect" Miller-Davis if Miller-Davis would inform plaintiff of its receipt of a lower bid by a third party so that plaintiff could rebid to defendant's competitors. Miller-Davis did not advise plaintiff of any competitive bid on the electrical sub-contract. Plaintiff did submit high bids to general contractors other than Miller-Davis. The Atomic Energy Commission awarded the contract to Miller-Davis who then gave the sub-contract to defendant St. Arnaud.

On October [3] 13, 1966, in another District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, plaintiff filed a suit against Miller-Davis entitled Premier Electrical Construction Co. v. Miller-Davis Co., Civil Action No. 66 C 1850. Plaintiff's amended complaint in that case set forth basically the same facts alleged in the present suit, save for the purported involvement of St. Arnaud. The language of the amended complaint in the first suit is virtually identical to that recited in the instant issue, especially in those paragraphs which relate to the agreement to "protect" Miller-Davis. The original action sought $40,000 for breach of contract. Trial ended on March 27, 1968, and the case was taken under advisement. A decision is expected to be rendered shortly. [1] In the present complaint, filed March 4, 1968, plaintiff claims deprivation of profits amounting to $65,000 as its damages and seeks an award of treble damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15.

[1] Premier Electrical Construction Company v. Miller-Davis Company, 291 F. Supp. 295 (N.D. Ill. 1968).

[4] Defendant Miller-Davis has moved to dismiss the present suit on the grounds of res judicata and in pari delicto. Defendant St. Arnaud seeks a judgment on the pleadings based on the doctrine of in pari delicto. Defendants admit plaintiff's factual allegations regarding the contract and sub-contract negotiations [*216] for the limited purpose of making their motions.

Because its first suit is based on contract while the present case stems from an alleged violation of the Sherman Act, plaintiff suggests that the respective causes of action are "totally separate and distinct in every respect." (Brief at 3). This argument is not well taken. HN1[] It is the facts in each case, not the theories, which are crucial in determining the applicability of res judicata. Wolcott v. Hutchins, 245 F. Supp. 578 (S.D.N.Y. 1965), aff'd 365 F.2d 833 (2d Cir. 1966). Both of plaintiff's suits arise out of the same operative facts and disputed transactions the end result of which was the failure of plaintiff to secure the electrical sub-contract from Miller-Davis. The mere addition of a new, federal theory will not support new litigation.

The closest case in point to the one at bar is [5] Norman Tobacco & Candy Co. v. Gillette Safety Razor Co., 295 F.2d 362 (5th Cir. 1961). In that case as here, plaintiff first filed a contract action and later sought relief in a civil antitrust suit. Both cases were based on the same refusal of defendant to deal with the plaintiff. The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held the former case to be res judicata of the later one. The Court said at 363-364,

> "It is settled, contrary to appellant's contention, that HN2[] a litigant may not split his claim and have two trials on the same alleged breach of duty. Basically, Norman claimed the same 'right' in both suits - the right to purchase Gillette products directly from Gillette. The only wrong charged against Gillette was its refusal to continue to deal with Norman. We held in the contract case that Norman had not shown that Gillette wrongfully refused to deal with it. There, appellant relied upon the breach of Gillette's supposed contractual relationship as the basis of its claim. Here, appellant relies upon the breach of the antitrust laws as the basis for the alleged breach. But there was but one breach and one only and appellant has had its day in court and has lost. [6] It cannot litigate this same breach again. "

Plaintiff relies on Engelhardt v. Bell & Howell Co., 327 F.2d 30 (8th Cir. 1964) and Baltimore S.S. Co. v. Phillips, 274 U.S. 316, 71 L. Ed. 1069, 47 S. Ct. 600 (1927). In Engelhardt, however, a decision in an earlier suit under Missouri antitrust law was held to be res judicata in the later suit brought under federal antitrust statutes despite the incorporation of more specific allegations of interference in interstate commerce and a prayer for a different amount of damages. HN3[] A plaintiff must plead his entire case on all theories at one time. Baltimore S.S. Co. v. Phillips, 274 U.S. 316, 320, 71 L. Ed. 1069, 47 S. Ct. 600 (1927); Engelhardt v. Bell & Howell Co., 327 F.2d 30, 33 (8th Cir. 1964). This plaintiff has not done. In fact, Premier filed the present suit within a few weeks prior to the trial of its original suit against Miller-Davis.

HN4[] Nor will a change in parties necessarily affect the applicability of res judicata. See, e.g., Baltimore S.S. Co. v. Phillips, 274 U.S. 316, 71 L. Ed. 1069, 47 S. Ct. 600 (1927). In Koblitz v. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Co., 164 F. Supp. 367 (S.D.N.Y. 1958), the Court held that [7] HN5[] a new charge of conspiracy in a second suit brought by plaintiff against defendant was not sufficient to preclude the application of res judicata in the second case. The Court said, at 372,

> "Here the wrongs complained of, the harm to the plaintiff and the recovery sought are substantially identical. The same witnesses and the proof of the same facts would be necessary to establish the allegations of the prior complaint and would support both actions. * * *
> "To the extent, if at all, that the allegations of the present complaint are dissimilar to those in the prior action, all the facts now pleaded were known to the plaintiff and could have been presented in the first action."

[*217] As to defendant Miller-Davis, res judicata would be a good defense if there were a final judgment in the first suit. While a decision is expected in a few days, such a final judgment has not yet been handed down. However, HN6[] concurrent duplicate litigation is no less undesirable than successive duplicate litigation. In either situation, a second suit violates principles of comity between judges, creates administrative inefficiencies in the federal courts, and imposes an unfair burden [8] on the defendant. Eastern States Petroleum & Chemical Corp. v. Walker, 177 F. Supp. 328, 333 (S.D. Tex. 1959); Emerson Electric Manufacturing Co. v. Emerson Radio and Phonograph Co., 140 F. Supp. 588, 589 (D.N.J. 1956). Thus, the public policies in favor of a single suit in a single controversy and against contentious litigation remain viable. Asbury v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., 264 F. Supp. 437, 438 (D. Col. 1967); Paluchowska v. United States Lines Co., 93 F. Supp. 751, 752 (S.D.N.Y. 1950). The pendency of a prior action in the same jurisdiction, between the same parties, and arising out of the same transaction constitutes good grounds for abating the subsequent suit. Commerce Oil Refining Corp. v. Miner, 303 F.2d 125 (1st Cir. 1962). Consequently, the motion to dismiss of defendant Miller-Davis is granted.

Defendant St. Arnaud was not a party in the original action brought by Premier and may not now plead res judicata or take advantage of abatement. St. Arnaud's motion for judgment on the pleadings is based on the defense of illegality. Miller-Davis has adopted the arguments of St. Arnaud as additional support for its motion to dismiss. The Court is faced with two [9] questions: whether plaintiff's agreement with Miller-Davis is illegal and, if illegal, whether plaintiff is barred from recovery of treble damages in a civil antitrust suit.

Defendants claim that Premier is seeking to collect on an illegal bid-rigging agreement. Plaintiff, in his complaint, affirmatively pleaded that, as consideration for a promise of business, it agreed to "protect" Miller-Davis by submitting higher bids to other general contractors, but now suggests that such conduct is not illegal because the agreement was not between direct competitors. Premier even asserts that its agreement "could only promote competition between the various contractors removed itself from competition." (Brief at 9).

That Premier's conduct is illegal is clear. In accord with a secret agreement with one of the defendants, plaintiff presented artificially inflated bids to all general contractors who were competitors of Miller-Davis. By failing to submit the same low bid on the sub-contract to all general contractors, plaintiff intended to insure the success of one favored party. HN7[] "A bargain not to bid at . . . any public competition for a . . . contract, having as its primary object to stifle [10] competition, is illegal." Restatement, Contracts § 517 (1932). The falsification of a bid, in itself and by effectively excluding others from competition, stifled the unfettered operation of the market place. A restraint on price competition and on meaningful access to the market is illegal per se. United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 145-147, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940). Rigging competition on a public contract, whether done directly or indirectly, is simply a restraint of trade in violation of public policy and void. See generally, Corbin, Contracts § 1468 (1962).

Plaintiff attempts to avoid the impact of these clear rules, claiming that it was not a direct competitor with the other party to the protection agreement. However, the particular form taken by the agreement, whether price fixing or profit sharing, horizontal or vertical, is really immaterial. Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, [*218] 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959). [11] Thus, in Mechanical Contractors Bid Depository v. Christiansen, 352 F.2d 817 (10th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 918, 16 L. Ed. 2d 439, 86 S. Ct. 1365 (1966), it was held that foreclosure of a subcontractor's competitive bid to general contractor by repressive rules of a bid depository association was illegal.

Given, then, that plaintiff's conduct is illegal, may he nevertheless recover treble damages in a civil antitrust suit? Plaintiff submits that the recent Supreme Court decision in Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968), precludes defendants' use of the doctrine of in pari delicto, under which a court will not entertain a suit brought by a party in equal fault with the defendant(s). At first blush, plaintiff seems correct for Mr. Justice Black, in announcing the Court's decision, held "that the doctrine of in pari delicto, with its complex scope, contents, and effects, is not to be recognized as a defense to an antitrust action." 392 U.S. at 140.

A closer look at the opinion, however, suggests that the quoted statement neither deserves nor was intended to have universal application. The Court's [12] opinion rests on two pillars: one, mere participation in an illegal scheme is not a sufficiently serious wrong to warrant denial to plaintiff of his chance in court and, two, the public policy in favor of competition is furthered by allowing private suits for treble damages. The opinion stresses and must be read in light of the facts. In the Court's view, plaintiff's lack of initiative and commitment to the illegal scheme was crucial. Thus, "their (petitioner's) participation was not voluntary in any meaningful sense," "many of the clauses were quite clearly detrimental," "acquiescence was necessary," and "plaintiff did not aggressively support . . . the scheme." Rather, the arrangement was "formulated and carried out by others" and "thrust upon them" by defendants. 392 U.S. at 139-141. On these facts, Mr. Justice Black held that plaintiffs could maintain their action.

However, the Court refused to go farther, to extend its decision to cover cases involving a more tainted petitioner. Mr. Justice Black, at 140, said:

> "We need not decide, however, whether such truly complete involvement and participation in (a) monopolistic scheme could ever be a basis, wholly apart from [13] the idea of pari delicto, for barring a plaintiff's cause of action . . . ."

That the defense of illegality is still viable in civil antitrust actions is further supported by the other four opinions in the case. Mr. Justice White, in his concurring opinion, stated that a condition precedent to allowing a tainted plaintiff to proceed with a treble damages suit was that plaintiff's participation was coerced or thrust upon him. He cautioned, however, that a moving force "should not be rewarded for his efforts to further an unlawful price arrangement" and take from defendant treble damages. 392 U.S. at 145. The approach of Mr. Justice Fortas was similar for he said that a co-adventurer, one who "originated and insisted" upon the illegal scheme could not recover damages. 392 U.S. at 147-148, Mr. Justice Marshall would allow the defense of illegality against a plaintiff who "actively participated in the formulation and implementation" of the illegal scheme. 392 U.S. at 149. Justices Harlan and Stewart agree that in pari delicto has its place in antitrust cases. 392 U.S. at 153.

Thus, in each of the five opinions in the case, the door was left open for a limited application [14] of a defense of illegality in civil antitrust actions. The distinctions drawn throughout the various opinions are particularly relevant here. Premier is not a mere participant [*219] or unwilling victim of the transaction out of which this case arose. Rather, Premier was an originating, moving, active and aggressive party to the illegal bid-rigging scheme. There is no indication that the Supreme Court sought to protect a plaintiff so intensely involved in an illegal restraint on trade.

Moreover, it is difficult to see how allowing a suit for treble damages, under the facts in this case, would be consistent with the purposes of the antitrust laws, the second main rationale advanced by Mr. Justice Black for his decision in Perma Life. Discussing an example similar to the present case, Mr. Justice White noted, at 146:

> "To permit him a recovery may be a counter-deterrent. By assuring him illegal profits if the agreement in restraint of trade succeeds, and treble damages if it fails, it may encourage what the Act was designed to prevent."

Conversely, if allowing relief would be counterproductive, and possibly add an undesirable incentive to violate the law, denial [15] of relief to plaintiff, as the Supreme Court has recognized for many years will, more probably, discourage involvement in illegal schemes.

> "The more plainly parties understand that when they enter into contracts of this nature they place themselves outside the protection of the law . . . the less inclined will they be to enter into them. In that way the public secures the benefit of rigid adherence to the law." McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U.S. 639, 670, 43 L. Ed. 1117, 19 S. Ct. 839 (1899).

Plaintiff in this case initially violated the law in an attempt to secure a public contract. Having failed, it now seeks not just refuge, but reward in this court. We find no sanctuary in the Perma Life decision for a plaintiff like this. If ever a party was to be barred from recovering treble damages, it is Premier. While we sanction the defense of illegality, call it in pari delicto if you will, in these circumstances, it is not, of course, because of our approval of defendants' actions, but because the law will not enforce what is forbidden, and "will leave the parties as it finds them." McMullen v. Hoffman, 174 U.S. 639, 670, 43 L. Ed. 1117, 19 S. Ct. 839 (1899). Consequently, [16] plaintiff will not be permitted, having attempted to avoid the burdens, now to reap the benefits of the law. The respective motions of Miller-Davis and St. Arnaud to dismiss and for judgment on the pleadings are granted.

Rader v. Balfour

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

September 16, 1968.

No. 67 C 1118.

Reporter

1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12145 *; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,709

John C. Rader v. Lloyd G. Balfour, et al.

Core Terms

fraternities, suspended, diligence, insignia, Limitations, running of the statute, anti trust law, deposition, antitrust, monopoly, statute of limitations, Clayton Act, Federal Trade Commission Act, concealment, manufacture, fraudulent, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Defenses

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN1[] Clayton Act, Defenses

The statute of limitations applicable to antitrust actions is § 4B of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(b), which provides, any action to enforce any cause of action under §§ 15 or 15a of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(b).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

HN3[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Although fraudulent concealment of alleged anti-trust violations will suspend the running of the statute of limitations, tolling of the statute is not suspended where it is established that a plaintiff knew, or in the exercise of ordinary diligence, should have known of the alleged violation within the statutory period. Where lack of due diligence by the plaintiff in pursuing his claim is clearly shown on a motion for summary judgment, entry of summary judgment on the issue of statute of limitations is appropriate, notwithstanding the allegations of fraudulent concealment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(b).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN5[] Public Enforcement, US Federal Trade Commission Actions

The meaning of the term "antitrust laws" was not left to judicial interpretation, but was defined by Congress in § 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 12. The Federal Trade Commission Act is not one of the laws specified in Section 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN6[] Public Enforcement, US Federal Trade Commission Actions

A Federal Trade Commission proceeding brought solely to enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act will not suspend the running of the statute of limitations, under 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(b).

Opinion by: [*1] NAPOLI

Opinion

Memorandum Opinion

NAPOLI, D.J.: Plaintiff John C. Rader filed this action on June 28, 1967, seeking treble damages, pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 15), for injuries alleged to have been caused by alleged violation by defendants of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1 and 2). Named as defendants herein are Lloyd G. Balfour, 3 corporations owned or controlled by Balfour interests, and 152 college fraternities and sororities. Plaintiff alleges that the Balfour companies, which are engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing and selling insignia goods [1] in interstate commerce, have conspired among themselves and with the fraternity defendants, in order to limit and control the manufacture, distribution, and sale of insignia goods in Interstate Commerce; to regulate, control and increase the prices charged the public for insignia goods; to prescribe, regulate and control the relations between fraternities and manufacturers, distributors and vendors of insignia goods; to oppress and discriminate against smaller independent persons in the insignia goods business, such as plaintiff; to impose unreasonable restrictions [*2] upon the trade and business of the independents; and to substantially eliminate competition from the independents, including plaintiff, and to obtain a monopoly of the insignia goods business for the Balfour defendants. As a result, plaintiff alleges that he was forced to sell the business he operated from 1941 until September 1961, under the name Old Hickory Paddle Company, at a price far less than if he had been able to engage in the insignia goods business in a free and open market.

Several defendants have raised the defense of statute of limitations, either in their answers or by way of motion. HN1[] The statute of limitations applicable to antitrust actions in section 4B of the [*3] Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15(b), which provides,

---

[1] Plaintiff defined the term "insignia goods" as follows: "The distinctive rings, badges, keys, pins, buttons, seals, emblems, and plaques and other miscellaneous items which all bear distinctive insignia, device, name, crest, emblem or initial, including but not limited to such items as wearing apparel, decorative items, ceramics, paper products, glasswork, wooden plastic products and other sundry items of personal property, all of which or some of which are used by fraternities and sororities.

HN2[] Any action to enforce any cause of action under sections 15 or 15a of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued.

Since plaintiff went out of business in September of 1961, and this action was not filed until June of 1967, it is contended that the four year statute of limitations constitutes a bar to this action.

Plaintiff admits that the applicable period is four years, but contends that because the conspiracy has been fraudulently concealed, and because plaintiff allegedly did not learn of the conspiracy until March 27, 1967, that the statute of limitations does not bar his action. In the alternative plaintiff contends that the statute of limitations has been suspended since June 16, 1961, the date certain Federal Trade Commission proceedings against the Balfour defendants began.

On June 16, 1961, the Federal Trade Commission brought an administrative action pursuant to Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, against L. G. Balfour Company Lloyd G. Balfour and Burr, Patterson & Auld Company, Docket 8435, charging these respondents with [*4] certain acts and practices having the tendency and capacity unlawfully to restrain, lessen, and eliminate competition and to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of college and class rings and commercial jewelry, in commerce; with unlawfully restraining, lessening, and eliminating competition and creating a monopoly in the sale and distribution of "official" miscellaneous equipment bought by members of the national Greek-letter social fraternities and sororities, in commerce; with monopolizing the manufacture, sale, and distribution of fraternity insignia jewelry; and with monopolizing the sale and distribution of a full line of insignia-bearing products, particularly the jewelry and "official" miscellaneous equipment purchased by members of the national Greek-letter social fraternities and sororities, in commerce, within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45.

For the reasons which follow, this Court is of the opinion that plaintiff has not sufficiently shown that a genuine issue of material fact exists on the issue of fraudulent concealment; and that the proceedings before the Federal Trade Commission did not suspend [*5] the running of the applicable statute of limitations.

HN3[] Although fraudulent concealment of alleged anti-trust violations will suspend the running of the statute of limitations, Allis-Chalmers v. Commonwealth Edison Co. , 315 F.2d 558 (7th Cir., 1963), tolling of the statute is not suspended where it is established that plaintiff knew, or in the exercise of ordinary diligence, should have known of the alleged violation within the statutory period. Where lack of due diligence by plaintiff in pursuing his claim is clearly shown on a motion for summary judgment, entry of summary judgment on the issue of statute of limitations is appropriate, notwithstanding the allegations of fraudulent concealment. Starview Outdoor Theatre, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. , 254 F.Supp. 855 (N.D. Ill. 1966).

The record on the pending motion for summary judgment, which includes plaintiff Rader's sworn testimony before the Federal Trade Commission on October 26, 1961, and his deposition taken in this action, shows positively that he had knowledge of sufficient facts more than four years prior to the filing of this suit, to put him on notice of his alleged claim, thereby giving rise to a duty [*6] of due diligence in its pursuit; and that plaintiff did not exercise due diligence.

Plaintiff's 1961 testimony before the Federal Trade Commission shows conclusively that at that time he was aware of these so-called "official jeweler contracts" between the Balfour companies and the fraternities; and that the existence of these exclusive dealing arrangements between the fraternities and the Balfour companies made it impossible for plaintiff or other independent insignia goods firms to sell to the fraternities. Plaintiff testified to several instances where price cutting tactics had been used to drive him out of the market. He testified to instances where his salesmen and he himself had not been permitted to display their merchandise in individual fraternity houses.

At his deposition, plaintiff specifically admitted that he knew, in 1961, that the Federal Trade Commission was investigating the Balfour monopoly:

Q. So you didn't know what you were going to testify about when you came to Chicago this morning?

A. I knew this, that it was an examination of the Balfour Company, and the monopoly the Balfour Company were supposed to have.

Elsewhere, plaintiff referred to "the [*7] situation that I felt the FTC was examining, which was whether or not the Balfour Company was setting up a monopoly to restrain trade." Plaintiff also testified at this deposition,

Well, I was pretty much annoyed with the L. G. Balfour Company. And, I believed been damaged. Not that I expected any brought documents setting forth that I had been damaged. Not that I expected any relief, but just because I felt that way.

In his deposition, plaintiff Rader further testified to his knowledge of circumstances connecting the fraternities with the alleged antitrust violations. He testified that he had received several letters from the various fraternities, saying that their individual "coat of arms" were "patented," and not to be used without their "okay." He testified that he was "stopped" from selling Christmas cards to the fraternities who said they had official contracts with Balfour. Plaintiff's knowledge of participation of the fraternities in the alleged conspiracy is further revealed in his deposition testimony that in 1961 he tried to dissuade eventual purchasers of his company, the Old Hickory Paddle Company, from making the purchase:

Q. What was one of the reasons you [*8] gave them as to why it wasn't a good buy?

A. The pressures from the contracted monopoly between the fraternities and two or three suppliers made it a rough business and it was too hard to make a profit in it.

Finally, plaintiff's lack of diligence in pursuing his claim is shown by his deposition testimony that after testifying before the Federal Trade Commission, plaintiff did nothing further until March of 1967, when he "came across" a file containing documents he had presented to the FTC back in 1961, along with the business card of his attorney, whom he had met during the FTC hearings back in 1961. Not until plaintiff was about to throw out these materials in 1967, did he finally decide to follow up and call this attorney. Thus plaintiff's decision to finally follow up his claim came over 5 years after he originally had access to the information sufficient to place upon him the duty of diligence.

Plaintiff's conclusory affidavit filed in opposition to the motion for a summary judgment, which states "That prior to on or about January 2, 1967, he had no personal knowledge of the particular relationships or facts as alleged in his complaint in the above described action, [*9] which alleges a conspiracy among the defendants', is insufficient to raise a genuine issue of fact for trial. It does not contradict the admissions of plaintiff in his FTC testimony and his deposition here, which show that he had knowledge of sufficient facts to place upon him a duty of exercising due diligence to make his own inquiry into the facts, and to diligently pursue his claim. The duty of exercising diligence in pursuit of a claim does not arise only after knowledge of every particular circumstance involved in the claim.

It is clear from the record that plaintiff slept on his rights. Accordingly, this Court holds that the running of the Statute of Limitations was not suspended by defendants' alleged attempts at fraudulent concealment of their alleged antitrust violations.

Plaintiff's alternate contention is that the running of the Statute of Limitations was suspended under section 5(b) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16(b), which provides,

HN4[] Whenever any civil or criminal proceeding is instituted by the United States to prevent, restrain, or punish violations of any of the antitrust laws … the running of the statute of limitations in respect of every private right [*10] of action arising under said laws and based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in said proceeding shall be suspended during the pendency thereof and for one year thereafter …

Defendant contends that Section 5(b) does not suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations here, since the Federal Trade Commission proceeding was a proceeding to enforce Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, not a proceeding to enforce one of the "antitrust laws." HN5[] The meaning of the term "antitrust laws" was not left to judicial interpretation, but was defined by Congress in Section 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12. The Federal Trade Commission Act is not one of the laws specified in Section 1.

The Supreme Court in Nashville Milk Co. v. Carnation Co. , 355 U.S. 373 (1958) ruled that the definition in Section 1 is "exclusive," thus preventing expansive judicial interpretation of the term as applicable to other laws, such as the Robinson Patman Act, which may be colloquially referred to as "antitrust" statutes.

It is clear from an examination of the complaint filed before the Federal Trade Commission against the Balfour defendants, that the Federal Trade Commission was [*11] not bringing its action under one of the anti-trust laws, such as the Sherman or Clayton Acts, but was proceeding exclusively under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. It is this circumstance which distinguishes Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co. , 381 U.S. 311 (1965) (hereinafter referred to as "3M"). In that case the Supreme Court held that a prior FTC proceeding had suspended the running of the Statute of Limitations as to a private antitrust suitor. However, the FTC in that case was seeking to enforce Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The Court found that suspension under Section 5(b) should not turn on whether it was the justice department or the Federal Trade Commission which was seeking to enforce an antitrust law. In the case at bar, on the other hand, the FTC proceeding was not one to enforce an "antitrust law" as that term is specifically defined in Section 1 of the Clayton Act; the FTC proceeding was an administrative proceeding dealing with a much broader category of regulation than what is forbidden in the "antitrust laws."

This Court accordingly recognizes the distinction made by the Court below in 3M, between an FTC proceeding [*12] brought to enforce some provision of the "antitrust laws", and an FTC proceeding brought to enforce only the Federal Trade Commission Act. See New Jersey Wood Finishing Co. v. Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. , 332 F.2d 346 (1964). I hold that HN6[] a Federal Trade Commission proceeding brought solely to enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act will not suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations, under 15 U.S.C. § 16(b); and that all defendants here are accordingly entitled to entry of judgment in their favor. [2].

End of Document

[2] Because the Court has concluded that the Federal Trade Commission Docket 8435 was not a proceeding to enforce the anti-trust laws, it will be unnecessary to consider the fraternity defendants' alternative contention, that Section 5(b) of the Clayton Act could not possibly suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations as to them, since they were not named either as respondents or as co-conspirators in the FTC action.

Stanton v. Texaco, Inc.

United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island

September 18, 1968

Civil Action No. 3300

Reporter

289 F. Supp. 884 *; 1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12563 ; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,595

Daniel B. Stanton v. Texaco, Inc.

Core Terms

consignment, gasoline, retail, conspiracy, purchaser, dealers, prices, Robinson-Patman Act, Sherman Act, antitrust, petroleum product, treble damages, decisions, cases, restraint of trade, summary judgment, instant case, consignee, vertical, genuine, station, lease, recent decision, resale price, retroactively, purposes, asserts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN4[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1337.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Partial Summary Judgment

HN5[] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(b) states in pertinent part: a party against whom a claim is asserted may at any time move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in the party's favor as to all or any part thereof.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

HN6[] Effect & Operation, Prospective Operation

Where the retrospective application of a newly declared doctrine would upset a party's justifiable reliance to the party's substantial injury, considerations of justice and fairness require that the new rule apply prospectively only. There is no reason why the considerations which favor only prospective application should not be applied as well in the civil area, especially in a treble damage action.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > Increased Damages

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

HN7[] Effect & Operation, Prospective Operation

Because of the important social purposes sought to be effectuated by the antitrust laws, decisions upholding business practices which are arguably violative of the antitrust laws should be read narrowly, while decisions condemning business practices should be read broadly. The rule of non-retroactivity is dissatisfactory. Plaintiff, who takes the risk and cost of the litigation derives no benefit, even though there is a judicially recognized wrong, while all subsequent persons similarly situated take, parasite-like, the full benefit of the plaintiff's path breaking. Moreover, a rule of non-retroactivity totally ignores the compensatory aspect of a treble damages award. The purpose of a treble damages award is not solely to deter the violator, but also to compensate the injured party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN8[ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Resale price maintenance is per se illegal under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, because it constitutes an unjustifiable restraint on trader discretion in pricing practices, and because it tends to lessen horizontal competition at the retail level.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN9[ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A supplier may not use coercion on its retail outlets to achieve resale price maintenance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN10[ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

If a consignment agreement achieves resale price maintenance in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, it and the lease are being used to injure interstate commerce by depriving independent dealers of the exercise of free judgment whether to become consignees at all, or remain consignees, and, in any event, to sell at competitive prices. The fact that a retailer can refuse to deal does not give the supplier immunity if the arrangement is one of the schemes condemned by the antitrust laws.

Judges: [1] Pettine, District Judge.

Opinion by: PETTINE

Opinion

[*886] PETTINE, District Judge.

This is a private action seeking treble damages under 15 U.S.C. Sec. 15 [1] [2] for alleged violation of the restraint of trade section of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 1 [2] and of the price discrimination section of the Robinson-

---

[1] HN1[ ] 15 U.S.C. Sec. 15 states:

> Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefore in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

The plaintiff also seeks injunctive relief under 15 U.S.C. Sec. 26. The relationship between the plaintiff and defendant has long since ceased, and injunctive relief is not appropriate here. The cases cited by plaintiff in his pretrial memorandum are inapposite.

[2] HN2[ ] 15 U.S.C. Sec. 1 states in pertinent part:

Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 13. [3] [3] This court has jurisdiction under 15 U.S.C. Sec. 15 and 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1337. [4]

The plaintiff, who did business as the Hoxie Four Corners Texaco Station, was a gasoline service station lessee and operator between August, 1961 and late June or early July, 1964. The plaintiff was located in an area of Warwick, R.I. densely populated with retail gasoline service stations. It is understatement to say that the competition is active among service station operators within this geographical [*887] zone for the gasoline business of the motoring public. The defendant is a major national oil corporation which leased the plaintiff his gasoline station properties, supplied him petroleum products, and consigned him gasoline, all in accordance with detailed and specific written agreements.

The plaintiff claims that the defendant distributed gasoline to him and, under the terms of the consignment agreement, fixed the minimum resale [4] price of that gasoline in violation of Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act; that his attempts to lower prices in order to remain competitive were thwarted by the termination of the consignment agreement and the cancellation of his lease, and that as a result of these practices by the defendant, he was injured in his business in the amount of $10,000. The plaintiff also claims that the defendant distributed gasoline to him at a price higher than that charged three other retail Texaco service stations in the same geographic area in violation of Sec. 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act.

The defendant has moved for summary judgment [5] pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(b), [6] stating that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and that under the law as applied to the allegedly non-disputed facts, it is entitled to judgment. [7] More specifically, the defendant states (1) that the Sec. 1 Sherman Act case law upon which plaintiff

---

> Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states . . . is declared to be illegal . . . .

The plaintiff's complaint also alleges a violation of Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act. Yet, there are no facts stated by plaintiff in any of the documents before this court which even hint at the existence of a monopoly or the assertion of monopolistic power. The court therefore strikes the plaintiff's allegation of a Sec. 2 violation.

[3] HN3[] 15 U.S.C. Sec. 13(a) states in pertinent part:

> It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce . . . either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them . . . .

The plaintiff's pre-trial memorandum, filed some three-and-a-half years after his complaint, alleges violations of 15 U.S.C. Secs. 13(c)(d) & (e). Again, there is nothing in the record to buttress such tardy and conclusory allegations. The court therefore strikes the plaintiff's allegations of Secs. 2(c)(d) & (e) violations.

[4] HN4[] 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1337 states:

> The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action or proceeding arising under any Act of Congress regulating commerce or protecting trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies.

[5] This is actually a renewed motion for summary judgment. Judge Day originally denied the defendant's motion. This court then decided it had the power to reconsider the denial and entertain a renewed motion, especially in the light of the decision of the district court on remand in Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 270 F. Supp. 754 (N.D. Calif. 1967).

[6] HN5[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(b) states in pertinent part:

> A party against whom a claim . . . is asserted . . . may, at any time, move with or without supporting affidavits for a summary judgment in his favor as to all or any part thereof.

relies, Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964), must not be applied retroactively, and, under prior established law construing Sec. 1, U.S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U.S. 476, 71 L. Ed. 362, 47 S. Ct. 192 (1926), defendant's motion [5] must be granted, (2) that even if Simpson is the applicable law, defendant's motion must be granted because either (a) there is no restraint of trade because neither the vast distributional system nor the coercive element present in Simpson is present in the instant case, or (b) there is no combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade to which defendant is a party, or (c) there is no damage to the plaintiff proximately resulting from the restraint of trade, because the plaintiff was at all times free to shift to a purchase and sale arrangement and hence his own voluntary adherence to the consignment arrangement was the cause of this inquiry, or (d) the plaintiff is in pari delicto with the defendant. With respect to Sec. 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, defendant states that (1) the plaintiff is not a purchaser, because gasoline is distributed to him only on a consignment basis; (2) that even if plaintiff is a purchaser, those Texaco dealers with whom plaintiff competes are not purchasers from Texaco but rather from Pennsylvania Petroleum Products Co., an independent wholesaler-jobber; and (3) that plaintiff is not in competition with Pennsylvania Petroleum Products [6] Co. because plaintiff operates exclusively on the retail level selling to gasoline consumers, while Pennsylvania [*888] Petroleum Products Co. operates exclusively on the wholesale distributional level selling to gasoline retailers.

[7] Although the motion for summary judgment serves a useful purpose in expediting judicial administration and foreclosing cases of no merit from the time-consuming and costly process of litigation, its effect, if granted, is so potent that it should be used with great caution. This is especially so with respect to antitrust suits, where appellate decisions treating important questions of public policy are dependent upon well-developed factual records. See Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962); White Motor Co. v. U.S., 372 U.S. 253, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963) (see especially concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Brennan); Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964) (dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Stewart and memorandum of Mr. Justice Brennan and Mr. Justice Goldberg). The recent decision of the Supreme Court in First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968) is not a blanket endorsement of the summary judgment procedure in antitrust cases. In fact, that summary judgment in the defendant's favor was granted only because [8] of the plaintiff's failure to establish an inference of conspiracy on any reasonable, common sense theory not wholly contradicted by the undisputed facts. There, the plaintiff sought to support an inference of conspiracy between parties whose interests were discordant. Here, however, the plaintiff asserts a plausible theory of vertical combination in restraint of trade. [8]

Against a background of caution, then, this court approaches, first, a statement of the applicable law, and second, an inquiry into the issuability of the factual material before it.

The Law - The Sherman Act Claim

Retroactivity of Simpson v. Union Oil Co.

The defendant asserts that the decision of the Supreme Court in Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964) should be given prospective effect only. The defendant states that the law prior to Simpson clearly permitted price fixing by way [9] of the agency-consignment distribution mechanism. U.S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U.S. 476, 71 L. Ed. 362, 47 S. Ct. 192 (1926). The defendant then seeks to establish its reliance upon General Electric by a comparison of the consignment arrangement there with the consignment agreement in the present case. The defendant finally asserts that its reliance was reasonable. In support of its position the defendant cites principally the decision of the District Court upon remand in Simpson, 270 F. Supp. 754 (N.D. Calif. 1967), and another decision, Lyons v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 235 F. Supp. 526 (S.D.N.Y. 1964). Both of those cases, however, reveal that the courts' decisions as to the retroactivity of Simpson were made only after trial, when the courts had received evidence concerning the actuality of reliance and its reasonability. Neither of those cases, moreover, could have been decided in the light of the very recent decision of the Supreme Court in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968). In that case, the Supreme Court stated:

---

[7] The record before this court for purposes of the summary judgment includes (1) the complaint, (2) the answer, (3) the original motion for summary judgment, (4) the original affidavit of P. R. Whitcomb, a Texaco employee, (5) the Texaco sale agreement - Exhibit A, (6) the Texaco consignment agreement - Exhibit B, (7) the defendant's original brief in support of its original motion, (8) the plaintiff's original brief in opposition to the defendant's original motion, (9) Judge Day's decision denying summary judgment, (10) the defendant's motion and memorandum concerning this court's power to reconsider, (11) the decision of this court to reconsider, (12) the defendant's renewed motion for summary judgment and supporting brief, (13) the deposition of the plaintiff, Stanton, and (14) the pre-trial memoranda of the two parties.

[8] See infra, this opinion, Sherman Act, Sec. 1 Restraint of Trade and Combination or Conspiracy.

> The theory of the Court of Appeals seems to have been that when a [10] party has significantly relied upon a clear and established doctrine, and HN6[] the retrospective application of a newly declared doctrine would upset that justifiable reliance to his substantial injury, considerations of justice and fairness require that the new rule apply prospectively only. Pointing to recent decisions of this Court in the area of [*889] the criminal law, the Court of Appeals could see no reason why the considerations which had favored only prospective application in those cases should not be applied as well in the civil area, especially in a treble damage action. There is, of course, no reason to confront this theory unless we have before us a situation in which there was a clearly declared judicial doctrine upon which United relied and under which its conduct was lawful, a doctrine which was overruled in favor of a new rule according to which conduct performed in reliance upon the old rule would have been unlawful.

The Court then went on to develop the lack of a clearly established older doctrine changed abruptly by innovative principles. By the same reasoning, this court suggests that Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 [11] (1964), was not nearly the radical departure from established antitrust law which defendant claims it to be. In fact, in Simpson itself the Supreme Court states that General Electric should have been read as limited exclusively to situations involving patents. Indeed, it might be argued as a general principle that stability is not the most important characteristic of decisions regulating business conduct with respect to the antitrust laws, and that HN7[] because of the important social purposes sought to be effectuated by the antitrust laws, decisions upholding business practices which were arguably violative of those laws should be read narrowly, while decisions condemning business practices should be read broadly. There are still further reasons why a rule of non-retroactivity is dissatisfactory. Perhaps the most basic is that the plaintiff, who takes the risk and cost of the litigation derives no benefit, even though there is a judicially recognized wrong, while all subsequent persons similarly situated take, parasite-like, the full benefit of the plaintiff's pathbreaking. Moreover, a rule of non-retroactivity totally ignores the compensatory aspect of a treble damages award. [12] It must be remembered that the purpose of a treble damages award is not solely to deter the violator, but also to compensate the injured party. At the very minimum, one-third of every treble damages award is devoted solely to the restoration of the plaintiff's competitive status. Perhaps the underlying reason for the various courts' decisions not to apply the Simpson case retroactively is the genuine fear that persons who relied upon what they deemed to be the law, and who are, hence, non-culpable persons, are burdened with punitive damages, at least with regard to approximately two-thirds of the judgment. One solution to this problem may be to allow the defendant to mitigate damages. While it is possible that the imperative mode of the treble damages statute precludes such a solution, the equities are strong enough to suggest an innovative case-law gloss. See Comment: Retroactive Application of Overruling Decisions in Antitrust Treble Damages Suits. 1967 U. Ill. L. Forum 837. For purposes of this motion for summary judgment, then, this court holds that Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964) is applicable. The court, however, suggests [13] that evidence be presented at trial as to the actuality and reasonability of the defendant's reliance on General Electric. The court further suggests that all counsel give consideration to the previously mentioned mitigation of damages theory. Finally, the court invites reconsideration of this question of law after trial.

Sec. 1 Restraint of Trade

HN8[] Resale price maintenance is per se illegal under Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act because it constitutes an unjustifiable restraint on trader discretion in pricing practices, Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968), and because it tends to lessen horizontal competition at the retail level. U.S. v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 71 L. Ed. 700, 47 S. Ct. 377 (1927); U.S. v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940).

Whether what is per se impermissible if done by way of sale - price fixing, in [*890] this case - becomes permissible when carried out by way of consignment or agency is a much mooted question. Defendant states that it does and seeks to avoid the impact of Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964) [14] by distinguishing it on two grounds: (1) the coercive element of consignment selling brought about in Simpson by forcing the retailer to either sell on consignment or not sell at all is absent from this case where the consignee is free to change to a number of different possible programs, including a purchase and sale program; and (2) the large-scale use of consignment price-fixing present in Simpson is not present in the instant case. Defendant reads Simpson too narrowly. In that case, in response to the defendant's argument that dealers were free to refuse to deal with the defendant if they objected to its price-rigging, the Court stated:

> If that were a defense, a supplier could regiment thousands of otherwise competitive dealers in resale price maintenance programs, merely by fear of nonrenewal of short-term leases.
>
> We made clear in United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 80 S. Ct. 503, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, that HN9[] a supplier may not use coercion on its retail outlets to achieve resale price maintenance. We reiterate that view, adding that it matters not what the coercive device is.

In the instant case, the defendant has simply added other supposed [15] options to the dealer's right to refuse to sell. But if those are not realistic competitive options - and the plaintiff has claimed they are not - then the dealer is put to the same futile choice here as he was in Simpson: follow the prices or get out. Nor is the vastness of the defendant's system a sine qua non for a Sec. 1 violation. Admittedly, the defendant in Simpson maintained prices on a broad scale. But Simpson was a Sec. 2 monopoly as well as a Sec. 1 restraint case. Moreover, in the light of Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968), a vertically imposed price restraint operating upon only a single dealer could be a violation of Sec. 1. To say the least, when a major national oil company uses a consignment agreement, policed by a lease, to maintain the gasoline prices of its dealer-lessee, there is sufficient restraint on alienation and possible threat to dealer competition to mandate a trial on the matter. Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968); Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964).

Contrary to the theory of at least one person, see Hitchcock, [16] Schwinn: Coaster Brake for Simpson?, 54 A.B.A.J. 574 (June, 1968), the recent decision of the Supreme Court in U.S. v. Arnold Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967) does not condone vertical price-fixing by way of consignment. That case only subjects to the scrutiny of the rule of reason less competitively dangerous means of vertical restraint, namely consignment arrangements involving exclusive territorial and customer restrictions.

The decision of the First Circuit in Quinn v. Mobil Oil Co., 375 F.2d 273 (1967) does not dictate a contrary result. In that case, Judge McEntee limited himself to the absence of a combination or conspiracy. Judge Coffin's opinion with respect to vertical setting of maximum prices is distinguishable because the instant case involves fixing minimum prices, and at any rate, Judge Coffin's rationale has been overruled by Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968). Judge Aldrich's opinion does not conflict with the decision of this court.

Combination or Conspiracy

The complaint in the instant case, much like that in Albrecht, alleges the formation of a combination or conspiracy [17] without specifying its makeup. The defendant suggests that there is no combination or conspiracy. Detailed consideration need not here be given to the developing definitional content of the statutory term "combination." See Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious [*891] Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv.L.Rev. 655 (1962); Note "Combinations" in Restraint of Trade: A New Approach to Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act, 1966 Utah L. Rev. 75. Suffice it to say that the facts alleged in the instant case make out one or more of the following combinations: (1) a combination between the defendant and its dealers to fix prices on the retail level, Albrecht v. Herald Co., at p. 150 & n. 6, U.S. v. Arnold Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 372, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967); (2) a combination between the defendant and the plaintiff, Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. at p. 150 & n. 6, U.S. v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960); Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 280 n. 16, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569, 88 S. Ct. 1575 (1968); [18] Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 141-42, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968); (Judge McEntee's opinion in Quinn v. Mobil Oil Co., 375 F.2d 273 (1st Cir. 1967) is distinguishable because there is here both a consignment agreement and prior acquiescence to the defendant's price dictates.) (3) a combination between the defendant and the plaintiff's customers, Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. at p. 150 & n. 6. This court is, therefore, prepared to go to trial on the question of combination or conspiracy. It is the suggestion of the court, however, that counsel for the plaintiff be prepared at the beginning of trial to specify which of the above or any other theories of combination or conspiracy he will present. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(e)(f). See Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 142, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968).

Proximate Cause

The defendant argues that "since plaintiff had the absolute freedom to terminate the consignment arrangement at any time, any injury that he might have sustained by failing to do so was his own doing." Defendant's Brief In Support of Motion for Summary Judgment at p. [19] 16. The statement of Mr. Justice Douglas in Simpson supplies the short answer to that contention:

> HN10[] If the "consignment" agreement achieves resale price maintenance in violation of the Sherman Act, it and the lease are being used to injure interstate commerce by depriving independent dealers of the exercise of free judgment whether to become consignees at all, or remain consignee, and, in any event, to sell at competitive prices. The fact that a retailer can refuse to deal does not give the supplier immunity if the arrangement is one of those schemes condemned by the antitrust laws.

Cf. Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968).

In Pari Delicto

The defendant also contends that "(Plaintiff) is also precluded from seeking to recover for injuries from the consignment agreement because, even if the agreement were unlawful, his continued voluntary adherence to it places him squarely within the pari delicto doctrine." Defendant's Brief In Support of Motion for Summary Judgment at p. 17. The recent decision of the Supreme Court in Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, [20] 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968) completely disposes of this defense.

The Law - The Robinson-Patman Act Claim [9]

Sec. 2(a) - Consignment

The defendant asserts that the plaintiff's Robinson-Patman Act theory is faulty because the plaintiff was not a "purchaser" of Texaco gasoline but was only a consignee. [10] A close reading of the several cases cited by the

---

[9] See, supra, note 3.

[10] For a statement of the statutory language here pertinent, see supra, note 3. The Robinson-Patman Act defendant [*892] fails to reveal any specific holding that a consignee retailer cannot be a "purchaser" for purposes of Sec. 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. In fact, the case which most nearly reaches such a holding, Students Book Co. v. Washington Law Book Co., 98 U.S. App. D.C. 49, 232 F.2d 49 (D.C. Cir. 1955), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 988, 100 L. Ed. 854, 76 S. Ct. 474 (1956), does so only after a full trial going directly to the reality of the consignment device and to a comparison and contrast of the consignment and purchase-sale distribution mechanisms. This court is likewise inclined to reach the legal [21] question concerning the alleged distinction between purchase and consignment only after a full trial. While the court, therefore, declines to pass on that question at this time, it does suggest that counsel be prepared to argue the question subsequent to the presentation of evidence. The court further expects counsel at such argument to discuss two important issues with respect to this matter: (1) whether the purposes of Sec. 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act would be effectuated by an elaboration of the statutory term "purchaser" such that a consignee is not within the section; (2) whether Sec. 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act should be construed in pari materia with Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act and the cases thereunder.

Competitors as Purchasers

The defendant contends that even if the plaintiff is a purchaser within the meaning of the Act his alleged competitors were not, because they purchased [22] not from Texaco but from Pennsylvania Petroleum Products Co., an independent wholesaler. Defendant's statement of the law appears to be correct. However, as will appear below, [11] the status of the Pennsylvania Products Co. presents a genuine issue of material fact.

Middleman as Competitor

Defendant finally asserts that even if it sold to Pennsylvania Petroleum Products Co. at a price lower than its price to plaintiff there can be no competitive injury, because the plaintiff discriminatee operates on a different horizontal level than the favored purchaser. Here again, the defendant's legal theory appears sound. However, as will appear below, [12] the plaintiff differs with the defendant as to the defendant's alleged exclusive wholesaler status.

[23] The Facts - The Sherman Act Claim [13]

Several genuine issues of material fact are revealed by this record. (1) Did the defendant rely upon General Electric and was its reliance reasonable? (2) What is the shape of the geographic zone for purposes of competition? (3) Was the plaintiff genuinely free to shift to some other competitively realistic program? (4) What was the reason for the cancellation of the plaintiff's lease and the temporary nondelivery of gasoline to the plaintiff? (5) How much is the consignment device used by Texaco in the Rhode Island market? (6) What other distribution methods are used and how do they differ from the consignment method? (7) Was there any combination or conspiracy? (8) If so, what is its makeup? (9) Was the defendant's conduct [24] the cause-in-fact of the plaintiff's harm or was stiff competition the cause? (10) What specific damages did the plaintiff suffer?

The Facts - The Robinson-Patman Act Claim

There are several genuine issues of material fact with respect to the plaintiff's Robinson-Patman Act claim. (1) What is the nature of the vertical relationship between the plaintiff and [*893] the defendant? (2) What is the nature of the relationship between Texaco and Pennsylvania Petroleum Products Co., with particular respect to the alleged retail competitors of plaintiff? (3) What is the status of Pennsylvania on the distributional chain - is it exclusively a wholesaler or does it also operate at the retail level?

---

[11] See, infra, this opinion, The Facts - The Robinson-Patman Act Claim.

[12] Ibid.

[13] At this juncture, there is no need for this court to meticulously document the basis for every factual dispute arising out of the numerous documents before it. A general enumeration of the areas of relevant dispute will suffice.

Conclusion and Caveat

For the above stated reasons, this court has determined that a trial is appropriate in this case. Counsel need not be reminded that the administration of an antitrust case is a difficult and time-consuming matter. Preparation and precision on the part of counsel are most helpful to the court. To date, the court's burden has been considerably increased by the absence of these elements. It is the expectation of this court that the trial of this case will [25] be approached with a more narrow compass than has heretofore guided the proceedings.

For the reasons recited herein, the motion is hereby denied.

Pacific Seafarers, Inc. v. Pacific Far East Line, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

September 30, 1968, Decided

No. 21,173

Reporter
404 F.2d 804 *; 1968 U.S. App. LEXIS 5431 ; 131 U.S. App. D.C. 226; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,587

Pacific Seafarers, Inc., et al., v. Pacific Far East Line, Inc., et al.

Subsequent History: [1] Cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1093, 21 L. Ed. 2d 784, 89 S. Ct. 872 (1969).

Disposition: Reversed and Remanded

Core Terms

shipping, foreign commerce, Sherman Act, transportation, anti trust law, vessels, commerce, cargoes, foreign port, importers, exports, conspiracy, financing, common carrier, Plaintiffs', foreigners, exemption, Maritime, selling, cement, nexus, ports, foreign nation, conferences, defendants', regulations, commodity, carriers, rates

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > Preferences & Subsidies

International Trade Law > General Overview

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Shipping > Regulations & Statutes > General Overview

Governments > Federal Government > Property

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Foreign Commerce

Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Cargo Preference Act

HN1[] Regulations & Statutes, Preferences & Subsidies

The Agency for International Development (AID) implements the Cargo Preference Law, 46 U.S.C.S. § 1241(b) by regulations requiring that at least 50% of AID-financed cargoes be transported to the recipient country in privately owned United States-flag commercial vessels. Furthermore, as a matter of policy, AID finances the costs of transportation, in addition to cargo, where the shipping is done in American-flag vessels. These regulations effectively reserve the trade in carriage of AID-financed cargo for American shipping.

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Decisions > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

International Trade Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

HN2[] Decisions, Collateral Estoppel

Principles of collateral estoppel may properly be applied in administrative cases. In general these principles apply to jurisdictional issues and the court may assume that they require giving effect in subsequent litigation to an agency's determination of facts underlying its conclusion that jurisdiction was lacking.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Definitions

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Water Carriers

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Foreign Commerce

HN3[] Water Transportation, Rates & Tariffs

Section 1 of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.S. § 80, defines a common carrier by water in foreign commerce as a common carrier engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States or any of its Districts, Territories, or possessions and a foreign country.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Charterparties

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Water Carriers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN4[] Admiralty & Maritime Law, Charterparties

See 46 U.S.C.S. § 814.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN5[] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

As used in the U.S. Const., "commerce" is a very broad concept which includes navigation, not merely because of the relationship between shipping and the movement of goods, most certainly commerce, but also because shipping itself is a form of gainful economic activity. Were it not so, the government of the Union would have no direct power over the subject, and could make no law prescribing what shall constitute American vessels, or requiring that they shall be navigated by American seamen.

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

International Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

International Trade Law > Authority to Regulate > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > Commerce With Other Nations

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN6[] Federal Government, US Congress

The constitutional language granting Congress power to regulate "commerce with foreign nations" authorizes congressional enactment of laws regulating every species of commercial intercourse between the United States and foreign nations.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Maritime Contracts > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Foreign Commerce

Transportation Law > Water Transportation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > US Federal Maritime Commission

HN7[] Admiralty & Maritime Law, Maritime Contracts

Section 14 of the Shipping Act of 1916, 46 U.S.C.S. § 813 authorizes the Federal Maritime Commission to bar foreign carriers from United States ports if they are parties to an agreement respecting transportation between foreign ports that excludes American-flag carriers from admission on equal terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN8[] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

If the policy of limiting accumulation of and exercise of dominant economic power cannot extend to the full sweep of American foreign commerce because of the international complications involved, then surely the test which determines whether United States law is applicable must focus on the nexus between the parties and their practices and the United States, not on the mechanical circumstances of effect on commodity exports or imports.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN9[ ] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Antitrust principles are relevant even in those economic sectors subject to day-to-day supervision by federal regulatory agencies.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

International Trade Law > General Overview

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Foreign Commerce

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN10[ ] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

The Sherman Act is not limited, in effect, to restraints on sales of goods. In the domestic setting, it is settled that the Sherman Act's bar on unreasonable restraints on trade or commerce extends to service industries as part of commerce. There is no basis in the statute or in reason to argue that conspiracies in service industries are proscribed only if the services are in interstate commerce, and not if they are in foreign commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[ ] Sherman Act, Penalties

Where the allegedly illegal restraint concerns commodities then, of course, the absence of an effect on United States exports or imports renders the Sherman Act inapplicable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN12[ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act has no application where the market involved consists of shipping services between two foreign ports, without any American characteristic, and the only American aspect is that one or some of the persons competing in the transportation market is offering American flag ships.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act is applicable to a conspiracy to exclude newcomers from the trade.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > Significant Relationships

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

HN14[] Choice of Law, Significant Relationships

It is plain that where American foreign commerce is affected foreigners may be held under our antitrust laws for restraints thereon. It is also significant, for the purpose of determining whether what is involved constitutes activities affecting American foreign commerce within the scope of the antitrust laws that the trade not only has significant contacts and nexus with the United States but also is the province of American concerns.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

It is settled that the antitrust laws may apply to foreigners. Where restraints of commodity exports or imports are concerned, the test most used to determine whether the Sherman Act is applicable to acts done outside the United States is whether the agreement was intended to, and did affect United States imports or exports. The principal question is what is meant, in this context, by the word "intent" in light of the presumption that persons are presumed to intend the natural consequences of their actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN16[] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

The antitrust laws, which represent a fundamental national economic policy, continue in effect as to the shipping industry, and their rate making activities in foreign commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Freight Brokers & Forwarders

HN17[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The Shipping Act limits the scope of the antitrust laws, but this curtailment is confined to the explicit provision exempting activities which are lawful under § 15 of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.S. § 814.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Common Carriers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Freight Brokers & Forwarders

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Water Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN18[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Therefore the antitrust laws continue in effect, without modification based merely on implication, as to common carriers, subject to the Shipping Act, which do not obtain the Commission approval under § 15 of the Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.S. § 814, which Congress required as a condition of exemption. The antitrust laws also continue in effect as to areas not subject to the Shipping Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Transportation Law > Carrier Duties & Liabilities > Freight Brokers & Forwarders

HN19[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C.S. §§ 814, 815, and 817, does not eliminate all possibility of risks under the antitrust laws.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN20[] Legislation, Interpretation

The court is not to turn to the acts of subsequent Congresses for unstated exemptions, or implied repeals, of the anti-trust laws. Moreover, how members of the 1914 Congress may have interpreted the 1890 Act is not of weight for the purpose of construing the Sherman Act.

Judges: McGowan, Tamm and Leventhal, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: LEVENTHAL

Opinion

[*807] LEVENTHAL, Circuit Judge:

This case concerns the applicability of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act to an alleged conspiracy among defendant-appellees, 21 American shipping lines and two conferences to which they belong, [1] to destroy plaintiff-appellants' business of carrying AID [2]-financed cement and fertilizer cargoes between Taiwan and South Vietnam. The charges were first aired before the Federal Maritime Commission, which dismissed plaintiffs' complaint alleging violations of sections 15, 16 First, and 18 of the Shipping Act [3] on the ground that this trade between foreign ports, of goods owned and shipped by foreigners to foreigners, [4] [3] [*808] was not within the Commission's jurisdiction under the Shipping Act. That ruling was not appealed. Plaintiffs' subsequently-filed complaint for damages under the antitrust laws [5] was dismissed, at the close of oral argument, when the District Court granted defendant's motion for dismissal of the complaint. This order was [2] presumably based on the jurisdictional ground that the Sherman Act was inapplicable to the complaint because of the absence of a claim of restraint of foreign commerce. [6] We reverse that determination.

These are the pertinent facts as set forth in the complaint, which must be accepted as true for purposes of a motion to dismiss. Plaintiffs Pacific Seafarers, Inc. (PSI) and Seafarers, Inc. (Seafarers) [7] are American corporations, formerly engaged in the ocean shipping business. They operated United States flag vessels, manned by American crews. Plaintiffs' business operations were centered in New York, and their ships intermittently returned to the United States for personnel and maintenance requirements. Plaintiffs' business was selling their American-flag shipping services to cement and fertilizer exporters in Taiwan, and, to a lesser extent, Thailand, who needed American-flag shipping for AID-financed sales to importers [4] in South Vietnam. AID does not own the goods, nor does it arrange for their transportation. It does, however, provide, either on loan or grant basis, dollars to the South Vietnamese Government, which in turn sells these dollars to South Vietnam merchants desiring to finance their purchases abroad. HN1[] AID implements the Cargo Preference Law [8] by regulations requiring that at least 50% of AID-financed cargoes be transported to the recipient country in privately owned United States-flag commercial vessels. Furthermore, as a matter of policy, AID finances the costs of transportation, in addition to

---

[1] Liability is alleged as to most of the defendants by virtue of their participation in either the Atlantic and Gulf American - flag Berth Operators (AGAFBO) or the West Coast American-flag Berth Operators (WCAFBO) conferences, rather than from active participation in the Far East interport trade.

[2] Agency for International Development.

[3] 46 U.S.C. §§ 814, 815 First, 817, respectively.

[4] The Federal Maritime Commission found that " the cargoes carried by PSI are entirely commercial in nature originating in one foreign port and destined to another foreign port. The shipping arrangements as well as the sales of the commodities are made between foreign principals. Although the U.S. Government through the Agency for International Development (AID) ultimately finances the sales -- including the cost of water transportation -- our Government in no way participates in the transactions." (JA 114)

[5] 15 U.S.C. § 15.

[6] The District Judge rendered his decision from the bench at the close of oral argument. He stated: "I am of the opinion that the complaint does not state facts constituting a cause of action under the Sherman Antitrust Act and, therefore, this Court is without jurisdiction and the motions to dismiss will be granted." (JA 167) cargo, where the shipping is done in American-flag vessels. [9] These regulations effectively reserve the trade in carriage of AID-financed cargo for American shipping.

[7] The other plaintiffs' claims are derivative.

[8] 46 U.S.C. § 1241(b). See AID Regulation 1, § 201.6(N).

[5] At the time plaintiffs entered the business it was handled primarily by American-flag competition engaged in round-trip voyages from the United States to the Far East. In the course of their journeys, these vessels would stop to take on cargoes of foreign origin destined for ports farther along. The rate for this service was set by AFBO, [10] an association of American-flag carriers which are members of either or both AGAFBO [11] or WCAFBO, [12] both conferences of American-flag shippers organized to carry military cargoes for the Government (which must likewise use American-flag shipping where available). Neither the AFBO agreement, nor the rates set thereunder for cargoes originating in foreign ports and destined to foreign ports, were filed with the Federal Maritime Commission.

[*809] Plaintiffs thought that by using older, less-expensive vessels they could institute [6] and profitably operate a substantial service in AID-financed cargoes. As stated by plaintiffs, defendant American-flag shipping lines acted to preserve this profitable trade to themselves, at rates set pursuant to concerted action and not subject to regulatory scrutiny. They first sought to erect legal barriers to plaintiffs' getting the business, and when they failed in that endeavor they dropped their prices and drove plaintiffs out of business.

(a) Their first effort was to seek issuance of a directive from AID limiting AID-financed shipping in the area to "conference liners." That would have excluded plaintiffs' vessels, but it was not obtained.

(b) Defendants then successfully urged the Director General of Commerce of South Vietnam to issue a ruling to South Vietnamese importers requiring that all future AID-financed shipments of cement be shipped on liners operated by AFBO members. Plaintiffs were not then members of AFBO, but AID countermanded that directive.

(c) Next, plaintiff PSI was told by the Director General that it would have to join WCAFBO if it wished to continue in the South Vietnamese cement business. When PSI tried to comply, its application for membership [7] was blocked because it had no Military Sea Transportation Service Contract (MSTS) with the Defense Department, as did all other WCAFBO members. Plaintiff sought such a general eligibility contract, and seven of the appellees tried to block it by protesting to the Defense Department. That too was unsuccessful.

(d) Finally, at an AFBO meeting held in the United States, the rates on cement and fertilizer from Taiwan to South Vietnam, and on cement from Thailand to South Vietnam were thrown open, and they dropped from $8.95 per long ton to $4.96 per long ton. All other rates were maintained.

Plaintiffs were shortly driven out of business. Thereafter defendants raised the rates, and indeed raised them to substantially higher levels than those prevailing before plaintiffs sought to enter the trade.

1. We first consider defendants' arguments that principles of collateral estoppel and "practical primary jurisdiction considerations" preclude relitigation by plaintiffs of the Federal Maritime Commission's determination that this trade, carried on "totally within the confines of Far Eastern ports," was not part of "our foreign commerce."

[8] HN2[] Principles of collateral estoppel may properly be applied in administrative cases. [13] In general these principles apply to jurisdictional issues [14] and we may assume that they require giving effect in subsequent litigation

---

[9] Affidavit of David E. Bell, former Administrator of AID. (JA 147)

[10] American-flag Berth Operators.

[11] Atlantic-Gulf American-Flag Berth Operators.

[12] West Coast American-flag Berth Operators.

[13] United States v. Utah Constr. & Min. Co., 384 U.S. 394, 422, 86 S. Ct. 1545, 16 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1966); Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U.S. 381, 402-03, 84 L. Ed. 1263, 60 S. Ct. 907 (1940); Fairmont Aluminum Co. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 222 F.2d 622, 627 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 838, 100 L. Ed. 748, 76 S. Ct. 76 (1955); 2 Davis, Administrative Law §§ 18.01-18.10 (1958).

to an agency's determination of facts underlying its conclusion that jurisdiction was lacking. In this case, however, there is no real dispute concerning those facts which the Commission held to be jurisdictional. Thus, plaintiffs do not seriously allege that they were plying a trade other than selling shipping services to foreigners, for transportation of foreign-owned goods to foreign consignees. They do not allege that the goods thus transported between foreign ports originated in the United States. On the other hand, defendants cannot seriously contest that the key to this whole trade was that plaintiffs and defendants were not just selling shipping services: They were selling United [*810] States-flag shipping services, which fact was of crucial importance to importers requiring AID-dollar financing for their transactions. Thus the sole question is whether, under those facts, a conspiracy to drive plaintiffs [9] out of the business of selling United States-flag shipping services is a restraint on United States foreign commerce subject to the Sherman Act.

Although the Commission was of the view that defendant's activities had no effect on United States "foreign commerce," that determination rested solely on the standards of the Shipping Act of 1916. Thus the Commission held that its entire jurisdiction [10] was limited to activities affecting "foreign commerce" within the intendment of HN3[] section 1 of the Shipping Act, [15] which defines a "common carrier by water in foreign commerce" as a "common carrier . . . engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property between the United States or any of its Districts, Territories, or possessions and a foreign country." As plaintiffs carried no property or passengers to or from the United States they were not engaged in foreign commerce under the Shipping Act. [16]

[11] The Commission did not rule that there was no "foreign commerce" as that term is used in the Sherman Act, nor did it rule that the standards under the two acts were the same. It is commonplace in the law to encounter instances of the same words being given different scope in different contents. [17] [12] Indeed counsel for the defendants effectively put it to the Commission that jurisdiction under the Shipping Act is narrower than under the Sherman Act, and counsel objected to antitrust principles being "dragged in by the heels." [18] [13] [*811]

---

[14] Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, supra, 310 U.S. at 403; Estevez v. Nabers, 219 F.2d 321, 323-24 (5th Cir. 1955).

[15] 46 U.S.C. § 801.

[16] HN4[] Section 15 of the Shipping Act provides that, "Every common carrier by water, or other person subject to this chapter, shall file immediately with the Commission a true copy, or, if oral, a true and complete memorandum, of every agreement with another such carrier or other person subject to this chapter, or modification or cancellation thereof, to which it may be a party or conform in whole or in part, fixing or regulating transportation rates or fares; giving or receiving special rates, accommodations, or other special privileges or advantages; controlling, regulating, preventing, or destroying competition; pooling or apportioning earnings, losses, or traffic; allotting ports or restricting or otherwise regulating the number and character of sailings between ports; limiting or regulating in any way the volume or character of freight or passenger traffic to be carried; or in any manner providing for an exclusive, preferential, or cooperative working arrangement. The term "agreement " in this section includes understandings, conferences, and other arrangements." 46 U.S.C. § 814.

The Commission thus substantially limited the broad term "every agreement," presumably on the grounds that the sole concern of the Shipping Act was with that trade which by virtue of § 1 made anyone carrying it subject to the Act. A similar approach, albeit in a different context, was rejected by the Supreme Court in Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. FMC, 390 U.S. 261, 88 S. Ct. 929, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1090 (1968).

Moreover, the Commission held that, in the AFBO context, the defendants "cannot be deemed to be engaged in the foreign commerce of the United States, . . . for the simple reason that the trade does not involve as one terminus any port in a State, District, Territory or possession of the United States."

[17] Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355, 76 L. Ed. 795, 52 S. Ct. 397 (1932); Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 434, 76 L. Ed. 1204, 52 S. Ct. 607 (1932); Sampson v. Channell, 110 F.2d 754, 128 A.L.R. 394 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 310 U.S. 650, 84 L. Ed. 1415, 60 S. Ct. 1099 (1940); Cf. Towne v. Eisner, 245 U.S. 418, 62 L. Ed. 372, 38 S. Ct. 158 (1918); Cook, "Substance" and "Procedure" in the Conflict of Laws, 42 Yale L.J. 333, 337 (1933).

[18] The following colloquy took place at oral argument before the Commission:

Accordingly defendants cannot bootstrap the Commission's determination into a preclusive ruling on whether foreign commerce was restrained under Sherman Act standards. [19]

2. We turn therefore to the principal issue in the case: Whether the District Court was correct [14] in its jurisdictional determination that the complaint made no allegation of restraint on United States foreign commerce. Seeking affirmance of that ruling, defendants urge that there can be no restraint of United States foreign commerce, and hence no Sherman Act violation, no matter how egregious the conduct under Sherman Act standards, unless there is restraint of, or substantial effect on, United States commodity imports or exports or transportation to or from the United States.

In our view plaintiffs, in participating in the market of supplying the service of transportation in United States-flag vessels, were engaged in foreign commerce of the United States. We have no doubt that the Sherman Act applies to the restraint alleged here, an attempt by American firms to deny another American firm access to a line of international shipping trade created by Congress for the general benefit of American shipping. We hereafter elaborate our reasons for these views.

3. We may usefully begin our analysis by considering defendants' rather guarded assertions that the carriage of foreign-owned goods between foreign ports in American vessels may not be "commerce with foreign nations" subject [15] to constitutional regulation by Congress. Concededly defendants themselves are engaged in United States foreign commerce, because they carry United States exports and imports. Their actions clearly can be regulated by Congress. Their contention, however, is that the Sherman Act cannot be applicable unless United States foreign commerce itself is restrained. [20] Obviously if plaintiffs [*812] were not engaged in United States

---

> Commissioner Hearn: Now, do you contend that, furthering Mr. Patterson's question, do carrier members of AFBO, purely by reason of the foreign inter-port carriage, can act with impunity so far as this Commission is concerned, dealing with MSTS and AID cargo, even to the detriment of the United States-flag carrier?
>
> Mr. Poole: So far as the Shipping Act is concerned, yes. I think they take their chances under the antitrust laws.
>
> Commissioner Hearn: Well, in that case, you draw the distinction between foreign commerce of the United States and section 15 here?
>
> Mr. Poole: Yes.
>
> Well, section 15 I think, can only be read in reference to section 1 of the Act where it defines those carriers which are subject to the regulation of the Shipping Act. There section 1 makes it pretty clear that it is only those carriers which are in the foreign trade from or to ports in the United States or districts, territories, and possessions of the United States are those carriers in the foreign commerce which are regulated by the Shipping Act.
>
> What I am saying is it has been held, and I think it is true, that the jurisdiction under the Shipping Act is more restrictive than the jurisdiction under the antitrust laws. That is why I objected to antitrust principles being dragged in by the heels, so to speak, to define the jurisdiction of the Commission under the Shipping Act. (JA 148)

[19] In our view the judgment cannot be affirmed because of the doctrine of primary jurisdiction invoked by appellees. The Hearing Examiners' findings insofar as they are purely factual are not really contested. Insofar as they make judgment on matters like legal causality under anti -trust standards, their significance is limited both because the Commission made no ruling on them, and in any event, they do not lie within the area of expertise which justifies deference to the agency's findings.

Furthermore, the purpose of the primary jurisdiction doctrine is to harmonize the application of antitrust and regulatory policies. The Commission held merely that it had no regulatory power with respect to this conspiracy, not that this was lawful behavior under the Act and consistent with public interest. Compare S.W.W., Inc. v. Air Transport Ass'n of America, 89 U.S. App. D.C. 273, 280, 191 F.2d 658, 664 (1951), cert. denied, 343 U.S. 955, 72 S. Ct. 1049, 96 L. Ed. 1355 (1952).

[20] Defendants' point rests on analogy from cases involving restraints in interstate commerce, holding the Sherman Act is applicable only where the target of the restraint is interstate commerce, e.g., Lieberthal v. North Country Lanes, 332 F.2d 269, 272 (2d Cir. 1964); Page v. Work, 290 F.2d 323, 330 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 875, 7 L. Ed. 2d 76, 82 S. Ct. 121 (1961); David Cabrera, Inc. v. Union de Choferes y Duenos, 256 F. Supp. 839, 843-44 (D.P.R. 1966).

foreign commerce in the constitutional sense, there could be no such restraint. We therefore consider whether plaintiffs engaged in United States foreign commerce.

[16] Gibbons v. Ogden [21] makes clear that, HN5[] as used in the Constitution, "commerce" is a very broad concept which includes navigation -- not merely because of the relationship between shipping and the movement of goods, [22] [17] most certainly commerce, but also because shipping itself is a form of gainful economic activity. [23] Were it not so, Chief Justice Marshall wrote, "the government of the Union has no direct power over the subject, and can make no law prescribing what shall constitute American vessels, or requiring that they shall be navigated by American seamen." [24]

Gibbons v. Ogden unequivocally [18] states that HN6[] the constitutional language granting Congress power to regulate "commerce [*813] with foreign nations" authorizes Congressional enactment of laws regulating "every species of commercial intercourse between the United States and foreign nations." [24]A That much was "universally admitted" in 1824. Plainly, United States vessels engage in a "species of commercial intercourse" between the United States and foreign nations regardless of the ownership or national origin of the goods they carry.

Similarly the defendants urge that United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 230-32, 233, 91 L. Ed. 2010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 (1947) holds that the "commerce " affected by a restraint on transportation is determined by terminal points of the journey. In that case, the Supreme Court dismissed, for want of a restraint of interstate commerce, that portion of the Government's antitrust complaint that related to a monopoly of local taxicab service. However, the problem there is primarily whether the federal government, acting within the framework of a federal system, has power to deal with such local restraint. The issue turns, as it must under the Constitution, on whether the facts show an effect on interstate commerce. The disclaimer of interstate commerce does not constitute a withdrawal of American law, but an assessment that what is involved is a matter of local law rather than national law.

Where foreign commerce is involved, however, the issues are different. In a sense the question of interpretation may still be similar: Whether United States regulation is reasonable in light of the international, rather than intrastate, character of the trade. However, the problem is different for the courts because the question may properly be answered by reference to factors such as citizenship that are meaningful in an international setting yet not involved where the issue is whether local commerce or national interstate commerce is restrained. Furthermore, the courts have an obligation to follow Congressional will that is greater when the only reason for failure to do so is lack of harmony with principles of international law, than it is when the Congressional intention is counter to the Constitutional mandates reserving the regulation of local affairs to the states rather than to Congress. Compare Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 434, 76 L. Ed. 1204, 52 S. Ct. 607 (1932).

[21] 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23 (1824).

[22] Compare United States v. South Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533, 538, 64 S. Ct. 1162, 88 L. Ed. 1440 n. 7 (1944) where the Government, appealing a dismissal of an indictment, argued that even if insurance was not "commerce" a restraint in the insurance industry was a restraint on those industries which must buy fire insurance. Because of its broad reading of "commerce" the Court found it unnecessary to pass on such questions.

[23] See also Justice Story's construction of the word "trade" in the Coasting and Fishery Act of 1793, 1 Stat. 305, in The Nymph, 18 Fed. 506 (1834), quoted by the Supreme Court in United States v. National Ass'n of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485, 490-91, 94 L. Ed. 1007, 70 S. Ct. 711 (1950):

> "The argument for the claimant insists that 'trade' is here used in its most restrictive sense, and as equivalent to traffic in goods, or buying and selling in commerce or exchange. But I am clearly of the opinion that such is not the true sense of the word, as used in the 32d section. In the first place, the word 'trade' is often, and indeed generally, used in a broader sense, as equivalent to occupation, employment, or business, whether manual or mercantile. Wherever any occupation, employment, or business is carried on for the purpose of profit, or gain, or a livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions, it is constantly called a trade."

[24] 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) at 190, 6 L. Ed. 2d 23.

[24] A 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) at 193, 6 L. Ed. 23.

One of the significant accounts in foreign commercial intercourse is the fact that certain maritime nations earn income for their balance of international payments by providing transportation services involving neither their ports nor their products. Examples readily suggest themselves: e.g., Norway, Greece, Great Britain. They are engaged, in terms that [19] are readily and fully understood by practical businessmen as well as theoretical economists, in the "export" of shipping services. So too, when American vessels earn transportation income, whether by payments from foreigners or Americans, there is direct benefit to the economy of the United States. More American seamen are employed and there is more business for American-based service industries dependent on shipping -- e.g., repair and insurance. The fact that American-flag vessels must carry American crews, [25] and are liable to penalty tax if they are repaired abroad, [26] and are available to the Government in time of national emergency [27] provides a substantial and on-going nexus to the United States.

[20] These are the kinds of beneficial consequences, apart from any interest of the vessel owner himself, that nations further in their public interest by protecting the trade aspirations of their citizens. That policy is particularly compelling where ships are concerned because of the need to maintain a strong merchant marine available in wartime regardless of its peacetime routes.

Substantiating our view that the sale of American flag shipping services to foreigners is itself a form of United States foreign trade, is the protection Congress accorded to that trade in section 14 of the Shipping Act of 1916. HN7[] That section authorizes the Federal Maritime Commission to bar foreign carriers from United States ports if they are parties to an agreement respecting transportation between foreign ports that excludes American-flag carriers from admission on equal terms. [28] [21] And defendants apparently concede that the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq., passed by Congress under its commerce power, is applicable to all American-flag vessels. [29]

[*814] 4. We hold that plaintiffs were engaged in the foreign commerce of the United States for purposes not only of determining constitutional power, but also [22] of determining the applicability of the Sherman Act, which prohibits conspiracies "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations."

---

[25] 46 U.S.C. § 672a(b), requires generally that 75% of the crew shall be United States citizens.

[26] 19 U.S.C. § 257.

[27] 46 U.S.C. § 1242(a). The statute applies to all vessels owned by citizens of the United States.

[28] 46 U.S.C. § 813, providing in pertinent part:

> "The Federal Maritime Board upon its own initiative may, or upon complaint shall, after due notice to all parties in interest and hearing, determine whether any person, not a citizen of the United States and engaged in transportation by water of passengers or property --
>
> * * *
>
> "(2) Is a party to any combination, agreement, or understanding, express or implied, that involves in respect to transportation of passengers or property between foreign ports, deferred rebates or any other unfair practice designated in section 812 of this title, and that excludes from admission upon equal terms with all other parties thereto, a common carrier by water which is a citizen of the United States and which has applied for such admission."

Any person who is a party to such an agreement is denied the right of entry to United States ports.

[29] Defendants note that the Jones Act, 46 U.S.C. § 688, according a remedy to seamen injured in the course of their employment, is rooted in Congress's Article III admiralty power. As to the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq., defendants contend that this is mere application of the internationally recognized principle that for purposes of on-board conduct and regulation of the crew, ships are part of the territory of the flag nation. United States v. Flores, 289 U.S. 137, 77 L. Ed. 1086, 53 S. Ct. 580 (1933). While it may be that the fiction justifies application of United States law to American vessels as a matter of international law, it by no means follows that this serves as the source of Congressional power under our constitutional law. The constitutional basis of the National Labor Relations Act is, pure and simple, the commerce power.

The basic approach to Sherman Act construction is the broad premise that Congress exercised therein the full scope of its powers under the Commerce clause of the Constitution. [30] That premise has been stated in cases involving interstate commerce, and may well be subject to limitations -- for cause shown, so to speak -- in regard to foreign commerce. [31] [23] For example, it may fairly be inferred, in the absence of clear showing to the contrary, that Congress did not intend an application that would violate principles of international law. [32]

[*815] However, the broad statement that Congress has exercised the full sweep of its commerce powers is [24] not without significance in determining whether the Sherman Act applies as to restraints that operate, in the constitutional sense, against the "foreign commerce" of the United States. The Sherman Act has aptly been characterized as a "charter of freedom." [33] [25] Its principle of limiting the accumulation and exercise of dominant economic power [34] is rooted in historic notions of the invalidity of unreasonable trade restraints, [35] and that policy has been increasingly accepted as a fundamental principle of our system. [36] HN8[] If, as defendants contend,

---

[30] See, United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, 324 U.S. 293, 298, 89 L. Ed. 951, 65 S. Ct. 661 (1945); United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533, 558, 88 L. Ed. 1440, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1944); Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers Inc., v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 435, 76 L. Ed. 1204, 52 S. Ct. 607 (1932).

[31] In United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 443 (2d Cir. 1945), Judge Learned Hand wrote: "Nevertheless, it is quite true that we are not to read general words, such as those in this Act, without regard to the limitations customarily observed by nations upon the exercise of their powers; limitations which generally correspond to those fixed by the 'Conflict of Laws.' We should not impute to Congress an intent to punish all whom its courts can catch, for conduct which has no consequences within the United States."

The International complications that have arisen concerning the application of United States antitrust laws to foreign commerce relate primarily to subjection of foreigners to United States laws for acts not done in the United States. See e.g., British Nylon Spinners, Ltd. v. Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., 2 All E.R. 780 (Ct. App. 1952). The theory on which this liability has proceeded is that "any state may impose liabilities, even upon persons not within its allegiance, for conduct outside its borders that has consequences within its borders which the state reprehends; and these liabilities other states will ordinarily recognize." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra, 148 F.2d at 443. Conformance to international law is argued by analogy to the decision in The Case of the S.S. "Lotus" P.C.I.J. Ser. A. No. 10 (1927).

In the case at bar, however, no such international complications are present insofar as nationality is a recognized international basis for prescribing conduct, cf. Blackmer v. United States, 284 U.S. 421, 76 L. Ed. 375, 52 S. Ct. 252 (1932), and in any event the interests of foreign parties are insubstantial. Thus while we agree with defendants' arguments that considerations of comity are appropriate in construction of the antitrust laws, we think that here it is the Sherman Act's applicability, rather than inapplicability, that is supported by consideration of the "comity" factors -- considerations similar to the factors appropriate in choice-of-law cases, see generally Cheatham & Reese, Choice of the Applicable Law, 52 Colum. L. Rev. 959 (1952).

[32] Compare McCulloch v. Sociedad Nacional de Marineros de Honduras, 372 U.S. 10, 21, 9 L. Ed. 2d 547, 83 S. Ct. 671 (1963) with The Charming Betsy, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 64, 118, 2 L. Ed. 208 (1804) (Marshall, C.J.).

For a sampling of the dialogue concerning the legality under international standards of applications of the anti-trust laws of the United States to foreign nationals, see, e.g., Carlston, Antitrust Policy Abroad, 49 Nw. U. L. Rev. 713 (1955); Fugate, Antitrust Jurisdiction and Foreign Sovereignty, 49 U. Va. L. Rev. 925 (1963); Whitney, Sources of Conflict Between International Law and the Antitrust Laws, 63 Yale L.J. 655 (1954); Symposium, Extraterritorial Effect of the U.S. Antitrust Laws, A.B.A. Antitrust Law Section, Proceedings at the Annual Meeting 65 (1957); Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. (1966).

[33] Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359, 77 L. Ed. 825, 53 S. Ct. 471 (1933).

[34] See generally Bork, Bowman, Blake & Jones, The Goals of Antitrust: A Dialogue on Policy, 65 Colum. L. Rev. 422 (1965).

[35] Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (6th Cir. 1898), aff'd 175 U.S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 (1899); Dewey, Common-Law Background of Antitrust Policy, 41 U. Va. L. Rev. 759 (1955).

that policy cannot extend to the full sweep of American foreign commerce because of the international complications involved, then surely the test which determines whether United States law is applicable must focus on the nexus between the parties and their practices and the United States, not on the mechanical circumstances of effect on commodity exports or imports.

[26] HN10[] The Sherman Act is not limited, in effect, to restraints on sales of goods. That is the thrust of defendants' distinction. In the domestic setting, however, it is settled that the Sherman Act's bar on unreasonable restraints on trade or commerce extends to service industries -- and transportation is clearly a service industry [37] -- as part of commerce. [38] [27] There is no basis in the statute or in reason to argue that conspiracies in service industries are proscribed only if the services are in interstate commerce, and not if they are in foreign commerce. [39]

Defendants correctly point out that the cases hitherto applying the Sherman Act to foreign commerce have in fact involved either exports or imports of goods, or transportation to or from [*816] United States ports, [40] and conclude that it is inapplicable unless one or the other is present. [41] We recognize that ours is the first ruling on the issue before us -- but if there has never before been a ruling affirming application of the Act to this kind of trade, neither has there been a ruling rejecting that application. The matter is res nova, and we must decide it in the light of the reasoning and analysis [28] that appears to us to be sound.

[29] It may be noted that in related contexts contentions close to those urged by defendants have not been accepted. A mechanical commodity export-import limitation was rejected by the District Court in In re Grand Jury Investigation of the Shipping Industry, 186 F. Supp. 298, 313 (D.D.C. 1960). Prior to that it had been rejected as unsound by the 1955 Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (p. 77-80). We reject it also.

---

[36] HN9[] Antitrust principles are relevant even in those economic sectors subject to day-to-day supervision by federal regulatory agencies. FMC v. Aktiebologat Svenska Amerika Linien, 390 U.S. 238, 88 S. Ct. 1005, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1071 (1968); United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 12 L. Ed. 2d 12, 84 S. Ct. 1044 (1964); United States v. Radio Corp. of America, 358 U.S. 334, 351, 3 L. Ed. 2d 354, 79 S. Ct. 457 (1959); Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 89 L. Ed. 1051, 65 S. Ct. 716 (1945); City of Pittsburgh v. FPC, 237 F.2d 741, 99 U.S. App. D.C. 113, 237 F.2d 741 (1956).

[37] United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U.S. 505, 43 L. Ed. 259, 19 S. Ct. 25 (1898); United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540 (1897).

[38] United States v. National Ass'n of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485, 94 L. Ed. 1007, 70 S. Ct. 711 (1950); Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers Inc., v. United States, supra note 17; United States v. American Medical Ass'n, 72 App. D.C. 12, 110 F.2d 703, cert. denied, 310 U.S. 644, 84 L. Ed. 1411, 60 S. Ct. 1096 (1940).

[39] With this case in a purely jurisdictional posture we need not consider the question, in many ways more difficult, whether in terms of ruling on the merits of the validity of actions taken, the Sherman Act standards of reasonableness developed for interstate commerce should be applicable with full force to foreign transactions, and whether that issue is still open in light of Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 95 L. Ed. 1199, 71 S. Ct. 971 (1951).

[40] See, e.g., Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962) (United States vanadium exports); Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, supra note 39 (imports and exports of industrial bearings); United States v. Sisal Sales Corp., 274 U.S. 268, 71 L. Ed. 1042, 47 S. Ct. 592 (1927) (United States sisal imports); United States v. Aluminum Company of America (ALCOA), 148 F.2d 416 (2d Cir. 1945) exports and imports of aluminum ingot); United States v. Imperial Chemical Industries, 100 F. Supp. 504, 591-592 (S.D.N.Y. 1951) (exports and imports of explosive powder); United States v. General Electric Co., 82 F. Supp. 753, 891 (D.N.J. 1949) (exports and imports of incandescent lamps).

[41] HN11[] Where the allegedly illegal restraint concerns commodities then, of course, the absence of an effect on United States exports or imports renders the Sherman Act inapplicable. See, e.g., Alfred Bell & Co. v. Catalda Fine Arts, Inc., 191 F.2d 99, 105 (2d Cir. 1951) (price-fixing agreement "explicitly confined to Great Britain and Ireland" not violative of United States antitrust laws).

It may be assumed that, as a matter of construing Congressional intent, HN12[] the Sherman Act has no application where the market involved consists of shipping services between two foreign ports, without any American characteristic, and the only American aspect is that one or some of the persons competing in the transportation market is offering American flag ships. In the case before us, however, we hold that, since there is an identifiable, distinctive market for American-flag shipping service where the American characteristic is dominant -- a market defined as involving the transportation of AID-financed cargoes, which [30] has a definite nexus with significant interests of the United States -- HN13[] the Sherman Act is applicable to a conspiracy to exclude newcomers from the trade. [42]

Our conclusion as to the existence of the requisite nexus is influenced by three salient considerations. First, the trade is entirely a product of the United States policy of subsidizing its merchant [31] marine. It is the United States that has the greatest interest in this trade, and its conduct on a strong and efficient basis. Defendants claim that AID is merely a financier, yet the fact that the foreign importers were willing to accept the burden of higher-cost United States-flag shipping in order to get AID financing tends to show that AID was providing a stimulus to trade far beyond the realm of the conventional private financier. We may take note of what Judge Ryan found, on a more complete record, concerning the significance of AID and its programs. In United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Ass'n he wrote:

> We also do not accept or agree with defendant's argument that AID was but an incidental party to the transaction -- no more than the usual financing institution found in international transactions where there are problems of currency exchange. AID was at the center of the transactions, it was the force which initiated, directed, controlled [*817] and financed them. Without AID, there would have been no sale or purchase and the extent of the role it played was known in every detail to and relied on by both parties to the transactions, particularly [32] by the supplier who looked to it for payment and obligated itself to conform to its requirements and conditions if he was to receive payment. [43]

Since the United States has established and promoted, in carriage of AID-financed movements, this trade of providing American-flag shipping service, it is only reasonable to expect the "fundamental national economic policy" of the antitrust laws to be applicable. [44] [33] Clearly, the right of all American-flag ships to participate is basic. Had there been a conspiracy of foreign carriers to exclude American-flag ships from access to trade, the Federal Maritime Commission would have been directed to exclude them from United States ports. [45] Can it be supposed that Congress intended American competitors to be able to organize a similar conspiracy with total immunity for their conduct?

Secondly, all parties must be Americans to participate in serving this market for American-flag shipping. Consequently there are few possible international complications to justify an interpretation that deliberately cuts back on the scope of the antitrust laws as applied to commerce which greatly concerns the United States. HN14[] It is plain that where American foreign commerce is affected foreigners may be held under our antitrust laws for restraints thereon. [46] [34] It is also significant, for the purpose of determining whether what is involved

[42] Compare, Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962); Branch v. FTC, 141 F.2d 31 (7th Cir. 1944), both of which condemned, as illegal, conduct by American firms having an adverse effect on the international business opportunities of other American firms. See also the Webb-Pomerene Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 61-65, conditioning antitrust immunity for export associations, in part, on the absence of restraint on the export trade of any domestic corporation.

[43] 273 F. Supp. 263, 270-71 (S.D.N.Y. 1967) prob. juris noted, 390 U.S. 1001, 88 S. Ct. 1245, 20 L. Ed. 2d 102 (1968).

[44] Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conf., 383 U.S. 213, 218, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709, 86 S. Ct. 781 (1966).

[45] See 46 U.S.C. § 813, quoted note 28, supra.

constitutes activities affecting American foreign commerce within the scope of the antitrust laws that the trade not only has significant contacts and nexus with the United States but also is the province of American concerns. [47]

5. We now consider whether the foregoing analysis is to any extent aborted or negatived by defendants' contention that, whatever the case as to the application of the antitrust laws generally to foreign commerce not involving commodity exports, the Sherman Act must be read in conjunction with, and be limited by, the Shipping Act of 1916. Defendants thus switch from their prior position [*818] before the Commission, [48] and now urge that the Commission's jurisdiction and the Sherman Act are coterminous. If the two acts are to be held to have similar coverage, it may well be because insofar as agreements of common carriers affecting foreign commerce are concerned, the Commission was in error in its narrow view of Shipping Act jurisdiction, [49] [35] not because the Sherman Act is to be narrowed.

The Supreme Court has specifically held that HN16[] the antitrust laws, which "represent a fundamental national economic policy," continue in effect as to the shipping industry, and their rate-making activities in foreign commerce. Carnation Co. v. Pacific Westbound Conference, 383 U.S. 213, 15 L. Ed. 2d 709, 86 S. Ct. 781 (1966). The Court recognized that HN17[] the Shipping Act limits the scope of the antitrust laws, but this curtailment was confined to the "explicit provision exempting activities which are lawful under § 15 of the [Shipping] Act," and the Court declined to countenance any "unstated legislative purpose to free the shipping industry from the antitrust laws." See 383 U.S. at 216, 217. [36] HN18[] Therefore the antitrust laws continue in effect, without modification based merely on implication, as to common carriers, subject to the Act, which do not obtain the Commission approval under § 15 which Congress required as a condition of exemption. The antitrust laws also continue in effect as to areas not subject to the Shipping Act -- e.g., a restraint engineered by one or more ocean tramps affecting American foreign commerce. The fact that the Shipping Act is limited by virtue of § 1, to those vessel operators who are "common carriers" certainly cannot be supposed to make an exemption available, say, to operators not common carriers, offering service of transporting commodities from the United States. That instance is not our case, of course, but it exemplifies that the two acts do not precisely mesh. [50]

[37] In a more sophisticated contention, defendants say that the fact that the provision in § 15 providing an exemption from the antitrust laws was not made applicable to shipping between foreign ports is an indication of Congressional understanding that such shipping was not subject to the American antitrust laws. Indeed Congress

---

[46] HN15[] It is settled that the antitrust laws may apply to foreigners. See, e.g., United States v. The Watchmakers of Switzerland Information Center, Inc., 133 F. Supp. 40, 134 F. Supp. 710 (S.D.N.Y. 1955); 168 F. Supp. 904 (S.D.N.Y. 1958).

Where restraints of commodity exports or imports are concerned, the test most used to determine whether the Sherman Act is applicable to acts done outside the United States is that formulated by Judge Learned Hand in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra note 31, whether the agreement was intended to, and did affect United States imports or exports. See, e.g., United States v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 92 F. Supp. 947 (D. Mass. 1950). The principal question is what is meant, in this context, by the word "intent" in light of the presumption that persons are presumed to intend the natural consequences of their actions.

The considerations outlined in this opinion of American contacts and nexus (see supra, p. 816) provide objective criteria that may usefully supplement such an "intent" test.

[47] In our case it is effectively the province of American operators, by law. It is significant that in the overwhelming bulk of the decided cases involving application of the antitrust laws to American commerce, the prohibited conspiracy was one in which American concerns played a significant role. See, e.g., cases cited note 40, supra.

[48] See note 18, supra.

[49] See note 16, supra.

[50] HN19[] The Shipping Act does not eliminate all possibility of risks under the antitrust laws. Compare Ryan, J., in Sabre Shipping Corp. v. American Presidential Lines, 285 F. Supp. 949 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

contemplated in § 14 of the Act that American carriers would participate in foreign rate conferences governing shipping between foreign ports, and could hardly have supposed that they would be subject to the antitrust laws, or to more competition than governed shipping to and from the United States.

The dispositive analysis seems to us to run as follows: HN20[] We are not to turn to the acts of subsequent Congresses for unstated exemptions, or implied repeals, of the anti-trust laws. That is clear from Carnation.[51] [38] Moreover, "how members of the 1914 Congress may have interpreted the 1890 Act is not of weight for the purpose of construing the Sherman Act."[52]

The immunity granted by Congress in the Shipping Act was limited to those instances where there was some assurance, provided by Commission approval, that acts immunized from the antitrust laws were not contrary to the over-all public interest. We have already [*819] expressed our doubt whether the Commission correctly disclaimed jurisdiction over the commerce before us. But assuming, for discussion, that the Commission was right, this is at most a casus omissus, and the antitrust exemption or limitation is not to be implied, but is to be furnished only when and as directed by the legislature, which has hitherto accompanied such directions with substitute provisions to safeguard the public interest.

Finally, we turn to defendants' argument that American participation in unapproved foreign conferences is contemplated by § 14 of the Shipping Act, and hence cannot reasonably be deemed governed by the anti-trust laws. Such foreign conferences do not have the primary nexus of American [39] contacts (supra point 5), which underlies our ruling that the activities before us constitute foreign commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Act.

Reversed and remanded.

End of Document

---

[51] See also, United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 350, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963); Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 9 L. Ed. 2d 325, 83 S. Ct. 476 (1963); California v. FPC, 369 U.S. 482, 8 L. Ed. 2d 54, 82 S. Ct. 901 (1962); United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 201, 84 L. Ed. 181, 60 S. Ct. 182 (1939).

[52] United States v. Wise, 370 U.S. 405, 414, 8 L. Ed. 2d 590, 82 S. Ct. 1354 (1962).

Research Frontiers, Inc. v. Marks Polarized Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

September 30, 1968

No. 67 Civ. 1149

Reporter

290 F. Supp. 725 *; 1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12305 ; 160 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 574 ; 12 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 301

RESEARCH FRONTIERS INCORPORATED, Plaintiff, v. MARKS POLARIZED CORPORATION, Alvin M. Marks and Mortimer M. Marks, Defendants, and Robert Saxe, Morton Berger and Robert Thompson, Counter-Defendants

Core Terms

patents, license, infringement, license agreement, pendent jurisdiction, patent infringement, state court

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Diversity Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN1[] Conveyances, Licenses

If a complaint states only a claim for breach of a patent license agreement, and not an infringement or threatened infringement of patents, jurisdiction would be in the state courts, there being no diversity of citizenship. On the other hand, an exclusive licensee of a patent may sue for infringement of the patent. He may sue his licensor in the federal courts under the patent laws, even though the licensor is the owner of the patents he is charged with infringing.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN2[] Conveyances, Licenses

The fact that a license is subject to rights previously granted to others, does not prevent the license agreement from being an "exclusive" license under 35 U.S.C.S. § 261. It is sufficient that the license agreement bars the licensor from enlarging the scope of existing licenses or increasing the number of licenses.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN3[] Conveyances, Licenses

The issues would have been clarified if plaintiff had expressly alleged infringement of "patents" instead of infringement of the "exclusive licenses" granted by the patentee-defendant. Such verbal niceties should not be decisive of the sufficiency of a pleading, even on allegations of jurisdiction, under the present practice of "notice pleading." An allegation that the patentee-licensor has infringed the exclusive license by "manufacture, use and sale" of specified products gives notice that infringement of patents is claimed. Particulars concerning which patents are infringed can be obtained through discovery proceedings.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN4[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

Where a valid ground of federal jurisdiction exists, the court may consider state claims, which derive from "a common nucleus of operative fact." The current test stated by the United States Supreme Court is that the state and federal claims must derive from a common nucleus of operative fact. But if, considered without regard to their federal or state character, a plaintiff's claims are such that he would ordinarily be expected to try them all in one judicial proceeding, then, assuming substantiality of the federal issues, there is power in federal courts to hear the whole.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN5[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

Pendent jurisdiction is to be exercised in the court's discretion, based on judicial economy, convenience and fairness to litigants.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

International Trade Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Misappropriation

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Ancillary Jurisdiction

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Unfair Competition

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Infringement Actions > Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN6[] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit recognizes a widening scope for pendent jurisdiction, where there is an overlap of factual basis between patent or trademark and unfair competition claims. The same liberal application of the rule extends to claims of misappropriation of trade secrets, antitrust law violations, fraudulent transfers, and foreign patents.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN7[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

A plaintiff with two claims against the same defendants, based on breach of the same agreements, is normally expected to try both claims in one proceeding.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Removal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Partnerships

HN8[] Preliminary Considerations, Removal

The extent of effort already put into a case is a proper factor when considering pendent jurisdiction. The burden on the litigants, and on the state courts, if two actions are required, is also relevant. Although the state courts are a separate judicial system, they are partners of the federal courts in the administration of justice. Easing the burden of a federal court by removing part of a case to the state courts, where such a removal is not required, would be unfair treatment of an already over-burdened partner. Leaving the entire case joined in the federal venue promotes judicial economy and the convenience of the parties.

Counsel: [1] Feldshuh & Frank, New York, New York, Sidney Feldshuh, New York, New York, of counsel, for plaintiff.

Hopgood & Calimafde, New York, New York, John M. Calimafde, New York, New York, of counsel, for defendants.

Judges: Judd, District Judge.

Opinion by: JUDD

Opinion

[*575] [*726] OPINION AND ORDER

JUDD, District Judge.

A motion to dismiss the complaint raises the question whether plaintiff has stated a claim for infringement of patents of which it is the exclusive licensee, or merely a claim for breach of the license agreements.

The complaint recites that plaintiff holds exclusive licenses from defendants to make, use and sell products and processes embodying inventions covered by certain patents. The agreements name twenty-one United States patents and twenty-five applications for United [*727] States patents relating to the polarization of light and other fields apparently related thereto. Certain foreign patents and applications are also covered by the license agreements. Each agreement recites that the defendants have granted plaintiff "an exclusive license, including the right to grant sub-licenses, to make, use and sell products and processes under the licensed patents and licensed [2] applications."

Infringement of the licenses is alleged, without reference to any specific patents. It is asserted that defendants manufactured and sold polarized sheets and polarized lenses to others. Additional claims are asserted against defendants, based on their negotiations with named companies for use of the same inventions licensed to plaintiff, thereby frustrating plaintiff's efforts to exploit its licenses. The allegations of improper license negotiations constitute a larger portion of the complaint than the allegations of infringing manufacture and sale.

The complaint seeks an injunction, ordinary and punitive damages, and counsel fees.

Defendants served an answer and amended answer, asserting defenses and counterclaims, obtained an order adding counter-defendants, and served notices of taking depositions, which have survived motions for protective orders. There were already twenty-five entries in this Court's docket before the motion to dismiss was filed.

The proceedings already taken would not prevent dismissal for lack of jurisdiction, for that question may be raised even after judgment. Smith Separator Corp. v. Dillon, 98 F.2d 521 (10th Cir. 1938). If jurisdiction [3] exists, however, they are relevant to the Court's exercise of discretion whether to retain jurisdiction of pendent causes of action.

HN1[] If the complaint stated only a claim for breach of a patent license agreement, and not an infringement or threatened infringement of patents, jurisdiction would be in the state courts, there being no diversity of citizenship. Luckett v. Delpark, Inc., 270 U.S. 496, 510-511, 46 S. Ct. 397, 70 L. Ed. 703 (1926). On the other hand, an exclusive licensee of a patent may sue for infringement of the patent. Wilborn & Sons, Inc. v. Brandex Tilt Sash, Inc., 380 F.2d 44 (7th Cir. 1967). He may sue his licensor in the federal courts under the patent laws, even though the licensor is the owner of the patents he is charged with infringing. Littlefield v. Perry, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 205, 22 L. Ed. 577 (1874); E.I.S. Mfg. Co., Inc. v. Supco Products Corp., 26 F. Supp. 758 (S.D.N.Y.1938).

HN2[] The fact that the license is subject to rights previously granted to others, does not prevent the license agreement from being an "exclusive" license under section 1 of the Patent Law (35 U.S.C. § 261). It is sufficient that the license agreement bars the licensor from enlarging [4] the scope of existing licenses or increasing the number of licenses. Mechanical Ice Tray Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 144 F.2d 720, 725 (C.C.A. 2, 1944).

HN3[] The issues here would have been clarified if plaintiff had expressly alleged infringement of "patents" instead of infringement of the "exclusive licenses" granted by the patentee-defendant. Such verbal niceties should not be decisive of the sufficiency of a pleading, even on allegations of jurisdiction, under the present practice of "notice pleading." A. T. Brod & Co. v. Perlow, 375 F.2d 393, 398 (2d Cir. 1967); Dioguardi v. Durning, 139 F.2d 774 (2d Cir. 1944). An allegation that the patentee-licensor has infringed the exclusive license by "manufacture, use and sale" of specified products gives notice that infringement of patents is claimed. Particulars concerning which [576] patents are infringed can be obtained through discovery proceedings.

It is assumed for purposes of this motion that the claims based on negotiations between defendants and others are not of themselves subject to federal jurisdiction, in the absence of any allegations that they resulted in the manufacture, [*728] use or sale of patented products or processes. [5] Half a century ago, it would have been necessary to split the lawsuit, and dismiss these portions of the complaint. Geneva Furniture Mfg. Co. v. S. Karpen & Bros., 238 U.S. 254, 259, 35 S. Ct. 788, 59 L. Ed. 1295 (1915). Intervening changes in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and extension of the doctrine of pendent jurisdiction put in question the continuing viability of the Geneva case.

HN4[] Where a valid ground of federal jurisdiction exists, the Court may also consider state claims which derive from "a common nucleus of operative fact." The current test has been stated by the Supreme Court as:

> "The state and federal claims must derive from a common nucleus of operative fact. But if, considered without regard to their federal or state character, a plaintiff's claims are such that he would ordinarily be expected to try them all in one judicial proceeding, then, assuming substantiality of the federal issues, there is power in federal courts to hear the whole." United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 1138, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218 (1966).

HN5[] Pendent jurisdiction is to be exercised in the Court's discretion, based on "judicial economy, convenience [6] and fairness to litigants" (id. at 726, 86 S. Ct. at 1139).

Even before the Gibbs case, HN6[] the Second Circuit Court of Appeals had recognized a widening scope for pendent jurisdiction, where there was an overlap of factual basis between patent or trademark and unfair competition claims. Maternally Yours, Inc. v. Your Maternity Shop, Inc., 234 F.2d 538, 543-544 (2d Cir. 1956); 28 U.S.C. § 1338(b). The same liberal application of the rule has been extended to claims of misappropriation of trade secrets (A. H. Emery Co. v. Marcan Products Corp., 268 F. Supp. 289, 292 [S.D.N.Y.1967]), anti-trust law violations (David & David, Inc. v. Myerson, 277 F. Supp. 973, 979 [E.D.N.Y.1966]), fraudulent transfers (Bartle v. Markson, 357 F.2d 517, 522-523 [2d Cir. 1966]), and foreign patents (Ortman v. Stanray Corp., 371 F.2d 154 [7th Cir. 1967]).

Applying the rule of the Gibbs case to the pleadings before us here, the license agreements and the various United States patents and patent applications provide a "common nucleus of operative fact." Defendants' counterclaims, seeking to annul the license agreements, could be pleaded in defense to the patent infringement portions of the [7] complaint (Wilborn & Sons, Inc. v. Brandex Tilt Sash, Inc., 380 F.2d at 47), and pleaded again in the state court if a separate action there were required on the claims based on negotiations between the defendant and others.

Acceptance of pendent jurisdiction is also indicated by the tendency to require a plaintiff to try his whole case in a single action (United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725 n. 13, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218). HN7[] A plaintiff with two claims against the same defendants, based on breach of the same agreements, would normally be expected to try both claims in one proceeding, thus bringing its case within the test stated in the Gibbs opinion (383 U.S. at 725, 86 S. Ct. 1130).

HN8[] The extent of effort already put into this case is a proper factor for consideration. A. H. Emery Co. v. Marcan Products Corp., 268 F. Supp. at 292-293. The burden on the litigants, and on the state courts, if two actions were required, is also relevant. Although the state courts are a separate judicial system, they are partners of the federal courts in the administration of justice. Easing the burden of a federal court by removing part of a case to the state courts, where [8] such a removal is not required, would be unfair treatment of an already over-burdened partner. Leaving the entire case joined in the federal venue promotes judicial economy and the convenience of the parties. American Foresight of Philadelphia, Inc. v. Fine Arts Sterling Silver, Inc., 268 F. Supp. 656 (E.D.Pa.1967).

[*729] "Judicial economy, convenience and fairness to litigants" all point to the exercise of pendent jurisdiction, and the power exists to exercise it.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

This opinion shall serve as an order.

End of Document

Klinger v. Rose

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

October 1, 1968

No. 64 Civ. 3653

Reporter

291 F. Supp. 456 *; 1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10140 ; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,582

Charlotte Klinger and Eric Klinger, Plaintiffs, v. Edward C. Rose, Revelle W. Brown, Wm. Fulton Kutz, Howard E. Simpson, Sidney D. Koine, E. Paul Gangewere, Jervis Langdon, Jr., Watson F. Tate, Jr., Edward F. McGinley, Jr., Frank C. LaGrange, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Co., and Reading Co. Defendants

Core Terms

Terminal, carrier, railroads, bids, interlocks, legislative history, private suit, Clayton Act, Defendants', summary judgment, common stock, antitrust, Commerce, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN1[] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Interlocking Directorates

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 20.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Interlocking Directorates

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The evident purpose of § 10 of the Clayton Act is to prohibit a corporation from abusing a common carrier by palming off upon it securities, supplies, and other articles without competitive bidding and at excessive prices through overreaching by, or other misfeasance of, common directors, to the financial injury of the carrier and the consequent impairment of its ability to serve the public interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides a cause of action where a person has been injured by a violation of "the anti-trust laws."

Judges: [1] Tyler, D.J.

Opinion by: TYLER

Opinion

[*457] TYLER, D.J.:

Plaintiffs, the owners of both common and preferred stock of Reading Company ("Reading"), a common carrier, have brought this derivative action on behalf of Reading seeking treble damages from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company ("B&O"), another common carrier, and from ten individual defendants who were directors of Reading at the time of the alleged misconduct. None of the individual defendants have been served. The suit is brought under Sections 4 [1] [2] and 10 [2] of the Clayton Act. The defendants B&O and Reading [3] jointly move for summary judgment dismissing the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

---

[1] HN1[] "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover three-fold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." 15 U.S.C. § 15.

[2] 15 U.S.C. § 20. That Section provides in pertinent part:

HN2[] "No common carrier engaged in commerce shall have any dealings in securities, supplies, or other articles of commerce, or shall make or have any contracts for construction or maintenance of any kind, to the amount of more than $ [3] [*458] Most of the facts have been stipulated by the parties. The transaction which is the basis of this action was the April, 1963 termination of Reading's interest in the Philadelphia Perishable Products Terminal Company ("Terminal"), a corporation created by the two railroads in 1927 to hold a joint terminal facility in Philadelphia. In 1927, Reading and B&O were each issued 250 shares of the common stock of Terminal, and in 1936 each was issued $ 2,000,000 of 4% negotiable demand notes by the company.

In the early 1960's Reading sought to terminate its interest in Terminal, and in April, 1963 sold its common stock and notes to B&O for $ 225,250 cash and $ 900,000 payable in 5 annual installments at 3% interest. On April 30, 1964, B&O paid the first installment with interest and pre-paid the balance of $ 720,000 discounted at 5% per year.

In connection with this transaction neither Reading nor B&O ever attempted to solicit bids pursuant to Section 10 and the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission ("I.C.C.") promulgated thereunder. [4]

[4] At the time of this transaction Reading and B&O had several directors in common. E. Paul Gangewere was president and director of Reading and a director of B&O, Jervis Langdon, Jr. was director of Reading and president of B&O (and part of its governing body), and Howard E. Simpson was a director of both railroads. Permission had been received by each of these individuals from the I.C.C. pursuant to Section 20(a)(12) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C. § 20(a)(12), to hold the respective interlocking directorships. At that time B&O owned 42% of the outstanding common stock of Reading. Reading was represented in the negotiations leading to the sale by John F. Kerslake, who was then an employee of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, B&O's parent.

The complaint alleges that Reading received for its interest in Terminal consideration that was inadequate by $ 765,000, and that this loss was a result of the failure of the Reading board of directors to obtain public bids as required by Section 10. The complaint also asserts that this failure by the board of directors was a direct result of the domination of the board by B&O and the acquiescence of the individual defendants [5] in the sale to B&O.

The primary basis for the joint motion for summary judgment by B&O and Reading is that Section 10 is not applicable to this transaction. The defendants make four arguments based on their interpretation of the legislative history of Section 10.

1. Defendants' first argument is based upon the word "securities" in the first paragraph of Section 10. Defendants correctly point out that nowhere is the word defined for purposes of the Clayton Act and that the meaning of the word in statutes varies. [5] [6] Defendants then describe certain parts of the legislative history which indicate that Congress' primary reason for inserting the word "securities" in Section 10 was to cover the gross abuses of interlocks between investment bankers and the railroads. [6] Defendants take great pains to characterize this sale of stock and notes as a mere paper transaction - the termination of a joint venture. Their conclusion is that this sale,

---

50,000, in the aggregate, in any one year, with another corporation, firm, partnership, or association when the said common carrier shall have upon its board of directors or as its president, manager, or as its purchasing or selling officer, or agent in the particular transaction, any person who is at the same time a director, manager, or purchasing or selling officer of, or who has any substantial interest in, such other corporation, firm, partnership, or association, unless and except such purchases shall be made from, or such dealings shall be with, the bidder whose bid is the most favorable to such common carrier, to be ascertained by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission."

[3] There is some disagreement between the parties as to the reason that Reading, for which recovery is sought in this action, has joined in B&O's motion. Plaintiffs claim that this fact is more evidence that the two railroads are in collusion. Defendant Reading claims that it has opposed plaintiffs because if plaintiffs are successful in this suit it will indicate that Reading has committed a crime under Section 10.

[4] 49 C.F.R. Part 1010.

[5] See, e.g., Securities Act of 1933, § 2(1), 15 U.S.C. § 77b(1); Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 3(a)(10), 15 U.S.C. § 78c(a)(10); Interstate Commerce Act, § 20a, 49 U.S.C. § 20a; Federal Power Act, § 3(16), 16 U.S.C. § 796 (16); Internal Revenue Code, Sections 351, 354, 355, 1236(c).

[6] Hearings, H. Judic. Comm., 63d Cong.2d Sess., Trust Legislation, 1913-14, pp. 679-80, 1062.

which could have been accomplished by dissolving Terminal and selling to B&O Reading's share of the assets, did not constitute "dealing in securities" within the meaning of Section 10.

The answer to this argument lies in the statute itself. Section 10 prescribes public bidding on certain " . . . dealings [*459] in securities, supplies, or other articles of commerce." The notes and stock in question fall within any normal meaning of the word "securities". Moreover, they are "articles of commerce" in the sense that they were apparently transferrable to third parties. Presumably defendants would not contend that if these notes and shares of common stock had been sold by Reading to a third party with which Reading had an interlock, they would not be "securities" for purposes of Section 10. The transaction under consideration here was not different merely because the sale was made to the owner of the other half of Terminal.

Defendants' argument that if Reading had accomplished the sale by another method Section 10 surely would not have applied begs the question. I assume that the parties had good and sufficient reasons for accomplishing the result in the manner they chose, [7] a transfer of stock and notes. I have no occasion to consider whether the defendants could have avoided the operation of Section 10 by using a different form.

2. Defendants' second argument, also based primarily upon an interpretation of legislative history, is that Section 10 does not apply to an interlock between two railroads. It is said that Section 10 applies only to so-called "vertical" interlocks, e.g., those in which a common carrier has directors in common with a supplier or an investment banker. [7]

The statute, of course, does not except "horizontal" interlocks. Furthermore, the authorities to which defendants have cited have concentrated on the nature of the interlock [8] rather than the nature of the transaction. The draftsmen of Section 10 as it now reads decided in favor of prohibiting certain tainted transactions rather than prohibiting interlocks outright. [8] As the defense memoranda point out, the present wording of Section 10 indicates that the Congress was concerned with vertical transactions rather than horizontal anti-competitive relationships which are covered in other parts of the statute. But the transaction in issue can be viewed as a vertical transaction, the nature of which is not changed by the fact that the purchaser was a competing railroad. Reading, in financial difficulties, sought through this sale to divest itself of properties not necessary for its current railroad operations and to enhance its precarious cash position. The mere fact that the buyer of the securities was a railroad rather than an investment banker does not obviate the abuse which Congress sought to remedy. On the contrary, if there was in fact damage to the Reading as a result of this sale, this is precisely the type of transaction which Section 10 was designed to cover. This contention, then, is rejected.

[9] It is suggested by counsel that the result of so deciding this point makes it practically impossible for two railroads to engage in this type of transaction because each would be required to get competitive bids, the seller being forced to accept the highest bid and the buyer the lowest. Two suggestions can be made on this point. First, where one of the two carriers dominates the other to the extent of holding 42% of its common stock, as here, the purposes of Section 10 are fulfilled if the dominated carrier alone obtains public bids. Second, if it be assumed that this and no other solution is available to substantially comply with the competitive bidding provisions of Section 10, perhaps this is not the kind of transaction in which two carriers ought to participate. [9]

3. Defendants' third venture into legislative history gives rise to their [*460] conclusion that Section 10 applies only to securities issued by the common carrier [10] itself. They rely on a footnote in Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. U.S. [10] That case was an appeal from an order of the I.C.C. The petitioner seeking to overthrow the

---

[7] H. Rep. 627, 2 H. Reps. Misc. II; 63d Cong.2d Sess., p. 3; S. Rep. No. 698, 2 Sen. Reps. Misc. II, 63d Cong.2d Sess., 47-48. See, F.T.C. Report on Interlocking Directorates at 11 (1951); Staff of Sub Comm. No. 5, House Comm. on the Judiciary 89th Cong., 1st Sess., Interlocks in Corporate Management 10, 27 (Comm. Print 1965).

[8] 51 Cong. Rec. 16002-3 (Oct. 1, 1914).

[9] In re Missouri Pacific R. Co., 13 F. Supp. 888, 893 (D. Mo. 1935).

Commission's order argued that there would be a violation of Section 10 if the Commission's order were enforced. In the course of dismissing this objection on a ground not important for our purpose, the Court made the following statement:

> "Section 10 of the Clayton Act is, of course, an antitrust law, and much of what we have just said relative to the problem of accommodation of § 5(2) of the Interstate Commerce Act and the antitrust laws is equally applicable to this contention. HN3[] The evident purpose of § 10 of the Clayton Act was to prohibit a corporation from abusing a carrier by palming off upon it securities, supplies and other articles without competitive bidding and at excessive prices through overreaching by, or other misfeasance of, common directors, to the financial injury of the carrier and the consequent impairment of its ability to serve the public interest. n.13
>
> n.13 "The legislative history of § 10 of the Clayton Act, though meager, supports the view stated in the text. In fact, the language [11] of the several drafts of § 10, together with the types of abuses cited in support of its enactment, suggests strongly that the words 'dealings in securities' were intended to cover only a carrier's dealings with related persons in its own securities. See H.R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3; S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 47-48; S. Doc. No. 585, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 8-9; 51 Cong. Rec. 15943." [11]

It is at once apparent that the second sentence of footnote 13 and the text which it supports are inconsistent. The fact is that the legislative history indicates some concern with both types of abuses, and the Section subsequently has been applied to both purchases and sales of securities. [12] Accordingly, I am not convinced that a limitation should be read into Section 10 that the word "securities" means only the carrier's own securities.

[12] 4. Finally, defendants maintain that Section 10 cannot be enforced by a private suit under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. [13] They submit that because Section 10 contains its own criminal penalties and provides for rules by the I.C.C. regulating the public bid process, Congress did not intend that a private suit would be available in Section 10 cases. Defendants also point out that the I.C.C. has construed the statute to allow it to hear private complaints based on violations of Section 10 and that the Congress specifically exempted Section 10 cases from § 16 (15 U.S.C. § 26) which provides for private injunctive relief.

My conclusion is to the contrary. Section 4 HN4[] provides a cause of action where a person has been injured by a violation of "the anti-trust laws". In interpreting another statute, the Supreme Court has held that Section 10 is an "antitrust law". [14] The courts and the agencies charged with enforcing the antitrust laws have consistently recognized the value [13] of private suits in securing compliance with the statutes. It is also clear that the remedies under these statutes were designed to be cumulative. [15] But, say defendants, because the Congress did not see fit to allow private injunctive relief in Section 10 cases, it follows that a private suit for damages is likewise prohibited. If any inference is to be drawn from the Congress' failure to except Section 10 cases from the operation of Section 4 while making such an exception [*461] in Section 16, it is that the private suit for damages was to remain a remedy for this type of transaction. Thus, the fourth "defense" is rejected.

In summary, defendants' four legal arguments raised on this motion to the effect that this transaction is not the proper basis for a private suit under Section 10 must fail. It follows that defendants' motion for summary judgment [14] based on these arguments must be and is denied.

---

[10] 361 U.S. 173, 190, n. 13, 80 S. Ct. 229, 4 L. Ed. 2d 223 (1959).

[11] Id.

[12] It is apparent that the I.C.C. in drafting its regulations has assumed this to be true. 49 C.F.R. §§ 1010.1(a), 1010.3.

[13] The statute is set out at n. 1.

[14] Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. U.S., supra, n. 9, at 190.

[15] See, U.S. v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514, 518, 98 L. Ed. 903, 74 S. Ct. 703 (1953).

There remains the question of whether or not plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment on all issues except that of damages should be granted. Rule 56(c) and (d), F.R. Civ. P. In the light of the views expressed heretofore in this opinion, it might be said that the stipulated facts are sufficient for granting plaintiffs' motion as prayed. Nevertheless, there are at least two complaint allegations which suggest that plaintiffs may wish to present additional proof, and, if they do, that defendants will wish to rebut such proof by evidence of their own. To illustrate, in paragraph "six" of the complaint, it is alleged, inter alia, that defendant B&O not only dominated and controlled the affairs and directors of Reading but that such defendant has used its power and control over Reading to benefit itself and to damage Reading in the manner thereafter set forth in the complaint. Further, in paragraph "eight", it is alleged that the facilities of Terminal have been used almost exclusively by B&O and its subsidiaries, but notwithstanding this fact, Reading has been caused to join with B&O in financing and maintaining Terminal. [15] In the exercise of caution, I am constrained to deny plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment upon the possibility that they will wish to adduce additional proof in support of the aforementioned allegations at trial and because these allegations of "dominance" tend to be somewhat intertwined with the question of damages. Parenthetically, however, the alleged issue of whether or not Terminal is a "paper company" would seem to be irrelevant and thus not susceptible of further fact development at trial in the light of the legal views heretofore expressed in this memorandum. Rule 56(d), F.R. Civ. P.

It is so ordered.

Sahm v. V-1 Oil Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit

October 16, 1968,

No. 9647

Reporter

402 F.2d 69 *; 1968 U.S. App. LEXIS 5240 ; 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,604

Stephen K. Sahm v. V-1 Oil Co.

Core Terms

lease, cancellation, retail, illegal agreement, resale price, termination, anti trust law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A business agreement that directly and effectively controls both prices and profits constitutes a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A mere announcement in advance of a policy and a unilateral refusal to deal with those who reject the announced policy does not run counter to the antitrust laws. However, where the producer or supplier secures adherence to his suggested price by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy, the antitrust laws are violated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Remedies > Reinstatement

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Where a resale price maintenance agreement is tied to and enforced by related agreements between the parties, and where the related agreements are used by one of the parties in his attempt to have the illegal agreement reinstated, an agreement for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is established and continued even though the resale price maintenance agreement itself is repudiated by the injured party prior to the conduct of the other party which causes the injury.

Judges: [1] Lewis, Seth and Hickey, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: LEWIS

Opinion

[*70] LEWIS, Circuit Judge.

This appeal is taken from an order of the District Court for the District of Utah dismissing the appellant-plaintiff's amended complaint and action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Rule 12 (b, c), Fed. R. Civ. P. The complaint is founded on Section 1 of the Sherman Act [1] and we accept the allegations as true for the purposes of present review. United States v. Reilly, 10 Cir., 385 F.2d 225. The allegations need only to be narratively summarized.

On August 26, 1966, plaintiff by written instrument leased from defendant a retail gasoline service station located in Salt Lake City, Utah. [2] The lease provided for a primary term of one year, and thereafter from year to year, with the right to termination reserved to each party through thirty-day written notice. The lease contemplated the operation of the service station under defendant's trade name and colors. At the same time the parties entered into an oral agreement providing for the consignment to plaintiff of gasoline furnished by defendant and to be retailed at prices set by defendant. Plaintiff's commission profit was variable and dependent in amount upon the retail price level as determined by defendant.

Plaintiff abided by the terms of the total agreement until the middle of October 1966, at which time, without defendant's consent, he raised his retail price from 26.9 cents per gallon to 29.9 cents per gallon. On October 26, defendant through its sales manager protested the price increase and threatened cancellation of the lease unless plaintiff would resume compliance with the agreement as it pertained to retail sales pricing. On October 28, defendant gave letter notice of the cancellation of the lease effective in thirty days as provided by the lease. A few days later plaintiff was told by defendant's [3] sales manager that termination could be prevented if plaintiff would set his retail price in accord with defendant's schedule. Plaintiff remained adamant and the lease was canceled on November 28, 1966. Plaintiff asserts the cancellation was motivated by his refusal to set his retail price at levels fixed by defendant, that damage resulted, and characterizes the agreement and acts of defendant as a collusive price-setting scheme violative of the cited statute.

---

[1] Section 1 reads in relevant part "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . . ." 26 Stat. 209, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

It is immediately apparent that plaintiff has alleged the existence and operation of a total agreement that if continued would directly and effectively control both prices and profits. HN1[] Such an agreement or combination smacks of a per se violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811. Indeed, defendant [*71] concedes the violative nature of the plan during its operative period but argues that the complaint is fatally defective because [4] of a lack of an existing conspiracy at the time of the cancellation of the lease and during the period for which damages are sought. Defendant thus characterizes the complaint as alleging no more than a mere unilateral refusal to deal regardless of motivation and so within the confines of acceptable business policy.

It is true that HN2[] a mere announcement in advance of a policy and a unilateral refusal to deal with those who reject the announced policy does not run counter to the antitrust laws; [2] however, where the producer or supplier "secures adherences to his suggested price by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy," United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503, the antitrust laws are violated. Petitioner herein alleges that before appellee canceled the lease his agent threatened immediate cancellation of the lease unless appellant complied with the provisions of the illegal agreement and it was only when such threat failed and in response to the failure that the [5] lease was canceled. Also petitioner alleges that during the thirty-day cancellation period required by the written contract that appellee's agent called upon him and assured him that he could save the lease if he would abide by the oral resale price maintenance agreement. This alleged attempt on behalf of appellee and his agent to coerce appellant into reinstating an illegal agreement cannot be classified as a mere refusal to deal.

Defendant also emphasizes the fact that the complaint contains no allegation that defendant conspired with others in price setting and does allege affirmatively that plaintiff repudiated the admittedly prohibited agreement before the cancellation of the lease. Therefore, so says defendant, there was no existent conspiracy to found a section 1 violation, citing Quinn v. Mobil Oil Co., 1 Cir., 375 F.2d 273, cert. denied 389 U.S. 801, 88 S. Ct. 8, 19 L. Ed. 2d 56; [6] Dart Drug Corp. v. Parke, Davis & Co., 120 U.S. App. D.C. 79, 344 F.2d 173; House of Materials, Inc. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 2 Cir., 298 F.2d 867; Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola Inc., 5 Cir., 200 F.2d 911, cert. denied 345 U.S. 925, 73 S. Ct. 783, 97 L. Ed. 1356. We deem such reasoning to be faulty.

HN3[] Where, as here, the resale price maintenance agreement is tied to and enforced by related agreements between the parties, and where the related agreements are used by one of the parties in his attempt to have the illegal agreement reinstated, an agreement for purposes of § 1 of the Sherman Act is established and continued even though the resale price maintenance agreement itself is repudiated by the injured party prior to the conduct of the other party which causes the injury. If we were to hold otherwise, a paradox would emerge which would allow the injured party to bring suit only if he followed the illegal agreement but would prevent such a suit where the injured party refused to continue to be a party to the illegal agreement. [7] To allow such a paradox would defeat the policy of the antitrust laws as stated by Mr. Justice Black in Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981, that > the purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that the private action will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws.

In the present case the resale price maintenance agreement and the thirty-day termination clause, which appellee relied upon to terminate the lease and which in turn terminated appellant's [*72] source of livelihood, should be deemed inseverable and the latter should be construed as an agreement which would support a § 1 cause of action. It was the termination agreement which enabled appellee to attempt to coerce appellant into obeying the resale price maintenance agreement and to punish him for disobeying. That the resale price maintenance agreement itself does not have to be technically in "existence" at the time of the injury in order to [8] support a cause of action under § 1 finds comfort in recent Supreme Court decisions. Mr. Justice White in writing for the majority in Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 150, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869, in footnote 6 of that opinion stated the petitioner therein could have asserted an illegal combination under § 1 of the Sherman Act by claiming "a combination between respondent and himself, at least as of the day he unwillingly complied with respondent's advertised price" and this was true even though the conduct of respondent therein which caused the petitioner's injury occurred after the petitioner had reneged on his agreement to follow respondent's advertised price. Also Mr. Justice Black in his majority opinion in Perma Life, supra, cited Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of California, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051, [3] not for the proposition that a conspiracy could be found by an expressed or implied agreement between the lessor (oil company) and its other dealers, as appellee herein argues the case stood for, but for the proposition that a "conspiracy" could be found solely on the agreement between the lessor and [9] the alleged victim of the illegal agreement. Simpson, so interpreted, cannot be distinguished in principle from the case at bar. So, too, it is manifest that the defense of in pari delicto does not defeat plaintiff's alleged cause of action as inherent in his claim and as a matter of law. Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., supra.

---

[2] United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465.

The judgment is reversed and the case remanded with instructions to reinstate the action and the amended complaint.

---

[3] Simpson held that the supplier of crude oil to the petitioner therein had violated the anti-trust laws by attempting to maintain resale prices through the coercive type of "consignment" and lease agreements.

Bela Seating Co. v. Poloron Prods.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

December 23, 1968

Civ. A. No. 65 C 1702

Reporter

297 F. Supp. 489 *; 1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12412 ; 160 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 646 ***

BELA SEATING COMPANY, Inc., Plaintiff, v. POLORON PRODUCTS, INC., Defendant

Core Terms

chair, patent, arm, tablet, seat, folding, pivotal, license, infringement, invention, cooperative, prior art, sliding, specification, lawsuit, universal joint, royalty rate, manufactured, drawings, closed position, disclosure, universal, opening, front, terms, expert witness, folding chair, automatically, demonstrations, rear

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN1[] Ownership, Conveyances

Plaintiff has the right to limit its licenses to a specific form or forms of the invention, and to agree itself to forego manufacture of a specific form or forms of the invention.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN2[] Misuse of Rights, Patent Misuse Defense

Plaintiff has the right to sue defendant for infringement without first offering defendant a license.

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN3[] Equitable Relief, Injunctions

The patent system of the United States would be of little value if a patent owner could not legally couple the bringing of an infringement suit with a demand that the accused infringer cease production of the infringing article.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Judicial Discretion

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > Criminal Proceedings

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > General Overview

HN4[] Trials, Judicial Discretion

A mechanical or other technical expert may testify as to structural and operational features of the accused device, and it is the function of the court to determine whether such structural and operational features are defined by the patent claims. The weight to be given the expert's testimony should be left to the sound discretion of the court in view of the qualifications of the expert, all the evidentiary facts in the record, and the rules governing construction of patent claims.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN5[] Jurisdiction & Review, Standards of Review

Legal conclusions, such as whether a claim is infringed and whether a claim is valid, should be made by the court, and opinions as to legal conclusions from a patent expert are never binding upon the court.

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Filing Requirements > Drawings

Evidence > Judicial Notice > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN6[] Types of Evidence, Testimony

The court is not obliged to follow blindly the testimony of any expert, even if uncontroverted by explicit testimony on the same point from another expert. The testimony of an expert witness on any opinion question, whether a question of technical opinion or legal opinion, must be considered in the light not only of any other opinion evidence in the record but also all factual evidence in the record, including the wording of the specification and claims of the patent in suit, the drawings of the patent in suit, the file history of the application which matured into the patent in suit, physical exhibits, courtroom demonstrations, photographs in evidence, and all other factual testimony and evidence in the record and of which the court may take judicial notice.

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > General Overview

HN7[] Claims, Claim Language

In determining whether or not defendant's product finding a claim of the patent in suit, resort must be had in the first instance to the words of the claim. If accused matter falls clearly within the claim, infringement is made out, and that is the end of it.

Patent Law > Claims & Specifications > Invention Theory

HN8[] Claims & Specifications, Invention Theory

It is a well established rule of patent law that every patentee is entitled to be his own lexicographer.

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Definiteness > General Overview

HN9[] Specifications, Definiteness

The definition of the invention is governed by the express terms of the patent claims, and resort to the specification to narrow a claim by interpreting a particular limitation in a certain way, in order purportedly to save the claim from being invalid over the prior art, is not permitted unless the claim is ambiguous because of the limitation in question.

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Filing Requirements > Drawings

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > General Overview

HN10[] Filing Requirements, Drawings

The claims of the patent measure the invention.

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Definiteness > General Overview

HN11[] Specifications, Definiteness

A patentee may claim his invention as broadly as the prior art allows.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN12[] Patent Law, Infringement Actions

Defendant may not avoid infringement by merely making the device different in form in minor respects.

Evidence > ... > Presumptions > Exceptions > Statutory Presumptions

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Presumption of Validity

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN13[] Exceptions, Statutory Presumptions

A patent is presumed valid. 35 U.S.C.S. § 282. The statutory presumption of validity is not an idle gesture, and is not to be overthrown except by clear and cogent evidence. Every reasonable doubt should be resolved against the defendant who is attempting to show invalidity.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Presumption of Validity

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

HN14[] Jurisdiction & Review, Standards of Review

The presumption of validity cannot be weakened by reliance on prior art which was cited but not applied by the Patent Examiner. On the contrary, the fact that the most pertinent prior art relied upon by defendant was considered and rejected by the Patent Office greatly strengthens the presumption of the validity of the patent.

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

HN15[] Originality, Joint & Sole Inventorship

The copying of the patented invention by defendant indicates its commercial importance and emphasizes the validity of the prior patent.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN16[] Infringement Actions, Defenses

The defense of anticipation requires that all of the elements of a claim be found in a single piece of prior art.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Claim Interpretation > General Overview

HN17[] Jurisdiction & Review, Standards of Review

A prior art patent which has not contributed anything to the practical art, and is thus in the category of paper patents, should be strictly construed with respect to whatever teaching may be found in the same.

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > Description in Prior Patents > Combinations

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > Elements

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > Combination Claims

Patent Law > Double Patenting > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Prior Art

HN18[] Description in Prior Patents, Combinations

An attempted combination of individual features found in separate prior art patents to show that the invention of the patent in suit is obvious, is improper. The combination patent cannot properly be anticipated in a piecemeal fashion by combining individual features from different prior art patents when such combination is not taught by the prior art patents themselves.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

HN19[] Nonobviousness, Elements & Tests

A new combination resulting in an improved construction which accomplishes a new result and which is markedly more efficient than the prior art devices is patentable.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Prior Art

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

HN20[] Elements & Tests, Prior Art

The failure of those working in the prior art and the success of the patentee is evidence that the patentee's contribution was not obvious.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Hindsight

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

HN21[] Elements & Tests, Hindsight

Although many things seem obvious after they have been done, one cannot properly apply hindsight to attempt to determine what was obvious at the time the invention was made.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

HN22[] Nonobviousness, Elements & Tests

Defendant's use of eight different prior art patents in its attempt to invalidate plaintiff's claims tends in and of itself to negate the position of defendant that the patent in suit is invalid.

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Definiteness > General Overview

HN23[] Patent Law, Anticipation & Novelty

The claims are not functional at the point of novelty when all of them clearly indicate to one skilled in the art a variety of specific structural elements for performing the functions specified, definite properties of such elements, or some definite interrelation between such elements. No more is required. 35 U.S.C.S. § 112.

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

HN24[] Originality, Joint & Sole Inventorship

Claims covering a combination of elements, in which a new and functional result is achieved as a result of the coaction of the various elements of the combination, are valid.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN25[] Conveyances, Licenses

Plaintiff has no duty to grant a license to defendant under the patent in suit, merely because defendant has requested such a license. A patent owner has the right to grant a license to some, as he chooses, without granting a license to others.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN26[] Conveyances, Licenses

A patent owner is not required to grant licenses to all comers at equal rates and terms. He may select or reject prospective licensees and prefer one over another for considerations within his discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN27[] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

Plaintiff need not justify different royalty rates among different licensees. An owner of a patent may grant licenses to manufacture, use or sell upon conditions not inconsistent with the scope of the monopoly.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN28[] Conveyances, Licenses

A patent owner who grants a license under his patent may restrict the licensee's product which falls under the licensed patent to a specific use or to a specific form.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN29[] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

A patent owner has the right to bring an infringement suit against an infringer without first offering the infringer a license.

Counsel: [1] Dressler, Goldsmith, Clement & Gordon, Chicago, Illinois, for plaintiff.

Bair, Freeman & Molinare, Chicago, Illinois, for defendant.

Judges: Austin, District Judge.

Opinion by: AUSTIN

Opinion

[*648] [*491] AUSTIN, District Judge.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW FINDINGS OF FACT THE PARTIES

1. Plaintiff, Bela Seating Company, Inc. (Bela Seating), is an Illinois corporation having a place of business at 9505 South Prairie Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Plaintiff is the successor-in-interest of J & J Tool & Machine Company, a sole proprietorship owned by Bela B. Junkunc. For purposes of convenience, both Bela Seating and J & J Tool & Machine Company are referred to in these Findings of Fact as "plaintiff."

2. Defendant, Poloron Products, Inc. (Poloron), is a New York corporation. Defendant has admitted that it has a regular and established place of business [*492] at 600 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Acts of infringement, including sales of the accused chairs, have been committed in Chicago and elsewhere.

THE ISSUES

3. This suit was filed by plaintiff on October 13, 1965, for infringement of United States Letters Patent No. 2,954,073, entitled "Folding Tablet Arm [2] Chair," issued on September 27, 1960 in the name of Bela B. Junkunc. On January 1, 1965, the entire right, title and interest in and to the patent in suit (hereinafter sometimes called the Junkunc patent) was assigned to Bela Seating.

4. The case was tried on the issues presented by the Amended Complaint and the Amended Answer and Counterclaim. Defendant was charged with infringing claims 1 through 7, 10, 12, 14 and 15 of the Junkunc patent. Defendant denied validity and infringement and counterclaimed against plaintiff, charging violation of the antitrust laws.

5. Prior to trial, defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff had allegedly misused its patent by refusing to grant to defendant a license on the identical terms and conditions as are contained in a license previously granted to another company, Hampden Specialty Products Corp. Defendant's motion was denied.

6. The trial was extensive and thorough, continuing for a period of ten days in court. The record of testimony and argument is almost 2,000 pages in length. These Findings of Fact represent a thorough study of the evidence and are based on the most credible evidence.

THE SUBJECT MATTER [3] OF THE PATENT IN SUIT

The Disclosure

7. The Junkunc patent concerns a "Y-frame" folding chair which has a tablet arm that is supported in its position of use by an elogated link pivotally connected at one end to the chair seat and connected at its other end to the underside of the tablet arm by means that (a) permit pivotal movement of the tablet arm with respect to the link about two perpendicular axes, and (b) also permit sliding movement of the tablet arm along the link. The actual invention disclosed in the patent in suit is not limited to such means in the form either of a true universal joint or the equivalent thereof, nor is it limited to use of a slidable sleeve of any type in such means. Nothing in the prior art requires any such limitation.

[*649] 8. The tablet arm disclosed in the Junkunc patent moves from a lowermost out-of-the-way position (illustrated in Figure 3 of the patent) to a writing position (illustrated in Figures 1, 2 and 17 of the patent), and vice versa, independently of the chair seat while the chair seat is in its open, unfolded position.

9. The tablet arm disclosed in plaintiff's patent also opens to its writing position cooperatively with the chair [4] seat when the chair is unfolded into its open position from its fully closed position (illustrated in Figures 6 and 16 of the patent).

10. The tablet arm disclosed in plaintiff's patent also moves down from its writing position to a fully closed position cooperatively with the chair seat when the chair seat is folded into its fully closed position from its open, writing position.

Differences Between Y-Frame and X-Frame Chairs

11. Chairs of the "Y-frame" type are completely different in structure and operation from chairs of the "X-frame" type. A "Y-frame" folding chair is a folding chair in which the front frame and the back legs of the chair form an inverted Y-shaped structure, and if the chair is a folding tablet arm chair, the tablet arm supporting link is pivotally connected at its lower end to the chair seat, as is required by the claims of the Junkunc patent. In contrast, in the conventional "X-frame" folding chair, the [*493] front and rear legs cross to form an X-shape, and, if the chair is a folding tablet arm chair, the tablet arm supporting link is pivotally connected at its lower end to the front frame of the chair.

12. A Y-frame chair is usually formed [5] of tubular steel, while an X-frame chair is usually formed of channel steel. This is so because if an X-frame chair were made of tubular steel, the frame would become very bulky by reason of the additional width required to allow for the scissors action of the front legs against the rear legs. On the other hand, the Y-frame chair is very well suited for the desirable tubular steel construction because it does not have the scissors action of the legs.

13. The difference between tubular steel and channel steel construction is extremely important. There is testimony by witnesses for both parties as to the superiority of the tubular steel construction as compared with the channel steel construction.

14. Other advantages of the Y-frame chair over the conventional X-frame chair are that a Y-frame chair is usually easier to open than an X-frame chair, a Y-frame chair has superior strength and rigidity over the X-frame chair, and a Y-frame chair is considerably more stable and safer than an X-frame chair.

The Invention Was of Great Significance to the Chair Industry

15. Despite the fact that chairs with Y-frame construction have many advantages over X-frame chairs, prior to the [6] invention of the patent in suit there was no Y-frame folding chair with a tablet arm that could be moved both cooperatively and independently with respect to the seat. The Junkunc invention gave to the industry and to the public for the first time a Y-frame folding tablet arm chair with both cooperative and independent movement of the tablet arm with respect to the folding and unfolding of the chair seat.

16. The patented chair is very useful in institutions such as schools, churches, clubs, cafeterias, hotels, business establishments, colleges, universities and the like.

17. It is very important for institutional use to have folding tablet arm chairs that can be stored in a relatively small amount of space. With the patented chair, the seat, legs and tablet arm can be folded to provide a compact unit. The folded chairs can thus be stacked and stored in a small space whenever desired.

18. It is also important in institutional use that folding tablet arm chairs be opened and closed quickly so that they can be set up and subsequently removed in a very short time. With the patented chair, there is cooperative movement of the tablet arm with the chair seat, making possible rapid [7] setting up or rapid folding, and in preferred embodiments both rapid setting up and rapid folding.

19. To open the patented chair, one needs merely to lift up on the tablet arm and as the arm swings up, the seat and legs unfold cooperatively with the tablet arm. The chair may be folded automatically from its fully opened position by merely putting one foot on the conventional bottom cross brace at the rear of the chair and pulling up on the backrest of the chair. Another method of rapidly folding the chair while the tablet arm is in its writing position is to grasp the seat and pull up on it to fold it.

20. In institutional use, it is also very advantageous to have a tablet arm that can be swung out of the user's way, while the chair seat remains in its open position. Such independent movement of the tablet arm permits closer spacing of rows of chairs and also enables one [650] to sit down on the chair and get up from the chair with ease. The independent movement of the tablet arm with respect to the chair seat is extremely useful for specialized activities, such as in music classes, in which the tablet arm is used only part of the time.

21. The Junkunc invention was of great significance [8] to the chair industry. None of the many chairs of the prior art had all the advantages of the patented [*494] chair which are specified in Findings of Fact 12 through 20 above.

Courtroom Demonstrations of Plaintiff's Chairs

22. The very chair from which Figures 1 through 16 of the drawings of the patent in suit were prepared was operated in courtroom demonstrations. These demonstrations established that that chair was indeed one of the chairs disclosed in the patent in suit, and that the claims in issue in this lawsuit read upon that chair.

23. Plaintiff's present commercial chair, which is covered by the claims in issue in this lawsuit, was also operated in courtroom demonstrations. Plaintiff's commercial chair is substantially the same as the particular chair from which Figures 1 through 16 of the drawings of the patent in suit were prepared, the main difference being that in the chair sold commercially today the tablet arm is designed to drop to a still lower out-of-the-way position at the side of the chair than is shown in Figure 3 of the patent. This difference is not reflected in the claims of the patent in suit.

24. During preparation for the trial of this [9] lawsuit, one of plaintiff's employees was instructed to make the chair shown in Figures 17-21 of the Junkunc patent, and he did construct a chair that conformed to those drawings. Courtroom demonstrations of that chair clearly established its operability and usefulness, and that the claims in issue in this lawsuit read upon that chair.

INFRINGEMENT BY DEFENDANT

Meaning of the Claims

25. None of the act of the applicant or his attorney during the prosecution of the patent application which matured into the patent in suit in any way restricted the normal and ordinary meaning of the language of the claims in issue. All of the claims in issue were allowed by the Patent Office in the condition in which they were originally filed, and are entitled to a scope covering their literal meaning and a full range of equivalents.

26. Both of the parties to this lawsuit presented expert witnesses. Plaintiff's technical expert, Alexander Cowie, is a professor in the Department of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering of the Illinois Institute of Technology, and specializes in the field of kinematics, which is the study of the movement of bodies without regard to the forces applied to them. [10] Defendant's expert witness, Charles Pigott Jr., is a patent attorney who practices in the city of Chicago and has a background in mechanical engineering.

27. Professor Cowie described in ordinary mechanical or technical terms the various structural and operational features of defendant's accused chair. These terms were for the most part the terms employed in the claims in issue in the present lawsuit.

28. Much trial time was taken up by defendant's patent expert in an attempt to construe the words of the claims in issue as encompassing something different from that present in defendant's accused chair. Much of Mr. Pigott's testimony served only to make a relatively simple folding chair appear like an unduly complex mechanism, notwithstanding the relatively simple language of the claims in issue.

Claims in Issue Cover Accused Chair

29. Most of the terms employed in the claims in issue in this lawsuit are ordinary mechanical terms that in the context of the claims in which they are found have a clear, accepted and usual meaning.

30. The meaning of the term "relative sliding movement" between the tablet arm and the supporting link is clear beyond any question in the light [11] of the entire specification and the drawings of the patent in suit. The term "universal joint," found in certain of the claims in issue, is a technical term the accepted meaning of which is shown by the testimony [*495] of the expert witnesses of both plaintiff and defendant and the publications relating to the term which are in evidence. The term "universal pivotal movement" is directly defined, and the term "maintain * * * in position" is indirectly defined, in the specification of the patent in suit.

31. Even without the aid of the expert testimony of Professor Cowie, the Court was able to identify very nearly all of the elements of claims 1 through 7, 10, 12, 14 and 15, which are the claims in issue in this lawsuit, in the specimens of defendant's accused chair which were introduced in evidence by both plaintiff and defendant. Professor Cowie's testimony made it [651] clear that the relatively few features of the claims in issue which were not easily observable and identifiable by the Court were also present in defendant's accused chair.

32. Every structural and functional detail specified in claims 1-6 and 14 of the patent in suit is precisely copied and utilized in defendant's [12] chair.

33. With respect to claims 7, 10, 12 and 15 of the patent in suit, each of these claims has one detail (the universal joint) which is not copied exactly by defendant, but as to that detail defendant's accused structure is mechanically equivalent.

34. Specimens of the accused chair were demonstrated and operated during the trial. It was clear that all of the operational characteristics of the patented chair that are described above in Findings of Fact 17-20 are present in the accused chair.

Movement "Simultaneously As A Cooperative Assembly"

35. Claims 1 and 2 of the patent in suit require, among other things, movement of the tablet arm and chair seat to different positions "simultaneously as a cooperative assembly." Such cooperative movement is present, and the expert witnesses of plaintiff and defendant both testified to this effect, during closing of defendant's accused chair. Although defendant's patent expert testified that claims 1 and 2 of the patent in suit, as well as the claims with similar language, require that the tablet arm be raised from its completely closed position by merely manipulating the chair seat to thereby automatically raise the tablet arm, [13] such a construction is erroneous because it is a departure from the unambiguous literal meaning of the language of the claims, and is nowhere required by the language of the specification of the patent in suit or by the prior art.

36. Courtroom demonstration of the chair from which Figures 1 to 16 of the patent in suit were prepared, and the chair which was made by following Figures 17 through 21 of the patent in suit, show that the chairs disclosed in the patent cannot be opened from their completely closed position by merely manipulating the chair seat to thereby automatically raise the tablet arm, as defendant's patent expert testified. Both Professor Cowie and Mr. Junkunc recognized from the disclosure of the patent in suit that the chairs there shown could not be opened from their completely closed position by merely pushing forward on the chair seat. That such operation is impossible would be clear to anyone skilled in the art, simply by referring to Figure 5 of the patent in suit. Figure 5 shows beyond question that manipulation of the seat alone will not cause the tablet arm to rise when it is in its completely closed position, because in that position the pivot between [14] the top end of the link and the tablet arm is located behind the centerline which passes through (a) the axis about which the rear of the tablet arm pivots and (b) the axis about which the bottom of the link pivots, when the arm is raised.

37. In any event, movement of the tablet arm and chair seat to different positions "simultaneously as a cooperative assembly" is present, and the expert witnesses of plaintiff and defendant both testified to this effect, when defendant's accused chair is opened by pulling up on the outer edge of the tablet arm.

[*496] Movement of the Tablet Arm "With" the Chair

38. Claims 3 and 6 call for movement of the tablet arm "with" the chair. This is a common English term. Simple observation shows that during closing of defendant's accused chair, there is movement of the tablet arm "with" the chair. Defendant's expert witness testified to the same effect.

39. The language of claims 3 and 6 does not require that the tablet arm move with the chair seat during both closing and opening of the chair, nor is there anything in the specification to require this result.

"Universal Pivotal Movement"

40. Claims 4 and 5 fall for "universal pivotal [15] movement" of the tablet arm with respect to the link. This term has no established or common meaning. "Universal movement" is defined in column one of the patent, lines 65-68, as "movement about different axes at the same time or at different times." Claims 4 and 5 are original claims of the application as filed, and call for "substantially universal pivotal movement of said arm with respect to said link." The specification and claims thus together define the term "universal pivotal movement." The term includes movement of the tablet arm in the specified manner with respect to the link, as well as movement of the parts of the joint structure with respect to one another.

41. Defendant's accused chair has universal pivotal movement of the tablet arm with respect to the link within the meaning of claims 4 and 5 of the patent in suit.

[*652] "Sliding Movement"

42. Claim 5 calls for "relative sliding movement" between the arm and the link "in selected positions of said arm with respect to said chair." A similar limitation in claim 14 reads "permitting sliding movement axially of said link."

43. The only reasonable construction of these phrases in claims 5 and 14, in the light of the [16] general disclosure of the specification and drawings of the patent in suit, is to describe the downward and upward sliding of the tablet arm with respect to the link as the arm moves between its uppermost and lowermost out-of-the-way positions.

44. Defendant's accused chair exhibits the sliding movement between the tablet arm and the link that is called for by claims 5 and 14 of the patent in suit.

"Support" and "Maintain"

45. Claims 6 and 14 of the patent in suit recite two different pairs of elements -- the joint structure and the link in claim 6, the joint structure and the rear pivotal connection in claim 14 -- which cooperate to support the tablet arm and maintain it in position when the arm is disposed in a position of use and the chair is in an open position. Claims 7 and 10, being dependent from claim 6, are similar to claim 6 with respect to this limitation.

46. There can be no doubt that the front joint structure "supports" the tablet arm of defendant's accused chair. This was testified to by the expert witnesses of both plaintiff and defendant, and can be observed as well.

47. In order to "maintain" the tablet arm of a folding tablet arm chair in position, [17] it is not necessary to have a positive lock against downward pressure on the outer edge portion of the tablet arm, as with the chair illustrated in Figures 1 to 16 of the patent in suit. There is no showing in the patent in suit of an apparatus in which the front and rear pivotal connections of the tablet arm cooperate to lock the arm against downward pressure on the outer edge portion of the tablet arm. Nor is a lock of any kind provided against downward pressure on the outer edge portion of the tablet arm in the embodiment of Figures 17 to 21 of the patent in suit.

48. The specification and claims of the patent in suit show that as the terms are used in the claims, "support" means support against gravity, and "maintain" [*497] means to maintain the tablet arm in writing position against downward (writing) pressure on the inner edge portion of the tablet arm.

49. The joint structure and the link of defendant's accused chair are cooperatively arranged to maintain the tablet arm in position when said arm is disposed in a position of use and said chair is in an open position. So also are the joint structure and the rear pivotal connection of the accused chair.

"Universal [18] Joint"

50. Claims 7, 10, 12 and 15 of the patent in suit call for a "universal joint." In a true "universal joint," (a) there are two perpendicular pivot axes, (b) there are two intersecting non-colinear axes of rotation, and (c) each axis of rotation intersects at least one pivot axis. A true "universal joint" has three functions: (a) to transmit rotary motion between said non-colinear axes, (b) to permit "compound pivotal movement," i.e., movement about two perpendicular axes at the same time, and (c) to permit movement about two perpendicular pivot axes at different times.

51. The joint structure at the front of the tablet arm in defendant's accused chair is the mechanical equivalent of a true universal joint. When the tablet arm of defendant's accused chair is forced by the chair seat from its fully closed position to its lowermost out-of-the-way position by the opening of the chair seat, the tablet pivots with respect to the link about two perpendicular axes at the same time. In other words, defendant's joint structure provides compound pivotal movement of the tablet arm with respect to the link, which is a function of a true universal joint. Additionally, like a true [19] universal joint, defendant's joint structure has two perpendicular pivot axes. Hence, the arm can pivot with respect to the link about a pivot axis perpendicular to the plane of the tablet arm and can pivot with respect to the link about the fore-and-aft axis of the tablet arm at a different time. In providing the described pivoting actions at the same time and at different times, defendant's joint structure performs the same function in substantially the same way and with the same results as would a true universal joint.

52. Defendant has made certain unimportant variations in order to avoid having a true universal joint, but its joint structure performs the same function in substantially the same way to obtain the same results as a true universal joint, and is therefore equivalent thereto.

"Means for Holding Said Link Against Sliding Movement"

53. Claim 15 calls for "means for holding said link against sliding movement." This language is clear and unambiguous.

[*653] 54. The only reasonable construction of this phrase in claim 15, in the light of the remainder of the claim and the general disclosure of the specification of the patent in suit, is to include in this phrase any [20] means for holding the tablet arm against sliding movement in a downward direction along the link from an uppermost position, and any means to hold the tablet arm from sliding off the outermost end of the link when the tablet reaches that point in its sliding movement in an upward direction along the link.

55. As such means for holding the link against sliding movement, defendant's accused chair has (a) the detent between the link and sleeve that, when engaged, holds the tablet arm in its uppermost out-of-the-way position, (b) the flange on the link abutting the plastic plug at the top of the link, and (c) the plastic plug at the top of the link which is held against the underside of the tablet arm by the joint structure when the tablet arm is in its writing position.

"Automatic" Movement

56. Claim 15 requires that the "tablet arm is moved automatically by the pivotal movement of said seat relative to said front frame." Since the claim does not [*498] require that the automatic movement called for be present during both closing and opening of the chair, this limitation is met by movement of the type described during either closing or opening of the chair.

57. The courtroom [21] demonstrations of defendant's accused chair made it clear, and defendant's patent expert agreed, that there is automatic movement of the tablet arm when the chair is normally closed by putting one foot on the brace across the rear legs and pulling up with one hand on the top of the back of the chair. There is also automatic movement of the tablet arm when the chair is closed by lifting up on the seat of the chair. In both methods of closing the chair, as the seat pivots with respect to the front frame, the tablet arm will move "automatically" to its folded position.

58. The Court observed in demonstrations of defendant's accused chair during the trial, and defendant's patent expert conceded upon cross examination, that there is "automatic" movement between the tablet arm and chair seat during opening of defendant's accused chair by pulling up on the tablet arm so that the tablet arm moves into its writing position and the chair seat goes into its position of use.

THE PRIOR ART

59. In its answering brief, defendant relies on eight patents in an attempt to show that the patent in suit is invalid as being either "anticipated within the meaning of 35 U.S.C. Sec. 102" or "obvious [22] and lacking the conditions for patentability within the meaning of 35 U.S.C. Sec. 103." These eight patents are Watkins No. 1,196,050, Moore No. 1,864,750, Hamilton No. 1,905,859, Clarin No. 2,664,943, Clarin No. 2,675,062, Supita No. 2,676,645, Adler No. 2,719,574 and Eves et al. No. 3,024,065.

60. Of the eight patents on which the defendant relies, five were considered by the Patent Office Examiner during the prosecution of the application which matured into the patent in suit. These were the Watkins, Moore, Clarin '943, Clarin '062 and Supita patents. The Examiner held the claims to be allowable notwithstanding those five patents. The fact that certain prior art patents were not applied by the Examiner against the claims but were only cited in the file history shows that the Examiner did not consider such patents to be as pertinent as those that he did apply against the claims.

61. The three patents relied upon by defendants at the trial which were not before the Examiner -- the Hamilton, Adler and Eves et al. patents -- are no more pertinent than the patents which were considered by the Patent Office, and add nothing to the disclosure of those patents.

Moore Patent No. [23] 1,864,750

62. Much emphasis was placed by the defendant on the Moore patent No. 1,864,750, which was issued in 1932. The lack of importance to the industry of the disclosure of that patent is demonstrated by the fact that there is no evidence in the record that the chair shown therein has ever been made or sold commercially in the 36 years since the patent issued.

63. Certain extremely significant elements of claims 1 and 3 are not found in the Moore patent relied upon by defendant. It is thus apparent that the Moore patent does not constitute an anticipation, as the defendant contends, of claims 1 and 3 of the patent in suit.

64. Claim 1 of the patent in suit calls for "movement of said tablet arm and * * * movement of said chair to different positions simultaneously as a cooperative assembly." The chair of the Moore patent does not have any such movement. When the claims of the patent in suit speak of various movements of the tablet arm and chair seat, such language applies only to movements between useful positions of those members, and there is no cooperative movement [654] between useful positions of the tablet arm and chair seat of the Moore chair. There is, for example, [24] no cooperative movement of the tablet arm with the chair seat in the Moore chair from the open position [*499] (in which the set screw 49 of that chair must be tight) to the fully folded position unless the set screw is first loosened and the tablet arm is dropped to a non-useful position. If one wishes to open Moore's chair from its fully closed position, it is necessary to lift the tablet arm with the set screw loosened, and at the same time or subsequently to unfold the chair seat to its open position, and then finally to tighten the set screw while manually holding the tablet arm in the desired position of use.

65. The Moore chair does not have a rear pivotal connection operative for movement about a plurality of axes, as called for by claim 3 of the patent in suit. The pivotal connection at the rear of the Moore tablet arm provides only a single axis 62.

66. Claim 3 of the patent in suit calls for "movement of said arm with respect to said link in a plurality of directions." Because the movement referred to takes place at the pivotal connection at the forward end of the tablet arm, the movement in question must be angular movement. This feature is absent from the chair [25] of the Moore patent.

67. The reliance by defendant upon the Moore patent as allegedly showing that the subject matter of the claims at issue was obvious to one skilled in the art is based upon a misunderstanding by defendant with respect to the structure and operation of the chair disclosed in the Moore patent.

68. The defendant's misunderstanding as to the operation of the Moore chair was illustrated by the repeated testimony of defendant's patent expert that when the chair of the Moore patent is folded from its open position of use (shown in Figure 1 of that patent) to a closed position while the set screw 49 remains tightened, the tablet arm rises automatically to the position in which it is approximately coplanar with the folded chair. This theory of operation of the Moore chair is shown to be wrong by the drawings of the Moore patent, from which it is seen that the set screw must be loosened to permit the relatively small portion of rod 48 which is exposed in Figure 1 to slide out so that a substantially greater portion of rod 48 may be exposed as in Figure 2, thus permitting the tablet arm to move to the closed position of Figure 2. The theory of operation of the Moore [26] chair suggested by defendant's patent expert is also inconsistent with the Moore specification, is inconsistent with claim 4 of the Moore patent, and was proved wrong by the drawing of the Moore chair which was prepared by counsel for plaintiff and introduced in evidence as plaintiff's Exhibit 28.

69. The testimony by plaintiff's mechanical expert witness with respect to the operation of the Moore chair is entirely consistent with the drawings, specification and claims of the Moore patent. Although in his early testimony defendant's patent expert disagreed with the testimony of plaintiff's mechanical expert as to folding of the Moore chair from its Figure 1 to its Figure 3 position, subsequently defendant's patent expert conceded that plaintiff's mechanical expert's theory on this point was correct.

OTHER PATENTS RELIED UPON BY DEFENDANT TO SHOW INVALIDITY

X-Frame Chairs

70. The file history of the application which matured into the patent in suit reflects the significant differences which exist between an X-frame folding tablet arm chair and a Y-frame folding tablet arm chair, since the Patent Office Examiner did not apply any patent showing an X-frame chair as a primary [27] reference against any of the claims of the application. Clarin patent No. 2,675,062 relates to an X-frame chair, and this patent was merely cited for the record and not applied against the claims. Likewise, the Examiner did not apply Clarin patent No. 2,664,943 (another X-frame chair) or Moore patent No. 1,864,750 (which is 1/2 X-frame and 1/2 Y-frame) against any of the claims, but merely cited them for the record.

[*500] Clarin '062 and Clarin '943

71. In addition to being an X-frame chair, the chair of Clarin patent No. 2,675,062 does not have a link pivotally connected to the seat, nor do the tablet arm and link slide relative to each other, as required by claims in issue in this law-suit. Clarin 2,664,943 also does not have a link pivotally connected to the seat nor a tablet arm and seat which move as a cooperative assembly, and the tablet arm and link do not slide relative to each other.

Eves et al. 3,024,065

72. In Eves et al. patent No. 3,024,065, cooperative movement of the tablet arm and chair seat cannot take place with the tablet arm in the writing position until an unlatching adjustment similar to the loosening of the set screw in Moore is made. Even [28] if such an unlatching adjustment is made, it is not at all certain that any cooperative movement will take place. In addition, the X-frame [655] chair of the Eves et al. patent does not have a link pivotally connected to the seat, as required by the claims in this lawsuit. If the link of the Eves et al. chair were pivotally connected to the seat, the seat could not be folded.

Supita Patent No. 2,676,645 and Adler Patent No. 2,719,574

73. Supita patent No. 2,676,645, which was at first applied by the Examiner against the claims but was subsequently withdrawn, does not disclose a chair having a tablet arm which moves about a plurality of different axes, nor does Supita's tablet arm move independently of the chair seat. Adler patent No. 2,719,574, shows a chair very similar to the Supita chair, and adds nothing to the Supita patent, as defendant's patent expert admitted.

Watkins Patent No. 1,196,050

74. Watkins patent No. 1,196,050, which the Examiner first used as a secondary reference but subsequently withdrew, does not relate to a Y-frame chair, and in fact does not even relate to a folding chair. Although Watkins shows sliding movement at the front of the tablet arm, the [29] other prior art patents do not teach any obvious combination with Watkins which would result in the invention of the patent in suit.

Hamilton Patent No. 1,905,859

75. Hamilton patent No. 1,905,859 is similar to Watkins in that it discloses a stationary chair from which a two-way hinge might be borrowed. However, Hamilton shows even less than Watkins, because it does not show the sliding movement at the front of the tablet arm.

76. Although there is no evidence that the Hamilton, Adler and Eves et al. patents were considered by the Patent Office Examiner during the prosecution of Mr. Junkunc's patent application, these patents are no more pertinent than the patents which were considered by the Patent Office, and add nothing to the disclosure of those patents.

The Junkunc Patent Discloses and Claims A New Combination of Functionally Co-operating Elements

77. The claims at issue define a folding tablet arm chair which includes a combination of elements which interact functionally with each other. Even though each of these elements, if taken separately, is not unique or patentable, it is the combination of these elements which is new and unobvious, and which produces a [30] new result in that a unique and highly efficient folding tablet arm chair is produced. The invention disclosed in the patent in suit is not limited to any single element such as a joint structure, but covers the entire combination of elements called for by the various claims.

78. The combination of elements recited in the claims in issue contribute materially to the sum of useful knowledge in the chair industry. The combination of functionally cooperating elements, to which the claims in issue are directed, would not have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art.

[*501] 79. None of the disclosures relied upon by the defendant as purportedly anticipating, or rendering the invention of the patent in suit obvious, either discloses, teaches or suggests the novel combination of elements disclosed and claimed in the patent in suit. Although certain of the features of the patent in suit are shown piecemeal in some of the prior art patents, no one before Mr. Junkunc was able to combine these elements to provide a unique Y-frame folding tablet arm chair with cooperative and independent movement of the tablet arm with respect to [31] the seat, which was a significant step forward in the chair industry.

Mr. Junkunc's Invention Was Not Obvious

80. In the second Office Action on the application which matured into the patent in suit, the Patent Office Examiner concluded that the combination of references suggested by him in the first Office Action did not bar the allowance of the application, and the rejection based on those references was withdrawn. Defendant's attempted combination of eight prior art patents, all of which are the same as or no more pertinent than the references cited by the Examiner in the first Office Action, appears to be hindsight based on the disclosure of the patent in suit, which cannot be relied upon to show that the patented idea is obvious.

81. The dates of the prior art references relied upon by defendant shed a good deal of light on whether the invention of the patent in suit was in fact obvious to one skilled in the art at the time it was made. The Moore patent was issued in 1932, and in the 27 years between then and the year in which Mr. Junkunc filed his patent application, the Moore disclosure failed to suggest or even give a hint of this important invention. The Supita [32] and Adler applications were filed in 1952, and seven more years went by without anyone thinking of the invention in suit, even by combining the teaching of those two patents with Moore or with the earlier patents to Watkins or Hamilton as defendant's [656] hindsight suggests might be done. Eves et al. was filed at about the same time as the application of Mr. Junkunc, and shows what different, complicated, and clumsy chairs other workers were developing. The failure by those working in the prior art and the success of the patentee is evidence that the patentee's contribution was not obvious.

The Claims In Issue Are Clear And Definite, And Properly Define The Invention

82. The specification of the patent in suit describes the invention in full, clear, concise and exact terminology so as to enable any person skilled in the art to make and use the invention.

83. The claims in issue particularly point out and distinctly claim the folding tablet arm chair which forms the invention of the patent in suit.

84. The claims in issue cover a folding tablet arm chair assembly that includes a number of structural elements cooperating together to provide a Y-frame chair having both independent [33] and cooperative movement of the tablet arm with respect to the chair seat. All of the elements set forth in the claims cooperate to provide Mr. Junkunc's unique and important development.

85. The claims of the Junkunc patent define an operable structure. None of the claims requires, as defendant has suggested, that one pivot axis necessarily be perpendicular to the plane of the tablet arm, and in addition, none of the claims requires, as defendant has suggested, that the tablet arm be raised from a fully closed position merely by manipulation of the chair seat.

86. All functional language used in the claims in issue is entirely appropriate because it (a) is either expressed in terms of "means" for performing the function specified or is fully supported in each claim by specific structure (such as a joint) for performing such a function; (b) clearly indicates to one skilled in the art a variety of specific structural [*502] elements for performing the function specified, definite properties of such elements, or some definite interrelation between such elements; and (c) is described in structural detail in the specification.

87. A member of the public would have no trouble, [34] because of any alleged functionality in any of the claims in issue, in telling whether or not what he is doing infringes those claims. The defendant purported to find in the prior art, in a piecemeal manner, features similar to the very features which it alleges are vague and functional. In the same manner that the meaning of the claims was clear and definite when defendant was trying to reconstruct the invention of the patent in suit from the prior art, the meaning of the claims is also clear and definite with respect to the readability of the claims on defendant's accused chair.

88. Anyone skilled in the art could readily understand what the claims in issue cover. Several claims recite that certain structural elements "permit" various operational characteristics of the claimed chair. The first portion of each of these claims sets forth "means" or structural elements, and the latter portion recites how those "means" or elements cooperate to achieve various operational characteristics through structure, properties or interrelations which are indicated to one who is skilled in the art by the language used in the context of the entire claim. In addition, all of the elements recited [35] in the claims are clearly and definitely exemplified in detail in the specification and drawings of the patent in suit.

89. With the exception of "universal pivotal movement" and "maintain the [tablet arm] in position," all of the terms used in the claims in issue are ordinary English terms, which, when read in context, provide claims which are very easy to understand. The meaning of the terms "universal movement" and "maintain the [tablet arm] in position" as they are used in the claims is entirely clear from the specification, claims and drawings of the patent in suit.

90. There is no evidence that plaintiff has been inconsistent in its application of the claims in issue with respect to the accused chair. Several years ago counsel for plaintiff wrote to Clarin Manufacturing Co. stating that one of the chairs made by Clarin was covered by the patent in suit, as well as constituting a breach of a contractual obligation arising out of plaintiff's license to Clarin. The evidence indicates that this letter was sent as the opening move in an effort to obtain a royalty rate reduction from Clarin, and any assertion of infringement in that letter was not pressed by plaintiff, but [36] on the contrary was effectively withdrawn by reason of its lack of pursuit by plaintiff.

Expert Testimony

91. The testimony by defendant's patent expert that certain claims should be construed in such a way that they would be valid but not infringed comprised legal conclusions which are the function of this Court to determine. The legal conclusions stated by defendant's patent expert on this question are inconsistent with the wording [657] of the specification and claims of the patent in suit, the drawings of the patent in suit, the file history of the application which matured into the patent in suit, the chairs in evidence as physical exhibits, the courtroom demonstrations of the operation of those chairs, certain photographs in evidence, and certain uncontroverted testimony by the respective expert witnesses for the two parties, all of which constitute evidence which can be readily observed and understood by the Court without the need for testimony by any expert witness.

92. A major portion of the specification and claims of the patent in suit is simple enough for the Court to understand without the need for expert testimony. Helpful testimony was provided by Mr. Junkunc, the [37] inventor of the patent in suit, Fred Stace, who is Vice President of plaintiff and is a person very [*503] knowledgeable in the folding chair field, and Professor Cowie, who is an expert in the field of kinematics. The Court's own observations, together with the testimony of these three witnesses and certain testimony during cross-examination of defendant's patent expert, provide a basis for the Court's determination of the issues of infringement and validity of the Junkunc patent.

Allegations of Misuse of Patent and Antitrust Violations Are Without Merit

93. Plaintiff has granted licenses under the patent in suit to Clarin Manufacturing Co. (Clarin) and Hampden Specialty Products Corp. (Hampden). The license to Clarin, dated September 4, 1964, is royalty-free, and superseded a previous license given to Clarin in settlement of a lawsuit which was brought by Clarin against plaintiff. The license to Hampden executed on March 9, 1962 involves a royalty rate of 17 1/2 cents per chair, which is considered by plaintiff to be unreasonably low and Mr. Junkunc, the president of plaintiff, regrets having granted this license.

94. Wishing to take advantage of plaintiff's past [38] action in granting Hampden a license with a royalty rate of only 17 1/2 cents per chair, the defendant requested a license from plaintiff "on the identical terms and conditions that were extended to Hampden." Plaintiff refused this request. On March 16, 1967, plaintiff offered defendant a license at a royalty of $1.60 per chair. This was meant as a starting figure, and prior to trial the proposed rate was reduced by plaintiff to 75 cents per chair. At 75 cents per chair, plaintiff's proposed royalty rate is less than seven percent of the price of defendant's accused chairs to dealers.

95. In the Hampden license, the parties agreed that in manufacturing chairs embodying the licensed invention, the respective parties "shall utilize their own designs," and the chairs of one party shall not be "identical in design to those being manufactured by the other party." Plaintiff conditioned its offer of a license to the defendant on the condition "that the chairs manufactured by Poloron shall be the same as or similar to the chairs currently manufactured by it."

96. Much time preparing for the trial and at the trial was taken up in connection with defendant's charge that plaintiff had misused [39] its patents and violated the antitrust laws because (a) plaintiff refused to grant defendant a license with the same royalty rate as the rate granted more than six years earlier to Hampden; (b) because of Hampden's expressed concern about charges of infringement from both plaintiff and Clarin, plaintiff, Clarin and Hampden had some joint license negotiations (although they finally executed separate licenses); (c) plaintiff's license offer to Poloron required that Poloron chairs made under the license "be the same as or similar to the chairs currently manufactured by it"; and (d) plaintiff brought this lawsuit against defendant without first offering defendant a license.

97. All of plaintiff's licensing practices and other actions in connection with the patent in suit are clearly reasonable and legal practices.

98. Defendant did not bother to take market surveys with respect to its charge. Defendant itself suggested a settlement with plaintiff which contemplated a reduced allocation of royalty payments to plaintiff because of defendant's concern about a possible charge of infringement against it by Clarin, just as Hampden had suggested to plaintiff six years before. These facts, [40] taken together with the extreme lack of substance in the arguments presented by defendant in support of its patent misuse and antitrust charge, show that defendant was not really serious in its misuse and antitrust charge against plaintiff.

99. Each of the parties filed a brief directed solely to the antitrust issues of this lawsuit. The briefs of counsel, together with the evidence in the record, clearly establish that the plaintiff has not misused its patent and has not violated the antitrust laws, and that [658] defendant's [*504] counterclaim with regard to alleged antitrust violations is groundless.

The Royalty Rate

100. Mr. Junkunc, president of plaintiff, testified that plaintiff considers it was a mistake to have granted Hampden a license at such a low royalty rate.

101. Although the defendant has asserted that the $1.60 per unit royalty originally requested by plaintiff "would make Poloron's chair impossible to sell," this assertion was not proved by defendant, and in any event it is clear that $1.60 was only a starting figure for negotiations. The evidence indicates that plaintiff is justified in seeking a much higher royalty rate than the 17 1/2 cents royalty [41] rate of the Hampden license. It would be economically deleterious to plaintiff's business to grant to Poloron a license at a royalty rate of only 17 1/2 cents per chair.

102. To force plaintiff to grant a license to defendant at such a royalty rate would effectively be to create a system of compulsory licensing.

The Restriction As to Form

103. HN1[] Plaintiff has the right to limit its licenses to a specific form or forms of the invention, and to agree itself to forego manufacture of a specific form or forms of the invention. The devices to which the respective restrictions apply are covered by the patent, and such restrictions are reasonable as steps adapted to maintain individuality between manufacturers with respect to the designs of their respective chairs.

104. All the restrictions in defendant's licenses relate to chairs covered by the patent in suit. Defendant has not shown in any way that any of the restrictions are outside of the scope of plaintiff's patent monopoly.

Lawsuit Prior to License Offer

105. HN2[] Plaintiff has the right to sue Poloron for infringement without first offering Poloron a license. In its post-trial brief of the antitrust issues, the defendant [42] has made the argument that the mere bringing of the present lawsuit, coupled with the demand that the defendant cease production of its infringing chair, was a misuse of the plaintiff's patent. HN3[] The patent system of the United States would be of little value if a patent owner could not legally couple the bringing of an infringement suit with a demand that the accused infringer cease production of the infringing article.

The Relevant Market

106. In many cases a customer who is in the market for folding tablet arm chairs will consider both (a) a folding chair having a tablet arm which folds only cooperatively with the seat and (b) a folding chair with a tablet arm that folds down alongside the chair in an out-of-the-way position. The customer might also be interested in (c) a non-folding or stationary-type chair having a tablet arm which folds down alongside the chair into an out-of-the-way position, or (d) a non-folding chair with a fixed tablet arm.

107. The determining factors as to which type of chair is selected are (a) the function or desirability of the unit, (b) the budget which is available to purchase the unit, and (c) the delivery time involved. Mr. Becker, vice [43] president of defendant, pointed out that a chair in which the tablet arm folds only cooperatively with the seat will often be sold in preference to the accused chair "primarily because of price and delivery and primarily because they find it will meet the function that they need a folding tablet arm chair for, or a tablet arm." Mr. Stace, vice president of plaintiff, pointed out that a non-folding chair might sometimes be preferred over a folding chair.

108. One type of tablet arm chair, whether folding or not, can be substituted for another type of tablet arm chair in almost any situation, if budget or delivery considerations, or both, call for it. It is only if one assumes that some purchasers have a wholly fixed and inflexible need, that he must conclude [*505] that those purchasers will not accept any substitutions. There is no evidence as to how many customers have inflexible chair requirements, and the uncontroverted testimony of Mr. Stace indicates that one type of chair is commonly substituted for another.

109. It is only in a music room that it is very important to have a chair in which the tablet arm can fold to an out-of-the-way position, and a music department [44] of a school is only one aspect of one type of purchaser. Moreover, a music department could obviously use a stationary chair with a tablet arm that folds to an out-of-the-way position.

110. The evidence clearly establishes that the true definition of the relevant market is all chairs with tablet arms. Applying this definition of the relevant market, the uncontroverted testimony of Mr. Stace shows that plaintiff's sales comprise at the most only five to ten percent of the market. Plaintiff obviously does not come close to [659] having a controlling share of the market.

111. The evidence clearly indicates that it is not "essential" that a chair manufacturer be able to make plaintiff's patented chair. Plaintiff is only a minor member of the tablet arm chair industry, despite the fact that it is the owner of the patent in suit. Not all members of the tablet arm chair industry sell chairs made in accordance with the patent in suit.

112. The evidence makes it clear that plaintiff is lawfully seeking to control products made according to plaintiff's own patent. There is no evidence whatsoever that plaintiff is seeking to control the entire market in chairs having tablet arms, and [45] in fact, the uncontroverted evidence is clear that plaintiff has only a small share of that market.

113. Poloron has forced Bela Seating into a long battle against Poloron to enforce the Junkunc patent. This fact has nothing to do with an alleged anti-competitive intent on the part of plaintiff, but arises solely from the unnecessary multiplicity of defenses presented by defendant in the instant lawsuit.

114. Any Finding of Fact entered herein which may be properly construed in whole or in part as a Conclusion of Law shall be so deemed and treated as if set forth under Conclusions of Law.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Any Conclusion of Law entered herein which may be construed in whole or in part as a Finding of Fact shall be so deemed and treated, as if set forth above under Findings of Fact.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

2. This Court has jurisdiction over the parties to this suit and the subject matter of this suit, including the subject matter of the amended complaint, the amended answer and the amended counterclaim.

3. Venue is properly laid in this District.

FACTS ALLEGED

4. Plaintiff is the owner of United States Letters Patent No. 2,954,073, entitled "Folding Tablet Arm Chair," [46] which was duly and legally issued on September 27, 1960 to Bela B. Junkunc. Plaintiff has the right to sue for infringement and to seek an injunction against future infringement.

5. Plaintiff has proved the essential facts alleged in the amended complaint.

6. Defendant has failed to prove the essential facts alleged in the amended answer and counterclaim.

INFRINGEMENT

7. Claims 1 through 7, 10, 12, 14 and 15 of the patent in suit, the only claims at issue, have been and are being infringed by defendant.

8. HN4[] A mechanical or other technical expert may testify as to structural and operational features of the accused device, and it is the function of the Court to determine whether such structural and operational features are defined by the patent claims. The weight to be [*506] given the expert's testimony should be left to the sound discretion of the Court in view of the qualifications of the expert, all the evidentiary facts in the record, and the rules governing construction of patent claims. Kohn v. Eimer, 265 F. 900, 902 (2 Cir., 1920); Hughes Aircraft Co. v. General Instrument Corp., 275 F. Supp. 961 (D.C.R.I., 1967); Old Mission Portland Cement Co. v. Commissioner [47] of Internal Revenue, 69 F.2d 676 (9 Cir., 1934), aff. 293 U.S. 289, 55 S. Ct. 158, 79 L. Ed. 367 (1934); 2 Walker on Patents 1211 (Deller's Ed., 1937); Rogers, The Law of Expert Testimony 758, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc. (Werne Ed., 1941).

9. HN5[] Legal conclusions, such as whether a claim is infringed and whether a claim is valid, should be made by the Court, and opinions as to legal conclusions from a patent expert are never binding upon the Court. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. v. Carborundum Co., 155 F.2d 746 (3 Cir., 1946); Moist Cold Refrigerator Co. v. Lou Johnson Co., 249 F.2d 246, 167 (9 Cir., 1957), cert. denied 356 U.S. 968, 78 S. Ct. 1008, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1074 (1958); 1 Walker on Patents 272 (Deller's Ed., 1937).

10. HN6[] The Court is not obliged to follow blindly the testimony of any expert, even if uncontroverted by explicit testimony on the same point from another expert. The testimony of an expert witness on any opinion question, whether a question of technical opinion or legal opinion, must be considered in the light not only of any other opinion evidence in the record but also all factual evidence in the record, including the wording of the specification and claims of the [48] patent in suit, the drawings of the patent in suit, the file history of the application which matured into the patent in suit, physical exhibits, courtroom demonstrations, photographs in evidence, and all other factual testimony and evidence in the record and of which the Court may take judicial notice.

11. HN7[] In determining whether or not defendant's chair finding a claim of [660] the patent in suit, "resort must be had in the first instance to the words of the claim. If accused matter falls clearly within the claim, infringement is made out, and that is the end of it." Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Products Co., 339 U.S. 605, 607, 70 S. Ct. 854, 855, 94 L. Ed. 1097 (1950); Ransburg Electro-Coating Corp. v. Nordson Corporation, 293 F. Supp. 448, 158 USPQ 385, 411 (N.D.Ill., 1968).

12. Because the term "universal pivotal movement" which occurs in claims 4 and 5 of the Junkunc patent has no established or accepted meaning, it is necessary and proper to resort to the specific definition from the specification to understand what the patentee meant by the term "universal pivotal movement" in his claims. Texas Company v. Globe Oil & Refining Company, 225 F.2d 725, 734-735 (7 Cir., 1955). [49]

13. HN8[] It is a well established rule of patent law that every patentee is entitled to be his own lexicographer. Dennis v. Pitner, 106 F.2d 142, 148 (7 Cir., 1939); Northwest Engineering Corp. v. Keystone Driller Co., 70 F.2d 13, 15 (7 Cir., 1934), aff'd 294 U.S. 42, 55 S. Ct. 262, 79 L. Ed. 747 (1935); Advance Rumley Co. v. John Lauson Mfg. Co., 275 F. 249, 251 (7 Cir., 1921).

14. As original claims of the application as filed, claims 4 and 5 constitute part of the disclosure of the patent in suit.

15. The tablet arm of defendant's accused chair has universal pivotal movement with respect to the supporting link, as called for by claims 4 and 5 of the Junkunc patent.

16. HN9[] The definition of the invention is governed by the express terms of the patent claims, and resort to the specification to narrow a claim by interpreting a particular limitation in a certain way, in order purportedly to save the claim from being invalid over the prior art, is not permitted unless the claim is ambiguous because of the limitation in question. Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Products Co., 336 U.S. 271, 277, 69 S. Ct. 535, 93 L. Ed. 672 (1949); [*507] Borg-Warner Corporation v. Mall Tool Company, [50] 217 F.2d 850, 856 (7 Cir., 1955), cert. den. 349 U.S. 946, 75 S. Ct. 875, 99 L. Ed. 1272 (1955); University of Illinois Foundation v. Block Drug Co., 133 F. Supp. 580, 589 (E.D.Ill., 1955), aff'd 241 F.2d 6 (7 Cir., 1957), cert. den. 354 U.S. 922, 77 S. Ct. 1382, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1437 (1957).

17. Defendant's chair infringes claims 1 through 6 and 14 of the patent in suit on the basis of direct readability of those claims on the accused device.

18. Since the joint structure at the front of the tablet arm of defendant's accused chair performs substantially the same function in substantially the same way to obtain the same results as the true universal joint called for by claims 7, 10, 12 and 15 of the Junkunc patent, the defendant has taken over the essence of Mr. Junkunc's invention, using in its accused chair the mechanical equivalent of a true universal joint. This is an ideal case for the application of the doctrine of equivalents. Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Products Co., 339 U.S. 605, 607, 70 S. Ct. 854, 94 L. Ed. 1097 (1949); Sanitary Refrigerator Co. v. Winters, 280 U.S. 30, 42, 50 S. Ct. 9, 74 L. Ed. 147 (1929).

19. The accused chair differs in minor respects from [51] the chairs shown as illustrative embodiments in the drawings of the patent in suit, but the scope of plaintiff's patent is not limited to the precise structures illustrated, since HN10[] the claims of the patent measure the invention. King-Seeley Thermos Co. v. Tastee Freez Industries, Inc., 357 F.2d 875, 880 (7 Cir., 1966); Stuart W. Johnson & Co., Inc. v. Ro-Ber, Inc., 156 USPQ 177, 182-183 (N.D.Ill., 1967).

20. Having illustrated his invention and described his invention in the specification, HN11[] a patentee may claim his invention as broadly as the prior art allows.

21. HN12[] Defendant, which appropriated the principle and mode of operation of the Junkunc chair, and obtained its results by the same or equivalent means, may not avoid infringement by merely making the device different in form in minor respects. Nordberg Mfg. Co. v. Woolery Machine Co., 79 F.2d 685, 692 (7 Cir., 1935); Eversharp, Inc. v. Fisher Pen Co., 204 F. Supp. 649, 672-673 (N.D.Ill., 1961).

VALIDITY

22. Claims 1 through 7, 10, 12, 14 and 15 of the patent in suit, the only claims at issue, are good and valid in law.

23. HN13[] A patent is presumed valid. 35 U.S.C. Sec. 282. The statutory presumption of validity "is not an [52] idle gesture," and "is not to be overthrown except by clear and cogent evidence." King-Seeley Thermos Co. v. Tastee Freez Industries, Inc., 357 F.2d 875, 879 (7 Cir., 1966); Copease Mfg. Co. v. American Photocopy Equipment Co., 298 F.2d 772, 777 (7 Cir., 1961); Hazeltine Research, Inc. v. Dage Electric [661] Company, Inc., 271 F.2d 218, 224 (7 Cir., 1959); Artmoore Co. v. Dayless Mfg. Co., 208 F.2d 1, 3 (7 Cir., 1953). Every reasonable doubt should be resolved against the defendant who is attempting to show invalidity. Mumm v. Jacob E. Decker & Sons, 301 U.S. 168, 171, 57 S. Ct. 675, 81 L. Ed. 983, 985 (1937).

24. HN14[] The presumption of validity cannot be weakened by reliance on prior art which was cited but not applied by the Examiner. On the contrary, the fact that the most pertinent prior art relied upon by defendant was considered and rejected by the Patent Office "greatly strengthens the presumption of the validity of the patent." Stuart W. Johnson & Co., Inc. v. Ro-Ber, Inc., 156 USPQ 177, 183 (N.D.Ill., 1967); King-Seeley Thermos Co. v. Tastee Freez Industries, Inc., 145 USPQ 596, 600 (N.D.Ill., 1965), aff'd 357 F.2d 875 (7 Cir., 1966); Ekstrom-Carlson & Co. v. Onsrud Machine Works, [53] Inc., 298 F.2d 765, 768 (7 Cir., 1962); AMP Incorporated v. Vaco Products Co., 280 F.2d 518, 521 (7 Cir., 1960); Ransburg Electro-Coating Corp. v. Nordson Corp., 293 F. Supp. 448 (N.D.Ill., 1968).

[*508] 25. HN15[] The copying of the patented chair by defendant indicates its commercial importance and emphasizes the validity of the Junkunc patent. Shumaker v. Gem Manufacturing Co., 311 F.2d 273, 276 (7 Cir., 1962).

26. Moore patent No. 1,864,750 does not anticipate any of the claims at issue, since several of the essential elements of the claims are not found in the Moore patent and HN16[] the defense of anticipation requires that all of the elements of a claim be found in a single piece of prior art. Stuart W. Johnson & Co., Inc. v. Ro-Ber, Inc., 156 USPQ 177, 181 (N.D.Ill., 1967).

27. As there is no evidence that the chair shown in the Moore patent has ever been made or sold commercially, this patent comes within the rule that "A HN17[] prior art patent which has not contributed anything to the practical art, and is thus in the category of paper patents, should be strictly construed with respect to whatever teaching may be found in the same." Eversharp, Inc. v. Fisher Pen Co., 204 F. Supp. [54] 649, 671 (N.D.Ill., 1961).

28. HN18[] Defendant's attempted combination of individual features found in separate prior art patents to show that the invention of the patent in suit was obvious, was improper. The combination folding tablet arm chair of the Junkunc patent cannot properly be anticipated in a piecemeal fashion by combining individual features from different prior art patents when such combination is not taught by the prior art patents themselves. Imhaeuser v. Buerk, 101 U.S. 647, 660, 25 L. Ed. 945 (1880); Holstensson v. Webcor, Inc., 150 F. Supp. 441, 447 (N.D.Ill., 1957); Eversharp, Inc. v. Fisher Pen Co., 204 F. Supp. 649, 671 (N.D.Ill., 1961).

29. The patented folding tablet arm chair is HN19[] a new combination resulting in an improved construction which accomplishes a new result and which is markedly more efficient than the prior art devices. Such a construction is patentable. Aerosol Research Company v. Scovill Manufacturing Co., 334 F.2d 751, 755 (7 Cir., 1964); Copease Mfg. Co. v. American Photocopy Equipment Co., 298 F.2d 772, 781 (7 Cir., 1961); Anderson Company v. Sears, Roebuck and Co., 265 F.2d 755, 762-763 (7 Cir. 1959); Church of Religious Science v. Kinkead Industries, [55] Inc., 234 F.2d 573, 576 (7 Cir., 1956).

30. HN20[] The failure of those working in the prior art and the success of the patentee is evidence that the patentee's contribution was not obvious. Pyle Nat. Co. v. Lewin, 92 F.2d 628, 630 (7 Cir., 1937); Eversharp, Inc. v. Fisher Pen Co., 204 F. Supp. 649, 671 (N.D.Ill., 1961).

31. HN21[] Although many things seem obvious after they have been done, one cannot properly apply hindsight to attempt to determine what was obvious at the time the invention was made. Diamond Rubber Co. v. Consolidated Rubber Tire Co., 220 U.S. 428, 434-435, 31 S. Ct. 444, 55 L. Ed. 527, 531-532 (1911); Ransburg Electro-Coating Corp. v. Nordson Corp., 293 F. Supp. 448 (N.D.Ill., 1968); Walt Disney Productions v. Fred A. Niles Com. Ctr., Inc., 369 F.2d 230, 234-235 (7 Cir., 1966); Shumaker v. Gem Manufacturing Co., 311 F.2d 273, 275-276 (7 Cir., 1962); Hazeltine Research, Inc. v. Dage Electric Company, Inc., 271 F.2d 218, 225 (7 Cir., 1959).

32. HN22[] Defendant's use of eight different prior art patents in its attempt to invalidate plaintiff's claims tends in and of itself to negate the position of defendant that the patent in suit is invalid. Stuart W. Johnson & Co., Inc. v. [56] Ro-Ber, Inc., 156 USPQ 177, 183 [662] (N.D.Ill., 1967); King-Seeley Thermos Co. v. Tastee Freez Industries, Inc., 145 USPQ 596, 600 (N.D.Ill., 1965), aff'd 357 F.2d 875 (7 Cir., 1966).

33. HN23[] The claims at issue are not functional at the point of novelty, since all of them clearly indicate to one skilled in the art a variety of specific structural elements for performing the functions specified, definite properties of such elements, or some definite interrelation [*509] between such elements. No more is required. 35 U.S.C. Sec. 112.

34. The claims at issue are not broader than the disclosure because all of the elements recited in the claims coact with each other to produce a novel Y-frame tablet arm chair having both independent and cooperative movement of the tablet arm with respect to the chair seat. HN24[] Claims covering a combination of elements, in which a new and functional result is achieved as a result of the coaction of the various elements of the combination, are valid. Church of Religious Science v. Kinkead Industries Inc., 234 F.2d 573, 576 (7 Cir., 1956).

ALLEGED PATENT MISUSE AND ANTITRUST VIOLATIONS

35. The evidence clearly indicates that the plaintiff has not misused [57] its patent, and has not violated the antitrust laws of the United States.

36. HN25[] Plaintiff has no duty to grant a license to defendant under the patent in suit, merely because defendant has requested such a license. A patent owner has the right to grant a license to some, as he chooses, without granting a license to others. Extractol Process v. Hiram Walker & Sons, 153 F.2d 264, 268 (7 Cir., 1946); Radio Corporation v. Hygrade Sylvania Corporation, 10 F. Supp. 879, 882-883 (D.N.J., 1934).

37. HN26[] A patent owner is not required to grant licenses to all comers at equal rates and terms. He may select or reject prospective licensees and prefer one over another for considerations within his discretion. United States v. Huck Manufacturing Company, 227 F. Supp. 791, 800, 803, 804 (E.D.Mich., 1964), aff'd per curiam 382 U.S. 197, 86 S. Ct. 385, 15 L. Ed. 2d 268 (1965); United States v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., 118 F. Supp. 41, 224 (D.Del., 1953), aff'd 351 U.S. 377, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

38. HN27[] Although plaintiff need not justify different royalty rates among different licensees, plaintiff has shown that it was a mistake to grant Hampden a license at such a low royalty [58] rate and plaintiff is not required to make the same mistake again. An owner of a patent may grant licenses to manufacture, use or sell upon conditions not inconsistent with the scope of the monopoly. General Talking Pictures Corporation v. Western Electric Company, 304 U.S. 175, 181, 58 S. Ct. 849, 82 L. Ed. 1273 (1938).

39. HN28[] A patent owner who grants a license under his patent may restrict the licensee's product which falls under the licensed patent to a specific use or to a specific form. General Talking Pictures Corporation v. Western Electric Company, 304 U.S. 175, 181, 58 S. Ct. 849, 82 L. Ed. 1273 (1938); Vulcan Mfg. Co. v. Maytag Co., 73 F.2d 136, 138-139 (8 Cir., 1934); Reliance Molded Plastics, Inc. v. Jiffy Products, 215 F. Supp. 402, 408-409 (D.N.J., 1963); Harte & Co., Inc. v. L. E. Carpenter & Co., 138 USPQ 578, 583-584 (S.D.N.Y., 1963); Atlas Imperial Diesel Engine Co. v. Lanova Corporation, 79 F. Supp. 1002, 1003-1004 (D.Del., 1948). Plaintiff clearly had the right to restrict Hampden to the manufacture of chairs of Hampden's own design, and also to restrict defendant Poloron, if the latter accepted a license, to chairs which are "the same as or similar to the chairs [59] currently manufactured by it."

40. Plaintiff had the right to restrict itself from making a chair identical in design with the chair being made by Hampden. Such a restriction embraces articles which fall within the scope of the patent in suit and has an effect that is similar to an exclusive license to Hampden to make chairs of its own design. Rail-Trailer Co. v. ACF Industries, Inc., 358 F.2d 15, 16-17 (7 Cir., 1966); Brownell v. Ketcham Wire & Mfg. Co., 211 F.2d 121, 129 (9 Cir., 1954); E. Bement & Sons v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 94, 22 S. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058 (1902).

41. All of the restrictions in plaintiff's licenses to Clarin and Hampden [*510] are reasonable and are within the scope of the patent monopoly.

42. HN29[] A patent owner has the right to bring an infringement suit against an infringer without first offering the infringer a license.

43. Defendant has not met its burden of proof that any of plaintiff's actions are in restraint of trade or commerce and violative of Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. Sec. 1).

44. Defendant has failed to prove that plaintiff has done anything that [663] goes beyond the scope of the original patent monopoly. Hence, defendant's [60] charges of violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. Secs. 1 and 2) must fail.

45. Plaintiff does not control a "relevant market", nor has defendant shown that plaintiff has or ever had any unlawful intent to monopolize. These facts were matters that defendant was required to prove if it was to support its charges of violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 626, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 432 (2 Cir., 1945).

46. Since plaintiff's sales comprise at the most only five to ten percent of the true relevant market of all chairs with tablet arms, plaintiff does not have the monopoly power that is required for violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

47. Defendant's counterclaim charging violation of the antitrust laws has no basis in fact or in law. Defendant knew or should have known this, and its charge of antitrust violations against plaintiff was unreasonable and has required plaintiff to expend much time in defending this charge.

RELIEF TO WHICH PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED

48. Plaintiff is entitled to a permanent injunction restraining [61] the defendant, its officers, agents and employees, and all persons controlled by or acting in concert or association with defendant, from further infringement of United States Letters Patent No. 2,954,073, and from further making, using, offering for sale or selling devices embodying the invention described and claimed in said patent.

49. Plaintiff is further entitled to an accounting of damages arising by virtue of the infringement by defendant of United States Letters Patent No. 2,954,073 and for interest thereon. This cause should be continued with respect to the accounting issues pursuant to Rule 42(b) of the Federal Rule of Civil Procedure.

50. Plaintiff is entitled to an award of costs with respect to the issues of patent validity and infringement and the antitrust counterclaim.

End of Document

Boise Cascade International, Inc. v. Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Producers Asso.

United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, Fifth Division

December 28, 1968

No. 5-68 Civ. 52

Reporter

294 F. Supp. 1015 *; 1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12535 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,771

Boise Cascade International, Inc. Plaintiff v. Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Producers Assn., Emery Carlson, Norman Warpula, and James Parnham, Defendants

Core Terms

pulpwood, plant, contracts, merits, Sherman Act, injunctive, producers, exempt, anti trust law, products, boycott, cords, agricultural, deliveries, purposes, preliminary injunction, agricultural product, organizations, Northern, withhold, concert, parties, existing contract, open market, Volstead Act, conspiracy, grievances, Relations, dissuade, deliver

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN1[] Injunctions, Permanent Injunctions

Permanent injunctive relief can only be granted after a full hearing and specific findings by the trier of fact whether this be by the jury or by the court.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Unclean Hands

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Denial of Allegations

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

HN2[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

The request for a preliminary injunction, at the very outset of the litigation, is addressed to the sound discretion of the Court. The plaintiff must show: (1) that the conduct to be enjoined is in furtherance of the alleged violations of the Sherman Act; (2) that there is a substantial likelihood the allegations of the complaint will be sustained at the trial of the cause; (3) that irreparable harm to the plaintiff will result if the injunction pendente lite is denied; (4) and that there is no conduct by plaintiff which would bar the granting of equitable relief. Further, these four rather specific burdens are concomitant with other well-established principles of equity, e.g., preservation of the status quo, public interest and the defense of unclean hands.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Personal Service Agreements

Contracts Law > Defenses > Public Policy Violations

Contracts Law > Remedies > Specific Performance

HN3[] Types of Contracts, Personal Service Agreements

Courts of equity have recognized the impossibility of enforcing a contract where personal services are involved, and have refused so to do.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is well established that any individual operator acting alone and not in concert with others is, and has been free, to sell his product or his labor to whom he will at such price as he cares to demand, or to withhold the same from the market as he pleases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, requires no formal association but only a "combination or conspiracy," and this has always been interpreted to countenance some type of agreement among the parties to the conspiracy or combination, whether formal or informal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

It is not necessary to find an express agreement, either oral or written, in order to find a conspiracy, but it is sufficient that a concert of action be contemplated and that defendants conform to the arrangement. Mutual consent need not be bottomed on express agreement, for any conformance to an agreed or contemplated pattern of conduct will warrant an inference of conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN7[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

See The Capper Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C.S. § 291.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Capper-Volstead Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

HN8[] Collectives & Cooperatives, Capper-Volstead Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 17.

Judges: [1] Neville, District Judge.

Opinion by: NEVILLE

Opinion

[*1017] NEVILLE, District Judge:

Plaintiff, a paper mill and manufacturer of insulite wallboard, is engaged in interstate commerce with a mill and plant at International Falls, Minnesota on the Canadian border. It brings this suit to enjoin defendants, an "ad hoc" unincorporated association and three individuals, said to be officers thereof, (1) from what it claims to be a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, in the form of a boycott and (2) from inducing other persons to breach their existing contracts with plaintiff. The complaint also seeks treble damages. Plaintiff followed the filing of the complaint with moving papers seeking a preliminary injunction. No answer has yet been filed and the time therefor has not yet expired; nor is the court advised whether either party demands a jury trial on the merits.

Prior to the hearing and the taking of testimony on the question of a preliminary injunction, the court invited the attention of both counsel to Rule 65(a)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure relative to consolidating the trial of the action on the merits with the application for preliminary injunction. [2] Neither counsel expressed themselves to this end and no stipulation was made concerning such a procedure. The court is aware of the last sentence of Subd. (a)(2) that it shall be construed "as to save the parties any rights they may have to trial by jury." Consequently, since this action involves not only a request for injunctive relief but a prayer for treble damages, it is clear either party is entitled to demand a jury trial. This would seem to prevent the court from making any finding on the merits of the request for injunctive relief since under traditional principles of res adjudicata such would deprive either party or both parties of the right to a jury trial. Even should plaintiff waive a jury trial, defendants would seem entitled to have a jury pass on the question of whether they are in violation of law so as to render them liable. None of the parties should be bound as though there had been a trial on the merits at the preliminary hearing had before this court.

It should thus be emphasized that this is a suit for preliminary relief under 15 U.S.C. § 26 and that the court is not passing upon the merits of the controversy in question. Any HN1[] permanent injunctive relief, [3] if in fact plaintiff succeeds in its case on the merits, can only be granted after a full hearing and specific findings by the trier of fact whether this be by the jury or by the court. See, Beacon Theatres v. Westover, 359 U.S. 500, 3 L. Ed. 2d 988, 79 S. Ct. 948 (1959); United States v. Munsingwear, Inc., 340 U.S. 36, 95 L. Ed. 36, 71 S. Ct. 104 (1950); and Florists' Nationwide Telephone Delivery Network v. Florists' Telegraph Delivery Ass'n, 371 F.2d 263, 270-71 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 387 U.S. 909, 87 S. Ct. 1686, 18 L. Ed. 2d 627 (1967). Whether [*1018] at a full trial on the merits, the evidence heretofore adduced need not be repeated will await a ruling by the court at that time. A general jury term of this court commences at Duluth, Minnesota on January 6, 1969, and this case will be advanced and will stand for trial on the merits on that date or as soon after January 6, 1969 as the case can be reached.

The facts of this case are not seriously in dispute. Plaintiff uses as its raw material a forest product known as pulpwood in its manufacturing processes. It acquires this for the most part locally, that is to say within a radius of 50 miles or thereabouts. Trees [4] employed for this purpose are younger trees -- largely second growth -- said to be 40 years of age and up. This part of northern Minnesota is a sparsely populated wooded or forest area. Seventy-five per cent of the land in Koochiching County of which International Falls is the county seat was testified to be either state or county owned. Permits to cut timber therefrom must be obtained from proper authorities. Plaintiff employs some wood chips and contracts with what are called loggers, who cut timber growing for the most part if not entirely on land owned or controlled by plaintiff. These loggers and generally the deliverers of wood chips are not involved in this dispute. Plaintiff also traditionally contracts each year with approximately 400 "pulpwood producers" or as plaintiff's witnesses characterized them "open market operators". As of date of hearing herein, plaintiff had existing contracts with some 250 such operators. These operators and their recent activities are the subject matter of this action.

Generally the operators enter into individual contracts with plaintiff for the winter season commencing on or about November 1st of each year. The contracts obligate them [5] to deliver a specified quantity of pulpwood in particular lengths for a price for each species or set amount of dollars per cord, deliveries to be completed on or before March 15th of the following year, (or apparently occasionally at an earlier date). There are also summer contracts made with the operators but such are not presently involved in the request for preliminary injunction. The dates for the so-called winter contracts are determined to accommodate weather conditions. Operators cannot well get into the woods and across the swamps with their equipment to cut timber until the ground is frozen, nor operate successfully at least for a period after the spring "break up".

The open market operators meet the classic definition of independent contractors. They provide their own saws, loaders, trucks and trailers and other equipment. Plaintiff company does not furnish nor finance such. They cut and deliver pulpwood when and as they can and please so long as they have completed their deliveries by the deadline date of mid-March (occasionally earlier). They may, and many do, hire others to assist them. They receive no wages, but merely a price for their product and apparently [6] at the desire of both the Company and operators are not considered employees. There was testimony that plaintiff owns and controls some 375,000 acres of land near International Falls, and is re-planting trees on some of its "plantations". For the most part if not entirely, however, the operators cut trees that were not planted by themselves but are natural growth and are 40 years or more of age. "Cropping" trees undoubtedly is a forward-looking plan, but as yet obviously in its infancy.

Apparently in 1967, and continuing into the winter 1968-69 season, plaintiff made some changes in the manner of paying for its wood products, basing such on total weight (maintaining a differing winter and summer weight) rather than paying on volume basis, i.e., by the cord. This among other things appears to have caused some unrest among a substantial number of the operators. This and perhaps other grievances resulted in several meetings of the operators and other interested persons and ultimately in a request by the operators to meet jointly with some of plaintiff's officials to discuss alleged differences. [*1019] This request in any sort of a formal way was received after November 25, [7] 1968, and plaintiff refused to discuss any grievances until what it termed the boycott was lifted, and the operators refused so to do until plaintiff would grant an audience to hear and discuss grievances. A deadlock has resulted. The court hopes that following this order discussions will ensue between the parties.

Principally the operators wish a raise in the prices paid for their pulpwood. They have never been organized on any sort of group basis before nor presented any concerted or uniform demands to plaintiff. They have historically made individual contracts year after year at varying times and (with minor exceptions due to distances involved in transportation) the same price has been rather uniformly paid by the plaintiff company as to all operators.

The operators have been determined not to be a labor organization, at least within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act. An attempt to affiliate with the Teamsters Union (Local 615 Virginia, Minnesota) was thwarted by a letter from the Regional Director of the National Labor Relations Board dated October 29, 1968, which reads in part as follows:

> "As a result of the investigation, it appears that the unit [8] of employees for which the Petitioner seeks to act as bargaining agent is inappropriate for collective bargaining purposes. [1] Consequently, further proceedings are not warranted and I am therefore dismissing the Petition in this matter."

About mid-November 1968 a group of operators met in a town near International Falls and concluded to attempt to take what it considered remedial measures. Witness Emery Carlson, a defendant, claims there was no formal organization of any association, but that because he was somewhat more vocal than others he was asked to assume the podium, and that by so doing plaintiff has designated him as President. The organization never formally elected any officers, and has adopted no constitution or by-laws. Membership cards were issued, however, to some number of persons who paid $3.00 dues to one of their number assuming the duties as treasurer. Defendant Parnham apparently acted as ad hoc secretary and so has been designated by plaintiff in the pleadings as an officer of the association. The name Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Producers Association was used and adopted.

Commencing on November 25, 1968 a group [9] of men, mostly if not all operators estimated by various witnesses and at various times as between 15 and 40, gathered at the plaintiff's plant. They appear to have been careful not to trespass on plant property and it is clear they exercised no violence. They stopped, or attempted to stop trucks making delivery of pulpwood and wood chips to the plaintiff's plant, talked to the drivers, explained grievances, stated they were seeking a price of an additional $1.00 per cord for their wood, and dissuaded some substantial number of operators (and wood chip deliverers) from making delivery to the plant. Defendants Emery Carlson and Norman Warpula were prominent among the group and defendant James Parnham was identified as being present on one or more occasions or engaged in some of the activities. There is no testimony that the defendants ever actually blocked access by truckers to the plaintiff's weighing scale (the first stop for truckers making deliveries to plaintiff's plant) but a number of parked cars did impede to some extent free and usual access to the scale. There is no evidence that any driver actually was forced away from the plant, and even as at date of the hearing of [10] this matter, some witnesses testified they were still making deliveries. A number of untoward incidents occurred at a distance from plaintiff's plant or mill affecting damage to the equipment of some operators who insisted on making deliveries but no reliable evidence was presented connecting [*1020] such with the defendants. The court thus struck such evidence from the record, according plaintiff the benefit of Rule 43(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure relating to an offer of proof.

[1] "Independent Contractor. "

By way of comparison, it was testified and records were produced showing that for December 1967 plaintiff's plant received between 850 and 1800 cords of pulpwood a day from operators and that for the month of November 1968, up to November 25th, the plant had received an average approximating 1500 cords of pulpwood per day from operators.

Upon the advent of defendants' activities on November 25, 1968, receipts of pulpwood from operators virtually ceased. Three Hundred Seventy Five cords arrived November 25, but there were none for November 26 thru December 1st, thereafter increasing in irregular amounts to 408 cords on December 9th, the day this suit was filed. The activities of the [11] group of operators obviously was and is being quite effective. There is no question or doubt in the court's mind, whether or not the Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Association be deemed a formal association but that a number of the operators have acted in concert and with a common joint purpose and have successfully diminished plaintiff's pulpwood deliveries.

Plaintiff claims irreparable damage and injury and the court permitted one of plaintiff's witnesses, general manager of the procurement or woodlands division, to testify over objection that an estimate of damage to date is $100,000. No detail was given for this figure, the bulk of which apparently represents increased prices paid to secure pulpwood by rail from other sources. The plant has not closed down to date and is still running 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, and has on hand 4 to 5 days of pulpwood supply. This reserve has been dwindling however. Much is made of the fact that the plant is International Falls' principal industry and employs some 2100 people with an annual payroll of $15,000,000 who would be out of work were the plant forced to close. As to what the court must find in order to grant a preliminary injunction, [12] a quote from McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., 235 F. Supp. 743 (E.D. Pa. 1964) is particularly apropos:

> "Preliminary, HN2[] the request for a preliminary injunction, at the very outset of the litigation, is addressed to the sound discretion of the Court. Joseph Bancroft and Sons Co. v. Shelley Knitting Mills, Inc., 268 F.2d 569 (3rd Cir. 1959). The plaintiff must show: (1) that the conduct to be enjoined is in furtherance of the alleged violations of the Sherman Act; (2) that there is a substantial likelihood the allegations of the complaint will be sustained at the trial of the cause; (3) that irreparable harm to the plaintiff will result if the injunction pendente lite is denied; (4) and that there is no conduct by McKesson which would bar the granting of equitable relief." 235 F. Supp. at 746.

Further, these four rather specific burdens are concomitant with other well-established principles of equity, e.g., preservation of the status quo, public interest and the defense of unclean hands. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. v. Gittone, 110 F.2d 292 (3rd Cir. 1940); B & W Gas, Inc. v. General Gas Corp., 247 F. Supp. 339 (N.D. Ga. 1965); McKesson and Robbins, Inc. [13] v. Charles Pfizer & Co., 235 F. Supp. 743 (E.D. Pa. 1964); and Fein v. Security Banknote Co., 157 F. Supp. 146 (S.D.N.Y. 1957).

At the outset it is clear that the court cannot by any sort of a mandatory injunction compel specific performance of the approximately 250 extant open market operators' contracts. From time immemorial, HN3[] courts of equity have recognized the impossibility of enforcing a contract where personal services are involved, and have refused so to do. Certainly it is not feasible nor appropriate that the United States Marshal should go into the woods, stand over the operators and attempt to compel them to cut wood and deliver the same.

[*1021] Insofar as the relief sought by plaintiff is an order for specific performance of contracts to supply wood or compelling defendants and other pulpwood producers to cut, load and deliver their product to its mill, such are personal service contracts and the court should not, either directly or indirectly, by means of an injunction, compel the affirmative performance of any such contracts. Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 77 U.S.(10 Wall.) 339, 19 L. Ed. 955 (U.S. 1870); Bennett v. Fox Film Corp., 149 Minn. 88, 182 N.W. 905 [14] (1921); Paramount Pictures Corp. v. Holden, 166 F. Supp. 684 (D.C. Cal.); King Features Syndicate v. Courrier, 241 Iowa 870, 43 N.W.2d 718 (1950); 28 Am. Jur., "Injunctions" § 108; 49 Am. Jur., "Specific Performance" § 134.

Also HN4[] it is well established that any individual operator acting alone and not in concert with others is, and has been free, to sell his product or his labor to whom he will at such price as he cares to demand, or to withhold the same from the market as he pleases. He may ask any price he chooses and (assuming he is not breaching an existing contract) may cut his timber or refuse to do so. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919).

The court is convinced that defendants' conduct may well be found to be in furtherance of an alleged violation of the Sherman Act and that plaintiff has shown a reasonable probability and substantial likelihood of success at a trial on the merits. Defendants placed much emphasis on the fact that if any group existed here it was an ad hoc group of individuals expressing common grievances against plaintiff and not a formal "association" conducting a group boycott. The statute however, HN5[] Section [15] 1 of the Sherman Act, requires no formal association but only a "combination or conspiracy," and this has always been interpreted to countenance some type of agreement among the parties to the conspiracy or combination, whether formal or informal. As stated in Esco Corp. v. United States, 340 F.2d 1000, 1008 (9th Cir. 1965):

> "It HN6[] is not necessary to find an express agreement, either oral or written, in order to find a conspiracy, but it is sufficient that a concert of action be contemplated and that defendants conform to the arrangement. Mutual consent need not be bottomed on express agreement, for any conformance to an agreed or contemplated pattern of conduct will warrant an inference of conspiracy."

See, Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954); United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 92 L. Ed. 746, 68 S. Ct. 525 (1948); United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 86 L. Ed. 1461, 62 S. Ct. 1070 (1942); Sugar Institute, Inc. v. United States, 297 U.S. 553, 80 L. Ed. 859, 56 S. Ct. 629 (1936); Maple Flooring Mfgrs. Ass'n v. United States, 268 U.S. 563, 69 L. Ed. 1093, 45 S. Ct. 578 [16] (1925); and United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U.S. 371, 67 L. Ed. 1035, 43 S. Ct. 607 (1923). In the case at bar, the evidence is uncontroverted that there was a combination of pulpwood producers outside the Boise Cascade paper mill on a daily basis starting on November 25, 1968. The named individual defendants were seen attending this group and giving instructions on several occasions. It is clear that many pulpwood producers have associated and acted together, albeit informally, under the name of the Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Producers Association.

The court is also convinced, at least for the purposes of passing on plaintiff's request for preliminary relief, that this "association" and the individuals named as defendants have engaged in a concerted group boycott the purposes of which have been to attempt to control the price of pulpwood which they sell to plaintiff. It is well settled that such group boycotts are illegal per se and unreasonable restraints of trade as a matter of public policy. United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, [*1022] 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. [17] Ct. 1051 (1964); Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); and Fashion Originators' Guild of America v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703 (1941).

The difficulty arises when two or more operators begin to act in concert, that is in jointly agreeing to withhold their products from market pending the ascertainment of a particular price. This is the evil at which the antitrust laws are aimed. If three or a dozen or fifty manufacturers of refrigerators, automobiles, steel, or any other products for instance, agree not to sell below a certain price and to withhold products from the market until that price is obtained, competition is destroyed, the incentive to make better products more cheaply is gone, and the evils of monopoly or oligopoly exist and tend to be created. The attempt in the present lawsuit is to bring the open market operators or pulp producers within the ambit of this principle and reasoning.

It is clear to the court that the conduct in which the operators have engaged since November [18] 25, 1968 or thereabouts is likely to be in contravention of the principles and theories espoused by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The operators are attempting to withhold product to obtain a certain price ($1.00 more per cord of wood) and to accomplish this are attempting to induce other such operators to adopt a similar course of conduct. Such conduct clearly would be and has been condemned by sellers of books, milk, structural steel, electrical equipment, motion pictures and many, many other products. The antitrust laws are designed to condemn just such conduct.

It is true that the operators here are not United States Steel, General Motors or General Electric, but are back-woodsmen who by their own industry and sweat cut timber in the dead of winter and haul it to and sell it to their most immediate and perhaps in reality their only available market from a transportation standpoint, i.e., the plaintiff in this case. While they suffer a disparity of bargaining position, it seems to the court that under the teachings of Meat Drivers v. United States, 371 U.S. 94, 9 L. Ed. 2d 150, 83 S. Ct. 162 (1962) (grease peddlers) and Columbia River Packers Ass'n, Inc. v. Hinton, 315 U.S. [19] 143, 86 L. Ed. 750, 62 S. Ct. 520 (1942) (fishermen) this court is bound and must hold that the identity or economic circumstances of the persons apparently violating Section 1 of the Sherman Act by concentrated price fixing activities is not material and that the conduct of the operators here in all likelihood may well be found to be in contravention of the letter, principles and spirit of the Sherman Act.

This then brings the court to the question as to whether the open market operators can be found to be exempt from the antitrust laws. There are two possible bottoms for this claim:

(1) HN7[] The Capper Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C. § 291 which reads in pertinent part as follows:

> "Persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of persons so engaged. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect [20] such purposes . . . ."

It is difficult for the court to find that the operators are "farmers" or "planters" or "ranchmen" and clearly they are not " dairymen" or "nut or fruit growers."

[*1023] The term "agricultural products" is not defined within the Capper Volstead Act. The Co-operative Marketing Act, 7 U.S.C. § 451, defines "agricultural products" to include only "the edible products of forestry." On the other hand, the Minnesota Cooperative Marketing Act, Minn. Stat. § 308.52, includes all "forestry" in its definition of "agricultural products." The court is willing to assume, arguendo, that trees, or at least the cutting and harvesting thereof, is within the term "agricultural products." Such does not however answer the question because even producers of agricultural products and their agricultural organizations are subject to the antitrust laws when they step outside the scope and purpose of these limited exemptions. See, Case- Swayne Co. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 389 U.S. 384, 19 L. Ed. 2d 621, 88 S. Ct. 528 (1967); and Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880, 80 S. Ct. 847 (1960). Therefore, if for no other [21] reason, it would seem the Capper Volstead Act at a trial on the merits may well be found not to accord the operators an exemption from the operation of the antitrust laws.

(2) Apart from the Capper Volstead Act, the antitrust law itself, specifically 15 U.S.C. § 17, creates certain exemptions. These are perhaps broader than those in the Capper Volstead Act. There is no doubt but what many, many activities of labor unions themselves might well be contrary to antitrust principles if Congress had not deemed that human labor is not a commodity in interstate commerce. HN8[] 15 U.S.C. § 17 reads in part:

> "The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor > shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, [22] under the antitrust laws."

Labor and agricultural organizations thus may continue "for the purposes of mutual help" and may not be restrained "from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof." The question which may be before the trier of fact then is whether the present loosely organized Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Association can be said to be an agricultural organization. If so, then its activities are exempt from the umbrella of antitrust restrictions. From the standpoint of the operators it is easy to understand that they may look at their brothers employed in plaintiff's mill or plant and observe that they have the right to organize and to strike, even though irreparable harm ensues to the employer and perhaps to many persons not connected directly or involved with the strike. It is understandable that the operators deem themselves a part of plaintiff's labor force, not running a machine in the factory to be sure, but laboring in the woods to cut and produce the pulpwood which produces the raw material that keeps the factory running. Does the happenstance that historically their labor is rendered in the form of independent contractors vary this? Is form more [23] important than substance? Can it not fairly be said that the Congress, had the issue been specifically pointed up, would have considered such a group as the operators an agricultural association and within the purview of the exemption?

The two cases of Meat Drivers and Columbia River Packers Ass'n above cited are distinguishable. Neither can be said to have an aura of agriculture, as does the case at hand; nor in either opinion was any reference made to the above exemption section of the Sherman Act. Meat Drivers [*1024] dealt with "grease peddlers," i.e., those who bought up used kitchen grease from hotel and restaurant kitchens and resold the same, largely for export. The Columbia River case comprised fishermen selling to a cannery, and the court struck down an organized attempt to withhold catch from the market. The court believes the trier of fact at a trial on the merits may well find that the operators have a right to be in an association and to speak and act collectively. It would appear that the association cannot represent anyone but its own bona fide members; it cannot purport to represent those who are not its members as can a labor union [24] once a successful National Labor Relations Board election has been held. It would seem it can, however, speak for and represent its members; that when a new round of contracts is to be made with plaintiff, the members of the association might act collectively and only for their own members.

A determination however, if it is so made at a trial on the merits, that the Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Producers Association is an agricultural organization exempt from the Sherman Act, does not fully answer the question now before the court in this preliminary injunctive request. The antitrust exemption even for long existing and well established labor unions, for instance, does not permit it to engage in every type of activity, nor to conspire with others to use illegal means to achieve a result. A boycott is such an illegal means. Members of an organization can resist and withhold their own labor, but the use of a boycott by prevailing upon others so to do is condemned by statute and by court decisions as illegal per se.

The defendants here are not merely asserting demands for themselves and the members of their association, but are endeavoring to dissuade others either by persuasion [25] or by what some might interpret as intimidation; this activity must be judged in light of the fact that some 250 operators already have contracts with plaintiff and, according to plaintiff's testimony, normally by this time of year approximately 400 operators would have entered into contracts. While it cannot in a technical sense be said that any operator yet has breached his contract, or been persuaded to by the operators, it is obvious historically that with 400 operators under contract the plaintiff company would have a normal daily flow of 1,000 to 1,500 cords of wood a day and this has been quite successfully and definitely interrupted; this has set back or deferred the normal and usual time schedule for performance by the operators and has been disruptive. The court believes that there is a real danger that if present conditions continue the plant may be forced to close. Certainly such will cause irreparable harm, not only to the parties but to many others not here involved.

Whether or not the court be upheld at a trial on the merits in its determination that the association is an agricultural organization exempt from the antitrust laws, it is clear that the defendants cannot [26] continue their boycott in violation of their existing contracts, cannot assemble at the plant as for "peaceful picketing" to dissuade or interfere with those who wish to deliver products to the plant; nor can defendants persuade or attempt to persuade others not to perform their contracts or to refuse normal business relations with plaintiff. When and if the individual operators wish to renew their contracts, the association may be found at a trial on the merits to be permitted to speak for those who so authorize; but the association cannot speak for others and by the same token cannot dissuade or attempt to dissuade others or even its own members who have existing contracts from having normal business intercourse and relations with plaintiff.

The court is clear that the Norris-La Guardia Act, 29 U.S.C. § 104, does not apply to the facts of this case so as to prevent preliminary injunctive relief. It would seem that this is not a "labor dispute" in the traditional sense and thus that Act has no application. Columbia [*1025] River Packers Ass'n, Inc. v. Hinton, 315 U.S. 143, 86 L. Ed. 750, 62 S. Ct. 520 (1942); Meat Drivers v. United States, 371 U.S. 94, 9 L. Ed. 2d 150, 83 [27] S. Ct. 162 (1962). Rather what is presented in the case at hand is an apparent violation of the Sherman Act by virtue of what appears to be an illegal boycott by what the trier of fact ultimately may well find to be a legal organization.

This memorandum shall be in lieu of and shall be deemed to include the court's findings of facts for purposes of Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. A separate injunctive order has been entered.

International Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. General Tel. & Electronics Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Hawaii

January 16, 1969

Civil No. 2754

Reporter

296 F. Supp. 920 *; 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13020 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,691

International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. v. General Telephone & Electronics Corp. and Hawaiian Telephone Co.

Core Terms

acquisitions, anti trust law, laches, equitable, statute of limitations, affirmative defense, antitrust, injunctive relief, legal right, equitable remedy, Clayton Act, telephone company, public policy, violations, estoppel, parties, unclean hands, damages, treble damages, four year, predicated, stock

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN1[] Remedies, Damages

The Clayton Act § 4B, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(b), is limited to actions for money damages initiated under the Clayton Act § 4 or § 4A, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15 or § 15(a), by private parties or the federal government. The Clayton Act § 4B, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15(b) does not in any way specifically curtail or attach limitations to private suits under the Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN2[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

The doctrines of estoppel and waiver do not, in general, apply in transactions that are forbidden by statute or that are contrary to public policy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Equity > Maxims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Unclean Hands

HN3[] Equity, Maxims

The courts of equity apply the maxim requiring clean hands only where some unconscionable act of one coming for relief has immediate and necessary relation to the equity that he seeks in respect of the matter in litigation. They do not close their doors because of plaintiff's misconduct, whatever its character, that has no relation to anything involved in the suit, but only for such violations of conscience as in some measure affect the equitable relations between the parties in respect of something brought before the court for adjudication.

Judges: [1] Pence, D.J.

Opinion by: PENCE

Opinion

[*921] Memorandum Decision on Plaintiff's Motion to Strike the Second, Third and Fourth Affirmative Defenses of Defendant General Telephone & Electronics Corporation

PENCE, D.J.:

Plaintiff is suing under Section 16 of the Clayton Act (Title 15 U.S.C. § 26) and Section 11 of Act 190 of the Hawaii Laws of 1961 for injunctive relief from defendants' alleged violations of the federal and state antitrust laws. Defendant General Telephone & Electronics (GT&E) has asserted the doctrines of laches and/or statute of limitations, [1] estoppel, [2] and unclean hands [3] as affirmative defenses to some or all of plaintiff's charges. Plaintiff has moved to strike these defenses as insufficient and immaterial as a matter of law. Plaintiff's motion was granted orally on August 2, 1968, and this is but the formal written decision thereon.

[2] I. Second Affirmative Defense: Laches and/or Statute of Limitations

Paragraph 1 of plaintiff's prayer for relief requests that the following acquisitions of GT&E be adjudged violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (Title 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2) and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (Title 15 U.S.C. § 18):

1. 1950 -- GT&E acquired the capital stock of Leich Electric Co.;
2. 1954 -- GT&E acquired the stock or assets of Automatic Electric Company;

---

[1] Second Affirmative Defense, Answer To Amended Complaint and Counterclaim (filed February 20, 1968), paragraphs 31-32.

[2] Third Affirmative Defense, Answer, paragraphs 33-52.

[3] Fourth Affirmative Defense, Answer, paragraphs 53-67.

3. 1959 -- GT&E acquired the stock or assets of Lenkurt Electric Co., Inc.; and
4. 1964 -- GT&E acquired the stock of California Water & Telephone Company, West Coast Telephone Company, The Southwestern States Telephone Company, and Western Utilities Corporation (all referred to as the Western Utilities groups).

Defendant contends "such relief is barred by reason of laches and the statute of limitations (Section 4B of the Clayton Act . . .)." [4] [3] [*922] Defendant has abandoned this defense insofar as it relates to the 1964 acquisition of the Western Utilities group, which occurred within four (4) years of the filing of this lawsuit (October 18, 1967). [5]

Clayton § 4B [6] provides that any "action under sections 4 or 4A shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." Since plaintiff initiated this lawsuit solely under Clayton § 16 for injunctive relief, the § 4B statute of limitations applied to Clayton Act actions for money damages is, by its very language, not, per se, applicable to this proceeding. Defendant's second affirmative defense is therefore limited to the equitable doctrine of laches, which, for the purposes of this action, defendant equates to the statute of limitations.

Defendant stated its position in the context of and relies primarily [7] on Farbenfabriken Bayer, A.G. v. Sterling Drug, 197 F. Supp. 627 (D.N.J. 1961): (Id. note 5 supra.)

> "When I say laches here, I am talking about laches in the sense of an equitable remedy being linked to a legal [4] right, the equitable remedy being Section 16 linked to a legal right, which is Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.
>
> "The plaintiff isn't suing for damages. The one thing he is after is an equitable remedy of an injunction, divestiture, some equitable remedy. Now, it's linked to the legal rights given by statute, Clayton 7 and Sherman 1 and 2. Those legal rights in the Anti-trust laws, Sherman 1 and 2 and Clayton 7, are subject to Section 4, statute of limitations, Section 4B, four years.
> * * *
> " . . . [When] I say laches now, I am talking about laches which is the four-year period, because it is the statute of limitations of the legal rights upon which they ask for the equitable remedy."

[5] Plaintiff urges that an action for divestiture under the antitrust laws is timely if, at the time of filing, there appears a reasonable likelihood any acquisition will lessen competition, citing United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057, 77 S. Ct. 872 (1957). Plaintiff maintains du Pont permits suit whenever "the acquisition threatens to ripen into a prohibited effect." [8] Defendant counters that du Pont is distinguishable since it was a government suit and immune from any laches defense. Defendant construes plaintiff's position as conceding that an acquisition which constituted a violation at the time made is subject to attack for laches, arguing that, at most, du Pont introduces a fact question (e.g., when the violation occurred) which precludes summary judgment as an alternative to a motion to strike.

---

[4] Defendant has abandoned that portion of its pleading relating to § 22 of Act 190 of the Hawaii Laws of 1961, since plaintiff does not maintain that the listed acquisitions in any way violate that Act. (R.T. August 1, 1968 at 104-05.)

[5] R.T. August 1, 1968 at 42.

[6] Title 15 U.S.C. § 15b.

[7] Defendants have also pointed to United West Coast Theatres Corp. v. South Side Theatres, 86 F. Supp. 109 (S.D. Cal. 1949) (defendant counterclaimed for treble damages and injunctive relief under Clayton §§ 4 and 16, and the court applied the state statute of limitations to the prayer for equitable relief), and Hoopes v. Union Oil Co. of California, 374 F.2d 480 (9 Cir. 1967) (a suit for money damages only under Clayton § 4).

[8] Plaintiff's Reply To Memorandum In Opposition To ITT's Motion to Strike The Second, Third and Fourth Affirmative Defenses (filed June 12, 1968) at page 2, and du Pont, supra, at page 597.

[6] HN1[]

Clayton 4B is limited to actions for money damages initiated under Clayton 4 or 4A by private parties or the federal government. Clayton 4B does not [*923] in any way specifically curtail or attach limitations to private suits under Clayton 16. If there is any such limitation on private equity proceedings, it can therefore only derive from case law.

Sterling Drug, supra, is the primary authority relied upon by defendant to support its position that the Clayton 4B four year statute of limitations for Clayton 4 actions is by case law transmuted into laches and made applicable to this equitable proceeding under Clayton 16. In that case plaintiff sued on September 28, 1955, for money and injunctive relief as a result of defendant's Sherman 1 violation. A companion opinion found that such violation (an unlawful combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade in pharmaceutical products) had terminated on September 5, 1941. Previously the court had dismissed plaintiff's treble damage claim, leaving only a Clayton 16 claim for injunctive relief. In granting defendant's motion for summary judgment, the court said:

> "Section 4 of the Clayton Act . . . grants to 'any [7] person * * * injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws' a right to maintain an action for treble damages. Section 16 of the Act . . . grants an additional right to maintain an action for injunctive relief 'against threatened loss or damage.' We are of the opinion that the equitable remedy available under Section 16 is predicated upon the legal cause of action created by Section 4. It is essentially an equitable remedy in aid of a legal right created by the statute.
>
> "The statute of limitations, by its express terms, applies only to actions at law and may not be invoked as a defense against a claim exclusively equitable. However, where the equity jurisdiction is invoked in aid of a legal right, or is predicated upon a legal cause of action, equity 'will withhold its remedy if the legal right is barred by the * * * statute of limitations.'" 197 F. Supp. at 629. [9]

[8] The history of sections 4, 16 and 4B does not permit this court to agree with the conclusion that a Clayton 16 claim "is predicated upon the legal cause of action created by Section 4." Private parties were originally granted the right to seek treble damages by the Sherman Act (passed July 2, 1890), which, however, did not establish the corollary right to injunctive relief. Congress reenacted the substance of the treble damage provision on October 15, 1914 as Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Significantly, Congress at that time made a concomitant expansion of the antitrust laws by giving private parties the right to sue for injunctive relief (Clayton § 16) separate and apart from any right to monetary recovery. It was not until July 7, 1955, that Clayton 4B, which pre-empted application of state statutes of limitation to the federal antitrust laws, was added.

While the right to such injunctive relief to redress antitrust grievances may be said to be "additional" to the right to damages in the sense that it may be conjoined therewith, it may also be an alternative. As the above history manifests, the equitable remedy of § 16 is in no way "predicated upon", incidental to or derived [9] from the legal right of § 4. The two sections expressly create wholly independent remedies, in strikingly similar language. A litigant may pull either trigger of his shotgun independently, or, at his option, he may shoot both barrels together. This is abundantly clear from the instant complaint, in which plaintiff seeks only injunctive relief. No damage claim exists herein on which any equitable remedy could be predicated. Yet defendants have not challenged plaintiff's right to maintain this suit.

In Sterling Drug plaintiff originally sought both legal and equitable relief, [*924] and to support incorporation of the Clayton 4B four year limitations period into a laches defense applied to a Clayton 16 claim the court relied on the general principle that equity withholds its remedy when legal rights are barred. Moreover, the facts of Sterling Drug are markedly different from those alleged here. The violation in Sterling Drug consisted of a conspiracy among plaintiff's predecessors and the defendant and its predecessors, which included illegal contracts in 1920, 1923 and 1926, all of which terminated on September 5, 1941. The suit was filed in 1955. In [10] contrast, the pleadings herein allege a cause of action growing out of successive and multiple acquisitions continuing to the year suit was brought. The prospective language of Clayton 7, in combination with, and when construed in the light of the Supreme Court's opinion in du Pont bring such acquisitions into the ambit of a continuing violation. Accordingly, the instant acquisitions may be challenged at any time within (and at least for four years after) the span of such alleged violation.

---

[9] It should be noted that the court initially reached the opposite conclusion. See Farbenfabriken Bayer, A.G. v. Sterling Drug, 153 F. Supp. 589, 594 (D.N.J. 1957).

The Ninth Circuit's statement in Hoopes, supra note 7, 374 F.2d at 486, is particularly relevant:

> "Union views appellants' claim too narrowly. The alleged antitrust violation consists of Union's entire course of conduct directed to the establishment and maintenance of exclusive dealing arrangements . . . Acts of Union in furtherance of this purpose, which appellants contend caused them injury and damage, included Union's efforts to prevent appellants from selling or leasing their station free of the exclusive dealing condition. These acts continued until the complaint was filed and thereafter. Thus, appellants' action is not barred even if the invasion of their interests is [11] considered to have been episodic rather than continuous."

The Sterling Drug doctrine, as applied, is in direct conflict with and contravenes the meritorious principle that equitable defenses are unavailable to defeat rights which are statutory and/or in furtherance of a strong public policy. [10] The right of private individuals to enforce the antitrust laws is both statutory and advances an important public policy. The rationale of the policy encouraging such private enforcement is to permit private parties to supplement governmental action. Private proceedings inure to the public benefit by eliminating unlawful restraints from interstate commerce. While treble recovery under § 4 provides an incentive or bonus to encourage private litigants to undertake an arduous task, in a suit for equitable relief under Clayton 16 the private plaintiff does not receive any comparable cash benefit. The elimination of an existing violation increases competition, thus benefiting the public and concurrently the private plaintiff. The law does not require that the public undergo continued subjection to antitrust violations when a champion appears, merely because of the passage of time. [12] Antitrust violations do not become sacrosanct with age, and immunized from attack, when the public good dictates the contrary.

The force of the policy favoring private enforcement of the antitrust laws was again emphasized by the Supreme Court in Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968) when it stated:

> " . . . [The] purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that the private action will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws. The plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition. A more fastidious regard for the relative moral [*925] worth of the parties would only result in seriously undermining the usefulness [13] of the private action as a bulwark of antitrust enforcement."

If a "morally reprehensible" plaintiff is not precluded from suing, certainly the contemplative, albeit tardy, one should not be subjected to harsher treatment. The private litigant, no less than the government, is entitled to the opportunity to ponder and evaluate the effect of acquisitions, and need not bull ahead indiscriminately to avoid the proscriptive doctrine of laches.

This court views the du Pont case as controlling. In that action the government sued in 1949 for alleged Clayton 7 violations resulting from du Pont's 1917-1919 purchase of a 23% interest in General Motors. The Supreme Court squarely ruled on the question of whether that action was late, holding:

> "The Senate declared the objective of the Clayton Act to be as follows:

---

[10] American Surety Company of New York v. Gold, 375 F.2d 523, 528 (10 Cir. 1967).

> '. . . Broadly stated, the bill, in its treatment of unlawful restraints and monopolies, seeks to prohibit and make unlawful certain trade practices . . . to arrest the creation of trusts, conspiracies, and monopolies in their incipiency and before consummation. . . .'

> "'Incipiency' in this context denotes not the time the stock was acquired, [14] but any time when the acquisition threatens to ripen into a prohibited effect. . . . To accomplish the congressional aim, the Government may proceed at any time that an acquisition may be said with reasonable probability to contain a threat that it may lead to a restraint of commerce or tend to create a monopoly of a line of commerce." 353 U.S. at 597.

Defendant has not advanced any reason why this rule should not be available to private litigants in a like manner in a proceeding, such as this, which is primarily enforcement. If the congressional intent is accomplished by permitting government action against acquisitions thirty years following consummation, then permitting comparable private actions advances the same purpose.

II. Third Affirmative Defense: Estoppel

Plaintiff has prayed that the court find GT&E's acquisition of (1) California Water & Telephone Company, The Southwestern States Telephone Company, and the West Coast Telephone Company in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 7 of the Clayton Act, and (2) Hawaiian Telephone Company in violation of the above listed provisions of the federal law and §§ 2, 5 and 7 of Act 190 of Hawaii Laws of [15] 1961. Defendant answers that plaintiff had advanced actual or constructive notice of all such acquisitions, did not oppose such acquisitions before the appropriate state regulatory agencies, and is accordingly estopped from challenging such mergers in this forum. Plaintiff counters with the contention that the equitable doctrine of estoppel is not available as a matter of law in defense of private antitrust actions. Defendant replies that Clayton 16 provides that private litigants shall be entitled to injunctive relief "under the same conditions and principles" as in "courts of equity", which incorporates the defense of estoppel into the antitrust laws. Plaintiff responds that Clayton 16 merely provides when injunctions shall issue, but does not affirmatively provide antitrust defendants with all possible equitable defenses. The court is unaware of any reported decision considering this question.

Plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's third affirmative defense is granted. Even accepting (without affirming) defendant's general position that the language of Clayton 16 incorporates all equitable defenses into the antitrust laws, nevertheless the specific [*926] equitable [16] principle that estoppel is precluded as a bar to statutory rights, or rights advancing a strong public policy is overriding and controlling here. In American Surety Co. of New York v. Gold, supra, at 528, an action against an insurer to recover punitive damages levied against the insured in a personal injury case, the insurer acknowledged responsibility for the compensatory damages, but denied liability for the punitive award, asserting such recovery was contrary to the pertinent public policy. The Tenth Circuit stated the general rule:

> HN2[] "'The doctrines of estoppel and waiver do not in general apply in transactions that are forbidden by statute or that are contrary to public policy.'" 375 F.2d at 528.

Defendant's third affirmative defense is gored by each horn of this principle. The challenged acquisitions are illegal only if forbidden by federal and state statute, and, as noted above, the public policy favors private enforcement of the antitrust laws. [11] On both grounds, therefore, this defense must fall.

[17] The same result is reached under Hawaii law. In order to minimize judicial construction of the statutory language by reference to an existing body of case law, the Hawaii antitrust statute substantially, almost verbatim, incorporated the federal statutes into the state act. [12] Accordingly, defendant's defense of estoppel to plaintiff's state law claim is similarly stricken down.

[11] See Perma Life Mufflers, supra.

III. Fourth Affirmative Defense: Unclean Hands

Defendant asserts that plaintiff (a) manufactures and sells communication equipment to foreign telephone companies, including Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands; (b) acquired much of its telecommunication manufacturing capacity through illegal mergers; (c) has attempted to acquire domestic telephone operating companies; and (d) has acquired numerous companies not engaged in the communications industry -- all of which constitutes unclean hands. Plaintiff insists such a defense is not available to antitrust defendants as a matter of law.

[18] Although this defense is precluded in Clayton 4 damage actions, [13] whether or not it may be a defense in Clayton 16 proceedings is not yet definitely settled. [14] While it would appear to this court that the Supreme Court's discussion of in pari delicto in Perma Life Mufflers, as noted above, is equally applicable to the defense of unclean hands in a Clayton 16 action in the context in which that defense is here raised, it is not necessary for this court to reach that issue.

As appears from defendant's [19] stated grounds for this defense, the alleged unconscionable acts on the part of the plaintiff do not arise out of anything involved in plaintiff's suit.

> HN3[] "Courts of equity . . . apply the maxim requiring clean hands only where some unconscionable act of one coming for relief has immediate and necessary relation to the equity that he seeks in respect of the matter in litigation. They do not close their doors because of plaintiff's misconduct, whatever its character, that has no relation to anything involved in the suit, but only for such violations of conscience as in some measure affect [*927] the equitable relations between the parties in respect of something brought before the court for adjudication." [15] [20]

Moreover, where, as here, a suit in equity concerns the public interests as well as the private interests of the litigants, the court is permitted to use its broadest discretion in the application of the maxim, [16] and the determination of when the maxim should be applied to bar this type of suit thus becomes of vital significance.

---

[12] Laws of Hawaii, Chapter 205A, §§ 1, 2.

[13] Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259 (1951).

[14] Singer v. A. Hollander & Son, 202 F.2d 55 (3 Cir. 1953); Graham v. Triangle Publications, 233 F. Supp. 825 (E.D. Pa. 1964); and Louisiana Petroleum Retail Dealers v. Texas Co., 148 F. Supp. 334 (W.D. La. 1956). Cases contra are: Hawaiian Tuna Packers v. International L. & W. Union, 72 F. Supp. 562 (D. Haw. 1947); and Magna Pictures Corp. v. Paramount Pictures Corp., 265 F. Supp. 144 (C.D. Cal. 1967).

[15] Keystone Co. v. Excavator Co., 290 U.S. 240, 245, 78 L. Ed. 293, 54 S. Ct. 146 (1933).

[16] Precision Co. v. Automotive Co., 324 U.S. 806, 815, 89 L. Ed. 1381, 65 S. Ct. 993 (1945). Cf. also Graham v. Triangle Publications, supra note 14, 233 F. Supp. at 832, where Judge Higginbotham said:

> "Although the Third Circuit has in the past honored the defense in a private suit for injunction instituted under the antitrust laws (Singer v. A. Hollander 202 F.2d 55, 59 (3rd Cir. 1953)), it did not rely on the defense as the sole reason for dismissing the suit. If the unclean hands defense was the most persuasive argument for denying an injunction which should otherwise issue I would be inclined to hold under the facts and circumstances of this case that it would not be enough to thwart relief."

Plaintiff's claim is limited to GT&E's acquisitions. The facts pleaded by defendant's answer to support its defense of unclean hands do not relate "to misconduct in relation to the matter in litigation . . . ." [17] Therefore, even if the court felt that the plaintiff was guilty of misconduct, since that misconduct does not affect the equitable relations between the parties in respect [21] to the issue posed for adjudication by the court, the defense of unclean hands has no application here. If plaintiff is also a violator of the antitrust laws, defendant's remedy lies in recourse to a separate proceeding (as is set forth in defendant's counterclaim).

The same result is reached with regard to defendant's fourth affirmative defense under the Hawaii antitrust law for the reasons stated in re defendant's Third Affirmative Defense.

Plaintiff's Motion To Strike The Second, Third and Fourth Affirmative Defenses of Defendant General Telephone & Electronics Corporation is granted. Plaintiff will prepare the necessary Order.

End of Document

[17] Hoehn v. Crews, 144 F.2d 665, 672 (10 Cir. 1944), cert. denied 323 U.S. 773, 89 L. Ed. 618, 65 S. Ct. 132 (1944).

Interphoto Corp. v. Minolta Corp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

January 30, 1969

No. 69 Civ. 130

Reporter

295 F. Supp. 711 *; 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13022 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,694

Interphoto Corporation , Plaintiff v. Minolta Corporation, Defendant

Core Terms

distributors, products, dealers, terminate, customers, resale price, injunction, manufacturer, conspiracy, prices, Sherman Act, selling, adhere, preliminary injunction, irreparable, territorial, marketing, merits, alleged conspiracy, distributorship, restrictions, wholesale, allocate, military, wholesale distributor, unilateral, per se violation, anti trust law, photographic, price-fixing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN1[] Private Actions, Remedies

Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26 empowers a private person to sue for and have injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws and also authorizes the issuance of a preliminary injunction. The statute explicitly declares that injunction proceedings are governed by the same principles that are applied in courts of equity.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN2[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

An application for a preliminary injunction is addressed to the court's discretion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Denial of Allegations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN3[] Remedies, Injunctions

In seeking a preliminary injunction under antitrust law, if the plaintiff can show: (1) that the conduct to be enjoined is in furtherance of the alleged violations of the law; (2) that there is a substantial likelihood that the allegations of the complaint will be sustained at the trial on the merits; and (3) that irreparable and immediate harm to the plaintiff will result if the injunction pendente lite is denied, then an injunction should issue

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN4[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Without inquiry into their purpose or effect, many agreements have been held to be illegal per se under the antitrust laws. Among these per se illegal practices are horizontal price-fixing; division of markets; customer allocation; and resale price maintenance. The presence of a contract, combination or conspiracy is essential to make out these per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and mere unilateral action is insufficient.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

In determining whether a given scheme falls within the proscription of resale price maintenance under § 1 of the Sherman Act, considerable weight is placed on the extent to which a manufacturer's practices operate coercively on distributors who refuse to cooperate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN6[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Horizontal arrangements among competitors to divide territories are unlawful per se.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Vertically imposed territorial limitations, which are not an integral part of a price-fixing scheme, are not unlawful per se, but are subject to a rule of reason inquiry.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN8[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Where vertical territorial restraints are ancillary to price-fixing, or where the price-fixing is an integral part of the distribution system, the price-fixing "infects" the distribution restrictions, and renders them per se unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

HN9[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

Even absent any price-fixing scheme, where a manufacturer sells products to his distributor subject to territorial restrictions upon resale, a per se violation of the Sherman Act results.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

An agreement to allocate customers among competitors is a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN11[] Injunctions, Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Where interlocutory relief is sought, all that plaintiff must prove is that there is a reasonable probability that it will prevail on the merits and that the danger of irreparable damage is immediate. Plaintiff need not show to a certainty that it will prevail.

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > Balance of Hardships

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN12[] Grounds for Injunctions, Balance of Hardships

A preliminary injunction should issue in an antitrust action, where plaintiff sustains the burden of showing that the balance of hardships tips decidedly toward plaintiff, and has raised questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful, as to make them a fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN13[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Unilateral action, which in the absence of the alleged conspiracy would be lawful, is nonetheless regarded as transgressing the antitrust laws where it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade and undertaken pursuant to conspiratorial aims. The test is whether the refusal to deal does further the conspiracy to maintain prices, allocate markets and divide customers, and in the application of the test, a party is held to have intended a natural consequence of its actions.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN14[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

It is not open to doubt that, where a refusal to deal is in furtherance of an illegal conspiracy, the circumstance that the manufacturer or supplier has a contractual right to terminate the agreement is irrelevant. This rule applies to defendants who have a right to cancel under a contract; to defendants who are simply choosing not to renew contracts; and even where there is in fact no contract but merely a history of dealing.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

HN15[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Where the court is satisfied that an illegal conspiracy exists and that the refusal to deal is in furtherance of this conspiracy, it will issue an injunction to preserve the relationship.

Judges: [1] Herlands, District Judge.

Opinion by: HERLANDS

Opinion

[*714] HERLANDS, District Judge:

Plaintiff, Interphoto Corporation (hereinafter "Interphoto"), moving for a preliminary injunction under 15 U.S.C. § 26, § 16 of the Clayton Act, seeks to restrain pendente lite defendant Minolta Corporation (hereinafter "Minolta"), its agents, servants, employees and those persons in active concert or participation [*715] with any of them (a) from refusing to sell Minolta photographic equipment to Interphoto, and (b) from terminating Interphoto's distributorship of Minolta's products. The gist of plaintiff's charge is that Minolta is terminating Interphoto's distributorship agreement in order to preserve and further a combination and conspiracy with other distributors under which Minolta allocated territories and customers and determined and maintained resale prices.

Plaintiff Interphoto, a Delaware corporation, is engaged primarily in the wholesale distribution of photographic equipment throughout the United States.

Defendant Minolta, a New York corporation, distributes and sells, in the United States, photographic equipment made in Japan under the Minolta name. Minolta has distributed [2] and sold Minolta products both through its own sales organization and through independent wholesale distributors and retail dealers.

The complaint charges violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 (1964). For present purposes, only the alleged violation of § 1 need be considered. [1] The relief demanded in the complaint is that the Court declare that there has been a violation by Minolta of § 1 of the Sherman Act; that Minolta be enjoined from continuing such violation; and that Interphoto receive treble damages for injuries sustained by reason of such violation. Interphoto has demanded a trial by jury.

[3] This opinion contains the findings of fact and conclusions of law which constitute the grounds of the Court's action in granting Interphoto's motion for an interlocutory injunction. Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a). The findings of fact are, for the most part, based upon statements in the affidavits and documents submitted by plaintiff and not denied by defendant.

Statement of Facts

Except as may be otherwise indicated, the facts stated in this opinion represent facts found by the Court.

---

[1] In addition to charging the existence of a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade, plaintiff alleges that defendant has unlawfully attempted to monopolize the sale and distribution of defendant's products throughout the United States and that defendant's refusal to continue to deal with plaintiff was in furtherance of that attempt. Such monopolistic behavior, if established, would constitute a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Because the Court finds that there is clear and convincing proof of the existence of a combination to achieve resale price maintenance and other per se illegalities, it is unnecessary to resolve the complex questions presented by the alleged violation of Section 2.

Raygram-Hornstein, Inc. (hereinafter "Raygram"), is a division of Interphoto, having been acquired in July, 1967. It is engaged in the wholesale distribution in the United States of Japanese manufactured equipment, including cameras, lenses and related products. From about 1963 until July, 1967, Raygram was defendant Minolta's largest wholesale distributor.

In July, 1967, after Interphoto's acquisition of Raygram, Interphoto entered into a contract with Minolta for the nonexclusive distribution of Minolta products. The agreement had no express termination date; it provided that either company had the right to cancel without cause on thirty days' notice. In a letter accompanying the contract, [4] Mr. Nakamura, Minolta's president, stated that it was his intention to terminate the contract on January 31, 1968.

On December 21, 1967, however, the parties entered into a new agreement which was also terminable by either party without cause on thirty days' notice; but it did have an express termination date of January 31, 1969.

In the sales agreement of December 21, 1967, Minolta enumerated thirteen states in which Interphoto was prohibited from selling Minolta products. This area included states where Minolta acted as its own distributor and sold its products directly to dealers.

Minolta apparently has entered into similar agreements with other distributors, prohibiting them from selling Minolta [*716] products in certain geographic areas. (Zimet moving Affidavit, Exh. E.)

Minolta has prepared and circulated price lists for Minolta products, suggesting the prices at which its products should be sold by the distributors to the dealers and also at which they should be resold by the dealers. (Nakamura opposing Affidavit, para. 3.)

Minolta has, "from time to time, when the orderly marketing of Minolta goods has been seriously threatened, made objection to wholesale distributors [5] and retail dealers who have not honored territorial areas or adhered to suggested prices . . . ." (Nakamura Affidavit, para. 3.)

On March 19, 1968, Minolta wrote to Mr. Zimet, Raygram's president, complaining of the following:

> "During the past few months, your marketing programs have deviated from our present sales agreement and have caused problems in our relationship with the regional distributors. Continuation of this type of marketing can only cause a deterioration in our business relationship, as in essence you have been fluctuating the costs of Minolta merchandise to the photographic dealers.
>
> * * *
>
> Your present marketing programs are indicating to dealers that they can bargain for better prices. This type of merchandising must be stopped as early as possible by all concerned in your company. Otherwise, you will leave me no other alternative but to take such drastic steps that I do not feel are necessary at this moment to end this type of reckless selling methods.
>
> In the future, it is important that my company be consulted at least thirty days prior to any program that you plan to set up that includes Minolta merchandise. Minolta must have the right to [6] approve, or disapprove, any program which reflects a discount other than normally allowed dealers obtaining their Minolta requirements through all our distributors." (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. B.)

On March 27, 1968, Minolta forwarded a confidential bulletin to all distributors designated as "Minolta Dealer Price Schedule."

The substance of the bulletin follows:

> "In accordance with our sales agreement, the scheduled dealer prices must be adhered to by your respective companies.
>
> Therefore, so as to prevent any possible deterioration in the established dealer costs on all our products, all proposed programs must be submitted to this office for approval at least thirty days prior to your planned date of announcement. There must not be any program designed that will cause confusion to our dealers in their respective costs for any of our Minolta products." (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. C.)

Interphoto refused to agree to control the prices at which it or its dealers resold Minolta products. It also refused to abide by Minolta's 30-day approval program. (Carney opposing Affidavit, Exh. A). Nevertheless, Minolta continued to police the pricing activities of Interphoto and its [7] dealers, requesting reports from Interphoto when dealers sold or advertised Minolta products at less than Minolta's list prices. (Zimet Affidavit, Exhs. X, Y and Z).

Similarly, Minolta attempted to enforce its territorial prohibitions upon Interphoto, which, if adhered to, would restrain plaintiff from selling Minolta products in the West in competition with Minolta. In fact, Interphoto distributes and sells a wide variety of other brands of photographic equipment in that region.

For example, Minolta received reports from its sales representatives concerning sales by Interphoto in the forbidden areas, and advised Interphoto to terminate such activity. (Zimet Affidavit, Exhs. E and F.)

[*717] A customer of Interphoto wrote Minolta concerning its difficulty in not being able to purchase Minolta products from Interphoto within the restricted area, and requested that it be allowed to do so. (Zimet Affidavit, para. 13 and Exh. D). In response to this letter, Minolta outlined the territorial restrictions which existed in all the contracts with all its distributors; and, noting its strict adherence to these restrictions, Minolta refused to permit Interphoto to sell Minolta products [8] in that area. (Zimet Affidavit, para. 13 and Exh. D).

In addition, Minolta attempted to prohibit its distributors and dealers from competing for sales to United States Military Exchanges. It warned them not to sell to persons who might resell to such agencies. On September 5, 1968, Minolta wrote:

> "Under no circumstances is Raygram-Hornstein to solicit or accept orders from the military or sell to organizations who re-sell to the exchange system.
>
> We specifically wish to alert you about two organizations in the re-sale category:
>
> 1. Jack's Military Sales
> 2. Lester Greenfield Associates
>
> Your cooperation is of utmost importance and any exception to our policy could endanger our national military sales program. We would appreciate your passing the above information to all parties concerned." (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. G).

On December 26, 1968, Minolta notified Interphoto that, effective January 30, 1969, it was cancelling the distributorship contract.

Plaintiff thereupon commenced this lawsuit and moved for a temporary injunction.

Discussion

HN1[] Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 26 relevantly empowers a private person "to sue for and have injunctive [9] relief . . . against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws . . . ." This section also authorizes the issuance of a preliminary injunction. The statute explicitly declares that injunction proceedings are governed by the same principles that are applied in courts of equity.

HN2[] An application for a preliminary injunction is addressed to the Court's discretion. See, e.g., House of Materials, Inc. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 298 F.2d 867, 869-70 (2d Cir. 1964); McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., 235 F. Supp. 743, 746 (E.D. Pa. 1964). HN3[] If the plaintiff can show: (1) that the conduct to be enjoined is in furtherance of the alleged violations of the Sherman Act; (2) that there is a substantial likelihood that the allegations of the complaint will be sustained at the trial on the merits; and (3) that irreparable and immediate harm to the plaintiff will result if the injunction pendente lite is denied, then an injunction should issue. See, e.g., McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., supra at 746; Kay Instrument Sales Co., Inc. v. Haldex Aktiebolag, 296 F. Supp. 578 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

The Alleged Conspiracies

Interphoto [10] contends that "defendant's own documents tell a squalid story of conspiratorial price-fixing of the resale prices of its distributors to whom it sells and with whom it competes ". Plaintiff's Memorandum in Support of Motion for Preliminary Injunction, at 9. According to Interphoto, the undisputed documentary evidence discloses the unlawful imposition by defendant of territorial restrictions and customer allocations, -- all of which constitute per se violations of the antitrust laws. Plaintiff urges a finding that Minolta's decision to terminate plaintiff's distributorship contract, because plaintiff continuously refused to acquiesce in these unlawful arrangements, constitutes an illicit refusal to deal in furtherance of an illegal conspiracy.

HN4[] Without inquiry into their purpose or effect, many agreements have [*718] been held to be illegal per se under the antitrust laws. See, e.g., United States v. Container Corporation of America, 393 U.S. 333, 89 S. Ct. 510, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526, 37 U.S.L.W. 4077 (1969). Among these per se illegal practices are horizontal price-fixing, see, e.g., United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 [11] (1940); division of markets, see, e.g., Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96 (1899); United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 379, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967); customer allocation, see, e.g., United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., supra at 375-6, 379; and resale price maintenance, see, e.g., Dr. Miles-Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 L. Ed. 502 (1911).

The presence of a contract, combination or conspiracy is essential to make out these per se violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, and mere unilateral action is insufficient, see, e.g., Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968); United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 46-7, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960); United States v. McKesson & Robbins, 351 U.S. 305, 100 L. Ed. 1209, 76 S. Ct. 937 (1955); United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919).

Price-Fixing [2]

[12] Minolta has in no way attempted to controvert any of Interphoto's documentary proof of the existence of unlawful resale price maintenance. Moreover, Minolta admits that it has voiced objections when its dealers or wholesale distributors did not adhere to suggested prices but apparently believes that such objections were innocuous because necessary to preserve the "orderly marketing" of Minolta goods (Nakamura Affidavit, para. 3) and to prevent fluctuation in the costs of Minolta merchandise (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. B.)

Stabilization of prices has never been a permissible objective under the Sherman Act, and is merely a euphemism for manipulative price-fixing. See, e.g., United States v. Container Corporation of America, supra, 393 U.S. at 337, 37 U.S.L.W. at 4078; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra 310 U.S. at 223.

In United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919), the Supreme Court laid down a rule which recognized the general right of a businessman to select his customers and refuse to deal. However, in successive decisions, the Court has considerably narrowed the right of a manufacturer to maintain resale prices by

---

[2] Because Minolta competes with many of its distributors in the sale of photographic equipment, plaintiff claims that the conspiracy is not only vertical. See, e.g., United States v. McKesson & Robbins, 351 U.S. 305, 100 L. Ed. 1209, 76 S. Ct. 937 (1955). The presence of vertical agreements would not be essential to the establishment of a horizontal combination to fix prices if substantial price uniformity were achieved at the distributor level. See Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 83 L. Ed. 610, 59 S. Ct. 467 (1939). Plaintiff does not, however, stress the horizontal aspects of price-fixing by Minolta and its co-distributors. The greater part of the record consists of proof of vertical constraint and coercion to achieve resale price maintenance.

The Court notes, however, that proof of the existence of unlawful resale price maintenance, where the manufacturer is also a distributor -- as Minolta is -- makes the antitrust violation even more pernicious, see, United States v. McKesson & Robbins, supra, for unlawful cartel activity then co-exists with the attempt to vertically control the discretion of the independent businessman.

refusing to deal [13] with price-cutters. The controlling authorities have distinguished between situations, on the one hand, in which the manufacturer simply announced a suggested resale price and refused to sell to distributors and dealers who charged less (this being lawful unilateral action), and, on the other hand, those situations in which the manufacturer took further steps to effectuate compliance [*719] with the suggestion about resale price. See, e.g., Simpson v. Union Oil Co. of California, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra; FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 (1922).

The Supreme Court has clearly manifested an increasing concern for the preservation of the unfettered discretion of the independent distributor. HN5[] In determining whether a given scheme falls within the proscription of resale price maintenance under § 1 of the Sherman Act, the Court has placed considerable weight on the extent to which a manufacturer's practices operate coercively on distributors who refuse to cooperate. See generally, The Goals of Antitrust: A Dialogue on Policy; Toward a Three-Dimensional Antitrust Policy, [14] H. M. Blake and W. K. Jones, 65 Colum. L. Rev. 422, 432-34 (1965).

Today, a manufacturer can avail himself of the Colgate doctrine only where he suggests a resale price and does not make any attempts to enforce his suggestion, and he then refuses to sell to dissident distributors. Anything beyond this act of "Doric simplicity" is more than a unilateral refusal to deal and constitutes a per se violation of the antitrust laws. George W. Warner & Co., Inc. v. Black & Decker Manufacturing Co., Inc., 277 F.2d 787 (2 Cir. 1960). As the court in United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra at 46-7, said:

> "If a manufacturer is unwilling to rely on individual self-interest to bring about general voluntary acquiescence . . . and takes affirmative action to achieve uniform adherence by inducing each customer to to adhere to avoid such price competition, the customers' acquiescence is not then a matter of individual free choice prompted alone by the desirability of the product . . . . The manufacturer is thus the organizer of a price-maintenance combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act."

Accord Albrecht v. Herald Co., supra; United States v. General Motors [15] Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966).

The facts of record before this Court -- disclosed by Minolta's own communications and in no way denied -- persuasively establish the existence of unlawful resale price maintenance. The blatant and crude techniques utilized by Minolta in its attempt to coerce Interphoto into adherence to the suggested price list do not bear reiteration; they are detailed above in the Court's statement of the facts.

The great weight of the credible evidence demonstrates the existence of an elaborate policing system whereby Minolta apparently was continuously apprised by its own sales representatives [3] of Interphoto's deviations from Minolta's policies and directives. In an effort to keep Interphoto in line, Minolta threatened Interphoto that its failure to cooperate in the future might call for drastic action.

[16] Territorial Restrictions

In addition to the price-fixing conspiracy, Minolta has combined and conspired to divide and allocate geographic markets. This appears on the face of the sales agreement with Interphoto (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. A). Similar restrictions apparently exist between Minolta and its other distributors [*720] (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. E). The effect of such contracts is to eliminate competition among the distributors and with Minolta. See, e.g., Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, supra; United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., supra 388 U.S. at 379 (holding that such

---

[3] Mere complaints by customers of a manufacturer that distributors and dealers engage in price-cutting and selective discounting are not enough to imply a combination in violation of § 1, for such complaints arise in the normal course of business. Carbon Steel Products Corp. v. Alan Wood Steel Co., 289 F. Supp. 584 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

Where, however, the manufacturer takes action and relays these complaints to the distributors with accompanying words of "advice", a combination to maintain resale prices can be implied. Minolta has gone even further by employing its sales representatives to police the market.

action constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act). [4] As pointed out in the Court's statement of facts, Minolta policed the market allocations and persistently advised Interphoto against unwanted incursions into restricted areas.

[17] Again, Minolta does not deny any of these facts. It simply asserts that objection to the dishonoring of territorial areas was necessary for the orderly marketing of Minolta goods (Nakamura Affidavit, para. 3).

Customer Restrictions

HN10[] An agreement to allocate customers among competitors is a per se violation of the Sherman Act. See, e.g., United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., supra 388 U.S. at 379; United States v. Consolidated Laundries Corp., 291 F.2d 563, 574-75 (2d Cir. 1961). Minolta's letter of September 5, 1968 prohibited Interphoto from soliciting or accepting orders for United States Military Exchanges and discloses the existence of an understanding that Minolta alone was to have the right to sell to the exchange systems. (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. G). Minolta offers the following explanation:

> "Mr. Zimet's objections to Minolta's policy of selling Minolta products to the United States military exchange systems, shows a complete lack of awareness and understanding on Mr. Zimet's part as to what is required in that particular sphere of distribution. Suffice it to say that the sale of Minolta products to United States military exchange systems is [*721] [18] a specialty and necessarily requires special handling arrangements by the manufacturer." (Nakamura Affidavit, para. 7).

This precise type of customer exclusion has been held unlawful, see, e.g., United States v. Klearflax Linen Looms, 63 F. Supp. 32 (D. Minn. 1945). Minolta's explanation that it has expertise in this area (Carney Supplementary Affidavit, para. 2) does not legitimatize the elimination of competition that flows from the restriction.

---

[4] The territorial restrictions can be viewed in several ways but the Court finds them unlawful under all applicable theories.

HN6[] Horizontal arrangements among competitors to divide territories are unlawful per se. See, e.g., Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 95 L. Ed. 1199, 71 S. Ct. 971 (1951); Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, supra. Since Minolta is not only a manufacturer but also a distributor of its own goods, its several contracts with co-distributors which restrict the area of distribution amount to a horizontal combination in restraint of trade.

In White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963), the Supreme Court refused to apply the per se standard, on the record before it, HN7[] to vertically imposed territorial limitations where they were not an integral part of a price-fixing scheme; and the Court proposed a rule of reason inquiry. The rationale is apparently that, where a manufacturer restricts the territory of his distributors, there may be some justifiable purpose other than that of stifling competition, and therefore a per se rule would be inappropriate. Accord, Sandura Co. v. FTC, 339 F.2d 847 (6th Cir. 1964) (applying the rule of reason to uphold a scheme of exclusive territories where the manufacturer was a failing company utilizing the scheme to insure its survival).

In United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., supra 388 U.S. at 374, the court indicates, without elaboration, that White Motor survives and, therefore, some vertical territorial restraints may be "sheltered" by the rule of reason because they are not anticompetitive.

The Court, however, restates the established rule that, HN8[] where vertical territorial restraints are ancillary to price-fixing, or where the price-fixing is an integral part of the distribution system, the price-fixing "infects" the distribution restrictions, and renders them per se unlawful. 388 U.S. at 375-76. Minolta's activities fall within this established rule and are, therefore, per se unlawful even if the combination to divide territories is not viewed as being horizontal in nature.

Moreover, Schwinn ultimately holds, HN9[] that even absent any price-fixing scheme, "where a manufacturer sells products to his distributor subject to territorial restrictions upon resale, a per se violation of the Sherman Act results", 388 U.S. at 379. Whether White Motor retains any vitality after this holding, despite the majority's insistence that it does, remains to be seen (see opinion of Stewart, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, 388 U.S. at 388-89). In any event, Minolta's distribution agreement falls squarely within the proscription of Schwinn.

The Court concludes that Interphoto has established by clear and convincing proof that Minolta illegally conspired and combined to fix resale prices and to allocate markets and customers.

The Termination

However, in order for Minolta's termination of Interphoto's distributorship to be unlawful there must be some causal connection between the alleged conspiracy and the refusal to deal. See, e.g., McKesson & Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., supra 235 F. Supp. at 749; Deltown Foods, Inc. v. Tropicana Products, Inc., 219 F. Supp. 887 (S.D.N.Y. 1963); cf. SCM Corporation v. Radio Corporation of America, 407 F.2d 166 (2d Cir. Jan. 9, 1969).

Minolta asserts that its termination of the distributorship is totally unrelated to [19] the alleged antitrust violations and that, therefore, the requisite causation is absent. The reason offered for termination is that Minolta has unilaterally decided to effectuate a change in its methods of distributing and selling Minolta products and that it plans to distribute them directly to retail dealers throughout the United States "except for the Northeastern States and Hawaii", and, "[accordingly], Minola is terminating its wholesale distribution arrangements with its Mountain States and Southwest wholesale distributors and its Southeast wholesale distributors, as well as its wholesale distribution agreement with the plaintiff". (Nakamura Affidavit, para. 4).

Minolta avers that it has been contemplating the elimination of distributors for some time and that its final decision to change its methods was "dictated entirely by business considerations" (Nakamura Supplementary Affidavit, para. 3) namely, the success of its West Coast distribution, and the confidence that it could do the job well.

Upon an analysis of the record, the Court rejects Minolta's claim that the decision to terminate the distribution agreement was the result of such a business policy.

Minolta has [20] submitted no affidavits indicating that it has notified other distributors of impending cancellations. No affidavits were procured from any distributors evidencing their awareness of Minolta's plans -- which defendant claims were well-known. Minolta offers the naked assertion of the existence of a plan. It fails to submit an iota of evidence of its existence or execution. [5]

Furthermore, Minolta specifically states [21] that it does not plan to take over distribution in the Northeastern region. The only two distributors who operate in this area are plaintiff and Ace Photo Supply Corporation, located in Boston. (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. E). Minolta offers no explanation as to why, if the Northeastern region does not fall within its plans, it is terminating its contract with Interphoto. [6]

[22] [*722] There is always the possibility that, at the trial on the merits, Minolta will be able to prove that its refusal to deal with Interphoto was the result of lawful business reasons and not an unlawful act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. [7]

---

[5] Minolta claims that, in furtherance of the asserted plan, several officers of Minolta made contact with its New York bank regarding the possibility of acquiring a substantial line of credit. (Nakamura Affidavit para. 3). No affidavits are submitted from any of the named bank officials with whom the plans were allegedly discussed.

Defendant does annex four exhibits purporting to represent Minolta's plans which were reviewed by the bank. (Nakamura Affidavit, Exhs. E, F, G and H). The exhibits are unaccompanied by any explanation of their content, the significance of which eludes the Court.

[6] Minolta claims that it has distrusted Interphoto since 1967, when apparently Interphoto sold a large block of Minolta products on the West Coast at a discount. Minolta urges that it should not be forced to deal with a distributor in whom it lacks confidence (Nakamura Affidavit, para. 5), and points to this distrust as a factor entering into its decision to terminate the distributorship.

The Court rejects this argument. The distrust is, in reality, nothing but the fear that Interphoto will not adhere to suggested resale prices. This is precisely the violation of the antitrust laws which Interphoto has established. Minolta cannot be heard to say that it distrusts Interphoto on this account. Moreover, Minolta cannot with good conscience claim a lack of confidence in Interphoto, which, by Minolta's own admission, has been a highly successful distributor. (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. N).

However, HN11[] where interlocutory relief is sought, all that plaintiff must prove is that there is a reasonable probability [23] that it will prevail on the merits and that the danger of irreparable damage is immediate. Plaintiff need not show to a certainty that it will prevail. See, e.g., Bergen Drug Co. v. Parke, Davis & Co., 307 F.2d 725 (3 Cir. 1962); Kay Instrument Sales Co., Inc. v. Haldex Aktiebolag, 296 F. Supp. 578 (S.D.N.Y. 1968); McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., supra 235 F. Supp. at 747. Interphoto has demonstrated that there is such a probability of success on the merits.

It has been frequently repeated in this Circuit that HN12[] a preliminary injunction should issue in an antitrust action, where plaintiff sustains the burden of showing that "the balance of hardships tips decidedly toward plaintiff", and has "raised questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful, as to make them a fair ground for litigation and thus for more deliberate investigation". Hamilton Watch Co. v. Benrus Watch Co., 206 F.2d 738, 740 (2d Cir. 1953). Accord McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., supra 235 F. Supp. at 747; Kay Instrument Sales Co., Inc. v. Haldex Aktiebolag, supra; Bergen Drug Co. v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra. Interphoto has raised such [24] "serious" questions; and the balance of hardship does "tip decidedly toward plaintiff".

In face of the evidence offered by Interphoto, Minolta's assertion that there is no nexus between its refusal to deal and the alleged conspiracy is regarded by the Court as incredible.

The fact that Minolta's refusal to deal may indeed have been made unilaterally is, at this point, immaterial because " . . . HN13[] unilateral action, which in the absence of the alleged conspiracy would be lawful, is nonetheless regarded as transgressing the antitrust laws where it is the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade and undertaken pursuant to conspiratorial aims". McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., supra 235 F. Supp. at 749. The test is whether the refusal to deal "does further" the conspiracy to maintain prices, allocate markets and divide customers, and in the application of the test, "[a] party is held to have intended a natural consequence of its actions". Id. at 749.

[*723] The termination of a relationship with a distributor or dealer who refuses to adhere to prices in the face of the manufacturer's affirmative efforts to secure compliance, is a traditional method [25] of furthering a conspiracy. See, e.g., United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra. Cancellation of Interphoto's distributorship will manifestly advance Minolta's resale price maintenance scheme and fortify the territorial restrictions.

In addition to relying on the asserted absence of any nexus between the refusal to deal and the alleged conspiracies, Minolta claims its contractual right to terminate as a basis and justification for denying injunctive relief. This reliance on contract is misplaced. HN14[] It is not open to doubt that, where a refusal to deal is in furtherance of an illegal conspiracy, the circumstance that the manufacturer or supplier has a contractual right to terminate the agreement is irrelevant. See, e.g., Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Company, 324 F.2d 566, 575 n. 17 (4 Cir. 1963); Albrecht v. Herald Co., supra; United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., supra. This rule applies to defendants who have a right to cancel under a contract, see, e.g., Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Company, supra; McKesson and Robbins v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., supra; to defendants who are simply choosing not to renew contracts, see, e.g., Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. [26] 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); and even where there is in fact no contract but merely a history of dealing, see, e.g., Beverage Distributors, Inc. v. Olympia Brewing Co., 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,530 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 19, 1967), modified on other grounds, 395 F.2d 850, 1968 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,531 (9 Cir. May 17, 1968); Kay Instrument Sales Co., Inc. v. Haldex Aktiebolag, supra; Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Company, supra at fn. 17. The Court may appropriately require that the defendant maintain plaintiff as a distributor pending the determination of a trial on the merits.

---

[7] The Court recognizes that a manufacturer may exploit his monopoly by selling his product directly to the ultimate consumer if he chooses. Similarly, he may eliminate existing distributors, establish new ones, or vary his distribution program without violating the antitrust laws but only "so long as such power is not being exercised as part of or in aid of something else which is prohibited by the antitrust laws". Industrial Building Materials, Inc. v. Interchemical Corp., 278 F. Supp. 938, 958-59, 964 (D.C. Cal. 1967). On the record before the Court, Minolta has not shown that its conduct falls within the permissible, lawful channels.

Defendant Minolta cites cases which it claims support HN15[] the rule that a court will not use a preliminary injunction to create a new contract between the parties but only to preserve the status quo. This is true as a general proposition. But where, as here, the court is satisfied that an illegal conspiracy exists and that the refusal to deal is in furtherance of this conspiracy, it will issue an injunction to preserve the relationship, i.e., the status quo. In the cases relied upon by defendant, the Court either was not satisfied that the alleged conspiracy existed, e.g., Carbon Steel Products Corp. v. Alan Wood [27] Steel Co., 289 F. Supp. 584 (S.D.N.Y. 1968); Deltown Foods, Inc. v. Tropicana Products Inc., supra, 219 F. Supp. at 891-92; Franklin Sewing Machine Co., Inc. v. Necchi Sewing Machine Sales Corp., 1960 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,768 (S.D.N.Y. 1960); Liberty Broadcasting System v. Nat'l League Baseball Club of Boston, 1952 Trade Cas. (CCH) P67,278 (N.D. Ill. 1952), or was not convinced that irreparable and immediate injury would result from denial of the injunction, see, e.g., id. Instant Delivery Corp. v. City Stores Co., 284 F. Supp. 941 (E.D. Pa. 1968).

Irreparable Injury

After careful analysis of the entire record considered as a whole, the Court is firmly convinced that Interphoto will suffer irreparable and immediate injury if the status quo is not maintained.

In Bergen Drug Co. v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra, and McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Charles Pfizer & Co., Inc., supra, the court pointed out that the evidence disclosed that drug retailers prefer to deal with full line, full service wholesalers, and that if a wholesaler is unable to fulfill all of their requirements, they are apt to take their business permanently to a wholesaler who can. Cf. Madsen v. Chrysler Corporation, [28] 261 F. Supp. 488 (N.D. Ill. 1967). Interphoto has submitted convincing proof that its customers may take their business elsewhere if [*724] Minolta products are not available. [8] [29] (Zimet Affidavit, Exh. AA; Behrendt Affidavit, Exhs. J and K). In such a situation, it would be impossible to estimate or compute Interphoto's damages for the loss of good will it will suffer as a result of being unable to provide its retail customers with Minolta's products. See, e.g., Bergen Drug Co. v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra; McKesson and Robbins, Inc. v. Chalres Pfizer & Co., Inc., supra; Beverage Distributors, Inc. v. Olympia Brewing Co., supra. The issuance of a preliminary injunction is, therefore, proper. [9]

[30] Minolta has not shown that it will suffer irreparable injury if an injunction is issued pending a trial on the merits. It simply states that the orderly distribution of Minolta products would come to an end if an injunction were issued. The record does not support such a conclusion, for there is, on the contrary, ample proof that Minolta was extremely satisfied with Interphoto's successful distribution of Minolta's goods. Minolta does not even assert the possibility of financial damage resulting from the grant of an injunction, for it is non-existent.

The Court does not now adjudicate the ultimate questions, which will be decided at a plenary trial. Enough has been shown by Interphoto, however, to establish the probability of its success on the merits and irreparable and immediate injury to Interphoto with no consequent irreparable injury to Minolta if the preliminary injunction is granted, and thus to require the exercise of the Court's discretion to preserve the status quo.

---

[8] Plaintiff states that Minolta accounts for 40% of plaintiff's sales of Japanese-made cameras and lenses. In addition, 40% of the orders received by plaintiff for such Japanese products apparently specify some Minolta brand product. (Behrendt Affidavit, para. 4). Defendant does not refute any of these contentions. If Interphoto cannot furnish Minolta products to its retail customers, immediate loss of customers may follow. Indeed, plaintiff has already received complaints about the possible absence of Minolta goods from its inventory, accompanied by threats to do business elsewhere.

[9] Much of Minolta's proof on the question of irreparable harm consists of its insistence that Interphoto knew that Minolta had plans to become its own distributor and was thereby forewarned of the eventual termination of the distributorship. Interphoto denies such knowledge; the affidavits on this particular point are conflicting. However, looking at the documentary proof, the Court finds that the communications from Minolta to Interphoto in no way reveal the existence of a relationship which is about to terminate. Minolta, in fact, admits that it did not make any final plans to terminate until December 1968. In any event, Minolta would not have to show that Interphoto knew of its plans to cancel the distributorship, if the cancellation were lawful and pursuant to the contract, for Interphoto could not then rely on the fact that it assumed the relationship between the parties would continue. But the cancellation by Minolta is not lawful, because it is in furtherance of a conspiracy. Minolta cannot claim that Interphoto has not suffered irreparable harm because the threat of cancellation was known to it.

Either party may, if so advised, apply for a preference for trial under Calendar Rule 10(e) of this Court.

It is hereby ordered that, pending final disposition of this action, defendant Minolta Corporation, [31] its agents, servants, employees and those persons in active concert or participation with any of them are restrained and enjoined from refusing to sell to plaintiff as a Minolta distributor, upon customary and non-discriminatory terms and conditions of sale, and from imposing or attempting to impose any unlawful restraint or requirement upon plaintiff. Plaintiff shall file a bond in the amount of $25,000., upon which filing this order shall become effective.

So ordered.

Alberto-Culver Co. v. Andrea Dumon

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

January 31, 1969

Civil Action No. 68 C 544

Reporter

295 F. Supp. 1155 *; 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13284 ; 160 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 822 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,793

Alberto-Culver Co., Plaintiff v. Andrea Dumon, Inc., Defendant

Core Terms

counterclaim, trademark, malicious, feminine, damages, hygiene, spray, infringement, deodorant, patent, motion to dismiss, anti-trust, label, Sherman Act, excluding, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN1[] Remedies, Damages

In a private antitrust action, the complaining party must allege specific damage to itself arising from the allegedly wrongful acts of the party being sued.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN2[] Sherman Act, Remedies

15 U.S.C.S. § 15, allowing private parties treble damages for injury accruing to their business from violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., embraces, as one of the essentials to such action, injury to plaintiff's business. The complaint must affirmatively show this injury. It is not enough to allege something forbidden and claim damages resulting therefrom. Allegation of the specific injury suffered by plaintiff differing from that sustained by it as a member of the community is essential. The manner, nature, character and extent of the injury sustained and the facts from which injury accrues and upon which damages may be assessed as well as those with regard to the effect of the alleged violation upon plaintiff's business, must be pleaded.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN3[] Private Actions, Remedies

The mere existence of an anti-trust violation is not sufficient ipso facto to support a private action, for no party may properly seek to secure something from another without allegation and proof of facts demonstrating pecuniary loss springing from or consequent upon the unlawful act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4[] Private Actions, Remedies

In not specifying injury to defendant's business or property, an allegation appears insufficient to support a private anti-trust action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5[] Private Actions, Remedies

The failure to specify in the complaint the impact of defendant's wrongs on plaintiff renders an antitrust allegation insufficient.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN6[] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) provides that if matters outside the pleading are presented to the court in connection with a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN7[] Intentional Torts, Abuse of Process

Abuse of process, sometimes called malicious abuse of process, is the misuse of legal process to accomplish some purpose outside the proper scope of the process itself. There are two essentials to an action for abuse of process: an ulterior purpose and an act in the use of legal process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceedings.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN8[] Intentional Torts, Abuse of Process

Regular and legitimate use of process, though with bad intentions, is not a malicious abuse of process. The mere institution of civil suits, though groundless and malicious, does not constitute a malicious abuse of process. That action lies for the improper use of process after it has been issued, but not for maliciously causing process to be issued. The most common form of such abuse is by working upon the fears of a person after having him arrested, for the purpose of extorting money, or other property, or of compelling him to sign some paper, to give up some claim, to pay a debt or control of the prosecution.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Torts > ... > Malicious Prosecution > Elements > Favorable Termination

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

HN9[] Pleadings, Counterclaims

In civil cases where actions for malicious prosecution do lie, one of the essentials which must be established is the legal termination of the prosecuted suit in the plaintiff's favor.

Judges: [1] Marovitz, D.J.

Opinion by: MAROVITZ

Opinion

[*822] [*1156] Memorandum Opinion

MAROVITZ, D.J.

This is an action for label copyright infringement, trademark infringement, unfair competition and dilution. The action arises out of defendant's use of a label for a deodorant spray for feminine hygiene allegedly copied from plaintiff's label for a similar product, and defendant's use of the letter trademark PS, alleged to be confusingly similar to plaintiff's trademark FDS.

Defendant's Answer basically denies the material allegations of the Complaint and pleads affirmative defenses.

[*823] Defendant has also filed two Counterclaims. The first claims that plaintiff has violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act, and the second claims abuse of process in the institution of the present action. Defendant's Counterclaim for violation of the Sherman Act is based on the conclusion that plaintiff has monopolized or attempted to monopolize the manufacture and sale of deodorant spray for feminine hygiene by (1) obtaining United States Trademark Registration No. 831,204 for FDS for deodorant spray for feminine hygiene by misrepresentation in submitting to the Patent Office labels which had not been used in commerce; [2] (2) threatening defendant with suit and instituting suit for trademark infringement, unfair competition and dilution caused by defendant's adoption of its trademark PS and trade dress for a deodorant spray for feminine hygiene for the purpose of intimidating defendant and excluding it from the market; (3) disparaging defendant's product; and (4) filing suit against the Emko Company, another competitor of plaintiff in the manufacture and sale of deodorant spray for feminine hygiene to prevent the sale of such a spray by Emko.

Defendant's Second Counterclaim, for abuse of process, is based on the allegation that plaintiff brought this suit without reasonable cause and for the purpose of "intimidating defendant and wrongfully excluding defendant from the manufacture and sale of deodorant spray for feminine hygiene . . . ."

[*1157] Plaintiff has moved to dismiss defendant's First Counterclaim for violation of the Sherman Act on the ground that defendant fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted in that defendant has failed to allege damage to itself arising from plaintiff's alleged acts. Plaintiff is correct in saying that HN1[] in a private antitrust action, the complaining [3] party must allege specific damage to itself arising from the allegedly wrongful acts of the party being sued. The requirement has long been recognized in this Circuit.

> "Section 15, HN2[] (15 U.S.C. § 15), allowing private parties treble damages for injury accruing to their business from violation of the Anti-Trust Act, embraces, as one of the essentials to such action, injury to plaintiff's business. The complaint must affirmatively show this injury. It is not enough to allege something forbidden and claim damages resulting therefrom. Allegation of the specific injury suffered by plaintiff differing from that sustained by it as a member of the community is essential. The manner, nature, character and extent of the injury sustained and the facts from which injury accrues and upon which damages may be assessed as well as those with regard to the effect of the alleged violation upon plaintiff's business, must be pleaded. HN3[] The mere existence of a violation is not sufficient ipso facto to support the action, for no party may properly seek to secure something from another without allegation and proof of facts demonstrating pecuniary loss springing from or consequent upon the unlawful [4] act. "
>
> Beegle v. Thomson, 138 F.2d 875, 881 (7th Cir. 1943).

The only allegation of damage set forth in defendant's First Counterclaim is in Paragraph 56:

> "By reason of the acts of plaintiff performed in furtherance of its monopolization and attempt to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act within the four years immediately preceding the filing of this counterclaim, defendant has been injured in its business or property in an amount not determined. An amendment of this counterclaim will be offered at or before trial stating the damage that has accrued to defendant."

This is really a generalization, a conclusory statement. HN4[] In not specifying injury to defendant's business or property, the allegation appears insufficient. In other cases, anti-trust claims or counterclaims have been dismissed for similar lack of specificity. See, e.g., Merrimac Hat Corp. v. Crown Overall Mfg. Co., 91 F. Supp. 49, 52 (S.D.N.Y. 1950), aff'd 186 F.2d 505 (2d Cir. 1951); Sheldon-Claire Co. v. Judson Roberts Co., 88 F. Supp. 120, 122 (S.D.N.Y. 1949).

Defendant attempts to avoid the impact of these last cases by stating that they are from other jurisdictions and have [5] been "overruled" in this circuit by Dairy Foods Inc. v. Dairy Maid Products Cooperative, 297 F.2d 805 (7th Cir. 1961). First, while we recognize that the various different circuits sometimes have developed different approaches to the similar problems, we do not think that situation, in itself, is a good thing or to be desired or encouraged. The federal law should be applied equally to all throughout the country. To that end, cases from other districts may prove useful as guiding precedents.

Second, we are not clear as to how Dairy Foods "overrules" the requirement for an allegation of specific [824] damages. Dairy Foods began as a patent infringement action and defendant, in addition to contesting the validity and infringement of the patent, counterclaimed alleging patent misuse in violation of the Sherman Act. The District Court dismissed the counterclaim for failure to allege sufficient facts to show injury to business or property. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the defendant had adequately alleged an injury.

> [*1158] "The injury is the necessity that defendant make a choice among alternatives each of which has an adverse economic or financial impact [6] on its instant milk business. It was allegedly compelled either to cease production with consequent loss of sales of the product, pay tribute with consequent increase in production cost, or incur the financial burden of expenses incident to the defense of litigation. Each of these alternatives had its particular adverse economic or financial effect on defendant's instant milk business. To place a person in such a situation is an injury to his business. True, it is the defendant's choice which determines the nature of the resulting damages but it is the necessity of having to choose from such alternatives that is the injury. The congressional enactments here involved were designed to afford a legal right to engage in business free from conspiratorial compulsion such as here alleged. A violation of that right is a legal injury to the business adversely affected. Section 4 of the Clayton Act by its reference to the person 'injured' recognizes that it is the 'injury' which gives rise to the consequent liability to respond in three-fold 'damages.'" 297 F.2d at 808.

Neither this nor any other statement in Dairy Foods reduces or overrules the requirement to allege specific [7] injury or damages. At the most, the Dairy Foods decision allows litigation expenses to be considered an element of the damages. It then merely holds that the allegations which were made were adequate. Id.

Defendant, then, argues that it, like the defendant in Dairy Foods, has been put to time and expense in defending a baseless suit. It argues that it has been improperly forced to choose between going out of the feminine deodorant spray business or surrendering valuable trademark rights. Yet, defendant's characterization of its plight is not an accurate one for the consequences of a label copyright or trademark infringement case are different than those of a patent infringement case. Where the defendant in Dairy Foods was in danger of being forced out of business, being deprived of a real opportunity to compete by virtue of accepting a restrictive patent license or defending the litigation, defendant in this case is not in such an onerous situation. Even if successful, plaintiff's suit could not exclude defendant from participating in the feminine hygiene market. Nor is plaintiff seeking to force defendant to subscribe to a licensing agreement.

Further, we [8] note that the Dairy Food decision has been mentioned very rarely and then not uniformly or wholeheartedly received. Hazeltine Research, Inc. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 388 F.2d 25, 35 (7th Cir. 1967); American Infra-Red Radiant Co. v. Lambert Industries, Inc., 360 F.2d 977, 996-97 (8th Cir. 1966); Laitram Corp. v. Deepsouth Packing Co., 279 F. Supp. 883, 891 (E.D.La. 1968); Malta Manufacturing Co. v. Osten, 215 F. Supp. 114, 122-23 (E.D. Mich. 1963). No decision approving or following Dairy Foods is a trademark or copyright case. All are patent cases which, as we have pointed out, have the potentially unique consequence of excluding a party from a particular market.

Conversely, a District Court recently dismissed an action wherein plaintiff asked for damages for alleged anti-trust violations arising out of the use of his trademark on the ground that he failed to specify the extent of alleged injury. The Court's holding was a simple one.

> "The HN5[] failure to specify in the complaint the impact of defendant's wrongs on plaintiff renders an antitrust allegation insufficient."
>
> Sam S. Goldstein Industries, Inc. v. General Electric Co., 264 F. Supp. 403, 407 (S.D.N.Y. 1967).

[9]

Even if we were to accept defendant's characterization of the alternatives available to it as an accurate one and even if we were to find that the Dairy Foods rationale applied to trademark and copyright situations, still we would have to dismiss the counterclaim. [*1159] The simple fact which distinguishes this case from Dairy Foods is the counterclaim in Dairy Foods specifically alleged the expenditure of time and money in defending the patent litigation while in the instant action no such allegation has been made. Dairy Foods Inc. v. Dairy Maid Products Coop., 297 F.2d 805, 808 (7th Cir. Wis. 1961). All that has [825] been alleged by defendant in paragraph 56 of the counterclaim is that it has been injured. That is simply not enough under Dairy Foods or any other standard.

Plaintiff is, of course, asking that the defendant stop using its present trademark and label. Defendant's interest here may be a valuable one. However, once again, defendant has not specifically alleged that it has a valuable right or, if it has, the extent of its value. At best, it has promised to amend its counterclaim to state damages allegedly accrued.

In sum, we do not believe that [10] the Dairy Foods decision is applicable to this, a non-patent case, or that defendant has met the standards set forth in the Dairy Foods case, in any event. For that reason, defendant's first counterclaim should be dismissed for failure to specifically allege damages. Consequently, it is not necessary to discuss defendant's allegations of anti-trust violations.

Defendant has suggested that plaintiff's motion to dismiss must be treated as a motion for summary judgment. HN6[] Rule 12(b), Fed. R. Civ. P., provides that if matters outside the pleading are presented to the court in connection with a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment. Plaintiff has submitted affidavits in this case. However, the evidence submitted by plaintiff is not related to the motion to dismiss which we have discussed. Rather, it is in support of plaintiff's alternative motion for summary judgment, which was submitted for consideration in the event that the motion to dismiss was denied. There is no authority for the position that Rule 12(b) precludes the effective use of alternative motions in these situations. [11] Yet this would be the result of defendant's position for it would present movant with an option of filing an unsupported alternative summary judgment motion or foregoing an opportunity to present an alternative motion to dismiss.

Defendant's second counterclaim charges that plaintiff has abused the process of this court by employing process "for the purpose of excluding defendant from the manufacture or sale of deodorant spray for feminine hygiene." (Defendant's Second Counterclaim para. 66). Plaintiff has moved to dismiss this counterclaim on the ground that it fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Since jurisdiction is based on diversity and the alleged abuse took place in Illinois, we must look to Illinois law to determine what constitutes an abuse of process. Erie Ry. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 82 L. Ed. 1188, 58 S. Ct. 817 (1938).

> "Abuse HN7[] of process, sometimes called malicious abuse of process, is the misuse of legal process to accomplish some purpose outside the proper scope of the process itself. There are two essentials to an action for abuse of process: an ulterior purpose and an act in the use of legal process not proper in the regular prosecution [12] of the proceedings. Dixon v. Smith-Wallace Shoe Co., 283 Ill. 234, 119 NE 265; Bonney v. King, 201 Ill. 47, 66 NE 377; Ammons v. Jet Credit Sales, Inc., 34 Ill. App.2d 456, 181 N.E.2d 601." March v. Cacioppo, 37 Ill.App.2d 235, 243, 185 N.E.2d 397 (1962).

Accord, Caspers v. Chicago Real Estate Board, 58 Ill.App.2d 113, 120, 206 N.E.2d 787 (1965).

Counterclaimant has repeatedly alleged an ulterior purpose on the part of Alberto-Culver "in filing and prosecuting this suit." (Defendant's Second [*1160] Counterclaim, para. 63). For instance, it alleges that plaintiff filed this suit without reasonable cause to believe there was any copyright infringement, but with the purpose and intent of intimidating and harassing defendant and excluding it from the feminine hygiene market. (Id. paras. 64, 65, 66, 68).

Yet, if defendant's counterclaim does charge an ulterior purpose, it fails to allege an improper act in the use of legal process. Defendant suggests that the institution of this suit is a sufficient act. (Defendant's Memorandum in Opposition to Plaintiff's Motion to Dismiss or For Summary Judgment, at 15). However, this is not enough.

> "Regular HN8[] and legitimate [13] use of process, though with bad intentions, is not a malicious abuse of process. The mere institution of civil suits, though groundless and malicious, does not constitute a malicious abuse of process. That action lies for the improper use of process after it has been issued, but not for maliciously causing process to be issued. The most common form of such abuse is by working upon the fears of a person after having him arrested, for the purpose of extorting money, or other property, or of compelling him to sign some paper, to give up some claim, to pay a debt or control of the prosecution. Bonney v. King, 201 Ill. 47, 66 N.E. 377; Jeffery v. Robbins, 73 Ill.App. 353; Emery v. Ginnan, 24 Ill.App. 65, supra."
>
> Ruehl Bros. Brewing Co. v. Atlas Brewing Co., 187 Ill.App. 392, 397 (1914).

Accord, Bonney v. King, 201 Ill. 47, 51, 66 N.E. 377 [826] (1903); John Allan Co. v. Brandow, 59 Ill.App.2d 328, 335, 207 N.E.2d 339 (1965). Defendant has not alleged any action which plaintiff has taken against defendant other than or since the institution of this suit. It has not alleged an arrest or a seizure of property. Cf. John Allan Co. v. Brandow, 59 Ill.App.2d 328, 335, 207 N.E.2d 339 [14] (1965). Consequently, it has alleged no improper act in the use of process.

Because defendant has alleged that plaintiff started this suit without probable cause, the second counterclaim could be considered an action for the malicious use of process or malicious prosecution. Ammons v. Jet Credit Sales, Inc., 34 Ill.App.2d 456, 461-62, 181 N.E.2d 601 (1962). This action arises from an allegedly baseless demand or accusation. Id. However, "(in) HN9[] civil cases where actions for malicious prosecution do lie, one of the essentials which must be established is the legal termination of the prosecuted suit in the plaintiff's favor. " Id. The suit brought by Alberto-Culver has not been terminated in its favor as yet, and, consequently, defendant's counterclaim, considered as an action for the malicious use of process, must fail.

Thus, viewed either as an action for abuse of process or malicious use of process, defendant's second counterclaim fails to state a cause of action against the plaintiff and must be dismissed.

End of Document

Hiram Walker, Inc. v. A & S Tropical, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

January 31, 1969

No. 26012

Reporter
407 F.2d 4 *; 1969 U.S. App. LEXIS 9108 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,698

HIRAM WALKER, INCORPORATED, and South Florida Liquor Distributors, Inc., Appellants, v. A & S TROPICAL, INC., Appellee

Subsequent History: [1] Rehearing Denied March 4, 1969.

Disposition: Reversed

Core Terms

Robinson-Patman Act, seller, price discrimination, distributors, retail, interstate commerce, Beverage, commerce, sales, transactions, purchasers, summary judgment, liquor, buyer

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

HN1[] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Under section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), the complaining party must allege and prove that there were two sales made by the same seller to at least two different purchasers. The prevailing view is that "Purchasers" within the meaning of section 2(a) does not necessarily mean purchasers buying direct from the seller charged with discrimination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

HN3[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The thrust of the so-called "indirect purchaser" doctrine is that a manufacturer, by utilizing the subterfuge of a "dummy" wholesaler or distributor, should not be able to evade the price discrimination provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

HN4[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In order to come within the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, the appellee must demonstrate that the discriminatory sales were "in commerce." 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

HN5[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

The Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), is applicable only where the allegedly discriminatory transactions took place in interstate commerce. That is, at least one of the two transactions which, when compared, generate a discrimination must cross a state line.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Discrimination > Buyer Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

HN6[] Price Discrimination, Buyer Liability

When the supplier himself does not engage in sales transactions across state lines, by deploying his franchised distributors or bona fide independent subsidiaries so that each satisfies only local market demands, Robinson-Patman liability may be minimized, for any price differentials made by an autonomous local subsidiary or distributor solely as between customers within the state would arise from a sale on the part of the intrastate distributor or subsidiary rather than of the supplier, beyond the commerce criteria of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Judges: Tuttle and Ainsworth, Circuit Judges, and Mitchell, District Judge.

Opinion by: AINSWORTH

Opinion

[*6] AINSWORTH, Circuit Judge: Appellee, a retail liquor store doing business in Broward County, Florida, brought this action against Hiram Walker, Inc., South Florida Liquor Distributors, Inc., and the Florida Beverage Corporation for damages and injunctive relief, alleging that defendants engaged in granting quantity discounts in the sale of liquor products to appellee's retail competitors in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a): [1]

> "(a) HN1[] It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States * *, and where the effect [2] of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: * * *." [2]

Both Hiram Walker and South Florida moved for summary judgment [3] on the ground that the allegedly discriminatory sales had not taken place in interstate commerce, and that, hence, those transactions were not within the scope of the Robinson-Patman Act. In addition, Hiram Walker contended that it should not be held liable as a seller under the Robinson-Patman Act because it had never sold any products directly to appellee. The District Judge denied the motions for summary judgment, but, finding that his order involved "controlling questions of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion," held "that an immediate appeal from this Order as authorized by 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) may materially advance the ultimate termination of this litigation. * * *" On March 23, 1968, a panel of this Court granted appellants' application for [3] leave to appeal from the interlocutory order of the District Court. After full consideration of the undisputed facts and the applicable law, we conclude that the District Court erred in denying the appellants' motions for summary judgment.

Appellant Hiram [4] Walker is a manufacturer of alcoholic beverages, [4] which it sells in interstate commerce to wholesale distributors throughout the United States, including South Florida and Florida Beverage Corporation in Florida. The latter distributors store the liquor in warehouses for varying periods of time, and resell it to retail stores in Florida, including appellee. Hiram Walker does not sell directly to retail stores, and it is undisputed that it does not fix the price or establish the terms and conditions of resale. Rather, Hiram Walker's activities are limited to [*7] promotional work by "missionary" men who provide retailers with advertising materials and generally act to

---

[1] Ten of the original thirteen defendants were either not served with process, or were dismissed from the suit on various grounds. In addition, the original complaint alleged violation of the Sherman Act, but this count was dismissed without prejudice and is not before the Court on this appeal.

[2] The provisos in Section 2(a), relating, inter alia, to the defense of cost justification, are not necessary to our decision in this case.

[3] Florida Beverage did not file a motion for summary judgment and thus technically it is an appellee in this appeal. However, the issues raised by appellant South Florida apply with equal force to Florida Beverage; and in its brief, Florida Beverage expressly adopts the positions taken by Hiram Walker and South Florida.

[4] The term "manufacturer" is employed by us as a matter of convenience. We are admonished by the appellant Hiram Walker that it is in actuality "the exclusive sales agent of an affiliated corporation which manufactures the products sold by Hiram Walker." It is conceded, however, that this fact is without legal significance in the present context.

supplement a national advertising effort designed to promote Hiram Walker products. These "missionary" men are not salesmen, and do not take orders for liquor.

[5] The basic purpose of Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act was to insure that purchasers from a single seller would not be injured by the seller's discriminatory pricing policies. F.T.C. v. Sun Oil Company, 371 U.S. 505, 519, 83 S. Ct. 358, 367, 9 L. Ed. 2d 466 (1963). [5] Thus, HN2[] the complaining party must allege and prove that there were two sales made by the same seller to at least two different purchasers. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 45, 68 S. Ct. 822, 827-828, 92 L. Ed. 1196 (1948). See also Chicago Sugar Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co., 7 Cir., 1949, 176 F.2d 1, 7; Jones v. Metzger Dairies, Inc., supra, citing Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co., 330 U.S. 743, 67 S. Ct. 1015, 91 L. Ed. 1219 (1947); Massachusetts Brew. Ass'n v. P. Ballantine & Sons Co., D. Mass., 1955, 129 F. Supp. 736, 739. The prevailing view is that "'Purchasers' within the meaning of Section 2(a) does not necessarily mean purchasers buying direct from the seller charged with discrimination." Austin, [6] Price Discrimination and Related Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act, p. 37 (2d rev. ed. 1959). See also Skinner v. United States Steel Corporation, 5 Cir., 1956, 233 F.2d 762; American News Company v. F.T.C., 2 Cir., 1962, 300 F.2d 104, 109, and cases cited therein; Tri-Valley Packing Association v. F.T.C., 9 Cir., 1964, 329 F.2d 694, 709; Purolator Products, Inc. v. F.T.C., 7 Cir., 1965, 352 F.2d 874, 883; Elizabeth Arden, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 2 Cir., 1946, 156 F.2d 132; Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act § 4.5, pp. 57-59 (1962); Stickells, Legal Control of Business Practice § 119 (1965). As the Seventh Circuit has stated:

> "If a seller can control the terms upon which a buyer once removed may purchase the seller's product from the seller's immediate buyer, the buyer once removed is for all practical, economic purposes dealing directly with the seller. If the seller controls the sale, he is responsible for the discrimination in the sale price, if there is such discrimination. If the seller cannot in some manner control the sale between his immediate buyer and a [7] buyer once removed, then he has no power by his own action to prevent an injury to competition." (Emphasis added.)

Purolator Products, Inc. v. F.T.C., 7 Cir., 1965, 352 F.2d 874, 883. See also American News Company v. F.T.C., supra, and cases cited therein; Tri-Valley Packing Association v. F.T.C., supra; Skinner v. United States Steel Corporation, supra; Austin, Price Discrimination and Related Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act, p. 37 (2d rev. ed. 1959). Cf. Massachusetts Brew. Ass'n v. P. Ballantine & Sons Co., D. Mass., 1955, 129 F. Supp. 736, 739. HN3[] The thrust of this so-called "indirect purchaser" doctrine is that a manufacturer, by utilizing the subterfuge of a "dummy" wholesaler or distributor, should not be able to evade the price discrimination provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act. [*8] American News Company v. F.T.C., supra at 109-110.

[8] In the present case, however, the record fails to disclose that Hiram Walker ever sold products directly to the appellee, nor did it do so indirectly by controlling the price or terms of resale. In his deposition submitted on the motion for summary judgment, William G. Benjamin, Sr., president and sole stockholder of plaintiff, admitted that he did not know of a single instance in which Hiram Walker sold directly to any retailer. Furthermore, Binford H. Sykes, General Manager of South Florida, and Elliott Feinberg, President of Florida Beverage, stated in their depositions that prices were set entirely by their own companies and without consultation with Hiram Walker. There was no evidence to the contrary and the facts were undisputed. Under these circumstances, appellant Hiram Walker cannot be held liable as a seller within the meaning of the Robinson-Patman Act. American News Company v. F.T.C., 2

---

[5] See also Hartley & Parker, Inc. v. Florida Beverage Corporation, 5 Cir., 1962, 307 F.2d 916, 921; Jones v. Metzger Dairies, Inc., 5 Cir., 1964, 334 F.2d 919, 924; Purolator Products, Inc. v. F.T.C., 7 Cir., 1965, 352 F.2d 874, 883; American News Company v. F.T.C., 2 Cir., 1962, 300 F.2d 104, 109; Shreveport Macaroni Manufacturing Company v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 1963, 321 F.2d 404, 408. See generally Austin, Price Discrimination and Related Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act (2d rev. ed. 1959); Austern, Presumption and Percipience about Competitive Effect under Section 2 of the Clayton Act (1964); Kronstein, Miller and Dommer, Major American Antitrust Laws Ch. 6 (1965); Patman, Complete Guide to the Robinson-Patman Act (1963); Seidman, Price Discrimination Cases, in Hoffman and Winard (eds.), 2 Hoffman, Antitrust Law and Techniques, p. 409 (1963).

Cir., 1962, 300 F.2d 104, 110; Klein v. Lionel Corporation, 3 Cir., 1956, 237 F.2d 13, 14-16; Massachusetts Brew. Ass'n v. P. Ballantine & Sons Co., D. Mass., 1955, 129 F. Supp. 736, 739; Purolator Products, Inc. v. F.T.C., 7 Cir., 1965, 352 F.2d 874, 883; [9] Skinner v. United States Steel Corporation, 5 Cir., 1956, 233 F.2d 762, 764; Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act § 4.4, p. 56 (1962); Austin, Price Discrimination and Related Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act, p. 37 (2d rev. ed. 1959). Thus, considering the depositions and affidavits as a whole, there is "'no genuine issue as to any material fact,'" and Hiram Walker "'is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law.'" Keating v. Jones Development of Missouri, Inc., 5 Cir., 1968, 398 F.2d 1011, 1013, citing Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c). See also First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968); National Labor Relations Board v. Smith Industries, Inc., 5 Cir., 1968, 403 F.2d 889; Sheets v. Burman, 5 Cir., 1963, 322 F.2d 277. See generally 6 Moore, Federal Practice para. 56.16 (2d ed. 1965).

We next inquire whether the distributors South Florida and Florida Beverage, as the actual sellers, under the circumstances may be liable. However, HN4[] in order to come [10] within the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, the appellee must demonstrate that the discriminatory sales were "in commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 13(a). In this regard,

> "The cases recognize a distinction between the commerce which is covered by the Sherman Act and that covered by the Robinson-Patman Act. 'In an action brought under the Robinson-Patman Act it is necessary to allege and prove that the transactions complained of are actually in interstate commerce, while in actions brought under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act it is sufficient if the transactions complained of are shown to have affected interstate commerce.' * * * Accordingly, cases involving liability under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act where it was sufficient to show that the sales affected interstate commerce are not applicable to our present case." (Emphasis added.) [6]

Willard Dairy Corp. v. National Dairy Products Corp., 6 Cir., 1962, 309 F.2d 943, 946. See Burke v. Ford, 389 U.S. 320, 88 S. Ct. 443, 19 L. Ed. 2d 554 (1967) (per curiam); Foremost Dairies, Inc. v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 1965, 348 F.2d 674, 676; Shreveport Macaroni Manufacturing Company v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 1963, 321 F.2d 404, 408; [11] Jones v. Metzger Dairies, Inc., 5 Cir., 1964, 334 F.2d 919, 922 n. 3 (dicta); Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act § 4.9, p. 78 (1962), citing H.R.Rep.No. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 6 (1936); Patman, Complete Guide to the Robinson-Patman Act, pp. 46-47 (1963). Thus, HN5[] the Robinson-Patman Act is applicable only where the [9] allegedly discriminatory transactions took place in interstate commerce. [7] [12] That is, " * * at least one of the two transactions which, when compared, generate a discrimination must cross a state line." Rowe, supra at 79. [8]

---

[6] Thus the District Court's reliance on United States v. South Florida Asphalt Company, 5 Cir., 1964, 329 F.2d 860, was misplaced.

[7] The fact that a firm manufactures products which are later sold to distributors in another state is not dispositive on the issue as to whether a subsequent sale to a retailer is in interstate commerce. Massachusetts Brew. Ass'n v. P. Ballantine & Sons Co., D.Mass., 1955, 129 F. Supp. 736, 738; Food Basket, Inc. v. Albertson's, Inc., 10 Cir., 1967, 383 F.2d 785, 787, and cases cited therein.

[8] See also Borden Company v. F.T.C., 7 Cir., 1964, 339 F.2d 953, 955; Cream Crest-Blanding Dairies, Inc. v. National Dairy Products Corp., 6 Cir., 1967, 370 F.2d 332 (per curiam), affirming W.D.Mich., 1965, 243 F. Supp. 331; Jones v. Metzger Dairies, Inc., 5 Cir., 1964, 334 F.2d 919; Abramson v. Colonial Oil Company, 5 Cir., 1968, 390 F.2d 873, 874 (per curiam); Food Basket, Inc. v. Albertson's, Inc., 10 Cir., 1967, 383 F.2d 785, 787; Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U.S. 231, 236-237, 71 S. Ct. 240, 243, 95 L. Ed. 239 (1951); Central Ice Cream Co. v. Golden Rod Ice Cream Co., 7 Cir., 1961, 287 F.2d 265, 267; Baldwin Hills Bldg. Mat. Co. v. Fibreboard Paper Prod.Corp., C.D.Cal., 1968, 283 F. Supp. 202, 203; Industrial Building Materials, Inc. v. Interchemical Corp., C.D.Cal., 1967, 278 F. Supp. 938, 973; LaPointe v. Schweigert Meat Co., D.Minn., 1966, 282 F. Supp. 974, 976; Massachusetts Brew. Ass'n v. P. Ballantine & Sons Co., D. Mass., 1955, 129 F. Supp. 736, 738. See generally Stickells, Legal Control of Business Practices § 117 (1965); Austin, Price Discrimination and Related

[13] The undisputed facts demonstrate that South Florida and Florida Beverage sold only to retail customers within the State of Florida. Under these circumstances, there is no merit to the contention that those sales, including sales to the appellee, were made in interstate commerce.

> "When HN6[] the supplier himself does not engage in sales transactions across state lines -- by deploying his franchised distributors or bona fide independent subsidiaries so that each satisfies only local market demands -- Robinson-Patman liability may be minimized. For any price differentials made by an autonomous local subsidiary or distributor solely as between customers within the state would arise from a sale on the part of the intrastate distributor or subsidiary rather than of the supplier, beyond the commerce criteria of the [Robinson-Patman] Act." (Emphasis added.)

Rowe, Price Discrimination Under the Robinson-Patman Act, p. 81 (1962). See also Massachusetts Brew. Ass'n v. P. Ballantine & Sons Co., D. Mass., 1955, 129 F. Supp. 736, 739. Cf. Shreveport Macaroni Manufacturing Company v. F.T.C., 5 Cir., 1963, 321 F.2d 404, 408-409. [14] Thus, as a matter of law, the sales made by South Florida and Florida Beverage to the appellee and other retailers were not within the scope of the Robinson-Patman Act, and the District Court erred in denying summary judgment. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c); Baldwin Hills Bldg. Mat. Co. v. Fibreboard Paper Prod. Corp., C.D.Cal., 1968, 283 F. Supp. 202, 205. See First National Bank of Arizona v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 (1968); Keating v. Jones Development of Missouri, Inc., 5 Cir., 1968, 398 F.2d 1011, 1013; National Labor Relations Board v. Smith Industries, Inc., 5 Cir., 1968, 403 F.2d 889.

Reversed.

Problems under the Robinson-Patman Act, pp. 14-18 (2d rev. ed. 1959); Note, Robinson-Patman Treatment of Interstate Firms Injured by Local Competitors, 67 Yale L.J. 1073, 1074-1075 (1958).

Arthur Murray, Inc. v. Reserve Plan, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

February 5, 1969

Nos. 18,970 and 18,971

Reporter

406 F.2d 1138 *; 1969 U.S. App. LEXIS 9059 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,700

Arthur Murray, Inc., v. Reserve Plan, Inc.; Educational Credit Bureau, Inc., and Tuition Plan, Inc., v. Reserve Plan, Inc.

Core Terms

damages, licensees, finance company, studios, handle, expenses, district court, discount, trial court, contracts, estimate, financing, records, Sherman Act, collection, installment, annual, arrive, calculated, computing, profits, decree, defendants', franchise, exhibits, salary, audit, financial institution, amount of damages, record evidence

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN1[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

It is not necessary to find a specific intent to restrain trade or to constitute a monopoly in order to find antitrust law violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN2[] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

Explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et. seq., conspiracy -- certainly not where joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

A private treble damage complaint asserting a per se violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et. seq., need not allege or offer proof of public injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN4[] Private Actions, Remedies

The right of recovery of a plaintiff in a treble damage antitrust case does not depend on proving an economic injury to the public.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Torts > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN5[] Private Actions, Remedies

Once the fact of damage has been established, courts are allowed considerable leeway in arriving at the amount of damages. Damages are not rendered uncertain because they cannot be calculated with absolute exactness. It is sufficient if a reasonable basis of computation is afforded, although the result is only approximate. Furthermore, a defendant whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of the precise damages suffered by the plaintiff, is not entitled to complaint that they cannot be measured with the same exactness and precision as would otherwise be possible.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

A plaintiff is entitled to recover damages that accrue after the filing date, provided they are proximately caused by the wrongful and illegal acts committed by the defendant before the complaint was filed, and provided that they are proved with reasonable certainty and are not merely speculative or remote.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN7[] Jury Trials, Province of Court & Jury

The trial court is the judge of the credibility of the witnesses.

Judges: [1] Matthes, Mehaffy and Lay, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: MEHAFFY

Opinion

[*1140] MEHAFFY, Circuit Judge.

This is a private antitrust suit brought under §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act seeking treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act. [1] The parties waived a jury trial and the case was tried to the District Court for the Western District of Missouri. Plaintiff-appellee, Reserve Plan, Inc., was awarded treble damages in the amount of $697,500.00, plus costs, and an attorneys' fee of $40,000.00. After submission here, Reserve Plan moved for an additional attorneys' fee of $21,300.00.

For clarity, Reserve Plan, Inc. will hereafter be referred to as plaintiff. Defendants Arthur Murray, Inc., Educational Credit Bureau, Inc. and Tuition Plan, Inc. will be referred to collectively as defendants and individually as AMI, ECB and TPI, respectively. Plaintiff and ECB and TPI are finance companies. AMI is engaged in franchising Arthur Murray Dance Studios throughout [2] this country and abroad, and in 1955 and 1956 had franchise agreements with some 325 to 350 studios in the United States. These studios will be sometimes referred to herein as licensees. Under terms of the franchise agreements, the licensees pay royalties to AMI, which usually amount to approximately 10% of the gross receipts of each studio, for the use of the Arthur Murray name and method of teaching dancing.

On March 28, 1956, AMI issued a release to all of its studios restricting the financing of loans for dance lessons sold by its franchised studios to three finance companies -- the defendants TPI and ECB (of Kansas City) and a third company ECB of New York, which latter company was dissolved prior to this suit and the stock acquired by defendant ECB of Kansas City. [2] All three of the aforementioned finance companies were sponsored by AMI, which loaned the companies capital and whose officials assisted in the corporate organization. The stockholders of AMI and the three finance companies were composed of people from the same groups -- members of the Murray family, officers and employees [*1141] of the companies and their families, and Arthur Murray licensees. [3] Plaintiff [3] was one of twenty-seven independent finance companies and banks doing business with the AMI licensees on the date of the March 28, 1956 release. By April of 1956, plaintiff had lost all of the Arthur Murray business with the exception of two accounts, one in Jackson, Mississippi and the other in Waco, Texas, which were later lost.

[4] Broadly stated, the issues here are (1) the liability of the defendants and (2) the alleged excessiveness of the damages as computed by the district court.

We agree with the district court's conclusion as to defendants' liability and also agree with the method utilized by the district court in computing damages, but we think the district court erred in failing to include in plaintiff's expenses any part of the executive salary in its handling of the AMI business which we think should have been considered

---

[1] 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2 and 15.

[2] The release sent out by AMI to its licensees on March 28, 1956 appears in Appendix Number 1.

[3] David Teichman, a brother of Arthur Murray, testified that in 1955 and 1956 approximately 55% of the stock of AMI was owned by AMI licensees, approximately 20% by members of the family of Arthur Murray and Kathryn Murray, his wife (although Arthur and Kathryn did not own any of the stock themselves), and that the remainder of the stock was owned by AMI and its employees. (At that time, Teichman was Vice-President, Treasurer and Business Manager of AMI.)

In 1956, Arthur Murray, Teichman and his wife, Robert Norman (Kathryn Murray's brother), and Rebecca Roman (Arthur and Kathryn Murray's daughter) together owned over 40% of the stock in ECB-KC and W.E. Gregory, Manager of ECB-KC, owned over 10%. (Teichman, Robert Norman and Kathryn Murray were members of the Board of Directors of ECB-KC in 1956 and Norman was its Vice-President.) Teichman and his wife owned 55% of the stock of ECB-NY and Kathryn Murray's brother had an additional 20%. Two brothers of Arthur Murray and the wife of one owned over 22% of the stock of TPI and Gregory and Charles E. Redhair, Manager of TPI, owned over 7% each. (Teichman managed ECB-NY and Teichman and Redhair were members of the Board of Directors of TPI.) Reserve Plan, Inc. v. Arthur Murray, Inc., 38 F.R.D. 23, 29-30 (W.D. Mo. 1965).

and added to plaintiff's expenses in order to properly compute the amount of damages. We also note what appears on the surface, at least, to be a failure on the part of the district court, in computing the income which plaintiff lost from AMI accounts during the three-year, ten-month period for which it was awarded damages, to take into consideration the record evidence concerning the deferred discount income which plaintiff received from AMI accounts during this period. For these reasons, we vacate the judgment entered in the district court and remand the case for recomputation of the damages to be awarded.

This case, a complex one, has had a thorny history since its inception. [5] It was nearly four years after the suit was filed before the case finally came to trial on January 7, 1964. Thereafter, in a memorandum opinion issued on July 21, 1965 in a case styled Reserve Plan, Inc. v. Arthur Murray, Inc., 38 F.R.D. 23 (1965), Judge Oliver held that the defendants had violated the Sherman Act as charged and were liable to plaintiff for treble damages, but did not fix the amount of the damages. The court stated that in order to arrive at a reasonably accurate amount of damages, it would be necessary for the case to be referred to a master who was an accountant, with directions to receive particular accounting evidence and make an appropriate report which would enable the court to render a just verdict. Defendants petitioned this court for a writ of mandamus or prohibition to prohibit the district court from carrying out its order to appoint a special master to examine not only the evidence adduced by the parties at the trial but in addition to engage in a scrutiny of other indicated material consisting of "'all accounting records, income tax returns, balance sheets, contract documents, business and accounting correspondence and the like,' which [6] could be reflective of the profits derived by defendants Educational Credit Bureau, Inc., and Tuition Plan, Inc., from the business which plaintiff had been deprived [*1142] of, involving some 45 accounts." Arthur Murray, Inc. v. Oliver, 364 F.2d 28, 30 (8th Cir. 1966). In the opinion of this court in Arthur Murray, Inc. v. Oliver, supra, we held that the district court had the authority under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to refer the case to a special master to make an accounting analysis, even though the trial had been concluded and the case submitted to the court for its determination, but that the court could not engage in a prospecting quest for other evidence to add to the record nor appoint a master to do so unless such evidence should appear to be important as a matter of preventing injustice and, also, reasonably available. We held that under the particular factual situation involved, the reference should not be permitted to stand except as to the auditing of the plaintiff's books and records. Therefore, the petition for the writ prohibiting reference to the master for auditing the books was denied, and as to the other aspects [7] of the reference the district court's order was directed to be vacated.

On September 12, 1966, Judge Oliver issued his modified order of reference to a master wherein he referred to the master the plaintiff's audit records and income tax returns with directions that the master report as to whether from these records he could make a reasonably accurate calculation of the profits earned by plaintiff on its Arthur Murray studio business in the years prior to April 1, 1956. Thereafter, the master filed his report with the district court stating that it was impossible for him to calculate a reasonably accurate profit earned on the Arthur Murray business. This, however, can be readily understood in view of the fact that in the operation of plaintiff's business it did not segregate the expenses which it incurred in handling the Arthur Murray accounts from its expenses on other accounts, and there was no reason why it should do this in order to keep a proper set of books. This, however, precluded a certified public accountant from stating with precise definiteness the exact amount of profits which plaintiff realized from the Arthur Murray accounts.

Thereafter, Judge Oliver did the only [8] thing left for him to do, that is, he waded through the various accounting records and exhibits in an effort to make a reasonable calculation himself. He was able to ascertain from them plaintiff's gross income from the Arthur Murray business for the year preceding April 1, 1956, and also the ratio of expenses to income in prior years. By applying this formula, which will be discussed in more detail hereafter, he arrived at a total damage of $232,500.00 and directed that a judgment be prepared trebling the damages, fixing a fee of $600.00 for the special master, and directing that counsel submit appropriate data in support of a reasonable attorneys' fee. Upon agreement of the parties, the court later fixed the attorneys' fee at $40,000.00, with the further agreement that if the judgment were reduced the fee would be reduced proportionately. The district court's memorandum opinion, with the supplemental findings of fact and conclusions of law, is reported as Reserve Plan, Inc. v. Arthur Murray, Inc., 262 F. Supp. 565 (W.D. Mo. 1967).

Judge Oliver found from a study of the evidence and the reasonable inferences drawn therefrom that plaintiff's gross annual income [9] received from Arthur Murray business for the calendar year immediately preceding April 1, 1956 was $120,000.00. Based on the plaintiff's audit reports, Judge Oliver determined that $60,000.00 annually was a reasonable estimate of the additional expense incurred in the handling of the AMI accounts. Thus, the court concluded that plaintiff's annual profit for the year on AMI accounts would be approximately $60,000.00 and used this figure as the estimated annual profit which plaintiff lost from AMI business from March 28, 1956, when the release was sent out, to February 9, 1960, when the suit was filed, which was for a period of three years and ten months, or a total of $230,000.00. The court further found that plaintiff was entitled to $2,500.00 for the [*1143] Arthur Murray coupon books which plaintiff had purchased but had not used, making plaintiff's damages $232,500.00, said damages to be trebled, which amounted to $697,500.00.

In his first opinion reported at 38 F.R.D. 23, 26-30, Judge Oliver made forty-one findings of fact relating to the liability issue and concluded therefrom that AMI's letter of March 28, 1956 to its licensees requiring that they do business [10] with one of the three named finance companies was in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act by compelling contracts in restraint of commerce among the several states. He also concluded that ECB and TPI, whether having knowledge that the letter was being sent or not, accepted the benefits which resulted therefrom and joined and actively participated in carrying out the combination in restraint of commerce in violation of § 1. Additionally, Judge Oliver found that the defendants combined with each other to monopolize part of the commerce among the several states in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act.

Justification for the March 28, 1956 release was asserted by reason of habits of some of the studios in using different devices to report their gross receipts, thereby reducing royalty payments to AMI. It is singular to note that it was not even contended that plaintiff was guilty of any such practice and the trial court expressly rejected the interposed defense in its finding of fact numbered 41. In addition, AMI contended that certain of the finance companies were using objectionable collection tactics, such as bludgeoning collection letters, but again there is no contention that [11] plaintiff or some of the other finance companies or banks were guilty of any such practice. [4]

Teichman, a brother of Arthur Murray and vice-president, treasurer and business manager of AMI, was in charge of the day-to-day business of AMI and he was responsible for sending out the release, as well as the sponsorship of financial help afforded ECB and TPI, on whose boards of directors he served.

In brief, the trial court's findings traced the relationship of plaintiff and its key employees, W.E. Gregory and Charles E. Redhair, to defendant AMI; their later association with ECB and TPI; the number of AMI studios plaintiff had as customers in 1946 when it was incorporated; its outstanding note balance; the growth of plaintiff's business; Teichman's organization [12] of ECB of New York in 1948 to handle Arthur Murray studio notes and his employment of Gregory to manage it (he had previously left plaintiff's employ to manage an Arthur Murray studio in Kansas City); Gregory's organization of ECB of Kansas City six months later; the AMI-ECB loan agreement which provided, inter alia, that AMI would use its best efforts to assist ECB of New York to obtain as customers the various Arthur Murray studios to be operated in the future; the loans made by AMI to ECB; Gregory's introduction of Teichman to Redhair while the latter was still employed by plaintiff; AMI's decision to form yet another finance company; the making of arrangements with Redhair to handle said company; the AMI-TPI loan agreement; its omission of the provision contained in the AMI-ECB agreement that AMI would use its best efforts to obtain Arthur Murray studios as customers; the restrictions placed on TPI regarding purchases and loans it could make; the provision for AMI approval of compensation to be paid to officers, employees, attorneys and auditors; the initial AMI loan and its subsequent increase as needed; the testimony of former licensee customers of plaintiff that they would [13] not have changed their business to the other companies except for the release of March 28, 1956; the relationship of the [*1144] Murray family to defendants ECB and TPI, their stock interests and directorships therein; and Teichman's testimony to the effect that as a result of the aforementioned release the three companies were expected to get all the business of the Arthur Murray studios except the business from the permanent franchisees.

---

4 Mr. Teichman wrote Mr. C.C. Hart, plaintiff's president, on April 13, 1956 that it was certainly not AMI's intention when issuing the March 28th release to imply that plaintiff was not operating properly or that it had not cooperated with AMI in the past.

We have no difficulty in agreeing with the district court that, from the facts found, defendants' actions constituted a stifling of competition to the point of eliminating its competitors, that the collaboration of ECB and TPI was monopolistic in purpose, and that the direct and necessary effect of the combination or conspiracy was to restrain legitimate competition. Defendants cite Crawford Transport Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 338 F.2d 934 (6th Cir. 1964), asserting that it is on all fours with the instant case and that its rationale establishes immunity from the Sherman Act provisions. There are significant differences, however, in the factual situation in the Crawford case and in the case at bar. In Crawford the action [14] was brought by the Transport Company against Chrysler for damages based on Chrysler's alleged violation of the Sherman Act through controlling the method of transportation of vehicles to dealers. Chrysler adopted a plan providing for reducing the number of carriers whose services would be retained from 80 to 16. The object of this plan was to obtain a more efficient and economical system of distribution of Chrysler products to its dealers. It was estimated that by this plan Chrysler would save several million dollars in shipping costs.

One significant difference in Crawford and the case before us is the fact that Chrysler had a meeting attended by all of its carriers at which it announced the basis upon which the carriers would be selected and gave each carrier a right to compete for the business. It permitted consolidations, etc. and no carrier was discriminated against. Beyond that, Chrysler had no financial interest in the carriers, no interlocking directorships, and all in all the facts in Crawford are a far cry from those here where AMI merely announced that after April 30, 1956 only the three AMI-sponsored companies would be approved for financing installment contracts [15] for Arthur Murray dance instructions. The licensees were deprived of the right to either finance their own paper or select any other finance company, regardless of the satisfactory method of its operation.

On December 3, 1958, AMI sent to its licensees a copy of a consent decree entered into with the Government. [5] In the cover letter AMI stated that its sole concern was to make sure that Arthur Murray pupils were not harassed by strong-arm collection methods. In conclusion, the letter stated that any provision of any franchise or contract which would prevent the licensees from financing with other financial institutions approved by AMI was waived as per the decree, but that AMI reserved the right to disapprove of the use by a licensee of any financial institution on the sole ground that it engages in oppressive or deceptive practices which would be substantially injurious to AMI's good will and reputation.

[16] It is quite clear from the record that by any reasonable criteria for the selection of finance companies, the plaintiff would be qualified to handle Arthur Murray accounts. The fact that from 45 to 48 AMI studios were using plaintiff at the time of the release indicates that a substantial number of licensees preferred to have plaintiff handle its financing.

While the three finance companies approved by AMI were not a part of AMI, there was such a mutuality of ownership as to make this case analogous to the line of cases concerning tying arrangements involving the products or services of the same company or a subsidiary thereof. In many respects, this case is [*1145] similar to United States v. General Motors Corp., 121 F.2d 376 (7th Cir. 1941), where General Motors attempted to tie to the sale of its motor vehicles the financing thereof to the purchaser through General Motors Acceptance Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary engaged in the business of automobile financing. The court there held that the General Motors arrangement was in violation of the Sherman Act and the evidence there, as here, shows that the course of conduct was not intended to discriminate [17] against an inferior or unreliable finance service, but rather its entire force and effect was directed against any use of an independent finance company.

It is argued that ECB and TPI did not know of AMI's intention to create a monopoly. We do not see how ECB and TPI can legitimately claim total ignorance of the letter sent out by Teichman, which is the basis of this litigation, when Teichman was a member of the board of directors of each company. Even if the finance companies had no knowledge of a combination or conspiracy, they collaborated with AMI, participated in the combination, were beneficiaries thereof, and, therefore, must share responsibility for the resulting damage. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. v. Goldwyn, 328 F.2d 190, 212 (9th Cir. 1964).

---

5 This consent decree appears in Appendix Number 2-A and the letter sent out by AMI to its licensees in regard thereto appears in Appendix Number 2-B.

The Supreme Court has long held that HN1[] it is not necessary to find a specific intent to restrain trade or to constitute a monopoly in order to find antitrust law violations. United States v. Griffith, 334 U.S. 100 at 105, 106, 92 L. Ed. 1236, 68 S. Ct. 941 (1948). A more recent decision appropriate for mention [18] here is United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 142-143, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966), where the Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Fortas, said:

> " . . . it has long been settled that HN2[] explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy -- certainly not where, as here, joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan."

Defendants also contend that the leniency with which they enforced the directive is evidence that there was no violation of the Sherman Act and they cite one or two instances where they gave licensees permission to use other finance companies. Such argument was rejected in Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958).

Defendants contend further that there was no evidence of public injury and, therefore, the court erred in concluding that defendants' conduct violated the Sherman Act. HN3[] A private [19] treble damage complaint asserting a per se violation of the Sherman Act need not allege or offer proof of public injury. Radiant Burners, Inc. v. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 364 U.S. 656, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959). It is our opinion that the allegations in the instant case constitute a per se violation of the Act. See Atlantic Heel Co. v. Allied Heel Co., 284 F.2d 879, 883-884 (1st Cir. 1960).

There is dictum in the Supreme Court's opinion in In re McConnell, 370 U.S. 230, 231, 8 L. Ed. 2d 434, 82 S. Ct. 1288 (1962), as follows:

> " . . . we have held that HN4[] the right of recovery of a plaintiff in a treble damage antitrust case does not depend at all on proving an economic injury to the public."

See also Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964).

We hold that there was no necessity in the instant case to prove public injury but that as was said in [20] United States v. General Motors Corp., supra, 121 F.2d 376 at 401: "The best security to the public lies in the immediate removal of the finance restrictions."

Subsidiary arguments advanced by defendants include the assertion that the trial court made no findings of the [*1146] key elements of a § 2 offense such as relevant market power and intent. As to the market involved, Mr. Justice Jackson said in International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 396, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947): " . . . but also it is unreasonable, per se, to foreclose competitors from any substantial market." To the same effect, see United States v. Griffith, supra 334 U.S. at 107.

We have carefully considered all of the other attacks defendants have made upon the judgment entered by the trial court and find them to be without merit. Defendants contend that there is a deficiency in the evidence and in the findings of the district court to support its conclusions. We do not agree, as in our view there is a proper evidentiary basis for the court's findings, and the findings in their totality are sufficiently comprehensive for the ultimate [21] conclusions. See Darter v. Greenville Community Hotel Corp., 301 F.2d 70 (4th Cir. 1962); Carr v. Yokohama Specie Bank, Ltd., 200 F.2d 251, 255 (9th Cir. 1952).

Damages.

The most vexatious problem for the trial court was the computation of damages once liability had been found. The trial court anticipated this from the inception of the case and constantly exhorted plaintiff to adduce evidence in direct support of a consistent theory of damages. This was to no avail, the plaintiff huing to the broad generality that it was entitled to an amount due for "loss caused by defendants' illegal conduct, not only of future profits reasonably to be expected and reasonably estimated, but also capital investments." We assume that plaintiff, in using the expression "capital investments," referred to loss of the $2,500.00 in AMI coupon books, which will be more fully discussed later.Thus, the trial proceeded with a multitude of exhibits, some hurriedly prepared on the night before their introduction and later withdrawn, depositions, and live testimony, all of which constitute several volumes of record evidence. It was in this setting that the trial court [22] referred the case to a master with the hopeful notion that a certified public accountant would be able to pinpoint with certainty the exact damages to which plaintiff was entitled. This court's ruling, however, confined the master to record evidence as the case was already under submission. The master reported to the court that he was unable to calculate a reasonably accurate profit earned on the Arthur Murray business. This, of course, he could not do because of the method utilized by plaintiff in its bookkeeping which did not segregate its expenses involving the Arthur Murray accounts from the expenses of the other individual accounts handled by plaintiff. It would have been expecting too much to arrive at a precise figure of damages based on the audit reports, etc. which in turn failed to segregate the expenses relating to the individual accounts.It is sometimes extremely difficult for an attorney and an accountant to achieve rapport, even as it is with an attorney and a civil engineer who will not give a definitive answer on most problems without resort to his slide rule. This is not to say, however, that reasonable damages based on record evidence are not to be awarded merely [23] because they are incapable of mathematical certainties. For example, in a personal injury action, there is no possible way to compute to a mathematical certainty an amount of damages -- fair, reasonable, and supported by the evidence -- on such elements of recovery as conscious pain and suffering.

In Dean Foods Co. v. Albrecht Dairy Co., 396 F.2d 652, 660-661 (8th Cir. 1968), this court said:

> "It is settled law that HN5[] once the fact of damage has been established courts are allowed considerable leeway in arriving at the amount of damages. This principle was firmly recognized in Eastman Kodak Company of New York v. Southern Photo Materials Company, 273 U.S. 359, 47 S. Ct. 400, [*1147] 71 L. Ed. 684 (1927), where the Supreme Court stated:
>
> ""Damages are not rendered uncertain because they cannot be calculated with absolute exactness. It is sufficient if a reasonable basis of computation is afforded, although the result be only approximate." * * * Furthermore, a defendant whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of the precise [24] damages suffered by the plaintiff, is not entitled to complaint that they cannot be measured with the same exactness and precision as would otherwise be possible.' 273 U.S. at 379, 47 S. Ct. at 405."

At first blush, it would appear to any court that the award of damages in this case when equated with the income tax returns is inordinate, but we learn from other evidence which is without dispute that the Arthur Murray business was plaintiff's most profitable business; that plaintiff's bookkeeping method did not take into account payments on the installment notes until the notes were paid in full; and that plaintiff actually lost money on dentist accounts and others, all of which combined to make the income tax exhibits meaningless insofar as computing damages in this case is concerned. [6]

Cued by our opinion, the trial court adopted the approach approved by the Supreme [25] Court in Eastman Kodak Co. of New York v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 71 L. Ed. 684, 47 S. Ct. 400 (1927), and from all of the record evidence arrived at an amount which it concluded was fair and just. The Court said in Eastman, supra:

---

[6] Also, plaintiff's books were kept on an accrual basis and the income for tax purposes was reported on a cash basis.

> "'The plaintiff had an established business, and the future profits could be shown by past experience. It was permissible to arrive at net profits by deducting from the gross profits of an earlier period an estimated expense of doing business.'" 273 U.S. at 379.

In our view, there is ample evidence to support the court's finding that the annual discount income attributable to Arthur Murray's accounts was approximately $120,000.00. This figure is slightly smaller than that of the master but, as stated in its opinion, the district court did not use the master's report in arriving at its figures but made its own computations from the various audit reports and all of the evidence in the case. [7]

[26] We note, however, that the master appeared to have no difficulty in ascertaining to his satisfaction the approximate amount of the discount income attributable to Arthur Murray's accounts. The court primarily based its findings on defendants' Exhibit 106 which in turn was based on audit reports introduced by plaintiff. According to defendants' own exhibits, plaintiff's total discount income for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1955 was $230,617.90, and for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1956 was $253,804.43. There was evidence to the effect that about one-half of the accounts handled by plaintiff during this period were Arthur Murray accounts and if the discount income attributable to Arthur Murray is figured on a 50% basis, it would amount to $115,308.96 for the 1955 fiscal year and $126,902.21 for the 1956 fiscal year.

There is very little, if any, disagreement between the conclusion reached by defendants in preparing Exhibit 106 from the plaintiff's records and between the conclusions reached by Judge Oliver. In any event, a consideration of all the evidence leads us to the conclusion that Judge Oliver's finding that plaintiff's discount income from Arthur Murray accounts [27] during the year preceding the issuance of the directive was approximately [*1148] $120,000.00 is amply supported by the evidence.

This $120,000.00 figure, however, was obtained from exhibits, all of which were based on an accounting procedure described as a "deferred discount method," whereby the installments collected by plaintiff on AMI contracts were not entered on plaintiff's books at the time of collection but entry thereof was deferred until all installments had been paid, at which time the total of the installments on each particular contract involved was entered on the books as "discount income." Therefore, despite plaintiff's loss of new AMI business commencing with the Arthur Murray release, it continued to collect installments on many of the contracts then in force with Arthur Murray students and to enter the discount income on its books when the installment contracts were fully paid, thereby showing a substantial income from AMI accounts during each of the years of the damage period. For example, plaintiff's Exhibit 67, which is a report to plaintiff by its accounting firm, Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., reflects that the amount of discount income received by plaintiff [28] on its Arthur Murray installment contracts for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1957 was $57,241.36. Thus, it would appear that since the $120,000.00 figure was obtained from audit reports based on the same deferred accounting method or procedure, the amount of deferred income entered on the books during the three-year, ten-month period for which damages were awarded probably should be deducted from the $120,000.00 estimate of gross annual income in order to arrive at a figure which would more realistically reflect the actual loss. If the district court should so find, then, of course, the annual expenses for handling the additional business would necessarily be reduced proportionately. It could well be that, in studying the district court's opinion and the multitude of exhibits, we may have misinterpreted the court's theory of damages and its method of computing them in its effort to arrive at a just verdict, and we point up this particular matter only with instructions to the district court that it consider the same in its recomputation of damages to be awarded.

Having determined that the gross annual income from the Arthur Murray business for the year immediately prior to April 1, 1956 was [29] approximately $120,000.00, Judge Oliver then set out to determine how much additional in operating expenses it would cost plaintiff to handle that increase in business, by considering the ratio of expenses to income in prior years. Upon examination of the records, Judge Oliver found that the increase in the discount income received by plaintiff from all accounts between the years 1951-1952 and 1954-1955 was $106,132.94, and he used the increase in total expenses during this period as a yardstick in estimating the cost to plaintiff of handling $120,000.00 annual income from Arthur Murray accounts in addition to its non-Arthur Murray accounts, which comprised about one-half of its business in 1956. The records revealed that during this period, when the discount income increased approximately $106,000.00, the operating expenses increased approximately $58,000.00.

---

[7] The special master's calculation of the discount income attributable to Arthur Murray accounts for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1955 was $124,764.29 and for the year ending July 31, 1956 it was $120,303.30.

Plaintiff contended, however, that it would cost only $22,800.00 in additional expenses per year to handle the Arthur Murray accounts along with the rest of plaintiff's business. As Judge Oliver pointed out in his opinion, the estimate of $22,800.00 annual expenses is far too low a figure for handling $120,000.00 annual income, [30] or even $106,000.00 income.

We have prepared a table from the figures set out in Judge Oliver's opinion showing how he made his calculations and this table appears as an appendix to this opinion. [8] Most of his figures were taken from defendants' Exhibit 106, which Arthur Murray or its counsel prepared [*1149] from the auditor's reports for the benefit of the court, showing a comparative statement of income and summary of note purchases by plaintiff from 1947 through 1963, and from plaintiff's Exhibit 58, which was the estimate prepared by plaintiff of the additional operating costs it would have to expend annually in order to handle the Arthur Murray accounts.

In making its computation of expenses, the district court made no allocation to expense for any part of Mr. C. C. Hart's executive salary. Mr. Hart and his wife owned all the stock in plaintiff corporation and Mr. Hart managed the business. [9] It is uncontradicted by the evidence in this case that this [31] type business was a particularly high risk business and it is obvious from the evidence that it takes great expertise for a profitable operation. The lack of success of some of the licensees who engaged in their own financing operations attests to this. Mr. Hart had spent all his adult life in the finance business and was responsible for the success of the plaintiff company. When he incorporated the plaintiff company in 1946, all nine of its accounts were AMI studio accounts. This business was not profitable in the beginning but at the time of the release it was the most profitable part of plaintiff's business. By that time, plaintiff enjoyed the business of between 45 and 48 AMI studios, despite the fact that ECB-KC and ECB-NY had been in business since 1948. Additionally, Gregory, who was trained in the business by plaintiff, was the manager of ECB of Kansas City, and AMI thought enough of Redhair, who was then employed by plaintiff, to employ him away from plaintiff and install him as manager of TPI. Businesses such as this do not succeed except under the guidance and administration of someone knowledgeable in the field, and for these reasons we think a substantial part of [32] Mr. Hart's salary, as, for example, perhaps in proportion to the ratio that AMI's business bears to plaintiff's total business, is properly chargeable as an expense item in computing plaintiff's net income from AMI business. In no sense, however, do we mean to imply by reference to an example that said proportion serve as a rigid guideline to be followed by the district court. The amount thereof is solely a matter for the court's discretion, and we are fully cognizant that the learned trial judge here, having lived with this case for years as he did, is necessarily in a much better position than this court to make a fair judgment on this item.

Defendants contend that the damage to plaintiff's business was not caused by the AMI release restricting the finance business to three companies as it was inevitable that it would have lost all of this business in any event by reason of the AMI-sponsored finance companies offering stock in their business to the licensees. We will not

---

[8] The table appears in Appendix Number 3.

[9] Judge Oliver said:

> "It should be noted that this calculation does not take into account the fact that the pattern generally reflected by plaintiff's full business experience in regard to the amount of executive salary paid plaintiff's president was that, generally speaking, he drew a salary in excess of the $25,000 when the volume of annual discount income was greater than it was in the 1951-1952 period (the year 1953 was an exception; plaintiff's president elected to draw no salary in that year). Such was certainly true in fiscal year 1954 in which plaintiff's president was paid $40,402.58. We do not agree with the suggestion in some of the briefs, as distinguished from any evidence adduced by defendants, that a portion of plaintiff's president's executive salary should properly be allocated to the expense of handling the additional discount income. We find that plaintiff properly omitted that item from those listed in PX 58. " Reserve Plan, Inc. v. Arthur Murray, Inc., 262 F. Supp. 565, 569 (W.D. Mo. 1967).

speculate on what might have occurred, but it is singular to note that despite the operations of ECB-KC and ECB-NY plaintiff was able to maintain a substantial volume of AMI studio business until the release of [33] March 28, 1956. Furthermore, we are not concerned with what might possibly have occurred but what [*1150] did occur and the defendants did not opt to choose the suggested route, but rather adopted a course which we find to be violative of the antitrust laws and damaging to plaintiff's business.

[34] The trial court held that the amount of damages should be calculated to February 9, 1960, the day suit was filed. Defendants, on the other hand, contend that the cut-off date should have been either November 21, 1958, the date the consent decree was entered, or January 31, 1959, the date when the defendant companies terminated all contracts with Arthur Murray licensees in accordance with the requirements of the consent decree. In Volasco Products Co. v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co., 346 F.2d 661 (6th Cir. 1965), damages were allowed which accrued even after the filing date of the suit. In that case it was said that the rule is that the HN6[] plaintiff should be entitled to recover damages that accrue after the filing date, provided they are proximately caused by the wrongful and illegal acts committed by the defendant before the complaint was filed, and provided that they are proved with reasonable certainty and are not merely speculative or remote. See also A.C. Becken Co. v. Gemex Corp., 314 F.2d 839, 840-843 (7th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 816, 84 S. Ct. 49, 11 L. Ed. 2d 51 (1963). [35] We think the trial court was warranted in holding that damages should be recovered to the date suit was filed, since the evidence does not show that a substantial number of AMI studios had returned their business to plaintiff at that time.

We next come to the question of whether the entire Arthur Murray business was lost to plaintiff, and, if so, whether it was entirely attributable to the March 28 release or to other factors as well.

Judge Oliver found in his original opinion reported as Reserve Plan, Inc. v. Arthur Murray, Inc., supra, 38 F.R.D. 23 (1965), that all of the contracts which plaintiff had with Arthur Murray studios were terminated in April, 1956, except two. In the light of this finding by the trial court, there is certainly an evidentiary basis to justify a conclusion that the loss of this business was attributable to the March 28 release.

Defendants also contend that the trial court committed clear error in finding that plaintiff was damaged in the amount of $2,500.00 for coupon books which plaintiff threw away in 1959. This finding was based on the testimony of Mr. C. C. Hart, President of plaintiff, who stated that he had thrown away blank [36] Arthur Murray studio coupon books amounting to approximately 250 boxes of 100 each, which, at ten cents each, would have cost $2,500.00. He did not count them but merely estimated the number. Defendants contend that since these books were in blank they could have been used for any Arthur Murray school with which plaintiff might do business in the future, and, further that Mr. Hart's testimony is suspect because he failed to count the books although, at the time, he was preparing the antitrust action for damages.

There was no contradictory testimony on this question, however, and the court, on the basis of Mr. Hart's testimony, awarded the amount of his estimate in damages. HN7[] The trial court is the judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and the holding on this point will be affirmed.

From what has been said above, it is our holding that a portion of the executive salary paid to Mr. Hart for his managerial services for plaintiff be allocated as operational expenses and added to the $60,000.00 expense figure which the district court calculated, said combined amount to be subtracted from [37] the annual discount income attributable to the AMI business in arriving at the proper amount of net profits which plaintiff received from said business during the fiscal year ending April 1, 1956.

We direct the district court to reexamine the record evidence, including the exhibits, in order to ascertain whether [*1151] an adjustment should be made in the amount of income from AMI accounts which plaintiff actually lost, in view of the evidence concerning deferred discount income received by plaintiff from AMI accounts during the period of time for which plaintiff was awarded damages, i.e., from March 28, 1956 to February 9, 1960, and further direct the court to make the adjustments necessary, if any, in its recomputation of damages.

We vacate the judgment and direct the trial court, upon a recomputation of the damage figure in accordance with this opinion, to enter a new judgment which shall bear interest from the date of its entry. It is also directed that the $40,000.00 judgment for attorneys' fee in the trial court be reduced proportionately as per the parties' agreement.

The plaintiff's petition for the award of additional attorneys' fee for this appeal is denied, and, [38] because this opinion affirms on the liability issue, the costs of this appeal shall be taxed one-half against plaintiff and one-half against defendants.

It is so ordered.

Appendix

Number 1

The release sent by AMI to its licensees on March 28, 1956 reads as follows:

"After a number of years of experience in auditing bank plan records of our Licensees, we have come to the conclusion that the only way we can properly audit such records without substantially increasing the audit department in our office and without going into extensive field audits of both Licensees' records and finance company or bank records, is to have bank plans handled by finance companies whose records are uniform with ours and are kept in accordance with our suggestions and requirements.

"Up to now, we have accepted information supplied to us in various forms by various banks and finance companies, including companies operated by our Licensees. However, we have found many of these reports to be incomplete and we have found some of them to be inaccurate, thereby creating a considerable amount of unnecessary correspondence and re-auditing.

"Your franchise agreement provides that all installment contracts [39] will be handled by banks or financial institutions approved by us.

"We have, therefore, decided that after April 30, 1956, we will approve only Educational Credit Bureau of New York, Educational Credit Bureau of Kansas City and Tuition Plan, Inc., a new company now being formed to handle business solely for Arthur Murray studios.

"Licensees may place their bank plan business with any one of these companies which are all fully qualified to service Licensees' bank plan contracts. Accordingly, after the new company is in operation, we will not permit any of the Licensees to engage in finance company operations.

"March 28, 1956.

Arthur Murray, Inc."

Appendix

Number 2-B

The letter sent by AMI to its licensees notifying them of the consent decree and revoking its March 28, 1956 release reads as follows:

"In March of 1956, we sent a release to our licensees advising them that their [*1156] bank plan contracts should be handled by banks or finance companies approved by us.

"In the same release we stated that Educational Credit Bureau of Kansas City, Educational Credit Bureau of New York and Tuition Plan of Kansas City were the companies approved by us for the handling [40] of bank plan contracts of our Licensees.

"With the growth of our licensing system over the past few years, it became increasingly difficult for us to keep track of collection methods used by numerous finance companies in every part of the United States. It was therefore thought both desirable and lawful that we should suggest that Licensees use only finance companies whose collection methods and general operational procedures were familiar to us.

"The primary purpose therefore, of the above mentioned release was to make sure that the companies which handled bank plan contracts did not use objectionable tactics in collecting payments due under pupils' contracts.

"However, the Government advised us a few months ago that it intended to institute an action against Educational Credit Bureau of Kansas City, Educational Credit Bureau of New York, Tuition Plan of Kansas City and us, under the Federal 'Anti-Trust' Laws. Rather than become involved in litigation with the Government, we voluntarily consented to the entry of a decree in the form enclosed, in the Federal Court.

"Our sole concern is to make sure that Arthur Murray pupils are not harassed by strong-arm collection methods [41] and it is our understanding that the decree consented to by us gives the pupils this protection.

"Accordingly, any provision of any franchise, contract, agreement or understanding which prevents any of our Licensees from financing through any financial institution other than a financial institution named, designated or approved by us is hereby irrevocably waived, provided however, that in accordance with the procedures outlined in the enclosed decree, we reserve the right to disapprove of the use by a Licensee of any financial institution on the sole ground that it engages in oppressive or deceptive practices substantially injurious to our good will and reputation.

"Dec. 3, 1958.

Arthur Murray, Inc. "

[*1157] Appendix

Number 3

The following table was prepared from Judge Oliver's opinion showing the figures on which he based his calculations in estimating plaintiff's annual net profit for the year preceding April 1, 1956:

Item
Discount
Income			Average for
Average	1951	1952	1951 & 1952	1954	1955
	$110,642.85	$120,810.85		$213,101.67	$230,617.92
			$115,726.85
Expenses
Salaries (other than executive)	$28,333.68	$32,257.91		$63,547.91	$75,318.42
Average			$30,295.79
Postage	4,985.40	8,849.42		10,980.51	21,448.26
					8,955.00

Item Discount Income Average	1951	1952	Average for 1951 & 1952	1954	1955
					12,493.26
Average			6,917.41
Stationery	12,819.55	10,429.59		13,573.90	17,221.79
Average			11,624.57
Payroll Tax
Additional Travel
Miscellaneous
Telephone
Collection
Entertainment
Service and Maintenance
Totals

[42]

Item Discount Income Average	Average for 1954 & 1955	Increase 1954-55 over 1951-52	Plaintiff's Estimate of Annual Expenses for Handling Arthur Murray Income (PX 58) [1]
	$221,859.79	$106,132.94
Expenses

[1] Reserve Plan estimated that it would take only $22,800.00 in extra operational expenses per year to handle $90,000.00 to $100,000.00 additional income per month.

Item Discount Income Average	Average for 1954 & 1955	Increase 1954-55 over 1951-52	Plaintiff's Estimate of Annual Expenses for Handling Arthur Murray Income (PX 58) [1]
Salaries (other than executive) Average	$69,433.16	$39,137.37	$ 9,900.00
Postage
	(Not used)
$ Average	11,736.88	4,819.47	5,000.00
Stationery Average	15,397.84	3,773.27	4,000.00
Payroll Tax		229.97	400.00
Additional
Travel		2,846.45	1,000.00
Miscellaneous		2,096.92	1,000.00
Telephone		3,069.91	300.00
Collection		1,297.23	600.00
Entertainment		520.86	300.00
Service and Maintenance		.00	300.00
Totals		[2] $57,791.45	$22,800.00

Item

[2] This appears in Judge Oliver's opinion as $57,791.55, which is evidently a typographical error.

Expenses	Discount Income Average	Under estimate by Plaintiff	Overestimate by Plaintiff
Salaries (other than executive) Average		$29,237.37
Postage Average			$180.53
Stationery Average			226.73
Payroll Tax			170.03
Additional Travel			1,846.45
Miscellaneous			1,096.92
Telephone			2,769.91
Collection			697.23
Entertainment			220.86
Service and Maintenance			300.00
Totals		$35,868.74	$877.29

[43]

Stiftung v. Zeiss

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

March 12, 1969

No. 62 Civ. 850

Reporter

298 F. Supp. 1309 *; 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10971 ; 161 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 414 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,734

Carl Zeiss Stiftung, d/b/a Carl Zeiss and Zeiss Ikon A.G. v. V.E.B. Carl Zeiss, Jena, Steelmasters, Inc., Ercona Corp., Exakta Camera Co., Inc. and Camera Specialty Co., Inc. (Carl Zeiss, Inc., Additional Defendant on Counterclaims)

Core Terms

trademarks, antitrust, dealers, instruments, misuse, manufactured, anti trust law, merchandise, registrant, cameras, prices, sales, registration certificate, subsidiary, products, distributors, patent, marks, conclusive evidence, incontestable, infringement, collateral, employees, exclusive right to use, Lanham Act, ownership, antitrust violation, anti-competitive, plaintiffs', conditions

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Registration Procedures > Federal Registration > Federal Registration as Evidence

HN1[] Intellectual Property, Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse

See the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1115(b)(7).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

HN2[] Intellectual Property, Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse

A court in the exercise of its equity powers may deny enforcement of a trademark on the part of one who has used that trademark in violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Independent Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

HN3[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

The forces favoring exercise of equity power in a trademark suit are much weaker than those calling for its exercise in patent litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

HN4[] Misuse of Rights, Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

To make out an antitrust misuse of trademark defense, it is not enough merely to prove that merchandise bearing a trademark, however valuable the trademark, has been used in furtherance of antitrust violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

HN5[] Misuse of Rights, Copyright & Trademark Misuse Defenses

An essential element of the antitrust misuse defense in a trademark case is proof that the mark itself has been the basic and fundamental vehicle required and used to accomplish the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

HN6[] Intellectual Property, Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse

The burden of establishing a direct antitrust misuse is a heavy one.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Commercial Use > Affixation Required

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Rights of Buyers

HN7[] Commercial Use, Affixation Required

To establish a antitrust misuse defense, defendant must show that plaintiffs denied, or threatened to deny, a dealer the right to use its trademarks unless he consented to engage in the alleged antitrust activities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > Defense

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Terms Requiring Secondary Meaning > Grades & Styles

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

HN8[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

To establish an antitrust misuse defense, defendant must also show that the trademarks were used as an instrument of unlawful price discrimination, such as by charging a different price for branded and unbranded instruments of like grade and quality.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Interlocking Directorates

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN9[] Piercing the Corporate Veil, Alter Ego

Although the existence of a parent-subsidiary relationship is entitled to considerable weight in determining whether the parent is legally responsible for antitrust misconduct of its subsidiary, the separate corporate entities will not be disregarded unless it appears that the subsidiary is independent of the parent in form only, with the result that the subsidiary is merely the alter ego of the parent.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Interlocking Directorates

HN10[] Antitrust, Interlocking Directorates

Defendants must establish by a fair preponderance of the evidence the degree of dominion and control required to disregard the separate corporate entities.

Judges: [1] Mansfield, D.J.

Opinion by: MANSFIELD

Opinion

[*415] [*1310] Decision with Respect to Antitrust Misuse Defense

MANSFIELD, D.J.:

On November 7, 1968, the Court filed its decision and findings of fact with respect to plaintiffs' claims against defendants in the above-entitled action, holding that the plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung has the sole and exclusive right to the use of the Zeiss name and trademarks in dispute and that plaintiff Zeiss [*1311] Ikon A.G. has the sole and exclusive right to use the Zeiss Ikon name and mark 293 F. Supp. 892. The Court further held that defendant V.E.B. Carl Zeiss, Jena, Steelmasters, Inc. and Ercona Corporation have, since at least 1953, infringed plaintiffs' trademarks, unfairly competed with plaintiffs through the use of various names and marks found to be similar to those owned by plaintiffs, and, in violation of § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, falsely described and designated the origin of goods imported by them into the United States. All defenses except the antitrust misuse defense asserted by defendants were dismissed, [416] and subject to resolution of that defense, the Court held that plaintiffs were entitled to enforcement of their rights in the marks [2] and tradenames against defendants.

Following a hearing on December 4, 1968, we ordered trial of the antitrust defense to be severed from trial of the antitrust counterclaim and damage issues, and on February 25, 26 and 27, 1969, the antitrust misuse defense was separately tried to the Court. After careful review and appraisal of the testimony and documentary evidence received by the Court, we conclude that the antitrust misuse defense must be dismissed.

As and for their "antitrust misuse" defense, defendants assert that plaintiffs and their American subsidiary corporations, Carl Zeiss, Inc. (Zeiss, N.Y.) and Zeiss Ikon Voigtlaender of America, Inc. (ZIV, Inc.) have used their Zeiss trademarks in various ways to violate the antitrust laws in the United States, including the following:

(1) Combining with American distributors and franchise dealers to maintain prices established by Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc. for Zeiss goods;
(2) Restricting sale of Zeiss goods by certain dealers to limited territories;
(3) Restricting sales of Zeiss goods by dealers to certain customer classes;
(4) Tying in the sale of certain Zeiss goods to purchase of other Zeiss products;

(5) Unlawful price [3] discrimination;
(6) Precluding distributors from selling competitive goods;
(7) Submission of artificial bids to governmental agencies; and
(8) Organizing ZIV, Inc. to eliminate competition in the sale of certain Zeiss Ikon products.

Defendants further allege that plaintiffs' antitrust misuse of the Zeiss trademarks precludes entry of judgment in this action in favor of plaintiffs.

At the outset it is important to define the material issues raised by the foregoing antitrust misuse defense, especially since plaintiffs, prior to trial of that defense, moved pursuant to Rule 12(f), F.R.C.P., to dismiss the defense as a matter of law. Plaintiffs' argument in support of that motion goes essentially as follows: prior to the enactment of the Lanham Act in 1946, antitrust misuse did not bar enforcement of a valid trademark. The Lanham Act then provided that ownership of a federally registered trademark would become incontestable after five years of registration unless it was subject to certain defenses, including misuse of the trademark in violation of the antitrust laws, in which event such registration would not be deemed conclusive evidence of ownership. Therefore, argue [4] the plaintiffs, the sole effect of the antitrust misuse defense is to defeat the incontestability that would otherwise attach to registration of the trademarks under the Lanham Act, and the defense cannot be used to preclude enforcement of the trademarks in the present case for the reason that plaintiffs have already independently established their ownership of the marks to the satisfaction of the Court.

Both the express language of § 33(b)(7) of the Lanham Act and its legislative history reveal strong support for plaintiffs' contention that the intent and effect of the Act is merely to make the [*1312] defense of antitrust misuse available to defeat the conclusive evidentiary force that would otherwise attach to a trademark certificate under the Act. The relevant portion of the section provides:

> HN1[] "The certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the registrant's exclusive right to use . . . except when one of the following defenses or defects is established:
> * * *
>
> "(7) That the mark has been or is being used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States." (15 U.S.C. § 1115(b)(7))

The principal author of the Act, Representative Lanham, in explaining the Senate-House [5] Conference Report with respect to the Act, stated:

> "However, section 33(b) contains seven exceptions to the rule that the certificate of registration shall be conclusive evidence of the rights of the registrant even where the provisions of section 15 have been met. Some doubt has been expressed on the following points:
> "First. Do these seven exceptions, including the amending paragraph (7) with reference to the violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, lay down substantive rules of law or substantive defenses which go to the validity and enforceability of the mark, or do they relate only to the weight of evidence to be given to the certificate of registration?
> "Second. What is the meaning of the words 'used to violate the antitrust laws,' as found in paragraph (7) of paragraph (b) of section 33?
>
> "It is clear from the language of [417] the act and from the congressional history of the act as it is found in the hearings and reports that the seven 'defenses or defects' listed under paragraph (b) of section 33 are intended to relate to and to affect the weight of the evidence to be given to the certificate of registration where the owner claims the benefit of the incontestable [6] rule . . . but these seven paragraphs are not intended to enlarge, restrict, amend, or modify the substantive law of trademarks either as set out in other sections of the act or as heretofore applied by the courts under prior laws. A trade-mark registrant who is shown to have used his mark to violate the antitrust laws is denied the benefit of the rule that his certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of his right of ownership and his right to the exclusive use of the mark. Under these circumstances, his certificate of registration is only prima facie evidence of his right and he must be prepared to carry the additional burden of proof as is necessary under the laws and statutes as they existed prior to the passage of this act. One of the valuable new rights created by the act is the incontestable right after 5 years' use of the mark and the corollary thereto that the certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of ownership and the right to the exclusive use of the mark. This new and valuable right is denied to any trademark registrant who is shown to have used his mark to violate the antitrust laws, but this provision does not and is not intended to deprive [7] the registrant of any rights he would possess or enjoy if this act were not enacted into law. Stated in other terms, proof of violation of the antitrust laws of the United States by a registrant in the use of his mark does not under this act destroy the validity of or the right of the registrant to continue to use the mark, but it places on him a burden of proof in the event of litigation which others do not have to carry, by diluting the weight the court is to give to his certificate of registration as evidence of ownership and the right to use the mark. This is the intent and effect and the only intent and effect of the seven subparagraphs of paragraph (b) of section 33." (92 Cong. Rec. 7524)

[*1313] The same views were expressed by the managers of the bill in presenting the Senate-House Conference Report with respect to the bill. Senator Hawkes, one of the three Senate conferees, and Representative Lanham, one of the three House conferees, both read the following statement drafted by the managers of the bill in the House:

> "Amendment No. 28: This amendment provides that the use of a registered mark in violation of the antitrust laws shall constitute a defense [8] to a suit by the registrant. The House recedes with an amendment substituting the words 'to violate' for the words 'in violation of.' This amendment provides an additional defense to the conclusive evidence rule of a certificate of registration of a mark which has become incontestable under section 15. It does not and is not intended to enlarge, restrict, amend, or modify the substantive law of > trademarks either as set out in other sections of this Act or as heretofore applied by the Courts. The amendment does not and is not intended to affect the validity of the mark nor affect the right of the registrant to continue use or enforce his rights in the mark. If it is established that a registrant has used or is using his registered mark, which has become incontestable, as the legal, causal, and efficient instrumentality to violate the antitrust laws of the United States, such registrant is denied the benefit of the rule that the certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of his exclusive right to use the mark. Under such circumstances, the certificate is only prima facie evidence of his exclusive right to use and he must be prepared to carry the additional burden of proof [9] as though his mark had not become incontestable." (92 Cong. Rec. 7523)

The foregoing statements as to the scope and intent of the various defense provisions of the Lanham Act were affirmed by another conferee, Senator Pepper, upon submission of the Conference Report to the Senate, and the intent expressed by the authors has since been accepted by commentators. Note, The Besmirched Plaintiff and the Confused Public: Unclean Hands in Trademark Infringement, 65 Colum.L.Rev. 109, 114-115 (1965); Steed and Hunter, Trademarks Assignments and Restraints of Trade: The Maola Ice Cream Case, 45 T.M.R. 886 (1955); but see Handler, Trademarks and Antitrust Laws, 38 T.M.R. 387, 394-395 (1948).

It is true that Senator Hawkes when commenting upon the Conference Report with which he expressed agreement added the following qualification with respect to § 33(b)(7):

> [418] "I should like to add that the exception is that when the trade-mark is used to violate the antitrust laws, then such violation of the laws can be used as a defense against one who sues for infringement.
> "I should like to read this statement:
>
> "This exception means, and should mean, that a trademark owner who sues another [10] user for infringement must come into court with clean hands, and if he is using the mark to violate the antitrust law he is subject to be contested and to have his violation used as a defense." (92 Cong. Rec. 7636)

There are, furthermore, general statements by Senator O'Mahoney upon the floor of the Senate, 92 Cong.Rec. 7872, 7873, and by the Senate Committee on Patents, Sen. Rep. No. 1333, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 2 to the effect that the use of a trademark to violate the antitrust laws is, by virtue of § 33(b)(7), a defense in an infringement suit. At best, however, these statements, while seemingly contrary to the more detailed written statements previously cited, are ambiguous as to the precise scope of the defense. In view of the plain language of the Act and the detailed and explicit statements of those primarily responsible for drafting it and managing its passage, we cannot accept the ambiguous [*1314] and general statements of Senator Hawkes, who expressly indicated his agreement with the more explicit statement of the House managers, Senator O'Mahoney and the Senate Committee on Patents as altering or enlarging in any way the intent and effect of the relevant [11] provisions of the Act.

Insofar as defendants here rest their antitrust misuse defense upon § 33(b)(7) of the Lanham Act, therefore, the defense must be rejected. However, the limited purpose for which the defense may be invoked under § 33(b)(7) does not automatically call for dismissal of the defense in this case. Although the issue is not free from doubt, we believe that HN2[] a court, in the exercise of its equity powers, may deny enforcement of a trademark on the part of one who has used that trademark in violation of the antitrust laws. We recognize that HN3[] the forces favoring exercise of such power in a trademark suit are much weaker than those calling for its exercise in patent litigation, and that decisions upholding an antitrust misuse defense in the latter are not necessarily authoritative in the trademark field. See, for example, Morton Salt Co. v. G.S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 86 L. Ed. 363, 62 S. Ct. 402 (1942). The distinction arises from the fact that a patent represents a grant of a limited monopoly that in most instances would, absent its legalization by Congress, constitute an unlawful restraint of trade. The limited monopoly is granted in exchange for disclosure [12] of the patented invention to the public so that it may be utilized in free competition upon expiration of the patent. A valid trademark, on the other hand, merely enables the owner to bar others from use of the mark, as distinguished from competitive manufacture and sale of identical goods bearing another mark, or even no mark at all, since the purpose of trademark enforcement is to avoid public confusion that might result from imitation or similar unfair competitive practices rather than to authorize restraints upon trade.

Thus, although misuse of a patent almost inevitably is accompanied by unlawful restraints, the opportunity for effective antitrust misuse of a trademark, as distinguished from collateral anti-competitive activities on the part of the manufacturer or seller of the goods bearing the mark, is so limited that it poses a far less serious threat to the economic health of the nation. As a result, it has been recognized that a sharp distinction must be drawn between the antitrust misuse defense in patent infringement suits, on the one hand, and its use in trademark suits, on the other. See Waco-Porter Corp. v. Tubular Structures Corp. of America, 222 F. Supp. 332 (S.D. [13] Calif. 1963). Although we do not accept the view that the defense should be unavailable as a matter of law, see, e.g., Folmer Graflex Corp. v. Graphic Photo Service, 41 F. Supp. 319, 320 (D. Mass. 1941), it is significant that in almost every reported instance where the antitrust misuse of a trademark has been raised as a defense, it has been rejected. In the great majority of such cases the evidence revealed the antitrust activities to be collateral and did not demonstrate that the trademark, as distinguished from collateral activities with respect to goods bearing the trademark, was itself being used as the prime and effective instrument to effectuate the antitrust activity. E.g., O. & W. Thum Co. v. Dickinson, 245 Fed. 609, 622-623 (6th Cir. 1917), cert. denied, 246 U.S. 664, 62 L. Ed. 928, 38 S. Ct. 334 (1918); Searchlight Gas Co. v. Prest-O-Lite Co., 215 Fed. 692, 697 (7th Cir. 1914); Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Davis, 215 Fed. 349, 351 (6th Cir. 1914); Coca-Cola Co. v. Gay-Ola Co., 200 Fed. 720, 726 (6th Cir. 1912), cert. denied, 229 U.S. 613, 33 S. Ct. 773, 57 L. Ed. 1352 (1913); Coca-Cola Co. v. Deacon Brown [419] Bottling Co., 200 Fed. 105 (N.D. Ala. 1912); Weyman-Burton Co. v. Old Indian [14] Snuff Mills, 197 Fed. 1015 (S.D.N.Y. 1912); Independent Baking Powder Co. v. Boorman, 130 Fed. 726 (D.N.J. 1904).

> "The difficulty, however, is that defendant does not allege that the mark is being used in violation of the anti-trust [*1315] laws. Instead, it charges the plaintiff with a boycott, with conspiring to establish retail price control, and with various other matters, which taken together constitute a claim that the plaintiff is violating the anti-trust laws in certain respects, but not that it is using the trade-mark to do so. Such a defense is insufficient in a trade-mark infringement case. See Vitagraph, Inc. v. Grobaski, D.C.W.D. Mich. 1931, 46 F.2d 813, 814; cf. 15 U.S.C.A. § 1115." (Forstmann Woolen Co. v. Murray Sices Corp., 10 F.R.D. 367, 370 (S.D.N.Y. 1950))

Since denial of a plaintiff's exclusive right to the use of his trademark is not essential to the restoration of competition, HN4[↑] it is not enough merely to prove that merchandise bearing a trademark, however valuable the trademark, has been used in furtherance of antitrust violations. If this is all that were required, any antitrust violation in the distribution of such merchandise would result [15] in a forfeiture of the trademark with a consequent unnecessary frustration of the policy underlying trademark enforcement. HN5[↑] An essential element of the antitrust misuse defense in a trademark case is proof that the mark itself has been the basic and fundamental vehicle required and used to accomplish the violation. Although HN6[↑] the burden of establishing such a direct misuse is a heavy one, it is not insuperable. For instance, in Phi Delta Theta Fraternity v. J. A. Buchroeder & Co., 251 F. Supp. 968 (W.D. Mo. 1966), it was claimed that after a conspiracy between fraternities and others to monopolize the market in fraternity jewelry had failed, and the conspiracy could not be enforced against independent jewelry manufacturers and dealers, the fraternities began to register their insignia as trademarks for the very purpose of eliminating independent competition, and the court quite properly and understandably concluded that, if these allegations were proven, the trademarks were used as a causal instrumentality to violate the antitrust laws.

When the evidence in the present case is considered in the light of the foregoing principles, it reveals a complete failure to establish that plaintiffs [16] used the Zeiss trademarks to violate the antitrust laws. The deficiency in proof lay in defendants' erroneous assumption that if they could show that the Zeiss trademarks were considered a valuable asset by dealers in Zeiss-manufactured products, and that merchandise bearing the Zeiss trademarks had been used in furtherance of collateral antitrust violations, the antitrust misuse defense would be established. As we have already noted, however, the law is to the contrary, and it requires more than proof of a collateral violation.

Unquestionably the Zeiss trademarks, when affixed to merchandise of the type manufactured by plaintiffs, have value because they identify the merchandise to dealers and retail customers as manufactured by Zeiss in West Germany according to its high quality standards, and we have already found that these various Zeiss trademarks have considerable value (page 3, decision filed Nov. 7, 1968). When defendants further offered to prove that the merchandise to which the marks were affixed was the subject of various collateral anti-competitive activities of the type alleged in the affirmative defense (all of which were vigorously denied by plaintiffs) and it appeared [17] that proof with respect to such activities would be voluminous and necessitate a long trial, we, in the exercise of our discretion, directed defendants first to adduce the proof relied upon by them (1) to establish the alleged antitrust misuse of the Zeiss trademarks, as distinguished from collateral antitrust violations involving use of merchandise bearing the marks, and (2) to show that the plaintiffs should be held responsible for the alleged antitrust activities of Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc. Defendants were not precluded, however, from offering any proof with respect to [*1316] alleged antitrust activities that appeared relevant to these two basic threshold issues.

The proof offered by defendants convinces us that dealers in Zeiss-manufactured merchandise have valued the opportunity to sell such merchandise not because of the trademarks but because of the reputation of the manufacturer. Viewing the evidence as a whole, including defendants' offers of proof, we do not find that the trademarks were a competent producing cause which made possible the alleged antitrust violations. There was no credible evidence, for instance, to the effect that if the Zeiss trademarks had been [18] removed from the merchandise and some other identification affixed which would show its [420] origin (such as a mark reading "Made by Zeiss, West Germany"), sales would decline or dealers and purchasers would refuse to buy the merchandise. Nor was there any HN7[] proof that plaintiffs ever did deny, or threatened to deny, a dealer the right to use the Zeiss trademarks unless he consented to engage in the alleged antitrust activities, or any proof that defendants sought to tie in the use of the Zeiss trademarks with such activities. See, e.g., Morton Salt Co. v. G.S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 86 L. Ed. 363, 62 S. Ct. 402 (1942). Nor was there any attempt to show that HN8[] the trademarks were used as an instrument of unlawful price discrimination, such as by charging a different price for branded and unbranded instruments of like grade and quality, Federal Trade Commission v. Borden Co., 383 U.S. 637, 16 L. Ed. 2d 153, 86 S. Ct. 1092 (1966). There was no proof that the trademarks, as distinguished from the merchandise manufactured by plaintiffs, were ever even the subject of discussion with dealers, customers or anyone else. For instance, plaintiffs never threatened to withhold the right to use [19] the trademarks from a dealer or distributor unless he assisted in anti-competitive activities. In contrast to the complete absence of evidence that the trademarks were used as a causal instrumentality in the perpetration of any antitrust activities, there was proof that during some of the years when defendant Ercona was denied the use of the Zeiss trademarks (at the instance of the Office of Alien Property) in selling East German merchandise in the United States, its annual sales were higher than during earlier years when it used the Zeiss trademarks.

Some idea of the paucity and unconvincing nature of the proof offered by defendants is their heavy reliance on the testimony of Ben Rosenberg, an operator of a very small curiosity shop in Manhattan, who deals, among hundreds of other unrelated items, in used microscopes, cameras and telescopes. In response to a question from the Court, he testified that unless he could be assured of the Zeiss trademarks, he would not accept a Zeiss dealership. However, after observing his demeanor and giving careful consideration to his entire testimony, we believe that it is virtually worthless on the fundamental issue. He is essentially a dealer [20] in used merchandise (all but 2% of his sales are used goods) and as such would, of course, be more interested in proof of identification of a used item as Zeiss-made than would be an authorized Zeiss dealer who is recognized by the public and has the right to advertise himself as such. Furthermore, his testimony is at best speculation, since he has never been a Zeiss dealer and hardly appears to enjoy any prospect of becoming one, since he is essentially engaged in an unrelated business, namely the sale of used art goods, bric-a-brac, paintings and the like (amounting to only $50,000 annually, of which only a small percentage consists of used equipment of the type manufactured by Zeiss).

Defendants' reliance on various documents containing the word "ZEISS" (such as dealership agreements alleged to contain anti-competitive terms) as evidence of antitrust misuse, is misplaced. The term "Zeiss" was used in such documents to identify the manufacturer of the merchandise, and not to denote the trademark.

[*1317] Defendants' antitrust misuse defense also suffers from another fatal defect: failure to connect plaintiffs sufficiently with the alleged antitrust activities to establish [21] their legal responsibility for such activities. The activities relied on by defendants were entirely conducted by officers and employees of two New York corporations, Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc., neither of which is a plaintiff. Zeiss, N.Y. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung, and ZIV, Inc. is indirectly a subsidiary, 80% of its stock being owned by Zeiss, N.Y., 10% by Zeiss Ikon, A.G., and 10% by Voigtlaender of Germany. HN9[] Although the existence of a parent-subsidiary relationship is entitled to considerable weight in determining whether the parent is legally responsible for antitrust misconduct of its subsidiary, the separate corporate entities will not be disregarded unless it appears that the subsidiary is independent of the parent in form only, National Dairy Products Corp. v. United States, 350 F.2d 321 (8th Cir. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 384 U.S. 883, 86 S. Ct. 1913, 16 L. Ed. 2d 995 (1966), with the result that the subsidiary is "merely the alter ego of the parent," Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Philco Corp., 148 F. Supp. 541, 544 (S.D.N.Y. 1957) (wholly owned distributing subsidiary held independent). For instance, in the National Dairy Products [22] case the court found:

> "Chapman received National's approval before making capital investments; Chapman's personnel policies were established by National; Chapman's key employees had stock option plans to purchase National stock; Wise, a National official, had power to override Chapman's president . . .; Wise was kept informed on all decisions made by Chapman's president; Chapman's [421] products were sold under the Sealtest trade name [National's trademark]; Wise spent many months in Kansas City (where Chapman Dairy was located); Chapman's production reports were submitted to National for approval and National's officials often conducted the monthly sales department meetings where prices, market conditions, costs and competitors' prices were discussed." (350 F.2d at 326)

In contrast to the control exercised by the parent over its subsidiary's activities in National Dairy Products Corp., the proof here reveals that the operations and activities of Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc. were conducted independently by them and not directed or controlled by plaintiffs. Although one of the five directors of Zeiss, N.Y. has been a member of the Board of Management of the Stiftung, [23] and two others were formerly employed by it, Zeiss, N.Y. purchases instruments from plaintiffs for its own account at the same prices charged to distributors throughout the rest of the world, including those not affiliated with plaintiffs, and it resells the instruments to dealers and other purchasers in the United States in accordance with terms established by it, not the plaintiffs. Although most of its stock in trade consists of merchandise purchased from the Stiftung, it also sells merchandise manufactured by other firms bearing trademarks other than the Zeiss marks. Furthermore, certain instruments bearing the Zeiss trademarks are distributed in the United States by Keuffel & Esser, Inc. and Transcontinental Corp., in which neither Zeiss, N.Y. nor the Stiftung has any interest.

In the case of ZIV, Inc. none of its officers or directors are officers or directors of either of the plaintiffs, except that one member of its Board is an officer of plaintiff Zeiss Ikon. Like Zeiss, N.Y., ZIV, Inc. buys cameras and other photographic equipment from Voigtlaender of Germany for its own account and resells to dealers.

The independence of the operations of Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc. is [24] further evidenced by proof that their employees are hired and paid by them and not by plaintiffs. Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc. also keep their own separate books and [*1318] records in New York, prepare their own financial statements and tax returns, pay their own operating expenses, have their own pension and health insurance plans, and their own bank accounts in New York. It is particularly significant that neither Zeiss, N.Y. nor ZIV, Inc. has consulted with either of the plaintiffs, Voigtlaender or with any other affiliate of plaintiffs, with respect to appointment or termination of dealers, establishment of prices to customers in the United States or determination of discounts or bids on public contracts in the United States. Although Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc. from time to time make written and oral reports to the Stiftung and to suppliers in Germany with respect to the results of the company's operations in the United States and conditions in the United States market, including competitive and price conditions, there is no proof that the competitive practices, prices or other distribution activities of Zeiss, N.Y. or ZIV, Inc. were directed or controlled by either of the [25] plaintiffs.

Viewing the circumstances in their entirety, including the parent-subsidiary relationship, the limited inter-locking directorates, and the periodic reports as to operations, we conclude that HN10[] defendants have failed to establish by a fair preponderance of the evidence the degree of dominion and control required to disregard the separate corporate entities. See Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Philco Corp., 148 F. Supp. 541 (E.D.N.Y. 1957).

For the foregoing reasons it is unnecessary to determine whether the parties engaged in any of the alleged violations of the antitrust laws. The antitrust misuse defense is stricken and judgment may be entered in favor of plaintiffs in accordance with the Court's decision filed on November 7, 1968.

The foregoing shall, in accordance with Rule 52(a), F.R.C.P., constitute the findings of fact and conclusions of law supplementing the separate findings of fact filed with respect to the antitrust misuse defense.

Settle order.

Findings of Fact with Respect to Antitrust Misuse Defense

1. The various "Zeiss" and "Zeiss Ikon" trademarks are world-renowned and valuable, and identify various scientific instruments and optical goods as manufactured [26] by plaintiffs according to their traditional high quality standards.

2. Neither plaintiffs nor Carl Zeiss, Inc. (Zeiss, N.Y.) nor Zeiss Ikon Voigtlaender of America, Inc. (ZIV, Inc.) used or are using the "Zeiss" or "Zeiss Ikon" trademarks to violate the antitrust laws in the United States.

3. There is no evidence of any agreement or any communication or discussion between Zeiss, N.Y. or ZIV, Inc. and any of their respective dealers relating in any way to the use of any of the "Zeiss" or "Zeiss Ikon" trademarks. The evidence is that references in such communications and discussions to "Zeiss" instruments and "Zeiss Ikon" products were to products manufactured by plaintiffs and not to any of the "Zeiss" or "Zeiss Ikon" trademarks.

4. While the "Zeiss" and "Zeiss Ikon" trademarks are world-renowned and valuable trademarks, there is a failure to establish by a fair preponderance of the evidence that they were used by either of the plaintiffs, or by Zeiss, N.Y. or ZIV, Inc., as a means of coercing American dealers to engage in any anticompetitive activities.

5. Dealers have accepted dealerships from Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc. because they wish to have the opportunity to sell products [27] manufactured by plaintiffs.

6. The sales of defendant Ercona for the year 1956 were approximately $149,000; in 1955 Ercona was permitted to use the trademarks, and sales were approximately $108,000. After 1956 the figures were $89,000 in 1957; $79,000 in 1958; $135,000 in 1959; $143,000 in 1960; $129,000 in 1961. In the years prior to 1956 there were considerable fluctuations in the volume of sales by Ercona.

7. During the period from approximately 1956 to 1959 defendants sold goods in the United States manufactured by V.E.B. Carl Zeiss Jena from which the Zeiss trademarks had been obliterated and on which only the symbol "CZJ" appeared. Prior to 1956 and after 1959 instruments bearing the Zeiss trademarks were sold by Ercona in the United States. A comparison of Ercona's volume of sales of such instruments for the entire period fails to show any causal connection between the Zeiss trademarks and Ercona's sales volume. The annual sales volume fluctuated up and down from year to year, revealing that two of the years (1956, 1959) in which the marks were obliterated produced a greater annual volume than five of the years (1952-1955 and 1961) in which the marks were on the instruments.

[28] 8. Neither Zeiss, N.Y. nor ZIV, Inc. has offered to sell unmarked instruments to dealers who refuse to enter into a dealership agreement, or offered to sell instruments bearing the Zeiss trademarks on one basis and untrademarked goods on another.

9.After appraising the testimony of two dealers (Rosenberg and Watson) with respect to the significance of Zeiss trademarks in the sale of Zeiss-manufactured instruments, and appraising their demeanor, the Court finds itself unable to extend any weight to their testimony as probative on the issue of alleged antitrust misuse of the Zeiss trademarks. Rosenberg, the operator of a small curiosity shop dealing almost entirely (98%) in used merchandise consisting principally of art, paintings and bric-a-brac, never has been a Zeiss dealer and his testimony with respect to Zeiss trademarks is rejected as weightless and unconvincing. Watson, a dealer in Zeiss-manufactured instruments, testified that he regarded himself as a poor witness with respect to what the Zeiss trademarks meant to others; that while he would not purchase Zeiss instruments without trademarks on them he had never been offered such instruments; and that he would be willing [29] to sell instruments bearing the legend or label "Manufactured by Carl Zeiss Germany" without a Zeiss trademark. At no time did any representative of plaintiffs or Zeiss, N.Y. or ZIV, Inc. ever discuss the Zeiss trademarks with him.

10. Federal government agencies on occasions have made invitations to bid specifying "Zeiss" instruments "or equivalent" and describing the instruments sought. There is no evidence that such specifications could be filled solely by instruments bearing any of the Zeiss trademarks which are the subject of this action.

11. Neither of the plaintiffs was ever a party to any agreement with defendant V.E.B. or anyone else whereby the Zeiss or Zeiss Ikon trademarks in the United States would be licensed as part of any cartel dividing the world market for Zeiss products. Although, as the Court has already found (see Findings Nos. 375-383) the Jena and Heidenheim gentlemen communicated in 1951 with respect to a possible licensing agreement and the Jena gentlemen during 1952 until sometime in 1953 tacitly indicated the possibility of reaching such a license agreement, no such arrangement was ever consummated. (Finding No. 383 and Decision of Nov. 7, 1968, p. [30] 144) In any event, as the Court has already found (see Decision pp. 136-137), § 5(b) of the Trading with the Enemy Act would have rendered any such license ineffective.

12. Plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung owns 100% of the shares of Zeiss, N.Y., a New York corporation. None of the current officers of Zeiss, N.Y. is presently an officer or employee of plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung. Of the five directors of Zeiss, N.Y., one, Dr. Kuehn, Chairman of the Board, is a member of the Board of Management of the plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung and general manager in charge of sales for that enterprise. Another director, Dr. Lehmann, is in charge of sales of scientific instruments for plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung. Another director and the president of Zeiss, N.Y., Mr. Kessler, was employed by plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung from 1953 until 1962 when he came to New York. Dr. Skoludek, a director and executive vice-president of Zeiss, N.Y., was in charge of sales at Carl Zeiss Cologne before assuming his duties in New York in 1965.

13. Zeiss, N.Y. is the sold authorized importer and distributor in the United States of all scientific instruments manufactured and sold for export to the United [31] States by the plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung, except for geodetic instruments and spectacle lenses bearing the Zeiss trademarks which are distributed in the United States by Keuffel & Esser and Transcontinental Corp., respectively, American companies in which neither Zeiss, N.Y. nor plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung has any interest. It purchases goods for its own account from plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung at the same prices at which said plaintiff offers such goods for sale to its other distributors in Germany and elsewhere, including distributors who are not affiliated with said plaintiff, and resells such goods to dealers and other purchasers in the United States.

14. Zeiss, N.Y. distributes goods other than those manufactured by plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung, including spectrophotometers manufactured by RSV, a German firm, bearing the trademark "RSV", and in the past has also sold goods manufactured by other firms bearing trademarks other than the "Zeiss" trademarks.

15. Plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung acquired a majority of the shares of Voigtlaender A.G., a German camera manufacturer, in 1956. Thus both Voigtlaender A.G. and plaintiff Zeiss Ikon A.G. were subsidiaries of plaintiff [32] Carl Zeiss Stiftung in October 1965, when Zeiss Ikon Voigtlaender Vertriebsgesell-schaft, M.b.H., was organized in Germany for the joint marketing of Zeiss Ikon and Voigtlaender photographic equipment, and when Zeiss Ikon Voigtlaender of America, Inc. was organized to engage in such marketing in the United States.

16. ZIV, Inc. is a New York corporation, the stock of which is owned as follows: 80% by Zeiss, N.Y., 10% by plaintiff Zeiss Ikon A. G., and 10% by Voigtlaender A. G. None of the officers or directors of ZIV, Inc. is an officer or director of either of the plaintiffs, except that Dr. Goessler, a member of the board of directors of ZIV, Inc., is an officer of plaintiff Zeiss Ikon, and another member, Mr. Kessler, is the president of Zeiss, N.Y. The president of ZIV, Inc., who is also a director, Mr. Peerschke, was an officer of Zeiss, N.Y. before he became president of ZIV, Inc. Mr. Breford, the vice-president of ZIV, Inc., was likewise a Zeiss, N.Y. officer before he assumed the vice-presidency of ZIV, Inc.

17. ZIV, Inc. purchases cameras and other photographic equipment from Zeiss Ikon Voigtlaender of Germany for its own account and resells such products to its dealers [33] in the United States.

18. Both Zeiss, N.Y. and ZIV, Inc., respectively, themselves:

(a) pay the salaries of all their employees;

(b) keep their own separate books and records at their offices in New York;

(c) prepare their own financial statements and tax returns separate and apart from those of plaintiffs;

(d) pay their own operating expenses;

(e) have their own pension plans and health insurance plans for the benefit of their employees, underwritten by an American insurance company; and

(f) have their own bank accounts with banks in the City of New York and from time to time obtain loans from such banks for the financing of their businesses.

19. Neither Zeiss, N.Y. nor ZIV, Inc.:

(a) has received any loans from either of the plaintiffs; or

(b) has consulted with either of the plaintiffs or with Zeiss Ikon Voigtlaender of Germany prior to appointing dealers, terminating dealers, establishing prices, determining discounts or bidding on public contracts in the United States.

20. Neither of the plaintiffs has any office in the United States.

21. Dr. Kuehn, who is Chairman of the Board of Directors of Zeiss, N.Y. and a member of the Board of Management of plaintiff Carl [34] Zeiss Stiftung, maintains no office in the United States and visits the United States approximately once a year.

22. Dr. Kuehn, as Chairman of the Board of Directors of Zeiss, N.Y. and a representative of its sole shareholder, Carl Zeiss Stiftung, has from time to time set general policies for the management of Zeiss, N.Y., but has not exercised direction or control over its competitive practices, sales prices, or distribution activities.

23. Zeiss, N.Y. has made some reports to plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung with respect to the market conditions in the United States for Zeiss instruments. Each month Zeiss, N.Y. sends financial statements to the Carl Zeiss Stiftung, and Zeiss, N.Y. has made annual reports to plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung which contained information about competitors' instruments and the United States market. Zeiss, N.Y. also sends copies of its price lists to plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung.

24. The president of Zeiss, N.Y. visits Oberkochen approximately twice a year and there discusses with plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung's employees the general market situation in the United States. Other officers and key employees of Zeiss, N.Y. also travel to Germany and representatives [35] of plaintiff Carl Zeiss Stiftung likewise periodically visit Zeiss, N.Y.

25. ZIV, Inc. furnishes statements of its financial condition to Zeiss Ikon A.G. and Voigtlaender A.G. monthly at the plant. These monthly reports contain information about conditions in the United States market, including the competition and the prices of competing goods.

26.There were, during 1965, discussions between representatives of ZIV, Inc. and a Mr. Ellenbogen of Wall Street Camera with respect to the advertisement of Zeiss Ikon cameras by Wall Street Camera at a price below the retail price suggested by ZIV, Inc. No specific reference to the Zeiss trademarks were made during these discussions, but Mr. Ellenbogen was advised that it was thought that his advertising impaired the good will of Zeiss Ikon cameras. Although Wall Street Camera has upon occasion since 1965 advertised Zeiss Ikon cameras at less than the suggested retail prices, it has continued to be supplied with its requirements of Zeiss Ikon cameras by ZIV, Inc. ZIV, Inc. instituted a fair trade policy in New York in May 1965.

27. ZIV, Inc. has reported to Zeiss Ikon A.G. that Zeiss Ikon trademarked cameras have been imported into [36] the United States by unauthorized importers and sold here by dealers at prices below the suggested resale prices published by ZIV, Inc.; and ZIV, Inc. has requested Zeiss Ikon A. G.'s aid in cutting off German distributors who sell to such unauthorized importers.

End of Document

Attorney-General of New York v. Lundy

Supreme Court of New York, Special Term, Albany County

April 3, 1969

No Number in Original

Reporter
59 Misc. 2d 436 *; 299 N.Y.S.2d 30 ; 1969 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 1661 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,905

In the Matter of Attorney-General of the State of New York, Petitioner, v. James A. Lundy et al., Constituting the Public Service Commission of the State of New York, et al., Respondents carriers, Interstate, motor carrier, transportation, associations, combinations, anti trust law, regulation, antitrust, purposes, tariffs, public interest, instant matter, consolidation, commodities, effectuate, membership, evidences, annulled, effects, exempt

Core Terms

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes

[*1] Carriers -- motor carriers of property -- Public Service Commission properly approved tariffs of membership corporation composed of motor common carriers of dairy products (Public Service Law, § 63-cc, subd. 1; General Business Law, § 340); review petition by Attorney-General dismissed.

The Public Service Commission, acting within its specialized field of knowledge, properly made an order approving the by-laws and tariffs of the Tank Carriers Conference, Inc., which is a membership corporation composed of motor common carriers of dairy products (Public Service Law, § 63-cc, subd. 1; cf. U. S. Code, tit. 49, § 5b). The commission's determination properly contained qualifications and restrictions in accordance with the purposes of the Donnelly Antitrust Act (General Business Law, § 340). The Attorney-General's petition seeking to annul the commission's determination (CPLR, art. 78) is dismissed.

Counsel: Louis J. Lefkowitz, Attorney-General, petitioner in person, and Samuel A. Hirshowitz, First Assistant Attorney-General, for petitioner.

Kent H. Brown for Public Service Commission, respondent.

Brodsky, Linett & Altman (David Brodsky of counsel), for [2] Tank Carriers Conference, Inc.

Judges: De Forest C. Pitt, J.

Opinion by: PITT

Opinion

[*436] [31] By this article 78 proceeding the Attorney-General of the State of New York is challenging and seeking the annulment of an order and determination of the respondent, Public Service Commission, wherein approval was given to the by-laws of the Tank Carriers Conference, Inc., under subdivision 1 of section 63-cc of the Public Service Law.

Tank Carriers Conference, Inc., is a nonprofit membership corporation whose members are common carriers of property and whose principal purpose is the preparation and publication of tariffs for motor carriers in commodities in bulk of dairy and related products. It is the position of the Attorney-General that the commission's determination in this matter should be annulled for the reason that the same was based upon a showing of public benefit which was wholly insufficient to overcome the policy against restraints of competition and monopoly reflected [32] and defined in the Donnelly Antitrust Act (General Business Law, § 340).

[*437] While the proceeding before this court does not, of course, directly attack section 63-cc of the Public Service [3] Law, an examination of the same and of its purpose and effects will be helpful in the assessment of the issues of arbitrariness and illegality, which are raised concerning the subject determination. The trucking industry is regulated both Federally and on our State level for the reason that it is found that the transportation systems of our Nation and State are of vital public interest. Accordingly, the Federal Motor Carrier Act was first enacted subjecting interstate motor carriers of property to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Under this act, and under such regulation, groups of carriers combined into associations whose main function was to file and maintain tariffs prescribing rates and charges for the transportation of commodities. These tariffs so filed were binding upon the membership of the associations unless a particular member terminated his participation and filed independently. Thus, the Interstate Commerce Commission was relieved of the burden of accommodating separate filings. Lest these combinations be violative of the Sherman Antitrust Law in that they amounted to combinations in restraint of trade, the Congress in 1948 enacted the Reed-Bullwinkle [4] amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act (U. S. Code, tit. 49, § 5b). This amendment specifically authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve agreements among carriers providing certain standards were maintained. Notably, any such agreement was to contain the right of independent action on behalf of a carrier.

Paralleling the above, New York State enacted its Motor Carrier Act in 1938 and in 1964 amended the same by the addition of section 63-cc, which amendment and section for all present purposes may be termed a duplicate of the Federal Reed-Bullwinkle Act.

Turning our attention to the instant matter, the Attorney-General maintains that the antitrust laws are not inapplicable to the transportation industry, and notes McLean Trucking Co. v. United States (321 U.S. 67, 87) wherein the court stated: "The Commission must estimate the scope and appraise the effects of the curtailment of competition which will result from the proposed consolidation and consider them along with the advantages of improved service, safer operation, lower costs, etc., to determine whether the consolidation will assist in effectuating the over-all transportation policy".

This point, [5] however, is not met in argument by the respondent, who emphasizes that section 63-cc does not exempt associations like the subject one from the full impact of the antitrust [*438] laws. Indeed, it is noted by [33] the respondent that if such associations are used ofr unlawful purposes they are not protected from the Donnelly Act with respect to such activities. It is then only approved combinations existing for proper purposes that are exempted.

It is additionally noted that the Supreme Court has rejected the contention that the legislative action is determinative of the question of intrusion upon antitrust policy. (Federal Maritime Comm. v. Svenska Amerika Linien, 390 U.S. 238.) The effect of this case would appear to be controlled by the respondent's above-noted position.

Directing attention to the instant matter, this court feels that the determination of the respondent was made in keeping with the legislative intent and well within its delegated authority. The qualifying and restrictive language of the respondent's determination not only evidences its awareness of this State's antitrust policy, but clearly also evidences its efforts to effectuate the same.

[*6] Upon review of the matter the court finds that the determination of the respondent was, therefore, not illegal, being not in violation of law and not arbitrary or capricious, being based upon adequate factual findings. This court will not presume to interfere with the judgment of the respondent in its specialized field of knowledge, thereby upsetting its determination of the existence of the prerequisite public interest. Neither will this court be persuaded to perform an act of "judicial legislation" in its examination and evaluation of the subject statute. Accordingly, and for the reasons above noted, the respondent may submit judgment dismissing the petition.

Water Servs. v. Tesco Chems. Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

April 18, 1969

No. 25578

Reporter

410 F.2d 163 *; 1969 U.S. App. LEXIS 12750 ; 162 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 321 ***

WATER SERVICES, INC. and Farris Chemical Company, Appellants, v. TESCO CHEMICALS, INC., et al., Appellees

Subsequent History: [1] Rehearing Denied July 7, 1969.

Core Terms

trade secret, covenant, patent, chemicals, competitor, compete, district court, secret, confidential information, automated, hired, duplicate, suppliers, barbecue, cases, competitive advantage, former employer, composition, contracts, customers, Bearings, restrictive covenant, indirectly, novelty, parties, courts, meats, sales

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Traditional common-law restraints fall into two classes: (1) restraints "ancillary" to valid underlying contracts, including employment contracts, and contracts for the sale of a business; (2) restraints not "ancillary" to valid underlying contracts, but typically undertaken to divide territory or markets, limit production, fix prices, or buy out potential competitors. "Non-ancillary" restraints are usually the subject of antitrust action under the Sherman Act while "ancillary" restraints are usually left to state law.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN2[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Under Georgia law, covenants not to compete are upheld if they are limited as to time and territory and definite as to the nature, kind, and character of the activities prohibited. Georgia, like most states, has a public policy prohibiting contracts in "general restraint of trade." Ga. Code 1933, § 20-504. But, while public policy forbids any agreement which unreasonably restrains a person from exercising his trade or business, it is equally true that public policy also requires that the freedom of persons to enter into contracts shall not be lightly interfered with.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN3[] Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition, Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

If, considered with reference to the situation, business, and objects of the parties, and in light of all the surrounding circumstances a restraint on competition contracted for appears to have been for a just and honest purpose, for the protection of the legitimate interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed, reasonable as between them, and not specially injurious to the public, the restraint will be held valid.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Customer Lists

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Business Information

HN4[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

In determining whether a restraint is reasonable, two factors are important. First, is the employer trying to protect confidential information relating to the business, such as a trade secret, method of operation, sources of suppliers, and names of customers? Such confidential business information may or may not rise to the level of a trade secret. Second, is the restraint reasonably related to the protection of the confidential information? When these factors are present, Georgia courts approve the covenant not to compete even when the covenant defines the "nature" of the activities only in the broad language of serving a competing employer "in any capacity."

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN5[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

See Ga. Code Ann. § 6-1611.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN6[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

Where there is a conflict existing in the decisions of the Supreme Court of Georgia, the correct rule must be determined from the earliest decisions on the subject, and unless overruled, they are controlling.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Labor & Employment Law > Employment Relationships > Employment Contracts > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Contracts > Conditions & Terms > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Contract > Implied Contracts

HN7[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Although covenants not to compete are proper to protect trade secrets, they may also be valid simply to prevent a former employee's using his expertise against his former employer. Conversely, even without an express restrictive covenant, one of the implied terms of a contract of employment is that the employee will not disclose a trade secret learned during his employment, to a competitor of his former employer.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Elements of Misappropriation > Confidentiality

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Breach of Confidence > Confidential Relationships

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > General Overview

HN8[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

An action for breach of a covenant not to compete and an action for misappropriation of a trade secret by breach of a confidential relationship are independent actions. They are related, however, where an employer has a legitimate interest in protecting a trade secret by means of a restrictive covenant. And the existence of a trade secret bears on the reasonableness of the restraints imposed by the covenant.

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Continuous Use

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Business Use

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Customer Lists

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Machines

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Manufacturing Processes

HN9[] Trade Secret Determination Factors, Continuous Use

A trade secret may consist of any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives him an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know or use it. It may be a formula for a chemical compound, a process of manufacturing, treating or preserving materials, a pattern for a machine or other device, or a list of customers. A trade secret is a process or device for continuous use in the operation of the business. Generally, it relates to the formula for the production of an article. It may, however, relate to the sale of goods or to other operations in the business, such as a code for determining discounts, rebates or other concessions in a price list or catalogue, or a list of specialized customers, or a method of bookkeeping or other office management.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

HN10[] Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition, Trade Secrets

The generally accepted requirements for protection of a trade secret are that the parties view the process or device as a secret and that the secret be revealed in confidence.

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Novelty

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > Elements

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Prior Art

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Patent Law

Trade Secrets Law > Misappropriation Actions > Independent Development

HN11[] Trade Secret Determination Factors, Novelty

A trade secret may be a device or process which is patentable; but it need not be that. It may be a device or process which is clearly anticipated in the prior art or one which is merely a mechanical improvement that a good mechanic can make. Novelty and invention are not requisite for a trade secret as they are for patentability. These requirements are essential to patentability because a patent protects against unlicensed use of the patented device or process even by one who discovers it properly through independent research. The patent monopoly is a reward to the inventor. But such is not the case with a trade secret. Its protection is not based on a policy of rewarding or otherwise encouraging the development of secret processes or devices. The protection is merely against breach of faith and reprehensible means of learning another's secret. For this limited protection it is not appropriate to require also the kind of novelty and invention which is a requisite of patentability.

Trade Secrets Law > Protected Information > Combinations & Compilations

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Competitive Advantage

Trade Secrets Law > Trade Secret Determination Factors > Ready Availability

HN12[] Protected Information, Combinations & Compilations

A trade secret can exist in a combination of characteristics and components, each of which, by itself, is in the public domain, but the unified process, design and operation of which in unique combination, affords a competitive advantage and is a protectable secret.

Judges: Wisdom and Ainsworth, Circuit Judges, and Johnson, District Judge.

Opinion by: WISDOM

Opinion

[*322] [*164] WISDOM, Circuit Judge:

Clyde A. Farris developed the first successful, fully automatic system for purifying water for industrial purposes. He sold this system through Water Services, Inc. and Farris Chemical Company under the name "TREAT-A-MATIC". [1]

This diversity case involves the validity of the defendant Philip S. Glad's covenant not to compete against his former employer, Farris Chemical Company. Contrary to the district court's holding, we hold that under Georgia law the covenant was a reasonable restraint. [2] We hold also that the defendants, Glad and his present employer, Tesco Chemicals, Inc., misappropriated Farris's trade secrets: Glad breached his confidential relationship with Farris by disclosing to Tesco the design and composition of the TREAT-A-MATIC system and the identity of the suppliers of the components Farris used in producing the TREAT-A-MATIC. Glad will not be allowed to bite the hand that fed him his expertise.

* * *

Since 1953 Farris has engaged in the business of supplying chemicals and equipment for the treatment of water circulated through boilers and large air conditioning systems such as are found in office buildings. The purpose of the treatment is to maintain this water in as near a pure form as possible to minimize injury to the circulating pipes, storage tanks, and other parts of the heating or cooling system caused by corrosion, scale, and algae, wasting as small an amount of water as possible.

---

[1] The suit was originally filed in the name of Water Services, Inc. The Farris Chemical Company is the manufacturing subsidiary of Water Services, Inc. Clyde A. Farris, Jr. organized and is president of both corporations. By agreement, the subsidiary was added as a party plaintiff at trial. For convenience, in this opinion we regard the two companies as one.

The water purification industry is highly competitive. There are between 100 and 150 companies in the business in the southeastern area of the country, with 20 to 25 in Atlanta alone. In this industry, as in many others, the increase in labor costs has accentuated [3] the demand for automation.

[*165] Farris Chemical has its headquarters in Knoxville, Tennessee, but employs nine or ten field engineers for the southeastern area, one of whom is responsible for sales and services in the State of Georgia. Farris Chemical has had a substantial growth and now has some 25 employees in management, sales, and the mixing or producing of chemicals sold to the trade. The district court found that the company's success is attributable to the ingenuity, industry, and drive of Clyde Farris, president and founder of the company.

The evaporation of water in air conditioning leaves damaging solids in the system. Until 1960, the "bleeding" of these damaging solids, the testing of acidity and alkalinity by pH content, and the mixture of control chemicals had to be done manually with inferior measuring devices. Various companies experimented with automatic devices to perform these functions, but the first models were expensive and required considerable manpower. In 1960, after four years of trial-and-error experimentation with pumps, timers, and electronic devices, and the expenditure of $18,000 for materials, Farris perfected the TREAT-A-MATIC system.

The [4] district court described the system as made of two basic units: "one has a 30-minute timing device at 15 second intervals with a low volume pump for the injection of chemicals direct from shipping containers on the 'rust and scale side'; the other has a 24-hour timer with a skipper wheel up to 12 days and high volume pump for the injection of chemicals direct from shipping containers on the 'algae side'. The system is activated by a conductivity device which measures the pH factor for automatic bleeding. All of the devices, together with the electrical control box (which must be specially wired to turn off when the air conditioning system is not in use) are attractively mounted on a single panel board as the TREAT-A-MATIC system."

Farris did not patent the TREAT-A-MATIC: All of the components of the system were available on the open market. The district court found:

> "Its originality lies in the arrangement of the devices in combination and the knowledge of the supply source of the component parts. The functions performed were being performed [323] by similar devices in the trade prior to TREAT-A-MATIC, but not in combination and not in as easy and incumbersome a manner.
>
> To capture [5] the chemical sales where the highest profit lies, the TREAT-A-MATIC has been a successful tool. Being fully automated, it appeals to the industry. In addition, by furnishing it on a sale, lease-purchase, or contract basis (wherein the system plus chemicals are furnished for a stated time), Farris has been able to obtain the more lucrative chemical business from a wide range of customers. As stated at trial, Farris undoubtedly 'built a better mouse-trap' and beat the competition to the market place with it."

Farris protected the composition of the TREAT-A-MATIC system by concealing the identity of the components and their suppliers. [2] The company maintained rigid internal security, and required each employee to sign a noncompetition covenant as a condition of employment.

Tesco Chemicals is a direct competitor of [6] Farris. At least as early as April of 1962, Tesco Chemicals, Inc. realized the absolute necessity for automated equipment in order to survive. Tesco began in the business of swimming pool treatment. It hired Mr. Frank Parker to establish and develop an Industrial Division. Parker immediately began to work on automating, but in late 1965 he was writing to component suppliers for any [*166] information they could give on equipment "packages", despite having had a TREAT-A-MATIC system in the Tesco laboratory for detailed inspection and disassembly in early 1965.

In 1963, Farris hired Philip Glad as a field engineer and sales representative. At the time, Farris stressed the highly competitive nature of the industry and the need for tight secrecy on all information concerning equipment, chemicals, and prices. Glad signed a contract containing a two-year non-competition provision covering the northern third of Georgia and a few towns on the Tennessee side of the line. Despite Glad's formal education in electrical engineering, the great bulk of his present expertise was obtained from his experience and training with Farris (for 3 months under close supervision, then seminars three [7] or four times a year). Farris gave Glad the names of the component suppliers, the wiring method, the design detail, and other confidential information. Indeed, he became privy to all construction and sales information concerning the TREAT-A-MATIC system.

---

[2] Farris concealed the identity of the components by replacing the label of the original manufacturer with a Farris Chemical label, and by replacing the standard colors with other colors.

After two years with Farris, Glad telephoned Parker and arranged to meet with him to discuss the possibility of Tesco's employing him. [3] By that time Parker had experimented with various components in an attempt to create an automated system similar to TREAT-A-MATIC but had met with no success. He had lost several sales for lack of such a system. Parker had seen TREAT-A-MATIC installations at the sites of customers and, as noted earlier, on at least one occasion had disassembled a TREAT-A-MATIC unit. Tesco hired Glad. The district court found that the "hiring of Glad was with the specific intent of acquiring for Tesco the skill and knowledge necessary to create a fully automated system similar to the TREAT-A-MATIC". Glad began immediately to work on reproducing for Tesco the TESCOMATIC system, based on his knowledge of the TREAT-A-MATIC system. The district court commented:

> The similarity between the two systems is striking. [8] Without going into detail, suffice it to say that they are as near identical as possible for Parker and Glad to construct. The components are the same, with the exception of the conductivity device (the source of which apparently was unknown to Glad) and minor changes in the electrical terminal strip and service switch. The grouping and panel mounting are practically the same."

On March 1, 1967, Water Services and Farris brought this suit against Tesco and Glad, asking for injunctive relief and damages. The district court, sitting without a jury, entered judgment in favor of the defendants. We reverse and remand.

I.

Philip Glad, like [9] all other Farris employees, signed the following covenant:

> It is agreed and understood that for a period of two (2) years after the termination of this contract, regardless of the reason of cause of such termination or cancellation, the Employee will not engage, either directly or indirectly, on his own account or as [324] agent, servant or employee of any person, firm or corporation, in any business which could reasonably be considered to be in competition with Water Services, Inc., in any territory in which he has performed services under this contract.

The threshold question is whether this covenant is reasonable and therefore enforcible under Georgia law. The parties agree that Georgia law controls the construction [*167] of the covenant. [4] See The Day Companies v. Patat, 5 Cir. 1968, 403 F.2d 792; Budget Rent-A-Car Corp. v. Fein, 5 Cir. 1965, 342 F.2d 509.

[10] As the district court observed, "The problem of noncompeting covenants in Georgia is one which has caused great difficulty for the courts and practitioners over a long period of time". HN2[] Under Georgia law, covenants not to compete are upheld if they are limited as to time and territory and definite as to the nature, kind, and character of the activities prohibited. Bennett v. Georgia Indus. Catering Co., 1966, 222 Ga. 127, 149 S.E.2d

---

[3] Glad suffers from leg "trouble" and other ailments. His work entailed climbing on tanks and other parts of an industrial system. The district court found that partly because of these ailments and partly because of "apparent disenchantment between him and Farris, early in 1966 Glad began to look around for other employment, which would provide him an inside job".

[4] HN1[] Traditional common-law restraints fall into two classes: (1) restraints "ancillary" to valid underlying contracts, including employment contracts, and contracts for the sale of a business; (2) restraints not "ancillary" to valid underlying contracts, but typically undertaken to divide territory or markets, limit production, fix prices, or buy out potential competitors. "Non-ancillary" restraints are usually the subject of antitrust action under the Sherman Act, while "ancillary" restraints are usually left to state law. See United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 6 Cir. 1898, 85 F. 271, 282-283, 46 L.R.A. 122, aff'd, 175 U.S. 211, 20 S. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136 (1899); Att'y Gen. Nat'l Comm. Antitrust Rep. 5-12 (1955); Blake, Employee Agreements Not to Compete, 73 Harv.L.Rev. 625, 626-28 (1960); 6A Corbin, Contracts § 1401 (1962).

81; Shirk v. Loftis Bros., 1918, 148 Ga. 500, 97 S.E. 66; Rakestraw v. Lanier, 1898, 104 Ga. 188, 30 S.E. 735. Georgia, like most states, has a public policy prohibiting contracts in "general restraint of trade". See Georgia Code § 20-504. But, "While public policy forbids any agreement which unreasonably restrains a person from exercising his trade or business, it is equally true that public policy also requires that the freedom of persons to enter into contracts shall not be lightly interfered with". Rakestraw v. Lanier, 1898, 104 Ga. 188, 30 S.E. 735.

It is undisputed that Tesco hired Glad within the [11] prohibited two-year period and that Tesco competes with Water Services. The district court held that the covenant here was reasonable as to "time" and "territory" but that it was invalid and unenforceable on the ground that the provision was "unreasonably indefinite" as to "the nature, kind and character of the activities prohibited by the contract". It "contemplates", the court said, "any activity for any competitor whether it relates to the functions and duties of the original employment or not, whether as a truck-driver, bookkeeper, custodian or as an executive or salesman".

Our review of the Georgia law, including consideration of Baxley v. Black, 1968, 224 Ga. 456, 162 S.E.2d 389, decided after the district court rendered its decision in the instant case, compels us to conclude that today Georgia courts would uphold the covenant as a reasonable restraint.

In Rakestraw v. Lanier, 1898, 104 Ga. 188, 30 S.E. 735, still a leading case, the State Supreme Court defined the test for determining the reasonableness of the restraints on activities:

> HN3[] If, considered [12] with reference to the situation, business, and objects of the parties, and in light of all the surrounding circumstances * * * the restraint contracted for appears to have been for a just and honest purpose, for the protection of the legitimate interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed, reasonable as between them, and not specially injurious to the public, the restraint will be held valid.

The contract in Rakestraw involved the sale of a medical partnership. Georgia courts, however, have applied the Rakestraw test to determine the reasonableness of contracts ancillary to employment contracts. See Baxley v. Black, 1968, 224 Ga. 456, 162 S.E.2d 389. The Restatement of Contracts applies a similar test to both types of ancillary restraints. Restatement of Contracts § 513-15 (1932); cf. Blake, Employee Agreements Not To Compete, 73 Harv. L.Rev. 625, 648-49 (1960).

[*168] HN4[] In determining whether the restraint is reasonable two factors are important. First, is the employer trying to protect confidential information relating to the [13] business, such as a trade secret, method of operation, sources of suppliers, and names of customers? Such confidential business information may or may not rise to the level of a trade secret. Second, is the restraint reasonably related to the protection of the confidential information? See Restatement of Contracts §§ 515(a), 516; Blake, Employee Agreements Not To Compete, 73 Harv.L.Rev. 625 (1960). When these factors have been present, Georgia courts have approved the covenant not to compete even when the covenant defined the "nature" of the activities only in the broad language of serving [325] a competing employer "in any capacity". In Shirk v. Loftis Bros., 1918, 148 Ga. 500, 97 S.E. 66, 67, the Supreme Court of Georgia upheld a covenant restricting an employee from serving "in any relation or capacity whatsoever, in the line of business [of the employer]". In Shirk, the employee had become privy to confidential information and methods from the employer concerning repairs of jewelry, watches, and glasses -- information that might be considered as in domain of any person repairing jewelry, watches, and glasses. In Nelson v. Woods, 1949, 205 Ga. 295, 53 S.E.2d 227, [14] the Court upheld a covenant "not to directly or indirectly enter into any competitive 'do-nut' business". The purpose of this covenant was to prevent the employee from divulging the recipe used in baking "Krispy Kreme Do-Nuts". As in the instant case, the originality lay in the combination of readily available components. Similarly in Franco v. Fulton Bakery, Inc., 1940, 190 Ga. 298, 9 S.E.2d 240, the Court approved a covenant of an employee not to "be employed directly or indirectly * * * as an individual, partner, * * * employee, or in any relation or capacity" even though there was no danger or revelation of a secret process of baking. See also Aladdin, Inc. v. Krasnoff, 1958, 214 Ga. 519, 105 S.E.2d 730; Turner v. Robinson, 1959, 214 Ga. 729, 107 S.E.2d 648; Ogle v. Wright, 1939, 187 Ga. 749, 2 S.E.2d 72.

Tesco and Glad rely principally on Mason, etc. v. Jablin, 1964, 220 Ga. 344, 138 S.E.2d 660; Stein Steel & Supply Co. v. Tucker, 1964, 219 Ga. 844, 136 S.E.2d 355, and Dixie Bearings, Inc. v. Walker, 1963, 219 Ga. 353, 133 S.E.2d 338. These cases, however, are distinguishable or [15] not controlling precedent under the Georgia "full-bench rule". This is a codified rule of stare decisis: a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Georgia may be overruled only by a unanimous decision. [5] In Dixie Bearings, a covenant prohibited the employee from engaging in or becoming associated with any competitive business. The Court held that the agreement was unreasonable because of "the absolute prohibition of the employee's working in any capacity for a competitor in positions unrelated to trade secrets or [*169] customers" -- for example, as a truck driver or night watchman. Chief Justice Duckworth specially concurred in Dixie Bearings, and therefore the decision is not binding under the "full-bench rule". Compare the language of the district court's conclusions in the case. In Stein Steel, the facts were similar to those in Dixie Bearings. With three justices dissenting, the court held that the covenant was "larger than were necessary for the protection of the promisee". The dissenting justices argued that "the nature of employment is not the controlling factor, since [the employee] might as well make use of sales information, trade secrets, [16] etc., of his former employer in one position as in another". The dissenters noted that Dixie Bearings was "not binding", because of the special concurrence in that case. In Mason, the court held invalid a covenant forbidding the employee for five years from engaging in the business of manufacturing or selling candy as well as engaging in any fund raising activities similar to the fund raising activities of the employer. The court found that the restraint was unreasonably broad, in part because fund-raising activities were not reasonably related to protecting the former employer's candy business. In Taylor Freezer Sales Company v. Sweden Freezer Eastern Corp., 1968, 224 Ga. 160, 160 S.E.2d 356, the plaintiff alleged "no facts * * * to show that the defendant became familiar with any trade secrets or confidential information, other than a general knowledge of the plaintiff's business."

[17] The Georgia Supreme Court's most recent full-bench decision on the issue of covenants not to compete is Baxley v. Black, 1968, 224 Ga. 456, 162 S.E.2d 389. Justice Mobley, author of the opinion, wrote the dissenting opinion in Stein Steel. The court rejected the reasoning of Dixie Bearings and Stein Steel, both [326] cited and discussed in the briefs of the parties. The Court returned to the broad test of reasonableness in Rakestraw. The covenant in Baxley prohibited the employee, who had been hired as a cook from "directly or indirectly, engag[ing] in the preparation or sale of barbecued meats at any location within a radius of ten (10) miles of any of the locations of the employer". The defendant argued that the covenant should not bar the employee from later employment as a manager, because there is no trade secret involved in the making of a barbecue which is not known to the public generally and the position of manager is totally unrelated to preparing barbecued meats as a cook. The court rejected this argument:

> There is evidence that the appellees employed the appellant as a barbecue cook, that they trained him in their specialized method [18] of cooking, which the appellant admits he had never seen before, that they used special cuts of meat, a secret sauce, special type of operation with indoor pit, etc. The evidence shows further that the appellant has accepted employment as manager of a nearby, newly established, competing barbecue place, where he does some of the cooking, directs how the meats are served, and the operation of the place; and shows further that this new barbecue house was built similar in design to the Old Hickory Houses of the [5] Section 6-1611 of the Code of Georgia, which embodies the "full bench rule", provides in part: "* * * HN5[] Unanimous decisions rendered after [January 1, 1897] by a full bench of six shall not be overruled or materially modified except with the concurrence of six Justices, and then after argument had, in which the decision, by permission of the court, is expressly questioned and reviewed; and after such argument, the court in its decision shall state distinctly whether it affirms, reverses, or changes such decision." Thus, the only decisions which are controlling on the case at bar are the full bench decisions, which, until overruled or modified, have the force and effect of statutory law. Crown Laundry v. Burch, 205 Ga. 211, 212, 53 S.E.2d 116, 117 (1949) (full bench).

---

In Sowell v. Sowell, 1956, 212 Ga. 351, 353, 92 S.E.2d 524, 526, the Supreme Court of Georgia said: HN6[] "Where there is a conflict existing in the decisions of this court, the correct rule must be determined from the earliest decisions on the subject, and unless overruled, they are controlling." The Supreme Court of Georgia has taken judicial notice that its Justices now number seven, and the full bench statute is applied as if it required seven concurrences to constitute a full bench decision. Ga.Const.1945, § 2-3701; e.g., Mote v. Mote, 1958, 214 Ga. 134, 103 S.E.2d 565.

> appellees, and that in the operation it has duplicated many features of the Old Hickory House, making the operation very similar in practically all particulars. It is obvious that the appellant is violating the covenant in the contract.

A "business which could reasonably be considered to be in competition with Water Services" (the language of the covenant) is clearly a business involving the preparation and sale of a system for supplying and maintaining purified water for industrial purposes. Glad certainly understood it. And by any objective standard, the description was as definite as the language in Baxley "preparation and sale of barbecued meats". The covenants [19] in both cases prohibited the employee "either directly or indirectly", on his account or for another, competing with the employee. In both cases the physical features and the methods [*170] of operation of the new employer's "system" were substantially similar to those of the former employer. In both cases, the confidential information was developed as a result of the former employer's initiative and investment and was subject to misappropriation regardless of the employee's activities in his new position -- in Baxley as cook or manager, in the instant case as salesman or engineer.

In short, Glad possessed confidential information revealed to him by Farris concerning the composition of the TREAT-A-MATIC system. This system was not patented, but was nonetheless the industry's only fully automated, integrated system for controlling and supplying purified industrial water. Even though the system had been marketed for a number of years, competitors had been unable to duplicate it. As a result of this competitive advantage, Farris and Water Services had enjoyed substantial financial success. It was reasonable, therefore, for Farris and Water Services to attempt to preserve their [20] limited competitive advantage by keeping the composition of the TREAT-A-MATIC system secret through rigid internal security and elaborate concealment measures. Employee loyalty was especially important since knowledge of the suppliers of the components was a key to the system. In view of the nature of the interest sought to be protected and the competitive environment of the industry, the covenant not to compete meets the Rakestraw test. As stated in Baxley v. Black, the restraint "reasonably necessary to protect [a legitimate] interest of the [appellant] in whose favor it is imposed", was for a just and honest purpose, and would not be specially injurious to the public. 149 S.E.2d at 84.

In Part I of this opinion we concluded that the covenant is enforceable, under Georgia law, without discussing whether the interest Farris sought to protect rises to the level of a trade secret. In Part II of this opinion we hold that the design and composition of the TREAT-A-MATIC system (including the identity of suppliers of the components) add up to a protectible trade secret. The fact that Farris sought to protect a trade secret provides a compelling case for finding [21] that the restrictive covenant was reasonable.

II.

The district court took pains to point out that the equities were with Farris:

> In connection with this case, the moralities are completely with the plaintiff. Whatever he had, he transmitted to Glad as a trusted employee. Glad subsequently, albeit without any inducement by Tesco, conveyed the information to Tesco regarding the TREAT-A-MATIC. Tesco immediately copied the plaintiff's product through the use of this information. However, [327] the right to free copy is apparently not dependent upon honourable conduct. See Hampton v. Blair Mfg. Company, 8 Cir. 1967, 374 F.2d 969. Here, all of this was done in spite of a solemn contract attempting to prevent the same. However, the sine quanon of such an action is the existence of the trade secret itself. McGraw Edison Co. v. Central Transformer Corp., 8 Cir. 1962, 308 F.2d 70. 12 Milgrim, Business Organizations, § 7.07 (1). And this prerequisite is necessary regardless of the contract, and of any breach of confidence or not. 2 Callman, Unfair Competition and Trade Marks, § 53.3. In this respect, and in this respect only, the plaintiff's claims fail. [22]

No Georgia case goes so far as to say that the existence of a trade secret is the sine qua non of an action to enforce a restrictive covenant ancillary to an employment contract. HN7[] Although covenants not to compete are proper to protect trade secrets they may also be valid simply to prevent a former employee's using his expertise against his former employer. For example, see Baxley v. Black; Franco v. Fulton Bakery, Inc., 1940, 190 Ga. 298, 9 S.E.2d 240; Nelson v. Woods, 1949, 205 Ga. 295, 53 S.E.2d 227; cf. W. Walley, Inc. v. Saks & [*171] Co., 1943, 266 App.Div. 193, 41 N.Y.S.2d 739. Conversely, even without an express restrictive covenant, one of the implied terms of a contract of employment is that the employee will not disclose a trade secret learned during his employment, to a competitor of his former employer. But since it may be difficult to determine, as a matter of law, what is a trade secret, the covenant not to compete is a pragmatic solution to the problem of protecting confidential information. See Irvington Varnish & Insulator Co. v. Van Norde, 1946, 138 N.J.Eq. 99, 46 A.2d 201; [23] Kadis v. Britt, 1944, 224 N.C. 154, 29 S.E.2d 543, 152 A.L.R. 405; 2 Callman, Unfair Competition Trademarks and Monopolies § 64.4(b), at 641 (1968). Technological refinements in industrial espionage increase the employer's need for covenants not to compete.

HN8[] An action for breach of a covenant not to compete and an action for misappropriation of a trade secret by breach of a confidential relationship are independent actions. They are related here, however, because an employer has a legitimate interest in protecting a trade secret by means of a restrictive covenant. And the existence of a trade secret bears on the reasonableness of the restraints imposed by the covenant.

The Restatement of the Law of Torts (1939), § 757, Comment b defines a trade secret as follows:

> HN9[] "A trade secret may consist of any formula, pattern, device or compilation of information which is used in one's business, and which gives him an opportunity to obtain an advantage over competitors who do not know [24] or use it. It may be a formula for a chemical compound, a process of manufacturing, treating or preserving materials, a pattern for a machine or other device, or a list of customers. * * * A trade secret is a process or device for continuous use in the operation of the business. Generally it relates to the formula for the production of an article. It may, however, relate to the sale of goods or to other operations in the business, such as a code for determining discounts, rebates or other concessions in a price list or catalogue, or a list of specialized customers, or a method of bookkeeping or other office management."

See also 2 Callman, Unfair Competition and Trademarks, § 52.1.

The policy reasons for affording protection to these commercial intangibles are to prevent exploitation by reprehensible business methods and to encourage innovation. See Developments in the Law -- Competitive Torts, 77 Harv.L.Rev. 888, 947-948 (1964). If a trade secret is protected, the competitive advantage realized by the owner of the secret will enable him to recoup his development costs, hopefully before his competitors can "reverse-engineer" the product and duplicate [25] it.

The district court attached great weight to two 1964 Supreme Court cases, Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co., 376 U.S. 225, 84 S. Ct. 784, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661 and Compco Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting, Inc., 376 U.S. 234, 84 S. Ct. 779, 11 L. Ed. 2d 669. These decisions create a more "liberal right to copy" and raise questions as to the scope of protection a state may afford to federally unpatentable devices. Under the supremacy clause, a state cannot patent a device that is patentable under the federal patent statutes; federal patent laws have preempted the field. But Sears and Compco dealt with the right of a competitor to free copy a product on the open market by independent study. They are not applicable to a situation in which an employer hires an employee of a competitor to take advantage of the employee's expertise in reproducing a complicated system first developed by the former employer. Sears and Compco did not involve trade secrets. Three cases [328] have held them not to have displaced the law of trade secrets. Two of the three cases flatly disregarded Sears and Compco as inapposite to any issue in a trade secret case. Servo Corp. v. General Electric Co., 4 Cir. 1964, 337 F.2d 716, [26] cert. denied, 1966, 383 U.S. 934, 86 S. Ct. 1061, 15 L. Ed. 2d 851, reh. den. 1966, 384 U.S. 914, 86 S. Ct. 1333, 16 L. Ed. 2d 366; Schulenburg v. Signatrol, Inc., 33 Ill.2d 379, 212 N.E.2d 865, 868, [*172] (1965), cert. denied, 383 U.S. 959, 86 S. Ct. 1225, 16 L. Ed. 2d 302 (1966). Hampton v. Blair Mfg. Co., 8 Cir. 1967, 374 F.2d 969, applied Sears, not to deny trade secret status, but to limit the duration of the injunction.

A patent may be distinguished from a trade secret in that a patent is totally exclusionary for the period of time for which it is granted; there are necessarily substantial anticompetitive effects. An ordinary trade secret, however, is not totally exclusionary; it is protected only as long as competitors fail to duplicate it by legitimate, independent research. See F. Machlup, An Economic Review of the Patent System 33 (Study No. 15, Senate Subcomm. On Patents, Trademarks, and Copyrights of the Comm. on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., Comm. Print. 1958). The anticompetitive effects are relatively slight since the competitive advantage exists only for what is usually a short [27] period, either because the restrictive covenant, if there be one, is for a small number of years (here, only two years) or because a competitor, by reverse-engineering, may legitimately duplicate the device. This limited protection with its relatively slight anticompetitive effects is helpful to insure growth characteristic of innovative genius. See Doerfer, The Limits on Trade Secret Law Imposed by Federal Patent and Antitrust Supremacy, 80 Harv.L.Rev. 1432, 1447-56 (1967). We think that substantial policy considerations militate against construing Sears and Compco as preempting a state's right to protect a trade secret. See Winston Research Corp. v. Minnesota Min. & Mfg. Co., 9 Cir. 1965, 350 F.2d 134; Servo Corp. v. General Elec. Co., 4 Cir., 1964, 337 F.2d 716; Blazon, Inc. v. DeLuxe Game Corp., S.D.N.Y. 1965, 268 F. Supp. 416; Van Products Co. v. General Welding & Fabricating Co., 1965, 419 Pa. 248, 213 A.2d 769.

Georgia law follows the majority view and the Restatement rationale for protecting trade secrets on the ground of a confidential relationship. See Alexis, Inc. v. Werbell, 1953, 209 Ga. 665, 668, 75 S.E.2d 168, 171; [28] Stewart v. Hook, 1903, 118 Ga. 445, 45 S.E. 369, 63 L.R.A. 255. These decisions seem to establish a broad area of protection of trade secrets and suggest that a Georgia court would follow HN10[] the generally accepted requirements for protection of a trade secret. Basically, these requirements are that the parties view the process or device as a secret and that the secret be revealed in confidence. See Developments in the Law -- Competitive Torts, 77 Harv.L.Rev. 888, 949 (1964).

Tesco urges this Court to impose a requirement of novelty as a prerequisite to protection as a trade secret. The Restatement of Torts, § 759, Comment b states:

> HN11[] "A trade secret may be a device or process which is patentable; but it need not be that. It may be a device or process which is clearly anticipated in the prior art or one which is merely a mechanical improvement that a good mechanic can make. Novelty and invention are not requisite for a trade secret as they are for patentability. These requirements are essential to patentability because a patent protects against unlicensed [29] use of the patented device or process even by one who discovers it properly through independent research. The patent monopoly is a reward to the inventor. But such is not the case with a trade secret. Its protection is not based on a policy of rewarding or otherwise encouraging the development of secret processes or devices. The protection is merely against breach of faith and reprehensible means of learning another's secret. For this limited protection it is not appropriate to require also the kind of novelty and invention which is a requisite of patentability."

Some courts have adopted a requirement of novelty. [6] We make an Erie guess that a Georgia court would follow [*173] the majority view [7] and not require novelty.

[30] The district court found that the components were not developed by Farris, were available on the open market, and were ascertainable. It is clear that the theory of the Treat-A-Matic was not new to the industry. The court also found that the design was apparent from inspection, and that the system had been sold and advertised without [329] restriction. These findings are supported by the evidence. But these findings are not conclusive. The trade secret here was the application of known techniques and the assembly of available components to create the first successful system in the industry. In the trial judge's words, "no components had been brought together into one lightweight automated system until the perfection of the Treat-A-Matic". As the Second Circuit stated in Imperial Chemicals, Ltd. v. National Distillers & Chemical Corp., 2 Cir. 1965, 342 F.2d 737, 742, HN12[] "a trade secret can exist in a combination of characteristics and components, each of which, by itself, is in the public domain, but the unified process, design and operation of which in unique combination, affords [31] a competitive advantage and is a protectible secret". This characterization describes the TREAT-A-MATIC. The composition was unique and conferred a substantial competitive advantage on Farris. Indeed, the company enjoyed unparalleled financial success during the four years that competitors were unsuccessfully trying to duplicate the TREAT-A-MATIC.

---

[6] See, e.g., Sarkes Tarzian, Inc. v. Audio Devices, Inc., S.D.Cal.1958, 166 F. Supp. 250, 265-266.

[7] See, e.g., Sun Dial Corp. v. Rideout, 1954, 29 N.J.Super. 361, 102 A.2d 90, 92, citing Restatement of Torts, § 756 (1939); Developments in the Law -- Competitive Torts, 77 Harv.L.Rev. 888, 949-50.

The parties considered the knowledge of the TREAT-A-MATIC a trade secret revealed in confidence; Farris used elaborate concealment measures to conceal the identity of the components and exacted a covenant not to compete from his employees. That no other competitor had been able to duplicate the TREAT-A-MATIC during the four years it was on the open market is strong evidence that Farris had possession of secrets his competitors could not easily penetrate. The information used in the construction of the TESCOMATIC was not obtained by free copy, or independent analysis, of the TREAT-A-MATIC. The successful reproduction of the system did not take place until Tesco hired Glad for the specific purpose of learning the arrangement and components of the TREAT-A-MATIC. Cf. Head Ski Co. v. Kam Ski Co., D.Md.1958, 158 F. Supp. 919. [32]

We hold, therefore, that the covenant not to compete is valid and enforcible and that the TREAT-A-MATIC is a protectible trade secret. Accordingly, we reverse and remand to the district court for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

End of Document

Carl N. Swenson Co. v. E. C. Braun Co.

Court of Appeal of California, Fifth Appellate District, Division Two

April 29, 1969

Civ. No. 25059

Reporter

272 Cal. App. 2d 366 *; 77 Cal. Rptr. 378 ; 1969 Cal. App. LEXIS 2285 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,813

CARL N. SWENSON CO., INC., Plaintiff and Appellant, v. E. C. BRAUN CO., Defendant and Respondent

Subsequent History: [1] Appellant's Petition for a Hearing by the Supreme Court was Denied June 25, 1969. Tobriner, J., was of the Opinion that the Petition Should be Granted.

Prior History: APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Santa Clara County. George H. Barnett, Judge.

Action to confirm an arbitration award.

Disposition: Affirmed. Judgment for defendant denying petition for confirmation and granting defendant's motion to dismiss affirmed.

Core Terms

bid, depository, withdraw, plumbing, subcontractor, arbitration award, general contractor, Contractors, user, awarding authority, closing time, construction project, mechanical work, sheet metal, Cartwright Act, confirmation, withdrawn

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The California antitrust law, commonly known as the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700- 16758, is patterned upon the federal Sherman Antitrust Act, and federal cases construing the Sherman Act, as well as the common law policy against restraint of trade, are applicable with respect to the Cartwright Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

The adoption and enforcement of certain bid depository rules, including one requiring general contractors utilizing the depository to use only bids received through the depository, constitutes an invalid restraint on interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Real Property Law > Construction Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Group boycotts are illegal per se, constituting restraints on trade in violation of the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700- 16758. A bid depository cannot be allowed to operate under rules which (1) prevent, preclude or in any manner limit any subcontractor from submitting a bid to a general contractor or awarding authority on any construction project at any time prior to the time set by the awarding authority for the receipt of bids upon any such construction project; (2) limit or restrict, in any way, the amount of a bid submitted by a subcontractor to a general contractor or awarding authority at any time prior to the time set by the awarding authority for the receipt of bids upon a construction project; or (3) limit or in any way prevent a general contractor or awarding authority from receiving or considering any bid which is or may be submitted to him by a subcontractor at any time prior to the time set by the awarding authority for the receipt of bids upon a construction project.

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes
CALIFORNIA OFFICIAL REPORTS HEADNOTES

CA(1)[] (1)

Monopolies—Under Cartwright Act.

--The California anti-trust law, commonly known as the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700-16758) is patterned upon the federal Sherman Anti-trust Act, and federal cases construing the Sherman Act, as well as the common law policy against restraint of trade, are applicable with respect to the Cartwright Act.

CA(2)[] (2)

Id.—Under Cartwright Act—Agreements and Combinations Prohibited.

--Rules of a locked box bid service operated by a contractors' association relating to time of withdrawal of bid and providing that if separate bids were also submitted in combination, the separate bids could not be withdrawn without withdrawing the combination bid were clearly restrictive of free competition among subcontractors and an arbitration award based upon a violation thereof could therefore not be enforced by the courts; an analysis of the challenged provisions, viewed in the context of other bid depository rules which prohibited depository users from submitting or refusing bids outside the depository, effectively demonstrated that such rules tended to stifle competition between subcontractors and to further an illegal restraint of trade.

Counsel: Littler, Mendelson & Fastiff, Arthur Mendelson, James A. Carter and Robert M. Lieber for Plaintiff and Appellant.

Robert C. Taylor and Ronald H. Klein as Amici Curiae on behalf of Plaintiff and Appellant.

Edmond G. Thiede, Bancroft, Avery & McAlister, William H. Orrick, Jr., and Orrick, Herrington, Rowley & Sutcliffe and Robert J. Gloistein for Defendant and Respondent.

Judges: Shoemaker, P. J. Agee, J., and Taylor, J., concurred.

Opinion by: SHOEMAKER

Opinion

[*367] [378] Plaintiff appeals from a judgment denying its petition for confirmation of an arbitration award and granting defendant's motion to dismiss and entry of judgment in defendant's favor.

The facts are without dispute. Plaintiff is a licensed general building contractor and defendant is a [2] licensed subcontractor engaged in the plumbing and heating business. Defendant is a member of the Greater Bay Area Bid Service, a locked box bid service operated by the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling [379] Contractors Association of the Greater Bay Area, Inc. (hereinafter referred to as "Contractors Association"). The bid service operated pursuant to bid depository rules which bound all members. On December 7, 1965, defendant submitted bids on a construction project at Moffett Field through the bid service and plaintiff as a general contractor received such bids. The bids submitted by defendant were (1) for plumbing alone and (2) a combination bid for plumbing, sheet metal and other mechanical work. On December 7, 1965, plaintiff executed a written acceptance of defendant's plumbing bid of $ 78,735, the low bid received for that work. On the same day, plaintiff was awarded the general contract on the Moffett Field project. However, defendant, prior to the opening of the bids by the government, purported to withdraw its plumbing bid. Plaintiff refused to recognize the right of defendant to withdraw its bid, contending that under the bid service rules it could not do so and the [3] defendant, refusing to honor its bid, was taken by plaintiff before the Contractors Association. The dispute was thereafter submitted to the Fair Trade Committee [*368] of the Contractors Association in accordance with the dispute settlement procedure provided for in the bid depository rules. A hearing was held and the committee ruled that defendant had not withdrawn its plumbing bid in accordance with the bid depository rules and directed that it enter into a subcontract with plaintiff for the performance of such work or be subject to the penalties provided for by said rules. Defendant refused to perform and thereupon the Fair Trade Committee ruled that defendant, under the rules, must pay plaintiff liquidated damages in the amount of $ 3,149.40. Defendant was notified of said decision and did not proceed with an appeal under the bid depository rules.

In due time plaintiff filed its petition for an order confirming the award and the entry of judgment against defendant in the amount of the award.

Defendant, opposing the confirmation, moved for vacation of the arbitration award, for dismissal of plaintiff's petition to confirm said award and for the entry of judgment for [4] defendant. One of the grounds urged in support of defendant's motion was that the bid depository rules were illegal as a restraint of trade contrary to both state and federal antitrust legislation.

Prior to the hearing, plaintiff filed documents to the effect that defendant's attempt to withdraw its plumbing bid was not made by telegram, as required under the bid depository rules, and that defendant had also violated another of said rules by insisting upon its right to withdraw only its plumbing bid while refusing to withdraw its combination bid covering plumbing, sheet metal and mechanical work.

After hearing, the court found that the bid depository rules in effect on December 7, 1965, constituted an illegal group boycott and that the arbitration award in plaintiff's favor was predicated upon said rules. It concluded as a matter of law that the bid depository rules were in violation of the Cartwright Act and were illegal per se in their entirety; that the arbitration award in plaintiff's favor was likewise illegal and unenforceable; and that defendant was not estopped from raising this defense because neither the action nor inaction of any party to an illegal agreement could [5] validate it nor could the conduct of a party estop it from asserting such invalidity.

Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of defendant.

CA(1)[ ] (1) HN1[ ] The California antitrust law, commonly known as the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700- 16758) is patterned upon the federal Sherman Antitrust Act, and federal [*369] cases construing the Sherman Act, as well as the common law policy against restraint of trade, are applicable with respect to the Cartwright Act. (Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp. (1968) 69 Cal.2d 305, 315 [70 Cal.Rptr. 849, 444 P.2d 481]; People v. Santa Clara Valley Bowling etc. Assn. (1965) 238 Cal.App.2d 225, 232 [47 Cal.Rptr. 570].)

[380] In reaching its determination relative to the illegality of certain of the bid depository rules adopted by the Contractors Association, the trial court relied upon the California case of People v. Inland Bid Depository (1965) 233 Cal.App.2d 851 [44 Cal.Rptr. 206], and the federal case of Mechanical Contractors Bid Depository v. Christiansen (10th Cir. 1965) 352 F.2d 817.

In the Christiansen case, the court held that HN2[ ] the adoption and enforcement of certain [6] bid depository rules, including one requiring general contractors utilizing the depository to use only bids received through the depository, constituted an invalid restraint on interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman Act.

In the Inland Bid Depository case, the court held that HN3[ ] group boycotts were illegal per se, constituting restraints on trade in violation of the Cartwright Act. The court further held that a bid depository could not be allowed to operate under rules which (1) prevent, preclude or in any manner limit any subcontractor from submitting a bid to a general contractor or awarding authority on any construction project at any time prior to the time set by the awarding authority for the receipt of bids upon any such construction project; (2) limit or restrict, in any way, the amount of a bid submitted by a subcontractor to a general contractor or awarding authority at any time prior to the time set by the awarding authority for the receipt of bids upon a construction project; or (3) limit or in any way prevent a general contractor or awarding authority from receiving or considering any bid which is or may be submitted to him by a subcontractor at any time [7] prior to the time set by the awarding authority for the receipt of bids upon a construction project.

CA(2)[ ] (2) Plaintiff concedes that certain of the bid depository rules adopted by the Contractors Association were of the type condemned in the Christiansen and Inland Bid Depository cases, i.e., section 2 of article III of said rules provides for a bid depository closing time of at least four hours before any prime bid closing time of 1 p.m. or thereafter and by certain [*370] designated hours of the preceding afternoon if the prime bid closing time is prior to 1 p.m.; section 6, subdivision (a), of article III provides that no subcontractor who is a member of the bid depository may "accept work" on any project being bid through the bid service from any general contractor to whom he did not bid in accordance with the bid depository rules and hence through the depository; section 6, subdivisions (b) and (c) of article III provide that a general contractor must use the low bid received from the depository and may use the bid of an "outside" subcontractor only if said bid is placed in the depository by the general contractor and is the low bid received through the depository.

Plaintiff, [8] however, takes the position that even though the above-mentioned rules are violative of the Cartwright Act, the defense of antitrust illegality may not properly be asserted against the arbitration award in plaintiff's favor because such award was based upon defendant's violation of other depository rules which are themselves valid and lawful and capable of being enforced independently of the invalid rules.

The rules giving rise to the arbitration award in plaintiff's favor consist of the following:

Section 3, subdivision (a) of article III provides that a bid must be revoked or withdrawn before the depository closing time or within two hours thereafter and that the revocation must be confirmed in writing or by telegram. The rule prohibits any bid from being changed in any manner, as opposed to withdrawn, after the depository closing time. A changed bid submitted prior to the depository closing time supersedes an earlier bid.

Section 3, subdivision (c) of article III provides that in the event separate bids are also submitted in combination, the withdrawal of a separate bid requires the withdrawal of any combination bid containing the withdrawn bid.

[381] Section 1 of article [9] V provides that any user of the bid service who violates the rules may, by majority vote of the Fair Trade Committee, be subject to liquidated damages, suspension from the bid service or any other penalties prescribed by the committee.

Section 2 of article V provides that a noncomplying user shall be required to pay a complying user liquidated damages in the amount of four percent of the bid of the complying user (the terms "complying user" and "noncomplying user" are defined in the rules).

[*371] Sections 2 through 6 of article VI set forth the procedure governing the hearing and determination of disputes by the Fair Trade Committee and provide that the committee's decision shall be final and binding unless appealed in the manner prescribed in section 6.

Plaintiff argues that although the Inland Bid Depository case held that it was unlawful for a bid depository to impose rules limiting the time for the submission of bids, there is nothing in that opinion which suggests that a bid depository may not lawfully limit the time for the withdrawal of bids. Plaintiff reasons that since the arbitration award against defendant was predicated upon its failure to withdraw [10] its bid in accordance with the depository rules and its subsequent refusal to be bound by such bid and to enter into a contract with plaintiff, the arbitration award can properly be enforced without giving effect to any of the rules of the type condemned in the Christiansen or Inland Bid Depository cases.

Defendant, in response, asserts that section 3, subdivision (a), imposes an illegal restraint on trade, within the meaning of the Inland Bid Depository case, because it deprives a subcontractor of the right to withdraw a particular bid and submit an altered bid at any time prior to the general bid opening time and requires him to perform such actions prior to an earlier time limit established by the bid depository rules, and further reasons that the imposition of this earlier time limit stifles competition in and of itself because it precludes a subcontractor from lowering a previously submitted bid during the precise period, immediately preceding the general bid opening time, which, as pointed out in the Inland Bid Depository case, "is precisely the time of the most intensive competition by the subcontractors" (p. 861).

Defendant also asserts that section 3, subdivisions [11] (a) and (c), must be read together and that the latter provision imposes a further invalid restraint on trade because it requires that a subcontractor who withdraws a particular separate bid must also withdraw any combination bid containing the withdrawn bid. Defendant points out that plaintiff does not question that it was actually desirous of withdrawing only its plumbing bid without withdrawing its combination bid which included the plumbing, sheet metal and mechanical work, and that had it been permitted under the depository rules to withdraw its separate plumbing bid, its combination bid would have been the low combination bid for the plumbing, sheet metal and mechanical work and would also have been [*372] $ 567 lower than the combined total of the separate low bids for the plumbing, sheet metal and mechanical work submitted by the other subcontractors bidding through the depository. Under such circumstances, defendant contends that section 3, subdivisions (a) and (c), are clearly restrictive of free competition among subcontractors and that to enforce an arbitration award based upon defendant's violation of those provisions would be to foster an illegal restraint of trade. [12] We agree.

The cases relied upon by plaintiff in support of its contention that the provisions of the rules that resulted in the arbitration award to plaintiff do not constitute a restraint of trade and hence cannot be used to deprive plaintiff of the judicial enforcement of the award have no application to the problem before us. In our opinion, analysis of section 3, subdivisions (a) and (c), effectively demonstrates that said provisions, when viewed in the context [382] of the other bid depository rules which prohibit depository users from submitting or receiving bids outside the depository, do tend to stifle competition between subcontractors and do further an illegal restraint of trade within the meaning of the Inland Bid Depository case. Since section 3, subdivisions (a) and (c) contribute to this unlawful object, the arbitration award based upon defendant's violation thereof cannot be enforced by the courts.

Judgment affirmed.

Simpson v. Union Oil Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

April 30, 1969

No. 22,148

Reporter

411 F.2d 897 *; 1969 U.S. App. LEXIS 12597 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,788

Richard S. Simpson, Appellant, v. Union Oil Co. of California, Appellee

Disposition: [1] The judgment is affirmed.

Core Terms

trial court, cases, new rule, consignment, retrospective, station, new trial, prospective application, announced, lease, renew, damages, anti trust law, favoring, motion for a new trial, gasoline, market value, Sherman Act, weight of the evidence, factors

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN1[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

If no constitutional questions are raised or argued in the court below, they can not be presented and need not be considered on appeal.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

HN2[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

The U.S. Constitution neither prohibits nor requires retrospective effect of a court decision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Defenses

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Sherman Act, Defenses

The defense to liability under the Sherman Act because of reliance upon prior law can not even be raised unless: (1) there is a clearly declared judicial doctrine, (2) upon which a defendant relies and (3) under which its conduct is lawful, (4) a doctrine which was overruled, (5) in favor of a new rule according to which conduct performed in reliance upon the old rule would have been unlawful.

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

HN4[] Courts, Judicial Precedent

Once the premise is accepted that the court is neither required to apply, nor prohibited from applying, a decision retrospectively, the court must weigh the merits and demerits in each case by looking to the prior history of the rule of law in question, its purpose and effect, and whether retrospective operation will further or retard its operation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5[] Private Actions, Standing

The private remedy under the federal antitrust laws was established by the Congress as a matter of public policy, to enlist persons injured by antitrust violations as enforcers by providing an inducement, treble damages plus expenses.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

HN6[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

The court does not ordinarily reverse on grounds not properly presented to the trial judge.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN7[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The grant or denial of a new trial rests within the sound discretion of the trial court and absent a showing of clear abuse of discretion will not be overturned on appeal.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN8[] Appeals, Standards of Review

The power of a court of appeal to review the granting or denying of a new trial for excessive or inadequate verdicts or on the ground the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, is not as broad as that of the trial court in granting or denying the motion for a new trial in the first instance.

Tax Law > Federal Income Tax Computation > Valuation > Business Interests

HN9[] Valuation, Business Interests

In measuring the value of the good will of a business, appropriate factors to be considered are: (1) What profit has the business made over and above an amount fairly attributable to the return on the capital investment and to the labor of the owner? (2) What is the reasonable prospect that this additional profit will continue into the future, considering all circumstances existing and known as of the date of the valuation? These are the factors which would influence a prospective purchaser. The special value which the business might have to its owner, or the profit potential of the business beyond that which would be transferable to a purchaser, would have no effect on market value of the business.

Judges: Jertberg, Duniway and Carter, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: CARTER

Opinion

[*898] JAMES M. CARTER, Circuit Judge:

This case has been here before. It is an action for damages under the antitrust laws. On the first occasion the motion of Union Oil Company (hereafter [*899] Union) for summary judgment was granted. (1961 TRADE CASES Par. 69,936, p. 77,693). We affirmed. Simpson v. Union Oil Company of California, 311 F.2d 764 (9th Cir. 1963). Certiorari was granted and the Supreme Court reversed 5-3, and remanded for further proceedings. Simpson v. Union Oil Company of California, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); rehear. den. 377 U.S. 949, 84 S. Ct. 1349, 12 L. Ed. 2d 313.

The case involved Union's consignment of gasoline to service stations as a method of price maintenance. Since most of the problems resulting from the remand arise from language in the Supreme Court decision, supra, we quote pertinent parts:

> "Hence on the issue of resale price maintenance under the Sherman Act there is nothing left to try, for there was an agreement for resale price maintenance, coercively [2] employed.
>
> The case must be remanded for a hearing on all the other issues of the case, including those raised under the McGuire Act, 66 Stat. 631, 15 U.S.C. 45, and the damages, if any, suffered. We intimate no views on any other issue; . . . We reserve the question whether, when all the facts are known, there may be any equities that would warrant only prospective application in damage suits of the rule governing price fixing by the 'consignment' device we announce today." 377 U.S. at 24-25.

After remand and following a pretrial order of June 20, 1966, in the district court, appellant sought in the Supreme Court, a writ of prohibition or alternately a writ of mandamus, to preclude Union from asserting any "equities" which warrant prospective application of the Simpson decision, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051, supra, in any other court than the Supreme Court.

In the pretrial order above, the district court foreclosed the issues of whether Union had "attempted to monopolize" the wholesaling and retailing of gasoline in violation of Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act, and whether Union had unlawfully tied the [3] sale of petroleum products to its leases in violation of Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act or entered into exclusive dealing contracts with its dealers. Accordingly, appellant also sought a writ in the Supreme Court, compelling the district court to try the aforesaid excluded issues. The applications for both writs were denied. Simpson v. United States District Court, 385 U.S. 806, 17 L. Ed. 2d 121, 87 S. Ct. 188 (1966).

The case went to trial before a jury during January and February 1967 and resulted in a verdict for appellant against Union for $160,000. The trial court had reserved the "equities" issue for court decision. Union filed a motion for judgment N.O.V. and a motion for new trial. Appellant filed a motion to enter judgment upon the verdict. The trial court decided the "equities" issue in favor of Union; denied appellant's motion for judgment on the verdict; denied Union's motion for judgment N.O.V., but granted Union's motion for a new trial.

The trial court made findings of fact and conclusions of law on the "equities" issue, reported in Simpson v. Union Oil Company of California, 270 F. Supp. 754 (N.D. Cal. 1967). By Finding 14 it found [4]

> "On all the facts as they now have been made known by the trial of this case, it would be unfair and inequitable to apply to this damage action, wherein the operative facts all arose in the years 1956-1958, the rule respecting price-fixing by the consignment device announced on April 20, 1964 in Simpson v. Union Oil Company of California, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051."

Its Conclusions 2 and 3 read

> "2. The belief of defendant prior to April 20, 1964 that the Retail Dealer Consignment Agreements between itself and retail gasoline dealers and the actions taken by it pursuant thereto were entirely lawful under the antitrust laws was reasonable and warranted [*900] by United States v. General Electric Company, 272 U.S. 476, 71 L. Ed. 362, 47 S. Ct. 192 and other authorities."
>
> "3. The equities warrant only prospective application to damage suits of the rule respecting price fixing by the consignment device announced on April 20, 1964 in Simpson v. Union Oil Company of California, 377 U.S. 13, [12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051,] and, particularly, do not warrant application of said rule to this [5] case."

The court then entered its written Orders and Judgment. By the judgment

> "plaintiff's action herein against defendant is dismissed with prejudice." [1] Its order with respect to a new trial was that "defendant's motion to set aside the verdict on said issues [the issues submitted to the jury] and to grant a new trial thereon should a further trial be necessary is hereby Granted."

In substance, the trial court denied appellant a judgment on the verdict because of its findings and conclusions on the "equities" issues; but hedging against possible reversal on this portion of the case, set aside the verdict and granted a new trial.

The Questions Presented

---

[1] The motion for judgment N.O.V. was denied because the trial court stated there was "some" proof of damage. This concerned issues submitted to the jury. The dismissal of the action was on the "equities" issue, decided by the court and not submitted to the jury. There is no inconsistency.

1. Should the Simpson [6] decision (377 U.S. 13, 84 S. Ct. 1051, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98) be applied only prospectively and not to this case?

2. If the dismissal of the action was error, was there also error in granting a new trial?

Other questions have been abandoned. [2]

[7] I.

SHOULD THE SIMPSON DECISION HAVE ONLY PROSPECTIVE APPLICATION?

(1) Constitutional Objections.

We treat at the outset contentions by appellant purportedly raising constitutional questions. Appellant claims that the trial court ruling that the "equities" are in favor of and compel a prospective application of the Supreme Court decision in Simpson, runs afoul of constitutional provisions. Appellant argues "courts are without power under the United States Constitution, requiring the separation of powers between legislature and the courts to take away or render nugatory a federally created right to obtain damages for an injury from a defendant's violation of the Sherman Act;" that to deny appellant relief is to deny him due process of law; and that setting aside of the verdict and the granting of judgment to Union denied appellant due process of law.

A short answer is that HN1[] no constitutional questions were raised or argued in the court below and therefore cannot be presented and need not be considered here. Williamson v. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., 221 F.2d 5, 14 (9 Cir. 1955). [8]

[*901] It appears appellant is contending that every decision must operate retrospectively. This is based on an old archaic concept, now generally rejected. That concept is that the law has always been fixed and unchangeable and that where a court finds past interpretations are incorrect and proceeds to make a declaration of the law different from the past, the new rule applies to past events.

Judge Cardozo was one of the first to characterize the concept as unrealistic. See the discussion in United States ex rel. George Angelet v. Fay, 333 F.2d 12, 15-16 (2 Cir. 1964) affirmed sub nom., Angelet v. Fay, 381 U.S. 654, 14 L. Ed. 2d 623, 85 S. Ct. 1750 (1965). The Supreme Court has recently said in Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 629, 14 L. Ed. 2d 601, 85 S. Ct. 1731 (1965) "the HN2[] Constitution neither prohibits nor requires retrospective effect." Great Northern Railway Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Refining Co., 287 U.S. 358, 77 L. Ed. 360, 53 S. Ct. 145 (1932) was an early case where a lower court refused to make its decision retrospective [9] and Justice Cardozo, writing for the Supreme Court, rejected constitutional contentions. (p. 364).

As to the contention that appellant had been deprived of a jury trial, the short answer is the record below. This constitutional claim was not raised below and cannot be considered here, Williamson v. Weyerhaeuser, supra; Cox v. City of Freeman, 321 F.2d 887, 891 (8 Cir. 1963).

---

[2] At the trial Union withdrew the McGuire Act defense referred to in the Supreme Court order of remand.

As to the precluded issues, "attempt to monopolize" and "tie in sales to leases," they are not discussed in the briefs, although referred to in appellant's "Statement of the Case" and "Specifications of Error." They are "deemed abandoned and need not be considered herein," Peck v. Shell Oil Co., 142 F.2d 141, 143 (9 Cir. 1944).

Moreover if the trial court was wrong in its decision as to the "equities" but was correct in granting a new trial no harm has been done appellant.

Appellant attempted to inject these issues in the case in 1966, 8 years after the case started and after Simpson had filed a Pretrial statement in 1965 which had not contained them. The trial court properly excluded them as untimely and as injected "solely because of plaintiff's dissatisfaction with the court's ruling" on the "equities" issue, and thereby protracting the trial. The trial judge acted properly.

Likewise a court may set aside a verdict without constitutional encroachment. Neither the granting of the new trial nor the judgment as non-retroactive impinged on the constitutional provisions relied on by appellant.

(2) The Trial Court Properly Considered and Ruled on the Equities Issue.

The issue of the "equities" was properly before the trial court on remand. The Supreme Court said, " . . . when all the facts are known, there may be any equities that would warrant only prospective application . . . of the rule . . . we announce today." Obviously, the court was speaking of the facts of this case. There is no indication or reason to believe they were speaking only of facts of other damage suits as they might arise in the future. The 5th Circuit in Guidry v. Continental Oil Company, 350 F.2d 342, 344 (1965) [10] stated that the reservation in Simpson "seemingly refers to the inequity to subjecting the Union Oil Company to a triple damage action for conduct that was apparently legal until the narrowing of United States v. General Elec. Co., 1926, 272 U.S. 476, 47 S. Ct. 192, 71 L. Ed. 362."

It is traditionally the function of the trial court to find the facts. The Supreme Court is ill equipped to carry out the fact finding process [3] and it would be absurd to read the Supreme Court's language to mean that the Supreme Court would take evidence and find the facts as to whether "equities" existed.

The trial court properly took evidence, and made findings of facts and conclusions of law as to whether there existed "equities that would warrant only prospective application . . ." of the rule the Court announced [11] in Simpson. We think this was what the Court intended.

This fact finding was clearly to be performed by the trial judge and not by the jury. Moreover this duty was urged on the trial court by appellant and no objection as required by Rule 51, F.R. Civ. P., was made, when the court instructed the jury that the issue was taken from the jury and that the court would decide it.

[*902] (3) The Test to Determine if the Simpson Case Should Be Retrospective or Prospective in Application.

Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Inc., 392 U.S. 481, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968) held that American Tobacco Company v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946) (in approving Judge Learned Hand's Alcoa analysis of "monopolization" as a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act in United States v. Aluminum Company of America, 148 F.2d 416 (2 Cir. 1945)), had not altered the law of monopolization and that the problem of the retrospective or prospective application of a new rule of law was not involved in the case.

Appellant summarized language in Hanover (and Union agrees), as follows:

> "In [12] its analysis of the issue the Supreme Court stated that HN3[] the defense to liability under the Sherman Act because of reliance upon prior law could not even be raised unless (1) there was a clearly declared judicial doctrine, (2) upon which a defendant relied and (3) under which its conduct was lawful, (4) a doctrine which was overruled, (5) in favor of a new rule according to which conduct performed in reliance upon the old rule would have been unlawful."

Generally as to the problem of prospective application of a new rule of law, " . . . the Constitution neither prohibits nor requires retrospective effect." Linkletter v. Walker, supra; and Great Northern R. Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Refining Co., supra. Three alternatives were available in the instant case. The Court could have said, but did not, (1) that the rule applied to Simpson and all other cases prospectively; or (2) not to Simpson but to all other cases prospectively or (3) retrospectively to Simpson and all other cases.

[3] In actions by one State against another State, of which the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction, masters are appointed by the Supreme Court to initially find the facts and report to the court.

There can be no doubt the Court intended "when all the facts are [13] known" to determine if the rule announced in Simpson should apply to that case. What the Court does, when this case again reaches it, will determine whether the Simpson rule is retrospective or prospective and whether it should be applied to the Simpson case.

In Linkletter v. Walker, supra, the Court said, "Once HN4[] the premise is accepted that we are neither required to apply, nor prohibited from applying, a decision retrospectively, we must weigh the merits and demerits in each case by looking to the prior history of the rule in question, its purpose and effect, and whether retrospective operation will further or retard its operation." (p. 629).

Although the Court also said " . . . no distinction was drawn between civil and criminal litigation," (p. 627) the Court meant that in either a civil or criminal case, the new decision might be retrospective or prospective depending on the determination of the factors set forth above.

We think that under the reasoning of Linkletter, supra, in applying the test set forth, there are various distinctions [14] between civil and criminal cases bearing on the question as to whether the rule should be applied to the case at bar.

In the criminal case, whether the question arises on direct or collateral attack, the defendant has been convicted of a crime and the decision to be made is, the validity or invalidity of the conviction. That decision must be made in the particular case then on appeal or review. The court may also provide in the same case for its retrospectivity Witherspoon v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 510, 20 L. Ed. 2d 776, 88 S. Ct. 1770 (1968); or do so in a subsequent case Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 83 S. Ct. 792 (1963) -- retrospective by Doughty v. Maxwell, 376 U.S. 202, 11 L. Ed. 2d 650, 84 S. Ct. 702 (1964); or provide for prospective application only by a subsequent case, Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 81 S. Ct. 1684 (1961), -- prospective for judgments after 6/19/61. Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 14 L. Ed. 2d 601, 85 S. Ct. 1731 (1965).

[*903] In three cases where the new rule was applied retrospectively, Griffin v. Illinois, 351 U.S. 12, 100 L. Ed. 891, 76 S. Ct. 585 (1956); [15] Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 83 S. Ct. 792 (1963); and Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368, 12 L. Ed. 2d 908, 84 S. Ct. 1774 (1964), "the principle . . . applied went to the fairness of the trial -- the very integrity of the fact-finding process." Linkletter v. Walker, supra, (381 U.S. at 639).

Other considerations are "the necessity for an effective deterrent to illegal police action," and on the other hand "the wholesale release of the guilty victims." Linkletter v. Walker (381 U.S. at 636-37). The reliance on the old rule in criminal cases is not by the litigant, the defendant. The reliance is on the part of the law enforcement officers. Johnson v. New Jersey, 384 U.S. 719, 731, 16 L. Ed. 2d 882, 86 S. Ct. 1772 (1966).

These considerations are not present in a civil case. The problem in the civil case is different, and the last paragraph of Simpson and the five way test from Hanover v. United Shoe Co., supra, point the way.

The major consideration is -- did a party to the present litigation rely on a rule of law which has now been changed, so that it would be inequitable [16] to apply the new rule to such party. There is another consideration which could conceivably come within the meaning of "any equities" referred to in Simpson. We note it briefly.

A substantial number of cases in which a plaintiff seeking damages has succeeded in persuading an appellate court to establish a new rule favorable to him, have applied the rule to him, but only prospectively as to all other possible plaintiffs. The reasons seem to be two: (1) that it is unfair to the party who has fought the case, sometimes through several courts, to tell him that he is right, but that he is to receive nothing for his efforts or his expenses, which may have been quite heavy, and (2) that there will be no incentive to a plaintiff to seek to have a new rule established, that is, to improve the law, if he is to get nothing for his pains if he succeeds.

Some, but not all of the cases seem to make a distinction between an individual plaintiff or small business entity, who for want of a better name we shall call the "one-time litigant" and the party which is a public body, a public utility, an insurance company or a major business corporation, to whom we shall apply the term "an institutional [17] litigant."

The first reason above operates in favor of the "one-time litigant" who undertakes to have a new rule established when he sues an "institutional litigant" that has a continuing and recurring interest in the problem, such as an insurance company defending damage claims, a public utility defending similar claims, a manufacturer defending products liability cases, or a major company defending an antitrust case. By and large, the injured plaintiff in such cases is an individual or small business entity, who or which may have such a case only once in a lifetime. He gets no reward out of establishing a new rule in favor of others; if his damages are not recovered in the suit he brings, he will never get any. On the other hand, the "institutional litigant" that secures the establishment of a new rule, has the prospect of continuing future benefits from the rule, even if he does not get the benefit of the rule in the particular case. This may well be sufficient inducement for it to seek a new rule.

We cite in the margin [4] the cases in which an "institutional litigant" having [*904] a continuing interest in the problem secured a new rule, favorable to it, in a particular [18] case, but did not get the benefit of the rule in that case. Nevertheless, it stood to benefit by the rule in future cases.

[19] When we turn to the "one-time litigant" who gets a new rule established, a number of the cases give him the benefit of his success in the case in which the new rule is established. [5] [20] Other cases deny the "one-time litigant" the benefits of his victory. [6]

The second reason, i.e. the "incentive idea," would seem to be applicable to private antitrust plaintiffs. The Supreme Court, this court, and many other courts, have repeatedly emphasized that HN5[] the private remedy

---

[4] State ex rel. Wash. State Finance Committee v. Martin, 62 Wash. 2d 645, 663-73, 384 P. 2d 833 (1963) (the state v. the state treasurer); Southern Pacific Co. v. Cochise County, 92 Ariz. 395, 377 P.2d 770 (1963) (a tax case); Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bryant, 296 Ky. 815, 824, 177 S.W. 2d 588, 153 A.L.R. 422 (1943); American-First Title & Trust Company v. Ewing, 403 P. 2d 488 (Okla., 1965). As to such cases, see Levy, Realist Jurisprudence and Prospective Overruling, 109 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1, 17, 19 (1960). But the Arizona court in two other tax cases, has applied the new rule to the parties to the case, although declaring the rule to be prospective in other cases. Duhame v. State Tax Comm'n, 65 Ariz. 268, 179 P. 2d 252, 171 A.L.R. 684 (1947); Arizona State Tax Comm'n v. Ensign, 75 Ariz. 376, 257 P. 2d 392 (1953).

[5] Arizona State Tax Comm'n v. Ensign, 75 Ariz. 376, 257 P. 2d 392 (1953) [tax]; Duhame v. State Tax Comm'n, 65 Ariz. 268, 179 P. 2d 252 (1953) [tax]; City of Fairbanks v. Schaible, 375 P. 2d 201 (Alaska 1962) [sovereign immunity]; Darling v. Charleston Community Memorial Hospital, 33 Ill. 2d 326, 211 N.E. 2d 253 (1965), cert. denied 383 U.S. 946, 16 L. Ed. 2d 209, 86 S. Ct. 1204 (1966) [charitable immunity]; Molitor v. Kaneland Community Unit Dist., 18 Ill. 2d 11, 163 N.E. 2d 89, 86 A.L.R. 469 (1959); Parker v. Port Huron Hospital, 361 Mich. 1, 105 N.W. 2d 1 (1960) [charitable immunity]; Sherbutte v. Marine City, 374 Mich. 48, 130 N.W. 2d 920 (1964) [sovereign immunity of a municipal corporation]; Barker v. St. Louis County, 340 Mo. 986, 104 S.W. 2d 371 (1937) [overruling prior cases which had upheld a 20-day statute of limitations for claims as to property taken for public use]; Rampone v. Wanskuck Bldgs. Inc., 102 R.I. 30, 227 A. 2d 586, 589 (1967) [overruling prior rule that tenant could not sue landlord in tort for breach of covenant to repair. New rule applied to plaintiff, but otherwise only prospective as of 60 days after filing of opinion, "so as to afford all interested parties a reasonable opportunity to become aware of this decision and to be guided accordingly"]; Widell v. Holy Trinity Catholic Church, 19 Wis. 2d 648, 121 N.W. 2d 249 (1963) [charitable immunity]; Holytz v. Milwaukee, 17 Wis. 2d 26, 115 N.W. 2d 618 (1962) [sovereign immunity]; Kojis v. Doctors Hospital, 12 Wis. 2d 367, 107 N.W. 2d 292 (1961); Goller v. White, 20 Wis. 2d 402, 122 N.W. 2d 193 (1963) [intrafamily immunity].

See also Culpepper v. Culpepper, 147 Fla. 632, 3 So. 2d 330 (1941) where the court refused to apply to a pending case a rule which had been applied in the overruling case itself. Accord, Florida Forest and Park Service v. Strickland, 154 Fla. 472, 18 So. 2d 251 (1944); Ellsworth v. Brown, 387 P. 2d 634 (Okla. 1963).

[6] Continental Supply Co. v. Abell, 95 Mont. 148, 24 P. 2d 133 (1933), where the court was badly split on the issue; Hare v. General Contract Purchase Co., 220 Ark. 601, 249 S.W.2d 973 (1952); Spanel v. Mounds View School District, 264 Minn. 279, 118 N.W. 2d 795 (1962); Williams v. City of Detroit, 364 Mich. 231, 111 N.W. 2d 1 (1961), where again the court was badly split. But see England v. Louisiana State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 375 U.S. 411, 11 L. Ed. 2d 440, 84 S. Ct. 461 (1964), a case in which the court declined to apply the new rule against the plaintiffs in that case.

was established by the Congress as a matter of public policy, to enlist persons injured by antitrust violations as enforcers by providing an inducement, [21] treble damages plus expenses. [7]

[22] The trial court did not consider this possible aspect of the equities. [*905] There was good reason for its not doing so. First, the usual result in an action for damages is that if the plaintiff wins he gets a judgment for his damages. It is against this background that we must read the Supreme Court's comment, which refers to "equities that would warrant only prospective application . . . of the rule . . . we announce today." 377 U.S. at 24-25. We think that this means primarily that the appellant should recover unless there were equities favoring appellee that "would warrant" a denial of recovery to appellant, although it does not exclude the possibility of considering equities favorable to appellant, once equities favoring appellee have been shown. Thus, the trial court properly directed its attention to equities favoring appellee.

Second, if there are equities that favor appellant, other than the fact that he won the appeal, they ought to be brought to the court's attention. But appellant did not claim before the trial court that there were such equities favoring him. He merely argued (a) that he should be entitled to recover because he won the appeal [23] regardless of the equities favoring appellee, and (b) that there were no equities favoring appellee. The nearest appellant came to arguing the point was in an objection to the court's finding 14, where he said "that this finding conflicts with the Congressional purpose and proper judicial enforcement of the antitrust laws." There was no discussion, no assertion that there were special equities favoring appellant. In a memorandum in support of his motion for entry of judgment in his favor, under the heading "The law encourages appeals and operates retrospectively to remedy a wrong," appellant cited several cases, only two of which are ordinary civil cases. These were Mosser v. Darrow, 341 U.S. 267, 95 L. Ed. 927, 71 S. Ct. 680 (1951) and Molitor v. Kaneland Community Unit School Dist., 18 Ill. 2d 11, 163 N.E. 2d 89 (1959). Again, there was no discussion, no claim that there were special equities favoring appellant. Reliance was solely on the bare fact that he was the successful appellant.

This was the fact that the trial court necessarily weighed against the equities that it found to be favorable to appellee. HN6[] [24] We do not ordinarily reverse on grounds not properly presented to the trial judge. United States v. Hudspeth, 384 F.2d 683, 689 (9 Cir. 1967); Stephens v. Arrow Lumber Co., 354 F.2d 732, 734 (9 Cir. 1966).

The problem is fraught with difficulties, and we only hold that the trial court proceeded in a proper manner to consider the "equities" which should save Union from liability to appellant.

(4) A New Rule was Announced by the Supreme Court in the Simpson case.

We find it is clear that the Supreme Court announced a new rule in Simpson. The court's language concerning " . . . the rule governing price fixing by the 'consignment' device which we announce today," leaves no doubt. We do not intend to labor the point, except to cite the authorities relied on by the parties.

Union cites the line of supporting cases prior and subsequent to United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U.S. 476, 71 L. Ed. 362, 47 S. Ct. 192 (1926). [8] In that [*906] case it was definitely settled that consignment was not

---

[7] Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 139, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (1968); Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 349 U.S. 322, 329, 99 L. Ed. 1122, 75 S. Ct. 865 (1955); United States v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514, 518, 98 L. Ed. 903, 74 S. Ct. 703 (1954); Mach-Tronics, Inc. v. Zirpoli, 316 F.2d 820, 828 (9 Cir. 1963); Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368, 398 (9 Cir. 1957); Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp., 221 F.2d 358 (9 Cir. 1955); Byram Concretetanks Inc. v. Warren Concrete Products Co., 374 F.2d 649, 651 (3 Cir. 1967); Mechanical Contractors Bid Depository v. Christiansen, 352 F.2d 817, 821 (10 Cir. 1965); Osborn v. Sinclair Ref. Co., 324 F.2d 566, 572 (4 Cir. 1963); Kinnear-Weed Corp. v. Humble Oil & Ref. Co., 214 F.2d 891, 893 (5 Cir. 1954). Where is the incentive if, after winning, the plaintiff gets nothing? See Note, 71 Yale L.J. 907, 945 (1962).

[8] The cases, in addition to General Electric, are Standard Oil Co. of Cal. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 296, 298, 310, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051 (1949); Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 411, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911) Holmes, J. dissenting; Boston Medical Supply Co. v. Lea & Febiger, 195 F.2d 853, 856 (1 Cir. 1952); Texas Co. v.

illegal under the antitrust laws, as a price fixing arrangement; that there was [25] a distinction between an agency and a sale; and that the antitrust laws did not prohibit one from determining the price at which he sells his own property.

[26] Thus, under the five-way test in Hanover there was a clearly defined judicial doctrine, under which Union's conduct was lawful, a doctrine which was overruled, in favor of a new rule according to which conduct performed in reliance upon the old rule would have been unlawful. There remains only the question of Union's reliance on the old rule, a subject we discuss in the next section.

(5) Reliance by Union and the Equities

Had the trial court allowed the verdict to stand and entered judgment thereon, it would have been for $160,000 trebled, i.e. $480,000 plus attorney's fees.

Union had owned the leasehold on a service station in 1956. Relying on United States v. General Electric, 272 U.S. 476, 71 L. Ed. 362, 47 S. Ct. 192 (1926) it marketed its gas by consignment. Appellant, a former employee, helped put the consignment plan into effect. At his request he was given a lease for 1 year on Union's station which was later renewed for one year. For refusing to comply with his consignment agreement, the lease was not renewed.

Although some cases hold that reliance on existing law is presumed, State v. O'Neil, 147 Iowa 513, 126 N.W. 454, 457, [27] (Sup. Ct. of Iowa 1910), Continental Supply Co. v. Abell, 95 Montana 148, 24 P. 2d 133, 140 (Sup. Ct. of Mont. 1933), Union offered proof of its reliance and the trial court [*907] made findings of fact and conclusions of law. They show that: Union's General Counsel was consulted about the consignment device and he advised Union that there were "no legal objections" and the device was "lawful both under the antitrust laws and all other laws." General Counsel studied, among others, the General Electric case and was "entirely satisfied" that "consignment and the proposed method of merchandising were lawful in every respect and would not violate the antitrust law;" that the consignment agreement was "modeled upon" and was "substantially the same" as the agreement and arrangement in General Electric, and was true and bona fide; that acting in reliance on its General

---

Higgins, 118 F.2d 636 (2 Cir. 1941); United States v. General Electric Co., 115 F. Supp. 835 (D.N.J. 1953); United States v. Richfield Oil Corp., 99 F. Supp. 280, 289 (S.D. Cal. 1951); affirmed per curiam 343 U.S. 922, 72 S. Ct. 665, 96 L. Ed. 1334 (1952); United States v. General Electric Co., 82 F. Supp. 753 (D.N.J. 1949); United States v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal., CCH TRADE CASES P 69,399 (1959); United States v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal., CCH TRADE CASES P 69,212 (1958); Shasta Douglas Oil Co. v. Work, 212 Cal. App. 2d 618, 28 Cal. Rptr. 190 (1963); Gonzalez v. Derrington, 188 Cal. App. 2d 819, 10 Cal. Rptr. 700, 717 (1961), modified on other grounds 56 Cal. 2d 130, 363 P. 2d 1, 14 Cal. Rptr. 1 (1961); Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Lyons, 125 N.Y.S. 2d 420 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1953), affirmed 1 App. Div. 2d 770, 149 N.Y.S. 2d 212 (Sup. Ct. App. Div. 1956); Avon Prod. v. Berson, 206 Misc. 900, 135 N.Y.S. 2d 867, 874 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1954).

Union also cites cases and comments concerning the General Electric Rule, all stating that Simpson was a new rule in antitrust law; Sun Oil Co. v. F.T.C., 350 F.2d 624, 635 (7 Cir. 1965), cert. denied 382 U.S. 982, 15 L. Ed. 2d 473, 86 S. Ct. 559 (1966); C.B.S. Business Equip. Corp. v. Underwood Corp., 240 F. Supp. 413, 424 (S.D.N.Y. 1964); Lyons v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 235 F. Supp. 526, 535-7 (S.D.N.Y. 1964); Brodley, Oligopoly Power Under the Sherman and Clayton Acts -- From Economic Theory to Legal Policy, 19 Stan. L. Rev. 285, 320 (1967); Day, Developments in Antitrust During the Past Year, 25 A.B.A. Antitrust Section 3, 32 (1964); Handler, Recent Antitrust Developments -- 1964, 63 Mich. L. Rev. 59, 60, 62-64 (1964); Rahl, The Demise of Vertical Price Fixing Through Consignment Arrangements: The Simpson Case, 29 A.B.A. Antitrust Section 216 (1965); Rahl, Control of an Agent's Prices: The Simpson Case -- A Study in Antitrust Analysis, 61 Nw. U.L. Rev. 1 (1966); 2 Tulsa L.J. 55 (1965); Note, Antitrust -- Consignment Agreements To Fix Retail Prices, 18 Vand. L. Rev. 222, 228 (1964); 10 Vill. L. Rev. 366, 368-69 (1965).

Appellant relies on: F.T.C. v. Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739, 14 L. Ed. 2d 714, 85 S. Ct. 1798 (1965); Atlantic Ref. Co. v. F.T.C., 381 U.S. 357, 14 L. Ed. 2d 443, 85 S. Ct. 1498 (1965); United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960); Standard Oil Co. of Cal. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051 (1949); United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 86 L. Ed. 1461, 62 S. Ct. 1070 (1942); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940); F.T.C. v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 (1922); United States v. Richfield Oil Corp., 99 F. Supp. 280 (S.D. Cal. 1951), affirmed per curiam, 343 U.S. 922, 72 S. Ct. 665, 96 L. Ed. 1334 (1952); Stanton v. Texaco, Inc., 289 F. Supp. 884, 888-89 (D.R.I. 1968).

Counsel's opinion, Union put the plan in operation; that in 1954 and at all times until the Simpson decision on April 20, 1964 it was the "general and uniform view" that General Electric was the law and "that the rule of the case applied to all kinds of merchandise, and was not confined to [28] patented articles;" that Union "acted reasonably and justifiably;" that until the Simpson decision Union "reasonably believed" that consignment agreements were wholly lawful and did not violate the antitrust laws and that Union was fully justified in that belief.

These findings were fully supported by the evidence and are binding on us. Appellant makes two attacks, one that the General Counsel did not give consideration to certain decisions. We have cited appellant's cases heretofore for reference and have held that the Supreme Court in Simpson knew it was announcing a new rule and so stated.

The second attack on the findings is that the General Counsel left enforcement of the agreements to a "marketing" department. If the consignment agreements were then legal it would follow that Union would have a right to enforce them. One method of enforcement was refusal to deal with a consignee who breached his agreement. Thus Union refused to renew appellant's lease.

The court made a finding that this was the only "coercion" [9] used against appellant. It was supported by the evidence and by a stipulation entered between counsel at the trial. No agreement provided appellant [29] must take any or all of his gasoline needs from Union. See Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 311 F.2d 764, 766.

We think the court's finding on coercion was supported by the record, and that since the consignment agreement was lawful under General Electric it was also lawful to enforce it by refusal to deal and refusal to renew the one year lease.

The findings of the trial court on the equities and reliance were fully supported by the record.

II.

THE ORDER GRANTING A NEW TRIAL

The trial court refused to enter a judgment on the verdict but instead dismissed the case with prejudice, because of Union's reliance on prior [30] laws and because the "equities" warranted only prospective application of the new rule in Simpson and did not warrant application to the case at bar.

The trial court also granted Union's motion for a new trial "should a further trial be necessary."

HN7[] The grant or denial of a new trial rests within the sound discretion of the trial court and absent a showing of clear abuse of discretion will not be overturned on appeal. Oswald v. Cruz, 289 F.2d 488 (9 Cir. 1961); Moist Cold Refrigerator Co. v. Lou Johnson Co., 249 F.2d 246, 256 [*908] (9 Cir. 1957), cert. denied 356 U.S. 968, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1074, 78 S. Ct. 1008, where the court said:

> "But having permitted the jury to come to its conclusion on the facts, the trial judge then had the right, and indeed the duty, to weigh the evidence, as he saw it, and to set aside the verdict of the jury, even though supported by substantial evidence, where, in his conscientious opinion, the verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence or based upon evidence which is false, or to prevent, in [31] the sound discretion of the trial judge, a miscarriage of justice."

Appellant's contention that the verdict was "well within the range of lost values to Mr. Simpson for the destruction of his business" does not rest on correct principles of law. Appellant also confuses the rule for granting a judgment N.O.V. with the rules for granting a new trial. A judgment N.O.V. is improperly granted if there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict, Williams v. Nichols, 266 F.2d 389, 393 (4 Cir. 1959) where the case was remanded for an "analysis and appraisal by the trial court of the weight of all the evidence."

[9] See comments concerning the term "coercion" used in the Simpson opinion. Handler, supra note 8, at 64-5; Rahl, supra note 8, 29 A.B.A. Antitrust Section at 221-22; Rahl, supra note 8, 61 Nw. U.L. Rev. at 3, 8-9; 17 Stan. L. Rev. 519, 521-23 (1965); 2 Tulsa L.J. 55, 56-7 (1965); 37 U. Colo. L. Rev. 293, 294 (1965).

See Moore's Federal Practice, Sec. 5908(5) and particularly page 3817, where motions for a directed verdict or for judgment N.O.V. both raising the legal sufficiency of the evidence are "sharply distinguished" from a motion for a new trial which is "addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court." Liquid Veneer Corp. v. Smuckler, 90 F.2d 196 (9 Cir. 1937) and Peterman v. Indian Motorcycle Co., 216 F.2d 289, 292 (1 Cir. 1954) were cases where a motion for a new trial was denied. If they stand for the proposition appellant [32] contends for, -- that a verdict should not be set aside on a motion for new trial if "it can be sustained from any viewpoint of approach" (Liquid Veneer, page 205) they do not represent the present law of this circuit. Moist Cold Refrigerator Co. v. Lou Johnson, supra.

HN8[] The power of a court of appeal to review the granting or denying of a new trial for excessive or inadequate verdicts or on the ground the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, is not as broad as that of the trial court in granting or denying the motion for a new trial in the first instance. Southern Pacific Co. v. Guthrie, 186 F.2d 926, 932-3 (9 Cir. 1951), cert. den. 341 U.S. 904, 95 L. Ed. 1343, 71 S. Ct. 614; Siebrand v. Gossnell, 234 F.2d 81, 94 (9 Cir. 1956).

No detailed listing of the evidence supporting appellant's theory of damages is necessary. The trial court stated that after the verdict was returned he was "shocked" with it. He granted the new trial on the grounds "that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, shocks the conscience, [33] is grossly and monstrously excessive, is the result either of passion or prejudice or of consideration by the jury of factors irrelevant to the litigation, is speculative, conjectural and a miscarriage of justice."

Appellant's theory of damage was that his business had been destroyed and he purported to offer proof on the value of his business as a service station operator. In Standard Oil Company of California v. Moore, 251 F.2d 188 (9 Cir. 1957), cert. denied 356 U.S. 975, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1148, 78 S. Ct. 1139, this court had before it the question of valuing a retail gasoline business. It laid down the rule as follows:

> "It was Moore's contention that his business had been totally destroyed on August 15, 1952, when he could no longer obtain gasoline. He therefore asked the jury to measure his damages by the market value of the business on that date. Moore owned the land and the other capital assets of the business, and retained them when he went out of business. It follows that the only value which his business had before it was closed that it did not have afterwards was its 'going concern' or 'good will' value.
>
> "As one means of proving going concern [34] or good will value, Moore produced [*909] the opinion testimony of an expert witness. The hypothetical question asked of this witness included, as one of its assumptions, that in August, 1952, Moore was forty-one years of age, was in reasonably good health, and wanted to continue the management of the service station. Appellants argue that the question, as so framed, was irrelevant to the issue.
>
> "We agree. HN9[] In measuring the value of the good will of such a business, appropriate factors to be considered are: (1) What profit has the business made over and above an amount fairly attributable to the return on the capital investment and to the labor of the owner? (2) What is the reasonable prospect that this additional profit will continue into the future, considering all circumstances existing and known as of the date of the valuation? See Kimball Laundry Co. v. United States, 338 U.S. 1, 16-17, 69 S. Ct. 1434, 93 L. Ed. 1765. These are the factors which would influence a prospective purchaser. The special value which the business might have to Moore, or the profit potential [35] of the business beyond that which would be transferable to a purchaser, would have no effect on market value of the business. n44"
> "n44 Moore retains his life expectancy and business acumen. Assuming that he is entitled to, and so receives, the market value of the destroyed good will of his business, he can, at least theoretically, do as well with it as he could have done by continuing in business at his Fourth Avenue South location."

Appellant proceeded however as if his case was one involving personal injuries. He premised his proof on the theory that he could operate the station for his life expectancy, 24 years, and on a calculation of net profits for the period; and on the further assumption that, having lost the business, he would never have any other earnings for the rest of his life, just as if he had been personally permanently disabled.

Appellant's damage, if any, resulted from (1) lost profits, if any, during his operation of the station because of the illegal restraints imposed on him [36] by Union, and (2) the refusal of Union to renew his second one year lease and such further renewals as might be reasonably anticipated. [10] There was evidence of Union's policy to continually renew leases. A buyer, in valuing appellant's business, could reasonably take into account Union's renewal policy. But any damage suffered was, in general terms, damage to a going business and not personal injury or damage which would thereafter deprive appellant of all earning power from his services. The proper measure of damage was the market value of the business, i.e. the value of the goodwill of an operating business, and not the loss of earning power by appellant for his life time.

There was evidence that appellant remained in possession after his lease expired in May 1958 until June 5, 1958. He then operated a Mobil station for 2 years. After leaving the Mobil station he never again engaged in any branch of the oil or gasoline [37] business, and the record shows he had no desire to.

The proof also showed from his profit and loss statement that his "take home" from the Union station averaged $473.43 per month and from the Mobil station $476.95 per month. He worked 17 hours per day, 7 days a week during his first year at the Union station and during the second year 12 hours per day 7 days a week. But the "take home" was not net profits from a business, since no allowance was made for the value of his labor.

The earnings from the station were only material in so far as they had a bearing on the market value of the business. Except in this respect, appellant's earnings were totally irrelevant. The issues should have been, what was the value of the business, what money did appellant have invested in it, what was [*910] its net income after deducting a fair return on capital and fair compensation to appellant for his work, what were the prospects of continual renewals of the lease and finally, if illegal restraints were removed, what were the prospects of additional profits from the business as it became better established. These are the factors that a willing buyer would consider in determining fair [38] market value of the business.

Appellant's expert accountant played with figures, computed sums of money appellant might have earned at the service station and multiplied it by 24 years, his life expectancy. The $160,000 represented the present discounted value of about $10,500 per year over the 24 years period.

Clearly this type of evidence and computations does not comply with the method to value the loss of a business. No allowance was made for the value of appellant's labor, Standard Oil Company v. Moore, supra; and there was no diminution by reason of appellant's continued earning capacity.

Contention is made by appellant that affidavits taken from jurors and before the court caused or played a part in, the trial judge's decision to grant the motion for a new trial. Without discussing the appropriateness of such affidavits in this case, it is sufficient to state that the trial court expressly stated, in ruling on the motions for new trial that he did not rely on the jurors' affidavits.

We agree with the trial court that a $160,000 verdict for refusal to renew a one year lease is "monstrous" and against the weight of the evidence. The trial court did [39] not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial. [11]

The judgment is affirmed.

---

[10] There were also minor items of damage such as loss on sale of equipment, etc.

[11] Union properly requested instructions based on Standard Oil Co. of Cal. v. Moore, 251 F.2d 188 (9 Cir. 1957), cert. denied 356 U.S. 975, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1148, 78 S. Ct. 1139 (1958). They were rejected and exception taken. Union also requested an instruction that the jury should consider appellant's earning power in other occupations. It was also refused and exception taken. Thus the case went to jury much like a personal injury case in which the plaintiff was fully incapacitated and had lost his entire earning power.

End of Document

TNT Communications, Inc. v. Management Television Systems, Inc.

Supreme Court of New York, Appellate Division, First Department

May 1, 1969

No Number in Original

Reporter

32 A.D.2d 55 *; 299 N.Y.S.2d 692 ; 1969 N.Y. App. Div. LEXIS 4072 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,785

TNT Communications Inc., Appellant, v. Management Television Systems, Inc., et al., Respondents

Prior History: [1] Appeal from an order of the Supreme Court at Special Term (Abraham N. Geller, J.), entered January 6, 1969 in New York County, insofar as it denied plaintiff's motion to dismiss the second separate and distinct affirmative defense and granted defendants' cross motion to dismiss the second cause of action.

Disposition: Order entered January 6, 1969, so far as appealed from, unanimously modified, on the law, to the extent of dismissing the second separate and distinct affirmative defense, and, as so modified, affirmed, with $ 50 costs and disbursements to plaintiff-appellant.

Core Terms

defendants', allegations, anti trust law, counterclaim, violations, trade secret, disclosure, sustaining, wrongdoing, practices, closed circuit television, general allegation, cause of action, subject matter, unrelated, modified, network, screen, alleged wrongful conduct, unfair competition act, business practice, direct relation, no purpose, plaintiff-appellant, disbursements, appropriated, monopolistic, transactions, multi-media, proceedings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

HN1[] Price Discrimination, Defenses

Where the effect of sustaining a defense would be to "lower the dam" for the admission upon the trial of "a second main stream of evidence, with its own bundle of facts and law," thereby impeding or diverting the rightful progress of this action for the enforcement of an alleged lawful and valuable right, the defense should be avoided.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

HN2[] Price Discrimination, Defenses

Allegations of collateral wrongdoing in the form of general monopolistic business practices should not be acceptable as a defense to an action brought for the protection of legal and proper interests; nor should the defense be sustained on the basis of antitrust law violations unrelated to plaintiff's cause of action.

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes

Trade-marks, trade names and unfair competition -- trade secrets -- in action against plaintiff, former employees and associates and corporations to restrain disclosure and use of trade secrets relating to plaintiff's business, defense that plaintiff has engaged in acts of unfair competition and in conduct in violation of antitrust laws failed to show connection between plaintiff's alleged illegal practices and defendants' alleged wrongful conduct -- defense dismissed -- defense not sustainable under unclean hands doctrine -- defense not validated by allegations that plaintiff motivated by malice.

1. Plaintiff, [2] which alleged that it is engaged in the business of offering networks of closed circuit television and related media for use by private and public organizations, brought this action against former employees and their associates and corporations to restrain disclosure and use of trade secrets relating to its business and to recover damages resulting from the alleged wrongful conduct in such disclosure and use. A defense interposed by defendants alleges that plaintiff, for the purpose of achieving a dominant position in its business, has engaged in numerous acts of unfair competition and predatory practices, and in conduct in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States and of the State of New York. Defendants fail to show any connection between plaintiff's alleged illegal practices and defendants' alleged wrongful conduct. The defense lacks a proper showing that the plaintiff's alleged illegal acts have caused or will result in any injury to the lawful rights of defendants. Defendants' allegations merely tend to show unrelated wrongdoing. The defense should be dismissed.

2. The defense is not sustainable as an "unclean hands" defense. Such a defense is available only [3] when the illegal conduct of a plaintiff is directly related to the subject matter in litigation and the party seeking to invoke the doctrine was injured by such conduct.

3. The defense is not validated by the general allegations that the plaintiff's actions are motivated by malice and that this action is brought with intent to harass and destroy the defendants' corporation which is engaged in business as a competitor of plaintiff.

Counsel: Marshall C. Berger of counsel (Edward C. Wallace and Martin D. Ginsburg with him on the brief; Weil, Gotshal & Manges, attorneys), for appellant.

Joseph H. Einstein of counsel (Jay H. Topkis with him on the brief; Paul, Weiss, Goldberg, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, attorneys), for respondents.

Judges: Eager, J. P. Tilzer, McGivern, Nunez and McNally, JJ., concur.

Opinion by: EAGER

Opinion

[*56] [693] The plaintiff, according to the allegations of its complaint, is engaged "in the business of offering networks of closed circuit television and related media" for use by private and public organizations, "with emphasis on large screen displays to groups rather than individual viewing." It has brought this action against former [4] employees and their associates and corporations to restrain disclosure and use of trade secrets relating to its multi-media network business and to recover damages resulting from the alleged wrongful conduct in such disclosure and use.

[*57] [694] The defendants' second defense and counterclaim, interposed in the action, alleges that plaintiff, for the purpose of achieving a "dominant position" in its business, "has engaged in numerous acts of unfair competition and predatory practices", with some specification of such acts; and there is included the general allegation that plaintiff "has achieved and seeks to maintain a dominant position in the large screen closed circuit television business by conduct in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States [and] * * * of the State of New York". The plaintiff moved to strike the defense and counterclaim and Special Term granted the motion to the extent of striking the same as a counterclaim while sustaining defendants' allegations as a defense. Plaintiff appeals, contending that defendants' pleading statement is not available as a defense. We conclude that the defense is not sustainable.

The defendants' allegations [5] fail to show any connection between plaintiff's alleged illegal practices and the defendants' alleged wrongful conduct in appropriating the trade secrets appertaining solely to the multi-media network branch of the plaintiff's business. Defendants' alleged thievery and plagiarism were and are independent acts unrelated to plaintiff's improper business methods set forth in the defense. Furthermore, the stated defense lacks a proper showing that the plaintiff's alleged "acts of unfair competition and predatory practices", including alleged antitrust violations, have caused or will result in any injury to the lawful rights of defendants.

Under the circumstances, defendants' allegations of monopolistic practices and antitrust law violations by plaintiff in the conduct of its general large screen closed circuit television business can furnish no justification for the alleged stealing and wrongful use by defendants of the trade secrets. The defendants' allegations merely tend to show unrelated wrongdoing. But collateral wrongdoing is not generally the basis for a defense in any case. Although such wrongdoing may, on a proper showing of injury, furnish the basis for a counterclaim, [6] here, the defendants' counterclaim was properly dismissed and they did not appeal.

The fact is that proof of the acts alleged in the particular defense can serve no purpose other than to import into this case a multiplicity of complex transactions having no bearing upon the subject matter of the action. The sustaining of the defense would permit its use as a vehicle to enable the defendants to conduct pretrial disclosure proceedings relative to plaintiff's general business transactions over many years and long antedating [*58] the wrongful conduct charged against the defendants. Such disclosure proceedings would appear to serve no purpose other than to allow defendants to probe generally into the business practices and secrets of the plaintiff. In reality, HN1[] the effect of sustaining the defense would be to "lower the dam" for the admission upon the trial of "a second main stream of evidence, with its own bundle of facts and [695] law," thereby impeding or diverting the rightful progress of this action for the enforcement of an alleged lawful and valuable right. This should be avoided. (See Knapp Engraving Co. v. Keystone Photo Engraving Corp., 1 A D 2d 170, 173.) [7]

We conclude that HN2[] allegations of collateral wrongdoing in the form of general monopolistic business practices should not be acceptable as a defense to an action brought for the protection of legal and proper interests; nor should the defense be sustained on the basis of antitrust law violations unrelated to plaintiff's cause of action. The defense should not be allowed where, in effect, it serves merely as an indirect method of enforcing compliance with the antitrust laws. (Cf. Kelly v. Kosuga, 358 U.S. 516.)

The decision of Remington Rand, Inc. v. International Business Mach. Corp. (167 Misc. 108), cited at Special Term and relied upon by defendants is not in point. There, the defense based upon alleged antitrust law violations was sustained because the violations were held to invalidate the contract which formed the basis of the cause of action defended against. Thus, there was a direct relationship between the subject matter of the cause of action and the defense that is not present here.

We readily reject defendants' urging that their allegations are sustainable as an "unclean hands" defense. It is settled that such a defense is available only when the illegal [8] conduct of a plaintiff is "directly related to the subject matter in litigation and the party seeking to invoke the doctrine was injured by such conduct". (National Distillers Corp. v. Seyopp Corp., 17 N Y 2d 12, 15-16.) Here, as aforenoted, the elements of direct relationship and special injury are absent.

Finally, the defense is not validated by the general allegation that the plaintiff's actions are motivated by malice and by the general allegation that this action is brought with intent to harass and destroy the defendants' corporation which is engaged in business as a competitor of plaintiff. The ulterior motives and purposes of plaintiff, if any, in bringing the suit are immaterial if, as alleged by it, defendants have wrongfully appropriated its valuable trade secrets. The question here is solely whether plaintiff's interests are entitled to the protection [*59] of the court. If so, the right to such protection may not be defeated by proof of the existence of ill will toward defendants. (See Ramsey v. Gould, 57 Barb. 398, 402; 1 C. J. S., Actions, § 24.)

The order, entered January 6, 1969, sustaining the second defense as such, should be modified, [9] on the law, to provide that such defense be dismissed, and the order should otherwise be affirmed, with costs and disbursements to plaintiff-appellant.

[696] Order entered January 6, 1969, so far as appealed from, unanimously modified, on the law, to the extent of dismissing the second separate and distinct affirmative defense, and, as so modified, affirmed, with $ 50 costs and disbursements to plaintiff-appellant.

End of Document

United States v. Uniroyal, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

May 5, 1969

No. 64 Civ. 1949

Reporter

300 F. Supp. 84 *; 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10949 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,786

United States, Plaintiff, v. Uniroyal, Inc., formerly known as United States Rubber Co., Defendant

Core Terms

retailers, practices, salesmen, prices, sales manager, Sherman Act, violations, injunctive relief, manufacturer, resale price, discount, suggested retail price, retail price, episodes, footwear, discontinuance, advertising, conspiracy, selling, personnel, cases, abandoned, canvas, proven, sales, price-cutting, price-fixing, merchandise, injunction, resumption

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A combination or conspiracy between a manufacturer-supplier and its retailer-customers which interferes with the setting of retail prices by free market forces is unlawful per se. Nor may a manufacturer-supplier lawfully restrict its retailer-customers' dispositions of the goods it sells them. The authorities have always distinguished between situations, on the one hand, in which a manufacturer-supplier simply announces its suggested retail prices and refuses to sell to distributors and dealers which do not maintain the suggested price and those situations, on the other hand, in which the manufacturer-supplier takes further steps to effectuate compliance with its suggestion. In the former category, the manufacturer is merely exercising its lawful right to select its customers where other and equivalent brands are readily available on the market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Although a unilateral refusal to deal which does not eventuate in an agreement does not itself violate § 1 of the Sherman Act, no matter what the reason, any express resale price-fixing agreement is per se unlawful. The combination or conspiracy required by § 1 of the Sherman Act, however, need not be express; concerted action may be inferred from a course of conduct by the alleged participants. Moreover, an unlawful combination is not just such as arises from a price maintenance agreement, express or implied; such a combination is also organized if the producer secures adherence to his suggested prices by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy. Thus, a comprehensive and firmly enforced retail price policy, resulting in some cases in unwilling compliance by retailers, constitutes a violation. A supplier may not use coercion on its retail outlets to achieve resale price maintenance. It matters not what the coercive device is.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN3[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Where the customers' acquiescence in the suggested prices of the manufacturer is not a matter of individual free choice prompted alone by the desirability of the product, an agreement or combination in violation of the antitrust laws may be found. The manufacturer may not induce the acquiescence of some retailers by promising the adherence of others or institute a program of making threats or a system for detection and reporting.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Mere complaints by a manufacturer's customers that retailers are engaging in price-cutting or discounting do not in themselves constitute a combination and violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. However, if a manufacturer reacts to such complaints by cutting off the offending retailers, a conspiracy or combination may be found to exist. And if the manufacturer goes still further and induces the retailers to discontinue their discounting practices, the requisite agreement is apparent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN5[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Once the previous affirmative efforts of a manufacturer to secure compliance with its suggested retail prices have been shown sufficiently to establish the existence of an unlawful conspiracy or combination, then a refusal to deal, undertaken in pursuance of the conspiracy or combination, transgresses the antitrust laws.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN6[] Duties & Liabilities, Unlawful Acts of Agents

Liability may be imposed upon a corporation for the acts of its agents, contrary to their orders and without authority, express or implied, merely because they were committed in the course of the corporation's business and within the scope of the agents' employment.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN7[] Duties & Liabilities, Unlawful Acts of Agents

A corporation has a responsibility to eliminate unlawful practices by its salesmen and branch managers in the course of their routine labors - the selling of the corporation's products - even if the extent of its business precludes the personal supervision of high level officers who, as a result, rely upon written and oral instructions to their subordinates to insure that their policies will be carried out.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pretrial Judgments > Nonsuits > Voluntary Nonsuits

HN8[] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

When a corporation is shown to have settled into a continuing practice or entered into a conspiracy violative of antitrust laws, courts will not assume that it has been abandoned without clear proof. It is the duty of the courts to beware of efforts to defeat injunctive relief by protestations of repentance and reform, especially when abandonment seems timed to anticipate suit, and there is probability of resumption.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

HN9[] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

A Court's power to grant injunctive relief survives discontinuance of the illegal conduct. The purpose of an injunction is to prevent future violations, and, of course, it can be utilized even without a showing of past wrongs. But the moving party must satisfy the court that relief is needed. The necessary determination is that there exists some cognizable danger of recurrent violation, something more than the mere possibility which serves to keep the case alive. To be considered are the bona fides of the expressed intent to comply, the effectiveness of the discontinuance and, in some cases, the character of the past violations. Postponement of suit indicates doubt on the prosecutor's part as much as intransigence on the defendant's.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

HN10[] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

The determination necessary to the granting of injunctive relief in an antitrust case, that there exists some cognizable danger of recurrent violation, is a determination that there exists a risk which is something more than the mere possibility which serves to keep the case alive.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > Public Interest Exception

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Mootness > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > Voluntary Cessation Exception

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

HN11[] Mootness, Public Interest Exception

When a corporation accused of illegal conduct under § 1 of the Sherman Act is free to return to its old ways, its voluntary cessation of illegal conduct does not make the case moot, even though there is no likelihood of resumption of unlawful conduct. The Court retains power to hear and determine the case because a controversy may remain which the public has an interest in having settled. The test for mootness is a stringent one. Mere voluntary cessation of allegedly illegal conduct does not moot a case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Injunctions

HN12[] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

There has been some confusion over what, if anything, is the difference between (i), the absence of any "cognizable danger of recurrent violation" which leads to the denial of injunctive relief in an action under § 1 of the Sherman Act and (ii), the absence of a "mere possibility" that the wrong will be repeated that deprives a Court of the power to hear and determine a case altogether. The answer seems to have traditionally been found in the reasons behind the corporate defendant's discontinuance of unlawful practices. Such a discontinuance does not relieve a Court of the duty to pass on the question of legality where by the mere volition of the parties the combination could come into existence at any moment. Where, however, the discontinuance was impelled by extrinsic circumstances beyond the defendant's control, a Court lacks power to decide the academic question left behind.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Divestiture

HN13[] Sherman Act, Remedies

Where there has been no showing on the record that the reason for a corporate defendant's voluntary cessation of its unlawful pricing practices was fear of suit brought about by the Government investigation in a case, the question is whether the abandonment of unlawful price-maintenance practices due to a decision that such practices are economically unsound is "action by the defendant" or a result of a force beyond its control. If it is the latter, the case is moot and the complaint should be dismissed. If it is the former, the defendant should be adjudged to have violated § 1 of the Sherman Act and the Court should retain jurisdiction for the granting of further relief, upon application of the Government, in the event of future violations. The United States Supreme Court has twice indicated a preference for the latter course in cases where business considerations have prompted a defendant's reversal in policy.

Judges: [1] Pollack, D.J.

Opinion by: POLLACK

Opinion

[*86] POLLACK, D.J.:

The complaint in this action was filed on June 24, 1964 under Section 4 of the Sherman Act to prevent and restrain defendant from alleged continuing violations of Section 1 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, in interstate trade and commerce in rubber-soled canvas footwear, produced and sold by defendant under the names of "Keds" and "Kedettes". [*] The first paragraph of the multi-paragraph prayer for relief contains the customary request that this Court "adjudge and decree" that the defendant violated the Sherman Act. The remaining paragraphs specify the various injunctive remedies sought against the defendant to restrain its future conduct.

[2] The defendant filed its answer on July 15, 1964 denying all of the substantive [*87] allegations of the complaint. On June 21, 1967, an order was filed amending the caption of the action to show defendant's change of name from United States Rubber Company to Uniroyal, Inc.

Both sides engaged in extensive discovery, by deposition and otherwise, which was completed shortly before the commencement of the trial. This included approximately 75 depositions, five sets of interrogatories, the exchange of a vast quantity of documents both by agreement of counsel and by formal process and requests to admit pursuant to Rule 36 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The parties stipulated to a number of matters and these are reflected in the findings of fact contained herein.

---

[*] In 1967, defendant changed the designation of its "Kedettes" footwear to its registered trademark "Grasshoppers", a name formerly used to designate a style of "Keds". In 1968, defendant broadened the "Grasshoppers" line to include leather sandals previously called "Royal Continentals" which are not included in this action. Throughout this opinion and the findings herein, the term "Kedettes", whether or not so expressly stated, shall include the footwear now called "Grasshoppers" as well, except for that portion of the line formerly called "Royal Continentals".

The Government claims that the defendant has combined and conspired to eliminate price competition among retail dealers and to curtail or eliminate the participation of discount retailers in the distribution of "Keds". As a result, the Government asserts, consumers were forced to pay high, arbitrary and non-competitive prices for "Keds" and "Kedettes".

The Government sought to establish that the defendant made [3] known to its retailers "suggested" or "anticipated" resale prices and secured their promise, in advance of sales, to resell "Keds" and "Kedettes" only at those prices. The Government further claimed that, on the basis of complaints made by competing retailers, the defendant sought to convince price-cutting retailers to maintain prices in the future and that in most cases such retailers agreed. It also claimed that in a number of instances the defendant refused to sell "Keds" and "Kedettes" to retailers who did not adhere to the suggested or anticipated prices and renewed such sales only after receiving an assurance of future adherence. Further, it was claimed that to prevent price-cutters from obtaining the canvas footwear from other sources, the defendant secured agreements from retailers that they would not resell to other retailers; and that, to assure the elimination of retail price competition, the defendant obtained the agreement of price-cutting retailers to cease sales at particular locations.

Defendant denied the charge of conspiracy. It presented a defense consisting, in part, of its refutation and explanation of the circumstances of a substantial number of episodes [4] of alleged unlawful activity. Defendant asserted that any unlawful practices on the part of its sales personnel were ancient, sporadic, isolated occurrences which had no anti-competitive effects at the time and have none now. Moreover, defendant contended that substantial direct and positive testimony and other evidence conclusively showed that these practices were unauthorized.

The evidence adduced at trial established the existence of thirty-eight episodes in which some of defendant's salesmen and occasionally, sales managers, took action intended to curb price-cutting. Although such episodes were too few in number to have had any significant impact on competition, they were nonetheless violative of the Sherman Act and should have been eradicated by a more alert and stern policing system than defendant had in effect at the time.

During the past six to eight years, there has been a substantial rise and spread of chain and discount operations and other price-cutting retailers. These have come to be accepted as a way of retail life. There has also been an increase in the number of lines of rubber-soled canvas footwear, including imported ones, competitive with "Keds" and "Kedettes". [5] Concurrently with these developments, antitrust law has gradually reached a more restrictive definition of permissible conduct on the part of a manufacturer-supplier aimed at maintaining resale prices on its goods.

Defendant has abandoned the practices violative of the Sherman Act; it has instructed its sales staff that any attempt to maintain resale prices is unlawful; and it has changed personnel and assignments within its sales organization to [*88] insure proper business conduct on their part.

Looking backwards, it is plain that all parts of the sales organization did not fall into legal step at once. But the evidence is clear and convincing that the activity of the kind complained of by the Government has ceased; and the defendant's intent, expressed on the record, to comply with the law in the future is accepted as bona fide. Accordingly, on the entire record presented to this Court, no substantial basis has been established by credible evidence that there is any danger of recurrent violation. Hence, there is no warrant for injunctive relief.

The considerations in detail that have led the Court to these findings and conclusions are as follows.

Defendant is a New [6] Jersey corporation. It has its principal place of business at 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, New York in this district. It engages in interstate commerce by manufacturing, advertising and selling rubber-soled canvas footwear (often called "canvas footwear") and other products.

Defendant is the largest manufacturer and distributor of rubber-soled canvas footwear in the United States. It markets certain of its men's, women's and children's footwear under its registered trademarks, "Keds" and

"Kedettes". Defendant advertises such footwear nationally and locally by way of television, radio and periodicals, and distributes most of its "Keds" and "Kedettes" to retailers throughout the United States for resale to consumers.

Defendant does its domestic manufacturing and selling through separate operating divisions. It formerly manufactured and sold "Keds" and "Kedettes" through its footwear and general products division. That division was dissolved on April 17, 1962, and from that date defendant has continued to manufacture and sell "Keds" and "Kedettes" through its consumer and industrial products division. Both divisions have had their main headquarters in New York City [7] and ancillary headquarters in Naugatuck, Connecticut.

The wholesale price levels of the different styles of the "Keds" and "Kedettes" that are offered by the defendant differ substantially from one another. The cheaper lines of "Keds" have included at different times such styles as the "Rover", the "Duo-Life Bal", the "Olympia" and the "Gladiator".

Defendant from prior to 1958 to the present has communicated "suggested" or "anticipated" retail prices to many of its retailers throughout the United States through published lists or oral communications to such retailers by defendant's employees and agents.

Such prices have been distributed locally by defendant's district sales managers or salesmen and not on a nationwide basis by defendant's central offices. In some districts some salesmen have distributed such lists, and others have not. Some of the salesmen have given such lists only to those who have asked for them. The suggested retail prices given in the lists distributed by the district sales managers or salesmen have not necessarily coincided with those contained in the lists distributed by defendant's central offices.

The relevant legal rules are clear. HN1[] A combination [8] or conspiracy between a manufacturer-supplier and its retailer-customers which interferes with the setting of retail prices by free market forces is unlawful per se. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968). Nor may a manufacturer-supplier lawfully restrict its retailer-customers' dispositions of the goods it sells them. United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967).

The authorities have always distinguished between situations, on the one hand, in which a manufacturer-supplier simply announces its suggested retail prices and refuses to sell to distributors [*89] and dealers which do not maintain the suggested price and those situations, on the other hand, in which the manufacturer-supplier takes further steps to effectuate compliance with its suggestion. In the former category, the manufacturer is merely exercising its lawful right to select its customers where other and equivalent brands are readily available on the market. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 [9] S. Ct. 465 (1919), cited and explained in United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. at 376 87 S. Ct. 1856; United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1959); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 722, 88 L. Ed. 1024, 64 S. Ct. 805 (1944); FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 452-453, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 (1922); Susser v. Carvel Corp., 332 F.2d 505 (2d Cir. 1964), cert. dismissed, 381 U.S. 125, 85 S. Ct. 1364, 14 L. Ed. 2d 284 (1965); Interphoto Corp. v. Minolta Corp., 295 F. Supp. 711, 1969 TRADE CASES P72,694 (S.D.N.Y. 1969, Herlands, J.).

HN2[] Although a unilateral refusal to deal which does not eventuate in an agreement does not itself violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act, no matter what the reason, see Turner, The Definition of Agreement under the Sherman Act, Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655, 690 (1962), any express resale price-fixing agreement is per se unlawful. Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968); Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., [10] 321 U.S. 707, 88 L. Ed. 1024, 64 S. Ct. 805 (1944); United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U.S. 241, 86 L. Ed. 1408, 62 S. Ct. 1088 (1942); United States v. A. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U.S. 85, 64 L. Ed. 471, 40 S. Ct. 251 (1920); Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911). The combination or conspiracy required by Section 1, however, need not be express; concerted action may be inferred from a course of conduct by the alleged participants. Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 83 L. Ed. 610, 59 S. Ct. 467 (1939); Girardi v. Gates Rubber Co. Sales Div. Inc., 325 F.2d 196 (9th Cir. 1963). Moreover, > an unlawful combination is not just such as arises from a price maintenance agreement, express or implied; such a combination is also organized if the producer secures adherence to his suggested prices by means which go beyond his mere declination to sell to a customer who will not observe his announced policy. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. at 43.

Thus, a comprehensive and firmly enforced retail price policy, resulting in some cases in unwilling compliance by retailers, constitutes [11] a violation. Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 (1968). "[A] supplier may not use coercion on its retail outlets to achieve resale price maintenance. . . . [It] matters not what the coercive device is." Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. at 17.

HN3[] Where the customers' acquiescence in the suggested prices of the manufacturer is not "a matter of individual free choice prompted alone by the desirability of the product ", an agreement or combination in violation of the antitrust laws may be found. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. at 47. The manufacturer may not induce the acquiescence of some retailers by promising the adherence of others or institute a program of making threats or a system for detection and reporting. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 84 L. Ed. 852, 60 S. Ct. 618 (1940); FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 (1922).

HN4[] Mere complaints by a manufacturer's customers that retailers are engaging in price-cutting or discounting do not in themselves constitute a combination and violation of Section 1. Interphoto Corp. v. Minolta [12] Corp., 1969 TRADE CASES [*90] at 86,478, n. 3; Carbon Steel Products Corp. v. Alan Wood Steel Co., 289 F. Supp. 584 (S.D.N.Y. 1968); and cf. Klein v. American Luggage Works, Inc., 323 F.2d 787, 791 (3d Cir. 1963). However, if a manufacturer reacts to such complaints by cutting off the offending retailers, a conspiracy or combination may be found to exist. And if the manufacturer goes still further and induces the retailers to discontinue their discounting practices, the requisite agreement is apparent. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1959); FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 (1922).

HN5[] Once the previous affirmative efforts of the manufacturer to secure compliance with its suggested retail prices have been shown sufficiently to establish the existence of an unlawful conspiracy or combination, then a refusal to deal, undertaken in pursuance of the conspiracy or combination, transgresses the antitrust laws. United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966); Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 84 L. Ed. 852, 60 S. Ct. 618 (1940); Interphoto [13] Corp. v. Minolta Corp., 295 F. Supp. 711 (S.D.N.Y. 1969).

Turning now to the case at bar, the relevant products include numerous items. [1] Although defendant's "Keds" and "Kedettes" have sustained a loss in their share of the market, defendant has sold these products to between 25,000 and 30,000 retailers at any given time during the period of the alleged conspiracy, [2] [14] through over 200 salesmen across the country. [3]

---

[1] Both the "Keds" and "Kedettes" lines of canvas footwear comprise many different styles and types, each of which has its own name and code number. In 1963, for example, defendant offered for sale over 100 different "Keds" styles and over 50 different "Kedettes" styles. Many of these styles included a number of different colors as well as a full range of sizes and widths.

[2] During the past three years, defendant has sold "Keds" and "Kedettes" (or both) to retailers whose number has totaled:

1966

28,801

1967

27,435

[15] [*91] It is against this background that we must view the thirty-eight incidents of violations of the Sherman Act by resale price maintenance acts or interference with disposition of merchandise sold to a retailer which the proof established. These occurred in sixteen [4] of defendant's [*92] twenty-five then existent branches. [5] The

---

1968

24,461

(first six months).

Although precise data is not available, a reliable, conservative estimate by the defendant places the total number of retailers to whom it has sold "Keds", "Kedettes", or both at over 25,000 for each year since 1958.

[3] These salesmen, sometimes called sales representatives, have numbered between 200 and 225 in recent years, each being assigned to a geographical area called a territory. These sales representatives work under the supervision of district sales managers. Defendant has assigned each district sales manager to a geographical area called a district, sometimes referred to as a "red-line" district. Each such manager has his headquarters within his district at a local office called a branch. Branches have been located in various cities throughout the country. Each district sales manager has a number of salesmen reporting to him and he assigns to each of them a territory within his district. The district sales managers report to regional sales managers, each of whom is located within the region and supervises a number of district sales managers. Regional managers report to the manager of branch sales, who is stationed at defendant's principal office in New York City. Until April 17, 1962, the manager of branch sales reported to the general sales manager of the footwear and general products division. The latter reported to the general manager of that division, then a corporate vice president. Since April 18, 1962, the manager of branch sales reports to a divisional vice president of the consumer and industrial products division. The latter reports to the president of that division, who reports to the president of the corporation, Uniroyal's chief executive officer.

Defendant compensates all of its sales employees in a manner calculated to encourage them to increase the volume of "Keds" and "Kedettes" sales. The manager of branch sales, each regional sales manager, each district sales manager and each sales representative receive a fixed salary plus an annual bonus. The bonus represents a substantial fraction of the employee's income and is directly proportional to the volume of sales produced by him, or, in the case of a manager, by his subordinates. Defendant also uses other means to encourage its sales employees to increase sales volume and to expand distribution by opening new accounts.

[4] The incidents proven, classified by branch, are as follows:

Date

Specific Location

Los Angeles, Cal. Branch

1958

San Diego, Cal.

1960

Santa Monica, Cal.

Denver, Colo. Branch

1963

Lamar, Colo.

1964

Boulder, Colo.

Miami, Fla. Branch

defendant's conspiratorial conduct actually proven over a period exceeding a decade involved slightly over fifteen

---

1959-65

Pompano Beach, Fla.

Atlanta, Ga. Branch

1962

Cordele, Ga.

Kansas City, Kan. Branch

1960-64

C. R. Anthony (see below)

1961

Topeka, Kan.

1961

Topeka, Kan.

New Orleans, La. Branch

1958

New Orleans, La.

Baltimore, Md. Branch

1960

Roanoke, Va.

Boston, Mass. Branch

1958

Waltham, Mass.

1958

Hartford, Conn.

1958-61

Conn. and Mass.

1961

Conn. and Mass.

1961

Torrington, Conn.

1962

Gloucester, Mass.

1962

Winchester, Mass.

1962

Fall River, Mass.

1962

Boston, Mass.

one-hundredths of one percent (0.15%) of the total number of customers on defendant's books at any given point in

---

St. Louis, Mo. Branch

1960

Berland (see below)

1960-62

Berland (see below)

Buffalo, N.Y. Branch

1958-64

Buffalo, N.Y.

1958-67

Hamburg, East Aurora, N.Y.

1962

Berland Cheektowaga, N.Y.

(see below)

New York, N.Y. Branch

1961

Berland, Levittown, N.Y.

(see below)

Cincinnati, O. Branch

1958

Elwood, Inc.

1961

Kenwood, O.

1961

Dayton, O.

1961

Cincinnati, O.

1962

Newark, O.

Pittsburgh, Pa. Branch

1958

Charleston, W. Va.

1962

Charleston, W. Va.

Dallas, Tex. Branch

1958

Marfa, Tex.

Houston, Tex. Branch

that period. [6] Of the thirty-eight episodes proven, nine arose in or prior to 1962 in the Boston Branch area while

---

1963

Austin, Tex.

Seattle, Wash. Branch

1954

Bellevue, Wash.

1962

Seattle, Wash.

1963

Renton, Wash.

Kenneth M. Kaligian was Assistant District Sales Manager or District Sales Manager. Thus, one of defendant's then

---

C. R. Anthony is a chain of department stores in 21 or 22 states west of the Mississippi River comprised of 310 stores and with its headquarters in Oklahoma City, Okla. Berland Shoes, Inc., a subsidiary of Genesco, is another multi-outlet chain which operates leased shoe departments in stores across the country. Both are known discount operations. However, the violations in connection therewith centered not only around prices but also around transshipment by these customers of "Keds" and "Kedettes" to other of their outlets outside of the territory of the Uniroyal branch that had initially sold them the shoes. Defendant has since accommodated its distribution operation to the needs of chains such as these.

[5] [17] Defendant's footwear branches from 1958 to date, listed in alphabetical order by state, are:

Los Angeles, Cal.

San Francisco, Cal.

Denver, Colo.

Miami, Fla.

Atlanta, Ga.

Chicago, Ill.

Kansas City, Kan.

New Orleans, La.

Baltimore, Md.

Boston, Mass.

Detroit, Mich.

Minneapolis, Minn.

Milwaukee, Wis. (opened 1961, closed Dec. 31, 1966)

St. Louis, Mo.

Omaha, Neb. (closed May 31, 1967)

Newark, N.J.

Buffalo, N.Y.

New York, N.Y.

Cincinnati, O.

Cleveland, O. (closed July 1, 1967)

Philadelphia, Pa.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

twenty-five branches contributed almost one-fourth of the incidents proven by the Government. Five other episodes occurred in or prior to 1962 in the Cincinnati Branch area, in which John R. Eble was the District Sales Manager. Cincinnati, then, contributed almost one-eighth of the incidents proven. Together, these two branches account for almost thirty-seven percent of the violations of [16] the Sherman Act charged to defendant.

[18] Nineteen alleged episodes, in thirteen branches, adduced by the Government as evidence of unlawful resale price interference, coercion or agreements are resolved on the facts and issues of credibility against the Government and in [*93] favor of the defendant. [7] [19] Of these, two episodes occurred in the Newark, New

---

Dallas, Tex.

Houston, Tex.

Seattle, Wash.

[6] This percentage was calculated using 25,000 as the number of retail customers. Initially the Government filed 68 proposed findings of which 58 represented alleged factual episodes of efforts by defendant to suppress price-cutting practices or to restrict resale or reshipment of its products or both. Some of these incidents were not proved by credible evidence and some were withdrawn. Had the Government proven every one of these incidents and withdrawn none, it would have shown an adverse effect on less than two-tenths of one per cent (.2%) of defendant's customers.

[7] The Government failed to establish with credible proof that violations occurred in the following episodes charged:

Date

Specific Location

Los Angeles, Cal. Branch

1958

Norwalk, Cal.

1960, 1962

Norwalk, Cal.

San Francisco, Cal. Branch

1961

Oakland, Cal.

Miami, Fla. Branch

1961

St. Petersburg, Fla.

Kansas City, Kan. Branch

1966

Kansas City, Mo.

New Orleans, La. Branch

1960

New Orleans, La.

1963

Hattiesburg, Miss.

Baltimore, Md. Branch

1961-66

Jersey branch in which no other proof of violations was offered by the Government. Additionally, defendant has

---

Pulaski, Va.

Boston, Mass. Branch

1959

Waltham, Mass.

Newark, N.J. Branch

1963

Teaneck, N.J.

1963

Englewood, N.J.

Buffalo, N.Y. Branch

1962

Binghamton, Utica, N.Y.

Cincinnati, Ohio Branch

1961

Wilmington, Ohio

1961

Cincinnati, Ohio

Pittsburgh, Pa. Branch

1958 to date

Keystone Stores Chain

Dallas, Tex. Branch

1960

Kermit, Tex.

Seattle, Wash. Branch

1954

Bellevue, Wash.

1960

Helena, Mont.

1963

Chehalis, Wash.

conclusively shown that in regions as to which the Government has adduced no credible proof, retail resale pricing has been free of interference by defendant for at least the past five to six years; these were chiefly the major metropolitan regions. [8]

The present case, involving de minimis economic consequences of isolated pricing practices adopted by a few salesmen contrary to their employer's unequivocal instructions, is to be sharply distinguished from the broad restrictive impact on competition resulting from a pervasive price-fixing scheme designed to impose market-wide controls over the prices at which the manufacturer's goods are sold. E.g., Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1959); and Dr. Miles Medical Co. [20] v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911).

In this case, the violations were not indicative of any national price-fixing scheme. There were no express, written resale price-fixing agreements. There was no attempt at the higher levels of the defendant's organization to enforce or cause to be enforced a price structure upon the retail tradesmen.

In addition, there is other evidence which suggests the absence of any plan or intention to enforce suggested retail [*94] prices. For example, defendant has never signed or had in effect any agreement fixing retail prices of "Keds" or "Kedettes" under any fair trade law. Nor has defendant ever attempted to enter into any such agreement. The inference suggested above to be drawn from this is demonstrated by United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 237 F. Supp. 323, 331-2 (N.D. Ill. 1965), rev'd on other grounds, 388 U.S. 365, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1249, 87 S. Ct. 1856 (1967).

Defendant has not "preticketed" "Keds" or "Kedettes" or otherwise marked any such product, its container or display material with a retail price, coded or uncoded. See FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. [21] Ct. 150 (1922); Klein v. American Luggage Works, Inc., 323 F.2d 787 (3d Cir. 1963); and United States v. Serta Associates, Inc., 296 F. Supp. 1121 (N.D. Ill. 1968).

Defendant has engaged in national advertising and promotion of "Keds" and "Kedettes" without referring to retail prices. Defendant has provided television stations with visual and audio material intended for broadcasting on [8] The Government has conceded that it has no direct evidence of violations of the antitrust laws in the Cleveland, Detroit and Chicago branches. Defendant's evidence clearly established the existence of a competitive atmosphere and freedom from restraint or interference with retail pricing in the Chicago branch as well as in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Defendant also showed the absence in New York City, Missouri, Massachusetts and California of restraint on or interference with retail pricing.

---

fashion and similar programs. These releases have referred to retail prices, but in almost every case, the reference has properly been in terms of an approximation. United States v. Serta Associates, Inc., supra.

Defendant has made available to all retail merchants to whom it sells "Keds" or "Kedettes" advertising mats showing the price for the advertised product as "$0.00". This has allowed the retailer to insert whatever price he wished when arranging to have the advertisement printed.

Defendant has also made available to retailers price tags for use in window and other displays. These tags bear the name "Keds", but leave a blank space in which the retailer may insert the price upon which he decides. See, Susser v. Carvel Corp., 332 F.2d 505 (2d Cir. 1964), cert. dismissed, 381 U.S. 125, [22] 85 S. Ct. 1364, 14 L. Ed. 2d 284 (1965).

Finally, the defendant has sold to retailers quantities of discontinued styles which have competed with current styles. Defendant has not suggested retail prices for such discontinued merchandise. Some of the defendant's district sales managers have encouraged the salesmen to seek out and sell "Keds" and "Kedettes" to discount houses or to other retailers who habitually sell at reduced prices for the purposes of increasing volume of sales.

Other courts, faced with factual situations not dissimilar to the one existing in the case at bar, have failed to find a violation of law.

In Schwinn, at 237 F. Supp. pp. 331-332, Judge Perry wrote:

> The plaintiff has failed to prove the vital part of the price-fixing conspiracy upon which plaintiff has through counsel most diligently and fervently persisted. But dedication, sincerity and hard work cannot supply evidence. When a few witnesses come in and tell orally of fixed prices and threats, and then the records of actual sales come in literally from scores of retailers, the court has no alternative but to find there was no price-fixing scheme through a conspiracy between the defendants [23] or otherwise. This court is convinced and the record of the evidence shows that the defendant Schwinn devoutly hoped that its retail franchises would hew close to the suggested price list, but it also shows that, whatever some officer or representative may have said or written, when retailers met competition in interbrand or even intrabrand bicycles, no action was taken by Schwinn or any of the distributors or agents of either.

In United States v. Hudnut, 8 F.2d 1010 (S.D.N.Y. 1925), Judge Augustus N. Hand commented:

> It is hardly useful to review in detail the 73 cases of retailers to whom the defendant sold its goods, and who were cut off for price-cutting, and reinstated. These are but a small fraction [*95] of 40,000 customers, who purchased its perfumes and toilet articles. . . .
>
> On the whole, there were among the 73 cases very few instances indeed where Hudnut's salesmen, even with the inevitable enthusiasm of such persons, did anything like make an agreement to fix a resale price. . . .
>
> The government has been treated with unusual frankness and given full access to the defendant's files. If some salesmen have occasionally done things which may merit [24] criticism . . . there is no body of transactions which merit condemnation for violation of the Sherman Act.

Also worthy of note here is the view taken by Chief Judge Kirkpatrick in United States v. Kohler Co., 1953 TRADE CASES P67,453, at p. 68,289 (E.D. Pa. 1953):

> [In] a business, as extensive as the present defendant's, sporadic instances of attempted restraint of competition on the part of a few sales representatives is insufficient to fix responsibility for any violation of the law upon the principal.

See also Judge Nordbye's exhaustive examination of the amount and quality of the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the Government in United States v. J.I. Case Co., 101 F. Supp. 856, 865 (D. Minn. 1951).

Here, the Government's evidence of isolated instances of improper pricing practices, though very weak, is barely sufficient, quantitatively and qualitatively, to establish an infraction of the Sherman Act.

Nor is the defendant relieved of responsibility for the unlawful occurrences by reason of the fact that they were episodes of unauthorized conduct on the part of sales personnel.

There is evidence on the record of awareness of and even participation in [25] these events by regional and national personnel.

Moreover, defendant's arguments that the nature of its business necessitates the granting of a large amount of autonomy to the district sales managers offers some proof that those managers who participated in the wrongful acts proven here acted well within the authority given them.

HN6[] Liability may be imposed upon a corporation for the acts of its agents, contrary to their orders and without authority, express or implied, merely because they were committed in the course of the corporation's business and within the scope of the agents' employment. United States v. Kemble, 198 F.2d 889, 893 (3d Cir.) cert. denied 344 U.S. 893, 97 L. Ed. 690, 73 S. Ct. 211 (1952).

This is not an instance of respondeat superior; it is one of the non-performance of a non-delegable duty. HN7[] A corporation has a responsibility to eliminate unlawful practices by its salesmen and branch managers in the course of their routine labors - the selling of the corporation's products - even if the extent of its business precludes the personal supervision of high level officers who, as a result, rely upon written and oral instructions to their subordinates to insure [26] that their policies will be carried out. The corporation must, in such circumstances, of defendant's then twenty-five branches. select to act for it, even where the latter have gone to considerable lengths to furnish the salesmen and branch managers with guidelines of the applicable legal requirements. United States v. Armour & Co., 168 F.2d 342, 343-344 (3d Cir. 1948).

The salient fact is that there has been at least one incident of unlawful resale price maintenance or conduct in aid thereof in sixteen of defendant's then twenty-five branches. These incidents either directly involved branch office personnel or occurred with the knowledge and acquiescence of such personnel, or under circumstances in which it was the business duty of such personnel to have such knowledge. Cf. United States v. Armour & Co., supra, at 343.

> The purpose of the Act is a deterrent one; and to deny the possibility of [*96] corporate responsibility for the acts of minor employees is to immunize the offender who really benefits, and open wide the door for evasion. United States v. George F. Fish, Inc., 154 F.2d 798, 801 (2d Cir., Judge Clark), cert. denied, 328 U.S. 869, 90 L. Ed. 1639, [27] 66 S. Ct. 1377 (1946).

Even if the incidents proven are de minimis when compared to the vast number of retail outlets that defendant sells its products to, the episodes were sufficient in number to have warranted sterner policing by the defendant of the conduct of its employees during the years in question.

However, as this defect in defendant's sales and distribution system has been corrected, the question arises as to what, if any, type of relief is now appropriate.

The Government contends that the burden is on defendant to show by clear and convincing evidence that there has been a complete abandonment of its unlawful practices and that there is no reasonable probability or expectation of their resumption. For this proposition, the Government relies chiefly on United States v. W.T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 97 L. Ed. 1303, 73 S. Ct. 894 (1953) and United States v. Oregon State Medical Soc., 343 U.S. 326, 96 L. Ed. 978, 72 S. Ct. 690 (1942). In the latter case, Mr. Justice Jackson wrote, at p. 333:

> HN8[] When defendants are shown to have settled into a continuing practice or entered into a conspiracy violative of antitrust laws, courts will not assume that it has [28] been abandoned without clear proof. Local 167 International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 291 U.S. 293, 298, 54 S. Ct. 396, 78 L. Ed. 804.

> It is the duty of the courts to beware of efforts to defeat injunctive relief by protestations of repentance and reform, especially when abandonment seems timed to anticipate suit, and there is probability of resumption. Cf. United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 445, 64 L. Ed. 343, 40 S. Ct. 293.

The Supreme Court, however, affirmed the denial of an injunction in that case because defendants had demonstrated "an overt and visible reversal of policy, carried out by extensive operations which have every appearance of being permanent because wise and advantageous . . ." 343 U.S. at 334.

In Grant the Court said:

> HN9[] [The] Court's power to grant injunctive relief survives discontinuance of the illegal conduct. The purpose of an injunction is to prevent future violations, and, of course, it can be utilized even without a showing of past wrongs. But the moving party must satisfy the court that relief is needed. The necessary determination is that there exists some cognizable danger of recurrent violation, [29] something more than the mere possibility which serves to keep the case alive . . . To be considered are the bona fides of the expressed intent to comply, the effectiveness of the discontinuance and, in some cases, the character of the past violations. 345 U.S. at 633.

The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of an injunction in Grant despite the fact that five years of administrative attempts to convince defendant of the illegality of its practices had preceded the bringing of the suit. "Postponement of suit indicates doubt on the prosecutor's part as much as intransigence on the defendant's." 345 U.S. at 634.

The problem with the Government's prayer for injunctive relief is that the Court is not satisfied that such relief is needed.

Of the thirty-eight incidents proven by the Government, only five occurred in 1964, the year of the filing of the complaint herein, or later. [9] Four additional [*97] incidents occurred in 1963. [10] [31] All of the remaining twenty-nine episodes terminated at least a year and a half before the filing of the complaint, in June, 1964. Eight [11] of these terminated before 1960 and, therefore, can be considered ancient history in relation to [30] the question of whether to grant injunctive relief. This leaves the bulk of the incidents proven as occurring in the period 1960-1962 inclusive. The persons involved in most of these episodes have either left defendant's employ or have been transferred to positions not involving district sales responsibilities.

In fourteen of the sixteen branches in which violations were established, defendant's evidence has convincingly shown that the price maintenance and restrictive distribution practices have been discontinued in the area and that vigorous price competition is now prevalent. [12] [32] In each of the two remaining [*98] branches, only a solitary, isolated incident was shown to have occurred. [13]

---

[9] One incident occurred in Boulder, Colo. in 1964. The other four of these incidents were continuations of older practices into the year 1964; one in Hamburg and East Aurora, N.Y. (Buffalo branch) began in 1958 and extended into 1967; another Buffalo incident began in 1958 but the witness was unable to fix dates later than that year for any conversations evidencing the alleged agreements and the Court has therefore fixed 1964, when the employment of the salesman involved was terminated, as the date ending the incident; an incident in Pompano Beach, Fla. (Miami branch) occurred during the period 1959 to 1965; finally, an incident involving C.R. Anthony (Kansas City branch) began in 1960 and ended in 1964.

[10] One was in Lamar, Colo. (Denver branch); another involved Berland (St. Louis branch); a third was in Austin, Tex. (Houston branch); and the fourth was in Renton, Wash. (Seattle branch).

[11] These are: Los Angeles branch, 1958 (San Diego, Cal.); New Orleans, La., 1958; Boston branch, 1958 (two incidents, in Waltham, Mass. and Hartford, Conn.); Cincinnati branch, 1958 (Elwood, Ind.); Pittsburgh branch, 1958 (Charleston, W. Va.); Dallas branch, 1958 (Marfa, Tex.); Seattle branch, 1954 (Bellevue, Wash.).

[12] In each of these fourteen branches the current situation is clear: there is, and has been for years, a general prevalence of price-cutting and an absence of any resale price maintenance or interference with retail pricing.

The Government relies almost exclusively on its proof of these pre-suit violations to support its prayer for injunctive relief.

Defendant, on the other hand, submitted evidence on its current resale pricing practices and contemporary conditions in the marketplace. The upshot of this evidence, which has not been controverted by the Government with any substantial proof, is that defendant is neither presently violating Section 1 of the Sherman Act nor is likely to do so in the future.

Defendant has placed in evidence discount price advertisements which appeared publicly on occasions in eighteen states in the years 1962 through 1968. [14] But it is the other evidence submitted by defendant which explains [33] and amplifies the force and effect of these advertisements.

There is substantial evidence that the two episodes proven in the Los Angeles branch area were isolated instances and not part of a general pattern. Extensive proof of price competition and advertising since 1960 has been presented for this area.

There is substantial evidence for the Denver branch area that no resale price maintenance has occurred and that price cutting has been unimpeded since April 30, 1967, the date on which T. S. Newton was replaced as District Sales Manager, which position he had held during the two incidents proven there.

There were a number of instances proven for the Miami branch area of discount price advertising.

In the Kansas City branch area, there has been proof of discount price advertising and, in addition, retailers have been affirmatively advised since 1965 that they are free to charge whatever prices they desire. Since March, 1964 C. R. Anthony has been entirely free of restrictions on pricing and transshipment. There has been no agreement similar to the one which existed prior to that date.

Vigorous competition in the Baltimore branch area was demonstrated by the 1968 advertising and testimony of David Allen and by other applicable evidence.

On August 21, 1962, Kenneth M. Kaligian, the District Sales Manager of the Boston branch, was replaced. The evidence is clear that since his removal the local retailers have been free of retail price interference from the defendant. In addition, Kenneth B. Miller, a Boston branch sales representative and author of several Government exhibits, left defendant's employ on December 31, 1966. The latter events in this branch are set out more fully above.

As to the Missouri and New York City branches, defendant has proven that Berland resumed buying the products that defendant had withheld from it around the middle of 1963. Since that time there has been no interference with Berland's pricing or transhipment. Widespread price-cutting among retailers has been proved in New York City (Manhattan, Queens, Brooklyn, Bronx).

In August, 1968, Stanley H. Kieon took over the Buffalo branch and merchandise has since been sold in that area without any resale price restrictions. His predecessor, R. F. Kurrasch, had created difficulties.

On November 1, 1967, John R. Eble, the District Sales Manager of the Cincinnati branch, was removed and placed in a position that has no responsibility for sales of "Keds" or "Kedettes".

The evidence shows that since 1964 there has been no interference with retail pricing in West Virginia (Pittsburgh branch), two incidents having been proven in that area prior to that date.

On September 30, 1967, J. C. Beavers was replaced as the District Sales Manager of the Dallas branch. A series of letters and invoices demonstrated that the Houston branch, among others, does not interfere with transshipments of "Keds" and "Kedettes" even where the retailer involved (as revealed by his advertisements) is a price-cutter. Indeed, Houston aids such shipments. The only concern of the District Sales Manager there is with sales credits and commissions.

As to the Seattle branch, defendant has established that since 1965 it has not even suggested prices. Competitive advertising and the absence of any interference with retail pricing have been demonstrated in that area.

[13] Neither the 1962 incident in the Atlanta branch nor the 1958 incident in the New Orleans branch was shown to be a typical occurrence in those areas. Certainly the latter incident is remote indeed when considered as part of a request for injunctive relief. Neither incident provides the basis for an inference of the existence of an ongoing practice for which this remedy would be appropriate.

[14] The states involved, listed in alphabetical order with the dates of the advertisements proven, are:

Defendant's business has changed considerably in recent years. Imports and other brands have been introduced into the market which have drastically reduced Uniroyal's share of the market in this country. Brands that are considerably lower priced have become important factors in the business. The market requirements involve a greater variety of styles, colors, widths and shapes and it becomes a much more difficult selling job to sell in this market.

Furthermore, in recent [34] years mass merchandising and the big chain operation and discounters have become a very important part of the marketplace. Retail customers are prone to go to shopping centers in the suburbs and shopping plazas and to chain operations and to the large discount operations to buy their canvas footwear.

Defendant's extensive evidence on the current situation in the Boston branch is indicative of the general contemporary [*99] state of affairs and bears detailed review here.

With the removal of the branch sales manager of the Boston district in 1962 a radical change in the conduct of defendant's business in that area took place. The new sales manager made an investigation of the marketing conditions. He determined that the area was subject to a trend toward the mass merchant and the discount and chain-type of operation. He organized the territories of the salesmen, held meetings individually and on a group basis with the latter to outline what was expected of them, replaced some of them and proceeded to sell a large number of so-called marginal accounts. The men were told that such selling was part of their responsibility to increase the total volume and the line was offered [35] to and business was obtained from several chain and discount price-cutting operators.

The subject of suggested retail prices came up during training sessions specifically and the salesmen were pointedly advised that the prices were suggested and that they were not to be enforced. Complaints received in the Boston area after 1962 from retailers complaining of their competitors were responded to with the statement that the goods were not fair-traded and that the defendant had no way or desire to enforce the suggested retail price. Sometimes the complaint would just be ignored and left to die a natural death by letting it go unanswered. Other forms of responses were utilized but in sum they indicated that resale price maintenance was a thing of the past in

---

Arkansas (1968)

California (1963, 1966-68)

Colorado (1967, 1968)

Florida (1965, 1967, 1968)

Hawaii (1968)

Kansas (1966)

Louisiana (1965)

Maryland (1968)

Massachusetts (1962, 1968)

New Jersey (1968, 1969)

New York (1965, 1968)

North Carolina (1966-68)

Ohio (1966, 1968)

Pennsylvania (1962-63, 1965-66)

Texas (1966)

Utah (1968)

Washington (1966)

Wisconsin (1966)

this area. The Boston branch numbered among its accounts some 1,800 to 1,900 retailers. The evidence persuasively indicated that the new district sales manager for this branch eliminated from 1962 on any price coercion or restrictions on the purchasers of the merchandise with respect to their sale or transfer of that merchandise.

The emphasis of defendant's top executive sales personnel is on selling and producing sales and not [36] on handling the complaints of retailers with respect to their competitors. The current philosophy is that enforcement or policing of retail prices is a complete waste of a salesman's or manager's time since it is nonproductive. The defendant now would rather have the business at any price rather than to lose the business to its competitors as a result of attempts to control resale prices. The corporation's policy and plan for non-enforcement of suggested retail prices has been confirmed through authorization of its top management in the form of a promise placed on the record.

The policy of defendant since at least 1962 has been to instruct and train its sales managers or salesmen not to interfere with retail prices or the freedom of a retailer to sell at whatever price he chooses. Defendant's national sales executives have conducted meetings and training programs for the sales managers and salesmen at which the latter were informed and instructed that it was the policy of the defendant not to interfere with resale prices or the transfer of merchandise from one to another district by a purchaser thereof. While defendant has never promulgated an oral or written policy or directive [37] of any kind directing or encouraging enforcement of suggested retail prices, it has not until very recently issued any written statement of its policy of discouraging such enforcement. Defendant's recent practice has been to require its district sales managers to issue written directives to the local salesmen, explaining defendant's policy of non-interference with retail prices. Each district sales manager must report back his compliance with this requirement by filing with the main office a copy of the directive thus issued.

In recent years defendant's salesmen have generally conducted themselves in a manner indicative of absence of any attempt at enforcement of suggested retail prices. They have offered popular items in the "Keds" line to retailers, including discount houses, who have consistently advertised and sold them below defendant's suggested retail prices. Complaints by other retailers have reached the defendant [*100] in respect thereof and defendant has not interfered with such advertising or selling.

The change in the competitive climate of the market as a result of the introduction of imports and other brands of canvas footwear, the absence of economic feasibility [38] of resale price maintenance, the turnover of defendant's sales personnel and the curtailment of the activities of those who remain, the constantly greater reliance on discount houses and other unorthodox merchandisers, and the fact that defendant's strength in the marketplace and influence over retailers have waned considerably, are all persuasive of the contention that there is no likelihood that there will be violations in the future. United States v. San Diego Grocers Association, 1963 TRADE CASES P70,777 (S.D. Cal. 1963).

Under these circumstances, the Court is persuaded that there is no cognizable danger of recurrent violation sufficient to warrant the issuance of an injunction in this case.

Accordingly, that branch of the Government's prayer which seeks injunctive relief is denied.

However, the Government also asks, in its complaint, that the Court adjudge and decree that defendant has violated the Sherman Act. The issues here are somewhat different from those determined in denying injunctive relief to the Government.

HN10[] The determination necessary to the granting of injunctive relief, that there exists some cognizable danger of recurrent violation, is a determination that [39] there exists a risk which is "something more than the mere possibility which serves to keep the case alive." United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. at 633.

HN11[] When the defendant is free to return to its old ways, as it is here, its voluntary cessation of illegal conduct does not make the case moot, even though there is no likelihood of resumption of unlawful conduct. The Court retains power to hear and determine the case because a controversy may remain which the public has an interest in having settled. Ibid. at 632. See also United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Ass'n, 393 U.S. 199, 203-04, 89 S. Ct. 361, 21 L. Ed. 2d 344 (1968), where the Supreme Court recently held that the controversy was not technically moot but that the trial judge had discretion on remand to determine whether an injunction should issue:

> The test for mootness in cases such as this is a stringent one. Mere voluntary cessation of allegedly illegal conduct does not moot a case; if it did, the courts would be compelled to leave "[the] defendant . . . free to return to his old ways." United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632, 97 L. Ed. 1303, 73 S. Ct. 894 (1953); see, e.g., [40] United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540 (1897). A case might become moot if subsequent events made it absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur. But here we have only appellees' own statement that it would be uneconomical for them to engage in any further joint operations. Such a statement, standing alone, cannot suffice to satisfy the heavy burden of persuasion which we have held rests upon those in appellees' shoes. United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S., at 633. Of course it is still open to appellees to show, on remand, that the likelihood of further violations is sufficiently remote to make injunctive relief unnecessary. Id., at 633-636. This is a matter for the trial judge.

HN12[] There has understandably been some confusion over what, if anything, is the difference between (i), the absence of any "cognizable danger of recurrent violation" which leads to the denial of injunctive relief and (ii), the absence of a "mere possibility" that the wrong will be repeated that deprives a Court of the power to hear and determine a case altogether. [*101] Cf. United States [41] v. Ins. Bd., 144 F. Supp. 684 (N.D. Ohio 1956) and cases cited therein. The answer seems to have traditionally been found in the reasons behind the defendant's discontinuance of unlawful practices.

Such a discontinuance does not relieve a Court of the duty to pass on the question of legality where "by the mere volition of the parties the combination could come into existence at any moment." United States v. Hamburg-Amerikanische Co., 239 U.S. 466, 477, 60 L. Ed. 387, 36 S. Ct. 212 (1916), citing United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540 (1897). Where, however, the discontinuance was impelled by extrinsic circumstances beyond the defendant's control, a Court lacks power to decide the academic question left behind.

> Here, on the contrary, the business in which the parties to the combination were engaged has, by force of events beyond their control, ceased, and by the same power and a continued relation concerning it between them has become unlawful and impossible. The difference between this and the Trans-Missouri case was clearly laid down in Mills v. Green, 159 U.S. 651, 40 L. Ed. 293, 16 S. Ct. 132, where, after announcing [42] the general rule as to the absence of authority to consider a mere moot question, and referring to possible exceptions resulting from the fact that the want of actuality had arisen either from the consent of the parties or the action of a defendant, it was declared: "But if the intervening event is owing to the plaintiff's own act or to a power beyond the control of either party, the court will stay its hand."
>
> 239 U.S. at 477.

There has been no showing on the record that the reason for defendant's voluntary cessation of its unlawful pricing practices was fear of suit brought about by the Government investigation in this case. Cf. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 48, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1959). The record suggests, as one reason for the change, decline of defendant's share of the relevant market in an increasingly competitive situation. The question before the Court, then, HN13[] is whether the abandonment of unlawful price-maintenance practices due to a decision that such practices are economically unsound is "action by the defendant" or a result of a force beyond its control. If it is the latter, the case is moot and the complaint should be dismissed. [43] If it is the former, the defendant should be adjudged to have violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act and the Court should retain jurisdiction for the granting of further relief, upon application of the Government, in the event of future violations. Cf. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 365 U.S. 125, 126, 5 L. Ed. 2d 457, 81 S. Ct. 433 (1961).

The United States Supreme Court has twice indicated a preference for the latter course in cases where business considerations have prompted the defendant's reversal in policy. In United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 64 L. Ed. 343, 40 S. Ct. 293 (1920), the Court affirmed the dismissal of the bill in a dissolution suit. The corporation there involved had failed to achieve the monopoly position it desired because it had underestimated the opposing market forces. The antitrust violations were instances scattered over ten years and had all been abandoned nine months before suit was brought.

> There is no evidence that the abandonment was in prophecy of or dread of suit; and the illegal practices have not been resumed, nor is there any evidence of an intention to resume them, and certainly no "dangerous probability" [44] of their resumption. . . . And we may say in passing that the government cannot fear their resumption, for it did not avail itself of the offer of the District Court to retain jurisdiction of the cause in order that, if illegal acts should be attempted, they could be restrained.
>
> 251 U.S. at 445.

[*102] Any doubt that existed as to whether the discontinuance of past price-maintenance practices for business reasons should be the subject of an adjudication of violation was erased by the history of the Parke, Davis case subsequent to the first remand by the Supreme Court. Pursuant to instructions to the District Court to issue an injunction unless the defendant submitted evidence to refute the Government's right to injunctive relief, the defendant submitted evidence which showed the futility of the continuation of the price-fixing practices. The defendant showed that it was now necessary to meet new competition and that the prior sales practices had been abandoned because they were ineffective. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 1960 TRADE CASES P 69,776 (D.C. 1960).

No appeal was taken from the denial by the District Court of injunctive relief but the Government [45] did appeal from the omission from the order of any provision adjudging that defendant therein had violated the Sherman Act. 365 U.S. at 126. The Government argued that there was need for such an adjudication which would serve as the basis for treble damage suits under Section 4 of the Clayton Act and as an aid to facilitate the Government's own proceedings in the future. (See Brief for United States, p. 5-7). The Supreme Court said:

> We . . . hold that . . . the Government is entitled to a judgment on the merits, as prayed in paragraph 1 of the section of the Complaint captioned "Prayer." We also hold that the District Court should retain the case on the docket for future action in the event the Government applies for further relief from an alleged resumption by Parke Davis of illegal activity.
>
> 365 U.S. at 126.

United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 97 L. Ed. 1303, 73 S. Ct. 894 (1953) is not apposite although a contrary result would seem, at first glance, to have been reached when the order of this Court was affirmed by the Supreme Court. In entering judgment for the defendants therein because there was not the slightest threat that their terminated, unlawful [46] conduct would be resumed, Judge Conger had written:

> The suit is not continued a controversy merely because a decree of past violation is sought.
>
> United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 112 F. Supp. 336, 338 (S.D.N.Y. 1952), aff'd, 345 U.S. 629, 97 L. Ed. 1303, 73 S. Ct. 894 (1953).

Grant, however, involved interlocking directorates, a violation of Section 8 of the Clayton Act. In such a case there is not the residual public interest in having a violation adjudicated that there was in Parke, Davis. The practical difficulties in bringing a treble damage suit for such a Section 8 violation are so great as to render such suits a mere theoretical possibility.

Accordingly, the decree to be entered herein will adjudge that the defendant has violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act and this Court will retain the case on the docket for future action in the event that the Government applies for further relief from an alleged resumption by Uniroyal of illegal activity and, except as so granted, the prayers of the Government will be denied.

The foregoing together with footnotes shall constitute the findings of fact and conclusions of law required by Rule 52(a), Fed. R. [47] Civ. P.

Submit decree within fifteen days hereof, on notice.

So ordered.

Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research

Supreme Court of the United States

January 22, 1969, Argued ; May 19, 1969, Decided

No. 49

Reporter

395 U.S. 100 *; 89 S. Ct. 1562 ; 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 ; 1969 U.S. LEXIS 3305 *; 161 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 577; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,800

ZENITH RADIO CORP. v. HAZELTINE RESEARCH, INC., ET AL.

Prior History: [1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 388 F.2d 25, affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Core Terms

patent, pool, license, royalty, licensee, patentee, Radio, district court, injunction, products, manufacture, Automatic, patent misuse, monopoly, infringement, merchandise, parties, damages, anti trust law, injunctive relief, trial court, conditioning, invention, percentage-of-sales, distributors, conspiracy, royalty payment, importation, provisions, insisted

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Nonparties Affected by Judgment

HN1[] Entry of Judgments, Nonparties Affected by Judgment

One is not bound by a judgment in personam resulting from litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process. The consistent constitutional rule has been that a court has no power to adjudicate a personal claim or obligation unless it has jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Contempt

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Entry of Judgments > Nonparties Affected by Judgment

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN2[] Injunctions, Contempt

Although injunctions issued by federal courts bind not only the parties defendant in a suit, but also those persons in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise, Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(d), a nonparty with notice cannot be held in contempt until shown to be in concert or participation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN3[] Remedies, Damages

It is enough that the illegality is shown to be a material cause of the injury; a plaintiff need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Juries & Jurors > Province of Court & Jury > Factual Issues

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > De Novo Review > General Overview

HN4[] Province of Court & Jury, Factual Issues

In applying the clearly erroneous standard to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo. The authority of an appellate court, when reviewing the findings of a judge as well as those of a jury, is circumscribed by the deference it must give to decisions of the trier of the fact, who is usually in a superior position to appraise and weigh the evidence. The question for the appellate court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 52 (a) is not whether it would have made the findings the trial court did, but whether on the entire evidence it is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN5[] Private Actions, Remedies

Trial and appellate courts alike must also observe the practical limits of the burden of proof which may be demanded of a treble-damage plaintiff who seeks recovery for injuries from a partial or total exclusion from a market; damage issues in these cases are rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

In the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN7[] Private Actions, Remedies

Although the factfinder is not entitled to base a judgment on speculation or guesswork, the jury may make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data and render its verdict accordingly. In such circumstances, juries are allowed to act upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive proof.

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN8[] Equitable Relief, Injunctions

See 15 U. S. C. S. § 26.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN9[] Clayton Act, Remedies

The purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies was not merely to provide private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. Section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 26, should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims. Its availability should be conditioned by the necessities of the public interest which Congress has sought to protect.

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > Remedies > Reinstatement

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN10[] Remedies, Reinstatement

In exercising its equitable jurisdiction, a federal court has broad power to restrain acts which are of the same type or class as unlawful acts which the court has found to have been committed or whose commission in the future, unless enjoined, may fairly be anticipated from the defendant's conduct in the past.

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN11[] Equitable Relief, Injunctions

When one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN12[] Conveyances, Assignments

A patentee has the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention. The heart of his legal monopoly is the right to invoke the state's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent. The law also recognizes that he may assign to another his patent, in whole or in part, and may license others to practice his invention.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN13[] Conveyances, Licenses

There are established limits which the patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of the licensee. Among other restrictions upon him, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell, or not to purchase, use, or sell, another article of commerce not within the scope of his patent monopoly. His right to set the price for a license does not extend so far, whatever privilege he has to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate. And just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products; in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

HN14[] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

It is not per se a misuse of patents to measure the consideration by a percentage of the licensee's sales.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

HN15[] Defenses, Misuse

If convenience of the parties rather than patent power dictates the total-sales royalty provision, there is no misuse of the patents and no forbidden conditions attached to the license.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Royalties

HN16[] Conveyances, Licenses

Patent misuse inheres in a patentee's insistence on a percentage-of-sales royalty, regardless of use, and his rejection of licensee proposals to pay only for actual use. Unquestionably, a licensee must pay if he uses the patent. Equally, however, he may insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis of total sales, including products in which he may use a competing patent or in which no patented ideas are used at all. There is nothing in the right granted the patentee to keep others from using, selling, or manufacturing his invention which empowers him to insist on payment not only for use but also for producing products which do not employ his discoveries at all.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Summary

In a patent infringement suit by a research company in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, the defendant, a radio and television set manufacturer, counterclaimed for treble damages and injunctive relief, alleging antitrust violations consisting of both misuse of the research company's patents and a conspiracy in restraint of trade by the research company, its parent corporation, and Canadian, English, and Australian patent pools. Holding that the research company had misused its patents, the District Court awarded the manufacturer treble damages and injunctive relief against the research company; and further holding that the research company and its parent corporation had conspired in restraint of trade, the District Court, relying upon a pretrial stipulation that the research company and its parent corporation were to be considered as an entity for purposes of the litigation, awarded the manufacturer treble damages and injunctive relief against both the research company and its parent corporation (239 F Supp 51). On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, affirming the treble damage award for patent misuse, but otherwise reversing the judgment of the District Court, (1) held that the District Court lacked jurisdiction over the research company's parent corporation, and that the stipulation relied upon by the District Court was an insufficient basis for entering judgment against the parent corporation, (2) modified in certain respects the District Court's injunction against patent misuse, (3) held that the manufacturer had failed to prove that it had sustained damage as a result of the conspiracy in restraint of trade, and (4) struck the injunction against the research company's participation in conspiracies restricting the manufacturer's trade in foreign markets (388 F2d 25).

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded the case to the Court of Appeals. In an opinion by White, J., it was held, expressing the view of seven members of the court, that the question of injunctive relief against misuse of the research company's patents should be remanded for further proceedings, and it was held, expressing the unanimous view of the court, that (1) the District Court lacked jurisdiction over the research company's parent corporation, (2) the manufacturer had failed to prove that it sustained damage as a result of the conspiracy affecting the English and Australian markets, but had proved that it sustained damage as a result of the conspiracy affecting the Canadian market, and (3) the District Court had properly granted injunctive relief against the research company's participation in conspiracies restricting the manufacturer's trade in foreign markets.

Harlan, J., although concurring in the other parts of the court's opinion, dissented from the court's holding, with respect to the issue of injunctive relief against misuse of patents, that a patent license provision which measures royalties by a percentage of the licensee's total sales is lawful if included for the convenience of both parties but unlawful if insisted upon by the patentee.

Headnotes

JUDGMENT §244 > affiliated corporations -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[1][] [1]

Despite a pretrial stipulation by the parties that one of the parties and its parent corporation would be considered as an entity for purposes of the litigation, a judgment for damages and injunctive relief cannot properly be entered against the parent corporation where it did not execute the stipulation, was not named as a party, was never served, and did not formally appear at the trial; and the fact that the subsidiary may have executed the stipulation to avoid litigating the alter ego issue cannot foreclose the parent corporation, which never had its day in court on the question whether it and its subsidiary should be considered the same entity for purposes of the litigation.

JUDGMENT §208 > nonparties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[2][] [2]

A person is not bound by a judgment in personam in a litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process.

COURTS §26 > jurisdiction -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[3][] [3]

A court has no power to adjudicate a personal claim or obligation unless it has jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

JUDGMENT §244 > affiliated corporations -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

If it is shown that a parent corporation, through its officers, in fact controlled litigation on behalf of a subsidiary, and if the claim is made that a judgment against the subsidiary is res judicata against the parent because of this control, such claim can be finally adjudicated against the parent only in a court with jurisdiction over the parent.

ESTOPPEL AND WAIVER §55 > failure to repudiate stipulation -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[5A][] [5A]LEdHN[5B][] [5B]

Even if some attorneys of a parent corporation were present during part of the trial of antitrust claims against a subsidiary, and failed to repudiate a pretrial stipulation made by the subsidiary to the effect that the subsidiary and the parent would be treated as an entity for purposes of the litigation, the parent corporation is not estopped to deny that it is bound by such stipulation.

INJUNCTION §139 > persons bound -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

Although injunctions issued by federal courts bind not only the parties- defendant in a suit, but also those persons in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise, a nonparty with notice cannot be held in contempt until shown to be in concert or participation, and it is error to enter an injunction against the parent corporation of a company which is a party without making such determination in a proceeding to which the parent corporation itself is a party.

APPEARANCE §7 > effect of special appearance -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[7A][] [7A]LEdHN[7B][] [7B]

The fact that a parent corporation enters a special appearance to contest jurisdiction, in an antitrust case involving a patent pool conspiracy in restraint of trade, does not indicate that it was found to be in active concert and participation with its subsidiary, which was a party, nor does the entry of such a special appearance indicate that the parent corporation has consented to be bound by such a finding.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §61 > conspiracy -- patent pool -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[8A][] [8A]LEdHN[8B][] [8B]

The provision of the Sherman Antitrust Act proscribing conspiracies in restraint of trade (15 USC 1) is violated where a research company and its parent corporation conspire with a Canadian patent pool to deny patent licenses to companies seeking to export American-made goods to Canada.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §67 > treble damages -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[9A][] [9A]LEdHN[9B][] [9B]

Although patent rights are involved, once a manufacturer demonstrates that its exports from the United States have been restrained by the activities of a Canadian patent pool, an American research company participating in the patent pool conspiracy is subject to treble damage liability.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §67 > treble damages -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[10A][] [10A]LEdHN[10B][] [10B]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the claimant's burden of proving the fact of damage is satisfied by its proof of some damage flowing from the unlawful conspiracy; inquiry beyond this minimum point goes only to the amount, and not the fact of damage; it is enough that the illegality is shown to be a material cause of the injury; and a claimant need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[11][] [11]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the evidence is sufficient to sustain the inference that a manufacturer of radio and television sets has in fact been injured to some extent by a Canadian patent pool's restraints upon imports of radio and television sets, where there is evidence that (1) the pool's efforts to prevent importation of radio and television sets from the United States were highly organized and effective, agents, investigators, and manufacturer and distributor trade associations having systematically policed the market, warning notices and advertisements having advised distributors, dealers, and even consumers against selling or using unlicensed equipment, and infringement suits or threats thereof having been regularly and effectively employed to dissuade dealers from handling American-made sets; (2) the pool's past conduct interfered with and made more difficult the distribution of the manufacturer's products during subsequent years for which damages were sought, and the manufacturer suffered damage during the damage period from having a smaller share of the market than it would have had if the pool had never existed; (3) the pool continued after the beginning of the damage period, and the manufacturer was deprived of a license on pool patents permitting it to sell American-made merchandise in Canada; (4) a formal request by the manufacturer for a pool license would have been futile; (5) the manufacturer continued to operate without a patent license unburdened by conspiratorial conduct and granted on terms which would satisfy the antitrust laws, and such deprivation in itself had an impact on the manufacturer and constituted an injury to its business; (6) although the manufacturer was able to obtain independent distributors in certain parts of Canada, it was unable to do so in other parts of Canada, and its poorer performance in Canada than in the United States was attributed to the discouraging and repressive effects of the Canadian patent pool; (7) without a pool license, the manufacturer encountered distribution difficulties which prevented its securing a share of the market comparable to that which it enjoyed in the United States and which its demonstrated business proficiency dictated that it should have obtained in Canada; and (8) the pool was an established organization with a long history of successfully excluding imported merchandise, and in view of its continued existence during the damage period, the injury alleged by the manufacturer was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations of the antitrust laws would be likely to cause.

EVIDENCE §209 > presumption -- continuance of conspiracy -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[12][] [12]

A court is entitled to assume the continuance of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, in the absence of clear evidence of its termination.

APPEAL AND ERROR §1464 > review -- findings of fact -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[13][] [13]

In applying the standard of Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides that the findings of fact of a Federal District Court sitting without a jury shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo; the authority of an appellate court, when reviewing the findings of a judge, as well as those of jury, is circumscribed by the deference it must give to decisions of the trier of the fact, who is usually in a superior position to appraise and weigh the evidence; and the question for the appellate court under Rule 52(a) is not whether it would have made the findings the trial court did, but whether, on the entire evidence, it is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > burden of proof -- damages for antitrust violation -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[14][] [14]

Trial and appellate courts alike must observe the practical limits of the burden of proof which may be demanded of a plaintiff, in an antitrust action for treble damages, who seeks recovery for injuries from partial or total exclusion from a market, damage issues in such cases being rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[15][] [15]

In the absence of more precise proof in an antitrust action for treble damages, a finder of fact may conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of a defendant's wrongful acts and their tendency to injure the plaintiff's business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits, or values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that the defendant's wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiff, and although not entitled to base a judgment on speculation or guesswork, the finder of fact may make a just and reasonable estimate of the damage based on relevant data, acting upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive, proof.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[16][] [16]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the inference that a manufacturer of radio and television sets has sustained any damage as a result of an English patent pool's restraints upon imports of radio and television sets, where there is evidence that (1) obstacles for which the patent pool was not responsible discouraged the manufacturer's entry into the English market, (2) the manufacturer was waiting for a change in the type of scanning signals used for English television and did not intend to promote the sale of its television sets in England until such a signal change occurred, and if such a change had occurred, neither the absence of a patent pool license nor patent pool threats against it or its customers would have deterred it from a major effort to penetrate the English market, and (3) the manufacturer's own business calculus, rather than restraints by the patent pool, led it to await more favorable conditions before attempting to enter the English market.

EVIDENCE §958 > sufficiency -- damages -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[17][] [17]

With respect to a claim for treble damages for conspiracy in restraint of trade, the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the inference that a manufacturer of radio and television sets has sustained any damage as a result of an Australian patent pool's restraints upon imports of radio and television sets, where there is evidence that (1) the manufacturer had exported no products to Australia and had not requested a patent pool license, (2) a government embargo had foreclosed importation into Australia of the manufacturer's American-made merchandise, and high tariffs and shipping costs, as well as the prospect of vigorous competition, were additional barriers, and (3) the manufacturer neither intended nor was prepared to enter the Australian market during the period for which damages were sought.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §61 > conspiracy -- patent pool -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[18][] [18]

If a conspiracy by a research company and its parent corporation with an Australian patent pool had effectively kept an American manufacturer of radio and television sets from the Australian market, a compensable violation of the antitrust laws would have occurred.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §68 > injunctive relief -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[19][] [19]

The remedy of injunctive relief, available under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26) upon demonstration of threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, is available even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injuries; he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §67 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §68 > remedies for antitrust violation -- injunctive relief -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[20][] [20]

The purpose of giving private parties treble damage and injunctive remedies for violations of the antitrust laws is not merely to provide private relief, but is to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws; 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26), authorizing injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs, as well as between competing private claims, and its availability should be conditioned by the necessities of the public interest which Congress has sought to protect.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §77 > injunctive relief -- patent pool -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[21A][] [21A]LEdHN[21B][] [21B]

Injunctive relief against a conspiracy in restraint of trade is proper where (1) the defendant research company and its parent corporation conspired with a Canadian patent pool to exclude the plaintiff, a manufacturer of radio and television sets, and others from the Canadian market, (2) there is nothing indicating that the conspiracy has terminated or that the threat to the plaintiff inherent in the conduct will cease in the foreseeable future, (3) neither the relative quiescence of the pool during the litigation nor claims that objectionable conduct will cease with the judgment negates the threat to the plaintiff's foreign trade, and (4) the parent corporation's abandonment of its participation in the Canadian patent pool has occurred after, and apparently in response to, the court's judgment and decree.

APPEAL AND ERROR §1672 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §81 > modification of injunction -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[22A][] [22A]LEdHN[22B][] [22B]

Although a defendant who has been enjoined from conspiring with a Canadian patent pool in violation of the antitrust laws is free to attempt to demonstrate in the future that the need for injunctive relief with respect to Canada has been eliminated, or that a change of circumstances elsewhere justifies additional modifications of the injunction, the United States Supreme Court will not, on direct review of the decree granting injunctive relief, undertake a reappraisal of the injunction in light of posttrial developments.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §77 > injunctive relief -- patent pools -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[23A][] [23A]LEdHN[23B][] [23B]

A radio and television set manufacturer which is interested in expanding its foreign commerce and which has suffered restraints of trade at the hands of a research company and its coconspirators in a Canadian patent pool is entitled to injunctive relief broadly barring the research company from conspiring with others to restrict or prevent the manufacturer from entering any other foreign market, and findings that the research company and its parent corporation were conspiring with English and Australian patent pools which refused to license imports, and that the manufacturer intended to expand its export business, are sufficient foundation for the conclusion that continued participation by the research company and its parent corporation in the English and Australian pools poses a significant threat of loss or damage to the manufacturer's business, even if such business has not previously been damaged as a result of the activities of the English and Australian pools.

INJUNCTION §138 > extent of relief -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[24][] [24]

In exercising its equitable jurisdiction, a federal court has broad power to restrain acts which are of the same type or class as unlawful acts which the court has found to have been committed or whose commission in the future, unless enjoined, may fairly be anticipated from the defendant's conduct in the past.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §75 > injunction -- extent of relief -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[25][] [25]

The federal courts, in exercising the traditional equitable powers extended to them by 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26), authorizing injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, should respond to the salutary principle that when one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law, he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §75 > injunction -- extent of relief -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[26][] [26]

Although a Federal District Court may not enjoin all future illegal conduct of a defendant, or even all future violations of the antitrust laws, however unrelated to the antitrust violation found by the court, when the defendant's purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed, and this is particularly true in treble-damage cases, which are brought for private ends, but which also serve the public interest in that they effectively pry open to competition a market which has been closed by the defendant's illegal restraints.

PATENTS §232 > misuse -- royalties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[27][] [27]

Conditioning the grant of a patent license upon payment of royalties on products which do not use the teaching of the patent amounts to patent misuse.

PATENTS §5 > rights of patentee -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[28][] [28]

A patentee has the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention; the heart of his legal monopoly is the right to invoke the state's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent; and the law recognizes that he may assign to another his patent, in whole or in part, and may license others to practice his invention.

PATENTS §225 > PATENTS §232 > licenses -- conditions -- royalties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[29][] [29]

There are established limits which a patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of a licensee; among other restrictions upon him, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell, or not to purchase, use, or sell, another article of commerce not within the scope of the patent monopoly, and his right to set the price for a license does not extend so far, whatever privilege he has to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate; and just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products, since, in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings.

PATENTS §5 > rights of patentee -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[30][] [30]

A patentee may not use the power of his patent to levy a charge for making, using, or selling products not within the reach of the monopoly granted by the government.

PATENTS §232 > misuse -- royalties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[31][] [31]

If the provision of a license agreement basing royalty payments on the licensee's total sales is dictated by the convenience of the parties rather than by the patent power of the patentee, such a royalty arrangement involves neither misuse of the patents nor forbidden conditions attached to the license.

PATENTS §232 > royalties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[32][] [32]

If a licensee negotiates for the privilege to use any or all of the patents and developments as he desires to use them, he cannot complain that he must pay royalties if he chooses to use none of them, and he cannot then charge that the patentee has refused to license except on the basis of a total-sales royalty.

PATENTS §232 > royalties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[33][] [33]

A patentee is not authorized to use the power of his patent to insist on a total-sales royalty from a licensee and to override protestations of the licensee that some of his products are unsuited to the patent or that for some lines of his merchandise he has no need or desire to purchase the privileges of the patent, since, in such event, not only would royalties be collected on unpatented merchandise, but the obligation to pay for nonuse would have its source in the leverage of the patent.

PATENTS §232 > misuse -- royalties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[34][] [34]

Patent misuse inheres in a patentee's insistence on a licensee's payment of a percentage-of-sales royalty, regardless of use, where the patentee rejects the licensee's proposals to pay only for actual use; a licensee must pay if he uses a patent, but he may insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis of total sales, including products in which he may use a competing patent or in which no patented ideas are used at all; and there is nothing in the right granted the patentee to keep others from using, selling, or manufacturing his invention which empowers him to insist on payment not only for use, but also for producing products which do not employ his discoveries at all.

PATENTS §232 > royalties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[35][] [35]

A licensee cannot expect to obtain a license, giving him the privilege of use and insurance against infringement suits, without at least footing the patentee's expenses in dealing with him; he cannot insist upon paying on use alone and perhaps, as things turn out, pay absolutely nothing because he finds he can produce without using the patent; if the risks of infringement are real and he would avoid them, he must anticipate some minimum charge for the license--enough to insure the patentee against loss in negotiating and administering his monopoly, even if in fact the patent is not used at all; but there is no basis in the statutory monopoly granted the patentee for his using that monopoly to coerce an agreement to pay a percentage royalty on merchandise not employing the discovery which the claims of the patent define.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §58 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND MONOPOLIES §77 > misuse of patent -- license -- conditions -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[36][] [36]

If there is a patent misuse consisting of a patentee's conditioning the grant of patent licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products, it does not necessarily follow that such misuse embodies the ingredients of an antitrust law violation under either 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1, 2), or that the licensee has been threatened by an antitrust law violation so as to entitle it to an injunction under 16 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 26).

APPEAL AND ERROR §1692.1 > remand -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[37][] [37]

The United States Supreme Court will remand an antitrust case to a Federal Court of Appeals for a determination in the first instance whether findings and evidence of a Federal District Court, sitting without a jury, are sufficient to make out an actual or threatened violation of the antitrust laws so as to justify an injunction issued by the District Court, where such matter has not been considered by the Court of Appeals.

Syllabus

[579] Upon the expiration in 1959 of petitioner, Zenith's, license agreement with Hazeltine Research, Inc. (HRI), which permitted Zenith to use all of HRI's domestic radio and television patents under HRI's so-called standard package license, Zenith refused to renew, asserting that it no longer required a license. HRI brought a patent infringement suit in November 1959. Zenith's answer alleged invalidity of the patent, noninfringement, patent misuse by HRI, and HRI's unclean hands through conspiracy with foreign patent pools. In May 1963 Zenith counterclaimed against HRI for treble damages and injunctive relief, alleging Sherman Act violations by misuse of HRI patents, including the one in suit, as well as by conspiracy among HRI, its parent Hazeltine Corp. (Hazeltine), and patent pools in Canada, England, and Australia. Zenith contended that the patent pools refused to license the foreign patents, including Hazeltine's, [*2] placed within their exclusive licensing authority, to Zenith and others seeking to export American-made radios and television sets into those foreign markets. HRI and Zenith had stipulated before trial that HRI and Hazeltine were to be considered as one entity for purposes of the litigation. Hazeltine was not served with the counterclaim or named as a party, and made no appearance until Zenith proposed that judgment be entered against it, at which time Hazeltine filed a "special appearance." The District Court, sitting without a jury, ruled for Zenith on the infringement action, and on the counterclaim held that (1) HRI had misused its domestic patents by attempting to coerce Zenith's acceptance of a five-year package license and by insisting on extracting royalties from unpatented products, and (2) HRI and Hazeltine conspired with foreign patent pools to exclude Zenith from the Canadian, English, and Australian markets. With respect to patent misuse, judgment was entered for Zenith for treble the actual damages of approximately $ 50,000, and injunctive relief given against further misuse. Treble damages for almost $ 35,000,000 were awarded Zenith on the conspiracy claim, together [*3] with injunctive relief against further participation [*101] in any arrangement to prevent Zenith from exporting electronic equipment into any foreign market. Relying on the "one entity" stipulation, the court entered the judgments for treble damages and injunctive relief against Hazeltine as well as HRI. The Court of Appeals set aside the judgments against Hazeltine, ruling that the lower court lacked jurisdiction over that company and that the stipulation was an insufficient basis for entering judgment against Hazeltine. On the patent misuse claim, the treble-damage award against HRI was affirmed, but the injunction against further misuse was modified. The conspiracy treble-damage award was reversed, the Court of Appeals holding that Zenith had failed to prove it had in fact been injured during the relevant four-year period preceding the filing of its counter-claim. That court also struck down the injunction against HRI's participation in conspiracies restricting Zenith's foreign trade. Held:

1. One is not bound by a judgment in personam resulting from litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process. [*4] Pp. 108-112.

(a) The judgments against Hazeltine were properly vacated as Hazeltine was not named as a party or served, and did not formally appear at the trial; and the stipulation executed by HRI was not an adequate substitute for the normal means of obtaining jurisdiction over Hazeltine. P. 110.

(b) It was error to enter an injunction against Hazeltine without determining that it was "in active concert or participation" with HRI in a proceeding in which Hazeltine was a party. P. 112.

2. The Court of Appeals erred in setting aside the District Court's decision with respect to the fact of damage in Canada. Pp. 114-125.

(a) The evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding that the Canadian patent pool refused to license imported goods, thus excluding foreign manufacturers like Zenith from the Canadian market for radio and television products. P. 118.

(b) The evidence clearly warrants the inference that the Canadian patent pool's past conduct interfered with and made more difficult the distribution of Zenith products in the relevant 1959-1963 period; and it could rationally be found that Zenith suffered damage during the pertinent period from having a smaller share of the [*5] market than it would have had if the pool had never existed. Pp. 118-119.

[*102] (c) The evidence is sufficient to support a finding of damage resulting from events occurring after the damage period began. Pp. 119-123.

(d) In applying the clearly erroneous standard of Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 52 (a) to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, the appellate court must determine whether "on the entire evidence [it] is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed," and not whether it would have made the same findings the trial court did. P. 123.

(e) Where a treble-damage plaintiff seeks recovery for injuries from a total or partial market exclusion, a court may "conclude as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage to the plaintiffs." Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264. Pp. 123-124.

(f) The trial court was entitled to infer from the [*6] circumstantial evidence that the necessary causal relation between the Canadian patent pool's conduct and the claimed damage existed. Pp. 124-125.

3. The Court of Appeals properly set aside the District Court's judgment with respect to injury to Zenith by the English patent pool, as the only permissible inference from the record is that Zenith did not enter the English television market because it was awaiting a change in the English line-scanning signal and not because of the activities of the patent pool. Pp. 125-128.

4. The Court of Appeals correctly reversed the lower court's damages award with respect to the Australian market as nothing in the record permits the inference that Zenith either intended or was prepared to enter the Australian market during the relevant period. Pp. 128-129.

5. Injunctive relief under § 16 of the Clayton Act is available even though the plaintiff has not suffered actual injury as long as he demonstrates a significant threat of injury from an impending antitrust violation or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur. Pp. 129-133.

(a) Injunctive relief against HRI with respect to the Canadian market was wholly proper, as the trial [*7] court found that HRI and the Canadian patent pool were conspiring to exclude Zenith [*103] and others from the Canadian market, and there was nothing to indicate that this clear violation of the antitrust laws had terminated or that the threat to Zenith would cease in the foreseeable future. Pp. 131-132.

(b) The injunction which barred HRI from conspiring with others to restrict or prevent Zenith from entering any other foreign markets is also reinstated, in light of HRI's antitrust violation by its conspiring with the Canadian pool, its participation in similar pools in England and Australia, and Zenith's interest in expanding its foreign markets. Pp. 132-133.

6. Conditioning the grant of a patent license upon payment of royalties on products which do not use the teaching of the patent amounts to patent misuse. Pp. 133-140.

(a) If convenience of the parties rather than patent power dictates a percentage-of-total-sales royalty provision there is no misuse of the patents. Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827. Pp. 137-138.

(b) A licensee, who obtains the privilege of using the patent and insurance against infringement suits, [*8] must anticipate some minimum charge for the license, enough to insure the patentee against loss in negotiating and administering his monopoly, even if in fact the patent is not used at all, but the patentee's statutory monopoly cannot be used to coerce an agreement to pay a percentage royalty on goods not using the patent. Pp. 139-140.

7. The matter is remanded to the Court of Appeals for it to consider whether the trial court correctly determined that HRI conditioned the grant of licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products, and, if so, whether such misuse embodies the ingredients of a violation of either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, or whether Zenith was threatened by a violation so as to entitle it to an injunction under § 16 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 140-141.

Counsel: Thomas C. McConnell argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Philip J. Curtis and Francis J. McConnell.

John T. Chadwell and Victor P. Kayser argued the cause for respondents. With them on the briefs for respondent Hazeltine Research, Inc., were C. Lee Cook, Jr., [*104] Joseph V. Giffin, M. Hudson Rathburn, and Laurence B. Dodds. With Messrs. Chadwell and Kayser on [*9] the brief for Hazeltine Corp. were Messrs. Cook and Giffin.

Solicitor General Griswold, Assistant Attorney General Zimmerman, and Harris Weinstein filed a brief for the United States as amicus curiae.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Marshall

Opinion by: WHITE

Opinion

[*137] [1566] MR. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

Petitioner Zenith Radio Corporation (Zenith) is a Delaware Corporation which for many years has been successfully engaged in the business of manufacturing radio and television sets for sale in the United States and foreign countries. A necessary incident of Zenith's operations has been the acquisition of licenses to use patented devices in the radios and televisions it manufactures, and its transactions have included licensing agreements with respondent Hazeltine Research, Inc. (HRI), an Illinois corporation which owns and licenses domestic patents, principally in the radio and television fields. HRI is the wholly owned subsidiary of respondent Hazeltine Corporation (Hazeltine), a substantially larger and more diversified company that has among its assets numerous foreign patents -- including the foreign counterparts [*10] of HRI's domestic patents -- which it licenses for use in foreign countries.

Until 1959, Zenith had obtained the right to use all HRI domestic patents under HRI's so-called standard package license. In that year, however, with the expiration of Zenith's license imminent, Zenith declined to accept HRI's offer to renew, asserting that it no longer required a license from HRI. Negotiations proceeded to a stalemate, and in November 1959, HRI brought suit in the Northern District of Illinois, claiming that [1567] Zenith television sets infringed HRI's patents on a particular automatic control system. Zenith's answer alleged invalidity of the patent asserted and noninfringement, [*105] and further alleged that HRI's claim was unenforceable because of patent misuse as well as unclean hands through conspiracy with foreign patent pools. On May 22, 1963, more than three years after its answer had been filed, Zenith filed a counterclaim against HRI for treble damages and injunctive relief, alleging violations of the Sherman Act by misuse of HRI patents, including the one in suit, as well as by conspiracy among HRI, Hazeltine, and patent pools in Canada, England, and Australia. Zenith [*11] contended that these three patent pools had refused to license the patents placed within their exclusive licensing authority, including Hazeltine patents, to Zenith and others seeking to export American-made radios and televisions into those foreign markets.

[*138] The District Court, sitting without a jury, ruled for Zenith in the infringement action, 239 F.Supp. 51, 68-69, and its judgment in that respect, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, 388 F.2d 25, 30-33, is not in issue here. On the counterclaim, the District Court ruled, first, that HRI had misused its domestic patents by attempting to coerce Zenith's acceptance of a five-year package license, and by insisting on extracting royalties from unpatented products. 239 F.Supp., at 69-72, 76-77. Judgment was entered in Zenith's favor for treble the amount of its actual damages of approximately $ 50,000, and injunctive relief against further patent misuse was awarded. Second, HRI and Hazeltine were found to have conspired with the foreign patent pools to exclude Zenith from the Canadian, English, and Australian markets. Hazeltine had granted the pools the exclusive right [*12] to license Hazeltine patents in their respective countries and had shared in the pools' profits, knowing that each pool refused to license its patents for importation and that each enforced its ban on imports with threats of infringement suits. HRI, along with its coconspirator, Hazeltine, was therefore held to have conspired [*106] with the pools to restrain the trade or commerce of the United States, in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 1, and was liable for injury caused Zenith's foreign business by the operation of the pools.

239 F.Supp., at 77-78. Total damages with respect to the three markets, when trebled, amounted to nearly $ 35,000,000. [1] [1568] Judgment in this [*107] [580] amount was awarded Zenith, along with injunctive relief

---

[1] In its initial findings, handed down on January 25, 1965, 239 F.Supp., at 76, the District Court concluded that Zenith had suffered actual damages of $ 16,238,872 as a result of the restraints imposed by the three pools upon Zenith's export business during the four-year damage period:

Canada:

Television

$ 5,826,896

Radio

470,495

England:

Television

8,079,859

Radio

1,169,067

Australia:

Television

625,786

Radio

66,769

Total

16,238,872

On April 5, 1965, the District Court entered partial judgment, awarding Zenith treble damages for patent misuse and treble damages with respect to Canada, but reserving jurisdiction for further hearings on damages in the English and Australian markets. The further proceedings were held in October and November 1965, after which the District Court amended its findings on damages for England and Australia:

England:

Television

$ 4,312,924

Radio

against further participation in any arrangement to prevent Zenith from exporting electronic equipment into any foreign market.

[13] Relying [139] upon its finding that HRI and Zenith had stipulated before trial that HRI and Hazeltine were to be considered as one entity for purposes of the litigation, see 239 F.Supp., at 69, the court entered judgments for treble damages and injunctive relief, both with respect to patent misuse and conspiracy, against Hazeltine as well as against the named counter-defendant, HRI.

On appeal by HRI and Hazeltine, the Court of Appeals set aside entirely the judgments for damages and injunctive relief entered against Hazeltine, ruling that the District Court lacked jurisdiction over that company and that the stipulation relied upon by the District Court was an insufficient basis for entering judgment against Hazeltine. 388 F.2d, at 28-30. With respect to Zenith's patent misuse claim, the Court of Appeals affirmed the treble-damage award against HRI, but modified in certain respects the District Court's injunction against further misuse. 388 F.2d, at 33-35, 39.

The Court of Appeals also reversed the treble-damage award for conspiracy to restrain Zenith's export trade. Without reaching any of the other issues presented by the appeal [*14] on this phase of the case, the court held that Zenith had failed to sustain its burden under § 4 of the [*108] Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, to prove the fact of damage -- injury to its business -- within the relevant four-year period preceding May 22, 1963, the date Zenith's counterclaim was filed. [2] Finally, the Court of Appeals struck the injunction against HRI's participation in conspiracies restricting Zenith's trade in foreign markets.

745,102

Australia:

Television

223,508

Radio

24,952

Total

5,306,486

These revisions reflect the proof submitted at the further proceedings, showing that government embargoes in England and Australia, in effect until 1959 and 1960 respectively, precluded entry by Zenith into the English and Australian markets. The District Court found, with respect to England, that because of the embargoes, Zenith's damages were zero for the first year of the damage period, 50% of the figure initially accepted by the court for the second year, 75% for the third, and 100% for the fourth. With respect to Australia, the District Court adopted a similar 0-50-75-100% revision of the original figures used by the court in computing the damage findings of January 25, 1965.

[2] The record discloses that Zenith, HRI, and the courts below all considered the damage period to be the four years prior to the date on which Zenith filed its counterclaim. No argument was made that the counterclaim, in whole or in part, related back to an earlier pleading, thereby expanding the damage period to include years prior to 1959. Cf. Bull v. United States, 295 U.S. 247, 262 and n. 10 (1935); Cold Metal Process Co. v. E. W. Bliss Co., 285 F.2d 231 (C. A. 6th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 366 U.S. 911 (1961). Cf. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 15 (c) (amended pleading relates back to date of original pleading if the "claim or defense

[15] We granted certiorari, 391 U.S. 933, to consider among other things the question whether the Court of Appeals properly discharged its appellate function under Rule 52 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which specifies that the findings of fact made by a District Court sitting without a jury are not to be set aside unless "clearly erroneous."

I. THE JUDGMENTS AGAINST HAZELTINE.

The named plaintiff in the patent infringement complaint which began this litigation was HRI, not its parent, Hazeltine; Zenith's counterclaim named only HRI as the "counter-defendant," identifying HRI and Hazeltine as "counter-defendant and its parent." After Zenith had filed its answer and had delivered a draft of its counter-claim to HRI's attorneys -- both the answer and [581] the counterclaim alleging that HRI had unlawfully [1569] conspired with Hazeltine and foreign patent pools -- HRI and Zenith [*109] stipulated that "for purposes of this litigation Plaintiff and its parent Hazeltine Corporation will be considered to be one and the same company."

[*140] On May 22, 1963, two weeks after the stipulation had been signed, Zenith filed its counterclaim, seeking money [*16] damages from HRI and an injunction against HRI and those "in privity" with it. Hazeltine was not served with the counterclaim and was not named as a party, although it was alleged to be a coconspirator with HRI and the foreign patent pools. Hazeltine made no appearance in the litigation until Zenith proposed that judgment be entered against it, at which time Hazeltine filed a "special appearance." Insofar as the record reveals, Hazeltine did not formally participate in the proceedings until after the District Court had entered its initial findings of fact and conclusions of law. On April 5, 1965, after Hazeltine's special appearance, the trial judge entered judgment against Hazeltine as well as HRI, thereby rejecting Hazeltine's objection that the court was without jurisdiction over it. Apparently, the trial court based its decision on the pretrial stipulation [3] and its earlier finding that:

"The parties stipulated that for the purposes of this litigation Hazeltine Research, Inc. and its parent, [*110] Hazeltine Corporation, would be considered as one entity operating as a patent holding and licensing company, engaged in the exploitation of patent rights in the electronics [*17] industry in the United States and in foreign countries." 239 F.Supp., at 69.

[18] LEdHN[1][] [1] LEdHN[2][] [2] LEdHN[3][] [3]The Court of Appeals was quite right in vacating the judgments against Hazeltine. It is elementary that HN1[] one is not bound by a judgment in personam resulting from litigation in which he is not designated as a party or to which he has not been made a party by service of process. Hansberry v. Lee, 311 U.S. 32, 40-41 (1940). The consistent constitutional rule has been that a court has no power to adjudicate a personal claim or obligation unless it has jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. E. g., Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1878); Vanderbilt v. Vanderbilt, 354 U.S. 416, 418 (1957).

Here, Hazeltine was not named as a party, was never served and did not formally appear at the trial. Nor was the stipulation an adequate substitute for the normal methods of obtaining jurisdiction over [*19] a person or a corporation. The stipulation represented HRI's agreement to be bound by and to be liable for the acts of its parent, asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading").

---

[3] During the proceedings before the District Court on April 2, 1965, the trial judge noted: "Well, of course, Hazeltine Corporation wasn't a party to the lawsuit." The court's reliance upon the stipulation as a basis for its decision to enter judgment against Hazeltine as well as HRI is reflected by the interchanges between the court and counsel for Hazeltine during those proceedings. An example is the following:

"Mr. Kayser [counsel for Hazeltine]: . . . Could anyone really believe for a minute that if he had any thought of bringing the parent into this lawsuit that he would not have named them and that he would be relying on this stipulation which was intended to simplify and expedite the trial? Would any lawyer who has been practicing for two years expect to hold somebody liable on a judgment when he didn't even name them? He relied on some pretrial stipulation.

"The Court: You mean that pretrial stipulations are worthless?"

but it was signed only by HRI, through its attorney, Dodds. Hazeltine did not execute the stipulation, and Dodds, [141] although an officer of Hazeltine, did not purport to be signing on its behalf. The trial court apparently viewed the stipulation as binding Hazeltine, as equivalent to an entry of appearance, or as consent to entry of judgment against it. The stipulation [1570] on its face, however, hardly warrants this construction, and if there were other circumstances which justified the trial court's conclusion, the findings do not reveal them.

[*111] Perhaps Zenith could have proved and the trial court might have found that HRI and Hazeltine were *alter ego*s; but absent jurisdiction over Hazeltine, that determination would bind only HRI. If the alter ego issue had been litigated, and if the trial court had decided that HRI and Hazeltine were one and the same entity and that jurisdiction over HRI gave the court jurisdiction over Hazeltine, perhaps Hazeltine's appearance before judgment with full opportunity to contest [*20] jurisdiction would warrant entry of judgment against it. But that is not what occurred here. The trial court's judgment against Hazeltine was based wholly on HRI's stipulation. HRI may have executed the stipulation to avoid litigating the alter ego issue, [4] [582] but this fact cannot foreclose Hazeltine, which has never had its day in court on the question of whether it and its subsidiary should be considered the same entity for purposes of this litigation.

LEdHN[4][] [4] LEdHN[5A][] [5A] [*21] Likewise, were it shown that Hazeltine through its officer, Dodds, in fact controlled the litigation on behalf of HRI, and if the claim were made that the judgment against HRI would be res judicata against Hazeltine because of this control, that claim itself could be finally adjudicated against Hazeltine only in a court with jurisdiction over that company. [5] See *G. & C. Merriam Co. [112] v. Saalfield, 241 U.S. 22 (1916); Schnell v. Peter Eckrich & Sons, Inc., 365 U.S. 260 (1961).

LEdHN[5B][] [5B]

[22] LEdHN[6][] [6] LEdHN[7A][] [7A]Neither the judgment for damages nor the injunction against Hazeltine was proper. HN2[] Although injunctions issued by federal courts bind not only the parties defendant [142] in a suit, but also those persons "in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of the order by personal service or otherwise," Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 65 (d), a nonparty with notice cannot be held in contempt until shown to be in concert or participation. It was error to enter the injunction against Hazeltine, without having made this determination in a proceeding to which Hazeltine was a party. [6]

---

[4] There is some indication that the genesis of the stipulation was a pretrial conference, when a question was raised as to whether or not a subpoena served upon HRI could reach certain records of Hazeltine relating to the latter's foreign patents. Hazeltine, of course, argues that the stipulation's only purpose and effect were to facilitate discovery and trial by obviating the necessity of litigating whether or not Zenith could "pierce the corporate veil" between HRI and its parent.

[5] In its brief in this Court, Zenith seems to argue that Hazeltine is estopped to deny that it is bound by the stipulation. Not only was HRI's counsel, Dodds, an officer of Hazeltine, but also Ruestow and Westermann, Hazeltine's general patent counsel and general counsel, were present during trial and failed to "repudiate" the construction allegedly given the stipulation by the parties at trial to the effect that it bound Hazeltine to any adjudication on the counterclaim. We find this theory untenable on the record of this case, for the references during trial to the stipulation are equally consistent with the interpretation advanced by Hazeltine that the stipulation merely eliminated the necessity for Zenith to perform the time-consuming task of piercing the corporate veil in proving its counterclaim against HRI. Also, Ruestow and Westermann were called as witnesses during trial, and assuming they were present throughout the trial -- a fact which is neither proved nor disproved by the record -- their failure to repudiate Zenith's proposed construction of the stipulation is entirely consistent with the proposition that they were present only as witnesses, and not as authorized representatives for a person who might be bound by the litigation.

[6] Just as the alter ego issue was not litigated after Hazeltine had made its special appearance and while it had an opportunity to be heard, see supra, at 111, so the District Court evidently did not rely upon anything more than the stipulation as a basis for entering the injunction against Hazeltine as well as HRI. The record does not support the contention, implicit in Zenith's brief, that when Hazeltine appeared to contest jurisdiction it was found by the District Court to be "in active concert or participation"

LEdHN[7B][] [7B]

[23] [*113] II. [1571] THE FOREIGN PATENT POOLS.

A. The Treble-Damage Award.

LEdHN[8A][] [8A] LEdHN[9A][] [9A]HRI's major points in the Court of Appeals were that no injury to Zenith's business during the damage period had been proved; that if Zenith had suffered injury, it resulted wholly or partly from conduct prior to May 22, 1959, and to this extent was barred by the statute of limitations and by Zenith's 1957 settlement of certain antitrust litigation against RCA, General Electric, and Western Electric, which had the effect of releasing HRI from all liability for pre-settlement acts of the foreign patent pools; [7] that the Hazeltine companies had not illegally conspired with foreign pools; and that the damage award was excessive. Passing the other issues pressed by HRI, including the limitations defense, the Court of Appeals held that Zenith had failed to prove any injury to its export business during the damage period which resulted from pool activities either before or after the beginning of the damage period, and that the District Court's [*24] finding to the contrary was clearly erroneous. [8]

LEdHN[8B][] [8B] LEdHN[9B][] [9B]

[583] [*25]

[*114] LEdHN[10A][] [10A]We [143] have concluded that the Court of Appeals erred in setting aside the District Court's decision with respect to the fact of damage in Canada. Zenith's evidence, although by no means conclusive, was sufficient to sustain the inference that Zenith had in fact been injured to some extent [9] by the Canadian pool's [1572] restraints upon imports of radio and television sets. On the other hand, we agree with the Court of Appeals that the District Court erred as to the English and Australian markets.

LEdHN[10B][] [10B]

[26] 1. The Canadian Pool.

---

with HRI and that, by entering its special appearance, Hazeltine consented to be bound by such a finding. See generally Dobbs, The Validation of Void Judgments: The Bootstrap Principle (pts. 1 and 2), 53 Va. L. Rev. 1003, 1241 (1967).

[7] Although HRI and Hazeltine were not parties to this prior litigation and did not enter the settlement agreement, HRI urged that all joint tortfeasors, including HRI and Hazeltine, were released from liability for injuries flowing from the pre-settlement acts of the pools. The 1957 release appears to be relevant only to Zenith's claim for injury to its Canadian trade; the embargoes in England and Australia were thought by the District Court to preclude any injury from acts of the English and Australian pools, and the embargoes were not lifted until well after the settlement was executed.

[8] The Court of Appeals did not disturb, nor do we, the findings of the District Court that HRI and Hazeltine conspired with the Canadian pool to deny patent licenses to companies seeking to export American-made goods to Canada. Accepting these findings, we have no doubt that the Sherman Act was violated. See, e. g., Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. United States, 341 U.S. 593, 599 (1951); Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 704 (1962). Once Zenith demonstrated that its exports from the United States had been restrained by pool activities, the treble-damage liability of the domestic company participating in the conspiracy was beyond question. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., supra. Cf. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347 (1909); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 443 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1945). Although patent rights are here involved, the same conclusions follow. See, for example, United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U.S. 287, 305-315 (1948); United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 196-197 (1963).

[9] Zenith's burden of proving the fact of damage under § 4 of the Clayton Act is satisfied by its proof of some damage flowing from the unlawful conspiracy; inquiry beyond this minimum point goes only to the amount and not the fact of damage. HN3[] It is enough that the illegality is shown to be a material cause of the injury; a plaintiff need not exhaust all possible alternative sources of injury in fulfilling his burden of proving compensable injury under § 4. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., supra, at 702 (1962); Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 143-144 (1968) (concurring opinion).

LEdHN[11][] [11]The findings of the District Court with respect to the operations of the Canadian pool may be briefly summarized. The Canadian patent pool, Canadian Radio Patents, Ltd. (CRPL), was formed in 1926 by the General Electric Company of the United States through its subsidiary, Canadian General Electric Company, and [*115] by Westinghouse through its Canadian subsidiary. The pool was made up largely of Canadian manufacturers, most of which were subsidiaries of American companies. The pool for many years had the exclusive right to sublicense the patents of its member companies and also those of Hazeltine and a number of other foreign concerns. About 5,000 patents were available to the pool for licensing, and only package licenses were granted, covering all patents in the pool and strictly limited to manufacture in Canada. No license to importers was available. The chief purpose of the pool was to protect the manufacturing members and licensees from competition by American and other foreign companies seeking to export their products into Canada.

CRPL's efforts to prevent [*27] importation of radio and television sets from the United States were highly organized and effective. Agents, investigators, and manufacturer and distributor trade associations systematically policed the market; warning notices and advertisements advised distributors, dealers, and even consumers against selling or using unlicensed equipment. Infringement suits or threats thereof were regularly and effectively employed to dissuade dealers from handling American-made sets.

For many years Zenith attempted to establish distribution in Canada, but distributors were warned off by the pool, and Zenith's efforts to secure a license for American-made goods were unsuccessful. Zenith then brought an antitrust suit against RCA, General Electric, and Western Electric. [10] This litigation was favorably settled, Zenith receiving, among other things, worldwide [144] licenses on patents owned by the named defendants. [*116] Armed with these and other licenses, Zenith in 1958 began exporting radio and television products to Canada. It was promptly informed by CRPL that to continue business in Canada, Zenith would be required to sign CRPL's standard license, which did not permit importation, [*28] and that to sell in Canada it must manufacture there. Zenith was notified at the time that it was infringing at least one of Hazeltine's patents which had been placed with CRPL for licensing in Canada. Soon after this demand by CRPL, HRI began its infringement suit against Zenith.

Some of the trial court's findings describing the operations of the Canadian pool and its "drastic" impact upon Zenith's foreign commerce did not date the events or state whether they had occurred before or after May 22, 1959. The damage award was confined to injuries sustained during the statutory period, [584] but the trial court apparently deemed it immaterial whether the damage-causing acts occurred before or after the start of the damage period. Damages [1573] were awarded on the assumption that Zenith, absent the conspiracy, would have had 16% of the Canadian television [*29] market on May 22, 1959, and throughout the damage period rather than its actual 3% share. [11] Since the failure to have 16% of the market on the first day of the damage period was ascribed to pool operations, those operations must have occurred prior to May 22, 1959. Some part of the damages [*117] awarded, therefore, necessarily resulted from pre-damage period conduct. [12]

[30] The Court of Appeals reversed the District Court because it considered the evidence insufficient to prove the fact of any damage to Zenith after May 22, 1959. Having put aside HRI's statute of limitations defense, belatedly raised in the District Court and pressed in the Court of Appeals, [13] the import of the court's [145]

---

[10] Zenith's antitrust claim was asserted as a counterclaim in a patent infringement suit brought by RCA against Zenith and its subsidiary, the Rauland Corporation.

[11] The computation of damages, prepared by Zenith's experts and accepted by the District Court, see 239 F.Supp., at 76, reflects a comparison between Zenith's percentage share of the United States television market, ranging from 15.6% in 1959 to 21.7% in 1963, and Zenith's actual share of the Canadian market during the same period, ranging from 3.1% in 1959 to 5.2% in 1961 and down to 3.2% in 1963. Although we discuss only the measure of damages utilized for computing Zenith's injury in the Canadian television market, a comparable method was employed to determine Zenith's lost radio sales.

[12] On November 22, 1965, during the further proceedings held to consider damages for England and Australia, Zenith's executive vice-president and treasurer, Kaplan, testified:

"In Canada, our assumption was that we commenced the period starting June 1, 1959 as if we had a full blown organization, and had enjoyed the benefits of doing business there for years prior to that date."

decision [*118] was that Zenith had not been damaged after May 22, 1959, by any act of the pool, whether occurring before or after that date. The Court of Appeals' overriding judgment -- as it had to be if its no-injury rationale were to meet claims of damage period injury from pre-damage period conduct -- was that Zenith would have done no more business in Canada after May 22, 1959, had the patent pool never operated in that country.

[31] The Court of Appeals was clearly in error. The evidence was quite sufficient to sustain a finding that competing business concerns and patentees joined together to pool their Canadian patents, granting only package licenses and refusing to license imported goods. Their [1574] clear purpose was to exclude concerns like Zenith from the Canadian market unless willing to manufacture there. Zenith, consequently, was never able to obtain a license. This fact and the pool's vigorous campaign to discourage importers, distributors, dealers, and consumers from selling, handling, or using unlicensed foreign merchandise effectively prevented Zenith from making any headway in the Canadian market until after the 1957 settlement with RCA and its codefendants. And even in 1958, when Zenith undertook in earnest to establish its distribution system in Canada and to market its merchandise, Zenith was met with further pool advertisements threatening action against imported goods and further notifications, continuing past May 22, 1959, that its products were infringing pool patents and that no license was available [585] unless Zenith manufactured in Canada.

This evidence clearly warrants the inference [*32] that CRPL's past conduct interfered with and made more difficult the distribution of Zenith products in 1959 and later years. The District Court could reasonably conclude that the cumulative effects of the pool's campaign against imported goods had consequences lasting well into the damage period. It could also rationally [*119] be found from the evidence that Zenith, beginning in 1958, could not have reached its maximum potential by May 22, 1959, that the pool had effectively prevented an earlier beginning, and that Zenith therefore suffered damage during the damage period from having a smaller share of the market than it would have had if the pool had never existed.

LEdHN[12][] [12]We also conclude that the record evidence is sufficient to support a finding of damage resulting from events occurring after the beginning of the damage period. We need not merely assume that the Canadian pool continued throughout the period of this suit, as we are entitled to do in the absence of clear evidence of its termination. See, e. g., Local 167 v. United States, 291 U.S. 293, 297-298 [146] (1934); [*33] United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333 (1952). HRI frankly conceded the continuation of the pool before the District Court, [14] and it appears sufficiently clear that throughout this time Zenith was deprived of [13] HRI's answer to Zenith's counterclaim did not plead a statute of limitations defense. However, in the course of proceedings after entry of the District Court's initial findings of fact and conclusions of law, but before judgment, the trial court granted the oral motion of HRI's new counsel for "leave to file" defenses based on the statute of limitations and on the release given by Zenith pursuant to the 1957 settlement agreement. The thrust of the former was primarily that the findings as to Canada had erroneously included damages resulting from conduct occurring prior to May 22, 1959. The trial court, without further mention of these defenses, forthwith refused to set aside or amend the damage award as to Canada, thus either rejecting the statute of limitations defense or considering it to have been waived under Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 12 (h), as urged by Zenith in both the District Court and the Court of Appeals.

---

Zenith itself had requested damages only for the four-year period prior to the filing of its counterclaim, and the findings of the District Court expressly limited the damages awarded to those occurring "during the 4-year statutory damage period." 239 F.Supp., at 76. The Court of Appeals, although not purporting to pass on the statute of limitations defense, referred to the "four year damage period" and identified it as "four years prior to the May 22, 1963, filing date of Zenith's counterclaim. 15 U. S. C. Sec. 15b." 388 F.2d, at 35 and n. 4. The parties have not argued the matter here, and we make no further effort to penetrate the confusion surrounding this issue or to deal with the question of whether damage period injury from pre-damage period conduct is recoverable where an unwaived statute of limitations defense is properly asserted.

[14] On April 1, 1965, during the further proceedings held by the District Court before judgment, counsel for HRI stated:

"Now, what [counsel for Zenith] is really trying to sell this court is the idea that if he can show that these pools continued after 1957 and, as he defines the pools, yes, yes, they did. There is no question about it, that these arrangements in relation to patents -- that characterized necessarily as he characterizes them, but that these arrangements have continued and, so far as I know, are in existence today. There is no question about that."

what had always been refused it -- a license on pool patents permitting it to sell American-made merchandise in Canada.

[34] On May 12, 1959, the pool manager conferred with Zenith's vice president, informing him that Zenith was infringing pool patents and would require a license, [*120] but that licenses were granted only for local manufacture. This was followed on June 5, 1959, by a letter stating without reservation that Zenith receivers were infringing, and enclosing the pool's standard license form. This was nothing more nor less than a demand during the damage period that Zenith either manufacture in Canada and take the standard package license or cease its [1575] activities in that country. [15] There is no evidence that the pool ever retreated from that position during the next four years.

[35] Zenith thus continued to operate without a patent license unburdened by conspiratorial conduct and granted on terms which would satisfy the antitrust laws. This deprivation in itself necessarily had an impact on Zenith and constituted an injury to its business. We find singularly unpersuasive the argument that Zenith was as well off without a license as with one. This is little more than an assertion that pool licenses, from which CRPL and its participants enjoyed substantial income, were without value. Without the license, doing business in Canada obviously involved weighty risks for Zenith itself, besides requiring it to convince the trade that it could legally and effectively do business without clearance from CRPL. [16]

[586] [*36] [*121] Of [147] course, Zenith determined to take these risks, serious as they were. Although HRI brought the instant litigation claiming infringement of an HRI domestic patent, the foreign counterpart of which had been made available to the Canadian pool by Hazeltine, Zenith persevered in its Canadian efforts. The claim is now pressed, and the Court of Appeals held, that the pool bothered neither Zenith nor its distributors after mid-1959 and that Zenith ran the gantlet so successfully that not having a license made no difference whatsoever.

It is true that the record discloses no specific instance of subsequent infringement suits or threats against Zenith's existing or potential distributors or dealers. But there is evidence that the pool was not dormant after May 1959. The record contains a letter from the pool to a distributor of Motorola products containing clear warnings against handling unlicensed, imported merchandise. [17] [*38] More significant, the fair import of the testimony [*122] by

---

HRI does contend, however, that the ties between the Canadian pool and the Hazeltine companies were broken in December 1965, when Hazeltine secured an early termination of its licensing agreement with CRPL. See n. 25, infra.

[15] That Zenith failed to make a formal request for a CRPL license during the damage period can properly be attributed to Zenith's recognition that such a request would have been futile. The pool had made its position entirely clear, and under these circumstances the absence of a formal request is not fatal to Zenith's case. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699-702 (1962); Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 487, n. 5 (1968).

[16] In 1960, the Report of the Royal Commission on Patents, Copyright and Industrial Designs was published. This Report described the magnitude of the risk taken by Zenith and its distributors in selling imported products in Canada:

"The portfolio in respect of which CRPL had the right to grant licences consisted of 5,000 patents, and in the absence of a licence from CRPL it is doubtful if anyone could sell in Canada a radio or television receiver.

"CRPL indicated that it does not grant a licence to any importer of radio or television receivers . . . . It is particularly in respect of the policy of CRPL in precluding importers from bringing into Canada radio and television receivers that the complaint was made to this Commission.

"It was stated to be the policy of CRPL to enforce its patent rights against any person who sells in Canada an imported radio or television receiver which infringes any one or more of the patents in its portfolio . . . ."

[17] This letter, brought to Zenith's attention by an ex-Zenith dealer, warned the Motorola dealer that his importation of American-made television sets and FM radios probably infringed pool patents. The dealer not only was cautioned that CRPL remained willing to litigate infringements, describing two recent and successful suits, but also was reminded of CRPL's policy against licensing imports:

Zenith officers was that the pool remained active during the damage period and prevented Zenith from establishing [1576] an effective distribution system throughout [*37] Canada. Zenith was able to obtain independent distributors in the Western Provinces, but it was unable to do so in the Central and the Maritime Provinces, where it necessarily relied on its own subsidiaries for distribution. These officers, experienced businessmen, also testified to the similarities between the Canadian and American markets, attributing Zenith's much poorer Canadian performance to the discouraging and repressive effects of the pool. The Court of Appeals did not refuse to credit this testimony, as HRI insists we should do, [18] [148] but accepting it as some evidence of damage, considered it of insufficient weight to prove injury to Zenith's business. In this respect the Court of Appeals both gave insufficient deference to the findings of the trial judge [*123] and failed to adhere to the teachings of Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251 (1946), and other cases dealing with the standard of proof in treble-damage actions.

[39] LEdHN[13][] [13]HN4[] In applying the clearly erroneous standard to the findings of a district court sitting without a jury, appellate courts must constantly have in mind that their function is not to decide factual issues de novo. The authority of an appellate court, when reviewing the findings of a judge as well as those of a jury, is circumscribed by the deference it must give to decisions of the trier of the fact, who is usually in a superior position to appraise and weigh the evidence. The question for the appellate court under Rule 52 (a) is not whether it would have made the findings the trial court did, but whether "on the entire evidence [it] is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed." United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395 (1948). See also United States v. National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, 339 U.S. 485, 495-496 (1950); Commissioner v. Duberstein, 363 U.S. 278, 289-291 (1960).

[40] LEdHN[14][] [14] LEdHN[15][] [15]HN5[] Trial and appellate courts alike must also observe the practical limits of the burden of proof which may be demanded of a treble-damage plaintiff who seeks recovery for injuries from a partial or total exclusion from a market; damage issues in these cases are [587] rarely susceptible of the kind of concrete, detailed proof of injury which is available in other contexts. The Court has repeatedly held that HN6[] in the absence of more precise proof, the factfinder may "conclude [1577] as a matter of just and reasonable inference from the proof of defendants' wrongful acts and their tendency to injure plaintiffs' business, and from the evidence of the decline in prices, profits and values, not shown to be attributable to other causes, that defendants' wrongful acts had caused damage [*124] to the plaintiffs." Bigelow v. RKO Pictures, Inc., supra, at 264. [*41] See also Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U.S. 359, 377-379 (1927); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 561-566 (1931).

In Bigelow, a treble-damage plaintiff claimed injury from a conspiracy among film distributors to deny him first-run pictures. He offered evidence comparing his profits with those of a competing theater granted first-run showings and also measuring his current profits against those earned when first-run films had been available to him. This

"In closing, I wish to inform you that we would be most happy to issue a license to you to make or have made in Canada any equipment coming within the ambit of our patents."

[18] HRI urges that the trial testimony as to Canada of each of two Zenith officers, Wright and Kaplan, was inconsistent with his own testimony on recall, inconsistent with the testimony of the other, and inconsistent with documentary evidence, and that we should therefore disregard their testimony. It is true that the trial judge's views as to credibility are not completely impervious, but Rule 52 (a) admonishes due regard for the trial court's opportunity to assess the credibility of witnesses. The Court of Appeals clearly took into account this evidence, and we see no adequate basis in the record for refusing to accept the testimony of the two Zenith officers as probative evidence. See United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U.S. 32, 37-38 (1918); Walling v. General Industries Co., 330 U.S. 545, 550 (1947); Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Products Co., 339 U.S. 605, 609-612 (1950); United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 332 (1952); Orvis v. Higgins, 180 F.2d 537, 539-540 (C. A. 2d Cir.), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 810 (1950); Ruth v. Utah Construction & Mining Co., 344 F.2d 952 (C. A. 10th Cir. 1965). HRI relies heavily in this respect on Zenith's annual reports for the years 1957-1962, but aside from the fact that these reports, except for 1962, were never admitted into evidence, we find them quite insufficient to undermine the credibility of Wright and Kaplan.

Court, reversing the Court of Appeals, found the evidence sufficient to sustain an award of damages. HN7[] Although the factfinder is not entitled to base a judgment on speculation or guesswork,

"the jury may make a just and reasonable estimate [149] of the damage based on relevant data, and render its verdict accordingly. In such circumstances, 'juries are allowed to act upon probable and inferential, as well as direct and positive proof.' Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., supra, 561-4; *Eastman Kodak [42] Co. v. Southern Photo Co., supra, 377-9. Any other rule would enable the wrongdoer to profit by his wrongdoing at the expense of his victim. It would be an inducement to make wrongdoing so effective and complete in every case as to preclude any recovery, by rendering the measure of damages uncertain. Failure to apply it would mean that the more grievous the wrong done, the less likelihood there would be of a recovery." 327 U.S., at 264-265.

Here, Zenith was denied a valuable license and submitted testimony that without the license it had encountered distribution difficulties which prevented its securing a share of the market comparable to that which [*125] it enjoyed in the United States, and which its business proficiency, demonstrated in the United States, dictated it should have obtained in Canada. CRPL was an established organization with a long history of successfully excluding imported merchandise; and in view of its continued existence during the damage period, the injury alleged by Zenith was precisely the type of loss that the claimed violations of the antitrust laws would be likely to cause. The trial court was entitled to infer [*43] from this circumstantial evidence that the necessary causal relation between the pool's conduct and the claimed damage existed. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 696-701 (1962).

2. The English Pool.

LEdHN[16][] [16]Hazeltine patents were made available to the English pool in 1930. The pool issued only package licenses, restricted to local manufacture. Although pool radio patents had expired prior to the beginning of the damage period, the trial court found, and we assume, that the pool held television patents which would not be licensed for television sets made in the United States. [19] Zenith was interested [1578] in the English market and made exclusive arrangements with one distributor desiring to handle its merchandise. At no time during or before the damage period, however, did Zenith make available or offer for sale a substantial number of television sets suitable for the English market or make any other serious efforts to [*126] enter that market. It attained no appreciable position in the English television market.

[44] Having initially found the patent pool responsible over the years for Zenith's failure to participate in the English market, the trial court, after further proceedings, held that a government embargo, not the patent pool, was the sole reason for Zenith's not entering the English market prior to the beginning of the damage period in 1959; until then, the [150] District Court found, the pool "[was] not called upon to exercise the type of conduct that [it] exercised in Canada." It did not, however, retreat from its conclusion that restraints imposed by the pool had foreclosed Zenith [588] during the damage period. [20] In this respect we agree with the Court of Appeals that the trial court clearly erred. Based on our own examination of the record, we are convinced that even with the ending of the embargo in mid-1959, Zenith faced other obstacles which effectively discouraged its entry into the English market and for which the pool was not responsible.

---

[19] Wright testified that in mid-1955 a representative of the English pool had confirmed his understanding that "the policy of the Pool . . . required that [radio and television] sets be made in England, and that nothing would be licensed if it was imported from abroad." Wright further testified that the pool representative "saw no possibility" that this restrictive policy would be changed in the future. Subsequently, during its dealings with its English radio distributor, Zenith was "given to understand that television was just out of the question."

[20] Because the embargo precluded any recovery by Zenith for the first year of the damage period, the trial court modified its initial measure of damages to reflect the time it would have taken Zenith, starting with the removal of the embargo, to build up its market share. See n. 1, supra.

[45] Positing that Zenith could not get a license from the English pool and that it did not enter the British market before or during the damage period, the issue is whether, once the embargo was lifted, Zenith wanted and intended to enter, had the capacity to do so, and was prevented from entering by its inability to secure a patent license and by other operations of the English patent pool. Section 4 of the Clayton Act required that Zenith show an injury to its "business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." If Zenith's failure to enter the English market was attributable to its lack of desire, its limited production capabilities, or to other [*127] factors independent of HRI's unlawful conduct, Zenith would not have met its burden under § 4. [21]

[46] Zenith was interested in the English market; this much is clear. But its standard domestic television set was manufactured to operate on 525- and 625-line-per-second scanning signals, whereas the 405-line signal was standard in England until after the damage period. Similarly, while FM transmission was utilized in the United States for the audio portion, AM signals were used in England. Zenith's regular product thus was not salable in the English market. To succeed at all, Zenith had either to produce a differently equipped set or to provide for the mass conversion of its standard receivers. Unquestionably, the company had the facilities and the ability to follow either course. But it is equally clear that it pursued neither. [22] A change in the standard [151] British broadcast to include [1579] a 625-line signal was under [*128] consideration, even imminent, during the damage period. Zenith's merchandise would in any event have sold at prices substantially higher than those prevailing in the English market; tariffs and freight costs tended to widen the differential. Producing a new set for the English market, or modifying existent models on a large-scale [*47] basis, would have involved substantial costs.

Based on the evidence before us, [*48] including the correspondence between Zenith and its British representative, we think the Court of Appeals correctly rejected the inference that "Zenith intended to and was prepared to enter the English television market during the damage period," and correctly concluded that Zenith was in fact "waiting for a change in English standards to a 625-line system." 388 F.2d, at 37. It clearly emerges from the evidence that Zenith had every intention to promote the sale of its television sets if and when the signal change occurred. Given that event, neither the absence of a pool license nor pool threats against it or its customers would have deterred Zenith from a major effort to penetrate the British market. Why the existence of the pool, which as far as the record shows was quiescent during the damage period, should be credited with the power to discourage Zenith's entry before the signal change but not after is difficult to grasp. But the question at hand is not whether, if Zenith had decided to enter the market, the pool would have been a deterrent and inflicted damage. Rather, it is [589] whether Zenith was in fact constrained by the pool to stay out of England during the [*49] damage period or whether Zenith's own business calculus led it to await more favorable conditions. As we have said, the latter is the only permissible inference from this record.

3. The Australian Pool.

LEdHN[17][] [17] LEdHN[18][] [18]The Australian patent pool, which had exclusive rights to license Hazeltine patents, also granted licenses only [*129] for local manufacture. Had HRI and Hazeltine's conspiracy with the Australian pool effectively kept Zenith from that market, a compensable violation of the antitrust laws unquestionably would have occurred. But the findings of the District Court are wholly silent as to how the Australian [21] See American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. 166 F. 261, 264 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1908), affirmed without specific reference to this issue, 213 U.S. 347 (1909); Stearns v. Tinker & Rasor, 252 F.2d 589, 606 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1958); Volasco Products Co. v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co., 308 F.2d 383, 395-396 (C. A. 6th Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 372 U.S. 907 (1963). Cf. Pennsylvania Sugar Rfg. Co. v. American Sugar Rfg. Co., 166 F. 254, 260 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1908).

---

[22] During trial, Wright and Kaplan testified that adjustments could be made by Zenith's English distributor in his shop to adapt Zenith television sets to the English transmission system. However, the fair import of their testimony, both during trial and in November 1965 on recall, was that conversion of Zenith sets to the English system, whether done before shipment to England or in the distributor's shop, had in fact been carried out only occasionally in the past and was of questionable utility on a commercial basis. Wright and Kaplan stated that Zenith could have manufactured a television set suitable for English use without appreciably more difficulty than Zenith faced in producing a new model for the American market, but the record does not indicate that Zenith took any steps in this direction before the end of the damage period, except in anticipation of the British changeover to the 625-line-per-second transmission system.

pool had any impact on Zenith's business. An officer of Zenith revealed that Zenith had exported no products to Australia since the 1920's or early 1930's. Zenith had not requested a pool license during the 20-year period preceding the trial. A government embargo was found by the District Court to have foreclosed Zenith's American-made merchandise until well into the damage period. High tariffs and shipping [*50] costs were additional barriers, as well as the prospect of vigorous competition. Nothing in the record before us would permit the inference that Zenith either intended or was prepared to enter the Australian market during the damage period. The Court of Appeals was correct in reversing the District Court's award of damages with respect to the Australian market.

[1580] B. The Injunction.

In setting aside the District Court's grant of injunctive relief [152] against continued participation by HRI and Hazeltine in any patent pool or similar association restricting Zenith's export trade, [23] the Court of Appeals stated, without more:

"It follows from our conclusion with respect to the foreign patent pools that injunctive relief against [*130] 'threatened loss or damage' directed at those pools, alleged by Zenith to be unlawful conspiracies, cannot be justified under 15 U. S. C. Sec. 26. Paragraph C of the injunction granted must be stricken." 388 F.2d, at 39.

[51] LEdHN[19][] [19]The evident premise for striking Paragraph C was that Zenith's failure to prove the fact of injury barred injunctive relief as well as treble damages. This was unsound, for § 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 26, which was enacted by the Congress to make available equitable remedies previously denied private parties, invokes traditional principles of equity and authorizes injunctive relief upon the demonstration of "threatened" injury. [24] That remedy is characteristically available even though the plaintiff has not yet suffered actual injury, see Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Assn., 274 U.S. 37, 54-55 (1927); he need only demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur. See Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U.S. 375, 396 (1905); Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeymen Stone Cutters' Assn., supra, at 54; United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333 (1952); [*52] United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633 (1953).

LEdHN[20][] [20]Moreover, HN9[] the purpose of giving private parties treble-damage and injunctive remedies was not merely to provide [*131] [*53] private relief, but was to serve as well the high purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws. E. g., United States v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514, 518 (1954). Section 16 should be construed and applied with this purpose in mind, and with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice "adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims." Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329-330 (1944). Its availability should be "conditioned by the necessities of the [590] public interest which Congress has sought to protect." Id., at 330.

---

[23] Paragraph C of the District Court's injunction prohibits HRI from

"Entering into, adhering to, enforcing or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, with any other person, company, patent pool, organization, association, corporation or entity which directly or indirectly restricts or prevents defendant-counterclaimant, Zenith Radio Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, from exporting any electronic apparatus from the United States into any foreign market."

[24] Section 16 provides:

HN8[] "Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, . . . when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings . . . ." (Emphasis added.) 15 U. S. C. § 26.

[*153] LEdHN[21A][] [21A] LEdHN[22A][] [22A]Judged by the proper standard, the record before us warranted the injunction with respect to Canada. The findings of the District Court were that HRI and CRPL were conspiring to exclude Zenith and others from the Canadian [1581] market; there was nothing indicating that this clear violation of the antitrust laws [*54] had terminated or that the threat to Zenith inherent in the conduct would cease in the foreseeable future. Neither the relative quiescence of the pool during the litigation nor claims that objectionable conduct would cease with the judgment negated the threat to Zenith's foreign trade. [25] [*132] That threat was too clear for argument, and injunctive relief against HRI with respect to the Canadian market was wholly proper.

LEdHN[21B][] [21B] LEdHN[22B][] [22B]

[55] LEdHN[23A][] [23A] LEdHN[24][] [24] LEdHN[25][] [25] LEdHN[26][] [26]We also reinstate the injunction entered by the District Court insofar as it more broadly barred HRI from conspiring with others to restrict or prevent Zenith from entering any other foreign market. HN10[] In exercising its equitable jurisdiction, "[a] federal court has broad power to restrain acts which are of the same type or class as unlawful acts which the court has found to have been committed or whose commission in the future, unless enjoined, may fairly be anticipated from the defendant's conduct in the past." NLRB v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U.S. 426, 435 (1941). See also United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U.S. 319, 328-335 and n. 4 (1947). Given the findings that HRI was conspiring with the Canadian pool, its purpose [*56] to exclude Zenith from Canada and its violation of the Sherman Act were clearly established. Its propensity for arrangements of this sort was also indicated by the findings revealing its participation in similar pools operating in England and Australia. [26] Zenith, a company interested in expanding its foreign commerce and having suffered at the hands of HRI and its coconspirators in the Canadian market, was entitled to injunctive relief against like conduct by HRI in other [*133] world markets. [154] We see no reason that the federal courts, in exercising the traditional equitable powers extended to them by § 16, should not respond to the "salutary principle that HN11[] when one has been found to have committed acts in violation of a law he may be restrained from committing other related unlawful acts." NLRB v. Express Publishing Co., supra, at 436. Although a district court may not enjoin all future illegal conduct of the defendant, or even all future violations of the antitrust laws, [1582] however unrelated to the violation found by the court, e. [*57] g., New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. ICC, 200 U.S. 361, 401 (1906), "when the purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed." International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400 (1947). This is particularly true in treble-damage cases, which are brought for private ends, but which also serve the public interest in that "they effectively pry open to competition a market that has been closed by defendants' illegal restraints." Id., at 401.

LEdHN[23B][] [23B]

---

[25] HRI informs us that Hazeltine, having obtained an early termination of its licensing agreement with CRPL, is now prepared to license any one or more of its Canadian patents "with no restrictions on imports." Since Hazeltine's abandonment of its participation in the Canadian pool occurred only after -- and, apparently, in response to -- the District Court's judgment and decree, we cannot agree with the suggestion that injunctive relief as to Canada has been rendered unnecessary and inappropriate. See United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333 (1952); United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Assn., 393 U.S. 199, 202-203 (1968). Although HRI is free to attempt to demonstrate in the future that the need for injunctive relief with respect to Canada has been eliminated, or that a change of circumstances elsewhere justifies additional modifications of the injunction, see, e. g., United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633-636 (1953), we are not willing at this time to undertake a reappraisal of the injunction in light of post-trial developments.

[26] Having not disturbed the District Court's findings that HRI and Hazeltine were conspiring with English and Australian patent pools which refused to license imports, the Court of Appeals in any event should have sustained the injunction with respect to the English and Australian markets. These findings, together with Zenith's demonstrated intent to expand its export business, were sufficient foundation for the conclusion that continued participation by HRI and Hazeltine in the English and Australian pools posed a significant threat of loss or damage to Zenith's business.

[58] III. THE PATENT-MISUSE ISSUE.

Since the District Court's treble damage award for patent misuse was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, and HRI has not challenged that award in this Court, the only misuse issue we need consider at length is whether the Court of Appeals was correct in striking the last clause from Paragraph A of the injunction, [27] [*59] which enjoined HRI from

[591] "A. Conditioning directly or indirectly the grant of a license to defendant-counterclaimant, Zenith Radio Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, under any [*134] domestic patent upon the taking of a license under any other patent or upon the paying of royalties on the manufacture, use or sale of apparatus not covered by such patent." (Emphasis added.)

This paragraph of the injunction was directed at HRI's policy of insisting upon acceptance of its standard five-year package license agreement, covering the 500-odd patents within its domestic licensing portfolio and reserving royalties on the licensee's total radio and television sales, irrespective of whether the licensed patents were actually used in the products manufactured. [28]

LEdHN[27][] [27]In [155] striking the last clause of Paragraph A the Court of Appeals, in effect, made two determinations. First, under its view of Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827 (1950), conditioning the grant of a patent license upon payment of royalties on unpatented products was not misuse of the patent. Second, since such conduct did not constitute [*135] patent misuse, neither could it be violative of the antitrust laws [*60] within the meaning of § 16 of the Clayton Act, under which Zenith had sought and the District Court had granted the injunction. With respect to the first determination, we reverse the Court of Appeals. We hold that conditioning the grant of a patent license upon [1583] payment of royalties on products which do not use the teaching of the patent does amount to patent misuse.

The trial court's injunction does not purport to prevent the parties from serving their mutual convenience by basing royalties on the sale of all radios and television sets, irrespective of the use of HRI's inventions. The injunction reaches only situations where the patentee directly or indirectly "conditions" his license upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products -- that is, where the patentee refuses to license on any other basis and leaves the licensee with the choice between a license so providing and no license at all. Also, the injunction takes effect only if the license is conditioned upon the payment of royalties "on" merchandise not covered by the patent -- where the express provisions of the license or their necessary effect is to employ the patent monopoly to collect royalties, not [*61] for the use of the licensed invention, but for using, making, or selling an article not within the reach of the patent.

---

[27] The District Court's injunction also included a paragraph barring HRI from continuing to coerce acceptance of its package license through the mechanism of offering a much lower royalty rate for those licensees who take a license on the entire package of patents rather than a license on merely a few of them. Paragraph B enjoined HRI from

"Conditioning directly or indirectly the grant of any license to defendant-counterclaimant, Zenith Radio Corporation, or any of its subsidiaries, under any domestic patent upon the payment of the same or greater royalty rate than the rate at which licenses have been granted or offered to others under a group of domestic patents which includes said patent."

The Court of Appeals modified this paragraph in certain respects, 388 F.2d, at 39, but we do not disturb these modifications.

[28] The District Court concluded:

"Plaintiff's demands that royalties be paid on admittedly unpatented apparatus constitute misuse of its patent rights and plaintiff cannot justify such use of the monopolies of its patents, by arguing the necessities and convenience to it of such a policy. While parties in an arms-length transaction are free to select any royalty base that may suit their mutual convenience, a patentee has no right to demand or force the payment of royalties on unpatented products." 239 F.Supp., at 77.

LEdHN[28][] [28] LEdHN[29][] [29]HN12[] A patentee has the exclusive right to manufacture, use, and sell his invention. See, e. g., Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 88-89 (1902). The heart of his legal monopoly is the right to invoke the State's power to prevent others from utilizing his discovery without his consent. See, e. g., Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Paper Bag Co., 210 U.S. 405 (1908); Crown Die & Tool Co. v. Nye Tool & Machine Works, 261 U.S. 24 (1923). The law also recognizes that he may assign to another his patent, in whole or in part, and may license others to practice his invention. See, [*136] e. g., Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U.S. 252, 255 (1891). But [*62] HN13[] there are established limits which the patentee must not exceed in employing the leverage of his patent to control or limit the operations of the licensee. Among other restrictions upon him, he may not condition the right to use his patent on the licensee's agreement to purchase, use, or sell, or not to purchase, use, or sell, another article of commerce not within the scope of his patent monopoly. E. g., Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U.S. 436, 455-459 (1940); International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 395-396 (1947). His right [592] to set the price for a license does not extend so far, whatever privilege he has "to exact royalties as high as he can negotiate." Brulotte v. Thys Co., 379 U.S. 29, 33 (1964). [156] And just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products; in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to [*63] derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings.

LEdHN[30][] [30]In Brulotte v. Thys Co., supra, the patentee licensed the use of a patented machine, the license providing for the payment of a royalty for using the invention after, as well as before, the expiration date of the patent. Recognizing that the patentee could lawfully charge a royalty for practicing a patented invention prior to its expiration date and that the payment of this royalty could be postponed beyond that time, we noted that the post-expiration royalties were not for prior use but for current use, and were nothing less than an effort by the patentee to extend the term of his monopoly beyond that granted by law. Brulotte thus articulated in a particularized context the principle that a patentee may [*137] not use the power of his patent to levy a charge for making, using, [1584] or selling products not within the reach of the monopoly granted by the Government.

Automatic Radio is not to the contrary; it is not authority for the proposition that patentees have carte blanche authority [*64] to condition the grant of patent licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented articles. In that case, Automatic Radio acquired the privilege of using all present and future HRI patents by promising to pay a percentage royalty based on the selling price of its radio receivers, with a minimum royalty of $ 10,000 per year. HRI sued for the minimum royalty and other sums. Automatic Radio asserted patent misuse in that the agreement extracted royalties whether or not any of the patents were in any way used in Automatic Radio receivers. The District Court and the Court of Appeals approved the agreement as a convenient method designed by the parties to avoid determining whether each radio receiver embodied an HRI patent. The percentage royalty was deemed an acceptable alternative to a lump-sum payment for the privilege to use the patents. This Court affirmed.

Finding the tie-in cases such as International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392 (1947), inapposite, and distinguishing United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364 (1948), as involving a conspiracy between patentee and licensees to eliminate competition, the Court [*65] considered reasonable the "payment of royalties according to an agreed percentage of the licensee's sales," since "sound business judgment could indicate that such payment represents the most convenient method of fixing the business value of the privileges granted by the licensing agreement." 339 U.S., at 834. It found nothing "inherent" in such a royalty provision which would extend the patent monopoly. Finally, the holding by the Court was stated to be that in licensing the use [*138] of patents HN14[] "it is not per se a misuse of patents to measure the consideration by a percentage of the licensee's sales." Ibid.

LEdHN[31][] [31]Nothing in the foregoing is inconsistent with the District [157] Court's injunction against conditioning a license upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products or with the principle that patent leverage may not be employed to collect royalties for producing merchandise not employing the patented invention. The Court's opinion in Automatic Radio did not deal [*66] with the license negotiations which spawned the royalty formula at issue and did not indicate that HRI used its patent leverage to coerce a promise to pay royalties on radios not practicing the learning of the patent. No such inference follows from a mere license provision measuring royalties by the licensee's total sales even if, as things work out, only some or none of the merchandise employs the patented idea or process, or even if it was foreseeable that some undetermined portion would not contain the invention. It could easily be, as the Court indicated in Automatic Radio, that the licensee as well as the patentee would find it more convenient and efficient from several standpoints to base royalties on total sales than to face the burden of figuring royalties based on actual use. [29] HN15[] If convenience of the parties rather than patent power dictates the total-sales royalty provision, there are no misuse of the patents and no forbidden conditions attached to the license.

[67] LEdHN[32][] [32]The Court also said in Automatic Radio that if the licensee bargains for the privilege of using the patent in all of [593] his products and agrees [1585] to a lump sum or a percentage-of-total-sales royalty, he cannot escape payment [*139] on this basis by demonstrating that he is no longer using the invention disclosed by the patent. We neither disagree nor think such transactions are barred by the trial court's injunction. If the licensee negotiates for "the privilege to use any or all of the patents and developments as [he] desire[s] to use them," 339 U.S., at 834, he cannot complain that he must pay royalties if he chooses to use none of them. He could not then charge that the patentee had refused to license except on the basis of a total-sales royalty.

LEdHN[33][] [33]But we do not read Automatic Radio to authorize the patentee to use the power of his patent to insist on a total-sales royalty and to override protestations of the licensee that some of his products are unsuited to the patent or that [*68] for some lines of his merchandise he has no need or desire to purchase the privileges of the patent. In such event, not only would royalties be collected on unpatented merchandise, but the obligation to pay for nonuse would clearly have its source in the leverage of the patent.

LEdHN[34][] [34]We also think HN16[] patent misuse inheres in a patentee's insistence on a percentage-of-sales royalty, regardless of use, and his rejection of licensee proposals to pay only for actual use. Unquestionably, a licensee must pay if he uses the patent. Equally, however, he may insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis of total sales, including products in which he may use a competing patent or in which no patented ideas are used at all. There is nothing in the right granted the patentee to keep others [158] from using, selling, or manufacturing his invention which empowers him to insist on payment not only for use but also for producing products which do not employ his discoveries at all.

LEdHN[35][] [35] [*69] Of course, a licensee cannot expect to obtain a license, giving him the privilege of use and insurance against infringement suits, without at least footing the patentee's [*140] expenses in dealing with him. He cannot insist upon paying on use alone and perhaps, as things turn out, pay absolutely nothing because he finds he can produce without using the patent. If the risks of infringement are real and he would avoid them, he must anticipate some minimum charge for the license -- enough to insure the patentee against loss in negotiating and administering his monopoly, even if in fact the patent is not used at all. But we discern no basis in the statutory monopoly granted the patentee for his using that monopoly to coerce an agreement to pay a percentage royalty on merchandise not employing the discovery which the claims of the patent define.

LEdHN[36][] [36] LEdHN[37][] [37]Although we have concluded that Automatic Radio does not foreclose the injunction entered by the District Court, it does not follow that the injunction was otherwise proper. [*70] Whether the trial court correctly determined that HRI was conditioning the grant of patent licenses upon the payment of royalties on unpatented products has not yet been determined by the Court of Appeals. And if there was such patent misuse, it does not necessarily follow that the misuse embodies the ingredients of a violation of either § 1 or § 2 of the Sherman Act, or that Zenith was threatened by a violation so as to entitle it to an injunction under § 16 of the Clayton Act. See, e. g., Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 490 (1942); Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith Co., 329 U.S. 637, 641 (1947); Laitram Corp. v. King Crab, Inc., 245 F.Supp. 1019 (D. C. Alaska 1965). See also Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 254 (1955); R. Nordhaus & E. Jurow, Patent-Antitrust Law 122-123 (1961); Frost, Patent Misuse As A Per Se Antitrust Violation, in Conference on the Antitrust Laws and the [1586] Attorney General's Committee Report 113-123 (J. Rahl & E. Zaidins ed., 1955). [*141] Cf. Staff of Antitrust Subcommittee of House Committee [*71] on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., Antitrust Problems in the Exploitation of Patents 23 (Comm. Print. 1956); Schueller, The New Antitrust Illegality Per Se: Forestalling and Patent Misuse, 50 Col. L. Rev. 170, 184-200 (1950). Whether the findings and the evidence are sufficient to make out an actual or threatened violation of the antitrust laws so as to justify the injunction issued by the District Court has not been considered by the Court of Appeals, and we leave the matter to be dealt with by that court in the first instance.

[29] The record and oral argument in Automatic Radio disclose no basis for the conclusion that Automatic Radio was forced into accepting the total-sales royalty rate by HRI's use of its patent leverage.

Accordingly, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the case is remanded to that court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent by: HARLAN (In Part)

Dissent

[*159] MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I concur in Parts I and II of the Court's opinion. However, I do not join Part III, in which the Court holds that a patent license provision which measures royalties by a percentage of the [594] licensee's total sales is lawful if included for the "convenience" of both parties but unlawful if "insisted upon" [*72] by the patentee.

My first difficulty with this part of the opinion is that its test for validity of such royalty provisions is likely to prove exceedingly difficult to apply and consequently is apt to engender uncertainty in this area of business dealing, where certainty in the law is particularly desirable. In practice, it often will be very hard to tell whether a license provision was included at the instance of both parties or only at the will of the licensor. District courts will have the unenviable task of deciding whether the course of negotiations establishes "insistence" upon the suspect provision. Because of the uncertainty inherent [*142] in such determinations, parties to existing and future licenses will have little assurance that their agreements will be enforced. And it may be predicted that after today's decision the licensor will be careful to embellish the negotiations with an alternative proposal, making the court's unravelling of the situation that much more difficult.

Such considerations lead me to the view that any rule which causes the validity of percentage-of-sales royalty provisions to depend upon subsequent judicial examination of the parties' [*73] negotiations will disserve rather than further the interests of all concerned. Hence, I think that the Court has fallen short in failing to address itself to the question whether employment of such royalty provisions should invariably amount to patent misuse. [1]

My second difficulty with this part of the Court's opinion is that in reality it overrules an aspect of a prior decision of this Court, Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 339 U.S. 827 (1950), without offering more than a shadow of a reason in law or economics for departing from that earlier ruling. Despite the Court's efforts to distinguish Automatic Radio, it cannot be denied that the Court there sustained a Hazeltine patent license of precisely the same tenor as the one involved here, on the ground that "this royalty provision does not create another monopoly; it [*74] creates no restraint of competition beyond the legitimate grant of the patent." 339 U.S., at 833.

[1] I find it unnecessary to consider the further question whether inclusion of such a provision should be held to violate the antitrust laws.

In finding significance for present purposes in some of the qualifying language [1587] in Automatic Radio, I believe that the Court today has misconstrued that opinion. A reading of the opinion as a whole satisfies me that the [*143] Automatic Radio Court did not consider it relevant whether Hazeltine Research had "insisted" upon inclusion of the disputed provision, and that in emphasizing that the royalty terms had no "inherent" tendency to extend the patent monopoly [160] and were not a "per se" misuse of patents, the Court was simply endeavoring to distinguish prior decisions in which patent misuse was found when the patent monopoly had been employed to "create another monopoly or restraint of competition." 339 U.S., at 832. [2] [*75] (Emphasis added.) Until now no subsequent decision has in any way impaired this aspect of Automatic Radio. [3]

Since the Court's decision finds little if any support in the prior case law, one would expect from the Court an exposition of economic reasons for doing away with the Automatic Radio doctrine. However, the nearest thing to an economic rationale is the Court's declaration that:

"just as the patent's leverage may not be used to extract from the licensee a commitment to purchase, use, or sell other products according to the desires of the patentee, neither can that leverage be used to garner as royalties a percentage share of the licensee's receipts from sales of other products; in either case, the patentee seeks to extend the monopoly of his patent to derive a benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings." Ante, at 136.

The Court then finds in the patentee a heretofore nonexistent right to "insist upon paying only for use, and not on the basis [*76] of total sales . . . ." Ante, at 139.

[*144] What the Court does not undertake to explain is how insistence upon a percentage-of-sales royalty enables a patentee to obtain an economic "benefit not attributable to use of the patent's teachings," thereby involving himself in patent misuse. For it must be remembered that all the patentee has to license [595] is the right to use his patent. It is solely for that right that a percentage-of-sales royalty is paid, and it is not apparent from the Court's opinion why this method of determining the amount of the royalty should be any less permissible than the other alternatives, whether or not it is "insisted" upon by the patentee.

One possible explanation for the Court's result, which seems especially likely in view of the Court's exception for cases where the provision was included for the "convenience" of both parties, is a desire to protect licensees against overreaching. But the Court does not cite, and the parties have not presented, any evidence that licensees as a class need such protection. [4] Moreover, the Court does not explain why a royalty based simply upon use could not be equally overreaching.

[77] Another possible justification for the Court's result might be that a royalty based directly upon use of the patent will tend to spur the licensee to "invent around" the patent or otherwise acquire a substitute which costs less, while a percentage-of-sales royalty can have no [161] such effect because of the licensee's knowledge that he must pay the royalty regardless of actual patent use. No hint of [1588] such a rationale appears in the Court's opinion. Moreover, under this theory a percentage-of-sales royalty would be objectionable largely because of resulting damage to the rest of the economy, through less efficient allocation of resources, rather than because of possible harm to the licensee. Hence, the theory might not [*145] admit of the Court's exception for provisions included for the "convenience" of both parties.

Because of its failure to explain the reasons for the result reached in Part III, the Court's opinion is of little assistance in answering the question which I consider to be the crux of this part of the case: whether percentage-of-

---

[2] The Automatic Radio Court explicitly distinguished a number of cases of that kind, including United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364 (1948), and Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U.S. 661 (1944). See 339 U.S., at 832-833.

[3] Brulotte v. Thys Co., 379 U.S. 29 (1964), involved a different question: whether a royalty based solely upon use of the invention could be collected for use occurring after the patent's expiration.

[4] Cf. American Photocopy Equip. Co. v. Rovico, 359 F.2d 745 (1966).

sales royalty provisions should be held without exception to constitute patent misuse. A recent economic analysis [*78] [5] argues that such provisions may have two undesirable consequences. First, as has already been noted, employment of such provisions may tend to reduce the licensee's incentive to substitute other, cheaper "inputs" for the patented item in producing an unpatented end-product. Failure of the licensee to substitute will, it is said, cause the price of the end-product to be higher and its output lower than would be the case if substitution had occurred. [6] Second, it is suggested that under certain conditions a percentage-of-sales royalty arrangement may enable the patentee to garner for himself elements of profit, above the norm for the industry or economy, which are properly attributable not to the licensee's use of the patent but to other factors which cause the licensee's situation to differ from one of "perfect competition," and that this cannot occur when royalties are based upon use. [7]

[79] If accepted, this economic analysis would indicate that percentage-of-sales royalties should be entirely outlawed. However, so far as I have been able to find, there has as yet been little discussion of these matters either by lawyers or by economists. And I find scant illumination on this score in the briefs and arguments of the parties in this case. The Court has pointed out both today and in [*146] Automatic Radio that percentage-of-sales royalties may be administratively advantageous for both patentee and licensee. In these circumstances, confronted, as I believe we are, with the choice of holding such royalty provisions either valid or invalid across the board, I would, as an individual member of the Court, adhere for the present to the rule of Automatic Radio.

References

Am Jur, Monopolies, Combinations, and Restraints of Trade (1st ed 102, 174, 181); Patents (1st ed 145, 149)

10 Am Jur Legal Forms, Patents, Forms 10:865, 10:867, 10:1054-10:1102

US L Ed Digest, Evidence 958; Judgment 208, 244; Patents 225, 232; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies 55, 58, 61, 67, 68, 77

ALR Digests, Patents 19; Restraints [*80] of Trade and Monopolies 15, 18

L Ed Index to Anno, Patents; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

ALR Quick Index, Patents; Restraints of Trade and Monopolies

Annotation References:

Cross licensing or pooling of patents as violation of antitrust laws. 75 L Ed 926.

Validity of agreement to pay royalties for use of patented articles beyond patent expiration date. 3 ALR 3d 770.

Who may be regarded as injured in his business or property within provisions of antitrust acts as to person who may recover damages resulting from violation of the acts. 139 ALR 1017.

End of Document

---

[5] Baxter, Legal Restrictions on Exploitation of the Patent Monopoly: An Economic Analysis, 76 Yale L. J. 267 (1966).

[6] See id., at 299-301, 302-306.

[7] See id., at 300-301, 302-306, 331-332.

Std. Pressed Steel Co. v. Astoria Plating Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division

May 27, 1969

No. C 68-788

Reporter

1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10541 *; 162 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 441 ; 13 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 844

STANDARD PRESSED STEEL CO. v. ASTORIA PLATING CORPORATION et al.

Core Terms

Interrogatory, patent, defendants', antitrust, discovery, objected, counterclaim, parties, severance, first trial, confidential, disclosure, infringement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Misjoinder

Civil Procedure > Trials > Separate Trials

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

In cases where there is a patent claim and an antitrust defense, it is an acceptable procedure to sever the antitrust claims from the patent claims and to provide for separate trials of each. The practice of severing the trial of patent and antitrust issues is common because both issues require voluminous and complex proof, because this proof is non-duplicative, and because jury trials are often demanded on the antitrust issue.

Civil Procedure > ... > Methods of Discovery > Interrogatories > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

HN2[] Methods of Discovery, Interrogatories

Interrogatories that seek opinions and legal conclusions are improper and the court will sustain an objection to them.

Civil Procedure > ... > Methods of Discovery > Interrogatories > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Enablement Requirement > General Overview

HN3[] Methods of Discovery, Interrogatories

Many cases considering discovery of the date that the plaintiff will rely upon to establish the priority of his patent require simultaneous disclosure both by the plaintiff and the defendants of this information.

Counsel: [*1] WILLIAM C. CONNER and CURTIS, MORRIS & SAFFORD, both of New York, N. Y., for plaintiff.

BRUCE B. KROST and WOODLING, KROST, GRANGER & RUST, both of Cleveland, Ohio, for defendants.

CURTIS F. PRANGLEY and PRANGLEY, CLAYTON, MULLIN & VOGEL, both of Chicago, Ill., for third party defendant.

Opinion by: LAMBROS

Opinion

[441] LAMBROS, District Judge.

This is an action for patent infringement. Plaintiff is the owner of a patent issued to one Joseph P. Villo, U.S. Patent No. 3,093,177.

The defendants have denied infringement of the patent. They have also asserted that the patent is invalid on a number of grounds. One of these grounds is set forth in paragraph 12 of the defendants' amended answer. Paragraph 12 alleges that the plaintiff has misused its patent by using it as a basis for entering into contracts or conspiracies in restraint of trade, in violation of 15 U.S.C.A., § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust law.

The amended answer also sets forth a counterclaim in two counts. The first count seeks a declaratory judgment that the patent at issue is invalid, and that the defendants have not infringed on said patent. Count two of the amended counterclaim seeks damages against the plaintiff [*2] and against an additional third-party defendant, Amerace Esna Corporation. The claim is based on an alleged conspiracy between Standard Pressed Steel Company and Amerace Esna Corporation to restrain trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act, allegedly by use of Standard Pressed Steel's patent at issue in the present case.

Standard Pressed Steel has moved the Court, pursuant to Rule 42(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, for an order serving the issues in this case and providing for two separate trials. [442] Plaintiff seeks a severance such that the first trial will relate only to the patent issues, i.e., patent ownership, patent validity, and patent infringement. The second trial would be directed to the issues of the alleged misuse of the patent in violation of the Antitrust laws. Amerace Esna, the third-party defendant, is agreeable to a severance of the issues and to separate trials as requested by the plaintiff. The defendants, Astoria and Astorlok, however, although they do not oppose severance per se, do oppose a cleavage of the issues along the lines suggested by the plaintiff. Astoria and Astorlok seek to include in the first trial (directed to the patent [*3] issues) their defense of misuse of the patent by violation of the antitrust laws.HN1[]

In cases such as the present one where there is a patent claim and an antitrust defense, it is an acceptable procedure to sever the antitrust claims from the patent claims and to provide for separate trials of each. Container Co. v. Carpenter Container Corp., 10 F.R.D. 80, 90 USPQ 294 (D. Dela. 1949); Fischer & Porter Co. v. Sheffield Corp., 31 F.R.D. 534, 135 USPQ 389 (D. Dela. 1962); Transmirra Prods. Corp. v. Monsanto Chem. Co., 27 F.R.D. 482, 126 USPQ 239 (S.D. N.Y. 1961); Henan Oil Tools, Inc. v. Engineering Enterprises, 262 F.Supp. 629, 151 USPQ 698 (S.D. Tex. 1966). The practice of severing the trial of patent and antitrust issues is common because both issues require voluminous and complex proof, because this proof is non-duplicative, and because jury trials are often demanded on the antitrust issue.

It appears that severance of the issues will be desirable in the instant case. It also appears that a cleavage of the issues along the lines suggested by the plaintiff would be non-prejudicial to the parties and would secure the most efficient use of judicial and jury time. Astoria and Astorlok [*4] have demanded a jury trial on the issues in count two of their counterclaim, which is the count relating to alleged Sherman Act violations. If the patent and antitrust issues are tried together, a jury would be required to hear all of the evidence relating to the validity of the patent under the patent laws, yet would be permitted to determine only the issues relating to the antitrust violations. In addition, Amerace Esna would be required to employ counsel to sit through a much longer trial, where the only claims against that party relate to the alleged antitrust violation. There seems little reason to have a jury occupied during the entire trial of all the issues, when the jury will only decide some of the issues.

If the defendants' defense to the patent action based onStandard Pressed Steel's alleged misuse of the patent were to be tried along with the other patent issues, rather than with the counterclaim for antitrust violations, a complete duplication of proof and trial time would be entailed.Amerace Esna would be required to employ counsel to sit through two successive trials on the identical issue. All parties would be required to present their cases on the alleged antitrust [*5] violations twice, first to a judge and then to a jury. This seems hardly justifiable, particularly since there can be no final judgment in this action until both trials have been concluded.

It is, therefore, ordered as follows. The plaintiff's-motion for severance of the issues in this action is granted in the following particulars. There shall be two separate trials of the issues presented in this action and counterclaim. The first trial will be directed to all issues relevant to the ownership, validity, and alleged infringement of the plaintiff's patent in suit save and excepting the issues raised in paragraph 12 of the defendants' answer. This first trial will relate to all issues raised by the complaint and the defendants' answer, save and excepting paragraph 12 of the answer as set forth above. This first trial will also include all issues raised in count one of the defendants' counterclaim.

A second trial shall be held thereafter, directed to the issues raised in count two of the defendants' amended counterclaim and in paragraph 12 of the defendants' answer.

The first trial, as outlined above, will be to the Court. The second trial will be to the Court on the [*6] issues raised in paragraph 12 of the defendants' answer and to a jury with respect to the issues in count two of the defendants' amended counterclaim.

It is further ordered that the discovery relating to both the first and the second trials shall go forth simultaneously.

There remain for the Court's consideration various objections by each of the parties to certain of the interrogatories directed at them by the other parties.

Astoria and Astorlok have objected to certain of the interrogatories directed to them by the plaintiff. They have first objected to Interrogatory 2(d). This seeks the identification of any drawings or specifications describing the fasteners made by the defendants of [443] the type at issue here. The defendants have asserted that these are confidential and that they should not be disclosed. We need not pass on the question of the confidentiality of these drawings since the plaintiff has not demanded their production. Rather, the plaintiff has demanded only that they be identified. The Court can see no possible disclosure of confidential information resulting from the identification requested by the plaintiff. Therefore, the defendants' objections to Interrogatory [*7] 2(d) are overruled. For the same reasons, defendants' objections to Interrogatory 2(e) are overruled. It is ordered that Astoria and Astorlok answer these interrogatories on or before June 2, 1969.

Defendants have also objected to plaintiff's Interrogatories 2(f) and 2(g) on the ground that these seek the discovery of trade secrets belonging to the defendants. If is ordered, pursuant to Rule 30(b), that the defendants file answers to Interrogatories 2(f) and 2(g) with this Court on or before June 2, 1969.Said answers are to be enclosed in a sealed envelope and are to be opened only as directed by this Court. The Court will also entertain further briefs by the parties with respect to their position on the discovery of the information sought by Interrogatories 2(f) and 2(g). Any briefs directed toward this issue should also be filed with this Court by June 2, 1969.

The defendants have also objected to plaintiff's Interrogatories 6, 7, 8 and 9, each of which seeks the discovery of the basis of the defendants' antitrust claims against the plaintiff and Amerace Esna. The defendants' objections to these interrogatories are based upon their contention that the plaintiff should [*8] be required to make disclosure on these issues prior to the defendants' disclosure.

As the Court indicated at the hearing held on the various motions a few days ago, the Court will not establish any priorities for discovery. Rather, the Court will permit discovery to proceed by all parties on all issues simultaneously, insofar as that is practicable. The defendants now have the benefit of the plaintiff's answers to the defendants' interrogatories. It is, therefore, ordered that the defendants Astoria and Astorlok submit answers to plaintiff's Interrogatories 6, 7, 8 and 9 on or before twenty days from the date of this order.

Defendants have also objected to plaintiff's Interrogatory No. 10. The defendants have asserted that the information sought is of a confidential nature. It is, therefore, ordered pursuant to Rule 30(b) that the defendants Astoria and Astorlok file with this Court on or before June 2, 1969, their answers to Interrogatory No. 10 in a sealed envelope to be opened only at the direction of this Court.

The third-party defendant, Amerace Esna Corporation, has objected to certain interrogatories propounded by Astorlok. Amerace Esna has objected to Interrogatories [*9] 19 and 20 on the ground that they require the disclosure of confidential communications between attorney and client and the attorney's work product. These two interrogatories, however, do not seek disclosure of the substance of any confidential material. Rather, they are directed to the discovery of the fact of the communications. It is, therefore ordered that Amerace Esna's objections to Interrogatories 19 and 20 are overruled.

It appears that the parties are still discussing Amerace Esna's objection to Astorlok's Interrogatory 36(b). Rather than stay a ruling on Amerace Esna's objection of this interrogatory indefinitely, the Court will sustain the objection to Interrogatory No. 36(b) at this time without prejudice, however, to its being propounded again to Amerace Esna by Astorlok in the event no agreement on its can be reached.

Astorlok and Astoria have also propounded interrogatories to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has objected to certain of these interrogatories. Plaintiff objects to Interrogatories No. 25 and 28 on the ground that these seek opinions and legal conclusions of the plaintiff. The Court agrees with the plaintiff's position that these interrogatories [*10] seek discovery only of the plaintiff's position and opinions on various other items of evidence. HN2[] Such interrogatories are improper and the Court will sustain the plaintiff's objections to these. Similarly, the Court sustains the plaintiff's objections to Interrogatories 31 and 32 since these cannot possibly lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. For the same reason, the Court sustains the plaintiff's objection to Interrogatory No. 42.

Plaintiff also objects to Interrogatory No. 27, which seeks discovery of the date which the plaintiff will rely upon to establish the priority of the plaintiff's patent. HN3[] Many of the cases considering discovery of this information have required simultaneous disclosure boty by the plaintiff and the defendants of this information. 4 Moore's Fed. Pract., P33.27, fn. 32. With respect to Interrogatory No. 27 therefor, the Court will make the following order. The plaintiff's objection to Interrogatory No. 27 is sustained subject, however, to the defendants Astoria and [444]

Astorlok filing with this Court in a sealed envelope the dates upon which they will rely for purposes of establishing priority, as against other patents and publications and prior [*11] knowledge, of the alleged invention of claims 1 and 2 of the Villo patent in suit. In the event this information is filed by the defendants, it is ordered that the plaintiff no later than ten days thereafter answer Interrogatory No. 27 and submit said answer to this Court in a sealed envelope at which time the answers of the parties to this interrogatory will be exchanged.

The defendants' motion to stay depositions filed in this Court on May 8, 1969, was previously granted until further order of this Court. It is now ordered that the stay on taking these depositions previously imposed by the Court is lifted, and depositions may now be noticed and taken in accordance with the usual procedures of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Kolene Corp. v. Motor City Metal Treating, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division

July 28, 1969

Civ. A. No. 25283

Reporter

307 F. Supp. 1251 *; 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13222 ; 163 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 214 ***

KOLENE CORPORATION, and Deutsche Gold-Und-Silber-Scheideanstalt Vormals Roessler, Plaintiffs, v. MOTOR CITY METAL TREATING, INC., Defendant

Core Terms

patent, salts, cyanate, aeration, bath, nitriding, trademark, infringement, metal, shops, air, anti-trust, prior art, cyanide, patent-in-suit, processes, captive, heat, customers, misuse, soft, file wrapper, non-aerated, franchise, chemical, Steel, heat-treater, franchisees, words, process-in-suit

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Process Patents > General Overview

HN1[] Utility Patents, Process Patents

In process patents what the court is concerned with is a process invention. The specific details of the apparatus are of little or no significance or relevance. What the court is concerned with is a patent claim for a process as a whole.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Pretrial Motions & Procedures > Suppression of Evidence

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Inequitable Conduct > Effect, Materiality & Scienter > General Overview

HN2[] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

Where an applicant deliberately and intentionally, rather than unintentionally or mistakenly, suppresses material evidence or gives the Examiner false and misleading evidence, which betray him into granting a patent that he might not otherwise have granted, the patent is not only unenforceable, but the fraud so practiced might ground an antitrust claim, should the other elements of an anti-trust violation be proven.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

HN3[] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

The burden of proof of fraud upon the Patent Office, whether relating to the defense of fraud or to the antitrust counterclaim based on fraud is upon the defendant.

Counsel: [1] Daniel G. Cullen, and Bernard J. Cantor, of Cullen, Sloman & Cantor, Detroit, Michigan, for plaintiffs.

Martin J. Adelman, Birmingham, Michigan, and Joseph Levin, Detroit, Michigan, for defendant.

Judges: Talbot Smith, District Judge.

Opinion by: SMITH

Opinion

[*215] [*1252] OPINION

TALBOT SMITH, District Judge.

This case involves a process patent. The use of the process on certain metals, particularly ferrous, results in a tough and wear resistant surface, with greatly increased fatigue strength. Thus "Helicopter rotor blade dampers have service tripled." [1] It has been described as a "new technology" and there is no doubt that the description is accurate. But this case has an unusual circumstance, new in our experience at least, of significance in some phases of the case. Although we have heard extensive oral testimony, have seen moving pictures, have examined many documents and depositions (the parties have prepared and tried the case with great care), have examined metallic pieces treated by the process, as well as much trade literature, we have yet to be told just how or why the process works as it does. The parties disagree and their experts disagree. We will examine [2] this matter further in due course.

The parties before us are Plaintiff Kolene Corporation (hereafter Kolene), a Michigan corporation, doing business at 12890 Westwood Avenue, Detroit, Plaintiff Deutsche Gold-Und-Silber Scheideanstalt Vormals Roessler (hereafter referred to as Degussa, its trade [*1253] name), a corporation of the Federal Republic of Germany with offices in Frankfurt-am-Main, West Germany, both collectively referred to hereafter as the plaintiff, and Defendant Motor City Metal Treating, Inc. (hereafter Motor City), a Michigan corporation doing business at 3400 Dunn Road, Detroit.

---

[1] Automotive Industries, May 14, 1962. Ex. 10.

Involved here is Claim 1 of U.S. Patent No. 3,022,204, issued February 20, 1962 on an application filed by Johannes Muller and Carl Albrecht. The patent is entitled "Process for Nitriding Metals". The plaintiffs claim that the defendant is guilty of infringement and seek an injunction and an accounting.

The defendant alleges that the patent-in-suit is invalid, due [3] to obviousness, and moreover, that the patent is not infringed by the defendant's accused process. In addition, the defendant asserts that the patent is unenforceable and invalid because of alleged fraud on the Patent Office and misuse by the plaintiffs. Defendant also counter-claims for treble damages under the Federal Anti-Trust laws on the ground that the plaintiffs practiced a fraud on the Patent Office in securing the patent, [216] such fraud arising from an alleged failure to advise the Patent Office of the best prior art and in making deliberate misrepresentations to the Patent Office. There is no issue as to jurisdiction of this Court, title to the patent-in-suit, or notice of infringement. There is no serious dispute that the defendant's principals and organizers had knowledge of the patent-in-suit when defendant was organized in October of 1963, when the defendant began its alleged infringing activities and, actually, at an even earlier date, that is, when they were associated with another company, Commercial Steel Treating, prior to mid-1963, and shortly after the issuance of the patent in February of 1962.

Prior to the issuance of the patent-in-suit there was extensive metal-treating [4] history relating to what is called "nitriding". This term, broadly speaking, refers to the case-hardening of a piece of metal by the use of nitrogen. [2] The prior art background of the heat treating of metals begins with gas and liquid nitriding processes. [3] The use of these processes was unrestricted to certain of the ferrous alloys since they were not usable on all ferrous materials, such as cast iron. The gas and liquid processes were lengthy and expensive, the former (subjecting the piece to a high temperature nitrogen gas atmosphere) being used particularly for parts where high cost was not a factor, such as in selected governmental and aircraft operations. In the liquid nitriding processes (such as Chapmanizing, which involved heating in the range of 1550 to 1600 degrees F, Malcomizing, Kaliding, and others) the part was immersed in a high temperature molten cyanide bath for prolonged periods of time.

[5] To those skilled in the art the term nitriding was synonymous with marked disadvantages. It did, it is true, result in a wear-resistant surface on some ferrous metals but at the cost of brittleness, lengthy treatment, and high costs. In addition, there was the problem of distortion in the processing. Mr. Michael Soviak, the Chief Metallurgist at Commercial Steel Heating Corporation, testified by deposition and referred in part to the difficulties involved due to the high temperatures used. "* * * We had a tremendous problem with this thing, using carbo-nitriding and cyanide treatments of all kinds where we had to heat to a high temperature and quench. * * *" [*1254] And at a later point, "One of the biggest headaches in our business in distortion. We carry a battery of straighteners that is expensive and their job is to straighten things that distort ". In addition, of course, the original dimensions of the piece had to take into account the machining and grinding required to correct the distortion resulting from the process. Under these circumstances there was a real need for a commercially feasible, non-distorting process that would impart to ferrous materials both [6] wear resistance and fatigue resistance and at the same time maintain ductility, thus avoiding brittleness. It should, as well, be economically feasible.

In approximately 1954 Dr. Johannes Muller, a Chemist and Metallurgist who was employed by plaintiff Degussa, developed a "soft" nitriding process which anteceded the patented process we here consider. "Soft" nitriding [4] involved using a salt bath as the nitriding medium. The active ingredients were sodium cyanide or potassium cyanide or mixtures of both. Dr. Muller states (Ex. B) that the nitriding effect of sodium or potassium cyanide was

---

[2] "* * * a process of case-hardening steel by impregnating with nitrogen * * *" Webster's Third New International Dictionary, 1961.

[3] Dr. Muller's article in Das Industrieblatt, Stuttgard, September, 1954, "Nitriding Steel in the Salt Bath" contains a descriptive comment, in referring to the use of ammonia as the nitriding agent, of the mechanism of the nitrogen penetration into steel. "The atomic nitrogen which is formed in this decomposition process is extremely reactive before it recombines to form a nitrogen molecule N (2), - it is able to penetrate the steel surface and to diffuse into the steel."

[4] The term arose, we are told, "because previous gas nitriding was brittle, and the opposite to brittleness was soft in the German language, I understand, so they called it 'soft nitriding'." It was a contradiction in terms in the metallurgical world since nitriding theretofore meant hardness and brittleness.

the result, for example, of the oxidation of sodium cyanide to sodium cyanate. In the decomposition of the latter, nitrogen appeared in the nascent state and could penetrate steel. There was thus obtained a thin, ductile, and tough "compound" layer formed of non-brittle, ductile iron-nitrides, beneath which layer a deeper nitrogen diffusion zone was found. The process was a relatively short one, requiring about 90 minutes, resulting in both increased wear and fatigue resistance, and without the sacrifice of ductility. Moreover, due to the operating temperature of approximately 1050 degrees [7] F there was no significant distortion. These findings of Dr. Muller were reported in articles published in Germany, which articles form part of the prior art [217] in this suit. We will refer to this process hereafter as the "non-aerated" process in order to distinguish it from the aerated process before us in the patent-in-suit.

Promising though it seemed in the laboratory, however, and in use on a small scale, it had one serious drawback. The results were not uniform. Commercially applied, the process was erratic to the degree that variations were not only found from batch to batch, but within parts in a single batch. Similar variations were found in both fatigue and wear resistance. Dr. Muller, himself, [8] spoke of the experience of Volkswagen, "They found one day 50 per cent [reference is here made to per cent of improvement in the fatigue properties]; another 70 per cent; another 20. So that describes the situation." As a result "They decided to not continue the tests or to introduce a process into the production or to approve it for production." Daimler-Benz "stopped all the test work after a certain while, * * * because of not reproducible results." In fact, Dr. Muller himself when asked whether he or his company ever used a non-aerated cyanide-cyanate bath in commercial processing answered, "I would say not really", and went on to explain "because the results I got from this non-aerated bath were not consistent enough, so it was not possible to, let's say, enlarge the use in this field." When asked whether anyone used such a bath commercially in the commercial processing of workpieces, he replied that one company did (Braunschweig) but that "they threw it away after a certain while." This process, we find, was a commercial failure.

We now reach the gist of the patent. We have noted that the simple immersion of the metal in the chemicals, "soft" nitriding, although it resulted [9] in the marked advantages described, was commercially unusable because of its fatal defects as to inconsistency and lack of uniformity. [1255] This was particularly harmful to its employment in large volume production. In 1959 one Carl Albrecht, collaborating with Dr. Muller, decided to experiment with the theretofore relatively quiescent bath by adding another step, namely, that of air-bubbling. Sub-surface air was introduced into the vessel and allowed to bubble through the mixture. The results, for some reason, were not only uniformity, consistency, and large-volume reliability, but an increase in the favorable attributes (e.g. ductility) obtained from the commercially unsuccessful non-aerated salt bath. As we have noted heretofore, just why this is true no one seems to know. Counsel for both parties presented theories, as did various experts. Plaintiff's counsel thought that if aeration oxidizes cyanide (as usually contended) it does so by forming a nascent cyanate in situ. This, of course, would be in addition to the already present cyanate. Dr. Muller, the patentee, theorized that when aeration forms a nascent cyanate in situ, the bath in effect contains two forms [10] of cyanate, a normal cyanate and an iso-cyanate. But Dr. Muller does not tell us why this reaction caused both qualitative improvement and uniformity of results. Expert witness Kates, the Director of Metallurgy for the Lindberg Steel Treating Company, admitted that " * * I don't know the cause of the chemical thermodynamics involved but there is - the addition of air creates a catalytic effect to allow for the greater diffusion of the nitride that is formed." (Whenever an expert speaks of some sort of "catalytic" action it is merely another way of saying that an unknown factor is at work.) Expert witness Arne Mars, employed by Vickers, Inc., a division of Sperry-Rand, as Manager, Metallurgy Research and Development (this company, we note, not only has manufacturing plants within the United States but plants in Australia, Japan, Germany, England, and under construction in India and Brazil), in response to the question "Do you feel that the air oxidizes cyanide to cyanate?", "I don't know for sure exactly if it does do that in a replenishing type of reaction which you are talking about, but there are chemical reactions that are going on, and exactly what happens, I really don't know."

[11] From the testimony presented in Court and a review of the depositions, articles, and exhibits, the Court is satisfied that although no one can tell us precisely in what manner aeration operates to produce consistent and uniform results, together with a substantial qualitative improvement, it does do so. It is clear that when the air supply is shut off, either by mishap or deliberately, the process no longer works in the sense that it no longer produces uniform, consistent, and acceptable results. Again referring to the testimony of Mr. Mars of Vickers:

"We've had some problems with no aeration. For instance, when our sparging ring [which introduces the air] would plug up or something and we had a lot of problems, parts were scrapped." He goes on "And without the air we just didn't get the compound layer on there." Referring to the effect of aeration, Mr. Mars referred to some tests that [218] they had run: "This is something that we previously had done in our R and D type work, just to run a bath without air to see what happens, so when we run into a production problem we can recognize it". Question: "And you found then that without the air it did not work?" Answer: "That's right."

[12] It is our judgment that aeration (meaning, in this context, sub-surface air introduction) is the gist of the invented process before us. It is well to stress at this point that the accused patent-in-suit, is a "Process for Nitriding Metals" and that what has been patented is a process or art. The important thing is a method of procedure, not the particular means by which the method is practiced, Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, 214 U.S. 366, 29 S. Ct. 652, 53 L. Ed. 1034 (1909) or the apparatus used in carrying it out.

So far we have emphasized the operations of Degussa and the work of the chemical experts. The way Kolene got [*1256] into this matter is this: Its business is the chemical process business. The company sells the equipment and salts used in various industrial molten salt bath processes. These include rescaling stainless steels, exotic metals and alloys, degraphatizing and desanding cast iron, and the stripping of paints and plastics from industrial components. It deals with nearly all of the major industrial plants in the United States as well as plants overseas.

In 1958 John H. Shoemaker, the President of Kolene, visited Degussa, which was one of its licensees [13] in Frankfurt, Germany. At that time he was told of the then new (and later unsuccessful) "soft" nitriding process which had been developed at Degussa. The test specimens shown him were from the earlier "soft" nitriding process which did not involve the bubbling of air through the mixture. When Mr. Shoemaker returned to this country he endeavored to sell the process in the United States but was received with much skepticism and some ridicule because the term "soft" nitriding was contrary to the then accepted understanding of metallurgists that nitriding produced hardness, not softness. There was little interest shown in the process.

In the summer of 1959, however, Mr. Shoemaker returned to Germany with Mr. George Bidigare. Mr. Shoemaker, who was not himself a metallurgist, desired the advice and the evaluation of an expert in the field and hence made an arrangement with Mr. Miel, at that time the President of Commercial Steel Treating of Detroit, to take with him Mr. George Bidigare, who was a highly skilled, experienced metallurgist in Commercial's employ. After some reluctance, Degussa agreed to disclose its process to Mr. Bidigare upon Mr. Shoemaker's representations that [14] he required Mr. Bidigare's technical advice, and the process was disclosed to both gentlemen in confidence. They spent some three weeks with Degussa receiving information and dictating detailed reports, for by this time Degussa had the aerated process, it having been conceived and introduced at Degussa in February of 1959. This was the first time Mr. Bidigare had ever seen or heard of such a process and it was his opinion that the process was new and different from anything he had known before. It was at this time, during the 1959 visit to Degussa, that Mr. Shoemaker coined the trade name "Tufftride". A new and more descriptive name was sought because of the resistance that metallurgists in the United States had exhibited to the term "soft" nitriding. The trade name refers only to aerated processes and has been used commercially by Kolene only to describe such process. The Court does not view the appearance of this word, from time to time in memoranda and files, and its use by translators in translating documents from German to English, to refer to the earlier non-aerated "soft" nitriding process as significant. We find that the trademark "Tufftride" was coined and formulated [15] by Mr. Shoemaker, was intended to refer only to the aerated process (and not the earlier unsuccessful non-aerated process) and does commercially refer only to such aerated process which was introduced to the United States by Mr. Shoemaker. Incidentally, it is clear that the non-aerated process was never introduced into the United States. (Where the word "Tenifer" is found, it may be recognized as the trademark used in Germany by Degussa for the successful aerated high-cyanate process.)

The process-in-suit was introduced into the United States in 1959 and has been widely adopted and widely used. This, however, took considerable time and effort on the part of plaintiff Kolene and its various franchisees since as we have heretofore noted, the term "soft-nitriding" was contrary to the normal knowledge of the art and the understanding of experts in the field respecting the effect of nitriding on ferrous metals. The skepticism, however, and resistance, were overcome by the use of the process. International Harvester, for example, had been experiencing difficulty with its [*1257] crankshafts which were breaking after being used from 100 to 150 hours. They tried this technique [16] as the last straw, and [219] found that "After the Tufftriding process, we ran 5000 hours." The process has now been adopted by many major industries in the United States and in foreign countries. Trade publications speaking favorably of the process are numerous and will be found in Exhibit 10. Some quotations therefrom will be found in the footnotes. [5] The materials from the publications are so voluminous that we will simply say that the record is replete with instances where the lives of all types of industrial parts such as dies, intricate stampings, automotive and engine parts, gears, as well as other pieces, have been substantially increased, and substantially improved by treatment with the process-in-suit.

[17] The invention disclosed in the patent-in-suit, in more detail, relates to the process of aerating a cyanide-cyanate salt bath for the treating of metal parts. The application was filed on March 20, 1961 [6] and patent issued in 1962. Messrs. Miel and Bidigare, both with defendant Motor City, thereupon sought the advice of counsel upon how best to avoid the patent. Their background and interest was this: Mr. Miel was President of Commercial Steel Treating Corporation until 1963 and thereafter became one of the organizers and the controlling stockholder of defendant Motor City. In 1959 Mr. Miel and Commercial had cooperated with Kolene in introducing the Tufftride process into the United States, afterwards splitting from Kolene. After 1963 (after Mr. Miel had left) Commercial became a franchisee. Mr. Bidigare, whom we have mentioned heretofore, also left Commercial in 1963 and was also one of the organizers of Motor City, serving as its President until 1964.

[18] As we have noted, after learning of the process with Mr. Shoemaker, at the Degussa plant, Mr. Bidigare had set up and operated at Commercial a Tufftride installation. Afterwards, in 1960, the split between Commercial and Kolene took place. Miel and Commercial, however, continued to use the aerated process. They assert that they are using a different process, which brings us to the matter of infringement.

As to the desired avoidance of the patent-in-suit, Messrs. Miel and Bidigare made certain changes in the process and equipment used therewith. Since the patent claims specified that the process employed "between about 25 to 40% cyanate" they decided to use 50%. This introduced no functional change in the [*1258] process, but was described by Mr. Grafmiller, a graduate metallurgist, formerly with Commercial, later one of the organizers and President of Motor City, in these terms:

---

[5] Ex. 10, Tab 7, Tool & Manufacturing Engineer, April, 1964:

"Many parts now made of more expensive alloy steel can be made of low carbon steel and then processed to achieve desired level of engineering properties."

(p. 3) "In addition, the use of the process occasionally offers the only acceptable engineering solution to a part's performance problem."

Ex. 10, Tab 9, Machinery, March, 1965: "An economical nitriding treatment eliminates spalling and decreases soldering of die casting dies."

"Greatly improved operation of die casting dies has been observed by nitriding them with a low temperature, short-cycle process called Tufftriding."

Ex. 10, Tab 10, Hot Rod, March, 1965: (p. 32) "The forged steel crank, having undergone the Tufftride process, is one of the Chevy bottom end highlights." (Referring to new Chevrolet engine).

Ex. 10, Tab 11, Iron Age, July 5, 1962: Describing an automated TUFFTRIDE system set up to treat crankshafts:

> "Why did they automate Tufftriding? An unusual crankshaft design was needed for the new Willys Motors heavy duty Toronado-OHC engine. Willys wanted a tough crankshaft with the right proportions and finish to assure good bearing life."
>
> "This made possible a lighter and simpler shaft. It also gave high mechanical efficiency to the heat treated parts."
>
> "Machined from SAE 1045 steel forgings, the crankshafts promise higher reliability at lower costs."

[6] This was based on earlier patent applications U.S. Serial No. 17,541 filed March 25, 1960 and U.S. Serial No. 40,555 filed July 5, 1960.

"Q: Do you know of any difference whatever in the functioning of a bath that has a cyanate content of 50 or more as contrasted with a bath which has a cyanate content of 25 to 40?

A: Again, I have not been in this long enough to say yes or no to that. But to my knowledge it doesn't [19] make any difference.
Q: It is simply a question of avoiding the patent?
A: Right."

Mr. Miel was somewhat more guarded. Avoidance of the patent was only part of the reason for going to a 50% cyanate level. The only other changes made were equally non-functional, namely, the use of an L-shaped tube (instead of a ring) to introduce the air into the bath, and (about this same time) using a titanium liner for the bath. (Stainless steel has also been employed for liners.) But it is noteworthy that the process of aeration, [220] which was the key distinguishing feature between the old commercially unsuccessful German process, and the present successful one under the Muller-Albrecht patent, was not disturbed.

The claims-in-suit for the process were in part,

"A process comprising immersing a metal workpiece in a molten alkali metal salt bath comprising between about 25 to 40% cyanate, at least about 40% cyanide * * *" Col. 8, lines 48-50, Patent-in-suit.

Our italicized words indicate the core of the controversy. The defendant claims that it uses between 48 to 50% cyanate and thus does not infringe. The first question that arises concerns the reasons for defendant's [20] increase in cyanate. It sometimes happens in chemical processes that at a certain point in the reaction, a marked or significant change takes place. The reactions may stabilize on a certain plateau, that is, at a certain level. Or, having theretofore maintained a certain level, they may with changed conditions or concentrations, show a rise, or possibly a decrease, in intensity. Nothing of the sort occurs here. The "about 40%" is not critical from an operating point of view. Nothing happens at this point. It is clear from the testimony that this "about" 40% figure had its origin in the fact that the salts were eating up (reacting with) the then-available iron pots, producing a sludge. Its removal was difficult and laborious, since it was a shovel operation with highly poisonous chemicals, (the lethal effect of the cyanides is well known) heated up to over a thousand degrees Fahrenheit. The "about 40%" was not a critical limitation of the inventive concept. At about 40% the effects upon the pot were so marked as to be incompatible with an economical and efficient commercial operation. As a matter of law, the term "about" is a clear warning that exactitude is not claimed but [21] rather a contemplated variation. Thus the words "between about 25 to 40%" of claim 1 described limits ranging from a chemically operative lower limit (the 25% figure, as shown from the charts and testimony, is approximately where the effects of the bath begin consistently to increase) to a commercially imposed (for economic reasons) upper limit. It was the then best known method for operating the process.

HN1[] While we are on this topic of operating the process, it would be well to keep in mind that what we are concerned with here is a process invention. It includes certain acts or steps in combination, simultaneously acting on the salt bath and the metal pieces therein, namely, immersing the workpiece in the described liquid solution, and next, aerating the whole mixture, workpieces and all, by bubbling air upwardly through the mixture from below. The specific details of the apparatus are of little or no significance or relevance. The pot is not the claim, but merely the vessel in which it all takes place. Nor is the pipe introducing the air the claim, whether a ring with holes [*1259] in it, or an L-shaped pipe or what not. What we are concerned with here is a patent claim [22] for a process as a whole and so we consider it. See, Minnesota Mining v. Kent Industries, 409 F.2d 99 (CA 6 1969).

Except for the asserted difference in the cyanate content to 48-50%, the process used by Motor City is substantially the same as that taught by Degussa to Mr. Bidigare. Both Mr. Bidigare and Mr. Grafmiller testified that (in comparing the process when operated at 40% cyanate with that employing 50% cyanate) the purpose of the process was the same, the operations were the same, the results the same, and, more revealingly, Motor City's customers were advised that the results of the Tufftride process and defendant's accused process were essentially the same. "Equivalent to or superior to" were Mr. Bidigare's words to Chevrolet and to the trade in general. In fact, orders from General Motors, Chevrolet Division, and from Firestone Steel, Division of Firestone Tire and Rubber, [7] to Motor City, specifying Tufftriding were received in evidence as bearing on the point that customers treated the accused process as the full equivalent of the Tufftride process and that Motor City was "riding along" (counsel's expression) on the trademark "Tufftride". So far as equivalence [23] is concerned, the defendant is hardly in a position to deny it since it is clear that they have traded on the Tufftride name and reputation in soliciting business for its accused process.

The defendant's position respecting non-infringement rests upon the literal difference, if any, between the 48 to 50% cyanate allegedly used by the defendant and the words of the claims-in-suit "between about 25 to 40% cyanate". Shortly stated defendant says that a "between about 25 to 40%" cyanate [221] does not " literally read" upon 40 to 50% cyanate and therefore there is no infringement. But the difference is colorable, merely. There is no substantial or material difference. There is in fact literal readability, if proper weight is given to the qualifying word "about". Moreover the accused process is the full equivalent of the process defined in Claim 1 under the doctrine [24] of equivalents, Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde, 339 U.S. 605, 70 S. Ct. 854, 94 L. Ed. 1097 (1950).

But defendant asserts that plaintiffs are estopped by a so-called File Wrapper Estoppel from construing the words "between about 25 to 40%" cyanate to include defendant's 48 to 50% cyanate. We will consider the entire File Wrapper disclosures and reliances at this point as they bear upon the several aspects of the case.

The original claims 1 and 2 in Patent Application U.S. Serial No. 17,541, filed March 25, 1960, described only the concept of bubbling air through the mix, that is, aeration and nothing more. "According to the invention it was unexpectedly found that the nitriding action of such baths could be materially improved by passing finely divided air or other similar oxidizing gases therethrough * * *". [8]

These claims were rejected on the grounds (see pp. 18 and 19 of the bundle) that the specifications did not indicate how the formula for the amount of oxidizing gas [25] was derived, and that nitriding by nitrogen was the equivalent of what applicant was accomplishing by oxidizing, and that a British patent showed the "bubbling of the nitrogen containing gas" into a salt bath for nitriding. But it is significant, at this point, to note that the Examiner did not reject on the basis that the prior art showed a process over which applicant distinguished solely on the matter of the maximum level of cyanate, which is the bone of contention at this point. Had he done so, a substantial question might arise, but such was not the case.

[*1260] The insertion of the phrase "between about 25% and 40%" which later came into the case was hence not dictated in attempting to distinguish over any earlier aerated cyanide-cyanate process but was inserted because substituted attorneys [9] felt that it was improper under United States patent practice not to clearly define an operative process, stating an operative range, rather than merely describing the naked concept of adding aeration to some (or any) cyanide-cyanate baths. As we have seen, there was an approximate lower limit, for chemical reasons, of 25% cyanate, and an approximate upper limit, for commercial [26] reasons, of 40% cyanate. Thus, there was no giving up of any operative claim and the substitution therefor of another. No prior art required the cancellation of such claims, since no prior art cited by the Examiner (or, in fact, by the defendant here) included aeration in combination with cyanide and high cyanate. The Court, therefore, concludes and finds that the cancellation of the original, non-operative, no-range claims, when viewed in context, was not caused by a need to avoid any area of prior art which plaintiff here seeks to recapture, but rather was a surrender only of inoperative naked claims, monopolizing every level of cyanate content, from the excessively low to the excessively high. Plaintiff is not here asking the Court to add an unclaimed element, which was once claimed and then abandoned in

---

[7] E.g., Purchase Order, 2-22-65, Firestone to Motor City Metal Treating Corporation, "Services to Tufftride Chevrolet Flexplate Part #RA 26821-2"

[8] Page 2, Application 17,541.

[9] There is some argument whether the original attorneys were German attorneys or American but we do not find it particularly helpful to resolve the issue.

order to save the claim from invalidity due to the prior art, [10] or to drop from the claim some limitation originally added to distinguish the claim from the prior art cited by the Patent Office. There is, we find, no surrender or estoppel barring plaintiff from asserting infringement against cyanate percentages over 40%. This "surrender" point is the first of defendant's [27] two theories of file wrapper estoppel.

But defendant also argues that plaintiff's file wrapper statements, which allegedly argue that 25-40% is a critical level of the cyanate content of the process bar plaintiff from bringing infringement against the same process when operated over 40% cyanate. The defendant urges to us that while plaintiffs knew that the cyanate content was not critical to the operation of the process, they repeatedly took the position before the Examiner that the cyanate range was critical.

This is an area calling for the greatest care in the interpretation of single sentences isolated from not only what preceded and followed the text, but from the case as a whole. We have seen heretofore that approximate ranges of operation with cyanate were imposed by a) the [28] chemistry of the process (this is at about 25% cyanate) and b) the commercialization of the process (this was about 40%, due to the then-existing sludge problem). To this [222] extent there is a critical range, "between about 25-40%". But (and we are looking particularly at the higher level, because this is where defendant operates) there is nothing whatever in the file wrapper, or the evidence before us to support a conclusion that the upper limit was critical to one exact percentage. "About 40" was good enough. This reflected merely the then operating experience. Whether 48, where defendant allegedly operates (48-50), was equivalent to 40 is nowhere negated by the file wrapper. Actually, that question is determined by the functioning of the process with the available impedimenta. Speaking of functioning, it is significant that defendant has failed to show that the functioning of the process at 48 is any different from that at 40, and we have heretofore commented that no performance or reaction curve presented to us shows any significant break at 40. We will not prolong this opinion with excerpts [*1261] and testimonial references to the file wrapper [11] but we are satisfied [29] that the plaintiff did not critically limit itself to a maximum of 40% during Patent Office proceedings.

It is our conclusion as to infringement that the accused process is identical in all material respects to the process defined in Claim 1, the slight increase in the cyanate employed by defendant being immaterial. The accused process performs an identical function, and is identical in purpose and operation. Its results, as well, are substantially identical. Moreover, so far as equivalence may be involved, we find specifically that the accused process is the full equivalent of the process defined in Claim 2 in all material respects, and is an infringement thereof.

We turn next to the defense of obviousness, novelty having been admitted. In this area our first inquiry must be as to the scope and content of the prior art. The best and most obvious prior art, of course, was the German nonaerated cyanide-high cyanate process we [30] have heretofore discussed, along with the Volkswagen and other experience. Despite its initial high promise, it was unsuccessful. This earlier process was clearly presented to and considered by the Patent Office Examiner. Thus we find on the very first page of the patent application file wrapper that "The nitriding of steel workpieces by treatment in a fused salt bath containing alkali metal cyanide and alkali metal cyanate at temperatures between 500-600 degrees C already is well known." Other comparisons are found between the earlier nonaerated process and the aerated process-in-suit, with the result of the Examiner's finding that the aerated process was patentable. Other prior art (note the Webster Dictionary definition found in footnote 2 hereto) were the old gas and liquid nitriding processes. None employed the gist of this invention, aeration. They were usable on only certain types of ferrous materials, not all, they had pronounced disadvantages, and none provided a ductile (yet hard surfaced) workpiece. The process-in-suit was considered contrary to the established knowledge of those skilled in the art, as to purposes, functions, operations and results of the prior known [31] nitriding processes. The essential difference was the addition of aeration. The results, at first received with skepticism, even by those skilled in the art, were as we have pointed out heretofore, subsequently

---

[10] See, Kaiser Co. v. McLouth Steel Corp., 400 F.2d 36 (CA 6 1968).

[11] This is Exhibit O. See, also, patent-in-suit, Ex. 1, col. 2, lines 39-40.

referred to as "unheard of in the metallurgical field", [12] and as "probably the biggest breakthrough in the heat treating field for several generations." [13]

Our ultimate question considering this phase of the case is whether the addition of aeration (which is the essential difference between the claimed process and the prior art) was obvious to those skilled in the art. Persuasive in this regard is the established fact that the experts differ on just what sub-surface aeration does and why. It just happens, that's all. No prior art suggested adding aeration for uniformity of results and qualitative improvement over the earlier non-aerated bath. Such an unexplainable [32] happening can hardly be said to be obvious to anyone.

Defendant argues that the principal result of aeration is merely to add cyanate (by oxidizing cyanide), thus replenishing used cyanate. But there is no proof of this, and it is significant to us that defendant, while maintaining its high level of cyanate by adding bricks of pure cyanate, nevertheless continues to employ aeration. The reason is clear. It is because without aeration the process is commercially useless. We find, on the record before us, that aeration does more than merely to add cyanate, but just exactly what it does we have not been told [*1262] and cannot say. Our conclusion, based upon the criteria set forth in Graham v. John-Deere, 383 U.S. 1, 86 S. Ct. 684, 15 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1966) is that the defendant has not maintained its burden of proof as to obviousness. The [223] Court, rather, finds that the process defined by Claim 1 was not obvious to those skilled in the art at the time the invention was made.

Defendant also contends that a fraud was practiced on the Patent Office. Defendant offered no proofs on this serious charge save introducing the File Wrapper into evidence. In the Pfizer case, [14] [33] upon which defendant heavily relies, the Patent Office Examiner was called and testified that he was in truth misled by the concealment of evidence which he had requested and which evidence was available and known to the patentee. Of course, this is not the only way, as defendant properly argues, of proving such fraud but in a case of this magnitude on an issue so important, involving, as it does, the penalties involved in anti-trust violations, we would desire something more decisive than the dry contents of the Wrapper. However, we will work with what we have.

Briefly, the patent application followed a not unusual path in the Patent Office. [15] There was an initial rejection of claims based upon a British patent [16] and an earlier Muller patent. [17] Applicant's responses contrasted the claimed process with both of these references. The material and significant ones of the rejected claims were replaced by Claim 12, renumbered as Claim [34] 1-in-suit. Such claim was directed to a process employing (a) cyanide (b) high cyanate and (c) aeration, together with other specifications. This claim (with others) was ultimately accepted by the Patent Office and the patent-in-suit issued.

The gist of the fraud charge is the allegation, repeated with many variations, that the Examiner "did not have before him the best prior art, 'soft nitriding'." We find, on the contrary, and beyond reasonable contradiction, that the Examiner was fully informed thereof, that the applicants acknowledged the old unsuccessful German process as part of the prior art, but urged that its aeration in a cyanide-high cyanate bath was the distinctive and novel element of the process claimed. Thus on pages 1 and 2 of the Patent Application, No. 17,541, Ex. O, after referring to the older, well-known nitriding by treatment in a fused salt bath, it was stated that "It was [35] found, however, that the nitriding action of such baths is not always uniform and that quite often defective results were obtained", and, continuing:

---

[12] Metallurgist Soviak, Commercial Steel Treating Corporation. Tr. 626.

[13] Metallurgist Mars, Vickers Corporation. Tr. 645.

[14] Chas. Pfizer v. Federal Trade Commission, 401 F.2d 574 (CA 6, 1968).

[15] See Ex. O. Patent Application.

[16] No. 591,793, August 28, 1947.

[17] No. 2,927,875, March 8, 1960.

> "According to the invention it was unexpectedly found that the nitriding action of such baths could be materially improved by passing finely divided air or other similar oxidizing gases therethrough and that when this measure is taken the nitriding action of the baths is no longer dependent upon the depth of the baths.
>
> "The beneficial effect achieved by introduction of finely divided air into the fused salt bath is, for example, exemplified in that a fused salt bath 60 cm in diameter * * *" [p. 2.]

Later (p. 80) it is also pointed out that

> "The aeration of the fused salt bath during the nitriding operation to a certain extend controls the nitriding action obtained. In general for reasons of economy the nitriding action is increased to its highest possible value." [p. 8.]
>
> * * *
>
> "The air or oxidizing gas is introduced into the bottom of the fused salt bath in such a way that it is finely distributed in the form of small bubbles which rise up through the molten bath." [p. 8]

[*1263] We note [36] also (pp. 13-16, Application) that the process claims as filed specified aeration as an essential element.

The curves in the File Wrapper (p. 28) labelled as "unaerated" and "aerated", graphically demonstrate the differences between the old unsuccessful process and the new one. "The differences between treatments of the same metal under the same conditions and in the same bath is even more pronounced when the bath has been aerated during the treatment of the metal as compared to the same bath in which no air was added." (p. 27)

The record is replete with further instances of notifications, together with comparisons. We find that, starting with the first page of the application, and continuing throughout, there were ample references to alert the Examiner to the old process. The law in this area seems clear. HN2[] Where an applicant deliberately and intentionally, rather than unintentionally or mistakenly, suppresses material evidence or gives the Examiner false and misleading evidence, which betray him into granting a patent that he might not otherwise have granted, the patent is not only unenforceable, but the fraud so practiced might ground an antitrust claim, should the [37] other elements of an anti-trust violation be proven. Walker [224] Process Equipment Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965).

Further charges of fraud are levelled with respect to technical papers and brochures, test samples and test reports describing the results obtained by the use of the old German non-aerated process, and an affidavit by Mr. Shoemaker, President of Kolene, all of which are found in the file wrapper. It is said that these were fraudulent misrepresentations to the Patent Office since those representations involved in the charge related to the old German process. It is true that much of the soft nitriding data obtained from the older, one-step process was used but it was equally applicable to the new aerated process-in-claim. As we have pointed out heretofore, the old process did indeed have marked advantages, combined with its disastrous disadvantages, and it was the claim of the applicants that the new bubbling process largely eliminated the disadvantages. The use of the old process data was completely proper (indeed, we would say, essential) provided only, and here is when the charges of fraud collapse, provided [38] the Examiner was informed of the relation of the old process to the new. This he was, as we have shown.

HN3[] The burden of proof of fraud upon the Patent Office, whether relating to the defense of fraud or to the antitrust counterclaim based on fraud is upon the defendant and it has not been sustained. There is no showing that any statements to the Examiner by applicants were materially untrue or misleading, or that any representations had a tendency to (or did, in fact) mislead the Examiner into granting a patent which he would otherwise not have granted. Moreover, and most importantly, there is no showing of an intent deliberately to mislead the Examiner or that he was in fact misled. We find that defendant has failed to maintain its burden of proof as to the fraud alleged to have been practiced upon the Patent Office, whether treated as a defense or as defendant's anti-trust counterclaim.

We come now to the matter of the alleged "misuse" of the patent. Defendant argues that should we decide as to infringement or other issues in plaintiff's favor, nevertheless plaintiff cannot maintain any enforcement action against defendant because plaintiff has "misused" the patent.

The argument [39] by defendants that Kolene has misused the patent comes to us with very skimpy proofs. We know very little about Kolene's quantitative use of the patents in the industry, this arising from defendant's disclaimer of any anti-trust violation though it relies heavily upon anti-trust cases by way of analogy, should analogy there be. Much of defendant's "misuse" case rests [*1264] squarely upon argument and speculation. Very few hard facts are presented. Analogies from the anti-trust field, as we have noted, are heavily relied upon, but it must be kept in mind that this is not an anti-trust case. If it were, it would fail, even under the per se doctrine, for there is no showing that a "not insubstantial amount of commerce" is affected. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1957). As to analogies it is well also to keep in mind that we are cited to both patent and trademark cases, involving both the anti-trust laws and the Morton Salt doctrine of misuse. The permutations and combinations possible with two sets of rights involving two types of remedies, in various postures of association, without any discernible unifying thread [40] of legal or economic principle, warns us to consider and to use the analogies with some caution. These observations are peculiarly relevant to the trademark (or patent) issue involving the franchised heat treaters, infra.

As will be later set forth in detail, Kolene does business with two types of shop, "captive" shops and heat-treater franchisees. With respect to each, defendant argues that there has been a "misuse" of the patent itself, relying, among other cases, on the Morton Salt [18] case. This case held that the holder of a patent on a salt depositing machine, who had licensed the patent for use only with salt purchased from him, could not maintain suit against the manufacturer of an infringing machine. "* * * [Courts], and especially courts of equity," it was held, "may appropriately withhold their aid where the [patentee] is using the right asserted contrary to the public interest". This proscription of denial of remedy is not, then, automatic. We are remitted to a consideration of "the public interest."

[41] To view this matter in its proper setting upon the facts before us it is necessary to review in somewhat more detail not only the relationship between the parties, but Kolene's method of doing business in this respect.

As we have previously noted, in the summer of 1959, with the permission of Lucas Miel, then President of Commercial, Mr. Bidigare went to Germany with Mr. Shoemaker as a technical adviser, to learn the process-in-suit from Degussa. It was taught to them in confidence upon assurance that it would not be [225] used as against Degussa. It is clear that Mr. Bidigare had never, prior to that time, heard of the process. Upon returning to this country Mr. Bidigare set up and operated a Tufftride installation at Commercial, in a joint venture with Kolene, in which, Kolene provided the salt free of charge to Commercial. During this period Mr. Bidigare and Mr. Shoemaker attempted to exploit the process and advertising literature was prepared. Thereafter, in 1960, Commercial and Kolene split up. The reason is not shown in the record. We gather that animosities existed between the parties.

Miel and Commercial, after the split up, continued to practice and promote the process [42] but changed the trademark from "Tufftride" to "Nu-Nitride".

In 1962, when the patent-in-suit issued, Miel and Bidigare sought legal advice on how to avoid the patent, making, pursuant to such advice, what we have decided heretofore are slight changes in the salt concentrations and in the equipment. It is clear, however, that they did not give up aeration, which was the gist of the patent-in-suit.

Litigation between Commercial and Kolene regarding contractual agreements, breaches of confidence, patent infringement, and other issues thereafter took place, all of which issues were settled in 1963 after Miel, Bidigare and Grafmiller left Commercial. Thereafter, Commercial became a Tufftride franchisee. In the same year, 1963, Messrs. Miel, Bidigare, Grafmiller, and other [*1265] former Commercial employees formed the defendant, Motor City. At all times Motor City has operated the accused process, with the exception of equipment (pot or liner) changes, substantially as it had at Commercial but under the name "Cynatride". To complete the picture we will merely note that there are certain off-shoots to the Commercial operation. Miel and Bidigare taught the process to Industrial [43] Heat Treat of Charlotte, North Carolina, and licensed Industrial to practice the process under Commercial's trademark "Nu-Nitride". Industrial made duplicate copies of Kolene's advertising materials for Tufftride, changing only the word "Tufftride to "Nu-Nitride." All of this was done without Kolene's permission or license but with Commercial's active assistance. During this same period, the Nu-Nitride process was licensed to a Canadian company controlled by Miel, the Preston Heat Treat company, which shortened the trademark to "Nutride". It is noteworthy that Kolene has not sought injunctive or other relief against these processors so far as this record discloses.

[18] Morton Salt v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 62 S. Ct. 402, 86 L. Ed. 363 as amended, 315 U.S. 788 (1942).

We do not more fully explore the Commercial litigation since we were informed at the trial, by defendant's counsel, that such litigation he viewed as lacking relevance to the issues under litigation. [19]

[*226] [44] [*1266] In addition to the Commercial litigation during the time that Mr. Miel controlled Commercial, there was litigation between Kolene and Mr. John Sheppard, a retired metallurgist and chemicals

---

[19] Tr. pp. 180-183: "MR. CULLEN: Excuse me. May I say something to the Court? The Court should understand, to keep this testimony in proper perspective, that at the beginning the Kolene people and Mr. Miel and Bidigare of Commercial Steel Treating were working together in a joint effort. Subsequently, there was a falling out between Mr. Shoemaker, on the one hand, representing Kolene, and Mr. Miel, on the other hand, representing Commercial.

"As a result of that falling out, and subsequent to that falling out, Commercial Steel Treating Company, which was then under the control of Mr. Miel, went its own way and practiced the process that they were practicing, and they now adopted the trademark 'Nu-nitride,' and they were continuing their operations without regard to any claim of right of Kolene.

"There was litigation between the Kolene people and between Commercial Steel Treating during the time that Mr. Miel controlled the operations of Commercial. Subsequently, the principal stockholders of Commercial Steel Treating Company had a falling out with Mr. Miel, and Mr. Miel left Commercial Steel Treating Company to form Motor City Company.

"Meanwhile, the stockholders of Commercial Steel Treating Company then returned back into operation with Kolene and became a licensee, and exclusive licensee for the Detroit area, except for Kolene's own operations under the Franchise system.

"Now, Mr. Miel and Bidigare, having left Commercial Steel Treating Company, formed Motor City Company, the present defendant, and continued in Motor City Company the same operations that they had previously performed in when they were in the employ of Commercial Steel Treating Company, and in the operations of Motor City Company, the same people, by the way, now call their process 'Cynatride.'

"This explains the peculiar thing, that Commercial Steel Treating Company was at one time controlled or operated by Mr. Miel and later was not, and also the peculiar fact that at one time Commercial Steel Treating Company was in a joint venture with Kolene and then later had a falling out with Kolene, and then still later returned to use the Kolene trademark and the Kolene services and literature and publicity and sales effort as a franchisee of Kolene.

"THE COURT: That is the corporation itself and not the individual?

"MR. CULLEN: That's right.

"THE COURT: All right.

"MR. CANTOR: Perhaps I might shorten the questioning of the witness, since this witness was obviously intimately acquainted with those facts.

"Q (By Mr. Cantor) Is Mr. Cullen's statement correct, Mr. Shoemaker?

"A Correct, yes.

"Q Would you be willing to adopt that as your testimony as an answer to a question?

"A Yes.

"MR. CANTOR: Is there any objection to that?

"MR. ADELMAN: No. I only want to say I was hoping we could avoid getting into the issues of that prior litigation, which I view as having no bearing on this lawsuit whatsoever."

salesman. Mr. Sheppard had furnished salts for the accused process to Commercial during the time it was operated by Mr. Miel, and thereafter furnished them to Motor City. Apparently as a part of the litigation with Commercial (prior to the departure in 1963 by Mr. Miel) or at about the same time, Kolene sued Sheppard for patent infringement, and later, convinced that he was not so infringing, dropped the suit. The defendant refers to Mr. Sheppard as a "manufacturer of salts". The description is hardly apt. Mr. Sheppard's activities with respect to the defendant's operation were described in some detail by Mr. Grafmiller, formerly of Commercial, later one of the organizers of defendant Motor City, its president, and general manager. He testified that the salts used by Motor City were "made there on our property," and that an employee of Motor City assisted Mr. Sheppard in his work, "after hours". Mr. Sheppard used Motor City's equipment and their space, on which he paid no rent. [45] The record is utterly devoid of any testimony as to what would normally be called a bona fide manufacturer's plant operations, volume of business, equipment, number of employees, or otherwise. Actually, it would seem that what Mr. Sheppard did, first at the premises of Commercial and then Motor City, was to cast cyanate bricks for use in the process by Grafmiller. Mr. Sheppard's operations respecting the salts hardly rise to the dignity of being a "manufacturer thereof" as the term is normally used. We have gone into these suits in some detail, despite counsel's disclaimer, since they form the basis of the charge, essential to the application of the misuse doctrine to the captive shops, that Kolene was "vigorously enforcing" its patent.

The argument by defendant that Kolene has misused its patent on the process requires a considerably detailed exposition of Kolene's methods of doing business with respect to the process-in-suit. Its business is that of selling salts and equipment used in chemical processes. With respect to the process-in-suit, Kolene sells equipment and salt to two classes of customers: a) the so-called "captive" shops, accounting for about 98% of the market, [46] which are merely the heat-treating departments of corporations which process their own industrial parts; b) the so-called "heat treaters", independent operators, accounting for about 2% of the market, operating under franchises. This is a service type of business. These heat treaters process parts sent to them for treatment by their various customers.

With respect to the captive shops and the heat treaters using the process-in-suit, there is a different sales policy as to each, arising out of the differences in their methods of operation. The captive shops do their own work in their own shops and the responsibility for improperly treated parts is solely their own. Kolene sells equipment and salts to them upon purchase order. With them it has no agreements, contracts, or licenses. They are free to make purchases of their materials and equipment wherever they see fit, although as a practical matter they buy their salts and most of their equipment for the process from Kolene. These captive shops are also brought and kept abreast of technical improvements in the art through Kolene's technical help of various kinds.

The situation with respect to the "heat-treater" franchisees is [47] substantially different. There are eleven heat treater licensees located in various parts of the United States, one of them (Lindberg) having multi-plant operations in widely scattered places. Each of these franchisees is required to operate in accordance with Kolene's controls and procedures, and to buy all salts used in their "Tufftride" baths from Kolene. Each franchisee sells its Tufftride services under the trademark "Tufftride", relying (as do its customers) upon that trademark [*1267] and its good will and reputation to sell to its industrial customers.

With respect to these franchisees, an outside company sends its parts to a heat-treater to be "Tufftrided". Uniformity or consistency of treatment is an important factor. There may be substantial lapses of time between successive orders. There are widespread geographical separations between locations of either the same heat-treater, in its various branches, or between different [227] heat-treaters. An example given the Court [20] was that of a customer who "has a plant in Peoria, * * * and a plant in York, Pennsylvania and a plant in San Dreando, California, and he desires Tufftriding work done, that he could send to a [48] licensee in California or into Pennsylvania or in Illinois and secure the same quality, the same product, the same process as he would get from any of the other licensees." International Harvester, [21] for example, sends the same crankshafts both to Commercial in Detroit and Lindberg in Melrose Park, Illinois. Moreover, not only the heat-treaters but their customers turn to Kolene for aid in the solution of problems which have arisen in the heat-treater shops. In addition, such shops must conform to an expected standard of work, as contrasted with the captive shop which, for its own work, may set its own standards, accepting or rejecting as it wishes. The franchisees pay a royalty to Kolene based upon their Tufftride business volumes. In addition, they are required to buy salts used in the trademarked "Tufftride" process, but not their equipment, from Kolene. Kolene argues that the salts must be of the same proven formulation, quality, and purity, the salts forming a major integral part of the process. It is argued, as well, that merely setting specifications for salts obtainable from different sources will not achieve the coast-to-coast uniformity of treatment necessary for [49] the product.

[20] Shoemaker, Tr. 316.

[21] Ex. 5. Hall dep., pp. 26-27.

With respect to the captive shops, it is Kolene's position that their sales policy was to sell on the basis of being a good supplier, that it does not use patents as a sales weapon, that the business is the sale of salts and that it would not, nor has it ever, refused to sell salts to anyone. Defendant counters with the argument that the plaintiff has used its patent "to coerce captive shops to purchase unpatented salts from the plaintiffs", relying upon such cases as Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U.S. 458, 58 S. Ct. 288, 82 L. Ed. 371 (1938); B.B. Chemical Co. v. Ellis, 314 U.S. 495, 62 S. Ct. 406, 86 L. Ed. 367 (1942); Lincoln Electric Co. v. Linde Air Products Co., 171 F.2d 223 (CA 6, 1949) and, of course, Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., 314 U.S. 488, 62 S. Ct. 402, 86 L. Ed. 363, as amended 315 U.S. 788 (1942). These are but a few of a host of cases all involving the same principles, all of which are based expressly or [50] impliedly upon the element of coercion. See, Rocform Corp. v. Acitelli-Standard Concrete Wall, Inc., 367 F.2d 678 (CA 6, 1966). A fair summarization of these cases would seem to be that the courts require for application of the doctrine, a showing that while the patentee was permitting the use of the patent to his own customers, he was, as a practical and substantial concomitant, denying the use of it to others, by suit, threat, or otherwise. It is noted, for example, in our earlier Sixth Circuit case (Lincoln Electric, supra) that the patentee was vigorously enforcing its patent rights under the patent claims against sellers of the unpatented elements.

It is just at this point that defendant fails in his evidentiary showings. Although it asserts "vigorous enforcement" by Kolene, it turns out that the vigorous enforcement referred to are the old suits at the time of the breakup of Commercial and Kolene and nothing more, either against Nu-nitride, or other off-shoots of the Commercial operation. It urges vigorously that with respect to [*1268] the captive shops (which do not employ the trademark Tufftride), the practice of Kolene is to force the use of the salts by lawsuits. [51] "You have to have it [an implied patent license] or you go out of business because they sue everybody." [22] What defendant is asserting here is actually coercion. It is reminiscent of the statement of the Court in Switzer Brothers, Inc. v. Locklin, 297 F.2d 39 (CA 7, 1961) that the patentee had threatened "all non-licensed manufacturers and all users of non-licensed devices with patent infringement suits" and had commenced suits "in widely scattered parts of the United States against dealers, manufacturers, users, and customers", and the argument made in Lincoln Electric, supra. But defendant's argument in the case before us founders on the record. There are before us no such suits. There is no evidence of threats of infringement, and no evidence of any kind that the captive shops or any franchisee have been pressured in any way by the existence of the patent-in-suit or its employment. The same situation obtains with respect to the words "Patent Pending" appearing on some drums shipped into the United States by Degussa. Defendant argues that the purpose of such words "is unlawful coercion". Mr. Shoemaker testified that the appearance of such words was either an oversight [52] or a mistake of fact by plaintiff relating to the pendency of relevant patent applications. At any rate no evidence was presented that anyone other than defendant's counsel was either aware of [228] or interested in or disturbed by this language and we regard it as inconsequential.

In short, on this issue of coercion raised by the defendant, all that we have is counsel's charge and speculation, unsupported by evidentiary showings. Far more than this is required for the application of the Morton Salt doctrine, harsh as it is and involving forfeiture as it does, since its meaning is that a patentee cannot enforce his rights against deliberate infringement. No threats have been shown to us and no disgruntled user, or would-be user, has appeared before us. It is inconceivable to us that an entire industry could have been so intimidated. Upon the record we cannot find that the patent-in-issue has, in this suit, or any other, been held as a club over the salt users to bring them into [53] line. It is our judgment, having heard and seen the witnesses presented, as well as other evidence, that the charge is without foundation.

[22] Tr. May 28, 1969, p. 16.

The trademark tie-in, involving about 2% of the industry, remains for consideration. The objectives of trademark protection were summarized in a Senate Report [23] on the Lanham Act [24] as follows:

> a) "* * * [To] protect the public so it may be confident that, in purchasing a product bearing a particular trade-mark which it favorably knows, it will get the product which it asks for and wants to get.
>
> b) "* * * [Where] the owner of a trade-mark has spent energy, time, and money in presenting to the public the product, he is protected in his investment from its misappropriation by pirates and cheats." [Paragraphing used is the court's]

It must be recognized that we have two opposing considerations [54] at this point, each of which has powerful support. On the one hand we have the anticompetitive effects inherent in any tying arrangement. On the other hand we have a trademark licensor's efforts to preserve the good name and integrity of his product. As Mr. Justice Holmes observed in Bourjois & Co. v. Katzel, 260 U.S. 689, 692, 43 S. Ct. 244, 245, 67 L. Ed. 464 (1923), a trademark "deals with a delicate matter that may be of great value but that easily is destroyed, and [*1269] therefore should be protected with corresponding care," going on to say "[It] stakes the reputation of the plaintiff upon the character of the goods". There are few cases in the field, none on all fours, and the literature is sparse and inconclusive. [25]

The defendant relies heavily upon Switzer Bros. v. Locklin, 297 F.2d 39 (CA 7, 1961). [55] In this case the patentee sought the most extensive controls, since "The licenses required, as a condition for the grant thereof, that the licensee purchase all materials from Switzer, or sources approved in writing by it, not only for production of the patented devices, but also for the production of all daylight fluorescent devices." [26] There is no such parallel here. Moreover, the case involved both patent and trademark tie-ins, the Court concluding that the appellants had misused both the patents involved and the trademark "in restraint of trade in interstate commerce in violation of the antitrust laws". There is no claim of an anti-trust violation made in our case. The case of Susser v. Carvel Corp., 332 F.2d 505 (CA 2, 1964) is more in point, although it also involved charges of violation of the anti-trust laws. There the Court divided, but both opinions held that a tying might be justified as necessary to protect a trademark. The majority held that a trademark tie-in, to be illegal, must meet the same tests applied in a patent tie-in situation, namely, both market dominance and the affecting of a substantial amount of commerce, the plaintiff failing there in establishing [56] either element. The defendant here makes no effort at such a showing. Its argument is that the heat-treater franchises really involve a patent tie-in, not a trademark tie-in, and thus the franchises offend public policy, under the Morton Salt case, supra. Is the arrangement before us, then, a patent tie-in or is it a trademark tie-in? We pursue the same inquiry as did both the trial and appellate courts in Susser v. Carvel Corp., supra, in asking, What is the focus of the arrangement?

We turn to the franchise contracts themselves and examine that of the Getchell Steel Treating Company, Inc., a Minnesota corporation. The franchise, it states therein, concerns the "Tufftride" process. Granted are certain exclusive area rights, in which the licensee may "practice the Tufftride process and * * * use Tufftride apparatus [229] and materials". Kolene agrees to furnish advertising materials, technical help and training, and to conduct inspections to assure "consistently high quality". [57] The purpose of the latter provisions is to safeguard the quality on a nationwide basis for the benefit of customers relying on the Tufftride name, reputation, and trademark. The only reference to the patent (which had issued some three years previously) is in the first paragraph in which

---

[23] S.Rep. No. 1333, 79th Cong., 2d Sess. 1, 3 (1946); U.S.Code Congressional Service, p. 1274.

[24] 60 Stat. 427 (1946), 15 U.S.C. §§ 1051-1127 (1958).

[25] See, Schniderman, Trade-Mark Licensing - A Saga of Fantasy and Fact, 14 Law and Contemp.Prob. 248, 259-268 (1949); Timberg, Trade-marks, Monopoly, and the Restraint of Competition, Id. 323.

[26] 297 F.2d 39, 44.

the "Metal Treater" agrees to honor all of Kolene's and Degussa's rights, "including all patents, issued or to be issued in the future * * *".

Defendant does not demonstrate to us any focus on the patent itself by any direct evidence of record. Its argument rests on speculation and conjecture, as did its argument with respect to the "pressuring" of the captive shops, allegedly to force them either to buy Kolene salts or face suit "because they sue everybody". Defendant points to an amendment made in the licenses approximately a year after the patent grant, which amendment required the purchase of Kolene salts. As to this amendment, on the other hand, plaintiff submits exhibits (see Exs. W and Y) on the basis of which it argues that such requirement was imposed as a part of a review and recast of their method of doing business, including re-allocation of exclusive territorial rights (Ex. B to [58] Ex. Y). Again, we are in the realm of speculation. [*1270] We cannot find the causal relation asserted by the defendant upon the evidence before us.

We construe this instrument not only within its four corners but with reference to the testimony of Mr. Shoemaker, who described in detail Kolene's method of doing business. The focus here clearly is the trademark "Tufftride", the term coined by Mr. Shoemaker himself in an effort to avoid the disparagements which had been cast upon the words "soft nitriding", which had been employed at an early stage in the art. The trademark or service mark [27] Tufftride has become known on a nationwide basis and it is to the protection of such mark that the franchise agreement is principally devoted.

With respect to the widespread use of the trademark Tufftride and reliance thereon we have previously noted that the defendant itself receives (and processes) orders from Firestone and the Chevrolet Division [59] of General Motors calling for the "Tufftride" process. Defendant informs its customers, we are told, that its process is not Tufftride but Cynatride "and its equivalent". Counsel continues "I admit that we're riding on the good will of the process insofar as it has good will, and we're entitled to do that in a competitive economy, absent a valid patent. That's what we're talking about here, is that patent valid?"

Moreover, it is significant to us, among other factors, that in the captive shops, which use the process-in-suit and comprise 98% of the market, but which is a non-trademark situation, there is no requirement that these large shops purchase their salts from Kolene. It is only with respect to the 2% remainder, scattered all over the country, operating under the Tufftride trademark, a process requiring uniformity for industrial use, that the purchase of salt requirement is made. Since both segments of the market are using the patented process it is the more difficult to say that the control is based upon the patent rather than the trademark.

We find the focus of the franchises, then, to be upon the trademark Tufftride and, considering the need for nationwide dependability, [60] reliability and uniformity of quality and purity of the salts used by those using the Tufftride trademark, the difficulties of supervision of operation nationwide as to salts from different sources, even though conforming to specifications and within commercial limits of purity, (available commercial grade cyanides have 2-4% unknown impurities) considering as well the lethal nature of these salts (i.e., cyanide) and the difficulties encountered in the efforts of Mr. Shoemaker to mix them, as well as the fact that this is a relatively new process, it is our judgment that under the unique circumstances of this case the salt purchase requirement by the heat-treater shops is not unreasonable.

The finding thus made is determinative of the case under defendant's theory. It concedes (Defendant's Supp. Brief, p. 2, submitted following oral argument on this phase of the case) that "if the focus of the franchise agreements were, in fact, the Tufftride mark, rather than the patent-in-suit, then defendant's charge of misuse would fail".

We will add that even without the concession, Morton Salt itself makes it clear that the doctrine there enunciated is not to be taken as dogmatic and its [61] application automatic. Denial of remedy against an infringer is a harsh remedy, a species of forfeiture. And just as there is now found, in amelioration of the adamant application the per [230] se rule [28] [63] to tying contracts in anti-trust law, the doctrine of business justification, [29] [*1271] so it would seem that the Morton Salt doctrine should admit of similar amelioration, even if this were indeed found to be a patent tie-in, in the light of Morton's requirement that the plaintiff must be using the right asserted "contrary to the public interest." In all of the welter of words and literally volumes of learned discussions in the area of anti-trust, per se violation, business justifications, and all the rest, we are impressed by the down-to-earth observations of the Fifth Circuit in the case of Denison Mattress Factory v. Spring Air Company, 308 F.2d 403, 408, in upholding a trademark agreement against assault under the anti-trust laws that

---

[27] For the purposes of this case a distinction is unnecessary.

> "* * * the cases do point out that courts are prone to look at the primary purpose of a contract to determine its validity. If the primary purpose, however disguised, is to stifle competitors and create a monopoly, then the agreement [62] or contract is struck down. However, the cases seem to follow the principle that if the primary purpose of the contract is lawful, e.g., to protect one in the fruits of his labor, and if the arrangement was actuated by or could be explained on the basis of legitimate business justification as opposed to the desire to increase market control through economic leverage, then the court will generally hold any incidental restraint of trade, not harmful to competition of the public to be lawful. Dehydrating Process Co. v. Smith (CA 1, Cir. 1961) 292 F.2d 653. Therefore, it is our duty to determine whether the general primary purpose of the contract under consideration was to protect Spring-Air in its product, and then determine more specifically whether the provisions of the contract complained of here violate any antitrust law."

Under the facts as we have found them and the law applicable thereto we need not consider plaintiff's offer to defendant, made in 1968 after suit was instituted, of a license giving defendant full freedom to practice the process without either controls or the salt-purchase requirement, conditioned, however, along with other requirements, that defendant take care to remove any belief or impression in the trade that it was a franchised Tufftride heat treater. Defendant urges this as an implied admission of guilt. Plaintiff points to it as evidence of complete good faith. If we were compelled to make a choice [64] we would, after seeing and hearing the witnesses, accept the good faith explanation. We find no misuse of the patent, either as to the captive or the franchised shops and we so hold.

It is our conclusion that Claim 1 of the patent-in-suit is valid and has been and is infringed by defendant and that plaintiffs are entitled to a judgment granting an injunction against further infringement and an accounting awarding damages as sought by the Complaint. A suitable order may be presented.

---

[28] This term involves both a semantic and a procedural wilderness. Compare (as to " market dominance" alone) Northern Pac.Ry. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958) with Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953); compare also United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 83 S. Ct. 97, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11 (1962) with White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 83 S. Ct. 696, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1963).

[29] See, Comment, 62 Mich.L.R. 1413, Tying Arrangements under the Anti-Trust Laws: The "Integrity of the Product" Defense; Note, 72 Yale L.J. 1171 (1963). See, also, Baker v. Simmons Co., 307 F.2d 458 (CA 1, 1962); Dehydrating Process Co. v. A. O. Smith Corp., 292 F.2d 653 (CA 1), cert. den. 368 U.S. 931, 82 S. Ct. 368, 7 L. Ed. 2d 194 (1961); United States v. Jerrold Electronics Corp., 187 F. Supp. 545 (E.D.Pa.1960), aff'd per curiam 365 U.S. 567, 81 S. Ct. 755, 5 L. Ed. 2d 806 (1961).

LexisNexis

Cosentino v. Carver-Greenfield Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Nebraska.

August 6, 1969.

Civil 03278.

Reporter
1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13134 *; 1970 Trade Cas. (CCH) P73,390

Dominic Cosentino and Richard Brown v. Carver-Greenfield Corp., carver-Greenfield Omaha, Inc., First Mid-America, Inc., Eastman Dillon-Union Securities & Co., City of Omaha, and Omaha Pollution Control Corp.

Core Terms

taxpayer, stockholder, damages, plant, municipality

Opinion by: [*1] ROBINSON

Opinion

Memorandum and Order

ROBINSON, Chief Judge: This matter comes before the Court upon motions of all of the defendants for dismissal. [Filings #6, 8, 10.] The action is one arising out of a series of agreements between the City of Omaha [City], the Omaha Pollution Control Corporation [OPCC], organized by the City, Carver-Greenfield Corporation [Carver] and its subsidiary Carver-Greenfield Omaha, Inc. The series of agreements basically provide for the building of a plant and its necessary adjuncts to process waste from packing houses located in the City of Omaha. Also joined as defendants are First Mid-America Inc. and Eastman Dillon-Union Securities & Co. who allegedly secured the right to purchase and resell bonds to be issued to finance the project. The waste utilization process employs a series of patents which protect either the method or technique of the process or the plant design. Copies of these agreements have been attached to the complaint and are incorporated by reference. Oral arguments have been received and briefs submitted on behalf of all of the parties.

Plaintiffs allege jurisdiction under Sections 15 and 22 of Title 15, U.S.C. and [*2] Section 1337 of Title 28, U.S.C. Substantively they allege antitrust violations by conspiring to monopolize the waste process in violation of the Sherman Act. They specifically allege conspiracy among all of the above-mentioned defendants to misuse patent rights granted to Carver.

The plaintiffs in this action are residents and taxpayers of the City of Omaha. They have alleged that the action is brought in a representative capacity. Damages is the only relief requested. Reduced to the basics, as plaintiffs' complaint now stands, it is a taxpayers' class suit at best alternatively alleging harm to the taxpayers individually, each member of the class being so injured or alleging harm to the City for whom they are bringing the action. It is essentially then either a class action or a derivative action similar to that brought by a stockholder in which the benefits of such an action accrue to and for the benefit of the corporation directly and only indirectly benefit the stockholders.

The taxpayers as a class may only be injured personally in their "business or property", as required by 15 USCA § 15, should the agreements mentioned above somehow affect the amount of their tax [*3] burden. This Court has determined that in accordance with the requirements of § 15 this injury, if there be any, is too remote and therefore in this capacity plaintiffs have no standing to sue.

Plaintiffs other alternative of a derivative action has no basis of which this Court is aware. A taxpayer is not a shareholder entitled to bring an action in lieu of the municipality or one of its municipal corporation within the meaning of the term as this Court understands it and therefore rules that the motions of dismissal should be sustained.

The real distinction between the direct action and the derivative action, regardless of whether the action is on behalf of a class, in the normal stockholder situation is that the individual shareholder has a personal or individual right of action against third persons which results from the impairment of the value of his or, in the case of the class, their stock. Roseland v. Phister , 125 F.2d 417; Loeb v. Eastman , 183 F. 704 [3rd Cir. 1910]; D'Ippolito v. Cities Serv. Co. , 374 F.2d 643 [2d Cir. 1967]; See also Bookhout v. Schine Chain Theatres , 253 F.2d 292 [2d Cir. 1958]; Gerli v. Silk Ass'n of America , 36 F.2d 959 [S.D.N.Y. [*4] 1929].When his action is derivative the result is different. The derivative action is not a personal right of recovery but rather representative of and for the benefit of the corporation. The stockholder sues in the right of the corporation. Ramsburg v. American Investment Co. , 231 F.2d 333 [7th Cir. 1956]; Fanchon v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. , 202 F.2d 731 [2d Cir. 1953].

In order to have standing to bring an action under 15 U.S.C. § 15 there must not only be public injury but there must also be private damage to the party or parties bringing the action. While the fact of damage has been stated somewhat differently by different courts the rule is basically that a plaintiff must be directly injured or defendants have directed their wrongdoing at him; plaintiff would thus be considered in the "target area". Such damage cannot be indirect, remote or inconsequential. See Supplement to Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study Antitrust Law, Antitrust Developments 1955-1968, p. 279 [Published by A.B.A. 1968]. If the Courts have refused the stockholder individually [1] or a representative of consumers [2] of a product to bring an anti-trust suit because [*5] of the remoteness from injury and the target area, then the taxpayer is in no better position. In fact he is probably further remote because the violation is but only one factor among many that may affect the amount of a tax.

It should be noted that the type of damage allegation to which the Court has reference when speaking of the consumer, stockholder or taxpayer is where the plaintiff is one step removed from the target area. These plaintiffs' corporation, municipality, or retailer from whom they buy the product are the entities directly injured. Plaintiffs' damage is only derivative from the loss which has occurred to another more closely concerned with the actual wrongdoer. This Court thus holds that resident taxpayers individually or as a class have no personal standing to bring suit upon the violations of the Sherman Act here alleged.

The matter of the plaintiffs as a class or individually bringing this action as representatives of and for the benefit of the City or as they allge the City's [*6] alter ego OPCC is also subject to dismissal for lack of standing. Plaintiffs state in their brief that, at least in Nebraska, taxpayers have uniformly been entitled to bring an action on behalf of the governmental agency concerned. While it is true that the taxpayer may contest the action of the governmental agency, that action is in the nature of a restraint directly upon the agency. Here the action is again one step further removed. The taxpayer steps into the municipalities' shoes and then sues a third party for damages. The writer has not been cited to any authority nor has independent research revealed any basis for such a representative suit in Nebraska nor in the federal system which governs standing in this action. Those authorities which plaintiffs to cite relate to situations where the state or its attorney general because of their public office or duty to its residents and agencies have been vested with authority to represent individuals or certain entities. See Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis Chalmers , 315 F.2d 564 [7th Cir. 1963]; State of Illinois v. Brunswick Corp. , 32 F.R.D. 453.

---

[1] Roseland v. Phister, supra; Loeb v. Eastman, supra; Gerli v. Silk Ass'n of America, supra .

[2] Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis Chalmers , 315 F.2d 564 [7th Cir. 1963].

Those situations are far removed from the taxpayers acting for the benefit [*7] of a state or municipality. Any analogy to stockholder suits is also without merit. A taxpayer is not a stockholder allowed to invoke the equitable remedy of a stockholder, as defined in precedent establishing that right. See Hawkes v. Oakland , 104 U.S. 450 [1881]; Dodge v. Woolsey , 18 How. [U.S.] 331 [1855].

There is also an additional ground present for sustaining defendants' motions. Plaintiffs' complaint claims damages in the amount of the total obligation which the City has undertaken. This includes the total amount of the bonds issued, a fixed rate expense for operation payable to the subsidiary-operator if sufficient revenues from the operation of the plant are not obtained and the cost of the City's agreement to build certain connecting sewers. Plaintiffs then proceed to allege that the reason for these damages is "operating deficits to arise from said plant because of the actual removal of packers from Omaha." The removal of the packinghouses from Omaha is further alleged to have occurred not because of the patent misuse but because "the meat packers, in order to stay competitive, would have to move out of their plants in Omaha to modern plants in smaller [*8] communities." As defendants' briefs have pointed out, the damage that has occurred must have some causal connection with the injury alleged. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide and Carbon Corp. , 370 U.S. 690, 697 [1962]; Flintkote v. Lysfjord , 246 F.2d 368. See also Supplement to the Attorney General's Report, supra at p. 282. There is no mention of excessive or illegal royalties which could have some causal connection. The damages as alleged are rather, as one of the defendants has stated, the result of an improvident contract and not the result of patent misuse. The plaintiff will not fold because of the trust violation if one exists but because the packinghouse industry has sought more appropriate locations. Therefore, assuming for the moment that the plaintiffs have standing, their complaint fails to state a cause of action for the reason that the damages as alleged have no causal connection to the antitrust violations alleged. Accordingly,

For either of the above reasons It Is Ordered that the motions of all of the defendants for dismissal should be and are hereby sustained.

Gottesman v. General Motors Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

August 13, 1969, Decided

Nos. 32412, 32413, 32414

Reporter

414 F.2d 956 *; 1969 U.S. App. LEXIS 11109 ; 1969 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,888

Callman Gottesman, Maria Mattiello, and Paul J. Peyser, Plaintiffs v. General Motors Corp. and E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co., Defendants

Core Terms

Clayton Act, acquisition, stock, automotive, damages, fabrics, finishes, percent, district court, anti trust law, antitrust, decree, violation of section, cause of action, Sherman Act, supplier, cases, prima facie evidence, private action, evidentiary, pre-trial, monopoly, government's case, stock interest, treble damages, money damages, ultimate fact, treble-damage, plaintiffs', ownership

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[] Private Actions, Remedies

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN2[] Remedies, Damages

A violation of the Clayton Act § 7, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, furnishes a basis for a claim for money damages under the broad language of the Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 12, defines "antitrust laws" as including "this Act," and it seems clear that the Clayton Act § 7, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, is an antitrust law within the meaning of the Clayton Act § 4, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN4[] Remedies, Damages

Damages have been allowed to private litigants under the Clayton Act §§ 2 and 3, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 13 and 14, which are also aimed at anticipated injury and proscribe certain activities when the effect may be to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN5[] Clayton Act, Claims

Plaintiffs alleging violation of the Clayton Act § 7, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, cannot rest on a showing of such a violation; they must, as in private actions under other sections of the antitrust laws, prove that they have been injured by the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7[] Private Actions, Remedies

While a judgment of violation of the Clayton Act § 7, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, in a government suit covering a given period is insufficient to establish a violation at a later date, that judgment may be of evidentiary weight in a subsequent private action if it encompasses findings sufficiently related to the issues of the private action and if sufficient additional evidence is adduced to show that the illegal activities condemned in the government decree carried over into the period in issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN8[] Private Actions, Remedies

If by reference to the findings, opinion, and decree it is determined that an issue was actually adjudicated in an antitrust suit brought by the government, the private plaintiff can treat the outcome of the government's case as prima facie evidence on that issue. It would be proper in determining the effect of the judgment in a government case to look to earlier opinions both with respect to violation and with respect to remedy.

Judges: [1] Waterman, Smith and Feinberg, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: FEINBERG

Opinion

[*957] FEINBERG, Circuit Judge:

I. Background.

Plaintiffs, minority stockholders of General Motors Corporation, appeal from a judgment for defendants General Motors and E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Company entered in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York after a trial without a jury before Charles M. Metzner, J., 279 F. Supp. 361 (1967). Plaintiffs brought this derivative antitrust action in June 1957, [1] immediately after the Supreme Court's opinion in United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057, 77 S. Ct. 872 (1957). That decision reversed a district court dismissal of an antitrust action brought against du Pont and General Motors, among others. The Court held that du Pont's commanding position as a supplier of automotive finishes and fabrics to General Motors, obtained at least in part by its ownership of a 23 per cent stock interest in General Motors, violated section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, since acquisition of the stock raised a reasonable probability of the creation [2] of a monopoly in that line of commerce. While the Government had also alleged violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, the Court did not decide the appeal from the district court's dismissal of those charges. 353 U.S. at 588 n. 5. In a later decision, the Court held that the proper remedy for the [1] An amended consolidated complaint was filed in November 1959.

Clayton Act violation was complete divestiture by du Pont of its General Motors stock. United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 6 L. Ed. 2d 318, 81 S. Ct. 1243 (1961).

The present civil action for treble damages was brought pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, alleging that du Pont had violated section 7 of the Clayton Act and sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, and had breached its common law fiduciary duty. Specifically, plaintiffs claimed that subsequent to May 4, 1950, [2] du Pont utilized its stock control [3] to insure its position as primary supplier to General Motors of a variety of products, thereby preventing actual and potential competition from other suppliers and enabling du Pont to [*958] sell General Motors its products at excessive prices. In September 1963, Judge Metzner issued an opinion dealing with the effect to be given to the Supreme Court judgment in the first du Pont case, explaining that a decision on that issue in advance of trial was necessary in order to define the scope of deposition-discovery procedures. 221 F. Supp. 488. The judge held that a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act did not constitute a cause of action for money damages. Moreover, since the Supreme Court judgment dealt only with the situation of the two corporations as of June 1949, the judgment was not available to the plaintiffs, who were suing for acts committed after May 4, 1950, on their other claims, except "for historical purposes and background material." The judge disagreed with plaintiffs' contention that the Supreme Court had found an actual restraint of trade by du Pont, stating that the Court had found only a "reasonable probability of the creation of a monopoly. [4] " In a subsequent Pretrial Order dated November 12, 1963, Judge Metzner held that the only "ultimate facts" determined by the du Pont decision which might be prima facie evidence in the case at bar were:

(a) that du Pont acquired 23% of the stock of General Motors;

(b) that automotive finishes and fabrics constitute a substantial "relevant market" within the meaning of the Clayton Act;

(c) that said acquisition of stock by du Pont was not solely for investment;

(d) that General Motors' share of the "relevant market" for automotive finishes and fabrics was substantial;

(e) that du Pont supplied a substantial share of that market;

(f) that du Pont used its stock interest in General Motors to entrench itself as the primary supplier to General Motors of automotive finishes and fabrics and that du Pont controlled General Motors to that extent.

The judge dismissed plaintiffs' claim for money damages under section 7 of the Clayton Act as a matter of law, but certified the order for immediate appeal. This court denied leave to appeal from that order on January 31, 1964, and the Supreme Court denied certiorari, 379 U.S. 882, 85 S. Ct. 144, 13 L. Ed. 2d 88 (1964). [5]

After extensive pre-trial and discovery proceedings, the claims relating to du Pont's sales of automotive fabrics and finishes for passenger cars manufactured by General Motors came to trial in November 1966 solely on the questions of liability of du Pont and injury to General Motors as distinguished from the quantum of damages. The trial continued until late January 1967; thereafter Judge Metzner filed his opinion, dismissing these causes of action. He found that du Pont had not used its stock ownership to control General Motors' purchases of automotive finishes or fabrics or to insulate General Motors from competition in either line of commerce in violation of section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act and that du Pont had not abused any fiduciary duty to General Motors. On March 29, 1968, final judgment was entered after a finding pursuant to Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure that more than one claim for [6] relief had been presented and that there was no just reason for delay. This finding was upheld by this court in denying defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' appeal in July 1968. 401 F.2d 510.

---

[2] This was apparently the earliest date at which any plaintiff owned General Motors stock.

On this appeal plaintiffs argue that numerous issues of law and fact were incorrectly decided by the court below. We do not have to reach most of these claims, however, for we find that the rulings in Judge Metzner's Pretrial Opinion of September 18, 1963, and their application to the case at trial, were sufficiently erroneous to require remanding the action for further consideration. In particular, we hold that Judge Metzner erred in deciding that a violation of section [*959] 7 of the Clayton Act cannot support a private cause of action for money damages, and that he improperly restricted the scope and weight of the government judgment in the first du Pont case as applied to the case at bar. Because of this disposition of the case, we need summarize only briefly the relevant facts set out at length in the du Pont opinion and in the opinion of the district court.

During the second decade of the century, du Pont acquired a number of manufacturing operations [7] in automotive fabrics and paints. Considering other areas of further expansion, the corporation became interested in purchasing General Motors stock, both as a profitable investment and because General Motors constituted a large potential market for du Pont products. In 1917, du Pont decided to acquire $25,000,000 worth, or 23 per cent, of the outstanding common stock of General Motors. While the precise percentage of ownership varied for a number of years, it remained at 23 per cent from 1939 on. At least in the first few years after du Pont's stock acquisition, the company made substantial and successful efforts to insure that the maximum share of General Motors' purchases of automotive fabrics and finishes were from du Pont. As the Supreme Court found in the first du Pont case, these purchases constituted a substantial part of the total market. Thus, in 1946 and 1947, when General Motors purchased approximately one half of all such products, du Pont supplied 67 and 68 per cent, respectively, of General Motors' requirements for finishes and 52.3 and 38.5 per cent of its fabric requirements. 353 U.S. at 596. During the years covered by the case at bar, the [8] district court found that General Motors' share of the automobile market varied 41 per cent and 52.7 per cent and that du Pont's share of General Motors' purchases averaged at 21 per cent for automotive fabrics and 74 per cent for automotive finishes. 279 F. Supp. at 369. From 1951 to 1959, du Pont sold from 89.2 per cent to 96.2 per cent of its total production of automotive finishes to General Motors and during 1955 to 1959 du Pont's sales of automotive fabrics to General Motors averaged 86 per cent of du Pont's production. Id. at 380-81.

In holding that du Pont's stock purchase resulted in a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, the Supreme Court found that "immediately after the acquisition, du Pont's influence growing out of it was brought to bear within General Motors to achieve primacy for du Pont as General Motors' supplier of automotive fabrics and finishes," 353 U.S. at 602, and that "the inference is overwhelming that du Pont's commanding position was promoted by its stock interest and was not gained solely on competitive merit." Id. at 605. The Court referred to "the fact, plainly revealed by the record, [9] that du Pont purposely employed its stock to pry open the General Motors' market to entrench itself as the primary supplier of General Motors' requirements for automotive finishes and fabrics." Id. at 606. This answered the question, posed by the Court at the outset of its opinion, "whether du Pont's commanding position . . . was achieved . . . because its acquisition of the General Motors' stock, and the consequent close intercompany relationship, led to the insulation of most of the General Motors' market from free competition, with the resultant likelihood, at the time of suit, of the creation of a monopoly of a line of commerce." Id. at 588-89. The Court did not determine whether there was an actual restraint of competition at the time, but noted:

> The conclusion upon this record is inescapable that such likelihood was proved as to this acquisition. The fire that was kindled in 1917 continues to smolder. It burned briskly to forge the ties that bind the General Motors market to du Pont, and if it has quieted down, it remains hot, and, from [*960] past performance, is likely at any time to blaze and make the fusion complete.

[10] Id. at 607.

II. Treble damages under section 7 of the Clayton Act.

HN1[] Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 15, states:

> Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor . . . and shall recover three-fold the damages by him sustained . . . .

The Supreme Court's first du Pont decision established that du Pont's acquisition of General Motors' stock was a type forbidden under section 7. In his 1963 pre-trial opinion, however, 221 F. Supp. at 493, Judge Metzner noted that:

> No case has been found discussing the question whether damages can be recovered for a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, and no case has been found where damages have been awarded for such a violation.

After distinguishing two cases he concluded:

> The test of a section 7 violation is whether "there is a reasonable probability that the acquisition is likely to result in the condemned restraints." United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., supra, 353 U.S. at 607. [11] Plaintiffs cannot be damaged by a potential restraint of trade or monopolization. There can be no claim for money damages for a violation of section 7.

Other district courts have subsequently reached the same conclusion, see, e. g., Highland Supply Corp. v. Reynolds Metals Co., 245 F. Supp. 510 (E.D. Mo. 1965); Bailey's Bakery, Ltd. v. Continental Baking Co., 235 F. Supp. 705, 716-17 (D. Hawaii 1964), and one circuit court has approved it in dictum, see Highland Supply Corp. v. Reynolds Metals Co., 327 F.2d 725, 728 n. 3 (8th Cir. 1964). However, other courts have disagreed. Both the Fifth Circuit, see Dailey v. Quality School Plan, Inc., 380 F.2d 484, 488 (5th Cir. 1967), and Judge McLean in the Southern District of New York, see Julius M. Ames Co. v. Bostitch, Inc., 240 F. Supp. 521, 523-26 (S.D.N.Y. 1965), have held that there can be a claim for money damages for a violation of section 7, though the latter case contains some qualifying language. Moreover, a number of other cases have impliedly sanctioned such a cause of action, dismissing or affirming the dismissal of section 7 money damage claims [12] only for the lack of a sufficient showing of specific, proximate injury. See, e. g., Blaski v. Inland Steel Co., 271 F.2d 853 (7th Cir. 1959); Bender v. Hearst Corp., 263 F.2d 360, 370 (2d Cir. 1959); Rayco Manufacturing Co. v. Dunn, 234 F. Supp. 593, 597 (N.D. Ill. 1964). In Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 14 L. Ed. 2d 405, 85 S. Ct. 1473 (1965), the Supreme Court itself held that the statute of limitations did not bar a private, treble-damage action based on alleged violations of both section 7 of the Clayton Act and sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act; although the issue was not discussed, the Court evinced no qualms about dealing with a section 7 money damage claim. Finally, commentators have overwhelmingly supported the conclusion that section 7 does give rise to a treble-damage action. See, e. g., J. Scott & E. Rockefeller, Antitrust and Trade Regulation Today: 1967, at 340-42 (1967); Stein, Section 7 of the Clayton Act as a Basis for the Treble-Damage Action: When May the Private Litigant Bring His Suit?, 56 Calif. L. Rev. 968, 971-80 (1968); Note, Private [13] Actions Under Sections 4 and 7 of the Clayton Act: A Fresh Look at an Old Problem, 29 Ohio St. L. J. 756 (1968); 64 Colum. L. Rev. 597 (1964); 79 Harv. L. Rev. 445 (1965).

HN2[] We agree with those authorities cited above that indicate that a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act does furnish a basis for a claim for money damages [*961] under the broad language of section 4 of the Act. HN3[] To begin with, section 1 of the Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12, defines "antitrust laws" as including "this Act," and it seems clear to us that section 7 of the Clayton Act is an antitrust law within the meaning of section 4 of the same Act. This proposition is not the truly disputed one in the above-cited cases or even in this one. The trial judge did not hold that section 7 is not an antitrust law, nor do defendants so contend. The basis of the pre-trial ruling was that a section 7 violation can cause no damage because it establishes only that harm was threatened, [14] not that it occurred. But if the threat ripens into reality we do not see why there can never be a private cause of action for damages. If section 7 is designed to prevent acquisitions that "may" or "tend to" cause specified harm, such an acquisition may either itself directly bring about the harm or make possible acts that do. We do not say that a section 7 violation must, or even probably will, have that result; but that it may and that plaintiffs should have a chance to prove injury "by reason of" the violation are persuasive propositions. The Supreme Court seems to have recognized as much in the first du Pont decision, 353 U.S. at 597, when it rejected the argument that section 7 is applicable only to acquisition of stock and not to the holding or subsequent use of it:

> Its aim was primarily to arrest apprehended consequences of intercorporate relationships before those relationships could work their evil, which may be at or any time after the acquisition, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case.

HN4[]

Damages have been allowed to private [15] litigants under sections 2 and 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 13, 14, which are also aimed at anticipated injury and proscribe certain activities when "the effect . . . may be . . . to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." See Stein, supra, 56 Calif. L. Rev. at 979 & nn. 47-50. Finally, if we had any real doubts on this issue, we would resolve them in favor of a broad, rather than a narrow, construction of section 4, because "Congress has expressed its belief that private antitrust litigation is one of the surest weapons for effective enforcement of the antitrust laws." Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 318, 14 L. Ed. 2d 405, 85 S. Ct. 1473 (1965).

HN5[] Of course, plaintiffs cannot rest on a showing of a violation of section 7; they must, as in private actions under other sections of the antitrust laws, prove that they have been injured by the violation. However, the Supreme Court's finding that du Pont's stock ownership in General Motors constituted a "potential" restraint [16] of trade or monopolization hardly precludes a showing that a given part was in fact injured by the prohibited acquisition, or that the section 7 violation proximately caused damage which might not in itself constitute a cause of action under the Sherman Act. Cf. the examples given in J. Scott & E. Rockefeller, Antitrust and Trade Regulation Today: 1967, at 342 (1967). Appellees argue that even assuming that a cause of action for damages lies under section 7, appellant suffered no prejudice from the district court's ruling as they specifically failed to prove any injury at trial. However, in view of the fundamental nature of the error here, we think that the district court should be given the opportunity to reconsider the evidence before it in the light of our holding that injury from a section 7 violation, as distinct from the alleged Sherman Act claims, is ground for treble damages. The advisability of such a re-examination is further supported by the evidentiary effect which the Supreme Court's finding of a section 7 violation may have on the plaintiffs' claims, a subject discussed below.

III. Effect of the first du Pont judgment.

In his September 18, 1963 opinion, [17] Judge Metzner ruled that since the judgment [*962] in the first Supreme Court du Pont case covered a different time period than the case at bar, the "ultimate facts" determined in that judgment could not be used against the defendants under HN6[] section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16(a):

> A final judgment or decree . . . hereafter rendered in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any action or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws . . . as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto.

He concluded that "plaintiffs may introduce in evidence the decree in the government suit, for historical purposes and background material . . . Plaintiffs, however, will have to submit other proof of the existence of the facts on which they base their claims." 221 F. Supp. 488, 494. [18] In his pre-trial order of November 12, 1963, the judge listed the "ultimate facts" inherent in the Supreme Court decision, see page 958 supra, which were "prima facie evidence of ultimate facts in this suit," but again limited their availability to plaintiffs:

> The final judgment entered March 1, 1962 in said Government suit may be introduced in evidence on the trial of this action for historical purposes and as background material. The judgment in the said Government suit speaks as of June 30, 1949. The present plaintiffs may only recover damages for acts occurring after May 4, 1950.

In his final opinion in December 1967, 279 F. Supp. 361, 364, the judge noted that a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act requires no showing "that restraint or monopoly was intended, nor that actual anticompetitive effects flowed from the acquisition." Since "there was no finding of private injury either to the competitors of du Pont or to General Motors itself" in the du Pont decision, the judge came to the "conclusion that the Court's language about entrenchment is not entitled to great weight as prima facie evidence in this case." Again the court noted: [19] "The time period encompassed in the Government suit has been deemed relevant in this trial, however, to place the facts in dispute here in historical perspective."

Although Judge Metzner seemed to imply that "the Court's language about entrenchment" was entitled to some evidentiary weight, and one of the "ultimate facts" found in its November 1963 order was that "du Pont used its stock interest in General Motors to entrench itself as the primary supplier to General Motors," we interpret the net effect of the above comments to be that the judgment in the government case was given little or no substantive legal effect on the issues at trial. Since we think that that judgment was entitled to substantially greater impact than a limited use as "historical perspective" or "background material," we find it necessary to remand the case for Judge Metzner's further consideration in light of the principles we will set forth hereinafter.

Considerable controversy has arisen under section 5(a) of the Clayton Act over the proper evidentiary use to be made of government antitrust judgments covering violations prior in time to those alleged as a basis for damages in a subsequent treble-damage [20] action. See generally Shores, Treble Damage Antitrust Suits: Admissibility of Prior Judgments Under Section 5 of the Clayton Act, 54 Iowa L. Rev. 434, 446-49 (1968); Timberlake, The Use of Government Judgments or Decrees in Subsequent Treble Damage Actions Under the Antitrust Laws, 36 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 991, 998-1002 (1961). Thus, some decisions have taken the strict view that a government judgment may not be introduced as evidence at all unless it covers the same, or part of the same, period as that in question in the private action. See *International Shoe Machine Corp. v. United [963] Shoe Machinery Corp., 315 F.2d 449 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 820, 11 L. Ed. 2d 54, 84 S. Ct. 56 (1963); Orbo Theatre Corp. v. Loew's, Inc., 156 F. Supp. 770, 777 (D.D.C. 1957), aff'd per curiam, 104 U.S. App. D.C. 262, 261 F.2d 380 (D.C. Cir. 1958), cert. denied, 359 U.S. 943, 79 S. Ct. 725, 3 L. Ed. 2d 677 (1959); cf. Webster Rosewood Corp. v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 263 F.2d 533 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 360 U.S. 912, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1261, 79 S. Ct. 1296 (1959). [21] Other cases, however, appear to embody a more flexible approach to the question, evaluating the actual relevancy or materiality of the government judgment to the facts and issues in the private suit, even though the period covered by each may differ. See, e. g., Park Neponset Corp. v. Smith, 258 F.2d 452 (1st Cir. 1958); Eagle Lion Studios, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 248 F.2d 438, 442-45 (2d Cir. 1957), aff'd by an equally divided Court, 358 U.S. 100, 79 S. Ct. 218, 3 L. Ed. 2d 147 (1958); Alamo Theatre Co. v. Loew's, Inc., 143 F. Supp. 419 (N.D. Ill. 1956); Buckhead Theatre Co. v. Atlanta Enterprises, Inc., 327 F.2d 365 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 888, 13 L. Ed. 2d 92, 85 S. Ct. 158 (1964). While it is true that in none of these latter cases was the earlier government judgment allowed into evidence, [3] it is equally true that no flat, inflexible rule of exclusion was applied. HN7[] The rationale which emerges from them is that while a judgment of violation in a government suit covering a given period is insufficient [22] to establish a violation at a later date, that judgment may be of evidentiary weight in the private action if it encompasses findings sufficiently related to the issues of the private action and if sufficient additional evidence is adduced to show that the illegal activities condemned in the government decree carried over into the period in issue. This approach, which negates an "all or nothing" position, see Buckhead Theatre Co. v. Atlanta Enterprises, Inc., supra, 327 F.2d at 370 (concurring opinion), perhaps finds some support in Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954). In that case, the [3] In the Alamo Theatre case, the court deferred determination of the question of admissibility until trial, noting that the "mere fact of plaintiff's entry into the motion picture field subsequent to a conspiracy found to exist in 1945 is not alone sufficient for the court to rule as a matter of law that the Paramount decree has no relevance to the instant suit." 143 F. Supp. at 420-21.

Supreme Court affirmed a jury verdict for defendants in a treble-damage action under the Sherman Act. The trial judge had allowed the introduction of the decrees in a prior government suit against the defendants, although that judgment was an injunction in 1948, at the latest, of a conspiracy found to exist in 1945, and the private plaintiff claimed damages from a conspiracy in 1949 and 1950. The jury was instructed that these decrees were not sufficient to support recovery in themselves and [23] that the plaintiff had to produce additional evidence relating that conspiracy to the period and location of the alleged conspiracy in issue. Appellant contended that greater weight should have been given to the government judgment; appellees argued that it should have been given no weight at all. The Court rejected appellant's argument, noting that "the relevancy of [the government suit] to the instant case is slight." 346 U.S. at 544. It declined to pass on appellees' contention. While Theatre Enterprises circumvented the question here in issue, the Court's reference to the "relevancy" of the government judgment to the private action suggests that it may have been "deliberately avoiding an inflexible rule." Shores, supra, 54 Iowa L. Rev. at 447.

[24] Certainly there are circumstances here suggesting that it is both appropriate and desirable to give substantial evidentiary weight to the judgment entered in du Pont I. The case is being tried to a judge rather than to a jury, thus minimizing the nagging problem of undue prejudice referred to in many of [*964] the cases. See, e.g., Buckhead Theatre Co. v. Atlanta Enterprises, Inc., 327 F.2d 365, 368 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 888, 13 L. Ed. 2d 92, 85 S. Ct. 158 (1964); International Shoe Machine Corp. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 315 F.2d 449, 459 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 820, 84 S. Ct. 56, 11 L. Ed. 2d 54 (1963). The defendants in the two actions are identical and the same product lines and geographical market are involved. Very similar issues of fact and law are raised in the two cases; important substantive elements of plaintiffs' cause of action under section 7 of the Clayton Act are precisely the same as those determined against defendants by the government du Pont judgment. Moreover, while it is true that the complaint which led to the first du Pont decision was filed in the district [25] court in June 1949, it would be formalistic in the extreme to ignore the fact that the position of stock ownership which was the crux of the violation existed on June 3, 1957, when the Court in du Pont I reversed the district court and ordered it to grant "appropriate" equitable relief and continued to exist until after the Court decreed complete divestiture by du Pont in 1961. Nor does it seem improper to give realistic recognition to the Court's language in both du Pont decisions for an understanding of what the government case actually decided. Thus, in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 485, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968), the Court made clear that:

> We are not, however, limited to the decree in determining the extent of estoppel resulting from the judgment in the Government's case. HN8[] If by reference to the findings, opinion, and decree it is determined that an issue was actually adjudicated in an antitrust suit brought by the Government, the private plaintiff can treat the outcome of the Government's case as prima facie [26] evidence on that issue.

Moreover, the Court specifically noted that it would be proper in determining the effect of the judgment in a government case to look to earlier opinions both "with respect to violation and . . . with respect to remedy." Id. It is significant, therefore, that in its second du Pont decision, 366 U.S. 316, 318-19, 6 L. Ed. 2d 318, 81 S. Ct. 1243 (1961), the Court apparently regarded its 1957 holding as encompassing not only an antitrust violation but also injury, summarizing its prior decision:

> We held that du Pont's acquisition of the 23 percent of General Motors stock had led to the insulation from free competition of most of the General Motors market in automobile finishes and fabrics . . . .

We do not agree entirely with the lower court's statement that "the thrust of the [first du Pont] opinion was directed to show the probability of public injury based on events quite far removed from the time period with which we are concerned herein." 279 F. Supp. at 364. The Court in that decision did not focus exclusively on evidence relating to the early years of the du Pont stock acquisition [27] but relied as well on such recent factors as the growing substantiality of the relevant market up to 1955, 353 U.S. at 595 n. 16, and on the fact that Fisher Body, a division of General Motors which had long stubbornly resisted du Pont sales pressure, only gave in at last to that pressure in 1947 and 1948. Id. at 604-05. The Court also noted that "the potency of the influence of du Pont's 23% stock interest is greater today," id. at 607 n. 36, because of the diffusion among a larger number of stockholders of the non-du Pont owned shares. In short, the language of the Court is directed to a real present danger of impairment of competition. In its 1961 decision, the Court clearly indicated that this danger continued to be present, holding that even the partial divestiture plan proposed by the district court would not insure the elimination of "the tendency towards monopoly of the acquisition [*965] condemned by § 7." 366 U.S. at 331-32.

It is important to distinguish this case from the more usual situation in which plaintiffs seek to apply to a subsequent period a government judgment condemning activities prohibited [28] under the antitrust laws, where it is not unreasonable to assume that defendants ceased those activities after the prohibition. Here the very acquisition and position of potential control which was found violative of the Clayton Act as of 1949 continued through 1961. We need not dispute the statement of the district court that, in the ordinary antitrust case, there is no "presumption of continuance of unlawful conduct," 221 F. Supp. 488, 493 (1963). Here, however, what was unlawful was du Pont's status as stockholder in General Motors, and that status continued until divestiture.

Accordingly, while we make no attempt to formulate a general rule on the effect to be given to government judgments relating to earlier time periods, we hold that under the circumstances of this particular litigation, the judgment in the Government's suit was entitled to greater evidentiary weight than was accorded it by the court below. We are aware that the judgment is only prima facie evidence at best and that plaintiffs have the burden of showing not only antitrust law violation but injury as well. However, it must be remembered that if the latter fact is established to the satisfaction [29] of the trier, "the standard of proof as to the quantum of damages is less severe," as appellee du Pont concedes. [4] See, e.g., Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 327 U.S. 251, 264-66, 90 L. Ed. 652, 66 S. Ct. 574 (1946); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U.S. 555, 75 L. Ed. 544, 51 S. Ct. 248 (1931); Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368, 392 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 835, 2 L. Ed. 2d 46, 78 S. Ct. 54 (1957). In any event, as to all the issues, the trier of fact must make the determination, giving proper weight to the earlier judgment, and the district court may allow further evidence, although it is not required to. While we do not know whether it will reach the same conclusions as before on the record before it, plaintiffs are entitled to a determination which gives greater consideration to the earlier rulings of the Supreme Court.

Accordingly, we remand for further proceedings [30] consistent with this opinion. In view of this disposition of the appeal, we find it unnecessary to rule or express any views on appellants' additional arguments that the trial judge erroneously held that du Pont had not violated the Sherman Act [5] or breached any fiduciary duty to General Motors.

End of Document

[4] Brief for Appellee du Pont at 37 n. 36.

[5] Appellants do not press on appeal the lower court's finding as to § 1 of the Sherman Act but have relied primarily on an alleged violation of § 2.